Proceedings in PARLIAMENT against James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, upon an Impeachment for High-Treason, Febr. 9. 1715. 2 GEO. I.

THE above-named Lords having excited a Rebellion, and levied War against his Majesty, and being taken Prisoners, whilst in actual Hostilities, the Parliament at that time sitting, it was moved in the House of Commons, January 9. that they should not be left to the ordinary method of Prosecutions, but be proceeded against by way of Impeachment: Upon which Occasion Mr. Lechmere spake as follows,

After the general Assurances this House has given to his Majesty, one Moment ought not to be lost without taking some effectual Step towards making them good. The first and great Concern is to put an End to this Rebellion, not only to quiet the present Commotions, but to extinguish the very possibility of their being renewed: For these Ends every Gentleman will agree to strengthen the Hands of the King, in such manner as will enable him speedily and effectually to complete this Work: You will do this with absolute Cheerfulness, from the certain Knowledge and Experience we have had of the Wisdom and Justice of his Majesty, who will make no other Use of any Confidence his Parliament shall repose in him, than to promote the common Welfare of his People; and whatever extraordinary Assistance the present Juncture of Affairs shall require, will be continu'd no longer than the public Necessity calls for. The next useful and necessary Step is the National Justice, which is incumbent on this House, in Duty to the King, as well as in Justice to the People; and as ungrateful and disagreeable a Part as this must be, yet when the Design of the Enemy is become so desperate and so avowed, as to strike at the Crown upon the King's Head, and to involve the Nation in the Calamities of a Civil War, the House cannot exert themselves too early, nor with too much Vigour; and as the House shall acquit themselves on this Occasion, I dare promise myself the Effect will be answerable. The Spirit which shall be shewn in this Instance, will animate the Friends of the Government both at Home and Abroad; and the Terror it must strike on our Enemies, will be equal at least, and contribute as much to the Common Safety, as any other Preparation that has or can be made. I wish I could say or think that this Rebellion is the Project of those only, who appear'd to head it; or that it is the Result of the weak or rash Counsels of those who publicly avow it; I wish I could say, that it is the Work of Papists only, or of those few Protestants, who are wicked or weak enough openly to join in it. I wish I could say, that it was a Plot but of Yesterday, and that it has taken no deeper Root, than ordinary Appearance will lead to suspect: But I think it plain, that it is the Effect of many Years Labour, of the joint and united Labour of great Numbers both Protestants and Papists, the plain and necessary Consequence of the Measures which have been carrying on for some Years last: To frame a right Judgment of the Nature of this Rebellion, I think it necessary for us to look back and consider, the natural Tendency of the Public Proceedings of late Years, and the Connection they bear with the present unfortunate State of Things; when Men in sacred Functions suffer'd themselves to become State Instruments, and the great Merit of such Men was under the Pretence of Asserting the Doctrines of the Church of England, to condemn the Revolution, I could never understand any other Design or Tendency from those Practices, than to undermine the Foundation of the Protestant Succession. I remember 'twas said upon a very solemn Occasion, by a very honourable Gentleman, That the condemning the late happy Revolution, could have no other Meaning than to make way for another. However wicked and dangerous these Practices were, they made too great an Impression, and contributed a great deal to the present Calamity; for as the Designs of the Enemy grew more avow'd, State Principles of another Kind were advanc'd, which still conduced to the same End. 'Twas well known what Industry was used to inculcate the Notions of Hereditary Right to the Crown, in Opposition to the Settlement which had been made of it in the House of Hanover by the Authority of Parliament, and with no other View than to weaken that Settlement; Every one remembers what extraordinary Pains were taken to poison the People with this dangerous Notion; and that those who made the best Court to Men in Power, were such who espoused this Opinion in the most notorious manner. I cannot forget with what Tenderness a certain Divine* of the Church of England was treated below Stairs, whilst under Prosecution, for the most impudent^a Libel that ever was published against any Government, that had either Will or Power to maintain it self. I think the Punishment that was inflicted on that Gentleman light enough, but I cannot avoid taking Notice of a remarkable Passage, which then alarm'd every thinking Man, and will, one time or other, deserve the Consideration of this House, viz. The Order from the Government, counter-sign'd by a Secretary of State, to the Judges of the Queen's-Bench, after the Judgment pass'd, to supersede the ignominious Part of the Punishment, by Reason of the Sacred Function of the Criminal: By which the most unexampled and dangerous Distinction was introduced; and which Proceeding could bear no other Construction, than as a License and Protection, even from the Government, to Men in Holy Orders, to propogate that destructive Position with Impunity; and the Character of the Person, which ought in Justice to have aggravated his Guilt and heighten'd the Punishment, became his Indemnity against the Reproach of it, even by the Authority of the Government it self. I remember very well in what Manner every Thing of that Nature was treated in Westminster-Hall; what Severities were exercised against those Persons who had Courage enough to assert the Interest of their Country, and of the Protestant Succession, at the same Time that the Patrons of Hereditary Right enjoy'd all Indulgences. I mention these Things on no Uncertainties, having been an Eye-witness of them my self, and it having fallen to my Share to bear some Part in them: This was one of the most successful Parts of the Scheme of those who had fix'd their Eyes on the Pretender: The House need not be told how far it has operated, to the Prejudice of the Protestant Succession. I could give many other Instances of this Kind, all which promoted the same End: The gross Distinctions that were coin'd to elude the Oaths that had been made for the Security of the Government: The Endeavours that were used to possess the People with false Fears of the Danger of the Church; and the little Care that was taken, to say no worse of it, to instill into the Youth of the Kingdom, such Principles as were consistent with the true Interest either of Church or State. I look upon these Things to be the Foundation of the Scheme that is now, by this Rebellion, carrying on into Execution; and I own that In this Respect the Authors of it were wise in their Generation, for by these Arts the very Principle on which the Protestant Succession is founded, was spoken; and tho' the Methods of doing it were base and vile, yet the Dissatisfaction and Uneasiness that was created by them in the Minds of the People, made Way for the Change that was desired. I must crave leave to put you in Mind of other Parts of this Scheme that were carrying on at the same Time. The Enemies to the present Government judging aright for their own Purpose, by all Methods to attack the Consciences of the People, as to the Legality and Justice of the Settlement of the Crown in the House of Hanover, thought it necessary at the same Time to disable as far as they could, those Persons who had been most remarkable for their Services in the Support of it: The great Effort was made at that great^b Man, who is not only the Honour and Ornament of his Country, but the Glory of the Age he lives in. I think I shall not be suspected of Flattery at this Time, nor, I believe, at any Time, with Respect to that Great Man. Many who now hear me, remember the Part I took in Vindication of that Great Man, whilst his Character was under Debate in this House. I cannot forget the Rage and Inveteracy with which he was pursued; nor how much Stress was laid upon obtaining the Censures of Parliament upon him: The Aspersions then thrown upon him, did not hurt that Great Man; and whatever Endeavours may at any Time be used to lessen him, will hurt none but those that shall promote them: But yet those vain Endeavours were a very useful Part of the Scheme then carrying on. 'Twas a necessary Step for those Men to put him out of the Way, whose very Name and Appearance, at that Time, would have been sufficient to raise Armies in Favour of the Protestant Succession and the Liberties of his Country: But I cannot but observe, That as serviceable as it was for the Measures of those Men to wound his Character, it is now a Reproach to the Kingdom, that those groundless Aspersions, which have been cast upon him, should remain upon the Journals of Parliament. Another great Lord fell under the Violence of those Times, (I mean the Lord who was Minister in the Low-Countries, and was chiefly instrumental in procuring the Treaty of Barrier and Succession) whose Prosecution was attended with uncommon Fury. My self had some Share in justifying that Great Man in this House, when he was voted an Enemy to his Country. I observed at that Time, and the Event has made it evident, that the Barrier was but the Pretence, and that the great Services he had done to the Protestant Succession was the true Provocation, which drew that Rage upon him. Two other honourable Gentlemen, now sitting near me, felt the Severity of those Times: They had distinguished themselves by their Zeal and Firmness to the true Interest of their Country, and were too considerable to escape the Malice of those who had other Views. Those Proceedings, how uncertain soever the Design of them might appear while they were transacting, have been sufficiently explain'd by what has follow'd. The Name of that General, ^e for whose immediate Service the Great Man first mentioned was blemished, and for whom there was Vanity enough to make him his Rival, is now become the Reproach of his Family and Country; he avows the Service of the Pretender, and e'er long we may hear of him at the Head of an Expedition for establishing Popery and Arbitrary Power. The Secretary of State ^f who distinguished himself in the Pursuit of the other great Lord, has sufficiently explain'd his Designs to the whole World; and the next Tidings that we may expect from abroad is, that he has taken upon him the Character of a Minister to the Pretender. I look upon this (namely the disabling the great Assertors of the Protestant Interest) to be a second, and no small Part of the Scheme; and while these Things were carrying on, their little Engines and Tools were carrying on their Work ^g below-stairs. Every Man who favour'd the Hanoverian Succession was to be worried, and all open and scandalous Assertors of contrary Principles were treated with all the Care and Tenderness of Friends. Charters of Corporations were attack'd in a more unprecedented and dangerous manner than in any former Times, when Practices of that kind were most justly complain'd of; and no Stone was left unturn'd, to strengthen themselves in that Respect. I will not now trouble you any more upon that Head, having some Thoughts e'er long to present you with a small Collection of Things of that kind for your serious Consideration. The Master Strokes of this grand Scheme are yet behind: The surest Way to destroy the Government has been always thought to be by its own Hands; that is, by the Authority and Power of Parliament. For this Purpose, a Confederacy, by which the Liberties of Europe had been so long sustained against the Power of France, was broke to Pieces, by Votes that were obtained in this House, in the most extraordinary Manner. The Honour of the Nation, the Ballance of Power, and the Protestant Interest in Europe, were effectually given up in the Negotiations and Conclusion of the Peace, by which France was restored to its ancient and formidable State: And every Body remembers how near we were by the same Influences, to have given up the whole Trade of the Nation to the Interest of the French King, who after that had no suitable Return left for him to make for such Services, but to bestow upon us a Pretender bred up in his own Faith, and in his own Politics. Nothing could have obstructed this, but the many miraculous Providences that immediately followed, when his Power throughout Europe was uncontestable; and, by the Measures that had been taken, the Protestant Succession had scarce a Friend left in the World. The King's Accession to the Throne, accompanied by so many providential Circumstances, as it disappointed the immediate Execution of the Scheme, so it quieted the Spirit, of those Men for some Time. If we could make a right Judgment of the present Rebellion, we must compare the Steps that immediately preceded, with those which were taken in the last Reign, when the Hope was to have brought about the same End without a Stroke. The same Endeavours soon appear'd to propogate the same Principles both in Church and State: And those Endeavours, tho' at first not so open, were yet as restless to create Dissatisfaction against his Majesty's Government, as they had been before to prevent its taking Place. As the Encouragement grew stronger, Tumults and Riots were universally fomented; and 'tis well known from what Quarter they rose, and against whom they were levelled: But yet no one Instance has been assign'd throughout his Administration, that could offend or provoke any but a Jacobite Spirit. His Majesty has done more for the Honour of the Church, and the true Interest of his Kingdom, than any of his Predecessors in three times the Number of Years. His Personal Virtues, and the Wisdom and Steddyness of his Government, have retrieved the Honour and Reputation of his Kingdoms, which had been so shamefully lost: His Weight and Influence abroad, and the Credit he has obtained in all the known Parts of the World, has already procured the Settlement of the Matters in Difference between the two chief Powers of Europe, from whom alone we can expect Assistance in Times of Danger. No single Instance can be assign'd of Hardship or Oppression to any one of his Subjects, or that can give a just Reason of Dissatisfaction; but on the contrary, those who have shewn the greatest Aversion to his Government, have received the kindest Invitations, and enjoy'd the highest Indulgencies from him. If any Errors may have been committed in any Parts of the Administration, during the present Disorders, every honest Man ought to judge of them by this one Rule, that is, the plain Design for which all Measures are calculated, which every Body must admit to be, the Preservation of the Protestant Succession: All Incidents of such an Administration, ought to be covered or justified by the Interest that shall appear to be carrying on throughout the whole; by the same Rule of Justice, when the Destruction of the Common Interest was the plain Intention of the late Administration, the greatest Weight ought to be laid on every little Circumstance that attended, in order to obtain a public Satisfaction: By taking in all these Considerations, I think we shall make a full and right Judgment of the Nature of this Rebellion ; from whence it took its Rise ; how deep it has taken Root ; to what Influences it is owing, and how far it extends. The Part the Lord Derwentwater, and others, have taken in it, are to be considered as the first Symptoms of that general Disorder, for which so much Foundation was laid ; for which Reason I think, that we cannot consider this otherwise than as the Cause of the Nation, in the strongest manner. In Justice to the King, as well as to the People, we ought to take this into our own Hands, and not to entrust the Prosecution of it with any Body but our selves. Every Body knows to what Hazards Prosecutions in the ordinary Course of Justice are liable, though they are never so well concerted by those, whose Business it is to carry them on ; but how sure soever the Success may be, in a Case so notorious as this, yet it is obvious to every Body, of what different Weight and Influence the Prosecutions of Parliament are from those in the ordinary Forms. I own I am surprized, that any Measures have been taken of that kind, against the Peers who have been taken in open Rebellion, during the sitting of a Parliament which has shewn so much Zeal, and has contributed so much to the Preservation of the Government, especially at a time when the Crown on the King's Head is fighting for. I very well know, that tho' the House of Commons Right of Impeaching Criminals is unlimited, yet they will exercise that Power by the Rules of Wisdom and Discretion, and not engage in trivial Matters, but in such only where the Offenders are not within the reach of the Ordinary Justice ; or the Nature of their Crimes such, as are not fit to be meddled with by the Ordinary Jurisdictions : The Case of the Lords taken in Rebellion is indeed notorious, and of which the Proof will be easy, but tho' not from the Difficulty of the Prosecution, yet from the Weight and Consequence of it, I think I need say little more to convince you, and make it our Prosecution, by which we engage every Commoner in Great-Britain, as an immediate Party, against those who have carried a War into the Bowels of the Kingdom. No Instance ever has risen in the English History, where our Ancestors have permitted a Prosecution against the chief Actors, to be carried any where but in full Parliament. The five Popish Lords were pursued by the loud Voice and Weight of the Commons of England : And tho' at that time the Nation was in Peace, they would not permit the Fate of those Prosecutions to depend on the Care or Skill of those who are versed in the ordinary Forms of Justice, and their Success was answerable. I own my Desire upon all Occasions to raise the Honour and Authority of Parliaments, which I think the greatest Support of the Honour and the Prerogatives of the Crown. For which Reason, I take this Occasion to speak more fully to the Nature of Impeachments, and the rather, because I apprehend some Gentlemen have mistaken Notions concerning them. The Power of Impeachments is the most valuable and useful Privilege that belongs to the Body of the Commons, at least, equal to that of giving Money, which belongs solely to them. Gentlemen need not be apprehensive of any Intricacies in those Proceedings, especially at a Time and upon an Occasion, when there is no Doubt of the Concurrence of both Houses. Impeachments are in themselves more plain, regular, and dis-tangled, than any other Forms of Justice : They are particularly excepted out of the late Statute of Treasons, which has very much fetter'd the ordinary Course of Proceedings. Impeachments were never made difficult, but when they were carried on against the Inclination of the Crown, or at a Time when there was no good Understanding between the two Houses ; when little Occasions might be sought to raise Disputes, and interrupt them ; or else when they are undertaken before they are well considered, which cannot be the present Case. There is another Reason, which upon this Occasion should determine Gentlemen into this Method ; I mean the Consequences of the Judgment that shall be obtained against these Lords : 'Tis my clear Opinion, and what I think I can maintain, That no Pardon under the Great Seal can discharge a Judgment obtain'd upon the Impeachment of the Commons : This Opinion has been strenuously asserted in this House in former Reigns ; and I think it not weakened by the Declaration in the Act of Settlement of the Crown upon the House of Hanover. I have heard of a very low Distinction that has been coin'd without Doors, to avoid this Opinion, viz. That the Pardon is not pleadable in bar of the Impeachment, to prevent the Commons from examining into the Offence ; but that it is pleadable after Judgment, and in bar of Execution. Whenever that Question shall come properly before you, I will undertake to shew the Idleness and Absurdity of that Distinction : If that Distinction be framed to make Court to the Prerogative, I think it the most false and destructive Piece of Flattery of the kind that ever has been raised. It is the greatest Ease, Security, and Support of the Crown, in my Opinion, instead of any Diminution of it, that no such Power shall be lodg'd there, to be exercised on any Occasion, to prevent the Possibility of the Crown's being wrought upon by any Influences to defeat the Judgment given in full Parliament, with the Concurrence of both Houses, against the highest Offenders, which must inevitably create the greatest Jealousy, and cause the highest Dissatisfactions between the Crown and the People : For this Reason, I take it to be the greatest Advantage to the Crown, that the Constitution of the Kingdom has not, as I think, invested it with any such Power : And on t'other side, it will clearly appear, that such a Power is utterly inconsistent with the fundamental Rights of Parliament. I own I am surprized to hear, that any such Distinction should be started at this time : But if the Law be, as I apprehend it is, it is the strongest Reason for the Commons to interpose in this Prosecution to defend the Crown from the many Importunities to which it will be subject, in the ordinary Course of Justice : The Weight of this Prosecution, and the Consequences of it, will be borne by the Commons, as it ought to be in a Case so National as this. If Gentlemen want any other Motives, to induce them to make this Prosecution their own, I have a Paper in my Hand which will fire the Thoughts of every Gentleman here, it is the Pretender's Declaration, which no Body can read without the utmost Indignation ; considering the personal Indignities which are therein cast upon the best of Princes, whose Title to the Crown we are bound by all the Ties of Duty, Affection, and Interest to maintain. We can do no less than resent this so far, as to make our selves the Prosecutors of those who avow this Cause of the Pretender, and set themselves at the Head of Armies, in in the Heart of the King's Dominions. In this Paper we shall see how we are treated ourselves: We are represented as the most illegal and infamous Assembly of Men that ever met together. These Considerations ought, in Justice, to animate and invigorate our Proceedings in every Respect, till the Inveteracy and Insolence of the Enemy are entirely subdued: I do not think that the Proceedings of this House ought in any Case to be governed by Vindictive Considerations, but by such Circumstances only as from their real Weight and Consequence call for the Interposition of the Commons. I am sensible that the Commons have a great Work upon their Hands, from other Impeachments, which they have thought fit to enter upon, and which are still depending; I know also what Situation these Impeachments are in; and hope they will be resumed and carried on, in due Season, with the same Vigour with which they were undertaken. I likewise believe, that the Nation expects, that our Enquiries upon this Head shall be extended and appear to be impartial, it not being possible, that a greater Dishonour can be brought, or an heavier Imputation cast upon our Proceedings, than that of Partiality, which cannot fail to sink our Credit, and to prevent all the good Effects that are hoped and expected from them: However, every Gentleman will agree with me, that the present Situation and Conjunction of Affairs make it necessary to give the Preference to those Lords who have been taken in open Rebellion. And therefore I now Impeach James Earl of Derwentwater of High-Treason; which Impeachment I undertake to make good.

The Consequence of this Speech was, that the House came to a Resolution to impeach James Earl of Derwentwater of High-Treason. Upon the like Motions they resolved the same with regard to William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nitbisdale, George Earl of Winton, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn; accordingly they were impeached at the Bar of the House of Lords, and the same Night the Articles of Impeachment were carried up to the Lords; and the next Day the impeached Lords were brought to the Bar of the House, and charged with the said Articles, and ordered to put in their Answer by the 16th, and that not only Counsel, but any other Persons, whom they should name, should have Liberty to assist them. They had afterwards Leave till the 19th to put in their Answers, when they severally pleaded Guilty (except the Earl of Winton, who had further Time allowed him) and the 9th of Feb. was appointed to pass Sentence on them.

On Thursday Feb. the 9th, about one of the Clock, the Lords came from their own House into the Court erected in Westminster-hall, to pass Sentence upon James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nitbisdale, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, in the Manner following.

The Lord High-Steward's Gentlemen Attendants, two and two.

The Clerk's Assistant to the House of Lords, and the Clerk of the Parliament, with the Clerk of the Crown in the Court of Chancery; the Clerk of the Parliament bearing the King's Commission to the Lord High-Steward.

The Masters in Chancery, two and two.

Then the Judges.

The Peers Eldest Sons, and Peers Minors, two and two.

Four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, two and two.

The Yeomen Ushers of the House.

Then the Peers, two and two, beginning with the youngest Barons.

Then four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces.

The Serjeant at Arms attending the Great-Seal, and Purse-Bearer.

Then Garter King at Arms; and the Gentleman-Usher of the Black Rod, carrying the White Staff before the Lord High-Steward.

The Lord High-Steward William Lord Cowper alone, his Train borne.

When the Lords were placed in their proper Seats, and the Lord High-Steward upon the Wool-Pack.

The Clerk of the Crown, in the Court of Chancery, standing before the Clerk's Table, with his Face towards the State, having his Majesty's Commission to the Lord High-Steward in his Hand, made three Reverences towards the Lord High-Steward; and, on his Knee, presented the Commission to the Lord High-Steward; after which, and usual Reverences, the same was carried down to the Table: And then Proclamation for Silence was made in this manner.

O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Lord High-Steward stood up, and spoke to the Peers.

Lord High-Steward. His Majesty's Commission is going to be read; your Lordships are desired to attend.

All the Peers uncovered themselves, and they and all others stood up uncovered while the Commission was reading.

Serjeant at Arms. God save the King.

Then the Herald and Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, after three Reverences, kneeling, presented the White Staff to his Grace; and then his Grace, attended by the Herald, Black Rod and Seal-Bearer (making his proper Reverences towards the Throne) removed from the Wool-Pack to an armed Chair, which was placed on the uppermost Step but one of the Throne, as it was prepared for that Purpose, and then seated himself in the Chair, and delivered the Staff to the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod on his Right Hand, the Seal-Bearer holding the Purse on the Left.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then another Proclamation was made, as follows.

O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London bring forth your Prisoners to the Bar, according to the Order of the House of Lords to you directed.

Then James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, were all brought to the Bar by the Deputy Governour of the Tower, having the Ax carried before them by the Gentleman Jaylor, who stood with it on the Left Hand of the Prisoners, with the Edge turned from him. The Prisoners when they approached the Bar (after kneeling) bowed to his Grace the Lord High-Steward, and to the House of Peers; which Compliment was returned them by his Grace, and the House of Peers.

Lord High-Steward. Read the Articles of Impeachment.

ARTICLES of Impeachment of High-Treason exhibited against James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn.

WHEREAS for many Years last a most wicked Design and Contrivance has been formed and carried on, to subvert the ancient and established Government, and the good Laws of these Kingdoms, to extirpate the true Protestant Religion therein established, and to destroy its Professors; and instead thereof, to introduce and settle Popery and Arbitrary Power; in which unnatural and horrid Conspiracy great Numbers of Persons of different Degrees and Qualities, have concerned themselves and acted; and many Protestants, pretending an uncommon Zeal for the Church of England, have joined themselves with professed Papists, uniting their Endeavours to accomplish and execute the aforesaid wicked and traitorous Designs:

And whereas it pleased Almighty God in his good Providence, and in his great Mercy and Goodness to these Nations, to crown the unwearied Endeavours of his late Majesty King William the Third of ever-glorious Memory, by making him the Instrument to procure the Settlement of the Crown of these Realms in the illustrious House of Hanover, as the only Means under God to preserve our Religion, Laws and Liberties, and to secure the Protestant Interest of Europe; since which happy Establishment the said Conspirators have been indefatigable in their Endeavours to destroy the same, and to make Way for the vain and groundless Hopes of a spurious Impostor and Popish Pretender to the Imperial Crown of these Realms.

And to accomplish these Ends, the most immoral, irreligious and unchristian-like Methods have been taken, but more particularly in the last Years of the Reign of the late Queen Anne, during which Time all imaginable Endeavours were used by the said Conspirators, to prejudice the Minds of the Subjects of this Realm against the Legality and Justice of the said Settlement of the Crown: And for that purpose the Holy Scriptures were wrested, and the most wholesome Doctrines of the Church of England perverted and abused by Men in Holy Orders, in the most public and scandalous Manner, in order to condemn the Justice of the late happy Revolution; and thereby to sap and undermine the Foundation of the said happy Establishment; and the most notorious Instruments of these wicked Purposes were countenanced by particular Marks of public Favour and Distinction; false and dangerous Notions of a sole Hereditary Right to the Imperial Crown of these Realms were propagated and encouraged by Persons in the highest Trust and Employments, contrary to the ancient, undoubted and established Laws of these Kingdoms; jesuitical and scandalous Distinctions were invented and publickly inculcated, to enervate the Force and Obligation of those Oaths which had been contrived in the plainest and strongest Terms by the Wisdom of Parliament for the Security of the said Establishment; and to conceal their Designs, and thereby the better to enable them to carry on the same, great Numbers of the said Conspirators of all Ranks and Conditions, pretending a Zeal for the Protestant Succession, openly and voluntarily took the said Oaths; groundless Fears of the Danger of the Church of England were fomented throughout these Kingdoms, to disorder the Minds of well-disposed Protestants.

By all which and many other such ungodly Practices of the said Conspirators, the most causeless and dangerous Jealousies and Dissatisfactions were created in the Minds of the good People of this Kingdom, and great Numbers of well-meaning, but deluded Protestants were much disquieted.

But nevertheless these dishonest Methods were pursued by the said Conspirators with indefatigable Industry, as the only Means to weaken the Foundations of the said happy Establishment.

And whereas the Dissolution of the late glorious Confederacy against France, and the Loss of the Ballance of Power in Europe, were further Steps necessary to complete the Designs of the said Conspirators; and the same being effected by the late ignominious Peace with France, the French King was render'd formidable, and the Protestant Succession was thereby brought into the most imminent Danger; and by these and other pernicious Measures, the Destruction so long intended by the said Conspirators, for these poor Nations, seem'd near at Hand.

At which Time, and under which most deplorable Circumstances, it pleas'd Almighty God in his infinite Wisdom to call to himself the late Queen Anne, and by a Concurrence of many most wonderful Providences to give a quiet and peaceable Accession to his present most Gracious Majesty to the Throne of his Ancestors, to which he was received with one full Voice and Consent of Tongue and Heart, and the united Joy of every good Subject and good Protestant, as their only lawful and rightful Liege Lord; and altho' from the Moment his Majesty ascended the Throne to this Day, his Reign has been one Series of Wisdom, Justice and Clemency; his Labours constant, unwearied and successful to retrieve the Honour and Reputation of these Nations; to re-establish the Trade and recover the Wealth of his Kingdoms; and although all imaginable Encouragement has been given to the Church of England, and all Tenderness shewn even to his Popish Subjects, and his constant Care has been to procure the universal Good of his People; nevertheless the said Conspirators have, by the most vile and impious Methods, renewed their Endeavours to throw these Kingdoms into the utmost Confusion, and to entail endless Miseries on us and our Posterities: For these Ends many of the above-mentioned most wicked and dangerous Practices have been repeated with the utmost Industry and Inveteracy, to delude, disorder and corrupt the Minds of his Majesty's good Subjects; the most groundless Jealousies have been fomented against his wise and happy Administration, and in many Parts of his Kingdoms the most unnatural, unexampled Riots and Tumults, by the secret and malicious Endeavours of the said Conspirators, have been procured, stirred up, and encouraged against his peaceable Protestant Subjects, under false Pretences of Zeal for the Church of England, and thereby more effectually to delude his good Subjects, and seduce them from their Allegiance, and prepare them for an open Rebellion.

And the said Conspirators having at length resolved to deprive these Nations of the invaluable Blessings which they now enjoy under the wise and gentle Reign of his present most gracious Majesty King George, and of the certain Prospect of Happiness which they have for their Posterity, in a Succession of Princes derived from himself; did contrive, confederate, and resolve to put their most malicious, wicked, and traitorous Designs into immediate Execution; for which purpose, James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, George Earl of Winton, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, together with Thomas Forster, Jun. the Lord Charles Murray, Edward Howard, Thomas Errington, John Clavering, William Sbaftoe, Sir Francis Anderton, Ralph Standish, Richard Townly, Thomas Butler, Thomas Walton, Gabriel Hasket, Richard Gascoigne, and divers other Persons, as false Traitors to his present most sacred Majesty King George, the only lawful and undoubted Sovereign of these Kingdoms, having withdrawn their Allegiance, and cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which they as good and faithful Subjects owed to his said Majesty, did, in or about the Months of September, October, or November, 1715. most wickedly, maliciously, falsely and traitorously imagine and compass the Death of his said most sacred Majesty.

And for the accomplishing and executing their said traitorous Purpose, they the said James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, George Earl of Winton, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, did, in or about the said Months, or some of them, and at divers other Times, and in divers Places within this Kingdom, wickedly and traitorously agree, confederate, conspire, and resolve, together with many other evil-disposed Persons, to raise, excite, and levy within the Counties of Teviotdale, Northumberland, Cumberland, and the County Palatine of Lancaster, and elsewhere within this Kingdom, a most cruel, bloody, and destructive War, against his Majesty, in order to depose and murder his sacred Majesty, and to deprive him of his Royal State, Crown and Dignity.

And the said James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, George Earl of Winton, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn, their Accomplices and Confederates, in or about the Months aforesaid, in the Counties aforesaid, or some of them, did gather together great Numbers of his Majesty's Subjects, and with them did assemble in a warlike and traitorous Manner, in order to raise Tumults and Rebellion within this Kingdom, and having procured great Quantities of Arms, Ammunition and warlike Instruments, at the Times and Places aforesaid, or some of them, did form and compose, or did assist in the forming and composing an Army of Men, consisting of his Majesty's Liege Subjects, in order to wage War against his said Majesty, for and in behalf and in favour of the said Pre-tender to the Crown of these Realms; and the said last mentioned Conspirators, their Accomplices and Confederates, at the Time and Times and Places aforesaid, and at divers other Times and Places within this Kingdom, did maliciously and traiterously make, levy, and raise War and Rebellion against his most sacred Majesty, and in a warlike and hostile Manner did march thro' and invade several Parts of this Kingdom, and did unlawfully take and seize the Horses and other the Goods and Chattels of many of the peaceable and good Subjects of his Majesty, and in other Places did take and seize, from his Majesty's faithful Subjects, Guns, and other warlike Instruments, for the carrying on their traitorous Purposes.

And the said last mentioned Conspirators, their Complices and Confederates, during their March and Invasion aforesaid, in open Defiance of his most sacred Majesty's just and undoubted Title to the Imperial Crown of these Realms, did wickedly and traiterously cause and procure the said Pretender to be proclaimed, in the most public and solemn Manner, as King of these Realms; and in several Places in the Counties aforesaid, or some of them, did unlawfully take and seize from his Majesty's Officers of the Revenue the public Money, for the Use and Service of the said Pretender; and tho' many of the Conspirators are avowed Professors of the Popish Religion, yet the more effectually to cover and disguise their most wicked and traitorous Designs, and to delude his Majesty's Subjects, they did prevail on and procure several Men in Holy Orders, Ministers of the Church of England, and who had before that Time abjured the said Pretender, to accompany, countenance and abet the said most traitorous Enterprize, and in several Places in the Counties aforesaid, where the said Conspirators, their Complices and Confederates then were, to pray for the said Pretender in the public Churches, as King of these Realms.

That the said last mentioned Conspirators, their Accomplices and Confederates, did, on or about the Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth or Thirteenth of November aforesaid, traiterously seize and possess themselves of the Town of Preston in the County Palatine of Lancaster against his Majesty, and did then and there in a warlike and hostile Manner levy War, oppose, engage, and fight against his Majesty's Forces; and did then and there cause and procure a miserable and horrid Slaughter and Murder of many of his Majesty's faithful Subjects.

All which Treasons and Crimes above-mentioned were contrived, committed, perpetrated, acted and done, by the said James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn, and other the Conspirators aforesaid, against our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity; and contrary to the Duty of their Allegiance, and against the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom.

Of all which Treasons and Crimes, the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses in Parliament assembled, do, in the Name of themselves and of all the Commons of Great Britain, impeach the said James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn, and every of them.

And the said Commons by Protestation saving to themselves the Liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter any other Accusations or Impeachments against the said James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, or any of them; and also of replying to the Answers which the said James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, or any of them, shall make to the Premises, or any of them, or to any Impeachment or Accusation that shall be by them exhibited according to the Course and Proceedings of Parliament; do pray, that the said James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, be put to answer all and every the Premises: And that such Proceedings, Examinations, Trials and Judgments may be upon them and every of them had and used as shall be agreeable to Law and Justice.

Lord High-Steward. Clerk of the Parliament, read the Record of the Answers and Pleas of the Lords the Prisoners at the Bar to the Impeachments.

Die Jovis 19 Januarii, 1715.

THE Order of the Day being read, for bringing James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, to this House, in order to their putting in their several Answers to the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treason exhibited against them by the House of Commons.

The said Earl of Derwentwater was brought to the Bar by the Gentlemen-Usher of the Black-Rod, where he kneeled until the Lord Chancellor directed him to rise; and his Lordship acquainted him with the above-mentioned Order, and demanded of him if he was ready to put in his Answer, which he said he was, and deliver'd the same at the Bar.

Which Answer of the said Earl of Derwentwater, was read, and is as follows.

The Answer of James Earl of Derwentwater, to the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treason exhibited against him by the Hon. the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses of Great Britain in Parliament Assembled.

TO a Charge of so high and heinous a Nature the said Earl cannot Answer without the deepest Concern and Affliction, which becomes more weighty from the Share the Honourable House of Commons have been pleased to take in the Accusation: He assures himself however, that Great Assembly doth not engage in the Prosecution of an Offence, so open to Conviction in the ordinary ordinary Course of Law, with design to intercept that Mercy which the Earl, from the Report of his Majesty's natural Goodness, had reason to expect. It would be a Thought unworthy any Member of that August Body, to imagine he could have the least desire of spilling the Blood of any of his Fellow-Subjects, whom his Majesty's great Wisdom should think a fit Object of his Mercy; the said Earl therefore hopes that his Prosecution is taken out of the common Course of Justice, with Intention, that if in his particular Case there shall appear any Circumstances inducing Favour or Compassion, both your Lordships and the Commons may be Intercessors with his Majesty for Grace towards him; whereby the Exercise of the Royal Mercy, upon which the Earl depended (which amongst all the Virtues of the Crown most endears a Monarch to the Love and Affection of his People) may be extended in such Manner as may demonstrate that Clemency for which his Majesty is so greatly renowned, and not encourage any to offend upon the Presumption of it for the future. The said Earl acknowledges, with a real Sorrow, that at the time in the Articles mentioned he was in Arms, and with others did march through and invade several Parts of this Kingdom; and confesses he is thereby guilty of the Offence wherewith he is charged in the said Articles. But if any Offence of that kind was ever attended with Circumstances which might move Compassion, the said Earl hopes he may be intitled to it: He begs Leave to inform your Lordships, That his Temper and Inclination disposed him to live peaceably under his Majesty's Government, and he never had the least Prejudice or Malice against his Person, nor was he ever heretofore concerned in or privy to any Design or Contrivance to subvert or disturb the established Government, the Laws or Religion of this Kingdom; and if any Methods were taken by others to accomplish any of those Ends, he was absolutely a Stranger to them; nor did he now engage in this unhappy Undertaking upon any previous Concert or Contrivance for any such purpose; but being young and unexperienc'd, he rashly, and without any Deliberation, engaged himself to meet at Plainfield in Northumberland, on Assurance that many of his Relations and Acquaintance would appear there; that his Undertaking was sudden, appears in that he engaged in it without any previous Preparation of Men, Horses, Arms, or other warlike Accoutrements; and as the said Earl cannot be justly reproached with any cruel, severe, or harsh Action during the Continuance in Arms, so he took the first Opportunity that offered of submitting to the King's Mercy. After the sudden Skirmishes at Preston, the said Earl, with others, was solicitous to prevent any farther Destruction of the Lives of his Majesty's Subjects, and instrumental to induce all in Arms to submit themselves to the King, provided they might be secured of their Lives. One of his Majesty's Officers, sent from the General, gave them Encouragement to believe, that the Surrender of themselves would be the ready way to obtain the King's Mercy: In Confidence whereof, when a Cessation was agreed on, the said Earl offer'd himself to become one of the Hostages for them till the next Morning, in which time he received further Assurances from the Officers, that the King was a Prince of known Clemency; that this was a distinguishing part of his Character, and that the free Surrender to Mercy would be the most proper means to obtain it. The said Earl believes his Majesty's Officers were very sensible, and will be so just as to acknowledge, that it had not been impracticable for many of those at Preston to make their way through his Majesty's Forces; but this Attempt must have occasioned the loss of many Lives, and might have been productive of ill Consequences to the Government, which the said Earl was desirous to prevent; and when the time agreed on for the Cessation was near expired, and General Wills seem'd uneasy in not having received any Message from those in the Town, the said Earl writ a Letter to exhort them to surrender to the King's Mercy; and at the same time declared to the said General, and other Officers, that whatever happened, he was determin'd to continue with them, and rely entirely on his Majesty's Clemency and Goodness, which he had Encouragement to expect; and in such Circumstances the said Earl cannot distrust your Lordships or the Commons readiness, to use their Mediation for Mercy on his Behalf, which will lay him under the highest Obligations of Duty and Affection to his Majesty, and perpetual Gratitude to both Houses of Parliament.

Derwentwater.

The material Words of which Answer appearing not to be sufficiently express and clear, the Lord Chancellor asked the said Earl if he meant by the said Answer to plead guilty to the High-Treason in the said Articles of Impeachment contain'd.

He said he did, and submitted to the King's Mercy, and humbly desir'd their Lordship's Intercession to his Majesty; and his said Answer and Plea was recorded accordingly.

And he withdrew.

Then the Lord Widdrington was brought to the Bar, and having there also kneeled, was acquainted by the Lord Chancellor with the aforementioned Order, and ask'd the same Question as the Earl of Derwentwater; and he likewise delivered in his Answer, which was read as follows:

The Answer of William Lord Widdrington to the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treason exhibited against him by the Hon. the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses of Great-Britain in Parliament assembled.

IT is with inexpressible Concern and Affliction the said Lord appears before this August Assembly charged with Crimes of the most heinous Nature; and though it is natural to Mankind to endeavour to conceal their Guilt, and make use of all manner of Defence, especially in the case of Life, yet as he surrendred himself at Preston, intirely relying on his Majesty's Mercy, so he is now resolv'd not to take any Measures which may argue the least Diffidence of that Mercy, or of your Lordship's Goodness; and therefore the said Lord confesses he is guilty of the Treason wherewith he is charged in the said Articles; and after having thus freely acknowledged his Offence, he begs leave to lay his Case before your Lordships, and humbly hopes, when the particular Circumstances are considered, it will not be thought to merit the most rigorous Punishment, but that both your Lordships, and the Honourable House of Commons, which look upon him as a proper Object of his Majesty's Clemency; and he humbly hopes he may not be thought the less unworthy of Favour, in that he never before offended, nor was at any time privy to, or acquainted with any Design or Contrivance to destroy or disturb the established Government, the Laws or Religion of this Kingdom, but came unawares into this sudden and unpremeditated Action; for although he had met with public Rumours and Reports of intended Invasions from Abroad, and Insurrections at Home, yet he never knew, or any other way heard of any formed Design against the Government, till he was told the Night before of a Meeting intended at Plainfield in Northumberland on the sixth of October last; and being soon after informed, that almost all his Neighbours and Acquaintance had there met in Arms, he took a hasty and inconsiderate Resolution of joining them; nor was he in any sort prepared for such an Undertaking, having only some of his own Family with him, no Arms but his common Fowling-Pieces and wearing Swords, and fewer Horses than he had constantly kept for several Years before; and nothing but the Report of so many of his Friends being engaged could have hurried him on to an Enterprize so unaccountably rash and unjustifiable; and he is willing to hope your Lordships will esteem it some Alleviation of his Crime, that in a Commotion of that Nature there was so little Violation of the Rights and Properties of those who opposed them; for he believes few Instances can be found, where such a Multitude continued so long in Arms without doing greater Acts of Violence and Injustice. The said Lord cannot charge himself with any injurious Acts to the Property of his Fellow-Subjects, and endeavoured to prevent them in others; and hopes it was thence owing in some Measure, that there was shewn all along greater Marks of Moderation and Humanity, than is common in such a warlike and hostile Proceeding. The Suddenness of the Attack at Preston, without any previous Summons, admitted no time for mediating a Submission before the loss of that Blood which was there unfortunately spilt; but after the Heat and Surprize of the first Action was over, a Cessation of Arms was desired, and upon the mutual Messages which then passed, the Officers sent from the General encouraged them to believe the surrendering themselves would be the ready way to obtain the King's Mercy, and gave them repeated Assurances, that they submitted to a Prince of the greatest Clemency in the World: Upon these Hopes and Assurances they made a general Surrender of themselves to the King; and the said Lord may justly take notice to your Lordships, that as he was the last who took up Arms, so he was the first who procured a Meeting of the chief Persons among them, in order to lay them down; and cannot doubt but your Lordships, and the Honourable House of Commons, will think it equitable to make some Distinction between an obstinate Resistance and an early and humble Submission, whereby the Peace and Tranquillity of this part of his Majesty's Dominions was intirely restored. Nature must have started at yielding themselves up to a certain and ignominious Death, when it must be acknowledged that it was not impracticable for many of them to have escaped; and it was possible so great a Number grown desperate might have obtained further Success, and thereby prevented the so speedy suppressing that Insurrection; but the said Lord, and the rest, having with the utmost Confidence relied on the Assurances of his Majesty's great Clemency, and the hopes of Mercy, which had been given them from the Officers who commanded the Royal Forces, he is encouraged with great Earnestness to implore the Intercession of your Lordships, and the Honourable House of Commons, with his Majesty, for that Mercy on which they wholly depended; and as he doth not know where Mercy was refused to those who so early and with so much Resignation submitted to it, so he humbly hopes your Lordships may be induced to think, that the Exercise of this Divine Virtue by his Majesty towards those who cast themselves at his Royal Feet upon the sole Prospect and Expectation of it, will appear no less glorious to his Majesty, and prove no less advantagious to the future Quiet and Tranquillity of his Government, than any Examples of Justice in such a Case can be likely to do: And whatever Marks of Goodness and Favour his Majesty shall vouchsafe to the said Lord, will not fail to engage him by the strongest Tyes of Gratitude, to demonstrate in the future Course of his Life the most constant inviolable Duty to his Majesty, and the most real Esteem and Veneration for your Lordships and the Honourable House of Commons.

Widdrington.

And the said Lord Widdrington being asked if he had any thing farther to say, he begg'd to be excused all Imperfections in his said Answer, said he had been indisposed with the Gout in his Stomach, and was not able to employ himself in preparing his Answer till last Night, and finished it but this Morning, and humbly implored their Lordships Intercession to his Majesty for Favour and Mercy; and his Answer and Plea was recorded accordingly.

And he withdrew.

Then the Earl of Nithisdale was brought to the Bar, and having there likewise kneeled, was acquainted with the forementioned Order, and asked the same Question as the Earl of Derwentwater, and he also delivered in his Answer, which was read as follows.

The Answer of William Earl of Nithisdale, to the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treason Exhibited against him by the Honourable the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses of Great-Britain in Parliament Assembled.

IT is with the utmost Confusion the said Earl appears at your Lordship's Bar, under the Weight of an Impeachment by the Commons of Great Britain for High-Treason; he humbly begs Leave, in Extenuation of his Crime, to assure your Lordships, that he was always a zealous Asserter of the Liberties of his Country, and never engaged in forming or carrying on any Design to subvert the antient established Government, and the good Laws of this Kingdom; but being Summoned by those entrusted with the Administration of the Government in Scotland land to appear at Edinburgh, and being assured if he went thither he should be made close Prisoner, he did not obey the Summons; but in all humble Manner applied for their Indulgence in dispensing with his being committed to Goal, offering to give any Bail for his peaceable and quiet Behaviour; which being refused, and being at that time in so ill a State of Health, that a Confinement in Edinburgh Castle would have endangered his Life, he was forced to abscond and kept private till several of the Persons mentioned in the said Impeachment, with many other of his Neighbours, appeared in Arms very near the Place where the said Earl lay concealed; and then he inconsiderately and unfortunately (with four of his Domestics, and no other Person whatsoever) joined them, and proceeded in their Company to the Places in the said Articles of Impeachment mentioned; but he knew nothing of the intended Insurrection till they were actually in Arms. The said Earl is deeply sensible of his great Offence, and not affecting Delay, nor being willing to give your Lordships, or the Honourable House of Commons, any unnecessary Trouble; he does with a Sorrow, equal to his Crime, confess that he is guilty of the Treason in the said Articles of Impeachment contained, and throws himself at his Majesty's Feet, imploring his Royal Mercy; and to incline his Majesty thereto, and induce your Lordships to recommend him as an Object thereof, he begs Leave to inform your Lordships, that when he, and the rest that were with him at Preston, had engaged in a Battle, a Cessation of Arms being agreed to, they had Intimations from his Majesty's Officers; that if they submitted, they might expect the King's Mercy; and History abounding with Instances of Conditions stipulated with Generals, even with Rebels, and afterwards agreed to, and confirmed by their Sovereigns, they were prevailed on by such Encouragement, together with the Consideration of his Majesty's known Clemency, to surrender themselves Prisoners, whereby the Lives of great Numbers of his Majesty's good Subjects were saved, which by an obstinate Resistance would inevitably have been destroyed; and therefore he most humbly begs your Lordships would be pleased to represent his Case to his Majesty in the most favourable Manner; not doubting but by your Lordships powerful Intercession, he shall find, that as he performed the Duty of a good Christian, in concurring to prevent the Effusion of Blood; so he acted the Part of a wise Man in relying upon a Mercy so extensive as that of his Majesty: And he presumes, when the Honourable House of Commons are apprized of the Nature of his Case, they will not interpose to prevent him from having a Share in the Benefit of that Mercy.

Nithisdale.

And the said Earl of Nithisdale being asked if he had any thing further to say, he said he had nothing but to implore the King's Mercy; and his Answer and Plea was recorded accordingly.

And he withdrew.

Then the Earl of Carnwath was brought to the Bar, and having there likewise kneeled, was acquainted by the Lord Chancellor with the forementioned Order, and asked the same Question as the Earl of Derwentwater.

VOL. VI.

He said he had no Answer in Writing, but desired to throw himself on the King's Mercy; and humbly implored their Lordship's Intercession to his Majesty on his behalf; and assured the House, if the same were granted, he should think himself obliged to live under the strictest Tyes of Loyalty to his Majesty; and as to the said Articles; he said he was guilty of the High-Treason contained in the said Articles of Impeachment against him; and the said Plea was recorded accordingly.

And he withdrew.

Then the Viscount Kenmure was brought to the Bar, and having there kneeled also, was acquainted by the Lord Chancellor with the forementioned Order, and asked the same Question as the Earl of Derwentwater.

He said he had no Answer in Writing, but was guilty of the Charge of High-Treason contained in the Articles of Impeachment against him, and begged the House would intercede with his Majesty for Mercy; and his Plea was recorded accordingly.

And he withdrew.

Then the Lord Nairn was brought to the Bar, and having there also kneeled, was acquainted by the Lord Chancellor with the forementioned Order, and asked the same Question as the Earl of Derwentwater.

He said he threw himself upon the King's Mercy, and begged the Intercession of this House to his Majesty; and as to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him, he said he was guilty of the High-Treason contained in the said Articles; and his Plea was recorded accordingly.

Then he delivered in a Petition at the Bar, and the same was read as follows.

*To the Right Honourable the Lords
Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Assembled.*

The humble Petition of William Lord Nairn,

SHEWETH,

THAT your Petitioner was educated, and hath always continued a Protestant, according to the Discipline of the Church of England; and though, by reason of some mistaken Principles he unwarily imbib'd in his tender Years, he did not in all respects conform to the late Revolution, lying under the less Necessity, for that he had married an Heiress, in whom all the Right of your Petitioner's Estate is invested; and tho' he never took the Oaths, yet he always peaceably submitted to, and lived quietly under the Government as by Law Established, until the breaking out of this Rebellion, in which your Petitioner was inadvertently involv'd, but not before the Lord Mar, and his Adherents, had for a considerable time made themselves Masters of Pertb and Dunkeld, and thereby surrounded your Petitioner's whole Estate, and came to your Petitioner's House, lying in the middle between those places.

Your Petitioner heartily repents of this rash Undertaking, and solemnly declares he knew nothing nothing of any previous Consultations, or Conspiracies in Favour of the Pretender, before he actually appeared in Arms; nor knew any thing about crossing the Forth, untill the Morning he was sent over under Macintock's Command; and then was so far from approving of that Expedition, that tho' to avoid the Imputation of Cowardice he would hazard his own Person therein, your Petitioner ordered back all his Dependants, and was only attended by his Son, and four Servants, who would not leave him in a Time of Danger, tho' often desired; nor was your Petitioner privy to any Designs of marching into England, for having been bred a Seaman, he had no Pretensions to Knowledge in the Land Service.

Your Petitioner being now sensible of his Errors, hath pleaded guilty to the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treason exhibited against him, by the Honourable House of Commons, and thrown himself at his Majesty's Feet; humbly beseeching your Lordships, in Commiseration of the deplorable Circumstances of your Petitioner, and his twelve Children, to recommend him to his Majesty for that Mercy, which at the Time of his Surrender he was made to believe he might reasonably expect.

This will lay your Petitioner and his Posterity under the greatest Obligations of Duty and Gratitude to his Majesty, and bind them for ever to bless your Lordships as the merciful Instruments of procuring such a gracious Deliverance.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

N A I R N.

And being asked if he had any thing further to say, he said he had not, and withdrew.

Lord High-Steward. My Lords that are the Prisoners at the Bar, I am to acquaint your Lordships, that upon any Occasion which shall be offered you to speak for yourselves, you are to direct your Speech to the Lords in general; and so is any other Person that shall have Occasion to speak to this Court.

Lord High Steward. James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, Robert Earl of Carmath, William Viscount Kennure, and William Lord Nairn, You stand impeached of High-Treason by the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament assembled; which Treason is contained in the Articles that have been lately read; to this you have severally pleaded guilty, and are thereby convicted. What say you, James Earl of Derwentwater, why Judgment should not pass upon you according to Law?

Earl of Derwentwater. I Only humbly beg leave of my Noble Peers to repeat a few Circumstances mentioned in my Answer to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against me by the Honourable House of Commons.

But the Terrors of your Lordships just Sentence, which at once deprive me of my Life and Estate, and compleat the Misfortunes of my Wife and innocent Children, are so heavy upon my Mind, together with my Unexperience, that I am scarce able to alledge what may extenuate my Offence, if any thing can do it. I have confessed myself guilty; but, my Lords, that Guilt was rashly incurred without any Premeditation, as I hope your Lordships will be convinced by one Particular: I beg leave to observe, I was wholly unprovided with Men, Horses, Arms, and other Necessaries, which in my Situation I could not have wanted, had I been privy to any formed Design: As my Offence was sudden, so my Submission was early; when his Majesty's Generals thought fit to demand Hostages for securing the Terms of the Cessation, I voluntarily offered myself, without which the Cessation might possibly have proved ineffectual: And whilst I continued Hostage, the great Character of his Majesty's Clemency, and the repeated Encouragement I had to hope for Mercy, by surrendering to it, soon determined me; and I accordingly declared my Resolution to remain with his Majesty's Forces, and from that Time submitted myself to his Goodness, on which I still entirely depend. I humbly hope to obtain the Mediation of your Lordships, and of the Honourable House of Commons, in my behalf; solemnly protesting my future Conduct shall shew me not altogether unworthy your generous Compassion for my Life, which is all I can beg of his Majesty.

Lord High-Steward. My Lord Derwentwater, your Lordship's Voice hath not been perfectly heard to this End of the Court, therefore I ask you whether you have pleaded any thing in Arrest of Judgment?

Lord Derwentwater. No, my Lords.

Lord High-Steward. Lord Widdrington, what have you to say for yourself why Judgment should not pass upon you according to Law?

Lord Widdrington. MY Lords I have abandoned all manner of Defence ever since I first surrender'd myself to his Majesty's Royal Clemency, and only now beg leave to repeat to your Lordships some Circumstances of my unhappy Case, which I have already set forth in my Answer.

Your Lordships see before you an unfortunate Man, who after leading a private and retired Life for many Years, has by one rash and inconsiderate Action, exposed himself and his Family to the greatest Calamities and Misery, and is now upon the Point of receiving the severest Sentence directed by any of our English Laws.

I do protest to your Lordships, that I was never privy to any concerted Measures against his Majesty's Royal Person, or the established Government: As to the Insurrection in Northumberland, I only heard of it accidentally the Night before it happen'd, and being soon after informed that all my Neighbours and Acquaintance had met in Arms, a crowd of confused and mistaken Notions hurried me at once into a precipitate Resolution of joining them; a Resolution, which, I must own, I could never since calmly reflect upon without part of that Confusion I find myself under in the public Acknowledgment of so much Rashness and Folly. After thus plunging out of my Depth, as unprepared for such an Enterprize as the Action was unpremeditated, I cannot, for my own Particular, upon the strictest Recollection charge myself with any Violation of the Properties of my Fellow-Subjects: But on the contrary, I always endeavoured to encourage: Humanity and Moderation during the whole course course of our miserable Expedition; and in order to make the best Atonement in my Power for the great Fault I had been guilty of, I can justly say, that I was in no small Degree instrumental in procuring a general Submission to his Majesty. But, my Lords, however willing or desirous, either I or any others might be to put a speedy End to those unfortunate Troubles; Self-preservation, the first and most powerful Law of Nature, would have render'd the Proposal vain and fruitless, had not the Officers who commanded the Royal Forces given us Hopes of Mercy, and assured us we submitted to a Prince of the greatest Clemency in the World. These Hopes, and this Assurance, answered the strongest Objections, overcame all remaining Difficulties, and gave the finishing Stroke to a general Surrender, whereby the further Effusion of British Blood was prevented, and a perfect Tranquillity restored to these Parts of his Majesty's Dominions.

My Lords, as this my first Attempt was rash and unpremeditated, as I always used and promoted Moderation and Humanity towards my Fellow-Subjects, and as I did not obstinately persist in my Fault, but was the first who proposed an early Submission to his Majesty, I humbly hope my unhappy Case, and the deplorable Condition of my unfortunate Children, already deprived of their tender Mother, will raise a generous Compassion in your Lordships, and the Honourable House of Commons; and I most earnestly entreat both your Lordships, and that Honourable House, to become Intercessors with his Majesty in my behalf, for that Mercy which I was encouraged to hope for when I first surrendered, and which I have ever since with the utmost Confidence relied on.

I have only to add my most solemn Assurance before this August Assembly, that no future Time shall ever find me wanting in the most inviolable Duty and Gratitude to that merciful Prince who gives me my Life, and restores a Father to five miserable and distressed Orphans; and I shall always retain the highest Esteem and Veneration for your Lordships and the Honourable House of Commons.

Lord High-Steward. Lord Widdrington, for greater certainty I ask your Lordship whether you have pleaded any thing in Arrest of Judgment.

Lord Widdrington. No, my Lords, I have not.

Lord High-Steward. William Earl of Nitbisdale, what hath your Lordship to say for yourself why Judgment should not pass upon you according to Law?

Lord Nitbisdale. MY Lords, I have confessed myself guilty, relying on his Majesty's Mercy; and I beg leave to assure your Lordships I was never privy to any Plot or Design against his Majesty's Person or Government, and was unprovided with any Necessaries for such a Purpose; but rashly and inconsiderately, with only four of my Servants, joined those who appeared in Arms in my Neighbourhood, and was one of the last who went unto them.

At Preston, my Lords, his Majesty's Generals gave great Hopes and Encouragement to believe that surrendering to his Majesty's Mercy, was the ready Way to obtain it, with repeated Assurances that his Majesty was a Prince of the greatest Clemency.

Upon those Hopes and Assurances I submitted myself, and still entirely depend on his Majesty's Goodness, earnestly beseeching your Lordships and the Honourable House of Commons, to intercede with his Majesty on my behalf.

And I solemnly promise your Lordships I shall, during the Remainder of my Life, pay the utmost Duty and Gratitude to his most gracious Majesty, and the highest Veneration and Respect to your Lordships and the Honourable House of Commons.

Lord High-Steward. I must also ask your Lordship (your Lordship's Voice not reaching thus far) whether you have pleaded any thing in Arrest of Judgment.

Lord Nitbisdale. No, my Lords, I have not.

Lord High-Steward. Lord Carnwath, what have you to say for yourself why Judgment should not pass upon you according to Law?

Lord Carnwath. MY Lords, I shall not trouble this Great Assembly with a Repetition of what I said, when formerly before your Lordships and his Majesty's Council.

I hope these Noble Lords entertain that favourable Opinion of my sincere Dealing then, as to believe that want of Experience and Knowledge of the Laws was the great Inducement of engaging me in this fatal and unhappy Undertaking.

The only thing which I can hope or wish for is his Majesty's Mercy; he has the Character of a merciful Prince: Should it please him to think me a proper Object for it (tho' I must confess myself a very unworthy one) all I can say, my Lords, is, that the Remainder of my Life shall convince his Majesty, and all the World, of my true Penitence and Gratitude.

My Lords, I am yet an unworthy Member of this great Body, the Peerage, now expecting your Lordships Judgment as to Life or Death: Should it be for Life, my Demeanour and Carriage for the future will be such, as none of your Lordships shall be ashamed of having shew'd me Compassion; but should it be for Death, God's Will be done; to my last Hour I shall pray for the Nation's and your Lordships Prosperity; having this Comfort in my present Distress, that your Lordships are my Judges at this Tribunal: And yet a greater Comfort have I, that I am soon to appear before a greater, where I can't despair of finding Mercy and Forgiveness for all my Sins.

I beg God Almighty's Pardon for them: I have already ask'd his Majesty's, and I do it now; and I do humbly beg leave, once more, and perhaps the last Occasion that ever I shall have, to desire that your Grace, this noble House, and the Honourable House of Commons of Great Britain, who are now here, would intercede with his Majesty for me.

I take my Leave of your Lordships, and wish you all Happiness.

Lord High-Steward. Does your Lordship offer any thing in Arrest of Judgment.

Lord Carnwath. No, my Lords.

Lord High-Steward. Lord Kenmure, what have you to say for yourself why Judgment should not pass upon you according to Law ?

Lord Kenmure. MY Lords, I am truly sensible of my Crime, and want Words to express my Repentance. God knows I never had any personal Prejudice against his Majesty, nor was I ever accessary to any previous Design against him. I humbly beg my noble Peers and the Honourable House of Commons to intercede with the King for Mercy to me, that I may live to shew myself the dutifullest of his Subjects, and to be the Means to keep my Wife and four small Children from starving; the Thoughts of which, with my Crime, makes me the most unfortunate of all Gentlemen.

Lord High-Steward. My Lord, your Voice not being heard to this End of the Court, I would know whether in what you have said you have offered any thing in Arrest of Judgment.

Lord Kenmure. No, my Lords.

Lord High-Steward. Lord Nairn, what have you to say for yourself why Judgment should not pass upon you according to Law ?

Lord Nairn. I Am very sensible how unfit I am to plead my own Cause before your Grace (my Lord High-Steward) and this august Assembly ; and therefore, though I could say much to extenuate the Crime for which I stand impeached, yet I chuse rather to lay my whole Strefs upon the King's Mercy, for which he is so renowned, and which I was put in hopes of at the Time of my Surrender. In Consideration whereof, and in Compassion to an afflicted Wife and twelve Children, I still hope, by the Mediation of your Grace, my noble Lords, and the Honourable House of Commons, I may obtain it ; solemnly protesting, that in Gratitude for so signal a Deliverance, I will, to the End of my Life, remain a dutiful and obedient Subject to his most gracious and sacred Majesty King George.

Lord High-Steward. My Lord, for greater certainty, I ask your Lordship whether you have offered any thing in Arrest of Judgment ?

Lord Nairn. No, my Lords.

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes ! Our sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Lord High-Steward. James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn ;

You stand impeached, by the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament assembled, of High Treason, in traiterously imagining, and compassing the Death of his most sacred Majesty, and in conspiring for that end to levy a bloody and destructive War against his Majesty, in order to depose and murder him ; and in levying War accordingly, and proclaiming a Pretender to his Crown to be King of these Realms.

Which Impeachment, tho' one of your Lordships, in the Introduction to his Plea, supposes to be out of the ordinary and common Course of the Law and Justice, is yet as much a Course of Proceeding according to the Common Law, as any other whatsoever.

If you had been indicted, the Indictment must have been removed and brought before the House of Lords (the Parliament sitting.) In that case you had ('tis true) been accused only by the Grand Jury of one County ; in the present, the whole Body of the Commons of Great Britain, by their Representatives, are your Accusers.

And this Circumstance is very observable, (to exclude all possible Supposition of Hardship as to the Method of proceeding against you) That however all great Assemblies amongst us are apt to differ on other Points, You were impeached by the unanimous Opinion of the House of Commons (not one contradicting.)

The found themselves, it seems, so much concerned in the Preservation of his most truly sacred Majesty, and the Protestant Succession (the very Life and Soul of these Kingdoms) that they could not omit the first Opportunity of taking their proper Part, in order to so signal and necessary an Act of his Majesty's Justice.

And thus the whole Body Politic of this free Kingdom has in a manner rose up in its own Defence, for the Punishment of those Crimes, which, 'twas rightly apprehended, had a direct Tendency to the everlasting Dissolution of it.

To this Impeachment you have severally pleaded, and acknowledged yourselves guilty of the High-Treason therein contained.

Your Pleas are accompanied with some Variety of Matter, to mitigate your Offences, and to obtain Mercy.

Part of which, as some of the Circumstances said to have attended your Surrender (seeming to be offered rather as Arguments only for Mercy, than any thing in Mitigation of your preceding Guilt) is not proper for me to take Notice of.

But as to the other Part, which is meant to extenuate the Crimes of which you are convicted, it is fit I should take this Occasion to make some Observations to your Lordships upon it ; to the end that the Judgment to be given against you may clearly appear to be Just and Righteous, as well as Legal ; and that you may not remain under any fatal Error in respect of a greater Judicature, by reflecting with less Horror and Remorse on the Guilt you have contracted than it really deserves.

It is alledged by some of your Lordships, that you engaged in this Rebellion without previous Concert or Deliberation, and without suitable Preparations of Men, Horses and Arms.

If this should be supposed true, on some of your Lordships averring it, I desire you to consider, that as it exempts you from the Circumstance of contriving this Treason, so it very much aggravates your Guilt in that Part you have undoubtedly born in the Execution of it.

For it shews, That your Inclinations to rebel were so well known (which could only be from a continued Series of your Words and Actions) that the Contrivers of that horrid Design depended upon you, and therein judg'd rightly : That your Zeal to engage in this Treason was so strong, as to carry you into it on the least Warning, and the very first Invitation : That you would not excuse yourselves by Want of Preparation, as you might have done ; and that rather than not have a Share in the Rebellion, you would plunge yourselves into it, almost naked and unprovided for such an Enterprize : In short, that your Men, Horses, and Arms were not so well prepared, as they might, and would have been on longer Warning ; but your Minds were.

It is alledged also as an Extenuation of your Crime, that no cruel or harsh Action (I suppose is meant no Rapine or Plunder, or worse) has been committed by you.

This may, in Part only be true. But then your Lordships will at the same time consider, that the laying waste a Tract of Land bears but a little Proportion in point of Guilt, compared with that Crime of which you stand convicted ; an open Attempt to destroy the best of Kings, to ruin the whole Fabric, and raze the very Foundations of a Government, the best suited of any in the World, to perfect the Happiness, and support the Dignity of human Nature : The former Offence causes but a Mischief that is soon recovered, and is usually pretty much confined ; the latter, had it succeeded, must have brought a lasting and universal Destruction on the whole Kingdom.

Besides, much of this was owing to Accident ; your March was so hasty, partly to avoid the King's Troops, and partly from a vain Hope to stir up Insurrections in all the Counties you passed through, that you had not time to spread Devastation, without deviating from your main, and, as I have observed, much worse Design.

Farther, 'tis very surprizing, that any concerned in this Rebellion should lay their ingaging in it on the Government's doing a necessary and usual Act in like cases for its Preservation ; the giving Orders to confine such as were most likely to join in that Treason : 'Tis hard to believe that any one should rebel, merely to avoid being restrain'd from rebelling ; or that a gentle Confinement would not much better have suited a crazy State of Health, than the Fatigues and Inconveniencies of such long and hasty Marches in the Depth of Winter.

You Lordships rising in Arms therefore, has much more justified the Prudence and Fitness of those Orders, than those Orders will in any wise serve to mitigate your Treason. Alas ! happy had it been for all your Lordships had you fallen under so indulgent a Restraint !

When your Lordships shall in good earnest apply yourselves to think impartially on your Case, surely you will not yourselves believe, that it is possible, in the nature of the thing, to be engaged, and continue so long engaged, in such a difficult and laborious Enterprize, through Rashness, Surprize, or Inadvertency : Or that, had the Attack at Prison been less sudden, (and consequently the Rebels better prepared to receive it) your Lordships had been reduced the sooner, and with less, if not without any Bloodshed.

No, my Lords ; these, and such like, are artful Colourings proceeding from Minds filled with Expectation of continuing in this World ; and not from such as are preparing for their Defence before a Tribunal, where the Thoughts of the Heart, and the true Springs and Causes of Actions, must be laid open.

And now, my Lords, having thus removed some false Colours you have used ; to assist you yet farther in that necessary Work of thinking on your great Offence as you ought, I proceed to touch upon several Circumstances that seem greatly to aggravate your Crime, and which will deserve your most serious Consideration.

The Divine Virtues ('tis one of your Lordships own Epithets) which all the World as well as your Lordships acknowledge to be in his Majesty, and which you now lay claim to, ought certainly to have withheld your Hands from endeavouring to depose, to destroy, to murder that most Excellent Prince ; so the Impeachment speaks, and so the Law construes your Actions ; and this is not only true in the Notion of Law, but almost always so in Deed and Reality : 'Tis a trite, but very true Remark, that there are but few Hours between Kings being reduced under the Power of Pretenders to their Crown, and their Graves. Had you succeeded, his Majesty's Case would, I fear, have hardly been an Exception to that general Rule, since 'tis highly improbable, that Flight should have saved any of that Illustrious and Valiant Family.

'Tis a farther Aggravation of your Crime, that his Majesty, whom your Lordships would have dethroned ; affected not the Crown by Force, or by the Arts of Ambition, but succeeded peaceably and legally to it ; and on the Decease of her late Majesty without Issue, became undoubtedly the next in course of Descent capable of succeeding to the Crown, by the Law and Constitution of this Kingdom ; as it stood declared some Years before the Crown was expressly limited to the House of Hanover. This Right was acknowledged, and the Descent of the Crown limited or confirmed accordingly, by the whole Legislature in two successive Reigns ; and more than once in the later, which your Lordships Accomplices are very far from allowing, would bias the Nation to that Side.

How could it then enter into the Heart of Men, to think that private Persons might with a good Conscience endeavour to subvert such a Settlement, by running to tumultuary Arms ; and by intoxicating the dreggs of the People with contradictory Opinions, and groundless Slanders ; or that God's Providence would ever prosper such wicked, such ruinous Attempts ?

Especially if in the next place it be considered, that the most fertile Inventions on the side of the Rebellion, have not been able to assign the least shadow of a Grievance as the Cause of it : To such poor Shifts have they been reduced on this Head, that for want of better Colours, it has been objected, in a solemn manner, by your Lordships Associates, to his Majesty's Government ; that his People do not enjoy the Fruits of Peace as our Neighbours have done since the last War : Thus they first robbed us of our Peace, and then upbraid us that we have it not. 'Tis a monstrous Rebellion that can find no fault with the Government it invades, but what is the Effect of the Rebellion it self.

Your Lordships will likewise do well to consider what an additional Burthen your Treason has made necessary on the People of this Kingdom ; who wanted, and were about to enjoy some Respite : To this end, 'tis well known, that all new, or increase of Taxes, were the last Year carefully avoided avoided, and his Majesty was contented to have no more Forces than were just sufficient to attend his Person, and shut the Gates of a few Garriſons.

But what his Majesty thus did for the Eaſe and Quiet of his People, you moſt ungratefully turn'd to his Diſadvantage, by taking Encouragement from thence, to endanger his and his Kingdom's Safety, and to bring Oppreſſion on your Fellow-Subjects.

Your Lordſhips obſerve I avoid expatiating on the Miſeries of a Civil War, a very large and copious Subject; I ſhall but barely ſuggeſt to you on that Head, that whatever thoſe Calamities may happen to be in the preſent Caſe, all who are at any Time or in any Place Partakers in the Rebellion (eſpecially Perſons of Figure and Diſtinction) are in ſome degree reſponſible for 'em: And therefore your Lordſhips muſt not hold your ſelves quite clear from the Guilt of thoſe Barbarities which have been lately committed, by ſuch as are engaged in the ſame Treason with you, and not yet perfectly reduced, in burning the Habitations of their Countrymen, and thereby expoſing many Thouſands to Cold and Hunger in this rigorous Season.

I muſt be ſo juſt to ſuch of your Lordſhips, as profeſs the Religion of the Church of Rome, that you had one Temptation, and that a great one, to engage you in this Treason, which the others had not; in that 'twas evident, Succeſs on your Part muſt for ever have eſta bliſhed Popery in this Kingdom, and that probably you could never have again ſo fair an Opportunity.

But then, good God! how muſt thoſe Proteſtants be covered with Confuſion, who entered into the ſame Meaſures, without ſo much as capitulating for their Religion (that ever I could find from any Examination I have ſeen or heard) or ſo much as requiring, much leſs obtaining a frail Promiſe, that it ſhould be preſerved, or even tolerated.

It is my Duty to exhort your Lordſhips thus, to think of the Aggravations as well as the Mitigations (if there be any) of your Offences; and if I could have the leaſt Hopes, that the Prejudices of Habit and Education would not be too ſtrong for the moſt earneſt and charitable Entreaties; I would beg you not to rely any longer on thoſe Directors of your Conſciences, by whoſe Conduct you have, very probably, been led into this miſerable Condition; but that your Lordſhips would be aſſiſted by ſome of thoſe pious and learned Divines of the Church of England, who have conſtantly bore that infallible Mark of ſincere Chriſtians, univerſal Charity.

And now, my Lords, nothing remains, but that I pronounce upon you, (and ſorry I am that it falls to my Lot to do it) that terrible Sentence of the Law, which muſt be the ſame that is uſually given againſt the meaneſt Offender in the like Kind.

The moſt ignominious and painful Parts of it are uſually remitted by the Grace of the Crown to Perſons of your Quality; but the Law in this Caſe being deaf to all Diſtinctions of Perſons, requires I ſhould pronounce, and accordingly it is adjudged by this Court,

“ That you, James Earl of Derwentwater, “ William Lord Widdrington, William Earl
 “ of Nithiſdale, Robert Earl of Carnwath, “ William Viſcount Kennure, and William “ Lord Nairn, and every of you, return to

 “ the Priſon of the Tower from whence you
 “ came; from thence you muſt be drawn
 “ to the Place of Execution; when you
 “ come there, you muſt be hang'd by the “ Neck, but not till you be Dead; for you
 “ muſt be cut down alive, then your Bowels
 “ muſt be taken out, and burnt before your “ Faces; then your Heads muſt be ſever'd
 “ from your Bodies, and your Bodies di“ vided each into four Quarters; and theſe
 “ muſt be at the King's diſpoſal.

And God Almighty be merciful to your Souls!

Serjeants at Arms. O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King ſtrictly charges and commands all manner of Perſons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Im- priſonment.

Then the Lord High Steward ſtood up uncovered, and declaring there was nothing more to be done by Vertue of the preſent Commiſſion, broke the Staff, and pronounced it diſſolv'd: And then leaving the Chair, came down to the Wool- pack, and ſaid, Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to adjourn to the Houſe of Lords?

Lords. Ay, ay.

And then the Houſe adjourned to the Houſe above, and the Lords and others returned in the ſame Order they came down.

After Sentence paſt great Intereſt was made on their Behalf for Mercy; inſomuch, that the Houſe of Lords preſented an Addreſs to the King, To Reprieve ſuch of them as ſhould deſerve his Mercy; to which the King only answered, That on this and all other Occaſions, he would do what he thought moſt conſiſtent with the Dignity of his Crown, and the Safety of his People. However, Lord Widdrington, Lord Carnwath, and Lord Nairn were reprieved, and afterwards pardoned; but the other three, Lord Derwentwater, Lord Nithiſdale, and Lord Kennure, were ordered for Execution on Febr. 24.

The Earl of Nithiſdale eſcap'd the Blow, having found means of getting out of the Tower in Diſ- guiſe, the very Night before the Execution*.

Early the next Morning the Scaffold on Tower- Hill was ſurrounded with the Guards, and a little before ten o'th' Clock the Earl of Derwentwater and the Lord Viſcount Kennure, were carried in an Hackney Coach from the Tower, to the Transport-Office on Tower-Hill, where there was a Room hung with Black for their Reception, and there was a Paſſage or Gallery rail'd in, which led from thence to the Scaffold, which was alſo covered with Black.

The Earl of Derwentwater was firſt led to the Scaffold, where having ſpent ſome time in praying with a Book, he then addreſs'd himſelf to the Sheriff, and deſired the Liberty to read a Paper, which he had drawn up: This Requeſt being readily granted, he went to the Rails of the Scat- fold and read as follows:

BEING in a few Minutes to appear before the Tribunal of God, where, though moſt unworthy, I hope to find Mercy, which I have not found from Men now in Power, I have endeavoured to make my Peace with his Divine Maſteſty, by moſt humbly begging Pardon for all the Sins of my Life; and I doubt not of a merciful Forgiveness, thro' the Merits of the Passion and Death of my Saviour Jesus Christ ; for which End, I earnestly desire the Prayers of all good Christians.

* The King being told of this the next Morning, merrily ſaid, It was the beſt thing a Man in his Condition could have done.

After this, I am to ask Pardon of those whom I might have scandalized by pleading guilty at my Trial. Such as were permitted to come to me, told me, that having been undeniably in Arms, pleading guilty was but the Consequence of having submitted to Mercy ; and many Arguments were us'd to prove there was nothing of moment in so doing ; among others the universal Practice of signing Leases, whereof the Preambles run in the Name of the Person in Possession.

But I am sensible that in this I have made bold with my Loyalty, having never owned any other but King James the Third for my rightful and lawful Sovereign ; him I had an Inclination to serve from my Infancy, and was mov'd thereto by a natural Love I had to his Person, knowing him to be capable of making his People happy ; and though he had been of a different Religion from mine, I should have done for him all that lay in my Power, as my Ancestors have done for his Predecessors, being thereto bound by the Laws of God and Man.

Wherefore, if in this Affair I have acted rashly, it ought not to affect the Innocent ; I intended to wrong no Body, but to serve my King and Country, and that without Self-interest ; hoping by the Example I gave, to have induc'd others to their Duty ; and God, who sees the Secrets of my Heart, knows I speak Truth. Some Means have been proposed to me for saving my Life, which I look'd upon as inconsistent with Honour and Conscience, and therefore I rejected them ; for, with God's Assistance, I shall prefer any Death, to the doing a base unworthy Action. I only wish now, that the laying down my Life, might contribute to the Service of my King and Country, and the Re-establishment of the ancient and fundamental Constitution of these Kingdoms ; without which, no lasting Peace, or true Happiness, can attend them ; then I should, indeed, part with Life even with Pleasure : As it is, I can only pray, that these Blessings may be bestow'd upon my dear Country ; and since I can do no more, I beseech God to accept of my Life, as a small Sacrifice towards it.

I die a Roman Catholick ; I am in perfect Charity with all the World, I thank God for it, even with those of the present Government, who are most instrumental in my Death. I freely forgive such as ungenerously reported false Things of me ; and I hope to be forgiven the Trespasses of my Youth, by the Father of infinite Mercy ; into whose Hand I commend my Soul.

J. A. DERWENTWATER.

P. S. If that Prince who now governs, had given me my Life, I should have thought my self obliged never more to have taken up Arms against him.

After the reading this Paper he delivered it to the Sheriff to do with it as he pleas'd. Then turning to the Block he view'd it close, and finding in it a rough Place, which might offend his Neck, he bid the Executioner chip it off. Having prepar'd himself for the Blow by pulling off his Coat and Waistcoat, he lay down to fit his Head to the Block, telling the Executioner that the Sign he should give him was, Lord Jesu receive my Soul, and at the third time of repeating it he was to do his Office ; which accordingly he did at one Blow.

Immediately after the Earl of Derwentwater was executed as above, the Lord Kenmure was brought to the Scaffold, accompany'd by his Son and some Friends, and attended by two Clergymen of the Church of England, which was the Religion he profess'd. He made no formal Speech, but testify'd his Sorrow for having pleaded guilty. Then laying down his Head on the Block, he rais'd it up again, and still continuing on his Knees, gave the Executioner some Money, and told him, he would give him no Sign, but that when he laid down his Head again, he might perform his Office as he saw good. Then having lifted up his Hands a short time in Prayer, he resolutely laid down his Head, which at two Blows was sever'd from his Body.

After his Execution a Letter was found which he wrote to the Pretender (by the Style of King James) in which he declared, That he died for his faithful Services to his Majesty, but hoped the Cause he died for would flourish after his Death : And as he suffered for his Service, he hop'd his Majesty would provide for his Wife and Children.

CLXXXVI. The Trial of George Earl of Wintoun, before the House of Lords, upon an Impeachment for High-Treason, March 15, 16, 19. 1715. 2 GEO. I.

Die Lunæ 9 Januarii, 1715.

THE Earl of Wintoun was impeach'd of High-Treason ; and the Articles were brought up against him and read the same Day in the House of Lords : And it was order'd that the said Earl, with the other impeach'd Lords, should be brought to the Bar of the House of Lords the next Day, to hear the said Articles read, and to abide such further Order as the House should think fit to make concerning them.

VOL. VI.

Die Martis 10 Januarii, 1715.

The Earl of Wintoun and the other impeach'd Lords were brought to the Bar in the usual Form ; then the said Articles of Impeachment were read unto them ; after which the Lord Chancellor asked them severally what they had to say thereunto, and acquainted them, that if they had any thing to request of the House this was their proper Time.

Thereupon the Earl of Wintoun acquainted the House he was unprepared, and very ignorant of the Form of their Lordships Judicature, and desired he might have a Copy of the said Articles, and such Time to answer as the House should think fit, and that Council might be assign'd to assist him. He was directed to withdraw; and being accordingly withdrawn, the House took his Requests into Consideration, and thereupon Ordered, That his Lordship should be allowed a Copy of the said Articles of Impeachment, and Time 'till Saturday next to put in his Answer thereunto; and that Council should be assign'd him in order to assist him in preparing his Answer, and likewise in his Defence in Matters of Law.

Then his Lordship was called in again, and the Lord Chancellor acquainted him with the said Order, and that the House expected he should name such Council as he desired to have.

To which he answered, that no body was allow'd to come to him, he was a Stranger and unprepared, and desired to be allowed Time to name his Council.

Then his Lordship being again withdrawn,

After some time he was again called in, and the Lord Chancellor, by Order of the House, acquainted him, That the House was pleas'd, besides Council, to allow him a Solicitor, and to give him leave to name whom he desired to come to him this Evening, or to-morrow Morning, in order to advise him in the naming of Council and Solicitor.

To which purpose the Earl of Wintoun named Mr. Hereot, a Clergyman, Mr. Menzies, Major Sinclair, and Mr. George Lesly, a Lawyer.

And then he again withdrew.

And the Names of the several Persons mentioned by the Earl of Wintoun, being read to him, Ordered, That they have leave to repair to the said Earl at any convenient Hour, any time before the sitting of the House to-morrow, in order to advise him in the naming of Council, and a Solicitor to assist him in his Defence.

Ordered, That the several Lords impeached, or any of them, have Liberty to cause Search to be made, and Copies of Records and Journals to be taken out, in order to their Defence; and that the said Lords shall have Summons issued for such Witnesses as they shall respectively send in the Names of, to be by them made use of at their Trials; which Witnesses shall have the Protection of this House for their safe coming and going, during the Time of the said Trials.

Die Jovis 12 Januarii, 1715.

A Petition of George Earl of Wintoun was presented to the House and read, praying that he may have some further Time for nominating Council, and a Solicitor to act for him, and in the mean time to allow his Friends formerly named to have access to him; he having caused Application to be made to Sir Thomas Powis, and Mr. Mead, to have appeared for him, but they both excused themselves.

Ordered, That the same Persons before allow'd to go to the Petitioner, have leave to resort to him at any reasonable Time, before Eleven of the Clock to-morrow in the Forenoon, in order to the advising him in naming other Council, instead of those who have refused.

Whereas by Order of this House on Tuesday last, the Lords impeached were to put in their respective Answers to the Articles of Impeachment of High-Treason exhibited against them by the House of Commons on Saturday last: The House being this Day moved at the Request of the Earl of Derwentwater and Lord Widdrington, to grant them further Time to put in their Answers to the said Articles of Impeachment: It is Ordered, that all the said Lords have hereby further Time allowed to put in their respective Answers to the said Articles till Monday next at one of the Clock.

Die Lunæ 16 Januarii, 1715.

Whereas by Order of this House on Thursday last, the Lords impeached were allowed Time to put in their Answers till this Day to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against them, the House being this Day, moved in regard the Council assign'd some of the said Lords refused to be concerned for them, that Thursday next may be appointed peremptorily for them to put in their several Answers to the said Articles: It is Ordered, That the several Lords do peremptorily put in their several Answers, to the said Articles on Thursday next at One of the Clock; and that the Lieutenant of his Majesty's Tower of London do bring to this House, on that Day, by that Time, the said several Lords for the Purposes aforesaid; and that Notice be forthwith given them of this Order.

Die Jovis 19 Januarii, 1715.

The Earl of Wintoun was brought to the Bar, by the Gentleman-Usher of the Black Rod, where he kneeled until the Lord Chancellor directed him to rise, and his Lordship acquainted him with the above-mentioned Order, and demanded of him if he was ready to put in his Answer.

He said he had a Petition to present to the House: He was an entire Stranger to the Nature of their Lordships Proceedings, and desired his Petition might be read; and the same was read as follows.

*To the Right Honourable the Lords
ment Assembled.*

The Humble Petition of George Earl of Wintoun,

Humbly Sheweth,

THAT on Thursday last I having applied to your Lordships, representing how I had caus'd Application to be made to two Lawyers, to act as Council for me, in the Impeachment exhibited before your Lordships against me by the Honourable House of Commons, and that they both declin'd to meddle, for Reasons then given; your Lordships were pleas'd to allow me some more Time for nominating of Council, and Solicitors, and this Day for giving in my Answers; but by Reason of my close Confinement, and that your Lordships Order for allowing some Persons to have access to me, expired on Friday last at Eleven Forenoon; I have had no Opportunity of naming other Council and Solicitors; nor can I have the Assistance of any, 'till they are appointed by your Lordships and they allow'd access to me.

That

That your Petitioner has several Specialities and Matters of great Moment, which he conceives necessary to be a Part of his Answers, and which cannot be drawn into Form, without the Assistance of his Council and Sollicitors.

Forasmuch therefore as this Affair is to me of the greatest Importance ; may it please your Lordships to assign Sir Constantine Phipps, and Mr. Peer Williams, to be Council, and Charles Menzies, and Mr. James Leslie, to be my Sollicitors ; and to order that they may have access to me from Time to Time during my Trial ; as also that your Lordships would be pleased to allow Mr. George Hereot, a Minister of the Church of England, to have access to me from Time to Time, seeing I am confined in a Room alone.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

WINTOUN.

The said Earl of Wintoun was directed to withdraw ; and being withdrawn accordingly,

The Order made on Thursday last upon his Petition was read, as also the several Orders made on Monday last.

Ordered, That the Council mentioned in the said Petition be assigned him, and that either of the said Sollicitors be likewise assigned, and that he have Time to put in his Answer to the said Articles till Monday next. And that the Clergyman mentioned in his Petition, being his Relation, may have access to him, provided he will stay in Custody with him during his Confinement.

Then the Earl of Wintoun was again called in, and the Lord Chancellor acquainted him, that the House had considered his Petition, and assign'd him the Council he desir'd ; and would assign him either of the two Sollicitors he should chuse ; and that the Clergyman above-mentioned might come to him upon the Condition before expressed. Then the said Earl of Wintoun naming Mr. Menzies, the House accordingly assigned him for his Sollicitor, and Ordered, that the said Council and Sollicitor may have access to him from Time to Time at all seasonable Hours ; and he withdrew.

Die Sabbati 21 Januarii, 1715.

A Petition of George Earl of Wintoun was presented to the House and read, praying that their Lordships would allow him such further Time for putting in his Answer, as their Lordships shall think fit.

Ordered, That the said Petition be rejected.

Die Lunæ 23 Januarii, 1715.

The Earl of Wintoun being brought to the House according to Order by the Lieutenant of the Tower, the Gentleman-Usher was commanded to bring him to the Bar, where he kneel'd until he was directed by the Lord Chancellor to rise ; and his Lordship acquainted him that this was the peremptory Day appointed by the House for his putting in his Answer to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Commons, and asked him if he was ready to put in his Answer.

VOL. VI.

He thereupon made some Excuses, and desired further Time for that purpose ;

And was directed to withdraw.

Ordered, That the Earl of Wintoun be called in, and acquainted, that this House, upon considering his Petition on Saturday last, for further Time to put in his Answer to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him, did reject his said Petition ; and having indulged him more than any of the Lords impeached, are still of Opinion (this being the peremptory Day for putting in his Answer) to allow him no further Time, and that the Consequence of his refusing to plead which will ensue in Law is, that Judgment will be awarded against him, as if he had pleaded guilty. Then,

He was accordingly called in, and the Lord Chancellor acquainted him with the said Matter.

He thereupon delivered in at the Bar his Answer fairly engrossed on Parchment, which was read.

Die Sabbati 28 Januarii, 1715.

The Commons replied to the Answer of the Earl of Wintoun.

Die Mercurii 8 Februarii, 1715.

Ordered, By the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, that Thursday the sixteenth Day of this instant February be, and is hereby appointed for the Trial of George Earl of Wintoun at the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall, upon the Impeachment of High-Treason exhibited against him by the House of Commons.

Die Veneris 10 Februarii, 1715.

Upon reading the Petition of George Earl of Wintoun, setting forth, that he had a Petition in the House on Wednesday last, when their Lordships appointed Thursday next for the Petitioner's Trial, desiring that Consideration might be had to the distance of the Place, and the Season of the Year, for bringing up of his Witnesses, both Men and Women, from Scotland, and other Parts ; but the Noble Peer who promised, and would have moved the said Petition, not being present at the Time of making the Motion for appointing a Day of Trial, the said Petition was not presented in Form, which occasioned the Appointment of so short a Time, wherein it is altogether impossible to prepare any thing in order for the said Trial : And praying that this House will grant an Order to compel the several Witnesses following (viz.) John Gordon, George Trotter, George Hogg, John Stewart, all Servitors to the Earl of Wintoun, — Beatoun, Wife to Mr. David Nicholson in Tranent, Adam Purvis, Clerk of the Episcopal Meeting-House in Tranent, Christopher Seton in Port-Seton, Lieutenant-General — Wills, — Forster, Esq; — Miller, Esq; Capt. Alexander Stretton, — Mackintosh of Bordlim, — Aenslie, and — Todd, Bailiffs of Musselbrough, and the School-master of Fisberau, to appear before this House at the Trial, to give Evidence on behalf of the Petitioner ; and to allow such Time for their coming hither, as, in regard to the Distance of the Place, and the Season of the Year, and the Importance of the Affair, their Lordships, in their great Wisdom and Justice shall think reasonable: It is Ordered, That the Time appointed for the Trial of the Petitioner in Westminster-Hall be, and is hereby, enlarged to Thursday the eighth Day of March next: And that the several Persons afore-named be, and are hereby required to attend this House on Thursday the said eighth Day of March, as Witnesses on behalf of the Petitioner, except such of the said Persons as are now Prisoners for High-Treason; and that they shall have the Protection of this House for their safe coming and going, during the Time of the said Trial.

Die Lunæ 5 Martii, 1715.

Upon reading the Petition of George Earl of Wintoun, setting forth, that his Agents have used all Diligence possible in serving the Order of this House for the Attendance of his Witnesses; and now they are all on their Way hither, part by Sea and part by Land: And that the Nature of his Defence is such, that if the Witnesses were arrived, as none of them are, the Time would be too short to prepare his Briefs, and instruct his Council; and praying that the Time appointed for his said Trial, may be enlarged for such Time as their Lordships, in their great Justice and Wisdom, shall think proper, in a Case of so great Consequence: It is ordered, that the Time appointed for the Petitioner's Trial be, and is hereby enlarged till Thursday the fifteenth Day of this instant March, at ten of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Die Lunæ 12 Martii, 1715.

A Petition of George Earl of Wintoun was presented to the House and read, setting forth, that his Agents have used all possible Diligence in getting his Witnesses hither, and several of them are lately arrived, but four of the most material of them, though they all be on their Way hither, are not yet come up, some of them being lame and others very infirm, so that they are not able to travel so quickly; and praying, that the Time appointed for his Trial may be enlarged for such Time as their Lordships, in their great Justice and Wisdom, shall think proper, in a Case of so great Concern.

And after Debate thereupon, and reading the Orders made in relation to the said Trial, Charles Menzies, the Petitioner's Solicitor, was called in and examined upon Oath at the Bar, touching the Allegations of the said Petition; and failing to make good the same;

And being withdrawn,

It was moved to reject the Petition.

And the Question being put whether the said Petition shall be rejected, it was resolved in the Affirmative.

Die Martis 13 Martii, 1715.

Several Orders were made for preserving the Peace, and touching the Course of Proceeding, to, and at the ensuing Trial; and among them,

Ordered, That the Council assigned the said Earl of Wintoun may be present when he is at the Bar, in order to be heard touching any Point or Matter of Law, if any such shall arise.

Die Mercurii 14 Martii, 1715.

Upon reading the Petition of George Earl of Wintoun, praying that this House will be pleased to assign, and add Mr. Kettelby, and Dr. Straban to his Council formerly named, and that they may have access to him during his Confinement: It is Ordered, that the Council above-mentioned be assigned the Petitioner, to be heard to Matters of Law, but not to Matters of Fact, so as not to put off the Petitioner's Trial, and that they, or either of them have access to the Petitioner from Time to Time, at all seasonable Times.

A Motion being made, that the following Persons, whose Names were contained in a List exhibited at the same Time, on behalf of the Earl of Wintoun, might be summoned as Witnesses for the said Earl at his Trial; being then, as alledg'd, in or near the City of London.

Ordered, By the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, that John Gordon of Kirkhill, Alexander Nisbet Writer in Edinburgh, William Knox, Thomas Baine, John Wattesone, all three of Seaton, Mrs. Magdalen Corrbie of Cannongate, Agnes Duncan of Seaton, Dr. Lidderdale a Physician, Dr. Cockburne a Divine, Dr. John Inglis, Major Sinclair, George Trotter, and George Hogg of Seaton, be and are hereby required to attend this House in Westminster-Hall, to-morrow at ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, in order to be examined as Witnesses, on the behalf of George Earl of Wintoun at his Trial.

The House being informed that the Earl of Wintoun desired that General Carpenter might be examined as a Witness at his Trial:

The said General Carpenter being a Member of the House of Commons;

A Message was sent to that House by Mr. Holford and Mr. Lovibond, to acquaint them, that the Lords do desire that they will give leave to the said General Carpenter to be examined at the said Earl's Trial.

Ordered, That the Witnesses which shall be produced by the Earl of Wintoun to be examined in his Defence, shall be examined upon Oath, which Oath to be administer'd to the Witnesses on both Sides at the said Trial shall be this:

The Evidence which you shall give in this Trial, concerning George Earl of Wintoun, Prisoner at the Bar, shall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth.

So help you God, and the Contents of this Book.

Die Jovis 15 Martii, 1715.

The Messengers sent Yesterday to the House of Commons return Answer, That the Commons have given leave to General Carpenter to be examined as a Witness at the Trial of George Earl of Wintoun.

The House was then adjourned to Westminster-Hall.

Begun in Westminster-Hall on Thursday, March 15, 1715-16.

The first Day.

ABOUT one of the Clock, the Lords came from their own House into the Court erected in Westminster-Hall, in the manner following.

The Lord High-Steward's Gentlemen Attendants, two and two.

The Clerks Assistant to the House of Lords, and the Clerk of the Parliament, with the Clerk of the Crown in the Court of Chancery; the Clerk of the Parliament bearing the King's Commission to the Lord High-Steward.

The Master in Chancery, two and two.

Then the Judges.

The Peers Eldest Sons, and Peers Minors, two and two.

Four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, two and two.

The Yeomen Ushers of the House.

Then the Peers, two and two, beginning with the youngest Barons.

Then four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces.

The Serjeant at Arms attending the Great-Seal, and Purse-Bearer.

Then Garter King at Arms; and the Gentleman-Usher of the Black Rod, carrying the White Staff before the Lord High-Steward.

William Lord Cowper. The Lord High-Steward alone, his Train borne.

When the Lords were placed in their proper Seats, and the Lord High-Steward upon the Wool-Pack.

The Clerk of the Crown, in the Court of Chancery, standing before the Clerk's Table, with his Face towards the State, having his Majesty's Commission to the Lord High-Steward in his Hand, made three Reverences towards the Lord High-Steward; and, on his Knee, presented the Commission to the Lord High-Steward; after which, and usual Reverences, the same was carried down to the Table: And then Proclamation for Silence was made in this manner:

O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Lord High-Steward stood up, and spoke to the Peers.

Lord High-Steward. His Majesty's Commission is going to be read; your Lordships are desired to attend.

All the Peers uncovered themselves, and they and all others stood up uncovered while the Commission was reading.

Serjeant at Arms. God save the King.

Then the Herald and Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, after three Reverences, kneeling, presented the White Staff to his Grace; and then his Grace, attended by the Herald, Black Rod and Seal-Bearer (making his proper Reverences towards the Throne) removed from the Wool-Pack to an armed Chair, which was placed on the uppermost Step but one of the Throne, as it was prepared for that purpose, and then seated himself in the Chair, and delivered the Staff to the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod on his Right Hand, the Seal-Bearer holding the Purse on the Left.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms make Proclamation.

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then another Proclamation was made, as follows.

O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Prisoner to the Bar, according to the Order of the House of Lords to you directed.

Then George Earl of Winton was brought to the Bar by the Deputy Governour of the Tower, having the Ax carried before him by the Gentleman Jaylor, who stood with it on the Left Hand of the Prisoner, with the Edge turned from him. The Prisoner when he approached the Bar (after kneeling) bowed to his Grace the Lord High-Steward, and to the House of Peers; which Compliment was returned him by his Grace, and the House of Peers.

And Proclamation being again made for keeping Silence,

The Lord High-Steward spake to the Prisoner as follows.

George Earl of Winton, you are brought to the Bar of this August Judicature, in order to a fair and impartial Trial, on the Impeachment of High-Treason exhibited against you by the Commons of Great-Britain in Parliament assembled; to which you have answered, and pleaded Not Guilty: Thereupon the Commons have replied, and undertaken to prove you guilty of the High-Treason whereof you stand impeached.

Under

Under this heavy Charge (of which your Lordship has long since had a Copy, and which you will now hear read again) nothing can be a greater Support to your Mind (especially if not conscious of Guilt) than to consider, that you are about to be tried by your Peers; not any select Number of them, but by their whole Body assembled in Parliament, and indifferently summoned to attend this Trial.

Hence your Lordship may be assured, that Justice will be administer'd to you, attended not only with that common Degree of Compassion which Humanity itself derives to Persons in your Condition, but also with that extraordinary Concern for you, which naturally flows from a Parity of Circumstances common to yourself, and to them who judge you, (those Bonds, the weighty Accusation laid upon you, with its Consequences, almost only excepted.)

On the other hand, you must not hope, that if you shall be clearly prov'd guilty, their Lordships, being under the strongest Obligation to do Right that can be laid on noble Minds, I mean that of their Honour, will not break through all the Difficulties unmerited Pity may put in their way, to do perfect Justice upon you, however miserable that must render your Condition.

Your Lordship will not be interrupted while you are making your Defence in a proper manner; and therefore you will also attend with Patience to what shall be said by the Managers of the House of Commons, or given in Evidence against you.

When any of the Witnesses produced against you by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons are thoroughly examined by them, your Lordship will have Liberty to cross-examine every Witness before another is called.

But the Council assigned you are not to cross-examine any Witnesses, nor to give you any Assistance public or private, while Matter of Fact only is in Question; but if any Matter of Law arise during the Course of your Trial, they may speak to it in your Lordship's Behalf: And to that End they are permitted to be within hearing, that they may be the more ready and able to serve your Lordship on such Occasion.

Your Lordship is the first that on an Impeachment for High-Treason will have had the Benefit of a good Law made in the first Year of the late Queen (since the Revolution;) whereby in all Trials for High-Treason, as well as other capital Offences mentioned in the Act, the Witnesses produced on the Part of the Prisoner are to be examined on their Oaths: So that your Witnesses will become entitled, in Respect of the Obligation under which they give their Testimony, to the same Degree of Credit as the Witnesses produced against you will be.

I take it for granted, that if your Lordship desires it, you will be allowed the Use of Pen, Ink, and Paper, to take Notes in order to your Defence: And I doubt not but if during the Trial you are observed to omit any just Advantage which the Law allows you, I shall not only be excused, but approved, if I put you in mind of it.

I am also commanded to acquaint your Lordship, that when you have Occasion to speak, you are to address yourself to the Lords in general, and not to any Lord in particular; as all others who shall have Occasion to speak in this Trial will likewise take notice they are to do.

The Lord High-Steward having done, commanded the Articles of Impeachment, and the Earl of Wintoun's Answer thereunto, as also the Replication of the Commons to the said Answer, to be read; and the same were read accordingly, as follows.

ARTICLES of Impeachment of High-Treason exhibited against James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn.

WHEREAS for many Years last a most wicked Design and Contrivance has been formed and carried on, to subvert the antient and established Government, and the good Laws of these Kingdoms, to extirpate the true Protestant Religion therein established, and to destroy its Professors; and instead thereof, to introduce and settle Popery and Arbitrary Power; in which unnatural and horrid Conspiracy great Numbers of Persons of different Degrees and Qualities have concerned themselves and acted; and many Protestants, pretending an uncommon Zeal for the Church of England, have joined themselves with professed Papists, uniting their Endeavours to accomplish and execute the aforesaid wicked and traitorous Designs.

And whereas it pleased Almighty God in his good Providence, and in his great Mercy and Goodness to these Nations, to crown the unwearied Endeavours of his late Majesty King William the Third of ever-glorious Memory, by making him the Instrument to procure the Settlement of the Crown of these Realms in the illustrious House of Hanover, as the only Means under God to preserve our Religion, Laws and Liberties, and to secure the Protestant Interest of Europe; since which happy Establishment the said Conspirators have been indefatigable in their Endeavours to destroy the same, and to make Way for the vain and groundless Hopes of a spurious Impostor and Popish Pretender to the Imperial Crown of these Realms.

And to accomplish these Ends, the most immoral, irreligious and unchristian-like Methods have been taken, but more particularly in the last Years of the Reign of the late Queen Anne, during which Time all imaginable Endeavours were used by the said Conspirators to prejudice the Minds of the Subjects of this Realm against the Legality and Justice of the said Settlement of the Crown: And for that purpose the Holy Scriptures were wrested, and the most wholesome Doctrines of the Church of England perverted and abused by Men in Holy Orders, in the most public and scandalous Manner, in order to condemn the Justice of the late happy Revolution; and thereby to sap and undermine the Foundation of the said happy Establishment; and the most notorious Instruments of these wicked Purposes were countenanced by particular Marks of public Favour and Distinction; false and dangerous Notions of a sole Hereditary Right to the Imperial Crown of these Realms were propagated and encouraged by Persons in the highest Trust and Employments, contrary to the ancient undoubted and established Laws of these Kingdoms ; jesuitical and scandalous Distinctions were invented and publicly inculcated, to enervate the Force and Obligation of those Oaths which had been contrived in the plainest and strongest Terms by the Wisdom of Parliament for the Security of the said Establishment ; and to conceal their Designs, and thereby the better to enable them to carry on the same, great Numbers of the said Conspirators of all Ranks and Conditions, pretending a Zeal for the Protestant Succession, openly and voluntarily took the said Oaths ; groundless Fears of the Danger of the Church of England were fomented throughout these Kingdoms, to disorder the Minds of well-disposed Protestants.

By all which and many other such ungodly Practices of the said Conspirators, the most causeless and dangerous Jealousies and Dissatisfactions were created in the Minds of the good People of this Kingdom, and great Numbers of well-meaning, but deluded Protestants were much disquieted.

But nevertheless these dishonest Methods were pursued by the said Conspirators with indefatigable Industry, as the only Means to weaken the Foundations of the said happy Establishment.

And whereas the Dissolution of the late glorious Confederacy against France, and the Loss of the Ballance of Power in Europe, were further Steps necessary to compleat the Designs of the said Conspirators ; and the same being effected by the late ignominious Peace with France, the French King was render'd formidable, and the Protestant Succession was thereby brought into the most imminent Danger ; and by these and other pernicious Measures, the Destruction so long intended by the said Conspirators, for these poor Nations, seem'd near at Hand.

At which Time, and under which most deplorable Circumstances, it pleas'd Almighty God in his infinite Wisdom to call to himself the late Queen Anne, and by a Concurrence of many most wonderful Providences to give a quiet and peaceable Accession to his present most Gracious Majesty to the Throne of his Ancestors, to which he was received with one full Voice and Consent of Tongue and Heart, and the united Joy of every good Subject and good Protestant, as their only lawful and rightful Liege Lord ; and altho' from the Moment his Majesty ascended the Throne to this Day, his Reign has been one Series of Wisdom, Justice and Clemency ; his Labours constant, unwearied and successful to retrieve the Honour and Reputation of these Nations ; to re-establish the Trade and recover the Wealth of his Kingdoms ; and although all imaginable Encouragement has been given to the Church of England, and all Tenderness shewn even to his Popish Subjects, and his constant Care has been to procure the universal Good of his People ; nevertheless the said Conspirators have, by the most vile and impious Methods, renewed their Endeavours to throw these Kingdoms into the utmost Confusion, and to entail endless Miseries on us and our Posterities : For these Ends many of the abovementioned most wicked and dangerous Practices have been repeated with the utmost Industry and Inveteracy, to delude, disorder and corrupt the Minds of his Majesty's good Subjects ; the most groundless Jealousies have been fomented against his wise and happy Administration, and in many Parts of his Kingdoms the most unnatural, unexampled Riots and Tumults, by the secret and malicious Endeavours of the said Conspirators, have been procured, stirred up, and encouraged against his peaceable Protestant Subjects, under false Pretences of Zeal for the Church of England, and thereby more effectually to delude his good Subjects, and seduce them from their Allegiance, and prepare them for an open Rebellion.

And the said Conspirators having at length resolved to deprive these Nations of the invaluable Blessings which they now enjoy under the wise and gentle Reign of his present most gracious Majesty King George, and of the certain Prospect of Happiness which they have for their Prosperity, in a Succession of Princes derived from himself ; did contrive, confederate, and resolve to put their most malicious, wicked, and traitorous Designs into immediate Execution ; for which purpose, James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, together with Thomas Forster, Jun. the Lord Charles Murray, Edward Howard, Thomas Errington, John Clavering, William Shafroe, Sir Francis Amderton, Ralph Standish, Richard Townly, Thomas Butler, Thomas Walton, Gabriel Hasket, Richard Gascoigne, and divers other Persons, as false Traitors to his present most sacred Majesty King George, the only lawful and undoubted Sovereign of these Kingdoms, having withdrawn their Allegiance, and cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which they as good and faithful Subjects owed to his said Majesty, did, in or about the Months of September, October, or November, 1715, most wickedly, maliciously, falsely and traiterously imagine and compass the Death of his said most sacred Majesty.

And for the accomplishing and executing their said traitorous Purpose, they the said James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, did, in or about the said Months, or some of them, and at divers other Times, and in divers Places within this Kingdom, wickedly and traiterously agree, confederate, conspire, and resolve, together with many other evil-disposed Persons, to raise, excite, and levy within the Counties of Teviotdale, Northumberland, Cumberland, and the County Palatine of Lancaster, and elsewhere within this Kingdom, a most cruel, bloody and destructive War, against his Majesty, in order to depose and murder his sacred Majesty, and to deprive him of his Royal State, Crown and Dignity.

And the said James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nithisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn, their Accomplices and Confederates, in or about the Months aforesaid, in the Counties aforesaid, or some of them, did gather together great Numbers of his Majesty's Subjects, and with them did assemble in a warlike and traitorous Manner, in order to raise Tumults and Rebellion within this Kingdom, and having procured great Quantities of Arms, Ammunition and warlike Instruments, at the Times and Places aforesaid, or some of them, did form and compose, or did assist assist in the forming and composing an Army of Men, consisting of his Majesty's Liege Subjects, in order to wage War against his said Majesty, for and in behalf and in favour of the said Pretender to the Crown of these Realms; and the said last mentioned Conspirators, their Accomplices and Confederates, at the Time and Times and Places aforesaid; and at divers other Times and Places within this Kingdom, did maliciously and traiterously make, levy, and raise War and Rebellion against his most sacred Majesty; and in a warlike and hostile Manner did march thro' and invade several Parts of this Kingdom; and did unlawfully take and seize the Horses and other the Goods and Chattels of many of the peaceable and good Subjects of his Majesty, and in other Places did take and seize, from his Majesty's faithful Subjects, Guns, and other warlike Instruments, for their carrying on their traitorous Purposes.

And the said last mentioned Conspirators, their Complices and Confederates, during their March and Invasion aforesaid, in open Defiance of his most sacred Majesty's just and undoubted Title to the Imperial Crown of these Realms, did wickedly and traiterously cause and procure the said Pretender to be proclaimed in the most public and solemn Manner, as King of these Realms; and in several Places in the Counties aforesaid, or some of them, did unlawfully take and seize from his Majesty's Officers of the Revenue the public Money, for the Use and Service of the said Pretender; and though many of the Conspirators are avowed Professors of the Popish Religion, yet the more effectually to cover and disguise their most wicked and traitorous Designs, and to delude his Majesty's Subjects, they did prevail on and secure several Men in Holy Orders, Ministers of the Church of England, and who had before that Time abjured the said Pretender, to accompany, countenance and abet the said most traitorous Enterprize; and in several Places in the Counties aforesaid, where the said Conspirators, their Complices and Confederates then were, to pray for the said Pretender in the public Churches, as King of these Realms.

That the said last mentioned Conspirators, their Accomplices and Confederates, did, on or about the Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, or Thirteenth of November aforesaid, traiterously seize and possess themselves of the Town of Preston in the County Palatine of Lancaster against his Majesty, and did then and there in a warlike and hostile Manner levy War, oppose, engage, and fight against his Majesty's Forces; and did then and there cause and procure a miserable and horrid Slaughter and Murder of many of his Majesty's faithful Subjects:

All which Treasons and Crimes abovementioned were contrived, committed, perpetrated, acted and done, by the said James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nitbisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn, and other the Conspirators aforesaid, against our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity; and contrary to the Duty of their Allegiance, and against the Laws and Statutes of this Kingdom.

Of all which Treasons and Crimes, the Knights, Citizens and Burgeffes in Parliament assembled, do, in the Name of themselves and of all the Commons of Great Britain, impeach the said James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nitbisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, William Lord Nairn, and every of them.

And the said Commons by Protestation saving to themselves the Liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter any other Accusations or Impeachments against the said James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nitbisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, or any of them; and also of replying to the Answers which the said James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nitbisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, or any of them, shall make to the Premises, or any of them, or to any Impeachment or Accusation that shall be by them exhibited according to the Course and Proceedings of Parliament; and do pray, that the said James Earl of Derwentwater, William Lord Widdrington, William Earl of Nitbisdale, George Earl of Wintoun, Robert Earl of Carnwath, William Viscount Kenmure, and William Lord Nairn, be put to answer all and every the Premises: And that such Proceedings, Examinations, Trials, and Judgments may be upon them and every of them had and used as shall be agreeable to Law and Justice.

The Answer of George Earl of Wintoun, to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him by the Honourable House of Commons, for High-Treason and other High Crimes and Misdemeanours.

THE said Earl saving to himself all Benefit of Exception to the Incertainties and Insufficiencies in the said Articles of Impeachment contained, and also all Advantages and Privileges belonging to him as a Peer of Great Britain, for Answer to the said Articles says, That he cannot but esteem it the greatest Addition to his Afflictions, to fall under the Displeasure of the Honourable House of Commons: Yet as his Innocence under these Misfortunes is his Support, so he hopes it will be his Security. He being taken with Persons that were in Arms against the Government, might reasonably be presumed to be equally guilty, and to be justly joined with them in the same Impeachment; but when it shall appear how much the Circumstances of his Case differ from others, he does not doubt but your Lordships great Justice will distinguish him in Judgment; and that it will be as pleasing to that Honourable Body, who are his Accusers, to have an innocent Man acquitted, as one that is guilty condemned. He begs leave to take notice, that he is descended from a very ancient, noble Family, in whose Blood the Streams of Loyalty were always pure, never corrupted or polluted with Treason or Sedition; and he never degenerated so much from his Loyal Ancestors, as to form or carry on any Design to subvert or alter the Constitution of these Kingdoms, but for the Preservation of it was upon all Occasions ready to sacrifice his Fortune, and even his Life: He was was so cautious to avoid giving occasion to be suspected by the Government, that about eight Years ago, upon his Return from his Travels, he withdrew from all Conversation, and confined himself to his House, never corresponded by Letter with any Person whatsoever; yet to his great Misfortune, he could not be quiet or safe in his closest Retirement; for many Persons, both Officers and others of the Militia of the Shire of Lothian, under the specious Pretence of serving the Government, but in reality actuated by private Pique and Revenge, several times, contrary to Law, forcibly entred by Night into his Dwelling-house, called Seaton Palace, rifled it, turned his Servants out of Doors, and carried away the Provisions of his Family. The most Sacred Places did not escape their Fury and Resentment, they broke into his Chapel, defaced the Monuments of his Ancestors, took up the Stones of their Sepulchres, thrust Irons through their Bodies, and treated them in a most barbarous, inhuman and unchristian-like manner; Cannon and Mortars were brought to demolish his House, and several Troops of Dragoons having gotten the Possession thereof, some of them kept Guard there, and when they left it, many of the Militia enter'd, and kept Possession thereof till they were driven from thence by the Highlanders, by whom he was likewise very ill treated, he being the only Person that was plunder'd by them. By these and many other Severities, the said Earl was forced to leave his House, and seek for Shelter among his Tenants and Neighbours, where he was pursued from House to House, and at last very unfortunately driven into the Company of some of the Gentlemen named in the Impeachment. He presumes to affirm to your Lordships, that he did not join them with a traitorous, or rebellious Design, but only with an Intention to preserve himself from being insulted and assassinated; for he had been once before taken up without any Warrant or Authority, and having got from the Persons in whose Custody he was, they threatned, if they could retake him, to murder him; and had before imbrued their Hands in the Blood of the Son of a neighbouring Gentleman. He never intended to have left his own Country; and when some Gentlemen mentioned coming into England, he oppos'd it; he was far from assisting or encouraging them in their Undertakings; he was not admitted into their Secrets, nor informed of their Designs, and was so much a Stranger to their Proceedings, that when they marched towards Northumberland, he was told they were going along the Skirts of the Hills in Scotland to avoid General Carpenter; but afterwards discovered they were in England when it was too late, and to return alone into Scotland was too hazardous, which he did not attempt, because he had reason to believe they would soon go back to Scotland.

Although he was constrain'd to keep the other Lords and Gentlemen Company, yet he never joined with them in any act of Hostility, nor assisted in taking any of the public Money, or in seizing any Guns or other warlike Instruments, or countenanced or abetted them therein. He did not at Preston or elsewhere fire a Pistol, offer Violence to any Person whatsoever, or in any other manner fight against, or resist his Majesty's Forces, but with the rest surrendered himself to General Wills. The Honour of a Peer is more valuable than Life it self, and therefore he ought to be so much the more cautious that it be not stained with the least Imputation of Guilt. The said Earl knows his Innocence, and hopes your Lordships will excuse him, if in Justice to himself, and for the Preservation of his Honour, he does not take upon him the Guilt of Crimes, the very Thoughts of which were always Strangers to his Breast: And therefore, in Answer to the Impeachment, he says, that he is Not Guilty of the Treason and other the Crimes and Misdemeanors mentioned in the said Articles, or any of them, in Manner and Form as is therein alleged; and for his Trial puts himself on your Lordships, who are his Peers, and begs your Lordships to believe that his Answer proceeds from the Sense he has of the Truth of it, and not from Obstinacy or any Inclination to give your Lordships and the Honourable House of Commons any unnecessary Trouble, or from the least Doubt or Mistrust of his Majesty's Clemency. But if upon his Trial it shall appear, that he hath committed any Act which in the Rigour of the Law may be construed to amount to the Crime of High-Treason, he hopes the Innocence of his Heart, and his Ignorance in the Law will, by the Power of your Lordships Intercession, render him an Object of his Majesty's Mercy, which he and the rest at the Time of surrendering themselves were encouraged by his Majesty's Officers to depend upon. The said Earl submits his Case thus circumstanced to your Lordships great Wisdom and Judgment, and humbly prays your Lordships favourable Interpretation thereof, not doubting but to make his Innocence appear to your Lordships Satisfaction.

WINTOUN.

The Reply of the House of Commons to the Answer of George Earl of Wintoun.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. Hampden and others, to acquaint this House, that they have considered the Answer of George Earl of Wintoun to the Impeachment exhibited against him by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses assembled in Parliament, and do aver their Charge against the said George Earl of Wintoun for High-Treason to be true, and that the said Earl of Wintoun is guilty of the High-Treason in such manner as he stands impeached; and that the Commons will be ready to prove their Charge against him at such convenient time as shall be appointed for that purpose.

Lord High-Steward. The Distance of this Place from the Bar is so very great, that I am obliged to ask your Lordships Leave that I come down to the Table.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Which being done accordingly,

The Lord High-Steward said, Gentlemen of the House of Commons, you will be pleased now to proceed.

Mr. Hampden. MY Lords, we appear in this Place in behalf of all the Commons of Great Britain, to make good the Impachment of High-Treason against the Prisoner at the Bar George Earl of Wintoun.

The Commons in Parliament assembled being justly alarmed with the Dangers to which this Nation has been exposed by the late unnatural Rebellion, have found it incumbent on them to enquire into the Authors and Promoters of so fatal and pernicious an Attempt, which was no less than to deprive these Nations of the invaluable Blessings which they enjoy under the wise and gentle Reign of his most sacred Majesty King George.

The indispenfable Duty which the Commons owe to his Majesty, and to those they represent, engage them to appear in the Cause of their Country, by examining into the Rise and Progress of the said late traiterous Enterprize, contrived and carried on with an Intent to depose and murder his said Majesty, and to set up a Popish Pretender to the Crown of these Realms, and in consequence, to change the Constitution of this Nation, and to introduce a slavish and arbitrary Government.

The Earl of Wintoun appearing to the Commons to have been deeply engaged in the late Rebellion, their Zeal and Affection, and their Concern for the Safety of the Nation, and the Protestant Succession, and the Liberties of the People, have rendered it necessary for them to bring to your Lordships Bar this Offender, against whom they have, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of Great-Britain, exhibited Articles of Impeachment of High-Treason, setting forth and charging,

That the Earl of Wintoun (with his Associates named in the Articles and divers others) contrary to his Allegiance, did traiterously conspire and imagine the Death of his most Sacred Majesty; and in Aid of such Treason, did in the Months of September, October, or November 1715, resolve to levy in several Parts of Scotland and England a most destructive War against his Majesty.

That his Lordship, with other his Confederates, did assemble in a warlike manner, and procur'd Arms, Ammunition, and warlike Instruments, and did compose an Army to wage War against his Majesty, and did March thro' and invade several Parts of this Kingdom, and unlawfully seiz'd his Majesty's Treasure for the Service of the Pretender, and took away the Horses and other Goods of many of his Majesty's peaceable Subjects.

And that during the said March and Invasion, the Earl of Wintoun, with other Rebels, did, in open Defiance of his Majesty's undoubted Title to the Crown of these Realms, frequently cause the Pretender to be proclaimed in a public and solemn manner as King of these Realms.

That the more effectually to disguise these wicked Intentions, and to delude his Majesty's Subjects, the said Earl, with other Rebels, did prevail on several Ministers of the Church of England, and who had abjur'd the Pretender, to pray for the Pretender in several public Churches as King of these Realms.

And that the said Earl, his Associates, and Accomplices, did in November last, traiterously possess themselves of the Town of Preston in the County-Palatine of Lancaster, and did levy War and fight against his Majesty's Forces, and procur'd a miserable Slaughter and Murder of many of his Majesty's good and faithful Subjects.

My Lords, the Earl of Wintoun has, in his Plea to the said Impeachment, thought fit to deny part of this great and heavy Charge; and in Answer to other Parts of it, he suggests to your Lordships to the Effect following;

That being taken with Persons that were in Arms against the Government, he might be presum'd to be equally guilty with them; but that when your Lordships shall consider the Circumstances of his Case, he doubts not of finding a Distinction from others in your Judgment.

He acquaints your Lordships with the Loyalty of his Ancestors, from whose Character, he says, he is not so much degenerated, as to form or carry on a Design against the Constitution of these Kingdoms.

That to avoid being suspected by the Government, he withdrew himself some Years ago from all Conversation, and retir'd to his own House; but that several of the Militia of the Shire of Lothian, under pretence of serving the Government, did, contrary to Law, forcibly enter his Lordship's House, which they rifled, and committed several other Disorders there.

That afterwards Cannon and Mortars were brought to demolish his House, and several Troops of Dragoons took Possession of it; and upon their leaving it, the Militia came and kept Possession of his House till they were driven thence by the Highlanders, by whom he was also very ill treated.

That by these Severities, and afterwards not being suffered to live quietly among his Tenants, where he had retir'd for Shelter, he was driven into the Company of some of the Gentlemen named in the Impeachment; but affirms to your Lordships, that it was with an Intent to preserve himself from being assassinated.

That he oppos'd the Proposition of coming into England, and was not acquainted with the Designs of the other Gentlemen with him; and was surpriz'd when he found himself in England, but declin'd going back, because he believ'd they would soon return to Scotland.

That he did not assist in taking any of the public Money, or in seizing any warlike Instruments.

That he did not at Preston, or elsewhere, fire a Pistol, offer Violence to any Person, or fight against his Majesty's Forces, but surrender'd himself to the King's General.

And as an Inducement for such Surrender, his Lordship says, that he, and the rest with him, were at that time encouraged by his Majesty's Officers to depend on his Majesty's Mercy.

My Lords, notwithstanding what is contain'd in the Earl of Wintoun's Plea to the Impeachment of the Commons, and the specious Explanation of his, as were a Foundation to the Commons to include his Lordship in the Articles against the other Lords mentioned therein; we make no question but we shall shew the Fallacy and Insufficiency of the said Plea to our Charge against him, and make it appear, that no less is contain'd in our Accusation against his Lordship, than what the Law in every Man's Breast, the Light of Nature, and the Rules of Society disapprove of, and condemn.

We shall in the Course of our Evidence prove to your Lordships, that the Earl of Wintoun joined early with the Rebels in Scotland in the beginning of this Enterprize; and that the Disorders mentioned in his Plea to have been committed mitted at his House, and which he alledges as the Ground of his leaving it, and seeking Shelter among the Rebels, were not the true Cause of his joining them, since his Lordship had left his House before the Highlanders came to it.

This Noble Peer was too great a Person to act an ordinary Part in this Rebellion. He openly engag'd in it, and not only appeared in Person, but led on, and encouraged his Associates in it; some of which, through the Blessing of God on his Majesty's Arms, are now in the Hands of Justice, and others have suffer'd for the same Treason.

We shall prove to your Lordships, that the Earl of Wintoun form'd a Troop of Horse, which he maintain'd at his own Charge.

That he afterwards commanded a Squadron of Horse, and that he continued his Command thereof in the several Marches to Preston, and until the Surrender of that Place to the King's Forces.

That during the several Marches of the Rebels, the Earl of Wintoun was with them on Horseback, arm'd with a Sword and a Case of Pistols; and that he never shew'd any Uneasiness, but always appear'd as forward as any one; and that at the Action at Preston his Lordship was assisting, and very active among the Rebels.

That at several Places in Scotland and England, his Lordship, and other Rebels, caus'd the Pretender to be proclaimed King of these Realms, and that his Lordship was present at such Proclamations.

That his Lordship, and other Rebels, did in several Places cause his Majesty's Treasure to be seiz'd, for the Service of the Pretender; and did in several Places prevail on Ministers of the Church of England, and who had abjur'd the Pretender, to pray for him in the public Churches, as King of these Realms.

That when the Rebels surrender'd themselves at Preston to the King's Forces, they were far from receiving any Assurances of Mercy from his Majesty's Officers; but were acquainted by the said Officers, that his Lordship, and others taken with him, had no Reason to expect Mercy, since they were taken in open Rebellion against his Majesty.

My Lords, the Commons, who are ever vigilant for the Safety of his Majesty, and for the Preservation of the Liberties of the People, cannot answer it to God or their Country, if they should neglect to exert themselves, in bringing to exemplary Justice the open and declared Instruments of this Rebellion; and it is a Satisfaction to the Commons, that in the Course of their Interposition, to rescue the Nation from the fatal Consequences of the late unprovok'd Rebellion, whatever Misrepresentations other Prosecutions may have been formerly liable to, the Notoriety of this Rebellion has been so evident, that the most malicious of our Enemies want Confidence to deny it.

We are not surpriz'd, that Papists should be engag'd in this Rebellion, tho' the most unnatural and unexampled in its Circumstances, by being void of the least Pretext of Provocation, since they maintain it lawful to kill a Heretic King, and such they term his present Majesty, and 'tis declar'd by them, that such a Piece of Service is not only lawful, but pious, and agreeable to God.

But how Protestants could be possess'd with such a Spirit of Infatuation, and to such a Degree be deluded, as to believe the most secure and effectual Way to protect the Church, was to have Recourse to a Popish Prince, to rescue it from the Danger they imagined it liable to, from the Protestant Succession taking place: And how it could enter into the Hearts of Protestants to be fir'd with such an ill-directed Zeal, as to act in conjunction with avow'd Enemies of their Religion and Liberties, is not to be accounted for; unless such unnatural and destructive Attempts are some of the necessary Consequences of the late Male-Administration.

No less was to be the Sacrifice, than of his Majesty, and his Royal Family, (a Succession of Princes appointed by Divine Providence to be the Guardians of the Protestant Interest in Europe) and of our present happy Constitution, to appease the Fury of Papists and Protestants associated in this Rebellion, and who envied us the Blessings we enjoy'd by the uninterrupted Exercise of our Religious and civil Rights and Privileges.

Had this Rebellion taken place, this Nation, the Glory of the Reformation, the most substantial Bulwark against Popery, and that had at the happy Revolution, under the Influences of King William the Third, of immortal Memory, triumph'd over the arbitrary Designs of our Enemies to subvert our Constitution, was to fall a Victim to Bigotry, Superstition and Slavery, the pernicious and necessary Consequences of introducing a Religion, void of natural Sense and natural Conscience.

If an Attempt to subvert the Government, to destroy the King, and set up a Popish Pretender: if marching in an hostile Manner: if carrying on a destructive War in the Bowels of the Nation, are only Acts of Surprize and Inadvertancy, any Rebellion may be palliated over and excus'd; since scarce any Circumstances can be added in Aggravation of that, which has lately been rais'd and carried in this Kingdom.

My Lords, I have acquainted your Lordships with the necessary Occasion of this Prosecution: I have endeavour'd in the most impartial Manner to discharge the Trust repos'd in me, by opening the Nature of the Charge against the Earl at the Bar. I have likewise stated to your Lordships the Substance of his Plea to the Impeachment of the Commons. I have given your Lordships a general View of the Evidence which we shall produce, to make good our Charge, and to shew the Invalidity of the said Plea; and from the Malignity of the late rebellious and traitorous Enterprize, and its fatal Tendency, I have represented the Necessity the Commons were under of applying to your Lordships for National Justice. I am not insensible how deficient I have been, in not setting a Matter of this Importance in the most advantageous Light; but I make no doubt, but that what is wanting in me, will be supplied by the Abilities of others that follow, and that your Lordships will find no Defect in their Discharge of the Parts they have taken in this Prosecution, whatever you may have found in the Opening of the Charge, and in that Part which has come to my Share.

Sir Joseph Jekyll. I Have the Command of the House of Commons upon me, to bear a Part in the Prosecution of their Impeachment against this Lord at the Bar.

And that which is assigned to me, is first to observe to your Lordships the Nature of the Charge; and in the next Place, to take notice of the Defence made to that Charge; and lastly, to give your Lordships a general View of the Evidence which the Commons will produce to maintain their Accufation.

And this I shall do with all the Plainness I am capable of, without attempting so vain and wicked a Thing, as to impose upon your Lordships, or divert you from the true Merits of this Cause.

My Lords, The Charge exhibited against this Lord, is a Charge of High-Treason; High-Treason at the Common Law, as declared by the Statute of the 25th of King Edward III. And there are two Species of High-Treason mention'd in that Statute, which the Commons have taken notice of in their Articles of Impeachment. The First is compassing and imagining the Death of the King; the Second is levying War against his Majesty.

My Lords, The Overt-Acts that are set down in the Articles, I think, may be reduced to these Heads: First, a Conspiracy of the Earl of Wintoun, with other Lords and Gentlemen his Accomplices, to levy War with an Intent to depose the King; and a Conspiracy to levy such a War hath been held a sufficient Overt-Act of compassing and imagining the Death of the King.

My Lords, The next Overt-Act is, his Lordship's joining with his Accomplices in proclaiming the Pretender, which is endeavouring to set up another Prince in the Room of his Majesty; and I believe it will not be doubted, but that is likewise an Overt-Act of the same Species of Treason. And if there wanted another Overt-Act, the levying War against the King with an Intent to depose him (which is likewise mention'd in the Articles, as a distinct Species of Treason) may serve for an Overt-Act of the other Species of compassing and imagining the King's Death; for tho' it is reckon'd in the Statute as a distinct Treason; yet it doth not thereby cease to be of the Nature of an Overt-Act of compassing and imagining the King's Death which it was antecedent to, its being declar'd a distinct Species; and this Point is likewise supported by Authorities, and many Attainders have been upon it.

My Lords, The second Species of High-Treason I charge upon this Lord, is that of levying War against the King; and the Overt-Acts mentioned are, the forming an Army, marching in an hostile Manner, seizing a Town, the Town of Preston, engaging and fighting with the King's Forces.

My Lords, Perhaps it was not necessary to have alledged any of these Overt-Acts of levying War against the King, because levying War itself being an Act, it supersedes the Necessity of instancing particular Acts of Hostility. But to avoid all Cavals, these particular Acts are likewise alledged in the Commons Impeachment.

My Lords, I find another Crime charged upon this Lord who stands at the Bar, and that is Murder, the Murder of many of the King's faithful Subjects. And although this Crime is not mentioned in the Title of the Articles, and there was a good Reason for not doing it, since it is swallow'd up in the High-Treason, the greater Crime in the Eye and Estimation of the Law, yet it doth not thereby lose its moral Existence or real Guilt; but on the contrary, by accompanying the other Crime of High-Treason, is aggravated, and shews with what Mischief his Heart may be filled, who at the same time he is murdering his Fellow-Subjects, is meditating the Destruction of his Prince, and the Overthrow of his Country's Liberty.

My Lords, this is the Nature of the Charge against my Lord. In the next Place I shall take notice of that which occurs to me to be material in his Lordship's Defence, or the Answer he hath put in to this Charge.

My Lords, he hath pleaded generally Not Guilty; but not wholly relying on that general Plea, he hath in his Answer added a particular Specification of his Case. He begins in his Answer, by taking notice and admitting, That he being taken with Persons that were in Arms against the Government, might reasonably be presumed to be equally guilty, and to be justly joined with them in the same Impeachment. He goes on to acquaint your Lordships with what severe and barbarous Usage he met with at his Dwelling-House, which he says forced him from his House. He tells your Lordships at last, he was very unfortunately driven into the Company of some of the Gentlemen named in the Impeachment; but he presumes to affirm to your Lordships, that he did not join them with a traitorous or rebellious Design, but only with an Intention to preserve himself from being insulted and assassinated; then he says, Altho' he was constrain'd to keep the other Lords and Gentlemen Company, yet he never joined them in any Act of Hostility. But yet he is still under some Diffidence of his Case, therefore your Lordships will find at the Close of his Answer he says, But if upon his Trial it shall appear that he hath committed any Act, which in the Rigour of the Law may be construed to amount to the Crime of High-Treason, he hopes the Innocence of his Heart, and his Ignorance in the Law, will, by your Lordships Intercession, render him an Object of his Majesty's Mercy, which he and the rest, at the Time of Surrendering themselves, were encouraged by his Majesty's Officers to depend upon.

My Lords, this special Case which my Lord hath made in his Answer, is not at all like the Case in my Lord Chief Justice Coke's Third Institutes, Fol. 10. upon an Impeachment of High-Treason. Several Persons were found to join with Sir John Oldcastle and others (who were in open Rebellion) pro timore Mortis, & quam cito potuerunt recesserunt, and thereupon they were acquitted; but here my Lord doth not pretend that any Force was upon him, when he went in and joined the Rebels. I may therefore presume to say this Lord's Defence is a weak and doubtful one, but far be it from the Commons to desire to convict his Lordship of the High-Treason charged upon him by an Infirmary in his Defence, or by any Means whatever, but by the Strength and Clearness of the Evidence they shall produce to your Lordships, and for that I shall trouble your Lordships but a very little with representing to you the general View of the Evidence that we shall produce, and it is this: This Lord thought fit to go in and join the Rebels, not alone, but accompanied with fourteen of his own Servants; when he was there, he formed a Troop, consisting of his own Servants, and others; he paid the Troop, commanded a Squadron of the Rebels Horse in their March; assisted at the several Proclamations of the Pretender; when there was an Alarm given of the coming of the King's Forces, he got on Horse-back in order to oppose and fight them; and he was in Arms and active with the Rebels in the Action at Preston; and we shew your Lordships that at the Surrender there no Promise was made, no Expectation of Mercy was raised by any of the King's Officers in the Mind of this Lord, or of any of his Accomplices.

My Lords, though this be not material to the Issue now joined before your Lordships, yet it being put into my Lord's Answer, and being necessary for the Vindication of public Justice, we shall shew plainly there was not the least Encouragement or Intimation of that kind given.

My Lords, the Evidence will be more largely and particularly taken notice of, by the Gentleman who is to come after me; and I am sure my Defects will be amply made up, by what he will offer to your Lordships.

But I can't sit down without taking notice, that if this heavy Accusation be prov'd against the Lord at the Bar, it is a strange Notion of Loyalty, so much boasted of in my Lord's Answer, which he hath been pleased to entertain.

My Lords, there is not a nobler or more useful Principle belonging to a British Subject, than true Loyalty: Loyalty is a faithful and dutiful Obedience to the King, under the Sanction and Direction of the Law. If therefore his Lordship hath contracted the Guilt of this high Offence against the Law, which is charged upon him, he hath offended against this Principle: And this I will say in general, whoever they be who cast the Law out of the Idea of Loyalty, they loosen the Bands of Allegiance; for it is the Law that binds upon the Conscience of the Subject the Faith and Allegiance he owes to his Sovereign, as it doth upon the Conscience of the Sovereign, that Justice and Protection he affords to his Subjects.

Mr. Attorney-General. MY Lords, the Charges mentioned in the Articles of Impeachment exhibited by the Commons of Great-Britain against the Earl of Wintoun, the Prisoner at the Bar, and the Nature of his Crimes, having been fully open'd by Mr. Hampden and Sir Joseph Jekyll; what remains for my Part is to give your Lordships an Account of the Nature of the Evidence we shall produce to your Lordships against the Prisoner, to prove him guilty of the High-Treason for which he stands impeached. He is charged with two Species of Treason, mentioned in the Statute of the 25 Edw. III. viz. First, compassing and imagining the Death of our sovereign Lord the King, whom God long preserve. Secondly, levying War against the King within this Realm.

The Evidence that will be a Proof of the latter Treason, will also prove the first: For levying War to depose the King, is an Overt-Act of conspiring the Death of the King, and hath always been so adjudged.

I shall briefly, and with as much Clearness and Truth as I can, state the Evidence against the Prisoner, as it will appear by the Witnesses we shall produce, without aggravating any thing which I do not think proper or necessary, your Lordships being Judges of the Fact, and of the Law arising thereupon. I shall only make this Observation on the Preamble to the Earl's Plea, that it directly contradicts his Plea of Not Guilty; and that if what he alledges be taken as true, he therein owns himself to be guilty, though from thence he concludes, that he is not guilty.

In September last, the late Earl of Mar in Perthshire, and in the beginning of October, Mr. Forster with some of the attainted Lords in Northumberland, with a great Number of armed Men, raised a Rebellion in Favour of the Pretender, and proclaimed him King of these Realms, and set up his Standard.

About the seventh or eighth Day of October last, the Earl of Wintoun left his Seat at Seaton in the County of Lothian, armed with a broad Sword and Pistols, and carry'd with him fourteen or fifteen of his Servants well mounted, and so armed; about the tenth Day of October joined the Earl of Carmarthen and the Lord Viscount Kenmure at Moffett in the County of Annamdale, and there they formed a little Army, which was commanded by Lord Kenmure till they joined Forster.

The Lord Wintoun formed a Troop with his own Servants and others, and it was called his Troop, and he paid his own Servants eighteen Pence or two Shillings a Day, and he commanded from that Time a Squadron of Horse, till he and the others surrendered to the King's Forces at Preston.

About the fourteenth or fifteenth Day of October, the Earl of Wintoun and the rest of the Rebels marched from Moffett, in a hostile Manner, with Trumpets and a Standard to Lochmaben. There the Pretender was proclaimed King of Scotland, England, &c. and the Earl of Wintoun attended, and joined in the Proclamation, with his Sword drawn. Thence the Rebels marched to

Auchterfechen,	Fedburg,
Langholm,	Rodberry,
Hawick,	Wooler,

where, about the twentieth Day of October, Forster and his Rebels, being about five hundred, joined the Lord Wintoun and the other Scots, being three Troops of Horse.

From Wooler they all marched to Kelsoe in Tiviotdale, where the Highland Foot, commanded by Mackintosh, joined them. There, at the Cross, the Pretender was again proclaimed King, with Sound of Trumpet and Colours flying, the Lord Wintoun and the rest assisting.

On the seventeenth Day of October they marched back to Fedburg, and there were alarmed with an Account that the King's Forces were near; on which they mounted, and marched out of Town, and drew up, the Earl of Wintoun being very active; but the Forces advancing being discovered to be part of the Rebels, they returned to Fedburg; and on the twenty-ninth Day of October they marched to Hawick.

Here Cockades were made of blue and white Ribbons for the Scots Rebels, to distinguish them from the English, who had red and white, and the Earl of Wintoun wore one, and gave others to his Men.

On the thirtieth Day of October, from Hawick they marched to Langholm: Here, on the thirty-first Day of October, about five or six Hundred of the Highland Foot left them, and went back; and they would not suffer any Person to come to them, to persuade them to return, but the Earl of Wintoun; and he went to persuade them, but could not prevail, and he returned, and declared it it was not his Fault that they went away ; and he after very much promoted the Rebels coming into England.

Here the Earl might have safely left the Rebels, if he had thought fit, without Hazard ; and he had not gone alone, as in his Preamble he alledges.

From Langholm the Rebels marched to Langtown in Cumberland ; and on the first Day of November to Brampton ; on the Second to Penrith ; on the Third to Appleby ; on the Fifth to Kendall ; and on the Sixth to Kirby-Lonsdale.

At all these Places the Pretender was proclaimed King, the Earl of Wintoun assisting.

On the Seventh Day of November they marched from Kirby-Lonsdale to Lancaster, into which the Rebels marched with their Swords drawn, particularly the Earl of Wintoun ; and here they again proclaimed the Pretender King, Lord Wintoun assisting in the Circle.

Here the Rebels seized Arms, and some pieces of Cannon.

From Lancaster the Horse of the Rebels marched on the Ninth Day of November to Preston, the Foot halted at Garstang, and came to Preston the Tenth.

In the Way to Preston the Rebels were joined with about Fifteen Hundred Men, most part being of the County of Lancaster.

And at Preston the Pretender was again proclaimed at the Cross.

During this March, at several Places, particularly at Duns, Brampton and Appleby, the public Revenue of the King was collected by the Rebels, and Cesses raised on the King's Subjects.

They marched with Drums, Trumpets and Colours ; and, where they could, took Prisoners, such as appeared for his Majesty.

They caused the Pretender to be pray'd for, as King, in the Churches in Lancaster, and other places in their March.

Their constant Health was the Pretender's, by the Name of King James, and Success to their Cause.

During the whole March the Earl of Wintoun never shewed any Uneasiness or Backwardness, but always appeared as forward and active as any of the Rebels.

Mr. Calderwood, their Quarter-Master quartered the Scots in all Places ; and the best, next to the Lord Kenmure's, he provided for the Earl of Wintoun, who used to complain, if good Quarters were not provided for him.

The next Part of our Evidence will be to shew what happened at Preston, of which the Rebels had taken Possession the Tenth Day of November.

On Saturday the Twelfth Day of November, about One in the Afternoon, General Wills with the King's Forces invested the Town, and attacked it that Day and on Sunday, and the Rebels defended it, and had made a Barrier at the entering of the Town, and planted the Foot in several Lanes and Streets for their Defence, and had the Cannon with them which they seized at Lancaster.

The Earl of Wintoun during the Attack was with the other Lords, at the Head of two hundred Men, drawn up in the Market-Place ; he had his Sword, a Pistol in one Hand, and another in his Breast ; during that Attack, several of his Majesty's Officers and Soldiers were killed.

On Sunday, about Ten in the Morning, General Carpenter came also to Preston, with the King's Forces under his Command. Thereupon the Rebels finding themselves to be surrounded, about Three in the Afternoon sent out Colonel Oxborough to the Generals, to know what Terms would be granted to them if they would surrender ; the Generals gave this Answer, That no Terms would be granted to them, but that they must surrender at Discretion.

Soon after the Rebels sent out Captain Dalziel, to desire time till Seven a Clock on Monday Morning, to consider whether they should surrender at Discretion. Upon which General Carpenter sent Colonel Churchill, and General Wills Colonel Cotton, into the Town, to acquaint the Rebels that the Time desired should be allowed them, provided they sent out immediately an English Lord, and one of the Mackintoshes, as Hostages, that none within the Town should attempt to Escape, or make any Works for their Defence.

Colonel Churchill and Colonel Cotton went into the Town, and there met the Earl of Wintoun and the other Lords, and Mr. Forster, and told them their Message : All the Lords treated with them about the surrendering the Town, and severally gave their Words, that if Time might be allowed them till next Morning to surrender, they would use their Endeavours that none should make their Escape, and that they would not throw up any new Works for their Defence. Which Terms were agreed to, and the Earl of Derwentwater and Colonel Mackintosh were delivered to them, and brought to the Generals as Hostages, and staid all Night ; and in the Morning early the Rebels agreed to surrender at Discretion ; and the Lord Forester took Possession of the Town, where he found the Earl of Wintoun in Arms, and he surrendered himself to the Lord Forester, and delivered to him two Cases of Pistols ; and being in Custody, complained of the little Regard Mr. Forster had shewed to a Man of his Quality, and said all the Respect that he had shewed him, was to give him the Post of Honour when there was any Danger.

The Generals Carpenter and Wills never offered any other Terms than that the Rebels should surrender at Discretion, never promised them Mercy, or that they would even intercede for Mercy for them ; nor gave the Colonels, sent into the Town, any Orders to offer Mercy ; nor did they : All the Encouragement they gave them to surrender at Discretion, was, that if they did so, they should not be immediately put to the Sword by the Soldiers ; and denied to promise, even to recommend them to the King's Mercy.

This is the Substance of the Evidence we shall lay before your Lordships, and the Order we shall give it in ; and if what I have opened be proved, as I believe it will, or I would not have mentioned it, I apprehend it will fully prove the Charge against the Noble Lord, and shew how vain the Allegations in the Preamble to his Plea are.

I beg leave to say one thing more. The Noble Lord alledges, in the Preamble to his Plea, that he never shot off a Pistol : Certainly that is not material ; for assembling and marching in a Hostile manner for a public Purpose, and opposing the King's Forces, is levying a War, although the Lord accused never shot off a Pistol.

We

We will call our Witnesses, and begin with William Calderwood, who was Quarter-Master the whole time with Lord Wintoun.

Sir J. Fekyll. My Lords, we desire that William Calderwood may be sworn.

L. H. Steward. Is it William Calderwood you call?

Sir J. Fekyll. My Lords, we desire William Calderwood may be sworn.

And he was sworn by the Clerk accordingly.

Sir J. Fekyll. Mr. Calderwood, pray acquaint my Lords with what you know concerning this Rebellion, or any Part that the Noble Lord at the Bar had in it; tell the Story according to your own Method.

L. H. Steward. Do you hear what Question is asked? You are upon your Oath; give an Account of what you know of the late Rebellion, and what Part the Noble Lord at the Bar had in it.

Calderwood. Upon the Eleventh of October I went, with about Seventy Horse, to join my Lord Carnwath, my Lord Wintoun, and my Lord Kenmure at Moffett; where the Pretender was proclaimed.

Attorney-General. We desire that he may acquaint your Lordships, what Number of Men they had at Moffett.

Calderwood. One Hundred and Fifty.

Att. Gen. What Number of Men?

Calderwood. One Hundred and Fifty.

Att. Gen. Was the Prisoner at the Bar amongst them? and did he bring in any with him?

Calderwood. Yes.

Att. Gen. About what time did he come in?

Calderwood. Towards the Evening of the Eleventh Day.

Att. Gen. What Day?

Calderwood. The Eleventh.

Sir J. Fekyll. What Number did the Lord Wintoun bring with him?

Calderwood. About Fourteen.

L. H. Steward. You speak of the Prisoner at the Bar; he came in with Fourteen Men?

Calderwood. Yes, my Lord.

Att. Gen. Were they all armed; or how many were armed?

Calderwood. I don't know whether all were, but the most part of them were, with Sword and Pistol.

L. H. Steward. You have said at what Place they were, but your Voice did not reach hither; at what Place?

Calderwood. At Moffett.

Sir J. Fekyll. When my Lord at the Bar joined the Rebels, what did they do? Go on, and tell your Story.

Calderwood. They went to Lochmaben.

Sir J. Fekyll. When did the Lord at the Bar join them there?

Calderwood. The next Day.

Att. Gen. What was done there?

Calderwood. The Pretender was proclaimed there next Day.

Att. Gen. Was the Noble Lord at the Bar assisting at the proclaiming of him?

Calderwood. Yes, he was.

Att. Gen. In what manner did he assist?

Calderwood. With his Sword drawn on Horseback.

L. H. Steward. Who did assist at the Proclamation with a drawn Sword?

Calderwood. The Earl of Wintoun.

Att. Gen. Whence did you march from thence?

Calderwood. To Auchteltechen.

Att. Gen. Whither did you march from thence?

Calderwood. To Langholm.

Sir J. Fekyll. And whither then?

Calderwood. To Hawick.

Att. Gen. Go on.

Calderwood. The Pretender was proclaimed there.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was the Lord Wintoun present at the Proclamation?

Calderwood. Yes.

Sir J. Fekyll. Whence did you go from thence?

Calderwood. To Fedburg.

L. H. Steward. Was the Pretender proclaimed there?

Calderwood. Yes.

Sir J. Fekyll. Who were present?

Calderwood. The Earl of Wintoun, Carnwath, and all the Lords.

Att. Gen. Where did you march then?

Calderwood. To Rodberry.

Att. Gen. What happened there?

Calderwood. We were join'd by General Forster.

Att. Gen. How long did you stay there?

Calderwood. Two Nights.

Att. Gen. Was the Pretender proclaimed at Rodberry?

Calderwood. No.

Att. Gen. What Place did you go next to?

Calderwood. To Wooler.

Att. Gen. Whither from thence?

Calderwood. To Kelsoe; where we were join'd by the Highland Foot.

Sir J. Fekyll. What Foot do you mean?

Calderwood. The Highlanders.

Sir J. Fekyll. Who commanded them?

Calderwood. Brigadier Mackintosh.

Sir J. Fekyll. From Kelsoe whither did you go?

Calderwood. Back again to Fedburg.

Sir J. Fekyll. Whether from Fedburg?

Calderwood. To Hawick.

Att. Gen. What happened at either of these Places?

Calderwood. Nothing.

Sir J. Fekyll. At Hawick; did nothing happen there?

Calderwood. No.

Att. Gen. Was the Pretender proclaimed at Hawick at either of the Times?

Calderwood. Yes, the first time, but not the second.

Att. Gen. Who were present?

Calderwood. All the Lords.

Att. Gen. Name them — Was the Prisoner at the Bar there?

Calderwood. Yes.

Sir J. Fekyll. From Hawick, the second time, to what Place did you go?

Calderwood. To Langholm.

Att. Gen. What happened at Langholm?

Calderwood. Five or Six Hundred of the Highland Foot went from us.

Att. Gen. Was there any Endeavours used to bring those Five Hundred Highlanders back again?

Calderwood. I don't know of any.

Sir J. Fekyll. Who went to them? Did any of those that were in Arms go to them?

Calderwood. I was not there when they went off.

Att. Gen.

Att. Gen. Did the Noble Lord attempt to go with them, the Prisoner at the Bar ?

Calderwood. No ; at Fedburgh the Earl of Wintoun went up to them, to make them come back ; where the Foot designed to go, and the Horse were drawn up ; and they would have no Body come to them but the Prisoner.

L. H. Steward. I do not hear you ; What do you say ?

Calderwood. At Fedburgh the Earl of Wintoun went to them.

Att. Gen. Did he declare any thing after his Return, about their going off, or their not returning ?

Calderwood. No, not at Fedburgh.

Att. Gen. Any where else ?

Calderwood. I heard him at Langtown say, it was not his Fault they were gone off.

Att. Gen. Pray, might not my Lord Wintoun have gone off with them, if he would ?

Calderwood. Yes, he might.

Att. Gen. From Langtown whither did you go ?

Calderwood. To Brampton.

Att. Gen. Whither next ?

Calderwood. To Penrith.

Att. Gen. Whither next ?

Calderwood. To Appleby.

Att. Gen. Whither next ?

Calderwood. To Kendall.

Att. Gen. Whither next ?

Calderwood. To Kirby-Lonsdale.

Att. Gen. What happened there ?

Calderwood. The Pretender was proclaimed at the two last Places.

Sir J. Fekyll. Who was there ?

Calderwood. I saw him there ?

Sir J. Fekyll. Who ?

Calderwood. The Earl of Wintoun at Kirby-Lonsdale.

Sir J. Fekyll. Whither did you go from thence ?

Calderwood. To Lancaster.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was the Pretender proclaimed there ?

Calderwood. Yes.

Sir J. Fekyll. Who were present ?

Calderwood. Earl of Wintoun, Kennure, Carnwath, Nithisdale.

Sir J. Fekyll. How did they enter the Town of Lancaster ?

Calderwood. Sword in Hand.

Att. Gen. Was there any Arms or any Guns seized ?

Calderwood. Yes, six Cannon were seized ?

Att. Gen. From whence did they take them ?

Calderwood. From a Ship.

Att. Gen. Speak up, and tell my Lords.

Calderwood. They seized six Guns.

Att. Gen. Whence did they take them ?

Calderwood. From a Ship.

Att. Gen. What became of them ?

Calderwood. They carried them to Preston, and mounted them there.

Att. Gen. What time came you to Preston from Lancaster ?

Calderwood. What time ? we staid two Nights at Lancaster.

Mr. Cowper. Sir, I desire to ask you a Question — Whether you was at Church at Lancaster ?

Calderwood. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. Who was prayed for there ?

Calderwood. The Pretender as King of England.

Sir J. Fekyll. Who was at Church ? Was it the Parish Church ?

Calderwood. Yes, the Parish Church.

Sir J. Fekyll. Who was present at Church ?

Calderwood. I don't remember.

Mr. Cowper. From Lancaster whither did you go then ?

Calderwood. We went to Preston.

Mr. Cowper. What Day did you arrive at Preston ?

Calderwood. The Ninth or Tenth Day of November.

Mr. Cowper. Did the Horse and Foot arrive the same Day ?

Calderwood. No, the Horse came in one Day, and the Foot another.

Mr. Cowper. How long after the Horse did the Foot come ?

Calderwood. The next Day ; then the Pretender was proclaimed. The Horse came in on a Wednesday, the Foot on Thursday.

Att. Gen. Had you any Distinction between the Scots and English, by Cockades ?

Calderwood. Yes.

Att. Gen. What was the Distinction ?

Calderwood. The Scots had Blue and White, and the English had Red and White.

Att. Gen. Did the noble Lord meddle with any Cockade ?

Calderwood. Yes, he had one at Hawick.

Att. Gen. Did he distribute them ?

Calderwood. Yes, he delivered them from my Hands.

L. H. Steward. Who do you speak of ? Raise your Voice.

Calderwood. I say, my Lord, the Earl of Wintoun had a Cockade at Hawick, and took several of them from my Hands, and gave them away as he thought fit.

Sir J. Fekyll. You saw the Earl of Wintoun at Preston when the King's Forces came thither ; do you remember what passed afterwards ?

Calderwood. My Lord, I saw him, he had Sword and Pistols ; he was a Foot by the Church-yard.

Att. Gen. As you came along to Preston, acquaint my Lords whether you know any think of the public Revenues being collected ?

Sir J. Fekyll. Before that, when my Lord was on Foot with Sword and Pistols going towards the Church-yard, was there any Forces drawn up there ?

Calderwood. Yes, both Horse and Foot were drawn up in the Church-yard.

Sir J. Fekyll. While my Lord was in Company, and in this March, was there any Troop formed ?

Calderwood. Yes, there was a Troop.

Sir J. Fekyll. Who had any of those Troops ?

Calderwood. My Lord Wintoun had the First.

Sir J. Fekyll. Of whom did his Troop consist ?

Calderwood. It consisted partly of Gentlemen, and partly of his own Servants.

Sir J. Fekyll. By whom were they paid ?

Calderwood. By my Lord Wintoun.

Sir J. Fekyll. How much a Day ?

Calderwood. Two Shillings a Day.

Sir J. Fekyll. In what manner was the Troop accoutred ?

Calderwood. Very well, with Swords and Pistols.

Att. Gen.

Att. Gen. Did my Lord's Servants retain his Livery in the Army?

Calderwood. He had five in Liveries.

Att. Gen. What were the rest?

Calderwood. Domestic Gentlemen.

Att. Gen. Did my Lord command only that, or any other Body?

Calderwood. He commanded a Squadron.

Sir J. Fekyll. In your Passage, did my Lord discover any Uneasiness, or seek for any Opportunity of leaving them?

Calderwood. He never did that I know of.

Sir J. Fekyll. I think you quarter'd him, did he complain of his Quarters at any time?

Calderwood. He order'd me to give him good Quarters.

Sir J. Fekyll. And accordingly you did for him?

Calderwood. Yes.

Att. Gen. We will go on. What happened at Preston? What time did the King's Forces come there?

Calderwood. We came on Wednesday, they came on Saturday.

Att. Gen. Tell my Lords what happen'd after the King's Troops came to Town.

Calderwood. We defended the Town two Nights.

Att. Gen. When did they surrender?

Calderwood. They surrender'd on Monday.

Att. Gen. What pass'd before? Did the King's Troops attack it, and demand a Surrender?

Calderwood. Yes, and we defended it.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was there any Provision made to secure the Town? Acquaint my Lords how it was defended.

Calderwood. We barricado'd it in every Street.

Sir J. Fekyll. After what manner? how?

Calderwood. We had two Cannon in every Street.

Att. Gen. During the Time the King's Troops were at the Town, what Share did my Lord Wintoun bear in the Defence of it? where was he?

Calderwood. I saw him go towards the Church-yard;

Att. Gen. Was there a Body of Men with him in the Church-yard?

Calderwood. Yes, there was.

Sir J. Fekyll. When my Lord joined the Men, and in his March, was there any levying of Money.

Calderwood. They raised Taxes as they called it, a Cess.

Sir J. Fekyll. We have done with this Witness; if my Lord hath a Mind to ask him any Questions, he is at Liberty to do it.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, if you have any Question to ask, propose it, and it shall be asked.

L. Wintoun. I can't examine him, I desire my Council may examine him.

L. H. Steward. I told your Lordship your Council are not to assist your Lordship in cross-examining the Witnesses; you have a Liberty of cross-examining them yourself, by proposing your Questions, and they will be ask'd by the Court.

L. Wintoun. I never examined a Witness in my Life, I desire my Council may do it for me.

L. H. Steward. Have you any Questions?

L. Wintoun. My Lord, I hope you will allow my Council to speak for me.

L. H. Steward. Have you any Question you desire to be ask'd, and it shall be ask'd?

L. Wintoun. I desire my Council may ask for me; it is very hard to have none to speak for me, and there are twenty against me.

Proclamation for Silence as usual.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, I hope now you will be better heard. If you have any Question to ask this Witness, if your Lordship propounds it, it shall be ask'd him.

L. Wintoun. My Lord, allow my Council to speak for me, I have but two.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I have acquainted you, (but apprehend you did not hear me) that the Law of the Land doth not allow it.

Sir J. Fekyll. My Lords, if my Lord at the Bar doth not think fit to ask this Witness any Questions, nor your Lordships, we must call another Witness.

L. H. Steward to Calderwood the Witness. Direct your Answer this way. You have mention'd several Proclamations of the Pretender, was there any at which my Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, was not present?

Calderwood. I did not see him at the Proclamation at Preston.

L. H. Steward. At how many other Places did you see him?

Calderwood. I saw him at Wooler, Jedburg, Kelsoe, and Kirby-Lonsdale, and Lancaster, where the Pretender was proclaimed.

L. H. Steward. Did he join in causing him to be proclaim'd, or did he seem to dislike it?

Calderwood. No, my Lord, he was always among the rest.

Att. Gen. With your Lordship's Favour, the next Witness is James Lindsey, we desire he may be sworn.

L. Wintoun. My Council are present, pray allow my Council to speak for me, I am not used to speak in such Assemblies.

Lindsey was sworn accordingly.

L. H. Steward. Who do you call next, Gentlemen?

Att. Gen. James Lindsey is sworn, we desire he may give your Lordship's an Account, whether he was at any time at Moffett, when the Pretender was proclaim'd, and what Share my Lord Wintoun had in it? — I believe it will be better to have something for the Witnesses to stand upon; — stay a little, till something is brought to stand upon.

A Chair was brought to stand upon.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was you at Moffett?

Lindsey. Yes.

Sir J. Fekyll. What pass'd there, and who was at that Place?

L. H. Steward. Keep your Face, and direct your Answer this way; tho' the Gentlemen on the left Hand ask you Questions, keep your Face this way.

Lindsey. I saw several Gentlemen.

Sir J. Fekyll. But did you see my Lord Wintoun there?

Lindsey. First I saw him there; the second time at Jedburg, the third time at Kendall, and the last at Preston.

Sir J. Fekyll. You saw him at these Places you have mentioned, what happened at either of these Places?

Lindsey. The first time I saw him, he was riding on a grey Horse, mounted with Sword and Pistol; the second time, sitting with the Guard; and at Kendall on Horseback, when he came out of Town, I saw him riding on Horseback; and at Preston, I saw him riding at the Market-Place, with other Gentlemen along with him.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was there any Proclamation made at any of these Places?

Lindsey. Yes, there was a Proclamation at Fedburg, they told me they proclaim'd the Pretender.

Sir J. Fekyll. Did you hear the Proclamation?

Lindsey. I heard the Voice, but not the Words pronounced.

Sir J. Fekyll. Who assisted at it?

Lindsey. A great many Gentlemen on Horseback.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was the Prisoner at the Bar there?

Lindsey. I did not see him.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was the Prisoner at the Bar at Lancaster?

Lindsey. I do not know, I was not there.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was he at Preston?

Lindsey. Yes, he was there.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was you present when they proclaimed the Pretender there?

Lindsey. I was standing at a great distance, but did not hear it, but saw the Army.

Sir J. Fekyll. From those Places when you marched, in what manner did you march? In Squadrons?

Lindsey. Yes, in Squadrons?

Sir J. Fekyll. Did the noble Lord at the Bar command a Squadron?

Lindsey. I did not know what his Lordship's Command was, he rode at the Head of the first Squadron.

Att. Gen. Did he march along with the Forces?

Lindsey. I had very seldom Occasion to see his Lordship. I believe he did.

Sir J. Fekyll. Do you know any thing of raising Money.

Lindsey. I heard talk of it only.

Sir J. Fekyll. What Troops were with the Rebels?

Lindsey. I can't tell how many.

Sir J. Fekyll. Do you remember any one Troop?

Lindsey. Yes, there was Lockbart's.

Sir J. Fekyll. Any beside?

Lindsey. There was one went by the Name of my Lord Wintoun's, but I knew it not.

Att. Gen. Who was there in that Troop of Lockbart's?

Lindsey. Several Gentlemen.

Att. Gen. Was there any but Gentlemen?

Lindsey. Some private Men and Servants.

Att. Gen. Whose Servants?

Lindsey. The Captain's, Mr. Lockbart had two or three himself.

Att. Gen. Was there any other Servants?

Lindsey. No, I don't think there was any other.

Att. Gen. Did you know the Troop called my Lord Wintoun's?

Lindsey. I did not know it, there was one called his.

Att. Gen. Was there any Servants in it?

Lindsey. There were Servants in that Company.

Sir J. Fekyll. Were they armed with Sword and Pistol?

Lindsey. Yes.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was you at Preston when the King's Forces invested it?

Lindsey. Yes.

Sir J. Fekyll. How did the Prisoner behave himself?

Lindsey. I cannot tell.

Sir J. Fekyll. My Lords, we have done with our Examination of this Witness.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, if you would ask this Witness any Question, propose it, and it shall be asked.

After a considerable Pause,

Att. Gen. Our next Witness is Elias Cammeron, we desire he may be sworn.

He was sworn accordingly.

Mr. Cowper. My Lords, we desire he may be asked whether he was in the Rebels Army.

L. H. Steward. You hear the Question; direct your answer this way.

Cammeron. Yes, I was there.

Mr. Cowper. Under whose Command?

Cammeron. Under the Command of Captain Mackcleane.

Mr. Cowper. And in whose Regiment?

L. H. Steward. Turn your Face this way, that your Voice may be heard.

Cammeron. My Lord Charles Murray's Regiment.

L. H. Steward. Whose Command was you under?

Cammeron. Under Captain Mackcleane.

Sir J. Fekyll. In whose Regiment?

Cammeron. In my Lord Charles Murray's Regiment.

Sir J. Fekyll. Will you give a general Account of what you know from the first time you came into the Army of the Rebels?

Cammeron. I joined them at Moffett, and then we proceeded to a Place called Lockmaben; and then we march'd to Duns, from thence to Kelfoe; within two Miles of Kelfoe we met the Horse. Then we went from Kelfoe to Fedburg, I saw my Lord Wintoun there; the next Day we rested. Then we marched, from Langtown to Brampton; from Brampton to Penrith; from Penrith to Kirby-Lonsdale; and from Kirby-Lonsdale to Lancaster; where I saw my Lord Wintoun at the Head of his Horse with a Trumpet sounding before him; I saw them march; we staid a Day at Lancaster, and the Horse went into Preston the next Day; either Wednesday or Thursday I saw my Lord Wintoun, and after the King's Forces were come I saw my Lord Wintoun with other Lords.

Mr. Cowper. You have mentioned proclaiming the Pretender at one or two Towns, pray give an Account at how many Places you observed that he was proclaimed?

Cammeron. I heard him proclaimed at Duns, at Kelfoe, and at Lancaster.

Mr. Cowper. I desire to know if at any of these Places you observed the Prisoner, my Lord Wintoun?

Cammeron. At Lancaster I did observe him to go into the Ring when they were going to proclaim him, but at the Time of the Proclamation I did not see him, being in the outward Part of the Ring.

Att. Gen. Please to acquaint my Lords, whether in your March you took any Prisoners.

Cammeron. When we were near Penrith, we took a great many Prisoners. I did not see them taken.

Att. Gen. Was the Prisoner at the Bar with you in that March?

Cammeron. I can't really determine. I saw him there.

Att. Gen. Where did you see him first?

Cammeron. At Kelfoe, when the Foot join'd us.

Att. Gen. Where did you take the Prisoners?

Cammeron. At Penrith.

Att. Gen. Did the noble Lord at the Bar ever leave you after he joined you?

Cammeron. I heard he was not for coming into England. I only heard this by Report.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was you at Seaton House?

Cammeron. Yes.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was my Lord Wintoun there?

Cammeron. No, only Brigadier Mackintosh and the Foot.

Sir J. Fekyll. What Time did they come to Seaton House?

Cammeron. On Saturday to my best Remembrance, they were at Seaton House; then the Duke of Argyle returned back, and that Night about six or seven o'Clock we retreated to Seaton House, and staid there Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday.

Att. Gen. At the Time the Highlanders came to Seaton House, was this Lord there?

Cammeron. No, I do not know that he was.

Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of the public Revenues being gathered at Duns, Brampton, and Appleby?

Cammeron. Yes.

Att. Gen. Did they give any Receipts?

Cammeron. Yes, they gave Receipts. I saw one which was to this Effect: After the Year and Date, then, Received such a Sum of Money as Excise-Duty, due from such a Person to such a Person.

Att. Gen. During the Time the King's Forces attack'd Preston, what did you observe my Lord Wintoun do?

Cammeron. What I observed of my Lord Wintoun, was this: I was there by the Church-yard, there I saw my Lord Wintoun in the Church-yard, with my Lord Kenmure and Derwentwater at the Time of the Action, but I did not see him in the Action, and whether he had Pistols or not I can't be positive.

Att. Gen. Was there any Persons at the Market-Place?

Cammeron. I was not at the Market-Place.

Att. Gen. You was at the Church-yard?

Cammeron. Yes.

Sir J. Fekyll. When you observed my Lord Wintoun, what did you see him do?

Cammeron. I observed nothing, but he was like the rest, riding to and fro with the rest.

Sir J. Fekyll. Did you see him assisting at the Proclamation of the Pretender at Preston?

Cammeron. I saw him go into the Ring with the rest, but I did not see him at the time of the Proclamation.

L. H. Steward. I believe in this Narration his Voice did not reach this End of the Court; therefore if he hath said any thing proper to be taken notice of, you will do well to have it over again.

Att. Gen. We ask him whether he knew the noble Lord to be at any of those Places assisting at proclaiming the Pretender?

Cammeron. I did not observe him but at Lancaster.

Att. Gen. What happened there?

Cammeron. They proclaimed the Pretender there, and I saw him go into the Ring.

Att. Gen. But did you not observe him at the time of proclaiming the Pretender?

Cammeron. I saw him go into the Market-Place with the rest:

L. H. Steward. You saw him go in when the rest went in to proclaim the Pretender?

Cammeron. Yes.

Att. Gen. Did he then ride at the Head of the Scots Horse?

Cammeron. Yes; he rid at the Head of some Horse, and a Trumpet sounding before him.

Att. Gen. Was that the Time when the Pretender was proclaimed at Lancaster?

Cammeron. Yes.

Att. Gen. Whether had my Lord his Sword by his Side, or had he it drawn?

Cammeron. Really I cannot be positive to that.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, will you ask this Witness any Question?

L. Wintoun. My Lords, I be not prepared, so I hope your Lordships will do me Justice; I was not prepared for my Trial; I did not think it would come on so soon, my material Witnesses not being come up, and therefore I hope you will do me Justice, and not make use of Cowper-Law, as we used to say in our Country, hang a Man first, and then judge him.

L. H. Steward. Did you hear? My Lord Wintoun, please to speak it again.

L. Wintoun. I said that I was not prepared for my Trial; I did not think it would come on so soon. Some Gentlemen are just come up; please your Lordships to let me know what they say, that I may be the better able to make my Defence.

L. H. Steward. If your Lordship will ask this Witness any Question, now is your Time; but if what you are saying is your Defence, you should reserve that till the Commons have done.

Robert Patten is called and sworn.

Proclamation made for Silence as usual.

Sir W. Thomson. With your Lordships Permission I beg leave to ask this Witness, whether at any time he was in Company with these Rebels; and when he first joined them?

Patten. I join'd them on the 20th of October, at Wooler.

Sir W. Thomson. Pray Sir will you give an Account what past from that Time you join'd them till they were taken.

Patten. I remember from Wooler we march'd to Kelfoe.

Sir W. Thomson. Did you see my Lord Wintoun at Wooler?

Patten. I can't say I did.

Sir W. Thomson. Did you see him at Kelfoe?

Patten. I saw him when the Proclamation was there.

Sir W. Thomson. What Proclamation?

Patten. To proclaim the Pretender.

Sir W. Thomson. Was my Lord Wintoun present?

Patten. Yes.

Sir W. Thomson. In what Manner?

Patten. He appear'd among the rest of the Gentlemen.

Sir W. Thomson. Was he armed?

Patten. Only his Sword, that I saw.

Sir W. Thomson. Pray what pass'd afterwards?

Patten. We came to Kelsoe, and from thence we went to Fedburg.

Sir W. Thomson. Where did you go?

Patten. To Fedburg.

Sir W. Thomson. What pass'd there?

Patten. After they came to Fedburg they were alarmed by a Party, they thought of the King's Forces, but it happened to be some of their own Party.

Sir W. Thomson. What happened on that Occasion?

Patten. I saw the Lords, and among the rest my Lord Wintoun, at the Head of some Horsemen there drawn up.

Sir W. Thomson. In what Manner?

Patten. The Earl of Wintoun was drawn up with his Men, and the Scots Lords with their Men.

Sir W. Thomson. With what Intent?

Patten. They apprehended General Carpenter with the King's Forces was coming to attack them.

Sir W. Thomson. You say my Lord Wintoun marched out at the Head of some Horsemen?

Patten. I can't say I saw him march out, but I saw him at the Head of some Horse.

Sir W. Thomson. What happened afterwards?

Patten. They returned to Fedburg and staid all Day, and the next Day they marched to Hawick.

Sir W. Thomson. What happen'd at Hawick?

Patten. At Midnight we were again alarmed with a Party.

Sir W. Thomson. What happen'd upon that?

Patten. I saw my Lord Wintoun in the Street.

Sir W. Thomson. Was there any Preparation made for Defence.

Patten. Yes they were going out to defend themselves.

Sir W. Thomson. You saw my Lord Wintoun there?

Patten. Yes.

Sir W. Thomson. In what manner?

Patten. He had his Sword by his Side.

Sir W. Thomson. When you went from that Place, whither did you go then?

Patten. We went to Langholm.

Sir W. Thomson. What pass'd there?

Patten. We continued there till next Morning, when we consulted whether to march for England or for Scotland; a Party of Horse went for Dunfreise. The Highlanders, a great Part of them went off there, and would not march for England.

Sir W. Thomson. Was my Lord Wintoun with them at their going off?

Patten. I saw my Lord Wintoun go off, and come up again: I spoke to my Lord upon that account.

Sir W. Thomson. What did his Lordship say?

Patten. Nothing material, but asked me if I knew the Country.

Sir W. Thomson. When the Foot went off at Langholm, did my Lord go to them?

Patten. I saw him go up to them, and make a Halt.

Sir W. Thomson. But he came back again?

Patten. Yes.

Sir W. Thomson. At that time, if my Lord had had any Inclination to it, whether might he not have gone off?

Patten. Yes: I can't tell my Lord's Inclination, but any Body might have gone off, there was no Restraint upon him.

Sir W. Thomson. Whither did you march from Langholm?

Patten. To Langtown.

Sir W. Thomson. Did any thing happen at Langtown?

Patten. We march'd through.

Sir W. Thomson. Whither did you go then?

Patten. To Brampton.

Sir W. Thomson. Whither from thence?

Patten. To Penrith.

Sir W. Thomson. What happened there?

Patten. There was the Posse Comitatus, whether that Posse Comitatus were the Militia I can't tell; they were got together, and upon our advancing they dispers'd themselves.

Sir W. Thomson. Where was my Lord Wintoun then?

Patten. I saw him among the Scots Lords there after his usual manner, on Horseback, with Sword and Pistols.

Sir W. Thomson. Was his Sword drawn?

Patten. No.

Sir W. Thomson. Whither did they go then?

Patten. They went to Appleby.

Sir W. Thomson. What pass'd at Appleby?

Patten. They went from Appleby to Kendall.

Sir W. Thomson. What happened there?

Patten. A Proclamation was read, as at most of the Towns.

Sir W. Thomson. Did you see my Lord Wintoun at any of those Proclamations?

Patten. No, I did not.

Sir W. Thomson. Where did you go then?

Patten. To Kirby-Lonsdale.

Sir W. Thomson. Did any thing happen remarkable there?

Patten. I dined with the Scots Lords at Kirby.

Sir W. Thomson. What happen'd there? and what Healths were drank there?

Patten. The Pretender's Health, and Success to our Cause, that was the usual Health.

Sir W. Thomson. Was my Lord Wintoun there?

Patten. Yes, there was my Lord Kenmure, Carnwath, and the other Lords.

Sir W. Thomson. Did he drink the Health among the rest?

Patten. All the Table did.

Sir W. Thomson. From thence whither did you go?

Patten. To Lancaster.

Sir J. Fekyll. At the Place where you drank Healths, was there any other remarkable Health?

Patten. The usual Health was good Success to the Cause in Hand.

L. H. Steward. Who drank that Health?

Patten. All the Company.

L. H. Steward. Who was in Company? was the Prisoner at the Bar in Company?

Patten. Yes, he was.

Sir W. Thomson. When you came to Lancaster, in what manner did you enter that Town?

Patten. We entered that Town more regularly than any other we had marched through.

Sir W. Thomson. After what manner?

Patten. They march'd into the Town with their Swords drawn, and the Highlanders were drawn round round the Cross; the Gentlemen marched into the Town on Horseback; the Pretender was proclaimed there.

Sir W. Thomson. You was by when the Pretender was proclaimed?

Patten. Yes.

Sir W. Thomson. Was my Lord Wintoun there?

Patten. I can't say I saw him there: I saw him in the Town at the head of some Horse with his Sword drawn.

Sir W. Thomson. Was there any Cannon seized at Lancaster?

Patten. Some Pieces of Cannon were seized.

Sir W. Thomson. What did you do with the Cannon?

Patten. We carried them with us to Preston.

Sir W. Thomson. When there were Prayers in the Parish Church at Lancaster, who was prayed for?

Patten. The Pretender.

Sir W. Thomson. Do you know who were present?

Patten. A great many.

Sir W. Thomson. Was the Lord Wintoun there?

Patten. I can't tell.

Sir W. Thomson. Did you observe at any time any Force or Compulsion used to detain my Lord Wintoun?

Patten. No, none at all.

Sir W. Thomson. Did he shew any Uneasiness, or any Backwardness to go with them?

Patten. I can't be Judge of my Lord's Uneasiness, it did not appear so.

Sir W. Thomson. By whose Direction was the Prayer for the Pretender?

Patten. By Order of Mr. Forster.

Sir W. Thomson. My Lords, we have done with this Witnesses.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, will you please to ask this Witnesses any Question?

L. Wintoun. No.

Att. Gen. My Lords, we desire to call my Lord Forrester.

Then a Chair was placed for Lord Forrester near the Clerks Table.

And the Oath was administered to him by the Lord High Steward.

Sir J. Fekyll. My Lords, we beg leave to ask this Noble Lord a Question or two: Was your Lordship at Preston?

L. Forrester. Yes, my Lords.

L. H. Steward. Your Lordship will please to raise your Voice.

L. Forrester. I was there with the King's Troops, and had the Honour to command Brigadier Preston's Regiment. We came before Preston on Saturday the 12th of November.

Att. Gen. Will your Lordship acquaint my Lords what pass'd at Preston when you was there? whether you was by at Preston when the King's Forces attacked it, and whether it was defended by the Rebels, and what else pass'd there?

L. Forrester. I was there, and commanded one of the Attacks under Brigadier Honywood.

Att. Gen. Was the Town defended by the Rebels, and were any of the King's Officers and Soldiers killed?

L. Forrester. Yes, a great many.

Att. Gen. Please to give an Account what Number.

L. Forrester. We lost a great many.

Att. Gen. Can you guess the Number?

L. Forrester. No, I can't exactly tell: A good many; we had 'twixt sixty and seventy of the Regiment I had the Honour to command killed and wounded.

Att. Gen. How many were killed?

L. Forrester. About thirty were killed dead on the Spot.

Att. Gen. How long did that Attack last, before they desired to capitulate?

L. Forrester. From Saturday till Sunday Morning between one and two o'Clock.

Sir J. Fekyll. I think your Lordship had a command to take Possession of the Town?

L. Forrester. Yes; I took Possession of the Church-yard Monday Morning about six o'Clock.

Sir J. Fekyll. Will you please to give an Account of what you know of the Noble Lord at the Bar when the Town surrendered.

L. Forrester. The Town surrender'd at six a Clock in the Morning; I came into the Church-yard and took Possession of it; then I went to the Mitre Tavern, where that Lord and the rest of the Lords were; I disarm'd them.

Att. Gen. What Arms did my Lord Wintoun deliver up at that time?

L. Forrester. Two Cases of Pistols.

Sir J. Fekyll. If my Lord hath a mind to ask any Question of the Noble Lord that hath been examined, we desire he may do it.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, will you be pleased to ask this Noble Lord any Question concerning this matter at Preston?

L. Wintoun. I had no Arms: Please to ask him whether I had Sword or Pistol in my Hand?

L. H. Steward. Take my Lord's Question in Writing.

Then the Clerk went and took it.

Question. Whether the Arms your Lordship mentioned to have been delivered to you, whether he had the Arms then about him, or his Lordship did not say they were in the Stable?

L. Forrester. He brought the Arms to me himself, and gave them me out of his own Hands.

L. H. Steward. My Lord says you brought the Arms to him your self, and gave them him out of your own Hands.

L. Forrester. I got so many of them that I should not have made any Distinction of his from the rest, but that I remember he gave me his Arms out of his own Hands, and desired me to give them to my Lord Kimmergem.

L. H. Steward. You desired my Lord Forrester to give them my Lord Kimmergem.

L. H. Steward. Another Question proposed is, Whether my Lord Wintoun did not give Orders to his Servant to bring the Arms out of the Stable, and to give them my Lord Kimmergem?

L. Forrester. I believe he did bring them out of the Stable.

L. H. Steward. My Lord believes you did bring them out of the Stable.

L. Wintoun. I desire he may be asked whether I had a Sword about me?

L. H. Steward. My Lord Forrester, the Question is, Whether your Lordship found a Sword about my Lord Wintoun?

L. Forrester. I did not see any Sword that he had; he had a great Coat on, and might have had a Sword under that, but I saw none.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Forrester, did the Prisoner at the Bar deliver himself and his Arms to your Lordship as one of those in the Surrender?

L. For.

L. Forrester. I took it so.

Sir J. Jekyll. We beg leave to call General Carpenter, and desire he may be sworn in his Place, and give your Lordships his Evidence.

General Carpenter was sworn in his Place.

Proclamation for Silence as usual.

Sir J. Jekyll. Mr. Carpenter, please to give my Lords an Account when you came to Preston, and what happened there.

Gen. Carpenter. I came to Preston on Sunday the 13th of November last : The Troops under Mr. Wills had been there the Afternoon before. I got there about Ten a Clock on Sunday Morning, with Three Regiments of Dragoons ; and there had been no Intercourse nor Message passed before I came.

Att. Gen. Please to inform my Lords what passed there after you came to Preston.

Gen. Carpenter. After I came, the Rebels sent out to know what Terms they might expect, and were answered none but at Discretion. They soon after sent out one Captain Dalziel, to desire a Cessation till next Morning ; upon which I sent in Colonel Churchill to tell them, I agreed to a Cessation, provided they sent out an English Lord and a Scots Lord as Hostages : I nam'd my Lord Derwentwater and my Lord Kenmure. Captain Dalziel said he thought my Lord Kenmure would 'not come out. I named then Brigadier Mackintosh : He also thought he would not come out. I was unwilling to make great Difficulties, it growing towards Night ; and said either of the Mackintosh's and an English Lord : And he brought out my Lord Derwentwater and Colonel Mackintosh as Hostages, that they should make no Attempt to escape, nor any Works for Defence in the Town.

Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, acquaint my Lords who you sent in with Colonel Churchill.

Gen. Carpenter. Colonel Cotton.

Att. Gen. When did they agree to the Surrender of the Place ?

Gen. Carpenter. Not till the next Morning. The Hostages were, that none should attempt to escape, nor any Defences should be made in the Town till the next Morning, at which time they would determine whether they would surrender or not.

Att. Gen. I desire you to acquaint my Lords, whether these were all the Terms offered, or whether there was any Hopes of Mercy given them ?

Gen. Carpenter. I gave them none at all my self, and it is very unlikely any Body else should : I commanded in Chief his Majesty's Forces there : No Body ought to have done it ; and if any Officer whatsoever took upon him so to do without my Order or Leave, it was very unanswerable by the Rules and Discipline of War ; and what he cannot answer : I hope no Body did : I am sure I gave no such Directions : Colonel Churchill can acquaint your Lordships whether I directed him to mention any other Conditions to them than at Discretion.

Sir J. Jekyll. Did you hear any other Officer give them any Hope or Expectation of Mercy ?

Gen. Carpenter. No, I did not.

Sir J. Jekyll. If my Lord Wintoun hath any Questions to ask this honourable Person, he may do it.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, now is your Time if you'll ask any Question of General Carpenter.

L. Wintoun. Whether I was concern'd in making any —

L. H. Steward. I don't hear the Question— Then the Clerk was sent down to take it in Writing.

And the Question being brought up to the Lord High-Steward by the Clerk.

L. H. Steward. The Question my Lord asks is, Whether he was concerned in making any Capitulation, or knew any thing about it ?

Gen. Carpenter. Not that I know of ; it is impossible for me to know, except by Hearsay : He was not the Person treated with, I treated with my Lord Derwentwater and one of the Mackintosh's, so that I know nothing of his being concerned in any manner of Treaty.

L. H. Steward. You hear the Answer.

Sir J. Jekyll. We beg leave to call General Wills.

L. Wintoun. I desire to ask my Lord Forrester a Question.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun desires to propose a Question to my Lord Forrester.

Sir J. Jekyll. Though that be out of Method, yet don't oppose it.

L. H. Steward. Bring up the Question. My Lord, the Question my Lord Wintoun proposes is, Whether he had any Sword or Arms when he first saw your Lordship at Preston ?

L. Forrester. I don't remember I had a Sword from him ; I can't tell whether he had a Sword about him, for he had a great Coat on ; but I remember I took none from him, I had only the two Cases of Pistols which he gave me.

L. H. Steward. He could not tell whether you had a Sword about you, you had a great Coat that he could not well see ; but he remembers he took none from you, only the two Cases of Pistols which you gave him.

L. H. Steward. Who do you call next ?

Sir J. Jekyll. My Lords, we desire that General Wills may be sworn.

He was sworn accordingly.

Sir J. Jekyll. Mr. Wills, pray give my Lords an Account when you came before the Town of Preston, and what happened there.

Gen. Wills. My Lords, I had the Honour to command the King's Troops that attack'd the Rebels at Preston ; I came before that Town the 12th of November last about One o'Clock, and ordered two Attacks upon the Town ; that Attack which leads two Wigan was commanded by Brigadier Honywood, who beat the Rebels from their first Barricade, and took Possession of some of the Houses in the Town ; the other Attack which leads to Lancaster was commanded by Brigadier Dormer, who lodg'd his Troops nigh the Barricade of the Rebels. The next Day, about Two o'Clock, Mr. Forster sent out one Mr. Oxborough, an Irishman, offering to lay down their Arms and submit themselves, and hoped that I wou'd recommend them to the King for Mercy ; which I refused, and told them I would not treat with Rebels, for that they had killed several of the King's Subjects, and that they must expect to undergo the same Fate ; upon which he said, that as I was an Officer, and a Man of Honour, he hoped I wou'd shew Mercy to People who were willing to submit : Upon which I told them all I would do for them was, that if they laid down their Arms, and submitted Prisoners at Discretion, I would prevent the Soldiers from cutting them to pieces till I had further Orders, and that I would give them but one Hour to consider of it ; and and sent him back again into the Town to acquaint Forster of it; before the Hour was expired they sent out Mr. Dalziel, Brother to the Earl of Carnwath, and he wanted Terms for the Scots. My Answer was, that I would not treat with Rebels, nor give them any other Terms than what I had before offered them: Upon which it was desired that I would grant further Time till Seven o'Clock next Day, to consult the best Method of delivering themselves up. I agreed to grant them the Time desired, provided that they threw up no new Intrenchments in the Streets, nor suffered any of their People to escape, and that they sent out the chief of the English and Scots as Hostages for the Performance; and I sent in Colonel Cotton to bring them out, who brought out the Earl of Derwentwater and Mr. Mackintosh. The next Day about Seven o'Clock Mr. Forster sent out to let me know, that they were willing to give themselves up Prisoners at Discretion, as I had demanded. Mr. Mackintosh being by when the Message was brought, said he could not answer that the Scots would surrender in that manner; for that the Scots were People of desperate Fortunes, and that he had been a Soldier himself, and knew what it was to be a Prisoner at Discretion; upon which I said, go back to your People again, and I will attack the Town, and the Consequence will be, I will not spare one Man of you. Mackintosh went back, but came running out immediately again, and said, that the Lord Kenmore, and the rest of the Noblemen, with his Brother, would surrender in like manner with the English.

Sir J. Fekyll. When the Attack was made by the King's Forces, whether any, and how many were killed?

Gen. Wills. I believe between sixty and seventy but few of the Horse; there were killed and wounded about a hundred and thirty.

Att. Gen. If you please to acquaint my Lords, whether any of the Rebels came and treated with you, or if you gave them any Encouragement to hope for Mercy.

Gen. Wills. All the Terms I gave them was, that I would save their Lives from the Soldiers till further Orders, if they surrender'd at Discretion: I desire to explain the Meaning of surrendering at Discretion, which is, then it is in our Power to cut them all to pieces; but I would give them their Lives till further Orders; for I could have cut them to pieces immediately after they are made Prisoners at Discretion, by the Rules of War; and if they did not comply I would renew the Attack, and not spare a Man.

L. H. Steward. You told them that if they did not comply, you would renew the Assault?

Gen. Wills. Yes, and not spare a Man of them.

Sir J. Fekyll. Did you give your Officers any Directions to give any other Terms?

Gen. Wills. No, I did not.

L. H. Steward. Then you gave no Directions to any other Officer to give other Terms than you yourself had offer'd?

Gen. Wills. No, I did not.

Mr. Cowper. Was there any other but these two, Colonel Churchill and Colonel Cotton sent in by you, or by General Carpenter?

Gen. Wills. Yes, Colonel Nassau, to bid our own People forbear firing.

Mr. Cowper. Had Colonel Nassau any Authority to treat?

Gen. Wills. No, he went in only to bid our Troops to forbear firing, and order Colonel Cotton to come out with the Hostages.

Sir J. Fekyll. You say the Rebels desired you to recommend them to the King's Mercy? who made that Proposition?

Gen. Wills. One Oxborough.

Sir J. Fekyll. Had you any other Proposition by any other?

Gen. Wills. Mr. Dalziel, Brother to my Lord Carnwath, for the Scots. I refused him likewise, and told him I wou'd treat with no Rebels, nor give them any Quarter.

Sir J. Fekyll. If my Lord at the Bar will ask this honourable Gentleman any Question, now is the Time.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, the Clerk is sent down to you again; if you have any Question he will take it.

The Clerk return'd with the Question to my Lord High-Steward.

L. H. Steward. The Question my Lord proposes to General Wills is, whether you, General Wills, gave any Summons to surrender before you made the first Attack; or if you did not make the Attack without any Summons at all?

Gen. Wills. When I was viewing the Town they shot two of my Dragoons, and I did not summons them.

Another Question taken by the Clerk and brought up.

L. H. Steward. Another Question my Lord desires to be ask'd is, whether you offer'd to prevent the Forces from falling upon the Gentlemen at Preston, provided they surrender'd at Discretion?

Gen. Wills. Before ever I had drawn up the Troop——

L. H. Steward. The Question is, whether you offer'd to prevent the Forces from falling upon the Gentlemen at Preston, provided they surrender'd at Discretion?

Gen. Wills. Yes, my Lords, I did hinder the Troops from falling upon them after they offered to surrender.

Another Question brought up by the Clerk.

L. H. Steward. General Wills, my Lord desires you may be asked what you know, or have been informed of his Lordship's being against coming to England; or of my Lord's being against fighting with any of yours, or General Carpenter's Troops?

Gen. Wills. I never knew my Lord Wintoun, nor saw him till four Days after he was taken at Preston, so that I can say nothing to that I don't know any thing of.

L. Wintoun. I desire General Carpenter may be ask'd the same Question.

L. H. Steward. Do you know any thing, or have heard that my Lord Wintoun was against coming into England, or fighting the King's Forces?

Gen. Carpenter. My Lords, I heard that at Fedburg they held a Council of War, the chief Officers, &c. this is only Hearsay, I speak not of my own Knowledge.

Sir J. Fekyll. For the sake of Evidence it is incumbent on us to desire that my Lord confines himself to ask the General what he knows, and not to what he heard said.

Att. Gen. We have two Witnesses more, the Colonels that were sent into the Town by the two Generals, Colonel Churchill and Colonel Cotton.

Colonel

Colonel Churchill was sworn.

Mr. Cowper. The Question proposed is, whether you was sent into Preston, and by whom?

Col. Churchill. I came up to Preston on Sunday Morning, under General Carpenter's Command, about Ten o'Clock; about One they sent out to capitulate; about Five I was sent in by General Carpenter, their Request being, that they might have Time till next Day to consider whether they should surrender or not. My Directions were, they should have that, upon Condition they sent out Hostages that none of them should attempt to escape, and that no Defence should be made in the Town. The People nam'd to me by General Carpenter were my Lord Derwentwater or my Lord Widdrington, and my Lord Kenmure or Mackintosh was mention'd for the Scots. I directed them to send the Hostages to me. They could not find my Lord Derwentwater nor Widdrington, and Mackintosh was gone to Bed. A little before eight I went with them, and told them the Terms I was to deliver to them, that they were to throw up no Works to fortify themselves, and should answer for the People, that none of them should escape. My Lord Derwentwater and Mackintosh went out with me: I carried them to the two Generals there, and at Seven o'Clock next Morning they surrender'd themselves.

Mr. Cowper. Please to give me leave to ask you, whether you had any Commission from the General that sent you into the Town, or whether you of yourself, without such Commission, gave them any Hopes of Mercy?

Col. Churchill. I had not any Power to do it, and was so far from doing it, that I don't remember a single Syllable was mention'd either on our Side or theirs about it.

Mr. Cowper. Did you at any other Time hear any other Officers give them such Assurance?

Col. Churchill. I never heard a single Word like it.

Att. Gen. Who did you treat with?

Col. Churchill. The Body I treated with carried me to Mr. Forster, and then to my Lord Kenmure. I deliver'd my Message to Mr. Forster. I did not know any Scots Lord but Kenmure.

Att. Gen. Who was present besides my Lord Kenmure?

Col. Churchill. I saw a great many, but I did not know particularly any.

Att. Gen. The next is Colonel Cotton, who was sent in by General Wills. We desire Colonel Cotton may be sworn.

He was sworn accordingly.

Att. Gen. We desire to ask Colonel Cotton, whether he was sent into Preston by General Wills, and what Instructions were given him when he went in?

Col. Cotton. I was sent into the Town by General Wills at their Desire, they having Terms to offer: I told them we could give them none; they urged they had Disputes amongst the Scots and English, and desired till the next Morning to reconcile them. General Wills sent me again into the Town, to allow them that time, provided that the Lords would give their Words that they would throw up no Works for their Defence from that time, and do their utmost that none of their People shou'd make their Escape; and the Lords did give their Words; and the Lord at the Bar was present.

Att. Gen. I desire you would acquaint my Lords upon what Terms they surrender'd.

Col. Cotton. I had no Power from Mr. Wills to promise them any Terms, nor I did not.

Sir J. Fekyll. Did you acquaint them you had no Power to offer them any Terms?

Col. Cotton. I did.

Att. Gen. Who did you acquaint?

Col. Cotton. All the Lords, and the People that had any Influence over the common Men.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was the Noble Lord at the Bar amongst them?

Col. Cotton. He was.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was there any Overtures made of obtaining the King's Mercy?

Col. Cotton. I had no such Order from Mr. Wills, and I did not offer it neither directly or indirectly.

Att. Gen. My Lords, I think it hath been desired to call Brigadier Munden, who speaks only as to the Attack; and I think, my Lords, if this Evidence need to be corroborated, we shall desire to call another Evidence who was with General Wills all the Time the Overtures pass'd?

Sir J. Fekyll. My Lords, if the Lord at the Bar hath any Question to ask Colonel Cotton, we desire he may be indulged.

L. Wintoun. I would know whether they did not take Prisoners and kill them, notwithstanding the Capitulation?

L. H. Steward. The Question my Lord desires may be asked is, whether you did not take Prisoners and kill them, notwithstanding the Capitulation?

Col. Cotton. My Lords, upon my coming out of the Town, though the Lords had engaged to prevent any of their People making their Escape, we were alarm'd with an Account that several were attempting it, and about six of those who were endeavouring to escape were cut to Pieces. Upon this Breach of their Parole Colonel Churchill and my self were sent in to demand Hostages, and brought out Lord Derwentwater and Mr. Mackintosh.

Att. Gen. We desire Brigadier Munden may be Sworn.

He was accordingly call'd and Sworn.

Att. Gen. We desire Brigadier Munden may be asked whether he was sent with these two Colonels into the Town, and what Directions were given them.

L. H. Steward. You hear the Question, please to give your Answer.

Brigadier Munden. I humbly apprehend I am called to give some Account of the Attack at Preston, which I will do in as few Words as I can. I am first to tell your Lordships, after the Rebels demanded an Audience of General Wills, their first Demand was for Terms: The Answer they received was, that General Wills would not treat with Rebels, but if they surrendered as Prisoners at Discretion, they should have their Lives spared 'till his Majesty's Pleasure was known. They asked if those were the only Terms; it was answered yes. Afterwards this Gentleman went into the Town, who had an Hour's time allowed him to consider of it. I remember his insisting upon Terms, but all the Answer Mr. Wills gave them was, if he had Inclination, he had no Power to give them any, otherwise than saving their Lives till his Majesty's Pleasure was further known. If they expected other Terms, they might return into the Town immediately, and he would attack them and cut them to Pieces.

After

After this the Gentleman went into the Town, my Lord Derwentwater and Mr. Mackintosh came out to us. Mr. Mackintosh and my Lord Derwentwater and I heard them frequently repeat their Request to the General for Terms, and I heard Mackintosh give a particular Account of the Bravery and Hardiness of their Troops. Mr. Wills told him he might have proved and tried them if he had pleased, and then it would have been seen whether the King's Troops, or a parcel of Rebels would have acted the braver Part. Mr. Wills received them with the utmost Detestation and Contempt, and gave them no hope of Mercy either directly or indirectly.

Att. Gen. Did you ever hear any other of the Officers offer them any other Terms?

Brig. Munden. No, I did not hear any. I heard the Instructions that were given to Colonel Cotton by General Wills, and when Mr. Cotton came out of the Town the third time, which was when he went to take their Parole of Honour.

Sir J. Fekyll. Did my Lord Wintoun come to give his Parole?

Brig. Munden. When Colonel Cotton came out, I very well remember he said he had received his Parole of Honour among the rest.

Sir J. Fekyll. If my Lord at the Bar hath any mind to ask this honourable Person, Brigadier Munden, any further Questions, we have done with him.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, do you ask this Witness any Question?

L. Wintoun. No.

Sir J. Fekyll. We that are entrusted by the House of Commons have no more Evidence to offer to your Lordships.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, the Gentlemen of the House of Commons have done with the Evidence they proposed to call against you; therefore it is your Lordship's time to open what Evidence you have, or if you have made any Observations on the Evidence given against you, to deliver them, or to call your own Witnesses—Take your own Method.

Proclamation was made for Silence as usual; and after some Pause,

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, I acquainted your Lordship that the Gentlemen of the House of Commons who manage the Evidence to support the Impeachment, have done with giving their Evidence; they design to give no more against you; therefore this is the time that is proper for your Lordship to make your Defence; you are to do it in your own Method, either by calling your Witnesses, or making such Observations in your Defence as you think proper.

L. Wintoun. Please to allow me some time, for my Witnesses are not yet come. I have used all possible Endeavours to get them, please to allow me till this Day Month 'till they come up. It will signify nothing to examine any Witnesses after I am dead. I never saw my Council but once, that they might instruct me what I have to say. My Lords, I am informed they will be here some time next Week.

L. H. Steward. What your Lordship said is not heard.

L. Wintoun. I said I never spoke to any of my Council, and that but once I have sent to my Council; I never saw them.

Proclamation for Silence was made as usual.

L. H. Steward. My Lord offer what you have to say now, while the Court is in Silence.

L. Wintoun. My Lords, the most material of my Witnesses are not come up, they will be here some time next Week; I have not talk'd to my Council.

L. H. Steward. Your most material Witnesses are upon the Road, you desire some time till they come up; the effect of your Petition to the House of Lords, that is what you offer again?

L. Wintoun. Yes, my Lords.

Att. Gen. We think it our Duty to acquaint your Lordships, that what that noble Lord insists upon now is out of Time. If he had any Reasons to offer to defer the Trial, he knew the proper Time and Place. Our Duty is to let your Lordships know, that when the Evidence for the Prosecution is given, the Prisoner is not to have time to delay the Proceedings, not any longer time. He ought to have applied before. We must submit it to your Lordships.

Mr. Cowper. This Request of his Lordship, the Prisoner at the Bar, seems to concern the Methods of Justice, and is, we think, of great Consequence with respect to the Commons. My Lords, we should have been very far from pressing to bring on his Lordship's Trial sooner than might have been thought consistent with the Rules of Justice: But when we consider the Time your Lordships have allowed him upon several Applications he has made to your Lordships for that purpose; when we all know he has had Notice ever since he was seized and made Prisoner at Preston, that a Defence would be necessary, and that it concerned him to provide for it, when we reflect how long it is since the Commons exhibited their Impeachment against him, it's surprizing after all to find his Lordship alledge, that he hath not had Time to bring up his Witnesses. With what View his Lordship is advised to make this Defence may be easily explained: It is, my Lords, to move the Compassion of the People, and, I fear, to traduce the Justice of your Lordships Proceedings. Surely it must be confessed, that he hath had more than Time sufficient, more than any one in the like Circumstances hath been allowed by your Lordships great Indulgence; and yet at last to have nothing to offer, but that his Witnesses are not come, without attempting to produce one single Witness to prove that he has, or expects any one Witness to appear for him.

My Lords, the stated Rules of Proceeding in Trials of this Nature ought to be ever sacred; and I don't know that any one Prisoner hath a Right to be indulged in Methods unknown to the Constitution.

My Lords, I believe when a Prisoner impeached by the Commons puts himself upon his Defence, and is brought upon his Trial, there ought to be no Interruption or Delay whatsoever. Sure I am, it is inconsistent with the Proceedings of all other Courts of Justice.

Your Lordships, as we are informed, lately denied the Prisoner any further Time; and if it was then thought not proper to be granted, certainly now he hath put himself upon his Trial, and stands upon his Defence at your Lordships Bar, he shall not be indulged to making the same Request.

My Lords, whatever Compassion we may have for this unhappy Lord, yet the Commons, when they reflect that the Methods and Forms of Justice are essential to Justice it self, they then think themselves obliged to oppose a new Attempt, and hope the Trial shall proceed.

L. Wintoun. My Witnesses are not come up. They will be up about Monday or Tuesday next. I have had no longer time than since the 10th of February last to bring up my Witnesses, when it was very bad travelling.

A Motion was made to adjourn.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, your Lordship hath heard the Commons oppose your Request: You have heard the Reasons given for such Opposition. Doth your Lordship, having heard the Reasons, yet insist upon it, or do you withdraw your Request?

L. Wintoun. I insist upon it, my Lords.

Then the House was adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

And being returned in about an Hour, and the House resumed, and Proclamation made for Silence, as usual.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, I am commanded by the Lords to let you know, that they have considered your Request, and that they are of Opinion it is not now consistent with the Rules of Justice to allow you further Time for sending for your Witnesses; therefore you are to proceed in your Defence. I am likewise to acquaint you, that in respect to the lowness of your Voice, the Lords have ordered a fit Person to stand by you (after he is sworn) to report truly to their Lordships what you say during your Trial.

Is it your Lordships Pleasure that one of your Lordships Clerks be appointed to stand by and report to your Lordships?

Lords. Yes, Yes.

A Clerk was sworn to make true Report; but my Lord Wintoun began to speak so very low, as scarce any could hear. Whereupon,

Sir J. Fekyll. My Lords, I perceive it is your Lordships Pleasure to indulge the Lord at the Bar, to have a Person sworn to report truly to your Lordships what he shall say in his Defence; but it is not your Lordships Intention that the Lord at the Bar should speak so low, as it is impossible for us or any near him to hear what he says.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, Speak as loud as you can, so as the Managers may hear; he is only to help your Voice, so as their Lordships may hear.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I think it very hard, and great Injustice, that I should not be allowed Time to make my own Defence; and that my Witnesses should not come up; and that I should be tyed down to a foolish Form, which I am not accusom'd to, when I am in danger of my Life.

Then the House was adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Friday, March 16. The Second Day.

L. H. Steward. THE House is resumed. Do your Lordships give the Judges leave to be cover'd?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Proclamation made for Silence, and another to bring forth the Prisoner, as usual.

The Prisoner brought to the Bar, and kneels.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, you may rise.—My Lord Wintoun, you may proceed upon your Defence.

The Clerk ordered to report as before.

L. H. Steward. I again remind your Lordship, you are to speak in your Defence as loud as you can; if your Voice is not heard, he is ready to report to the Lords what you say, but you must speak as loud as you can.

Clerk from Lord Wintoun. My Council is ready here to speak for me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I would not presume to make an Answer, but that it is known Law; that undoubtedly your Lordship cannot have Council, by the Law of the Land, to speak in your Defence, unless it be to Matter of Law; for the Law supposes every Man sufficient to answer for himself as to Matter of Fact.

Clerk from Lord Wintoun. My Lords, I am not accustomed to speak on such Occasions; therefore I hope your Lordships will allow my Council to speak for me.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I must acquaint you, that the Law in this Case admits of no Exception, but holds to the general Rule.

Clerk from Lord Wintoun. My Lords, I don't understand the Law; I am perfectly a Stranger to the Customs of the House, therefore hope your Lordships will allow my Council that know them to speak for me.

L. H. Steward to the Clerk. You let your Voice fall.

Clerk from Lord Wintoun. I am not accustomed to the Practice of this House; therefore I desire that your Lordships would please to allow other People to speak for me that understand them.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, your Council are not to be allowed to speak for you, as to those Things that are Matter of Fact, in an Impeachment of High-Treason, but to what is Matter of Law; and I believe if you ask your own Council they will tell you, as the Law stands they cannot be heard for you here as to Matter of Fact.

Clerk from Lord Wintoun. The Council will inform your Lordships of the Matter of Fact, and they know how better to express it than I do.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, have you any Witnesses to call in your Defence?

Clerk from Lord Wintoun. I told your Lordships Yesterday, my most material Witnesses were not yet come up.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I acquainted your Lordship Yesterday, and now would remind you of your own Petition exhibited to the House of Lords, wherein you acknowledge that a great many of your Witnesses were come up; those Witnesses were arrived, you only then pretended Four were not yet come. Doth your Lordship design to make no manner of use of those great Numbers of Witnesses that you admitted were come?

Clerk from Lord Wintoun. Without those they would not be of such an Effect—They would serve for nothing without those Witnesses coming.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, your Lordship will please to observe the Lords wait with great Patience, to see if your Lordship would be better advised, and go into your Defence.

Clerk from Lord Wintoun. I don't really know, my Lords, what to say for it, for I don't understand the Proceedings of this House. It was always the Custom in any Court where I was, for People to be allowed to speak, or the Council be allowed allowed to speak for me, for I am not accustomed to speak any manner of way in my own Defence, therefore I hope you will allow my Council to speak for me. My Council have a Point of Law to speak to; they say so, but I know nothing of it.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, your Council have had Access to you; and tho' your Lordship can't speak and argue to the Point of Law, can't your Lordship propose what the Question is?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. It is impossible for me to do a thing I don't understand; I don't know what the Point of Law is, no more than a Man that knows nothing about it.

When some laugh'd,

L. Wintoun. I am only speaking in my own Defence; I don't expect to be laugh'd at.

L. H. Steward. I think his Lordship does observe well; I hope every one will forbear that.

L. H. Steward. Won't your Lordship be pleased to name what Matter the Question concerns?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. It will be something about the Trial; no doubt something of what the common People have been speaking about—It is, no doubt, in Answer to the Managers of the House of Commons. I have not seen my Council since I was last here in the House; I have been kept close Prisoner all the time, and no Body come near me; nor had I any Time to speak with any Body, particularly with my Council; so that I have not had Time to be exactly informed of all the Points of Law they have to plead. The Council will tell themselves what Point of Law they have to plead.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, regularly you should propound your own Question before your Council speak. Before it appears to be a Point of Law, it is not fit for your Council to be heard.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. It is impossible I should direct a Council, I, that don't understand Law: I can't introduce a Point of Law; my Council will speak to the Point of Law.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, did not you speak to your Council last Night?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I could not.

L. H. Steward. Why?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. Because it was late when I went from hence; and your Lordships know I am a close Prisoner in the Tower; and was lock'd up and could not see them. I see no Body but the Guards.

L. H. Steward. Hath not your Lordship several times seen your Council, as often as you required an Order for so doing?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I never saw my Council but once, before I gave in my Answer.

L. H. Steward. Did you desire to see them oftner?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. My Lords, my Solicitor spoke to them; and my Witnesses not being come up, it was needless for me to speak to my Council, before that they might know what the Witnesses had to say, and so might draw up the State of the Question. I did not doubt but the Lords would have given me more Time; and therefore I was not so desirous to see my Council, as I would have been, if I thought I should have been so much cramped in Time.

Mr. Cowper. My Lords, I had the Honour to receive the Commands of the Commons, to reply to his Lordship's Defence, and it was reasonable to expect that the Prisoner, having pleaded Not Guilty to the Impeachment, would have attempted to give some Evidence in support of his Plea; but since it seems to be his Lordship's Resolution not to enter into a Defence, I think it my Duty to say something to your Lordships upon this unexpected Occasion. Such is the Treason, and so full the Evidence to prove it, that I think his Lordship's Behaviour, unaccountable as it is, more to his Purpose than any other could have been. My Lords, I am very unwilling to speak my own private Sentiment of his Lordship's present Conduct, although the Observations I could make arise out of his Lordship's Answer to the Impeachment: Whoever shall read and consider it, will find my Lord Wintoun not denying, but confessing the several Overt-Acts of Treason laid to his Charge, and then drawing a false Conclusion, that he is Not Guilty however of the Treason whereof he is accused. He denies that what he did was done with a traitorous Intention, and says very emphatically, that the pure Streams of Loyalty, which have always run in the Blood of his Ancestors, are derived to him uncorrupted; and thus, my Lords, a Popish Pretender being the Object of his Lordship's Loyalty, he thinks he may be guilty of the whole Impeachment without being a Traitor. This is the true state of the Case. It seems to me, his Lordship is determined to maintain his Point; and how far he may think it proper to acknowledge your Lordship's Jurisdiction I know not. My Lords, as to the Impeachment which the Commons with great Justice have exhibited against this Prisoner, your Lordships have observed that the several Treasons therein contained have been fully proved; I am unwilling, in a case so plain, and where no Defence has been, or can be made, to waste your Lordship's Time. Your Lordships have heard, in the course of the Evidence which we have produced, that this Lord departed from his Seat of Seaton House with about fourteen of his own Servants free and unconstrained; that he joined others of the Rebels at Moffett, at which Place his Lordship was pleased to form a Troop, which from thenceforth was called the Earl of Wintoun's Troop. The Prisoner had the Command of it and for fear his Zeal for the Pretender should pass unobserved, his own Servants rid in his own Troop in his own Livery; and I may add, that it appears his Lordship's Troop was paid after the rate of Two Shillings per diem each Man, by his Lordship's Order, and with his own Money. From the Town at Moffett, which I mentioned, your Lordships had an account of many Marches and Countermarches; his Lordship and the Rebels under him ever where increasing in their Numbers; every where declaring and proclaiming the Pretender to his Majesty's Crown, as King of these Realms. And, my Lords, I may venture to say it appears through the whole course of the Evidence, that no one was more zealous and active than the Prisoner. My Lords --

L. Guilford. I am very lorry to interrupt that Gentleman, but I think it proper, before the House of Commons sum up their Evidence, to move your Lordships to adjourn to the House of Lords.

Then the House was adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament; and after about half an Hour returned, and the House was resum'd.

And Proclamation for Silence being made as usual,

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, I am order'd by their Lordships to acquaint you, that they are yet ready to hear any thing that you have to say in your Defence by way of Observation upon what hath been prov'd against you, or alledged against you, or otherwise; they are likewise ready to hear any Witnesses you are pleas'd to call or produce; but then I am to acquaint your Lordship, that if you neglect this Opportunity now given you, then it is their Lordships Pleasure that I should signify to the Managers of the House of Commons, that they should go on to their Reply; and if such Reply be made, your Lordship hath no further Opportunity to alledge any thing, or to prove any thing. This Notice is ordered by their Lordships to be given you. I am likewise to acquaint you, that it is their Lordships Opinion, as I before told you, that if you have any Question of Law to be spoken by your Council, their Lordships cannot admit any other Form, but that you should propound it to their Lordships yourself.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I believe my Council, my Lords, have something to say in Answer to what the Managers have said. My Lords, the Gentleman who was present, knows they would not let me know what they had to say.

Clerk. He says I was by when his Council said so.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, if your Lordship hath any Notes or Papers you may help your Memory by them in your Defence.——Read or look upon them.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I shall read it as I can, and you will excuse it if I don't do it right as I should do.

Lord Wintoun reads, and the Clerk repeats.

The Council have a Point of Law arising from what hath been pass'd in the House, to shew that he is such a Person as is not capable of committing the Treason laid in the Impeachment. I plead Not Guilty, and this alledges the same. I say I am Not Guilty, and the Paper says it will demonstrate I am not.

The Paper read again and repeated as before. The Council have a Point of Law arising from what hath passed in the House, to shew that he is such a Person that is not capable of committing the Treason laid in the Impeachment.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I don't understand Law, and how should I introduce a Point of Law?

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, if your Lordship doth not proceed to make a Defence, and to call your Witnesses, I have already acquainted you, and I believe I shall be excused for doing it a second Time, that I shall signify to the Managers of the House of Commons to reply, after which your Lordship can't have them examined.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I heard your Lordship what you said, but I don't understand what is meant by it.

L. H. Steward. They may proceed to say what they think proper touching that Sort of Defence your Lordship is making, to answer what they have already said and proved against your Lordship; after they have said and done this, the Lords won't allow you to speak afterwards.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. The Council desire to be heard, since they have written a Paper, to be heard on that Paper.

L. H. Steward. The Paper is allowed to help your own Memory, but you must not give in any Paper as written by your Council, nor mention it as such.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I desire my Council may be heard on the Point of Law contained in what I call the Paper. I desire my Council may be heard to the Point of Law, which I read out of the Paper. I desire my Council may be heard to the Point of Law, which they urge they have to say.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, you have by the help of a Paper, propounded that which you call a Point of Law. Their Lordships have heard what you have propounded. I don't find any Motion is made to adjourn, to consider whether such a Point is fit for your Council to be heard to, that is, whether it is a Point of Law. If there be any Doubt, you will presently see it by the Effect, by such a Motion as I have mentioned.

After some Pause,

L. H. Steward. If your Lordship doth not proceed, I must intimate to the Managers of the House of Commons that they may reply.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. My Lords, if your Lordships will allow my Council to be heard on the Point of Law I have given in.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I think I may now presume to tell you, that I humbly apprehend it is no Point of Law which you propose.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I am not a Judge of a Point of Law, for I don't understand Law, nor never did.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, the same Matter must not be drawn over and over again. If your Lordship doth not proceed to something proper for your Defence, I must signify immediately to the Managers that they may reply.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. If your Lordships please to hear the Council, they will tell you what it means. The Council dare not speak till they be desired.

L. H. Steward. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, you may reply.

Mr. Cowper. My Lords, I shall avoid, as near as I am able, repeating any Thing I have already said before your Lordships last Adjournment. I was observing that the Behaviour of the Prisoner, my Lord Wintoun, throughout all his Conduct, during the whole Progress of the Rebellion, appeared in a quite different Light, to that in which he would now willingly appear: Your Lordships find him, according to the Evidence, at every false Alarm very inquisitive to know the Occasion; having assumed the Command of a Squadron, his Lordship was instantly at his Post, ready to receive and encounter his Majesty's Forces, and the Reverend Mr. Patten has done Justice to his Lordships Vigilance and Courage upon this Occasion; but it seems the Alarms were both false: Hence we may observe, that Alarms may be false, and Dangers may be imaginary; which Mr. Patten, and Men of his Principles would do well to reflect on at leisure. My Lords after great Numbers of Marches and Counter-marches, during which his Majesty's Subjects were plundered, the Public Money seized, and Taxes exacted from the People by Force and Violence. Your Lordships have heard that the Town of Preston was seiz'd by this Lord, and the Traitors, his Accomplices. At this Place ensued a terrible Slaughter of his Majesty's faithful Soldiers, Men who deserved a better Fate than to die by the Hands of such perfidious Rebels. But when the usual Bravery of the King's Troops prevailed, and there was nothing left but the undeserved Hope of Mercy, you find the Prisoner amongst the rest surrendering his Arms and his Person to the Discretion of his Majesty's Generals. The Commons cannot, my Lords, but take a particular Satisfaction in one Incident, occasion'd by this Lord's putting himself upon his Trial, which is, that it has administer'd to them a Time and an Opportunity, in the most public Manner before this August Assembly, to vindicate his Majesty's Generals from a malicious Calumny suggested even by this Lord, the Prisoner, in his Answer to the Impeachment, and not only by him, but by the rest of his Accomplices already attained. It seems not to be accidental, that all the Lords mentioned in the Impeachment should every one of them (false as it appears to be) alledge that they surrender'd, some say upon Promises, but all agree upon Hopes given of Mercy, considering how fully it now appears, that there is not the least Colour or Shadow of Truth to support this Suggestion; it is no uncharitable Reflection to say, that their Lordships, I doubt, to supply the Mischiefs their Arms could not accomplish, were willing to assist their Party, by furnishing them with an Untruth to propagate. With what Zeal and Industry has it been accordingly propagated! I may take the Liberty, I presume, to say, with the Consent of this whole Assembly, that it appears on the Evidence to be utterly false; nay further, that the very Reverse is true, the Rebels would willingly have obtained a Promise, or even a Hope of being recommended, but the Generals rightly told them, Rebels deserved no Mercy, nor would they treat with Rebels of surrendering otherwise than at Discretion. I cannot conclude without touching shortly upon a Question which I observed his Lordship to ask, during the Course of the Evidence; I think it was propos'd to Colonel Cotton, Whether any of our Men, as his Lordship was pleas'd to express it, were slain during the Time of the Cessation of Arms at Preston? which, in fact, was true; and if it had been answer'd in the Affirmative without Explanation, I believe his Lordship would have been gratified, by furnishing his Friends with another Story to propagate, which, well improved, might have lasted a good while; but when the Witness (who, I presume, discerned the Tendency and Malignancy of the Question) gave his Answer, the Case appears this; The Rebels stipulate and agree (Hostages being deliver'd) that no Works shall be erected in the Town during the Suspension; that no Person then in the Town shall go out of it during the same time; in Breach of which Stipulation and Agreement about six of the Rebels attempt, Sword in Hand, to charge through the King's Troops, in which Attempt they fell, and if the King's Troops had done less they had not done their Duty. My Lords, I thought it not improper to make some few Observations upon the Evidence; not that his Lordship's Defence has made it requisite, but to answer, according to my Power, the End of that Trust which the Commons have been pleas'd to repose in me.

Sir William Thomson. My Lords, I should think myself unworthy the Honour of being allowed any Share of your Lordships Time; but as I was entrusted by the Commons to assist the learned Gentleman who spoke last, in a Reply to such Defence as should be made by the Noble Lord at the Bar, although no Evidence has been produced by him, yet I must request your Lordships Patience to make a few Remarks upon the Nature of this Cause, as it stands before your Lordships.

The Answer of the Noble Lord not being supported by Evidence, ought to go for nothing; but since several Matters are alledged in it to mitigate, if not to justify his Proceedings, which are falsified by our Evidence, I beg leave to take some notice of it.

I must agree with the Noble Lord, that "It will be very pleasing to that honourable Assembly who are his Accusers to have an innocent Man acquitted, as well as a guilty one condemned." Nor can I differ with him where he asserts, "That to be taken with Persons in Arms against the Government, is a reasonable Presumption of his Guilt, and a very just Foundation to accuse him with the rest so taken; but that the Circumstances of his Case appear so different from the others, as to require your Lordships distinguishing him in Judgment." I cannot say, that any thing has been offer'd to your Lordships which makes room for such a Distinction.

"This Noble Lord is pleas'd to give an Account of what happened to him about eight Years ago, when he endeavour'd to avoid the Suspicion of the Government; he mentions the ill Usage of the Militia and the King's Troops, and several Transactions, viz. rifling his House, and committing Disorders there, without telling when they happened, or from whom; he is pleas'd to say that he was unfortunately driven into the Company of some of the Persons mentioned in the Impeachment; that he joined them without any Intention to assist their Designs; that he never meant to leave his own Country; that he was ignorant of the Purposes of his Companions; that he was constrained to keep them Company, but never join'd in any Act of Hostility, or countenanced or abetted them therein.

My Lords, the Evidence against this Noble Lord sufficiently explains how far he abetted the Undertakings of his Companions.

It was prov'd to your Lordships, that when he first came to join the Rebels at Moffett, he brought fourteen of his Domestic's with him, most of them well armed and accoutred; that he came with them to a Place of Rendezvous, where were assembled the Lord Kenmure, and about one hundred and fifty Horse; that from the Time he joined them till he was taken, he march'd along with them in a Hostile Manner through all the Towns at the Head of his Troop that he had formed, and which he commanded upon all Occasions; that he had also a Squadron under his Command and Direction, to whom he gave Orders, and was very ready to have dispos'd them to Action, particularly on two Alarms of the King's Troops; that he assisted several Times at the proclaiming the Pretender by the Rebels in the Towns where they passed thro' with his Sword in Hand; that he was with them at those Towns where they seized the public Money, the Cannon, and other warlike Instruments; and when he came to Preston, that in the Preparations to resist the King's Troops he was as active as any of the rest; and particularly in the Church-yard, where the Rebels were drawn together in order to that Resistance, he had his Sword and Pistols with him, and was assisting in making the Dispositions for Engagement.

And for the Constraint that is pretended, 'tis plain, that as he came in to the Rebels in the manner I have mentioned without any Force or Compulsion whatever, so he continued all along with them, and gave them the best Assistance he could; and was far from shewing any Backwardness or Uneasiness at their Proceedings through the whole Progress of this Affair. He drank the Pretender's Health, and the other usual Healths among the Rebels, viz. Success to their Cause; and if he had not wish'd it, he might have left them whenever he would, if he had an Inclination so to do; he did not want an Opportunity, particularly at Langholm, when about five hundred Highlanders went back to Scotland; before they went they suffered him to come to them (though they would not any other) that he discoursed them, and came back from them, and declared it was not his Fault that they would not go along with him into England. My Lords, whether the whole Tenor of this Proceeding does not manifest the Intentions of this Noble Lord, and whether the Evidence of these Facts does not falsify every Allegation in his Answer, by which he would justify himself, your Lordships will easily determine.

The Noble Lord says further in his Answer, "That if he hath committed any Act which by the Rigour of the Law may be construed High-Treason, he hopes the Innocence of his Heart, and his Ignorance of the Law, will, by your Lordships Intercession, render him an Object of his Majesty's Mercy; which, he says, at the Time of his Surrender, he was encouraged to depend upon by his Majesty's Officers."

As to any Assurances or Encouragement to expect Mercy upon the Surrender, the direct contrary is fully made out, I dare say, to your Lordships entire Satisfaction. And for your Lordships Intercession, that is not the Consideration now before you: The Question is only, whether the Witnesses have proved him guilty of the High-Treason of which he is accused?

I find the noble Lord cannot condescend to own the Facts he is charged with to amount to this Crime: He is pleased to say, "That he is descended from a noble Family, in whose Blood the Streams of Loyalty were always pure, never corrupted or polluted with Treason or Sedition; that he never degenerated from his loyal Ancestors, so as to form or carry on any Design to subvert or alter the Constitution of this Kingdom, but that he was always ready to sacrifice his Fortune, and even his Life for its Preservation."

My Lords, I could wish, for the Sake of this unhappy Lord, the Object of your present Consideration, that it were not too evident what Constitution he meant to preserve, and for which he has ventured his Life and Fortune.

All Mankind, who will not shut their Eyes, must see that the Purpose of this Noble Lord and his Accomplices was to dethrone his most sacred Majesty, our Protestant King, whom God and the Laws have set over us, and in his Stead to set up a Popish Pretender to his Crown, bred up in Superstition, and under the Maxims of Tyranny and Arbitrary Power: The Success of this Design must necessarily have produced a most dreadful Scene of Blood and Confusion; the Life of our most gracious Sovereign, the Lives of all his Royal Family, your Lordships, and those other brave and honest Britons who would have stood in the Defence of the Religion, the Laws and Liberties of their Country, must have been sacrificed to the Rage and Fury of Popish Bigotry, and to the insatiable Cruelty of Jesuits and Priests, who, as we are Protestants, are our most implacable Enemies.

Instead of the Happiness we now enjoy under our most excellent Form of Government, where every thing that is dear and valuable to human Nature is protected by the Laws from the least Violence or Invasion whatever, what could this Nation expect from Popery and Arbitrary Power, but endless Miseries and Calamities, and the most abject Slavery?

My Lords, it is a melancholly Reflection, that there should be any, who pretend to the Name of Britons, who would engage in so groundless, so unprovok'd, and, most properly called, so unnatural a Rebellion; or that others should be so deluded or corrupted, as by their false and malicious Insinuations, and by their vile Calumnies on the best of Princes, or by their avowed Indifference towards him, to encourage that traitorous Enterprize.

All such Enemies to the Welfare and Prosperity of their Country, ought to reflect, with the utmost Shame and Confusion on the dismal Prospect they were preparing for us by the natural Tendency of their Proceedings: And I cannot but think, that it must add to the Affliction of this unfortunate Lord who stands before this August Judicature, while he reflects on the Assurances given him of generous Compassion as far as is consistent with the Rules of Justice, while he considers of that Humanity and tender Regard expressed towards him by that great and noble Mind, who so justly represented all your Lordships Sentiments, while he observes that Care and Concern shewn to him, that Assistance granted him towards making his Defence, and that his Judges are so many noble Peers, who can never be influenced to condemn the Innocent, and who will be governed only by full Proof and clear Conviction: Sure he must now reproach himself, when he thinks that he was about to subvert those very Laws by which even his Life, who has so transgressed, is thus protected.

My Lords, I am here led to take notice also, that his most gracious Majesty (against whom this unfortunate Lord, with his Associates, have so signally offended) hath been pleased to express his mild and gentle Disposition, even to them his most inveterate Enemies. It was an Uneasiness to him that he could not distinguish the first Years of his Reign by the endearing Marks of Peace and Clemency; it afflicted him that the Calamities of his faithful Subjects should require indispensable Returns of Severity.

I may presume your Lordships natural Compassion would incline you to the same merciful Dispositions; but the Commons are persuaded that your your Lordships will have some Regard to the Lives of those many brave and gallant Men, who by the base Methods of the Rebels were murder'd, and expir'd in their Country's Cause; that their Blood demands the Justice of that Country in whose Defence it was spilt; and the Commons are assured that your Lordships must think that the Public Safety also requires your exemplary Justice, more especially on the principal Offenders; and that 'tis the most effectual Method to prevent any future Insurrections or Disturbance of the Public Repose and Tranquillity of the Kingdom, and to render firm and lasting our present happy Establishment.

Sir J. Fekyll. My Lords, the Gentlemen of the House of Commons have nothing more to offer to your Lordships, but desire your Lordships Opinion on this Evidence.

Then the House of Lords was adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament; and being returned, the House resumed, and Proclamation made for Silence as usual.

Then the Lord High-Steward being seated on the Chair, placed as before-mentioned, stood up uncovered, and beginning with the youngest Peer, said, Thomas Lord Parker, what says your Lordship, is George Earl of Wintoun Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands impeached, or not Guilty?

Then Thomas Lord Parker standing up in his Place, and laying his Right Hand on his Breast, said, Guilty upon my Honour.

In like manner, the several Lords after-mentioned, being all that were present, answered as followeth.

Richard Lord Cobham, Guilty upon my Honour.

Henry Lord Carleton, Guilty upon my Honour.

William Duke of Devonshire, Lord Steward of his Majesty's Household, Guilty upon my Honour.

Charles Earl of Sunderland, Lord Privy-Seal, Guilty upon my Honour.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, I am of Opinion that George Earl of Wintoun is Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands Impeached, upon my Honour.

Proclamation for Silence, and Proclamation to bring forth the Prisoner, as usual.

L. H. Steward. George Earl of Wintoun, the Lords have considered of the Charge, and the Evidence given against you; and likewise of what you have said in your Defence, and of the whole Matter as it hath been before them in this Trial, and are of Opinion that your Lordship is Guilty, and have found your Lordship guilty of the High-Treason whereof you stand impeached.

Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Steward. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Then all the Lords returned in the Order before-mentioned to the Chamber of Parliament.

Monday, March 19. The Third Day.

Proclamation for Silence, and Proclamation for the Prisoner to be brought to the Bar, as usual.

L. H. Steward. George Earl of Wintoun, when you was last at this Bar, I let your Lordship know that your Peers had found you guilty of the High-Treason whereof you stand impeached, that is in the Terms of Law, convicted you of High-Treason. I am now to ask your Lordship if you have any thing to offer why Judgment of Death should not pass upon you according to the Law.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. My Lord Wintoun faith his Council have a Point of Law to offer to your Lordships, to shew that he is such a Person against whom, by Law, Judgment ought not to be given.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, will your Lordship state the Point upon which your Lordship is advised, that you are not such a Person against whom Judgment ought to be given?

Clerk from L. Wintoun. I don't know what your Lordship means.

Sir C. Phipps. If your Lordships please, we have a Point of Law humbly to offer to your Lordships, if—

Att. Gen. My Lords, I hear a Gentleman of the long Robe offering to speak. I do humbly insist on it that they are not to speak, unless there be a Point of Law stated by the Prisoner, and which your Lordships shall think to be a Point of Law, we think it irregular.

Mr. Cowper. We apprehend the Objection to that Gentleman's being heard is so obvious, that we are surprized to find he should presume to speak without your Lordship's Direction so to do; he cannot but know that the Prisoner is to propound the Question in Law; and if your Lordship shall conceive it to be a Point of Law proper to be argued by Council, your Lordships will direct him to speak; but he ought not in any case to propound a Question in Law, nor when a Question is propounded by the Prisoner, to speak to it without your Lordship's express Direction.

Lord High-Steward. Sir Constantine Phipps, you know the Practice to be so, and the Point must be first stated by the Prisoner before you can speak to it.

Sir C. Phipps. My Lords, if I had been heard but ten Words more—

Sir W. Thomson. My Lords, we humbly insist upon it that that Gentleman be not heard one Word more—

Lord Ilay moved to adjourn.

L. H. Steward. Is it your Lordship's pleasure to adjourn?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Steward. This House is adjourned to the Chamber of Parliament.

The Lords went in their Order to the Chamber of Parliament.

And after about half an Hour being returned,

The House was resumed, and Proclamation made for Silence, as usual.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, the Lords have consider'd of the Matter which you have moved in Arrest of Judgment, which was to this effect, effect, that you are not such a Person as against whom Judgment of Death for High-Treason ought to be pronounced. I am directed to acquaint you that their Lordships are of Opinion it is Matter of Fact, and not of Law; and that the Lords think you are such a Person as against whom Judgment ought to be given in this Case. I am likewise ordered by the Lords to reprimand you Sir Constantine Phipps, for having, in a Proceeding of this Nature, presumed to be so forward as to speak for the Prisoner at the Bar before a Point of Law was first stated, and you had leave to speak to it; and your Fault is certainly the greater, for having presumed to do this to a Matter which you cannot but know is Matter of Fact, and that the Law is not doubtful one way or other, the Fact being supposed. My Lord Wintoun, I am allowed again to ask your Lordship, if you have any thing further to alledge or move why Judgment of Death should not pass upon you according to the Law.

Clerk from L. Wintoun. My Council are ready to offer, in Arrest of Judgment, that the Impeachment is insufficient, for the Time of committing the Treason is not therein laid with sufficient Certainty.

L. H. Steward. I think the Matter moved by my Lord is, that his Council should be admitted to shew that the Impeachment is insufficient, in respect that the Time therein is not laid with sufficient Certainty. This I think is the Matter mov'd. Will your Lordships be pleas'd that the Council have Leave to speak?

L. H. Steward. Is it your Lordships pleasure that the Council for the Prisoner may be allowed to speak to this Point?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Steward. I ask your Lordships leave to go nearer to the Table.

Which being done,

Proclamation for Silence was made as usual.

L. H. Steward. Gentlemen that are of Council for the Prisoner at the Bar, you have liberty to speak to the Point propos'd.

Sir Constantine Phipps. MAY it please your Lordships, we that have the Honour to be assigned by your Lordships as Council in this Case, do humbly apprehend the Impeachment against the noble Lord at the Bar to be insufficient; it is so uncertain, that we (with the greatest Submission) take it no Judgment can be given upon it. My Lords we beg leave to take Notice to your Lordships, that in Indictments in the Courts below, even for Trespasses, the Law requires the certain Day when the Offence is supposed to be committed to be alledged, and if a particular Day be not laid, the Indictment is insufficient. And if such Certainty is requisite in Offences of the most minute Nature, it is much more so in capital Crimes, and more still in Offences of the highest Nature, such as Treason, with which this noble Lord is charged.

My Lords, there be two Reasons why, in Indictments for High-Treason, a certain Day should be assigned when the Treason was committed.

One is for the Advantage of the Prisoner, that being apprised not only for the Facts with which he is charged, but also of the Time when those Facts are supposed to be committed, he may be the better able to make his Defence: 'Tis possible he may have Witnesses to prove he was at another Place, and in other Company, at the Time when he is accused to have committed the Treason, or may by other Circumstances make his Innocence appear.

The second Reason is for the Benefit of the Crown, that it may be known to what Time the Forfeiture shall relate; for in Treason the Forfeiture relates to the Time laid in the Indictment; and if there be no precise Time alledged in the Indictment, the Forfeiture can relate no farther than to the Judgment.

My Lords, the Forfeitures in Cases of Treason are very great, therefore we conceive, with humble Submission, that the Accusation ought to contain all the Certainty it is capable of, that the Prisoner may not by general Allegations be rendered incapable to defend himself in a Case which may prove so fatal to him.

Our Books, my Lords; furnish us with many Instances where Indictments have been held to be insufficient for less Faults than not specifying the Day when the Offence was committed; but in Cases so plain, I will not trouble your Lordships with citing Authorities; for I believe there is not one Gentleman of the long Robe but will agree an Indictment for any capital Offence to be erroneous, if the Offence be not alledged to be committed upon a certain Day.

My Lords, an Attainder upon an Impeachment subjects the Offender to the same Punishment, the same Forfeitures, as an Attainder upon an Indictment; and therefore I am at a loss to find out a Reason why there should not be the same Certainty in the one as in the other; if equal Certainty be required in both, then we humbly submit to your Lordships Judgment whether this Impeachment be not erroneous and insufficient, in that there is no particular certain Time alledged when the Treason or the Overt-Acts were committed. The Treason alledged is conspiring and imagining the Death of the King, and the Impeachment sets forth, "That the Conspirators, (and names them) as false Traytors to his present most sacred Majesty King George, the only lawful and undoubted Sovereign of these Kingdoms, having withdrawn their Allegiance, and cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which they, as good and faithful Subjects, owed to his said Majesty, did, in or about the Months of September, October, or November 1715, most wickedly, maliciously, falsely, and traiterously imagine and compass the Death of his most sacred Majesty." My Lords, a Prosecution by Impeachment is a Proceeding at the Common Law, for Lex Parliamentaria is a Part of the Common Law; and we humbly submit it to your Lordships Consideration, whether there is not the same Certainty required in one Method of Proceeding at the Common Law as in another.

Your Lordships observe with what Uncertainty, as to the Time, the Treason is alledged. 'Tis said to be in or about the Months of September, October, or November 1715. Who is able to say to which of these Months, much less to what Day of either of these Months, the Forfeiture shall relate? And how is it possible for the noble Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, to make a Defence to a Charge so general, unless he bring for Witnesses all those Persons with whom he has had any Conversation during those three Months at least?

My Lords, the Overt-Acts are alledged with the same Insufficiency and Uncertainty as the Treason it self is; for in charging the first Overt-Act, which is conspiring to levy War and to depose the King, it is said, "That for accomplishing and executing their said traiterous Purposes, they the said James Earl of Derwentwater, &c. did, in or about the said Months, or some of them, and at diverse other Times, and at diverse other Places within this Kingdom, wickedly and traiterously agree, confederate, &c. to raise, excite, and levy, within the Counties of Tewiotdale, Northumberland, Cumberland, and the County-Palatine of Chester, and elsewhere within this Kingdom, a most cruel, bloody, and destructive War against his Majesty, in order to depose and murder his sacred Majesty, and to deprive him of his royal State, Crown and Dignity." My Lords, can any thing be more uncertainly alledged, than to say that the Conspirators did, in or about the said Months, or some of them, and at diverse other Times, and at diverse other Places within this Kingdom, confederate, &c. to levy War within the Counties of Tewiotdale, Northumberland, Cumberland, and County-Palatine of Chester, and elsewhere within this Kingdom?

The next Overt-Act, which is actually levying War, is not laid with greater Certainty; for the Impeachment sets forth, "That the said Earl of Derwentwater, &c. their Accomplices and Confederates, in or about the Months aforesaid, in the Counties aforesaid, or some of them, did gather together great Numbers of his Majesty's Subjects, and with them did assemble in a warlike and traiterous manner, in order to raise Tumults and Rebellion within this Kingdom; and having procured great Quantities of Arms, Ammunition, and warlike Instruments, at the Times and Places aforesaid, or some of them, did form and compose, or did assist in forming and composing an Army of Men, consisting of his Majesty's liege Subjects, in order to wage War against his said Majesty, for, and in behalf, and in favour of the said Pretender to the Crown of these Realms; and at the Time, and Times, and Places aforesaid, and at divers other Times and Places within this Kingdom, the said Conspirators did levy and raise War and Rebellion against his most sacred Majesty, &c.

The next Overt-Act is proclaiming the Pretender, which is more uncertain than any of the other; for the Impeachment sets forth, "That the aforesaid Conspirators, during their March and Invasion aforesaid, in open Defiance of his most sacred Majesty's just and undoubted Title to the Imperial Crown of these Realms, did wickedly and traiterously cause and procure the said Pretender to be proclaimed in the most public and solemn manner as King of these Realms.

Here is no certain Time or Place alledged when or where the Pretender was proclaim'd, but only that it was during their March and Invasion.

The last Overt-Act seems to be laid with greater Certainty than the rest; for 'tis said, "That the Conspirators did, on or about the 9th, 10th, 11th, 12th, or 13th of November aforesaid, traiterously seize and possess themselves of the Town of Preston, in the County Palatine of Lancaster, against his Majesty, and did then,

"and there, in a warlike and hostile Manner, levy War, oppose, engage, and fight against his Majesty's Forces, and did then and there cause and procure a miserable and horrid Slaughter and Murder of many of his Majesty's faithful Subjects." Here indeed are particular Days mention'd, but then the Words or about leave it at large, for no Man can tell how many Days may be included in these Words or about. We humbly apprehend that a Charge of this high Nature ought not to be alledged with such uncertainty, and that the Impeachment is as erroneous as an Indictment drawn in this Manner would be; this being a Proceeding of the same Nature, and according to the Course of the Common Law.

My Lords, I do not pretend any great Skill in Parliamentary Proceedings, but presume to say that in my little Experience in Business in other Courts, I never saw a Charge exhibited against any one that was laid in so uncertain a manner, unless in Libels in the Ecclesiastical or Admiralty Courts, which cannot in the least influence the Case now before your Lordships; this (as I have observed) being a Proceeding according to the Course of the Common Law.

Upon the whole Matter I humbly submit to your Lordships Judgment, whether for the Reasons I have offer'd to your Lordships Consideration, the Impeachment is not erroneous, and whether your Lordships will think fit to proceed to Judgment against the noble Lord the Prisoner at the Bar upon an Impeachment so uncertain and insufficient as I humbly apprehend this to be.

Mr. Williams. MY Lords, I am also assign'd, by your Lordships, of Council for this unfortunate Lord, and humbly insist in arrest of Judgment, that there is a Defect in this Impeachment, in regard no certain Day is laid, when the Treason is charged to have been committed.

In the Impeachment 'tis said, that this noble Lord did, in or about the Months of September, October or November, 1715, together with the others in the Impeachment nam'd, traiterously compass the Death of his most sacred Majesty: That this noble Lord did, in or about the said Months, or some of them, together with the rest, agree and confederate to levy War, against his Majesty: That in or about the said Months, or some of them, this noble Lord with others did levy War, and did march thro' several parts of the Kingdoms, and did proclaim the Pretender to be King: And that on or about the Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, or Thirteenth of the said November, the noble Lord with others did seize and possess themselves of the Town of Preston, and fought against his Majesty's Forces.

This is the Effect of the Impeachment.

And with great Submission I take it, that in Point of Law, the Impeachment is defective in respect of the Uncertainty of the Time when this Treason is said to have been committed.

I humbly apprehend, that the Honourable the House of Commons is the Grand Inquest of the whole Nation; and that their Impeachment is in Nature of an Indictment, found by that Grand Inquest: Differing from an Indictment in this Respect, that an Indictment is found by the Inquest of a County only; but an Impeachment by the Grand Inquest of the whole Kingdom.

And taking it, that Impeachments are properly to be resembled to Indictments.

Then as the omitting of the laying of a certain Day when the Treason was committed wou'd be a material Fault in the Case of an Indictment; with great Submission, it is as material a Defect in the Case of an Impeachment.

It seems plain, that in the Case of an Indictment, a certain Day ought to be laid when the Treason was committed.

It will, I believe, hardly be denied, but that in Case of an Indictment for Treason, it wou'd be ill, if 'twere laid, that the Party indicted committed the Treason on or about the first of September, 1715.

It wou'd be apparently worse, if 'twere laid in an Indictment, that the Party committed the Treason in or about the Month of September, 1715.

It wou'd be still worse (because more uncertain) if it were laid in an Indictment, that the Party committed the Treason in or about the Months of September, October or November, 1715.

And, with great Submission, this, as I humbly take it, is the very Case before your Lordships; I mean, taking it, that Impeachments and Indictments, as to the material Part of them, are to be measured by the same Rules of Law, as I humbly conceive they ought to be.

That the certain Day, for the committing the Treason, ought to be laid in Case of Indictments for Treason, seems to be proved, not only from the constant Practice of laying a Day certain in all Indictments of Treason; but from the Reason of the Law, which shews it to be a Substantial and Material Part of the Indictment.

That the constant Practice, in Case of Indictments for Treason, is to lay the Day on which the Treason is supposed to be done, will, as I presume, be admitted.

And such constant Practice is, of itself, a strong Argument that the Law requires it.

But I humbly take it, that the Reason of the Thing argues still much stronger for me, and shews it to be an essential Part of the Indictment.

The Reason of mentioning a Day certain in the Indictment when the Treason is supposed to have been committed, is in some Respects even for the Benefit of the Crown itself, and in some Respects for the Advantage of the Party indicted.

It concerns the Crown, in respect of the Forfeitures accruing to the King, of the Lands of the Party indicted; for where an Attainder ensues upon an Indictment for Treason, the Lands of the Party indicted are forfeited to the Crown, not only from the Judgment, but from the Day mentioned in the Indictment when the Treason is charged to have been committed.

This is expressly said, in the Lord Coke's 1 Inst. 13. a. b. 390. b. and the Difference there taken is, between a Writ of Appeal and an Indictment. 'Tis there said, That if a Man be indicted for a capital Offence and out-law'd upon it, the Land of the Party is forfeited from the Day laid in the Indictment, for the committing of the Treason, or other capital Crimes; but in the Case of an Out-lawry upon a Writ of Appeal, because no Day is mentioned in the Writ, the Forfeiture is only from the Judgment.

And though in the Case of a Writ of Appeal, which is called in Latin (Breve) from its Brevity, no Day is mention'd, yet in the Declaration upon the Appeal (which resembles an Indictment) 'tis necessary not only to mention the Day, but even the Hour when the Murder or Felony was committed.

In the Case of Wilson against Law, which was adjudg'd in the Court of King's-Bench, in the sixth Year of King William and Queen Mary, in an Appeal of Murder, an Exception was taken to the Appeal that it was too uncertain, in regard the Murder was laid to be done, circa horam primam post meridiem, and this Incertainty even of the Hour was much insisted upon: But this, 'tis true, was at length over-rul'd, and held that circa horam primam, or inter horam primam & secundam, was well enough.

However no one, as I humbly apprehend, ever doubted, but that laying of a certain Day when the Fact was committed, is necessary both in the Case of an Indictment, and in a Declaration upon an Appeal; and that as to the Land of the Party indicted, the Forfeiture relates to the Day mentioned in the Indictment.

But, if the Question were ask'd in the present Case, from what Day the real Estate of this unhappy Lord should be forfeited, it wou'd, as I humbly apprehend, be difficult to answer it.

And that Difficulty arises from the Incertainty of the Impeachment, as to the Time when the Fact was committed.

If then the laying in an Indictment the certain Day when the Treason was committed concerns the Benefit of the Crown, as it surely does;

If it entitles the King to the Forfeiture of the Lands from the Day laid in the Indictment, as from the Authorities I have mentioned it appears to do;

If this Matter concerns that great Prerogative and Flower of the Crown, and its Right to Forfeitures;

Then surely this Omission can by no means be called a slight Omission, or a Fault in Form only.

It will also have its Weight with your Lordships, That the mentioning a Day certain in the Indictment, when the Crime is laid to have been done, is likewise for the Benefit of the Party indicted. 'Tis for his Advantage to know the Time when he is charg'd to have committed the Offence, and by that he will be the better enabled to defend himself against the Accusation.

It is a known Rule in Law, that in all Cases of Indictments, (though for Misdemeanors only) they ought to be strictly certain.

This Rule holds a fortiori in Cases of Indictments for capital Offences;

And still, a fortiori, in Cases of Indictments for High-Treason, where for Example sake the Judgment, though just, is as terrible as can well be thought of.

My Lords, I am sensible I ought to have too great a Value for your Lordship's Time, to cite any of those numerous Cases in the Law-Books, which justify that known Rule in the Law that requires Certainty in Cases of Indictments.

I shall only beg leave to mention to your Lordships one Case, which is an Authority of your Lordships, upon a Writ of Error before your Lordships, which shews how strict the Law is in the penning of Indictments for Treason; and that it requires that even what seems to be Matter of Form only in such Indictments must be complied with. It is the Case of the King against Tucker, which was in the sixth Year of King William and Queen Mary, and is reported in Serjeant Levinz, 3. Rep. 396. where Tucker was indicted for Treason, and in the Conclusion of the Indictment it was not said to be contra allegiantie sue debitum; and upon this Indictment Tucker was attainted, and his Lands forfeited to the Crown, and afterwards purchas'd under the Attainder; but afterwards this Attainder was revers'd in a Writ of Error in the King's-Bench upon very great Debate, for want of those Words in the Indictment, contra allegiantie sue debitum, and upon a Writ of Error before your Lordships the Judgment of Reversal was affirmed, by which means a Purchaser under the Attainder lost the Estate.

With Submission, this Case is much stronger than the principal Case now before your Lordships.

In that Case it might with seeming Reason be objected, that the Word (Proditiorè) which is always in the Body of every Indictment, shews and necessarily implies, that the Treason committed was against the Party's Allegiance, for else how cou'd it be Proditiorè?

Also in that Case the Treason is set forth at large in the Indictment, together with the Over-Act, which demonstrates that the doing this must be against the Party's Allegiance.

But all this would not maintain the Indictment, in regard Indictments for Treason were always laid to be against the Party's Allegiance.

And if the constant Forms of Indictments be an Argument,

'Tis as strong a one for us in the present Case; for I believe there never was an Indictment without mentioning the Day when the Fact was committed.

Neither, with Submission, is this Matter of Form only, but 'tis the substantial Part of the Indictment, in regard in this Point the King is interested in respect of the Forfeiture, and the Party in respect of his Defence.

It will, I humbly presume, hardly be expected, from us, that we should cite Precedents of Impeachments, especially if 'twere known what few Hours Notice we had of attending your Lordships in arrest of Judgment.

However, I will beg leave to mention one Case of an Impeachment fresh in your Lordships Memory, Dr. Sacheverell's Case.

Dr. Sacheverell was impeach'd before your Lordships by the Honourable House of Commons, for seditious Expressions in two Sermons, the one preach'd at Derby Assizes, and the other at St. Paul's, London; and in that Impeachment the precise Days are laid when the Doctor preach'd each of these two Sermons.

And I humbly take it, that by a like Reason a certain Day ought to be laid in the Impeachment, when this Treason was committed; and that the Authority of Dr. Sacheverell's Case seems so much stronger than the present Case in question, as the Crime of Treason is higher than that of a Misdemeanour.

My Lords, I have nothing else to say on behalf of this unhappy Lord; unhappy, as being in that doubtful State of Memory, not insanæ enough to be within the Protection of the Law, nor at the same time sane enough to do himself in any respect the least Service whatever.

Here the Managers gave some Interruption to the Council.

Lord High-Steward. Mr. Williams, I apprehend the Reason why the Managers of the House of Commons appear uneasy with you, is, that you are going into a Matter of Fact, and which you have not leave to speak to; you must therefore confine yourself to the Point of Law that was stated.

Mr. Williams. My Lords, I shall take up no more of your Lordship's Time; but humbly hope that the Cases of Indictments are parallel with those of Impeachments;

That, as in an Indictment for Treason, the want of laying a Day when the Treason is charg'd to have been committed, is a manifest Error;

That as the constant Forms of Indictments are so;

That as the Reason of the Law requires they should be so;

So for want of this Certainty in this Impeachment, we with great Submission insist that the Impeachment is defective:

And therefore pray that the Judgment against this unfortunate Lord may be arrested.

Mr. Walpole. MY Lords, the Commons have attended to the Objection made by the Council on the Part and Behalf of the Noble Lord at the Bar, and they humbly conceive those learned Gentlemen seem to forget in what Court they are. They have taken up so much of your Lordships time in quoting of Authorities and using Arguments to shew your Lordships what would quash an Indictment in the Courts below, that they seem to forget they are now in a Court of Parliament, and on an Impeachment of the Commons of Great-Britain. For should the Commons admit all that they have offered, it will not follow that the Impeachment of the Commons is insufficient; and I must observe to your Lordships, that neither of the learned Gentlemen have offered to produce one Instance relating to an Impeachment, I mean, to shew that ever the Sufficiency of an Impeachment was called in question from the Generality of the Charge, or that any Instance of that Nature was offered at before. The Commons don't conceive, that if this Exception would quash an Indictment, it would therefore make this Impeachment insufficient; nor do they think it necessary, in Justice to the Noble Lord at the Bar, that a certain Day should be mentioned in the Impeachment. They don't think, from the Nature of this Crime, and the Evidence that has been given, that there can be any Hardship for want of fixing a certain Day on which the Treason was committed. What he is charged with, is being concerned in a most notorious Rebellion. The Time mentioned in the Impeachment is the Months of September, October, and November, and particularly the Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, and Thirteenth Days of November. He is charged with being concerned from the Time that he left his own House, to the Time he was taken at Preston; and it hath been proved, I believe, in a more ample Manner than ever any Crime of the like Nature hath been. And how can this Noble Lord suffer because no particular Day is mentioned, after he continu'd in Rebellion for so many Days and Months, and marched through so many Counties? It is impossible to conceive he can suffer from any Uncertainty in the Charge, in not having a particular Day fixed.

But,

But, my Lords, the Commons think themselves sufficiently justified, and their Impeachment supported by a Precedent I have in my Hand, the Trial of my Lord Stafford, who was tried for High-Treason, and was executed for the same. And I observe that he had Council, and it appears he offer'd some Things in Arrest of Judgment; and altho' it will appear that the Time was more uncertain in that Impeachment, yet that was never attempted to be offer'd in Arrest of Judgment. In his Case the Words of the Articles of Impeachment are, that for divers Years last past a damnable Contrivance and Conspiracy had been form'd and carried on, that is just as these Articles are; and when they come to the particular Charge, all that is said is, That within the Time aforesaid, &c. that is, some Time within diverse Years last past; but this Impeachment is so far from being uncertain, that the Commons have named three Months, in which the Treason charged in the Impeachment was committed; and in the Precedent it is only said, Within some of the Years last past; so that here the Commons are sufficiently justified in the Articles exhibited by them, by the Precedent I have mentioned; and there Judgment passed, and nothing of this Nature was offered in Arrest of Judgment. I hope this will satisfy your Lordships, that this Impeachment is sufficient, notwithstanding this Objection; and I hope it will never be allowed here as a Reason, that what quashes an Indictment in the Courts below, will make insufficient an Impeachment brought by the Commons of Great-Britain.

Mr. Attorney-General. MY Lords, the Council for the Prisoner have made two Objections, as I apprehend, in Point of Law, which I would give a short Answer to, without taking notice of the other Matter which was spoke to by one of the Gentlemen, contrary to the Orders of the House.

The First Objection is, That there is no certain Day charged in the Impeachment, when the Treason was committed.

The Second is, that as to several of the Overt-Acts there is no Time mentioned at all.

I would follow the Steps of the learned Gentleman who spoke before me, and I think has given a good Answer to these Objections: I would take notice, that we are upon an Impeachment, and not upon an Indictment. The Courts below have set Forms to themselves, which have prevailed for a long Course of Time, and thereby are become the Forms by which those Courts are to govern themselves; but it never was thought, that the Forms of those Courts had any Influence on the Proceedings of Parliament. In Richard the Second's Time it is said in the Records of Parliament, That Proceedings in Parliament are not to be govern'd by the Form, of Westminster-Hall.

I beg leave to take notice, in Answer to this Objection, that tho' it is the usual Form in the Courts below to alledge a certain Day on which the Crime is charged to be committed, yet at the same time they add (and at divers other Days and Times) and that Day which is laid, is only for Form sake; but that Day is not material, they are not bound to prove the Crime committed on that Day, but they may prove the Defendant Guilty at any Time, either before or after the Duty laid in the Indictment. There has been produced by the Honourable Gentleman who spoke before, a Precedent in Parliament much stronger than this Case, it is the Case of the Lord Stafford; there is not so much Certainty as there is in this Impeachment. Here it is said, That on or about the Months of September, October, or November, or on or about one of them, the Crimes charged in the Impeachment were committed; but all that is said in my Lord Stafford's Case is, That there had been for many Years then last past a damnable Conspiracy carried on; and when they came to charge the noble Lord with particular Facts, there is no Time mentioned at all.

One of the Gentlemen cited another Case in Parliament, which was Dr. Sacheverell's Case: There was in that Case an Exception taken to the Impeachment for Uncertainty: and it was said and argued from the Forms of the Courts in Westminster-Hall, that where Indictments were for Words spoke or writ, the Words must be laid as they were spoke or wrote; and the Opinion of the Judges was, that it was necessary according to the Forms of the Courts below, but it was resolved to be otherways in the Court of Parliament, and they were not bound but by their own Forms; so that upon this Head we apprehend we are clear of the Forms of Law in the Courts below, and that they are of no Use, since if a certain Day is laid, they are not by Law bound to prove the Crime committed on that Day, but may prove it upon any other Day.

The Second Objection is, That there is no Time laid for some of the Overt-Acts.

I think there is a certain Day charged when one of them was done, the seizing of Preston; and in the inferiour Courts it has been held, that it is not necessary there should be a Day and Place alledged for every Overt-Act.

We think this Objection has no Weight in it, and therefore would not spend more of your Lordships Time in it; we are in the Case of an Impeachment, and in the Court of Parliament. Your Lordships have already given Judgment against Six upon this Impeachment, and it is warranted by the Precedents in Parliament; therefore we insist that the Articles are good in Substance, and according to the Forms of Parliament.

Mr. Cowper. THE Objection, as stated by the Prisoner, and upon which his Council have argued, is this, That the Time of the Treason committed is not laid in the Impeachment with sufficient Certainty. The Council have acquainted your Lordships with the Practice of inferior Courts, and have insisted too much upon the Precedents of Trespasses and other Crimes set forth in Indictments, considering the Question arises upon the Usage and Practice of the High-Court of Parliament; and they cannot but know that the Usages of Parliaments are Part of the Laws of the Land, altho' they differ in many Instances from the Common Law, as practised in the inferior Courts, in Point of Form.

My Lords, if the Commons, in preparing Articles of Impeachment, should govern themselves by Precedents of Indictments, in my humble Opinion they would depart from the ancient, nay, the constant Usage and Practice of Parliament.

It is well known that the Form of an Impeachment has very little Resemblance to that of an Indictment: and I believe the Commons will endeavour to preserve the Difference, by adhering to their own Precedents.

One of the learned Gentlemen has said that he had not time to search Parliamentary Precedents: That Gentleman seldom wants time to make himself serviceable to his Clients; but when he has more leisure, I believe he will not find one Precedent, where, in the case of an Impeachment of High-Treason, there hath been a certain Day or Time laid when the Treason was committed. The Precedent that hath been mentioned of my Lord Stafford is directly otherwise: There your Lordships will find it laid thus, that for many Years last past there has been contrived and carried on by Papists a traitorous and execrable Conspiracy. And afterwards when it comes to charge the Treason and Overt-Acts, it alledges they were done and committed within the time aforesaid. And yet we don't find any Exception was taken for want of Certainty, although not so much as a Year was laid with Certainty, within which the Treason was committed.

In the Case of my Lord Wintoun the Commons have charged, that his Lordship, together with James Earl of Derwentwater, and several others, as false Traitors to his Majesty, did, in or about the Months of September, October, or November, 1715, traitorously imagine and compass the Death of the King: That his Lordship and the rest, to accomplish their said traitorous Purpose, did, in or about the said Months, or some of them, conspire and agree to levy War within this Kingdom, in order to depose and murder his Majesty: That his Lordship did, within the time aforesaid, traitorously levy a War and Rebellion in the Bowels of the Kingdom; and that he together with his Accomplices and Confederates, did, on or about the Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, or Thirteenth of November aforesaid, traitorously seize and possess themselves of the Town of Preston; and did then and there cause and procure a miserable and horrid Slaughter and Murder of many of his Majesty's faithful Subjects. So that, my Lords, here is a Certainty not only of the Year, but of the Months and Days; and the Treasons committed by the Prisoner are, with Submission, not only charged with Certainty as to the Point of Time, but are charged with a great deal more Certainty than was necessary, in a Case where his Lordship's Treason began at Seaton House, and continued from thence till the Surrender at Preston.

Surely there is not the least Weight in the Prisoner's Objection; for even in the Case of an Indictment, though it be necessary to lay a Day, yet it is not necessary to prove the Treason to be done upon that Day: So that even in inferior Courts it is an immaterial Form. One would think, if it be necessary to assign a Day certain, it should be necessary also to prove the Treason to be done upon that Day; but it is not requisite to prove the Treason upon the Day; therefore in inferior Jurisdictions it seems rather a Form than Substance. The Courts below have, it's true, their Forms, many Forms for which no Reason can be given; but I believe in Parliamentary Process, nothing is necessary that is not material.

Sir W. Thomson. MY Lords we humbly apprehend that the Exception taken in Arrest of Judgment has no Foundation in Law or Reason.

As to the Law, we must refer to the Forms of Proceedings in the Court of Parliament, which is the Law of Parliament, and which must be owned to be Part of the Law of the Land. It has been mentioned already to your Lordships, that the Precedents in Impeachments are not so nice and precise in Form as in the inferior Courts; and we presume your Lordships will be governed by the Forms of your own Court, (especially Forms that are not essential to Justice) as the Courts below are by theirs; which Courts differ one from the other in many Respects as to their Forms of Proceedings, and the Practice of each Court is esteemed as the Law of that Court.

As to the Reasons alledged to support the Exception, they will receive a plain Answer.

'Tis said, that 'tis necessary to alledge a certain Day in an Impeachment when the Fact was committed, that the Defendant may be able to make his Defence, that he may produce Witnesses to give an Account where he was at the time he is accused to have been guilty. And one of the learned Council was pleased to say, that this is requisite in Indictments for the smallest Offences, and ought to be much more so in capital Cases, and in Impeachments for so high a Crime as Treason. My Lords, that Gentleman knows very well, that the Day which is mention'd in an Indictment is not material to the Purpose of making a Defence as to that Time only, for that the Defendant must come prepared to give an Account of his Innocence all the Time between the Day alledged and the Indictment found. And in this Case there is no Hardship on the Noble Lord at the Bar. Here is one of the Treasons alledged to be within the Compass of Five Days (viz. the seizing of Preston, levying War there, and engaging the King's Troops.) if he could have given an Account of himself to have been elsewhere at those times, it might have been of Service to him: But that happened very unfortunately for him to be otherwise; and your Lordships have found him guilty of those Facts on or about those Five Days: Which has created a second Reason to be offered to your Lordships, that the Time alledged is not sufficiently certain (viz.) To what Day shall the Forfeiture of the Defendant's Estate relate? If 'tis taken the most favourably for the Defendant, the Conviction shall operate so as to make the Forfeiture only from the last of these Days, and I don't apprehend any other Inconvenience. But to infer that, for that Reason, no Judgment at all shall be given upon this Conviction, where the material, the substantial Part of the Issue is found, seems not to be right Consequence.

My Lords, we conceive for these Reasons, and what has been mention'd before, this Exception has no Weight in it, and hope your Lordships will over rule it.

L. H. Steward. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, I suppose you don't oppose the Council's replying to you; afterwards, if you have any thing to offer you may be heard to it.

Att. Gen. My Lords, we don't object to it, if the Commons have the Liberty of speaking afterwards and closing, which they insist upon as their Right.

L. H. Steward. Gentlemen, you may reply.

Sir C. Phipps. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that we reply?

L. H. Steward. You may reply.

Sir C. Phipps. IF your Lordships please, we do not, with great Submission, apprehend they have answer'd our Objection; but before I take notice of the Answers, I beg leave to set the learned Gentleman that spoke last right in one thing, wherein he did misapprehend me: He was pleas'd to suggest that I said the Day laid in an Indictment was material. I don't remember I said so, for I never thought the Day so material, that there was a Necessity to prove the Treason to be committed upon that very Day; I did say there ought a certain Day to be alledged in Indictments, and that there always is; but how material that Day is, when alledged, is another Consideration; but I conceive the Day laid in an Indictment, ought to be very near the time, if not upon the very Day the Treason is supposed to be committed, for the Reasons I have before offered; and I take constant Practice to be so. I perceive all the Gentlemen who have spoke in Answer to me have been pleas'd to admit, that in Indictments for Treason and other capital Offences, there is a certain Day always alledged. The honourable Gentleman that spoke first, was pleas'd to make a Difference between an Indictment and an Impeachment: That an Impeachment is a Parliamentary Proceeding, and that the Parliament in their Proceedings are not tyed up to such strict Forms as the Courts below. I have already spoken fully to this Point, and therefore shall not trouble your Lordships with any Repetition, but submit to your Lordships Judgment, whether an Impeachment, by which a Noble Peer is to be attainted, ought not to be as certain as an Indictment, by which a Commoner is to be attainted, and whether by the Lex Parliamentaria as much Certainty is not required in one Case as in the other. The same Gentleman was pleas'd to observe, that the Impeachment in my Lord Stafford's Case was more general than this, for there it was charged, that for many Years last past there had been a Conspiracy to alter and subvert the Government, &c. In answer to which I beg leave to take Notice, that the Impeachment of that Lord begins with an Account of the Plot in general, and in that Case there is no doubt but such a general Allegation was sufficient. But whether the particular Part, which my Lord Stafford had in that Plot, be not more certainly alledged; I must beg leave to refer to the Trial, for I cannot take it upon my Memory to say one way or other. But whether it was so or no, I think is not material? for that honourable Person admits, that no Objection was made to that Impeachment for the Uncertainty of the Charge: If such Objection had been made and over-ruled, it would have been a full Answer to us; but since no Notice was taken of it, our Objection is as strong and of the same Force as if that Case had never happened.

A learned Gentleman of great Eminence in the Law was pleas'd to observe, that frequently in Indictments for Treason, the Offence is laid to be committed, diversis aliis diebus & vicibus, which is true; but then in all such Cases there is a particular Day first charged in the Indictment; and I believe that learned Gentleman, or any other of the long Robe, will not say that an Indictment conceived in such general Terms, without alledging a particular Day, would be good. As to that Part of the Impeachment which relates to the taking of Preston, tho' that seems more certain than any other Overt-Act; yet I have shewed that the Words or about, leave at large, and render it uncertain.

My Lords, this is what we humbly offer by way of Reply; and humbly submit to your Lordships Judgment, whether our Objections are not good, notwithstanding what has been said in Answer to them.

Mr. Williams. MY Lords, I must submit it to your Lordships, whether the learned Managers have answer'd the Objection which we have humbly laid before your Lordships in Arrest of Judgment.

The Managers are pleas'd to object, that we are attempting to quash an Impeachment of the Honourable House of Commons for High-Treason, and that this has not been known.

But, my Lords, with great Submission, we are not endeavouring to quash this Impeachment. We are so far from it, that we must admit that the Courts of King's-Bench will not quash Indictments for Treason, nor Indictments for Felony, nor even Indictments for any gross Misdemeanours, but will put the Party to plead to such Indictments; but in the present Case, where the Matter in Issue has been try'd, and the unhappy Lord is convicted; if this Impeachment be defective, as I humbly hope and insist it is, then what other Way, what other Method has this unfortunate Lord at the Bar to take Advantage of this Defect, but by offering it to your Lordships in Arrest of Judgment, which on my Lord's Behalf we now humbly do?

It seems admitted, as I apprehend, that had the present Question been upon an Indictment, instead of an Impeachment, that then the Exception might have prevailed: But the Managers are pleas'd to insist, that the Law and Course of Parliaments justify this Omission in Case of Impeachments; and for this an Honourable Manager has been pleas'd to cite the late Lord Stafford's Case; and that the Impeachment of that Lord was more uncertain, as to the Time laid for the committing the Treason, than the Impeachment now before your Lordships.

My Lords, I must confess I am very unfit to answer an Objection of this Nature, and which concerns the Course of Parliaments: But wou'd beg leave, with the greatest Submission, to observe, that only one Precedent (I beg Pardon if I mistake, I mean that of the late Lord Stafford) has been cited against us: It must be submitted to your Lordships, how far that one single Precedent will of it self be taken as a Proof, that this is the Course and Custom of Parliamentary Impeachments, especially when it appears that the Objection now made, was not made in that Case. It must be submitted to your Lordships, whether repeated and iterated Acts are not requisite to prove this, as well as all other Customs; and that if this were Lex & Consuetudo Parliamenti, whether it wou'd not be an easy Matter to cite many Instances in that Behalf, and whether it is not the more necessary in this Case to cite farther Precedents, in regard the single Case of the Lord Stafford may seem, as to this Point, to have lost some Part of its Force, by the later Precedent of Doctor Sacheverell's Case, when even in Case of a Misdemeanour, a certain Day is laid in the Impeachment when the Misdemeanour is charged to have been committed.

It has been also objected by the learned Managers, that in Indictments of High-Treason, it is usually charg'd, that the Party committed the Treason diversis diebus & vicibus, which is as uncertain as the present Impeachment.

My Lords, It is very true that these Words (diversis diebus & vicibus) are as uncertain as the Words in the present Impeachment; and that these Words are usually put into Indictments: But with Submission, it is as true, that in all Indictments for Treason, over and besides these Words, there is a certain Day laid when the Treason is said to be committed; and I would beg leave to know, whether if in Case of an Indictment, the Treason were laid to be committed diversis diebus & vicibus, without any further Certainty as to the Day, whether this wou'd not be ill for the Uncertainty: And this Case, with Submission, seems to come nearest to the present Case; and as to the Words diversis diebus & vicibus, tho' they are frequently mentioned in an Indictment, yet they are only Surplufage, and the Indictment good, whether with 'em, or without 'em.

It is likewise objected, that if a certain Day for the committing this Treason had been mentioned in this Impeachment, or in an Indictment, yet it had not been material; because if the Treason had been proved to have been committed on any other Day, the Party must have been found guilty; and therefore, if the Day be immaterial, the omitting of it must be also immaterial.

My Lords, I must admit that the Day, as to the Party indicted, is not in this respect so far material, but that if it shou'd be prov'd that the Party committed the Treason on a different Day, than that laid in the Indictment, yet the Party must be found guilty: And that it might put too great a difficulty on such Prosecution, to hold, that if the Treason be not proved to be committed on the precise Day laid in the Indictment, that therefore the Party, who appears still guilty of the Treason, shou'd upon the nicety of the time be found not guilty; but what I humbly insist on is, that 'tis the constant Course to mention a Day certain in the Indictment; and that the Day thus mention'd in the Indictment is, as I believe, generally the very Day on which the Treason is insisted on to be committed; and to know this, is, with Submission, of great use to the Party indicted or impeached, and may very much assist him in his Defence. And I farther humbly insist, that the mentioning of a Day certain in the Impeachment or Indictment for the committing the Treason, is manifestly for the Advantage, and the omitting it, is to the Prejudice, of the Crown; in regard, as between the Party impeached or indicted, and the Crown, the Forfeiture of the Land to the King shall relate to that Day which is laid in the Impeachment or Indictment.

My Lords, from hence, with the greatest Deference to your Lordships, I beg leave to infer;

That the mentioning of a Day certain in the Impeachment, is material:

That by Consequence the Omission of it is also material;

That therefore in respect of this Omission, the Impeachment is defective;

And in regard of this Defect I humbly pray that your Lordships wou'd be pleas'd to arrest the Judgment.

Mr. Attorney General. MY Lords, for preserving the Rights of the Commons of Great-Britain, I shall trouble your Lordships with a Word or two.

I think the learned Gentlemen have left it now where they left it on their first Speech: They now agree that the particular Day in an Indictment is but Form, and that the Fact may be proved any Day before or after, and so the Law is in the inferior Courts.

I only add this, that the Prisoner loses no Benefit nor gets any, by having a Day charged or omitted; for since it is of no use, he must provide for his Defence as if no Day was laid; and since it is immaterial in Indictments, it must be so in Impeachments. We are justified by the Forms and Precedents of Parliament. As to the Answer given to my Lord Stafford's Case, that this Objection was not made there, but that it past sub silentio: If that Impeachment had not been thought good, we know he had the Assistance of learned Council, who were well able to advise him, and who certainly would have taken the Exception. There is no uncertainty in it that can be to the Prejudice of the Prisoner, we insist it is according to the Forms of Parliament, he has pleaded to it, and your Lordships have found him guilty.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Wintoun, your Council have been heard, hath your Lordship any thing more to offer in Arrest of Judgment?

L. Wintoun. If your Lordship will be pleas'd to ask the Council, they will tell you what they have to object.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, you have been told again and again upon this Occasion, that the Point you would have your Council speak to must be first stated and propos'd by your self; you have had a sufficient Opportunity to inform your self.

L. Wintoun. Since your Lordship won't allow my Council, I don't know nothing.

Lord Stamford moved to adjourn.

L. H. Steward. I once more acquaint your Lordship, that as your Council have been allowed to speak; so the Question yet is, whether you have any other Point or Matter for them to speak to; the Lords are ready to hear: Have you any thing else to propose?

L. Wintoun. If you will allow my Council to answer, he will answer.

L. H. Steward. My Lords! Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the House was adjourn'd about three of the Clock, and about five returned again, and Proclamation was made for Silence as usual.

L. H. Steward. GGeorge Earl of Wintoun, I have already acquainted you, that your Peers have found you Guilty, (i. e.) in the Terms of the Law, convicted you of the High-Treason whereof you stand impeached.

After, your Lordship has moved in Arrest of Judgment, and the Lords have disallow'd that Motion; their next Step is to proceed to Judgment.

The melancholy Part I am to bear in pronouncing that Judgment upon you, since it is his Majesty's Pleasure to appoint me to that Office, I dutifully submit to it; far, very far, from taking any Satisfaction in it.

'Till Conviction, your Lordship has been spoke to without the least Prejudice, or Supposition of your Guilt; but now it must be taken for granted, that your Lordship is guilty of the High-Treason whereof you stand impeached.

My Lord, this your Crime is the greatest known to the Law of this Kingdom, or of any other Country whatsoever: And it is of the blackest and most odious Species of that Crime; a Conspiracy and Attempt, manifested by an open Rebellion, to depose and murder that sacred Person, who sustains and is the Majesty of the whole; and from whom, as from a Fountain of Warmth and Glory, are dispersed all the Honours, all the Dignities of the State, indeed the lasting and operative Life and Vigour of the Laws, which plainly subsist by a due Administration of the executive Power.

So that attempting this precious Life, is really striking at the most noble Part, the Seat of Life and Spring of all Motion in this Government; and may therefore properly be called a Design to murder, not only the King, but also the Body-Politic of the Kingdom.

And this is most evidently true in your Lordship's Case; considering that Success in your Treason must infallibly have establish'd Popery; and that never fails to bring with it a Civil, as well as Ecclesiastical Tyranny; which is quite another Sort of Constitution than that of this Kingdom, and cannot take Place, 'till the present is annihilated.

This your Crime (so I must now call it) is the more aggravated, in that when it proceeds so far, as to take Arms openly, and to make an Offensive War against lawful Authority, 'tis generally (as in your Case) complicated with the horrid and crying Sin of murdering many, who are not only innocent but meritorious.

And if Pity be due (as I admit it is, in some Degree) to such as suffer for their own Crimes; it must be admitted, a much greater Share of Compassion is owing to them, who have lost their Lives merely by the Crimes of other Men.

As many as have so done in the late Rebellion, so many Murders have they to answer for who promoted it; and your Lordship, in examining your Conscience, will be under a great Delusion, if you look on those who fell at Preston, Dumblain, or elsewhere, on the Side of the Laws, and in Defence of settled Order and Government, as slain in lawful War; even judging of this Matter by the Law of Nations.

Alas! my Lord, your Crime of High-Treason is made yet redder, by shedding a great deal of the best Blood in the Kingdom: I include in this Expression the brave Common Soldiers, as well as those Gallant and Heroic Officers, who continued faithful to Death, in Defence of the Laws; for sure but little Blood can be better than that, which is shed while it is warm in the Cause of the true Religion, and the Liberties of its native Country.

Believe it, notwithstanding the unfair Arts and Industry used, to stir up a pernicious Excess of Commiseration, towards such as have fallen by the Sword of Justice, (few, if compar'd with the Numbers of good Subjects murdered from Doors and Windows at Preston only) the Life of one honest loyal Subject is more precious, in the Eye of God, and all considering Men, than the Lives of many Rebels and Parricides.

This puts me in mind to observe to your Lordship, that

There is another Malignity in your Lordship's Crime (open Rebellion) which consists in this; that it is always sure of doing Hurt to a Government in one Respect, though it be defeated; (I will not say it does so on the whole Matter.)

For the Offence is too notorious to be let pass unobserved, by any Connivance: Then is a Government reduced to this Dilemma; if it be not punished, the State is endanger'd, by suffering Examples to appear, that it may be attack'd with Impunity; if it be punished, they who are publicly or privately Favourers of the Treason (and perhaps some out of mere Folly) raise undeserved Clamours of Cruelty against those in Power; or the lowest their Malice flies, is, to make unseasonable, unlimited, and injudicious Encomiums upon Mercy and Forgiveness (Things rightly used, certainly of the greatest Excellence.)

And this Proceeding, it must be admitted, does some Harm, with silly undistinguishing People.

So that Rebels have the Satisfaction of thinking they hurt the Government a little, even by their Fall.

The only, but true Consolation every wise Government has in such a Case (after it has temper'd Justice with Mercy in such proportion as sound Discretion directs, having always a Care of the Public Safety above all Things) is this;

That such like Seeds of unreasonable Discontents, take Root on very shallow Soil only; and that therefore, after they have made a weak Shoot, they soon wither and come to nothing.

It is well your Lordship has given an Opportunity of doing the Government right, on the Subject of your Surrender at Preston.

How confidently had it been given out by the Faction, that the Surrender was made on Assurances, at least Hopes insinuated of Pardon: Whereas the Truth appears to be, that Fear was the only Motive to it; the evil Day was deferred; and the Rebels rightly depended, fewer would die at last by the Measures they elected, than if they had stood an Assault: They were aw'd by the experienced Courage, Discipline, and Steadiness of the King's Troops; and by the superior Genius and Spirit of his Majesty's Commanders, over those of the Rebels; so that in truth they were never flatter'd with any other Terms, than to surrender, as Rebels and as Traitors; their Lives only to be spar'd till his Majesty's Pleasure should be known.

It was indeed a Debt due to those brave Commanders and Soldiers (to whom their King and Country owe more than can be well expressed) that their Victory should be vindicated to the present and future Ages from untrue Detraction, and kept from being sullied by the Tongues of Rebels and their Accomplices, when their Arms could no longer hinder it.

'Tis hard to leave this Subject without shortly observing, that this Engine which sets the World on fire, a lying Tongue, has been of prodigious use to the Party of the Rebels, not only since and during the Rebellion, but before, while it was forming, and the Rebels preparing for it.

Falſe Facts, falſe Hopes, and falſe Characters, have been the greater half of the Scheme they ſet out with, and yet ſeem to depend upon.

It has been rightly obſerved, your Lordſhip's Anſwer does not ſo much as inſiſt, with any Clearneſs, on that, which only could excuſe your being taken in open Rebellion; That you was forc'd into it, remain'd ſo under a Force, and would have eſcaped from it but could not.

If you had ſo inſiſted, it has been clearly prov'd, that had not been true; for your Lordſhip was active and forward in many Inſtances, and ſo conſiderable in a Military Capacity among your Fellow-Soldiers, as to command a Squadron.

Theſe and other Particulars have been obſerved by the Managers of the Houſe of Commons, and therefore I ſhall not purſue them farther;

But conclude this Introduction to the Sentence, by exhorting your Lordſhip, with perfect Charity, and much Earneſtneſs, to conſider, that now the Time is come when the Veil of Partiality ſhould be taken from your Eyes (it muſt be ſo when you come to die) and that your Lordſhip ſhould henceforward think with Clearneſs and Indifference (if poſſible) which muſt produce in you a hearty Detestation of the High Crime you have committed, and being a Proteſtant, be very likely to make you a ſincere Penitent, for your having engaged in a Deſign, that muſt have deſtroyed the Holy Religion you profeſs, had it taken Effect.

Nothing now remains; but that I pronounce upon you that Sentence which the Law ordains, and which ſufficiently ſhews, what Thoughts our Anceſtors had, of the Crime of which your Lordſhip is now convicted: viz.

“ That you George Earl of Wintoun return to
“ the Priſon of the Tower from whence you
“ came; from thence you muſt be drawn
“ to the Place of Execution; when you
“ come there, you muſt be hang'd by the “ Neck, but not till you be Dead; for you
“ muſt be cut down alive, then your Bowels
“ muſt be taken out, and burnt before your “ Face; then your Head muſt be ſever'd
“ from your Body, and your Body divided “ into four Quarters; and theſe muſt be at “ the King's diſpoſal.

And God Almighty be merciful to your Soul!

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King ſtrictly charges and commands all manner of Perſons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Lord High Steward ſtood up uncover'd, and declaring there was nothing more to be done by vertue of the preſent Commiſſion, broke the Staff, and pronounc'd it diſſolv'd: And then leaving the Chair, came down to the Woolpack, and ſaid, Is it your Lordſhips Pleaſure to adjourn to the Houſe of Lords?

Lords. Ay, ay.

And then the Houſe adjourn'd to the Chamber of Parliament, and the Lords and others returned in the ſame Order they came down.

The Earl of Wintoun was carried back to the Tower, from whence he afterwards made his Eſcape.

CLXXXVII. The Trial of Francis Francia a Jew at the Old-Bailey, for High-Treason, Jan. 22. 1716, 3 GEO. I.

FRANCIS Francia having been formerly arraigned upon the Indictment found againſt him for High-Treason, and having pleaded Not Guilty, was on Tuesday the 22d of January brought to the Bar to receive his Trial.

Clerk of Arraignments. You the Priſoner at the Bar, theſe Men that you ſhall hear called, and perſonally appear, are to paſs between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death. If therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be ſworn, and before they be ſworn.

Cl. of Arr. Sir Dennis Dutry, Bart.

Priſoner. Are you a Freeholder in this City?

Sir Dennis Dutry. Yes.

Sir J. Fekyll. My Lord, we that are Council for the King, deſire, that thoſe who are called may be aſked that Queſtion; Whether they have Freehold (or Copyhold) of Ten Pounds per Annum, or not; before they are ſworn in Chief?

Mr. Att. Gen. We ſuppoſe Sir Edward Northey, the Priſoner will aſk that Queſtion; and therefore we deſire that it may be aſk'd of every one as they come to the Book.

Mr. Ward. It is a Challenge on both Sides.

L. C. Baron. They ought to be Sir Thomas Bury, ſworn whether they have a Freehold or not, if they would excuſe themſelves.

Mr. Hungerford. I have nothing to offer againſt it. In caſe the King's Council think fit to proceed in that Method, we concur in it. I ſhould have mov'd it myſelf, if they had not.

Mr. Att. Gen. It was in the Trial of the Rebels.

Priſoner. He has had a Quarrel with me; and there was a Suit depending between us about ſeven Years ago: And I challenge him for Cauſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. He may challenge him peremptorily, if he will. But if he challenges him for Cauſe he muſt prove it.

Priſoner. Sir Dennis will not deny it.

L. C.

L. C. Baron. If you challenge him, you must prove your Challenge. Do you challenge him for Cause, or peremptorily?

Prisoner. For Cause.

L. C. Baron. That which you assign is no Cause.

Then Sir Dennis was sworn upon a Voir Dire, with respect to his Freehold; as all the others were, before they were either challenged, or sworn in Chief.

Sir J. Fekyll. Sir, have you a Freehold in this City?

Sir D. Dutry. Yes.

Sir J. Fekyll. To what Value?

Sir D. Dutry. About Ten Pounds a Year.

Prisoner. My Lords, there has been a Suit depending between us.

Mr. Att. Gen. If they talk of a Suit, they must prove it by Record.

Prisoner. His Name is Dennis; and they have given me a Pannel with barbarous Latin. In my Copy of the Pannel, he is return'd by the Name of Dionysius; that is not the same Name.

Mr. Ward. The Prisoner observes, that in the Pannel he is return'd by the Name of Dionysius, when his Name is Dennis.

Sir J. Fekyll. He is to have a Copy of the Pannel; but it is not to be put into English for him.

Mr. Ward. But we say, that is not Latin for Dennis.

Sir J. Fekyll. Sure no one will argue, but that Dionysius is the proper Latin Name for Dennis.

L. C. Baron. You offer no Cause of Challenge.

Prisoner. I hope I prove his Name is return'd in the Pannel Dionysius.

L. C. Baron. It is so; and that is Latin for Dennis.

Prisoner. No, it is not. Dennis is a Saint in France, and Dionysius is a Saint in Italy. They are two different Names, and of different Countries.

L. C. Baron. Dionysius is Latin for Dennis. If they don't challenge him peremptorily, he must be sworn.

Prisoner. I alledge, that we fell out about seven Years ago: And that his Name is not Dionysius, as it is wrote in the Pannel. And in my former Pannel he was put down Knight, and in this Baronet.

L. C. Baron. These Things are nothing, except the Suit; and that you must prove.

Mr. Hungerford. As to the Distinction of the two Saints, I do not meddle in it. But I suppose Sir Dennis can tell whether he is a Knight or a Baronet. But as to the Saints, whether the Nominal ones Abroad, or the Pretended ones at Home, I let them alone.

Prisoner. You allowed this Challenge the last Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. You challeng'd him peremptorily.

Mr. Ward. He was stiled Knight in the last Pannel.

L. C. Baron. That don't appear to us. You must either challenge him peremptorily, or he must be sworn.

Prisoner. I must do what you order; but I think it very hard. Then I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Sir John Scott, Knt.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Sir Daniel Wray, Knt.

Prisoner. I don't except against him.

Then he was sworn.

V O L. VI.

Cl. of Arr. Sir W. Chapman, Kt.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Joseph Webb.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Adams.

Prisoner. Was you upon the Grand Jury, that found the Indictment against me?

Mr. Adams. No.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Ashurst.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Joseph Bishop.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. John Child.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Joseph Chamberlain.

He was sworn.

Cl. of Arr. John Casebert.

Prisoner. He was upon the Grand Jury that found the Bill against me; and I challenge him for that Cause.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Wood.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Isaac Cailovell.

Prisoner. He don't write his Name as it is in the Pannel. I could never find this Gentleman out by all the Enquiry I could make.

L. C. Baron. What is the Mistake?

Prisoner. It is wrote in the Pannel v Consonant, and he spells his Name with a w. And it is in the Pannel a single l, and he writes it with double ll.

Then Mr. Cailovel being ask'd, said he wrote his Name with a v Consonant, as in the Pannel; but with a double ll.

L. C. Baron. That don't alter the Pronunciation. It is the same Name.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Davis. He was sworn.

Cl. of Arr. John Dodson, Esq;

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. William Dewick.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. William Dell.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. John Davis. He was sworn.

Cl. of Arr. Joseph Emmes. He was sworn.

Cl. of Arr. John Farr. He was sworn.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Gouge.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Geering.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Joseph Goddard.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Gill.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Henry Greenway.

Prisoner. I challenge him for Cause. He is returned upon the Pannel Greenway, and his Name is Greenaway: That is a different Name.

Sir J. Fekyll. How are you usually called; Greenway, or Greenaway?

Mr. Greenaway. I am most commonly called Greenaway.

Then he was set aside.

Cl. of Arr. John Glasbrook. He was sworn.

Cl. of Arr. John Goodlad.

Prisoner. For a Fine.

L. C. Baron. Then he may be sent for.

Which was done accordingly.

Cl. of Arr. Francis Francia, hold up your Hand.

Which he did.

Gentlemen, you that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause.

HE stands indicted by the Name of Francis Francia, of London, Merchant: For that he being a Subject of our most Serene Lord GEORGE King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance; but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as a false Traitor against our said Lord the King, his supreme, true, natural, lawful, and undoubted Lord; withdrawing that cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our said Lord the King towards him ought to bear; and designing and traiterously intending, the Government of these Kingdoms, under our said Lord the King duly and happily established, to change and subvert; and our said Lord the King from the Title, Honour, Royal Estate, Empire and Government of these Kingdoms to depose; and our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring; and the Person in the Life of King James the Second, pretended to be Prince of Wales, and after the Death of the said late King pretending to be, and taking upon himself the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third, to the Crown, Royal Estate, and Dignity of King, and to the Government of this Kingdom to advance: The First Day of September in the Second Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, and at several Days and Times as well before as after, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traiterously did compass, imagine and intend, our said Lord the King, now and then his supreme, true, natural, lawful and undoubted Lord, from the Title, Honour, Royal Estate, Empire and Government of these Kingdoms, to depose and to Death and to final Destruction to put and bring; and the said Person, in the Life of the said King James the Second, pretended to be Prince of Wales, and since the Death of the said late King pretending to be, and taking upon himself the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third, to the Crown, Royal Estate and Dignity of King, and to the Empire and Government of this Kingdom, to exalt. And that he the said Francia, to accomplish and bring about the said Treason, and traiterous and devilish Intention, did traiterously meet, propose, consult, conspire, and agree with divers other Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, to raise Insurrection, Rebellion and War within this Kingdom, against our said Lord the King, and in Favour of the said Person, in the Life of the said King James the Second, pretended to be Prince of Wales, and since the Death of the said late King taking upon himself the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third. And that he the said Francis Francia, for the more effectual compleating and perfecting the said Treason and Traiterous Intention, did propose, consult, conspire and agree with divers other Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, to require, solicit and procure, from divers Foreigners, and others, in the Kingdom of France, Arms, Ammunition and Money, to assist and help in the said War. And that he the said Francis Francia did traiterously compose and write, and caused to be composed and written, several traiterous Letters, notifying the Intentions and Resolutions of him the said Francis Francia, and the said other Traitors, to move and levy the said War; and requiring Aid in the said War, of the said Foreigners, and other Persons then in France. And the said Letters so composed and written, and caused to be composed and written, did traiterously send, and caused to be sent to Parts beyond the Seas, to be delivered to the said Foreigners, and other Persons in France, and caused and procured them to be delivered accordingly; against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided.

Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned and hath thereunto pleaded Not Guilty: And for his Trial hath put himself upon God and his Country; which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire, whether he be guilty of this High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty? If you find that he is guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since. If you find him Not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it. If you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him guilty: If you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Cowper, Jun. MAY it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn: The Prisoner at the Bar, Francis Francia, stands indicted of High-Treason; in intending to alter and subvert the Government of these Realms, happily establish'd under his Majesty King GEORGE; to depose his Majesty, to bring him to Death, and to place the Pretender upon his Throne.

The Indictment sets forth, that for this Purpose the Prisoner, the First of September, in the Second Year of the Reign of his present Majesty, and at several other Days and Times, at London in your County, traiterously compassed and imagined, to depose and kill his most Sacred Majesty, and to place the Pretender on his Throne.

And that for the more effectual performing such his Intentions, he did meet, propose, consult and agree with several other Traitors, to raise Rebellion and War within this Kingdom, against his Majesty, and in favour of the Pretender. And that he did solicit Men, Arms and Ammunition, from certain Foreigners and others in France, to assist him in that Rebellion. And that he did write and cause to be written several Letters, intimating this Resolution, and requesting the Assistance of such Foreigners and others.

The Indictment charges further, that he wrote and composed such Letters, and caused them to be wrote and composed; and procured them to be sent and deliver'd for that Purpose. And this, Gentlemen, is laid to have been by him done, contrary to the duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case provided.

Gentlemen, to this Indictment the Defendant has pleaded that he is Not Guilty. If upon calling our Evidence for the King, we shall prove this Case upon him; it will become your Duty to find him guilty of the Charge.

Sir J. Jekyll. MAY it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council with his Majesty: And, Gentlemen, it is my Part to open to you the Substance of the Charge against the Prisoner at the Bar; and the Nature of the Evidence we shall offer to prove that Charge.

The Prisoner stands indicted of the first Species of High-Treason, mentioned in that antient Statute 25 Edw. III. that is, compassing and imagining the Death of the King.

The Overt-Acts alledged in the Indictment, to manifest that traiterous Design of the Prisoner, are three:

He is charged with consulting and conspiring, with other Traitors, to levy War against the King, in favour of the Pretender to his Majesty's Crown:

With conspiring and agreeing to solicit and procure Assistance, from Foreigners and others in France, to carry on that War:

And further, with writing traiterous Letters, notifying his and his Accomplices Resolution to Levy that War; and requiring the before-mentioned Assistance; and sending those Letters into foreign Parts for that Purpose.

These are undoubted Overt-Acts of the High-Treason charged upon him.

To make good this Charge, we shall shew, that about three or four Years since, there was a Correspondence begun between the Prisoner and Abbot Butler, an Ecclesiastic of Cambray. That Correspondence began on the Occasion of a Law-Suit in England; wherein one Mrs. Butler, a Relation of that Abbot, was concerned; which was recommended to the Prisoner's Care. But some Time after (a Gentleman, whose Name it will be necessary to mention in the Prosecution of this Cause) Mr. Harvey of Combe took upon him to make use of that Correspondence, in order to transmitt and receive Letters to and from that Abbot; and also to the Duke D'Aumont, by the means of the Prisoner.

Mr. Harvey, for some time, made use of the Prisoner only to convey those Letters forward and backward, under the Prisoner's Cover, directed to one D'Aulmay, alias Payen; who had married a near Relation of the late Duke of Ormond; to be communicated by D'Aulmay to the Abbot, or the Duke D'Aumont. But it seems, the Prisoner having gained a Knowledge of the Tendency of Mr. Harvey's Correspondence, (which was a treasonable one) he himself soon after came to partake of the Guilt.

As it was at first a Correspondence between the Prisoner and the Abbot, and afterwards between Mr. Harvey and the Abbot, under Covers; so afterwards, Mr. Harvey made use of the Prisoner himself, to correspond with D'Aulmay. And in those Letters you will find, that the Prisoner does not enter into the Correspondence as a Matter that he was transacting as only for Mr. Harvey, but shews a great Concern in it himself: He is importunate for Assistance to the late Rebellion from France; Impatient for its Coming, and Anxious for the Success.

The Evidence we shall offer to you, to shew that this Correspondence was thus carried on, will be this.

Informations being given to a Noble Lord, (then Secretary of State) of a treasonable Correspondence being carry'd on by Mr. Harvey, by means of the Prisoner; there was a Warrant issued to take the Prisoner, and seize his Papers. And upon the Execution of that Warrant, Letters directed to the Prisoner, and his Copy-Book of the Letters wrote by himself, and an Original Letter of Mr. Harvey's, were found in the Prisoner's Custody, and will be produc'd to you; and these were own'd and admitted by the Prisoner.

The Letters themselves plainly speak the Nature and traiterous Effect of this Correspondence begun by Mr. Harvey, and carried on with the participation of the Prisoner. And Gentlemen, my Lords the Judges will tell you, that it is not couching such a Correspondence in the Cant of a Law-Suit, (as in the present Case) or otherwise, that will screen an Offender from Public Justice, in case a traiterous Correspondence can be made manifest. If that would evade the Justice of the Law, it would be impossible for Traitors to be brought to Punishment. But that which puts this out of all doubt, is, that the Sense which is put on these Letters by us, and by the Indictment; that very Sense, or Construction, has been put upon them by the Prisoner himself. For we shall lay before you the Examination of the Prisoner before the Secretary of State. In that he admits, that the Subject-Matter of the Letters wrote by D'Aulmay to him, to be communicated to Mr. Harvey, was the Design of the Pretender's Invading the Dominions of his Majesty. And those Letters being one Side of the Correspondence, (I mean that which came from Abroad) serves to evince or demonstrate the other Part or Side of the Correspondence, which came from hence.

I shall not enter into the Particulars of the Letters; or state and reason upon Matters in writing, without having them first read, whereby to lay a Foundation for Observing upon them. But the Letters will be read to you: And we who are the King's Council, don't desire you to put any forc'd or strain'd Construction upon them. Nay, we desire you to put no other Construction upon them, than what the Prisoner himself has done already.

I shall say nothing to you, Gentlemen, to aggravate the Nature of the Offence. I rather chuse to appeal to your Judgments, than to excite your Passions.

All that is desired of you, is, to give your best Attention to the Evidence; and to do Justice, and discharge your Consciences.

Mr. Att. Gen. MAY it please your Lordships, and you the Gentlemen of this Jury; I am also of Council against the Prisoner at the Bar. The Indictment has been at large opened and explained by Mr. Serjeant Fekyll. The Prisoner is charged with High-Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death of his Majesty, in order to set the Pretender on the Throne. The Overt-Acts laid, are conspiring to levy that War and Rebellion that broke out lately; and in applying to Aliens, and others in France, for Men and Money for carrying it on.

It is notorious, that Preparations were making many Months for the Rebellion that broke out in Scotland, September, 1715. under the Earl of Marr; and in Northumberland in October after, under Mr. Foster; and the like were design'd at Oxford, Bath, &c. in October, 1715. And Men were list'd and sent down for those Purposes; as hath appear'd on the Trials of the Persons who have suffer'd for those Treasons.

The Conspiracy was carry'd on with great Secrecy: And tho' it had been long in agitation in favour of the Pretender; yet was not publicly known, till his Majesty (upon the 20th of July 1715) was pleas'd to acquaint his Parliament, that he had certain Notice of the Pretender's Design to Invade this Kingdom; and that at the same time there were great Preparations here to assist that intended Invasion.

The Defendant lives in Plow-Yard in Fetter-Lane, and goes for a few. When the Duke D'Aumont, as Ambassador from the French King, in the Year 1713. was here, the Prisoner came acquainted with the Abbot Butler, called the Vidame of Cambray, and from that time he corresponded with him. The Abbot had a Relation of his Name, Barbara Butler, who had a Suit at Law depending here, which he recommended to the Care of the Prisoner; and that I believe might be the beginning of the Correspondence between them. There is a Gentleman that has been named, Mr. Harvey of Combe; he also then contracted an Acquaintance and Familiarity with the Duke D'Aumont, and Abbot Butler, and corresponded with both. These Correspondencies first began in the Queen's Time, and appear to have been carried on with great Secrecy and Caution, which induce a Belief they were then Criminal; but I don't mention this, as if what was done in the Queen's Time would affect the Prisoner upon this Indictment, for it is laid only for Treason committed against the King. These Correspondencies were carried on, from the going away of the Duke D'Aumont, till the Prisoner was seized, which was occasioned in this Manner.

My Lord Townshend, then Secretary of State, was diligent in his Enquiries, and on the 16th of September, 1715. had a private Information given him, that Letters constantly came by the Post from France, to Francia, and Mr. Harvey; from the Duke D'Aumont, and Abbot Butler, and one Payen alias D'Aulmay de Coulange; and that the Subject of the Letters related to the Pretender, and that intended Invasion.

His Lord was cautious, and did not immediately seize the Prisoner, but staid the coming in of two Posts from France, and gave Orders for stopping all Letters directed to the Prisoner, to see what further Discovery they would make, and having received further Information by those Letters, on the 19th of September, 1715. his Lordship made his Warrant to Joseph Smith, one of the Messengers, to apprehend Francia, and seize his Papers. He having received the Warrant, went, together with Wilcox another Messenger, (who is since dead) to the Defendant's House, and there seized his Person, and at the same time his Copy-Book of Letters. And it is extraordinary to find therein entred the Copies of any Letters relating to a Matter of this Nature. When they seized that Book, he told them there was nothing in it, and that it was only his Copy-Book of his Letters to his Correspondents. They seized also several Original Letters, wrote from France to him by D'Aulmay alias Payen, which will be read to you. They then seized also in his Custody an Original Letter of Mr. Harvey's to Abbot Butler, dated January 9. 1714. which was sent to Francia to be transmitted beyond Sea; but it seems Francia opened it out of Curiosity, or by Accident, and kept it. In it were Figures for Names and Things, which he well understood. The Prisoner was on September, 22, 1715. examined before both Secretaries of State, and the Copy-Book of Letters was shewn him, and he owned it to be his Book, wherein he entred the Letters of his Correspondency, and that the Entries were made by himself or his Son. D'Aulmay's Letters were also shewed to him, and he owned that they were those that he received, and were found in his Custody.

He at first seem'd to be open and ingenuous, and the Secretaries of State then thought him to be so. He told them in particular when the Correspondence began, how long carried on by covering Mr. Harvey's Letters; and when altered, and the Correspondence carried on only by Francia; and that the Subject of the Letters wrote to him by Payen, was, the Design of the Pretender to invade his Majesty's Dominions; and he named Persons, who were intended in them by initial Letters of their Names or Titles. That M. H. was was Mr. Harvey. My DD the Duke of Ormond; M B. Lord Bolinbrooke; Dd. the Duke D'Aumont. He also explained Mr. Harvey's Letter, and the Figures therein. That 22 was the Duke D'Aumont; 6 the late French King; 17 the Tories; 8 the Pretender; and 9 his Majesty King George; and signed his Examination, and was sent back in the Messenger's Custody. But it appearing after, on further perusing of the Letters, that he had not been ingenuous, but had concealed a great Part of what he knew, he was further examined, and then changed his Note, and thereupon was committed to Newgate.

He was here twice before, in Order to be tried; the first Time he was advised by his Council, (and he was in the Right to follow it, and take all the Advantages the Law allowed him) to insist, that in the Copy of the Indictment delivered to him, there was a Mistake of an I for an A, and therefore he had not had a true Copy of his Indictment; and thereupon the Trial was put off. The next Time he came, he made use of another Privilege the Law allows him, and challenged so many of the Jurors, that there did not appear besides enough to make a Jury. There were Accidents afterwards, which occasioned the putting off the Trial twice by the King's Council, some of the Witnesses being abroad on his Majesty's Service.

The Indictment charges the Prisoner with compassing and imagining the Death of the King. And its plain, a Conspiracy to levy War, to dethrone or to deprive the King of his Liberty, is an Evidence of imagining his Death; for the War necessarily tends to that End. That this Transaction which he was concerned in, was a Design to have a Rebellion raised here, and to bring in the Pretender, we don't doubt but we shall give you Satisfaction of, when we produce the Letters, and you will observe that the Prisoner hath so explained them: And if he had not, every Body must so understand them.

The Correspondence began in the Year 1713, and continued to the Time he was taken, which was on September 19, 1715. And so far we may read the Letters in the Queen's Time, to shew the Nature and Beginning of it. At first he carried on the Correspondence, only as a Correspondence between Mr. Harvey and Butler, by covering Mr. Harvey's Letters, and having the Answers sent under Cover to him; what he wrote in the Covers, he has enter'd in his Book; for Mr. Harvey was cautious not to let his Letters go openly to and from him. And so for a good while Mr. Harvey's Letters were brought to Francia, which he covered and directed to Butler or to D'Aulmay, sometimes by that Name, and sometimes by the Name of Payen, and sometimes by the Name of Coulange, which is a way used by many in France, to take the Name of the Place where they live instead of their Surname. While the Correspondence was carried on by covering Letters, Francia in his Covers wrote those Matters that demonstrate he was privy to the Correspondence, and you will understand it by Mr. Harvey's Original Letter.

Mr. Harvey is not before the Court, and therefore we shall not meddle with him more than is necessary, to shew that while the Correspondence was carried on under Francia's Covers, Francia well knew the Subject Matter of the Correspondence, and many Times gave Cautions to have to do with discreet Persons, and to make use of People that do not babble.

The Correspondence was carried on thus till about June, 1715. and then the way of Corresponding was changed. For Mr. Harvey was advised to be more careful, and not to write himself; but whatever was wrote, it was agreed should be wrote to and by Francia. And so the Correspondence was carried on between D'Aulmay and him, to the Time of the Prisoner's being apprehended. We have Entries of Letters of his for a considerable Time in his Copy-Book; and it is surprizing to me, and will be so to every Man, that a Man should enter Copies of Letters that carry such an Evidence of Crimes in the Writer. In one of the Letters enter'd in the Copy-Book, he writes to D'Aulmay, dated April 7, 1715. "to be cautious, to avoid giving Umbrage to those in Power; and says, when I have any thing particular to write to you, I will do it by a strange Hand, and will sign Jacques Chretien. Take notice of this, and provided you let me know you received this Letter without its having been opened, I shall be easy.

From that Time there is no Entry of Francia's Letters in the Book; but we have a Chain of Letters from that Time wrote by D'Aulmay to Francia, in Answer to Letters written by Francia to him, wherein D'Aulmay takes notice, "That Francia in his Letters had complained that the Invasion was delay'd; and reproach'd those in France with Backwardness, Neglect and Indolence; and the Cause he knew of, would be undone for want of Care.

In the reading the Letters, we shall first produce that of Mr. Harvey, dated January 9, 17 $\frac{1}{4}$, to Abbot Butler; which was found in Francia's Custody, with his Explanation of it; by which it will appear, he was fully acquainted with the Subject of the Correspondence, while he cover'd Mr. Harvey's Letters: And after that we shall produce the Letters from and to Francia, in the Order of Time they were written.

It is remarkable, that the Correspondence was so close, that scarce a Post passed without Letters from the one or the other.

The first of Mr. Francia's Letters that we shall produce, is dated March $\frac{1}{4}$, 17 $\frac{1}{4}$. He writes to D'Aulmay; "and desires to know what was in the Story of the Marriage between the Pretender, and one of the Arch-Dutchesses. For "it is essential to the Interest of your Wife," She was a Butler.

D'Aulmay answers that, March 20, 1715. and writes, "that no mention was made of late of the Marriage of the Pretender: And that he was of Opinion, that would not be a sure Way to bring his Affairs to a happy Issue. But that a Party-War (that is, among ourselves) would be much more to his Advantage.

March 10. Francia writes, "That there was a Letter from the Duke D'Aumont, which 'tis wished may succeed better than the former; which have not been answer'd, tho' entirely for the Affairs. Besides I am (by the way) to tell you, that Persons of 50 or 60 Thousand Crowns a Year, can't with Prudence run the Hazard of losing such Estates, unless more Encouragement be given them. And that the Misfortunes of a certain Person are more owing to their being neglected on your Side of the Water, than to the Party that is against him; So that " if

“ if this continue, your Wife must lose all Hopes.” This demonstrates, that the Matter solicited for was criminal, for which the Persons concerned might forfeit their Estates; and is plainly a soliciting for Succours.

April 2. 1715. D'Aulmay, in Answer to this, writes, “ He had communicated the Complaints in Francia's last Letter to the Duke D'Aumont; and was assured all should be mended.

March 17. 17 $\frac{1}{5}$. Francia writes to D'Aulmay, “ He should be glad if he could find means to satisfy Mr. Harvey — That to deal with him as has been done, is no good Policy.

April 8. 1715. Francia writes to D'Aulmay, in Answer to his of the 20th; and tells him, “ He is satisfied; and consequently we are now to expect every thing from your Side the Water.

April 18. He writes again to D'Aulmay, “ That Affairs are here in such a Situation, that great Precaution must be used, to avoid giving Umbrage to those who are in Power. When I have any thing particular to write to you, I will do it by a strange Hand, and will sign Jaques Chrétien. Take notice of this: And provided you let me know you received this Letter, without its having been open'd, I shall be easy.

April 24. 1715. D'Aulmay writes to Francia, “ That his Letter came safe to Hand; and bids him be easy. If Mr. Harvey, in these troublesome Times, should think fit to make use of Mr. Chrétien, he may.

These Letters of Francia's are entered in his Copy-Book: But from this Time there are no Entries in the Copy-Book: Which is not to be wondered at; but rather that they were entered so long. But we have many Original Letters from D'Aulmay (alias Payen) to Francia; which appear to be Answers to Letters written by him: And by what of them is repeated in the Answers, it appears in his Letters, great Solicitations were for the Pretender's Coming, and great Uneasiness expressed at the Delay. And therefore, to quiet the Conspirators in England, D'Aulmay gives frequent Assurances that all Things were preparing.

August 7. 1715. Which was after his Majesty had notice of the Invasion designed, and had acquainted the Parliament with it; D'Aulmay writes to Francia: “ You are in the Right to inveigh against the Indolence you reproach us with; but be persuaded, 'tis only so in Appearance. I even hope, that by this time you have convincing Proofs of it; and that suitable Returns are made to the good Dispositions on your Side: And that at last God, blessing the just Cause of our Friend, will let him gain his Suit: At least, Assistance and powerful Solicitations shall not be wanting.

This needs no Explanation. The Suit of their Friend, appears plainly to be the Invasion of the Pretender.

August 10. 1715. D'Aulmay, under the Name of Payen, acquaints Francia, that he received his of the 5th Instant. Says he, “ Pray be easy; before it be long you will be contented. The Chief of the Name of our Friend the Abbot arrived here on Tuesday-Night in good Health. He is very well pleased; and has Reason to be so. He is preparing to return Home with all “ Expedition; and to take his Friends with him, to pass the Vacation there. I am this Moment going to wait on him; and design to make One in the Voyage with him, or to be with him soon after his Departure.

August 21. D'Aulmay writes again to Francia, in Answer to two of his, of the 12th and 15th Instant; “ Our Friend's Cause will soon be ready (God willing) to be tried: All Preparations are making for it. The Friend who is related to my Wife has read your two Letters, and is mightily pleased with them.

August 24. He writes again, “ pressing him not to let a Post go, without letting him know all that passes relating to the Cause of our Common Friend. And he takes notice, that he had been so busy, that he had not had time to write to Treacher, but would do it suddenly.

This shews the difference between D'Aulmay's own Suit against Treacher, and the Pretender's Design, which he calls the Cause of their Common Friend.

August 28. D'Aulmay, under the Name of Payen, writes to Francia, acknowledging the Receipt of his of the 22d Instant; and saith, “ If I could venture to acquaint you with the Particulars of all that passes on the Affair which you know of, you would be more quiet than you appear to me to be, and would accuse us of Negligence less than you do. I know there are favourable Moments, which 'tis dangerous to let slip. But will you not grant too, that 'tis the Part of Prudence to foresee all Inconveniencies; and to take proper and sufficient Measures to enable us to surmount them all? This is what we are doing: Be satisfied of it: and that your Friends are more earnest and ardent than ever, to procure you all the Satisfaction you can wish. Have Patience therefore yet awhile.

September 3. Payen to Francia. “ I received this instant yours of the 29th past. We have at last the Misfortune to lose the greatest of Kings. The German Journey might be very proper; I wish it may be perform'd; the rather, because for the Reasons that you know of. Our Preparations have been a little suspended, but not at all broken; Things going on always better and better. My (a) DD and (b) MD are in a House within half a League of this Town, which a private Person has lent them; where they receive all their Friends, with whom they go to dine and sup every Day. They are both in perfect Health; and think quite differently from what they are reported to think: That is to say, they are what they ought to be; you may assure your Friends of this.

Septemb. 6. D'Aulmay writes to Francia; “ I have just now received your Letter of the second Instant. I desire you to continue to write to me directly; and if you had some trusty Hand, other than your own, and that of your Son, you would do well to employ it. I believe also, that a Cypher for the principal Names, (which you might send me, and a Copy whereof you might keep to make use of yourself) would be very necessary: For I'll avow to you frankly, that this Precaution seems to me to be very necessary.

(a) Duke of Ormond.

(b) Lord Bolingbroke.

Sept. 14. D'Aulmay, under the Name of Payen, writes to Francia; "The Contents of your last without a Date were very agreeable to me, as well as to all our Friends, who give you Thanks for it. We knew already Part of what you tell us about the Cause of our Friend; which will soon end (please God) to his Satisfaction, or all Appearances would deceive. As to my own Cause, I can't help telling you that my Fate is very unhappy, to have to do with so dishonest a Man.

Here again he distinguishes between his own Cause, and the Cause of their Friend the Pretender.

There cannot be any Doubt of the Subject of this Correspondence: Every Body that hears or reads these Letters, must understand them to relate to the intended Invasion; and if there were any Doubt, (as there is not) Mr. Francia's Confession sufficiently explains them.

It cannot be expected we can produce Mr. Francia's Letters, to which the last are Answers, they being sent away by him to France; but we insist that the Answers to them take notice of his, and of the Contents of them, with their being taken in his Custody, and owned by him on his Examination, to be those he received; and that he knew the Design of them to be, the Design of the Pretender to invade his Majesty's Dominions; is a full and sufficient Evidence to prove the treasonable Correspondence charged in the Indictment.

The Secretary of State did right, in stopping the Letters at the Post-Office, which were directed to the Prisoner; but those Letters having never been in the Prisoner's Custody, we shall not offer them in Evidence.

In one of them D'Aulmay complains, that the Correspondence was interrupted; and afterwards in another to Francia's Son, he bewails his Father's Misfortunes.

It can't be pretended that Francia was only a Hand to convey Letters from one to another; and that the Correspondence was only Mr. Harvey's; and that Francia is only guilty of Misprision of Treason, in concealing the other's Treason; for while he covered Mr. Harvey's Letters, he also wrote in the Cover those Things that demonstrate he was acquainted with the Subject of the Correspondence, and assented to, and assisted in the Treason: And the Law is plain in Case of High-Treason, that he that knoweth it before it be done, and assenteth to it, is Particeps Criminis, and guilty of the Treason.

What he did was not in the dark, but knowingly and openly, and he expresses himself concerned that the Business went on no better: That is making himself a Party and a Principal.

The Method of our Evidence will be this. These Letters and Copy-Book were seized by the Messenger, who brought them to Mr. Walpole, Under-Secretary to my Lord Townshend: They were laid before the Prisoner, in the Presence of both Secretaries of State: He owned the Book to be his Copy-Book of his Letters to his Correspondents; and the Letters shewn him, to be those he received, and that were taken in his Custody; and that that Correspondence continued till the Time of his being taken into Custody; and that the Subject whereof was the Design of the Pretender to invade his Majesty's Dominions. We shall for the better understanding of them, first read his Confession, and then the Letters; and when we have done this, we do not doubt but you will be satisfied, we shall have fully proved the Charge laid in the Indictment against him.

My Lord, we will call our Witnesses. Set up Mr. Smith.

John Fortescue
Aland, Esq;

Then Joseph Smith was sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You was sent, I think, as a Messenger to Francia's House: Pray give an Account of every Thing that passed there.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, I have the Honour to serve his Majesty as one of his Messengers: I was appointed to attend the Secretaries Office that Day, being my Day of waiting, which was September 19, 1715. I had a Warrant delivered to me against Mr. Francia, but it being late I did not go to execute it that Night. The next Day I went to his House, in Plow-Yard in Fetter-Lane; Mr. Wilcox, another Messenger, went with me, and went into the House first; he went up one Pair of Stairs, and I staid below, and after he had been up a little Time, he called me up, and told me there was the Prisoner: He was then in Bed, and there was a Woman with him he called Wife: We told him, we had a Warrant against him for High-Treason, and bad him get up. I asked him if he had any Closet? And looking about, I saw one by the Fire-Place: I opened it, and the first Thing I observed over-against the Closet-Door, upon a Shelf, was a Parcel of Letters lying open in Folio; I saw they were in French, and directed to the Prisoner, and upon the Desk there lay a Paper-Book.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Look upon this Book; is this the Book?

Mr. Smith. This is the Book; it lay upon the Desk, and I looked into it, and observed this Writing at the one End of it: He said it was his Son's Writing, and then I shut it again. I open'd the Desk, and looked over the Papers; I found there several other Papers and Letters folded up: I took them out, and laid them upon the Desk by the others. Then I search'd the other Parts of the Closet, and laid all the Papers by the other Letters. I desired then to go up Stairs, and I did so: And a Person I saw just now in Court, his Son, went with me; and I searched the Rooms and Boxes, and found several other Papers, and brought them down into the Chamber where the Prisoner was, with Mr. Wilcox; I put up all the Papers together, and said I had taken all Things that I thought necessary, and desired to be going. The Prisoner desired to stay and drink some Coffee; we did so, and then brought him down to a House at Westminster. We carried the Papers to the Office, and deliver'd them to Mr. Horatio Walpole. When I was in the Chamber with him, he seemed to be under a Concern when I put up the Book; and I asked him what that Book was? He said it was the Book of his Correspondence abroad.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is this the Book?

Mr. Smith. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say you saw several Letters there, did you look into them?

Mr. Smith. I saw they were directed to Francia: There was a Parcel lay open in Folio; and others that lay folded up in the Desk.

Mr. Att. Gen. What became of the Book and Papers after you had them?

Mr. Smith. We went with them and the Prisoner, and deliver'd the Prisoner into a House at Westminster; and then went to the Office, and staid till Mr. Walpole came, and then delivered the Book and Papers to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you deliver any Papers to him but what were seized there?

Mr. Smith. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is become of Mr. Wilcox?

Mr. Smith. He is dead.

Mr. Cowper. What was it that the Prisoner said about the Book?

Mr. Smith. He said, that is my Copy-Book of my Correspondence abroad, it signifies nothing. I afterwards observed some more Concern than ordinary in him; and he said to me again, the Copy-Book of my Letters signifies nothing.

Mr. Ward. How long had you the Book and Letters in your Custody?

Mr. Smith. I received them about Six or Seven o'Clock, and I deliver'd them the same Day to Mr. Horatio Walpole.

Mr. Hungerford. How can you be sure this is the Book?

Mr. Smith. Because I never parted with it.

Mr. Hungerford. Was it not out of your Possession when you delivered it into the Office?

Mr. Smith. Yes, then it was.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you set any Mark upon the Book?

Mr. Smith. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Did he say that which was wrote in it, was wrote in it by him?

Mr. Smith. He said, this is my Copy-Book of my Letters to my Correspondents abroad.

Mr. Hungerford. But how can you be sure this is the same Book?

Mr. Smith. I made a Remark of this * Writing as he sat dressing himself.

Prisoner. Who was it that carried the Book and Papers to the Office, you or Wilcox?

Mr. Smith. I myself.

Prisoner. I know that to be false. How soon did you go out of Town after you had lodged me?

Mr. Smith. In a Day or two.

Prisoner. Did you not go that Moment?

Mr. Smith. No; not that Day.

Prisoner. To whom did you deliver them?

Mr. Smith. To Mr. Horatio Walpole.

Prisoner. Did you take no more Books?

Mr. Smith. There were several Books in your House, but I don't remember that I carried any of them away but this.

Mr. Hungerford. Did the Prisoner own to you, that the Letters wrote in that Book were wrote by him?

Mr. Smith. He said, that is the Copy-Book of my Letters to my Correspondents abroad.

Then Mr. Horatio Walpole was sworn.

Sir J. Jekyll. Pray Sir, will you give the Court and the Jury an Account of this Book and those Letters; and how, and when they were brought to you?

Mr. Walpole. I remember the Warrant for seizing the Prisoner was dated the 19th of September, and that the Day after Mr. Smith and Mr. Wilcox came into my Room, and deliver'd to me a Copy-Book and a Parcel of Letters, which they said they took at Francia's House. I took them and kept them by themselves, to be produced when my Lord Townshend should call for them.

I remember that Night Mr. Buckley came into my Room, and I desir'd him to sit down and look them over with me, and accordingly he and I look'd into them. The next Day my Lord Townshend sent for the Prisoner, and I carried in the same Book and Letters, and laid them upon the Table, and particularly the Letters, they were laid open, and my Lord examin'd the Prisoner about them. They were wrote in French, and directed to the Prisoner. My Lord ask'd him whether he knew the Hand of those Letters, and turn'd them all over, and shew'd him the Directions, saying, are these directed to you? He own'd it. He own'd that he received them. My Lord ask'd him again, is this your Book? He answer'd, it is; some of the Letters are enter'd by me, and some by my Son.

Sir J. Jekyll. Were they all the same Letters that were brought to you by Mr. Smith?

Mr. Walpole. The same.

Sir J. Jekyll. Pray look upon this Book; is this the same Book?

Mr. Walpole. I am sure this is the Book: This is the same Book that Smith deliver'd to me, and said he took it at Francia's House.

Then several Letters were shewn to Mr. Walpole.

Mr. Walpole. I remember all these Letters to be the same that I received from Smith.

Mr. Att. Gen. After the Prisoner had been examin'd, what became of the Letters?

Mr. Walpole. I took them back again. I kept them under Lock and Key, till my Lord Townshend had occasion to use them, which was the same Night that my Lord examin'd the Prisoner; then I took them back, and I constantly kept them till I went to Holland for the Dutch Troops, and then I deliver'd them to Mr. Buckley.

Prisoner. And you can swear these are the same Letters that were deliver'd to you. By what Mark? You swear very home. What mark did you put upon those Letters, that you can swear to them?

Mr. Ward. Pray Sir, when they were in your Custody, are you sure they were never deliver'd out?

Mr. Walpole. I am sure.

Mr. Ward. Do you remember one Jones the Gun-maker on the other Side the Water, when he was under Examination? Are you sure they were not deliver'd out by Mistake to him?

Mr. Walpole. I don't know that they were.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you put any Mark on those Letters?

Mr. Walpole. No, I put no Mark on them.

Mr. Hungerford. Then how can you know them to be the same?

Mr. Walpole. I perus'd them several times. I remember the Hand, and Dates, and Directions.

Mr. Hungerford. Then probably you remember the Number too?

Mr. Walpole. No, I don't remember the Number.

Mr. Ward. Are you sure these are all the Letters that were brought to you?

Mr. Walpole. No, there are not all the Letters.

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall now call Mr. Buckley.

Then Mr. Buckley was sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Buckley look upon this Book and these Letters, and acquaint the Court what you know of them.

* George Francia's Name in large Church Text, at the End of the Book.

Mr. Buckley. My Lord, the Day the Prisoner was seiz'd, I came into Mr. Walpole's Room. He told me he had received that Book and those Letters that were seiz'd at the Prisoner's House, and desired me to sit down and read them with him. I did so. Afterwards, when Mr. Walpole went to fetch the Dutch Troops, he delivered this Book and these Letters into my Hand. Afterwards my Lord Townshend directed me to look into them, and see which contain'd Passages most Criminal, and to extract such Passages, which I did accordingly out of several of them. I will look over them again, and then I can tell you whether they are the same.

Prisoner. By what Mark?

Mr. Buckley. I can tell you by that which is stronger than any Mark, I copy'd Passages out of several of them.

Then he looked over the Letters one by one. I had every one of these Letters from Mr. Walpole, and I know it certainly; for that from every one of these I extracted some Passages.

Mr. Cowper. Was you present at any time when the Prisoner was examin'd?

Mr. Buckley. I was.

Mr. Cowper. Were this Book and these Letters produced to him at the time of his Examination?

Mr. Buckley. He was examined by my Lord Townshend and Mr. Secretary Stanhope, and I was call'd in to take his Examination in Writing, accordingly I did.

Mr. Cowper. Were the Book and Letters at the time of his Examination produc'd to him?

Mr. Buckley. I can't say that, for I was intent on my Paper, writing the Examination, and looking upon the Prisoner, and hearing what he said. When I had written down what is in my Hand, [holding out the original Examination.] I read it over to him distinctly and audibly; and he being ask'd whether he was willing to swear to it, and answering, Yes, I offer'd him his Oath: And I offer'd him a New Testament to swear on. He said he could not swear on that Book. But he took another Book out of his Pocket, and I swore him on that. I asked him whether this was true: He said it was. Then he sign'd it; and afterwards my Lord Townshend sign'd it.

Mr. Cowper. Is the Subscription of his Handwriting?

Mr. Buckley. It is.

Prisoner. You say I took an Oath? on what Book was it?

Mr. Buckley. Indeed I don't know, I believe it was an Hebrew Book; Mr. Secretary Stanhope look'd upon it.

Mr. Denton. Was he examin'd at any time after?

Mr. Buckley. Yes.

Mr. Denton. Was you present then?

Mr. Buckley. No.

Mr. Ward. How long were they in your Custody?

Mr. Buckley. From the time that Mr. Walpole went abroad, till he came back again, and then I delivered them back to him.

Mr. Ward. Were they in your Custody when Mr. Jones was under Examination?

Mr. Buckley. I can't tell; but I never did shew them to him.

Mr. Ward. Were they not delivered out on that Occasion?

Mr. Buckley. No, they were not delivered out by me.

Mr. Ward. You say you read the Examination to him. Did not he desire to read it himself?

Mr. Buckley. I don't remember it.

Mr. Ward. Was he not refused to read it?

Mr. Buckley. No, upon my Soul.

Mr. Ward. Was you with the Prisoner in Newgate?

Mr. Buckley. I was with him at his own Desire; otherwise I had not gone to him.

Mr. Ward. Do you remember the Days?

Mr. Buckley. No.

Mr. Ward. How often was you with him there?

Mr. Buckley. Twice.

Mr. Hungerford. Were there any Offers made by you to him?

Mr. Buckley. I desire you would explain yourself.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you make him any Offers, that upon his signing any Paper, he should have his Liberty?

Mr. Buckley. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you not mention to him his giving Evidence against any other Person?

Mr. Buckley. No, upon my Soul.

Mr. Att. Gen. These Questions ought not to be asked. It is an Iniquity to tamper with any Man; and therefore such Questions ought not to be put. If you have any Witnesses, you may examine them.

Mr. Hungerford. Then we will examine to it.

Prisoner. Is that the Book I swore upon? [shewing a Book he had in his Hand.]

Mr. Buckley. I don't know indeed; it was such a sort of Book.

Mr. Att. Gen. I don't take that to be material, if it were the Alchoran. He had it in his Pocket. But it is not his Oath, but his Confession that is material.

Mr. Hungerford. Taking the Book into his Hands. I understand a little Hebrew. This is a Book to pray by, not swear by. It is a Collection of some Jewish Prayers and Rituals; I believe taken out of Maimonides. You had best send it the learned Monfalcon in Paris, he is compiling some critical Observations upon the Eastern Languages.

Mr. Ward. Did you put any Mark on any of those Letters?

Mr. Buckley. I did on some of them.

Mr. Hungerford. Where are the Extracts you made out of them?

Mr. Buckley. I have some of them here. [Holding out some Papers.]

Mr. Hungerford. What did you do with the Letters, after you had made those Extracts?

Mr. Just. Pratt. He tells you that he kept them till Mr. Walpole came back again, and then delivered them to him.

Mr. Buckley. Here is my Name on some of them. The two initial Letters of my Name.

Prisoner. When was that Mark made upon them?

Mr. Buckley. I don't justly remember.

Prisoner. That might be done yesterday, or since they were delivered out of his Custody.

Mr. Buckley. I did it while they were in my Possession, and before I deliver'd them back again to Mr. Walpole.

Then the Lord Townshend was sworn.

Sir J. Fekyll. We must desire your Lordship to inform the Court, what your Lordship knows in relation to the Prisoner at the Bar, as to the issuing out the Warrant against him, and what happened afterwards.

Lord Townshend. My Lord, having received Information that there was a treasonable Correspondence carry'd on between the late Duke of Ormond, Duke D'Aumont, Coulange and Mr. Harvey, in which the Prisoner was concerned, and was the Channel in which the Correspondence was convey'd; and that the Pretence of it was a Law-Suit, but that the Design of it was in Favour of the Pretender; and that when they talk'd of the Party, the Pretender was meant; and that they expected him to be soon here. Having reason to rely on this Information, I drew a Warrant to seize the Prisoner and his Papers. I had indeed before sent an Order to stop all Letters that came from France, directed to Francia, by which I receiv'd a Confirmation of the Intelligence which had been before given me. Upon the issuing out the Warrant, the Prisoner was seiz'd, and his Letters was brought to Mr. Walpole.

The next Day I sent for the Prisoner to be examin'd, and order'd Mr. Walpole to bring me the Papers, and sent for the Prisoner in. The Letters that Mr. Walpole brought in, were laid open upon the Table, and the Book lay by them. I ask'd him whether he knew the Hand, and whether those Letters were not for him? He own'd the Letters, but said he could not help what was in those Letters, and that what others wrote to him could not make him guilty. As for what I have wrote (said he) I appeal to my Book. That is my Book, I appeal to that for my Innocency. He did not appear obstinate, and I remanded him; and at Night I sent for him again, and Mr. Secretary Stanhope was with me; I had in that time look'd into more of the Letters, I saw several initial Letters of Peoples Names, I ask'd him the meaning of them; and he gave me the Account contain'd in this * Examination. He seem'd in a Disposition to tell me all he knew; he gave me an Account how this Correspondence began, and was carry'd on; and then he came to explain the initial Letters that were in those Letters that were taken upon him, and in several other Letters that I had intercepted. I remanded him again that Night, having taken his Examination in my Hand.

A second Examination was taken upon Mr. Harvey's Letter; (which Examination and the Letter thereto annex'd was shewn to his Lordship.)

This is the very Letter on which I examin'd him; he own'd to me how he came to stop the Letter, and not to forward it, and explain'd all those Figures to me very distinctly. He protested that he knew no more, and made solemn Protestations that he had said all he knew, and I was almost convinc'd he had; but in the Consequence, I had reason to think he had not. But these two Examinations were taken before me, one I sign'd alone, and the other Mr. Secretary Stanhope sign'd with me. As to the First, I believe Mr. Secretary Stanhope was gone out of the Room before it was sign'd.

Sir J. Jekyll. I desire to ask your Lordship whether all the Letters that were brought by Mr. Walpole were laid upon the Table at the time of the Prisoner's Examination?

Lord Townshend. All that Mr. Walpole brought me were laid there, and I saw him take them back again.

Mr. Ward. I desire to ask your Lordship whether you heard that Declaration read over to him?

Lord Townshend. I dare say I did.

Mr. Ward. Did he not endeavour to excuse himself from signing it, 'till he had read it himself?

Lord Townshend. I don't remember that, I don't know that he made any Difficulty of signing it; but I am sure it could not be because he was refus'd to read it.

Prisoner. Was not there any Reluctancy in me to sign it?

Lord Townshend. What do you mean? Have not I answer'd that already?

Prisoner. Did not you offer me some Money to sign it?

Lord Townshend. I hope you can't say a thing of so much Infamy. After he had been examin'd, he complain'd to me of the Misery he was reduc'd to, that his Wife and Family must starve, and represented himself as if he were at a loss for a Supper: I told him he had nothing to hope for, or any room to expect any Favour, but by making a clear Confession. He went on begging, and said that his Wife was starving; I do not certainly know whether it was the very Night that he sign'd his Confession or not; but I am sure it was not for that, but in pure Alms, and because he begg'd so hard, I put my Hand in my Pocket, and gave him three, four, or five Guineas, I know not which, in Charity; and it was what I never could refuse any Man that apply'd to me in that manner, and begg'd so hard. He said his Brother would not look upon him, because he was taken up for High-Treason, and he desired me to give him something in Charity, which I did.

Prisoner. I desire to ask you, whether you ever bestow'd on any body else the like Charity? Pray my Lord, name the Man under your Examination, you ever gave five Guineas to before? [At which there being a Laugh round the Court.]

Prisoner. I must not be laugh'd out of my Life; you did not answer me.

Lord Ch. Baron. Propose your Question to the Court?

Prisoner. I desire to know who he ever gave five Guineas to besides me?

L. Ch. Baron. My Lord says it was out of Charity.

Prisoner. And that he never refus'd any Body under his Examination the Sum of five Guineas?

L. Ch. Baron. He don't say so; he says, he never could refuse his Charity to People that begg'd as you did.

Prisoner. I had less need to beg than some others.

Mr. Ward. I have but one Question more to trouble your Lordship with, which my Instructions lead me to; and that is, whether at the time when this Examination was sign'd by the Prisoner, he was not told of its being for some particular Purpose, but that it should not be binding to him?

Lord Townshend. He did desire that it might not be made use of against him; I told him that depended on his Behaviour, if he was ingenuous, if he dealt frankly and fairly, and declar'd all the Truth, I would do all in my Power that he should have Mercy; I don't know whether it is proper to give my Reasons why I am convinc'd he did not deal candidly; but on the perusal of the Letters, I found he was not a bare Conveyer of them, or came by Chance to the Knowledge of what he explain'd in them, but that he was wrote to, as one of the Managers : On that I sent to him again, and told him plainly, he must know more of it. He stood it out that he did not, and then I sent him to Newgate : Soon after he was committed, his Wife came, as Mr. Buckley inform'd me, and acquainted him that she was persuaded, if she could see her Husband, that she could prevail with him to discover the whole : On that I gave Directions to put him into the Messenger's Hands again, which was done ; about a Morning or two after, one Curtis, who was in the same Messenger's House, brought a Letter to the Office, which he had found drop'd by his Man's Bed-side. It was directed to his Wife, and the Subject was to bid her not afflict herself, for he found better Company in Newgate than he expected, that the better half of them were in upon the Government Account ; that he had said nothing of Mr. Harvey that could hurt him, nor could he ; that the Government had nothing against Mr. Hurvey, but a general Suspicion that he was against the Government, which three Parts in four of the Nation were ; and that he himself laugh'd at any thing the Government could do against him the Prisoner : When I found a Man write in his Style, I could not but think he had not dealt ingenuously.

* Referring to the Original Examination.

Mr. Hungerford. I would propose to the Judgment of the Court, whether it is proper to give Evidence of the Substance of a Letter without offering the Letter itself.

Mr. Just. Pratt. This comes in Answer to Mr. Ward's Question. He ask'd my Lord Townshend, whether there was not some Promise that this Confession should not be made use of against the Prisoner ? His Lordship gives this Account, and justifies himself, how he came to make use of it, and gives this as the Reason.

Mr. Hungerford. But to give an Account of the Substance of a Letter without producing it, I apprehend, is not according to the Rules of Evidence.

Sir F. Jekyll. If the Council for the Prisoner desire the Letter to be read, it shall be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you insist upon the reading of it ?

Mr. Ward. If you will read it in the proper time you may.

Mr. Hungerford. If in the Course of the Evidence the Letter is not read, I don't press it.

Then Mr. Horat. Walpole was call'd again, and the Letter was shew'd to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, will you give an Account what you know of this Letter, and how it came to your Hands ?

Mr. Walpole. This Letter Curtis brought to me, and I made this * Mark on it : He told me it was found in Francia's Chamber near his Bed-side, and this is the Letter.

Mr. Ward. There is nothing prov'd yet of its being the Prisoner's Hand, its being found by his Bed-side will not affect him.

Then Mr. Buckley was call'd again, and the Letter was shew'd to him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray look upon this Paper, and tell us whose Hand-writing you take it to be ?

Mr. Buckley. I never did see the Prisoner write but once, and that was upon my being sent to him to take a Confession he seem'd willing to make, and then I sat by him while he was writing.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long did he write then ?

Mr. Buckley. About an Hour, and I read it over.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you believe this to be his Hand-writing ?

Mr. Buckley. I not only saw him write then, but I have read a great deal in this Book, which Mr. Walpole told me was taken at the Prisoner's House ; therefore being used to the Writing in this Book, and to what I saw him write, for those Reasons, and no other, I believe this Paper to be his Writing.

Mr. Denton. Are not the Letters of your Name on this Letter ?

Mr. Buckley. Yes : When Mr. Walpole put into my Hands all the Letters, my Lord bid me single out those that were fit to be extracted, and I did mark them that were extracted, and I always kept them in my Hands till Mr. Walpole return'd, and then I delivered them to him : Those Letters that I extracted, I mark'd ; some other Letters that were intercepted by my Lord Townshend, I did not mark, because they came to me at other times.

Mr. Denton. Did you mark that Letter ?

Mr. Buckley. Yes.

Mr. Ward. Can you be positive that it is the Prisoner's Hand ?

Mr. Buckley. No.

Mr. Ward. Do you rely on the Writing in the Book ?

Mr. Buckley. By that, and by what I did see him write, from thence it is that I conclude this to be his Hand.

Mr. Hungerford. He attempts to prove his Hand by two Inducements, one that he saw him write, and the other is the Book ; therefore let him fix on those Parts of the Book, that he takes to be the Prisoner's Hand, and to be like this Letter.

L. Ch. Baron. The Book is not material ; it is enough for a Man to say, that he saw another write for an Hour together, and then that he believes this to be his Hand.

Mr. Hungerford. If that was the single Foundation, it was something ; but he makes another Foundation also.

Mr. Just. Pratt. We are going out of the way, the Question is, Whether this shall be read ? In order to that, the Method is to prove, that the Witness is acquainted with the Prisoner's Hand-writing, and believes this to be his Writing. He tells you he saw him write for an Hour. He gives you a further Reason, that it is like some Letters in the Book. If that were laid out of the Case, the other would be sufficient without it.

Mr. Hungerford. A Man makes two Things the Foundation of his Judgment, his seeing him write, and the Similitude of Hands in the Book, the most conclusive Evidence would be, the Similitude of the Hand in the Book, which others may judge of as well as himself.

L. C. Baron. That is no Evidence at all ; Similitude of Hands is no Evidence.

Mr. Hungerford. I am far from thinking it is, or that there is as yet any Evidence at all. Do you believe this to be his Hand, only from your having seen him write, or from what you have observ'd in the Book also ?

Mr. Buckley. I say that from my having seen him write, and my having seen the Entries in the Book, I believe this to be his Hand.

Mr. Just. Pratt. If you had never seen the Book, but had seen him write for an Hour ; could you collect from thence that this was his Hand ?

* Showing a Mark upon the Letter.

Mr. Buckley. No, I would not affirm it.

Mr. Hungerford. Then it is with us, and makes it necessary to look into the Book.

Mr. Att. Gen. How come you to apprehend any one Part of the Book to be Francia's Writing more than the other?

Mr. Buckley. By my Eye-sight, and comparing it with this Letter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is it from your Knowledge of seeing him write?

Mr. Buckley. Yes, and this Writing being like this Book.

Sir. J. Jekyll. I desire this Matter may be considered how it stands, my Lord Townshend is examin'd touching the Confession of the Prisoner, and was asked, whether there was not Hopes of Mercy given him? My Lord said there were, upon his making a frank Discovery; but he tells you the Prisoner was not entitled to Mercy, because he had not made such a Discovery, and then gives an Account of this Letter: I thought the Council for the Prisoner appeal'd to that Letter, and would have had it produc'd, to check the Evidence given by my Lord.

Mr. J. Pratt. Since it is gone thus far, I think it would be proper to clear this matter.

Prisoner. I desire to know where Mr. Buckley saw me write for an Hour together?

Mr. Buckley. It was in the Messenger's House.

Mr. J. Tracy. My Lord Townshend was giving an Account in Answer to a Question propos'd by the Prisoner's Council, and gave his Reason why he did not think the Prisoner was frank. I did not think so (says he) because of a Letter which was found by his Bed-side. Says Mr. Hungerford, then that Letter ought to be produced.

Mr. Hungerford. If the Account is no more than that my Lord observed so upon that Letter, there is no great Harm in reading it: But I am still in your Judgment, whether, when the Contents of a Letter is insisted upon, and repeated, and that upon Memory only, the Letter itself ought not to be produced?

Then — Curtis was sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Look upon that Letter, whose Hand-writing is it?

Curtis. I believe it is Mr. Francia's.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Have you seen him write?

Curtis. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And do you believe it to be his Writing?

Curtis. Yes.

Mr. Ward. How long have you been acquainted with the Prisoner?

Curtis. While he was in the Messenger's Hands.

Mr. Ward. How often did you see him write?

Curtis. Several times.

Mr. Ward. Was you in Custody at the same time when he was?

Curtis. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where did you find this Letter?

Curtis. In his Chamber by his Bed-side.

Mr. Hungerford. I don't hear that he gives an Account, whether he is so well acquainted with his Writing, that he can distinguish it from any others?

Curtis. He told me it was a Letter that he had wrote to his Wife.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Letter is in French; we have a Translation of it; we must desire that the Interpreters who translated it may be sworn.

Then Mr. Bowyer and Mr. Ozell were both sworn,

Mr. Cowper. Did you translate the Letter?

Mr. Bowyer. I did, and afterwards I compared it with Mr. Ozell.

Mr. Cowper. Is that a true Translation of the Original Letter?

Mr. Bowyer. I did make a true genuine Translation of it, allowing for the Difference of Language and Stile.

Mr. Cowper. Was it the best and most exact Translation you was able to make?

Mr. Bowyer. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. Mr. Ozell, have you compared this Translation with the Original?

Mr. Ozell. Yes, and I believe it to be a true Translation.

Note. That the Original Letter was deliver'd into the Prisoner's Hand, during the Time that the Translation was reading; and Mr. Flint, who was permitted to stand in the Bar near the Prisoner, assisted him in comparing the Original with the Translation. The like Method was observed, when the Translations of the Letters received by the Prisoner were read; and when the Letters wrote by him were read out of the Copy-Book, the Copy-Book was shewn to him.

[Clerk reads.]

My Dear,

ALL I exhort you to, is, to make yourself as easy as you can. I do the same, and am well, having slept well last Night; and the Company here is much better than I expected; they are all Tories, and the major Part for the Government, that is sent hither for being so, according to their Informations. Although all should fail, and my Lord Townshend should do nothing, the Business will be at an End in less than a Fortnight. You know upon what Account I am here, which cannot disgrace me. Be therefore comforted, and do not grieve. God will assist us. I neither know, nor have said any thing against Mr. Harvey, nor can they do any thing to him, unless he has other Affairs which I know not of; therefore you may assure that Frenchman, that's false, for I know nothing against that Gentleman, which is not intirely regular. He may only be suspected of being a Friend to the Pretender; but that was well known before; and if all who are so were to be punish'd, above three fourths of the Nation would suffer. Therefore I laugh at any thing they can do to me, all my Sorrow is not to be with you; and I would not see you in this wretched Place, in which you can but grieve both me and yourself. Adieu.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray let me have the Letter; I have a little French, and I would willingly see how they render the Word Tories.

Mr. J. Pratt. When did you find this Letter?

Curtis. Upon the 27th Day of November.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord Townshend, pray be pleased to give an Account of the Occasion that this Confession was not sign'd by both the Secretaries?

Lord Townshend. I suppose Mr. Secretary Stanhope might be gone out of the Room.

Mr. Hungerford. I would not willingly trouble my Lord Townshend at any other Time, and therefore would take this Opportunity: I think your Lordship said, that the Letters that were stopp'd at the Post-Office were laid on the Table with with the other Letters, when the Prisoner was examined?

Lord Townshend. I did not say that. The Letters that were intercepted, I did first lay them before the King, and then put them into the same Hands with the other Letters.

Then Mr. Secretary Stanhope was sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Secretary Stanhope, we must desire you to inform the Jury what you know about the Examinations of the Prisoner, and the Confession he made.

Mr. Sec. Stanhope. I have here two Examinations, one sign'd by my Lord Townshend, the 21st of Sept. and the other dated the 22^d of Sept. sign'd by my Lord Townshend and myself. I was present at both the Examinations: There has been an Account given of the first, which is perfectly agreeable to what pass'd there, and my Name is to the second.

There is annex'd to this second a Letter, which we take to be Mr. Harvey's: I remember the Letter; the Hand is particular, and there are Figures by way of Cyphers. I remember very well this Letter. It has been before the Cabinet Council. It was shewn to Mr. Harvey at the Council-Table; he did not deny it, but shew'd the utmost Consternation when it was shewn to him; and desir'd that he might withdraw, and have the Liberty to speak to one particular Lord. The manner of his Behaviour was such, as to induce the Lords of the Council to be of Opinion, that he was inclin'd to confess what he knew; therefore they thought fit to let him withdraw, and go to the Messenger's House; but his Agonies were such, that he stabb'd himself that Night, or the next Morning.

I believe at twice we spent about two Hours in the Examination of the Prisoner, and these Examinations were taken from his own Mouth; and I can be positive there is not a Passage in them, that he did not repeat more than once or twice. The Reason why my Name is to one, and not to the other, may be, because the Room where he was examined was next to the Room where the Council used to meet; and I believe I might be going in and out between the two Rooms, and might not be there when he sign'd it; and therefore I might not think it proper to set my Name to what I did not see sign'd: But I saw him sign that to which my Hand is set; and I don't remember that he had any Reluctancy to sign it. I read the first Examination more than once or twice to him, and did myself examine him to all the Particulars of it.

After the first Night's Examination, it is certain he behav'd himself like a Man not worth a Groat, intimating as if he did not know how to get a Supper: He represented himself in a pitiful Condition, and it was at his going out of the Room, that my Lord put his Hand in his Pocket, and gave him something, what it was I don't know, but it was after he had sign'd his Examination; for, after it, there was a good deal of Conversation pass'd between him and me. I ask'd him several Questions, as to his being in France, and about the Countries he came from; and ask'd him as to several Spanish Letters that were in the Book, and other Things of that Nature.

Mr. Ward. Did he not desire to read over the Examinations before he sign'd them?

Mr. Sec. Stanhope. I don't remember that he did; but they were read over to him, and he was ask'd to every Particular by myself, some one Particular might slip; but I did examine him, I think, to every Particular, in order to have it alter'd, if he objected to it, and he did not express the least Reluctancy. I saw him set his Hand to one of them; as to the other, I can't say, because the Room was next to the Room where the Council was sitting, and I don't know but that I might be there.

Mr. Ward. Do you remember any thing particular that was said to him, that those Examinations should only be laid before his Majesty, and no other Use made of them.

Mr. Sec. Stanhope. I don't remember any such thing.

Sir J. Jekyll. If he had desired to have read these Examinations, would you have refused it?

Mr. Sec. Stanhope. It never was denied to any Man to read his Examination before he sign'd it, where I was present.

Sir J. Jekyll. Nor you would not have refus'd him, if he had desired it?

Mr. Sec. Stanhope. No, God forbid.

Mr. Hungerford. I am informed that the Prisoner wrote some Letters to my Lord Townshend, complaining of some other Use being made of his Examinations, than was design'd?

Mr. Sec. Stanhope. I received some Letters from the Prisoner, but none that I thought were of any sort of avail.

Mr. Hungerford. Did he complain of his not being suffer'd to read them?

Mr. Sec. Stanhope. I don't remember it; but I am sure it was not so. If he did complain, it was without any Ground.

Prisoner. I desire a Sight of the Original Letter, which Curtis said Which was shewn him accordingly. I own'd. I never wrote one Word of it; it is forged since: Any Body will say it; it is not like my Hand.

Mr. Cowper. Before the Examinations are read, I desire the Gentlemen of the Jury would take an Account in Writing of the initial Letters and Figures they will hear read, and then will observe who are the Persons meant and intended by them, according to the Prisoner's Explanation, when he was examin'd. Gentlemen, it is necessary you should understand, who are the Persons that are intended by the Letters and Numbers. If you take them down, all the Letters will read to the Purpose.

L. C. Baron. Gentlemen, the desire you will take Notice of the Letters and Numbers that are explain'd in this Examination, because you will the better understand the Letters that will be read to you: That is what they desire, and it will be for your Satisfaction.

The Examination upon Oath of Francis Francia of London, Merchant.

Clerk reads. THIS Examinant saith, That about two Years ago he became acquainted with the Abbot Butler, otherwise call'd, the Vidame of Cambray, at the Time when the Duke D'Aumont was here; and afterwards, viz. soon after the Duke D'Aumont left England, this Examinant receiv'd a Letter from the said Butler, then in France, recommending to this Examinant's Care a Law-Suit, in which one Barbara Butler, a Kinswoman of the said Abbot's, Abbot's, was concerned; that this occasion'd a Correspondence between this Examinant and the said Abbot Butler, which from a little before the late Queen's Death, hath lasted till within these few Days past; during which Correspondence with the said Abbot, this Examinant received from the said Abbot several Letters directed to Mr. Edward Harvey of Combe, and convey'd back several Letters from the said Mr. Edward Harvey to the said Abbot, which Letters to the said Abbot, from the said Mr. Harvey, were sometimes brought to this Examinant by the said Mr. Harvey himself, and at other Times sent by Mr. Harvey to this Examinant.

This Examinant further saith, That at such Times during the said Correspondence, as the Abbot Butler was at Cambray, the said Mr. Harvey usually brought or sent to this Examinant two Letters, one directed to the said Abbot at Cambray, and the other, either directed by Mr. Harvey himself, to the Duke D'Aumont at the French Court; or the said Mr. Harvey desired this Examinant to direct the same to the Duke D'Aumont, the said Mr. Harvey telling this Examinant, that he did not send the said Letters himself to France openly, because he would not expose himself to be reflected on for having Friends in France, not that he car'd a Pin if it were known, because we were in Peace with France, or Words to that Effect.

This Examinant further saith, that the Letters so delivered, or sent to him by the said Harvey, for the said Abbot, or for the Duke D'Aumont, were by this Examinant sent over to France under a Cover directed to Monsieur D'Aulmay, alias Payen at Paris, but about two Months ago that Method of Correspondence was changed; for the said Payen, instead of inclosing his Answers to the said Mr. Harvey in Letters or Covers directed to this Examinant, wrote only to this Examinant, but order'd him to shew to Mr. Harvey, or to deliver to him, what he so wrote to this Examinant, which this Examinant did accordingly.

This Examinant further saith, that whereas in some of the Letters lately written to him by Monsieur Payen, to be communicated to the said Mr. Harvey, and which were communicated to the said Mr. Harvey accordingly, and which being taken in this Examinant's Custody, were shewn to him; there are the Letters M. H. and my D. D. and M. B. which seem to be the initial Letters of Men's Names; he, this Examinant, understood that the said Letters M. H. stand for the aforesaid Mr. Harvey, and my D. D. for the Duke of Ormond, and M. B. for the Lord Bolbroke; and this Examinant verily believes that the Subject of the said Letters written to him by Payen to be communicated to Mr. Harvey aforesaid, is the Design of the Pretender to invade his Majesty's Dominions.

The further Examination of Francis Francia

THIS Examinant being sworn, says, That a Letter shewn to him, and mark'd by him, which is hereto annexed, and is dated the 9th of January, 1714. and writ by Mr. Edward Harvey's own Hand, was sent to him, this Examinant, by the said Mr. Harvey, under a Cover, in order to be forwarded to the Abbot Butler in France: And that this Examinant in opening the Cover, accidentally broke the Seal of the said inclosed Letter, which made him detain the said Letter, and not forward it, lest it should be imagined that he had opened the said Letter, out of a Curiosity to read it. And this Examinant further saith, that he verily believes that by N^o (22) mentioned in the second Line in the said Letter, is understood the Duke D'Aumont; and that N^o (6) mentioned in the thirteenth Line in the said Letter, and where-ever the said N^o (6) is mentioned in the said Letter, he, this Examinant, verily believes it signifies and is meant to stand for the late French King: And that by N^o (17) mentioned in the said Letter, is to be understood the Word Tories; and that where-ever (22) is mentioned in the said Letter, the Duke D'Aumont is meant. And this Examinant further saith, he verily believes that by (8) is to be understood the Pretender; and by (9) mentioned in the said Letter, is to be understood his Majesty; but that this Examinant doth not well know what 24000, mentioned in the said Letter, stands for; neither can he tell what (14) stands for, mentioned in the said Letter.

Mr. Att. General. We will now show the Nature of this Correspondence, by their sending Letters to and again, and shew when he came into it himself.

Mr. Ward. Are you going to offer any Letters?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, out of his own Book.

Mr. Ward. We must humbly submit it to your Lordship's Judgment, whether they can offer any of these Letters in Evidence, the Charge of the Overt-Act is general, that he wrote several treasonable Letters: Now a Confession that there were several treasonable Letters past, might support that Allegation, or they may give Evidence in general, that he did write such Letters. But we must be in your Lordship's Judgment, whether they can produce any particular Letters, which are every one of them Overt-Acts themselves, and are not laid in the Indictment.

We think the Law has guarded the Life of a Man by the Stat. 25 Edw. III. That tho' the Intention is the Crime, yet that must be declared by Overt-Act or Deed, which must be charged in the Indictment. And the late Laws since the Revolution says nothing shall be given in Evidence, but what is expressly laid in the Indictment. Now if this be allowed of under such a general Charge, to prove such a number of Facts, which are not charged particularly in the Indictment, then all the Security of that Law will be eluded, and a Man will be no more able to make a Defence, than if it had been laid in general, that he conspired the Death of the King; or it had been laid, that in order thereto, he had been guilty of several treasonable Practices.

We insist that they can't under this Allegation give any Evidence but what is correspondent to it, as any Confession or Proof in general; but they can't enter into any distinct Overt-Act, which ought to be laid, and can't be given in Evidence unless expressly laid in the Indictment. If that Act has any meaning, it is to avoid any such Artifice as this; and it obliges them that are concerned for the King to specify in the Indictment the Overt-Act they will go upon:

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I think we have an Objection to the reading these Letters that cannot be got over. The Law hath in all Ages guarded the Life of the Subject against Prosecutions for High-Treason, and with a great deal of Reason: The Offence is great; the Prosecutions supported with great Power and Influence, and the Consequence great to the Party concerned; for it is not only the Loss of his Life, but the Ruin of his Family and Estate; his Family must be infamous and his Estate forfeited; therefore the Law hath guarded the Life of the Subject in a more particular manner, against these Prosecutions, than against any other capital Offences.

Before that happy Law, 25 Edw. III. the Prosecutions in Cases of High-Treason were such, that no Man could be safe against them. There was scarce any thing a Subject could do, even any thing that did but give the Umbrage of Offence, but might be drawn into the compass of High-Treason. In Truth, the Definition or Description of High-Treason before this Act is so loose that it gave a colour for this Proceeding. It was among other things, Si quis aliquid egerit vel agi procuraverit ad seditionem domini Regis vel exercitus sui, &c. And in pursuance of this Notion of High-Treason, imprisoning an Officer of Justice, and Officers cheating Soldiers of their Pay, killing a Person going to List himself, &c. were before this Act adjudged High-Treason. And I can shew that some of those hard Cases happen'd the Circuit before the Act. And therefore the Legislature thought fit to ascertain what Offences should be Treason for the future. And our Historians remark, that from the Time of this Law, the Sword that before hung by a slender Thread over the Heads of the Subjects, was then removed; and for this Reason likewise the Parliament is called Benedictum.

It is true, that the bare Compassing, or imagining the Death of the King is Treason, and it ought to be so; for in that precious Life the Common Weale, the Happiness of all the Subjects, is eminently concerned. But this Act of Parliament hath provided, that such Compassing, &c. shall be proved by Overt-Act, that is, not by Inferences, strained Constructions, or rhetorical Aggravations, and the like, but by plain Proof of Matter of Fact. And I am bold to say, the Intent of this Law was perverted for some Ages, by laying the Charges of High-Treason, so loose, that the Party could not tell how to apply his Defence: And of this, and other Kinds, there had been several irregular Prosecutions; such as those of Col. Sidney, my Lord Russel, &c. And for these Reasons the late Act for regulating Trials, &c. hath provided, that no Evidence of an Overt-Act, shall be given but what is specially laid in the Indictment: And such a Certainty was intended, that the Party might know certainly and exactly to what Points to apply his Defence.

If it should be admitted that what is done in this Indictment is sufficient to answer this Act, the Intent of it will be eluded: For the Intent is, that the Criminal shall know how to apply his Defence. The Offence in this Case is supposed to be in the Letters; must not therefore the Letters, or the Substance be set forth? For my Part I think they must, or they cannot be given in Evidence. I can produce very ancient Authorities to this purpose: And as to the Modern ones, besides that in Dr. Sacheverell's Case, I have one in my Eye, which is Mr. Attorney's own Authority (for which I shall always have a great Regard) in the Indictment against *Gregg, which was a Prosecution of Mr. Attorney's; there the Letter was set out at length.

Mr. Att. Gen. That was not in my Time; I was not Attorney then.

Mr. Hungerford. I beg Mr. Attorney's Pardon; but he has been in and out so often, that I may have been easily led into a Mistake.

I have another very great Authority, and that was in the Case of Dr. Sacheverell: The Question was put to all the Judges for their Solution, whether in all Informations and Indictments, for Offences in Speaking and Writing, the Words ought not to be particularly mentioned? This was the Question proposed, and it was answered, that it ought so to be: Your Lordship's Answer was, That you was of the same Opinion with your Brethren. You, my Lord, Mr. Justice Tracy, agreed in the same Opinion, and so did the Eleven Judges then present; which was, that the Words supposed to be criminal, whether written or spoken, must be expressly specified in the Indictment or Information. This I am sure is the greatest Authority that can be in any Case: It is the Authority of all the then Judges of England, who were but Eleven, the Lord Chief Justice Holt being then lately dead; so, my Lords, to justify this Objection, we have the Precedents on our Side, particularly of Coleman, Fitzbarris, Gregg and Sidney; in all which Cases the Papers supposed to be Criminal, or the Substance of them, are inserted in the Indictment. We have the Authorities for us, Ancient and Modern, and we have the Reason of the Thing for us. It being the highest Reason and Justice, that as the Prisoner is now to have some Days before his Trial the Names of his Judges, viz. the Panel of the Jury, so he should be apprized of his Charge with so much Certainty, as to know how to apply his Defence; and we don't doubt therefore but we shall have your Lordship's Opinion in favour of our Objection.

Sir J. Jekyll. We may offer this Book and these Letters, notwithstanding this Objection. Mr. Ward did not go so far as Mr. Hungerford, that it is necessary to set them forth Verbatim. As to that, I believe it was never done in any Case: And as to Coleman's Case, those Letters are not set forth; but it is alledged, that they were wrote to procure the Aid and Assistance of the French King, as it is here said, that the Prisoner's Letters were to desire Assistance from France to the Rebellion here. If it be necessary to set forth the Words in the Case of a Misdemeanour for a Libel in the ordinary Courts of Justice, it is because the Libel is the Crime; but in the Case of a treasonable Correspondence it is otherwise; for there the Letters are not the Crime, but the Overt-Act of the Treason, which is the Manifestation of the Crime. Besides, let it be consider'd what Evidence are we going to offer; we offer the Letters sent to him in answer to the Letters wrote by him, and to require us to set them out in the Indictment is impossible; when we make it part of the Charge that the Letters were sent to France, it is to mock us to call upon us to produce those Letters themselves.

Mr. Ward seemed to admit, that the Clause mentioned by him in the Statute 7 Will. was grounded upon the 25 Edw. III. For that old Statute doth require, that a Man be attainted by Overt-Act; and what doth 7 Will. do in that Case? No more than to make plain what the Law was before: For the Words are, that no Evidence shall be given of an Overt-Act that is not expressly laid in the Indictment; and from thence the Prisoner's Council would infer, that no Letters ought to be given in Evidence that is not laid in the Indictment: No, the Act requires only that the Overt-Act be expressly laid in the Indictment. Not that the Evidence shall be expressly laid in the Indictment. All that the Court is to consider as to this Matter is, whether the Overt-Act is not sufficiently laid in the Indictment; it will not be doubted, but that writing Letters to excite Rebellion is an Overt-Act. Then the Question is, whether this Indictment doth not expressly alledge this Overt-Act. The Words in the Indictment are these; Quodque prædictus Franciscus Francia, ad diem Prædicon' & Diabolic' & Proditor' Intencon' & proposi' præd' ulterius perimplend' perficiend' & ad effectum redigend' postea scil' eodem primo Die Septembris, Anno supradicto nec non diversis al' diebus & vicibus tam antea quam postea apud London' præd' in parochia & Ward' præd' malitiose, diabolice & proditorie composuit & scripsit & componi & scribi causavit separales proditorias Epistolas notifican' intention' & resolution' ipsius Francisci Francia & præd' al',

* Jan. 19. 170 $\frac{7}{8}$. at the Old Bailey, when Sir Simon Harcourt was Attorney-General.

proditor' Fur' præd' ad huc ignot' ad bellum præd' contra dictum Dominum Regem nunc movend, &c.
This is surely an express laying the Overt-Act of which these Letters are the Evidence.

Trial 146. I have been looking upon the Case of my Lord Preston; which though it was before the Statute of 7 Will. yet my Lord Preston was not without the Assistance of Council, though he was not allowed them in Court. It is there laid, that he wrote several Letters to inform the French King what the Forces of the Kingdom were; and the Indictment goes on to shew the Purport of those Letters. But in that Case the Letters are not particularly set forth: And yet that was never made an Objection at his Trial, or before Judgment. In that Indictment is charged his writing Letters, and they are described, and that we have done. This we think is sufficient, that is, that we are bound to lay the Overt-Act expressly, but not the Evidence of that Overt-Act.

Mr. Attorney-General. This is a surprizing Objection; we admit there must be an Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, and that is all that the Law requires; we must set it out so that we may apply our Evidence to it: And the Meaning of the Statute is, that when you lay one Overt-Act, you must not prove another.

The Instance that is given by the Serjeants is very strong, and every Body remembers Coleman's Case, the writing Letters is an Overt-Act; but it is not necessary to set them out, that being the Evidence of the Overt-Act. In Gregg's Case there was but one single Letter which was set out, and that was stopp'd at the Post-House.

In the Case of Libels they must be set out; and that was the Opinion of the Judges in Dr. Sacheverell's Case in Proceedings at Law: But the Course of Parliament was held by the Lords to be otherwise. We have charged that he agreed to write Letters; that he did write them, and send them; and now they would have us to set out those Letters that are sent beyond Sea: And if that were Law, it would be impossible to convict any Man of a Correspondence Abroad, because the Letters are sent Abroad.

If it was charged in the Indictment, that he wrote to a great Numbers of Men, it would not be necessary to set out the Names of those Men; this is a Matter we don't need to labour much; for this last Statute has not alter'd the Law, as to the laying the Overt-Act, but only as to the Proof: that when you lay one Overt-Act, you can't prove another. I don't know that it could have been done before; so that that Act, as to this Matter, was only a Declaration of what the Law was before.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We think none of the Cases instanced prove what is insisted upon in this Case. That Case of Coleman is mistaken, for the Letters in that Case are not set forth particularly, only the Subject-Matter and Nature of them, as is here done.

They can instance no Case where the Indictment is for writing treasonable Letters, importing a treasonable Correspondence, that ever they were set out in the Indictment; and to what a length would such an Indictment be carried, if it should be done in this Case.

Col. Sidney's Case is against them; for there was a whole Volume wrote by him, and there was nothing put into the Indictment but the Substance of a very little Part; and that was Col. Sidney's own Objection: Says he, Am I to be found guilty for a little Part that is cull'd out of the rest; when if the whole was put in, by comparing the whole together, it might not be possible to collect any Treason from it?

As to Dr. Sacheverell's Case, that is quite different from this; for that was in the Case of a Libel, where the Offence properly consists in the Expression. But even in the Case of Libels. I must beg leave to deny that the particular Words must be set out in the Indictment; for a Libel may be so out in Latin, which is the better and safer way; and then if you set out the Substance, it is sufficient. And if you may set it out in Latin, it can't be true that you are bound down to the particular Words, for Latin Words and the English Words can't be the same.

The Act of Treasons say, No Evidence is to be given but of the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment. Now what is that Overt-Act here? It is writing Letters, which is specially express'd, and the Substance of them set out, which shews them to be treasonable. The Inconvenience objected is nothing, unless it shall be suppos'd, that the Prisoner may have wrote so many treasonable Letters that he can't recollect them all.

Besides, it is to be considered, that all these Letters import a Correspondence, and so are to be consider'd as many, but as one Overt-Act, it is entire, and it is unreasonable as well as unnecessary, that the whole Correspondence should be set out. Therefore we think we have done what is sufficient, and that they can't give one Instance of a Case where the Treason consisted in writing many Letters of Correspondence, that the Letters themselves were set out. For the Design of the Law before-mentioned was no more, than that it should not be lawful to lay one Overt-Act, and give Evidence of another.

The Treason is, the Prisoner has imagin'd the Death of the King; and the Overt-Act is, he has wrote several Letters, that is expressly and specially laid; and then to distinguish these Letters from all others, the Substance of those Letters are set out, notifying his Intentions to raise a Rebellion in this Kingdom, and inciting those in foreign Parts, to aid, assist, and join with him.

But this Objection may receive another Answer, and that is, that there are two other Overt-Acts, besides his writing of treasonable Letters, which are conspiring, consulting, and agreeing to raise a Rebellion and Insurrection in this Kingdom, and soliciting Aid and Assistance from France: And these Letters are very good Evidence to prove those Overt-Acts; for I believe it will not be denied, but that these Letters are Evidence of a Conspiracy, and therefore if they could not be read in Evidence to prove the writing Letters, because they are not set out in the Indictment, yet they may be read as Evidence to prove a Conspiracy.

Therefore we insist that we are right both in Point of Reason and of Precedent.

Mr. Ward. My Lord, I beg a Word or two by way of Reply: They say we have not mentioned one Case where the Treason is grounded upon Letters, where they have been set out in the Indictment: I believe they can't shew one Case where it has been otherwise; we insist upon the Case of Colonel Sidney and of Fitzbarris.

Colonel Sidney's Objection was, That they had not set forth the whole Book; but they had set forth entire Paragraphs, and that is what I insist they should have done in this Case.

They would have it believ'd, that the Act of Parliament, 7 Will. is nothing, and that the Law stands as it was upon 25 Edw. III. It was taken to be a great Point gained when that latter Act was pass'd, and I am sorry it is like to have so little Effect. But we insist that what is now offer'd hath all the ill Effects that were before the making of the Act. It is not that a Man must be suppos'd to have wrote so many treasonable Letters, that he can't remember them; but he don't know which of his Letters may be called so. And it was open'd that these Letters were of such a Nature, that they could not be understood without producing them. Therefore they ought to be set out, that so a Man may know which of them to defend himself against.

There is one Case like this, which is the Case of the good Name of a Man: Every Witness that is produced may be examin'd to his Credit; but you will not suffer particular Facts to be prov'd upon him, because he can't be prepar'd to maintain every Action of his Life. And that was intended in this Case; that a Man might be certain what he was to defend himself against, especially in the Prosecutions from the Crown, which usually come with a greater Weight than other Prosecutions. Agreeable to this have all the Precedents been when any thing have been founded upon Letters.

Mr. Attorney says, that the Letters are sent into France: So that they can't be produced. I did not object that they ought to be produced. But they are going to produce a Copy-Book to prove, that there were such Letters, and by that they had the same Opportunity to set them out, as if they had the Letters themselves.

There is no Inconvenience to the Crown by this Method, but the greatest Inconvenience to the Subject by omitting it; for he may have all the Letters he ever wrote brought against him, and he must off-hand give an Account of them.

[Mr. Ward, who had an Hoarseness upon him, clos'd with saying, that his Voice fail'd him, and that he could go no farther.]

Mr. Hungerford. The Gentleman who is join'd with me in the Defence of the Prisoner complains that his Voice fails him; (God be thanked) I have no Defect of that sort, for I can speak pretty audibly, but I have a greater, for I had my Instructions late last Night.

Mr. Solicitor observes, that we are not entitled to have those Letters set out either by Reason or by Precedent; as to the Reason of the Thing, I appeal to your Lordship, whether all the Laws relating to Trials of Treasons, and some others, which are to take Effect three Years after his Majesty's Accession to the Throne, and the Death of the Pretender, have not been grounded on this great Reason, to guard the Subject against Prosecutions that have been sometimes carried on with too much Severity. And as to what relates to the present Case, that the Overt-Act should be so particularly laid, as to describe the Offence with so much Certainty as to enable the Prisoner to apply his Defence.

What is the Intent of laying an Overt-Act at all, but that the Defendant may suit his Defence to it. If it is intended only that you shall not give Evidence of a different Overt-Act, as the King's-Council would expound it, that will be of little avail to the Prisoner. It is of late grown to be the Practice to lay the Treason, to be in conspiring the King's Death, and the Overt-Act, to be conspiring to levy War, though by the way, that is making one Article of the Statute of 25 Edw. III. redundant and useles; for if every Intention of levying War doth imply an Intention to kill the King, there was no need of making levying of War a distinct Species of Treason at all, for at that rate it was comprehended in the former. And as to what is said, that laying the Overt-Act is a sufficient Certainty of the Charge, I think not; suppose the Overt-Act laid, be levying of War, or an Intention so to do; there are several Instances of levying War, one way may be by mustering Men, another by seizing some of the King's Ships: These are so different, that upon a general Charge of levying War, one perhaps may prepare to defend himself at Sea, and may be attack'd at Land; and so vice versa; and by the general Charge he don't know what to defend himself against. Therefore the Intent of that Act must be to give a Man such a Notice of the Matter laid to his Charge that he may know how to apply himself to his Defence.

I did not insist that the Letters at large ought to be set out, but the Substance of them, or the Paragraphs in them, containing the Words suppos'd to be criminal, so that a Man may know how to apply to his Defence.

As to my Lord Preston's Case, though he might have Council to advise him, yet in his Time he could not (as the Judges had determin'd the Matter) have a Copy of his Indictment; so that he was outed of any Observations that could be made upon it. Therefore if that Indictment is in the same manner with this, it will be no Authority, for it might be irregular, as we insist this is, and yet there could be no Opportunity to observe it so to be.

As to what Mr. Solicitor insists, that to insert the Letters at large, would make the Indictment long and tedious: For God's Sake, my Lord, is there any Competition betwixt the Charge of two or three Skins of Parchment, and a Man's Life?

As for the Precedents, I have here Coleman's Case, where the Date and Substance of the Letter is mentioned; and in Colonel Sidney's Case, the Title of the Book, and the Paragraphs insisted on are set out: In Fitzbarris's Case, the Letter is set out Verbatim. As to what is said of Dr. Sacheverell's Case, that it was only for a Misdemeanour, I am bold to say, the Question was ask'd in general, whether in all Indictments or Informations, the Words or Writing suppos'd to be criminal, should not be set out. And surely if in a Case of Misdemeanour, where only Fine or Imprisonment is the Punishment, so much Certainty is required, much more Certainty ought to be requisite in a Charge of High-Treason, where Loss of Life, Estate, and Posterity are the Consequence of the Conviction. So that as I observ'd before, we have both Reason and Precedent with us, and they have neither of their Side, and those Precedents that are of their Side, were before the late Act of Parliament.

L. C. Baron. The Objection made by the Council for the Prisoner, is, that tho' here is an Overt-Act laid, yet it is not laid so expressly as it ought ought to be. The Overt-Act is, That he wrote several Letters to Foreigners, to move and excite a War, and sent them to Foreigners beyond Sea for that purpose. I think this is a sufficient Description of the Overt-Act, and that is as much as is required by the Act of Parliament. That Act says, That no Evidence shall be given of any Overt-Act, that is not expressly laid in the Indictment. None can say that here is not an Overt-Act expressly laid. If it is expressly laid, and sufficiently described, sure it is not necessary to mention all the Evidence that is to prove the Overt-Act, the Intent of the Law is no more, than that the Overt-Act should be sufficiently described and charged in the Indictment. It is here so charged and described, the Design and Intention of the Letters is set forth, and they go to prove that such Letters, manifesting such Design and Intention, were written, and that they have laid that he wrote several Letters to move this War, then they go to produce the Letters. I am of Opinion, that they need not be more particularly described, and it would be endless to set out all the Letters.

As to what Mr. Hungerford insisted on in Dr. Sacheverell's Case (which made a great Noise formerly, and has made some Noise now) the Question there put to the Judges, was concerning Crimes and Misdemeanours, by Writing or Speaking. As the Crime of a Libel consists only in the Words, and therefore they must be laid in the Indictment, he might as well have mentioned an Action upon the Case for Words. There the Words must be expressly laid, and they must be prov'd as they are laid.

But here the Crime is compassing and imagining the Death of the King, and the writing and sending of Letters to Foreigners to excite a War is the Overt-Act, and that Act is expressly laid in this Indictment, which is sufficient, without setting forth the Words of the Letters.

If it be laid, that a Man did consult and agree to levy War, a Time and Place must be laid, but all the Times and Places when and where he met and consulted, and all the Persons Names with whom he met and consulted, need not be mentioned in the Indictment, neither need the very Words of the Consultation be set forth. Therefore I think this Overt-Act is sufficiently laid, and, as Mr. Solicitor observes, if there was no other Act laid, but consenting and agreeing to levy War, they might prove it by Letters, although no Letters had been mentioned; but here the Overt-Act is more particularly described, that he wrote Letters for that Purpose. Those Letters are now offer'd to be read, and I think they ought to be read.

Mr. Just. Tracy. I am of the same Opinion; I think they have sufficiently set out the Nature of the Overt-Act, writing Letters, praying Aid of Foreigners to assist in a Rebellion. Some of those Letters are sent by the Prisoner beyond Sea, and they can't be set out; and whatever is alledged as certainly as the Nature of the Thing will bear, is certain enough.

But it is objected, you have the Copy-Book, and you might set them out by that. But they don't go on that only, but also on several Letters wrote to and receiv'd by the Prisoner; and to set forth all those Letters in an Indictment, is against Reason. But this is not the Matter now, for Mr. Ward's Objection was against reading the Letters, which were offered to prove the writing and sending the Letters as charg'd in the Indictment; but instead of shewing they are not Evidence, you have run into Exceptions against the Indictment itself; for Uncertainty is not setting out the Letters particularly, which is not the Question now.

Mr. Just. Pratt. I am of the same Opinion; many Things have been said of the great Care of the Laws to preserve the Life of the Subject. I hope we shall always take a due Care to put those Laws in Execution; but we must take Care of that precious Life, as Mr. Hungerford calls it, not to hazard it, by making it too difficult to convict any Man of such a Correspondence. And if we should make such a Construction of the Act, as they contend for, it would be impracticable to convict any Man in any Case.

The Act says, the Overt-Act shall be express'd, and is it not so here? It is writing Letters, and with an Intent to levy War against the King; so that it is mentioned that there were Letters, and the Purport of those Letters is set forth. And whatever has been said of that Case that was in the House of Lords, none of you can say, but that it is sufficient in Informations for Libels, if they are set forth in Latin, to set out the Substance of the Words. If a Man sets it out Verbatim, he is tied up to the very Words, and by a Letter or Syllable mistaken, he may be gone: Therefore the best way is to set out the Substance only. Now what would you be the better, if you had what you ask, if there are several Letters to the same purpose? It would only be setting out the same thing over and over again. This satisfies the Meaning of the Act as fully as if they had been set out at large. But to say that a Man shall be bound to set out the Letter itself, when it is gone from him, when it is gone beyond Seas, how can he come at it? If that were to be the Case, a Man might carry on a Correspondence, and you could never convict him.

I think this is sufficient to answer the Intent of the Act. They offer you Letters that correspond with the Indictment, and if they offer any that do not, they will not be proper to be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will read our Letters as they are in Time and shew the Nature of the Correspondence.

Mr. Ward. I am informed there are different Hands in that Book: Now whether your Lordship will admit them to read it under a general Proof of his owning it to be his Copy-Book, or whether you will not expect that that which is his Writing shou'd be prov'd, and what is wrote by any other, to be wrote by his Direction, or Privity; for a small Variance in the Expression may turn a Man out of his Life.

Mr. Hungerford. All that the Witnesses said was, that the Prisoner said it was his Copy-Book. Now whether he is to be affected by every Word in that Volume, is what we must submit to your Lordship; and whether they ought not to single out which were wrote by him, and which not; for his saying that is his Book, that is, the Volume is his, the Cover is his, and the Paper is his, but it will not imply that he is the Author of all those Letters.

Sir J. Fekyll. My Lord, when they objected to our reading the Copy-Book, they ought to have made all their Objections together; but this being being in the Case of Life, I won't stand upon that.

It is plain, it ought to be read; for you observe the Letters, of which these are Copies, are suppos'd to be sent to France; and it is impossible to have them; then what Certainties have we touching these Letters? We have the taking the Book in the Custody of the Prisoner, and if there had been no more than its being found in his Custody, I apprehend we might have been let in to read them. But it goes a great way farther; for several of the Witnesses swear that he own'd it was his Copy-Book of his Letters.

Let's consider how this Evidence would have been, if it had been given to every Letter in particular. If we had produ'd one single Copy of a Letter, and he own'd that was a Copy of a Letter wrote by him, will any one doubt but that it might be read? Now the Evidence say that he own'd this to be the Copy-Book of his Letters.

Mr. Just. Tracy. Where the Court is in no doubt, we must not spend our Time in arguing Points that have nothing in them.

L. C. Baron. It is no matter whether any of them are of his Hand-writing or not, I think they may be read.

Then the Original Letters and the Translations were shewn to Mr. Bowyer, and to Mr. Ozell, who prov'd them to be true Translations.

[Clerk read.] This is directed to Francis Francia, and dated Paris Feb. 26, 1715.

Sir J. Jekyll. This is dated at Paris, Feb. 1715, but that is in our Style 1714.

[Clerk reads.]

SIR,

THE base Dealings of the Sieurs Treacher and Robinson with me, made me always believe that you would not otherwise bring them to Reason, than by pressing them without Mercy. Since you have taken the Trouble to begin, be pleased to continue to the last the same Attention to my Concerns which you have had hitherto, and never consent to any Accommodation till they have remitted not only my Disbursements, as you tell me by your last of the 18th Instant, but also the whole of what may come to my Share, either in Money or Wine, supposing there remains any unfold, which I cannot believe. As for the fourth Share I have in the fifty odd Hampers, which I bought for them of my Friend, the Count de Silbery, if, in order to enter upon an Accommodation, you should content yourself with their consigning into the Hands of Mr. Harvey the 2500 and odd Livres disburs'd, be persuaded, Sir, that to get the Remainder, you'll find yourself under the Necessity to begin anew, to give yourself the same Trouble which you have taken hitherto. Therefore while you hold them, I beg the Favour of you to make an End of the Matter with them at once, and in order thereto, not to give them any Quarter. They have render'd themselves unworthy of it upon all Accounts. If in this Matter you think the Interest of the Chevalier (Sir Thomas Hanmer, Speaker of the last Parliament, may be useful to you; he does me the Honour to be one of my Friends: Visit him from me; and I flatter myself he will readily grant you his Assistance, when you have inform'd him how the Case stands, and of the unfair Dealing of those Merchants towards me. I am so sensible of Mr. Harvey's Favours, that I would do any thing to shew him my Gratitude. Acquaint me therefore with the true State of his Affair with the D. D. and write to me about it in such a manner that your Letter may warrant my Speaking; after which I shall do my best to procure him the Satisfaction he desires; be pleas'd to assure him of it from me. I hope that ere it be long you will acquaint me with the Conclusion of my Affair; in the mean time, I still assure you that 'tis not possible for any one to be more perfectly than myself, Sir, your most humble and obedient Servant,

D'Aulmay.

Sir J. Jekyll. We read this only for the sake of the Postscript, which we will read presently.

Prisoner. This is not a true Translation.

L. C. Baron. What is your Objection to the Translation?

Prisoner. There is not one Word true in it.

L. C. Baron. Who do you depend on to translate it for you?

Prisoner. Upon Mr. Flint.

L. C. Baron. Tells us your Objection to the Translation; tell us in any one material Part wherein the Translation don't agree with the Original.

Mr. Flint. One can't carry it in one's Head.

Prisoner. I hope you will not take it for a true Translation when it is false.

L. C. Baron. We shall if you don't shew wherein it is false.

Sir J. Jekyll. We will read the Postscript, let them shew any Mistake in that.

[Clerk reads.]

As I have Reasons of private Concern to know what passes in the Country you live in, you will sensibly oblige me in informing me of it now and then. Be persuaded of my Discretion, and that the State is no ways concern'd in my Curiosity; nothing raised it but the Concerns of my Wife and her Family, who is Irish.

Prisoner. That is wrong translated.

L. C. Baron. How do you translate it?

Flint. You will oblige me sensibly to inform me of the same. Be persuaded of my Discretion, and that the State has nothing in my Curiosity: The Interest of my Wife, who is Irish excites me.

Sir J. Jekyll. That is to the same Effect as we read it. We will now read a Letter from the Prisoner to D'Aulmay, out of his Copy-Book.

[Clerk reads.]

Paris. Mr. D'Aulmay de Coulange.

London, March 1³/₄, 1714.

I Received the Honour of yours of the 26th past. I shall no ways spare the Sieur Treacher, but prosecute him to a final Judgment, which cannot be 'till July. He makes an Apothecary's Bill sets down the Wines that are sold, for the most part, at half a Crown per Bottle, but I shall prove him the contrary. I am very sorry this Business should go so far, but it is according to the Laws of this Country, where we have no need of Sollicitations; without which he will, within that Time, be certainly adjudged to pay. You must in the mean time transmit hither the Original Paper you have of your Partnership in the Wine; and without flattering you, a Letter of Attorney; for a Letter of Order will not be sufficient. You may leave a Blank for the Name of your Attorney, which Mr. Harvey shall cause to be fill'd up as he shall think fit: But if you come to this Town before the Trial, as you told me, you may avoid all this. I shall take the Care I have promised you without any question. As for the Business of Mr. Harvey, with the ^a D. D. the Matter is, that he has disburs'd about 200*l.* Sterling: And that altho' the ^b D. D. had sent to pay him what he had advanced, it happens that the Person whom he intrusted with it did not do it: Therefore, if there were Means to give the said ^c D. D. to understand, without hinting that it comes from hence, that 'tis not just Mr. Harvey should be so long out of Pocket, that would undoubtedly have the desired Effect; for which I would, in particular, be very much obliged to you, &c. As for News from this Country, I learn sometimes more in the Paris Gazette than here, where the greatest Part of the House murmurs to see the Low-Church flourish. The latter are very eager for a War, but they want the Emperor and Money. 'Tis strongly reported, that a Match is very forward between the Prince who is at Lorraine, and one of the Arch-Dutchesses: Let me know what's in it, since that's essential to your Wife's Interest. If, as I doubt not, an Ambassador comes hither, I desire you to send me, by one of his Domesticks, 20 Ells of fine Ras—de—St. Maur, very black, and at the cheapest Rate, and order the Bearer to receive the Account, or acquaint me with it, that I may remit it to you. Forgive, I beseech you, this Trouble, and believe me with a great deal of Devotion.

Prisoner. He that commits a Fault in any essential Matter, may do so in the rest. They have opened all my Letters at the Post, and they have made this Book for me; there is not one Word of my writing.

[Clerk reads.] This is directed to Francis Francia. and dated

SIR, Paris, March 20, 1715.

I Received yesterday the Honour of your Letter, dated the 14th Instant; I confess to you that it is a very melancholy thing for me to be obliged to give you so much Importunity upon the account of a Knave, from what you wrote to me in your former. I hoped a speedier Conclusion of my Affair. Notwithstanding which, you tell me we must still wait till the Month of July. This is a very long Delay: But if there be an absolute Necessity for it, we must e'en submit. Be that as it will, I beg the Favour of you, Sir, not to give any Quarter to such People who deserve none, for their Dishonesty which they shew in its full Latitude. As for the Papers I have, I shall send you such as will be necessary for you, as soon as you shall write to me for them. But as for a Letter of Attorney, I have signed a general and very extensive one, on the 7th of August last, which is as particular and as strong as possible; there is a blank for the Name, and it was sent to Mr. Arthur at London, by Mr. the Chev Cantillon of Paris. The said Mr. Arthur having made no use of it, you may get it out of his Hands and use it in your Name, or in the Name of such a Person which you and Mr. Harvey shall think fit to pitch upon. I believe it may be sufficient, and that the said Mr. Arthur will make no difficulty to deliver it to you when you shew him this Letter. However, I would cause Mr. Cantillon to write to him if it were necessary.

You may assure Mr. Harvey, that I shall do my utmost to procure him Satisfaction in the Matter you write to me about, without exposing him to any Inconveniencies. I have followed the Court too long to be ignorant how to deal with our Grandees.

Flint. It is how to deal with our Lords.

[Clerk reads.] I shall endeavour to know precisely the time of the Departure of the Marquis d'Allegre, who is to go Ambassador to London; and I shall charge some Body in his Retinue with the 20 Ells of black Ras de St. Maur, which you ask of me; if there be any thing else for your turn, let me know it. As you tell me you learn the News of England in the Paris Gazette; so I^d you that I learn from you the Marriage of the Chevalier de St. George with the Arch-Dutchess.

Prisoner. Is it Chevalier de St. George there? It is not so in the Original.

Cl. of Arr. It is Cb— de St. G—.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is Chevalier de St. George.

Mr. Ward. That is no part of the Key that was given by the Prisoner.

Sir J. Jekyll. Read it as it is.

Mr. Hungerford. Let it be read then without a Comment.

Mr. Ward. I wish the Jury take sufficient Notice, that some of these Letters are not wrote by the Prisoner, but only directed to him.

[Cl. reads.] I learn from you the Marriage of the Cb— de St. G— with the Arch-Dutchess. 'Tis true, there was some talk of it when the Peace was made with the Emperor, but since that Time no mention has been made of it. That in my Opinion would be no proper way to bring his Affairs to a happy Issue. A Party War would best suit with his Affairs. God is above all; but I hope still, neither do I believe my Hopes altogether ill grounded. I shall be glad in the mean time to see what Turn Affairs will take before I cross the Sea. Wherefore I still desire you to inform me. I assure you, Sir, that I am more than any Body else in the World,

Your most humble and most obedient Servant,

D'AULMAY.

Sir J. Jekyll. The former Letter from Francia desires to know what there is in the report of the Marriage of the Prince at Lorraine, with the Arch-Dutchess. This Letter in Answer says, it is true, there was some mention of it about the time of the Peace with the Emperor; but he is of Opinion, that a Party-War would be more advantageous.

[Clerk reads.] Paris, Mr. D'Aulmay de Coulange.

SIR, London, March $\frac{10}{11}$. 1715.

BY my last of the $\frac{3}{14}$ Instant, I gave you an Account of my Proceedings against the Sieur Treacher, which I again hereby confirm to you;

^a Duke D'Aumont.

^b Duke D'Aumont.

^c Duke D'Aumont.

and that I shall get you ^b between this and July, or he shall fly his Country. Here is a Letter for Mr. le ^c D. D. which, 'tis wish'd, may succeed better than the former, which have not been answered, though entirely for the Affairs: Besides which, I must needs tell you by the Bye, that Persons of 50 or 60 Thousand Crowns a Year cannot with Prudence run the hazard of losing such Estates, unless more Encouragement be given them. You will be perfectly understood if you say this to some Person familiar with that Lord, or to himself: And I add from my self, that the Misfortunes of a certain Person are more owing to Neglect on your side of the Water, than to the Party that's against him. So if this continues, your Wife must lose all Hopes.

Prisoner. If this had not been translated wrong on purpose, and with design to take away my Life, there could not have been such a Mistake made. There is a scratch at the bottom of the S to make it an L. It was Ses Affaires, His Affairs, and it is made, Les Affaires, The Affairs.

Whereupon the Original was shewn to the Interpreter, and viewed by the Court, and appear'd to be a very plain L, and not alter'd from an S.

SIR, Paris, April 2, 1715.
I Have deliver'd to M. le ^d D. D. the last Letter you directed to me for him; and when I insinuated that there was in it a Complaint for not having receiv'd an Answer to the former, I was particularly assured, that an Answer had been written, and even in relation to what is due to Mr. ^e H. That the same express'd a Sorrow for not having clear'd with him sooner; that some Misunderstandings had been the Occasion of it: But that however he was desired to mention the exact Amount of his Disbursements, as well for the private Account, as for that of Count de Thoulouse, and that the whole would be immediately put into the Hands of the Chevalier Cantillon, to be paid in London to Mr. ^f H. This, Sir, is what I was told Yesterday, and which I desire you to repeat to Mr. ^g H. assuring him, that if he thinks me proper to serve him in something else, he will do me a real Pleasure in employing me.

The Marquis d'Allegre does not seem yet very forward to set out for London; therefore if you are in haste for the black Ras de St. Maur, which you have wrote to me for, let me know which way you desire I should send it to you, and I shall do it immediately; you may depend upon it.

I shall add nothing to the last Letter I writ to you concerning the Rogues our Merchants; but I shall continue still to desire you to rid me of that Affair as soon as you can.

We have nothing new here; the Works of the Canal of Mardyke are, by Orders from Court, redoubled. I know not what Success Mr. Cadogan's Journey to Vienna has had; but we seem not to be very much uneasy at it: I have spoken, as you desired me, to the Person for whom you sent that Letter which you directed to me, and who has made me the fairest Promises in the World; pray acquaint me with what passes in relation to Mr. Prior, since his return to London; and believe me still most perfectly,

SIR,

Your most humble,
and most obliged Servant,
D'AULMAY.

Paris, Mr. D'Aulmay de Coulanges.

London, March $\frac{17}{8}$. 1715.

I Receiv'd the Honour of yours of the 20th Instant: I can assure you had the King himself to do with the Sieur Treacher, it would not be in his Power to get him adjudged to pay before the Month of July, and even in case the said (Treacher) do not appeal to the Chancery, which 'tis not probable he will do, because in such a Case a Merchant entirely loses his Credit, and besides he should be obliged to deposit 300 Pounds, for which I formerly arrested him, which would not at all suit with him: Therefore, Sir, be assured that I shall do all that can be done, notwithstanding all his Threats against me, for having been, says he, so bold as to sue him. I am only sorry, not to have begun sooner, and to have shewn him any Civility. Mr. Harvey and I shall be very much obliged to you, if you can find an opportunity to have Justice done him. I am persuaded, that to deal with him in this manner is no good Policy, and if ever I have the Honour to confer with you, I shall convince you, how by neglects (which however are not usual with Men of your Nation) most serious Affairs have miserably miscarried. As for News, we hear nothing but an approaching War. 'Tis even pretended that the Emperor is coming again into our Measures, but I do not believe it: Nor do I see any possibility of raising Funds for a new War, at a time when People are at their Wits ends to pay the bare Interests of the Debts contracted in the last. I am very much obliged to you for your intention to send me 20 Ells of Cloth of St. Maur, by the opportunity of the Marquis d'Allegre, or otherwise by any other that may offer: I likewise offer you whatever there is in this Country, and if it were a thing of small bulk, we have often opportunities of Friends who go over into France. Our Parliament will begin their Session very soon, they meet this Day to choose a Speaker: We are going to see what will be the upshot of all the Threats. I kiss your Hands, and am—

You may desire Mr. Cantillon to write to Mr. Arthur, to deliver to Mr. George Francia the Letter of Attorney he has in his Custody; for I have reasons not to demand it my self of the said Arthur.

Paris, Mr. D'Aulmay de Coulanges.

London, $\frac{\text{March 28th,}}{\text{April 8th,}}$ 1715.

I Have the Honour to tell you that yours of the 2d Instant is come to my hands, and that I have given ^a Mr. H. an account of the Subject Matter of your Negotiation. He is, as well as my self, the more obliged to you for it, in that we believe we still have occasion for the Continuation of your good Offices with the ^b D. D. What you say at the end of your Letter, of your having spoken conformably to what I had desired of you, is sufficient, and therefore every thing ought now to be expected from your Side of the Water, that is to say Explanations, &c. I was advised in order to prevent the Sieur Treacher's removing the Law-Suit to Chancery himself, in which Case he would become Plaintiff, to call him before that Court, that he may answer the Interrogatives I shall put to him; which I have done, and he must answer the same within a Month at farthest, and I shall pursue him close: 'Tis the most able Lawyer in this Country, who does me the Favour to give me this Advice, which will hinder him from Appealing, in case he should have a mind to it, which might have kept you in Play several Years.

We see by the King's Speech to his Parliament, that there are yet no Alliances made; and by the Addressès of the Lords and Commons, we perceive plainly that they have an itching towards a War; but at the same time they give to understand, that they know not which way to go about it: And besides the Party of the Pacifick is far more numerous than the others, altho' the others have at present the majority of Votes in the Parliament; of which three Parts in four of the House are highly incensed, and yet more to see they pretend to impeach certain Persons of the last Ministry, which will infallibly make a great Noise: And if the Whigs would follow my Advice, and I were willing to give them a good one, they should lie still. Mr. Prior is one of these pretended Victims; his Papers are looked over with malicious Eagerness; he is taxed with having received great Presents in France; particularly a great sett of Silvergilt Plate; I believe that if it be so, he is so much the richer for it. This is all that occurs at present, and that I am without reserve.

Paris, Mr. D'Aulmay de Coulanges.

London, April $\frac{2}{7}$ 1715.

I Am ordered to tell you from Mr. Harvey, that you will oblige him in desiring Mr. Le^a D. D. from him, to send hither some Body to fetch the Horses and Dogs which he has had so long, or else to give order to some Body to take them. Things are here in such a Posture, that great Caution ought to be used, not to give Umbrage to those in Power, who may put a wrong Construction upon the least Trifles, especially since the departure of my Lord Bolingbroke, who is looked upon here as innocent, and People do not see how he could be any ways hurt, notwithstanding the Superiority of the Low Party in Parliament, which however is divided into two, who terribly cross each other, one of which Parties will at last join with the Tories, if the latter are willing: We may draw Consequences: The Dutchess of Portsmouth, who is at present here, gives a great deal of Offence, as I am informed, by pretending to prove that the late King James had poison'd his Brother Charles; it was not expected, that after so many Years Retirement into France, she should come hither to revive that vulgar Report, which at so critical a Time cannot be for any good Purpose.

I have nothing to add to the Affair of your Merchants, but what I have already acquainted you with. On the other hand, I confirm to you all that I have recommended to you to tell the Person I wrote to last. Kissing your Hands, I remain — for our Ambassador at your Court has Orders to take a Character upon him. I hope you will find means to charge some Body in the Retinue of the former with the 20 Ells of Ras de St. Maur, and 20 Ells of Taffety, with blue and white Stripes, for a Woman's Summer Suit; less than 20 Ells would do, if it be broader than half Ell, and if it be possible, to send at the same Time a Scarf made of a good black Silk pinked, for a Woman of a moderate Size, and slender, you will oblige me, and when you shall acquaint me with the Price of the whole, I shall either pay it to the Person who shall be charged with it, or shall remit it at your Choice, &c. As for the Scarves, they are sold ready made at the Palace —

We expect here shortly the Marquiss d'Allegre,

^a Duke D'Aumont.

Since what's above written, the Honour of yours of the 12th Instant is come to my Hands. I shall cause your Letter of Attorney to be got out of Mr. Arthur's Hands. There are at present great Debates in the Parliament: There was a Member of the High Party, who had the boldness to suggest, that this present Parliament was illegally assembled, since the King in his Proclamation gave the People to understand, that it would be a great Satisfaction to him if they chose Whigs, which he said is against the Fundamental Laws of the Kingdom; whereupon there arose high Debates, and by the Majority of Votes, to the great Surprize of the Public, who expected that that Member should be sent to the Tower, it was carried by a hundred Voices, that the said Proclamation should be examined; which 'tis thought will cause great Divisions. When I have any thing particular to impart, I shall do it by a strange Hand, and subscribe James Chrétien, which you must take notice of, and provided you acquaint me that you have received this present Letter, without being opened, I shall be easy.

S I R,

Paris, April 24, 1715.

I Have received your two Letters of the 8th and 18th Instant. I am very much obliged to you for having removed to the Chancery the Law-Suit I have with Treacher, since you think it the most expeditious way to make an end of it: I still beg of you the continuation of your Care, in order to compass the same; as also to acquaint me how that Affair stands at present. I reckon that Mr. Arthur has by this time delivered to you my general Letter of Attorney, according to the Order he has for it from the Chevalier Cantillon, of which you will also be pleas'd to inform me.

The Time of the Marquiss d'Allegre's departure for London is not yet known here. I shall not then fail to desire some Body in his Retinue to charge himself with the Ras de St. Maur, Lute-string and Scarf which you have desired of me.

Your last was delivered to me very safe yesterday in the Evening: Be easy as to that Matter, as well as to whatever Mr. James Chrétien may write to me; pray desire him when he does me the pleasure to write to me, to be very particular as to Facts, and to be well informed before hand: In all which I rely on your Prudence. If during these troublesome Times Mr. ^b H. should think fit to make use of Mr. J. Chrétien, he may: But his Letters should be directed to my self, and I should afterwards make what use of them he should think fit. Assure him still of my readines to serve him, and that I should be very glad to give him Marks of my Gratitude, for the Trouble he takes, as well as your self, in my Affair with Treacher.

When the Character of the Dutchess, who is lately gone to London, shall be well known, People will not be surprized at the Part she actually plays there; but I hope it will produce a different Effect from what she expects, and that we shall come at last to a happy Unravelling. ^a Mr. le D. D. was to send about a Fortnight ago one of his Men to London, to bring him his Horses and Dogs. If he is not yet gone, I shall not fail pressing for that Matter.

Pray let us hear from you as often as possible, and still believe me most perfectly,

Paris, May 1, 1715.

I Have received yours of the 25th past, with that of Mr. ^b H. for the ^c D. D. which I have sent to him into the Country, where he is at present. At his return, I shall not fail telling him what you tell me about what is due to the said Mr. ^d H.—, and in what manner he desires the same to be remitted to him. Assure him that in this, and every thing else, I shall ever do my utmost to do him Service.

By your Letter of the 8th of April last, you acquainted me with the Care you had taken to remove to the Chancery my Law-suit with Treacher, by which means he would be obliged to answer within a Month, and therefore I hope that in a short Time you will acquaint me with the Conclusion of that Affair, for which I shall be very much obliged to you: I little know how Justice is administer'd in such a Case in England: But this I know, that in France, that honest Fellow would long before now have been brought to Reason; however, we must wait with Patience to the End.

Pray assure Mr. ^f Ch. that I am, and shall be very much obliged to him for what he shall write to me: He may likewise depend upon it, that I shall make good use of it; therefore let him continue to let me hear from him the ofteneft he can; but above all let his News be certain, and very particular.

There's yet no Talk here of the Earl of Stairs being near taking his Character. I must also add, that 'tis not yet known, when the Marquis d'Allegre will set out, but what's believed as certain is, that they will out of hand work upon the Fortification of Mardyke: Draw your Conjectures upon it.

*I am very impatient to know what passes relating to the Prosecution of the late Ministry, particularly concerning the Duke of Ormond, whose Name my Wife bears, and is his near Relation, her Name is Butler of Kilcom: That Family may not be unknown to Mr. ^e H.— however the Ch. (Sir* Thomas) Hammer knows it perfectly well.

We have at present no important News in this Country, unless it be considerable Bankrupcies among those called Agioteurs (or Stock-Jobbers) of which there are daily a great Number, and such a Scarcity of Money, as passes all that can be expressed. I am still,

S I R,

*Your most humble,And most obedient Servant.*Letter from Francis Francia.*Paris, Mr. D'Aulmay de Coulanges.London, ^{May 30th,}

MY last to you was of the Instant; this is to tell you, that without loss of Time you must send another Letter of Attorney, with a Blank for the Name; for Mr. Arthur, after having kept us long at a Bay, saying he would look for it, now says it is lost: Be that as it will, you must revoke that Letter of Attorney, for we are here in Danger, if Treacher should be-think himself of asking by what Authority he is Prosecuted, lest, not being able to produce any Letter of Attorney, this Suit should be dismiss'd with Cost; you therefore see the Consequence: As for the rest, the Affair is on a good Foot, and I believe he'll not stay till he's cast. Yesterday in the Evening, being the Anniversary of the Restauration of King Charles II. there were here great Riots; nothing was heard among the People but Curfes against the present Ministry, and long live James the Third, and the Duke of Ormond. This being so public, that it cannot fail reaching your Parts, I acquaint you with it, and assure you that,

I am, &c.

Mr. Harvey salutes you, and bid me tell you, that when there is any thing New, if he cannot write to you himself, he will cause the Sieur J. C. to do it for him.

This is directed to Francia, and dated,

Paris, August 7. 1715.

AT this very Instant I receive your last of the first Instant. I will not cease returning you Thanks for the Care you are willing to take of my Affair, desiring you still to continue to the End.

You have Reason to be angry at the Indolence (or Supineness) you expostulate about, but be persuaded, 'tis only so in Appearance. I even hope that by this Time you have convincing Proofs of it, and that suitable Returns are made to the good Dispositions; so that with God's Blessing upon our Friend's good Cause, he will at last cast his Adversary, at least no Succours, or powerful Sollicitations shall be wanting. Let me hear, I beseech you, about it as often as you can; and depend upon it, that by so doing you will oblige Persons, who in a proper Time and Place will be thankful to you for it. The Post (going off) presses me, therefore I con-

Prisoner. That is wrong translated. In the French it is Gagner sa Cause, which is gain his Suit; and they have translated it, cast his Adversary.

Mr. Cowper. He talks of powerful Sollicitations on our Side, that is in France; and what could that be to a Law-Suit here?

LAST Night I receiv'd your last of the fifth Instant; pray be easy, and e're it be long you'll be satisfied.

The Chief of the Name of our Friend the Abbot, arrived here on Tuesday Night in good Health. He is very well pleased, and has Reason to be so. He prepares to return Home with all Speed, and will carry thither his Friends to spend the Vacation Time. This very Moment I'm going to wait upon him; I reckon to attend him in his Journey, or to be with him soon after his Departure. Pray continue informing me the ofteneft you can, of your Health, and of that of our Friends: You know how dear they are to me, and what Concern I have in them; therefore do not deny me that Favour, nor that of believing me perfectly as I am,

S I R,

Your most humble,

And most obedient Servant,

PAYEN.

Mr. Cowper. Though this Letter is sign'd Payen, yet it comes from D'Aulmay; he says the Chief of the Family is arrived here; that is, the Duke of Ormond. And that he was to return from thence, and keep his Vacation in England. Hitherto the Correspondence was with the Duke D'Aumont, but from this Time it is with the Duke of Ormond.

[Clerk reads.]

THIS is in Answer to your two Letters of the 12th and 15th Instant. I should have sooner answered the first, had it not been delivered to me after the Departure of the last Post. Our Friend's Law-Suit will shortly, God willing, be ready for Trial, every Thing is preparing for it. The Friend, my Wife's Relation, has read your two Letters, with which he is very well satisfied. He desires you, as well as myself, to let us hear from you as often as you can. Since his Arrival he has had two Fits of a tertian Ague, of which the Bark has rid him. He was purged Yesterday Morning, and in the Afternoon went to take the Air, so that he is now in perfect Health, and in a Condition to attend his Affairs with full Liberty. I have not heard from Mr. ^a H. and I do not believe he has chang'd his Habitation; at least it is not come to my Knowledge. The King has been indisposed for some Days past, but without Appearance of any ill Consequence. Thanks be to God, who will preserve him to us a long Time in his Mercy.

Half a dozen Souls of Lower Normandy, and as many of Mans, must needs possess the Body of Treacher, and inspire him with all the Chicanes he plays me. I shall write to him by the next Post, in the Stile you advise me, and agreeably to my own Thoughts; for I swear to you, there's nothing I shall leave undone to get my Right of so great a Knave; I hope you will second me, and that you'll give him no Quarter. Pray acquaint me with what you have done upon this last Incident.

Sir, I salute you, and am perfectly,

Your most humble,

And most obedient Servant,

PAYEN.

Mr. Cowper. This explains that there was another Cause depending, besides that of the Law-Suit: For he says, our Friend's Cause will soon be ready to be tried, all Preparations are making for it. Now there was no Cause depending in France, for this a French Letter from D'Aulmay, and it is not pretended that there was any Law-Suit depending on that Side the Water.

[Clerk reads.]

This is directed to Francis Francia, and dated,

August 24, 1715.

I Am very much surprized not to have heard from you by the Post that came in Yesterday. Our Friend was at my House expecting the same. We desire you both, Sir, not to let one Post go off without writing to us, and acquainting us with what passes with Relation to our common Friend's Law-Suit. When you see Mr. ^b H. assure him that all our Friends are perfectly well. The King's Health grows better and better, Heaven be praised.

I have had so much Business for some Days past, that I could not write to Treacher: I would do it speedily, but I still desire you not to give him any Quarter, and to believe me perfectly,

S I R,

Your most humble,

And most obedient Servant,

PAYEN.

Mr. Soll. Gen. This shews a Distinction between the Cause of their common Friend, and the Cause of Treacher.

than to me you appear to be, and charge us with less Negligence than you do. I know there are favourable Moments, which 'tis dangerous to let slip; but then will you not agree with me that 'tis Matter of Prudence to foresee all Inconveniencies, and in order to that to take such right Measures as to be able to surmount them all? This is now doing, be persuaded of it, and that your Friends are more zealous than ever to procure you all the Satisfaction you may desire, therefore be easy some time longer. You did me the Pleasure to acquaint me, that on the 29th past, Treacher was adjudged to deliver to us his Account within a Fortnight, that he had since made a new Chicane, demanding Security for his Charges, and with the Measures you were pleas'd to take upon this Demand. I therefore believed that after this we might hope to see an End of this Affair, and that nothing now remain'd but to perform the Judgment or Rule of the 29th of July, nevertheless we are still put off to the Month of October. Pray acquaint me with the Cause of it.

We are here in a cruel Uncertainty about an Affair of the last Importance, God grant it may have a happy Issue. Pray continue writing to me every Post, and believe that I am ever with all my Heart, Sir, your most humble and most obedient Servant,

P A Y E N.

Mr. Denton. This appears to be a Letter in Answer to Francia's, wherein he complains that Things are not carried on with Vigour; I know, says he, there are favourable Moments that are not to be let slip; and then at last he concludes with the private Affair of Treacher.

SIR,

I Received this very Instant your last of the 29th past, and as the Post is going off, I have only Time to write an Answer. I did not write to you by the last Post, neither did I receive any of your Letters. I am extream sorry for all the Trouble I give you with respect to the Law-Suit I have with that Rogue, I shall still hope that thro' your Care we shall both be shortly rid of him.

We have at last had the Misfortune to lose the greatest of Kings, who, as undoubtedly you know it already, died on Sunday last at a Quarter past Eight in the Morning, with all the Sentiments of Religion and Greatness that were ever observ'd in the greatest Heroes; and indeed 'tis generally acknowledged, that he never was greater than in the last Moments of his Life. Monday Morning my Lord Duke of Orleans, accompanied by the Princes of the Blood, and the Dukes and Peers, repair'd to the Parliament, where he was declared Regent of the Kingdom with all the Authority due to that Dignity and his illustrious Birth. All France is overjoy'd to be under his Government, from which they can certainly expect nothing but happy Days, since no Person in the World has more Grandeur, Equity, Penetration, and Virtues in general, than that Prince. The Journey to Germany would be proper enough, and I wish it may be performed, the rather because for the Reasons you know; our Measures have been somewhat suspended, tho' not in the least broke, Things going on still better and better; be persuaded of it, as also that due Notice is taken of your good Will. In particular ^a Mr. H— must undoubtedly be where you were told, for he has not appear'd here. 'Tis true my ^b D. D. and ^c M. B. are in a House within a small half League of this City, which a private Person has lent them, but they receive there all their Friends; with whom they go to dine and sup every Day; they are both in perfect Health, and their Thoughts are very different from those that are ascribed to them, I mean that they are such as they ought to be; assure their Friends of it. It is not possible for me to send to you to Day what you desire of me, 'twill be for the next Post. Let no one slip without acquainting me of your Health, for which you know I am more concern'd than any Body else, and be persuaded that I am, more than any Man, Sir, your most humble and most obedient Servant,

P A Y E N.

Mr. Cowper, junior. This Letter gives an Account of the Death of the French King, and tho' Things may be suspended, still they will go on, and it will be for the better.

Mr. Denton. The next Letter is not directed to any Body, it came under a Cover, which is lost; it appears to come from D'Aulmay, but not to be directed.

L. C. Baron. Is this one of them that was found in his House?

Mr. Denton. This is one of them found there, and owned by him.

[Clerk reads.]

SIR,

September 6. 1715.

YOUR Letter of the second Instant was just now deliver'd to me. My last inform'd you, that 'twas only on the first Instant we had the Misfortune to lose the greatest of Kings, but that for the Comfort of France, God had reserv'd M. the Duke of Orleans for our Regent. I cannot write any thing that can be depended upon in relation to what you desire of me by your two last, as soon as there is any thing I shall inform you of it. Since the Abbot B— came into this Kingdom, he has been very often in the Country; he is still actually there; as soon as he is return'd I shall not fail speaking to him according to what you write; as I have no Intimacy with any Merchant, and he must be one that I can depend upon to make use of his Direction, I cannot give it you this Day, but I hope I may by the next Post; in the mean time pray continue writing directly to me, and if you have any trusty Hand, other than your own and your Sons, it would not be amiss to make use of it; I even am of Opinion, that a Key or Cypher for the principal Names which you may send me, and of which you should keep a Copy for your own Use, would be necessary, for I will ingenuously own to you that such a Precaution appears to me very necessary. You'll find here enclos'd the Picture you have desired of me; it being impossible to send it to you without folding, when you have received it you must wet a Cloth, which you'll lay on a Table, and will lay also the Print upon it, which will take the Plaits away. The Post (going off) presses me, and I have but just Time to tell you that I am your most humble, and most obedient Servant,

^a Mr. Harvey.^b Duke of Ormond.^c Lord Bolingbroke.

P A Y E N.

Prisoner. My Lord, this Letter is another Hand, and there is no Direction on it.

L. C. Baron. It was found among your Papers, and you own'd it; that is prov'd by the Secretaries.

Prisoner. This was pretended to be stopp'd at the Post-Office.

L. C. Baron. No, it was found among your Letters.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The next Letter is very particular; he says the Cause of the Common Friend will be at an End in a little Time; but as to his own particular Cause, he was unhappy to have to do with so troublesome a Man.

[Clerk reads.]

This is directed to Francis Francia, and dated,

S I R, Sept. 14, 1715.

I Did not write to you by the last Post, by reason I did not receive your last Letter, which by the by is without Date, till the Day after its Departure. Nor did I receive any from you by the Post that came in Yesterday, so that you owe me Answers to my two last, which I expect with Impatience, particularly an Answer to my last, by which I sent you what you had desir'd of me. The Contents of your last without Date has given me a great deal of Satisfaction, as well as to all our Friends, who return you Thanks for it, and have charged me to assure you of it, and desire you to continue. We knew already Part of what you write about our Friend's Cause, which with God's Blessing, will soon End to his Satisfaction, otherwise all Appearances would be very deceitful. As for my own Cause, I cannot forbear telling you, that I am very unfortunate in having to do with so dishonest a Man, after having trusted my Goods with him, and loaded his Partner with Services and Civilities during his Stay here. But my Comfort is, that you will not give him a Moment's Respite, and that you will at last rid me of his unworthy Chicanes. I could have wished the Abbot had not embark'd me with such People; although I am persuaded he did not do it with any ill Intention, yet I find myself embarrass'd with those Scoundrels, whom I trusted only at his Desire.

The King went the Day before Yesterday to the Parliament to hold his Bed of Justice, where the Regency was confirm'd to the Duke of Orleans, with all the Authority which such a Dignity deserves. We have nothing else new at present. If any thing happens I shall not fail acquainting you with it. I am most perfectly, Sir, your most humble, and most obedient Servant,

To Madam, Madam the Widow de Beagué, Merchant, at the Fair Star, Rue Tirechape.
=Paris=

Mr. Att. Gen. The Correspondence now began to be dangerous, and therefore it was to be directed to a Woman, that there might be the less suspicion.

[Clerk reads.]

This directed to Francis Francia, and dated,

S I R, September 17. 1715.
YOUR last of the 9th Instant, which I should have had on Friday last, was not deliver'd to me till Sunday in the Evening. I ascribe this Delay only to the Winds, which may have hindered the Packet-Boat from having as quick a Passage as usual. I have caused the three Letters which you have directed to me, to be put into the Post-House.

My ^a D. D. had already shew'd me the Epitaph you have sent me, which with Gentlemen will ever pass for the Spring of Cerberus. I hope also that infamous Author will sooner or later be rewarded according to his Deserts. His Insolence may even be attended with some unexpected Consequences. We have, Thanks be to God, a just and equitable Regent, from whom we may hope every thing, he has already given us Proof of it, by the good Order he has settled in all Affairs, which indeed had a great Occasion for it.

You must undoubtedly have receiv'd by this time the Picture you desired of me, and I hope you will acquaint me with it by the next I shall receive from you.

All our Friends are, thank God, in perfect Health, My ^b D. D. had some Days ago a slight Fit of an Ague, which had no Consequence. We are here, as well as you, impatient to attain the End propos'd. But we must take Patience, and be rul'd by those who are at the Helm. I still assure you, Sir, that I am with Sincerity your most humble, and most obedient Servant.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We shall conclude the Letters with a very particular one from D^e Aulmay, which taxes Francia with Impatience, and takes notice, that Mr. Harvey was eager for going into France, but it was the Duke of Ormond's particular Advice, that he should not go, because probably they might come over to him.

[Clerk reads.]

This is directed to Francis Francia, and dated,

S I R, September 23. 1715.
IN Answer to your last of the 16th Instant, I begin with telling you, that our Friends are much to blame to throw themselves so precipitately into Impatience, especially ^a M. H. to whom you shall communicate this Letter as soon as you have receiv'd it, and tell him he must by no Means think of coming hither, as by your last you acquainted me he is preparing to do. 'Tis my ^b D. D. who charges me expressly with what I write to you, and who desires him to stay. He may easily guess at the Reason, which will give you all to understand, that this is not a time to be impatient, but to shew more Resolution than ever.

^b Duke of Ormond.

Perhaps some Letters for me will be delivered to you; as soon as you have received them, I desire you to forward them to me, either with the Directions I have sent you, or directly with my own.

You know perhaps by this time, that 'tis pretended that there are at Havre-de-Grace two Ships on Board of which are Arms, which has alarm'd some People, but without ground. For if that News be true, they must be Arms that are sent as a Present to the King of Persia, as I am told; therefore this ought not to make any Body uneasy. As for the rest, Sir, let all of us recommend our selves to God, and hope we shall soon be quiet, you at home after your wise Government, shall have dissipated all the Feuds that disturb the Tranquility, and we by the paternal and indefatigable Care which my Lord Duke of Orleans takes upon him to procure us, the Repose which we have so great Occasion for, and of which we have so long been depriv'd.

You will judge of it by the List I send you of the Councils he has lately establish'd, and which are certainly made up of the most able, and most worthy Persons in the Kingdom. I expect to hear from you, and ever am, Sir, your most humble and most obedient Servant,

PAYEN.

Whereabouts are we with our honest Man? I hope you will acquaint me by your next.

Mr. Denton. My Lord, the time when the King was pleas'd to acquaint the Parliament with the Design of the Invasion, was the 20th of July.

We have a Copy of the Speech examin'd.

Then Mr. Paxton was sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Have you examin'd this, and is it a true Copy.

Mr. Paxton. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where did you examine it?

Mr. Paxton. At the Parliament Office.

Mr. Hungerford. What did you examine it by?

Mr. Paxton. By the Journal of the House of Lords.

Clerk reads. Die Mercurii 20 Julii 1715.

His Majesty after conferring with the Lord Chancellor, spake as follows.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

I Have given Direction to my Lord Chancellor to declare to you in my Name and Words, a Matter I think of the greatest Importance.

Then the Lord Chancellor spake as follows;

I have receiv'd his Majesty's Commands, to deliver to you in his Majesty's Name this his Majesty's Speech now put into my Hands by his Majesty from the Throne.

My Lords and Gentlemen,

THE Zeal you have shewn for preserving the Peace of my Kingdoms, and your Wisdom in providing so good a Law to prevent all riotous and tumultuous Proceedings, give me great Satisfaction, but I am sorry to find that such a Spirit of Rebellion has discover'd itself, as leaves no Room to doubt, but these Disorders are set on Foot and encouraged by Persons disaffected to my Government, in Expectation of being supported from Abroad.

The Preservation of our Excellent Constitution, and the Security of our Holy Religion, has been, and always shall be my chief Care; and I cannot Question, but your Concern for these invaluable Blessings is so great, as not to let them be expos'd to such Attempts as I have certain Advices are preparing by the Pretender from Abroad, and carrying on at Home by a restless Party in his Favour.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

In these Circumstances I think it proper to ask your Assistance, and make no doubt but you will so far consult your own Security, as not to leave the Nation under a Rebellion actually begun at Home, and threatned with an Invasion from Abroad in a defenceless Condition; and I shall look upon the Provision you shall make for the Safety of my People, as the best Mark of your Affection to me.

Sir J. Fekyll. My Lord, We shall not trouble the Court nor the Jury, with reading any more Letters; I only take leave to observe shortly upon the Letters which have been read. The Correspondence began with a Desire from D'Aulmay to have some Correspondence about Affairs here, because his Wife was related to the Duke of Ormond. Francia tells him, there was a Discourse about the Marriage of the Pretender with the Arch-Dutchess, which, says he, is essential to the Interest of your Wife. D'Aulmay writes in Answer, that there had been some Talk of that Marriage but he don't care to come into it: He thinks a Party War would be much better. Francia writes again, that it can't be expected that Persons of Fifty or Sixty Thousands Crowns a Year should run the hazard of losing such Estates, unless more Encouragement were given them. And that is followed by another Letter from Francia, wherein he writes, that now we are to expect every thing from your side the Water, that is Explications, &c. Then he desires him if he thinks proper, that he would change his Name, and write by a strange hand.

There is this observable in these Letters, that the Prisoner plainly shews his desire that there should be an Assistance for the Pretender from France; and so all the Letters taken upon him fall into that Design; nay, he was anxious and impatient for the critical Minute. The Death of the French King is taken notice of to be a great Loss, yet he is assured that things will revive again; for that Person that succeeded in the Government, had favourable Thoughts and Intentions.

The Letters that are entered in his Copy-Book speak very plainly; and Gentlemen, what can be the purport of those Letters of the Prisoner's that are not entred, that can't be sought for any where but in those Letters, which were sent hither in Answer to them, and he is so far from pretending that these were not Letters sent in Answer to his Letters, that when he came to be examined, he told what the Design of them was; that it was the Design of the Pretender to invade his Majesty's Dominions; and therefore it now appears plainly to you, that he did sollicite Aid and Assistance in order to an Invasion from Abroad, and an Insurrection at Home, in favour of the Pretender, and in order to depose his Majesty.

^a Mr. Harvey.

^b Duke of Ormond.

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall leave it here, and submit it to your Lordship and the Jury, upon the Evidence we have offer'd.

Mr. Ward. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Council for the Prisoner, and what I shall humbly offer to your Lordship before we go into our Evidence, is a single Point, we shall lay before you and insist upon; a particular Circumstance in the Indictment, which is such, that considering the Circumstance of my Client, it is impossible as the Law stands, that he should be guilty in such manner as is charg'd in the Indictment.

The Prisoner happens to be an Alien born, he was born at Bourdeaux in France; he came from thence into England, and never was Naturaliz'd. He owes therefore no natural Allegiance, nor can be guilty of any Treason against the King as his natural Liege Lord, as it's laid in this Indictment.

There is a Distinction of a double Allegiance, one that is due from a natural born Subject, and the other that is due from an Alien. The latter owes only a local Obedience with respect to his Protection, whereas the former owes it in respect of his Birth. This is a Distinction well known in Calvin's Case. It appears, that if an Indictment for Treason be against an Alien, it must be charged to be against his Allegiance in general, but not against his natural Allegiance. This is taken notice of in a great many Cases. In the Reports of my Lord Hobart, Vaughan, and Keyling, there are several Cases which shew this Distinction.

In my Lord Chief Justice Holt's time, in the Trial of Cranborn and Lowick, April 22. 1696. an Exception was taken to the Indictment; that it was not said Contra naturalem ligeantiam; and in that Case, Calvin's Case was agreed to be Law. It was held, that in case of an Alien, he ow'd only a general Allegiance; and it was agreed, that in case of an Alien, it must not be Contra naturalem ligeantiam; and my Lord Chief Justice Holt says, if it were so, it would be ill. And it may be given in Evidence, that he is an Alien, in order to acquit him of a Crime, charg'd to be against his natural Allegiance; there is none such due.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, the Objection is founded on a Fact. If the Fact is admitted, we will argue upon it; if not, we will call some Witnesses to prove it.

Then Simon Francia was sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray give an Account what you know of the Prisoner, what Countryman he is, and where he was born?

Simon Francia. He is my Brother, he was born in France at Bourdeaux.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you Elder or Younger than he?

Simon Francia. I am Four Years Elder.

Mr. Att. Gen. How then can you remember what was done when you was Four Years old?

Simon Francia. I can't remember the Day of his Birth, but I was bred up with him at Bourdeaux, we were all born in the same House.

Mr. Hungerford. What Age was you of when you first remember him?

Simon Francia. I remember him when I was about Six Years old.

Mr. Hungerford. And you don't remember that your Father and Mother came to England in that time?

Simon Francia. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Did your Father and Mother live at Bourdeaux when you was about Six Years old?

Simon Francia. Yes.

Then Jaques Gonsales was sworn on the Books of Moses. And an Interpreter was sworn, because the Witness spoke English very imperfectly.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray give an Account what Countryman the Prisoner is, and where he was born?

Gonsales. The Prisoner is the Son of George Francia, and Mary Gonsales my Sister. He was born at Bourdeaux the 26th of March, New Stile, 1675.

Sir J. Jekyll. How do you know he was born there?

Gonsales. Because I was present when he was born. My House was over-against my Sister's, who was the Prisoner's Mother; afterwards he was baptized in the Church of St. Andrew.

Mr. Hungerford. We have two or three Witnesses more, his Godfather and Godmother; but I think it plainly prov'd by these Witnesses, so that we need not go any further. Mr. Attorney, do you admit it, or shall we examine more Witnesses?

Mr. Att. Gen. Prove what you can?

Mr. Hungerford. Then Mr. Attorney, you admit what we contend for. I am sure if he be a good Englishman, he cannot be a false Traitor.

Mr. Att. Gen. He speaks good English.

Then Emes Lamira was sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Give an Account whether you know where the Prisoner was born?

Lamira. He was born at Bourdeaux, I liv'd there when he was born.

Then Jaques Gonsales was call'd again.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long hath the Prisoner liv'd in England?

Gonsales. I can't tell positively.

Mr. Att. Gen. As near as you can?

Gonsales. I can't tell, for he has liv'd at one part of the Town, and I at the other.

Then Simon Francia was call'd again.

L. C. Baron. How long ago did your Brother come into England?

Simon Francia. He hath been here twice. He was here about Twenty Years ago, and this last time, he hath been here about Six or Seven Years.

L. C. Baron. How long did he stay when he first came?

Simon Francia. About Eight or Nine Years.

Then Cecilia Ceres was sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you know of the Prisoner? What Countryman is he?

Ceres. I went to School with him at Bourdeaux.

Mr. Hungerford. Where was he reputed to be born?

Ceres. At Bourdeaux, in the same Street where I was.

Mr. Hungerford. How old was he when you knew him first?

Ceres. We were both Children.

Mr. Hungerford. I think the Place of a Man's Birth can't be better prov'd, it is prov'd by some that were in the Room at his Birth, some that went went to School with him, and some that knew him there a Child.

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Jury should be satisfied with this Evidence, it will not acquit the Defendant, the Opinion in Cranborn's Case being, that the Word Naturalem was not necessary to be in the Indictment; and adding an immaterial Word will not therefore make the Indictment bad. If this does not satisfy the Defendant's Council, I shall insist that this Point be found specially.

Mr. Just. Pratt. If you insist that you have given a sufficient Evidence to satisfy the Jury, and indeed it is a strong Evidence, Mr. Attorney says, if the Evidence is to the Satisfaction of the Jury, he is willing to find it specially. Therefore are you willing to leave it to the Jury on that single Issue?

Mr. Hungerford. That is giving up all the rest. I would a little enforce and apply this Evidence.

Mr. Just. Pratt. I believe, if Mr. Attorney-General desires it to be found specially, it was never known to be denied.

Sir J. Jekyll. I desire it may be found specially.

Mr. Hungerford. I will be bold to say, this Objection is in all the Authorities which we have in the Law touching this Matter, held good: A Man who is not a natural born Subject cannot owe a natural Allegiance: And it is very hard, that without offering any Reason, to raise a Doubt, but upon bare asking to have a Matter found specially, it must be so.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you have a mind to it we will debate it with you now.

Mr. Hungerford. With all my Heart, I am ready to speak to it now.

Sir J. Jekyll. If we were to expect the Judgment of the Court upon it now, I would debate this Matter now, and I should not doubt but to be able to satisfy the Court that the Indictment is well fram'd against the Prisoner, notwithstanding he is an Alien born.

Mr. Hungerford. I would be glad to hear one Authority to support Sir Joseph's Opinion.

Mr. Ward. May it please your Lordship, I am Council for the Prisoner, who stands indicted of High-Treason. The Charge in the Indictment (besides the general Charge of imagining the King's Death) are conspiring to levy War, soliciting Aid from Abroad, and writing Letters for that Purpose into Foreign Parts.

What they have gone upon has been a long Course of Letters between the Prisoner and D'Aulmay, alias Payen, at Paris. They have produc'd a Copy-book of Letters, which they say he wrote, and have read some Letters out of it, which we must submit to you, whether there is any thing contain'd in them that amounts to Treason. They have also produc'd Letters to him from D'Aulmay, but we must submit that likewise, whether they can any ways affect him; he can answer only for what he wrote himself.

We did insist upon it, that they ought not to produce any Letters that were not specify'd in the Indictment, and though we are over-rul'd in that, yet your Lordship will be pleas'd to consider the Prisoner under this Disadvantage, that he stands indicted for writing treasonable Letters, without one Letter specify'd, or the Date, and much less the Substance of it, so that he can't be suppos'd to be ready to offer any Evidence, or to give any Answer, to explain all the Letters that in the Course of his Life he may have wrote, and perhaps some of them may be so darkly penn'd, as not to be capable of an Explanation on a sudden.

It may be necessary also to shew your Lordship the Difficulties we have been under since we were taken up, and that will make it necessary to shew, that when we were committed, it was to a strict Confinement; we were prohibited from any Body coming to us, and from Pen, Ink, and Paper; no Body had Access to us, unless some Persons from the Secretaries Office, to press us to some Discoveries, which we declared we could not make. We will shew by them that were by at those Times what we were press'd to, and that will be an Evidence of our Innocence, when we withstood such Importunities.

They have offered some things, which will, I hope, go a great way to shew that he was not guilty of Treason. My Client was a Stranger, born in France, came here to Trade, and his Business not being very successful, he was willing to undertake something of less Value, and so engag'd in sending Letters from the Gentleman that has been nam'd, for the Profit of double Postage, which is allow'd in those Cases.

It was observ'd by the King's Council as a very strange thing, that a Man should enter in his Book Letters of a treasonable Nature, we say the same, and that is a Circumstance to shew that they were not of that nature; besides, the Entry of a Letter in a Copy-book is not like a Copy that the Law allows to be given in Evidence, that must be carefully examin'd; but in those Entries of what a Man writes over to his Correspondents, there may be Mistakes in them, and such as a Man's Life, in Case of High-Treason, may be lost upon; therefore you can't found so great a Certainty upon this Book as upon the Letters themselves or Copies examin'd and legally prov'd.

Another Circumstance to shew how unlikely it was that this was a treasonable Correspondence, or any thing that the Prisoner was concern'd to conceal, is, that he never took care of attending at the Post-Office, or engaging any one to attend there, to dispatch or take care of his Letters, but rested at Home till the Letter Carriers brought them about, or else they were left at one Everald's a Watchmaker in the Strand, where he had lodg'd, and they have been observed to lie there on a Table in a common Room for a Week together before they have been call'd for, or they have been sent to him.

It has been observed by the King's Council, that towards the latter End of the Correspondence, when he began to write more openly, that he neglected to enter his Letters in the Book; but there is no reason for that Surmise, for it appears upon one of the Letters they have produc'd from D'Aulmay, that he complains he had not heard from the Prisoner in Three Months Time; and to suppose those Letters which do not appear, worse than those which do, is a Presumption, we hope, will never be admitted in a Case of Life.

As the Prisoner himself could not apply himself to consider of any Account or Explanation of these Letters, much less can it be expected that we who are his Council can be of any Service to him in that Point, because we only hear those Letters read that the King's Council think fit to produce; there were others before and after, and those we are Strangers to; whatever there may be in them that may clear up the Expressions in those that are produc'd by the King's Council, we are entirely depriv'd of the Benefit of them; for the Prisoner has not been admitted to peruse his own Book, or to have recourse to any of his Papers. The Power of seizing Papers, that may be of use to a Man in his Defence, seems to me something dark; but I shall say nothing to it in this place.

We shall give your Lordship an Account of the Prisoner's Character and Circumstances. He was under low Circumstances, even to the pawning his Cloaths and Goods. People that are concern'd in Things of this Kind are usually better supported than he seems to have been. And we shall shew that he has at all times given all Instances and Proofs of his being quiet under the Government, and well affected to it.

Under these Circumstances, if there was stronger Evidence than is in the Copy-Book, it would not be sufficient: I hope, Gentlemen, you have distinguish'd between those Letters in the Copy-book and those that were sent to him, which latter, how criminal soever they may be, can't be made use of to his Prejudice.

If we prove these Circumstances, which is all that can be expected from us, we hope you will not think any thing in these Letters a sufficient Evidence to find him guilty of this Crime. And, Gentlemen, if any of those Letters can have such a Construction, yet, considering the nature of the Copy-Book, and the Manner of keeping such Books (which has fallen more under your Observation than mine) and how void of Care he was in managing those Letters that came to him, you will not think it probable that he was engag'd in a Correspondence of such a Nature; and if any thing looks that way, it may either be a Mistake in him that entered the Copies, or might be explain'd, if we were Masters of the rest of the Letters, and of the Book.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I shall take up but a very little of your Time till we have gone through our Evidence, and then shall apply myself to make some Remarks upon it. But in general, the Accusation contained in this Indictment is, that this Man has conspired to take away the Life of the King; the Overt-Acts laid are, that he conspir'd to levy War, and endeavoured to engage Assistance from abroad, and wrote Letters, and sent them to divers Persons beyond Seas for that Purpose.

Gentlemen of the Jury, I am sure you must observe, that as to a direct Proof of his intending to take away the truly precious Life of the King, there is none, but what is endeavoured to be inferr'd from these Letters. If there were, I am sure I should not, and, I believe, none of my Profession would have spoke one Word for him. But all that is said arises from himself. There is no Consultation appears, but that this Man consulted with himself and his Compting-House to take away the Life of the King. As to any of those Letters, there is nothing in them that looks that Way. And as to what is contain'd in the Letters receiv'd from France, they cannot affect him. All that can be inferr'd from them is, that he was privy to what was contained in those Letters: And if that were High-Treason, yet it can only amount to Misprision of Treason in the Prisoner. You who live in this great Trading City, the most eminent for Trade and Commerce in the World, in which, I believe, you are very much concern'd, know that a great Part of the Commerce is carried on by Letters, and all or most of them are entered in Books; you must have a due Apprehension of the Consequences of such a Transaction as this is. To have a Man living in his House in Peace, under the Protection of the King's Laws, to have his Books and Papers taken from him, and those Books and Papers turn'd against him, to the Destruction of him and his Family.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire you would forbear inveighing in this Manner. This is not a proper Manner of Proceeding.

Sir J. Fekyll. You have had an Account that an Information was given to the Secretary of State, of a treasonable Correspondence carried on by this Man, and here is an Harangue complaining that his Person and Papers are seized. You know if there had been an Information given to the meanest Officer in the Kingdom, he could not have justified himself, without doing the same Thing.

L. C. Baron. You are not to arraign those Proceedings.

Mr. Hungerford. I don't doubt but that noble Lord had Grounds for what he did, but what Grounds he had doth not appear: And surely I have a Right to observe, that all the Evidence that appears against the Prisoner, arises from those Letters and Books that were taken away from him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray Mr. Hungerford act within the Bounds of your Profession.

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Attorney, I am to be corrected by the Court, and not by you. I owe Duty to my Lords the Judges, and I shall always pay it.

Mr. Just. Tracy. You ought not to reflect on that Matter of seizing the Papers.

Mr. Hungerford. I am not understood. I say all that is offer'd against him is from the Papers found in his Custody.

Mr. Just. Pratt. If that was all that you had said you ought not to have been interrupted; but I never knew in my Life, but what was done in this Case was ordinarily done in the like Cases, and ought to be done, and you ought not to go on with Invectives to the Jury, complaining that his Papers are seiz'd, and then that those Papers are turn'd against him. When a Correspondence is carried on by Letters, ought they not to be seiz'd? and if they appear to be treasonable, ought they not to be kept and made use of against him? We must not sit here to hear Invectives against Magistrates of the highest Quality, for doing that, which if they had not done, they had failed in their Duty.

Mr. Hungerford. I have not said any thing to impeach the Legality of what was done. All I said, and do say, is, that the Evidence is from the Papers found in his own Custody.

You have heard the Letters read, and you observe, that great Part of them is about Dogs and Horses, and a Sum of 130 l. 4 s. and about a Suit that was carrying on in the Court of Chancery. As to the Book, I shall touch no more upon it now, but I believe we shall be able to offer Proof that there is not any Part of it wrote by himself. How that will agree with the Evidence already given, we must submit. We shall likewise give some Account of some Discourses that had been had with the Man himself. And, I believe, I need not observe to Gentlemen of your Figure and Circumstances, that the Mr. Harvey, who is represented by the King's Council, to be the first Promoter of, and carried on this treasonable Correspondence, spondence, is at Liberty, even without a Trial; and what the Law hath done for him without a Trial, I hope shall, by your Justice, be done for the Prisoner, now upon his Trial, that is, that he shall be acquitted.

Mr. Ward. Though it is difficult for us to be put to explain any of those Letters, yet we will call some Witnesses to explain one, which mentions Persons of 50 or 60 Thousand Crowns a Year, and shew that it was meant of one that was concerned in the Revenue in France, and suffered by it.

Mr. Just. Pratt. If you are going to explain that Letter, it will be necessary to read it again to the Jury.

Which was done accordingly.

Mr. Ward. We will shew it was meant of one George Francia, who had been concern'd in the Revenue in France.

Simon Francia being sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you know George Francia?

S. Francia. Yes.

Mr. Hungerford. Was he concern'd in the Revenue in France, and had he any Loss there?

S. Francia. Yes, he lost all he had.

Mr. Hungerford. By what Occasion was it?

S. Francia. I don't know.

Mr. Hungerford. Was it by his own Management, or depending on others?

S. Francia. I don't know, but I know he had an Estate and lost it all.

Mr. Ward. We offer this only as a Sample for the rest.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was this Man worth?

S. Francia. I computed him to be worth Eight or Ten Thousand Pounds.

Mr. Att. Gen. Doth he answer the Description in the Letter of a Person of Fifty or Sixty Thousand Crowns a Year?

Sir J. Jekyll. Had he any Estate in Land?

S. Francia. No, only in Money.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know of any Offers that have been made, or Threats used to the Prisoner?

S. Francia. I know of some.

Mr. Hungerford. By whom?

S. Francia. By Mr. Buckley. That if he would swear against Mr. Harvey of Comb, he should have a good Reward.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know of any other?

S. Francia. Yes, my Lord Townshend told me he had given my Brother five Guineas, and he would give him more if he would swear against Mr. Harvey.

Mr. Hungerford. Where did he tell you so?

S. Francia. In the Office at the Cockpit.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know any thing of two Warrants that Mr. Buckley brought, one for his Release, and the other for his Confinement.

S. Francia. I don't know any thing of that.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came this Discourse between my Lord Townshend and you?

S. Francia. I was several Times with him at the Office about my Brother.

Mr. Att. Gen. I hope it will be proper at this Time that my Lord Townshend and Mr. Buckley may be asked to this Matter.

Mr. Just. Pratt. I suppose you was present when this past between Mr. Buckley and the Prisoner?

S. Francia. It was between my Lord Townshend and me, and Mr. Buckley and me.

Mr. Just. Pratt. Who else was by, besides Mr. Buckley and you?

S. Francia. No Body else.

Mr. Just. Pratt. Who was by when that which you mention'd past between my Lord Townshend and you?

S. Francia. No Body else. The first Time I applied to my Lord Townshend, I think there was another Secretary there.

Mr. Just. Pratt. But at that Time that you say this Offer was made, was any Body present?

S. Francia. Indeed I don't remember that there was.

Mr. Cowper. I think you say, the first Time you was with my Lord Townshend, there was the other Secretary there?

S. Francia. Yes, there was.

Mr. Cowper. Where was this, in what Room?

S. Francia. In the Cockpit.

Mr. Cowper. What is your Relation to the Prisoner?

S. Francia. I am his Brother.

Mr. Hungerford. You say there was another Secretary by, was it the other Secretary of State?

S. Francia. I know not who it was, there was another Gentleman.

Mr. Att. Gen. He said another Secretary of State.

L. C. Baron. What did my Lord Townshend say to you?

S. Francia. He said he had given my Brother five Guineas, and he would give him more if he would swear against Mr. Harvey.

L. C. Baron. You say at that Time there was another Secretary?

S. Francia. No, no, not at the Time of that Discourse.

L. C. Baron. Nor there was no Body with you and Mr. Buckley?

S. Francia. No.

Then Lucy White was sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Was you by, or in hearing, when any Offers were made to the Prisoner.

White. Upon the Seventh of September I went to see the Prisoner in Newgate. He told me Mr. Buckley was to be there with him, and desired me to conceal myself in the Room, that I might hear what past, and I did so. When Mr. Buckley came he spoke about one Flint; and afterwards Mr. Buckley asked him several Questions about Mr. Harvey. He said he knew nothing but that he was innocent. Mr. Buckley told him he must swear right or wrong for the Government; if he would not, he himself would swear High-Treason against the Prisoner; for he had taken Money of my Lord Townshend, and done nothing for it.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you see any thing of two Warrants Mr. Buckley had at that Time?

White. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Did Mr. Buckley see you?

White. No, I concealed myself under the Feet of the Bed.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say this was the Seventh of September. What Year?

White. In the Year 1716.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was he then?

White. In Newgate.

Then Mary Meggison was sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know of any Offers that were made to the Prisoner, and by whom?

Meggison.

Meggison. Upon the Twenty Eighth of September last I was in Mr. Francia's Room, and Mr. Buckley came in and told him he should be tried suddenly, and there were a great many Witnesses against him; and he would swear against him, because, says he, you have cheated my Master of five Guineas, and won't swear against Mr. Harvey.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was you in the Room then?

Meggison. I sat upon a little Box at the Bed's Feet, and it was so dark he could not see me.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you to Newgate?

Meggison. I have been a great many Times in Newgate.

Mr. Att. Gen. You dwell there sometimes, don't you?

Meggison. No, I never did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you a married Woman?

Meggison. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is your Husband?

Meggison. A Dealer, but he is not in England now.

Prisoner. What Room was I in?

Meggison. A little dark Room.

Prisoner. What do they call it?

Meggison. The Lion's Den.

Prisoner. Every Body knows that Room is a dark Room, that People can't easily be seen in it.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you hear Mr. Buckley say any thing more?

Meggison. Nothing, but that he would bring my Lord Townsbend into Court, on purpose to influence the Jury by his Presence.

Mr. Hungerford. As to these two Witnesses, we have several to speak to their Reputations; but I believe you have no doubt as to that.

Sir J. Fekyll. I dare say no one Person in Court believes a Word they say.

Then Mr. Buckley was called again.

Prisoner. I desire to know whether you was not with me in the Lion's Den.

Mr. Buckley. My Lord, the Prisoner sent to me by Revell the Turnkey, and desired to speak with me; when I came to him, he spoke to me first about Flint, and desired he might be releas'd from his strait Confinement; and then about his own Affairs. He thank'd me for my Humanity in coming to talk with him, so we parted immediately. I told my Lord Townsbend what had pass'd; Flint had the Benefit of it. He had been confined close, but Francia speaking on his behalf, he was released from that Confinement; and that was the Business I went about. The Room is a little dark Room, but if any Body had been at the Foot of the Bed, I believe I might have seen them.

L. C. Baron. Did you say those Words?

Mr. Buckley. No, my Lord, it is impossible I should.

Mr. Hungerford. Not impossible surely?

Mr. Buckley. Yes, impossible, I appeal to my Character: I entirely and utterly deny it. I desire that Revell may be called.

Mr. Ward. We are now in our Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Prisoner calls a Witness that has been called before, and he to make his Evidence entire, appeals to Revell, we ought to call him now, for it would have been improper before.

Mr. Hungerford. If it be nothing but that he was sent for Mr. Buckley, there is no great Harm in it. Otherwise we are in the Course of our Evidence.

Then Revell was sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know the Occasion of Mr. Buckley's coming to Francia in Newgate? Give an Account of what you know of it.

Revell. My Lord, Mr. Francia called to me one Day, and I think it was when I was in the Chapel, and told me, I believe I can do a Piece of Service to the Government: I believe I can suppress the publishing of the Shift-Shifted, I am sure I can: Pray let me speak with Mr. Buckley. Says I, if you would have me, I will go to him, and desire him to come. When would you speak with him? At any time, says he; then I believe the Morning is the best to meet with him; and the next Morning I went to him.

Sir J. Fekyll. Did you tell him the Occasion of Francia's desiring to speak with him?

Revell. Yes.

Sir J. Fekyll. Was you in the Room with them?

Revell. No, but afterwards he said to me, I think I have done the Government some Service, you don't hear it come out as it us'd to do.

Prisoner. I desire to know whether Mr. Buckley was not angry with you that you did not stand at the Door?

Revell. He order'd me to be about the Door, but there came some Workmen to survey the Chapel, I was obliged to go with them, and he came out and was angry that I was not there; and after that I stood there till they had done, but I did not hear what Discourse pass'd.

Then the Lord Townsbend stood up.

Lord Townsbend. My Lord, Mr. Buckley came to me, and told me of the Message he had receiv'd from the Prisoner about the Shift-Shifted, a scandalous Paper that was sent about the Kingdom. He ask'd me if he should go: I told him I thought it was right to go, but I told him he must be cautious, for I did not doubt but that the Prisoner was capable of that Villany I now find he is. He came back to me, and told me what he has now said; and I believe it to be all that pass'd between them, for I have always found him faithful and honest. I thought it was a Service to put a Stop to that Paper; and I did give some Ease to that Man that is named.

I am amazed how there can be such Villany as is in the Brother. He came to the Office two or three Times with Petitions. I never said any thing more, than that it was not in my Power to do any thing; that he must deal ingenuously, tell all that he knew, and shew that he would speak all the Truth; that that was the Way to recommend him to the King's Mercy; that I could not do any thing without it. And I believe the manner I treated Mr. Harvey will justify me, with all that know any thing of it, from the Suspicion of such Intentions against him. All that I did was in regard to the Prisoner's wretched Circumstances, and before Mr. Stanbope; and I never desir'd any thing of him, but to tell the Truth, and the whole Truth.

Prisoner. You told me I should be hang'd, drawn, and quarter'd; and your Lordship told me many a time, Damn you, you Dog, now I have got Mr. Harvey in my Clutches, and you will let him go from me. If there was no particular Animosity against me, why should I be distinguished, for none were put in Irons for treasonable Practices, but me.

Lord Townshend. I would not take up your Lordship's Time, but only to say, that the Warrant for Irons, and to be kept without Pen, Ink, and Paper, was after that Letter had been delivered to me, the Contents of which will sufficiently justify the Precautions used in that Warrant. I was sorry to see the ill Use he made of the Liberty that I had before given him, and I did use that Warrant in that manner. Treasonable Practices were then no more bailable than Treason; and it's no new Thing to fetter State-Prisoners under such an Accusation.

Mr. Ward. I beg leave to ask your Lordship one Question, Whether you apprehend that Curtis deserved any Credit?

Lord Townshend. I can say no more, than that he made some Discoveries, and there was no Prosecution against him. I knew nothing of the Man before, and I know nothing more of him now.

Mr. Ward. Did those Informations appear to be true?

Lord Townshend. A great Part did, by the Confession of one of the Persons he accused.

Mr. Hungerford. As to the two Women that were examined just now, there was a Remark made, that their Testimony was extraordinary; I have five or six People to speak to their Reputation, if it sticks with Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. Perhaps such as themselves; but however call them.

Then Mr. Everall was called.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you know of White or Meggison?

Everall. I know nothing of them.

Mr. Ward. Do you know where the Prisoner's foreign Letters used to be left?

Everall. His Letters always came to my House.

Mr. Ward. Was he usually watchful for the coming in of his Letters, as if there was any Thing of Concern in them?

Everall. No, they often used to lye some time before he called for them.

Mr. Ward. How long did they use to lye?

Everall. Sometimes three or four Days.

Mr. Ward. Were they kept up close till he called for them?

Everall. No, they lay in a public Room, so that any one might see them.

Then Mrs. Everall was sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you know of any Letters directed for Mr. Francia; where were they left?

Mrs. Everall. They used to be brought to our House, and they have lain two or three Days together on a public Table before they have been fetch'd away.

Mr. Cowper. How long ago was that?

Mrs. Everall. About seven Years ago.

Mr. Cowper. Have any been directed to your House of late?

Mrs. Everall. No.

Mr. Ward. We shall now examine some Witnesses to the Copy-Book, to prove that it is not of his Hand-writing; and I don't doubt but that will have its Weight.

L. C. Baron. He own'd it to be his Copy-Book of his Letters to his Correspondents.

Mr. Cowper. We lay the Stress upon this, that he said it was his Copy-Book of his Letters to his Correspondents Abroad.

Mr. Ward. But you know Mr. Buckley laid a Stress upon its being his Hand-Writing.

Then one Rafter was sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Shew him the Copy-Book, look upon it, are you acquainted with the Prisoner's Hand-Writing?

Rafter. Yes.

Mr. Hungerford. Is any Part of that Book his Hand-Writing?

Rafter. No, I take it to be his Son's, George Francia's: The Prisoner writes a smaller Hand, I take no Part of it to be his Hand so far as I have gone.

Mr. Hungerford. I believe it may be of use for all the Witnesses to look it over; we have four or five to this Point; and if I am rightly instructed, there is not one Word in that Book wrote by the Prisoner.

Mr. Just. Pratt. If it is not his Writing, whose do you take it to be?

Rafter. I don't take it to be his.

Mr. Just. Pratt. Whose do you take it to be? Are you acquainted with his Son's Hand?

Rafter. I don't know whether it his Son's or not.

Mr. Just. Pratt. Are there any other Persons that write for him?

Rafter. He had sometimes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is a Letter of his own Writing; pray let him look on that, and see whether that is his Hand; do you believe that to be his Writing?

Rafter. No, I don't think it is.

Mr. Att. Gen. Curtis has prov'd that he own'd that Letter.

Prisoner. What Letter did I own?

Then Simon Francia was call'd again.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you say to that Book?

S. Francia. There is not one Syllable of his Writing in this Book; I have known his Hand-Writing about twenty Years.

Then Barwell was sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Are you acquainted with the Prisoner's Hand-Writing? Is any of that Book of his Writing?

Barwell. None of it is his Writing.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know what Condition of Health he was in about the latter End of the Year 1714, and 1715?

Barwell. He was sick.

Mr. Hungerford. For a Year before he was taken, what Condition was he in? Was he able to write Letters?

Barwell. He was sick.

Mr. Hungerford. Did he use to write Letters in that Time?

Barwell. I don't know.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whose Hand do you take it to be?

Barwell. How do I know that?

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you acquainted with his Son's Hand?

Barwell. No, not at all.

Then Simon Francia was call'd again.

Mr. Att. Gen. You have looked on the Book; whose Hand-Writing do you take it to be?

S. Francia. I don't know.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know his Son's Hand-Writing?

S. Francia. I never had any Correspondence; or great Acquaintance with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever see him write?

S. Francia.

S. Francia. I don't remember that I did.

Mr. Ward. We will trouble you with but one Piece of Evidence more; we will call Dr. Cade, who attended him in his Sickness. We have offered Evidence, that no Part of that Book is his Writing; we will now offer some Proof that he was not capable of writing at that Time.

Then Dr. Cade was sworn.

Mr. Ward. Pray Doctor, did you attend the Prisoner as his Physician at any Time?

Dr. Cade. My Lord, I was sent for to him on the second Day of November, 1714. I attended him till the 18th of the same Month, and within that Time I visited him nine Times, I found him in a great deal of Pain, and he was lame in his Hand; some Time after my coming he grew better.

Mr. Ward. Was he confin'd to his Bed?

Dr. Cade. Sometimes he kept his Bed, and sometimes he sat up.

Mr. Ward. You say he was in Pain, and lame in his Hand; which Hand was it?

Dr. Cade. I don't remember which; nor do I know any thing of him, only at that Time.

Sir J. Fekyll. Every one of the Letters were wrote after that Time.

Prisoner. What Condition did you leave me in?

Dr. Cade. In a very bad Condition.

Prisoner. Did you not hear of the Condition I was in afterwards?

Dr. Cade. I don't remember that I heard any thing of you after that.

Mr. Ward. We will call a few Witnesses to prove what Circumstances he was in, and that he was well affected to the Government.

Mr. Hungerford. By my Instructions he appears to be a Foreigner, and so disinterested in those unfortunate Divisions that are amongst us: And accordingly there is nothing of Whig or Tory in his Letters.

Mr. Att. Gen. Don't you remember when he came to Newgate he wrote he liked his Company, for he found them all Tories.

Mr. Hungerford. We will shew you that he was zealous for the Good of the Kingdom, and was against all that was disadvantageous to Trade in the late Treaty of Peace. That he never went into any public Places, except to the Grecian Coffee-House, which is a Place sure not tainted with Sedition.

Then Mr. Everall was call'd again.

Mr. Ward. How long have you known the Prisoner?

Everall. Several Years.

Mr. Ward. Has he been peaceable, and easy in his Conversation, with Respect to the Government?

Everall. I remember at the proclaiming the Peace he said, he thought the Nation was ruin'd, for he thought it a scandalous Peace.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is much; for you make him a Frenchman, sure he might have approved it.

Mr. Hungerford. This is not what I have in my Brief, but perhaps he may recommend himself to your Esteem by it: He doth not to mine.

My Lord, I will take up your Time only with this Remark: The great Foundation of this Evidence is the Confession made by the Man himself. Without the Key made by him, this had been applicable to no Body. I remember Sir

Joseph Fekyll was pleas'd to say, he would not excite the Passions of the Jury, but rather appeal to their Judgments, so will I. Great Part of this Correspondence relates to Mr. Harvey, and one would have thought they had something extraordinary to have charged on him, considering the Length of his Restraint; but I need not observe to the Jury that he is at large. He was under Restraint, nothing could be imputed to him, and he is discharged.

L. C. Baron. Francia, have you any Thing more to say?

Prisoner. As for my Nativity I have more Witnesses. I have more Witnesses as to my Character. I have more Witnesses to prove that I was a quiet Man, and never disaffected to the Government.

Then Mr. John Slater was sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you know of the Prisoner's Behaviour?

Mr. Slater. I have known him about four or five Years. There being a Commission of Bankruptcy against him, I was recommended to assist him in that Commission. I did give him the best Assistance I could, and I several Times met him, sometimes at the Grecian Coffee-House, and sometimes at my own House. I took him for a Frenchman, he used very much to espouse the Interest of the King of France, which I used to chide him for. As for Parties here, I had some Discourse with him, and he used to think we were a strange People to fall out among ourselves.

Then Thomas Richardson was sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you know of the Prisoner and his Behaviour?

Richardson. I have known him five or six Years, and I believe I have taken five or six Pounds of his Money. When he was sick he took a Liking to me, and would not be quiet unless I came often to see him, and I used often to sit with him in an Evening and bear him Company, and it was a great Surprize to me when I heard he was taken up, for he used often to drink a Health to King George, and hoped he should get up to see him, and hoped this would be a quiet Nation again. He was then so weak that he could not stir Hand or Foot. But he used to call me Vulcan, and bid me drink King George's Health.

Mr. Hungerford. How long is it since he was so weak that he could not stir Hand or Foot?

Richardson. About a Year and five or six Months. And when he got abroad I then was forced to follow him for what he owed me, and I have gone after him several Times to the Grecian Coffee-house.

L. C. Baron. Have you any thing more to say?

Prisoner. No.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I must beg Leave (by Way of Reply to what has been offered, on Behalf of the Prisoner) to say, That this is a Cause of very great Concern to the King, to the Royal Family, and to the whole Kingdom in general; and I may with Justice affirm, that this Day one of these two Points must be determin'd; either that the Prisoner at the Bar is guilty of High-Treason, or that no Man can, as the Law now stands, be convicted of holding a foreign, traitorous Correspondence, if this Evidence be not sufficient; for here has been the strongest Evidence given of such a Correspondence, as I believe believe ever was, or perhaps ever can be given, according to the Nature of the Thing.

The Gentlemen of the Jury will consider the Nature of the Treason, as it is laid in the Indictment, it is for compassing and imagining the Death of the King; now, that rests in the Imagination, and is compleat in the Mind; but there must be some open or public Act that must appear to you in Proof, to convince you that the Prisoner had that Imagination. There are three Overt-Acts laid in this Indictment, and we have produced Evidence sufficient for the Proof of two of them, though if any one of them be prov'd, it is enough. The first is, conspiring, consenting and agreeing to raise an Insurrection and Rebellion within this Kingdom, in Favour of the Pretender; and for conspiring, consenting, and agreeing to solicit and procure from France, Arms, Ammunition, Men and Money, to aid and assist in such Rebellion; and the last is for composing and writing several treasonable Letters, declaring his Intention and Resolution to levy that War, and to raise that Rebellion.

The Evidence that has been given is of two Sorts; it consists first, of Letters wrote by the Prisoner himself to his Correspondents in France; and secondly, of Letters wrote to him by such Correspondents, signifying the Receipt of Letters wrote by the Prisoner to him, touching this traiterous Design. For Proof of the Letters wrote by the Prisoner, we have produced his Copy-Book of Letters, wherein they are entered, proved to be Part his own Hand-writing, and the rest his Son's; and indeed, it is a surprizing Thing, that that Copy-Book should remain, which indeed is so rare a Way to perpetuate the Testimony of Treason, as I believe the like Evidence is never to be expected again; and it is absurd to expect, when a Traitor writes in a foreign Country, that he should be able to produce the Original Letters. The Proof of this Copy-Book to be his is beyond doubt; it is prov'd by his own Confession, before three Witnesses, and in very strong Terms, This, says he, is my Copy-Book of my Letters to my Correspondents abroad. Is it possible that stronger Evidence can be given? Nay, he goes farther, as a Noble Lord informed you; for when he was examining the Prisoner, and the Prisoner pretended that he was only a Conveyer of Letters, but did not write himself; says he, As to what I have wrote, I appeal to my own Copy-Book of Letters. They have brought indeed some Witnesses to say, That they believe that the Copy-Book is not of his Hand-Writing, though they don't tell you whose Hand it is. But that is not material, nor of any Weight, for Copies of Letters are sometimes enter'd by the Parties themselves, and sometimes by their Servants, or others whom they appoint, and that is the same thing; but to answer that fully, the Prisoner has confessed that Part of this Copy-book was of his own Hand-writing, and the rest of his Son's.

As to the other Letters from D'Aulmay, his French Correspondent to him, which are many in Number, we have given the best Proof the Thing is capable of; we have produc'd the very Original Letters themselves, directed to him, with the Post-Mark from France, found all in his Custody, and confessed to be his Letters which he received from France, before three Witnesses. This shews evidently that there was a traiterous Correspondence, and is a plain Evidence, that the Prisoner sent those Letters mentioned to be received in D'Aulmay's Letters to him, to which these were Answers, and the Letters exactly tally as to Dates, Circumstances and Subject. If there had been but one of those Letters sent to the Prisoner, containing treasonable Matter, it would have been Misprision of Treason, if he had not discovered it; but his going on with the same treasonable Correspondence for Months together, and in so many Letters, in every one of which he charges the Prisoner with writing High-Treason, and he preserving all those Letters, concealing and keeping them close; this is a strong Evidence of his Approbation and Assent to that Treason and traiterous Correspondence. And so it is in the common Case, if a Man meet accidentally, not knowing of the Design, and light into the Company of Traitors, and hear their Discourse and say nothing, if he don't discover it, he is guilty of Misprision of Treason only, as a bare Concealment; but if he comes a second time into their Company, and meet them again and hear their Consultations, or the same Treason is proposed and talk'd of, and he conceals it, he is guilty of High-Treason; because it shews a Liking and an Approbation of their Design, and so it was resolved in Sir Everard Digby's Case. So here, all these Letters that came from D'Aulmay, and were kept up close by the Prisoner, containing treasonable Matter, shew his Approbation of the Treason, and are a strong Evidence, that he sent those Letters to his Correspondent D'Aulmay, to which these are Answers: It has been said, that admitting these Letters were sent by D'Aulmay to the Prisoner, yet he is not answerable for what others write: That, surely, is a great Mistake; for if what he writes be Treason, it is his Duty to disclose it; and if he do not, but continue to receive such Letters, this is a clear Proof of his traiterous Correspondence, and by that he makes the Treason his own. They object farther, that the Prisoner was only a Conveyer of Mr. Harvey's and the Duke D'Aumont's Letters; but that this is otherwise, appears from the Letters themselves, for most of them relate to himself, and are meant of himself, and of a Correspondence with him; for it appears from his own Confession in his Examination proved by three Witnesses, that this French Correspondence held from a little before the late Queen's Death, till a few Days before his Examination; which shews that the Correspondence was his own, and carry'd on by himself.

In the next place we come to consider the Exposition and Meaning of these Letters, whether the Subject Matter be Treason or not; one of the Council for the Prisoner said, there was nothing in them but about Dogs and Horses; but that is a Mistake, for those were Mr. Harvey's Letters, which talked sometimes of Dogs and Horses; but give me leave to say, there seems even in them to be a good deal of Treason, intermixt with the Discourse of Dogs and Horses. Let us examine some of his own Letters, and see whether the Subject Matter be not treasonable. It is not to be expected that Men will in these Cases speak out plain; no, the Treason is always to be dressed up in a Cant, and many of these Cases have appeared in this place. In my Lord Preston's Case, the Overt-Act charged there, was sending treasonable Letters to France, to give the Prince of that Nation an Account of our Strength and Forces here; here; those Letters run all in a sort of Cant, and it was in that Case pretended, that the Meaning was uncertain, and that no Body knew what to make of some of the Expressions in them; but notwithstanding that, both Judges and Jury took upon them to understand them, and he was found Guilty of High-Treason.

In the Letter of the 26th of February, D'Aulmay writes to the Prisoner, and desires to know some News, because the Interest of his Wife and Family, which, says he, is Irish, is concern'd in it, his Wife being a Butler, and of Kin to the Duke of Ormond. Francia, in Answer to that Letter writes him word, as for News, that he heard there was a Marriage in good forwardness between the Prince in Lorraine and one of the Arch-Dutcheffes. "Let me know, says he, what there is in it, since 'tis essential to the Interest of your Wife, that is to say, that Ireland as well as England was concern'd in the Pretender's Marriage; for every one knows who is meant by the Prince in Lorraine. Now see what Answer D'Aulmay sends back, he gives his Opinion freely, and thinks that this intended Marriage of the Chevalier de St. George (which by the way explains who the Prince in Lorraine was) with the Arch-Dutcheffes, would not be a sure way to bring his Affairs to an happy Issue. What was to be done then? Why, says he, a Party-War would be much more to his Advantage. Is not this easily to be understood? Is not this Party-War a Civil-War, an Insurrection, a Rebellion? D'Aulmay then giving his Opinion, that a Rebellion was the most eligible Way; what is the Prisoner's Answer? why he closes with the Advice, but says, That Persons of Fifty or Sixty Thousand Crowns a Year can't with Prudence run the Hazard of losing such Estates, unless more Encouragement be given them: What is this but soliciting Aid and Encouragement from France, for an Enterprize in which Men of Estates must run the Risque of losing them? It is said Persons in the Plural Number, not one single Person, tho' the Prisoner's Council endeavour'd to put such a Colour upon it; but it is plain in a Party-War many must be concern'd.

In his Letter of the 28th of March, after he had express'd a great deal of Uneasiness and Impatience, the Negligence and Delay of this Assistance from France, not usual in that Nation, after he had wrote again and again, and wonder'd the Delays were so great; at last, says he, We are now to expect every thing from your side the Water. What can be the meaning of this, but that the design'd Rebellion here was to be encourag'd from France. And this surely is as much as can be expected in an Affair of Treason, unless People were to write out plain, which is never to be expected, unless from Fools and Ideots who cannot commit Treason. All D'Aulmay's Letters to the Prisoner tally with those of the Prisoner's own, and pursue the same Design, tho' under a Cant which runs thro' most of them, as was in the Lord Preston's Case. In that Case there was the Cant of a Law-Suit, as in this; but my Lord Chief Justice Holt, and my Lord Chief Justice Pollexfen said, that would not acquit his Lordship of Treason, if the Jury understood them in that Sense as every Body else would. And why Words and Letters are not to be understood in Court, as every Body understands them out of Court, is a hard Matter to be explain'd.

It was indeed insisted by the Council for the Prisoner, that there really was a Cause recommend- ed to the Prisoner's Care, that is very true; but then the Distinction between this private Cause, and the public Cause of the Pretender, appears from many of D'Aulmay's Letters; sometimes he calls it our Cause, sometimes the Cause of our Common Friend, and in a very remarkable Letter of D'Aulmay's, dated from Paris, 7 August 1715. he says, The Prisoner was in the right to inveigh against that Indolence he reproached them with; but he persuaded, says he, 'tis only so in Appearance. I even hope, that by this time you have convincing Proofs of it, and that we make suitable Returns to the good Disposition on your Side, and that at last, God blessing the just Cause of our Friend, will let him gain his Suit. To explain this Letter, the Time is very material, for on the 20th of July before his Majesty inform'd his Parliament, that he had undoubted Intelligence of the Pretender's Design to invade these Kingdoms from Abroad. And in other Letters he distinguishes between the private Cause, and the Cause of the Pretender, and calls it my Cause. And in a Letter of the 14th of September 1715. We know already, says he, what you tell us about the Cause of our Friend, which will soon end to his Satisfaction, or all Appearances will deceive us; and then says, as to my own Cause, I can't help telling you, that my Fate is very unhappy to have to do with so dishonest a Man; if Treason be not meant by those Letters, what is; Let the Prisoner tell us the Meaning of them. Neither he, nor his Council, have offer'd at any other Interpretation, nor have offer'd to explain but one single Letter in the whole Packet; and that has been observ'd was a poor Interpretation, and contrary to the very Grammar and Sense of the Letter. But what puts this Matter beyond doubt, if there could be any, about the Meaning of these Letters, is, that he himself tell you in his Examination, in express and positive Terms, that the Subject Matter of the Letters that were to be communicated to Mr. Harvey, which are the Letters now produc'd in Evidence, was the Intention of the Pretender to invade his Majesty's Dominions; and when he himself has allow'd this, who is to gainsay it? Can you have a better Witness than himself, to the Subject of his own Letters, and to explain his own Meaning?

There have been some Reflections offer'd which by no means ought to have been, and I think were very improper on this Occasion; and it is our Duty to take notice of them when they are offer'd. It was said, by way of Reflection, that first of all, the Prisoner's Books and Papers were seized, and then they were turn'd upon him, and made use of against him, as if this was illegal, unusual, and new; when every Body knows in those Cases, there can be no other Evidence; and is the same that has been done in all Ages past, and must be done in all Ages to come. I am sure they have no reason to charge the Government with Inclemency; there has been shewn, even in this very Case, as much Clemency and Tenderness as was possible. When the Noble Lord, my Lord Townshend, had the first Information of treasonable Practices against the Prisoner, he had been justified, if he had immediately sent his Warrant and sent him to Newgate for High-Treason; but instead of that, he was cautious, and was willing to be further inform'd before he committed him; and therefore he sends to the Post-Office and orders his Letters to be stop'd, in which he found the the treasonable Correspondence confirm'd; and then he was taken into the Custody of a Messenger only, in order to be examin'd. His Lordship thereupon gave him all the Opportunities he could desire, of throwing himself at his Majesty's Feet; but he grossly prevaricated with his Lordship, as appears by that Letter wrote to his Wife; wherein he takes notice, that in Newgate they were all Tories, and the Majority for the Government, i. e. sent thither upon that Account: "You know, says he, why I am here, which can't be a Dishonour to me, be then at ease; I have not said any thing against Mr. Harvey, nor nothing can be done to him; he can only be suspected to be the Pretender's Friend.

And now give me leave to take notice, that in this Letter he gives a further Explanation of this Business; for he says, According to their Information, i. e. the Tories, though every thing should fail, my Lord Townshend could do nothing, for Affairs will be at an end in less than a Fortnight. Now the time is very material, every one knows that the Rebellion was just then breaking out; it began in Scotland in September, and in England in October following. They have call'd some Witnesses to the Prisoner's Reputation, but they have not proved any thing material on that Head, nor given a tolerable Account of him. But if they had, it would in this Case be of little or no weight; when a thing is doubtful, Reputation may sway a little, but in Cases where the Evidence is so full and plain as in this Case, it can have no Signification or Weight. It was observ'd by us, that when the treasonable Correspondence began to be more plain and full, then the Prisoner desisted from entering his Letters in his Copy-book; in Answer to which, it was urg'd by the Prisoner's Council, that it was improbable it should be so, for that the Correspondence was entirely interrupted for several Months together, because as they insisted in one of D' Aulmay's Letters, dated 17th September, he complains he had not heard from the Prisoner in three Months; but that is grounded on a Mistake, for the Person that uses that Expression, is not D' Aulmay, but another Person, and it is wrote in French in a Postscript under D' Aulmay's Letter; for in the Beginning of the Letter it self, D' Aulmay expressly says, he had received the Prisoner's Letter of the Ninth Instant, which shews the Correspondence continued, but was too gross to enter such Letters in his Copy-book, or to write under the same Name; for now, he says, when he has any thing material, he would write in a strange Hand, and would sign it by the Name of Jacques Chrétien, and that Mr. Harvey might write under the same Name too; but none of these Letters appear.

Thus I hope I have answer'd every thing that has been materially objected by the Prisoner's Council, and if you, Gentlemen of the Jury, do believe that the Prisoner at the Bar wrote these Letters, the Copies whereof have been produced to you, and that those Letters produced from his Correspondent D' Aulmay, were receiv'd by the Prisoner, and that he wrote the Letters therein mentioned, and that he has therein carried on a traitorous Correspondence, you will acquit yourselves to your King and Country, and find him Guilty of the High-Treason charg'd upon him.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, it may be proper on this Occasion, Mr. Solicitor having repeated the particular Parts of the Evidence, to take notice of some Things, that have appeared in general in the Course of this Trial: We think it of Importance to the Public, that this traitorous Correspondence should appear in a proper Light, that the deluded Populace may be no longer to seek, who were the Persons that incited, and fomented the late unnatural Rebellion.

The Gentlemen of the Jury will observe, that our Evidence begins with a secret Information which was given to a Noble Lord who was then Secretary of State, of a traitorous Correspondence carried on by the Prisoner, and his Accomplices: That Information was not immediately or hastily relied upon, but Orders were given that all Letters, directed to Francia the Prisoner, should be intercepted at the Post-Office; accordingly you have heard, that several Foreign Letters from France, directed to the Prisoner, were stopp'd, and sent to the Secretary's Office; those Letters fully disclosing the Treason, it was thought Time to issue a Warrant, and send a Messenger to seize the Prisoner and his Papers; and it is to us wonderful, that one of the Council for the Prisoner should undertake to censure that Proceeding, the Neglect of which must have been censured, if it had not been done: After an Information receiv'd, of so vile and dangerous a Conspiracy, confirmed and made evident by Letters intercepted, was it possible for one, entrusted in so high a Station, under his Majesty, to do less than to cause the Person and Papers of the Prisoner to be secured?

You have heard, Gentlemen of the Jury, that from the Time of seizing the Letters, and Copy-Book of Letters, in the Lodging and actual Custody of the Prisoner, there is a regular and certain Proof, as to the Identity of the Book, and Papers produced at this Time, and given in Evidence; they were carried by the Messengers just as they were taken, to Mr. Walpole, who deliver'd them to Mr. Buckley, and the Witnesses all speak likewise, to the Book and Papers themselves, so that there remains no Manner of Dispute concerning them.

Amongst these Papers, Gentlemen, you will observe, there is one Letter that relates to Mr. Harvey, which is now produced because it is Evidence against the Prisoner Francia: He, it seems, was to manage Mr. Harvey's Correspondence, and did so for a considerable Time, but at last Curiosity prevail'd; and it is very remarkable, by what Accident that Original treasonable Letter happens to appear now in this Place: It seems the Prisoner, in Breach of the Trust and Confidence which was reposed in him, and to gratify his Curiosity, opened the Letter, and finding he could not seal it up, and put it together again in that manner, but that it might be suspected he had opened it; for that Reason he himself kept the very Original Letter under Mr. Harvey's own Hand. When that Letter comes to be read, it appears to be mysterious, as to the Figures and Numbers made use of, instead of the Names of Persons, but the Prisoner's Examination explains it, which shews he was Master of the Key, and of the Secret.

This Discovery was attended with Circumstances that will have their Weight, in a Cause of this Nature, when this Letter found upon the Prisoner, is produced to the Person that wrote it, before a Committee of the Lords of the Council, you have heard that he was in the utmost Disorder, order, as indeed well he might, that he express'd himself ready to disclose all that he knew; for what Person being in his Condition, and seeing one of his own Letters, which he believed safe in the Hands of his Correspondents Abroad, would not have believed the Government Masters of the rest; I dare say Francia's impertinent Curiosity was then unthought of and unsuspected. I am sorry, Gentlemen, to mention a particular Accident, which, however, serves to shew that the Correspondence was of a dangerous Nature, otherwise what Account can be given, that that Gentleman should, in about twelve Hours after, make a desperate Attempt upon himself?

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I apprehend that nothing of this Matter ought to be mentioned here; whatever Mr. Harvey was liable to, he is now at Liberty.

Mr. Cowper. I say, my Lord, it had that Consequence, and if it had not been a Discovery of the utmost Importance, if it had not been thought very dangerous in its Consequence to himself, that Attempt upon himself had never been made: But so it was, and it is so far material, as it was occasioned by Part of that Correspondence which the Prisoner was employ'd to transmit to the Conspirators in France.

You have heard, Gentlemen, that Francia, when he was first examined, capitulated for himself; that he promised to make a full Confession, and accordingly gave in a first, and second Information, which have been read to you; and I dare say, when he signed those Examinations, he really intended to save himself by a Discovery of his Treason; but when he had taken Counsel with his Party and Fellow-Prisoners in Newgate, you find by his Letter to his Wife, he changed his Mind, and the Expression is to this Effect, He hopes he had said nothing that could hurt either himself or Mr. Harvey, and that he laugh'd at any thing the Government could do to himself.

Your Lordship has heard how artificially and maliciously it has been insinuated, that the Noble Lord, the Secretary of State, gave some Hopes of Intercession to be made in Favour of the Prisoner; I firmly believe, no Man living that knows that Lord, but thinks he would have been better than his Word, if the Prisoner had honestly deserv'd it. Whatever was said upon that Occasion, proceeded from the Prisoner's Assurances, that he would make a full Confession, that was the Ground and Condition upon which the Prisoner was told he should be recommended to Mercy. But let the World judge, whether that Noble Lord could justify it to the King, his Country, or to himself, to interpose in his Favour, when he came to discover by a Letter under the Prisoner's own Hand, that he was resolv'd to conceal all that he knew: Surely, the Condition being broke by the Criminal himself, it became the Duty of the Noble Lord not to intercede for an obstinate Offender; one, that was determined to abide every Extremity, rather than do his Duty, by disclosing those Treasons that were latent in his Breast; so that we owe the Discovery which is made by the Examinations to the same Providence that has brought to Light the rest of the Evidence in a strange and wonderful Manner.

After so much Time has been spent, it would be tedious to observe the particular Passages of the Letters which have been given in Evidence, only this I would observe, that when the Rebellion was not so near at hand, there seems to be some little Caution used in penning the Letters which have been read out of the Copy-book; but as the Time grew near, the Correspondence also grew more warm and open, as may be perceived by the Letters from Abroad; which is the Reason, Gentlemen, you find him discontinue entering his own Letters in his Copy-book. It has been said by his Council, Can it be imagined that a Man would copy and enter Letters of a criminal Nature? but Gentlemen, the Question is, Whether he has done it? And you hear it proved by three Witnesses, that he owned it to be his own Copy-book of Letters to his Correspondents Abroad; so that there can remain no doubt, but that every Letter in that Book is a Copy of the Original wrote by the Prisoner: Whoever will observe the Time when he discontinues entering his Letters as formerly, which was just as the Rebellion was breaking out, will think it a strong Evidence, if Evidence were wanting, that the Letters enter'd, contained a criminal and traitorous Correspondence.

Had the Correspondence been innocent, the same Method would have been continued; for the Rebellion had nothing to do with the sham Law-Suit. But as the Rebellion grew nigh, it became necessary to be more express and plain, as appears by all the Letters to Francia from abroad; which is the true Reason he discontinued entering his own Letters. Can any Body than can hear or read, doubt, but that the Prisoner continued to write to his Friend Payen? I think there is not one Letter directed to the Prisoner that don't in the first Line of it acknowledge the Receipt of the Prisoner's, Yours of such and such a Date I have received; and some of them acknowledge the Receipt of two Letters from the Prisoner at the same Time, which shews his Diligence, and proves, that he writ oftener to his Correspondent than his Correspondent to him. You see, Gentlemen, the Letters from D'Aulmay, alias Payen, to the Prisoner, make it manifest he went on to the last in the same traitorous Correspondence; but it can't be expected his Original Letters should be produc'd. D'Aulmay's Letters plainly intimate the Tenour of the Prisoner's: I will trouble you but with an Instance or two amongst many that might be observed.

Of this kind are all those Letters which dissuaded the Prisoner from being impatient; that give him Assurance they are not dilatory; that promise him every thing will answer his Expectation. All these, and many other Expressions of the like kind, manifesting that he was solliciting Aid from France, and that he did what in him lay to incite, promote, and encourage an Invasion from Abroad, and the Rebellion at Home.

This Gentlemen, is the Nature of the Evidence that has been laid before you: The Discovery was accidental, the tracing of it is strange and wonderful. Deep and secret are the Councils of Traytors; and yet we see, let them be never so cautious, whatever Method they may take to disguise their Treason, whatever subtle Inventions may be used to carry on their Conspiracy, yet the same Providence that has placed his sacred Majesty upon the Throne of his Ancestors, will continue to guard and protect him, and to baffle the Devices of his Enemies. Upon the whole Matter, we think we have fully prov'd the Treason and the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment.

We think it may reasonably be concluded from the Evidence, that the Prisoner has conspired, consulted, and agreed to raise and levy War within this Kingdom, to depose and murder the King; that he has written to and received from his Correspondents Abroad many Letters to procure foreign Assistance for that Purpose; and the Court will inform you, Gentlemen, that this is Treason in the Prisoner at the Bar.

L. C. Baron. Gentlemen of the Jury, Francis Francia stands indicted of High-Treason, for compassing and imagining the King's Death; contriving to depose him from the Throne, and to advance the Pretender to the Crown. And there are laid in the Indictment several Overt-Acts; one is, that he consulted and agreed to raise an Insurrection and Rebellion against the King: And that for that Purpose he wrote Letters to divers Foreigners, to solicit and procure Arms, Men and Money, and to cause an Invasion; and caused those Letters to be sent to divers Foreigners in France.

This is the Substance of the Indictment, and to prove this, it has been shewn you how he was taken and seized. And Mr. Smith tells you, it was upon the Nineteenth Day of September, 1715. that he had a Warrant to seize him; That he went with another Messenger, since deceased, whose Name was Wilcox, and found him and a Woman in Bed. The Prisoner in a little Time got up. He tells you there was a Closet in the Room, the Door whereof he caused to be open'd, and in it, upon a Shelf, found a Parcel of Letters lying open in Folio, wrote in French, and a Book, that has been produced, lying upon the Desk. He put up the Letters and the Book together; when he had so done, says the Prisoner, What do you take that Book for? That is my Copy-Book of my Letters to my Correspondents, and there is nothing material in that. The Messenger took notice of a sort of Writing at the End of it, that he knew it by again, and the Prisoner said, That was his Son's Writing. It has been deduced to you, that the Book and the Letters that have been produced to you, are the same Book and Letters that were seized in the Prisoner's House, and carried to my Lord Townshend's Office.

Mr. Walpole tells you on what Day the Warrant was granted, and that the next Day the Book and Papers were delivered to him by the Messenger; that he looked over them with Mr. Buckley, and then he carried them to my Lord Townshend; and that the Prisoner owned the Letters upon his Examination before my Lord, and said, This is my Book of my Letters to my Correspondents; some of them were enter'd by me, and the rest of them by my Son. This is prov'd to be the same Book; and upon Perusal of the Letters, Mr. Walpole proves them to be the same that were brought to him by the Messenger.

Mr. Buckley says, that when these Letters were brought to the Office, he read several of them; and that when Mr. Walpole went to Holland, they were left with him, and he copied several Passages out of them. Mr. Buckley was present at the Prisoner's Examination, but can't say any thing as to the Book's being shewn to him, because he was busy in taking the Examination; but says, that Francia, upon his Examination, would not be sworn upon a New Testament; but took a Book out of his Pocket, and was sworn upon that, that his Examination was true. He subscribed his Name to it, and it was read over to him. It was objected, that he was refused the Liberty of reading it: But there was no such Thing; he might have read it, and it was read to him, and he was never refused to read it.

My Lord Townshend informs you, that he having received an Information, that a Correspondence was carried on between the Duke D'Aumont, the late Duke of Ormond, and Mr. Harvey, and that Letters past between them by means of the Prisoner, there were Orders sent to the Post-Office, to stop all Letters directed to Francia; that the Prisoner being examined before my Lord, own'd all these Letters. And says he, As to my own Letters, I appeal to my Book which will shew them, these are so many Evidences that he owned this Book to be the Book of his Letters. What others write to me, says he, can't affect me; but as for my own Letters I appeal to my Book. My Lord says, there seem'd to be a Disposition in him to tell all he knew, and he offered to explain the Letters there produced; that at the next Time Mr. Harvey's Letter was produced, and he explained the Figures in that Letter; and my Lord Townshend then took him to be sincere, but he found afterwards, that he had not discovered all he knew. These Letters were laid upon the Table during the Time of the Examination, and were taken back again. The Prisoner asked several Questions about Money being given him, and more offered to him, by my Lord Townshend. My Lord gave an Account of that, and says, that the Prisoner pretended to be in a miserable Condition, his Wife starving, and he begg'd hard for something, pretending to be miserably poor; and as he was going away, as meer Alms, my Lord gave him three, or four, or five Guineas, not as any Encouragement to him to swear any Thing, but as meer Alms, because he begged so hard, and pretended to be in so miserable a Condition. Then he desired to know, whether it was not promis'd him, that his Examination should not be produced against him. He was told, that if he was candid there should be no Advantage taken against him, and that my Lord would intercede on his Behalf; and if he had been so, no doubt, my Lord would have done what he could to incline the King to be favourable to him; but after this my Lord found he knew a great deal more than he would discover. His Wife came indeed to my Lord, and pretended she could prevail upon him to discover, if she might be admitted to him; but after this, when he was in Newgate, a Letter was found directed to his Wife, in which he said, he met with good Company in Newgate, and hoped he had said nothing against Mr. Harvey which would prejudice him; and upon this, my Lord Townshend did not think him so sincere as he pretended to be at first. Mr. Buckley proves that Letter to be of his Hand-Writing. In it he desires his Wife to make herself easy, They were all Tories that were there; he had good Company, and the Business will be at an End in a Fortnight. What Business could he mean? Nothing but that about which the Correspondence was, and God will assist us; I know nothing against Mr. Harvey, he is only suspected to be for the Affair, he was well known to be so before; and if all were here that are so, he believed three Parts of the Nation would be there. So that he had a good Opinion of the Cause, and that it would be over in a Fortnight.

This

This Examination was also prov'd by Mr. Stanbope, who says, that the Letter of Mr. Harvey annexed to it, was produc'd at Council to Mr. Harvey; that he was in the utmost Confusion, chang'd Countenance, desired to withdraw, and to have liberty to speak to a certain Lord: My Lord Townsbend, and Mr. Stanbope, both thought him in a good Disposition to discover, but that very Night he stabb'd himself. As to the Examination, he pretended he was not suffer'd to read it; but Mr. Stanbope says, that every thing of Consideration was repeated more than once or twice; and after the first Night's Examination, he represented himself to be in a miserable Condition, and thereupon my Lord Townsbend did give him some Money, what it was he knows not; and this was after he had sign'd his Examination, and shew'd no Reluctancy to it; and says, that he would not have been denied to have read it, if he had desired it. This Examination being thus proved, it appears to have been taken as fairly and carefully in all respects, and with as much Kindness to the Prisoner as could be: Things were gone over and over again. It has been read, and there are some things in that explain this Correspondence, and tell you how it was begun and carried on.

It was begun by means of a Law-Suit that was recommended to him to manage here, and that brought on the Correspondence between him and the Abbot Butler: This begun a little before the Queen's Death, and it continu'd till within a few Days of the Prisoner's Examination. During that Correspondence he received several Letters from the Abbot, directed to Mr. Harvey, and several were conveyed to the Abbot from Mr. Harvey, which were sometimes brought by Mr. Harvey himself, and sometimes sent by other Hands. The Prisoner also explains the initial Letters and Numbers in Mr. Harvey's Letter, and then tells you, that he believes the Subject Matter of the Letters wrote to Mr. Harvey, by Payen aliàs D'Aulmay, was the Design of the Pretender to invade these Kingdoms; this he could not know unless he had been privy to the Design. If a Man is privy to a treasonable Design, and contributes to carrying it on, it is not then barely a Misprision: If he comes to the Knowledge of Treason, without being otherwise concern'd in it, and does not discover it to a Magistrate, this is Misprision of Treason; but if he assents to the Treason, or acts in carrying it on, it is High-Treason.

In the next Examination it is, that he shews what the Marks in Mr. Harvey's Letter signify: That 22 is the Duke D'Aumont, 6 the French King, 17 is the Word Tory, and believes that by 8 is to be understood the Pretender, and by 9 is to be understood his Majesty. There are some Marks that he don't know, but his knowing thus far the Signification of these Marks, shews that he was privy to the Design.

Mr. Harvey's Letter is annex'd to this Examination, and that has been read to you; there are some Things remarkable in that Letter, though a great part of it seems to be about some Money that he wanted to be paid him; yet at the end he says, Press 22 to think of his Friends; it will be well for 6; all Things look well for 8, and in my heart, I think better than ever; 9, says he, Every Day loses himself, and for the 24000 that makes for 8 and 6, that is, for the Pretender and the French King. He says, that opening the Cover the Letter stuck to the Seal, and that was the reason that he kept it by him, and did not send it forward. If this Man had not been for carrying on the Design, it had been his Duty to have carried this Letter to the Secretary of State, he ought to have discover'd it to a Magistrate; but instead of that, he owns, that he has since written other Letters that have been read to you.

At the beginning of the Correspondence D'Aulmay desires to have some News, and Francia tells him, there was a Discourse of a Marriage in Forwardness between the Prince at Lorraine and the Arch-Dutchess. "Let me know," says he, "what is in it, for it is for the Interest of your Wife, for he had married a Wife whose Name was Butler. D'Aulmay writes word again, As for the Marriage of the C——r St. G——e; but it is in Answer to the former Letter, and it is known that he was called by the Name of the Chevalier St. George; so that it must be the same Person. He says, there had been some talk of that Marriage, but no mention had been made of it lately, I am of Opinion, says he, that it will not be a sure way to bring his Affairs to a happy Issue; a Party-War would be of more Advantage: Francia writes again to D'Aulmay, and complains, that some Letters had not been answer'd, tho' entirely for the Affair. And what that Affair is, must be left to you to judge. Besides, says he, I must tell you, that Persons of Fifty or Sixty Thousand Crowns a Year won't run the Hazard of losing such Estates unless more Encouragement is given them; you will be understood if you mention it to that Lord. And I must add, that the Misfortune of a certain Person is more owing to your Delays on the other Side the Water, than to the Party that is against him. They would have you think, that by Persons of Fifty or Sixty Thousands Crowns a Year, was meant a Person in France, that had suffered by being concerned in the Revenues; but it is plain, it is meant of Persons here, that would not Hazard their Estates: And he adds, You will be understood if you mention this to Duke D'Aumont.

There are other Letters from the Prisoner; in one he tells D'Aulmay, He would advise them to satisfy Mr. Harvey, I am persuaded to deal with him as has been done is no good Policy; and if ever I have the Honour to talk face to face with you, I will shew you clearly, how unhappily, through Negligences, very important Affairs have miscarried; this must be the Affair of the Pretender, and not of the Law-Suit: The Affair that concerned Mr. Harvey, for Mr. Harvey had nothing to do with the Law-Suit, but by his Letter shews himself to be concerned for what makes for 8 and 6, that is for the Pretender and French King.

There is another Letter from Francia, wherein he writes, What you tell me at the End of your Letter, of your having spoken in the manner I desir'd you, is sufficient, and consequently we are now to expect every Thing from your Side of the Water, that is to say, Explications, &c. I must leave it to you to consider what he meant by that.

In another Letter he says, I am order'd to tell you, on the part of Mr. Harvey, that you will do him a Pleasure in desiring the Duke D'Aumont, in his Name, to send hither some Persons to fetch the Horses and Dogs he has had so long, or else to send Orders to some Body to take them: Affairs are here in such a Situation, that great Precautions must be used to avoid giving Umbrage to those who are in Power. When I have any thing particular to write to you, I will do it by a strange Hand, and will sign Jacques Chrétien. Take Notice of this, and provided you let me know you received this Letter, without its having been opened, I shall be easy. There then began to be more Difficulty, and therefore the Correspondence must be carried on in that Name, and in a strange Hand.

In another Letter he writes, Mr. Harvey gives his Service to you, and bid me tell you, when any thing new offers, if he cannot write himself, he will get J. C. to write for him. That must be Jacques Chrétien.

Then there are other Letters from D'Aulmay to Francia, which were found in the Prisoner's Custody; and several of them import his having received Letters from Francia. In one of them D'Aulmay says, You are in the right to inveigh against the Indolence you reproach us with; but be persuaded, 'tis only so in Appearance. I even hope, that by this Time, you have convincing Proofs of it, and that suitable Returns are made to the good Dispositions of your side. This grew near the Time of the Rebellion. This Letter was dated the 7th of August, and the Rebellion broke out in October: He goes on, And that at last, God Blessing the just Cause of our Friend, will let him gain his Suit; at least, Assistance and powerful Sollicitations shall not be wanting.

There are other Letters which shew he knew the Design, and was privy to it; Our Friend's Cause will soon be ready, God willing, to be tried. That could not be the Law-Suit depending on this side the Water; for that Letter was wrote from France; and he says, All Preparations are making for it. The Friend who is related to my Wife, that is, the Duke of Ormond, has read your two Letters, and is mightily pleas'd with them. Which implies, that he had wrote Letters, tho' they are not entered in the Copy-Book.

Then he writes upon the 24th of August, under the Name of Payen; I am very much astonish'd I did not hear from you by the Post which arriv'd Yesterday. Our Friend was at my House expecting it. We both of us desire you not to let one Post go without writing to us, and letting us know all that passes relating to the Cause of our common Friend. That can't be the Cause of Butler's or D'Aulmay's Friend that was depending here. There are several other Letters which have been read to you, which mention both those Causes, and shew that he made a Distinction between them.

On the 14th of September, says D'Aulmay, The Contents of your last without a Date were very agreeable to me, as well as to all our Friends, who give you Thanks for it, and have order'd me to tell you so, and to desire you to continue. We know already Part of what you tell us about the Cause of our Friend, which will soon end (please God) to his Satisfaction, or all Appearances would deceive us. As to my own Cause, I can't help telling you, that my Fate is very unhappy to have to do with so dishonest a Man.

I think this is the Substance of most of the Letters that have been read to you, which relate to his Correspondence, in endeavouring to procure the Pretender to make an Invasion here.

Upon these Letters it has been observ'd, that the Cause of the Pretender is one, and the Cause of the Law-Suit is another; but in all these Letters there is plain Mention made of the Pretender; advising how to bring it on, and giving Intelligence about it. And these Letters being in the Prisoner's Custody, and written to him, and having such Treason in them as is mentioned; and he keeping these Letters by him, is a great Evidence that he assented to the Transaction, and to the endeavouring to bring the Pretender over, and to contrive, as well as he could, to carry on the Affair. If he had receiv'd but one Letter, and did not design to promote the Cause, he should have carried it to the Secretary of State, and then he had done his Duty. But to receive so many Letters, and to keep them so long, is an Evidence that he assented to the Matter, and that he did write such Letters as are mentioned to be received from him.

On the Behalf of the Defendant, there was an Objection made by his Counsel, that the Defendant is an Alien born; and that is an Objection to the Indictment. He is indicted as a natural born Subject, and they have examined several Witnesses to prove him an Alien. The Proof is strong, and you will find him an Alien, and so that matter must be left specially for the Judgment of the Court, and you must find the other Fact: And if you believe that he did promote the Invasion, or conceal and assent to that Design, that is, a conspiring the Death of the King, then he will be guilty of the Treason charg'd in the Indictment.

It has been objected, that in one of the Letters, the Person who wrote those Letters complains, that he had not heard of the Prisoner in three Months; but that is a Mistake, for that was in a Postscript wrote by another Person, and in a different Hand; for the very same Letter shews, that there were Letters received from him within that Time.

They say, there is no direct Proof that he intended the Life of the King; but if he kept a Correspondence, and promoted the intended Invasion, that is in Law conspiring the Death of the King.

They have produced some People who have given an extraordinary sort of Evidence, of what Mr. Buckley and my Lord Townshend should say about this Matter, as if they promised him great Things, if he would swear against Mr. Harvey. Simon Francia said, that Mr. Buckley told him, if his Brother would swear against Mr. Harvey, he should have a good Reward; and that my Lord Townshend said, he had given him Five Guineas, and he should have more.

Lucy White said, that she was in Newgate, and Francia desir'd her to conceal her self when Mr. Buckley came: That Mr. Buckley told him, he must swear right or wrong for the Government; and if he did not swear against Mr. Harvey, Mr. Buckley would charge him with High-Treason, for he had cheated my Lord Townshend of his Money, and done nothing for it.

Mary Meggison swears, that Mr. Buckley should say, he would swear against him, because he had cheated my Lord Townshend of Five Guineas, and would not swear against Mr. Harvey.

Mr. Buckley was called again, and he denies it: He says there was no such Thing. And it seems improbable that a Man of his Credit should talk thus to the Prisoner; therefore the Credit of Mr. Buckley must be left to you, against the Credit of those two Women. He tells you that Francia sent to him, to desire to speak with him, not about Mr. Harvey, but on Behalf of one Flint, who is a Prisoner in Newgate, and was concern'd in writing the Shift Shifted; and

Francia

Francia sent a Message to Mr. Buckley, that he could do a Service in suppressing it. Mr. Buckley went to him, and he desired some Favour on Behalf of Flint, which was granted: And Mr. Buckley denies he had any Discourse with the Prisoner about Mr. Harvey.

Revell was called, and he proves, that Francia sent him to Mr. Buckley, to desire he might speak to him. That he order'd Revell to stand at the Door, and he did so, but did not hear what they said.

My Lord Townsbend tells you, that Mr. Buckley gave him an Account, that Francia had sent to him, for the Purpose which he mentioned before: That my Lord ordered him to go: That he went accordingly, and he gave my Lord an Account what he had done about the Matter, and Flint had some Favour shewn him.

As to Simon Francia, my Lord says, he was several Times with him, but my Lord never proposed any Reward for Swearing against Mr. Harvey; but told him, his Brother must deal openly, and tell all he knew, and that was the way to recommend himself to Favour.

As to the two Women, their Credit must be left in Opposition to my Lord Townsbend and Mr. Buckley, which of them you will believe, for they deny what the others have sworn.

Then they call another Witness Everall, he tells you, that the Prisoner's Foreign Letters were brought to his House; that they lay in an open Window, and sometimes remained there some Days, and any Body might see them; and from thence they infer that they must be of no great Consequence? But how can you infer that? Who can tell by the Superscription of a Letter who it comes from, or what are the Contents of it; but these People can't say that these were all the Letters that were sent to him.

There is an Objection made to the Book; a Witness says, he has looked upon it, and that none of the Book seems to be of his Hand-writing; he says, Francia writes a fuller Hand. Simon Francia has look'd upon it, and says, not a Syllable is of his Writing; and others tell you, they believe it is not his Hand, and that he was three Months lame of a Rheumatism. As for that, it is not material whose Writing it is, if it contains the Copies of his Letters, and he has own'd before three Witnesses, That it is the Copy-book of his Letters:

Dr. Cade tells you he was ill, and thence they infer, that it is not probable that he should write Letters so constantly as he did. He tells you, that from the Second of November 1714. to the Eighteenth of the same Month, he was in pain in one of his Hands, but does not know which of them, nor whether he was able to write: But this was before this Correspondence by Letters that have been read to you began.

Then they call some Witnesses to his Reputation: One tells you, that in Discourse with him about the late Peace, he said, it would ruin the Nation; that sort of Evidence is of no Signification. Mr. Slater has known him four or five Years; there was a Commission of Bankruptcy against him, on which Occasion he became acquainted with him. He says, he always seemed to espouse the Interest of the King of France, but he always laugh'd at our Parties among ourselves. Those that were for the Interest of France, would of Consequence laugh at our Divisions.

Richardson says, that he used to go to the Prisoner often in his Sickness, and knows no harm of him: That Francia liked him, and called him Vulcan, and bid him drink King George's Health, and drank it himself.

This is the Substance of the Evidence that has been given on both Sides: Now, if you believe these Letters were wrote to him and by him, and that they contain a Correspondence of a treasonable Nature, inciting or encouraging any Persons to levy War against the King, or any thing which shews that he was privy and assenting to it, then he is guilty of High-Treason. If you don't believe those Letters were his, or that they don't amount to such a Correspondence, then you must acquit him.

If you find him Guilty, then you must also find that he was born in France, and is an Alien.

Then the Jury withdrew to consider of their Verdict; and when they return'd into Court, were called over, and answered to their Names.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Francis Francia, Hold up thy Hand, Which he did.

Look upon the Prisoner, how say you? Is he Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

Whereupon the Prisoner was discharged:

CLXXXVIII. Proceedings against Robert Earl of Oxford, before the House of Lords, upon an Impeachment for High-Treason, and other High-Crimes, and Misdemeanours, June 24, 1717. 3 GEO. I.

HE Earl of Oxford having been impeached by the House of Commons, and been confin'd near two Years in the Tower, without being brought to a Trial, presented a Petition to the House of Lords, setting forth his long Confinement, submitting his Case to their Lordships Consideration, and praying that his Imprisonment might not be indefinite.

Upon this Petition some of the Lords urged, That the Impeachment was ipso facto destroyed and determin'd, since he was not brought to Trial the same Session in which he was impeach'd, and that the Prorogation was an actual Superfedeas to the whole Proceedings; however, the Vote of the House pass'd to the contrary, and the Earl of Nottingham, who had insisted strenuously upon it, enter'd his Protestation against it.

This being over-ruled the Duke of Buckingham moved to appoint a short Day for the Earl's Trial, which after some Debates was fix'd for the 13th of June, and afterwards at the Desire of the House of Commons was deferr'd till Monday the 24th, on which Day the Lords came from their House at twelve o' the Clock in their Robes and went into the Court in Westminster-Hall, in their usual Order.

The Lords being seated in their Places, (and the Commons in a Committee of the whole House being in their Seats, and the Managers for the House being also in Places appointed for them;) The House was resumed.

Then Proclamation was made as follows, viz.

Serjeant at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King doth strictly charge and command all Manner of Persons to keep Silence, on Pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Commission for appointing a Lord High-Steward was (after three Reverences made in coming up from the Clerk's Table) presented to the Lord High-Steward sitting upon the Woolfack, by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery on his Knee; and the same being brought to the Table, Proclamation was again made for keeping Silence.

William Lord Cowper. L. H. Steward. My Lords, his Majesty's Commission is about to be read; your Lordships are desired to attend to it in the usual Manner, and all others are likewise to stand up uncovered while the Commission is reading.

Then the said Commission was read (all the Lords and others standing up uncovered) as follows.

GEORGIUS R.

Then the Herald and Black-Rod, making three Reverences as they came up, presented, kneeling, the Staff to the Lord High-Steward; who thereupon standing up, made a Reverence to the Lords; and then, being attended by the Herald, Black-Rod, and Purse-Bearer carrying the Purse, Purse, proceeded to the Chair placed on the second Step of the Throne.

Who having again made a Reverence to the Lords, he seated himself in the said Chair, and gave the Staff to the Black-Rod on his Right-Hand, the Purse-Bearer standing on his Left.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, &c. (as before.)

Lord High-Steward. Make Proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower of London to bring the Prisoner to the Bar.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, O Yes, O Yes! Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Prisoner to the Bar, according to the Order of the House of Lords to you directed.

Then the Earl of Oxford came to the Bar, and kneeled for some time.

L. H. Steward. Your Lordship may rise.

Then the Earl of Oxford rose up.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, &c. (as before.)

L. H. Steward. Clerk read the Articles of Impeachment.

The Clerk read the Articles, as followeth.

ARTICLES of Impeachment of High-Treason, and other High Crimes and Misdemeanours, against Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer.

WHEREAS many solemn Treaties and Alliances have been formerly entred into between the Crown of England, and other Princes and Potentates of Europe, for their mutual Safety, and from the Considerations of the common Danger, which threaten'd all Christendom, from the immoderate Growth of the Power of France. And whereas the preventing the Monarchy of Spain from coming into the Hands of the House of Bourbon, has for many Years been a fundamental Principle and Maxim of Union among the Allies, in order to preserve a just Ballance of Power in Europe: And to that end, as the Designs of France on the Monarchy of Spain have from time to time appear'd, new Treaties and expres Stipulations have been enter'd into amongst the Allies, to strengthen themselves against that approaching Danger: And, on this Foundation, a Treaty for an intended Partition, whereby a small Part only of the Dominions of the Crown of Spain was allotted to the House of Bourbon, was condemned by the Wisdom of Parliament, as being highly prejudicial, and fatal in its Consequences to England, and the Peace of Europe: And whereas the Duke of Anjou, Grandson to the King of France on the Demise of Charles the Second, King of Spain, took Possession of the entire Monarchy of Spain, whereby the Ballance of Power, the Protestant Religion, and the Liberties of Europe were threaten'd with immediate Danger; whereupon Leopold, then Emperor of Germany, his late Majesty King William the Third, of ever-glorious Memory, and the States-General of the United Provinces, finding at that most critical Juncture, that a strict Conjunction and Alliance between themselves was become necessary, for repelling the Greatness of the Common Danger, from so great an Accession of Power to the then common Enemy, did, in the Year of our Lord one Thousand Seven Hundred an One, make, form, and conclude a new Treaty and Alliance, whereby it was agreed, That there shall be and continue between the said Confederates, his sacred Imperial Majesty, his sacred Royal Majesty of Great Britain, and the Lords the States-General of the United-Provinces, a constant, perpetual, and inviolable Friendship and Correspondence, and that each Party shall be obliged to promote the Advantages of the other, and prevent all Inconveniencies and Dangers that might happen to them, as far as lies in their Power: That the said Allies, desiring nothing more earnestly than the Peace and general Quiet of all Europe, have adjudged that nothing can be more effectual for the Establishment thereof, than the procuring an equitable and reasonable Satisfaction to his Imperial Majesty for his Pretension to the Spanish Succession, and that the King of Great Britain and the States-General may obtain a particular and sufficient Security for their Kingdoms, Provinces and Dominions, and for the Navigation and Commerce of their Subjects: That the said Confederates therefore shall, in the first Place, endeavour, by amicable Means, to obtain the said Satisfaction; but if, contrary to their Expectation and Wishes, the same is not had, the said Confederates do engage and promise to one another, that they will assist each other with all their Forces according to a Specification to be agreed upon in a peculiar Convention for that purpose: That the Confederates in order to the procuring the Satisfaction and Security aforesaid, shall, amongst other Things, use their utmost Endeavours to recover the Provinces of the Spanish Low-Countries, that they may be a Fence and Rampart, commonly called a Barrier, separating and dividing France from the United Provinces, for the Security of the States-General, as they have serv'd in all Times, 'till of late that the most Christian King has seiz'd them by his Forces; as likewise the Dutchy of Milan, with its Dependencies, as a Fief of the Empire, and contributing to the Security of his Imperial Majesty's hereditary Dominions; besides the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, and the Lands and Islands upon the Coast of Tuscany in the Mediterranean, that belonged to the Spanish Dominions, and may serve to the same Purpose, and will also be of Advantage to the Navigation and Commerce of the Subjects of the King of Great Britain, and of the United-Provinces: That in Case the Confederates shall be forced to enter into a War, for obtaining the Satisfaction aforesaid for his Imperial Majesty, and the Security of his Majesty of Great Britain, and the States-General, they shall communicate their Designs to one another, as well in Relation to the Actions of the War, as all other Things wherein the common Cause is concerned: That it shall not be permitted to either Party, when the War is once begun, to treat of Peace with the Enemy, unless jointly, and by a Communication of Counsels; and no Peace shall be made, unless an equitable and reasonable Satisfaction for his Imperial Majesty and the particular Security of the Kingdoms, Provinces, Dominions, Navigations and Commerce for his Majesty of Great Britain, and the States-General, be first obtained; and unless Care be taken, by fitting Security, that the Kingdoms of France and Spain shall never come and be united under the same Government, nor that one and the same Person shall be King of both Kingdoms; and particularly that the French shall never get into the Possession of the Spanish Indies, neither shall they be permitted to sail thither on the Account of Traffick, directly or indi-indirectly, or any Pretence whatsoever; And lastly, unless full Liberty be granted unto the Subjects of the King of Great Britain, and the States-General, to exercise and enjoy all the same Privileges, Rights, Immunities, and Franchises of Commerce by Sea and Land in Spain, the Mediterranean, and all Lands and Places which the King of Spain last deceased did possess at the Time of his Death, as well in Europe as elsewhere, which they used and enjoyed, or which the Subjects of both, or either of them, by any Right acquired by Treaties Agreements, Customs, or any other Way whatsoever, might have used and enjoyed before the Death of the late King of Spain: That at the said Time that the said Agreement or Peace shall be made, the Confederates shall agree amongst themselves about all the Things that they shall think necessary for maintaining the Navigation and Commerce of the Subjects of his Majesty of Great Britain, and the States-General, in the Lands and Dominions they may acquire, and that were possessed by the late deceased King of Spain, and also in what manner the States-General may be secured by the aforesaid Fence or Barrier. And whereas his said late Majesty King William, and the States-General, seriously considering, that France was then become so formidable from the Accession of Spain to the Duke of Anjou, that, in the Opinion of all the World, Europe was in Danger of losing her Liberty, and undergoing the heavy Yoke of Universal Monarchy, and that the surest Means of effecting that Design, were to divide the King of Great Britain from the States-General, for which Purpose all imaginable Efforts would be made; they therefore thought it necessary to unite in the strictest Manner that was possible, and to that End a Defensive Treaty and Alliance was concluded and entered into between them, in or about the Month of November, One Thousand Seven Hundred and One, wherein it was among other Things, agreed, That in case the said High Allies should be jointly engaged in War, by Reason of this Defensive Alliance before-mentioned in the fifth Article, or on any other Account, there shall be an Offensive, and Defensive, and perpetual Alliance between them, against those with whom the War shall be, and all their Forces shall be employed by Sea and Land, and they shall act in conjunction or separately, as it shall be agreed between them. That since, in the Alliance with the Emperor made in September last, particular Care was taken of the Recovery of the Spanish Low-Countries, out of the Hands of the most Christian King, the said Confederates expressly engage to aid one another with all their Forces for the Recovery of the same. And in regard the principal Interest of the said Confederates consists in the Preservation of the Liberties of Europe, the before-mentioned Treaty with the Emperor shall be faithfully and sincerely executed, and both Sides shall guaranty the same, and use their Endeavours to confirm and render it more strong from Time to Time: That in making Peace, particular Care shall be taken of the Commerce and Traffick of both Nations, as also for their Security, as well in regard to the Low-Countries, as the Countries adjacent: That when the War is begun, the Confederates shall act in concert, according to the seventh and eighth Articles of the Treaty of the Third of March, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Six Hundred Seventy Seven-Eight, between England and Holland, which is hereby renewed and confirmed; and no Peace, nor Truce, or Suspension of Arms, shall be negotiated or made, but according to the ninth and tenth Articles of that Treaty; by which it was agreed, that when the two Allies come once to an open War, it shall be lawful for neither of them afterwards to come to any Cessation of Arms with him who shall be declar'd and proclaim'd an Enemy, without it be done conjointly, and with common Consent: That no Negotiation of Peace shall be set on Foot by one of the Allies, without the Concurrence of the other: That each Ally shall continually, and from Time to Time, impart to the other every thing that passes in the said Negotiation, and shall stipulate with the common Enemy for the same Rights, Immunities, Exemptions and Prerogatives for his Ally, as he does for himself, if so be the said Allies do not agree to the contrary. And whereas the French King having got Possession of a great Part of the Spanish Dominions, exercised an absolute Authority over that Monarchy, having seized Milan and the Spanish Low-Countries by his Armies, and made himself Master of Cadiz, of the Entrance into the Mediterranean, and of the Ports of the Spanish West-Indies by his Fleets, every where designing to invade the Liberties of Europe, and to obstruct the Freedom of Navigation and Commerce; and instead of giving the Satisfaction that ought justly to be expected, had proceeded to further Violences, and had taken on him to declare the pretended Prince of Wales King of England, Scotland, and Ireland, and had also influenced Spain to concur in the same Affront; her late Majesty Queen Anne taking notice, that she found herself obliged, for maintaining the Public Faith, or vindicating the Honour of the Crown, and to prevent the Mischiefs which all Europe was threaten'd with, to declare War against France and Spain; did according, in the Month of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Two, in the most public and solemn Manner, declare War against France and Spain; and in the said Declaration, placing her entire Confidence in the Help of Almighty God, in so just and necessary an Undertaking, declared, That she would, in conjunction with her Allies, vigorously prosecute the same both by Sea and Land, being assured of the ready Concurrence of her Subjects, in a Cause they had so openly and heartily espoused. And his Imperial Majesty and their High Mightinesses, pursuant to the Treaties afore-mentioned respectively, in or about the said Month of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Two, did likewise declare War against France and Spain. And whereas the Kings of Portugal and Prussia, the Electors of Hanover, Saxony, Treves, Mentz, Palatine of the Rhine, the Duke of Savoy, the Prince of Hesse, the Dukes of Wolfenbuttle, Mecklenburg, and Wirtemberg, the Circles of Suabia and Franconia, and of the Upper Rhine, the Bishops of Munster and Constance, and other Princes and Powers, being invited by the said Grand Alliance, and relying on the Faith thereof, did afterwards become Parties to the said Confederate War against France and Spain; and in the Treaty entered into in or about the Month of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Three, between his Imperial Majesty, the Queen of Great-Britain, the States-General, and the King of Portugal, it is amongst other things, expressly stipulated, that no Peace nor Truce shall be made, but by the mutual Consent of all the Confederates; nor shall any at any time be made, while the second Grandson of the most Christian King by the Dauphin, or any other Prince of the Line of France continues in Spain, nor unless the Crown of Portugal shall fully possess and enjoy all the Lands, Kingdoms, Isles, Castles, Cities, Towns, &c. with their Territories and Dependencies in Spain, or elsewhere, which it now possesses. And in the Treaty of Nordlingen, ratify'd by her late Majesty, it is, amongst other things, expressly agreed, that it shall not be allow'd to make particular Treaties, but the Peace shall be jointly treated of, and shall not be included without obtaining, as far as is possible, the Re-union of the Lands belonging to the Circles, and until at least the Security of the associated Circles be absolutely provided for, in the best manner that is possible, and better than it has formerly been. And whereas to give the greatest Strength that was possible to the Union, so necessary to both Nations, her late Majesty and the States by a Treaty in the Month of June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Three, renewed and confirmed all Treaties and Alliances then subsisting between them; and therein it is, amongst other things, expressly and particularly stipulated, that as the said most serene Queen, and the Lords the States-General are now in War with France and Spain, and are reciprocally bound to assist each other, and mutually to defend, maintain, and preserve their Countries and Subjects in their Possessions, Immunities, and Liberties, as well of Navigation and Commerce, as other Rights whatsoever by Sea and Land, against and in Opposition to all Kings, Princes, and States, and particularly against France and Spain, to the end a just and reasonable Peace may the better be obtained, that may establish the Repose and Tranquillity of Europe, it is agreed between the most Serene Queen of Great Britain, and the said Lords the States-General, that neither of the said Allies shall make a Suspension of Arms, or a Peace with France or Spain, or any other King, Prince, or State, who shall molest or attac either of the said Allies, but in Conjunction and by common Consent. And whereas the said War was for several Years carry'd on with Vigour and Unanimity by her Majesty and her Allies, at a vast Expence both of Blood and Treasure; for the Support of which, on the Part of England, many Millions have been granted by Parliament, who, on many Occasions since, continued not only to express their Sense of the Justice and Necessity of the War, but did frequently give their humble Advice to the Throne, that no Peace could be Safe, Honourable, or Lasting, so long as the Kingdom of Spain and the West-Indies continued in the Possession of any Branch of the House of Bourbon. And whereas it pleased Almighty God to grant to the Confederate Arms, under the Command of their Great and Victorious General the Duke of Marlborough, such unparallel'd Successes as exceeded even their own Hopes and the Fears of the Enemy; and by the many signal Victories of Schellenberg, Hochstet, Audenarde, and Ramellies, as well as by the Conquests of the Electorates of Bavaria and Cologne, and the Reduction of the Spanish Netherlands, and many other great Advantages both by Sea and Land; and by the Wisdom and Unanimity of their Counsels, the Glory of the Confederate Arms, and the Reputation of Great Britain in particular, was rais'd to an higher Pitch than in any former Age. And whereas her late Majesty, in Conjunction with her Allies, wisely foreseeing, that wherever the Enemy should be brought to make Overtures of Peace, the surest way to put an End to the War, and prevent France from putting in Practice her usual Intrigues, was, by previously insisting on such Conditions from France, that nothing might remain to be done in a General Assembly, but to give them the Form of a Treaty; and for these Reasons, a Preliminary Treaty was concluded on, and was afterwards sign'd by the Plenipotentiaries of his Imperial Majesty, of her late Majesty the Queen of Great Britain, and of the Lords the States-General of the United Provinces, and afterwards ratified by their Principals; wherein the Interests of the several Allies were adjusted, in order to a General Treaty of Peace with France: and therein the Restitution of the Spanish Monarchy to the House of Austria, being one of the chief Causes for carrying on the War, is laid down as an immutable Foundation among the Allies. And whereas in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Nine, the King of France having first signify'd his Consent to the Restitution of the Spanish Monarchy to the House of Austria, sent his Ministers to the Hague to treat with the Ministers of the Principal Allies on a General Peace; and in the Conferences held thereupon, the Interests of all the Allies, as adjusted in the said Preliminaries, were positively and expressly agreed to by the Ministers of France, and particularly that of the Restitution of the entire Spanish Monarchy to the House of Austria; and the said Negotiation was afterwards broke, on no other Dispute but on the thirty seventh Article of the Preliminary Treaty, concerning the Time and Manner of evacuating Spain. And whereas the Conferences being resumed at Gertruydenberg, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Ten, the said thirty seventh Article became the only Subject of the Negotiation which was there set on foot, for the finding out some equivalent by which the same Security might be given to the Allies, as they had by the thirty seventh Article of the said Preliminaries; and tho' it was unquestionable, that before any Negotiation was begun, that while the Preliminaries were treating, that by those Preliminaries themselves, that before the last Negotiation was resumed, and all the while it lasted, the Restitution of Spain and the Indies was laid down as a firm and immoveable Foundation of the Negotiation, and no Question remain'd concerning it with the Ministers of the Allies or those of France, but touching the Security for its Execution: And tho' all reasonable and prudent Overtures were made by the Allies for settling an Equivalent, yet the Conferences were broke off by France without any Satisfaction therein. And whereas the sincere Intentions of all the Allies to have settled the Peace of Europe on solid and equitable Foundations were notorious and incontestable, and the Rupture of the said Negotiations could only be imputed to the Enemy; her sacred Majesty, in Conjunction with her Allies, renew'd their Resolutions to continue and push the War with Vigour, and to make all possible Efforts, as the only Means left to force a good and general Peace. And her Majesty in her Speech from the Throne on the Fifteenth of November, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Nine, taking notice of the Endeavours of the Enemy during the said Negotiations, to amuse and create Jealousies among the Allies, declared her Resentment thereat, and earnestly recommended the carrying on the War, and a vigorous Prosecution of the Advantages obtained, that she might put the last Hand to that great Work of reducing the exorbitant and oppressive Power which had so long threaten'd the Liberties of Europe. And it having pleas'd Almighty God, after the said Preliminary Treaty, to bless the Confederate Army, under the Command of their consummate General the Duke of Marlborough, with new and signal Conquests, the Reduction of Tournay, the Victory of Tafnières, the taking of Mons and Doway, Bezhune, St. Venant and Aire, and the Penetrating the Lines near the Scarpe. And whereas, from the prosperous Condition of the Affairs of the Allies, and the Wisdom, Firmness, and Unanimity of their Counsels, nothing remained, in all human Appearance, but that they should reap the Fruits of all their Victories in a speedy, just, honourable and lasting Peace; and on the other hand, nothing was left to raise the Hopes of the Enemy, whereby to defeat that happy Prospect, but the Success of their secret Endeavours to disunite the Confederacy. And whereas Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, with other evil-minded Persons, Enemies to the true Interests of their own Country, as well as to the common Liberties and Welfare of Europe, having by many wicked Arts and base Insinuations obtain'd Access to her late Majesty Queen Anne, and in or about the Months of July or August One Thousand Seven Hundred and Ten, being admitted into her Councils, and into Places of the highest Trust, and to make way for their wicked Enterprizes, did, by their evil Council and Advice, prevail on her Majesty to dissolve a Parliament which had given the most unquestionable Proofs of their great Wisdom, and of their true Zeal for the common Cause; for which, as well as for the many Marks of Duty and Affection given to her, her Majesty return'd her hearty Thanks, and express'd her great Satisfaction. And whereas the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others his Accomplices, had formed a treacherous Correspondence with the Emissaries of France, by means whereof certain Propositions were transmitted from France to England, sign'd by Monsieur de Torcy, Secretary of the King of France, in the Month of April One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, to be the Basis of a Treaty of a General Peace; which Propositions, tho' her Majesty was prevail'd on by the false Counsels of the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, to receive as a sufficient Foundation of a Treaty of a General Peace, and as such to communicate them to the Grand Pensionary and the Ministers of Holland, her Majesty however was graciously pleas'd at the same time to declare to them her Pleasure by her Secretary of State, that being resolv'd, in making Peace as in making War, to act in perfect Concert with the States, she would not lose a Moment in transmitting a Paper of that Importance; and that tho' the Propositions were general, and contain'd an Air of Complaisance to her Majesty, and the contrary towards the States; yet that could have no ill Consequences, as long as her Majesty and the States understood one another, and acted with as little Reserve as became two Powers so nearly ally'd in Interest; and that the Pensionary should be assured, that that Rule should be inviolably kept on her Part. Which gracious Declaration of her Majesty, as well as the said Propositions, being maturely consider'd by the Grand Pensionary and the Ministers of Holland, an Answer was return'd from them to her Majesty, full of Duty and Thankfulness for the obliging manner in which she was pleas'd to communicate the said Propositions, and with the utmost Assurances of mutual Confidence, so necessary to prevent the Designs of the Enemy; but more particularly that the States desired, equally with Great Britain, to have a general, definitive, and lasting Peace, and declar'd that they were ready to join in all the most proper Measures to procure it; that the Propositions were yet too general, and that the States desire, as Great Britain did, that France would explain herself more particularly upon the Points therein contain'd, and impart a Plan which she thinks the most proper to secure the Interest of the Allies, and settle the Repose of Europe, after which a more particular Negotiation might be enter'd into. Notwithstanding all which Premises,

ARTICLE I.

He the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, having no Regard to the Honour or Safety of her late Majesty or her Kingdoms, or to the many solemn Engagements she was then under to the old and faithful Allies of this Nation, or to the common Liberties of Europe; but, being devoted to the Interest and Service of the French King, the common Enemy; and being then Lord High-Treasurer of Great Britain, and one of her Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, contrary to his Oath, and in Violation of his Duty and Trust, and in Defiance of the Tenour of the several Treaties afore-mention'd, or some of them, as well as of the frequent Advices of Parliament, and the many Declarations of her Majesty from the Throne; but more particularly in Defiance of the solemn and mutual Assurances which had been so lately renew'd between her Majesty and the States, to act in perfect Concert with them in making Peace as in making War, did on or about the Months of July or August in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, maliciously and wickedly form a most treacherous and pernicious Contrivance and Confederacy with other evil-dispos'd Persons, then also of her Majesty's Privy-Council, to set on Foot a private, separate, dishonourable, and destructive Negotiation of Peace between Great Britain and France, without any Communication thereof to her Majesty's Allies, according to their several Treaties; and was not only wanting in his Duty and Trust to her Majesty, by not opposing, and, as far as was in his Power, by not advising her Majesty against going into any private separate Negotiation with France; but in Execution of his Purposes aforesaid, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did advise her late Majesty to send Matthew Prior, Esq; directly to the Court of France, to make Propositions of Peace, without communicating the same to her Majesty's Allies. And accordingly the said Matthew Prior, by the Advice and with the Privy of him the said Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and other false and evil Counsellors, in or about the Months of July or August, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, was sent in a clandestine manner from England to France, and did communicate the said Propositions of Peace to the Ministers of France, in which the particular Interests of Great Britain, as well as the common Interest of Europe, were shamefully betray'd: And in Manifestation of his said Design to exclude her Majesty's Allies from their just Share in the said Negotiation, an express Article was inserted in the said Propositions, by the Privity and Advice of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, that the Secret should be inviolably kept till allow'd to be divulged by the mutual Consent of both Parties; although the French King had in the Propositions signed by Monsieur de Torcy, and transmitted in the Month of April preceding, offer'd to treat with the Plenipotentiaries of England and Holland alone, or jointly with those of the Allies, at the Choice of England. By which treacherous and dangerous Advice he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did not only contrive and set on Foot a Negotiation of Peace more advantageous to France than even France it self had ask'd; but thereby did put it into the Power of the common Enemy to create incurable Jealousies and Discords between her Majesty and her faithful Allies, and to destroy that Confidence which had so long and so successfully been cultivated between them, and which was so necessary for their common Safety.

ARTICLE II.

That the French King laying hold of the said treacherous Overture, set on foot in manner aforesaid, did in or about the Months of August or September, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, send over Monsieur Mesnager into England to carry on a clandestine and separate Negotiation of Peace; which being made known to him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, he did afterwards in the said Month of September One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, secretly and unlawfully, without any Colour of Authority, meet, confer, and treat with the said Sieur Mesnager on the Negotiations of Peace between Great Britain and France; and therein he did advise and promote the making a private and separate Treaty or Agreement between the said Crowns; which said Treaty or Agreement was afterwards, with the Privity, Consent, and Advice of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, agreed, concluded on, and sign'd by the said Sieur Mesnager on the part of France, and by the Earl of Dartmouth and Henry St. John, Esq; two of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, in behalf of her late Majesty, by vertue only of her Majesty's Sign Manual under the Signet, and without the least Knowledge or Participation of the Allies. In which Treaty the immediate Interests even of Great Britain are given up to France, and the Duke of Anjou is admitted to be King of Spain; an express Stipulation being therein made with the Sieur Mesnager in the Name, and (as is therein alledged) pursuant to Powers from King Philip as King of Spain: Whereby he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did not only assume to himself Regal Power, in taking upon him to meet and treat with the Enemy without any Authority or Powers from her Majesty; but did what in him lay to subvert the ancient and establish'd Constitution of the Government of these Kingdoms; by introducing illegal and dangerous Methods of transacting the most important Affairs of the State; and by which private and separate Treaty, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did, what in him lay to dissolve and cancel the many solemn Treaties her Majesty then stood engaged in to her good and ancient Allies, and whereby her Majesty, even before any thing was finally settled for the Safety or Advantage of her Kingdoms, was brought to this fatal Dilemma; either to submit to the Dictates of France in the Progress of the said Negotiation, or, so notorious a Breach of National Faith being divulged by the Enemy, from thence to lose all future Confidence of her good Allies.

ARTICLE III.

That the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, the better to disguise and carry on the aforesaid private, separate, and dangerous Negotiation, did, together with other evil-dispos'd Persons, then in high Trust under her Majesty, contrive and advise the preparing and forming a Set of General Preliminaries, intituled, Preliminary Articles on the Part of France, to come to a General Peace; and that the same should be sign'd by the Sieur Mesnager only. And the same being so prepar'd and sign'd by the said Sieur Mesnager, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did, contrary to his Duty and Trust, impiously advise her Sacred Majesty that the same should be, and accordingly they were receiv'd by her Majesty, and communicated to the Ministers of the Allies then residing in England, as the Ground of a General Negotiation of Peace; and as if the same were the only Transactions that had been on this Subject between Great Britain and France. And to this end, the private Treaty, sign'd as aforesaid by the Earl of Dartmouth and Mr. St. John on the part of England, and by the said Sieur Mesnager on the part of France, was by the evil Advice and Contrivance of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, wilfully and industriously conceal'd not only from all the Allies, but even from her Majesty's Council and her Parliament. And he did further advise her Majesty not only to accept the said General Preliminaries, but in her Name and by her Authority to communicate the same to the States-General, as a sufficient Foundation whereupon to open the Conferences of Peace with France. And the more effectually to cover from the States-General the pernicious Steps which his evil Influence had engag'd her Majesty in with the common Enemy; certain Instructions were prepar'd, and, by his Counsel and Advice, were sign'd by her Majesty, and delivered to the Earl of Strafford, her Ambassador to the States-General: wherein the said Earl of Strafford is directed to represent to the Pensionary of Holland, and to such others as shall be appointed to confer with him, that when her Majesty had receiv'd in May last, by his Excellency's Dispatches, an Account of the Sense which those among them, who were at that time in the Secret, had of the Overtures made by France for setting a general Negotiation of Peace again on Foot, and of the Answer which it was desir'd might be return'd to the Propositions signed by Monsieur de Torcy; her Majesty did immediately acquaint the Enemy, that their Offers were thought by her and by the States-General neither particular nor full enough; and therefore that her Majesty did insist, that they should form a distinct Project of such a Peace as they were willing to conclude. Whereas no such Instances had been made to the Enemy on her Majesty's Behalf; but on the contrary, notwithstanding her Majesty had declar'd that the Propositions of Monsieur de Torcy were thought by her and the States-General neither particular nor full enough, yet without any further Explication from the Enemy, her Majesty was prevail'd on, in manner aforesaid, to send over Propositions to France as general and ensnaring, and in all respects as destructive to the Interests of Great Britain and her Allies, as the Propositions of Monsieur de Torcy. And the said General Preliminaries, communicated to the States in manner aforesaid, were calculated only to amuse and deceive them into a General Negotiation with France. And in the Particulars aforesaid, as well as in the several others, the said Instructions contain'd Matters either false or grossly prevaricating and evasive. By which most wicked Counsels of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl of Mortimer, that unquestionable Truth and Sacredness which by the Laws of Nations ought to accompany and constitute the Instructions of Public Ambassadors to Princes in Friendship and Confederacy against the common Enemy, was most vilely prostituted to the most dangerous Purposes, to deceive and mislead her Majesty's good Allies, in Matters of the greatest Importance to their own Interests and the Interests of these Kingdoms; the Honour of her Majesty's sacred Person, and of the Imperial Crown of these Realms, which had been raised to the highest Pitch of Glory abroad, and had been justly held in Veneration with her good Allies, was scandalously debas'd and betrayed; and the Royal Hand, by the wicked Arts of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, was made the Instrument to advance the Interest of the common Enemy.

ARTICLE IV.

That whereas the Earl of Strafford, pursuant to the said Instructions, had communicated the Preliminaries signed by Monsieur Mesnager only to the States-General, who being justly alarmed at the pressing Instances made on the part of her Majesty, that Conferences should be opened on Propositions as general and uncertain as those so lately offer'd by France, and signed by Monsieur de Torcy; and their High Mightinesses having been unsuccessful in their Remonstrances to the Earl of Strafford against opening the Conferences upon the said Propositions, did send over Monsieur Buys their Ambassador to represent to her Majesty, as well the Hazard of meeting the Ministers of France before the essential Articles were first settled by special Preliminaries, or at least explained by France, and made specific; as likewise the Advantages to the Enemy, who being but one Body, were influenced by one Council, and directed by one Power; whereas the Confederates consisted of several Powers, whose Interests are not only distinct, but in many Cases contrary to each other, whereby the French would have a fair Opportunity to divide the Allies, when it would be impossible for them to break in upon France; and further to represent, that the Propositions themselves were in some Instances very prejudicial, particularly in the Articles of Commerce, Dunkirk, and the Union of the Crowns of France and Spain. All which Representations of the said Monsieur Buys, by the evil Influence of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, were render'd ineffectual: but in order to prevail upon the States-General to open the Conferences upon the said general Preliminaries, by the Management and Contrivance of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, an Occasion was taken to declare to Monsieur Buys, at a Committee of Council in her Majesty's Name, her constant Affection and good Disposition to their State, and to the promoting their Interest, and to treat with their High-Mightinesses with a perfect Confidence and Harmony: And at the same time he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did then falsely and maliciously declare, or was privy to advising and consenting, that it should be, and so it was declared, in her Majesty's Name, that she had made no separate Treaty with France, nor would ever make any before she had fully complied with all Engagements to her Allies, and that each of them should have Opportunity to make good their Pretensions.

By which false, scandalous, and dishonourable Assurances, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did not only highly dishonour her Majesty, by whose Privy the said separate Treaty with France had been before that Time concluded and signed; but their High Mightinesses, the good Friends and antient Allies of her Majesty, were grossly abused, and thereby induced to enter into a Negotiation with France, so dangerous in itself, and so fatal in its Consequences.

ARTICLE V.

That her sacred Majesty Queen Anne having in due Form of Law, and under her Great Seal, constituted the Right Reverend John Lord Bishop of Bristol, and the Earl of Strafford, her Plenipotentiaries, with full Powers to meet, treat, and conclude with the Plenipotentiaries of the Confederates, and those whom the French King shall on his part depute for that purpose, the Conditions of a good and general Peace, that shall be safe, honourable, and as far as is possible, agreeable to the reasonable Demands of all Parties; he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer not contenting himself to abuse the Royal Authority, to the Delusion of the States-General, the nearest Allies of the Queen, but intending the Universal Prejudice of his Imperial Majesty, and all the Allies of these Kingdoms; and thereby the more successfully to carry on the Measures of France, wherein he was then engaged, contrived and prepared Instructions, or was privy to consenting and advising the same, for her Majesty's said Plenipotentiaries, which she was prevailed upon by the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer's evil Counsel to sign, and the same were delivered to the said Plenipotentiaries; wherein among other Things they are instructed to the Effect following, viz. If it shall be thought proper to begin by the Disposition of the Spanish Monarchy, you are to insist that the Security and reasonable Satisfaction which the Allies expect, and which his most Christian Majesty has promised, cannot be obtained, if Spain and the West-Indies be allotted to any Branch of the House of Bourbon: Whereas the said Robert Earl of Oxford and and Earl Mortimer had at that Time privately and treacherously negotiated and agreed with the Ministers of France, that Spain and the West-Indies should remain in a Branch of the House of Bourbon; and had prevailed on her sacred Majesty to be Party to the said private Treaty, wherein the same is necessarily implied. And the said Plenipotentiaries are further instructed, in case the Enemy should object, as the Imperial Ministers had done, that the second Article of the seven signed by the Sieur Mesnager implies, that the Duke of Anjou shall continue on the Throne of Spain; you are to insist, that those Articles, as far as they extend, are indeed binding to France, but that they lay neither us nor our Allies under any positive Obligation; whereby the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer basely entered into a Confederacy and Collusion even with the Ministers of the Enemy, and prevailed on her Majesty to give her Royal Consent thereto, the more effectually to impose on his Imperial Majesty and all the Allies, and to conceal the said secret Negotiations, and the separate Treaty that had then been agreed on between Great Britain and France. And the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, not only in the Particulars before-mentioned, but in many others contained in the said Instructions, has brought a lasting Reproach on the Crown of these Realms, and grossly violated the many Treaties wherein her sacred Majesty was then engaged to her Allies, to act in perfect Concert with them throughout the Negotiations of Peace.

ARTICLE VI.

That the Conferences of Peace being opened between the Plenipotentiaries of the Allies, and those of the Enemy, for the negotiating a general Peace upon the mutual and most solemn Engagements amongst the Allies, not only to act in perfect Confidence with each other, but to promote their common Interest, and to obtain from the Enemy all just and reasonable Satisfaction; and a specific Explanation of the General Preliminaries having been given by the Enemy at Utrecht, whereon the Allies delivered their respective Demands; by the Artifices of France, and the secret Encouragement and Concurrence of the Ministers of Great Britain, the progress of the said public Negotiation was delayed and kept in suspense, under Pretence of the Enemy's refusing to give their Answer in Writing: During which Time, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer again assuming to himself Regal Power in Derogation of the Royal Authority, to treat of Peace with France, which was then delegated under the Great Seal of Great Britain to her Majesty's Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht, and for the promoting the Designs of the Enemy to the apparent Destruction of the common Cause of her Majesty and her Allies, contrary to the known Laws and Constitution of this Kingdom, in direct Violation of the several Alliances her Majesty then stood engaged in, and in Opposition to the many Assurances given by her Majesty to act in Concert with her Allies, and in Defiance of the express Instructions given to her said Plenipotentiaries, was not only wanting in his Duty to her Majesty, as far as in him lay to have put an end to, and prevented any further private and unlawful Negotiations with France, but did, with others his Accomplices, advise, concur, continue, and promote a private, separate, and unjustifiable Negotiation of Peace with France, directly from England to France, without any Communication thereof to the Allies; and in such private Negotiations did concert with the Ministers of the Enemy Terms of Peace highly prejudicial to the Interest of her Majesty and her Kingdoms, and of all her Allies, and whereby the good Effects of the said General Negotiations were entirely defeated.

ARTICLE VII.

That her sacred Majesty Queen Anne having been prevailed on by the false Counsels of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer to accept of a Treaty with France, on the Supposition that the Spanish Monarchy should continue in the Possession of a Branch of the House of Bourbon; and it being acknowledged even by the French King in the General Preliminaries signed by Monsieur Mesnager, that the Excess of Power from the Re-union of the Crowns of France and Spain would be contrary to the good and general Repose of Europe: He the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer having nothing so much in view as the aggrandizing the common Enemy, yet always intending to cover the Iniquity of his Heart under specious Pretences and false Appearances, did wickedly and treacherously advise and carry on a private and separate Negotiation with France, on the Subject of a Renunciation of his Right to the Kingdom of France by the Duke of Anjou, and that such Renunciation should be the Security against the Re-union of the two Kingdoms. And by the Influence of his evil Counsels her Majesty was prevailed on to accept and finally to conclude and ratify a Treaty of Peace with France, wherein the said Renunciation is taken as a sufficient Expedient to prevent the Mischiefs that threaten'd all Europe, in case the Crowns of France and Spain should be united upon the Head of one and the same Person; although he the said Robert Earl of Oxford, and Earl Mortimer well knew, that a Memorial had been, during the said separate Negotiation, transmitted by Monsieur de Torcy, Secretary of State and Minister to the French King, to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State; whereby it was declared, that the said Renunciation would be null and invalid by the Fundamental Laws of France, which Laws were looked upon as the Work of him who had established all Monarchies, and which he only could abolish; and that no Renunciation thereof could destroy it: And if the King of Spain should renounce, they would deceive themselves that should receive it as a sufficient Expedient to prevent the Mischiefs proposed to be avoided. By which false and treacherous Counsels, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did not only betray the Interests of the common Cause into the Hand of the most formidable Enemy, but wilfully and maliciously abused the Power and Influence which he had obtained with her Majesty, so far as to engage her sacred Majesty, and the Honour of the Imperial Crown of these Kingdoms, to become Party with France in so fatal a Deceit.

ARTICLE VIII.

That her late Majesty Queen Anne having on the Seventh Day of December, in the Year of our Lord

Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, earnestly recommended it from the Throne, that Provision might be made for an early Campaign, in order to carry on the War with Vigour, and as the best way to render the Treaty of Peace effectual; in order to which, vast Supplies were granted, and Magazines provided at a great Expence for an early Campaign; and in pursuance thereof, her Majesty having sent her Generals, Lumley and Cadogan, to give early Assurances to her Allies of her sincere Intentions, and likewise expressly instructed her General, the Duke of Ormond, not only to renew the same Assurances and declare her Resolutions of pushing on the War with the utmost Vigour, but to concert with the Generals of the Allies the proper Measures for entering on Action; and the Confederate Army, which at that Time was the finest and strongest that had been in the Service during the whole Course of the War, and provided with all Necessaries to act with Vigour, having march'd, according to the Resolution taken in Concert with her Majesty's General, almost up to the Enemy, with a great Superiority both as to the Number and Goodness of Troops, and animated with a noble Courage and Zeal to acquit themselves bravely; so that in all human Appearance, and with the divine Assistance, which had appeared so visibly for them on many other Occasions, they would have been able, either by Battle or Siege, to have gained great Advantages over the Enemy, to have better'd the Affairs of the Allies, and to have facilitated the Negotiations of Peace: And the Ministers of France have frequently and earnestly represented to the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others his Accomplices, during their secret Negotiations, their just Apprehensions from the Bravery and good Disposition of the Confederate Army; he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, being truly informed of the sure Prospect, which, by the Blessing of God, the Army of the Confederates then had, of gaining new Conquests over the Army of France, and whereby they would have been enabled to have forced Terms of Peace, safe, honourable, and lasting: In order to disappoint those comfortable Expectations of the Allies, and to give Success to his secret Negotiations with the Ministers of France, was privy to, consenting and advising, together with other false and evil Counsellors, and together with them did advise and consent, that an Order should be sent in her Majesty's Name, to the Duke of Ormond in Flanders, to avoid engaging in any Siege, or hazarding a Battle, till further Orders; although nothing had then been settled in the said private Negotiations for the Interest and Security of Great Britain; and although Philip King of Spain at that Time had not consented to the Renunciation of his Right to the Crown of France. And not contenting himself with having obtained that fatal Step, so highly advantageous to the Cause of France, but being wickedly determined to do all that in him lay to dissolve the whole Confederacy, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, with others was privy to, and did consent and advise, that Orders should be sent to the Bishop of Bristol, one of her Majesty's Plenipotentiaries then at Utrecht, to take the first solemn Opportunity to declare to the Dutch Ministers, that her Majesty looked on herself from their Conduct to be then under no Obligation whatsoever to them: Which two Declarations giving just Alarms to all the Allies, they represented to the Bishop of Bristol their general Dissatisfaction, and the inexpressible Consternation they were all in; that these Proceedings were the unavoidable Ruin of Europe: They urged Religion, Liberty, and the Faith of Treaties, to shew the Enormity of this Usage; and the States expressed their Uneasiness on no account so much, as that they could not come to the Knowledge of their own Lot. Which Representations the Bishop of Bristol did, at the Instance of the Allies, signify to one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State; but their High Mightinesses finding that all Applications to the Ministers of Great Britain, and in particular to the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, were of no avail against France, and for the Interest of the common Cause, thought it necessary, in a manner the most moving and respectful, to address directly to her Majesty by a Letter of the Fifth of June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve; therein expressing their great Surprise and Affliction at the two Declarations aforementioned; and finding it difficult to conceive how such Declarations, so prejudicial to the common Cause, given so suddenly without their Knowledge, and undoubtedly too without the Knowledge of the other Allies, could agree and consist with the Nature of an Alliance, and with those Assurances and Engagements her Majesty had so lately made; and not knowing how to reconcile it with the great Goodness and Kindness which her Majesty had always honoured them with, and not being able to conceive how such a sudden Change could happen with respect to them, having carefully examined their own Conduct, and finding nothing therein that could have given Ground to her Majesty's Dissatisfaction; and having represented the visible and immediate fatal Consequences of the said two Orders, not only to the common Interest of her Majesty and the States, but to the whole Confederacy and to the Protestant Religion; they beseeched her Majesty, with all the Respect, and all the Earnestness they were capable of, that she would not persist in the Declarations made by the Bishop of Bristol, and would be pleased to revoke the Orders given to the Duke of Ormond; and would authorize him to act according to Occurrences, and as the Exigency of the War, and the Advancement of the common Cause should require. Notwithstanding which, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer being acquainted with the said Representations of the States, was not only wanting in his Duty to her Majesty, and to his Oath, and the great Trust reposed in him, in not advising, as he ought to have done, her sacred Majesty to have hearkened to the said several Instances made to her; but persisting in his desperate and destructive Measures for the Advancement of the Interest of the common Enemy, did afterwards advise her Majesty to disregard and reject the same; and did countenance, encourage, advise, and promote the said private, separate, and wicked Negotiations with France, without any Participation of the Allies, contrary to all her Majesty's Engagements, and to the apparent Ruin of the common Cause. By which several wicked and perfidious Counsels, the Progress of the victorious Arms of the Confederates was stopped, and an Opportunity lost for conquering the Enemy, the most favourable, favourable, in the Opinion of all the General Officers and the Quarter-Masters of the Allies, who were sent out to view the French Camp, and whereby all Hopes of Confidence between her Majesty and her Allies was entirely destroyed, and the French King made absolute Master of the Negotiations of Peace, and the Affairs of Europe given into his Hands.

ARTICLE IX.

That to impose upon the Allies the fatal Necessity of submitting to the Terms of France, and in order thereto to leave the whole Confederate Army at the Mercy of the common Enemy, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, was privy and consenting to a secret and separate Concert with the Ministers of France, without the Knowledge of the Allies, for the separating the Troops in her Majesty's Pay from the rest of the Confederate Army: For the effecting whereof, instead of preventing as far as in him lay so fatal a Step, he was not only wanting to advise against so unwarrantable a Proceeding, but did consent to and advise her Majesty, that the Duke of Ormond, and all the Troops then in her Majesty's Pay, or such of them as would obey his Orders, should separate themselves from the Army of the Confederates: And having notice that the Generals of the Auxiliaries, paid by her Majesty, whose Honour and Consciences would not permit them to abandon the Confederates, and leave them as a Sacrifice to France, but for the Sake of the common Interest of Europe, and according to the true End and Design of their Conventions, did refuse to withdraw with the Duke of Ormond, without particular Orders from their respective Masters; he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, being then Lord High-Treasurer of Great-Britain, and one of her Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, in Violation of his Oath, and the Duty and Trust reposed in him, did take upon himself an arbitrary and illegal Power, to refuse and put a Stop to the Pay and Subsidies due on account of the said foreign Troops, although they were entitled thereto by the Conventions entered into with her sacred Majesty, and by express Provision made by Act of Parliament for the Payment of the same. By which fatal Separation, which pursuant to his evil Counsels was afterwards made, great Numbers of the Confederate Troops, who had before, on many Occasions, signaliz'd themselves in the Defence of the Cause of Europe, soon afterwards, at the unfortunate Action of Denain, fell as Sacrifices to the Fury and Revenge of France; the Siege of Landrecy was raised, the important Towns and Fortresses of Quesnoy, Bouchain, and Doway were retaken by the French Army; and not only the Fortune of the War, but the Fate of Europe decided in Favour of France.

ARTICLE X.

That in further Execution of his pernicious Designs to compleat the Destruction of the common Cause of Europe, and to render it impracticable for her Majesty to resume the War against France, in Conjunction with her Allies, or to recover the Union with her Majesty's old and faithful Allies, so necessary to the Preservation of these Kingdoms; he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, then Lord High-Treasurer of Great Britain, did carry on and concert with the Ministers of France, a private and separate Negotiation for a general Suspension by Sea and Land, between Great Britain and France; and to that end among others, did advise her Majesty to send over Henry Viscount Bolingbroke, one of her principal Secretaries of State, to the Court of France, with Powers to settle the said Suspension. In pursuance of which, a destructive Treaty of Suspension was made in France, on the Nineteenth of August, N. S. One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, by the said Henry Viscount Bolingbroke, on the Part of her said Majesty, for four Months, without the Knowledge or any Participation of the Allies; and before any Terms of Peace were settled with the Enemy, either for Great Britain or the Allies. By which evil Counsels, the express Terms of several of the afore-mentioned Treaties were expressly contravened and broken, the good Friends and antient Allies of her Majesty and these Kingdoms were totally deprived of the just Assistance to which they were thereby entitled, and were left exposed to the Insults of the common Enemy; and the sacred Ties of Union and Friendship between her Majesty and her Allies being cut asunder, her Majesty's Person and Government, the Safety of her Kingdoms, and of the Protestant Succession to the Crown of these Realms, were left exposed to the Enterprizes of her most formidable Enemy.

ARTICLE XI.

That whereas the States-General of the United Provinces were, in or about the Months of September or October, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, in Possession of the strong and important Town and Fortrefs of Tournay: And whereas the French King had, during the Course of the said private, separate, and traitorous Negotiation between him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, and the Ministers of France, signified his Consent to the Ministers of Great Britain, that the said Town and Fortrefs of Tournay should remain to the said States-General as Part of their Barrier: And whereas her Majesty, in her Instructions of December the Twenty-third, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, to her Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht, had expressly directed them to insist with the Plenipotentiaries of France, in the General Congress, that towards forming a sufficient Barrier for the States-General, Tournay, should remain to their High Mightinesses; and did afterwards declare herself conformably thereunto, in her Speech to both Houses of Parliament, on the Sixth of June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, in which she communicated to them the Terms whereon a Peace might be made. And whereas for several Years before, and till the said Months of September and October, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, there was open War between her late Majesty and the French King; and the said War continuing for all the said Time, and afterwards, the said French King and his Subjects were Enemies to her Majesty: He the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, then Lord High-Treasurer of Great Britain, and a Subject

Subject of her Majesty's, not considering the Duty of his Allegiance, but having altogether withdrawn the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, which every true and faithful Subject owed to her said Majesty; and designing to give Aid and Succour, and to adhere to the said French King, did in or about the Months of September or October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, during the said War, falsely, maliciously, wickedly, and traiterously aid, help, and assist, and adhere to the French King, then an Enemy to her late Majesty: And in Execution and Performance of his aiding, assisting, and adhering, maliciously, falsely, and traiterously did counsel and advise the said Enemy, in what manner and by what Methods the said important Town and Fortress of Tournay, then in the Possession of the States-General, might be gained from them to the French King, contrary to the Duty of his Allegiance, and the Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

ARTICLE XII.

That whereas her late Majesty Queen Anne, not only in pursuance of the Treaties she stood engaged in to her good Allies, and in particular to his Imperial Majesty, for the Recovery of the Monarchy of Spain to the House of Austria, thereby to preserve a due Ballance of Power in Europe, but also from her just Resentment against the Duke of Anjou, who then stil'd himself King of Spain, and who, in Defiance of her Majesty's Title to the Crown, acknowledged the Pretender as King of Great Britain; and on these just Foundations her Majesty had, in vindication of the Honour of the Crown, and in justice to her People, at a vast Expence of Blood and Treasure, and on the earnest and repeated Advices of her Parliament, prosecuted a vigorous War against the Duke of Anjou: And whereas, in the Years of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Ten, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, and One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, the said open, bloody, and expensive War was carried on between her said late Majesty Queen Anne, and the said Duke of Anjou, and during all the time aforesaid, the said War did continue, and for all that time the said Duke of Anjou, and the Subjects of Spain adhering to him, were Enemies of her late Majesty: He the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, then Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain, and one of her Majesty's Privy-Council, and a Subject of her said Majesty, not considering the Duty of his Allegiance, but having withdrawn his true Obedience from her said late Majesty, did at several times, in the said Years of our Lord, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Ten, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, and One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, falsely, maliciously, wickedly, and traiterously aid, help, assist, and adhere to the said Duke of Anjou, then an Enemy to her said late Majesty; and in the Execution and Performance of his said aiding, helping, assisting and adhering, and in Confederacy and Combination with the then Enemies of her late Majesty, and with divers other wicked and evil disposed Persons, did, at several times, in the Years aforesaid, advise and counsel the Enemies of her late Majesty, and in such counselling and advising, did concert with them, and did promote the yielding and giving up Spain and the West-Indies, or some part thereof, to the said Duke of Anjou, then in Enmity with her Majesty, against the Duty of his Allegiance, and the Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

ARTICLE XIII.

That whereas the Riches, Power, and Strength of these Kingdoms depend entirely on the flourishing Condition of Trade and Navigation, and her late Majesty Queen Anne having due Regard thereto, as well as to the just Expectations of her People, after the vast Expences they had so cheerfully undergone in Support of the War, did, on the first Opening the Conferences for a General Peace, declare from the Throne to both Houses of Parliament, on the Seventh of December One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, that she would endeavour, that after a War which had cost so much Blood and Treasure, the Nation might find their Interest in Trade and Commerce improved and enlarged by a Peace: And on the Sixth of June One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, when she was pleased to communicate the Terms on which a General Peace might be made, did declare, that nothing had mov'd her Majesty from steddily pursuing the true Interest of her own Kingdoms, and that the Terms of Peace obtained for her own Subjects were such, as she had Reason to expect would make her People some Amends for the great and unequal Burden which they had laid under through the whole Course of the War; and hoped that none of the Confederates would envy her Share in the Glory and Advantage of the Peace; and afterwards declared to both Houses of Parliament her Satisfaction in the near View she had of a Peace; since it would, in some measure, recompense her Subjects for the vast Expence: And after the Conclusion of the Treaty of Peace and Commerce with France, did declare from the Throne, on the Ninth of April One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, that the many Advantages she had obtained for her Subjects, had occasioned much Opposition and long Delays to the Peace; but it afforded her great Satisfaction, that her People will have it in their Power, by degrees, to repair what they had suffered during so long and burthensome a War. Whereupon both Houses of Parliament did from time to time express their grateful Acknowledgments to her Majesty for her great Care and Concern for the Welfare of her People. And whereas at the setting on Foot, and the Progress of the said private, separate, and pernicious Negotiations between the Ministers of Great Britain and France, it was laid down as a Principle, on the part of Great Britain, never to be departed from, that France should consent to adjust the Interests of Great Britain in the first Place, that the Ministers of Great Britain might thereby be enabled to engage the Queen to make the Conclusion of the General Peace easy to France; and on this plausible Pretence it was insisted on by the Ministers of Great Britain, to remit the Discussion of the particular Interests of the Allies to General Conferences; and throughout the whole Course of the said separate Negotiation, all imaginable Concessions were not only made by the Ministers of Great Britain for a real Advantage of the Interests of France against the Allies, but all Measures were entered into and concerted between them, that even the Ministers of France could dictate, in order to strengthen their Hands, and to enable them to impose the Terms of a General Peace : He the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, having nothing in view thro' the whole Course of the said Negotiation, wherein he was wickedly and principally engaged in Concert with France, but the final Destruction of his Country ; and to that end the sacrificing the Commerce of Great Britain to the Aggrandisement of France, was not only wanting in his Duty to her Majesty, in not insisting on in all Events, and not procuring, in the first Place, the most certain and strict Securities imaginable for the Safety and Advantage of the Commerce of these Kingdoms ; but did advise her late Majesty, that in the Proposition sent by his Privy and Advice, by Mr. Prior to France, and also in the said private and separate Treaty, signed on the Seven and Twentieth of September, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, wherein the Preliminary Demands for Great Britain, more particularly were intended to be adjusted with France, the Demands for Great Britain, in point of Commerce, should not only be made in loose, general, and insufficient Terms, but that the Liberty of Fishing, and Drying of Fish on Newfoundland should be expressly given up to France, tho' the Restitution of that small part of the Island, which France had taken during the War, was therein referred to be discuss'd to General Conferences. And having, by his wicked Artifices, engaged her Majesty in the said private Treaty with France, without any Security for the Commerce of Great Britain, he did artfully and cunningly contrive with the Ministers of France to keep in Suspence all Matters that concerned the Commerce of Great Britain, until, by means of his wicked and pernicious Counsels aforementioned, France was become Masters of the Negotiations, and the chief Advantages for the Commerce of Great Britain by that means remaining unsettled : And the Ministers of France afterwards disputing the most essential Articles which had been in agitation, and in particular that fundamental Principle of treating and being treated as Gens Amicissima, and endeavouring to elude what had been agreed on in the said private and separate Negotiation, for the supposed Advantage of Great Britain ; he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, under pretence of removing a Difficulty then depending, by an Expedient advantageous to Great Britain, did treacherously advise the ninth Article of the Treaty of Commerce with France, a Bill for the rendering whereof effectual was afterwards rejected by the House of Commons, as highly prejudicial and destructive to the Commerce of these Kingdoms : But yet for the sake of gaining that destructive Article for Great Britain, as if the same had been advantageous, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, in Defiance of the express Provision of an Act of Parliament, as well as in Contempt of the frequent and earnest Representations of the Merchants of Great Britain, and of the Commissioners for Trade and Plantations, did advise her Majesty finally to agree with France, that the Subjects of France should have liberty of Fishing and drying Fish on Newfoundland ; and did also advise her Majesty to make a Cession to France of the Isle of Cape Breton, with liberty to fortify the same, altho' the Isle of Cape Breton was part of the antient Territories of the Crown of Great Britain ; and her Majesty had declared from the Throne, that France had consented to make an absolute Cession of Nova Scotia, or Arcadia, whereof Cape Breton is part, to her Majesty. And the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, intending in all Events to secure to France the Advantages relating to the Fishery of Newfoundland and to Cape Breton, did, in conjunction with the Ministers of France, advise her Majesty to consent, that the same should be made an Article in the Treaty of Peace between Great Britain and France ; whereas the only Advantages in Trade, pretended to be stipulated for Great Britain, being inserted in the Treaty of Commerce, were to depend on certain Conditions to be made good by Act of Parliament ; and pursuant to, and by the Influence of the said evil Counsel of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, her sacred Majesty was advised to ratify the said Article in the said Treaty of Peace and the said Treaty of Commerce. By means of which pernicious Counsels, the good Intentions of her sacred Majesty to have obtained for her People advantageous Terms of Commerce were entirely frustrated, the Trade and Manufactures of Great Britain, as far as in him lay, rendered precarious, and at the Mercy of the Enemy, and that beneficial Branch of Trade, always esteemed the great Support of the Naval Power, and the chief Nursery of the Seamen of Great Britain, yielded up to the Subjects of France : and the only Pretence for the avowed and notorious Violation of Treaties, and the carrying on the Measures of France, viz. the adjusting first the Interests of Great Britain, thro' the whole Course of the said private and separate Negotiations, terminated at last in the Sacrifice of the Commerce of Great Britain to France, without the least Shadow of Advantage in Trade procured for these Kingdoms.

ARTICLE XIV.

That he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did, in concert with other evil and false Counsellors, even without any Application from his Royal Highness the Duke of Savoy, and after the French King had, in the Course of the said private and separate Negotiations, consented that the Kingdom of Sicily should remain to the House of Austria, form a Project and Design to dispose of the Kingdom of Sicily to the Duke of Savoy from the House of Austria : And to effect that his unjust, dishonourable, and pernicious Project, he did advise her Majesty to give Instructions, among other things, to Henry Viscount Bolingbroke, then appointed her Ambassador to France, to demand in her Majesty's Name, of the French King, the Kingdom of Sicily for his said Royal Highness. And a Treaty of Peace being afterwards made between the French King, his Royal Highness, and the Duke of Anjou, wherein a Cession is made to his Royal Highness of the Kingdom of Sicily, without any Concurrence or Participation of his Imperial Majesty ; he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did basely and scandalously advise her sacred Majesty to consent to the same, by an Article inserted in the Treaty of Peace between her Majesty and the French King. And afterwards, by his Privy and Advice, her Majesty was prevailed on to assist his Royal Highness against the Emperor then in Alliance with her Majesty, with a part of her Royal Fleet at her own Expence, in order to put him in Possession of the said Kingdom of Sicily. Whereby the greatest Injustice was done to his Imperial Majesty, in direct Violation of the Grand Alliance, and contrary to her Majesty's frequent Declarations from the Throne, and her plain and full Instructions to her Plenipotentiaries tentiaries at Utrecht, for obtaining his just and reasonable Satisfaction; and whereby National Faith, and the Honour of the Crown, was vilely betray'd, and the Naval Power of these Kingdoms, and the Supplies granted by Parliament for reducing the common Enemy, were perfidiously employ'd against the great and faithful Allies of this Kingdom.

ARTICLE XV.

That whereas the Dignity and Support of the Imperial Crown of these Realms has in all Ages greatly depended on the Wisdom and Truth of the Communications made from the Throne, especially in Parliament, as the sure and only means whereby the Kings and Queens of this Realm can receive the sincere and faithful Advice of their People in Matters of the highest Importance, and which by the Fundamental Laws and Constitution of this Government ought to be inviolably observ'd as the sacred Band of the Duty and Affection of Subjects to their Sovereign. And whereas by the most antient and known Laws of this Kingdom it is indispensably incumbent on the great Officers of State that surround the Throne, to maintain as far as in them lies the Sacredness of the Royal Word on all Occasions; it being most apparent that the greatest Dishonour to the Throne, and the greatest Danger to these Kingdoms must inevitably ensue, whenever that Fountain of Truth by wicked Counsels shall be in any degree corrupted, and thereby lose its just Influence and necessary Authority. And whereas the Power of making Peace and War, one of the antient, undoubted, and most important Prerogatives of the Crown, has been always exercis'd by the Sovereigns of these Realms, with the strictest Regard to the Honour of the Crown and the Welfare of the People; and for that end they have in great Wisdom in all Ages taken the Advice of Parliament on such weighty Occasions. And whereas her late Majesty Queen Anne declared from the Throne her gracious Intentions to communicate the Terms of Peace to her Parliament, for their deliberate and serious Advice therein, wisely foreseeing that the Safety of her Person and Government, of the Protestant Succession to the Crown, which she had nearest her Heart, and of the Protestant Religion, and of the Liberties of Europe, did inevitably depend on the happy Conclusion of the said Negotiations: He the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, then Lord High-Treasurer of Great Britain, having taken on himself throughout the said Negotiations a most arbitrary and unwarrantable Authority, and the chief Direction and Influence to her Majesty's Councils; and most wickedly designing to prostitute the Honour of the Crown, and the Dignity of Parliaments, and not only totally to deprive her Majesty of the wholesome and necessary Advice of her Parliament in so great a Conjunction, but by misrepresenting the most essential Parts of the Negotiations of Peace, to obtain the Sanction of Parliament to his traitorous Proceedings, and thereby fatally to deceive her Majesty, her Allies, her Parliament, and her People; he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer was not only wanting in the Discharge of that Duty to his Sovereign which became his High Station, by not advising against, and as far as in him lay in all Events by not preventing even any Intimation from the Throne to the Parliament, which was not conformable to the exactest Truth and Impartiality; but taking Advantage of his ready Access to her

Majesty, and his exorbitant Influence in her Councils, did prepare, form, and concert, together with other false and evil Counsellors, several Speeches and Declarations to be made by her Majesty from the Throne to her Parliament, on the Subject of the said Negotiations of Peace, and did advise her Majesty to make the same to her Parliament: And particularly, by means of his false and evil Counsels, her Majesty did, amongst other things, on the seventh of December, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, declare from the Throne in the Words, or to the Effect following: That notwithstanding the Arts of those who delight in War, both Place and Time are appointed for opening the Treaty of a General Peace. Our Allies, especially the States-General, whose Interest I look upon as inseparable from my own, have by their ready Concurrence express'd their Confidence in me. Whereas it was then notorious to all Europe, and the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others his Accomplices, well knew, that the principal Allies of her Majesty, and particularly the States-General, then had in the strongest and most pressing manner represented not only to her Majesty's Ministers in Holland, but afterwards by a Minister of their own directly to her Majesty, the Insecurity and Danger to the Common Cause, by entering into general Negotiations with France on the Propositions signed by Monsieur Mesnager; and also their firm Opinion of the fatal Consequences that might ensue thereon: And although they had still great Apprehensions concerning the Method of opening the Conferences, and the Consequences that might happen thereupon; yet being wrought on by the Menaces and other extraordinary Methods used with them by her Majesty's Minister's, and relying on the solemn Assurances and Declarations of her Majesty to support the Interest and Concern of their State, and to act in perfect Confidence and Harmony with them; they did at last, with the greatest Reluctance, consent to enter upon a General Negotiation of Peace with France. And in the same Speech her Majesty was prevail'd on by the evil Counsels of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, to declare in the Words, or to the Effect following: That the Princes and States which have been engaged with us in this War, being by Treaties entitled to have their several Interests secured at a Peace; I will not only do my utmost to procure every one of them all reasonable Satisfaction, but I shall also unite with them in the strictest Engagements for continuing the Alliance, in order to render the General Peace secure and lasting. And in her Message of the seventeenth of January following, her Majesty again expresses the Care she intended to take of all her Allies, and of the strict Union in which she proposed to join with them. Whereas by the evil Influence of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, her Majesty was not only induced to enter into a private Negotiation with France, exclusive of her Allies; but the same was in like manner carried on by him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others. And the several Interests which the Allies were intitled to by their Treaties, were not only not secured to them by the Peace, nor any reasonable Satisfaction given to them, but the main Interests of her principal Allies, especially of his Imperial Majesty, were by the wicked Practices of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, given up to France; and no Engagements

ments were obtained for continuing the Alliance, in order to render the general Peace secure and lasting. And her Majesty having on many former Occasions express'd her Resolutions never to make Peace with France and Spain, so long as Spain and the West-Indies remain'd in the House of Bourbon; she was prevail'd upon by the Advice of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, to declare herself, in Answer to an Address of the House of Peers, the Eleventh of December, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, to the Effect following, viz. I should be sorry any one could think I would not do my utmost to recover Spain and the Indies from the House of Bourbon. Whereas it is most manifest, that the leaving the Kingdom of Spain and the Indies in the House of Bourbon, was the Foundation of the private and separate Treaty between Great Britain and France, which had been before that Time signed even with her Majesty's Consent; and the same fundamental Resolution was immutably observed between them to the Conclusion of the Peace. And her Majesty having frequently declared from the Throne, that her Resolutions in entering into the said Negotiations were to obtain a general, good, and lasting Peace, and the Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht being instructed to treat with France conformably to that End, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, in order to remove the just Suspicions which had been conceived of his private and separate Negotiations with France, did advise her Majesty to make this further Declaration in her said Message of the Seventeenth Day of January, That the World will now see how groundless those Reports are which have been spread Abroad by Men of evil Intentions to serve the worst Designs; as if a separate Peace had been treated, for which there has not been the least Colour given: Whereas a private and separate Negotiation had been carried on for five Months together between Great Britain and France; and during that Time private Propositions had been sent from England, and a private Treaty with a Minister of France signed, even by her Majesty's Privy, exclusive of all the Allies, before the said Declaration made by her Majesty: And private and separate Measures were thenceforth carried on by the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and his Accomplices, on Behalf of her Majesty, with the Ministers of France, even to the Conclusion of the Peace with France. Her Majesty was further prevailed on by the wicked Advice of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, in her Speech of June the Sixth, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, to declare, that to prevent the Union of the two Crowns, she would not be content with what was Speculative, but insisted upon something Solid: And in the same Speech to the Effect following, videlicet, The Nature of the Proposal for a Renunciation is such, that it executes itself, and France and Spain are thereby more effectually divided than ever: Whereas the Ministers of France had before that Time assured the Ministers of her Majesty, that to accept of the Expedient proposed on her Majesty's Behalf, would be to build on a sappy Foundation; and that the Renunciation would be null and void by the fundamental Laws of France; and that they would deceive themselves who accepted it as an Expedient to prevent the Union of the two Crowns. And not only in the Particulars before-mentioned, but in many others contained in the said several Speeches and Messages made and sent to her Parliament, even while the said Negotiations of Peace with France were depending, the most essential Points relating to Peace and Commerce, and which concerned the Interest, as well of the Allies as of Great Britain, were grossly misrepresented. By all which wicked, treacherous, and unexampled evil Counsels he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did most basely, ungratefully, and scandalously abuse the Favour of his Royal Mistress, and by means of her Authority did mislead her Parliament into groundless and fatal Resolutions; and thereby not only prevented the just Advice of the Parliament to her Majesty in that critical Juncture, but obtained the Approbation of Parliament to his mysterious and dangerous Practices; and did not only deprive her Majesty of the Confidence and Affection of her Allies, but exposed her Majesty and her People to the Contempt of the common Enemy.

ARTICLE XVI.

That whereas the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer having on all Occasions used his utmost Endeavours to subvert the antient established Constitution of Parliaments, the great and only Security of the Prerogative of the Crown, and of the Rights, Liberties and Properties of the People, and being most wickedly determined at one fatal Blow as far as in him lay to destroy the Freedom and Independency of the House of Lords, the great Ornament and nearest Support of the Imperial Crown of these Realms, and falsely intending to disguise his mischievous Purposes under a pretended Zeal for the Prerogative of the Crown; he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, on or about the Months of December or January, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, whilst the House of Lords were under an Adjournment, and had Reason to expect that on their next Meeting Matters of the highest Importance would be communicated to them from the Throne, they having some few Days before given their humble Opinion and Advice to her Majesty, that no Peace could be safe or honourable to Great Britain or Europe, if Spain and the West Indies were to be allotted to any Branch of the House of Bourbon; being then Lord High-Treasurer of Great Britain, and one of her Majesty's Privy Council, and assuming to himself an arbitrary Direction and Controul in her Majesty's Councils, contrary to his Duty and his Oath, and in Violation of the great Trust reposed in him, and with an immediate Purpose to render ineffectual the many earnest Representations of her Majesty's Allies against the said Negotiations of Peace, as well as to prevent the good Effects of the said Advice of the House of Lords; and in order to obtain such further Resolutions of that House of Parliament on the important Subject of the Negotiations of Peace, as might shelter and promote his secret and unwarrantable Proceedings, together with other false and evil Counsellors, did advise her Majesty to make and create twelve Peers of this Realm, and Lords of Parliament; and pursuant to his destructive Counsels Letters Patents did forthwith pass, and Writs issued, whereby twelve Peers were made and created; and did likewise advise her Majesty immediately to call and summon them to Parliament; which being done accordingly, they took their Seats in the House of Lords on or about the Second of January, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, to which Day the House then stood adjourned. Whereby the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did most highly abuse the Influence he then had with her Majesty, and prevailed on her to exercise in the most unprecedented and dangerous Manner that valuable and undoubted Prerogative, which the Wisdom of the Laws and Constitution of this Kingdom, hath entrusted with the Crown for the rewarding signal Virtue and distinguish'd Merit. By which desperate Advice he did not only, as far as in him lay, deprive her Majesty of the Continuance of those seasonable and wholesome Counsels in that critical Juncture, but wickedly perverted the true and only End of that great and useful Prerogative to the Dishonour of the Crown, and the irreparable Mischief to the Constitution of Parliaments. All which Crimes and Misdemeanours were committed and done by him the said Earl against our late Sovereign Lady the Queen, her Crown and Dignity, the Peace and Interest of this Kingdom, and in Breach of the several Trusts reposed in him the said Earl, and he the said Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer was Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain, and one of her Majesty's Privy Council, during the Time that all and every the Crimes before set forth were done and committed. For which Matters and Things, the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes of the House of Commons in Parliament assembled, do, in the Name of themselves and of all the Commons of Great Britain, impeach the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer of High-Treason, and other High Crimes and Misdemeanours in the said Articles contained. And the said Commons by Protestation saving to themselves the Liberty of exhibiting at any Time hereafter, any other Accusations or Impeachment against the said Earl, and also of replying to the Answers which the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer shall make to the Premises; or any of them, or any Impeachment or Accusation that shall be by them exhibited, according to the Course and Proceedings of Parliament, do pray that the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer be put to answer all and every the Premises; and that such Proceedings, Examinations, Trials and Judgments may be upon them, and every of them had and used, as shall be agreeable to Law and Justice. And they do further pray and demand, that the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer may be sequestred from Parliament, and forthwith committed to safe Custody.

After these Articles were deliver'd and debated upon; a Motion was made, that the Earl of Oxford might be committed to safe Custody, when his Lordship spoke to this Effect.

My LORD,

I is a very great Misfortune for any Man to fall under the Displeasure of so great and so powerful a Body as the Commons of Great Britain; and this Misfortune is the heavier upon me, because I had the Honour to be placed at the Head of the late Ministry, and must now, it seems, be made accountable for all the Measures that were then pursued: But on the other Hand, 'tis a very great Comfort to me under this Misfortune, that I have the Honour to be a Member of this august Assembly: An Assembly which always squares their Proceedings and Judgments by the Rules of Honour, Justice and Equity; and is not to be byass'd by a Spirit of Party.

My Lord. I could say a great deal to clear my self of the Charge which is brought against me: But as I now labour under an Indisposition of Body, besides the Fatigue of this long Sitting, I shall contract what I have to say within a very narrow Compass. This whole Accusation may, it seems, be reduced to the Negotiation and Conclusion of the Peace. That the Nation wanted a Peace, nobody will deny; and I hope it will be as easily made out, that the Conditions of this Peace are as good as could be expected, considering the Circumstances wherewith it was made, and the Backwardness and Reluctancy which some of the Allies shew'd to come into the Queen's Measures. This is certain, that this Peace, as bad as it is now represented, was approved by two successive Parliaments. It is indeed suggested against this Peace, that it was a separate one; but I hope, my Lord, it will be made appear, that it was general; and that 'twas France, and not Great Britain, that made the first Steps towards a Negotiation. And, my Lord, I will be bold to say, that during my whole Administration, the Sovereign upon the Throne was loved at Home, and feared Abroad.

As to the Business of Tournay, which is made a capital Charge, I can safely aver, that I had no manner of Share in it; and that the same was wholly transacted by that unfortunate Nobleman who thought fit to step aside: But I dare say in his Behalf, that if this Charge could be proved, it would not amount to Treason. For my own part, as I always acted by the immediate Directions and Commands of the late Queen, and never offended against any known Law, I am justify'd in my own Conscience, and unconcern'd for the Life of an insignificant old Man. But I cannot, without the highest Ingratitude, be unconcern'd for the best of Queens: A Queen who heap'd upon me Honours and Preferments, tho' I never ask'd for them; and therefore I think myself under an Obligation to vindicate her Memory, and the Measures she pursued, to my dying Breath. My Lord, If Ministers of State, acting by the immediate Commands of their Sovereign, are afterwards to be made accountable for their Proceedings, it may one Day or other be the Case of all the Members of this august Assembly: I don't doubt, therefore, that out of Regard to your selves, your Lordships will give me an equitable Hearing; and I hope that, in the Prosecution of this Enquiry, it will appear, that I have merited not only the Indulgence, but likewise the Favour of the Government. My Lord, I am now to take my Leave of your Lordship, and of this honourable House, perhaps for ever! I shall lay down my Life with Pleasure, in a Cause favour'd by my late dear Royal Mistress. And when I consider that I am to be judge by the Justice, Honour and Virtue of my Peers, I shall acquiesce, and retire with great Content: And my Lords, God's Will be done.

Further Articles of Impeachment of High Crimes and Misdemeanours, against Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer.

ARTICLE I.

THAT whereas in or about the Month of January, in the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred Ten-Eleven, a dangerous and destructive Expedition had been projected and set on Foot, under Pretence of making a Conquest on the Possessions of the French King in North America, but with a real Design to promote his Interests, by weakening the Confederate Army in Flanders, and dissipating the Naval Force of this Kingdom, as well as for the Sake of the private Interests and corrupt Gain of the Promoters of the said Expedition, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, timer, being then one of her late Majesty's Privy-Council, and one of the Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury, was not only wanting in his Duty to her late Majesty, by wilfully and industriously absenting from the Meetings of other Persons, then in high Trust under her Majesty, wherein the said Expedition was concerted, and by not advising her Majesty against, and doing what in him lay to have prevented the putting the same in Execution, but did, contrary to his Oath, and the high Trust then reposed in him, advise her Majesty to consent to the making an Expedition for the conquering Canada and the City of Quebeck on the River of St. Laurence in North America; and in Execution of his said evil Counsels, he did further advise her Majesty to give Orders for detaching several Battalions of the Forces then in the Service of her Majesty, in Conjunction with her Allies in Flanders, and to send the same with a large Squadron of Men of War on the said Enterprize; although the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer well knew, that the said Project or Expedition having been frequently deliberated on and maturely considered, a short Time before, in a Committee of Council, was then laid aside as dangerous and impracticable. And a Demand being made at the Treasury on or about the Months of May or June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, for the Sum of Twenty-eight Thousand Pounds or thereabouts, on Pretence of Arms and Merchandize said to be sent on the said Expedition to Canada, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer being then Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain, and one of her Majesty's Privy Council, tho' he well knew, or had Reason to suspect, that the same was an unjust and exorbitant Demand, and a great Abuse on her Majesty and the Public, and such as ought not to have been complied with, was not only wanting in his Duty to her Majesty, in not giving his humble Advice against the said Demand, or at least in not representing to her Majesty the Grounds of such his Suspicion, but did, contrary to his Oath and his Duty, advise her Majesty, that the said Sums should be issued and paid; and did accordingly countersign a Warrant to the Paymaster of her Majesty's Forces for the Payment of the same, pursuant to which the same was issued and received. And in further Violation of his Oath, his Duty, and Trust, and with the most corrupt Design to prevent the Justice due to her Majesty and the Nation, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, being then Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain, and exercising a most unexampled arbitrary Power, not only in her Majesty's private Councils, but extending his evil Influences to the great Council of the Nation; after the said Expedition had proved unsuccessful, and it had been discover'd to him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, that the Nation had been cheated of above Twenty Thousand Pounds on that Account, did most ungratefully and corruptly employ his wicked Arts, and the Credit which he had gained by his many false and crafty Insinuations and Practices, to keep the House of Commons from examining that Affair. And in or about the Month of August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, in a Letter or Memorial under his Hand to her late Majesty, he did presume, not only to insinuate the ill Opinion he therein pretended always to have had of the said Expedition, but did declare the Suspicions he had of the great Injury and Abuse done to her Majesty and the Public, in the Demand of the said Twenty-eight Thousand Pounds, even at the Time when the same was made, and that the Public had been cheated of above Twenty Thousand Pounds on that Account; and in the said Memorial did presume further to declare to her Majesty, that he was forced to use all his Skill and Credit to keep the House of Commons from examining that Affair in the last Parliament; thereby vainly, but most wickedly, recommending himself to the Continuance of her Majesty's Favour, by the Success of his most profligate Measures. By all which unparallel'd Corruptions and most dangerous Councils and Practices of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, the good and faithful Allies of her Majesty were deprived of the Aid of her Majesty's Troops to which they were entitled by their Conventions, and the Confederate Army in Flanders was greatly diminished, to the apparent Advantage of the common Enemy: The Public Money, granted by Parliament for reducing the Power of France, and which was expressly appropriated for other special Services, was arbitrarily and illegally misapplied and embezzled, and an heavy Debt incurr'd on the Nation, not only sitting the Parliament, but even in Contempt and Defiance of a Representation made by the House of Commons to the Throne, even whilst the said Expedition was concerting; and whereby the highest Injustice was done, in suppressing an Enquiry so just to her Majesty and her People, and a lasting Reproach and Scandal brought on that House of Commons, of which he boasts, as having been wrought on by his corrupt Influence not to examine into so high and so scandalous an Abuse.

ARTICLE II.

That the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, not contented with the high Employments and Places of Honour and Profit bestowed on him by her late Majesty, nor with the large and excessive Gains by him made by the Incomes and Profits of the said Employments, on or about the Month of October, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, whilst the Nation was engaged in a most expensive War against France and Spain, for preserving the Liberties of Europe, and greatly exhausted with the Supplies and Taxes for carrying on the same, and was under such heavy Debts as were impossible to be satisfied, without the utmost Frugality or laying grievous Taxes upon the Commons of Great Britain: Contrary to his Oath and his high Trust, and making a most dishonourable and ungrateful Use of the ready Access he had to her late Majesty, did prevail on and advise her Majesty to sign a Warrant to himself, being then Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain, for the issuing and Payment of the Sum of Thirteen Thousand Pounds to John Drummond, Esq; or his Assigns, for such special Services relating to the War, as her Majesty had directed: And the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, on or about the Twenty-fourth Day of November following, in pursuance of the said Warrant under her Majesty's Sign Manual, did sign a Warrant for the Payment of the said Thirteen Thousand Pounds for such special Services of the War, as her Majesty had directed; although no special Services had been, or were at any Time afterwards directed by her Majesty, to which the said Monies were to be applied. And the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, having privately desired leave of the said

Drummond

Drummond to strike some Fin-Tallies in his the said Drummond's Name, he did, pursuant thereto, direct that Orders amounting to the Sum of Thirteen Thousand Pounds should be charged in the Register of the Exchequer on the Monies arising by Sale of Tin, in the Name of the said John Drummond; and tho' the same were accordingly struck in the Name of the said Drummond, in or about the Month of November, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, they were not deliver'd out to the said Drummond, but were kept in the Treasury Chamber, or else were in the Power or Custody of the Earl, till about the End of January following, when the said Drummond having occasion, as the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer well knew, to go into Holland, at the Desire and Request of the said Earl, he indorsed his Name on the said Orders, and the same were left, by his Privity, Direction, or Consent, in the Hands of Mr. John Taylor, a Clerk of the Treasury; and the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer having afterwards got Possession of the said Orders, did in or about the Month of June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, send an Order in Writing to the said Mr. Taylor to deliver the said Tallies to a Servant of the said Earl, which was done accordingly, the said Indorsements not being at that Time fill'd up: And the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, having by these corrupt and scandalous Methods got the said Tallies and Orders into his own Hands, did afterwards fill up Assignments of the said Orders for Twelve Thousand Pounds, Part of the said Thirteen Thousand Pounds, to himself, and the remaining Part to such other Persons as he thought fit; and did afterwards in or about the Months of August, October, and November, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, at several Times, dispose of the said Orders and Tallies to his own private Use and Advantage. And to cover the said scandalous Embezzlements, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did afterwards, as he pretends, advise and prevail on her Majesty, on or about the Fourteenth of December, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, to sign a Warrant prepared by himself, wherein after the Recitals of his own good, faithful, and acceptable Services, which had tended to the Quiet, Safety and Prosperity of her Majesty and her Realms, though accompanied with great Difficulties on himself, and Hazards to him and his Family; and that her Majesty was resolv'd to bestow upon him a Sum of ready Money: But the said Earl representing to her Majesty, that the Arrears then due to her Servants and Tradesmen were very great and pressing, her Majesty did therefore agree and determine that he should have, to his own Use, the said several Sums, amounting to Thirteen Thousand Pounds comprized in the Orders aforesaid: It was directed that the said John Drummond should assign the said Orders, and the whole Right and Benefit thereof to the said Earl and his Assigns; although the said Earl had privately and clandestinely procured from the said Drummond an Assignment of the said Orders near two Years before the said Warrant, and had fraudulently and corruptly disposed and converted them to his own Use, without her Majesty's Privity or Consent, some time before her Majesty was prevailed on to sign the said Warrant. And though the last mentioned Warrant, if any such there be, was not communicated to the said Drummond by the said Earl during her Majesty's Life, nor was the same countersigned nor entered in the Treasury, yet he the said Robert Earl of Ox- ford and Earl Mortimer, even after his said Corruption had been discovered in Parliament, did presume, without the Privity of the said Drummond, to send the said Warrant to the Commissioners of his Majesty's Treasury, desiring that the same might then have been entered in the Treasury; but the same was with great Honour and Justice refused to be so entered. By which most vile and scandalous Corruption, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer was guilty of the most notorious Breach of his Oath and Trust, as Lord High-Treasurer of Great Britain, of the highest Abuse of her Majesty's Goodness, and Embezzlement of her Treasure, and of the greatest Injustice and Oppression of other of her Majesty's Subjects.

A R T I C L E III.

That whereas by the established and known Laws of this Kingdom, the Allowances or Appointments for the Maintenance and Support of Ambassadors, Envoys, Plenipotentiaries, and other public Ministers of the Crown in foreign Courts, ought to be ascertained in due Form of Law, as well in Honour as in Justice to the Imperial Crown of these Realms: And whereas the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, in or about the Month of July or August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, sent Matthew Prior, Esq; an Instrument and Creature of his own, into France, for the carrying on his separate and dangerous Negotiations; and did afterwards in the Month of November, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, by his evil Counsels prevail on her late Majesty, without the Privity of, or any Communication with her Allies, to send the said Matthew Prior as her Majesty's Plenipotentiary to the French King, with Instructions to treat and conclude Matters of the highest Importance, relating to the general Negotiations of Peace: But the same was a treacherous and wicked Contrivance of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, for the more effectually carrying on and promoting his private, separate, and dangerous Practices with the Ministers of France, and the Enemies of her Majesty and her Kingdoms; he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer not regarding his Oath, or his high Trust, or the Laws of the Kingdom, did most corruptly and scandalously combine with the said Matthew Prior for the defrauding her Majesty of very great Sums, under the Colour of his said Employments in France; and to that End the said Earl did contrive that the said Matthew Prior should be sent into France, with the Character aforesaid, but without any settled Appointments or Allowances: But in the Stead and Lieu thereof, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did give the said Matthew Prior an unlimited Credit, and did promise to answer and pay such Bills as the said Prior should draw on him during his Residence in France; pursuant to which Contrivance and corrupt Agreement he the said Matthew Prior did, between the Twenty-seventh of August, in the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, New Stile, and the Tenth of July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, or thereabouts, at several times draw Bills of Exchange, to the Amount of Twelve Thousand Three Hundred and Sixty Pounds, or thereabouts, on him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, which he being then Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain, did advise and prevail upon her Majesty to sign Warrants for the Payment of, and did countersign the same, although the said Prior was no way intitled to any such Allowances by Reason of his said faid Employment, and the same greatly exceeded the Allowance even of an Ambassador of the Crown of Great Britain. And the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did, in the Years One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, and One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, without any Colour or Authority, but for the further promoting his corrupt and wicked Purposes, prevail on and advise her Majesty to sign Warrants, which were countersign'd by himself, for the Payment of the Sum of Five Thousand Five Hundred and Sixty Pounds, or thereabouts, to the Use of Thomas Harley, Esq; a near Relation and Emiffary of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, out of the Monies appropriated to the Use of her Majesty's Civil List: And did in like manner, at several Times in the Years aforesaid, most illegally, fraudulently, and corruptly issue, or direct, or advise the Direction and Payment of other large Sums of Money, to other Persons out of her Majesty's Treasury: By which most illegal and scandalous Management, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer has introduced a Practice highly prejudicial to, and utterly inconsistent with the Constitution of this Kingdom, and of the most pernicious Consequence, by opening a Way for the most dangerous Corruption; and was not only guilty of a notorious Breach of his Oath, but enter'd into the most base and scandalous Combination with the Persons above-mentioned, and others, under the Pretence and Colour of promoting her Majesty's Service, to defraud her Majesty of the Public Money, which he was entrusted with the Management of for the Support of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown.

ARTICLE IV.

That whereas the Revenues arising to the Crown from the hereditary Excise and Post-Office, or some Parts thereof, were, by vertue of Letters Patents of the late King James the Second, charged with and made liable to certain Annuities or yearly Sums, in Trust for, or to the Use of Mary, the Consort of the said King James the Second, but the said Revenues were afterwards, by several Acts of Parliament, granted and settled for the Support of the Royal Household, and of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown; or for other public Uses, without any saving or exception of the said Letters Patents. And whereas by an Act made in the Twelfth Year of her late Majesty's Reign, the Sum of Five hundred thousand Pounds was granted to her late Majesty for the Discharge of divers Arrears of Salaries, Diet-Monies, and other Allowances, and sundry Debts for Pre-emptions, Provisions and other Causes, which had been then incurr'd and grown due to her late Majesty's Servants, Tradesmen and others, and were occasion'd by several extraordinary Expences since the Act for the better Support of her Majesty's Household, and of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown. And the said Sum of Five hundred thousand Pounds was expressly appropriated to the Uses aforesaid, in Aid of the said Revenues or Branches which were appointed for the Support of her Majesty's Household, and of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown. And whereas by an Act made in the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Years of his late Majesty King William the Third, it was Enacted, that for preventing traitorous Correspondence between his Majesty's Subjects and the pretended Prince of Wales, or his Adherents, that if any of the Subjects of the Crown of England, from and after the first Day of March, One Thousand Seven hundred and One, should within this Realm, or without, hold, entertain, or keep any Intelligence or Correspondence in Person, or by Letters, Messages, or otherwise, with the said pretended Prince of Wales, or with any Person or Persons employed by him, knowing such Persons to be so employed, or should by Bills of Exchange, or otherwise, remit or pay any Sum or Sums of Money for the Use or Service of the said pretended Prince of Wales, knowing such Money to be for such Use or Service, such Person so offending being lawfully convicted, should be taken, deem'd, and adjudg'd to be guilty of High-Treason, and shall suffer and forfeit as in Cases of High-Treason. He the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer having, by the means of the said Matthew Prior, held a private and unlawful Correspondence with the said Consort of the late King James the Second, then residing in France, and being determin'd secretly to promote, as far as in him lay, the Interest of the Pretender, but yet contriving to avoid the said Penalty of High-Treason: And the said Consort of his late Majesty King James the Second having empower'd Abbot Gaultier (a Popish Priest, and busy Emiffary between Great Britain and France, during the said private and separate Negotiations of Peace, and who was particularly entrusted as the common Agent between the Ministers of Great Britain and France, in transacting the most secret Affairs relating to the Pretender) to concert with the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer the settling the Payment and Remittance of a very great yearly Sum out of her Majesty's Treasure into France, under colour and pretence of the said Letters Patents; and the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer having held frequent clandestine Conferences with the said Abbot Gaultier, on the Subject aforesaid, and having, by his evil Counsels, sacrificed to France the common Interests of Europe; and being resolv'd that the first Fruits of the Peace with France should be an Offering made, by his immediate Procurement, to the nearest and most avowed Adherent to the Pretender, tho' at the great Expence of the Honour and Safety of her Majesty and her People, did, soon after the Conclusion of the Peace with France, agree and undertake to procure the Payment of the yearly Sum of Forty seven thousand Pounds and upwards, to or to the Use of the said Consort, during her Life; and in execution of his said Purpose did afterwards, on or about the 23d of December, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, being then Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain, and of her Majesty's Privy Council, advise her late Majesty to sign a Warrant to himself, in the Words or to the Effect following, viz. Anne R. Whereas our late Royal Father King James the Second, by Letters Patents under his Great Seal, bearing date on or about the 28th Day of August, One Thousand Six Hundred and Eighty Five, did Grant unto Lawrence Earl of Rochester, Henry Earl of Peterborough, Sidney Lord Godolphin, Robert Worden, Esq; and Sir Edward Herbert, Kt. (who are all since deceas'd) divers Annuities, or yearly Sums, amounting to Thirty seven thousand three hundred and twenty eight Pounds, Thirteen Shillings and Seven Pence to hold to them and their Heirs, during the Life of his then Royal Consort Mary, now Queen Dowager, in Trust for her; and by other Letters Patents, bearing date on or about the 3d of December, One Thousand Six Hundred Eighty Six, did also grant unto the said Queen a farther Pension or yearly Sum of Ten Thousand Pounds to hold during her natural Life, all which were made payable in such a manner as in the said several Letters Patents is more fully exprest. Our Will and Pleasure now is, and we do hereby Direct, Authorize and Command, that you cause Payment to be made to the Heirs of such of the said Trustees as was the longest Liver of so much as since the 24th Day of March last, 1713, is incurred or grown due on the said Annuities or yearly Sums, amounting to Thirty seven thousand three hundred twenty eight Pounds, thirteen Shillings and Seven Pence, and to the said Queen Dowager or her Assigns, of so much as since the said 25th Day of March last, is incurred or grown due on the said Annuity of ten thousand Pounds, according to the purport of the several Grants, or Letters Patents above recited, as also of what shall hereafter become due and payable upon the said several Annuities Quarterly, during the Life of the said Queen Dowager; and for so doing, this shall be your Warrant. Given at our Court at Windsor-Castle, the twenty third Day of December, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, in the Twelfth Year of our Reign. And did afterwards, on or about the twenty fourth of December following, sign a Warrant to the Auditor of the Receipt of her Majesty's Exchequer, requiring him to make and pass Debentures for paying to such Person or Persons as is, are, or shall be authorized to receive the same, the Sum of nine thousand three hundred thirty two Pounds, three Shillings and four Pence three Farthings, for one Quarter, incurred upon the said several yearly Sums therein mentioned, from Lady-Day One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, to Midsummer following, and appointed the same to be satisfied out of the Sum of five hundred thousand Pounds, appropriated by an Act passed the then last Session of Parliament, for or towards Payment of such Debts and Arrears as were therein mentioned. And another Warrant to the said Auditor to make and pass Debentures for paying to the said Queen, or to her Treasurer or Receiver, the Sum of two thousand five hundred Pounds for one Quarter, incurr'd on the said Pension of ten thousand Pounds per Ann. from Lady-Day, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, to Midsummer then last past, and appointed the same to be satisfied out of the Sum of five hundred thousand Pounds, appropriated by an Act passed the then last Session of Parliament, for or towards Payment of such Debts and Arrears as were therein mentioned. And the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, on or about the twentieth of July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, being then Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain, and of her Majesty's Privy Council, having corruptly and deceitfully, in further Violation of his Oath, and his high Trust, advised her late Majesty to sign a Warrant, directing the Payment of one thousand Pound Sterling to Daniel Arthur, Esq; for Monies expended by him for her Majesty's special Service, and the same being accordingly issued and received by him the said Arthur out of her Majesty's Treasure, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer being then Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain, did give private Direction to the said Arthur to pay the said Sum of one thousand Pounds to the said Abbot Gualtier, or to his Use, pursuant to which Direction the said Arthur did pay or cause to be paid the said Sum of one thousand Pounds to the said Abbot Gualtier, or to his Use; whereby the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did most wickedly betray the Honour of her late Majesty, and the Imperial Crown of these Realms, in advising her, under Colour of the said Letters Patents, and without the Advice of her Council or her Parliament, to direct the issuing of the Revenue, provided by Parliament for the Support of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown, to the Use and Benefit of the open and avowed Adherent of the Pretender; and did not only defraud her Majesty of the said Sum of one thousand Pounds, but did most arbitrarily, illegally, and corruptly advise the Embezzlement and Misapplication of so much of the said Sum of five hundred thousand Pounds, in Contempt and Defiance of the express Appropriation of an Act of Parliament.

ARTICLE V.

That whereas by the antient and undoubted Laws of this Kingdom, no Person, being a natural born Subject of this Realm, or within any of the Dominions thereunto belonging, and having committed and being under the Guilt of High Treason, ought to be receiv'd within this Kingdom, as a public Minister, or with any Character from any Foreign Prince, State, or Potentate. And whereas some time in the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, one Patrick Lilesh, stiling himself, and commonly known by the Name of Sir Patrick Lawless, an Irish Papist (who had served with the late King James the Second in the War in Ireland, against his late Majesty King William the Third of ever glorious Memory, had follow'd the said King James into France, and continu'd in the most open and avowed manner in his Interests and Service, and in Rebellion against his said Majesty King William, and had bore high Commission against, and had been in open Arms against her late Majesty Queen Anne in the late War in Spain) did come into this Kingdom, and pretended to have and did take on himself the Character of a Minister sent from King Philip of Spain, to her late Majesty, to treat of Matters of the greatest Importance to the Honour and Safety of her Majesty and her Kingdoms; and having given notice of the same to Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, then Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain, and of her Majesty's Privy Council, and who then assumed to himself the supreme Direction in her Majesty's Councils; he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer was not only wanting in his Duty to her Majesty, in not advising her Majesty against receiving and admitting the said Lilesh aliàs Lawless in the Quality aforesaid, but did, together with other false and evil Counsellors, advise her Majesty to receive and admit him as a Minister from his said Catholic Majesty; and the said Earl did presume frequently too meet, confer and negotiate the most important Affairs of the Nation with the said Lilesh aliàs Lawless in the Quality aforesaid. And the better to conceal his said illegal and dangerous Measures from her said Majesty, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer was privy to, consenting, and advising that the said Lilesh aliàs Lawless should be introduced to her said Majesty, and should be received and treated by her Minister, under the false and disguised Name of Don Carlo Moro. And the House of Lords, some time in the Month of April, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, having notice of the said dangerous Attempt of the said Lilesh aliàs Lawless, on or about the Ninth of the said Month, made an humble Address to her Majesty, that she would be graciously pleased to issue her Royal Proclamation, commanding all proper Officers and Magistrates to make diligent Search for, and to apprehend prehend all Popish Priests, and to put the Laws in Execution against them; and likewise to enquire after and apprehend all such Persons as have serv'd in Arms against her Majesty, or their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary, and who were then within the Kingdom, contrary to Law, to the End that they might be brought to Justice. To which her Majesty was graciously pleas'd to return an Answer to the Effect following, viz. That she would give Orders pursuant thereto, and a Proclamation did accordingly issue. And on the said ninth Day of April, the House of Lords (having under their Consideration what further Security could be provided for strengthening the Protestant Succession in the House of Hanover) came to the following Resolution, viz. That no Person, being a Natural born Subject of Great Britain, or within any of the Dominions thereunto belonging, and who having traiterously serv'd against her Majesty, ought to be receiv'd as a public Minister, or with any Character within this Kingdom. Notwithstanding which, he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, having no regard to the Safety of her Majesty's Person, or to the Security of the Protestant Succession; and setting himself in utter Defiance not only of the said Advice and Resolution of the House of Lords, but of her Majesty's Assurances to that House of Parliament, and of her Royal Authority and Command, by her Proclamation under the Great Seal: Instead of doing what in him lay to have apprehended and brought, or causing the said Lilesh aliàs Lawless to be brought to Justice, did afterwards, on or about the Fifteenth Day of March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, most wickedly and traiterously advise her Majesty to sign a Warrant, directing the Payment of one thousand Pounds Sterling to Daniel Arthur, Esq; for special Services, which being accordingly issued and received by the said Arthur, he the said Earl did privately and corruptly direct the said Arthur to pay the same, and accordingly the said one thousand Pounds was paid to the Use of the said Lilesh aliàs Lawless: And the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did at other times, in a fictitious and scandalous manner, direct the Payment of other considerable Sums of Money, out of her Majesty's Treasure, to the said Lilesh aliàs Lawless, which were accordingly paid to him; altho' it was notorious, that the said Lilesh aliàs Lawless had not only traiterously serv'd in Arms against her Majesty, but had been the Minister or Agent of the Pretender at the Court of Madrid; and was under strong Suspicions of being sent into England, tho' under the Pretences aforesaid, secretly to promote the Interest of the Pretender in these Kingdoms. By all which corrupt and evil Counsels he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer did most basely and ungratefully expose the Person of her Sacred Majesty, did what in him lay to enervate and render ineffectual the Advice of Parliament, and her Majesty's most solemn Declarations, in a matter of the nearest Concern to her Majesty and Kingdoms, and by countenancing, in the most corrupt and scandalous manner, the secret Emissaries of the Pretender, did greatly encourage his open Adherents, to the apparent Danger of the Protestant Succession to the Imperial Crown of these Realms.

ARTICLE VI.

That whereas her late Majesty Queen Anne, after several unsuccessful Attempts, in Conjunction with her Allies, to establish his present Imperial Majesty on the Throne of Spain, being inform'd, that the People of Catalonia were inclin'd to cast off the Yoke impos'd upon them by the French, and to return to the Obedience of the House of Austria; and her Majesty being desirous to maintain and improve that good Disposition in them, and to induce them to put the same speedily in Execution, did send Milford Crow, Esq; to them, with necessary Powers and Instructions to carry on so great a Work, for the Advantage of her Service, and the Good of the Common Cause; and to that End to treat with the Catalans, or any other People of Spain, about their coming into the Interest of King Charles the Third, his present Imperial Majesty, and joining with her Majesty and her Allies against the Common Enemy; and her Majesty, after her gracious Assurances to assist them with Men and Money, was pleas'd to authorize her said Minister to give them her utmost Assurances, to procure the Establishment of all such Rights and Immunities as they had formerly enjoy'd under the House of Austria; and that for their further Satisfaction, she had sent for Powers from King Charles the Third, for confirming the same, and was willing to become Guarantee that it should be done: Nevertheless on this express Condition, that they should receive the said King Charles as lawful King of Spain, and utterly renounce the House of Bourbon. And, together with the said Instructions, her Majesty was pleas'd to sign and cause to be deliver'd to her said Minister, Credential Letters to the Nobility, Magistrates, and all other Officers Civil and Military of Catalonia, desiring them to depend on the Promises he should make them in her Name. And in her Majesty's Instructions to the Earl of Peterborow and Sir Cloudeſly Shovel, in or about the Month of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Five, they are ordered to use their utmost Endeavours to induce the Catalans to join with them in their Undertaking, and to assure them of her late Majesty's Support, and to promise them, in the Queen's Name, that she would secure them a Confirmation of their Rights and Privileges from the King of Spain, that they might be settled on a lasting Foundation to them and their Posterity. And in case Persuasions should not prevail, and the Catalans should not make a suitable Return to those kind Offers, they were ordered to annoy their Towns on the Coasts of Spain, and to reduce them by Force. And, in Conformity to these Instructions, a Manifesto, or Declaration was prepared, by the Privity and Advice of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, then one of her Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, and deliver'd to the said Earl of Peterborow, full, on the one Hand, of the Assurances aforementioned, and on the other hand, of Menaces to them, in case they declined her Majesty's Overtures, which Manifesto was afterwards published by him the said Earl of Peterborow in Catalonia: And whereas the Nobility, Clergy, and the whole Principality of Catalonia, and the Inhabitants of the Isle of Majorca, relying on the Faith of those Royal Assurances, did utterly abandon the House of Bourbon, and acknowledged King Charles the Third, his present Imperial Majesty, for their lawful Sovereign, and did join their Arms with those of her Majesty and her Allies, against the Duke of Anjou; and it having pleas'd Almighty God so far to bless her Majesty's pious and generous Undertaking, as by most signal Successes, in a short time, to deliver the Principality of Catalonia from the heavy Yoke of French Bondage; and great Supplies having been granted by Parliament, for the reducing the whole Kingdom of Spain to the

Obedience of the House of Austria; the Arms of her Majesty and her Allies were attended with vast Successes, having twice entered the Capital City of that Kingdom, and obtained many other signal Conquests, to the great Advantage of the Common Cause: And thro' the whole Progress thereof, the Bravery and Firmness of the Catalans being always remarkable, thereby, as well as from the repeated Assurances given to them from time to time, in her Majesty's Name, by every General and Minister sent from Great Britain to Spain, the Hearts of that brave People were united under the strongest Tyes of Affection and Gratitude to her Majesty; and they were justly held in the strictest Dependence on the continuance of her Royal Protection; he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, being an Enemy to the Common Liberty of Europe, and having traiterously enter'd into Conspiracies for subjecting the whole Spanish Monarchy to the House of Bourbon, and designing most maliciously the utter Ruin and Destruction of the antient Rights, Liberties and Privileges of the Catalans, who had made so glorious a Stand for the Preservation of them, did, together with other false and evil Counsellors, form a most dishonourable, wicked, and cruel Contrivance, not only for abandoning the Catalans to the Fury and Revenge of the Duke of Anjou and his Adherents, but for the final Extirpation of all their Rights, Liberties, and Privileges. And in Execution of that his Intention, during the private, separate, and pernicious Negotiation of Peace, which was carry'd on between him and the Ministers of France, and before any Negotiation of Peace was set on Foot, in due Form of Law, between the Crowns of Great Britain and Spain, did advise her Majesty to give Directions to the Lord Lexington, her Ambassador to the Court of Spain, to acknowledge the Duke of Anjou King of Spain, but was greatly wanting in his Duty to her Majesty, in not advising her to give Instructions to her said Minister, at the same time peremptorily and absolutely to insist on the securing the Catalans Liberties at the Conclusion of the Peace. And altho' the private, separate and treacherous Practices of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and others, in Combination with the Ministers of France, did afterwards, on or about the Fourteenth of March One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, necessitate his present Imperial Majesty to conclude a Treaty for the evacuating Catalonia, (whereof her Majesty was Guarantee) without any express and positive Stipulation for the Catalans Liberties, (his Imperial Majesty relying, in that respect, on her Majesty's Declaration, to interpose for them in the most effectual manner, and on the Promises of the French King to join his Endeavours for the same Purpose.) And altho' her sacred Majesty did, both before and after, frequently declare by her Ministers in Spain, that she thought herself under the strongest Tyes of Honour and Conscience, not to abandon a People whom the Necessities of the War had obliged her to draw into her Interest. And tho' the French King did not join his Endeavours for the Purposes aforesaid; he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, together with other false and wicked Counsellors, having from time to time amused and deceived the distress'd Catalans, with groundless Hopes of her Majesty's effectual Interpositions in their Favour, thereby engaging them in a more obstinate Defence of their Territories against the Duke of Anjou, was not only highly wanting in his Duty to her Majesty, by not doing what in him lay, as a faithful Minister, to have prevented the Conclusion of the Treaty of Peace with Spain, till just and honourable Conditions were secured for the Catalans, but did falsely, maliciously, and treacherously advise her Majesty to conclude a Peace with the King of Spain, without any Security for the antient and just Rights, Liberties and Privileges of that brave, but unhappy Nation. And did further advise her Majesty to send Sir James Wisbart, her Admiral, with a large Squadron of Men of War, at a great Expence, to favour the said King of Spain in the Siege of Barcelona, the Capital City of Catalonia, and with express Instructions, that in case the Inhabitants of Majorca should refuse the Terms that should be offer'd them by the Duke of Anjou, to employ his Squadron, in countenancing and assisting all Attempts that should be made, for reducing them to a due Obedience. By which most vile and detestable Counsels, her sacred Majesty, contrary to her most pious Intentions, the Faith of Nations, and the Duties of Religion, and Humanity it self, and contrary to her solemn and repeated Assurances, was prevailed on to abandon a distressed People, drawn in, and engaged by her own Invitation, into an open War with the Duke of Anjou, for the Preservation of the Liberties of Europe, and the Commerce of Great Britain. And the Persons, Estates, Dignities, Rights, Liberties and Privileges of the Catalans were given up as a Sacrifice to the implacable Resentment of their enraged and powerful Enemy; and the Honour of the British Nation, always renown'd for the Love of Liberty, and for giving Protection to the Asserters of it, was most basely prostituted; and a free and generous People, the faithful and useful Allies of this Kingdom, were betray'd, in the most unparallel'd manner, into irrevocable Slavery: And, in Consequence of which most dishonourable and perfidious Councils, the most execrable Hostilities, Burnings and Plunderings were committed upon them, throughout their whole Province, without sparing the Effusion of innocent Blood, and without the Distinction of Age or Sex; and that unfortunate People were afterwards forc'd to undergo the utmost Miseries of a Siege in their Capital City of Barcelona; during which great Multitudes of them perished by Famine and the Sword, many of them have since been executed: And great Numbers of the Nobility of Catalonia, who were for their Constancy and Bravery, in Defence of their Liberties, and for their Services in Conjunction with her Majesty and her Allies, had, in all Honour, Justice and Conscience, the highest Claim to her Majesty's Protection, are now dispersed in Dungeons, throughout the Spanish Dominions; and not only the Catalan Liberties extirpated, but by those wicked Counsels of him the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, Catalonia it self is almost become desolate.

All which Crimes and Misdemeanours were committed and done by him the said Earl against our late Sovereign Lady the Queen, her Crown and Dignity, the Peace and Interest of this Kingdom, and in Breach of the several Trusts reposed in him the said Earl.

And he the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer was either Commissioner of the Treasury, or Lord High Treasurer of Great Britain, and one of her Majesty's Privy Council, during the time that all and every the Crimes before set forth were done and committed.

For which Matters and Things, the Knights, Citizens and Burgeses of the House of Commons in in Parliament assembled, do, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, further impeach the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer of other High Crimes and Misdemeanours in the said Articles contained. And the said Commons by Protestation, saving to themselves the Liberty of exhibiting at any time hereafter any other Accusations or Impeachments against the said Earl, and also of replying to the Answers which the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer shall make to the Premises, or any of them, or to any Impeachment or Accusation that shall be by them exhibited, according to the Course and Proceedings of Parliament, do pray, that the said Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer be put to answer all and every the Premises; and that such Proceedings, Examinations, Trials and Judgments may be upon them, and every of them had and used, as shall be agreeable to Law and Justice.

L. H. Steward. Read the Answer to the Impeachment.

The Clerk reads the Answer.

The ANSWER of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, to the Articles exhibited by the Knights, Citizens and Burgesses in Parliament assembled, in the Name of Themselves, and of all the Commons of Great-Britain, in Maintainance of their Impeachment against him for High-Treason, and other High-Crimes and Misdemeanours, supposed to have been by him committed.

THE said Earl, saving to himself all Advantages of Exception to the said Articles, and of not being prejudiced by any Words, or want of Form in this his Answer; and also saving to himself all Rights and Privileges belonging to him as one of the Peers of this Realm, for Answer to the said Articles saith: He admits many solemn Treaties and Alliances have been formerly entered into, between the Crown of England, and other Princes and Potentates of Europe, for their mutual Security, and to prevent the immoderate Growth of the Power of France, which might prove dangerous to the neighbouring Princes and States; and that therefore it was laid down as a fundamental Principle and Maxim of Union amongst the Allies, That France and Spain should never come and be united under the same Government, and that one and the same Person should not be King of both those Kingdoms; and he apprehends, that the principal View and Aim of the Allies was to settle and maintain an equal Ballance of Power in Europe; and, since the Conjunction of Spain to the Dominions of France might possibly ensue from the Duke of Anjou's being possessed of that Crown, the dispossessing him was desir'd, as the most likely Means to prevent that Conjunction; and for the same Reason the Union of Spain with the Empire must have been equally fatal, and the Prevention of it equally the Design of the Alliance; nor could the Continuance of Spain in the House of Bourbon be in any Respect prejudicial to the Allies, if the Union of that Crown with France could be prevented. As new Dangers of such Union have been apprehended, new Treaties and Stipulations have been entered into among the Allies, to obviate such Dangers, and particularly the Treaty for an intended Partition seems to have been concluded upon that View; and though he acknowledges the Wisdom of Parliament in condemning that Treaty, as prejudicial and fatal in its Consequences to England, and the Peace of Europe, yet, he presumes, it was not condemn'd, because Part of the Dominions of the Crown of Spain were thereby allotted to the House of Bourbon; but because such considerable Parts of those Dominions, as the Kingdoms of Naples and Sicily, the Province of Guipuzcoa and other Territories were allotted to that Branch of the House of Bourbon, to whom the Crown of France was to descend, which might have been a great and dangerous Addition to the then formidable Strength of that Crown; and because it was made against the repeated Remonstrances of Charles the Second, then King of Spain, who declared by his Ambassador, That such Partition-Treaty could have no other Effect, than to force Spain to throw itself into the Arms of France, to prevent the dismembring of the Spanish Monarchy. And, that it had this Consequence, appear'd upon the Death of that Prince, who seems to have been induced by that Consideration to bequeath the entire Monarch of Spain to the Duke of Anjou, a younger Branch of the House of Bourbon; who accordingly, upon the Demise of the said King Charles the Second, took Possession of the Monarchy of Spain. But this Accession of the Duke of Anjou to the Crown of Spain did not produce the Alliance, in the Article mentioned, between Leopold, then Emperor of Germany, his late Majesty, King William the Third of ever-glorious Memory, and the States-General, as immediately necessary at that Juncture: For King William, as well as the States-General, acknowledged the Duke of Anjou as King of Spain; thereby allowing, that the Duke of Anjou's Enjoyment of the Monarchy of Spain, while he was but a younger Branch of the House of Bourbon, was not destructive of the Liberties of Europe, or the Preservation of a due Ballance of Power. And afterwards, when the French King had seiz'd the Spanish Netherlands, King William, by Advice of Parliament, came into the Assistance of the States, as an Auxiliary only, by sending, upon their Request, Ten Thousand Men, which England was obliged by Treaties to furnish, in Case the States were attacked; after which, many Conferences passed at the Hague betwixt the Ministers of England and the States, and those of France, in order to find out some Expedient, by which, upon a reasonable Division of the Dominions of Spain, a new War might be prevented; and the States, in the Course of those Conferences, often asserted, That, though they had acknowledged Philip King of Spain, yet such an Acknowledgement was not contrary to the Demand of a reasonable Satisfaction to be given to the Emperor for his Pretensions to the Spanish Succession; which was, in Effect, to declare, that the Satisfaction demanded for the Emperor was such, as would leave King Philip in Possession of Spain. But those Conferences broke off, about August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and One, without Effect; and in September following, King William entered into the Grand Alliance with the Emperor, and the States-General; whereby it was agreed, That, in the first Place, Endeavours should be used by amicable Means to obtain the Satisfaction desired for the Emperor, who probably, at that Time, would have accepted a very easy Composition for his Pretensions: But when the French King acknowledged the Pretender as King of England (which not long after happened) his Majesty King William, and the Parliament of England, justly provoked by this Affront, resolv'd to enter into the War which had been begun by the Emperor alone, in Italy, the Year before; and the late Queen mentions this Indignity, as the chief chief Motive of her engaging in it, as appears by her Declaration of War against France and Spain in May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Two. The said Earl admits the several Treaties set forth in the Preamble to the said Articles, and that such Advice was given by Parliament, and such Speeches were made from the Throne, as in the said Preamble are mentioned; but, for more Certainty, begs leave to refer himself to the very Treaties, Addresses of Parliament, and Speeches, when they shall be produced: And he humbly hopes, your Lordships will allow him to observe, that those Treaties manifestly shew, that the Design of the Allies, in endeavouring the Recovery of Spain from the House of Bourbon, was to prevent the Union of those two Potent Kingdoms in one and the same Person. In the Grand Alliance in One Thousand Seven Hundred and One, the avow'd Ends are, the procuring an equitable and reasonable Satisfaction to his Imperial Majesty for his Pretensions to the Spanish Succession, the Security of the Dominions of the King of Great Britain, and States-General, with the Navigation and Commerce of their Subjects, and the preventing the Union of France and Spain under the same Government. And the Territories and Provinces, pointed out in the Fifth Article, were the farthest Views of that Alliance; whereby it was thought, his Imperial Majesty would receive the utmost Satisfaction, which he could reasonably demand, for his Pretension to the Spanish Succession. No mention is made of the Recovery of the whole Monarchy of Spain to the House of Austria, either in the Grand Alliance, or in the Defensive one made the same Year between his Majesty King William and the States-General: And when, in the Treaty between the Emperor, the Queen of Great Britain, and the States-General, on the one Part, and the King of Portugal on the other, about May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Three, it was concerted to place Archduke Charles the present Emperor, upon the Throne of Spain, he was then but a younger Branch of the House of Austria; and there is great Reason to believe that the Queen, as well as other Princes of Europe, and, in particular, the King of Portugal, did not think a Treaty to procure the Crown of Spain for the Arch-duke, when a younger Branch of the House of Austria, did lay an Obligation of procuring that Monarchy for him, when he became first of that House, and was elected Emperor; since the Imperial and Hereditary Dominions, join'd to the whole Spanish Monarchy, would have given such an Excess of Power to one Prince, as would have been formidable to Europe, and a Means to destroy that Ballance of Power which her Majesty in all her Treaties, had constantly labour'd to preserve: And it is a known and an allow'd Rule by the Law of Nations, in Reference to Leagues between Princes, that if there happens a material Change in what was the principal Ground and Cause of the Treaty, the Obligation thereof ceases. If therefore, in the Preliminary Articles in One Thousand Seven Hundred and Nine, and afterwards in the Conferences at Gertruydenberg, a Cession of the Spanish Monarchy to King Charles the Third, who was then younger Brother to the Emperor, was thought reasonable to be insisted on; yet the said Earl humbly submits to your Lordships great Judgment, whether there was equal Reason for insisting on such Cession, when King Charles the Third was become Head of that House, and had Possession of the Empire and all the hereditary Countries of Austria, as a Condition, without which no Peace should be made. The States-General were so far from admitting, or yielding that the Monarchy of Spain should in all Events be given to the House of Austria, that he, the said Earl, hath heard, they refus'd to admit it to be inserted as a Condition of their Barrier-Treaty, when propos'd by her Majesty's Ambassador at the Hague, and chose rather to put a Stop to the Proceedings of that Treaty, and hazard the Advantages they thereby expected, than comply with that Proposal. The Advice of Parliament is of great Weight, to which her late Majesty always gave, and he the said Earl always paid, a just Regard; and he doubts not but the House of Peers had proper Inducements when they gave their Advice to the Throne, That no Peace could be safe, honourable, or lasting, so long as the Kingdom of Spain and the West-Indies continued in the Possession of any Branch of the House of Bourbon. But, if he may be permitted to offer his humble Conjecture concerning the Motives of that Advice, he conceiveth it might proceed from an Apprehension of a future Union of those two Crowns as likely to ensue, in Case Spain should continue in the Possession of any who might become Heir to the Crown of France, and that even the Conjunction of the Empire and Spain would be less dangerous than such a Union. But when her Majesty communicated to her Parliament, the Sixth of June One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, the Terms upon which a Peace might be made, and thereby inform'd them, That France had been brought to offer, that the Duke of Anjou should, for himself and his Descendants, renounce for ever all Claim to the Crown of France; and at the same time the Succession of the Crown of France was to be declared, after the Death of the then Dauphin and his Sons, to be in the Duke of Berry and his Sons, in the Duke of Orleans and his Sons, and so on to the rest of the House of Bourbon; and that the Succession to Spain and the West-Indies, after the Duke of Anjou and his Children, was to descend to such a Prince as should be agreed upon at a Treaty of Peace, for ever excluding the rest of the House of Bourbon; both Houses of Parliament, by their respective Addresses to her Majesty, in the same Month, expressed their entire Satisfaction: And as the House of Commons desired her Majesty to proceed in the Negotiations then depending for obtaining a speedy Peace; so that the House of Lords assured her Majesty, That they entirely relied on her Majesty's Wisdom to finish that great and good Work. And after her Majesty had concluded a Peace on those Terms, both Houses of Parliament severally congratulated her Majesty on the Conclusion of the Peace; and also join'd in an Address of the Twenty-second of April, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, expressing their just Sense of her Majesty's Goodness to her People in delivering them by a safe, honourable, and advantageous Peace with France and Spain, from the heavy Burthen of a consuming Land-War, unequally carried on, and become at last impracticable. He the said Earl acknowledg'es, that her Majesty was pleas'd about August, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Ten, to re-admit him, among others, to a Place in her Council, and to require his Service in Offices of Trust; to which he submitted purely in Obedience to her Majesty's Commands, with great Reluctance from the Prospect of the Difficulties with which he was likely to struggle. But as he never ask'd any Employment, nor us'd any wicked Arts, or base Insinuations, to obtain the same from her her Majesty; so in all Employments, with which her Majesty was pleased to honour him, he sincerely endeavoured to discharge his Duty with the utmost Integrity, having always, with the truest Zeal, desired and endeavoured, as far as he could, to promote the Honour and Service of her Majesty, whose Aim he knew to be the Welfare of her Kingdoms, in the first Place, and as far as she judg'd it consistent with that, the common Good of her Allies. In or about the Month of September, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Ten, her Majesty (whose undoubted Prerogative it was) thought fit to dissolve the Parliament then in being, and to call a new One. In the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, Propositions were made by France to her Majesty for a Peace, without the Contrivance or previous Knowledge of the said Earl: Her Majesty, out of her Affection for her People, having it much at her Heart to establish Peace in her own Days, expressed her Concern for the Disappointment of former Negotiations, and her earnest Desire to put a speedy End to the War, and to ease her Subjects from the heavy Burthen of their Taxes. The said Earl doth acknowledge, that he thought a Peace was very much for the Interest and Advantage of Great Britain: And, in his humble Opinion, the most favourable Juncture for obtaining advantageous Terms of Peace, was immediately after the signal Victories gained by her Majesty's Arms, in the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Six. For, after the Reduction of the Dominions of the Electors of Bavaria and Cologne, with other important Conquests in Germany; after the entire Destruction of Three great Armies of France, in Flanders, Spain, and Piedmont; after the Allies had recovered the Spanish Netherlands, Milan, and other Territories in Italy; it might have been hoped, from the great Distress in which the Enemy then was, a just and reasonable Peace would have been obtained; since so much was at that Time gained from the Enemy, and so much more in all Probability would have been yielded by them, as would have fully answered the Ends of the Grand Alliance. Peace was at that time sought by the Enemy; and the said Earl, who had the Honour to be one of the Principal Secretaries of State, owns he then advised the accepting of it. And he humbly begs leave to observe, that the War had been continued upon so unequal a Foot, that the Burthen of it annually encreased, and, at the Time when these Proposals were made by France, was become almost insupportable. It had indeed been stipulated by the Grand Alliance, that the Allies should insist one another with all their Forces, according to a Specification to be agreed on in a particular Convention for that Purpose: But it doth not appear any such Convention was made, otherwise than as the House of Commons were inform'd by one of the Principal Secretaries of State to his late Majesty King William, that by the Proportions adjusted with the States, England was to furnish two Parts of five by Land, and the States the other three; and England was to furnish five Parts of Eight by Sea, and the States the other three: But the States not always allowing themselves to be under an Obligation to furnish such Proportions, gave Occasion to England's bearing an unequal Part in the War, with respect to the Allies. The States had that prudent Regard to the frugal ordering of their Affairs, that they frequently insisted they ought not to be pressed beyond their Ability, and made themselves the sole Judges of what came within the Compass of it, and by that means avoided the supplying any Quota, or Proportion, which they thought improper for them to furnish. In the mean time the Charge of the War was greatly increased upon the Subjects of Great Britain: In the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Two, it was under Four Millions; from thence it gradually increased till the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Six, the Charge of which Year amounted to above Five Millions and an Half; and still advancing, till the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, it was then grown to near Seven Millions; and, at the same time, there was a Debt contracted, not provided for by Parliament, amounting to Seven or Eight Millions; the very Interest of which, and other Debts, wherein the Nation was involved, amounted to Three Millions per Annum; and the Revenues of Great Britain were under such Anticipations, that it was found difficult to raise above Two Millions and an Half for the growing Service, to be paid within the Compass of the Year. So that, when the Duties and Difficulties upon Trade, and the Continuance of the Taxes upon Land, which had lain so heavy above Twenty Years, are consider'd, the said Earl believes it could not be thought for the public Interest to prolong the War, without an absolute Necessity. During this Time the States had managed with so good Oeconomy, that the said Earl hath not heard of any additional Duty laid by them upon Trade, from the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Two, to the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven. And what Acquisitions were made upon the Continent, during the Continuance of the War; tho' at the Expence of British Blood and Treasure, accrued to the Share of the Allies; and the Dutch, being under no Prohibition of Commerce with France, had a further Advantage of the British Merchants, in respect to a free Trade. Altho' the Princes of the Empire were engag'd by previous Treaties to furnish their Quota's to the common Cause, yet when they were often pressed to do it, they alledg'd in Excuse, That those Troops which they were obliged to furnish at their own Expence, were in the Pay of the Crown of Great Britain. The Emperor left it to her Majesty to provide for those Troops, which by the Portugal Treaty, in the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Three, he was to furnish. The King of Portugal not only neglected the Proportion of Twelve Thousand Foot and Three Thousand Horse, which by the said Treaty he was to provide at his own Expence, but even refused to permit the Eleven Thousand Foot and Two Thousand Horse, for which he had a Subsidy from her Majesty, to be paid by Musters, according to an Article of that Treaty; and, when pressed to furnish his full Number of Troops, alledged his Inability, for want of that Part of the Subsidies which the States ought to have paid him: So that almost the whole Charge of the War in Spain was left upon her Majesty; the States having sent few or no Troops thither, after the Battle of Almanza; and all the other Allies being likewise defective in their Proportions. This was the Condition of Affairs, with respect to the Charge of the War; nor did there appear, from the then Situation of Affairs, any more promising Prospect, with regard to the Event: For, although it had pleased God to bless her Majesty's Arms with wonderful Success, at which the said Earl, most sincerely rejoic'd, yet it did not appear, that after the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Six, our Successes in other Parts had countervailed our Losses in Spain; for after two great Battles, wherein we had been there defeated, after our Forces had been twice obliged to retire from Madrid, and after the taking the British Troops at Brihuega, the Recovery of Spain, (which was the main Article that retarded the Conclusion of the Peace at Gertruydenberg) seemed almost desperate, especially since the French in the Year 1711, by their plentiful Vintages and Harvests, had well nigh recovered the Effects of the Famine; and since some of the Allies at the same time made pressing Instances for recalling part of their Troops, as they had done frequently during the course of the War; from whence it appears how just the Grounds were, upon which both Houses of Parliament represented to her Majesty, That the War had been unequally carried on, and was at last become impracticable. And the said Earl humbly hopes, he shall not be thought to have designed any Disservice to his Country, if, in such a Condition of Affairs, he did not dissuade her Majesty from hearkening to the Overtures of Peace made to her from France; or if, during the Negotiations, he endeavoured, by Corresponding, with her Majesty's Knowledge and Approbation, in any Courts concern'd therein, to rectify any Mistakes, or contribute in any Measure towards the Conclusion of a general Peace. But the said Earl believes, that, in all the Negotiations towards such Peace, the Allies had such Knowledge and Communication of all Measures therein taken by her Majesty, as the Treaties her Majesty was engaged in required: That the Propositions transmitted from France about April 1711, were immediately communicated to the Pensionary and Ministers of Holland: That her Majesty did at the same time, assure them of her Resolution to act in Concert with them, in making Peace as in making War. That when the States had expressed their Desires to be equal with those of Great Britain for a general and lasting Peace, and had declared, that they were ready to join in proper Measures to procure it, and desired France might explain itself more particularly upon the Points contain'd in those Propositions; her Majesty endeavour'd to obtain such Explanations, and afterwards communicated them to the States: And if her Majesty thought it not expedient to proceed in the Method of a Preliminary Treaty, which had prov'd so ineffectual in the Year 1709 and 1710, but thought it might be sufficient, upon Articles sign'd by a Minister of France, by his Sovereign's Command, to open Conferences for a Peace; the said Earl humbly hopes, that this Proceeding will appear to be so far from being an unreasonable Deviation from the Methods of former Transactions in that kind, that it will be justified by many Precedents of such Treaties. The said Earl can affirm, that, during the whole Negotiation, so far as he was concerned, he acted with a sincere Intention to obtain a general Peace for the Welfare and Honour of her Majesty and her Kingdoms, and such as might give reasonable Satisfaction to her Allies, and answer all the Obligations her Majesty was under, by any Treaties with any of the Confederates; and is not conscious to himself that he hath, in any respect, transgressed that Duty, which, as a Privy Counsellor, or Officer of State, he did owe to her Majesty, or to the Public. He is not insensible that many of the Articles, wherewith he stands charged, are complicated with such Circumstances, Aggravations and Inferences, as may render it difficult for him to acknowledge some Facts alledged, without acknowledging, or seeming at least to acknowledge those Circumstances or Inferences. And, as he is not conscious to himself of being guilty of any Crime he stands charged with, so he takes it to be agreeable to the common Course of Proceedings of this Nature, and to your Lordships Justice, that he should not admit any Circumstances which may tend to the Accusation of himself. He therefore begs leave that he may be allowed to distinguish between the Acts themselves, and the Inferences drawn from them; and that wherever he acknowledges any Fact, he may not be understood to acknowledge those Consequences which are in the Articles deduced from it, unless it shall appear that that Consequence was the Aim and Design of the said Earl, or is the necessary Result of any Act he hath done.

In answer to the First Article, the said Earl saith, that he always had the greatest Regard to the Honour and Safety of her late Majesty and her Kingdoms, to all the Engagements she was under to the Allies of this Nation, and to the common Liberties of Europe, that he never was devoted to the Interest or Service of the French King; that he is not conscious to himself of having acted, whilst he had the Honour to be her late Majesty's High Treasurer, or one of her most Honourable Privy Council, contrary to his Oath, or in Violation of his Duty, and Trust, or with Disregard to, much less Defiance of any Treaties in the said Article mentioned, the Advices of Parliament, her Majesty's Declarations from the Throne, or any mutual Assurances which had been made or renewed between her Majesty and the States to act in perfect Concert with each other in making Peace as in making War: And he utterly denies, that in or about the Months of July or August One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, or at any other Time, he did form any Contrivance or Confederacy to set on Foot a private, separate, dishonourable or destructive Negotiation of Peace between Great Britain and France; nor doth he know of any such Contrivance or Confederacy formed by any of her Majesty's Privy Council, or that such Negotiation was at any time set on Foot. But the said Earl saith, he doth believe, that about the Month of April One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, her late Majesty did receive from France some Proposals, in order to set on Foot a Treaty for a general Peace, signed by Monsieur de Torcy, Secretary of State to the most Christian King, which, as he believes, were immediately communicated by her Ambassador in Holland to the States-General: Whereupon, as he has been informed, they thanked her Majesty for her Confidence in them, declared themselves to be weary of the War, and ready to join in any Measures her Majesty should think proper for obtaining a good Peace, and that they hoped her Majesty would bring the French to explain more particularly the several Points contained in the above-mentioned Proposals, or to that Effect; and that after such Request her Majesty sent Matthew Prior, Esq; to the Court of France, in order to obtain as full and ample an Explanation as he could of the first general Offers: But the said Earl denies that he did advise her Majesty to send the said Mr. Prior to the Court of France, to make Propositions of Peace, without communicating the same to her Allies; or that the said Mr. Prior did, by his Advice or Privity, communicate any Propositions to the Ministers of France, wherein the Interests of Great Britain, or the common Interest of Europe were betray'd; nor doth the said Earl know, that the said Mr. Prior had any Power to communicate Propositions to the Ministers of France, which betray'd either the Interests of Great Britain, or the common Interest of Europe. Therefore the said Earl insists, that there is no Ground to charge him with the treacherous or pernicious Contrivances in this Article mentioned. And if any Article was inserted in any Propositions to be communicated by the said Mr. Prior, that the Secret should be inviolably kept till allowed to be divulged by the mutual Consent of both Parties; yet the said Earl denies that such Article was inserted by his Advice; and if any such there was, he cannot however believe it was designed to exclude her Majesty's Allies from their just Share in the said Negotiations, and hopes he may be allowed to observe, that in case any Instructions were given for not divulging Propositions which concerned Great Britain in particular, the same were far from manifesting such Design as is before-mentioned, since it is well known to be the undoubted Right of every Member of a Confederacy to demand particular Advantages for themselves, not inconsistent with their Alliances, and which are not to take place but on the Conclusion of a General Peace: And it has been usual for those to whom the first Overtures of Peace are made, to make Demands for themselves in the first place; as the States particularly did in the Negotiations at the Hague in the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Nine, and at Gertruydenberg in the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Ten. And though he apprehends that an Agreement not to divulge the Propositions without the mutual Consent of both Parties, could not be to the Prejudice of the Allies; yet he believes, that in order to prevent any unreasonable Jealousies among them, even those Propositions which related to Great Britain in particular, were communicated to them; and that it will likewise appear, that the Propositions signed by Monsieur de Torcy, and transmitted in the Month of April One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, in the said Articles mentioned, whereby it is said, the French King offered to treat with the Plenipotentiaries of England or Holland alone, or jointly with those of the Allies, at the Choice of England, were Proposals relating only to the manner of Treating, when the Conferences should be opened; and that her Majesty was so far from taking upon her to treat singly for the Allies, that she chose to have all the Parties admitted to the Congress, where they might have an Opportunity of treating and adjusting their respective Interests; that being, in her Opinion, the fairest Method of proceeding, most advantageous to the Confederates, and most likely to prevent Jealousies and Discords among them. And the said Earl saith, that he doth not know that any Negotiation of Peace was contriv'd or set on Foot by any Persons employ'd in her Majesty's Service, which was in any respect more advantageous to France than France had asked, or which had a Tendency to give the Enemy a Power to create Misunderstandings between her Majesty and her Allies, or to destroy the Confidence between them.

by

In answer to the Second Article, the said Earl saith, that he believes Monsieur Mefnager, a Subject of the French King, did some time in the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, with her Majesty's leave, come into the Kingdom of Great Britain, and bring with him a Letter from the said French King to her late Majesty, acknowledging her Majesty Queen of Great Britain, and likewise expressing a Desire to re-establish Peace with her, and that he was furnished with full Powers from the said French King for that Purpose. The said Earl further saith, that it hath been the usual and allowed Practice in most Nations, especially in England, for Privy Counsellors by verbal Orders from the Sovereign to confer within the Realm with Ministers of foreign Princes, and he conceives such Practice to be agreeable to the Laws of this Realm: And that full Powers are usually granted to Ministers who are sent abroad for the Justification of Persons with whom they shall treat, rather than to justify such Ministers themselves. And the said Earl denies, that he did in the Month of September One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, or at any other time, secretly and unlawfully, or without Authority, confer or treat with the said Sieur Mefnager on the Negotiations of Peace between Great Britain and France, or that he did advise or promote the making a private and separate Treaty or Agreement between the said Crowns: But he hath been informed, and doth believe, that there was a Paper stiled, The Answer of France to the Preliminary Demands of Great Britain more particularly, signed by Monsieur Mefnager only, to which was subjoined a Declaration of the Queen's Acceptance of those Preliminary Articles, as Conditions his most Christian Majesty consented to grant, which were to be reduced into the usual Form of Treaties, and explained after the most clear and most intelligible manner, to the common Satisfaction of Great Britain and France, and this only in case of a general Peace: And this Declaration, or some other Declaration to the like Effect, he believes might be signed by the Lord Dartmouth and Mr. Secretary St. John, as in the said Article is set forth. But the said Earl must crave leave to submit it to the Judgment of your Lordships, whether a Paper of that sort (if any such there was) containing Offers from France, which were not to take effect but in case of a general Peace, can be called a separate Treaty. He believes the Allies had early Knowledge and Participation of the said Proposals from the Ministers of Great Britain; but denies that the Interests of Great Britain were thereby given up to France, or the Duke of Anjou admitted to be King of Spain; since in the Declaration annexed to the said Proposals he believes it is expressed, that her Majesty might in Justice expect the Securities and Advantages mentioned in those Proposals, what Prince soever he should be to whom the Monarchy of Spain should be allotted; and the said Earl, recollecting as well as he can what were her Majesty's Views at that time, is persuaded that her Majesty had then a Prospect, that the Monarchy of Spain would fall to the Share of another Prince. The said Earl denies, that by his Privity, Consent, or Advice, any private or separate Treaty or Agreement, whereby the Interests of Great Britain were given up to France, or the Duke of Anjou was admitted to be King of Spain, was agreed, concluded, and signed by the Sieur Mefnager on the part of France, and by the Lord Dartmouth and Henry St. John, or either either of them, in Behalf of her late Majesty; much less did the said Earl, at any Time, assume to himself Regal Power, or take upon him to meet and treat with the Enemy without Authority from her Majesty, or do any thing to subvert the ancient and established Constitution of the Government of these Kingdoms, or introduce any illegal or dangerous Methods of transacting the Affairs of State. And the said Earl further saith, that he did never aim at, or endeavour by any separate Treaty to dissolve or cancel any of those solemn Treaties, in which her Majesty stood engaged to her Allies, nor was he privy to any Treaty, whereby the Queen was brought under a Dilemma, either to submit to the Dictates of France in the Progress of this Negotiation, or to lose the Confidence of her Allies.

In answer to the Third Article, the said Earl denies, that to disguise, or carry an any private, separate, or dangerous Negotiations, he did contrive or advise the preparing and forming the Set of General Preliminaries in the Article mentioned, intitled, Preliminary Articles on the Part of France, to come to a general Peace; or any other Set of general Preliminaries of like Nature; or that the same should be signed by the Sieur Mesnager; or that he did advise her sacred Majesty, that the same should be received by her Majesty: But the said Earl hath been informed, that certain Articles, called Preliminary Articles on the Part of France, to come to a general Peace, signed by the Sieur Mesnager only, were received by her Majesty, and believes the same might be communicated to the Ministers of the Allies then residing in England, as a Ground whereon the Confederates might treat or negotiate concerning a general Peace; but whether the same were communicated as the only Transactions that had been on that Subject, between Great Britain and France, the said Earl knows not: But since it is termed impious Advice, and contrary to the Duty and Trust of a Minister of State of Great Britain, to advise the receiving such Articles; the said Earl, from his Concern for the Honour of her late Majesty's Administration, and the future Welfare of these Kingdoms, doth submit, Whether it is criminal for such Minister to advise the receiving Articles from a Minister of a Prince in War, containing Proposals for giving reasonable Satisfaction to Great Britain and all her Allies, and which being signed by the Minister of that Prince only, were not intended to bind any other. And since Preliminary Articles are no essential Step towards a general Negotiation, (there being, as he believes, but few Instances where any Matters of Importance have been settled before the opening of general Conferences) the said Earl doth not conceive, That if any Minister of State had advised her Majesty to accept the Preliminaries or Offers from France, said to be signed by Monsieur Mesnager the Twenty Seventh Day of September, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, as the Foundation of a Treaty, he had thereby offended against any known Law, since the Proceedings upon such Preliminaries could not be more unsafe than proceeding without any at all. The said Earl denies, that any Treaty, signed by the Earl of Dartmouth or Mr. St. John, or either of them, on the Part of England, and the Sieur Mesnager on the Part of France (if any such there be) was industriously concealed from the Allies, her Majesty's Council, or Parliament, by his Advice or Contrivance; or that he dissuaded her Majesty from laying any such Treaty before her Allies, her Council or Parliament; or that he advised her Majesty to receive the said general Preliminaries, or to communicate the same in her Name, or by her Authority, to the States-General, as a sufficient Foundation whereon to open the Conferences of Peace with France. The said Earl hath been informed, and doth believe, that there were certain Instructions prepared and signed by her Majesty, and delivered to the Earl of Strafford, her Majesty's Ambassador to the States-General, wherein the said Ambassador might be directed to represent to the Pensionary of Holland, and such others as should be appointed to confer with him, in such manner as is set forth in this Article, or to the like Effect; but he denies, that the said Instructions were prepared, signed, or delivered by his Advice: Nevertheless the said Earl believes, the said Instructions were well warranted by the Truth of such Facts, as in the said Article are set forth to be contained in those Instructions, since the said Earl hath had credible Information, that after her Majesty had received an Account of the Sense of some Persons in Holland, concerning the Overtures made by France, for the setting a general Negotiation of Peace on foot, very pressing Instances were made on her Majesty's Behalf, with the Enemy, to explain the first Offers made by Monsieur de Torcy more particularly, and to form a distinct Project of such a Peace as they were willing to conclude; and that such Instances had Effect, will appear from the Preliminaries said to be signed by Monsieur Mesnager, September the Twenty-seventh One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, wherein several Explications are made, and many Particulars of Moment are contained, which were not in the Propositions of Monsieur de Torcy: Wherefore the said Earl apprehends, that the Propositions said in this Article to be sent over to France, (if any such were sent) were not so general as the Propositions of Monsieur de Torcy, nor in any respect ensnaring, or destructive to the Interests of Great Britain or the Allies: But yet the said Earl believes that her Majesty, at the same Time she did communicate the said Preliminaries to the States-General, did likewise order her Ambassador to acquaint them, that she judged those Articles did not contain such particular Concessions as France would probably be obliged to make in the Course of the Negotiations, or to that Effect. If therefore her Majesty did, for the Good and Ease of her People, endeavour to prevail with her Allies to enter into a Negotiation of Peace, and did communicate the said Preliminaries to them, with that View, the said Earl cannot be induced to believe, that the said general Preliminaries, communicated to the States by her Majesty in manner aforesaid, were calculated to amuse and deceive them; nor doth the said Earl know or believe, that her Majesty's Instructions to her said Ambassador, either in the Particulars aforesaid, or in any other, contained Matters false, prevaricating, or evasive.

And the said Earl must take the Liberty to affirm, that in the late Negotiations of Peace, as well as in all other public Transactions of State, as far as he was concerned, he acted with the highest Regard to the Honour of her Majesty, and with the utmost Zeal for the Welfare both of her and her People, and is not conscious to himself that he ever gave any Counsels, whereby the Truth and Sacredness which ought to constitute and accompany the Instructions of public Ambassadors to Princes in Friendship and Confederacy, against the common Enemy, were in any wise prostituted, or the Honour of her Majesty and of the Imperial Crown of these Realms in any sort debased or betrayed: And he humbly hopes no Instance can be given, wherein the Royal Hand of her late Majesty was made the Instrument to advance the Interest of the common Enemy.

In answer to the Fourth Article, the said Earl doth not remember what Representations were made by Monsieur Buys to her Majesty in relation to the Propositions in the said Article mentioned, but saith, that if any Representations were made, the same were not rendered ineffectual by any Influence of the said Earl: And the said Earl doth admit, that at a Committee of Council there might be made some Declaration in her Majesty's Name to Monsieur Buys to the Effect in the said Article mentioned; but doth not admit that any such Declaration was made by him the said Earl, or by his Management or Contrivance. And the said Earl believes, that what was so declared to the said Monsieur Buys, was agreeable to Truth, and to the real Sentiments and Intentions of her Majesty; nor doth he know wherein the said Articles, signed by Monsieur Mesnager, and accepted by the Lord Dartmouth and Mr. St. John, if any such were then signed, were inconsistent with such Declaration, or how her Majesty was thereby dishonoured, or her Allies abused, or that any Negotiation entered into with France was either dangerous in itself, or fatal in its Consequences.

In answer to the Fifth Article, the said Earl admits, that her sacred Majesty Queen Anne did in due Form of Law, and under her Great Seal, constitute the Right Reverend John Lord Bishop of Bristol, and the Earl of Strafford her Plenipotentiaries, with full Powers to meet, treat and conclude with the Plenipotentiaries of the Confederates, and those whom the French King should on his part depute for that Purpose, the Conditions of a good and general Peace, that should be safe, honourable, and as far as was possible, agreeable to the reasonable Demands of all Parties, and believes Instructions were prepared and delivered to them, wherein they were instructed, among other Things, to the Effect in the said Article set forth; and is firmly persuaded, that when the said Plenipotentiaries were so instructed to insist, that Spain and the West-Indies should not be allotted to the House of Bourbon, no Treaty had been negotiated and agreed, that Spain and the West-Indies should remain in a Branch of that House: And he has Reason to believe, that at the Time when the said Instructions were given to her Majesty's said Plenipotentiaries, there was just Ground to believe, that King Philip would be induced to abandon Spain and the West-Indies, and content himself with the Dominions of Savoy and the Kingdom of Sicily: And he believes he may so far depend on his Memory, as to say, that he heard the late Queen declare, she believ'd the Prospect King Philip had of succeeding to the Crown of France, would be an Inducement to him to be easy with that Allotment. And it seem'd probable, that the Addition of the Dominions of Savoy to the Crown of France, in Case King Philip should succeed to it, would be esteem'd by the French Court as a Thing more to be desired by them, than that Spain and the Indies should remain in the Possession of a younger Prince of the House of Bourbon, under the Condition of his renouncing the Right he would have to the Crown of France, if the eldest Branch should fail. These seem to him to have been her Majesty's Views at the Time when the said Instructions were given to the Bishop of Bristol and the Earl of Strafford; and he therefore believes, that whoever contrived or prepared the same, did prepare them conformable to her Majesty's real Sentiments, and was far from any Thought or Design to abuse the Royal Authority, delude the States-General, prejudice his Imperial Majesty, or any of the Allies, or to carry on the Measures of France: And if King Philip afterwards upon Information, that the then Dauphin was likely to live, or at the pressing Instances of the Spaniards, and Influence of Spanish Counsels, or upon any other Motives, refused to accept of Savoy and Sicily, and chose rather to renounce the French Monarchy; he thinks no Person who acts in the Service of the Crown can be safe, if it may be charged on him as a Crime, that he advised Instructions, which by intervening Circumstances afterwards became improper. But he the said Earl doth not admit, that he contrived or prepared the said Instructions, or was consenting or advising to the contriving or preparing of them, or prevailed on her Majesty to sign them; much less that he abused the Royal Authority, to the Delusion of the States-General, or intended the Prejudice of his Imperial Majesty or any of the Allies, or was engaged to carry on the Measures of France, or had, when the said Instructions were prepared, negotiated or agreed with the Ministers of France, that Spain and the West-Indies should remain in a Branch of the House of Bourbon, or had prevailed on her Majesty to be Party to any private Treaty, wherein the same is necessarily implied. If the Plenipotentiaries were instructed, in Case the Enemy should object, that the Second Article of the Seven, signed by Monsieur Mesnager, implied the Duke of Anjou should continue on the Throne of Spain, to insist that those Articles were binding to France, but laid neither the Queen nor her Allies under any Obligation, the said Earl doth not apprehend how an Instruction to her Majesty's Plenipotentiaries, to make a just Answer to a false Inference, that might happen to be drawn by the Enemy from the Words of such an Article, can be interpreted an entering into a Confederacy or Collusion with the Ministers of the Enemy; or that her Majesty's Consent to such Instructions could imply any Design to impose on his Imperial Majesty or the Allies, or to conceal any Negotiations between Great Britain and France. But the said Earl is confident it will not appear by any of his Actions on the strictest Scrutiny, that he ever entered into any Confederacy or Collusion with the Ministers of the Enemy, or prevailed on the Queen to give her Consent thereto, or had any Designs to impose upon his Imperial Majesty, or any of the Allies, or ever was privy to any secret Negotiations or separate Treaty between Great Britain and France, whereby either in the before-mentioned, or in any other Particulars, any Reproach could be brought on the Crown of these Realms, or any Treaties wherein her Majesty was engaged to her Allies were violated.

In answer to the Sixth Article, the said Earl doth admit, that after the Conferences of Peace between the Plenipotentiaries of the Allies, and those of the Enemy, for negotiating a general Peace were opened, wherein he is persuaded her Majesty and her Ministers did act in perfect Confidence with the Allies, in order to promote their common Interest, and to obtain from the Enemy all just and reasonable Satisfaction; the Progress of the said Negotiation was delayed by Debates, concerning the Enemy's Refusal to give their Answer in Writing to the Demands of the Allies; but he doth not know that any of the Ministers of Great Britain did, by any Encouragement or Concurrence, contribute thereunto: And if, during that time, her Majesty thought fit to authorize any of her Ministers to write or negotiate upon any particular Points relating to the Peace, directly from England to France, in order to facilitate the general Negotiations of Peace, which he the said Earl doth not admit to have been done by his Privy; yet he the said Earl doth not apprehend, that by the Constitution of the Kingdom, or any Law in being, the Queen was debar'd from doing so; or that by constituting the said Plenipotentiaries, she had so far delegated to them her Royal Authority, as to be disabled, without revoking their Commission, to treat or negotiate any Matters conducing to that End, in such other manner as she should think fit. The said Earl saith, that he did not advise, contrive, or promote any private, separate, or unjustifiable Negotiation with France, nor doth he know any Negotiation relating to the Peace was carried on without Communication thereof to the Allies. And the said Earl denies that he ever assumed Regal Authority, or that he treated of Peace with France in any manner that could be liable to such Imputation, or did promote the Design of the Enemy to the Destruction of the Common Cause of her Majesty, or of her Allies, contrary to the Laws or Constitution of this Kingdom, or in Violation of any of the Alliances her Majesty stood engaged in, or of the Assurances given by her Majesty, or of her Instructions to her Plenipotentiaries; or that any Terms of Peace were by him at any time concerted, prejudicial to the Interest of her Majesty, or her Kingdoms, or Allies, or whereby the good Effects of the general Negotiation were defeated.

In answer to the Seventh Article, the said Earl saith, that he never advised her late Majesty to accept of a Treaty with France, on a Supposition that the Spanish Monarchy should continue in the Possession of a Branch of the House of Bourbon; nor did he advise, or carry on any private or separate Negotiation with France, on the Subject of a Renunciation to be made by the Duke of Anjou, of the Right he might have to the Kingdom of France, and that such Renunciation should be the Security against the Re-union of the two Kingdoms: Or that by his Counsels her Majesty was prevailed on to accept, and finally to conclude and ratify a Treaty of Peace with France, wherein the said Renunciation is taken as a sufficient Expedient to prevent the Mischiefs that threatned all Europe, in case the Crowns of France and Spain should be United upon the Head of one and the same Person: Nor doth he know, that during the said Negotiation, any such Memorial, as in the said Article is set forth, was transmitted by the said Monsieur de Torcy to any of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State: But he the said Earl doth freely acknowledge, that if he had been called upon to give his Opinion concerning the leaving of Spain and the West-Indies in the Possession of a Branch of the House of Bourbon, and accepting the Renunciation of his Right to the Kingdom of France by the Duke of Anjou, he doth not at present see any Reason why he might not have been of Opinion for leaving Spain and the West-Indies to the present Possessor, and accepting the Renunciation, rather than have continued the War so burthensome to the People, and so impracticable upon the Foot on which it then stood, especially since all Endeavours to remove him by Treaties or Force had so long proved ineffectual. And in case any such Memorial as is set forth in the said Article, was sent by any Minister of France to the Secretary of the late Queen, he should look upon the same as a Proof of the Earnestness of the Court of France to avoid such Renunciation, which might more effectually prevent all possibility of annexing the Crown of Spain to that of France. But whatever Inducements might be for such a Memorial (if any such was transmitted) the said Earl doth affirm, that he never gave any Counsels by which the Interest of the Common Cause could be betray'd into the Hands of the Enemy; nor doth he think it was possible by any Power and Influence, to engage her Majesty to become Party with France in any Deceit; but whatever Credit he at any time had by her Favour, he always used it with the utmost Sincerity for her Service, and the Good of her People.

In answer to the Eighth Article, the said Earl believes, that her late Majesty Queen Anne did, on the Seventh Day of December, in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, recommend it from the Throne, that Provision might be made for an early Campaign, in order to carry on the War with Vigour, and as the best way to render the Treaty of Peace effectual; and he doth believe, that in order thereto Supplies were granted, and Magazines provided at a great Expence for an early Campaign, and that in pursuance thereof her Majesty might send some General Officers to explain her Intentions to her Allies; and likewise instructed her General the Duke of Ormond to declare her Resolutions of carrying on the War, and to concert with the Generals of the Allies the proper Measures for entering upon Action: And he doth believe, that the Confederate Army was provided with all Necessaries: But whether the said Army had approached, or how near they had approached to the Enemy; whether they had any, or what Superiority, as to the number of Troops; or what likelihood there was, that they would have been able, either by Battle or Siege, to have better'd the Affairs of the Allies, or to have facilitated the Negotiations of Peace, the said Earl is not able to say: But it must be obvious to every one, that any Misfortune or Disaster on the part of the Allies, at such a Juncture, must have been fatal to them: And though the Divine Assistance had been very remarkable in the many Victories her Majesty's Forces had obtained, yet her Majesty's
Piet

Piety was so great, that it is not likely she should, without the greatest necessity, have been willing to have tempted that Providence which had been so signal in her Favour, by hazarding the Blood of her Subjects at a time when she had so near a Prospect of the Conclusion of a Peace: And the said Earl believes it might be owing to this Piety of the Queen, and her Knowledge of some important Matters then depending, that Directions were sent to the Duke of Ormond (if any such were sent) to avoid engaging in any Siege, or hazarding any Battle till further Orders; which he supposeth her Majesty might do upon any Causes she thought proper, as well as the Deputies of the States, who, as the said Earl hath been informed, have often refused to engage in Siege or Battle, upon such Ground as they alone thought fit, when their own Generals, and the Generals of the other Allies, were of Opinion they had a visible Advantage of the Enemy, and might engage in such Siege or Battle with great Probability of Success. But he doth affirm that the Ministers of France never represented to him or to any others, as far as he knows, during any Negotiation, any Apprehensions they had from the Bravery and good Disposition of the Confederate Army; nor was he ever informed of any sure Prospect which it is alleged the Army of the Confederates then had of gaining new Conquests over the Army of France, or whereby they would have been enabled to have forced any better Terms of Peace than there was at that time likelihood of: But on the contrary he has been informed, that the Forces of France were superior in Number to those of the Confederates, especially in Horse. However the said Earl doth not admit, that he did advise or consent that any Order should be dispatched in her Majesty's Name to the Duke of Ormond to the afore-mentioned Effect; nor had he any View or Design to disappoint the Expectations of the Allies, or to give Success to any secret Negotiations with the Ministers of France. The said Earl likewise denies, that he did consent or advise that Orders should be sent to the Bishop of Bristol, one of her Majesty's Plenipotentiaries then at Utrecht, to declare to the Dutch Ministers, that her Majesty looked on her self, from their Conduct, to be then under no Obligation whatsoever to them. He doth not know what Alarm the Allies might take, or what Representations they made to the Bishop of Bristol of their Dissatisfaction or Consternation, but doubts not the said Bishop would readily represent what they desired, tho' such Representation made by his Lordship, (if any such there was), fell not under the Knowledge of the said Earl, nor doth he admit that any Application of that kind was made to him. And in case the States-General made such Address directly to her Majesty, by a Letter of the Fifth Day of June, as in the said Article is set forth, he the said Earl not being acquainted therewith, could neither advise her Majesty to hearken to the Instances therein made, nor to disregard or reject the same. He saith, he never entered into Measures for the Advancement of the Interest of the common Enemy, or countenanced, encouraged, advised, or promoted any Negotiations with France, without Participation of the Allies, or contrary to her Majesty's Engagement, or to the Ruin of the Common Cause; nor is he conscious to himself, that he ever gave any Counsels, by which the Progress of the victorious Arms of the Confederates was stopped, or any Opportunity lost for conquering the Enemy, or which had any Tendency to destroy the Confidence between her Majesty and her Allies, or make the French King Master of the Negotiations of Peace, or which could put the Affairs of Europe into his Hands.

In answer to the ninth Article, the said Earl denies he was privy or consenting to any Concert with the Ministers of France for the separating the Troops in her Majesty's Pay from the rest of the Confederate Army; and not being privy to any such Concert he hopes it will not be imputed to him as any want of Duty, that he did not advise against such a Proceeding. He denies also, that he ever entertained the least Design of imposing upon the Allies any Necessity of submitting to the Terms of France, or of leaving the Confederate Army to the Mercy of the Enemy, or that he did consent or advise her Majesty that the Duke of Ormond and the Troops in her Majesty's Pay, or such of them as would obey his Orders, should separate themselves from the Army of the Confederates. The said Earl hath been informed, and believes it to be true, that the Imperial General, and some other Generals, did propose to the Duke of Ormond in June or July, in the Year one Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, to decamp from the Ground where they lay, and to proceed towards Landrecy, in order to form the Siege of that Place, and that the Duke of Ormond thought it not proper to consent thereto, and gave notice to the said Generals, that if they decamped they must not expect him to follow them. And the said Earl believes, Instances may be given where Generals of other Potentates in the Alliance have refused to comply with what has been proposed to them by her late Majesty's General. The said Earl hath likewise heard, that, notwithstanding such Notice from the Duke of Ormond, the said Generals separated themselves and their Forces from the said Duke, and marched towards Landrecy without him, and that the said Duke continued for some time in his former Camp after such Separation: And that the Generals of the Auxiliary Troops paid by her Majesty, although required by the said Duke of Ormond, under whose Command they then were, to continue with him, and to obey his Orders, refused so to do. He the said Earl supposes it might proceed from her Majesty's Resentment of that Instance of Disobedience in the Auxiliary Troops to the Commands of her General, that she did not think fit immediately to pay the Arrears of those Forces which had so obstinately withdrawn themselves from her General, and marched without him towards Landrecy, as not apprehending herself obliged by any Conventions, or the Provision of any Act of Parliament, so to do. But whatever might be the Causes or Occasions of her Majesty's Resentment, the said Earl saith, that he being in the Office of High Treasurer under her Majesty, could not, by the Duty of his Place, issue out any Monies without a proper Warrant or Authority from her Majesty; and denies that he ever received any Warrant or Authority from her Majesty for issuing any Sum or Sums of Money for, or towards the Pay or Subsidies on account of the said Foreign Troops who had so separated, without which the issuing or directing any Monies for the Payment of them had been a Violation of his Duty. And the said Earl denies, that he did at any time refuse or put a stop to any such Pay or Subsidies; but on the contrary, when the Ministers of the Princes to whom those Forces belonged did apply for the Payment of the said Troops, the said Earl desired them to make application to her Majesty for the necessary Warrants in order thereunto. And as the said Earl had no Notice of any Separation intended between her Majesty's Forces and those of the Allies before the same was made; so he absolutely denies, that by his Advice or Counsel, or with his Privacy, any such Separation was made: And humbly apprehends that he ought not in Justice to be charged with any Consequences of it. He believes, that the Forces of some of the Allies were engaged in the unfortunate Action of Denain, and that the Siege of Landrecy was raised, and the Towns of Quesnoy, Bouchain, and Doway were some time after re-taken by the French Army: But whether those Disasters might not have been prevented by a Compliance with the Measures her Majesty had taken for the common Good, the said Earl submits to your Lordships.

In answer to the Tenth Article, the said Earl denies that he did carry on, or concert with the Ministers of France, a private or separate Negotiation for a general Suspension by Sea and Land between Great Britain and France; or that he did advise her Majesty to send over Henry Viscount Bolingbroke to the Court of France; with Powers to settle such Suspension; but hath been informed, and believes it may be true, that about the Nineteenth of August One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, N. S. a Suspension of Arms was agreed on in France by the said Viscount Bolingbroke on her Majesty's part for four Months; but whether such Agreements was made without the Knowledge or Participation of her Majesty's Allies, or how far the Terms of Peace were then settled with France, either for Great Britain, or the Allies, the said Earl is not able to set forth: But from the Information he hath received of that Affair, believes it will appear, that the said Suspension was a Continuation only of a former Agreement for a Cessation of Arms, which had been not only communicated to the Allies, but into which they had been invited; and believes her Majesty might be induced to desire such Cessation, as was usual amongst Princes and States in War during Negotiations of Peace, by which means the British Merchants enjoy'd a free Trade, and had an Opportunity of carrying the Merchandizes of other Countries to several Parts of Europe, as the Dutch had done during the War; and therefore the said Earl doth not conceive that her Majesty, by the said Suspension, did in the least intend the Violation of any Treaties between her and her Allies, or to deprive them of any Assistance to which they were entitled, or expose them to the Insults of the common Enemy: nor doth he discern how these Consequences could ensue, without the Default of the Allies themselves; much less how the Ties of Union and Friendship between her Majesty and them were cut asunder, or her Majesty's Person or Government, or the Safety of her Kingdoms, or the Protestant Succession, were exposed thereby. But the said Earl assures himself, that he shall never stand chargeable with any Consequences of such Suspension which he never advised; nor did he the said Earl ever entertain the least Thought or Design of occasioning the Destruction of the Common Cause of Europe, or hindering her Majesty from resuming the War against France, in Conjunction with her Allies, if it had been so thought fit, or of weakening the Union between her Majesty and them.

In answer to the Eleventh Article, the said Earl saith, he believes it to be true, that in or about the Months of September or October One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, the States General were in Possession of the Town and Fortrefs of Tournay; and that her Majesty, in her Instructions of December the Twenty Third, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, to her Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht, did direct 'em to insist with the Plenipotentiaries of France, in the general Congress, that towards forming a Barrier for the States-General, Tournay shall remain to the States; and doth believe the French King did at one time incline thereto: But doth not know that her Majesty in her Speech in the said Article mentioned, did declare herself as in the said Article is set forth. The said Earl admits, that until and after the Months of September and October One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, there was open War between her late Majesty and the French King; and that during such War, the French King and his Subjects were Enemies to the late Queen: But the said Earl hath been informed, and believes, that full Powers were given by her Majesty, and the States-General of the United Provinces, to their respective Ministers, and by the French King to his Ministers, to negotiate and treat of Peace between her Majesty and the States-General, and said French King; upon which Negotiations a Peace was afterwards concluded between them; during which Negotiations he hath heard, that the French King did insist upon the yielding up the Town and Fort of Tournay by the States to him; and the said States-General desired her Majesty's Interposition with the French King on their behalf; and that at such Request her Majesty interposed her best Offices on behalf of the States-General, and did at last prevail, that the said Town and Fortrefs of Tournay should be, and he believes the same is continued to the States-General as part of their Barrier. But the said Earl absolutely denies that he did design to give Aid, or Succour, or to adhere to the French King; or that he did in or about the Month of October One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, or at any other time, during the said War, aid, help or assist, or adhere to the said French King; or, that he did ever counsel or advise the said Enemy in what Manner, or by what Methods the said Town and Fortrefs of Tournay, or either of them, might be gained from the States-General to the French King, in Manner and Form as in the said Article is charged. On the contrary, he the said Earl did use his best Offices to preserve the said Town and Fortrefs of Tournay to the States-General. But the said Earl saith, that during the Negotiations of the late Peace, he had the Honour to be one of her Majesty's Privy-Council; and whatsoever Counsel or Advice he gave, relating to any Terms of the said Peace, he acted therein as a Privy-Councillor and Minister of State, and no otherwise: And doth insist, that for any Privy-Councillor and Minister of State, during the Negotiations of Peace, to advise or negotiate, concerning the yielding or giving up any Town, Province or Dominion, upon the Conclusion of the Peace, as part of the Terms and Conditions of such Peace, is not High Treason by any any Law of this Realm; and that such Construction might hereafter deprive the Crown of the Advice and Assistance of several Members of the Privy-Council, in Matters of the greatest Importance, by deterring them from give such Advice as, by their Oaths, and the Duty of their Place, they are obliged to do; would overthrow all means of restoring Amity between Princes, and render the Law, in case of High Treason, uncertain, which by reason of its being the most penal, ought to be most plain; and would be highly dangerous and destructive to the Lives and Liberties of the Subject.

In answer to the Twelfth Article, the said Earl (not admitting that her late Majesty Queen Anne stood engaged by Treaties in manner as in the said Article is alledged, but referring himself to the Treaties, when they shall be produced) for answer, denies, that he did in any of the Years One Thousand Seven Hundred and Ten, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, or at any other time, aid, help, assist, or adhere to the Duke of Anjou, in the said Article named, or advise or counsel any of the Enemies of her said late Majesty, or concert with any of them, or promote the yielding or giving up of Spain and the West-Indies, or any Part thereof to the said Duke of Anjou, in Manner and Form as in the said Article is alledged. And the said Earl saith, as in his Answer to the Eleventh Article he hath already said, that during the Negotiations of the late Peace, he had the Honour to be one of her said late Majesty's Privy-Council, and whatever Counsel or Advice he gave, relating to any Terms of the said Peace, he acted therein as a Privy-Counsellor and Minister of State, and no otherwise; and insists as in his Answer to the Eleventh Article he has insisted.

In answer to the Thirteenth Article the said Earl admits, that the flourishing Condition of Trade and Navigation contributes much to the Riches, Power and Strength of these Kingdoms; and believes, that her late Majesty had a just Regard thereto, and a sincere Desire to obtain some Advantages therein for her People; and did make the several Declarations from the Throne set forth in this Article: And that both Houses of Parliament did, from time to time, express their grateful Acknowledgements to her Majesty, for her great Care and Concern for the Welfare of her People; and believes her Majesty might think it reasonable, considering the Share and Burthen she and her People had sustained in the War, that France should, in the first Place, adjust the Interests of Great Britain, which were to be secured on the Conclusion of a general Peace: But the said Earl doth not know or believe that at the setting on foot, or in the Progress of any Negotiation between the Ministers of Great Britain and France, it was laid down as a Principle that France should in the first place, consent to adjust the Interests of Great Britain, to the Intent that the Ministers of Great Britain might thereby be enabled to engage the Queen to make the Conclusion of the Peace easy to France; nor doth he know that any Concessions were made by the Ministers of Great Britain, with intent to promote the Interests of France against the Allies; or that any Measures were entered into or concerted between them, in order to strengthen the Hands of the French, or to enable them to impose the Terms of a general Peace. And the said Earl doth absolutely deny that he was engaged, in Concert with France, in any Negotiation destructive to his Country, or that he ever had the least Imagination or Thought tending that way, or to the sacrificing the Commerce of Great Britain to the Aggrandisement of France: But on the contrary, he hath always had the most real and sincere Desires to secure and advance the Commerce of Great Britain, and to preserve his Country, in whose Service he hath been always ready to sacrifice himself, and every private Interest whatsoever. And the said Earl is not conscious to himself of any want of Duty, either in not insisting upon, or not procuring the most certain Securities that could be obtained for the Safety and Advantage of the Commerce of these Kingdoms. And the said Earl doth not admit, that he did advise her late Majesty, that any Proposition should be sent by Mr. Prior to France; or that any private or separate Treaty, or the Preliminary Articles, which are said to be signed the Twenty Seventh Day of September One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, should be signed. But the said Earl hath been informed, and believes that in a Paper intitled, The Answer of France to the Demands of Great Britain more particularly, it is said, that the entire Restitution of Newfoundland, and of the Bay and Streights of Hudson, was demanded for the English: And that the French King's Answer was, That the Discussion of that Article should be referred to the general Conferences of the Peace, provided the Liberty of fishing and drying of Codfish upon the Isle of Newfoundland should be reserved to the French. And the said Earl conceives that Paper was not conclusive, but was to be the Subject of future Conferences, wherein the whole Matter might be entirely considered; and consequently that the entering into Conferences on that Paper, was not the yielding to the French the Liberty of fishing and drying Fish on Newfoundland, which they insisted on. And the said Earl denies, that he advised the Demands for Great Britain, in Point of Commerce, should be made in loose, general, or insufficient Terms; or that he advised the Liberties insisted on by the French should be given up to France, as in the said Article is alledged: And he believes that when it is considered what Advantages were likely to ensue to the Commerce of Great Britain by the Assiento Contract, and the Liberty of Trading to the Spanish West-Indies by the Cession of Arcadia, the Bay and Streights of Hudson, the Island of St. Christopher, Newfoundland, the Island of St. Peter, with other adjacent Islands by the Demolition of Dunkirk, and the Cession of Port-Mabon and Gibraltar, it will not be thought the Commerce of Great Britain was neglected by her Majesty, in the late Treaties of Peace. And as the said Earl doth not know that France was at any time Master of the Negotiations, so he denies that he did engage her Majesty in any private Treaties with France, without Security for the Commerce of Great Britain; or that he did contrive, with any of the Ministers of France, to keep in Suspence any Matter that concerned the said Commerce, or that he was any ways instrumental to the preventing any Advantages of the said Commerce from being settled, or that he endeavoured to elude any thing that had been agreed on in any Negotiations for the Benefit of Great Britain. And although the said Earl doth not admit, that he he advised the Ninth Article of the Treaty of Commerce with France, yet he begs leave to observe, that nothing is positively stipulated in that Article, but the whole is conditional, and left to be determined by the Wisdom of Parliament; and hopes it will never be thought an Act of Treachery, to refer any Article of any Treaty to the Judgment and Consideration of Parliament, whatever Judgment the Parliament shall think fit to make thereon. And the said Earl denies, that he advised her Majesty to agree with France, that the Subjects of France should have Liberty of Fishing, and Drying Fish on Newfoundland: But the said Earl believes, that what her late Majesty agreed with France, relating thereto, will not seem unreasonable, if it be considered, that the French long ago claim'd a Right to, and were in Possession of great Part on Newfoundland; and that they were allowed to continue in Possession thereof by the Crown of England, in a Treaty made at Whitehall in the Year One Thousand Six Hundred and Eighty-Six; and in another Treaty made at Ryswick, in the Year One Thousand Six Hundred and Ninety Seven. And the said Earl doth not know that such Agreement of her Majesty is contrary to the express Provision of any Act of Parliament, since he presumes the Act made in the Tenth and Eleventh Years of the Reign of King William the Third, intitled, An Act to encourage the Trade to Newfoundland, cannot reasonably be intended, or construed to extend to any part of the Island, other than what was at the Time of making that Act in the Possession of the English. And the said Earl is informed, that at that Time the Part of Newfoundland, where the Subjects of France are, by the Treaty of Utrecht, allowed the Liberty of Fishing, and drying Fish, was not in the Possession of the English. The said Earl denies, that he advised her Majesty to make a Cession to France of the Isle of Cape Breton; or that he advised her Majesty to consent, that what is agreed in the Treaty of Utrecht, concerning the Fishery of Newfoundland, or Cape Breton, should be made an Article of that Treaty: However, the said Earl doth not know that Cape Breton was Part of the Territories of the Crown of Great Britain; nor doth he apprehend, that her Majesty, who in her Speech from the Throne declared, that France had consented to make an absolute Cession of Annapolis, with the rest of Nova Scotia, or Arcadia, should be understood to speak of Cape Breton, which is no Part of that Continent, but an Island distinct from it. The said Earl further saith, he conceives, that the only Advantages in Trade, stipulated for Great Britain; did not depend on Conditions to be made good by Act of Parliament: On the contrary, he doubts not to make it appear, that many Advantages in Trade were stipulated for Great Britain, in the late Treaties of Peace and Commerce, which have been enjoyed by the Subjects of Great Britain, since the Conclusion of the said Treaties, notwithstanding the Parliament hath not thought fit to make any Act to enforce the Ninth Article of the Treaty of Commerce with France. And the said Earl denies, that by his Counsels, the good Intentions of her sacred Majesty to have obtained for her People advantageous Terms of Commerce were frustrated, or the Trade or Manufactures of Great Britain render'd precarious, or at the Mercy of the Enemy; or any beneficial Branch of Trade yielded up to the Subjects of France. And as the said Earl disowns the being concerned in any Violation of Treaties, or in carrying on the Measures of France, or in any Negotiation which could terminate in the Sacrifice of the Commerce of Great Britain to France; so he observes, with great Satisfaction, the flourishing Condition of the Trade and Navigation of these Kingdoms, since the Conclusion, and by Means of the late Peace, in the great Encrease of the Number and Tonnage of Shipping, of the Exportation of the Woollen Manufactures, the Fish, and other Produce of this Kingdom; in Consequence whereof, the Customs have been greatly advanced, near three Millions of Gold and Silver hath been coined, and the Exchange has been all along in the Favour of England, to and from all Parts of Europe.

In answer to the Fourteenth Article, the said Earl doth not admit that he formed any Project, or Design, for disposing the Kingdom of Sicily to the Duke of Savoy, from the House of Austria; or that he did advise her Majesty to give any such Instructions to Henry Viscount Bolingbroke, as in the said Article mentioned, or to consent to any Treaty wherein a Cession is made of the said Kingdom to his Royal Highness without any Concurrence or Participation of his Imperial Majesty; nor doth he admit that her Majesty was prevailed on, by his Advice, to assist his said Royal Highness with her Fleet, against the Emperor, in order to obtain the Possession of that Kingdom. But in Justification of her Majesty's Proceedings, in relation to the said Kingdom, the said Earl doth beg leave to observe, that by the Grand Alliance, it was agreed, among other Things, that the Confederates should use their utmost Endeavours to recover the Kingdom of Sicily out of the Hands of the Enemy; and that the principal Ends for endeavouring the Recovery of Sicily were, that his Imperial Majesty might have a reasonable Satisfaction for his Pretension to the Spanish Monarchy; and that the Trade and Navigation of the Subjects of Great Britain and Holland might thereby be better secured. Since therefore the Empire, and Hereditary Countries of Austria, were now fallen to Charles the Third, who at the Time of that Treaty was a younger Branch of that House: Since several Towns in the French Flanders, which were not in the Possession of King Charles the Second, at the Time of his Death, together with Spanish Flanders, Milan and Naples, might seem a reasonable Satisfaction for his Imperial Majesty's Pretensions to the Spanish Succession: And since the Trade and Navigation of the Subjects of Great Britain and Holland would be as effectually secured, by the Disposition of the Kingdom of Sicily to the Duke of Savoy, as if the said Kingdom had fallen to the Share of the Emperor: And greater Difficulties would be likely to arise, in obtaining the Disposition thereof to the House of Austria, than to that Duke, in as much as King Philip might be more easily induced to yield it to the Duke of Savoy, than to so potent a Prince as the Emperor; and there were Grounds to believe that all, or most of the Princes and States of Italy, were so apprehensive of the growing Power of the House of Austria in Italy, that they would suffer any Extremities, rather than submit that Sicily, together with Milan and Naples, should be in the Hands of the Emperor, the said Earl doth not discern how any Project to dispose the said Kingdom to that Duke could be thought unjust, dishonourable, or pernicious, or an Act of Injustice to his Imperial Majesty, or Violation of the Grand Alliance: Nor doth the said Earl remember, in what respect it was contradictory to any Declaration of her Majesty, or the Instructions she had given her Plenipotentiaries: And in Case her Majesty thought fit, afterwards, to employ any Part of her Fleet to assist that Duke, her good and faithful Ally, to take Possession of that Kingdom from the Enemy, in Consideration of the said Duke's steady Adherence to the Confederacy, and great Sufferings by such Adherence; he the said Earl is not able to discover why such Assistance might not be given to the said Duke, as well as to any other of her Allies whatsoever. And since it is allowed by this Article, that the then Duke of Savoy never made any Application, in order to obtain the said Kingdom for himself, it seems an Evidence at least, that the Person or Persons who advised the late Queen to agree to such Allotment, did not act upon any private Interest, or had any other View than the Preservation of a Ballance of Power in Europe, and the Security of the Trade and Navigation of the Subjects of Great Britain and Holland; and cannot reasonably be thought, upon a fair and candid Interpretation, to have been guilty of betraying the National Faith, or Honour of the Crown, or employing the Naval Power of these Kingdoms, or the Supplies granted by Parliament, against an Ally of this Kingdom.

In answer to the Fifteenth Article, the said Earl saith, he is and always was of Opinion, that the Word of the Sovereign is sacred, and that all Communications from the Throne to Parliament ought to be true, and that it becomes all Ministers of State, as far as in them lies, to maintain the Honour of the Crown, in such Cases, with the utmost Exactness; nor doth the said Earl know that he hath, at any Time, been defective in his Duty, in this Particular, or ever took upon himself any arbitrary or unwarrantable Authority, much less the chief Direction and Influence in her Majesty's Counsels: Nor did he ever prostitute the Honour of the Crown or Dignity of Parliament, by misrepresenting any Part of the late Negotiations of Peace, to deceive either her Majesty, her Allies, her Parliament, or her People; nor did ever prepare, form, or concert, or advise her Majesty to make any Speech or Declaration from the Throne, to her Parliament, that was not conformable to Truth. He believes her Majesty might make several Speeches from the Throne to her Parliament, at the several Times in the said Article mentioned, to which the said Earl refers; and particularly, that her Majesty did on the Seventh of December, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, declare, that her Allies, especially the States-General had, by their ready Compliance for opening a Treaty of a general Peace, expressed their Confidence in her; but the said Earl not admitting there were such Representations as suggested in this Article, begs leave, in Vindication of the Honour of his Royal Mistress, who was a Princess of strict Piety and Truth, to observe, that the States-General sent over Monsieur *Buy*s to her Majesty, with Letters full of Assurances of their Respect for her Person, and their Resolutions not to separate themselves from her; and likewise signified by him to her Ministers, their Readiness to concur with her Majesty. And the said Monsieur *Buy*s, immediately upon his Arrival at London, delivered Passports for the French Ministers to come to Utrecht; and at a Meeting of several Lords of the Council, shewed his Approbation of sending circular Letters to invite the rest of the Allies to the general Congress: And the said Monsieur *Buy*s exhibited full Powers for preparing and signing a new Treaty, whereby her Majesty and the States should be mutually engaged to each other in making War and Peace, to guarantee the Peace when made, and to invite the rest of the Allies into such Guarantee; all which Matters and Transactions being previous to the Seventh of December, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, her Majesty might justly regard the aforefaid authentic Acts and Assurances, as greater Proofs of the Confidence the States had in her, and of their Readiness to concur with her, than any Representations or Reports before that Time; and that the said Declaration of her Majesty from the Throne was founded upon the strictest Truth. And the said Earl believes, that every one who impartially considers the Steps taken in the late Negotiations of Peace, the Length of the Treaty, the several Letters from one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State to her Plenipotentiary at Utrecht, the Ratification of the Engagement signed by her Ministers and Monsieur *Buy*s, the Eighteenth of December One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, and her exhorting the States to ratify the same; her pressing Instances to the Princes and States of the Empire, and the many other Acts which were done by her Majesty's Orders during that Transaction for the Service and Satisfaction of her Allies, will readily acknowledge, that her Majesty did her utmost to procure for her Allies, and in particular for his Imperial Majesty, all reasonable Satisfaction; and to unite with them in the strictest Engagements, to render the Peace secure and lasting, agreeable to her Speech of the said Seventh Day of December, and her Message of the Seventeenth of January following, in this Article mention'd: And if by any extraordinary Demand or groundless Jealousies of any of the Allies, or other Accidents, her Majesty was not able to obtain for them all the Advantages she desired, this will not derogate from the Truth and Sincerity of her Majesty's Expressions. And it is evident her Majesty did procure them so great Satisfaction, that the Allies did all sign the Peace at the same Time with her Majesty, excepting only the Emperor; and even his Interests were so far adjusted, that what remained in dispute was not thought sufficient to delay so great and good a Work: And it is well known the Emperors of Germany have frequently declined signing their Treaties of Peace at the same Time with their Allies. But that her Majesty was induced by any Influence of the said Earl to enter into any Negotiation with France, exclusive of her Allies; or that the said Earl carried on any such Negotiation; or that the Interest of the said Allies, or in particular of the Emperor, were, by any Practices of his, giving up to France, he utterly denies. And when it is considered, that much British Blood and Treasure had been spent to recover Spain and the West-Indies from the House of Bourbon, that an expensive penfive War had for many Years continued, which her Majesty still supplied with new Recruits and redoubled Expence; that her Armies, and those of the Allies, had been beaten in Spain; that Prince Eugene had declared, that Forty Thousand Men, and Four Millions of Crowns per Annum would be necessary for carrying on that War, and that his Master could supply no more than a Fourth Part of that Charge; that it was found by long Experience, how averse the People of Spain in general were to submit themselves to the House of Austria; that her Majesty discerned the Charge of renewing the War in Spain would be a Burthen too great for her Subjects, and that there was little Probability of its being successful: that the hereditary Countries were then, by the Death of the Emperor Joseph, fallen to King Charles, who was soon after chosen Emperor (by which Event the Interest of the Princes and States of Europe were changed;) it cannot be doubted but that her late Majesty had, at the Time when she made the aforesaid Declaration, done her utmost to recover Spain and the West-Indies by Force of Arms: And the most she could do afterwards, was by way of Negotiation, wherein she insisted with that Earnestness on King Philip's quitting Spain, that France complied with her Majesty's Proposals: But when King Philip could not be prevailed on to give up Spain, her Majesty thought his Renunciation of the Crown of France, as Circumstances then stood, the most practicable, if not the only Method left to prevent the Union of those two Monarchies. But the said Earl doth not think it probable, that the leaving Spain and the West-Indies to the House of Bourbon, was the Foundation of the Preliminary Articles signed by Monsieur Mefnager, and of the Declaration annexed, which had been signed by the Lord Dartmouth and Mr. St. John, with her Majesty's Consent (and which the said Earl supposes is what is called the private Treaty in this Article) since he believes it was then thought more likely that the Crown of Spain might fall to some other Prince. And the said Earl doth not observe, how her Majesty can be charged with uttering any Falsity in her Message of the Seventeenth Day of January, wherein she takes notice, how groundless the Reports were that had been spread of a separate Peace being treated, for which Report there was not then, nor at any other Time, the least Foundation; since only some few Points were adjusted, relating to the particular Interests of her own Kingdoms, and even those were to have no Effect but upon the Conclusion of a general Peace, and were likewise, before such Conclusion, communicated to the Allies. And the said Earl denies, that thenceforth, or at any Time, there were carried on, by him, any separate Measures with the Ministers of France; nor doth he conceive, that the Proposal about the Renunciation was merely speculative, but that it was of such a Nature as would execute itself, and keep the Crowns of France and Spain more effectually divided than ever; if it be considered, that it did not consist only in a Renunciation to be made by Philip, then in Possession of the Crown of Spain, of his contingent Right to that of France; but that there was a Title to the Crown of France thereby given to the Duke of Orleans, and after him to the rest of the Princes of the House of Bourbon, who could not be presumed to want the Will nor would be likely to want the Power, to take Possession of the Crown of France, by Vertue of such Title, in Opposition to a Prince at such a Distance, and who had solemnly renounced all his Pretensions to it. Nor can the said Earl think, the Declaration of any Minister of France, against such Expedient (if any such were made) a sufficient Ground for her Majesty to decline it. The said Earl therefore must beg leave to repeat, that he is not able to discover, from any Thing that appears in those Speeches, that in the Particulars afore-mentioned, or any other, the essential Points relating to Peace and Commerce, or which concerned the Interests, as well of the Allies as of Great Britain, were misrepresented by her Majesty; nor doth he know or believe, that any Instance can be given wherein he abused the Favour of his Royal Mistress, to whom he did always bear and pay the most sincere Veneration and Duty; or wherein he did mislead her Parliament into any groundless or fatal Resolution, or prevented their Advice to her Majesty, or obtained their Approbation to any dangerous Practices, or whereby her Majesty could be ever deprived of the Confidence of her Allies, or exposed to Contempt.

In answer to the Sixteenth Article the said Earl doth insist, that by the Laws and Constitution of this Realm, it is the undoubted Right and Prerogative of the Sovereign, who is the Fountain of Honour, to create Peers of this Realm, as well in time of Parliament, as when there is no Parliament sitting or in being; and that the Exercise of this Branch of the Prerogative is declared in the Form or Preamble of all Patents of Honour, to proceed ex mero motu, as an Act of mere Grace and Favour; and that such Acts are not done, as many other Acts of a public Nature are, by and with the Advice of the Privy-Council; or as Acts of Pardon usually run, upon a favourable Representation of several Circumstances, or upon Reports from the Attorney-General, or other Officers, that such Acts are lawful or expedient, or for the Safety or Advantage of the Crown; but flows entirely from the beneficent and gracious Disposition of the Sovereign. He farther says, that neither the Warrants for Patents of Honour, the Bills or other Ingrossments of such Patents are at any time communicated to the Council, or the Treasury, as several other Patents are; and therefore the said Earl, either as High-Treasurer or Privy-Counsellor, could not have any Knowledge of the same: Nevertheless, if her late Sacred Majesty had thought fit to acquaint him with her most gracious Intentions of creating any Number of Peers of this Realm, and had asked his Opinion whether the Persons whom she then intended to create, were Persons proper to have been promoted to that Dignity? He does believe he should have highly approved her Majesty's Choice; and doth not apprehend that in so doing he had been guilty of any Breach of his Duty, or Violation of the Trust in him reposed; since they were all Persons of Honour and distinguished Merit, and the Peerage thereby was not greatly increased, considering some of those created would have been Peers by Descent, and that many Titles of Honour were then lately extinct. And the said Earl believes many Instances may be given, where this Prerogative hath been exercised by former Princes of this Realm in as extensive a manner; and particularly cularly in the Reigns of King Henry the Eighth, King James the First, and his late Majesty King William. The said Earl begs leave to add, that in the whole Course of his Life he hath always lov'd the establish'd Constitution, and in his private Capacity, as well as in all public Stations, when he had the Honour to be employ'd, hath done his utmost to preserve it, and shall always continue so to do.

In answer to the further Articles of Impeachment exhibited against the said Earl: As to the First of these Articles he saith, that he believes, in or about the Month of January, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Ten, an Expedition was projected, for making a Conquest of the City Quebeck, on the River of St. Laurence, Canada, or other Possessions of the French King in North America; but denies he advised her Majesty either to consent to the making such Expedition, or to give Orders for detaching any Battalions of the Forces in her Majesty's Service in Flanders, or to send any such Battalions, or any Squadron of Men of War on the said Enterprize: But having heard that the said Project, or some Expedition of the like Nature, had been some time before considered in a Committee of Council, and afterwards laid aside for that Time, and not being fully apprized of the whole Project, nor so well vers'd in the Affairs of that Part of the World as others, who had more Opportunity of knowing them; and least the Expedition might not at that Time prove so feasible or advantageous as others of better Knowledge in those Matters than himself did expect, he did all that he apprehends his Duty required to prevent the putting the same in Execution, and expressed his Concern at it to some Persons about the Queen. And having so far shewn his Opinion of the said Design at that Time, believes it would not have been thought proper for him to have appeared at the Meetings, where the Methods only of carrying on the Expedition were to be adjusted; of which Meetings there had been but few, before a Misfortune befel him, which confined him to his Bed. But the said Earl denies, that he knew the said Expedition was dangerous or destructive, nor did he hear that it was laid aside formerly by a Committee of Council, as dangerous or impracticable, but only as improper in the Circumstances of Affairs at that Time: Nor doth the said Earl know or believe the said Expedition was set on foot with any design to promote the Interest of the French King, or to weaken the Confederate Army in Flanders, or to dissipate the Naval Forces of this Kingdom. And when others of her Majesty's Council, better acquainted with that Affair, did judge it to be proper and practicable, he did not think it became him, upon the Strength of his own single Judgment, further to oppose an Expedition, which if it had succeeded, most certainly would have given a great and sensible Blow to the Settlements and Trade of France in that part of the World. And the said Earl, with good Reason, is persuaded your Lordships will not think it unfit that her Majesty should take the Opinion of those who better understood Affairs of that Nature; or that your Lordships can judge the said Earl in that respect to have been wanting in his Duty to her Majesty; but hopes it will be rather an Evidence of his Fidelity to the Queen and his Country, that he so far discouraged what in his own Judgment he was diffident of. However he is satisfied, that those of her Majesty's Council who did approve the Expedition, acted therein with a sincere Desire for the public Good, notwithstanding the ill Success it was attended with; which might chiefly be owing to Delays by contrary Winds, and other unforeseen Accidents. And he doth not believe, that her Majesty's Allies did suffer any Prejudice, or the common Enemy receive any Advantage by the detaching of Forces from Flanders to serve on this Enterprize; and is inform'd, that to prevent any such Danger, her Majesty's General who commanded at that Time in Flanders, had Orders for providing other Forces in their Place, if he judg'd it necessary. And the said Earl doth acknowledge, that the Sum of twenty eight thousand Pounds, or thereabouts, was demanded at the Treasury about June One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, on account of Arms, Accoutrements, Goods, and Merchandize, said to be sent on the said Expedition to Canada; but he saith, that he was so far from advising her late Majesty that the said Sum should be issu'd and paid, that on the contrary he put a Stop to the Payment of the same, until he had done all he could at that time to examine into the Expenditure of the said Money: But being then High Treasurer of Great Britain, and having receiv'd her Majesty's Orders to pay the said Sum, and not being able, with his utmost Precaution then, to discover any just Cause why it should not be paid; he did afterwards, in Obedience to those Orders, and according to the Duty of his Place, countersign a Warrant to the Paymaster of her Majesty's Forces for the Payment of the same, pursuant to which, he believes the same was issued and received. And as to that Part of the said Article, which charges the said Earl with employing his Arts or Credit to keep the House of Commons from examining that Affair; he begs leave to say, that whatever Suspicions he might entertain in his own Mind, he did not upon Examination find, that there was sufficient Proof to justify the laying them before either House of Parliament. And although he had been inform'd, that the Papers relating to that Expedition, were laid before the last, and have been all along in the Power of the present House of Commons, yet he hath not heard that any Fraud hath been made out in that Affair, notwithstanding the Gentlemen who had them under their Inspection neither wanted Abilities to make the utmost Discoveries, nor could be supposed to be prevented therein by any Influence of the said Earl: And he hopes it will not be imputed to him as a Fault, if he had used any Skill or Credit to keep the House of Commons from examining this Affair at that Juncture, when by an unseasonable Enquiry, before a proper Proof could be had, the Fraud, if any such there were, would be likely for ever to escape unpunished. But the said Earl denies that he ever exercised or had any arbitrary Power or Influence, either in her Majesty's private Council, or the great Council of the Nation, or entertained any Design to prevent the Justice due to the Queen or the Nation, or that any Discovery had been made to him, further than what might give Suspicion to one who was always jealous (as became him) of any Misapplication of the public Treasure. And the said Earl saith, that he is not conscious, that by any Letter or Memorial to her Majesty, he hath acted contrary to his Duty; but humbly hopes he may be allowed to observe, that it would be a Matter of particular Hardship, and what seems to him inconsistent with the Rules of Government, and without Precedent, if the most secret and intimate Papers and Letters, wrote to that most renowned and pious Princess, her late Majesty, by her own special Command, and for her own private Perusal, should be imputed to any as a Crime; and if any Quotation from any such Letter or Paper could be alledged against the said Earl, he doubts not but there might appear from other of her Majesty's private Papers what would justify him in many Particulars wherewith he is charged, and would give further Proof (if it were needful) how tender and affectionate her Majesty was to all her Subjects.

In answer to the second additional Article the said Earl doth admit, that about October One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, her late Majesty did sign a Warrant directed to him, then her Treasurer of Great Britain, for the issuing and Payment of the Sum of Thirteen Thousand Pounds to John Drummond, Esq; in the Article named; and that on or about the Twenty Fourth of November following, in pursuance of the said Warrant, under her Majesty's Sign Manual, he the said Earl did sign a Warrant for the Payment of the said Thirteen Thousand Pounds, but for more certainty, begs leave to refer to the said several Warrants when the same shall be produced: And the said Earl takes the Words [for special Services of the War] to have been inserted by Mistake of the Clerks; for he absolutely denies that he gave any Direction for those Words, or any other of like Import, to be inserted: And he believes all the Clerks of the Treasury know, that the Monies which arose from the Sale of Tin were the Queen's proper Money for the Support of her Household, and such Occasions as she should please to direct, and not appropriated to the Services of the War; altho' sometimes it hath been practised that Loans have been taken upon Tin Tallies for the Service of the War, and other public Services, and afterwards repaid to the Civil List, which might possibly give occasion for such Mistake. And the said Earl saith, that having been acquainted with the Services the said Mr. Drummond had performed, by Order of the late Earl of Godolphin, in borrowing Money upon Tin at a low Interest, the said Earl asked Mr. Drummond's Consent that a Sum in Tin-Tallies might be struck in his Name, and with such Consent did direct, that Orders amounting to the Sum of Thirteen Thousand Pounds should be charged in the Register of the Exchequer, on the Monies arising by the Sale of Tin, in the Name of the said Mr. Drummond, who afterwards, before his going to Holland, endorsed the said Orders at the said Earl's Request, and left them in the Treasury; but how long it was before the said Orders were endorsed, or how long they remained afterwards in the Treasury, the said Earl doth not particularly remember; but doth not acknowledge that the said Orders and Tallies came afterwards to his own Hands, and were disposed for his own Use. But in order to lay the true State of this Affair before your Lordships, the said Earl humbly represents, that upon his first attending the late Queen, after his being wounded, her Majesty had the Goodness to tell him, that she designed him a Sum of Money: Upon which he represented to her Majesty the bad Condition of her Civil List: But several times after her Majesty asked him, why he did not find a way for receiving the Money she intended him, and bring the necessary Warrant for that Purpose? He still urged the same Reason against it, and for near Six Months made no Step in it, till at last her Majesty was pleased to say, she was resolved to have it done. And as her Majesty had, in Matters of her Bounty, made use of Tin-Tallies for other Persons, she was pleased to mention the same herself, and ordered proper Warrants to be prepared for the Sum which her Majesty of her Royal Bounty intended him: That after her Majesty had so positively signified her Royal Pleasure, to bestow such Mark of her Favour upon the said Earl, the said Tallies and Orders were struck in Mr. Drummond's Name, with her Majesty's Knowledge, and at the said Earl's Nomination; and from that time the same were kept under the said Earl's Direction for his Use. And the said Earl was advised, that nothing further was requisite to be done, after the Assignment of the said Mr. Drummond, for securing the said Earl's Interest in the said Tallies, till an Accident happened which made it necessary for further Security, to have the said Warrant as a Declaration of Trust, which was accordingly signed by her Majesty, and is to the Effect following.

A N N E R.

W Hereas in the Year of our Lord One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, in Consideration of the many good, faithful, and acceptable Services which before that time had been performed unto us, by our Right Trusty and Well-beloved Cousin and Counsellor Robert Earl of Oxford (then and now our High Treasurer of Great Britain) which Services have tended to the Quiet, Safety, and Prosperity of us and our Realms, tho' the same were accompanied with great Difficulties upon himself, and Hazards to him and his Family. And particularly reflecting upon the impious Attempt made upon his Life: We did then fully resolve, as a particular Mark of our Favour, and of our Gracious Acceptance of the said Earl's Services, to bestow upon him a Sum in ready Money. But the said Earl representing to us, that the Arrears then due to our Servants and Tradesmen, chargeable upon our Civil List, were very great and pressing, we did therefore agree and determine, that the said Earl should have to his own Use the several Sums amounting to Thirteen Thousand Pounds, compris'd in certain Orders of Loans bearing date in or about the Eleventh Day of December One Thousand Seven Hundred and Eleven, in your Name, and charged upon the Register in our Exchequer on the Monies arising by Sale of our Tin, which Orders are not yet in Course of Payment. Now we do hereby declare and make known, that the said several Sums amounting to Thirteen Thousand Pounds, contained in the said Orders, and the Interest thereof due and to be due, are, and shall be the proper Monies of the said Earl of Oxford. And we do hereby direct and authorize you to transfer and Assign the said Orders, and the whole Right and Benefit thereof, to the said Earl and his Assigns, or to such Person or Persons as he shall appoint in that behalf. And in case any the Monies due, or to be due, or payable upon the said Orders shall come to your Hands; in such Case our Pleasure is, that you forthwith pay over the same to the said Earl, his Executors, Administrators, or Assigns, to his and their own Use and Beboof, without any Account to be therefore rendered to us, our Heirs, Heirs, or Successors. And this our Warrant, or an attested Copy thereof, shall be your sufficient Warrant and Discharge for so doing.

Given at our Court at Windsor-Castle the Fourteenth Day of December, in the Twelfth Year of our Reign, Anno Dom. 1713.

To our Trusty and Well-beloved

John Drummond, Esq;

And the said Earl believes the said Warrant was drawn by Mr. Lowndes Secretary to the Treasury, and by what Means the same was omitted to be enter'd in the Treasury he knows not: But upon hearing there was a Discourse about the said Thirteen Thousand Pounds in Tin-Tallies, he sent a Copy of the said Warrant to the Officers of the Treasury, without signifying any Desire to have the same enter'd, well knowing it receiv'd its Authority from the Sign Manual, which wanted no additional Force from any Entry thereof in the Treasury-Books. And the said Earl saith, that her Majesty was pleas'd, of her mere Goodness and Bounty, and of her own free Will to give him the said Sum of Money in Reward of his faithful Services, and for his Sufferings in her Service. And the said Earl saith, that the said Grant, according to the Discount upon those Tallies at that Time, amounted to the Sum of ten thousand Pounds, or thereabouts; wherein he acknowledgeth the great Bounty of her Majesty, and takes notice, that Grants much larger have been made from the Crown to other Ministers of State, while the Necessities of the Crown have been equally pressing. And the said Earl doth not know that in this or any other Part of his Administration, he ever was guilty of any Corruption, or any Breach of his Oath or Trust as High Treasurer of Great Britain; or that he did in any Manner abuse her Majesty's Goodness, or make an ill Use of his Access to her Majesty, or embezzle the public Treasure, or did at any time knowingly injure or oppress her Majesty's Subjects; but on the contrary, the said Earl saith, that he managed the public Money in the most frugal Manner, in order to lessen, as much as might be, the Charge of the War; and to ease, if he could, the Commons of Great Britain from all grievous Taxes. And in further Vindication of himself against all the Imputations of Avarice or Corruption insinuated in this Article, the said Earl saith, that in every Employment to which he was called by her Majesty's Favour, he was always contended with the accustomed Incomes and Profits of the said Employments, without endeavouring to encrease his Gain by unwarrantable or extraordinary Perquisites; that whilst he was in any Office of Trust about her Majesty, he never abused that Trust in making any Manner of Profit or Advantage to himself, either by the Disposal of Places in his own Gift, or by the Recommendation of Persons to her Majesty for such as were granted immediately by herself; that neither in nor out of Place did he ever receive any Pension from the Crown; that as he came with clean Hands into her Majesty's Service, so went not only with clean but almost with empty Hands out of it, having spent therein most Part of the Profits which accrued to him from the Places he enjoy'd; so that at this Time, notwithstanding all the Advantages he received from them, and the extraordinary Bounty of the Queen to him, in this Article mentioned, he can with great Truth affirm, that his private Fortune hath received very inconsiderable Addition thereby.

In answer to the Third Additional Article the said Earl saith, that Matthew Prior, Esq; being employed by her Majesty at the Court of France, Warrants were signed in the usual Form for Payment of several Sums of Money to the said Mr. Prior, which he believes from the Twenty Seventh of August One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twelve, to the Tenth of July One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fourteen, might amount to the Sum of Twelve Thousand Three Hundred and Sixty Pounds, as in the said Article is set forth; and he believes he did pay, or cause to be paid at several Times the said Sums, pursuant to the Authority he had from her late Majesty for that purpose, which he conceives was not only lawful, but a Duty incumbent on him. He further saith, that he doth not know that by any Law there ought to be certain Appointments or Allowances for the Maintenance and Support of Ambassadors, Envoys, Plenipotentiaries, and other public Ministers of the Crown in foreign Courts; but that her Majesty was at Liberty to vary such Appointments, and the Manner of paying them, as she in her Wisdom should think fit, out of any Funds appropriated to the Civil List. He doth believe, that there are several Instances where Persons employed to negotiate Matters of Importance, as Ambassadors or Plenipotentiaries, have been allowed one thousand five hundred Pounds for their Equipage; one hundred Pounds a Week for their ordinary Entertainment, and one thousand six hundred Pounds for Extraordinaries, and likewise further Sums for Services, performed by special Order: And if the said Mr. Prior had been paid upon that Foot, he would have been entitled to a greater Sum from the Crown, for the Time wherein he was employed by her Majesty as aforesaid, over and above all Disbursements for special Services. And the said Earl saith, that he takes the said Matthew Prior to have been sent by her Majesty into France for her Majesty's Service, and in order to carry on the Negotiations of a general Peace; but denies that he was any Creature of the said Earl, or sent by the said Earl into France, or that he carried on any Negotiations of the said Earl, or that her Majesty was prevailed on by his Counsels to send the said Matthew Prior as her Plenipotentiary to the French King, without the Privity of or any Communication with the Allies, or that the said Earl used the least Contrivance for carrying on, or did carry on or promote any dangerous Practices with the Ministers of France, or the Enemies of her Majesty or her Kingdoms, or that he did at any Time combine with the said Matthew Prior to defraud her Majesty of any Sum of Money whatsoever, under Colour of his Employment; or that the said Matthew Prior was sent into France with the Character aforesaid; without any settled Appointment or Allowance for any such End; or that he the said Earl did give the said Matthew Prior an unlimited Credit, or promise to pay him any Bills whatsoever, other than what he should be duly authorized to pay; or that any Bills of Exchange, in the said Article mentioned, were drawn in pursuance of any such Contrivance. The said Earl saith, that Thomas Harley, Esq; having been twice sent by her late Majesty to the Court of Hanover, he the said Earl being then High Treasurer of Great Britain, paid or cause to be paid to the said Mr. Harley the Sum of five thousand five hundred and sixty Pounds, or thereabouts, by Authority from her Majesty, and according to the Duty of his Office, out of Monies appropriated to the Use of the Civil List. And he believes, that if Mr. Harley had received an Allowance in Proportion to what hath been paid to Ambassadors, it would have amounted to a greater Sum. But denies, that the said Sum of five thousand five hundred and sixty Pounds, or any Part of it, was paid without Authority, or for promoting any wicked Purposes of the said Earl, or that he did either illegally or fraudulently issue, direct, or advise the Direction or Payment of any Sum or Sums of Money out of her Majesty's Treasury, to any Person whatsoever, or that he ever entered into any Combination with the Persons abovementioned, or any other Person whatsoever, to defraud her Majesty of any of the public Money which he was entrusted with the Management of.

In answer to the fourth additional Article, the said Earl denies, that he ever held any Correspondence with Mary the late Consort of the late King James the Second, either by the Means of Mr. Prior, or by any other Means whatsoever, or that he ever intended, or had the least Design any way to promote the Interest of the Pretender; nor doth the said Earl know or believe that Monsieur Gaultier, in the said Article named, was entrusted or employed as an Agent between any of the Ministers of Great Britain and France, in transacting any Affairs relating to the Pretender; and denies that he the said Earl had any Conferences with him the said Monsieur Gaultier on that Subject: Nor doth the said Earl know or believe that he the said Monsieur Gaultier was empowered to concert with him the said Earl, particularly the settling any Payment or Remittance of the Annuities hereafter mentioned, or any other yearly Sum to be paid or remitted out of her Majesty's Treasury into France: Neither had the said Earl the least Design, that any of the Fruits or Advantages of the Peace should be made an Offering to any Adherent of the Pretender; nor did he agree or undertake to procure the Payment of the yearly Sum of forty seven thousand Pounds, or any other yearly Sum, to the Use of the said late Consort, during her Life. But the said Earl doth admit, that the late King James the Second by Letters Patents under the Great Seal of England, bearing Date on or about the Twenty Eight Day of August, in the Year One Thousand Six Hundred and Eighty Five, granted unto Lawrence Earl of Rocheſter, Henry Earl of Peterborough, Sidney Lord Godolphin, Robert Worden, Esq; and Sir Edward Herbert, Kt. (who are all since deceased) divers Annuities or yearly Sums of Money, amounting to thirty seven thousand three hundred twenty eight Pounds thirteen Shillings and seven Pence, payable out of the Hereditary Duty of Excise, and the Post-Office, and other Revenues in the said Letters Patents mentioned, to hold to them and their Heirs, during the Life of the said Consort, in trust for her: And by other Letters Patents, bearing date on or about the Third Day of December, in the Year One Thousand Six Hundred and Eighty Six, also granted unto the said Consort a further Pension, or yearly Sum of ten thousand Pounds, to hold during her natural Life; whereby the said Revenues arising from the Hereditary Excise and Post Office, and other the Revenues in the said Letters Patents mentioned, became charged with, and were liable to the said Annuities or yearly Sums, as in this Article is mentioned. And the said Earl doth admit, that the said Revenues were by several Acts of Parliament granted and settled during the Life of his late Majesty King William the Third, for the Use and Service of his Household and Family, and for other his necessary Expences and Occasions; and after his Demise, during the Life of her late Majesty Queen Anne, were appointed to be for the Support of her Household, and of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown; but saith, that in the same Act of Parliament whereby the said Revenues are so appointed, there is a general Saving to all and every Person or Persons of all such Rights, Titles, Estates, Interests, Claims, and Demands whatsoever, of, in, or to, or out of the said Revenues and Hereditaments, or any of them, as they, or any of them had, or ought to have had before the making the said Act, as fully, to all Intents and Purposes, as if the said Act had never been made. And the said Earl doth admit, that an Act of Parliament was made in the Twelfth Year of her late Majesty's Reign, whereby the Sum of five hundred thousand Pounds, for the Causes therein mentioned, was to be applied in Aid of the Revenues or Branches which were appointed for the Support of her Majesty's Household, and of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown, for, or towards the paying and discharging such Arrears of Salaries, Wages, Diet-money, and other Allowances, and such Debts for Emptions, Provisions, and other Causes, as should appear to be due and owing to her Majesty's Servants, Tradesmen, and others. But the said Earl saith, he hath heard that the said late Consort of the late King James the Second, esteeming herself to be entitled by the Laws of England, by vertue of the said Letters Patents, to the several Sums of Money therein mentioned, did, by Letter of Attorney, empower and authorise the said Monsieur Gaultier to demand and receive for the only Use, Benefit, and Behoof, all Sums of Money which from and after the Feast of the Annunciation of the Blessed Virgin Mary, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, were become due and payable upon the several Annuities, amounting to thirty seven thousand three hundred and twenty eight Pounds thirteen Shillings and seven Pence, and the other Annuity or yearly Sum of ten thousand Pounds, and to give Acquittances and Discharges for the Monies he should so receive to her only Use and Behoof as aforesaid; and that thereupon he the said Monsieur Gaultier applied himself to her Majesty for the Payment of the Monies which were incurred or grown due on the said several Annuities, from the said Twenty Fifth Day of March One Thousand Seven Hundred and Thirteen, and that her Majesty was pleased to sign a Warrant, directed to him the said Earl, being then her Majesty's High Treasurer, or the High Treasurer or Commissioners of the Treasury for the Time being, in the Words or to the Effect in the said Article set forth; but for more certainty refers himself to the said Warrant, when the same shall be produced. And that in Obedience to her Majesty's Commands signified by the said Warrant, he the said Earl did direct two several Warrants to the Auditor of the Receipt of the Exchequer, to the Effect in the said Article set forth; but for more Certainty refers to the said several Warrants when the

the same shall be produced. But he denies he advised her Majesty to sign the said Warrant of the twenty third of December one thousand seven hundred and thirteen; but when such Warrant was brought to him, and he knew that the Jointure of the said Consort had been confirmed by Act of Parliament; and had heard that by some private Article of Agreement at the Treaty of Ryswick, Provision had been made in relation to it; and the Legality of the Demand not being doubted by her Majesty's Council learned in the Law, the said Earl thought it his Duty to pay Obedience to it. And the Sum of five hundred thousand Pounds intended to be raised by the said Act of the Twelfth Year of her Majesty's Reign, together with a great additional Sum in Tallies, being design'd for discharge of her Majesty's Debts, the said Earl thought himself sufficiently authorized to direct that the said Sum of Money mentioned in the said Warrants, which he was advised was a Debt from her Majesty, should be paid out of the said five hundred thousand Pounds: Yet the Sum in the said Warrants mentioned or any part thereof, was not paid out of the said appropriated Sum of five hundred thousand Pounds, or otherwise; but the whole Sum of five hundred thousand Pounds was applied to other Uses for which it was appropriated. And the said Earl humbly hopes, that he hath not hereby betrayed the Honour of her late Majesty, or the Imperial Crown of these Realms, or acted contrary to his Duty. And the said Earl doth acknowledge, that the said Monsieur Gaultier coming into England with Letters of Credence from the French King to her late Majesty, after having resided some time in England, her Majesty was pleased, before his Departure hence, to direct a Present should be made to the said Monsieur Gaultier, as hath been usual in like Cases to public Ministers: And he believes her said Majesty was the rather inclined to make such Present to the said Monsieur Gaultier, because the said Earl hath heard, and takes it to be true, that the said Gaultier had been instrumental with the French King to obtain the Delivery and Release of those poor Protestants who had suffered aboard the Gallies on account of their Religion, whose Rescue from Slavery her Majesty, out of her known Zeal to the Protestant Religion, and out of her wonted Piety and Compassion to the Confessors in so good a Cause, had much at Heart, and had prevailed therein beyond Expectation; it being what by his Majesty King William had been attempted in vain, and was thought by many impossible ever to be obtained: And the good Offices of the said Gaultier in that Affair having been very acceptable to her Majesty, she was pleased to encrease his Present in respect thereof, and therefore ordered it to be paid in the same manner as had been done to others, whose Present her Majesty thought fit to augment. And for this end her Majesty, about the time in this Article mentioned, did sign a Warrant directing the Payment of one thousand Pounds Sterling to Daniel Arthur, Esq; in the same Article mentioned; to the Intent it might be paid to the said Monsieur Gaultier on the account aforesaid. And the said Earl believes the said Monies were issued and paid accordingly, and doth not apprehend he hath therein acted contrary to his Duty.

In answer to the Fifth additional Article, the said Earl doth admit the Sovereign of this Realm may refuse to receive any natural born Subject who hath committed, and is under the Guilt of High Treason, as a public Minister, or with any Character from any Foreign Prince, State, or Potentate: And that where such Person is known to be guilty of such Crime, it may in most Cases be fit so to do; But the said Earl apprehends that the Sovereign is the proper Judge whom to refuse or receive with such Character. The said Earl believes that a Person styling himself, or commonly known by the Name of Lilesh or Lawless, did about the Year one thousand seven hundred and twelve, or one thousand seven hundred and thirteen, come into England with Letters of Credence to her Majesty from the King and late Queen of Spain, and Authority to treat about carrying British Merchandizes to the Spanish West-Indies; and that her Majesty was pleased to admit such Person with such Letters of Credence; and before his return to Spain was pleased to order, for the Use of such Person, the Sum of one thousand Pounds, to be paid out of the Monies appropriated to the Civil List, which the said Earl, in Obedience to such Orders, caused to be paid, and humbly apprehends it was his Duty so to do. But the said Earl believes, that when the said Lilesh or Lawless was so admitted, he was generally thought to be a natural Spaniard, and that from the Advantages of those Licences which he brought for carrying the British Merchandizes to the West-Indies, he expected much a larger Present: However, the said Earl denies that he knew, or was informed, before the Arrival of the said Lawless in England, any thing of his coming hither, nor after his Arrival did he see him, or know of his being here before he had been introduced to her Majesty, it being usual for public Ministers to be introduced by those Servants of her Majesty to whose Office it belongs, as matter of Duty and common Dispatch, without consulting therein other Ministers of State. And upon the Notice taken of this Affair formerly in the House of Peers, it appeared that the noble Lord who introduced the said Lawless to the Queen, by virtue of his Office, did it as of Course, and did not then know he was other than a Native of Spain. And the said Earl saith, that of a long time after he had been so introduced, the said Earl neither knew nor heard that he was other than a natural Spaniard: But when the said Person had continued in England a considerable time, there was a Rumour, and the said Earl was afterwards informed that he was a Native of Ireland, and departed out of that Kingdom in his Youth, and had since been in the Spanish Service; but doth not know, nor was informed, that he had committed or been guilty of High Treason, or that he had served the late King James the Second in the War in Ireland against King William the Third, or had followed the said King James the Second into France, or been in his Interest or Service, or had been in Rebellion against King William, or in Arms against the late Queen. And the said Earl having no notice of the said Person's Arrival before his being admitted to her Majesty, nor any Knowledge of any Crime he was guilty of, submits whether it shall be computed to him as any want of Duty, that he did not advise her Majesty against admitting or receiving him in the Character aforesaid, or that he did, by her Majesty's Authority, meet, confer, or negotiate with him concerning any Affairs about which he was authorized to treat (in case he had had so done, which however the said Earl doth not admit) or that by Authority from her Majesty he paid the said Sum of One Thousand Pounds to the said Daniel Arthur, which after came to his Use. But the said Earl doth deny, that he advised her Majesty to sign the Warrant for Payment of the said One Thousand Pounds, or gave any Directions for Payment thereof contrary to what was intended by her Majesty: And the said Earl admits, that some other Sums of Money (which might amount in the whole to Nine Hundred and Fifteen Pounds, or thereabouts) were paid in Satisfaction of Monies advanced to the said Lawless, as Part of the Monies agreed to be advanced to his Catholic Majesty by the Affiento Contract: But denies that he directed the Payment of any other Monies whatsoever out of her Majesty's Treasury to the said Lilesh alias Lawless, or knows that any other Monies were paid to him, beside the aforementioned Sum of One Thousand Pounds, and the Monies paid in Satisfaction of what was advanced to him towards the Part due to his Catholic Majesty by the said Affiento Contract. And the said Earl never assumed the supreme Direction in her Majesty's Councils, neither was he advising that the said Person should be introduced to her Majesty, or should be received or treated by her Ministers under the disguised Name of Don Carlo Moro, or should at all be received as a public Minister here. And the said Earl doth acknowledge, that the House of Lords with commendable Zeal made such Address, and came to such Resolution, and that her Majesty made such Answer, and issued such Proclamation, as in the said Article is mentioned. And as the said Earl had always the highest Regard to the Safety of her Majesty's Person, the Security of the Protestant Succession, and Advice and Resolutions of the House of Peers; so he denieth, that he had the least Knowledge, that the said Lilesh alias Lawless, had ever been Minister or Agent to the Pretender at the Court of Madrid, or the least Suspicion that he was sent into England to promote the Interest of the Pretender in these Kingdoms, nor is he conscious to himself, that he hath done any thing to expose the Person of her most sacred Majesty; to enervate or render ineffectual the Advice of Parliament, or her Majesty's Declaration; to countenance any Emissary of the Pretender, or encourage his Adherents, to the Danger of the Protestant Succession as by Law establish'd in the serene House of Hanover: But on the contrary is persuaded his Conduct in that Affair is so well known, as not to need any further Justification; but if it should at any Time be thought necessary, he is able to produce those Proofs of it, which are the best Authority in the World for his Vindication.

In answer to the Sixth additional Article, the said Earl hath been informed, and doth believe it may be true, that after several unsuccessful Attempts by her late Majesty, in Conjunction with her Allies, to establish his present Imperial Majesty upon the Throne of Spain, Instructions in Writing were given to Mitford Crow, Esq; about the Seventh Day of March, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Five, taking notice her Majesty had been informed, that the People of Catalonia were inclined to cast off the Yoke imposed on them by the French, and to return the Obedience of the House of Austria; and that her Majesty, desiring to maintain and improve that good Disposition in them, and to induce them to put the same speedily in Execution, had made choice of him to carry on so great a Work, for the Advantage of her Service, and the Good of the common Cause, as was the making a Treaty with the Catalans or any other People of Spain, for the Purpose aforesaid: and that the said Mitford Crow was thereby impower'd to give the Catalans, or other Spaniards, Assurances of her Majesty's utmost Endeavours to procure the Establishment of all such Rights and Immunities, as they had formerly enjoyed under the House of Austria, and the Confirmation of such Titles as had been conferr'd on any of them by the Duke of Anjou: And that for their further Satisfaction, her Majesty had sent to King Charles the Third for Powers for confirming the same to them, and was willing, if they insisted on it, to become Guarantee that it should be done. And the said Earl hath been likewise informed that her Majesty, in a Commission granted to the said Mitford Crow, expressed, that she thought fit to enter into a Treaty with the Principality of Catalonia, or any other Province of Spain, on Condition they would acknowledge and receive Charles the Third as lawful King of Spain, and utterly abdicate the House of Bourbon, and join their Forces with her Majesty's; and that her Majesty was pleas'd also to sign and deliver to the said Mitford Crow, Credential Letters, directed to the Nobility, Magistracy and other Officers of Catalonia, or any other Province of Spain, desiring them to give Faith to every thing the said Mitford Crow would tell them in her Majesty's Name: And that Instructions were likewise given to the Earl of Peterborough and Sir Cloudesty Shovel, about the Time and to the Effect in the said Article mentioned; and that a Manifesto or Declaration was afterwards publish'd by the said Earl of Peterborough, to the Effect in the said Article set forth: But the said Earl denies, that such Manifesto or Declaration was prepared by his Advice or Privity. And the said Earl believes it may be true, that some Part of the Nobility, Clergy, and Inhabitants of the Principality of Catalonia, and also of the Inhabitants of the Island of Majorca, did afterwards acknowledge King Charles the Third (now Emperor) for their lawful Sovereign, and did join their Arms with those of her Majesty and her Allies against the present King of Spain; but by what Motives they were induced thereunto, the said Earl doth not know. And the said Earl doth acknowledge, that for some Time the Arms of her Majesty and her Allies in Spain were attended with considerable Successes, in which the Bravery of the Catalans appear'd, and the Forces of the Confederates twice enter'd the capital City of that Kingdom: by which signal Conquests, and the great Supplies that have been granted by Parliament for their Assistance, the said People were under the highest Obligations of Gratitude to her Majesty: But the Advantages those Successes had given King Charles the Third being lost, her Majesty found the Burthen of that War very heavy to her Subjects, the Conquest of Spain for the present Emperor impracticable, and after the Accession of the Empire and Descent of the Hereditary Countries to him, esteem'd inconsistent with the Interest of many of her Allies, and therefore thought it necessary for the Good of her People,

People, and the Tranquility of Europe, to enter into Negotiations for a general Peace. But the said Earl denies that he entered into any Conspiracy for subjecting the Spanish Monarchy to the House of Bourbon, or ever had the least Design of the Ruin or Destruction of any of the Rights, Liberties, or Privileges of the Catalans, or that he ever formed any Contrivance for abandoning them to the Fury or Revenge of the Duke of Anjou, or his Adherent; or for the Extirpation of any of their Rights, Liberties, or Privileges; or that he advised her Majesty to give Directions to the Lord Lexington to acknowledge the Duke of Anjou King of Spain, before any Negotiation of Peace was set on foot in form of Law, between the Crowns of Great Britain and Spain. On the contrary the said Earl saith, that by Letters and Papers sent by one of her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State to the Lord Lexington, it will appear, that after her Majesty had hearkened to the Proposals for a general Peace, for the Good of her own People, and her Allies, she used her best Endeavours for obtaining the Liberties of the Catalans, at the Conclusion of the Peace, and that his Lordship was directed peremptorily and absolutely to insist thereon: Nor doth the said Earl know or believe, that any Orders were ever sent from or given by her Majesty, to any of her Ministers, to recede from that Demand; or that the said Lord Lexington ever desisted from making the utmost Efforts he could for obtaining it. And if from any Measures of the Catalans, or of his Imperial Majesty, or from any other Cause, her Majesty's Endeavours had not their full Effect; the said Earl conceives it cannot be imputed to any Neglect of her Majesty, or any Want of Duty in him the said Earl. He believes, that about the Time in the said Article mentioned, his Imperial Majesty did enter into a Convention or Agreement for evacuating Catalonia; and that her Majesty, out of Inclination to perform her best Offices to the Emperor, was prevailed on to become one of the Guarantees thereof; but denies, that his Imperial Majesty was necessitated by any Practices of the said Earl to make any such Convention, and is ignorant for what Causes his Imperial Majesty, whom it most concerned, omitted, in such Convention, to make express and positive Stipulations for the Liberties of the Catalans. If it proceeded from any Dependence upon the Declaration of her Majesty, to interpose her best Offices on their Behalf, and the Promises of the French King to join his Endeavour therein; he is confident it will appear, her Majesty's best Offices were employed in that Affair, when it is considered what repeated Instances she made by her Ministers, and in the most pathetic Manner to obtain for them the Privileges they desired. And that her Majesty, by her earnest Interposition, did obtain a Grant and Confirmation to all the Inhabitants of Catalonia, of a perpetual Amnesty and Oblivion of all that was done in the late War, the full Possession of all their Estates and Honours, and a further Grant of all their Privileges which the Inhabitants of both Castiles (who of all the Spaniards were most dear to the King of Spain) enjoy'd, or might at any Time after have or enjoy; whereby the Catalans, if they obtained not all the antient Privileges they pretended to, received however in Compensation thereof, the Advantage of trading directly to the West-Indies, and other Privileges, to which they were never before intitled. And the House of Peers, upon Consideration of several Papers laid before them, relating to this Affair, in Pursuance of their Address to her Majesty in that Behalf, expressed their utmost Thankfulness and Satisfaction for her Majesty's repeated and earnest Endeavours for preserving to the Catalans the full Enjoyment of all their just and antient Liberties. And it is probable her Majesty had prevailed to obtain for them the antient Privileges and Liberties, in the largest Extent, if they had waited the Event of her gracious Interpositions in their Favour, and not determined to carry on the War by themselves against King Philip, after the Emperor had signed the Convention for evacuating their Country, which incensed the King of Spain in the highest Degree, and was look'd upon by him as the most obstinate Rebellion. However, the said Earl saith, he never amus'd the Catalans with any Expectations whatsoever, nor in any degree contributed to engage them in any obstinate Defence against the Duke of Anjou; nor advised her Majesty to conclude a Peace with Spain without Security for the antient Rights, Liberties and Privileges of that People; or to send Sir James Wisbart with a Squadron of Men of War, for the Purposes in the said Article mentioned: But believes her Majesty might think herself obliged, by being Guarantee to the said Convention, for the evacuating Catalonia, to send the said Sir James Wisbart into the Mediterranean with a Squadron of Men of War, although he knows not the Orders or Instructions given on that Occasion; and humbly apprehends, that he cannot, in Justice, be charged with any Consequences from that unhappy People's Refusal to comply in their Submission to the King of Spain, upon the Terms her Majesty had stipulated for them.

Thus the said Earl has laid his Case before your Lordships, wherein he hopes he hath fully answered the several Articles exhibited against him: Yet, lest there should be any Omission in his Answer, which may be made use of to his Prejudice, he says, he is not guilty of all, or any of the Matters contained in the said Articles, or any of them, in Manner and Form as they are therein charged against him; and humbly hopes that your Lordships will excuse any Imperfections, or Defects in the said Answer, with Regard to Expression or Form; and impute whatever of that Kind may appear, to the great Weakness of Body, and ill State of Health which the said Earl now labours, and hath for some Months past laboured under; and that your Lordships will be induced to make all farther due Allowances in his Favour, from the following Considerations, which relate to the Nature of the Charge in general, and the Difficulties with which his Defence of himself, against the Particulars contained in that Charge, is, and must be attended.

Most of the Articles, with which he stands charged, relate entirely to the Negotiations of Peace lately concluded at Utrecht; he doubts not but your Lordships will consider, that he must of necessity be under great Difficulties, in giving a full and particular Account of such a great Variety of Facts as are contained in these Articles; that several of these Facts concern Transactions with the Ministers of Foreign States, who cannot be produced as Witnesses in his Defence, be their Testimony never so material; that many Steps and Proceedings in an Affair of this Nature, where the Interests of several Parties, not only separate from, but some of them also contrary to each other, are to be adjusted, do require great Secrecy and Address in the Management; and that in Treaties between Enemies, such Terms are often proposed, and such Arguments used, as carry a different Appearance from the real Intentions of those that treat: Upon which Accounts, it must be very difficult to set every thing that past in the late Negotiations, with regard to the Enemy, and to the Allies, in a clear Light, and to justify every Step that was taken towards conducting them to the End proposed; especially since the Account of those Transactions, and of the Reasons on which they were founded, cannot, as he conceives, be duly cleared, but by inspecting the entire Series of Letters and Papers, which passed, during the Continuance of these Transactions, and by comparing together such Passages in them, as might give Light to each other, and to the Whole: All which Letters and Papers are (as he is inform'd) now in the Possession of the Honourable House of Commons; nor was it thought fit, upon his humble Application to your Lordships, that he should be indulged with a Copy of them.

He hopes it may not misbecome him, on this Occasion, to observe to your Lordships, that the House of Commons, by being possessed of those Papers, have a fuller View of the whole Progress, and of all the secret Steps of that Negotiation, than perhaps was even in the like Case imparted to any House of Parliament; and they have therefore all the Advantage possible towards forming the Charge against him upon the Articles of his Impeachment; whereas he (the said Earl) being destitute of all Assistance from those Papers, is under great and particular Disadvantages towards making his Defence, in the Points whereof he there stands accused; and he is therefore humbly assured, that, as your Lordships, on the one Side, will not expect from him any such Proofs of his Innocence as can only be drawn from a Perusal of those Papers; so, on the other, you will not admit of all, or any of those Articles, as made good against him, unless the Accusations therein contained, be supported by the clearest and most unquestionable Evidence, of which the Nature of the Facts is capable.

He submits it likewise to your Lordships Consideration, whether in a Negotiation, drawn out into a great Length, where the Advice of all those in high Trust about her Majesty was to be taken, and where several Persons were to be entrusted with the Management of what was agreed upon, he can, with any Colour of Equity, be made answerable for advising and conducting the Whole?

He desires also farther to observe, that every Thing, with which he is charged, was done in the Reign of a gracious Princess, now deceased, who, by Reason of the perfect Knowledge she had of the ill State of Affairs at Home, of the Advances made towards Peace from abroad, and of the Commands, which she at several Times laid on her Servants, had been the best, and indeed could be the only competent Judge, whether she was fraudulently dealt with, led by ill Advice into Measures which she did not direct, and approve, or made an Instrument of sacrificing the Interests of her Kingdoms to the Enemy. It is with great Grief that he finds such Things suggested, as seem to lay a Stain upon the Character of so excellent a Queen, whose Memory he is confident will be for ever dear to this Country: And therefore he takes leave, in the most solemn Manner, to assure your Lordships, that as far as he knows, or can remember, every thing relating to the Transactions of Peace was communicated to her late Majesty, and maturely considered by her, before any Thing was determined thereupon; nor was any Step taken, but in Pursuance of such Determination.

As to the Peace in general, he the said Earl thinks he has very good Reason to say, that the Queen had nothing more at Heart, than to procure so great a Blessing for her People; and that, when it was obtained, she had this Satisfaction in herself, that she had taken the most proper Measures to justify her Conduct, both toward her Allies and toward her own Subjects: For, upon a Review of her Majesty whole Proceeding, in relation to War and Peace, he believes it will appear, and hath in Part appeared by the Answer of the said Earl, to the said Articles, that, as her Majesty entered further into the War than she was obliged by any Treaties subsisting at the Time of her Accession to the Throne, so she contributed more Men and Money towards the carrying it on afterwards, than she was engaged to provide by any subsequent Treaties: That her earnest Desires of Peace being twice frustrated, when such Conditions might have been obtained, as would have fully answered all the Ends for which War was at first declared; that, all our Successes and Victories ending in the annual Increase of the Charge of England, without any further Assistance from our Allies, and her Kingdoms being exhausted to such a Degree (notwithstanding the great Advantages obtained by her Arms) that she was not able to continue the War, upon the Foot it then stood, one Year longer; whilst her Allies refused to continue it, upon those equal Conditions, to which they were by Treaties obliged: She was at last constrained, in Compassion to her People, to hearken to the Overtures of Peace then made her from France, without relying further on the vain Hopes of gaining more advantageous Terms, by protracting the War a Year longer. She had carried it on, for some Time, under that Prospect, without reaping the Benefits proposed, even at Junctures that seemed most favourable to her Demands, and to the Pretensions of her Allies: She had indeed, by that means, raised the Glory of her Arms; but she could not think this a sufficient Recompence for the encreasing Miseries of her People; and therefore resolved to lay hold of the Opportunity, then offered to her, of ending the War by a Peace, if it might be obtained upon Terms every way just, safe and honourable: And those who were then employ'd in her Majesty's Councils, thought themselves obliged to second her good Intentions in this Case, and to obey her Commands with all readiness.

The said Earl presumes, on this Occasion, to mention to your Lordships the Saying of as wise a Man, and as great a General as the last Age produced, the Duke of Parma; when France was in a far lower Condition than now, being almost equally divided between two contending Parties, and Spain was at the Height of its Glory, and he himself at the Head of a Spanish Army, Army, supporting one of those Parties, after Paris itself had been besieged by the other; it was his Opinion (and the Advice he gave to his Master the King of Spain, was grounded upon it) That if France were to be got only by reducing its Towns, the World would be sooner at an End than such a War. The Queen seemed at this Time, with better Reason, to frame the like Judgment; and it was therefore her Pleasure, and a great Instance (as the said Earl conceives) of her Wisdom and Goodness, to think of securing a Peace while she appeared able to carry on the War (her Armies being full and numerous) and before the exhausted Condition of her Kingdoms, and the Impossibility, on her Side, of maintaining so disproportioned an Expence, was discovered by her Enemies. At this Juncture the Queen entered upon a Negotiation of Peace, with Circumstances of great Honour to herself; France applying to her first, on this Account, previously owning her Title, and acknowledging the Right of the Protestant Succession; two chief Grounds, upon which the Declaration of the last War was built. And to the Allies, it was conducted in the same manner as all Treaties of Peace in Confederacies have ever been, and according to the known Laws of Nations in such Cases; the first Motion, and the several Steps of it, as fast as they ripened into Proposals fit for Consideration, being without delay communicated to the States-General.

By the Terms of this Peace, as all reasonable Satisfaction and Security due to any of the Allies, by Treaty, were obtained for them by the Queen, and their just pretensions effectually supported; so larger Advantages were actually procured for Great Britain in particular, than ever had been demanded before, in any Treaty, or Negotiation between this and any other foreign State. The said Earl craves leave, on this Occasion, to appeal to your Lordships, whether all the Ends for which the War was entered into have not, by this Treaty, been fully attained? Whether it does not appear, by the best of Proofs, Experience, that the Kingdoms of France and Spain are by the Conventions of this Treaty most effectually separated? And whether any other Expedient could have been so successful to this purpose, as that whereby it is now happily brought about? Whether the Ballance of Power in Europe be not now upon a better Foot than it has been for a Hundred Years past? Whether the Advantages that have accrued to Great Britain, by this Treaty, do not appear, and have not appeared in the Security of the Protestant Succession, and in his Majesty's peaceable Accession to the Throne, with the universal Applause of his Subjects, in the Additions made to our Wealth by the great Quantities of Bullion lately coined at the Mint, by the vast increase of Shipping, employed since the Peace, in the Fishery, and the Merchandize, and by the remarkable Rise of the Customs upon Import, and of our Manufacture, and the Growth of our Country, upon Export? For the Proof of which Particulars he refers himself to those Offices and Books, wherein an Authentic Account of them is contained.

And as the Terms of the Peace were in these and other Respects manifestly profitable to Great Britain: so the said Earl begs leave humbly to remind your Lordships, that they were communicated to the Parliament, and with their Concurrence, agreed on; that the Peace, thus concluded, was afterwards highly approved by both Houses; that solemn Thanks were rendered to God for it, in all our Churches, as well as in the Churches of the United Provinces; and that her Majesty received, on this Subject, the hearty and unfeigned Congratulations of her People, from all Parts of her Dominions.

These being the real Effects, and this a true Representation of her Majesty's Conduct in the Affairs both of War and Peace; the said Earl sees not how he, or any others then in her Majesty's Service, can be justly charged with betraying the Interests of their own Country, and of the Allies, by negotiating and promoting that Peace, which then was, and (as he hath good Grounds to believe) still continues to be very acceptable and advantageous to these Kingdoms. And, if the Peace itself be not condemned, and it be not even charged upon the said Earl as a Crime, that he advised her Majesty to conclude that Peace, (neither of which appear to him from the Articles) he humbly conceives, it is a particular and extraordinary Hardship upon him, that rough Draughts and Essays towards a Peace, with other Preliminary Steps in a Negotiation, all leading to an End, which he looks upon to be just and profitable, and which is not in any of the Articles alledged to be otherwise, should be brought into so many distinct Heads of Accusation against him. For supposing that, in the Process of so nice and difficult an Affair, subject to divers unforeseen Obstructions and Events, any improper Steps had been taken, which the said Earl doth not admit, but altogether, on his Part, denies; yet, if Things were at last conducted to a right Issue, and ended in an honourable and advantageous Peace, there can be (as he conceives) no just Ground to find fault with the Measures made use of to compass it, because they seemed, before the Accomplishment, to have a different Tendency; especially if it be considered, that scarce any Peace hath been made by a Confederacy, where less Occasion was administer'd for Jealousy among the several Parties, and less Reason given to complain, that every Nicety, required by the Letter of such an Alliance, was not strictly observed. And therefore he humbly hopes, that no Steps taken for obtaining a Peace, approved by the Wisdom of former Parliaments, shall by any succeeding Parliament be accounted criminal, unless it can be made appear, that those Steps were taken contrary to the Queen's Orders, or upon corrupt Views of private Advantage: But that no Charge of this Nature can be made good against him, he presumes to affirm, with great Assurance; nor does he know of any other Persons, justly chargeable upon either of these Accounts.

And as a further Proof, that those who had the Honour to serve her Majesty in the Negotiations of Peace, acted with upright Views and Intentions, and without being conscious to themselves of any Failure in their Duty, either to their Queen, or their Country; the said Earl craves leave to observe to your Lordships, that they never attempted to cover their Actions from public Censure by any Pardon, or Indemnity, thought they have very good Reason to believe, that, had they judged or imagined themselves to have wanted such Security, it might (through the Goodness of the Queen) have easily been obtained.

Nor can he think it an Observation unfit to be made, that, in few of the Articles which concern the Negotiations of Peace, the Charge is founded on any Breach of the Laws of Great Britain; but it is in most of them chiefly on the supposed Infraction of certain Treaties and Alliances with foreign Princesses, or States; and he conceives that such Infractions of Public Treaties, where they do not particularly affect the Interests of Great Britain; being cognizable by the Laws of Nations only, and not by those of the Realm, are not wont to be examined into here at home, and prosecuted as Criminal, but upon the Complaint of some Prince or State, pretending by that means to be injured, and lodging such Complaint in some reasonable Time with the Prince, by the Advice of whose Ministers and Servants such Injury is supposed to have been done. But he knows not, that any such Steps have been taken, since the Peace, by any of the Powers concerned: On the contrary, he believes, that all the Allies, except the Emperor and Empire, made their Peace with the Enemy at the same Time the Queen did; and that none of them did afterwards complain to her Majesty (who survived the said Peace a Year and almost four Months) of any Hardships imposed upon them in it; that the Princes of the Empire, who contributed very little to the War, might have concluded their Peace upon reasonable Terms, at the same Time the other Allies did; and would probably have done it, if the Emperor, on his Part, had been willing to sign together with them, which, he is informed, at the Conclusion of any general Peace, has been seldom done; and particularly at the several Conclusions of the Peace of Munster, that of Nimquen, and that of Ryswick was not practised. And he submits it to your Lordships Consideration, whether the Emperor, having had all reasonable and equitable Satisfaction made him for his Pretensions to the Succession of the Spanish Monarchy, according to the Terms of the Grand Alliance, could have any just Reason to complain of the Queen's Ministers, or those of her Allies, for concluding a Peace, without insisting (on his Account) upon impossible Conditions; especially, when no Provision is made, or offered to be made, to reimburse her Majesty any Part of those vast Sums she had already expended, in Support of his Pretensions: whilst he failed of supplying his Quota, almost in every Part of the War, notwithstanding his new and great Acquisitions. But whether the Emperor, or any other of the Allies, had any just Ground of Complaint, or not, still the said Earl presumes to insist, that it ought to have been signified to the Queen; who upon such Complaint, had she found any of her Servants justly blameable, as disobeying her Orders, or misleading her by their Advice, into unjustifiable and dishonourable Measures, might have punished them forthwith as their Offences deserved: But nothing of this kind having been done he humbly leaves it to be considered by your Lordships, Whether the Silence of the Powers concerned doth not carry in it a strong Presumption, either that they had no real and just Ground of Complaint, in relation to the Terms of the Peace itself, or at least did not look upon the Minister of the Queen as any ways liable to Blame on that Account; and therefore he must again beg leave to express to your Lordships his Concern, that he should be charged as a criminal by the Laws of this Land, for supposed Breaches of Treaties with foreign States, which never were complained of, as such, by those States themselves, during the Life of her Majesty.

He desires farther to observe to your Lordships, that where-ever he is charged with carrying on a private and separate Negotiation, 'tis all along understood, with regard only to the States of the United Provinces; no Step, that was communicated to them, being censured, upon this Account: Whereas all the other Allies had, by Virtue of their Treaties with the Queen, a like Right to a Communication of Councils; and her Majesty was under no Stipulation to act more in Concert with any one, than with all of them.

He does indeed allow it to have been most agreeable to Reason, and to the Interests of State, that the Queen should act in a closer Conjunction with Holland, than with any other of her Allies, because that, next to Great Britain, Holland bore the greatest Share in the Charge of the War: But then, he hopes it will be allowed also, that the States being more interested in the Success of the War than England, and that England having submitted to a greater Share of the Burthen, in order to procure, not only a fitting Security for the States, but such as brought great Advantages to them, though no Benefit to England; it was very reasonable for the Queen to take care of the Interest of her own Kingdoms some other Way: And, since the Advantages she demanded from the Enemy, were such as she might obtain without any Prejudice to the States, it was as lawful for her to negotiate this Matter without communicating it originally, and in the first Rise of it, to them, as it was for her, and the States, to concert their mutual Interests together, without the immediate and express Participation of the other Allies; which, being known to be done, without a Design to Defeat any of the main Ends of the Alliance, was never complained of by any of the Confederates.

And as for the Matters concerted previously with France, for the particular Interest of England, without the original Invention of Holland, the State were so far from Protesting against her Majesty's Measures, and condemning her Conduct in this Respect, that their Minister proffer'd several Times, in their Name, to have led the Way, in the most difficult Part of the whole Negotiation, and to have done his utmost to facilitate the Conclusion of it, provided his Masters might have a Share in the Assiento Contract, and Trade to the Spanish West-Indies; one of those Advantages, which France had discovered its Willingness should be allowed previously and entirely to England.

These few general Observations the said Earl has thought fit to add in the Close of his Answer to the several Articles of his Impeachment; not only in his own necessary Vindication, but also in Defence of her late Majesty's Conduct in the negotiating and concluding a Peace, the perfecting of which she esteemed the greatest Happiness of the Reign. Upon Review of the Two and Twenty Articles with which he is charged, as he is not conscious of any Offence committed by him, with respect to any one of them, so it is with a particular Concern and Surprise that he reflects on these two, wherein he is accused of High-Treason, Treason, for endeavouring to procure Tournay to France, and so deprive the States of that intended part of their Barrier; and for procuring Spain and the West-Indies to the Duke of Anjou, upon his Renunciation of the Crown of France, referring himself to what he has said in his Answer to both these Articles, he here further assures your Lordships (and thinks it is sufficiently known both at home and abroad) that his Opinion and Endeavour, as Occasion offer'd, always were for Tournay's remaining, as it now does, to the States-General. And as to the latter, he doubts not but that what has lately happen'd in France, is a convincing Proof to your Lordships, and to all the World, that the Renunciation was the best Expedient that could have been propos'd towards hindering the two Kingdoms from being united under one and the same Monarch; that that Branch of the Treaty which relates to this Expedient, has fully answer'd its End, and made good the Character given of it by the Queen, That it would execute it self; and therefore, that whoever advis'd this Method of separating the two Crowns, was so far from being guilty of any traiterous Design, that he eminently promoted the Welfare of Great Britain and the Good of Christendom.

The said Earl, with all the Assurances of an innocent Man, begs leave to repeat, that as well in this, as in all other Affairs of State, in which he had the Honour to be employed by her late Majesty, he ever acted according to the best of his Skill and Judgment, with sincere Desires and Intentions to serve the Public, and without any View to his own private Advantage. As he was in several great Stations under her Majesty, he came into all of them by her own special Command, without his seeking or desiring them, and he serv'd her in all with the utmost Respect, Zeal, and Faithfulness. And while he continued in those Stations for many Years, it was with great Wonder and Pleasure that he observ'd, how her Majesty's whole Thoughts, Endeavours, and Time were divided between her Duty to God, and her Love to her People; whose Good and Security she preferred always to her own Ease, and often hazarded her Health, and Life itself to procure it. He knew that the most effectual way for one to recommend himself to her good Opinion, was to act upon the same Principles of Justice, and Love to his Country that she did: And as she abhorr'd the Thoughts of any thing Burthensome or Injurious to her People; so she often express'd herself with the greatest Satisfaction and Delight, when she reflect'd on the Advantages obtained by her for her own Subjects, and the Quiet and Repose she had gain'd for Europe, by that just and honourable Peace, for which, as the present Age doth, so Generations to come will, bless the Memory of that Excellent and Renowned Queen.

OXFORD.

L. H. Steward. Read the Replication of the House of Commons.

The Clerk read the Replication as followeth.

The Commons REPLICATION to the Answer of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer.

THE Commons have considered the Answer of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, to the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him, by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses in Parliament assembled; and do with Astonishment observe, that the said Earl, instead of giving a reasonable and pertinent Answer to the just and heavy Charge brought against him by the Commons of Great Britain, has presum'd not only to deny his advising and being concerned in any Matters of State, in the Articles charged against him; tho' confess'd to be done under an Administration, wherein he was notoriously the first Minister and chief Director: But has also joined therewith a false and malicious Libel; laying upon his Royal Mistress the Blame of every thing, which, by imposing upon her, he had effected against her Honour, and the Good of his Country; thereby attempting to reflect upon the Honour and Justice of the House of Commons, and to cast an Odium upon their Proceedings against him, as tending to asperse the Memory of the late Queen.

But the Commons are of Opinion, that if it were possible to add to the heavy Load of Guilt, in which the Treasons and other most flagitious Crimes committed by the said Earl, have already involv'd him; this base and ungrateful Attempt, to impute them to his Royal Mistress, must bring such a new Weight of Infamy upon him, and so justly provoke the Indignation of the Commons, that they might think themselves obliged to demand your Lordships immediate Justice, for this unwarrantable Attempt upon the Honour of the late Queen, and the Proceedings of Parliament.

But the Commons being sensible that the Treasons and other Crimes whereof the said Earl stands impeached, and the Necessity of bringing him to speedy and exemplary Justice, require that all Occasions of Delay should be avoided; and not doubting that your Lordships will in due time vindicate the Honour of the late Queen, and of the Commons of Great Britain, and the Justice of their Proceedings: The Commons do aver their Charge against the said Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer for High Treason, and other High Crimes and Misdemeanours, to be true; and that the said Earl is guilty of all and singular the Articles and Charges therein respectively contained, in such Manner as he stands impeached; and that the Commons will be ready to prove their Charge against him, at such convenient Time as shall be appointed for that Purpose.

L. H. Steward. Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, it has been usual before the Commons proceed, to say something from this Place to Persons in your Lordship's present Condition; partly by way of Exhortation to a reasonable Confidence in the great Honour, Justice, Wisdom, Integrity and Candour of their Judges, their Peers, the House of Lords in Parliament assembled; and partly by way of Direction, to assist them in their Behaviour and Conduct during the course of their Trial.

But considering the many great Offices your Lordship has borne in the State, your long Experience and known Learning in all Parliamentary Proceedings, I cannot but think it would seem improper for me to be speaking to your Lordship in that Manner.

Wherefore I proceed barely to acquaint your Lordship and others whom it may concern, with such Orders as the Lords have made, which 'tis fit should be taken Notice of thus Early in this Trial.

1. Your Lordship, and all other Persons who have Occasion to speak to this Court, must address your Speech to the Lords in general, and not to any Lord in particular.

2. Your Lordship's Council may be present at the Bar, in order to be heard to any Point or Matter of Law, if such shall arise on either of the Articles for High Treason, and that you may make your full Defence by Council, if you think fit, on the Articles for High Crimes and Misdemeanors, as well on Matters of Fact as of Law.

3. That your Witnesses are to be examined on Oath as well to the Articles for High Treason, as those for High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, the Distance between this Place and the Bar is so great, that I hope your Lordships will excuse me, if I go to the Table for the better hearing of what shall be said during this Trial.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the Lord High Steward went down, and seated himself by the Table.

Serj. at Arms. O yes, &c. (as before.)

L. H. Steward. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, you will be pleased now to proceed.

Mr. Stanbope. My Lords, the Distance of the Lord High Steward from this Place, may have been the Occasion, that we have mistaken something that fell from thence; we do therefore desire to avoid all Mistakes (and I believe we might be mistaken) for we understood my Lord High Steward, that Council should be allowed the Prisoner at the Bar, as well to the Defence of the High Treason, as to the High Crimes and Misdemeanors; it is possible we misapprehended his Lordship, but we hope his Lordship will be pleased to explain it to us.

L. H. Steward. To prevent Mistakes, I repeat what I said, and it is this. That Council for the Lord (the Prisoner at the Bar) may be present at the Bar, in order to be heard to any Matter or Point of Law (if any such shall arise) relating to the High Treason, and likewise to make that Lord's full Defence on the Articles of Impeachment of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, as well in Matters of Fact, as Matters of Law.

Mr. Hampden. MY Lords, the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament assembled, out of indispensable Duty to their Country, and Zeal for the Preservation of the common Liberties of Europe, have brought to your Lordships Bar Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, late High Treasurer and a Privy Counsellor of this Kingdom, charged with the highest Crimes and Misdemeanors, by him committed and done against the Person, Crown and Dignity of his Sovereign, the Peace and Interest of this Kingdom, and in Breach of the several Trusts reposed in him.

The Commons in their Charge set forth, the many solemn Treaties and Alliances which had been entered into between the Crown of England, and other Princes and Potentates of Europe, for their mutual Safety, from the Considerations of the common Danger which then threatened all Christendom from the immoderate Growth of the Power of France.

They likewise take Notice to your Lordships of the prosperous and flourishing Condition which the Liberties of Europe were in when, under these Treaties and Alliances, it pleased Almighty God to bless the Confederate Arms under the Command of their Great and Victorious General the Duke of Marlborough, with such a Series of Successes, as far exceeded their own Expectations, and by the Wisdom and Unanimity of their Councils, the Glory of the Confederate Arms, and the Reputation of Great Britain in particular, was rais'd to a higher Pitch than in any former Age.

That in this prosperous Condition of Affairs, the Prisoner at the Bar, with other evil-minded Persons, Enemies to the true Interest of their Country, as well as to the common Liberties and Welfare of Europe, did by many wicked Arts an Insinuations obtain Access to her late Majesty Queen Anne, got into her Councils and into Places of the highest Trust, to make way for his and their pernicious Enterprizes, form'd a treacherous Correspondence with the Emissaries of France, and gave false and destructive Councils to her Majesty.

The particular Articles exhibited by the Commons, to which proper Evidence will be apply'd, contain a Charge.

That this Great Person at the Bar, having no Regard to the Honour or Safety of his Sovereign or these Kingdoms, wherewith he was entrusted, or to the many solemn Engagements with the old and faithful Allies of this Nation, but being devoted to the Interest and Service of the common Enemy, did, by private and secret Negotiations in Breach of all public Faith, maliciously and wickedly cultivate and improve the Demands of the Enemies of his Country, more to their Advantage than they themselves could have ever hoped for.

That by clandestine and secret Negotiations with the Enemies of England, he gave up the particular Interest of his own Country: That he assumed to himself Regal Power, and in a time of open War took upon himself to meet and treat with the Enemy, without any Authority or Power from his Sovereign, and did what in him lay to subvert the ancient and established Constitution of this Kingdom.

That he conceal'd the Advice and pernicious Influence whereby he had engaged his Sovereign and prostituted her Honour, which had been raised to the highest Pitch of Glory abroad, and been justly held in Veneration with her Allies; and the Royal Hand was by the wicked Arts of the Prisoner at the Bar, made the Instrument to advance the Interest of the common Enemy.

That by deceitfully amusing the Allies of the Crown of Great Britain, and by private, separate and unjustifiable Negotiations, entered into, and carry'd on by the Prisoner at the Bar, a lasting Reproach was brought upon this Nation, and the public Faith of many Treaties, wherein England was engaged in the most sacred and solemn Manner, was notoriously Violated, and the faithful Allies of the Crown Amus'd and Deceiv'd.

That the Prisoner at the Bar did in the most fatal Manner impose upon and Delude his Sovereign in accepting a pretended Expedient from the Enemy, which the Enemy at the same time declar'd to be Null and Void. That the most unjustifiable and destructive Measures were taken by him to dissolve the whole Confederacy, without any Regard to Religion, Liberty, or the Faith of Treaties; and in Consideration of his wicked Advice, great Numbers of the Confederate Troops, who had on many Occasions signiliz'd themselves in the Defence of the Cause of Europe, were given up as a Sacrifice Sacrifice to the Fury and Revenge of the Enemy.

My Lords, The Commons in their Charge set forth the particular Measures concerted and taken by the Prisoner at the Bar, to complete the Destruction of the Common Cause of Europe, and the Protestant Succession to the Crown of these Realms. And they Charge

That the Prisoner now before your Lordships did traiterously Aid, Assist, and Adhere to the Enemies of his Queen and Country, and advis'd and promoted the giving up to those Enemies the important Town and Fortress of Tournay, together with Spain and the West-Indies.

That he Sacrificed the Trade and Commerce of Great Britain to its common Enemy without the least Shadow of Advantage procur'd to these Kingdoms, and Betray'd the National Faith and Honour of the Crown, employing against his Imperial Majesty (the Great and Faithful Ally of this Kingdom) the Naval Power of the Crown, and the Supplies granted by Parliament, in direct Violation of the Grand Alliance, and contrary to her Majesty's repeated Declarations from the Throne, and her plain and full Instructions to her Plenipotentiaries at Utrecht.

That he took upon himself to Exercise the most arbitrary and unwarrantable Authority; assuming to himself the chief Direction and Influence in her late Majesty's Councils, and most wickedly prostituted the Honour of the Crown, and the Dignity of Parliaments, totally depriving her Majesty of the wholesome and necessary Advice of her Parliament, and Misrepresenting the most Essential Parts of the Negotiations of Peace, to obtain the Sanction of Parliament to his wicked and pernicious Proceedings, thereby fatally Deceiving her Majesty, her Allies, her Parliament, and her People, by several false Speeches and Declarations, concerted and advis'd by him, to be made by her Majesty from the Throne to her Parliament on the Subject of the said Negotiations of Peace; and by such wicked and unexampled evil Council, he did most ungratefully abuse the Favour of his Royal Mistress, and by means of her Authority misled her Parliament into Groundless and Prejudicial Resolutions; and thereby not only prevented the just Advice of the Parliament to her Majesty in that CRITICAL JUNCTURE, but obtained the Approbation of Parliament to his MYSTERIOUS and DANGEROUS PRACTICES; and did not only Deprive her Majesty of the Confidence and Affection of her Allies, but Expose her Majesty and her People to the Contempt of the Enemy.

That he has us'd his utmost Endeavours to Subvert the Ancient Constitution of Parliaments, the Great and only Security of the Prerogative of the Crown, and of the Rights, Liberties, and Properties of the People, and most wickedly attempted to destroy the Freedom and Independency of this Noble House, the great Ornament and nearest Support of the Crown; disguising his mischievous Intentions, under pretence of Superior Zeal for the Prerogative of the Crown, but by his false Advice her Majesty was depriv'd of the seasonable and wholesome Councils of her Parliament, and the Prerogative perverted to the Dishonour of the Crown, and the irreparable Mischief to the Constitution of Parliaments.

My Lords, The Commons have further charg'd the Noble Lord with Corruptions, in illegally misapplying Monies appropriated by Parliament, and with preventing any Parliamentary Enquiry into the same, to the Reproach and Scandal of Parliaments in Breach of his Trust, the highest Abuse of the Goodness of his Sovereign, and the greatest Injustice and Oppression of her Subjects, and that he defrauded her late Majesty of the Public Money with which he was entrusted for the Support of the Honour and Dignity of the Crown.

That this Great Person did assume to himself the Supreme Direction in her late Majesty's Councils, and did introduce to her Majesty for a pretended public Minister, a TRAYTOR in Disguise named in the Articles; and gave such Traytor several considerable Sums out of her Majesty's Treasure, in a Fictitious and Scandalous manner; such Person being sent into this Kingdom under false Pretences, secretly to promote the Interest of the PRETENDER, whereby the Prisoner at the Bar did ungratefully expose the Person of her Majesty, and notoriously encourage the Adherents of the Pretender, to the apparent Danger of the Protestant Succession to the Imperial Crown of these Realms. And,

Lastly, That this Great Person at the Bar did, by the most false and wicked Councils and Practices, Betray and give up as a Sacrifice to the implacable Resentments of their enrag'd and powerful Enemy, a Free and Generous People, the faithful and useful Allies of this Kingdom, the brave CATALANS: who by the Evil Measures concerted and taken by the Prisoner at the Bar, were Betray'd into irrecoverable Slavery, and the Honour of the British Nation, always Renown'd for the Love of Liberty, and for giving Protection to the Distressed Asserters of it, therein most basely prostituted by the pernicious and detestable Council of the Prisoner at the Bar.

Thus your Lordships have a View of the Guilt in which the Treasons and other Crimes committed by the Prisoner at the Bar have involv'd him: And it is with Astonishment the Commons observe, that his Defence is an Attempt to asperse the Memory of his Royal Mistress with the Blame of what was transacted during his Administration, which by imposing upon her he had effected against her Honour, and the Good of his Country; thereby attempting to reflect upon the Justice of the House of Commons, and to cast an Odium upon their Proceedings against him. But we doubt not your Lordships Vindication of the Honour of her late Majesty, and the Proceedings of the Commons in this Prosecution.

The Commons think it their Duty to express their utmost Abhorrence of the traitorous and wicked Proceedings of the Prisoner at the Bar, and to shew their Resentment against him, as the Author and Promoter of them.

They have found him Abusing and Betraying the Honour of his Royal Mistress, into whose Favour he had insinuated himself for the most destructive and wicked Purposes. They have found him insidiously dividing and weakening Us and our Allies: Betraying our Councils; traiterously giving up our strong Holds, Fortresses and Defences of Europe, and her most Wealthy and Flourishing Countries to the Common Enemy in time of OPEN WAR: And contriving and effecting the Dissolution of the greatest and most noble Confederacy that ever formed and united in Defence of the Protestant Interest, and the glorious Liberties of Europe.

They have found him attempting to deprive these Kingdoms of the only Blessing left to their Hopes, and and which, by the Providence of God only, they now enjoy the most auspicious Government of his present Majesty, the Greatest and Best of Princes, whose Magnanimity, Wisdom, Piety, and other princely Virtues have fill'd the Imperial Throne of Great Britain with a Lustre unknown in any former Age. In this Attempt the Noble Lord at the Bar wickedly endeavour'd to Defeat us of our happy Prospect of lasting Felicities, in a long Succession of Protestant Princes in the Royal Line of his most Excellent Majesty, the most Illustrious Prince and Princess of Wales, and their Issue, eminently endow'd with all Graces and Accomplishments for making a generous and free People happy: On the Continuance of which Succession, next under God, all that is Dear and Valuable to us entirely depends.

My Lords, The Commons justly Resent and Detest the Reproach brought upon the Faith and Honour of their Country, by the great Evil Minister at the Bar: But they promise themselves your Lordships will ever be a Terror to all Evil Ministers, how Great soever; and that your Lordships can never fail to do Justice to your injur'd Country, upon all Perfidious Counsellors, who lie in wait to destroy our Religion, Laws and Liberties.

Sir Joseph Jekyll. My Lords, by the Commands of the House of Commons, I appear to make good that Part of the Charge against the Noble Lord at the Bar, which is contain'd in the first Article.

Here the Lord Harcourt moved to adjourn to the House of Lords.

L. H. Steward. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Steward. This House is adjourn'd to the Chamber of Parliament.

And being adjourn'd accordingly, the Lords and others return'd in the same Order they went down.

And the House being Resum'd, this Question was moved and stated,

That the Commons be not admitted to proceed in order to make good the Articles against Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer for High Crimes and Misdemeanors, till Judgment be first given on the Articles for High-Treason:

And a Debate ensuing thereupon,

The previous Question was put, whether that Question shall be now put?

It was Resolved in the Affirmative.

And the main Question being accordingly put, viz.

That the Commons be not admitted to proceed, in order to make good the Articles against Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer for High Crimes and Misdemeanors, till Judgment be first given on the Articles for High-Treason?

It was Resolved in the Affirmative.

Ordered, That the said Resolution be communicated to the Commons by the Lord High Steward.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Mr. Browning and Mr. Orlebar, two Masters of the Court of Chancery, to acquaint them, that the Lords are now about going down into Westminster-Hall.

The Messengers return'd, and acquainted the House, that they had delivered their Message, and that the Commons were preparing to go immediately into Westminster-Hall.

Then the House was again adjourn'd into Westminster-Hall; and the Lords being there seated, and the House resumed, the Lord High Steward acquainted the Managers for the Commons, that their Lordships had come to a Resolution, that the Commons be not admitted to proceed in order to make good the Articles against Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer for High Crimes and Misdemeanors, 'till Judgment be first given on the Articles for High-Treason.

Sir William Thomson. My Lords, the Managers for the Commons conceive it to be the undoubted Right of the Commons to proceed in their own Method in Maintenance of the Articles exhibited by them; and do apprehend that this Resolution of your Lordships may be of such fatal Consequence to the Rights and Privileges of all the Commons of Great Britain, that they cannot take upon them to proceed any further, without resorting to the House of Commons for their Direction herein:

L. H. Steward. Is it your Lordships pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then the House adjourn'd to the Chamber of Parliament. And being Resum'd,

The Earl of Oxford was Order'd to be Remanded to the Tower, and to be brought again to the Bar in Westminster-Hall to-Morrow at Eleven o'Clock in the Forenoon, in order to proceed further on the Trial of the said Earl.

Die Martis 25 Junii, 1717.

THE House of Lords being met as usual in the Chamber of Parliament, it was there Ordered, that a Message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint them that the Lords have Ordered Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer to be brought to the Bar of their House in Westminster-Hall this Day at Eleven o'Clock in the Forenoon, in order to proceed further on the Trial of the said Earl.

And a Message was sent accordingly by Mr. Holford and Mr. Lovibond, two of the Masters of the Court of Chancery.

A Message was sent from the House of Commons by Mr. Carter and others, that the Commons having taken into their Consideration their Lordships Resolution communicated to their Managers relating to the Proceedings on the Trial of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and being desirous to preserve a good Correspondence between the two Houses, have appointed a Committee to search Precedents upon a matter of this great Importance, and desire that their Lordships will not proceed at the time appointed.

Ordered, That the Messengers of the House of Commons be called in and acquainted, that the Lords having taken the Message of the Commons into their Consideration, their Lordships will not proceed on the Trial of the Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer at the time appointed, but will proceed further on the said Trial on Thursday next at Eleven o'Clock in the Forenoon.

Accordingly the Messengers were called in and acquainted therewith.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower do take back the Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer to the Tower, and do bring the said Earl to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall on Thursday next at Eleven o'Clock in the Forenoon, in order order to proceed further on the Trial of the said Earl.

Die Jovis 27 Junii, 1717.

THE House of Lords being met as usual, a Message was sent from the House of Commons by the Lord Morpeth and others, to desire a Conference with the House of Lords, in relation to Proceedings in the Prosecutions of Impeachments. To which the House agreed.

And the Commons were called in and told, that the Lords do agree to a Conference as is desired, and appoint it presently in the Painted Chamber.

Then several Lords were named Managers of the Conference.

The House being informed, that the Commons were ready for the Conference, in the Painted Chamber.

The House was adjourned during Pleasure, and the Lords named as Managers went to the Conference: Which being ended,

The House was resumed.

And the Lord Privy Seal reported, that they had been at the Conference, and met Mr. Carter and other Managers, for the Commons, who delivered to their Lordships a Paper as follows.

The Commons having taken into their Consideration your Lordships Resolution, communicated to their Managers, relating to the Proceedings on the Trial of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and being desirous as far as in them lies to maintain a good Correspondence with your Lordships; have desired this Conference, and have commanded us to acquaint your Lordships, that they conceive it to be the undoubted Right of the Commons to impeach a Peer, either for High-Treason, or for High-Crimes and Misdemeanours, or, if they see Occasion, to mix both the one and the other in the same Accusation.

The Impeachment prefer'd against Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer is one continued Accusation, consisting of High-Crimes and Misdemeanours and also of Charges of High-Treason. The Facts on which the Articles preceding those of High-Treason are grounded are laid together in Order of Time, and follow one another successively, in the manner they were committed.

As the Commons thought this the most natural Method for exhibiting the several Articles against the said Earl, they were all of Opinion that they should proceed in the Proof of these several Facts after the same Method, since it is manifest, that in laying open the Course of such a wicked Administration, the preceding Parts of it give Light to those which follow; and that the Proof of several Articles of the High-Crimes and Misdemeanours would naturally lead to the Proof of those of High-Treason.

Your Lordships received these several Articles of Impeachment without making any Exception against the Form in which they were exhibited. The said Earl made his Answer to them in the same Order, and has no where insisted to be tried in any other Method; so that the Commons are surprized to find a Stop put to their Prosecution, by an Objection which has never been started by the said Earl, and which your Lordships had given them so little Reason to expect.

To this must be added, that as the Commons only are Masters of the Evidence, and as upon that Account they are best able to determine, in what Method to proceed for the Advantage of the Prosecution, in the Event of which all the Commons of Great Britain are so highly concerned.

To which they further add, that they see no Reason, but that your Lordships may as well invert the whole Order of the Articles, as prescribe to the Commons those particular Articles on which they are first to proceed; which will necessarily produce such a Confusion, both in the Facts, and Evidence, as is by no means consistent with that Clearness and Perspicuity in which the Commons think this Affair ought to appear.

The Commons upon examining Precedents, do find divers Precedents of Impeachments for High-Treason and other High-Crimes and Misdemeanours, in the same Accusation; and do not find that the Lords ever objected to such Proceeding, or ever gave Judgment upon any particular Article of an Impeachment before the Commons had gone through, and concluded their Evidence upon all the Articles, or so many of them as they thought fit; and the Commons are at a Loss to conceive what Arguments or Precedents can be brought to support the Resolution of your Lordships, to give Judgment upon one Part of the same Accusation, reserving the other Part for a subsequent Trial, as they are to know what your Lordships mean by admitting the Commons to proceed upon the Articles for High-Crimes and Misdemeanours, after the Judgment is given upon the Articles for High-Treason, supposing the Judgment proper for High-Treason should be given against the said Earl.

For these Reasons the Commons assert it as their undoubted Right to proceed on the Trial of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, after the Method in which their Managers were proceeding, when interrupted by your Lordships Resolution.

The Reasons delivered by the Commons at the Conference were read by the Clerk.

And after Debate, and Reading the Resolution of this House communicated to the Commons on Monday last, viz.

That the Commons be not admitted to proceed in Order to make good the Articles against Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, for High-Crimes and Misdemeanours, 'till Judgment be first given on the Articles for High-Treason:

The Question was put, Whether to insist on the said Resolution?

It was resolv'd in the Affirmative.

Then it being propos'd that a Committee be appointed to prepare what is to be offered to the Commons at a Conference in communicating to them the Resolution for insisting:

And a Question being stated thereupon,

It was mov'd to add these Words to the said Question, viz. [And also to prepare such Reasons as shall be thought proper to be then used in Maintenance thereof.]

And after Debate, the Question was put, Whether those Words shall be added to the said Question?

It was resolv'd in the Affirmative.

Resolv'd upon the Question, and ordered, that a Committee be appointed to prepare what is to be offered to the Commons at a Conference in communicating municating to them the Resolution of this House for insisting on their Lordships Resolution above-mentioned, and also to prepare such Reasons as shall be thought proper to be then used in Maintenance thereof.

Ordered, That all the Lords present be the said Committee.

Then it being proposed, that the Committee meet immediately. And the same being objected to;

The Question was put, Whether the Committee shall withdraw and sit immediately?

It was resolv'd in the Negative.

Ordered, That the said Committee, or any Seven of them, meet to-morrow at Ten o' the Clock in the Forenoon in the Prince's Lodgings near the House of Peers, and to adjourn as they please.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower do take back the Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, and bring the said Earl to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall, on Saturday next at Eleven o' the Clock, in order to proceed further on the Trial of the said Earl.

Die Veneris 28 Junii, 1717.

THE Lords being assembled in their House as usual, a Message was sent to the House of Commons by Mr. Fellows and Mr. Meller, two of the Masters of the Court of Chancery; to acquaint them that the Lords do desire they will continue sitting for some Time.

The Lord Trevor reported from the Committee appointed to prepare what is to be offer'd to the Commons at a Conference in communicating to them the Resolution of this House, for insisting on their Lordships Resolution communicated to the Commons on Monday last, and also to prepare such Reasons as shall be thought proper to be then used in Maintenance thereof, that the Committee have prepared Reasons accordingly, as follow, viz.

Their Lordships, in order to preserve a good Correspondence with the House of Commons (which they shall always endeavour to do as far as lies in their Power) have desired this Conference upon the Subject-Matter of the last Conference, and have directed us to acquaint you, that their Lordships judge it a Right inherent in every Court of Justice, to order and direct such Methods of Proceedings as such Courts shall think fit to be observed in all Causes depending before them, which can have no Influence to the Prejudice of Justice; and where such Methods of Proceedings are not otherwise settled by any positive Rule. The Power of Judicature on all Impeachments being a Right unquestionably inherent in their Lordships, and it not being determined by any positive Rule, whether the House of Commons may proceed to make good the several Articles exhibited for Misdemeanors, in such Order as they shall think fit, before they proceed to make good the Articles exhibited for High-Treason; and there being no Precedent where the Commons upon Trial of any such Impeachments attempted to proceed in the first Place to make good any of the Articles contained in such Impeachment for High-Crimes and Misdemeanours; their Lordships considering the Nature of the Impeachment now depending before them, and the Method wherein the Managers for the House of Commons were beginning to proceed upon the Trial to make good the first Article thereof, which is a Charge for High-Crimes and Misdemeanours only; and also considering the very different Methods of Proceedings on an Impeachment of a Peer for High-Treason, as well before, as upon the Trial thereof, and the Circumstances attending such a Trial, from the Proceedings on an Impeachment of a Peer for High-Crimes and Misdemeanours, and the known Circumstances attending such a Trial, thought themselves obliged to come to the Resolution communicated to the Commons on the Twenty-fourth Instant, as well for the doing Justice in the Case depending before them, as for the preventing a new Precedent to be made on this Trial, in Consequence whereof a new and unjustifiable Form of Proceeding against a Peer upon an Impeachment for High-Treason and High-Crimes, might be introduced at his Trial upon those Articles in which he is charged for High-Crimes and Misdemeanours only, to the Prejudice of the Peerage of Great Britain in all Time to come, viz. the Trying a Peer on Articles for High-Crimes and Misdemeanours without the Bar, the detaining in Custody a Peer so accused, and repeated Commitments of him to the Tower, during the Time of such Trial, and subjecting a Peer to as ignominious Circumstances on his Trial, on Articles for Misdemeanours, as if he were then on his Trial on Articles for High-Treason: Whereas a Peer on his Trial on Articles for Misdemeanours only, ought not to be deprived of his Liberty, nor sequester'd from Parliament, and is entitled to the Privilege of sitting within the Bar during the whole Time of his Trial: In all which Particulars the known Rule of Proceedings in such Cases may be evaded, should a Peer be brought to his Trial on several Articles exhibited against him on High-Crimes and Misdemeanours and for High-Treason mixed together, and the Commons be admitted to proceed in order to make good the Articles for High-Crimes and Misdemeanours before Judgment be given upon the Articles for High-Treason. Their Lordships have fully considered the Matters offered to them by the House of Commons at the last Conference relating to the Proceedings against Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer; and their Lordships are fully satisfied, that the Resolution they have taken and communicated to the Commons on the Twenty-fourth Instant is just and reasonable; and that the House of Commons are not put under any real Inconvenience thereby in carrying on their present Prosecution. Their Lordships have commanded us to let you know that they do insist on their said Resolution, viz. That the Commons be not admitted to proceed in order to make good the Articles against Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer for High-Crimes and Misdemeanours 'till Judgment be first given upon the Articles for High-Treason.

Which Report being read by the Clerk was agreed to by the House.

Then a Message was sent to the House of Commons by Mr. Fellows and Mr. Meller, to acquaint them, that the Lords do desire a present Conference in the Painted Chamber, upon the Subject-Matter of the last Conference.

Ordered, That the Managers of the last Conference be the Managers of this Conference.

The Messengers sent to the House of Commons return Answer, That the Commons will give a present Conference as desired.

The House being inform'd, that the Commons were ready in the Painted Chamber for the Conference the Names of the Managers were read : And,

The House was adjourned during Pleasure, and the Lords named as Managers went to the Conference ; which being ended, the House was resumed : And

The Lord Chamberlain reported, that the Managers had been at the Conference, and delivered to the Commons what they were directed.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Mr. Fellows and Mr. Meller, to acquaint them, That the Lords have ordered the Earl of Oxford to be brought to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall to-morrow at Eleven o'Clock in the Forenoon, in order to proceed further on the Trial of the said Earl.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. Yonge and others, to desire that this House will continue sitting for some Time ; to which the House agreed.

And the Commons were called in and told, That the Lords will continue sitting for some Time, as is desired.

Ordered, That the Lieutenant of the Tower do bring the Earl of Oxford to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall, on Monday next at Eleven o' Clock, in order to proceed further on the Trial of the said Earl.

Die Sabbati 29 Junii, 1717.

THE House of Lords being assembled as usual in the Chamber of Parliament, a Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. Pelham and others; to desire a free Conference with this House upon the Subject-Matter of the last Conference.

Ordered, That this House will send an Answer by Messengers of their own. And

The Messengers were called in, and acquainted therewith.

The House proceeded to take the said Message into Consideration. And after Debate, and reading out of the Journal the Proceedings at the several Conferences in the Case of the Lord Viscount Mordaunt upon his Impeachment in the Year One Thousand Six Hundred and Sixty-six.

The Question was put, Whether to give a free Conference with the House of Commons, as is desired, upon the Subject-Matter of the last Conference ?

It was resolv'd in the Negative.

Ordered, That a Message be sent to the House of Commons, to acquaint them, that the Subject-Matter of the last Conference concerning a Point of Judicature determined by this House after the Trial began, their Lordships do not think fit to give a free Conference on the Subject-Matter of the last Conference, as is desired by the House of Commons.

And also, that another Message be sent to the House of Commons, to acquaint them, That their Lordships have ordered Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer to be brought to the Bar of this House in Westminster-Hall on Monday next at Eleven o' Clock in the Forenoon, in order to proceed further on the Trial of the said Earl ; and Mr. Holford and Mr. Dormer, two of the Masters of the Court of Chancery, were sent accordingly with the said Messages.

Die Luna 1 Julii, 1717.

THE Lords being assembled in their House as usual, and this Day being appointed to proceed further on the Trial of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer in Westminster-Hall, the House (according to Order) was called over by the Clerk ; and the Names of the absent Lords being set down (pursuant to the same Order) they were again called over, and excused.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. Gibbon and others, to desire their Lordships to defer going down into Westminster-Hall for some Time.

Ordered, That the Messengers of the House of Commons be called in and told, That the Lords have considered their Message, and that their Lordships will defer going down into Westminster-Hall for some Time, as is desired.

And the Messengers were called and acquainted accordingly.

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Mr. Craggs and others, to desire a Conference with this House upon the Subject-Matter of their Lordships Message relating to the free Conference desired by the Commons.

To which the House agreed.

And the Messengers of the House of Commons were called in and told, That the Lords do agree to a Conference as desired, and appoint it presently in the Painted Chamber.

Ordered, That the Managers of the last Conference be the Managers of this Conference.

The House being informed, That the Commons were ready in the Painted Chamber.

The Managers Names were read, and the House was adjourned during Pleasure, and the Lords named as Managers went to the Conference ; which being ended, the House was resumed, and the Lord Privy-Seal reported the Effect of the Conference, which was, that the Managers for the Commons had delivered to their Lordships a Paper, containing as follows, viz.

The Commons having taken into Consideration your Lordships Message, viz.

That your Lordships did not think fit to give a free Conference on the Subject-Matter of the last Conference, as was desired by the Commons, and they being still desirous, to the utmost of their Power, to preserve a good Correspondence with your Lordships, have ask'd this Conference ; and have commanded us to acquaint your Lordships, that they are very much surprized to find your Lordships deny a free Conference, after your Lordships had already agreed to a Conference desir'd by the Commons on the said Subject-Matter, and after your Lordships have on your Parts also desired a Conference upon the same Subject.

That free Conferences are the most antient and establish'd Methods for adjusting the Differences that have at any Time arisen between the Two Houses, and; as the Commons conceive, is the only Method to preserve a good Correspondence between them on such Occasions, which at this Time is of the highest Importance, because a Misunderstanding on this Account would tend to defeat the Trial of the Impeachment of the Commons.

That

That the Commons conceive clearly, that the Subject-Matter of the last Conference is not a Point of Judicature, but a Point relating only to the Prosecution of the Commons, it having arisen before any Matter of Judgment had come before your Lordships upon the Trial.

For which Reasons the Commons conceive, that your Lordships ought not to have denied them a free Conference upon the Subject-Matter of the last Conference.

Which being read by the Clerk ;

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Mr. Orlebar and Mr. Browning, two of the Masters of Chancery, to desire they would continue sitting for some time.

Then the House proceeded to take into Consideration the Matter delivered by the Commons at the last Conference.

And it being proposed to insist on denying a free Conference with the Commons ;

And Debate thereupon ;

The Question was put, Whether to insist on denying a free Conference upon the Subject-Matter concerning which a free Conference was desired by the Commons ?

It was resolv'd in the Affirmative.

Ordered, That a present Conference be desired with the Commons in the Painted Chamber on the Subject-Matter of the last Conference, and that the Commons be there acquainted, that the Lords having taken into Consideration the Subject-Matter of the last Conference, their Lordships do insist on denying a free Conference upon the Subject-Matter concerning which a free Conference was desired by the House of Commons.

Accordingly a Message was sent to the House of Commons by Mr. Orlebar and Mr. Browning, to desire a present Conference in the Painted Chamber on the Subject Matter of the last Conference.

The Messengers returned, and acquainted the House, that the Commons do agree to a Conference, as desired.

Ordered, That the Managers of the last Conference be the Managers of this Conference.

Then the House being informed, that the Commons were ready in the Painted Chamber, the Managers Names were read. And

The House was adjourn'd during Pleasure, and the Lords appointed Managers went to the Conference ; which being ended, the House was resum'd, and the Lord Privy-Seal reported, that they had been at the Conference, and acquainted the Commons as above directed.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by the former Messengers, to desire they will continue sitting for some time.

The Messengers being return'd, acquainted the House, that the Commons will continue sitting for some time, as desired.

Then it being mov'd, that a Message be sent to the House of Commons, that this House intends presently to proceed further on the Trial of the Earl of Oxford in Westminster-Hall.

And it being also mov'd, that the House do now adjourn during Pleasure ;

The Question was put, Whether now to adjourn during Pleasure ?

It was resolv'd in the Affirmative.

The House was accordingly adjourn'd during Pleasure.

The House was resum'd.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Mr. Orlebar and Mr. Browning, to acquaint them, that this House intends presently to proceed further on the Trial of Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer in Westminster-Hall.

Then it being proposed provisionally to consider the Form of a Proclamation proper to be made in Westminster-Hall for the Appearance of the Prosecutors, if they should not be there present to proceed, in order to make good their Impeachment against the said Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer ;

And thereupon the Proclamation made the Seventeenth of June, One Thousand Seven Hundred and One, at the Trial of the Lord Somers being read ;

It was agreed by the House, that when the Lords are gone down into Westminster-Hall, immediately after the Lords House shall be resumed in Westminster-Hall, and Proclamation for Silence made, and Proclamation for bringing the Prisoner to the Bar, if the Managers of the House of Commons shall not be there, Proclamation be likewise made in these Words, viz.

Whereas Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer stands impeached of High-Treason, and other High-Crimes and Misdemeanours, by the House of Commons, in the Names of Themselves and of all the Commons of Great Britain, all Persons concern'd are to take notice, that he now stands on his Trial, and they may now come forth in order to make good their said Charge.

Then the House was adjourn'd into Westminster-Hall, and the Lords being come down into Westminster-Hall, and seated in the usual Manner about Five in the Evening ;

L. H. Steward. My Lords, the House is resumed—Make Proclamation for Silence.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, &c. (as before.)

L. H. Steward. Make Proclamation for the Lieutenant of the Tower of London to bring the Prisoner to the Bar.

Serj. at Arms. O Yes, &c. Lieutenant of the Tower of London bring forth your Prisoner to the Bar, according to the Order of the House of Lords to you directed.

The Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer being brought to the Bar accordingly, and the Commons not being present.

L. H. Steward. Make Proclamation according to the Order of the House of Lords.

Then the Serjeant at Arms made the following Proclamation according to the said Order of the House of Lords, the Clerk of the House of Lords reading it to him as followeth :

Serj. at Arms. Whereas Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer stands impeached of High-Treason, and other High-Crimes and Misdemeanours, by the House of Commons, in the Name of Themselves and all the Commons of Great Britain, all Persons concern'd are to take Notice, that he now stands upon his Trial, and they may now come forth in order to make good their said Charge.

After about twenty Minutes Silence, the Lord Guilford mov'd for an Adjournment to the House above.

L. H. Steward. Do your Lordships hear what is mov'd, is that your Lordship's Pleasure ?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Steward. This House is adjourn'd to the Chamber of Parliament.

And

And being returned in the same order they went down,

The House was resumed.

Then it was proposed, that Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer be acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Commons for High-Treason, and other High Crimes and Misdemeanors, and of all things therein contained, and that the said Impeachment be dismissed.

And a Question being stated thereupon, it was moved to leave out these Words (viz. and other High Crimes and Misdemeanors;) and thereupon the Question being put,

Whether those Words shall stand part of the Question;

It was Resolved in the Affirmative.

Then the last Question being again stated,

Ordered, That the Question now stated be the Question to be put in Westminster-Hall.

Then the Lord High Steward desiring that further Directions might be given concerning the further Proceedings in the Trial of the said Earl in Westminster-Hall, it was agreed by the House and Ordered, that in Westminster-Hall the Lord High Steward shall read the Question as already stated; and then call to the lowest Baron first, and to every other Lord then present, and ask him his Opinion whether Content or not Content; and that every Lord shall stand up when called to, and give his Vote Content or not Content; and that the Lord High Steward having taken the Votes, shall declare the Majority; and if the Majority answer in the Affirmative, the Lord High Steward is to declare the same, and particularly to the Earl of Oxford as soon as he shall be brought to the Bar, and shall immediately pronounce the Judgment of this House in the Form following, (viz.) It is considered, ordered and adjudged by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, that Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer shall be, and is hereby acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Commons for High-Treason, and other High Crimes and Misdemeanors, and of all things therein contained; and that the said Impeachment shall be, and is hereby dismissed. And shall immediately direct the Lieutenant of the Tower then to Discharge his Prisoner.

And after that to Dissolve the Commission.

The House was then again adjourned into Westminster-Hall, and being there resumed.

L. H. Steward. Make Proclamation for Silence.

Serj. at Arms. O yes, &c. (as before.)

O yes, &c. Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring forth your Prisoner to the Bar.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, the Clerk acquaints me, that for want of Light in the Passage he could not take an exact List of your Lordships, I therefore desire that he may now take a List of the Lords present.

Then the Clerk took a List of the Lords present.

L. H. Steward. If your Lordships think fit, your Lordships Names shall now be called over.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then their Names were called over.

Lords. The Earl of Oxford is not yet gone from the Bar.

Then the Earl was ordered to withdraw from the Bar. And being withdrawn,

L. H. Steward. My Lords, I shall now state

the Question, upon which your Lordships are to give your Votes; it is this, That Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer be acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Commons for High-Treason, and other High Crimes and Misdemeanors, and of all things therein contained, and that the said Impeachment be dismissed.

L. H. Steward. The Clerk should attend near the Lords with Candles, as they give their Votes.

Then the Lord High Steward put the Question to their Lordships, beginning at the youngest Baron, in manner following.

L. H. Steward. My Lord, your Lordship has heard the Question stated, what says your Lordship, is your Lordship Content, or not Content?

The Names of the Lords present, who were all Content, are as follows.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, upon the Question Stated, I am Content.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer is acquitted of the High-Treason and other High Crimes and Misdemeanors wherewith he stands charged, by the Unanimous Vote of all your Lordships here present.

L. H. Steward. Call the Earl to the Bar.

Serj. at Arms. O yes, &c. Lieutenant of the Tower of London, bring the Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer to the Bar of this House.

L. H. Steward. Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer, I am to acquaint your Lordship, that your Lordship is acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment Exhibited against you for High-Treason, and other High Crimes and Misdemeanors, by the House of Commons, and all things therein contained; and thereupon I am to pronounce this Judgment, which I pronounce accordingly:

It is considered, ordered and adjudged by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, that Robert Earl of Oxford and Earl Mortimer shall be, and is hereby acquitted of the Articles of Impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Commons for High-Treason and other High Crimes and Misdemeanors, and of all things therein contain'd, and that the said Impeachment shall be and is hereby dismissed.

L. H. Steward. Lieutenant of the Tower of London, you are now to discharge your Prisoner.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, this is all that remains to be done by Vertue of his Majesty's Commission, I do therefore declare the same to be dissolved.

Then the Lord High Steward broke his Staff.

L. Chancellor. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to adjourn to the Chamber of Parliament?

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. Chancellor. This House is adjourn'd to the Chamber of Parliament.

The Earl was immediately discharg'd at the Bar, and paying his Respects to the Lords, and having receiv'd the Compliments of his Friends, went away directly to his own House.

But the House of Commons resent'd this Proceeding so far as to Address the King, that the Earl of Oxford might be excepted out of the then intended Act of Grace, which was done accordingly.

CLXXXIX. The Trials of Major Stede Bonnet and Thirty Three others, at the Court of Vice-Admiralty at Charles-Town in South-Carolina, for Piracy, Oct. 30, &c. 1718. 5 GEO. I.

Then

Then the Judge of the Vice-Admiralty proceeded to give his Charge to the Grand Jury, as followeth.

GENTLEMEN,

WE are here assembled to hold this Court of Admiralty-Sessions; and the Duty of my Office requires me to give in Charge to you the things that you are to Enquire of and to Present.

In a former Admiralty-Charge, by way of Preface or Introduction to the particular Crime of Piracy, which will again now be brought before you;

I then shewed you, First, That the Sea was given by God for the use of Men, and is subject to Dominion and Property, as well as the Land.

And then I particularly remarked to you, the Sovereignty of the Kings of England over the British Seas.

I then proceeded, Secondly, to shew you, That as Commerce and Navigation could not be managed without Laws; so there have been always particular Laws for the better ordering and regulating Marine Affairs; with an Historical Account of those Laws, and their Origin.

Of all those Matters I then spake largely and fully; and shall not now trouble you with any farther Repetition of them.

But I shall now proceed, in the Third place, to shew you, That there have been particular Courts and Judges appointed, to whose Jurisdiction Maritime Causes do belong; and that in Matters both Civil and Criminal.

And then I shall in particular shew you the Constitution and Jurisdiction of this Court of Admiralty Sessions.

And shall mention the Crimes cognizable therein; and shall particularly enlarge upon the Crime of Piracy, that will now be brought before you.

Time will not permit me to speak of the several sorts of Magistrates, to whose Jurisdiction Maritime Affairs do belong, in the Transmarine or Foreign Parts of the World: Therefore I shall confine my self under this Head, only to speak of the Laws of England; by which the general Jurisdiction in Marine Affairs, is by the King as Supreme, as well by Sea as Land, committed to the Lord High Admiral; who, besides his Power over the Navy, and the Government over the Seamen, hath a Jurisdiction^a Civil and Criminal in Marine Affairs, which are decided by his Maritime Judges in the Court of Admiralty, the chief of which is known by the Stile of Supremæ Curie Admiralitatis Angliæ Judex: within those Cognizance, in Right of the Jurisdiction of the Admiralty by the Sea Laws, and the Laws and Customs of the Admiralty of England, are comprized all Matters properly Maritime, and pertaining to Navigation.

As to the Antiquity of the Office of Lord Admiral, and the Court of the^b Admiralty, it is sufficient to remark, that the thing itself that signified that Office, now known to us by the Stile of Lord High Admiral, and the Jurisdiction thereof, hath been in the Kingdom of England time out of mind.

The learned Antiquary Sir Henry Spelman, in his^c Glossarium, and out of him^d Dr. Godolphin gives us the Catalogues of the Admirals from the Reign of King Henry III. Not but that the Office of Admiral is far more ancient: For the same learned Antiquary saith, that he hath not in that Catalogue inserted Marthufus, that Princeps Nautarum, in King Edgar's Time; nor those Tetrarchs of his Navy; nor of those other Commanders in Chief in Sea Affairs, constituted by his Successors Kings of England; but of such only as in the ordinary way have been dignified with the said Office.

The Lord^e Coke in the first part of his Institutes, in honour of the Admiralty of England, saith, "That the Jurisdiction of the Lord Admiral is very ancient, and long before the Reign of Edward III. as some have supposed, as may appear by the Laws of Oleron, (so called, for that they were made by King Richard I. when he was there) that there had been an Admiral time out of mind, and by many other ancient Records in the Reigns of Henry III, Edward I. and Edward II. is most manifest."

But the learned Selden^f in his Notes upon Forsetscue, tells us, That in an ancient Manuscript De l'Office de l'Admiralty, translated into Latin by one Tho. Rowghton, calling it De Officio Admiralitatis, there are Constitutions often mentioned touching the Admiralty of Henry I. Richard I. King John, and Edward I. which shews the great Antiquity of that Court.

And as to the Jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty, not to enter upon the Disputes between the Civilians and the common Lawyers concerning the same; I shall now only observe to you, that it is allowed even by those Statutes that were made purposely to restrain the Jurisdiction of the Court of Admiralty, that that Court ought to have Cognizance of all things done upon the main Sea^g, or Coasts of the Sea. And of the Death^h of a Man, and of Maibem done in great Ships, being and hovering in the main Stream of great Rivers, only beneath the Bridge of the same Rivers nigh the Sea.

And by the Preamble to the Statute of the 28 H. VIII. it is declared, ⁱ that Traitors, Pirates, Thieves, Robbers, Murderers, and Confederates upon the Sea, were tried before the Admiral, or his Lieutenant or Commissary, after the Course of the Civil Law.

But as appears further by the said Preamble that it was found inconvenient to try those Offenders before the Admiral;

Therefore by the said Statute this Court of Admiralty Sessions was appointed, whereby such Offenders were to be tried according to the Course of the Common Law, as if their Offences were committed on Land.

And now I shall proceed to speak of the Crimes cognizable in this Court. And particularly I shall enlarge upon the Crime of Piracy that will come before you.

The Crimes cognizable in this Court, and within the Jurisdiction of the same, by the express Words of the Statute^k are all Treasons, Felonies, Robberies, Murders, and Confederacies, committed in or upon the Sea, or in any other Haven, River, Creek, or Place where the Admiral or Admirals have or pretend to have Power, Authority, or Jurisdiction.

There being only one of those Crimes, viz. Robbery or Piracy, that will come before you, I shall omit the rest, and only speak to that: wherein I shall shew you the Nature of the Offence, and the Heinousness thereof.

Now, as this is an Offence that is destructive of all Trade and Commerce between Nation and Nation; so it is the Interest of all Sovereign Princes to punish and suppress the same.

And the King of England¹ hath not only an Empire and Sovereignty over the British Sea, but also an undoubted Jurisdiction and Power, in concurrency with other Princes and States, for the Punishment of all Piracies and Robberies at Sea, in the most remote Parts of the World.

Now as to the Nature of the Offence: Piracy is a Robbery committed upon the Sea, and a Pirate is a Sea Thief.

Indeed, the Word Pirata as it derived from πείρα, transire, à transendo mare, was anciently taken in a good and honourable^m Sense, and signified a Maritime Knight, and an Admiral or Commander at Sea; as appears by the several Testimonies and Records cited to that purpose, by that learned Antiquary Sir Henry Spelman in his Glossarium. And out of him the same Sense of the Word is remarked by Dr. Cowel, in hisⁿ Interpreter; and by Blount in his^o Law Dictionary. But afterwards the Word was taken in an ill Sense, and signified a Sea-Rover or Robber; either from the^p Greek Word πείρα, Deceptio, Dolus, Deceit; or from the Word πείρα, transire, of their wandering up and down, and resting in no place, but coasting hither and thither to do Mischief: And from this Sense, of κατα θαλάσσαν κακῶς ποιεῖν, Sea-Malefactors were called πειραταί, Pirates.

Therefore a Pirate is thus defined by my Lord Coke^q; This Word Pirate, saith he, in Latin Pirata, is derived from the Greek Word πείρατος, which again is fetched from πείρα, à transendo Mare, of Roving upon the Sea: and therefore in English a Pirate is called, a Rover and Robber upon the Sea.

Thus the Nature of the Offence is sufficiently set forth in the Definition of it.

As to the Heinousness or Wickedness of the Offence, it needs no Aggravation, it being evident to the Reason of all Men. Therefore a Pirate is called^r Hostis Humani Generis, with whom neither Faith nor Oath is to be kept. And in our Law they are termed^s Brutes, and^t Beasts of Prey: and that it is lawful for any one that takes them, if they cannot with Safety to themselves bring them under some Government to be tried, to put them to Death.

And by the Civil Law any one may take from them their Ships or Vessels: so that excellent Civilian^u Dr. Zouch, in his Book De Jure Nautico, saith, In Detestation of Piracy, besides other Punishments, it is enacted, that it may be lawful for any one to take their Ships.

And yet by the same Civil Laws, Goods taken by Piracy gain not any Property against the Owners. Thus in the Roman Digests or Pandects of Justinian^w, it is said, Persons taken by Pirates or Thieves, are nevertheless to be esteemed as free.

And then it follows, He that is taken by Thieves, is not therefore a Servant of the Thieves, neither is Postliminy necessary for him.

And the learned Grotius, in his Book De Jure Belli ac Pacis,^y saith, Those things which Pirates and Thieves have taken from us, have no need of Postliminy, because the Law of Nations never granted to them a Power to change the Right of Property: therefore things taken by them, wheresoever they are found, may be claimed.

And agreeable to the Civil Law are the Laws of^z England, which will not allow that a taking Goods by Piracy doth divest the Owners of their Property, tho' sold at Land, unless sold in Market overt.

Before the Statute of the 25 E. III. Piracy was holden to be Petit Treason, and the Offence said to be done contra Ligantiam suæ debitum, for which the Offenders were to be drawn and hanged: but since that Statute the Offenders received Judgment as Felons.

And by the said Statute of 28 H. VIII.^b the Offenders are ousted of the Clergy.

But still it remains a Felony by the^c Civil Law; and therefore tho' the afore said Statute of 28 H. VIII. gives a Trial by the Course of the Common Law, yet it alters not the Nature of the Offence; and the Indictment must mention the same to be done super altum mare, upon the High Sea^d, and must have both the Words Felonice and Piraticè; and therefore a Pardon of all Felonies doth not extend to this Offence, but the same ought to be specially named.

Thus having explained to you the Nature of the Offence, and the Wickedness thereof, as being destructive of Trade and Commerce; I suppose I need not use any Arguments to you, to persuade you to a faithful Discharge of your Duty, in the bringing such Offenders to Punishment.

And indeed, the Inhabitants of this Province have of late to their great Cost and Damages, felt the Evil of Piracy, and the Mischiefs and Insults done by Pyrates; when lately an infamous Pirate had so much Assurance as to lie at our Bar, in sight of our Town, and to seize and rifle several of our Ships bound inward and outward.

And then had the Confidence to send in his insolent Demands for what he wanted, with Threats of murdering our People he had on board him, if they were not complied with. Which was putting the Province under Contribution.

And the Success he had in going off from our Coast with Impunity, encouraged^e another of those Beasts of Prey to come upon our Coast, and take our Vessels.

And this very Company, which will now be charged before you with the Crime of Piracy, their Ringleader, with many, if not all of the Company, were belonging to that Crew, which first insulted us. And presuming upon their former Success and Impunity, had the Confidence to lie upon our Coast to fit their Vessel, and to go on Shore at their Will and Pleasure; designing, as we had had just Reason to suppose, that when all Things were fitted for their mischievous Designs, to come again to cruize before our Bar, and take our Vessels.

And therefore upon the receiving these Accounts, it was high Time for the Government to fit out a Force against the Pirates; and to endeavour to suppress them, in order to support our Trade and Commerce, which otherwise must have been inevitably ruin'd.

And being under such a Necessity of having Forces raised for that purpose, we cannot sufficiently commend and honour the Zeal and Bravery of those Persons, who so willingly and readily undertook that Expedition against the Pirates; and so gallantly acted their Parts when they engaged them.

But it will not be fit for me to say any more upon that Subject, by reason of the near Relation I stand in to the Commander in Chief in that Expedition; and who is known to you all to have so well acted his Part therein, that as it is not proper, so he needs not my Commendations.

But then I must not omit mentioning to you, that in this Attack made upon those Enemies of Mankind, many of our People lost their Lives in the Discharge of their Duty to their King and Country, and who fell by the Hands of those inhuman and murdering Criminals which will now be brought before you. And the Blood of those murdered Persons, will cry for Vengeance and Justice against these Offenders.

And therefore I hope the Consideration of doing Justice to those Persons who were kill'd in the Service of their Country, will make you to use your Diligence in bringing the Criminals to Punishment, without which the Blood of those Persons will in a great measure be required at our Hands.

I need not expatiate to you upon the Heinousness of the Sin of Murder; a Crime which carries its own natural Horror and Guilt along with it; so that it is altogether needless for me to aggravate it; and the manifest Injustice and Evil of which is evident to all Persons, even by the Light of Nature: So that there is no Nation so barbarous, but by their universal Practice do consent to the Equity and Justice of that antient Law of God, that, Whoso sheddeth Man's Blood, by Man shall his Blood be shed, Gen. ix. 6.

Indeed, I freely grant, that the Greatness of the Crimes the Persons are charged with, should make you the more careful in your Enquiry, and to avoid any Error or Mistake on both Extremes; that as you would not condemn the Innocent, so likewise that you do not acquit the Guilty, always remembering what the Wise Man saith, that He that justifieth the Wicked, as well as he that condemneth the Just, even both are an Abomination to the Lord, Prov. xvii. 15. See Ch. xxiv. v. 24.

I have only this to add, that you being a Grand Jury, your Business is not to try the Prisoners, but to consider whether or no by the Evidence, there is that probable Proof of the Persons being guilty of the Fact charged upon them, as that they ought to be put upon their Trial for the same.

An Indictment found by you being virtually but a legal Accusation, there being another Jury to pass upon them.

But on the other Side, tho' your finding the Bill of Indictment is not conclusive to the Prisoners, but that they will have a Trial, and be heard in their own Defence before another Jury, which properly are said to try the Prisoners, and pass between the King and them upon their Lives or Deaths; nevertheless, you ought to be cautious and diligent in your Enquiry, and not rashly and carelessly find a Bill of Indictment against Persons, and put them upon the Hazard of a Trial for a capital Crime.

But as to those Indictments that will now be brought before you, I am very well assured the Proofs will be so clear and full, that you'll have no Reason to doubt the Truth of the Facts charged therein; and then I shall not question your faithful Discharge of that great Duty and Trust the Law hath reposed in you, in bringing such Criminals to Justice.

Thus having sufficiently explained to you what is likely to come before you, I shall now dismiss you to your Business.

Then the Court adjourned till the Afternoon.

The Court met according to Adjournment.

And the Grand Jury being called over, a Bill of Indictment was given to them against Stede Bonnet, Robert Tucker, Edward Robinson, Neal Paterson, William Scot, and Job Bayley, for feloniously and piratically taking the Sloop Francis with her Goods, Capt. Peter Manswareing, Commander.

^d Hawkins, Ib. Sect. 10. p. 100.

^e Vane.

Then the Court adjourn'd till Wednesday Morning.

Wednesday, October the 29th, 1718.

The Court met according to Adjournment.

THE Grand Jury being called over, a Bill of Indictment was delivered to them against David Hariot, John William Smith, Thomas Carman, John Thomas, William Morrison, William Livers aliàs Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, and John Levit, for feloniously and piratically taking the said Sloop Francis, with her Goods, Capt. Peter Manwareing, Commander.

And another Bill of Indictment against William Eddy aliàs Wedy, Alexander Annand, George Rofs, George Dunkin, Thomas Nichols, John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, and Henry Virgin, for the same Fact, in taking Capt. Manwareing.

And another against James Robbins aliàs Rattle, James Mullet aliàs Millet, Thomas Price, John Lopez, Zachariah Long, and James Wilson, for the same Fact.

Then the Grand Jury returned, finding Billa vera on the Bill of Indictment against Stede Bonnet aliàs Edwards, aliàs Thomas, Robert Tucker, Edward Robinson, Neal Paterfon, William Scot, and Job Bayley, for feloniously and piratically taking the said Sloop Francis, with her Goods, Peter Manwareing Commander.

On the Bill of Indictment against William Eddy aliàs Wedy, Alexander Annand, George Rofs, George Dunkin, Thomas Nichols, John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry and Henry Virgin.

As also a Bill of Indictment against James Robbins aliàs Rattle, James Mullet aliàs Millet, Thomas Price, John Lopez, Zachariah Long, and James Wilson, both for the same Fact.

Then the Court proceeded to arraign Robert Tucker, Edward Robinson, Neal Paterfon, William Scot, and Job Bayley, upon the Indictment, for feloniously and piratically taking the Sloop Francis, Peter Manwareing, Commander.

Who all pleaded Not Guilty.

The Court then delivered another Bill of Indictment to the Grand Jury against Stede Bonnet aliàs Edwards aliàs Thomas, David Hariot, Edward Robinson, Robert Tucker, William Scot, Job Bayley, Neal Paterfon, John William Smith, Thomas Carman, and John Thomas, for feloniously and piratically taking the Sloop Fortune, with her Goods, Capt. Thomas Read Commander.

Another Bill of Indictment against John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, Henry Virgin, James Robbins aliàs Rattle, James Mullet aliàs Millet, Thomas Price, James Wilson, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, for the same Fact, in taking Capt. Read.

And another against William Morrison, William Livers aliàs Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, John Levit, William Eddy aliàs Wedy, Alexander Annand, George Rofs, George Dunkin, and Thomas Nichols, for the same Fact.

Then the Court proceeded to arraign John William Smith, Thomas Carman, John Thomas, William Morrison, William Livers aliàs Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, and John Levit, for feloniously and piratically taking the Sloop Francis, with her Goods, Capt. Peter Manwareing, Commander.

Who all pleaded Not Guilty.

Then the Court adjourned till Thursday Morning.

Thursday, October the 30th, 1718.

The Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN the Grand Jury returned, finding Billa Vera on the Bill of Indictment against Stede Bonnet aliàs Edwards aliàs Thomas, David Hariot, Edward Robinson, Robert Tucker, William Scot, Job Bayley, Neal Paterfon, John William Smith, Thomas Carman, and John Thomas, for taking the said Sloop Fortune, with her Goods, Capt. Thomas Read Commander.

On the Bill of Indictment against John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, Henry Virgin, James Robbins aliàs Rattle, James Mullet aliàs Millet, Thomas Price, James Wilson, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, for the same Fact, in taking Capt. Read.

And on the Bill of Indictment against William Morrison, William Livers aliàs Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, John Levit, William Eddy aliàs Wedy, Alexander Annand, George Rofs, George Dunkin, and Thomas Nichols, for the same Fact.

Then the Court proceeded to the Trial of Robert Tucker, Edward Robinson, Neal Paterfon, William Scot, and Job Bayley.

Clerk. Set Robert Tucker, Edward Robinson, Neal Paterfon, William Scot, and Job Bayley to the Bar.

Then the Petit Jury were called over.

Clerk. You the Prisoners at the Bar: These good Men that were called last, and have here appeared, are those that shall pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon your Lives and your Deaths; therefore if you or any of you will challenge them or any of them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn, you may, and you shall be heard.

Then the Petit Jury were sworn, whose Names were as followeth.

Timothy Bellamy, Foreman.	Thomas Chambers.
George Ducket.
John Rivers.
William Sberiffe.
Benjamin Dennis.
Hugh Durfey.
	Daniel Townsend.
	John Lee.
	Thomas Bee.
	John Barton.
	Richard Fairchild.

Cryer. O Yes, If any Man can inform the Judge of this Vice-Admiralty for the Vice Admiralty Jurisdiction of this Province, and the rest of the Commissioners of this Admiralty-Sessions, or the Attorney-General of this Inquest to be taken between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Prisoners at the Bar, or any of them, of any Treason, Piracy, Murder, or other Felony committed or done by the Prisoners at the Bar, or any of them, let them come forth, and they shall be heard; the Prisoners now stand at the Bar upon their Deliverance.

Then the Prisoners were severally bid to hold up their Hands (which they did.)

Then

Then the Clerk charged the Jury with them thus:

Clerk. You Gentlemen of the Jury that are sworn, look upon the Prisoners, and hearken to their Charge.

Then the Indictment was read, as followeth.

“ THE Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King do upon their Oath present, That “ Stede Bonnet aliàs Edwards, aliàs Thomas, late “ of Barbadoes, Mariner; Robert Tucker, late “ of the Island of Jamaica, Mariner; Edward “ Robinson, late of New-Castle upon Tine, Ma- “ riner; Neal Paterson, late of Aberdeen, Ma- “ riner; Job Bailey aliàs Beely, late of London, “ Mariner; William Scot, late of Aberdeen, Ma- “ riner; the Second Day of August in the Fifth “ Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord “ George, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, “ France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the “ Faith, &c. by Force, &c. upon the High “ Sea, in a certain Place called Cape James aliàs “ Cape Inlopen, about two Miles distant from “ the Shore, in the Latitude of Thirty-nine, or “ thereabouts, and within the Jurisdiction of the “ Court of Vice-Admiralty of South Carolina, did “ piratically and feloniously set upon, break, “ board, and enter a certain Merchant-Sloop, “ called the Francis, Peter Manwareing, Com- “ mander, then being a Sloop of certain Per- “ sons (to the Jurors aforefaid unknown) and “ then and there piratically and feloniously did “ make an Assault, in and upon the said Peter “ Manwareing, and other his Mariners, (whose “ Names to the Jurors aforefaid are unknown.) “ In the same Sloop, against the Peace of God, “ and of our said now Sovereign Lord the King, “ then and there being, piratically and feloniously “ did put the aforefaid Peter Manwareing, and “ others his Mariners of the same Sloop, in the “ Sloop aforefaid, then being in corporal Fear “ of their Lives, then and there in the Sloop “ aforefaid, upon the High Sea, in the Place “ aforefaid, called Cape James aliàs Cape Inlopen, “ about two Miles distant from the Shore, in “ the Latitude of Thirty-nine, or thereabouts, “ as aforefaid; and within the Jurisdiction afore- “ faid, piratically and feloniously did steal, take “ and carry away the said Merchant-Sloop, “ called the Francis, and also twenty-six Hog- “ heads, three Tierces, and three Barrels of “ Rum, of the Value of two hundred and sixty “ three Pounds six Shillings and eight Pence, “ current Money of the Island of Barbadoes; “ twenty five Hogheads of Molosses, of the “ Value of one hundred thirty eight Pounds “ thirteen Shillings and eight Pence, current “ Money of the Island of Antegoa; three Barrels “ and three Tierces of Sugar, of the Value of “ thirty three Pounds, like current Money of “ Antegoa; two Pockets of Cotten, of the Va- “ lue of fifty Shillings, like current Money of “ Antegoa; and about sixty Weight of Indigo, “ of the Value of nine Pounds, like current “ Money of Antegoa aforefaid; one new Cable, “ of the Value of fifty Pounds, Sterling Money “ of Great Britain; nineteen French or Spanish “ Pistoles; two half Moidores of Gold; four- “ teen French Crowns; one Pair of Silver Buckles, “ value ten Shillings, Sterling Money of Great “ Britain; and one Silver Watch, of the Value “ of seven Pounds, Sterling Money of Great

Clerk. Upon this Indictment they have been arraign'd: Upon their Arraignment they have pleaded Not Guilty; and for their Trial have put themselves upon God and their Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether they, or any of them, are guilty of the Felony and Piracy of which they stand indicted, in Manner and Form as they stand indicted, or not guilty. If you find them, or any of them, guilty, you shall then enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, they, or any of them, had at the Time of the Felony of Piracy committed, or at any time since. But if you find them not guilty, &c. And hear your Evidence.

Then Richard Allen, Esq; Attorney-General, spake as followeth:

May it please your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury.

THE Nature of the Crime, Piracy, for which the Prisoners at the Bar are now to be tried, and the Statute of the Twenty-eight of Henry the Eighth, intituled, For Pirates, has been fully and learnedly laid open and explain'd by the Judge in his Charge to the Grand Jury, (at which I am sensible most, if not all of you, were present.) Therefore I shall say but little more on that Head, and only remark, that it is a Crime so odious and horrid in all its Circumstances, that those who have treated on that Subject have been at a loss for Words and Terms to stamp a sufficient Ignominy upon it: Some calling them Sea-Wolves; others Beasts of Prey, and Enemies of Mankind, with whom neither Faith nor Treaty is to be kept. And all this is but a faint Description of these Miscreants: For Beasts of Prey, tho' fierce and cruel in their Natures, yet, as has been observ'd of them, they only do it to satisfy their Hunger, and are never found to prey upon Creatures of the same Species with themselves. Add hereto, that those wild Beasts have neither rational Souls, Understanding, nor Reason to guide their Actions, or to distinguish between, Good or Evil. But Pirates prey upon all Mankind, their own Species and Fellow-Creatures, without Distinction of Nations or Religions; English, French, Spaniards and Portuguese, and Moors and Turks are all alike to them: For Pirates are not content with taking from the Merchants what Things they stand in need of, but throw their Goods over-board, burn their Ships, and sometimes bereave them of their Lives for Pastime and Diversion, as we have had frequent Instances of late, and prove destructive to all

Trade and Commerce in general. And if a Stop be not put to those Depredations, and our Trade no better protected, not only Carolina, but all the English Plantations in America will be totally ruin'd in a very short Time.

The Pirates are become very numerous and formidable in these Parts: The Trade of America is no small Advantage to the Crown of Great Britain. Jamaica, by relation, is ruin'd by those Pirates already; and other Parts of America have suffered most grievously, and are like to share in the same Fate. I know not what is done at home, therefore I can't say no Care at all has been taken of us: But this I do say, no effectual Care has been taken to suppress those Pirates. And if a true Representation of these Matters were laid before his Majesty, we could not but hope for some Redress.

'Tis not my Business to call in question the Conduct of the Spaniards, in breaking up the Bay of Campeachy. They could not but think the turning away such a Number of profligate Wretches, as were got together, must put them on a worse Course of Life: They have done them more Harm since than cutting their Log-Wood; for nine Parts in ten of them turned Pirates, and have lived upon robbing and plundering them and us ever since that Time. That and the great Expectations which so many had from the Bahama Wrecks, where not one in ten proved successful, gave Birth and Increase to all the Pirates in those Parts, English, French, and Spaniards.

I just now instanced Jamaica as a Place that is almost ruin'd by the Pirates: But what Occasion have we to look abroad? What a grievous Dilemma were we ourselves reduced to in the Month of May last? When Thatch the Pirate came and lay off this Harbour with a Ship of forty Guns mounted, and one hundred and forty Men, and as well fitted with warlike Stores of all Sorts, as any Fifth-Rate Ship in the Navy, with three or four Pirate-Sloops under his Command. And after having taken Mr. Samuel Wragg, one of the Council of this Province, bound out from this Place to London, as also one Mr. Marks, and several other Vessels going out and coming into this Harbour, they plundered those Vessels going home to England from hence of about fifteen hundred Pounds Sterling, in Gold and Pieces of Eight. And after that, they had the most unheard of Impudence to send up one Richards, and two or three more of the Pirates with the said Mr. Marks, with a Message to the Government, to demand a Chest of Medicines of the Value of three or four hundred Pounds, and to send them back with the Medicines, without offering any Violence to them, or otherwise they would send in the Heads of Mr. Wragg and all those Prisoners they had on board; and Richards, and two or three more of the Pirates, walked upon the Bay, and in our public Streets, to and fro in the Face of all the People, waiting for the Governor's Answer. And the Government, for the Preservation of the Lives of the Gentlemen they had taken, were forced to yield to their Demands. And some of those very Prisoners now at the Bar were Part of that Thatch's and Bonnet's Crew. Afterwards one Vaughan, another noted Pirate, came and lay off our Bar, and sent in another insolent Message. This roused our Spirits; and tho' reduced to a very low Ebb by Reason of the Calamities of the Indian War, and long and heavy Taxes, we could not bear those Insults, but sent out a Force to suppress them. However, we must own, that that honourable Gentleman, Colonel William Rbett, was the chief, if not the first Promoter of fitting out two Sloops to take some of those Pirates. The Government readily fell in with the Measures proposed: Colonel Rbett went in Person, accompanied by many Gentlemen of the Town, animated with the same Principle of Zeal and Honour for our public Safety, and the Preservation of our Trade.

'Tis probable Vaughan the Pirate, before Things could be got in readiness, might have some Intimation of our Design, and made his way off the Coasts, though all possible Care was taken to prevent it. However, Col. William Rbett and the rest of the Gentlemen were resolv'd not to return without doing some Service to their Country, and therefore went in quest of a Pirate they had heard lay at Cape Fear. About the latter End of September they came up with, and engaged them: The Fight lasted above six Hours, and the Pirates were forced to surrender, tho' the Colonel's Vessel running a-ground, lay under all the Disadvantages in the World, as you are all sensible.

The Piratical Crew at the Bar, and now to be tried, in the Engagement, killed ten or eleven of our Men on the Spot, and wounded about eighteen, several of which died since they came on ashore here.

This Pirate-Sloop was commanded by that noted Pirate Major Stede Bonnet, and formerly called the Revenge, now the Royal James, and was one of those very Sloops that lay off the Harbour of Charles-Town about May last, when they took Mr. Wragg Prisoner, and sent up their insolent Demands to the Governour, as I have mentioned before.

We must all own, that the Undertaking and Design of fitting out those Sloops after these Pirates, was bold and noble, and carried on with Prudence and Courage, and crown'd with Victory and Success; and I hope Col. Rbett, and the rest of the Gentlemen that were with him, will meet with both Thanks and Rewards suitable to their great Merit, and the Credit and Reputation they have brought to this Province by this gallant Action.

But see how Justice follows those wicked Offenders! They are now brought to suffer in that Country which they so lately insulted. 'Tis true, Bonnet had not the sole Command of his Sloop when he lay off the Bar, but was turned out some time before by Thatch, but that was not Bonnet's Fault.

Bonnet's Escape out of Prison is no small Misfortune to us: First, because some will be reproached with conniving at his Escape that had no hand in it, and though they be never so innocent: Secondly, by reason of the ill Consequence that may happen to many Merchants in Case Bonnet makes a Head again, and particularly to the Merchants of this Province.

I hope the great Reward of seven hundred Pounds offer'd by the Government for taking Bonnet and his Master, will make the People vigilant in apprehending them. I'm sure the Government gave frequent and strict Charges to the Marshal for securing him, and ordering Centinels to be placed early in the Evening; and immediately on his Escape,

Escape, set up all Night sending Hue and Cries and Exprefses by Land and by Water, throughout the whole Province; so that it is to be hop'd he will be retaken before this Service be over. I am sensible Bonnet has had some Assistance in making his Escape; and if we can discover the Offenders, we shall not fail to bring them to exemplary Punishment.

And now, Gentlemen of the Jury, I must remind you of your Duty on this Occasion. You are bound by your Oaths, and are oblig'd to act according to the Dictates of your Consciences, to go according to the Evidence that shall be produced against the Prisoners, without Favour or Affection, Pity or Partiality to any one of them, if they appear to be guilty of those Crimes they are charg'd with. And you are not allow'd a Latitude of giving in your Verdict according to Will and Humour.

I am sorry to hear some Expressions drop from private Persons, (I hope there is none of them upon the Jury) in favour of the Pirates, and particularly of Bonnet; that he is a Gentleman, a Man of Honour, a Man of Fortune, and one that has had a liberal Education. Alas, Gentlemen, all these Qualifications are but several Aggravations of his Crimes. How can a Man be said to be a Man of Honour, that has lost all Sense of Honour and Humanity, that is become an Enemy of Mankind, and given himself up to plunder and destroy his Fellow-Creatures, a common Robber, and a Pirate?

Nay, he was the Archpirata, as it is now taken in the worst Sense, or the chief Pirate, and one of the first of those that began to commit those Depredations upon the Seas since the last Peace.

I have an Account in my Hand of above twenty eight Vessels taken by him, in Company with Thatch, in the West-Indies, since the fifth Day of April last; and how many before, no Body can tell.

His Estate is still a greater Aggravation of his Offence, because he was under no Temptation of taking up that wicked Course of Life.

His Learning and Education is still a far greater; because that generally softens Mens Manners, and keeps them from becoming savage and brutish; but when these Qualifications are perverted to wicked Purposes, and contrary to those Ends for which God bestows them upon Mankind, they become the worst of Men, as we see the present Instance, and more dangerous to the Commonwealth.

Gentlemen, most of the said Bonnet's Crew, and particularly the Prisoners at the Bar, to wit, Edward Robinson, Robert Tucker, William Scot, Job Bayley, and Neal Paterfon, are old Offenders, and were with Thatch and Bonnet at the taking of all, or most of these Vessels I have mentioned, and were either with Bonnet or Thatch when they lay off our Bar in May last, and sent up that insulting Message, and were in the Engagement against Col. Rbett, so that there is hardly any room left for the least Pity or Compassion: Who can think of it, when you see your Fellow-Townsmen, some dead, and others daily bleeding and dying before your Eyes?

But the particular Fact or Act of Piracy for which the Prisoners at the Bar are now to be tried, is set forth in the Indictment, for that they the said Edward Robinson, Robert Tucker, William Scot, Job Bayley, and Neal Paterfon, the second Day of August, in the fifth Year of his Majesty's Reign, by Force and Arms, upon the high Sea, in a certain Place called Cape James aliàs Cape Inlopen, in the Latitude of thirty nine, did piratically and feloniously set upon, board, break and enter a certain Merchant Sloop called the Francis, Peter Manwareing Commander, putting the said Manwareing and others in corporal Fear of their Lives; and then and there piratically and feloniously did take and carry from the said Manwareing out of the said Sloop, twenty six Hogsheads and three Tierces, and three Barrels of Rum of the Value of two hundred sixty three Pounds six Shillings and eight Pence, and other the Goods mentioned in the Indictment, of the Value of Five hundred Pounds. We shall call the Evidence, and prove the Fact fully and clearly upon them.

Take Notice, Gentlemen, that the boarding, breaking, and entry of one, if the rest were present and consenting, is the boarding, breaking, and entry of all the rest.

We shall prove, that all the Prisoners at the Bar were at the taking of Manwareing's Sloop, that they all bore Arms, and that they all shared a few Days before they came to Cape Fear: and if so, we doubt not but you'll find them Guilty, and discharge that Duty the Country expects from you.

Mr. Thomas Hepworth. May it please your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Crime the Prisoners now stand charged with, is Piracy, which is the worst sort of Robbery, both in its Nature and its Effects, since it disturbs the Commerce and Friendship betwixt different Nations, and if left unpunished, involves them in War and Blood. What Calamities and Ruin they carry along with them, no Person can be a Stranger to; so that those that bring not such Criminals to Judgment, when it lies in their Power, and is their Duty to do so, are answerable in a great Measure, before God and Man, for all the fatal Consequences of such Acquittals, which bring a Scandal on the public Justice, and are often attended with public Calamities.

It is not therefore, Gentlemen, to be supposed that wise or honest Men, (and there is none who would willingly be thought otherwise) who love their Country, and wish its Peace and Prosperity, would be guilty in that kind.

What has been said by the King's Attorney, or my self upon this unexpected Occasion, I hope will not be looked upon as intended to influence any of the Jury. I am sure it is far from being so designed; Religion, Conscience, Honour, common Honesty, Humanity, and all Laws forbid such Methods. There is no doubt but the Judges as well as the Jurymen best discharge their Duty when they proceed without Favour or Affection, Hatred or Ill-will, or any partial Respect whatsoever: Malice and Favour (too great Enemies to Justice) are to be excluded all Courts of Judicature, as too partial.

Every Man ought to be extremely tender of such a Person as he has Reason to believe is innocent; but it should be consider'd likewise, on the other side, that he who brings a notorious Pirate or common Malefactor to Justice, contributes to the Safety and Preservation of the Lives of many, both bad and good; of the good, by means of the Assurance of Protection; and of the bad too, by the Terror of Justice. It was upon this Consideration that the Roman Emperors, in their Edicts, made made this piece of Service for the public Good as meritorious as any Act of Piety or religious Worship.

Our own Laws demonstrate how much our Legislators, and particularly how highly that great Prince King Henry V. and his Parliament, thought England concerned in providing for the Security of Traders, and scouring the Seas of Rovers and Free-booters. Certainly, there never was any Age wherein our Ancestors were not extraordinary zealous in that Affair; looking upon it, as it is and ever will be, the chief Support of Navigation, Trade, Wealth, Strength, Reputation and Glory of the English Nation.

Gentlemen, our Concern, as our Trade is, ought in reason to be rather greater than that of our Fore-fathers: We want no manner of Inducements, no Motives to stir us up, whether we consider our Interest or Honour. We have not only the sacred Word, but also the glorious Acts of the best of Kings, which sufficiently manifest to us, that the Good and Safety of the English Nation is the greatest Care of his Life. Let every Man therefore who pretends to any thing of a true English Spirit, readily and cheerfully follow so good, so great, so excellent an Example, by assisting and contributing to the utmost of his Power and Capacity at all times towards the carrying on his noble and generous Designs for the common Good; and particularly at this Time, by doing all he can, to the end that by the Administration of equal Justice, the Discipline of the Seas, on which the Good and Safety of the English Nation, and these Parts of America more especially, entirely depends, may be supported and maintained.

The Civil Law terms the Pirates Beasts of Prey, with whom no Communication ought to be kept; neither are Oaths or Promises made to them binding. And by the Law-Marine the Captors may execute such Beasts of Prey immediately, without any Solemnity of Condemnation, they not deserving any Benefit of the Law.

I believe, Gentlemen, that no greater Motives can be urged to spur you on in your Duty, than to desire you to reflect and consider how long our Coasts have been infested with Pirates (for the Name of Men they do not deserve) and how many Vessels they have taken and pillag'd belonging to this Place, as well as Multitudes of others belonging to divers Parts of his Majesty's Dominions; and how many poor Men in whose Blood they have imbru'd their Hands with the greatest Inhumanity imaginable, and how many poor Widows and Orphans they have made, and how many Families they have ruin'd, and how long they have gone on in their abominable Wickedness: Nay, do but consider how those very Pirates lately insulted this Government, when they sent for Medicines, threatening to destroy our Vessels and Men in case of refusal; nay, since these have accepted of Certificates from the Government of North Carolina, like Dogs to their Vomits they have returned to their old detestable way of living, and since taken off these Coasts thirteen Vessels belonging to British Subjects.

I believe you can't forget how long this Town has laboured under the Fatigue of watching them, and what Disturbances were lately made with a design to release them, and what Arts and Practices have been lately made use of and effected for the Escape of Bonnet their Ringleader; the Consideration of which shews how necessary it is that the Law be speedily executed on them to the Terror of others, and for the Security of our own Lives, which we were apparently in danger of losing in the late Disturbance, when under a Notion of the Honour of Carolina, they threaten'd to set the Town on fire about our Ears.

We shall now call our Witneses, who will relate to you what enormous and horrid Crimes the Prisoners at the Bar have committed in the Prosecution of the Fact laid in the Indictment.

Clerk. Call Ignatius Pell the Boatswain, who appeared and was sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Ign. Pell. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Please to give the Court an Account what Vessels were taken after you came from North Carolina:

Ign. Pell. I shall begin before that Time. We came from the Bay of Honduras, and from thence to Providence, after which we took several Vessels, and then we came and lay off this Bar, where we took five Vessels.

Judge Trott. Did all the Prisoners come from the Bay of Honduras?

Ign. Pell. All except Robert Tucker, he came out of a Sloop belonging to Bermuda; after that we took a Brigantine, out of which we took fourteen Negroes. After we had discharged the Brigantine, we set sail and went to Top-sail-Inlet at North Carolina, where the Ship was run ashore and lost, which Thatch caused to be done. After we had been there some time, Capt. Thatch came aboard, and demanded all our Arms, and took our best Hands and all our Provision, and all that we had, and left us.

Att. Gen. Were all these Men sent aboard of Major Bonnet immediately, or no?

Ign. Pell. No, Sir, they were put ashore upon an Island.

J. Trott. How came they on board the Revenge?

Ign. Pell. The Boat was sent off to fetch them aboard.

Pris. Major Bonnet came with the Boat, and told us, as we were on a Marroon Island, that he was going to St. Thomas's to get a Commission from the Emperor to go against the Spaniards a Privateering, and we might go with him or continue there: so we having nothing left, was willing to go with him.

Att. Gen. You say all were on shore, and all might have gone up into the Country; pray what Constraints were any of you under?

Ign. Pell. Sir, none; when we left Top-sail-Inlet, it was with a Design to go St. Thomas's for the Emperor's Commission to go against the Spaniards; but the first Vessel we saw we gave Chace to, and came up with her.

Mr. Hepworth. What did you take out of that Vessel?

Ign. Pell. We took some Provisions out of her. After we had discharged her, we saw another, which we chased and took.

Att. Gen. Were all these Men aboard and in Arms at the same time?

Ign. Pell. Yes, Sir, all were in Arms: So after we had taken some Provisions out of her, then we discharged her. Next Day we saw two Sloops bound to Bermuda which we took. The next Day we gave Chace to another, and about Seven or Eight of the Clock we came up with them.

J. Trott. I suppose you were always ready for an Engagement; so that they had their Arms always in Order.

Ig. Pell. I know nothing to the contrary.

J. Trott. Was Tucker there in particular.

Ig. Pell. He was, to be sure.

J. Trott. Go on.

Ig. Pell. Then we gave Chace to a Ship bound and we came up with her, in which were some Negroes. We left three Negroes on board, and two White Men, and sent three Hands from the Revenge: But we seeing two Sloops more we stood after them, and the other turn'd Tail and we never saw them more: So we came up with the Sloop, out of which we took thirty Barrels of Beef, some Butter, and other Provision.

Mr. Hepworth. What did you return in the room of these Goods?

Ig. Pell. Some Molosses that we had on board Major Bonnet's Sloop, after we had discharged these Sloops. Next Day we took a Ship and a Scooner, which Major Bonnet took with him.

Mr. Hepworth. Did you take no plunder out of those?

Ig. Pell. The chief was Provisions. Then we failed in company; and the next Day we came to the Capes of Virginia, where we met with two Vessels bound for Glasgow in Scotland, out of which we took Provisions and some Tobacco. And after we had discharged them we failed for Cape James; and after we had been at Anchor some time, we saw a Sloop which was Capt. Manwareing: We let down our Dory and sent some Hands on board; and in a little time after they came on board the Revenge with Captain Manwareing.

Attorn. Gen. Were all the Prisoners on board Manwareing's Sloop; or had they all their Arms ready when Manwareing was taken?

Ig. Pell. I cannot say that they were all on board; but they had all their Arms ready.

J. Trott. Did they all appear forward and active? Did none of them show themselves dissatisfied or unwilling to act at that time?

Ig. Pell. No, I don't know but one was as forward and as willing to act as the other; all of them had their Arms ready.

J. Trott. Well, how did you proceed after Captain Manwareing was taken?

Ig. Pell. Next Day we haled the Scooner a long-side of Captain Manwareing's Sloop, and hoisted out several Hogheads of Molosses, and put on board the Scooner.

Mr. Hepworth. What became of the Scooner afterwards?

Ig. Pell. After we put Reeves's Wife on board, and Captain Read's Son, we sent them on shore.

Attorn. Gen. How long was Captain Manwareing a Prisoner?

Ig. Pell. About ten Weeks.

Attorn. Gen. Was not there more Goods taken out of Manwareing's Sloop? What became of them? Did you not share them?

Ig. Pell. Yes, we shared a little before we came to Cape Fear.

Attorn. Gen. Did all the Prisoners at the Bar receive their Shares?

Ig. Pell. Yes, Sir; I know nothing to the contrary.

J. Trott. They did not refuse their Shares none of them did they?

Ig. Pell. No.

Clerk. Have any of you any Questions to ask the King's Evidence? Robert Tucker have you any?

Prisoner. No, Sir.

Clerk. Edward Robinson, have you?

Prisoner. No, Sir.

Mr. Hepworth. May it please your Honours, we will proceed to call another Evidence.

Clerk. Call Capt. Thomas Read; who appeared and was sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Capt. Read, please to look upon the Prisoners at the Bar, if you know them.

Capt. Read. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Please to give an Account to the Court how you was taken, and also of the taking of Capt. Manwareing.

Capt. Read. The Sloop Revenge was at an Anchor, and the Scooner lay a long-side of her. I was then a Prisoner on board the Sloop Revenge. In the Evening we saw a Sloop coming into the Bay, and Major Bonnet sent off five Hands with the Dory; and about an Hour after they came on board the Revenge and brought Capt. Manwareing. After they brought him on board, Major Bonnet demanded his Papers, and he gave them to him. He asked him from whence he came? He answered from Antegoa, and bound for Boston. He ask'd him what he had on board? He told him: But it being Night, he said but little more to him: Next Morning they brought the Sloop and haled along-side the Scooner; and I saw them hoist out several Hogheads out of the Sloop and put on board the Scooner. And I heard Major Bonnet say the next Day, that there were twenty one Hogheads; and that he had ordered Pitch and Tar to be put on board the Sloop, and in the Evening they took the Forefail and Mainfail of the Scooner, and Sailed for Cape Fear.

J. Trott. You look upon all those Men as belonging to Major Bonnet, and they were all active in the taking of Manwareing?

Capt. Read. I did not see but one acted as the other did.

J. Trott. You did not look upon them to be Prisoners, like you and your Men?

Capt. Read. No, Sir.

J. Trott. Do you know any thing of their sharing? Did they all take their Shares?

Capt. Read. I know nothing of that? for we were all in the Round-House, and were not admitted among them at that time.

Mr. Dean. Did you see them have their Shares each of them?

Capt. Read. I will not say I saw them have every Man his particular Share; but they were all together when they did share.

Clerk. Would any of you ask the King's Evidence any Question?

Prisoners. We desire nothing but that he would speak the Truth.

Mr. Hepworth. May it please your Honours, we shall proceed to call another Evidence, which is Capt. Peter Manwareing.

Clerk. Call Capt. Peter Manwareing. Who appeared and was sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Captain Manwareing, do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Capt. Manwareing. I know them very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Please to give the Court an Account of your being taken by them.

Capt. Manwareing. When they came on board us we were at an Anchor. About Eight or Nine of the Clock in the Evening we saw the Canoo coming: I ordered my Man to hale them. He asked from whence they came, and what Sloops they were? They answered, Capt. Thomas Richards from St. Thomas's, and Capt. Read from Philadelphia. So we were glad to hear it; so hoped all was well. But as soon as they came up the Shrowds they clapp'd all Hands to their Cutlasses. Then I saw we were taken: And I said, Gentlemen, I hope as you are Englisbmen, you'll be merciful, for you see we have nothing to defend our selves. They told us they would if we were Civil. So I was ordered on board the Revenge with two of their Men. So when I came on board, Major Bonnet desired me to come under the Auning. He demanded my Papers. I gave them to him. So he told me I must lie as well as I could. Next Day Morning Robert Tucker came to me, and asked me what I had on board? and told me if I did not tell the Truth, it should be the worse for me. I told him I had some Molosses, Sugar, and Rum. Then he asked me concerning my Passengers, what Money they had. I told him I never examined Passengers what Money they had. So then Major Bonnet ordered them to come and lie along-side the Scooner; but what was done till then on board my Sloop I cannot tell. But then they took out the Molosses and the Rum and put on board the Scooner.
of

Attorn. Gen. How did they behave themselves with respect to your self afterwards?

Capt. Manwareing. They were civil to me, very civil: But they were all very brisk and merry, and had all Things plentiful, and were a making Punch and drinking.

Clerk. Would any of you the Prisoners ask the King's Evidence any Questions?

They ask no Questions.

Mr. Hepworth. Please your Honours, we will proceed to call another Evidence.

Clerk. Call James Killing, Capt. Manwareing's Mate. Who appeared, and was sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

James Killing. Yes, Sir, I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Please to give the Court an Account of the taking Captain Manwareing's Sloop.

James Killing. The thirty first of July between Nine and Ten of the Clock, there running a strong Tide at Ebb, we came to an Anchor about fourteen fathom of Water near Cape James. In about half an Hour's time I perceived something like a Canoo: So they came nearer. I said here's a Canoo a coming; I wish they be Friends. I haled them; and ask'd from whence they came? They said Capt. Thomas Richards from St. Thomas's, and Capt. Thomas Read from Pensylvania. They ask'd me from whence we came? I told them from Antegoa. They said we were welcome. I said they were welcome, as far as I new. So I ordered the Men to hand down a Rope to them. So soon as they came on board they clapp'd their Hands to their Cutlasses; and I said we are taken. So they curs'd and swore for a Light. I ordered our People to get a Light as soon as possible. So they ordered our Captain immediately to go on board the Revenge; and accordingly was sent with two of their own Hands; and I saw him no more that Night. So when they came into the Cabin, the first thing they begun with was the Pine-Apples, which they cut down with their Cutlasses.

They ask'd me if I would not come and eat along with them? I told them I had but little Stomach to eat. They ask'd me why I looked so melancholy? I told them I looked as well as I could. They asked me what Liquor I had on board? I told them some Rum and Sugar. So they made Bowls of Punch, and went to drinking of the Pretender's Health, and hoped to see him King of the Englisb Nation; Then sung a Song or two. Next Morning they ordered more Hands on board the Sloop, and so came and lay long-side the Scooner; after that they hoisted out several Hogshheads of Molosses, and several Hogshheads of Rum, and put on board the Scooner, and took several Barrels of Pitch and Tar and put on board the Sloop; and I happened to go down into the Cabin, and Robert Tucker came to me, and told me I had no business there, but was better go forward and work among the rest of the Men. So I went forward, and asked who that was? They told me that was their Father. In the after-part of the Day two of Bonner's Men were order'd to the Mast to be whipt, and I was threaten'd if I did not confess all I knew. Then Robert Tucker came to me and told me I must go along with them. I told him I was not fit for their Turn, neither were my Inclinations that way. After that Major Bonnet himself came to me, and told me I must either go on a Maroon Shore, or go along with them, for he design'd to take the Sloop along with him. That Evening between Eight and Nine we were ordered to set sail, but whither I knew not. So we sailed out that Night, and I being weary with the Fatigue, went to sleep; and whether it was with a Design or not I cannot tell, but we fell to Leeward of the Revenge; and in the Morning Major Bonnet took the Speaking Trumpet, and told us if we did not keep closer he would fire in upon us and sink us. So then we proceeded on our Voyage till we came to Cape Fear.

J. Trott. Have you done with your Evidence?

J. Killing. Yes.

Clerk. Would any of you Prisoners ask the King's Evidence any Questions?

No Questions asked by the Prisoners.

J. Trott. You the Prisoners at the Bar stand charged with Felony and Piracy committed on a certain Sloop belonging to Capt. Peter Manwareing. The Evidences have proved it home upon you; the Boatswain tells what old Offenders you were, and that you were with Thatch off this Bar, and that you were at the taking several Vessels after you left Top-sail-Inlet; and all the Evidences prove the same; so that it appears all of you took up with this wicked Course of Life out of Choice: Now what Evidences have you to come in on your behalf? or what have you to say in your Defence? Now is your time to speak what you have to say.

Clerk. Robert Tucker, what have you to say?

Robert Tucker. After Capt. Thatch had taken what we had and left us, Major Bonnet came and told us that he was going to St. Thomas's for the Emperor's Commission, if there was any to be had.

J. Trott. Pray, if you were bound to St. Thomas's, what did you do at the Cape of Virginia? What business had you there?

Robert Tucker. We had but little Provision on board.

J. Trott. So you went and met with some by the way.

Clerk.

Clerk. Edward Robinson, what have you to say ?

Edward Robinson. When Capt. Thatch left us it was on a Marroon Island, and Major Bonnet came and told me he was going to St. Thomas's, and we might go with him.

J. Trott. Was not you one of them that was off this Bar with Thatch ?

Edw. Robinson. Yes.

J. Trott. Why did you not come on shore then ?

Edw. Robinson. I would have come on shore but Capt. Thatch would not give me leave. I was with Mr. Wragg, and told him I would go on shore if I had Liberty.

J. Trott. Was you one of the five that came up to Town ?

Edw. Robinson. No.

Clerk. Neal Paterfon, what have you to say in Defence of yourself ?

N. Paterfon. Thatch came on board and carried away fourteen of our best Hands, and marrooned twenty five of us on an Island ; and Major Bonnet came and told us he was minded to go to St. Thomas's, and if there were any Commissions from the Emperor, to get one, and go a privateering against the Spaniards ; so I was willing to go with him, and when I was on board, he forced me to do what he pleas'd, for it was against my Will.

J. Trott. Did not Thatch carry away your Money and what you had besides of Goods ?

N. Paterfon. Yes.

Att. Gen. Was you not all ashore when you receiv'd the Act of Grace ?

N. Paterfon. Yes, Sir.

Attorn. Gen. Why had you not continued ashore ? Why did you join with Bonnet ? Or who forc'd you to it ?

N. Paterfon. But, Sir, it was in a strange Land, and I had no Money, nor nothing left, and I was willing to do something to live ; but it was against my Will to go a pirating.

Judge Trott. If you were forc'd and took only Provisions, pray how did you come to share so much Money and Goods afterwards ? You say Thatch carried away what you had before.

N. Paterfon. I could not hinder the rest from doing what they pleas'd ; but it was contrary to my Inclination.

Cl. William Scot, what have you to say ?

W. Scot. When we left Topfail-Inlet, it was to go to St. Thomas's ; and I asked whether there was Provisions on board ? They told me there was enough, which was not above ten or eleven Barrels.

Judge Trott. So you took it where you could find it, because you had it not of your own : But pray what did you with so much Moloffes, which was neither fit to eat or drink ?

W. Scot. What I did, was to keep me from perishing ; but it was not in my Power to hinder the rest.

Cl. Job Bayley, what have you to say ?

Job Bayley. When Capt. Thomas or Major Bonnet was ready to sail, I went aboard, and I asked whether they had Provisions on board ? They told me they had : But in a few Days it was all spent, and then I was forc'd to do as the rest did.

Judge Trott. But why did you not do as Capt. Manwareing and his Men did ? You see they did not act as you did.

Job Bayley. Capt. Manwareing was not taken then.

Judge Trott. But how came you to join with them afterwards ? And pray what made you fight against Col. Rbett, when he came out with lawful Authority to you ?

Job Bayley. We thought it had been a Pirate.

Judge Trott. And so one Pirate might fight with another. But how could you think it was a Pirate, when he had King George's Colours ?

Att. Gen. May it please your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Evidences have plainly prov'd, that all the Prisoners at the Bar were at the taking of Capt. Manwareing's Sloop, that they all consented to, and all were active in it, and all receiv'd their Shares ; so that I think it hath been plainly prov'd home upon them.

Judge Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoners at the Bar all stand indicted for Felony and Piracy committed on a Sloop belonging to Capt. Peter Manwareing, as it is expressed in the Indictment. The Boatswain tells us what old Offenders they were before they went to Topfail-Inlet ; that they were at the taking of no less than thirteen Vessels ; and that in particular they were at the taking of Capt. Manwareing. Then comes Capt. Read, and he was taken before Capt. Manwareing, and was then a Prisoner on board the Pirate Sloop, and he tells you, they all appear'd in Arms, and that he did not look upon them as Prisoners, or under Constraint, but of the same Company ; and he tells you he saw them take Capt. Manwareing, and that he saw them take out the Goods, as is mentioned in the Indictment, out of Manwareing's Sloop. Then comes Capt. Manwareing himself, and he says all the Goods mention'd in the Indictment were taken out, and that they shar'd these Goods among themselves. Then comes Killing the Mate, and he proves the same, and particularly Tucker, he was so forward, that he told them, if they did not tell the Truth, it should be the worse for them : And Paterfon was so active, that he was for having them brought to the Gun to make them confess ; and that all the rest had their Arms ready, and all had their Shares : So that I think the Evidences have fully prov'd the Indictment upon them, and that it is very plain and home against them. They plead indeed, that they were forc'd and constrain'd to go, but give no Proof of it ; and therefore what Constraint any of them appears to be under, I shall leave to your Considerations : Tho' I think the Evidence is very plain and clear, yet I shall not pretend to direct your Judgments. I shall only remark to you what the Wise Man saith, that he that justifieth the Wicked, as well as he that condemneth the Just, even both are an Abomination to the Lord.

Then an Officer was sworn to keep the Jury.

And about two Hours after the Jury return'd, and gave in their Verdict.

Cl. Gentlemen, answer to your Names Timothy Bellamy.

Timothy Bellamy. Here, &c.

Cl. Are you all agreed of your Verdict ?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. Who shall say for you ?

Jury. The Foreman.

Cl. Robert Tucker, hold up thy Hand (which he did.) How say you ? Is he guilty of the Piracy whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty ?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. What Goods and Chattels, &c.

Foreman. None that we know of.

Cl. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it. You say that Robert Tucker is guilty of the Piracy whereof he stands indicted, and that he had no Goods or Chattels, &c.

Fury. Yes.

And the Jury also found Edward Robinson, Neal Paterfon, William Scot, and Job Bayley, guilty.

Cl. Marshal, look to your Prisoners.

THEN the Court proceeded to the 'Trial of John William Smith, Thomas Carman, John Thomas, William Morrison, William Livers aliàs Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, and John Levit, for the aforesaid Fact, in piratically taking the said Sloop Francis, Capt. Peter Manwareing, Commander.

Cl. Set John William Smith, Thomas Carman, &c. to the Bar.

Then the Petit Jury were called over.

Clerk. You the Prisoners at the Bar: These good Men that were called last, and have here appeared, are those that shall pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon your Lives and your Deaths; therefore if you or any of you will challenge them or any of them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn, you may, and you shall be heard.

Then the Jury were sworn, whose Names are as followeth.

Samuel Prioleau , Foreman.	Henry Gennelack.
John Hodgson.	John Jeffers.
Garrard Vanvilsen.	Charles Marche.
Robert Harvey.	John Grimal.
Joshua Marriner.	Benjamin Griffin.
Thomas Fairchild.	Joseph Massey.

Then the usual Proclamation for Information was made. And the Prisoners being bid to hold up their Hands, the Clerk charged the Jury with them thus.

Cl. You Gentlemen of the Jury that are sworn, look upon the Prisoners, and hearken to their Charge.

Then the Indictment was read as followeth.

THE Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, do upon their Oaths present, That Daniel Harriot, late of Jamaica, Mariner; John William Smith, late of Charles-Town, Mariner; Thomas Carman, late of Maidstone in Kent, Mariner; John Thomas, late of Jamaica, Mariner; William Morrison, late of Jamaica, Mariner; William Livers aliàs Evis, late of Dublin, Mariner; Samuel Booth, late of Charles-Town, Mariner; John Levit, late of North Carolina, Mariner; and William Hewet, late of Jamaica, Mariner; the Second Day of August, &c. as before.

Cl. Upon this Indictment they have been arraigned, &c. as before.

The Witnesses against the Prisoners were Ignatius Pell, the Boatswain, Capt. Thomas Read, Capt. Peter Manwareing, and Mr. James Killing his Mate, who all gave the same Evidence against these as against the others that were tried before.

Cl. Will any of you Prisoners ask the King's Evidence any Questions?

No Questions asked by the Prisoners.

Judge Trott. You the Prisoners at the Bar, you have heard how fully the Witnesses have charged the Facts upon you: Now what you have to say in your Defence, I shall be ready to hear you.

Cl. John William Smith, if you have any thing to say, you have Liberty to speak.

John William Smith. When we left Topfail-Inlet, I knew nothing but that we were going to St. Thomas's; but after we were out, they hoisted the bloody Flag: But I did before believe we were going to St. Thomas's.

Att. Gen. Did you bear Arms on board of Major Bonnet?

Smith. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. Was you at the taking all those Vessels?

Smith. Yes, Sir; but it was against my Will.

Cl. John Carman, what have you to say?

Carman. As for what I did on board Captain Thatch, I was forced; but when I came to North Carolina, I would not have went on board, but Major Bonnet shew'd me the Act of Grace; and when I enter'd myself on board, it was to get my Bread, in hopes to have went where I might have had Business; for when we left Topfail-Inlet, I had not sign'd the Articles.

Ign. Pell. But you gave the Captain your Word that you would.

Carman. When I was left in the Sloop, I endeavour'd to make my Escape with the Sloop.

Judge Trott. So, I find you wanted a Vessel of your own.

Carman. No, but to have got one from them: But I could not.

Att. Gen. This confirms what the King's Evidence proves against them.

Cl. John Thomas, what have you to say?

Thomas. We had nothing left us, and we were on a Marroon Island, and Major Bonnet he came and told me I might go with him; but it was against my Will to bear Arms.

J. Trott. Was not you off this Bar?

Thomas. Yes, but I was forced to it.

Mr. Hepworth. And was you not at the taking of Capt. Manwareing's Sloop?

Thomas. Yes.

Mr. Hepworth. And had you not your Share?

Thomas. Yes, Sir.

J. Trott. And yet you say you was not willing to go a pirating.

Clerk. William Morrison, what have you to say?

Morrison. Capt. Thatch had run the Sloop ashore, and Major Bonnet went up to the Governor for the Act of Grace; and when he returned he told me I might go to St. Thomas's; and after that he said Provisions would fall short, and he should go on the Coast of Virginia to see for some.

J. Trott. But was that your Manner of going for a Commission, to take thirteen Vessels by the way? But was you not at the taking Manwareing's Sloop? And had you not your Share?

Cl. William Livers aliàs Evis, what have you to say?

Evis. After we came to North Carolina, and Capt. Thatch had lost the Ship, Major Bonnet told me he would give me my Passage to St. Thomas's, and he would endeavour to get a Ship there, and I might go with him a privateering: But when we came to Sea, I found how it was, and I would not consent for a long time; but at last they forced me to it.

J. Trott.

J. Trott. But you had your Share as well as the rest.

Evis. They forced me to do what I did.

Clerk. Samuel Booth, what have you to say?

Booth. As we came from Topfail-Inlet we met with the Sloop Revenge; they boarded us and took us, and I was a Prisoner three Weeks before I consented; and then they order'd me to the Gun before I would consent.

J. Trott. But you had your Share of Capt. Manwareing's Sloop.

Booth. But my Inclinations was not that way.

Clerk. William Hewet, what have you to say?

Hewet. I design'd to go to St. Thomas's with Major Bonnet, for he told me he was bound thither; so I was willing to go with him.

Clerk. John Levit, what have you to say?

He makes no Defence.

Attorn. Gen. May please your Honours, the Boatswain and all the Evidences prove the Indictment upon each of the Prisoners, that they were all at the taking of Capt. Manwareing's Sloop, and all had their Shares.

J. Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, I think I need say but little on this matter: they all confess the Fact of which they stand indicted. Some of them were old Offenders, and all of them were proved to be at the taking of Capt. Manwareing's Sloop, and all took their Shares: so that I think the Fact is very fully and clearly proved upon them. But I shall leave that to your Considerations, and I pray God direct you to give a true Verdict.

Then an Officer, was sworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had consider'd of their Verdict, return'd and found John William Smith, Thomas Carman, John Thomas, William Morrison, William Livers aliàs Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, and John Levit, guilty.

Then the Court adjourn'd to Friday Morning.

Friday, October the 31st, 1718.

THE Court proceeded to arraign William Eddy aliàs Nedy, Alexander Ammand, George Rofs, George Dunkin, Thomas Nichols, John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, and Henry Virgin, upon the following Indictment, for piratically taking Capt. Manwareing.

The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King do upon their Oaths present that William Eddy aliàs Nedy, late of Aberdeen, Mariner; Alexander Annand, late of Jamaica, Mariner; George Rofs, late of Glasgow, Mariner; George Dunkin, late of Glasgow, Mariner; Thomas Nichols, late of London, Mariner; John Ridge, late of London, Mariner; Matthew King, late of Jamaica, Mariner; Daniel Perry, late of Guernsey, Mariner; and Henry Virgin, Mariner, late of Bristol; the second Day of August, in the fifth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King George, by the Grace of God of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. as before.

Who all pleaded Not Guilty.

Then the Court proceeded on their Trial.

And the Jury were sworn, whose Names are as followeth.

Timothy Bellamy, Foreman, &c. as before.

The same Witnesses against these, viz.

Ignatius Pell, the Boatswain.

Capt. Thomas Read.

Capt. Peter Manwareing.

VOL. VI.

And Mr. James Killing, his Mate.

Who all gave the same Evidence against these Prisoners as against the others, excepting Thomas Nichols.

Capt. John Stevenson, one of the Captors, being sworn, declared, that George Rofs, the Gunner of the Pirate's Sloop, was for blowing up the said Sloop, and that he acknowleg'd he was to have set fire to the Train, and that he would have done it.

As to Thomas Nichols:

Ignatius Pell declared, that Nichols, after he came to Sea, was very much discontented; but Major Bonnet said he would force him to go. However, he would not join with the rest of the Men, but always separated himself from the Company.

Capt. Read said, that Nichols behaved himself different from the rest, and did not join with them.

Capt. Manwareing said, that Nichols when he was aboard his Sloop said, he did hope it would be over with him in a little time, for he hoped to get clear of them, and looked very melancholy, and never joined with the rest in their Cabals when they were drinking: and when Major Bonnet sent for him he refused to go, and said, he would die before he would fight.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the King's Evidence any Questions?

Nichols. Mr. Killing, did you never hear me say I would leave that Course of Life?

J. Trott. Did you hear him say so?

Killing. When he came on board he told me, he would give the whole World, if he had it, to be free from them: and when he was on board and Major Bonnet sent for him, he refused to go on board the Revenge, till he sent to fetch him by force, and then he told me he would not fight if he did lose his Life for it: and he was not with them when they shared; and he told them he hoped he should not be long with them; and he never was at their Cabals as the rest were.

J. Trott. He seems to be under a Constraint indeed, and therefore must be taken into Consideration.

Clerk. Will any of you Prisoners ask any more Questions?

None asked.

J. Trott. If any of them have any thing to say, they now have their liberty to speak.

Clerk. William Eddy aliàs Nedy, what have you to say?

Nedy. I never was on board Capt. Manwareing's Sloop nor had no hand in it.

J. Trott. You was one of Bonnet's Crew.

Nedy. I never acted in it.

J. Trott. That is no Excuse; it is not such or such a one that goes on board only, but those that stand ready to assist them, have as great a hand in the Fact as the other; for Men would not be taken by two or three, if they had no more help; so that the whole Crew are equally concern'd at such a time.

Clerk. Alexander Ammand, what have you to say?

Ammand. When we were at Topfail-Inlet, Major Bonnet told me he would go and get a Clearance for the Sloop, for he design'd to go to St. Thomas's for a Commission, and I might go with him: so I suspected nothing till we were out at Sea, and then I could not help it.

J. Trott. But why did you not declare against it then, and so not join with them?

Annand. I was but one Man, and a Stranger, and I was afraid I should have lost my Life.

Clerk. George Rofs, what have you to say?

Rofs. I belonged to Sloop, and we met with Major Bonnet and was taken by him: next Day two of the Men told me I must go with them. I answer'd them, No; I did not design to leave the Sloop: but they told me I must; and they told me if I would but consent I should have any thing. And a little after Capt. Manwareing was taken.

J. Trott. And you had your Share of Manwareing's Goods?

Rofs. Yes.

J. Trott. So, tho' you were unwilling at first, you was willing afterward, and also fought Col. Rbett when he came out against you.

Rofs. They told me it was Capt. Thatch; for my part I did not know who Thatch was.

J. Trott. But pray what Authority had you to fight any body?

Clerk. George Dunkin, you may speak what you have to say.

Dunkin. After we were taken at the Capes of Major Bonnet came to me and told me I must go along with them. But I told him I could not leave the Vessel. He told me I must.

J. Trott. But why did you join with them afterwards in taking your Share of Manwareing's Goods? and why did you fight Col. Rbett and his Men? If you had not fought, you might have saved the Lives of 12 or 14 Men.

Dunkin. Major Bonnet declared, if any one refused to fight he would blow his Brains out.

Thomas Nichols made his Defence before.

Clerk. John Ridge, what have you to say?

Ridge. After we came to Toppsail-Inlet, and the Ship was lost, Major Bonnet came and told me that he would go and accept the Act of Grace, and get a Clearing for the Sloop, and go to St. Thomas's for a Commission, and he expected we would go with him; so when he was gone up to the Country we rigged the Sloop; so the Quarter-Master, the Boatswain, and he agreed together; but for my part I knew nothing what their Design was; and so the first Vessel we saw they took: but it was my Resolution to go away by the first Opportunity.

Clerk. Matthew King, what have you to say?

King. When we were at Toppsail-Inlet, Captain Thatch marooned us on an Island, and left us; and Major Bonnet told us he would go to St. Thomas's; but the first Prize we met with we took, having but little Provisions on board.

J. Trott. How could you think of going to St. Thomas's without Provisions?

Attor. Gen. But the Boatswain says there were Provisions on board; several Barrels of Flower, and several Barrels of Beef and Pork.

J. Trott. What need had you then to go a pirating.

King. I did not know it 'till we were out.

J. Trott. Bonnet had not above five Hands, and there were of you twenty-five; why would you be all commanded by them? You had no need to yield to them.

Clerk. Daniel Perry, what have you to say?

Perry. When Capt. Thatch left us it was on a Maroon Island, and Major Bonnet came and told us he had the Act of Grace, and so we might go with him.

J. Trott. Is that all you have to say? You knew Thatch and Bonnet were both Pirates, and why would you with go them again?

Clerk. Henry Virgin, what have you to say?

Virgin. Major Bonnet ordered about thirty Hands to be ready, and in a little time we were ordered on board; and when we were about an hundred Leagues from Land, he asked if there were any that would go a Marrooning; and I believe there were two or three that promised him they would, tho' I did not.

J. Trott. But had you no Opportunity to come from them?

Virgin. If we had known any thing of the Act of Grace when we were off this Bar, we had come ashore. I went to make my Escape, and leapt into the Water, and had like to have been drown'd.

J. Trott. How many Vessels have you been at the taking and burning of do you think?

Virgin. I believe about three.

Mr. Hepworth. He was with them at the Bay of Honduras, and all along.

Virgin. But I never gave my Consent, for Capt. Thatch never asked any of us.

J. Trott. Would any of the Prisoners say any more? if they will I am ready to hear them.

Attor. Gen. May it please your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, these three, Nichols, Dunkin, and Ridge, seem to make some Defence. As for Nichols, he was with them when Manwareing was taken; and the Mate tells us, that he separated himself from the rest of the Cabal; and when they shared, he told them they might do as they pleased with his Share, for he hoped he should not be with them long; so that it appears that he separated himself from the rest of the Company from the very first: these things therefore ought to be consider'd. And as for Dunkin, he looked upon himself as a Prisoner at first; but the Boatswain indeed says he had his Shares. And as for Ridge he said, that he resolved to make his escape. For all the rest they seem to be equally guilty.

J. Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoners at the Bar stand indicted for Felony and Piracy committed on a Sloop belonging to Capt. Peter Manwareing Commander, and not only did they break and board the said Manwareing's Sloop, which was an Act of Piracy, but it hath been proved upon them, that they were at the taking of thirteen Vessels after they left Toppsail-Inlet. Indeed there are three that have something to say in their Defence, Nichols, Ridge, and Dunkin. As for Dunkin, Pell says he had his Share, as the rest had: Capt. Read looked upon him as a Prisoner, but Capt. Manwareing did not. As for Ridge, he was at North Carolina, and took up with Bonnet to go to St. Thomas's, and it is possible for a Man to be deceived, for Pell declares that they were bound to St. Thomas's, at first; and Killing the Mate declared, that he told him he would free himself from that Course of Life the first Opportunity: so I shall leave this to your Consideration. But for Nichols, I think its plain he was under Constraint and Force; for Pell himself declares that he would have nothing to do with their Shares, and he did hope that he should not be long with them. Capt. Manwareing, and Mr. Killing his Mate, all confirm the same. And when he was sent for to come on board Bonnet, to go out to fight Colonel Rbett, he refused to go; and when he was forced to go on board, he said he would die before he would fight; and accordingly went into into the Hole, and did not fight Col. Rbett. So that by the whole Course of the Evidence, I think it is very clear that he was under Constraint and Fear. As to the rest, I think the Proof is full against them; but I shall leave them to your Consideration. You know that as the Innocent must not be condemned, so the Guilty ought not to be acquitted. Remember you have the Lives of these Persons in your Hands; and I pray God direct you to give a true Verdict.

Then an Officer was sworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had considered of their Verdict, returned, and found William Eddy aliàs Nedy, Alexander Annand, George Ross, George Dunkin, John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, and Henry Virgin, Guilty; and Thomas Nichols, Not Guilty.

THEN the Court proceeded to arraign James Robbins aliàs Rattle, James Mullet aliàs Millet, Thomas Price, James Wilson, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, upon the following Indictment, for piratically taking Capt. Manwareing.

“ The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King do upon their Oath present, that James Robbins aliàs Rattle, late of London, Mariner; James Mullet aliàs Millet, late of London; Mariner; Thomas Price, late of Bristol, Mariner; James Wilson, late of Dublin, Mariner; John Lopez, late of Oporto, Mariner; and Zachariah Long, late of the Province of Holland, Mariner; the Second Day of August, in the Fifth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c.

To which Indictment James Robbins aliàs Rattle, James Mullet aliàs Millet, Thomas Price, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, pleaded Not Guilty. James Wilson pleaded Guilty.

Then the Court proceeded upon the Trial of those that pleaded Not Guilty.

The Jurors were sworn, whose Names are as followeth :

Samuel Proileau , Foreman.	Henry Genelac .
John Hodgson .	John Jeffers .
Garrat Vanvelsin .	Charles Marche .
Lucas Stoutenborough .	John Grimbäll .
Joshua Mariner .	Benjamin Griffin .
Thomas Fairchild .	Joseph Massey .

The Witnesses against the Prisoners were the above-named.

Ignatius Pell, the Boatwain.

Capt. Thomas Read.

Capt. Peter Manwareing.

And Mr. James Killing his Mate.

Who all gave the same Evidence against these Prisoners, as against the others that were tried before.

Clerk. You, the Prisoners at the Bar, have heard what the King's Evidence have sworn against you. Now is your time to make your Defence.

Clerk. James Robbins, what have you to say?

Robbins. I was on board the Revenge, and then I was sent on board of Capt. Read's Sloop, and was there four Days; and then was sent on board the Revenge again: For I was about to run away, if I had an Opportunity.

VOL. VI.

Clerk. James Mullet, what have you to say?

Mullet. When we left Topsail-Inlet, it was to go to St. Thomas's; so Major Bonnet told me: And I being on a Marroon Shore, I was willing to go with him.

Clerk. Thomas Price, what have you to say?

Price. Capt. Thatch left us on a Marroon Shore, and had nothing left; and Major Bonnet told me I might go with him to St. Thomas's; but I designed not to go a pirating.

J. Trott. Had you not your Share?

Price. I was forc'd to do as I did when I was on board.

Clerk. John Lopez, what have you to say?

Lopez. I was at the Bay of Honduras, and was taken by Thatch and carried to Topsail-Inlet, and there he marrooned me on an Island, and came with five Hands and carried all away that we had and left us. And Major Bonnet told me he would go to St. Thomas's, and I might go along with him. I told Capt. Manwareing, I would not go a pirating, for I did not like it.

J. Trott. Did you not share a little before you came to Cape Fear?

Lopez. Yes; but it was against my Will.

J. Trott. Capt. Manwareing, do you know any thing of this Man?

Capt. Manwareing. All as I know, he told me he had a Wife and Children; and that he did not like that Course of Life. This is all I can say of him.

Clerk. Zachariah Long, what have you to say?

Long. When we sailed, I knew nothing but that it was to go to St. Thomas's, till afterwards; and then I must do as the rest did.

Then the Judge summ'd up the Evidence.

And an Officer was sworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had considered of their Verdict returned, and found the above-said James Mullet aliàs Millet, Thomas Price, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, Guilty; and James Robbins aliàs Rattle, Not Guilty.

Then the Court adjourn'd till Saturday Morning.

Saturday, November the First, 1718. the Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN the Court proceeded to arraign Edward Robinson, Robert Tucker, William Scot, Job Bayley, Neal Paterson, John William Smith, Thomas Carman, and John Thomas, upon the following Indictment.

“ The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King do upon their Oath present, that Stede Bonnet aliàs Edwards, aliàs Thomas, late of the Island of Barbadoes, Mariner; David Heriot, late of the Island of Jamaica, Mariner; William Scot, late of Aberdeen, Mariner; Job Bayley, late of London, Mariner; Edward Robinson, late of New-Castle upon Tyne, Mariner; Robert Tucker, late of the Island of Jamaica, Mariner; Neal Paterson, late of Aberdeen, Mariner; John William Smith, late of Charles-town, Mariner; Thomas Carman, late of Maidstone in Kent, Mariner; and John Thomas, late of the Island of Jamaica, Mariner; the thirty first Day of August, in the fifth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George, by the Grace of God

 “ session, then and there, upon the High Sea “ aforesaid, in the Place aforesaid, called Cape
 “ Fear, in the Latitude of thirty-four, or there“ abouts, as aforesaid, in the Sloop aforesaid,
 “ and within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, and “ against the Peace of our said now Sovereign “ Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c.

Who all pleaded Not Guilty.

Then the Court proceeded upon their Trial.

The Petit-Jury were sworn, whose Names are as followeth.

Timothy Bellamy, Foreman.
George Ducket.
John Rivers.
William Sheriff.
Benjamin Dennis.
Hugh Durfey.

Thomas Chambers.
Daniel Townshend.
John Lee.
Thomas Bee.
John Barton.
Richard Fairchild.

Then the usual Proclamation for Information was made. And the Prisoners being bid to hold up their Hands, the Clerk charged the Jury with them thus.

Clerk. You the Gentlemen of the Jury that are sworn, look upon the Prisoners, and hearken to their Charge.

Then the Indictment was read, as before.

Clerk. Upon this Indictment they have been arraigned, &c. as before.

Then the Witnesses against the Prisoners were called.

Clerk. Call Ignatius Pell, the Boatswain.

Who appeared, and was sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Ign. Pell. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Hepworth. Give the Court an Account of the taking Capt. Thomas Read, and plundering of his Sloop.

Ign. Pell. Capt. Read was in Company with two Vessels more, which we took, but did not share, till we came to Cape Fear.

Mr. Hepworth. Were the Goods mentioned in the Indictment taken out?

Ign. Pell. Yes, Sir.

Judge Trott. Did all the Prisoners at the Bar receive their Shares?

Ign. Pell. Yes.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the King's Evidence any Questions? Edward Robinson, will you ask any Questions?

Edw. Robinson. Boatswain, do you not remember when we left Top-sail-Inlet, it was with a Design to go to St. Thomas's?

Ign. Pell. I do believe you might think we were going to St. Thomas's; but the first Vessel we saw, we consented to take, and you had your Share as well as the rest.

Clerk. Robert Tucker, will you ask any Questions?

Tucker. No.

Mr. Hepworth. May it please your Honours, we will proceed to call another Evidence.

Capt. Peter Manwareing called and sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Capt. Manwareing. I know them all.

Mr. Hepworth. Please to give the Court an Account of the sharing of Capt. Read's Goods at Cape Fear.

Capt. Manwareing. As for taking of Captain
Read, I can say nothing, because he was taken by them before I was taken; but when we came to Cape Fear, they shared what they had.

Judge Trott. And had all the Prisoners at the Bar their Shares?

Capt. Manwareing. I did not see any of them refuse; and they were amongst the rest when they did share.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the Evidence any Questions?

The Prisoners ask no Questions.

Mr. Hep-

Mr. Hepworth. We will proceed to call another Evidence. Capt. Thomas Read, do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Capt. Read. I know them all.

Mr. Hepworth. Please to give the Court an Account of your being taken and plundered by them.

Capt. Read. After we were taken, Robert Tucker with some others came on board; and then we failed to Cape Inlopen, where Capt. Manwareing was taken, and after that to Cape Fear.

Mr. Hepworth. Were those Goods taken out as are mentioned in the Indictment?

Capt. Read. Yes, Sir.

Judge Trott. Did all the Prisoners receive their Shares?

Capt. Read. Yes, I did not see but what they did: They were all together when they shared.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the Evidence any Questions?

Edward Robinson. Capt. Read, when did you see me on board your Sloop?

Capt. Read. I cannot say I saw you on board; but you were with them when they shared.

Judge Trott. If you were not on board the Sloop, you was one of the Crew; and, as I told you before, it's not they only are Pirates that go on board of a Vessel, but they that stand ready to assist are as much Pirates as the other, and are as much concerned in the Fact.

Clerk. Will any of you ask any Questions?

Prisoners. No.

Mr. Hepworth. We will proceed to call another Evidence. James Killing, do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Killing. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Hepworth. Give the Court an Account of what you know of the taking of Capt. Read.

Killing. I can say but little to the Matter till we came to Cape Fear, and there they shared the Goods.

Judge Trott. Did you see the Goods taken out?

Killing. I cannot say I saw them all taken out; but I saw them a sharing of them together.

Mr. Hepworth. We will call another Evidence.

Francis Griffin, Capt. Read's Mate; who was sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Griffin. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Hepworth. Please to give an Account of the taking the Sloop you belong'd to.

Griffin. After we were taken, Tucker and some more came on board, and Tucker fell to beating and cutting the People with his Cutlash, and cut one Man's Arm. So then we went to Cape James aliàs Cape Inlopen, where Captain Manwareing was taken, and thence we failed for Cape Fear.

Mr. Hepworth. Were all these Goods mentioned in the Indictment taken out? (That Part of the Indictment read.)

Griffin. Yes, Sir.

Judge Trott. Did all the Prisoners take their Shares?

Griffin. I know nothing to the contrary.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the King's Evidence any Questions?

No Questions asked.

Judge Trott. You the Prisoners at the Bar, what have you to say in your Defences? I am now ready to hear you.

Clerk. Edward Robinson, what have you to say.

Robinson. I have nothing to say, more than what I have said.

Clerk. Robert Tucker, what have you to say?

Tucker. I knew nothing but we were going to St. Thomas's, when I engaged with Major Bonnet.

Judge Trott. You was his Quarter-Master; and you was the Person that cut the Man with the Cutlash, and abused the People.

Clerk. William Scot, what have you to say?

Scot. I was never on board Capt. Read.

Judge Trott. You was never on board! What of that? You was one of the Crew, and consented to it, and had your Share.

Clerk. Job Bayley and Neal Paterfon, what have you to say?

Prisoners. We have nothing more to say.

Clerk. John William Smith, what have you to say?

Smith. It was never my Design to go a pirating; and when I was at Sea, I could not help what others did.

Judge Trott. If it was not your Design at first, you afterwards consented to it.

Clerk. Thomas Carman and John Thomas, what have either of you to say?

Prisoners. We have no more to say, than what we have said.

Att. Gen. May it please your Honours, I think the Evidence have plainly proved the Prisoners at the Bar guilty of the Fact charged upon them in the Indictment; so that they were all equally guilty.

Judge Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoners at the Bar stand indicted for Felony and Piracy, committed on a Sloop belonging to Capt. Thomas Read: All the Evidences fully prove the Fact upon them, that they were all equally guilty, and all shared in the Goods and Plunder; but Tucker abused the People, and cut one Man with his Cutlash, so that he added Barbarity to his other Crimes. They all pretend they were under Force and Constraint; but it is but a Suggestion of their own, without the least Proof: But there is full Proof of their consenting. But I shall leave them to your Consideration. But the Case is so clear, that I believe you will not be long before you return with your Verdict.

Then an Officer was sworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had considered of their Verdict, return'd, and found the abovesaid Edward Robinson, Robert Tucker, William Scott, Job Bayley, Neal Paterfon, John William Smith, Thomas Carman, and John Thomas, Guilty.

THEN the Court proceeded to arraign William Morrison, William Liver's aliàs Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, John Levit, William Eddy aliàs Nedy, Alexander Annand, George Ross, George Dunkin, and Thomas Nichols, upon the following Indictment, for taking Capt. Read.

“ The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King do upon their Oath present, That William Morrison, late of Jamaica, Mariner, &c. (as before.)

Who all pleaded Not Guilty, excepting John Levit, who pleaded Guilty.

Then

Then the Court proceeded upon the Trial of those that had pleaded Not Guilty.

And the Jury were sworn, whose Names are as followeth :

Timothy Bellmay, Foreman, &c. (as before.)

Ign. Pell, one of the Witnesses against the Prisoner, was called and sworn. He, and the rest of the Witnesses in general, gave the same Evidence against these Prisoners, as against the former, only they were more particularly examined as to Thomas Nichols, and George Dunkin.

Mr. Hepworth. Ign. Pell, do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Ign. Pell. Yes, Sir, I know them all very well.

Att. Gen. Please to give the Court an Account of the taking and plundering Capt. Read; and begin with Nichols.

Ign. Pell. Thomas Nichols was very much dissatisfied on board, and did not join with the rest of the Company, and would not take the Share, and said he hoped he should not continue long with them.

Foreman. Do you know any thing of Dunkin? How did he behave himself?

Ign. Pell. I did not see but he was as active as any of the rest, and took his Share as the rest did at Cape Fear.

Judge Trott. And had all the Prisoners their Shares?

Ign. Pell. Yes, excepting Nichols.

Judge Trott. Were the Goods mentioned in the Indictment taken out of Read's Sloop?

Ign. Pell. Yes.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the King's Evidence any Questions?

No Questions asked by the Prisoners.

Mr. Hepworth. We will proceed to call another Evidence. Capt. Manwareing, do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Capt. Manwareing. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Please to give the Court an Account of their sharing Capt. Read's Goods at Cape Fear; and particularly how Nichols behaved himself.

Capt. Manwareing. When Nichols was on board my Sloop, he said several Times, he would get clear of them the first Opportunity, and he hoped it would not be long first; and when Major Bonnet sent for all Hands on board the Revenge, he refused to go, till he sent word, if he would not come, he would make him; and when he went, he said, before he would fight, he would die: And he always kept himself from the Company, and from their Cabals.

Judge Trott. Do you know any thing of Dunkin?

Capt. Manwareing. What I can say is, There was some brown Bread upon Deck, and he said, it was fit for nothing but Negroes to eat; and I told him, I wished he might never want it. So they went, and brought some whiter out of the Hole.

Mr. Hepworth. How did he behave himself?

Capt. Manwareing. I saw nothing but he was as the rest were.

Mr. Hepworth. Would any of you ask the King's Evidence any Questions?

No Questions asked by the Prisoners.

Mr. Hepworth. Please your Honours, we proceed to call another Evidence.

James Killing sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Killing. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Please to give the Court an Account of what you know of their taking and plundering Capt. Read; and first begin with Nichols.

Killing. I remember when he was on board our Sloop, and Major Bonnet sent for him, when he went off, he said, he hoped to get clear of them, and he would die before he would fight.

Judge Trott. Pell, do you know whether he did fight Col. Rbett, or not?

Ign. Pell. He did not fight; and if one that Major Bonnet loved very well had not been shot-down by his Side, he had blowed his Brains out; for he had his Pistol ready.

Mr. Hepworth. How did Dunkin behave himself?

Ign. Pell. I can say nothing for any of the rest, but that they were all as one, and had all their Shares.

Clerk. Would any of you ask the King's Evidence any Questions?

No Questions asked by the Prisoners.

Mr. Hepworth. We will proceed to call another Evidence. Capt. Thomas Read, do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Capt. Read. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Please to give the Court an Account of what Goods were taken from you, and how the Prisoners behaved themselves; and first of Nichols.

Capt. Read. The most of the Time he was on board Capt. Manwareing Sloop, I heard him say, he did not like that Course of Life; and the last Words I heard Major Bonnet say to him, was, that he would force no Man to go against his Will.

Judge Trott. Can you say any thing of Dunkin?

Capt. Read. As for Dunkin, I did not see but he acted as the rest did.

Dunkin. Capt. Read, It was against my Will.

Mr. Hepworth. Capt. Read, were these Goods taken out of you, as are mentioned in the Indictment? (That Part of the Indictment read.) Were all these Goods taken out?

Capt. Read. Yes.

Clerk. Will any of you ask any Questions? George Dunkin, will you ask any Questions?

George Dunkin, Capt. Read, when did you see me as active as any of the rest?

Capt. Read. Before Capt. Manwareing was taken, I thought you had been a Prisoner; but afterwards I saw no difference.

Judge Trott. You was one of Bonnet's Crew, one of that Company.

Mr. Hepworth. We proceed to call another Evidence.

Francis Griffin. Capt. Read's Mate sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Griffin. I know them all.

Mr. Hepworth. Give an Account of what you know of Nichols, and the rest of the Prisoners.

Griffin. As for Nichols, he was a Man I know nothing of, he being on board of Manwareing's Sloop.

Mr. Hepworth. What do you know of Dunkin?

Griffin. I knew nothing of him till we were come to Cape Fear; and I saw no difference, but he shared among the rest.

Mr. Hepworth. Were those Goods taken out of the Sloop, the Goods mentioned in the Indictment?

Griffin. Yes, Sir.

J. Trott. Now you the Prisoners, what you have to say in your Defence I shall be ready to hear.

Clerk. William Morrison, what have you to say?

Morrison. I have no more to say than I have said already.

Clerk. William Livers aliàs Evis, what have you to say?

Evis. Nothing more.

Clerk. Samuel Booth.

Booth. When I went on board Major Bonnet, it was to go to St. Thomas's with him.

J. Trott. Why had you not continued at North Carolina, since you could not continue here?

Booth. I thought to have had better Business there.

Clerk. John Levit, William Eddy aliàs Nedy, Alexander Annand.

Prisoners. We were forced to go, and did not know what they would do.

Attor. Gen. But did you not know what you did when you shared? You knew that did not belong to you, did you not?

Clerk. George Ross, George Dunkin, Thomas Nichols, asked no Questions; only Dunkin deliver'd in a Paper, which was read in Court, and contained a Testimony of his former Behaviour when in Scotland.

Attor. Gen. Please your Honours and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I think it appears from the Evidence, that Nichols was under Constraint, and forced. As for Dunkin, and the rest, they all took their Shares at Cape Fear.

J. Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoners at the Bar stand indicted for Felony and Piracy committed on a Sloop belonging to Capt. Thomas Read. As for Nichols, Pell says that he was not joined to the Company, and said, as for his Share they might do what they pleased, for he hoped he should not be with them long: And when Major Bonnet sent for him on board, he refused to fight Col. Rhett; and if another had not been kill'd, Major Bonnet had blown his Brains out. Capt. Manwareing says, he refused his Share, and kept himself from the Company and from their Cabals; and he said when sent for on board, that he would die before he would fight. And Capt. Read says, that Major Bonnet said, that he would put him ashore, for he would force no Man against his Will. And Killing says that he told him, that he would not fight Col. Rhett, when Major Bonnet sent for him on board the Revenge. So that I think it plainly appears he was under Constraint. But for Dunkin, he says of himself indeed that he was a Prisoner, and under Constraint; but Pell says he was not, and that he took his Share, and was as the rest were. And Capt. Manwareing says, that he complained of the Bread, that it was fit for none but Negroes: so I shall leave you to consider that. As for the rest, they have but little to say in their Defence, and I think the Evidence have proved the Fact fully upon them. But I shall leave this to your Consideration; and remember you have the Lives of these Persons in your hands.

Then the Officer was sworn to keep the Jury:

Who after they had consider'd of their Verdict, returned and found the abovefaid William Morrison, William Livers aliàs Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewit, William Eddy aliàs Nedy, Alexander Annand, George Ross, and George Dunkin, Guilty; and Thomas Nichols, Not Guilty.

Then the Court adjourn'd till Monday Morning.

Monday, November the 3d, 1718. the Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN the Court proceeded to arraign John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, Henry Virgin, James Robbins aliàs Rattle, James Mullet aliàs Millet, Thomas Price, James Wilson, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, upon the following Indictment for taking Capt. Read.

The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King do, upon their Oaths, present, that John Ridge, late of London, Mariner, &c. as before.

To which Indictment John Ridge, Matthew King, Henry Virgin, James Robbins aliàs Rattle, James Mullet aliàs Millet, Thomas Price, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, pleaded not Guilty: and Daniel Perry and James Wilson pleaded Guilty.

Then the Court proceeded upon the Trial of those that had pleaded Not Guilty.

And the Jury were sworn, whose Names are as followeth:

Samuel Prioleau, Foreman.	Henry Genelac.
John Hodgson.	Benjamin Griffin.
Garrat Vanvelsin.	Charles Marche.
Lucas Stoutenburgh.	John Grimbail.
Joshua Mariner.	Nicholas Stephens.
Thomas Fairchild.	William Harvey.

The Witnesses against the Prisoners were the above-named.

Ignatius Pell.

Capt. Peter Manwareing.

Capt. Thomas Read.

James Killing. And

Francis Griffin.

Who gave the same Evidence against these Prisoners as those tried before.

And fully prov'd upon them all the Fact of piratically taking Capt. Read.

Only the Witnesses were more particularly examin'd as to James Robbins aliàs Rattle, who upon a former Indictment for taking Capt. Manwareing was acquitted.

Attor. Gen. Ignatius Pell, give an Account of James Robbins.

Ign. Pell. He was as the rest were when we shared at Cape Fear.

J. Trott. How long was he with you before he joined himself to the Company, after he came on board?

Ign. Pell. As soon as we came to Cape Fear.

Attor. Gen. Did you see Robbins have his Share?

Ign. Pell. Yes, Sir, they had all their Shares.

Attor. Gen. Was Robbins, on board Read's Sloop?

Ign. Pell. I cannot tell whether he was on board or not.

J. Trott. You looked upon him as one of the Company?

Ign. Pell. Yes.

Capt. Manwareing sworn.

Mr. Hep.

Mr. Hepworth. Please to begin with Robbins, how he behaved himself.

Capt. Manwareing. He was as the rest of the Men were: He was on board the Revenge, and I think they called him James Rattle sometimes.

J. Trott. Did he receive his Share?

Manwareing. He was among the Company when they did share.

James Killing called and sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Give an Account of Robbins.

Killing. All I can say, he was as the rest were in sharing Capt. Read's Goods, and was amongst them when they did share.

Capt. Read sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Give an Account of Robbins.

Capt. Read. I did not know him before we came to Cape Fear; but I did not see but he was as active there in taking out the Goods as any of the rest.

J. Trott. Did he share among the rest?

Capt. Read. Yes, I believe he did, for he was among them when they shared.

Robbins. I was forced to do what I did.

J. Trott. Did they force you to take your Share?

Francis Griffin called and sworn:

Mr. Hepworth. Give an Account of Robbins.

Griffin. I did not know him till we came to Cape Fear, and there I saw him on board the Revenge; and I did not see but that he did as the rest of the Company; and when they were sharing he was with them and received his Share.

Clerk. What have you to say, Robbins?

Robbins. I never was on board Capt. Read.

J. Trott. But you was one of the Company.

Robbins. I never consented to take out the Goods.

J. Trott. But you consented to take part of them; and they that shared the Goods were as much Pirates as those that took them out of the Vessel.

Then the Judge summ'd up the Evidence.

And an Officer was sworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had considered of their Verdict, returned and found the said John Ridge, Matthew King, Thomas Price, Henry Virgin, James Robbins, alias Rattle, James Mullet alias Millet, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, Guilty.

THE Court then delivered a Bill of Indictment to the Grand Jury, against John Brierly, alias Timber-head, Robert Boyd, Rowland Sharp, Jonathan Clarke, and Thomas Gerrard, for feloniously and piratically entering the Sloop Francis, belonging to Capt. Peter Manwareing the Commander, and taking certain Goods out of the same at Cape Fear.

And another Bill of Indictment against the same Persons for feloniously and piratically entering the Sloop Fortune belonging to Capt. Thomas Read Commander, and taking certain Goods out of the same at Cape Fear.

The Grand Jury returned upon the said Bills of Indictment Billa vera.

Then the Court proceeded to arraign the said John Brierly alias Timber-head, Robert Boyd, Rowland Sharp, Jonathan Clarke, and Thomas Gerrard, upon the following Indictment.

“ The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King do, upon their Oath, present, that John Brier- ly alias Timber-head, late of Bath-Town in North Carolina, Mariner; Robert Boyd, late of Bath-Town aforesaid, Mariner; Rowland Sharp, late of Bath-Town, Mariner; Jonathan Clarke, late of Charles-Town, in the Province of South-Carolina; and Thomas Gerrard, late of Antegoa, Mariner; the 27th Day of September, in the fifth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George, by the Grace of God, of Great-Britain, France, and Ireland, King Defender of the Faith, &c. by Force and Arms, upon the High Sea, in a certain Place call'd Cape Fear, about half a Mile distant from the Shore, in the Latitude of thirty four, or thereabouts, and within the Jurisdiction of the Court of Vice-Admiralty of this Province of South-Carolina, did piratically and feloniously set upon, board, break, and enter a certain Merchant Sloop call'd the Francis, Capt. Peter Manwareing Commander, then being a Sloop of certain Persons, (to the Jurors aforesaid are unknown) and then and there piratically and feloniously did make an Assault in and upon the said Peter Manwareing, and other his Mariners (whose Names to the Jurors aforesaid are unknown) in the same Sloop, in the Peace of God, and our Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being, particularly and feloniously did put the aforesaid Peter Manwareing, and others his Mariners of the same Sloop, in the Sloop aforesaid then being, in corporal fear of their Lives; then and there in the Sloop aforesaid, upon the high Sea, in the place aforesaid, call'd Cape Fear, about half a Mile distant from the Shore, in the Latitude of thirty-four, and within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, piratically and feloniously did steal, take and carry away the said Sloop Francis, and also six Hogsheads of Rum of the Value of Eight Pounds current Money of the Island of Barbadoes, and one Tierce of Sugar of the Value of Seven Pounds current Money of the Island of Antegoa, the Goods and Chattels of certain Persons (to the Jurors aforesaid unknown) then and there upon the high Sea aforesaid, in the Place aforesaid call'd Cape Fear, about half a Mile distant from the Shore, in the Latitude of thirty four, or thereabouts, as aforesaid, and within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, being found in the aforesaid Sloop in the Custody and Possession of the said Peter Manwareing, and others his Mariners of the Sloop aforesaid; and from their Custody and Possession, then and there upon the high Sea aforesaid, and in the Place aforesaid, called Cape Fear, about half a Mile distant from the Shore, in the Latitude of thirty four, or thereabouts, as aforesaid, and within the Jurisdiction aforesaid, against the Peace of our said now Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity. &c.

To which Indictment they all pleaded Not Guilty.

Then the Court proceeded upon their Trial.

The Jurors were sworn, whose Names were as followeth.

Timothy Bellamy, Foreman.

George Ducket.

John Rivers.

William Sberiffe.

Benjamin Dennis.

Hugh Durfey.

Thomas Chambers.

Daniel Townsbend.

John Lee.

Thomas Bee.

John Barton.

Richard Fairchild.

Then

Then the Witnesses were ordered to be called.
Clerk. Call Ignatius Pell, who was sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Pell, do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Ig. Pell. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Please to give an Account of what you know of them, and of their Behaviour at Cape Fear.

Ig. Pell. John Brierly and Robert Boyd came on board three or four Days after we came to Cape Fear.

J. Trott. You took them first, did you not?

Ig. Pell. Yes, we sent off our Dory, and took them.

J. Trott. From whence did they come?

Ig. Pell. From North Carolina.

Attorn. Gen. How long after they came on board did they join themselves to the Company?

Ig. Pell. Brierly did very soon, but Boyd did not so soon, tho' he did afterwards; and for Sharp, I do not know that ever he was joined to the Company.

J. Trott. And how did Clarke behave himself?

Ig. Pell. Jonathan Clarke and one came in from South Carolina: they went away from the Sloop; and then after some Days Clarke returned again, but it was with Hunger, tho' he said then it was not.

Attorn. Gen. Were there any Goods taken out of Capt. Read's Sloop after he had joined himself a second time?

Ig. Pell. I cannot say that certainly.

J. Trott. Nor you cannot say positively there were?

Ig. Pell. No.

Mr. Hepworth. What do you know of Gerrard?

Ig. Pell. I can say nothing to him.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the Evidence any Questions? John Brierly, will you ask any Questions?

Brierly. Pell, you know I often said I would not bear Arms, and that I desired no Share.

Ig. Pell. But John, you know you had your Arms ready as well as the rest, and that you had your Share.

Clerk. Robert Boyd, will you ask any Questions?

Boyd. No, Sir.

Clerk. Rowland Sharp, will you?

Sharp. No, Sir.

Clerk. Jonathan Clarke, will you ask any Questions?

Clarke. Pell, don't you remember that I was abaft, and one of the Negroes came and damned me, and asked me what I did there? why I did not go and work amongst the rest? and told me I should be used as a Negroe.

Ig. Pell. I do remember it was so.

Mr. Hepworth. We proceed to call another Evidence.

Capt. Thomas Read called and sworn.

Attorn. Gen. Capt. Read, please to begin with Brierly.

Capt. Read. Brierly came on board one Morning very early, and helped to take out several Goods.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know what Goods?

Capt. Read. Some Rum and Sugar.

J. Trott. Do you know those Goods to be taken out?

Capt. Read. Yes,

J. Trott. How did he behave himself when Mayor Bonnet sent for him on board to fight Colonel Rbett?

Capt. Read. I cannot tell.

Mr. Hepworth. How did Boyd behave himself?

Capt. Read. I took him to be a Prisoner like myself at first, till he was sent for on board the Revenge by Major Bonnet to fight Colonel Rbett.

Attorn. Gen. What made you think he was a Prisoner?

Capt. Read. Because he was not employ'd in any Business, as the rest were.

J. Trott. That Day they engaged Colonel Rbett, was he on board your Sloop?

Capt. Read. Yes, and Major Bonnet sent for all Hands on board the Revenge.

Attorn. Gen. What do you say of Sharp?

Capt. Read. I can say nothing of him.

Attorn. Gen. What have you to say of Clarke?

Capt. Read. He run away for a time, and then he return'd again after some Days.

Attorn. Gen. Was there any Goods taken out after he return'd?

Capt. Read. Yes, Sir.

J. Trott. Did Clarke himself take out those Goods?

Capt. Read. That I cannot tell; and as for Gerrard, he belong'd to Capt. Manwareing: and as the Captain and I was together, he came and told us how they us'd him; but he was sorry for what he had done, and was resolved to make his Escape the first Opportunity he had to get away.

Clerk. Have any of you any Questions to ask the King's Evidence?

The Prisoners ask no Questions.

Mr. Hepworth. We proceed to call another Evidence.

Francis Griffin sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Look upon the Prisoners; do you know them?

Griffin. I know them all.

Mr. Hepworth. Begin with John Brierly.

Griffin. He was on board of us some time when we were at Cape Fear, and he was as the rest of the Company was; and he said he hoped when Major Bonnet should go to the Northward, to be revenged on some at the Hore-kills, for some Offence they had given him there.

J. Trott. You looked upon him as one of the Crew?

Griffin. Yes.

J. Trott. What do you know of Boyd?

Griffin. He was on board of us some time; and when Major Bonnet sent for all Hands on board the Revenge, he went with them: but as for Sharp, I can say nothing of him, nor of Clarke, only he run away, and in some Days he return'd again.

Mr. Hepworth. We shall call another Evidence.

Capt. Peter Manwareing sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Captain Manwareing, do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Capt. Manwareing. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Please to give the Court an Account of what you know of them; and begin with Brierly.

Manwareing. Brierly, the 12th Day of August he came on board; and a little after he was on board, I did not see but he acted as the rest did, and he hoped to come up with some at the Hore-kills: but as for Boyd, he was on board Capt. Read's Sloop.

J. Trott. What have you to say of Sharp?

Manwareing. Some time after he came to Cape Fear, and Major Bonnet sent for him on board the Revenge, he said he would go on shore if he had an Opportunity, and I never saw him among the rest of the Company.

Judge Trott. What have you to say of Jonathan Clarke?

Manwareing. After we had been at Cape Fear some Days, Jonathan Clarke, and one Dolton, came in, and Major Bonnet sent the Dory, and brought them on board; and after some Days, Clarke and _____ went away, and was gone some Days, and then returned again, and then he was ordered to work among the Negroes. As for my Man Garrard, he came and told me, he was not able to bear any longer, but was forced to comply with them, for they told him they would have no regard for the Colour, but wou'd make a Slave of him; but he did not receive any of their Goods; and when he was at home, he had the Character of an honest Man, and fought for his King and Country.

Mr. Hepworth. We will call another Evidence.

James Killing called and sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know the Prisoners at the Bar?

Killing. I know them all very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Give the Court an Account of what you know of their sharing at Cape Fear.

Killing. Brierly was put on board our Sloop there to work at his Trade, and would often say, he had a Quarrel against some at the Hore-Kills, he hoped to revenge himself upon them.

Judge Trott. Why what had they done to him?

Killing. He was in debt, and therefore he owed them a Grudge; but for the rest, I can say nothing.

Judge Trott. You the Prisoners, what you have to say in your Defence, I shall now be ready to hear.

Cl. John Brierly, what have you to say?

Brierly. Mr. Boyd and I was in a leaky Canoo, and we were afraid she would sink, and so we were obliged to keep along shore; and I stood up, and thought I saw a Vessel or two, and he bid me look again, and then I saw it was a Vessel. They sent off their Dory, and asked if we would consent to go with them? And we said, No: But they said they would break the Canoo, and we might go where we pleased. So they made me consent to go on board the Revenge, but I never joined myself while I was on board: And then I was order'd on board Captain Manwareing, and there I worked; but I never bore Arms, nor did fight Colonel Rbett.

Cl. Rowland Sharp, what have you to say?

Sharp. After I was taken, I went on shore, and travelled four Days in the Woods without eating or drinking, and could find the way to no Plantation, and so was forced to return again, and I refused to sign the Articles; and one of the Men came and told me I was to be shot, and I had the Liberty to chuse the four Men that should do it, and the Boatwain went about to get Hands to beg me off; but I was resolved to make my Escape the first Opportunity.

Cl. Jonathan Clarke, what have you to say?

Clarke. The 12th of August coming into Cape Fear with Mr. Dolton, he thought he saw the Mast of a Vessel, and I desired him to take the Helm that I might see, for if there was any Vessel it was Pirates; but Dolton said it was nothing but an old Tree: But when we came farther in, we saw three Sloops, and they sent off their Dory and took us, and carried us aboard the Revenge; and Major Bonnet asked from whence we came? and I told him. He asked me where we were a going? we told him. The next Day he asked if I did not design to do as they did? I told him no. Then I went away with a Design to get clear of them, but with Hunger was forced to return again: And they asked me if I would sign the Articles then? and I refused; and one of the Negroes came and damned me, and asked me why I did not go to the Pump, and told me that was my Business: And Major Bonnet told me if I did not, he would make me Governor of the first Island he came to; for he would put me ashore, and leave me there.

Cl. Thomas Gerrard, what have you to say?

Gerrard. Some time after we were taken, one of the Men came and asked if I would join with them? I told him, No. He said, I was but * like a Negro, and they made Slaves of us all of that Colour, if they did not join. So I did it with a Design to get clear of them the first Opportunity; and I never shared any of the Goods.

Judge Trott. Pell, did he never share?

Pell. He never did share.

Judge Trott. And did they threaten to make a Slave of him, if he did not join?

Pell. Yes.

Att. Gen. May it please your Honours, and you the Gentlemen of the Jury, as for Brierly and Boyd, it appears from the Evidence that they came to Cape Fear three or four Days after Bonnet: Brierly he took up very soon, and Boyd some time after; and that there were several Goods taken out of Capt. Manwareing's Sloop, and particularly Rum and Sugar. And as for Sharp, there is no Evidence proves any thing fully on him; and therefore I think he may be looked upon as under Constraint and Force. As for Gerrard, I think the same; for though he signed the Articles, yet no Evidence proves that he did share any of the Goods: Nay, the Boatwain says he did not share; and if they did not comply with them, they would make a Slave of him all the Days of his Life. And Capt. Manwareing says he had the Character of an honest Man at home; and that he fought for his King and Country.

Judge Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoners at the Bar stand charged with Piracy, committed on a Sloop belonging to Capt. Manwareing; and the Evidence have proved it fully upon Brierly and Boyd; and particularly, that there was Rum and Sugar taken out. Brierly took up very soon with them, and had his Share; and that he hoped to revenge himself on some at the Hore-Kills. Boyd did not take up so soon; but he did afterward. As for Sharp, he would have made his Escape, but could not; and Major Bonnet told him he should die, and bid him chuse four Men to shoot him; and tho' he signed the Articles, he never shared, as Pell proves. As for Clarke, he says he was forced to it; that he went away, and Hunger forced him to return again, and the Negroes insulted over him; and

* He was a Mullato.

Major Bonnet told him, he would make him Governor of an Island, and leave him there; and none of the Evidence proves that he shared any of the Goods. And as for Gerrard, he was threaten'd to be made a Slave of; tho' indeed he had been better made a Slave than go a pirating: But Capt. Manwareing says he had the Report of an honest Man in his Country; and that he was faithful to his King and Country: So I shall leave those to your Consideration. And if you think they were under Force and Constraint, as indeed it appears to me, by the whole Course of the Evidence, that they were, then you ought to acquit them.

Then an Officer was sworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had considered of their Verdict, returned, and found John Brierly aliàs Timberhead, and Robert Boyd, Guilty; Rowland Sharp, Jonathan Clarke, and Thomas Gerrard, Not Guilty.

Then the Court adjourned till Tuesday Morning.

Tuesday, November the Fourth, 1718. the Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN the Court proceeded to arraign the said John Brierly aliàs Timberhead, Robert Boyd, Rowland Sharp, Jonathan Clarke, and Thomas Gerrard, upon the following Indictment.

“ The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King do upon their Oath present, That John Brierly aliàs Timberhead, late of Bath-Town in North Carolina, Mariner; Robert Boyd, late of Bath-Town afore said, Mariner, Rowland Sharp, late of Bath-Town afore said, Mariner; Jonathan Clarke, late of Charles-Town, in the Province of South Carolina, Mariner; and Thomas Gerrard, late of Antegoa, Mariner; the twenty seventh Day of September, in the Fifth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. by Force and Arms, &c. upon the High Sea, in a certain Place called Cape Fear, about half a Mile distant from the Shore, in the Latitude of Thirty-four, or thereabouts, and within the Jurisdiction of the Court of Vice-Admiralty of South Carolina, did piratically and feloniously set upon, board, break, and enter a certain Merchant-Sloop, called the Fortune, Thomas Read, Commander, then being a Sloop of certain Persons (to the Jurors afore said unknown) and then and there piratically and feloniously did make an Assault in and upon the said Thomas Read, and other his Mariners, (whose Names to the Jurors afore said are unknown.) In the same Sloop, against the Peace of God, and of our now Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being, piratically and feloniously, did put the afore said Thomas Read, and others his Mariners of the same Sloop, in the Sloop afore said, then being in corporal Fear of their Lives, then and there in the Sloop afore said, upon the High Sea, in the Place afore said, called Cape Fear, about half a Mile distant from the Shore, in the Latitude of Thirty-four, or thereabouts, and within the Jurisdiction afore said, piratically and feloniously did steal, take,

“ and carry away the said Sloop Fortune, and also ten Barrels of Pork, of the Value of twenty Pounds, current Money of Pennsylvania; two Firkins of Butter, of the Value of fifty Shillings, like current Money of Pennsylvania; and three Tierces of Bread, of the Value of six Pounds ten Shillings, like current Money of Pennsylvania; the Goods and Chattels of certain Persons, (to the Jurors afore said unknown) then and there, upon the High Sea afore said, in the afore said Place, called Cape Fear, about half a Mile distant from the Shore, in the Latitude of thirty-four, or thereabouts, as afore said, and within the Jurisdiction afore said; being found in the afore said Sloop, in the Custody and Possession of the said Thomas Read, and others his Mariners, of the Sloop afore said, and from their Custody and Possession, then and there, upon the High Sea afore said, in the Place afore said, called Cape Fear, about half a Mile distant from the Shore, in the Latitude of thirty-four, or thereabouts, as afore said, and within the Jurisdiction afore said, against the Peace of our said now Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown, and Dignity, &c.

Who all pleaded Not Guilty.

Then the Court proceeded upon their Trial.

The Jurors were sworn, whose Names are as followeth:

Samuel Proileau, Foreman.	Henry Guelac.
John Hodgson.	John Ballentine.
Garrat Vanvelsin.	Charles Marche.
Lucas Stoutenburgh.	John Grimbball.
Joshua Mariner.	Nicholas Stephens.
Thomas Fairchild.	William Harvey.

Then the Witnesses were ordered to be called.

Clerk. Call Ignatius Pell: Who was sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Pell, give an Account first of Brierly and Boyd.

Ig. Pell. As for Brierly, he soon united himself to the Company; and when we engaged Colonel Rbett, he was as active as any of the rest. But for Boyd, he was sent on board Capt. Read's Sloop, and was there till Major Bonnet sent for him on board the Revenge, to fight Colonel Rbett.

Judge Trott. And did he fight?

Ig. Pell. He was wounded with one of the first Shot, and so was carried down into the Hole; so that he never did fight.

Mr. Dean. Why was he put on board the Sloop?

Ig. Pell. To look after the Sloop, I suppose.

Att. Gen. Had he his Arms ready when you engaged Col. Rbett?

Ig. Pell. Yes, Sir: So we had all in general: But I did not see him use them.

As for the other three, he thought them to be under Constraint, and they did not fight Colonel Rbett.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the King's Evidence any Questions?

No Questions ask'd by the Prisoners.

Mr. Hepworth. We proceed to call another Evidence.

Capt. Peter Manwareing sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Capt. Manwareing give an Account of the Prisoners of their fighting Colonel Rbett, and begin with Brierly and Boyd.

Capt. Manwareing. They came on board, and Brierly soon became one of the Company, and hoped to revenge himself on them at the Hore-Kills, and acted as the rest did when they engaged Col. Rbett. But as for Boyd, I took him to be a Prisoner for some Time.

Captain Manwareing's Evidence concerning Sharp, Clarke, and Gerrard, the same as in the former Trial.

Mr. Hepworth. Will any of you ask the King's Evidence any Questions?

No Questions ask'd by the Prisoners.

Mr. Hepworth. We will call another Evidence.

James Killing call'd and sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Give an Account of the Prisoners at the Bar; and first of Brierly and Boyd.

Killing. As for Boyd, he was on board Captain Read after we came to Cape Fear, till they were sent for to fight Colonel Rbett; and I thought he had been a Prisoner till then, and I talked very free to him. And as for Brierly, he was as the rest of the Company.

Att. Gen. Were there any Goods taken out after Brierly came on board?

Killing. Yes.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you know what Goods?

Killing. I cannot remember every particular Sort.

His Evidence against the other three the same as in the former Trial.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the King's Evidence any Questions?

No Questions ask'd by the Prisoners.

Mr. Hepworth. We call another Evidence.

Capt. Thomas Read call'd and sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Capt. Read, please to give an Account of the Prisoners at the Bar; and first of Brierly and Boyd.

Capt. Read. As for Brierly, I did not see but he acted as all the rest of the Company did.

Judge Trott. What have you to say of Boyd?

Capt. Read. I thought him to be a Prisoner, and discours'd freely with him, which if he had discovered, it had done me an Injury; for I heard him wish we might meet with a Thirty-Gun Ship, and I told him I should be glad of it as well as he.

Foreman. What did he wish to meet with a Thirty-Gun Ship for?

Capt. Read. To free us from the Pirates.

His Evidence against the other three the same as before.

Clerk. Will any of you ask the King's Evidence any Questions?

None of the Prisoners ask'd any Questions.

Judge Trott. You the Prisoners may now speak what you have to say.

Clerk. What have you to say John Brierly?

Brierly. When Mr. Boyd and I came in at Cape Fear, we saw three Sloops; and then came off a Dory with some Hands, and haled us, and then carried us on board; but we did not know that they were Marrooners. But Mr. Boyd trembled, and shook like a Leaf; and I told him not to be afraid. So they carried us on board.

Judge Trott. And so you united yourself with them to make up the Company?

Brierly. I was forced to do what I did.

Clerk. Robert Boyd, what have you to say?

Boyd. After we came to Cape Fear, and was taken by Bonnet's Men, I was on board the Revenge for some Time, and they asked me to sign the Articles, the which I refused; and Major Bonnet told me, if I did not, he would marroon me on an Island, and leave me. And after I was sent on board Capt. Read's Sloop, I had nothing but the Provisions I lived on; I never had any thing more. And when Major Bonnet sent for all on board to fight Colonel Rbett, it would have been present Death for any to refuse, and I was wounded with one of the first Shot.

The other three made it appear they were innocent, as in the other Indictment.

Att. Gen. May it please your Honours, and you the Gentlemen of the Jury, the Evidence proves the Fact fully on Brierly; that he soon engaged with Bonnet after he was taken, and that he acted as the rest of the Company did; and that he hoped to be revenged on some at the Hore-Kills. As for Boyd, though he was on board the Pirate-Sloop, he never took Part with them; and he wished for a Thirty-Gun Ship, that they might be set at Liberty. And Capt. Read, took him for a Prisoner till he was sent for on board the Revenge; and then the Boatswain says he did not fight. As for the other three, I think it appears they were under Constraint and Force.

Judge Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoners at the Bar stand indicted for piratically taking Capt. Read, in the Sloop Fortune. As for Brierly, the Evidence proves it very plain and fully upon him, that he took up very soon with them, and did hope to revenge himself upon some of the Hore-Kills, and that he engaged against Col. Rbett. As for Boyd, Capt. Read looked upon him as a Prisoner; and that he had such Discourse with him, that if he had disclos'd it to Bonnet's Crew, it had done him much hurt; and the Boatswain says, he did not fight Col. Rbett. And as for the other three, I think it hath been fully proved they were under Constraint. But I shall leave it to your Consideration.

Then an Officer was sworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had consider'd of their Verdict, returned, and found John Brierly alias Timberhead, Guilty; Robert Boyd, Rowland Sharp, Jonathan Clarke, and Thomas Gerrard, Not Guilty.

Then the Court adjourned till Wednesday Morning.

Wednesday, November the Fifth, 1718. the Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN Robert Tucker, Edward Robinson, Neal Paterson, William Scot, Job Bayley, John William Smith, Thomas Carman, John Thomas, William Morrison, William Livers alias Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, John Levit, William Eddy alias Nedy, Alexander Annand, George Ross, George Dunkin, John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, Henry Virgin, James Robbins, James Mullet alias Millet, Thomas Price, John Lopez, Zachariah Long, James Wilson, John Brierly alias Timberhead, and Robert Boyd, who stood convicted of Piracies, as appears by the above Records, were brought to the Bar, and were severally asked what

what they could say why Judgment of Death should not pass upon them.

And they having nothing to alledge in arrest of Judgment;

Then Proclamation for Silence was made, while the Judge of the Court of Vice-Admiralty pronounced Sentence of Death upon the Prisoners.

J. Trott. You the Prisoners at the Bar, Robert Tucker, Edward Robinson, Neal Paterson, William Scot, Job Bayley, John-William Smith, Thomas Carman, John Thomas, William Morrison, William Livers aliàs Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, John Levit, William Eddy aliàs Nedy, Alexander Anand, George Rofs, George Dunkin, John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, Henry Virgin, James Robbins, James Mullet aliàs Millet, Thomas Price, John Lopez, Zachariah Long, James Wilson, John Brierly, and Robert Boyd, stand here convicted of Piracy.

You have been indicted but for two Acts of Piracy; but you know upon the Trials it was fully proved against most of you, that you piratically took thirteen Vessels since you joined Major Bonnet, and sailed from Topsail Inlet in North Carolina.

So that many of you might have been convicted on eleven more Indictments of Piracy.

Besides, several of you were proved to be Pirates before that time, as belonging to Thatch's Crew; and so were guilty of the several Piracies committed while you belong'd to him.

You cannot but acknowledge that you have all of you had a fair and indifferent Trial.

You were fully heard, not only as to all you could pretend to say in your own Defences, but also as to what you alledge in Mitigation of your Crimes.

And indeed, when you saw that the Facts laid in the Indictment were so fully proved against you, tho' most of you pleaded Not Guilty for Form-fake, yet in the open Court, upon your Trials, most of you acknowledged the Facts charged upon you. Therefore no one can think but that you were all of you justly found Guilty; and your own Consciences will oblige you to acknowledge the same. So that there is not any of you who can complain of any Hardships at your Trials.

As to the Crime that you are convicted of, which is Piracy, the Evil and Wickedness of it is evident to the Reason of all Men: So that it needs no Words to aggravate the same; it is so destructive of all Trade and Commerce between Nation and Nation, that Pirates are called Enemies to Mankind, with whom no Faith nor Oath ought to be kept; and they are term'd in our Law Brutes and Beasts of Prey, and therefore it is the Interest, as well as Duty, of all Governments to bring such Offenders to Punishment.

Tho' the Greatness of your Crime is such, that no one can think but that the Sentence of Death which will now be passed upon you is justly due to you for the same; yet as Pity and Compassion, even to the worst of Criminals, when brought to Punishment, are natural to all Men who have not flung off all Sense of Humanity, but much more firmly ingrafted in the Hearts of Christians; therefore surely it cannot but be a very melancholy Spectacle to see so many Persons in the Prime of their Years, in perfect Health and Strength, dropping into the Grave: And which is a more sorrowful Consideration, that they are in the height of their Sins; and therefore, without the infinite Mercies of God, through the Satisfaction of Christ, must necessarily sink into the Dwellings of everlasting Misery.

And indeed, most sad and deplorable is the Condition you have brought your selves to: To be adjudg'd by the Laws of your Country unworthy any longer to live, and to tread the Earth, or breathe the Air; and that no further Good or Benefit can be expected from you but by the Example of your Deaths; and to stand like Marks or fatal Rocks and Sands, to warn others from the same Shipwrack and Ruin for the future.

As most of you have been Mariners by Profession, and every one of you have several times been at Sea; so I cannot but wonder, that being so often at Sea, you should not consider the great Power of God in creating the same, and his Providence in preserving those who pass upon it; and consequently, that such Thoughts should not cause in you a Dread of his Power, and a Love of his Goodness.

The Consideration of God's Power in making the Sea, and setting Bounds to the raging Waters thereof, is used as an Argument by God himself, why Men should fear him; for thus God expresseth it by the Prophet Jeremiah: Fear ye not me? saith the Lord: will ye not tremble at my Presence, which have placed the Sand for the bound of the Sea by a perpetual Decree, that it cannot pass it; and tho' the Waves thereof toss themselves, yet can they not prevail: tho' they fear, yet can they not pass over it; Jer. 5. v. 22. Or as it is expressed in the Book of Job: Hitherto shalt thou come, but no farther; and here shall thy proud Waves be stayed: Job 38. v. 11.

The Psalmist saith, that they that go down to the Sea in Ships, that do Business in great Waters; these see the Works of the Lord, and his Wonders in the Deep. For he commandeth and raiseth the stormy Wind, which lifteth up the Waves thereof. They mount up to the Heaven, they go down again to the Depths, their Soul is melted because of Trouble. They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken Man, and are at their Wits end. Then they cry unto the Lord in their Trouble, and he bringeth them out of their Distresses. He maketh a Storm a Calm, so that the Waves thereof are still. Then they are glad because they be quiet; so he bringeth them unto their desired Haven. But the practical Inference that he draws from these is, That Men should praise the Lord for his Goodness, and for his wonderful Works to the Children of Men: Psal. 107. v. 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31.

But instead of having a Sense of God's Power and Goodness, in preserving you and others upon the Sea, your frequent Preservations harden'd you into a Contempt of the Danger you were in; and you thereby slighted your Deliverance. And tho' you could not but see the many natural Dangers that attend the Seas, and those who had occasion to go upon the same, yet you were resolv'd that you would contribute what in you lay to the Hazards thereof, by the frequent Rapines and Murders which you committed. So that what the Prophet saith of the Pride of the Tyrians, may be apply'd to you, that you caused your Terror to be on all that haunt the Sea: Ezek. 26. ver. 17.

Altho' it may be, while you were in your seeming Prosperity, and went on in your committing Spoils and Robberies without controul, you might make a mock at your Sins, Prov. 14. v. 9. and ch. 10. v. 23. and say in your Hearts, God hath forgotten, forgotten, he hideth his Face, he will never see it, Psal. 10. v. 11. 94. v. 7. 64. v. 5. and Job 22. v. 13. yet now that you see that God's Hand hath reached you, and his Power hath brought you to public Justice; I hope your present unhappy Condition hath had a good effect upon you, that it hath raised in you more serious Thoughts; and that you are now sensible of the Greatness of your Sins, and that you will sincerely repent you of the same.

As to the great Evil and Sinfulness of the Facts you have committed, surely you cannot but know, that it is one of the express Commandments of God, Thou shalt not steal, Exod. 20. v. 15. and the Apostle St. Paul expressly affirms, that Thieves shall not inherit the Kingdom of God, 1 Cor. 6. v. 10.

But then remember that to Theft you have added the Sin of Murder, in destroying those Persons who were sent by lawful Authority to suppress you, and to put a stop to your wicked Actions. For you being no way authorised to use the Sword, or to fight any one, every one of those Persons who fell by your Hands, were murdered; and their Blood now cries for Vengeance against you: For it is the Voice of Nature, as well as the revealed Law of God, that Whoso sheddeth Man's Blood, by Man shall his Blood be shed, Gen. 9. v. 6.

It is the Commandment of God, Thou shalt do no Murder, Exod. 20. v. 13. and the Apostle enumerating several of the Works of the Flesh, amongst the rest reckons Murders; and then concludes with these remarkable Words: Of which I tell you before, as I have told you in time past, that they which do such things, shall not inherit the Kingdom of God, Gal. 5. v. 21.

And Murderers are threaten'd to have their part in the Lake which burneth with Fire and Brimstone, which is the second Death, Rev. 21. v. 8. See ch. 22. v. 15. Words which carry that Terror with them, that considering your Circumstances, and your Guilt, surely the Sound of them must make you tremble; For who can dwell with everlasting Burnings? Isa. 33. v. 14.

I suppose you all know that you must appear before the Tribunal of Christ; from whose infinite Knowledge none of your Actions can be hid, and from whose infinite Power no one can rescue you or protect you; and from whom, without a true and unfeigned Repentance for all your Sins past, you can expect no other than that dreadful Sentence of Condemnation, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting Fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels, Matth. 25. v. 41.

I do not speak this to overwhelm you with Sorrow, much less to drive you into Despair of God's Mercy, which is one of the worst of Sins, and which I hope you will not add to your other Offences against God. But I mention this to you, to make you sensible of the great Danger of your Condition, without true and unfeigned Repentance. For seeing I can give you no hopes of Pardon from Man, I hope you will improve the short time you have now left you, to make your Peace with God, and to obtain Pardon from him.

And I wish that what I now say to you in this your deplorable Conditions, may make you all sensible of the Greatness of your Offences, that so you may become truly penitent; which if you are, you may yet hope for Mercy from God: For tho' your Sins be as Scarlet, [even dyed in Blood] yet he can make them white as Snow, Isa. 1. v. 18.

Therefore if you will now turn unto God by a true and unfeigned Repentance, he will not refuse you nor reject you, even now in your great Distress.

For the Threatnings declared by God in the Scripture against Sinners, must always be understood against impenitent Sinners; for God hath declared himself to be Merciful and Gracious, Exod. 34. v. 6. And that he hath no pleasure in the death of the Wicked, but that the Wicked turn from his way and live, Ezek. 33. v. 11. ch. 18. v. 23. And hath promised that when he doth so; he shall save his Soul alive, ver. 27.

But be sure remember that you must go to God, in and thro' the alone Merits and Intercession of his Son Jesus Christ, who hath made Satisfaction to the Justice of God for us: For he is our Advocate with the Father; And he is the Propitiation for our Sins, John 2 v. 1, 2. For his Blood cleanseth us from all Sin, ch. 1. v. 7. Know therefore, that there is none other Name under Heaven given among Men, whereby we must be saved, but only by the Name of the Lord Jesus, Acts 4. v. 12.

But then consider how he invites all them that labour and are heavy laden with their Sins to come unto him, and he will give them rest, Matth. xi. v. 28. He will not break the bruised Reed, nor quench the smoking Flax, Isa. 42. v. 3. compared with Matth. 12. v. 20. The Apostle tells us, that Christ Jesus came into the World to save Sinners, 1 Tim. 1. v. 15. And he himself assures us, that he came to seek and save that which was lost, Luke 19. v. 10. Matth. 18. v. 11. And hath promised, that he that cometh unto him, he will in no wise cast out, John 6. 37.

Doubt not therefore, but that if you will now sincerely turn to God, he will accept you, and pardon and forgive you your Sins.

But know that the Condition of these and other the Promises of God made to Sinners, is Faith and Repentance. And great Sins (such as yours are) must have great Repentance. You must earnestly cry unto God for Pardon and Remission of your Sins, and particularly, that he would deliver you from Blood-guiltiness, Psal. 51. v. 14.

And do not mistake the Nature of Repentance, to be only barely a Sorrow for your Sins, by reason of the Evil and Punishment which they have now brought upon you: but your Sorrow for your Sins must arise from the Consideration of your having offended a gracious and merciful God. To which should be added, a sincere Resolution and an actual Amendment for the future. Indeed, such is your unhappy Circumstances, that you cannot give any actual Proof of the Amendment of your Lives: but remember that God knows the Heart.

Time will not permit me to enlarge upon the Nature of Repentance, and of the many Mistakes that Men make in that great Duty: Neither indeed will I so far presume to meddle out of my own Profession. You may have those Matters better explained to you by some of the Ministers of this Province, whom you may desire to attend you, and sit you for Death; and from them you may expect more full and particular Directions: For the Priest's Lips shall keep Knowledge, and you shall seek the Law at their Mouths: for they are the Messengers of the Lord, Mal. 2. v. 7. And the Ambassadors of Christ; and to them is committed the Word [or Doctrine] of Reconciliation, 2 Cor. 5. v. 19, 20.

Thus having discharged my Duty to you as a Christian, by exhorting you to an unfeigned Repentance for your Crimes, and Faith in Christ, by by whose Merits alone you must hope for Pardon and Salvation; I must now do my Office as a Judge.

The Sentence that the Law hath appointed to pass upon you for your Offences, and which this Court doth therefore award, is,

That you the said Robert Tucker, Edward Robinson, Neal Paterfon, William Scot, Job Bayley, John William Smith, Thomas Carman, John Thomas, William Morrison, William Livers aliàs Evis, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, John Levit, William Eddy aliàs Nedy, Alexander Annand, George Rofs, George Dunkin, John Ridge, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, Henry Virgin, James Robbins, James Mullet aliàs Millet, Thomas Price, John Lopez, Zachariah Long, James Wilson, John Brierly, and Robert Boyd, shall go from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, where you shall be severally hanged by the Neck, till you are severally dead.

And the God of infinite Mercy be merciful to every one of your Souls.

After the Condemnation of the above-mention'd Persons, Thomas Nichols, Rowland Sharp, Jonathan Clarke, and Thomas Gerrard, who were found Not Guilty, were discharged.

And then the Court adjourn'd to Monday the 10th Instant.

On Saturday, November the 8th, 1718, Robert Tucker, Edward Robinson, Neal Paterfon, William Scot, Job Bayley, John William Smith, John Thomas, William Morrison, Samuel Booth, William Hewet, William Eddy aliàs Nedy, Alexander Ammand, George Rofs, George Dunkin, Matthew King, Daniel Perry, Henry Virgin, James Robbins, James Mullet aliàs Millet, Thomas Price, John Lopez, and Zachariah Long, were executed at the White Point near Charles-Town, according to the above Sentence.

Monday, November the 10th, 1718. the Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN the Court proceeded to arraign Stede Bonnet aliàs Edwards aliàs Thomas, [who had escaped, but was retaken. Nov. 6.] for feloniously and piratically taking the Sloop Francis, with her Goods, Capt. Peter Manwareing, Commander; and the Sloop Fortune, with her Goods, Capt. Thomas Read, Commander; upon the two following Indictments.

The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, do on their Oath present, That Stede Bonnet aliàs Edwards aliàs Thomas, late of Barbadoes, Mariner; Robert Tucker, late of the Island of Jamaica, Mariner, &c. as before.

The Jurors for our Sovereign Lord the King, do on their Oath present, That Stede Bonnet aliàs Edwards aliàs Thomas, late of the Island of Barbadoes, Mariner; David Heriot, late of the Island of Jamaica, Mariner; Edward Robinson, late of Newcastle upon Tine, Mariner, &c. as before.

To both which Indictments he pleaded Not Guilty. Judge Trott. You are to come upon your Trial this Day, upon the first Indictment, and you have pleaded Not Guilty: so that what Evidence you have must be ready.

Bonnet. My pleading Not Guilty is because I may have something to offer in my Defence; and therefore I hope none of the Bench will take it amiss.

The Court proceeded upon his Trial on the first Indictment, for piratically taking the Sloop Francis, Capt. Peter Manwareing, Commander.

Then the Jurors were sworn, whose Names are as followeth.

Timothy Bellamy, Foreman.
George Ducket.
William Sberiff.
Benjamin Dennis.
Jonathan Main.
John Lee.

Thomas Bee.
James Mazyck.
Thomas Lamboll.
Henry Beaton.
Moses Wilson.
Claas Foor.

Mr. Hepworth. May it please your Honours, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; The Prisoner who now stands arraigned at the Bar, has been guilty of many Piracies, committed many Robberies, ruined many Families, and been the Occasion of many most cruel and inhuman Murders, and all that within a very short Time past. Should I here descend into all the Particulars, I shall take up too much of your Time. You know (all of ye) I believe, after what manner he lately fled from Justice. Nay, he was not satisfied with his own Escape, but he must tamper with the King's Evidence, to avoid others being prosecuted; and prevailed with the Master Herriot to run away with him, who has been since killed. And I believe the Prisoner at the Bar cannot, upon Reflection, but think himself answerable for that Man's Death. Nay, some People took particular notice of the Prisoner's Behaviour at the Time when Thatch having got the Command from him, he began to reflect upon his past Course of Life, and was then filled with such Horror, that he was perfectly confounded with Shame at the many detestable Crimes he had been guilty of, and said, he would gladly leave off that way of living, being fully tired, and having got considerably by it; but he should be ashamed ever to see the Face of an Englishman: Therefore if he could not get to Spain or Portugal, where he might be undiscovered, he would live and die in the same Course of Life, viz. in Piracy and Robbery.

The Trial of this Man ought to be the more considerable, as he was the great Ringleader of them; who has seduced many poor Ignorant Men to follow his Course of Living, and ruined many poor Wretches; some of whom lately suffered, who with their last Breath expressed a great Satisfaction at the Prisoner's being apprehended, and charged the Ruin of themselves and Loss of their Lives intirely upon him.

We shall now proceed to call our Evidences.

Ign. Pell. called and sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Pell, begin with the first Indictment, and when you was first acquainted with Major Bonnet.

Ing. Pell. It was at the Bay of Honduras; but Capt. Thatch was Commander in Chief.

Att. Gen. This I observe was before they went to Top-sail-Inlet at North-Carolina.

Ing. Pell. Yes, Sir, for when we came to Top-sail-Inlet, Robert Tucker was chose Quarter-Master; and and we went out to go to St. Thomas's for a Commission to go a privateering against the Spaniards; but the first Vessel we saw we took.

Mr. Hepworth. What did you take out of her?

Ign. Pell. We took some Provisions.

Att. Gen. Had you no Provisions on board the Revenge?

Ign. Pell. Yes, Sir, some Beef, Pork, and Flower.

Mr. Hepworth. What was the next Vessel you took?

Ign. Pell. A Sloop belonging to Bermudas. After we had discharged her, we took another in which were eight Negroes. We took out two, and left three Men and two Women, and sent three Hands more which made eight; and the next Day we gave Chace to two Ships belonging to Glasgow in Scotland, and in the Evening we came up with them, and the other turned Tail, and we never saw them more after that. And after we had taken some Tobacco and other Goods we discharged them. We took, as I remember, two Vessels belonging to Bristol, when Capt. Read was taken.

Att. Gen. What do you know of Capt. Manwareing?

Ign. Pell. We were at an Anchor near Cape James alias Cape Inlopen, and a little before Night we saw a Sloop come to an Anchor at the Mouth of the River, and we sent off the Dory with five Hands, and in a little Time they returned with Capt. Manwareing; and the next Day we haled the Sloop long-side the Scooner which we had taken before, and hoisted out several Hogsheads of Molasses and Rum, and put them on board the Canoo, and put some Pitch and Tar on board the Sloop.

Att. Gen. Who gave you Orders for the doing of that?

Ign. Pell. I cannot tell, Sir.

Att. Gen. Did you see Major Bonnet on board Manwareing's Sloop?

Ign. Pell. I cannot say he was, neither do I know certainly that he was not.

Judge Trott. Was he not your Commander?

Ign. Pell. He was called our Captain to be sure.

Cl. Have you any Questions to ask the King's Evidence?

Bonnet. Don't you believe in your Conscience, that when we left Top-sail-Inlet, it was to go to St. Thomas's? And there were near forty Hands, and the concluded to a marrooning.

Ign. Pell. I did believe it was so till after we were out.

Judge Trott. That was what they accused you for on their Trials; that you deceived them, under a Pretence of going to St. Thomas's.

Bonnet. I am sorry that they should take the Opportunity of my Absence to accuse me of that which I was free from.

Mr. Dean. If there were forty Hands on board, it cannot be thought that he had Power to command them.

Judge Trott. But he was Commander in Chief among them, and that after they went a pirating; was it not so, Boatswain?

Ign. Pell. He went by that Name; but the Quarter-Master had more Power than he.

Judge Trott. What do you mean by your Evasions? Was he Commander in Chief, or was he not?

Ign. Pell. He was.

Judge Trott. Then who had the greatest Power?

Att. Gen. Do you know if he received his Share of Capt. Manwareing's Goods? Or did any receive it for him?

Ign. Pell. Sir, it was the Quarter-Master took care of that.

Judge Trott. He was Commander in Chief, and therefore I suppose he had a double Share?

Ign. Pell. I did never enquire whether he had or not.

Judge Trott. Boatswain, tell the Truth; had he his Share, or had he not?

Ign. Pell. He had it.

Bonnet. Boatswain, did you ever hear me force any Man to go?

Ign. Pell. No, Major, I cannot say I did.

Bonnet. Do you not remember, that when we left Top-sail-Inlet, and they began to quarrel about Provision, that I said I would leave the Sloop?

Ign. Pell. I do remember you said so.

Judge Trott. But if you did take some for Provision, would no less than thirteen Vessels satisfy you?

Bonnet. It was contrary to my Inclination.

Mr. Hepworth. We proceed to call another Evidence.

Capt. Peter Manwareing call'd and sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Capt. Manwareing, look upon the Prisoner at the Bar, do you know him?

Manwareing. I know him very well.

Mr. Hepworth. Give the Court an Account of your being taken by him.

Manwareing. I arrived at Cape James alias Cape Inlopen, the thirty-first of July; and after being at an Anchor some time, we saw a Dory coming, as I said before. So I was ordered on board the Revenge.

Judge Trott. And before whom was you brought?

Manwareing. Before the Man at the Bar, Capt. Thomas he was called then; and so I gave him my Papers; and it being Night, he said but little more that Night. Next Morning they haled the Sloop long-side the Scooner, and hoisted out the Rum and Molasses out of the Sloop, and put on board the Scooner; and the First of August we sailed in Company to Cape Fear. But indeed the Gentleman was very civil to me.

Att. Gen. Did you ever hear him give Orders to take out any Goods?

Manwareing. He was on board the Sloop himself when it was done.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you remember any particular Goods taken out.

Manwareing. Yes, Sir.

Clerk. Will you ask the King's Evidence any Questions?

Bonnet. I beg leave to ask whether you ever saw me share among the rest?

Manwareing. You was in the Round-House, and a Bundle and some Pieces was brought; and I saw you take it, and give it the Negro-Boy, to put into the Chest.

Bonnet. There were several that I kept their Shares for; but it was not mine.

Manwareing. It was put away by your Order.

Bonnet. Did you ever hear me order any thing out of the Sloop?

Manwareing. Major Bonnet, I am sorry you should ask me that Question; for you know you did: Which was my All, that I had in the World.

So that I do not know but my Wife and Children are now perishing for want of Bread in New-England. Had it been only myself, I had not matter'd it so much: but my poor Family grieves me.

Clerk. Will you ask any more Questions?

Bonnet. No, Sir.

Mr. Hepworth. We will call another Evidence.

James Killing called and sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Give the Court an Account of your being taken, and what Goods were taken out of you.

The Evidence gave in the same Relation as in the former Trials; and then added, That Major Bonnet ordered him to go and shew which was the Rum, and which was the Moloffes.

Mr. Hepworth. Do you remember in particular what Goods were taken out?

Killing. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Hepworth. Were the twenty one Hogsheads of Moloffes, and the Rum taken out?

Killing. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. And all by Major Bonnet's Order?

Killing. Major Bonnet gave Orders for it to be done.

Judge Trott. What need had you of so much Moloffes?

Bonnet. I did not carry it away, and it was contrary to my Inclination.

Judge Trott. You gave Orders for it to be done, and yet it was contrary to your Inclinations.

Clerk. Will you ask the King's Evidence any Questions?

Bonnet. No, Sir.

Mr. Hepworth. We will call another Evidence.

Capt. Thomas Read called and sworn.

Mr. Hepworth. Please to give the Court an Account of Capt. Manwareing's being taken.

Capt. Read. After we came to Cape James, we saw a Sloop come to an Anchor, and Major Bonnet ordered the Dory, with five Hands to go off; and in about half an Hour they came on board with Capt. Manwareing.

Att. Gen. Was you on board the Revenge when the Dory was sent off?

Capt. Read. Yes, Sir.

Att. Gen. And Major Bonnet gave Orders to take out those Goods?

Capt. Read. Yes, Sir.

Judge Trott. Was he on board himself?

Capt. Read. Yes; and ordered the several Goods to be taken out.

Att. Gen. Do you know if the Major received his Share?

Capt. Read. The Captain was in the Round-House when they shared, and they brought in several Pieces of Cloth, and a Bag of Money.

Mr. Hepworth. Who brought that to him?

Capt. Read. I do not know which of the Men.

Att. Gen. And did the Captain receive his Share?

Capt. Read. He ordered it to be put in the Chest by the Boy.

Clerk. Will you ask any Questions?

Bonnet. No, Sir.

Judge Trott. You now stand on your Defence: What have you to say, I shall be ready to hear.

Bonnet. May it please your Honours, there is a young Man come from North Carolina, that will say something in my Defence.

James King call'd and sworn.

VOL. VI.

Judge Trott. What do you know of the Prisoner at the Bar?

King. When Major Bonnet took out his Clearance at North Carolina, the Sloop was cleared for St. Thomas's, for a Commission to go against the Spaniards a privateering.

Mr. Dean. Do you certainly know it was so?

King. It was reported to be so by the Governour.

Att. Gen. Did you hear the Governour declare this?

King. No; but Colonel Brice's Son told me so?

Judge Trott. Colonel Brice lives fifty Miles in the Country, how did he come to inform you of this?

King. He came down out of the Country.

Judge Trott. If this be all the Evidence you have, I do not see this will be of much use to you; but if you have any thing further to say, I shall be ready to hear you.

Bonnet. I should be glad to go through both Indictments at once.

Judge Trott. We shall go through but one Indictment now; therefore you must prepare to speak to that singly.

Bonnet. May it please your Honours, and the rest of the Gentlemen, though I must confess my self a Sinner, and the greatest of Sinners, yet I am not guilty of what I am charged with. As for what the Boatswain says, relating to several Vessels, I am altogether free; for I never gave my Consent to any such Actions: For I often told them, if they did not leave off committing such Robberies, I would leave the Sloop; and desired them to put me on shore. And as for taking Capt. Manwareing, I assure your Honours it was contrary to my Inclination. And when I cleared my Vessel at North Carolina, it was for St. Thomas's; and I had no other End or Design in view but to go there for a Commission. But when we came to Sea, and saw a Vessel, the Quarter-Master, and some of the rest, held a Consultation to take it: But I opposed it, and told them again I would leave the Sloop, and let them go where they pleased. For as the young Man said, Col. Brice's Son can testify that I had Clearance for St. Thomas's.

Judge Trott. Was Col. Brice's Son there when you cleared for St. Thomas's?

Bonnet. Yes; and Col. Brice's Son knew I was design'd for St. Thomas's.

Judge Trott. But pray what Business had you at St. Thomas's? Surely after you had contracted so much Guilt upon your Conscience by your former Piracies and Robberies, you might have been contented to have lived a retired Life in North Carolina, reflected on your former wicked Course of Living, and repented of the same, and not engaged in new Actions.

Bonnet. I never took a Vessel but with Capt. Thatch.

Judge Trott. Did you not take Capt. Manwareing's Sloop?

Bonnet. It was contrary to my Inclinations; and I told them several Times if they would not leave off that Course of Life, I would leave the Sloop: And when Capt. Manwareing was taken, I was asleep.

Judge Trott. How came you to order the Dory to be sent off with five Hands to take him? And Capt. Read swears it was by your Order.

Att.

Att. Gen. May it please your Honours, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar hath pleaded Not Guilty to the Indictment; but the Boatswain, tho' he seems to bear a very great Affection to him, yet tells you that he was Commander in Chief among them at the Time when Capt. Manwareing was taken. Capt. Manwareing tells you, when he was brought on board the Revenge, he was brought before him, and no other, and that he delivered his Papers to him; and he saw his Share brought to him in the Round-House, and put into the Chest.

Then Capt. Manwareing's Mate says, Major Bonnet was on board the Sloop, and ordered him to shew which was the Molasses, and which was the Rum. And then Capt. Read says, Major Bonnet was Commander in Chief, and that he ordered the Dory to be sent off with five Hands to take Capt. Manwareing. Indeed the Prisoner pleads he was under Constraint from his Men, and that it was contrary to his Inclinations; but I think it not common for one that is forced to have such Command. And as for what James King says in behalf of the Prisoner, that he had his Clearance for St. Thomas's, in what he was accused of before, that he deceived his Men with a Notion of his going there for a Commission.

Judge Trott. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted for Felony and Piracy, committed on a Sloop belonging to Capt. Peter Manwareing, for breaking and boarding the said Sloop. The first Evidence, Ignatius Pell, through the great Affection he seemed to have for him, was unwilling to speak the Truth; yet he cannot deny but he was at the taking of thirteen Vessels, and particularly Capt. Manwareing's, and that he had his Share. Then comes Capt. Manwareing, and he says Major Bonnet was Commander in Chief; and that he was brought before him, and he gave his Papers to him, and by his Order it was that the Goods were taken out. And then Killing the Mate, he says Bonnet was on board when the Goods were taken out. Then comes Capt. Read, and he says the Dory was sent off by Major Bonnet's Order; and that his Share was brought into the Round-House to him. As for his Pretence, that his Men forced him against his Will, it appears by the Evidence he did not act like a Person under Constraint. And in the former Trials, several of you remember, that his Men generally said, that he deceived them under Pretence of his going to St. Thomas's; and that he forced them. So that I think the Evidence have proved the Fact upon him: But I shall leave this to your Consideration.

Then an Officer was sworn to keep the Jury.

Who after they had considered of their Verdict, returned, and found the abovesaid Stede Bonnet aliàs Edwards aliàs Thomas, Guilty.

Then the Court adjourned till Tuesday Morning.

Tuesday, November the 11th, 1718. the Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN the Court proceeded on the Trial of Stede Bonnet aliàs Edwards aliàs Thomas, upon the second Indictment for feloniously and piratically taking the Sloop Fortune, with her Goods, Capt. Thomas Read, Commander.

To which Indictment upon his Arraignment he pleaded Not Guilty; but now desired leave to withdraw his Plea, and pleaded Guilty.

Then the Court adjourned till Wednesday Morning.

Wednesday, November the 12th, 1718, the Court met according to Adjournment.

THEN Stede Bonnet aliàs Edwards aliàs Thomas, who stood convicted of Piracies, as appears by the above Record, being brought to the Bar; and being asked what he had to say why Judgment of Death should not pass upon him:

And he having nothing to alledge in Arrest of Judgment;

Then Proclamation for Silence was made, while the Judge of the Court of Vice-Admiralty pronounced Sentence of Death upon the Prisoner.

Judge Trott. Major Stede Bonnet, you stand here convicted upon two Indictments of Piracy: One by the Verdict of the Jury, and the other by your own Confession.

Although you were indicted but for two Facts, yet you know that at your Trial it was fully proved, even by an unwilling Witness, that you piratically took and rifled no less than thirteen Vessels, since you sailed from North Carolina.

So that you might have been indicted and convicted of eleven more Acts of Piracy, since you took the Benefit of the King's Act of Grace, and pretended to leave off that wicked Course of Life.

Not to mention the many Acts of Piracy you committed before; for which, if your Pardon from Man was never so authentic, yet you must expect to answer for them before God.

You know that the Crimes you have committed are evil in themselves, and contrary to the Light and Law of Nature, as well as the Law of God, by which you are commanded that you should not steal, Exod. xx. 15. And the Apostle St. Paul expressly affirms, that Thieves shall not inherit the Kingdom of God, 1 Cor. vi. 10.

But to Theft you have added a greater Sin, which is Murder. How many you may have killed of those that resisted you in the committing your former Piracies, I know not: But this we all know, that besides the wounded, you killed no less than eighteen Persons out of those that were sent by lawful Authority to suppress you, and to put a Stop to those Rapines that you daily acted.

And however you may fancy that that was killing Men fairly in open Fight, yet this know, that the Power of the Sword not being committed into your Hands by any lawful Authority, you were not impower'd to use any Force, or to fight any one; and therefore those Persons that fell in that Action, in doing their Duty to their King and Country, were murdered, and their Blood now cries out for Vengeance and Justice against you: For it is the Voice of Nature, confirmed by the Law of God, that who so sheddeth Man's Blood, by Man shall his Blood be shed, Gen. ix. 6.

And consider that Death is not the only Punishment due to Murderers; for they are threaten'd to have their Part in the Lake which burneth with Fire and Brimstone, which is the second Death, Rev. 21. 8. See Chap. 22. 15. Words which carry that Terror with them, that considering your Circumstances and your Guilt, surely the Sound of them must make you tremble; For who can dwell with everlasting Burnings? Chap. 33. 14.

As the Testimony of your Conscience must convince you of the great and many Evils you have committed, by which you have highly offended God, and provoked most justly his Wrath and Indignation against you, so I suppose I need not tell you that the only way of obtaining Pardon and Remission of your Sins from God, is by a true and unfeigned Repentance, and Faith in Christ, by whose meritorious Death and Passion you can only hope for Salvation.

You being a Gentleman that have had the Advantage of a liberal Education, and being generally esteem'd a Man of Letters, I believe it will be needless for me to explain to you the Nature of Repentance and Faith in Christ, they being so fully and so often mentioned in the Scriptures, that you cannot but know them. And therefore, perhaps, for that Reason it might be thought by some improper for me to have said so much to you, as I have already upon this occasion; neither should I have done it, but that considering the Course of your Life and Actions, I have just reason to fear that the Principles of Religion that had been instill'd into you by your Education, have been at least corrupted, if not entirely defac'd, by the Scepticism and Infidelity of this wicked Age; and that what time you allowed for Study was rather applied to the Polite Literature, and the vain Philosophy of the Times, than a serious Search after the Law and Will of God, as revealed to us in the Holy Scriptures: For had your Delight been in the Law of the Lord, and that you had meditated therein Day and Night, Psal. 1. 2. you would then have found that God's Word was a Lamp unto your Feet, and a Light to your Path, Psal. 119. 105. and that you would account all other Knowledge but Loss, in comparison of the Excellency of the Knowledge of Christ Jesus, Phil. 3. 8. who to them that are called is the Power of God, and the Wisdom of God, 1 Cor. 1. 24. even the hidden Wisdom which God ordained before the World, Chap. 2. 7.

You would then have esteem'd the Scriptures as the Great Charter of Heaven, and which delivered to us not only the most perfect Laws and Rules of Life, but also discover'd to us those Acts of Pardon from God, wherein we have offended those righteous Laws: For in them only is to be found the great Mystery of fallen Man's Redemption, which the Angels desire to look into, 1 Pet. 1. 12.

And they would have taught you that Sin is the debasing of Human Nature, as being a Deviation from that Purity, Rectitude, and Holiness, in which God created us; and that Virtue and Religion, and walking by the Laws of God, were altogether preferable to the Ways of Sin and Satan; for that the Ways of Virtue are Ways of Pleasantness, and all her Paths are Peace, Prov. 3. 17.

But what you could not learn from God's Word, by reason of your carelesly, or but superficially considering the same, I hope the Course of his Providence, and the present Afflictions that he hath laid upon you, hath now convinced you of the same: For however in your seeming Prosperity you might make a Mock at your Sins, Prov. 3. 17. yet now that you see that God's Hand hath reach'd you, and brought you to public Justice, I hope your present unhappy Circumstances hath made you seriously reflect upon your past Actions and Course of Life; and that you are now sensible of the Greatness of your Sins, and that you find the Burden of them is intolerable.

And that therefore being thus labouring, and heavy laden with Sin, Matth. 11. 28. you will esteem that as the most valuable Knowledge, which can shew you how you can be reconciled to that supreme God, whom you have so highly offended, and which can reveal to you him who is not only the powerful Advocate with the Father for you, 1 John 2. 1. but also who hath paid that Debt that is due for your Sins by his own Death upon the Cross for you, and thereby made full Satisfaction to the Justice of God. And this is to be found no where but in God's Word, which discovers to us that Lamb of God which taketh away the Sins of the World; John 1. 29. which is Christ the Son of God: For this know, and be assured, that there is none other Name under Heaven given among Men, whereby we must be saved, Acts 4. 12. but only by the Name of the Lord Jesus.

But then consider how he invites all Sinners to come unto him, and that he will give them rest, Matth. 11. 28. for he assures us that he came to seek and to save that which was lost; Luke 19. 10. Matth. 18. 11. and hath promised that he that cometh unto him, he will in no wise cast out, John 6. 37.

So that if now you will sincerely turn to him, tho' late, even at the eleventh Hour, Matth 20. 6, 9. he will receive you.

But surely I need not tell you that the Terms of his Mercy is Faith and Repentance.

And do not mistake the Nature of Repentance to be only a bare Sorrow for your Sins, arising from the Consideration of the Evil and Punishment they have now brought upon you; but your Sorrow must arise from the Consideration of your having offended a gracious and merciful God.

But I shall not pretend to give you any particular Directions as to the Nature of Repentance: I consider that I speak to a Person whose Offences have proceeded not so much from his not knowing, as his sighting and neglecting his Duty: Neither is it proper for me to give Advice out of the way of my own Profession.

You may have that better delivered to you by those who have made Divinity their particular Study; and who by their Knowledge, as well as their Office, as being the Ambassadors of Christ, 2 Cor. 5. 20. are best qualified to give you Instructions therein.

I only heartily wish that what, in compassion to your Soul, I have now said to you upon this sad and solemn Occasion, by exhorting you in general to Faith and Repentance, may have that due Effect upon you, that thereby you may become a true Penitent.

And therefore having now discharged my Duty to you as a Christian, by giving you the best Counsel I can with respect to the Salvation of your Soul, I must now do my Office as a Judge.

The Sentence that the Law hath appointed to pass upon you for your Offences, and which this Court doth therefore award, is,

That you the said Stede Bonnet shall go from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, where you shall be hanged by the Neck till you are Dead. And the God of infinite Mercy be merciful to your Soul.

On Wednesday December the 10th, 1718. the said Major Stede Bonnet was executed at the White-Point near Charles-Town, according to the above Sentence.

CXC. Proceedings of the House of Lords in Ireland against Jeffery Gilbert, Esq; Lord Chief Baron, John Pocklington, Esq; and Sir John St. Leger, Kt. Barons of the Exchequer there, for issuing Procefs in the Cause of Annesley and Sherlock, in opposition to an Order of that House, July 28. 1719. 5 GEO. I.

Alexander Burrowes, High-Sheriff of the County of Kildare, having been several times fined by the Court of Exchequer, for not obeying an Order of that Court, which he apprehended to be a Breach of a former Order of the House of Lords, presented the following Petition.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Assembled, the Humble Petition of Alexander Burrowes, Esq; late Sheriff of the County of Kildare,

Most humbly Sheweth,

HAT on the 3d Day of Octob. 1717. your Lordships were pleased to Order, that the High Sheriff of the County of Kildare should forthwith put Hester Sherlock into the Possession of the Lands of Little-Rath, and other Lands in the said Order mentioned, which were to be held by her till she should receive thereout the Sum of 1507*l.* 14*s.* 8*d.* Farthing, chargeable upon the said Lands.

That Charles Nuttal, Esq; then High-Sheriff of the County of Kildare, in Obedience to, and by Vertue of your Lordships said Order, on the sixth Day of Octob. aforesaid, put the said Hester Sherlock into the Possession of the Premisses; and she was in the actual Possession thereof, when your Petitioner was appointed and sworn Sheriff of the said County of Kildare for the Year, ending at Michaelmas 1718.

That on the 15th Day of March, 1717. an Injunction issued out of the Court of Exchequer, Sign'd by the Right Honourable Jeffery Gilbert, Esq; Lord Chief Baron of the said Court; and under the Seal thereof, directed to your Petitioner, being then Sheriff of the said County; whereby your Petitioner was required immediately after Receipt thereof, pursuant to an Order of the said Court of Exchequer, bearing Date the 19th Day of February preceding, (although the Barons of the said Court had due Notice of your Lordships said Order of the 3d of Octob. aforesaid) to restore Maurice Annesley, Esq; to the Possession of those Lands, whereof the said Hester Sherlock was then actually possessed by Vertue of, and under your Lordships said Order. And your Petitioner was also required by the said Injunction to support and keep the said Maurice Annesley in such Possession of the Premisses till the further Order of the said Court, or till the said Maurice Annesley shou'd be thereout Eviçted by due Course of Law, which Injunction was delivered to your Petitioner by John Annesley (the said Maurice's Brother) who required your Petitioner to give him the Possession of the said Lands, having a Letter of Attorney from his said Brother for that Purpose, (as he informed your Petitioner) but your Petitioner refused to execute the said Injunction, conceiving it to be a Breach of your Lordship's said Order of the 3d of Octob. 1717. and of the Rights and Privileges of this Honourable House.

Whereupon the said John Annesley in his proper Person, on the 13th Day of May, 1718. moved the said Court of Exchequer on his Affidavit, setting forth, that your Petitioner refused to execute the said Injunction, and pray'd that the said Affidavit might be read, which was order'd, and accordingly read by John Beauman, Gent. one of the Attornies of the said Court and the said Lord Chief Baron, and the Honourable John Pocklington, Esq; and Sir John St. Leger, Kt. two other of the Barons of the said Court, then sitting in the said Court of Exchequer, Ordered, that your Petitioner shou'd be fined 40*s.* if he did not return the said Injunction in four Days; and on several Motions afterwards made by the said John Beauman, the said Barons imposed several Fines on your Petitioner, which amount to 77*l.* Sterl. and upon said Beauman's Motion on the 30th Day of June, 1718. ordered an Attachment to the Pursuivant against your Petitioner, for the Matters aforesaid, which accordingly issued.

That on the 7th Day of July, 1718. your Petitioner returned the said Writ of Injunction, and thereon returned in hæc Verba, your Lordships said Order of the 3d Day of Octob. 1717. and the Resolutions of this Honourable House, bearing

ing Date the 11th Day of February, 1703. on the Petition of Edward Earl of Meath, and Cecilia Countess of Meath his Wife; of which the said Barons had likewise due Notice. And that your Petitioner by reason of your Lordships said Order and Resolutions, and of the Rights and Privileges of this Honourable House, durst not restore the said Maurice Annesley to the Possession of the Premises, as by the said Writ of Injunction was required.

That all the said Fines being imposed on your Petitioner for not Returning said Writ, and your Petitioner having complied with the said Orders by Returning the same; the said Barons Pocklington and St. Leger, on the 16th Day of July, 1718. sitting publicly upon the Reducing of Fines in the Exchequer Chamber, and having heard the said several Fines imposed upon your Petitioner read unto them by the proper Officer, and being by him informed, that your Petitioner had Returned said Injunction, were pleased to reduce, and accordingly took off the said Fines, upon paying 6 d. in the Pound, (as by a Rule made by the Barons has been practis'd in such Cases, tho' the same was never taken before, as your Petitioner is informed;) but in the Afternoon of the said Day, John Draycot, one of the Attorneys of the said Court, (who paid the Box for your Petitioner on taking off the said Fines) was sent for by the said Lord Chief Baron to his Lordship's House, where the said other two Barons then were; and after the said Barons had heard the said Writ of Injunction and Return read, and what was offered in behalf of your Petitioner in Justification of the said Return, the said Barons were pleased at his Lordships said House, to oblige the said Draycot to take back the Money he so paid for taking off said Fines; and estreated the same, which have since issued in Process against your Petitioner; although the said Return was never complained off by the said Maurice Annesley, or his Council, nor had your Petitioner an Opportunity or Day given him to justify the Legality of the said Return, though the same was prayed by the said Draycot in behalf of your Petitioner.

That the said Barons, without having any regard to the said Return, on the 7th Day of November last, upon said Beauman's Motion, ordered the said Attachment to the Pursuivant to be renewed against your Petitioner; which having issued, your Petitioner was obliged to abscond, and keep as private as possible, so that he could not attend his Affairs, whereby your Petitioner has suffered very much in his Fortune.

That by Reason of the said Attachment to the Pursuivant, so from time to time issued against your Petitioner, he could not come upon his Accounts before the said Barons in the said Court of Exchequer: your Petitioner being advised and well assured, that if he should appear in the said Court, the said Barons would commit your Petitioner into close Custody, for not obeying their said Injunction: and the said Barons taking Advantage of your Petitioner's said Circumstances, ordered your Petitioner to be Fined 1200 l. and upwards, for not coming upon his Accounts; tho' your Petitioner always was, and still is ready to give his Majesty a just and true Account of his said Office of Sheriff-wick, while he was concerned therein.

May it therefore please your Lordships to take the Premises into Consideration, and make such Order therein for your Petitioner's Relief, as to your Lordships in your great Wisdom shall seem meet.

And your Petitioner will ever Pray,

ALEX. BURROWES.

Upon reading this Petition, the House of Lords referred it to the Committee for Courts of Justice, who after an Examination into the Affair, made the following Report by the Lord Bishop of Clogher their Chairman.

My LORDS,

THE Lords Committees for Courts of Justice, to whom the Petition of Alexander Burrowes, Esq; late Sheriff of the County of Kildare was referred, do find,

That by the Order of this House of the 3d of October, 1717. Hester Sherlock, Widow, was upon the 6th of the same Month put into the actual Possession of the Lands of Little Rath, Bodingstown, Darr and Mullenafooky in the County of Kildare, by Edward Conyers Under Sheriff to Charles Nuttall, Esq; then High Sheriff of the said County; to continue therein till she should receive thereout the Sum of 1507 l. 14 s. 8 d. Farthing, chargeable on the said Lands; and the said Hester continued so possessed by Vertue of the said Order for near two Years.

That by the Minutes of the Chancery side of the Exchequer it appears, that the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer, on the 19th February, 1717. produced a Letter ^a dated London the 8th February, 1717. sign'd Cowper, C. in which two Papers ^b were inclosed, dated the 6th February,

^a London, the 8th February, 1717. My Lord Chief Baron, By Order of the House of Lords (a Copy whereof I herewith send you) I Transmit to your Lordship, and the rest of the Barons of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer in Ireland, the Order of the said House; whereby the Barons of that Court are commanded to Restore Mr. Annesley to the Possession of his Estate. Your Lordship will immediately communicate this to the rest of the Barons, and let me know, as soon as can be, what is done by your self, and the rest of the Barons, in pursuance to their Lordships Order, as you see by the above-mentioned Copy I am ordered to require of you. I am your Lordship's most faithful Servant,
Cowper, C.

To the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer in Ireland, and the rest of the Barons of the said Court.

^b Die Jovis, 6^o Februarii, 1717. Ordered, By the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Assembled, That the Lord Chancellor do Transmit the Order of this House to the Barons of the Exchequer in Ireland, which requires them to cause Possession to be forthwith delivered to Maurice Annesley, Esq; of the Lands of which he was dispossessed, pending his Appeal in this House, commanding the Barons of the Exchequer at the same time to return to this House, as soon as they can, an Account of what shall be done therein.

Die Jovis 6 Die Februarii, 1717. Upon Report from the Committee of the whole House, to whom it was Referr'd, to consider by what Methods the Order of this House, for the Restoring Possession to Maurice Annesley, Esq; of the Estate in Ireland, whereof he was Dispossess'd, pending his Appeal in this House, may be most properly enforced and Executed: It is Ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Assembled, that the Barons of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, do cause the said Maurice Annesley, Esq; to be forthwith Restored to the Possessions of the Lands of which he was Dispossess'd, pending his Appeal, which was received by this House the 8th Day of June last.

William Cowper, Cler'. Parliamentor'.

1717, sign'd William Cooper, Cler' Parliamentor' directed to the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer in Ireland, and the rest of the Barons of the said Court; alledged by the Lord Chief Baron to be Orders from the Lords in Great Britain, requiring them to restore Maurice Annesley, Esq; to the Possession of the Lands he was dispossessed of; pending his Appeal in the House of Lords of Great Britain.

That on the said 19th Day of February, 1717. in pursuance of the said alledged Orders and Letter (inserted at the end of this Report) tho' no Affidavit had been made, that the said Orders or Letter were regularly Compared and signed, the said Lord Chief Baron, and the other Barons, without any Motion by Council or Attorney, ordered an Injunction for the restoring the said Maurice Annesley to Possession of the Lands he was dispossessed of; pending his said Appeal, in the Name of the Chancellor, Treasurer, and Barons of the said Court of Exchequer, whereby the Sheriff or Sheriffs of the County or Counties where the said Lands lay, was forthwith to put the said Maurice into the Possession of the said Lands.

That in order to make out the said Injunction, the said Court ordered the said Maurice Annesley, his Attorney, Agent, Solicitor or Council, shou'd forthwith attend the Chief Remembrancer, or his Deputy, with the Names of the Lands of which the said Maurice Annesley was so dispossessed of, and also the County or Counties where the said Lands lay.

That upon the 14th of March, 1717. Affidavit was made before the Lord Chief Baron by John Annesley of Ballisax in the County of Kildare, Esq; wherein Hester Sberlock, was made Plaintiff, and Maurice Annesley, Esq; Defendant; that he the said John was dispossessed of the Lands of Little Rath, Darr, Bodinstown, and Mullenafooky, which he the said John held by Vertue of a Lease from the said Maurice Annesley, pending his said Appeal; and that the said John's Lease was then in being and undetermined.

That upon the 14th of March, 1717. the said Affidavit of the said John Annesley was filed in the Chief Remembrancer's Office, in order to have the said Injunction made out; but before the said Injunction issued, it appears by the Examination, of Mr. John Draycott, Attorney for Mrs. Sberlock in the Exchequer (after having been sworn at the Bar of this House) that he the said Draycott attended Mr. John Becher, then Deputy Chief Remembrancer, at his Office, and in the Presence of the said John Annesley informed the said Becher that the said Affidavit was insufficient, and that the said Draycott was ready to prove, that the said Maurice Annesley was not at the time of his said Appeal, nor at any time since, in Possession of the said Lands mentioned in the said Affidavit; having sold the said Lands some Years before to Andrew Wilson, Esq; and Mrs. Frances Harman.

That by two Copies of Memorials out of the Register's Office (for Registering Deeds, &c. pursuant to Act of Parliament) proved by the said Draycott to be true Copies of the Memorials remaining in the said Office, it appears, that by Deeds of Lease and Release bearing Date respectively the 1st and 2d Days of March, 1714. the Lease being made between Jeffery Paul, Esq; on the one Part, and Andrew Wilson, Esq; of the other Part; and the Release made between the said Jeffery Paul of the first Part, said Andrew

Wilson of the second Part, and Maurice Annesley, Esq; on the third Part, whereby the several Lands of Little Rath, Darr, and Bodinstown in the Barony of Naas, and County of Kildare, were for the Considerations therein mentioned, conveyed to the said Andrew Wilson and his Heirs for ever: And the Right Honourable the Lord Albani upon his Honour declared, that he knew that John Annesley of Ballisax, Esq; had paid Rent to the said Andrew Wilson by Vertue of, and under the said Purchase; but believed that the Lord Chief Baron or the other Barons knew nothing thereof. It also appears, that by Deeds of Lease and Release, bearing Date respectively the 2d and 3d Days of April 1715. made between Maurice Annesley, Esq; of the one Part, and Frances Harman of the City of Dublin, Widow, of the other Part: By which said Release the said Maurice Annesley for the Considerations therein mentioned, conveyed to the said Frances Harman, and her Heirs for ever, the Lands of Mullenafooky in the said County of Kildare. That notwithstanding there was no County mentioned in the said Affidavit, and said Notice given of said Sale to the said Officer as aforesaid; neither did it appear by the said Affidavit, that the said Maurice Annesley was dispossessed of the said Lands therein mentioned, pending his Appeal; the said Injunction issued directly to the Sheriff of the County of Kildare, bearing Date the 22d February, in the Fourth Year of his Majesty's Reign, sign'd Galfridus Gilbert, and returnable into the said Court in Quindec. Pasch. then next ensuing.

That by an Affidavit sworn by John Annesley on the 7th of May, 1718. before Mr. Baron St. Leger, and filed in the Chief Remembrancer's Office the 9th of the same Month; wherein he made Maurice Annesley, Esq; Plaintiff, and Hester Sberlock, Widow, Defendant; in which the said John Annesley deposed, that on or about the 15th of March preceding, he delivered the before-mentioned Injunction to Alexander Burrowes, Esq; then High Sheriff of the said County of Kildare; and shewed the said Sheriff a Letter of Attorney from the Plaintiff, empowering the said John Annesley to receive the Possession of the Lands in the said Injunction mentioned; but the said Sheriff refused to execute the said Injunction.

That the said John Annesley in his proper Person, on the 13th of the said Month, moved the said Court upon an attested Copy of the said Affidavit; but the said Draycott insisting, that there was no such Cause in Court, the said Annesley was directed by the said Court to amend his Affidavit and move it again.

That the said Annesley thereupon erased and altered the said Copy, and made Hester Sberlock, Widow, Defendant; and swore the same before Mr. Baron St. Leger, and filed the said Affidavit so amended in the Chief Remembrancer's Office, without any Alteration made in the Body of the said Affidavit; which was proved by the Deposition of Daniel Reading, Esq; Deputy Chief Remembrancer; who was sworn at the Bar of this House, and examined before the said Lords Committees.

That the same Day (viz.) 13th May, upon reading the said Affidavit, the said Court was informed by Counsellor Dixon, that what was sworn in the said Affidavit could not be true: For that the said Annesley swore he had a Letter of Attorney from the Plaintiff (who was Mrs. Sberlock to receive Possession of the Lands therein mentioned; when when, in truth, Mrs. Sherlock was then in actual Possession of the said Lands.

That the Lord Chief Baron said it was only a Mistake, and without rectifying the same, on Motion of Mr. John Beauman an Attorney, the Court ordered the said Sheriff to be fin'd forty Shillings, if he did not return the said Injunction in four Days; and on said Beauman's several Motions, there were Fines at several Times laid upon the said Sheriff for not returning the said Injunction, which amounted to 77*l.* which was proved by the Minutes of the said Court, and the Testimony of the said Draycott.

That the said Draycott likewise proved, that the said Lord Chief Baron, and the other Barons, had due notice of the said Order of this House; and the Resolutions thereof made the 11th February, 1703. before any Proceedings were had in the said Cause, subsequent to the said Order of this House of the 3d of October, 1717. and that the said Annesley and Beauman were served with Copies of the said Order and Resolutions, before any Motions were made by them in the said Cause.

That by the Minutes of the 13th June, 1718. taken in the said Court, it appears, that Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer declared, That the Orders of the House of Lords of England being only directed to the Barons of that Court; and that he found, that the Order of that Court, which was made thereon, was made, as if done by him, and the Treasurer, as well as by the Barons; that he apprehended, that in regard the said Orders were not directed to him, or he present when the said Order of the Court of Exchequer was made, That he had nothing to do therewith, and did not consent thereto.

That it appeared by the Testimony of the said Mr. Reading, that the said Cause between Sherlock and Annesley was of the Chancery Side of the Exchequer; and that all Bills in the Chancery Side of the said Court were directed to the Chancellor, Treasurer and Barons, and believed, that if a Bill was directed otherwise, it would be Error.

That upon the 30th of June, 1718. on Motion of the said Beauman, an Attachment to the Pursuivant was awarded against the said Burrowes for not returning the said Injunction, bearing Test the 1st Day of July, in the Fourth Year of his Majesty's Reign, and returnable before the Chancellor, Treasurer, and Barons. of the said Court, in Craef. Animar. then next.

That upon the 7th July 1718. the said Burrowes return'd the said Injunction, and the said Beauman was acquainted therewith by the said Draycott; who told the said Beauman, that he was ready to pay him the Cost of imposing the said Fines and Pursuivant, which the said Beauman refused, and told the said Draycott, that he must first have the said Sheriff in Custody: That the said Draycott applied again to the said Beauman; and the said Beauman said, he must first lay the said Sheriff by the Heels.

That by the Testimony of the said Mr. Reading and Mr. Draycott, Barons Pocklington and St. Leger, upon 16th July 1718. sat in the Exchequer-Chamber on the reducing of Fines: That the Fines imposed upon the said Sheriff were then read by Mr. Becher the Officer, who inform'd the said Barons, that the said Injunction was return'd; that a Pistole and seven Half-Crowns were paid to the Box, and the said Fines were then taken off by the said Barons.

That upon the same Day in the Afternoon, the said Becher, Reading, and Draycott were sent for to the Lord Chief Baron's House, where the two other Barons were with his Lordship; that the said Injunction was sent for, and said Injunction and Return thereon was read, and the Barons declared that it was no Return; that the said Draycott told his Lordship, that he hoped he would at least respite the said Fines till the then next Term, or give the said Sheriff an Opportunity to justify his said Return, which was refused: That the List of Fines, which was that Day read in the Exchequer-Chamber, was then call'd for, and the Fines imposed upon the said Burrowes were then read: That the said Draycott was obliged to take back the said Money, which he had paid to the Box for taking off the said Fines, and the same were then estreated.

That the Return made by the Sheriff upon the said Injunction, was to this Purpose, (viz.) That before the said Writ came to him, the Order of this House of the 3d of October, 1717. and the Resolutions of this House of the 11th of February, 1703. were delivered to him, which he recites in hæc verba. Which Return the Lords Committees have thought fit to annex to their Re^d Annesley vers. Sherlock. Die Veneris 23 Januarii, 1718. Ordered, By the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain do transmit the two Orders made this Day on the Behalf of Maurice Annesley, Esq; to the Barons of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland, commanding them at the same time to return, as soon as they can, an Account of what shall be done therein.

William Cowper, Cler', Parliamentor'.

My Lord Chief Baron,

London the 27th January, 1718.

By Order of the House of Lords (a Copy whereof I herewith send you) I transmit to your Lordship and the rest of the Barons of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer in Ireland, two Orders of the said House, made in the Cause of Annesley against Sherlock; by one of which the Barons of that Court are commanded to proceed by the most speedy and effectual Methods, to cause Possession of the Estate of the Appellant Maurice Annesley, Esq; to be restor'd to him, as was required by Order of the said House of the 6th February last: and by the other, the said Barons are commanded to cause Hester Sherlock to account before them upon Oath for the Rents and Profits of the Estate in Question, which she has made or received since her gaining Possession thereof, by Order of the House of Lords in Ireland; and answer and pay the same to the said Appellant, Maurice Annesley, Esq; but without Prejudice to the Right, in Case of an Appeal to be brought by either Party from the Decree of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland.

Your Lordship will immediately communicate this to the rest of the Barons, and return as soon as you can, an Account of what shall be done by yourself, and the rest of the Barons, in Pursuance of your Lordship's said Orders, as you see by the abovementioned Copy I am order'd to require of you.

I am, Your Lordship's most faithful Servant.

Parker, C.

To the Lord Chief Baron of the Exchequer in Ireland, and the rest of the Barons.

Annesley vers. Sherlock. Die Veneris 23 Januarii, 1718. Upon Report from the Lords Committees, appointed to enquire into the Reason of the Delay, in not obeying the Orders of this House, relating to the Appeal of Maurice Annesley, Esq; and how the same may more properly be enforced: It is ordered by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Barons of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland be, and are hereby directed to proceed by the most speedy and effectual Methods, to cause Possession of the Estate of the said Maurice Annesley, as required by Order of this House of the 6th of February last, to be restored to him.

William Cowper, Cler' Parliamentor'.

Annesley vers. Sherlock. Die Veneris 23 Januarii, 1718. Ordered, By the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, That the Barons of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland do cause the Respondent, Hester Sherlock, to account before them upon Oath, for the Rents and Profits of the Estate in Question, which she has made or received since her gaining the Possession thereof, by the Orders of the House of Lords in Ireland; and to answer and pay the same to the Appellant, Maurice Annesley, Esq; but without Prejudice to the Right, in Case of an Appeal to be brought by either Party from the Decree of the Court of Exchequer in Ireland.

William Cowper, Cler' Parliamentor'.

regularly signed and compared? and without Motion of Council or Attorney, it was ordered in the Name of the Chancellor and Treasurer, Lord Chief Baron, and the rest of the Barons of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer in Ireland, that the Injunction of that Court should forthwith issue, directed to the said Hester Sberlock, and to the several and respective Tenants of the Lands in Question; requiring them, and every of them, quietly to restore to the said Maurice Annesley, the Possession of the Town and Lands of Little Rath, Bodinstown, Darr, and Mullenafooky, lying and being in the County of Kildare; the said Lands by the said Barons supposed to be comprehended in the said Order.

That the said Injunction was ordered to be served upon the said Persons by the Pursuivant attending the said Court, or by any other Person or Persons whom the said Maurice Annesley, or his Agent should appoint: And the said Maurice Annesley, or his Agent, was thereby required to leave the Names of the several and respective Tenants of the said Lands at the proper Office, in order to be inserted in the said Injunction: And also ordered, that the Rents of the said Lands remaining in the several Tenants Hands from the Time the said Hester Sberlock was put in Possession, should be forthwith by them paid over to the said Maurice Annesley; and that a Copy of the said Order should be served upon the said several Tenants of the said Lands, together with the said Injunction: Tho' by the Order of the House of Lords of Great Britain, the Barons were only directed to oblige Hester Sberlock to account before them upon Oath, for the Rents of the said Lands, received by her since her gaining the Possession thereof; which she was to pay to Maurice Annesley, without Prejudice in Case of an Appeal.

That pursuant to the said Order of the 4th of February, an Injunction issued out of the said Court, sign'd Geff. Gilbert; bearing Test the 12th February last, directed to Hester Sberlock, and Twenty-one Persons as Tenants to the said Lands. That the said Hester Sberlock was never served with the said Injunction or Order: notwithstanding which, she was thereby dispossessed of the said Lands about the 20th February last, by the Attornments of the Tenants; except a small Part thereof in the Possession of Dennis Galvin.

That upon an Affidavit made by Richard Lyons, in a Cause of Annesley vers. Sberlock, sworn before Mr. Baron St. Leger, the 23d of February last; and upon Motion of said Beauman, an Attachment to the Pursuivant was the same Day ordered by the said Court, against said Dennis Galvin, for not obeying the said Injunction, though no such Person was named in the said Writ of Injunction.

The said Lords Committees had also the Oath administered to the Barons of the Exchequer, laid before them by Mr. Hartley Hutchinson, Deputy Clerk of the Crown in the High Court of Chancery, and is as follows, viz.

YE shall swear, That well and truly ye shall serve the King in the Office of Baron of his Exchequer; and that truly ye shall Charge and Discharge all manner of People; as well the Poor as Rich, and that for Highness nor for Riches, nor for Hatred, nor for the Estate of no manner of Person or Persons, nor for any good Deed, Gift nor Promise of any Person the which is made to you, nor by Craft nor by Engine, ye shall Lett the King's Right, nor none other Persons Right ye shall Disturb; Lett nor Respitt against the Laws of the Land, nor the King's Debts ye shall put in Respitt where that they may goodly be Levied, and that the King's Needs ye shall speed before all other, and that for Gift, Wages, no good Deed ye shall Layne, Disturb nor Lett the Profit and Reasonable Advantage of the King, in the Advantage of any other Person nor of yourself: And that nothing ye shall take of any Person for to do Wrong or Right or Delay, or for to Deliver or to Delay the People which that have to do afore you; but as hastily as ye may them goodly to Deliver without Hurt of the King, and having no regard to any Profit, that might thereof to you be therein, you shall make to be delivered: And whereas ye may know any Wrong or Prejudice to be done to the King, ye shall put and do all your Power and Diligence that to Redress; and if ye may not do it, ye shall tell it to the King, or to them of his Council, which may make Relation to the King, if ye may not come to him, to the King's Majesty's Lieutenant, or other Chief Governour or Governours of this Realm for the time being, and the King's Council ye shall keep and Layne in all things, as God you help, and by the Contents of this Book.

The Committee humbly take leave to observe to your Lordships, That there is no Name of any Attorney to the first Injunction.

Which said Report being read, the House agreed to the same, and came to the following Resolutions:

RESOLVED on the Question, that Alexander Burrowes, Esq; late High-Sheriff of the County of Kildare, has fully proved the Allegations of his Petition, to the Satisfaction of this House.

Resolved on the Question, That the said Alexander Burrowes, Esq; late High-Sheriff of the County of Kildare, in not obeying the Injunction issued forth out of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer, dated the 22d February, 1717. in the Cause between Sberlock and Annesley, has behaved himself with Integrity and Courage, and with due Respect to the Orders and Resolutions of this House.

Resolved on the Question, That the Fines imposed upon Alexander Burrowes, Esq; by the Court of Exchequer, amounting to 77*l.* for not returning the Writ of Injunction in the Cause between Sberlock and Annesley, be taken off without Fees.

Resolved on the Questions, That the Fines imposed upon Alexander Burrowes, Esq; by the Court of Exchequer, for not Entering on his Accounts, amounting to 1200*l.* and upwards, be taken off, when he shall have made a just Account, without other Fees than such as are usual on passing Sheriffs Accounts.

Resolved, on the Question, That the Lord Chief Baron, and the other Barons of the Court of Exchequer, had due Notice of the Resolutions of this House, made the 11th February 1703. in the Cause of the Earl of Meath, and Lord Ward, before they made an Order for an Injunction to put Maurice Annesley into Possession.

Resolved on the Question, That the Lord Chief Baron, and the other Barons of the Court of Exchequer, had due Notice of the Order of this House of the 3d of October, 1717. in the Cause of Sherlock and Annesley.

Resolved on the Question, That Jeffery Gilbert, Esq; Lord Chief Baron of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer, in the Proceedings in the Cause between Sherlock and Annesley, as also against Alexander Burrowes, Esq; late High Sheriff of the County of Kildare, has acted in direct Violation of the Orders and Resolutions of this House.

Resolved on the Question, That Jeffery Gilbert, Esq; Lord Chief Baron of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer, in the Proceedings in the Cause between Sherlock and Annesley, as also against Alexander Burrowes, Esq; late High Sheriff of the County of Kildare, has acted in manifest Derogation to, and Diminution of the King's Prerogative of finally Judging in his High Court of Parliament in Ireland, as also of the Rights and Privileges of this Kingdom, and the Parliament thereof.

Resolved on the Question, That John Pocklington, Esq; one of the Barons of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer, in the Proceedings in the Cause between Sherlock and Annesley, as also against Alexander Burrowes, Esq; late High Sheriff of the County of Kildare, has acted in direct Violation of the Orders and Resolutions of this House.

Resolved on the Question, That John Pocklington, Esq; one of the Barons of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer, in the Proceedings in the Cause between Sherlock and Annesley, as also against Alexander Burrowes, Esq; late High Sheriff of the County of Kildare, has acted in manifest Derogation to, and Diminution of the King's Prerogative of finally Judging in his High Court of Parliament in Ireland, as also of the Rights and Privileges of this Kingdom, and the Parliament thereof.

Resolved on the Question, That Sir John St. Leger, Knt. one of the Barons of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer, in the Proceedings in the Cause between Sherlock and Annesley, as also against Alexander Burrowes, Esq; late High Sheriff of the County of Kildare, has acted in direct Violation of the Orders and Resolutions of this House.

Resolved on the Question, That Sir John St. Leger, Knt. one of the Barons of his Majesty's Court of Exchequer, in the Proceedings in the Cause between Sherlock and Annesley, as also against the said Alexander Burrowes, Esq; late High Sheriff of the County of Kildare, has acted in manifest Derogation to, and Diminution of the King's Prerogative of finally Judging in his High Court of Parliament in Ireland, as also of the Rights and Privileges of this Kingdom, and the Parliament thereof.

Resolved on the Question, Nem. Con. That it is the Duty of the Barons of the Exchequer, where there is any Wrong or Prejudice done to the King, in Matters lying before them, to inform the King, or the chief Governour, or Governours of this Kingdom, or the Council.

Resolved on the Question, That the Case of Sherlock and Annesley, as it lately lay before the Barons of the Exchequer, being Matter not only of Law, but of State, ought to have been laid before the King, the chief Governour or Governours of this Kingdom, or the Council of the same: It so nearly concerning his Majesty's Prerogative, and the Interest of the whole Kingdom.

Clerk of the Crown. Cryer Make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, &c. If any one can inform our Sovereign Lord the King's Justices, the King's Serjeants, or the King's Attorney, of the Felony and Murder whereof the Prisoners stand indicted before this Inquest be taken between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Prisoners at the Bar, let them come forth and they shall be heard, for the Prisoners now stand at the Bar upon their Deliverance.

Clerk of the Crown. Hugh Reason hold up your Hand, Robert Tranter hold up your Hand.

Gentlemen of the Jury look upon the Prisoners and hearken to their Cause; they stand indicted, for that they not having the Fear of God before their Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the 17th Day of October last, about the Hour of Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon of the said Day, by Force and Arms, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middlesex, in and upon one Edward Lutterell, Esq; in the Peace of God and of our Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being feloniously, voluntarily, and of their Malice afore-thought, did make an Assault; and that the said Hugh Reason, with a Pistol of the Value of 5 s. then and there charged with Gunpowder and leaden Bullets; which said Pistol the said Hugh Reason in his Right Hand then and there had and held into and against the aforesaid Edward Lutterell, then and there feloniously and of his Malice afore-thought did shoot off and discharge: And that the said Hugh Reason with the leaden Bullets aforesaid, issuing and shot off out of the Pistol aforesaid, then and there by the Force of the said Powder, the said Edward Lutterell in and upon the right Part of the Body of the said Edward Lutterell, under the right Pap of the said Edward Lutterell, then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-thought struck: And that the said Hugh Reason then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-said, gave to the said Edward Lutterell, with the leaden Bullets aforesaid, out of the said Pistol then and there by Force of the said Powder shot off and discharged in and against the right part of the Body of the said Edward Lutterell, one mortal Wound of the breadth of one Inch, and the depth of nine Inches, of which said mortal Wound the said Edward Lutterell, from the said tenth Hour of the said 17th Day of October, untill the tenth Hour in the Afternoon of the said Day he languished, and languishing lived, at which said Hour the said Edward Lutterell, at the Parish aforesaid, of the Wound aforesaid, died: And that the said Robert Tranter at the time of the Felony and Murder aforesaid, by the said Hugh Reason in manner and form aforesaid, feloniously, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-said, committed and perpetrated, feloniously, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-said there was present, aiding, abetting, assisting, comforting and maintaining the said Hugh Reason to commit the aforesaid Felony and Murder in manner and form aforesaid. And the Jury say, that the said Hugh Reason and Robert Tranter the said Edward Lutterell in manner and form aforesaid, at the Parish and County aforesaid, feloniously, voluntarily, and of their Malice afore-thought, did kill and murder against his Majesty's Peace, &c.

They likewise stand charged on the Coroner's Inquest for the said Murder.

Upon this Indictment they have been arraigned, and thereto have pleaded Not Guilty; and for their Trial have put themselves upon God and their Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is to inquire whether they be guilty of this Felony and Murder in Manner and Form as they stand indicted, or not guilty; if you find them guilty, you shall inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements they had at the time of the said Felony and Murder committed, or at any time since: If you find them not guilty, you shall inquire whether they fled for it: If you find that they did fly for it, you shall inquire of their Goods and Chattels as if you found them guilty; if you find them not guilty, and that they did not fly for it, say so and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Strange. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counsel in this Case for the King. This is an Indictment against the Defendants Hugh Reason and Robert Tranter for the Murder of Mr. Lutterell. The Indictment sets forth, that the Defendants not having the Fear of God before their Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, on the 17th of October last at Ten of the Clock in the Morning, in the Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middlesex, did make an Assault on Edward Lutterell, Esq; that the Defendant

Hugh

Hugh Reason with a Pistol charged with Gunpowder and Bullets, which he then and there held in his Right Hand, into and against the said Edward Lutterell then and there feloniously, and of his Malice afore-thought, did shoot off and discharge, and that the Prisoner Hugh Reason, with the leaden Bullets afore-said, issuing and shot off out of the Pistol afore-said, then and there by the Force of the said Powder the said Edward Lutterell, in and upon the right part of the Body of the said Edward Lutterell, under the right Pap of the said Edward Lutterell, then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-thought struck, and that the said Hugh Reason then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice afore-thought, did give to the said Edward Lutterell, with the leaden Bullets afore-said, out of the said Pistol, then and there by Force of the Powder shot off and discharged in and against the right Part of the Body of the said Edward Lutterell, under the right Pap of the said Edward Lutterell, one mortal Wound of the Breadth of one Inch, and the Depth of nine Inches, of which mortal Wound the said Edward Lutterell, from the said 10th Hour of the said 17th of October, to the 10th Hour in the Afternoon of the said Day languished, and languishing lived, at which time the said Edward Lutterell at the Parish afore-said, of the Wound afore-said, died: And that the other Defendant Robert Tranter, was aiding and assisting the said Hugh Reason to commit the said Felony and Murder in manner and form afore-said, and that they the said Hugh Reason and Robert Tranter, the said Edward Lutterell in manner and form afore-said, at the Parish and County afore-said, feloniously, wilfully, and of their Malice afore-thought did kill and murder, which is laid to be against the Peace of his Majesty, his Crown and Dignity, to which the Defendants have severally pleaded Not Guilty: they are likewise charged on the Coroner's Inquest for the said Murder. We shall call our Witnesses, and if we prove them guilty you will find them so.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counsel in this Case for the King, the two Prisoners at the Bar, Hugh Reason and Robert Tranter, stand indicted before you, and are charged before you on the Coroner's Inquest, for the murder of Edward Lutterell, Esq; and according to my Instructions, which I will keep exactly to, he came by his Death in this manner: On the 17th of October last this Gentleman coming out of his Lodgings in Surrey-Street, going towards the Water-side to take Water at the Stairs there, the two Prisoners came to him and did arrest him; and told him, they arrested him at the Suit of one Mr. Rous, for 10 l. He submitted to their Arrest, desired them to return with him to his Lodging and he would pay the Money: They consented, and both returned to the Door with him, but Reason was the only Person that went up with him: Tranter said he would go and fetch the Attorney or Solicitor's Bill: The Deceased went up one Pair of Stairs, Reason went with him, they were together in the Dining-Room, Words happened between them, as will come from the Evidence; they called him Rogue, Rascal, and Minter, charged him as a Person that refused to pay honest Debts, and sheltered himself under reputed Places of Security. He directed his Lady, who was then in her Bedchamber on the same Floor up one Pair of Stairs, to go and fetch the Money, by which it may be supposed that it was in order to pay the Debt, but the Witnesses did not hear the Sum, but it is reasonable to presume, he had told her what it did come to. The Defendant Reason said, You must order more than that, I must have three Guineas for my Civility: No, says the Deceased, you have not used me so as to deserve three Guineas or any other Sum for Civility, without making any Demand you arrested me publicly in the Street. My Lord, according to my Instructions, the Deceased went up one pair of Stairs and he returned down with a Case of Pistols; the Maid Servant, Hester Gerrard, seeing him with those Pistols, said to him, For God sake what business have you with those Pistols? Pray lay the Pistols away, Mischiefs may happen: Says he, I design to do them no harm, they have used me ill, called me Rogue, Rascal, and Minter, I do not design to hurt them, but will not be ill used by them. The Maid press'd him, for God sake lay them down, your Lady will be frighted. He went to the far end of the Room, laid down the Pistols, and retreated to the Fire-place. By this time there was a knocking at the Door, and the Boy Thomas Hargrave went to let in the Person that knock'd, and it proved the Defendant Tranter: Tranter run hastily up Stairs, and the Boy was following him, and hearing a Noise in the Dining Room, as my Instructions are, he hastened the earlier to see what the matter was; as soon as he came into the Dining Room, the first thing he saw was, Tranter holding the Deceased's Arm in his, and the other Defendant Reason stabbing him, and he saw the Stab: He was going to give the second Stab, but the Boy took hold of the sword Arm; Reason takes the Sword with his other Hand, and says to the Boy, Damn you, if you don't get out of the Room, you shall die before your Master: Upon this he saw a second Pass at the Gentleman, and he cryed Murder; Upon his crying Murder, the Maid Servant Sarah came, and she says she saw her Master upon his Back on the Floor with his Hands up begging for Mercy, and saw the Men stab him several times: she likewise cries out Murder, and as she went down the Stairs, and not till then, she heard a Pistol go off, which must be after the poor wounded mangled Man lay upon the Floor. Some time after, not two Minutes, she heard another Pistol go off, by this time the Noise was so great that the Neighbourhood came in, particularly one Waters a Waterman; Waters runs up Stairs, and he finds the Deceased at the further end of the Room, lying there in a strange mangled Condition; one of the Prisoners endeavour'd to make his Escape, but he was seized, and so was the other.

It was thought proper in this dying Condition, as it was apprehended the poor Gentleman was in, that they should send for the Curate of the Parish, Mr. Peters; Mr. Peters did come, and according to my Instructions, as they apprehended him to be dying, says a Friend of the Defendants, Pray inquire of the Gentleman how this Accident happened. He did so, and he will give you an Account of what pass'd between him and the Deceased before the Justices of the Peace came. But Mr. Vernon and Mr. Haynes, the two Justices of the Peace, soon after came in, and at their Request they having no Clerk with them, Mr. Peters was pleased to sit down and take the Examination in writing; having given him his Oath, Mr. Peters was pleased to set it down; the Substance of what he did say was this, The Bailiffs took the Pistols from my Table and shot me twice, the fat Man run me thro' and then drew my Sword, which I broke my self in his Hand, and beg'd for my Life: I never fired a Pistol, nor made one Push, they both run me thro', I offer'd to pay them the Money. The Condition the Gentleman was in at that time was such, as it was not thought reasonable that he should sign it, but they will give you an account that he was perfectly sensible. My Lord, in the Afternoon somebody sent for Mr. Peters the Clergyman again, and it was with an Intent that the Deceased might receive the Holy Sacrament; and Mr. Peters, like a prudent Man, says, According to the Account you have given you have been hardly used; however it becomes me to hope and desire, and you to express, that your are in Charity, before I Administer the Holy Sacrament. Says he, As I shall appear before the great God of Heaven, what I told you is true, I was barbarously murder'd; however I am in Perfect Charity with them, I forgive them, and I pray Almighty God to forgive them their Indiscretion. My Lord, he did continue for some time in a languishing Way, tho' all Care was taken to save his Life. On Examination after his Death, (which is a sad Circumstance in the Case) there are found no less than ten Wounds on him, many of them mortal; he did continue till the 17th about Ten at Night and then he died. My Lord, here is a Case of great Consideration; and as on the one Hand the Defendants are Officers and Ministers of Justice, and must be protected in serving of their Process, and as long as they do their Duty must not be abused; yet when People submit to their Authority, they too must be protected, and the Law, that requires the one to submit, requires the other to protect and preserve their Lives; and if any Officer gives unreasonable Correction, where they make no Resistance in Cases of Durance only, where Hardships and Difficulties are put upon them, so as to shorten their Lives. I submit it to my Lord's Direction, whether they are not guilty of the Murder. To shew how careful the Law is of the Life of Man, my Lord Coke * says, If any Man who is in Custody of a Goaler dies, the Coroner's Inquest must sit upon him; and it is for this Reason, that the King may be apprized that the Subject had no foul Play, but came to a natural Death; this Policy of Law is a good one. These, Gentlemen, are the Bounds which will be taken into Consideration, and when we have called our Witnesses, it must be left to my Lord's Direction and your Consideration, whether the Defendants Case is a Case to be justified, or whether or no they won't deserve the Punishment due to Ruffians and Assassins.

Mr. Reeve. I am Counsel likewise in this Case for the King: The Facts have been fully open'd in every particular Circumstance, and I apprehend this is not a Matter proper for us to shew with its usual Aggravations; for considering the Prisoners are not allowed Counsel, we are only to lay the Matter fairly before the Jury and the Court, both in relation to Matters of Fact and of Law.

True, the Defendants are Officers of Justice, and as such are entitled to the Protection of the Law, so far as the Law authorizes them in what they do but in case they exceed that Authority, and use Barbarity to their Prisoners, where there is no occasion for it, they exceed the Bounds of their Authority, and what happens afterwards by a needless Quarrel, they themselves are the occasion of, and if a Person is killed, I submit it to your Lordship if they are not guilty of Murder.

We agree, my Lord, if Resistance is made by a Person arrested, and it is necessary for the Preservation of the Prisoner, or for the Life of the Officer, if his Life is attempted by the Prisoner, and in doing what is necessary for their Defence, and for the keeping of their Prisoner, there happens a Quarrel commenced by the Fault of the Prisoner, we agree the Officers are not to be blamed: But if a Quarrel is commenced by the Officers against a Prisoner submitting to the Law, and to their Authority and willing to do that which the Laws requires, namely, to pay the Debt, then only for Civility Money they use Durance, and they used him ill, and they begin the Quarrel and fight with the Man on that account, we must submit it, whether it is not Murder. We must agree in our Evidence, that there was not any Person present at the time of the beginning of the Quarrel, nor who continued there during the Quarrel: But from the Circumstances, and the Evidence we have to lay before the Jury, it will amount to a Proof, that this Quarrel was begun by the Officer. It is true, there were Pistols fetch'd by the Deceased, but these Pistols, if we shew they were not designed to be made use of to injure the Bailiffs, but were only for his own Preservation, if he should be ill used by them; if after he had taken these Pistols he dismiss'd himself from the Custody of these Pistols, as we apprehend will appear from the Evidence, and they take up these Pistols, and with one of these Pistols shoot their Prisoner, we apprehend that will take off the Circumstances, that would seem in favour of them. My Lord, we will call our Witnesses, and prove all our Facts, and then we must submit it to your Lordship's Direction to the Jury, whether on those Facts it doth not appear that the Offence committed is Murder.

L. C. J. Call your Witnesses. Sir John Pratt: Thomas Hargrave sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, Thomas Hargrave was the Deceased's Servant, and he saw more than any Body; he will give your Lordship an account of the Matter.

Serj. Cheshire. Thomas Hargrave, do you tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know in relation to your late Master Mr. Lutterell, what past between him and the Defendants, and either of them, tell from the beginning, and be sure you tell the Truth.

At the Prisoners Desire the other Witnesses were ordered out of Court.

Hargrave. The first beginning, my Lord, was my Master sent me out of the House to call a Pair of Oars to go up to Westminster on Tuesday between Nine and Ten a Clock.

L. C. Just. What Day of the Month?

Hargrave. I don't know; with that I went and call'd a Pair of Oars, and came back and told him I had called them; says he, Thomas get your Hat and go along with me; when we had got two or three Doors from our Lodging, a little Man, whose Name is Tranter, clapt him on the Shoulder, and presently after came another Man Reason, and said they arrested him, with that my Masters says, Gentlemen, if you will go with me, you shall have your Money, my Wife is with Child, and I am afraid she will be frightened.

No, Damn you, we will go with no such Minter, with that with great Persuasion my Master got them to go to his Lodging; my Master said, fetch the Attorney and I will pay the Money: Reason sent Tranter for the Attorney, and Reason went up with my Master, who said to my Mistress, My Dear, don't be frighten'd, here are two Rascals who have abused me in the Street; and my Mistress said to me, Go to my Nephew, I went, but he did not immediately come; when I returned I went into the Room, and there was no harm then, my Master was walking about the Room, and Reason stood with his Back to the Ceiling with his Face to the Pistols. My Master said, Let me see your Warrant: Reason show'd it him, and he said, wipe your Arse with it, and throw'd it down upon the Ground. Reason ask'd for Civility Money; my Master said, No, he would give him none, for he had not used him well. At last Tranter came; I opened the Door to him, he run up Stairs, I staid to shut the Door, and I heard a Rustling, or Noise; upon which I ran up Stairs after Tranter, and I saw Tranter close with my Master and throw him against the Closet Door, and Reason took his Sword and run my Master through; I took Reason hold of the Sword Arm, and he said, Damn me, if you don't go out of the Room you shall die before your Master; I heard no Pistol all that time.

Serj. Cheshire. Did you go in after the Pistol was shot off to see your Master?

Hargrave. No, I did not see him till after he was carried into t'other Room.

Serj. Cheshire. Do you know of any Direction given by your Master about fetching the Money?

Hargrave. Yes, I heard my Master say to my Mistress, Fetch the Money and I will pay these Rascals.

Mr. Reeve. I think you say upon hearing of a Scuffle you ran up Stairs, and you saw Tranter run your Master against the Closet Door.

Hargrave. Yes, Sir,

Mr. Reeve. Had your Master any Weapon?

Hargrave. No.

Mr. Reeve. Where were the Pistols?

Hargrave. One was on the Table, and the other in the Window.

Mr. Hungerford. How far were the Pistols from your Master, were they within his Reach?

Hargrave. No, Sir.

Mr. Reeve. You say you saw him stab your Master.

Hargrave. Yes.

Mr. Reeve. Was there any Attempt to give another Stab?

Hargrave. Yes, he went to give another Stab, I took him by the Sword Arm, and he said, Damn you, you shall die before your Master; upon that I went and cried out Murder.

L. C. Just. You say that before that he demanded Civility Money.

Hargrave. Yes.

L. C. Just. What said your Master?

Hargrave. He said, I will give no Rascals as you are Civility Money, for you have show'd me no Civility.

L. C. Just. Then you went down by your Mistrefs's Direction to call her Nephew; when you return'd, before you came up, what did you hear? Did you hear any Noise, or Bustle, or Blow?

Hargrave. No.

L. C. Just. None at all?

Hargrave. No, it was after Tranter came that I went up Stairs again.

L. C. Just. When Tranter came you opened the Door to him, and followed him up Stairs.

Hargrave. Yes.

L. C. Just. Did you hear before Tranter enter'd the Room any Noise, or Stroke?

Hargrave. Only two or three Words.

L. C. Just. What were those Words?

Hargrave. I don't know.

Mr. Hungerford. What said Reason, when your Master told him he did not use him well?

Hargrave. Then he was mad, he swore and called him a great many Names, call'd him a Minter, and I don't know what.

Reason. Did not your Master request us to go to the Tilt-yard Coffee-house?

Hargrave. No, he said, if you'll go with me I will pay the Money; you said, I will go with no such Minter.

L. C. Just. Did your Master desire them to go to any particular Place?

Hargrave. He said, If they would go with him to Westminster, he would pay them the Money; but they refused and said, they would go with no such Minter.

L. C. Just. Did your Master propose to go to his own Lodgings?

Hargrave. Yes, when they would not let him go there.

L. C. Just. Why would he had them have gone to Westminster?

Hargrave. Because for fear of frightning his Wife, she was great with Child; with great Persuasion he got them to go to his Lodging.

Reason. Did he not ask us to go to his Lodging?

Hargrave. I don't know, I did not hear him.

L. C. Just. You said just now with much ado your Master persuaded them to go to his Lodging, now you say you did not hear him ask them to go; I only admonish you not to be too hasty in your Answers, but to consider. Who proposed going to your Master's Lodging?

Hargrave. Why my Master, when they would not go there.

Reason. Did not I ask him to go to the Crown-Tavern?

Hargrave. Not that I heard; I heard Reason bid Tranter go for the Attorney.

L. C. Just. Did you hear Tranter ask Mr. Lutterell to go to the Crown-Tavern?

Hargrave. No, Sir.

Tranter. At whose Desire did I go to the Attorney?

Hargrave. Why my Master said, fetch your Attorney, and I will pay you your Money.

Tranter. Did not I desire your Master to fend you, and he said, Damn you, you shall go?

Hargrave. No, I heard no such thing.

Hester Gerrard sworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know when the Defendants, or either of them were at Mr. Lutterell's Lodgings, and what pass'd there; begin at the beginning, tell all you know.

Hester. I happened to be in the Kitchen when my Master came in.

Serj. Cheshire. Tell us the Time and the Day of the Month.

Hester. I don't know indeed, it was of a Tuesday.

Serj. Cheshire. Do you know what Month?

Hester. I don't know. Being in the Kitchen I heard my Master return again, when he was but just gone out before; hearing his Tongue I step'd to the Stairs, and wondered he should come in again so soon; I saw him come in with another Man, I heard him go up Stairs, I listened, and I heard him speak loud; I understood he was arrested, I was surpriz'd at it; I staid a little while till he went up, then I went up to my Mistress, because she was with Child; I was afraid she would be frighted; when I came up she was in the Dining-Room with my Master and Mr. Reason, and in a little time she went out of the Dining-Room into the Bed-Chamber, and she was heaving, and in some time my Master and Mr. Reason was in the Room together, my Master talk'd and walk'd about the Room; I staid with my Mistress some time, and at last I heard my Master go up Stairs, and he came down immediately again; upon this I went into the Room, my Master had two Pistols, and he put them on each side of his Coat; I ask'd him, What do you do with those Pistols? if my Mistress comes she will be frighted: Says he, I do not design to do any hurt. Then he told me how they had abus'd him in the Street, and called him Minter; this Man (pointing to Reason) was in the Room all the time. Sir, says I, pray lay down the Pistols, and he came and lay down both the Pistols on the Table at my Request, and he had only his Cane in his Hand. I went into the Room again to my Mistress, and when I came there she was in her Closet taking out some Money: She got up, locked the Closet Door, and sat down on the Bed-side, and was frighted. I persuaded her not to be frighted: Afterwards I heard somebody knock at the Door, and I step'd out to the top of the Stairs to see who came in, and I saw I suppose that Man: (pointing to Tranter) the Boy let him in, I saw him come along the Entry and the Boy follow him: Upon that I went into my Mistress, and said there was a second Person come, I don't like him, shall I stop him on the Stairs; he went into the Room, and I saw the Boy follow him; I went into my Mistress again for fear she should be frightened; I heard a Noise, but did not know what it was; I heard the Noise grow greater; I step'd softly through the Passage, threw open the Dining-Room Door, and I saw this Gentleman (pointing to Reason) stabbing my Master with all his Might and Main, and he on his Back on the Floor, lifting up his Hands as if he beg'd for Mercy. The other Bailiff had his Back towards me, standing by the side of my Master; I ran to the Door and cried out Murder; then off went the Pistol: I was frighted, for I thought they had shot after me; and in about two Minutes there went off another.

Mr. Hungerford. In that Place where your Master was, could he come at the Pistols?

Hester. No, my Master had his two Hands lifted up thus.

Mr. Hungerford. Had your Master any thing in his Hand?

Hester. No.

Serj. Cheshire. What Condition did you leave your Master in when you went out of the Room?

Hester. He was upon the Ground on his Back, and his two Hands lifted up thus, and Mr. Reason stabbing him when upon the Ground; he stab'd him upon the left side.

Serj. Cheshire. I ask you, consider, by the Oath you have taken, whether the Pistol did go off till after you had left your Master, and he was stabbing of him?

Hester. It was after that I saw him, within two Minutes after; upon my crying out Murder the People came up Stairs.

Reason. How long was this after Tranter came?

Hester. Immediately.

Reason. How long was it after Tranter came in before you saw this?

Hester. Not long, all the Action was not long.

Mr. Strange. You did not observe where the Pistols lay?

Hester. No.

Mr. Strange. Did you observe your Master had any thing in his Hand?

Hester. No, I did not.

L. C. Just. Did you see your Master when he went out in the Morning?

Hester. No, I heard him.

L. C. Just. You saw him when he returned?

Hester. Not till he was up in the Dining-Room.

L. C. Just. Had your Master any Sword on?

Hester. I believe he had, I did not mind.

L. C. Just. When your Master came in and Reason after him, you heard your Master talk of an Arrest, and that you had the Curiosity of hearing what past between them; did you hear any Words of Heat or Passion?

Hester. No, my Lord, I heard my Master talk something, by which I understood my Master was arrested.

L. C. Just. Did your Master seem angry?

Hester. Yes, because they seemed so uncivil that they did not come and give him Notice of it.

Mr. Hungerford. You say you saw your Mistress telling Money, can you guess at the Quantity of it?

Hester. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Can you tell for what Purpose she was telling the Money?

Serj. Cheshire. Did you hear Mr. Lutterell speak to his Lady to fetch any Money?

Hester. I was not in the Room.

Reason. Did I stay in the Room by my self when your Master went up Stairs?

Hester. Yes, you did.

L. C. Just. And when he came down he had a Case of Pistols?

Hester. When I saw him he had them in his Hand, and when I insisted upon his laying them down, he came and laid them down on the Table by me.

Hungerford. When did your Master die?

Hester. He died the Night following, I was with him all the time.

Thomas Waters the Waterman sworn.

Serj. Cheshire. Thomas Waters, will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know on the Occasion of a Noise and crying out Murder at Mr. Lutterell's Lodging.

Waters. My Lord, I was at the Water-side when Capt. Lutterell came down to go by Water, I went down to carry him, there two Men crossed over the Way to him; I was gone down to my Boat to wait for him, but he not coming down, I came

I came back again, and seeing them go into the House, I went to the Water-side, and staid there some time, and the Lad running out of the House, and crying Fire, Murder, I run up, and run into the Door, and when I was about half way up Stairs, Lord, says the Boy, they are murdering my Master; I run to the Stair-head and heard the Pistol go off, and then said to the Boy, is there any more Pistols? Then I opened the Door, and went in, and met Reason with his Sword drawn in his Hand, and as he was putting it in it stuck.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Where was Captain Lutterell?

Waters. Laid down on the Floor, all in his Gore; when I came into the Room the young Man followed me in; I saw one Pistol lay upon the Table; Tranter was behind Reason, Reason was putting his Sword into his Scabbard, and it stuck, and as I came in Tranter shew'd me his Hand, and said, see how I am used, Reason was opening the Door, I took hold of him and said, you must go no further, here is Murder done; then the Constable came in, and I charged the Constable with them. The Captain's Sword was in the middle of the Room broke, he lay on his Right Side with his Arm on the Chair.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. How far was the Table off?

Waters. The whole Breadth of the Room; he lay just before the Fire-Place; I saw but one Pistol; I came in when the last Pistol went off, and I met Mr. Reason, and put him by with my Hand, to come into the Room.

Tranter. What Wound did you see me have?

Waters. No more than in your Hand, he shew'd me his Hand.

L. C. Just. Did it appear to you upon looking on his Hand, that he had received a Wound in his Hand?

Waters. Yes, my Lord, I believe he was wounded, because he shew'd me his Hand, and it was bloody.

Tranter. Was my Head broke?

Waters. I did not see that.

L. C. Just. When you came into the Room, you saw but one Pistol?

Waters. I saw but one, and that upon the Table, just as I came into the Room.

L. C. Just. How far from Mr. Lutterell was it?

Waters. I believe three Yards.

L. C. Just. How far from the Prisoner, or either of them?

Waters. The Prisoner stood by the Table, as I came into the Room.

L. C. Just. Was the Sword in the Scabbard, that was broke.

Waters. It was out, and please you my Lord.

L. C. Just. Whose Sword was it?

Waters. It must be the Deceased's, because the other had his Sword with him in his Hand drawn. I saw the Blood: I desired the Constable to draw the Sword, and I saw it bloody a good way.

Mr. Peters sworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Mr. Peters will you tell my Lord and the Jury, whether on the 17th of October last you was sent for, and by whom?

Mr. Peters. On the 17th of October last, I think it was in the Forenoon, about 12 o'Clock, I was sent for to visit Mr. Lutterell; the Messenger told me he lay expiring: I came into his Room, where I found him on his Bed, in a wounded Condition, and languishing of his Wounds; he seem'd desirous, that I would pray to Almighty God for his Soul, for he believed he had but a little time to continue in this World, and therefore he desired to make the best Use of it; I was ready to assist him; and desired him to consider how far he might be instrumental in bringing this Misfortune on himself. I desired him to consider, that as a dying Man great Weight would be laid on his Words, therefore if he said any thing not strictly true, he might involve innocent People in the Guilt, and the Punishment: Therefore I desired him to lay his Hand upon his Heart and consider.

He told me, As a dying Man, as he expected to be tried for this very Fact at the Bar of Heaven, as well as the Persons, who had injur'd him, he assur'd me he was murdered in a barbarous manner. Afterwards came in one Church, a Bailiff in the same Street, and desired me to put it home to him: I did; upon which he made me the same Answer, That he was barbarously murder'd; he wanted Spirits, or would have express'd himself more fully: On this I pray'd by him, and when I had done, I took my leave of him. In about an Hour afterwards I was sent for again; when I came there, I met Mr. Vernon and Mr. Haines, Justices of the Peace; one of the Justices gave Mr. Lutterell his Oath, and there being no Clerk there, desired me to take his Words in Writing, which I did; the Words were these; The Bailiffs took the Pistols from my Table; they fired them twice; the fat Man drew his Sword, and run me into the Body with his Sword; and then drew my Sword, which I broke in his Hand, and begg'd for Life; I neither fired a Pistol nor made one Push; they both run me through; I offer'd to pay them the Money. I think these are the very Words he said. After this I pray'd by him again, and still desired, that he would not lay any thing to the Charge of People that were not guilty: I left him then, and came again a third Time, and as I was praying by him, he interrupted me, and ask'd me, If it was not proper to receive the Holy Sacrament, which he was desirous to do: I ask'd him, if ever he had received the Sacrament; he told me he had; I desired him to consider; and to assist him, I put him into a Method; I told him one Thing which was necessary, which perhaps he might come into with Reluctance, and that was Charity and forgiving his Enemies. I told him he had been hardly dealt with I believed, yet it did behove him, as he died a Christian, to forgive them; he told me he did forgive them, and he hoped Almighty God at the last Day would forgive their Indiscretion; he died some time afterwards, but then in so doing a Condition, that I could not attend him to any purpose.

Mr. Hungerford. Did he say any thing about who fired the Pistol?

Mr. Peters. I mentioned it to him; when I ask'd him, if he had fired either of the Pistols, I told him one of the Bailiffs was wounded, and that there were two Balls taken out of his Hand; he assured me, as he was a dying Man, he fired neither of the Pistols.

Reason. Did not he confess, that he had broke one of their Heads?

Mr. Peters. No, he did not say, he broke one of their Heads, nor any thing like it; so far from that, that he said he did not design to hurt a Hair of their Heads.

L. C. Just. I think Mr. Peters you say, when you came there you met with two Justices of the Peace, Mr. Vernon and Mr. Haines, and because they had no Clerk there, they desired you to take the Examination.

Mr. Peters. Yes, my Lord, I did take it.

Mr. Serj. Cheeshire. My Lord, I apprehended we had it ready to produce, or else I had not opened it; but upon my calling for it, I am told, to my Surprise, that Mr. Vernon hath it, and he is gone into the Country.

Mr. Peters. I have a Copy of it.

L. C. Just. We must have the Original.

Mr. Peters. My Lord, there is a Copy of it in my Deposition before the Coroner.

L. C. Just. Is Mr. Haynes here?

Mr. Haynes called.

L. C. Just. You have given an Account of the Examination of this Gentleman, first before the Clergyman, afterwards before two Justices of the Peace, his Examination is taken and reduced into Writing, and if it was reduced into Writing, by the Rule of Law, unless you shew you are disabled to do it by some Accident or other, you must produce that Writing.

Mr. Reeve. I am very much surprized, I apprehended they had the Writing ready in Court to produce. My Lord, Mr. Haynes will inform you.

Mr. Haynes sworn.

L. C. Just. Mr. Haynes we have been inform'd by that Gentleman that stands before you, the Minister, that upon hearing of this unhappy Accident, you and one of your Brethren, Mr. Vernon, came there in order to inquire into the Matter, and take the Examination of the Prisoners; did you do it?

Mr. Haynes. My Lord, on the 17th of October last, the Prisoners at the Bar were brought before me, and charged with the Murder of Mr. Lutterell; I understood Mr. Lutterell was not actually dead, so Mr. Vernon, another Justice of the Peace, went with me to Mr. Lutterell's Lodging, and there we found him in a very weak Condition, but sensible; we administer'd the Oath, in order to take the Information in Form; Mr. Vernon and the Minister were there; my Hearing not being good, Mr. Vernon examined him, but before they could perfect his Examination in form he fainted away, and could not go on: then we went to my House, where the Prisoners were, and examined them, and afterwards committed them. What the Deceased said to Mr. Vernon and the Minister I did not hear, so can give no Account of it.

Mr. Reeve. Had you a Paper taken?

Mr. Haynes. There was a Paper taken, but it was imperfect.

Mr. Reeve. And I think that is not in your Custody, had you the Paper?

Mr. Haynes. No, I had it not.

Mr. Reeve. Do you know where it is?

Mr. Haynes. No, I do not.

Mr. Peters. I gave it to Mr. Vernon, and obtained it of him to shew the Coroner, and afterwards I gave it him again; I took a Copy of it.

L. C. Just. The Copy you took is from the Paper produced to the Coroner.

Mr. Reeve. You was examined before the Coroner.

Mr. Peters. I brought the Original Paper to the Coroner.

Mr. Reeve. Whether that, which is mention'd in your Affidavit before the Coroner, was a Copy from the Original Paper?

Mr. Peters. Yes.

Mr. Reeve. And did you examine it?

Mr. Peters. Yes.

L. C. J. We must have the Original.

Mr. Hungerford. We hope we may have Liberty to read the Deposition taken before the Coroner, if what the Gentleman says be so; he saw the Examination taken in the Presence of the Justices of the Peace, and the very Paper, the Words of the Paper, are contained in the Deposition taken before the Coroner.

L. C. J. That won't do, you have not the Examination of the Deceased. This is ill done of Mr. Vernon, he ought to have taken Care, and attended here, and had the Examination before the Court, and without that we can't arrive at the Truth of this Case; I doubt you must lay aside all the Evidence of this Gentleman for want of the original Examination.

Mr. Reeve. We must submit it to your Lordship, as to the Confession, that Part of it that is not contained in the Examination, which was not proposed to him at the Time of his Examination, whether that is not Evidence; there are two or three Things he gives an Account of, that he said before it was reduced into Writing. But suppose we can't have the Benefit of the Examination, yet the Discourse that was had with the Deceased at another Time, whether we may not be admitted to give that in Evidence, we must submit it to your Lordship. But suppose no Examination had been taken, we humbly apprehend what he said would be proper to lay before the Jury. Therefore when he gives an Account of what he said at another Time than that of his Examination, though we can't produce what he said at the Time of his Examination, yet we may give in Evidence what he said at other Times. There were two other Times which he gives an Account of; the first was, when he was sent for to pray by him, and one Church came in; he then declared on the Words of a dying Man, He was barbarously murdered.

L. C. Just. You know in the Court of Chancery, when the Party is examined on his Oath, he gives in a first Answer; and on Examinations taken to it, he gives in a second, and so a third; all these are taken but as one Answer and entire Confession of the Party.

Mr. Reeve. Here is not an Examination before a proper Officer.

L. C. Just. You are to be heard no more to it because you ought to produce it.

Mr. Reeve. I am sure it is a Surprise on all of us.

Mr. Hungerford. As to us, we have the very Confession in our Brief, and I believe, if we had thought it could not have been produced, we should not have opened it.

L. C. Just. And there is too an Examination in Print; that ought not to be, and the Person that did it ought to be censured; are Juries to be prepossessed; here is a printed Pamphlet, whereof the Title is, Mr. Lutterell's Cry for Justice.

Mr. Hungerford. I never saw it, but am told it is most in Favour of the Prisoners at the Bar.

L. C. J. If the Examination is true, it ought to be produced, and the Prisoners ought to come fairly to their Trial, and, if guilty, God forbid but they should suffer, but not by passionate Insinuations in Print; and it is an unprecedented Thing, and if it comes out who did it, I shall take a Course with them: It is a way of preventing all Manner of Justice.

Mr. Hungerford. No doubt it is a very unjust Thing, and unwarrantable, no more to be justified, than Officers are, when under the Colour of Justice, they shall murder a Gentleman at his own Lodging; but as to the Case in Chancery, first, second, and third Answers are but one Answer. I speak it with all Deference, whether that be the same Case, the Words that he did deliver at other Times, when the Justices were not present, when he was a dying Person on the Brink of Eternity, and then said the same Words, and now this Paper can't be produced, whether the Words of the Paper may not be admitted as Evidence, we humbly submit it to your Lordship; and we believe the Witnesses will give you an Account of what he said at other Periods of Time, when there was no Examination in Writing, which was only when the Justices attended.

L. C. Just. Give an Account how it comes to pass, that you have not this Examination to produce, that was in Writing.

Mr. Mitchell sworn.

Mr. Reeve. Will you give an Account of this Paper, and whether there hath been any Application made to get it, and why it is not here?

Mr. Mitchell. I called at Mr. Vernon's, but they told me he was gone into the Country, and he had not fixed any one Place, which he not doing, they did not know where to send to him.

L. C. Just. Here is a printed Narrative goes about the Town. Do you know who was the Author of that?

Mr. Mitchell. No, my Lord, we have been enquiring in order to prosecute the Person; I have asked the Widow, and Mr. Keat her Nephew, and they say they know nothing of it.

Mr. Hungerford. It sets out with this Fact, that the Deceased struck first; and if so, it is very reasonable to suppose, that this Paper was done rather in Favour of the Prisoners at the Bar, than of the Prosecutors.

L. C. Just. The Justice of Peace that had not the Examination doth appear, but he that hath it is out of the way. Mr. Peters, how many Times was you with the Deceased?

Mr. Peters. Three Times; at 12 o'Clock, about an Hour after, and about an Hour after that, the third Time.

L. C. Just. When was it you reduced what he said into Writing?

Mr. Peters. The second Time; the third Time I administer'd the Sacrament.

L. C. Just. And when you examined him the first Time, and afterwards a second and third Time, the Design of that was to perfect the Examination which you took the first Time, and then it is all of a piece.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, the third Examination was after the taking any thing in Writing; when he took the Sacrament on the solemn Occasion, he declared, &c.

Mr. J. Powis. The last Examination therefore was an Advice to a forgiving Temper.

Mr. J. Eyre. Mr. Peters should declare what he said the first and the third Time.

Mr. Peters. I press'd him to consider and recollect whether what he had said was true, he said it was.

Mr. J. Eyre. What did he say the first time?

Mr. Peters. The first time he told me, he was barbarously murdered: As I told you before there came in one Church a Bailiff, and then I put him to consider, whether he was not Accessary to his own Misfortune; to which he returned the same Answer, that he was barbarously murdered, that he did not draw his Sword, nor fire his Pistol.

L. C. Just. Did you ask him about any Blow, or Provocation given?

Mr. Peters. I ask'd him, to which he said, he did not design to hurt a Hair of their Heads.

L. C. Just. I must confess for my part I am not entirely satisfied: Mr. Peters at his first coming examines him, and after that he comes to him a second time, and then he is examined in the Presence of two Justices of the Peace, and by their Authority; and he says the Intent of that was to perfect the first Examination; and being so examined a second time, his Examination is taken in Writing; whether or no the first and second do not make an entire Examination, and so that you can't produce the first without the second; I make no doubt it might be produced, if there had not been a second; but he that examines him first, examines him afterwards a second time, in order to perfect that Examination, and when he doth it, it is reduced into Writing; to me it seems a Matter of great Consequence, if the first is allowed without producing the second.

Mr. Just. Eyre. It can't properly be called an Examination.

Mr. Hungerford. The first time he examined him as a Christian, as a Minister; as to the second Examination, Mr. Peters had no more to do in it than as a Justice's Clerk.

L. C. Just. The Examination taken before the Justice, was to confirm the former Examination, and upon that Examination all was reduced into Writing.

Mr. J. Eyre. That which is set down in Writing, if it be an Examination taken in Writing of a Prisoner before a Justice of the Peace, you can't give Evidence of that Examination vivâ voce, unless the Examination be lost; but what Declaration or Confession was made at any other time, may be given in Evidence; the particular Examination of what he said before the Justices, and was reduced into Writing, cannot be proved but by that Writing; but as to what he said at any other Time, the first and third Time, and not before the Magistrates, that may be given in Evidence.

Mr. J. Powis. The great Matter I observe is, that Mr. Peters did say, he did look upon the second Examination to perfect the first, the first was not so perfect, and then it was to be ascertained by a second, and which they not caring to trust to their Memory put into Writing; that Writing indeed the Justice of Peace hath; it is not produced, but if it be agreed that it was put into Writing, and after it was reduced into Writing, it seemed to be all of a piece, so as plainly to relate to what was done the Time before, how will they ascertain the whole, but by producing the writing? Then this writing can't be seen, the Justice of Peace hath it, and doth not come here to produce it.

Mr. J. Eyre. I don't know how to call this perfecting the former Examination, you can't call the Discourse between him and Mr. Peters an Examination, when there was no Justice of Peace present; it is not an Examination what pass'd between Mr. Peters and this Gentleman. It is always taken so at the Old-Bayley, where Evidence is allowed to be given viva voce of what was said by People at other times besides the time of Examination.

Mr. J. Powis. What doth Mr. Peters mean by perfecting the Examination?

Mr. Peters. I beg your Pardon, it was not my Word.

L. C. Just. Not to differ about Words, whether this is an Examination before the Minister, when the Justices of Peace was not there; it is very likely this Minister came to inquire of this Gentleman about the Circumstances of his Death: after that the same Gentleman is present when the Justices of Peace come; thereupon the Justices of Peace desire him to take it in Writing; he asks the same Question as he did before, and they are taken in Writing; he takes it, designing to make the first Examination more authentic to charge the Person that gives the Examination. Now really when all this is done, the Examination of him before the Justice, taken in Writing by the same Person that inquired of him before, and all this done in order to perfect and consummate the Examination, whether you will not take them both together as one entire Account given by the Deceased? He gives the Account, he gives it as true in the Presence of the Justice; they were not present the first time, but the same Person that asked him the first time, he asks him when the Justices were there, if what he said before was true, and on that an Account is taken in Writing: Now upon this, when there is an Examination in Writing in the Presence of the same Person, and when they give you no reasonable Excuse why they don't produce it, there ought to be the less Credit given to them.

Mr. J. Eyre. I think there is the less Credit to be given, because the Examination is not produced; however it is Evidence.

Mr. J. Powis. If they were both of equal Validity you say something, but it is confessed on all Hands, that the second Examination was more solemn and valid, because two Justices of the Peace were present, and there was the Awe of Magistracy over the Person, and the second Examination relates to the first.

Mr. J. Fortescue. It is a hard Case on the Prisoners at the Bar; it is the Confession of Mr. Lutterell, and if they had that in Evidence, they might be compared together; but they not having that, I own, as to point of Law, they cannot give it in Evidence: It is a great Hardship, but where it lies I cannot tell; I think it ought to be censured in a proper Time. The most material of what is said by word of Mouth is detained from us, and not produced; but I think we should allow what was said at other times to be given in Evidence, because the first is no Examination, because no Justice of Peace then present; so that the Examination stands distinctly by it self, and that Evidence is to be laid aside and not produced: but shall we not allow that to be Evidence which he said at other times, because he had an Examination taken in Writing? Therefore we shall hear no other Evidence, the first was no Examination, only what Mr. Peters will take upon him to say passed between them.

L. C. Just. Go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Hungerford. There can be no doubt of the third Declaration; my Lord, the third Examination was certainly the most honest Examination; as to the second Examination, it had the Solemnity of two Justices of the Peace, one happens to be deaf, the other to be absent; whether what a Man says just as he is going to die, and on his receiving the Holy Sacrament, is not to be regarded?

Mr. J. Eyre. He should distinguish between what passed in the first Discourse, without any regard to what is contained in the second Examination.

Mr. Reeve. Mr. Peters, you hear the Opinion of the Court, that what passed at the writing of this Paper you must not take any Notice of, but give an Account of what passed at any other Time.

Mr. Peters. I told your Lordship before I was sent for to visit him the first time, when I found him dangerously ill; after I had talked to him some time to put him in mind of Death, I desired to know of him, how far he had been any way instrumental or necessary to bring this Misfortune upon himself; he said, As he was a dying Man, and expected to be judged at the last Day, they murdered him barbarously. I repeated it to him again at the Request of Mr. Church a Bailiff, and the last time I came to him, when he received the Sacrament.

L. C. Just. Mr. Peters, I desire you to consider with your self, did you not ask him whether he had struck any of the Bailiffs?

Mr. Peters. I did not.

L. C. Just. Did you ask him if he had given them any Provocation.

Mr. Peters. I did, to which he answered, He had given them no Provocation.

L. C. Just. Did you ask who gave the first Blow?

Mr. Peters. No, I did not.

L. C. Just. Did you see the Wound; did he say he gave that?

Mr. Peters. I told him, it appears one of the Bailiffs is wounded in the Hand, and it is probable he was the Person that discharged that Pistol; upon which he assured me, He fired neither of the Pistols; he neither drew his Sword, nor fired either of the Pistols.

L. C. Just. When you had this Discourse with him, did you reduce it into Writing?

Mr. Peters. What I reduced into Writing, was only my Deposition, which I writ with my own Hand, and which Mr. Justice Harper swore me to, and I believe he hath it in his Custody.

L. C. Just. Here this Gentleman is allowed to give an Account of what Discourse passed between him and Mr. Lutterell the first time; the Justice of Peace can't be allowed to give an Account of what is said at his other Examination, because it was reduc'd into Writing, and that Writing can't be produced.

Mr. Reeve. I beg you would give an Account of what he said at any other Time, when this Paper was not written: When you talk'd with him about this Matter, you say he said, The Bailiffs did barbarously murder him without any Provocation; that he said, He gave them no Provocation: And when you ask'd him about the Wound that one of the Bailiffs had, he said, He fired neither of the Pistols, nor drew his Sword; I desire to know at any other time, whether there was any thing material passed between you at any other time than at that time when the Paper was wrote: Can you recollect?

L. C. Just. You discoursed him three times, the first you have given an Account of, the second time it was reduced into Writing, that Writing doth not appear; what pass'd the third time, pray repeat it again?

Mr. Peters. As he was going to receive the Holy Sacrament, I beg'd of him to consider whether what he had said was true: He said, Every Article he had said, as he was a dying Man, and as he hoped to receive Benefit by the Sacrament, every thing he had said was strictly true.

Mr. Reeve. We shall trouble your Lordship with one Evidence more, that is, the Surgeon, who will give you an Account of his Wounds.

Mr. Sparham sworn.

Mr. Reeve. I think you was sent for as a Surgeon, give an Account in what Condition you found the Deceased, how many Wounds, and of what Nature.

Mr. Sparham. I found him labouring with a Wound under the Right Pap with a Shot; upon this I examined him, and putting him into a proper Posture, found several other Wounds; one near the Liver, the lower part of the eighth Rib, near the Back-bone; several other Wounds with a Sword, three or four on his Belly. Upon opening of his Body I found that the Wound with the Bullet had penetrated about nine Inches towards the Back, which Wound was mortal, the first to be of the Lungs, having a Hole thro', and the second to be torn, and the Diaphragma wounded: I found one other Wound with a Sword near the eighth Rib, three Inches and a half broad, penetrating the Thorax, and wounding the Diaphragma, which was also mortal; I found eight other Wounds with a Sword about a Quarter of an Inch wide each, and a Quarter of an Inch deep, one near the left Pap, four others on the right side of the Belly, two more on each side the Back Bone.

Mr. Reeve. So you look'd upon two of the Wounds to be mortal, one whereof was with the Pistol-shot.

Mr. Sparham. Yes, I saw two leaden Pieces taken out of his Body.

Mr. Strange. Who attended at the same time?

Mr. Sparham. Mr. Gifford.

Strange. Did he or you take out those Bullets?

Mr. Sparham. We both took them out, I think.

Mr. Reeve. My Lord we have done.

L. C. Just. What say the Prisoners? The Counsel for the King have called what Witnesses they think proper, it is now your time to answer for your selves.

Reason. If your Lordship please, we arrested the Gentleman in Surrey-street, and he desired me to go to his Lodging; when we came there, he said he would pay the Money, says he, Go and see for the Attorney, and I will pay the Money; upon that Tranter went to the Attorney for his Bill, I went up Stairs with the Gentleman into the Dining-Room; when he came up, says he, My Dear, I am arrested, it is for Mr. Rous's Bill. He began to look a little angry, with that he went to his Scrutore and took something out of it, a Key, and he went up Stairs and fetched his Pistols, and when he came down again, he clap'd one to my Breast, and threatened to shoot me; I was surpris'd, his Lady runs out of the Room, with that I gave him good words; says he, Sirrah I will let you live a little till your Partner comes back, and then I will send all your Souls to Hell together: Then the Foot-boy came back and said, the Gentleman was coming; he ordered the Boy out of the Room, and one knocked at the Door; when the Boy was gone, he clap'd his Pistols one on one side of his Bosom, and the other on t'other, and my Partner came, and when he came into the Room he gave him a Blow over the Head; with that he clos'd in with him, and then one of the Pistols went off and wounded him; then he drew his Sword, and I drew mine, and then the other Pistol went off, which was the Occasion of his Death.

L. C. Just. Have you any Witnesses?

Mr. Twine sworn.

Mr. Twine. My Lord, I was employ'd by the Plaintiff Mr. Carr, to take out a Writ against Mr. Lutterell, on an Indors'd Note; I did take out a Writ and gave it to Mr. Reason, and he got the Warrant upon it, and afterwards came to me, and desired to know where Mr. Lutterell was to be found, and that I would describe him to him, whether young or old, &c. I told him where to go, and described him to them; then they went and arrested him, and after he was arrested Tranter came to me and told me the next Morning, they had taken the Captain: they said they took him at the lower End of Surrey-street, and that he was very angry, and said they had not used him civilly.

L. C. Just. What Tranter said is not Evidence.

Mr. Twine. I know no more, my Lord; Tranter came to me for the Bill, and I gave him a Bill of the Debt and Charges.

L. C. Just. Did you give the Bill of the Debt and Charges to Tranter?

Mr. Twine. I did; he told me they had just taken the Captain, and then I gave it him; the Bill of Charges was one Pound thirteen Shillings.

Mr. Tims sworn. The Warrant shew'd to him.

Mr. Tims. This is the Warrant made out upon the Bill of Middlesex, at the Suit of Mr. Carr, to arrest the deceased; The Warrant read, and also the Bill of Middlesex produced and read.

Mr. Hickman sworn, and the Warrant shew'd to him.

Mr. Hickman. This I know to be my Hand, I made out this Warrant all of it.

Mr. Hungerford. I would humbly offer it to your Lordship's Observation, here is a Fact we have omitted to prove, here is a Witness in Court, one Lucas, can prove that Reason shot off the Pistol.

L. C. Just. It is irregular; but altho' you have omitted it, and come out of time, I would have the whole Fact, and if my Brothers please we will hear it.

Constance Lucas sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Mrs. Lucas, what do you know of shooting off the Pistol?

Const. Lucas. I was opposite to the Captain's Lodging in Surrey-street, in a Room up two Pair of Stairs, and I heard a Pistol go off, upon that I went to the Window, and I saw a lusty fat Man take a Pistol out of the Window in the Captain's Lodging up one Pair of Stairs, and let it off towards the Fire-side.

Mr. Strange. Do you know Mr. Lutterell?

Const. Lucas. Yes.

Mr. Strange. Can you take upon you to say it was not Mr. Lutterell?

Const. Lucas. Yes, I am sure it was not he.

L. C. Just. When you saw a lusty fat Man take a Pistol off from the Window and discharge it, was any Body by him at that time?

Const. Lucas. No Body that I saw.

L. C. Just. What sort of Man was Mr. Lutterell?

Const. Lucas. He was a little Man.

One of the Jury. Was there any Light in that Room to distinguish one Man from another?

L. C. Just. What she said was, she saw a lusty fat Man come to the Window, and take up a Pistol and discharge it, and that she saw no Body else at the Window.

Mr. Hungerford. The Coroner's Inquest came into this Room, and was satisfied, that from thence she might see into this Window.

Mr. Gifford the Surgeon sworn.

Mr. Gifford. On Tuesday the 17th of October last, about ten or eleven o'Clock in the Morning, I was sent for to a Gentleman, Mr. Lutterell; when I came to him, I found him sitting on a Chair, and he leaned back with his Shirt and Clothes very bloody; Mr. Sparham was with him in order to look to his Wound; we put him to Bed, we found a Wound about an Inch below the right Pap, by Gun or Pistol shot, and we dressed it and all the other Wounds we could find; I went into the Parlour, and there were the two Prisoners at the Bar; I was told one of them was wounded; upon that I went to examine into it: Upon coming into the Parlour I examined Tranter, and there I found two pieces of Balls which were lodged in his Hand; we extracted the Balls; I found a small Wound in his Wrist, and a Razure on his Head; that was a small Wound which was on the Wrist, it seemed to be from a Prick, something that had entered the Skin. Then I went to Mr. Lutterell again, as he was in a good State of Sense; I ask'd Mr. Lutterell, Whether he had fired a Pistol? I asked him several Times, he denied it a first, second, and third Time, and he used this Expression, I call God to Witness, I neither fired a Pistol, nor drew my Sword, but was barbarously murdered. I was there again when Mr. Peters gave him the Sacrament, when he was asked the same Question; he then answered, He neither did the one or the other. In the Afternoon Mr. Keat and I went together, he was then in a calm State, seemed reasonable, and we asked him, Sir, you can give some Account of this Matter, your Reason and Judgment are strong; I have heard that you fetched down the Pistols: He told me, He had, but with no malicious Design, only he would not be forc'd out of his Lodgings. I ask'd him, If there was any Blow given: He said, They had given him abusive Language, which induced him to strike one of them; upon that they immediately seiz'd him, the lusty Man seiz'd him and drew his Sword, he tumbled down, and he stab'd him; he often beg'd them to spare his Life; the other said, Damn him, draw his own Sword and stab him. Mr. Lutterell's Finger and Thumb were cut, as if it was with grasping of a Sword. Then he said, The lesser Man took a Pistol and clap'd it close to his Breast, and shot him in the Body, and the lusty Man held the other Pistol to his Head and shot it off; which I the rather believe, because he had some Powder Spots or Marks on his Face.

Reason. He owned to you that he struck one of us.

Mr. Gifford. Yes, but it was upon your giving fawcy Language.

L. C. Just. When you ask'd him about bringing down the Pistols, and upon what Account, what said he?

Mr. Gifford. He acknowledged he brought down the Pistols, but with no evil Intent; but as he was willing to pay his Debts, he was not willing to be forc'd out of his Lodging and be expelled.

Mr. Bonner sworn.

Mr. Bonner. My Lord, just as Mr. Lutterell was got to Bed I came up Stairs, and asked him, if he had fired the Pistol; he disown'd it, and said, He had no Design to do them any Harm, or make any Resistance, but (said he) they kill'd me cowardly and cruelly.

Reason. After that he had declared to you that he had no Design to make any Resistance, what followed?

Bonner. When I came out of the Room, says Mr. Gifford to me, Mr. Bonner, Mr. Tranter is shot in the Hand; it is certain Mr. Lutterell shot him in the Hand; therefore let us go back and ask him; we went and ask'd him both of us, and he said, No, as God should judge him he did not, nor had he any Design of doing them any Harm, but he did threaten them several times. He spoke inwardly and seem'd to be faint, and desired we would leave him.

Reason. Please to take notice, that my Partner is shot in the Right Hand.

Tranter. My Lord, I have lost the Use of my Thumb.

Blake the Surgeon sworn.

Blake. My Lord, Mr. Tranter was wounded in the Thumb of the Right Hand, and in his Left he had a Wound here in his Wrist, I did not take the Ball out of his Hand, but I dressed it.

L. C. Just. What was that Blow on his Head? what do you think it was done with?

Mr. Blake. It seemed to be done with a Cane.

L. C. Just. Was it a Wound or a Bruise?

Mr. Blake. A Wound, the Skin was broke. Mr. Reason had a little Wound in one of his Fingers, which seemed to be done with the Point of a Sword.

Thomas Hargrave called again.

L. C. Just. Heark you, young Man, hear the Question and consider well; upon your former Examination you say, when Tranter knocked at the Door you went down to let him in; that Tranter made up to the Dining-Room, and you follow'd him; you heard a little Bustle before you came in, but the first thing you saw, when you came, was Tranter running your Master against the Closet Door, and Reason pricking him with a Sword: I ask you this Question, whether or no, when you was going up Stairs after Tranter, before you enter'd the Room, you did not hear a Blow?

Tho. Hargrave. I heard a Blow, but did not know who struck it.

Mr. J. Eyre. Did you see to whom the Blow was given?

Hargrave. No, I saw nothing at all of it.

L. C. Just. The Reason of my calling him again, was to be satisfied as to this Particular; for the Coroner informs me, that before him, he had swore to the same Effect; he answered hastily before, but I believe not with any Design; he said he did not hear any Blow, his Meaning then might be, tho' he did hear a Blow, yet not seeing who gave it, therefore he thought it not material; I did not believe he did it with any Design.

L. C. Just. Have you any other Witnesses?

Reason. My Lord, we had none but ourselves, we are Officers of the Court; he assaulted us and brought down his Pistols and stuck them in his Bosom.

L. C. Just. Did he not afterwards take them out and lay them on the Table?

Reason. No, my Lord.

Tranter. While I was gone, I did not know what happen'd, but when I came back, the Minute I enter'd the Room he struck me over the Head with his Cane, and the Pistol went off, and shot me in the Hand.

The Clothes were produced, and by the Hole in the Waistcoat is appeared, that the Wound given by the Pistol under the Right Pap could no way happen by any Position of the Pistols in the Bosom of the Deceased, by the Pistol going off of itself.

Reason. My Lord, we are Officers of the Court, and what we did was for our own Security.

L. C. Just. What says Tranter?

Tranter. My Lord, we have no more to say?

Mr. Reeve. My Lord, I beg leave to observe a few Things by way of Reply. They have endeavour'd to differ the Case with respect to three Particulars; the first Particular is with relation to the Blow given by Mr. Lutterell; they say Mr. Lutterell himself being press'd very much, did own that he had given one of the Bailiffs a Blow on the Head; there appears Reason to think that to be true, because the Surgeon says he dress'd him of a Wound received by a Blow with a Cane; we submit it, whether that is a sufficient Justification of the Officers for what followed, to kill Mr. Lutterell in this manner, supposing it to be true. What the Boy says, he saw afterwards, immediately upon his coming into the Room, in an instant, as soon as he heard the Blow, he found Mr. Tranter running him up against the Wainscot, and the other Bailiff stabbing him, he swears Mr. Lutterell had then no Sword or Stick in his Hand, so that whether or no after the Bailiff had received a Blow on his Head, it will be a Justification sufficient for the Bailiffs to murder him? Another Part of the Evidence is in relation to the bringing down of the Pistols; I beg leave to observe, my Lord, he did confess that the Pistols were brought down, but not with an Intention to do them any Prejudice; that he laid them on the Table; they don't pretend Mr. Lutterell fired either of them, but in the Struggle, the Pistols were in his Breast, and there they went off of themselves. One Wounded the Prisoner, the other went into his own Breast. As to what is said with relation to the Intention of Mr. Lutterell he did own he did threaten them: If he did, yet he had not Power over the Pistols, one was on the Table, and the other was in the Window, and they say the Pistols were not fired by any of them: Our Witness the Maid-Servant, just a little before the Pistols were fired off, saw Mr. Lutterell on the Ground upon his Back, and his Hands lifted up, and them stabbing him, and this before any one of the Pistols went off; there is another Witness swears expressly, she saw a fat Man take a Pistol out of the Window, and fire it towards the Chimney: Mr. Lutterell was not a fat Man, so it must be somebody else that fired the Pistol, and not Mr. Lutterell, in all probability. It was Mr. Reason, as to the Evidence given in relation to the Cloaths, because here is a Hole in the Waistcoat, the Pistol that was in his Breast must go off of itself, and make that Hole. It can be no such Thing, the Jury have seen the Cloaths, and where the Wound is given, and in what Position Mr. Reason himself hath attempted to place the Pistols, and it is impossible the Pistols should go off, and give that mortal Wound. We submit it to your Lordship's Discretion upon the whole, whether it is a sufficient Justification, though they are Officers of Justice, and ought to be protected, yet suppose such a Misbehaviour, where there is no Necessity for it, they are not to be justified.

L. C. Just. There will be two Points in Law; the one is whether the Officers are to be justified in what they have done; if they have done nothing, but what was proper to secure their Prisoner, and their own Lives when they were assaulted, they are not guilty of Felony; and if they are guilty of Felony, then of what Degree, whether of Murder or Manslaughter.

Mr. Reeve. My Lord, we must submit it whether a Man striking another over the Head be a Justification for him immediately to kill him, and take it with this Circumstance, that they had given him ill Language.

L. C. Just. Is ill Language a Justification for Blows? Besides you will consider, whether there was not ill Language on the other Side.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I won't take up much of your Lordship's Time, if your Lordship will spare me a Word or two. Here is a Man's Life taken away by two Persons, that had a Precept from a Court of Justice to arrest, the only thing they had to do, was to secure the Person, to make him answerable to Justice, whether that could not be done without this Outrage? Whether Officers of Justice may execute their Process with so much Cruelty? It amounts to as great premeditated Malice as can be conceived. There is a Malice contained in Cruelty; I need not mention the Matter; it hath been fully laid before you; I shall only mention a Precedent or two; one is that of Holloway's Case: There was something of a Provocation, but the Judge there in that Case did enter into the Fact, whether the Provocation was sufficient to justify the killing of the Boy. The Boy was stealing Wood in his Park, and had a Rope about his Middle, and as he was up in a Tree, he bid him come down out of the Tree, and he took hold of the Rope and dragg'd him so, that he was killed, and this was not a sufficient Provocation. Another Case is that of Mawgridge^b, it is reported by my Lord Chief Justice Holt, there was a Provocation; Cope had desired Mawgridge to go out of the Room, and then turned him out of the Room; and there the turning him out of the Room was not a sufficient Provocation, and it is a very just Observation of my Lord Chief Justice Holt; when Cases are attended with so much Cruelty and Barbarity (as appears to be here, here are nine Wounds, eight besides that with the Pistol on the same Person, and certainly two lusty Men as the Prisoners at the Bar are, might have made him answerable to Justice, without any such barbarous Treatment.) The Observation my Lord Chief Justice Holt made is, that the Law should be so construed. As to the Business of the Cloaths, it seems to be absurd, that the Pistol went off, and made that Wound on the Right Side; by no Position he could put the Pistols in, could their going off make that Wound.

Mr. Strange. My Lord, I would only observe two or three Things. If Mr. Lutterell at the time they assaulted him with a Sword, had held his Pistols in his Hand, and their own Lives had been in danger, the Case had been different: but when he had put the Pistols out of his Hand, and they were between him and the Pistols, so that it was impossible for him to do them any such Harm (for I do admit if it was in Mr. Lutterell's Power at that Time, and he had shew'd an Intention, that if they did not kill him, he would kill them, that might be something of a Justification) they are the less excusable in doing what they did. As to the Circumstance of the Pistols firing of themselves, as they were in Mr. Lutterell's Bosom, and so giving this Wound, it seems to be impossible it should be so, and that this must be a Wound given by a Pistol levelled directly at him.

L. C. Just. I think you mentioned the Case that is in Keilyng, and if you have read that Case lately, you will remember, there a Blow is a Provocation, and if a Blow be first given, it will not be Murder, tho' Death do ensue upon it.

L. C. Just. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoners at the Bar, Hugh Reason and Robert Tranter, are charged by the Coroner's Inquest, and by an Indictment, with the Murder of Mr. Lutterell; they say they are not guilty of this Murder, and whether they are guilty or not is your Business to enquire, and receive Satisfaction in. In order to prove them guilty, they have called several Witnesses for the King. The first is Thomas Hargrave who it seems was a Servant to Mr. Lutterell; he tells you, that upon Tuesday, but he doth not remember the Month, or the Day of the Month, but it comes out from the other Witnesses, that it was the 17th Day of October, he says his Master was going down to the Water-side in order to take Boat, for it seems he lodged in Surry-Street, and he says a little Man ran after him, and clapp'd him on the Back. He did not then know him, but now says his Name is Tranter; on that his Master told him, he would pay the Money. He did differ in the Evidence he gave, at first he did not remember, that he desired them to go to his

Lodging, but he desired them to go with him to Westminster. But the Officers thought, that was not reasonable; then afterwards he says, that with much Persuasion he prevailed with them to carry him back to his Lodging: and that his Officers did carry him back to his own Lodging; he says his Master went up Stairs, he followed after; when he came up Stairs his Master demanded of the Officer, that was with him, the fat Man, which is Reason (for Tranter was gone to get a Bill of Costs from the Attorney) he demanded of the Officer his Warrant; the Officer did shew him his Warrant; he said, he took the Warrant in his Hand, and afterwards threw it on the Ground, using a very indecent Expression, he should take it and wipe his Back-side with it. He tells you while he was there somebody knock'd at the Door, with that he went down to open the Door, and he says he let in Tranter, and he ran up to the Dining-Room, and he followed him. Now he says on his second Examination, before he came into the Dining-Room, he did hear the Noise of a Blow given; formerly the Lad giving his Evidence hastily, and not so well considering, he said he did not hear any Blow given, but on his second Examination, he doth say he heard a Blow given before he came into the Dining-Room. He says when he came into the Dining-Room Tranter had got hold of Mr. Lutterell, and was running of him against the Wainscot, and that Reason had his Sword drawn and was striking at him with his Sword; and he says, as he was preparing himself to make another Thrust, he took hold of his Sword-Arm, and prevented that, and Reason with some Passion said, Damn you, get you out of the Room, or else you shall die before your Master. With that the Boy went out of the Room, and went down Stairs and cried out Fire and Murder, in order to alarm the Neighbourhood, he tells you while he was there he heard a Pistol go off, and before he could get up Stairs he heard another Pistol go off, this is the Evidence given by Hargrave. They have called another Witness, Hester Gerrard; she says she heard her Master go out in the Morning, and in a little time after she heard him return again, and there came with him Reason, one of the Prisoners at the Bar. Observing this, that her Master came in so short a Time after he went out, she had the Curiosity to hearken what the Meaning or Occasion of her Master's returning so soon was; she says, she heard her Master talking of an Arrest, and he seem'd to be in a Passion with the Bailiff, that was with him, and said he had not used him well, but should have given him notice before he arrested him in the Street; she says she withdrew afterwards into her Mistress's Bed-Chamber, which was near the Room where they were, and in a little time she heard her Master go up Stairs, and in a short time after return again; with that she had the Curiosity to go in, and see what was the Matter; her Mistress being big with Child she was therefore more curious than ordinary to prevent the Misfortune falling on her Mistress; she found her Master with two Pistols in his Hand, he stuck one of the Pistols on one Side, and the other on the other Side in his Coat; she says she admonish'd her Master, and desired him to consider the Condition of her Mistress, and not to do any thing to fright her; upon that he said the Bailiffs had affronted him, and abused him, and called him Minter, however he did not design to do them any harm with the Pistols, and her Master at her Desire laid down the Pistols on the Table; with that she went out of the Room; but soon after hearing a great Noise she came into the Room again, and found her Master on his Back on the Floor, and the Bailiffs stabbing him: She says she went out with an Intent to give notice of it to the Neighbourhood, and that she cried out Murder; that while she was doing this, she heard one Pistol go off, and presently after another; but before either went off, she saw her Master lying upon his Back, and the Prisoner at the Bar (pointing at him) stabbing him. Then they call Thomas Waters, a Waterman, he was standing by the Water-side, and seeing Mr. Lutterell coming down, who was one that usually employ'd him, he expected a Fare from him, and that he should carry him, as he usually did; he saw Mr. Lutterell make back again and go into his own Lodging; but still he said he expected his Master to come down, and go by Water; but he not coming in so short time as he expected, he made towards his Lodging, and as he came near he heard the Boy cry, Fire and Murder: He went up into the Room, where he found Mr. Lutterell lying in the Room wounded all in Blood. The next Witness is Mr. Peters, who is a Reverend Divine, and came to do his Office and Duty on this melancholly occasion; he hearing Mr. Lutterell was wounded, and in danger of dying, came to him to perform his Office on that Occasion: He says, that he requested and admonished him to tell him, if he was not accessary to his own Misfortune, and that it may be, if it was not discovered whilst he was living, it might be the Occasion of an innocent Person's Suffering. When he admonished him to tell the Truth, he did with the most solemn Affelevation, as he was to answer at the dreadful Day of Judgment, say, That he was barbarously murder'd; but did not you give any Provocation or Occasion for it? No, I gave none. With that, says he, I told him I understood one of the Bailiffs was wounded with a Pistol; did not you discharge either of the Pistols? No, upon the Word of a dying Man, and as he was to answer it to Almighty God, he never discharged either of the Pistols, nor did he run his Sword at them, drew his Sword at them, or give them any Provocation. The Minister says, he advised him to be very serious and examined him as to the Fact, and said it would be of very dangerous Consequence, if he should die with any Fallity in a Case of this Nature, and it would draw present Ruin on innocent Persons; he said, He never drew his Sword, nor discharged either of the Pistols, but was barbarously murder'd. Mr. Peters then went away, and a little time after came again, when Mr. Vernon and Mr. Haynes, two Justices of the Peace, came to take an Examination from Mr. Lutterell himself; he says he was present at that Time, that because they had no Clerk with them, he was desired to take an Account in Writing of what was said; he press'd him as formerly, and having taken an Account in Writing, that ought to be produced, but it is not produced, and therefore no regard is to be had to it, for a Person is to give the best Evidence the Thing is capable of, especially where a Person's Life is concerned, and he of his own shewing, says it was taken in Writing, and that Writing is not produced, and no Account is given that they are disabled to produce it, but the Justice of the Peace that hath it is out of the Way, and it doth not appear, that proper Endeavours have been taken to have him here, that this Examination might appear more perfect than the former. He tells you afterwards he came to him a third Time, and the End of his coming a third Time was to admonish him with respect to his Fate in the other World, and at that Time he desired to take the Sacrament; he told him what was necessary, that he might take the Sacrament worthily, and that it was proper above all Things that he should discharge himself and his Conscience, and give a true Account of what happen'd on this melancholly Occasion, that so no innocent Person might suffer. He still insisted, That he was barbarously murder'd, and said, that every Article of what he had said was true. He said to him further, before you receive the Holy Sacrament, and as you are going before God, and there hope to have Remission of your Sins, it is necessary for you to forgive even your Enemies; and with that says he, he told me, He did heartily forgive all the World, and did forgive the Persons that had been guilty of this Indiscretion, and hoped God Almighty would forgive them: He gives it a soft Term there, their Indiscretion. Indeed I should have been very glad if the Examination that was reduced into Writing was here, that it might be laid before you. Mr. Peters is a very worthy Person, there is no Reason to doubt, but he swears upon his Memory; and when a Man swears upon his Memory, he may mistake; and the Mistake of a few Words may alter the Sense; therefore it was very proper to have had the Examination here; that might possibly have corrected his Memory; and tho' he hath shew'd himself a Man of great Probity and Worth, yet he might be mistaken in some Particular; and it seems strange, that of two Justices of Peace the one appears, and the other, Mr. Vernon, with whom the Examination is left, doth not appear, nor any Endeavours used to have him here; and therefore it must be taken as an Objection, not as to his veracity, but that the Prosecutor hath not produced the Evidence that is proper, and only relies on the Memory of the Witnesses, and this seems to affect the Evidence that is given by Mr. Peters. They have called another Witness, whom they called at last after they had closed their Evidence; she lived in an House over against Mr. Lutterell's Lodgings; she was in a Chamber two Pair of Stairs, and she saw a lusty fat Man come to the Window, take up a Pistol, and as she thought discharged the Pistol; and she saw no other Person but this Man, and therefore concluded the fat Man fired the Pistol: This is the Evidence given for the King. The Prisoners are asked what they have to say for themselves, in answer to this Charge, which seems to be a weighty one given against them: They tell you they are Ministers of Justice, and they give you an Account not only by their own opening, but by the Evidence they have produced, in what manner they behaved themselves; that upon the first Arrest, at the Request of the Prisoner that then was, they submitted to carry him back to his own Lodging: I must confess this doth seem to make some Impression, it is what Bailiffs are not bound to do, they are usually rough, and not easy to be intreated, unless well paid for it; this shews, that these Men went beyond the Bounds of their own Duty, for when they had arrested him, they ought to have secured him by carrying him to Jail, or some Place of Safety; it was incumbent on them to give him an Opportunity of paying the Money, or sending for Bail, in Case he desired to be discharged that Way; but when a Bailiff hath arrested a Man, to carry him back to his own Lodging, is an unusual way of treating Prisoners and ought not to have been; but still it is not to be imputed to the Bailiffs, as an Aggravation in the Charge, they were too favourable in trusting him in his own Lodging. What is next? When they had him there, Tranter is sent for the Attorney's Bill, this is pretty extraordinary when they had taken him, not only to give him Leave to go to his own Lodgings, but one of them goes upon an Errand, which Mr. Lutterell might have sent his own Servant upon, and leaves none but Reason; this was extreme civil Usage, and not often done by Men of their Character; what then? Lutterell goes up Stairs, what did Reason then do? When he had carried him to his own Lodging and sent his Partner away, he gives him leave to go into another Chamber; this doth not seem to be ill Treatment of the Deceased, but shews excessive Favour to their Prisoner, which they could not in Strictness justify: He went up Stairs and returned again, and the Maid Servant of Mr. Lutterell tells you, she saw him with a Case of Pistols, one stuck on one Side of his Coat, and the other on t'other; if their Treatment was so extraordinary and civil, this seems to be an untoward return of Mr. Lutterell's, when he was trusted to go out of the Room, for to Return with a Case of Pistols; but the Maid-Servant says, he said, He had no Malice towards them, and would not hurt a Hair of their Heads, he only brought down the Pistols that he might not be imposed upon. I don't know what he meant, when he was in Custody of the Officers, and had been so civilly used, to bring down a Case of Pistols to prevent his being ill used, seems an untoward Return, and to affright the Officers, that they might not carry him away. This is not all, Mr. Gifford says, that he being a Surgeon was call'd to give his Assistance on this very unhappy Accident; he gives an Account of the Wounds, and the Discourse that pass'd on that Occasion, and upon what he had done, and how the Bailiffs had treated him. Says he, I confess, although he says he had examined, and asked him several Times before, and that he refused to give any Account then, but did persist in it, that he did not give any Provocation, but at last when Mr. Gifford repeated it with some Earnestness, out it comes at last, That he did give one of the Bailiffs a Stroke on his Head with a Stick. He goes on, and ask'd him the Intent of bringing down the Pistols; he says, I did not design any Harm; I have no Malice, but brought them down, that I might not be ill used: This was ill Behaviour, where he had been treated civilly, to declare that he brought down his Pistols, that he might not be ill used: It was the Duty of the Bailiffs to carry him off, and he brought down his Pistols to prevent that; as to the Blow, say the Bailiffs, the Assault begun on his Side; the young Man hath told you he heard a Blow given:

Mr. Lutterell declared, he brought down the Pistols to prevent their carrying him off, and that he did give one of the Bailiffs a Blow with a Cane; it is surprizing, that immediately when Tranter came back he should run him against the Wainscot, and the other assault him with a Sword; this Behaviour is not of a Piece with the other, that Tranter should come back, and without any Provocation run him against the Wall, and Reason should take his Sword and stab him: There must be a Provocation; the Boy says there was a Blow given, but he can't tell who gave it. Mr. Lutterell declares he gave a Blow, and another Surgeon confirms it; so that it appears beyond Contradiction, by the Evidence, that the Pistols were brought down with a Design to prevent his being carried off, and that he did give one of the Bailiffs a Blow with a Stick: Then Mr. Bonner hath given you an Account of several Matters, but that which is material is, that he did not discharge any of his Pistols, or draw his Sword; that he did not intend it, but did threaten it several Times. One Blake, who was another Witness, says, that upon Examination afterwards there appeared, that there had been a Blow on the Head of Tranter. This is the Nature of the Evidence given on the Side of the Prisoners. Upon the whole Matter, I think it is plain beyond Contradiction, that the Prisoners at the Bar did kill Mr. Lutterell. It is plain that first of all, when Tranter had him against the Wall, that Reason stabb'd him, and when lying upon the Floor, that Reason stabb'd him; and it appears afterwards by the Evidence of the Witnesses, who says she saw the fat Man take up the Pistol and discharge it, that Reason shot off the Pistol; so that I think there can be no doubt at all, but the Prisoners at the Bar did give these Wounds, of which he died. The Surgeons give an Account, and I think there are some eight or nine Wounds with a Sword, one of them only mortal; a Wound with a Bullet that is mortal; several other Wounds he speaks of, that are but slight. Then the Question will be, whether upon this Evidence the Defendants are guilty of Felony, and if guilty, then in what Degree, whether of Murder or Manlaughter. Gentlemen, it hath been opened truly, that the Bailiffs are Ministers of Justice; they are arm'd with the Authority of Law, and those, who resist a Bailiff in the Execution of his Office, resist the Law. They are not bound to give way and let their Prisoner Escape, but they being to execute their Warrant, if in doing what is necessary for this purpose, for obtaining their Prisoner, and the Security of their own Persons, Death doth ensue, the Bailiffs having the Authority of the Law on their side, it is not so much as Felony; and it is very necessary it should be so, for without it all our Properties would be precarious. When any Man offers an Injury to another, there is no Remedy but by bringing an Action at Law, and in order to bring the Person to do Justice a proper Officer must be employed; and therefore it is highly reasonable that Bailiffs should have an Authority to carry off the Persons they have arrested, and if in doing of it Death ensues, the Party must thank himself. That being the Question, I would recommend to your Consideration these Circumstances; it appears in the beginning, that the Bailiffs treated Mr. Lutterell with all Civility, gave gave him leave to go to his Lodging; one of them sends his Companion away, and gives him leave to go up Stairs; but altho' they did do that, that will not justify them for being guilty of any Barbarity, without any just occasion offer'd; therefore you are to consider what happen'd afterwards: It appears Mr. Lutterell brought down the Pistols, he did do this to prevent his being carried off; that is, to prevent the Bailiffs from carrying him from his Lodgings, which was their Duty to do in case the Money was not paid, or Bail given in; and if so, this is good introductory Evidence to that, which they offer to prove, namely, that he endeavour'd to rescue himself: He says, he did not discharge either of the Pistols, or draw his Sword upon them; that he did not intend to do any Mischief, but he threaten'd them; then see how this is when taken together: Here is Mr. Lutterell under an Arrest, fetches down his Pistols with an Intent to prevent his being carried off; I doubt his threatening must have reference, that he threaten'd to discharge his Pistols, or draw his Sword upon them; then when his Pistols are brought down with that intent, when he threatens what Use he would make of his Pistols or Sword, what is done afterwards? Mr. Lutterell gives one of the Bailiffs a Blow with his Cane; it is proved undeniably that there was a Blow given, that is proved by the Boy, that the Blow was given by Mr. Lutterell; that appears by what he own'd himself. Then consider, here are Pistols brought down with a Design to make Opposition; that he threatened them, and not only so, but gave one of them a Blow with his Cane; what is the Consequence; Tranter runs him against the Wall, and Reason stabs him: If this were all that was in the case, when Pistols are brought down, and Threatenings used, and a Blow given, the Officers are not to stand still till they are murdered, nor could they tell what Mr. Lutterell's Intention was: As he had made an Appearance of Resistance, and had made an Assault, you are to consider whether this was not a necessary Defence of the Officers to secure their Prisoner. It is of no weight what Mr. Lutterell said, that he intended to do them no harm; if he made an appearance of Resistance, and actually assaulted them, the Question is, whether the Bailiffs, in this case, are not justified in what they have done; you will consider their Circumstances. The Maid tells you, when the Pistols were brought down, at her Persuasion her Master laid them on the Table; so one would think that was an Indication that no ill use was intended to be made of them: It doth not appear whether one or both were in the reach of Mr. Lutterell. Then it appears, that notwithstanding the running him against the Wall, he had in some measure rescued himself from that Force, and there was a struggling, and throwing down, which shews this Man was not so in the power of the Bailiffs, so as they could be secure of preserving their Prisoner, or their own Lives. It must be left to your Consideration, whether there was any Design of Mr. Lutterell to rescue himself; but if you think they had a just Provocation, and they had Reason to be apprehensive of losing their Prisoner, the Law does allow them to do what is necessary for their own Security, and the Security of their Prisoner. This is what I recommend to your Consideration, whether or no it appears to you that this was done out of Heat, and out of a Passion by the Bailiffs, when there was no just Cause for them to apprehend the Prisoner's being rescued; if you believe that, then the Prisoners will be guilty of Felony: But if you believe there was just occasion for the Prisoners to be apprehensive they were in danger of their Lives, and of losing their Prisoner, then whatever is done in their own Defence to secure their Prisoner, and their own Lives, it will not be Felony. I must confess it looks barbarous to think, that when a Man was in his Blood on the Ground, they should follow their Blows, giving him more Wounds; this is carrying the thing a great way, and it looks like some Barbarity. But if Mr. Lutterell gave the first occasion, whatever happened after, if done for the Security of their own Lives, and of their Prisoner, won't make them guilty of Felony; but suppose you should be of Opinion that the Bailiffs have done more than they should, then the next thing to consider is, in what degree they are guilty: It appears a Blow was given, and that by the Boy before he came up Stairs; it appears by Mr. Lutterell that he gave the Blow; Gentlemen, I don't know, Men of Honour are not to justify themselves by saying, saucy Language is given them, and therefore I am to be my own Avenger; Mr. Lutterell gave one of them a Blow over the Head, afterwards the rest fell out as you have heard.

The Question is, whether it be Murder; it must be done maliciously, and without Provocation, or else it is not Murder: Blows have always been allow'd to be Provocations, and here this is accompanied with fetching down the Pistols, threatening the Bailiffs what he would do, and afterwards giving one of them a Blow; and if so, the Defendants will not be guilty of Murder, but only of Manslaughter: First, you are to assert a just and true Authority of the Bailiffs; on the other side you must not encourage the Bailiffs on a few angry Words immediately to fall into a Passion, and take away the Life of a Man. Here it appears, that a Blow was given under untoward Circumstances, after the Bailiffs had been threaten'd with a Design to prevent his being carried off by them; and if it be so, the most you make of it will be Manslaughter.

They did behave themselves civilly at first, shew'd him their Warrant, which he threw down and bid them wipe their back-side with it; that is a Matter which if this Gentleman had not suffered in the manner he hath done; must have been resent'd in its place; then two or three times they are called Rogues and Rascals, and that might provoke the Bailiffs: I think this unhappy Business was occasioned by too great a Lenity of the Bailiffs in carrying back their Prisoner to his own Lodging; that was not well done of them. However I must leave it to your Consideration, whether or no they are guilty of Felony; and if they be guilty of Felony, then in what degree, whether of Murder or Manslaughter. I forgot one thing, the Surgeon did swear that one of the Bailiffs had a Wound in his Hand by a Bullet, each of them had a Wound, tho' it doth not appear how; all this is likewise to be consider'd: you will consider the whole, and give your Verdict accordingly.

Reason, as hath been proved, said, he hoped he would give him Civility Money; he said he would give nothing to such Rogues as they were, for they had given him no Notice, but had arrested him in the Street; that is the great Ground of Complaint, and at that the Offence is taken; they did not give him due Notice, therefore it was not civilly done, which if they had done, and it had come before us, we should have punished with great Severity.

Upon this the Jury withdrew, and after staying out about an Hour, brought them both in Guilty of Manslaughter: Upon which they prayed the Benefit of the Clergy, and were immediately burnt in the Hand.

CXCII. The Trial of John Woodburne and Arundel Coke, Esq; at Suffolk Assizes for Felony, in wilfully slitting the Nose of Edward Crispe, Gent. March 13, 1721. 8 GEO. I.

N Tuesday the 13th of March 1721, at the Assizes held at Bury St. Edmonds in the County of Suffolk, John Woodburne and Arundel Coke were arraigned upon an Indictment found by the Grand-Jury: And the Court proceeded thus.

Clerk of the Arraignments, John Woodburne, hold up thy Hand; Arundel Coke aliàs Cooke, hold up thy Hand; which they severally did.

You stand indicted by the Names of John Woodburne, late of the Borough of Bury St. Edmonds in the County of Suffolk, Labourer; and Arundel Coke aliàs Cooke, of the Borough aforesaid, Esq; for that you, after the twenty fourth Day of June, in the Year of our Lord one thousand six hundred and seventy one, viz. the first Day of January in the Eighth Year of our Sovereign Lord George, of Great Britain, &c. intending one Edward Crispe, Gent. then and yet being a Subject of our said Sovereign Lord the King, to maim and disfigure at the Borough aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, by Force and Arms, &c. in and upon the said Edward Crispe, in the Peace of God, and of our said Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being, on purpose, and or Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, did unlawfully and feloniously make an Assault. And that you the said John Woodburne with a certain Bill value a Penny, which you the said John then had and held in your right Hand, the Nose of the said Edward Crispe, on Purpose, and of your Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, did then and there unlawfully and feloniously slit, with an Intent by so doing, the said Edward Crispe to maim and disfigure. And that you the said Arundel Coke, at the time of the Felony aforesaid, by the said John Woodburne in manner aforesaid; unlawfully and feloniously done and committed; to wit, the said first Day of January, in the eighth Year aforesaid, at the Borough aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, on Purpose, and of your Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, unlawfully and feloniously was present, aiding and abetting the said John Woodburne the Felony aforesaid, in manner aforesaid, feloniously to commit and do. And so the Jury aforesaid, upon their Oaths say, that you the said John Woodburne and Arundel Coke, the said first Day of January, in the eighth Year aforesaid, at the Borough aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, by Force and Arms, &c. on Purpose, and of your Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, the Felony aforesaid, in manner aforesaid, did, and each of you did, commit, and do against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignities, and also against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. [Vid. A true Copy of the Indictment itself in Latin, at the end of this Volume.]

Clerk of the Arraigns. How say'st thou, John Woodburne; art thou guilty of the Felony whereof thou stand'st Indicted, or not Guilty?

Prisoner. Not Guilty.

Cl. Arr. Culprit. How wilt thou be tried?

Prisoner. By God and my Country.

Cl. Arr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

How say'st thou Arundel Coke aliàs Cooke, art thou guilty of the Felony whereof thou stand'st Indicted; or not Guilty?

Prisoner. Not Guilty.

Cl. Arr. Culprit. How wilt thou be try'd;

Prisoner. By God and my Country.

Cl. Arr. God send thee a good Deliverance:

You John Woodburne, and Arundel Coke aliàs Cooke the Prisoners at the Bar, hearken to what is said to you. Those good Men that are now called and do here appear, are those that are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon your several Lives or Deaths; if therefore you or either of you will challenge them or any of them, you must challenge them as they come to the Book to be sworn, before they are sworn, and you shall be heard.

Cl. Arr. Cryer, give the Book to Thomas Buckingham, George Cross,
Nicholas Alger, Samuel Bridge,
Ambrose Gallant, Jonathan Clements,
George Goddard, Thomas Taylor,
Robert Gall, Simon Reeve,
William Scott, William May.

Cl. Arr. Count these.

Cryer. Are you all sworn Gentlemen?

Jury Yes.

Cl. Arr. Make a Proclamation.

Cryer. O Yes, If any of you can inform my Lord the King's Justice, the King's Attorney or Solicitor General, of any Treason, Murder, Felony, or other Misdemeanour committed by the Prisoners at the Bar, or either of them, come forth, and you shall be heard, for the Prisoners at the Bar now stand upon their Deliverance: And all Persons bound by Recognizance to prosecute them, or either of them, come forth and prosecute, or you'll forfeit your Recognizances.

Cl. Arr.

Cl. Arr. John Woodburne, and Arundel Coke aliàs Cooke, hold up your Hands. Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoners, and hearken to their Charge: They stand indicted by the Names of John Woodburne, late of the Borough of Bury St. Edmonds, in the County of Suffolk; Labourer, and Arundel Coke aliàs Cooke, of the Borough aforesaid, Esq; for that they (as in the Indictment before-mentioned) upon which Indictment they have been arraigned; and pleaded severally Not Guilty: Your Charge is to enquire whether they, or either of them, are Guilty of the Felony whereof they stand indicted, or Not Guilty.

Mr. Lee. May it please your Lordship; and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Council for the King against the Prisoners at the Bar, who are indicted for Felony on the 22^o and 23^o Car. II. entitled, An Act to prevent malicious Maiming and Wounding. And the Indictment sets forth, that the Prisoners, the first Day of January, in the eighth Year of his present Majesty, at Bury St. Edmonds in this County, did on Purpose, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, make an Assault unlawfully and feloniously upon Edward Crispe, Gent. and that the Prisoner John Woodburne with a Bill which he then had in his Right Hand, did on Purpose, of Malice fore-thought; and by lying in wait, slit the Nose of the said Edward Crispe, with an Intent in so doing to disfigure the said Edward Crispe; and that the Prisoner Arundel Coke at the Time of committing the said Felony, on Purpose, and of his Malice fore-thought; and by lying in wait, was unlawfully and feloniously present, aiding and abetting the said John Woodburne to commit the said Felony: All which is laid to be done contrary to the Form of the Statute. If we who are Counsel for the King prove this Matter, you will find them Guilty.

Serj. Selby. May it please your Lordship; and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am Counsel, pro hac Vice, for the King against the Prisoners at the Bar, who stand indicted upon the Statute of the 22^o of King Charles II. the one for maliciously maiming and disfiguring of Edward Crispe, the other for abetting that Fact, which by that Act is made one and the same Offence; I said, Gentlemen, I was Counsel for the King, for that his Majesty, as the Father of his People, and for their Safety, out of his natural Goodness, hath been graciously pleased particularly to regard this Prosecution for so horrid and bloody an Assassination. And though, Gentlemen, 'tis difficult to stand in this Place without the greatest Tenderness to our Fellow-Creatures, yet these, who have divested themselves of all Humanity, now cease to be such; 'tis even Cruelty to the King's People not to stand up against them so far as is consistent with Law and Justice. Their Prosecution is become the common Concern of Mankind; for so long as these Prisoners have a Being here, the Life of every Man is precarious, and but at the Will of so infernal a Contriver as the one, and so hellish an Executioner as the other. We shall first, Gentlemen, prove the Fact committed, and that by Mr. Crispe himself, who by a particular Providence hath survived this horrid Attempt, and is here to give Evidence of it, and that he was invited with his Wife by Mr. Coke (who married Mr. Crispe's Sister, and who was to have Mr. Crispe's Estate by his Decease) to sup at his House; that Mr. Coke proposed to him to go after Supper to make a Visit to Mrs. Monke (whose Name we mention without any the least Imputation) to which Mr. Crispe consented; that Mrs. Monke's House opens into the Church-yard; which is but cross the Way from Mr. Coke's House; that Mr. Coke took Mr. Crispe along with him about ten or eleven at Night, it being dark; into the Church-yard, and walked him about near Mrs. Monke's Door without going in; and then making some Noise or Whistling, a Person came up to him and knocked him down; after which he was not sensible; that being left for dead; after some Time he got up, and returned; he did not know how, to Mr. Coke's House; where the Company received him with great Consternation, as did Mr. Coke himself, who soon returned after walking out with Mr. Crispe; out of Breath, and called for a Glass of Wine; and being asked what was become of Mr. Crispe; said he was stumbling home in the dark. This we shall prove by Mr. Brown, another Relation. We shall prove by Mr. Sturgeon, who was called as his Surgeon, the Condition of his Wounds; and by Carter, a Blacksmith, that Mr. Coke about the Friday before the Fact was committed; sent for him; and asked (after a previous Discourse of Carter's Poverty, and how he might live well in the World) if he would cut off ten Men's Heads without Remorse; which when Carter said he could not, If he would cut off one Man's Head, and lay it before Coke; which Carter refusing, Mr. Coke bid him consider on't, and come again; then gave him a Glass of Brandy; and dismissed him, bidding him send Woodburne to him. We shall prove by one Moone, a Taylor; that Mr. Coke about three Years since solicited him to the like Effect. We shall prove by Willet the Constable, that after Woodburne was taken up; he confessed the Fact; said he did it with a Hedging-Bill, and gave him Directions where to find it, and he found it accordingly; which Woodburne, when shewed him, acknowledged to be the same; and which we have here to produce. We shall prove by Mr. Wetherell the Goaler, that Mr. Coke, since he was in his Custody, confessed the whole Fact, and that Woodburne was placed in a Porch of an empty House near Mr. Coke's, to come out on a Whistle to do the Fact; and that he delivered Mr. Crispe to Woodburne, and was present when the Fact was committed. And after this Evidence, there can be no doubt, Gentlemen, but you will find the Prisoners at the Bar guilty of this Indictment.

Serj. Brantbw. My Lord, the Defendants are indicted of Felony, upon an Act of Parliament made 22^o & 23^o Car. II. by which Act; if any Person or Persons, on Purpose; and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, shall unlawfully cut out or disable the Tongue; put out the Eye, slit the Nose, &c. with an Intention in so doing to maim or disfigure; the Person or Persons so offending; their Counsellors, Aiders, and Abettors, knowing thereof, are Felons without Benefit of Clergy. The Indictment charges the Defendants with feloniously making an Assault on Mr. Crispe; that Woodburne slit his Nose with a Bill or Hook; that Coke was aiding and assisting therein. We shall be able by undoubted Evidence to prove and make clear the Charge of the Indictment; and every Particular thereof; as has been opened to you; and that the manner of doing it was attended with such Circumstances of Inhumanity, Baseness, and Villany, as no Instance can parallel. Mr. Crispe is Brother-in-Law to Mr. Coke, who on the first Day of January last, under the Colour of Friendship and Affection, invites Mr. Crispe and Family to Supper at Coke's House. Before this Invitation he had agreed with Woodburne for Hire, to lie in wait on Purpose to effect the designed Mischief. When Woodburne was lying in wait, Coke came several times to him to encourage him in his vile Purpose. After Supper, Mr. Coke, unmindful of all the Obligations of brotherly Love, of Hospitality, and of the Protection due to Mr. Crispe, by false and vile Arts and Persuasions entices him into the Church-yard, the Place designed and agreed upon for the Execution of their wicked Purposes. When he had got Mr. Crispe into this Place, by Sign he gave notice of it to Woodburne, who had follow'd at some distance; and then delivered him into the Possession of Woodburne, and was present at the striking several Blows with the Hook. By the Nature of the Instrument every Blow must maim and disfigure; and the Blows being given by the Order and Direction of Mr. Coke by Woodburne, Mr. Crispe's Nose was slit on purpose to maim and disfigure by one lying in wait: Which are all the Circumstances required by the Act of Parliament to make them guilty of the Felony with which they are charged. Which several Facts we shall call our Witnessess to make out, and doubt not but the Jury will find them guilty.

Serj. Selby. We desire in the first Place, Mr. Edward Crispe himself may be sworn, (which was done accordingly.) Mr. Crispe, give an Account to my Lord and the Jury of the whole Matter.

Crispe. On New-Year's-Day last I was invited to sup at Mr. Coke's, and being there, he propos'd to me to go to Mrs. Fanny Monke's.

Sir Peter King. L. C. Just. Was this before or after Supper?

Crispe. This was before Supper: We supped about seven, and after Supper about ten o' Clock he called me out of his Parlour, I follow'd him; we went into the Church-yard: It was then very dark, the Moon did not shine. He took three or four Turns before the House where Mrs. Monke dwelt, then he stood still and made a Noise.

L. C. Just. What kind of Noise did he make?

Crispe. It was like a Hollowing.

L. C. Just. Were you under any Fear or Apprehension from that Noise?

Crispe. Yes, my Lord, I was afraid, and made up towards the Wall; but in a Quarter of a Minute somebody came behind me, and knocked me down.

L. C. Just. Did you then know who that Man was?

Crispe. I did not.

L. C. Just. Can you tell what was done to you afterwards?

Crispe. My Lord, I cannot, for on that Blow I lost my Senses for some time.

L. C. Just. How long was it before your Senses returned?

Crispe. My Lord, I cannot tell, but in some time I got up, and returned to Mr. Coke's.

Serj. Selby. In what Condition did you find yourself?

Crispe. I was ready to die and faint, and I was found very much wounded.

Serj. Brantbw. Did any Surgeon come to you at Mr. Coke's?

Crispe. Yes, Sir, Mr. Sturgeon.

L. C. Just. After the Person came up who knocked you down, did you hear Mr. Coke say any thing?

Crispe. No, my Lord.

L. C. Just. Can you tell whether he staid any time, or what became of him?

Crispe. No, I cannot.

L. C. Just. Was he there when the first Blow was given?

Crispe. Yes, he was.

L. C. Just. Will the Prisoners ask Mr. Crispe any Questions?

Coke. Mr. Crispe, was I present when you were knocked down?

Crispe. Yes, Sir.

Coke. Do you remember that you saw me?

Crispe. Yes.

Coke. How near was I to you?

Crispe. You were close by me when I was knocked down.

Serj. Selby. Call Mr. Brown and swear him, (which was accordingly done.) I think you are a Relation of Mr. Coke's?

Brown. Yes, Sir, I married his own Sister, and he married Mr. Crispe's Sister.

Serj. Selby. Was you at Mr. Coke's House last New-Year's-Day at Night?

Brown. A Day or two before last New-Year's-Day, I and my Wife and Daughter were invited to sup with him, and accordingly we went. I came about six o'Clock, and found Mr. Coke and Mr. Crispe drinking a Glass of Wine in the Parlour before Supper.

Serj. Selby. Was there any other Company with them?

Brown. No, the Women were above Stairs. I sat down with them, and we three staid in the Parlour till Supper-time. When Supper was ready, we went up Stairs. Then after Supper, between eight and nine, we three came down into the Parlour again. Some time after, Coke went out of the Room, and then came back again and gave a Call, or beckoned to Mr. Crispe, who follow'd him out of the Room.

Serj. Selby. At what Time of Night was this?

Brown. After nine o' Clock at Night.

Serj. Brantbw. How long was it before Mr. Coke returned?

Brown. He was gone about ten Minutes and then returned.

Serj. Brantbw. Was he in any Disorder when he returned?

Brown. He seem'd to be out of Breath, as if he had been walking faster than ordinary.

Serj. Brantbw. How far distant is the Church-yard, where this Gentlewoman dwelt, from Mr. Coke's House?

Brown. The Church-yard is about twice the Length of this Shire-House from Mr. Coke's House.

Serj. Brantbw. What did Coke do when he came in?

Brown. Immediately he drank a Glass of Wine to me, and after he had sat some time, he went out of the Room. I heard a Noise up Stairs, and being told my Daughter was ill, I went up, and in a little time came down again into the Parlour, where I found Mr. Coke.

Serj. Brantbw. Did you ask him what was become of Mr. Crispe?

Brown. I did then ask him what was become of Mr. Crispe, and he told me that he believed he was gone home in the dark. In about two or three Minutes after, Mr. Crispe came in. He was very much wounded and bloody. I was so surprized that I could not take particular notice of him.

Mr. Raby. How long was it from Crispe's going out to his coming in again?

Brown. It was near half an Hour.

L. C. Just. So then Coke returned in about ten Minutes, and Crispe in near half an Hour.

Brown. Yes, my Lord.

Serj. Selby. Did Mr. Coke see Mr. Crispe when he came back to his House?

Brown. Yes.

Serj. Selby. What did he say?

Brown. He seemed to be in a great Consternation.

Mr. Raby. Do you know of any Estate that would have come to Mr. Coke after Mr. Crispe's Death?

Brown. I cannot positively say it of my own Knowledge.

Mr. Raby. We will ask Mr. Crispe that Question. Pray Mr. Crispe, would any Estate have come by your Death to Mr. Coke?

Crispe. In case I had died, one hundred Pounds per Annum would have come to his Wife, as one of my Sisters.

L. C. Just. Have you then no Children, nor Brothers?

Crispe. No, my Lord; my next of Kin are three Sisters, one of which is Mr. Coke's Wife, she would have been one of my Heirs.

Serj. Selby. Call Mr. Sturgeon; (who appeared, and was sworn.) What do you know concerning this wounding of Mr. Crispe?

Sturg. I am a Surgeon by Profession; and the first Day of January last at Night, about eleven o' Clock, I was sent for to Mr. Crispe at Mr. Coke's House: When I came, I found him very much wounded and cut, and in a very weak Condition, and that he had lost a great deal of Blood. I examined his Wounds: One Wound began at his Right Ear, divided the fleshy Part of his Cheek, and ended on his upper Lip just under his Right Nostril; the Flesh was all divided, and the Jaw left naked. Another Wound divided the Right Side of the Nostril, and made an oblique Cross over the Wound, and ended near the Right under Jaw.

Serj. Selby. Was his Nose slit?

Sturg. Yes, Sir, the Nose was cut from without into the Nostril; the Edge of the Nose was not cut through, but there was a Cut or Slit in the Nose that went through: I sowed it up: It was indeed but with one Stitch; it is yet visible, and the Nose was cut through.

Serj. Selby. Were there any other Wounds?

Sturg. There was another deep Wound under his Chin, that reached from one Jaw to the other. There was another Wound, which began at his Chin, crossed the Left under Jaw, and tended towards his Ear. There was also a small Wound on his Left Cheek, another on his upper Lip, and another on his Left Temple.

Serj. Selby. How many Wounds had he in all?

Sturg. Seven.

Serj. Selby. Do you think there were seven distinct Wounds; that had seven distinct Blows?

Sturg. I take it, that every one of the seven Wounds had a distinct Blow.

Serj. Selby. With what Instrument did you apprehend those Blows were given?

Sturg. It was cut so clean, that I thought it was done either by a Knife or Razor.

L. C. Just. Let the Jury see Mr. Crispe's Wounds.

[Then his Face and Wounds were shewn to the Jury for their Observation.]

Serj. Brantbw. Swear Charles Willet; (which was done accordingly.) I think you are a Constable in Bury St. Edmonds?

Willet. I am.

Serj. Brantbw. Had you any Occasion to speak to Woodburne concerning this Matter; and what did he say?

Willet. I had a Warrant from Alderman Wright and Mr. Serjeant Reynolds to apprehend Coke upon Woodburne's Examination.

Serj. Brantbw. The Question asked you is, What you know of Woodburne's Confession, and what he hath said to you about this Matter?

Willet. After Woodburne was committed, I was with him, and asked him, Whether he was concerned in the wounding of Mr. Crispe? He told me, Yes, he was. I asked him how long Coke staid with him: He said that he had struck Crispe three or four Blows before Coke left him.

Serj. Brantbw. What else did you ask him, or did he say to you?

Willet. He told me, that he was walking up and down in the Church-yard when Coke whistled to him, and that on that Signal he went up and assaulted Mr. Crispe.

Serj. Brantbw. Did he give you any Account how long and where he waited before the Fact was done?

Willet. He told me, that he was desired by Mr. Coke to be up and down in the Church-yard about nine o' Clock that Night; and that being a cold Night, Coke gave him a Bottle of Brandy, and told him he could not tell what time Crispe would come home; but desired him to be ready and to stay let it be never so long.

Serj. Brantbw. Did he tell you with what Instrument he did it?

Willet. He told me, he did it with an Hook or Bill, that was new ground for the Purpose, and that it was in his House at the Right Hand of his Door. I went according to his Direction, and found it, and brought it to him; and he said, that was the Hook.——The Hook I have brought with me, and this is the Hook that I have now in my Hand.

Mr. Raby. Call William Wetherel; (who was sworn.) Give my Lord and the Jury an Account what you know of this Matter.

Weth. I am the Goaler; and the Day after Mr. Coke was committed to me, about five Minutes after One, he sent for me up into his Chamber, where his Wife was crying and in great Disorder, as he seemed to be likewise. She was desiring her Husband to discover. When he came to himself, he told me, that he and Woodburne had had a Design to murder Mr. Crispe, and had attempted it several Times; and desired me to go and secure Woodburne. I went to the Alderman, and told him of it, and he gave me the like Orders. Coming from the Alderman I met Mr. Coke's Man, who asked me, whether I had found found him ; on which I asked him, who and what he meant, thinking him to be ignorant of his Master's Confession : But he told me, that his Master had discovered it to him, and had sent him to take up Woodburne. Whilst we were talking, we saw Woodburne coming up, and we desired one John Carter, a Smith, who was shoeing a Horse, to assist us ; which he did, and we secured Woodburne.

L. C. Just. Did Mr. Coke confess any thing to you concerning this Fact, and the manner of doing it ?

Weth. Yes, my Lord, he did. He told me several Times, that he had a Design to murder Crispe, and that he employed Woodburne, and deliver'd Crispe into his Hands.

L. C. Just. Did he tell you that ?

Weth. He did tell me so : He told me also, that it was done with an Hook ; and that he bid Woodburne to cut his Weasand or Wind-pipe ; and that if Woodburne had not been a cow-hearted Dog, he would have so done, and secured Crispe from telling Tales.

Mr. Raby. Did Coke tell you what Means he used to do this to Mr. Crispe ?

Weth. He said, that he called him out of his House, went into the Church-yard with him, and there he delivered him into Woodburne's Hands.

Mr. Raby. Did he say what Signal was given ?

Weth. Not that I remember ; but he said, that Woodburne was placed there by his Appointment.

Mr. Raby. For what Design ?

Weth. With an Intent to murder him. When Woodburne struck him, Coke said, he went away immediately.

Mr. Raby. What have you heard Woodburne say concerning this Fact ?

Weth. I have heard Woodburne say, that he and Coke had lain in wait several Times, and at several Places to murder Mr. Crispe.

Mr. Raby. Did Woodburne give you any Account what he did at this Time to Mr. Crispe ?

Weth. Yes he did ; he said that he struck him a Blow with his Hook, and that not quite striking him down, he gave him a second Blow which did ; and that Crispe, as he was falling, (who was never used to swear) cried out, God damn him ; and that then it went to his very Heart to think that he should kill a Man with an Oath in his Mouth.

Mr. Raby. Did he say he gave him several Blows ?

Weth. He said he gave him several Blows, and that he thought he was dead.

Mr. Lee. Call Robert Moon ; (who appeared, and was sworn.) What did you know of this Matter ?

Moon. When I heard what happened to Crispe, I said, I knew the Person who did it, or the Person who employed him to do it ; and the Reason was, because three Years, or three Years and a half ago, Mr. Coke sent for me, and said to me, at first I thought it to be in a jesting Way, that he wish'd Mr. Crispe out of the World, he was a good for nothing Fellow ; his Wife had a Trick of playing away his Estate, and he wish'd somebody would knock him on the Head. Sir, said I to him, what Advantage would that be to you ? He shook his Head, and said, a very good Estate. Said I, I thought Crispe had but a small Estate.

Yes, said he, a very good one. Then I began to think there was something in it. After some little time, said he, I do not value ten or twenty Guineas to knock him on the Head. Then I began a little to reflect that he should have such an Opinion of me, that I should be such a Sort of a Person.

Mr. Lee. What then did you say to him ?

Moon. I told him, that I would not kill the greatest Villain in the World for ten such Towns as Bury.

Mr. Lee. What did he say afterwards ?

Moon. I do not remember, I have forgot if there was any thing else.

Mr. Lee. How came you to remember this ?

Moon. When I heard of this Fact committed on Mr. Crispe, then it came fresh into my Memory.

Serj. Selby. Call John Carter ; (who appeared, and was sworn.) What Trade are you of ?

Carter. A Blacksmith.

Serj. Selby. Did Coke at any time send Woodburne for you, and what past thereon ?

Carter. On the Friday before New-Year's-Day last, which was on a Monday, Mr. Coke sent Woodburne to me, who told me his Master Coke wanted to speak with me.

Serj. Selby. Did you go ?

Carter. Yes, I went to his House, and he ordered me to come up to him in his Chamber. When I came up, he told me that he wanted a good strong Horse to carry his Weight. I told him I did not know of any one then ; but when I did, I would let him know. Upon that he said, by God, how do you go on, Boy ? I hear you have lost most of your Business, you have got no Iron nor Coals, and you are afraid of a Goal ; I have a Thing now in Agitation that will make a Man of you as long as you live. I said I should be very glad of that. Said he, can you keep a Secret ? Yes, said I, as well as any one to serve myself and my Friend. Said he can you keep one of the biggest Secrets in the World ? I told him, as well as any body. Said he, you are pretty much in Debt, and if you will serve me in this, I can make a Man of you as long as you live : Do you think you could cut five or six Men's Heads off without Scruple of Conscience ? I told him, No ; it was too much for a Man's Conscience to bear. Said he, what, a Scruple of Conscience to do such a Thing as that ? There are those above who have done ten times worse. I suppose, Sir, said I, you mean the South-Sea Gentlemen. Yes, said he, so I do ; they have ruined Families, and beggar'd Gentlemen : To cut Men's Heads off is but a Trifle to them. Said I, Mr. Coke, I believe you speak only in Joke, by way of Merriment. Said he, what do you think I sent for you by way of Joke ? I told him I could not do any such Thing. Then, said he, do you think you can cut off one Man's Head without Scruple of Conscience ? I told him, No. Then, said he, if you can't cut off a Man's Head, and lay it down upon the Table before me, you are not for my Turn : On that he fetched a Bottle of Brandy, and gave me a Glass or two, and then said to me, Carter, I would have you go home, and consider of it for two or three Days, and if you can cut off a Man's Head without Scruple of Conscience, you shall have Plenty of Gold and Silver, and any thing else you ask. I told him, I needed no Consideration, for I could could not do it. Then, said he, send Woodburne to me. And as I went out, I saw Woodburne at the Door, and sent him in to Mr. Coke.

Serj. Selby. Did he say any thing else to you, or any thing about Mr. Crispe?

Carter. I live in a House of Mr. Crispe's, and Mr. Coke had been formerly his Steward, and Woodburne acted under him. And Mr. Coke said, that he heard my House was out of Repair, that it would be his after Mr. Crispe, and whether I should not like it better for him to keep it in Repair, as he had done before.

Serj. Selby. I think, my Lord, we have done with our Evidence, and have sufficiently proved Mr. Coke and Woodburne to be guilty not only within the Intention, but the Letter of the Statute of the 22d of Car. II. upon which they stand indicted. We have proved the Malice premeditated and fore-thought, the Intention to maim and disfigure, by slitting the Nose (for Mens Intentions must be construed by their Actions) and the maiming and disfiguring accordingly; and that Mr. Coke was privy to, and the Aider and Abetter of the Offence: And therefore, Gentlemen of the Jury, we can't doubt but that you will find them both guilty; and that your Verdict and their Conviction will be with the Suffrage of all Mankind.

Mr. Raby. My Lord, having gone through our Evidence, you will now permit me to make some few Observations upon what has been offer'd, and from which we humbly apprehend it will most clearly appear, that we have fully prov'd and made out every thing necessary to maintain this Indictment.

My Lord, it must be agreed, that this is an Offence created by a particular Act of Parliament, usually call'd Sir John Coventry's Act, made on the Occasion of the like barbarous Usage he met with, to punish that Offence, and to prevent the like for the future: And I also agree, that the Prisoners must appear to be guilty of those very Facts, which by that Act are made Felony, or otherwise they cannot be punished by that Law. But we humbly apprehend, that when that Law, and the Evidence which has been given against the Prisoners are considered, they will appear to be guilty within the express Words of that Law; for which End I beg leave to mention that Act, which is the 22 and 23 Car. II. cap. 1. The Words are these. "That if any Person or Persons, on Purpose, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, shall unlawfully cut or disable the Tongue, put out an Eye, slit the Nose, &c. with an Intention in so doing to maim or disfigure, in any the Manners before-mentioned; the Person or Persons so offending, their Counsellors, Aiders, and Abettors (knowing of and privy to the Offence aforesaid) shall be Felons, &c."

From this Clause it appears the Offence must be done;

1. Of Malice fore-thought.
2. By lying in wait.
3. By slitting the Nose, &c.
4. With an Intention to maim or disfigure.

And we humbly submit it, that from the Evidence which has been given against the Prisoners, it most plainly appears, that the Defendants are guilty of this Offence in every Circumstance described by this Act of Parliament.

1. For certainly there cannot be the least Question, but that this was done of Malice fore-thought, when it appears from the Evidence to have been under Consideration and premeditated for three Years and an half: And Mr. Coke had tried several Persons, before he could find any so hardy as to execute his base Purpose, or comply with so inhuman an Attempt: And therefore we apprehend there cannot be any Colour to say, this was not of Malice fore-thought.

2. And that this Offence was also done with lying in wait is as clear: For does it not fully appear upon the Evidence of Mr. Crispe, that when he came out of Mr. Coke's House, Mr. Coke gave a Whistle or Signal? In vain had Mr. Coke given that Signal, if no Person had been in waiting to have heard it: To what end had that Signal been given, if Mr. Coke had not known there was some Person to have heard it? It appears plainly Woodburne came upon the Signal given; and what ensued you have heard, I need not repeat.

3. The third Thing made material by this Act, is, That the Nose should be slit; and that the Nose was slit appears from the Surgeon's Evidence, who has given a very particular Account of the seven Wounds Mr. Crispe received in his Face and Head: And he says, the Nose (the Nostril) was cut through.

4. Whether the other Circumstance, that this was done with an Intent to maim and disfigure, does sufficiently appear, or not, is the only Question that remains: And we submit it to your Consideration, as that which is very clear from this Evidence.

Mens Acts are the best Interpreters of their Intentions: If a Man kills another without Provocation; tho' no express Malice or malicious Intent appears, yet the very Act of the Party has always been taken to be a sufficient Proof of his Intent and Malice fore-thought. The Intent is latent in the Mind, and can seldom be known otherwise than by the Act which is done: And as there the malicious Intent is collected from the Act of the Party, so here 'tis as reasonable to collect his Intent to disfigure from the Act which is done, the maiming and disfiguring Mr. Crispe; and the very Manner of doing it speaks it.

Whoever looks upon this Gentleman (Mr. Crispe) sees too plainly how much he is disfigur'd: And could a Man cut another seven Times on the Head and Face with this Iron Bill, with this Weapon, without disfiguring him? Is it to be imagined? And when he has done the very Act, when he has disfigured him, shall he say, he had no such Intent? The Act done, and the Manner of doing it, speak it too plainly. 'Tis confess'd the Intent was to murder; this is what both the Prisoners admit to be the End design'd; but did they not also intend the Means? It would be in vain to intend the End, and reject the Means to effect it: The Means chosen to effect it have appear'd to be to cut him to death, by striking him with a Bill on the Head and Face: Is it possible to expect to cut him to Death on the Face with the Weapon produced, and not to disfigure him? This is the Act Woodburne has done; and Coke was present when Woodburne struck, even when he did this Fact, and Coke was a Counsellor, Aider and Abettor; he was present, and, in the Words of the Act of Parliament, knowing of the Offence. And therefore upon this Evidence we submit it, whether we have not given Satisfaction faction to the Court and Jury, that the Prisoners are guilty.

This is not a Prosecution of the Party injured, arising from Revenge or Repentment, but is carried on by the Public, by the Crown, for the sake only of Public Justice, that by the Punishment of this Offence, the Subjects may have that Protection they ought to have by a due Execution of the Laws: And all we pray is, that the Jury will give such a Verdict as is agreeable to Justice.

L. C. Just. Woodburne, what have you to say for yourself?

Woodburne. May it please your Honour, my Lord, the first Time that Coke began with me about this Matter was on a Wednesday in last Barley-Harvest. He sent for me to mend his Copper, and after I had done it, he bid me go to the further End of the Mill-Lane, and there he must speak with me, and which came first should stay for the other. I was there before him; when he came he was on Horse-back, and his Horse kick'd about in a furious Manner, that the People took notice of it. When they were gone, he told me, that he had a Thing for me to do, but not to be done presently, and that if I did it I should want for nothing. I ask'd him what it was. He said about Mr. Crispe, to set him aside, that is, to kill him: But he said, it was not to be done presently: So he put his Hand in his Pocket and gave me Eighteen Pence. I told him, I never did such a Thing in my Life; I could not do it. Said he, it is not to be done presently, we have Time to consider. A while after he sent for me again, and ask'd me, whether I had consider'd of it. I told him, I could not do it. Said he, we must set Crispe aside; for Mrs. Crispe hath got a Trick to play; she will make away what there is from me and my Child. I said, I never did any such Thing; I could not do it, and desired him to forbear. I went away and left him in his Chamber. Within a while after he came to my House; said he, John, what is the Reason you can't do this for me? Said I, I cannot do it. Said he, what signifies it, I would do it for you. I said, I could not do it. Then he went away very uneasy, and in a Week or Fortnight sent for me again to his Chamber, and there was at me again. I told him I could do no such Work. Said he, why can't you do this Work? I have been a good Master to you, I made myself look little to bail you when you were in Goal. I turned about and cried. Said he, what makes you cry? Your crying signifies nothing? the Money that I shall give you will do you and your Family a Kindness. Said I, I can do no such thing. Said he, it signifies no more the killing of him, than to kill a Dog, for they do no good with what they have. Yes, said I, Mr. Crispe is a very good Master; I work'd for him and his Father before him: And so I went away. Afterwards my Wife died three Days before Gunpowder-Treason last: She was buried on that Day, and being very poor, I sent my Daughter to desire a little Money of him to have the Bell toll'd for my Wife; but he sent me none. My Wife was buried on a Sunday, then on the Monday he sent his Boy for me; I went down to him, and when I came, I fell a weeping for the Loss of my Wife, and having ten Children. Said he, what makes you cry? You must pull up a good Heart; tho' your Wife be dead, you may have Friends; here is that which will do you a Kindness hereafter. Said I, I am very sorry for the Loss of my Wife. Said he, what signifies that? She was carried well into the Church, and is, no doubt, happy; she is gone before you; we must all go in our Time: I was a Friend to you in her Illness; I sent her a good Doctor at my own Charge: This twenty Pounds that I will give you will be a brave Estate for you.

L. C. Just. What were you to have this twenty Pounds for?

Woodburne. It was to kill Mr. Crispe; he told me that I must set aside Mr. Crispe; he offer'd me twenty Pounds to do it; but I then refus'd it.

On Monday, New-year's-day in the Morning, Coke sent his Boy for me to come to him; and between eight and nine in the Morning I went to him. He was in his green Room. Now, said he, John, we shall have the fairest Opportunity to kill Mr. Crispe. I told him, I was loth to do it; it was very cold, and I had an Ague. Said he, I will give you that which shall warm you. He went to his Closet, and gave me out of the Bottle that he used to carry in his Pocket, half a Pint of Brandy, and told me, that happen how it will I must not come near his House any more that Day, lest afterwards there should be some Suspicion; but said he, whether Ague or not, you must be at Mr. Morrice's Porch, which is in the Church-yard, about eight o'Clock in the Evening. I went there between eight and nine; about nine Coke came out, and gave me a Whistle: On that I went up to him; he told me, Mr. Crispe was very jolly, and he believed it would be late before he came out. I told him, I did not care to stay. Said he, you must stay now; this is the Time that will do it. I staid till ten o'Clock; then he came to me again in Mr. Morrice's Porch, and told me, that he believed Crispe would not go till eleven o'Clock; but the later the better. Then he went from me again, and a little Time after ten Coke and Crispe came out together, and on Coke's Whistling I came up to them; Crispe was then before, and coming to get against the Wall. I came up to Coke; he bid me have a care not to hit him instead of Crispe, being very dark; so he took me by the Sleeve to lead me up to Crispe; and said to Crispe, Brother, stand still; on that I hit him two Strokes with my Hook; tho' I never heard him swear before, yet he now swore, God damn him: On that Coke said, what! doth he swear? Secure him, down with him. He stood by him till I gave him several Blows, and then he went away. Coke desired me to take away his Watch; for, said he, as to his Money, he don't carry above half a Crown or three Shillings in his Pocket; and when I go to London, I will sell the Watch for you.

L. C. Just. What Woodburne saith against Coke, is no Evidence against Coke, and should not have been mentioned by him; but what he saith relating to himself before the Fact, is so twisted with Coke, that without the Whole it is not so intelligible as to himself. However, the Jury are to take notice, that what Woodburne saith, is only Evidence against himself, and not against Mr. Coke.

L. C. Just. After you had given him those several Blows with your Hook, what did you next?

Woodburne. I began immediately to reflect on what I had done, and went away forthwith to my own own House, where I was about to take a Line to hang my self.

L. C. Just. Have you any Witnesses, or any body to speak for you?

Woodburne. My Lord, here are my two Daughters in the Court; I desire your Lordship would be pleased to hear them, Ann Woodburne and Sarah Woodburne; who being called, appeared, and were sworn.

L. C. Just. What say you, Ann Woodburne?

Ann Woodburne. On the Wednesday before New-Year's-Day Coke sent for my Father by his Boy; I told the Boy my Father was in Bed, and sick of an Ague, and could not come. The Boy came again, and said, my Father must by all Means come; but he would not then go, but he went to him on New-Year's-Day in the Morning, and came Home again. About five or six a-Clock in the Evening, my Father went out with a Hook in his Hand; and he said, he should not be at home till eleven or twelve at Night; and if any body came for him, he bid us not take any Notice but that he was at home. We thought he took the Hook to cut some Wood with.

L. C. Just. Have you any thing more to say?

Ann Woodburne. When my Mother died, I went to Mr. Coke's to borrow five Shillings of him, to have the great Bell toll for my Mother, and told him, that my Father would pay him again. He said, What signified the ringing out of the great Bell? her Soul would be never the better for it; but if he will satisfy me in my Request, he shall have five times five Shillings.

L. C. Just. What say you, Sarah Woodburne?

Sarah Woodburne. Coke did frequently send for my Father at all times, both of Day and Night; and he would often come to my Father, and when he came, they would go out, and walk down the Back-side, and talk together. After this Fact was done, Coke sent his Boy for my Father, and the Boy said, they must not go together; for if they did, People would take Notice of them.

L. C. Just. Woodburne, have you any thing more to say?

Woodburne. This Day nine Weeks, which was a Week after the Fact committed, Coke sent for me, and said, John, I wish you would have done the thing I ordered you; but you have been before Alderman Wright and the Recorder, and have told your Story well; but hold you fast, they will examine you again; I shall——

L. C. Just. This is subsequent to the Fact, and is not Evidence against Coke. If you Woodburne have done, then Mr. Coke what have you to say for your self?

Coke. May it please your Lordship, I am much ashamed, and very unable to defend myself; I am ashamed to think I should be concerned in so heinous a Crime against Mr. Crispe's Life; I am even confounded at it; it is indeed a very great Crime, and I know not what to say for myself. As for Woodburne, he hath asserted against me several things that are false.

L. C. Just. I have told the Jury, that what he hath said is no Evidence against you.

Coke. When I first spoke of this Matter to Woodburne, he said, he should value it no more than the cutting off the Head of a Dog. I did, indeed, go out with Mr. Crispe that Night, but I was not near him when Woodburne struck him, but retreated to my own House in a Moment. My Lord, I am very sensible that a Point of Law may arise on the Statute whereon I am indicted.

L. C. Just. Whereon?

Coke. With respect to my Intention.

L. C. Just. Your Intention is Matter of Fact, and must be tried by the Jury, whether your Intent was to maim and disfigure; this doth not seem to me to be a Point of Law; if there be any Point of Law that shall arise, you shall have Counsel to speak to it; but whether you slit Mr. Crispe's Nose with an Intention to disfigure him, is a Matter of Fact.

Coke. My Intent was to kill Mr. Crispe, and not to maim or disfigure him.

L. C. Just. But that is the Question the Jury are to try, whether you did not of Malice slit his Nose, with an Intent to disfigure him. If the Jury do not find that you so did, you must be acquitted on this Indictment. Supposing your Design was to kill, yet your Design might be likewise to maim; and this the Jury must try; this is Matter of Fact for their Consideration.

Coke. This is a very penal Statute, and I am unable to plead my own Cause; I beg your Lordship to assign me Counsel.

L. C. Just. If any Point of Law doth arise upon the Statute, you shall have Counsel; but as yet there is nothing but Matter of Fact; whether the Fact proved doth support the Charge in the Indictment; or in other Words, whether the Evidence be sufficient to make good the Charge; this must be left to the Jury; I will state the Fact to them, and they are on their Oaths to give in their Verdict.

Coke. This is a very penal Statute, and I cannot argue it for myself; I hope your Lordship will assign me Counsel; this is the first Indictment that ever was upon this Statute.

L. C. Just. What do the King's Counsel say to it?

Serj. Selby. After so full an Answer as your Lordship has given, I think it but vain to say any thing; I always thought that no Matter of Law could arise upon this Fact and Indictment; for Woodburne did the Fact of Malice forethought, by lying in wait, and with an Intention to maim; Mr. Coke was aiding, abetting, and privy to the Fact: Therefore, though it was an Intent to kill, it must be to maim also; he could not intend to kill him with such an Instrument, without intending to maim him first; and therefore, if there were two Intentions and but one executed, there is no Pretence to say, that what was executed was not intended. Mr. Coke says, that never was any Indictment before upon this Statute; if not, it must be because no Man before ever thought of being guilty of so horrid an Action.

L. C. Just. If any Point in Law doth arise you shall have Counsel; but the Fact must be agreed and stated, before the Law can come in debate. You say, your Intent was only to murder; but that is not yet agreed or found to be the Fact: It is the Point now in Trial, whether you did it not with an Intention to maim or disfigure; and according as that Intention shall appear to the Jury, so will they either acquit or convict you; therefore if you have any thing more to say, I desire you to go on.

Coke. I submit to your Lordship's Judgment.

L. C. Just. Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment of the Prisoners at the Bar, John Woodburne and Arundel Coke, for Felony, by lying in wait, and purposely and maliciously slitting the Nose of Edward Crispe, with Intention, in so doing, to maim or disfigure the said Edward Crispe. John Woodburne is indicted for the principal Actor, or the Person who did the Fact; and Arundel Coke is indicted for being present, aiding and abetting. This Indictment is founded on a Statute made in the two and twentieth Year of King Charles the Second, intituled, An Act to prevent malicious maiming and wounding; whereby it is enacted, That if any Person or Persons, from and after the twenty fourth Day of June, in the Year of our Lord 1671, on Purpose, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, should unlawfully cut out, or disable the Tongue, put out an Eye, slit the Nose, cut off a Nose or Lip, or disable any Limb or Member of any Subject of his Majesty, with Intention in so doing to maim or disfigure, in any the Manners before-mentioned, such his Majesty's Subject, that then, and in every such Case, the Person or Persons so offending, their Counsellors, Aiders and Abettors (knowing of, and privy to the Offence, as aforesaid) shall be, and are thereby declared to be Felons, and shall suffer as in Cases of Felony, without Benefit of the Clergy. Now the Question on this Indictment is, whether John Woodburne did on Purpose, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, unlawfully slit the Nose of Edward Crispe, with an Intention to maim or disfigure him therein? And, whether Arundel Coke was feloniously present at the Fact, aiding and abetting Woodburne in the Commission and perpetration of it? To make out this Matter several Witnesses have been called; the first Witness was Edward Crispe himself, who informs you, that Arundel Coke married his Sister, and Mr. Brown, Coke's Sister; and that last New-year's-day they were invited to sup at Mr. Coke's; and that before Supper Mr. Coke proposed to go to Mrs. Monke's; and that after Supper, about ten a-clock at Night, Mr. Coke called Mr. Crispe out of the Parlour to go to this Mrs. Monke's; and that when they had walked three or four Turns before the House where Mrs. Monke dwelt, Coke stood still, and made a Noise like a hollowing, which made Mr. Crispe afraid, being dark, so he made toward the Wall; but in a quarter of a Minute's time a Man came and knocked him down: Who that Man was, nor what was then further done to him, he could not then tell, because by the Blow he lost his Senses for some time; but afterwards he got up again, and returned to Mr. Coke's House, from whence he came, but in a sad Condition, much wounded and bloody, where Mr. Sturgeon the Surgeon came to him, from whom you have the Particulars of his Case. He says, that Coke was close by him when he was knocked down; but did not hear Coke say any thing. He also says, that upon his Death one hundred Pounds per Annum would have gone to Coke's Wife, as one of his Sisters and Co-heir.

The next Witness is Mr. Brown, who married Coke's Sister; and he says, that he, his Wife and Daughter were invited to sup at Mr. Coke's the Evening of New-year's-day; that he came about six a-clock, and found Mr. Coke and Mr. Crispe drinking a Glas of Wine in the Parlour before Supper; that he sat down and drank with them till Supper; that after Supper they three came into the Parlour again, and some time after Coke went out of the Room; and then came back again, and called Mr. Crispe out of the Room, who followed him; that Coke returned again in about ten Minutes, and seemed to be out of Breath, as if he had been walking faster than ordinary; that Coke's House is distant from the Church-yard about twice the length of the Shire-house; that Coke, after he came in, drank a Glas of Wine; and that Brown asked Coke what was become of Mr. Crispe; and that Coke said, he believed he was gone home in the Dark; and that in about two or three Minutes after Mr. Crispe came in much wounded and bloody; and that it was about half an Hour between the Time of Mr. Crispe's going out and returning again.

Mr. Sturgeon the Surgeon swears, that being sent for, he came to Mr. Crispe about eleven a-Clock that Night; that he had lost a great deal of Blood, and was very much wounded; and that in the whole he had received seven distinct Wounds, which he apprehends were by so many several Blows. He hath given you a particular Description of the several Wounds; the second Wound is that which is alledged to be within this Statute. He tells you, That this Wound divided the right side of the Nostril; and that though the Edge of the Nose was not cut through, yet it was cut through in another Place; the Nose was slit; there was a Cut from without into the Nostril; indeed the Slit was not very great, for he sewed it up with one Stitch; but he is sure that a Slit there was, and you have seen Mr. Crispe's Nose. Now the slitting of the Nose is one of the particular Facts mentioned in the Statute.

Mr. Willet the Constable swears, That he was with Woodburne after his Commitment, and that he told him, he was concerned in the wounding Mr. Crispe; that he had been there waiting for that Purpose; and that when Coke whistled to him, he went up and made the Assault upon Mr. Crispe with an Hook or Bill, that was new-ground for that purpose, and directed him where to find it at his House, which he accordingly did, and brought it to Woodburne, who said that was the Hook; and the Hook hath been now produced before you, and you have seen it.

The next Witness is Mr. Wetherell the Goaler, who swears, That the Day after Coke was committed to his Custody, Coke sent for him up into his Chamber, and told him, That he and Woodburne had had a Design to murder Mr. Crispe, and had attempted it several times, and desired him to go and secure Woodburne, which he accordingly did. He hath given you an Account how and in what manner he secured him; and he swears moreover, that Coke told him several times that he had a Design to murder Crispe, and that he employed Woodburne, and delivered Crispe into his Hands; that Woodburne did it with an Hook, and that he bad Woodburne to cut his Windpipe; and that if Woodburne had not been a Cow-hearted Dog, he would have so done, and secured Crispe from telling Tales. Wetherell likewise swears, that Coke told him, that he called Crispe out of his House, went into the Church-yard with him, and there delivered him into Woodburne's burne's Hands; and he farther swears, as to Woodburne. That Woodburne own'd that he and Coke had lain in wait several Times, and at several Places, to murder Mr. Crispe; and as to this particular Fact; he gave him this Account, That he struck him a Blow with a Hook, and that not quite striking him down, he gave him a second Blow; and that as Crispe was falling, he cried out, God damn him; and that then it griev'd him to kill a Man with an Oath in his Mouth.

Robert Moon swears, That when he heard what was befallen Mr. Crispe, he said, that he knew the Person that did the Fact, or him who employ'd the Person; and the Reason was, because about three Years and a half before Mr. Coke sent for him, and told him, That he wish'd Mr. Crispe out of the World, and that some body would knock him on the Head; and that when he ask'd him what Advantage that would be to him? He replied, A very good Estate; and afterwards told him, he did not value ten or twenty Guineas to knock him in the Head: This made Moon reflect upon himself, and was concerned that he should have such an Opinion of him, and thereon told him, that he would not kill the greatest Villain in the World for ten such Towns as Bury.

John Carter swears, That on Friday before New-year's-day last, Coke sent Woodburne to him, to tell him that his Master Coke wanted to speak with him; that thereon he went to his House, and was ordered to come up to him in his Chamber, which he did; and there Coke first enquired, whether he could help him to a good strong Horse? And then told him, that he heard he had lost much of his Business; he had no Iron, nor Coal; and that he had a thing in Agitation that would make a Man of him as long as he lived; and thereon ask'd him, whether he could keep a Secret, and of one of the biggest Secrets in the World? And upon his telling him that he could, he ask'd him whether he could cut five or six Mens Heads off without Scruple of Conscience? And when he told him that that was too much for a Man's Conscience to bear, he told him, there were those above meaning the South-Sea Gentlemen, who had done ten times worse, ruin'd Families, and beggar'd Gentlemen; and that to cut Mens Heads off was but a Trifle to them. That hereon Carter told him, he believed he spoke only in Joke, and by way of Merriment; but Coke ask'd him, Whether he thought he sent for him only by way of Joke? And then ask'd him, whether he could cut off one's Man's Head without Scruple of Conscience? And when Carter told him, No: Then Coke told him, if he could not cut off a Man's Head, and lay it down on a Table before him, he was not for his Turn; and then gave him a Glas of Brandy, and bid him consider of it for a Day or two, and if he could cut off a Man's Head without Scruple of Conscience, he should have plenty of Gold and Silver, and any thing else he should ask: Whereto Carter replying, that he needed no Consideration, he could not do it; then he bid him send Woodburne to him, which he did:

In all this discourse between Carter and Coke I do not find that Crispe was the Person named on whom this Outrage should be committed; but Carter who is a Tenant of a House of Mr. Crispe's, says, That Coke told him he heard the House was out of repair; that it would be his after Mr. Crispe; and ask'd him, Whether he would not like it better for Coke to keep it in repair, as he had done before, whilst he was Crispe's Steward?

This is the Substance of the Evidence given against the Prisoners at the Bar, to prove that they maliciously, and by lying in wait, have slit Mr. Crispe's Nose, with an Intent to disfigure him therein.

Woodburne doth not deny the general Fact, that is, the designed lying in wait to assault Mr. Crispe, nor the cutting or knocking him down with his Hook; his Confession is not Evidence against Coke, but it is against himself; and you hear what he hath own'd; that last Barley-Harvest Coke sent for him to mend his Copper, and then ordered him to meet him at another Place, which was accordingly done; where Coke told him, That he had a thing for him to do, but it was not to be done presently; and if he would do it, he should want for nothing. And when he ask'd him what it was? He said, To set Crispe aside, that is, to kill him; and Coke gave him eighteen Pence. That then he told him, he could not do it; that Coke solicited him several times afterwards to murder Crispe; the Particulars whereof I do not enumerate, because they principally relate to Coke, against whom it is not Evidence; but yet they so far relate to Woodburne, as to shew his Knowledge and Deliberation in this Matter; therefore to come to the Day whereon this Fact was done, Woodburne saith, That about eight or nine in the Morning Coke sent for him, and told him, that that Day they should have the fairest Opportunity to kill Mr. Crispe; and it was agreed between them; that Woodburne should be in the Church-yard, at Mr. Morrice's Porch; about eight a-clock in the Evening. He accordingly went with his Hedge-Hook or Bill, which hath been here produced. Coke came out to him twice by himself, and the third time a little after ten a-clock, Coke and Crispe came out together; and then Coke whistled, which was the Signal between them; and thereon Woodburne came up, and owns, that with his Hook he cut and knock'd down Crispe, and that tho' he never heard Crispe swear before, yet that now, as Crispe was falling, he swore God damn him; whereon he gave him those several other Wounds and Blows that Crispe received; and then reflecting on what he had done, immediately went to his own House, where he was about to take a Rope to hang himself.

By this Defence of Woodburne, you see that he doth not deny the assaulting and wounding of Mr. Crispe; but that that he chiefly insists on is, that what he did was by the Solicitation and Procurement of Mr. Coke; which is no Justification or Excuse. However, he hath call'd two Witnesses, Ann and Sarah Woodburne, his two Daughters, to prove that Coke did frequently send for their Father, and often came to him at his own House, and would be in private Conference together, which probably was about this Matter; but if it were, this only confirms what Woodburne insists on, that he was solicited and hired by Coke to do this Fact; which, as I said, will neither justify nor excuse him; for no Man is to obey the unlawful Commands, or hearken to the illegal Advices of any other Person whatsoever.

As for Mr. Coke, that which he principally puts his Defence upon is, that his Intent was to kill and murder Mr. Crispe, but not to maim him, or to slit his Nose, or to disfigure him in so doing; and therefore, tho' in Pursuance and Execution of the Attempt to murder Mr. Crispe, they slit his Nose, or might thereby disfigure him, yet that not being their Intention, and Design, he is to be acquitted on this Indictment, wherein the Intent of the Party is one of the principal Ingredients to make him guilty. This same Defence will serve also for Woodburne, that they intended to murder, but not to maim; and if they did maim, it was with an Intention to kill, and not to disfigure. Now this Indictment is, as I told you, founded on the 22d and 23d Car. II. c. 1. for that on Purpose, of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, the Prisoners did unlawfully and feloniously slit the Nose of Edward Crispe, with Intention in so doing to maim or disfigure him. Woodburne is charged as the Actor or principal Agent, Coke as being present, aiding, and abetting; which, in Point of Law, is the same, as to the Guilt and Conscience, both being in Law Principals.

That this Attempt on Mr. Crispe was designed, malicious, and by lying in wait, the Evidence is very strong; there hath been also very strong Evidence given, that the Nose of Mr. Crispe was slit by Woodburne, and that Coke was present on the same Design with Woodburne.

But the Thing chiefly insisted on is, that the slitting of Mr. Crispe's Nose was not with an Intention in so doing to maim or disfigure him; and if it were not with that Intent, then the Prisoners will not be guilty upon this Indictment.

Now Gentlemen, what the Intent of these Persons was in slitting Mr. Crispe's Nose, you are to try; this is a Matter of Fact for your Consideration and Determination: It is the same in other Felonies, where the Intent of the Party makes the Crime. Burglary is breaking open an House in the Night-time, with an Intent to commit a Felony; tho' no Felony be committed, yet if there was an Intent to do it, it is Burglary; which Intent is to be tried by the Jury. Larceny, or Theft, is taking away another Man's Goods, with an Intent to steal; if it were without such an Intent, it would only be a Trespass, and no Larceny; but whether it were or were not with such an Intent, is a Matter of Fact to be inquired into and determined by the Jury. Nay, the Intent is so necessary in all Felonies, that a Person who hath no Intent or Design, as a Madman, Lunatick, Infant, &c. cannot commit Felony for that very Reason; because he cannot have any Intent or Design in his Actions. So that in this Case you are to try no other Matter than what is tried in other Felonies, viz. The Intent of the Party.

Now how is the Intent of the Party discovered in other Cases? By the Facts themselves, by the precedent, concomitant, and subsequent Circumstances of the Facts, by the Manner of doing, and the like.

There are some Cases where an unlawful or felonious Intent to do one Act, may be carried over to another Act, done in Prosecution thereof; and such other Act will be Felony, because done in Prosecution of an unlawful or felonious Intent: As, if a Man shoots at a wild Fowl, wherein no Man hath any Property, and by such shooting happens unawares to kill a Man; this Homicide is not Felony, but only a Misadventure or Chance-Medley, because it was an Accident that happened in the doing of a lawful Act: But if this Man had shot at a tame Fowl, wherein another had Property, but not with Intention to steal it, and by such shooting had accidentally kill'd a Man, he would then have been guilty of Manslaughter, because done in Prosecution of an unlawful Action, viz. committing a Trespass on another's Property: But if he had had an Intention of stealing this tame Fowl, then such accidental killing of a Man would have been Murder, because done in Prosecution of a felonious Intent, viz. an Intent to steal. So a Man of Malice intends to burn one House, in Execution thereof he happens to burn another House; this is a malicious and felonious burning of this other House, because sprung out of a malicious and felonious Intent: The like may be instanced where Poyson is intended to be given to one Person, and another takes and eats it, and thereby dies. And other Cases there are of the like Nature, where Acts done in Prosecution of felonious Intents, partipate of the Nature of their Original from whence they spring.

But now the Indictment on this Statute is for a certain particular Intent; for purposely, maliciously, and by lying in wait, slitting Mr. Crispe's Nose, with an Intention in so doing to maim or disfigure: And you are to consider, whether the Ingredients necessary to make this a Felony within the Statute, have been proved to your Satisfaction. The Facts necessary to be proved on this Indictment are, that on Purpose, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, then unlawfully slit the Nose of Mr. Crispe, with Intention in so doing to maim or disfigure. As to the Fact of slitting the Nose, that is directly and positively sworn: There can be no doubt but that it was an unlawful slitting. Then the next Thing for your Consideration will be, whether this unlawful slitting was on Purpose, of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait. As to this, a great deal of Evidence hath been given; and what pass'd before, and at the Time of the Fact, will guide you herein. And if on a Review of the Evidence, you shall be of Opinion, that this unlawful slitting of the Nose was on Purpose, of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait; then the next Question will be, whether this was an Intention to disfigure? Facts do in some measure explain themselves; and the Circumstances preceding and accompanying those Facts, and the Manner of doing them, do many times more fully explain and declare the Intent of the Party. The Prisoner Mr. Coke, (which Defence goes both to him and Woodburne) insists, that their Intention was to murder, and not to maim; and that if they did maim or slit the Nose, it was with an Intention to kill, and not with an Intention to maim or disfigure. On the other Side, it is insisted on by the King's Counsel, that tho' the ultimate Intention might be to murder, yet there might be also an Intention to maim and disfigure; and tho' the one did not take effect, yet the other might: An Intention to kill, doth not exclude an Intention to maim and disfigure. The Instrument made use of in this Attempt was a Bill or Hedging-hook, which in its own Nature is proper for cutting and maiming; and where it doth cut or maim, doth necessarily, and by consequence disdisfigure. The Attempt intended on Mr. Crispe was immediately to his Person, to do him a personal Injury. Besides, the Manner of doing and perpetrating this Fact is proper to be considered; That it was done by Violence, and in the dark, where the Assailant could not well make any Distinction of Blows; but knock'd and cut on any Part of Mr. Crispe's Body, where he could, till he had sunk him down, and done to him whatever else he pleas'd. And if the Intention was to murder, your are to consider, whether the Means made use of, in order to effect and accomplish that Murder, and the Consequences of those Means, were not in the Intention and Design of the Party; and whether every Blow and Cut, and the Consequences thereof, were not intended, as well as the End for which it is alledg'd those Blows and Cuts were given.

All these several Things, which I have mentioned, are proper for your Consideration: You will add to them your own Observations; and if, upon the whole, you are satisfied from the Evidence, that Woodburne did on Purpose, and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, unlawfully slit the Nose of Edward Crispe, with Intention, in so doing, to maim or disfigure; and that Arundel Coke was feloniously present at the Commission of this Fact, and aiding and abetting therein; then you will find them Guilty: But if this hath not been prov'd to your Satisfaction, then you are to acquit them, and find them Not Guilty.

Then the Jury withdrew to consider of their Verdict, and in about half an Hour return'd again.

Cl. of the Arr. Gentlemen, answer to your Names.

Here, and so the rest.

Cl. of the Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of the Arr. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of the Arr. John Woodburne, hold up thy Hand; (which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner. How say you, is John Woodburne Guilty of the Felony whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of the Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

Cl. of the Arr. Arundel Coke aliàs Cooke, hold up thy Hand; (which he did.) How say you? Is Arundel Coke aliàs Cooke, Guilty of the Felony whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of the Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge?

Cl. of the Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it. You say, that John Woodburne is Guilty of the Felony whereof he stands indicted: You say, that Arundel Coke aliàs Cooke, is Guilty of the Felony whereof he stands indicted; and that neither they, nor either of them, had any Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements at the Time of the Felony committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge. And so you say all.

Jury. Yes.

Mr. Coke. I desire to know of your Lordship, whether the Nose can be said to be slit within the Meaning of this Statute, when the Edge of it was not cut through?

L. C. Just. It is true, the Edge of the Nose was not slit, but the Cut was athwart the Nose; which Cut separated the Flesh of the Nose, and cut it quite through into the Nostril: This I take to be a Slitting of the Nose; and the Surgeon swore the Nose was slit.

On Wednesday the 14th of March, John Woodburne, Arundel Coke aliàs Cooke, and one Edward Shorter, who was convicted of Burglary, were brought to the Bar, in order to receive their Sentence; and the Court proceeded thus.

Clerk of the Arr. John Woodburne, hold up thy Hand; which he did.

Thou hast been indicted of Felony, on the Statute; for purposely, maliciously, and by lying in wait, slitting the Nose of Edward Crispe, Gent. with Intention in so doing, to maim or disfigure him. Thou hast been thereupon arraigned, thou hast pleaded thereunto Not Guilty, and for thy Trial, thou hast put thyself upon God and thy Country; which Country hath found thee Guilty; what hast thou to say for thyself, why the Court should not proceed to give Judgment of Death upon thee, and award Execution according to the Law?

To which Woodburne said nothing.

Cl. of Arr. Arundel Coke aliàs Cooke, hold up thy Hand; (which he did.)

Thou hast been indicted of Felony, on the Statute; for being feloniously present, aiding and abetting John Woodburne, in purposely, maliciously, and by lying in wait, slitting the Nose of Edward Crispe, Gent. with Intention in so doing, to maim or disfigure him. Thou hast been thereupon arraigned, thou hast pleaded thereunto Not Guilty, and for thy Trial thou hast put thyself upon God and thy Country; which Country hath found thee Guilty; what hast thou to say for thyself, why the Court should not proceed to give Judgment of Death upon thee, and award Execution according to the Law?

Mr. Coke. Tho' your Lordship did not think it proper Yesterday to assign me Counsel, yet I hope your Lordship will now give me leave to speak for myself; especially since I am the first unhappy Instance of an Indictment on this Statute; no Indictment, as far as it appears by the Law-Books, was ever yet founded on this Statute, and therefore ought to be very well weighed.

L. C. Just. Call the King's Counsel, that they may hear what is said. (Then the King's Counsel were sent for, and being come:)

L. C. Just. Mr. Coke, you may now go on with what you have to offer.

Mr. Coke. My Lord, I was saying, that I am the first unhappy Instance of an Indictment on this Statute; no Indictment, as far as appears by the Law-Books, was ever yet founded on this Statute; and therefore it ought to be very well weigh'd, especially in the first Instance to which it appears to have been ever applied. It is a very penal Statute, and consequently by the known Rule of Law not to be carried beyond the express Letter of it; consequently no Crime, of what Nature or Magnitude soever, can fall within the Purview of it, but such as is identically the same in every Circumstance with that described by the Words of the Statute itself.

The Crime describ'd by the Statute is the unlawful cutting out, or disabling the Tongue, putting out an Eye, slitting the Nose, cutting off a Nose or Lip, or disabling any Limb or Member, attended with these particular Circumstances:

First, On Purpose and of Malice fore-thought.

Secondly, By lying in wait.

Thirdly, With Intention in so doing to maim or disfigure in any of the Manners beforementioned in the Statute.

These Circumstances must all concur to constitute that particular Crime described by the Statute; and where any of them are wanting, of what Magnitude soever the Offence may be, it is not the Offence which the Statute has specified.

If the first Circumstance be wanting, no Man can say that any Offence, though attended with the two other, can fall within the Statute; this is sufficiently plain of itself.

As to the second; A and B, of Malice fore-thought, appoint and meet to fight a Duel; A in the Rencontre runs B into the Eye, and puts it out; no Body has ever imagined this to be within the Statute, because the Circumstance of lying in wait is here wanting.

As to the third; suppose A lies in wait to rob B, B resists, and in the Scuffle is wounded, as the Statute describes, but gets off. This is a Case which very frequently happens, yet no one ever thought it to be within the Statute, nor was any one ever indicted for this upon it: The only Reason of which must be, because the Intention was to rob, and not to maim and disfigure the Person.

In my Case, if it be taken upon the Evidence of Mr. Crispe, nothing more appears than the Assault itself: If my Confession be read, the lying in wait, and the Malice fore-thought will be proved; but then it will be likewise proved, that I had no other Intention but to kill, and had no other part, but by giving Orders to Woodburne for that Purpose; and my Confession must be taken together.

Nor is it an Objection to say, that the Crime which is proved by the Evidence is much worse than that which is described by the Statute; for if it is worse, then it cannot be the same. Even in Cases of Crimes by the common Law, if upon an Indictment for a Crime of an inferior Nature, the Evidence proves the Fact attended with Circumstances which brings it within the Description of a Crime of a superior Nature, the Person indicted must be acquitted. At Summer Assizes at Dorchester, Anno 1712, a Woman was indicted before Mr. Justice Eyre, for the Murder of another Woman; upon this Evidence it appeared, that the Person murdered was her Mistress, which made the Crime Petty-Treason. The Judge directed this Matter to be specially found, and upon Conference with all the Judges it was held, she ought to be acquitted upon this Indictment, as she accordingly was; and was afterwards indicted for Petty-Treason, and convicted and executed thereupon.

Where a new Offence has been created by Statute, or an old one made more penal, the utmost Strictness has always been us'd to comply with the Letter of the Statute, whatever Inconveniences might result from such a Restraint.

As for Example:

By the Statute of the 39 Eliz. cap. 14. Clergy is taken away from any Person or Persons who shall be convicted of taking any Money, Goods or Chattels out of any Dwelling-house, &c. in the Day time, to the Value of five Shillings. One Evans and one Finch were indicted on this Statute, 1 Croke 473. Evans and Finch's Case: The Case was thus upon the Evidence, That Evans by a Ladder climbed to the upper Window of one Audley's House, and took out thereof forty Pounds; and that Finch stood upon the Ladder in view of Evans, and saw Evans in the Chamber, and was assisting and helping to the committing of the Robbery, and took part of the Money: Upon a special Verdict it was adjudged, that because Finch did not actually enter the Chamber, and take the Money, though what he did amounted to a taking by Construction of Law, and was such a taking as made him a Felon; yet the very Letter of all penal Statutes must be pursued, and therefore he, id est, Finch, had his Clergy, and Evans was hanged.

Numerous Cases might be put of this kind of Nicety in the Construction of penal Statutes.

To mention but one more: By the Statute of 1 Edw. 6 cap. 12. Clergy is taken away from such Persons as shall be convicted for the felonious stealing of Horses, Geldings or Mares.— So scrupulously did the Judges adhere to the Letter of this Law, that there was forced to be another Statute made, viz. 2 & 3 Edw. VI. cap. 33. to enact, That a Person convicted for feloniously stealing one Horse, should be ousted of his Clergy in the same manner as if he had stole two.

Nor is it in this Case enough to say, the Jury are Judges of all this: For as the Evidence now appears, and is admitted, it is Matter of Law, how far this Evidence thus admitted on all Hands is sufficient to support this Indictment. If it were in a civil Case, the Party might demur to the Evidence. But if he is not allowed that Liberty in criminal Cases, it is upon the common Notion, that the Judges are the Prisoner's Counsel; and are obliged to determine all the Matters in Law arising upon the Evidence, as much as if the Persons had demurred to that Evidence.

And, as in this Case, the Prisoner admits the Evidence given to be true, and insists upon it, that it doth not support the Indictment; and therefore has a Right to have the Opinion of the Judges thereupon, as much as if the Evidence were stated at length upon the Record (as it must be in the Case of a Demurrer to Evidence) and nothing ought to be left to the Jury, but under the Judges Directions as to Point of Law.

In all these Cases therefore, my Lord, it has been usual to allow the Fact to be specially found; which gives the Prisoner the Advantage he might have had by the Demurrer to the Evidence.

Serj. Selby. My Lord, I do agree with the Prisoner at the Bar, that this is a very penal Statute, and that these Facts must be made out to bring his Case within the Letter of the Act, viz. An Intention or Purpose, of Malice, fore-thought, to maim or disfigure in such a Manner as the Statute describes; a lying in wait for that that Purpose; a maiming, or disfiguring accordingly; and an abetting and being privy to these Facts: These are all Facts which the Jury only could determine, either by positive, presumptive, or circumstantial Evidence for no Man's Thoughts or Intentions can be otherwise proved than by his Actions. My Lord Chief Justice hath left the whole Evidence of these Facts to the Jury, who by their Verdict have found all these Facts as laid in the Indictment, against which nobody can now open his Mouth: We apprehend therefore that no Matter of Law hath arisen, and that what hath been insisted on by the Prisoner, is beside his Case, and needs no Answer.

Serj. Branthwait. My Lord, the Jury have found him Guilty. I apprehend nothing can properly be alledged now by Mr. Coke, that is contrary to the Verdict: If there is any Fault in the Indictment, we are ready to answer any Objections he shall make against it. That he does not pretend to. What is now offered by him is against the Verdict, and contrary to what is found by the Jury. I beg your Lordship's Leave to give an Answer to the Objections he is pleased to make against the Verdict, however improperly and out of Time made, for the Satisfaction of himself, and of the Persons here present. I agree a penal Act shall not be construed by Equity, or carried further than the Words or Letter of the Act, as the Cases mentioned by him to prove; but affirm, that this present Case is within the Words and Meaning of the Act: For though the ultimate Intent of Mr. Coke might be to murder Mr. Crispe (as by him is alledged in Excuse of himself) all the Means made use of to effect that Intent were also on Purpose, and such Blows could not be given by an Instrument, without an Intent to maim and disfigure: They were given by one lying in wait on Purpose; and the Fact and Manner of doing the same sufficiently prove, and are a certain and necessary Indication of the Intent. The Defendants might have an Intent to cut off, or slit the Nose; put out an Eye, or dismember; and an Intent also to kill and destroy; one Intent did take effect, the other not. The Defendants ought not to answer for what was not done, but ought to answer for what was done which was the slitting of Mr. Crispe's Nose, on Purpose to maim and disfigure him, by one lying in wait; which is all that is required by the Act.

As to the Objection; that if A and B go together to fight a Duel, if A slit the Nose of B; this is not within the Act; the Reason is, because there is no lying in wait.

As to the Case of A lying in wait to rob B, I with great Submission do say, that if A lie in wait to rob B, and to effect that Purpose with the greater Ease, A on purpose dismembers B, or puts out his Eyes, or does any other Fact prohibited by the Act; though A be hindered from robbing B, he is within the Act of Parliament; for the Intent and Purpose to rob, will be no Excuse to one that shall commit the Facts prohibited by the Act.

As to the Case of Evans and Finch, Cr. Car. 473. on 39 El. which takes away the Clergy from him that enters and steals: Finch was not within the Statute, and had his Clergy; for the express Words of the Statute take away the Clergy from him that enters the House, which Finch did not. As to the Indictment of a Servant for Murder, in killing her Mistress; it is plain, that it is a Crime of a higher Degree than Murder, it is an Offence of another Species, it is Petty-Treason and not Murder.

The same Answer may be given to the other Cases mentioned, where the Words of an Act of Parliament are express. No Case shall be construed within a penal Act, but what is within the Words: But as to the present Case, the Jury have found every Fact that the Act of Parliament requires, that an unlawful Assault was made on Mr. Crispe by the Prisoners; that his Nose was slit on Purpose to maim and disfigure him, by lying in wait. And all these Facts were proved by plain, clear, and I believe convincing Evidence, to every Person that heard the Trial. I am sure the Prisoners can't complain of any Hardship done them; the Prosecution was carried on for the Sake of Justice, for the Safety of his Majesty's Subjects. This being the first Instance of a Crime so heinous, cruel, barbarous and inhuman, that has been committed since the making the Act of Parliament, it is hoped by this Prosecution a second will never be committed; for which Reason, I pray your Lordship's Judgment for the King against the Prisoners.

Mr. Raby. My Lord, I did expect at this time I should have heard, from this unhappy Gentleman, something in Arrest of Judgment; something to shew that this Indictment and Record, now before your Lordship in Judgment, had been insufficient, and such as your Lordship could not have proceeded upon to give Judgment against the Prisoners: But I don't perceive any thing has been objected to this Indictment or Record; and therefore since nothing appears, or is objected they must be taken to be sufficient, and such as your Lordship ought by Law to give Judgment upon against the Prisoners now at the Bar.

But this Gentleman has been pleased to take Notice of the Act of Parliament on which this Prosecution is founded: He has also made some mention of the Facts which have been given in Evidence against him; and cited some Cases (as I apprehend) to shew, that penal Statutes, and criminal Acts of Parliament, ought not in Construction to be carried beyond the Letter and Words of the Act. This which he has offered (as I take it) is now meant to shew (or at least that he apprehends) that from the Evidence given, it has not fully appeared he is guilty of the Offence with which he stands charged, within the strict Words and Meaning of this Act of Parliament: And for this End he has been pleased to make some Observations from the Words of the Statute, what Things he apprehends to be necessary to bring him within the Compass of this Act, viz. That such Wound or Maiming, as is described by the Statute, ought to be,

1. On Purpose, and of Malice fore-thought.
2. By lying in wait.
3. With an Intention to disfigure.

All these have been already admitted to him; and he will see every one of these Circumstances not only taken Notice of by us in our Observations upon the Evidence, but also more fully by your Lordship, before the Jury gave their Verdict.

But with what Intent this Fact was done, whether of Malice fore-thought, by lying in wait, and with Intent to disfigure, are Circumstances only to be collected from the Evidence and the Facts themselves; of which neither we nor the Court can determine, but can only be enquired of, and determined by the Jury; and therefore, though it would be a full Answer to what is now objected, to say, that the Jury have considered of the Evidence, have determined upon it, and found you guilty of the Indictment, with all those Circumstances which the Prisoner objects are necessary to bring the Offence within the Statute; though this, I say, might be Answer; yet for the Justice of this Proceeding, and to satisfy the Prisoner in his own Objections, and that they should not pass unanswered, your Lordship will permit me to take Notice of the Cases cited, and also to recollect the Evidence, so far as the Prisoner hath made it necessary to repeat it.

I confess, it is with Concern I mention it again; for I would not do any thing which might add to the Weight of those Afflictions which this unhappy Gentleman is under, had not he himself made it necessary to take farther Notice of it.

As to the Cases cited, only two of them which he mentions are cited to be adjudged; that at Dorchester by Mr. Justice Eyre, that a Woman was indicted for Murder, and upon Evidence it appeared to a different Offence, viz. Petit-Treason, for she had killed her Mistress; and that thereupon Mr. Justice Eyre caused her to be indicted for Petit-Treason, and she was convicted. Certainly, my Lord, that Judgment was right, and very just; for when it appeared upon Evidence that she was guilty of a distinct and different Offence than that of which she stood indicted, could any Thing be more just, than to cause her to be indicted for that Offence, of which, upon the Nature of the Evidence, she appeared to be guilty? The second Case cited of Evans and Finch (which is reported in Cro. Car.) is no more than this: Evans went up a Ladder, opened a Chamber Window in the Temple, went in and robbed the Chamber in the Day-time; Finch held the Ladder, and stood at the Foot of it when Evans entered: Evans was hang'd, Finch had his Clergy, and was only burnt in the Hand; and with great Reason: For the Statute, 39 Eliz. which takes away Clergy, takes the Clergy only from him that enters; and therefore to have taken the Clergy from Finch who did not enter, had been unjust and reasonable. And as to what is mentioned of the Statute 2 & 3 Ed. VI. cap. 33. made in Explanation of the Statute which took Clergy from him who stole Horses, and to take Clergy from him who stole only one Horse, there is such an Act of Parliament; but this Act and the Cases cited, only shew that Regard has always been had, not to extend penal Statutes beyond the Words of them. But before these Cases were mentioned (and indeed had they never been cited) this Rule of Construction had been allowed to the Prisoner; for all the Particulars now insisted on by the Prisoner were before taken Notice of by the Court, as Circumstances necessary to make out the Offence against the Prisoner: Nor has one of those Circumstances passed without Observation; but the Court did with great Justice before declare those Circumstances to be necessary Ingredients to prove this Offence. And as to the other Cases, they are to the same Purpose, and not cited as Cases adjudged; and therefore I need not take further Notice of them. But certainly no Inferences can be drawn from the Cases cited, or any the least Colour to say, those Cases prove that the Prisoner is not guilty of the Offence he stands charged with, and of which he is convicted.

I am sorry he has given this Occasion to mention again the Fact which has been proved, from whence it appears that the Jury have given an impartial and just Verdict.

It cannot be forgot, that this was consulted and premeditated for three Years and more before it was put in execution; and therefore it was certainly purposed and of Malice fore-thought; also that it was by lying in wait. Certainly this unhappy Gentleman cannot have forgot the Signal he gave: And to what Purpose was that Signal, if none was in waiting to hear it? And that this was with an Intent to disfigure, must be submitted upon the Fact and the Evidence. A Man uses a Weapon fit to maim and to disfigure, he cuts another on the Face and does disfigure him, shall he afterwards be at Liberty to say, it was not his Intent so to do? How dangerous that would be, is obvious to every one; this Act would then be easily eluded, if it should be sufficient, if it should avail an Offender, who has maim'd and disfigur'd another, to say, Prove that I intended it: It would be easy then to be out of the Reach of this Act of Parliament; indeed if that prevailed, none would be within it, it would be an easy Repeal of this Law. 'Tis objected, his Intent was to kill: He that intends the End, certainly intends the Means, especially those Means which he uses; and the Means used were cutting Mr. Crispe on the Face, and disfiguring him; and the Weapon is such, that by cutting him on the Face with that Weapon, could less be intended or expected? And if the Intent does not appear from this Fact, sure it never can from any: The Intent of a Man's Mind cannot appear but from the Act which proceeds from his Mind.

It is said, this is the first Indictment on this Statute: I believe there hath not been many; for this is an Offence so barbarous, that I must agree it is such as seldom happens, and that by the general Laws of our Country, there was not a Punishment provided equal to this Offence: For our Laws, (as the Laws of most Nations also do) provide against Offences which most frequently happen: But this is an Attempt so barbarous, that it was scarce imagined any Man could be so base and wicked as to attempt any thing like it, until it happened in the Case of Sir John Coventry; and then such an Abhorrence was shewn by the Parliament, that this Law was made to punish it, and to prevent the like for the future: And as this is the like Offence, it ought in Justice to have the like Punishment.

I shall add no more, but pray your Lordship's Judgment.

Mr. Lee. My Lord, the Observations made at the Bar being after a Verdict, and therefore out of Time, I shall not trouble your Lordship with a Repetition of the Facts that have been proved, further than the Prisoner has made it necessary for me to mention some Particulars, in order to make the Answers to what he hath insisted on the more clear and plain.

I believe

I believe it has been truly said by the Prisoner, that the present Prosecution is the first Instance of any Proceedings on this Statute, and I hope it will be the last; because it is to be hoped there never will be found any other Person so wicked, as to give Occasion for a Prosecution on this Statute.

I believe likewise, that the true Design of making this Statute was to subject Persons to Death, who intended to maim only, where the maiming was in such manner as is mentioned in the Statute; but I can't think that it does from thence follow, that a Person who intends to murder, and only maims, is not within this Statute; for though it should be taken that there was an Intention to murder, yet from the Fact done, from the manner of doing it, and from the Weapon made use of, it seems apparent that the Prisoner intended to maim; and the Jury have now found that he did so intend.

As to the Cases which the Prisoner has cited, I beg leave to consider each of them, and offer such Answers to them as now occur.

The first Case he has been pleas'd to cite, is thus put:

A and B, of Malice fore-thought, appoint to meet and fight a Duel, A in the Rencounter runs B into the Eye, and puts it out: The Prisoner says, such a Case would not be within this Statute.

I agree it would not, because this Case has not the Circumstances which the Statute requires; for in the Case thus put there is no lying in wait, which is a Circumstance required by the Statute.

It is said, that if A lies in wait to rob B, B resists, and in the Scuffle is maim'd in the Manner describ'd by the Statute, that such maiming would not be punishable by this Statute; but I don't observe any Case is cited to prove this Assertion: And I am, with Submission to your Lordship, inclin'd to think, that if there are a lying in wait, with Malice fore-thought, with Intent to rob, and in prosecuting this Intent the Robbers should assault and maim in the Manner described by the Statute, that such maiming would be within this Statute.

It is said, that though the Intent to murder makes the Offence worse than if the Intent had been only to maim, yet such Intent proves it not to be the same Offence which is mentioned in the Statute: And if a Man be indicted of an Offence of an inferior Nature, and upon the Evidence it appears that he is guilty of an Offence of a superior Nature, the Person indicted must be acquitted; and to prove this, a Case is cited, which is said to have been before Mr. Justice Eyre at Dorchester Assizes. The Case, as put, is this: A Woman is indicted for the Murder of another Woman, on the Evidence it appeared, that the Person murdered was her Mistress, which made the Crime Petty-Treason: This was found specially, and upon Conference with the Judges, they were of Opinion, that the Woman ought to be acquitted upon this Indictment.

Admitting this Case to have been adjudged, I apprehend it does not affect the present Case.

The Law has distinguished Crimes under different Denominations; and as Offences are rank'd under different Species, so the Indictment must be suited to that sort of Crime whereof the Party is guilty; and therefore proving a Person guilty of a Fact, known in the Law by the Name of Petty-Treason, does not prove him guilty of an Indictment for Murder; Murder being an Offence which the Law has distinguished from Petty-Treason, and to which it has assigned a different Punishment.

But in the present Case, that Offence which is charged in the Indictment, is proved in every Circumstance, and the Facts proved do constitute that Crime which is made Felony without Clergy by the Statute. The Statute requires lying in wait, it requires Malice fore-thought, it requires slitting the Nose, &c. with intent to maim, &c. The Indictment charges these Facts, the Witnesses have proved these Facts to the Satisfaction of a Jury, which have found the Defendant guilty of the Charge as laid.

The Prisoner says farther, that this is a very penal Statute, and that penal Statutes are always taken with the utmost Strictness; and to prove this, cites a Case adjudged on the Statute 39 Eliz. by which Statute Clergy is taken away from any Person or Persons, who shall be convicted of taking away Money, &c. in any Dwelling-house; &c. in the Day-time, to the Value of five Shillings: And to prove the same Matter, an Instance is likewise put of the Construction on the Statute, 1 Eliz. cap. 12. which takes away Clergy from such Persons as shall be convicted of feloniously stealing Horses, &c. The Case in the Statute 39 Eliz. is the Case of Evans and Finch, Cro. Car. 473. in which Case Finch had his Clergy, because he did not actually enter the Chamber and take the Money. The Construction on Ed. VI. was, that Clergy was not taken away from a Person who feloniously stole one Horse.

But I apprehend neither of these Cases come up to the Case now before your Lordship. As to the Case of Evans and Finch, which was a Case upon the Statute 39 Eliz. By that Statute a Person is ousted of Clergy who takes away Money to the Value of five Shillings in any Dwelling-house, &c. Finch did not enter into the House, for he only stood on the Ladder; and therefore he was not within the Words of that Statute, which spoke only of Persons who took away Goods in an House, &c.

As to the Construction upon the Statute 1 Ed. VI. it is plain that the felonious stealing one Horse could not be within an Act of Parliament which took away Clergy only from such Persons as feloniously stole Horses. The Reason therefore of these Cases was, that the Facts proved did not bring the Persons accused within the Words of the Statute.

But it is not so in the Case now before your Lordship; for the Prisoner is found guilty of a Fact, which is within the Words of the Statute upon which he is indicted; and every Circumstance required to make him guilty of the Felony mentioned in the Statute has been very fully proved.

My Lord, I am very sensible that the Objections taken at the Bar being after Verdict, did not require these particular Answers; but this being a Case wherein Life is concern'd, I hope the Impropriety will be excus'd.

L. G. Just. I do agree with the Prisoner, that this is a penal Law, and not to be extended by Equity: That he that is guilty within this Statute, must be guilty of all the Circumstances within it; and if any one of the Circumstances prescribed by the Statute be wanting, he is not guilty. And therefore in all those Cases put by you, if any one of the Circumstances prescribed by the Statute be wanting in any one of them, such Case is out of the Statute. But whether all the Circumstances required by the Statute did not concur in your Case; was a Matter of Fact, which the Jury, who are the proper Judges, have tried; and on such Trial they have found them all to concur. You seem to argue upon a Supposition of this Fact to be otherwise than the Jury have found it: The Jury have found you guilty of all the Circumstances within the Statute. There was no Matter of Law in this Case, but Matter of Fact; whether on Purpose; and of Malice fore-thought, and by lying in wait, the Nose of Mr. Crispe was not slit, with Intention, in so doing, to maim or disfigure; and whether you were not feloniously present, aiding and abetting. The Jury had the whole Evidence before them; they considered of the whole Matter, of the Preparation and lying in wait to do the Fact, of the Fact itself; of the Means and Instrument made use of to do it, of the Manner of doing it, and of all the other Circumstances and Particulars relating to the Fact: And on the whole, after they had withdrawn, and consider'd amongst themselves for some time, they have found you guilty within the Terms and Circumstances of the Statute; so that tho' all the Cases put by you shou'd be very good Law, yet they do not any wise affect yours, because you are actually found guilty of the Crime itself: Have you therefore any thing to say against the Indictment itself?

Mr. Coke. No, my Lord; I hope I have one Glimpse more from the King's most gracious Pardon, that was published in the Gazette.

L. C. Just. If you offer any Pardon by Act of Parliament, or under the Great Seal, I must take notice of it, and allow it to you; but if you mean only a Promise of a Pardon in the Gazette, or other public Advertisement, you must apply for that in another place; this doth not belong to me.

Mr. Coke. I hope that I shall have the Benefit of the Pardon that was promised, and that his Majesty will be graciously pleased to grant it me.

L. C. Just. If you have a Right to it, you need not doubt but you will have it: His Majesty is so just, that he will make good whatsoever he hath promised; but for this, your Application must be immediately to his Majesty.

Mr. Coke. I beg of your Lordship that you will give me Time, that I may not be hurried out of the World presently.

L. C. Just. I shall consider of it, and give you a convenient Time.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make an O Yes.

Cryer. Our Sovereign Lord the King doth straitly charge and command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, whilst Judgment is giving upon the Prisoners convicted, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

L. C. Just. You that are the Prisoners at the Bar, you have been indicted and convicted of very great and heinous Offences; I am very sorry that you have been the Occasion of bringing yourselves to unfortunate Ends, and that there is this melancholy Necessity on me to pronounce the Sentence of Death upon you: But on fair Trials the Jury have found you guilty, and by the Law you have forfeited your Lives.

Mr. Coke. My Lord, I am ashamed of myself; I did not expect to appear at this Time in this Place, where I have appear'd in another manner.

L. C. Just. I am sure, Mr. Coke, you ought seriously to reflect on your past Life: You cannot but own that you have been a great Sinner; you have had Malice in your Heart against this Gentleman above three Years.

Mr. Coke. Indeed, my Lord, I know nothing of it.

L. C. Just. Moon hath sworn; that three Years, or three Years and a half ago, you sent to him, and propos'd to him the knocking Mr. Crispe on the Head.

Mr. Coke. I do declare it; my Lord, as I shall answer it at the Great Day, I never spoke to Moon about any such Thing.

L. C. Just. Supposing what Moon hath said to be too much, yet the Crimes you own and cannot deny are exceeding heinous. You own that you invited your Brother to sup at your House, on purpose that you might have an Opportunity of murdering him. This is such a Crime as shocks human Nature: The bare mentioning of it is frightful and terrible. The deeper therefore your Crime is, the deeper your Repentance ought to be. You have need to humble yourselves before Almighty God. Besides the Judgment of the Law, there is also his Judgment-Seat, before which you must likewise appear: There all Things are naked and bare, without Colour or Disguise; every Man must there appear, and receive according to the Truth of his Actions, as they were good or bad. How far it may please God to extend his Mercy to you, I know not; he is infinite in Mercy as well as in every other Perfection: And this we are sure, that he never denies it to any who are prepared to receive it. Endeavour therefore to reconcile yourselves to him; improve with Diligence the little Time that may be allotted you: Send for proper Persons who may advise and assist you: For as to the Judgment of the Law which is to be now pronounced upon you all, it is this;

That you, and each of you, go from hence to the Place from whence you came, and from thence to the Place of Execution, where you shall be severally hanged by the Neck till you be severally and respectively dead; and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

Then the Keeper carried away the Prisoners to the Goal to be reserved till their Execution. And on Saturday the 31st of March, 1722. they were executed at Bury St. Edmond's.

CXCIII. The Trial of Christopher Layer, Esq; at the King's-Bench for High-Treason, Novemb. 21. 1722. Mich. 9 GEO. I.

Die Mercurii 31^o Die Octobris, 1722.

ON Wednesday the 31st of October, Christopher Layer, Esq; was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench at Westminster, upon a Habeas Corpus directed to the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, in order to be arraigned on an Indictment for High-Treason in compassing and imagining the Death of the King, found by the Grand Jury for the County of Essex before special Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we pray the Return of the Habeas Corpus may be read.

Mr. Harcourt Clerk of the Crown reads the Return of the Habeas Corpus, by which it appear'd that the Prisoner was committed to the Tower for High-Treason.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We pray that the Return may be filed.

Sir John Pratt. L. C. Just. Let it be filed.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, there is an Indictment of High Treason found in the County of Essex against Mr. Christopher Layer, which hath been removed into this Court by Certiorari; the Certiorari, and Return thereof hath been filed, and the Prisoner is now brought into Court in order to be arraigned.

L. C. Just. Read the Indictment.

Cl. of the Cr. Christopher Layer, hold up your Hand.

You stand indicted by the Name of Christopher Layer, late of the Parish of St. Andrew's Holbourn, in the County of Middlesex, Esq; For that you being a Subject of our most serene Lord GEORGE, now King of Great Britain, France and Ireland; Defender of the Faith, &c. not having the Fear of God in your Heart, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance; but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as a false Traytor against our said Lord the King, your Supreme, True, Lawful, and Undoubted Lord; withdrawing that cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity, and Allegiance, which every Subject of our said Lord the King towards Him should and of Right ought to bear, and designing, and with all your Might traiterously intending the Government of this Kingdom, under our said Lord the King duly and happily establish'd, to change, alter, and subvert; and our said Lord the King of and from the Title, Honour, Royal Estate, Empire and Government of this Kingdom to depose and deprive; and our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring and draw; and the Person during the Life of the late King James the Second, pretended to be Prince of Wales; and after the Decease of the said late King, pretending to be, and taking upon himself the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third, to the Crown, Royal State and Dignity of King of this Kingdom, and to the Empire, Government, and Possession of the same, to exalt and bring, the twenty-fifth Day of August, in the ninth Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is; and at divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at Laytonstone in the said County of Essex, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traiterously did compass, imagine, and intend, our said Lord the King, your supreme, true, lawful, and undoubted Lord, of and from the Title, Honour, Royal Estate, Empire and Government of this Kingdom to depose and deprive; and our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to put and bring. And that you the said Christopher Layer, to accomplish and bring about your said Treason, and devilish and traiterous Intents and Purposes, did, with divers other false Traytors to the Jurors unknown, on the said twenty-fifth Day of August, in the said Ninth Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, and at divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at Laytonstone aforesaid, in the said County of Essex, by Force and Arms, &c. falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traiterously meet, propose, consult, conspire, consent and agree, to move, raise, and levy Insurrection, Rebellion, and War, within this Kingdom against our said Lord the King, for the traiterous Purposes aforesaid. And that you the said Christopher Layer, for the more effectual compleating and perfecting the said Treason and traiterous Intentions and Purposes, on the said twenty-fifth Day of August, in the Ninth Year aforesaid, at Laytonstone aforesaid, in the said County of Essex, by Force and Arms, &c. maliciously and traiterously did publish a certain malicious, seditious, and traiterous Writing, containing and purporting (amongst other Things) an Exhortation, Incitement, and Promises of Rewards, the faithful Subjects of our said Lord the King, to persuade move and excite, to take up Arms, and to levy and make War within this Realm, against our said Sovereign Lord the King, for the traiterous Purposes and Intentions aforesaid. And that you the said Christopher Layer, for the more effectual compleating and perfecting the said Treason and traiterous Intentions and Purposes, with other false Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, on the said twenty-fifth Day of August, in the ninth Year aforesaid, and at divers other Days

Days and Times, as well before as after, at Laytonstone aforesaid, in the said County of Essex, by Force and Arms, &c. Falsely, Maliciously, Devilishly, and Traiterously did meet, propose, consult, conspire, consent, and agree, by an armed Force, and by Soldiers to be raised and got ready for the traitorous Purposes aforesaid; the said Person, during the Life of the said late King James the Second, pretended to be Prince of Wales, and since the Decease of the said late King, pretending to be, and taking upon himself the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James the Third, to the Crown, Royal Estate, and Dignity of King of this Kingdom, and to the Empire, Government, and Possession of the same to exalt and bring; and that you the said Christopher Layer, for the more effectual compleating and perfecting the said Treason, and traitorous Intentions and Purposes aforesaid, on the said twenty fifth Day of August, in the ninth Year aforesaid, and at diverse other Days and Times, as well before as after, at Laytonstone aforesaid, in the said County of Essex, by Force and Arms, &c. Maliciously and Traiterously did get ready, raise, and retain several Men, to the Jurors unknown, to take up Arms, and to levy and wage War within this Kingdom, against our said Sovereign Lord the King, for the traitorous Purposes aforesaid; and that you the said Christopher Layer, for the more effectual compleating and perfecting the said Treason, and traitorous Intentions and Purposes aforesaid, on the said twenty fifth Day of August, in the ninth Year aforesaid, and at divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at Laytonstone aforesaid, in the said County of Essex, with other false Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, by Force and Arms, &c. Maliciously, Devilishly, and Traiterously did meet, propose, consult, conspire, consent and agree, the sacred Person of our now Sovereign Lord King GEORGE, for the traitorous Purposes aforesaid, most wickedly to take, seize, imprison, and detain in Custody, against the Duty of your Allegiance, against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided.

Prisoner. If your Lordship will please to indulge me;

My Lord, I am brought here in Chains, in Fetters and in Chains. My Lord, I have been used more like an Algerine Captive than a Free-born Englishman: I have been dragged through the Streets by the Hands of Goalers, and have been made a Shew and a Spectacle of.

I am now in a Court of Justice before your Lordship, and I hope the Time will come when I shall have a candid and fair Trial, and not be made a Sacrifice to the Rage and Fury of any Party, or the Necessity of the Times. My Lord, I had not said this, but I have been insulted since I came into the Hall: A Gentleman came and told me, Either you must die, or the Plot must die. My Lord, this is Usage insufferable in a Christian Nation; and I think I can lay my Hand upon my Heart and say, I have done nothing against my Conscience.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. If Mr. Layer hath any Objections to the Indictment he may make them, but should not go on in this Manner.

Prisoner. My Lord, I hope I shall have these Chains taken off, that I may have the free Use of that Reason and Understanding which God hath given me. They have given me the Stranguary to that Degree that is very painful, and I am told your Lordship is afflicted with that Distemper.

I hope these Chains shall be taken off in the first Place, and then I hope I shall have a fair and a tender Trial.

L. C. Just. There have been a great many Things said by which we cannot examine into. You have given a general Charge of some People using you ill, your Expressions are not just and right; you charge no particular Person; we can take no Notice of them.

As to the Chains you complain of; it must be left to those to whom the Custody of you is committed by Law, to take Care that you may not make your Escape; when you come to your Trial then your Chains may be taken off. Consider the Matter of this Day; if you have any Objections to the Indictment the Court will hear them; if not, you must plead.

Mr. Att. Gen. I am sure nothing is intended but that he Sir Robert Raymond should have a fair Trial; but to complain here of hard Usage, of Chains and Imprisonment, carries with it a Reflection of Cruelty, and we know what Effect these Things may have Abroad.

My Lord, I don't believe there is any Occasion for saying any thing more in answer to this, than that the Prisoner hath been kept, as all Persons in his Circumstances are, when they have been attempting to make an Escape; there was an Attempt of that Nature made by him, and I believe no Body will say, but on such an Occasion, there is Reason to take particular Care that he may not escape. My Lord, as to any other Matters of Hardship, I hope what he says is not so; I very believe it is not, but that he hath as much Freedom and Liberty as is proper and usual. And as to what is said in respect to the Man that insulted him in the Hall, I know nothing of it, nor heard of it before; but can't but observe that it is any easy Matter for People to contrive such a Thing in concert together, with some particular Views; and I don't know but if the Fact was so, it might be some body set on by himself that did it.

L. C. Just. Alas! If there hath been an Attempt to escape, there can be no Pretension to complain of Hardship: He that hath attempted an Escape once, if true, ought to be secured in such Manner, as to prevent his escaping a second time. The Gentleman Goaler, what doth he say?

Gentleman Goaler. My Lord, He never attempted to escape since he was in my Custody.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, it was before.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, This Complaint is made for no other Sir Philip York Purpose but to captivate the Minds of the By-standers, without any just Grounds in the World; for if the whole of the Complaint made and aggravated in this solemn Manner be considered, it amounts only to this, That a Prisoner who stands charged with so great an Offence as High-Treason (who I admit, notwithstanding the Weight of that Charge, ought to have all the Justice and all the Opportunity of defending himself which the Law allows) I say it amounts to no more than this, that a Prisoner in these Circumstances is brought up hither under a Guard, and in Fetters, as Persons in that Condition usually are. It is very well known that when this Gentleman was in the Custody of a Messenger, he not only made an Attempt to escape, but actually escaped, got out of a Window two Pair of Stairs high, and from thence over the Water into Southwark; and since that is so, can there be any Colour to say that what was done afterwards was unwarrantable? I cannot help saying on this Occasion, that it does not become the Candor a Person in the Prisoner's Circumstances ought to shew, to aggravate and make such a Misrepresentation of the Usage he has received. As to what has happened in the Hall we know nothing of it, nor can possibly tell how true it is. If any such thing was said, it is not impossible to have been by some body that was set there on Purpose by the Friends of this Gentleman. I say thus much, my Lord, not because I think it material to the Business of this Day, but because I would not have it gone away with that there has been any Hardship put upon the Prisoner contrary to Law. No, his Majesty, who makes the Laws of the Land the Rule and Measure of all his Actions, though he will have Justice done to himself and his Government against any Person that shall conspire to overthrow it, yet he will suffer no Hardships to be done even to such Persons, contrary to Law; and nothing has been done in this Case but what was legal and absolutely necessary.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I beg to be indulged a few Words; That he is in Chains now is demonstrable; and he hath told me, when in the Tower with him, that they are so grievous to him that he cannot sleep but in one Posture, viz. upon his Back, and that he hath not attempted to escape out of the Tower is given in Evidence by the Gentleman Goaler, who hath, and will, I verily believe, execute his Authority with all Humanity, for he now helps to hold up his Chains, otherwise the Prisoner could not stand. My Lord, it is said it is nothing but what is usual in Cases of this Nature. My Lord, I believe I might challenge them to give an Instance where any Prisoner was shackled with Irons in the Tower before Mr. Layser; his Majesty's Prisoners of the Tower are such Strangers to this Usage, that they had not the very Materials there, they were sent for from Newgate, and I hope they will be carried back again thither. Your Lordship hath hinted it as an Indulgence intended to him when he comes to his Trial, that his Irons shall be taken off: But I humbly insist upon it that by Law he ought not to be called upon, even to plead, till his Fetters are off: My Lord Coke * is clearly of that Opinion in his Pleas of the Crown; and it is admitted on all Hands, that when he comes to be tried his Shackles must be off, and upon a Debate it was so determined † Trial 154. in Cranburne's † Case. The only Reason assigned for putting off Irons at all upon a Prisoner is to keep him in safe Custody (for the Laws of England allow of no Tortures) and the Reason why they are taken off in the Course of Proceeding against him in a Court of Justice, it seems to be that his Mind should not be disturbed by any Uneasiness his Body or Limbs should be under; and as to the Distinction that his Chains should be on when he Pleads, because but for a Moment, or a short Time, and off when he is Tried, because that will be of longer Duration; it is possible that what we have now to say may be as long as some Trials. I should (with Submission) think that something of the Dignity of the Court might be considered in this Matter, for a Court of Justice, the highest in the Kingdom for criminal Matters, where the King himself is supposed to be personally present, to have a Man plead for his Life before them in Chains, seems to be very unsuitable. He is now before the same awful and just Tribunal which he will be before when he is tried, and why not therefore without Chains as well now as then; and as to the safe Custody intended by the Irons, is the Man like to run away here? Is he not here too well guarded to escape?

Mr. Ketelby, If your Lordship please to favour me a few Words. My Lord, What hath been his Usage in bringing him up hither I cannot tell; what the Usage of the Tower is with respect to the putting Chains upon Prisoners, I am ignorant of; but this I must beg Leave to say, that he is entitled to have his Chains off before he pleads* in point of Law: The Authorities for it are my Lord Coke in his third Instit. Fol. 34. who says, that *when Prisoners come in Judgment to answer, they shall be out of Irons, and all manner of Bonds, that their Pain may not take away their Reason, nor constrain them to answer, but at their Free-Will; and in Fol. 35. he cites * Brit. c. 5. fol. 14. the Words out of the Mirroure, Chap. V. Sect. 1. It is an Abuse that Prisoners be charged with Irons, or put to any Pain before they be Attainted. At the Trial of Cranburne, when he was brought up here before my Lord Chief Justice Holt, he insisted that his Chains should be taken off before he pleaded, and it was ordered. This was likewise mentioned in the Trials of Dorrel, Gorden, and Kerr; when they came up in their Irons to plead, it was moved at first that those Irons ought to be taken off. The Court declared, that if the Prisoners insisted on it, it ought to be done: But they did not insist on it, they rather chose to wave that Privilege than undergo the Trouble of having them knock'd off in Court. There is a Resolution in this Case. In the 10th Fol. of Kelyng, it is expressly declared on a Consultation of all the Judges in England, That a Prisoner ought to have his Irons taken off before he pleads.

L. C. 7. The Case of Cranburne, you will find that Authority is when the Party was called upon to plead, and was tried at the same Time.

No doubt when he comes upon his Trial, the Authority is that he is not to be in Vinculis during his Trial, but should be so far free, that he should have the Use of his Reason, and all Advantages to clear his Innocence. Here he is only called upon to plead by Advice of his Counsel; he is not to be tried now, when he comes to be tried, if he makes that Complaint, the Court will take Care he shall be in a Condition proper to make his Defence; but when he is only called upon to plead, and his Counsel by him to advise him what to plead, why are his Chains to be taken off this Minute, and to be put on again the next? It hath been said (I cannot understand the Meaning of it) he is too well guarded, I don't think a Man charged with High-Treason of this Nature, can be said justly to be too well guarded, especially if it be true what hath been suggested, that he hath endeavour'd to make his Escape; that will justify more than what the Law allows in other Cases.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I beg leave to explain myself, what I mean by saying too well guarded, I mean sufficiently guarded.

L. C. Just. Have you any thing more to offer? This is nothing but to captivate the People, and to make Impressions upon them that are not just, or else what signifies his Chains being taken off this Minute, and afterwards put on again the next? This is nothing but to bring the People to have an unjust Sense of the Crime with which he is charged.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, we might humbly apprehend and hope that the better to prepare himself for his Trial, he might continue without his Chains 'till after that Time.

L. C. Just. I am of another Opinion, and if we should order his Chains to be taken off, and he escape, I don't know but we are guilty of his Escape. As your Client hath said, he shall have a fair and a just Trial; but to make Objections in Matters of this Nature, is to cast a Reflection on the Court, for not doing that which is not in their Power to do.

Mr. Hungerford. I am, my Lord, of Counsel with the Prisoner, I have been so appointed by your Lordship, and I assure your Lordship that I, and I dare answer for the other Gentleman that is concerned in the same Service with me, shall make use of that Power and Privilege you are pleased to give us, as we ought.

My Lord, I have read over the Record and the Indictment, we have a Copy of both, according to the Direction of the Act of Parliament: I know we have at present a Right to object to four sorts of Things, viz. miswriting, misspelling, false or improper Latin: We are confined to make whatever Objections occur to us on these Heads at this Time, and have not the Liberty to make it afterwards; but there are likewise some Objections of another Nature, which we may have Liberty to make at another Time.

I have here in my Hand the whole Record delivered to the Prisoner, in which, not only the Indictment is set forth, but the Commission of Oyer and Terminer. After the Commission hath enumerated the Names of the Commissioners, it goes on, and says, what are the Offences that they are authorized to enquire of, as High-Treason, Misprisions of Treason, and other Offences of a lesser Degree; then it goes on and says what the Persons shall be, concerning whom this Enquiry shall be made, Et per quos vel per quem, cui vel quibus, quando, qualiter, & quomodo, & de aliis Articulis & Circumstantiis, præmissa & eorum quodlibet seu eorum aliquod vel aliqua, qualitercunq; concernen^r, plenius veritat^r. My Lord, I have look'd into this Form, and considered the Words with all the Accuracy I can, and have endeavour'd to render them into English, but cannot; I must say I look upon those two Words plenius veritat^r, as placed in this Record, to be Nonsense, and not capable of being rendered into English, for they import no meaning at all. It is a Blemish in the Commission itself, and if so, the Enquiry, taken by Vertue of that Commission must fall to nothing, and consequently this Indictment must be naught. I have been so exact I have looked into the Forms of these Indictments, taken by Vertue of Commissions of Oyer and Terminer. My Lord Chief Justice Coke hath, for the sake of Posterity, I suppose, given us the Form of the Commission of Oyer and Terminer in his Time; in that Form of his these Words are entirely left out; they seem to me to be Words of no Signification, therefore we hope there shall be no further Proceedings till this is set right, and that the Indictment shall be quash'd.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, there are other Objections, whether is it your Lordship's Pleasure that we should go on this first, or that we should mention the others, and so go upon them all together?

L. C. Just. Make all your Objections together.

Mr. Hungerford. Then, my Lord, in the Close of this Commission it is said the Jury were charged to enquire, but doth not say for what; but that Objection may be made another Time, and therefore I will not trouble your Lordship with it now. My Lord, the first Thing that occurs to me in the Indictment itself, and which certainly, if we prevail in, the whole Proceedings are wrong; this Gentleman's Name is not writ nor spelt right, Jurator pro Dno Rege, &c. super Sacramentum, &c. quod Christophorus Layer, Christophorus is there writ with an E, whereas it should be Christophorus with an O; and if the Dictionaries and Lexicons are any Authority we are right.

These are the Objections which have occurred to me, the Gentleman joined with me in this Service, hath some Remarks to make.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, As it is your Lordship's Pleasure to appoint us to be Counsel for this Gentleman, I shall not make any Apology for our appearing on his Behalf, lest I receive the same Reproof from the Court, which a Gentleman in my Station once received upon a like Occasion.

My Lord, we are at this Time proper to lay these four Points under your Lordship's Consideration, which if we had staid till after Plea pleaded by the Prisoner, would have been too late; that Matter hath been often settled and determined by your Lordship, and I shall say no more to that, I believe they don't object to it; now therefore is the only Time to make these Objections.

My Lord, The first that hath been mentioned by Mr. Hungerford is in the Caption of the Indictment as to these Words plenius Veritatem; in our Copy, it is plenius Veritat^r with a Dash, that it may be taken in any Case, but I submit it to your Lordship whether it can be made Sense, or is proper Latin in any of the Cases either of the singular or plural Number, that there can be made made any Grammar of it, or that there is any regular or proceeding Verb that can govern it in any Case whatsoever; they might have put in any Words entirely inconsistent with respect to the Part preceding or subsequent; leave out these Words and the other Part of the Sentence is plain and intelligible, but, put in the Words and it is otherwise.

And especially since we have the Authority of my Lord Coke where these Words are not in; how they came to be put in, or of what Use they are; your Lordship will observe on reading the Caption of the Indictment, Ad Inquirend', &c. plenius Veritat'.

Taking Exceptions to the Caption of the Indictment hath formerly been objected to, but I believe that Right cannot be disputed at this Time.

As to the second Exception, that in relation to Cristopherus, we submit it to your Lordship if that be not expressly within the Defects mentioned in the Act of Parliament Miswriting, Mispelling, false and improper Latin; nay, whether it is not subject to censure under each of these four Heads.

My Lord, it was impossible to bring all my Authorities, upon this Point, along with me; but I have here in Court several of the best Dictionaries and Lexicons which shew the true Word to be Christophorus; and I believe the Gentlemen of the other Side can't produce one Instance in any authentic Book either Greek or Latin, but it is always spelt with an O and not with an E, it is Christophorus from πρωτος, the Præteritum Medium of the Greek Verb φειω; and the Rules of Etymology and Formation of Greek Verbals evince that it must be so and cannot be otherwise; and by all the Latin Dictionaries, the Latin Word for Christopher is Christophorus.

L. C. Just. How do we know what his Name is? You must plead it in Abatement; we don't know his Name; he might be christened Christophorus for ought we know.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, for false Spelling—

L. C. Just. How doth that appear to us? You are wrong in making your Objection at this Time, we can't take notice what his Name is; in the Record of the Indictment he is called Christophorus. Can we enquire what his true Name is, whether in English it is Christopher or Christophorus? We can't tell what his Name is, perchance his Name may be Christophorus, and the Name by which he might be christen'd; I desire I may not be understood as if I would prevent you from offering any thing that is material for your Client, but if I can satisfy you that you are improper in Form, it may save the Time of the Court; but if you can offer any thing material, we are ready to hear it.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I hope your Lordship will pardon me, here is the Life of a Man concern'd, and as I would not willingly offer any thing to your Lordship that in the like Cases hath been over-ruled, so neither would I omit any thing that may be material for the Prisoner, whose Defence the Court has intrusted us with; therefore I will go on to the other Objections that we think to be improper Latin; compassavit, imaginatus fuit, & intendebat. These are the Words, I don't know whether this Latin will go down in Westminster-Hall, but I am satisfied it would not in Westminster-School.

Here is the Et Intendebat, Et a Conjunction Copulative between Verbs in several Tenses; here is Compassavit the Preterperfect Tense, Imaginatus fuit the Preterperfect Tense, and Intendebat the Preterimperfect Tense: Why should not the last Verb have been put into the Preterimperfect Tense, according to the Rules of Classical Latin, as well as the two former? Therefore we submit it how far it will go as to viciating the Indictment in Point of false Latin.

My Lord, there is one Word more, (Seisend') the Overt-Act, as laid in the Indictment, is, that the Prisoner Conspiravit at sacram Personam Domini Regis capiend', seisend', & imprisonand'; by the Words that are coupled with it, I suppose Seisend' is intended to mean, the taking or laying violent Hands upon his Majesty's Person; but sure there was never such a Word in any Indictment before, nor to be found in any Author whatsoever; 'tis neither Classical Latin, Law Latin, nor to be met with among Littleton's Barbarisms, never naturalized nor inoculated into antient or modern Use; 'tis a mere fictitious Word Coin'd for this very Purpose without any Precedent, any one Instance to warrant it.

My Lord Coke, in his 1st Instit. Fol. 17. says, That the Word Seisitus cometh of the French Word Seisin, and that in the Common Law 'tis properly applied to Freehold, in Contradistinction to Possessionatus, which relates to Chattels: For Seisitus and Possessionatus are mentioned as Terms of Art, Technical Words in the Law, that by long Use have acquired to themselves one peculiar and determined Signification; for that Reason I don't object against the Word Compassavit in this Indictment, it having been always used in Indictments of High-Treason to express compassing the Death of the King, ever since the Statute of Edward the Third; so Murdrare, Felonia, and several others, are known Terms of Art in the Law. But, where did they meet with the Word Seisend'? And if they would fancy it to be a Gerund of some unknown Active Verb, how came they to give it this Sense, to make it signify the same as Capiendum?

My Lord, I must beg leave to say, that I apprehend the very Gift of this Indictment, (at least so much of it as relates to this Overt-Act) entirely depends upon this Word Seisend'; and if it does appear to your Lordship to be insignificant, barbarous, false or improper Latin, I hope we are proper under the Authority of the late Act of Parliament, humbly to insist upon this Objection, and that it is sufficient to overthrow the whole Indictment.

My Lord Coke, in Calvin's Case, says, that Indictments for High-Treason ought to be drawn with the greatest Accuracy and Nicety; but if Mr. Attorney will please to shew me, that this Word was ever once used to this Purpose, I will wave my Objection, and admit it to be as elegant a Word as any in the whole Indictment.

L. C. Just. I think before the King's Counsel make any Answer to that, we had best have that Part of the Indictment read, that we may the better judge of it.

Cl. of the Cr. reads, Quod tu Christophorus Layer, &c. ad Capiend' Seisend' & Imprisonand', &c.

L. C. Just. Ad Capiend' & Imprisonand'. Won't these Words do, suppose the other Word ad Seisend' insignificant?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord these Objections have been made with so much Ceremony, and usher'd in with such Pomp, as if something else was meant, than the quashing this Indictment.

We apprehend some of them are improper, and others which may be proper at this Time, are of no Force.

The Objections to the Commission, we apprehend are improper; it is not in the Power of the Court to quash the Commission, and therefore to make mention of Mis-spelling, and of false and improper Latin therein, signifies nothing. As to the Indictment itself, the Court hath a Power, and if they think proper, if there be sufficient Cause may quash it; but the Commission issues under the Great Seal, and that Part of it returned here, is not under the Power of this Court to destroy; but upon reading it, we think this Objection will quite vanish; these Words are used in all Commissions of the like Nature, and are inserted in the very Form of the Commission, and the Caption of the Indictment published in the Treatise, allowed by all the Judges of England, call'd, A Collection of Statutes relating to High-Treason, compos'd for the Assistance of the Justices in Scotland; and because of the supposed Difficulty of understanding these Words, I will, for the Sake of the Gentlemen of the other Side, read them in the Order they are to be construed, thus, Ad Inquirend' plenius Veritatem per sacrum probor' & legal' Hom', &c. de quibuscunq; Proditionibus Misprissonib', &c. per quoscunq; & qualitercunq; Hui' Fact', &c. ac de aliis Articulis, &c. & ad easdem Prodition' & al' Premiss' audiend' & terminand'; here they are to enquire more fully the Truth, of and concerning all Treasons, Misprisions of Treason by any Person whomsoever committed, &c. And if the Words (plenius Veritat') had immediately followed the Word (Inquirend') every Body at first reading must be satisfied that no Objection could be made thereto; and the Objection now is only made on Account of the placing these Words at the End of the Sentence. But it makes no Difference in the Construction or Sense; how otherwise can it be construed or understood? But to enquire more fully the Truth of those Offences, there enumerated, and what Persons are guilty, &c. And therefore I take it, that the Form of the Commission is proper, and will be justified, not only by the Sense of it, but by the usual and common Course of Proceedings.—As to the next Objection, we apprehend that hath been already over-ruled; the Word (Christopherus) with an E, and not with an O: And if there be any Difference in the Name, that it must be pleaded in Abatement, because if they would take Advantage of it, they must plead that his Name is otherwise than is expressed in the Indictment. This Man's Name Christopherus may be with an E as well as an O for ought appears: But we apprehend, that the Name Christopher is seldom writ in Latin with an O, but usually with an E; if they think there is any thing material in the Objection, let them plead it in Abatement, and we are ready to answer them.

My Lord, as to the next Objection, that the three Verbs which charge the High-Treason, viz. Compassavit, Imaginatus fuit, & Intendebat, that they are not in the same Tenses; we submit that in the strictest Latin, there is no Necessity the last Verb should be of the same Tense with those that go before the Copulative (Et): Sure, tho' Compassavit and Imaginatus fuit be in the Preterperfect Tense, yet Intendebat may be well added in the Preterimperfect Tense, and that will make no Difference, they being all three alledged and found in the Time past, before the Indictment exhibited.

My Lord, the next Objection which they seem to rely upon, is at the Conclusion of the Indictment, and that is to the Word (Seisend', &c.) They say, the Precedents have been look'd into, and there is no such Word to be found in any Indictment of High-Treason; I beg leave to say in Answer, that since the Assassination-Plot against King William, there hath been no such villanous Attempt of this Nature; therefore no Wonder if it cannot be found in other Indictments where there has been no Occasion for the Word. This is an Overt-Act of conspiring and agreeing to take, seize, and imprison, the very Person of the King; and it must be laid according to the Fact itself; but if this be not a proper Word, tho' I think the Word is proper and significant, yet because this is not made use of in alledging the Treason itself, but the Overt-Act or Evidence of the Treason, it will not vitiate that Part of the Indictment: For if any one of these Words alledged is proved upon the Trial, the Prisoner ought to be found Guilty, whether he compassed to take the Person of the King, or to seize his Majesty, or to imprison and detain him; any one of these Attempts is sufficient, if proved, and the Prisoner ought to be convicted. There was an Objection of this Nature taken upon one of the Trials for High-Treason, before my Lord Chief Justice Holt, but he was pleased to say, that in alledging the Overt-Acts, where several Overt-Acts are alledged, or several Words are used to express the same Overt-Act, if they were mistaken in one of the Words, yet if there were other Words sufficient in the Indictment to express the Overt-Act; or although one entire Overt-Act was insufficiently alledged, yet if there was another Overt-Act well laid, the Court would not quash the Indictment, because this would be to deprive the Crown of the Right of giving Evidence to prove any other Part of the same Overt-Act, or any other Overt-Act alledged in the Indictment, so that we hope this is not a proper Objection, because the Court cannot quash the whole Indictment if any other Overt-Act is sufficiently expressed, but the Indictment must stand.—But the Word is proper, because the Words Seisire ad Seisend' are Terms known in the Law, and it is frequently used in Actions of Trespass, Quod cepit, seisivit, & abduxit, or asportavit. My Lord, we think the Word ad seisend' is a proper Expression in this Case, to signify the Attempt or Design to seize and apprehend the Person of his Majesty; and we hope there is nothing in these Objections.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we are not against the Gentlemen of the other Side's insisting upon every thing that may be for their Client's Service. But sure these Objections have nothing in them; there is no Colour of Reason to support them. My Lord, as to the Exception taken to the Commission, let us consider, if there was any Weight in it, how it can possibly be taken at this Time.—By Vertue of the Act of Parliament passed in the 7th Year of the Reign of his late Majesty King William, it is provided,

That

That no Indictment for any of the Offences aforementioned in that Act, which are Treasons, &c. nor any Process or Return thereupon, shall be quashed on the Motion of the Prisoner or his Counsel for Mis-writing, Mispelling, or false or improper Latin (under which last Words, the Counsel for the Prisoner would entitle themselves to take this Objection) unless such Exception shall be taken and made in the respective Court, where such Trial shall be, by the Prisoner or his Counsel assign'd, before any Evidence given in open Court upon such Indictment.—But the Commission is a Thing distinct, and neither Indictment, Process, or Return thereupon. And by Consequence no Objection can be made to the Commission at this Time by Vertue of that Act: But however, because they may not trouble us with these Objections at another Time, we beg leave to answer them now.

My Lord, these Words (plenius Veritatem) are the very Point of the Enquiry of the Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, for they are to enquire, by the Oaths of lawful Men of the Country, fully of the Truth of all Treasons, Misprisions of Treasons, &c. committed in that County, and that is the Tenour of the Commission. In the Book printed by the Approbation of all the Judges of England, soon after the Union of the two Kingdoms, all the Rules and Methods of Trial in Cases of High-Treason are laid down; there is the Commission of Oyer and Terminer printed at large; and it is exactly in the same Words with this; and your Lordship may please to observe, that immediately after those Words plenius Veritatem there is a Comma, and none before; the whole Sentence before is entire, and therefore in Construction these Words, plenius Veritatem, refer to the Words ad inquirendum, at the Beginning of the Sentence; and the Sense is plain, that the Commissioners are to enquire by the Oaths of good and lawful Men of the Country, and by other Ways and Means, &c. plenius Veritatem, de quibuscunque Proditionibus, Misprisionibus, &c. and then the Commission goes on, and there comes after the Comma, Et v'd easdem Proditiones & alia Præmissa hac vice audiend' & terminand' secund' leges, &c. In our legal Proceedings in Latin, we are not so nice as to confine ourselves to the Latin of the Classicks; but this is very proper Latin, and the disjoining of the Words plenius Veritatem, from the Words ad inquirendum, by which they are govern'd by the Interposition of so many Words, is no Objection; for nothing is more common in the best Authors, than placing the most material Words at the Close of a very long Sentence, which in Point of Construction must refer to others at the Beginning. And therefore I hope we shall hear no more of this Objection.

As to the Christopherus being with an E instead of an O, that is not a proper Objection at this Time. No Man will pretend to say, he may not be christen'd by that Name, as Henry is the usual Name, Harry is the common Nick-name for Henry, yet a Person may be christen'd Harry, and so have many Persons been.

But, my Lord, we say this is a Word used in all the Law Proceedings for Christopher, and spelt in this very manner with an E.

As to the other Objection; as to the Alteration of the Tense in the Words compassavit, imaginatus fuit & intendebat: The Objection is made as if we were tied down to those exact Forms of Grammar; if the Sense is plain, if the Facts are explained by proper Latin Words, it is enough for us, whether they are carried on sometimes in one Tense, and sometimes in another, provided they sufficiently charged the Fact to be done.

The last Objection is the Word seisend', that it is not a Word known in the Law; if that would hold, it would not quash the Indictment, because there are several other Words to the same Effect, which sufficiently express this villainous Overt-Act, without this Word seisend'; for it is laid, that the Prisoner did propose, consult, and agree, ad sacram Personam dicti Domini Georgii nunc Regis, &c. capiend', seisend', imprisonand', & in Custod' detinend'. But we insist, that this is a very proper Word. In the Court of Exchequer the Words used in Cases of Seizures is seisvit. Writs issue commanding the Sheriff seisire such Lands, &c. into the King's Hands, and the Sheriff returns seisire feci; so that if this Word was look'd upon as an unknown and unintelligible Word, what must become of many Judgments and Proceedings in that Court? It is a Law Word that is here applied to the Person of our Sovereign, and as it is in the Proceedings before-mentioned applied to seizing Lands, &c. Why may it not be applied to the Seizing of a Person? And then if seisire be proper, the Gerund from that must be seisendum. And therefore we apprehend, my Lord, that it is a plain Answer, and that there is no Colour of Reason for this Objection.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, as I apprehend these Exceptions have no real Foundation, nor scarce any Colour in themselves, so I don't know whether it would not be giving too much Credit to them, for so many of the King's Counsel as attend your Lordship on this Occasion, to spend the Time of the Court in giving Answers to them. The true Answers, and all the Answers which can be given, have been already offer'd and very fully enforced; and therefore I shall not trouble your Lordship with any thing further.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I beg a few Words by way of Reply. As to the first Objection, we hope it is not answer'd: We object against the Words plenius veritat' as Words of no Sense or Meaning, as ranged or placed in this Indictment. Mr. Attorney hath endeavoured to make them Sense by transposing them, and inserting plenius veritat' ten Lines before what the Indictment hath. We must take the Words as they are in the Indictment: And if they are not Grammar or intelligible there, the Objection still holds. I know not what Liberty the King's Counsel hath to transpose the Words. I know School-Boys sometimes pick up Words without Regard to Grammar, to make what they call Nonsense Verses: But I never knew an Attempt before by transposing of Words, to make Nonsense Grammar, Prose, or Poetry. There is one Thing that hath been mentioned, that the Judges have settled the Forms of Proceedings in Cases of High-Treason by Direction of the House of Lords, and this plenius veritat' is got into the Form inserted in that Treatise: That Book, my Lord, notwithstanding the solemn Allowance of it by the Judges, is not, with Submission, a conclusive Authority: It was denied to be so in the Case of Matthews; which Case I can the better speak to, because I was of Counsel in it. The Objection taken in the Case of Matthews was to the Pannel of the Jury, for that the Addition and Places of Abode of the Jurymen were not inserted in the Pannel, according to the Directions of that Book, the better to guide the Prisoner in his Challenges. My Lord Chief Justice King, who presided at that Trial, assisted by all the then Judges of England, (except your Lordship who was absent) over-ruled that Exception; and I think the rest of my Lords the Judges, now present, concurred in that Resolution. Wherefore, if we have no Authority to combat with, but the Authority of that Book, which hath been solemnly denied to be a good Authority, we hope this Objection shall stand.

My Lord, as to the Word Christophorus, without doubt the Etymology of the Word is as Mr. Ketelbey hath opened; and there is this further to justify that way of Spelling which we contend for, even the two first Syllables of the Word in the Indictment are Christo, as the Greek with an O, and not Christu; and in Conformity with the Greek Spelling in the two first Syllables of the Word, we hope the next Syllable must be spelt so too: But since it is contended, that the Substance of this Objection must be put into a Plea in Abatement, we shall wait the Direction of the Court as to that Matter. As to the Words compassavit, imaginatus fuit & intendebat, there is something in that Objection too, they all relate to a Time past, but they are in different Tenses or Time; there is the Preterperfect and Preterimperfect Tense, and there is the Conjunction Copulative between them, as if both Tenses implied the same Times, which it is certain they do not, and therefore they Charge nought; for a Thing cannot be done lately and formerly, and both at the same Time.

As to the other Words ad capiend^o, seiscind^o & imprisonand^o, we are upon the Forms of an Indictment, and must be govern'd by the usual Forms: I believe there is no Instance on Record, where these Words are made use of in any Accusation of this Kind; for which Reasons we humbly hope this Indictment shall be quash'd.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I beg leave to offer a Word or two by way of Reply: Mr. Serjeant Pengelly is pleased to say, that Sense may be made of these Words, and that plenius veritatem as it is, is good Latin, by lifting these Words from the Bottom of the Sentence to the Top, and making them follow ad inquirendum. I believe four Parts in five of the Caption interfere between the inquirendum and the plenius veritatem, a whole Catalogue of Offences, several independent Sentences, different Times, Persons, Places, Things all stationed between, and yet these Words are to be united: I would be glad to know by what Rule of Grammar this can be done.

As to the Word Christopherus, I shall not further insist upon that as a proper Objection under this Head, because your Lordship seems to be of an Opinion that we ought to have pleaded it in Abatement.

As to the Word seiscind^o, it hath been said it is a Word well known in the Exchequer, but they don't shew one Instance where-ever it was used: Indeed they mention a Precept to the Sheriff seisire facias, and the Return seisire feci, but what is that to seiscindum; the one is justified by Usage, the seisitus as seisiri; besides seisiri is there used in the very same Sense which the Law hath imposed upon it; is to be put into Possession, the Lands are so delivered by the Sheriff into the Hands of the King, that he becomes seized thereof, ut de feodo & in jure Coronæ, till an Amoveas manus be obtained: But if ever that Word was put into any Indictment to signify to seize and imprison the King, 'tis entirely unknown to me.

Indeed here is one Piece of Doctrine offered, that if it holds good puts an End to all our Objections, and even to the Act of Parliament on which they are founded; but I must own it is entirely new to me: We are told there are other Words in the Indictment, and other Overt-Acts, and if one Act is sufficiently expressed by any one Word, though there be Words that are improper and false Latin, yet it shall not vitiate the Indictment; what avails then this Act that empowers us to make Objections to Mis-writing, Mis-spelling, false and improper Latin? 'Tis impossible to suppose, that whoever hath the drawing of an Indictment should make Faults and blunder on from first to last: No, in an Indictment for High-Treason the greatest Care is, or ought to be taken in the Drawing of it; and where the Life of a Person, and all that is valuable is at Stake, the Law will not subject any one to such dreadful Penalties and Forfeiture for an Offence expressed only by Words of an unknown or dubious Signification; and therefore, we hope that this goes to the whole, and that the Indictment shall be quash'd, or else it would be nugatory for us to be allowed to take Exceptions to one Part of the Indictment if the other were good.

I believe Mr. Attorney won't shew any Instance, (I submit it to his greater Experience) where he ever knew one Overt-Act in an Indictment set aside, and the rest of the Indictment held good: Exceptions have ever since the making this Act been taken and argued by Counsel, and determined; but if this be a sufficient Answer, surely they spent the Time of the Court to very little Purpose, in debating whether there were any Faults in the Indictment, when it was so easy to shew it was not faulty throughout. Mr. Serjeant Pengelly has been pleased to mention the Opinion of my Lord Chief Justice Holt, upon one of the Trials before him, that although one entire Overt-Act was insufficiently alledged, yet if there was any other well laid, the Court would not quash the Indictment; I wish he had told us in what Trial, or where it is to be found, for I don't remember it in any of the printed Trials: As to what was mentioned, with regard to the Authority of that Book, for the Words plenius veritatem, Mr. Hungerford rightly observed, that the Authority of that Book was utterly denied at the Trial of Matthews; your Lordship was not there, my Lord Chief Justice King presided then upon the Bench, that Book particularly directed, that not only the Names of the Jurors should be inserted in the Pannel, but also their Additions, and the Places where they lived; instead of that, the Copy of the Pannel delivered consisted only of a long List of bare Names, no Additions, nor where they lived; whereupon we made our Objection, and insisted on the Authority of that Book. Notwithstanding which, the Objection was then over-ruled, and consequently we hope we shall not be pinn'd down to the Authority of this Book any more in this Case, than the other; for these Reasons we hope your Lordship will be of Opinion that the King's Counsel have not given a full Answer to our Objections, and that the Indictment shall be quashed.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I beg leave to hand up this Precedent of my Lord Coke's, where these Words are entirely left out.

L. C. Just. What is the use you would make of setting up an extrajudicial Opinion of my Lord Coke's, as you call it, against the Opinion of all the Judges? Because it is not in my Lord Coke's, Form, therefore it is not necessary or right; but at the same time you would have us governed by my Lord Coke's Opinion, you would have us reject the Opinion of all the Judges. My Lord Coke may be wrong; the Opinion of all the Judges in an extrajudicial Case may be wrong; but it would be very strange to give a greater Weight to the extrajudicial Opinion of my Lord Coke, because he hath left the Words out, than to the Opinion of all the Judges that have put the Words in; neither is conclusive, but certainly the Opinion of all the Judges of later Times, must have more Weight, than the extrajudicial Opinion of a single Judge at any former Time.

As to the Matter of this Objection, you say that in the Recital of the Commission of Oyer and Terminer, in the Caption of the Indictment, it is said the Commissioners had Authority to inquire de quibuscumq; Proditionibus, &c. plenius veritatem; plenius veritatem comes in afterwards: We have been told of Classical and Ciceronian Latin, and if there be any Regard to be had to that, is any thing more common in every Part of Cicero, that to put Words last, that in Construction must come first? I don't know any Rule that is laid down when the Words coming last, are in Construction to be taken first, but only this, that the Construction is to be according to the natural Sense and Import of the Words; and if so, then in the Authority of these Commissioners, where it is said they were to inquire de quibuscumq; Proditionibus, &c. plenius veritatem, in Construction the last Words must be taken first. You say as they stand it is Nonsense and signifies nothing, and the Words are nugatory; 'tis not material where they stand, they must be taken in that manner of Construction as would make them significant, that is, by taking the last Words, plenius veritatem, to go first in Construction; then it is very proper and just and all will be well.

As to the Matter of the Misnomer that you have given up, and very justly, for you are proper to plead that in Abatement.

The next Objection is, you say here is improper Latin, Compassavit, in the Preterperfect Tense, Imaginatus fuit in the same Tense, and Intendebat in the Preterimperfect Tense; take these Words by themselves, suppose it had been Compassavit only, Imaginatus fuit only, or Intendebat only, would not either of these Words, whether in the Preterperfect or Preterimperfect Tense, have been sufficient to have charged Mr. Layer with having some time before compass'd and imagin'd the Death of the King? Every one of these Words charge him with the Intent of Compassing and Imagining, and that relates to a Time that is past, whether Preterperfect Tense, or Preterimperfect, that is not material: Then as to one of the Overt-Acts, as here be a great many to which no Objection is made, the High-Treason is compassing and imagining the Death of the King; the Overt-Acts are several, either is sufficient to maintain the Treason of compassing and imagining the Death of the King. One of the Overt-Acts is, that he did design, consult, and agree ad Capiend', Seisend', & Imprisonand', the Person of the King. Suppose it had been ad Capiend', & Imprisonand', then you say it had been well enough but the putting in this Word Seisend', will vitiate the whole, because it is an improper and vicious Word. I don't know that, nor dare not say in a Court of Law that it is an improper and vicious Word: You are told of a Court of Law where the Word is used, and hath the same Signification as in the Indictment; as to seize Lands into the Hands of the King, to seize Lands, or to seize the King's Person, the Word is the same, and if Seisire is good, and enough to signify to seize Lands, Seisire is enough to signify to seize the King's Person; therefore I think it is a proper Word, but whether it is or not, there is sufficient in the Indictment to maintain the Charge against Mr. Layer; for he is charged with a Consultation and Agreement to take the King, with a Consultation and Agreement to imprison and detain the King in Prison: These are sufficient without the Word Seisend', but the Word Seisend' hath been a Law Word, and used in our Proceedings at Law, never objected to; but if we say it would not signify a Seizing, we must set aside half the Proceedings in the Court of Exchequer. These are all the Objections you have made, and in my Apprehension they can be of no Use or Service to your Client; they signify nothing.

Mr. Just. Powys. I am of the same Opinion, Not the least Doubt remains with me.

Mr. Just. Eyre. I think the Caption of the Indictment is in common Form, and the Exceptions to the Indictment itself are fully answer'd.

Mr. Just. Fortescue Aland. I am of the same Opinion, and think the Objections to be of no Weight.

L. C. Just. The Objections being all overruled: Demand of him what he hath to plead.

Cl. of the Cr. Christopher Layer, hold up your Hand. How say you, Christopher Layer, are you Guilty of the High-Treason whereof you stand indicted, or Not Guilty?

Prisoner. I desire my Plea of Misnomer may be received. And I plead Not Guilty as to the Fact.

Abel Ketelbey.

L. C. Just. Your Plea is received. He hath pleaded in Abatement first, and then pleads over to the Treason. What say you to it?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. It can't be expected that we should have a Replication ready to their Plea in Abatement: We were not aware of this; therefore we ought to have Time to draw up a Replication.

L. C. Just. What say you to it?

Mr. Hungerford and Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, we have no Objection to it.

L. C. Just. Well, the Plea is recorded. Consider now the Question on this Plea is, whether he was baptized by the Name of Christophorus or Christopherus.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, to morrow and next Day being Holidays (else we should have been ready by to morrow) we therefore pray, that he may be brought up again on Saturday by Rule of this Court.

Mr. Hungerford. I have some doubt whether it can be by Rule, or by Habeas Corpus.

L. C. Just. When once a Habeas Corpus hath been granted, and he is brought before us, we can order him to be brought again by Rule. He must be taken back again, and brought up here on Saturday next.

Die Sabbati 3^o die Novembris 1722.

The Prisoner was this Day brought to the King's-Bench-Bar by the Lieutenant of the Tower, in Obedience to the Rule of Court made the 31st of October.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I have demurred to the Prisoner's Plea in Abatement, and pray the Demurrer may be read.

Cl. of the Cr. reads the Demurrer.

Rob. Raymond.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray they may join in Demurrer immediately.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, it is altogether a Surprise to us, and as the Clerk hath read it, it is impossible for us to take the Substance of this Demurrer. We therefore hope we shall be allowed a few Days to consider of this Matter of joining in Demurrer. We shall not ask many. The Precedents are so, the Prisoner was always indulged with some time in a Case of this Nature. Before the Act of Parliament for regulating of Trials, where Matters of Law were started, or any special Pleading did arise, the Prisoner was indulged with a great Number of Counsel. Fitzbarris had five, a greater Number than I ever knew engaged on one Side in Deliberations of this kind, unless it were that Number of learned Counsel which met to advise upon and adjust this Demurrer. But I think in the ordinary Course of the Court we are proper to desire two or three Days. Two or three Days is but a little time, especially when the Life of a Man is concerned. Mr. Attorney took from Wednesday to Saturday to consider of our Plea, we hope at least the same time should be allowed to us to consider of this Demurrer. I have in my Hand the Arraignment of and Proceedings against Fitzbarris, he was indulged several Days.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I have brought the Book along with me relating to Fitzbarris: As to the Matter of having time to join in Demurrer, whether we are not entitled to it by the Rules of the Court, I must submit to your Lordship. It is a Case of great Consequence; and, as I take it, the constant Practice is, that a four Days Rule is always given to join in Demurrer. This is always done, as I am informed, on the Crown-side as well as the Plea-side. The Tenour of the Rule is either to join in Demurrer within four Days, or to wave the Plea; but Mr. Attorney requires us to do it immediately. In Fitzbarris's Case the Attorney General demurred in Court, and the Counsel on the other Side refused to join in Demurrer immediately, and they had from Wednesday to Saturday. We hope therefore there shall be a four Days Rule for us to join in Demurrer as in all other Cases. If we are not regular in insisting upon four Days, we hope at least your Lordship will indulge us with some time; or if we do immediately join in Demurrer, that we shall have some time to prepare ourselves to argue to it.

L. C. Just. How say you, Mr. Harcourt? How is the Course of the Court?

Mr. Harcourt. My Lord, in criminal Prosecutions for Misdemeanours, two four Day Rules to plead are given, and a peremptory Rule moved for; and then if there be a Demurrer, one four Days Rule to join in Demurrer is given, and a peremptory Rule moved for: But in capital Cases there is no Rule given, either to plead or join in Demurrer; all Proceedings in such Cases being at Bar, the Prisoner is oblig'd on all Occasions to answer immediately, nor can there be any Instance shewn to the contrary.

L. C. Just. The Course of the Court is against you.

Mr. Hungerford. As to the Course of the Court, I know no better Description of it, than that it is the uninterrupted Usage of the Court warranted by Reason, or at least not contradicted by it. The Officer tells you that in criminal Cases

* The right Way seems to be, that ph should be followed with an o, and f with an e, the first being derived from the Greek, and the other from the Latin. See Lorwick's Indictment, Trial 155. where it is Christophorus Knightley. See also Co. Entr. 51. a. 55. b. 215. c. 309. c. d. 310. a. b. 319. a. 321. b.

which are not capital there are Rules for four Days, and four Days to plead; and likewise a four Days Rule to join in Demurrer; and surely, if in a criminal Case, which is not capital, a Man is indulged four Days; surely in a criminal Case as this is, which is capital, and doth touch a Man's Life, his Posterity, and his Estate, by Parity of Reason, the Indulgence ought to be more than four Days. I beg leave to observe one thing in the Case of Fitzbarris now in my Hand. My Lord Chief Justice there asks the Prisoner, will you plead over? If you will, you may have any Time in Reason. Now, my Lord, we have pleaded over, we have pleaded Not Guilty as to the Offence; so that for that Reason we might have till Hillary Term next, because we have forwarded them in their Journey already by pleading Not Guilty as to the High-Treason. And we hope therefore the Gentlemen of the other Side won't contend with us for two or three Days in a Case of this Nature.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I only beg leave to mention this single Word, that we don't insist upon this for Delay, or to put off the Trial; we have pleaded over to the Treason, and in case we should join in Demurrer, whatever Time is taken up in arguing it, cannot obstruct the Proceedings in order to the Trial: Nay the Trial may be had before the Matter of the Demurrer be determined.

L. C. Just. In case you should join in Demurrer, what can you do else?

Mr. Ketelbey. I believe we shall. If we had not thought our Plea would have stood a Demurrer, we had not made use of it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, what he prays is against the Rules of the Court; in all capital Cases there are no Rules given to plead or join in Demurrer, but the Proceedings are all Instant, the Prisoner being present in Person, and therefore, my Lord, there is nothing in what they ask. When they put in a Plea in Abatement here at the Bar, which cannot be expected or thought of, it is reasonable that there should be some time to consider of that, to see the Nature of it, and consider what to answer to it. We have demurred to their Plea; no doubt they had considered of their Plea whether it was a good Plea in Law or not; if it be not good, can they amend their Plea in Abatement? It was never allowed: If they can make no Alteration in that, what can they do? They can do nothing else but join in Demurrer; it is all they can do; and when they have joined in Demurrer, we shall see if they have any Reason for further Time. But as to what they say, that as to the Sufficiency of the Plea, it may be argued another time; and as they have pleaded over to the Treason, there needs be no Delay as to the Trial; I would be glad to see whether by this they do not deprive the Crown of the Election to proceed in such Manner as shall be thought most advantageous for the carrying on the Prosecution: But is it adviseable to leave a Plea in Abatement to the whole undetermined; and to try the Issue first? I believe they can shew no such Instance; and therefore in all capital Cases, as well as in criminal, the Plea in Abatement goes to the whole, to destroy the whole Indictment, and indeed ought to be determined before the Court goes on with the Trial. My Lord, we are surprized at what they mean by this, when they can do nothing else but join in Demurrer, and therefore we hope they shall join immediately.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, what we insist upon is not a new thing; the constant Practice in Cases of this Nature has been, that if a Demurrer is put into the Prisoner's Plea, he must join in Demurrer instant. I believe the Gentlemen of the other Side can't shew one Instance to the contrary. The Prisoner can do nothing but join in Demurrer. As to what has been said about our having time from Wednesday to Saturday, the Reason was because Thursday and Friday were no Westminster-Hall Days, for which Reason we could not have the Prisoner brought up before this Day. The putting in a Demurrer to this Plea can be no Surprize to the Counsel for the Prisoner; for Yesterday we sent Copies of our Demurrer to them. Mr. Pember, the Prisoner's Clerk in Court, had a Copy of it by two of the Clock in the Afternoon; and the Prisoner himself had one about four o'Clock. As to the Case of Fitzbarris which has been cited, it was a Plea looked upon to contain Things of very great Difficulty; the Time asked for there was not to join in Demurrer, but the time applied for was for settling the Plea; but as soon as Mr. Fitzbarris had pleaded, and the Attorney-General had demurred to it, the Court ordered the Prisoner to join in Demurrer instant. As to what has been said, that we may proceed to Trial on the Plea of Not Guilty before the Demurrer to the Plea in Abatement is determined, that is by no Means adviseable; the Consequence of that may be very mischievous; for if the Court should be of Opinion that the Plea in Abatement is good; after we have disclosed the whole Evidence against the Prisoner upon the Trial, though we obtained a Verdict for his Majesty, the whole must be set aside; and therefore we hope your Lordship will not break into the common Method of Proceedings; but make the same Rule for the Prisoner as always has been made in Cases of the like Nature; which is, that he shall join in Demurrer immediately.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord; I agree with the Counsel for the Prisoner that we are in a Case of Life, and that is the Reason why their Client should have all the Indulgence the Law will allow him. But I beg leave to observe, that we are not now on a Question that directly concerns the Merits of the Case, nor whether a Prisoner who is to answer for his Life at this Bar, should have time to send for his Witnesses, or prepare for his Defence. That indeed might be of a different Consideration. But we are now barely upon a frivolous dilatory Plea, as frivolous a Plea as ever was offered in any Case whatsoever; and the Question is, whether they, who have prepared and put in this dilatory Plea, shall have time given them to consider whether they will join in Demurrer upon it or not. As to the Case of Fitzbarris; whatever they have inferred from it, I think it rather turns against them. Was that a Plea of Misnomer? A Letter pretended to be mistaken in a Name, which I beg leave to say, when considered, will appear to have been always so written in legal Proceedings? No, it was a Plea of the Pendency of an Impeachment for the same Offence, sent up by the House of Commons to the House of Lords, and by Consequence, in that Case, the Prerogative of the Crown, the Jurisdiction of the Lords, and and the Privileges of the Commons were highly concerned. This was a Question of as great Weight, and perhaps of as great Difficulty, as could come before the Court, and therefore the Prisoner had time given him to plead that Matter; but when the Attorney General demurred to it, the Prisoner joined in Demurrer instantly: And as Mr. Harcourt acquaints your Lordship, the Practice is, that there is no such Rule for proceeding upon Demurrers in capital Prosecutions as in other Cases; and this appears by their never being set down in the Paper to be argued, as Demurrers always are in other Causes. So it was in the Case of Fitzbarris. That was argued by four or five Council of a Side, without being set down in the Paper. In the Case of the Prisoner, which is your present Consideration, more hath been done for him than was done for Fitzbarris. Here is not only a Demurrer given in by Mr. Attorney at the Bar, but the Prisoner's Attorney had a Copy of the Demurrer at Noon the Day before, and consequently they could not want Notice that we intended to demur, nor be under any Surprize from it. What then would they take time for? Can they do any thing but join in Demurrer? Can they amend in capital Cases? Or could they amend a Plea in Abatement in any Case? They know very well that they cannot. Can they withdraw their Plea? I believe they cannot do that neither without the Consent of Mr. Attorney General. If this be so, would they take time to consider whether they shall join in Demurrer, when they have no Choice, when it is impossible for them to do any thing else? But, my Lord, the Method of proceeding we are now insisting upon, hath been always taken in capital Cases. I agree when the Question has concerned the Merits of the Prisoner's Case, or when he has been to prepare and consider of some Matter which has been, strictly speaking, his Defence, time hath been allowed, but not in other Instances. Where the Exception taken hath been to the Jurisdiction of the Court, and time has been desired to make it good, it hath been denied; as in the Case of my Lord Preston, who was tried before my Lord Chief Justice Holt, and other Judges at the Old-Baily. My Lord Preston insisted, that he was a Peer created by Letters Patent of King James the Second, and consequently that the Court at the Old-Baily had no Jurisdiction to try him, and he prayed time to produce his Letters Patent in order to prepare and make good his Plea; but the Court refused to give him time for that Purpose. And I believe it will be found, that in all Instances where Pleas have appeared on the first View of them to be merely dilatory, and offered for no other Reason but to delay that Justice which ought to be done to the Crown, the Judges have refused to assist the Prisoner with any time beyond the ordinary Rules of the Court.

Mr. Reeve. I shall not take up your Lordship's time much in this Case. My Lord, we think in Civil Actions the Court on Motion would set this Plea aside, but in a Case of Life it is received, and Mr. Attorney has thought fit to demur to it. Is any Advantage lost, for the Prisoner to join in Demurrer instantly? I apprehend what they move for is to have time to join in Demurrer. Are they not as ready to do that now, as if they had a Week or ten Days time given them? Is there any thing else can be done? And is there any Occasion for time to do that which must be done? And cannot they as well join in Demurrer now, as if they had more time to do it? Certainly they may, my Lord, since by the Rules of the Court (as Mr. Harcourt informs your Lordship) there is no Rule given, but they are to join instantly. There is no Reason to allow them Time, since they can lose no Benefit or Advantage by joining instantly. So then, as we apprehend, we are in the Course of the Court, and there is no Reason why the Course of the Court should be altered in this Case, we therefore hope that they shall join in Demurrer immediately.

Mr. West. My Lord, I think there is nothing in the Exception of his Counsel not being ready to argue his Plea: No doubt they considered of it before they brought it in; and when they had produced their Plea, Mr. Attorney demurred to it. I can't see why they should insist so much for time, when they can do nothing else but join in Demurrer; therefore we hope that they shall instantly join in Demurrer.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I beg leave to set a Matter of Fact right, that is as to the Case of Fitzbarris, which was mentioned as an Authority against us by Mr. Attorney, but in truth is not so; for though Fitzbarris's Counsel did join in Demurrer immediately (or instanter, as 'tis called) yet that was not by the Coercion of the Court, but they voluntarily offered to join in Demurrer, upon an Opinion (as I presume) of their own great Abilities and Self-sufficiency in the Matter. But we have not that Opinion of our extempore Performances, but desire time to consider of this Matter. As to my Lord Preston's Case, quoted by Mr. Solicitor, it is true the Court did not give him leave to send for his Letters Patent, because, as my Lord himself had opened them, and the Truth was, his Letters Patent were dated at St. Germain's, and granted by K. James there, after his Abdication; and it would have been the highest Indignity both to the Court and the Government, to have such Letters Patent pleaded, or insisted on; and I believe no Gentlemen at the Bar then, or now, would have signed such a Plea, which if allowed would have implied that the Government was not well settled in their Majesties King William and Queen Mary, and that King James (though at St. Germain's) had a Right to create Peers, and consequently was really King. But if my Lord Preston had had Letters Patent regularly granted by King James or King William, in his Chambers, can any one say they would not have given him leave to send for them? Most certainly they would; but it appeared they were dated at St. Germain's, and granted to him there; that, with humble Submission, was the Reason why they would not indulge him with Time, and that Precedent therefore, I hope, is of no Weight in this Case. It is said we are tied down by our Plea; we knew our own Strength when we pleaded it, and therefore ought to be ready to argue it: But if my Memory doth not fail me (and therefore I speak it with some Doubt) I believe there are Instances where even in a criminal Case a Plea hath been amended. I believe it was so done in the Case of my Lord Banbury, which was a Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court.

My

My Lord, we shall desire but a very little Time, which I hope will be granted us.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, as to Fitzbarris's Case, the Plea was amended there: The first time it was brought in by Mr. Fitzbarris himself to the Bar, the Plea was brought in and read in Court; after the Plea was read the Court assign'd him Counsel, and gave him from Saturday to Wednesday to put the Plea in a regular and legal Method, and it was altered and brought in again on Wednesday. As to what the Attorney says, that the Court compelled him to join in Demurrer instantly, the Words of the Book which I have in my Hand are; "We that are assign'd Counsel for the Gentleman at the Bar, we don't design to delay the Proceedings, but to declare that we will join in Demurrer with them immediately." These are the Words of the Book; so that it was the voluntary Act of the Counsel, and they were not at all compelled to it by the Court. As to what Mr. Harcourt observes to be the Course of the Court, and that we can't shew one Instance to the contrary; I don't know whether they can shew one Instance for it, except in the Case of Fitzbarris; if they can shew in any capital Case one Instance, we shall submit.

It is called a frivolous Plea, the Variation of one Letter, and never writ otherwise: Whether it is frivolous or not will appear when it comes before your Lordship in Judgment: As to its never being wrote otherwise than with an E, I don't believe they can find it in any Book either great or small spelt so, unless they have met with it in Instructor Clericalis: All the Books of Authority are otherwise; I believe that one carries with it but little Weight. As to my Lord Preston's Case, which Mr. Sollicitor is pleas'd to cite against us, that the Court would not allow him time to make out his Plea, Mr. Hungerford hath given an ample Answer to that, and a true one as to the Circumstances; but if the Case of that Lord had been such as the Gentlemen of the other side are pleas'd to state it, What doth it prove, but the contrary to what the Court did in Fitzbarris's Case, and therefore the most that can be made of it is one Authority against another? and where Authorities are equal, we hope the Indulgence of the Court will interpose in favour of Life, and grant us such reasonable time as the Nature of the Thing requires, and not compel us instantly to join in Demurrer.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I beg leave to state one Fact right, and that is as to Fitzbarris's Case: They say the Plea was put in, and afterwards amended; that is a Mistake; the Fact was that his Wife brought a Plea into Court, and offer'd it to the Court, and press'd it might be received; but Mr. Fitzbarris was advis'd to consider what he did, and thereupon he took it back, and afterwards brought a Plea in, which was receiv'd, and after that it was never alter'd.

L. C. Just. I dare say it is the first time that ever in a capital Case, when a Plea in Abatement was pleaded, and the Attorney-General thought fit to demurr to it, that the Party desir'd time to join in Demurrer. You are not entitled to any time by the Course of the Court, you can't shew any Instance to prove it: The Question then is, Whether you have given any Reason for us to indulge you with time, that never was granted in a Case of this Nature.

VOL. VI.

You have pleaded in Abatement; you were enabled so to do by having a Copy of the Indictment; you brought your Plea ready engros'd, and put it in. Mr. Attorney not being aware of any such Plea, it could not be expected he should be ready with a Demurrer in his Hand to this Plea, and therefore he desired time to consider of it. The next Day it could not be, nor the next after that, they being Holy-Days; but then the very first time that he had an Opportunity to come, he comes and demurrs to your Plea: But you desire time, and why should you not have time, when they had time, to consider whether you shall join in Demurrer.

Do you want time to consider whether you shall join in Demurrer, after you have had time to plead and to draw up your Plea, and have brought it in to Court? Why should you have time? Can you do any thing else but join in Demurrer? You can do nothing else: And unless you can shew any Reason why the Court should indulge you, if you don't think fit to join, we must give Judgment against your Plea. You tell us of the Case of Fitzbarris; that is as widely different from this Case as any thing can be. It was a Case of great Difficulty, that required great Consideration, when a Party comes and informs this Court, and insists he is not within the Jurisdiction of the Court. When a Matter is urged to us as a Question of Law, if we were not bound as we are by Act of Parliament, we would certainly assign Counsel to the Prisoner to plead a Matter of that Nature; and when the Court in Fitzbarris's Case had assigned him Counsel, were those Counsel to argue immediately? It was nothing but Justice to give them time after they were assigned, to argue a Plea of that Nature; a Plea in which the Prerogative of the Crown, the Jurisdiction of the House of Lords, and the Rights of the Commons were concerned. The Court would not run hastily into the determining of that Matter, without hearing it debated by Counsel, and therefore they gave the Counsel time, upon which they might be able to give a just Judgment. Is there any thing in this Case like it? You have pleaded in Abatement. Mr. Attorney hath demurred to your Plea, and you desire we would give you time to do that which you must do, or do nothing at all. Is there any Pretence? Could you in this Case come with any Colour or Pretence of Justice, and desire of us to amend your Plea? Is there any thing else you can do? This is nothing but a pure dilatory Plea, and he puts in this Plea. The Question is, whether it should be an O instead of an E. You are not entitled to any thing of this Nature; it is nothing but an affected Delay; and it cannot be thought to be for any other Reason; therefore you must join in Demurrer immediately: If not, we must give Judgment against your Plea.

Mr. Just. Powys. My Lord Chief Justice hath given so full and clear an Account of the Matter, that I am satisfied, and do think you must instantly join in Demurrer.

Mr. Just. Eyre. I am of the same Opinion. In capital Cases the Party is obliged to plead instantur; for the Proceedings are carried on at the Bar without giving Rules: This is the constant Course; and the Course and Practice must be the same, in regard to the time for joining in Demurrer: But the Court is still at liberty to allow further time, if it be necessary to the Justice of the Cause; and if it could be of any Use to the Prisoner in the next Step he is to make, I should not be against it: But as the Case now stands, that he has nothing to deliberate upon, that he can lay no new Matter before the Court, but is obliged to abide by his Plea, and can neither withdraw nor amend it without Consent, but must necessarily join in Demurrer, and has no other Choice; I think it would be a manifest Delay of Justice to allow further time; and am therefore of Opinion, that he ought to join in Demurrer immediately.

Mr. Just. Fortescue Aland. I am of the same Opinion. The Prisoner can have no Benefit by our giving him time to join in Demurrer, except it be to put off the Trial: The Court makes a Difference in all Cases, both Civil and Criminal, between dilatory Pleas and other Pleas. An affected Delay is never to be suffered, more especially in a capital Case; and here it is plain, that when the Counsel for the Prisoner brought in this Plea, that they had consider'd it before, and thought it of Service to the Prisoner, and nothing more remains now than to join in Demurrer. The Attorney-General, by his Demurrer, says it is not a good Plea; and the Prisoner has nothing further to say, but that it is a good Plea; and if he does not think fit to say that, we must give Judgment against him. I remember in the Case of the King and Gordon, when the Prisoner came to the Bar, having lapsed the time of taking Exceptions, in order to quash the Indictment, he moved the Court for time to plead in Abatement; but the Court refused it, alledging they would give no Opportunity for a dilatory Plea: and I think there is the same Reason, if not stronger, in this Case, where the Prisoner has nothing to do but to join in Demurrer; that is to say, to submit to the Judgment of the Court, whether this be a good Plea or not; and that may be done immediately, as well as if the Prisoner had never so much time for it.

Prisoner. My Lord, I know not how consistent this Rule of Court may be, that in a capital Case of the highest Nature whatsoever that I should not be allowed time to join in Demurrer, when in criminal Cases of an inferior Nature there is a Four-days Rule given. The Counsel for the King were indulged from Wednesday to Saturday: I hope I shall have the same Indulgence on my Part, to consider whether I shall join in Demurrer or not.

I am so far from desiring to give any Delay, tho' I am satisfied how maliciously this Prosecution is carried on, and am pretty well acquainted with every Step taken in the Management in Essex; and I am willing, rather than to continue to be thus hunted up and down the World, to retract my Plea, and plead generally Not Guilty.

L. C. Just. If Mr. Attorney consents to it.

Prisoner. I am obliged to my Counsel for the Care they have taken of me, and have here in my Hand a Joinder in Demurrer engrossed and signed by them, and ready to deliver in; but I won't offer it, because I won't give any Delay to the Justice of the Court.

Mr. Hungerford. He stands upon his Plea of Not guilty to the Indictment.

L. C. Just. You have pleaded Not guilty; you have likewise pleaded a Misnomer, which hath been demurred to: Your Plea therefore now must be as pleaded in chief, and as put in at the time when it was first pleaded; you don't desire you may plead the same Matter again this Day?

Mr. Hungerford and Mr. Ketelbey. We do not.

Mr. Att. Gen. If I understand the Prisoner right, he pretends to be desirous that his Trial may come on, and therefore he is willing to withdraw his Plea in Abatement, and abide by his Plea of Not guilty: 'Tis what we desire likewise; and I wish we could go on in this Case as we ought, in a decent Manner, without having groundless Reflections continually made. Something hath been said of the Maliciousness of this Prosecution, and indirect Management, by some Body, 'tis not said whom, in the County of Essex. My Lord, I defy any Man to shew any single Step taken in carrying on this Cause, but what is perfectly right and justifiable.

I wish, out of Charity, that the Prisoner would consider the Circumstances he is in; if he did, he would not say this Prosecution is carried on by Malice; for if I know any thing of Evidence, I have no Reason to doubt but at the proper time there will enough appear against him to convict him.

Mr. Hungerford. I dare say the Prisoner did not entertain a Thought of reflecting upon any of the Profession concern'd in carrying on this Prosecution. But pray, my Lord, give me leave humbly to represent, that the Man's Case is hard; he tells you he is in Chains, and I see he is in great Pain even now; and I earnestly wish that he were eased in that Matter. I do not pronounce these Words out of any Affectation of Popularity, or to captivate the Auditory, as was insinuated in the Beginning of this Proceeding, but in mere Compassion I have to the Prisoner, and to all Mankind, which Temper I have shewn thro' all the Stages of my Life.

L. C. Just. You have been told by the Court already our Opinion, that it is not in our Power. We were told, and I perceive it is not denied, that he did once escape after he was taken; and if so, for the better securing him he was put in Chains: Do you ask us to take those Chains off? Can we do it? Or should we do it? If he should escape out of the Tower, shall not we be guilty of that Escape? The Circumstances of the Case ought and must govern. He says he is Innocent, and I hope he is; and if he be, he takes the properest Measures to knock his Chains off, let him make his Innocence appear; and it will appear whether he is Innocent or not, when we come to try the Cause.

Prisoner. If I thought it was contrary to Law to take off these Chains I should not mention it. I desire to observe, that these Chains were not put on till after a fourth or fifth Examination.

As to the Escape out of the Messenger's Hands, he never shew'd me his Warrant, and I did not know any Authority he had to keep me. As to escaping out of the Tower, it is not in my Power, neither is it my Inclination. I desire therefore to be eased of these Chains.

And another thing I desire is, that I might have an Opportunity to see my Relations, my Wife, that she might come to me.

Mr. Ketelbey. That was granted in Fitzharris's Case.

L. C. Just. As to the taking off the Chains you have had the Opinion of the Court, we cannot, we ought not to do it, it is a Breach of our Duty; as to the other Matter, he desires to see his Relations, what do you say to it?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as to Fitzbarris's Case, there was a great Deal of Caution used as to the Persons permitted to see the Prisoner; before they went in they were to be searched, and they were to be with him only in the Presence of the Keeper.

Mr. Ketelbey. It is mentioned there, that the Wife had misbehaved herself, and that a particular Caution ought to be taken with respect to her; but the Access of a Wife to her Husband under such unfortunate Circumstances was never denied, I believe, in any Case whatsoever.

L. C. Just. Upon a proper Application to the Court, the Court hath sometimes ordered that Persons named in their Rule may have Access to the Prisoner in the Presence of the Jaylor, and not otherwise, and that they should be searched before they come in. If you think fit to desire it on those Terms, the Court will consider of it.

Prisoner. My Lord, I must desire upon those Terms as the Court thinks fit, and that my Sister may have Liberty to come with my Wife.

L. C. Just. Your Wife and Sister: It may be reasonable for them to have Access to you, but they are not to be with you but in the Presence of the Jaylor*.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, I beg leave to observe whether it is usual for the Court to make such Rule: On the Trial of Sir John Friend, there it was only intimated by my Lord Chief Justice Holt, but the Court did not order it by making any Rule; they know they may apply properly, and there may be Directions given to the Lieutenant of the Tower: As to the Council that is allowed in the Act of Parliament; and as the Court hath a Power to assign Counsel, it is proper for the Court to give Directions for them to be admitted at all Seasons, and at all times.

L. C. Just. Why the Wife and the Sister?

Prisoner. Yes, my Lord, my Wife and Sister. I don't put in a Number of Relations.

L. C. Just. I do think, Brother Pengelly, that the Court are trusted in a Matter of this Nature; and may regularly give Directions with what proper Cautions they think fit. Why, he says, he is denied the Comfort of his Wife; he desires that his Wife and Sister may be admitted to come to him. You say it hath been sometimes intimated, but not ordered; if it was intimated by us, and not complied with, I believe I should make no Difficulty to order it, provided it be with a reasonable Caution, and no Inconvenience in it.

Whether is it the Wife or Sister you desire? I think one is enough, and she must submit to be searched †.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Before your Lordship makes any Rule in this Case for the Prisoner, I beg that he may be obliged to amend his Plea of Not guilty, and that he may plead by the Name of Christopherus, by which he is indicted. You have been brought to the Bar, and have put in a Plea by the Name of Christophorus; if you are in Earnest that you desire to wave your Plea in Abatement and have it withdrawn, you must change the Name wrote in the Commencement of the Plea; and make it as it is in the Indictment, that there may be no Embarrassment in the Proceedings at the End.

L. C. Just. You consent to have it amended?

Mr. Hungerford. The Prisoner at the Bar hath consented to withdraw his Plea in Abatement; and though the Plea were such that he might have prevailed upon it, yet after his pleading Not Guilty in general, there is not in the Course of this Proceeding any Period of time wherein he can avail himself with the Matter of this Plea in Abatement; and therefore we submit it to the Court, and to the King's Counsel themselves, to put this Matter into such a Form, that the Prisoner may come to a fair Trial upon the Issue of Guilty or Not Guilty.

Mr. Ketelbey. I believe the Prisoner is willing to come into the Method offered; and though this Plea hath been called a frivolous Plea, yet the Precaution taken by the Gentlemen of the other Side seems to give a Sanction to it, and makes it not so frivolous as hath been represented.

L. C. Just. What do you mean, Mr. Ketelbey? Here is nothing asked of you: You do desire to wave and withdraw your Plea; we desire to know, if you do, whether you will plead by the Name as it is in the Indictment.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, we do.

Mr. Att. Gen. We desire the Plea of Not guilty may be amended, upon the Consent of the Prisoner.

Mr. Hungerford. We offer now, let the Piece of Parchment be entirely abolished, take it entirely out of the way, and we plead Not guilty.

L. C. Just. Your Plea must be now Et prædictus Christopherus ductus hic ad barram. &c.

Mr. Ketelbey. We submit it.

Prisoner. I desire to withdraw and retract the other Plea, and do plead Not guilty.

L. C. Just. No, it must be mended; you will hear how it is when it is struck out and amended, and then you will tell us whether it is mended according to your Intent or no.

Cl. of the Cr. Et prædictus Christopherus Laver allocutus existens per Cur' hic de ali' proditiõ' prædicta per Indictament' prædict' ei superius imposit' qualiter se velit inde acquietari, Idem Christopherus Laver dicit quod ipse in nullo est inde culpabilis Et inde de bono Et malo ponit se super Patriam.

L. C. Just. Is this according to your Intention?

Prisoner. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, I believe it is usual in these Cases for the Court to appoint a Time for the Trial; the last Return but one in this Term is the 19th of November, so if you please it may be the quarto die post, which I think is Wednesday, if that be suitable and convenient to the Court.

L. C. Just. What say you to it?

Prisoner. I desire your Lordship would give me a longer Day to prepare for my Trial. I have a great Number of Witnesses, twenty or more, most of them People of the first Quality. I hope I shall have the common processes of the Court to bring them here; and, my Lord, another thing I desire is, that I may have a Habeas Corpus ad testificand', to bring my Lord North and Grey and my Lord Orrey at my Trial. That,

*See Hambden's Trial, No. 136. and Rookwood's Trial, No. 153.

† See the Proceedings against Fitz- my Lord, you would please to give me as long a Day as you can to prepare for my Trial; if your Lordship please it may be Monday the 26th, and then your Lordship will have a Day of Rest between.

L. C. Just. That will be out of the Return.

Mr. Hungerford. They must appear, and then may be adjourned.

L. C. Just. It cannot be adjourned over beyond the Return.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, the Prisoner hath shewn that he hath in no Respect affected Delay.

L. C. Just. It cannot be.—God forbid that we should deny the Prisoner to have a reasonable time to prepare for his Defence; it is three Weeks from hence; you have been aware of it long before; you have known the Indictment was found; you have had a Copy of it; you have known your Charge; and is not all this Time enough? Consider, the Term draws toward an End, and it interferes with the common Business of the Term if we carry it to a further Day: we do agree the Venire to be returned Octab. Martini, and the Trial then must be the quartodie post, which will be Wednesday the 21st. And it is proper for us to give you an intimation now, not to expect any further time, or the Jury to be adjourned; do but consider what a Multitude must be brought up, eighty at least: The Prisoner hath a Privilege to challenge thirty five peremptorily, and after, for Cause, as many as he pleases; so that a great Number must be brought up; and for them to be forced to attend here the 21st, and still the Trial to be put off, it will be a great Inconvenience and a great Charge, therefore that must be the Day, we shall not consider to put it off till any farther Time.

Prisoner. I beg leave for one Word more; I have a Witness that is to come from Edinburgh, and I can hardly have him here by the 21. If I could but be indulged a few Days longer——

L. C. Just. We cannot do it without making an Error in the Proceedings.

Prisoner. Is there no other Return for a Venire to be returnable?

L. C. Just. No, there is none but that, and the last Return of the Term; and it is impossible to try him that Day, without doing a manifest Wrong and Injustice to the People of England.

Prisoner. My Lord, where a Man's Life is at Stake, if I should not be indulged over till the last Day of the Term, for want of a Witness I may be in danger of my Life: I hope therefore your Lordship will please to indulge me.

L. C. Just. You have had a great deal of Time already, Time sufficient to bring your Witness from Edinburgh, or any other Place, and we cannot do it. To put you off to the last Day of the Term, is to do a manifest Wrong to the People of England.

Prisoner. The Reason why I mention it over and over again, is because I would not give your Lordship the Trouble to be turned over to another Day, on troubling your Lordship with Affidavits.

L. C. Just. In what you lay before us as Matter proper for Consideration, we shall do what is just. It is not proper for you to tell us what we have to do, and to make Bargains with us. That is the Day of Trial; it must be on Wednesday the 21st: Your Counsel will tell you it is impossible to comply with your Request, without doing the manifestest Injustice in the World. Or else, whether to try you upon the 21st, or in two, or three, or four Days after, I don't think the Consequence worth disputing, but we can't do it without doing Wrong and Injustice to the People of England.

Prisoner. I hope I shall be indulged two or three Days.

L. C. Just. We can so no more. The Time you have had for Preparation for your Trial we think abundantly sufficient to prepare your self, therefore we are of Opinion that the Trial go on at that Day; and we order it accordingly.

Mr. Ketelbey. Your Lordship will please to order a Rule for his Wife and Sister to come to him.

L. C. Just. No, not for his Wife and Sister.

Prisoner. My Lord for a single Woman to come thro' the Courts and the Guards, to be examin'd by her self, it's not so proper, my Lord.

L. C. Just. You shall have a Rule from the Court for your Wife to come; as for your Sister, we must leave that to the Direction from another Place. We must not be too forward in granting Women to come, we remember an Escape occasion'd by a Woman coming thither.

Mr. Att. Gen. There must be a Rule to bring him up at the Day of his Trial.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, as to having his Habeas Corpus ad Testificand' for my Lord North and Grey, and my Lord Orrery.

L. C. Just. You must give Notice, and then move what you please.

Mr. Hungerford. By what was said, I did understand, I must confess, that though the Rule was made for the Wife only, yet that it might be in the Power of the Gentleman Jaylor to permit her Sister to come with her.

L. C. Just. We give no Direction concerning it. He will have a Rule from the Court that will be his Direction, unless he receives any additional Direction from another Place, but the Court names his Wife only.

Mr. Ketelbey. There was another thing mentioned, that he may have Copies of his Papers that were seized.

L. C. Just. Give Notice for what you think fit, and move it.

Die Mercurii 21 die Novembris 1722.

THIS Day Christopher Layer, Esq; was brought to the Bar, in Custody of the Lieutenant of the Tower, in pursuance of the Rule of Court made for that Purpose, in order to his Trial.

Cl. of the Cr. You Christopher Layer, now Prisoner at the Bar, these Men which you shall hear called, and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death: If you will challenge them, or any of them, your time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

Heneage Norton, Esq;

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, we desire that his Irons may be taken off.

L. C. Just. The Irons must be taken off; we will not stir till the Irons are taken off.

Prisoner. I hope, my Lord, that the Irons shall be now taken off.

L. C. Just.

L. C. Just. They shall be taken off.

Mr. Hungerford. The poor Man hath been fo opprefs'd by these Chains, that he was not able to prepare his Brief. I had it not till late last Night; and it is ten Sheets of Paper.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whose Fault is that? You have had Time enough.

Mr. Hungerford. It is the Fault of the Irons, Mr. Attorney, the Brief was not brought to me till Eleven of the Clock last Night.

L. C. Just. It was an Omission; they should have been taken off before he came to the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. There was Direction given for their being taken off before; how they came not to be taken off, I can't tell.

L. C. Just. Are the Irons taken off?

Gent. Faylor. Yes.

L. C. Just. Go on.

Cl. of the Cr. Heneage Norton, Esq;

L. C. Just. You must call over all the Jury.

Mr. Hungerford. I thought they would be all called over once, before any one is endeavoured to be sworn.

Cl. of the Cr. They have been called over already.

Mr. Hungerford. When? Not since the Court fate, I am sure. I would know whether the Intention is, that all the Pannel be called over before any one of them is sworn, or that the Pannel is to be called over but once, and the Jury-men sworn as they then appear. What I have observed is, the Clerk calls over the whole Pannel first, to see how many appear; and then calls it over again, and swears them as they answer to their Names if not challenged.

L. C. Just. What you observe is what hath been done at the Old-Bailey; there they call them over first; and then they call them over again, and as they appear they are sworn presently. But by the Courte of the Court here they are called over before the Court is sitting, and they mark those that appear. That is not sufficient; but they are called over again in Court, and then their Appearance and Non-appearance being marked, they do call those over again that did appear; and as one appears, if there is no Objection to him, he must be sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. I have observed them to be called over when no body is by, in civil Cases; but in such a Case as this, a Case of High-Treason, where peremptory Challenges is allowed, it is some Guide to the Prisoner in making his Challenges, to know before-hand who do and who do not appear.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, with Submission, in all criminal Cases there is no other Method than calling over the Pannel according as it is transmitted into Court. 'Tis probable several of the Jurors who did not appear at their being called over before the sitting of the Court will now appear; and therefore what we pray is that the whole Pannel may be now called over in the Order as it stands, not only those who answered to the first Call, but those also who then made Default.

Mr. Att. Gen. I can't imagine what they mean.

L. C. Just. This Debate arises from not understanding one another: You have the Direction of the Court; the Pannel is to be called over, if any Man doth not appear, his Default is, marked and recorded. When any one doth appear, and he is not challenged, he is to be sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. I came thro' the Hall just now, and there is such a Crowd that it is almost impossible for any one to hear when they are called.

Prisoner. My Lord, I hope they shall be once called over before they come to be sworn; for as to their being called before, that was before I came; it will spend but a little time to read over forty or fifty Names.

L. C. Just. Call them over. I would not deny any thing that is desired in Reason by or on the Prisoner's Behalf; consider what you are doing; the Prisoner hath had a Copy of the Pannel, he hath examined it, and considered who are proper for him to challenge peremptorily, and he hath considered who they are that he may challenge with Cause.

I can't imagine; it was never done in this World: We have asked our Officer: They ought to call over all the Pannel; but if they do not appear, their Default is marked; if they do appear, the Prisoner knows whether he likes them or not.

Therefore when they come to the Bar, if not challenged they must be sworn.

Consider what this Demand is; we shall be an Hour calling them over the first time, that it may appear to the Prisoner whether they appear or not; then afterwards you are to call them over again, and to have them brought up again when they come to be sworn. But if it ever hath been done, it is fit it should be done now; but our Officer tells us it never was done, and why should you insist upon it now? you have had all the Indulgence the Law allows you.

Prisoner. I have not had a Copy of the Pannel above two Days before. Here hath been in this Cause all the vile Practices——

L. C. Just. You must keep within due and proper Bounds. You are come now to be tried for an Offence you are charged withal; but you are not to arraign and challenge every body else; you have no Right to do it. If in proper time it appears you have been ill used, the Court will do you Justice, and punish those that have been guilty of any Misbehaviour.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, if they have any Objection to the Jury, they are to challenge them peremptorily, when the Jury come to be sworn. Then is their time; they are not to entertain the Court with Speeches before.

L. C. Just. No it is not proper.

Consider how unreasonable it is for the Prisoner to arraign somebody's Misbehaviour without naming him. But in this Method he is insinuating Objections, which we can't examine whether they are true or false, on purpose to captivate People; and it may be, mislead them in the Trial of the Cause.

Mr. Ketelbey. As I came in, I observed that all the Avenues to the Court are barricadoed up, and only a narrow Place left on the Stone Steps, and a Guard kept there to keep out whom they don't think fit to let in.

Mr. Att. Gen. I know nothing of it; and I dare say nobody will give any Countenance to hindering either Jury-men or Witnesses coming into Court, when their Attendance is required here.

Mr. Ketelbey. I had much ado to get in myself.

L. C. Just. There shall be due Care taken, that any of the Jury that appear, we will order Way to be made for them.

Mr. Hungerford.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I will take up but very little of your Time in this Matter; I find I was not understood before; that which I contend for is, that the Pannel be read thro' once in the Prisoner's Presence; to see what Jury-men appear, before any Jury-man is sworn. The Prisoner hath a Right to challenge thirty five peremptorily, or without assigning any Cause at all. Now, my Lord, this is a Favour, an Indulgence granted to him by Law, and he is therefore entitled to it in Justice. It is of great Use to the Prisoner, in order to enjoy the true Benefit of this Indulgence that the Law gives him, that he knows who doth and who doth not appear, for this Reason perhaps, if he did know that such an one appears he will take him, and if he knows that such an one appears he will challenge him. And if he know that such an one, who perhaps stands low in the Pannel, and of whom he has a good Opinion for being an honest Man, will appear, he will challenge as many as he can of the preceding Persons, in order to have him, that honest Man, of his Jury. And as to the Time the reading of the Pannel will take us, (though by the way it might have been over by this time) I am sure your Lordship and the Court will not regard what Proportion of Time you spare us, to let the Prisoner enjoy the Benefit of the Law in this Case, and to have a full Enjoyment of the Indulgence of the Act of Parliament in its full Latitude, that he may know and judge (as far as the Law hath enabled him) who is to pass upon him as to his Life and Death. I beg therefore, my Lord, that the whole Pannel may be called over once before the Prisoner is put to challenge.

Prisoner. My Lord, What we humbly move for is what is every Day done at the Old Bailey, that they may be once called over.

All I desire is what is done there, and by the same Reason ought to be done here in the same Case where a Man's Life is concerned. I humbly move it that they may be called over.

L. C. Just. We shall grudge no Time to do the King and you Justice. It is dangerous to make a Precedent, an Innovation: But if you desire it, I don't find the King's Counsel object to it.

Call over the Pannel.

You don't expect all should be brought into Court, but only to know if they do appear?

Mr. Hungerford and Mr. Ketelbey. No, no.

L. C. Just. The Prisoner hath a Solicitor; let some Body go down upon the Steps, the Solicitor be present, and then he will hear who do and who do not appear.

Mr. Hungerford. We humbly thank your Lordship; this is a real Indulgence, and we humbly thank your Lordship for it.

Cl. of the Cr. Calls over the whole Pannel.

You the Prisoner at the Bar, these Men which, &c.

Mr. Ketelbey. If your Lordship pleases to stay till the Solicitor comes in, because he went out to observe who did appear, and who did not appear.

Cl. of the Cr. Heneage Norton. Have you ten Pounds a Year Freehold and Copyhold in the County of Essex?

Norton. I have no Freehold, only Copyhold.

[Then he was set aside.]

John Wilks. [Ask'd the same Question, as were all the others who appeared, before they were either challenged or sworn.]

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Mark Frost.

Prisoner. I challenge him.

Thomas Clarke.

Prisoner. I don't challenge him.

Crier. Thomas Clarke.

Sworn.

Henry Longbotham.

Prisoner. I say, I think his Name is wrong spelt.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We are not now upon Exceptions for Mis-pelling. If his Name is written as he is usually called, it is right.

Prisoner. He says his Name is with an o, and it is written here with an a.

L. C. Just. Doth the Copy delivered to you agree with the Pannel? if it doth, as long as it hath the same Sound it will do.

Prisoner. With humble Submission in the Case of Francia there it was allowed.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, it is not the same Sound Longbotham and Longbothom, and in Francia's Case the Difference of a Letter was allowed to be a good Exception.

L. C. Just. You are by Law to have a Copy of the Pannel delivered to you; if that Pannel varies from the other, it is a just Exception; but if you object against a Jury-man because his Name is not right spelt, and that hath the same Pronunciation, and he may be called sometimes one and sometimes another it is well enough.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, as to this Objection, whether the Longbotham is right, or the Longbothom, whether it is with an A or an O.—

Cl. of the Cr. You mistake, it is Longbotham, and not Longbothom.

Prisoner. The last should be an O instead of an A, Longbothom.

L. C. Just. Therefore we will ask the Gentleman how his Name is usually pronounced, whether it is not pronounced sometimes Longbothom as well as Longbotham.

Mr. Longbothom. Yes, my Lord, it is.

Prisoner. He says he spells his Name with an O, and here it is with an A.

Longbothom. I always spell my Name with an O, but my Letters are generally directed to me with an A.

Mr. Hungerford. He hath a Copy of the Pannel delivered him by vertue of the Act of Parliament; if the Copy be not a true Copy, it is not right according to the Direction of the Act.

L. C. Just. Right.

Mr. Hungerford. Now the Pannel which the Prisoner hath is spelt with an A, and the Pannel of which this is a pretended Copy, is, I take it, spelt with an O.

Cl. of the Cr. No, they are both spelt alike.

L. C. Just. You know it, Gentlemen, as well as can be. Don't let us spend Time where there is nothing in it; we will hear what is proper for our Consideration.

Suppose a Man is called and writ sometimes Longbothom, and sometimes Longbotham; and suppose he was called by either of these Names, may he not therefore be called by one as well as the other? Is that an Objection to say he writ with an O, but People write to him with an A? there is nothing at all in it.

Prisoner. I don't challenge him.

Mr. Att. Gen. I challenge him for the King.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Attorney is pleased to challenge him for the King; we humbly insist on it, that Mr. Attorney is to shew his Cause of Challenge immediately. I own it has been otherwise in one or two late Instances; but I submit it, if that Practice should prevail, whether the Act of Parliament made on that Occasion would not be in Effect thereby abrogated. The Act is the 33 Edward I. and the Words of it are: "If they that sue for the King will challenge any Juror, they shall assign of their Challenge a Cause certain, and the Truth of the same shall be inquired of according to the Custom of the Court." Now, my Lord, I beg leave to observe upon this Pannel there are a hundred and odd Persons, if Mr. Attorney is not obliged to shew his Cause of Challenge, when he challenges for the King, till all the Pannel is gone through, this Act of Parliament will be of no Validity whatsoever. If there had been but a few returned (twenty four, or such a Number) then there might have been some Colour for going through the Pannel before there was any Cause assigned for the Challenge; but since this modern Practice has obtained to make so numerous a Pannel, if they are not obliged to shew Cause till the Pannel is gone through, that Law is intirely a dead Letter, and of no Significancy.

L. C. Just. You know your Objection is of no Validity; you cite an Act of Parliament, and you know the constant Practice is against you.

Mr. Just. Eyre. Though the Counsel for the King must assign their Cause of Challenge, yet they are not obliged to do it till the Pannel is gone thro', and the Jury-men returned, who are not challenged, are all sworn: This is a Rule laid down in Hale's Pleas of the Crown, and has been always the constant Practice in Cases of this kind.

Mr. Hungerford. What your Lordship directed in the last Case is certainly precedented; but I would propose it as a Convenience that the Attorney should, as he is every ways entitled, have the Precedence, and might challenge first, and then we will determine after him.

L. C. Just. No, we must not do that.

Prisoner. Whenever I make a full Stop and don't say I challenge, you do.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the Prisoner is to declare whether he challenges or not; afterwards the King's Counsel are to declare whether they challenge for the King, and the Jury-man is not to put his Hand on the Book till then.

L. C. Just. He ought not to put his Hand on the Book till he is allowed a Jury-man; that if the King or the Prisoner challenge him, they may do it before he lay his Hand on the Book.

Cl. of the Cr. Joseph Capon.

Prisoner. I don't challenge him.

Mr. Att. Gen. I challenge him for the King.

Mr. Hungerford. More have been challenged for the King, than hath been known in any public Trial in my Remembrance.

Mr. Att. Gen. I am surprized at this Observation, when the King has an undoubted Right of challenging whom he pleases, without shewing Cause till the Pannel is gone through.

L. C. Just. If it was of any Service to you it should be done; but if it is so, it is no Objection.

Mr. Ketelbey. The Objection was once made in the Case of Sir William Perkins. It was recommended to the King's Counsel.

L. C. Just. I deny it. It was not recommended to the King's Counsel, but the King's Counsel did not insist upon it.

Mr. Just. Fortescue Aland. The Court in that Case gave their Opinion, that to be a Servant to the King was no good Cause of Challenge, and my Lord Chief Justice Holt and Treby were present, and Mr. Attorney General did not insist on the Jury-man so challenged, but waved the Matter without any Recommendation of the Court.

Mr. Ketelbey. I know no other ways, than if Mr. Attorney will do it, as it was done in that Case.

Mr. Att. Gen. I know nothing of the Fact.

Cl. of the Cr. Christopher Layer, Hold up your Hand. Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause.

He stands indicted by the Name of Christopher Layer, late of the Parish of St. Andrew's Holborn, in the County of Middlesex, Esq; For that he, &c. — Upon this Indictment he hath been lately arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and the Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether he be guilty of this High Treason, in Manner and Form as he stands indicted, or Not Guilty. If you find him him Guilty, you shall enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had, at the Time of the said High Treason committed, or at any Time since: If you find him not Guilty, you shall enquire whether he fled for it. If you find that he did fly for it, you shall enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty. If you find him not Guilty, and that he did not fly for it, say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Wearg. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment against the Prisoner for High Treason. The Indictment sets forth, That he being a Subject of his present Majesty King George, but not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor considering the Duty of his Allegiance, as a false Traitor against his supreme, true, lawful, and undoubted Lord, contriving and to the utmost of his Power intending to change, alter and subvert the Government of this Kingdom, lawfully and happily established under his present Majesty, and to depose and deprive his said Majesty of his Title, Honour, Royal Estate and Government of this Kingdom; and to advance to the Crown and Government of this Realm, the Person in the Life of the late King James II. pretended to be Prince of Wales, and after the Decease of the said King James pretending to be and taking upon himself the Stile and Title of King of England, by the Name of James III. did upon the twenty fifth Day of August, in the ninth Year of his present Majesty's Reign, and at several other Days and Times, at Layton-Stone, in the County of Essex, falsely, maliciously, and traiterously, compass, imagine, and intend to depose our said Sovereign Lord King George, from his Title, regal State and Government, and the said King to kill and bring to utter Destruction.

The Indictment further sets forth, That he the said Christopher Layer, to perfect and bring to Effect his Treason and traiterous Purposes, on the said twenty fifth Day of August, and at several other Days and Times, at Layton-Stone aforesaid, together with divers other false Traitors, to the Jury unknown, did falsely, maliciously, and traiterously meet, consult, conspire and agree, to move and stir up an Insurrection and Rebellion in this Kingdom, against our said Sovereign Lord the King.

The Indictment further sets forth, That he the said Christopher Layer, to perfect and compleat his Treason and traiterous Purposes, on the said twenty fifth of August, at Layton-Stone aforesaid, with Force and Arms, did falsely, maliciously, and traiterously publish a certain malicious, seditious, and traiterous Writing, containing in it self, and purporting to be, an Exhortation and Promise of Rewards to the Subjects of his said Majesty, to persuade and excite them to take up Arms and levy War against our said Sovereign King George.

The Indictment further sets forth, That the said Christopher Layer, together with other false Traitors to the Jury unknown, to compleat and bring to Effect his traiterous Purposes, on the said twenty fifth Day of August, at Layton-Stone aforesaid, with Force and Arms, did falsely, maliciously, and traiterously meet, consult, conspire and agree, to exalt to the Crown and Royal Dignity of this Realm the Person in the Life of the late King James II. pretended to be Prince of Wales, by means of an armed Force and Troops of Soldiers, for that Purpose to be raised and levied.

The Indictment further sets forth, That the said Christopher Layer, to perfect his said Treason, on the said twenty fifth Day of August; at Layton-Stone aforesaid, maliciously and traiterously did raise, levy, and retain several Men, to the Jury unknown, to take up Arms and levy War within this Kingdom, against our said Sovereign Lord the King.

That the said Christopher Layer, to perfect his treasonable Purposes on the said twenty fifth Day of August, at Layton-Stone aforesaid, together with divers other false Traitors, to the Jury unknown, did falsely, maliciously, and traiterously meet, conspire and agree, to take, seize, imprison and detain in Custody the Sacred Person of our said Sovereign Lord the King, against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of the King, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. To this Indictment the Prisoner hath pleaded, Not Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. May it please your Lordship, and Gentlemen of the Jury; the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Layer, comes now to be tried before you, for a wicked and detestable Conspiracy against the Person of his Majesty, and against his Government; and this in favour of an attainted and abjured Pretender; a Pretender whom the Prisoner himself has abjured in Words, and ought to have renounced in his Heart,

The Indictment contains a Charge of High-Treason against the Prisoner at the Bar, for compassing and intending the deposing the King, and also his Death and Destruction.

The particular Facts laid to prove this traiterous Imagination and Intent, and which the Prisoner put in Execution, in order to bring to Effect his treasonable Purposes, are five.

The first is; That the Prisoner, with other Traitors, did consult, conspire, and agree to raise a general Insurrection and Rebellion in this Nation against his Majesty.

The next; That he did publish a seditious and treasonable Declaration, containing Incitements, and Promises of Reward, whereby to excite and stir up his Majesty's Subjects to take up Arms, and to levy War against his Majesty within this Realm.

And farther; That he, with other Traitors, conspired, consulted and agreed, by an armed Force, to exalt, and bring the Pretender to his Majesty's Crown, to the Throne of these Kingdoms, and put him into the Possession of the Government thereof.

That hath provided, levied, and retained several Persons, to take up Arms, and to levy War against his Majesty within this Kingdom, for the executing these traiterous Purposes.

The last Overt-Act alledged, and to finish this Conspiracy, is, That he, with the other Traitors, consulted, conspired, and agreed to seize upon, and to imprison the sacred Person of his Majesty.

Gentlemen, it is unnecessary, when these Facts are opened to you, to acquaint you, that an Attempt of this Nature, if it had succeeded, would have been the Subversion of the present happy Establishment, and the Protestant Succession, so often confirmed by the Consent of the whole Nation, tion, and the only Security of your religious and civil Rights and Liberties; they would all have been exposed to the Arbitrary Power of a Popish Faction, under the Tyranny of the Pretender.

Gentlemen, having said this to shew the Nature of the Offence; we (who are Counsel for his Majesty) shall proceed to lay before you the particular Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar: Gentlemen, we have been so fortunate as to discover, and shall produce before you, the very Plan itself, upon which these Conspirators proceeded, and which was to be put in Execution.

We shall produce the Plan under the Prisoner's own Hand-writing, and shew his acting correspondent to that Plan, and in the Execution thereof; this Plan is a compleat Scheme of a treasonable Insurrection, if that may be called compleat which tends to utter Destruction; for if the several Parts therein contained had been executed, it would have been a total Overturning of the Government and Constitution.

But you may observe a Regularity going thro' the whole Scheme.

The Place of Action, and the Scene where this Conspiracy was first to be put in Execution, was in the City of London, and tho' in the Plan it self the Day is not mentioned, yet we shall shew to you, by the Prisoner's own Declaration and Discovery, the Time when it was to be executed; it was at the breaking up of the Camp of his Majesty's Forces in Hyde-Park.

Gentlemen, the Plan contains a Disposition of several Officers, who were appointed to their particular Stations, and were to be supplied with Men designed to be procured for the Execution of this Plan; and, as the Conspirators hoped to debauch part of the Army, these Officers were to be disposed at several Places, to receive the private Men, who, to the Number of about two Hundred (towards the Evening of the Day agreed upon for Execution) were to go singly out of the Camp, without their Arms, that they might more easily pass without Observation, and were to be collected together at a Place of Rendezvous appointed them.

Gentlemen, from the Management of the Conspiracy, and the Method they had taken to carry it on, and the Hopes they had entertained, the Conspirators concluded, they should have that Number of two hundred Men ready in one Body, to be commanded by proper Officers, to make the first Attempt, and the first Stand.

At the Place of Rendezvous they were to be supplied with Muskets ready loaded, and to receive their Arms, which were to be distributed to them a little before the Hour of Nine; at which Hour exactly, they were to march directly to the Tower of London, (as the Plan proposes, and as the Prisoner agreed and declared) where they might expect to be admitted, by the Help and Assistance of their Friend, the Officer upon the Guard; and as soon as they had entered, they were to shut up the Tower Gates, and seize the Arms.

Their General was to make his Stand in Person at the Royal Exchange; at the same time, it is directed by the Plan, and was consulted upon, and agreed by the Prisoner himself, they were to attempt to arrest the Persons of several great Men; and although the Plan doth not name the Persons, yet the Prisoner hath explain'd it fully, and from his own Mouth we shall prove, who the particular Persons are, thus intended to be seized.

A Declaration was to be dispersed to excite People to come in to the Rebels; the Gates of the City of London were to be shut up, and Cannon brought down against them: They were then to set a Guard over the Bank; but in the first Place, they were to take out Money sufficient to pay their Men, such as they hoped would appear in their Interest: Their several other Parties were to secure the Artillery in the Camp, the Guns in the Privy-Garden, the Cannon and Ammunition near the Horse-Guards in St. James's Park.

These were the first Operations: But to finish this villanous and execrable Design, at the Time the Tower was seized, and the City in Arms, they were to send a Detachment to seize the Person of his Majesty; and this they expressed in their Plan to be, for the securing his Person from the Mob. But our King was to be delivered to their General at the Tower, and to be put under his Custody. Thus the Life of his Majesty was to be in their Power.

After this, there are several other Dispositions of Officers, and other Persons, in order to excite and carry on the Rebellion: Some were to appear in Totbil-Fields, some in Southwark, who were to give Arms to the Minters; some at Greenwich, to engage the Watermen, and seize the Magazine and Powder there, and others at other Places.

Gentlemen, you will find in this Plan a Preparation to make an entire Conquest of the Cities of London and Westminster; upon which the Conspirators hoped the rest of the Kingdom would declare for the Pretender: And there is one particular Provision in the Plan, that as they proceeded here, and found Success, the General should immediately dispatch Messengers into the several Counties of England, to give Intelligence of their Progress, and to persuade those, who they looked upon to be in their Interest, to declare for the Pretender, and to rise in their respective Counties with their Adherents.

This is the Plan upon which the Conspiracy is carried on; and as we shall produce this Plan, which the Prisoner hath supplied himself with, and written with his own Hand, we beg leave to insist upon that, as strong Evidence against the Prisoner, upon the Overt-Acts alledged in the Indictment, of his consulting and conspiring to raise a Rebellion and Insurrection in the Nation, and to seize the King's Person.

Gentlemen, upon this Plan, which the Prisoner at the Bar had thus furnished himself with, you will find, on the Examination of our Witnesses, that he constantly acted; he declared for, and promoted the Execution of the principal Parts of it.

Gentlemen, the Witnesses we shall call who were engaged with the Prisoner at the Bar, in this Design, are Stephen Lynch and Matthew Plunkett; (which last had been a Serjeant in the Army) with whom the Prisoner consulted, and whom he engaged in this desperate Attempt; and we shall call some other Witnesses to confirm several Circumstances in their Evidence.

Mr. Lynch is a Person the Prisoner might have reasonable Hopes of engaging in this Service: He had been formerly acquainted with one Dr. Murphy, who (I am instructed) was in the Rebellion that that broke out in the Beginning of his Majesty's Reign: Mr. Lynch having been abroad, and absent for some time, returned into England in April last: Upon his Return, Dr. Murphey, his old Acquaintance, meets with him, bids him welcome to England, and tells him that an Affair was going on by which he might make his Fortune, and advises him not to go out of England: That there was an Intention to rise in Favour of the Pretender, whom he called his King, and he would take care to recommend Mr. Lynch to a Person who had a great Part in that Affair.

Mr. Lynch having suffered before, and run a great Hazard, was unwilling immediately to enter into any Engagement, but proposed, that if he could have sufficient Encouragement, and what he expected as a Reward, he should be willing to stay. Some time after Dr. Murphey introduces Lynch to the Prisoner at the Bar: The first time they met, I think it was the Beginning of June last, they went to the Prisoner's Lodgings, which were then at the upper End of Chancery-Lane; and he being about to remove his Goods, desired them to go to a Tavern hard by, the Griffin Tavern in Holbourne. To this Place the Prisoner at the Bar came, where Dr. Murphey presented Lynch to Mr. Layer, as the Gentleman Dr. Murphey had before recommended to him; Mr. Layer received Mr. Lynch at that time with great Civility, and tells him, that the Recommendation he had received of Lynch from Dr. Murphey, made him not to doubt of his Integrity and Ability. Then they entered upon a Consultation as to the carrying on of this Design; Mr. Layer introduced it with representing an Uneasiness in the Nation in general, and how fair an Opportunity there was to bring about a Revolution: But Mr. Layer tells him, that one of the first and principal Steps was to seize upon a General, or other great Man, (which you will observe is one part of the Scheme) and upon Dr. Murphey's Recommendation of him as a fit Man for that Service, Layer proposes to Lynch to undertake it. At this time Lynch acquainted Layer with the Difficulties he had been in, and that an Affair of this Nature would take up some time before it could be put in Execution, and he could not well engage in it without some farther Encouragement, and a Reward in Money, in order that he might live easy and well while he staid here. Upon that, the Prisoner at the Bar promised him Supplies of Money for his Subsistence and Expences, what should be necessary, besides future Rewards; and in pursuance of that Promise, Layer hath several times supplied Lynch with Money, to engage him more effectually in this Design, and to support him in it. By these Assurances Lynch was prevailed upon, and then agreed to enter into this Conspiracy, and to take upon him the Part therein that should be signified to him.

Gentlemen, the Prisoner did not then make a full Discovery of the Person that was to be seized; but they were to meet again, as they did, about the latter end of June, at the same Tavern: There the Prisoner disclosed to the Witness the particular Person who was designed to be first seized. He acquaints the Witness, that the Person he (the Prisoner) intended at their former Meeting, and whom he designed the Witness should seize, is the General of the Army, the Earl Cadogan; and Lynch was to find out such other Persons as he could rely upon, for the assisting in, and effecting that Enterprize; whereunto Lynch agreed. Layer then acquainted him what Steps were already made in the Conspiracy, and that they were to be headed and commanded by a General, who had Wit and Courage and Resolution, and who were supported by a great many Friends, who had full Power and Authority from the Pretender (whom he called King) to act, and who was Intrusted with a Commission as his General, and whose Orders Lynch was to obey.

The Prisoner and Lynch had several other Meetings, some at the Griffin Tavern, and others at the Prisoner's own House in Old Southampton Buildings, where the Prisoner always encouraged Lynch to persist in the Undertaking, by assuring him that all Things went on well, and that the Design was so well laid, that it could not probably miscarry: That they should be assisted by a great many Officers, as soon as any Motion was made, and that the common Soldiers would declare upon the first Opportunity: and being asked by Lynch, whether they had no Foreign Assistance to depend on; the Prisoner answered, when we begin the Business, we shall not want Relief, if requisite. At one of these Meetings the Prisoner revealed to the Witness, that, upon the Rising, the Tower would be delivered up to them, by means of an Officer, who was to be upon the Guard there on the Day of Execution; and that the People in the Mint in Southwark would come into them; who, and all others that should repair to their Party, should have Arms delivered to them; and that the whole Design should be put in Execution at the Breaking up of the Camp, which would be the most proper Time for the speaking with the Soldiers in the Army.

But at a Meeting they had, some time in August, at the Queen's Head Tavern in Great Queen-Street near Lincoln's Inn Fields, Lynch complaining of the Delay in putting their Design in Execution, and representing the Danger of it, and withal pressing to know his intended General and Commander, the Prisoner gave him great Encouragement, from the good Prospect of their Affairs, and the Vigilance of the Noble-Man at the Helm, who would lose no Opportunity, when a convenient Time should offer; and promised the Witness, that he should be presented to this noble Person in due time, from whom Lynch should receive his Orders, or Commission for executing his Part, and entering upon his Enterprize.

And accordingly, upon the twenty fourth Day of August, Mr. Layer invites Lynch to ride out of Town with him the next Day to take the Air, which Lynch comply'd with; and on the twenty fifth of August in the Morning, Lynch went to the Prisoner's House, who appointed Lynch to go before, and to stay without Aldgate.

At that Time the Prisoner asked the Witness, whether he mounted with Furniture or Pistols; who answering that he did not, but that he had a Double-Barrel Fowling-Piece, which the Prisoner's Servant might carry; the Prisoner directed him to get his Piece ready loaden, because he (Layer) should carry something with him, which he would not lose for all the World. Lynch and the Prisoner met without Aldgate at eleven before Noon, and the Prisoner's Servant carried the Gun, and they rode together toward's Epping in Essex, which was the Place they were going to.

Upon the way as they proceeded, Mr. Layer told the Witness, that they were going to the House of the Lord North and Grey, where he would present Lynch to his Lordship, as a particular Friend of his (the Prisoner's.) When they came to the Green Man at Layton-Stone, at the Entrance upon Epping-Forest, the Prisoner said, it might be best to eat something there, because they should be too late for the Lord North and Grey's Dinner; and accordingly they stopt at this House to Dine.

Gentlemen, You will hear from the Witnesses that at this Place, the Prisoner and Lynch had another Consultation, wherein there was a Repitition and Confirmation of the whole Design and Conspiracy. At this Green Man, in your County, Gentlemen, you will find every principal Part of the Conspiracy, which was to be executed, consulted upon, and agreed unto by them both: The Time and Manner of the Insurrection, the Preparations making for it, the Assistance to be provided and expected from the Army, from many in the City of London, and from the Generality of the Nation, as was then suggested; the Seizing the Earl of Cadogan as the first Step, and the Surprizing the Tower in the Manner mentioned in the Plan, by the Help of the Officer upon the Guard; and then they proceeded to consider and approve the most daring and execrable Part of the Plan, which was then expressly repeated by the Prisoner, the making a strong Detachment to Sieze on his Majesty's Person.

The Prisoner then declared his great Satisfaction, in having engaged a Person of such Courage and Conduct as Mr. Lynch, in the Attempt of Seizing the Earl Cadogan; and likewise named the several other great Men, hinted at in the Scheme, whose Persons were to be seized, and of whom he had made up his Collection in pursuance of the Plan; and then expressed his Wishes so to bring Matters to bear, that Mr. Lynch might likewise have the sole Direction apprehending the Persons of some of his Majesty's Ministers, the Lords Townshend and Carteret, his Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, and Mr. Walpole, first Lord Commissioner of the Treasury.

These Persons, most immediately intrusted in his Majesty's Service, were in the first Place to be seized, in order to facilitate the Design, and to make it successful. By this means the Conspirators were to weaken his Majesty's Power of Defending himself, when they had deprived him of his General, who was to command and conduct his Army; of his two Secretaries, who were to maintain and carry on his Intelligence; and of the first Commissioner of his Treasury, who was to take Care for his Supply.

At this Place these things were debated and considered between them: Mr. Lynch then again complained of the long Delay, and wished that the Affair might be carried on with more Expedition: The Prisoner thought no time so proper as the Breaking up of the Camp, when they might be supplied with Soldiers; yet he was willing to hear any Proposal from Mr. Lynch, and desired Mr. Lynch, that if he could think of any speedier Method, or better Scheme, to let him know it: But the Witness was not capable to propose any way more proper, than what had been agreed upon the Foot of the Plan, as it had been explained by the Prisoner himself, and therefore Mr. Lynch acquiesced therein.

Gentlemen, at that time, and at the same Place, the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, of publishing the treasonable Writing, was committed; which was a Declaration framed in the Hand-writing of the Prisoner, to be published immediately on the first Breaking out of the Conspiracy, to excite the King's Subjects to take up Arms, and to enter into a Rebellion against him; and that it might have an Influence on the Army, where their Hopes were placed, it took Notice, that the King's General was seized, and in their Custody.

In this Declaration particular Rewards are promised to the Horse and Foot in the Army; different Allowances are made, to every Horse-man and Serjeant three Guineas; two Guineas to every Corporal, and one Guinea to every common Soldier: All had Promises of Encouragement, Favour, and future Reward.

Gentlemen, after this was read, the Prisoner put this Declaration up into his Pocket again; and afterwards (as he acquainted the Witness) he himself made an Alteration therein; it containing at first a general Invitation to a Revolt, but was not directed in the Name of any particular Person, therefore the Prisoner thought fit afterwards to alter it, (as he informed Lynch) and to make it in the Name of the Pretender, as King.

Gentlemen, though their Hopes and Expectations were founded on corrupting and Debauching the Army; I mention it only, as it was their Expectation and Design, without any Imputation on the Honour or Fidelity of the Gentlemen of the Army: But Persons who undertake an Affair of this Nature, are always forward to expect that their Designs will be successful.

This, Gentlemen, which I have mentioned to you, which will be more fully and particularly given in Evidence to you, against the Prisoner at the Bar, was transacted and committed in the County of Essex.

My Lord, this will be Evidence of most of the Overt-Acts alledged in the Indictment in the County of Essex; but we shall confirm this Evidence by the Confession of the Prisoner, proved by two Witnesses, in whose Presence he acknowledged the several Facts, which will be charged upon him in the County of Essex, by the Testimony of Mr. Lynch; and shall make Proof of other Overt-Acts in the County of Middlesex; for it was impossible a Design so extensive should be confined to one or two particular Places within the same County: Their Consultations must be transferred from Place to Place, as Opportunity offered, and as they thought most conducive to the Purpose they were engaged in.

But the Facts I have mentioned, were transacted, Gentlemen, in your County. After the Prisoner and Mr. Lynch had settled these Affairs at the Green Man, they went to the House of my Lord North and Grey at Epping: They staid there all Night, and dined there the next Day; the Witness was introduced and presented to his Lordship by Layer, and was civilly received and entertained; and the Prisoner at the Bar, as he and Lynch returned home, asked the Witness how he liked his Lordship, and assured Mr. Lynch for his Encouragement, that he had greatly recommended him (the Witness) to his Lordship.

The Prisoner and Lynch met a second time at the Lord North and Grey's House, where Lynch declared declared he would withdraw himself, if things were not put in Execution; to which Layer replied, they would be sooner put in Execution than Lynch imagined.

Gentlemen, you may perceive, by this Evidence, the Prisoner's Explanation of the whole Scheme, and his Execution of it, so far as was in his Power; tho', blessed be God, these, or any farther Attempts of this kind, have not hitherto prevailed.

The Prisoner proceeds farther; and the next Witness who will be produc'd against him, is one who had been a Servant in the Army, Matthew Plunkett. Plunkett had been formerly acquainted with the Prisoner, and done him a piece of Service; he was made use of to rescue some Goods, when they were taken in Execution at the House where Layer lodged, which was the beginning of their Acquaintance: This, with some other Recommendations from Persons engaged in this Design, induced the Prisoner at the Bar to make Offers to him, as you will hear from the Witnesses.

In June 1722, another Person of the same Name, one James Plunkett was directed by Mr. Layer to go to this Serjeant Plunkett, and desire him to meet Layer at the Italian Coffee-house in Russel-Court. The Witness could not at that time, at least did not think it proper to go to the Place appointed; but a Day or two after, Mr. Layer meets him in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and takes him aside under a Gate-way near Turn-Stile: Layer then told Plunkett, he would inform him of a Matter that would be of great Advantage and Benefit to him; there Layer let him into this Conspiracy, and engaged the Witness in it, not only by assurance and promise of Reward, but by actual Reward and Money given him; and to induce and to encourage Plunkett the more, Layer acquainted him, that there were several Persons of great Estates, who were resolved to rescue themselves, and the Nation from the Calamities and Slavery, that they then endured; and that they intended to bring about a Revolution, and restore their King the Pretender; Plunkett objected, that the Pretender was a Papist; but the Prisoner reply'd, there was no difference between a Papist and a Lutheran King, and therefore, that ought to make no Impression upon Plunkett, to hinder him in joining to bring in a Papist.

The Prisoner enquired of Plunkett, whether he had not an Acquaintance in the Army with some Officers, and with the common Soldiers; and then engaged Plunkett to levy what Persons he could into their Service; and when the Witness told Layer, he knew twenty or thirty Serjeants in the Army, proper Persons to be applied to, the Prisoner gave Plunkett Directions to make Application to them, and to have them enroll'd; and at that Meeting the Prisoner gave the Witness Money for his Encouragement; and as they had several other Meetings after this, to provide and levy Men, the Direction and Employment given by Layer to the Witness, was, to take care to find out their Lodgings, and to make Lists of the Men, of their Names, and Places of Abode, that they might be ready upon Notice.

The Prisoner not only employed Plunkett to procure, and enroll as many as he could get; but gave him Money for one particular Person, one Child, who had served in the Army, and who was recommend to Layer by Plunkett, as a Person that had been disoblig'd by having been turned out of the Service; Layer himself gave Plunkett half a Guinea, for to give to this Person, to engage him in this Conspiracy, which Plunkett accordingly paid Child: Layer likewise ordered Money at other times to be given to Plunkett, and at one time particularly acquainted him, that the Prisoner had left a Guinea with one Jefferies a Non-juring Parson, to give to him, who had given Plunkett but half a Guinea.

The Prisoner at the Bar, to encourage Plunkett, acquainted him with the Persons, whom Layer expected to join in this Conspiracy; and asked the Witness his Opinion of several, the Witness will tell you the Names of the Persons, and what Answers he gave; particularly that Layer asked him what he thought of the Lord North and Grey, for an Officer to be at their Head? The Witness answer'd, though he had never serv'd under him, he look'd upon his Lordship as a great Man.

They had Meetings at several times, when Layer informed him, that things were in a great Forwardness, tho' it was not yet a time to put their Design in Execution; but it went on so well, that it could not miscarry; that the Duke of Ormond was to come with a single Ship, with some Offices; and that the Design had been discover'd to the French Embassador, who had given Intelligence thereof to his Majesty, or else the Affair had been done before that time.

This Plunkett was employed, from time to time, to prepare Lists of, and to collect and enroll fit Persons to go on with this Design; and particularly a Number of Serjeants, about twenty five, being dismiss'd from the Army, the Prisoner engaged Plunkett to go immediately to those Persons, and take care to secure them:

Gentlemen, these traitorous Consults and Transactions were in July and August; and the Witness will acquaint you more fully with the several Particulars. There was one Encouragement which the Prisoner gave to this Witness, which he did not mention to the other; he told Plunkett there would be an Army of Dutch to come over in Aid of his Majesty, but the Witness should see a Number of half-pay Officers, especially those of the Name of Fitzgerald, on the Side of his King (the Pretender) that they could not doubt of Success.

Gentlemen, Under these Encouragements and Promises, and with these Rewards, both these Persons, the two Witnesses, were engaged by the Prisoner to enter into, and go on with this Conspiracy: The Prisoner met them apart from time to time; they concerted and carried on such Measures as they thought proper to execute this Design, upon the Foot of the Plan, which hath been mentioned, and will be produced to you.

After we have produced the Scheme, and likewise examined these two Witnesses, who will give you an Account of the Progress which the Prisoner made in this Treason; we shall give you other plain and evident Proof, which will demonstrate the treasonable Intent of the Prisoner at the Bar, and his hopes of Success.

We shall prove that the Prisoner had been at Rome, and by his own Confession, that he had seen the Pretender, and had Conferences with him.

We shall prove that the Prisoner had blank promissory Notes, or Receipts for Money, signed with with the Pretenders own Hand, by the assumed Title of James Rex, found amongst Loyer's Papers; which were remitted to him from Rome, and which he has acknowledg'd were sent over to him, for raising of Money to carry on the Cause of the Pretender. This is a strong Evidence of the Trust and Credit reposed in him to execute this Conspiracy; that the Prisoner is a Person fully intrusted; the Receipts are in Blank, and the Prisoner had Power to raise Money on them, and to fill them up with such Sums, as he thought proper and necessary.

Gentlemen, on the Examination of our Witnesses it will appear that Mr. Loyer declared he had expended great Sums of Money in this Affair, and that he has made it an Excuse, why he had not Money to supply some Demands, because he had disburs'd so much.

This therefore was to be his full Power to raise Money towards bringing the Pretender to the Throne.

Besides these Receipts, he had furnished himself with Lists of the Officers of the Army, in order to know the Situation and Condition of the Army, and to consider what Advantage he could make by any of those in the Lists: He had provided himself with Lists of the Officers of the Tower, which we apprehend, was to render the Design of siezing the Tower, when their Friend the Officer was on the Guard, more probable and hopeful.

Besides this, we have Letters which will be produced, that passed between Sir William Ellis, an Adherent of the Pretender's at Rome, and Mr. Loyer, by the Name of Fountain, (a Name he went by) encouraging him to go on with this Design: We have the Cypher, and the Explanation of the Cant Words used in those Letters. In one Letter Ellis says, the best Method of carrying on the Manufactory, (which is the Insurrection) is to get good Workmen, (by which is meant Soldiers) and particularly to gain some of the ablest of Mrs. Barbara Smith's, (by Mrs. Barbara Smith is signified the Army) and this would be very agreeable to all concerned, particularly to Mr. Atkins (which by their Cypher or Key is a Name for the Pretender.)

And in another Letter there is particular Mention of Mr. Loyer's Intended General; you will find in the Letter an Explanation of him, thus; that he, who the Prisoner in his Letter called Simons, and described as a Tenant, tho' his Name was not then found in the Rentall, this Writer believed he should be called Simmes, and says he is of the North, a grey hair'd antient Man, for whom his Friend has a particular Esteem and Value, as a very good Tenant. This is the Description, and this is the Cant that passed between them; the Explanation you will apprehend, by the Cyphers that were found amongst the Prisoners Papers.

Mr. Loyer was not wanting in other Preparations for this Attempt; for he had provided Arms in his own House, more than he could have Occasion for, as a private Subject; he had several Musquets and other Fire-Arms; he had forty or fifty Cartridges loaded with Bullets, ready made up for so many Discharges, which might be delivered out to the People who should come in to them: If he had any use for such a Quantity he will shew upon what Occasion.

The Discovery of the Facts made by the Witnesses, occasioned the apprehending Mr. Loyer, in whose House these Arms were likewise seized.

Mr. Loyer was so conscious of his own Guilt, that after he was apprehended, he made his Escape out of the Custody of the Messenger, in whose House he was placed; he offered a great Reward to Watermen to carry him off: This is a Demonstration of his Guilt, from the Conviction of his own Conscience.

Gentlemen, there are some other Matters and Papers which it will be proper to offer to your Consideration; and most of these particular Facts, which I have mentioned, or the most material of them have been confirmed by Mr. Loyer's own Confession which he made upon his Examination before the Lords of the Privy Council: And when we have laid before you this Evidence, as according to my Instructions we shall very fully, I don't doubt but that you will do your Duty as honest Men.

We don't apply to your Zeal, as you are Protestants and Englishmen; but upon the Weight of the Evidence, we shall appeal to your Justice, to your Oaths and to your Consciences; whether upon the whole Proof to be laid before you, you will not remain fully satisfied, that the Prisoner at the Bar is guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, and then that you do find him so.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counsel on the same Side for his Majesty against the Prisoner at the Bar, who stands indicted for High-Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death of the King. The Preservation of the Life of the King is of that great Importance to the Safety and Prosperity of his Subjects, that even Imaginations and Intentions (which are but Acts of the Heart) to take it away, manifested by Overt-Acts are an Offence of the highest Nature which the Law takes notice of; but as Imaginations and Intentions of Men are secret, and can't be discovered but by their Actions, there must be Proof of some Fact done in order to carry such Intentions into Execution, to make the Offenders guilty of Treason: Therefore in this Indictment five several Overt-Acts are laid; the first is, that the Prisoner at the Bar proposed, consulted and agreed with divers Persons unknown to the Grand Jury, to raise an Insurrection and Rebellion within this Kingdom against his Majesty; the second, that he published a traiterous Writing, purporting an Exhortation, Encouragement and Promise of Rewards, to persuade his Majesty's faithful Subjects to take up Arms against him; the third, that he proposed, consulted and agreed to set the Pretender on the Throne by arm'd Force; the fourth, that he listed Men to levy War against the King; and the fifth, that he proposed, consulted and agreed to seize and imprison his Majesty's sacred Person.

Gentlemen of the Jury, you will readily agree with me that nothing can be more dreadful to a true Briton who hath any Regard to himself or his Posterity, or Love to his Country, than the fatal Consequences that must have inevitably attended such wicked Designs, had they been carried into Execution with Success: Suppose a Rebellion had been only raised, what could any Man have expected from a Rebellion in the Heart of the Kingdom, but Plunder and Rapine, and Murder, a total Suspension of all Civil Right, and as long as the Storm had continued, a just but but terrible Apprehensions of something yet worse to come: This would certainly have been the Case, though the Attempt should have been disappointed at last. But had it been attended with Success, had his Majesty's sacred Person been seized and imprisoned, and had the Pretender been placed on the Throne, what a Scene of Misery had open'd! A mild Administration, govern'd by the Law of the Land under an excellent Prince, and as just and merciful as ever wore the Crown, must have given way to Arbitrary Power; all your Estates and Properties must have been at the Will of a provok'd and exasperated Usurper; Liberty must have given Way to Slavery, and the best of Religions to Popish Idolatry and Superstition; and this humanly speaking, without any Prospect or Hopes of Relief: Nor would these dreadful Calamities have been confin'd within the Bounds of the King's Dominions, for should the present happy Establishment in his Majesty and his Royal Family (the chief Bulwark and Support of the Protestant Interest) be destroyed, the Protestant Religion in general must be reduced to the lowest Ebb, if not totally extinguished.

This is the Nature of the Crime, and these some of the fatal Consequences that must have ensued, if the Designs charged upon the Prisoner by the Indictment had took Effect. But whether he is guilty of this great Offence, is what you Gentlemen of the Jury are now to try.

My Lord, 'tis my part to open the Nature of the Evidence that we shall produce to prove the several Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment; and in stating it to your Lordship and the Jury, I shall follow the Course of Time in which the Facts were done, that the Case may be more easily apprehended, and shall open nothing but what I believe will be clearly verified by Proof.

This Prisoner at the Bar, tho' brought up to the Profession of the Law, and a Practiser in it went beyond Sea in the Year 1720, and at the Close of that Year, according to our Stile, or the Beginning of the Year 1721, arrived at Rome, where the Pretender then was; while the Prisoner was there, he procured himself to be introduced to the Pretender, and had two private Conferences with him, in which (but by what Methods or Representation is best known to himself) 'tis plain he obtained the Pretender's good Opinion so far, that he thought him a fit Person in whom a Confidence for carrying on any Designs against his Majesty, and for setting himself on the Throne, might be safely repos'd: For this Purpose a Correspondence was then settled between the Prisoner and some Persons of Distinction about the Pretender, and a Cypher of Names of Persons and Things was agreed on, in order to carry this Correspondence on. The Prisoner returned to England about July 1721, after which he writ Letters to his Correspondent at Rome, and Answers to them came from thence, whereby it will appear, that the Prisoner had undertook a considerable Part in the Design then carrying on to bring the Pretender in; and altho' these Letters are in obscure and cant Terms, and fictitious Names, yet by the Help of the Cypher and from the Nature of the Letters themselves, it will easily appear to a common Understanding for what Purpose they were writ: This Cypher and Letters we shall prove to have been found among the Prisoner's Papers, which were seized soon after his Commitment, and your Lordship and the Jury will see, when they come to be read, that notwithstanding the obscure Terms, and the mysterious Expressions inserted to dazzle the Eye of the Reader, when compar'd with the Cypher they will be so intelligible, that they will be a plain Evidence that a Design was carrying on of raising a general Rebellion in favour of the Pretender; for which Purpose a Scheme in Writing was prepared, which we shall lay before your Lordship and the Gentlemen of the Jury, that was likewise found among the Prisoner's Papers; we shall prove it to be writ with his own Hand.

Mr. Serjeant Pengelly opened the Nature of this Scheme very fully, I shall not trouble your Lordships with a Repetition of what he said; when it comes to be read it will appear to be calculated for a general Rising, it will prove a form'd Design to seize the Tower, to seize Persons in great Stations, to seize the Bank, and then at last to seize the Person of the King himself, and to seize his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. This we apprehend will be a strong Evidence of the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment, and will confirm the Testimonies of the Witnesses which we shall produce.

There are two Witnesses we shall call to prove the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment, they have already been mentioned to your Lordship, Mr. Stephen Lynch, and Serjeant Matthew Plunkett. Mr. Lynch will prove the several Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment to have been committed by the Prisoner in the County of Essex, where this Indictment was found; as also Overt-Acts of the same Nature committed by him in the County of Middlesex. But as 'tis improper to fall directly upon the Proof of those Facts, without first proving some other Facts by way of Introduction, as how the Acquaintance between Mr. Lynch and the Prisoner at the Bar began, and how they came to be so intimate as to enter into a Design of this Nature, Mr. Lynch will give your Lordships and the Jury an Account; that there had been an Acquaintance between this Mr. Lynch and one Dr. Murphey eight or nine Years ago, that they had agreed to join in the Rebellion which was in the beginning of his Majesty's Reign; after that was over Mr. Lynch went beyond Sea, and continued there some time, and arrived in England in April last; that their Acquaintance continued, and their Principles were not altered; Mr. Lynch meeting Dr. Murphey, Dr. Murphey (who hath been mentioned to your Lordships on a late Occasion in this Court and is not now to be found, but had a great Acquaintance with the Prisoner at the Bar) told him he had something advantageous to communicate to him, and appointed a Meeting next Morning at a Coffee-House in Cornhill, where they accordingly met, and Murphey then advised him not to go out of England, because he had an Opportunity of making his Fortune, telling him there would be a general Rising in Favour of the Pretender (whom he called King) and that it was carry'd on by Gentlemen of Note and Credit; and if he would accept of the Service, he would recommend him to one greatly concerned in that Affair; Mr. Lynch after Consideration agreed to stay— After several other Meetings between this Dr. Murphey and Mr. Lynch, at which their Discourse general turned upon this intended Rising; about the Beginning of June. Dr. Murphey introduced Mr. Lynch to the Prisoner, as a Person fit to be entrusted in the intended Enterprize; terprize; they went to the Griffin Tavern in Holbourn; Mr. Layer there expressed the good Opinion he had of Mr. Lynch upon the Character he had received of him from so good a Friend as this Dr. Murphey. They soon enter'd upon Business, and the Prisoner after having made a Representation of the Uneasiness of the Nation in general, and of the fair Opportunity there was to bring about a Revolution, propos'd to Mr. Lynch to seize some General, to which the Witnesses agreed. After this they had several other Meetings, at which their Discourse turn'd upon the same Subject of a general Rising in order to set the Pretender on the Throne, and at one of them the Prisoner declared he intended Lynch should seize the Earl of Cadogan, and that the Scheme was laid on a sound Foundation, having a great Man at the Head of Affairs, who wanted neither Wit, Courage nor Resolution, and he would be backed by his Friends. Several other Propositions were made by the Prisoner tending to the same End; to all which Mr. Lynch agreed, and they consulted how they might put those things in Execution. In July last, Mr. Layer went into the Country for fourteen or fifteen Days, and after his Return in the beginning of August, in Pursuance of what they had concerted, Mr. Lynch and he went to view the Earl of Cadogan's House, to see how practicable that Design of seizing him at his House was. Mr. Lynch thought it feasible, but he grew uneasy at Delays, and frequently told the Prisoner that his Circumstances would not permit him to continue here at his own Expence; therefore to encourage him to stay, and persevere in the Design, Mr. Layer gave him several Sums of Money.

My Lord, upon the twenty fourth of August last, the Prisoner and Mr. Lynch agreed to ride out the next day to take the Air: on the twenty fifth, according to Appointment, (which brings us now to the Overt-Acts in the County of Essex) they rid out together; the Prisoner thought it proper to ride with Arms, alledging that he had things about him he would not lose for any thing in the World. Upon the Road he told Mr. Lynch they would go to Lord North and Grey's, with whom the Prisoner had the Honour to be well acquainted, and he would present Mr. Lynch to my Lord as his particular Acquaintance. It happened to be too late to get to Lord North and Grey's by Dinner, whereupon they put in at the Green-Man near Epping-Forest, which, Gentlemen, is at Layton-Stone in your County. Dinner not being ready at their coming thither they enter'd into Conversation on the former Topics, and Mr. Lynch desiring to give him some insight into the Scheme that was formed, the whole subject matter of their former Consultations and Discourses were repeated about seizing Lord Cadogan, seizing the Ministers of State, of getting Part of the Army to declare for them and for seizing the King's Person; and these things were then agreed to by them. At this Place it was, that the Prisoner pulled out of his Pocket and shew'd to Mr. Lynch the traitorous Writing laid in the Indictment, which was a Declaration to encourage a general Rising, writ, as the Witness believes, in the Prisoner's own Hand; and that Part which contained the Promises of Rewards to be given to the Soldiers and other Persons to encourage them to come into their Designs; was read by the Witness, after which Mr.

Layer took his Paper away, and put it it up in his Pocket again. My Lord, when they had dined, they went on to Lord North and Grey's House (whom your Lordship will hear mentioned by the Evidence as the Person thought on to be General in this Undertaking) they staid here that Night, and dined there next Day, and afterwards they had a second Meeting at Lord North and Grey's. Your Lordship and the Jury will be pleased to observe that this Evidence will be a full and positive Proof by this Witness, that the Overt-Acts of publishing this traitorous Writing, encouraging Persons to take up Arms against his Majesty, of the Consultations and Agreement to levy War, to set the Pretender on the Throne, and to seize his Majesty's Person, were done at the Green-Man, in the County of Essex: And this will likewise be an Evidence, that all the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment (except publishing the traitorous Writing) were done in the County of Middlesex.

My Lord, the next Witness we shall produce is Matthew Plunkett, formerly a Serjeant in some Regiment; he had been formerly acquainted with, and had been serviceable to the Prisoner, and was very well acquainted with one James Plunkett, which James Plunkett was a great Acquaintance of the Prisoner's. This James Plunkett desired the Witness Matthew Plunkett to meet the Prisoner in July last, at the Italian Coffee-House in Russel-Court, which the Witness could not comply with; but the Witness met the Prisoner the Sunday following in Lincoln's - Inn Fields, they were together near an Hour, the Prisoner gave him an Account of the intended general Rising, and ask'd the Witness if he knew any old Serjeants or Soldiers who could discipline a Mob, agreed with him to procure such, mentioned to him several Persons fit to be at the head of this Enterprize; and in order to make him diligent, he gave him at that time half a Crown: And Money was not only given him at that time, but a Promise was made to him of further Rewards. The Prisoner having Occasion to go in the Country, one Jeffreys, a Nonjuring Clergyman, was sent to Matthew Plunkett by Layer (and this Fact that I am going to open must not be barely considered as an Act between Jeffreys and Plunkett, but it will be brought directly home to the Act of Layer himself.) Jeffreys told Plunkett he came from the Prisoner, and that he was employ'd by him to go to such as the Witness was, who were old Serjeants, to get a Number of them together to discipline the Mob, in order to the general Rising: The next Day they met again, and had the like Discourse, and Jeffreys gave Matthew Plunkett half a Guinea; and what brings this home to the Prisoner, is, that he told Plunkett he had left a Guinea with the Nonjuring Parson to give him, and talked with him on the same Subject that Jeffreys had discoursed the Witness before. But in fact Jeffreys did not give Plunkett the Guinea, he gave him but half a Guinea.

My Lord, after Mr. Layer went out of Town Plunkett gave him an Account what Progress he had made in the Affair. Plunkett told him that he had got several old Soldiers that would bear a Part in this Business: The Prisoner said he must take care to keep a List of their Names, and the Places where they lived, that they might be in a Readiness when they should have Occasion for them. And on Sunday before the Prisoner was taken up, he told this Plunkett that a great many

I must likewise beg Leave to observe to your Lordship, that this Question was formerly asked in the Trial of Gordon and Dorrell to one Adams that had been in the same Conspiracy with those that were brought to Trial for High-Treason, and was then produced as a Witness against them; the Book was then brought into Court, and the Quotation read before your Lordship, and according to my Notes of that Trial, which I have here brought with me for my Justification, (I submit to your Lordship's Correction if I don't state it right) Adams was ask'd that Question, though it was long objected to by the King's Counsel. The Distinction my Lord Chief Justice Hale made was this.

Mr. Just. Eyre. Read the whole Paragraph.

Mr. Ketelbey. I will, my Lord. The Words are these: "It was resolved that some of those " Persons equally culpable with the rest, may " be made use of as Witnesses against their Fel" lows, and they are lawful Accusers or Witnesses
" within the Statute 1 Ed. VI. 12. 5 & 6 Ed. VI.
" c. 11. & 1 Mar. I. and accordingly at the Tri" al of these Men, some of them who were Par" ties in the Treason were made use of against
" the rest: For lawful Witnesses within those " Statutes are such as the Law alloweth; and
" the Law alloweth every one to be a Witness,
" who is not convicted or made infamous for
" some Crime; and if it were not so all Trea-
" sons would be safe, and it would be impossi" ble for one who conspires with never so many " Persons to make a Discovery to any Purpose.

I was aware of what was here laid down, and therefore did submit Mr. Hungerford's Reason to your Lordship's Consideration, and did not insist farther upon it; the subsequent Words are these,
" But the Lord Chief Baron Hale said, That if " one of these culpable Persons be promised his " Pardon on Condition to give Evidence against
" the rest, that disableth him to be a Witness " against the others, because he is bribed by sav" ing his Life to be a Witness: So that he makes " a Difference where the Promise of Pardon is " to him for disclosing the Treason, and where " it is for giving of Evidence. But some of the " other Judges did not think the Promise of " Pardon, if he gave Evidence, did disable him.
" But they all advised that no such Promise should " be made, or any Threatnings used to them in " case they did not give full Evidence.

So that, my Lord, we have not only the Authority of that Book with us, but a solemn Precedent in this Court in point established upon a long Debate, and grounded on that very Authority. And when I moved this Matter at the Trial of Dorrell, Gordon and Ker, I then cited another Instance where it had been allowed by the Court, and that was before Mr. Justice Powell at Worcester Assizes, upon the Trial of Palmer and Symonds for the Murder of Mrs. Palmer: There a third Person concerned in the Fact came in as a Witness against the other two, and after it had been argued by Counsel, and that learned Judge had read upon the Bench, and considered this Authority, the Witness was at last asked this Question upon a Voyer dire: And for the Truth of this Case as I reported it, I appealed to my Lord Lechmere, then Attorney-General, and who had been one of the Counsel at Palmer's Trial.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we hope if there is any room for this Pretence which is insinuated, it only goes as to his Credit, and does not disable him from being a Witness; the Authorities produced are no more: The Judges directed that no such Promise should be made but if such a Promise was made, they agreed it doth not disable him from being a Witness, as was mentioned by my Lord Chief Baron Hale; it is not like Money given, which is an actual Corruption; the Promise of Pardon is a thing voluntary in it self: Who is the Promise to be made by? Is it in the Power of any Person but his Majesty to perform it? If there is any Thing in the Supposition, it is not proper to ask in relation to it upon a Voyer dire to prevent the Witness from being sworn to give Evidence; but when he hath been sworn, if they think fit to ask the Question, they may.

Mr. Att. Gen. The asking the Witness this Question, as 'tis irregular, so if it was answered in the affirmative, wou'd be of no Service to the Prisoner; for with Submission, it will not disable Mr. Lynch from being a Witness. Every Man is bound in Justice to give Evidence if required, and a Promise to have a Pardon if he gives Evidence against the Prisoner, can be looked on only to induce him to do that which by Law he ought to do according to the Truth: It does not import that he was to give a wrong or a false Evidence; such a Question he cannot be obliged to answer. And the greatest Use the Prisoner could make of this, if such a Promise was made to the Witness (which is not admitted) wou'd be only against the Credit of the Witness, but not entirely take off his Testimony; his Credit, as well as the Credit of all Witnesses, must be left to the Consideration of the Jury. As to the Opinion of my Lord Chief Baron Hale cited out of Kelynge, the other Judges differ'd with him, and therefore we hope Mr. Lynch shall be sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We who are Council for the King don't oppose the asking this Question, out of any apprehension that the Answer would come out against us, but for fear of overturning a Point that hath been long settled. As to the Book, which these Gentlemen cite to support their Objection, with Submission, it is rather an Authority to over-rule it. The Opinion they found themselves upon is, that of my Lord Chief Baron Hale, but the rest of the Judges were of Opinion against him; so that we apprehend the Authority is with us, and likewise the Reason of the thing. I take it that no Question is to be asked a Man upon a Voyer dire, but to a Fact that would take off his Testimony. Suppose then, for Argument sake, that there was a Promise of Pardon made to a Man upon Condition that he should give Evidence; I apprehend that would not disable him from being a Witness, any more than if the Condition had been that he should declare the Truth, which it was his Duty to have done, although no such Promise had been made: And surely the Promise of a Pardon upon a Condition to do that which was his Duty before, won't take off his Testimony. If they would ask the Witness whether he has accepted a Promise of a Pardon upon Condition to give false Testimony, that is a Question, to which, with great Submission, he is not bound to answer; because that would be to examine him to accuse himself of a thing which is unlawful. For these Reasons, as well as upon account of the Authority they produce, we apprehend there is no Force in the Objection.

Mr. Serj. Chesbire. My Lord, I know not whether it would not be laying too great a weight Weight upon the Objection, for so many of the King's Counsel to answer it; for my part I think it would.

Mr. Hungerford. I urge it thus far: Whatsoever Person is produced in a Court of Justice for a Witness, he must appear to be utterly unconcerned in point of Interest in the Consequence of the Trial. If a Man produced as an Evidence to prove the Debt upon the Defendant, shall, upon being examined upon a Voyer dire, disclose that he is to have a part of the Money recovered, is not such a Person disabled from being a Witness at all? And is not a Promise of Pardon to the Witness, in Case he convicts the Criminal, a greater Byass than the Witness's having part of the Money recovered? In a Civil Cause the Question is not whether the Witness be tempted to swear a Truth or Falshood, but whether the Witness doth not appear to be so far concerned in Interest, that he ought not to be examined at all? And therefore I humbly insist that we ought to have an Account whether the Witness Lynch hath the Promise of a Pardon, or any Reward for that which he is to do here, viz. for the Evidence he is to give against the Prisoner. As to the Consequence of such an Enquiry, it is in different to me whether it will disable him from being a Witness absolutely, or go to his Credit only: For if it should come out that he hath such a Promise, we suppose no Jury or Man living will believe him, and that is much the same as if he were not produced; tho' it seems more agreeable to the Practice in Civil Cases, that he should not be admitted as a Witness at all.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Solicitor mistakes the Words of the Book as I read them; he is pleased to understand them as if all the rest of the Judges differed in Opinion from my Lord Chief Baron Hale; but the Book does not say so, 'tis only that some of the other Judges were of Opinion that it did not disable him, but all agreed that it went to his Credit, and that was all I read in the Book; and I would not have offered it otherwise than as it was truly there, upon any Consideration whatsoever; but whether this Question be asked at first or last, so as we have an Answer to it, I am contented.

L. C. Just. You see the most you can make of it is, that it is an Objection to his Credit; and if it goes to his Credit, must he not be sworn and his Credit left to the Jury? He must be examin'd as a legal Witness; but if this Man, under Expectation and Promise of a Pardon, comes here to swear that which is not true, and you would ask him to that, he is not obliged to answer it. No body is to discredit himself, but always to be taken to be innocent till it appears otherwise. It is expressed that he has a Promise of Pardon: What to do? To give Evidence. Give Evidence! Why should he not? Is he not obliged to't? Suppose he gives Evidence according to the Truth, he would be entitled as much to his Pardon, as if he gave Evidence of that which is not true. The most you can say is, he has a Promise of Pardon if he gives Evidence; and can you conclude from thence that he can give no Evidence except a false Evidence? If they who ask the Question insinuate any thing like that, it ought not to have an Answer: But if he hath a Promise of Pardon if he gives a true Evidence, it is no Objection to his being a Witness, or to his Credit.

VOL. VI.

Prisoner. My Lord, I humbly hope our Objections will thus far prevail, and that we shall come at the Fact.

L. C. Just. When he is sworn you shall ask him what Questions you please.

Mr. Just. Eyre. The Objection which gives Occasion to insist upon this Question, arises from the Influence which the Hopes of Pardon may possibly have upon the Witness; and if this be a Reason for setting aside a Witness as incapable, no Accomplice who discovers a Conspiracy can ever be allowed to prove it upon Oath; for I believe, no Man ever yet made a Discovery but with the Hopes of Pardon; and a Government is obliged in Honour to grant it, where the Confession appears to be ingenuous and sincere: And therefore if the Hope or Prospect of Pardon, which is all that can be infer'd from a Promise, should be an Objection to the Competency of a Witness, no Government would be safe; for treasonable Conspiracies might be form'd and carried on with Impunity, when the Persons concerned, from whom alone a full Discovery can be had, are utterly incapable of proving the Fact, though they give all possible Marks of their Sincerity and Truth. They have therefore been always allowed to be Witnesses; and I don't remember that ever any Objection was made to their Competency, 'till the Case of the King and Gordon, when the Council for the Prisoner would have asked the same Question which is now proposed, but the Court did not think it proper before the Witness was sworn; for no Person produced as a Witness can be examin'd to any Matter which only affects his Credit, and is no Objection to his Competency, till after he is sworn to give Evidence, and has been examin'd.

Mr. Just. Powys. Mr. Hungerford would do well to remember the several Acts of Parliament made to give Encouragement, by a Reward of forty Pounds, for the apprehending and convicting of every false Coiner, Highwayman, and House-breaker; and if a Criminal in those Offences shall come in, and discover and convict two of his Accomplices, he shall be entitled to a Pardon; and by the express Words of the 5th of Queen Anne, shall have the Reward of forty Pounds for each House-breaker, and shall also himself be entitled to a Pardon; so that the Parliament thought it proper to give even Money as well as a Pardon to such Discoverer. Yet ever since the making of those Acts, the Persons so promised and encouraged, have upon those Trials been admitted as good Witnesses even before a Pardon. And indeed there cannot be too great Encouragement given to Criminals to become honest, and to come in and impeach their Accomplices, it being often impossible fully to discover those secret Confederacies, but by some of the Accomplices and Actors therein.

The Law thinks these are fit Witnesses, and you will find it in the Book that Mr. Ketelbey hath mention'd that they were thought fit to make Discoveries of those secret Combinations; I don't say to come in and give false Evidence, but to make a fair Discovery.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, we submit; we shall ask the Question whether he hath any such Promise made; let the Truth come out, and we shall be satisfied.

Mr. Just. Fortescue Aland. I was Council in the Case of the King and Gordon; and I very well remember the Council of the other Side insisted the Witnesses produced should be asked this Question on a Voyer dire, his Name was Mayer. The Reason the Court gave that it was improper to ask this Question on a Voyer dire, was, that if he had this Promise, such Promise was made either to speak the Truth, or to speak a Falshood; if it were to give a just and true Evidence, there was no Harm in it; and if it was a Promise of Pardon for speaking that which was not true, the Witness was not bound to answer that Question, and consequently it can be of no Use whatsoever, therefore the Witness must be sworn.

Mr. Stephen Lynch was sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

Lynch. Yes.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long have you known him?

Lynch. I first knew him about the Month of June last.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray give an Account to the Court and the Jury by what Means you first became acquainted with him.

Lynch. I became acquainted with him by Dr. Murphey: About the Month of April last I came into England from Flanders; at my Arrival in England I met with Dr. Murphey, that was my Acquaintance several Years before, who met me and told me he had some particular Business to tell me, and desired me to meet him at Cooper's Coffee-house in Cornhill, where I met him; and he told me that material Things were acting in the Kingdom in order to a Rising, and if I would be of the Party, he would recommend me to a Gentleman that had the Management of it: I asked Time to consider it, and in two or three Days time I told him that I was resolved to be of the Party. I frequently told him I was impatient to know who the Gentleman was that I was to be recommended to; about the Month of June he told me I should go with him to his Lodgings, which were at the upper End of Chancery-lane, right over-against the White-Hart.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Whose Lodgings did you go to?

Lynch. The Lodgings of Mr. Layer: Mr. Layer was at home, and desired us to go to the Griffin Tavern in Holborn and he would meet us there; we went, and in a little while Mr. Layer came to us; and then Dr. Murphey told him that I was the Gentleman he had spoke to him of. Mr. Layer was glad of my Acquaintance, and told me that he had had such a strong Recommendation of me, that he was fully satisfied in me; and then he held a Discourse about a Rising that was to be in the Kingdom in Favour of the Pretender, and that it would be back'd by a great many of the Army and the Guards, and several other Gentlemen.

Mr. Hungerford. The Overt-Act is laid in Essex, and here is an Evidence given of an Overt-Act in Middlesex; with Submission, they can give no Evidence of an Overt-Act in another County, till they give Evidence of an Overt-Act in Essex, where the Indictment is laid.

L. C. Just. All they say of Matters in the County of Middlesex, unless they give Evidence of an Overt-Act in the County of Essex, it signifies nothing.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, with Submission, they ought not to be suffered to give Evidence of an Overt-Act in Middlesex, before they give Evidence of some Overt-Act in Essex; for the proving some Overt-Act in Essex is the only thing which can entitle them to prove any Overt-Act elsewhere. For by the Method they would go on in, the Jury may be captivated with a Story of the Griffin Tavern, and of Mr. Layer's other Assignations and Actions in Middlesex, which cannot be imputed to him upon this Indictment until some Treason be proved in Essex: I hope therefore the King's Council shall receive your Lordship's Directions to go on regularly, to begin to give an Account of the Overt-Acts in Essex, before they go into another County.

L. C. Just. Mr. Hungerford, you must give them leave to go on in their own Method, of that that first happened in Middlesex, and afterwards of what happened in Essex; and if you dare not trust them and us, but will have your own Method, it would be to put us into Confusion.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we insist upon it in point of Law, that we are intitled to give Evidence of Overt-Acts of the same Species of Treason laid in the Indictment, though done in any County in England, provided we also prove an Overt-Act in the County of Essex; which we must do, otherwise this will pass for nothing. Mr. Lynch, go on, and give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what Mr. Layer said, when you were together at the Griffin Tavern.

Lynch. The first thing he told me was, That he was very glad to meet me, that he had had a good Recommendation of me from Dr. Murphey, as being a Man he could confide in; and beginning his Discourse of an Insurrection in the Kingdom, he told me, that they were back'd with a great many of the Army and the Guards; that there was a great many of the Nobility and Gentry of the Country that would come in to them: He told me then, that he wanted a Man of Resolution that would take upon him the seizing of some Person of Note, as a General, or some other great Man: The Discourse run all upon the same thing.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Recollect as well as you can, the Particulars Mr. Layer told you relating to this Design.

Lynch. He told me the general Design of a Revolution in the Kingdom, in favour of the Pretender, and that they were back'd by a great many of the Army, and a great many of the Nobility and Gentry; and then he told me he wanted a Man of Resolution, to undertake with some others, to seize a great Man, as a General or some other great Man: At that Time I took upon myself to do it, so that Time we discoursed no more.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How long were you together?

Lynch. About half an Hour.

Mr. Soll. Gen. When had you the next Meeting?

Lynch. A Day or two afterwards.

Mr. Soll. Gen. At what Place?

Lynch. At the same Tavern, the Griffin Tavern; when I came there, I sent a Boy for Mr. Layer, as he had ordered me to do when I wanted to see him.

L. C. Just. When was your first Meeting?

Lynch. About the Month of June.

L. C. Just. And the second Meeting was two or three Days after the first?

Lynch.

Lynch. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. At your parting after the first Meeting, what did Mr. Layer say to you?

Lynch. Mr. Layer told me, if I had Occasion to speak to him that I should not come to his Lodgings, but to go to a Tavern and send for him, which I did; I sent a Boy for him, and he came to me. Then talking over a Glass of Wine, he told me that he had pitched upon me to seize the Earl of Cadogan, and that I should chuse as many Persons as I thought fit who would answer the same Design; and he being the principal Man in the Army, it would discourage the King's Party, and animate the Pretender's Party; which, as I said before, I agreed to undertake, and to do the utmost of my Endeavours to do it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was you to do it alone, or was you to have any Assistance?

Lynch. Yes, I was to have Assistance.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Assistance?

Lynch. Such that I should chuse; such People that I could confide in.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you undertake it?

Lynch. Yes I did undertake it, and to pitch upon such Persons as should be proper to assist me in it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was any thing said at that time relating to any Person, who was to have the Conduct of the Design?

Lynch. He told me that there was some great Man that did not want Wit, Courage or Resolution, and was at the Head of this Affair, who would at a proper time give me an Order to effect something further about it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Had you any more Discourse with the Prisoner about this Affair?

Lynch. Yes, we had several Discourses about it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Tell my Lord and the Jury what more Discourse you had, if you can remember.

Lynch. The chief Part I was to act was to seize the Earl of Cadogan, with such Gentlemen as I should think proper to answer the end of seizing him.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Was there any other Meeting, and when, and how long after?

Lynch. After that I came to a Tavern in Holborn.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. How long after?

Lynch. Some few Days; it was at the Castle Tavern in Holborn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was with you at the Tavern?

Lynch. I came to the Tavern and sent for Mr. Layer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he come to you?

Lynch. Yes, he came to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse had you with him at that time?

Lynch. We had no particular Discourse, but in general we talked about the Uneasiness of the Nation, and the fair Opportunity there was to rise.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give an Account of what else passed.

Lynch. I say, the Discourse that we had at two Meetings before, he repeated, and said, Now is a fair Opportunity, the Uneasiness of the People being such, to bring about a Revolution, since they would be back'd by the Army and the Guards, and several other People. Soon after that we parted.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. When had you any other Meeting?

Lynch. Some Meetings we had at Mr. Layer's House in Southampton-Buildings.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. How long after?

Lynch. A few Days only.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. At the several Meetings at his House, what was the Subject of your Discourse?

Lynch. It was upon the same, about the Rising and Uneasiness of the People; and the fair Opportunity of bringing about a Resolution; of the Disposition of the Army and the Guards.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Did he give you any Encouragement?

Lynch. After I met him at his House in Southampton-Buildings, I told him of my Uneasiness; because he had told me at the beginning, that these things would be soon put in Execution: I told him, if they were delayed, I was afraid they would not succeed. He then animated me, by telling me that there was no fear of its succeeding; and that I should not be discouraged, for there was a great Man, a Man of Wit and Conduct; that was at the Helm, and that had the Management of the Scheme: That I should always keep a good Heart; and that Things went on very well.

Mr. West. Did he tell you in whose Favour this was to be?

Lynch. Yes, in Favour of the Pretender. He mentioned him by the Name of King.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you know any thing about his going into the Country?

Lynch. After I met him at his House, he went into the Country and staid sixteen or seventeen Days at his Return I went to see him, expressing how uneasy I was about the Delay.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. About what Time was this?

Lynch. I believe it was in July. And then I told him again how uneasy I was at the Delay. To which he answered, keep a good Heart, all Things go on very well.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Had you any Apprehensions that all was to be done at home, or that you was to have any foreign Assistance?

Lynch. In my Discourse to him of the Uneasiness I was under at the Delay, I asked him if he had any Promise of any Succour from any Power Abroad? He told me, if we once made a Beginning, we should not want them: But did insinuate, that we should not want Encouragement from the Court of France.

Mr. Att. Gen. When you expressed your Uneasiness at the Delay, what did he say to encourage you?

Lynch. The Reason he told me was, that things went on very well, and would very soon be put in Execution.

Mr. Att. Gen. In what Manner did you express your Uneasiness?

Lynch. Nothing but that I was uneasy, and I was afraid that things did go wrong.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did you say, did you say any thing relating to your own Circumstances?

Lynch. In the Beginning I told Dr. Murphey, because it would be a long while, some five or six Weeks, before I was to be introduced to Mr. Layer's Company, that I came on my own particular Business, and my Circumstances would not permit me to be long here at my own Expence.

At the Meeting with Mr. Layer, when I first made this Complaint to him, Mr. Layer told me I should not want for a small Matter, to maintain me in England. Accordingly Mr. Layer gave me some Money.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember how much that was ?

Lynch. I cannot remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he give you Money at any other Time ?

Lynch. Mr. Layer gave me some Money the first Time, and afterwards he sent me some Money by Dr. Murphey.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did he give you any Money at any other Time ?

Lynch. Yes, the last time I was with him I had more.

Mr. Att. Gen. How many times had you Money of him ?

Lynch. Five or six times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know what the Sums did amount to together ?

Lynch. I can't recollect ; but I believe about eight or ten Guineas.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was it given you for ?

Lynch. To keep me in England, and to assist in the intended Design of a Revolution.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. After you went to him, upon his Return out of the Country, do you remember the Discourse that passed between you then ?

Lynch. Yes : After I came to his House, I expressed my Uneasiness at the Delay ; Upon which he encouraged me, giving me to hope that Things went on very well, and our Design would effectually take Place.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did you ask him any thing about the Army ?

Lynch. I asked him if he had any Encouragement from the Guards and the Army ? He told me, Yes, he had ; that a great many of the Officers would not engage themselves now, being well paid ; but he said he had spoke with several Officers of the Guards, who had assured him, that most of the common Soldiers would come in, as soon as we had made a Beginning.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did he mention any thing of the Time ?

L. C. Just. When you asked him if he had any Encouragement from the Army, what did he say ?

Lynch. He told me, that he had Encouragement from many of the Officers of the Army : That he had discoursed with several Serjeants of the Guards, who told him that the common Soldiers would be glad, after they had made a Beginning, to come in to them.

L. C. Just. Did he give you any Reason for this ?

Lynch. Mr. Layer told me, the Serjeants told him so before they were encamped, and complained of their ill Usage, and hard Usage from the subaltern Officers.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was you acquainted with any Time or Day that was fixed ?

Lynch. There was no fixed Time : Mr. Layer told me, it was to be on the Rising of the Camp ; because they could not talk with the Soldiers so well, while they were encamped, as they could afterwards, when they were in their Quarters.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Was there any Consultation of viewing any one's House ?

Lynch. Afterwards in Discourse he told me, that it was fit to go and view the Earl of Cadogan's House, in case it was necessary to seize the said Lord in his House.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Where is his House ?

Lynch. In Piccadilly. Accordingly we appointed a Day to go ; and I came to his Lodgings, and we took Coach, and away we went ; and talking to him about it, he told me, he was very well acquainted with my Lord Cadogan, and had some Business with him, about an Estate which his Lordship was about buying : We went to his House, but my Lord was not to be spoke with, or was not within, I don't remember which, but we were conducted into his House : We viewed the inner Part of the House, afterwards we went into the Garden, we view'd the lower Part of the Garden, then we went out in the Yard, and took a View of the Avenues round about the House. I don't remember exactly the Time, but it was that Day that a Soldier should have been shot in Hyde-Park.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Had you any Discourse about the Feasibleness of it ?

Lynch. Yes, that it was easy to be done ; if we had but some resolute Gentlemen to stand by us, that it was very feasible to be done.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Had you any Talk at that time relating to the Tower ?

Lynch. He told me, the Tower would be immediately surrendered to the Party ; on the Day the Plot was to be put in Execution, a certain Officer of the Guards would take upon him to mount the Guards there, who would facilitate the Delivery of the Tower to them.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Was there any talk of the Mint ?

Lynch. Yes, afterwards : He said there would be no doubt of the Mint ; they would be glad to take the Opportunity to shake off their Confinement : And that they would put Arms into their Hands, according as they repaired to their Party.

Mr. Att. Gen. When did you see the Prisoner next after the time that you speak of viewing my Lord Cadogan's House ?

Lynch. I saw him at his own House, and at several Taverns in the City ; and once he wrote to me, desiring me to come to his Lodging ; accordingly I went, and when I came to his House, I met with a little Paper that was left for me, directing me to go to the Queen's-Head Tavern in Great Queen-Street near Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and to enquire there for one Mr. Wilson ; which I did, and I was conducted into a Room where the said Mr. Wilson was, with Mr. Layer and another Man, who seemed, by his Clothes, to be a Serjeant of the Guards. I do not know the Man.

Mr. Att. Gen. What passed then ?

Lynch. We staid a little while there, we talked over the Business, and drank good Success to the Enterprize.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Your Lordship will please to take Notice, that when he went to Mr. Layer's Lodging, he found a Letter there, directing him to go to the Queen's-Head Tavern, and enquire for one Wilson ; that when he came there, Wilson was there, and Mr. Layer, and another Man.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What passed at that time ?

Lynch. Nothing material.

Mr. Att. Gen. You talked about drinking good Success to the Enterprize : Who drank that ?

Lynch.

Lynch. We all drank that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the Prisoner at the Bar drink it?

Lynch. Yes, he did. I told the Prisoner, when he went out, that I was mighty uneasy at the Delay of this Affair. He told me, I need not be uneasy, for every Thing went on well; and they had a Nobleman at the Helm, who had Authority from the Pretender, and would lose no Opportunity when a fit Time offered.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What did he call the Pretender?

Lynch. He called him the King. I was uneasy at the Delay, for fear of being discover'd.

L. C. Just. What Reason did he give you, why you should not be uneasy?

Lynch. Because their Designs were quickly to be put in Execution; and there was a Nobleman at the Helm who would put the Design in Execution, as having full Power and Authority from the King to act as he thought proper.

L. C. Just. Did you ask who that Nobleman was?

Lynch. Yes; but he never told me his Name, but said, that I should, in a proper Time, be presented to him, and receive my Commission and Orders from him to seize my Lord Cadogan.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly, My Lord, we shall now gratify the Prisoner's Counsel, with an Account of what happened in Effex; I hope they will not be impatient to hear that: Therefore, pray acquaint my Lord, and the Jury, when you went out of Town with Mr. Layer.

Lynch. My Lord, I was at Mr. Layer's House the Day when the Bishop of Rocheſter was sent to the Tower; he ask'd me, if I would ride abroad with him the next Day to take the Air; I consented to it, and came the next Morning to his House; and Mr. Layer asked me if I mounted with Furniture: I told him no; but that I had a double Barrel Fowling-piece, which if his Servant would carry, would do as well. He then desired me to go and stay for him without Aldgate, and get my Gun ready loaden, for he had that about him which he would not lose for any thing in the World. I went and staid till about ten or eleven o'Clock, when Mr. Layer met me, and gave the Gun to his Servant to carry. On the Road he told me, we were going to my Lord North and Gray's, whom he was very well acquainted with, and that he would recommend me to him as a Friend of his. When we got to the Green Man, he told me, we had better go in and dine there, because Dinner-time would be over before we could get to my Lord North and Gray's. Whilst Dinner was getting ready, we had several Discourses on the same Subject, Of the Uneasiness of the Nation, and its Inclination to a Revolution, and how to bring it about; upon which he pulled a Paper out of his Pocket, and gave it me to read the latter Part of it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Can you remember what it contained?

Lynch. I remember some Lines of it; which was, in general, to invite the Nation to an Insurrection, and to shake off the Calamities and Miseries they endured under the present Ministry. And it was mentioned in the said Paper, that the Earl of Cadogan was actually in their Custody; thereby encouraging the Army to revolt, with an Offer of three Guineas to every Horseman and Serjeant, and two Guineas to every Corporal, and one Guinea to every common Soldier, to be paid immediately on their joining the Party, and a Promise of farther Preference.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you read this?

Lynch. I did, out of the Paper in Mr. Layer's Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know whose Hand-writing it was?

Lynch. According to our Discourse, I thought it might be his writing.

L. C. Just. But he produced it?

Lynch. Yes, my Lord, he produced it.

L. C. Just. You say you imagine, from some Discourse between you, that it was his Hand-writing; what Reason was there in all his Discourse, that induced you to think so?

Lynch. He talk'd of it as being of his own making; besides, there were several Interlineations, Dashings-out, and Interlineations afterwards. He was very well satisfied and easy as to me, and said, he could wish that he could bring Matters about so, as that I could have the sole Direction of seizing some of the Ministry, and namely, my Lord Townshend, my Lord Carteret, and Mr. Walpole.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Discourse about seizing the King?

Lynch. He said, when the Design was put in Execution, the Army would declare in their Favour, and they would send a strong Guard to take care of the King's Person.

Mr. Att. Gen. How to take care of the King's Person? What was you to do?

Lynch. Nothing but to secure the King's Person; by what he told me, it was for the Public Good of the Kingdom; that they did not mean, nor had they any Design on the King's Person, but only to keep him in Security from any Insult.

Mr. Att. Gen. What more passed at that Time?

Lynch. Nothing more in particular.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any talk relating to the Army?

Lynch. I said before what related to the Army.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was there any Discourse about a Scheme or Plan?

Lynch. He told me there was a Scheme laid on that Foot, of which I told you the first Step was to seize the Earl of Cadogan, and then, according as the Army came over, to take care and seize the King's Person; and he thought the proper Time to put this in Execution, would be at the Rising of the Camp in Hyde-Park.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was there any Objection made to this?

Lynch. No; I made no Objection, only shew'd my Uneasiness at the long Delay.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When you so expressed your Uneasiness, what did he say?

Lynch. He told me, if I could think or propose any Thing more proper, that I should do it. After that we rode toward Epping, and went to my Lord North and Gray's; and there Mr. Layer introduced me as his Friend. We staid there all Night, and dined there the next Day. In the Evening we came away, in company with another ther Gentleman that I did not know; but we talk'd on the Road about the Situation of my Lord's House; and Mr. Laver told me he had recommended me to his Lordship as his particular Friend, and asked me how I liked him.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did he ask you any Questions? Do you remember what he called his Lordship?

Lynch. I don't remember any other Name but My Lord.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When he asked your Opinion of him, and how you liked him, did he describe him in any other manner, or only called him My Lord?

Lynch. He only called him my Lord North and Grey; he only asked me how I liked my Lord North and Grey.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Liked his Lordship, for what?

Lynch. That was all.

Mr. Reeve. Had you any Talk with him about the Person that was to have the chief Command?

Lynch. Yes; but he never named the Person.

Mr. West. Had you never any Discourse who was to command the Party that was to seize my Lord Cadogan?

Lynch. I was to command that Party.

Mr. West. Was you any other Time at my Lord North and Grey's?

Lynch. Yes; another time I went to my Lord North and Grey's, where I found Mr. Laver, and expressed to Mr. Laver the Uneasiness I was in at the long Delay, and that I was afraid our Hopes would vanish; and told him, if things were not soon put in Execution, I would withdraw my self. Mr. Laver bid me not be uneasy, Things might perhaps be sooner put in Execution than I imagined.

Mr. West. Where was this?

Lynch. At Epping, at my Lord North and Grey's.

Mr. West. Did you come home together?

Lynch. No; I came home that Night: Mr. Laver remained there.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did you see him some time afterwards?

Lynch. I met him at his own House, where I expressing my Uneasiness as formerly, he said, I should not be uneasy, for Things would soon take Effect; and bid me get myself ready to execute my Design; because they had Notice the Camp would soon break up, which was the Time designed to put Things in Execution. And at another time he told me, that the Declaration which he had shewn me at the Green Man, had mentioned no particular Persons, but in general the Safety and Public Good of the Kingdom: There was nothing mentioned of the Pretender in it, but that he had thought fit to put it now in the Pretender's Name.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Who was you to receive your particular Orders from, for the executing your Design?

Lynch. From that Nobleman, who was to act as General in this Affair.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did you never hear from Mr. Laver who that was?

Lynch. No; I don't recollect he was ever named by Mr. Laver; he told me, that the Declaration was afterwards put in the Name of the Pretender.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What was it he recommended you to my Lord North and Grey for?

Lynch. He recommended me to him as one of his particular Friends.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Discourse had you at that Time?

Lynch. We talk'd indifferently; we discours'd nothing of the Revolution at that Time: He told me he had given the Declaration to a Non-juring-Minister to get printed, and had given twenty Guineas for that Purpose.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Was you acquainted before with my Lord North and Grey?

Lynch. No; he introduced me as one of his Friends.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Did you know when Mr. Laver was first taken up?

Lynch. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. How long before that had you been with him?

Lynch. I can't recollect the Time. I first became acquainted with Mr. Laver about June.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. What passed the last time you was with him, before he was taken up? Was there any particular Conference between you?

Lynch. I told you about the Declaration, and about my Uneasiness, and that he told me Things would succeed sooner than I thought for.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. When you express'd your Uneasiness, did he use any Vehemence of Expression, as to what Part he would act?

Lynch. He told me several times, when I was so irresolute and uneasy, saith he, don't you be uneasy; rather than all should fail, I will stir up and be a second Maffinello.

Mr. West. Had you any Conversation about the taking up of any Person?

Lynch. He only told me at that Time, that if the Nobleman at the Head of Affairs should be taken up, every thing would be quash'd.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. That Nobleman was not taken up at that Time then?

Lynch. No.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Recommendation had you to my Lord North and Grey?

Lynch. Only as a Friend of Mr. Laver's, to pass away the Time in Summer.

Mr. Hungerford. I presume they have done with giving the Evidence, which they intend, of any Overt-Act in the County of Essex; if they have, I would crave the Liberty to observe.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We have not done; if you have any thing to observe, it must be when we have gone through our Evidence.

L. C. Just. When they have given all their Evidence, then will be your proper time to object to the Evidence, and to shew whether 'tis competent or no.

Mr. Hungerford. I do not press to make any Remarks upon their whole Evidence; but if they have given all the Evidence they intend to give of any Overt-Act in Essex, for on that depends the Fate of this Gentleman at the Bar, I hope we are now (before they shall be permitted to give Evidence of any farther Overt-Act of Treason in another County) at Liberty to object, that the Transaction in Essex is not an Overt-Act at all of the High-Treason laid in this Indictment.

Mr. Soll. Gen.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We have not done: When we have given our Evidence, then it will be proper for them to make their Objections to the Whole.

Mr. Hungerford. I humbly offer it to your Lordship's Consideration, whether it is right and proper to go on in such a Method, and to take up the Time of the Court, when the Gentlemen on the other Side say, they have done with giving Evidence as to any Overt-Act in the County of Essex.

Mr. Soll. Gen. No; we have not done with that Evidence.

Mr. Ketelbey. I don't know whether your Lordship will indulge us to ask the Witness a Question or two now.

L. C. Just. Propose your Questions, and we will tell you.

Mr. Ketelbey. Whether he hath any Offer of Pardon proposed to him to induce him to give Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar; which if he hath, we apprehend will invalidate his Evidence.

Lynch. No, Sir; I have no Promise of Pardon at all: I only do this out of Justice, to make what Reparation I can, and to save the Blood of many People.

Mr. Ketelbey. I beg leave to ask him a few more Questions. I think you say the first time you were introduced into this Gentleman's Company, the Prisoner at the Bar, was at the Griffin-Tavern in Holborn, and that he then told you he had great Designs in hand; and that there was an Infurrection designed, and they wanted a Person of Resolution to seize a General: This, you say, was the first Time that ever you saw the Prisoner at the Bar. How came you to have that Share of Confidence in a Man that you never saw before?

Lynch. I told you I was in Discourse with Dr. Murphey a great many Days and Weeks before I saw Mr. Layer; I told you how every Day I saw him, and always discoursed about the Infurrection, and how he told me then that he would recommend me to a Man that had the Management of the greatest Part in this Affair; and I asked every Day when I should be introduced to him: He told me, the Time was not come yet; but when it was a proper Time, he would introduce me.

Mr. Ketelbey. I think you give that for a Reason, why you had that Confidence in him, because you had been recommended by one Dr. Murphey. How came you to have that mighty Dependance on Dr. Murphey?

Lynch. Because Dr. Murphey and I had been acquainted several Years ago.

Mr. Ketelbey. I hope you was not in any wicked Design with Dr. Murphey, and so much acquainted, as to recommend you in a Case of Treason.

Lynch. There was a common Friendship between us.

Mr. Ketelbey. How came he to trust you? Would you have trusted him in a Business of Treason?

Lynch. We have been concerned in Affairs together.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long was you at the Green Man with Mr. Layer?

Lynch. I can't say exactly the time.

Mr. Ketelbey. I don't ask you exactly to a Minute or two; but was you there an Hour, or two, or three Hours?

Lynch. I can't say whether we were there an Hour or two; but we had something dressed for Dinner, and the Matters was discoursed of by us before Dinner.

Mr. Ketelbey. When you first alighted from your Horses, what Room was you shewn into?

Lynch. We were shewn into a Room up one Pair of Stairs on the Right Hand, the first Room.

Mr. Ketelbey. Was it towards the Street, or backwards?

Lynch. It looked into the common Road.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you look out of the Window and see a Person of your Acquaintance?

Lynch. I saw two Gentlemen, but did not know them.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you not look out of the Window, and say, you saw a Gentleman of your Acquaintance?

Lynch. I said I saw two Gentlemen that I thought I had seen before.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did not you go down to those Gentlemen?

Lynch. No, I did not go down to them.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did not you go down to them?

Lynch. No.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did not you say so to Mr. Layer, in the Drawer's Prefence?

Lynch. No.

Prisoner. Did not you tell me that those Gentlemen were your Acquaintance?

Lynch. I told you, those two Gentlemen I had seen before.

Prisoner. How long were we together at the Green Man? Were the Horses put up or not?

Lynch. I can't tell.

Prisoner. Was there any thing dressed for our Dinner but a Beef-Stake?

Lynch. No, nothing else.

Prisoner. Did not you go down Stairs, pretending you went to those Gentlemen?

Lynch. No, I did not tell you I went to those Gentlemen.

Prisoner. Did you not go down Stairs?

Lynch. Yes, I did, and came up again immediately.

Prisoner. Was not Dinner on Table when you came up again?

Lynch. I went down twice before Dinner.

Prisoner. Then you must consequently leave me in the Room.

Lynch. I went down to make Water.

Prisoner. What did you go down the second time for?

Lynch. Out of Curiosity.

Prisoner. How long did you stay?

Lynch. Not both times above two Minutes.

Prisoner. I was then alone, when you went down.

Lynch. Yes.

Prisoner. Was this Discourse before or after Dinner?

Lynch. It was before Dinner.

Prisoner. When you came up the second time, was not Dinner on the Table?

Lynch. It was come up.

Prisoner. And yet the Discourse we had was before Dinner?

Lynch. Yes, it was before Dinner.

Prisoner. How much Time might we spend before Dinner, half an Hour or an Hour?

Lynch. I don't remember, but it was a good while.

Prisoner. Was not the double Barrel Gun in the Room?

Lynch. I don't know whether it was there, or whether your Servant had it.

Prisoner. At the Time of Dinner was my Servant, or Drawer, in the Room?

Lynch. Neither of them was in the Room.

Prisoner. You say we were a good while, you and I, alone; pray, how long?

Lynch. I cannot say positively how long.

Mr. Hungerford. Have you any Copy of that Part of the Paper he gave you to read, and which you read?

Lynch. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Was the Whole of it of any Length?

Lynch. To the best of my Remembrance it was a common Sheet of Paper.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you read the Whole?

Lynch. No; he doubled it down, and gave me the latter Part of it to read.

Mr. Ketelbey. Some Things you seem to remember, and some Things you don't remember: Was it printed, or written?

Lynch. It was written.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did he not mention it to be the Prince of Orange's Declaration?

Lynch. No, he did not.

Prisoner. Was not the Paper blotted?

Lynch. In that I saw there were two or three Places interlined.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I think the Gentlemen did say they had not done with their Evidence, with relation to an Overt-Act in Essex; if they have not, they will do well to go on now: But we hope they shall not go into Overt-Acts committed in any other County, till they make the Whole of their Proofs of an Overt-Act in Essex.

L. C. Just. You have been told, they should proceed in their own Method, and when they have done, you may make what Observations may be of Service to your Client.

Mr. Hungerford. Relations of Fact arising in another County, which have no Relation to the Fact arising in Essex, we hope they shall not go into, to amuse or captivate the Jury, the Court, and the Auditory.

L. C. Just. Sure never any Thing was like this! It is our Province to give Directions, and we think it not proper to interrupt the King's Counsel, but that they should proceed in their own Method: You shall be heard as long as you please, when you come to make your Observations.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Prisoner hath a Right to say any thing that is proper to the Court and the Jury, in his Defence, but he must say it openly; he is not to talk privately with the Jury; tho' I am sure they are Gentlemen of so great Worth and Honour, as not to be influenced.

Mr. Att. Gen. I dare say the Jury won't be influenced; but he talks to his Counsel so loud, that the Jury may easily hear every Word he says.

L. C. Just. He must not speak so loud.

Mr. Att. Gen. I just now heard him say, It was strange to go on with Evidence that would not be to the Purpose. I heard him, as I sat here; let him deny it if he can.

L. C. Just. I hope you will not offer any thing of that Kind, Mr. Layer: You have a Right to discourse with your Counsel, but you must do it in such a Manner as the Jury may not hear.

Mr. Hungerford. Indeed, my Lord, he shall have no Encouragement from us for any such Conduct.

Matthew Plunkett sworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Tell my Lord and the Jury, whether you know the Prisoner at the Bar.

Plunkett. Yes, I do know him.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Will you tell my Lord and the Jury, upon what Account, and by whose Means, you first became acquainted?

Plunkett. One Major Barnewell, brought me first acquainted with Mr. Layer; he had an Execution in his House in Great Queen-street, and this Major Barnewell came to me, and desired me to get a Couple of Grenadiers. I brought him two; we went to Mr. Layer's House, and his Clerk let us in at the Back-door, and the Grenadiers turned the Officers out, and Mr. Layer gave them a Crown, and a Glas of Brandy.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. When was this?

Plunkett. As near as I can guess, it is going on of five Years.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Tell my Lord and the Jury what Month in this last Year you renewed the Acquaintance, and who brought you to him?

Plunkett. The next Acquaintance I had afterwards, was by Major Barnewell, who was arrested, and he sent me with a Letter to his House, to desire him to relieve him.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you know any thing of one James Plunkett?

Plunkett. Yes; he came to me from Mr. Layer, in July last, to desire me to meet him; but how this Counsellor Layer and this James Plunkett came acquainted I don't know.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. What was he?

Plunkett. I don't know what he is; he is acquainted with Mr. Layer.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. What Profession is he of?

Plunkett. I don't know; nor how he lives, or gets his Bread.

L. C. Just. Go on.

Plunkett. Mr. Layer paid the Charges for Major Barnewell, and brought him out of the Marshalsea.

Mr. Reeve. How long was this ago?

Plunkett. To the best of my Knowledge, four Years ago.

Mr. Reeve. He is giving an Account how he came to be acquainted with Mr. Layer; the first time was upon the Account of rescuing Mr. Layer's Goods; the other time was by Mr. Layer's redeeming Major Barnewell out of the Marshalsea, and paying his Debt: Give an Account how you came last acquainted with him.

Plunkett. I being at home, in my own Room.

Mr. Reeve. How long ago?

Plunkett. I believe, as near as I can guess, it was last July.

Mr. Reeve. Give an Account of what happened then.

Plunkett. Now this James Plunkett came into my Room, sat down, and he asked me how I did, did, and said, he was glad to see me; and he asked me, Are you not well acquainted in the Army? Yes, saith I, I know a great many in the Army, both Officers and common Soldiers. Do you know, saith he, any of the Serjeants of the Guards? I know some of 'em, said I. He brought me out of the Room, because my Wife was there, and then he opened his Mind to me: Saith he, Do you know one Mr. Layer? (I had forgot the Gentleman, being so slightly acquainted with him;) No, saith I, I don't know him. No matter, saith he, I have appointed a Place for you to meet him at, at the Italian Coffee-House in Russel-Court; and at the End of this, Mr. Plunkett asked me to keep Correspondence with them for the Pretender's Service. I did not go to the Italian Coffee-House, not being in a proper Station, nor having Money for that Purpose: So I did not think proper to go to the Italian Coffee-House; but the Sunday following I went to St. Andrew's Church, and meeting with some Friends, they told me Dr. Sacheverel preach'd there; and so they decoy'd me to go and hear him preach there. When Service was over, to the best of my Knowledge, as I was going Home, between twelve and one a-Clock, I met Mr. Layer accidentally in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields; Mr. Layer he look'd at me, he was really a perfect Stranger to me, for I did not know him again; saith he, Is not your Name Plunkett? Yes, saith I. Was there not one with you t'other Night, one James Plunkett? Yes, Sir, says I. Where did he desire you to go? said he. I answer'd, He desired me to go to the Italian Coffee-House in Russel-Court. Saith he, 'Tis well enough: Do you not know me? No, saith I, you have the Advantage of me; I ask your Pardon, for I don't remember you. Don't you remember one Layer? said he. Then I call'd to Mind that I knew the Gentleman. Saith he, Will you walk on this Side? I walked back again towards Little Turn-Style, and we struck up the Wall-Side, and just as we came under a great Coach-House Gate-Way, we went in, and in the Gate-Way he talk'd to me; saith he, I am told that you are a very honest Man, and well-affected so and so.

Mr. Reeve. Well-affected, to whom?

Plunkett. Well-affected as to the Business of the Pretender. At the same Time we had this Talk, he bid me not mention it to James Plunkett, that I had seen him: Then he asked me if I knew any Serjeants in the Guards; for saith he, I want such old Soldiers as you are yourself, that could discipline a Mob, for we have other Men enough amongst us; but if we could get some old Soldiers, if that could be managed, they would be finely rewarded. But Sir, saith I, the Pretender is a Papist. Saith he, what Difference is there between a Papist King, and a Lutheran King?

Mr. Reeve. He said he wanted such old Soldiers as you; for what?

Plunkett. He wanted them to discipline a Mob, and to put them in Order. Then we began to reason about the Pretender; Why, saith he, we had as good have a Papist for our King as a Lutheran.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. What did you object?

Plunkett. I said he was a Papist. Says he, We had as good have a Papist for our King, as to have a Lutheran, I don't know what Difference there is; but as it was, the Nation was enslaved, and the People were obliged to be Slaves. I asked him, Sir, who is the Promoter of this, that may join us? You see, says he, what Injustice is done to you, you have served Abroad, and others are put over your Head; you have had and found great Hardships. I asked him who promoted this? He said, the Lord North and Grey. Says I, He is a Peer of the Realm. Saith he, He is a fine General. And the Earl of Strafford he mentioned.

Mr. Reeve. Who did he say was a fine General?

Plunkett. He said my Lord North and Grey was a fine General; and ask'd me what I thought of him? I said I had never been under his Command, but I look'd upon him to be a great Man, and one of the Peers of the Land. And then he mentioned my Lord Strafford, What do you think of him? To which I made the like Answer. And what do you think of General Primrose? I said, I had lately seen him at Chelsea, passing by in his Coach, but that he was an old Man; however, Mr. Layer said he was a brave General. Then he ask'd me what I thought of General Webb? I said, I had heard of his Fame.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When he had said my Lord North and Grey was a fine General, and when you ask'd who promoted it, whether did Mr. Layer tell you what their Design was to do? When Mr. Layer ask'd you what do you think of this Person, and the other Person, what were they to do?

Plunkett. To raise a Rebellion.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was that talk'd of at that Time?

Plunkett. Not at that Time:

L. C. Just. You say he wanted such old Soldiers as you; for what Purpose? You say he wanted them to discipline a Mob, and put it in Order.

Plunkett. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. Just. Did he tell you how many he wanted?

Plunkett. No; he did not say how many:

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Was there any thing said about their Names at that Time?

Plunkett. Mr. Layer would have me take a List of their Names, and to enroll them, that they might know where they lodg'd, and where they quartered; that so when he wanted them, he might send for them to be in Readiness.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Was there any Number he ask'd you the Names of?

Plunkett. I said I knew a great many, and that I could get twenty five. Saith he, you ought to have a List of their Names, where they lodge, that they may be in Readiness for a Call: And saith he, This would have gone on some Time ago, only Somebody made Discovery of it to the French Ambassador, and he wrote to the Regent, and so it was discovered to the King: And saith he, The Duke of Ormond was to come in one Ship, and General Dillon in another, and they would bring their Numbers with them; and then I should see that the Army would not oppose them. And when I parted from him, he gave me half a Crown to drink.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. What was that to do?

Plunkett. It was to encourage me. And he said he would send a Messenger to me; and in a Day or two afterwards there came a Messenger from him: I was not at home, but he spoke with my Wife.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Who was that?

Plunkett. The Un-juring Minister.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was his Name?

Plunkett. His Name was Jeffreys.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say you was not at home the first Time; did he come again?

Plunkett. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long after?

Plunkett. A matter of five or six days after.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see him?

Plunkett. Yes, I saw him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What passed between you?

Plunkett. He ask'd me if I knew Mr. Layer? I told him I did. He then carried me to the Castle Tavern in Drury-Lane, where we drank two Pints of Wine, which he paid for; after the Nonjuring Parson told me he came from Layer, who gave his Service, and told me that he was employed by Mr. Layer to go to such as I was, who were old Serjeants, to get a Parcel together to discipline Citizens, and other Mob in the Country.

Mr. Att. Gen. What further pass'd between you and Mr. Jeffreys?

Mr. Ketelbey. I beg leave to object to that Question.

Mr. Att. Gen. If I don't bring it home to Mr. Layer, it will signify nothing.

L. C. Just. Mr. Ketelbey, you know that many times in Discourse it is necessary to mention Introductions, to let in what is material: Whatever pass'd between him and Jeffreys, don't affect your Client.

Mr. Hungerford. It is a constant Rule, if a Man speaks of a third Person's Transactions, it is declared as nothing, and commonly stop'd from being given in Evidence.

L. C. Just. If they begin right, they will give Evidence in such a Method as to be understood: By declaring what passed between him and Plunkett, the Evidence may be the better understood.

Mr. Ketelbey. I don't doubt your Lordship's giving Direction right; but I observe this, lest some of the Jury should not take it right.

L. C. Just. Let the Evidence be given in such a manner as may be understood; what is introductory goes for nothing, but it is in order to explain the Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. What pass'd between you and the Nonjuring Parson, at the Castle Tavern?

Plunkett. He talk'd to me of the same Subject, desiring me to get Men in Readiness; he told me, he had a great many Places to go to besides me with this Errand, and then we parted. Another time he came to me, we went to an Ale-House, to the Cock and Bottle in the Strand, where he gave me half a Guinea, and said, there is a Token, Mr. Layer had sent it me to give me Encouragement.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. At that Time that Mr. Layer said he would send a Messenger to you, did he mention any thing of Money?

Plunkett. Mr. Layer said he would send Money by the Messenger to me.

L. C. Just. You say he told you, that he would send you Money by the Messenger.

Plunkett. He told me so.

L. C. Just. Afterwards you say, one came to you as from him, and encouraged you, and gave you half a Guinea.

Plunkett. He did: I am upon my Oath before God and Man, I will say nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Did you receive any Message from Jeffreys to appoint a Meeting with Mr. Layer?

Plunkett. Some Time afterwards I met Mr. Layer, at eight a-Clock, at the Castle Tavern in Drury-Lane; there was the Landlord, and Mr. Layer, who had two Bottles of Wine, and some Bread and Cheefe: He would have had me eat, but I told him I could not eat; but I drank of the Wine. When he had discours'd with me about the Affair, to encourage me he gave me a Crown; I went cross Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, so went home.

Mr. West. What did he give you the Crown for?

Plunkett. To encourage me to list Men for the Pretender.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Letter by the Penny-Post?

Plunkett. That Morning Mr. Layer was going to Norfolk, Plunkett told me Mr. Layer was going out of Town, and would be glad to see me. I went to Mr. Layer, and his Horses were at the Door; he desired me to walk up two Pair of Stairs forwards, and by the same Token order'd his Servant to charge his Blunderbuss in the Room. Saith Mr. Layer, I have given a Guinea to the Nonjuring Minister to give you, to do what Service you can; and when I am abroad, you may be sure I shall not be idle.

Mr. Reeve. Was any Proposal made to any other Person?

Plunkett. I brought an old Soldier who had been in the Service many Years.

Mr. Reeve. What was his Name?

Plunkett. John Child; I brought him as thinking he might have been of Service to them.

L. C. Just. What was it Mr. Layer said when he was going into the Country?

Plunkett. He told me he would not be idle there.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What did he desire of you?

Plunkett. He desired me to see and get what Soldiers I could for him: I came to the Nonjuring Minister, and told him I had got twenty five. Then Mr. Layer ask'd me, why I did not bring a List of them, that he might know where their Habitations were, and that they might be in Readiness at the Time. I disputed with Mr. Layer what they would do for Arms? No fear of Arms, saith he; Arms will be provided for them. After he returned from the Country to the Town, this Mr. Plunkett was the first Messenger that was sent to me; he came and told me Mr. Layer was come to Town; and this Nonjuring Parson sent me a Letter by the Penny-Post; Mr. Child was in my Room and read it; the Contents were, Mr. Layer is come to Town, and would be very glad to see you: No more, but your humble Servant, William Jeffreys. By this I knew his Name.

Mr. Att. Gen. By this Letter he told you Mr. Layer would be glad to see you; did you go to him?

Plunkett. Yes, I went to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where? To his own House?

Plunkett. Yes, to his own House.

Mr. Att. Gen. What passed between you and Mr. Layer at that Time?

Plunkett. I remember at that Time, when I came to him, he gave me a Guinea with his own Hand.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who gave it you?

Plunkett. Mr. Layer, after he came from the Country, gave it me, and I recommended Mr. Child to him.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When you recommended Mr. Child, what did Layer say?

Plunkett. He said he had no Business for him.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. For what Purpose was Child recommended to Mr. Layer?

Plunkett. I recommended him as an honest Man, as one that was well-affected, as he desired me.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Upon what Account did you recommend him?

Plunkett. Upon the Account to be a Pretender's Man.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did you ever receive any Money to give to Child?

Plunkett. I received half a Guinea from Mr. Layer to give to Mr. Child.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. For what Purpose was it?

Plunkett. For to encourage him in the Service, to be trusty to him, and to be a Pretender's Man.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. By what Name did he call the Pretender?

Plunkett. He called him the King.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Had you any Talk with him any other time?

Plunkett. The Sunday before he was taken up I was with him, and he was talking and saying the King was as fine a Shooter as any in Europe.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whom did he mean by the King?

Plunkett. The Pretender, that he was as fine a Shooter as any in Europe; he shot nineteen out of twenty; I said, that was fine shooting.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was this Discourse?

Plunkett. In his own Parlour.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you recollect any other Discourse there was at that Time, besides that of Shooting?

Plunkett. Yes, there was; We talked of those Men that would do Service. I asked him what Rewards those Men, that would do Service for their King and Country, should have; he told me, that they, and their Families, were to be for ever taken Care of.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was there any other Promise made to you?

Plunkett. There was no Promise; only he was the Man who said, if I would follow his Directions, he would promote me; that he would engage to do great Matters for me; and what I suffered in the Army, he would make me Amends for.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Had you any Discourse about the Disposition of the Nation?

Plunkett. He said, that most of the Nation was tired with the present Government; and he said that King George was for ruining of the Nation.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Had you any Talk of any Persons at Court?

Plunkett. Yes; he said, what signified the Government; there were but only eight or nine Upstarts that belonged to King George's Court; that the ancient Peers of the Realm would not be run down; for they should be made Slaves, if they did not prevent it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Had you any Discourse any other Time about the Dutch or the French?

Plunkett. Yes; I do remember that he said, here is a Dutch Army come in upon this Nation, and then the French Army will come in, and take our Rights and Liberties from us: You will keep a Dutch Army, and it will be to make a War among our selves.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. What would he have to cure all this?

Plunkett. He told me, that when the Insurrection was, there would be a great many Half-Pay-Officers as I knew that would be on the Pretender's Side, and especially those of the Names of Fitzgerald; but I never knew any Fitzgerald Abroad.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have done examining this Witness.

Prisoner. You say your first Acquaintance with me was in Queen-Street, and that Major Barnewell desired you to assist me, there being an Execution in my House: Was it not so?

Plunkett. Yes.

Prisoner. At the same time you called me Counsellor Layer?

Plunkett. Yes; I came to your House.

Prisoner. Did I employ you?

Plunkett. Major Barnewell sent me to get a Couple of Grenadiers, and you ordered your Clerk to let them in at the Back-door; and the two Grenadiers, which were confined in the Savoy afterwards for it, drove the Officers out.

Prisoner. Was it the Landlord of the House's Goods, or my Goods?

Plunkett. I cannot tell; how should I know whether they were yours, or his? they were in your House.

Prisoner. You said it was about five Years before I saw you in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields.

Plunkett. It was when the Army was broke; and I came over from Ireland.

Prisoner. Well, you say, five Years afterwards I met you in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and gave you half a Crown to drink. I told you my Lord North and Grey was to be General: That my Lord Strafford was concerned in it.

Plunkett. No, you told me they were Promoters of it.

Prisoner. Promoters of what?

Plunkett. Of this Conspiracy.

Prisoner. So you did not know me? nor I did not know you.

Plunkett. Yes, you knew me; therefore, Sir, said I, you have an Advantage against me; for I don't know you. Afterwards we met one another by Accident: Says you, don't tell Plunkett you met me.

Prisoner. What Plunkett?

Plunkett. James Plunkett.

Prisoner. Where lives James Plunkett?

Plunkett. I don't know: However that's not material.

Prisoner. Did not you come to my House some time after this, and desire me to lend you thirteen Shillings, upon Account of being Bail in an Action in the Marshal's Court?

Plunkett. That was two Months after: There was a Soldier which was arrested by a Marshal's Court Writ.

Prisoner. And I lent you thirteen Shillings in order to discharge him?

Plunkett. Yes, you did.

Prisoner. Did not you afterwards ask me for some Money on Account of Sir Daniel Carrol?

Plunkett. No.

Prisoner,

Prisoner. Did not you make a Demand on Sir Daniel ?

Plunkett. No : I told you my Affairs with Sir Daniel. You said you would not meddle yourself, but you would write to him.

Prisoner. Did you not bring a Paper, and say, Sir Daniel had agreed to pay you twenty Pounds when he received his Pay ?

Plunkett. No : I brought no Papers to you.

Prisoner. Did not you tell me, it would be the greatest Kindness in the World to you to advance twenty Shillings for you ?

Plunkett. I never asked you in the Course of my Life.

Prisoner. Did you never borrow any Money of me ?

Plunkett. No ; I never borrowed any Money of you, otherwise than to get Men listed for the Pretender.

Prisoner. I shall shew that you are a little mistaken by and by.

Mr. Hungerford. You said you was decoyed to Church ?

Plunkett. Decoyed ! I said it was out of my Way, when my own Parish Church was nearer.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you use to go to Church ?

Plunkett. Yes.

Mr. Ketelbey. You say, the first time you saw this James Plunkett, he came to you when your Wife was in the Room ?

Plunkett. The first time I saw him, was, when Mr. Layer released Major Barnewell out of the Marshalsea.

Mr. Ketelbey. When James Plunkett came to your House, he took you by the Arm, and told you, he came from Mr. Layer ; did he tell you that first time, he came from Mr. Layer ?

Plunkett. Upon my Oath he did.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Discourse had you the first Time ? Did he only ask you to go and meet Mr. Layer ?

Plunkett. He came to me, and desired me to meet Mr. Layer at the Italian Coffee-House in Russel-Court.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did James Plunkett talk to you about lifting Men for the Pretender the first time he saw you ?

Plunkett. No ; he only was sent on an Errand from Mr. Layer.

Mr. Ketelbey. And then you came to the Nonjuring Parson : The Unjuring Parson, as you call him : What Discourse had you with him ?

Plunkett. The same Discourse passed between us about lifting Men.

Mr. Ketelbey. What, the first time you saw James Plunkett, and the first time you saw the Nonjuring Parson ?

Plunkett. Because he came from Mr. Layer.

Mr. Ketelbey. So you trusted both of them at first Sight, and talked to them about lifting Men for the Pretender ?

Plunkett. Yes, both talk'd to me.

Mr. Ketelbey. How many times had this Unjuring Parson been with you, before you knew his Name ?

Plunkett. He had been with me two or three times ; he told me his Name was Jeffreys, but did not tell me his Christian Name.

L. C. Just. Did he tell you his Name was Jeffreys the first time ?

Plunkett. He told me his Name was Jeffreys.

L. C. Just. How long after was it that this Letter was sent to you by Mr. Jeffreys ?

Plunkett. It was the time when Mr. Layer came from the Country.

L. C. Just. How long ago was that ?

Plunkett. I believe about ten Months ago : I mean ten Weeks ago.

Mr. Ketelbey. I would not surprize you ; I would have you consider you are upon your Oath : Is it ten Months, or ten Weeks ?

Plunkett. Ten Weeks.

Mr. Ketelbey. How came you to remember the Contents of the Letter so exactly ?

Plunkett. I heard it repeated over.

Mr. Ketelbey. Pray repeat it over again.

Plunkett. Mr. Plunkett, Mr. Layer is come to Town ; I should be very glad to see you : So I rest your humble Servant,

William Jeffreys.

Mr. Ketelbey. Where is that Letter ?

Plunkett. I don't know ; the Letter is lost.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you remember how long 'tis since this Letter was lost ?

Plunkett. Why, I missed it about two Months ago, or more.

Mr. Ketelbey. Two Months ago, or more. How long was it after you received it that you missed it ?

Plunkett. I kept the Letter in my Pocket some time.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long ?

Plunkett. I believe I had it three Weeks.

Mr. Ketelbey. So that 'tis ten Weeks since you received this Letter, two Months since you lost it ; you kept it in your Pocket three Weeks : You can read Writing ?

Plunkett. No, I cannot.

Mr. Ketelbey. What not read Writing ?

Plunkett. No, Sir.

Mr. Ketelbey. How can you be so paticular as to the Writing ?

Plunkett. I have heard it read often enough.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who read it to you ?

Plunkett. John Child read it over to me two or three times.

Mr. Ketelbey. Why, this is mere Romance, that at twice hearing it read, you can remember it, the very Words.

Plunkett. I can remember those Words to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Hungerford. How can he tell, when he cannot read at all ? There is nothing in it : If one was to ask him, whether you can recite the Articles of the Creed, I believe he could not do it ; and yet is so exact in repeating the Words of this Letter.

Prisoner. What Countryman are you ?

Plunkett. An Irishman : You knew that long ago ; you need not ask me that Question now.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we shall now proceed, and produce the Plan of this Conspiracy, which was found among the Papers taken in Mrs. Mason's Possession ; and shall shew how they came to be in Mrs. Mason's Possession ; and we shall prove this Plan to be Mr. Layer's own Hand-Writing.

John Turner, one of the Messengers, sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon these Papers.

[Turner looks upon the Papers.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of those Papers, and where they were found ?

Turner. My Lord, by Warrant from my Lord Carteret, Principal Secretary of State, dated the 29th of September last, I was directed to search for one Mrs. Mason and Mrs. Cook, and the very same Day I executed that Warrant. I found out Mrs. Cook's House in Stone-Cutter's Yard in Little Queen-street near Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and in searching the House—

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Who lodged there?

Turner. One Mrs. Mason lodged there: I found her in the House; and in her Lodging there was a Trunk, and being demanded to open the Trunk—

L. C. Just. Was your Warrant to search for both Mrs. Mason and Mrs. Cook?

Turner. For both; and in Mrs. Mason's Lodgings there was a Trunk which the other Messenger and I demanded to be opened: She opened the Trunk, and in the Trunk there were two Bundles of Papers sealed up; which Papers being opened, this Paper was found amongst them, (meaning the Plan or Scheme.)

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Look upon it: How do you know that to be the same?

Turner. I know it to be the same, because I writ upon't, I set my Mark upon it.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say that these Papers were found in the Trunk, in two Bundles sealed up?

Turner. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. (Shewing the Witness another Paper) Look upon that; see if that was in the same Bundle with that you last gave an Account of?

Turner. Yes, that was in the same Bundle.

And so he was examined as to several particular Papers, which he swore to have been all found in the two Bundles taken out of Mrs. Mason's Trunk, and that he had set his Mark upon them.

Mr. Ketelbey. I beg leave to ask Mr. Turner a Question or two. Mr. Turner, I think you give a positive Account of several Papers; what they are I know not; of several Papers handed to you from Mr. Paxton. You had a Warrant to search for Mrs. Cook and Mrs. Mason, and in a Trunk you found these Papers sealed up in a Bundle.

L. C. Just. He said he had Directions from my Lord Carteret, to search for Mrs. Cook and Mrs. Mason. That he searched Mrs. Cook's House, and found Mrs. Mason there; he sees a Trunk in the House, in Mrs. Mason's Lodgings, and he demanded the Trunk to be opened, and in the Trunk is found two Bundles of Papers; in these Bundles are these Papers which have been shewn to the Witness. When he is asked how he knew them to be the same that were in the Bundle, he says, he knows them to be the same, because he set his Mark upon them.

Mr. Just. Fortescue Aland. Were the Bundles sealed up?

Turner. Yes, my Lord, they were sealed up when we took them out of the Trunk.

Mr. Att. Gen. In whose Lodgings were they found?

Turner. At Mrs. Mason's Lodgings, in her Bed-Chamber.

Mr. Ketelbey. You say these Papers handed to you, you found in the Trunk in Mrs. Mason's Lodgings. Where have they been ever since? How come you to be so positive that these Individual Papers are the same Papers that you found in Mrs. Mason's Room?

Turner. I put my Name upon them.

Mr. Ketelbey. Is your Name put upon those?

Turner. Yes, upon each of them at that time.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long were they in your Custody?

Turner. About an Hour.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who did you deliver them to, when you parted with them?

Turner. I think, to Mr. Stanyan.

Mr. Ketelbey. I ask you, when you put your Name on each of them, was it before you first parted with them?

Turner. After the Trunk was open, and the Bundles were opened; in the Bundles finding Papers of Consequence, I was directed to go and fetch Mr. Stanyan as being a Magistrate, to give that Person her Oath. While I was gone, I delivered the Papers into my Brother Messenger's Hand, and he signed them.

Mr. Ketelbey. So you only swear for your Brother Messenger. How long after your first seizing the Papers was it before you put your Name upon them?

Turner. I believe three Quarters of an Hour.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who had you left them with?

Turner. I left them with this Man, my Brother Messenger.

Mr. Ketelbey. You left them with your Brother Messenger before you set your Mark upon them; how comes it that you are sure they are the same? How can you swear they are the same, when you went away and left them in your Brother Messenger's Hands, and did not set your Name upon them, till you returned?

Mr. Soll. Gen. You say these Papers were seized in Mrs. Mason's Lodgings, and that she was by, and unlocked the Trunk, and you took out the two Bundles.

Turner. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say you delivered the same Papers to this Person here?

Turner. Yes, Sir.

Prisoner. Mr. Turner, in Mrs. Mason's Lodgings you say you seized two Bundles of Papers sealed up?

Turner. Yes.

Prisoner. When Mrs. Mason had them locked up, were they then sealed up?

Turner. They were then sealed up.

Prisoner. Did not the Seals appear to have been broke open?

Turner. No.

Prisoner. You saw two Bundles?

Turner. Yes.

Prisoner. You saw this Paper, and that, and all the Papers taken out of the Bundles. What Bundle was this Paper in? (Meaning the Plan or Scheme.)

Turner. This was in the same Bundle.

Prisoner. Was there a small Bundle, and a great Bundle?

Turner. Yes, there were two Bundles.

Prisoner. And this was out of one of the Bundles?

Turner. Out of the small Bundle.

Prisoner. Did you see them taken out of the Bundle?

Turner. I can't say that.

Mr. Hungerford. If I observe that Paper or Bundle right, it is one that consists of several Sheets of Paper; I desire he may hold it in his Hand, till we have done examining of him.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Turner, that consists of more more Sheets than one; did you sign your Name to each Leaf, or only to the first and the last Leaf of the Book?

Turner. I sign'd my Name to each Sheet.
Edward Speare, sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Speare, Did you go with Mr. Turner to seize any Papers at Mrs. Cook's House?

Speare. Yes; I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give an Account of what you know of seizing any Papers there.

Speare. My Lord, by a Warrant directed to us from my Lord Carteret, Mr. Turner and I were to seize Mrs. Cook and Mrs. Mason; and searching Mrs. Cook's House, I found Mrs. Mason there. At Mrs. Cook's I found no Papers in the first Room; I proceeded into a second Room, where there was a Trunk, which I ordered to be opened, and I took two Parcels out of it; one of 'em was seal'd with three Seals, which I looked at; they did not appear to have been open'd and seal'd up again. I open'd them, and mark'd them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was by?

Speare. Mrs. Mason was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was she there when you open'd them?

Speare. She was by when they were open'd.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon them, are they the same Papers?

Speare. I have look'd upon them, and know them to be the same.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are those the Papers that were taken out of the Trunk?

Speare. The very Papers.

Mr. Att. Gen. In whose Room were they taken?

Speare. In Mrs. Mason's Room.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Where they ever out of your Custody, till you mark'd them?

Speare. No, Sir.

Mr. Soll. Gen. During the Time that Turner, your Brother Messenger, was gone for Mr. Stanyan, who had the Custody of the Papers?

Speare. I had the Custody of them.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Were any of them taken away, or was there any Alteration in, or Addition to them, during that Time?

Speare. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you remember that Mr. Turner set his Name upon them?

Speare. Yes, he did.

L. C. Just. How long after your Brother Messenger returned back to you, was it before you set your Name upon them?

Speare. Immediately, my Lord.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long did you stay in the Place after the Return of Turner?

Speare. I believe I might stay there an Hour, or an Hour and an half.

Mr. Ketelbey. When did you first part with the Papers out of your Custody?

Speare. I gave them to Mr. Stanyan.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long after you first seized those two Bundles was it before Mr. Stanyan came to you?

Speare. I believe about half an Hour, or three Quarters of an Hour.

Mr. Ketelbey. What, did you deliver them to Mr. Stanyan then?

Speare. After Mr. Turner and I had sign'd them, I deliver'd them to Mr. Stanyan.

Mr. Ketelbey. Was it not before you sign'd them?

Speare. No, upon my Oath.

Mrs. Elizabeth Mason sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Mason, Give an Account of what you know of these Papers?

Mrs. Mason. Mr. Layer left two Parcels of Papers with me: He told me they were of the Value of 500 l. He afterwards took them away from me; and afterwards brought them to me again.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. You say, he deliver'd two Bundles first?

Mrs. Mason. No; he deliver'd only one, and that was the largest Bundle: He told me it was of the Value of 500 l. and desired me to take care of it, and lock it up.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. When was the lesser Bundle deliver'd to you?

Mrs. Mason. Some time after; and after that, he took them away from me; and in four or five Days time he brought them to me again: He took them away, and brought them to me again, and told me they were a few Love-Letters; and begg'd of me not to let Mrs. Cook know it, for she would make a Disturbance, and tell his Wife.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. When had you the lesser Bundle?

Mrs. Mason. I had that some time after.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. What Directions had you with the little Bundle?

Mrs. Mason. He desired me to take the same Care of that, as of the other.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Was that seal'd up?

Mrs. Mason. They were both seal'd.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Where did you put them?

Mrs. Mason. I put them into my Trunk.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. After this; you know when the Messengers came?

Mrs. Mason. Before that, he came one Day in the Afternoon to our House, and ask'd where I was. It was the Beginning of Bartholomew-tide. I was not at home: He left a Message for me, that I should bring those Writings home. I carried them home.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Home! What do you mean by Home?

Mrs. Mason. Mr. Layer's own House: He left word, that he wou'd be at home by eight a-Clock that Night. I was there about eight a-Clock: I asked the Maid where he was? She said he was in the Back-Parlour. I asked her if any body was with him? She said, there were two Gentlemen. Said I, tell your Master that I am here.

L. C. Just. You say the great Bundle was taken from you again, and afterwards he brought the lesser Bundle; and after this you receiv'd a Message, or Intimation, that you shou'd bring home that Bundle.

Mrs. Mason. My Lord, I had two Bundles. He left Word, that I should bring his Papers Home; for he staid at Home 'till eight a-Clock that Night. I went to his House: And when I knock'd at the Door, the Maid came to the Door. I asked her, if her Master was within? she told me, yes; he was in the Back-Parlour; and that there was a Gentleman or two with him. I desir'd her to go and tell her Master that I was there. And he came out to me; and I gave him the Writings; and he desir'd me to come again the next Morning; which was on a Saturday, about eleven a-Clock, for he was going out of Town: And that I would come and take those Writings again. Which accordingly I did. It was in the Morning, at the Time that the Bell was ringing at Lincoln's-Inn Chapel, when I went to him, and he delivered me the Papers again.

was

Mr. Soll. Gen. Can you recollect the Day that he left Word for you to come to him?

Mrs. Mason. It was the Beginning of Bartholomew-tide.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Mrs. Mason. It was on a Friday Night that I went and carried them to his House.

Mr. Soll. Gen. And when was it that he desired you would come and call for them again?

Mrs. Mason. It was the next Morning at eleven a-Clock, or near the matter, that I went to his House; and he gave me the Writings again, and charged me to take Care of them.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. What was you to do with them?

Mrs. Mason. To take Care of them.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Did you meddle with them, or open them?

Mrs. Mason. No, Sir; I put them in my Trunk: They lay there all the time.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Were they there when the Officers came?

Mrs. Mason. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Was you there when the Bundles were opened?

Mrs. Mason. I was there.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Did you mark the Papers yourself?

Mrs. Mason. I did.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Look upon the Papers, and see if you find your Mark on those Papers?

Mrs. Mason. Yes, this is my Mark.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Mr. Speare, you was present at the opening of them?

Mr. Speare. I was: They were sealed up when I opened them.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Did you put your Name on them?

Mr. Speare. I did put my Name on them.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Were they out of your Custody before you put your Name on them?

Mr. Speare. No, they were not.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Did Mr. Turner put his Name to them?

Mr. Speare. He put his Name to them, before ever they were out of my Custody.

Mr. Att. Gen. You have marked all those Papers. You are sure those are the Papers you took out of the Trunk in Mrs. Mason's Lodgings?

Mr. Speare. I am sure they are.

Mr. Att. Gen. Shew them to Mrs. Mason. Mrs. Mason, were those Papers in the Bundles that were delivered to you by Mr. Layer?

Mrs. Mason. Yes, Sir; they were.

Mr. Att. Gen. You have marked those Papers, have you not?

Mrs. Mason. Yes, I have.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You said, you gave the Bundles back to Mr. Layer on a Friday, about the Beginning of Bartholomew-tide: Do you remember whether it was upon Bartholomew Day or not?

Mrs. Mason. Indeed I don't know.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did Mr. Layer say when you brought them to him again?

Mrs. Mason. He only thanked me; and desired me to come the next Day and take them from him again: Which I did.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did he mention then, that he was going out of Town?

Mrs. Mason. Yes: And it was about eleven a-Clock on a Saturday Morning that I went to him, and he delivered the Papers to me again.

Mr. Hungerford. Can you write?

Mrs. Mason. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Have you made the same Mark on all those Papers?

Mrs. Mason. I was so frightned at that Time, that I hardly knew what Mark I made.

Mr. Hungerford. If you was frightned at that time, and did not know what Mark you made, how can you be sure you know your Mark again?

Mrs. Mason. Yes, I can tell it very well.

Mr. Hungerford. When you say you was so frightned you did not know what Mark you made?

Mrs. Mason. Yes, sure I do.

Mr. Hungerford. Upon the Oath you have taken, hath any Body seen those Papers before they were taken by the Messengers; whether Sir John Meres, or his Man Thomas hath seen them?

Mrs. Mason. No.

Mr. Ketelbey. Nor his Man Thomas?

Mrs. Mason. No, nor his Man Thomas.

Mr. Ketelbey. I ask you, can you write or can you read Writing?

Mrs. Mason. I told you I can't.

Mr. Ketelbey. You only can make your mark?

Mrs. Mason. No.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you only make but one mark, or use several marks?

Mrs. Mason. I make but one mark.

Mr. Ketelbey. Pray make the mark you generally use? With Submission, my Lord, I desire she may have a Pen and Ink to see if she can make the same mark again.

Mr. Hungerford. Surely we are regular in desiring that?

L. C. Just. What you desire is proper. She says she knows them to be the same Papers, because she hath set her Mark upon them; they doubt whether she may mistake in her Mark, and desire she may make her Mark again.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, we desire she may make her mark again.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We desire she may have a convenient Place to do it in, and that she may sit down while she writes?

Mrs. Mason. No, I can do it without. (A Pen and Ink and Paper is given to her, and she sets her Mark an E and an M.)

Mr. Soll. Gen. Here are the Letters E and M set to the Papers produced; and tho' in this Confusion she should not make her Letters exactly like those, yet I apprehend that would weigh very little.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I can't tell what they mean? this doth not depend——

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I desire to go on with our Questions. I ask you——

L. C. Just. (Having compared the Letters made by Mrs. Mason in Court, with those on the Papers) The Character which she now writes is like what she writ on those Papers, and so confirms her Evidence.

Mr. Ketelbey. After the delivery of those two Bundles to you by Mr. Layer, I ask you whether Sir John Meeres's Man Thomas ever saw those Bundles opened?

Mrs. Mason. No, he never was up in my Room; there was no such Familiarity between us.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did one Wilson ever see them?

Mrs. Mason. No.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did ever you produce them to one Binks?

Mrs. Mason. No.

Prisoner. No: Nor did Sir John Meeres's Man Thomas never see them?

Mrs. Mason. No, never upon my Oath.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you ever produce them sealed up? Did you ever let Thomas or William, or Sir John Meeres himself see either of those Bundles as they were sealed up?

Mrs. Mason. No, they were in my Trunk: I always kept them in my Trunk; perhaps as I opened my Trunk, they might see them lie in my Trunk.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know one Mrs. Buda?

Mrs. Mason. No: I don't know the Name. I don't know one Mrs. Buda.

Prisoner. Did you ever know one Mrs. Herbert?

Mrs. Mason. I know many of that Name.

Prisoner. Did you ever go by that Name?

Mrs. Mason. No.

Prisoner. Did you ever go by the Name of Corbet?

Mrs. Mason. No.

Prisoner. Did you ever go by the Name of Bevan?

Mrs. Mason. No, I never did go by the Name of Bevan.

L. C. Just. Mr. Ketelbey, I don't know what the Meaning of this Examination is; when it appears beyond Contradiction, that this Woman was an Acquaintance of your Client's.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, if we prove her to be an ill Woman, I hope it will take off her Credit so that her Evidence will not weigh with your Lordship, or the Jury.

L. C. Just. At the Time when these Bundles were seized, had they Mr. Layer's Seal upon them?

Mrs. Mason. Yes, the Seal of Mr. Lawyer was upon them.

L. C. Just. What says the Messenger? At the Time that you seized these two Bundles of Papers, was there any Seal upon them?

Messenger. There were three Seals upon one, and some Seals upon the other; the Seal was something of a small Head.

L. C. Just. What is Mr. Layer's Seal?

Mrs. Mason. Something of a Head, but I can't tell what Head.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know Mr. Layer's Seal?

Mrs. Mason. It is something of a Head.

Mr. Ketelbey. Was it the Representation of a Man's Head, or the Head of a Beast?

Mrs. Mason. It is a Head, with something of a Ruff about it.

L. C. Just. Mrs. Mason, look upon the Head: Is that Head the Seal of Mr. Layer?

Mrs. Mason. Yes: Upon my Oath it is.

L. C. Just. What says the Messenger: Was that Seal of a Head upon them, when you seized them?

Messenger. Yes, it was.

Mr. Ketelbey. Before that Time that the two Messengers came, Mr. Turner and Mr. Speare, and seized the Papers, and afterwards one of them went for Mr. Stanyan; I ask you, whether you had shewn those Bundles to any Body before that Time?

Mrs. Mason. No; I had shewn them to no Body.

Mr. Att. Gen. She hath said so two or three Times before.

L. C. Just. Indeed, Mr. Ketelbey, we must direct you not to spend the Time of the Court so. You have asked her that Question two or three Times over.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I would very fain have the Truth come out.

Mr. Hungerford. I will ask you a Question or two. What Trade or Business do you follow? What is your Trade or Occupation?

Mrs. Mason. What is that to you? I have no Trade.

Mr. Hungerford. I should have ask'd you another Question before; have you not a Promise of Reward for the Service you do here, in giving this Evidence?

Mrs. Mason. No, I have not.

Prisoner. Nor you have received none?

Mrs. Mason. No: You are an unjust Man.

L. C. Just. Are you promised any Reward? Why don't you ask her whether she is to swear for Hire? Is that a proper Question to ask a Witness?

Mr. Ketelbey. I submit it to your Lordship, whether it is not proper to ask her this Question; Whether she hath not told any Person, and whom, that she was to have a Reward for coming hither?

Prisoner. The Question is, Whether she hath never owned and confessed to any Body, that these Papers were opened before a Friend of hers, before the Messenger seized them?

Mrs. Mason. No, my Lord, I never did. I never opened them before any body.

Mr. Att. Gen. They have asked you what Names you went by; do you know what Names the Prisoner at the Bar has gone by?

Mrs. Mason. He had once given me Orders, that if any Letter came directed in the Name of Fontaine, that I should take it in; accordingly in two or three Days Time, there came a Letter, directed to Mr. Fontaine, and I took it in; and when he came, I gave it to him, and he opened it, and read it.

Prisoner. Where is your House?

Mrs. Mason. Where! Where you left the Writings.

Prisoner. How can you tell how that Letter was directed, which you took in, since you say you cannot Read?

Mrs. Mason. It was directed to Mr. Fontaine.

Prisoner. Did you read the Supercription?

Mrs. Mason. No; Mrs. Cook did.

L. C. Just. You say you was desired by Mr. Layer, when any Letter came directed to Mr. Fontaine, to take it in; and that a Letter came directed to Mr. Fontaine, and you took it in, The Question is asked you, since you cannot read, how could you tell it was directed to Mr. Fontaine?

Mrs. Mason. My Landlady told me it was for Mr. Fontaine, and she knew he went by the Name of Fontaine sometimes.

Prisoner. She said she read it.

Mrs. Mason. No; I said I gave it to you, and you opened it, and you read it.

L. C. Just. The Occasion of this Question is, that this Misnomer was approved of by you. She says that you order'd her, that if any Letter came directed to Mr. Fontaine, she should take it in; a Letter did come directed so, she took it in, and then delivered it to you; and you receiv'd it from her, and opened and read it; but how, say they, could you know this Letter was directed to Mr. Fountaine, when you can neither write nor read? She having received such an Order, when there was a Letter come, it was natural enough, that she that could not read, should ask her Landlady the Directions of the Letter, and it was directed for Fountaine; it was natural enough for her to take it in, and give it to you.

Who brought the Letter?

Mrs. Mason. A Porter.

L. C. Just. Did he say from whence he came?

Mrs. Mason. He told me he came from the Ditch-Side, and ask'd me if Mr. Fountaine lodg'd there.

Mr. Hungerford. This Trunk that the Papers were in, did it use to be kept open, or was it lock'd up?

Mrs. Mason. It was always lock'd up.

Mr: Doyley sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Doyley, do you know Mr. Layer; and how long have you known him?

Doyley. I have known him about seventeen or eighteen Years; he was my Clerk; 'tis thereabouts, I believe.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know his Writing?

Mr. Doyley. I believe I do.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon that Paper. (He is shewn the Scheme.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you take that to be his Hand?

Doyley. If you ask me as to my Belief, I believe it is.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you often seen him write?

Doyley, Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you seen him write since he left your Service?

Doyley. I have had several Letters from him, since he was my Clerk.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon that Paper; can you swear that you believe that is his Hand-Writing?

Doyley. I have seen the Paper before, and I do believe it to be his Hand-Writing.

Prisoner. Have you seen me write any thing but my Name these fourteen Years?

Doyley. I can't particularly recollect whether I have or no.

Prisoner. How long is it since I was your Clerk?

Doyley. About fourteen or fifteen Years.

Prisoner. Have you seen me write since?

Doyley. I can't say I have, or I have not.

L. C. Just. How long is it since you received any Letters from him?

Doyley. About five Years ago.

L. C. Just. How do you know those Letters came from him?

Doyley. Because he was my Client, and writ to me about Business; and I answered those Letters, and did the Business that he desired me to do by those Letters.

L. C. Just. Did he pay you for that Business done?

Doyley. Yes, very honourably.

Prisoner. You say you don't remember you have seen me write since I came from you; as to that Paper which you say you believe to be my Hand, have you compar'd it with those Letters?

Doyley. I have.

Prisoner. Is that what you found your Belief upon?

Doyley. That is what I chiefly found my Belief upon.

Prisoner. Consider, Mr. Doyley, my Life is at Stake, and you say you have not seen me write these fourteen Years?

Doyley. I don't know that I have.

Prisoner. Have you any of my Letters in Court?

Doyley. I have not your Letters in Court.

Prisoner. You say, you found your Belief only by Comparison of those Letters. Now I wish you had brought those Letters here.

Mr. Att. Gen. He doth not say so.

Doyley. If you had desir'd it, I cou'd have brought 'em.

Prisoner. I desir'd it! I little thought to have seen you here on such an Occasion.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Doyley, I ask you, if you had no Dealings with him since he was out of his Clerkship?

Doyley. Yes, I was his Agent.

L. C. Just. Whose Name is subscribed to those Letters?

Doyley. Christopher Layer's.

L. C. Just. You did the Business mentioned in those Letters; and he honourably paid you for it?

Doyley. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. Just. I suppose, in your time, that you will shew that other People writ Letters in your Name?

Mr. Ketelbey. You say, you believe that Paper to be Mr. Layer's Hand-writing. And if I did not misunderstand you, I took it down in Writing, you founded your Belief on the comparing that Writing with the Letters which you receiv'd?

Doyley. I said, I chiefly founded my Belief upon such Comparison of Hands.

Mr. Ketelbey. That you chiefly did so; and you have not those Letters here in Court, on which you chiefly founded this Belief.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Doyley, I think you say you have seen him write several Times?

Doyley. I don't remember that I have seen him write these fourteen Years.

Mr. Soll. Gen. During the Time he was your Clerk, you have seen him write?

Doyley. Yes; he was but two Years with me: He had been Clerk with Mr. before.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then he had been us'd to Business before he came to you; and had form'd his Hand.

Mr. Hungerford. How old was he when he was your Clerk?

Doyley. Indeed I don't know.

Mr. Hungerford. You form your Belief upon the Remembrance you have of what was his Hand-writing fourteen or fifteen Years ago?

L. C. Just. You say, you have received Letters subscribed by his Name five Years ago?

Doyley. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. Just. Was the Character of those Letters that you receiv'd five Years ago, agreeable to the Characters that he writ when he was your Clerk?

Doyley. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. Just. Then I ask you upon the whole, whether you believe it to be his Hand-writing, or not?

Doyley. Yes, I do believe it to be his Hand.

Prisoner. Since my unhappy Circumstances, have you had no Promise of being restored to your Place again, or the Promise of some other Office or Place?

Doyley. No; I never, to my Knowledge, have seen one Man that had the Power to put me in my Place again; nor ever conversed with any one Great Man upon that or any such Affair.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We think we are entitled to read it: However, that there may be no Dispute, we desire to call Mr. Delafaye and Mr. Stanyan, in whose Presence the Prisoner at the Bar, confess'd it to be his Hand-Writing.

Mr. Delafaye was sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Sir, was that Paper shewn to the Prisoner at the Bar?

Mr. Delafaye. I was not near enough when he was before the Lords of the Council, to see what was on the Table; neither did I look upon the Table, to see whether this Paper was on it or not. But upon a Question that was ask'd him relating to some Arms, if he knew where any were lodg'd in such a Place, he said no: Upon which, one of the Lords of the Council held up a Paper; it might be this, for I ought I know; and said, here is your own Paper, your own Hand-writing; which says, Arms that are there lodged; says he, I should have writ Arms that should be there lodged.

L. C. Just. Whether is that the Paper or no, and did he own that Paper that was then shewn to be his?

Mr. Delafaye. The Question was not ask'd, is this your Paper and your Hand-Writing? But it was shewn to him as such; and he said, I should have wrote Arms that should be there lodg'd.

Mr. Stanyan, sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Stanyan, do you remember whether this Paper was shewn to the Prisoner at the Bar, or any Questions ask'd him about it, when he was before the Lords of the Council?

Mr. Stanyan. Upon the Question that was ask'd him about the Arms, this Paper was shewn him; I think this is the Paper: I was nearer to the Table than Mr. Delafaye, and did observe this Paper to lie upon the Table before the Lords, and do take this to be the individual Paper that was shewn him then.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was said to him at that time?

Mr. Stanyan. The Question was ask'd him, what he knew of any Arms that were lodg'd in Westminster? He said, he knew of none. Then this Paper was shewn to him, and a Question was ask'd him; here the Arms are said to be lodg'd in this Scheme of your own Hand-writing: how came you to write so, if there be no Arms lodg'd? Mr. Layer said, it was a mistake: It was not intended Arms that are there lodg'd, but Arms that should be there lodg'd. He said, I shou'd have writ Arms that shou'd be lodg'd, instead of Arms that are lodg'd.

Mr. Serj. Chebbire. The Question was concerning a Paper of his own Hand-Writing?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes, it was concluded, that the Paper was of his own Hand-Writing, and he did not deny it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he say it was not his own Hand-Writing?

Mr. Stanyan. No, he did not.

Mr. Ketelbey. Was the Question ask'd, whether that Paper was his Hand-writing or no?

Mr. Stanyan. No, I believe not.

Mr. Ketelbey. Then if there was no Question ask'd, whether did he own it to be his Hand-Writing, or no?

Mr. Stanyan. He did not expressly own it to be his Hand-Writing.

Mr. Att. Gen. He was not ask'd that Question, whether it was his Hand-Writing, or no?

Mr. Stanyan. No, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. He did not deny it to be his own Hand-Writing?

Mr. Stanyan. No, Sir.

Mr. West. Whether the Lords in their Question did state it so, as taking it for his own Hand-Writing?

Mr. Stanyan. It was taken for granted that it was so, and he made no Offer to deny it.

Prisoner. Pray, Sir, let me ask you one Question about the Arms? When I was ask'd, if there were any Arms lodg'd, did I not answer in the Negative, and said, No?

Stanyan. Yes.

Prisoner. In relation to the Arms, you say, that I said Arms that should have been lodg'd?

Stanyan. That was upon the Lords asking you, to explain that part of the Scheme relating to Arms; and when you said you knew of no Arms that were lodg'd, then said they, how come you to mention in this Scheme of your own Hand-Writing, Arms that are lodg'd? To which you answer'd, I should have writ Arms that shou'd be lodg'd.

Prisoner. When I was ask'd, why I did say Arms that are lodg'd? Why, faith I, my Lords, I know of no Arms. If that was my Paper, and I had writ it, I should have writ Arms that shou'd be lodg'd.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we pray that the Papers may be read.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, we hope that these Papers, (tho' for my Part I know not what they are; for there is no Hint of them in my Brief) shall not be read, for this Reason; the Evidence which hath been given for the King, hath not brought them home to the Prisoner. There is no legal Proof that the Papers are of his Hand-writing; and consequently he cannot be affected by any thing that is in them. As to what is said of the Likeness of Hands, that we humbly hope is no Evidence at all. The first Witness, Mr. Doyley, he hath said it is like his Hand; but he gives that Opinion of his, on the Knowledge he had of the Prisoner's Hand fourteen Years ago; and by some Letters he received from him about five Years since. Men's Hands may differ and vary even in five, much more in fourteen Years.

What follows is the Evidence that hath been given by the Gentlemen belonging to the Secretaries Office.

I personally know them to be Gentlemen of good Sense, Integrity and Honour, and for my part I believe every Word they say; which is more than I can say of the other Witnesses hitherto produced. But what these say, doth not, with Submission affect the Prisoner: They were present when the Prisoner was examin'd before the Lords of the Council; none of them heard the Prisoner acknowledge that the Papers were writ by him, or that he did own them as his; neither was he asked any Question to that Purpose; neither did the nature of the Examination my Lords of the Council were then upon, lead them to such a Question: The Lords were not asking Mr. Layer Questions to fix an Evidence upon himself. But the Lords having some Papers before them, and, according to the Duty of their high Stations, being intent upon discovering what might be of Danger to his Majesty and the Public; they ask'd Mr. Layer, where the Arms were deposited at Westminster? He answers, that he knew of none there, there, or to that Purpose. It cannot in Law or Reason be from hence infer'd, that he did own the Papers to be of his own Hand-Writing. The only Evidence therefore which can be insisted on to entitle these Papers to be read, is the Evidence of Likeness of Hand, which is no Evidence at all in a criminal Case.

In my Lady Carr's Case, it was not allow'd to be Evidence; and yet that was not a Capital Case, but a Case of Misdemeanor only, it was Perjury. But there is an Authority beyond all that; we have the Act of Parliament for the Reversal of the Attainder of Colonel Sidney, who had been convicted upon Evidence given of the Similitude of Hands, and that a much stronger Proof than what appears here; for Cook and Cary, two famous Goldsmiths, swore they believ'd the treasonable Libel laid to Colonel Sidney to be writ by him; and assign'd that for a Reason of their Belief, for that they had receiv'd several Bills from him of the like Hand-Writing, which they constantly paid. Nay, one of the Goldsmiths swore, (as I remember the Tryal) that he saw the Colonel write a Receipt. Some other Cases of this Nature might be quoted, but we depend upon the Authority of my Lady Carr's Case, and the Act for reversing the Attainder of Colonel Sidney, which is instar omnium; for in that Act the Reason assign'd for reversing the Attainder, is, for that the Conviction and Attainder was found upon a Similitude of Hands: We have an attested Copy of the Act here ready to be read. In Consequence of this Act, my Lord, Similitude of Hands is never to be given as Evidence in a criminal Case: And therefore we humbly hope, that this Paper is not so prov'd, as to be read in any Court, but must be reject-ed: It is not proved to be his Hand by any that ever saw him write; neither hath any body heard him own it to be his.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, I beg Leave to say a few Words in Support of this Objection. We don't know what is the Purport of this Paper. I dare say, Mr. Hungerford, as well as my self, hath not seen one Tittle relating to it whatsoever; but I hope, for the Sake of Evidence, the sacred and eternal Rule of Evidence, that similitude of Hands shall not go for Proof, where a Person is charged with a Capital Offence. We shall in due time endeavour to lay before the Court several material Objections to the Credit of some of the Witnesses; but at present we must suppose them unexceptionable, and consider, with respect to this single Point, whether this Paper is sufficiently proved to be his Hand-Writing, so as to be read. Mrs. Mason and the Messengers have endeavour'd, by a jumbling Evidence, to prove the Identity of the Papers, and to hand them down from one to another: But how do they appear to be of the Prisoner's Hand-Writing? Mr. Doyley says, fourteen or fifteen Years ago he was his Clerk; that five Years ago he receiv'd Letters from him; and that he chiefly founded his Opinion that it was the Prisoner's Hand-Writing, because he had compared it with those Letters, and that the Hands were alike: And yet those Letters with which he compar'd this Paper, he hath not in Court to produce. This is the Substance of Doyley's Evidence.

My Lord, I humbly insist, that this is not sufficient; and if comparison of Hands was to be Evidence, surely this would not do, unless he produced those Papers, on which he owns he founded his Opinion. I refer it to the Jury, whether he may not possibly, nay probably make an erroneous Judgment. Shall a Man be believ'd out of his Life, because the Witness saw him write fifteen Years ago, and received Letters from him five Years ago? Is any thing more changeable than a Man's Hand-Writing? Can either of you Gentlemen, take upon you to say what is or is not your Writing after so great a Length of Time? Would not the different Subjects, the one a common Letter of Business, the other a treasonable Scheme, make a sensible Variation even in a Man's usual Character?

The Case of my Lady Carr is reported in Siderfin, fo. 419. and was upon an Indictment of Perjury, an Offence of a much lower Nature than what this Gentleman is now tried for: There a Witness swore he believed the Paper produced in Court to be her Hand-Writing, yet it did not amount to such a Proof as to make her guilty: Nay, the Court said expressly, that it was not Evidence, and should not be admitted; and accordingly she was acquitted. But the highest Authority is what Mr. Hungerford hath named, the Act of Parliament for the Reversal of the Attainder of Col. Sidney; and we have a Witness here ready, that examined it with the Record, that proves it to be a true Copy. Algernoon Sidney, was attainted of High-Treason by similitude of Hands; and that was the Reason of the Reversal:

The two next Witnesses are Mr. Delafaye and Mr. Stanyan, Gentlemen of Honour, and that would not strain a Point upon any Account whatsoever. Mr. Delafaye doth not know whether this Paper was on the Table, when Mr. Laver was examined before the Lords of the Council, or no: Mr. Stanyan says, he was somewhat nearer the Table, and he takes the Paper that is now produced to be the same Paper that was upon the Table in the Room before the Lords of the Council, when Mr. Laver was there; because when it was produced there, and shewn to him, he said, shou'd have I wrote Arms that shou'd be lodg'd.

Mr. Stanyan owns, that he never was ask'd the Question, whether it was his Hand-Writing or no? How then should he deny it, if it was never put to him? And therefore to say, because he did not deny a Question that was never asked him, that that shall import, as to this particular Matter, a Confession, is to me strange and unaccountable! The natural Sense of the Prisoner's Words, as proved, is no more than this: No, if I had writ it, I shou'd have rather wrote Arms that shou'd be lodg'd, than Arms that were lodg'd. Therefore, my Lord, we humbly apprehend they have not given Evidence in this Case, sufficient Evidence to support the Reading of those Papers.

Your Lordships are now to lay down a perpetual Rule of Evidence: For latest Posterity will pay a just Regard to the present Determinations; and if Comparison of Hands in this Case be allowed as Evidence, the same Rule must for ever hold in all parallel Cases; and God knows what may be the Consequence of such a Revolution, or who may be affected by it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we hope, that notwithstanding what hath been objected to the Reading of this Paper, that we are proper to have it read: Tho' they have mentioned some Cases for to maintain their Objection, yet the latter Authorities, Authorities, and the constant Course of Evidence since, as we think, are directly with us: As the Case of my Lord Preston, where eight or nine of the Judges were present.

In the Case of the Lady Carr, there is that Opinion insisted on given at the End of the Case in a short unintelligible Manner.

[Here Mr. Hungerford interrupted.]

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I don't know whether we shall be at Liberty, when the King's Counsel have done, to read the Act; and therefore I offer it to your Lordship's Consideration, whether we should not read it now.

L. C. Just. Read the Act of Parliament.

Mr. Ketelbey. Call Mr. Theedam.

Mr. Att. Gen. We are apprized of that Act of Parliament; I have an examined Copy of that Act; but we apprehend it will not come up to what they cite it for.

Mr. Ketelbey. We have five Acts of Parliament that we have examined with the Records; we did not know where they would shoot at us, and therefore were resolved to be armed Cap-a-pee.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. As to my Lady Carr's Case, it will be hard to maintain that Opinion, because the Letters they produced were not in the direct Instance of the Perjury.

Even the Act of Parliament, which they produce, it takes Notice, that a Paper was found in the Closet of Mr. Sidney, and was read, without proving it to be his own Hand-Writing: Is this Paper found without any Owning and Acknowledging it by the Prisoner? Is not this Paper delivered by Mr. Layer himself to Mrs. Mason? Had not he this Paper in his Custody, and it proceeded from him?

In the Case of my Lord Preston, there were a great Number of Judges, My Lord Chief Justice Holt, Lord Chief Justice Pollexfen, and others; there the Indictment of my Lord Preston was his adhering to the King's Enemies, and amongst other Overt-Acts alledged his carrying several Papers of Instructions to inform the French King how to attack the Kingdom: Mr. Warer, who had been an under Secretary to my Lord Preston, swore that he believed some of those Papers to be like the Lord Preston's Hand, and they were all read in that Case by the Opinion of the whole Court, though they were the very express Overt-Acts alledged in the Indictment it self: How doth this stand here, supposing no Use is made of the Evidence of Mr. Doyley? When this Paper is shewn to Mr. Layer himself, before the Lords of the Council, and was mentioned as a Paper of his own Writing, and he is asked how he came to write Arms that are said there to be lodged, his Answer is, I should have wrote, Arms that shou'd be there lodg'd; Is not this sufficient Evidence to prove a Confession? Doth not this amount to an Evidence of his confessing it to be his own Writing? So here is, as we apprehend, the Evidence not only of the Thing it self, but likewise the Prisoner's own Declaration, that he was the Person who wrote it. In Sir Henry Vane's Case, the Warrant given in Evidence against him was proved only by Witnesses who believed it to be his Hand; but here is a particular Fact which (we apprehend) amounts to a Confession, and is a proper Evidence for the Jury to consider of, whether this be not a Confession.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I apprehend that we have given very proper Evidence to intitle us to read this Paper: My Lord, I beg leave to observe first, that it hath been proved that this Paper was found among the Papers, which the Prisoner delivered to Mrs. Mason, to be kept for him, which were seized in her Lodgings, as the Witnesses have before acquainted your Lordship, and if that were all, this Paper must be read. As to that, the Lord Preston's Case is direct in Point, and so determined by six or seven Judges, viz. that Papers found in the Possession of the Prisoner may be read without further Proof. But we insist that this Paper is legally and regularly proved to be his Writing by the Evidence of Mr. Doyley, and the Prisoner's own Confession: The Council for the Prisoner have mentioned Lady Carr's Case, and the Act for the Reversal of the Attainder of Col. Sidney, and say they have a great many other Cases to the same Purpose.

I defy them to shew any one single Case, wherein it has been determined, that Proof of a Person's Hand by a Witness, who swears he has seen him write, and knows his Hand, and believes the Paper produced to be of his Hand-Writing, is not a sufficient Proof in a criminal Prosecution, that that Paper is such a Person's Hand, before my Lady Carr's Case; if that Case does support the Opinion they have laid down: In all Actions such Evidence hath been constantly allowed; then I should be glad to know what Law or what Reason has made a Difference as to such Evidence, between civil Actions and criminal or capital Prosecutions. As to my Lady Carr's Case, the Book is very dark and obscure; I believe the Prisoner's Counsel cannot make it support what they now contend for.

Lady Carr was indicted for Perjury, supposed to be committed in an Answer sworn by her before a Master in Chancery: What is there said about a Letter does not appear at all to relate to the Case there; and if any Judge did lay down such a Position, as has been mentioned by the other Side, the meaning must be, that an Answer on Oath shall not be falsified by a Letter only under the Party's Hand; and that such a Letter should not be a sufficient Evidence to convict him of Perjury.

As to the Case of Col. Sidney, 'tis very well known that he was a Gentleman of Quality, and in his Study a Writing was found, viz. A General Treatise of Doctrines and Positions, which were very distasteful to the then Government, writ in answer to a Book formerly published. It was not a Scheme for raising a Rebellion, nor was it design'd, for any thing that appeared, that it should go out of his own Closet, but his Papers being seized, this Paper was found there among them; and for this he was indicted of High-Treason. It was generally thought extremely hard to make his having by him such a General Tract, writ in answer to a particular Book, and kept private in his Closet, an Overt-Act of Treason. However, he was found guilty, and attainted. No wonder then, when this came into Parliament, that they resenting this Proceeding, and revers'd his Attainder. And the Reasons recited in this Act, as Inducements for this Reversal, are accumulative; every Step taken in that Proceeding is complained of, and there is not Stress laid only upon the Proof of this Paper, but

The Act recites, That Col. Sydney, by Means of an illegal Return of the Jury, by denying him his lawful Challenges to the Jurymen, for want of Freehold, and without sufficient legal Evidence of any Treasons committed by him, there being produced a Paper found in his Closet, supposed to be his Hand-Writing, which was not proved by any one Witness to be written by him; but the Jury was directed to believe it by comparing it with other Writings of his: And besides that Paper so produced, there was but one Witness to prove any Matter against him, and by a partial and unjust Construction of the Statutes of Treasons was most unjustly attainted. And then the Act reverses the Attainder. Surely, if the Nature of the Evidence we have given, to prove this Paper to be the Prisoner's Hand is consider'd, it stands clear of any material Objection that can be raised from that Act. This is not barely proved by a comparison of Hands; here is a Witness, that often saw him write, swears it to be his Hand-Writing: There was a Multitude of Papers, some offered to be proved by similitude of Hands, and every one of them was read in my Lord Preston's Case.

Besides, here is that, which I beg Leave to insist upon, as a Confession by Mr. Layer, that this Paper was his Writing; if the Question proposed to the Prisoner by the Lords of the Council and his Answer are consider'd, it amounts to a plain Confession of it; therefore we must insist on it, that we have given a sufficient Evidence for the Reading of this Paper; and I hope we shall have your Lordship's Direction that it shall be read.

[Here some other of the King's Counsel offered to speak.]

L. C. Just. If there was any Occasion, you should be heard; but there is no Occasion.

It is proved by the Witnesses that these Papers were in Mr. Layer's Possession, that he delivered them to Mrs. Mason, that she lock'd them up in her Trunk, sealed as they were delivered to her by Mr. Layer, and afterward taken out of her Trunk by the Messengers, so that if they rest it here, and no other Evidence had been given, the Papers ought to be read, as being his Papers, which he once had in his Possession, if nothing else had been the Case.

Can any thing in the World be an Authority more express than that of my Lord Preston, where all the Papers which were in his Custody, and taken out of his Custody, were read without any Offer of Proof that they were his Hand.

And then consider, this goes further; it is not only a Paper found in his Custody, but it is a Paper written with his own Hand! How do you prove that?

The Master of this Gentleman tells you he was his Clerk, lived with him two Years; afterwards he received Letters from him about Business, which Business he did according to the Direction of those Letters, and was paid honourably by him for it, and that he believes it to be his Hand. If they had gone no further, nobody could have doubted, but that according to the usual Course and Rule of Evidence it ought to be read. Then they make an Objection, and ask how long it is since he was his Clerk? Why about fourteen or fifteen Years ago: His Hand may be altered in that Time very much: therefore how can you swear it, when it is so long since, that it is his Hand? Why, says he, because I have received Letters from him five Years ago; I dealt for him as his Agent; this Gentleman, Mr. Layer, was my Client, he sent Letters to me, and the Characters of the Letters I have compared with this Paper, and from hence it is I believe that his Character is not changed. How do you know he write those Letters? I answered those Letters, and they were about Business which I did for him, and afterwards he paid me very honourably for it; and therefore I believe they were his Writing, and therefore I believe he hath not changed his Character; and upon the whole Matter, says he, I verily believe it to be his own Hand-Writing. Consider, this is confirmed by his own Confession; but if it had been an independent Evidence, it is an Evidence sufficient for to have had this Paper read; because if a Man says he verily believes it to be his Hand-writing, it is always allowed to be read. You did ask him, but upon what Grounds do you believe his Character is not changed? Why, says he, I do principally believe it from the Letters I received from him; which I should have doubted on the Hand, which he writ fourteen Years ago, whether it was changed or not; and I believe it is not changed, because it is agreeable with the Characters he writ, when he was my Clerk; and upon the whole, I believe it to be his Hand-Writing.

Then they tell you of an Examination of this Gentleman before the Lords of the Council, when they asked him about Arms, he knew nothing of them; then they shew him this Paper, and ask him, how came you in a Scheme, all of your own Hand-Writing, to say, Arms that are provided? What was more natural than for him to say, here is a Paper that doth mention it, I deny it to be my Hand-Writing? But he was so far from denying it, that as the plain Sense and import of the Words spoken must be understood, he owns it to be his Hand.

It is a Mistake, says he, I should have writ which should have been provided.

How should he have writ that, if he had not writ the other?

So considering the whole Contexture of the Business, and Course of Proceeding, it is, and I believe none can doubt it, as plainly proved to be his own Hand-Writing, as if he had said in so many Words, it is my Hand-Writing. It must have been read as a Paper found in his Custody. The other Evidence, that is given to the Jury, will be a Matter proper for their Consideration; but if that Evidence had not been, they must have been read; they offer that as of greater import, because it is of the Prisoner's own Hand-Writing.

You tell us of the Lady Carr's Case, which was an extraordinary Case, when she in her Answer in Chancery swore that it was not her Hand, they come to convict her of Perjury, by proving it to be her Hand by a Letter they produced.

Gentlemen, there is no Pretence to make this a Question. Do you think that the Paper, which you offer, shall convict this Woman of Perjury? No, when she had sworn it was not her Hand, they come to prove it by a Witness, that says he believes it to be her Hand, because they produce a Letter, which they say is her Hand. Upon this the Court determines that this Evidence should not be allowed, that is, that it could could be of no Consequence to falsify any Matter, which she had declared upon Oath.

But as this Case is, sure there is not the least Doubt but if the Proof of his Hand had been out of the Case, it must be read as a Paper that was in his Custody, and taken out of the Custody of one, with whom he had deposited it, which is proved beyond all Contradiction.

And in Case of my Lord Preston, and in a thousand Cases, it hath been so, and never was denied.

True, if they come and say, is this his Hand? and the Witness says I don't know whether it is his Hand or no; I have seen something of his Hand, and I don't know but it may be his Hand; it is not right; but the Witness must ground his Belief stronger; I have seen him write, and I know his Writing, therefore I believe it to be his Hand. If they had rested it on that, that the first Evidence knew his Hand fourteen Years ago, that must be left to the Jury, whether they believe Mr. Doyley's Evidence; because, says he, I saw him write fourteen Years ago. The Possibility of that, if there was nothing else in the Case, might be left to the Jury, whether that Evidence was sufficient to satisfy them, that it was his Hand. Upon the Whole, never was any thing clearer than that this must be read as a Paper found in his Custody, that hath in the usual Manner and Method the Proof of being his Hand-writing.

Prisoner. If I am out of Time I beg your Lordship's Pardon; I will not take up your Lordship's Time; I only beg a Word or two; whether there is any legal Evidence as to the Publishing; the Indictment says, publicavit quoddam malitiosum seditiosum & preditorum scriptum, and that is not that, that is the Declaration.

L. C. Just. Whatever you say or offer, although it happen to be out of Time, we will dispense with you, when out of Time; but what you offer now is upon a Mistake, we are not upon the Paper you should apply it to, that is, the Matter of your Declaration, but we are upon the Scheme Paper, not whether you published it, but whether you writ it.

Prisoner. I am charged in the Indictment as publishing a malicious, seditious and traitorous Writing.

L. C. Just. You are charged with that as an Overt-Act of the Treason, of Compassing and imagining the Death of the King; that you did publish a malicious, seditious, and traitorous Paper, that is the matter of the Declaration. The Matter now is, not for Publishing, but whether there is a reasonable Proof given that it is your Hand-Writing.

Mr. Just. Powys. This is only a Circumstance, not an Overt-Act sufficient to convict you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we offer this Paper as a strong Evidence corroborating and confirming every Thing which hath been sworn by the Witnesses, and we pray it may be read.

Mr. Hungerford. I was reading the Act of Parliament when they——

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we must beg leave to insist upon the Course of Proceeding, that the Counsel shall not go on to argue a Point, after the Opinion of the Court has been given.

L. C. Just. Now you have heard the Opinion of the Court, you must not go on.

Mr. Hungerford. I was looking upon the Act of Parliament——

L. C. Just. You remember Francia's Case, there was a Letter taken up at his Bedside, it was disputed whether that should be read, at last a Witness came and said, I have seen him write several Times, and I believe it to be his Hand; and it was read.

Mr. Hungerford. Ay, hastily read.

Clerk of the Crown reads the Scheme.

The S C H E M E.

Au défaut de la force, il faut employer la ruse.

1. LET the General, and only one Officer of Note in the Camp, agree upon a Day for Execution.
2. Let the Officer that Day put himself on the Tower-Guard.
3. And as there is eight Serjeants (viz.) three of the first Regiment of Foot-Guards, three of the Second, and two of the Third, all ready at an Hour's warning to obey Orders; early that Morne, let the Officer see a single Person namely George Wilson, who manages these Serjeants, and give him Directions to bring them all to some convenient Place at four that Afternoon.
4. Then the Officer must give each Serjeant Money sufficient for the Purpose, and direct 'em, that each Serjeant order twenty five Men (making together two hundred, which they have ready) to go singly out of the Camp, and meet together an Church-Yard, exactly half an Hour past eight in the Evening, when and where another Officer that they know, must meet 'em, and take the Command, give 'em Muskets ready loaded, and march with them in a Body to the Tower-Gate, at nine that Night exactly.
5. Our Friend, the Officer within, must precisely at that Hour of nine be on the Guard at the Tower-Gate, and seeing this Body of Men appear, order the Garrison to let 'em in, as a Recruit sent to the Tower-Guard.
6. As soon as ever they have entered to seize the Arms at the Tower-Gate, shut the Gate up, and secure every one in the Tower, that the Officer on Guard gives them Orders to secure, but not to shed any Blood.
7. The Tower being thus seized, to leave only a small Guard there under that Officer who lets 'em in, and then, with all those that join you, march directly to the Exchange, where the great Doors must be ready opened, and the General there in Person.
8. At the exact Hour of nine, that the Tower shall be thus seized, the Persons of some great Men to be arrested at their Houses, brought directly into the City, and delivered to the General.
9. That upon our Meeting at the Exchange, the annexed Proclamation to be spread about; the Gates of the City to be shut up, and Pieces of Canon brought down against 'em, but every Man that desires to enter the Gates, before any regular Force appear, to be admitted to come in, and after the General has appointed a Guard at each Gate, and Inlets of the City, with proper Officers to command there; let him march back to Tower-Hill, for a Place of General

General Rendezvous under the Cannon of the Tower, and order the Lord Mayor a good Guard to watch over the Bank, but first take Money from thence to the Tower, in order to pay the Men.

10. That on the Morne of this same Day, our General to have an Interview with some other principal Officer of the Camp, and order him to engage all Friends to attend at their respective Posts, and expect a ^a Token to be sent to each of them as that very Night, on receipt of which Token they are to draw their Men out, and march directly to the Artillery in the Camp, as ^a a Place of General Rendezvous; and that the Captain of the Artillery may not be alarm'd, let this Principal Officer previously send a Message to him, that Orders are come from the General (Cadogan) to double the Guard of the Artillery, on a Rumour that is spread of the Mob being up in the City.

11. The Party being come to the Artillery with the said Principal Officers at the Head of 'em, let 'em immediately draw the Guns round 'em, and stand upon their Defence, without making any Declaration, until the said principal Officer, who commands in chief there, receive certain ^b Intelligence from our General that the Tower is seized upon, and the City all in Arms, and then under a Pretence of securing the King's Person from the Insults of the Mob, let this Officer make a Detachment to take him into Custody, and send him into the City to the General at the Tower.

12. To facilitate these Proceedings, let the General the same Day speak to the Horse-Officers in the Camp, who he knows to be our Friends, and upon the very first Alarm of the City's having revolted, let 'em march their Men to either Ludgate or Newgate, on pretence to suppress the Mob; and when they are at the Gate, as a Token of their being Friends, let the Watch-Word be This Morning, and upon giving us the Word there, to open the Gates and let 'em in, and as soon as they are entered, to march directly to Tower-Hill and join themselves with the General there.

13. Let the General also the same Day order four of the Half-pay Captains to take upon 'em the following Commands, (viz.)

14. First Captain to go into Southwark, and exactly at the Hour of nine, to make a Bonfire in the Fields there, and give some Money among the Mob, and when you have got a Number together, send an Account to the General, take the Arms that must be lodged there, and distribute out amongst 'em to your Acquaintance in the first Place, and to those which they recommend, and then issue out the Declarations; and after the Receipt of a Token from the Captain next mentioned, who is to command in Palace-Yard, to ferry over thither in Lighters, with the Watch-Word This Morning, and join the Captain in Palace-Yard.

15. Second Captain exactly at the Hour of nine, to be in Privy-Garden, adjoining to White-Hall, with a few Gentlemen armed, and seize upon the great Guns there, and then spread the Declarations, and stay there under the Cannon till a greater Body join you from Southwark; or otherwise nail up the Cannon, and march directly to the next Captain in St. James's Park with the Watch-Word This Morning, and then send the Token, as above, to the first Captain in South- wark, and let the Messenger you send, conduct him and his Men to you at St. James's-Park.

16. Third Captain, at the said Hour of nine, to go into St. James's Park, with the Key that is given you of the Private-Door out of Arlington-Street, and appoint only some few Gentlemen to meet you there exactly at the Hour and ready, one to have the Watch-Word you give 'em, which must be This Morning. Let your first Rendezvous be at the little Grove under the Wall near the Gate leading to Hyde-Park; and there you'll meet Fire-Arms ready charged. Then march down to the Parade next the Horse-Guard, and seize upon the Cannon there, and Ammunition in the Store-House, and the better to secure St. James's Park for a Place of general Rendezvous, you shall have an Officer out of the Camp exactly at the Hour of nine come to your Assistance with some Men, as he and you shall agree in the Morne of this Day, and as soon as you have seized the Cannon here, and Ammunition aforesaid, you are to put your selves in a Posture of Defence, and publish the Declaration, and send forthwith to the General at the Tower to let him know of your Situation, and also send to the Captains in Palace-Yard, Southwark, and Tuttle-Fields, that they immediately come and join you.

17. Fourth Captain, exactly at the Hour of nine, the Evening of the same Day to be in Tuttle-Fields; raise the Westminster Mob there, and with the Arms that are there lodg'd, equip them as you can; publish the Declarations, and march directly to St. James's Park and join with them there, who, on your giving them the Watch-Word, are to admit you into the Park.

18. So here being two Bodies of Men thus gotten together the first Night, viz. One on Tower-Hill, and the other in St. James's-Park, (besides our Friends at the Artillery in Hyde-Park.) The next Morning, if not sooner, let our General order a Detachment to Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and some Cannon to be placed on the Terras of the Garden there, lest the Enemy come in there between St. James's Park and the City.

19. A proper Captain must be appointed to head the Watermen belonging to the Thames, and previous to the Day of Execution, he must agreed with the Duke's Bargemen, that upon the least Notice to be given them, that they alarm all the Watermen, and bring them to a Rendezvous the same Hour of nine that Night of Execution, and this Captain's Rendezvous must be at Greenwich, where he must seize the Magazine of Powder, and take out such part of it as each Man will carry, then blow up the rest, march from thence to the Tower, and join his Men with the General there, to whom he must first send a Messenger with the Watch-Word, and an Account of his Numbers:

20. Some Time before Execution, the General to send a Messenger to particular Men in the Country, that they rise in their respective Counties upon the first News of what is done here.—

21. An Officer, &c. to go to Richmond, and at the exact Hour of nine to seize upon Prince Pritty Man, and bring him away to Southwark to some particular Place appointed, where an Agent from the General must meet them with his further Orders.

^a It may be a Note in Writing thus, Sir, I'll meet you at nine to Night, don't fail me. J. S.

^b A verbal Message by a third Person that must be by, when the General and this Chief Officer consult together till Morne.

Mr. Ketelbey. I ask you, whether it was reduced into Writing?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes, it was; the Lords sent to me, to assist Mr. Delafaye; upon Mr. Layer's being examined: Mr. Delafaye took the Heads of the Questions propounded; and I sat near the Table, looked over Mr. Delafaye; attended to the Questions and Answers; so that we could set one another right when we came to consider them.

Mr. Ketelbey. This you Wrote, was it read over to the Prisoner?

Mr. Stanyan. No.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you believe the Prisoner at the Bar saw you write?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes, I believe he saw us write.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you believe he thought any Person was taking his Confession in Writing?

Mr. Stanyan. I think it cannot be otherwise.

Mr. Ketelbey. I ask you, do you believe that Mr. Layer knew that you was taking his Confession at that Time?

Mr. Stanyan. The Lords spoke thus; Pray take Notice, and then take down such a Thing, and such a Thing; and I believe Mr. Layer heard them say, Take down that, and take down that.

Mr. Ketelbey. Was it ever known for one to take down the Questions, and the other the Answers; and then to compare them together, in Order to make a Confession?

Mr. Stanyan. No; Mr. Delafaye wrote down the Questions and Answers.

Mr. Hungerford. How was the Position of Mr. Layer, with respect to you; was your Back or Face towards him?

Mr. Stanyan. It was on one Side.

Mr. Hungerford. Was you in the Room when Mr. Layer came in first?

Mr. Stanyan. I was; I called in Mr. Layer by the Lords Order.

Mr. Hungerford. Was it ever read to him?

Mr. Stanyan. No.

Mr. Hungerford. Was it drawn up in Form, so that you might call it an Examination?

Mr. Stanyan. I will tell you what we understood by it; it was the Minutes of an Examination to be drawn out in Form: But the Lords finding Mr. Layer not so candid and ingenuous as they thought he would have been, did not ask him to sign it; and we only make use of it to refresh our Memories.

Mr. Ketelbey. He calls it an Examination, and it appears by what Mr. Stanyan saith, that he and Mr. Delafaye took it; one takes one Part, and the other takes another Part.

Mr. Soll. Gen. He did not say any such Thing.

Mr. Ketelbey. His Confession was never read over to him.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Stanyan, when the Lords directed Mr. Delafaye and you to write this or that particular Thing, was the Prisoner so near, that in your Apprehension he might hear their Lordships give such Directions?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes, he was.

Mr. Hungerford. Sure they are not contending, that any Confession shall affect a Man, unless it was read to him, and it ought to be signed by him; my Lord, the Man is no Way answerable for any Thing taken in Writing, without his Consent or Privity, in a Criminal Case: It is called Minutes or an Examination, which they might enlarge as they please; therefore we humbly submit it to your Lordship, Whether it ought to be offered in Evidence at all as a Confession.

Mr. Ketelbey. What will be the Consequence, if this be allowed here? Is a Person to be convicted of Treason upon a Confession taken, without its being read to him, and without his signing it? A Confession to a Justice of Peace, in Cases of Felony, unless read to the Party, and signed by him, must not be given in Evidence.

L. C. Just. Mr. Ketelbey, you seem to mistake what it is that is contended for by the King's Council: They are not going to offer any thing to be read in Evidence; your Objection would prevail, if they were going to read a Confession as Evidence, which was neither read to him, nor signed by him; but if there is no Examination reduced into Writing, and signed by the Party, the Consequence of that is, that the Witness is at Liberty to give an Account of what was said; and he may look to his Notes to refresh his Memory: If you will say, it is not so great an Evidence, of so great Weight, as an Examination taken, and signed by the Party, there is some Room left, some Foundation to suppose the Evidence may be mistaken.

He says, he was examined before the Lords of the Council; and he took Minutes of his Examination: And afterwards to refresh himself, he looks upon them, and says, he believes that is the Substance of what he confessed at that Time. You say, there is no Precedent for it; for God's Sake! Recollect your self, it is every Day done at the Old-Bailey: If a Person confesseth, and it be not in Writing, they do prove his Confession, Vivâ Voce.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, Coleman's Case, which was during the Time that Sir William Jones was Attorney General, went further than this: There his Letters were laid in the Indictment, as the very Overt-Act of the High-Treason charged against him; and yet one of those Letters was proved by his Confession, upon an Examination before a Committee of the House of Lords; and that Confession was prov'd, Vivâ Voce, by Sir Philip Lloyd.

Mr. Ketelbey. Whether that Case will be a Precedent? I never heard it so reckoned.

Mr. Hungerford. And I hope it will never be one.

Mr. Delafaye, sworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Mr. Delafaye, pray give an Account what Mr. Layer declared before the Lords of the Council concerning these Receipts.

Mr. Delafaye. The Account he gave——

L. C. Just. Mr. Delafaye, you was present at the Time of taking this Examination; you say, you took Minutes in Writing; you have told us the Reason why it was not in Form, and read to Mr. Layer: If you have not already done it, you may look to your Minutes, and refresh your Memory: That which the Court demands of you is, what Mr. Layer did confess at the Time of his Examination before the Lords of the Council.

Mr. Delafaye. He told the Lords, that he did write to Sir William Ellis, that he would send over some blank Receipts under the King's own Hand, that might be made use of, for the carrying on his Cause: That he did receive such Receipts, and his Intention was to have tried his Friends; and to have raised Money on those Receipts.

Mr. Serj. Chesbire. Did he give any Reason why he went into that Method?

Mr. Delafaye. For a Precedent, he said, a little before the Restoration of King Charles II. a Method of this Kind had been used.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we shall now proceed to read the Letters that were sent and passed between them, Sir William Ellis and Mr. Layer: But it will be proper first to lay before you the Cyphers which they made use of to explain several cant Words and Expressions, which they used in their Letters.

L. C. Jusf. Were the Cyphers found among Mr. Layer's Papers?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Chesbire. Pray read No. 38.

Mr. Att. Gen. I don't know whether we shall trouble your Lordship to read the whole Cypher; it is very long, but when we meet with a Word in the Letters which wants Explanation, we may have Recourse to the Cypher.—Read the Letter No. 38.

Cl. of the Cr. reads. This Letter is signed Eustace Jones, &c.

Dear SIR,

I Receiv'd with a great deal of Pleasure and Satisfaction, a Letter of the 24th of November, from my worthy Friend, with an Account of his safe Arrival; of which I was in some Doubt before, and in no small Pain on that Account: I easily conceive he must needs have had a great deal of Business on his Return, as well of his Unkle's as of his own; and therefore, I don't think much that I heard no sooner from him, believing he was much better employed, and that Business is to be preferred before Compliment.

I was entirely of his Opinion as to the Method of carrying on the Manufactory; the procuring of good Workmen, is the first Step to be made, and if he can get such, the rest will be easy; and particularly, if he could gain some of the ablest of Mrs. Barbara Smith's, I know it would be very agreeable to all concerned, and particularly to Mr. Atkins, to whom he spoke of Writing; and which, I am satisfied, will be very acceptable: And if he thinks fit to inclose it to me, I shall convey it safely to his Hands, who, I find, was very glad to hear of him, counts very much upon his Friendship, and hopes for the Continuance of it.

I made his Compliments to Mr. Timothy Watson's Wife, who took them very kindly, and returns hers, with her most humble Service. She and her Charge are very well, God be praised, as are also all Friends here.

He having read over several times the Paper I shew'd him, and having a good Memory, I don't think it necessary to send a Copy of it.

I am, with great Esteem and Respect, ever most entirely,

Dear SIR,

30th January.
For James Fountaine, Esq;
to be left at Howell's Coffee-House, in Great Wild-Street, LONDON.

Your most affectionate, most humble and most obedient Servant,

Eustace Jones.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordship is pleased to remember, Mr. Stanyan said that Sir William Ellis was to write by the Name of Jones.

Mr. Stanyan. My Lord, he did say, that he had received a Letter since he had settled a Correspondence with Sir William Ellis subscribed by the Name of Jones.

Mr. Att. Gen. In the Cypher Sir William Ellis is called Jones.

Cl. of the Cr. reads. This Letter is signed Eustace Jones, dated 30th January, no Year, Dear Sir, I receiv'd, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordship will be pleased to observe the Expressions in this Letter, the procuring good Workmen: Now look in the Cypher, and Soldiers are meant by Workmen; Manufactory is not in the Cyphers, but I don't know for what Manufactory they wanted Soldiers, unless to raise a Rebellion. The Ablest of Mrs. Barbara Smith's; look for Army in the Cyphers, and you will find, that is signified by Barbara: It will be very acceptable to all concerned, and particularly to Mr. Atkins; in the Cypher that is the Pretender. Compliments to Mr. Timothy Watson's Wife; look in the Cyphers, and Timothy stands for Hughes, whose Wife is Nurse to the Pretender's Child. This Letter is directed for James Fountaine, Esq; to be left at Howell's Coffee-House in Great Wild-street, and I observe, Mrs. Mason said the Prisoner went by the Name of Fountaine.—No. 10. are six fictitious Names, and the Key to them: Read it.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads No. 10.

Digby—Dillon.

Orrery—Burford.

Regent—Steel.

Tories—Tanners.

Wiggs—Waggs.

Rogers—Plunkett.

Mr. Att. Gen. Read the Letter No. 40.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads, signed N. C. Dated the 11th of July, 1722.

Dear SIR,

The 11th of July, 1722.

I Received with all possible Satisfaction your most affectionate Letter of 8th May with its inclosed, which was presently delivered to Mr. St. John, who took it extream kindly; but could not well understand what relates to Mr. Burford; he hopes, your Answer to what I writ, in the beginning of last Month, may soon clear that: You will have seen, by what I then told you, that the former came safe to his Hands, and the Reason of your not having had a distinct Answer to it: He had the Stockings you sent for him, and returns you many Thanks for them; as also for all other Marks of your Affection and Concern for him and his, and will be ready to shew his Sense thereof on all Occasions. I am in earnest Expectation of hearing soon again from you, and am, with all possible Affection and Esteem,

Dear SIR,

For James Fountaine, Esq;
to be left at Howell's Coffee-House in Great Wild-Street, LONDON.

Your most faithful and most humble Servant,

N. C.

L. C. Jusf.

L. C. Just. Who is that N. C?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we do not know, it is directed to James Fountaine, Esq; Mr. St. John in the Cypher signifies the Pretender.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Burford appears to stand for my Lord Orrery in the little Cypher.

Mr. Hungerford. Look into the Paper, pray what do Stockings stand for?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Read the Letter No. 41.

Clerk of the Cr. This is dated the 27 May, it is sign'd by no Body, nor directed to any Body; the Cover is off: I receiv'd with a great, &c.

Dear S I R,

27 May.

I Receiv'd with a great deal of Pleasure, the Favour of your most obliging Letter of 22d March, with an inclosed for our Friend, who was very glad to hear from you; and is very sensible of, and takes very kindly, the Care you take of his little Concern there; but says, he doth not sufficiently understand the State you sent, so as to be able to make a particular Answer, till you shall further explain it; there being some Tenants, mention'd by you, whose Names he does not find in the Rental, as Burford, Steel, Digby, the little Soldier, and Simmonds; the latter, he believes should be Simmes, he is of the North, a grey hair'd antient Man, whom he very well remembers, and has a particular Esteem and Value for, as a very good Tenant, and a very honest Man.

All Friends here are in perfect good Health, God be thanked, and remember themselves kindly to you, and I am most entirely, Yours, &c.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If you look into the Cypher, you will find Rental stands as the fictitious Name for the Cypher itself; Burford stands for the Lord Orrery, Steel for the Regent, and Digby for General Dillon.

Simmons; he believes should be Simmes, but Simmonds in the large Cypher is put for Lord North and Grey, and who is meant, appears pretty plain from the Cant which follows. He is of the North a grey hair'd antient Man, whom he well remembers, and hath a particular Esteem and Value for, as a very good Tenant, and a very honest Man.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look for Simmons in the Cypher.

Mr. Hungerford. I can make one Observation, that Mr. Harcourt is very ready at.

Cl. of the Cr. It is alphabeted, so that it is easy to look for it.

L. C. Just. What Use do you make of these Letters?

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Use we make of them is to shew that Mr. Loyer who took on him the Sham-Name of Fountaine, by which Name some of these Letters are address'd, had a Correspondence with the Friends of the PRETENDER at Rome. That this Correspondence related to a Conspiracy, which was formed and carrying on here; and it appears, they took upon them to mention several Persons of Distinction under a kind of Jargon.

Mr. Att. Gen. The first Letter, wherein is mentioned the carrying on the Manufactory, the procuring good Workmen, and particularly, if he could gain some of the ablest of Mrs. Barbara Smith's, and that it would be very agreeable to all concern'd, and particularly to Mr. Atkins, which is the Name for the Pretender; shews, that the Agents of the Pretender at Rome, had laid Designs to procure Soldiers, and those, if possible, out of his Majesty's Troops; which falls in with the Evidence we have given of the Prisoner's Endeavours to get Soldiers and Sergeants out of the Army.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. It may not be improper, since we have explain'd it, to lay before you the Lists of several Persons Names that are in the Army.

Pray read No. 7. out of the large Bundle.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads a List of Officers Names with Marks and Numbers to some of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. We did mention before, that there were the Names of several Persons of very great Honour and Loyalty to his Majesty in some of the Lists; but this is to shew, that the Prisoner was consulting how he might get an Account of the Number of the Forces; as how many Colonels, how many Captains, and how many Soldiers there were in the Guards and other Troops of his Majesty.

Read No. 5. in the large Bundle.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads No. 5. A List of Officers of the Second, or Coldstream Regiment of Guards.

Mr. Att. Gen. We make the same Use of this to shew, that he was searching and examining to get an Account of the Guards.

L. C. Just. I suppose he is taking a Survey of the Persons that were of the Guards, that he might be capable of making a Judgment.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord; and to know their Strength: Look out No. 6. in the large Bundle.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads No. 6. A List of Officers in the first Troop of Horse-Grenadiers, the Names being distinguished by different Letters.

No. 7. out of the small Bundle. A List, &c. here are eleven of them put down.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Read No. 8. in the large Bundle.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads No. 8. A List, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordship will observe, that this is a List of some Persons Names, and the Numbers of Horses and Men they were to provide.

L. C. Just. You'll have this to import an Account of what Quota's several Persons were to find.

Mr. Att. Gen. The last was read for that Purpose: Read No. 15. in the large Bundle.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads No. 15. Containing divers Names, with Numbers set against some of them.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Read No. 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, in the large Bundle.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads No. 20. Containing a List of the Great-Officers of the Tower. No. 21. Containing Names of Officers of the Second Troop of Horse-Guards, Second Troop of Horse-Grenadiers, and Fourth Troop of Horse-Guards. No. 22. Containing a List of Names. No. 23. Containing Names of Officers of the First, Second, Third and Fourth Troops of Guards. No. 24. Containing the Names of two Officers of the Horse-Guards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon that List, No. 21. whether there are not some private Marks upon it.

Cl. of the Cr. Yes, here is upon one of them a Dott, and on the other Side there is a Dott; and and in two or three Places some Men mark'd and cross'd.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire Read No. 25.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads No. 25. Containing a List of Officers, five of them marked to be not bad.

Mr. Reeve: Are the Words not bad of the same Hand-Writing?

Cl. of the Cr. Yes; it doth appear to me to be so.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Read the Title of No. 22.

Cl. of the Cr. Here are a great many Peoples Names, with Marks upon some, and none upon others: Upon one of them is Writ William Johnson, to be gained.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Read No. 27.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads, A List of the Third Regiment of Guards; against several of which Names are Dotts and Marks.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Read No. 28.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads, A List of the Officers of the Coldstream Regiment of Guards; and a List of the Officers of the Scotch Guards.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Read No. 35.

Cl. of the Cr. Reads No. 35. A Paper, containing an Account of the Numbers of the Officers and Soldiers in the First, Second, and Third Regiment of Foot Guards.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we beg leave to ask Mr. Delafaye and Mr. Stanyan two or three Questions, to support the Evidence of Mr. Lynch and Mr. Plunkett, in relation to some particular Facts; whether at the time of the Examination of Mr. Layer before the Lords of the Council, any thing was said of Mr. Layer's being at Rome?

Mr. Hungerford. With humble Submission, Mr. Layer's being at Rome, and corresponding with the Pretender, (if he did so) is made Treason by another Act of Parliament, not by this Act of Parliament upon which he is indicted: Therefore, whether he was himself at Rome, or corresponded with the Pretender, cannot be offered as an Evidence of High-Treason upon this Indictment.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. It is only to shew the Probability of his receiving those Receipts.

Mr. Ketelbey. Since we did not know any thing of those Papers, we could not properly make our Exceptions against them, till we heard them read; and now, if they prove any thing, 'tis the holding Correspondence with the Pretender; but that relates to another late Act of Parliament; 'tis another Species of Treason; and the Evidence which they would give of his Confession, Vivâ Voce; they say, it is only to support these Papers that are read; Who can make any Objection to a Paper which we did know nothing of? I believe few in the Court know what the Meaning of these Papers are now they are read; for my Part, I know very little of them; we apprehend that instead of being allowed to support this Evidence, by proving a foreign Correspondence between Mr. Layer and the Pretender, by the Name of King JAMES, which is made Treason by a particular Act of Parliament; they ought rather to have indicted him upon that, than endeavour to support their defective Proof by giving Evidence of an Offence, which may be matter of another Enquiry.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we apprehend a Proof, that the Prisoner was at Rome, and had Conferences with the Pretender, will be very proper to corroborate, and explain the Evidence that hath been given by the Witnesses, and the Pretender's Notes; and Sir William Ellis's Letters to the Prisoner; and for those Purposes we would make Use of it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Though we apprehend we have made our Case extremely strong already, yet this which has been opened may be offered by Way of further Confirmation: Notwithstanding the Objection which is made, that we are attempting to give Evidence of another Kind of Treason not alledged in the Indictment, yet we insist upon it, that it is proper here, as circumstantial Evidence of the Treason which is alledged. We have proved a Conspiracy entered into between this Gentleman and others, to bring in the Pretender, and levy War for that Purpose; and also, Notes sign'd JAMES R. which he received from Sir William Ellis, a Person at the Pretender's Court. Now, if we follow this by shewing, that the Prisoner was actually at Rome, and had Personal Conferences with the Pretender himself; that, surely, must be admitted to be a material Circumstance to support the Proof of those other Facts. I beg Leave to say, that it has been held, even since the Stat. 7^o Will. Tertij, That Acts of High-Treason not laid in the Indictment, may be given in Evidence, if they conduce to the Proof of some Overt-Act which is there laid.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. We apprehend your Lordship will receive Evidence of the same Kind of Treason in a lower Degree, in order to prove the Overt-Act, whereby he consulted and conspired to bring in the Pretender, and place him upon the Throne.

As the Prisoner did correspond with his Ministers, so he had Access to the Pretender himself; and he did own it. That we apprehend is going a Step higher, something further than already is admitted; and if it is proper Evidence, there is no reason why it should be rejected.

Mr. Reeve. It is true, we have not indicted him for a treasonable Correspondence with the Pretender, therefore they object, we cannot give Evidence of any such Correspondence upon this Indictment.

My Lord, we humbly apprehend, every thing that is a Circumstance that will gain Credit to the Witnesses examined is proper Evidence. It looks indeed improbable, that a Gentleman of the Profession of the Law should enter into this treasonable Design, which is expressly sworn upon him by two Witnesses, whose Credit they design to impeach; therefore we humbly offer this as a circumstantial Evidence. This Gentleman having gone from his Profession, hath been at Rome, was kindly receiv'd and entertain'd by the Pretender; thereupon he hath entered into an Intercourse with his Ministers: And, if we prove this, it is to induce Credit to the Evidence we have given by positive Witnesses. We therefore think it proper, and submit it to your Lordship.

L. C. Just. They must go on, they are not going upon an Evidence of a new Overt-Act of Treason; the Overt-Acts are consulting, advising, and agreeing to raise a Rebellion.

Mr. Hungerford. I humbly beg your Lordship's Pardon.

L. C. Just.

L. C. Just. If you will not hear me, you will teach me not to hear you.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I hope we have a Right to reply.

Mr. West. Upon the first Letter of Sir William Ellis's he congratulates him, as his Friend on his safe Arrival.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I beg your Lordship's Pardon; I am in the Service of my Client, and in endeavouring to do him Service, I am verily persuaded, I shall not offend your Lordship: Really for my part, I cannot satisfy my self, that the Evidence which they tender to the Court is a proper Evidence.

This Gentleman is indicted upon the Statute de Proditionibus, 25^o Ed. 3. The Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment are, his consulting, conspiring and agreeing to raise a Rebellion, and to levy War against the King, &c.

There is an Act of Parliament in the last Year of King William, whereby the Pretender is attainted, which makes corresponding with the Pretender, or any of his Adherents High-Treason; and when any Man commits that particular Treason, he is liable to be taken up and prosecuted for it. Now my Lord, shall they be admitted to give an Evidence of a Treason committed in breach of one Act of Parliament, when they are prosecuting him upon another, they may as well offer Evidence against him for counterfeiting the Great Seal, or clipping and coining for the Sake of Evidence: We hope this Practice shall not be allowed; if they are so full of Proof (as by their opening they seem'd to be) which by the Rules of Law can reach this Man's Life, which I cannot yet see, let Justice take its Course: But we humbly hope they shall not be permitted to give Evidence of Facts which are entirely foreign to the present Accusation, and can be calculated for nothing but to captivate the Jury, by acquainting them that the Prisoner hath been at Rome. But if the King's Counsel will have it effectually publish'd, that the Prisoner hath been at Rome, let them consent to have him found not guilty upon this Indictment, and let him then be prosecuted upon the Act, for corresponding with the Pretender, and see what will come of it.

Mr. Ketelbey. The Act of Parliament that makes this new Treason is the 13 and 14 of King William; which not only makes that Treason which was not Treason before, but puts it on a new Method of Trial in any County of England, where it is laid. Now they would give in Evidence a Fact, which Mr. Serj. Cheshire says is Evidence of the same Kind of Treason, tho' in a lower Degree, and ought to be received to prove the Overt-Acts of consulting and conspiring to restore, and bring the Pretender to the Throne: As to the Evidence that hath been read we could not have objected to the Papers, because we did not know what they were, nor whether they related to a Foreign or Domestick Correspondence. Now because they are read as being found on a Person to whom he gave them; shall they, to support a Treason, of compassing and imagining the Death of the King; give Evidence of corresponding with the Pretender.

My Lord, I don't apprehend the King's Counsel have given us any manner of Answer, and therefore shall not take up any more of your Lordship's Time, by repeating in a Reply, what I offered before by way of Objection: I submit it to your Lordship.

L. C. Just. Sure as this Evidence is offer'd it is very proper; consider, in the Indictment the Overt-Acts are, meeting, consulting, advising, and agreeing to raise a Rebellion. The next is, publishing a Traiterous Libel, in which Rewards are promised to those that would assist in this Rebellion; a third Overt-Act is, the engaging and lifting Men for the Service of the Pretender; a fourth is, a designing to depose the King; and another is, to set up the Pretender on the Throne; Now, consider, if they have not given an Evidence of these Overt-Acts, whether sufficient or not, that must be left to the Jury; if they have given Evidence of these Acts, a Design to set up the Pretender, and to depose the King, &c. If they are not proper to shew for this Purpose this Gentleman corresponded with Rome, was with the Pretender, these Letters sent from Sir William Ellis to him: Letters (according to his Desire) purporting Receipts for Sums of Money to be signed by the Pretender, as a Foundation to oblige him to make Repayment: After this and these Things have been offer'd, is it not proper to go as far as they can on this Head, and shew how far he hath been engaged with the Pretender and his Accomplices? Sure it is proper, as a further Evidence of these Overt-Acts.

Don't trouble yourself as to that, no Use shall be made of that, to charge you with the Treason made so by another Act of Parliament, about corresponding with the Pretender, for Evidence it is proper here; and it neither can, nor shall be made Use of to any other Purpose.

Mr. Reeve. Mr. Stanyan, pray go on and give an Account of what he confess'd, when examined before the Lords of the Council about his being at Rome.

Mr. Stanyan. Mr. Layer did acknowledge he had been at Rome, and returned from thence in July 1721. he said he had had two Conferences with the Pretender.

Mr. Ketelbey. I think Mr. Stanyan said, he had taken Minutes of his Examination; I had rather see the Minutes than trust to his Memory. My Lord, in the Trial of the two Bailiffs in this Court, the Substance of what the Deceased said was reduced into Writing; and therefore the Parole-Evidence, that was offered to be given was rejected. I submit it to your Lordship, whether the Rule is not the same in greater Cases, and much stronger in this Point before your Lordship. I have not the least Disrespect for Mr. Stanyan, and could take his Word for any thing, but my Client's Life; therefore, we hope he shall produce those Notes, which he hath refer'd to once or twice, now he is going to give a further Account of his Examination.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I was Counsel in that Case; the Justice of Peace who had taken Mr. Lutterell's Examination did not appear, and that Examination could not be had; there was a Copy of it taken and produced, and proved in Court to be a true Copy, but your Lordship would not let that Copy be read, or the subject Matter of it to be given in Evidence, unless the original Examination it self were produced.

L. C. Just. Mr. Attorney, you hear how the Matter is, Mr. Delafaye and Mr. Stanyan give an Account that they were commanded by the Lords of the Council to attend and take Minutes of of Mr. Layer's Examination before them; that they have those Minutes, and have look'd into those Minutes to refresh their Memories: If they desire they may be produced, do you oppose it? Have you the Minutes here?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. There may be a great many Things that are not material to the present Case of Mr. Layer; why should they have all these Minutes read? It is not for the Sake of the Prisoner at the Bar, but for the Sake of some other People, who may be listening here.

In the Case of Lutterel, there was a compleat Examination taken by a Justice of the Peace: In this Case there is no Examination compleated and drawn up; it is nothing but an oral Confession, and amounts to no more. The Minutes the Witnesses may take in their Hands, as proper to refresh their Memories.

Mr. Att. Gen. Their desiring to have these Minutes read, is not so much for the Sake of their own Client as for the Sake of other People.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. How the Matter in that Case was——

L. C. Just. It is enough, I only ask'd Mr. Attorney-General, whether he thought fit to consent to it; and without his Consent, we are of Opinion, that they cannot be read.

I ask'd Mr. Attorney the Question, and was not aware of any ill Consequence.

Mr. Attorney says, the Minutes refer to the whole Examination, and to a great many other People, and it would be for the Disservice of the King, to have these Things disclos'd. Mr. Attorney might have refus'd to consent without giving a Reason, but he hath given a good Reason, and therefore will not consent that they be read.

Mr. Ketelbey. We do not consent to wave them, but insist upon their being read.

Mr. Att. Gen. We don't ask your Consent.

Mr. Ketelbey. If you don't ask it, nor give it, we are so far even, but I assure you, Sir, we are retained only for one Gentleman; the Prisoner at the Bar, and we have as little Reason to be solicitous for the Innocence of others, as some have for their Guilt?

L. C. Just. You cannot read the Minutes taken against the King, because these Matters are not ripe yet, nor to be discover'd to the World.

Mr. Hungerford. Something drop'd, as if we did insist upon the Matter for the Sake of Others; they are mistaken, we condemn such an Insinuation. We are of Counsel for this Man, and for this Man singly.

L. C. Just. You are assign'd Counsel for him, and unless you had, I believe you would not have ventured to have said so much.

Mr. Hungerford. No indeed.

L. C. Just. Go on.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Mr. Stanyan, please to recollect, whether when Mr. Layer was examined before the Lords of the Council, (it is to confirm the Evidence of Mr. Lynch) any thing pass'd about the Declaration.

L. C. Just. But before you was intending to ask him about his going to Rome, and having Conference with the Pretender.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, that he hath said already, therefore I ask you what was said by Mr. Layer, relating to the Declaration?

Mr. Stanyan. The Lords ask'd Mr. Layer, if he had seen any Declaration; he said no, he had only the Heads of one which he drew himself: The Lords ask'd him where that Declaration was, he said, he believ'd one Wilson had it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was any Questions asked relating to the Persons that had seen it?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes, he said the only Persons that had seen it was, that Wilson, one William Jeffries, a Nonjuring Parson, and one Lynch.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Where did he mention to have shew'd it to Lynch?

Mr. Stanyan. On his Way to my Lord North and Grey's, at the Green Man at Epping.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was there any thing more said by Layer, relating to that Journey to Epping, and what?

Mr. Stanyan. He said that he went to my Lord North and Grey's, and dined at the Green-Man as he went, then he carried Mr. Lynch to my Lord North and Grey's, and recommended him to my Lord North and Grey, as a proper Person to be employed. I think it was employed in an Insurrection, or in any thing else, that his Lordship should command him.

Mr. Ketelbey. If he is not certain, I desire he may produce his Minutes, as he gives his Evidence vivá voce, to refresh his Memory.

Mr. Att. Gen. We submit to it.

L. C. Just. It is always so.

Mr. Stanyan. He recommended him, as a proper Person to be employed in an Insurrection, and that Lynch having told Layer before that he would seize the Earl of Cadogan, that Layer did mention him to my Lord North and Grey, as a proper Person for such an Attempt.

Mr. Ketelbey. The first time you said, in an Insurrection, as you remembred or thought; how come you now to be more certain on the second Repetition of your Evidence than at the first? On the first Account you gave you say, it was employed in an Insurrection, as you thought; now upon the second Repetition you give a positive Evidence, that this was confest by Mr. Layer.

Mr. Stanyan. I have recollected the Words, and Mr. Layer used those Words.

Mr. Ketelbey. From whence is it that you are now so positive, and were not so at first?

Mr. Stanyan. I did say the Words at first.

Mr. Ketelbey. But you said it with an Alleviation; I desire to know, if you are positive those were the Words.

Mr. Stanyan. I am very positive.

Mr. Ketelbey. And yet you were not positive before.

Mr. Stanyan. I did not say I was not positive.

Mr. Hungerford. Did you give your Evidence, that you was certain he said that he had recommended Lynch, as a proper Person to be concerned in an Insurrection in General, or only as a proper Person to seize my Lord Cadogan, or both? how did he express himself?

Mr. Stanyan. I will tell you how the Words were: Lynch having told him he would seize my Lord Cadogan, Layer recommends Lynch to my Lord North and Grey as a proper Person for such an Attempt.

Mr. Hungerford. Then the Insurrection was out of the Case; he was only recommended to my my Lord North and Grey, as a proper Person to seize my Lord Cadogan.

Mr. Ketelbey. I think you have repeated it three times, and different at each time; now please to rectify your Memory, and let us have it so as it may be understood.

I must desire it in this Case, my Client is upon his Life, and he should have right, I am sure he will have it from the Court and the Jury.

We desire to know whether you give such an Evidence of this Part of his Confession, with respect to his recommending Mr. Lynch to my Lord North and Grey, as you will stand by?

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Stanyan, pray give an Account once for all how that Matter was.

Mr. Stanyan. I can give no other Account.

Mr. Ketelbey. He hath vary'd every Time; I appeal to Mr. Attorney, I appeal to your Lordship.

L. C. Just. Wherein is the Variation?

Mr. Ketelbey. First he acquaints you, that he confessed, that he recommended Lynch to my Lord North and Grey, as a fit Person to be employed, he thinks, or believes, it was in an Insurrection; and then he says, he is positive that he recommended him to my Lord North and Grey, as one that was fit to be employed in an Insurrection, and at last he says he was recommended by Mr. Layer to my Lord North and Grey, as the fit Person to seize my Lord Cadogan. I appeal to your Lordship's Memory, and his own Oath, whether this was not so, and yet he is positive of it, he is sure of it.

L. C. Just. Is there any Difference in all this?

Mr. Ketelbey. As much as between being certain, and being uncertain.

L. C. Just. For what? You talk of the Variation between an Insurrection and seizing my Lord Cadogan. The Insurrection was partly to be made on the seizing my Lord Cadogan, at the same Time, as to facilitate the Insurrection; both were to go together; if he was a proper Person to seize my Lord Cadogan, he was a proper Person to be employed in an Insurrection.

Mr. Ketelbey. He is charging the Prisoner with his Confession, and therefore I say, he hath mentioned it with two or three Variations: First, that he was fit to be employed in an Insurrection, and he explains that by seizing my Lord Cadogan.

L. C. Just. That is Part of the Insurrection.

Mr. Ketelbey. Surely, my Lord, this serves to make our Objection so much the stronger against allowing parol Evidence of a Confession, which was put in Writing.

Mr. Att. Gen. I can't imagine what they mean; here is a Gentleman, that gives an Account, that the Prisoner confessed that he recommended Lynch to my Lord North and Grey, as a proper Person to be employed in the Insurrection, and to seize my Lord Cadogan; where is the Variation in this?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Stanyan, you was giving an Account of Mr. Layer's recommending Lynch to my Lord North and Grey; did Mr. Layer declare any thing further relating to that Matter?

Mr. Stanyan. He said my Lord North and Grey received him civilly; he supp'd there and lay there that Night, and they din'd there the next Day.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did he give any Account of what passed at Dinner?

Mr. Stanyan. I don't know whether it was just at Dinner, or afterwards: But he said that several Healths were drunk, which were begun by my Lord North and Grey; and after Dinner there came in a Man they called a Citizen, the drank the Pretender's Health, his Wife and the young Prince.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did the Prisoner say any thing about the Christning of his Child?

Mr. Stanyan. That was when he confessed before the Lords, that he was at Rome, in the Conference he had with the Pretender, he took Occasion to speak of the Discontents of the Nation, which had been occasioned by the Losses sustained in the South-Sea. The Pretender asked him if he knew any Persons of Distinction in that Case? He said, that he knew a great many, that were well-affected to his Interest; that he was not acquainted with People of Quality: But that he knew several of good Estates, that were very well affected to his Interest. Upon this the Pretender asked him several Questions, says he, it must be very expensive to you to come hither to Rome, it must cost you 500 l. No, saith he, not above half so much. Then the Pretender praised his Zeal, and commended him; after that Mr. Layer asked the Pretender to give him some Tokens or Credentials, that he might have something from his Majesty; that would be a Means of his gaining Credit among his Friends here. He says the Pretender scrupled that: Then Mr. Layer proposed afterwards that the Pretender's Wife should stand as Godmother to his Daughter, to Mr. Layer's Daughter; that afterwards Col. Hay, to whom he was introduced at the Pretender's Court, brought him Word, that the Pretender's Wife would stand as Godmother to his Child: But then the Question was, who should represent her? And after some time it was proposed to Mr. Layer to find out a fit Person to represent her. Mr. Layer proposed the Dutchess of Ormond, which was agreed to; after that the Pretender agreed to stand Godfather with his Wife, and then the Point was, who should represent him? And Col. Hay told him that he must take care of that, to find a proper Person to represent his Majesty.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What Account did he give of what was done in Pursuance of this, when he came into England?

Mr. Stanyan. When he came into England, he said, he applied himself to one Mr. Thompson, to speak to my Lord Orrery to stand to represent the Pretender, with the Dutchess of Ormond: But he said my Lord Orrery declined it; and afterwards he got my Lord North and Grey to stand. That Mr. Thompson did Christen his Child, my Lord North and Grey and the Dutchess of Ormond standing as Proxies for the Pretender and his Wife; my Lord North and Grey did stand to represent the Pretender, and the Dutchess of Ormond to represent the Pretender's Wife, knowing they did so.

And he was asked by the Lords, who were in Company at the Christning? He said, only the Dutchess of Ormond, my Lord North and Grey, Mr. Thompson the Minister, himself, and his Wife, and another Woman, at whose House the Christning was performed: But he said, she was not present in the Room, tho' she assisted at the Christning.

Mr. West. Did he mention any Time when this Christning was?

Mr. Stanyan.

Mr. Stanyan. About the Spring: I can't say that Question was asked him by the Lords, and I can't ascertain the Time.

Mr. West. Did he say any thing relating to my Lord North and Grey?

Mr. Stanyan. He told them of my Lord North and Grey's being at the Head of these Designs.

Prisoner. What doth he concern himself with the Lord North and Grey for?

Mr. West. Pray Sir be quiet.

Mr. Stanyan. He said he told my Lord North and Grey that he had acquainted Lynch with his Lordship's being at the Head of this Design, therefore Mr. Lynch had expressed a great Desire to wait upon his Lordship.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Delafaye, pray give an Account what Mr. Layer said, when he was examined before the Lords of the Council, relating to his being at Rome.

Mr. Delafaye. Mr. Layer declared to the Lords of the Council that he had been at Rome, that he had had two Conferences with the Pretender, that he had acquainted the Pretender with the Disaffection of the Nation, with respect to the Losses that had been sustained by the South-Sea. He said, in general, the Nation was well-affected, and that he knew Persons of State, not Quality, that were in his Interest: Then he proposed to have Credentials or Tokens of the Pretender's Regard to him, which was not granted him: Then he desired the Pretender's Spouse should stand Godmother to his Child; the Pretender said he would consider of it; Col. Hay afterwards brought him Word, that she consented; then there were some Conferences who should represent her.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give the same Account that he gave before the Lords of the Council.

Mr. Delafaye. Col. Hay brought Word to Mr. Layer, that the Pretender's Spouse consented to stand Godmother to his Child; and it was agreed the Dutchess of Ormond should represent her; he desired a Credential or Token to the Dutchess of Ormond. Hay told him, without that she would stand, only, faith he, carry a Message, that the Duke is well, and gone to Madrid, that she would do it; and Layer desired to know who should stand as Godfather, why the King himself, that is, the Pretender; and Layer desired to know who was to represent him; he desired to be excused, but Layer would find out one upon his Return into England, that was proper for that Purpose; when he came into England, he was at a Loss for a Person to represent the Pretender; he went to Mr. Thompson to advise with him about it, who went to my Lord Orrery, to desire him to stand as Proxy for the Pretender, my Lord Orrery declined it, then he went to my Lord North and Grey, who accepted it; the Child was christned; it was at Chelsea, I take it, at a House, where there was a China Shop. It was in the Spring, what Day I can't tell. That he said there was his Wife, my Lord North and Grey, who stood for the Pretender, and Dutchess of Ormond, who stood for the Pretender's Wife, the Woman of the House, but she was not within the Room at the Christning.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember any thing said by Layer about any Declaration, that was drawn?

Mr. Delafaye. Mr. Layer owned that he had drawn Heads of a Declaration; and that, when he was going to my Lord North and Grey's, he did shew it to Mr. Lynch at the Green Man, as he was on his Way thither.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What said he of his recommending Mr. Lynch in his Examination?

Mr. Delafaye. He spoke of his recommending Lynch twice; that Mr. Lynch having told him he would seize my Lord Cadogan, he did recommend him to my Lord North and Grey, as a proper Person for that Attempt. The second time that he recommended him, he had proposed carrying Lynch to my Lord North and Grey's, he having told him that he was a very honest Man, fit to be concerned in an Insurrection; that Layer having told Finch his Lordship was to be at the Head of the Design, Lynch was impatient to wait upon him.

Mr. Att. Gen. We shall now prove there were Arms at the Prisoner's House when he was seized. Mr. Stanyan, were you at Mr. Layer's House, when he was seized?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know of any Arms there?

Mr. Stanyan. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give my Lord and the Jury an Account what Arms?

Mr. Stanyan. Just after Mr. Layer was seized I came in, he was just got out of his Bed. I observed in the Room, where he lay, there were a Pair of Pistols hung by his Bed-side, and between them a Horse-man's Sword, a riding Sword, and a pretty large Sword; on th' other Side of the Bed next the Chimney a little Case of Pistols, and another Sword hung in another Part of the Room. In the Closet of the same Room we look'd, and I saw two Carbines or Guns, and two Musquetoons or Blunderbusses; seeing so many Arms, I went to handle some of them, upon which he said, have a Care, they are loaded, don't meddle with them; upon that I asked him what he had to do with so many Arms? He answered, you must know my Clerk and I are great Shooters, when we are in the Country. In another Room, looking further, we observed several Moulds for the making of Bullets. There was also a Cartridge-box, and a Number of Cartridges ready made up, as near as I can guess (I did not count them) there were about forty or fifty of them. There was a Gentleman of the Army, and he said they were such Cartridges as were used in the Army.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any thing relating to these Arms confessed by Mr. Layer before the Lords of the Council?

Mr. Stanyan. He did not deny it I believe.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would ask you whether there was any thing said before the Lords relating to these Arms?

Mr. Stanyan. The Lords did ask Mr. Layer, what he did with forty or fifty Cartridges ready made up? He said they were made up by Bowers the Gunsmith, and that, if there was any Disturbance in the Nation, he should have Occasion for them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Delafaye, was you by, when he was asked the Question about these Arms?

Mr. Delafaye. Yes; he was asked what he did with so many Cartridges and Arms, and he said they were proper for his Use, if there should be any Disturbance in the Nation.

Col. Huske sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was you by, when these Arms were seized in Mr. Layer's House?

Col. Huske. Yes; there were two Cases of Pistols, two Fuzees, and some other Arms, and a Blunderbuss, and two or three Swords; there were about 40 Cartridges ready made up in the usual Manner, as they are made up, when our Soldiers are to charge their Pieces for Expedition in Case of Action.

Mr. Att. Gen. How many were there?

Col. Huske. About forty.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see any Moulds for Bullets?

Col. Huske. There was a Mould for Musket-balls.

Prisoner. You say I had two Fuzees, will a Musket-ball go into a Fuzee?

Col. Huske. I can't tell but it may.

Prisoner. There were 40 Cartridges, which were ready made up, will those Cartridges go into a Fuzee?

Col. Huske. These very Cartridges were only fit for the Army.

Mr. Ketelbey. These Cartridges were not fit for the Musket?

Col. Huske. I did not try them.

Mr. Ketelbey. Would they go into a Fuzee?

Col. Huske. I don't know.

Mr. Ketelbey. According to my Notions, there is a Difference in Bigness between a Fuzee and a Musket, and a Cartridge fit for a Musket will not go into a Fuzee.

Col. Huske. A Cartridge, that is fit for a Fuzee, will go into a Musket.

Mr. Ketelbey. I believe that, and so it will into a Cannon; therefore I ask whether a Cartridge, that is fitted to a Musket, and proper for the Use of a Soldier going to Battle, whether that Cartridge will fit a Fuzee?

Col. Huske. The Bore of a Fuzee may be made as large as that of a Musket.

L. C. Just. Those Cartridges, that were there, would they have served for the Fuzee?

Col. Huske. I am satisfied that they would serve for the Fuzee, and the smallest Arms there, except the Pistols.

Mr. Ketelbey. You say there were two Swords?

Col. Huske. Yes, I saw two Swords.

Mr. Ketelbey. I believe you never are without two Swords.

Col. Huske. I believe I have a dozen, but they belong to my Company.

Prisoner. Were they Horse Swords, or Swords fit to walk with?

Col. Huske. I can't tell that.

Mr. Hungerford. I think you say, that those Bullets, made into Cartridges were, by the Size of them, intended for the small Arms.

Col. Huske. I do believe they would fit the two Fuzees that I saw.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you open any of the Cartridges?

Col. Huske. I did, and there was a Ball made up at the End of each Cartridge.

Mr. Smeybert sworn.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Do you know the Prisoner at the Bar?

Mr. Smeybert. Yes, I do.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Recollect whether you have seen him at Rome?

Mr. Smeybert. Yes, I have.

Mr. Soll. Gen. When?

Mr. Smeybert. About a Year and half ago.

Mr. Soll. Gen. For how long Time was he there?

Mr. Smeybert. I think about a Week or a Fort-night.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Did you or the Prisoner leave Rome first?

Mr. Smeybert. I left Rome first.

Mrs. Hay sworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Did you ever see the Prisoner?

Mrs. Hay. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Where did you see him?

Mrs. Hay. I saw him at Rome.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. When?

Mrs. Hay. Last Summer was Twelve-month.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. What Time of the Year was it, as near as you can remember?

Mrs. Hay. I can't tell exactly what Time, but it was last Summer was Twelve-month.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. You are sure you saw him there?

Mrs. Hay. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we shall now prove the Prisoner's Escape out of the Messenger's Custody as was open'd before. Call Mr. Squire.

Mr. Squire sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon the Prisoner at the Bar, do you know him?

Mr. Squire. Yes, I do know him?

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of his being taken up? Give an Account when it was that he was taken.

Mr. Squire. He was taken the Eighteenth Day of September last.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whose Custody was he in after he was taken?

Mr. Squire. He was in my Custody.

Mr. Att. Gen. What became of him afterwards? Did he continue in your Custody?

Mr. Squire. No, he made his Escape.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long after he had been taken was it that he made his Escape?

Mr. Squire. It was the next Day he got out of the Window.

Mr. Att. Gen. How high was the Room he got out of?

Mr. Squire. It was two Story high, he lifted up the Sash and so got out of the Window.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you pursue him?

Mr. Squire. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Account can you give of his being taken again?

Mr. Squire. He had not been gone long before I found he had made his Escape, and understanding which Way he went, I immediately pursued him, and I took him in a Lane going towards St. George's Fields.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he say?

Mr. Squire. He said he was very sorry to see me; I ask'd him how he could offer to go away from me; and he said, every body else would have done the same in his Condition, and that nobody could blame him for it; and that he believed my Lord Carteret would not blame him.

Mr. Att. Gen. But why?

Mr. Squire. Because he look'd upon himself in such a bad Condition, and so much Danger, he said, nobody could blame him because he was in that Condition.

Prisoner. What Condition? I desire to ask you one Question; Did not I ask you to shew me your Warrant?

Mr. Squire. No, you never ask'd me.

Prisoner. Did not I ask you at my own House?

Mr. Squire. No, you did not.

Prisoner. Did you shew me your Warrant?

Mr. Squire. You did not ask me for it.

Prisoner. Did not I tell you the Reason that I escaped was, because I did not know what Authority you had to detain me?

Mr. Squire. No, you did not.

James Peterfon sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Peterfon, do you know any thing of the Prisoner's Escape?

Peterfon. Mr. Layer was in Custody at my Father's House, in Mr. Squire's House, in a Room up two Pair of Stairs backwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of his getting away?

Peterfon. No, I was abroad then.

John Sweete sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon the Prisoner at the Bar; do you remember you ever saw him before?

Sweete. Yes, I saw him just going into St. George's Fields.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did any body take him there?

Sweete. I was the first that took him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he say to you when you took him?

Sweete. He said, for God's Sake let me go; and said 'twas an Arrest: Why then, and please you, my Lord, my Partner came up, and ask'd him whether it was an Arrest, and he said it was; and then looking about me, I saw another Person coming after us, who was the Messenger: It seems he had broke out of the Messenger's House. And then he clapt his Hand into his Pocket, and pull'd out I believe about forty Guineas, and said, we should take what we would if we would let him go, but we would not.

Anthony Stephens sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did Layer say when he was first taken?

Stephens. We asked him, is it for an Arrest? Yes, says he, it is an Arrest; and when he saw Mr. Squire's Son coming after us, he would give us whatever we pleased to let him go; and more than that, he said they had no Warrant, and he did not know that they could keep him without a Warrant.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we have gone through our Evidence, and shall rest it here.

Mr. Hungerford. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel for the Prisoner at the Bar; and after so long an Evidence as hath been given in this Cause, it will best become me to draw the Matter in debate to a single Point, if I can, and thereby to give Ease to your Lordship, the Jury, and the Counsel on both sides. My Lord, the Prisoner is indicted upon the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third, commonly called the Statute De Proditionib', the Things made, or rather, declared Treason by that Act, are, First, The compassing or imagining the Death of the King, or of the Prince of Wales. Then the Statute goes on to declare other Things Treason which relate only to the Persons of some of the Royal Family; and then it declares likewise, That it is Treason to levy War against the King, &c. It is not said, That to Design or Contrive to levy War, but actually to levy War only shall be Treason.

This is the Text, this the Law upon which the Gentleman at the Bar must be either saved or condemned. The Treason laid to his Charge is compassing and imagining the Death of the King: The Overt-Acts laid to his Charge are, That he did consult and conspire to levy War:

That he did publish a certain Treasonable Libel, purporting among other Things, a Promise of Reward to his Majesty's faithful Subjects, to rise in Arms and levy War against the King.

That he consulted to put the Pretender upon the Throne.

That he listed Soldiers for him.

And the last Overt-Act is, That he consulted to seize and imprison the King.

My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, there is no Evidence of any of these Overt-Acts attempted to be given in Evidence against him in Essex, save only that of Publishing a Treasonable Libel, which the King's Counsel, in their Evidence, would insinuate to be the Pretender's Declaration. The Evidence of the other Overt-Acts are attempted to be proved in Middlesex. And in truth, the greatest Part of the whole Transaction was by the King's own Evidence, proved to be in that County, and I wonder the Indictment was not laid there; but, Gentlemen, the Indictment being laid in Essex, if an Act of High Treason is not proved to have been committed by the Prisoner in that County, he must be acquitted.

I might here, my Lord, insist, that an actual levying of War and not design to levy a War, being made Treason by the Statute of Treasons, the publishing a Paper which purports at the utmost but an Intention only to levy War or raise a Rebellion is not Treason, and consequently not a legal Overt-Act within that Statute. This Opinion is warranted by the express Words of the Act of Parliament itself, which is a better Authority than all the Commentators upon it; and it is likewise the Opinion of^a my Lord Chief Justice Coke, and my Lord Chief Justice Hales; and in Truth, if this be not the true meaning of the Act, one Paragraph, viz. That which declares actual levying of War Treason is superfluous and redundant; for what is the Use of making actual levying of War, or a Rebellion a distinct Species of Treason, when the Intention of doing it, according to some modern Doctrines, was High Treason within the first Clause of the Act, viz. Imagining the Death of the King. This Opinion likewise seems to be confirmed by two Acts of Parliament, one in^b Queen Elizabeth's Time, and one in King Charles the Second's, where consulting or intending to levy a War or raise a Rebellion, is made High Treason during the Lives of them two respective Princes, for which Temporary Provision there would be no Reason if the Law were so before. I know what ^a Coke's Instit. Ch. 1. p. 9, and 10. Hale's Pleas of the Crown, p. 13.

^b 1 Eliz. Ch. 1. 13 Car. II. Ch.

hath been said to some Part of this Matter, that the levying of War meant in the Statute of 25 of Edward the Third, was not meant of such a Rebellion as was levell'd against the King's Person, Crown, Title, or Government; but of such public Commotions as disturbed the Peace of the Kingdom, as the pulling down of Inclosures, which was the Case in Queen Elizabeth's Time, or of pulling down Bawdy-Houses, which was the Case in Charles the Second's Time: But to shew how unnatural a Construction of the Words Lever le Guerre, it is to say, that it relates only to such riotous Commotions as I have mention'd. Give me leave, my Lord, to make but one Observation. The Statute of Treasons is penned in the French of that Age, and the Words of the Statute Lever le Guerre against the King, I have here within the Reach, in Court, a Book of very great Note and good Authority, it is the History of Froissart, who writes the History of England, France, and Spain, from the Year 1326, to the Year 1340, and dedicates his Book to that very King, viz. Edward the Third, in whose Reign the Statute of Treasons was made, and in this whole Book, Lever le Guerre, is constantly mentioned to denote a public stated War; and in this Sense, it is likewise taken by Du Fresne in his Glossary, Vol. II. pag. 255. — I only hint this Matter to your Lordship, for I well know what Determinations, my Lords, the Judges have of late Years given upon this Objection; but I humbly hope that there will be no Occasion for an intire Dependence upon this Objection, in this Case, for that I hope it will appear both to your Lordship, and the Jury, that no such Overt-Act, as is said in the Indictment, that is, publishing the Pretender's Declaration at the Green Man, is at all proved.

The Evidence given touching that Matter is only by Mr. Lynch, and he gives an Account that the Prisoner and he met at Aldgate, in order to go to the House of my Lord North and Grey at or near Epping: In the Course of their Journey thither finding themselves too late to be at my Lord North's by Dinner; they called in at the Green Man, and there got a Beef-Stake: And before it was brought up the Prisoner gave Mr. Lynch a Paper, which Mr. Lynch, and not the Prisoner, calls the Pretender's Declaration; Mr. Lynch reads only one Paragraph in it, whereby, as he says, the Soldier's were tempted to be allured from his Majesty's Service; this is the whole Evidence given touching any Offence committed in the County of Essex: For as to any reasonable Discourse between Aldgate, and the Green Man; they cannot in Justice, and without a particular Proof to that Purpose, be charged upon the Prisoner to be done in Essex, a great Part of the Way, viz. from Aldgate to Bow-Bridge, being in Middlesex, and not in the County of Essex.

In the first Place therefore, Gentlemen of the Jury, we hope there is no Evidence to convince you that any such Declaration was published at all; and yet, Secondly, If there was a Paper read there, the Paper read was not an Act of High Treason. The Time that the Prisoner and Mr. Lynch staid at the Green Man, seems to be very short, their Stay was so short that there was no Evidence that their Horses were put up: The Beef-Stake was bespoke before they went into a Room. Mr. Lynch came down twice out of the Room; he himself admits once, besides his gaping at some Persons in the Yard whom he knew, before the Beef-Stake was brought up; and yet, before the Beef-Stake was brought up, this Declaration is pretended to be published: For my part, considering how little Time there was for such a Transaction as this is, I cannot think, there could be any such Thing as that transacted at that Time, the Compass of Time would hardly allow it; whatever was done, is admitted on all Hands, to be done before the Beef-Stake was brought up, and the other Incidents may very well be supposed to take up all the Time betwixt the bespeaking and dishing up the Beef-Stake, so there could be no Time for so solemn an Act as publishing a Declaration to overturn Three Kingdoms. But in the second Place, if the Prisoner, which I don't admit, did give Mr. Lynch any Paper to read, a Paragraph whereof was to the Purpose Mr. Lynch relates; yet such Paper cannot be imputed to the Prisoner as an Act of High Treason, there was but a few Lines of the Paper read, and the rest were not read at all, either by Mr. Lynch, or the Prisoner; and I never knew that Part of a Deed or Writing was ever allowed to be given in Evidence, without producing or reading the whole. In the Case of my Lord Russel, where the Declaration for Rebellion was assigned as an Act of High-Treason, the whole Declaration was proved to be read, and not a Part only; and yet even that Evidence was upon the Revolution in the first Year of King William and Queen Mary, look'd upon so imperfect an Evidence of High Treason, that for that, and other Reasons, my Lord Russel's Attainder was revers'd; we have a Copy of the Act of Parliament for the Reversal here attested, and we are ready to produce it if your Lordship thinks fit. — Can it be said that the Prisoner giving Mr. Lynch a Paper, of which he reads only a few Lines, and then the Prisoner takes it up again, is a publishing of a Treasonable Paper, or in Truth, a publishing of any Paper at all? Declarations for Rebellions are commonly published in public Places, to captivate Multitudes, and not handed from one Man to another when they are expecting a Beef-Stake; there was no appointed or solemn Meeting at the Green Man; no Concourse of People there, neither in truth, by Mr. Lynch's own Evidence can it be taken to be a real Declaration; for he says, as I remember, in that Paper it was mentioned that the Lord Cadogan was in Custody; that Fact is utterly false, his Lordship neither was, nor is so.

I must submit to the Consideration of my Lords the Judges, and the Jury, of how dangerous a Consequence, Constructions of this Nature may prove to be. Before the Statute of Treasons, the People of England labour'd under vast Mischiefs by the great Incertainty there was of what was High Treason, and what was not; the Parliament thereupon, to ease the People of that Perplexity, in the 25th of Edward the Third, passed the Law of Treasons, for which the People then paid a great Sum of Money; and for which that Parliament was called Blessed (Parliamentum beatum) and now if every Act a Man doth, though perhaps tending to Sedition, shall be interpreted to be an Overt-Act of High Treason, the Subject will labour under the same Inconvenience, and under the same Perplexities, as they were before the Statutes of Treasons; this this Practice may be so far improved, that if a Man delivers a Seditious Ballad to another to be read, that shall be interpreted an Overt-Act of High Treason, much more if People in their Cups should drink such Healths, as were said to be drunk at my Lord North and Grey's House; for no Man can deny but that Bibere est agere, whatever Scribere is: This, my Lord, is all that occurs to me at present concerning the Charge of High Treason upon the Prisoner within the County of Essex; and if there be no Charge made out against him there, the Evidence given against him, of what he did or said elsewhere must go for nothing.

Mr. Ketelbey. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I likewise appear here as Counsel for the Prisoner, who having pleaded Not Guilty to this Indictment, I must suppose him so 'till he be found otherwise; and 'tis my Duty (being assigned for him by the Court) to lay the Circumstances of his Case before you in as true and clear a Light as I can, and to offer to your Consideration what may occur proper for his Defence, and legally conduce to the clearing his Innocence.

The Charge laid to him is of the highest Nature that the Laws of England know; Crimen læsæ Majestatis; no less than the conspiring and compassing the Death of the King; and as it is an Offence, not capable of any Aggravation, not to be alleviated by any thing that we can offer, we humbly hope your Lordship, and the Gentlemen of the Jury, will expect the strongest Evidence the Nature of the Case admits, such as the Law requires, and is in some Measure proportionable to the Greatness of the Offence.

The Act of Parliament upon which the Prisoner stands indicted, is the 25th of Edward III. It is there said, to make him attainted there must be an Overt-Act, and that Overt-Act must be fully and clearly proved: Et de ceo provablement soit atteint de Overt Fait.

My Lord Coke, in his third Institutes, Fol. 12. in his Comment upon that Act, explains the Word (Provablement) by saying it must be upon direct and manifest Proof, not upon conjectural Presumption, or Inference, or Strains of Wit; It must not be commune Argumentum.

Since that Time, several other Statutes have been made in Favour of the Subject, and for regulating Trials in Cases of High-Treason: Particularly the late Statute 7mo Gulielmi 3tii, which enacts, that there must be two lawful Witnesses to the same Overt-Act; or one of them to one, and the other of them to another Overt-Act of the same Species of Treason: And that no Evidence shall be admitted or given of any Overt-Act that is not expressly laid in the Indictment.

I think we need not, at present, enter into the whole of the Case, or trouble the Court with a long Detail of Circumstances and many Witnesses; but rather chuse to leave that on the Foot Mr. Hungerford hath put it for your Lordship's Consideration.

It must be admitted to us, that if the Prisoner is not Guilty of an Overt-Act, legally proved to be committed in the County of Essex, where the Species of Treason and all the Overt-Acts in the Indictment are laid; though all the other Facts in Middlesex, or at Rome, or any where else, should be never so clearly made out, yet they do fail upon this Indictment, and the Prisoner must be acquitted.

What have they to charge him with such an Overt-Act? Nothing, but the single Evidence of Lynch! He is the only Person that speaks to this Point. — He says, that they set out from Aldgate in Order to ride to my Lord North and Grey's, and alighted at the Green Man; that what Discourse passed between them there was before Dinner: He owns he went down Stairs twice before Dinner, and spent some time in looking out of the Window, to see some Persons with whom he was acquainted; and when the Dinner (which was soon got ready) was brought up, Mr. Layer's Servant came and waited, and no Discourse pass'd there during that time; he tells you, that Mr. Layer pull'd a Paper out of his Pocket, and shew'd it to the Witness; who read Part of it, and that it contain'd treasonable Matter, as laid in the Indictment: This is the Substance of what Lynch swears, I took it, as well as I could, in Writing from his Mouth.

Now my Lord, Is this sufficient to convict this Gentleman of committing an Overt-Act of High-Treason in Essex? A bare pulling a Paper out of his Pocket, and giving it him to read, where such and such a thing is set forth, as by him is call'd a treasonable Declaration!

My Lord, if he had pull'd out of his Pocket the most treasonable Paper that ever was invented, is it any more than publishing a Libel? Is that an Overt-Act of Treason? I will suppose it a Copy of the Pretender's Declaration, or an Original, such a one as was burnt by the Sheriffs of London two Days ago: If a Man had that, and pull'd it out of his Pocket, and gave it to another to read, is this High Treason? I dare say, if any such Person falls into Mr. Attorney's Hands, he, that always does his Duty to the Crown as he ought, will go no higher than an Information for publishing a Libel; and all this, my Lord, is upon a Supposition that the Facts are true which have been sworn by Lynch: But on the other Hand, there are so many unaccountable Circumstances in the Relation, that an Affair of that Consequence should be transacted in such a Place; in so short a time; upon such an accidental Bait; when one of the Conspirators was either gazing at the Window, or running up or down Stairs the greatest Part of the while, and other Persons were continually going backwards and forwards into the Room, or within hearing of every Word that pass'd there, we think it carries with it such an Air of Improbability, that no reasonable Man can give Credit to it, much less, convict a Person of so great a Crime, upon such Evidence.

But suppose what pass'd at the Green Man (which I am very far from admitting) shou'd be adjudged an Overt-Act of High Treason: How is it prov'd? Only by one Witness; one single Witness to the Fact in this County! The Law requires two Witnesses to convict a Man of High Treason, and that the Jury shou'd be return'd out of that County where the Facts are laid; De Vicineto; Because the Law supposes them more conversant of the Circumstances of a Case which arises in their Neighbourhood: But if the Proof of one Overt-Act in the County where 'tis laid, by one Witness, should be sufficient to let them in to prove other Overt-Acts, in distant Countries, or in foreign Kingdoms, these fundamental Rules of Law would be totally subverted: How is it possible for a Man to provide or defend himself himself against such an Attack? 'Tis springing a Mine upon him! Sudden and unexpected Ruin!

Mr. Attorney won't shew any Precedent, where it ever was allowed to be good, that one Witness might prove the Overt-Act in the County where it is laid, and that then they might give Evidence of Overt-Acts committed in any other County: If your Lordship is of Opinion against us in this Particular, then we must beg leave to go farther, and observe upon the rest of the Witnesses they have called; not only to take off their Credit, but to contradict them in a great measure.

There hath been a great deal of other Evidence given by them, but we must submit it to your Lordship, whether it is material his escaping from the Messenger's House, and his being taken in St. George's Fields; and the Evidence begins to run thin, or else, I believe they would not have troubled the Court to call those Persons to that which is no ways conducive to the Point now in Judgment; if your Lordship is of Opinion with us, that this is not an Overt-Act in Effex, and legally proved, being there is but one Witness, and attended with such Circumstances, then the Matter is at an End; but if your Lordship is of another Opinion, then we must beg leave to go on, and likewise to offer what we have from the Mouth of our Witnesses.

L. C. Just. You must go on, you have mixed your Discourse so that no body knows what to make of it; sometimes though the Facts are clear as to the Overt-Act, you have said as much against, as for, the Improbability and Nature of the thing, in Point of Law, as for the other. I don't see how we shall come at it, unless you go through the Cause.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, in the Observations they have hitherto made, they have mixed Objections as to the Fact, together with some Matters of Law, that seemed to be aimed at, and fixed upon no Point; to which we cannot give any particular Answer; therefore we desire they may go thro' their whole Case, before we reply to any Part of it.

Mr. Hungerford. Since it is your Lordship's Pleasure that we should now go on, I shall proceed to make some Observations upon the rest of the Evidence given against the Prisoner at the Bar out of the County of Effex. The Observations which I shall make will be in the general only, for I cannot descend to all the particular Instances of the Evidence given, having not taken proper Notes for that Purpose; for I depended upon the Insufficiency of the Evidence given touching any Act of High-Treason, being committed in Effex; and I hoped that from that very Circumstance the Prisoner would have been acquitted; but however I know the learned Gentleman who is joined with me, hath taken very exact Notes of the whole Evidence, and therefore what I omit, I am assured he will abundantly supply.

The second Witness produced against the Prisoner, is Mr. Plunkett, whose Evidence I think ought to weight but very little with any Judicature whatsoever; the Prisoner's meeting with this Man was very accidental in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, when they did not know each other, and yet they immediately entered into a Discourse of raising a Rebellion, and overturning two Kingdoms, and that great Secret of knowing who was to be the General; though Mr. Lynch, after long Acquaintance with the Prisoner, could not get it out of him; yet it was communicated to the eminent Witness Mr. Plunkett at the first Interview, with an Addition of mentioning the Names of two very great Men more, the Earl of Strafford, and General Webb, as well-affected to the Undertaking: But that noble Earl's and Great General's Services to their Country are too well known to be blemished by such an incredible Evidence. After some Discourse betwixt the Prisoner and Plunkett about the Undertaking, in which there was an Incident of a Discourse of another Nature, whether the Lutheran Religion were not preferable to the Papish; and after (as Plunkett says) the Prisoner had communicated to him an Intention of invading the Kingdom by some Persons from abroad, the Prisoner, in a very great Fit of Bounty, presents Mr. Plunkett with the Sum of half a Crown. This Relation seems to be so improbable, and in Truth, is delivered (or rather stammered out) in so wretched and incoherent a Manner, that I believe that no one that heard it, believes a Word of it.

The Truth is, the Scheme itself seems rather to be a chimerical Plan of some crazy-pated Politicians, than a solid Project of any Men of Sense, or in their Wits. What Undertaking can there be so improbable, as that laid down by this Scheme, viz. Seizing the General of the Army, seizing the Tower, seizing the Exchange, and seizing the Bank of England; and all this with a Force which do not appear to consist of above three or four Men? And for Money, the Sinews of War, there seems to be no great Stock of that; Plunkett hath about half a Crown at one Time, and half a Guinea at another; for as to the Guinea Jeffreys gave him, it doth not affect the Prisoner. Mr. Lynch indeed, who seems to be a Man of greater Weight, upon his frequent repeating himself to be very uneasy, got about seven or eight Guineas. I mention these Things, Gentlemen of the Jury, to shew how improbable this Part of the Evidence is of it self, and we hope to make it appear to you to be the more so, by the Evidence we shall produce to the Reputation of the Witnesses.

As to the Papers of all Kinds produced as Evidence against the Prisoner, we hope he cannot be affected by them, none of them being proved to be of his Hand-Writing; as to the Arms found in the Prisoner's House, they are no more than what Gentlemen usually have for the Defence of their Family, or their Recreations; and as for his being at Rome, it is admitted that the Evidence is not given as a Fact of High-Treason; so ought not to be considered as any Ingredient in the Prisoner's Guilt: As to the Prisoner's endeavouring to escape, it is no Evidence of the Prisoner's Guilt; I do not enter into the Consideration, whether the Custody of a Messenger is a legal Prison, or no; but there is hardly a Man that is under any Confinement at all, but would willingly escape into Liberty: Besides, the Prisoner hath suffered already for that Offence, if it be one; he hath been put into Irons, and his attempting to escape is the only Reason that is assigned for it.

There was something spoke in the Introduction to this Accusation which was very remarkable, viz. That it was a Design, if it had took Effect, that would have engaged the whole Nation in Blood, and would have destroyed our civil and religious religious Rights : We who are of Counsel for the Prisoner, have as great an Abhorrence of a thing of that Nature as any Men can have : But yet we hope, that Mankind is not to be led away with Shew and Colour, but to be guided by Reason and Matters of Fact. Is it possible that People could have been raised into a Rebellion by a Proclamation which was never published, but by Mr. Lynch's reading two or three Lines of it? And which, by Mr. Lynch's own Evidence (which I forgot to remark before) was imperfect; for he says, that the Prisoner told him, he intended to put it in the Pretender's Name, which it seems was not then done; and therefore what was produced, was at the utmost an imperfect Piece only—— Or that the Prisoner at the Bar, a Man of a Gentleman-like Family indeed, but of no great Figure or Estate in the World, and having no Dependants or numerous Acquaintance, having no Provision of Men, Arms, or Ammunition, should, with the Assistance only of a Bundle of Papers, and of Mr. Lynch and Plunkett, overturn and enslave this whole Kingdom. God be thanked, the Protestant British Government is not so easily to be brought to Destruction : They might much sooner (and yet I think that very difficult too) have borrowed 100,000*l.* of the Bank of England, upon the blind Notes which they have produced, sent by Sir William Ellis, than have brought about a Revolution, in this Kingdom, with such Materials as they seemed to be possessed of.

These things therefore, my Lord, I urge are Circumstances which render all, or the greatest Part of the Evidence given, very improbable.

I shall close the Whole with two Paragraphs of a Speech made by one of your Lordship's Predecessors, my Lord Chief Justice Scroggs, sitting in the same sacred Seat of Justice, where your Lordship now sits; the Words are these :

If once our Courts of Justice come to be aw'd or sway'd by vulgar Noise, and if Judges and Juries should manage themselves so as would best comply with the Humour of the Times, 'tis falsly said that Men are tried for their Lives or Fortunes; they live by Chance, and enjoy what they have as the Wind blows, and with the same Certainty.

Let us pursue the Plot a God's Name, and not baulk any thing where there is Danger or Suspicion upon reasonable Grounds; but not so over-do it, as to shew our Zeal, we will pretend to find what is not; nor stretch one thing beyond what it will bear, to reach another.

Mr. Ketelbey. I must beg leave to go on where I left off with Lynch's Evidence.

All Plunkett's faith was in Middlesex, but whether he is a credible Witness, you will hear by and by. I cannot but take Notice of one thing which is unaccountable in his Evidence, and renders it impossible to be true: He gives you an Account of a Letter which he receiv'd about ten Weeks ago; he's very positive as to the Words of the Letter, I asked him over and over again to it, he repeats it as such; when we examined him farther, it appears that he could neither write nor read; and how he came to remember so perfectly, when he could not write nor read himself, is very strange. Why, saith he, it was read over to me twice, and we have heard him repeat it three Times; and I appeal to the Jury, if any one of them can take upon him to repeat it again with that Exactness the Witness pretends to do.

Is it not equally strange, my Lord, that Jeffreys, a Man of Letters, the first Time he saw him, an ignorant common Serjeant in the Army, should immediately fall into a Discourse with him about a Plot, and raising a Rebellion, as if he had before been intimate with him? So likewise he saith of James Plunkett, the same Day, the first Day he came to him, he came to his own House, and there talked to him about this Affair; as if they had nothing else to talk of but Rebellion against the Government. And I submit it to your Lordship and the Jury, whether it is likely or possible, that any Man of common Sense should subject himself in so dangerous an Affair to another that was an utter Stranger to him: But here he gives you an Account of two several Persons under the same Imprudence, the same Infatuation, James Plunkett, and the Nonjuring Parson. Besides, there is a manifest Contradiction in his Evidence; for, at first he said, that the Nonjuring Parson told him his Name was Jeffreys the first Time he saw him; and afterwards being cross examined, he said, the first time he knew his Name to be so was upon the Receipt of his Letter, and finding the Name so subscribed.

The next Witnesses gave an Account of the seizing the Papers, and then Mrs. Mason. We asked her if those Papers had been seen by any body since she had them, and whether she had shewn them, or any other Papers, to Sir John Meeres, or any of his Servants? She positively denies it and saith they were not.

I don't know whether these Papers were seen by any body, for we have not one Word of them in our Briefs, and the very producing them is a Surprize to us; but we shall prove, that this Woman shew'd some Papers to Sir John Meeres, or his Man, and that thereupon Notice was given, and the Papers soon after seized. But whether these are they or not, I cannot tell. I observed before upon the Evidence of Mr. Delafaye, Mr. Stanyan and Mr. Doyley; and tho' your Lordship was of Opinion, that it was sufficient to have the Paper called the Scheme read, yet we hope 'tis far from being a conclusive Evidence against the Prisoner, it not being found in his Custody; and we shall produce several who now are, and for many Years have been well acquainted with his Hand-Writing, who will give your Lordship their Thoughts of it. I believe Mr. Attorney would not have endeavoured to call Witnesses that it was sign'd by him, and was his own Hand-Writing, if he had not thought it material; yet we hope that when our Witnesses are heard, no Credit will be given by the Jury to it, as a Fact to charge the Prisoner. We shall give you an Account, if my Instructions are true, that Plunkett, Lynch, and Mrs. Mason, who are the Persons chiefly concerned in the Course of this Evidence, are of so scandalous and vile a Character, that no Regard at all is to be had to their Testimony. The most honest Men may mistake in their Evidence, as Mr. Stanyan is pleas'd to say; if he made any Mistakes, I am satisfied they proceeded from a Defect of Memory, and no

^a Lord Chief Justice Scroggs his Speech the first Day of Michaëmas Term, 1679. Printed that Year.

Design, and he is certainly excusable; but as for the other three, Lynch, Plunkett, and Mason, when you shall have heard half what we have against them, I dare say they will not have the least Credit, though they had given a much more probable Evidence than they have done. But surely as it is, their Evidence cannot have sufficient Weight with you, to prevail against the Life, Estate, and Family of the Gentleman here before you, and to fix a perpetual Stain upon him and his Posterity.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, we shall call our Witnesses, and begin with my Lord North and Grey.

Mr. Att. Gen. We desire to know what it is you call my Lord North and Grey to prove.

Mr. Hungerford. He is to give an Account of what passed at his House, what Mr. Lynch said when he was there.

L. C. Just. Then you do admit that he was at the Green Man, and he went to my Lord North and Grey's afterwards.

Mr. Ketelbey. There is their Sheet-Anchor.

Mr. Hungerford. We admit we were at the Green Man, but committed no High-Treason there; your Lordship hath set us right in the Point of timing our Evidence in the Nature of this Transaction; it is proper to begin with the Master of the Green Man.

Mr. Mackreth, sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Mackreth, pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account, whether Mr. Laver or Mr. Lynch were at your House last Summer, or how long they were there.

Mr. Ketelbey. I think you are Master of the Green Man.

Mackreth. Yes, Sir, upon the Oath I have taken, I don't know that Mr. Laver was ever at my House.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you remember any thing of the Saturday the 25th of August?

Mackreth. No, I can't.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you remember whether you were at Home that Day?

Mackreth. I can't tell: If it was on a Saturday; on Saturday I often attend the Justices at Ilford.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know whether you was at Home that Day?

Mackreth. I cannot tell.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know Mr. Laver?

Mackreth. I never saw him before in my Life, as I know of.

Mr. Ketelbey. Was there never any Enquiry after him at your House?

Mackreth. No: There was the Duke of Grafton and my Lord Hallifax came to my House some time since. The Duke of Grafton intimated something of this Affair; the Duke of Grafton said to me, you are to be hang'd: Hang'd for what, said I. You and your Friend Laver are to be hang'd. Said I, I never saw him in my Life. They walked to and fro in the Hall. What, said they, do you know nothing of this Laver? No, I don't, as I hope to be saved, directly nor indirectly.

Mrs. Mackreth, sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray do you remember any Travellers at your House upon the 25th of August last?

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you remember when Mr. Laver was at your House?

Mrs. Mackreth. I never saw the Gentleman in my Life, as I know of.

Mr. Ketelbey. Are you constantly at Home?

Mrs. Mackreth. Yes, I have hardly time to go to Church.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you ever hear any thing of a Declaration read?

Mrs. Mackreth. I never heard any thing of it in my Days, my Lord.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray do you know the Room one Pair of Stairs forward in your House?

Mrs. Mackreth. They are all forward, my Lord.

Mr. Hungerford. How far is the Bar from the Room?

Mrs. Mackreth. My Bar is below Stairs even with the Stair-Cafe.

Mr. Hungerford. If any thing is read there aloud, in any of those Rooms one Pair of Stairs, could you have heard it?

Mrs. Mackreth. To be sure, my Lord.

John Paulfreeman, sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you remember any thing of this Gentleman being at your Master's House on the 25th of August last?

Paulfreeman. I remember nothing at all of it?

Mr. Hungerford. You remember nothing of it?

Paulfreeman. No; to my Knowledge I never see him before in my Life.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you remember any thing of some People dining there on a Beef-Stake?

Paulfreeman. No; I don't remember any thing of it.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you remember this Gentleman's Face again?

Paulfreeman. No; I don't remember that ever I saw him before.

Mr. Hungerford. Is my Lord North and Grey there?

Mr. Hungerford. We shall examine my Lord North and Grey only as to some Passages at his Lordship's House, and chiefly as to the Character of this Lynch, and what a Character he gave of himself; generally, a Man will give a good Character of himself, but he did otherwise.

Lord North and Grey, sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. If your Lordship pleases to give my Lord and the Jury what Account you have of one Lynch.

Lord North and Grey. My Lord, that Gentleman that goes by the Name of Lynch, I saw twice; he came twice to my House in Essex: I little thought that my having seen him twice at my House, should be the Occasion of my coming here in such a manner. The Gentleman was wholly a Stranger to me, and I have never seen him since. As to my self, I cannot say I know any thing of him personally. The only thing I can say, is what he said of himself. It is a little hard for a Man of Honour to betray Conversation, what passed over a Bottle of Wine in Discourse; but since your Lordship requires it, I must submit.

The chief of our Discourse was—He was represented to me as a Stranger newly come to England, and had a Mind to see my House and Gardens. He was introduced, and brought there accordingly by Mr. Laver, and I received him civilly. In process of Time he told me the History of his Life thus; that he was not a Spanish, but an Irishman, and, my Lord, I think, educated in the Camp under an Uncle of his.

He

He told, that when he was a young Man, he had taken a great many Liberties.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we humbly apprehend, this Evidence is not proper to be given: If they have any particular Questions to ask of my Lord, let the Counsel propose them, or ask my Lord North and Grey to the Character of Mr. Lynch in general: But thus to give an Account (by way of Repetition of a Discourse between Lord North and Grey and Mr. Lynch) where he was born, and where he was bred up, and to give a History of particular Facts, is what they ought not to do.

Lord North and Grey. I am glad to be interrupted by that worthy Gentleman. I only desire to know to what Points you would be pleased to ask me.

L. C. Just. Mr. Hungerford, you know what the Rule of Practice and Evidence is, when objections are made to the Credit and Reputation of the Witness; you can't charge him with particular Offences: For if that were to be allowed, it would be impossible for a Man to defend himself. You are not to examine to the particular Facts to charge the Reputation of any Witness; but only in general you are to ask what his Character and Reputation is.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord North and Grey is an entire Stranger to him; but he was only going to tell you what Account Lynch gave of himself.

L. C. Just. That is very well. Consider, if that is not the same as if you were to charge him with particular Facts. You say, he himself, when he was with that noble Lord at his House, gave a Character of himself much to his Disadvantage. It is impossible for him in such a Case to give an Answer to it; therefore by the Rule of Evidence you cannot do it.

Mr. Ketelbey. If that noble Lord was going to give any Character of him which he heard from other Persons it might alter the Case. But surely when the Character he gives of him is grounded upon what he said of himself, is not that much stronger than the Hearsay of others, the Talk of Strangers? The Character he had of this Person is from himself; therefore we hope he shall give it in Evidence.

Mr. Hungerford. If they won't let this noble Lord enter into a Relation of what Character this Lynch gave of himself, we cannot help it.

L. C. Just. You know, if there be any Objections to him, to his general Character, he can answer them: But if Objections are grounded on particular Charges of his being a base, an infamous and an ill Man, not having any Notice of this, it is impossible for him to defend himself.

If you will ask my Lord North and Grey what general Character he gave of himself, you may.

Mr. Hungerford. If my Brief be true, the whole ten Commandments have been broken by him.

L. C. Just. Very well; and so you charge him with the Breach of the ten Commandments, and he must let it go for Fact, because he cannot have an Opportunity of defending himself.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Character in general did he give of himself to your Lordship?

Lord North and Grey. I don't know how to answer it, as to his giving a general Character of himself. Thus much I must say, I saw him twice. The first time he was brought down by the Gentleman at the Bar; the second time he came, he was ill received; and I ordered it should be told him, that in case he designed to stay there, that I had no Room or any Lodging for him. As to particular Things, I don't care to speak of them. I should be very sorry to say it when it was said in my Company, and under my Roof.

Mr. Hungerford. We will not press it any farther.

Lord North and Grey. I must beg your Lordship's leave, if the Gentlemen have no farther to say to me, and your Lordship have no farther Commands, that I may return to my Prison.

Mr. Hungerford. I hope they will make way for my Lord North and Grey through the Crowd: And, if your Lordship pleases, we will go on with our Evidence.

George Talbot, sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of Mr. Lynch.—— Mr. Stephen Lynch, what Character hath he?

Talbot. Why Sir, the Character I know of him is this, that he is a Man that hath been so extravagant, that he hath brought himself to Necessity by it; kept very infamous Company.

Mr. Hungerford. What Character hath he? Hath he the Character of an honest Man?

Talbot. He hath a very indifferent Sort of a Character.

Mr. Hungerford. Hath he got a good or a bad Character?

Talbot. The Character I can hear of him is a very bad Character.

Mr. Ketelbey. We don't ask you as to the Particulars of his Life and Conversation, but only the General Character he hath, and the Opinion the World hath of him; whether he hath the Character of an honest Man, and is a Person fit to be believed?

Talbot. The Character I have had of him, is, That he is not to be believed.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you known him?

Talbot. I have not seen him these six Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. What is your Employment?

Talbot. I am not able to follow any thing now.

Mr. Att. Gen. He says he hath not seen him these six Years: How long ago was your Acquaintance with him?

Talbot. I met him at the Canaries, when I was coming from thence, which is about six Years ago; I know nothing of him since, but what I have heard of him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you ever had any Dealings with him?

Talbot. I never had much Dealings with him, what I have had have been very little to my Advantage.

Mr. Ketelbey. If Mr. Attorney desires the Particulars——

Mr. Hungerford. We conform ourselves to your Lordship's Rule, to ask only to the general Character of the Man: But if Mr. Attorney will enter into Particulars, we will join Issue with him, and go into that Method too.

Mr. Att. Gen. I asked him how long he had known him, he says he had not seen him these six Years.

Mr. Ketelbey. Have you had a Character of him?

Talbot. The worst I could ever hear of any Person; I know nothing of my self, but what I have heard from others.

Mr. Winckman,

Mr. Winchman sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of this Stephen Lynch?

Winchman. I knew this Gentleman fourteen Years ago, in the Island of the Canaries, there he kept an Irish Gentleman Company, one Wilson; he was then well-belov'd by every Body: The Gentleman took him into his Company, and afterwards he grew extravagant, and the Gentleman turn'd him out of his Company.

Mr. Hungerford. Is he accounted an honest Man or a Knavé?

Winchman. I will not trust him for any Thing.

Mr. Hungerford. You say you won't trust him for any Thing?

Winchman. No.

Mr. Hungerford. The wiser you.

Mr. Ketelbey. Is he a Man to be credited? can you believe what he says?

Winchman. I think I would not believe him.

Mr. Ketelbey. You are right.

James Darcy sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long have you known Mr. Stephen Lynch?

Darcy. About a Twelve-month.

Mr. Ketelbey. I dont ask you as to his particular Life and Conversation, but in general what is his Character, is he a Man to be believed or credited?

Darcy. I don't take it that he is.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did you know him?

Darcy. I first knew him last Winter in London?

Mr. Hungerford. Is Mr. George Fitzgerald there? My Lord, here is a Complaint made that the Witnesses can't be let in.

L. C. Just. They must be let in.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Who made the Complaint?

Mr. Hungerford. A Gentleman here in Court.

Mr. Soll. Gen. It is the Business of your Solicitors to take care that way be made for your Witnesses.

Mr. Hungerford. It is not the Business of your Witnesses to stop the Passage.

Mr. Soll. Gen. They don't stop the Passage.

Mr. Hungerford. No; what is your busy Colonel there [pointing to Col. Huske] a doing?

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. We must stay here half an Hour for every Witnesses.

Mr. Fitzgerald did not appear, then Mr. John Blake was sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Mr. Blake, do you know Stephen Lynch?

Blake. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of him, whether he is a Person to be believ'd or not.

Blake. I heard a very ill Character of him about six Years ago. I have heard that he married two Wives.

Mr. Hungerford. Is he to be believed or no?

Blake. I know nothing but by hearsay, I believe he is not to be believed, because I have heard such a base Character of him.

Collins sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of Stephen Lynch.

Collins. Sir I never exchanged a Word with him.

Mr. Hungerford. What Character hath he?

Collins. A very infamous Character. I know him by Eye-sight only, I have seen him upon the Exchange of London.

Prisoner. Is he a Person to be credited or not?

Collins. No, I believe not.

Mr. French sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know Stephen Lynch?

French. I know him by Eye-sight.

Mr. Hungerford. What Character hath he? is he a Person to be believ'd upon his Oath?

French. I don't think he is.

Mr. Hungerford. How long have you known him?

French. Six or eight Months.

Mr. Kelly and Mr. Blake sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Kelley, how long have you known Stephen Lynch?

Kelley. I believe I have known him since the beginning or middle of April last.

Mr. Ketelbey. What is his Character, is it an honourable Character?

Kelley. I never heard any give him a Character that was not very vile.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Blake, how long have you known Stephen Lynch?

Blake. Sir, I never had any Acquaintance with him, but I have heard he hath a vile Character.

Mr. Hungerford. Have you had any Discourse about this Trial, have you heard any thing said by Lynch himself, about the Matter that is now in Judgment before this Court?

Blake. There was one Mr. French, a particular Acquaintance with Lynch; I met Mr. French, hearing he was of the same Inn with me, (I belong to the Middle Temple) and he told me he wanted Money.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You know what he told you is not Evidence.

Blake. Saith he; there is one Mr. Lynch owes me a good deal of Money, and I want to go and see him, and I have no mind to go there by myself. Next Day I consented to go along with him, as thinking there could be no Danger in that: When we came to him, I suspect, says Mr. Lynch, that you come for some Money that I owe you. Upon that, he desired him to sit down, and told the Gentleman he was sorry he had disappointed him. Then he begun to talk of my Lord North and Grey, and my Lord Orrery, and Mr. Layer I believe I shall hang him; but as to my Lord North and Grey, and my Lord Orrery, I know nothing of them: I know nothing more of Mr. Layer, but what I had from him himself. Some Words pass'd between him and me, and talking of my Lord Townshend, he said my Lord Townshend was of a morose Temper, but my Lord Carteret was of a better Temper.

Mr. Ketelbey. Speak to the Purpose; I desire to know what you can say of Mr. Lynch's Character?

Blake. I don't know any thing of Lynch, but that he is of an infamous Character.

Mr. Ketelbey. What did he say of Mr. Layer?

Blake. He said he would hang him.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did he say any thing about the vileness of the Plot, or why or how far he thought it his Duty to discover such Villany?

Blake. No, I don't know of any such thing. I heard him say, my Circumstances are very poor; and the Motive that induc'd him to do this, was to save the Lives of a thousand People.

Mr. Hungerford. Did he speak any thing of getting Money?

Blake. No, I can't say any such thing.

L. C. Just. That is not a fair Question.

Blake. I can inform your Lordship more: Saith he, I was forced to do this; but if I had got off from this Affair; I would fight any dozen People in London to come off from it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Where do you live, Sir? Do you live in the Middle Temple?

Blake. No; I live at Mrs. Ireland's in Portugal-Street.

Mr. Hungerford. In the Conversation you had with Lynch, was there talk of any Money he was to have?

Mr. Soll. Gen. You ask'd him that Question before, and was told it was not a fair Question.

Mr. Hungerford. I think I did not. Mr. Darcy, what do you know more of Mr. Lynch?

Darcy. Sir, I went to see Mr. Lynch on Account of some Money which I lent him, and when he was taken up in Manchester-Court I went to see him; there he received me civilly, I took him aside and ask'd him for my Money. I told him so freely, and asked him how he got Money and several fine Clothes which he had; he told me a Lady us'd to come twice or thrice a Week to visit him, and this Lady was the Mistress or Daughter of one of the Chief Ministers of England; he said this Woman ———

L. C. Just. You must not put him in this way.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Blake, have you given an Account of the Character of this Lynch? I only ask you the general Character.

Blake. I have told you already.

Prisoner. I have two or three more to the same Purpose.

Terry sworn.

Prisoner. How long have you known Lynch?

Terry. Seven Years.

Prisoner. Hath he the Character of an honest Man?

Terry. He hath the Character of being a loose young Fellow; that is all I know of him.

Prisoner. Is his Character good or bad?

Terry. His Character is loose.

Mr. Hamilton sworn.

Prisoner. Do you know this Stephen Lynch?

Hamilton. Yes.

Prisoner. What Character is he of; is he to be believed?

Hamilton. No, I believe not; I was cautious of keeping him Company; I believe him to be of a vile infamous Character, that will do or swear any thing.

Mr. Hungerford. We leave the Character of this Lynch here, with the Weight of the Blemishes charg'd upon him by our Witnesses, to the Consideration of the Jury.

There is another of the Witnesses, Mr. Plunkett, to whose Character we shall likewise examine. We shall call a Witness or two to that matter, and then we shall close.

Mr. Thomas Brown sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know Plunkett?

Brown. Yes, I have known him these ten Years.

Mr. Ketelbey. What is his general Character?

Brown. He hath but an indifferent Character.

Mr. Ketelbey. Is he a Man to be believ'd?

Brown. No, my Lord, I don't believe he is.

Mr. Keating sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Have you known Mr. Plunkett, and how long?

Keating. I never had any Knowledge of him before the beginning of July last.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Character and Reputation hath he? Hath he a good or an ill Character?

Keating. I will tell you: About the Beginning of July last a Man that owed me some Money on a Note of his Hand ———

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we must oppose the going into Particulars; they know they are confined to examine as to his general Character only.

Mr. Hungerford. But if the Gentleman will follow some of your Examples, and introduce himself by Prefaces, we can't help it.

L. C. Just. To a general Question you must give a general Answer.

Keating. The Knowledge I have had of him, I never knew any thing tolerable in his favour; I never heard a good Character of him.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you ever hear a bad one?

Keating. Yes, a very bad one, that he was a drunken idle Fellow, always kept Company with other Women.

Mr. Ketelbey. And from the Character you have had of him, do you think there is any credit to be given to him?

Keating. No, I don't think there is.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, here we produce a Man of Quality, Sir Daniel O Carroll.

Sir Daniel O Carroll sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know Plunkett?

Sir Daniel. Yes, Sir, I do.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray what is his general Character?

Sir Daniel. I can give no good one of him; for it is a mighty bad Character he hath; he caus'd his Colonel to be brought to Town to be examin'd ———

Mr. Ketelbey. I only ask you in general; don't enter into the Particulars: I only ask in general, from the Character he hath in the World, do you look upon him as a competent Witness to be believ'd against another Man.

Sir Daniel. I would not take his Evidence to hang a Dog.

Mr. Hungerford. And here he attempts to hang a Protestant!

Mr. Thomas Spelman.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know this Plunkett, and how long have you known him?

Spelman. I have known him seven or eight Years.

Mr. Ketelbey. What is his general Character in his Life and Conversation?

Spelman. I never knew any ill done by him.

Mr. Ketelbey. What is his Character?

Spelman. I can't give any Character of a Man I don't know. All I know of him, is about a Dispute between him and Sir Daniel Carroll about a Horse, and his desiring the Lawyer to sue Sir Daniel.

Mr. Hungerford. Did he not say something before that?

Spelman. He said, the Lawyer he employ'd would do him Justice.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say you don't know any ill Character of him.

Spelman. No, I don't.

Edward Barnwell sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. Do you know this Plunkett, what is his Character?

Barnwell. Pray let me tell you, I have been examin'd twice upon this Account. The first time that I brought Plunkett to be acquainted with Mr. Layer, Mr. Layer's Man brought me word and said, Mr. Layer had his Goods seized wrongfully; upon that I sent Plunkett to the Savoy, to have two Soldiers from thence; and I said, go to Mr. Layer's House, there are some Bailiffs that have wrongfully seized his Goods, you must go and turn them out. He did go with the Soldiers, and turned the Bailiffs out of the House; upon which Mr. Layer gave him half a Crown: After this Mr. Plunkett had no Friend but me; and he came and press'd me, and desired me to apply to Sir Daniel Carroll, for some Money he said he owed him for a Horse. I told him I thought it was wrong to press Sir Daniel upon that Account.

Then about eight Months ago he came to me, and said he had met Mr. Layer in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and that Mr. Layer did not know him; I told him, says he, I am one of those that serv'd him at such a time, and that he had given me half a Crown, and that then Mr. Layer remember'd him. This is all I know; I'm sworn, and will tell the Truth.

Mr. Hungerford. Is he a Man as may be believ'd, even upon his Oath, or not?

Barnwell. I must tell you, that I found him in so many Mistakes about his own Wife, that, by God, I would not take his Word for a Half-penny.

Mr. Hungerford. This contradicts what Mr. Plunkett says pass'd between him and Mr. Layer in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, with respect to the giving him Half a Crown, it seems to be for former Service.

L. C. Just. How doth it? I'm to learn again. Plunkett swore, that he came with him under a Gate-way, and there, after he had talk'd with him, he gave him Half a Crown. This Gentleman owns he gave it to him for the Service he had done at some distance of Time before.

Mr. Hungerford. Go on, but don't swear by God any more.

Barnwell. I am a Soldier, a Man of Honour, of eighty Years of Age, and would not do an ill thing for the World.

Gentlemen, as I have been sent for by the Ministry, and examin'd in the Council, it hath been said, Mr. Plunkett hath made me write a Letter to his own Captain; and these Men were obliged to give in Bail, and he would pay for the Charges.

Mr. Ketelbey. What did Mr. Plunkett say to you, in relation to what pass'd between you and Mr. Layer?

Barnwell. He told me Mr. Layer gave him Half a Crown, in kindness for the Service he had formerly done him, in turning the Officers out of his House.

Mr. Matthew Phylips sworn.

Prisoner. Do you know Plunkett?

Phylips. Yes.

Prisoner. What Character hath he?

Phylips. I think, by what I have known by him, he is not to be believ'd.

Prisoner. Is that his general Character?

Phylips. It is, that every body gives him that knows him.

Alexander Phylips sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know Plunkett?

Al. Phylips. Yes.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long have you known him?

Al. Phylips. I have known him about eleven Weeks.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Character hath he?

L. C. Just. I never heard the like; when you give the Character of a Man, you give that Character by Men that have not known him above eleven or twelve Weeks.

Mr. Hungerford. Have you ever had any Dealings with him?

Phylips. No, not I, but my Uncle hath.

L. C. Just. Most of your Witnesses have known him but a little time, seven Weeks, eight Weeks, eleven Weeks, &c. It would almost make a Man suspect, that some People have been set up on purpose to give an ill Character of these People on this Occasion. To talk of seven or eight Weeks Acquaintance?

Mr. Hungerford. That Man is crouded in I don't know how, but Sir Daniel Carroll is tumbled about and cannot get out; Sir Daniel is a Gentleman of Merit, and as such hath been distinguish'd by the Government, and ought to be treated a little better.

Patrick Mabone sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Character hath Mr. Plunkett?

Mabone. I have known Mr. Plunkett several Years, and that he was an idle broken Man, and a great Liar, and not to be believ'd.

Mr. Hungerford. He would lye before and behind, I think you say?

Mabone. Yes, he did.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you think he is to be credited, if he comes to give Testimony against a Person?

Mabone. Upon my Word I think he is not, by what he told me; because I have found him to lye backwards and forwards.

Mrs. Cbild sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mrs. Cbild, pray have you had any Discourse lately with Mr. Plunkett the Sergeant?

Mrs. Cbild. I never had any Discourse with him but that Day my Husband was confin'd, when I run to look for Mr. Plunkett's Wife, and Plunkett's Wife was not at home, but was gone to see her Husband at the Messenger's; I went thither; Mr. Plunkett hearing I was at the Door, he desired that I should come in. Saith he, Mrs. Cbild, how comes it that your Husband doth not come to see me? You know, says I, upon what Account my Husband absents himself. Why, he is not taken up yet? Yes, says I, he is, and confin'd upon your Account. He takes me by the Hand, he takes me into the Coal-Hole, and take notice what I say to you, and get to your Husband and tell him quickly. And he told me, that he took my Husband to a Lawyer that was going to pay off the 18 l. that Sir Daniel Carroll owed him, and the Lawyer would not see him, and so they came away together.

Mr. Att.

Mr. Att. Gen. She speaks much to the Purpose: For she confirms what Mr. Plunkett swore.

Mr. Ketelbey. What did Plunkett say?

Mrs. Child. He said, he was going to get a Settlement for Life.

Mr. Ketelbey. What was he to get a Settlement for?

Mrs. Child. For what he said of Mr. Layer; a Story he had told me of my Husband.

L. C. Just. You have called a great many Witnesses to the Disreputation of Lynch and Plunkett, to say they have generally ill Characters, and are vile infamous Fellows, and not to be believ'd; and there is the Substance of all your Evidence if you stay here till to-morrow morning.

Alice Dunn sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know what Character Plunkett hath?

Alice Dunn. His Character I had from himself, that he liv'd with another Man's Wife.

Mr. Ketelbey. Hath he a good or bad Character?

Alice Dunn. He hath a bad Character.

Mr. Ketelbey. Is he to be believ'd?

Alice Dunn. No, he is not to be believ'd.

John Richmond sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Here, Richmond, have you seen Plunkett lately?

Richmond. No.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long is it ago since you saw him?

Richmond. About three Weeks ago and more.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Discourse had you with Plunkett at that time when you saw him?

Richmond. Plunkett ask'd me if I was a Servant of Mr. Layer's? I said, I was; and in discourse I ask'd him if he had ever receiv'd any Money of Mr. Layer for the Use of the Pretender? He kneeled down upon his Knees, and struck himself upon his Breast, and said, he never had receiv'd any Money of Mr. Layer for the Use of the Pretender in his Life-time.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long is this? Is it three Weeks?

Richmond. I believe 'tis about six Weeks ago.

Mr. Ketelbey. Who was present besides you?

Richmond. There was no body else in the Room.

L. C. Just. I would be glad to know, that he never receiv'd any Money for the Use of the Pretender, What do you mean by that?

Richmond. He kneeled down upon his Knees, and said, he wish'd he might be damn'd if ever he received any Money for the Use of the Pretender.

Mr. Hungerford. Your Lordship may remember Plunkett swore, that Layer gave him Half a Crown at one time, and other Money at several other times; and now he solemnly swears upon his bended Knees that he never received any Money for the Use of the Pretender, that is, upon his Account.

L. C. Just. When you are drawing Consequences from the Expressions, consider what those Expressions are: He solemnly protested that he never received any Money for the Use of the Pretender. It doth not appear that he did; nor did he say that he did. Well, go on.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, we will leave it here as to Plunkett: We will beg leave to call some Witnesses as to Mrs. Mason's Character.

Mrs. Clayton sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know Mrs. Mason, or Mrs. Buda, or Mrs. Herbert, or what do you call her?

Mrs. Clayton. I know her by all those Names: Buda is the Name she always used to go by; she hath gone by the Name of Mason, and Bevan, and Herbert.

Mr. Ketelbey. What is her Character and Reputation?

Mrs. Clayton. Very indifferent.

Mr. Ketelbey. Is it bad or good?

Mrs. Clayton. Very bad.

Mr. Ketelbey. Have you had any talk with her at any time about Sir John Meers and his Man Thomas?

Mrs. Clayton. I have heard her say that —

Mr. Soll. Gen. They are asking what the Witness hath heard Mrs. Mason say at any time about Sir John Meers and his Man, which being to a particular Fact, surely is not a proper Question.

Mr. Hungerford. What have you heard her say about any Papers?

Mrs. Clayton. I see her have a printed Book; I used to go often where Mrs. Mason lodged; and going one Day there, I saw a Gentleman sitting, which was Mr. Layer: He had sent a Porter for Mrs. Mason. When she came, says he, the Parliament Man I was speaking of is not provided of the 300 l. I have a good Mind to lend it him.

Mr. Hungerford. Pray how does Mrs. Mason get her living?

Mrs. Clayton. By deluding young Women, and carrying them about for Money.

Mr. Hungerford. That is to say a Bawd; is it not?

Mrs. Clayton. Yes.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you hear of any Rewards she was to have by coming here?

Mrs. Clayton. She said she was to be paid, or else she would not do it.

L. C. Just. What do you mean? You have been so often admonish'd by the Court; but it signifies nothing. You are charging Mrs. Mason with being a Bawd, when you ought only to enquire as to her general Character.

Mr. Ketelbey. I ask'd you generally the Question, whether she had a good or a bad Character?

Mrs. Clayton. I did answer that Question.

L. C. Just. At this rate the most innocent Persons may be branded as the most infamous Villains; and it is impossible for them to defend themselves.

Mrs. Peirce sworn.

Mr. Hungerford. What do you know of this Mrs. Mason?

Mrs. Peirce. I know I lodg'd in the House where she did lodge.

Mr. Hungerford. What Character hath she? a good one or a bad one?

Mrs. Peirce. A very indifferent one.

Prisoner. Is she to be believ'd or credited?

Mrs. Peirce. No, she is not to be credited.

Mr. Hungerford. Had she a good Reputation or an infamous one?

Mrs.

Mrs. Peirce. She hath a bad Reputation.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. You have seen Mr. Layer there ?

Mrs. Peirce. Yes.

Mrs. Wilkinson sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you know this Mrs. Mason ?

Mrs. Wilkinson. I don't know Mrs. Mason ; but I know Mrs. Bevan.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Character hath she ?

Mrs. Wilkinson. I know her to be a vile Woman, and doth not care what she says, or what she doth.

Mr. Ketelbey. Is that her general Character ?

Mrs. Wilkinson. Always since I have known her.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long is that ?

Mrs. Wilkinson. About two Years.

Mr. Dyer sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Mr. Dyer, do you know Mrs. Mason ?

Dyer. I know one Bevan.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long have you known her ?

Dyer. She lived with me thirteen or fourteen Years ago.

Mr. Ketelbey. What was her Character then ?

Dyer. She robbed my Shop, and I sent her to Bridewell.

Mr. Ketelbey. What is her Character and Reputation now ?

L. C. Just. I desire you to forbear this irregular Practice.

Mr. Hungerford. Is this Woman to be credited or not ?

Dyer. I know nothing of that.

Mrs. Baskett sworn.

Prisoner. Had you any Discourse with Mrs. Mason ?

Mrs. Baskett. No, Sir, I don't know her.

Prisoner. Had you any Discourse with her ?

Mrs. Baskett. I don't know her.

Prisoner. Nor Mrs. Buda ?

Mrs. Baskett. No, I don't know her.

Prisoner. Nor Mrs. Bevan ?

Mrs. Baskett. I don't know her at all.

Prisoner. Do you know Mr. Lynch ? Have you seen him lately ?

Mrs. Baskett. I saw him last Night.

Prisoner. Did you hear him say what Reward he was to have for swearing against me ?

L. C. Just. That must not be.

Prisoner. Did you not hear him say he was to have 500 l. for swearing against me ?

L. C. Just. We have a Compassion for you, and therefore bear this from you, which we would not from any body else.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, this is not to be endured. The Prisoner turns about to the Jury, and tells them that Lynch said he was to have 500 l. a Year.

Mr. Hungerford. I believe the Gentleman that sat next to him did not hear him.

Mr. Wearg. My Lord, I did hear him say to the Jury that Lynch said he was to have 500 l. a Year.

L. C. Just. I must tell you, if you did but consider of what little Consequence it would be to you, you would not do it: When you thought fit to make him your Confident, carry him to the Green Man with you, and to my Lord North and Grey's ; and there he was entertained courteously by him ; and do you come now to brand him with being an ill Man ?

Prisoner. Lynch says himself that he did not know me till June last ; and how could I have so much Friendship for him on so short an Acquaintance ?

L. C. Just. Then for this Woman, if you would do Service to yourself, prove the Packets are not under your Seal, and that you did not deliver them to her with your own Hand ; prove something of that, and these Proofs will be of more Service to you than ten thousand of these Witnesses.

Prisoner. My Lord, if I was admitted to prove, I can make it appear it is all a Sham and a Forgery.

Mr. Hungerford. It was never proved to be his Seal.

L. C. Just. You are mistaken : The Woman swore it was his Seal, and the Officers swore they were under the Seals when they seized them ; and it is proved now to be his Seal, for the Seal is visible.

Prisoner. How do they prove it to be my Seal ? My Lord, it is not my Seal. I desire Major Barnwell may be asked as to this Woman's Character.

Maj. Barnwell. I know her : She is a vile Woman ; she had like to have cheated me of 1500 l.

Prisoner. You are only asked as to her Character in general. Is she a Woman to be credited, or not ?

Maj. Barnwell. No, she is not.

Mr. Ketelbey. I hope you are satisfied with this general Answer.

Mr. Hungerford. They won't let us go into Particulars ; that the Course of Practice won't allow.

Mr. Ketelbey. It is impossible for us to direct the Answers to the Questions.

Mr. Lebatt sworn.

Prisoner. Mr. Lebatt, pray give my Lord and the Jury a general Account of this Mrs. Buda, or Mrs. Mason, whether she ought to be credited or not, or gain Credit.

Lebatt. No: She would take any body's Life away for the Value of a Farthing.

Mr. Hungerford. Now, my Lord, we will close our Evidence as to the Character of these Witnesses against the Prisoner at the Bar : We hope we have proved their Characters to be so infamous, as no Jury upon Earth will believe them. Here is this to be observed——

Prisoner. I beg Pardon ; here is a mighty Talk of my Arms : I am so fortunate as to have a Person here that will give you an Account of them, and how they came to be brought thither.

Mr. Bowers sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Trade are you of ?

Bowers. A Gunsmith.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you make any Fuzees ?

Prisoner. No ; pray let me ask him : Pray give my Lord and the Jury an Account of a Blunderbus, a Fuzee, a Carbine, and Pistols ; what what you know of them. Did not you owe me six Pound on a Note under your Hand?

Bowers. My Lord, about five or six Months ago, Mr. Layer had a Law Suit for me: I sold him a Pair of Pistols, and a little after I sold him another Pair. Mr. Layer had them for a Debt: He had in his House two Guns. I promised Mr. Bennet a Gun when the Cause was over, instead of Money. I gave him one of those Guns: There is another Gun, and a Musket which Mr. Layer had of me.

Mr. Layer had a Note of mine for six Pound, which I owed him: I importuned him to take a Carbine for a Man to ride with, and a Blunderbuss for his House, in order to set off this Debt; and I brought him them when he was going into the Country: I brought him some Powder, and I brought him three Dozen and a half of Cartridges.

Prisoner. Did I order you to bring them, or did you bring them of your own Head?

Bowers. You bid me bring a dozen and a half, or two dozen; and I brought three dozen and a half: The Reason was, that I might shorten my own Debt.

Mr. Raynbam, sworn.

Prisoner. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of the Piece of Arms I had of you, and for what Reason?

Raynbam. I went with him to one Mr. Pritchard's in Friday-Street, there was a Musket in his Compting-House; he said he would dispose of it: Mr. Layer asked him his Price; he said he would have fifty Shillings for it. Mr. Layer said that was too much; says he, you shall have a Trial of it, and if your Sister carries her Cause against Mr. Watson, you shall give me fifty Shillings for it.

Prisoner. Did he put it on me, or did I desire it?

Raynbam. You asked him what it was worth, and whether he would dispose of it?

Prisoner. Did not he say several times that he wanted to dispose of it, and desired me to take it on those Terms?

Raynbam. Yes: He said on that Condition that your Sister got her Cause you should have it, and gave him fifty Shillings for it.

Mr. Samuel Steward, sworn.

Prisoner. Mr. Steward, only give my Lord and the Jury an Account whether or no I was not intrusted with Things of great Value, and what Occasion I might have for a few Arms; whether you don't know of Money put out on Mortgages?

Steward. Yes, to the Value of thirty or forty thousand Pounds within these two Years.

Prisoner. Don't you think it reasonable as to these Arms, that I should have them in my House to guard my House?

Steward. I thought it very reasonable.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, we have done with examining of Witnesses, to the Credit of the Witnesses produced against the Prisoner; and leave that Matter to the Consideration of the Jury.

Mr. Ketelbey. Pray Mr. Steward, do you look upon that Paper they call a Scheme, with a French Motto upon it. Before you look upon that Paper,

I ask you if you are acquainted with the Hand-writing of Mr. Layer?

Steward. Yes, very well.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long have you been acquainted with his Hand-writing?

Steward. Two Years and an half.

Mr. Ketelbey. Have you at any time seen him write?

Steward. Yes, a thousand times.

Mr. Ketelbey. Do you believe that to be his Hand?

Steward. I do not believe it to be his Hand.

Prisoner. Is it like the Character I write?

Steward. Not at all: You write a shorter Character; this is a long one.

Mr. Bennet, sworn.

Mr. Ketelbey. Have you been acquainted with the Hand-writing of Mr. Layer?

Bennet. I have been very well acquainted with the Hand-writing of Mr. Layer.

Mr. Ketelbey. You have seen him write?

Bennet. Very often, a thousand and a thousand times.

Mr. Ketelbey. Look upon that Paper: See if you believe that to be his Hand-writing?

Bennet. No, my Lord, I do not believe that to be his Hand-writing: I never saw him write a Hand like it in my Life. I don't think it to be his own Hand-writing at all; I never saw him write such a Hand as this.

Mr. Att. Gen. Shew him that Paper: [which was a Paper seized among the Prisoner's Papers in the great Bundle.] Look on that Paper, and give my Lord and the Jury an Account if you know whose Hand-writing it is.

Bennet. I believe it is my own Hand-writing.

Mr. Att. Gen. By whose Direction did you write it?

Bennet. By Mr. Layer's Direction.

Mr. Att. Gen. For what Purpose was it writ?

Bennet. I can't remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you write this for Mr. Layer?

Bennet. I believe I did; but I can't tell what particular Reason I writ it for.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, my Lord, here is one of the Papers that were found in the Bundle, in which the Lists were found, proved to be writ by Mr. Layer's Clerk by his Direction.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. He is positive as to its not being his Master's Hand-writing; yet as to his own, he owns it.

Cl. of the Cr. It is a List of Names.

Mr. Ketelbey. Before you read it, what did he say?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he said it was his Hand.

Cl. of the Cr. It is part of a Jury between Layer and one Watson.

Mr. Att. Gen. This was found amongst his Papers that were sealed up. It was taken in that Bundle where the Lists were.

Mr. Ketelbey. We submit it to your Lordship and the Jury: We apprehend we have proved this Scheme not to belong to Mr. Layer; We have called two Witnesses that have known him many Years, and have seen him write a great great many times, and that they verily believe it not to be his Hand-writing. We don't know how it is possible to leave it on a better Foot. Therefore, my Lord, we shall leave it to your Lordship's Direction, and the Consideration of the Jury.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, all that I would now observe is, that this Gentleman is indicted for High-Treason. The main of the Charge against him is, that he was concerned in designing to raise an Insurrection. How that appears to be proved, I have spoke to already; but this must be allowed, that whatsoever Desolation and ill Consequences might now have ensu'd, there hath been no Blood shed, no Armies raised, or Invasions attempted: And I think upon such an Evidence that comes not up to the Charge in the Indictment, the Blood of this Gentleman ought not to be reached: At least we humbly hope it shall not.

Prisoner. My Lord, as to Lynch, it appears our going down into Essex was merely accidental: When we came to the Green Man, we did not stay there three Quarters of an Hour; and he says we went down twice in the Time. All this mighty Business, this publishing a Declaration, talking of an Insurrection, which is the Treason, and laid as an Overt-Act in Essex; all this was done before Dinner by his own owning. It was not three Quarters of an Hour from the Time we went in, till the Time we came out. We went on to my Lord North and Grey's; and when he was there, he is asked, if there was any Discourse there about any such Design? He says there was nothing said of it there. Is it possible when such a Design was on foot, he and I alone should go together to the Green Man, and thoroughly recapitulate the Affair; which when we came to my Lord North and Grey's nothing should be said of it?

When we come to Plunkett, he saith that he became acquainted with me first of all, by reason of some Goods that were seized in a House in Queen-street; that he never saw me till five Years after this in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields. Plunkett did not at first know me: We looking upon one another, then he renewed his Acquaintance with me, and told me of the former Service he had done me; and thereupon I gave him half a Crown, which he said was given him by me to lift Men into the Pretender's Service. He confessed, as I proved by Major Barnewell, that I gave it him for former Service. As to the thirteen Shillings, he was asked whether he did not come to borrow such a Sum of Money of me; he said he did; it was in order to release Major Barnewell out of the Marshalsea. Being asked whether he was not acquainted with Sir Daniel Carroll, and whether there was not some Difference about a Horse in Spain between them, he said there was, and that he came to advise with me whether he could recover the Money of Daniel Carroll. Is it not natural that the Guinea he talks of might be another Man's Money, that was told him by one Jefferys was sent to him by me: He talks to him as to that Guinea, when he comes to be asked whether it was not purely out of Kindness and Charity that I did lend him that Guinea, he doth not deny it, and now would insinuate that it was given him to lift Men for the Pretender. From the Improbability of the Thing, from his own owning, no Person could believe him. I believe there are ninety-nine out of a hundred that cannot believe one Word that either Lynch or Plunkett swore.

Then the next Matter they talk of, the produce a Scheme: How hard and difficult was it to give any Evidence that so it should be read; and I humbly apprehend it did not strictly amount to legal Evidence. Mr. Doyley he said he knew my Hand fourteen or fifteen Years ago, and that he hath received Letters from me about five Years ago, and hath compared this Scheme with those Letters; and therefore he believes it to be my Hand. When he comes to be asked whether he hath those Letters here with which he compared this Scheme? No, I have them not here: Yet chiefly his Belief was that it was my Hand-writing, by comparing these Letters and this Scheme together. This amounts to nothing more, when it comes strictly to be considered, than only a Similitude of Hands, and surely Similitude of Hand with Submission, is not Proof in criminal Cases: And when it amounts to no more, it ought not to be receiv'd.

Here is, say they, a Circumstance that what Lynch and Plunkett swore must be true, because here was a Scheme for an Insurrection. In this very Scheme or Paper, as I took Notice of, not one Man is mentioned by Name in it; only Soldiers to be had here, the Tower to be seized, the Bank and the Exchange to be seized, and the World to be turned upside down; but by whom? There is no Time mentioned, there is no Date to it. This Thing if it be such a Scheme, if it had been written by me, which I absolutely deny that it was writ by me, it doth not appear but that it was written several Years ago. When they come to ask those Gentlemen the Under-Secretaries, if this be so remarkable that they lay the whole stress upon this Paper, whether I acknowledged it to be mine, they could not say I owned it to be mine. One of the Lords lays his Finger on a Paper, and saith, Don't you say this about Arms? Which I deny to be so. How comes it that none of those Lords directly offered the Paper to me, and asked me, Is this your Hand-writing? There was my Lord Chancellor, my Lord Harcourt, and several other Lords present, that very likely would have asked that Question; but either they did not think it material, or they had not the Paper there, or they did not think it of that Consequence, or they knew I would deny it.

When we come to call Witnesses to this Woman, this vile, this infamous Woman, I could shew you she hath been privy to Forgeries. If it was not to take up your Lordship's Time, I could shew that this is a Contrivance between a Gentleman and her; I am very loth to name him, to carry on such a Paper as this to get Money of the Government.

Here have been five or six Witnesses, whose Credit stands unimpeached, who tell you her Word is not to be taken for a Groat. Another says, he would not hang a Dog on her Evidence. This Scheme must come from her: She says, she had two Bundles of Papers that were delivered by me to her sealed up; and she says this Scheme was amongst them; and she can the better swear it, because she hath set her Mark upon upon it. One of the Messengers doth not know whether she was in the Room or no. If this Woman is not to be believed, then all the other Evidence relating to this Paper falls to the Ground. It is a Maxim in Reason as well as Law; take away the Foundation, and the Work must fall.

Gentlemen of the Jury, I would have you to take Notice of this Evidence, and not go away with a mistaken Notion, because here is a vast deal of Talk about the Pretender, going to Rome, lifting of Soldiers for the Pretender's Service, &c. Your Lordship will tell them all that is nothing, unless they believe an Overt-Act to be done in Effex: That is the true State of the Case with humble Submission. Therefore I hope such Evidence as this Evidence of Lynch and Plunkett (but only to confine it to that of Mr. Lynch) hath proved nothing at all against me; and if what he hath sworn doth not affect me, then all the other stands for nothing; that's the true State of the Case. I would not have the Jury think a Man is to be hunted out of his Life by fine Speeches, far-fetched Innuendoes, and the like. You will consider the Character of this Man, that he is not to be believed. I'll leave it to you, and I hope God Almighty will direct you: I ask you no more than Justice. If a Man's Life is to be taken away by such scandalous Evidence as hath appeared against me, there is an End of all your Liberties, your Wives may be taken from you, your Children made Slaves, and all that is valuable to you, your Lives and Estates will be but very precarious.

Mr. Soll. Gen. May it please your Lordship and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard a very long Evidence, and it is my Part, as exactly and faithfully as I can, to sum up to you the Substance of it, and to reply to the Objections which have been made on the Behalf of the Prisoner; as well to such Objections as have been made by the Prisoner himself, and by his Counsel for him, as to those which arise from the Evidence that has come out of the Mouths of his Witnesses: And after I have done this, I doubt not but it will appear to your Satisfaction, that the Evidence which has been given for the King stands unanswered, and is a strong Proof of High-Treason against the Prisoner at the Bar.

Gentlemen, the Treason with which the Prisoner stands charged is compassing and imagining the Death of the King. This high Crime consists in the Imagination of the Heart; but it must be proved and made out against the Offender by Acts which he hath done. The Overt-Acts of this Treason alledged to be done by the Prisoner, are, in the first place, consulting and conspiring to levy War against his Majesty: In the next place, publishing a treasonable Declaration, containing Exhortations, Encouragements, and Promises of Rewards, to stir up the King's Subjects to take Arms, and rise in Rebellion against his Majesty; consulting and conspiring to exalt the Pretender to the Crown of this Realm, and put him in Possession of the Government by armed Force, and Troops to be levied for that Purpose; the actual inlisting and retaining of Men to serve in this Rebellion; and, finally, a Conspiracy to seize and imprison the sacred Person of the King himself.

Gentlemen, the heinous Nature and destructive Tendency of these Facts were fully explained to you in the Opening of the Cause. If they had met with Success, the Event could undoubtedly have been no less than the entire Subversion of our present happy Establishment; and, in consequence of that, the loss of every thing that is dear and valuable to us. For this Reason it was rightly admitted by one of the Counsel for the Prisoner, that the Crime, if proved, is incapable of Aggravation; and being so, although it is impossible to say too much concerning it, yet to say a great deal to you must be unnecessary, because it is equally impossible for the Hearts of Englishmen and Protestants to suggest too little to themselves on so important, so moving an Occasion.

The Evidence which has been given consists of several Parts and different Kinds, every one of which conduces to support and corroborate the other, and taken together, they make up the fullest and most convincing Testimony that can be expected in any Case. In the first Place, living Witnesses were produced to you who were privy to the treasonable Acts and Consultations; in the next Place, several Papers have been read to you, some of them written with the Prisoner's own Hand, but all of them belonging to him; and last of all, you have the Confession of the Prisoner himself proved by two Witnesses.

The first Witness was Mr. Stephen Lynch, who gives you an Account in what manner he was first introduced to the Prisoner at the Bar. He tells you he came into England about April last, and had several Meetings with one Dr. Murphey, who was his old Acquaintance. At these Meetings they had a Discourse relating to the Pretender, and an Attempt to be made for a general Rising in his Favour; and Dr. Murphey having thus disclosed the Secret, told Lynch that if he would be of the Party, he would recommend him to a Gentleman who had a considerable Share in the Management of the Affair. Lynch took Time to deliberate upon it, and in two or three Days after told Murphey he was resolved to be of the Party.

Afterwards in June last, Dr. Murphey carries Lynch to the Prisoner's House, who proposed to them to go to the Griffin-Tavern in Holborne. Thither they went, and the Prisoner soon came to them; and you have heard in what manner Murphey presented Lynch to the Prisoner, as being the Gentleman he had before spoke to him of, and what Proposals were made at that Meeting by the Prisoner to Lynch. That there was to be an Insurrection in the Kingdom in Favour of the Pretender, in which they should be supported by a great many of the Army and the Guards, as well as by several of the Nobility and Gentry; and that he wanted a fit Person to take one of the first Steps in it by seizing the Person of some General, or other great Man.

It may be proper here to take Notice of an Objection which was made to this, which is the very beginning of our Evidence: That Lynch being an absolute Stranger to the Prisoner, it is very extraordinary that the Prisoner should make a Proposal of so dangerous a Nature to him at first Sight. But this is plainly accounted for by by the Witness who, tells you he was intimately acquainted with Dr. Murphey, and Murphey was very intimate with and introduced him to the Prisoner, as a Friend, who might be confided in. Agreeably to this you observe that the first thing the Prisoner accosted Lynch with, was that he had had such strong Recommendations of Lynch, that he was fully satisfied in him.

This Witness goes on to give you an Account that in a Day or two after, in Pursuance of the Directions he had received from the Prisoner, he went to the same Tavern, and sent for the Prisoner. They had some further Conversation about a Rising, and the Inclination which appear'd in the Nation for a Revolution. And now it was that the Prisoner inform'd Lynch that there was a great Man at the Head of this Affair, who neither wanted Wit, Courage, or Resolution, and would at a proper time give Lynch Orders to effect something considerable. At this Meeting the Prisoner particularly engaged Lynch to seize the Earl of Cadogan. The Reason of this Attempt the Witness gives you, that it was in order to discourage the King's Party, and animate the Pretender's. And, Gentlemen, the meaning of this is plain and obvious; for if an Insurrection was begun, what could be more likely to create a Confusion in the Army, and dispose the Soldiers to revolt, which appears to have been a main Part of this Design, than the seizing of their General?

There were several other Meetings both before and after the Prisoner's going into the Country, where the Witness told you he had staid sixteen or seventeen Days. At those Meetings they discours'd concerning the Conspiracy; and at one of them it is remarkable the Prisoner told Lynch, that if they once made a Beginning here, they shou'd want no Assistance from Abroad. And at last Lynch tells you, that he being under Necessities, expressing great Uneasiness at the Delay of the Project, and, as I remember, talking of going beyond Sea, the Prisoner actually advanc'd to him a Sum of Money, no less than eight or ten Guineas at different Times, in order to engage him to stay in England, and to assist in the intended Design of a Revolution. This is one Proof of the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment of lifting Men.

As they had consider'd how to dispose of the General, so it appears they did not neglect the Army; for Lynch acquaints you, that upon Discourse about that, he ask'd what Encouragement they had from the Army; upon which the Prisoner answer'd, that they had great Encouragement from thence, and several Serjeants and common Soldiers had given them Reason to believe they would join them. Lynch being ask'd as to the Time when this Design was to be put in Execution, he told you there was no certain Time fix'd, but the Prisoner inform'd him it was to be at the breaking up of the Camp; and at the same time gave a Reason for it, which is by no Means to be pass'd over, That they could not have so good Opportunities to talk with the Soldiers (that is, to seduce them from their Duty and Allegiance) whilst they were encamped, as in their Quarters. Pursuant to these Consultations, Mr. Layer afterwards told him 'twould be necessary to take a proper time to view my Lord Cadogan's House. The Pretence for going thither was that Layer had a Particular of an Estate which was to be sold to lay before his Lordship. He tells you that in Fact they went to the House, survey'd it, talk'd of the Feasibility of the Attempt, and at that time they also discours'd of seizing the Tower; and the Prisoner told the Witness that the Tower would be immediately surrender'd to the Party on the Day the Plot should be put in Execution; for a certain Officer would take upon him to mount the Guard there that Day, who would facilitate the Delivery of it to them. And the People of the Mint were at the same time to have Arms put into their Hands.

This is a very remarkable Passage, and falls in with the Scheme which was afterwards produced to you in the Prisoner's Hand-Writing.

The next Meeting where any thing pass'd worth repeating to you, was at the Queen's-Head-Tavern in Great Queen-street; and when the Witness came to the Prisoner there, he found one Wilson in Company with him, and another Man, who seem'd by his Cloaths to be a Serjeant of the Guards. The Use to be made of that Fact is, that it is a Circumstance which falls in with the written Scheme; for you observ'd that one George Wilson is there mention'd as the Person who was to manage the Serjeants, and receive Orders from the principal Officer.

At this Meeting Lynch tells you they talk'd over the Business, and drank good Success to the Enterprize. When they parted, he complain'd to the Prisoner of the long Delay. Upon which Mr. Layer told him there was a Nobleman at the Head of the Design, who had full Power and Authority from the Pretender (whom he called King) who would lose no fit Opportunity to put it in Execution. He did not name this Nobleman, but told Lynch that he should be presented to him in due time, and also receive Orders from him to seize my Lord Cadogan.

Gentlemen, it will be very material for you to fix this Circumstance in your Memories, and to connect it with the Evidence which comes afterwards, and what was done in consequence of this Meeting.

For after Layer had thus declared that there was a Nobleman at the Head of the Conspiracy, and Lynch should be presented to him in due Time, then it follows that upon the twenty-fourth of August, the Day the Bishop of Rocheſter was committed to the Tower, which appears by the Evidence to be the Time of their next Meeting, Mr. Layer propos'd to Lynch to ride out to take the Air, which was agreed upon for the next Day.

In that Journey the Prisoner persuaded Lynch to carry Arms, because as he then declared he had that about him which he wou'd not lose for all the World. Upon the Road Layer told Lynch they were to go to my Lord North and Grey's, and when they were got pretty near the Green Man at Layton-Stone in Essex, it was thought to be too late to go on to dine at Lord North and Grey's; and therefore the Prisoner propos'd to stop at the Green Man to take a Dinner.

At this Place the Overt-Acts of High Treason committed in Essex, which we were so much call'd upon to make out do arise. During their stay here the Witness gives you an Account that they dis-coursed of the whole Project of the Insurrection, the Means of effecting it; the Uneasiness that was in the Nation, and in General all the several matters they had consulted of before; and after they had done this he tells you Mr. Layer the Prisoner propos'd to him that detestable and shocking Design of seizing the sacred Person of the King, which he sometimes call'd sending a strong Guard to take Care of — at other times to secure the King's Person.

He tells you farther, that Mr. Layer pull'd out of his Pocket a Manuscript Paper, and deliver'd it to the Witness in part folded down; and he read that Part of it which was left open. That this Paper contain'd a Declaration; with a Recital, that my Lord Cadogan was then actually in their Custody: That there were in it Invitations to the People to Rise in Arms and repair to their Party: Encouragements to the Soldiers to Revolt, with an Offer of Three Guineas to every Horseman and Serjeant, Two Guineas to every Corporal, and One Guinea to every Common Soldier, to be paid immediately on their joining the Party; and a Promise of further Rewards. Lynch acquaints you that the Prisoner talk'd of this Declaration being of his own Composing, and that from the Discourse which pass'd between them, and the Appearance of the Paper, he apprehended it to be of the Prisoner's Hand-Writing.

My Lord, after this Declaration had been thus produced, the Prisoner took it back again, put it into his Pocket, and kept it; and therefore the Paper itself being in his Custody, we were properly admitted to prove the Contents of it by Parol Evidence; and I apprehend if we had no further Proof of these Overt-Acts which were done in Essex, this alone is fully sufficient to maintain the Indictment to be regularly and properly found in that County.

From the Green Man they went on to Epping, to my Lord North and Grey's, with whom it is admitted the Witness was not at all acquainted, and consequently could not of himself have any particular Reason for going thither, but it appears to have been upon the Motion of the Prisoner. When they came to the Lord North and Grey's House, Lynch tells you that the Prisoner introduced him to his Lordship; and this brings back to one's Memory, and makes it impossible not to recollect what the Prisoner had told Lynch at their last Meeting, in time next preceding this Journey, that there was a great Man at the Head of this Design, to whom he should be presented in due time.

Gentlemen, after this Lynch went a second time to my Lord North and Grey's at Epping, and there he found the Prisoner at the Bar; indeed he does not own to you that any thing pass'd between them relating to this Conspiracy in the Presence of my Lord North; but at that Place Lynch, in Conversation with Mr. Layer, express'd an Uneasiness that the Affair was delay'd, but Layer bid him be easy, for it might be done sooner than he expected.

Gentlemen, this is the Substance of the Evidence of what pass'd in Essex. But the Witness tells you he had afterwards several Conversations with Mr. Layer, and when he express'd his Concernment at the Delay of putting the Design in Execution, Layer told him he was so bent upon the Success of it, that rather than it should fail, he would be a second Maffinello: This was represented as a ridiculous Expression by one of the Council for the Prisoner: But we have all heard what Confusions were rais'd by that profligate Fellow in the Kingdom of Naples; and it is plain, that was the Example the Prisoner referr'd to by this Expression.

Mr. Lynch was cross-examin'd by the Counsel for the Prisoner, with as much liberty as they thought fit to use; but I did not observe that his Evidence was at all weaken'd, I think I may say, it was rather confirm'd by it; since it was upon their own Questions he gave his Reasons how Layer came to deal so openly and unguardedly with him at first Sight. And those Reasons were strong; for it is not improbable, if Murphey and Layer were engag'd in a Treasonable Design, that one of them should have confidence in a third Person on so strong a Recommendation from the other.

The next Witness is Matthew Plunkett, and I apprehend, notwithstanding every Thing that hath been said against his Testimony, that it is rather strengthened; as to the Facts sworn by him; than weakened by the Evidence for the Prisoner. He tells you, his first Acquaintance with Mr. Layer was about five Years since, and had its Rise upon this Occasion: The Goods in the House where the Prisoner then lodg'd, being taken in Execution, (whether his own Goods or not, is not at all material) one Major Barnwell, who has been examined for the Prisoner, was employed to procure Persons to rescue those Goods; Barnwell apply'd to this Witness, who got two Grenadiers, that were let in at a private Door by Mr. Layer's Clerk. They did their Work, drove out the Officers, and rescued the Goods; and for this Service Mr. Layer rewards them with a Crown and some Brandy. Since that, it appears he has been employed on other Messages between Major Barnwell and the Prisoner; and in what manner Plunkett is supported in these Circumstances, and by Consequence in the rest of his Testimony, by Major Barnwell himself, who has been produced to discredit him, I shall observe when I come to consider the Evidence for the Prisoner.

But the Witness having given you this Account of the Introduction to the Correspondence, tells you, that in July last, James Plunkett came to him from the Prisoner, enquir'd privately what Acquaintance he had amongst the Soldiers, and desired him to meet the Prisoner at the Italian Coffee-house in Russel-Court; but he did not meet him there, not having Money nor Inclination to go to a Coffee-house. He gives you an Account, that on the Sunday following, returning from St. Andrew's Church, as he was going over Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, Mr. Layer met him. Plunkett had forgotten Layer's Face, by Layer remembred him, and ask'd him if he knew him; to which Plunkett answering that he did not, the Prisoner told him his Name, which made him recollect. Layer then enquired if James Plunkett had not been with the Witness, to desire him to come to the Italian Coffee-House, a few Nights before; and having made himself known by these Circumstances, took Plunkett into a private Place. There they had a long Conversation, in which Layer began with declaring how well assur'd he was of Plunkett's good Affections to the Pretender, and said, he wanted some old Soldiers, such as Plunkett was, that would head and discipline a Mob, for they had other Men enough. Plunkett said he did know several old Soldiers; but he hesitated a little about the Pretender's being a Papist. The Prisoner to take off the Force of that Scruple, answered, We had as good have a Papist for our King as a Lutheran, I don't know what Difference there is between them (that is) between a Papist King and a Protestant one ——— An important Difference! Which I wish with all my Soul, were not too much forgotten, or perhaps, too little valued, by many amongst us, who are not so frank in declaring as the Prisoner.

Mr. Layer proceeded to excite the Witnesses to join in his Treason, by a false Representation of the State of the Nation, and particularly of the Injustice, as he call'd it, which was done to old Soldiers who had served abroad; a Topic most likely to captivate an old Serjeant. After this Preface, he inform'd the Witnesses there was to be an Insurrection, and Plunkett asking who was the Promoter of the Design, told him it was my Lord North and Grey, whom he commended as a fine General; and then he went through a Sort of List of several other Persons of Consideration. The Witnesses have declared that he knew several Soldiers, said, he could procure five and twenty, whereupon Mr. Layer desired he would make a List of their Names, and the Places of their Lodgings, that they might be in Readiness upon Call; and at parting, gave him half a Crown.

After they had thus talk'd of the Conspiracy, there followed a very observable Passage; for the Prisoner declared that the Design had been put in Execution some time ago, if some Person had not discovered it to the French Ambassador, who writ of it to the Regent, and so it was notified to the King. However, even this Apprehension of a Discovery did not terrify them; for the Project was to go on. The late Duke of Ormond was to come in a single Ship, and General Dillon in another, and they were to bring others with them; which you take Notice falls in with the Evidence of Lynch, that Layer declared to him that they should not want Encouragement or Assistance from abroad, when once they had made a Beginning here.

The next Intercourse between the Prisoner and Plunkett was not personal, but by the means of one Jeffreys, a Nonjuring Clergyman.

Gentlemen, you observed that the Prisoner told Plunkett at parting, that he would send a Messenger to him with Money; and afterwards, at his own House, on the Morning he went out of Town for Norfolk, that he had left a Guinea with a Nonjuring Clergyman to give him to do Service with; ——— And says Layer, whilst I am abroad, you may be sure I shall not be idle. Accordingly Mr. Jeffreys came within a few Days after, and appears to be that Clergyman, for he said, he came from Mr. Layer. He tells you, they discoursed on the old Subject, and Jeffreys desired he would get Men in readiness, and said he had several other Places to go to on the same Errand. Jeffreys gave the Witness no Money at that Time, but came a second Time, and gave him only half a Guinea, which he said Layer had sent him for his Encouragement. Besides this, he tells you Layer gave him a Crown at the Castle-Tavern in Drury-Lane, expressly to encourage him to list Men for the Pretender. Upon the Prisoner's Return to Town, a Letter was sent by Jeffreys to the Witness, to desire him to go to the Prisoner's House; and when he came there, the Prisoner gave him a Guinea with his own Hand. There were several other Conversations, several things said to keep Plunkett firm to the Design, and many groundless and malicious Slanders cast by the Prisoner upon his Majesty's Government; and in all those Conversations Plunkett tells you, the Prisoner always stil'd the Pretender King. 'Twould be tedious particularly to repeat all these things to you; but there is one thing I can't help observing before I go off from this Part of our Evidence, I mean, that Plunkett told you more than once, that he was to procure five and twenty old Soldiers for the Service. Now that happens to be exactly the Number, which is assign'd to each of the eight Serjeants in the Prisoner's own Scheme, which was produc'd to you, and is a strong Circumstance in support of this Witness's Testimony.

Gentlemen, I have gone through the Evidence of these Witnesses, and I beg leave to say they are, within the Meaning and Intention of the Law, two Witnesses to prove the High-Treason charg'd upon the Prisoner; and it happens in this Case, that they make out all the particular Overt-Acts alledg'd in the Indictment. Both Lynch and Plunkett prove repeated Consultations to levy War, to bring in the Pretender, and the actual liking of Men; and Lynch alone proves the publishing the treasonable Declaration, and that Part of the Design, which no Body can hear without the utmost Indignation, the seizing his Majesty's Person. From henceforth I apprehend I may take it, that the Charge is proved; though in Truth we have gone a great deal farther in order to put the Testimony of these Witnesses beyond all doubt, to deliver them from all possible Objections, and to demonstrate to you the Nature and Extensiveness of this black Conspiracy.

The next Head of Evidence, is that of the Papers; and notwithstanding the little Cavils, which have been urged against them, those Papers are fully proved to be the Prisoner's, and by him deliver'd to Mrs. Mason. It stands thus; Mrs. Mason swears, that the Prisoner deliver'd these Papers to her in two Pacquets, as things of great Consequence, seal'd up with his own Seal, which Seal is now remaining, and appears on the Covers. That she lock'd them up safe in her Trunk till they were seiz'd by the Messengers, and out of that Trunk the Messengers took them. That she set her Mark upon each particular Paper, which appears to be the same Mark which by way of Experiment they would have her to make in Court; and she swears, that these are the very same Papers which the Prisoner deliver'd to her with his own Hands. The two Messengers give you an Account, That they seized these Papers at Mrs. Mason's Lodgings, on the twenty ninth Day of September last; that they took the two Pacquets out of the Trunk, the same Seal being then upon the Covers, and that Mrs. Mason was by, and mark'd them in their Presence; that they likewise put their Marks upon, and never deliver'd them out of their Custody till they had so done. Indeed, Turner says he left them in the Hands of his Fellow Messenger, Spear, during the little Time he went for Mr. Stanyan, but Spear swears they received no Manner of Alteration during that Space, and upon the whole, they swear them to be the same Papers which they took out of the Trunk.
and

Upon this Evidence, we apprehend we were intitled to have read the Papers, without giving any farther Account of them.

I did mention to your Lordship the Case of my Lord Preston, which was not so strong; for he lying together with Ashton in the Hold of the Ship, upon the Ballast, a Bundle of Papers lay between them; Ashton took them up, and put them in his Bosom, and there they were seiz'd; but being found together with my Lord Preston, those Papers, though the very Overt-Acts of the Treason laid in the Indictment, were read against him upon that Proof only. Indeed, after they had been read, the King's Counsel, in order to give a farther Strength to one or two particular Papers, entered into a Proof of their being my Lord Preston's own Hand-Writing.

The first Paper we call'd for was the Scheme, a regular Plan of this Conspiracy; and, Gentlemen, in order to prevent any Pretence of Hardship, before we read it, we call'd a Witness to prove this Scheme to be the Prisoner's Hand-Writing: It was Mr. Doyley, who swears he verily believes it to be his Hand. He gives you the Reasons of his Belief: That the Prisoner liv'd with him as a Clerk two or three Years, not whilst he was a Boy, but after he had serv'd some Time with another Master, had been us'd to Business, and gain'd a settl'd Hand; and during that Time he frequently saw him write. To support this farther, he tells you, that he had transacted Business for Mr. Layer, as his Agent, until about four or five Years ago, and had received several Letters from him, which he was sure were his, because he (Mr. Doyley) had done the Business requir'd to be done by those Letters, and Mr. Layer had paid him for it; that he had compar'd his Paper call'd The Scheme, with those Letters; that the Character of the Letters agreed with what the Prisoner wrote when he was Clerk to him; and the Character of the Scheme with that of the Letters.

But, Gentlemen, this Scheme is an Evidence so considerable in it self, and of that general Consequence to this whole Cause, that we went farther yet, and, not out of any Necessity, but in order to give you abundant Satisfaction, we proved it to be written by the Prisoner from his own Confession. Mr. Stanyan told you, That the Prisoner upon his Examination before the Lords of the Committee of Council, where he was present, and took Notes, confess'd this Scheme to be of his Hand-Writing. The Counsel for the Prisoner objected, This Question was not directly ask'd him (Is this your Hand?) and consequently he did not say, It is my Hand. 'Tis true, that does not appear; can there be no other Evidence of a Confession, but such direct Questions and Answers. Upon the Examination, the Prisoner was ask'd whether he knew of any Arms lodg'd in Westminster? He told the Lords he knew of no Arms being lodg'd. Thereupon this Paper was shew'd him, and he was ask'd, How came you to write in this Scheme of your own Hand-Writing, that there were Arms lodg'd? To this he made Answer it was a Mistake, I should have writ Arms that should be lodg'd. Can any Thing be more plain than this? It was so evident that the Paper was written by him, that it was taken for granted, and call'd his Hand-Writing in the very Terms of the Question; probably he had confess'd it before the Clerks were call'd in. If it had not been his Hand, would not the natural Answer have been, why do you ask me about what is written in that Paper? I know nothing of it, it is not my Hand-Writing; but instead of that he admits it without the least Difficulty, and takes upon him to tell the Lords what he intended to have written.

The Gentlemen on the other Side, endeavour'd to avoid the Force of this Evidence, by this ingenious Turn — I should have written Arms that should be lodg'd (that is) If I had writ it, I should have written Arms that should be lodg'd. But I desire to be inform'd, if he did not write it, how came he to know any thing about it? How could he take upon him to say it was a Mistake? Whose Mistake? He admits it to be his own. So that this Observation comes to nothing, and this Scheme, after all their Objections stands confess'd, as well as prov'd, to be Mr. Layer's Hand-Writing.

Upon the Foundation of all this Proof, which I beg leave to observe does support all the other Papers found in the two Pacquets, the Scheme was read, and when it was read, it required your strictest Attention; for in that Paper appears a regular Design, form'd for the total Destruction of this Government, to be executed in the City of London, the Capital of the Kingdom. This, if there was no more, shews a just Foundation for what was lately declared to us in a solemn Manner, That if this Conspiracy had not been happily detected, we should before now have seen that City involv'd in Blood and Confusion, such appears to be the plain Intent of it. The most profligate of the People were to have Arms put into their Hands, in order to subdue and pillage the better Sort.

In the first Place, the Tower was to be seiz'd, and a certain Officer expected to be upon the Guard that Day, who should be their Friend, and let in the Party who were to make themselves of that Garrison. The Royal-Exchange, being in the Heart of the City, was to be the Head-Quarters of the General; and another Party was to plunder the Bank. So that to give us a Taste of the Views of these Conspirators, Spoil and Rapine were not, in the Execution of their Design, to have been accidental, proceeding from the Fury of Action, the common Excuse for such Outrages, but a premeditated avowed Part of the Measures concerted beforehand.

The Artillery was next to have been seiz'd, and a Stratagem is contriv'd to effect it: And

And to crown all, his Majesty himself was to be made their Prisoner: Horrid Resolution! Colour'd indeed with the Name of Securing his Royal Person from the Insults of the Mob; but how thin a Pretence this is, I need not spend Time to explain to you, since the Writer of the Scheme himself has called it but a Pretence.

The Scheme goes on, and the Conspirators being sensible how much our future Hopes, as well as our present Happiness depend on the Protestant Succession in his Majesty's Family, the next Step to be taken, is to get his Royal Highness the Prince into their Power——A Prince at Richmond, described under a Cant Name, but the meaning of it is plain. When all this appears, how can the Counsel for the Prisoner object, that there is not sufficient Foundation to accuse their Client directly of compassing the Death of the King? Could this have ended in any thing else? Or can any one dream, that either of those precious Lives, I have now mentioned, could have been preserved in the Hands of such Miscreants?

Gentlemen, having observed thus much, in short, upon the Nature of the Scheme, it will be proper to take Notice to you, that as this Paper, thus fully proved, is of it self a strong Evidence, so it greatly corroborates and supports the Testimony of the two Witnesses, as to every one of the Overt-Acts charged in the Indictment, and tallies with it throughout.

This is true, as to the general Design, but appears most remarkably in some of the particular Facts. The Project laid down in the Scheme for seizing the Tower is exactly the same with what Lynch told you the Prisoner communicated to him whilst they were viewing my Lord Cadogan's House: That the Officer who should be upon Duty there that Day might be their Friend, and favour the Design. In like manner, the Circumstance of eight Serjeants being to have in Readiness twenty five Men a-piece, falls in with what Plunkett the Serjeant swore, that he was to procure that Number of old Soldiers to engage in the Enterprize.

But there is one Observation arising from a Circumstance of time, which is extremely strong, in Confirmation of the Testimony of the Witnesses, and shews manifestly, that the Account they give, must arise only from their Knowledge of the Truth of the Fact, and could not possibly be fram'd and modell'd to answer these Papers; it is this, that Mr. Layer, who was taken up on the Information of Lynch and Plunkett, was actually in the Custody of a Messenger, and made his Escape on the 19th Day of September last; but these Papers, which thus fall in with and support the Facts they swear, were not seized, as the two Messengers acquaint you, till the 29th of that Month; which is near ten Days after.

Gentlemen, one would have thought there had been no Occasion to go any farther——

My Lord, I desire that the Prisoner may not talk to the Jury, whilst I am observing upon the Evidence.

L. C. Just. Sir, you must not do it.

Prisoner. My Lord, I did not speak to the Jury.

Mr. Hungerford offers to speak.

L. C. Just. I tell you, Mr. Hungerford, it is not right; Mr. Layer hath made his Observations to the Jury, and made his Nods, and sometimes I have seen his Lips move.

Prisoner. You can't tell what I said.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I saw you turn about to the Jury, and saw your Lips move at the same Time.

My Lord, I desire he may stand up, and look towards the Court, which is his proper Posture.

Gentlemen, I was saying, that after this Scheme had been produced, one would have thought the King's Counsel might safely have rested it here. Can any body doubt of this Treason, and of the Prisoner's Part in it, when he himself hath thought fit to record the Conspiracy with his own Hand. However, we did not leave it here: But in order to give you entire Satisfaction how deeply this Gentleman was engaged, what a large Share he had taken upon him, and how dangerous and extensive this Conspiracy was, we read several other Papers. They consist of Lists of the Names of several Persons, many of them Officers of the Guards, and of the Army; some of them general Lists, others particular: For what Purpose these must have been made up or procured, by a Person engaged in such a Design, is extremely plain.

My Lord, it hath been said with great Justice, That this is not to be so understood, as to bring any Imputation on the Gentlemen named in these Lists. I dare say, that by far the greater Number, if not all of them, are Persons of the utmost Fidelity to his Majesty, and Zeal for his Service. But Men engaged in such Designs, who are plotting to overturn a Government, must weigh and calculate the Strength of that Government, as well as their own. They must know who is to be relied upon, on one Side as well as the other, and consider who are fit to be applied to, and who not; therefore they must take an Account of Persons, concerning whom they have no Hopes, as well as those of whom they have Hopes. Thus it was in my Lord Preston's Case; he had got Lists of Ships, and of the King's Officers and Troops: The meaning of it was well understood upon his Trial; the Court understood it, and the Jury understood it, that he had procured them, in order to the better Information of himself and his Accomplices in the Conduct of that Plot.

Gentlemen, in the next Place, several Letters were read to you, which were also found amongst the Papers deposited by the Prisoner with Mrs. Mason. You will remember on this Occasion, what Mrs. Mason swore, that the Prisoner hath some time gone by the Name of Fountaine, and gave Directions to her, that if any Letters came directed to Mr. Fountaine, she should take them in, and deliver them to him. She tells you, a Letter did come directed to Mr. Fountaine; that she delivered it to the Prisoner, who opened it, read it, and kept it as a Letter for him; which was an express owning of that Name, and several of the Letters now produced are directed by the Name of Fountaine.

There was found together with the Letters, a Cypher, that is, a List of feigned Names for Persons and Things, which has been in Part read; and in this Cypher the Cant Expressions made use of in the Letters are contained, and the Persons and Things signified by them decyphered in plain Words. Sir William Ellis (a Follower of the Pretender, with whom it appears the Prisoner had settled a Correspondence) is there described by the Name of Eustace, and the first Letter that was read, is subscribed with that Name and directed to James Fountaine, Esq; In that Letter Sir William Ellis tells him he is entirely of his Opinion as to the Method of carrying on the Manufactory, and the procuring of good Workmen is the first Step to be made. Manufactory wanted some Explanation, but it is fully cleared up by the Word——Workmen, which follows. For look into the Cypher, and Workmen stands for Soldiers; so that the Manufactory must be such as it was fit for Soldiers to work in. He goes on and advises him particularly to get some of the ablest of Mrs. Barbara Smith's. Barbara in the Cypher means the Army; so the Advice amounts to this, That in order to raise a Rebellion, he should seduce some of the ablest Soldiers of the King's Army. A Counsel, which is now made very plain, the Prisoner has endeavoured punctually to follow. To encourage him in this, he tells him, that it will be very agreeable to all concerned——particularly to Mr. Atkins. Now according to the Prisoner's own Explanation in this Cypher, Atkins is one of the feigned Names for the Pretender.

The next Letter is dated the 11th of July last, subscribed N. C. and acknowledges the Receipt of a Letter dated the 8th of May, with another Letter inclosed, which the Writer says was presently delivered to Mr. St. John, who took it extreme kindly: Look into the Cypher, and it appears that Mr. St. John is one of the fictitious Names for the Pretender; so that this Letter shews, that the Person to whom it was written, correspond immediately with the Pretender himself. But it seems Mr. St. John did not well understand what related to Mr. Burford, which the Letter-Writer hopes may be soon cleared by an Answer. What this was which wanted Explanation, is in the Dark; but so much we know, that in the Prisoner's Cypher, Burford stands for the Earl of Orrery.

There is another Letter dated the 27th of May, in which the Writer tells Mr. Layer, that their Friend had his Letter of the 22d of March, and took very kindly the Care he had taken of his little Concerns. Who is meant by that Friend, whose Concerns were the Prisoner's Care, does not certainly appear; but it is very natural to think, it is the same Person before called Atkins and St. John. However, it seems their Friend was again at a Loss about certain Names——Burford, ——Steel, ——Digby, ——the little Soldier, and Simons, which were not in his Rental.

The Word Rental in Mr. Layer's Cypher, is the Cant Term for a Cypher; and in that likewise are to be found the other Words, which his Friend did not then understand; particularly Simons, which is put there for the Lord North and Grey. But if that did not appear by the Cypher, yet the Description which follows, would be enough to convince every Man in his private Judgment who was meant by it——He is of the North, a Grey hair'd ancient Man, Cant Expressions plainly, which take in both the Titles of that Noble Lord. The Letter-Writer adds, that their Friend (the same whose Concerns were taken Care of) very well remembers this Person, and hath a very particular Esteem and Value for him, and that he is (in their Phrase) a very good Tenant, and a very honest Man.

Gentlemen, Some of the Papers were read to you of a more extraordinary Nature than even these Letters; I mean the Notes signed James R. with the Pretender's own Hand. These are not only one Evidence of the Plot, but a Part of the means by which it was to be effected; for they appear to be Receipts framed with Blanks, to be filled up with Sums of Money as Occasion offered, with a Promise of Repayment with Interest. These were some of the Ways and Means for raising Supplies out of the Pockets of such People, as should be found weak and silly, as well as wicked enough, to advance Money on such a Shadow of a Security, for so flagitious a Purpose. But they ask us who proves the Subscription to be the Pretender's Hand? I Answer, It is certain that is not material; but if it were, we have it sufficiently from the Prisoner himself. The Account he hath thought fit to give of them, you have heard from Mr. Delafaye; that he had written to his Correspondent Sir William Ellis, that if Sir William could send him over some blank Receipts under the King's own Hand (so he called the Pretender) he believed they might be made use of for the carrying on his Cause: That his Intention was to have tried his Friends, and to have raised Money on these Receipts. This shews the Prisoner received them as being signed with the Pretender's own Hand; and shews likewise the Use intended to be made of them; and it appears he had the Confidence to justify himself in this Practice, by the like Method having been taken by King Charles the Second, just before his Restoration.

My Lord, this is the Substance of our Proof as to the Papers and the Observations which have occurred to me upon them; and I will presume to say, with great Submission to your Lordship's better Judgment and Observation, that upon this Evidence, taken together with the Testimony of the two Witnesses, we might safely have trusted our Cause to your Lordship's Direction, and the Consciences of the Jury. But we went farther still, not because we wanted it to convict the Prisoner, for we had already done sufficient for that Purpose, but in order to give abundant Satisfaction, not only to the Gentlemen of the Jury, but to the whole World, of the Reality of this Conspiracy in general, as well as of this Man's Part in it; that they may see and be convinced of the just Grounds there were for this Prosecution, and for the Treatment the Prisoner has met with. For this Reason it was, we call'd Mr. Stanyan, and Mr. Delafaye to give an Account of his Confession, upon his Examination before the Lords of the Committee of Council; and I apprehend, we were properly and agreeably to the Rules of Law, let into that Evidence. We have had the Judgment of the Court upon that Point, therefore I won't

won't trouble your Lordship with any Authorities for it, but rely upon that as the best Authority.

Gentlemen, the Relation Mr. Delafaye and Mr. Stanyan gave, was, that the Prisoner declared to the Lords of the Council, that he had been at Rome in the Year 1721, and stay'd there some Time, and had several Conferences with the Pretender in Person: That in one of those Conferences, he asked for some Token or Credential, in order to give him a Credit with the Party when he returned to England; that it was not at first granted, but afterwards he put his Request into this Shape, that the Pretender's Wife (the Queen he called her) would be pleased to stand Godmother to the Prisoner's Child. Some Time was taken to consider of this Proposition, and then Word was brought by Colonel Hay to the Prisoner, that she would stand Godmother to the Child; and it was agreed, that the late Dutchess of Ormond should represent her. Afterwards the Pretender consented to be the Godfather, but Layer was to procure some Person to be his Proxy.

What was then agreed upon, was followed by the Fact. When the Prisoner returned Home, and the Child was to be Christen'd, he applied to my Lord Orrery to represent the Pretender, and to the late Dutchess of Ormond, to represent the Princess Sobiefski. The latter complied, but my Lord Orrery declined the Service; and thereupon the Prisoner made Application to my Lord North and Gray, who was pleased to accept it. The Child was christen'd at Chelsea, and my Lord North and Grey stood as Proxy for the Pretender, and the late Dutchess of Ormond for the Princess Sobiefski; and the Prisoner said, they both were privy that they represented those Persons.

The Prisoner's Confession likewise verifies every material Circumstance of Lynch's Evidence, as to what passed in the County of Essex. That he was at the Green Man with one Lynch, and there shewed him the Heads of a Declaration which he had drawn: That they went from thence to my Lord North and Grey's, and there the Prisoner presented the Witness to his Lordship as a very honest Man, and a Person fit to be employed in seizing my Lord Cadogan; and afterwards he said, as a Person fit to be employed in an Infurrection. That the Prisoner and Lynch lay at my Lord's House that Night, dined with him at his own Table the next Day; and that the Healths of the Pretender, his Wife, and Child, were drank by them after Dinner, and the same Healths were drank, and (if I understood it right) begun by that noble Lord himself.

There was a farther Circumstance sworn by Mr. Stanyan, in which he is confirmed by Colonel Huske, that at the Time Mr. Layer was apprehended, a considerable Quantity of Arms, and about fifty Cartridges, made up with Ball, and fitted for the Use of Soldiers, were found in his House: And the Prisoner being asked, upon his Examination, what he did with them? He said, they were for his Use, in case there should happen any Disturbance in the Nation.

The Prisoner entered into an Examination of the Gunsmith, how he came by these Arms; but that is not at all material: In his House they were found, and he has confessed they were intended for his Use in Case of a Disturbance in the Nation. What Disturbance was there likely to happen, but from himself and his Accomplices?

Gentlemen, The Prisoner's Escape out of the Messenger's Custody, is another strong Circumstance. In order to fly from Justice, he ventured to get out of a Window two Stories high, and had the Fortune to meet with a Sculler, which carried him cross the Water into Southwark. When the Witness first endeavoured to stop him, it appears he was in the utmost Concern; begged of him for God's Sake to let him go, pretending it was an Arrest; and then he pulled out of his Pocket a great many Guineas, and bid the Witness take what he pleased, so he would but let him go; but the Messenger pursued him pretty close, and he was retaken.

Gentlemen, this is a very material piece of Evidence to shew the Guilt of the Prisoner. The Law of England supposeth Guilt from Flight, and though it was said, that any Man in Mr. Layer's Condition would have done the same thing, if he could; that can be true only in this Sense, that any Man in his Condition, as to the Consciousness of his own Guilt, would have done it; but an innocent Person would never have brought that Imputation upon himself, by endeavouring to escape.

This is the Substance of the whole Evidence which has been given for the King against the Prisoner at the Bar, as well as I can recollect it; and, Gentlemen, I persuade my self, when you have considered it seriously, you will be satisfied that it makes good every part of the Indictment. But be that never so strong, the Prisoner ought to be heard against it, and have a full Opportunity of making his Defence: For if he hath a good Defence, either in point of Law or Fact, to take off the Force of this Evidence, God forbid that he should suffer by it.

The Prisoner entered upon his Defence, and his Counsel were pleased to set out with making some Observations upon the Case, as we had left it.

My Lord, they first made an Objection in Point of Law, that the Treason, for which the Prisoner is indicted, is compassing the Death of the King, and one of the Overt-Acts laid is only a Consultation to levy War, which they insist is not an Overt-Act of that Species of Treason, nor indeed any Treason at all, because the Words of the Statute, 25 Edw. III. import a War actually levy'd; and for the Sense of those Words, which no body ever doubted of, some ancient French Writers were quoted.

My Lord, I apprehend this Objection, if it be one, is rather to the Indictment than to the Evidence, of which they know they may properly take Advantage in Arrest of Judgment. But with great Submission to your Lordship, there is no Weight in it either way. One can't help being a little surprized to hear it mentioned, after that Point has been established by so many Resolutions, which at the same time they tell us they are aware of; and in the very last Case of High-Treason, which was in this Court, I mean that of Ker, Dorrel, and Gordon, it was solemnly determined by the unanimous Opinion of all the Judges, that a Consultation to levy War, in order to destroy or depose the King, is an Overt-Act of High-Treason, in compassing his Death. This was the receiv'd Doctrine before the Revolution, and it has been adhered to ever since; and though the Act of Reversal of my Lord Russel's Attainder has been mentioned, yet if that were looked into, I dare say, no Declaration will be found in it, contrary to this Determination. But they go farther and object, that here is no Overt-Act at all proved to be done in the County of Essex; and if so, then whatsoever Proof there may be of Facts done in Middlesex, that will go for nothing, and the Prisoner must be acquitted upon this Indictment. And, my Lord, so far I agree with them, that unless we have proved one Overt-Act at least to be done in Essex, we cannot maintain this Indictment.

In support of this Objection they would have it, that the only Transaction in Essex, is what passed at the Green Man, and the Whole of that is reduced singly to the Publishing the Declaration; and that, say they, is not legally proved, and if well proved, yet it is no Overt-Act of Treason. As to the Proof, they object that the Paper itself is not produced, and Parole Evidence of the Contents of a Writing is not to be admitted.

But, my Lord, I have given this an Answer already, by observing that the Prisoner took back the Paper, and kept it; so that the Writing itself being proved to be in the Custody of the Party, we were entitled within the ordinary Rule, to give Parole Evidence of the Contents. But, my Lord, this Declaration was a Part of the treasonable Consultation then had; and sure I am, it would be the finest Invention to secure certain Impunity to Plotters that ever was thought of, if, instead of discoursing, the Consultation shall be carried on by Papers handed from one to another, and no body can be convicted, because the Paper is not to be found. As to that Part of their Objection, that it is no Overt-Act of Treason, one of the Gentlemen thought fit to treat it in a ludicrous Manner. 'Twas only reading a Piece of Paper, suppose they had sung a Ballad. That Gentleman will pardon me, if I say, those Expressions did not become this Occasion. An Accusation of High-Treason, which highly concerns the King and his Government, is an Affair of a serious Nature; and if he does but reflect upon the Contents of that Declaration, which the Witness related, he cannot think it a Matter to be sported with.

Mr. Ketelbey was pleased to say, that this could be no Overt-Act of Treason, because it was but publishing a Libel. But surely, that is very extraordinary. Publishing of a Paper may amount to one Crime or another, according to the Subject-Matter of that Paper; and can it be a Question at this Time of Day, whether the publishing a Declaration or a Book containing Arguments, or offering Rewards directly to stir up the King's Subjects to rise in Rebellion against him, be High-Treason? The treasonable Intent in this Case cannot be doubted, and 'tis as certain that the Publication is an Act; what is there then wanting to make it Treason? But, my Lord, this has also been adjudged, and therefore I won't argue it.

My Lord, I have said thus much about the Declaration for the sake of following the Gentlemen, who are Counsel for the Prisoner, in their Arguments; but after all, their Foundation, which is a Supposition that there are no other Overt-Acts proved in Essex, besides this of the Declaration, entirely fails them; for your Lordship will inform the Jury, that Lynch deposed that whilst they staid at the Green Man they did more than talk a little Politics, they consulted about the Project of an Insurrection, and the Prisoner there actually proposed to him (besides what was contained in the Paper) the Design of seizing the King's Person, which are two other Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment.

Upon this, another Objection was raised by Mr. Ketelbey, which, if it holds, will go to the Whole; and that is, that we have but one Witness, Lynch alone, to the Facts in Essex; and this Indictment must fail, unless there are two Witnesses to some or other of the Overt-Acts in the County where the Indictment is laid.

But, my Lord, that is not now to be disputed. The Law is clearly settled, that on an Indictment for High-Treason, in compassing the King's Death, if several Overt-Acts are laid, and some of those Overt-Acts are proved by one Witness to be done in the County where the Party is indicted, and others of them are proved by another Witness to have been committed in a different County, that Evidence is sufficient to maintain the Indictment; they are two Witnesses of the same Species of Treason within the Meaning of the Law. So it was expressly resolved by all the Judges of the King's-Bench, in the Case of Sir Henry Vane, which is reported in Kelyng 15, and that has been since followed by a Current of Authorities; the Case of the five Jesuits, the Opinion of the Judges delivered to the Lords, upon the Trial of my Lord Stafford, 32 Car. II. and other Cases.

My Lord, as this is established by Authorities, so the Reason and Necessity of the Thing is strong; because otherwise treasonable Consultations might easily be carried on in such a Manner, that no body could be convicted of them. It would be but to lay the Scene upon the Confines of several Counties, and take Care not to consult with any two Persons in the same County; then there could not be two Witnesses, and all would be safe.

I have done with their Objections in Point of Law, and shall now endeavour to give some Answer to their Observations upon the Fact. And, Gentlemen, I think the Whole of those Observations may be reduced to one Head, which is, that it is highly improbable, that what the Witnesses have sworn should be true. But upon that, before I give particular Answers to what they have offered, I beg leave to say in general, that though in a doubtful Case, where there is any Balancing in the Proof, the Improbability of the Thing is a Consideration of great Weight, yet where there is plain and positive Evidence on one Side, not weakened by any Counter-Evidence on the other Side, the Objection of Improbability can be of little Force.

But to consider this Improbability. They say 'tis very strange, that Mr. Layer should be engaged in so dangerous an Undertaking, with such Persons as have sworn themselves to be his Accomplices. To this, I say, 'tis always strange, that Men should venture to trust one another with such dangerous Secrets; but certain it is, they often do; and as to the Witnesses in this Case, they are proved by the Prisoner's own Evidence, to be Persons with whom he thought fit to hold a Correspondence. How this great Confidence was at last created between them, has been accounted for by the Witnesses themselves, in a very natural and probable Way, of which I have already taken Notice.

Mr. Ketelbey insisted much upon the Improbability of Plunkett's Evidence, in those Parts of it which concern James Plunkett and Jefferys the Nonjuring-Parson. That it is not credible, that those two Men, whom Plunkett admits to be absolute Strangers to him, should at first Sight open themselves with so great Freedom, to a Fellow of his Degree on a Subject of Treason. But that will receive this Answer. James Plunkett and Jefferys were, as appears clearly from the Circumstances, in the Confidence of Layer. Layer had a Confidence in Matthew Plunkett the Witness, on the Recommendation of Major Barnwell, and by Means of Layer, both James Plunkett and Jefferys might be induced to trust him. And thus the Chain of the Correspondence is made compleat.

Another Objection was made to Plunkett, that he had been guilty of a flat Contradiction in his Evidence. That he first swore, Jefferys told him his Name upon his first coming to him, and afterwards that he did not know his Name till he received the Letter from him about the Prisoner's being come to Town. But that Observation was grounded upon a Mistake; for what Plunkett said, was, that Jefferys did tell him his Surname at first, but that he did not know his Christian Name till he received the Letter, which is very consistent.

But the Counsel for the Prisoner were well aware, that their Observations upon the Witnesses could be of little Effect, if the Paper called the Scheme found Credit; and therefore in the next Place they attacked that as being incredible; they represent it as ridiculous and foolish ——— The Scheme of a Madman, which could never have taken Place.

Gentlemen, as to this Observation, the Scheme is indeed such an one, as I hope in God could never take Place any where, but in the Heads of those that framed it. But with great Submission, that is no Objection to the Credibility of it, provided it be proved. For the Consideration is not, how it now appears to you or to me, who look upon it in a different Light, and on contrary Principles from theirs; but the proper Consideration is, what the Conspirators themselves, with regard to the Views and Principles they went upon, might think of it. And, Gentlemen, in that Light examine it, go through the several Articles of it, compare them together, and you will find them consistent and coincident; all the Parts answering to one another. Every Quarter of the Town is provided for Dispositions made of certain Numbers of Men; and Care taken to preserve the Communication between them by Watch-Words agreed upon for that Purpose. These Things make it plain, that it was fully considered by those who drew it, and framed not at random, but upon Computation of a Force of which they thought themselves assured. And what, though it should be admitted to be extravagant, and not likely to succeed? If that should be given way to, as a certain Objection against a Plot's finding Credit after it is detected, I am afraid it would be a sure Method to make such Plots succeed, or at least to secure the Authors of them from Punishment. Do but intermix some absurd extravagant Parts in the Plan of the Conspiracy, and then according to this Reasoning it is below Notice, and must be suffered to go on, or if a Stop be put to its Progress, yet it is incredible, and no body must be believed to be guilty of it.

But, Gentlemen, whatever Difficulties may be raised against particular Parts of the written Scheme, yet upon the Grounds and Suppositions which the Prisoner and his Accomplices proceeded on, their general Design might appear very feasible to themselves. For it is plain they had a Dependence, however ill-founded, upon Discontents raised in the Minds of the People, and on corrupting great Numbers of the Army, which would have diminished the Strength of the Government, and added to their own; and after they had made a Beginning here, it is proved that they expected Assistance from Abroad.

The next Thing to be considered, is the Testimony of the Prisoner's Witnesses: And, Gentlemen, you observe that they have scarce called any Witnesses to contradict the Facts contained in our Evidence, for the People of the House at the Green Man say nothing to the Purpose; but all their Evidence is applied to the Character and Credit of the Witnesses produced for the King.

As to that, I must observe to you, that it is not to be expected that Conspiracies and traitorous Machinations of this Kind should be proved by Persons of the best Characters. 'Tis necessary from the Nature of the Thing, that they should be proved by those who have been privy to them, and such Persons cannot possibly be of Characters absolutely unblemished. Therefore, to say that such Witnesses are not to be believed, is in effect to say that no Evidence of a Plot is ever to be believed, which surely is an Argument that proves too much.

The first Witness they called on this Head, was my Lord North and Grey. I am heartily sorry to see his Lordship here in his present Condition upon this Occasion; the rather, because it obliges me to observe, that here are Circumstances proved, which affect him; I will carry it no farther, but some Circumstances are proved in this Cause which do affect him. But what is his Evidence? His Lordship was called to impeach the Character of Lynch; and however he may impeach his Character, I am sure he supports his Credit as to the Facts sworn by him. The Account his Lordship gave, was, that the Prisoner brought Lynch to his House at Epping, introduced Lynch to him, that he was never acquainted with him before; but upon Mr. Layer's Introduction, received him civilly; and that Lynch came thither a second Time.

Now, these are the very Facts Lynch swore to, and consequently so far my Lord supports him. But then, as to his Character, his Lordship is pleased to say, that the first Time Lynch was there, he gave him a History of his Life; and in that gave so vile an Account of himself, that when he came a second Time, his Lordship would not give him a Lodging in his House. This, I think, was the Whole of my Lord's Testimony; and I can't help remarking upon it, that his Lordship gave no Account at all of any Business, which either the Prisoner or Lynch had with him, nor of any particular Occasion upon which the former introduced the latter to him. That was a Matter within his Lordship's own Knowledge.

There is a another Thing which is little surprizing ; and that is, that Mr. Lynch being an absolute Stranger, as is confessed, to this noble Lord, having the Honour to be introduced by a Friend to a Person of his great Quality, should have so little Regard to his Friend, or to the Opinion that Noble Lord was to conceive of him, as at the first Interview to take so odd a Way of being recommended, and give a most vile, infamous Character of himself. This is somewhat out of the ordinary Course ; but you are told, that so it was.

As to the other Witnesses to Lynch's Credit, notwithstanding their Number, I apprehend their Evidence, when duly considered, will have little Weight. They were most of them going to enter into particular Facts ; but the Court agreeably to the constant Course of Evidence, over-ruled them in it ; and that you, Gentlemen of the Jury, may be satisfied no Hardship was done by this to the Prisoner, I will mention the Reason of it. The Reason why particular Facts are not to be given in Evidence to impeach the Character of a Witness, is, that if it were permitted, it would be impossible for that Witness, having no Notice of what will be sworn against him, to come prepared to give an Answer to it ; and thus the Characters of Witnesses might be vilified, without having any Opportunity of being vindicated.

As to the Witnesses themselves, some of them say, they know no Ill of Lynch ; many of them have known him but a little while ; some of them give an Account of Declarations made since this Prosecution began, and how fairly they were drawn from him don't appear ; and for some others of them, I submit it to the View and Consideration of the Jury, from their Habit, and the Appearance they made, whether they ought not themselves to have brought Witnesses to support their own Credit.

One appears plainly to be mistaken, and that is, Darcy ; he was asked how long he had known Lynch ? and, I think, he said he knew him in London last Winter ; now it appears that Lynch came into England but in April last.

Gentlemen, in the next Place they called Witnesses to Plunkett's Credit, and there the same Thing befell them as in the Case of Lynch ; for Major Barmwell their first Witness on that Head, though he is willing enough to give him an ill Character, yet he confirms several of the Facts which the other swore, and gives exactly the same Account of the Rescuing the Goods, and the Circumstances of Plunkett's becoming acquainted with Layer, which he gave.

Mrs. Child likewise supports Plunkett as to the Circumstance of his carrying her Husband to the Prisoner's House, and the Prisoner's refusing to see him.

As to Mrs. Mason, they have taken a great deal of Pains to prove her a very ill Woman. What she is, or what those Persons are, whom they have called to her Credit, we can't tell ; but so much appears even from their own Witnesses, that she is one with whom Mr. Layer thought fit to converse, and therefore 'tis not improbable that she might be entrusted by him ; and it is from such only as he thought fit to converse with and entrust, that we can have any Discovery. The Prisoner has, indeed brought two or three Women, who talk very fast, and seem very angry with her ; and one of them tells the Jury in a Scolding Way, that she don't care what she says or does ; another, that she would take away any Man's Life for the Value of a Farthing ; and such Kind of vehement Expressions. It is sufficient to say this, that People who talk thus loosely and passionately upon their Oaths, rather bring a Suspicion upon their own Credit, than upon the Credit of those against whom they swear.

But Gentlemen, if they had brought a much stronger Evidence against the Characters of the King's Witnesses than they have done, what would it have availed them ? Does this Case depend upon the Characters of these three Witnesses ? It cannot be pretended that it does. Let their Characters be what they will, their Credit in this Cause is undeniably supported ; supported as to several material Facts, by the Evidence for the Prisoner, but most strongly by the Papers ; against which, I apprehend nothing has been said to take off their Force. If those Papers are not genuine, how should the Notes signed with the Pretender's Hand, which the Prisoner received from Sir William Ellis, come to be amongst them ? How should this Scheme, proved to be of Mr. Layer's own Hand-Writing, have been there ? The Prisoner, I must own, did call one Witness, Bennet, who was his Clerk, and is now his Solicitor, to swear he believed the Scheme not to be the Prisoner's Hand. But it happened with Bennet, as it did with several others of their Witnesses, that though he is willing to carry his Belief as far as he can, that this is not his Master's Hand ; yet he is forced to acknowledge another Matter, which still verifies the Papers contained in these Pacquets to be his Master's Papers : For being asked of whose Hand-Writing one of them was, he swears it was written by himself for the Prisoner, and by his Direction. This comes out of the Mouth of his own Witness, and confirms Mrs. Mason's Testimony, that these Papers came from Mr. Layer.

But over and above all this, you have the Prisoner's own Confession, proved by two Gentlemen whose Credit is beyond all Dispute ; and certainly the Prisoner must be allowed to be a good Witness against himself.

However, we shall not leave the Credit of our Witnesses singly upon these Observations, though I think we might safely do it ; but shall endeavour to take off any ill Impressions their Evidence may have left upon you, and vindicate their Characters ; and that, not by such Witnesses as some of those produced for the Prisoner were, who, I observed before, might stand in need of Witnesses to support their own Credit, but by Persons of undoubted Reputation, who will satisfy you that their general Character is such, that they very well deserve to be believed by you.

I have now done with repeating and observing upon the Evidence on both Sides ; and I beg leave to insist upon it, that we have fully made good what was opened to you in the Beginning of this Cause, that in general there has been a horrid Conspiracy carried on, in order to over-throw our happy Constitution, and to deprive us of all the Blessings we enjoy, and promise ourselves, under Establishment, in his Majesty and his Protestant Royal Family. The Part the Prisoner hath acted in this fully appears to you, and it appears to be a very considerable one.

It has been said, indeed, that he is but an inconsiderable Man, of no Rank or Fortune fit to sustain such an Undertaking. That Observation may be true; but since it's plain he did undertake it, that, joined with the other Circumstances proved in this Cause, serves only to demonstrate, that he was set on work, and supported, by Persons of greater Abilities for such an Enterprize. And, Gentlemen, this is the most affecting Consideration of all.—But I would not, even in this Cause of your King and of your Country, say any thing to excite your Passions; I choose rather to appeal to your Judgments; and to those I submit the Strength and Consequence of the Evidence you have heard.

My Lord, I beg Pardon for having taken up so much of your Time; I have but one Thing to add, and that is, humbly to beg of your Lordship, for the Sake of the King, for the Sake of Myself, and for the Sake of the Prisoner at the Bar, that if I, through Mistake or Inadvertency, have omitted or misrepeated any thing, or laid a greater Weight upon any Part of the Evidence, than it will properly bear, your Lordship will be pleased to take Notice of it, and set it right, that this whole Case may come before the Jury in its true and just Light.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. It is so late, that it will be inexcusable in me to trouble your Lordship with any thing by Way of Reply, especially since Mr. Solicitor General hath done it so fully. We shall only beg leave to call a few Witnesses to the Credit of the King's Witnesses.

Mr. Ketelbey. I shall not take up much of your Lordship's Time, especially since your Lordship and the Court have been entertained so well and so long by Mr. Solicitor General, at least two Hours, as I have observed by my Watch; but 'twas impossible for me to think him tedious, though so late at Night, and especially since his Conclusion is exactly agreeable to the Conclusion of a late celebrated Solicitor General* on a like Occasion.

Mr. Att. Gen. We must beg leave to call some Witnesses we have, who will support the Credit of Mr. Lynch and Matthew Plunkett.

Mr. Vernon sworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you know Mr. Lynch?

Vernon. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. What Account do you give of him?

Vernon. I keep a Tavern at the Swan and Rummer in Finch-lane, this Gentleman hath frequented my House these four Months every Day, till he was in Custody; he hath been a very good Customer, and paid me honestly.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you know the Prisoner at the Bar? Have you seen Mr. Lynch and him in Company together at your House?

Vernon. Yes; I have seen them twice in Company together at my House.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long hath he been your Customer?

Vernon. From the Beginning, about four Months.

Mr. Ketelbey. About four Months; Did he spend his Money plentifully and freely?

Vernon. Yes; some Part of it I have had since he hath been in Custody.

Mr. Ketelbey. How much was he in your Debt before he was in Custody?

Vernon. Ten or eleven Shillings.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long had he been in Custody before he paid you?

Vernon. Not long.

Mr. Hungerford. He had the First-Fruits of his being in Custody; he had some Money, and so he paid you your Reckoning.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We take it, that Mr. Vernon proves, that Lay and Lynch were conversant together.

Capt. Malthus sworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you know Stephen Lynch?

Malthus. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. How long have you known him?

Malthus. About Nine Years. I knew him first, when he was a Merchant at the Canaries. I traded with him several Times, several Times I was consigned to him, and I have seen him at Home.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. What Account can you give of his Behaviour?

Malthus. He always behav'd himself very well, I think.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you think he would swear falsely to take away a Man's Life?

Malthus. No, I don't think he would.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long is it since you have been acquainted with him?

Malthus. Nine or ten Years.

Mr. Ketelbey. How long is it since your last Acquaintance?

Malthus. About four Months.

Mr. Ketelbey. What Distance of Time did there use to be between your seeing of him?

Malthus. Two or three Years, every Time I came home.

Mr. Ketelbey. Doth he owe you any Money?

Malthus. No.

Mr. Ketelbey. Would you trust him with Money?

Malthus. He never askt me.

Mr. Ketelbey. Your Witness we may ask as to Particulars, Did you know his Aunt there, at that Time?

Malthus. No.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you know any thing of his Behaviour?

Malthus. I never knew an ill Character of him in my Life.

Capt. Arnold sworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you know Stephen Lynch?

Arnold. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. How long have you known him?

Arnold. 'Tis fourteen Years ago.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. You have been acquainted with him since. What Account do you give of his Character? Do you think he would forswear himself?

Arnold. No.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you take him to be a Man of Credit?

Arnold. I never had any Dealings with him.

* Mr. Finch, at Col. Sidney's Trial.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Would you have trusted him with five hundred Pounds ?

Mr. Ketelbey. Would you trust him with five Shillings ?

Arnold. Five Shillings is a small Sum.

Col. Manning sworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you know Matthew Plunkett ?

Col. Manning. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. How long have you known him ?

Col. Manning. Upwards of ten Years.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. What Credit hath he ? Do you take him to be an honest Man ?

Col. Manning. He behaved himself well, and like an honest Man.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you think he would forswear himself ?

Col. Manning. No, I believe not.

Prisoner. Have you and I had any Discourse about this very Plunkett ? And did not you tell me he was a Scoundrel ?

Col. Manning. No, I did not.

Mr. Hungerford. Did not you give him a bad Character to Mr. Layer ?

Col. Manning. No, I did not.

Prisoner. Do you mean thus, that he behaved himself very well, as a Soldier ? What is that as to his Character in general ?

Col. Manning. I know no ill Character of him while he was with me.

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you never hear any thing in relation to Sir Daniel Carroll, that he made a wrong Demand upon him ?

L. C. Just. If he made an unjust Demand, will he therefore be perjurd ?

Mr. Ketelbey. What have you heard about that Affair between Mr. Plunkett and Sir Daniel Carroll ?

Col. Manning. I have heard Mr. Layer say—

Mr. Ketelbey. Did you never hear any Body else speak of him ? I ask you about making this Demand upon Sir Daniel Carroll, what you know of it ?

L. C. Just. I never heard any thing like it.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, we apprehend we may cross examine, as to Particulars, a Person whom the other Side produces as a Witness to Character.

Prisoner. Did not you afterwards, in Discourse with Mr. White, mention it again with relation to this of Sir Daniel Carroll ?

Col. Manning. I deny it.

Prisoner. Did you desire me not to examine you ?

Col. Manning. No, I told you I had nothing to say in relation to Plunkett's Character.

Mr. Hungerford. Let him alone, I would not ask him any more Questions.

Col. Manning. Why, let him alone ?

Mr. Hungerford. I would not have him examine you any further.

Col. Manning. You are very civil.

Mr. Hungerford. So I am, to give you no further Trouble.

Major Hamel sworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you know Matthew Plunkett ?

Maj. Hamel. I have known him these seventeen Years.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. What Character hath he ?

Maj. Hamel. He was then a Drummer in the Regiment, and always did his Duty well ; I never heard him complained of ; he always had a good Character ; he went from Ireland to Spain.

Mr. Hungerford. You speak to his military Conduct.

Maj. Hamel. I know of no other.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. You say he always had a good Character.

Maj. Hamel. Yes, he always had.

Captain Crosby sworn.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Do you know Serjeant Plunkett ?

Cap. Crosby. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. How long have you known him ?

Cap. Crosby. Three Years.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. What Character had he for that Time ?

Cap. Crosby. Whilst I knew him, he bore a good Character.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. Did you hear any Ill of him ?

Cap. Crosby. Not during the Time that I knew him.

Mr. Ketelbey. Where was the Regiment at that Time ?

Cap. Crosby. It was in Town, about half a Year ago.

Mr. Ketelbey. Were you not of the same Regiment ?

Cap. Crosby. We were.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. We won't give your Lordship any further Trouble.

Mr. Ketelbey. And we apprehend we have no Occasion to give your Lordship any further Trouble, by way of Reply.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as to my Lord North and Grey, we can prove he attempted to get away, and was endeavouring to go to France, and was taken in the Isle of Wight ; and that when the Prisoner was seized, he sent a Messenger to give my Lord North Notice of it. This last was confessed on his Examination, and we can prove it.

Mr. Ketelbey. I must submit it to your Lordship, whether his Examination can be admitted as Testimony, so as to affect a Third Person.

L. C. Just. It is not worth disputing.

Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Indictment against Mr. Layer, the Prisoner at the Bar, for High-Treason. The Treason with which he stands charged, is the compassing and imagining the Death of the King : The Overt-Acts that are laid in this Indictment, as Evidence of this Treason, are several ; first of all, that he did meet and consult, advise and agree, to levy War against the King ; the second is, that he did publish a seditious and traitorous Writing, exciting and encouraging the People to an Insurrection, and offering Rewards for that Purpose ; the third is, that he did engage in a Design to set the Pretender on the Throne ; the fourth, that he lifted Soldiers against the King ; and the last, that he did consult and agree, to take, seize imprison the King : These are the several Overt-Acts that are laid in the Indictment of the Treason, that is, the compassing and imagining the Death of the King. Gentlemen, I must tell you, before I go on to lay before you, and observe on the the Evidence, what the Law is ; and I must tell you, that the Law is undoubtedly so, if a Man is charged with Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death of the King, there must be an Overt-Act of that Treason proved in the County where he is indicted ; and in the next Place, if there be such Overt-Act in that County, he may be charged with any Overt-Act of the same Species of Treason in any other County whatsoever. This hath been frequently resolved and agreed, and was hardly ever made a Question. I observed in the Hands of one of the Counsel, and he took Notice of it, that he had the Trial of Sir William Perkins ; he could not but observe there laid down by my Lord Chief Justice Holt, if Evidence be given of Treason in one County where the Indictment is laid, he may be charged with any Overt-Acts of the same Species of Treason in any other County whatsoever. The Law being so, I will, in the best manner I can, set out the Matters that have been given in Evidence, on this long Evidence, in the clearest Light that I can state the Examination, the Objections that have been made, and the Observations that are proper to be made upon it.

To maintain this Indictment, the King's Counsel have produced several Witnesses. The first Witness is Mr. Lynch ; the second Witness is Mr. Plunkett ; all the other Evidence hath been offered to confirm the Evidence given by these two Witnesses. As to Mr. Lynch, he tells you how he came to the Acquaintance of Mr. Layer ; that he was an intimate Acquaintance of Dr. Murphey, and Dr. Murphey recommended him to Mr. Layer ; being so recommended, he had several Meetings with Mr. Layer in Middlesex, at the Griffin-Tavern, and in Holbourn, at the Castle-Tavern, and I think, at Southampton-Buildings.

He tells you, at these several Meetings it was declared, that there was to be a Rising, and it was thought necessary, to make this Rising the more effectual, that my Lord Cadogan, the Commander in chief of the King's Forces should be seized.

Mr. Layer said to Mr. Lynch, he was looked upon as a Person proper for the Undertaking, and he declared that he was willing, and said, if that was the Opinion of those concerned in the Affair, he would undertake to do it : After this, they went to my Lord Cadogan's House, to view the House, and the several Avenues about the House ; and after they had taken this View, Lynch declares his Opinion, that it was feasible, and he would undertake to do it.

After he had given you an Account of what happened at the several Meetings in Middlesex, then he comes to what was done in the County of Essex : He tells you Mr. Layer came to him, and asked him whether he would ride out with him to take the Air ; he agreed to it ; they both went out of Town together ; he said, that as they were going along, Mr. Layer told him his Intention was to go to my Lord North and Grey's ; he says, they went forward with that Intention, but before they came to the Green-Man at Layton-Stone, they thought it would be too late before they got to my Lord North and Grey's for Dinner, therefore they thought proper to halt at the Green-Man, and take a Refreshment there. He tells you, they did stop there at the Green-Man, and at that Time Mr. Layer did repeat the Discourse of the Rising that was intended to be ; he said, my Lord Townshend, and my Lord Carteret and Mr. Walpole were to be seized, a Party were to be sent to seize the King ; and that a Scheme was laid for seizing my Lord Cadogan, and that it was proposed as a proper Time to put this in Execution at the Breaking up of the Camp. He said, when he was mentioned, at first he made some little doubt, whether that was a proper Opportunity ; with that Mr. Layer told him, pray consider with your self, if you do not think this practicable, will you propose something else, and we will alter our Scheme ?

He saith, at this same Time Mr. Layer pulled out of his Pocket a Declaration, purporting an Exhortation and Excitation for People to rise, and take up Arms against the King, and Rewards offered for that Purpose.

Afterwards they went to my Lord North and Grey's, and that Mr. Layer introduced him to his Lordship, as his Friend ; that they were civilly and kindly received, supped there, lay there that Night, and dined there the Day after. This is the Evidence given with relation to what was done in the County of Essex ; and if this Relation be true, no doubt there is a good Overt-Act proved upon him in the County of Essex, and consequently the Indictment is well laid in Essex, and then the Evidence in the County of Middlesex will be a proper Evidence against the Prisoner. But as to this Evidence of Mr. Lynch, they say for the Prisoner, Mr. Lynch is not to be believed, that he is a vile profligate Wretch, and no Credit is to be given to him, though upon his Oath ; and it must be admitted the Evidence that hath been given for that Purpose, by a great Number of Witnesses, will be proper for your Consideration : But you will consider, in a Case of this Nature, if you are to expect Witnesses without Exception, it is impossible to have any Evidence to convict a Man of High-Treason ; no body will engage in such an Affair, that is of a nice Credit and Reputation, and therefore it is not to be expected ; for if it be, it is and will be impossible to convict any Person of Treason.

But then you will consider, although Credit is not entirely to be given to a Man of ill Repute, yet if he is supported in his Evidence that he gives by other Evidences, you will consider whether that will not remove all Sort of Objections as to his Character.

As to the Overt-Act of publishing the Declaration, that is supported beyond Contradiction ; for it appears in his Examination before the Lords of the Council, when he is asked, whether he ever saw the Declaration ? He says, he never saw any but one, and that was drawn by himself.

Prisoner. My Lord, what Mr. Stanyan says, I believe, he did not say that I confessed that it was drawn by me.

L. C. Just. You must not interrupt me while I am directing the Jury. You have behaved your self intemperately hitherto, but you must not interrupt me, I can't bear it. The Substance of what Mr. Stanyan said is, that when it was demanded of you, whether you had seen the Declaration, you said, you had seen none but a rough Draught that was drawn by your self.

Prisoner. I beg your Lordship's Pardon, Mr. Stanyan is here in Court.

L. C. Just. Is he in Court? Let him be asked the Question again.

Mr. Stanyan. My Lord, I believe I did say, that Mr. Layer did confess, that it was the Heads of a Declaration which he had drawn himself.

L. C. Just. Now, Sir, after this, I expect not to be interrupted by you any more.

This being the Matter, he doth at the same Time confess, that That was the Declaration which he had shewn to Mr. Lynch at the Green Man, on the Way as they were going to my Lord North and Grey's. So that Part of this Evidence is supported by Mr. Layer's own Confession. As to the other Part, that he did consult and agree to levy War, consider, that he confessed before the Council, that he did go to the Green Man, and there shewed the Declaration to Mr. Lynch; whether that doth not give Credit to what the other saith, That he went to the Green Man, and that there they talked of the Insurrection, and the levying of War; and then went to my Lord North and Grey's, with this, that he recommended Mr. Lynch to my Lord North and Grey, as a fit Person to seize my Lord Cadogan, and to be concerned in the Insurrection.

Gentlemen, This is not the only Matter by which he is supported in this Evidence, that the Prisoner designed an Insurrection, and to levy War against the King; but he confessed before the Council, that he went to Rome, had two several Conferences with the Pretender, and was very kindly received by him: He said he asked the Pretender, if he would give him any Credentials that might recommend him to his Friends in England; that was objected to, and not complied with; but then he asked a particular Favour, that the Pretender's Spouse would stand Godmother to his Child; that is granted; and the Pretender himself is willing to stand Godfather.

Afterwards, when he returns into England, he considered of proper Proxies to represent the Pretender and his Spouse; and asking my Lord Ortery, he refused him; then he asked my Lord North and Grey, who consented: My Lord North and Grey stood as Proxy for the Pretender, and the Dutchess of Ormond as Proxy for the Pretender's Wife.

He tells you, at this Time when he was at Rome, he had told Sir William Ellis, it would be of great Service if he could have a Fund of Credit to raise Money with. How must that be? Why, saith he, let me have blank Receipts signed by the Pretender himself; and accordingly he had.

This, he tells you, is what happened at that Time. Now the Evidence given by Mr. Lynch, being of an Insurrection in Favour, and for the Service of the Pretender, when Mr. Layer owns he had two Conferences with the Pretender, and was receiv'd so kindly by him, and had such particular Marks of his Favour; consider whether this doth not support the Evidence which is given by Mr. Lynch.

The next Evidence is Mr. Plunkett; he tells you how he came recommended to Mr. Layer by one Major Barnwell, on this Occasion. He tells you, Mr. Layer's Goods were in Execution, and he was employed by Major Barnwell to rescue them; accordingly he went and fetched a Couple of Soldiers, got into the House, drove out the Officers, and rescued the Goods. By this it appears, that Mr. Plunkett was a bold daring Man, fit to be employed on such an Occasion, and they assign that as a Reason, which answers the Objection made. Saith Mr. Layer, how came it to pass, that when I had never seen this Man, that I of a sudden should have such a Confidence as to trust him in an Affair of this Nature? In answer to that, it is said, he had done him a singular Service before, he had done a bold Act, he had got some Grenadiers and rescued his Goods when they were taken in Execution; and likewise James Plunkett had given a Character of him, that he looked upon him as an honest Man, and therefore recommended him to Mr. Layer:

Then he tells you, that Mr. Layer said they wanted a Man to serve on this Occasion; that James Plunkett talked of Officers, but we don't want Officers so much as we do brave Serjeants, old Soldiers, such as will be ready and qualified to support the Mob, and to discipline and head them; these are the Men we want, can you get such as these? Such as you are, that will be able to discipline the Mob and put them in Order. I told him (says the Witness Plunkett) I would do my Endeavours, and accordingly I advised him; that I had procured twenty five ready for the Service; he desired to have Lists of their Names, and the Places of their Abode, that so he might know where to send to them upon Occasion.

Now the Objection to this Evidence being only, how comes it to pass that a Man should be trusted with such a Secret, and this on the first Sight or Acquaintance? Why, saith he, I had been employed before, and had shewn myself faithful on another Occasion, and did serve him in rescuing his Goods, when they were seized upon in Execution, and James Plunkett recommended me. This is the Evidence of Matthew Plunkett, and if Plunkett swears true, if he was desired by Mr. Layer to procure and list Men for the Service of the Pretender, and he says and declares he did do it, then, if this Evidence is to be credited, the Prisoner at the Bar is guilty of the Treason wherewith he stands charged: But still they rely upon it, and hope you will not give Credit to the Witnesses. You hear what hath been answered by the Counsel for the King, and I observe to you now, that though here was such a Charge against the Witnesses, the King's Counsel have produced several Persons that had good Aspects, and seemed to be Men of Reputation, who say, they know them, and believe them to be Men of Reputation.

Then, Gentlemen, the next Thing insisted on is, that the Evidence given by Lynch and Plunkett is supported by the Papers that were seized in Mrs. Mason's Custody. Consider how that Matter stands; Mrs. Mason tells you, that Mr. Layer brought two Pacquets of Papers sealed up to her, and told her, they were Love-Letters; she says, she was desired to keep them by the Prisoner; and accordingly she did keep them for him; and you have it afterwards from the Witnesses, who have been produced, and against whose Credit there is no Exception, that having a Warrant against Mrs. Cook and Mrs. Mason, they came to Mrs. Cook's House to search for Papers, and in Mrs. Mason's Room there was a Trunk which was locked; they ordered it to be opened, which Mrs. Mason did, and they took out of the Trunk two Bundles of Papers sealed up up as you have heard ; they tell you the Bundles of Papers were opened, that they set their Marks upon each Paper ; and one of them did not immediately set his Mark, but afterwards 'tis proved that he kept them from the Time they were delivered to him till the other came back again, and then upon his Return he delivered them back again to him ; then he set his Mark upon them, both set their Marks upon them, and therefore they can swear that they are the same Papers that were taken out of Mrs. Mason's Trunk : Then, if Mrs. Mason swears true, they are the Papers of Mr. Layer, which were delivered to her by him ; and so tracing it from Hand to Hand, these are the same Papers that were found in Mrs. Mason's Custody. Mrs. Mason swears the same, and she also set her Mark upon them.

But, saith Mr. Layer, there is no Credit to be given to Mrs. Mason, she is an ill Woman, an infamous Woman, therefore her Evidence is not to be regarded.

Gentlemen, consider how this Matter stands ; in one of these Pacquets of Papers were found the Pretender's Receipts, which Mr. Layer before the Council said, he had desired Sir William Ellis to procure for him from the Pretender, and which he had accordingly procured, and that he had received them ; and these Receipts being in the Pacquet found upon Mrs. Mason, how came they there, if they had not been delivered to her by Mr. Layer ? Therefore these Receipts being in this Pacquet, plainly demonstrate that these Papers are the Papers of Mr. Layer, and were by him delivered to Mrs. Mason : And if they were his Papers, these Papers, and what is contained in them, will be a strong Evidence against Mr. Layer. Notwithstanding all this, says Mr. Layer, these were never my Papers ; it is Forgery or Perjury. Whether or no you will believe these Papers to be Mr. Layer's, when it appears those Receipts were found amongst them ; besides that, here is a Paper amongst them, that the Witness that is produced by Mr. Layer, one that was his Clerk, swears that it is his own Hand-Writing ; how came that there, if this be not the Bundle and Pacquet of Mr. Layer ? And on this they turn the Strength of their Case.

If this be so, consider, first here is a Scheme ; whose Hand-Writing it is, here hath been Variety of Evidence as to that. It is insisted on by the King's Counsel, that the Scheme is of Mr. Layer's Hand-Writing ; and if so, this is a stronger Evidence against Mr. Layer, than if the Papers had been only found in his Custody. How stands that ? Here is one that was Mr. Layer's Master formerly, who saith, he verily believes this to be the Hand-Writing of Mr. Layer ; if that be so, then all is well, and it ought to be read, not only as a Paper that was in his Possession, but as a Paper that was writ by him : But they dispute, and say, 'tis not his Hand-writing ; they ask this Witness how long it is since the Prisoner lived with him as his Clerk ? about fourteen or fifteen Years ago, says the Witness : A Man's Hand, say they, may be changed in that Time : But, saith the Witness, I verily believe it to be his Hand-Writing, for I have within these five Years received several Letters from him about Business, there being a Correspondence between him and me, I being his Agent in Town, and these Letters are of the same Character he used fourteen or fifteen Years ago, therefore I believe it to be his Hand-Writing.

But, say the Counsel for the King, we won't only prove this by these Gentlemen, but the Prisoner himself hath confessed it. Well, how stands that : He confessed, when he was asked at the Council-Table, what he knew of Arms that were provided ; he said, he knew of none. To which when it was said, how came you to mention it in this Scheme of your own Hand-Writing, there you take Notice of Arms that were provided ? Doth Mr. Layer disown it ? No, saith he, 'tis a Mistake, I should have writ, which should be provided.

Gentlemen, take this together, consider with your selves, what the Import of it is. He saith, when he is asked about these Arms, I should have writ, which should be provided. Whether this doth not amount to a Confession of this Matter, must be left to your Consideration, as a confirming Evidence of what the other Witnesses swear. But, saith Mr. Layer, let me call a Witness to prove that it is not my Hand-Writing : He calls a Gentleman, and he says it is not his Hand-Writing ; he calls his Clerk, and his Clerk saith it is not his Master's Hand. Here are two Witnesses : Then there is an additional Witness on the other Side, and that is, his own Confession. Whether it amounts to a Confession must be left to your Consideration ; but if this Scheme be not of his own Hand-Writing, it was a Scheme which he had in his Custody, and that alone had been a considerable Evidence against him. How came he by this Scheme ? What had he to do with it ?

The Scheme hath been read to you, which tells you the several Methods to be proceeded in. In the first Place, the Tower is to be seized, an Officer is to mount the Guard that would be in their Interest, and at nine a-Clock at Night they are to seize the Tower : Then they are to go to the Bank, and set a Guard there, after they have taken out Money from thence : After this he tells you of several other Guards that are to be set in other Places, and then a Party is to be sent to seize the King ; then he tells you, another Party is to be sent over the Water to seize his Royal Highness the Prince ; he calls him by a Cant Name, but 'tis plain he is meant.

If this be all his own Hand-Writing, it is a strong Evidence that he was in this Conspiracy ; but if he had only a Scheme of this Nature in his Custody, that will be an Evidence against him, though he did not write it.

Now whether every Body is not satisfied that these Bundles were his, when in these Bundles these Receipts signed by the Pretender himself, and the Paper that was of his Clerk's own Hand-Writing, were found ; it goes a great Way to confirm the Evidence of Mrs. Mason, who swears the Bundles to be his Papers.

These are Matters of Evidence, and must be left to your Consideration.

Then they go on and examine the treasonable Papers, the Notes, the Lists, &c.

To raise an Insurrection Money would be wanting ; saith Mr. Layer, I told Sir William Ellis this. Upon that there are Receipts signed by the Pretender, by which the Prisoner said they might take up Money on that Occasion. Sir William Ellis agrees with me, saith Mr. Layer, and accordingly sends me Receipts, and I had them them, and they were found in this Bundle of Papers; and how came they there, if they were not Mr. Layer's Papers?

Consider the other Papers; the Design being for an Insurrection, they are to engage the Guards in their Service; you see that several Papers are found in these Bundles that contain an Account of the Number of Men that were in such a Troop of Guards, the Number in such a Troop of Grenadiers, and tells you what the Numbers were; what was the meaning of all this? How came this Gentleman to be so solicitous in examining into the Number of Guards and Officers, but only to get a true State of this Matter, that he might know who were the Persons that were most likely to be corrupted, and what a Number of Enemies he might meet with on this Occasion.

These are very strong Circumstances against Mr. Layer, unless Mr. Layer can give any Account why he kept these Papers so carefully.

To go a little back, as to the Business of Mr. Lynch; it appears he did not know Mr. Lynch before this Affair was set on Foot; he rode out with him, goes to the Green Man with him, there they talked over this Affair, there he publishes that traitorous Declaration, and afterwards presented Lynch to my Lord North and Grey. How came they so intimately acquainted unless on this Occasion?

Then, Gentlemen, they go on and tell you, when this Gentleman was committed into the Custody of a Messenger he made his Escape, and this we look upon as an Evidence of Guilt, not a conclusive Evidence; a Man may escape tho' he is innocent, yet 'tis an Evidence that is material to be left to the Jury, and is proper for their Consideration; he is pursued and retaken; when he is retaken he is under great Consternation; he begs for the Lord's Sake they would let him go, and said it was an Arrest; he took out of his Pocket a great Number of Guineas, and said, they should have what Number they pleased, if they would let him go; this is a material Circumstance, and doth shew that this Gentleman was more than ordinary concerned in this Affair.

You will lay these Things together, and consider how far they satisfy you, that this Gentleman is guilty of the Treason.

Then they give you an Account how he did confess before the Lords of the Council every Thing that hath been sworn by the Witnesses: That he went to the Green Man in your County, and there consulted and agreed to carry on this Affair; that he did take out and read the Declaration; this is a strong Evidence, especially if compared with what he confessed, that he had Two Conferences with the Pretender at Rome; was kindly received by him, and had particular Marks of his Favour: He is desired to stand Godfather, and his Wife to stand Godmother to his Child; and accordingly they stood; he desires my Lord North and Grey to stand as Proxy for the Pretender, and the Dutchess of Ormond to be Proxy for the Pretender's Spouse; and they were Proxies at the Christening of his Child. These are the Circumstances that have been laid before you on Behalf of the King against the Prisoner at the Bar. But 'tis said on the Behalf of the Prisoner, that he stands at the Bar upon his Life and Death, which will depend upon your Verdict.

I think you ought to consider of that, and that I hope will induce you to consider and weigh well the Evidence, and not to find the Prisoner Guilty, unless you are satisfied he is so.

It is true, here is the Life of a Man in the Case, but then you must consider likewise the Misery and Desolation, the Blood and Confusion, that must have happened if this had taken Effect, and put one against the other; and I believe that Consideration, which is on the Behalf of the King, will be much the strongest.

These Things are proper to be considered, in Order to prepare you to be careful in examining and weighing the Evidence well; but in giving your Verdict I hope you will lay them all aside; you will consider the Weight of the Evidence on either Side, and the Credit of the two Witnesses, and how far they are supported by a Writing under his own Hand, a Confession at the Council-Table; consider how far that will support their Evidence, though not Men of the clearest Reputation.

A Cypher hath been taken Notice of, by which were explained several Names that such and such Persons and Things were to be called by; there was the Name of Atkins, which was to signify the Pretender; there was another Name for the Pretender, and that was St. John; and conformable to these Names they have read several Letters, by which it appears that a treasonable Correspondence was carried on by Mr. Layer. This is the Circumstance of the Evidence that hath been laid before you. Consider this Evidence, and the Objections that have been made to it, and how far those Objections have been answered.

Discharge the Part of Honest Men, consider and weigh well the Evidence.

Upon the whole Matter, if you do believe that there was an Overt-Act of Treason in the County of Essex, and that it was proved by Mr. Lynch, and confirmed by the Confession of Mr. Layer; and if there be any Overt-Act in another County, as his lifting or employing any to lift or engage Men in the Service of the Pretender, then you will find the Prisoner guilty.

If you are not satisfied these Things are true, then you'll acquit him.

The Jury withdrew for about half an Hour, to consider of their Verdict, and when they returned into Court, were called over by the Clerk of the Crown and answered to their Names.

Cl. of the Cr. Gentlemen of the Jury, are you agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of the Cr. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of the Cr. Christopher Layer, hold up your Hand. (Which he did.)

You of the Jury look upon the Prisoner.

How say you? Is Christopher Layer guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty;

Jury. Guilty.

Cl. of the Cr. What Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements had he at the Time of the said High-Treason committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge?

Jury. None.

Cl. of the Cr.

Cl. of the Cr. Hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it. You say that Christopher Layer is guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted; and you say he had no Goods nor Chattels, Lands nor Tenements at the Time of the said High-Treason committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge, and so you say all.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray a Rule may be made to bring up the Prisoner to receive Sentence.

Mr. Just. Eyre. He must have four Days to move in Arrest of Judgment. Let there be a Rule to bring him again upon Thursday next.

Then the Prisoner was remanded back to the Tower.

Die Martis 27 die Novembris, 1722.

Christopher Layer, Esq; was brought to the Bar of the Court of King's Bench, in order to receive Sentence.

Mr. Att. Gen. MY Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar stands convicted of High-Treason; I pray your Lordship's Judgment against him for the King.

Cl. of the Cr. Christopher Layer, hold up thy Hand, (which he did) Thou hast been indicted for High Treason, for compassing and imagining the Death of the King, and thereupon been arraigned; and thereunto hast pleaded not Guilty, and for thy Trial put thy self upon God and thy Country, which Country hath found thee Guilty; what can't thou now say for thy self why the Court should not give Judgment of Death against thee according to Law?

Mr. Hungerford. Is it your Lordship's Pleasure to give any Directions touching the Matter of the Prisoner's being in Irons? I hope your Lordship will order them to be taken off, at least during his Attendance here.

L. C. Just. I don't know, there is none of the Cases that have been, which go further than during the Time of his Trial; his Trial is over, if he hath any thing to offer to the Court, and thinks he may not be able to do it so well while he is under these Irons, I would recommend it to Mr. Attorney, not to make a Precedent of it, that his Irons may be taken off.

Prisoner. Yes my Lord, I have a great deal to say, which I shall offer in Arrest of Judgment.

Mr. Hungerford. He hath complain'd since he hath been here, that he is in great Pain, in the Position he stands with his Irons.

L. C. Just. Come, Brother Pengelly, have you any thing to object against his Irons being taken off, or do you consent to it?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we don't oppose it.

Then the Irons were taken off.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Layer, after a long and a fair Trial, hath been found guilty of High-Treason; and on Behalf of the King, we pray the Judgment of the Court against the Prisoner.

Mr. Hungerford. By your Lordship's Indulgence, I am Counsel for the Prisoner at the Bar, I have, and I hope shall continue to do him what Service I can: The Prisoner's Life is at Stake, and I hope, I shall not be supposed to be troublesome, if I desire a Record to be read, which hath not been yet read in Court; it is the Venire, and that being part of the Record, we think we are proper to have it read.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We apprehend it is such a Request as has never been made: If they have any Objections to any Part of the Proceedings, or any Exceptions to take, they are at Liberty to take them, and to state their Objections, that the Court, if necessary, may refer to the Record to see whether they are just or no; but to come and desire the Process to be laid before the Court for the Information of the Prisoner and his Counsel, it never hath been done: They are entitled now to offer any Thing, if they can, in Arrest of Judgment.

Mr. Att. Gen. If what they desire should be granted, it would be a Precedent which might be of very ill Consequence, and I apprehend what they desire, is directly contrary to Law; there are no Authorities that the Prisoner should either have Copies of the Process, or that the Process should be read to him, only to enable him to find a Fault. I believe no Instance can be given whatsoever, that it was ever allowed in a Case of this Nature, if it be done now, it will be a Precedent for the future.

The Act of Parliament went as far as was thought proper, Copies of the Indictment and Copies of the Names of the Jury, are directed to be delivered to the Prisoner; but as to any of the Process, the Act gives no Direction, and therefore as what they desire is neither founded on Law, nor Precedent, we hope it shall not be granted.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Hungerford has been pleased, in the Course of this Case, frequently to put us in mind, as he does now, that what he has insisted on, was in favour of Life. That is a moving Argument, but it proves nothing, save that the Prisoner ought to have all the Indulgence which the Law and the settled Forms of Proceeding do allow; but I apprehend it is a Reason for no more. What is asked, is of more Consequence than appears in this particular Case; and whatsoever your Lordship doth now, will be made a Precedent for the future.

My Lord, before the Act of Parliament, which allows the Prisoner to have a Copy of his Indictment, and of the Pannel of the Jury, it is most certain, he was not entitled to have such Copies. Before that Law was made, he was informed of nothing but by having the Indictment read to him in Court upon his Arraignment, and that not barely to give him an Opportunity of taking Exceptions to it, but from the Necessity of the Thing, because it was the Charge to which he was to answer. Then comes the Act of Parliament, the 7th Year of King William, and allows the Prisoner a Copy of his Indictment, and of the Pannel of his Jury. But the Legislature, when they had these Matters under their Consideration, and seem to have intended to give at least all the Indulgence, consistent with Reason, to Prisoners in Cases of High-Treason, even at that Time they went no further, and did not think fit to direct that to be done, which is now desired on the Behalf of this Gentleman. Therefore this Motion of Mr. Hungerford's must be understood to be made at Common Law; but I must beg leave to rely upon it, until some Precedent is produced on the other Side, that there is no Instance whatsoever, either before or since the Act of Parliament, wherein any Record cord of the Proceedings hath been read to the Prisoner besides the Indictment. This is a Consideration merely of Practice and Regularity; and in a Point of that kind, where there is no Precedent, I hope your Lordship will not make one.

Mr. Serj. Cheshire. My Lord, the Carriage and Behaviour of the King's Council towards the Prisoner, hath been so fair and candid, that it deserves Thanks from him, rather than Complaint; and I believe this Temper will hold on to the last: But my Lord, we have no Authority to give up the Right of the Crown, or to fix that on the Crown to grant, which the Prisoner hath no Right to demand.

My Lord, it must be admitted, that this is a Demand made at Common Law, and if it be a Demand of Right, I don't know but it may go to every Thing in an equal Degree; that he hath the same Right to demand a sight of the Commission; Certiorari, &c. I don't know but he hath the same Right to enquire into every Step that is upon Record in this Case. The Officers concerned, I dare say, have done their Duty. There is nothing of Law, but what comes in upon the Statute of King William; that he hath had the Benefit of to the full extent of it; he hath had a Copy of the Pannel of the Jury; he hath had a Copy of the Indictment, and in such Time as was proper for him to make due use of it; and this they ask now, we apprehend is only to lengthen out Time, and to introduce that which may be greatly inconvenient. We have very little Reason of apprehending that it can be of any Profit to him; but for Example sake, and as he hath no Right to it, we cannot come into a Consent to it.

Therefore we submit it to your Lordship's Consideration, from the Inconvenience that may ensue from the Precedent, whether the Prisoner hath any Right to make this Demand.

Mr. Hungerford. I acknowledge that before the 7th of King William, the Prisoner was not entitled to have a Copy of his Indictment, and therefore I so far concur with the Gentlemen of the other Side, that we are not entitled to a Copy of the Record of the Venire Facias. But what I humbly pray now, is, what I apprehend we were entitled to before the Act of Parliament for regulating Trials in Cases of High Treason. The Instances are several, where in the Course of a Trial for High Treason, before that Act which gave the Prisoner several new Advantages, the Prisoner hath desired his Indictment to be read, and the Court never denied it; to have any other Part of the Record to be read, seems to be as reasonable as the Indictment. The Objection had been stronger, if we had desired for the Prisoner at the Bar, the Copy of the Venire; there we should have been justly told that we had been entitled to nothing but what the Act of Parliament had directed, viz. the Copy of the Indictment. We pray a Copy of nothing, but only pray that a small Part of the Record that makes up the whole Record of this Gentleman's Conviction, may be read. And this, with Submission, we hope we are entitled to have for the same Reason as the Indictment was read before the Act. Coll. Sidney desired, that his Indictment should be read, and it was so. And can any Reason be assigned, why the Venire, which is but a Part of the Record, should not be read as well as the Indictment? no
