I won't presume to act the Casuist, or trouble your Lordships with any Niceties, by questioning, whether what passes upon that Occasion ought to be esteemed an Oath or no; but, my Lords, I hope I may venture to say, that it is very plain, is no Oath of Office in general, for this Reason, because if it had been so, the once taking it had been sufficient; and there would have been no occasion of repeating it Annually, in the slight Cursory manner Mr. Ayres has given an Account of, upon one particular occasion; which likewise shews, that what is then done, is confined to that matter only, which is then transacting, and not intended to be generally obligatory in other Things.

If the accepting of Presents, upon occasion of recommending, or admitting Officers to Places, had been understood to be Criminal, in the Eye of the Common Law, or against the Statute of 12 Rich. II. no doubt, but in so great a length of Time, Precedents might have been produced, where Persons had been censured, or punished, for a Practice, which has been represented to your lordships as the most vile, and pernicious Sort of Bribery and Corrup-

Corruption; and yet, notwithstanding the many marks of the Severity of the Government against Bribery and Corruption, which have been taken Notice of, the Gentlemen of the House of Commons have been pleased to acknowledge, that there is no Precedent, no Judgment to establish and warrant what they assert to be Law in this Point.

My Lords, I beg leave to say, that a stronger Argument than this, can hardly be thought of, to prove that this Behaviour is not illegal: It is a method of reasoning in our Law, and, I conceive, consonant to the general reason of Mankind; That where a Thing never has been done, it is to be supposed there is no Ground or Foundation for the doing it. Nor can this Way of Reasoning be avoided, but by supposing that there never have been any Instances of this Nature before, or those so rare, and private, that the Government had no Opportunity of taking notice of them: A Supposition, my Lords, so extraordinary, that there is hardly room to admit of it: And therefore, when we shall, with your Lordships Permission, lay before you, Instances of this Thing having been frequently and openly done; it will not be so much in order to prove the contrary of such a Supposition, as to give an opportunity to your Lordships, and to intreat you to reflect on the great Abilities, and unquestionable Integrity of those excellent Persons, who have acted in the same Manner; the Notoriety and Openness with which this has been transacted, and the perfect Silence of the grand Inquisitors of the Nation, and the whole Legislature in Regard thereto: And then to consider, the Clearness and force of such a Comment upon the Law, both from the Actions of those, whose Characters will not allow of a Suspicion, that they would act contrary to what they apprehended to be the Law: And from the Silence of those, who should and would, no doubt of it, have taken severe Notice of it, if it had been thought to have been so.

But suppose, after all that has been said, that this was still a doubtful Point, would it not, my Lords, be extremely hard to rouse up an old antiquated Law, which for so many Centuries has quietly slept, without exerting it self, without fixing any mark, or leaving any Traces of its Force and Vigour, to point out the Danger attending such a Practice; a Practice that has been owned and countenanced by such great and unexceptionable men, and objected to by none; and which from thence, might well receive the Appearance of being fair and innocent: Would it not, I say, my Lords, be very hard, without some previous Notice of the Danger, to put this Law in Execution, to unsheath this rusty Sword, to wound this Noble Earl with? We hope your Lordships would think so, if it were capable of hurting him, which we humbly apprehend it is not; and that, if there is any Doubt remaining with your Lordships, as to the legality of the Earl's Behaviour in this Point, that the Statute of 6th. of Edw. VI. will clear it up beyond question; and that it will manifestly appear by that Statute, that accepting of Presents is neither Malum in se, against the Common Law, or the Statute of Rich. II. and that this Statute of Edw. VI. must be looked upon as a declarative Law in those Points, or otherwise, it must be allowed (which none sure will suppose) that the Legislature of this Kingdom has made a Provision to sanctify a moral Evil; (for that is the Import of Malum in se) to allow, permit, and even encourage, contrary to the Statute and Common Law, a Practice not only immoral, and vile, but of the most pernicious Tendency and Consequence, if the Representation made of it by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons is to be regarded.

My Lords, I shall pass by the fourth Paragraph of that Statute, whereby it is provided, that the said Act should not extend to Offices of Inheritance; tho', I presume, the Largeness of the Estate can hardly be thought to alter the moral Nature of the Action. By the 6th Paragraph, there is a Saving for all Bargains, Sales, Promises, and Agreements, of or for any Office, made before the first of March; and such Bargains, Sales, and Contracts, are exempted out of the force of that Act. Your Lordships will be pleased to observe, This Session of Parliament began the 23d. of January; so that this saving Clause makes a Provision for Futurity. My Lords, this would be to establish Iniquity by a law, if the accepting a Present on Occasion of admitting a Person into an Office, was immoral and criminal, as has been asserted. But if it were so, and likewise against the Statute of 12 Rich. II. and contrary to the supposed Oath, taken in pursuance of that Statute; what, my Lords, must be thought of the last Paragraph, which provides, that the Act should not extend to the Chief Justices, or Justices of Assize, that then were, or thereafter should be? These all Annually take the same Oath (if it is to pass as such) upon the same Occasion of nominating of Sheriffs, as Mr. Ayres has informed your Lordships; and are consequently, by Virtue thereof, under the same Obligation in this respect, as a Lord Chancellor: And can your Lordships suppose that so many Reverend and Learned Persons, who, from their known Duty of Attendance, must be presumed to be present in your Lordships House, whilst this Law was there under Consideration, would have forborn informing their then Lordships, how contradictory those Parts of this Statute were to the Common Law, and the Statutes of this Realm, especially that of Richard II. Can it possibly be conceived, that the whole Legislature would pass a Law, not only to allow, in several Instances, the Practice of what was so contrary to the Law of Reason, as well as the Common and Statute Law; but even to give a Licence, and Encouragement, to break an Oath prescribed by Statute, and Annually repeated? And that no Body should ever scruple the doing so, or discover the Illegality of this Practice, but upon this unfortunate Occasion? And yet, my Lords, monstrous as these Suppositions are, they must (as I humbly conceive) be allowed of, or it must be granted that such Acceptance of Presents is not Malum in se, or contrary to the Statute of Richard II.

II. And I hope it is plain, that this Statute of Edward VI. is in effect a declarative law in those Points.

My Lords, The Gentlemen of the House of Commons seemed sensible of these Difficulties; and therefore they have with great Industry, endeavoured to distinguish what the Earl has done, from the common and ordinary way of accepting of Presents, upon such Occasions. They have told your Lordships, that his method was Haggling and Extorsive; and have given it abundance of other hard Names: They have, to confirm it, informed your Lordships, that the Prices lately given, have been higher than those formerly accepted upon the like Occasions: Tho' they have not condescended to attempt the Proof of it.

My Lords, As the manner of the Earl's taking of Presents will depend in a great measure upon the Evidence, which has been offered to your Lordships, upon these Articles; I shall beg leave to take some short Notice of it. As to the 9th Article, Mr. Thomas Bennet has been pleased to inform your Lordships, that he did desire to have the Earl's Recommendation of Mr. Hamersly, to succeed him as Clerk of the Custodies; and that being told at the second meeting with Mr. Cottingham, that a Present would be expected, he said it was a very hard and unreasonable Thing to expect a Present from him, who had so lately paid a large Sum, upon his being admitted into his other Office: But upon its being insisted on, that 100 Guineas should be paid, he was forced to comply therewith, and agree to pay it.

My Lords, I humbly insist upon it, that if an entire Credit were to be given to what Mr. Bennet has said upon this Occasion, it would not amount to a Proof of the Charge contained in this Article: The Corruption and Extortion therein complained of, being restrained to the Consideration of permitting and accepting the surrender of the Office there mentioned; all the other Parts of that Article being only introductory to, or in Aggravation of that supposed Offence. But Mr. Bennet has not mentioned to your Lordships one Syllable of the Earl's having refused to permit or accept a surrender of that Office, or of his having received any Sum of money in Consideration of his permitting or accepting Mr. Bennet's Surrender thereof.

But, my Lords, we must beg leave to submit it to your Lordships Consideration, what Credit is to be given to Mr. Bennet's Evidence, so far as it does go, for this Purpose. The Gentlemen of the House of Commons have thought fit to call Mr. Cottingham, as a Witness to this Article; who owns that in his first Discourse with Mr. Bennet upon this Occasion, he told him, he believed a Present would be expected to the Great Seal, and that Mr. Bennet freely offered 100 Guineas, before Mr. Cottingham spoke to the Earl about that Affair. He expressly contradicts Mr. Bennet in what he said of Mr. Cottingham's insisting upon 100 Guineas, and Mr. Bennet's Agreement to give that Sum at the second meeting, Mr. Cottingham swearing, that the offer of 100 Guineas was voluntary on

Mr. Bennet's Part; and that it was at their first meeting. There are several other Contradictions in their Evidence; but I shall only take Notice of that, where Mr. Bennet pretends, that Mr. Cottingham asserted he did not know Mr. Hamersly, his next door Neighbour. This Mr. Cottingham denies, and Mr. Bennet is forced in some measure to retract what he had so positively sworn; and comes down to a Belief only, that Mr. Cottingham said so, but will not be positive.

It is something surprizing, that after they have done Mr. Cottingham the Honour to call him as a Witness, and given him a Credit by so doing, Hints should be flung out, that Mr. Cottingham knows no body, except where there is Gold in the Case; that Gold is a great clearer of the Eye-sight, and the like Insinuations, to the lessening his Character. But why then did they call him as a Witness? Surely, my Lords, if he is a Person not to be believed, it was not altogether so proper to produce him as a Witness before this August Assembly. But, my Lords, we shall ease them in that matter, by thoroughly establishing Mr. Cottingham's Reputation; tho' it is something unusual to support the Reputation of a Witness produced by the other side: And we hope your Lordships will then find no difficulty in determining whether Mr. Bennet or Mr. Cottingham deserves most to be credited.

In support of the 5th Article, Mr. Kynaston is called as a Witness. I shall take no notice of any part of his Evidence, but what relates particularly to the Charge in this Article, the money paid upon his Admittance, and the Circumstances of that Transaction. Mr. Kynaston indeed has said, that he would willingly have paid but 1000 l. upon his Admittance; and accordingly offered that Sum, which Mr. Cottingham would not hearken to; and therefore he submitted to pay 1500 Guineas; but he owns at the same time, that he has not a very exact Remembrance of what passed upon this Occasion. Mr. Baily, to whom Mr. Kynaston refers, and who was his Agent in this Business, in his Evidence has given your Lordships an Account, that Mr. Kynaston, when he understood that 1500 Guineas was apprehended to be the Present he intended to make, said, that he thought it was only 1500 l. but mentions nothing of the Offer of 1000 l. It is very strange, if that had been the Case, that he should not have taken notice of that likewise. But Mr. Cottingham, who is again called as a Witness, shews the reason why no notice could be taken of such an Offer; and that is, because there really was none such. He denies that Mr. Kynaston offered 1000 l. and swears that the Sum offered by Mr. Kynaston, was 1500 Guineas, and withal declared, that he would acquiesce under what the Earl should think fit in that matter; and informs your Lordships, upon his being interrogated by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons to that Purpose, that he never did acquaint the Earl with what passed upon that occasion till the whole thing was agreed and settled; and that, when he was informed of it, he expressed himself to be well satisfied therewith. Surely, my Lords, here are no extraordinary Endeavours or Artifices used to enhance the Price; no haggling, by first naming one Sum, then another, ther; but at once the matter is proposed, and at once agreed and concluded.

To prove the 6th Article, my Lords, Mr. Thomas Bennet, is called again; and here again the like misfortune happens as before; Mr. Bennet differs widely from Mr. Cottingham, who is called upon the same side to prove the same Article. Mr. Bennet says, that he acquainted Mr. Cottingham, that he thought 1000 l. was enough to give upon his Admittance, and with his Reasons for such Opinion; but that, however, he was willing to give 1000 Guineas. Mr. Cottingham has Sworn that no such Offer was made, that nothing of that Nature passed; but that Mr. Bennet, upon being informed what had been done before upon the like occasions, freely offered fifteen hundred Guineas.

My Lords, The very nature of the Thing, upon the Circumstances agreed on all Hands, speaks strongly in favour of Mr. Cottingham, and in contradiction to Mr. Bennet; as to what is asserted by each of them upon this occasion. Your Lordships observe what condition the Earl is agreed to be in at that time; had Mr. Bennet apprehended that he had so very hard terms put upon him, as he would not have your Lordships believe he did: Would he not have staid some little time, to have seen the effect of so violent a distemper, as a Pleuretic Fever, which his Lordship then laboured under in a very high degree? especially when Mr. Bennet appeared at the same time to be in no very good State of Health himself; of which he was reminded by Mr. Cottingham; who was so far from acting the rapacious part, in behalf of the Great Seal (which was not in a way to suffer, by the admission of a Person likely to make a new vacancy by Death) that perceiving Mr. Bennet to look yellow, and out of order, he desired him to consider what he was going to do, when he took a Place for Life in his Condition. Mr. Bennet told him, it was only a Cold; and that therefore he would proceed. This Gentleman, who was so cautious, as he pretends, as to the Sum he was to give upon his Admittance, and which he then thought to be so unreasonable, hurries on this Affair, under these Circumstances of his own, as well as the Earl's State of Health; and tho' out of order, as he himself owned, presses an extorted Sum of 1500 Guineas, into the Hands of, probably, a dying Chancellor. Will not your Lordships think it more likely, that Mr. Bennet apprehended, that as the Price of Things then went, he might not, under a new Chancellor, come into the Office upon so easy Terms as were then offered him; rather than that he thought himself to be hardly used upon that Occasion? And here, my Lords, I beg leave to take Notice of what has been urged, to induce your Lordships to look upon this Acceptance of Presents, by the Earl in particular, to be extorsive; which is, that the Sums of money given upon these, and the like Occasions, are lately greatly increased. Your Lordships will be pleased to observe upon what has hitherto appeared, that the Sums taken by the Earl upon the Admission of a master into the Room of one deceased, have been constantly less than what the masters, who have resigned, have had as a Consideration for so doing. And it is very easy to account for the late increase of the Sums given upon these Occasions, without any Extortion in the matter. As personal Estates have vastly increased within these few Years, and Settlements, and Provisions for Families, have been made out of the Publick Stocks and Funds, the Business of the Court of Chancery hath increased proportionably; and consequently, People would be more desirous of, and give more money for the Purchase of these Offices, which were improved by such increase of Business. And as the common Interest of money is grown lower; it is natural to suppose, that People would be the more ready to invest their Fortunes in those Things, which were likely to produce a better Income, even in Proportion to the risque that was run upon their Lives, than could be made of money in an ordinary way. But whether that, which I have mentioned, or whatever else may be the Cause of it, it is so plain and notorious that all Places and Offices have of late Years increased in their Value, that it would be mispending your Lordships time to enter into the Proof of it.

My Lords, As to the Admission of Mr. Elde into his office, and the Acceptance of a Sum of money upon that occasion, which makes up the Charge contained in the 7th Article; and as to so much of the 8th Article, as relates to the like Transaction with Mr. Thurston; there is not the least Colour or pretence from the Evidence, which has been given to support those Charges, to ground a Supposition of Haggling, or driving a Bargain. On the contrary, from that very Evidence it appears, that what was done by Mr. Elde, and Mr. Thurston, was perfectly free and voluntary; and attended with a good deal of Solitude and Uneasiness in the latter, lest his Offers should not be accepted; the Circumstances of which I shall not trouble your Lordships with repeating. And tho' from the Troubles he has since met with in that Office, he has something altered his opinion of it, your Lordships will be guided by what he then thought, and acted. Your Lordships will be pleased to observe from the same Evidence, that great part of the money presented by those Gentlemen, has been returned to them again; and tho' it is some time afterwards before it was done, it was plain, there was a much earlier Intention of doing so. Mr. Elde has informed your Lordships, that in May following his Admission the Earl intimated to him, that he would return part of the money; And Mr. Thurston received several messages, which plainly appeared to be in order to a Return of part of the money which he had given; tho', on occasion of his being out of town, it was some time after before he knew the meaning thereof, or had the money returned.

My Lords, There is one particular Circumstance in the 8th Article, which has taken up a great deal of your Time; that, I mean, of the Deficiency in Mr. Borret's office. Why that matter was inserted there, and why it has been so much laboured, and your Lordships troubled with so much Proof about it, I must own myself at a loss to conceive; unless it be allowed and admitted, that the taking of money, upon the Admission of a Person to the office of one of the masters of the Court of Chancery, is not purely and simply Malum in se, illegal, and contrary to the Statute of Rich. II. but that, if it be done to raise money to make good the deficiency in the office, as was done in the Case of Mr. Edwards, which your Lordships have upon this occasion heard of, it is right and well. How otherwise can the Deficiency in the office be an Aggravation of the supposed Crime of taking a Present upon the Admittance of a Person into it? Is it unreasonable to admit a new master into an office wherein there is a deficiency? Is it not as necessary to fill up that Vacancy as any other?

Certainly more so, in order to have one, whose Duty obliges him to a more particular Care of the Affairs thereof, which seem more to want it. The Aggravation then of the Fault, or rather the Fault itself, must consist in the not applying the money received, towards the discharge of the deficiency. But how can it be a Fault not to do so, unless there had been an obligation so to have applied it? And how can there be an obligation to make such Application of the money, where there is so strong an obligation, as has been insisted on, not to raise any money at all by such means? My Lords, we humbly apprehend, that the endeavour to aggravate what is charged as a Crime in this Article, has weakened, at least, what is laid as the Foundation for its being a Crime; and this with little or no Success in the Proof, attempted to be made of this matter; so far, I mean, as relates to the Earl's Knowledge of the Deficiency, or his want of Care to be informed of the State of that office.

I won't repeat what Mr. Godfrey has said upon this occasion; your Lordships perceive that he and Mr. John Bennet were thought the fittest Persons to inspect the Affairs of Mr. Borret, after his decease; and were accordingly appointed to do so: And upon having examined Things, as well as they then could, were both of opinion, as Mr. Godfrey says, that there was no likelihood that there would be any Deficiency; and with this the Earl was acquainted. Mr. Bennet indeed, differs something from Mr. Godfrey, as to the Account which he gave of this matter; but not so much, tho' his Account was to be taken, as would answer the purpose for which he was called; the aggravating the Charge in this Article against the noble Earl; who, there is no Room to doubt, would have acted as generously in this Case, as he did in the Case of Mr. Edwards, upon his coming into Dormer's office, if the Circumstances, as represented to him, had been in any near degree alike.

My Lords, I have thus stated the matter of these several Articles, to the best of my Remembrance, in its true light, as it stands upon the Evidence already given. We shall beg leave to call some Witnesses to prove, that several noble and great Persons have taken Presents upon these occasions; men of excellent Characters; some of whom several of the Gentlemen of the House of Commons have taken such Notice of, that I may safely venture to say, they will concur in the Opinion, that they were Persons of so much Integrity, that they would not have taken such Presents, if they had thought it illegal so to have done; and of so great Abilities, that their Judgment must be of the greatest weight in this Point. We shall further trouble your Lordships to explain the nature of the Payment of 64 l. which Mr. Thomas Bennet told your Lordships he made, over and above the 100 Guineas, paid by him on Account of the Office of Clerk of the Custodies. He might, no doubt, if he had pleased, have informed your Lordships, that the most part of this 64 l. was either paid to the Clerks of the Office, or belonging to other Officers, and that not above 33 s. came to the Great Seal; and we apprehend that to have done so, would have been more agreeable to the Sincerity, with which a Witness ought to speak, than to have left it in that general manner, where it might look like another Payment to the Earl. And I hope your Lordships will excuse my observing upon this Occasion, the unhappy Circumstances of the noble Earl at the Bar: If he takes a small Sum, as this of the 100 Guineas for Instance, it is poor, pitiful, and a Prostitution of his Honour; if a larger Sum is taken, he is avaricious, greedy, rapacious, and I don't know what: Tho' your Lordships will observe, the Sums accepted are regulated according to the Nature of the Office, on Account of which they are given. My Lords, his very Care in other Instances is made his Fault, his Actions must be all supposed to be done with corrupt Views; and yet his not Acting is equally blamed; it is Carelessness, and Neglect. This is the Light in which his whole Behaviour has been set before your Lordships, and that with all the Aggravations and Vehemence imaginable. But it is your Lordships, who, in a superior and calmer Station, are to weigh and judge of these matters. It is from you the noble Earl is to expect Judgment; and it is his Happiness, that it is so. And in order thereto, when we have laid this Evidence before your Lordships, together with an Order, which shews the Payment of the monies received from Mr. Thomas Bennet and Mr. Kynaston, into the Court of Chancery; we shall submit the matter of these Articles to your Lordships. And notwithstanding all the severe Things which have been said upon this Occasion, we humbly hope your Lordships will be of Opinion, that the noble Earl at your Lordships Bar, is not guilty of any of the Charges contained in these Articles.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we now proceed to call our Witnesses, and to prove the several Facts we have opened; and we beg leave to proceed in the same method as the Gentlemen, who are the Managers for the House of Commons, have done. As they began with the 9th Article, so we in our Evidence shall likewise begin there; and shew that Presents have constantly been made to the Great Seal upon all Admissions into the Office of the Clerk of the Custodies; and that in many other Offices under the Direction of the Great Seal, Presents have been usually made by the respective Officers on their Admissions; and this hath been the known uninterrupted Usage; and every Chancellor hath taken them as customary Presents. We desire, in the first place, that Mr. Roger Lewis may be called.

Mr. Roger Lewis sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We desire he may be asked, how long he hath been concerned as a Deputy in the Office of the Clerk of the Custodies?

Mr. Lewis. I have assisted as Clerk of the Custodies of Lunatics and Idiots, for the space of about 35 Years.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, who was the first that came into the Office of Clerk of the Custodies in his Remembrance?

Mr. Lewis. Mr. Henry Wynne was the first that came in after I was Clerk there.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Who succeeded Mr. Wynne?

Mr. Lewis. Mr. Roger Thompson?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, whether Mr. Thompson be now living or dead?

Mr. Lewis. Mr. Thompson, as I have been informed, hath been dead about these 9 or 10 Years past.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, whether any Present or Compliment was made to the Great Seal on Mr. Thompson's Admission?

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, I object to the Answering of that question; and desire to know, whether your Lordships will have Evidence against Gentlemen that are dead, who are no way capable of Answering for themselves before your lordships here? If my Lord can shew any Title or Right he had to sell this Place, we are ready to hear him; but to give Evidence against a Person that is dead, and cannot speak for himself; I submit that to your Lordships.

Mr.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, this matter is very proper to be objected to now, and it is very necessary for your lordships Determination in the Beginning of this Affair. I see by this Question, and their Opening, what large Compass the Gentlemen have taken, not only as to these Offices, but as to many other Offices for which Presents were given. I take the proper Question before your lordships to be, Whether this be lawful by the laws and Statutes of the Realm? and if that be the Question, I submit it whether it is material to give an Account what other Persons have done? Whether, when a Person is brought upon a Prosecution for an Offence against the Law, it be material for him to say, that other Persons have been guilty of the same Crimes? This is a Question at Law upon the Construction of the Statute; and they say it is necessary for them to give these Instances, to shew the Judgment of those great Persons upon the Act of Parliament; but sure I am, it was never yet attempted to give in Evidence the Actions of other Persons in order to expound a Statute. The Exposition of a Statute must be founded on the Words of the Law, and not on the Actions of other Persons. In all the Experience I have had in cases of Prosecutions for Crimes founded on the Common Law, or on Acts of Parliament, Gentlemen argue from what the law is, what Authorities have been in those Cases, and what the Construction hath been in former Judgments. My lords, this is a matter of great Consideration to your Lordships, not only upon the Account of the Precedent, but also upon the Account of the Time that your Lordships are like to spend, if you are to go through all the Offices of the law, to shew how many great men have accepted Presents. It will take up a great deal of Time, without any Fruit at all. But, my Lords, there are other Considerations which will prove it unreasonable to admit of this Evidence: At present your lordships have under your Consideration the Case of this noble Lord within your Bar; but would they in Defence of him impeach others, not here to defend themselves? Many of them are dead, others are living: Will you try Persons not accused, and without being present to answer for themselves? But, my lords, with respect to ourselves, is it reasonable for us to take upon us the Examination of several Facts, without knowing who the Persons charged are, what the Circumstances of the Case were? Are we to shew the Difference, or state the Circumstances? It is impossible for us to do it. My Lords, this being the Nature of the Case, it is a matter for your lordships Judgment, now in the Beginning, that your lordships may see the Extensiveness of the Evidence they have hinted at, and intend to produce. That which we insist upon is two things, that it is not material, and that there is no manner of Notice for the Persons so charged to make any Defence, or to shew how the Circumstances of the Case were. So, my Lords, we must beg leave to have your lordships Judgment in this matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, if the noble lord produceth any one to make out his Innocence, we do not oppose it. But if the noble Lord endeavours to shew what the law is, from the Practice of other People, it is altogether improper. It is impossible that the law can be judged of by the Practice of other People in committing the same Facts. That can't have the Weight of the Opinion of a great Man. The Opinion of a learned Person, not con-cern'd in the Question, is an Opinion of weight; but the Opinion of a Person concerned in the Question, is not to be look'd upon as of any Authority. If the noble Lord makes use of this kind of Evidence, by way of mitigation, or of lessening his Offence, in that View it can be of no Significancy: Because the Aggravation or Mitigation of the noble Lord's Offence must arise from the particular Circumstances, Manner, and Facts of his Offence. We must submit it therefore to your lordships Consideration, whether this is a proper Inquiry or no.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we beg leave to insist upon it, that this is a proper Question, and very material for the noble Earl's Defence. He hath insisted in his Answer, 'That what is objected to him in this Instance, hath been long used and practised in the Time of his Predecessors; and that such Presents have been reckoned among the ancient and known Perquisites of the Great Seal; and the making and accepting thereof hath been notorious to all the World, and never before looked upon to be criminal, or complained of as such; and that he humbly hopes, that the giving or receiving of a Present on such an Occasion, is neither criminal in itself, nor by the Common Law of this Realm; and that there is not any Act of Parliament, by which the same is subjected to any Punishment or Judgment, which can be prayed in this Prosecution; and the said Earl further hath said, that he thinks himself obliged humbly to lay this before your lordships, not only in his own Defence, but in Vindication of the Honour of so many great and excellent men, who have been his Predecessors in the same Office, and have all along done the same, for which he is now complained of; and also of others, who have been Lord Chief Justices of the King's Bench, and Common-Pleas, Masters of the Rolls, and Judges, who have likewise received Presents in money, upon the Admission of the several Officers under them in the respective Courts of Justice wherein they presided; and who, the said Earl is assured, never apprehended themselves to be guilty of any Crime against any the good and wholesome Laws or Statutes of this Realm: And therefore we take it to be our Duty to give proper Evidence to support this Part of the noble Earl's Answer.' But, my Lords, it is objected by the Gentlemen that are Managers for the House of Commons, that they are not prepared to enter into this Proof, because they had no Notice that such Evidence would be given: In Answer to which we humbly submit it, that the Answer the noble Lord hath given, that several presiding Officers in the Courts of Law and Equity have always received such Presents, is sufficient Notice to them to be prepared to answer such Evidence as might be offer'd to support this Allegation. My Lords, as to the other Objection, that the Opinions of great men are not Evidence in their own Cases, we submit it that in this Case it is a material Circumstance. Though the Precedents of great men, (whose Names they are unwilling to hear) who have taken Presents in like Cases, and not thought it criminal, may not controul your Lordships Judgment in this Particular, yet I humbly apprehend that such Instances cannot but have great weight in the Event of this Case. They are material Circumstances, strong Inducements to incline your Lordships to believe, that this noble Lord had had no avaricious, no corrupt Design, in accepting the common customary Presents that were voluntarily tendred to him. And since it is made so material a Part of his Defence, and that he might well think himself innocent and secure in following the Examples of so many honourable and learned Persons, of which we are prepared to give your lordships many Instances in Evidence; and since they have Notice of it, and that the noble Lord hath insisted upon it in his Answer, we humbly beg your lordships will admit us to give the several Instances in Evidence.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, I beg your lordships Patience. My Lords, we humbly apprehend this is very proper and regular Evidence. I think there can be no Evidence more proper. If the noble Lord should have the Misfortune to be thought culpable, will he not appear under another View to your lordships, when he hath had the Concurrence of several great Persons, of whose Integrity, Honour, and Knowledge, no Question hath ever been made? If he himself hath introduced this Practice, and set it up by himself, it will then most certainly be an Aggravation; if he hath done no more than others have done, it will be an Extenuation. My Lords, taking it in that light, there is no Reason why this Evidence should not be given. But, I hope your Lordships will further consider of the present Case: Here is a law insisted upon, of several Hundred Years standing, that makes this Criminal: It is owned that there hath been no Determination or Judgment at Law that this is Criminal: Practice, especially in Respect of old Statutes, hath oftentimes been allowed and admitted to explain the Sense and meaning of those Statutes. There are no Records preserved of this, and therefore we are under a Necessity to confine our selves to such Evidence as we can produce of living Witnesses, and therein we apprehend we are proper, as it is Part of the matter in Issue before your lordships. Your lordships are as well to try the Earl's Answer, as the Commons Articles. Another Circumstance they are pleas'd to mention against receiving this Evidence, is, the taking up of your lordships time. Your lordships have had the Goodness and Justice to hear, with great Patience, a very long Evidence, with repeated Observations and Openings of the Articles, in order to prove a noble Peer, one of your own Body, to be Guilty: Can it be supposed that your lordships will not have that Patience, which is due to all People in Favour of Innocence, and when one of your own Body stands impeached? For these Reasons we humbly hope that this Evidence shall be admitted; and that the noble Earl shall have the Benefit of this Explanation, what the Sense of so many great and excellent men hath been of this old and doubtful Statute.

Mr. Robins. My Lords, we apprehend your lordships will not be of Opinion, that this will be to defend the present Impeachment, by the Impeaching of others. We lay it down as the Foundation of our acting, that our Predecessors have done the same, notwithstanding this Statute of Edward the VIth, and therefore it is a reasonable Inference, that this was not taken to be within the said Statute. We apprehend it cannot reflect upon any that are either Dead or living; and that, as we are in Defence of this noble Lord, we are at liberty to examine Witnesses, to prove that other Persons, his Predecessors, have done the same.

Mr. Strange. My Lords, I apprehend we have the same Right to justify our selves by Precedents, as they have to accuse us by Precedents. What the noble Earl's Predecessors in other Instances have done, hath been mentioned by way of Aggravation. The Case of Dr. Eddisbury hath been mentioned over and over by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons; and they have aggravated the Offence of the noble Earl, for not following that Precedent; and as they had a Right to aggravate the Earl's Offence, by not following the Precedents of his Predecessors, so we think we have the same Right to shew in other Instances, that we have followed the Examples which have been set us by our Predecessors. But they say, this is against law: Whether that is so, or not, is the Question; and it will be material for the Decision of that Question, to take into your Consideration, what hath been the Opinion of great Men in all Ages, upon this Act of Parliament. Continual Usage, from time to time, even from the making of the Act of Parliament, is the best Exposition of that law. Contemporary Usage, or the Opinion of those, who were at the Time of the making of a law, hath always been esteemed the best Interpretation of that law; and therefore, as we shew the Usage to be conformable to what we now insist upon, I humbly hope it will have a great influence upon your lordships, as to the Exposition to be now put upon this Act of Parliament: It hath been said, This Way of Proceeding tends to accuse great Persons of Honour, &c. some that are dead, and some that are now living; we shall not enter into so nice a Debate: it is sufficient for us that it is proper and necessary Evidence for the Defence of our Client. It is a material Evidence in this Case, whether other Persons have disposed of these Offices, and have incurred any Penalty; if they have done it, I humbly apprehend that no Objection remains against our entering into the Evidence of that Kind. Whatever is your lordships Judgment in Point of law, it is material for your lordships Consideration, whether this noble Lord hath set this on foot of his own Accord, or hath not trod in the Paths of his noble Predecessors? Your lordships will take it into your Consideration, and whatever the Point of law may happen to be, it must be said, that if this noble Lord did err, he erred with his Predecessors.

Earl of Macclesfield. My Lords, I would not trouble your lordships, if I did not think it necessary to insist upon your lordships admitting this Evidence: Indeed, if I thought it would impeach the Character or Reputation of any of the noble lords, who have been my Predecessors, whether they be now dead or alive, I would undergo any Punishment rather than do it. But I hope it was innocent, both in them and me; and that its being done by Persons of such unblemished Honour, will be one strong Argument of its being so; and, my Lords, I protest their Example was the single Reason with me for doing of it; and if it had not been done before, I would not have done it: This was the true Ground of what I have done. For what these Gentlemen say, my Lords, that this is not material, and that the law must be proved by law Books and Judgments, I thought the common law

Law was common Usage, and that which hath constantly and openly been done without being censured or blamed, cannot be contrary to common Law. If this be not allowed, I am highly obliged to these Gentlemen, that they have not accused me for taking money in many other Instances, relating to my Office; to instance in one only, upon the passing of every Patent there is a small Fee due, and constantly paid to the great Seal; if they had accused me of this, and called it criminal, I know not what to have said to it, unless Usage and Custom had justified it; I claim it as a Right, and unless Usage will prove the Right, I know no other Way. I own this is something different: In that Case, I insist on a particular Sum by Usage: I do not insist in this Case that there is a particular Sum due as a Fee, but that I had a Right, or Liberty, to accept of such a Sum as the Party should give: But, say the Gentlemen, this Evidence is to make other Persons Criminal; That is very true, if this be a Crime. These Gentlemen take it for granted; but whether it be a Crime or no, will be for your Lordships final Determination: And I hope your Lordships will not be of Opinion, that it is a Crime. If it should come out to be in your Lordships Judgment a Crime, it will be a great Censure upon my Predecessors, who all, as it is well known by every body, did the same Thing. But if this be understood to be a matter, that is admitted to have been practised, and to need no formal Proof, I had rather let this Examination alone: It is uneasy to me, to enter upon any thing that can draw a Reflection upon any Person: Therefore I submit it to your Lordships.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, The managers are accountable to the Commons for any Thing they admit without their Direction; therefore, unless they are satisfied and convinced that they ought to admit it, it is not to be expected for the managers to do it. It is said, that the Things offered are in Extenuation: That it would be a greater Guilt, if there were not former Examples to justify it: I apprehend for that Reason it is an improper Time to insist upon this now: Because matters of Aggravation or Extenuation must come subsequent to your Lordships Determination on the Articles, and will be the Consideration of your Lordships, when you come to consider of the Judgment that is to be given. I have known by frequent Experience, in Prosecutions of a Criminal Nature, that where the Defendant hath been convicted, he hath been allowed to lay Circumstances before the Court, in mitigation of the Punishment: And if, hereafter, this comes to be considered of in this manner, the managers will have an Opportunity to give a proper Answer thereto. If in this Answer he had insisted on it as an established Fee supported by Custom, and had claimed it as of Right, it had been proper to have examined Witnesses in Support of that; but when he insists upon it as a matter of Discretion, and of Explanation of an Act of Parliament, we cannot admit it. It is not proper to give, in Evidence, that which doth not make good the Defence in Answer to the Articles. We cannot admit a Thing of this Nature, which may be attended with great Inconveniencies. We do not know what may be grafted on such an Admission; therefore we beg Leave to submit it to your Lordships Determination.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, It is said very roundly, That this is an old doubtful Statute, and therefore you ought not to take Notice of it. As to the doubtfulness of it, I believe it is too plain; as to the Obsolescency of it, it is a Statute that is read every Year in the Court of Exchequer. And therefore whatever Doubts may be of this matter at the Common Law, yet this Statute makes it plain. And I desire the Counsel for the Noble Lord to tell us, where any Statute is more plain and positive; and wherein they have shewn the least Doubtfulness in the World, but rather object that it hath gone too far. Doth any Judge, in Point of Evidence, on an Indictment for Breach of a Statute-Law, permit Persons to give Evidence, that others have been guilty of the same Facts, and that therefore it is no Breach of the Law? Suppose this is to be considered as doubtful, on Construction of the Statute, what then is the common ordinary method? It is well known, that the Jury find the Fact specially, and it is referred to the Court for their Opinion on the Law. My Lords, give me Leave to mention how this matter is; here is an Act of Parliament, a general Act, the Judges are to take Notice of it, it is plain and positive; the Counsel make a Doubt on the Construction of this Statute; it is insisted upon, that other People have done it, and have not been punished; and would such a Thing be ever permitted to be found by a Jury, or would any Regard be had to it if found? I apprehend the noble Lord, who hath been a great master of Evidence in his Time, would not have permitted it to be done: They have shewn no Precedent for it: In its own Nature it is unreasonable. Are we to examine into the particular Manner and Circumstances of every particular Case of the several Persons that are now either Dead or Living? It is unreasonable, it is unprecedented, to offer such Evidence; and I hope your Lordships will not admit of it.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, the Counsel for the noble Lord take that for granted which we deny. The admitting these Witnesses to be examined, is admitting that it is not a Crime. Reputation is of great Value, and great Care ought to be taken of it; and we are willing to take Care of the Reputation of the noble Lord's Predecessors. I am not a Lawyer, but I never heard that that was not a Crime, which an Act of Parliament says is so. And that this is a Crime, I beg Leave to remind your Lordships, that he himself declared so to the masters in Chancery, that they had bought their Places against Law. I take that to be a fair Confession that his Opinion was, that it was a Crime.

Lord Lechmere. Before the Counsel withdraw, I would have this Question explained to me by the Counsel of the noble Lord, Whether this Practice be insisted on as a Proof of a Right in the Great Seal to take this as a Perquisite, or whether it be offered as an Extenuation?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we insist upon it in both Respects.

Then the Managers and Counsel were order'd to withdraw; and after some Time, being called in again, Lord Chief Just. King. Mr. Serjeant Probyn, It is their lordships Judgment that you are at liberty to proceed in your Evidence, as you were going on.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we desire Mr. Roger Lewis may be called again.

Mr. Lewis called.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I desire this Witness may be asked, how long he hath been a Deputy in the Office of the Clerk of the Custodies?

Mr. Lewis. About five and thirty Years.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Who was then in the Office?

Mr. Lewis. Mr. Henry Wynne.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. How long did he continue in that Office?

Mr. Lewis. About Twelve months.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Do you know who succeeded him?

Mr. Lewis. Mr. Roger Thompson.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, I desire he may be asked, whether any Present was made by Mr. Thompson, on his Admission into the Office?

Mr. Lewis. I do not know of any Present made by Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. By Mr. Wynne, or Mr. Thompson?

Mr. Lewis. No; but Mr. Wynne told me—

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Is Mr. Wynne living or dead?

Mr. Lewis. He is dead.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My lords, we beg leave to object to this: What a particular Person told him is not Evidence, we hope this shall not be admitted.

Mr. Lutwyche. They know this was never allowed.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. If the man be living, the Objection is good, but now he is dead, we hope it may be allowed.

Mr. Com. Serj. The Gentlemen object, that we are not at liberty to ask what hath been declared concerning that matter by a Person that is now dead; we humbly apprehend it is within the Rule of Evidence, and I must appeal to the Memory of your lordships, whether it is not good Part of the Evidence that hath been given by the managers.

Earl of Macclesfield. My lords, what we are giving Evidence of, is of a Thing transacted thirty five Years ago; the Parties are all dead: He is about to give you an Account of what he did, and was said to him at that Time by his master, in his transacting that Affair. If the Person that said it were now alive, to be examined to it himself before your lordships, it would not be Evidence without examining him; but if dead, what he said concerning this Fact may be given in Evidence, it is concerning the Party's own Act, and what he told him at the Time it was doing. Therefore we hope they will not oppose this Evidence, which in the Nature of the Thing is all that possibly can be now given.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lords, I hope this is what your Lordships will not suffer to be done. I never knew the Sayings of a dead man given in Evidence to prove a particular Fact: They have been only admitted in Proof of general Usages and Customs; but as for a particular Fact, lying in the Knowledge of a particular Person, by his Death you have lost your Evidence.

Earl of Macclesfield. My Lords, if they will insist upon it, we must withdraw.

Mr. Plummer. This man here is upon his Oath; but the Evidence that he must give of the Saying of another, must be of a Saying not upon Oath.

Lord Trevor. If there be a Difference in Opinion between the noble Lord and the Managers, they must withdraw. But I don't see any Reason to withdraw. I will tell my Opinion, that such an hearsay Evidence is no Evidence.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may inform your Lordships, whether he knows any Thing as to the Transaction, of his own Knowledge?

Mr. Lewis. I know that Mr. Wynne, whether he had surrendered, or was going to surrender, I don't remember, but he told me—

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, they are going on again in the same Way.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Do you know any Thing of your own Knowledge?

Mr. Lewis. I had money in my Hands of Mr. Wynne's. He told me—

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Evidence of this Sort is by your Lordships Judgment not to be permitted.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. He informs your Lordships, that he hath known this Office thirty five Years. Now, I desire that he may declare what hath been the Usage on Surrenders and Admittances into this Office of Clerk of the Custodies, whether any Present, or Gratuity, hath been made to the great Seal?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. This is the same Thing again.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If Gentlemen put this general Question with no other View but to draw out what your Lordships have determined to be no Evidence, we must oppose it. It is a plain Question, Whether he knows of his own Knowledge that any Money was given? And we desire he may be confined to his own Knowledge.

Earl of Macclesfield. The Gentlemen say, that as to matters of Usage, it is usual to enquire what old Men have said and declared. I apprehend this is a matter of Usage we are now now inquiring after; but if your lordships are of Opinion that this should not be asked, I believe he doth not know any Thing of his own Knowledge of the money being actually paid to the Great Seal.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, we desire that Mr. William Oaker may be called.

Mr. Oaker sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, we desire that Mr. Oaker may be asked whether he knows of any Demand, or Claim, made upon the Admission, or Surrender, of the Clerk of the Custodies, and by whom?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My lords, this Question is contrived in an odd manner. The Question must arise upon the Fact, not antecedent to the Fact. The Question of any Claim before, should be whether he knows of any money paid, and in what manner.

E. of Macclesfield. It is the stronger, if it is claimed and paid: But I apprehend, if it were only claimed, it is Evidence.

Mr. Oaker. I don't well understand the Question as it is put, but I remember in my lord Cowper's first Time, in the Year 1710, that Office was transferred from Mr. Thompson to Mr. Edwards; I was then Secretary of the Lunaticks, and I remember I inquired of one or both of those Gentlemen, if any Present was made to my lord on that Occasion, and was answered, that nothing had been usually given in the Case of that Office, and that they had satisfied my Lord thereof. Afterwards, when my Lord Cowper had the great Seal again, and I was again Secretary of the Lunaticks, his Lordship was pleased to observe to me, that he had suffered himself to be imposed upon in several matters, when he had the Seal before, and instanced particularly in the Affair of transferring the Office of Clerk of the Custodies; and said he was very well satisfied those Gentlemen had imposed upon him, by assuring him that nothing had usually been given on transferring that Office; for he was well assured there had been Presents on that Occasion, and did not see any Reason why there should not: And his lordship ordered me to enquire, as particularly as I could, what had been given, and by whom, that he might know what to do if a Thing of that Kind should happen again.

Mr. Plummer. My lords, I believe this Gentleman was Servant to my lord Cowper, when he was Chancellor last; I desire to know if any Vacancy of this Office happen'd in the last time that he was Chancellor.

Mr. Oaker. There was a Vacancy in the last Time. I don't know what Sum of Money was given for it?

Mr. Plummer. My lords, I desire this Witness may be asked, if ever he knew that my Lord Cowper did take any Thing for the Surrender of this Place?

Mr. Oaker. I don't know, I believe he had nothing the first Time, but he thought himself imposed upon in it, and bid me inquire about it. As to the second Time, I never could inform my self what was done in it.

Lord Lechmere. I desire he may be asked, Who it was that surrendered this Place of Clerk of the Custodies, and to whom? Name them.

Mr. Oaker. The first was Mr. Thompson, who surrendered to Mr. Edwards, he surrendered to Mr. John Bennet, and Mr. John Bennet surrendered to Mr. Thomas Bennet.

Mr. Onslow. My lords, I desire, before Mr. Oaker goes, that he may explain himself which of those two Times it was that my Lord Cowper said, he was imposed upon?

Mr. Oaker. It was the first Time.

Mr. Onslow. I desire to know if he took any Thing at either Time?

Mr. Oaker. I don't know, otherwise than as I have before declared.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Edward Dupper may be called.

Mr. Dupper sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, I desire that Mr. Dupper may be asked, whether he knows of any Sum of money that hath been paid, or received on the Surrender, or Admission, of any Clerk of the Custodies?

Mr. Dupper. I did not see any Money paid. I did give my Lord Macclesfield an Account that there had been 250 Guineas paid upon a former Surrender of that Office before this Mr. Hamersly was admitted.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. From whom had you that Information?

Mr. Dupper. My Lords, I don't know how far I may be permitted to name that Person's Name.

Many Lords. Name him.

Earl of Macclesfield. Was it from one that had the Custody of the great Seal?

Mr. Dupper. Yes, my Lords.

Lord—Who was it from?

Mr. Dupper. I had it from my Lord Harcourt. My lords, I cannot say I saw the money actually paid; neither can I say, that his lordship received this money. But I was a Servant to my Lord Harcourt, and his Lordship kept an Account of the Profits of the Office of Lord High Chancellor in his Time, in his own Writing; and I made two Copies of that Account in a large hand-writing for his lordship's Use; and I generally made two Copies of each, for fear one should be lost or mislaid when wanted. One of these Copies I kept by me, which I have here; in it is an account of the yearly Profits of that Office, and there is this particular Item, of 250 Guineas received for the Surrender of the Office of Clerk of the Custodies, which I copied from a Memorandum, or Account of his lordship's own hand-writing.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My lords, I don't know what he is going to do. I hope there is very little notice to be taken of what he hath said. A man tells a Story that is a Servant: I hope no Credit will be given to what he says.

Mr. Com. Serj. My lords, I desire he may inform your lordships, when it was that he gave an Account to the Earl of Macclesfield, that so much money had been paid, and upon what Occasion it was?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Give an Account! he knows nothing.

Mr. Com. Serj. My lords, I hope you will not think it an improper Question. He says, that he gave an Account, I desire to know what he he gave an Account of, and if he knows upon what Occasion it was?

Mr. Dupper. My Lords, the Reason of my giving this Account was, There was a Discourse between Mr. Cottingham, who was my Lord Macclesfield's Secretary, and my self, about the Office of Clerk of the Custodies. Mr. Cottingham told me, that Mr. Bennet was going to surrender his Place of Clerk of the Custodies: I asked him, to whom? He told me, it was to his Neighbour Mr. Hamersly. I answered, I am very glad to hear it; there will then be a piece of money for my Lord Chancellor. Mr. Cottingham said, That is more than I know; was there ever any money paid upon the Transfer of this Office? I said, Yes, I remembered there was, and I never knew any Offices or Places under the Great Seal transferred without an Acknowledgment paid to the Great Seal. He asked me what? I told him I had a Copy of the Account of the Profits of the Great Seal, kept by my Lord Harcourt in his Time, and that I would look into that Copy, and tell him what had been paid on the Surrender of that Office. I did look into that Copy, and the next day I told Mr. Cottingham, that 250 Guineas had been paid on the Surrender of that Office. And afterwards, and before the Transfer, I told my Lord Macclesfield of it.

Mr. Strange. When Mr. Hamersly was named I desire to know if Mr. Cottingham did not at that time call him his Neighbour?

Mr. Dupper. I did not know Mr. Hamersly at that time; but Mr. Cottingham called him his Neighbour.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, if he told my lord Macclesfield of this before Mr. Bennet resigned to Mr. Hamersly?

Mr. Dupper. Yes, I did my lords.

Mr. Lutwyche. My lords I desire to ask him one Question. I think he is pleased to say there is no place under the Great Seal, but what an Acknowledgment is taken for: I desire to know whether he himself hath not a Place given him by that noble Lord for his Life?

Mr. Dupper. No, my Lords.

Mr. Lutwyche. Had you no Place at all given you?

Mr. Dupper. I have the Reversion of a Place, which is not fallen as yet.

Mr. Lutwyche. What Place is that?

Mr. Dupper. The Sealer's Place.

Mr. Lutwyche. Do you enjoy that Place?

Mr. Dupper. No.

Mr. Lutwyche. Was there any money given for that Place?

Mr. Dupper. No, Sir: It is what I had for fifteen Years Service. I was his Clerk, and I acted as his Steward, in Town and Country, a great many Years; and his Lordship was pleased to give me that Reversion as a Reward for the Labour and Pains I took in his Service.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly, My lords, I desire he may be asked, how long after it was that he carried this Account to Mr. Cottingham, that he speaks of, how long after he had found it?

Mr. Dupper. I don't exactly remember: But as near as I can guess, it was the next Day, the first time that I saw him afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether at that time he gave Satisfaction to Mr. Cottingham, that it ought to be insisted upon?

Mr. Dupper. I told him so much had been given for the Surrender of that Office, and I never knew of any Office under the Great Seal transferred without money.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire Mr. Dupper may acquaint your Lordships what the yearly Value of that Office is, that was given to him?

Mr. Dupper. I never was in Possession of it.

Mr. Lutwyche. Do you know what is the yearly Value of it?

Mr. Dupper. No.

Mr. Lutwyche. Can you give no Account of it?

Mr. Dupper. No: The man hath been in Possession of it, I believe, these threescore Years, and I believe he will live these threescore Years longer.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Laiton may be called.

Mr. Laiton sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, whether he was not formerly a Curfitor?

Mr. Laiton. I was a Curfitor almost three and forty Years.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire that he will inform your Lordships, whether any money was paid, either by him, or any other?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we beg leave to understand your Lordships Resolution, whether it extends to allow an Examination as to the selling of any other Offices not contained in the Articles?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we shall endeavour to prove that Acknowledgments have been anciently and usually paid upon Admissions into all Offices under the Great Seal. And this is Part of this noble Lord's Defence, That it is usual for the Great Seal to take money for the transferring of those Offices. This Witness was one of the Curfitors in the Court of Chancery; therefore I hope it is proper to give Evidence of money given for those Offices, as being Offices under the Great Seal. Therefore my lords, I desire he may be ask'd, whether he hath known of any money paid to the Great Seal upon the Surrender, or Admission of any Curfitor?

Mr. Lutwyche. My lords, I submit it whether it is proper for your lordships to let them into this Evidence. I take it that the immediate Questions before your lordships are only upon two sorts of Offices, one of the Clerk of the Custodies, the other the masters in Chancery. Now whether Your lordships will let them into an Evidence of all the Offices of the Kingdom, which is very extensive, I submit to your lordships Consideration.

Mr. Plummer. Your lordships observe, that we have not gone upon the 10th Article, where we have laid that he sold several other Offices: Considering the great Extensiveness of it, and that it would draw this Trial into a great length, we have waved it; and therefore submit it to your lordships Consideration, whether he shall make his Defence to any thing we have not yet given Evidence to.

Earl of Macclesfield. This would be to put a great difficulty upon me. The Charge against me being founded upon a Supposition, that the taking taking money upon admitting Persons into Offices in the Court of Chancery is criminal; part of my Defence is, that the constant practice of my Predecessors shews the general Opinion to be otherwise, and therefore I have by my Answer insisted upon it generally, that not only for the one particular Office of the Clerk of the Custodies, or masters in Chancery, but for all other Offices under the Great Seal, money hath been given; therefore whether the Office for which I prove the money to be given, be one of the Offices charged in the Articles, and proceeded upon, or another not charged, or charged and waved, it will be the same thing. The Argument is the same with respect to the foundation of the Accusation, if in all other Offices, of which Persons now living can give an Account, monies have been taken without Crime, and without Blame; by parity of Reason it may be taken in these. I offer this Evidence, not to shew I am not criminal with respect to the Curfitors Offices; their waving that general Article which comprises them, admits it; but to make out that Branch of the Induction, in order to infer from the whole my not being criminal in the Particulars they do proceed upon; for if it was no Crime to take money from the Curfitors, and all the rest, besides the masters in Chancery and Clerk of the Custodies, it is no more so to take it from them: If this Objection be allowed, the Proof, which in its full latitude would be of great Extent, and go to all my Predecessors within 50 or 60 Years, will be confined to a very narrow Compass, when restrain'd to what Account can be given in only two Sorts of Offices, by Persons who saw the money paid, and happen to be still alive. Besides, for strengthening that Argument from other Instances, I have in another Part of my Answer insisted, that other Persons of great Wisdom and Honour, have likewise without Scruple, and without Censure, disposed of other Offices for money; that this hath been constantly practised in the Disposal of all Sorts of Offices in Westminster-Hall, money hath been taken for them all along; this Proof I must be cut off from too, if I am to give Evidence only of what was done in the case of those Offices for which they proceed against me: I hope therefore the Gentlemen will not oppose the going on to make the Proof proposed by my Counsel.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, if it be put in this general manner of all other Courts, and in all other Instances, we apprehend it will be a very extraordinary Examination. A Person is charged with a particular Charge of one Fact, and he would examine to another, with which he is not charged. This is beside the Issue, and not before your Lordships. Here is a Charge by the Commons of Great Britain, and an Answer and Defence to that, which can go only to those particular Offices charged. Now, to introduce an Evidence of this Nature, is exceeding any Rule or Instance that hath been ever heard of. If they apprehend by proposing and insisting on it in this High Court of Judicature, they shall be allowed to proceed in a method wholly new, we can't tell the Consequence of such an Allowance; and it is to no purpose for the Managers to come prepared to examine to a particular Fact stated between us, when there may be ten thousand things insisted on that are not in Issue.

Lord Viscount Townshend. I can't say this is within the Rule your Lordships laid down. If it is insisted upon, the Counsel must withdraw.

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, I don't know whether this will not go through a great Part of my Defence, which will be to shew that other Offices have been disposed of by the master of the Rolls, the Chief Justices, and other Judges. This is in my Answer: The Commons had Notice of it; and they have joined Issue upon it. I wonder to hear it said they have not joined Issue, when in the Answer it is insisted upon, and they have replied thereto. This is a Thing that these Gentlemen are very well aware of; it is so general and universal a Thing, that every Body knows of it. I don't know whether it is intended to make any Distinction between this Case, and what is done in other Cases; if they do, I would be glad to hear it; if they do not, then I would beg your Lordships Determination upon it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we are not to declare our Opinion, whether there is any Difference, or not; the Question is in Point of Evidence.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lords, I don't apprehend that we have joined Issue on every Thing that the Noble Earl hath thought fit to put in his Answer. The Commons have charged him with several Crimes: He hath answered to those Crimes: The Commons reply, that they are ready to make good their Charge. By this, Issue is joined upon every Thing in the Charge; but not upon every foreign Thing that he hath put into his Answer. We insist that he is not to give Evidence of the Sale of any other Offices, but of those that he is particularly charged with. As to the Curfitors Office, and other Offices that he is not charged with, we say he is to give no Evidence.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, because it is insisted upon that whatever this Noble Lord hath said in his Answer, we have replied to; I would observe that the very Replication takes Notice of this very Thing, and was one of the Things considered of by the Commons; and therefore the Reply is, "That he hath endeavoured to evade the Enquiries into his own Crimes, by insinuating Facts not material to the matters charged." And therefore, my Lords, we insist that he may not enquire into those matters which we have not charged.

Mr. Com. Serj. I don't know whether I may be at liberty to add, that I humbly apprehend, that what the Gentlemen of the House of Commons now insist upon, is contradicting your Lordships Resolution already taken.

Then the Managers and Counsel were order'd to withdraw, and being afterwards called in again, and returned;

Lord Chief Just. King. Mr. Serj. Probyn, The Lords have resolved, that the Counsel for the Earl of Macclesfield be not permitted to give Evidence touching the Sale of the Office of Curfitors, for that no Evidence hath been given in Relation thereto, by the Managers for the House of Commons.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Then if it be your Lordships Pleasure, we beg leave to call one Witness more, in opposition to the evidence given by Mr. Thomas Bennet, in Relation to a Sum of money paid by him upon the Surrender of his Office of Clerk of the Custodies; he gave your Lordships an Account that he had paid the Sum of Sixty four Pounds, (besides the Sum of One hundred and five Pounds, which he at first agreed to give the Great Seal) upon his Surrender of that Office. Now, my Lords, we shall shew your lordships, that no part of that Sum of Sixty four Pounds was really paid to the Great Seal, as Mr. Bennet seems to insinuate, but was all laid out in the Fees and Expenses of passing his Patent through the several Offices that are proper upon that Occasion. And to this End we desire that Mr. Tench may be called.

Mr. Tench sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, we desire Mr. Tench may inform your lordships, if he was employed in taking out the Patent for Mr. Thomas Bennet, upon his Surrender of the Clerk of the Custodies?

Mr. Tench. My lords, I was employed by Mr. Thomas Bennet to sue out the Patent, and I paid the Fees of every Office of passing the Patent, which comes to between 60 and 70 l.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We desire he may tell us what Officer he is?

Mr. Tench. I am Clerk of the Patents to the Attorney General, and Deputy Clerk of the Patents in Chancery.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked, what part of those Fees are paid to the Great Seal?

Mr. Tench. There is a Dividend of the money arising from the Patents, of this 1 l. 8 s. 4 d. and 3 s. went to the Great Seal.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked, whether any more came to the Great Seal out of the 64 l. than 1 l. 11 s. 4 d?

Mr. Tench. I don't know that there is any more of the Dividend of the Patent. The rest went amongst others for their several Fees at the several Offices.

Mr. Com. Serj. I won't trouble your Lordships to ask to whom the rest of the money belongs, but whether the Remainder is paid over to other Offices?

Mr. Tench. I don't know that any thing is paid to the Great Seal, upon passing the Patent Office, but the Dividend of 1 l. 11 s. 4 d.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may inform your Lordships, whether the Remainder is paid to other Offices?

Mr. Tench. Yes, to other Offices, to the Hanaper Office, the Secretary's Office, the Signet and Privy Seal.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we shall trouble your Lordships with no further Evidence on this Article: But beg your lordships Favour to begin our Evidence on the 5th, and other Articles.

Mr. Sandys. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, where he found the Warrant for passing the Patent at that Time?

Mr. Tench. I had the Warrant from the Secretary's Office.

Mr. Sandys. I desire he may be asked, if he knows how it came there, and by whose Direction, if he knows who procured it?

Mr. Tench. My Lords, I drew a Petition by Mr. Bennet's Direction, to the Secretary of State; upon that the Petition was referred to the Attorney General, and upon his Report, there was a Warrant. I know of no other Proceedings relating to it.

Mr. Sandys. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, at whose Instance he drew up that Petition?

Mr. Tench. I drew it up at Mr. Thomas Bennet's Request.

Mr. Sandys. To what Purpose was that Petition?

Mr. Tench. The Petition recited that the Patent was granted to his Brother, and that upon his Brother's surrendring, it might be granted to him.

Mr. Sandys. It is the last Petition we desire to be informed of, what the Purport of that was; not the Petition of Mr. John Bennet, when he surrendered to Mr. Thomas Bennet, but the Petition of Mr. Thomas Bennet, when he surrendered to Mr. Hamersly?

Mr. Tench. It was a Petition reciting the Grant to Mr. Thomas Bennet, and that he might resign to Mr. Hamersly's Use, who was a Person well affected to his Majesty and the Government.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we now proceed to the other Articles, which relate to the Presents made by the masters in Chancery to the Earl of Macclesfield.

Upon this the House adjourned to the next Morning Ten a Clock.

Thursday the 13th of May, 1725. The Sixth Day.

The Lords being seated in their House, and the two Proclamations being made as on the former Days.

LORD Chief Just. King. Mr. Serj. Probyn, you may go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we beg leave to lay before your Lordships some instances, where, upon former Admissions of masters in Chancery, Sums of money have from time to time been taken by the Great Seal. We desire Mr. Meller may be called again.

Accordingly Mr. Meller appeared.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We desire Mr. Meller may be asked, whether he knows of any Sum of money paid to the Great Seal, upon the Admission of a master in Chancery, and what Sum?

Mr. Meller. My lords, I humbly apprehend, that the Subjects of Great Britain are not compellable in any case to give an Answer to any matter that may be to their Prejudice. I speak it with the greatest Submission to your Lordships. For my part, I am very unwilling to do any thing that may any ways lessen the Security of the Subject, therefore I humbly hope your Lordships will not compel me to give an Answer to any Question of this Nature. I humbly submit it to your Lordships Judgment.

Earl of Macclesfield. My Lords, the Question he is asked is a general Question, whether he knows of any money paid to the Great Seal by any master in Chancery upon his admission. Whether he knows, or doth not know it?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we beg leave to acquaint the House of the Circumstances of Mr. Meller, from whence the Objection rises. He was formerly a master, but before the late Act of Parliament he quitted that Office, and hath no Indemnification, demnification, as the present Masters have by that Act. Therefore, as I apprehend, his Objection is, that he can't give an Answer to this Question, without subjecting himself to a Penalty, and accusing himself of an Offence against the Law.

Mr. Lutwidge. This general Question tends to make him accuse himself, and subject himself to a Penalty.

Earl of Macclesfield. My Lords, I would gladly know whether these Gentlemen object to this Question or not; if they object themselves to it, they have a right so to do, and to offer their Reasons, and they must be left to your Lordships Judgment. But they have no Right to instruct a Witness.

Mr. Lutwidge. I never endeavoured to instruct any Witness. It is very well known I never attempted any such thing; and that noble Lord knows it. I am now here, not as Counsel, but as one of the Managers for the House of Commons, and by their Command, and so have more Reason to take Notice of this Reflection. We do not instruct Witnesses, this is no such thing. It is an Objection which we have a Right to make. We have done it already, and have had your Lordships Determination upon it. It is not so very long ago, but the noble Lord may remember this very Question was directly asked of Mr. Bennet, and then refused; the next Day asked again by a side-wind, whether he knew any, and what Money had been given for the Place? and rejected by your Lordships; and then a Question was asked, How much he knew the Place sold for? and your Lordships likewise refused that: Here now is a Question asked of a Man that hath been a Master in Chancery, and not indemnified by the last Act, whether in Effect he paid any Money for his Office? Your Lordships thought this induced a Penalty, because you thought it necessary to pass an Act of Parliament to indemnify the present Masters; but it is well known it doth not extend to those who were Masters before; and therefore as there is a Penalty annexed to it, he ought not to answer this Question. Besides, for the sake of our Proceedings, it ought not to be answered, and we have a Right thus to interpose, that when your Lordships have refused the same thing in another Man, the same is not to be insisted upon again.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, it is the Duty of the Managers to take Notice of the Behaviour of the Lord impeached. Whether he apprehends that he hath a right to controul the Managers in this House, and whether that arises from the Seat he enjoys, your Lordships will consider the Consequences of this Behaviour. When the first Day we were told, that we were working up the Witnesses, and now that we are instructing them, whence could this Lord have this Imagination, but from his own former Practice?

Earl of Macclesfield. My lords, as to that Gentleman that thought himself reflected upon, he greatly mistakes me. I did not intend to reflect upon him as going to instruct the Witness in his Evidence; I believe him as far from it as any Man in England. I know him to be a Person of too much Honour; and I had not the least Thought when I spoke it, of his instructing a Witness in that Sense. But here a Witness is making some Difficulty in answering a Question, and I thought that that Gentleman who spoke first, was stating that which made the Witness's Objection; which I apprehended did not belong to the Managers to do. That is what I meant by instructing. The Question that is asked is, Whether he hath known of any Money given to the Great Seal, upon an Admission of a Master in Chancery? Say they, he was a Master in Chancery himself, therefore it may include his giving Money upon his being admitted: But be that so, he may know of other Persons besides himself that gave Money. My Question therefore is general, whether he knows of any Money given to the Great Seal on Admission of a Master in Chancery? The Question your lordships resolved was as to Mr. Bennet himself, and confined to his single Office; and had I asked Mr. Meller what he had given on his Admission to his own Office, it had been another Matter, and within your lordships Resolution. But the Question that is now ask'd, includes what he knows hath been given by other Masters; therefore he may give an Answer without charging himself. If he answers that he doth not know of any Money given by any other Master except himself; then it will come to the Question the managers would bring it to. In the mean time give me leave to say, that those Gentlemen, by being Managers for the House of Commons, have not a Right of treating Persons in a different manner than what they should do if they were not Managers. That that Gentleman should say, that what I spoke about instructing of Witnesses, ariseth from a Practice of my own, is a language unbecoming the Dignity of your lordships Bar. Is this a Way of treating Mankind? Is this a fit method of carrying on a Prosecution? Is this decent speaking before so august a Judicature as this? What I said of instructing a Witness, imported no faulty way of Instruction.—(After a short Pause) I have used a great deal of Preparation not to be disturbed at any Expressions that fall upon this Occasion. It is a faulty Way of instructing a Witness, to tell him what he shall say; but to tell him he hath a legal Objection to a Question that is asked, I know no Crime in that. My lords, I beg Pardon for taking so much Notice of this Matter; but I insist upon an Answer to this Question, whether he knows of any Money given to the Great Seal, on an Admission of a Master in Chancery? He may answer affirmatively, without at all affecting himself; and I submit, whether he ought not to do it.

Mr. Plummer. My lords, if the Counsel for the noble lord have done, I beg leave to reply. The noble lord says, that this Gentleman may possibly answer, and not accuse himself. But if by the Answer he may accuse himself, it is a Reason why he should not answer. The method proposed, that he may say, he doth not know of any but himself, is accusing himself. As for the other Point about instructing Witnesses, it is not our Witness, but his own Witness, who refuses to answer.

Mr. Onslow. The Managers cannot but observe the indecent Behaviour of this lord, and his unworthy manner of treating us. What we say here, we are ready to say any where. We do not think the lord at the Bar should be directing the Managers, as if he sat in his Place as Judge: If we do any thing unbecoming, we are subject to your lordships Judgment. We appear not here as common Prosecutors, and are not to be treated as common Counsel by him, as he would have treated Counsel in another Place. We are here Advocates for all the Commons of Great Britain, to demand Justice against this Earl; and submit it to your lordships, whether he is to treat us in this unbecoming manner. As for the Question, the very Reason he now gives for asking it, is the same same that was given by him for examining Mr. Bennet, and your Lordships then over-ruled it. It is only by a side Wind asking a Question of a Witness, the Answer whereto will unavoidably charge him with a Crime: He cannot answer without charging himself. This lord hath laid a Trap for the Witness to accuse himself. He says he may answer that he knows nothing of any money given by any master but himself; which is directly saying that he himself hath given money. We hope therefore this Question shall not be asked; and we insist upon the Objection.

Mr. Palmer. In Duty to the House of Commons, I think my self obliged to take Notice of the strange Behaviour of this lord in this Instance. According to your lordships own Rule, tho' he sits within the Bar, yet he is not a Judge; and therefore I must beg for myself, in the Names of the managers, and in the Names of all the Commons of Great Britain, that no such Language or Behaviour be again used; if it should, we cannot bear it, but must retire.

Earl of Macclesfield. My lords, I desire the general Question that I have proposed may be asked; I do not know what is your lordships Pleasure; I think I have a Right to have it answered.

Mr. Plummer. I object to the Lord's going on. The Lord hath answered; we have replied; and I insist upon it he hath not a Right to speak any more.

Duke of Argyle. I hope they will withdraw.

Ordered to withdraw.

Then the Managers and Counsel withdrew, and being called in again, and returned;

Lord Chief Just. King. Mr. Serjeant Probyn, the Question proposed by the noble Earl to Mr. Meller was, Whether he knew of any money paid to the Great Seal by any master on his Admission; and Mr. Meller insisting that he had been a late master in Chancery, and was not obliged to answer the Question, because it might tend to accuse himself; the lords upon Debate are of Opinion, that he is not bound to answer that Question.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, then we desire he may be asked, whether he knows of any Sum of money paid by any other Person, except himself, upon the Admission of any master?

Mr. Com. Serj. I would not presume to ask any Question that is improper, I understand your lordships Resolution to be, that we are not to ask the general Question of Mr. Meller, because it might affect himself; this Question, we think, will not; Whether he knows of any Sum of money given upon the Admission of any other master?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we submit it, whether this Question differs at all in Consequence; tho' it be not in the same Words, yet it is to the same Effect: It is in other Words to ask the same Question over again. We hope they will not give your lordships this Trouble.

Mr. Lutwyche. My lords, the Question implies that he gave money himself.

Lord Lechmere. If the Counsel would explain themselves more particularly, name the master, the Person who received it, or any other particular Fact; then it will appear whether that be a proper Question.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, we humbly apprehend, that we are at liberty to ask this Question in the Form proposed, otherwise we shall in a great measure be precluded from the just Defence of the Noble Earl. We could not presume to ask these Witnesses beforehand, who were the Persons that gave, or the particular Persons that received; but as these Persons have been in the Office, and must know the Nature of admitting the Masters in Chancery; we hope they will explain it in their Evidence, and name the particular Persons, who either gave, or received Money upon that Occasion. We are not proper to ask more particularly.

Mr. Com. Serj. My lords, I shall be very loth to give any Distaste to this Honourable House; therefore I beg Leave to know, whether or no we have Liberty to ask this Question, and whether your lordships Resolution extends to it? I humbly take it, we are at Liberty to ask the Question, and the Witness is not obliged to answer, if he apprehends that as the Question is formed he cannot answer without an Inconvenience to himself. I would not willingly ask any Question that I thought the House would think improper.

Lord Trevor. If the noble Lord insists upon this Question, it is proper that he should name some Person, concerning whom he would ask; otherwise, it is indirectly to overthrow your lordships Resolution.

Earl of Macclesfield. My lords, I am very unfortunate in this Matter. I would ask him the Question in such a Manner, as should not carry any the least Imputation on him: but if I should first name one Master, and afterwards another, in so great a number of Masters, it would be tedious; I only ask in short, what he knows of any Money taken by the great Seal for, or on the Admission of other Masters? I don't ask him concerning himself, but only concerning other Masters; Whether he knows any thing of the Transactions of other Masters Admission besides his own? I hope your lordships will think this may be asked, with this Explanation and Declaration, that it don't extend to any thing relating to himself; but only whether he knows any thing concerning any Money paid by any other Persons? and to name them particularly.

Lord Chief Just. King. You hear the Question.

Mr. Meller. Is it your lordships Pleasure that I should answer to the Question as it is now form'd? My lords, I don't know, or remember, that ever I had a Discourse with any Master about what he gave, or what he was to give, for any Place; except I have heard Dr. Eddisbury say—

Mr. Lutwyche. My lords, we object to this as not being Evidence, but only Hearsay.

Mr. Meller. Except Dr. Eddisbury, I don't know one indeed.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, we desire that Mr. Lovibond may be called.

Mr. Lovibond called.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, we hope that Mr. Lovibond, being one of the present masters, and consequently within the Indemnity of the late Act of Parliament, may be examined, as to what happened in his Case: And we desire that he may be asked what Sum of Money was paid to the Great Seal, on his being admitted a master in Chancery?

Mr. Lovibond. My lords, as to that Transaction, it is many Years ago, above twelve Years ago, I will recollect what I know of it to the best of my Remembrance. My lords, I never had any Treaty in that Affair with the Great Seal, nor with any Officer belonging to the Great Seal; nor did I employ any Body in it. But there was an Acquaintance of mine, a master in Chancery, since deceased, who apprehending it to be for my Service, without my Knowledge transacted it.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Who was it?

Mr.

Mr. Lovibond. Mr. Browning, He came to me, and told me, I have settled the whole matter, you must be sworn in this Night, and you must send to Mr. Cottingham or Mr. Appleby, then Officers under the Great Seal, 700*l.* in money or Bank Bills. I did send it that Night and was then sworn in.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I desire he may be particular as to the Time: It is necessary he should be certain.

Mr. Lovibond. Mr. Browning said, he had settled it with the Great Seal, that I should be sworn in that Night; my Lord Harcourt was then Chancellor.

Mr. Strange, My Lords, I desire he may be asked, Whether he was admitted upon a Death or a Surrender?

Mr. Lovibond. I was admitted upon a Surrender.

Mr. Strange. By whom?

Mr. Lovibond. Mr. Pitt.

E. of Strafford. Before the Witness goes, I desire to ask him how much he gave to Mr. Pitt upon his Surrendering?

Mr. Lovibond. It was 2000 l.

L. Harcourt. My Lords, If the Gentleman is not gone, I desire to ask him a Question or two.

Mr. Lovibond called again.

L. Harcourt. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, Whether he was worth so much Money as to pay 2700 l. of his own Money at that Time?

Mr. Lovibond. Yes, my Lords, and much more.

L. Harcourt. I desire he may be asked, Whether he paid it out of his own Money, or out of the Suitors Money?

Mr. Lovibond. I paid it out of my own Money.

L. Harcourt. I desire he may be asked, Whether Mr. Pitt, at the Time of his Admission, transferred and actually delivered over to him all the money of the Suitors that then was in his Hands?

Mr. Lovibond. Mr. Pitt, to the best of my Belief, delivered over every Thing that was in his Hands to me.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, We desire that Mr. Cottingham may be called again.

Mr. Cottingham called.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, We desire that Mr. Cottingham may be asked, whether he knows any thing of any Transaction relating to the Payment of any Sum of money on the Admission of Mr. Holford.

Mr. Cottingham. My Lords, if I remember right, there was 800*l.* paid.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. How long ago?

Mr. Cottingham. It is several Years ago: There was 800*l.* or 800 Guineas given or paid on his Admission, several Years ago.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. To whom?

Mr. Cottingham. My Lords, Sir Richard Holford desired me to recommend his Son to the noble Lord that then had the Great Seal.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Who was it?

Mr. Cottingham. The Lord Harcourt. Sir Richard Holford was my old Friend and Acquaintance: I accordingly did recommend him;

Mr. Holford came under a good Character to my Lord Harcourt; my Lord agreed to admit him, but he first desired to know whether he had any Estate in Possession sufficient to answer the Suitors money? Upon my saying this to Sir Richard Holford, Sir Richard said, He had none in Possession, but agreed to settle an Estate upon his Son; and to the best of my Remembrance, it was either 800*l.* or 800 Guineas that was given on his Admission, for the Use of my Lord Harcourt.

L. Lechmere. To whom was it paid?

Mr. Cottingham. I can't say whether it was paid to me, or to Mr. Appleby.

Dr. Sayer. Who carried the Proposal?

Mr. Cottingham. I carried the Proposal. Sir Richard Holford, as I told you, being my Friend and Acquaintance, desired me to do it: Accordingly I transacted the whole matter; being an upper Secretary, it was left to me.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I desire to ask this Witness one Question as to this matter. He says, That Mr. Holford was recommended as a man of a good Character; I desire to know whether he hath not ever since maintained that good Character?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, he hath made an admirable good matter as ever I knew; and hath executed his Office with as much Honour and Integrity as any matter. I never heard any Complaint against him in my Life.

Mr. Lutwyche. Can you recollect who paid the money, Mr. Holford, or Sir Richard Holford?

Mr. Cottingham. Sir Richard, I believe: I can't recollect. He was a young man; I presume, Sir Richard Holford, his Father, paid the money.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may inform your Lordships, whether it was on a Death or Surrender?

Mr. Cottingham. As I told you before, It was on a Surrender: Upon the Surrender of Sir Robert Legard, If I remember right.

L. Harcourt. My lords, If that Witness is not gone, and the Counsel for the Earl, and the managers for the House of Commons have done with him, I desire to ask him, If he can tell whether any Account was taken of the Suitors money by his Predecessor, and whether all the Suitors money was delivered up by Sir Robert Legard to Mr. Holford at the Time of his Admission?

Mr. Cottingham. My lords, I believe it was. But I was not privy to that, I did not transact that matter; I have heard that an Account was made up.

E. of Strafford. I would not ask the same Question twice; I think no Body hath asked it already; I desire to know, If he knows of his own Knowledge, what was given to Sir Robert Legard for his Surrender?

Mr. Cottingham. I know nothing of it.

L. Harcourt. My Lords, If I might have your Lordships Indulgence, in order to have this matter a little further explained, I desire Mr. Holford himself, or Mr. Appleby, or both of them may be called.

Mr. Holford called.

L. Harcourt. I desire to know of Mr. Holford, Whether at the Time of his Admission, when he was sworn master, Sir Robert Legard transferred red and delivered over to him all the Effects of the Suitors?

Mr. Holford. He did, my lords,

L. Harcourt. I desire to ask him, Whether the money, that it was said he presented to the Great Seal on his Admission, was his Father's money, or his money, or whether it was out of the Suitor's money?

Mr. Holford. My Father paid it before any thing was delivered to me.

E. of Strafford. I desire to ask the Gentleman this Question, What money he paid to Sir Robert Legard on his Admission to his Place?

Mr. Holford. My lords, I did not give it my self; I can tell your lordships what I believe was given, and I have some Reason to think I know the Truth; I believe it was 2000*l*.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, How long it was after his Admission before these Accompts and Effects were delivered over to him?

Mr. Holford. My lords, when I came to my lord Harcourt to be sworn in, my lord Harcourt had an Account delivered there of what was in Sir Robert Legard's Hands. My lord Harcourt took the Paper in his Hand, and asked me, If I was satisfied to be charged with that? I told him, Yes. I was then sworn in, and a Day or two after the Things were delivered over to me by Sir Robert Legard.

Mr. John Bennet called.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, What money was paid by him to the Great Seal on his Admission?

Mr. Bennet. I gave Mr. Woodford, the Secretary of the Great Seal at that Time, 500*l*. I don't know that it was given to the Great Seal; I gave it with that Design.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. When was it?

Mr. J. Bennet. About two or three Days before I was admitted.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. When?

Mr. J. Bennet. It was in March, 1716.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Who was Chancellor then?

Mr. J. Bennet. My Lord Cowper was Chancellor.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Whether was it paid before his Admission?

Mr. J. Bennet. It was paid before my Admission.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he would inform your lordships, whether he came in upon a Surrender or a Death?

Mr. J. Bennet. It was upon a Surrender.

L. Ch. J. King. Upon the Surrender of whom?

Mr. J. Bennet. Of Mr. Medlicot.

L. Batburst. I desire he may be asked, whether he paid it out of his own money?

Mr. J. Bennet. It was my own money.

L. Batburst. I desire he may be asked, whether he had any Account of what was in the former master's Hands, and when delivered over to him?

Mr. J. Bennet. The Effects were all deliver'd over to me in a Week's Time, except some very small matters.

L. Batburst. What was the money that was given to your Predecessor?

Mr. J. Bennet. 3000*l*.

L. Batburst. Was that paid out of the Suitors money, or out of your own?

Mr. J. Bennet. It was paid out of my own money.

Sir Thomas Gery called.

Mr. Com. Serj. My lords, The Question that I shall propose to Sir Thomas Gery, is under the Apprehension that I mentioned before, that we are at liberty within the meaning of your Lordships Resolution to propose it, he being at liberty to answer or not to answer, if the Question carry any Imputation upon him. I would not ask a Question that is improper: I desire that Sir Thomas Gery will inform your lordships what he knows has been paid to the Great Seal, upon the Admission of a master in Chancery?

Sir Tho. Gery. My Lords, I never did know, of my own Knowledge, of any Sum paid to the Hands of any Lord Chancellor whatsoever.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may answer the Question, Whether he hath known any Sum of money paid to the Use of the Great Seal, or of my Lord-Keeper or Lord-Chancellor, upon the Admission of any master?

Sir Thomas Gery. I can't tell how that may affect me; I refer that to your Lordships. I think I am not bound to answer.

E. of Macclesfield. I think he said, He doth not know of any money paid to a lord Chancellor. Doth he intend to include Lord-Keeper?

Sir Thomas Gery. Neither Lord-Keeper, nor Lord-Chancellor.

E. of Macclesfield. It may be, not into the Hands of a Lord-Chancellor or Lord-Keeper. I desire he may be asked, If he hath not known it paid to the Use of the Lord-Chancellor, or Lord-Keeper?

Sir Tho. Gery. That, I hope, I shall not be obliged to answer. I submit that to your Lordships.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. If the Gentleman is not pleased to give a more particular Answer, we must submit.

L. Harcourt. I desire to ask this Witness one Question, which will not draw him into any Inconvenience, whether ever he was required in any Lord-Chancellor's or Lord-Keeper's Time, to make up an Account of the Suitors Money, and whether ever he did so?

Sir Tho. Gery. Yes, I did it three several Times; once in my lord Cowper's Time; and when the noble Lord that asks me the Question was in that place, I did the like; and I did it again when my lord Cowper was Chancellor. At all those Times I gave a particular Account of the Sums of money in my Hands, the Time it came in, and how it was disposed of, and the distinct Securities, in distinct Columns.

E. of Strafford. He says twice in my lord Cowper's Time: I take it, he means both the Times that my Lord Cowper was Chancellor?

Sir Thomas Gery. Yes, my lords; and the same in my lord Harcourt's Time.

L. Harcourt. I desire he may be asked, whether all the rest of the masters did so as well as himself?

Sir Thomas Gery. I believe they did; I have heard them all declare so.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we have now called all the living Witnesses that are willing or compellcompellable to speak to this Article. We have a great many other Witnesses that would speak to this, as a constant Usage time out of mind: But we apprehend it to be against your lordships Resolution to call and examine any Witnesses but to what they can speak of their own Knowledge, and them we have produced. We shall now beg leave to proceed to prove, That the Offices in the Court of Chancery are increased in their Value beyond what they were formerly, that not only these, but all other Offices, as they have increased in Value, have increased in the Price; all Offices have risen in Value, and the Price given in this Instance, is no more than in Proportion to the Prices given for others.

Mr. Com. Serj. We apprehend, my Lords, it is so notorious, that all Sorts of Offices have risen in their Value, that a very small Evidence will be sufficient. We have a great many Witnesses to this Purpose, we will only call some few. We desire Mr. Steele may be called.

Mr. Steele sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, We desire to know before they proceed, Whether they design to ask as to those Offices your Lordships gave them Direction last Night not to ask to. Your Lordships gave them Directions not to ask any Questions, but to the particular Offices mentioned in the Articles; this is a Piece of Dexterity to elude that Resolution.

Mr. Lutwyche. My lords, I submit it to your lordships, Whether this Attempt is not directly the same as that which was over-ruled Yesterday. If the Witness is to give an Account whether the Price of the Curfitor's Office, or other Offices have risen, they must then shew that they were sold; which is the very Question your lordships determined they should not ask to.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, We were then directed by your lordships not to prove any money was paid to the Great Seal for any other Offices, but those particularly mentioned in the Articles. We don't pretend now to ask as to the Payment of money to the Great Seal, but only whether Offices in General have not much advanced in their Prices?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My lords, It is extraordinary Usage to tell us of Offices in General; there are private Offices, there are Offices in other Courts in Westminster-Hall. We apprehend your lordships Determination is so strong against what is now attempted, that they would not urge it, unless they thought that the managers had forgot every Thing that happened.

Mr. Com. Serj. My lords, The Question we ask is, as to Employments in General, Offices in the Law, or any other Offices; we desire to inform your lordships in General, that the Value of all Employments, not of the Law only, hath risen.

E. of Macclesfield. I will inform your lordships how the matter is. I believe this Gentleman is not intended to be asked what Offices belonging to the Great Seal are Worth, but what Difference there is in the Value of other Offices, to what they were heretofore; particularly how the Prices of the Seats in the Six Clerks Office are increased; that they were once at such a Rate, and what they are now; that is the matter, as I take it.

Mr. Lutwyche. My lords, I apprehend the Direction was given to the noble lord, not to ask concerning the Sale of any Office but what was in the Articles, and the managers had given Evidence to. Now to ask the Difference or Increase of the Prices of a Clerk in Chancery's Place, is, we apprehend, to ask to the very Thing that your lordships have over-ruled already.

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, this is not like the Curfitors Office, which is in the Disposition of the Great Seal; your lordships Resolution was, That the Witnesses were not to answer as to their giving money to the Great Seal. The Evidence we are now upon, is an Inquiry that relates not to any money given to the Great Seal, but what those Persons paid to one another for an Office that doth not belong to the Great Seal.

Mr. Onslow. At the End of your lordships Resolution Yesterday, the Reason given why they ought not to be let into the Examination as to the Offices then in Question, was, because no Evidence had been given thereto by the managers, and it was not charged nor mentioned in the Articles, altho' the noble lord did insist that he should be let into that Examination, because in the Preamble of his Answer, he had taken Notice of those Offices. This Case is stronger, because the Offices now desired to be examined into, are neither in the Articles nor Answer, nor hath any Evidence been given to them; and therefore we hope he shall not be let into this Examination.

Mr. Com. Serj. We humbly hope your lordships will permit us to enquire whether the Business of those Offices in the Court of Chancery is not greatly increased, and whether the Value of the Offices be not increased with it?

M. Serj. Probyn. Notwithstanding your lordships Direction in the former Question, we submit whether we may not be permitted to ask this Question, Whether the Offices in the Court of Chancery are not increased in Value much beyond what they were Seven Years ago?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My lords, That is the very Question that we object to.

E. of Macclesfield. What I before offered was, that there had been a Usage to make Presents to the Great Seal; I apprehend your lordships over-ruled it as to the Curfitors Office, because there was no need of an Excuse as to that Office, as there is no mention made of it in the Articles, nor any Proof offered against me. This is not of any Payment to the Great Seal, but goes by way of Excuse as to the Sums, to shew the increase or Difference of the Prices of Offices in General. It is notorious that money now carries a less Interest, and that the Price of all Offices is increased. I don't know whether the Gentlemen will deny it. If they do not, I will not trouble your lordships any farther about it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We have no Occasion either to confess or deny any thing that is not before your lordships in Judgment. Therefore, if they expect any Answer, we give this, That it is not before your lordships in Judgment.

Mr.

Mr. Lutwyche. I apprehend the Reason of your lordships Resolution Yesterday, was, That there was no Charge in the Articles concerning those Offices; the same Reason equally holds to what they are asking now in relation to Clerks in Chancery.

Mr. Plummer. My lords, I should be extreme sorry to make any Objection to any Evidence that is material: But, if he is pleased to examine this Gentleman how far by the Increase of Business the Value of any Office is risen, that must be of the Annual legal Value, and not according to the liberties he left to his Masters.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, Whether he doth not know that the Prices of Offices are greater now than they were formerly?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My lords, we don't understand they have any such Permission to ask that Question. To repeat the same Thing over and over again, we apprehend they think we are asleep.

E. of Macclesfield. Your lordships seem not to be of Opinion that this Question should be asked; therefore to save your lordships time, I will wave the Question.

Mr. Goldebrough sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We will proceed in the next Place, in Confirmation of that Part of the Answer to this Article, That two Sums of money, mentioned to be paid to my lord Macclesfield by Mr. Kynaston and Mr. Bennet, were both paid back into the Court of Chancery. We desire Mr. Goldebrough may be asked, Whether he knows of the two Sums of 1500 Guineas, and 1500 Guineas, that were paid by my lord Macclesfield into the Court of Chancery.

Lord Lechmere. My lords, I beg pardon. I think the Question that the noble Earl hath waved, if I mistook not, was about the Rise and Increase of Value of the Offices in Chancery. Now, notwithstanding the noble lord hath waved it, yet it may be proper for your lordships Consideration, whether he should not have liberty to ask it, if he thinks fit.

E. of Strafford. I think what the noble lord hath said is considerable, and it may be proper for our Judgment.

Ld. Vis. Townsend. I move that they may withdraw.

Ld. Lechmere. It may be proper to have the Question repeated again. I therefore desire that the Counsel for the Earl would repeat the Question again that they would have asked of Mr. Steele.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, The Question is, Whether the Price of Offices in the Court of Chancery, and in the Six Clerks Office, particularly, are increased now more than antiently they were.

Thereupon the Managers and Counsel withdrew, and being returned,

Lord Chief Just. King. Mr. Serjeant Probyn, the Lords have considered the Question on which you withdrew. Their lordships are of Opinion, That you are at liberty to ask the Question, Whether the Price of Offices in the Court of Chancery, and in the Six Clerks Office particularly, be increased now more than heretofore they were?

Mr. Steele. My lords, I came to be a Clerk in the Chancery Office in the Year 1687. I served my Clerkship in the Office; and in that Year, and for several Years afterwards, I know that waiting Clerks Places were bought at 50 Guineas, or less, and after I was out of my Clerkship, I was offered a waiting Clerk's Place in the Office for 50 Guineas. They are not sworn, nor have Power to take a Clerk; and since that Time I have known them sold for 3, 4, and 500*l.* My master was a sworn Clerk, and he sold his sworn Clerk's Place for 230*l.* It was a Clerk at the Seat; and by the Custom of the Office, he that hath one Clerk cannot take another till the first Clerk be provided for; but I having a Proposal to go into a Seat of greater Business, that induced me to give a Note to the Gentleman that bought the Seat, that I would not be an Incumbrance on the Seat, otherwise he would not have given so much. Since that Time I have known a sworn Clerk's Place sold for 800*l.* Particularly I transacted a Sale upon a Brother-in-Law's Account; I contracted for 500*l.* and then there was a Clerk upon the Seat that had not served half his Clerkship out.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. What Sum of money had they upon taking a Clerk at that Time, and what now?

Mr. Steele. I did treat in order to put my Brother-in-Law Clerk to one Mr. Atkinson, in the Office.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. What Time was that?

Mr. Steele. To the best of my Remembrance it was in 1703, or 1704, and he had 100 Guineas. Since that Time my Brother-in-Law, while he was there, had 300*l.* or 300 Guineas with a Clerk.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may explain to your lordships what he means by a Clerk being an Incumbrance to a Seat?

Mr. Steele. By the Custom of the Office, he that is put a Clerk, must be provided for before his master can take another. The master so taking him, cannot take another Clerk, till he is provided for by a sworn Clerk's Place, or a waiting Clerk's Place.

Mr. Lutwyche. If the Counsel have done, I desire to ask one Question, that is, The Gentleman says, he came into the Office in the Year 1687. I desire to know how many Clerks there were at that Time?

Mr. Steele. There were at that Time but 60 sworn Clerks; there was an Addition made, to the best of my remembrance, in my lord Jefferys's Time; Sir John Trevor was then master of the Rolls, I think there was an Addition of thirty.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire to know whether they are not reduced from 90 to 60 again?

Mr. Steele. They are not at present yet reduced.

Mr. Lutwyche. Whether they are not intended to be reduced?

Mr. Steele. If any one dies without surrendering his Office, they don't fill up the Place of that Person with another; but any one may surrender.

Mr. Lutwyche. How many are there now?

Mr. Steele. I have been told there are about 12 or 13 less than 90: They are to be reduced duced from 90 till they come to the ancient Number of 60; and they are reduced as they die without surrendring.

Mr. Lutwyche. We don't expect you to give an exact Account; How many may there be?

Mr. Steele. I can't take upon me to say how many; but, as I have been informed, I believe there are about 16 or 17 above the 60 remaining: I may be mistaken, I am not certain; but there are several Gentlemen here, who can give an exact Account.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire to know whether the Offices are not a great deal better, by there being fewer of them?

Mr. Steele. Certainly, I believe that is pretty natural; the fewer the Offices are the better; but the Offices are not so good as they were when I came Clerk. They have reduced several Profits belonging to them since I came out of the Office, by the Act of Parliament made For the Amendment of the Law.

Mr. Lutwyche. You say they are sold for more than formerly they sold for; I desire to know whether some of those Clerks, whose Predecessors have had good Business belonging to the Office, have not made that Seat sell better?

Mr. Steele. Certainly it doth; if the Person surrendring had good Business, that Seat will sell for more than a Seat of less Business.

Mr. Common Serj. I desire that he will inform your Lordships, when it was in point of Time that these Offices sold at so low a Rate?

Mr. Steele. It was in the Year 1694 that the Gentleman to whom I was Clerk surrendered his Seat.

Mr. Common Serj. And when was it you knew 50 Guineas paid for the Place of a waiting Clerk?

Mr. Steele. The 50 Guineas I speak of for a Waiting Clerk's Place, was in the Year 87, or thereabouts.

Mr. Common Serj. Whether was that before the Increase of the additional Number of Clerks?

Mr. Steele. Much about the Time that the Additional Number of Clerks was added.

Mr. Common Serj. I desire he would inform your Lordships, whether the Prices began to rise before any Reduction was made?

Mr. Steele. Yes, before the reducing of them.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. When was the Reduction of them made?

Mr. Steele. I can't tell the exact Time. There was an Order made, that they should not be filled up as they died without Surrender.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, Whether there was not a Difference of Price between those Seats which were full or empty of Business, or whether they were all at a Par?

Mr. Steele. The Price always varied, as there was much or little Business.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. But every Seat, whether great or less, had a Rise in Proportion?

Mr. Steele. Yes.

Mr. Cary. I desire he may be asked, Whether there hath not been an Act of Parliament since the Time he mentions, which hath been Beneficial to the 60 Clerks?

Mr. Steele. There was an Act of Parliament, called, An Act for the Amendment of the Law; by which the 60 Clerks had the Term Fees instead of the Tenour Bill, which was a considerable Profit; and to make up that to them, the Fees of the small Writs were given to them, and the Term Fees; but in my Apprehension, the Tenour Bill was a greater Advantage than those Fees that have been given in Lieu of it.

Mr. Common Serj. That worthy Gentleman's Question hath occasioned me to desire, that he would inform your lordships, Whether, upon the whole of the Act, the Six Clerks Offices are better or worse?

Mr. Steele. In my Opinion, they were better before the Act, than they are now.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we have more Witnesses to this purpose; but we apprehend that Mr. Steele hath spoken so fully to it, that we shall not trouble your lordships with any others, as to this Matter. The next Witness which we shall beg leave to call, is in relation to the two Sums of 1575 l. that were paid into the Court of Chancery by the Noble Earl, for which we did call Mr. Goldesbrough.

Dr. Sayer. Before your lordships enter into an Examination of this Fact, I will only beg leave to take Notice as to the Time of this Repayment: The learned Managers were right in their Observations, That it was after the Vote for the Impeachment; but it was before the Articles were exhibited. This is mistaken in the Answer, but I am sure the Honourable House of Commons will be so candid as to think it was a Mistake only, and that 'tis impossible it could be with any View of deceiving the World, since both Facts were upon Record; the Earl was so very impatient to have his Answer in, that no Delay might be charged upon him, that I assure your Lordships the Answer was not settled till 3 or 4 a Clock in the Morning of that Day that it was delivered in. In such a Hurry, a Mistake of this Nature, I hope will not be taken amiss, nor be looked upon by the House as designed. My Lords, I thought it my Duty to observe this, before your Lordships entred into this Examination.

Mr. Goldesbrough called.

Mr. Common Serj. There are two Sums of Money taken Notice of to be given by Mr. Kynaston and Mr. Bennet to my Lord Macclesfield, I desire you would inform my Lords, whether those two Sums were paid back again, and when, and in what Manner?

Mr. Goldesbrough. My Lords, the 23d of February last my Lord Macclesfield came into Court, and deposited in Bank Notes and Money to the Value of 3000 Guineas. The Lords Commissioners were pleased to direct the investing it in South-Sea Annuities, in the Names of Mr. Holford and Mr. Lovibond, the two Senior Masters of the Court, for the Benefit of the Suitors of the Court.

Mr. Common Serj. I think, my Lords, we need not ask whether Mr. Goldesbrough be the proper Officer?

Lords. No, no.

Mr. Common Serj. I would with Submission ask another Question of Mr. Goldesbrough; I would beg leave to inform your Lordships what the Question is. There hath been an Examination on the Part of the Gentlemen of the House of Commons into the Nature of these Offices, and I hope it will not be improper, Mr. Goldesbrough being now at your Lordship's Bar, to ask him as to the manner of the money coming into the masters Hands, whether it be by Compulsion, or at the Instance of the Parties.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. This must appear by the Order. No money is paid in but by Order.

Mr. Com. Serj. The Orders are infinite, but Mr. Goldesbrough being the Register, may be properly asked, what the Practice and Usage of the Court is in this Instance. It is usual to ask the Officers of the Court, what the Practice and Usage of the Court is. If we should produce 20 Orders, they might object that others are not so; and therefore I beg Mr. Goldesbrough, the proper Officer, may inform Your Lordships, what the Practice of the Court is.

Mr. Goldesbrough. Upon Decrees, when Causes are heard, the Counsel pray what Decree is proper: Where Estates are to be sold, they order the money to be brought before the master.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I desire to ask one Question; Mr. Goldesbrough is a very experienced Officer of the Court, hath been a good while in the Place, and probably may give Your Lordships some light into this matter. The Question I would ask, is, When he first knew the Office, whether it was usual to direct the money to the masters, in the manner it hath of late been directed?

Mr. Goldesbrough. I can't say it was.

Mr. Lutwyche. The next Question is, When the present Usher of the Rolls had given Security, whether there were not some Orders made by the late Lord Chancellor, as well as by the masters of the Rolls, for Payment of money to the Usher of the Rolls; that is, into Court?

Mr. Goldesbrough. Yes, there was.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire him to explain the Difference between paying the money into Court, and paying the money to a master. What is understood by paying it into Court?

Mr. Goldesbrough. Paying it into Court, is paying it to the Usher.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire to know, whether there were not some Orders made, after Mr. Trevor the present Usher had given Security, for Payment of money to him?

Mr. Goldesbrough. Yes, there were.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire to know, how soon after those Orders were varied?

Mr. Goldesbrough. I can't remember when the Orders were varied; as to those made before Hearing, and for continuance of an Injunction, I don't know they are altered yet.

Mr. Lutwyche. What I ask is, Whether he had any Directions touching the varying of Orders, for the Payment of money; any Direction, I mean, from my Lord Macclesfield, to vary the Order?

Mr. Goldesbrough. Money paid before Hearing, was paid into Court; money paid upon the Decree, was brought before the master. I had no Direction from my Lord Macclesfield to vary the Order.

Mr. Lutwyche. Was there any Variation or Difference in drawing up the Order, for some time after the Usher gave Security, from what it was some time before?

Mr. Goldesbrough. Upon interlocutory motions, the money was brought before the Usher, and so it hath been ever since.

Mr. Lutwyche. Was it always so?

Mr. Goldesbrough. It hath been so ever since.

Mr. Lutwyche. Ever since what time?

Mr. Goldesbrough. Ever since the Time that Mr. Trevor gave Security.

Mr. Lutwyche. What I would know is, Whether the Orders and Directions at first were not in general, to pay the whole money into Court?

Mr. Goldesbrough. No, my Lords.

Mr. Lutwyche. How was it?

Mr. Goldesbrough. On all Orders interlocutory before Hearing, it was paid in to the Usher: On all Orders for money, subsequent to the Hearing, it was brought before the master.

E. of Macclesfield. This Question hath been asked Mr. Goldesbrough, with relation to the paying of money into Court, and being brought before a master, I desire he would inform Your Lordships what the difference between them is?

Mr. Goldesbrough. Money brought into Court, is money brought in before Hearing, and is subject to the Order of the Court, to be paid out either before the Hearing, or after, as the Nature of the Case requires. Money brought in after Hearing, is money to be put out on Security, and is brought before the master.

E. of Macclesfield. Whether when money is ordered to be brought in to be disposed of, as upon a Purchase, or upon a Decree, to pay Debts, &c. The Course of the Court in all his Time hath been to bring it into Court, or before a master?

Mr. Goldesbrough. I can't say it hath been so in all my Time: Since the Revolution it hath been generally brought in before the master, before it was brought into Court.

E. of Macclesfield. Have the Orders made by me, since the Usher gave Security, been made in the same manner as those by my Predecessors?

Mr. Goldesbrough. Yes, They have been the very same.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know, when first the money paid into the Hands of the Usher went into another Course, that is, upon the Usher's Death, or not giving Security; and what method was taken then?

Mr. Goldesbrough. I believe, after the Revolution, there was looked upon to be a Defect in the Security of the Usher, and it was upon that Consideration, that the money was ordered before the master.

E. of Macclesfield. And afterwards was there not an Alteration made of all the money that used to be paid to the Usher? Was it not ordered to be brought before the junior masters?

Mr. Goldesbrough. In my Lord Cowper's Time, when there was a Difference between the Usher and his Deputy, my Lord Cowper, upon that, did order the money to be brought, and lodged in the two junior masters Hands. They were each to keep a Key, and the Usher another: When any money was paid, it was paid out of the Chest, kept under those Keys; and the money that was paid in, was paid in there.

E. of Macclesfield. Was not the money that used to be paid in to the Usher's Hands, directed in to the junior masters Hands?

Mr. Goldesbrough. It was so.

E. of Macclesfield. As to the money appointed to be disposed of, for payment of Debts, or otherwise, how was that paid? Was that put into the Chest, or into the Hands of the respective masters, to whom it was referred?

Mr. Goldefbrough. I think it was put into the Chest; there was then no Difference at all.

E. of Macclesfield. Had no other masters then any money brought before them? was all brought before the junior masters?

Mr. Goldefbrough. The general Order was, for the money to be brought before the junior masters, to be kept in a Chest there.

E. of Macclesfield. Mr. Goldefbrough mistakes the Question. I don't ask how the money was usually brought; but had no other master money brought before him in my Lord Cowper's Time?

Mr. Goldefbrough. Yes, My Lords.

E. of Macclesfield. What money was that? Upon what Occasion?

Mr. Goldefbrough. The bringing the money to the two junior masters, was found to be inconvenient; whereupon, after that it was altered, and the money was brought before the masters, to whom the Reference was in Court.

E. of Macclesfield. Whether the money that was paid in to the two junior masters, was not such money as was before ordered to be paid into Court?

Mr. Goldefbrough. Yes.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire you would recollect, whether you was not present at a meeting of the Master of the Rolls, and Usher, and others; whether this was not under Consideration, what money should be paid into Court, and what should be brought before the master?

Mr. Goldefbrough. Yes.

E. of Macclesfield. Whether you was not then asked, whether money directed after a Cause is heard, to be disposed of, was not brought before a master?

Mr. Goldefbrough. Yes, I was asked that question.

E. of Macclesfield. What Account did you give of the Course of the Court in that Particular?

Mr. Goldefbrough. I gave the same as now, That the latter Practice had been to bring it before the master, to whom the Cause was referred.

E. of Macclesfield. Do you remember, whether the Usher was not asked, whether he had any Precedents of money paid into his Hands, to be distributed amongst Legatees, or Creditors, and what the Answer was?

Mr. Goldefbrough. He said he had none.

E. of Macclesfield. Do you apprehend the Course of the Court to be, that money brought in before Hearing, is to be paid in to the Usher, and money after Hearing, to be brought in before the master?

Mr. Goldefbrough. Yes, I do.

E. of Strafford. I desire he would inform your Lordships, what the Security is, and how much, that is given by the Usher; and whether it is the same now, as it was before my Lord Cowper made that Alteration?

Mr. Goldefbrough. I can't say any thing as to that, I know nothing of it, it doth not lie in my Province.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Your Lordships will please to remember, in the Case of Mr. Elde, though he paid 5250 l. all the money was returned, except 1850 l. So the same as to Mr. Thurston, 5250 l. that all was returned in a reasonable Time, except 2000 l. so that to these Facts, we shall not trouble your Lordships with any Witnesses. But now we shall beg leave to lay before your Lordships another Evidence, that when

Mr. Thurston was admitted into this Office, upon the Payment of 5000 Guineas, another Gentleman offered 6000 l. Mr. Cottingham proved the same as to Mr. Elde. This we do to shew, that his Lordship was not that avaricious Person, as he hath been represented; he refused 6000 l. and took less from another. We desire Mr. Ellis may be called.

Mr. Ellis sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We desire Mr. Ellis may be asked, what he knows of any Sum of money, that was offered for the Mastership in Chancery, to which Mr. Thurston was admitted, and what that Sum was?

Mr. Ellis. Upon the Death of Mr. Borret, Mr. Richard Lucas came to me at my Lord Macclesfield's, and told me, That his Brother desired to have the Place of a Master in Chancery, then vacant: And he said, that as I was in my Lord Macclesfield's Family, I might be of Service to him, in conveying Mr. Lucas's Proposal to my Lord. He then told me, what I was to offer my Lord Macclesfield for that Place; he said he was so sensible of my Lord Macclesfield's Honour and Generosity, that he would leave it entirely to his Lordship, what he would have in Consideration of his coming in. But if my Lord Macclesfield did not approve of a Proposal so undetermined as that was, I was to offer 6000 l. or 6000 Guineas; I don't remember which of those two Sums, but one of them I am certain it was. I did offer it to my Lord, who told me Mr. Lucas had been well recommended to him, and he was satisfied with his personal Character, and with this Offer. My Lord Macclesfield said no more; and I could not press his Lordship to explain himself any further. I returned that Answer to Mr. Lucas, and heard nothing further of that matter, till my Lord Macclesfield had declared that Mr. Thurston should have it.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked, whether the Gentleman that applied to him, was not his Friend and Acquaintance?

Mr. Ellis. Mr. Richard Lucas was my Acquaintance; when he desired me to do this, I told him it was not proper for me to apply about matters of such Nature; but in Friendship to him, I would speak to my Lord about it.

Mr. Plummer. I don't know whether the counsel have done; if they have, I desire to ask this Witness what Mr. Richard Lucas is himself?

Mr. Ellis. He is a Clergyman.

Mr. Plummer. I desire to ask him, If Mr. Richard Lucas did not, at the same Time that he proposed the 6000 l. lay some Restriction or Condition, upon which he was to pay it. Had not you such Instructions?

Mr. Ellis. No, I don't remember he did any.

Mr. Plummer. Then I desire to ask you, If he did not say, Provided Mr. Borret's Deficiency was made good?

Mr. Ellis. He mentioned no such Condition to me; he did speak of Mr. Borret's Deficiency; I told him I had heard there would be no Deficiency there. Upon which he said, he had been assured there would be none, by a Gentleman known to us both; but however that be, says he, my Brother is willing to enter into a Treaty with my Lord Macclesfield upon those Terms.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we shall trouble your Lordships no further upon these Articles we have been upon, the other Gentlemen will answer what is to follow.

Mr. Robins. May it please your Lordships, I am likewise by your Lordships Permission assigned of Counsel with the noble Earl, who has the misfortune to lie under the Weight of so heavy a Charge, as an impeachment of the whole Body of the Commons of Great Britain; and shall beg leave to open to your Lordships the Nature of his Defence, and the Strength of his Evidence, with regard to the Eleventh and Twelfth Articles of this impeachment.

I am sensible, my Lords, that the Solemnity of this Prosecution, from the Weight and Number of those, who are become the Accusers of this noble Earl, and the awful Appearance and Wisdom of those who are to be his Judges, and the Name of an impeachment in Parliament, may seem to carry an Argument of greater Crimes and greater Guilt, than are to be met with in the ordinary Courts of Justice below.

But, my Lords, with the greatest Submission, if the Solemnity of the Proceedings on this Occasion has not altered the Nature of Things, and imprinted a Guilt where there is no Guile, we humbly hope we shall be able to lay before your Lordships some few Observations and Circumstances of Evidence, that will, at least, extenuate, if not wholly abate and take out the Sting and malignity of the several Crimes, whereof this noble Earl stands accused.

Your Lordships, without Question, will have long since observed, That the Losses and Sufferings of Widows, of Orphans, and others, who, from the Distress and Impotence of their Condition to help or defend themselves, have fled to the Court of Chancery, when this noble Earl presided there, for Sanctuary and Protection; that these have been justly made use of as the greatest Aggravations of the Crimes, where-with he is charged, and they have been displayed with the utmost Force of Eloquence, and in the most moving Strains of Commiseration and Pity.

And I believe, my Lords, every one that heard them have shared and gone along with the Honourable Managers for the House of Commons, in the Concern and Indignation they have so justly shewn towards those, who have been the Authors and Contrivers of them.

These, my Lords, are Subjects, wherein the richest Fancy may almost lose it self, and the poorest can never be at a Loss for something to offer to move and affect the Passions of mankind.

And the learned managers for the Honourable House of Commons, have adorned and set off their Charge against the noble Earl on this Head, with so many Beauties of Expression, and so great a Propriety and Choice of Language, to engage and win over all the Passions of Humane Nature to their Side, that it will be difficult, if not impossible, for Us, who may seem to have undertaken an Argument leading to disprove and reason against the Force and Truth of all these, to hope for Success, but by shewing to your Lordships, that the noble Earl entirely joins with the learned managers in their just Resentment and Concern on this Occasion, that he is deeply affected with the losses, the Depredations and the Havock, which has been made of the Fortunes of the unhappy Suitors of the Court of Chancery.

That he has long been endeavouring to put a Stop to them, that at one Time he has contributed his Reason, his Judgment, and his Understanding, to find out effectual methods for the Cure of them; at other Times has made Use of his Power, his Authority and that Majesty wherewith, as Lord Chancellor, he seems to be invested, to enforce and hasten the compleating of them.

That he has convened the masters, the Registers, and the several Officers belonging to his Court, to consult, advise and assist, in finding out means to stop the growing Evil; that he has assisted with his Purse, has advanced considerable Sums of money of his own, and when Nothing would do, when the mischief appeared too big for his single Endeavours to oppose, that he then at last presumed humbly to lay the whole before his Majesty in Council, as well for his Majesty's Assistance and Direction, as to testify how much he had at Heart the finding out a Remedy for the Cure of those overgrown Diseases, this Epidemical Contagion, which was spreading through every Part of the Court where he presided, and seemed to threaten Destruction and Ruin to the whole.

These, my Lords, we humbly hope will prove the noble Earl not to have been an idle and unconcerned Spectator at the Tragedy that was acting around him; that he saw and felt the Com-motions it had raised, and was fully determined to put an End to them as speedily and effectually as he could.

But when, my Lords, a Stop was put immediately to his Endeavours; when he was disarmed almost in the very Beginning of his Onset, and when the great Seal, and therewith his Power to proceed further, was taken from him, your Lordships will not impute it to him, that he was forced to sit still, and leave it to others to effect what he had, so prosperously and happily, begun.

Your Lordships, without question, will have already observed, That these fatal mischiefs did not spring up all at once, That they had long been growing, That the Seeds of them had lain buried and concealed for a considerable Time, and, That they hardly appeared at all, till they were grown too stubborn and obdurate, to yield to an easy Cure.

Your Lordships will likewise, no doubt, have observed, that however in the strictest way of considering Things, the Chancellor may possibly be thought to be answerable for them; yet, that they did not originally proceed from him, that he had not the immediate Custody or Ordering of the Suitors money or effects.

That the Masters in Chancery, who are no less than Eleven in Number, by the Constitution of the Court, and the Nature of their Office, were necessarily to be entrusted with that Part of the Business thereof.

And when your Lordships shall likewise be pleased to observe further, That enough, and more than enough for the strongest Constitution of Body, and the greatest Abilities both of Mind and Understanding, remained still for the Chancellor's own Share, in the Dispatch of the daily and necessary Business of the Court where he presided, the innumerable Avocations, by his Attendances on your Lordships, on His Majesty, and the Council, and other Services, which the Duty of his High Station required from him; Your Lordships, no doubt, will will easily reflect, that he had but little leisure, suddenly, and immediately to go through so arduous, so difficult, and so tedious an Undertaking, as the stating and settling of the masters Accounts, for no less than almost a million of money, which has now appeared to be in their Hands. And, your Lordships, we are persuaded, are no strangers to the many and almost insuperable Difficulties which even at last have attended the Prosecution of that Affair, the great length of Time it has taken up, the number and variety of meetings and Consultations with Persons of the greatest Abilities and Experience, to go to the bottom of it, and whether even yet they have been able fully to effect it, or have fixed on such methods of Enquiries as have laid open the whole Scene, or will certainly prevent the like mischiefs for the time to come; these, my Lords, we humbly apprehend, are Considerations that will not be thought altogether unworthy of your Lordships Notice, in determining the Guilt or Innocence of this noble Earl, of the Crimes laid to his Charge.

It must indeed be admitted that they have for the present, taken away the money, Effects, and Securities of the Suitors out of the masters Hands, and so have prevented any loss for the time to come on their Part.

But whether, my Lords, they are even yet disposed of in such manner as fully to answer the Ends proposed, whether the Ease and Convenience of the Suitors of the Court will appear to be more effectually provided for, than they were before, by the methods that have now been taken to dispose of their money and securities; these, my Lords, I am afraid are Questions more easily asked, than answered.

But, my Lords, all I would be understood to mean by this, is, and I mean nothing more by it, than that the settling and adjusting of the masters Accounts for such great Sums of money, placed and disposed of in such variety of Hands, so difficult to be thoroughly considered or understood; and so little to be depended on if they were understood; that this, my Lords, was rather the work of Persons at full leisure, of Persons conversant in the Nature and manner of Accounts, that it was the work of variety of Persons of different Capacities and Abilities, and so the taking of these Accounts lately has abundantly verified and proved them to be.

And then, my Lords, we humbly hope that the single Endeavours of a Chancellor to the same end, by being unsuccessful, will not be made criminal, and that he will not be obliged under the pain of an Impeachment in Parliament, to do what, with the greatest Submission, has never yet been attempted, or if attempted, has met with the same ill Success with the Endeavours of the present Earl, and could never hitherto be compleatly or perfectly effected.

But, my Lords, with great Submission, if the stating and settling of these Accounts, on a just and lasting Foundation, should be admitted to be the Duty and Office of a Lord Chancellor, and that he is bound under Pain of an Impeachment to take care of them, yet as this is a Work of the greatest Moment, Judgment, and Consideration, and must unavoidably take up a very great portion of Time, and put a total Stop and Obstruction for the present to all the other Branches of his high Office, we humbly hope, my Lords, that his being cut off in the midst of his Endeavours of that kind, and thereby prevented from further Pursuit of them, that this will be a Consideration of the greatest Weight with your Lordships in determining the Fate of this noble Earl, and that he will not be made Criminal for leaving it unfinished, when his Power of proceeding further therein, was suddenly and unexpectedly taken from him.

My Lords, your Lordships very well know that the Business not only of the Court of Chancery, but of all the other Courts of Westminster-Hall, and even of your Lordships Supreme Court of Judicature, is, and must necessarily be distributed and disposed of into variety of Hands, that some are assigned to one Province, some to another, and all of them concurring to the same End, the carrying on the Business of the respective Courts to which they belong.

And, my Lords, the Officers and Ministers of each of these Courts of Justice, on their being admitted thereto, give each of them the Security of an Oath, or some personal Security for the due and faithful discharge and execution of their Duty, whilst they continue in their Offices.

Now, my Lords, what can be the End of requiring and resting on these Securities, but to relieve and ease the minds of their Superiors from the necessity of prying and examining daily into their Behaviour and Conduct, to the hindrance and neglect of their own greater and more immediate Duty?

The Officer is at the Peril of his Oath, or the Security he has given, nay, even at the Peril of the Office itself, to discharge his Duty as he ought, and justly forfeits his Office by a neglect or breach of any part of his Duty therein; and if one or two of them should have no regard to all or any of these Ties, must the ten Righteous that are left, nay, must the Chancellor himself be punished for their Sakes?

But, my Lords, Masters in Chancery are generally, if not always, chosen from the Profession of the law, and the manner of their Education and the nature of their Studies are justly supposed to set them above the Temptation of mean, or base, or little and unjust Actions.

Many of that Profession your Lordships will permit me to observe, do now, and have in all Ages, worthily adorned even the august Body of the House of Peers, and have been advanced to the highest Dignities in the State.

And, then, my Lords, I humbly hope 'twill not be thought an Observation altogether improper, that when one of this liberal Education, when one brought up in the study and practice of a Profession, whose very Principles consist in the knowledge of Virtue and Honour, of the Rules of Justice and Equity, and all the Accomplishments which can adorn Life, or make him useful to his King and Country; I say, my Lords, I humbly hope 'twill not be improper to observe, that when such a one applies for an Office in the Civil Government, which he is in any Degree qualified for, 'tis no wonder that he should meet with a more favourable Reception than other Persons, who perhaps may have nothing but their Estates or Fortunes to recommend them.

The very Profession of such a one is, my Lords, almost a sufficient Security and Recommendation of itself, and immediately induces a Persuasion and Belief, that they will do nothing to forfeit their Honour, their Reputation, or that Credit and Esteem, which they so justly do and ought to Regard and Value.

But when, my Lords, 'tis remembered that the additional Security and Sanction of an Oath is likewise required from them, when they invoke the Majesty of Heaven to Bless them as they perform their Duty, what higher, what greater or better Security can be taken from them for the due and faithful Discharge of their Duty in the Office they are entering upon?

The Oaths they take upon that Occasion, your Lordships have already heard, and no doubt will have observed, that they differ little from the Oath, which even the Lord Chancellor himself takes on his being admitted to his own high Office.

And as they sit with him in Judgment on the Bench, share with him in carrying on the most important Business of that Court, which is next in Dignity to the Supreme Court of Judicature we are now before, when they are in most Cases necessary for the distributing and dealing out Justice and Equity, and fixing the Rules and Bounds of Property to the Suitors there. Can it, or will it, my Lords, be easily or readily imagined, that they should have no Regard to all these sacred Ties of Duty, that they should prostitute their Honour, their Conscience, and every Thing that is dear and valuable to them, for the sake of any worldly or temporal Consideration whatsoever?

These, my Lords, we humbly apprehend are some of the Reasons, which may be offered, why no personal Security has ever been required from a Master in Chancery, on his Admission into that Office, any more than from the Chancellor himself.

And if this be so, tho' there could be no need, or Occasion for the Chancellor's making any Declarations concerning their Ability or Substance, yet we humbly hope we shall be able to shew to your Lordships, that this Declaration, which is made one of the Articles of an Impeachment against this noble Earl, that even this too, was not without its just Foundation of Reason and Truth.

And this, my Lords, leads me to observe a little on the Eleventh Article of this Impeachment.

[Article XI.] My Lords, the Eleventh Article contains a two-fold Charge against the Earl; First, That whilst he continued in the Office of Lord Chancellor, in order to advance and increase the illegal and corrupt Gain arising to himself from the sale and disposal of the Offices of Masters in Chancery, he did admit several Persons to those Offices, who at the time of their Admissions were of small Substance and Ability, unfit to be trusted with the great Sums of money and Effects of the Suitors lodged in their Hands.

The Second Charge against the Earl in this Article, is, That he did publicly in open Court falsely represent the Persons by him admitted to the Offices of Masters of the Court of Chancery, as Persons of great Fortunes, and in every respect qualified for the Trust reposed in them.

These, my Lords, are the two Branches of this Article against the Earl, and I would beg leave to observe upon it in general, that 'tis not so much as charged or insinuated in any part of it, that the Earl knew or had the least Notice of any insufficiency or inability in the Masters at the Time he admitted them to take upon them that great Trust.

If that had been the Case, or could have been clearly made out, the Commons without doubt would not have omitted so material an Aggravation of this part of their Charge against the Earl.

They have indeed proved, that the Earl did not think fit to take the masters own Words for their Abilities and Fortunes, and therefore never asked them the Question.

But, my Lords, we hope we shall be able to shew to your Lordships, that the Earl took a much more proper and effectual method, to be satisfied of the Truth of their Circumstances and Abilities, than by any Appeal he could have made to themselves; that he did not content himself with barely asking the Question for the sake of an Answer, which he ought to have had no regard to, whether true or false, but that he weighed, considered, and judged of the Account he received of them on his Enquiry from others, and determined accordingly, whether they were or were not fit to be placed in an Office of so great Trust.

That in Consequence thereof, he absolutely rejected some, though their Friends offered him a greater Present, or if it must be called so, a greater Price for their Offices than others, for want of an Estate or Fortune in Possession of their own, that might be some ways adequate to the great Charge they were going to be entrusted with.

That from the same Views of Security to the Suitors of the Court, he refused to admit others, from an Apprehension that the Sums they offered, though considerably greater than were offered by others, would too much exhaust and lessen their own Fortunes, to be able with any Degree of Ease or Credit to support themselves, or be consistent with the Safety and Security of the Suitors money and Effects, to be entrusted with them.

These Instances, my Lords, we shall be able to produce to your Lordships; and when we have so done, we hope we shall need to be in very little Pain for the Second Part of this Charge, which the Earl by his Answer has partly admitted to be true, that is, that he believes he may upon some Occasions, have declared, That he thought the, then, Body of masters as good, with Respect both to their Estates and Ability for the Discharge of their Office, as had been at any time before.

This, my Lords, the Earl owns by his Answer, That he may on some Occasions have said; and if it were true, where was the Crime of it? 'Twas indeed more than he needed to have said, as no One had Authority to require him to make any Declaration at all about the masters.

But, my Lords, if he had said more than he needed to have said, and yet his saying was true; we hope, my Lords, that will never be imputed to him as criminal.

Indeed, my Lords, the Honourable Managers for the House of Commons, both in their Opening, and the Course of their Evidence, have tacked to this Declaration a Circumstance arising from the Death of Mr. Fellowes, one of the masters, which happened just before this Declaration was made, from whence they would infer, and one of them was pleased to say, 'Twas a necessary Declaration to be made at this Time, to give Notice that the Office was worth buying, or to that Effect.

But, my Lords, we humbly hope, how ingenious soever the Observation may be, that it will have no Weight with your Lordships, if the Truth and Nature of the Case it self will support the Declaration that was made upon that Occasion.

But, my Lords, before I leave this Article, I would beg leave to add one Observation more to what I have already said upon the first Part of it, concerning the Obligation on the masters in Chancery to be faithful in the Discharge of their Duty, from the Honour of their Profession, and the Nature and Sanctity of the Oath they take on their being admitted masters.

And, my Lords, I the rather chuse to take Notice of it, because 'tis an Argument, which the honourable managers for the House of Commons have themselves furnished us with.

Your Lordships were pleased to observe, That in the very Beginning of their Evidence, they took great Care and Pains to exalt and dignify the Office of Masters in Chancery as high as possible, and therefore they read to your lordships several Commissions, and put in others to the Table, from the Time of Edward the VIth, down to this Time, to prove, That the Masters in Chancery were joined in Commission with the Master of the Rolls, and the Judges themselves, for the hearing and determining of Causes in Equity, in the Absence of the Chancellor.

And 'twas said by one of the learned managers in the first Day's Opening upon that Occasion, That the Masters in Chancery were next in Power to the Chancellor himself, after the Master of the Rolls.

From which I would humbly presume to infer, That if this be so, if they are Persons of such Eminence and Worth, and so nearly related to Justice it self, on their commencing masters, 'tis still a higher Obligation on them to be careful in the Discharge and Execution of their Office; and then, whether these Considerations, whether the Ties of Honour, of Conscience, and of the Venerable Company they are from thenceforth joined with, and made equal to; whether these may not in a great measure be supposed to supersede that strict Enquiry, which a Lord Chancellor would otherwise think himself obliged to make; this, my Lords, we humbly hope will not be thought an Argument altogether foreign to the present Question before your Lordships, but will, we hope, at least extenuate, if not wholly wipe off any Guilt, that for want of such Enquiry might possibly be imputed to the Earl on his Admission of Masters.

But, my Lords, there is one Observation further, which I cannot let pass on this Occasion, though 'tis not strictly to the Article I am now upon.

And that is, my Lords, what the same learned manager observed in his Reasoning upon that Point, That the Offices of Masters in Chancery being Offices of such great Trust and Dignity, that no Offices were more improper to be bought and sold than they, except those of the Judges themselves.

This, my Lords, might, and no doubt, was a very just and proper Observation to be made, in support of the Point they were then endeavouring to maintain.

But, my Lords, it falls out very unfortunately, to disparage and weaken another Part of their Articles, which, without doubt, they have equally at Heart to maintain, and that is the obliging these great Men, these Judges, these Masters in Chancery, to give Security for the Suitors money and effects in their Hands, as if they were not fit otherwise to be trusted with them.

They are just before made a sort of petty Chancellors, equal in Dignity and Power to the Judges themselves, and fit to be entrusted with the Disposal of the Properties and Fortunes of all the Suitors of the Court of Chancery, and therefore their Places must not be bought or sold; but here they are reduced and abased to the low and servile Condition of a common Receiver or Rent-Gatherer, and must give Security for all the Suitors money or effects that shall happen to come to their Hands for fear they should run away with it.

All, my Lords, I shall presume to add further under this Head, is, That though one of the masters has indeed frankly owned, That he was worse than nothing when he came into his Place of a Master in Chancery, yet from another part of his Evidence, he owns, and it fully appears, that he grossly abused and imposed upon the Earl in concealing it from him, of which the Earl, when he came to have Notice, very justly complained, and expressed his Surprise and Resentment, that he should pretend to come into an Office which he was not able to pay for.

And how far the same Gentleman will in time to come remember the kind and generous Return made him by the Earl, of the Fifteen Hundred Guineas, when he came to find him in Distress afterwards for want of it: This, my Lords, must be left to his own Conscience, and the Gratitude of his own Heart; as must also the like Return of Fifteen Hundred Guineas made to another of the masters under the like Distress and Inability to bear the Want of it; These, my Lords, are Instances of the greatest Generosity, Honour and Tenderness, I had almost said Charity, in the Noble Earl, that perhaps can be produced in Private Life on the like Occasions; however, they have been disguised and disguised, by the Learning and Ingenuity of the Honourable Managers for the House of Commons.

In the mean time, my Lords, I would beg leave to observe, that the ready Paying and Producing of these Sums to the Earl, for their Places at first, their not giving him the least Notice or Intimation that it was not their own money, and the Figure and Appearance they made in the World; these all concurring might easily mislead the noble Earl into a Persuasion and Belief, that they really were what they appeared to be; that they were well able and sufficient to bear the Expence of it. And neither of these Two, or of the other masters have given any Sort of Evidence, that the Earl knew, or had reason to entertain the least Suspicion to the contrary: And if now, at last of all, the Deficiencies of these, and of all the other masters placed in by the Earl shall appear to have been already made good, or to be so far secured, as to prevent any Danger of a Loss to the Suitors of the Court, from their several Offices (which we humbly hope, on the strictest Examination, will appear to be the Case) we may then humbly presume to hope, that the Earl will not be thought to be Criminal under any Part of this Article; but that Your Lordships great Justice will acquit him wholly of it.

[Article XII.] But, my Lords, I would now humbly beg leave to offer a few Words and Observations on the Twelfth Article, which comes next to be considered of.

This

This, my Lords, charges that whilst the Earl was Chancellor, an unjust and fraudulent method was practis'd in the Court of Chancery, on the Sale of Masters Places, and on the Admissions of new Masters; that the Sums agreed to be paid for the Purchase thereof, were paid out of the Suitors money, either by way of Retainer, or by replacing the same again, in the Hands of the Selling Master, immediately after the Admission of the new one: And that by this Practice the Price and Value of these Places was greatly advanced, and Persons of small Ability and Substance were encouraged to contract for the same, which has occasioned great Deficiencies.

This Part, my Lords, shews only the Contrivances amongst the masters themselves, how to get into those Offices; and so far the Earl seems to be but little concerned in it.

But then comes the Charge against the Earl, that though this Practice was notorious and publick, and the Earl was fully acquainted therewith, yet, for his own unjust and corrupt Profit, in the Selling of those Places, he took no measures to prevent or reform that Abuse, either by causing Schedules to be taken of the money and effects of the Suitors, delivered over to the new master, or by appointing any Person to supervise or inspect the Transfer, and Delivery thereof: But on the contrary, suffered that fraudulent Practice to continue without controul, whereby great Embezzlements have been made of the Suitors Money and Effects.

My Lords, the noble Earl, by his Answer, says, That he was totally ignorant of this practice amongst the masters; but admits, that he never gave any particular Directions for Delivery of the Suitors money and effects, by a Schedule to the succeeding master; and says, he never heard that his Predecessors ordered such Schedules to be made; but says, he believes such Schedules were made, between the new master and the old, on the general Order of Transfer, made of Course on the Admittance of the new master.

This, my Lords, is the Earl's Answer to this Article. And as he has in general denied his Knowledge of these Practices amongst the masters, it was certainly expected by Your Lordships, that the honourable managers for the House of Commons, would have fully proved it upon him, and thereby have falsified his Answer to this Part of the Charge.

But, my Lords, if I did not greatly mistake the Evidence to this Point, it has proved nothing more, than that the Earl knew of this Practice, at the same time that all the rest of the World did, that is, a little before Christmas last; when the Curtain drew up, and display'd the masters in their true Colours.

Then it was, and not before, that the Earl was let into this Secret by the kind Assistance and Help of Mr. Thomas Bennet, and the Affidavits that were made by him and others on that Occasion.

But, my Lords, with great Submission, the Earl's knowing of it at that time was a little too late for him to give any Orders for preventing or redressing it for the time to come; for the great Seal was taken from him sometime before, and then all his Knowledge after could be of no use to him, but only to shew how treacherously he had been dealt with, in not being let into this useful Part of Learning, whilst it might have done him any good.

And, my Lords, if this be so, as it can be no ways Criminal in the Earl not to put a Stop to a Practice he was wholly ignorant of, and which the masters kept private amongst themselves, We humbly hope, how ill soever the Masters may be thought to have deserved of this noble Earl, that the Earl himself will not be thought to have deserved ill of your Lordships, in not endeavouring to prevent it; and that in Consequence thereof, Your Lordships great Justice will acquit him of this Part of the Impeachment.

And, my Lords, As to the last Part of this Charge, the not causing proper Schedules to be taken of the Suitors Money and Effects, delivered over to the succeeding Master, as a method, which might in all probability have prevented the Practices amongst the Masters, complained of in the first Part of this Article; this, my Lords, we humbly apprehend, neither can, nor is intended, even by the Articles themselves, to affect the Earl further or otherwise, than as a means he ought to have made use of, to put a Stop to these dangerous Contrivances, formed and set on foot amongst the Masters, to dispose of their Places to the best Advantage.

But, my Lords, If the Earl himself knew nothing of these Contrivances, if he was wholly a Stranger to, and unacquainted with the mischief, 'twill surely, we hope, be no Crime in him, that he did not look out for a Cure.

But, my Lords, It may, perhaps, be worth while, just to consider of the wonderful Discovery that seems to have been made of these Schedules, and how far they would have answered the ends proposed, admitting the Earl had known of these Practices amongst the Masters, and had been better disposed than the Commons are pleased to think he was, for the remedying of them.

And, my Lords, I am afraid this would have proved very far from being an infallible method of remedying these Evils for the time to come; for, my Lords, if the Masters would but trust one another, or any Body would trust them for a very few Days, might they not have done just the same thing they did before? might they not have immediately replaced the Money again in the Hands of the Selling Master? or have paid off a Bond or any other Security they had given on the Borrowing of the Money, as soon as ever they were admitted, and had got the Suitors Money into their Hands? And if they had so done, and this had been discovered and complained of, would it not, with great Justice, have been called instituting a trifling and fallacious method of Security for the Suitors, which could do them no manner of Service, but tended only to amuse and deceive them; and then whether this would not have made a better Figure in an Impeachment, than what is here fixed upon, may, we humbly hope, be thought deserving of Your Lordships Notice; especially, my Lords, when it might have been so easily explained and urged as no doubt it would have been by the learned Managers, that the very taking of these Schedules was for the sake of seeing into the Nature and Value of the Office to be sold, that he might the better know how to set his Price upon it.

But, my Lords, I shall only beg leave to add one or two very short Observations more upon this Head, and then call such Witnesses, as we have, to speak to these two Articles.

And, my Lords, the first Observation I would beg leave to mention, is, that the Earl by his Answer swer owns that he did not, neither did he ever hear, that any of his Predecessors ordered such Schedules to be made; neither is there the least Proof on the Part of the Honourable Managers for the House of Commons, that any such Schedules ever were made, or thought of, 'till Mr. Lighboun very happily hit upon them.

Indeed, the Earl owns by his Answer, that he believes such Schedules were usually made between the Old master and the New, on the General Order of Transfer made of Course in the Admittance of the new master.

But, my Lords, these are not the Schedules the Articles mean, as I apprehend, or, if they are, the Earl at least was to have one Part of them; or else they could be of no Use to him in guarding against any fraudulent Practices of the masters. And if he had had one, what Security that could have been to the Suitors of the Court, if the masters should have been disposed to make Use of their money afterwards; this my Lords, I have already endeavoured to consider of.

The next Observation, my Lords, I would beg leave to make under this head, is, That if such Schedules had been made, what Security would this have been to the Earl, that they were in all Respects true, or with any certainty to have been depended on?

Some, my lords, even of the masters themselves, in the hurry they were lately obliged to give in their Accompts, discovered afterwards several mistakes and Omissions therein; and though they were given in upon Oath, yet on a Review, and a more narrow and careful Inspection and Examination of them, 'twas found they were not altogether to be relied on; and therefore the masters were forced to set them right in their Post-Accounts, given in at some distance of Time after; and whether any, or what other, or better Security for the Truth of those Accounts has been yet found out, I am wholly ignorant of.

My lords, the Third, and last Observation, I would beg leave just to mention, and submit to your lordships under this head, is, Whether there be any, and what real mischief in the Practice it self, so grievously complain'd of in this Article?

It is, my lords, notorious, That in every one of the Offices of these masters in Chancery, there is always necessarily a much greater Sum of Money lying dead in the Office, than goes to pay for their Places, either for want of Securities whereon to place the money, or from the different Claims of Persons entitl'd thereto; or to satisfy the Demands of Creditors, and other Persons, as they shall from Time to Time come in and prove their Debts, and from several other Causes, which I need not here enumerate.

And then, my Lords, Whether there be any great Difference between paying for their Places out of the Suitors money, lying dead in their Hands, or raising so much money out of their own Estates and Fortunes, in order to let the Suitors money lie dead; whether a Practice of this Nature, which does no Sort of Hurt to the Suitors, is of no Advantage to the masters, and which the Earl himself was wholly a Stranger to, and which if he had known, could not have been prevented; whether this can be heightned or improved into so heinous a Crime in the Earl, as to need or deserve the most solemn Prosecution, which we are acquainted with, a Prosecution by the Representatives of the whole Body of the Nation; this, my lords, we humbly hope will deserve to be thought of. In the mean time, as the Commons have chosen your lordships to be the Judges, the Earl himself with the greatest Pleasure joins with them, and humbly appeals to your lordships Just and Impartial Judgment:

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, the Evidence, which we have next to lay before your lordships, relates to the 11th Article, by which it stands charged that several masters admitted by the noble Earl, were Persons of small Substance and Ability; and in that respect very unfit to be trusted with the Great Sums of money, and other Effects belonging to the Suitors, which were lodged in their Hands by Order of the said Court; notwithstanding which the Noble Earl did publickly in open Court declare them to be Persons of great Fortunes, and in every respect qualified for the Trust so reposed in them, to the manifest Deceit and Prejudice of the Suitors of the said Court: But, my lords, tho' the Charge of this Article be conceived in general Terms, yet I apprehend we are now only to account for the Abilities and Circumstances of such of the masters, as they have descended into any particular Evidence against, upon that Head: Now the masters, who have been admitted in by his lordship, and against whom any Insinuations of this kind have been levelled, are Mr. Kynaston, Mr. Bennet, Mr. Elde, and Mr. Thurston: But I should in the first Place observe, as to Mr. Elde and Mr. Thurston, That there is not the least Pretence of any Deficiency in either of their Offices, from any Evidence that has been yet offered by the learned Managers; they stand both of them without Objection in point of Substance; as to Mr. Kynaston, indeed, I do own, That at the Time, when he delivered in his Accounts, there appears to have been a Deficiency in his Office; but since that Time he hath given such Security, as the Court thought fit to accept of, for answering it to the Suitors concern'd. At the time of his Admission he appears to have been a man of Fortune; he had a good Estate in Land, and a considerable sum of money in Bank; and had a great deal of Wood upon his Estate: If he really was a man of a considerable Fortune at that time, and if he appeared so, and came well recommended in other respects to the noble lord, what Foundation is there left to support that part of the Charge against the noble Earl? As to Mr. Tho. Bennet, indeed, tho' he did make an Appearance in the World, equal to a man of Fortune, yet he now pretends it was far from being so, tho' he had an Estate in land; yet he has told your lordships it was incumbered; but, with Submission to your lordships, it doth not appear that any of these Incumbrances were made known to the noble Earl; on the contrary, he appeared to him in the same light as in the Year 1720, when he saith he was worth 20,000*l.* and these Incumbrances being private it is impossible the noble Earl should then know them; we shall shew that at this time he was not only a man of visible Substance, but of real Substance, equal to those, who are usually admitted into these Offices; and if he was equal, both in reputation and fortune, with those admitted by the noble Earl's Predecessors, we hope it shall not be imputed a Crime in him, to have trod in their steps in that particular: In order to make this out against Mr. Bennet, we shall prove that about the time when he applied to Hiccocks, to get back part of the 7000*l.* he then declared his Substance was so good, that if he could but have 2000*l.* he would pay the rest himself; he denied before your Lordships, that he said so, but we have Persons of undoubted Character to prove, that he did say so. And when that appears, we hope you will give the less Credit to Mr. Bennet's Testimony in any other particular, which concerns his Fortune; we shall likewise prove, as to Mr. Hiccocks and Mr. Rogers, that the Sums of money, which they retained, are now submitted to be returned by them respectively to the Court, to answer any Deficiency, so far as the Estates of their Successors shall fall short in satisfying the same; so that upon the whole, the Suitors are in no possibility of suffering by any Transaction of Bennet or Kynaston. We shall beg leave to call our Witnesses, and prove the several Facts I have opened to your Lordships upon this Article.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, we humbly apprehend, that in this Case the noble Earl is not responsible for the bad Circumstances of the Party; if he, upon inquiry, have received such an Account as is proper to rely upon, and to satisfy a reasonable man, it is sufficient: The greatness of the Trusts reposed in these masters, hath been magnified, and great it is; but your lordships will please to consider, that it is not to be expected from the Nature of the Thing, that Persons of great or overgrown Fortunes, should take upon them those Offices. They have informed your lordships, that 120,000*l.* hath been in one of these Gentlemen's hands. I believe no Persons of such vast Estates as 100,000 or 150,000*l.* would give themselves the trouble of executing these Offices, attended with such risque, and requiring so great attendance. I believe the Office of a master in Chancery will never find either such buyers or sellers; all that can be expected is, that they must be men of reasonable Fortunes, Persons of 4 or 500*l.* a Year, brought up with a liberal Education; Persons, who are of good Characters as to their Integrity and Abilities; this is all that can be reasonably expected, and we apprehend it hath appear'd to your lordships, that these masters, which the Evidence hath been given of, were such, and such a Representation was made of them to the noble Earl. My lords, I must submit it upon the Evidence given in that behalf by the Gentlemen of the house of Commons in this Prosecution, that Mr. Kynaston did appear no way unfit, but a Person proper to be admitted into such an Office; no Objections are made either to Mr. Elde or Mr. Thurston. As to Mr. Thomas Bennet, it will appear that his Deficiency will be made good, and that is the best proof of his Ability; and, we hope, Mr. Kynaston's will be so too: As to Mr. Thomas Bennet, he hath denied that ever he told Mr. Hiccocks, that if he would return 2000*l.* he would pay the rest: Being ask'd, whether he had declared to any Body, that he had made that offer to Mr. Hiccocks, he answered directly in the Negative, that he had not, no he was sure he had not; he was asked the Question over and over. But, if my Instructions don't fail me, we shall produce three witnesses to shew your lordships, that Mr. Bennet declared the same thing over and over again, and consequently it could not be a slip of his memory.

Mr. Steele called.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may inform your lordships, as to what Reputation and Character Mr. Bennet was of, in point of Fortune, when he was admitted master?

Mr. Steele. Which of the Bennets?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Mr. Thomas Bennet:

Mr. Steele. It is near two Years ago since Mr. Thomas Bennet came to be admitted a master in Chancery, he was looked upon then to be a man of good Substance and of good Reputation; and since that he had married a Lady of a good Fortune, he made a good Appearance in the World, and was generally esteemed to be a man of Substance.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Did he keep his Coach?

Mr. Steele. I have heard so; I don't know that of my own Knowledge.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, if the Counsel have done, I desire to know what Character Mr. Bennet had as to his Integrity, whether he was accounted an honest man or no?

Mr. Steele. My lords, I never heard to the contrary in my life; nor ever knew any thing to the contrary.

Mr. Walker sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We desire that Mr. Walker will inform your lordships, what he knows of any Proposal or Agreement for the Repayment of any money by Mr. Hiccocks.

Mr. Walker. My lords, Mr. Hiccocks, by order of the Court of Chancery, was to be examined upon Interrogatories, whether he had paid over all the monies and securities of the Suitors of the Court of Chancery, to his Successor Mr. Bennet? It having been alledged by Mr. Bennet, that he retained out of them 7500*l.* Mr. Hiccocks did think fit to submit to the Payment of that money, to make so much good to the Suitors of the Court, as the Estate of Mr. Bennet should prove defective in satisfying, as appears by the Petition delivered by him, and the Answer to the Petition.

Mr. Lutwyche. We shall see that by the Petition. We desire that the Copy of the Petition may be read; they are giving an Account of written Evidence: I desire to ask you, whether you are not concerned as Clerk for Mr. Hiccocks?

Mr. Walker. I am concerned for Mr. Hiccocks as his Solicitor.

Mr. Lutwyche. Whether you had any Authority from Mr. Hiccocks to present that Petition?

Mr. Walker. I had Authority to present that Petition.

Mr. Lutwyche. When did you present the Petition?

Mr. Walker. About three or four Days ago.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire to see what the Petition is? It hath been presented since the Great Seal was in Commission: Read it.

Mr. Walker reads it.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners for the Custody of the Great Seal of Great Britain.

The humble Petition of John Hiccocks, Esq; late one of the Masters of this Court

Sheweth,

THAT by an Order of the 23d of Feb. last upon the Affidavit of Thomas Bennet, Esq; your Petitioner's Successor, (who swore that the Sum of 7500*l.* part of the Monies belonging to the Suitors of this Court, did remain in

in your Petitioner's Hands, and was never paid over to him) it was ordered that your Petitioner should be examined upon Interrogatories, whether all the Monies, Securities, and other Effects, belonging to the Suitors of the Court, were delivered over by your Petitioner to the said Thomas Bennet, and whether your Petitioner kept away any, and what part, by him.

That Interrogatories have been accordingly prepared, and your Petitioner is ordered to put in his Examination, or stand committed.

That your Petitioner, by Reason of his Indisposition, is not in a Capacity to put in his Examination.

That though your Petitioner did pay over, satisfy, and assign to the said Thomas Bennet, all the Monies, Effects, and Securities of the Suitors of the Court in your Petitioner's Hands; and the said Thomas Bennet hath given your Petitioner a Receipt in full for the same, yet, so far, as the Estate of the said Thomas Bennet shall fall short to satisfy the just Demands of the Suitors of the Court; your Petitioner is willing to pay the Sum of 7500 l. into Court, Subject to the Order of the Court, so soon as your Petitioner can raise the same; and your Petitioner is willing to pay the Sum of 2000 l. part thereof within ten Days, and the Residue thereof within three Months, so as the same (as between your Petitioner and the said Thomas Bennet) may not be construed to extend to ease the said Thomas Bennet's Estate from being liable in the first Place to answer the Demands of the Suitors of the Court; but so as the same may abide as a Security to answer any deficiency of the said Thomas Bennet's Estate; and to the end it may appear whether there will be any deficiency or not, that the real and personal Estate of the said Thomas Bennet may be forthwith sold, and disposed of; and in the first place apply'd to answer the Demands of the Suitors of the Court; and the rather, for that your Petitioner is informed, the said Tho. Bennet hath, pursuant to some Order of this Court, by Recognizances, and other Assurances, subjected his whole Estate towards making good those Demands.

Your Petitioner therefore most humbly prays your Lordships, that, upon Payment into Court of the said 7500 l. on the Terms aforesaid, Subject to the further Order of the Court, all further Proceedings upon the said Order, for Compelling your Petitioner to be examined upon Interrogatories, may be stayed.

And your Petitioner, &c.

He reads the Order, May 8th, 1725.

UPON Payment of 3000 l. into Court, and giving Security, such as Mr. Holford shall approve of, for Payment of the further Sum of 4500 l. also into Court, in a Month, both Sums to be Subject to the further Order of the Court; let all proceedings for the compelling the Petitioner to be examined upon the Interrogatories before the Master, be stayed. Hereof give notice forthwith

J. Jekyle, C. S.

R. Raymond, C. S.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I would be glad to know, Whether we can rely upon this as an Authentick Order. Did he examine it?

Mr. Walker. The Original Petition and Answer are in the Register's Office, to draw up an Order.

Mr. Lutwyche. Is it a right, a true Copy?

Mr. Walker. It is.

Mr. Lutwyche. Did you examine it?

Mr. Walker. Yes, I did.

Mr. Com. Serj. If it is not wholly immaterial to examine into the Circumstances of this Gentleman, I would ask whether Mr. Hiccocks is a Person of Ability, sufficient to make good this Sum?

Mr. Walker. My Lords, I don't know the Circumstances of Mr. Hiccocks, nor his Riches. I believe he is able to do what he hath proposed. I believe he hath paid the 3000 l. in money this morning; he told me he would; and he hath proposed Security for the Remainder, 4500 l. and I believe the Security will be approved of.

Mr. Lutwyche. If they have done, I desire he may be asked, How long ago it was since Mr. Hiccocks was ordered to be examined upon Interrogatories?

Mr. Walker. I think the Order is dated the 29th of February.

Mr. Lutwyche. And how long ago is it since this Proposal was made?

Mr. Walker. The Petition was presented the 8th of this Instant May.

Mr. Lutwyche. Was the Petition presented before his Examination? When was it answered?

Mr. Walker. It was answered the 8th of May. It was preferred a little while before. I believe, two or three Days. There was an Order, That Mr. Hiccocks should put in his Examination in four Days, or stand committed; thereupon this Petition was presented;

Mr. Lutwyche. I think it was on Payment of so much money, and giving Security for the rest, that all Proceedings were to stay. I don't find Mr. Walker can say the money is paid, or Security given.

Mr. Walker. Mr. Hiccocks told me the 3000 l. was paid, and I know he hath offered Security for the 4500 l.

Mr. Lutwyche. One or two Securities?

Mr. Walker. I believe only Sir John Buckworth.

Mr. Richard Rogers sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked what he knows of the Payment of any money, or the Directing the Payment of any money into Court by Mr. Rogers, the late master, in Satisfaction of the Deficiency of Mr. Kynaston?

Mr. Rogers. I did, my Lords, by the direction of Mr. Rogers, the late master, prefer a Petition about the latter End of April last, upon the 28th, or 29th of April, to the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners, and thereby did offer to give a Recognizance to make good to the Suitors of the Court any Sum not exceeding 6000 l. as the Estate of Mr. Kynaston should prove defective in answering ing the Effects of the Suitors of the Court. The Petition is answered, and I believe they design to pay the money.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Have you the Petition?

Mr. Lutwyche. Is the Order Drawn up?

Mr. Rogers. The Petition it self I have in my Hand.

The Clerk reads.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners for the Custody of the Great Seal of Great Britain.

The humble Petition of William Rogers, Esq; late one of the masters of the High-Court of Chancery,

Sheweth,

THAT by an Order, made by your Lordships the 20th of January last, it was ordered that Mr. Kynafton, one of the Masters of the said Court, who succeeded your Petitioner, should in a Week deposit the Sum of 26,908 l. 11 s. 3 d. $\frac{1}{4}$ in the Bank of England (being the Ballance of the Account of Money and Securities of and belonging to divers Suitors of the said Court, paid into the Hands of the said Master Kynafton, and your Petitioner) or in Default thereof, that the said Master Kynafton should enter into a Recognizance, in the Penalty of 53,817 l. with two or more Sureties to answer and pay the same as your Lordships should direct.

That the said Kynafton not having paid the said 26,908 l. 11 s. 3 d. $\frac{1}{4}$ into the Bank, or given security for the same, as the said Order directed; and having before proposed towards Satisfaction of the said 26,908 l. 11 s. 3 d. $\frac{1}{4}$ to assign over a Debt of 20,850 l. owing to him from one De la Hay, for the Benefit of the said Suitors; it was by an Order made by your Lordships the 29th of Jan. last, Ordered, That the said Master Kynafton should assign over De lay Hay's Debt to Mr. Holford, one other of the Masters of the said Court, for the Benefit of the said Suitors, and should give his own Recognizance for the said 26,908 l. 11 s. 3 d. $\frac{1}{4}$ in the Penalty of 53,817 l. And upon his so doing, the Time for his performing the said former Order should be enlarged to the Wednesday following.

That by another Order made the 3d of Feb. last, your Lordships Ordered, That upon Mr. Kynafton's assigning of the said Debt, and upon his signifying his Consent to be examined upon Interrogatories for Discovery of all other his real and personal Estate, and that the same might be assigned, and conveyed to the said Master Holford in Trust for the said suitors, the time for performing the former Order should be enlarged to the Wednesday following.

That pursuant to the said Order, the said John Kynafton assigned over the said De lay Hay's Debt, but the same not being sufficient to answer the said sum of 26,908 l. 11 s. 3 d. $\frac{1}{4}$ Nicholas Paxton, Solicitor for, and on Behalf of the suitors of the said Court, on the 15th of Feb. last, preferred his Petition to your Lordships, setting forth the several Proceedings aforesaid; and that it appeared by Mr. Kynafton's Affidavit that 6000 l. part of the said 26,908 l. 11 s. 3 d. $\frac{1}{4}$ was retained by your Petitioner, at the time your Petitioner surrendered his said Office to the said Mr. Kynafton; and that the same still remained in your Petitioner's Hands: It was therefore prayed that your Petitioner might forthwith pay the same for the Benefit of the said suitors, or to such Persons, and in such manner, as your Lordships should direct.

That upon hearing the said Petitioner, upon the 23d. of Feb. last, your Lordships were pleased to Order your Petitioner should be forthwith strictly examined before Mr. Holford, one of the Masters of this Court, whether all the Monies, Securities, and Effects, belonging to the said Suitors, were delivered over by your Petitioner to the said Mr. Kynafton, and whether he kept any, and what Part thereof by him.

That in pursuance of the last Order Interrogatories have been exhibited for the examination of your Petitioner; and in Case your Petitioner should put in his Examination thereto, he doubts not, but it would appear that your Petitioner hath acted with great Justice towards the said Master Kynafton, and that Mr. Kynafton ought to answer and make good the said 6000 l. to the Suitors of the said Court; however your Petitioner being unwilling that any part of the Deficiency in the said Master Kynafton's Office should be imputed to your Petitioner, or that the Suitors of the Court should be put to any Expence or Trouble, in making any further Enquiry touching the said 6000 l. your Petitioner is willing (if your Lordships shall think fit) to give his own Recognizance, or a good and sufficient Mortgage, to be approved of by one of the Masters of this Court, to such Person or Persons as your Lordships shall direct, to answer and make good to the Suitors of this Court any sum not exceeding 6000 l. as the Estate and Effects of the said Mr. Kynafton shall fall short of satisfying the said 26,908 l. 11 s. 3 d. $\frac{1}{4}$, which he was ordered to deposit in the Bank of England as aforesaid; or if your Lordships shall think it more for the benefit and security of the said Suitors, that your Petitioner should bring 6000 l. into Court, your Petitioner is willing to bring in such sum for the Purpose aforesaid, having a reasonable Time allowed him to raise the same.

Forasmuch therefore as it is not pretended, but that your Petitioner has paid and delivered over to Mr. Kynafton all the Money and securities belonging to the suitors of this Court, which were in your Petitioner's Hands at the Time when he surrendered his said Office to the said Mr. Kynafton, except the sum of 6000 l.

Your Petitioner humbly prays your Lordships will be pleased to make such Order in the Premises, as to your Lordships shall seem meet; and that in the mean Time all Proceedings upon the said Order of the 23d of February last, for examining your Petitioner upon Interrogatories, may be stayed.

And your Petitioner, &c.

The Clerk reads the Order. 29th of April, 1725.

Upon the Petitioner's paying the said 6000 l. into Court, subject to the further Order of this Court, let all Proceedings upon the said Order of the 23d of February last, for examining the Petitioner upon Interrogatories be stayed. Hereof give Notice forthwith.

Jeff. Gilbert, C. S.
R. Raymond, C. S.

There was another Petition preferred, but never answered.

Clerk

To the Right Honourable the Lords Commissioners for the Custody of the Great Seal of Great Britain.

The Humble Petition of William Rogers, Esq; late one of the Masters of this Court,

SHEWETH,

THAT Mr. Paxton, in behalf of the Suitors upon Mr. Kynaston, being 26,908 l. 11 s. 3 d. $\frac{1}{4}$ deficient in his Accounts, to answer the Suitors monies in his Hands, having, by his Petition to your Lordships, represented (inter alia) That your Petitioner, upon surrendring your Petitioner's Office to him, detained, and still hath in his Hands, the Sum of 6000 l. of the said Suitors money; your Lordships, upon hearing the said Petition, on the 23d of February last, were pleased to order your Petitioner should be examined before Mr. Holford, one of the ~~masters~~ masters of this Court, Whether all the Monies, Securities and Effects, belonging to the said Suitors, were delivered over by your Petitioner to the said Mr. Kynaston?

That your Petitioner, on the 29th Day of April last, preferr'd the annexed Petition to your Lordships; and your Lordships were, thereupon pleased to make the Order thereunto subscribed.

That your Petitioner is informed, the said Mr. Kynaston hath, pursuant to a former Order of your Lordships, by Recognizance and Assurances, subjected his whole Estate towards making good his said Deficiency.

That your Petitioner, upon surrendering his Office, received from the said Mr. Kynaston, proper Discharges for all Monies, Securities and Effects of the said Suitors, then in your Petitioner's Hands, which your Petitioner is ready to produce and prove: And the said Mr. Kynaston from that Time, never pretended but that the Account delivered in to him, contained a full Account of all the Money, Effects and Securities of the Suitors of the Court in your Petitioner's Hands, except the Sum of 70 l. or thereabouts, which your Petitioner was always ready to pay him, provided he would have given your Petitioner an Account wherein the said Omiffion or Mistake consisted; and your Petitioner, upon Examination of his Vouchers, found the same to be true; but the said Mr. Kynaston hath hitherto neglected so to do, though your Petitioner hath sent to him several Times for that Purpose.

That your Petitioner, upon the terms mentioned in the annexed Petition, is willing to pay a ready Obedience to your Lordships Order thereupon; and for that Purpose, now humbly offers, in Six Days time, to pay 2000 l. part of the said 6000 l. into Court, subject to the further Order of the Court, so far as may be necessary to make good any Deficiency to the Suitors of the Court, which Mr. Kynaston's Estate shall not be sufficient to answer.

And your Petitioner humbly prays, he may have a Month's Time to pay in the remaining 4000 l. (your Petitioner being obliged to borrow the same on his Estate) and that all Proceedings on the said Order of the 23d of February last, against your Petitioner, may in the mean Time, be stayed: And your Petitioner further humbly prays your Lordships, That the said Order, made by your Lordships on the 29th of April last, may be so far explained, that as between the said Mr. Kynaston and your Petitioner, the same may not be construed to extend to ease the said Mr. Kynaston's Estate from being liable, in the first Place, to answer the Demands of the Suitors of the Court; or, if all, or any part of the said 6000 l. shall be applied for that Purpose; that your Petitioner may then stand in the Place of the Suitors of the Court, to have Satisfaction out of the Estate of the said Mr. Kynaston, for all, or so much of the said 6000 l. as shall be so applied; and that the said 6000 l. so to be deposited by your Petitioner, or any Part thereof, may not be applied towards making good the said Mr. Kynaston's Deficiency, till after Sale and Disposal of all the said Mr. Kynaston's real and personal Estate for that Purpose.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Is there any Order upon this?

Mr. Rogers. This was never answered.

Mr. Lutwyche. If they have done, I desire he may be asked, if he hath given any Notice to the Solicitor of the other Side, of the Order on the first Petition?

Mr. Rogers. I did acquaint Mr. Paxton, that I had such an Order; but I did not serve it upon him.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire to ask you, Whether, when you told Mr. Paxton of it, he insisted upon a formal Service?

Mr. Rogers. Mr. Paxton said, Let it be done as soon as possible.

Mr. Com. Serj. What Answer did you give to Mr. Paxton, when he desired it might be done as soon as possible?

Mr. Rogers. I told him, I was raising the money by Direction of Mr. Rogers.

Mr. Com. Serj. I ask you, If you had any Directions from Mr. Rogers, for the Payment of, or for raising the money?

Mr. Rogers. Yes, I had. I believe it will be paid in a Day or two. I can't directly say what Day. Such a Sum is not immediately raised.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked, Whether there is any Reason to doubt of his Ability to raise the money?

Mr. Rogers. I believe he is able to give a Security; but, as he lives in the Country, he may not be able at present to pay so much money; but he is now in Town, and endeavouring to raise the money.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, we beg leave to call two or three Gentlemen, with Respect to Mr. Thomas Bennet, what he hath said; and that he said he was able to pay all the rest of the money, if Mr. Hiccocks would pay 2000 l.

Mr. Holford called.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we beg leave to begin with Mr. Holford, and to ask him, Whether he was not employed, or concerned as a Friend to Mr. Thomas Bennet, to go to Mr. Hiccocks, and what Proposals he was to make to Mr. Hiccocks?

Mr. Holford. Presently after the Article was delivered in by Mr. Thomas Bennet, relating to the money he said was in the Hands of Persons of Ability and Substance, to the Judges and Gentlemen of the Bank, Mr. Bennet did send to me, to desire I would speak to Mr. Hiccocks, that if he would pay him but 2000 l. he would pay the Remainder of the money. I did not much care to undertake it; but upon some Importunity, I did go upon the said message; and it was this, That he desired me to tell Mr. Hiccocks, that if he would pay him back 2000 l. he could or would take care that the rest should be paid, and Mr. Hiccocks should not be troubled about the Remainder.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, Whether he had any Discourse with Mr. Thomas Bennet, concerning what passed between him and Mr. Hiccocks?

Mr. Holford. Mr. Hiccocks told me——

Mr. Lutwyche. That is no Evidence.

Mr. Holford. I am only relating the Answer he returned to my message; which was, That Mr. Bennet had given in that Article, and brought his Name in Question, without ever acquainting him of it; and therefore he would never have any thing to do with him. I did give him that Answer, and never troubled myself any more about it.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire Mr. Holford would recollect the Time.

Mr. Holford. I believe it was the next Day after he had given in that Article.

Mr. Lutwyche. I think they call this Witnesses to prove a Contradiction in Mr. Bennet's. Mr. Holford says, He said he was willing, he would take care the rest should be paid. I desire to know, Whether he declared he had the money to pay, the money in his own Hands?

Mr. Holford. No, my Lords, I can't say he told me so.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to ask him, If Mr. Bennet did not expressly tell him, That he was able to pay the money; or if Mr. Holford would have gone upon the Errand, without being satisfied that he was able to pay the money?

Mr. Holford. Mr. Hiccocks was my old Acquaintance and Friend, I did not intend to deceive him; if I had not believed what Mr. Bennet said to be true, and that he could make good what he at that Time sent me to desire Mr. Hiccocks to accept, I would not have gone on that Errand to him.

Mr. Thurston called.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we desire Mr. Thurston may inform your Lordships what he hath heard Mr. Thomas Bennet say, in relation to Mr. Hiccocks, about his paying back 2000 l.

Mr. Thurston. I do remember Mr. Thomas Bennet told me, and I think I was then sitting in the publick Office, that if Hiccocks (as I think his Expression was) would pay him back 2000 l. he would make up the rest himself.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire Mr. Thurston to explain himself, whether he expressed himself in that manner that Mr. Thurston apprehended he was able to do it?

Mr. Thurston. I can't swear critically to the last Words, that he would make up the rest himself; but he spoke in such Words, that I understood he meant so; that was the Sense of those Words, as I have delivered it now to your Lordships.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Had you any Discourse at any other Time with Mr. Thomas Bennet about it?

Mr. Thurston. I believe I had some Discourse with Mr. Thomas Bennet at another Time; and I asked him, Why he would not pay in as much as he had undertaken, if Mr. Hiccocks had paid him 2000 l.? The Reply he gave me was, All he had in the World would not do it.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, if he had any Discourse with Mr. Thomas Bennet at any Time, about his Ability to pay this money, or whether he was able to pay it?

Mr. Thurston. I had no Discourse with Mr.

Thomas Bennet directly, of his Ability to pay in this money, when these Accompts were called for; but I do remember, at a preceding Time, he was talking of Hiccocks's detaining his money by way of Retainer; explaining the Reason, why he paid for the Place that he bought of Mr. Hiccocks out of the Suitors money, that it was the most compendious method of doing in that Case, and prevented the Trouble of mortgaging his Estate.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Did he say any thing in case of his death, Whether he should leave sufficient to satisfy it?

Mr. Thurston. He said at that Time, if he died, there would be Estate sufficient to answer it; therefore he had the less Occasion to trouble himself to raise the money, but to pay it in the particular manner I have mentioned.

Mr. Plummer. I desire to ask him, If Mr. Bennet explained to him in what manner the money was to be raised, to make good the Deficiency?

Mr. Thurston. He did not at all explain to me, how he was to raise it.

Mr. Plummer. I desire to ask you more particularly, Whether he mentioned to have insured any money upon his Life?

Mr. Thurston. Not at that Time, as I remember; I have heard him at other Times talk of insuring of money on his Life.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When was the first Time that Mr. Bennet told you, that if Mr. Hiccocks would pay him Two thousand Pounds, he would make up the rest himself?

Mr. Thurston. My Lords, I can't remember distinctly the Time, never having imagined I should be called upon to repeat it on this Occasion; but it must necessarily be after the Accompts were given in before the Judges. I can't exactly remember the Time, or Day, or Week.

Mr. Elde called again.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Elde may inform your Lordships what Discourse he had with Mr. Bennet, in relation to the money in Mr. Hiccocks's Hands?

Mr. Elde. Some small Time after I had given in my Accompt, I saw Mr. Bennet; and he came up to me and said, That it was hard that he could not have any money from Mr. Hiccocks. He said, If he would pay him 2000 l. he would, or could pay the rest. I do not remember which.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Whether he thinks he might have been able to pay it, if he had thought fit?

Mr. Elde. I know nothing of Mr. Bennet's Circumstances; I am as little acquainted with him, as with any I must necessarily have Correspondence with.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, We shall not trouble your Lordships with any further Evidence on the 11th Article, in which we think we have sufficiently contradicted Mr. Thomas Bennet, as to the Charge he hath made on the Noble Lord. As to the 12th Article, that principally relates to that Part, That the purchase money was paid out of the Suitors money; that is a Fact that lies upon the Gentlemen of the House of Commons to prove: It is impossible for Us to prove a Negative, they are to prove the Affirmative, and they have not attempted to prove it by any Witnesses; but by Mr. Thomas Bennet: Now this being a Fact that rests intirely upon Mr. Bennet's Evidence, we submit, Whether your Lordships can believe any thing upon the Credit of his Testimony?

Mr. Com.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, We humbly apprehend the Gentlemen of the House of Commons, by joining these Two Articles together, did it as if they were the same, and did depend upon one another: For unless the matter in the 11th Article be established, what was done on the 12th, will be of no great Significancy; For if Persons of good Ability, who are responsible, and fit to answer the money that comes to their Hands, be admitted to be masters, it is not very material whether the Forms of transferring in like Transactions of that Nature are strictly pursued or no; because the Person, being sufficient and responsible, will answer that money that is so detained. I choose to call them Forms, for, with Submission, if we examine them, they are Forms, and nothing else: Whether they take all the money from the preceding master, or replace with the Successor's own money, what is detained by the Predecessor, it comes to the self same Thing, and are only different Forms or methods of Payment. Upon the whole, we apprehend, We have established our Answer to the 11th Article; we think the other follows of Course; and that there is no Necessity to give your Lordships any further Trouble on this Head; but that the Noble Earl will stand clear as to any Accusation on these Two Articles.

Then all Persons concerned in the Impeachment, were directed to withdraw, and then the House adjourned to Ten o'Clock the next Morning.

Friday, 14 May, 1725. The Seventh Day.

THE Lords being seated in their House, the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence; as also another Proclamation, That all Persons concerned, were to take Notice, That Thomas Earl of Macclesfield now stood upon his Trial; and they might come forth in order to make good the Charge.

L. Ch. J. King. Mr. Serjeant Probyn, you may go on.

Mr. Strange. My Lords, We who are Counsel for the Noble Earl within the Bar, beg leave to proceed to his Defence against the 13th and 14th Articles of the Commons Charge.

My Lords, The Facts contained in these Two Articles, are laid to be done with a View of concealing a Deficiency, that had happened in the Office of Mr. Dormer, a master of the Court; upon whose Failure it is charged, that there was a total Neglect, either to secure his Person or Effects, or to enter into any Inquiry into the Deficiency: And that altho' the State of this Affair was fully known to the Earl of Macclesfield, yet a declaration was afterwards made in open Court, That Mr. Dormer was only gone into the Country to take the Air; That he would return again in a little while, and all would be well: And that in further Prosecution of this Endeavour to conceal the deficiency in Dormer's Office, a precarious and trifling Composition was made with a Creditor of Mr. Dormer's; and this without any Notice to the Suitors of the Court.

My Lords, I shall, for my Part, confine myself at present to these Two Articles only, reserving any thing I may have to offer in general to the close of the defence; but before I proceed to observe upon the Evidence brought to support the Charge contained in these Two Articles, it will be proper to take Notice to your Lordships, That the Honourable Managers for the House of Commons, have not offered one Tittle of Proof, as to the declaration pretended to be made, relating to Mr. Dormer's being gone to take the Air, though they were pleased to inlarge upon it in their Opening; but we have the Satisfaction to know, That we are before your Lordships, who are incapable of receiving any Impressions from Facts that are barely opened, and not proved; and therefore we rest assured, that no Weight will be laid upon this Circumstance, since no Evidence has been produced in Support of this Part of the Charge.

My Lords, as to the other matters contained in these Articles, we humbly hope to give your Lordships abundant Satisfaction in the Noble Earl's Behaviour on that Occasion; that all the proper Steps were taken to secure the Interest of the Suitors; and that, if there still remains any Deficiency, it is not to be imputed to any Neglect of the Noble Earl within the Bar.

Your Lordships were pleased to observe in the Course of the Evidence produced by the Honourable managers for the House of Commons, That Mr. Dormer's Failure happened about Christmas, 1720. My Lords, it was about that Time that Mr. Wilson, who had large Effects of Mr. Dormer's in his Hands, stopped Payment; which unfortunately obliged Mr. Dormer, without the Knowledge or Suspicion of any one, to retire himself to Holland; and soon after, Notice was given of it to Mr. Cottingham, who immediately acquainted the Earl of Macclesfield with it.

Upon this, my Lords, no Time was lost; for the Two Senior Masters, Mr. Hiccocks and Mr. Rogers, were appointed to inquire into Mr. Dormer's Affairs: His Chambers were searched; the Transfer of any Stock in the publick Funds was stopp'd; and all Endeavours used to procure a full Satisfaction for the Suitors of the Court: But, my Lords, though these methods were very proper to prevent the embezzling of Mr. Dormer's Effects, yet your Lordships will readily perceive, that no Steps, that could be taken whilst Mr. Dormer was on the other Side of the Water, could be in any Degree effectual towards the Payment of his Debts.

And therefore, my Lords, it was, that upon a Proposal of Mr. Dormer's, to come over and discover his Effects for the Benefit of the Suitors, in case he might be assured of his liberty, and not be left to die in a Gaol in his old Age (as himself expresses it) the Noble Earl within the Bar, was prevailed upon to give him those Assurances; but upon Condition, That he made a full Discovery, and assigned over all he had.

Suppose, my Lords, the Proposal had not been complied with, would the Suitors have been in a better Condition than they now are in? The Person of Mr. Dormer was out of Reach; the Stock could not be transferred without his Presence or Consent, nor were there any means to procure it under these Circumstances, without some Compliance on the Side of the Noble Earl. To say, my Lords (and it was only said) That Dr. Eddisbury's Person was secured, is, in my humble Apprehension, an Argument of no weight in this Case, since it does not appear, that he was out of the Reach of the Court before his Failure:

lure; and, I am persuaded, the Gentlemen, who mentioned this Instance, don't desire to have it thought, That the Noble Lord, who then presided, was capable of so great a Breach of Faith, as to deprive him of his Liberty after a Promise to the contrary: It must be submitted, therefore, to your Lordships, whether the committing a man in the Power of the Court, was a Precedent that could be followed in the Case of Mr. Dormer.

My Lords, to finish this Part of the Defence in not securing the Person of Mr. Dormer, I shall beg leave only to observe, That though it is alledged in the Articles, and was insisted on in the Opening and Summing up, That Application was made to the Earl of Macclesfield for that Purpose, yet the Honourable Managers forgot to call any Witnesses to the Proof of that Particular; which must therefore rest upon the Denial in the Answer of the Noble Earl.

My Lords, It was insisted upon, That Mr. Dormer had not complied with his own Proposal in discovering and delivering up his whole Effects; and for that Purpose a Witness was called to inform your Lordships of a very great Discovery that has been since made of a Quantity of Hops, that belonged to Mr. Dormer: Your Lordships remember how very lamely they were proved to belong to Mr. Dormer, and how reasonable an Account was given of their being kept so long in Hopes of a better market. My Lords, we shall not presume to entertain your Lordships with any Counter-Proof of such a trifling Evidence (as a learned manager was pleased to call it) but beg leave to infer from thence, That it is evident a more than ordinary Care was taken in looking after Mr. Dormer's Effects, since, after Four Years, which have past from the Time of assigning his Estate, a few musty Hops are all that are discovered.

My Lords, we humbly hope to make it fully appear to your Lordships, That the complying with Mr. Dormer's Proposal was the only means to procure any Satisfaction: Had not Mr. Dormer been induced to come over, his Books and Accounts would never have appeared; and had he died Abroad, as he did soon after his coming Home, I am persuaded the deficiency would have been much greater: And if a full discovery of his Effects was not made (which, however, I apprehend there is no Foundation to believe, after the Hops are laid out of the Case) the same will appear to be owing to his death, which happened in a short Time after his Return.

My Lords, The several Steps that were taken towards securing the Effects of Mr. Dormer, must necessarily promulge his Failure in some measure; the Chambers could not be searched; there could not be Caveats enter'd in the Books of all the publick Funds; nor could Lockman be caution'd against expecting any more out of the Effects of Mr. Dormer, without making some Noise, and giving People Notice: And, therefore, when we have made out these Facts, I humbly hope, the Noble Earl will stand acquitted of any design to conceal the State of Dormer's Office, in Prejudice of the Suitors; but that, considering all the Circumstances of the Case, he took the wisest and properest Course to secure as ample a Satisfaction for the Suitors, as it was in his Power to do.

My Lords, The 14th Article, relating to the Composition with Wilson, will give me no Occasion to take up much of your Lordships Time. It is called a precarious and trifling Composition, and was aggravated in the Opening, and so, of course, in the summing up, by a matter, which they failed in the Proof of, That Wilson was suffered to compound this Debt, though he paid others their whole Demand with Interest.

My Lords, The Witnesses, who was called to prove this, did by no means come up to what was opened: He did, indeed, say, That he was informed, That Wilson had paid some Persons their whole Debt; but he, at the same Time, acquainted your Lordships, That these were small Debts; and that he did not pay them out of his own Effects, but from a Supply administered by a Friend, only to give him a Credit at his setting up again; and the unfortunate End of this man (of which I am just now informed) is an unanswerable Proof of his Inability to pay the Whole.

My Lords, As a further Argument to prove the Reasonableness of this Composition, I beg leave to appeal to another Part of the Evidence produced on this Article by the managers of the House of Commons; whereby it appeared, That Mr. Wilson's Books were perused by two masters, and himself was put upon his Oath; and that he swore the Composition he then offered, was all he was able to make; which I humbly submit to your Lordships, as an Answer to what an Honourable manager was pleased to object, when he insisted, that there ought to have been a Commission of Bankruptcy against Wilson, that thereby his Effects might have been discovered upon Oath.

My Lords, There were many other Creditors of Mr. Wilson's, besides Mr. Dormer, who might have applied for a Commission of Bankruptcy, if it would have been for their Advantage; but, as every body is acquainted with the great Expence and Delay of such a Procedure, I believe they will be thought to have taken the wisest Course: Here was all the Benefit of a Commission, by the putting Wilson upon his Oath, and none of the Expence and Delay that attend such an Inquiry.

My Lords, Another Thing opened, and not proved, is, That at the Time of this Composition, Poulter, who was Wilson's Debtor, was worth nothing: It is true, my Lords, he was afterwards in Execution, and escaped; but if we make it appear to your Lordships, That at the Time of the Composition he was a visible Person, and not suspected, I humbly hope, whatever has happened subsequent to the Composition, will be no Ingredient in shewing it to have been a trifling and precarious one at the Time of making it.

My Lords, I beg leave humbly to observe, That the Honourable Managers have not been pleased to instance, how the Suitors would have been in a better Condition, in case this Composition had not been made: Could they have shewn your Lordships, that if Part of the Debt had not been taken, the Whole might have been obtained, I must confess, there would have been some Reason to have called this a trifling Composition; but, since nothing of that Nature has been attempted, I must submit the whole Transaction, upon what I have already offered, to have been a Transaction most for the Advantage of the Suitors, considering the Circumstances that attended this Composition.

My Lords, An Honourable Manager, who spoke Second upon this Article, was pleased to say, That by this Composition the Suitors were tied down to a certain Loss of Half their Demand. My lords, I humbly apprehend the Consequence to be directly otherwise; and that the Suitors are not tied down at all: As they were no Parties to the Composition, they were not bound by it; nor is Mr. Wilson, by this Composition, in any degree discharged as to the Suitors of the Court; so that if Wilson be able to pay the Whole, he is still as liable to the Demands of the Suitors, as if this Composition had not been made; and if this be so, it will be to the Advantage of the Suitors, that they had no Notice, which, however, I apprehend, was, in the Nature of the Thing impracticable.

My lords, It was insisted upon, That the Petitions, and Orders, and Reports on this Occasion were in an unusual and clandestine manner; and a Certificate has been read to your Lordships to prove, That they were never filed and registred, as is usual in other Cases: But do they, my lords, pretend to say, that this was by the Order, or with the Privity of the Earl of Macclesfield? The Business of a Chancellor is to make Orders; but I never yet heard it was his Duty to see them drawn up and registred; and therefore, if there was any thing unusual in this, it is not to be imputed to the Neglect of the Noble Earl, unless it was proved to have been by his express Direction.

My lords, It has already appeared, that this Composition, and the Proceedings upon it, did not proceed from the Noble Earl; but were proposed to him; Mr. Edwards did acquaint your Lordships, That it was himself, who first proposed it to the Earl, after having advised with Mr. Hiccocks, who put him into that method.

This, my Lords, is the Nature of our Defence against the 13th and 14th Articles of the Commons Charge: We humbly hope the several Steps that were taken, will appear to have been for the Benefit and Advantage of the Suitors, and with no other View, than the securing them their whole Demand; that the Composition so much complained of, was given into, only as a means towards the attaining that End, and could in no Event be prejudicial to the Suitors of the Court, as the Gentlemen of the House of Commons would represent it to your lordships.

Mr. Dormer Parkhurst sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we desire Mr. Parkhurst may be asked, What Conversation passed between him and Mr. Dormer, previous to his going abroad, and upon what Occasion he was obliged to go abroad?

Mr. Parkhurst. Mr. Dormer came to me about the latter End of November, 1720, at my Chambers. I had then some-body else with me; upon that Account he said nothing to me, but desired I would come next morning early to him. I went, and when I came to him (he lived then in Chambers in Lincoln's-Inn) he shut the Door, and told me, he had a thing of great Importance to communicate to me in relation to himself; and then told me, he designed to go abroad: He said Mr. Wilson, his Goldsmith, the Day before had been with him (this was on a Sunday Morning, and he had been with him the Saturday before) and had acquainted him, That the Monday following he should be obliged to shut up Shop, and stop payment: He had a great deal of money in his Hands, and he was afraid, that as soon as it was known, that Mr. Wilson was unable to pay; the Solicitors, and Practisers belonging to the Court, who knew he kept Mr. Dormer's Cash, would immediately be alarmed; and that Application would be made thereon, to my Lord Chancellor; and he believed, that the first thing to be done, in relation to himself, would be to confine him; and that there would be an Order for his being committed; and therefore to prevent that (for he could not live a Week without Air and Liberty) he was resolved to withdraw himself, and retire to some Place or other. Upon this, I expressed a great deal of Concern, and endeavoured to persuade him against it: I desired him to make his Circumstances known to my Lord Chancellor and the masters: He said No; he was sure the Consequence would be his Confinement, and was come to a Determination with himself, to secure his Person; his Uneasiness, was from the Fear, that he should be confined; but he would leave every thing fairly behind him, and hereafter come over and obey any Order, from my Lord Chancellor; but the first Thing he would do, he was resolved to withdraw, to secure himself from being confined.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. What happened after he was gone abroad? and what Notice was taken of it?

Mr. Parkhurst. In a little time after this, I understood he had put this Resolution in Execution, and had withdrawn himself. He had desired me, that I should not mention it to any Body; and gave out by his Clerk, that he was gone into the Country. I did, after this, in about three Weeks receive a letter from him, that he was then at Rotterdam; and there was a letter inclosed, which he desired me to shew to some of the masters. I think I shewed it to Mr. Rogers; afterwards, according to his Directions in the letter to me, I carried it to Mr. Cottingham. It was directed to Mr. Cottingham, who was then Secretary to my Lord Chancellor; I carried the letter to him, and left it with him.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. If you can, recollect what were the Particulars of that letter, the Contents of it, relating to any Terms of his coming over again.

Mr. Parkhurst. It is a great while ago; I have but a faint Remembrance of it; but I think it was much to the same Purpose with what he communicated to me at first, after he had acquainted me with the unhappy Affair, as hath been mentioned. He said he had a great Sum of money in Mr. Wilson's Hands; and when he found Wilson unable to pay, he was apprehensive of an immediate Confinement, which he could not possibly bear; therefore he had withdrawn himself; but that he had left his own Estate intire behind him, and every thing relating to the Suitors; and he was willing to come over to give an Account of the State of the Office, and of his own Estate; and he was willing to make over all his own Estate, to answer the Deficiency of the Office, as far as it would go, and to do every thing the Court should think fit to order him, provided he might have his liberty both before and after: He desired he might not be confined, and he would do every Thing that the Court would order him to do, or should be desired of him, as much as if he was confined.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We desire he may be asked, If he knew how it was, that Mr. Wilson came to have so much of Mr. Dormer's Effects in his Hands, and upon what Account?

Mr. Parkhurst. I did not know, till this Affair happened of Wilson's failing, what money he had in his Hands belonging to Mr. Dormer. I used to see Mr. Wilson with him; I knew Mr. Wilson had Cash of his in his Hands; but afterwards, by way of Justification of himself, for losing so much money, I heard him say, it was an unlucky Accident, he had a considerable Sum of money paid into his Hands, by Order of Court, and a considerable Sum, which came in upon the Land-Tax, and he did not know at that Time, what to lay it out in; the Stocks were so high and precarious, he would not buy any; and he thought Wilson's Hands as safe a Place as any at that Time; he could not keep it by him in his Chambers, and he was going into the Country for three or four Weeks; and when he saw things were settled, then he would lay it out: But when he came back to Town, he found Mr. Wilson in those declining Circumstances. This was after he returned from Holland. I knew nothing before of this, nor that he had any great Sum of money in his Hands.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. He saith that he did propose, That he would come over and make a Discovery of, and deliver up his Effects, in case his Person was secured; now I desire he may recollect, before he did come over, if he knew of any Steps taken to secure his Effects; and whether any Thing in his Chambers was taken Care of, and by whom?

Mr. Parkhurst. I can give but one Instance of it, that is, Mr. Rogers, a master in Chancery, came to me one morning, and desired me, upon the Account of being a Relation, for I was no otherwise concerned, that I would go along with him to look into Mr. Dormer's Chambers, to see what there was, what Securities, or any thing of that Nature belonging to the Office. I remember we did find several Things, several Land Tax Tallies which Mr. Rogers gave an Account of. I don't know what the Number was.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Who took Possession of them?

Mr. Parkhurst. Mr. Rogers, the master in Chancery.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. By whose Direction did you understand that Mr. Rogers took this Care?

Mr. Parkhurst. I understood it was by the Direction of the Court. He came to me, and desired me to go along with him, to see that no Person meddled with any Thing but what belonged to the Suitors; and he took them, and locked them up in his Closet or Scrutore.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we have done with this Evidence.

Mr. Plummer. I think he says, the Reason of Mr. Dormer's having so much money in the Hands of Mr. Wilson, was, that there was a great Sum of money come in upon the Land-Tax: I desire to know, if Mr. Dormer left this money dead in the Hands of Mr. Wilson, or if he had any Interest for it?

Mr. Parkhurst. I know nothing of that. By way of Justification, he said, It was unlucky he had so much money paid into his Hands at that Time; Times were so precarious, he did not know how to lay it out.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, Whether Mr. Wilson did not usually keep Mr. Dormer's Cash, and the Cash of the Office?

Mr. Parkhurst. I believe he did, I know but few Instances of it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether he never heard him declare that Mr. Wilson paid him Interest?

Mr. Parkhurst. I never heard him declare he did: He never spoke to me about it particularly.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, Whether he can inform your Lordships, how long Mr. Wilson had been Banker to Mr. Dormer?

Mr. Parkhurst. I can't say exactly how long: I believe some Years.

Mr. Com. Serj. If the Gentlemen have done with this Witness, we beg leave to call another, to prove what Care was taken to stop those Effects, that were in the publick Funds.

Mr. John Elphinstone sworn.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Elphinstone may inform your Lordships what he knows of any Orders or Directions given, in relation to the Effects of Mr. Dormer that were in the Publick Funds; and by whom those Directions were given?

Mr. Elphinstone. My Lords, I have been to search the Books of the Bank, the South-Sea, and East-India Companies, to see what Stock Fleetwood Dormer, Esq; one of the masters of the Court of Chancery had in the Books of those Companies, and what Orders there were for stopping Mr. Dormer's transferring such Stock. My Lords, I went first to the Bank, and searched a Book of that Company, called a Leidger, where Mr. Dormer's Accompt was stated by way of Debtor and Creditor. I found in that Book, a Memorandum written over Mr. Dormer's Account in red letters, as follows, Q. No Transfer. I likewise enquired, if there were any Orders of the Court of Chancery, for stopping the Transfer of such Stock? I was told by the Clerk, That he knew of none. I enquired of the Clerk at the Transfer-Office, if there was any Order of the Court of Chancery for, transferring Mr. Dormer's Stock to Mr. Edwards, the succeeding master; after some search, he brought me an original Order, Signed Parker, C. dated 11 July, 1721. I have a Copy of that Order in my Hand, whereby it appears, that all the Stock and Annuities, in the Name of Mr. Dormer, were ordered to be transferred to Mr. Edwards, on the 12th of July 1721, viz. the Day after the Date of the said Order. I found in the Transfer Book of that Company the Sum of 3393 l. 16 s. transferred by Mr. Dormer to Mr. Edwards, and Mr. Edwards's Acceptance of the same. This is a Copy of the original Order. I afterwards went to the South Sea House; I searched the Books of that Company, and in the Book marked Letter D. N^o. 6. Folio 430. where Mr. Dormer's Accompt is stated by way of Debtor and Creditor, I found a Memorandum over Mr. Dormer's Account, which is as follows; Stock not to be transferred without Order from the Court of Directors (he being failed) or from the Court of Chancery. I also searched the Transfer-Book of the said Company; and I found in Book N^o. 5. Page 86. that on the 12th Day of July 1721. 2251. l. 14. s. South Sea Stock was transferred by Mr. Dormer to Mr. Edwards, and under the Transfer I saw Mr. Edwards's Acceptance; Mr. Dormer signed the transfer, and Mr. Edwards signed the Acceptance. I enquired if there were any Orders for stopping Mr. Dormer's Stock from being transferred.

ferred. I found no such Order, nor any Order for transferring the Stock that was transferred; and the Reason which the Clerk of that Office gave, was, That upon the unhappy Turn of the Affairs of that Company, several of the Clerks being discharged, and many Books and Papers being destroyed, lost, or mislaid, and the rest in the utmost Confusion, rendered it impossible to find any such Paper at this Distance of Time. I went likewise to the East-India Company; but I could not find upon those Books any Stock belonging to Mr. Dormer, or that he had any Interest in that Company.

Mr. Strange. I beg leave to take Notice of one Thing he says, relating to the Words expressly entered in one Leidger Book; it stands that Mr. Dormer should not transfer any Stock, he being failed.

Mr. Elphinstone. Yes, the Memorandum entred in the South-Sea Leidger Book, is, as follows: Stock not to be transferred without Order from the Court of Directors (he being failed) or Court of Chancery; the Words, he being failed, are in a Parenthesis, and then follow the Words, or Court of Chancery.

Earl of Macclesfield. Who was then Governor of the Bank?

Mr. Elphinstone. I think Mr. Hanger was.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Were the Entries dated?

Mr. Elphinstone. There was no Date to any of the Memorandums; they are wrote just over Mr. Dormer's Account, and under a Line drawn to separate Mr. Dormer's Account from another Person's.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Was that before the Transfer made to Edwards?

Mr. Elphinstone. There is no Date to the Memorandum for stopping the Transfer of Mr. Dormer's Stock; but it must be before the Transfer.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. But the Entry in the Books, was it precedent or subsequent to the Transfer?

Mr. Elphinstone. When I searched for the Account, I found the Account and the Memorandum for stopping the Transfer of the Stock, placed over it, in a Book called the Leidger, and when I searched for the Transfer of the Stock, I found that in the Transfer-Book, which is a different Book.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. What Transfer-Book was it?

Mr. Elphinstone. It was the Transfer-Book No. 5. in Page 86. where I found Mr. Dormer's Transfer, and Mr. Edwards's Acceptance; but the Leidger is quite a different Book. It was in the Leidger marked D that I found the Memorandum for stopping the Transfer of Mr. Dormer's Stock over his Account; but I could not tell what Day of the month it was entred; there were promiscuous Dates in the Year 1720, 21, 22, 23, and 24, to several Articles of that and other Accounts, but no Date to the Memorandum at the Head of his Account. I took this Copy of it, which I have in my Hand.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire to ask one Question, which, indeed, is to explain, what he mentioned concerning an Order, that I think, he takes to be signed by my Lord Chancellor. I desire to know the Date of it?

Mr. Elphinstone. It was a loose Order brought to me, dated 11 July 1721.

Mr. Lutwyche. Who brought it?

Mr. Elphinstone. It was brought to me by a Clerk that belongs to the Transfer-Office at the Bank.

Mr. Lutwyche. Was that Original Order left in the Book?

Mr. Elphinstone. No, my lords, I saw no Book of Orders; it was a single Order brought to me.

Mr. Lutwyche. You say there was an Order signed Parker C. was there any such Order drawn up by the Register of the Court?

Mr. Elphinstone. I know nothing of its being drawn up by the Register. I saw Parker C. Signed to an Order; and I believe it was the noble Earl's Hand.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. He hath a Copy of it; I believe it is proper to put it in, or that it may be read.

Mr. Lutwyche. Mr. Elphinstone may read it to your Lordships.

Mr. Elphinstone reads. Martis 11. July 1721:
 "I do order, that all the Bank Stock and Annuities therein subscribed, belonging to Fleetwood Dormer, Esq; late one of the masters of this Court, be by him forthwith transferred to Henry Edwards the succeeding master."
Parker C.
To the Governor, Deputy Governor, and Directors of the Bank of England.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire he may be asked Whether he heard any thing of Mr. Dormer's being gone to take the Air?

Mr. Elphinstone. No, My Lords; I never did, upon my Oath.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether he did not hear the Earl of Macclesfield make a Declaration to that Purport?

Mr. Elphinstone. I do not remember that the Noble Lord ever made any such Declaration.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. He mentioned several Orders he found in the Books of the Bank; as I apprehended him; whether was there any other Order under My lord Macclesfield's Hand?

Mr. Elphinstone. No, I saw but one Original Order, signed by the Noble Earl, of which, this is a Copy in my Hand.

Mr. Lutwyche. This was an Order under my Lord's Hand, a considerable Time after: I desire he may be asked, whether he hath heard of any Order directed to the Governor, Deputy Governor, &c. of the Bank, and sign'd by the Chancellor, and that Original Order left there?

Mr. Elphinstone. My Lords, I would be very cautious of saying any Thing that I do not remember; but I do remember something of a Discourse of an Order given for stopping of Dormer's Stock and Effects about the Time of Mr. Dormer's absconding, but when it was I can't tell.

Mr. Lutwyche. He did not understand me: My Question is, Whether or no he hath ever heard of any Order directed to the Governor, &c. of the Bank, and signed by the Chancellor, and that Original Order left there?

Mr. Elphinstone. No; My Lords, I don't say I heard of any other Order, signed by my Lord Chancellor, and directed to the Governor, &c. of the Bank; but I heard an Order was given by my lord, to stop Dormer's Stock.

Mr. Lutwyche. I only ask, Whether in this, or any other Instance, my lord Chancellor made Orders to the Bank, to be left there?

Mr. Elphinstone. I don't know what Orders are made; it was out of my Province; I had nothing to do with that; my Business was quite another Thing.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I would beg leave to take Notice of one Observation, that has been made on the Evidence given in Relation to the Order of the late Lord Chancellor, as tho' it was unusual to direct any in that manner to the Bank; but to that I beg leave to answer, that this was not an Order of Court; but only a particular Direction, which he, in his private Capacity, sent to that Company, out of his great Care to secure the Effects of the Suitors; and this, I apprehend, fully clears him of the Objection made to him of Neglect to do it in his judicial Capacity.

Mr. Com. Serj. Your lordships cannot choose but observe, that this very Thing implies some Caution taken, that these Effects of Mr. Dormer's should not be transferred without the Privity of the Great Seal: This Order, we apprehend, was for that Purpose; and to make this plain, we shall shew, that Mr. Cottingham went from my Lord Chancellor about this matter.

Mr. Cottingham called.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We desire Mr. Cottingham may be ask'd, How he came to have Notice, and from whom, of Mr. Dormer's withdrawing himself; and what care was taken to secure his Effects?

Mr. Cottingham. Soon after Christmas, 1720, to the best of my Remembrance, as to the Time, Mr. Parkhurst, Mr. Dormer's Nephew, came to me, and told me, his Uncle, Mr. Dormer, had withdrawn himself into Holland; and the Reason was, upon account of his having left money and Effects belonging to the Suitors, in Mr. Wilson's Hands, and Mr. Wilson had been very unfortunate in the South Sea Year, and was likewise gone off. I acquainted the Earl of what passed. The Earl directed me to attend the two Senior masters, Mr. Hiccocks and Mr. Rogers, and consider what was proper to be done on that Occasion. On Consideration, we agreed, that it was necessary to get Mr. Dormer over.

We then considered, that it was not possible to have him over, unless he was secure of his Liberty. A proposal was made to the Earl, that in case he came over, he should have his liberty: The Earl agreed to it. In the mean Time, to the best of my Remembrance, Orders were given for searching of his Office, and securing what Effects and Papers were there. The masters told me, that pursuant to these Directions, they had searched his Office, and lock'd up what they found there; but his Effects there were of very little Value.

The next Step the Earl took, was, he directed Persons to go to the Bank and South-Sea House, to stop the Transferring of any Stock or Effects in his Name.

In April following, when Mr. Dormer returned, he came late to me one Evening, and asked me, If the letter writ by the master, was writ by the Earl's Direction? I told him Yes. He then asked me, If the Earl had promised his Liberty? Otherwise he would be gone again.

I told him the Earl had promised him his Liberty, if he would make a full Discovery of all his Effects upon Oath; and make over all he had to the two Senior masters, for the Benefit of the Suitors of the Court; and assist them in getting in every Thing that belonged to him.

He said, these Conditions he readily submitted to and would attend the masters accordingly. I spoke to Mr. Rogers, to know whether he would have an Order in Form to examine Mr. Dormer upon Interrogatories; and that, if he would, I would prepare one, and get it sign'd. He told me, It was not necessary; and that they thought it was best to get the Estate and Effects in the first Place before that should be done; fearing if Mr. Dormer was severely dealt with, he should run away, and an Order might be had afterwards, if necessary. I forgot to tell your Lordships one Circumstance: Some time, in the Summer following, either in July or August, I happened to dine one Day at the Blue-Posts, behind Lincolns-Inn. Mr. Dormer came to me with Tears in his Eyes; he cried bitterly, and said, That the masters had strip'd him of all he had in the World, and beg'd I would intercede with the Earl to allow him something. I desired him not to insist upon it; for his Effects, as I was inform'd, were not sufficient to pay his Debts, and he knew well, that the Earl could not give away the Effects of the Suitors; It was out of his Power.

Mr. Plummer. I think you say, Sir, That Mr. Dormer failed, by leaving his money and Effects in Mr. Wilson's Hands; I desire to ask him, What he means by his Effects?

Mr. Cottingham. The money and Effects belonging to the Suitors of the Court.

Mr. Plummer. And you told my Lord of that?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, I told my lord what Mr. Parkhurst had mention'd of the money and Effects of the Suitors of the Court being left in Wilson's Hands.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he would inform your lordships, whether or no, upon this Occasion and Transaction, he applied to the masters to make up this Deficiency of Mr. Dormer's?

Mr. Cottingham. As to the Deficiency of Mr. Dormer, I always apprehended and understood, that the masters would make good that Deficiency, Mr. Lightboun excepted, who always declared, he would do nothing towards it, unless it were put on another Foot.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked whether he gave any such Information to the Earl of Macclesfield?

Mr. Cottingham. I did so; I told the Earl of it; and to the best of my Remembrance Mr. Hiccocks and Mr. Rogers; my Lords, I wont be positive, but I think Mr. Hiccocks and Mr. Rogers did order me to wait upon the Earl, and let his Lordship know that the Body of the masters had undertaken to make up the Deficiency; I do think so, I will not be positive of that, I think it was so.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may inform your Lordships, if he knows how it came to pass that Mr. Dormer had money in Mr. Wilson's Hands?

Mr. Cottingham. Mr. Parkhurst told me, and I think Mr. Dormer likewise, but of that I am not certain, that Mr. Dormer had left the money in his Hands when he went into the Country in the long Vacation.

Mr. Onslow. I desire he may be asked what were the Words that Mr. Rogers and Mr. Hiccocks said to him when he apprehended the masters would make good the Deficiency?

Mr. Cottingham. I think it was what I told your Lordships, that the Body of the masters would make good the Deficiency; I do not, I cannot swear that positively.

Mr. Onslow. Did any other of the masters tell you so?

Mr. Cottingham. Mr. Godfrey told me, I am positive of this, that Mr. Godfrey told me that the Body of the masters would make good the Deficiency; I must except Mr. Lightboun.

I have heard Mr. Edwards say, that he would never have paid his 500 l. if he had not apprehended that it would have been made good.

Mr. Com. Serj. This makes it necessary for us to ask another Question, and I desire he may be asked, tho' he doth not remember the particular Words, yet whether that induced him to believe that they intended so to do?

Mr. Cottingham. It did.

Mr. Com. Serj. Whether upon this Belief he did inform the noble Earl that they would make good Mr. Dormer's Deficiency?

Mr. Cottingham. I did, I told the noble Earl so, and that his Lordship needed not to be uneasy, they would make it good, and I always apprehended, I always understood they would make it good.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked whether the Deficiency of Mr. Dormer was ever stated so as to know how much it was?

Mr. Cottingham. No.

Mr. Lutwyche. Did they agree to make up the Deficiency when they did not know how much it was?

Mr. Cottingham. I heard some of the masters say at first, that it was 17,000 l. or 18,000 l. afterwards they said 20,000 l. and then 22,000 l. and of late it comes out to be 26,000 l.

Mr. Lutwyche. If I understand Mr. Cottingham right, he speaks of several masters, I desire to know whether he means all, except Mr. Lightboun? I desire to know whether they all singly promised?

Mr. Cottingham. Singly, as I remember; Mr. Edwards can tell I was at a meeting with them at the Tavern, I think they said singly.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked whether this Discourse with the masters about paying this Deficiency was absolute, or upon some particular Terms or Conditions of paying the money?

Mr. Cottingham. Mr. Edwards told me that they would make good the Deficiency, provided they continued on the old Foot as usual.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. That is, to have the Disposal of the money, the money to be in their Hands?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire to know whether you acquainted the Earl of Macclesfield with this?

Mr. Cottingham. No, this was but lately that Mr. Edwards told me that. It was, I believe, in November or December last.

Mr. Lutwyche. Did none of the other masters acquaint you so?

Mr. Cottingham. No, I don't remember any other master did.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire to ask you whether you ever heard what Interest Mr. Wilson allowed to Mr. Dormer?

Mr. Cottingham. In December last, when the Accompts were before the Judges, the Earl told me that Mr. Wilson's Composition was complained of; it was said, that Mr. Wilson had paid 20 s. in the Pound; and ordered me to talk with Mr. Wilson; and accordingly I did see him, and blamed him for imposing upon the masters in the Composition he made with them, when he had paid other Creditors whole Demand; he denied it.

Mr. Lutwyche. That is not the Question; what Interest did Mr. Wilson allow Mr. Dormer for the Suitors Cash?

Mr. Cottingham. I am going on to that Part. Mr. Wilson said to me; why is all the Blame laid upon me? I allowed Mr. Dormer very large Interest for his money: I could have set aside his Debt upon the Score of an usurious Contract; I was resolved I would not do it, I would shew my self to all the World to be an honest man; I gave my Creditors all that I had, what would they have more?

Mr. Lutwyche. Whether he mention'd Ten per Cent. or no?

Mr. Cottingham. No, he did not, but he said he had given large high Interest, and the Court had had as much as his other Creditors.

Mr. Com. Serj. When was this Discourse?

Mr. Cottingham. It must have been in December last, when the Judges were inquiring into this matter, because he told me Mr. Edwards had been with them about the Composition.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Recollect what was said upon this Discourse, whether he said that the Court or the Masters had as much as any of his other Creditors?

Mr. Cottingham. He told me, I am an honest man, the masters had as much as my other Creditors, what would they have more?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. It is our Misfortune we can't produce Mr. Wilson here, we are deprived of his Evidence, which would have been very material, by his Death; we are told he has very lately shot himself.

Mr. Cottingham. He was very poor, I always looked upon him to be an honest man; he told me at the same time, I forgot to tell your Lordships, if Mr. Poulter could be but delivered up, he should be very easy; he was sure he was in Circumstances to pay him.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, if the Gentlemen have done with this Witness, we desire to call a Witness or two in relation to the fourteenth Article, to shew the Credit of Poulter when his Debt was assigned. We apprehend that a little Evidence will serve to clear up the Innocence of this noble Earl on this Occasion: The great Concern the noble Earl had to make up this Deficiency of Mr. Dormer, made him with the best of his Knowledge and Power apply thereto; a little Evidence will make it appear, that however unfortunate it was in the Consequence, he did it to make the most he could for the Suitors of the Court.

Mr. Hunt Sworn.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, we call this Witness to prove the two Judgments, the one against Poulter, to shew that there was a real Debt due from Poulter to Wilson; the other is a Copy of a Judgment by Wilson against the Marshal of the King's Bench, for the Escape of Poulter.

Mr. Hunt. My Lords, I examined these two Copies of Judgments with the Records in the Court of King's Bench. They are true Copies of the Judgments.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked whether he was the Attorney for Mr. Wilson?

Mr. Hunt. I was the Attorney for Mr. Wilson in that against Machen, and entred up the Judgment in the other.

Mr. Com. Serj. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that the Judgment should be read at large?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Read only a Word or two of the Judgments, the Names of the Plaintiff and Defendant, the money demanded, and the Sums recovered.

Clerk reads the Beginning and Ending.

Memorandum quod alias, scilicet Termino Sancti Hilarii ul' præterit' coram Domino Rege ven' Willielm' Wilson versus Edwardum Poulter—Ideo considerat' est quod prædict' Willielm' recuperet versus præfat' Edwardum Poulter damna sua, quæ quidam damna in toto se attingunt ad octodecim mille septingent' & sexagint' libras duodecim solid' & quinque denar'.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. The first is against Poulter.

Mr. Lutwyche. Look when the Judgment was signed.

Mr. Hunt. It was signed 22 Dec. 1721.

The Judgment read against Machen.

Placita coram Domino Rege apud Westm' de Term' Sancti Michaelis, undecimo Georgii. Memorandum quod Willielm' Wilson—protulit—billam—vers' Richardum Machen—de placito debiti—quod reddat ei octodecim mille septingent' octogint' & un' lib.—Ideo considerat' est quod præd' Willielm' Wilson recuperet &c.

Judgment signed 27 Nov. 1724.

Mr. Com. Serj. If your Lordships please he may be asked if he knows of any Offer made by Poulter for a Composition, and what Sum of money was offered, and how Mr. Wilson behaved himself on that Occasion.

Mr. Hunt. I don't know of any Composition offered, of my own Knowledge, I have heard the present Marshal of the King's Bench say, there was 1000 l. offered; but I had Orders from my Client, if any Offer was made to me, not to accept it, but to refer the Person who made it to him.

Mr. Com. Serj. As Mr. Wilson is dead, I desire Mr. Hunt may be asked Whether Mr. Wilson gave any Reason for that Order not to compound with him?

Mr. Hunt. Mr. Wilson hath often said that it was his Opinion Mr. Poulter was able to pay him.

Mr. Com. Serj. We have done, my Lords, with this Witness.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we beg leave to call a Witness to shew that at this Time Mr. Poulter had the Reputation of being a man of Substance, and an honest man.

Mr. Peter Gandy Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I desire Mr. Gandy may give your Lordships an Account whether Mr. Poulter had not the Reputation of being a substantial man about the year 1722 or 1723.

Mr. Gandy. Mr. Poulter always lived in good Reputation, and was reputed to be an honest man; he lived at Hackney, he told me he purchased 6000 l. South-Sea Stock, which cost him 36,000 l. and transferred it to Mr. Knight, and Mr. Knight gave him nothing for it.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire to ask you whether he was a substantial honest man?

Mr. Gandy. I believe he was; he always bore an extraordinary Character, I believe I might summon all Exchange-Alley, and they would say the same; he was reputed to be worth a great deal of money and a very honest man.

Mr. Lutwyche. At what time was this that he was thought a man of Substance?

Mr. Gandy. When he lived at Hackney.

Mr. Lutwyche. After he was arrested?

Mr. Gandy, Yes.

Mr. Lutwyche. Will you say after he was arrested he was a substantial man?

Mr. Gandy. No, my Lords, I do not say he was, but he was generally reputed to be so.

Mr. Lutwyche. Whether at the same time you mention that he told you the Circumstance of transferring Stock to Mr. Knight, that was not given as a Reason for his Deficiency.

Mr. Gandy. He said he had been able to pay Mr. Wilson every Farthing, if Mr. Knight had not gone away.

Mr. Lutwyche. That is what Mr. Poulter told Mr. Gandy.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked when Poulter was first known to be in a failing Condition?

Mr. Gandy. I don't know.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When was he arrested?

Mr. Gandy. I don't know; he told me he should have been able to have paid Mr. Wilson if Mr. Knight had not gone away.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did he give you that as a Reason why he could not pay Mr. Wilson?

Mr. Gandy. Mr. Knight not paying him, he said he could not pay Mr. Wilson.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was that the Reason?

Mr. Gandy. Here is another Gentleman will tell you he was employed to make a Composition with Mr. Wilson and he can tell you more.

Mr. Onslow. What was Poulter's Profession?

Mr. Gandy. He was a Servant to Mr. Stroud.

Mr. Onslow. What is Mr. Stroud?

Mr. Gandy. Mr. Stroud is a Sworn Broker.

Mr.

Mr. Onslow. I desire to know what Profession this Person is of?

Mr. Gandy. I transact in Exchange-Alley as a Broker.

Mr. Lutwyche. Did not Mr. Poulter transact as a Broker too?

Mr. Gandy. Yes.

Dr. Sayer. We are not now upon the Point what he was really worth at that time, but what his Reputation and Character was, and therefore we desire to know what that was, whether he was not looked upon as a substantial man?

Mr. Gandy. He bore a good Character.

Mr. Strange. What was his Character, as to his Circumstances at that time?

Mr. Gandy. His Character was then very good, and so continued till he was put in Prison.

Mr. Strange. Where is he now?

Mr. Gandy. He is at Rotterdam.

Mr. Scott Sworn.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire that Mr. Scott may inform your Lordships whether he knew Mr. Poulter, and what his Character and Reputation was, as to Substance.

Mr. Scott. Mr. Poulter I had been acquainted with a great many Years; I looked upon him to be a very honest man; and in the Year 1720 he transacted abundance of Business, and I did a great deal of Business for him, and some other Gentlemen at that time, as a Scrivener. In the Year 1720, upon the Fall of the Stocks, he came and told me he was ruined by it, and begged of me to assist him. He told me at first he had some Accompts depending with Mr. Wilson.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may repeat it, where he told him, and when?

Mr. Scott. About December 1720, before Mr. Knight went away, he said he had large Accompts with Mr. Wilson, and that he was utterly ruined, because he said he had transferred 6000 l. South-Sea Stock to Mr. Knight, which cost him 40,000 l. or better, and if he could not get it of Mr. Knight, he must be ruined. He told me I was acquainted with several Gentlemen of Mr. Wilson's Acquaintance, and desired me to speak to him or them about this matter.

Sometime after Mr. Wilson's Agents, Mr. Ashton, I think, and one Mr. Newton, sent to Mr. Poulter, and desired a meeting on the Behalf of Mr. Wilson. I went on the Behalf of Mr. Poulter, and carried a Friend with me; we met at the Crown Tavern over against St. Clement's Church, and we told them how Mr. Poulter was served; that Mr. Knight had so much Stock of his without any manner of Consideration, as Mr. Poulter had told us; that Mr. Poulter was willing to do any thing they could expect. Some considerable time afterwards, I heard Mr. Poulter had been arrested, and he desired me, as being acquainted with Mr. Wilson, to go to Mr. Wilson and see if I could make up the Affair, he apprehended that his Bail would surrender him: Whereupon I went to Mr. Wilson, and told him, that Mr. Poulter protested to me he was worth but 3500 l. or thereabouts, and that he would endeavour to get Friends to make it up 4000 l. if Mr. Wilson would accept it. I was with Mr. Wilson several times about this matter, but he would not accept it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did he give any Reason why he would not accept it?

Mr. Scott. He said he looked upon Mr. Poulter not to be an honest man, and that he could pay more; I said he had better take that than keep him in Prison.

Mr. Com. Serj. Notwithstanding these private Intimations of his Disability, I desire to know what was his general Character as to his Circumstances?

Mr. Scott. He was looked upon to be a very honest man, and in good Circumstances; he hath been trusted with Thousands and Thousands of Pounds.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, Whether the money, the 24,000 l. Wilson lent to him, was not for Stock-jobbing, for him to traffick with in the Alley.

Mr. Scott. I know nothing at all of that.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether he hath not declared so?

Mr. Scott. No, I know nothing of that; whenever I was in Company with Mr. Wilson he was always very shy, and would not speak freely.

Mr. Plummer. I desire he may be asked, Whether in June or May 1720, he looked upon Mr. Poulter to be a good man?

Mr. Scott. Mr. Poulter, in April or May 1721, told me his Circumstances, and desired me to go to Mr. Wilson to meet those Gentlemen, and to treat with them; but every body then, except four or five Persons to whom he had made known his Circumstances, reputed him an honest and a substantial man.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may inform your Lordships, In May 1721, what his general Character was, or what was generally thought by other People of him, without relation to his own particular Knowledge.

Mr. Scott. He was looked upon as a man of Substance, and a very honest man.

Mr. Sandys. I desire he would explain himself; Whether he was looked upon at that time by himself to be a sufficient man, and able to answer the Demand of Mr. Wilson?

Mr. Scott. He had told me a Reason to induce me to have but an ill Opinion of his Ability, that he had transferred 6000 l. Stock to Mr. Knight, which cost him 40,000 l. and upwards.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether Mr. Poulter at that time went on dealing in the way of Business as he did before?

Mr. Scott. No, I believe he did not at that time: I believe in 1720 his Business was done, and he thought himself worth a great deal of money.

Dr. Sayer. Whether in the Year 1720 he was not looked upon to have got a great deal of money, and for that Reason to have quitted his Business?

Mr. Scott. It was then taken so; he was then looked upon as a man of great Substance: There were not above five who knew his Circumstances to be otherwise; he was generally looked upon then to be a man of Substance.

Mr. Lutwyche. It is a very surprising way to establish a man's Reputation to say he was a man of Substance when he offered a Composition, and at the same time he could not pay his Debts, he is understood to be a man of Substance; I desire to know, Whether it was after or before you had that meeting, and offered the Composition?

Mr.

Mr. Scott. I believe it was after.

Mr. Lutwyche. Did you take him to be a man of Substance afterwards, after you had offered a Composition for him?

Earl of Macclesfield. This Gentleman hath answered two Things very consistent, that he and three or four more, who knew Mr. Poulter's Circumstances, knew that he was not a man of Substance then, but that all other People looked upon him to be a man of Substance, and he tells you how he came to be so esteemed.

Mr. Scott. Yes, so it was.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire to know again, whether after the Year 1720, he transacted Business as he used to do?

Mr. Scott. No.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire to know again, where he lived after the Year 1720, and what means he had to live upon, besides his Business?

Mr. Scott. He lived as a Gentleman at Hackney, had his House well furnished and full of Plate; I have been at his House several times.

Mr. Lutwyche. How long ago?

Mr. Scott. I believe a Year and a half, or two Years ago?

Dr. Sayer. I don't apprehend it is material what this Gentleman thought from the private Conversation he had with Mr. Poulter. The general Reputation is sufficient for us to justify what was done; I desire he may be asked, whether till that Conversation he himself did not look upon him to be a man of Substance?

Mr. Scott. I looked upon him to be a man of Substance, till he told me he was so unhappy that he could not get his forty thousand Pounds and upwards of Mr. Knight.

Mr. Lutwyche. When was it he told you so?

Mr. Scott. I believe some time in December 1720 that he told me so first.

Mr. Lutwyche. The Composition was in 1722.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked one general Question, Whether after the Year 1721 Mr. Poulter retained any Character of Sufficiency or Ability?

Mr. Scott. He was looked upon by every one that did not know this Affair of Mr. Knight's, to be a man of Sufficiency in 1721.

Mr. Lutwyche. After 1721, Whether it was not generally known that Mr. Poulter was an insufficient man?

Mr. Scott. No, I believe not.

Earl of Abingdon. If they have done, I desire to ask this Witness a Question, Whether it was generally known that Mr. Poulter had transacted for Mr. Knight?

Mr. Scott. Not as I know of, I believe not.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we shall trouble your Lordships with no further Evidence on this Article. So if your Lordships please, we shall now proceed to the other Articles.

Mr. Strange. With your Lordships Permission we will now go on to the next Set of Articles that were opened by the managers for the Honourable House of Commons, which are the fifteenth, sixteenth and seventeenth Articles. And I shall now, as I did before, confine my self to these particular Articles.

The Charge, my Lords, in these three Articles consists of several Acts supposed to be done by, or by the Order of, the noble Earl within the Bar, and are laid to be all tending to the same Design of concealing the Deficiency of Dormer's Office.

For which Purpose, my Lords, it is said the Accompts of the masters were called for, not with any Design of examining the Accompts, but with an Intent to terrify the masters, and oblige them to contribute towards answering the Demands that should be made upon that Office: And as an Instance of this Design, the Commons charge, That after a Contribution by nine of the masters, the Earl did not oblige them to bring in their Accompts.

That upon occasion of another Sum of money wanted to pay off a Suitor who had an Order for money in Dormer's Office, the noble Earl pressed the masters to raise it amongst themselves; and, upon their Refusal, caused his Secretary to pay it: And that notwithstanding this Notice of Dormer's Deficiency, an Order was afterwards made for Mr. Edwards to enquire, whether there was likely to be a Loss of any money deposited with Mr. Dormer.

And as a farther Instance of this Endeavour to conceal the Deficiency, it is insisted on, that several Orders were made for the paying some Suitors the whole of their Demand, without regard to that just Proportion to which the other Suitors were entitled.

This, my Lords, is the State of the Complaint contained in these three Articles.

And as to the first part of the Complaint in calling for the Accompt, and terrifying the masters into a Contribution, I shall beg leave to insist upon two Facts; either of which, in my humble Apprehension, will be a sufficient Defence against the Charge.

The first, my Lords, is, That the Contribution was voluntary: And the next is, That long after this Contribution the Accompts were continued to be called for, notwithstanding it is charged to have been dropp'd immediately upon the Contribution:

To prove the Contribution voluntary, I beg leave, my Lords, in the first place to look back upon Mr. Lightboun's Evidence, where he acquainted your Lordships, that upon his asking the noble Earl, who the Proposal came from, the Earl's Answer was, That it came from some of the masters: And he concluded his Accompt of that Conversation with informing your Lordships, that upon his declining to contribute, the Earl left him to his Liberty.

But, my Lords, not to rest it upon Mr. Lightboun's Evidence only, we shall call Mr. Cottingham, who was acquainted with the whole Transaction, and will inform your Lordships, that the Contribution was altogether voluntary, and of their own Proposal.

My Lords, the other Branch of the Article, and which indeed is the Jet of the whole, relates to the dropping the Design of looking into the Accompts upon the making of this Contribution, which we shall be able to falsify; and the Account, my Lords, we shall give of the whole Transaction is this:

In February 1720, Mr. Cottingham, by the Earl's Directions, wrote a Letter to the Masters, requiring them to make up their Accompts, and present them to the Earl, according to a Plan which he imparted to them in that Letter.

Your Lordships are pleased to observe, that Mr. Dormer's failure was at Christmas, and this Letter in February following, before Mr. Dormer had any leave to come over, or any Discovery had been made of the Condition of his Office.

My Lords, The use which the Honourable managers say was to be made of this Letter, was so little understood, that some of the masters did, pursuant thereto, make up and deliver in an Account, tho' not according to the Directions they had received; and the Affair of Mr. Dormer coming on, caused a Stop in making up these Accompts, till after the appointing a Successor, and the making the Contribution, which, I think, is already fixed to have been in or about August 1721.

My Lords, The Summer being then far advanced, and every Body going out of Town, the Accompts were not exacted at that Time; but upon their Return to London a new Order was sent by Mr. Cottingham in November, with fresh Directions for bringing in their Accompts.

My Lords, I must here beg leave to observe, that if the Contribution was all that was aimed at by calling for these Accompts, how comes it to pass that Mr. Lightboun, who never contributed, was not called upon, in a particular manner, to bring in his Accompt, which, I did not observe, was proved, or so much as opened by the learned managers?

My Lords, The true Reason why these Accompts were not brought in, was the insuperable Difficulties of such an Undertaking; of which, I am persuaded, no other Evidence need be given, than to reflect on the Proceedings that have been of late in taking these Accompts.

But, my Lords, a learned manager was pleased to say, Why did this noble Earl keep the Office, if he was not able to do the Business of it? I hope your Lordships won't think the noble Earl was idle all the while: Every Body knows the great Variety of Business, and the continual hurry a Chancellor is in: The ordinary Business of the Court of Chancery is sufficient to engage a Man of uncommon Application: What a Fatigue then, my Lords, must it be, when the necessary Attendance upon your Lordships, and at the Council Table, are both taken into the Account? Sure I am, my Lords, it can never be said, that there was no want of Time or Leisure for taking these Accompts.

My Lords, The next Branch of the Charge is the Order for 1000 l. to Mrs. Chitty, which it is said was paid by the Noble Earl's Direction, in order to conceal the Deficiency: But pray, my Lords, does not the Article and Evidence both destroy the Supposition? Could the Earl of Macclesfield intend to conceal the Deficiency, when he cautioned Lockman against marrying Mrs. Chitty, in prospect of any more Money to be coming out of Dormer's Office. "That this would be the last Payment (I give your Lordships the very Words) she was like to receive out of the Money paid into the Hands of Mr. Dormer, for the Residue thereof was in danger of being lost, by reason of the Deficiency in the Effects of Mr. Dormer." Is this, my Lords, a Concealment of the Deficiency? A Payment of 1000 l. of the Noble Earl's own Money, in order that the Suitor should have no suspicion of a Deficiency!

But to go further, my Lords, we shall shew, that the payment of this Money did not proceed from any such low Motive, as, I may say, is uncharitably represented in this Article, but from a noble Mixture of Generosity and Compassion.

Mr. Lockman, my Lords, represented himself as an undone Man if he had not the Money: He first insinuated himself among the Noble Earl's Servants, as a Person under the utmost Distress; and the frequent Solicitations, which himself owns, are a strong Evidence of that Distress: When he had gained Access to the Earl, he told his Story in so moving a manner, not without Intimations of some desperate Resolution he might be forced to take if he had not the Money against the time, that, in pure Compassion to his Distress, the Noble Earl (whose Purse was always open to the Unfortunate) was prevailed with to order him the Money. And we shall prove to your Lordships, that how little sensible soever he now is of so great a Favour, yet at that time he express'd himself in Terms of one the most highly obliged; and I believe when our Witnesses to this Transaction come to be examined, they will leave Mr. Lockman very little Credit with your Lordships, and will wipe away the most remote suspicion of affecting any Concealment by this Transaction.

My Lords, The last Branch of this Article relates to a Declaration said to be made by the Earl in the Cause of Harper and Cafe, and an Order made therein for Mr. Edwards to enquire if there was likely to be a Loss of any Money deposited with Mr. Dormer.

My Lords, The particular Occasion and manner of that Declaration and Order have been fully stated by the Evidence we have already given of the several Judgments and Proceedings that have been against Mr. Poulter and the Marshal, which I shall not trouble your Lordships with a repetition of, it being sufficient for my Purpose in answering it as an Instance of Concealment, to observe, that the whole Transaction was after the Accompts of the Masters had been laid before the Committee of Council, when it was too late, and to no purpose to affect any Concealment.

My Lords, The last Branch of the Charge I am now upon, relates to the making Orders for paying to several Suitors their whole Demand, out of the Effects of Mr. Dormer, without regard to that just Proportion to which the other Suitors were intitled: And the Case of Eddisbury was mentioned for this purpose; tho' I did not observe the Gentlemen enter'd into any Proof of what was done in that Case.

My Lords, In Proof of this Article several Orders were read: But I appeal to the Evidence of Mr. Edwards, whether it did not appear, upon his cross Examination, that it was but in one Cause only where the whole Money was paid out; and whether that single Instance is a sufficient Proof of this Article, I must submit to your Lordships.

But, my Lords, the true Answer is this: Both the Noble Earl and Mr. Edwards doubted not but that the Deficiency would be made good, and proceeded upon that Expectation; nor can a stronger Evidence be given (and I desire it may be applied to some of the other Articles) that they were under this Persuasion, than Mr. Edwards's making Payments without any Objection.

Especially, my Lords, when it is consider'd too, that Mr. Lightboun, who was so averse at first to any Contribution, has, in that letter which has been read to your Lordships, mentioned several of his own Schemes for making good the Deficiency.

And if there was a Prospect of making good the Deficiency (as I humbly apprehend it is plain there was) it was very proper and natural to make the Orders in the manner they are now complain'd of. The nature of ordering Money out of Court makes it impossible the Suitors should call for it all at once, but the same is order'd out by Degrees: And Mr. Cottingham's taking an Assignment of Cbitty's Order, shews plainly, that it was expected Effects would in time come in to discharge that, and all other Demands.

I would not, my Lords, be understood by any thing I have offered, as if I intended to dispute the Rule of Equity that has been laid down by the Managers, That where several Persons have Demands out of one Common Fund that cannot answer the whole, there ought to be an Average in such Case: But what I shall beg leave to insist upon is, That that Rule only holds place where the Quantum of what is left to answer is fix'd and certain. In this Case the Effects were daily coming in, and therefore a Declaration of an Average where there was likely to be no Deficiency, would not, in my humble Apprehension, have been advisable or proper.

I beg leave, my Lords, to close my Observations upon all the Articles relating to the Concealment of Dormer's Deficiency, with submitting it to your Lordships Judgment, if the whole Transaction does not speak itself to have been one continued Endeavour to secure to the Suitors their whole Demand, and to have been no more.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, the Managers, when they entered upon these Articles, produced an Order made by the late Lord Chancellor, in the Year 1720, by which the Masters were obliged to bring in their Accounts, which as they charge to have been concerted with other Views, and for very different Ends than at first appear, we think it will be extremely proper for us to begin our Defence to that Part of the Charge with a Witness who is ready to shew your Lordships the real Designs the impeached Earl had in calling for these Accompts; and his Evidence, we humbly conceive, will satisfy your Lordships that it could be for no other Purpose than that the Earl might the better know the true State and Condition of their respective Offices, in order to find out a proper Method of redressing such Grievances as were most apprehended at that Time. My lords, it will appear by the Course of the same Witness's Evidence, that the other Order that was made upon them afterwards in December following, in as strong Terms as the former, could be for no other Reason or Purpose than that his lordship hath assigned in his Answer, that he might understand the State of the several Offices, so as to be able to apply proper Remedies to the Danger which was then dreaded. All this will appear yet more fully from the Evidence of another Witness, who is to inform your lordships of the particular Directions the Noble Earl gave about the Manner of bringing in these Accompts, with the Names of the Causes of the respective Solicitors concerned in them, and also what the several Sums first paid in were, the Time when so paid in, and also when the same or any Part were paid out again, together with many other Particulars which his lordship thought necessary for his more exact Information. It will be likewise made appear to your lordships, how the Masters were severally consulted with about this Matter, and that the Assistance of the Master of the Rolls was at length called in. But all the Masters agreeing, and particularly Mr. Holford (who had been in the Office for twelve Years) that it was next to impossible to bring in their Accompts, as first directed, in any reasonable Time; then it was, and not before, that the noble Earl condescended that they might bring them in in a different Manner. Now, my lords, as to the Suggestion that all this was only a Scheme, made use of to terrify the Masters into a Contribution towards Dormer's Sufficiency, give me leave to say it is impossible to collect the least View of that Kind from the Evidence laid before your lordships on that Head; for the Masters who did contribute on this Occasion, have all sworn that they paid in their Money voluntarily, and without being any ways influenced by his lordship's Threats or Persuasions; so far from that, that Mr. Lightboun (the only Master who refused concurring in this Contribution) made no other Objection at first to it, than that the Proposal did not come from his lordship, but from the other Masters; for in that Case he declared, That, if it had come from the noble Earl himself, he might have had more Regard to it, and would have taken it into his Consideration. So that we doubt not upon the whole, but it will plainly be made appear to your lordships, that the constant Application which the noble Earl made from time to time to the Masters for this Purpose, proceeded from no other View, than that as soon as he might be truly informed of the State of their Offices, he should apply proper Remedies to whatever Abuses he should discover; and that as this was always his real Intention, so he would have put it effectually in Execution, had he not resigned the Great Seal so soon.

Mr. Com. Serj. My lords, we shall call a Witness to shew, that after the 500*l.* apiece was paid, the Accompts were called for; it cannot then be pretended, that this calling for the Accompts was to terrify the Masters to pay this 500*l.* apiece.

The Time of the Payment of these five hundred Pounds was in August; these Accompts were called for in the Beginning of November.

Mr. Cottingham called.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire Mr. Cottingham would inform your lordships whether any Directions were given to call in those Accompts about November, 1721.

Mr. Cottingham. I did in November, by the Direction of the Earl, write a letter dated the 7th Nov. 1721.

L. Ch. Just. King. Have you any Draught of that letter?

Mr. Cottingham. I have a Draught, the Committee required me to leave the letter with them.

Mr. Lutwyche. My lords, we will do the noble Earl all the Justice we can; here are the letters.

Mr. Cottingham. The first letter is dated Feb. 14. 1720.

Mr. Lutwyche. Who is it directed to?

Mr.

Mr. Cottingham. The Letter is directed to each master, and this is the letter.

S I R,

I Am commanded by my lord Chancellor to signify to you, that you do with all convenient Speed lay before his lordship an Accompt in several Columns,

1. Of the Name of the Cause.
2. The Solicitor or Agent.
3. The Date of the Order.
4. For what Purpose the money was brought in.
5. How much was brought in.
6. When.
7. How much in Hand.
8. How much on Security.
9. How much paid out.

A distinct Account of the Securities.

1. Cause.
2. From whom the Security is taken.
3. What the Security is.
4. In whose Name taken.
5. For how much each Security.
6. The total of the several Securities in the same Cause.
7. In whose Hands lodged.

A distinct Accompt of money paid out.

1. Cause.
2. By what Order, and of what Date.
3. When paid.
4. To whom.

Your very humble Servant,

14 Feb. 1720.

P. Cottingham

S I R,

BY my letter of the fourteenth of February last, I signify'd to you my lord Chancellor's Pleasure; which was that you should with all convenient Speed lay your Accompt before his Lordship; (the method whereof was to be in several Columns subscribed at the Foot of that letter.) I am now further to acquaint you, that his lordship is very much surprized to find, that in all this Time no such Accompt hath been laid before him: And therefore hath commanded me to tell you, that it is expected to be delivered in, on or before the last Day of this Term. And, if this is not comply'd with, you will oblige his Lordship (though very unwillingly) to think of other measures; which I doubt not but you will avoid, by a ready Compliance with what is a second time required of you. And to the End there may be no mistake as to the method of your accompting, I here subscribe it again at the Foot of this Letter; and am,

Sir,

Your very humble Servant,

7 Nov. 1721.

P. Cottingham.

To the best of my Remembrance, this Letter was delivered to ten of the masters.

Mr. Lutwyche. Did you read it to them?

Mr. Cottingham. No: I am going to give you an Account. My Lords, according to a Memorandum I kept at that Time of this letter, it was delivered to ten of the masters: to Mr. Rogers, Mr. Hiccocks, Mr. Fellowes, Mr. Lightboun, Mr.

Bennet, Mr. Holford, Mr. Borrett, Mr. Godfrey, Mr. Conway, and Mr. Lowibond.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We desire that the second Letter in Nov. 1721. may be read.

Mr. Cottingham. The second Letter is dated 7 Nov. 1721. "Sir, by my letter of the fourteenth of February last, I signify'd, &c. N. 47."

Mr. Serj. Probyn. By this it appears to be after the several 500 Pounds were paid in, the last 500 Pounds was paid in in August, before, which shews that these Accompts were to be delivered in for no other Reason than that the Suitors should have Satisfaction, as soon as a proper Remedy could be found.

Mr. Com. Serj. I beg leave to make one Observation; here is——

Mr. Lutwyche. If they have any more Questions to ask the Witnesses, they may; the Observing is proper afterwards.

Dr. Sayer. I only beg leave to ask this one Question, to be better informed. The Letter recites, it is written by the Command of my lord Chancellor: I would ask whether my lord Chancellor did give such Directions?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, my Lords, he did.

Mr. Plummer. If they have done with the Question, I would ask Mr. Cottingham in the Words of his own Letter, Whether the Earl of Macclesfield did oblige the masters to deliver in their Accompts in Pursuance of such his said Order?

Mr. Cottingham. Of the Letter of November 1721. I have kept no Memorandum; of the first Letter I have.

Mr. Plummer. Whether that Letter of 1721. was delivered to the masters?

Mr. Cottingham. I believe it was.

Mr. Plummer. Then I desire to know, if the masters did deliver in their Accompts?

Mr. Cottingham. I don't remember they did.

Mr. Plummer. I desire he may be asked, if after this time that the 500*l.* was paid in Obedience to the first letter, there was afterward any other Demand made upon the masters for more money?

Mr. Cottingham. I know of no Demand made upon them, except the 500*l.* apiece.

Mr. Plummer. I desire he may be ask'd if he doth not remember Mrs. Chitty's Affair, and if that was not after 1721?

Mr. Cottingham. The Business of Mrs. Chitty was but in July last.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, Whether since no Accompt was called for after this last Letter, whether he did not understand the Reason to be, because he apprehended the masters would make good Mr. Dormer's Deficiency?

Dr. Sayer. My Lords, I submit it, whether that Question is material as to what his Apprehension was; your lordships are Judges only upon Evidence of Fact, and not upon his Thoughts or Apprehensions.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Why were not the Accompts called for afterwards?

Mr. Cottingham. I really can't tell the Reason.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether he acquainted my Lord Macclesfield that the masters would make good the Deficiency?

Mr. Cottingham. I told your lordships I did.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Therefore I desire he may be asked, Whether after that Time he received any Orders to send to the masters to give in their Accounts?

Mr. Cottingham. I can't speak particularly as to the Times.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether those other measures, intimated in his letter to be taken, were not signify'd to him by my Lord Macclesfield to be, that the Cash should be taken out of their Hands?

Mr. Cottingham. My Lord called me into his Study, and directed me to write this Letter; all he said was, he was sorry that the masters had not brought in their Accompts as he required, and that if they did not bring them in by the last Day of the Term, he said he would take other measures: My Lord did not say to me what those other measures were, whether it was to make an Order in Form, and then he should expect they would yield Obedience to it; all the Earl told me was no more than to write to the masters, that he would take other measures, what those other measures were I do not know, but I apprehended it to be an Order his Lordship would make for obliging him to it.

Mr. Snell. I desire he may be asked, Whether he did not himself apprehend by those other measures, the taking the money out of the masters Hands?

E. of Macclesfield. My lords, I submit it whether a Question of this kind is proper; he hath been asked what those measures were; he hath told your lordships that he knows not, but he has said what he apprehended they were; if now any Fact occur to him that may give Reason for apprehending otherwise, let him acquaint your lordships with it.

Mr. Cottingham. Your Lordship said you would take other measures; what I apprehended was, your lordship would make an Order in form if they did not comply with that letter.

Dr. Sayer. My lords, I beg leave to ask one Question: Whether the masters, after this letter was brought to them by Mr. Cottingham, did not represent to him the Difficulty of making up their Accompts?

Mr. Cottingham. There were several Particulars mention'd in the former Letter, there was the Causes to be named, &c. Some of the masters told me they had not kept their Accompts so as to answer all the Particulars in the letter; others said it would take up a great deal of Time; others that the manner required was very difficult and tedious, and that it was almost impracticable, so many Items were contained in the letter, that they seem'd to say it could not be done.

Dr. Sayer. I desire he may be asked, Whether he hath any Paper of the method of Accompting required by the Committee, that his majesty was pleas'd to direct to look into this matter?

Mr. Cottingham. I have not a Copy of it here. There is an original Order, if the masters please to produce it, I left it with Mr. Lighboun.

Mr. Com. Serj. If the Gentlemen have it, I hope they will produce it.

Mr. Cottingham. The original Order is of the third of November last, which I left signed by the Earl.

E. of Macclesfield. This will come more properly under another Article: The Gentlemen, the masters, will take Care to look it out that it may be ready by that Time.

Mr. Cottingham. My Lords, I have now found it; I can't say it is a true Copy, dated the third of November, 1724. signed Macclesfield, C. Let the several Masters — Am I to read it, my Lords?

Mr. Lutwyche. What, the Order of the third of November last?

Mr. Com. Serj. This Order cannot relate to this matter. We are now upon the second Letter in 1721. The Letter is framed in so strong Terms, that it can't be supposed but the Earl was very much in Earnest, and it can't be insinuated as if intended to make the masters comply in the Affair of Mrs. Chitty and Lockman, because that Transaction was but in July last.

Earl of Macclesfield. I desire, my Lords, to go a little back again, upon recollecting that the Question the honourable Manager was pleas'd to ask, about his giving me an Account that the masters would make good the Deficiency, carries an Insinuation, as if this method were dropp'd upon it: I desire he would inform your Lordships, Whether he can be sure of the exact Time, whether this was before or after November, 1721.

Mr. Cottingham. I really can't be sure of the exact Time.

E. of Macclesfield. How near was it to Mr. Dormer's going out, and Mr. Edwards's coming into his Office?

Mr. Cottingham. Mr. Edwards came in in May 1721. It was near his coming in.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know whether you can recollect the Time you did tell me of it? Whether it was after November 1721. or before?

Mr. Cottingham. I several Times mentioned it to your Lordship before November 1721. and I believe several Times after, but that I cannot certainly tell, nor can I be particular to a Day.

E. of Macclesfield. Did you ever hear of it before the 500*l.* a-piece was paid?

Mr. Cottingham. No, my Lords, it was after they had paid the 500*l.* a-piece; but, my lords, I don't know that they agreed to make good the Deficiency, I only told my lord I thought they intended it.

Lord Trevor. He hath proved two letters sent by the Direction of the Noble Earl. As to the first letter he kept a Memorandum as to the Time, but no Memorandum of the second. I would ask him as to the Time, when the masters made that Representation of the Difficulty of giving in the Accounts, whether it was before or after the second letter, or between the first and the second Letter?

Mr. Cottingham. To both the Letters they still made a Representation of the Difficulty.

Lord Trevor. Then I desire to ask one Question more, that is, Whether, after the Representation made after the second letter, they owned that they had received the second letter?

Mr. Cottingham. I verily believe that the second letter was deliver'd to the Masters as the other was, but I have kept no Memorandum of it; I verily believe the Masters had it; I can't tell; I took it for granted they had it; I trusted one of my Clerks with it to take a Memorandum; I enquired after him; he hath been gone from me, and I can't find him out: I verily believe it.

I have

I have no Reason to doubt but I gave it; the masters know that.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. If Mr. Holford is called, he will explain it; on his cross Examination he admitted a second letter was sent for him, and left in the publick Office: That appear'd in his cross Examination.

Mr. Strange. It might not be improper (this letter is before the honourable managers) to enquire if they had it not from some of the masters.

Mr. Cottingham. No, they had it from me.

Mr. Holford called.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be ask'd, Whether he had not any notice of the letter in November 1721, whereby the masters were obliged to bring in their Accounts?

Mr. Holford. Indeed, my Lords, I do not remember that letter.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, Whether he remembers a second letter about Accompts?

Mr. Holford. Whether it was a letter or a message I cannot tell; but between the first Account in February 1720, and the last in November last, I was called upon to Accompt, and had prepared it; but this second letter dated in November 1721, I do not remember any thing of it.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. How long was it after the Payment of the 500 l.

Mr. Holford. It was a good while after.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. That is all we contend for.

Mr. Holford. I believe not above a Year before the last.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether after this letter, supposed to be in November 1721, his Accompt was ever demanded of him?

Mr. Holford. I did deliver to my Lord an Account of November 1721; and I think a Year before November last, in pursuance of either a letter or a message, I don't know which, my Lord required an Account; then I deliver'd an Account of money, not of Securities in my Hands.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether that was an Account in pursuance to that letter, demanding and requiring it of him?

Mr. Holford. Not as I know of, indeed.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, as some mention hath been made of it, I think it may be proper to know what he can say to it, whether he ever promised to make good the Deficiency of Mr. Dormer?

Mr. Holford. I never did my Lords.

Mr. Cottingham called again.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may inform your Lordships what he knows in relation to the Payment of the 1000 l. to Lockman, and what Conversation he had with Mr. Lockman.

Mr. Cottingham. About the beginning of July last, to the best of my Remembrance, Mr. Lockman told me, that Mrs. Chitty had an Order upon Mr. Edwards the master, to pay her 1000 l. That she had been with the master, but could not get the money, and that he had spoke to my Lord Macclesfield about it, and the Earl had promised to speak to the master. — And he desired me to speak to the Earl concerning it: I promised I would, and accordingly I did; he sent me to the master. When I came to him, I spoke to him of it; he said he had no money; I informed the Earl of it; the Earl said he could not tell what to do. I informed Mr. Lockman of it; he seemed to be under the greatest Concern, and said, if he had not the 1000 l. he was undone; he was going to marry Mrs. Chitty, and Mrs. Chitty would not marry him, unless his Debts were paid, and she had given him this 1000 l. to pay his Debts. He had compounded his Debts, and he repeated it over and over again, that if this 1000 l. was not paid, he was undone.

I have not seen a Gentleman in a greater Distress than he appeared to be; on which I told him, if he would please to have a little Patience I would consider the thing, and see what could be done. I did consider it; and it came into my mind that Mr. Lightboun had not paid his 500 l. I acquainted the Earl with it, and said Mr. Lightboun had not paid his 500 l. and if he could prevail upon him to do it, I thought it would be easy to get 50 l. a-piece of the other masters, and that would do.

By the Earl's Order, I attended Mr. Lightboun, and told him that the Earl expected him to pay his 500 l. but I could not get a Penny from him; so he refusing to pay the 500 l. that Proposal of the 50 l. a-piece dropt: I acquainted the Earl of this; he said he could not tell what to do. I acquainted Mr. Lockman, and told him I had done all that was in my Power to do; and that it was not to be done, unless he expected I should pay it out of my own Pocket, which I was sure he could not expect: When I told him that, he said, I am undone, Mrs. Chitty will not marry me, his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales will not protect me, my Creditors will throw me into a Gaol, there I must rot and starve. He made use of so many extravagant Expressions, and was under that Pain and Agony of mind, that I apprehended he would do himself a mischief. I could say nothing to it, I had done all for an unfortunate Gentleman that possibly I could do. Two or three Hours after this, when I was at Dinner, he came to me again, and told me the Earl wanted to speak with me immediately; he begged of me of all things in the World to go: On that I went to the Earl. The Earl was pleased to send for me into an inner Room, and said, that he was teized out of his life by Mr. Lockman; I told him I was so too, I had no Rest Night nor Day for him; I then represented to the Earl his own Story in Substance as he had told me. The Earl said he was sorry to find Mr. Lockman brought to that State and Pass. I told the Earl I was afraid of the Consequence, I did not know what a despairing man might do, he seemed to be in the utmost Despair. Upon that the Earl ordered me to pay him the 1000 l. and said, he would pay it me again. When I saw Mr. Lockman, I told him I had now received Orders to pay him; I had not the money by me, but he should have it in a little time, three or four Days would break no Squares; he said, I am satisfy'd, provided it is paid. I said I had it not by me, I must borrow it; I did so; and on the thirtieth of July I paid him the 1000 l. I think it was three or four Days after, he asked me what Reward he should give me; I told him that his Distress was so great that he should not give me any Reward; I would not take a Penny of him, and I never had the Value of a Dish of Coffee of him; I paid him the money, I borrow'd it for that Purpose. Says I, Mr. Lockman, it appears to me that you are in great Distress, I will borrow the money. I did borrow the money, and paid Interest for it, meerly to supply the Gentleman.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked if he knows of any other Sum of money demanded by Mr. Lockman after this 1000 l. was thus agreed to be paid him?

Mr. Cottingham. After this money was agreed to be paid, and, I think, the same Evening, I received this letter from him, which any Gentleman that will may read. (The Letter read.) Sign'd Lockman. Monday Evening.

S I R,

Monday Evening.

I Am very sensible of the Favour you have already done me, in promoting what my Lord in so affable a manner was pleas'd to promise me, which Kindness I shall gratefully acknowledge all my life: But as there is so great a Necessity, I hope you will pardon me the sooner in being once more troublesome, to beg of you to remind his Lordship of letting Mrs. Chitty have the other 574 l. which my Lord was pleas'd to say we should have, and without which Mrs. Chitty, who hath neither out of Chancery nor her Estate received any money this two Years, cannot spare me the whole 1000 l. As my whole Ease and Quiet depends on your kind Assistance, I must beg, Sir, once more to use your Interest to let us have it on Thursday Afternoon, between Four and Five, when Mrs. Chitty intends to wait on you for the other. I shall be very proud on all Occasions to shew with how much Gratitude and Esteem I am,

S I R,

Your most oblig'd humble Servant,
A. Lockman.

Dated Monday Evening, no other Date. My Lords, Upon the Receipt of this letter, the very same Evening I laid it before the Earl, I told him that it appeared by this he wanted 570 l. more. The Earl said he was very much surprized at this Gentleman's sending such a letter, he did not know what he meant by 570 l. more that he promis'd, and, in short, told me he could advance no more.

Mr. Strange. I desire he may be asked, whether he had any Discourse with Mr. Lockman, relating to this 570 l. after this letter?

Mr. Cottingham. I had a Discourse with him some time afterwards about the letter.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire to ask him, whether after this letter Mr. Lockman came to know what Answer he would give him?

Mr. Cottingham. Mr. Lockman came on the Thursday following, being the thirtieth of July; Mrs. Chitty did not come: And then I told him that I had received his letter, and had laid it before the Earl, and that the Earl understood not what he meant by it, that this was a growing upon him, and he would not pay a Penny more; I thought he had been very generous to him, and I told him I wonder'd what he meant.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I beg leave to take notice, and your Lordships will please to recollect, that Lockman swore he never made any Demand of any money besides the 1000 l.

Mr. Lutwyche. That is to be observed when the Witness is examined throughout.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I ask whether Mr. Lockman did petition my Lord Chancellor for this Sum of money?

Mr. Cottingham. I don't remember Mr. Lockman petitioned. I believe not.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Or Mrs. Chitty?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, Mrs. Chitty did, before the Payment of this 1000 l. as I remember.

Mr. Lutwyche. Was there any Petition preferred before the Payment of the 1000 l. because the money was not paid according to the Order, which I think was dated March 17, 1723.

Mr. Cottingham. Yes: I told you so before.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire to know whether there was not a general meeting of the masters before my Lord Macclesfield order'd him to pay the said 1000 l. to Mr. Lockman?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, there was.

Mr. Lutwyche. Whether it was not after the meeting of the masters, when it was propos'd to Mr. Lightboun to pay his 500 l. and the others 50 l. a-piece?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, I believe it was.

Mr. Plummer. Mr. Cottingham hath given a long Evidence, he hath told you on the Application for this 1000 l. he recollected that Mr. Lightboun had not paid his 500 l. and if he could get him to pay his 500 l. and the other masters 50 l. a-piece, that would make up the 1000 l. The Question I would ask is, if Mr. Cottingham had then any Orders from the Earl of Macclesfield to convene the masters?

Mr. Cottingham. No, I had then no Orders.

The first Order I had to convene the masters together, was on a Monday, before Payment of the 1000 l. as I remember: Mr. Edwards was then at my Lord's House, and my Lord ordered me to speak to him to convene the masters, and they were convened, and came to my Lord's House that Evening, as I was told, but that was after the money was ordered to be paid.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire Mr. Cottingham may look upon that, and tell us whether it is his Hand.

Mr. Cottingham. This is my Hand (reads.) His Lordship can do nothing in it at present.

Mr. Lutwyche. Do you remember any thing of this Petition being offer'd?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, I do remember it; it is a Petition of Mrs. Chitty preferred to the Earl, to be paid 1000 l. This Petition came to my Hands, the Earl said, he could do nothing in it at present, and this Order writ upon it is my Hand.

Mr. Lutwyche. Whose Petition is it?

Mr. Cottingham. The humble Petition of the Defendant Elizabeth Chitty, Mrs. Chitty's Petition.

Mr. Lutwyche. What is the Answer writ upon the Back.

Mr. Cottingham. His Lordship can do nothing in it at present.

Dr. Sayer. We apprehend it is of Consequence to have this meeting cleared. I desire he may be asked, whether he knows of any meeting of the masters, and when, and what was done there?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, there was a meeting that Evening, but I was not present.

E. of Macclesfield. By the Questions they have asked, they have taken it for granted as if he knew what was done at that meeting of the masters; I desire to know whether he was present or not at that meeting of the masters?

Mr. Cottingham. I was not, I said so before.

E. of Macclesfield. Then I think he says the Day of Payment of this money was on the thirtieth of July.

Mr. Cottingham. Yes.

E. of Macclesfield. What Day were the masters called upon to meet?

Mr. Cottingham. I can't be positive, but I think it was the Monday before Payment of the 1000 l. This meeting of the masters was between the Order and the Payment of the money.

Mr. Plummer. I believe there is a mistake in this matter; I desire to know of Mr. Cottingham whether Mr. Edwards was not by when he acquainted the Earl with this Demand, and proposed to him the method of paying it by Mr. Lightboun's 500 l. and the other masters 50 l. a-piece.

Mr. Cottingham. No, no.

Mr. Plummer. I desire it may be cleared then, and to ask him if Mr. Edwards was not by when he acquainted my Lord Macclesfield of the Demand of the 1000 l.

Mr. Cottingham. No, Mr. Edwards was not by: When this 1000 l. was directed to be paid, Mr. Edwards was in the House, but the Earl did not see him; when I spoke to Mr. Lightboun for the 500 l. it was only between Mr. Lightboun and me, Mr. Edwards was in the House when my Lord spoke to me, and ordered me to speak to Mr. Edwards to convene the masters together.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked whether the 1000 l. was paid before he made the Proposal to my Lord Macclesfield, that Mr. Lightboun's 500 l. and the other masters 50 l. would pay it?

Mr. Cottingham. The money was paid afterwards, I have told you so before.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Before the 1000 l. was paid, whether did not you hear that the masters had refused to advance the further Sum of 50 l. a-piece?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, I told you so before, that Mr. Lightboun would not pay his 500 l. so the other masters did not pay their 50 l. a-piece; this was some time before the Payment of the 1000 l.

Mr. Elphinstone called.

Mr. Strange. My Lords, we desire Mr. Elphinstone to give your Lordships an Account of what he knows of the Application of Mr. Lockman for this 1000 l.

Mr. Elphinstone. My Lords, Mr. Lockman and I often had Conversation together before he received the 1000 l. upon the Account of Mrs. Chitty. He told me often that he had compounded his Debts with his Creditors, and if he could not receive the 1000 l. against a certain Day, on which he had engaged to pay it, he should be ruin'd and undone; and some time after he told me, that his Creditors had been with much Difficulty brought to give him some few Days longer for Payment of the Composition, and that if he had it not then, he should be ruin'd and undone for ever; swearing by the blessed Name of God, that that Disappointment would be a means of breaking off the match with the Lady.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Go on.

Mr. Elphinstone. I can't be positive as to the Day, whether it was the same Day that he received the 1000 l. or a Day or two before; but I then heard the noble Earl declare to him, that in Pity and Compassion to his Circumstances, and the great Difficulty he then laboured under, he the said Earl had given Directions to Mr. Cottingham to pay him the 1000 l. and about two Hours after, or something more, Mr. Lockman came to me, and with abundance of Joy told me how much obliged he was to the noble Earl, for that he had relieved him in his Circumstances, by giving Mr. Cottingham Orders to pay him the 1000 l. He seemed to express this with an uncommon Pleasure, and did not at all doubt it would be agreeable to Persons of the highest Distinction and Character to know it, and that he would make them acquainted with it. My Lords, I think it was on Friday last, in a Conversation with me and others here in the Painted Chamber, he declared he would rather have given two or three hundred Guineas or Pounds, than have been examined on this Occasion; and said, Damn it, it hath happen'd, thro' a silly Word or two I dropt to the Solicitor on the other side, I asked him what it was, he said it was his telling him he had received the 1000 l. for Mrs. Chitty, by the noble Earl's Direction.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. After this money was paid, whether he hath had any Discourse with him, and whether it was owned by him that it was out of the Earl's own Pocket?

Mr. Elphinstone. Yes, many and many a time, and with great Respect.

Mr. Plummer. I desire the Counsel for the noble Lord may explain one thing: I think the Witness said, Mr. Lockman said He had rather give two or three hundred Pounds than have been examined. Whether the Witness doth apprehend by what Mr. Lockman said, that he comes an unwilling Witness?

Mr. Elphinstone. No, my Lords, I did not say that Mr. Lockman was an unwilling Witness, but that he told me and others, he had rather have given two or three hundred Guineas or Pounds, than have been examined on this Occasion.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We shall give your Lordships, no further Evidence on this Article; we shall now proceed to the seventeenth Article, which charges the Earl of Macclesfield, that in order to conceal the Deficiency in Dormer's Office, and to prevent any publick Enquiry, he did from time to time, in Violation of the Trust reposed in him, make Orders on Mr. Edwards for Payment of the money belonging to several particular Suitors, which had been lodged in the Hands of Mr. Dormer; in Obedience to which Orders several Sums were paid, without Regard to, or Consideration of the Proportion which the rest of the Suitors were entitled to, out of the Effects of the said Mr. Dormer, whereby many of the said Suitors lost the Benefit of their proportionable Share, to which in Justice they were entitled.

The Crime supposed in this Charge is denied by the Earl in his Answer; he had no certain Knowledge what Mr. Dormer's Estate would come out to be; but he was under a full Persuasion that Effects would come in in due Time, to make full Payment; and that the only Reason why they were not paid in an Average, was because no Application was made by any of the Suitors for that Purpose.

Mr.

Mr. Com. Serj. As to the seventeenth Article, your Lordships observe there was a full Persuasion both in the noble Earl and Mr. Edwards, that there would be sufficient to pay every one; besides I think he himself made not above one Order, not more than this one in the Case of Chitty; your Lordships will please to observe, from the Evidence of Mr. Edwards, that the noble Lord who made these Orders was firmly of an Opinion, from the Accounts he had received, that the Deficiency would be made up, so likewise Mr. Edwards was then under the same Persuasion: We shall rest it here, that it was no manner of Fault, under these Apprehensions, to make such an Order as that was.

Mr. Robins. If your Lordships please, there is in the Close of the sixteenth Article a Declaration, supposed to be made by the Earl of Macclesfield, then sitting in Court, I had the Honour to be in Court when the Declaration was made: As I had the Honour to be in Court at that Time, I apprehend that what he said was —

Mr. Plummer. If the Gentleman speaks as Counsel, he stands in a proper Place, but if he comes as an Evidence, I beg he may come to the Bar and be sworn; I humbly appeal to your Lordships if it is not proper.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Dr. Sayer. If the Gentlemen think it proper to insist upon it, the Gentleman is ready to be sworn.

Mr. Com. Serj. The Gentleman's Character is so unexceptionable, that we hope the learned Gentlemen will not put this Difficulty upon him of taking an Oath in a Cause, wherein he is Counsel.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, I insist upon it, because then I shall have the liberty of asking some Questions, which I apprehend I have not now.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, We submit it upon the Evidence that hath been already given, he himself did declare then, when it came before him regularly, he would examine into it; and the first Opportunity this came before him in Judgment, he then put it into a method, and accordingly referred it to a master, and all proper measures were taken.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, We shall, with your Lordships Permission, now proceed to lay before you what we have humbly to offer in Defence of the noble Earl as to the 18th Article. The Charge therein contained is in Effect, that tho' the Earl knew, that the masters of the Court might and did dispose of, and traffick with the Effects of the Suitors; and tho' Proposals were made for remedying of it, yet the Earl neglected to enquire into the Accounts of the masters, permitted, and encouraged them to employ, and traffick with the Effects of the Suitors, and took no Care that those Effects should be placed out, so as to prevent such Practices of the Masters, or that they should give such Security as was proposed; and this is charged to be done with a corrupt View and Intention of making an unlawful Gain by the Sale of those Places, and to keep up the Price of them.

The Proof of these matters depends entirely upon the Testimony of Mr. Lightboun, Mr. Holford, and Mr. Kynaston, with the particular Repetition of whose Evidence, I shall not presume to trouble your Lordships, after so much Time has been already spent; but shall beg leave to observe upon the whole, that there is not the least Evidence to support that Part of the Article, whereby the Earl is charged with permitting and encouraging the Trafficking with the Suitors Effects. So far from it, my Lords, that the quite contrary appears from the Evidence which Mr. Lightboun has given upon this Article. He has inform'd your Lordships, that when a Proposal was made, in order to the making good the Deficiency in Dormer's Office (which the Earl had confessedly so much at Heart) that each master should out of the Suitors Effects in his Hands, place out a Sum of money, the Interest whereof should be applied for that Purpose; the Earl would not give the least Countenance to that Practice, by coming into the Proposal; but in plain Terms declared he neither could nor would give any Encouragement or Direction for the Disposal of the Suitors Effects, for any other Purpose than their own Benefit.

My Lords, The Gentlemen of the House of Commons are so sensible of the Defect of their Evidence as to this Point, that they seem not to rely upon it, but are forced to fly to Implication for Assistance; and your Lordships are told that this Part of the Charge is a Consequence of the Earl's not having taken Care that the Suitors Effects were so placed out, as to put it out of the Power of the masters to make such an use of them; and that this Neglect amounts to a Permission and Encouragement to the masters, to dispose of and traffick with them as they have done.

My Lords, If this Part of the Article is to be considered as a distinct separate Charge, it is so obvious, of how dangerous a Consequence it would be to admit such argumentative Evidence only as a Proof of it, that I apprehend I need not trouble your Lordships with saying any thing more to it; if it is to be looked upon as a Consequence only of some other Part of the Charge, as a mischief arising from the neglect of putting those Effects of the Suitors out of the Power of the masters to make such use of them, I am something at a Loss to know why it is made a distinct self-subsisting Charge; it may perhaps by that means swell the Bulk of the Article, but we humbly submit it to your Lordships Consideration, whether it at all increases the Weight of it.

My Lords, The Charge in this Article is not founded upon a bare Neglect of the Earl, upon an Omission only of doing what it is conceived he ought to have done, for the Prevention of this misbehaviour of the masters; that perhaps was thought too slight a Ground for an Article of an Impeachment, especially when the Neglect here complained of does not consist in the not redressing any particular Grievance, pointed out by the Complaint of any of the Suitors of the Court, but in the not making general Orders for the Reformation of the masters. Perhaps, my Lords, it might be thought, that such a Charge would have been sufficiently answered, by alledging, as the Truth is, that the masters have only been continued by the Earl in the same Degree of Trust and Power in which he found them, and with which they were invested long before he presided in that Court: It may be too, my Lords, it might be consider'd, how wide and dangerous a Field for Impeachments and other Prosecutions would have been opened, by making it criminal in every one who had the Superintendency of an Office, barely to neglect, or omit, the introducing such new general Orders and Regulations, as seem'd to carry a Probability of preventing the Abuses of the under ministers of such Office; and therefore it is, my Lords, as it may be presumed, that the Earl's Behaviour in this Respect is alledged to be fraudulent, and unjust, and with an Intention of making unlawful Gain to himself, by the Disposal of those Offices, and with a corrupt View and Intention to keep up the Price of them: So that it is not Remifsness, or Negligence that the Earl stands here accused of, but Fraud and Corruption, and if this is not made out, we must humbly submit it to your Lordships Judgment, whether or no this Article does not fall to the Ground?

But what Proof, what Evidence has been offer'd for that purpose? None, my Lords, that I remember; but your Lordships are left to collect it, by way of Argument, from the Earl's not having made use of proper Expedients to prevent this ill Practice; the masters, by that means, were more at Liberty to make a Profit out of their Offices, which for that Reason sold at higher Prices, and therefore the Earl must be guilty of this Neglect with that View; a severe (tho' not a strict) Consequence indeed! Is the Prospect of Gain, from hence, so certain, as to tempt so strongly? And are there no other Reasons apparent why the Earl should defer his Regulations in this matter? I need not put your Lordships in mind of the great Uncertainty of a Continuance in that high (but slippery) Station: And as the Profit suppos'd to be in View, depends upon the Death or Alienation of the masters, which sometimes do not happen in a long Interval of Time, when this Uncertainty is added to the other, I appeal to your Lordships, whether it can be easily imagined, that any, even the most greedy Person, allowing him only to be in his Senses, could be prevailed upon to hazard his Reputation and Quiet, upon such distant, such uncertain Hopes; especially, my Lords, if the Necessity of so harsh a Conclusion be excluded, by its appearing that there were other matters, which might probably enough be the Reason, or Occasion of the Earl's not immediately entering upon these Regulations.

It appears, by what Mr. Lightboun has said, that the Earl was very willing and desirous of having these matters regulated; and that when he first inform'd the Earl that he had something to offer to his Consideration in relation thereto, the Earl seem'd very glad, and mightily pleas'd with the Proposals, and gave him all due Encouragement.

It appears, my Lords, that after some time taken by Mr. Lightboun, to discourse the masters upon this Head, he wrote a letter to the Earl, containing several Proposals for the regulating the Affairs of the masters; and your Lordships will observe the times and manner of the Earl's sending for and pressing the masters to bring in their Accounts, which, notwithstanding the different turn that has been endeavour'd to be given to it, we humbly insist upon it, appears to have been done, in order the better to enable the Earl to judge of and regulate these matters.

As there were Proposals for regulating the Conduct of the masters, in respect of the Suitors, so several Grievances, which the masters were suppos'd to labour under, and in which the Suitors too were suppos'd to be concern'd, were represent'd to the Earl; and, amongst others, that of money being order'd to be paid into the Hands of the Usher of the Court, instead of the masters; which was represent'd as a thing of ill Consequence, and dangerous to the Suitors of the Court, as well as injurious to the masters. It appears likewise, that it was thought proper, if not necessary, to take all these matters into Consideration together, that the intended Regulation might be entire, and not by piece-meal; and Mr. Lightboun himself was of that Opinion, as well as Mr. Holford. And tho' it is alledged, that the Earl was credibly inform'd that the sufficiency of some of the masters was much suspected, and consequently, that a more immediate regard should have been had to what concern'd the Effects in their Hands; yet when your Lordships consider how that stands upon Mr. Lightboun's Evidence; that it was only a general Intimation, without naming any particular Person, and that Mr. Lightboun declared he had no certain Ground for such Suspicion; it will not, we hope, be thought a Fault not to single out that Part of the intended Regulation; especially when the same Witness informs your Lordships that it was as impracticable for the masters to have given an adequate, that is, a proper Security, as for the great Officers of the Exchequer, or the Treasurers of the South-Sea, or other great Companies to do so. And your Lordships will be pleas'd to think it well deserves Consideration, whether it was in the Earl's Power to compel the masters to give even such Security as they could; and if it should be said, that if they would not have complied, he might have order'd the money out of their Hands; it will require time to consider where, in such Case, he must have plac'd those Effects. It would have been as extraordinary to have required Security from the masters which came in afterwards, and so to have put them upon a Foot different from the others, when it was under Consideration how to settle the whole. But, my Lords, the Event has shewn that there was not so much occasion for so speedy a Precaution in this matter, for the Purpose for which it was then principally intended, which was the preventing the masters from embezzling the Securities of the Suitors in their Hands, since there is no occasion of Complaint in that respect, they having been all deliver'd up, and the Deficiencies which have happen'd have been in the Cash in their Hands, of which there was then so little apprehension or likelihood, that the preventing it was one of the things the least under Consideration. So short sighted and uncertain is human Prudence! So different the Judgments made of things in Prospect only, from what they are in Experience! I make no Question but your Lordships will have a due regard thereto, and make all equitable Allowances on that Account.

Your Lordships have been further inform'd, that, in order to settle these matters, several meetings were had, and, amongst the rest, one very solemn one, at which were present both the Earl and the master of the Rolls. I need not trouble your Lordships with a Repetition of what pass'd there, it is sufficient to observe, that nothing being settled, the Earl, whose mind was intent upon this Affair, propos'd some Expedients to facilitate matters; particularly, that if the masters would quit their Pretensions to a co-ordinate nate Power of Judicature with the master of the Rolls, that matters might be made easy, in respect of the ordering the Payments of the money: But this would not be complied with. And when it was found, by Experience, impracticable to bring any thing about, with the Agreement of the Parties, the Earl declared that he would take the whole matter into his Consideration; and since he could not have the Concurrence of others, he himself would regulate these matters as soon as he could. Upon the whole of the Evidence offer'd upon this Article, more especially from what Mr. Lightboun and Mr. Holford have said, it plainly appears, that for a considerable time past, even from the latter end of the Year 1721, there has been an Intention of regulating the Offices of the masters of the Court of Chancery; that such Intention has been pursued, and several Steps taken, and Endeavours used, to bring it to effect; and your Lordships, I hope, perceive the many Difficulties that have interposed, and will not be at a Loss to find Reasons for the Earl's not having actually made these Regulations, very different from the distant view of an unjust Gain.

My Lords, the Business of Reformation, however desirable it may be, is in all Instances, attended with Difficulties, and in the present Case, those Difficulties have been increased by the different and jarring Interest of the Parties concerned; which, at least, prevented their Concurrence in such Reformation, and in a great measure deprived the Earl of the Benefit of the Advice of those, who were the most able to inform him what was fit to be done.

Your Lordships are sensible how great a Portion of the Earl's time must necessarily be taken up in the dispatch of the ordinary Business of that Court, and in his Attendance upon the publick Functions of his Office; and if, under these Circumstances, he has not been able to bring his good Intentions to effect, and compleat them, before it was put out of his Power so to do, your Lordships, we hope, will think it more his misfortune than his Fault, and that he is not to be reputed guilty of any Neglect or Omission in that respect, which can be adjudged to be Criminal. We shall not trouble your Lordships with any Evidence upon this Article, but submit it upon what has been already offer'd.

Mr. Robins. May it please your Lordships, The last Article which the managers for the honourable House of Commons have been pleased to close this solemn Prosecution withal, is the Nineteenth; wherein they have endeavour'd to represent the Earl, as designing to abuse and impose upon his most sacred majesty, for the sake of skreening and protecting the masters from a Parliamentary Enquiry, and to keep up the Price and Credit of their Offices.

But, my Lords, we humbly hope no Evidence appears to have been given that does in the least support or prove any such Designs in the Earl.

'Tis true, indeed, that when his majesty was graciously pleased to order the masters Accompts to be laid before a Committee of the Lords of the Council, in order to inspect the same, that the Earl, in Obedience to his majesty's Commands, thought he could not be too zealous in giving Orders for their preparing and getting the same ready, and therefore order'd them immediately to set about it.

And when some of them objected, that 'twas impossible to have them ready by the time expected, the 10th of November last, especially Mr. Holford's, which was to be an Accompt of twelve Years, that the Earl however order'd them to be got ready in the best manner they could, and told them, if it should appear they wanted more time to make them perfect, that on Application it would, without doubt, be granted.

After which your Lordships have heard, that at a meeting of most of the masters at Mr. Edwards's, when Mr. Cottingham came in, he proposed to them, some say, three things, others two; but all of them agree in Substance, that 'twas to have their Accompts and Securities inspected, and to produce the Ballance of Cash in their Hands, if it should be required.

And as to the inspecting of their Accompts and Securities, your Lordships have been pleased to observe, that not one of them appear'd to make any Difficulty or Objection to it, but, on the contrary, readily consented and agreed to it.

But as to the producing their Ballance of Cash, they were something startled at that, as not knowing what was intended by it; and therefore asked Mr. Cottingham if they were only to produce or shew it, or if 'twas going to be taken away from them.

And though Mr. Cottingham's Answer was, that they were only to produce it, as he understood, yet several of them appear'd to be very jealous that 'twas going to be taken out of their Hands; and Mr. Edwards, one of the masters, expressly said so, and therefore advised them to get it ready as soon as they could.

But your Lordships have been pleased to observe, that whatever they understood by it, yet not one of them said, or so much as insinuated, to Mr. Cottingham that they were not able to answer or make good their Ballance of Cash, only that some of them had it not all ready immediately; and Mr. John Bennett said it could not be expected they should keep it all by them, for fear of having their Throats cut, and that therefore they must have some reasonable Time given them to raise it in; and Mr. Conway expressly swears that he apprehended they all said they were able and sufficient to produce their Cash and Effects.

And, my Lords, it seems very natural and reasonable to believe that they did say so, or at least that Mr. Cottingham understood it so, because when some of them ask'd whether they were to produce it in Specie, or whether Bank Notes or Goldsmith's Notes would not do as well, he made Answer, it certainly would do as well, and therefore advised those that had not such Notes ready by them to provide them, and to stand by and assist one another.

Now, my Lords, with great Submission, all this seems to be a very natural, plain and artless Representation of this meeting: And when Mr. Cottingham had thus acquainted the masters what was expected from them, and had Assurances from them all, that they were ready and willing to comply with what had been proposed,

Can there be any room to doubt but that the Noble Earl was very well pleased with this Account from Mr. Cottingham? And therefore when they met after, at the Earl's House on the 10th of November, no wonder he did not particularly ask them the Question, whether they were able and sufficient to pay or make good the Ballance of their Cash, for this Mr. Cottingham had before assured him they were, and therefore no need for the Earl to ask the Question over again.

And Mr. Lovibond, one of the masters, swears expressly, not only that he himself was ready and willing to pay and produce his own Ballance, but that, from what passed at the Earl's House, he believed or thought all the rest of the masters were so too.

Now, my Lords, if this be so, if the Noble Earl was fully satisfied that all the masters were able to make good their Accounts, and he was just then going to lay a State of them before the Lords of the Council; is it at all to be wonder'd at, that his Lordship should give them his Advice or Opinion what Form of Words or Subscription he thought would be most proper to express their meaning by?

And as he approved of the Form made use of by Mr. Holford on that Occasion, was it or could it possibly be any Crime in the Earl to advise the rest to subscribe or under-write the same Form to their Accounts likewise?

And your Lordships have been pleas'd to observe, from the Evidence of all the masters, that not one of them made any Scruple or Difficulty of it, but went into another Room, as if they were really going to under-write the very same Subscription to their Accounts.

'Tis true indeed, my Lords, some of them, when they were got by themselves, were conscious they could not come up fully to it, and therefore varied the Form, as best suited their own Circumstances.

But your Lordships have been pleas'd likewise to observe, that the Noble Earl was so far from being in any Plot with the masters, to deceive his majesty or the Lords of the Council, that he took their Accounts, with the Subscriptions they had under-wrote, without so much as ever looking to see if they were conformable to Mr. Holford's Subscription, and apprehended they really had been all the same, till upon reading them before the Lords of the Council, the variance between them appear'd.

But your Lordships have not heard of one Word of Reproof given them by the Earl afterwards, for not observing his Directions in making the Subscription he desired.

If the Earl had had any Designs of imposing on his majesty or the Council, by getting the masters to under-write such a particular Form of Subscription to their Accounts, would he not have been more careful before he carried in those Accounts to the Council Board, to have seen that they had exactly pursued his Orders, for fear of a Discovery?

Nay, my Lords, can it possibly be imagined but that when he came afterwards to find they had deceived him, and had not under-written the Subscription, they pretended, and went out of the Room seemingly on purpose to comply with;

I say, my Lords, can it possibly be imagined, but that if the Earl had had any Views or Designs of his own in it, he would have severely rebuked and reprimanded them afterwards for not observing his Directions.

But your Lordships have not heard one Word of Proof that the Earl complain'd, or ever said any thing afterwards to the masters about it.

Now, my Lords, if this be so, can there possibly be a greater or stronger Concurrence of Circumstances to shew that the Advice or Encouragement which the Earl afterwards gave the masters to assist and supply each other with money and Effects, and represent'd to them that 'twould be for their Honour and Service to appear able and sufficient; I say, my Lords, can any thing in the World be more unnatural, than to imagine, that by this the Earl meant to advise them to make a false shew and appearance?

They had before assur'd him, or given him the strongest Reasons possible to believe, that they could make a true shew and appearance. Why then should he advise them to make a false shew and appearance? What End or Purpose in the World could this serve, either for themselves or his Lordship?

This surely, my Lords, could never be the Earl's meaning; or if it was, whilst he was under a Persuasion that they were all able and sufficient to answer and make good the Ballance of their Accounts; if he meant to advise them to make a false shew and appearance, it must have been by advising them to conceal Part of their Cash and Effects, for fear the World should really take their Words, and be of Opinion that they were as able and sufficient to make good their Accounts, as they had under their Hands acknowledged themselves to be.

But, my Lords, as the Construction the other way is not only most natural, but also consistent and agreeable with all that had before pass'd on that Occasion, surely, my Lords, it must be a strange wresting and perverting of Words to understand them otherwise.

The Sum of this whole Article, my Lords, is this: The masters were on a sudden call'd upon to bring in their Accounts of Cash and Effects, and they did so, and declared, at the same time, that they were able and willing to make good the same on a reasonable time given them for raising the money; but being afterwards called upon for their money sooner than they expected, and applying to the Earl for his Advice and Directions what to do in it, he advises them to assist and supply one another with money and Effects, till their own could be gotten in; tells them it would be for their Honour and Service to appear able and sufficient, and that he would not have them let the World see, at a time when there had been so much Clamour and Noise about them, that they were not always ready, even at a Minute's Warning, to make good their Accounts.

This, my Lords, is the whole of this grievous Complaint against the Earl; and as it seems to be nothing but a Piece of good Advice in the Earl given to the masters for their own sakes, in great Sincerity and Friendship, as the Earl expresses himself in his Answer, without any possibility of Advantage to the Earl himself, we humbly hope your Lordships will not think it worthy of a Place in this Impeachment.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, we shall not give your Lordships much trouble on this Article, we shall only call Mr. Holford.

Mr. Holford not then appearing, Mr. Cottingham was called in again.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Cottingham may inform your Lordships of the time the masters had the letter which he refers to, and which he deliver'd, whereby the Accounts are directed to be brought in. We did desire desire Mr. Holford to bring it up with him: If Mr. Holford hath not the letter, and it is not among the masters, we must examine Mr. Cottingham about it.

Lord Ch. Just. King. Mr. Holford is come.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. This is the Copy of a letter, the Original of which Mr. Holford hath; if he hath it not here, I hope your Lordships will give leave to read the Copy.

My Lords, I desire that Mr. Holford may give your Lordships an account of this letter.

Mr. Holford. My Lords, I have it not; Mr. Kynaston did inform me just now that he believed it might be in his Custody, but he hath it not here.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Your Lordships will give us leave to examine Mr. Cottingham.

Mr. Cottingham. My Lords, there was an Order made, dated the 3d of November last, of which my Clerk made a Copy. I can't say I examined it myself: The Order is,

Let the several masters of the high Court of Chancery forthwith prepare and deliver to me a perfect Account of the MONEY in their Hands, therein distinguishing, in several Columns, MACCLESFIELD, C.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, we beg leave to observe, that this Order is very much the same with the Directions given by the Noble Lord before to bring in their Accompts; but, upon the Nature of the thing, there seems to be a very good Reason why they did not comply punctually with it.

Mr. Plummer. Upon this Observation, my Lords, I beg leave to ask this Witness, Whether the masters have not given in some Account, notwithstanding the Difficulty of the method?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, my Lords, they have.

Earl of Macclesfield. Mr. Holford will inform your Lordships of this.

Mr. Holford. I believe this is a Copy of the Order given by my Lord Macclesfield for bringing in our Accompts in November last.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked whether the masters were able to make up the Accompts pursuant to the Directions given in that Order.

Mr. Holford. I believe it was the next Day after this was sent, that Mr. Cottingham did inform me of it; I had not seen it, I was then at Westminster, sitting in Court with my Lord Macclesfield; after the Court was up I went into the little Room behind the Court with my Lord, and I did say, I thought it would be very tedious to do exactly as this Order directed, because it would require a transcribing of every Particular that each master in the Court had ever paid and received for several Years, even where Causes were ended many Years ago, and that I thought it an impracticable Thing. My Lord told me that must be no Objection to the bringing in of the Accompts; if we could not do as well as he wish'd, we should do it as well as we could; and desir'd them to be ready, that they might be brought in by the Time prefixed.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked whether there were any Arguments used by my Lord to recommend Dispatch in this matter?

Mr. Holford. My Lord recommended it to me to be sure to have the Accompt ready by the Time; I think he said it was to be delivered in to the Council by such a Day.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may inform your Lordships if nothing was said about making an Excuse a Pretence for delaying the Accompts.

Mr. Holford. My Lord did desire that they might be prepared according to those Directions, but said This must be no Excuse for not bringing in the Accompts as well as you can by the Time.

Mr. Plummer. When this Accompt was asked for, how long was it before it came in?

Mr. Holford. Three or four Days or a Week.

Mr. Plummer. And you gave them in complete and right, fully and amply.

Mr. Holford. Yes, there were some little mistakes which were rectified afterwards, very small ones.

Mr. Com. Serj. By Reason of this Question that hath been asked, give me leave to trouble your Lordships with asking another, Whether in the Accompt deliver'd in there was any thing more than the Ballance of the Accompt?

Mr. Holford. Yes, the Accompt I deliver'd in was an Accompt of every particular Cause, and of the money and Securities in every Cause, and I did add the Solicitors Names in every Cause, as far as I knew; I believe all the others were not so.

Mr. Com. Serj. How were the others?

Mr. Holford. I believe the others were the same, only not the Solicitors Names.

Mr. Com. Serj. I don't mean that, but whether there was not the Ballance of each particular Accompt deliver'd in?

Mr. Holford. There was the Ballance of the particular Causes, and the whole summed up together.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, whether it was practicable to give in their Accompts in the method directed within the Time prescrib'd them?

Mr. Holford. It was not.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he would inform your Lordships, whether they have not been call'd upon frequently to hasten their Accompts?

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked whether they have been since called upon by the honourable Committee of the Council, to bring in their Accompts according to the said method?

Earl of Macclesfield. I desire he may be asked, whether after this Accompt brought in, and the Ballance made upon every Cause, they have been since called upon to make up the Accompt according to the first Instructions or not?

Mr.

Mr. Holford. We have not been required to pursue the former Instructions.

Mr. Com. Serj. If the Gentlemen of the House of Commons have done as to this Article, we have done. My Lords, We shall now beg leave to call some Witnesses to the establishing the Reputation of Mr. Cottingham; when one side have endeavoured to lessen his Credit, it will be necessary for the other Side to call Witnesses to confirm his Credit. As to the Testimony he hath given, it is very material, as it stands in Opposition to the Evidence of others; tho' it be not directly contradicted, yet it is very different from some Accounts, which your Lordships have received from some of the masters, particularly from Mr. Thomas Bennet: And as for the managers of the House of Commons, notwithstanding he was call'd a Witness by themselves, tho' they have not said in direct Terms that he is a Person not to be credited, yet calling him a black Minister of Iniquity, and using a great Number of such like other Expressions seem to carry some Insinuation, as if Mr. Cottingham was not a man of that Integrity as I believe all that know him will bear Testimony to. We beg leave therefore to call a few of that Number as Witnesses to his Character and Reputation, who have known him for several Years, and have had a full Opportunity of knowing his Character and Behaviour in the several Stations he has been in.

Mr. Goldebrough called.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I desire he may be asked how long he hath been acquainted with Mr. Cottingham?

Mr. Goldebrough. I have been acquainted with Mr. Cottingham upwards of twenty Years.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he would inform your Lordships, during his Acquaintance with him, what hath been his Character?

Mr. Goldebrough. All the Time he was a Solicitor, I observed him to have a good Character; he behaved himself with all Integrity and Fidelity as ever I knew any body of his Profession.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. You speak as to his general Character.

Mr. Goldebrough. I never heard he had any Blemish on his Reputation, he always maintain'd a very fair Character.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. During the Time he was Secretary to the Lord Chancellor, how did he behave himself?

Mr. Goldebrough. He bore a very fair Character in the Place, as fair as ever any body did that went before him.

Mr. Price sworn.

Mr. Com. Serj. We desire he may give your Lordships an Account what he knows of the Character of Mr. Cottingham, and how long he hath known him?

Mr. Price. My Lords, I have known him upwards of twenty Years, I never knew any body say any thing amiss of him, I always took him to be a very fair and honest man: I know no man in his Place behav'd himself better than he hath done.

Mr. Com. Serj. We desire to ask not only to what Mr. Price's Opinion is, but to what is the Opinion of others, as to his general Character?

Mr. Price. I believe, if you ask his Character of an hundred People, ninety of them will give him rather a greater Character.

Mr. Com. Serj. And as to the remaining ten, what Character doth he believe the remaining ten will give him?

Mr. Price. I believe that the remaining ten cannot justly charge him with any thing that is ill.

Mr. Hickman call'd and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire Mr. Hickman may likewise give your Lordships an Account how long he hath known Mr. Cottingham?

Mr. John Hickman. I have known Mr. Cottingham thirty Years, I believe; he had always a very good Character, he was Clerk to me for two Years; he was a diligent faithful Clerk, and hath had a very good Character ever since; and I never heard any thing to the contrary.

Mr. Blithman sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, We have a great number to this Purpose; I desire you would inform my Lords how long you have known Mr. Cottingham, and what his Character is?

Mr. Blithman. My Lords, I have known, and been intimately acquainted with Mr. Cottingham, for above twenty Years; while he was a Practiser in the Court of Chancery, we were now and then concern'd one against another in Business, and I observ'd him to act with great Diligence for his Clients, and in a fair way of Practice in respect to his Adversaries; he had the Character of the Practisers of the Court of Chancery in general, for being a very honest and fair man; after he was promoted to be Secretary to my Lord Macclesfield, every Practiser of the Court that had any Business must have frequent Recourse to him, and he was observ'd to discharge that Office with great Justice and Dispatch to the Suitors, with great Civility to the Practisers, and with a strict Regard to the Honour of his master and the Court; he was content with his just Fees, without ever demanding or expecting more on Pretence of Expedition, or upon any other Account. In general, I took him for a very honest man, and he was always so reputed during the Time that I knew him.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we might apply to some of the learned Managers themselves, were it proper upon this Occasion, but we hope his Character is so clearly established, by what Evidence has been already offer'd, that there is no Necessity for troubling your Lordships with any more on this Head: But we shall trouble your Lordships with one Piece of Evidence more, of a different kind, which the noble Lord is with a great deal of Difficulty oblig'd to submit to, and that relates to the private Conduct of himself, of which many enjoy the Benefits, and all were enjoy'd and oblig'd to keep secret; but now it is become necessary to make known, since he hath been represented in Publick as a Person full of Corruption, that hath studied nothing in the whole Conduct of his life but the amassing great Riches to himself, in Oppression of his Majesty's Subjects; it is now become necessary, for the Vindication of his Lordship's Innocence, to shew that his Actions (which best speak the Intention) have been of a different Nature; that as his Lordship hath received great Bounties from his Majesty, so he hath been as liberal in sharing them with those who have wanted his Relief. Multitudes of Instances might be given of this kind, but we shall only lay some few before your Lordships, and then beg leave to submit to your Consideration, whether it be possible to suppose, that a noble Lord, whose Heart was so charitably inclin'd to relieve the afflicted who apply'd to him, and to seek Opportunities of doing good to Strangers who were no ways known to him, could be guilty of Actions such as his have been represented by the Managers of the House of Commons. How can these things be reconciled, that a man, truly religious, truly virtuous and charitable, should be guilty of Oppression, Injustice, Avarice, and Corruption? We beg leave to lay some few Instances of this Nature before your Lordships, and then submit their Weight to your Lordships great Judgment.

Mr. Com. Serj. I beg leave to observe, that in a great many Articles, the Intention being what the managers have much relied upon, we humbly apprehend we have clear'd the noble Lord from those Intentions he is charg'd with, by what we have already offer'd to your Lordships; but if any Doubt should still remain, when it shall appear that he was a constant Benefactor to the Oppressed and Afflicted, that a constant Spirit of Benevolence hath reigned in the Breast of this noble Lord towards mankind, you will think it impossible for a man to be so contradictory to himself, that at the same time as he was doing all the Good he could in Private, he should be guilty of Avarice, Corruption and Oppression in the most publick manner. These Qualities are so inconsistent, that they could not reign in the same Breast at one and the same time, for that Reason we shall beg leave to mention a few of the great many Instances we might produce on this Head; and first we desire that Mr. Oaker may be called.

Mr. Oaker sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I desire that Mr. Oaker may give your Lordships an Account how long he hath been employ'd under the noble Earl within the Bar?

Mr. Oaker. I serv'd his Lordship all the Time that his Lordship had the Great Seal.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may give a general Account during all the time that he serv'd his Lordship, how far he hath been privy to any charitable Actions he hath done?

Mr. Oaker. My Lords, I have the Names of some few in my Hand, I can only tell the Names and Sums of such as accidentally came in my way, for his Lordship always did those Actions privately, and with his own Hands, if it could conveniently be. When I first came to serve his Lordship, having heard his Lordship's Character of being very bountiful to almost every body that came in his way, I therefore endeavoured to inform myself more particularly from such Persons as I apprehended apply'd to him for any Assistance of that Nature. The first that I remember was one Mr. Brown, who had been Author of several Practical Books in the Law; his Lordship was pleas'd for some Years before I acted under him, to pay for him 24*s.* a month for his Board and Subsistence, besides Cloaths and Pocket-money; the Person that us'd to pay it being absent in my time, I paid it for near seven Years, till Christmas last, when he died.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. At the time he died, how old was he?

Mr. Oaker. He said he was on Bartholomew Day last aged 102. As I have been inform'd, my Lord sent a Surgeon and an Apothecary to attend him, and paid them, and the Expence of his Funeral; and the whole that came within my Knowledge was about 120*l.* Afterwards there were two Clergymen recommended to his Lordship for a living that was in his Disposal; my Lord could not soon determine which to give it to; one of them was a poor Curate in Surrey at Thames Ditton: This poor man complain'd, that he could not attend longer in Town, nor had money to carry him home; my Lord gave him a Guinea, and told him he might go home, he need not stay, but should be sent to when he had determin'd what to do for him. A little while after, he came to Town again, and said that it being reported, that his Lordship would give him a living, he was turn'd out of his Curacy, and being an Inmate, was order'd by the Officers of the Parish to quit the Parish, but that he had not money to remove his Family; and my Lord being told of that, sent for him, and gave him a Sum of money in a Paper; I asked the Clergyman what it was he gave him, and he said twenty Guineas. He had soon after a living given him by my Lord, in Kent, and then as he was removing his Family to his living, they were, here in Town by the way, taken ill of the measles; upon which the poor Gentleman wanting money to proceed on his Journey, came again to my Lord, and his Lordship gave him twenty Guineas more, as he told me; and I believe his Lordship hath given him several times since, but I don't know the Particulars, neither had I known any of those I have mention'd, had not the poor Clergyman himself told me of them.

Mr. Com. Serj. What is his Name, and where is his living?

Mr. Oaker. His Name was Vigurs, and his living is near Sittingbourne in Kent. There was one man, a converted Jew, I believe he is here himself; he hath had of my Lord seventy or eighty Pounds. There is one Thwaites, a Quaker, who hath attended the Houses of Parliament long, and is very well known, hath had a pretty large Sum of money, besides other Assistance; Sixty Pounds I paid him at once by my Lord's Order. There is one Mr. Wickam, a Gentleman in the Navy, a half-pay Officer; he had out-run that, and was in the Marshalsea Prison, and could not make up his matters; a Friend of his was personally acquainted with me, and said my Lord had some Knowledge of this Officer, and desir'd me to acquaint him with his Case, which I did, and his Lordship said he had no Acquaintance with him, but had known his Father, and for his sake would clear him; and it being said he was in for about thirty Pounds, his Lordship said if it came to forty Guineas he would pay it, so that it set him out of Distress, and cleared him of all Debts; the Gentleman did make up his Affairs, and my Lord paid the money, and besides gave him a whole Suit of Cloaths, double Shoes and Stockings, and Wigs, and new Sword and Belt, fit to appear in the World again, which came to something above forty Pounds in the whole. Another poor Clergyman my Lord gave a living to, and he was very lame, and came to Town to go into the cold Bath; he happened to be arrested for an old Demand of 36*l*. His Wife came to my Lord, who gave her money for present Subsistence, and order'd me to take care that the whole Affair should be made up, and the whole Debt was clear'd and discharg'd, and all the Costs and Charges paid out of his Lordship's Pocket. There are abundance of other small Sums I might mention of the same kind, but it would be endless to trouble your Lordships with them. Then there is another matter which I mention to your Lordships, not so much for the Value as for the manner of doing it; a poor Gentleman residing at the Bath, had a Place given him, as he said, in Ireland, but had not money to carry him over, and therefore only beg'd 40*s*. to carry him over to Ireland; my Lord order'd me to remit him five Guineas, which he received, but afterwards he wrote word that he and his Family were ill at the Time, and therefore had expended the money, and wanted the same Supply again; my Lord then order'd me to remit him ten Guineas more, which I did. Here is at your Lordships Bar one Mr. Saunders, a Clergyman, who hathundry times received of his Lordship's Favours whilst a Youth, and upon the Foundation in the Charter-House; and when he went from thence to the University, his Lordship gave him forty Guineas; and afterwards, when he was near going into Orders, remitted him sixty Pounds to clear all matters in the University, which I sent to Dr. Bentley by his Lordships Order. I don't mention several other Particulars, but they are very numerous, both what pass'd through my Hands, as well as others of his Lordships Servants, hardly a Week pass'd without some Instance of this kind.

Mr. Com. Serj. As you was under the Great Seal, you can inform my Lords, when Clergymen were admitted to their livings, whether his Lordship has not frequently order'd their Fees to be remitted them?

Mr. Oaker. My Lord frequently gave Orders to remit the Fees of his own Officers, and at other Times his Lordship paid the Fees of the Patent Officers and Stamps out of his own Pocket; and hath given the Clergymen money besides to pay their Journeys to their livings, and otherwise to sustain them, and to buy Books.

Mr. Com. Serj. Do you remember Mr. Higgs?

Mr. Oaker. Mr. Higgs was greatly indebted, and in Prison; his Lordship discharg'd him, and paid such Debts as were insisted upon, to the Value of about ninety Pounds: He is there to give your Lordships a particular Account.

Dr. Sayer. As a great deal depends upon the manner of doing these things, I would ask him as to the manner in which they were done, whether in an ostentatious manner, or how;

Mr. Oaker. My Lord did these generous Actions merely as they fell in his way, and without mentioning them, or letting them be seen or known, as far as I could ever perceive; so that where I did not apply to his Lordship myself for such People as came to me, I never knew it but by Accident; and in Cafes where I was privy, my Lord generally gave me more than was asked, his method being, as far as might be, to set Persons entirely free, and to do them a full Service.

Mr. Hunt, a Clergyman, sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Hunt would recollect and give your Lordships an Account of what charitable Acts he hath known done by the Earl of Macclesfield?

Mr. Hunt. I have known my Lord to be a very generous and noble Patron: I can speak from several Instances, relating not only to myself, but to several other Gentlemen of the University of Oxford. The first Time I had the Honour of being known to his Lordship; was about Whitsuntide 1722, upon the Recommendation of one Mr. Thornbury, Vicar of Thame in Oxfordshire. The Noble Lord asked Mr. Thornbury what Persons he knew in the University that were inclinable to be studious: Mr. Thornbury was so kind as to mention me as one: Upon which his Lordship sent for me to dine with him the Day after; I carried him some of the private Exercises that I had done in the University, which his Lordship read over, and was so kind as to approve. His Lordship kept me with him several Days, and desired to have more Conversation with me, and he dismiss'd me with a generous Present of twenty Guineas, telling me he should be glad to see me when he came to Sbirburn, and that he design'd to make me a Present now and then till he could do something else for me. About Christmas after was the next Time I waited on my Lord: I carried him again some of my University Exercises, which his Lordship perused, and was so favourable as not to dislike them. His Lordship dismiss'd me at that Time, with another generous Present of twenty Guineas, and further Assurances of future Favours. About this time I had received a letter from Mr. Gagnier, Deputy Professor of Arabick in the University of Oxford; wherein he complained to me, that he had been ill used by some Persons in the University, for having writ a Poem in Praise of her Royal Highness. This I related to his Lordship: His Lordship express'd a great deal of Concern for his misfortune, pity'd his Case, and sent him by me a Present of twenty Guineas. The third Time I had the Honour to wait upon his Lordship was about Michaelmas 1723, when I received likewise a Present of twenty Guineas: I should have also mention'd that I received other smaller Presents from his Lordship, five Guineas at one time, and one Guinea at another. The last time I had the Honour of waiting on his Lordship and receiving his Bounty, was about Easter 1724, when his Lordship made me the usual generous Present of twenty Guineas, and was so kind as to send by me thirty Guineas more, viz. fifteen to Mr. Hutchinson, and fifteen to Mr. Greenway; so that within the space of two Years I received of his Lordship's Bounty, for the use of myself and the Gentlemen of my Acquaintance, one hundred and thirty six Guineas, upon no other Account, and for no Consideration whatever, but to encourage us in our Studies, and support us in the University.

Dr. Sayer. I would know whether the thirty Guineas were look'd upon as a single Bounty, or was it to be an annual Charity?

Mr. Hunt. I believe so; they told me they had received it as such before; we all looked upon our several Benefactions as to be continued.

Mr. Smithys, a Clergyman, sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may give an Account of what he knows of my Lord Macclesfield's Charities.

Mr. Smithys. My Lords, In the Year 1721 there became vacant the Place of a master of an Hospital

Hospital in the Town of Colchester, in the Disposal of my Lord Chancellor, to which mastership, King James the First had annex'd the Cure of Souls of a Parish adjoining, and which Parish had no other Provision for a minister.

The former master had taken no notice of the Parish, nor had any Care been taken time out of mind (as I have been informed by the Inhabitants of the Parish) of either burying their dead, or baptizing their Infants. My Lord Chancellor being (as I have been told) informed of this, sent to me to know if I would accept of the master's Place. I would not mistake, my Lord's Chaplain sent me word, if I would accept of the Place, and let him know my Christian Name, his Lordship would send me the Grant of it. I did so, and then my Lord was pleas'd to enquire into the Nature of the thing. I informed his Lordship that no Care was taken of the Parish at all, tho' I apprehended the master of the Hospital ought to take Care of it. My Lord then was pleas'd to give me the Grant of the Hospital, and oblig'd me to a particular Care of the Parish; and at the same time desired me to let him know what Condition the Church was in. I informed him that it was utterly unfit for divine Service; none had been performed in it (as I had been inform'd) Time out of mind; and the Parishioners were in such a Condition of Poverty, that they were not capable of making it fit for divine Worship.

My Lord then was pleas'd to order me to acquaint him how much would put the Church in Repair. Upon this I thought proper to apply to Workmen for their Advice; and by their Advice I inform'd his Lordship thirty Pounds would do it. My Lord order'd me to set the Workmen at work, and he would pay their Bills. Before the Church was finish'd, through my Unskilfulness, and the Cunning of Workmen (as I then thought) this thirty Pounds would not do. I acquainted his Lordship with it, and he desired to know how much more would do. The Workmen told me ten Pounds. My Lord order'd the Workmen to proceed, and they should be paid the other ten Pounds; but by the falling of a Wall, and other Accidents, this money was not still enough. I was ashamed to betray my own Ignorance, in suffering myself to be so impos'd upon by the Workmen (as I imagin'd his Lordship would think) I determin'd to pay the rest of the money myself; but being encouraged by Dr. Sayer, I did inform his Lordship of the Condition we were in. I then receiv'd an unlimited Commission to let the Workmen finish the Work, and send up their Bills when they had done, which they did, and my Lord immediately paid the money, which amount'd to 52*l.* 6*s.* 11 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.

Dr. Sayer. I desire he may be ask'd what sort of Parish this is, and what kind of People the Inhabitants of it are?

Mr. Smithys. It is a poor Parish, but not numerous; there is not one in the Parish that is call'd master; nor one, I believe able to contribute a Shilling towards a Work of this kind, without hurting himself or his Family.

Dr. Sayer. I desire he may be ask'd whether the Earl has any relation to it, or any Estate thereabouts?

Mr. Smithys. He hath no relation to the Town, nor Seat near it, nor any particular Concern, that I know of, for any man belonging to it.

Mr. Plummer. If my Lord Macclesfield thinks it decent to give this Evidence, we do not think fit to oppose it.

Dr. Sayer. The Charities laid out by my Lord Macclesfield have been to fit out Clergymen for Parishes, and to provide Churches for Parishes.

Mr. John Meyer sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire this Witness to inform your Lordships, whether he was not formerly a Jew.

Mr. Meyer. I was a Jew formerly.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he would give your Lordships an Account of his Conversion, and what Circumstances of life he was then in, and how he was relieved?

Mr. Meyer. I was, by several misfortunes, and by the hardship of my Relations, reduced to great Extremities, after I was converted from Judaism.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. After you were converted, what Charities have you received? Have you received any Collection made for you by any Person?

Mr. Meyer. I did apply myself to my Lord Macclesfield for Charity, by the Recommendation of several worthy Clergymen: Upon which Recommendation, his Lordship was pleas'd to bestow upon me a Charity of fifty Guineas. I was set up in a way of living in the Parish of St. Katherines near the Tower; then the Fire happen'd there, and I was burnt out, after which I had a dangerous Fit of Sickness.

His Lordship got an Account of the same, and sent me a second Relief of twenty Guineas. The same Time that his Lordship gave me fifty Guineas, he sent twenty Guineas to the Reverend Mr. Skute, who was Treasurer to the Society for propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts.

Mr. Edward Sanders sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may give an Account of what he hath received of my Lord Macclesfield's Bounty?

Mr. Sanders. My Lords, in the Year 1713 the Duke of Somerset, through the Intercession of the Earl of Macclesfield, put me into the Charter-House, where I was educated eight Years and an half; all which Time his Lordship furnish'd me with Books; and at my leaving of the School, he gave me forty Guineas for the better prosecuting my Studies at Cambridge: In a Year and an half after this, he gave me sixty Pounds. My Lords, this was not all; for when I acquainted his Lordship at my going into Orders, that I owed some money at Cambridge, his Lordship was pleas'd to give me forty Guineas more, towards the discharging of my Debts.

Mr. Thornbury, a Clergyman, sworn.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I desire he may inform your Lordships what he knows of his Lordships Charity?

Mr. Thornbury. My Lords, what I have to inform your Lordships of is this; that in the Year 1721, about the latter End of July, some Application having been before made to my Lord Chancellor by my Father, I had the Honour to be sent for by his Lordship to London. When I came to Town, as it was my only Business, so I made it my earliest Care to wait upon his Lordship, who was pleas'd to receive me with the greatest Kindness and and Condescension, telling me he had some Livings at that time in his Disposal, one of which he intended for me; his Lordship likewise offered, if I had a Mind to see the Livings, he would be at the Expence of my Journey, and that I should have my Choice when I was come back; but I answered, I would refer that to his Lordship's Pleasure. In a few Days after, he ordered his Secretary of the Presentations to prepare a Presentation of me to a Vicarage in Somersetshire, called Ninebead. When the Presentation was sealed, and I had received Instructions to go and wait upon his Lordship for it, he was graciously pleased not only to give me the Presentation, but also discharged the whole Fees, and likewise made me a Present of 100 Guineas to buy me Books withal.

Mr. Tho. Withers, and Mr. Henshaw called, who not immediately appearing,

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I am told here is a Reverend Prelate, who will willingly stand up in his Place, and give your Lordships an Account of what he knows of some of my Lord Macclesfield's Charity.

The Lord Bishop of Oxford stands up.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire your Lordship would give an Account of what you know of this Matter?

Bishop of Oxford. My Lords, the Question put to me is concerning my Lord Macclesfield's Benefactions and Encouragement to Learning in the University of Oxford. I am a good Witness of it; for my Lord some time since desired me to recommend a Number of young Men to him, whom I thought proper Objects of his Favour, and like to make a considerable Progress in Law, Physick, Divinity, or any other Branch of Learning. He said he was willing to bestow a considerable annual Stipend on them, for no other end but to enable them to buy Books, and encourage them to follow their Studies; and this without any Regard to Party, but merely for the promoting of Learning in the University. I recommended several Persons to him, and enquired into the Characters of some who were recommended by others, and have no Reason to doubt but that every one that was thought deserving had a considerable Allowance. I can't charge my Memory with particular Sums, but believe his Lordship said he was willing in the whole, to expend this way four or five hundred Pounds every Year. This is the Sum of what I know; if your Lordships desire to be informed of any Thing more particularly, I am ready to give an Answer to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, we have now gone through our Evidence, and I shall beg your Lordships Indulgence for the making some short Observations upon what has been offered in Defence of the noble Earl, now at your Lordships Bar; and as this Proceeding has already been drawn out to a very great Length, I am sensible it will become me, to use as much Brevity as may be. I shall, however, before I proceed, beg leave to trespass upon your Lordships Patience so far as to say, that if in the Course of this Proceeding, any thing should have slipped from us who are of Counsel for the Earl, which might not be so exactly suitable to the very great Respect and Deference, which is due from every one to this august Assembly, I hope your Lordships will, in your great Goodness, impute it only to the Inadvertency, which the Variety of Incidents and Hurry attending Proceedings of this Nature, may reasonably be supposed to occasion, and as such excuse it.

We hope, my Lords, that what has been humbly offered to your Consideration, in Behalf of this noble Earl, has made him appear a Person very different from what he has been represented to be, by the Gentlemen of the House of Commons; and I am apt to persuade myself, that if they had been as well informed beforehand, of what he had to say in his Vindication, as they were of what they had to object to his Conduct; your Lordships would have been spared the great Trouble occasioned by this long Prosecution.

It is, my Lords, the peculiar Happiness of our Constitution, to have in the different Parts of it, all the Requisites necessary and proper for the Preservation of the Peace and Welfare of those who have the good Fortune to live under it. In those, whose Part it is, like Centinels, to watch for and guard the Liberties and Safety of the People; who are the grand Inquisitors, to search into, and expose every Thing that has even the Appearance of being hurtful or dangerous to the Liberties or Properties of those they represent; Vigour, Warmth, Zeal, I had almost said some Degree of Passion, seem proper Qualifications; whilst Calmness, Moderation, and Patience, not altogether without Tenderness and Mercy, are the proper Characteristicks of those, who by the Constitution are to determine and judge. And, my Lords, I may venture to say, that, to the Glory of our Nation, all these Qualities have been exercised, and every Part of our Constitution hath exerted itself, upon Occasion of this Proceeding: His Majesty's great Condescension, in readily laying this Matter before his Parliament; the Zeal and Vigour of the House of Commons, in examining into it; the great Abilities and Industry which the learned Gentlemen, who have had the Honour of managing this Prosecution, have shewn, (they'll pardon me, I hope, for saying, I could have wished it had been attended with something less Harshness and Severity;) and your Lordships great Goodness and Patience, hitherto so conspicuous, and of the Continuance of which there is not the least Reason to doubt, are so many illustrious Proofs of it.

Give me leave, my Lords, to proceed further, and mention the Part which the noble Earl at the Bar hath had in this Affair. His Readiness, when after his Endeavours for that Purpose, he found the thorough Reformation of the Court of Chancery a Work too difficult for him singly to effect, in laying the Affair before his Majesty in Council; the seasonable and proper Orders he afterwards issued out upon that Occasion; and his Zeal in pressing to have them immediately comply'd with; leave him still, we hope, some Share of the Reputation and Merit of what has been, or is likely to be done towards the Reformation of that Court. Nor will your Lordships be at a Loss, to what Cause to ascribe this Behaviour of the Earl, notwithstanding the Representations which have been made of him; when you shall consider the steady Affection and Zeal for our Constitution, which on all Occasions have so remarkably appeared in him. Your Lordships, no doubt, remember those Times and Conjunctions, which it was thought required not only good Wishes and Affection, but Vigour likewise and Courage, to support and preserve to us the Continuance of our Constitution. Then it was, and for that end, that this noble Lord so eminently exerted all those great Abilities he was Master of; and that with such Success, as gained him the approbation of his Majesty, who thought his Services so signal, as to justify his Munificence towards him, and his Goodness in raising him to so great Honour. And can it easily be thought, my Lords, that one so qualified, so affectioned, so distinguished, should enter into a wild Design of deceiving both King and Parliament? Or that he should enter into it, and carry it on in so poor and indiscreet a manner, as is suggested in the Charge against him? in a manner so void of Thought and Contrivance, that it relishes more of Madness than any thing else. Suppose he could be thought capable of attempting to conceal Matters that were so notorious to every body, and that by a Means, which from the very Nature of it, must in some short Time have betrayed the Contrivance; yet surely, my Lords, his Fears and Apprehensions would have restrained him from communicating himself in a Matter of so high Concern, without Distinction, to so many Persons as were then supposed to be present; that he should publickly give such Orders as would certainly expose him to the Repentment of his Majesty, and both Houses of Parliament, in Hopes that such a Secret would be kept by so many People as are supposed to be concerned in it; surely, my Lords, is a Charge of so extraordinary a Nature, as will require better Proof than what arises from uncertain Expressions, in Discourse with a Number of People at the same time, and they in so great a Hurry and Confusion, that there was very great room for Misapprehensions, and where it was easy for one to mistake what was said to another, as if spoke to himself: And from hence it proceeded, as I presume, that the Account given of that Transaction, by the Gentlemen concerned in it, is so various and uncertain, that we humbly hope your Lordships will not think it reasonable to be relied on, as a Proof of such a Charge.

My Lords, the Foundation of this whole Complaint against the Earl is his Acceptance of Presents or Gratuities, upon the Disposal of Places; or, as the Gentlemen of the House of Commons are pleased to style it, the selling of Places, principally those of the Masters of the Court of Chancery. We have admitted the Facts, but without admitting those Circumstances which accompany it, as it stands charged in the several Articles for that Purpose; and we hope we have satisfied your Lordships, that it was no ways illegal to act as the Earl hath done upon those Occasions. To support our Reasoning upon that Head, we proposed to shew to your Lordships, what the Sense and Opinion of divers great and learned Men had been, in respect to the Law in that Point, from their own Practice and Behaviour: And we hope that the Evidence which hath been offered for that Purpose, hath plainly made it out, that the Earl hath the constant Usage of his Predecessors in that Office, as well as of other great Persons in other Stations, to countenance what he hath done upon such Occasions, and that without any Marks of Parliamentary Repentment. If this noble Lord stood in need of an Excuse for having taken Presents, how effectual would this be for that Purpose? For sure, my Lords, if it were allowed that he had erred in this Matter, yet after such great Examples, your Lordships would think it an Error only, and not an Offence which deserved a heavy Censure.

The rest of the Articles have so near a Relation to the charge of taking Money, being only Aggravations of that Matter, under the several Circumstances therein contained, that I humbly apprehend, they do in a great measure depend upon, and will stand or fall together with it. And as the Evidence which has been given in relation to them, and the Observations made thereon, have been so full, and are yet so fresh in your Lordships memories, I will avoid troubling your Lordships with a needless Repetition of any thing upon those Heads.

My Lords, the Source of all the Evils here complained of in the Earl, is supposed to be Avarice: Every thing is ascribed to an immoderate Thirst after Gain, an irregular Desire of amassing Wealth. And great Endeavours have been used to persuade your Lordships, that the Earl was so wholly tainted, so thoroughly possessed with this Vice, that he had nothing in View but to gratify it; and every single Action of his had a Tendency that Way. But sure, my Lords, the Evidence just now laid before your Lordships, shews a Spirit and Temper of Mind far different from that, and totally inconsistent with it. And none, I hope, will object against our having entered into a Proof of that Nature; there are some Occasions, and surely this is one, that will justify the most modest man in publishing his own good Deeds; and upon which even charitable Acts, as first intended, as they ought to be bury'd in Silence, and known to none but the great Rewarder of them, may be withdrawn from their Privacy, and disclosed to publick View.

My Lords, the Instances which we have produced are not of pompous Charities; we should then, no doubt, have been told that Vanity and Ostentation had the greatest Share in them: Had they been a few Instances only which were laid before your Lordships, though far exceeding in Value those which have now appeared; it would perhaps have been said, that those were Starts and Fits of Charity: But your Lordships will observe that these have flowed in a continual Stream, and can be owing to nothing but a constant habitual Benevolence towards Mankind, a regular and continual Inclination to do good. And can such a Temper and Disposition of Mind be consistent with insatiable Avarice, base Corruption, and merciless Cruelty, in spoiling and oppressing Widows, Orphans, and Lunatics, and such too, who were under his Guardianship and Protection?

My Lords, we hope it will be thought impossible for such opposite Sentiments to reign in the same Breast, at the same time; and that at least, where any thing may appear doubtful in the Earl's Words or Actions, not only the received Notion of our Law, of presuming always in Favour of Innocence, but this Benignity of Temper in the Earl will determine your Lordships to consider der it in the most favourable Light, and never to intend any thing harsh, which will admit of a milder Construction.

The Cries and Tears of Widows and Orphans have been artfully introduced, to raise your Lordships Compassion and Indignation upon this Occasion. It is no Wonder, my Lords, that Women and Children should be frightened at the first Appearance of the Deficiency in the Suitors Effects, which was represented in so terrible a View; but we hope, my Lords, the Terror is sunk with the Deficiencies, and that in a great Measure these Cries are hushed, and Tears dry'd up, now it already appears (as we hope it evidently does) that no very considerable Loss is likely to happen to the Suitors, and that the Prospect of its being lessened still improves.

Under these Circumstances should your Lordships think (which we humbly hope there is no Ground to suppose) that the Earl has fallen into any mistakes; yet when his Majesty, your Lordships, and the Commons, have extended their Clemency to those masters, who have been the acknowledged, the immediate Instruments and Actors of the Evils complained of, and of whatever may be prejudicial to the Suitors; and the Legislature hath interposed, to preserve them in the Enjoyment of their Offices; we hope the Earl would not be the only Object, on which your Lordships Goodness did not shine. We rather hope your Lordships will consider his misfortunes; and when you look upon the high Eminency from whence he is fallen, and view him at your Lordship's Bar, scourged with the severest Stripes the Tongue can inflict, and what can be more cutting? a Punishment, from which he had some Reason to expect that his Relation to your illustrious Body might have protected him: That these Circumstances will raise those generous Sentiments of Tenderness, which always dwell in noble Breasts: A Tenderness, no ways inconsistent with your Lordships Justice, to which the Earl cheerfully submits himself; and that in Imitation of the unerring Judge of all, whose Vicegerents you are on this Occasion, your Lordships will in Judgment remember Mercy.

Mr. Onslow. I would not interrupt the Gentleman that spoke last before he had ended; but I must now, before this Gentleman goes on, inform your Lordships that an Incident hath happened, that the Managers think they are obliged to take Notice of. The Right Reverend Prelate is not by the Managers in the least suspected as to his Veracity, and the Truth of what he says; but in judicial Proceedings, especially in a criminal Case, as this is, the Managers think Witnesses of all Sorts are to be examined upon Oath; not, as I have said, that they have any Doubt of the Reverend Prelate's Veracity; but for the sake of the Precedent, and to prevent ill Consequences, the Managers think his Lordship must, as all other Persons do, give his Testimony upon Oath: Your Lordships have Precedents in the Case of my Lord Strafford and others. The Witnesses, if members of your Lordships House, are to be sworn at the Table, and give their Evidence in their Place.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, if it is insisted upon, that what the Reverend Prelate says should be taken as Evidence; we humbly apprehend, according to the Rule of Evidence, he is to give his Evidence upon Oath. And this being so material an Incident, and the Prosecution having proceeded so far, we humbly beg leave to put your Lordships in mind, that it is insisted upon in Point of Testimony, that the Reverend Prelate would be pleased to be sworn.

Lord Lechmere. No doubt but the Reverend Prelate ought to be sworn. It was not taken Notice of. If the Prelate be called upon as a Witness, his Evidence must be upon Oath.

Bishop of Oxford. My Lords, I should be very sorry to give any Offence to your Lordships; if the honourable Managers insist upon it that I take my Oath, and your Lordships direct me so to do, I am as willing to give my Evidence upon Oath, as without it. I submit it to your Lordships, whether you will look upon the Journals, to see how the Precedents stand.

Lord Lechmere. If it be insisted upon to look into the Journals, the Parties must withdraw.

Thereupon it was waved, and the Bishop sworn.

Bishop of Oxford. My Lords, for the Advancement and Encouragement of Learning in the University of Oxford, I remember my Lord Macclesfield some time since, told me he was willing to allow considerable Salaries to Persons that were studious and sober; and that this should be done for the Advancement of any Sort of Learning in general, without restraining it to any particular Science or Faculty, and without any Relation to Party, provided the Persons were worthy: And I desire leave to own to your Lordships, that otherwise I would not have had any Concern in it. I did, my Lords, recommend several Persons, whom I thought proper Objects of his Lordship's Bounty; and at his Lordship's Request, enquired the Characters of others, who had been before recommended to him. I have Reason to believe that several of these succeeded in his Lordship's Favour, and received bountifully from him. I dare not, at this Distance of Time, charge my memory with particular Sums, but believe that the noble Lord assured me, he was willing, in the whole, to lay out this way four or five hundred Pounds a Year. This, as near as I can remember, is the Substance of what I said before.

Mr. Robins. My Lords, I shall presume to take up very little of your Lordships Time, in observing on what has passed at this solemn Assembly of the two Houses of Parliament.

The Occasion of it has been to examine into the Conduct and Behaviour of a Member of your own august Body, during the Time he had the Honour to serve his most sacred Majesty in the high Office of Lord Chancellor.

And the Commons have faithfully discharged their Part, by omitting no one Circumstance or Ingredient, that could possibly serve to heighten and aggravate the Crimes they have thought fit to lay to his Charge.

But whether after all, the Mistakes, the Inadvertencies, the Example of others, and the Frailties even of human Nature itself, are not the whole, the Sum total of all this solemn and pompous Trial, will I believe with many remain for ever the Question.

It would not perhaps be for the Service of this noble Earl to say, that every Step he took, every Advance he made, for the Benefit and Relief of the Suitors of the Court where he presided, was the best that could possibly have been invented; 'twill, we hope, be sufficient to say, that he sincerely thought them the best: And if better have been since found out, which have proved more effectual to the same end, it only proves him not to have been infallible, which surely is no Crime.

And if the Actions of his private Life, his Justice, his Piety, his Charity, and his Compassion for others, may be allowed to cast any Light or Reflection on his publick Conduct and Behaviour, I believe, my Lords, I may presume to affirm that those who are acquainted with his Innocence in the one, will never be brought to think him criminal in the other.

My Lords, I am afraid many are the Abuses, the Corruptions and the Evils which have sprung up in our Courts of Justice, even to the Disparagement and Discredit of Justice itself. And Complaints of this kind have been made in almost all Ages, though at the same Time they have been justly placed to the Account of some of the lowest, and most inferior Officers and Ministers, which are necessarily and unavoidably made use of in the Dispensation and Distribution of Justice.

And if an effectual Method of Cure could be found out for these; if those who are to give the last Hand to the Completion of Justice were pure, the Streams would then run clear and undisturbed to the end.

But, till that is done, till Means are applied for the purging and clearing these Channels, thro' which Justice must be conveyed, 'tis no wonder that the Fountains themselves look as it were muddy, and polluted by Reflection.

But, my Lords, how desirable soever these Ends may be, they are only the Work of the Legislature; a Chancellor, or a Judge, may sit by and lament, but they cannot help them.

They are only to be effected by that Power, which has a Sort of Omnipotence; and when they are effected, I believe none will rejoice and congratulate themselves more, than the many learned, great, and upright Men, which preside in our several Courts of Justice.

In the mean time, my Lords, as the Sentence which is prayed against this noble Earl, will be of little Avail to stop the Mischiefs; as 'twill in some sort be a Punishment of the Innocent, and letting the Guilty escape: We are too well acquainted with your Lordships just and righteous Proceedings, to be in any Pain for this noble Earl.

Let selling of Places, taking of Presents, or any other the known and usual Profits attending great Preferment, be for ever abolish'd by a plain and explicit Law; and I believe I may presume to say, that no Complaints of this kind will ever be made more; that Westminster-Hall will never again be named in an Impeachment, and that your Lordships will have no Trouble of this kind for the future.

But this, my Lords, I am sure I may venture to say, and I will say no more; that if it had been the Fortune of this noble Earl to have liv'd in such happy Days, his Name would never have been transmitted to Posterity in an Impeachment.

Mr. Strange. My Lords, we are now come to the Close of the Defence, wherein to avoid Confusion, I have hitherto confined my self to the particular Part which it was my Duty to open; your Lordships will therefore permit me to take Leave of this august Assembly with some few short Observations both upon the Charge and the Defence.

Your Lordships did for four Days successively sit to hear this noble Earl arraign'd as the most corrupt, oppressive, and avaricious Person upon Earth: It was done too, my Lords, in a Manner, from which I should have thought the Relation he bears to your Lordships would have been a sufficient Protection; and without which the honourable Managers might very well have discharged their Duty to the House of Commons, in laying the Case before your Lordships.

But, my Lords, whatever Repentment this Treatment of one of your own Body might raise in your Lordships, I must for my own Part confess, that I heard it all with Pleasure; as it was an open Acknowledgment, that all honest Art and legal Liberty were necessary in aggravating the Charge, and possessing your Lordships with that Opinion of the noble Earl, that the Gentlemen of the House of Commons desire you would entertain.

My Lords, the Charge in one general View consists of an Accusation against the noble Earl, either for doing what his Predecessors did before him, or for not doing what it is not pretended they ever did: A singular Misfortune to this noble Person, that the following such great Examples should in every Instance be imputed to him as a Crime.

As to the accepting Presents for Offices, my Lords, we have fully proved to your Lordships, that the same was done by the Predecessors of the noble Earl within the Bar; and we must humbly insist, that if the Statute of Edward VI. be taken as laying a Restraint upon that Practice, yet having put the Case, and said what should be the Consequence, your Lordships cannot go out of that Statute to punish the noble Earl.

My Lords, it is the Misery (I may say the Slavery) under which other Nations groan, that the Punishment for Crimes is arbitrary and variable, and that he who commits the smallest Offence may be put to undergo the most rigorous Punishment: But God be thanked, my Lords, he hath not dealt so with this Nation, but that this People hath Knowledge of the Laws; Crimes here are stated, and so, my Lords, are their Punishments; and give me Leave, my Lords, to say, that this is one of the main Channels through which our Ancestors have deliver'd down to us that Liberty, which is the Glory of this, and the Envy of all other Nations.

My Lords, the Act under your present Consideration puts the Case of accepting Money for an Office, and says, the Consequence shall be the Loss of Nomination: There are no Words that declare Offices were not saleable by Law, or that they shall not be saleable for the future, upon which to found a Prosecution by Indictment or Impeachment; though if such Words were in this Act, I should still humbly insist, that as well upon an Impeachment as upon an Indictment, the Statute, and that only, must be the Guide in ascertaining the Punishment.

My Lords, the Articles have bestowed many Epithets upon this Action; such as illegally, corruptly, extorsively, &c. But your Lordships will not find them in this Act of Parliament.

And

And as to its being an Offence at Common Law, give me leave, my Lords, only to put you in mind of three Proviso's in this Act, which speak the contrary in the strongest Terms. The first is the Clause which confirms all Bargains then made, and which were to take Effect at a future Day. The next is a Declaration to what Offices the Act shall not extend, some whereof are of a publick Nature, as Keeper of a Forest, Manor, &c. And the third is that which takes Notice, that by Law the Judges might dispose of Offices, and therefore leaves them to the full Liberty they had before the Act.

And if in this Impeachment we stand clear as to the selling of Offices, then no Acts or Omissions towards raising the Price (if any such had been proved) will make the Earl criminal, which is the whole of the Charge.

My Lords, your Lordships were told in a very moving manner, that the noble Earl was pursued hither by the united Cries of Widows and Orphans——But we have heard none: No Instance has been given of any one Preference in Judgment, of one Penny taken during the whole Course of his administering Justice to these Kingdoms, or of any one voluntary Complaint that has been made against the Earl; and yet, my Lords, he has been represented as if his Crimes were full blown, as if he had divested himself of Humanity, and taken Pleasure in the Misery and Distress of his Fellow-Subjects: as one, whose only Motive of Action was inordinate Gain and wicked Lucre; and as one, overtaken by the Commons, triumphing in the Luxury of unpunished Crimes. You have been told too, my Lords, That in him Oppression usurped the Seat of Justice; and that by him the Beauty of Justice was deformed, and through his Means Justice stood afar off, and Equity could not enter.—How little Ground, my Lords, there was for these Complaints, may, I think, be fairly inferred from the Defect of Evidence in this Particular; since, after the strictest Scrutiny both into his publick and private life, your Lordships have not had one Witness appear at your Bar against him.

But, my Lords, since the Cries of Widows and Orphans were so much mentioned by the honourable Managers; we, who are Counsel for the noble Earl, thought it our Duty to shew your Lordships, that those Cries were not against him as an Oppressor, but to him as a Reliever. And how little soever this noble Earl thought of having an Account of these Matters brought to your Lordships Bar, yet surely, my Lords, this is now a Circumstance, under which it is lawful for the left Hand to know what the right Hand doth. And these Acts of Charity and Generosity, which were not treasured up for your Lordships Bar, but for a greater, are however proper to appear in this Place, in Vindication of the noble Earl against a Charge of Covetousness and Corruption.

And now, my Lords, give me leave to add, That tho' the private manner in which these Charities were performed, has made it necessary for us to enter into a particular Account, and an Account that takes in some of them only; yet the noble Earl has a Merit to plead, of which I am sure there is no Occasion to call a Witness. Your Lordships all remember the Time when he presided in the Queen's Bench, and saw (unmoved) the Tide of Preferment rolling towards a distant Shore. The true Interest of his Country in the present Royal Family was then his steady Pursuit, and his Merit consisted in advancing it to the utmost; and his Majesty, who was best able to judge of the Greatness of his Services, thought they deserved a Reward proportioned to the most exalted Merit, and therefore added him to your Lordships Body.

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, I beg leave that I may have the liberty to lay before your Lordships some Observations on the several Parts of the Evidence given on both Sides.

Your Lordships will easily imagine, that a Charge of this Nature must have affected me very much, and the great Fatigue I have undergone hath not allow'd me the liberty to consider every Part so as to make the proper Reflections fit to lay before your Lordships.

I hope your Lordships will give me a little Time to recollect my Thoughts, that I may speak in such a manner as is fitting to your Lordships. I desire your Lordships will give me leave to make my Observations on Monday next.

Then the Managers and the Counsel withdrew; and the House adjourned to Monday Morning next, the seventeenth Day of May.

Monday the seventeenth of May, 1725.

The Eighth Day.

THE Lords being seated in their House, the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, as also the other Proclamation, that all Persons concerned were to take Notice, that Thomas Earl of Macclesfield now stood upon his Trial, and they might come forth in Order to make good the Charge.

Lord Ch. Just. King. Mr. Serjeant Probyn, you may proceed.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I am humbly to ask your Lordships Pardon for some Omissions we have made in the Evidence we were instructed to lay before your Lordships in Behalf of the noble Lord impeached the last Day we had the Honour to attend your Lordships upon this Occasion: We had some Witnesses to offer more than were examined at that Time, and we hope your Lordships Indulgence will continue to hear them now; they are but very few, but yet such as we apprehend are extremely material to the noble Lord's Defence. The last Evidence we laid before your Lordships related to several Charities given by the noble Earl, in order to shew that he was not of that avaricious Temper as hath been represented in Support of this Prosecution; and that the constant habitual Course of his Life and Actions hath been directly contrary to any Disposition of this Kind; but we apprehend it would still have greatly added to the Weight of this Evidence, had it at the same Time appeared to your Lordships what the Funds were, out of which these Charities arose; that the real Estate which this noble Lord hath purchas'd, does not amount to more than 3000 l. a Year, and that his personal Estate scarce exceeds 2000 l. When we have shewn this, it must satisfy your Lordships, that the noble Earl hath been much more charitable than, according to his Circumstances, he could afford. There is another thing I beg leave to take notice of, to obviate an Objection I am apprehensive we shall hear of from the other Side; and that is, that these Charities were not given by the noble Lord out of his own Pocket, in regard there is a Sum of Money called Box-Money, which is laid out and distributed in private Charities by the Chancellor every Year. But to explain any Suggestion of this Kind, we shall shew that this Box-Money, though anciently used to be considerable, yet of late Years it hath not amounted to more than 172 l. a Year: And as there have been always particular Objects of Charity recommended to this Bounty, so this Money hath been apply'd by his Lordship in the same manner it usually was apply'd by his Predecessors; and that no Part of this Money ever went in any of those several Charities, we have already given your Lordships an account of.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we beg Leave, on the Behalf of the Managers, to offer to your Lordships Consideration, some Reasons why they ought not to be permitted, at this time, to go into the Evidence offered, after the Indulgence of many Days, and Defence made on the Articles, and the Evidence summ'd up by the Counsel for the Lord impeach'd; and a Day is only given to hear the Lord himself, at his own Desire, to sum up or defend himself against the Charge against him; they ought not now to be allow'd to enter into a new Defence, or to give new Evidence. It is a new Method of Practice, after the Conclusion of the Counsel upon the whole Evidence, to say they have more Evidence to some of the Facts. My Lords, I don't know any thing of that Nature ever allowed, especially after the Examination closed, and an Adjournment for a Day or two. Besides, as to that Part of the new Evidence which the Counsel have opened, relating to the particular Estate and Circumstances of this Earl, how can the Managers be provided to give an Answer to it? There is nothing in the Articles leading thereto; they do not charge him with having a great and large Estate, though that hath been formerly a proper Article in an Impeachment. But it is not made one in this Case; the Charge of the Commons is confined to particular Sums received. If the Managers had gone into the Enquiry of any other Sum, at least without particular Notice to him, I believe it would have been objected against by the impeached Earl. Therefore to go into this sort of Evidence, where there is no Charge by the Commons, is putting the Commons to answer what is not in Question, which if they do, must lengthen out the Trial unnecessarily. If the Circumstances of his Estate be material, there must then be a further Time given to contradict their Proof, which possibly may be done as to his real Estate: But as to his personal Estate, how is it possible for any Man to give an Account of that? Doth not this lie in his own Knowledge entirely? No body can open his Chests or Cabinets at home: So that it is impossible we should know any more of it than what serves his Purposes. Therefore, my Lords, we submit it, Whether they shall be permitted to go into this sort of Evidence? or, whether your Lordships will enter into any farther Examination?

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we think it is of great Consequence to your Lordships, when an Evidence hath been so full, and with so great Patience heard to every particular Article; when that Evidence hath been summed up, and enforced by Counsel, and every particular of the Articles animadverted upon; we think there is no Precedent in any Court of Justice, where new Witnesses have, in such a Case, been permitted to be examined. Witnesses here have been produced; there hath been an Interruption of two or three Days for the noble Lord, at his own Desire, to make his Observations on the Evidence; to offer now to produce Witnesses that they had omitted to produce before, is perfectly new and unusual. I suppose they had these Witnesses in their Briefs, and, if they had thought fit, they might have called them. I know of no Instance of the like in any Court of Justice; if the Gentlemen of the other Side will tell us the Precedent, they may. I think it is of dangerous Consequence, not only in this Case, but in all other Proceedings in Courts of Justice. If your Lordships think fit to let them into one or two Witnesses, I do not know why your Lordships, with equal Reason, may not let them go over another Course of Evidence.

My Lords, as to the other Matter about this noble Lord's Estate, that is not a Matter insisted upon by any Evidence that we have given; and I submit it, Whether it is proper, or any way conducive in this Case, to any thing that is material for your Lordships Judgment in this Matter, for this Reason, because if it was material, it is impossible for us to know the Truth of it. We have no Right to examine this noble Lord upon Interrogatories as to his Estate, especially as to his personal Estate; a Man may in these Days have the Opportunity of being worth 100,000 l. and People not know where it lies; as to his real Estate, it might be known if it was material; but we submit it, Whether it is incumbent upon us to enquire, at this time of Day, into the noble Lord's Estate?

It is impossible, in the Nature of the Thing, that your Lordships should have that satisfactory Account, or that we should have such Notice of it as is proper to make any Defence of it to us material; but we submit it, that it is not material at all; and therefore we hope your Lordships will keep to the Rule kept in all Cases in all other Courts of Justice, where People have made their full Defence, or else there would be no End of Things.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, we did not lay to the Charge of this Earl, that he was possessed of a great Estate; we have only laid to his Charge what he hath unjustly possessed, we have only charged him with Matters of Fact, which we think we have made out; and therefore hope your Lordships will oblige him to answer to that, and to that only, and not to go to another Thing we have not charged.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we apprehend it is is frequently practised, that where Counsel have omitted material Evidence, even after Summing up, the constant Indulgence of the Courts below lets them go into Evidence to supply that Omission.

We take it to be our own Fault. We had in our Instructions, and it is in your Lordships Breast, whether we shall not supply that Omission, we shall not run into a long Evidence, our Witnesses are but two or three.

Dr. Sayer. My Lords, I beg leave to think, that as we point out a particular Fact, distinct from any we have examined to before, there can be no Apprehension of any Danger at all; and if, as the Gentlemen have inform'd your Lordships, it is what is usual in Courts below, that such Omissions have been always permitted to be supply'd, your Lordships sure will act with equal Equity in this Case. What we undertake to prove is the Circumstance of his Estate; and though the Gentlemen of the House of Commons did not make it a Matter of Charge in their Articles, yet in his Answer the noble Earl takes Notice of it, and it will shew that the Earl had not his Heart so intent upon Gain, when it shall appear that his Fortune is so much less than the World might have imagined it to be, and when at the same Time we shew his Generosity, and that by means thereof his Estate was much lessen'd and check'd.

I would take Notice of the other Matter, with regard to the Evidence of the Charity: It is only to explain and prevent a Mistake, lest it should be imagined that these several Instances of Charity were out of the Box-Money, or Fund for Charity in the Court of Chancery. But, I believe, we need not trouble your Lordships with this, for that the Noble Earl is so well satisfied with the Integrity and Honour of the learned Managers of the House of Commons, that he is under no apprehension to have that turn'd upon him. The principal Matter is relating to his Estate.

As we have in great Measure left it to the Earl himself to sum up the several Evidences, and have done but little ourselves, the Objection of the Evidence being closed and summed up is not so strong as in other Cases; we submit it, whether your Lordships will not indulge us so far as to produce a Witness or two to this Matter.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, we do not ask this as a Matter of Right, but as a Matter of Indulgence. I own the Rule that the Gentlemen of the House of Commons have laid down is a general Rule for the Government of Evidence.

We can't controvert that, but I believe it will not be controverted on the other side, that such a piece of Indulgence was hardly ever denied, and we hope your Lordships will not deny it upon this Occasion.

Earl of Macclesfield. My Lords, I don't apprehend that this is a thing so very extraordinary, or so dangerous, as hath been represented. It would be extremely severe, if, in a Cause of so great Length, and so much Fatigue, I should have Witnesses ready to give your Lordships an Account of some Facts material for my Defence; and my Counsel happening not to call them, although they were attending, and there should be a certain Form that should exclude me from having the Benefit of their Evidence; I don't know what this is founded upon, I never heard of such a Form or Rule.

There is no Instance that where Counsel hath been summing up the Evidence, and, before the other Side have replied, an Omission hath been discovered, that that Omission hath not been allow'd to be supplied. And,

I appeal to my Lords the Judges, Whether they have ever known this piece of Indulgence denied upon any Trial whatsoever in the Courts below. My Lords, with great Submission, the Evidence is not yet finished; I am sorry I must yet give your Lordships the Trouble of observing a good many Things that have been hitherto omitted: This is a Matter the Counsel had Directions about, the Witnesses were attending, but they were omitted to be called for; I hope your Lordships will not, for such a Mistake, exclude me the Benefit of their Testimony: Had it been calling fresh Evidence to any Matter that hath been examined to before, there might possibly be some Grounds for an Objection of this kind; but I mean only to call one or two Witnesses to fresh Matter, that hath not been enquired into before. There hath yet been no Witness examined as to the Box-Money, or my real or personal Estate; and yet those two Things are material, and it may greatly turn to my Prejudice if I have not the Liberty of producing this Evidence in relation to them.

It hath been represented that I have an Estate vastly more considerable than in Truth I have; and this Matter of the Box-money, as I have been informed, gave Birth to a Report abroad, as if what I gave for Charity was out of that Fund.

As to this latter, I dare trust the Candour of these Gentlemen, that they do not believe it; and if they do not insist that what I gave was out of the Box-Money, it will be needless for me to prove that it was not. But as to the other Matter, I hope I shall not be precluded from having those Witnesses examined, because it was before omitted; wherefore I humbly beg your Lordships Directions thereupon, whether I shall be at Liberty to lay their Evidence before your Lordships or not.

Mr. Onslow. I would beg leave to set your Lordships right as to that of the Box-Money. The Noble Lord insinuates as if something of that had been mentioned by the Managers; nothing hath been mentioned of it, either by the Evidence or by the Managers.

Earl of Macclesfield. No, I beg leave to explain myself; I did not say the Managers had insisted upon it, but only said it is a Matter that I have heard without Doors; but I believe I may rely upon their Candour that they will not make it an Objection now, in Case they oppose my giving Evidence to the contrary.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I am a little surprized, why the Noble Lord mentions this of the Box-Money, when not one single Word hath been said of it, either by the Evidence or by the Managers: Why then should this Noble Lord himself mention it? And why should he call Evidence to a Thing that hath no manner of relation to any Thing that hath been said? If his Lordship will please to give us leave to reply; if we then say any Thing of it, he may then give an Answer to it; but it is improper now to be giving an Answer to an Objection that was never made, and to which the Evidence hath not said one Word.

Lord Steward. If the Noble Lord thinks this a Point to be insisted on, it is then necessary for all to withdraw.

Order'd to withdraw, which was done; and being afterwards called in again,

Lord Chief Justice King. Mr. Serj. Probyn, it is the Opinion of their Lordships, that the Evidence offered by the Earl of Macclesfield, with respect to the further Account of his Charity, be not now admitted; and they are likewise further of Opinion, that the Earl of Macclesfield be not now permitted to give Evidence of the Value of his Estate, either real or personal.

Earl of Macclesfield. My Lords, your Lordships were pleas'd to indulge me to this Day to lay before your Lordships what I had to say in my Defence, against the Charge brought against me by the Commons, and against the Proof supporting that Charge, which your Lordships with so much Patience heard. From the Time your Lordships were pleas'd to allow me this liberty till now, I have applied myself with the utmost Diligence to prepare my self for my Defence.

To this End it hath been necessary to look over the Notes, taken of the Evidence given on both sides, and likewise of what was said by those Gentlemen who are Managers for the House of Commons. I find it very necessary to lay before your Lordships many Observations on the Evidence, which depend upon an exact comparing of them together. It being a matter that hath taken up so much Time, and there being such a Distance between the Evidence given on the one side and the other, I have been employ'd wholly from the last Time till now in the Consideration of it; and I can say with Truth, I have not slept five Hours these two Nights, and yet I have not been able to get through it, and I am not now prepared to lay before your Lordships what I have humbly to offer for my Defence; there are many Things exceeding material to be submitted, and I beg therefore, that your Lordships will indulge me a farther Time, so that I may be able to do it in such a manner, as may set the Evidence and Observations upon it in such a light as your Lordships may pass a proper Judgment. I don't do this out of Delay; I believe your Lordships will easily imagine I should be glad to have this matter over, whatsoever the Event may be, for I am quite spent, and my Strength and Spirits wasted with the Fatigue I have already undergone. My Lords, I have been so far from any Delay in the Course of this Prosecution, that when I put in my Answer, as your Lordships were informed by one of the Gentlemen of my Counsel, tho' it was not finish'd till between three and four a-Clock in the Morning, yet I chose to get it ingross'd, and put in the same Day, rather than there should be the least Appearance of any Delay on my Part; and I do not know whether by endeavouring so very much to dispatch this Work, I have not rendered myself unfit and unable to go on with it: Human Nature can hardly bear what I have gone through.

At my Years, if I should undertake to do it by To-morrow, I am afraid I should sink under the Weight of such a Task, and not be able to come before your Lordships prepared as I ought to be; therefore I hope your Lordships will be pleas'd to allow me till the Day after; the Fatigue

I have already undergone has been very great, and I hope your Lordships will allow me such a Time as you will think competent; the Work I have to do will take up a great many Hours; there hath been Variety of Evidence, I hope your Lordships will indulge me till Wednesday; it is of very great moment to me, and I am sure I should be unwilling to mispend your Lordships Time; and delay this Matter unnecessarily: It really gives me the greatest Uneasiness to find myself in that Condition, that I cannot think of being able to do it sooner; I was before afraid that I should not be able to do it by this Day, but yet resolv'd to do all that was possible for me, and therefore declin'd asking then for any longer Time.

I hope your Lordships will indulge me; if your Lordships knew the Fatigue I have undergone, and the Effect it hath had upon my Health, I am sure in Humanity you would make no Difficulty of granting me farther Time to prepare myself in a proper manner, in a Case that is of so great moment to me; and I hope the Gentlemen of the House of Commons will not be against it; if they should overpress this matter, I don't know but the Fatigue of it may bear so hard upon my life, as to save your Lordships the Trouble of passing any Judgment upon this Occasion.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we don't apprehend the Lord properly applies to us in this Instance.

All Parties were directed to withdraw, which being done.

The House adjourn'd till Wednesday Morning Ten a-Clock, the 19th of May, 1725.

Wednesday, May 19, 1725.

The Ninth Day.

THE Lords being seated in their House, the Serjeant at Arms made the two usual Proclamations, as on the former Days.

L. Ch. Just. King. Mr. Serjeant Probyn, if you please to proceed.

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, I am first to return my most humble Thanks to your Lordships, for the Time you have been pleas'd to indulge me with, for recollecting my Thoughts, and looking over the Evidence that has been offered on either side, during the Course of this tedious Proceeding; that I might be able to put those Observations I have made upon it in such a light, as became one who was to speak in a Case of so great Importance, at your Lordships Bar.

My Lords, I have been under some Misfortunes in this Prosecution; your Lordships must, no Doubt, have observed the Disappointments I have met with, in Questions I asked of some Persons, who appeared as Witnesses in the Course of this Trial, which it was impossible I could have had any Inducement to propose, but from my own Knowledge of the Answers that should have been returned. My Counsel, thro' the great Hurry that usually attends Proceedings of this Nature, happened happened not to be instructed in some Particulars, that were extremely proper to have been laid before your Lordships upon this Occasion: Besides that, the Variety of the Facts, continued to be given in Evidence from one Day to another, has in this particular Case been carried on to such an unusual length, that they have not been able in the end to make themselves so perfect Masters of the Evidence, as the Importance of the Case required.

I should trouble your Lordships with an Apology for my own Inability to supply this at present, both from the extreme Fatigue I have undergone during the whole Course of this Prosecution, and because that my last Illness has broke my Memory to a great Degree. But whatever Difficulties I have laboured under, when I consider your Lordships are my Judges, I cannot doubt but your Candour and Goodness will have a due Regard to them, and make Allowance for the Want of Order or Accuracy in any thing I have to lay before you; and therefore, rather than ask any more Time of your Lordships for preparing myself, I will endeavour to go on now as well as I can.

My Lords, the Charge brought against me is very heavy, as laid in the Articles, and highly exaggerated by the Gentlemen that are appointed Managers by the House of Commons.

That which I think is charged as the Foundation of the whole, is,

My entertaining wicked and corrupt Purposes, to raise and procure to myself excessive and exorbitant Gain and Profit.

This it is that hath made me extorsively and illegally take Money, upon the Admittance of Masters, and Disposal of other Offices.

And the being set upon the Gain arising from the Masters Places, with the Desire to advance it, or keep it up, is represented to be the Source of all the rest of the Things complain'd of, which seem to me to be charged only as Contrivances for that Purpose.

This is such Corruption of Heart, and carries with it such a Malignity, that it makes every Action and every Omission criminal: Every rash Word, every Neglect or Imprudence, nay Things perfectly innocent in their own Nature, or perhaps commendable, are so infected by it, as to deserve the severest Censure and Punishment.

Whether I wait in Expectation of the Application of the Suitors, with Respect to Dormer's Deficiency, or of myself endeavour to get it made good, or even pay my own Money towards it, it is all one, so wicked a Heart corrupts all.

And the Violation of my Oath as Lord Chancellor, and of the great Trust in me reposed, contrary to the Duty of my Office, is made the Aggravation of almost every Article.

I shall endeavour to shew your Lordships, that the several things charged upon me are either not true, or not criminal; or if your Lordships shall judge otherwise of them than I do, yet that they were the Effects, not of Wickedness, but of Mistake; and if I have ever done any thing for the Service of my Country, of the Constitution, of his Majesty, and of the Royal Family, and the present Establishment, and for the Administration of publick Justice, it might not be unsuitable to the unparalleled Goodness of this Reign, for your Lordships to have Compassion upon the Errors, Mistakes, and Weaknesses of the faithful, steady Servant of a Prince, whose Mercy has been so often extended, in so great a Degree, to the highest Crimes of his bitter Enemies.

Before I enter upon my particular Defence, I beg leave to take Notice of something that has been said with Relation to the Answer which I have put in to these Articles of Impeachment, as containing a Plea of a Pardon at the same Time that I insist upon my Innocence; and its not being a full Answer to all the particular Charges in the Articles. As to the first, my insisting on his Majesty's most gracious, general, and free Pardon for all things before the twenty-fourth of July, 1721,

My Lords, I hope, and am myself of Opinion, that I have not done any thing that is criminal, or needs a Pardon;

But when so many Gentlemen of Learning and great Parts, undertake to make out, that That is a Crime which I thought and still think not so; should I opiniatre to that Degree, and be so confident that your Lordships will be of my Opinion, as to refuse the Benefit of a Pardon, which his Majesty has so graciously granted to all his Subjects?

When little Imprudences, and so many Omissions, and even idle Words, loose Talk, and unguarded Expressions, are laid to my Charge as Crimes, and made the subject Matter of an Impeachment; and some of them charged without mention of any Time, or the Name of the Cause in which it is pretended they were spoke, or any other Circumstances by which I might be enabled, either myself to recollect or to make Enquiry of others, in order to prepare for my Defence; it had been Folly in me not to have taken Advantage of the Pardon.

And as for the Reflexion intended, to expose the Absurdity of pleading Innocence and a Pardon to the same Offence; what is more consistent than to say, I ought not to be punished, because the Fact charged is no Offence, or if it be one it is pardoned? But had the Gentleman who made it, been pleased to have read the last Act of Grace carefully through, he would have found that it expressly provides, that the Pardon shall support the Plea of Innocence, and upon Not guilty pleaded, the Act may be given in Evidence to prove the Person not guilty. And, in the Notion of our Law, it wipes away whatever Guilt there was, and leaves the Person innocent, that is, as a very great Lawyer and a very wise Man expresses it, it takes away not only poenam but reatum, the Guilt as well as the Punishment.

As to the Reflexion made upon my Answer in another respect, as if it were not full and direct, and that in Chancery, the Court where I had presided, it would be held an insufficient Answer; Probably it might be so; but that is, because that a Plaintiff there has a Right to require a Discovery of all such Facts as are material for his Advantage, upon the Oath of the Defendant. And therefore the Answer is not only the Party's own Defence, but it is to supply the Plaintiff with Evidence, who therefore may except to it as insufficient, so far as it is short of answering to, and giving ving an Account of all, of every minute Circumstance that he charges.

But do they imagine that to be the Case in a criminal Prosecution? or that the Defendant there is obliged to furnish Evidence, or to confess any thing that may tend to affect or charge himself? No, my Lords; the Answer there is only for the Defence of the Person accused: And Not guilty is a full Answer.

And my Lords, I insist upon it, I have given a full Answer to all the Articles at the end of my Answer, where I have pleaded the general Issue, and in express Words said, That I am not guilty of all or any the Matters contained in the Articles, or any of them, in manner and form as they are therein charged against me; which is of itself a direct and full Answer, without more.

And tho' I have set forth other Facts, it is only where I have thought some things might be farther explained. But there is no need to make any Proof of a Word in my Answer, if the Charge in the Articles is not supported by the Evidence given against me.

And I still hope your Lordships will be of Opinion, that tho' some of the Matters mentioned in the Articles are proved, and indeed some are expressly admitted by me, and others never disputed; yet that none of them is admitted or proved in such manner as it is charged in the Articles.

Having said thus much, I proceed to consider what has been offered in Proof against me.

My Lords, the Preamble of the Articles is intended for an Aggravation of my Crimes, by shewing what Oath I had taken, which I had violated; and what Favours I had received from his Majesty, and was not satisfied with them.

As to the last, give me leave to say, that I can never express the Sense of my Heart for his Majesty's Favours and Bounties, and that it ought to be a high Aggravation, if I have abused them.

I pretend to no Merit, but that of a Heart full of Duty and Zeal for his Service; but his Royal Grace and Goodness has exceeded, not only my poor Services, but even my Desires and Wishes.

And whatever becomes of me, in whatever State of Life I am, my Gratitude and Duty shall never abate.

As to the Violation of my Oath, no such Crime is made out against me.

The Oath of Office taken by the Chancellor when he enters upon that Office, has no relation to what is laid to my Charge: I have set it forth verbatim in my Answer, and no Argument has been attempted to be drawn from it.

But it was said the other Day, that I had taken an Oath upon the Statute of the twelfth of Richard II. which I had forgot, both in my Answer and in my Conduct.

As to my Answer, I beg leave to observe, that the Answer is suited to the Charge. I am not charged in the Articles to have ever taken any Oath upon that Statute, nor is the Oath supposed to be taken on the third of November at all mentioned.

The Words of the Preamble, which is the only Part of the Articles that mentions my taking any Oath, are these:

“ And whereas Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, in “ or about the Month of May, in the Year of “ our Lord 1718, by the Grace and Favour of his “ Most Excellent Majesty, was constituted and “ appointed Lord Chancellor of Great Britain,

“ and did thereupon take the usual Oath for the due “ Execution of that High Office, whereby he did “ swear well and truly to serve our Sovereign
“ Lord the King and his People, poor and rich, “ after the Laws and Usages of the Realm, and “ such other Oaths as have been accustomed; and the “ said Earl continued in this great Office,” &c.

Where the other Oaths accustomed, as well as that particularly described, are confined to what I did thereupon take, that is, upon my being made Chancellor in May 1718. At least to my poor Understanding it appeared so. Nor did I at all imagine, that it referred to what was done the third of November after, which was but the same as had been done the third of November before.

And accordingly my Answer is confined to the same Time that I was sworn Lord Chancellor before his Majesty in Council, the fourteenth of May 1718, when I took the Oath of Office set forth in the Answer; and at the same time took the Oath of Allegiance and Supremacy. And there is no Pretence that I took any Oath upon the Statute of Richard II. at that Time.

The Words of the Answer are,

“ That in the beginning of May, in the Year “ 1718, he the said Earl was, by his Majesty's “ great Grace and Favour, appointed Lord Chan“ cellor of Great Britain, and was sworn before “ his Majesty in Council the fourteenth Day of “ that Month; when the following Oath, be“ ing the usual Oath of Lord Chancellor, was “ administered to him, viz. you shall swear, &c.
“ And the said Earl, at the same Time, took the “ Oath of Allegiance and Supremacy, but no
“ Oath of Office besides that above set forth.

My Answer therefore plainly relates to what was charged, and my taking no Notice of any Oath upon this Statute, ought not to be imputed to Forgetfulness, but to its not being charged. It is not charged, and therefore not answered to.

But it is now insisted upon, and great Stress laid upon it, that at the naming of Sheriffs, which is done in the Exchequer upon the third of November every Year, I took an Oath upon the Statute of 12 Richard II. which extends to the Disposal of the Office of Masters in Chancery.

To judge of the Truth of this new Charge, your Lordships will be pleased to consider what it is that is yearly done the third of November, upon that Occasion of naming of Sheriffs.

The Managers were not pleased to open what passes every Year upon the Nomination of Sheriffs, which had been proper before they called the Witnesses to prove it; if they had, it might have saved me the Trouble of asking any Questions.

But the Examination, and the Testimony of a Witness that spoke indistinctly and low, tended, as I thought, to have the Statute entered in the old Book of the Exchequer in obsolete French, and so ill read as hardly to be understood, to pass for the Form of an Oath then administer'd administer'd upon the Statute which had been just before read in English to your Lordships at the Table; and so it might be taken to be an Oath conceived in the Words of the Statute, extending to all Nominations of Officers, and to all Times, and not confined to that Occasion.

I did therefore ask some Questions, not to quibble away an Oath, as one of the Managers was pleas'd to express it, but to have the Matter laid before your Lordships in its true Light, and which came out to be thus.

The Lords of the Privy-Council and the Judges, being assembled for naming Sheriffs for the following Year, at the Time and Place appointed for that Purpose, the Act of Parliament of 12 Richard II. is read, directing several Persons to be sworn, concerning their naming of Sheriffs, and of some other Officers specify'd in the Act, and with general Words extending to more; then an Officer gives a Bible to every one of the Privy-Counsellors and Judges present, who all, one after another, kiss it; but nothing is said to them by the Officer or any one else, nor are any Words spoken by them.

I know it has been much doubted how this could be called Swearing, or taking an Oath.

But that is not at all what I insist upon.

There being something sacred in the Ceremony, I agree the Action should be consider'd as a solemn Undertaking in Nature of an Oath, to observe that Statute in the Business we were then entering upon; and so it is an Engagement to proceed then to name Sheriffs according to the Direction in that Statute.

And accordingly this is repeated every Year upon the like Occasion, though the Persons are the same, and has been so by me for seven Years together, before I was Chancellor, and for as many since.

But to extend this farther than that Occasion, is, I humbly insist upon it, going beyond what the Action then done imports.

The Statute plainly relates to Nominations or Elections, where Numbers of Persons are called together to name Officers; the very reading the Statute shews it, and when I come to speak of the Construction of that Act of Parliament, it will be yet more plain.

And when it provides, "That the Chancellor, Treasurer, Keeper of the Privy Seal, Steward of the King's House, Chamberlain of the King, Clerk of the Rolls, Justices of the one Bench and of the other, Barons of the Exchequer, and all others, who shall be called to ordain, name, or make Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, Escheators, Customers, Comptrollers, or any other Officer or Minister of the King shall be firmly sworn, &c." I take it to mean that they shall be sworn when they are so called together, and met. And the Practice is accordingly.

There are some old Statutes that say, that the Chancellor with the Council shall appoint Justices of the Peace, the Treasurer with some others shall name Customers, &c. But the Usage at this Time is, (and it has been so for some Hundreds of Years) that the naming of Justices of the Peace, is in Fact in the Chancellor only; of Customers and Comptrollers, in the Treasurer; and many of the Persons named in the Statute meddle not with naming any of the Officers comprized within either the particular or general Words.

If therefore, my Lords, the Bishops were desired to draw up a Form of an Oath to be taken upon this Statute by all the Persons attending on the third of November for the Naming of Sheriffs, I presume they would confine the Oath to the particular Occasion.

I submit to their Consideration, whether they would draw it up so, that every one present should swear that he would observe this Statute, or not go contrary to this Statute, in the Nomination of Officers which he has not any Right or Power to name, nor is ever called to name: Whether they would frame such an Oath, whereby the Judges should swear that they would not name Justices of the Peace, Escheators, Customers, or Comptrollers, for Gift or Brocage, Favour or Affection, when they cannot name them at all, either by Provision of Law or by Usage.

I apprehend this would be an improper, if not a vain Oath.

And a constructive taking of an Oath, which is all that can be insisted upon here, ought not to be carried farther than would be proper to express in Words at length.

And therefore, as all the Persons assisting there certainly take the same Oath, and many of them have nothing to do with the Choice, or naming of any of the other Officers in the Act besides Sheriffs; and as this Action yearly repeated on this particular Occasion, shews it to be intended to relate only to Sheriffs; I have always thought that it went no farther than to oblige me; that in the Affair, which we were then entering upon, I should act according to that Statute.

And I am persuaded, that in this Case, I have the universal Concurrence of the Judgments of others. For I do not believe that ever any Person that assisted on that Occasion, had the least Apprehension of his then taking an Oath, which related to any thing but that particular Occasion.

But if they all did take an Oath so extensive as to reach to the Disposal of all other Employments, (which is the Sense wherein I believe the Managers would have the Words of the Act to be understood,) God knows in what Guilt many of them have involved themselves.

It is a Part of the Statute, and Part of that to which the Persons called to name Officers are directed to be sworn, That none who sues by himself; or by any other, in private, or openly, to be in any manner of Office, shall be put into the same Office, or any other.

Will these Gentlemen urge that every Lord Treasurer, Lord Commissioner of the Treasury, or other Lords in great Employments, that give Places, or name Persons for Places to the King, and have once attended at the naming of Sheriffs, have been guilty of a Violation of this Oath, in every Instance, where they have named any Person to any Office, who, by himself, or his Friends, ever asked for the Place given, or for any other?

I can-

I cannot imagine that they will attempt to carry it so far. But if they do, I will yet presume, that your Lordships will not, by such a new Construction, condemn so many Persons that are innocent, or thought themselves so.

Hence I think myself not to have taken any Oath upon the Statute of 12 Ric. II. which any way extends to Masters in Chancery; and I hope your Lordships will think so too.

What is the particular Meaning of this Act, and what Arguments may be drawn from the Provision therein, I shall not trouble your Lordships with at present, but shall reserve the Consideration of it for another Place: But as to the Charge of violating an Oath founded upon it, let the Observations I have made, from the Frame of the Act and the Nature of the Action at present suffice.

The subject matter of the first Articles, as they stand in Order, and which I believe has given rise to this Prosecution, is the taking Money for the Places of Masters in Chancery; long practised without Blame, though made my great Crime.

What has been urged from the Nature of the Office, the Oath which the Masters take, and the Commissions granted to them, together with the Master of the Rolls and the Judges to hear Causes in the Absence of the Chancellor, will not have any Weight in the Question, whether it be criminal to take Money on admitting them.

I beg leave to say, that the Office anciently was quite different from what it is now, so that it is in a manner forgot what it originally was. One Branch of their Office anciently, and then reckoned of Importance, was the framing Writs, which are now made out by the Curfitors; and that which is their greatest Business now, there appear no Footsteps of being done by them, or any others anciently.

Their Business now is chiefly preparatory to the Determination of the Court of Chancery upon References made to them by the Court, in order to their stating Things to the Satisfaction of the Parties; or reducing the Dispute to some few Heads, in which they differ, for the easier Determination of the Court.

And that which they are most generally employed in thus, is matter of Accompts.

Very frequently the Parties, after having had the Items examined and proved, agree before the Master the whole Accompt, and almost always the greatest part of it. And if the Parties are dissatisfied, they are at Liberty, by Objections in Writing which are called Exceptions, to state to the Court the distinct Items which they dispute, by which means the Court is eased of the Consideration of all the rest of the Items of the Accompt. And the Master makes no judicial Determination; but when he makes his Report has only done the Drudgery of an Accomptant, compared Vouchers, heard Objections, convinced the Parties as far as he could, and then stated the whole Accompt so as he thinks is right; which at last has its Force, not from him but from the Court, which confirms it if not disputed, or examines the disputed Points if desired.

Upon References to them whether Answers are sufficient, they are to compare the Words of the Answer with the Words of the Bill, and state whether they find them full: And if the Parties do not acquiesce in the Master's Opinion, the Court takes the Trouble to make the Comparison.

They are likewise Cashiers, not of the Court but of the Suitors, and always at their Prayer.

And the Parties have this Advantage in having the Masters for their Cashiers, that they have a ready Method to compel Payment by Order of the Court, and a Commitment of the Person or Sequestration, (that is seising all their Estates and Effects,) or both, upon such Order, in a short and cheap way; whereas against other Cashiers they must be put to the Charge and Delay of a tedious Suit, if the Money be not paid.

And other Officers, whose Places are allowed to be sold, do the same Things, make Reports to state Facts on References, are Cashiers of the Money brought in, and tax Costs, which is another thing the Masters do.

As to the Oath; it is the old Oath, before the Office was so greatly changed; what Advice to be given to the King it refers to, will be hard I believe to explain, and has not been attempted; but if the Writs requiring their Attendance here were looked into, possibly it may be thought, that anciently they attended your Lordships in a manner different from what they now do, and have done from before the Time of our Memory.

And as to the Commission to hear Causes in Absence of the Chancellor, that makes no more Variation in the Nature of their Office, than it doth in the Office of Clerk of Assize, (expressly allowed in the Statute of Edw. VI. to be disposed for Money) that the Clerk of Assize is constantly joined with the Judges in the Commissions of Oyer and Terminer and Goal Delivery, for the Trial of Criminals, even for capital Crimes.

To proceed therefore to the Points of the Charge.

It is founded singly, upon the taking Money for admitting the Masters into the Office; and the Manner of taking it extorsively, without reference to any want of Qualification in the Party admitted; and therefore cannot be maintained, unless the taking of Money be in all such Cases criminal, or that the Manner of taking or extorting it in these Cases make it so.

Therefore I will first speak to the general Question, whether taking Money upon Occasion of putting in a Master, is in all Cases criminal in itself, or by the Common Law, or made so by any Statute which subjects it to any Judgment or Punishment, ment, which can be prayed in this Prosecution; as I have expressed it in my Answer.

And that which I humbly insist upon as to the first, that is, whether it can be said to be wicked or criminal in itself, or from the Reason and Nature of the Thing, is this:

An Office may be considered in two Respects; First, with Respect to the Duty; that is, the Concern of the Publick; that the Person be duly qualified to discharge his Office well. Secondly, with Respect to the Profit and Advantage; and that is merely private, and concerns the Officer only. And whilst he discharges his Duty well, without Extortion, or other Misbehaviour, the Publick is little concerned in it, whether the Profit be more or less. As in those Offices, which are very numerous and of great Consequence, that may be executed by Deputy; provided the Deputy behave himself well, the Publick has never concerned itself what his Salary or Allowance from his Principal is, whether it be greater or less.

And as the Person who is put into a very beneficial Office, such as one of these, for his Life, has not any antecedent Right to the Office, and therefore not to the Profits arising thereby; and he that prefers him is not bound to give it him; therefore when he puts him into it, he in effect grants him all the Profits of the Office for his Life: And if the Officer make him a Present for it, either unexpected, by way of Thanks after he is put in, or expected, which he had told him of before, or give it at the Time, or before that he is admitted; I see not any Immorality either in the Giver or Taker. It is Money given for Profits to be received during Life.

The Publick is concerned only in the Goodness of the Officer, not how advantageous to him the Grant of the Office is, nor in the Inducement which he that appointed him had to put him in; whether Friendship, Acquaintance, Relation, Importunity, great Recommendation, or a Present.

I agree, that a Person taking a Present and putting in an unfit Person, when he knew him to be so, or had just Ground to believe him so, is criminal: Not because he has taken a Present, but because he has prejudiced the Publick knowingly: It may be an Aggravation, that he had taken Money; but the Crime is, the Wrong done to the Publick in the Person advanced. It had been the same Crime, had he done it for the sake of Kindred, or Friendship, or for Recommendation, or any other Reason.

But if a Person very well qualified be placed in an Office, and the Publick has all the Advantage from him that it can have from an Officer in that Post, and so I who placed him, have well discharged my Duty to the Publick; is it material how well I loved him, how nearly he is related, who it was that persuaded me to prefer him, or what he gave me on that Account, whether before, or after he was put in? Will any of these Circumstances make me criminal in an Action by which I served the Publick well? If the Publick have all the Benefit it can have, where is the Immorality? where is the Crime, if I have an Advantage too? especially if Usage has in some sort annexed that Advantage to my Office, which is taken from his?

Obj. I know it may be objected with great Appearance of Reason, that this Practice is dangerous, it leads to Inconveniencies, it is a Temptation to him that disposes of Places to make ill Officers, and a Temptation to the Officers to extort Money and abuse the Subjects, in order to get up their Money again.

Ans. But is it therefore a Crime, where the Temptation is resisted, and a very good Officer is put in, and he behaves himself perfectly well?

The Point of the Charge now under Consideration rests singly on this, that I took Money for admitting Mr. Francis Elde (for instance); and tho' taking Money is a dangerous Practice, and may be a Temptation to let in an ill Man, is it therefore a Crime to put in Francis Elde, who is not allowed to be an ill Man or any way unfit, and is really an excellent Master?

This Argument concludes, only that the allowing it to be generally practised is inconvenient, and may in the Deliberations of the Legislature be properly used to prove it fit to be restrained by a Law: But is not of force, in a Court of Justice, to prove it to be a Crime in every instance, because it may occasion a Crime in some.

Farther, as to the Matter of Temptation to put in one unfit:

The Liberty of preferring Relations to Offices is a Temptation to put in Persons unfit; and, without doubt, has often prevailed. Supposing therefore it might be proper matter of Deliberation in the Legislature, how far a Restraint should be put upon it; yet, in the mean time, is advancing a Relation to an Office, which he is fit for, a Crime, because in other Instances it has occasioned a Crime, or may do so, or is a Temptation to it? And would it be a sufficient Charge of a high Crime against me, to say that I illegally and corruptly put into such an Office A. B. my Son or my Brother? I apprehend not.

Till a Restraint is laid, the Thing may be innocently done.

If a Restraint be laid, the Law will operate upon it, so far as the Restraint extends; but farther than that, and the Consequences declared to ensue thereupon, it will remain as before.

Considering this therefore in itself, and upon the Reason of the Thing, where is the Force of the Argument? You took 5000*l.* for putting in Mr. Elde or Mr. Thurston, a very fit Person and an excellent Master, and therefore you are criminal, because some body else at another Time may put in another Master not fit, upon his giving a Present.

If this then be not criminal in itself, how do they prove it to be so by the Common Law?

The only Case they have instanced as any Authority for that Purpose, is that of Stockwith and North in Moor's Reports.

But here give me leave to say, that it was proper and just for the learned Managers to produce, in making out their Charge, all their Arguments on this Head of the Illegality of this Practice, that there might be a proper Opportunity of weighing them, and giving them a satisfactory Answer (if it could be done) at this Time of my Defence, and I presume they have done so. But if they should think fit to reserve any fresh Argument for their Reply, which we shall apprehend may want an Answer, your Lordships will, in that Case, give me leave to insist upon a Right of taking proper Notice of it afterwards, and not let them reap any Benefit by lying by, in such an unprecedented manner, and expecting your Lordships Judgment, without hearing the other Side upon it.

The only Case, I say, which they have instanced in, is the Case of Stockwith and North in Moor's Reports 781. I have looked upon the Case as it is in that Book, and it appears to be thus :

“ North was fined in the Star-Chamber, for that he, being Sheriff of Nottingham in the 43d Year of Queen Elizabeth, took Money for the Goalership and Bailiwick for that Year ; he gave them first to his Servants, who sold them, but he himself received the Money. And this was adjudged to be letting to Farm of his County, contrary to the Statute of 4 Hen. IV. cap. 5. Yet there note, that the Statute itself gives a Penalty certain and pecuniary, and is malum prohibitum, non in se. But the Court took it, that in as much as Corruption follows upon the Covetousness of Officers, and they are forced thereto by the Prices which they give for Things which ought not to be sold ; that this putting to Farm and selling of Offices, is malum in se, and finable”.

It appears here, that this was a Prosecution upon the Statute of 4 Hen. IV. for the Point adjudged was, that this was contrary to that Statute, and therefore whether what was done, was against the Common Law, or malum in se, or not, was not at all in Judgment before the Court.

And the mention of that is introduced as spoke to remove a Doubt, how North came to be fined, when a particular Penalty is (as it is there said) given by the Act of Parliament.

But that is a gross Mistake in the Reporter ; the Act of Parliament is very short, I desire it may be read.

It was read, as follows :

“ Stat. 4. Hen. IV. cap. 5. Every Sheriff shall abide in proper Person in his Bailiwick for the Time that he shall be such Officer, and that he shall not let the Bailiwick to farm to any Man, for the Time he occupieth such Office ; and that the said Sheriff be sworn from time to time to do the same in especial, amongst other Articles comprized in the Oath of Sheriff.”

Your Lordships observe, that there is in this Act only a prohibitory Clause against the disposal of such Bailiwick, but no pecuniary or other particular Penalty of any kind, inflicted by that Statute : So that it could not be a question whether a Fine was proper, as that Reporter supposes.

The Exactness of the Report therefore is not to be rely'd upon, and what other Mistakes may be in it, I know not. Indeed it is a posthumous Work, uncorrect Notes taken for his own use, and not intended to be published.

But however, taking it for Truth, that some of the Judges did speak to the effect in that Report : It is a common Observation, that when Judges are proceeding in the Case of a plain and express Law, Words used by them that tend to discountenance and farther expose the Crime then censured, are of no great Authority.

The very same thing is done in Lord Chief Justice Coke's 12th Report, with respect to turning arable Land into Pasture ; against which there was then an Act of Parliament in being ; and farther to discountenance it, it is there said to be malum in se.

And in many Places, Usury is said to be malum in se, and with greater Colour ; and yet I believe a Prosecution for it, would scarce be thought maintainable, farther than the Act of Parliament will justify it.

But as to this particular Matter of a Sheriff letting his Bailiwick to farm, before it was specially restrained by Acts of Parliament for that Purpose, there are many Footsteps of its being an ancient and allowed Practice.

The Stat. de attinētis, Rast. Sheriffs 5. containing several Provisions about Sheriffs, directs, that that Statute shall extend as well to those which were Sheriffs and other Ministers, that let to lease their Bailiwicks as to Sheriffs and other Ministers which hold their Bailiwicks themselves.”

Where the Sheriffs holding their Bailiwicks themselves, or letting them to Lease, which is letting them to Farm, is spoken of as perfectly indifferent.

Nor is the Expression supposed to be used in Moor, pretended to be built on any precedent Authority or Fact, but is barely the Reasoning of whoever he was that used it, from the Temptation to which Officers that pay Money are exposed ; and how just it is, I submit upon what I have laid before your Lordships on that Subject. Tho' the Danger from that Temptation is much greater in the Case of Bailiffs and Sheriffs that have only ignorant People to deal with in remote Parts in the Country, where it is difficult and chargeable to obtain Redress, than in the Case of Masters in Chancery, that act under the View almost of a Court of Justice, and where Persons wronged have an easy Opportunity every Day to obtain Redress.

So that this loose Expression mentioned by Moor, (coupled too with a gross Mistake) not at all to the Point of Judgment, is of very little force to prove the Case to which it is applied to be against the Common Law, and of less to prove the present Case to be so.

What then is there farther offered ? Do they shew that by the Common Custom of England, which is properly the Common Law of England, the taking Money for Offices has been, from Time to Time, punished, or condemned as criminal ?

No ; it is admitted on the one hand, that there is not one Instance of its having been punished or condemned as criminal, at the Common Law :

And on the other hand, it is notorious, that in fact the greatest Offices have anciently been sold even by the Kings ; and that not in a clandestine manner, but so that the Price, and what it was paid for, have been entered upon Record.

The Instances have some of them been mentioned.

Richard the Son of Alured, in the 5th of King Stephen, was to pay fifteen Marks that he might sit with Ralph Basset for the Pleas of the King, which Ralph Basset was then Justicier.

And Walter de Grey, in the seventh of King John, gave the King 5000 Marks to have the King's Chancery for his Life, and the Bishop of Norwich engages for the Payment.

I have the Copies of both the Records here in my Hand, if there be any doubt of them.

Nor are our Histories quite silent. In Hollinshed, in the fifth Year of Richard I. (who was one of the intermediate Kings between the two Kings I have named) it appears what was done, almost with the Sanction of Parliament, certainly with their Notice, and not with their Dislike.

“ The King (says the Historian) called a Parliament at Nottingham, and the first day of their Session Gerard de Camville was discharged of the Office of Sheriff of Lincoln, and dispossessed both of the Castle and County. And so was likewise Hugh Bardolf of the County and Castle of York, and of the Castle of Scarborough, and of the Custody and Keeping of the County of Westmoreland. The which Offices (as he goes on) being now in the King’s Hands, he set them on Sale to him which would give most. Hereof it came to pass, that where the Lord Chancellor offered to give fifteen hundred Marks beforehand for the Counties of York, Lincoln and Northampton, and one hundred Marks of increase of Rent for every of the same Counties; Geffery Archbishop of York offered to the King three thousand Marks beforehand only for the County of York, and one thousand Marks yearly of increase, and so had the same committed to his Regiment.

And in the Case of Magdalen College, in the fifteenth of King James I. reported in 1 Rolls’s Reports 157, Sir Henry Hobart then Attorney General, and soon after Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, argues from it, as a Principle not to be contested, That if any one procure an Office to himself for 1000 l. of the Gift of the King, the Office is not lost by the Statute of 5 & 6 Ed. VI. which shews the think not wicked, not malum in se, or against the Common Law, for the Prerogative cannot extend to what is so.

My Lords,

Whoever makes the Grant, or receives the Money, the King or a Subject, the Temptation under which the Officer who paid it lies, to reimburse himself, is the same. And if the Strength of that Temptation make the thing criminal, it will make it so in all Instances.

It has been taken notice of by those Gentlemen who are of Counsel for me, that the Provisoes in the very Statute of 5 & 6 Ed. VI. prove, that this is not against the common Law, or criminal in itself, at the same time that it puts a particular Restraint upon the Practice of buying and selling Offices, or Deputations to Offices.

Give me leave to add some Observations upon the Provisoes in that Statute.

Sect. IV. contains a Proviso, that this Act shall not extend to any Office whereof any Person is seized of any Estate of Inheritance.

Suppose a Man that has an Office of Inheritance takes Money from a Person whom he appoints as his Deputy;

Is not that Deputy as liable to be tempted to reimburse himself by Extortion or Corruption, is if his Principal had but an Estate for Life?

Can a Deputy’s Behaviour turn upon the Title of his Principal? So that 1000 l. (for instance) paid by him, will certainly make him corrupt, if his Principal holds his Office for Life, but will not make him guilty of the least Misbehaviour, if his Principal have the Inheritance of the Office?

This Proviso is therefore plainly founded only upon the Regard the Law-makers had to the Propriety and Interest of such Owner of an Office; which they would not prejudice, and therefore he is left at full Liberty to sell the Office itself, or a Deputation to it.

But if to take Money from a Person who is to have or execute an Office, were unlawful by the Common Law, or wicked in itself; it is impossible that the Owner of the Office could have a Right to that wicked or unlawful Gain; nor could the Law-makers have any regard to it.

And since here they are careful not to take it from him, they allow it. They in effect make a formal Declaration that it is lawful, and that the Provision made by that Act is not so necessary, as that it should in any degree interfere with his private Property in that Instance.

Farther,

Sect. III. makes void all Agreements, Bonds and Promises for Money, for any Office or Deputation. But Sect. VI. provides, that the Act shall not extend to Agreements, Bonds, &c. made or concluded before the first of March then next.

This supposes it the Practice at that Time, not only to give and take Money for Offices, but to make formal Contracts for that Purpose, which the Courts of Justice were to compel the Performance of.

Does it condemn them as criminal in themselves, by reason of the Danger?

No: on the contrary it does not esteem the Danger so great, as that to avoid it the Property arising upon these Contracts should be taken away, or at all impeached: but leaves a Remedy in a Court of Justice to enforce the Performance of a Contract, which must necessarily cause a publick mischief, if that were true that it is unlawful in itself, and that its Unlawfulness arises from the Mischiefs consequent upon paying Money on that Occasion.

Had the makers of that Law been of the Opinion which these Gentlemen seem to be of, and thought such Traffick a Wickedness, it had been impossible for them not to have put a Stop to it, and absolutely disannulled all Securities and Cautions for the Performance.

I do not suppose the Form of Expression used in this Proviso will be criticised upon, or that it will be urged that the Words of this Proviso only import, that those Bonds are left in such Force as they would have been, if the Act had not been made, and does not make them good.

That would be a poor Subterfuge. The Proviso makes them not good, ’tis true. Why? Because it plainly supposed them to be good before; but that Sect. III. would make them void, if this Proviso did not prevent it; and this Proviso is on purpose to prevent it, and for nothing else.

And would the makers of a Law, would these Gentlemen in making a Law, insert a Proviso that Agreements should continue of such Force as they were before, if they thought them of no Force before? Nay if they thought them not only void, but mischievous?

The saving a Right of Action upon such Bonds, and making a Proviso in Favour of them gives them such Countenance, that those that had any such would certainly insist upon them, and the Persons Persons that were bound would be discouraged from disputing with them what the Legislature did not think fit to deprive them of, and would therefore pay without standing a Suit.

There is yet one Proviso more in this Act, material to the present Purpose.

Sect. VII. provides, that this Act shall not extend or be prejudicial to the Lords Chief Justices or Judges of Assize ——— “ but that they may do in every behalf touching any Office to be given or granted by them, as they might have done before the making of this Act; any thing above mentioned to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding. ”

This plainly implies, that at that Time, and before, it was the Practice for the two Chief Justices and Judges of Assize to take Money for the Offices in their Courts, else nothing in this Act could extend to what they usually did, or be of any Prejudice to them.

And it shews too, that the Law-makers did not dislike the Practice.

I beg leave to submit to your Lordships, whether this doth not amount to a Declaration of the Law, that the taking Money for Offices, whatever Danger there may be from it in some Cases, does not necessarily in all Cases, cause bad Officers to be made; nor the paying it make the Officer extort: For the Nature of Things changes not with the Titles of Persons. An Officer that pays Money to a Lord Chief Justice, will be under the same Temptation to get it up again, as he that pays to a Lord Chancellor.

As to the Wording and Form of Expression of this Proviso, I take it to be very clear, that the Words [as they might have done before the making of this Act] are declaratory; that they might before the making of this Act take Money for Offices; and because in the Case of those Officers the Danger was not so great, it is still saved and preserved to them.

If it be said that nothing is saved to them but the doing what they might have done before, and that they could not before lawfully take Money for Offices; I beg leave to answer, that if that be so, the Clause is perfectly frivolous. A strong Prejudice against the Exposition that makes it so in all Cases, but much more so here.

For as the Judges are always Attendants in this House, and this Clause greatly concerns them; it is highly probable that it was drawn up and proposed by themselves.

And if taking Money for Offices were then esteemed criminal; if the Notion is right which is now contended for, that taking Money for Offices was against Law, was Corruption; and that this Law was then passing to lay farther particular Restraints upon it; is it possible that the Judges could presume to ask not to have a Difficulty or Discouragement laid upon their being guilty of Corruption, or their doing a thing unlawful?

Or is it possible that the Lords and Commons should consent to it?

Or if the Judges would ask it, would they not have made it effectual? Would they, by proposing the Proviso, in effect, own a corrupt Practice, and their Resolution to continue it, ask Provision for it, and be indulged; and yet not ask what would effectually justify them in it?

I hope therefore that what is charged against me is not condemned by the Common Law or Usage of this Kingdom. If it be, it properly lay on them to make it out; but they have shewn nothing to prove it; not one Instance of its being punished at Common Law, or blamed; not one Citation out of the old Books of the Common Law, precedent to the Acts of Parliament made relating to Things of that Kind. On the contrary, I have shewn it practised in the highest Instances, without Blame or Censure: And that several Clauses in the Statute of E. 6. were plainly founded upon a Supposition of this Practice being allowed by the Common Law, and continue the Allowance of it, in some Instances, to this Day.

This is what I had humbly to lay before your Lordships, with respect to the Common Law. And I shall now consider it as it stands upon the Acts of Parliament.

And as to Acts of Parliament relating to this Matter, they have suggested only two, the Statute 12 Ric. II. cap. 2. and the Statute 5 & 6 Ed. VI. cap. 16.

As to the Statute 12 Ric. II. The Provision of this Statute is to bind those who make or name Officers in the Cases to which it extends, under an Oath to observe the Directions of that Statute in their so doing. And I hope I have already fully answered the Pretence of my having taken an Oath upon this Statute, which extends to any of the Officers in the Court of Chancery, I shall now consider that Statute and what may be urged from it, a little more particularly. And,

1. As I have already mentioned, I take the Statute of 12 Ric. II. to relate only to such Nominations as are in nature of Elections; that is, such where the Nomination is in several Persons.

In those Cases it is common with us to have such Oaths administered, but not in others. We find them in Colleges, and other Bodies of Men.

The great Use and main Intent of such an Oath in those Cases is, to prevent Combinations, Strife, and Brigues, where the several Persons concerned will naturally have several Views. And the Animosities and Contentions arising thence among so great Officers as this Statute takes Care of, might greatly affect the publick Peace.

The Things which cause most Contentions on such Occasions, are Money, Affection, (by reason of Kindred or Friendship) and great Solicitations.

Accordingly this Act extends to all three, and takes Care to forbid the last (Solicitation) wholly; and the being influenced by either of the former.

The Persons called to name, or make Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, or any other Officer or Minister of the King, are to be sworn, that they neither name nor make them for any manner of Gift or Brocade, Favour or Affection; nor any that pursues by himself or any other, privately or openly to be in any manner of Office, be put in that same Office, or any other; but that they make all such Officers and Ministers of the most good and lawful, and the most sufficient to their Knowledge and their Conscience.

My Lords, in the next place,

2. The Words of the Statute plainly import as much; that the Nomination there meant, is what is made by several Persons when they are called together.

“ It is accorded and assented; that the Chancellor, Treasurer, Keeper of the Privy Seal, Steward of the King’s House, Chamberlain of the King, Clerk of the Rolls, Justices of the one Bench and of the other, Barons of the Exchequer, and all others who shall be called to name or make Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, Escheators, Customers, Comptrollers, or any other Officer or minister of the King, shall be firmly sworn that they neither name nor make Justices of Peace, Sheriff, Escheator, Customer, Comptroller, or any other minister of the King, &c. for Gift or Brokage; Favour or Affection, &c.

I own, that there seems some Difficulty as to this, because I do not know of any law, at that time, that any of these Officers, except Sheriffs, were named by an Assembly of several Persons.

But though there were no law requiring it, there might be an Usage to do it, by some Direction from the Crown for better Information.

And what is now done in relation to Sheriffs, turns in some part upon such Usage continued down to this Time, without any law, that I could ever hear of, for to support it, as to all the Persons who now meet to name them.

For by a Statute of 9 Ed. II. called the Statute of Sheriffs, printed in Rast. Tit. Sheriffs 2. “ Sheriffs are to be assigned by the Chancellor, Treasurer, Barons of the Exchequer, and by the Justices.

By 14 Ed. III. cap. 7. Rast. 12.

“ Sheriffs shall be ordained by the Chancellor, Treasurer and Chief Baron of the Exchequer, taking to them the Chief Justices of the one Bench and of the other, if they be present: And in the Absence of the Chancellor, by the Treasurer, the Barons of the Exchequer and the Justices. And that shall be done yearly on the Morrow of All Souls (that is the third of November) in the Exchequer.

This is the Statute that fixes the Time and Place now observed.

But as to the Persons, though the Justices of both Benches are in the first Act, yet none of them, but the Chief Justices are in the last. And the Lord Privy Seal, Lord Steward, Lord Chamberlain, and the Clerk of the Rolls, and other Lords of the Council, are in neither. And yet by constant Usage, all these attend at the naming of Sheriffs; and, as they see occasion, give their Advice and Assistance, and all take the Oath.

And by like Usage, which we cannot now account for, there was probably some such Practice with respect to other Offices.

For it is to make the Statute absurd, which provides that such and such, and all others that shall be called to name Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, Escheators, &c. shall be sworn to name these Officers without Favour or Affection, if neither they nor any others were called to name any of these Officers.

3. This is the stronger, because constant Practice, the best Expofitor, has thus expounded this Statute.

If the Intention of this Statute were, that all the Particulars first named, that is, Chancellor, Treasurer, Keeper of the Privy Seal, Steward of the King’s House, Chamberlain of the King, &c. were to be separately sworn, as to the respective Officers under each of them severally;

Then this must have been made part of their Oath of Office, or administered at the same time with it, though in a distinct Oath.

But that has never been done, nor has it ever been administered to a single Person at that or any other Time. Which is the strongest Argument possible that it is not what was then meant, or ever understood to be meant, by that Statute. But on the contrary, in the single Instance where several are called together to name Officers, that is in the case of Sheriffs, the swearing of them, to observe this Statute on that Occasion, is never omitted to this Day.

Give me leave to observe one thing more, that a Chancellor, a Treasurer may possibly be several Years in his Office; I believe Treasurers have in fact been all or the greatest part of their Time without ever taking this Oath, which is never taken, unless they happen to assist at the naming of Sheriffs, which there is no law requiring the other great Officers to attend at, and which is now become little more than a matter of Form, the list settled in that Assembly being every Year departed from in many Counties.

And if this that I have thus offered be the whole meaning of the Statute; then at this Day, as the Usage now is, it has nothing to operate upon but the Nomination of Sheriffs, and therefore extends to no other Cases, and consequently not to any of the Officers in the Court of Chancery.

But may it not be said, that though the Oath required by this Statute extend not to the present Case, yet will not this Provision amount to a Declaration of the Sense of the law-makers, that the Things thus provided against are such as should not be done, and consequently that the doing of them after such Statute will be against law?

To state this distinctly, would take up more Time than is proper upon this Occasion.

But this I beg leave to say, and it will be as well applicable to the Statute of E. VI. as to this, and perhaps more directly.

Acts of Parliament that contain political Provisions for making Regulations, or for avoiding Things not wicked, but which may be inconvenient, have not always this Consequence, that Actions done contrary to what they designed in the very Cases then in view will be criminal, and much less in Cases not in view.

Our law is sparing, in making the doing a thing a Crime, which may be rectified and redressed another way.

There are several Acts of Parliament to restrain Ecclesiastical Persons from making long leases, to prevent the Inconveniencies such leases may bring upon their Successors; those Acts declare such leases void, which therefore are against the Intent of those laws; but it was never thought that the making or accepting such leases was criminal.

The Sense of the law-makers is to have no Consequence, but what necessarily follows from the Provision by them made.

What they intended was, that the Successor, if he pleased, might set them aside; which would have this Effect, that none would take such leases, or they would do it on Terms advantageous to the Successor, or with a Resolution of being so good Tenants, as that the Successor would not take Advantage of it: So that either the lease would be vacated, or the Inconvenience would be prevented without, which fully answers the the End of the Act. And this is very applicable to the Statute of Ed. VI.

In this Act of Ric. II. The Inconvenience provided against is only in Elections or Nominations by Numbers; the Provision is by taking an Oath.

If such Oath be taken and broke, that is a Crime; for that is the necessary Consequence of the Provision made, Violation of an Oath being undoubtedly criminal. But where no Oath is taken, much more where none is required, I do not see how doing the thing can be a Crime; merely because in some Cases it is in this manner provided against, and would be criminal if in doing it an Oath had been violated.

One thing intended to be entirely prevented in Cases within this Statute is Solicitation, or desiring a Place.

But has it ever been construed, in consequence of this Provision, that if I put a Person into an Office, who ever asked that or any other, I should be a Criminal, though I never took this Oath?

Then the Consequence will be, that the asking a Place, or the modest offering a Man's self for it, (which would be suing or pursuing for it in the Words of the Act,) will lay him under a perpetual Disability of having that Place, or any other.

Nay, since asking a Place is what the Statute has made a Provision to prevent; whoever asks a Place, does a thing intended to be prohibited by the Statute, and is therefore criminal.

Was this ever the Construction of this Act?

Nay, every one that assists in what was thus intended to be prevented will be criminal, and so will every one that asks for another at his Request.

My Lords, at this rate the Statute will be very extensive.

I would beg leave to mention one Case more, and hope the Gentlemen of the House of Commons will not take it amiss, or look upon it as any Disrespect to them.

By the Statute 1 Hen. V. cap. 1. "It is enacted, That Knights of Shires be not chosen unless they be resident within the Shire where they shall be chosen, the Day of the Date of the Writ of Summons. And that the Citizens and Burghesses of the Cities and Boroughs be chosen Men, Citizens and Burghesses, resident, dwelling and free in the same Cities and Boroughs, and no other in any wise."

The Statute 23 H. VI. cap. 15. recites this last part of that Statute, and enacts, that it be duly kept in all Points.

And this is the Statute upon which Actions used to be brought, in our time, for false Returns of members to Parliament.

This is in direct Words a Prohibition of any Person's, being chosen that is not resident: But since the natural Effect of this Provision would be, that (the subject matter thereof being the Case of a legal Authority conferred by the Choice) Persons chosen, not being so qualified, might in consequence of this law be rejected.

If this political Provision be not complied with, is there another Consequence to follow, instead of redressing it this way, and the Parties concerned to be therefore made criminal?

Is it criminal in those who chuse for their Representatives in Parliament, Persons not only not resident, but whom they never saw?

Is it criminal in those unqualified Persons, to presume to take their Places in the House?

Is it criminal in the other members, knowing such to be amongst them, not to turn them out ex officio, even though no Complaint be made from without Doors?

I think not.

Yet I apprehend that will be the Consequence, if laws of that Nature are thus to be explained; and every Action is to be judged criminal, which any Act of Parliament has made any sort of Provision to prevent.

As to the Statute of 5 & 6 Ed. VI. cap. 16.

Although it has made Provision against the Sale or Disposal of Offices for money, yet nothing can be inferred from thence in Support of this Prosecution.

But that your Lordships may take a better View of that law, permit me to lay before you a few Observations.

The Preamble sets forth the End for which this Restraint was laid.

"For the avoiding of Corruption which may hereafter happen to be in the Officers and Ministers in those Courts, and Places, and Rooms, wherein there is requisite to be had the true Administration of Justice, or Services of Trust:

"And to the Intent that Persons worthy and meet to be advanced to the Place where Justice is to be administered, or any Service of Trust executed, should hereafter be preferred to the same, and no other.

Here is mention made of Corruption, but it is that which may happen in the Officers appointed, it calls not the taking money upon the appointing them Corruption.

It in effect says, what I have before said.

That giving and taking money is a Temptation to those who dispose Offices, to put in sometimes unfit Persons; to those who buy to extort and be corrupt: And consequently that if this Practice continue, there will be Instances, in which this Temptation will so far be yielded to, that Persons not worthy will sometimes be preferred, and those Persons will some of them venture upon being guilty of Corruption.

But to avoid all the Corruption which may happen in those Instances, and to the intent that this Temptation may in no case prevent, but that worthy Persons be advanced, and no other in any Instance, the Statute is made.

The main End whereof is answered, if worthy Persons be advanced, and they be not corrupt, but behave themselves well.

What then is the particular Provision made by this Statute? Not making way for an arbitrary Punishment, by declaring it to be Corruption, or criminal, or against the Provision of any former Law, to give or take money for an Office.

Not declaring that it shall be criminal for the future.

Not even enacting, that no Person shall take or give money for an Office: which might make the Contravention of this law, a Crime for the future:

For it is remarkable, that this Statute has not so much as any prohibitory Words in it;

But the whole Provision is barely putting the Case by way of Supposition, "if a Person do take money," &c. and and declaring the Consequence, which Consequence is, that the Person taking the money, if it were for an Office, shall lose the Nomination to that Office; if for a Deputation, he shall lose his Interest in the Office: And the Person paying shall be adjudged a disabled Person to have, occupy, or enjoy the Office or Deputation. That is, as appears afterwards, he is disabled, so far as concerns himself, his right to have it, and to continue the taking of the Profits: But not so far as the Publick has benefit by him: For by a Proviso for that Purpose, all Acts done by him are valid.

The Effect of which is, that the Officer who comes in for money holds that Office precariously, which would otherwise have been for Life, and is wholly at Mercy, if he gives the least Occasion of Complaint against him; and since he that put him in has lost the Nomination, there accrues to the King a Right to fill the Place with a better man in case he thinks fit.

And therefore I will not controvert, but that the Right or Power of Nomination to an Office may, by a Prosecution grounded upon this Statute, be taken from the Person who enjoyed it, and vested in the Crown.

But as there is no such Power of Nomination to these Offices now in me; but I have lost it with the Office of Chancellor, and therein have suffered a much greater Loss than that of those Nominations only; No Judgment can be given against me upon this Act, and therefore neither can there be founded upon it any Prosecution against me; for that is but a method of praying and obtaining a proper Judgment.

And to adjudge, that upon the Case which has happen'd, (supposing it to be within the Words and meaning of this Statute) any Punishment shall be inflicted, or any Consequence follow, beyond the Loss of the Nomination, is (with great Submission) to go quite out of this Statute.

Thus I have endeavoured to make out what I first propos'd, that the receiving a Present upon these Occasions is not criminal in itself, or by the Common Law, and that there is not any Act of Parliament whatsoever by which the same is made Criminal, or subject to any Punishment or Judgment which can be pray'd in this Prosecution.

My Lords,

All this Reasoning is greatly fortified by Usage, by my Predecessors; which Usage is expressly proved before your Lordships by all the masters, who could not refuse giving Testimony; that is, all the present masters admitted by my Predecessors, who are indemnified by the Act of this Session for that Purpose: And, I think, is proved too by the former masters now living, who declined giving an Answer to the Question, when asked, what they gave or knew given; making this their Excuse, that by our law no man is bound to accuse himself, and that to own they had given money would expose them to the Penalties of this Act. For whatever might be the Consequence of owning they gave money; there was no Danger in saying they gave none. And they might have given an Answer in the Negative safely, but that the Truth and their Oath would not allow them to do it.

And this Refusal of theirs to answer, was not a Contrivance of mine, they were supported in their Objection by the Gentlemen that are managers, who were pleas'd to give their Assistance to defend them from answering the Question.

And might I have been allowed to have given Evidence of what has been from time to time declared, by Parties concerned, who are now dead; it would have been proved much farther.

But I apprehend the Thing is notorious; altho' some Proofs have been offer'd for Form-sake, yet it was equally well known before; known to all the World.

Give me leave likewise to argue farther upon this whole matter from what I said once already, that it is admitted there is not one Instance; that such taking money has been punished either at Common Law or upon Act of Parliament; that this, according to the Rules of our Law, is one of the strongest Arguments that it is not punishable. For it is not to be presumed, but that it has been often done; the Statute of Ed. VI. takes notice of the Practice; not only of doing it, but of entering into formal Contracts and Bonds for that Purpose.

Littleton, our most celebrated Lawyer, upon a Question, whether an Action would lie upon a certain Act of Parliament, rests upon it as a decisive Argument in favour of the Negative, that it was never seen or heard that any Action was brought upon that Statute; alledging, that if any Action might have been brought for this matter, it must be taken, that at some time or other it would have been put in practice. And the Lord Chief Justice Coke, in his Commentary upon Littleton, observes, that as Usage is a good Interpreter of laws, so Non-Usage, where there is no Example, is a great Intendment (as he calls it) that the Law will not bear it. Not that an Act of Parliament (as he goes on) can by non-user lose its Force; but that it may thereby be expounded, or declared how the Act is to be understood.

This is what I have to submit to your Lordships, that the taking money for Offices is not criminal, which, I apprehend, is the whole Charge in the Articles, except the manner of taking it varies the Consideration, which I shall take Notice of afterwards.

There is not the least Pretence, that money was given for putting in Persons unqualified, the suppos'd Crime is singly the taking money.

And as to what has been said by way of comparing it to the Case where any judicial Order or Determination is made for a Bribe; give me leave, with great Submission, to insist upon it, that there is not the least Parity at all betwixt that and the present Case: For in matters of Judgment, if the Party have a Right to what he sues for, he ought not to be put to buy his own; and much less, if he has not a Right, should he be at liberty to purchase of the Judge, that which is the Right of another.

But this here is not matter of Justice, but matter of Favour and pure Bounty; whether I put in this man or that man into a Place in my Disposal, depended wholly upon my own Choice and Pleasure; so that the Cases are not at all alike.

A Bribe strikes at the Root of the equal Administration of Justice; it is a professed Byass, and can mean nothing but to destroy Indifferency, and to render the Judgment partial.

It is therefore disallowed in all Nations, and in all Ages; and is expressly forbid by the Law of God: And had the Gentleman who touch'd upon the Text which condemns Gifts, been pleas'd to cite cite it at large, it would have appeared to relate to Bribes given in Cases of Judgment, Deut. xv. 18, 19. "Judges and Officers shalt thou make thee in all thy gates — And they shall judge the People with just Judgment. Thou shalt not wrest Judgment, thou shalt not respect Persons, neither take a Gift. For a Gift doth blind the Eyes of the wise."

As to the manner of taking money in the several Articles V, VI, VII, VIII, the Case stands thus.

V. There are in all, eight Articles relating to this matter; but they have proceeded only upon four: The first of which is the fifth Article, and relates to the money taken on Mr. Kynaston's Admittance.

Upon their own Evidence it appears, that Mr. Kynaston was well recommended by Mr. Bayly, a Person of a very good Character; that the first and only message brought to me, with relation to his Admittance and the money to be paid, was this; that he desired to be admitted on the Surrender of Mr. Rogers, and would make a Compliment of 1500 Guineas, or, if I did not think that enough I should please myself; and my Answer was, I was pleased with the 1500 Guineas, and he was admitted.

It has been endeavoured to make what was then done odious; by representing, that Mr. Kynaston first offered 1000 l. but Mr. Cottingham would not propose it; that it was work'd up by Mr. Cottingham's telling him that he had bought a good Office; that Mr. Rogers had told him he usually made 1700 l. and sometimes 2000 l. per Annum of it, and that he understood the Profits arose out of the ordinary Profits of the Office, and the Use of the Suitors money together.

As to the Offer of 1000 l. Mr. Cottingham, a Witness produced by themselves, denies it. And Mr. Bayly, their other Witness, who first broke the Affair to Mr. Cottingham, and at his Return from him, told Mr. Kynaston that Mr. Cottingham said 1500 Guineas would be expected, swears, that Mr. Kynaston immediately submitted to what Mr. Cottingham had so mentioned, only he said he thought it had been but 1500 l. And this was before Mr. Kynaston saw Mr. Cottingham.

So that Mr. Kynaston's Oath is directly contradicted by the Oath of Mr. Cottingham, one of their own Witnesses; and is highly improbable from what Mr. Bayly another of their own Witnesses swears.

And as to what Mr. Cottingham said about the goodness of the Office, he swears it was after the 1500 Guineas were agreed to be paid. And indeed upon that depended not so much what he was to present to me, as what he was to pay to Mr. Rogers, which had been agreed upon before Mr. Cottingham was spoken to.

So that here is nothing but my accepting a Sum of 1500 Guineas, which was proposed to me as a voluntary Offer, when I was at the same time told I might have more, if I would insist upon it; without one aggravating Circumstance, with relation to the Person admitted, or what I did.

VI. The next of these Articles is the sixth, which concerns Mr. Thomas Bennet, and the money given me by him, on account of his being admitted Master upon Mr. Hiccocks's Surrender.

And the whole of the Fact, so far as I was concerned in it or knew of it, was but this. That Mr. Cottingham informed me of a voluntary Offer made by Mr. Bennet of 1500 Guineas, which I accepted. I believe he thought himself not ill used, and I being then extremely ill, he pressed to be admitted, for fear (as Mr. Cottingham swears he thought) of falling into worse Hands. On Thursday, and in the Nights before and after, I remember I lost near 50 Ounces of Blood; in about 24 Hours. And that Night Dr. Mead told Mr. Cottingham, that if the Distemper had not a Turn very soon, I could not live 24 Hours. On Friday Mr. Cottingham says, the Doctor told him the Distemper had a Turn: On Saturday morning Mr. Bennet, after great importunity, was admitted while I was in Bed, but Company kept out of the Room as much as could be.

This is what they have proved by Mr. Cottingham.

Mr. Bennet, who mentions nothing at all of me of his own Knowledge, but of the Kindness with which I spoke to him, and told him that he was admitted by a dying Chancellor, is their other Witness, who is to shew invidious Circumstances. And very solicitous he seems to be to do it.

He takes care to say, that he was ordered to come alone, and bring no body with him; as if it were the better to keep secret the Payment of the money, tho' he knew my great Weakness was the Reason.

He affects to say, the Bank-Notes were taken out in feigned Names, and that it was not thought proper to use my Name or his. Tho' upon another Article, when he is examined again, it comes out, that the feigned Name was that of his Clerk, whom he sent to take out the Notes, and it was merely Bennet's own doing.

He says, he offered 1000 l. to Cottingham at first, and tells a long Dialogue they had about it, but Cottingham himself upon his Oath denies it all.

So that here, at last, nothing is proved that passed with me, but the 1500 Guineas being offered to me and accepted.

And give me leave to observe, that the two Sums in these two Articles, were certainly not paid out of the Suitors' money. For whatever other Objection may be made against taking the Present before Admission, it has this Effect, to shew that it came not out of the money of the Suitors.

And yet there being a Pretence (without stating the Circumstance of Time, which I have just taken notice of) that they were paid out of that money, and that the Suitors were in danger of being Sufferers; I brought the money into Chancery, to be subject to the Orders of the Court.

The two other Articles, the seventh and eighth, were upon Admissions to Places vacant by Death.

VII. The seventh Article concerns the Case of Mr. Elde; and the Fact, as they have themselves proved, is thus:

Upon the Death of Mr. Fellowes, the former master, 5000 Guineas is offered and given to me by Mr. Elde; 6000 l. is offered by another.

It is admitted, that Thomas Bennet about three Quarters of a Year before, upon coming into his Place gave his Predecessor, who surrendered to him seven thousand five hundred Pounds, and to the the Great Seal 1576 l. in all 9075 l.; and that Mr. Kynaston, two years before him, gave his Predecessor 6000 l. and to the Great Seal 1575 l. in all 7575 l.

And Mr. Elde, a Man of unblemished Character, of a good Estate, and not one Objection to his Fitness, is admitted, though he pays so very much short of what others had paid, and less than was at the same time offered.

And of this that he paid, 3400 l. was returned to him, and only 1850 l. retained.

I will not trouble your Lordships in relation to what my private Intentions were in that Transaction; if they were capable of being proved, I believe your Lordships would not dislike them.

Some little Reflection has been made upon the Money being brought in a Basket, as if it were for Privacy, and even to conceal it from Mr. Cottingham.

Whereas it plainly appears to have been without any Design, and only Mr. Elde's making use of a Convenience he accidentally had in his Chambers.

But if there had been an Intention to conceal it from Mr. Cottingham, why was he the Hand to convey any thing? why was he the Person to bring up the Basket? Mr. Cottingham knew 6000 l. had been offered by another, and might rather guess this to be more than less.

And had Mr. Elde not been himself examined (which at that time it was not expected he would be) and Mr. Cottingham proved, that Mr. Elde had told him he would give 5000 l. for the Place; that another offered 6000 l.; that he had told me of it; that Mr. Elde after delivered him a Basket, which by its weight he believed to have Money in it; that he brought it to me; and that Mr. Elde was that day, or very soon after, admitted: According to the Candour of construing my Actions, this would have been said to be a convincing Proof, that there was 6000 l. in the Basket, or more: it being impossible for the avaricious temper of the Earl of Macclesfield, for his Impotency of Mind, his constitutional Weakness in matters of Money not to take the greater Sum.

VIII. The 8th Article concerns the Case of Mr. Thurston.

There, upon Mr. Borrett's death, 6000 l. was offered me by another worthy Gentleman, but Mr. Thurston was admitted.

He says he gave upon that Occasion 5000 Guineas, but that all above 2000 l. was returned.

My Lords, Since what passed relating to that matter is not capable of proof, I will not trouble you with the particulars of it, which might be material.

Mr. Thurston is likewise a Person unexceptionable; Mr. Baron Gilbert, now one of the Lords Commissioners for the Custody of the Great Seal, gave me an extraordinary Character of him, and that determined me in his favour.

But there is no Objection to him neither, and therefore there needs no proof.

This is the State of the Fact upon these two Articles.

This is so far from Extortion; the Money is voluntarily offered.

So far from Avarice; the greater Sum is refused, and a less taken. And even the greatest part of that returned, 3400 l. in the one case, and 3250 l. in the other.

And the Persons such, that, were I to go through Westminster-hall, I cannot easily pick out two better Men.

Upon the whole, all that can be pretended to be in my hands now, upon these four Articles concerning Mr. Kynaston, Mr. Tho. Bennett, Mr. Elde, and Mr. Thurston, which are all the Managers have proceeded upon, relating to Money received from the Masters, is but 3850 l.; that is 1850 l. from Mr. Elde, and 2000 l. from Mr. Thurston; the rest having been all returned.

And as to that which was given back to Mr. Thurston; he has sworn, that he was sent for several times, in order to have part of his Money returned, and received it before the first Seal after Michaelmas, near a Month before any Order by the Lords of the Council to call for the Accounts, and while every thing was in the same State as when he paid it, and from his Evidence, it cannot be judged to be any thing but the effect of Generosity.

Mr. Elde's was not returned till after the Accounts were begun to be taken, he continuing a long time in the Country; but when he came to Town, he had it.

IX. The 9th Article relates to 100 Guineas given me by Mr. Tho. Bennet, upon his disposing of his Office of Clerk of the Custodies or Lunaticks to Mr. Hamersty.

The Evidence is quite contrary to the Charge, as it is laid in the Articles, and amounts but to this, That Bennet having agreed to dispose of his Office to another, sent me a Present voluntarily of 100 Guineas upon that occasion, and tho' I, at that time, knew that more had been given in the like case, I was contented with that, and accepted it.

This is within the same reason, as the Case of the Masters; it has been practised by my Predecessors, as a Right of their Office, upon Dispositions of this Office, and others of the like nature.

Besides the proof of what had been paid to the Great Seal, upon another disposition of this Office; it has been proved, that another of my Predecessors, the late Lord Cowper, declared his Opinion, that he thought it his right to have a Present: And he having then passed a Grant of this very Office, without having had a Present, upon the Party's having pretended and assured him that it had not been usual to give any for that Office; he expressed great dissatisfaction, and declared that he thought he had been imposed on, that he saw no reason why that Office should not pay as well as others of the like nature. Which implies both the Fact of receiving Gratuities, or Presents upon Transfers of such Offices, and his claiming a Right to receive them.

As to the discourse Mr. Bennet pretends to have had with Mr. Cottingham, Mr. Cottingham denies it; and as they both are produced by the Managers to this point, this is a clashing between their own Witnesses; and that cannot be said to be proved by them, which is affirmed by one of their Witnesses, and positively denied by the other.

And if there had been any such Discourse, it is not brought home to affect me; for there is no pretence that I knew any thing of it.

But as to the whole Fact, wherein they differ, I think, from the Character that has been given of Mr. Cottingham, and what has appeared of Mr. Bennet, it will be no question at all, which of them two should be believed.

X. As to the 10th Article, there is no Evidence given.

XI. The next Article is the 11th. And the Substance of it is, That in order to advance and increase the illegal and corrupt Gain arising to myself from the Sale and Disposal of the Offices of the Masters of the Court of Chancery, in violation of the Trust reposed in me for the Care and Protection of the Suitors, I did admit several Persons to the said Offices of Masters, who at the time of their Admissions were of small Substance and Ability, very unfit to be trusted with the great Sums of Money and other Effects of the Suitors lodged in their Hands.

The Masters are not by this Article charged with the want of any other Qualification whatsoever, but that of Estate; nor is there the least Proof, or Pretence, that they were not in all other respects, Men of Abilities equal to the Duty to be discharged by them, honest, and unexceptionable in point of Reputation; but the single Objection to them is, that they were Persons of a small Substance.

The Proof offer'd upon this Article is this:

They have produced three Orders made in the Court of Chancery in the Months of January and February last, whereby it appear'd that Mr. Conway, Mr. Kynaston, and Mr. Tho. Bennet had not at that time brought in all the Money that appeared to be then in their Hands belonging to the Suitors of the Court. This is their whole Proof.

But I am intirely at a loss to know, how this can be stretched to prove, what Ability they were of at the times of their respective Admissions, or indeed that they are not of ability now to pay their whole Ballances, merely because on such a particular Day they had not paid their respective Ballances into Court.

Nor is there the least Proof that I had any reason to suspect their Ability, when I admitted them.

Mr. Conway had an Estate of between 5 and 6 hundred Pounds per Annum.

Mr. Kynaston was represented to me as a Man of Substance: Now, that he comes under another Article, to swear it down, he owns that he has an Estate of 4 or 5 hundred Pounds a Year, with Timber upon it worth 2500 l; and had likewise, at that time, in Money in the Funds, to the value of two or three thousand Pounds.

Tho. Bennet was esteemed a Man of a very good Estate and Substance. He is the Person to swear himself now worth nothing. And, to do it effectually, he sticks not at owning, that he has mortgaged part of his Estate for more than it is worth. Yet there is upon your Lordship's Table, the Particular given in by him to the Court of Chancery, wherein his Estate, besides that which he says he purchased since he was Master, appears to be about 500 l. per ann. and he owns he had, when he was admitted, a Place for Life of 250 l. per ann. which he after disposed of. He says he was worth 20,000 l. and had been sufficient still, but for the Losses in 1720, which he owns were not known to me, nor generally suspected.

But, my Lords, these two Gentlemen are making their Circumstances mean, in order to get back the money they paid for their Offices; which they could not do by their own Oaths, directly for their own Uses: and therefore they have thought fit to keep back so much of the money of the Suitors, when called upon to bring it in, that so the Suitors may complain to the Court of Chancery, and then their Oaths may be made use of, for the Suitors to found a Demand upon against their Predecessors.

And it is pretty remarkable, that their Deficiencies are neither more nor less than the Sums they at first paid to their Predecessors and to me, upon their being admitted to their respective Offices. In this therefore I apprehend your Lordships will think their Oaths are of very little value. It is hardly to be imagined, that they should have been so long in their Offices, and have just saved nothing, nor wasted; and that they are not a single Farthing either richer or poorer.

But whatever your Lordships Opinion, with respect to that, may be; I own, I cannot but think, that there is something very extraordinary in the Attempt; that these two Men have agreed with two Masters, that were in possession of two good Offices for Life, to give one of them 6000 l. the other 7500 l. for their Places; and now, that they are got into possession, would have the money back, and continue in the Places too: That is, in short, they are tricking those Masters out of their Places, under pretence of buying them.

But whatever their Behaviour or their Estates may now be, they appeared to me Persons of Reputation, and Fortune, when they were admitted: And I do not observe, that the Article hath so much as suggested, that I knew any thing to the contrary.

One of the managers wondered that I should let in Persons of no Fortune; and he solves it only by this, that they would give better Prices.

That had been something, if the Price had been given to me; but leaves it incredible, that I should let in any, that I had the least Suspicion had no Fortune; for the old Masters to receive 6000 l. and 7500 l. at the same time that they represent me acting upon the view of burying the Masters, and having the whole Price myself.

Where I was to have the whole Price, and the Temptation was greater, there is no Pretence I took in Men of no Fortune. And is it possible to think I would do it, where the Masters were to have the Price, and I so small a Proportion?

Great Strefs has been laid on comparing the Sums in the Masters hands, with their Estates; in order to shew their Unfitness to be trusted with those Sums.

How that Proportion is to be adjusted, I own, I am a little at a loss. Here is a Master, that has an Office that brings in a considerable Profit, and is worth 5000 l. which cannot be run away with: He has a handsome visible Estate of 4 or 5 hundred Pounds a Year; and a good Reputation. How much money may he be properly trusted with? I do not mean as a Borrower, who may be presumed in some want, of one sort or other, because he borrows; but as a Cashier for the Suitors? There are very few Bankers that have such a Fortune to set up with. And I do not see that any of those Bankers, that is a Man of good Reputation, and good Credit (tho' perhaps he has not a good Fortune of his own) is thought the worse of by those who deal with him, because he is trusted with very great Sums, far more than he is worth. The more he is intrusted with, the more are his Gains, and the safer all think themselves that have money in his hands.

There is in the Close of this Article another Charge, that I did publickly in open Court, falsely represent the Masters admitted by me, as Persons of great Fortunes, and in every respect qualify'd for the Trust reposed in them, to the manifest Deceit and Injury of the Suitors.

My

My Lords, as to that, I think nothing can more plainly shew, than this Article, and what has been said upon it, the forced Constructions put upon what I do.

Mr. Waller proves, that in July 1723, I declar'd in Court, that the Masters were Persons of as good Fortunes and Abilities as any Set of Masters had ever been before them. Which is spoke of the whole Body of Masters, and not of those only who were admitted by me. He says he was astonish'd at it. But he has given no Reason why. If he knew any thing, that any of them were not such as I described them; a little Candour would have made him believe, that I was not rightly apprized of their Characters; and a little Concern for the Honour of the Court, wherein he was a Practiser, would have made him set me right.

But, my Lords, is there any Reason assigned, why I should think otherwise than I spoke?

Mr. Lightboun is examin'd, to prove, that he told me, some of them were suspicious: But he does not say any such thing. All he says is, that he took notice to me of Mr. Dormer's misfortune, and told me, he knew not how soon the like misfortune might happen to others; which might be, (though they were all sufficient) if the Person, with whom they should deposit Effects, upon going into the Country, should fail.

But his Expression is a little remarkable; that he cannot say he told me any of the Masters particularly were suspicious, "For he did not know how far he might be liable to an Action." An Action! what! for one Master informing the Chancellor, of the Circumstances of other Masters, in order to have proper Care taken! could he fear it? Who was to be the Witness? What must be the ground of the Action, if he told nothing but what was true?

But I think, he said he had not any particular Grounds for his Suspicion; and he says, I was unwilling to believe it of any of them. Why? because (as he says I told him) I had had very good Characters of them, and therefore I hoped they were all good Men.

It was not very kind, in that Gentleman, to call it an Unwillingness to believe, there was Ground to suspect them; when I assigned some Reasons, why I should not suspect them; and he gave me none, why I should.

So that here appears not any Reason, why I should believe otherwise than what Mr. Waller heard me say.

But to what end should I say it, if I did not believe it? Or how were the Suitors injured, or deceived by my saying so? Mr. Waller was not deceived; was any body else deceived? Or could any one be injured? But they have discover'd a reason, why I said it. They say that Mr. Fellowes was just dead, and there was a Master's Place then vacant: And that fact they have proved. But can any thing be more strained, than their Inference from it? Did I design, by saying these Masters were men of Fortunes and Ability, to raise the Price of that Vacancy? or to tempt Beggars to come in, that cared not what Price they gave? Does not what was then done, clear me of all Suspicion of that kind? Mr. Elde was the Person then admitted, a Gentleman of a very good Estate, of very good Character in Westminster-Hall, and 750 l. more offer'd by another, that was no Beggar neither, refused. And after that, Mr. Thurston was admitted, preferably to one that offer'd 6000 l. Is it possible, that I should give better Proof that I had not that avaricious View in it, that is suggested?

It was observ'd by one of the Gentlemen, that open'd the Evidence, that this was upon a remarkable occasion, when the Master of the Rolls had made an Order upon one of the Masters, to make a Suitor some Compensation out of his own money in the Master's hands, and I set it aside. And Mr. Waller began to tell something of the merits of the Case. But a very learned and a very judicious Gentleman, one of the managers, was pleased to say, They did not dispute the Justice of my Order; nor is there any Charge of such Injustice in the Articles.

XII. The next Article is the 12th, which sets forth

" That whilst the said Thomas Earl of Macclesfield executed the Office of Lord Chancellor, an unjust and fraudulent method was practised in the Court of Chancery upon the Sale of Offices of Masters of the said Court, and upon the Admission of new Masters, that the Prices or Sums of money agreed to be paid for the Purchase of the said Offices, and for the Admission thereinto, were satisfy'd and paid out of the monies and Effects of the Suitors of the Court deposited in the Hands of the respective Masters, surrendering their Offices, or dying; either by way of retenir of the Purchase in the hands of the Master resigning, or of replacing the money disburs'd for such Purchase or Admission by the succeeding Master, out of the money and Effects of the Suitors coming into his hands; by which Practice the Price and Value given upon the Sale of the said Offices, and Admissions thereinto, during the Time aforesaid, were greatly advanced, and several Persons of small Ability and Substance were encouraged to contract for the said Offices, upon a Prospect of the easy method of paying for the Purchase of the same, by means whereof great Deficiencies have incurred in the Offices of several Masters of the said Court, admitted by the said Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, which they have not been able to answer and make good; and although the said Practice was notorious and publick, and the said Earl was well inform'd thereof, and fully acquainted therewith, yet the said Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, in order to increase his own unjust and corrupt Profit in the selling the said Offices and the Admissions thereto (which in consequence of this evil Practice was rais'd and receiv'd by him out of the Effects of the Suitors, for whom he was intrusted) did not at any time, whilst he continu'd in his Office of Lord Chancellor, use or take any measures to reform the said Abuse, or to prevent the same; either by causing proper Schedules to be taken of the money and Effects of the Suitors deliver'd over and transferr'd, or by appointing any Person in his behalf, to inspect or supervise the Transfers or Deliveries thereof, or in any other manner. But on the contrary, the said Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, unjustly, corruptly, and contrary to the Duty of his said Office of Lord Chancellor (to whom the Superintendency of the said Masters and of their Accounts did appertain) did suffer the said fraudulent Practice to proceed and be exercised without any Controul or Check, whereby great Embezzlements have been made of the Suitors money and Effects, to their great Loss, in the Offices of several of the Masters of the said Court, who have not been able to answer and pay their respective “pective Ballances owing upon their Accounts, in “breach of the Trust reposed in him for the pre“servation of the Estates and Effects of the Sui“tors; to the dishonour and discredit of the said “Court, and to the great injury and defrauding of “the said Suitors in a Court of Equity, established

 “for their Relief and Protection.”

My Lords, In support of this Article, two of the Masters, Mr. Kynaston and Mr. Tho. Bennet, have sworn, that their Predecessors stopt the price of the Places out of the Suitors money, which was to be delivered over to them: and that they gave the greater Price for their Places, because they found this an easier way of purchasing them. Indeed I must confess, that, according to the manner of proceeding of these two Gentlemen, it will come out to be an exceeding easy way, which they have discovered: since, if they can prevail in their present Attempt, they will have paid no price at all for them; they are to have their money back again, and not to be in the least impoverished by the Transaction. But is there any proof, that I was (as the Article charges) well informed of it? Or that I knew any thing of it at all? Not in the least, but only upon the Oath of Mr. Tho. Bennet, who swears that in a Conversation with me about a Treaty between him and Mr. Hiccocks, I took notice of an Article in his Account, delivered in to the Lords of the Council, wherein he mentioned 9075 l. of his Cash to be in the hands of Persons of Ability, meaning, as he after explained it, in the hands of Mr. Hiccocks his Predecessor and myself; and said, I was sorry for it, because it was discovering the method of paying for their Places out of the Court money, which I had taken care constantly to deny.

This (supposing my meaning to be what he would have) is surprizing. He says, that at the beginning of this discourse I was so cautious, that I would not speak to him about returning the money I had had, because probably he might be examined about that Conversation in another place. And yet he pretends that in the same Conversation I told him this. But does even he pretend, that I ever knew this, which I had taken care to deny? And was this a time to tell him of it, when he says, I expected he might probably be examined about his Conversation with me?

But I believe your Lordships will not give him the least credit, in this or any thing else that affects me. I beg leave to remind your Lordships that I asked him whether he did not then tell me, that, if Mr. Hiccocks would give him 2000 l. he would pay the rest of the money (which was to shew that he was worth at the least all but that 2000 l.) He denied it. My Lords, I then told your Lordships I could not disprove him in that, for I cannot be a Witness for myself. Therefore I asked him to another thing, wherein, if he did not tell the Truth, I might be able to falsify him; I asked him, if he had not said so to somebody else? He positively said, No. He said there was such a report, but he denied the thing. At last he did own that he had said, that if Mr. Hiccocks would repay 2000 l. he would stand it, or run the hazard, but never told any body he would pay the rest; he was not able. But Mr. Holford swears, that Mr. Tho. Bennet sent a message by him to Mr. Hiccocks, that if Mr. Hiccocks would repay 2000 l. he would discharge the Article in the Account, and take care to pay the rest, and he believed that Mr. Bennet was able to pay it, or he would not have carried the message. And another Gentleman swears, that he said he would make it up, and a third that he could or would pay it. So that he stands contradicted in this particular, which I apprehend is material, by three Witnesses.

As to the method of Payment mentioned in the Article, it is stated to be, that the Price of the Office was satisfy'd out of the Effects of the Suitors, either by way of Retainer of the Purchase Money in the hands of the Master surrendring, or of replacing the money disbursed for such Purchase by the succeeding Master, out of the money and Effects of the Suitors coming to his hands: and the Methods suggested for preventing this, are, causing proper Schedules to be taken of the money and Effects deliver'd over, or appointing Persons to inspect or supervise the Deliveries; but I took not these measures, nor any others.

My Lords, the method of paying by Retainer could only be upon Surrenders. And why should I there assist to raise the Price? why assist to get a higher Price for one, whom I was to have no more to do with, only to have a poorer man come in, that might bring Disgrace upon the Court and upon me?

As for the other method, the replacing the money paid, that is, as I understand it, borrowing the money to make payment, and then when the Effects are transferred, discharging the Debt out of them: How was that to be hindered? not by Schedules, and seeing the Effects deliver'd over. The Delivery of the Effects is necessary to put that method in practice, and is far from hindering it.

But is this delivery over of the Effects so very material? Mr. Meller did not deliver over the Effects to Mr. Borret for some time: had they been still in his hands, had it been the worse for the Suitors? Whatever a Master does not deliver over, he continues responsible for, and the Suitors have the same Security for them, as they had before. Hiccocks and Rogers did not deliver over the Effects, but stopt Part for Payment; the consequence is, that they are compelled to bring them in. Had Schedules been made, and the Effects deliver'd over, and so Kynaston and Bennet been forced to pursue the other method, the Suitors had not had either Hiccocks or Rogers at Stake.

Indeed I never apprehended it necessary for me to see the Orders for Transfers obeyed, any more than any other Orders of the Court. It is the Interest of the new Master to call for the Effects, and of the old one to have a regular Discharge, which I do not see how he can have, without an Inventory of the Particulars, and a Receipt upon it; which is what I understand to be a Schedule, tho' it be never filed; tho' I apprehend the word Schedule is taken in a different Sense in the Report to the Council. And this I did believe the Interest of the Parties had made them do. Nor has it yet been shewn, that it was my Duty to look after these Transfers. By what Law, by what established Practice, where does it appear, that a Chancellor is bound to see such Schedules made, and the Effects transferred? If it be his Duty, without doubt there is some method, by which it may appear he has discharged it, in cases where he has done so. But is there ever any Entry made of it? Are the Schedules filed with any Attestations, that the Effects were actually delivered over in presence of Persons appointed by the Lord Chancellor? The Effects in Mr. Holford's Case were deliver'd over, I think, the day of his admittance, in Mr. Lovibond's in about a Week, in Mr. Bennet's in a short time; whether in presence of Inspectors, appointed for that purpose, or not, has not appeared. Yet, my Lords, the Question is not now, Whether it be wiser and better to have Schedules prepared and filed, and for a Lord Chancellor to give Orders to see it done: But whether it be his Duty so that it is a Crime not to see it done? If the Suitors desire to have Schedules filed, in order to be the better able to know how much the new master is charged with; it is their part to search and make Application; and upon such Application, it is the Chancellor's part to make proper Orders; which they again are to take care to draw up, to enter, to prosecute, and see executed. And as to my desire, and Intention, to increase my own unjust Gain; which is to give the Tincture of Guilt to this, and make it criminal; can it be conceived, that I, who take not advantage of a higher Price, when I may have it, should, in order to raise the Price, refuse to check a Practice which the masters are supposed to make use of, to the prejudice of the Suitors, and only for their own Gain?

XIII, XIV, XV, XVI, XVII.

The 13, 14, 15, 16, and 17th Articles all relate to Dormer's Affair; and contain several supposed Stratagems to conceal his Deficiency: all founded upon the same View, and to prevent the Gain upon Sale of Offices from being lessen'd. Without that View to gain, I do not see any thing in these Articles, that is criminal. And therefore, if, in your Lordships Judgment, I shall stand acquitted of that, upon a full examination how my Heart stood affected in that Particular, I think all must fall to the ground.

XIII. As to the 13th Article particularly; It sets forth That from an Apprehension that a publick Discovery of Dormer's Deficiency might lessen the unjust Gain I propos'd to make to myself by selling and disposing the Offices of Masters, I neglected and declined either to secure his Person or Estate, or to make a proper Inquiry into the Deficiency; but endeavoured by many indirect Practices to conceal from the Suitors the true State and Condition of his Office, as well with respect to his Effects, as to his Debt to the Suitors. And the latter part of the Article says, That upon Motion made in the Court of Chancery (after I knew Dormer was absconded) to have the Effects of some of the Suitors transferred to another Master for better securing them, I, to delude the Suitors into a Belief that the Effects were safe, and thereby prevent a publick Inquiry, there said, That the Parties need not be in haste, that Dormer was only gone to take the Air in the Country, that he would return in a little time, and all would be well.

As to this latter part, they have not so much as examined a Witness to prove it: So that what Evidence has been offer'd upon this Article, amounts in truth to no more, than a Proof of Dormer's being deficient. But as to any Endeavour of mine to conceal the State of that Affair? or any refusal or neglect to do my Duty? there is no Proof.

It appears, that he went off in November 1720, that his Clerk and his Servants by his Order, gave out, that he was only gone into the Country for a while. But he was gone into Holland for fear of a Gaol. I knew nothing of it till after Christmas, and then all the Steps were taken that were thought most likely to get as much as possible for the Suitors. His Chambers were searched by some of the masters, and directions were given to stop the transferring his Effects in the public Funds. And it was carried on so far, that he was stripp'd of all, and with Tears begged, that Application should be made to me, for some Allowance out of it for his Subsistence; which Mr. Cottingham refused, because the Estate fell short, and he knew I could not order him the money of other People. And it is not now pretended, that any thing was not discovered by him, but only a parcel of Hops; and that plainly was not concealed fraudulently; for he made no advantage of it; the Hops are unfold to this day.

But the Charge of concealing Dormer's Affair being the Foundation of so many Articles, give me leave here to say something of it, tho' they have made no Proofs of it, or of the other Facts in this Article.

My Lords, He going away in November, and never appearing more in Court, or in his Office, but another put into his Place in May; it is impossible his failing was, or could be, kept a Secret. Must not all the Suitors, who had money in his hands, know that he was gone? For my own part, I never imagined it was a Secret. And as they, and their Agents, could not but know what was doing; had they not been satisfied, that the Court was taking the best measures to make up the Deficiency; would they not have made Application for some Relief? I did believe the masters would make it good, Mr. Cottingham swears he told me so from them: He indeed does not now rightly remember the time, and answered not at first very readily whether it were before, or after November 1721, when the second Letter about the Accounts was wrote. But, of necessity, it must be before; because Mr. Edwards says, Mr. Cottingham told him it would be made up, just about the time of his being made master, which was in May 1721; and it is not pretended, there ever was any Thought, that it should be made up any other way, but by the masters. Mr. Edwards says too, some of the masters told him it would be made up; he does not remember by whom they said it should be made up; but I think he says, he thought, I believe the thing speaks, it could be by no body else but the masters. And even Mr. Lightboun's letter in 1722 takes notice of it as a thing always under deliberation, how the masters should make it up; and that he differed from the rest only in the manner; and in insisting that at the same time care should be taken, that the like Accident might not happen again, and they be exposed to another Contribution. If I was too credulous in believing this, sure it is no Crime. And I am apt to think, your Lordships will be of Opinion, that the Suitors believed the same, or those, whose money lay so that it might probably continue some Years, would have applied to have an Account taken, and that their Proportion should be reserved. But nothing of that kind was done by them. Afterwards there breaks out a Dispute between the masters and the master of the Rolls; thereupon Mr. Lightboun informs your Lordships, that many Orders were made in prejudice of the masters in other Branches of their Office; the Language of the Court varied (as he expresses it) in orders; and the money put into another Channel; whereby they lost, not only any Advantage that might be made of the money, but many Fees and Perquisites, that arose thereupon, and in the other Branches of their Office. Had not this happen'd, or should it be cured, I am persuaded that Dormer's Deficiency would all be made good. Contrary measures may prevent it.

There was some little Reflexion made upon that part of the evidence, which related to the message I first sent to the Bank; and also for that the Order, which was afterwards sent, and a Copy of it read, was never enter'd with the Register.

But your Lordships have had an Account that the effect of my message to the Bank (tho' there was no formal Order made) was, that a memorandum was entered in their Books, that no Transfer should be made without leave from the Court of Directors, or Court of Chancery, which had the desired effect. But it is true I made no formal Order, because I did not apprehend, that I had Authority to hinder them from permitting him to transfer, by an Order of Court to be entered in a Cause, wherein they were no Parties. And that which was sent after, was only to deliver them from the Restraint, they, it seems, look'd upon themselves to be under, by that message; and to answer the Entry in their Book.

And as to its not being enter'd; I must likewise observe, that even the Directions sent in November last to the masters by advice of the Committee of Council, for preparing and bringing in their Accounts were never entered: And yet the Gentlemen will not imagine, that that could be with a design to have it kept a Secret; but the true and only reason of it was, that those Forms are not necessary, but in adversary Suits, or unless there be occasion to enforce the execution of such Orders by the Process of the Court.

But they charge and argue, altho' they have proved nothing, that I have neglected my Duty.

My Lords, It is proved that I did a great deal more than they have proved to be my Duty. And what did I omit?

Obj. I did not (say they) secure his Person.

Resp. My Lords, was that a Crime? He was in Holland out of my reach. When he came into England, it was to deliver up all he had to the Suitors, and on promise of Liberty.

But if I had, would that have been of use to the Suitors?

Obj. I issued no Sequestration to seize his Estate.

Resp. The Estate was got without one, which is much better. The most usual Allowance upon a Sequestration is 6 s. 8 d. a day to every one of the Sequestrators that are employed to put it in execution, which would soon have eat up great part of the Estate. And I do not know that the Sequestrators would have found out the poor parcel of Hops, which is all that was not got then; and it was not imbezzled, but has been brought in now without the help of a Sequestration.

Obj. I did not examine him upon Interrogatories.

Resp. I order'd Cottingham to propose to the masters, whether they would have one; and they thought he would make a fair Discovery without, and were afraid lest that appearance of Distrust and Hardship might drive him away again, but if they should find it requisite, they would apply. No application was ever made to me to have it, nor does there any fraudulent Concealment appear, nor any thing diverted from the Satisfaction of the Suitors. And if he made a fair and honest Discovery of all, what imports it, whether he were sworn, or not sworn to it?

But I would beg leave to ask, Why should I neglect what was proper?

The Reason they assign is, That if I had done these things, it would have made a Noise and brought the Matter out.

My Lords, what could make a greater Noise, than that a master in Chancery absconded, and no money was received or paid, nor Business done in his Office from November to May, and then another put in his Place.

One of the Gentlemen expresses his Astonishment, how it could enter into my Heart, that this could always be concealed, or that so ghastly a Wound could ever heal of itself, without the Application of proper Remedies.

My Lords, it is yet more astonishing that it should enter into my Heart to endeavour to conceal it, for those Reasons which he supposes I had in view. And I should have thought the Arguments that raised his Wonder at my having done so, strong Arguments that I never did it; and indeed it is impossible I should endeavour or hope to conceal that, which I knew was so notorious and publickly known. Nor was I without Endeavours towards healing the Wound: Some of those Endeavours are attempted now to be made part of my Crime.

XIV. The 14th Article suggests, "That the said Fleetwood Dormer having towards Satisfaction of the Suitors of the said Court, assigned to Henry Edwards, Esq. (who succeeded him in his Office of Master of the said Court of Chancery) a Debt of 24046 l. 4 s. or some other great Sum due from William Wilson, a Banker, to the said Fleetwood Dormer, to the intent that the money received on the Account thereof, should be applied and disposed of, as the said Court of Chancery should order and direct, the said Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, whilst he continued Lord-Chancellor of Great-Britain, for the unlawful Purposes aforesaid, without Regard to the Interest of the Suitors, by Colour of his Office, did, in an unwarrantable, clandestine, and unusual manner, authorize, direct, and establish, a precarious and trifling Composition with the said William Wilson, upon the Terms of the said William Wilson's paying the Sum of 1463 l. 2 s. 1 d. and assigning 10000 l. part of a Debt of 22060 l. 12 s. 5 d. pretended to be due to the said William Wilson from Edward Poulter, or to that Effect, in discharge of the said Debt: And to that End, upon the Report of John Hiccocks, Esq. then one of the Masters of the said Court, without any Attendance ordered or had thereupon, and without Notice to the said Suitors, did by a private Order not made in open Court, order the said Henry Edwards to accept of the said Composition, in full Discharge of the said Debt, which said Edward Poulter was a Person insolvent, and has since absconded for Debt, and none, or a very small part of the said 10000 l. has been, or is ever likely to be received."

This Article your Lordships observe relates singly to the Composition with Wilson, which is charged to be authorized by me to the unlawful Purposes aforesaid, that is, to conceal Dormer's Deficiency, and keep up the Prices of the Offices.

Suppose this Transaction had been publick, nay suppose Wilson had been openly sued for this Debt; would that have fallen the Price of Offices, or discovered Dormer's Deficiency? If his absconding and assigning his Place to Mr. Edwards, did not discover it; would the Proof of his assigning this Debt to Mr. Edwards have discovered it? What End then could the Privacy of this Transaction serve?

But tho' it does not answer the Purpose, that is charged; yet it is insisted upon to be prejudicial to the Suitors, and giving up a great part of the money due to them from Wilson, and done in a clandestine manner, and without their Knowledge.

What Proof then is there, that this Composition was prejudicial to the Suitors? A small one it is indeed, but for a desperate Debt; and what Proof is there that they could have had a better; or that it had been better to have had none?

It is said, that Wilson paid to some of his Creditors their whole Debts.

It is true, that was said, but it has not been proved. If it had been proved, and the Circumstances shewn, probably it would have appeared, that he had a particular View in paying those their whole Debts, and it might be more beneficial to him to do so, and keep them his Friends; than if he had paid them only a part, as he did to his other Creditors.

And as small as the Sum is, my Lords, give me leave to say, it had never been got in for the Benefit of the Suitors, if this Composition had not been made. So that 2463 l. has been got for the Creditors, tho' no more should be recovered from Poulter, than the 1000 l. already got from him; where nothing had else been had, for what appears.

Obj. But Poulter was insufficient, and the Debt assigned from him worth nothing.

Resp. As to Poulter's Circumstances at that time: Some Persons have been called, who have proved ('tis true) that he was insufficient at that time, and could not pay more than three or four thousand Pounds; but the same Witnesses give an Account, that his ill Circumstances were then known but to four or five Persons of his Acquaintance, and that by all other People, who had any Knowledge of him at that time, he was looked upon to be very sufficient; he had left off his Business upon having raised an Estate; he was of good Reputation; he lived at Hackney in a House making a good Appearance, with good Furniture, and a great quantity of Plate, till the last, till the time of his being put in Prison, which was not till last Year, that he surrendered himself in discharge of his Bail.

But suppose he was not sufficient, how does that affect me? I was not obliged to concern myself with it, and left the Composition to the management of the masters; they made it: Wilson had sworn an Affidavit in Writing of his Circumstances, and that this was as much as he could pay to the Suitors: Mr. Hiccocks, a Gentleman of very good Reputation, was the master, he being then senior master, to whom I referred the Consideration of it, according to the course of the Court; he was upon his Oath in what he acted therein, and made his Report, that he was of Opinion this Composition would be for the Advantage of those to whom the money was to be paid. And upon that I grounded the Order.

Obj. But the Suitors had no Notice to dispute it.

Resp. The Consequence of that is only, that Mr. Edwards being their Trustee, and Wilson knowing it, whatever could be done between them would not bind the Suitors, if it were any way detrimental to them: Therefore they have the Benefit of all that has been got in upon it, and yet have still a right to enquire into the true Circumstances of Mr. Wilson, and to recover, in proportion with his other Creditors, any Effects he shall appear to have unfairly concealed.

Upon the whole of this Matter, could the Master, or I, have any indirect End to serve, by allowing Wilson to compound at an under rate? It is not pretended I knew him, or could intend him a Favour. Why then should I designedly lessen Dormer's Fund, which was before deficient, and which I was endeavouring to make up?

Obj. But it is said, that this was by my Direction.

Resp. Suppose it were; they have not proved any thing to induce a suspicion that it was not perfectly innocent, nay beneficial to the Suitors, or probable to be so.

But the Proof is only, that Mr. Edwards spoke to me about it, and asked me, if he might compound it of himself. I thought not: But Mr. Hiccocks having afterwards informed him that it was usual to do things of that kind upon a Report grounded on the Party's Oath, and an Order founded thereon; he proposed that method, and I thought it might be so done. And he did it.

But whether this was prudent, or imprudent; where is the Crime? This tended nothing to conceal Dormer's Affairs: he was known to be broke; and Wilson's Debt was esteemed desperate. There was no other View, nor could be, but to get somewhat towards Dormer's Deficiency, and no body is at all hurt by it.

Obj. But this was unusual.

Resp. In what?

Obj. No day was appointed to hear Counsel upon it.

Resp. My Lords, There was no occasion for Counsel; there was nothing for Counsel to be heard to; there was nothing for them to argue. The Order is in direct pursuance of the Report.

Indeed, upon carelessly reading the Article, one would imagine the Charge to be, that this was an Order made upon Mr. Edwards, without giving him Notice, or hearing Counsel for him. And that would be very unusual and unjust; if it were not that it is ordered upon his own Petition, and at his own Request.

Your Lordships will likewise observe, that this was the 3d of August, after the Seals were over; and if I must have appointed it to come on, upon a publick day (not to have it concealed) it must have waited till October; And by that time Wilson, and his Effects, might probably have been gone, and the Opportunity of getting any thing lost.

As to some few new Observations made upon reading these Proceedings, I see not how they tend to prove any Crime in me.

Obj. They are not filed.

Resp. That is not my Affair. And if they are never filed, they will affect no body, and cannot possibly do harm.

Obj.

Obj. Some Lines or Words appeared raised out: which import that Mr. Edwards should be indemnified.

Resp. If he acted fairly in this matter, he would be indemnified, tho' those Words were out; and if he did not, they ought not to be in.

In short, here is not the least Evidence, but that this Composition was made with a View to get as much as could be for the Suitors, out of a desperate Debt; there is no body hurt by it; and if it be not of advantage to the Suitors, they may avoid it.

XV, XVI. The 15, 16, and 17th Articles were opened together: But one Gentleman spoke more particularly to the 17th, as being of different nature from the others; and therefore I will speak to it separately.

The principal Subjects of the 15th and 16th Articles are 4500*l.* raised by the masters, and 1000*l.* by myself, towards Dormer's Deficiency.

In the last Article I spoke to, the Crime was, the lessening Dormer's Effects by a trifling Composition; in these, increasing them 5500*l.* is a Crime.

At first sight, one would think this commendable, but, by I know not what Fatality, every thing grows criminal by my having any concern in it. My Intention infects all. It is said that I intended by it to carry on my corrupt Purposes, that is, as one of the Gentlemen explained it, to conceal Dormer's Deficiency.

But all that appears upon the Proofs offered relating to my Intentions is, that here was a strong Desire to make good Dormer's Deficiency; and that way of concealing it is surely not blameable.

But then as to the 4500*l.* is it said, that I induced the masters to pay it by colour of my Authority.

How is this proved?

Mr. Conway produces, and proves, the Receipt he had given him by Mr. Edwards, for 500*l.* voluntarily contributed by him towards Mr. Dormer's Deficiency; and says, that he had promised it in February, and paid it accordingly in August.

Mr. Edwards says, that in 1721 he received 500*l.* apiece from all the masters, but Mr. Lightboun.

Mr. Lightboun says, that when Mr. Cottingham spoke to him of it in February 1720, he told him, all the other masters had agreed to it; but Mr. Lightboun refused it: That I never spoke to him of it till January 1722, which was near two Years after; that then, I was so far from making use of my Authority, that when he asked me, whether it was my Proposal or the masters; upon its being said, it came from the two senior masters, he took occasion to speak more freely against it; and though I used some Arguments with him, yet he says I left him to his own Inclinations.

My Lords, these are their Proofs. But they are to be helpt out by some Constructions.

Obj. It is said, that the Letter which I caused to be sent in February 1720 to require them to give in their Accounts, was in order to terrify them to come into a Composition: for it is said, when that had its effect, and the money was paid, they were not obliged to bring in their Accounts.

Resp. This then, I suppose, is that Colour of Authority by which (according to the Charge in this Article) I induced them to contribute.

But in the first place I beseech your Lordships to consider, whether it can be thought, that any of the masters would pay 500*l.* rather than let me know what was in his hands; which was all the Consequence of my having an Account? If it cannot; why should it be, without the least Proof, imagined, that I should expect it?

In the second place I must beg leave to observe, that the masters best know, what effect that Letter had upon them, and what was the motive of their advancing that money; but none of them have sworn, that they were in the least induced to pay the money by the fear of that Letter, or by the apprehension of being forced to give in their Accounts if they did not comply. Nor do the Circumstances shew it. For Mr. Conway came in but in that February, and had but little money in his hands, and a very short Account to make. Mr. Kynaston and Mr. Tho. Bennet, who are now deficient, were not then masters. Mr. Holford had got an Account ready, yet he paid. Mr. Lightboun gave in no Account, and yet he did not pay.

So that upon a View of the Evidence, here is a good Action done, very beneficial to the Suitors; and no indirect Practice to bring it about,

And therefore the Charge not being proved, I am according to my general Plea, not guilty of the matters contained in this Article, or any of them, in manner and form as they are therein charged against me. And there is no occasion to make out what I have stated in my Answer, to have made this matter more clear, in case they had given occasion, by having produced Evidence to maintain their Charge.

However I have shewn a second Letter, written by my Order, in November following, requiring those Accounts with more earnestness. Mr. Cottingham produces the Draught of it, and tho' he will not swear positively that he delivered or sent it; because he does not find any memorandum of it: he verily believes he did, and has not the least ground to suspect the contrary.

Your Lordships will observe, how very particular the Account was directed to be.

The first Letter was wrote the 14 of February, 1720, Your Lordships will give me leave to read the Copy kept of it.

[Reads.]

“ 14 February 1720.

“ I am commanded by my Lord to signify to you, that you do, with all convenient speed, lay before his Lordship an Account in several Columns.

“ 1. Of the Cause.

“ 2. Sollicitour, or Agent.

“ 3. The Date of the Order.

“ 4. For what Purpose the money was brought in.

“ 5. How much was brought in.

“ 6. When.

“ 7.

- “ 7. How much in hand.
- “ 8. How much on Securities.
- “ 9. How much paid out.

A distinct Account of Securities.

- “ 1. Cause.
- “ 2. From whom the Security is taken.
- “ 3. What the Security is.
- “ 4. In whose Name taken.
- “ 5. For how much each Security.
- “ 6. The total of the several Securities.
- “ 7. In whose hands lodged.

A distinct account of Money paid out.

- “ 1. Cause.
- “ 2. By what Order, of what date.
- “ 3. When paid.
- “ 4. To whom.

The second Letter is dated the 7 November 1721. And is in these words:

[Reads.]

“ By my Letter of the 14 of February last, I signified to you my Lord Chancellor's pleasure, which was that you should with all convenient speed lay your Account before his Lordship, the method whereof was to be in several Columns subscribed at the foot of that Letter. I am now farther to acquaint you, that his Lordship is very much surprized to find that in all this time no such Account hath been laid before him; and therefore hath commanded me to tell you, that it is expected to be delivered on or before the last Day of this Term; and if this is not complied with, you will oblige his Lordship (tho' very unwillingly) to think of other measures, which I doubt not but you will avoid by a ready compliance with what is a second time required of you. And to the end there may be no mistake as to the method of your accounting, I have subscribed it again at the foot of this Letter.”

And Mr. Cottingham explains what he apprehends was meant by that Passage of other Measures, that I would make an Order in form, that is, an Order of Court to be entered with the Register. He tells your Lordships what Representations they made of the Difficulties of drawing up such Accounts: And I did not afterwards insist upon them. And your Lordships will be pleased to observe, that the Letter sent by me, in Form of an Order, in November last, by Advice of the Lords of the Council, was for an Account much in the same manner. The words are these:

[Reads.]

“ Dated 3 November 1724.

“ Let the several masters of the High Court of Chancery forthwith prepare and deliver to me a perfect Account of the money in their Hands, therein distinguishing in several Columns.
“ The Names of the Parties to the Cause.

Vol. VI.

“ The Dates of the Orders for } { Money or bringing in } { Securities.

“ The Time of bringing in each Sum.
“ Particularly expressing the Sums transferred and paid to them at their coming into their Offices, in the first Place.

“ How the same hath been disposed,

“ What Sums paid out, and to } { when and “ whom, } { by what “ What invested in Securities, } { Order.
“ Specifying the Securities by Dates, Numbers, &c.

“ Where the Securities are at present,
“ What money remains in their Hands,
“ Where the same now is.

Mr. Holford tells your Lordships, that another Account was carried in by my Order instead of one so particular; for that an Account drawn up in that manner, would have taken up several months: And in February 1721 or 1722 it must have taken up many more; because there were then masters, who had been much longer in their Offices, than Mr. Holford the now Senior master had, in November last, been in his. And those Accounts must have gone through their whole Time. And, if your Lordships will be pleas'd to look upon the Report on the Table, it will appear that the Judges and Directors reported, that no regular Accounts could be taken, unless they were brought down from the Beginning of the time, that each master had been in his Office; and yet the Lords never insisted on any such Accounts afterwards (tho' I had made an Order for them by their Advice) nor the Lords Commissioners since; which what is it, but falling into the same Sentiments that I had done before? The requiring the Dates of the Orders on which money was paid, and the Solicitors Names (which I found not one of the masters was able to give me) was intended by me, that I might be able to make some Examination into the Truth of the Accounts, that should be given in. And for want of that, your Lordships know, what methods the Lords Commissioners have been forced to take; to have the Accounts of the several masters printed and publish'd, and dispersed throughout England at a publick Expence; that People may come in voluntarily to make a Surcharge. And yet it is well known, that the preparing the present Accounts, short as they are, containing only the Balances of Securities and Cash, which the masters owned to be then in their Hands in each Cause, so took up their Times, that the Business of the Court before them stood still for some time, and their Attendance in Court was dispensed with. No Wonder then if I did not insist on these Accounts, which were to be attended with so troublesome, so tedious, and so fatiguing an Enquiry.

These are some Facts, that I have not indeed examined to; but with Submission I do not stand in need of them: If I did, they are notorious; and I believe the managers, some of them at least, know them, and will not deny them; and the masters, being your Lordships Attendants, may be asked to them, by any of your Lordships, who shall think think there needs any farther Satisfaction to be given concerning them.

Obj. But why then did I not content myself with the shorter Accounts, and take them at least, such as were deliver'd into the Committee of Council?

Resp. As to those Accounts; I shall beg leave to say something upon them under the 18th Article, which, I flatter myself, will give your Lordships intire Satisfaction on that Head.

Upon the 16th Article I take the Liberty to say as to the 1000 l. paid on Mrs. Chitty's Account; I never expected that an Act of Humanity to Mr. Lockman should be made a Crime.

The supposed Crime, I think, consists in this, That it was in farther Prosecution of my unjust and corrupt Purposes, that is, Keeping up my gain in selling Places, by concealing Dormer's Deficiency.

How is this proved?

Mr. Lockman tells of his applying to me, and my saying to him at first, that it should be paid; but telling him after, that there were not sufficient of Dormer's Effects left; that the masters were in great Apprehensions of losing the Profits of their Places, and were not willing to advance any money; that he told me of a Composition he had made, that the Time was near; that then I said, I would order Cottingham to pay the money; but told him, that if Mrs. Chitty had nothing else, he might by marrying her make himself worse; for there would be no more money paid her thence. And he swears that he did not look upon that Sum to be paid out of Compassion, but only as it was due. He says, it was about a fortnight before the 1000 l. was paid, that I told him no more would be paid. Upon some Questions put to him by me, he said, he asked for another 1000 l. on account of Mrs. Chitty's Children: But that after I had told him, no more than the first mention'd 1000 l. would be paid, which was a fortnight before it was paid, he asked it no more; and deny'd that he apply'd for the Payment of 500 l. or 574 l. after I had promis'd the 1000 l.

My Lords, all this, supposing it true, does not prove that I paid this money to conceal Dormer's Deficiency; for he says I told him before, that Dormer's Effects were all gone; and at the Time when I made the Promise of that money, I told him no more of her money would be paid.

And is it rightly collected from this Action, without farther Proof, that my Intention in paying this money, was to conceal the very thing, which I at the same Time expressly published?

But, my Lords, it is fully proved on my Part by Mr. Cottingham and Mr. Elphinstone, that this 1000 l. was advanced out of a generous Compassion, and not out of any by-end: That his Application was founded on this, that he was to marry Mrs. Chitty, and was to have this 1000 l. to pay a Composition for his Debts; that I had sent him word of the Deficiency, and that he could not have the money; so the great Secret was out: But that he afterwards appear'd in the utmost Distress and Agony, in Danger of laying violent Hands on himself, and desperate: This Distress moved me; I told him, I would order the money to be paid out of Compassion to him; he afterwards spoke of it with the utmost Acknowledgment: I told him this, and gave the Order accordingly on Monday, and it was paid the Thursday following, which was the 30th of July; and as to Mr. Lockman's Testimony, who denied that he apply'd for a farther Sum; it has been proved, under his own Hand, that he apply'd for 574 l. for Mrs. Chitty, on Pretence she could no otherwise spare him the whole 1000 l. and this after the time was appointed for Mrs. Chitty to receive the 1000 l.

Here the Earl of Macclesfield informing the Lords, that he found himself so far spent, as not to be able to proceed at present, the House adjourned during Pleasure, and after some time the House being resumed, the Earl of Macclesfield went on.

My Lords, when your Lordships were pleased to allow me to retire, I was just upon Mrs. Chitty's 1000 l. and had spoke of that Part of the Transaction that related to Mr. Lockman. And as to the next, which is the Charge of endeavouring to persuade the masters to advance that 1000 l. and using the Arguments in the Article mention'd for that Purpose:

Upon the Evidence it does appear, that there was a meeting of the masters at my House in the latter end of July last; and some such Arguments used as in the Articles, but not (as is charged) to have a present Purpose of paying the 1000 l. answered, but to have Dormer's Deficiency all made good, by small annual Payments out of each Office. A View, which I hope your Lordships will think very innocent and commendable, whether likely to be successful or not. And this was so much the Intent of my desiring the masters to come together, that tho' that 1000 l. was the immediate Occasion, that discover'd the Effects to be then all gone, and so might naturally be mentioned, and I doubt not but it was, I do not yet remember that I persuaded the masters to pay it; Nor does Mr. Lovibond remember it; and Mr. Holford's Expression was (if I took him right) only, that he apprehended it was mentioned as if the masters should contribute to make up that 1000 l. However, my Lords that was not the End which I aimed at and mentioned; and upon the whole Evidence all agree, that the Discourse about the 1000 l. was soon over, and ended with my saying, That I would take, or had taken Care of it. Mr. Lightboun says, he is not sure which of the two Expressions I made use of. And even Mr. Tho. Bennett says, that when I had said so, nothing was afterwards said of that, but of Dormer's Deficiency; and then came in the Discourse of the Parliament. Mr. Holford represents it, that after some Discourse of the 1000 l. I spoke of Dormer's Deficiency; and particularly of the mischief, which was what Mr. Edwards had a little before said, that some had had all, and others none (which would not at all be cured by Payment of this 1000 l.) and that then I mentioned, that that might make great Clamour, and possibly occasion a Parliamentary Enquiry: Where if it were resolved that buying those Places was against the Statute of Ed. VI. it might affect me in the Disposal of the Places, and the masters in the Enjoyment of their Places: He says several things were proposed, but nothing agreed on. One Proposal was, whether if the masters were continued on the same Foot they had been; it would not be worth their while to contribute?

The masters have not had so good memories in this Case as I hoped. But Mr. Lovibond does swear, swear, that all or the greatest Part did then agree, that if their Offices were establish'd, as they had been for forty Years, they would make an annual Contribution towards Dormer's Deficiency. And he heard no body say otherwise, only he himself (he says) did not agree to it.

So that it appears upon the whole, that what I said was not with Intent to supply a present Purpose, as is charged; for I had declared to them, I had taken care of that, or would take care of it. And if I could, by setting such an Example, or by any Arguments I could use, induce them to contribute by Payments, as they could be spared out of the Profits of their Offices, to make good the whole Deficiency, or if not all, yet to make good the Proportion of those who had had no part of Dormer's Effects, I see no harm; and I am sure there was no Fraud in it. It is to conceal it and prevent Clamour or Inquiry about it, only by paying it; which would leave no Room or Occasion for Clamour or Inquiry; or if they could not pay the Whole, by paying the Proportion which any one could be intitled to.

And this Proposal, to have it paid by Annual Payments out of the several Offices, did not tend to raise the Price of them, but on the contrary by laying a Burden upon them, would greatly diminish their Value.

Whether the Design I had, or the Arguments I used, were prudent, or discreet, or proper, I submit to your Lordships Judgment; but the Arguments were not used for the Purposes in the Article, but for the Benefit of the Suitors of the Court.

But to give this some appearance of a Crime, they are forced to attribute it to criminal Views and Designs, of which they have made no Proof; nor shewn any Probability, scarce Possibility, that they were the Principles of this Action.

I might farther observe, that the paying the 1000 l. and leaving the 500 l. (which in the very same Order is directed to be paid to the Plaintiff) unpaid, and the 574 l. demanded by Mr. Lockman, unpaid; would not at all hinder the Deficiency from breaking out.

As to the Expression charged in the End of the Article, to be used by me, I agree, I used one very near it; but with other Expressions along with it (which the Witnesses in effect owns) that shew, I could not possibly have any ill Design in it; nor could any Inconvenience ensue upon it. No Question had till that time been laid before the Court relating to Dormer's Deficiency: Chitty's was only an Application for Favour, for a Sum then particularly wanted, because there were at that time no Effects; and was paid by me out of Compassion; there was no Question of Right about it to be decided, as was here, when the Dispute was, who was to bear the Loss, if any, and could be determined only upon Circumstances. I at the same time was so far from endeavouring to have it believed, that there was no Deficiency in Dormer's Office, or that I knew not of it, that I declared a great deal, which I knew about that matter.

As to what they object, that the Order is drawn up in such a manner as implies (as they say) my being wholly ignorant of the matter, by directing an Enquiry whether there was likely to be any Deficiency or not:

Give me leave to say, that if I had known more of it; if I had known to a Farthing what Dormer's Deficiency would be; I could not as a Judge found an Order upon my own private Knowledge, but must make it in the same manner as if I had known nothing at all; and accordingly that Order is worded in the same manner, as it must have been, if I had never heard of Dormer's Failure before.

Besides, it had been then talked, that Wilson had not dealt fairly in his Composition; and if so, and if he were worth it, the Suitors might recover near 22,000 l. more against him. A matter extremely proper for the master to enquire into.

XVII. As to the 17th Article, which relates to Orders for payment of monies deposited with Dormer; which Mr. Edwards (as is charged) was directed by me to pay, without regard to that Proportion, which ought to have been observed in a defective Fund.

They have read four Orders made by me, and no more, three of them in one Cause; and only one of them directs the whole money to be paid out. I said in my Answer, that I did not know that I had made any other Order than that of Chitty; but believed the Court might have made others; which gave occasion, it seems, to some of the Gentlemen to wonder at the Distinction between me and the Court. My meaning was, that such Orders might have been made by the Court in my absence, for ought appeared; that is, by the master of the Rolls and Judges, with others in Commission for hearing of Causes.

But as to what was done by me; the proper Answer to this Article, the true one, and I hope a satisfactory one, is, that I acted so as I thought would be most for the good and benefit of the Suitors. I fully believed all along, that the Whole would be made good, to which I contributed all I could; and I acted accordingly. If I was mistaken, I hope it is no Crime.

XVIII. As to the 18th Article, three Neglects are charged upon me in this Article.

1. Not taking proper care of the Securities lodged with the masters.
2. Not taking Security for the Cash.
3. Not taking the masters Accounts.

There is another thing expressed, which is permitting and encouraging the masters to traffick with the Suitors money and Effects. But that I apprehend means only, that the not taking due care to hinder them, is permitting and encouraging them. So that it does not make a distinct Branch of the Article; but is only a supposed Consequence of the rest.

As to the Securities and Cash, what I am charged to have omitted doing, was never done before by my Predecessors, nor desired then of me by the Suitors. And, therefore I suppose, there is a particular Reason assigned why it should have been done by me, tho' not before; and that is Mr. Dormer's mer's Failure, which is charged to have been chiefly occasion'd by his taking upon himself unduely to dispose and employ the money and Effects of the Suitors in his hands. And this the Article charges that I knew.

My Lords, as to this particular Reason: To add a new Duty to my Office from it, and to lay me under an Obligation to do that, which my Predecessors were not obliged to; it ought to be clearly made out that the Fact is true, that this was the Cause of Dormer's Failure; that I knew it to be so; and that thereby it became my Duty, unasked by the Parties interested, to make the new Provision expected. But there is no Proof that Dormer did unduely dispose of or employ the money and Effects of the Suitors in his hands; much less is it proved, that I ever knew it, or had the least reason to suspect it; but the contrary.

The Account Mr. Parkhurst gave of what passed at the time of Dormer's going off, was this (which was represented to me, and never shew'd to be false) That Mr. Dormer, who was his Uncle, informed him, that having happened to receive a greater Sum than ordinary out of the Exchequer, and going into the Country in the Long Vacation 1720, he knew not where to leave it safer than with Mr. Wilson, an eminent Banker; and he left it with him to the value of 24,000*l*; that upon his return to Town, he found Mr. Wilson stopt payment; and that therefore he would withdraw himself, for fear of a Goal; that accordingly he went into Holland, and wrote a Letter from Rotterdam to Mr. Parkhurst, with one inclosed, to be shewn to the masters, and sent to me or Mr. Cottingham; he gave some account of the Letter, that it set forth the Case to the effect above; and the Draught thereof is in the hands of the managers, which they might produce, if they thought proper. This I took to be the true State of the Case; and never heard any thing to the contrary (except Mr. Lightboun's Gueffes, founded on no Fact, but on the greatness of the Sum, which this accounts for another way) till December last, when I was told, that Wilson pretended, he borrowed it of Mr. Dormer at an high Interest; but as this appears to be spoke in excuse of himself, an After-thought at four Years distance is little to be regarded, and however, if it were true, ought not to affect me, to whom it was never disclosed. But according to this that I have stated above, which was certainly the truth of the Case, or however what appeared to me; Dormer's Failure was not occasioned by his undue disposing of or employing the money and Effects; but it was a Misfortune owing to the Year 1720, and Circumstances peculiar to that Time; so not likely to happen again. On Dr. Eddisbury's Failure there appeared no Accident, but his own ill Conduct: Yet no Change was made by the Lord Chancellor, as to the Effects, or Cash, or giving Security.

But it was urged, that tho' this had not been desired of me by the Suitors, it had been proposed to me by the masters themselves:

And three of the masters were called to prove this. But only two of them pretend to have spoke to me about it, Mr. Lightboun and Mr. Kynaston. Mr. Holford the 3d says, He never was once with me about it, only he liked some things which Mr. Lightboun told him he proposed.

Mr. Lightboun's whole Evidence, taken all together, clearly proves what I set forth in my Answer; that I had in view three things. 1. The making good Dormer's Deficiency. 2. Settling the masters in their just Rights. 3. Securing the Suitors from future Accidents. The 1st was the Principal, and always uppermost with me. The 2d was plainly necessary, in order to that. The 3d for securing the Suitors from future Accidents of that kind, I was likewise very desirous of; but, I own, at that time, while I thought the masters then in being Persons of Ability and Substance, and he gave me no reason to think otherwise, I apprehended there was no need of any extraordinary Expedition in it.

As to making good the Deficiency; It appears, that at the time of Mr. Lightboun's Proposal, the masters were all willing to contribute; only Mr. Lightboun stood out; and his Reason, which in his Examination to the 16th Article he says, he upon one Occasion mentioned to me as sufficient, was, that it would be a Precedent for his paying other Debts of other masters. And upon his Examination to this Article, he says, that he told me in discourse on that Subject, that as Dormer's Accident had happened, the like might again; and so often, that it could not be supported; and afterwards, that if any thing could be done to make good Dormer's Deficiency, and put things upon a secure Bottom, he would be as ready to contribute as any body. He then gives an account of the Proposals he made, which he says, I desired him to reduce into Writing for my Consideration, which he did; the Copy of it was produced and read, and I have the Letter itself here in my hand; and there only, I apprehend, is to be found the Proposal which is to affect me, and not that which he now from his memory mentions to be the Proposal, but differs from the Writing in several things; which not being in the Letter, if he had mentioned them cursorily in that Discourse, I must have looked upon them as what upon farther Consideration he did not think proper.

My Lords, The occasion of the Proposal was my speaking to him about contributing to Dormer's Deficiency; and both that and the Proposal itself shew, that it was really no more, than laying before me the Terms upon which he would contribute.

In those Terms, the principal thing insisted upon by him was, that the money should be continued to be brought before the masters; which, I apprehend, had then been a little broken in upon: Which is expressed in these Words, shewing the Improbability, that a Fact objected should happen, "if (as his words are) the money be directed as usual to be brought before the masters, both by your Lordship and the master of the Rolls; without which the masters cannot think themselves much interested in the Event of Mr. Dormer's Affair."

The other thing he insisted upon was, that he should be secure from being exposed to the like Inconvenience, by failure of another master; and therefore what he proposes, in relation to securing the Effects, is not a thing proposed to be done of itself, separately, but in company with the other Regulations.

That part that relates to the Rights of the masters, was afterwards pressed farther, as it was apprehended they were more broken in upon; and produced the Representation of the masters, which Mr. Lightboun the other day mentioned to your Lordships.

And this likewise explains several parts of his Evidence: It explains what he says, that he pressed me so often to do something, and thought that to be Irresolution, which was indeed my Caution to proceed upon sure grounds, in doing a thing, which, if not perfectly well founded, might have the Appearance of being contrived on purpose to advance, or keep up the Profits of the Offices of the masters. It explains his Apprehension, that if I did not do it, it would not be done by my Successor, unless the Seal should come into the Hands of a noble Lord, whom he named. It shews, that what he pressed, was not so much for the masters to give Security, or to make up Dormer's Deficiency, and retrieve the Honour of the Court, as to have Orders made, for the Benefit of the masters; which I thought ought to go together.

For it wanted no Resolution in me, or in any other Chancellor, to make Orders upon the masters, to secure the Effects of the Suitors in their Hands; had that been the thing pressed, and especially if, as is pretended, they themselves desired it. But it might require Resolution to support the masters against the Claims of an honourable Person, with whom they then had a Dispute.

This View of this matter will make your Lordships consider it in a different light from what the managers have endeavoured to set it in; and that my Slowness did not proceed from my concern for the keeping up of the masters Offices, but from my Caution not to be too precipitate in advancing them.

And had I taken the measures desired, and made Orders to prevent the master of the Rolls from directing, in his Decrees, the money to be brought before the Usher, and from referring Irregularities to the six Clerks; and to settle in their favour the other matters in dispute (tho' I will do them the Justice to declare, that I do, so far as I have seen of it, think the masters in the right therein) yet I am apprehensive, that at first sight it would have been matter of Complaint against me, as a contrivance to advance the Offices of the masters; and that the Schemes proposed by Mr. Lightboun for giving the Security he represents as sufficient, would not have been thought a Ballance to it.

Having said this, give me leave to weigh the Proposals.

And first, his Proposals for providing for Dormer's Deficiency.

The way of doing it, which he proposes, is this: Having stated, in the first page of the Letter, what he takes to have been the occasion of this great Deficiency, he goes on, "which I hope may be provided for, and the Credit of the Court retrieved and supported by every "master advancing 2000*l.* or such other Sum as shall be agreed on, out of the Cash of the Court in his Hands; which being placed out at Interest, the yearly Income thereof, together with the Produce of Mr. Dormer's Estate, will answer the Demands that may be expected on his Successor, and will in due time make good the Debt upon the Office.

But as to this, I thought it both impracticable and insufficient; and I told him, and he very fairly owns it in his Evidence, that I could not make an Order of that kind; because it would indeed be ordering one man's money to be put out at Interest, to pay another's Debt.

His next Proposal relates to the Securities, lodged in the hands of the masters, which he thought of the greatest Consequence; because, as he now says, he told me that Dormer's Accident came by trafficking with Securities; which he inferred from a Supposition that there was not then so much Cash in his hands. This Fact is contrary to the Representation made as above to me, and the Supposition, with respect to the quantity of Cash, is obviated by his having just received a great Sum out of the Exchequer. And your Lordships have heard from the Report to the Lords of the Committee of Council, that the masters have brought in all their Securities; so that what Mr. Lightboun thought the greatest Danger, has proved to be none at all.

However, to prevent that, which he thought the greatest danger, he proposes the taking all Government Securities for the future, in the Names of two or more masters; his Words are in page the 2d. "Having before observed from whence this great Deficiency arose, I submit it to your Lordship, Whether the taking all Government Securities for the future, in the Name of two or more masters, may not prevent the like misfortune hereafter." He says now, that he proposed them to be taken in the Names of some masters, and of a third Person; but that is not mentioned in the Letter, nor does Mr. Holford mention it in his Evidence.

As to this Proposal, he has now sworn, as the Truth is, that I started a Difficulty upon that head, by objecting that this would not answer all Cases, particularly with respect to the East-India and South-Sea Bonds, by reason that they are payable to the Bearer. And his Answer was, That there was no necessity of taking these Securities; such might be taken as are transferable in the Books of the Companies.

On consulting others upon this, I found, that as to East-India and South-Sea Bonds, wholly to disallow the taking those Securities would be hard. Many People choose them, because there is little variation in the Price, only sometimes a few Shillings higher or lower; whereas in Annuities, and much more in other Stock, the fall of the Price, by the time the money was to be paid out, might eat up the Interest and more. That there would be a difficulty to dispose of those at that time in the hands of the masters; probably the Owners would not consent; it had been their choice, that had determined the laying out of the money upon those Bonds; that to send them to the market all together would occasion a fall of the Price, and a great loss, which would raise a Clamour, and give great Dissatisfaction.

I thought these several things had great Weight, and deserved most serious Consideration. I then thought of locking up these Bonds in Chests, with two Locks, one to be kept by the master, to whom they belonged, and the other by the next master after him, and to take the other securities in the Name of two masters.

But I was told by Persons of great weight, that that was but two masters instead of one, and would not be satisfactory: And should I join more of them, it would occasion more trouble, and possibly more charge; but they were still masters.

At last I resolved to take the Securities (other than the Bonds) in the Names of two masters, and a third Person to be named by the Parties. But still I stuck at the Bonds, and was never set right in that, till it was too late. But I have now learned, which neither I nor Mr. Lightboun, as your Lordships may observe by his Evidence, had skill enough to know, that they might be indorsed to two masters and a third Person, and so the Property be fixed in them; which, had I afterwards continued Chancellor, I was determined to have put in Practice.

As to the Cash, how that might be made secure, his whole Proposal is contained in these Words, in the second Page: "The Deposit to be put out at Interest, to raise a Fund for the Payment of Mr. Dormer's Debt, together with our Office, would in a great measure be a Security for the Cash, with which we should then only be intrusted." By the Deposit he means that of 2000 l. or such other Sum as should be agreed upon, as I before read to your Lordships.

This is the Nature of his Proposal, with relation to the Security for the Cash; which I apprehend must appear to be neither practicable, as I observed before, nor satisfactory. And had I built upon this, and made a Regulation accordingly, I was very apprehensive those that were before dissatisfied, would call it trifling.

He then takes notice of the money being lodged with the masters very effectually, tho' it is by way of answer to an Objection, that every master may not always have such a Sum in his Hand; to which he answers: "I will venture to say, it's scarce possible that can happen, if the money be directed as usual by your Lordship and the Master of the Rolls." And then he adds (to shew the Strefs laid upon this) "without which the masters cannot think themselves much interested in the Event of Mr. Dormer's affair." And says in the 3d Page: "If I have the happiness to have offered any thing thought practicable by your Lordship, when I have the Honour to be admitted to wait upon you, I hope to satisfy your Lordship, that I shall with Pleasure contribute, as becomes me, to facilitate any Undertaking of this kind."

I think this proves what I said in the beginning; and I submit it to your Lordships, whether I am criminal in not complying with these Proposals.

My Lords, I have told your Lordships several thoughts I had about the Securities. Give me leave to mention something of my thoughts, with relation to the Cash.

I thought to take a small Security would only shew that I was convinced that a Security was necessary, and yet trifled in it; and those that were willing to find fault, would say, it was done only to amuse the Suitors, and lull them into a false Security.

And till I could adjust the matter of the Securities lodged with them, particularly the East-India and South-Sea Bonds, no Security, that it would be practicable for the masters to give, would bear any Proportion to what was in their hands, when it should be 50, 60, or 80 thousand Pounds.

But if I could contrive to make all the Securities safe, and reduce the Cash into a narrower Compass, by making Orders for putting out the money of course, whenever, through neglect of the Parties, or otherwise, it should happen to lie beyond such a time; then a Security might be given by the masters to answer it.

But, as I told your Lordships, the East-India and South-Sea Bonds were too hard for me, till the matter was before the Committee of Council; and had the masters behaved themselves, as I expected they would in the matter of their Accounts, I then intended to have laid my Thoughts before the Council, and to have had their Authority and Sanction for putting them in Practice.

The other Proposal supposed to be made to me, is spoke to by Mr. Kynaston, and him only. And though he says all, or most of the masters, agreed to it, and thereupon he waited upon me about it; I do not find that any of the rest know any thing of it. I observed, that neither Mr. Lightboun nor Mr. Holford (both produced to this Article) are examined to this great matter, upon which the masters are said to be agreed; nor is any other master called to it, tho' his Account of it is so very imperfect, and stands in need of being explained, as well as supported. As to the Securities, it reaches not all; the Bonds are left under the same difficulty as before. And as to the Cash, he mentions no Sum or Value in which the Security was to be given.

But, my Lords, upon the whole, both from what Mr. Kynaston and Mr. Lightboun say, it is plain they were consulting their own Interest, to keep the Office free from Incumbrances: And their Interest and mine (if I could have any in view) was the same: So that if it was their Proposal, what should hinder me from agreeing to it, but that I thought it insufficient?

The third thing charged in this Article is, That I did not take the masters Accounts, that is, Accounts of what Effects of the Suitors they had in their hands.

My Lords, It is true, this was proved to be done by my Lord Cowper at his Entrance into his Office, both the first and second time; it was done by another noble Lord, as has been proved at your Lordships Bar, once, and I believe it was done by that Lord oftner.

My Lords, Had I taken their Accounts too, I doubt in me it would not have had the same approbation, as it had in those noble Lords. In my Case it would have been asked, What care I had taken to be sure that the Accounts delivered me by the masters were true? Whether I had seen the Securities and Cash? And what what Satisfaction I had; that they were able to make them good? I should, perhaps, have been told, that without that, the bare taking of an Account was of no use. And these Enquiries were of such a Nature, that if they were to be pursued effectually and with exactness, I own I had not strength to go through them.

Nor did I think the taking Accounts from the masters necessary, because I do still take the Liberty to say, I was fully persuaded, all the masters were good and honest men; and if they were not, I do not see it would be of any use to take such Accounts. For I would be glad to know, whether if I had taken an Account yearly from every master, he would have been one half-penny richer or poorer, or at all more able to pay the Suitors?

Obj. It is said indeed, that all these were wilful Omissions; and for fear the Price of Places should be sunk.

Resp. But of that there is not the least Proof. And the Circumstances of the Case above set forth, I hope, give a much more natural account of it. And the Difficulty what to do in such a case cannot be expressed by any Words I can make use of, so strongly as by what has passed, since I order'd the money and effects to be locked up, and lodged at the Bank, which were intended (and so the Order of the 17 December expresses it) to continue there only till the Affair could be more maturely considered, and a proper Provision made for the Security of the Suitors. Five months are now elapsed, and nothing has been yet done: Tho' the Suitors suffer vast Inconvenience. For, in order to get any money from thence, there must be a Master, and a Six-Clerk, and two Directors, and a Certificate from the Register, which occasions so great an Expence, that in the case of small Sums, People do not think it worth their while to go for them to the Bank, but choose to be without their Interest rather than come at it through so many Difficulties. And if the Lords Commissioners, three of them, such great men, have found this matter too difficult to settle to their Satisfaction; is it a Crime in me, that I was not able to discover a method for making things easy and secure?

This Article is closed with the great Deficiencies that have happened with regard to the Effects of the Suitors.

But, my Lords, give me leave to say, if that Deficiency have not happened by any fault of mine; if those misfortunes, which have befallen some of the masters, be not owing to any Crime in me; no part of all that is charged in this Article, ought in Justice to lie at my door. As I have observed before, the great danger, which was at first apprehended, and so often talked of by Mr. Lighboun, related only to the Securities, which the masters had in their hands; but that which happened related to the money only. And tho' this Accident fell out, whilst I had the Great Seal, yet it might as well have happened in my Predecessor's time, since nothing that I have done has given the least occasion to it.

But is there at last, any Deficiency made out to be in these masters, by which the Suitors are to be Sufferers?

Mr. Thompson has been called as a Witness to prove these Deficiencies; but he has only shewn an Estimate of Borret's Deficiency, and that some of the present masters had not paid in their Ballances at such a time; and how much the farther Sums they were to pay amounted to.

But have the Suitors therefore lost the money? No, my Lords, that does not appear; but on the contrary,

Mr. Conway, one of them, and whom they have themselves produced as a Witness, has sworn, that he has assigned an Estate sufficient to pay all his Deficiency.

One of the managers was pleased to own that he meant by Deficiencies, the money not yet paid in, nay the money not paid in at the time of making the Orders ready; and did admit, that since those Orders, there had been Satisfaction or Security for the most part.

But, my Lords, it is the Loss of the Suitors, that alone can give ground to complain.

The Order concerning Mr. Tho. Bennet mentions his Deficiency to be only 7500*l.* and 1575*l.* represented by him to be in the hands of his Predecessor and me.

The latter Sum of 1575*l.* is brought into Court. And we have shewn that Mr. Hiccocks, his Predecessor, has petitioned, that he may pay in the 7500*l.* which is the whole Deficiency. And here appears a considerable Estate, of I think 750*l.* per ann. of Mr. Bennet's besides.

Mr. Kynaston's Deficiency is represented to have been before Christmas 26,908*l.* 11*s.* 3*d.* $\frac{3}{4}$; arising all, but what he said was in my hands, and the hands of Mr. Rogers his Predecessor, only hence, that his Cashier was dead intestate, and Administration disputed; and so he could not come at the money.

There is paid in by me	1575 l.
There is offered to be paid by Mr. Rogers , and will be paid — —	} 6000
A Debt from Mr. Delabay , which he swears a just one, is assigned —	} 20,850
	In all 28,425
And the Deficiency being computed at —	} 26,908 11 3 $\frac{3}{4}$
This exceeds it in the Sum of	1516

And he has an Estate of between four and five hundred Pounds a Year, and Timber of the Value of 2500*l.* to make good any part that may not be got from Delabay's Estate, tho' his Effects fects are in one of the Reports mentioned to have been then found to be in London alone above 20,000 l. And I have heard that the Lords Commissioners have ordered them to be brought into Chancery, and that 16 or 18 thousand Pounds are actually brought in.

What is said to be Mr. Borret's Deficiency, is the foot of an Account, which the Report that represents it, and Mr. Thompson in his Evidence, say could not be properly taken.

And when fully examined into, there may come out to be no loss there neither. Mr. Godfrey swears Mr. Borret to have been in good Circumstances when admitted; to have an Estate; to have sold an Office for, I think, 5000 l. upon the occasion of his coming in master; to have lived with small Expence, his Wife's Father maintaining his Family. And, as he enjoyed the Office four Years, there can be no great Deficiency, and probably will be none at all.

But, my Lords, it is extremely hard upon me, if by their producing an uncertain Estimate, I am to be obliged to state the Accounts of one, who is dead, whose Administrator is Solicitor against me, without their searching into his Papers and Affairs, and giving a perfect Account how they stand. It is exceeding hard, give me leave to say, that your Lordships should be judging upon me as criminal, from Facts of this kind, to which I am an intire Stranger, when there is nothing like Proof, that there will be a Farthing Deficiency at last, but only that the money is not yet come in.

I beg leave to observe one thing more, That the Masters; that are now called the deficient masters; are not one of them in Custody; though it is made an Article against me, that I did not commit Mr. Dormer, who was in Holland. Therefore, since they are at Liberty, it must be taken for granted, that the Lords Commissioners had good Reason not to commit them; and yet their Deficiency, which is not a Crime in them, sufficient to justify the committing them, is to be made a Crime in me, sufficient to support a Charge of High Crimes and misdemeanors. Your Lordships see how far this ought to affect me; and I submit, upon what I have said, whether it can support the Charge in this Article.

XIX. As to the 19th Article, which relates to what was done about taking the Accounts: It charges,

“ That whereas his most sacred Majesty, out of his Fatherly Goodness to his People, did in or about the month of November last, direct an Enquiry to be made into the Accounts of the masters of the said Court of Chancery, to the Intent that proper methods might be taken for the Security of the Suitors of the said Court; the said Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, being then Lord Chancellor of Great-Britain, and one of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, in order to obstruct the same, and to prevent a Parliamentary Enquiry into the State and Condition of the Offices of the said masters, in Breach of the several great Trusts reposed in him, did give Advice

“ and Encouragement to the said masters to assist and supply each other with money and effects, and did represent to the said masters, that it would be for their Honour and Service, to appear able and sufficient; and that if they made a bold Stand now, it might prevent a Parliamentary Enquiry, or to that Effect; and did persuade several of them to make false Representations of their Circumstances to his Majesty, by adding a Subscription to their respective Accounts deliver'd to the said Earl, to be laid before his Majesty, to the Effect following, viz. That they were able to answer the money and Securities in their Hands, and were willing to pay the same to such Persons as were entitled thereunto; although the said Earl knew, or had good Reason to believe, that several of the masters were not then able to answer the Ballance of their Accounts, nor are they yet able to satisfy or make good the same; and when the said masters were afterwards required to produce the Cash and Effects of the Suitors in their Hands, some of the masters, according to such Advice and Encouragement given by the said Earl, did supply others of them with Cash and Effects, to make a false Shew and Appearance of their Ability and Readiness to answer the Ballance of their Accounts.”

My Lords, the two things, which are made the Heads of the Charge in this Article, relate to the Subscriptions of some of the masters written under their Accounts; that they were able to make good the Ballances; and their afterwards producing Cash, to make a false Shew and Appearance of their Ability. As to the first; I take it, that the material Part of the Charge is, that I persuaded them to make false Representations of their Circumstances by a Subscription which I knew, or had good Reason to believe, was false.

As there is not the least Proof offered that I knew or had reason to believe the Subscription false, this Charge I think intirely falls to the Ground.

Upon the Proof attempted to be made, I think it appears, that when Mr. Holford brought in his Account, pursuant to my Order, he (without my knowing any thing of it) had wrote a Subscription at the End of it, to this Effect: “ I have all these Securities standing in my Name, as in this Account is specify'd, and will procure Certificates from the proper Offices, that I have and had them before this Account, if your Lordship require it, and as to the money, I am ready to give your Lordship Satisfaction to a Demonstration, that I have it in my Power to answer it to every Person, that shall appear to be intitled to it, and who can give me a legal Discharge.”

They say, I read it, and spoke of it with Approbation.

There were only Part of the Masters ready with their Accounts; and Mr. Lovibond was the next, that delivered me his, and he had wrote to the same Effect in Substance; only as to the Cash, he wrote that he was ready to give Security.

My Lords, Every Body knows that he was able to answer it; and he swears he had it ready, and was able to have paid it the next Day; and he appears to have lent 10,000 l. to a Brother Master on that Occasion. I was therefore surprized to see him make use of an Expression, which looked as if he were not able to pay the money. And upon that it was, that he says, I recommended to him to make use of the same Expression, as had already been used by Mr. Holford; and so accordingly he did.

Thomas Bennet had subscribed, before he came, thus, "I have all the Securities standing in my Name as in the within Account are specified, as also the Tallies, Orders, and Bonds in my Custody;" but had said nothing of the money: He swears, that I said, I wished all would make use of the same Form as Mr. Holford had done: And that it would be for their Honour and Service to appear able and sufficient. He says, that Mr. Lightboun, as I remember, asked what was the meaning of bringing it before the Committee? and that I said, it would be a means to prevent a Parliamentary Enquiry; that I did not ask him whether he was able, but directed him to write; I suppose he means by the general Direction; for I do not apprehend he says, that I spoke it to him in particular: And it is not pretended, that he made the least Scruple of signing it as true, or expressed any Backwardness in it; and he in Effect owns he did not. But he informs your Lordships how extremely tender he was, not to write any thing but what was strictly true; and that therefore, in his Subscription, he took Care to leave out the Words to a Demonstration, which are in Mr. Holford's. And Mr. Holford's Subscription running, "And as to the Money, I am ready to give your Lordship Satisfaction TO A DEMONSTRATION that I have it in my Power to answer it to every Person that shall appear to be intitled to it, &c." Mr. Bennet could not come quite up to this; but he subscribes, "And as to the money, I am ready to give your Lordship Satisfaction, that I am able to answer it to every Person that is intitled thereto." This therefore, that he has subscribed, is, I suppose, if he is to be credited, exactly true: And if so, I have not persuaded him to make a false Subscription.

Mr. Kynaston says, it was recommended to them by me to make such a Subscription as Mr. Holford's; that I said, it would look well to the Council, and prevent farther Enquiry or Parliamentary Enquiry, or some other Enquiry, he knows not which; so he comply'd. But, my Lords, his Subscription is not what I recommended. Mr. Holford only undertakes to shew he had it in his Power to answer the money, &c. that is, that he either had the money, or Effects, which being disposed of, would raise it. But Mr. Kynaston goes farther, he says, I am ready to pay it to the Persons intitled.

Mr. Lightboun heard nothing spoken of the Subscription; he went away to finish his Accounts, which were not compleat.

Mr. John Bennet was not there; but at his coming, being told what I had said to the others, he, without Scruple, subscribed, without my speaking to him.

Mr. Edwards says he was able to pay it.

Mr. Lovibond was called last; but I before gave an Account what he said.

VOL. VI.

So that of the six masters who made Subscriptions, I spoke only to five.

Three of them have proved themselves able; and I believe no body doubts it.

Mr. Thomas Bennet made no Objection, or Difficulty, and has been curious not to let his exceed the Truth.

Mr. Kynaston, has voluntarily gone beyond what I desired. And I make no Question but he thought himself able to answer it, though I doubt his being ready.

But is there the least Evidence offered, that I knew Mr. Kynaston and Mr. Thomas Bennet were not able, or had Reason to believe or suspect it? No, on the contrary, Mr. Lovibond, their own Witness, who is one of the masters, and conversant among them, told your Lordships upon his Oath, that by their Conversation he believed they were able to make good their Accounts.

In the mean time, your Lordships observe, that these deficient masters had all their Securities ready, and voluntarily subscribed so to their Accounts, without my speaking to them. In which Point Mr. Lightboun, under the last Article, thought there was the most Danger.

As to the Words, That it would be for their Honour or Service to appear able and sufficient;

I will not be positive as to the Words, whether it were to appear able, &c. or to make it appear that they were able, &c. In a fair Construction, the Sense of the first is the same as the latter.

When Mr. Holford subscribes, That he is able to pay to every Person, who shall appear to be intitled; or, if I should say, Mr. Thomas Bennet appears not so fair or able a Man, as I formerly thought him; does it import only a false Shew?

As for what is said of preventing a Parliamentary Enquiry;

Mr. Thomas Bennet represents it to be spoke in Answer to the Question, What was the meaning of bringing it before the Committee? And says, my Answer was, That it would prevent a Parliamentary Enquiry.

If I said it, the Reason is obvious, and the Thing innocent.

It is notorious, that the last Summer there was a great Clamour against masters in Chancery, which was heightned by some Disputes they caused in the Court of Chancery; that it was generally believed, that it would come into Parliament; and I am persuaded it would have come into Parliament something sooner, if the Committee of Council had not taken this matter into Consideration.

I am likewise persuaded, that had the masters all been able to make good the money in their Hands, and proved that they were so; and that they had behaved themselves well; and that the Lords of the Committee, after finding their Accounts right, had proceeded to advise proper Regulations, the matter would never have come into Parliament with Respect to them, whatever it might as to me.

And as to them, I believe, they were not desirous to have the matter in Parliament, because of the vast Trouble it must give them, had there been nothing else in it. And it was natural for me to think, that nothing would more tend to make them easy, in complying with what the Committee should think fit, than by letting them know, that if it gave them Trouble in one respect, it would ease them more in another.

And so far I thought it for the King's Service, and my Duty, to hasten the Accounts before the Council, and to use all means I could to have things carried on with Speed and Effect; that such members of Parliament, as had their Eyes on this Affair, might plainly see that proper measures were effectually carrying on by the Lords; so that there would be no Occasion to take up this Affair in Parliament, or for the Legislature to interpose.

But as to my own Share, I freely own I had not the least Apprehension of what has since befallen me.

I was so far from obstructing the taking these Accounts, that Mr. Holford has informed your Lordships, that when the first Order was such, as would require a very long Time to be complied with, I pressed them not to make use of that as an Excuse for Delay, but to bring in an Account of their present Ballances, and to let the Lords know the Reason, and then to ask Time for more perfect Accounts, if such should be required; which were not.

As to their making a false Shew of Cash pursuant to my Advice and Encouragement,

They have not offered a Word of Proof of any Thing said or done by me, or by my Order, concerning any Part of that whole Affair; if they had, I am sure, whatever had appeared to be done by me, would at the same Time have appeared not capable of the Construction in the Article.

But instead of that they have given a confused uncertain Account of something, that passed between Mr. Cottingham and the masters; but never called Mr. Cottingham to bring it Home to me, nor any way shewn that I knew any thing of it, either before or after. Nor do I really understand it at last. I do not apprehend that Mr. Cottingham advised them to furnish one another with money, but upon good Security; nor did they do it. Nor do I see, what harm it is, if a master, having Occasion for money, borrows it of another master, upon good Security.

The only Person that they seem to fix any Fraud upon, is Mr. Conway; and, which appears very odd, only by his own Evidence; and yet he seems to justify himself too.

But if not; there is no Proof, nor Ground of Suspicion, that I was any way privy to it, or assisting in it, or that I had any the least Share whatsoever in it:

And therefore I am not Guilty.

XX, XXI. On the 20th and 21st nothing has been offered.

My Lords, I have now gone through all the several Articles, that have been endeavour'd to be supported against me; and I think I may say as I did in the Beginning, that except those relating to the Disposal of Places, which are of another Kind and another Consideration, all the rest must, to be made criminal, turn upon that Aggravation in the Articles, from my inordinate, wicked, and corrupt Designs of procuring to myself excessive and exorbitant Gains and Profits by divers unjust and oppressive Practices after mentioned.

It is such a corrupt Heart only can change Actions, that in themselves are innocent, and some of them perhaps commendable, into so many Crimes.

And yet it is very extraordinary, and scarce possible to be conceived, but that if there had been such a corrupt Heart, it must have broke out upon some other Occasion of my Life. Not one instance of my whole Life has been yet produced to shew it.

Several of those under me have been examined; several Officers immediately attendant on me, that received considerable Profits and Salaries, to the amount of Three or Four Thousand Pounds per Annum, and more; If I had set my Heart upon Gain, a certain Profit might have been there yearly made, amongst those whom I had wholly at mercy, and in private. But there has no Appearance been found of any thing of that Kind: And is it not more likely that I should have laid hold of a certain Profit, than be laying Schemes for Advantages upon the uncertain Contingency of the Sales of Masters Offices?

The Value of such an Expectation is a mere Trifle; and with Respect to the Probability of its happening, it was exceeding uncertain whether I should have an Opportunity of putting in one single master.

Three masters have happened to die in my Time; and two of those in less than the Space of a Year: But I think not one in nine Years before.

My Lord Cowper admitted but one in the last Time of his being Chancellor, which was four Years; and that was upon a Surrender.

There are 24 Curstors; only one has died in my Time: 30 Commissioners of Bankrupts; only one died in above six Years.

Surrenders of the Offices of masters are rarely till after 16 or 17 Years, sometimes 30 or 40 Years Enjoyment.

My Life was very uncertain: The Office of Chancellor much more so.

Little therefore was to be hoped from the Profit to be made by masters Places.

My Lords, in the next Place, I apprehend, that it appears I did not take the Advantage I might have taken.

When the Time came for me to reap the Fruit of all my Contrivances, all those Schemes and Stratagems, the Work of above three Years, (a great Space in the Time of a Chancellor) see, whether there be the least mark or Symptom of this impotent Desire of Gain!

What I did proves, beyond all Contradiction, that I never had any such Views, as these they lay to my Charge.

I took not the Advantage I might have done; I took a less Sum, when a greater was offered; and Part of the money was returned again to Mr. Elde and Mr. Thurston. And when Mr. Thurston's money was returned, only for being more than it was expected to be, every thing was in the same State as when it was paid.

And possibly your Lordships will think, from some other Evidence given, that amassing a great Estate was never my View; and that rapacious and base Ways of getting money are not consistent with my Way of laying it out.

As this is a full Answer to the Charge of my Desire of Gain; and the whole Malignity of all I am charged with arises from that supposed Principle of my Actions; without this, though there should have been Imprudence, Indolence, too great Confidence, perhaps Credulity, Irresolution, or any other Defect or Weakness, there has been nothing wicked.

And, if your Lordships are satisfied of this one Thing, I apprehend the Sting of this Impeachment is taken out.

My Lords, Having thus gone through all my Observations, it may possibly be expected I should close them with offering something in General: But I think it properer to forbear.

I am not conscious to myself, that it is necessary in this Case to apply to the Passions; which is a common Artifice to assist a weak Defence. If I have done any publick or private Good (of which last some Specimen has been laid before your Lordships) it will, I am confident, have its full Weight.

I submit my whole Life and Conduct to your Lordships Judgment; and rely entirely upon your Justice for my Acquittal.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, I am not going to make any Observations upon this Speech; neither did I interrupt the Lord in making it. But one thing I am to say for Form Sake: We produced to your Lordships a Copy of a Letter writ from Mr. Lightboun to my Lord, he hath now read the Original Letter; I desire that the Original may be delivered into Court, that we may have the Perusal of it.

E. of Macclesfield. I believe the Gentleman is perfectly in the Right of it. It is here.

The House adjourned to Friday Morning next, at Ten a-Clock.

Friday May 21, 1725. The Tenth Day.

THE Lords being seated in their House, the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence: As also the other Proclamation, That all Persons concerned were to take Notice, that Thomas Earl of Macclesfield now stood upon his Trial, and they might come forth in order to make good the Charge.

Ld. Ch. Jus. King. Gentlemen of the House of Commons you may proceed.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, The Part assign'd to me in this Impeachment against the Earl of Macclesfield, is to reply to his Defence upon the Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, Ninth, Eleventh, and Twelfth Articles.

Before I enter into the particular Examination of the Objections made against the Charge of the Commons contained in these Articles, and of the matters alledged, either in Justification, or Excuse of the Lord Impeached; I shall take the Liberty of observing,

That your Lordships are now exercising a Power of Judicature, reserved in the original Frame of the English Constitution, for the Punishment of Offences of a publick Nature, which may affect the Nation; as well in Instances, where the Inferior Courts have no Power to punish the Crimes committed by the ordinary Rules of Justice; as in Cases within the Jurisdiction of the Courts of Westminster-Hall, where the Person offending is, by his Degree, raised above the Apprehension of Danger, from a Prosecution carried on in the more usual Course of Justice; and whose exalted Station requires the united Accusation of all the Commons of Great-Britain, by their Representatives in Parliament.

This High Jurisdiction may be exercised for the Preservation of the Rights of the Lords and Commons, against the Attempts of Powerful Evil Ministers, who depend upon the Favour of the Crown;

Or, it may be put in Execution for the Ease and Relief of a good Prince, whose Honour has been betray'd by a corrupt Servant; and yet, whose Clemency makes him unwilling to punish; so that it becomes necessary for his faithful Commons to take into their Care the prosecution of such an Offender.

Former Reigns have supply'd your Journals with many Examples of the first Kind.

The present Reign produces an Instance of the latter Sort, wherein the Commons bring before your Lordships in Judgment a Peer offending, with the greatest Ingratitude, against a most just, and most merciful Sovereign.

For, the King's Royal Munificence bestowed upon this Earl, in the most abundant measure, could not exempt the Inferior Officers from his Exactions, nor protect the Suitors and their Properties in the King's own Court of Chancery.

The general Crime charged upon the Earl, in Five of these Articles, is Extortion by Colour of his Authority as Lord Chancellor.

The Offence alledged in the other two Articles, is gross and wilful Negligence in his Office, to the great Damage and Loss of the Suitors of the Court, but to his own private Gain and Advantage.

The particular Exactions are his taking One Hundred and Five Pounds from Mr. Thomas Bennet, for accepting the Resignation of the Office of Clerk of the Custodies in the Court of Chancery, in order to obtain a New Grant to Mr. Hugh Hamersley, and procuring the same to pass the Great Seal accordingly.

His exacting Fifteen Hundred Guineas from Mr. Kynaston, for the admitting him to be a master of the Court of Chancery, upon the Resignation of Mr. Rogers.

His exacting the like Sum of Fifteen Hundred Guineas from Mr. Thomas Bennet, for the admitting him to be a Master of the same Court, upon the Surrender of Mr. Hiccocks.

His exacting the Sum of Five Thousand Guineas from Mr. Elde, for the admitting him to be a Master of the same Court, upon the Death of Mr. Fellowes.

His exacting the like Sum of Five Thousand Guineas from Mr. Thurston, for the admitting him to be a Master of the same Court, upon the Death of Mr. Borret.

The last Article relating to Mr. Thurston is charged with this Aggravation, That the former Master was Dead Insolvent, greatly indebted to the Suitors of the Court; and that the Earl did not secure a just Satisfaction to the Suitors.

And the Exaction of the One Hundred and Five Pounds from Mr. Thomas Bennet, is alledg'd to be done when the Earl was one of the Lords Justices.

These Misdemeanors, as well as all the other Offences, of which the Earl is now accused, were committed by him whilst he executed the Office of Lord Chancellor.

From whence the Earl and his Counsel take Occasion to make a Triumph upon the supposed Justice and Regularity of his Administration and Conduct, when he presided in the Court of King's Bench; because the Commons have not produced any misbehaviour in the Execution of of that Office wherewith to furnish out an Article against him.

This may be an Instance of the Lenity of the Commons, but it is no Proof of the Earl's Innocence; who best knowing his own Behaviour, declines to abide the Examination of his Actions during the six Years of his Continuance in the Office of Lord Chancellor;

But flies to a Sanctuary for Indemnity and Discharge; which shews, that the Earl esteem'd himself more secure under Shelter, than upon a Justification of his Conduct.

And the Success of the Commons, in the very strong and full Evidence, which they have laid before your Lordships in maintenance of those Articles, upon which they have proceeded, leaves very little Reason to imagine that they would have fail'd in their Proof, if they had extended their Inquiry into his former Life, or had enter'd into the rest of the Articles.

And after the strict and long Examination of Witnesses, which has entertain'd your Lordships for so many Days, I may venture to say, that the Consistency and Uniformity of the Proof given in Support of the Accusation of the Commons, upon so many different Heads, are sufficient to convince all the World of the Necessity, which there was, for the Honour of the King, and the Welfare and Satisfaction of the Nation, to carry on the present Prosecution;

And, I hope, have already fully satisfied your Lordships of the Truth and Justice of the Commons Impeachment.

But as there have been several Objections made on the Behalf of the Earl impeach'd, as well to the Foundation of the Charge itself, and to the Event and Consequence of it, as to the Sufficiency of the Evidence of the Facts alledged; it will be necessary for me to give an Answer to these Objections, and to maintain the Charge in these Respects; which I shall proceed to do by shewing, that the Impeachment is well founded, and that the Facts in the Articles before stated have been plainly and fully prov'd.

The Earl himself began with insisting, That his General Oath of Office has no Relation to the Offences charg'd; and that no Inference can be made to his Prejudice from the Tenor of that Oath.

But the Earl's Remembrance, or Explanation of his Oath, is very defective; he has set it out at large in his Answer, and thereby he swears, that He will well and truly serve the King and his People in the Office of Chancellor, and do Right after the Laws and Usages of this Realm; which comprehends the Observation of every thing, which is Part of the Duty of, or incident to his Office,

And the avoiding of every illegal and unjust Action in the Execution of it.

And the Omission of any Part of his Duty, or the Commission of any Offence against the Duty of his Office, is a Breach of this Oath of Office, altho' the Particulars are not enumerated in the Oath; and the contrary Opinion will open a Door to the Commission of all manner of Injustice and Rapine by Civil Officers.

The Earl likewise relies upon it, That the whole Charge turns upon his wicked and corrupt Intent and Views alledg'd in the Introduction, which (as he says) have not been made appear;

But these will be apparent from the Proof of the several Facts charg'd; which, if they are unlawful and unwarrantable, and do tend to the raising money by corrupt and extorsive measures, will manifest that Intent, and prove it as strongly as if he had declared his Designs in open Court; for such Acts cannot be done with a good and honest Intention.

The main Objection against the Article is, That there is no matter of a Criminal Nature contained in the money Articles; or if there is a Crime, yet that there is no Punishment annexed or incident to it, which your Lordships can now inflict upon the Earl, after he is removed from his Office.

In answer to which I shall insist That,

The Earl's selling these Offices, or disposing of them for money taken by him before the Admission of the succeeding Officers in the manner alledged and prov'd, is an Offence at the Common Law, and punishable by Fine and Imprisonment, upon Indictment or Information; as well, where the money was taken for an Admission upon a Resignation, as upon a Death.

To make out this, it must be consider'd, That

The King having the executive Power, or the Administration of Ordinary Justice, lodged in Him, is in Consequence obliged to provide and appoint capable and sufficient Officers, necessary for the due Execution of Justice, in his several Courts, for the Benefit of His Subjects: His Coronation Oath proves this.

And accordingly the Crown has always paid the Salaries or Fees of the Lord Chancellor; and other principal Officers of Justice, and also of many inferior ministers, out of the Royal Revenue; and other subordinate ministers were maintain'd by the chief Officer, to the End that the Subject should not be expos'd to Exaction or Oppression, under Pretence of any Demand of Fees or Reward by the ministers of publick Justice for the Execution of their Offices; which is the Source of all that Corruption, which at any Time springs up in the Courts of Justice.

The Antient Law of England was, that none having any Office concerning the Administration of Justice, should take any Fee or Reward of any Subject for the doing of his Office, to the End he might be free and at Liberty to do Justice.

And several Charters of former Kings, and Statutes declaratory of the common Law in that Respect, have been made to enforce the due Observation thereof, as,

Stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. I. c. 26. 20 Ed. III. c. 1.

My Lord Coke, 3 Inst. 146. says, the Co. 2. Inst. 74, 176, 209, 210. Ed. III. c. 1. is only a Commandment of the King; and that there is no Record of any such Act in any Parliament Roll, and yet necessary to be printed, because the 4th Chapter of this Parliament refers to the Pains contained in it.

Yet, if it be only the King's Charter, it is a Declaration of the Common Law at that Time; but it is printed in Old Rastal's Edition of Statutes, Fol. 89, and in all the rest of the printed Statutes.

20 Ed. III.

Co. 3. Inst. 146. cap. 68.
of Bribery, Extortion, &c.

Item, *Que null Chancellor, Tresorer, Gardein de Prive Seal, Counsellor du Roy, * seurementez a Conseil du Roy, ne null autre Officer, Judge, ne Ministre du Roy, prenant Fees ou Gages de Roy, pur leur ditz Offices ou Services preigne en null Menere en Temps avenir ascun Manere de Done ou Brocage de nully pour leur ditz Offices et Services, a faire sur Peyn de respondre a Roy de la Treble de ceo que issi preignent, et de satisfaire la Partie et punys al Voluntas de Roy, et soit dischargez de son Office, Service, & Conseil pur toutz jours, &c.*

* N. B. The Printed Books have mistaken this Word.

This Statute is enter'd on the Parliament Roll of that Year, amongst the Records in the Tower; it is not indeed enter'd on the Statute Roll: But the Parliament Roll is the Original, and is the Warrant for the Statute Roll, and is therefore of greater Authority.

In the Margin of the Roll is enter'd thus, viz.

Respectuatur per Dominum Principem & Consilium.

For which Reason my Lord Coke says it was never printed in the Book of Statutes, of which he highly complains; and therefore has recited it at large, and caused it to be printed in his 3d Inst. Fol. 146. c. 68. of Bribery, Extortion, &c. and c. 101. of Judgments and Executions, Fol. 224, 225. which is one of the first Books relating to the Crown Law, read by the Students of the Law, and was thus published by that great Man, to impress an early Abhorrence of every thing which may tend to Exaction and Extortion; and must have often come under the Consideration of the impeach'd Lord.

These Statutes have indeed been opened, and alter'd by subsequent Statutes, as to several inferior Officers; and some small Fees have been anciently allow'd, and permitted in particular Cases; but it has been observ'd, that from such Indulgences many Oppressions of the People have ensued.

But the Common Law, and the several Acts of Parliament before mention'd, do not only still remain in Force, with respect to the Lord Chancellor, but have been confirmed and enforced by other Statutes.

And the Great Charter of our Liberties, Magna Charta, c. 29. Co. 2. Inst. 55, 56. does imply this, which according to my Lord Coke's Comment,

Nulli vendemus Justitiam aut Rectum;

Is spoken in the Person of the King, who in Law is present in his own Courts of Justice, and repeating these Words, which (says He) extend to the End, which is Justice, and to the Mean, whereby Justice may be attained, which is the Law; or, as it must be understood, the Administration of the Law by the Officers of Justice; unless

VOL. VI.

20 Ed. III. cap. 6. and more particularly the act of 11 H. IV. Rot. Parl. Num. 28. by which it is enacted, Item, *That no Chancellor (this High Officer is mentioned in the first Place by Name) Treasurer, Keeper of the Privy Seal, Councillor of the King, * sworn of the King's Council, nor no other Officer, Judge, nor Minister of the King, receiving Fees or Wages of the King for their said Offices or Services, take in no manner in Time to come, any manner of Gift or Brocage of any Person for doing their said Offices and Services, upon Pain to answer to the King the Treble of what they so take, and to satisfy the Party, and to be punish'd at the King's Pleasure, and shall be discharge'd from his Office, Service, and Counsel for ever, &c.*

it can be supposed, that the Statute provides against the lesser Evil, but allows the greater Mischief; that it prohibits the Sale of a particular Decree or Order, which may be right and just in itself;

But leaves the King's superior Officer at Liberty to sell the whole Body of the Suitors of the Court in the Gross, to the Exaction and Oppression of the under Officers, in the Fees which they shall demand against Law and Right.

So that if the Earl impeach'd had exemplified this Rule of my Lord Coke in the Court of Chancery, where he immediately represented the King's Royal Person; and once in a Term sitting in Court between his Masters, who paid for their Places out of the Suitors Effects, had repeated to the Suitors this glorious Declaration,

Nulli Vendemus Justitiam;

He must have made a very inconsistent Figure, in the Opinion of the meanest Capacity.

It will then be plain, That as to such Offices, which are in the immediate Gift and Disposal of the Crown, they cannot in their own Nature be saleable, or disposed of for money; because the King himself cannot be supposed to suffer them to be put to Sale.

And the Ministers of the Crown, who have no immediate Right in the Office, and are only to execute and confirm the King's Pleasure in the Disposal of the Office, cannot sell that which is not their own;

Nor ought, or can they lawfully take any Fee or Reward, for accepting Resignations, or making new Grants, or Admissions into Places, or for conferring inferior Offices, with which they are intrusted by Virtue of their own Office; which would be the taking money for the doing of their Office, contrary to the Law, and the before mentioned Statute.

But there is another very good Act of Parliament, which has been read at your Lordship's Table, and proves this Practice of selling such Offices, to be an Offence at the Common Law, viz.

12 Rich. II. c. 2.
Co. 1. Inst. 134. a. Intituled, None shall
Co. 3. Inst. 145, 147, 148. obtain Offices by Suit or for Reward.

Item, It is accorded, that the Chancellor (by express express Name) Treasurer, Keeper of the Privy Seal, Steward of the King's House, the King's Chamberlain, Clerk of the Rolls; the Justices of the one Bench, and of the other; Barons of the Exchequer, and all other that shall be called to ordain, name, or make Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, Escheators, Customers, Comptrollers, or any other Officer or Minister of the King, shall be firmly sworn, That they shall not ordain, name, or make any such Officers, nor other Officer or Minister of the King for any Gift or Brocage, Favour or Affection.

The Act proceeds farther in a different Form of Expression, and to another matter:

Nor, that none which pursueth by him, or any other, privily or openly, to be in any manner of Office, shall be put in the same Office, or any other; but that they make all such Officers and Ministers of the best and most lawful Men.

The Earl apprehended the Strefs of this Statute, and how much it pressed upon him; and therefore has endeavoured to distinguish himself, not only out of the Oath, but out of the intire Act, by objecting, that this Statute, and the Oath therein directed, only extend to such Nominations as are made in the Nature of Elections, by an Assembly of all these great Officers and Ministers, when they are called together for that End; which Word (together) is of his own inserting, to serve his Purpose; as in the Case of Sheriffs, and not to their single and separate Nomination of Officers, in Right of their respective Offices by themselves.

This is the Earl's own Objection, and not of his Counsel, and will (if allow'd) expound away the whole Act, in all the express Instances mentioned in the Statute, save one;

For there is but one Officer named in the Act, who is nominated thus in an Assembly or public meeting, which is Sheriff; and all the rest are ordain'd, and made by the great Officers separately, in their own Right; as Justices of Peace by the Chancellor; and Escheators, Customers, and Comptrollers by the Lord Treasurer.

And the rest of the Words of the Act, viz. Or any other Officer or Minister of the King, will be totally expunged by this nice Interpretation.

But the Words plainly mean, that every one of these Officers, who by virtue of his Office shall be call'd (not call'd together) by Command of the Crown, or in Execution of his Office, to name or make any inferior Officer, shall be sworn; for they never are all call'd together, unless on the Nomination of Sheriffs.

The Earl, for more Security, and for the sake of better Company, objects farther; That the Argument from this Act and the Oath will go too far; for then they are sworn not to prefer any who make Suit or Application for any Office.

But that is no Part of the Oath; and they are only sworn so far as the Statute extends it, which is to the former Part; and this Clause in the Conclusion of the Act is only directory, and introduces a new Instruction to the great Officers, but does not carry on the Purport of the Oath; for the Words are, It is Accorded, that the Chancellor, &c. (in the Affirmative) shall be sworn, that they shall not name, &c. and the Sentence which follows is a new Clause, beginning with a Negative, viz. Nor, that none which pursueth, &c. shall be put into any Office, &c. and refers to the Person applying, and not to the Officer appointing.

So that this latter Part of the Statute ought to be observ'd; but the Officer is not required to be sworn to the Observation of it.

This Statute takes it for granted, that the contrary Practice of naming subordinate Officers for Gift or Brocage was unlawful before, at the Common Law; since it does not create or enact it to be an Offence, but provides an additional Constraint or Obligation upon the superior Officer by an Oath, not to commit the Offence; and it still remains an Offence at the Common Law, and don't depend on that Statute, but is a great Offence, altho' the Oath be not taken.

This Statute contains the most extensive and general Words, and mentions Officers of many Sorts, and different Degrees, as well high as low, relating to the Peace, publick Justice, and the Revenue; and that no Officer, of any Kind whatsoever, in the King's Service, nam'd or ordain'd by the great Officers of State, might escape or be omitted, the Act concludes the Description with these Words; Or any other Officer or Minister of the King;

And therein manifestly comprehends both these Offices of Clerk of the Custodies, and of Masters in Chancery:

For this Statute refers to Officers who are only nam'd or recommended to the King by the Chancellor, &c. and yet are constituted by the King's Letters Patents, as Justices of the Peace, and Sheriffs, whereby the usurped Fee for Recommendation is declared illegal; and also to other Officers, who are immediately constituted and appointed by the chief Officers, by Authority deriv'd from the King, and by virtue of the Trust in them reposed for the King's Honour and Service, and for the Benefit of his People, as Escheators and others; and thereby the other pretended Fee for Nomination is condemned.

Sheriffs and Escheators named in the Act, are Officers relating to the Administration and Execution of Justice; and Escheators more especially, to Inquisitions touching Idiots and Lunatics, and the Commissions and Proceedings thereon; which is the chief Part of the Trust and Office granted by the Letters Patents to Mr. Hamerfley, as Clerk of the Custodies, and which was resigned by Mr. Thomas Bennet; and it will appear by the Patent itself, that this Office in the Court of Chancery, has a very near Relation to the Office of Escheator; and the Grant very fully describes the Nature and Antiquity of this Office.

And as to the Nature and Antiquity of the Offices of Masters in Chancery, they appear fully from the Oath taken by every Master upon his Admission, which is of the same Import and Effect, in many things, with the Oath taken by the Lord Chancellor himself, viz.

To serve the King and his People, and to counsel the things that toucheth the King; to prevent the Disinheritance of the King, or Fraud to his People; and not to disclose the Counsel which he shall give touching the King; and to redress Damage or Fraud in the keeping the Great Seal, and to advise the Chancellor thereof, &c.

And also from the ancient Commissions produced and read, giving the Masters Authority, by the Name and Description of Masters of the Court, to hear Causes, and make Decrees (in like manner manner as the Judges Assistants) in the Absence of the Chancellor; and to punish Contempts, and to do other like Acts of Jurisdiction; and likewise from the actual Exercise of their Offices in making Reports, and Taxation of Costs, and the manner thereof prov'd by some of the masters (and not contradicted) as that a Subpœna issues immediately upon the master's Taxation of Costs, without any Order or Confirmation of the Lord Chancellor; that their Reports in other Instances are turn'd into Decrees of Court, if not alter'd upon Exceptions, and from many Authorities in the Law Books.

By all which it is evident, that the Offices of Masters in Chancery are judicial Offices, or Offices which partake of a judicial Authority and Nature; and do touch and concern the Administration and Execution of Justice in that Court; and that the Masters are associated for that Purpose to the Lord Chancellor, as alledged in the Articles.

But upon this Occasion it will be proper to recite more particularly the Authority of the Statute of

A. 13 Edri. I. call'd Westm. 2. cap. 24. Et quotiescunque de cætero evenerit in Cancellaria, quod in uno casu reperitur breve, & in consimili casu cadente sub eodem jure, & simili indigente Remedio non reperitur; concordent Clerici de Cancellaria in brevi faciundo, vel atterminent querentes in proximum Parliamentum, &c. & de consensu jurisperitorum fiat breve, ne contingat de cætero quod curia Domini Regis deficiat conquerentibus in Justitia perquirenda.

Co. 2. Inst. 405, 407. Those here called Clerici, were at this Time, and before, called Magistri Cancellariæ, and were associated to the Lord Chancellor; of whom Fleta saith, Cui associantur Clerici honesti & circumspæcti, Domino Regi jurati, qui in legibus & consuetudinibus Anglicanis notitiam habeant pleniorum, quorum Officium sit supplicationes & querelas conquerentium Audire & Examinare, & eis super qualitatibus Injuriarum ostensarum, debitum Remedium exhibere per breviam Regis.

The granting and issuing the Writ, or first Process, upon the Prayer of the Plaintiff, or Party prosecuting, is the first judicial Act of the Court, upon the Commencement of a Suit.

And this proves strongly, that the King by his Royal Office, confirm'd by this Act of Parliament, did at his own Expence, and not at the Charge of the Suitor, provide these Clerks or Masters, to the End, that no Subject who had a Right, should be without a Remedy in the King's Courts;

Ne curia Domini Regis deficiat conquerentibus in Justitia perquirenda.

And the Nomination of these Masters is only intrusted with the Lord Chancellor, as representing the King, and for the Relief of the Subject.

13 Edri. I. Stat. Westm. 2. cap. 24, 50. Co. 2. Inst. 407, 486. Co. 1. Inst. 54. b. John Webb's Case 8 Co. 48, 49. Co. 3. Inst. 82.

So that it is a Breach of his Trust, in the Lord Chancellor, to confer any of these Offices for Gift or Brocage, or to name and appoint unfit and insufficient Persons; since it is the Duty of his High Office to provide a Supply of proper Officers to carry on the due Execution of Justice in that Court.

But it is said, That it has not been constantly used to put all the Masters into Commission, and that in the Commission 9 Oæ. 4 Ed. VI. four of the Masters only were in Commission; and when they are in Commission, that they have no Authority to act without the Presence of the Master of the Rolls, or one of the Judges; and therefore these Commissions did not give them a judicial Authority.

These Commissions, as well as the Office of a Master, subsisting so anciently, shew, that They were to be taken Notice of, and comprehended within the Statutes made to prevent the Sale of Offices of Justice; and of late Times they have all been put into the Commission, as appears by the late Commissions granted to the present Masters, since the Earl had the Custody of the Great Seal, and produced at the Table; and (without entering into the Dispute between the Master of the Rolls, and the Masters in Chancery, touching Jurisdiction, wherein the Earl, in his Defence, has declared, he thought the Masters were in the Right) the Judges themselves in these Commissions are only authorized to hear Causes, and make Decrees, with the Presence and Concurrence of two Masters; so that the Authority under this Commission is not less of a judicial Nature, from the Number of Persons necessary to make a Court; no more than it can be argued from the same Reason, that the Judges in that Commission are not judicial Officers, because they cannot make a Decree without two Masters.

And altho' the Commission is not properly incident to the Office of Master, as annexed thereto; yet as it has always attended upon, and accompanied the Office, it proves, that the Masters from the first issuing these Commissions, have been always invested with a general judicial Power, if they had not enjoy'd such Authority before.

But it is not necessary to rely intirely upon that Point; for if these Offices were only Ministerial, yet they concern the Administration and Execution of Justice in the Court of Chancery, and, as such, are under the Regulation of the like Offices at the Common Law, and are fully within the Description of the Statutes of 12 Ric. II. and 5 and 6 Ed. VI. And this,

According to the Earl's Opinion, when he endeavour'd to terrify the Masters to contribute to Mr. Dormer's Deficiency.

And as the Earl impeach'd, in Right of his Office of Lord Chancellor, was only intrusted with the Nomination of the Masters for the Service of the King, and for the common Benefit of all the King's Subjects; these Offices are no more saleable, or to be disposed of for money, than if they had remain'd in the immediate Gift of the Crown, by Grant under the Great Seal.

It was objected, that Masters in Chancery are not expressly mentioned in the Act of 12 Ric. II. and that the Statute is a Penal Law, and ought to be construed strictly, and ought not to be extended by Equity to these Officers:

But the constant Rule of Exposition of Statutes of this Nature contradicts that Assertion; for,

Statutes made for the Furtherance and Advancement of Justice, for the Suppression of Extortion and Oppression, which (says the Book) are horrible and odious Crimes, shall have a benign and favourable Interpretation.

Beawfage's Case, 10 Co. 101, 102. Twine's Case, 3 Co. 82. Gooch's Case, 5 Co. 60. Booth's Case, 5 Co. 77. Powlter's Case, 11 Co. 34.

And upon this Occasion permit me to repeat the Words of that Great Man, the Lord Coke :

Beawfage's Case, 10 Co. 101, 102. Extortion is no other than Robbery, but is more odious; for Robbery is open, and has al- ways the Appearance of Vice; but Extortion puts on the Visage of Truth, and is more difficult to be try'd and discern'd, and is for the most part accompanied with the damnable Vice of Perjury in the breaking that Oath which the Officer took when he was admitted to his Office;

Which proves the Import and Effect of the general and usual Words in an Oath of Office.

And here I can't help taking Notice of the Attempt of the Earl Impeach'd, by his own cross Examination of Mr. Eyres, the Officer of the Exchequer, and the Questions propos'd by himself relating to the manner of his being sworn pursuant to the Statute of 12 Ric. II. viz. The Earl ask'd him,

What was it that you did read? Did I say any thing? Or what did I do? Or to that Effect;

The Officer answers, I read over the Statute out of the Exchequer Book in Old French; and after I had read it, I carried the Bible to the Lord Chancellor, &c. who, at the Conclusion, kiss'd the Book, but he said or repeated nothing. But this has been the antient Form, which I have observ'd for forty Years, and I believe has been always used.

In this Instance, your Lordships saw an Endeavour of the late Supreme Officer of Justice to explain away, or turn to Ridicule, the strictest and most solemn Tie and Obligation upon his Conscience and Honour, impos'd by Authority of Parliament for the preventing Corruption; whereby the Earl did then (tho' since upon the Observation made by the World of such his Behaviour, he has a little recollected) shew, that his calling God to Witness to his Promise for the Observation of an Act of Parliament made against that Vice, deserv'd to be as little consider'd by him, and to have as little Influence upon his mind,

As Oaths taken by Traders at a certain Place, for their better Accommodation in carrying on a prohibited or fraudulent Traffick.

This is a full Explanation of his Reserve in an equivocal Answer, where he says, That when he took the usual Oath of Office, he at the same Time took the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, but no Oath of Office besides that above set forth.

Altho' he could not but understand the meaning of the Introduction to the Articles, alledging, That he did take such other Oaths as have been accustomed; and could not but remember his repeated Observations of the Ceremony, at least, which he had annually practis'd under this Statute.

But the Earl's Counsel have made it necessary to enter farther into this Transaction, by their insisting, that here was no Formal Oath prescrib'd or taken, no Entry or Registry kept of it; and that the reading over the Statute is merely an Admonition or Exhortation by the Officer to the whole Assembly.

And the Earl has insisted, That it is not an Oath of Office, because an Oath of Office (as he express'd it) is taken once for all, but this is repeated Annually; and if it is an Oath of Office, yet it is not particularly charged in the Articles, nor refer'd to in any manner, because the Articles suppose it to be taken at the Time of his coming into the Office, which was in May 1718. and this Oath, at the soonest, could not be taken by him till the November following.

To this I answer, That the manner of administering this Oath is in the most solemn and significant Form possible; for the repeating an Oath briefly to observe the Statute in all Things, or containing a short Abstract of the Substance of it, would not be near so explicate and directory, as the reading over aloud, by a proper Officer of the Court of Exchequer, the Act of Parliament itself, the Chancellor at the End kissing the Bible; an Exhortation, which ought to make the deepest Impression upon the Conscience of a righteous Magistrate, when confirm'd by the Sanction of a Promissory Oath.

And to say, that it is no Oath of Office, because he repeated it Annually, is to contradict the Act itself, which enjoins him to take it as Chancellor, and in the actual Execution of his Office; and the Repetition of it Annually, upon this great Occasion of nominating Sheriffs, demonstrates the Opinion of our Ancestors, of the Importance and Consequence of the Observation of it, for the Service of the King, and the Benefit of his Subjects; because there can be no other Time more memorable, or more likely to engage Attention to it, than in so publick an Assembly proceeding to appoint the Sheriffs of the several Counties of the Kingdom, upon whose Power, Fidelity, and Justice in the Execution of their Offices, not only the Properties, Liberties, and Lives of the Subjects of this Kingdom so much depend, but even the Security of His Majesty's Person in any Time of Danger; and the very Being of the House of Commons, upon the just and fair Returns which ought to be made by Sheriffs, upon the Election of Members to serve in Parliament.

Can this Statute then be treated and called obsolete, which is thus publickly proclaim'd every Year, to enforce the more exact Observation of it?

And to say, That the Articles are confin'd to such Oaths of Office, as were taken by him on his first Appointment, is an equivocal Interpretation peculiar to the Answer; for the Articles refer generally to all such Oaths which have been accustomed to be taken by the Lord Chancellor by reason of his Office. And this Oath ought to have been taken by him upon his first Appointment, if the Usage of administering it at this annual Season had not been an Excuse for his postponing it to that Time; and from that Usage it has follow'd, that this Oath is not taken by any of the Officers at any other Time; but it was the Earl's Duty to observe this good and wholesome Law, as well before his taking this Oath, as afterwards.

And the Earl could not have forgotten this his solemn Engagement without Design; it was for his Interest not to mention it; and he might flatter himself, that the managers would not have taken notice of it.

And as to the Difference in the Form of administering this Oath from the common method, it is not material; for the usual Form is not essential to the Oath itself, it being sufficient that there is a calling Almighty God to be a Witness of the Truth of the Earl's Promise, by his touching the Holy Scripture.

But

But whether the Oath be constantly or usually taken in Practice, or not, it will not alter the Law; and the Crime of selling these Offices for Gift and Brokage still remains, notwithstanding the Neglect of this additional Obligation to refrain from the Commission of it.

The Objections made by the Earl and his Counsel upon this Head, have occasioned this Digression.

The next Part of the Earl's Defence is a direct Justification of the Fact of which he is accused; and, not contented to leave it to his Counsel (for whose Excuse it might have been said, that they were willing to try every thing) the Earl himself has insisted upon it, that his taking these Sums of money is lawful; because, as Lord Chancellor, he had a Right of Recommendation of Mr. Hamersly, as an Officer appointed by Patent under the Great Seal, and also the Right of Nomination and Admission of the Masters, solely in himself; and a man may dispose of and dispense his own Favour upon what Terms he pleases; and Officers may give money for their Places, and yet be good Officers, as it is suggested.

But some Instances of a very extraordinary Nature were cited out of the History of the Exchequer, to prove that Chancellors, Judges, and other Officers of Trust, had purchased their Places of King Stephen and King John; viz. That Richard Fitz-Alured gave King Stephen fifteen Marks to bear Pleas; and Walter de Gray gave King John five thousand Pounds to have the King's Chancery for Life; and other Officers there named.

Mr. Madox, the Collector and Publisher of this History of the Exchequer, 43, 44, mentioning these Instances, says, That in the Time of King Stephen, Geoffrey the Chancellor fined in three thousand and six Pounds and a Mark for the King's Seal. This I understand to be a Fine then lately made with the King for the Office of Chancellor, or to have the keeping of the King's Seal. But at the same time Mr. Madox the Publisher makes this honest Reflection upon his Precedents;

Which Precedent, says he, may justly seem strange to us at this Day; but it seemeth that in those times things of the like kind with this were sometimes done. Which Observation the Counsel, or the Earl himself, were not pleased to repeat.

And some Instances were cited out of the Roman Law, where Part of the Revenue of the Emperors did arise out of Perquisites of this Kind; from whence it was inferr'd, that the taking these Sums for Sale of Offices, was not against Natural Justice.

But these are of no Authority in this Kingdom, when they are repugnant to the Law of the Land, and have never been receiv'd; and the Common Law of England must be the Rule of Justice in this Case.

And Mr. Dupper, the Earl's late Under Secretary of the Bankrupts, was produced, to prove by his Opinion and Observation, that no Office whatsoever passing by Grant under the Great Seal ought to be surrender'd or granted without an Acknowledgment (as he call'd it) to the Chancellor or Keeper; and that he had formerly communicated these his Thoughts to the Earl and his Secretary Mr. Cottingham.

And your Lordships, upon Recollection of the Evidence, will find the Use and Improvement they were pleas'd to make of this Advice, in the Case of Mr. Thomas Bennet's Surrender.

But in Answer thereto, it appeared upon the Evidence in regard to Mr. Hamersly's Office of Clerk of the Custodies, that there being no Salary annexed to the Place, it did belong to the Secretary of State to recommend or to obtain the Sign Manual; so that the Earl's Desire of Gain in this Instance carry'd him beyond the Limits of his own Office, where he had no Right of Recommendation, to raise the poor low Sum of One hundred and five Pounds, at the Time when he was One of the Regents; and thus he join'd his Share of the Royal Authority to his Power of Lord Chancellor, in order to get and secure to his own private Use so considerable a Sum as One hundred and five Pounds from an exhausted Master! A strong Evidence of his corrupt Intent and Views.

This single Exaction overturns the whole Fabrick of Merit, supposed to be raised by the few scatter'd Instances of Charity, which he has been pleas'd to divulge in Evidence.

But if the Authorities cited for the Earl to this Purpose prove any thing, they prove too much; that the Offices of the Judges in the Supreme Courts of Justice were lawfully to be bought and sold at the Common Law, before the Act. 5. Ed. VI. which is an Opinion that the Earl himself, in his Answer, did not think convenient to disclose or insist upon; and it is going a long way back for an Example to prove the Lawfulness of an Action, which he could not find without the Assistance of an Antiquary.

He might have brought more recent Instances from Countries, where unlimited Power does prevail, and where Justice itself, and the Places in which it is to be dispensed, are not to be attained without a Bribe.

But it seems as if the Lord impeached had an early Inclination to look out for a Precedent, to give him a Countenance in such like Practices; yet he found none publish'd to the World, except in the Reigns of two Princes, whose arbitrary Behaviour produced that memorable Law, the Great Charter of our Liberties, first pass'd in the Form of a Charter ann' 17 Johan', and confirm'd ann' 9 Hen' III. wherein it was at that time found necessary to declare by a Law, Nulli vendemus Justitiam aut Rectum. Magna Charta, cap. 29. Co. 2. Inst. 55.

From which Declaration of the Crown it necessarily follows, that the Administration and Execution of Distributive Justice to a free People, are not to be esteem'd the Property or Estate of a Great Officer, to be raised or increased by his Sale of the subordinate Offices of Justice; but are the great Prerogatives of an English Prince, to be exercised freely for the Safety and Ease of the Subject, without introducing Expence and Charge upon the People, in their Application for Justice and Right.

And when a Doctrine of this dangerous and destructive Nature to the Rights and Liberties of the whole Nation, as it exposes their only Security to Sale for money, is thus avowedly and openly justified and insisted upon at your Lordships Bar, by a Peer of your House, who has born the high Office of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain in the first Reign under the Act of Settlement of the Crown: Your Lordships will take the best measures to render the Subjects secure in their Expectation of Justice, by a suitable and public mark of your Detestation of so licentious an Opinion; and thereby convince the Nation, that even the meer Suggestion of such a corrupt Principle is an undeserv'd Reproach, and highly injurious to his Majesty's Administration.

Yet if it should be supposed, by way of Argument (which has not been proved, and therefore cannot be admitted) that the Sale of these Offices has been of late tolerated, for the greater Increase of the Perquisites of the first Officer of the Crown, in the principal Court of Justice; yet the Earl's raising and receiving these exorbitant Sums, above double to any Instance before his own Time, which he has made appear, upon a Pretence that the Business of the Court of Chancery was very much advanced during his Residence there, will be as criminal, as if he had put the Offices to Auction, when no Sum or Fee had ever been taken or heard of.

And in his method of Practice there can be no Distinction between a Present and a Price; for he made the most always of his Share or Claim in the Office. When he was only to admit upon a Surrender, he took fifteen Hundred Guineas for his Good Will and Approbation merely; and when he admitted upon a Death, he took five thousand Guineas at the least, altho' the Office was greatly in Debt; as in Borret's Case, where the Suitors will lose upwards of twelve thousand Pounds of their Effects, by the lowest Computation.

As for the small antient Fees which have been paid to the Great Seal for Time immemorial, upon the sealing every Patent, these are out of the present Question; and where Usage beyond Time of memory has allow'd the Receipt of these little Sums, it will be presum'd (if there was Occasion for it) that some Act of Parliament had pass'd to make it lawful.

And when it is said, that a good Officer may give money for his Place, and may resist the Temptation of Extortion; it is what the Law of England would not trust to human Frailty; and if all the Actions and Behaviour of the best of the Masters, with respect to their Fees, their manner of Proceeding upon References, and their disposing and trafficking with the money of the Suitors, were to be enquired into more particularly, there can be no doubt, from what has appeared in Evidence upon this Trial, but that the Temptation and Inclination to Profit, towards reimbursing themselves the money advanced to the Earl, and the preceding Master, have overcome their most steady Resolutions to Virtue and Self-denial.

As to the citing particular Cases, wherein the Sale of Offices Judicial, or of the like sort with those in Question, have been determin'd to be illegal at Common Law, I apprehend it is not necessary; for that the Reason of the Common Law, and the Purport of the several Statutes mention'd, do fully and sufficiently maintain the Validity of the Articles in that respect.

And the managers might more properly call upon the Earl and his Counsel for Authorities or Judgments to the contrary.

But matters of a corrupt Nature are always privately transacted, and no Witnesses, or at most very rarely, are to be produced besides the Parties concern'd.

And if the Earl will produce any Instance in the Books, where such a Transaction has been mention'd, I may engage to shew him at the same time, that it has been holden illegal.

The Authority already cited by a Learned manager is express:

781. North was fined in the Star-Chamber, for that he being Sheriff of the County of Nottingham did take money for the Goaler'ship and the Bailiwick for his Year; and at first he gave them to his Servants, who sold them, but himself received the money; and this was adjudged to be a letting to Farm of his County, contrary to the Statute of 4 Hen. IV. cap. 5. Yet there note, says the Reporter, that the Statute itself gives a Penalty certain and pecuniary, and it is malum prohibitum, non in se. But the Court held, that in as much as great Corruption ensues from the Greediness of the Officers, and they are enforced thereto by the Prices which they give for Things which ought not to be sold, that this setting of offices to Farm and Sale, is malum in se, and finable.

But the Earl objected, that this Opinion is extrajudicial; and the Court were mistaken in one part, when they say, that the Statute 4 Hen. IV. did inflict a Penalty; whereas it did not, but only prohibited the letting to Farm the Bailiwick, which was lawful before, and therefore properly finable, as a Breach of the Act.

In Answer to which, it is plain upon Perusal of the Book, that that Part relating to the Act 4 H. IV. imposing a Penalty, is only the Note of the Counsel, or Reporter, who took that particular Offence to be only malum prohibitum; and whether the Court did impose that Fine by Force of the Statute, or as warranted by the Common Law, it will not weaken the Authority; because the Court expressly declare it to be their Opinion, that the selling of the Office of Goaler was malum in se, and finable; which shew'd the Judgment of the Court on that part of the Question; so that there is no mistake to be imputed to the Court.

And my Lord Coke, in his 3 Inst. fol. 146. cap. 68. of Bribery and Extortion, and fol. 224. & 225. cap. 101. of Judgments and Execution, describes these Crimes as Offences at the Common Law, and puts his Examples accordingly, which may be there consulted.

So in the Case of Smith and Mall, 2 Rolls, Rep. 263. and Linley's Case, Hutton. 70. where it is holden, That if any Judge or Officer takes more than the usual Fees, he is punishable by Indictment at the Common Law. Which necessarily implies, that they are punishable at the Common Law, for taking money where no Fee at all is due.

The strict Definition of Extortion is, When any Person, Colore Officii extorquet Feodum non debitum, plusquam debitum, aut antequam debitum. Hutton. 52, 53. Co. 3. Inst. 149, 150. Beaufage's Case, 10 Co. 101, 102. Dive and Maningham, Plowden, 68: a. Co. 1. Inst. 368. b. Sir John Bingley's Case, Poph. 149. Rex & Gover, 1 Sid. 91.

But largely, Extortion is taken for any Oppression by extort Power, or by Colour or Pretence of Right. Co. 1. Inst. 368. b.

But it is urged by the Earl and his Counsel, that it appears from the Statute 5 & 6 E. VI. that the buying or selling of these Offices was lawful at the Common Law, and is not prohibited by the Statute 12 Rich. II. and that the Statute of E. VI. neither declares nor creates any Crime; but only imposes a special and particular Penalty, by Loss of the Office or Disability, and therefore the Earl having been dismiss'd the Great Seal, there can be no Punishment inflicted upon him.

It is agreed by them, that the Statute 5 and 6 E. VI. includes both the Offices of Clerk of the Custodies, as an Office of Clerkship in a Court of Record;

Record; and of the Masters in Chancery, as Officers touching the Administration and Execution of Justice, in point of Description.

And upon reading the Act it is evident, that this Statute in the Preamble, and throughout the whole Act, treats this way of dealing, as a Corruption, and illegal in its Nature, and expressly calls it so.

The Preamble says, For the avoiding of Corruption, which may happen hereafter to be in the Officers and Ministers in those Courts and Places, wherein there is Requisite to be had the true Administration of Justice or Services of Trust.

And this Statute carries the Punishment farther, but does not take away the Punishment of it as a misdemeanor at the Common Law, by Fine or Imprisonment upon Indictment.

And there is not any Proviso in the Act which mentions or exempts the Court of Chancery, or any of the Officers of that Court; but in consequence, when it mentions other Courts in a Proviso, must more strongly be intended to include them in the Act.

The first Proviso extends to Offices of a private Nature, and to Offices of Inheritance, and can't relate to any judicial Office, nor to either of these Officers, who hold only for Life; altho', where the Nature of the Office has allow'd it to become inheritable, it makes it alienable; but no such Instance is to be met with in the Case of judicial Offices.

The second Proviso is to prevent any Person's being surpriz'd into the Penalty unwittingly, before Notice of the Act, or by a Retrospect. And altho' the Statute takes Notice that divers Persons did make such corrupt Bargains, it is only by Way and with an Intent of preventing, and not of legitimating them; and it leaves them all as they stood at Common Law, until that Day appointed by the Act was past.

And the last Proviso does nothing more, and leaves the Justices to act upon their own Knowledge and Discretion in the Law, according to the Nature of the Office, without casting any Imputation upon them unnecessarily.

But so exceeding cautious was the Legislature, that there is not any Expression, in any Part of the Act, to declare or enact such Bargains in the Cases excepted, to be good.

But the Statute leaves them entirely to the Regulation and Direction of the Common Law and former Acts of Parliament.

So that altho' the Earl of Macclesfield, by his being dismiss'd from the Office of Lord Chancellor, is not liable to suffer the additional Punishment, contain'd in this Act, of Loss of his Office: Yet he will still be liable to the Punishment at Common Law, and upon the several other Statutes, and accordingly remains open and subject to your Lordship's just Sentence.

For where a Statute does give or impose a new Penalty, for a matter which was an Offence at the Common Law, the Prosecutor may pursue either of the Remedies; altho' where a Statute makes or creates the Offence, that Remedy must be taken which the Statute gives.

Reign cont. Wigg' Pas' 4. Anne Banco, Regin' Salk. 460. Com' Leicest. & Mandy 2. Sid. 32. Dr. Hussey's Case, 9. Co. 74. Cranbank's Case, 2. Rolls Rep. 49. Burgen's Case, 1. Ven. 13. 1. Sid. 409.

Thus I have gone into this long Debate, to shew that the Commons have founded their Articles upon the general Rules of the Common Law, supported and enforced by divers Acts of Parliament.

As to the Proofs;

I shall now take notice of the Evidence upon the particular Articles assign'd to me, and shall observe not only upon the Proofs given by the Commons in maintenance of those Articles, but likewise upon the Examination made on behalf of the Earl impeach'd, and in his Defence.

As to the money Articles, I shall make this general Observation upon the Evidence, that it has been agreed by all the Witnesses examin'd thereto, as well by Mr. Cottingham, the Earl's Secretary, and on these Contracts his Lordship's Broker, as by the Masters themselves, and their Agents, that the whole Transaction was done and finish'd, and the money actually paid and deliver'd into the Lord Chancellor's own Hands (except Mr. Thurston's Five Thousand Guineas, which were deliver'd to another for his Lordship's Service) before the Resignation of the former Officer was accepted, and before the Admission and Swearing of the Successor.

So that the principal Point and main Strefs of the Articles are thus in fact agreed upon by both Parties.

But as to these Articles, and more particularly with respect to the One Hundred and Five Pounds receiv'd from Mr. Thomas Bennet, and the Fifteen Hundred Guineas each receiv'd from Mr. Kynaston and Mr. Bennet, the Earl and his Counsel have suggested a Deficiency in the Proof, arising from a Contrariety in the Evidence given by Mr. Cottingham the Earl's Secretary, to what has been sworn by Mr. Bennet, Mr. Kynaston, and Mr. Charles Baily; and, upon the Credit of the Secretary's Testimony, would suppose that each of these Sums proceeded first from the free and voluntary Offer of the Masters, and was not insisted upon by the Earl or his Secretary before hand, as charged in the Articles, and prov'd by the Masters, but only accepted and receiv'd by Cottingham and the Lord Chancellor.

But the Nature of the Transaction, and the Circumstances of the Persons, do very strongly support the Credit of the Witnesses produced by the Commons, and the Probability of their Testimony, who have prov'd every Part of those Articles, in the very Words of them; and Mr. Cottingham himself has confess'd enough to maintain the Articles in Substance, altho' he should be credited in any Circumstance wherein he varies from the other Witnesses.

As to the ninth Article, it will be very difficult to believe that Mr. Bennet, who had lately paid the Lord Chancellor so large a Sum for his Admission to the Office of a Master, which he had borrowed of his Brother, and who had paid no Admittance money for this Place of Clerk of the Custodies to the former Chancellor, the Earl Cowper; and who had likewise been informed by his Brother Mr. John Bennet, that nothing was paid by him to Earl Cowper upon his being admitted to the same Office, and that Lord Cowper himself had declared to Mr. John Bennet that there was nothing due upon his Admission; that Mr. Thomas Bennet, under these Circumstances, should of his own Accord first propose a Present (as it is called) when he could not well imagine that there was any Pretence to it; that is hardly credible.

And Cottingham himself has own'd, that he told Mr. Thomas Bennet that something was expected, and that he carried the Proposal of One hundred and five Pounds to the Earl, who accepted it, and thereupon he receiv'd the money from Mr. Bennet, and paid it over to the Earl; after which the Earl then took the whole Care upon himself of expediting the Sign Manual and the Patent.

Now, Cottingham being the Factor employ'd by the Earl in all these Bargains, who has been avow'd by the Earl to be his Agent, and has been produc'd as his Witness, and supported by him; every thing that Cottingham declares and acts in compleating these Contracts, will be consider'd as the Act of the Earl himself, and his own bartering; especially, when Cottingham (as he deposed before your Lordships) did not conclude the Bargain, until he had receiv'd the Earl's Approbation thereof; and when the Earl, at the End, confirms the whole by his Receipt of the money.

And a Lord Chancellor's expecting something, or a Sum of money, be it more or less, and this his Expectation declared and notified by his Secretary to the Person applying to be admitted into the Office, is a peremptory Demand, and an insisting, when the Lord Chancellor alone, and no other, has the Power of taking the Resignation, or making it effectual by passing the new Patent, and of admitting the new Officer.

But this matter has been explain'd and confirmed by the Evidence of Dupper the Under Secretary, the Earl's own Witness, upon whose Authority the Earl relied, who acquainted your Lordships, that upon Cottingham's telling him of the intended Surrender of Mr. Thomas Bennet, Dupper said, there ought to be an Acknowledgment to the Great Seal, and he had heard that money had been given, which Cottingham himself at first doubted of; but Dupper soon satisfied both the Earl and his Secretary that money might be ask'd.

This confirms the Evidence of Mr. Thomas Bennet, that nothing was said about money to be given, or an Expectation of something at his first meeting with Cottingham, but it was introduced by Cottingham at their second meeting; which must be after this Advice and Information of Dupper, and that then the Resolution was taken of expecting a Sum of money.

This argues the Diffidence of the Earl impeach'd in setting up this Pretence, and his Suspicion of the Illegality of it; yet the Opinion of the Person advising, and the Earl's own Inclination to Gain, were too powerful to be resisted.

But to remove the Foundation of this Objection:

The Point or Charge of these Articles lies in the taking these Sums by the Earl, colore officii sui, as Lord Chancellor, and without Right, which is Extortion and Corruption.

And if he did receive these Payments by Colour of his Authority, and without Right, (and he has made out no Pretence of Right) he will be guilty of the Crimes charg'd upon him, in how artificial a manner soever he transacted these matters.

It will amount to the same, whether they proposed the Sum to him, or he made the Demand upon them; yet if something was expected by him, and he declin'd doing the Duty of his Office, until that something was offered and paid to him, it is an Exaction and an Imposition, which is criminal, and maintains the Articles.

And it is remarkable, that the Earl would never give Credit for his Present, but always had it safe in his own Hand, before he admitted the Officer.

It has been attempted, on behalf of the Earl of Macclesfield, to prove that former Chancellors have used to claim and receive money upon the taking Surrenders, and making new Grants of this Office; but herein the Earl has fail'd, and has not been able to give legal Proof of any one Instance of that kind, upon the change of this Office of Clerk of the Custodies.

For Dupper did not see any money paid on that Occasion, nor knows any thing of it, of his own Knowledge, but only copied an Account which he came by very oddly, wherein (as he says) there was an Item to that effect; and his Evidence depended meerly upon Hear-say, and ought to have no Regard.

The Evidence of Mr. Oker turns against the Earl; for altho' there were Surrenders in both the Times, when Earl Cowper held the Great Seal, yet nothing was paid or taken by him; and upon the Surrender of Thompson to Edwards in the late Queen's Time, it was said that nothing was given; and upon the Surrender of Mr. John Bennet to Mr. Thomas Bennet, whilst Earl Cowper enjoyed the Seal under his Majesty, nothing was paid or claimed.

And the supposed Intimation or Opinion of Lord Cowper, which Oker mentions, was between these two Surrenders, which makes it very unlikely that Earl Cowper should make such a Declaration; yet if such Discourse there was, it is plain, that upon better Consideration, the Lord Cowper departed from such Pretension, and discover'd no Expectation of any thing, upon the last Surrender and Grant of this Office.

And as nothing was taken by Lord Cowper, upon the Surrender of Mr. John Bennet to Mr. Thomas Bennet, it will be prov'd, that on the Surrender of Mr. Edwards to Mr. John Bennet, Lord Cowper refused to hear of a Present, when it was hinted at, and declared that nothing was due to the Great Seal.

But this Defence, which is founded upon a supposed Usage to receive a Fee for permitting such Surrenders, and from thence would infer a Right, or an Excuse to the Earl impeach'd, in doing the like, is a Proof and Confirmation of the Article, as charg'd by the Commons; That the Earl did insist upon the money, as his Right and Due.

ART. V. As to the Bargain with Mr. Kynaston, it appears from his Testimony, and the Evidence of Mr. Charles Baily, who paid the money, that Mr. Kynaston endeavour'd to obtain the Admission at a lower Rate. At first he offer'd but one thousand Guineas; and at the End Mr. Baily understood it to have been agreed for at fifteen hundred Pounds; and when Mr. Cottingham said fifteen hundred Guineas were expected, Baily did not proceed till he had informed Mr. Kynaston therewith, who answer'd, that since Mr. Cottingham had mentioned that Sum, he must submit, and do accordingly.

And this Dispute, upon the Difference between Pounds and Guineas only, explains the manner of these Dealings; That they were formal Contracts and Bargains between the Secretary and the Masters, at the best Price that could be got; and tho' there was no haggling with the Earl himself (as Cottingham express'd it at one of these Dealings) yet he had a faithful Steward, who could and did haggle very well for him; and when the Secretary had done his utmost, the Earl accepted the Price which had been agreed upon.

ART. VI. As to the fifteen hundred Guineas, paid by Mr. Thomas Bennet for his Admission, and the manner of making that Bargain, Mr. Bennet's Evidence of his first offering one thousand Guineas, and Cottingham's Refusal of it, saying, He hoped Mr. Bennet would not lower the Price, and the Hazard of his being refus'd, and that there was no haggling with my Lord, and at last agreeing for fifteen hundred Guineas, is supported from the usual Behaviour of Cottingham, as well as from the Probability of the thing itself; that a man may reasonably be presumed to endeavour to save what he can, and when he is purchasing, to get it at the cheapest; altho' (as it has appear'd upon the Examination) Mr. Bennet had little Reason to expect that a succeeding Chancellor would be satisfied with his Circumstances, and admit him.

Upon the Earl's Defence against the Charge contained in these two Articles, it was prov'd by Mr. Goldebrough the Register, that the Earl, about the 23d of February last, had paid those two Sums into the Court of Chancery, to be apply'd for the Benefit of the Suitors; and this is offer'd either in his Discharge, or as a Merit. But this was done several Days after the Impeachment, and after publick Complaint had been made against the Earl upon these two Instances, and is a very proper example of the Earl's own Construction of a voluntary Present; for after the House of Commons had taken this Affair into their Consideration, and had demanded Justice and Satisfaction from the Earl by a Parliamentary Prosecution, the Earl then did freely and voluntarily, and of his own accord, make a Present to the Suitors of the Court of these two Sums, which he had, in the like free and voluntary manner, receiv'd as a Present from Mr. Kynaston and Mr. Bennet.

But this Action contradicts his whole Defence; and shews that he was convinc'd that he had no Right to receive or detain the Money, and was afraid to keep it any longer.

ART. VII. and VIII. As to the two five thousand Guineas receiv'd by the Earl of Mr. Elde and Mr. Thurston, it is prov'd that the Price was settled between them and Mr. Cottingham; and when Mr. Elde (of whom the Earl express'd so good an Opinion) offered five thousand Pounds, Cottingham said Guineas were handsomer; and the particular method of Payment shews the inward Rebukes of his Conscience, and his Fear of a Discovery.

And these two Facts shew the Prevalency of his Avarice, above any other Passion. For in Mr. Elde's Case, he broke thro' the Obligation of Gratitude and Friendship to him, to receive his money in a cover'd manner, in a Basket. And in Mr. Thurston's, he tried to beguile his Fear of a Discovery, by suffering the money to come to him thro' a private and unsuspected Hand.

And these two Instances were of so nice a Nature, that his faithful Secretary own'd, that he was not admitted into the Secret. For it appears that the Earl either knew or suspected there would be a Loss in Borret's Office by his Insolvency, tho' it was not reduc'd to any Certainty; and it now appears, at the least, to amount unto twelve thousand Pounds.

But the Earl left the Suitors of the Court to bear that Loss, and never took Care to procure a just Satisfaction to them. Which the Commons urge both as an Evidence and an Aggravation of his Guilt; since he therein prefer'd his own private Gain to that Security, which his high Trust required him to have provided for the Creditors of the Court.

And the returning great Part of these two Sums, after the Confusion and Disorders of the Court became publick; and Part of Mr. Elde's money, after the Masters had been call'd upon to bring in their Cash, and which upon Mr. Elde's Evidence may be reasonably presum'd to have been made use of by him to make a false Shew before the Commissioners; are rather Decrees against himself; than any Extenuation of his Guilt.

And as to the Earl's great merit, which he so largely dwelt upon, and so often repeated, that he might have had six thousand Pounds from Mr. Lucas, which he relinquish'd, to accept of five thousand Guineas from Mr. Elde. The Managers will call Mr. Lucas, who (in answer to Mr. Elde's Testimony) will prove, that when he offer'd the six thousand Pounds, it was upon this express Condition, that if the Money of the Suitors, or the Cash, was taken out of the Masters Hands on a Parliamentary Enquiry, he should have a Return of some Part; and that the Earl should indemnify him against all Deficiencies.

So that the Earl did not refuse Mr. Lucas's six thousand Pounds, from a Disinclination to the Sum, if he could have kept the whole securely; but because five thousand Guineas paid absolutely, was better than six thousand Pounds subject to a Condition of refunding, and incumber'd with an Engagement of Indemnification.

But the Earl's chief Defence is rais'd from the Practice of his Predecessors, who (as he pretends) led him into these mistakes; and he has prov'd seven hundred Pounds to have been paid by Mr. Lovibond, about twelve Years since, and eight hundred Pounds by Mr. Holford, and five hundred Pounds by Mr. John Bennet, in the Year 1716. upon their respective Admissions into the Offices of Masters; and from thence insists, that altho' he can't claim the exact Sum of fifteen hundred Pounds receiv'd by himself upon Admissions, as a certain and establish'd Fee or Perquisite, because he has taken twice as much as his Predecessor did; yet this Practice gives him a Right to a Present, and it was in his own Discretion to declare the Sum, as he should think reasonable, according to the late Increase of the Business of the Court.

But, a Present altogether uncertain in the Quantum, and depending in this manner upon the Pleasure of the Person who is to receive it, seems to differ very little, if at all, from a Price.

The Earl insists likewise, that the Denial or Refusal of some other of the Witnesses to answer his Questions, is a farther Proof that they paid money.

This shews that the Earl thinks he wants the Proof very much, when he makes use of such an Argument to raise Evidence.

The Witness refuses to answer such Questions, which he is not oblig'd by the Rules of Law to resolve, concerning the manner of his Admission; and the Commons cannot call Witnesses to contradict or explain that which has never been deliver'd in Evidence.

Yet the Earl desires your Lordships to believe this as Evidence, tho' you never did hear it, and to act and vote, upon your Honour, as if you had heard and admitted it.

But howsoever the Earl may have directed himself, he can never think that such an unjust Insinuation will prevail upon your Judgment; or that he can thereby move your Lordships to give up your Honour in the highest Exercise of your judicial Power.

And these two or three late Instances, which he has produced, cannot change the Common Law, or repeal the several Acts of Parliament, whereby they are declar'd illegal; and if he makes use of them as Precedents, he ought to take them with all their Circumstances, which upon the whole matter rather turn against him. For Mr. Holford and Mr. Lovibond were at that time, and still continue men of Substance; and Mr. John Bennet was of Ability at the Time of his Admission, altho' in the Year 1720, he sustain'd several Losses, which impair'd his Estate. And they all paid the Sums of Money mentioned out of their own Estates, and no Part of it out of the Suitors Cash or Effects: And the whole of the Suitors Effects was deliver'd over to them by an Account with which they stood charg'd.

So that altho' these few Instances were not animadverted upon, either because they were not publickly known, or that no Inconvenience did ensue therefrom; yet they will afford no Excuse to the Earl impeach'd, for taking double or treble the Value of those Sums upon his Admission of Masters, who were Persons of small or incumber'd Estates, and who were necessitated to employ the Cash and Effects of the Suitors in the Payment for their Offices, and for their Admissions; and thro' whose Insolvency so great a Loss and Damage has come upon the Suitors.

But an Officer of publick Trust and Service ought to look well to his Precedents before he follows them; and if he will pursue an illegal or unjustifiable Precedent, he does it at his Peril, and must answer for the Consequences; especially in the Situation of the highest Officer in the Kingdom, who was intrusted with the Administration of publick Justice, in the supreme Court of Law and Equity; and whose Duty it was, as well to declare and expound the Law to others, and to regulate and reform the Exactions and Abuses, which at any Time may have crept into the inferior Courts of Justice to the Injury and Oppression of the Suitors of other Courts, as to prevent or suppress Corruption and Extortion in the Court where he more immediately presided.

ART. XI. As to this Article, the particular Circumstances of Mr. Kynaston and Mr. Thomas Bennet have been prov'd, and the Deficiencies in their Offices, and how unequal they were to the Trust of the great Sums and Effects deposited in their Hands.

By the Orders of the Court, which have been read, it appears that Mr. Kynaston's Deficiency amounts to 26,908 l. 11 s. 3 d. 1 q. and Mr. Bennet's to 16,075 l. Mr. Kynaston had about 50,000 l. in money and effects of the Suitors in his Custody, and Mr. Thomas Bennet near 100,000 l.

This is likewise a high Breach of Trust in the Earl, and is an Offence against the Statute of 12 Ric. II. cap. 2.

12 Ric. II. cap. 2. — But that they make all such Officers and Ministers of the best and most lawful Men.

Which Words in the Law import Sufficiency of Substance, as well as Capacity.

And the Statute 2 Hen. VI. cap. 10. takes it for granted, that the superior Officers were before that Time under the Obligation of the Common Law, or some former Statute to that Effect; when by the said Act, 2 Hen. VI. cap. 10. Co. 4. Inst. 114. intituled, What manner of inferior Officers shall be appointed in the King's Courts, it is enacted, To the Intent that better and more sure Government be had within the Courts of our Lord the King, for his Profit, and Ease of his People, which have to pursue and to do in the same; it is ordained and established, That all the Officers made by the King's Letters Patents Royal within the said Courts, which have

Power and Authority by virtue of their Offices of old Times accustomed, to appoint Clerks and Ministers within the same Courts, shall be charged and sworn to appoint such Clerks and Ministers for whom they will answer at their Peril, which be sufficient, faithful, and attending to that which pertaineth to them in Performance of the Business, as well of the King as of his People.

This Act would have been extended farther, if it had been esteemed necessary.

The Frame of both these Statutes does shew the Bent of the English Constitution, to provide for the Ease and Benefit of the Subject.

But the old Rule, respondeat superior, will hold against the Earl in this Case, especially when it appears by the Evidence of Mr. Goldesbrough the Register, a Witness produc'd by the Earl, that this Practice of paying money generally into the Hands of the masters, was not in use at his first coming into the Register's Office, about the Time of the Revolution. So that the Earl impeach'd took upon himself the Disposition of the Suitors money, without a proper Ground and Justification.

And the Offence contained in this Article does not depend upon his Knowledge, that the Persons admitted were insufficient and unable; but that the Earl did not require and take full Satisfaction and Evidence in a proper manner, to make it manifest that they were able and sufficient, as had been done by his Predecessors; particularly when Mr. Holford was admitted Master, his Father was obliged to settle a real Estate upon him of good Value.

The Earl ought either to have advanc'd Persons equal to the great Trust and Charge, or to have reduced the Trust and Deposit to the Condition and Circumstances of the Person, as his Predecessors had done.

So that it is evident the Earl had only in view the Price and Profit of the Sale of the Office, which would rise highest upon the Inability and Unfitness of the Officer.

And it was therefore very properly said by one of the Earl's Counsel, that he weigh'd the Masters before he admitted them.

But he weigh'd them only for the Sake of the Price they were to pay to himself; and when he had done with them, he left them of very little Weight for the Security of the Suitors.

His false, tho' memorable Declaration in open Court, upon the 21st of Jan. 1723, explains his whole Scheme, when he publish'd from the Bench, That the present Masters were Men of as great Fortunes as any Set of Masters had ever been.

The Words were prov'd by Mr. Waller, and have not been contradicted by any Witness.

At that time Mr. Dormer's Deficiency had taken Air; and Mr. Waller upon his Examination said, The Suspicion of several of the masters was then so strong, that this Publication rais'd Astonishment in the Hearers. But there was then a Vacancy, and an Office to be sold. Mr. Fellowes died 19 Jan. 1723, and it became necessary to give the Office a Reputation.

And altho' the Insufficiency of some of the Masters had been decently intimated to the Earl by Mr. Lightboun, upon his several Proposals, and the Earl may be presum'd to know the general Apprehension of the World. Yet in this solemn manner the Earl became an Officer to himself, to proclaim his own market.

ART. XII. The Practice and Injury to the Suitors can hardly be more aggravated than is express'd in the Article itself. And

And it has been prov'd in every Particular necessary to support the Article; and no Proof has been offer'd on the Part of the Earl to contradict or extenuate the Charge, by making appear his Vigilance, or any Care or Regard to prevent the fatal Consequences of the Practice.

The particular Methods of preventing this Fraud specified in the Article, are only to shew the Practicability of some sort of measures proper to have been put in Execution, in order at least to render the corrupt Practice and Abuse difficult, altho' they had not prov'd compleat in all respects to redress and prevent them.

And by the Witnesses call'd on the Part of the Earl himself, it was expressly prov'd, that some of these Methods had been practis'd with Effect in the time of his Predecessors, and that no Loss had happen'd to the Suitors during that Regulation.

An Account of the Suitors Cash and Effects was brought to the then Lord Chancellor Harcourt by Mr. Holford, as the Account of his Predecessor, before he was admitted; and he was thereupon ask'd if he would be bound by that Account, and stand charged accordingly? to which he agreed, and his Substance was sufficient to answer it.

The Cash Money was for some Years lock'd up in the Hands of the two junior Masters in Lord Chancellor Cowper's Time.

And it has been prov'd, that the total Accounts of all the Masters have been taken three several Times within a few Years; that is, twice by Lord Cowper, and once by Lord Harcourt.

And altho' the Earl seems either to doubt of his Authority, or of the Possibility of doing this in his own time; it can be prov'd, that he requested to see the Accounts, and to be inform'd of this method, and accordingly had a Sight of the Books, and made an Appearance of putting it in Execution.

Besides, the late Accounts deliver'd in by the several Masters before the Commissioners named for that Purpose, shew, that such an Attempt was practicable, and might have been compleated in a reasonable Time.

But the Earl of Macclesfield, by his own Confession, is guilty of a total Neglect of all measures; and never prosecuted one honest and real Step towards the suppressing this Abuse.

He might have given Directions and made Orders for the securing the Suitors Effects, in the same manner before the late Inquiry, as he has done since.

His Secretaries and Agents might have supervised the Observation of these Orders; and have attended to inspect the complete Transfer of the Suitors Effects, as well as to receive his Lordship's extorted Premium.

And if after the Earl had taken these, or any other probable measures, the Masters had broken their Trust, the Fault would have lain upon the Dishonesty of the Masters, and not upon the Conivance or Negligence of the Lord Chancellor.

But upon this Article the Answer of the Earl impeach'd is directly falsified. For he declares upon his Honour, upon that Honour which is communicated to him from the Privilege of the whole Order of Peers (but of which he himself has only made a Shew or Appearance) that he was totally ignorant of this Practice; although it appears in Proof to have been a matter publicly known during his Administration. It was one Inducement to Mr. Kynaston, and the single Temptation to Mr. Thomas Bennet.

This Notoriety is a reasonable Evidence to charge the Earl with the Knowledge of a fraudulent Transaction propagated under himself; especially when the Pretence of his Ignorance must arise from the wilful Neglect of his Duty.

But express Notice is prov'd out of his own Mouth by Mr. Thomas Bennet; and farther, that the Earl had been us'd to prostitute his Honour by a Course of Denial of this Fact upon former Occasions.

For Mr. Bennet in his Account, which he had deliver'd in to the Judges, had insert'd this remarkable Item, viz. Item 9075 l. in the Hands of Persons of Ability; which included the 7500 l. paid to Mr. Hiccocks, and the 1575 l. paid the Chancellor for his Admission.

Mr. Kynaston also in his Account had insert'd an Item to the same Effect for a like Sum.

Mr. Thomas Bennet went soon afterwards to the Chancellor, who enter'd into Discourse with him thereupon, and said: I am sorry you have given in your Account in this manner; it was the worst way in the World: For all the World will now judge, that you paid for your Office out of the Suitors Money; and what hath been so much suspected will now be discover'd, which I have always taken so much Pains to deny, whenever I was ask'd the Question: And wish'd he had been acquainted with Mr. Bennet's Necessities before Mr. Bennet had given in that Item; or to this very Effect.

The Probability of the Truth of this Evidence stands confirm'd from the Nature of the thing, and the State of the Account itself, which has not been contradicted by the Earl; and seems farther strengthened by an Opinion which the Earl had entertain'd, and which he dropt in his Defence on Wednesday, viz. That the Suitor was not the worse by this Method; for by this Detention the former Master remain'd still responsible, and (as he observ'd) by Mr. Meller's retaining some Part of the Suitors Effects, the Deficiency in Mr. Borret's Office was not so large.

This seems a strong Symptom of the Earl's Knowledge of the Practice, when it had obtained his Approbation.

But the Money retain'd by Mr. Meller was no part of the Price of the Office, but were other Sums and Effects which he retained in his Hands, and never paid over to Mr. Borret, upon the repeated Application and Request of the Suitors, who doubted Mr. Borret's Sufficiency.

But suppose the former Master had died, or fail'd with these Effects in his Hands; how should the Suitor have come to a full and legal Proof of this Transaction? and how many Persons was he to prosecute, to discover and receive his own Money?

The Importance of this Part of Mr. Thomas Bennet's Testimony has given Occasion to the Earl and his Counsel to object to his Credit; and an Endeavour has been used to make out, that Mr. Bennet has contradicted himself, and has deny'd here at your Lordships Bar upon his Oath, what he had formerly declared to other Persons.

For that Mr. Bennet being ask'd (with an Intent to prove his Ability to pay the rest of his Deficiency) Whether he had not said, that if Mr. Hiccocks would pay him back two thousand Pounds, he would pay the rest himself, Mr. Bennet denied he had so declared; and yet, as they urge, the contrary is sworn by Mr. Holford, Mr. Thurston, and Mr. Elde.

In Answer to this Mr. Holford gave in Evidence, that Mr. Bennet said, that if Mr. Hiccocks would pay him back two thousand Pounds, he would take Care that the rest of the Money should be raised. But Mr. Bennet did not say, he had the Money, tho' Mr. Holford believed he had by his manner of speaking.

Mr. Thurston deposed, that Mr. Bennet declared he would make up the rest himself; but afterwards told him, that all he had in the World would not pay it:

And Mr. Elde swears to the same Effect.

And this Testimony does not contradict, but rather confirm Mr. Bennet's Evidence. For he made no direct Declaration of his Ability to pay the rest, but, being liable to the Suitors, he seem'd to be willing to get what he could from Mr. Hiccocks:

Besides, his Discourse at these times cannot stand in Competition with his Oath, according to the common Rules of Evidence; and a Witness's Credit is not to be taken away upon an uncertain Expression, proved by each of the Earl's own Witnesses in different Words, when from the Ambiguity of it there cannot possibly be any voluntary Contradiction.

But the Commons will confirm the Truth and Fairness of this Testimony of Mr. Bennet, by proving that the Earl had express'd the same Concern and Dislike of the manner of these Accounts in respect of these Items to others, before any Parliamentary Enquiry.

There is likewise another matter of Fact, which affixes the Proof of this Article, which is, That the Price of the Office, and of the Admission, are comprehended in the Accounts of the Masters Deficiencies, and make the greatest Part of Mr. Bennet's Deficiency, and near a Moiety of Mr. Kynaston's.

Which manifests the Danger and Injury of this unjust Practice to the Suitor, whose Estate is thereby put upon the Hazard of the Master's good or bad Success, and his Property lost with a deficient Master.

And here the Corruption and Misbehaviour of the Earl appear with the highest Aggravations.

The extorted Profit made by the Earl is raised out of those Effects which are deposited in the Court upon the Faith and Honour of the King's Administration under the Care of the Chancellor, as chief Trustee, by whose Connivance (if not Consent) they are thus imbezzled; and the miserable Suitor must either sit down with the Loss, or be forced to expend his little remaining Substance in a tedious Process to recover back his own Estate thus wasted and converted by the Masters.

Unnecessary Delays and Protractions of Causes are the unavoidable Consequences of this Practice; and in this manner the Business of the Court, and the Profits of the Masters Offices have been increased by the Pursuit of the Parties after their own Effects, which in the Conclusion terminates in so heavy a Loss.

The late Orders made upon the Petitions of Mr. Hiccocks and Mr. Rogers since the Impeachment, and some since the Trial commenced, tho' not proved to have been as yet comply'd with, and at best are but Deposits to attend the Event of the Contest between the former and the present Masters, have been made use of by the Earl in his Defence; which is a new Attempt in him to make a false Shew and Appearance of Restitution and Satisfaction.

Altho' if it was a real and a compleat Return of the Principal Money, it would be a very small Excuse and Extenuation for the vast Prejudice done to all the Suitors of the Court, by the locking up their Money, Effects, and Securities, and stopping the Payments thereon for so many months, besides the Loss of Interest on the Cash, and their being hinder'd from the Employment of their Money.

The Earl has not adventured to enter into a particular Discharge of the total Deficiency assigned by the Commons, upon the Evidence of Mr. Thompson, and collected from the Accounts stated upon the late Enquiry, amounting to more than one hundred thousand Pounds. Nor has he given any Answer to the great Loss which the innocent Suitors sustain by the Insolvency of the two deceased masters, Dormer and Borret.

This great Confusion and Damage brought upon a Court, where the Estates of the most wealthy Subjects, as well as of lesser People, do sooner or later come, became a National Concern, not merely from the Extensiveness of the Loss to the particular Suitors, but likewise from the apparent Danger thereby arising to the Publick.

This general Ruin awaken'd the Care and Zeal of the Commons in Parliament for Justice to their Fellow Subjects.

This introduced the Charge against the Earl in the Twelfth Article, which has been proved as it is alledged, viz. That by this unjust and fraudulent Practice, the corrupt Profit made by the Earl upon the Sale of the Offices of Masters in Chancery, has in Consequence been raised and received by him out of the Effects of the Suitors of the Court, for whom he was intrusted; in Breach of the Trust reposed in him for the Preservation of the Estates and Effects of the Suitors, to the Dishonour and Discredit of the Court, and to the great Injury and Defrauding of the Suitors, in a Court of Equity establish'd for their Relief and Protection.

My LORDS,

If the Misdemeanors of which the Earl impeach'd stands accused were not Crimes by the ordinary Rules of Law in Inferior Courts, as they have been made out to be; yet they would be Offences of a publick Nature, against the Welfare of the Subject, and the Common Good of the Kingdom, committed by the Highest Officer of Justice, and attended with so great and immediate Loss to a multitude of Sufferers; and as such, they would demand the Exercise of the extraordinary Jurisdiction vested in your Lordships can inflict that Degree and Kind of Punishment which no other Court can impose.

When these Offences have been proved upon the Earl impeach'd, of what Consideration in Judgment can the Earl's mistaken and misplaced Charities be? Can they alter the Facts charged upon him? or turn Extortion and Fraud into Liberality and Piety? Can the merit of a few private Good Works atone for the Plunder of the whole Body of the Suitors of the Court of Chancery, upon whom this Earl, by his Misbehaviour, has brought a Deficiency of one hundred and eight thousand Pounds?

He depends upon the Prayers and Wishes of those few, who have been the Partakers of his Bounty, without being Sufferers by his Crimes. But the Voice of the Commons for Justice against this Great Offender, not only includes the Complaints of the particular Sufferers, but the Accusation of an injured Nation, whom the Earl had endeavour'd to cut off from the Protection, which ought to be deriv'd to them from the Father of his People.

The Commons having now maintain'd the Truth and Justice of their Charge against the Earl impeach'd upon these Articles, leave him to your Lordships just Determination.

Mr.

Mr. LUTWICHE.

My LORDS,

I am commanded to assist in the Reply; and since I was obliged to bear my Share in this Prosecution, I was willing it should be such as would give me an Opportunity of hearing what would be said and proved in the impeach'd Lord's Defence, before I spoke freely upon the matters in Judgment before your Lordships.

And I may now venture to say, as he was unfortunate to bring so heavy a Charge upon himself, he has still been more unfortunate in his Defence; I submit it to Your Lordships Observation, whether any Part of the Evidence offered by the managers has not been confirmed, nay enforced upon him, by his own Evidence; and some of the Charges upon him he has endeavoured to evade by such Excuses and Arguments, as have made even his Defence criminal.

My Lords, Upon the Examination of the first Witnesses produced on the Part of the Commons, his Lordship was pleased to make it a Question whether he took the Oath directed by the Statute of 12 Richard II. The Objection seemed to be, that tho' the Statute was read, and his Lordship kissed the Bible, yet he was sworn to nothing. This was so surprizing to all that heard it, and the Report of it raised such Indignation, that it might have been expected his Lordship would have drawn a Veil over this Part of the Case, and have taken Care that it should not be mentioned again; but instead of that, his Counsel, nay he himself, have thought fit to bring this Point into Dispute in his Defence, and his Lordship does not even yet fully own that he took the Oath.

The Statute has been represented as obsolete, read in Old French, and not regarded, and the Oath not duly administered; that the Officer said nothing to his Lordship, nor he to the Officer.

The Witnesses told Your Lordships, that at a meeting of the Great Officers every Year in the Exchequer, this Statute was read, and they immediately kissed the Book; and that this was the usual method of taking the Oath prescribed by that Statute.

My Lords, I would observe, that if there had been any thing in the taking of the Oath that his Lordship thought not regular, it was his Duty, who was the Chief of that Assembly, to put them in a right method agreeable to the Statute: And therefore this Objection is very extraordinary to come from him.

It is a dangerous Practice for any one to make a Shew of taking an Oath, and yet, by some nice Distinctions, endeavour to persuade himself or others that he is not sworn.

I do not know but most of the Old Oaths that are taken, may by the like Arguments be evaded, as well as this; the very Oath of Office set forth in this Lord's Answer is, You shall swear, &c. and in that Case a nice Distinguisher may as well say, that he repeated nothing, and that there are not Words de presenti, whereby he is sworn. But where is the Defect in administering this Oath? The Officer reads out of the Statute, That the Chancellor, Treasurer, &c. shall be sworn, and then they kiss the Book.

I do not see there is much Difference between saying, The Chancellor, Treasurer, &c. shall be sworn (they being at the same Time present) and saying, You the Chancellor, Treasurer, &c. shall swear.

I shall therefore have the Charity for the Noble Lord to think and take it for granted, that he was sworn as the Statute required, and that he understood the Statute, tho' it was read in Old French, and that he did not prevaricate, when he did this solemn Act.

Supposing therefore that the Statute 12 R. II. is in Force, and that the Oath was really taken; the next Consideration is, what the Law is upon the several Facts and Circumstances proved against the impeached Lord in Relation to his selling the Offices of masters in Chancery.

The Answer put in to the Charge of the Commons says, The masters freely and voluntarily sent a Present without admitting any particular Sum; we say that particular Sums (and those very exorbitant) were insisted on, and a Bargain driven for the Offices, as much as could be in any Case by way of Brokage; nay the very Benefit of having the Suitors money comes into the Consideration of the Price.

The Words of the Statute of R. II. are general, and in Point of Reason it should extend to this Case above others; because the Offices of masters in Chancery do not only concern the Administration of Justice, but are in some measure judicial; they transact a great Part of the Business of the Court, and have usually been in Commission together with the master of the Rolls, and the Judges, for hearing of Causes.

Lord Chief Justice Coke in his Third Institutes, p. 145. places this Offence of selling Offices under his Chapter of Bribery, where he states the Definition of Bribery to be, When any Man in a judicial Place takes any Fee or Pension, Robe or Livery, Gift, Reward, or Brokage of any Person that hath to do before him any way, for doing his Office, &c. He comments upon the Words of this Definition and more particularly upon those Words, of any Person that hath to do before him any way, and he takes Notice that it is not confined to taking money, where a Suit is depending; but also where any in a judicial Place doth any thing for Gift or Reward by Virtue or Colour of his Office, tho' there be no Suit at all depending.

For Example, (says he) If the Lord Treasurer, for any Gift or Brokage shall make any Customer, Comptroller, or any Officer or Minister of the King; this is Bribery: For he ought to take nothing in that Case by the Statute of 12 R. II. This Example also proves, that the Statute is not confined to the Construction that has been endeavoured to be put upon it, that it relates only to Cases, where the Chancellor, Treasurer, &c. meet together, as they do, when they nominate Persons for Sheriffs; for the Example is of the Lord Treasurer alone.

But, My Lords, we insist upon it that this, as well as other Statutes (that have been mentioned) are but Declarations, and further Remedies for what was the Common Law. The Case that was cited out of Moor's Reports, 781. takes it to be so, of a Sheriff selling the Office of Gaoler, and his Bailiwick; but there was an Objection made to the Report of that Case, that it says the Statute, 4 H. IV. c. 5. gives a Penalty certain and pecuniary; whereas that Statute gives no certain Penalty, and therefore it might be a right Resolution upon that Statute. But the Declaration of the Court, upon which the Party was fined, was because the Offence was malum in se; and and tho' that Statute of 4 H. IV. gives no Penalty, yet I think the Statue 23 H. VI. c. 10. does give a Penalty of 40 l. in the same Case of a Sheriff, and yet the Party was fined at the Discretion of the Court. The same Case is also reported in Noy, 102. where he takes no Notice of any Penalty, and the Report is in these Words: "N. was Sheriff of Nottingham, 43 Eliz. and took money for the Offices of Gaoler and Bailiwick, and he first gave them to his Servants, who sold them, but he himself had the money." And he was fined for that, for it is contrary to 4 H. IV. cap. 5. And also by the Court, That that is a Corruption, and a great Cause of Oppression in the Officers, and such Sale of Offices is malum in se, and fineable.

My Lords, I think the impeached Lord has advanced a very dangerous Position upon this Point. He is pleased to say, the Publick has nothing to do to enquire about any thing, but whether the Officer be a good Officer; that if he be so, the Publick is not hurt, though he gives the Chancellor money for his Place. Here I presume he was sensible that it might be objected, that the same Argument would hold for taking money in a Cause before him, provided it was a good Judgment: And therefore was pleased to say, that the Difference between this Case and taking a Bribe for Judgment in a Cause is, That in the one Case the Party has a Right to have Judgment, but in the other Case no man has a Right to his Favour or Recommendation, unless upon Terms. This is very extraordinary, and the same Argument would prove, that it is lawful for him to take money from every Judge that comes into Westminster-Hall. It is well known, that the Chancellor generally recommends in that Case, and yet it might there be said, What is the Publick the worse, provided he is a good Judge? Surely this is such a Doctrine, as is not fit to be proclaimed to the World, and would tend to universal Corruption.

My Lords, There was a very extraordinary Precedent cited out of Madox's History of the Exchequer, p. 43. where he says, in the Reign of King Stephen, Geoffery the Chancellor, fined in 300 l. 13 s. 4 d. for the King's Seal. This the Author understands to be a Fine then lately made with the King for the Office of Chancellor, or to have the keeping of the King's Seal. The Author himself observes, that this Precedent may justly seem strange to us at this Day. And truly so it may, for in the Instance before Your Lordships, instead of paying money to the Crown for the Office, here are very great Sums of money paid by the Crown for an Acceptance of it.

But what does this Precedent tend to? Is it to prove the Office of Chancellor likewise saleable? This is so entirely new, that it wants a better Authority than this Precedent. It is a great while ago, if it were as the Author takes it to be. But the same Author, p. 42. says, That the Ancient Historians say little concerning the Duty of Chancellor, or the Nature of his Office; and it does not appear what the Business of his Office was at that Time, and nothing pertinent to the matter before Your Lordships is to be collected from it. It is very strange to suppose the Common Law, that is founded upon Reason, should admit the highest Place of Judicature to be filled by those that come in by such corrupt methods. And therefore we must beg leave to insist, that it was an Offence at Common Law, as well as by the Statutes.

But suppose this matter rested only upon the Statute of Edward VI. I do not see but it is an Offence and misdemeanour in his Office of Chancellor to sell these Places of masters in Chancery, and that he is answerable for it before Your Lordships as a Crime.

This Statute is made against buying and selling of Offices (for that is the Title of the Statute) And shall it not be an Offence cognizable before Your Lordships, for a Chancellor to put in Officers in a manner that is condemned by Act of Parliament? When he by Virtue of the Office is to appoint, it is a Breach of his Oath of Office to appoint contrary to the Laws and Statutes of the Kingdom; but more especially when he does it for corrupt Gain.

As to this Point, there is a great deal of Difference between one Officer selling to another, and a Judge that presides in the Court, whose Duty it is to see that proper Persons be appointed according to Law; instead of that, by this method he shews them a bad Example on their very Admission into the Office, and introduces them by Corruption in the first Instance, even by the very Act of Administring the Oath to them.

If this Great Officer should be liable to no other Punishment, than an Incapacity of Nominating again to the same Office, the Act would have little Effect, and that Penalty would signify very little; since his own Office is during Pleasure.

My Lords, I shall now proceed to reply to the Defence that has been made on the Thirteenth and all the subsequent Articles, which is the Province more particularly assigned to me.

The Charge in the Thirteenth Article is, That upon the Failure of Dormer, instead of taking proper Steps for obtaining a Satisfaction by regular and justifiable methods, the Earl of Macclesfield neglected and declined those methods, and by many indirect Practices endeavoured to conceal the true State and Condition of the Office; lest a publick Discovery of the Deficiency should lessen the unjust Gains he proposed to make by the Sale of the Offices of masters in Chancery.

Upon this Article the impeached Lord has said, he thinks it hard that these miscarriages should be charged upon him, that this Affair about Dormer was a misfortune that might have happened in any other Chancellor's Time, and not his Fault.

My Lords, If this unfortunate Lord had done what became him in his high Station upon the Failure of this master, God forbid that the misfortune upon the Office should any ways have been laid to his Charge; if he had been desirous to have proceeded in a regular method, he might very easily have done it; the Paths of Virtue and Justice would have been easy, he need not have found himself at the End of Four Years surrounded with such insuperable Difficulties.

If a fair, plain, and open method had been taken for enquiring into, and stating the Debt due to the Suitors, and the Account of Dormer's Effects to satisfy it, there could have been no Danger to the Chancellor, whatever the Deficiency had been; but the Truth was, he could not part with those vast and exorbitant Prices, to which he had at that Time raised the Places of masters; he he found the sweet of that Gain, and was willing to run some Hazard for it.

Tho' it was known that Dormer was gone, yet the quantum of the Deficiency was not known; and if it had been publick, the money might probably have been taken out of the master's Hands; a Parliamentary Enquiry might have ensued, and he might have lost those exorbitant Profits, which he afterwards actually made of those Places; and these were the true Reasons of the Concealment, and of the clandestine Proceeding that followed; nothing else hindered him from proceeding with Safety to himself by regular Orders of the Court. When Orders of Court are regularly made, there is a quick Way of putting them in Execution: It has been observed by the Counsel in this Case, that it is more expeditious against an Officer of the Court, than another; and it is certainly so. There might have been a Sequestration against Dormer in a very little Time, and that would have intitled the Court to the Possession of his Effects for the Benefit of the Suitors; which in a great measure answers what was objected of the Necessity of Dormer's coming over, and having his Liberty in Order to transfer his Stock. It was likewise said, that it was necessary for the Discovery of his Effects; and yet when he did come over, he was never examined on Interrogatories. Surely if a Chancellor will take upon him to grant a man his Liberty, when he is to make Satisfaction to the Suitors, he ought to take care that the Consideration for the granting him his Liberty should be performed.

But it is said, What Harm has happened by not taking those Methods?

My Lords, Here are two remarkable Instances of the Consequences of this Neglect, by which it appears neither the Debt to the Suitors was known, nor the quantum of the Effects that there were to pay it.

Mr. Edwards told your Lordships, That the Deficiency of Dormer was at first about 25,000 l. but that about a month ago he discovered a farther Debt of about 1500 l. here there is a very great Deficiency concealed: On the other side the Effects of Mr. Dormer, that should have gone towards paying this Debt, have been concealed and lessened by the want of such an Examination. Your Lordships heard the Evidence about the Parcels of Hops belonging to Dormer, that were worth Seven or Eight Hundred Pounds, that lay concealed Four Years, and were not discovered till lately. The Counsel, indeed, said, They were only a Parcel of musty Hops that have been found. But if he had been examined on Interrogatories, in all Probability, he would have discovered them at first, and they had been worth 5 or 600 l. more than now, and the Suitors would have had the Benefit of them; 5, or 600 l. is a considerable Sum in Mr. Dormer's Effects; and no one can tell but there might be other Instances of the like Kind.

What is the Answer his Lordship gives to this gross and wilful Neglect? He tells Your Lordships, That he gave Directions to the two Senior masters to make Enquiry into Dormer's Affairs and Accounts; He left it to them, and that they did not think it requisite to examine him upon Interrogatories, or to use him with Hardship.

It is very extraordinary, that in a matter of that great Concern, he should content himself with a parol Direction; Orders from a Lord Chancellor, that are in Earnest, are always in Writing; nor can they be enforced unless they are so; and therefore there must be some private Reasons for these extraordinary Proceedings.

Another Thing that was insisted on, was, That the Earl (as he expresses it in his Answer) was made to believe that the masters would make good the Deficiency. What Reason had he to believe it? They never told him so; in a matter of that moment he had no reason to depend on an hear-say Evidence. He knew this was to be an Undertaking for the Debt of another; which could not by Law be Obligatory, unless reduced into Writing.

My Lords, I cannot account for these Things, either in the Chancellor, or those masters that had the management of this Affair, unless it be (as the Article charges) to conceal the Deficiency of the Office, I mean, the quantum of that Deficiency; and that both the Chancellor and the two Senior masters thought it their Interest to do so, that all of them might share in the Sale of the Places: The two Senior masters were desirous (as was mentioned by the Evidence) to sell out, and the Chancellor was ready to receive his Share of the money.

The Fourteenth Article is the Article about the Composition with Wilson; and I must beg Leave to say, notwithstanding what has been insisted upon, That it is a clandestine, unusual, and unwarrantable Proceeding. We did take the Liberty on our Evidence to this Article to observe to Your Lordships, That the Petition of Mr. Edwards (on which this Composition is founded) takes notice that Dormer was indebted to the Suitors of the Court in several considerable Sums of money; which should have been a Caution to the Chancellor to have taken a more than ordinary Care in this matter; but instead of that, there is not any one Order, Affidavit, Report, or any one Proceeding, that appears upon Record throughout this whole Affair.

The Report produced appeared to be the Original under Mr. Hiccocks's Hand, which was a Demonstration that it was not filed at the Time when the Order was made for establishing this Composition, nor has been since.

My Lords, If there be but an Affidavit annexed to a Petition, care is usually taken to order that it shall be filed; but it was not thought convenient in this Case to have any thing publick.

My Lords, The Earl of Macclesfield in his Defence to this Article begun with a Copy of a Judgment obtained by Wilson against Poulter, that was signed 22 December 1721, and is for 18,774 l. whereas the Debt pretended to be assigned by Wilson, is 22,060 l. So that tho' the Judgment was for all that Wilson could pretend to (for ought appears) yet the Debt pretended to be assigned, is mentioned to be above 3000 l. more than what the Judgment is for; which is a farther Objection to this Composition, that did not appear before.

The next Point the Earl examined to, was the Sufficiency of Poulter, in order to prove the Assignment of Poulter's Debt to be valuable; and there were two or three Brokers produced on this Account.

They were very unlucky Witnesses to prove the Man's Ability, for they happened to be the very Persons to whom he had declared his Insolvency; vency; one of them (Scott) was employed to go to Mr. Wilson to Compound with him.

But then a very notable Distinction was taken by the Earl himself, That tho' Poulter disclosed to these Witnesses that he was Insolvent, and that they were let into the Secret; yet all other People took him to be a good Man. The Evidence produced to prove this, were only those that knew he was Insolvent, and not One of all those others that it is said took him to be Solvent.

But we hope we have made it plain (and if it were necessary, we could make it clear beyond Dispute) that Poulter was a broken man at that time.

Another Objection was, How does it appear that a better Composition could have been made?

My Lords, Those that presume to take upon them, without a lawful Authority, to make a Composition to bind the Parties concerned, ought to make it appear to be a very good one; but on the contrary it appeared in this Case on the Examination of Mr. Edwards, that Wilson (when he was afterwards charged with it) owned he had paid several others their full Debts; and 'tis notorious that he kept his Shop open till lately.

My Lords, The Answer to our Objection, That no notice was given to the Suitors, of this Reference about the Composition, carried in it (I thought) something extraordinary. It was said both by the Earl of Macclesfield and his Counsel, That whatever the Lord Chancellor did, could not bind the Suitors, they not having notice, and therefore the Suitors might recover the whole from Wilson, and no body was hurt.

My Lords, There is something very shocking in this Excuse, it strikes some Horror to think, that this poor ignorant man (Wilson) should be made to believe upon the Faith of a Court of Justice, that his Composition was in full Discharge of his Debt, if there was at the same time a Reserve, that it might be set aside for want of notice to the Suitors; the Excuse seems to carry in it a greater Guilt than the Crime charged. This unfortunate man (Wilson) was living at the Beginning of this Trial, but has since laid violent Hands on himself, and he is dead: I make no Reflection what might be the Occasion of it.

My Lords, I did mention that upon the Absolute Order made for Mr. Edwards accepting this Composition, it was ordered to be accepted with this Addition to the Order, viz. Of which give Notice forthwith. I mentioned it, that the Earl might have explained what he meant by directing Notice after the Composition was ordered to be accepted, or to whom Notice was intended to be given; I have heard no Answer to that, but what the Earl was pleased to say about the Articles, that on reading them he thought he had been charged with compelling Mr. Edwards to accept of a Composition without Notice to him; whereas it was done on the Petition of Edwards. My Lords, the Notice should have been given to the Suitors, and that before the Composition was ordered to be accepted; that is what the Article charges, and what the managers insist on, and no Answer is given to that Objection.

It was said, That if it had been set down to be heard in the ordinary Course (it being the Third of August) in Vacation-Time, it could not have come on till the next Term.

I believe that Lord knows it has very often happened, that particular Petitions have been heard in Vacation-Time, if Necessity required it; and I don't understand why there needed to be such a Fondness for having this done so much in haste, unless it were for the Purposes charged in the Articles. There was likewise something said by the Earl, of the striking out of the Prayer of Indemnification, that if it were justifiable, it needed no Order to indemnify, and if it were not justifiable, it ought not to be in; but what we say is, that it looks like a Diffidence whether it was justifiable or not, and since it was put into the Prayer of the Petition, that Mr. Edwards might be indemnified, if the Chancellor thought it not justifiable, he ought to have let Mr. Edwards know it, as much as he ought to have let Mr. Wilson have known that the Composition would not be good without the Suitors being Parties. As there is no tolerable Account given for such an extraordinary Proceeding, we submit to Your Lordships, whether it is not rightly charged to be for the unlawful Purposes mentioned in the Articles. If a Commission of Bankruptcy had been taken out against Wilson, the quantum of the Debt to Dormer, and consequently of the Loss of the Suitors, must have been known, and other Suitors might have been alarmed, and a thorough Reformation might have happened; which might have ended in the taking away the money from the masters, and the Price of the Places would have been lowered, which was always most carefully avoided.

My Lords, I now proceed to reply, to the Defence made on the Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Seventeenth Articles.

The Fifteenth Article is, That after the Failure of Dormer, the Earl of Macclesfield, in order to carry on his corrupt and unjust Purposes, and to conceal the Deficiency, did call for the Accounts of the masters, not with any Intent of Examining them, or to secure their Effects, but to terrify the masters and oblige them to contribute 500 l. apiece; and after that Purpose was served, did not oblige them to bring in their Accounts.

The Sixteenth is, That he persuaded the masters to pay the 1000 l. ordered to Mrs. Chitty for the like Purposes.

And the Seventeenth is, For letting all the money belonging to Dormer be paid away to some of the Suitors, without observing a Proportion, to which all were equally intitled.

To the Fifteenth the Earl of Macclesfield says in his Answer, That he did really call for the Accompts with an Intent to examine them, and that he might regulate matters, and that after the 500 l. was paid, still he called for the Accompts; for that there was a Letter sent in November 1721, to the masters, insisting upon having them; but as to this second Letter, as Mr. Cottingham did not speak at all positively to it, but that he believed, but could not be positive, that it was sent, and that he had taken no memorandum of it, &c. we must beg leave to acquaint Your Lordships, that this second Letter was never sent; and every One of the masters will give Your Lordships that Account: But supposing it had been sent, can any one imagine that the Chancellor would not have pursued that Direction, and have had those Accompts, if he had really intended it? What is the Excuse at last? He had required so many Particulars in the Accompts, that it was almost impracticable to do it. My

Lords,

Lords, if the Charge in the Articles be true, it answered the Design the better, that it should be difficult; we say it was done to get from the masters 500*l.* apiece to quiet matters for the present, and when that was done, there was no more Use made of that Order. But what is most wonderful of all is, that, tho' in Four Years Time it was so difficult a Work that it could not be done, yet, when the Committee of Council had called for the Accompts, the Earl of Macclesfield used such Diligence, that he procured them to be ready in a Week's Time; and tho' all the Directions and Particulars which he had required, were not observed, yet it seems they were all that were necessary and sufficient, and it was hoped such as would prevent a Parliamentary Enquiry.

The Earl in his Answer values himself much upon this Expedition, not considering how inconsistent it was with the Difficulties which were made an Excuse for not having it done Four Years before.

It was insisted on, upon this Head, that Mr. Lightboun did not pay, and yet he brought in no Account; but however, Nine of the masters did pay, and the Chancellor well knew it would have looked very partial to have proceeded against one single master, and not the rest; that would have been too barefaced, and so Mr. Lightboun escaped too; besides there was not a Total Despair even of him, for he was several Times afterwards spoke to, about making good his 500*l.*

It was said likewise, the Business of the Court must have been at a Stand, if these Accompts had been pursued.

My Lords, If it had been so, it had been more for the Reputation of the Court, and for the Benefit of the Suitors in general, to have had some Time employed about this necessary Work; and if there had been a willing mind, one long Vacation would have been sufficient without any Interruption to the Business of the Court.

After all these Excuses the Earl is pleased to say, if he had taken the Accompts, it would have signified nothing unless he went farther.

My Lords, If he never begun, he could never bring any thing to Perfection; and in his Answer he confesses, it was necessary to have the Accompts in order to make Regulations. But after all he is forced to come to this Conclusion (as he says in his Answer) to go on in the same Road his Predecessors had done; tho', by the way, it has appeared to Your Lordships, that it is not the same Road; for his two immediate Predecessors did call for the Accompts, and had them.

The Sixteenth Article is grounded on the Persuasions to pay 1000*l.* (ordered to Mrs. Chitty) to prevent a Parliamentary or publick Enquiry, and that the Earl afterwards paid the same himself to Mr. Lockman, &c.

My Lords, We called Six or Seven Witnesses to this Article, and did observe at that Time the Earl in his Answer said, He believed he did not persuade the masters to pay this 1000*l.* And his Lordship was pleased to say, when he spoke in his Defence, That he still believed, that he did not persuade them to pay it.

My Lords, It is very strange that there should be any Doubt made of it; the Occasion of the meeting, and the Nature of the thing plainly shews it. First Mr. Cottingham went to Mr. Lightboun, and told him, that there was a present Occasion for this 1000*l.* that it was proposed he should pay the 500*l.* (which he should have paid before) and the other Masters 50*l.* apiece, which would make up the 1000*l.* When the masters were going to the Lord Chancellor's, they discoursed among themselves, that their going was upon Occasion of another Call for money.

When the Chancellor came to them, he mentioned the pressing Necessity there was for paying this 1000*l.*

Mr. Edwards particularly says, that he represented to them this matter of 1000*l.* as a thing of Consequence, a very pressing Occasion of a Sum of money immediately to be paid; he said, I do not know what the Consequence may be; Clamour's begin to grow strong. I do not know but it may come to a Parliamentary Enquiry. Mr. Lovibond says, that my Lord told them, This was a matter that required great Expedition, for one that belonged to the Prince's Court, and all of them understood there was a Proposal to pay the 1000*l.* and that was the Occasion of the meeting. All the masters that have been examined on this Head confirm it.

What is it that is to evade all this Evidence? It is only this poor Shift, I did not (says the Noble Lord) persuade them to pay the 1000*l.* but I persuaded them to pay all Dormer's Deficiency.

My Lords, There is no Evidence to support this Distinction, but on the contrary, there were Arguments used for the advancing of this money. And if he was not able to persuade them to pay this 1000*l.* there was no Likelihood of prevailing on them to pay the whole.

My Lords, Another matter insisted on in Relation to this Article was, that the money, which was paid to Lockman, was paid out of Compassion; Lockman says he took it as his due, and I think he was in the right; he gave an Assignment of the Order, when it was paid; and certainly this can in no Sort be added to the List of this Noble Lord's Charities, that he has been pleased to publish; but the Discourse with the matters before shews plainly what were his Inducements for paying it; he feared the Consequence if it were not paid, and chose rather to do it, than venture those Enquiries that the not paying it might occasion.

I think the Earl seems to agree, in Substance, to the Declaration at the End of the Articles, that was made the Fifth of December last, viz. that he had heard of Dormer's Deficiency, but knew nothing of it but as publick News, &c. A strange Declaration to come from the Bench at the End of Four Years, during which Time were all these Transactions about Dormer's Deficiency! Then it was that he was pleased to refer it to Mr. Edwards, to enquire whether there was likely to be a Loss of any money, when at that Time he knew very well that all Dormer's money was gone, and Mr. Edwards had none in his Hands.

The Seventeenth Article is for ordering and permitting Dormer's money to be paid out without Regard to Proportion; this was a manifest Injustice, and so discoursed of between this Lord himself and Mr. Edwards; and the Answer that is given to it is, That we have produced but Four Orders made by the impeached Lord for such Payments.

My Lords, I think it not material whether the Orders were made by himself, or the Court; he was warned several Times of the Consequence; he took the management of these matters to himself, and let Things run on, hoping the money would last his Time; and now all is gone, and paid away, and many distressed People are left without any thing. In the Cause of Jett and Jones, the Orders that were read, appeared to be made by this Lord himself; and the Parties have been so lucky as to have got their whole money, whilst others are in the utmost Necessity without any Subsistence.

The Consequence is, that the rest of the Suitors, who were intitled to an equal Proportion, have no Remedy for it. What may be done for them in Charity and Compassion is of another Consideration; but their legal Right is taken away by him that should have protected them.

An Objection was made by the Counsel, That there was no fixed Fund of Dormer's Effects, from which to have settled a Rule of Proportion. This is excusing one Fault by another: First, Care is taken not to have an Accompt settled; and then that is made an Excuse for not settling a Proportion.

The Eighteenth Article relates to the masters trafficking with the money; which was as notorious, as that there was such a Place as Exchange-Alley.

The Year 1720 has been mentioned both by the Earl and his Counsel, and it was so fatal a Year, that surely, if a Reformation were ever to be made, it should have been upon that Occasion. I think there is but little Difference, whether they traded with the money themselves, or put it into another's Hands at high Interest, and permitted them to trade with it. Could any one imagine that Dormer let 24,000 l. lie in Wilson's Hands for nothing? Mr. Cottingham, upon the Examination of my Lord's own Counsel, gave Evidence, that Wilson insisted he allowed high Interest for it. And it was well known it was in the Power of all the masters to traffick with the money, and this after express Warning by one of the masters to the Chancellor not only by Word of mouth, but by Letter written (as I take it) in 1722. But every Thing of a Regulation of that Kind was liable to Objection; one Thing that was proposed was so easy to be done, that there is no Excuse it was not complied with, which is in Relation to the Securities, by placing them in two or three Names, which would have prevented the masters from disposing of the Securities.

This might very easily have been done. The only Answer that was given, was, that it would not answer all the Securities.

This was made a Reason for doing of nothing, and there was such a Backwardness to do any Thing of this Kind, that the meanest and most trifling Excuse was sufficient to satisfy his Lordship, not to take any Step towards it.

My Lords, Upon this Article the impeached Lord was pleased to mention some of his Predecessors, and also his Successors: As to his two immediate Predecessors, he doubts the taking the Accompts by him in the manner they did, would have been thought of no Use.

My Lords, I am apt to believe a good Use might have been made of it; it would have put a Check and Restraint upon the masters, they would have acted with more Caution, when they knew the Ballance was a Charge upon them, and that it might be called for at any Time; and if his Lordship had those Accompts, I dare say he would have seen that there was ten Times as much Cash in the masters Disposal, as there was in one of those Predecessors Time. And it might have been of Use to him to have seen what prodigious Sums of money were in their Hands, and how great the Danger was.

As to the present Commissioners, the Noble Lord was pleased to say, the Difficulties of making the masters accompt have appeared by their Proceedings.

My Lords, They have been sufficiently taken up with endeavouring to compel the masters to give Security for the Deficiencies incurred in this Lord's Time. The Difficulty was not so much in taking an Accompt, as in making good the Deficiency.

They have been forced to take what Security they could get from the masters from Time to Time, and I wish the Deficiency do not still come out worse than is expected; no one can yet say what it will be.

My Lords, The Nineteenth Article was founded on the Endeavours of the Lord impeached, to deceive His Majesty in Council, by persuading the masters to make false Representations of their Circumstances to His Majesty, by a Subscription to their Accompts, and by assisting one another to make an Appearance of Ability.

This, my Lords, was the sad Conclusion of this long Scene of Iniquity; when it was become necessary, and it was no longer to be avoided, that there should be Accompts delivered in. There is an Attendance on the Chancellor; and one of the masters having concluded his Accompt with a Representation of his Ability and Readiness to pay the money, the rest are persuaded to do it in the like manner, without so much as asking them concerning the Truth of it; and there is one Instance that was very remarkable, which was in the Case of Mr. Lovibond, that where he, of his own Accord, could go no farther than to say he was able to pay or give Security to pay; that was not thought sufficient by this Lord, because it would imply a Diffidence that the money was not then forth coming; and therefore those Words about Security were not to be mentioned. Others of them that were no ways capable of producing the money, were induced to make the like Subscription.

When it was expected the money should be produced, then Mr. Dixon and Mr. Cottingham have a meeting with the masters to consult what was to be done; then it was that Proposals were made for the masters to assist each other, and to get Goldsmiths Notes and other Effects to shew to the Judges.

It has been objected, that the managers did not think fit to call Mr. Cottingham and Mr. Dixon.

My Lords, We called the masters that were present at that meeting, who gave Your Lordships an Account of that Transaction, and it turns the Objection upon the impeached Lord, that he did not think fit to call Mr. Cottingham and Mr. Dixon (that were his Servants and Agents) to contradict that Evidence; if this Lord had no Concern in that matter, he would certainly have called them to that Purpose, and his not not examining them to it, greatly confirms our Evidence.

Your Lordships may remember the many Inconsistencies, Evasions, Equivocations, and Insufficiencies in his Lordship's Answer to the Articles of Impeachment, which have been observed and plainly made out by the managers for the Commons.

My Lords, He was pleased to make a Distinction between an Answer to Articles of Impeachment, and an Answer to a Bill in Chancery; that the Plaintiff in a Cause had a Right to a full and plain Discovery, but that the Case before Your Lordships differs. My Lords, I would beg leave to mention, that there was an Instance of an Impeachment before Your Lordships, in which the Lord now impeached had a great Share in the Reply, wherein he laid very great Strefs upon the Insufficiency and Evasions in the Answer. The Person then impeached had very hard Names given to him on that Account, and even his Silence was insisted on as a Confession of his Crimes.

As to the Noble Lord's Charities, I beg leave to say, that, as it is a great Addition to the merit of Charity, to have it kept private, it was the more extraordinary these Charities should be now published; because I do not see they are any ways material to the matters before Your Lordships. Here are plain Facts charged and proved, and if in a Case of this Kind these Charities are to wipe off the Charge, it is a Kind of Commutation that has not been before heard of. My Lords, he that would be the most meritoriously charitable, should first be just. The Lord should have first considered those Suitors that he had injured, he should first have made Satisfaction to them, and then have offered his Gifts.

Thus we have endeavoured to lay before your Lordships the whole Circumstances of this Case: There needs no Eloquence to aggravate the Crimes; I pretend to none; but the Cries of Widows and Orphans will have the most persuasive Eloquence, and when they have Justice on their Side, they will have Weight with Your Lordships.

My Lords, The Case before Your Lordships is founded on Corruption, and a Series of Fraud to support that Corruption. The People had long murmured at it, but the Grievance increased at last to such an intolerable Degree, that it became a National Concern, and there was an unavoidable Necessity of a Parliamentary Prosecution.

My Lords, The Commons hope they have done their Duty in bringing it here, and we hope your Lordships will give such Judgment, as will be consistent with Your Lordships Honour and Justice.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, We shall beg leave to call a Witness or two; the first to the Imputation endeavoured to be thrown upon Mr. Thomas Bennet's Character, in Relation to the Discourse that passed between him and the Earl. We shall shew that he declared it at that very Time, or soon after the Lord had spoke it to him. We desire also to examine Mr. Lucas, who applied for the master's Place. It was insisted, That the Earl was offered 6000 l. and actually refused to take it; but took 5000 l.

from Mr. Elde and Mr. Thurston for the master's Office: We shall shew how that happen'd.

Mr. Richard Lucas Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire that you would inform my Lords, whether you made any Application to the Earl of Macclesfield, or to Mr. Cottingham, about coming into the masters Office at the Time when Mr. Elde or Mr. Thurston were admitted, and what passed.

Mr. Richard Lucas. My Lords, Upon the Death of Mr. Fellowes, being persuaded by some Friends to make an Application for the Office vacant by his Death, I did go immediately to Mr. Cottingham; my Lord Macclesfield being then out of Town, I thought it proper to go to his Secretary.

Lord Ch. Justice King. Please to speak up.

Mr. Richard Lucas. I say, upon the Death of Mr. Fellowes, I was persuaded by some Friends to make Application for the Master's Place; and upon that, I went to Mr. Cottingham, and told him the Affair I came about. He told me, Mr. Lucas, you know you have formerly had some Talk with me about an Affair of this Nature; it is to no Purpose for me to recommend you to my Lord, unless you bid more than formerly you have done. Upon that I immediately told him, I was ready to give 6000 l. There was some Talk passed between us besides, but it being so long ago, and not expecting to be called to give an Account of it, I cannot now recollect it. One Thing I can recollect that he intimated to me, That my Lord Macclesfield had some Intentions of making some Orders, or doing somewhat that should be for the Ease or Advantage of the masters; but his Lordship would not do it at that Time, because it would look as if he had an Intention of making Advantage of that Vacancy. A Day or two afterwards I met Mr. Cottingham in the Hall, and asked him, If he had spoke to my Lord about me? He told me, he had; but that my Lord was pleased to enquire into my Circumstances, and did think it proper that some Security should be given by the masters; and I being immediately to be put in by his Lordship, it was the more incumbent upon him to see what Security I was able to give. Upon that I waited upon him to know what Security was expected: He mentioned to me 10,000 l. Security. I told him, That after such Time as I had parted with 6000 l. I could not take upon me to say, I could myself make up a Security to the Value of 10,000 l. but what with the Assistance of Friends, and mine own Estate, I might possibly do it. Upon talking of the matter with my mother, she was very willing to join in the Security. Upon that I wrote a Letter, I cannot remember whether it was directed to my Lord Macclesfield, or to his Secretary; but to one or the other it was. I sent it by my Servant, and I was informed by Mr. Cottingham, That his Lordship had a Sight of it. But afterwards being uneasy at giving so large a Sum of money, and considering from the Talk that then was, that these matters might come into Parliament, I was advised, and I thought it proper, to have some better Hold upon his Lordship, to make some Return, in Case any thing should happen to lessen the Value of the Place: Upon that, I did

did write a Letter, I cannot remember the whole Contents; but I pretty well remember the Substance, which was, That I would undertake to give the Security required to the amount of 10,000 l. I believe, I did also mention my real Estate, which was near 300 l. a Year, to be a Part of the Security, and I did add, That notwithstanding the present Disputes between the master of the Rolls and the other masters, and the Talk there was of bringing it into Parliament, I was not at all uneasy; because I could securely depend upon his Lordship's Generosity, that he would take it into his Consideration, in Case any thing happened amiss in the next Session of Parliament; I can't remember exactly the Words, but my Lord Macclesfield has the Letter; if I am mistaken, his Lordship will set me right.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Upon this Letter of your Expectation of being repaired, if any thing happened, had you any Answer?

Mr. R. Lucas. The next thing I heard, was That Mr. Elde was in the Place, and Mr. Cottingham was pleased to say, he was a particular Acquaintance of my Lord's, and therefore had it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When Mr. Cottingham told you this, what Answer did he return as to my Lord's Approbation of the Proposal?

Mr. R. Lucas. He said, to the best of my Remembrance, That my Lord was pleased that I offered 6000 l. at once, provided I would give Security, if that should be thought proper.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Since you was disappointed when Mr. Elde came in, What passed when Mr. Thurston came in? whether did you renew your Application then?

Mr. R. Lucas. I was, with Abundance of Regret and Fear, prevailed upon to renew my Application.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What were your Fears?

Mr. R. Lucas. My Fear was about the bringing this matter into Parliament, and that I did not know what Effect that might have upon the Profits of the Place. Upon that, my Brother told me, he was acquainted with Mr. Ellis, his Lordship's Chaplain, and, if I pleased, he would go to him, and get him to speak to my Lord about it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Directions did you give to your Brother as to offering any thing, and upon what Terms?

Mr. R. Lucas. I cannot say whether my Brother had a direct Commission from me to mention that I was then ready to give 6000 l. but it was my Apprehension, and the Apprehension of all those that knew this Affair, that I should not come in under so much; I am not very positive that such a Direction was given. I did mention another thing to my Brother, to acquaint Mr. Ellis, that I had heard more of the Deficiencies in the several Offices of the masters, and that I was not without Apprehension, that if I should give 6000 l. to come into this Place, I might from time to time be called upon for several Sums of money in order to make good past Deficiencies; and I thought that it would be unreasonable for me to be brought into any Contribution for making good those Deficiencies, when I had no Concern in them. I then desired it might be mentioned. As for the Answer, I never saw Mr. Ellis.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Orders did you give to your Brother? Did you give him any Order to pay the money without Consideration of being liable to the Deficiencies?

Mr. R. Lucas. I gave him no Order at all, I thought it was not come to bear yet.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was there any thing passed after that?

Mr. R. Lucas. I conceive, my Lords, you won't think it proper for me to give an Account of what passed between Mr. Ellis and my Brother.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire to know, whether your Brother had any Orders or Directions from you to go on?

Mr. R. Lucas. I have told you every thing I can recollect; I only told him, I desired him to speak to Mr. Ellis to recommend me to his Lordship, upon the Foot I have mentioned, viz. on the Foot of the former Proposals.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Had your Brother any Authority from you to give 6000 l. without being secured from the Deficiencies?

Mr. R. Lucas. Six thousand Pounds was the Sum to be given, and I desired my Brother to mention the Deficiencies, and that I should not be understood to be subject to any of them.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was it to be given absolutely without Reserve, or with Regard to be secured from the Deficiencies?

Mr. R. Lucas. I did desire that the Business of the Deficiency might be explained, and that it might be understood that I would not be answerable for any of them.

Mr. Edward Lucas sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire you would inform my Lords, whether you received any, and what Directions from your Brother, upon the last Vacancy, when Mr. Thurston came in, of the making Proposals for your Brother's coming into that Office?

Mr. E. Lucas. Soon after Mr. Borret's Death, my Brother expressed an Inclination to me of succeeding in that Office: I told him, I had an Acquaintance with Mr. Ellis, my Lord Macclesfield's Chaplain; and if he would give me any Commission, I would communicate it to Mr. Ellis, I believing that a proper Way of communicating it to my Lord. My Brother did desire me to go to Mr. Ellis, and to inform him myself, that he had so just a Sense of my Lord's Honour and Generosity, that he believed he might leave the Terms to be fixed by my Lord himself. I went to Mr. Ellis, and did tell him as my Brother had desired me. Mr. Ellis said, He did not much care to concern himself in the Affair; if it had been to recommend to a Living, it might be proper for him; but this was out of his Province. I acquainted him with what Steps my Brother had formerly taken, in order to obtain one of these Offices, and explained to him the Nature of the thing, and persuaded him to lay this matter before his Lordship. Upon which he was then pleased to say, He would go to my Lord (who was at Kensington) the next Day, and bring me an Answer.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Had he any Directions either as to the Price, or the Terms?

Mr. E. Lucas. I don't know of any Directions he had, either as to the Price, or the Terms.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What did you say about the Security, and the Deficiencies in the several Offices?

Mr. E. Lucas. This was another Conversation, about a Week, or Ten Days after; after Mr. Ellis had brought me an Answer, then I remember my Brother gave me Directions to consult with Mr. Ellis, whether it was not proper to make my Lord a direct Offer of 6000 l. but then it would be reasonable, that he should be indemnified or secured from any Damage, or Deficiency by any of the precedent Masters; and that he should not be called upon to make good any such Deficiency. I told Mr. Ellis this, and he said, there was no Room for this, there might be Deficiencies in some other of the Offices, but he had heard, there was no Deficiency in Mr. Borret's Office. I had likewise heard so, but whether there was a Deficiency or not, I could not tell; my Brother was willing to enter into a Treaty with my Lord upon these Terms.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did you hear any Thing more about it?

Mr. E. Lucas. About a Week after Mr. Ellis writ to me, That my Lord Macclesfield had approved of Mr. Thurston.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Please to recollect whether your Direction was about Borret's Deficiency only, or about all the Deficiencies in general?

Mr. E. Lucas. My Directions from my Brother were about all the Deficiencies; Dormer's Deficiency ran in his Head, and he thought it unreasonable, that he should be obliged to contribute to any Deficiency precedent to his coming in master.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did you communicate this to Mr. Ellis?

Mr. E. Lucas. I did communicate it to Mr. Ellis; if not in such express Terms, yet to that Effect, that it was unreasonable, that my Brother should be obliged to contribute to make up those Deficiencies that were preceding to his being master; I am sure, I added those Words, That he should not be obliged to contribute to make up those Deficiencies that were precedent to his being master.

Earl of Macclesfield. My Lords, I submit, whether it be not proper, that Mr. Ellis be called before this Mr. Lucas goes away.

Mr. Ellis called, but not examined again immediately.

Earl of Macclesfield. Mr. Lucas, I desire that you would declare to my Lords over again, what you have given in Evidence.

Mr. E. Lucas. The first Time I saw Mr. Ellis was at my mother's House, immediately after Mr. Borret's Death. I then told him of my Brother's Intention to purchase a master's Place, and that my Brother had so thorough a Sense of my Lord's Honour and Generosity, that he would leave the Terms to my Lord himself. Mr. Ellis was not at first inclinable to concern himself in it, but upon telling him what Steps my Brother had taken in Regard to it; he said out of Friendship to me he would engage in it, and go to my Lord, and bring me an Answer. This was the first Conversation. Mr. Ellis did the next Day bring me an Answer from my Lord.

VOL. VI.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What was the Answer my Lord sent?

Mr. E. Lucas. The Answer that Mr. Ellis brought was, That my Lord had no Objection to my Brother, he did remember that he had been formerly recommended to him, but that there was some other Person proposed by some of the masters, of whom he expected a farther Recommendation, and could not now give any other Answer to it: He also told me, That he apprehended, if that Person did not succeed, my Brother might have the Refusal. I said it was indifferent whether my Brother then succeeded, or not; because my Lord told him, That one or two masters were inclinable to sell, and if they did, he might have an Opportunity of buying of those masters. This passed on the Second Conversation.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Go on.

Mr. E. Lucas. The Third Conversation was sometime afterwards at my Lord Macclesfield's own House in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields. I went by my Brother's Directions meaning to consult with Mr. Ellis in a friendly manner, whether he did think it adviseable to make his Lordship a direct Offer of 6000 l. I said if he gave it, it was reasonable, that he should be indemnified from any Damage that should happen by Reason of the Deficiency in any of the Offices, and not be obliged to contribute towards making them up; he said my Lord had not spoken to him about that, that he could not have every Opportunity he desired to speak with him; that as to the Deficiencies, he had heard there was none. I said, I had likewise heard so; but whether there was or no, my Brother was willing to enter into a Treaty with my Lord upon those Terms. This to the best of my Remembrance is the whole I know of the matter.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I only would beg leave to ask this Question, When the first Proposal was made to Mr. Ellis, whether he did propose a certain Sum?

Mr. E. Lucas. I don't remember I did; but I think I told Mr. Ellis my Brother had formerly offered 6000 l. and I told Mr. Ellis this, and did lay before him all the Circumstances of that Affair, to make him the more inclinable to engage in it.

Mr. Com. Serjeant. I desire he may be asked, whether any Terms besides were mentioned than what Mr. Lucas has mentioned before?

Mr. E. Lucas. I don't remember there were any other Directions then given, I can't be positive, but that he was willing to leave it to my Lord's Honour and Generosity. And my Lords I can swear positively, that till the first Day of these Proceedings, when I met Mr. Ellis in the Court of Requests, I never knew that he had offered my Lord Macclesfield 6000 l.

Earl of Macclesfield. My Lords, we beg leave that Mr. Ellis may give an Account of what Proposal he made to me from Mr. Lucas.

Mr. Ellis. My Lords, the Account Mr. Lucas has given Your Lordships is true in all the Particulars, as far as I can remember at this Distance of Time, though there are a good many that I could not have recollected of myself, only as to this one, his not impover-

ing

ing me to offer this 6000*l.* I should not have gone to my Lord, unless I had had some particular Offer to mention. I particularly remember I made him that Offer, and I am as certain, that Mr. Lucas did speak to me to make the Offer of 6000*l.* for this Reason, that I never knew that Mr. Lucas had offered 6000*l.* before by Mr. Cottingham, till this Impeachment begun, when Mr. Lucas, being here, acquainted me that he had made that Offer to my Lord.

Mr. E. Lucas. I desire Mr. Ellis may be asked, whether ever he told me, that he offered Lord Macclesfield 6000*l.*?

Mr. Ellis. I believe I only did tell him in general, that I had made his Lordship the Offer which he had desired me to make, and in general likewise, that my Lord was well satisfied with it.

Mr. Com. Serjeant. I desire he may inform Your Lordships, whether, when he told Mr. Lucas, that he had made that Offer which he had desired him, he did enquire what that Offer was?

Mr. Ellis. No, my Lords, he did not.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, they have called Mr. Ellis to confront Mr. Lucas; but they agree together in all the material Circumstances. Mr. Ellis says, what Mr. Lucas swears is true in every Particular, unless in Relation to the Offer of 6000*l.* In all the rest Mr. Ellis confirms Mr. Lucas's Evidence.

Mr. E. Lucas. I don't positively swear that I did not give him that Commission, but to the best of my Remembrance, I did not give him that Commission.

Earl of Macclesfield. I desire Mr. Ellis may be asked, when he made the Proposal to me, whether he mentioned any Condition whatsoever?

Mr. Ellis. No, my Lords, I did not mention any Condition.

Mr. E. Lucas. Till after the first Conversation with Mr. Ellis, I had no Direction from my Brother to mention any Price or Condition; I gave an Account to Your Lordships of two different Conversations.

Earl of Macclesfield. When the Answer was brought, that I was satisfied with the Proposal, what did he do farther upon it?

Mr. E. Lucas. My Lords, Mr. Ellis did not tell me, that my Lord Macclesfield was satisfied with the Proposal, but that my Lord Macclesfield had no Objection to my Brother, and he had formerly received a Recommendation of him; but at present another Person was recommended by some of the masters, whom he expected to be farther recommended.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, I desire Mr. Ellis may be asked, how long, before Mr. Thurston was admitted, was the Conversation about giving Security, that Mr. Lucas might be indemnified from the Deficiencies?

Mr. Ellis. My Lords, in one of the last Conversations, which was after I had spoken to my Lord Macclesfield, Mr. Lucas might say something about having Security. But I don't recollect it with any Certainty; if he did, it was some Days before Mr. Thurston was admitted.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may inform Your Lordships, Whether he ever told my Lord

Macclesfield any thing of this Discourse about Security?

Mr. Ellis. No.

Sir Geo. Oxenden. He says, He never told my Lord Macclesfield of that Conversation: I desire to know, if he told my Lord Parker?

Mr. Ellis. No, my Lords, I told no body at all.

Mr. Strange. My Lords, I beg leave to make one Observation; a learned manager was pleased to observe upon the Appearance of these Two Witnesses together, That now the Evidence of Mr. Lucas is confirmed by Mr. Ellis: Your Lordships are pleased to remember, that Mr. Ellis was our Witness, and was first examined; and therefore I should apprehend the Observation may be turned much properer the other way: That the Evidence of Mr. Ellis, who was our Witness, and was first examined, is now confirmed by Mr. Lucas.

Earl of Macclesfield. My Lords, I desire he may inform Your Lordships with relation to the Discourse that passed betwixt them about the Deficiencies; Whether the Objection did not relate singly to them?

Mr. Ellis. I don't well remember what passed upon the Subject of the Deficiencies; what I have said to Your Lordships before, I remember full well, because a particular Circumstance made me recollect, that Mr. Lucas did say, he had heard there was no Deficiency in Mr. Borret's Office; which I had heard too; but at what time that Discourse was, I can't recollect; it might be as he represented it.

Earl of Macclesfield. Mr. Lucas said to you, That he was willing to treat upon those Terms?

Mr. Edw. Lucas. Upon those Terms, or to that Effect, I did say.

Mr. Plummer. I only would make this Observation; Both these Evidences confirm this, that Mr. Lucas was an inquisitive man, and would not part with his 6000*l.* so easily as to ask no Questions.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We beg leave now to call a Witness as to the second letter or Order, supposed to be sent in November 1721, to all the masters. Mr. Cottingham could not take upon himself to say, that it was delivered; he had kept a Memorandum of the first, but none of that, and he believed he might say, it was delivered; we deny any such letter was delivered, and beg leave to ask as to that particular Point.

Mr. John Bennet called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether in November 1721, any second letter, or Order, of the Purport of the first Order, was sent, or delivered, in relation to the masters bringing in their Accompts?

Mr. J. Bennet. My Lords, I never saw any such letter.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did you ever hear of it?

Mr. J. Bennet. I never heard of it before, till I heard Mr. Cottingham read it at the Bar.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did you receive any Account from the other masters, that they had received any such letter?

Mr. J. Bennet. No, my Lords, never.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Do you recollect any Discourse between my Lord Macclesfield and your Brother, relating to your Brother's Account?

Mr.

Mr. J. Bennet. I don't recollect the whole.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What do you recollect?

Mr. J. Bennet. My Lord hath declared to me, That he wondered Mr. Kynaston and my Brother should put such an Item in their Accounts, which would make a Discovery, that the masters had bought their Places with the money of the Court, which might be of mischievous Consequence; that whenever it was objected to him, he had always taken great Pains to deny it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When was this? About what Time?

Mr. J. Bennet. About Christmas last.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We beg leave to take Notice of the Nature of this Evidence, that it is very improper now, being new Evidence; not to the same Purpose to support what was given before, but new matter, and therefore not proper.

Mr. Lutwyche. We apprehend it is very proper, because Mr. Thomas Bennet's was objected to, and this confirms his Evidence.

Mr. Holford called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire he may be asked, whether this letter, or Order, of November 1721, was ever communicated to him by Mr. Cottingham?

Mr. Holford. No, my Lords, I never heard of it till now lately.

Mr. Com. Serjeant. I desire Mr. Holford would inform Your Lordships, whether there were not then several masters senior to him? and whether it is not usual to leave those letters, or Orders, with the Senior masters?

Mr. Holford. I don't know that such Order, or letter, was left at that Time. Mr. Hiccocks and Mr. Fellowes were Seniors to me.

Mr. Com. Serjeant. I desire he may be asked the other Part of the Question, Whether it is not usual to leave Orders, wherein the masters are generally concerned, with the Senior masters?

Mr. Holford. It is not; but the Usage generally is to be left at the Publick Office. It might be left with the Senior master, for ought I know.

Mr. Lovibond called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did you ever hear or know of this Letter or Order of Nov. 1721?

Mr. Lovibond. I never heard of any such letter or Order, till I heard it read at this Bar.

Mr. Kynaston called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Mr. Kynaston, will you give my Lords an Account, whether you heard of this letter or Order of Nov. 1721?

Mr. Kynaston. I suppose you mean the letter which Mr. Cottingham read.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. The same.

Mr. Kynaston. I never heard of it, till I heard it read at this Bar.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I hope this will explain Mr. Cottingham's Want of memory, when he said that he could not remember it.

Mr. Lightboun called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire to ask you, whether you know any thing of this letter of Nov. 1721?

Mr. Lightboun. I never heard of it, till I heard it at Your Lordships Bar from Mr. Cottingham.

Mr. Edwards called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether he ever heard of this Letter of Nov. 1721?

Mr. Edwards. I never heard of such a Letter, till I heard it mentioned at this Bar.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. So that, my Lords, we apprehend this letter, when written by Mr. Cottingham, was a Pocket-letter to be made use of on any proper Occasion. The managers have done with their Evidence and the Witnesses; they shall call no more. We humbly apprehend, that we have cleared up the Reason, why the Lord took 5000 l. rather than 6000 l. It was from Hopes of greater Gain in having 5000 l. absolutely, without being liable to refund, than 6000 l. liable to such a Contingency. Upon the Evidence we submit the whole matter to Your Lordships Determination.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we will be short in our Reflections upon this new Evidence. We apprehend their Evidence proves, what was insisted upon by us, that there was Care taken in disposing of these Offices, and that my Lord Macclesfield having personal Knowledge of one Gentleman did prefer him before another, whom he did not know; though he had less money from him, than he could have had of the other. It is agreed by Mr. Lucas and his Brother, that there was a proposal of 6000 l. made upon this Occasion: Mr. Ellis tells you, Mr. Lucas gave him Orders to propose it to my Lord Macclesfield without any Terms whatsoever: He never mentioned any Terms, or intimated any Condition or Restriction to my Lord Macclesfield. Upon that his Lordship was pleased to direct a proper Enquiry to be made, what Security he was able to give for the Discharge of his Office; here there was 6000 l. proposed without any Terms by one whom he did not know; but he preferred another whom he did know to be well qualified, for 5000 l. This doth not shew any Neglect in the noble Earl; but all the Care and Caution that ever could be taken; and this shews that the Earl could not do this out of an immoderate Desire of Gain, when 6000 l. was proposed to be given; but he preferred another whom he knew to be well qualified for less money; so that we apprehend this is an Evidence which is much in favour of the Earl. As to the other matter, the masters not knowing of this letter, your Lordships observe what Evidence was given by Mr. Cottingham. This is a Transaction some time ago, he says that he writ this letter by the noble Lord's Order, that he cannot now say to which of the masters he delivered it, or whether it was personally delivered by him, or by one of his Clerks. Your Lordships will observe, that there were two masters Senior to Mr. Holford, viz. Mr. Hiccocks and Mr. Fellowes; and it might probably be delivered to one of them; one of them is since dead, the other is yet living; but we were not aware of the Objection, and so have not him here. This doth not impeach Mr. Cottingham's Credit or his Evidence, so far as it concerns the Earl.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, I will not enter into a strict Comparing of the Evidence, we apprehend that what Mr. Ellis swore stands confirmed in every thing by Mr. Lucas, and we have Reason Reason to thank the Gentlemen of the House of Commons for this Evidence. There was one material Part of our Evidence, that the Earl had a thorough Intention of entering into the Regulation of those matters; but by Disputes arising in relation to the Jurisdiction of the master of the Rolls, he was hindered.

Now the Evidence of Mr. Lucas corroborates our Proof on this Head, he saith that Mr. Cottingham told him, tho' Security had not been taken, yet at present the noble Lord had a Reformation in View, and Security would be expected; and therefore he enquired what Security he could give; there was not only an Enquiry into his present Circumstances, but likewise an Intimation that Security would be expected. This shews the Earl's Intention; and if the Thirst of Gain had swayed him, Mr. Lucas would never have had those Bugbears to affright him from giving so much money. Upon the whole it appears that no part of our Evidence is any way impeached by the new Evidence they have given.

Earl of Macclesfield. My Lords, I beg leave to say a very few Words upon what hath been newly offered, as to the Evidence to take off my having preferred 5000 Guineas with a Person I thought a better man, to 6000 l. with another, whom I thought a good man. I apprehend it is not taken of at all by any Thing that has yet been offered. Mr. Lucas owns that at the first Time there was an Expectation of Security, and he has given your Lordships an Account that he asked what Security was expected; and was answered I think to the Value of 10,000*l.* and that what he spoke of the Deficiency, was only that he should not be liable to farther Orders to be made upon him for Contribution to the former Deficiencies of other masters; and in the latter Time, when the Clamour was greater, Mr. Ellis offered me 6000 l. absolutely without any Condition, and I said I approved of the Person and of the Offer, but I had another Gentleman then under Consideration. Their Evidence indeed varies as to the Particulars of the Conversations they had upon this Subject: But whatever Discourse passed between them, unless it came to my Knowledge, it ought not to affect me. I never heard, nor is it so much as pretended, that I ever did hear, there were any manner of Terms or Conditions whatsoever annexed to the Proposal made by Mr. Lucas.

Mr. Ellis has been asked this Question, and has sworn positively he mentioned none at all to me; so that there is not the least Pretence that the Restriction, supposing Mr. Lucas annexed any to the Proposal (which I must observe is flatly contradicted by Mr. Ellis's Evidence) ever came to my Knowledge.

As to what Evidence is given in relation to the letter of November 1721; your Lordships will remember, that when I spoke of that, I entered upon it as a Thing not at all necessary for me; because they had not proved the Article, that the letter writ in February was with an Intention to terrify the masters into a Contribution; but all the Proof they produced was, that the masters had paid a voluntary Contribution, and upon that they made some Observation; but not one of the masters ever gave your Lordships an Account that they did it by Reason of, or under the Terror of this letter;

they have called every one of them, and not one hath said so, but agreed that they had paid it as a voluntary Contribution; so that there is no manner of Occasion for what hath been said about this letter. Mr. Cottingham did say before your Lordships, that he thought the letter was sent, and he had no Reason to believe the contrary; but indeed he had no memorandum of its being sent. It is very extraordinary to suggest, that this should be a pocket letter. Can any Person imagine that that letter was calculated for an Occasion like this? Was there any Apprehension of this Prosecution in 1721? My Lords, it is not worth while to trouble your Lordships with any more Remarks about so groundless a Pretence. In the Reply there hath been something new offered to your Lordships to make out my receiving money from the masters to be an Offence at common law; and there have likewise been mentioned several Acts of Parliament, to neither of which I have had any Opportunity of giving an Answer before; I therefore apprehend I have a Right to take Notice of them now. And first I beg leave to observe to your Lordships, that every one of these Acts of Parliament relates plainly to Judges who take Bribes, or take money for doing their Duty, or for doing those Things they were bound to do; they lie upon your Lordships table, and if your Lordships will but look upon them you will find all to be so.

That of Magna Charta is plainly so, that Justice shall be administered to the Party without paying for it.

So the Statute of 12. R. II. that they shall. —

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord cannot be regular to reply to us on that Statute.

Earl of Macclesfield. The Statute is, that they shall not make any Officer for Brokage.

Sir G. Oxenden. We must submit it to your Lordships whether this can be regular; the noble Earl hath had his Defence, we have replied; it is not regular for him to enter into a Debate now.

The Statute is upon your Lordships Table; and your Lordships will consider it.

Earl of Macclesfield. I will not take up your Lordships Time any farther in insisting upon it; but I hope at least those Gentlemen will not oppose my taking Notice of one Thing that is new; though not any part of the Articles, which is what the Gentlemen have said with relation to Wilson's Composition not being binding upon the Suitors of the Court; that it is matter of Horror that Wilson should trust to the Faith of a Court of Justice, and upon that enter into a Composition, which at last should not be effectual and binding. To that give me leave to answer, that if Wilson had acted honestly, and given a fair Account of his Estate and Effects in this Case, and it had appeared upon the whole, that he could not pay more than according to this Composition; and at the same Time that it must be a real advantage to the Suitors to have received their Proportion of what he was able to pay, without the Expences of a Statute of Bankruptcy; in that Case he would have the Benefit of it: But in Case he could have paid more, and this appeared only to be a fraudulent or unfair Composition, it would be no way conclusive upon the Suitors; and as he ought not to reap any Benefit, so neither would they suffer any Prejudice by it upon that Supposition.

Benefit

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. The managers are entitled to the Reply and Conclusion.

As to our Evidence newly given, it proves in the strongest manner, that if there was a Reason for distinguishing between 5000*l.* and 6000*l.* it was because the 6000*l.* was attended with an Incumbrance; and if it be said that the Earl had no Notice of it, it is prov'd that his Agent, or the Person whom he employ'd, had this Account deliver'd to him, and knew it; and we appeal to the Letter which is in their Hands. And therefore this is so far a Confirmation of the other Part of the Charge of Neglect when Security was offered. Why was not the Person accepted? Why Mr. Elde prefer'd?

Mr. Lucas's Directions to his Brother, and his Transactions are confirm'd by Mr. Ellis, my Lord's own Chaplain; and the only Reason why the Bargain was not concluded, was, because of the Privilege insisted upon by the Person to be indemnified from all Contributions and Charges.

Earl of Macclesfield. I beg your Pardon, if I trouble your Lordships once more, in relation to a Piece of new Evidence, which I did not before reflect upon; I am under a very great Disadvantage from these Gentlemen, who are for tying me down to very great Hardships, so that if any thing slips my memory, at what they call the proper Time, it must at this rate be lost for ever. I would take Notice of one Thing, with relation to what Mr. Thomas Bennet said of what I spoke, of denying that the masters paid for their Offices out of the Suitors money; they are attempting to prove that I knew of their doing so, and they prove it by shewing, that I said I had always denied it. But, my Lords, is there any of the masters that came in in my Time, that says I knew any such thing? No, my Lords, not one of all those masters that came in in my Time, and appear to have transacted in this manner; there are only two, Mr. Kynaston and Mr. Thomas Bennet; but is there any of them, or any other, that pretend that I knew they did so? Here are two Persons that paid for their Offices out of the Suitors money; and because I told one of them afterwards, admitting what he said to be true, that I had heard it said it was so, and deny'd it; Is it from thence to be concluded that I knew it was really so? My Lords, I beg leave to observe as to the matter of the difference of the Prices; I gave Evidence of the difference of Prices in other Offices, and their Rise from 50*l.* to 500*l.* in one Instance, and from 200*l.* to 800*l.* in another.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We are unwilling to interrupt the Lord; but now for him to go back again into the whole, is a greater Right than his Lordship is entitled to; therefore from the Duty we owe to your Lordships, we hope every Thing that is regular shall be observ'd.

Earl of Macclesfield. I submit if your Lordships think I am irregular; in the Confusion my Papers were in when I made my Defence from them, the Notes relating to this and some other matters were overlook'd: But as to the Reply, I must beg leave to make one general Observation, That the Gentlemen have thought the Arguments used by me in that Defence, either such as they could not answer, or such as needed no Answer, since they have not attempted to answer any of them; and which of the two, I must leave to your Lordships Determination.

Mr. Onslow. My Lords, in the Course of our Reply, we made use of the Statute of Henry IV. We have it not printed, but we have an attested Copy in Writing, and the Original Roll; if your Lordships please, this attested Copy may be brought up to your Lordships Table.

Mr. Nicholas Paxton sworn.

Mr. Paxton. My Lords, I examined this Copy with the Deputy-keeper of the Rolls in the Tower, and it is a true Copy.

Earl of Macclesfield. Whether that Parliament Roll be in the Nature of a Journal or a Statute Roll, wherein the Act of Parliament is enter'd?

Mr. Paxton. My Lords, the Officer is here; he will give your Lordships an Account.

Mr. Lutwyche. It is quoted by my Lord Coke to be of the same Nature as a Parliament Roll.

Mr. Holmes called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Mr. Holmes, Where is this Roll kept?

Mr. Holmes. My Lords, I am Deputy-keeper of the Records.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Where?

Mr. Holmes. In the Tower.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Roll is that?

Mr. Holmes. It is the Parliament Roll of the 11th of Henry IV.

Earl of Macclesfield. I desire he may inform your Lordships whether there be any Difference or Distinction between the Parliament Roll and the Statute Roll?

Mr. Holmes. There are a great many private Acts enter'd upon the Parliament Rolls; that are not in the Statute Rolls; what is in the Statute Roll was sent down by Writ into the several Counties to be proclaim'd in the several County Courts.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether that is not the Original Roll?

Mr. Holmes. This is the original Roll.

E. of Macclesfield. I apprehend the Parliament Roll contains the Petitions, and the King's Answer.

Mr. Holmes. It doth.

E. of Macclesfield. Before it comes to be published as a Law, is it not drawn up in Form, and enter'd upon the Statute Roll?

Mr. Holmes. The Petition is a piece of Parchment; after it hath passed King, Lords, and Commons, then it is entred on this Roll.

Mr. Onslow. Whether the King's Assent is not entred upon this Roll?

Mr. Holmes. There is le Roy le Veut.

Lord Lechmere. I desire, for your Lordships Satisfaction, that he may read what is upon the Parchment Roll.

Mr. Holmes reads it, &c.

E. of Macclesfield. What is there in the margin?

Mr. Holmes. Respectuatur per Dominum Principem & Concilium.

E. of Macclesfield. That I may not be misunderstood in this matter, and accused of going to quibble away an Act of Parliament; your Lordships will give me leave to observe in the first Place, That supposing this to be an Act of Parliament, it relates to Cases where Judgments are given, or where the Parties have a Right, and not any way to me or to my Case; and having premis'd this, your Lordships will see how this matter stands. Here are two Rolls, the one is in the Nature of a Journal, wherein an Entry is made of the several Proceedings, and there are in it great Numbers of Petitions to the King by the Commons; whereby they pray, That Acts may be made, and the King's Answers upon them: The Answer it may be is agreeing to some Part of what they pray, or sometimes to no Part, but a Provision made quite different from what they pray. At that Time the Judges drew up the Acts afterwards in Form, and thence then those Acts were entered upon the Statute Roll; and they were promulgated at that Time by Proclamation on Writs issued to the Sheriffs of the several Counties. Now this hath in the margin of the Parliament Roll, Respectuatur per Dominum Principem & Concilium. When the Judges came afterwards to draw up the Statutes of this Parliament, in order to publish them, there being a Respectuatur set upon this in the Parliament Roll; they forbore to draw it up amongst the rest, and it is not entred upon the Statute Roll at all, nor ever printed in any Statute Book since, nor was it ever publish'd by the Sheriffs, nor consequently sent to the several Courts of Justice, nor ever taken Notice of by them as a Law; for the Reason of that maxim, That the Courts of Justice are bound to take notice, ex officio, of public Laws, and not of private Laws, was because the publick Laws were transmitted to them under the Great Seal. The Fact then in this Case doth appear to be, that when the Acts of this Parliament of 11 Hen. IV. came to be drawn up and promulgated, this having a Respectuatur enter'd upon it, was not entred upon the Statute Roll, and so not published; this is the Fact. However it doth not concern me, nor doth it relate to the present Case at all, as I observed to your Lordships before: If I had made a Decree for money; if I had refused a Writ or Subpena, unless the Party had paid me money, then I had been within the Statute, but not in this Case.

Mr. Lutwyche. We say this Statute doth concern him: But as to what he saith, that there is an Entry in the Margin, Respectuatur per Dominum Principem, &c. this is taken Notice of in the 3d Institute, where my Lord Coke particularly affirms, that this is an Act of Parliament in Force, and is upon the Parliament Roll, and takes notice of Respectuatur, &c. that it was in Fact done by the Prince, the Son of King Henry IV. but without Authority; and that notwithstanding such Respite, this Act of Parliament is in full Force.

Mr. West. Supposing it to be an Act of Parliament it extends to the Earl's Case; but whether it be an Act of Parliament or no, is a Question that the Noble Earl now makes. I thought it had been the common Learning, that all the old Laws were Petitions from the Commons, and the King's Answer to them; and that they were entred upon the Parliament Roll; and that the Parliament Roll was only a Voucher to the Statute Roll. I could give many Instances where that Voucher was not pursued, and the Statute Roll drawn up different from the Parliament Roll; and that was the very Reason of altering the manner of passing Laws into the method that is now used. This is my Lord Chief Justice Hale's Account in one of the modern Reports.

Mr. Plummer. The Earl impeach'd hath principally insisted on two things; the one is the taking a less Sum of money for a master's Place when vacant, when he had a greater Sum offer'd him; and that therefore it follows that he hath not made corrupt Advantages in order to raise his own Fortune, and that he is Innocent. He hath called the Negotiator in this Affair to prove, That when he was offer'd 6000*l.* he took 5000*l.* The Commons have by their Witnesses explain'd it; and this matter is now fully clear'd, and your Lordships have the whole before you; and I will make no farther Observation upon it.

The second Thing that he lays great Weight upon is, that he called for the Accounts of the masters, notwithstanding the 500*l.* apiece was paid in. Upon examining the Witnesses, it doth not appear that any of the now masters knew any thing of it. I leave it to your Lordships Consideration, whether, if the Earl of Macclesfield had been in earnest, he would not have had a Return of that Order. It doth not appear there was ever any Account given in; therefore when these two Points are made plainer against him now than they were on our first making good the Charge, tho' he seems to say the Sting of the Impeachment is taken out, yet it is plain the Sting is not taken out of it, but it still remains; and your Lordships will give such Judgment as is just and legal.

Then the Managers for the House of Commons, and the Counsel withdrew, and then the House adjourned.

Tuesday, 25 May, 1725. The 11th Day, the Lords being seated in their House, and the Managers being come, and seated as before, the usual Proclamation was made for Silence.

L. Ch. Just. King. MY Lords, Your Lordships having heard the Evidence in this Case, have agreed upon a Question, which is severally to be put to Your Lordships in the usual Order. The Question is this, Is Thomas Earl of Macclesfield guilty of High Crimes and Misdemeanors charged upon him by the Impeachment of the House of Commons, or not Guilty, upon your Honour?

L. Ch. Just. King. Robert Lord Walpole, What says your Lordship? Is Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, guilty of High Crimes and Misdemeanors charg'd upon him by the Impeachment of the House of Commons, or not Guilty?

Lord Walpole, Guilty upon my Honour.

The same Question was severally put to the rest, whose Names and Votes are as follow.

L. Ch. Just. King. My Lords, Your Lordships have unanimously found Thomas Earl of Macclesfield guilty of High Crimes and Misdemeanors charged upon him by the Impeachment of the House of Commons.

Then the Managers for the House of Commons and the Council withdrew; and then the House adjourned.

Wednesday, 26 May, 1725. The 12th Day.
The Lords being sat, and the Managers being come, the usual Proclamation was made for Silence.

THEN the Gentleman Usher was commanded to call in the Earl of Macclesfield, who being come to the Bar, the Speaker acquainted him, that the Lords had fully considered of his Case, and had unanimously found him guilty of High Crimes and Misdemeanors charged upon him by the Impeachment of the House of Commons.

E. of Macclesfield. I attend your Lordships, in Obedience to your Lordships Command; but I am persuaded, that if your Lordships knew what I suffer, your Lordships would not have required this of me, the rather as I did not intend to make any Exceptions in relation to the Proceedings, or give your Lordships any farther Trouble. I am now to expect your Lordships Judgment; and I hope that you will be pleas'd to consider, that I have suffered no small matter already in the Trial, in the Expence I have been at, the Fatigue, and what I have suffered other ways; besides the cruel Distemper which this hath brought upon me. I have paid back 10,800 l. of the money already, I have lost my Office, I have undergone the Censure of both Houses of Parliament, which is in itself a very severe Punishment. My Lords, the Deficiency of Mr. Dormer doth sound large, 25,000 l. but my Lords, it was not through my Fault that the Deficiency happened, nor was that master put in by me; on the contrary, with great Difficulty, it is reduced by my means to 10,000 l. less than otherwife it would have been. My Lords, all the Loss that can be sustain'd by any thing charged against me, is only what some of the Suitors might have had more for their Proportion, than they can do now out of Mr. Dormer's Effects. His Debt came to about 47,000 l. his Effects to about 13,000 l. which is about a fourth Part: I don't find there is one Suitor hath made his Complaint, that he hath not received his five Shillings in the Pound, Mrs. Chitty hath received her Share.

Mr. Onslow. My Lords, We must submit it to your Lordships. This was proper when the Noble Lord was making his Defence; but it is not so in Arrest of Judgment. Your Lordships have found him guilty of the Fact, and he is now arguing in Defence of it: If he hath any thing in Arrest of Judgment, he may say it, and the Commons are here ready to answer it.

I was very unwilling, my Lords, to interrupt the Earl, and do it now with great Reluctancy; but it is for the sake of Regularity in your Lordships Proceedings; and we must appeal to your Lordships whether the Noble Lord is not now going into the Repetition of what he said in his Defence?

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, I submit whether this be not proper in mitigation of your Lordships Sentence; but whether it be or be not, I leave myself to your Lordships Justice and Mercy; I am sure neither of them will be wanting, and I entirely submit. I don't know whether your Lordships will be pleased to discontinue my Attendance at this Time, or whether your Lordships will require me to come again under this very great Uneasiness; I submit it to your Lordships.

Then the said Earl, as also the Managers, were directed to withdraw; and the House ordered Thomas Earl of Macclesfield to be committed to the Custody of the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod; and then proceeded to the Consideration of what Judgment to give upon the Impeachment against the said Earl, and afterwards adjourned to Thursday Eleven of the Clock, the 27th of May.

Thursday, 27 May 1725. The 13th Day.

A Message was sent to the House of Commons by Mr. Baron Page and Mr. Justice Denton, to acquaint them, That the Lords are ready to give Judgment against Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, if they with their Speaker will come and demand the same.

Hereupon a Motion was made, and the Question proposed, That this House will demand Judgment of the Lords against Thomas Earl of Macclesfield; which occasioned a warm Debate, that lasted till Five in the Afternoon, when the previous Question being put, that the Question be now put, it was carried in the Affirmative by a majority of 136 Voices against 65; and then the main Question being put, it was resolv'd, That this House will demand Judgment against Thomas Earl of Macclesfield. This done, the Commons resolv'd, Nem. Con. That the Thanks of this House be given to the Members, who were appointed the Managers of the Impeachment against Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, for their faithful Management in their Discharge of the Trust reposed in them. Hereupon Mr. Speaker gave them, they standing up severally in their Places, the Thanks of the House, as follows:

GENTLEMEN,

“ IT is with the greatest Cheerfulness that I obey the Commands of the House on this Occasion; and yet I was never, on any Occasion, more sensible of the Difficulties of performing them as I ought; but I have this Satisfaction in this Motion's being made when I least expected it, that my not being prepared may be some Excuse for those Defects, which I should not have been able to have supply'd, had I had never so long a Time for Consideration.

GENTLEMEN,

“ You have maintained the Charge of the Commons, with that Force of Argument, Beauty of Expression, and Strength of Reason, as would have gained you the highest Applause in the most flourishing of the Grecian Commonwealths; and I may add,

Nec dignius unquam Majestas meminuit sese Romana locutam.

“ But I shall not enlarge farther on this Part of your Praise, being sensible that I am not able to express myself in a manner suitable to the Dignity of the Subject; your own Tongues are only equal to such an Undertaking; and were I able to do it, your Modesty would not permit it: I shall therefore proceed in obeying the Commands of the House, in such a manner, as you yourselves may hear it, not only without Offence, but I hope with Satisfaction; by endeavouring to set in their proper lights the great and lasting Benefits your Country will receive by your faithful Discharge of your Duty.

“ You have stopp'd the Cries of Orphans, and dried up the Tears of the Widow; even those who must ever be insensible of the Benefits they receive, Ideots and Lunatics (and such only can be insensible of them) will be Partakers of the Fruits of your Labours.

“ But you are more particularly intitled to the Thanks of this House, by having made the Prosecutions of the Commons against great Offenders, practicable; The Power of Impeachment, that Sword of Vengeance, which the Constitution has put into the Hand of the Commons, and which, when drawn by Party-Rage, when directed by the Malice of Faction, or wielded by unskilful Hands, has too often wounded that Constitution it was intended to preserve, has now, by your able Management, turn'd its Edge to its proper Object, a Great Offender; and if the Wound it has given should not be so deep, as many expect; yet you may be very sure, it never can be imputed to the Want of Strength in your Arm; And I hope and trust, from your prudent Conduct through the whole Progress of the Trial, that this great Privilege of the Commons will ever remain a Terror to evil Doers; and that it may be a Praise to them that do well, the House has unanimously come to this Resolution:

“ Resolved, Nemine Contradicente, That the Thanks of this House be given to the Members, who were appointed the Managers of the Impeachment against Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, for their faithful Management in their Discharge of the Trust reposed in them.”

A Message

A Message was brought from the House of Commons by Sir William Gage and others, to acquaint the House of Lords, That the Commons, with their Speaker, do intend immediately to come to demand Judgment against Thomas Earl of Macclesfield; and do desire that the Painted Chamber, and other Passages to the Lords House, may be cleared forthwith.

The Messengers were called in, and told, That the Lords had given Order as desired,

Which was done accordingly.

Then the Commons, with their Speaker, being present at the Bar of the House, the Lord Chief Justice King, Speaker of the House of Lords, directed the Gentleman-Usher of the Black-Rod, to bring Thomas Earl of Macclesfield to the Bar; who, after low Obeifances made, kneeled until the said Lord Chief Justice acquainted him he might rise.

Then the Speaker of the House of Commons said as follows:

“ MY LORDS,

“ THE Knights, Citizens, and Burgessees in Parliament assembled, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of Great-Britain, did at this Bar impeach Thomas Earl of Macclesfield of High Crimes and Misdemeanors; and did exhibit Articles of Impeachment against him; and have made good their Charge:

“ I do therefore, in the Name of the Knights, Citizens, and Burgessees in Parliament assembled, and of all the Commons of Great-Britain, demand Judgment of your Lordships against Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, for the said High Crimes and Misdemeanors.”

Then the Lord Chief Justice King, Speaker of the House of Lords, said, “ Mr. Speaker, The Lords are now ready to proceed to Judgment in the Case by you mention’d.

“ Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, The Lords have unanimously found you Guilty of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, charged on you by the Impeachment of the House of Commons, and do now according to Law proceed to Judgment against you, which I am ordered to pronounce. Their Lordships Judgment is, and this High Court doth adjudge,

That you Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, be fined in the Sum of Thirty Thousand Pounds unto our Sovereign Lord the King; and that you shall be Imprisoned in the Tower of London, and there kept in safe Custody, until you shall pay the said Fine.

Then the Speaker with the Commons withdrew, and the Earl of Macclesfield was taken from the Bar.

Ordered, That the Speaker of this House do give Order for the Printing and Publishing the Trial of Thomas Earl of Macclesfield; and that no other Person but such as he shall appoint, do presume to Print the same.

Ordered, That the said Earl of Macclesfield be committed to the Tower of London, there to be kept in safe Custody until he shall pay the abovementioned Fine of Thirty Thousand Pounds to the King; and that the Gentleman-Usher of the Black-Rod, in whose Custody the said Earl at present is; do him safely convey to the said Tower, and deliver him to the Constable thereof, or in his Absence to the Lieutenant, or Deputy-Lieutenant of the same; and that the said Constable, Lieutenant, or Deputy-Lieutenant do receive the Body of the said Earl, and him keep in safe Custody there, until he shall have paid the said Fine.

Then the House adjourn’d to Monday, 31 May, 1725.

And the Earl of Macclesfield was conveyed to the Tower, where he continued Prisoner for some Time till he paid his Fine.

JOHAN PORTEOUS, lately one of the Captain-Lieutenants of the City Guard of Edinburgh, present Prisoner in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, Pannel. INDICTED and ACCUSED at the Instance of Duncan Forbes Esquire, His Majesty’s Advocate for His Highness Interest, for the Crimes of Murder and Slaughter, and others, as is more fully mentioned in the Indictment raised against him there annext. Setting forth, THAT WHERE, by the Law of God, the Common Law, the Municipal Law and Practice of this Kingdom, and the Laws of all other well-governed Realms, Murder and Slaughter, maiming and wounding with mortal Weapons, any of the Subjects of such Realms, and the ordering, commanding, and causing any Band, or Number of Men, armed with Firelocks, and other mortal Weapons, to fall upon, wound, murder, and destroy Numbers of His Majesty’s Subjects, innocently and lawfully assembled, by firing sharp Shot amongst them, whereby Multitudes are, or may be endangered, and many Men, Women, and innocent Children are, or may be killed or wounded, without any just Cause or Occasion, and without lawful Warrant, more especially when committed in the publick Streets of a City, by a Person lawfully commissioned by the Magistrates thereof, to command such Band of armed Men, for the Preservation of Peace and Order, and for the Defence of the Inhabitants, and others resorting thereto, are Crimes of a high Nature, and severely punishable: YET TRUE IT IS, and of Verity, That he the said John Porteous had presumed to committ, and was guilty and accessory, or art and part of all and every, or one or other of the forsaide Crimes aggravated as aforesaid; IN SO FAR AS, upon the Fourteenth Day of Aprile last, or one or other of the Days of the said Month, when the deceas’t Andrew Wilson,

Wilson, sentenced to be hang'd to Death by the High Court of Justiciary, was to be executed at the Grass-market of the City of Edinburgh, he being at that time one of the Captain-Lieutenants of the Town Guard of the said City, lawfully commissioned by the Magistrates and Town Council thereof; and in the ordinary Course of Rotation with the other Officers of the said Guard, being order'd to attend at the said Execution, to preserve the Peace, and support the Executioner in the Discharge of his Duty, having under his Command a Detachment of about Seventy Men, he did then attend in the said Grass-market accordingly, and after the said Andrew Wilson had hung upon the Gallows, erected for his Execution, until he was dead, at least for a considerable time, and so long as there was ground to conclude he was dead; he the said John Porteous, shaking off all Fear of God, and Respect to his Majesty's Laws, and conceiving a most wicked and malicious Purpose of destroying, wounding and maiming Numbers of his Majesty's Subjects, the Inhabitants of the said City of Edinburgh, and others there assembled at the said Execution, without any just Cause or necessary Occasion, ordered the said Detachment of the Guard under his Command to fire upon the People so assembled at the said Execution; and the Men, at least severals of them having fired, as it seems he apprehended, over the Heads of the Multitude, so as to avoid doing them harm, he with Threats and Imprecations repeated his Commands to fire, calling out to them, to level their Pieces and be damn'd, or Words to that Purpose; and at or about the same time, he levelled the Firelock that was in his own Hand, taking Aim at Charles Husband Servant to Paul Husband, Confectioner in the Abbey of Holy rood-House, and most wickedly and murderously fired at him, whereupon he immediatly droped to the Ground, having received a Wound by a Bullet or large Drop of Lead on the left Side of his Head, which pierced into his Brain, and another large Wound likewise by a Bullet or large Drop of Lead on the left Side of his Neck, and a third Wound in his Body, and a fourth Wound in his left Hand, at least a mortal Wound or Wounds, whereof he died in some short Space thereafter; AT LEAST, he did so level his Piece, and appeared to take his Aim at some one of the innocent Multitude, who happened to stand directly over against him, and he did fire, and upon his so firing, the said Charles Husband, at least one or other of the Persons particularly after mentioned, or more of them, did immediatly drop to the Ground, having received a mortal Wound or Wounds, whereof they soon after died; and by his said Example and Command, severals of the said Guard, to the Number of Twenty, less or more, did at the same time with him, or soon after him, fire upon the innocent Multitude, whereby all, or one or more of the following Persons received mortal Wounds, whereof they soon after died, viz. Archibald Ballantyne, Son to John Ballantyne, younger Dyster in Dalkeith, received several Wounds, with Bullets or large Drops of Lead, which peirced into his Body, at least a mortal Wound or Wounds in his Head or Body, whereof he died a few Days thereafter, and John Anderson Son to George Anderson in Craighead, Drover, received a Wound in the Head with a Bullet or large Drop of Lead, at least a mortal Wound or Wounds in his Head or Body, so that he died in few Hours thereafter; and the following Persons were grievously maimed, hurt, and wounded, to the great Danger of their Lives, viz. Margaret Artbur alias Airth, Residenter in the Cannon-gate, near the Water-gate thereof, Jean Peal, Servant to James M' Dowal Merchant in Edinburgh, David Wallace Journeyman Wright in Edinburgh, James Philp late Servant to Lauder Esquire, Residenter in the Cannon gate, David Kidd Taylor in Edinburgh, Patrick Spalding Apprentice to David Mitchel Jeweler in Edinburgh, James Lyle, and Alexander Wallace both Servants to James Wright Staymaker in Edinburgh, John Miller Taylor in Edinburgh, David Ogilvie Writer in Edinburgh, and James Nivan late Servant to William Sellars Writer in Edinburgh, Residenter in the Potter-Row: AT LEAST, the said Persons were so killed, wounded, and maimed, by the firing in manner, and by the Direction, as aforesaid, and by the second firing after mentioned; for not contented with the Barbarities thus committed, after he had with the said Company or Detachment of the City Guard marched towards, or into the Place or Street called the West-bow, he, without just Cause or Occasion, again ordered the Men under his Command, to face about and fire upon the People, and at or about the same time, he fired a Musket or Firelock that was in his own Hand, having either reloaded, or caused to be reloaded his own Piece, or taken another out of the Hand of one of the Guard; and severals of the said Guard did, upon that second Example and Command of his, fire upon the Multitude, whereby Alexander M' Neil Son to Edward M' Neil Indweller in Morton-hall, received a Shot in the Head with a Bullet or Lead-Drop, which pierced into his Brain, at least a mortal Wound or Wounds in his Head or Body, so that he died thereof in a few Days thereafter; and Margaret Gordon Servant to William Ogilvie Taylor, in Saint Mary Wynd in Edinburgh, received a Wound in the Head above the left Eye, with a Bullet or large Drop of Lead, which pierced into her Brain, at least a mortal Wound or Wounds in her Head or Body, so that she died thereof in a short Space thereafter; and Henry Grabame Taylor in Cannon-gate received a Wound in the Head, with a Bullet or large Drop of Lead, which pierced into his Brain, at least a mortal Wound or Wounds in his Head or Body, of which he died in a few Hours thereafter: AT LEAST, by this, and the other Firings by him, and by his Order and Example above mentioned, all, or one or more of the Persons particularly above recited, as having been killed, received mortal Wounds, of which they soon after died, and all or one or more of the Persons above recited, to have been wounded, were grievously maimed, hurt, and wounded, to the great Danger of their Lives; AT LEAST, at the Time and Place aforesaid, the said Persons above named and mentioned to have been respectively killed and wounded, were all, or one or more of them, wickedly, and maliciously slaughtered, murdered, and wounded, by Wounds severally given them by mortal Weapons: AND HE WAS GUILTY, art and part of the Slaughter, Murder, and wounding of all, or one or more of them: ALL WHICH, or any Part thereof being found proven by the Verdict of an Assize, in presence of the Lords, Justice General, Justice Clerk, and Commissioners of Justiciary, he ought to be most exemplarily punished with the Pains of Law, to the Terror of others to committ the like in time coming. Sic Subscribitur,

The Libel being openly read, and debate viva voce, in presence of the Judges, Pannel, and Jury, the Lords ordained both Parties to give in their Informations to the Clerk of Court in order to be recorded, and the Purfuers to give in theirs against Friday next, at Six o' Clock at Night, and the Prolocutors for the Pannel to give in theirs against Tuesday thereafter, and continued the Cause till Friday the Sixteenth Instant, and ordained Affizers and Witneffes then to attend, and the Pannel to be carried back to Prison.

July 12th, 1736.

Information for his Majesty's Advocat for his Highness's Interest, against John Porteous late Captain Lieutenant of the City Guard of Edinburgh, Pannel.

THE Pannel is charged by the Indictment, with murdering, slaughtering, maiming, and wounding divers of his Majesty's Subjects, by firing with his own Hand, and causing and ordering a Band of armed Men under his Command, to fire upon a Multitude of innocent People, assembled to see an Execution in the Grass-market of the City of Edinburgh, without any just Cause or Provocation; contrary not only to the Laws of God and Nature, and to the good and laudable Laws of this and all other well governed Realms, but also contrary to the exprefs Duty of his Office, who was one of the Commanders of the City Guard, intended to preserve the Peace of the City, and to protect the Inhabitants thereof from all violence; and who was on that Occasion entrusted with the Command of a large Detachment of the said Guard to preserve Peace and Order, to secure the Execution of a Sentence of the High Court of Justiciary, and to prevent all Riots and Tumults, whereby the Execution of the said Sentence might be disappointed, the Laws might be violated, and the People assembled might be hurt or destroyed.

The Indictment sets forth, particularly, That at the time and Place libelled, where a great Multitude of Innocent Persons, of all Ages, and of different Sexes, were lawfully assembled, to see the Execution of Andrew Wilson, sentenced to be hanged by the High Court aforesaid; the Pannel having under his Command a Detachment of seventy armed Men of the City Guard, and having conceived a most wicked and malicious
 Purpose of destroying, maiming, and wounding Numbers of his Majesty's Subjects, the Inhabitants of the said City, and others assembled at said Execution, without any just Cause or necessary Occasion, ordered the said Detachment under his Command to fire upon the People so assembled; that the Men under his Command, having probably, in his Apprehension, fired over the Heads of the People, he, with Threats and Imprecations, repeated his Commands to fire, calling out to them to level their Pieces, and be damn'd; that at or about the same time he levelled the Firelock that was in his own Hand, taking aim at one Charles Husband, and fired at him, whereupon he immediately dropt to the Ground, having received Wounds, whereof he instantly died; at least, that he levelled his Piece, seeming to take aim at some One in the Croud, and fired it; and that upon his firing, the said Charles Husband, or one or other of the Persons in the Indictment mentioned dropt; having received Wounds by Bullets, of which they instantly died; and that by his Commands and Example, several of the City Guard under his Command, fired upon the innocent Multitude, whereby the Persons particularly mentioned in the Indictment, were killed, maimed, and wounded.

The Indictment further charges, That not contented with this Barbarity, the Pannel, after he had marched off his Detachment towards, or unto the Place or Street called the West Bow, again ordered the Men under his Command, to face about and fire upon the People, and at or about the same time, fired a Musket or Firelock that was in his own Hand, having either reloaded, or caused to be re-loaded the Piece formerly fired by him, or having taken another out of the Hand of one of the Guard; and that several of the said Guard, did upon that second Example and Command, fire upon the Multitude, whereby the Persons described in the Indictment, were killed or mortally wounded:
 And the Indictment concludes in common Form, that the Pannel is guilty, or Actor art and part of the Crimes aforesaid, or one or other of them.

The Charge in this Indictment is so heinous, that one should have imagined, it would have been decent in the Pannel, to have made no Objection to the Relevancy, and to have founded upon no Defence for avoiding the Effect of the Lybel, if true, but to have contented himself with a flat Denial thereof, reposing himself upon his Innocence, if he is truly not guilty of the Facts alledged, without any other Desire, but that of having a fair Examination of unbyassed Witneffes, to be produced by him as well as the Profecutor, in order to discover the real Circumstances of the Transaction:

But his Procurators, it seems, thought it their Duty to move every Objection against the Relevancy of the Lybel, and to offer every Defence that their Invention could suggest from a particular Relation of the Circumstances of the whole Transaction, which they laid before the Court upon the Pannels Information, and which they offered to prove, to make good their Defence.

They informed the Court therefore, on behalf of the Pannel, That the Magistrats apprehending, that some violent Attempt might be made for rescuing Wilson, the Offender sentenced to be hanged, had ordered the Pannel to attend the Execution, with the greatest Part of the City Guard, to support and protect the Executioner in the Discharge of his Office, with Directions to repel Force by Force; that to make those Directions effectual, Powder and Ball were by the Town Treasurer delivered out of the Town's Magazine to the City Guard, the Morning of the Execution, with Directions to load their Pieces: That besides this Precaution, the Danger of the Rescue appeared to the Magistrats fo great, that they desired of General Moyle, and obtained a Detachment of the regular Troops, who were posted near to the Place of Execution, in order to support the City Guard, if there had been occasion; and whose Commanders were told, that the Lord Provost would give them Authority to fire, if it should prove necessary; that the Pannel with the Town Guard attended accordingly the Execution; That when the Offender was hung up on the Gibbet, the Magistrates retired from the Scaffold, and repaired to a House over-against it in the Grass-market; that after the Offender had been hung up for some time, the Multitude became unruly, and begun to sling Stones of great Size, and with great Violence, that some of the Guard were thereby hurt; one had his Shoulder-blade broke, others were bruised, and the Timber of the Drum was beat to Pieces; that the Insolence of the Mob growing still greater, and they pressing from all Sides upon the Guard, the Pannel, who apprehended they might have intended to carry off the Criminal, who by this time was cut down, in order to attempt the recovering him to Life, found it necessary for him to keep off the Multitude by Threats and Menaces; that to this end he presented his Piece, first to one Quarter, and then to another, calling to the People to stand off, and threatning that if they did not, he would fire, that nevertheless, he neither fired himself, nor gave any Orders to fire, but on the contrary, when some of the Guard, provoked by the Hurts they received, had, without his Orders or Authority, presumed to fire, whose Example was followed by several others, he did all he could to prevent that Mischief, by commanding them to desist, and actually did beat down the Muzzle of one of the Mens Pieces, who was presenting it in order to fire; that finding he could not be obeyed, he endeavoured to march off his Men, and prevailed with several of them to follow him some small Way up the West Bow, when again some of those Men who followed him, provoked, by what, he did not know, faced about, and fired towards the Grass-market; that the first Notice he had of this Firing was by hearing it, which made him turn about in order to stop it; that at this last Place, he neither fired, nor gave Orders to fire; that he marched as many of his Men as he could gather together back to the City Guard Room; that there he prevented the Mens cleaning their Pieces, that the guilty who fired might be distinguished from the Innocent who did not fire; that his own Piece had not at that time been at all fired; that conscious of his Innocence, and that he had on this, as well as on every former Occasion, done his Duty with Patience and Temper, he presented himself before the Magistrates, whereas nothing was easier for him than to have made his Escape, and that in their Presence the Firelock which he had in his Hand was presented, and appeared not to have been at all fired; and that therefore it was impossible the Lybel, as lybelled, could be true.

From this, which was said to be the State of the Case, the Procurators for the Pannel, contended, first, That the Lybel was insufficient, as not describing with proper Accuracy the particular Part of the Street, where the Person supposed to be shot by the Pannel stood, and his Situation with respect to the Pannel at the Time, because thereby the Pannel was deprived of the Opportunity of making his Defence, by founding it particularly on Circumstances, which he might avail himself of, if the Position and Situation had been distinctly described.

To this it was, and is answered, That the Lybel is as particular as the Law requires, describing the Street where the Execution was had, which is all that the utmost Scrupulosity could expect in such a Case. Minute Circumstances cannot be known to the Prosecutor, or certainly discovered, but by Proof upon the Trial: Every Circumstance of the Pannel's own acting must be known to him; and therefore, if from the Position or Situation in which he was at the Time of the Firing, he can show that it was impossible he could have killed the Person, whom he is charged to have shot, describing and proving those Circumstances, he may have Advantage from them, but cannot object to the Prosecutor, that he did not minutely describe a Situation that was not known to him, and which describing perhaps erroneously, might minister an unjust Occasion to a Criminal to escape Justice: Wherefore this Objection to the Form of the Indictment, ought to be repelled.

But in the Second Place, The Procurators for the Pannel, very unnecessarily, one should think, if he is Innocent of Firing, or ordering to fire, and in some degree inconsistently with that Plea, alledged, That the delivering out Powder and Ball to the City Guard; the ordering so great a Detachment to attend; the calling for the Regular Troops to support the Town Guard; the Intimation to the Commander of those Troops, that they should have Orders to fire, in case of Necessity; and the Direction to the Pannel to support the Execution of the Sentence against Wilson, and in case of a violent Rescue or Deforcement, to repel force by force, amounted to a flat Order from the Magistrates to fire, when it became necessary: And that the violent Assault made by the Mob, as aforesaid, with Stones, which were to be considered as Lethal Weapons, in order as the Pannel believed to carry off the Offender, in hopes of recovering him to Life, made it necessary to repel force by force: Wherefore these Circumstances to infer the Order, and the violent Assault of the Mob as mentioned, ought to be sustained and admitted to Prooff, as a total Defence against the Indictment, at least as Circumstances fit to mitigate the Punishment, and restrain it from the pœna ordinaria; since the Pannel being versans in licito, and engaged in the Discharge of a lawful Piece of Duty, if any Excess was committed by him, it ought not to be attended with Capital Punishment, but ought to be corrected extra ordinem, according to the Degree of the Excess.

To this it was answered, That tho' it were true, which is not at all upon the Part of the Prosecutor denied, that the Magistrates upon just Apprehension of Disorders, and an Attempt for a violent Rescue of the Criminal, who was sentenced to die, had ordered Powder and Ball to be distributed to the Guard, had increased their Numbers, had obtain'd Assistance from the Commander of the regular Troops, with Assurance, that in case of necessity they should be authorized to fire, had directed the Pannel at all Hazards to support the Execution, and prevent a violent Rescue, and had even told him, that in case of necessity he was to repel force by force, it will not in the least follow, that those Orders could in any Degree justify him, except in case of Necessity, except there had been an Attempt towards a violent Rescue, which could not otherwise have been prevented, and except all the proper Precautions for dissipating otherwise the Mob, and for legitimating the Act of Firing upon them, had been previously made use of.

For in the first Place, No Order from any Civil Magistrate whatever, can justify a Barbarity so horrid, as that which is charged on the Pannel. Had the Provost, and all the Magistrates of Edinburgh been present on the Spot, and had they ordered him to fire upon the Innocent People, when there was no just Cause for so doing, those Orders indeed might subject the Magistrates, as well to the Penal Consequences that attend Murder, but could not on the least acquit him, who was not at all bound to obey such illegal Orders, and who therefore acted at his Peril.

In the Second Place, It is not at all pretended; that the Pannel had any Orders expressed or implied to fire, except the Violence of an Attempt to rescue, not otherwise avoidable, made it necessary. Had that been truly the Case, Firing possibly might have been the Pannel's Duty, the reading the Proclamation undoubtedly would have made it justifiable; and this the Magistrates knew, when they ordered Ammunition to be distributed, and invited the regular Troops to their Assistance: But till it became necessary, when there was no Hazard of a Rescue, before any Disorder was sought to be quell'd by the legal Precaution of reading the Proclamation, which is intended to intimidate Rioters, and to separate the Innocent from the Guilty, by giving due Notice to all thoughtless People; who without any Malevolence are mixt with the Multitude, to separate from the ill Meaning, it was the most Cruel, as well as unjustifiable Act, that has at any Time been heard of, to make use of the Weapons that were put in the Hands of the Guard, for the Security of the Peace and of the People, to destroy so many Innocents, who had not in any Degree offended.

For, Thirdly, Tho' the Pannel mentioned the flinging of Stones, and the Size of some of them, with some Hurts received therefrom, yet the Libel charges, and he admits that the Criminal was cut down before this trifling Provocation prevailed with any one to fire: His Duty then, so far as concerned the Execution of the Sentence, was over: He alledges no Danger, nor can he in those Circumstances of a Rescue, no Invasion with Fire Arms, or other mortal Weapons, fit to deforce or destroy a Detachment of Seventy disciplined Men, with loaded Pieces and screwed Bayonets: How then can the Exigence, or the Orders defend him? If his Act had been absolutely necessary, some Defence might have been founded on that Necessity joined with his Orders: But when his Allegations, tho' they were true, do not point out the least Necessity, and are in reality founded on nothing else than the customary Impertinence on such Occasions, of flinging Dirt and Stones at the Executioner, tho' the Provocation thereby given might perhaps justify a Cholerick Man, for drubbing any of the Actors for their Wantonness, yet to be sure, it could not justify the Slaughtering of the Offender, far less can such Impertinence in a few Boys, or other idle People, excuse the firing sharp Shot upon an Innocent Multitude, whereby Numbers of his Majesty's Subjects were destroyed: And therefore it seems to be beyond all doubt, the Pannel can find no Shelter from those Orders, or the Duty he imagines lay upon him to fire; and must therefore stand or fall, upon his being, or not being Guilty of the Facts charged upon him.

The Procurators for the Pannel endeavoured to find an Argument for him, in a late Resolution of the Court, which suspended a Sentence of the Court of Admiralty, proceeding upon an Interloquitor that found it necessary for Soldiers, who happened to kill in the Execution of their Duty, when by Order attending Custom-house Officers, to prove, that the killing was necessary for the Defence of their Lives, inferring from this Resolution, that the Court did not think it necessary for the Pannel to prove, that he was in Danger of his Life: And though all that their Observation necessarily implies were granted, they could have no Benefite by it, because in this Case the Pannel neither does, nor can aver, that the Firing which he was personally guilty of, and ordered, was necessary for securing the Execution of that Trust that was committed to him, or for preserving the Rights of the Crown, or any Subject.

Where a Man has by Law Weapons put in his Hand, to be employed, not only in Defence of his Life when attack'd, but in Support of the Execution of the Laws, and in Defence of the Property of the Crown, or Liberty of any Subject, he doubtless may use those Weapons, not only when his own Life is put so far in Danger, that he cannot probably escape without making use of them, but also when there is imminent Danger, that he may by Violence be disabled to execute his Trust, without resorting to the Use of those Weapons: But when the Life of the Officer is exposed to no Danger, when his Duty does not necessarily call upon him for the Execution of his Trust, or for the Preservation of the Property of the Crown, or the Preservation of the Property or Liberty of the Subject, to make use of mortal Weapons, which may destroy His Majesty's Subjects, especially Numbers of them, who may be innocent, it is impossible, from the Resolution of the Court of Justiciary hinted at, to expect any Countenance to, or Shelter for the inhumane Act.

And upon a Principle very near allied to this, the Pannels Pretence, that being versans in licito, and intrusted with the Execution of legal Orders; any Excess, that for lack of Discretion he may have been guilty of, cannot be punished pœna ordinaria, ought to be repelled; for it's obvious, the Trust reposed in him, and the Duty expected from him, was no more than to see the Execution perfected, and to resist any violent Attempt to rescue, which should disappoint the Execution of the Law. Now when the Sentence of the Court of Justiciary was executed, when the Criminal was hanged and cut down, before any Person fired, the Trust reposed in the Pannel, and the Duty expected from him ceased; he was no longer an Officer employed, to that end for which the Fire Arms were loaded, and his Actions came to be estimated of by the same Rules, that would have made them lawful or unlawful upon every ordinary Occasion, where no particular Danger threatned, and where no necessary Service was in view.

And therefore, as in such Cases, the Pannel must be convinced, that nothing short of being constituted in immediate Danger of Death without firing, could justify him or his Guard for making use of loaded Fire Arms, he must in consequence acknowledge, that in the case in Question, no Danger of Life, which he could not have avoided, having threatned him and his Guard, he was absolutely inexcusable for firing, and that therefore his mischievous and temerarious Act must be attended with the highest Penalty.

An armed Man who assaults, and without just Cause destroys another Man tho' armed, and in no particular Trust or Confidence with him, the Law considers and demeans as a Murderer; but when the Captain of a City Guard, who has an armed Force committed to his Care, for the Good and Safety of the Community, thinks fit, upon any slight Offence or Provocation, to turn those Arms, and that Force upon a Crowd of Citizens lawfully as well as innocently assembled, he is, in Addition to the Slaughter and Destruction that ensues, guilty of the most notorious Breach of Trust, and for an Example to others, whom it may be necessary for the Good of the Community to trust, ought to be punished in the most severe manner. Men so trusted are under double Tyes, for besides the general Obligations of Duty and Humanity, a particular Confidence is reposed in them, which at the Peril of their Lives they ought to answer.

The Procurators for the Pannel complained, That in the Indictment he was charged with a wicked and malicious Purpose of destroying, wounding, and maiming Numbers of his Majesty's Subjects; and by the Pannel's sober and modest Deportment on former Occasions, and the whole Circumstances precedent to the melancholy Accident now in Question, endeavoured to shew that he had no premeditated malicious Design. But this again was to no purpose: The Prosecutor never heard, nor, so far as he knows, did ever any Man before this time, complain of the Wickedness or Inhumanity of the Pannel, and he has received no Information, by which he can be induced to think, that for any considerable time before the Fact complained of, the Pannel had premeditated the destructive Action of which he is accused. But then his Procurators very well know, that firing and ordering to fire, imply, and are Proof of a wicked and malicious Purpose of destroying those that are fired at: Malitia and Propositum procedunt ictum, in the Construction of Reason as well as Law, and whoever wilfully murders and destroys his Majesty's Subjects, must be demean'd as a Murderer, if his malicious Purpose preceded the drawing of the Tricker, or giving the Orders, one Moment, as much as if it had been preconceived a whole Year.

These Shews of Defence, rather than Defences being removed; the next thing that comes to be considered, is the History of the Pannel's Behaviour, during the melancholy Transaction, which his Procurators offered to prove, and insisted, would, if proved, be a sufficient Defence against the Facts charged in the Lybel.

But in this the Prosecutor can by no means agree, for he takes it to be extremely plain, that every single Circumstance alledged by the Pannel may be true, and yet it may also be true, that he with his own Hand fired, and killed one or more of the innocent People, and that he ordered the Men under his Command to fire.

It may, for Example, possibly be true, that he, at some Period or another of the Action, called out to the Multitude to stand off, or that he would fire; that he at some one Point or another of Time prohibited the Men to fire, and struck down the Pieces of such as were presenting them; and yet it may also be true, that he at some other point of Time gave the precise Word of Command to fire, and actually fired the Piece that was in his Hand: Before he lost his Temper he might have threatned only, before he took the Resolution of annoying, as well as after he saw Mischief done, he might have endeavoured to prevent a particular Act of Inhumanity; but his doing so at certain Periods, is no conclusive Evidence, that at other Points of Time his Conduct might not have been very different.

Were his giving Orders, or actual firing dubious, the Circumstances mentioned for the Pannel might create a strong Presumption for him: But if it shall be proved, as it is charged in the Lybel, that he actually fired the Piece in his Hand oftner than once, and gave positive Orders to fire; what can it avail him, that at some other Periods of the Fray, he behaved himself in a different manner? since both the one Allegation and the other may be true.

But the Procurators for the Pannel insisted, That though the Proposition they undertook to prove was in some degree a Negative, yet it was so circumstantiated as to be capable of a positive Proof; for they said that credible Witnesses could be produced, who would inform the Court and Jury, that during the whole Fray, they kept their Eyes upon the Pannel, and were attentive to his Actions; and that they could take upon them to say, that thorow out the Scuffle he did not fire his Piece, nor order the Guard to fire, but that he threatned to fire, which might by Persons at a distance who heard the Word Fire only pronounced, be mistaken for a Command, and that he presented his Piece only in a menacing Posture, but without firing, which might have misled the Spectators into an Opinion that he did fire, though he really did not; if any one who was near him happened to discharge his Shot about the same time.

This reasoning however is manifestly defective, because the Evidence of the Witnesses, who shall say, they did not see or hear, bears no Proportion in point of Weight, to the Testimony of those, who shall upon Oath positively say, that they did hear or see.

And besides the obvious Reason for maintaining this Distinction in the common Case, there is a particular Consideration that supports it, in the case of a Fray or Tumult, where Shots are fired, Murder ensues, and there is a general Confusion and Surprize. No one could possibly be so interested in keeping his Eyes upon the Pannel, when it could not be foreseen there would be occasion to give Evidence touching his Behaviour, as not to be lyable to be carried off from that Object, upon any fresh Surprize that happened in the Tumult: The firing of a Shot, the flinging of a Stone, the extraordinary Behaviour of any one of the Multitude, or of the Guard, might imperceptibly have drawn the Eyes and

Atten-

Attention of any Spectator from the Pannel, to that new Object, and prevented his seeing or hearing what he said or did in the mean time: And therefore no Witness, or Number of Witnesses, who should take upon him or them to say absolutely, That the Pannel did not at any Period of the Frey fire, or order to fire, would at all be credible, at least most certainly they could not be credited against such Witnesses as should positively say, that they saw or heard him fire, or order to fire.

If Witnesses shall say against the Pannel, that they saw him present his Piece and fire, and for their Causa Scientiæ shall aver, that they observed Fire and Smoke issuing out of the Muzzle of his Piece, and a Man drop down dead in the Place towards which he pointed it, will that Evidence be sufficiently contradicted by Persons who may say they observed no such Thing, or that others of the Guard fired about the same Time, and at the same Place? 'tis humbly thought it cannot, because this is setting up Negative Evidence, only against positive, which neither Law or Reason permits.

And if credible Witnesses shall aver, That the Captain distinctly ordered the Guard to fire, can it avail him that other Witnesses heard him threaten the Croud, that if they did not retire he would fire, without hearing the positive Orders for firing given? in a Tumult every individual cannot possibly hear every Thing that passes; but then it is no Evidence that particular Words were not uttered in a Fray, that some Persons present at the Fray did not hear or attend to them.

And the Pannel in framing his Defence on this Article, does not seem to have attended to what is expressly lybelled against him, That in great Anger he said to the Men under his Command, upon their firing over the Heads of the Multitude, Level your Pieces, and be damn'd. Will this Circumstance, should it be proven, be at all consistent with that Part of the Defence, which tends to render the Expression Fire dubious? If the Pannel's Passion moved him to utter the Expression, Level your Pieces and be damn'd! Is it at all doubtful in what Sense the Word Fire was pronounced? These things are, 'tis thought, too plain to be further insisted on.

The only remaining Circumstance, on which the Procurators for the Pannel seemed to lay stress, was the Condition of his Firelock, when the Action was over, and his voluntary presenting himself before the Magistrates, when he could have made his Escape, from which they would have inferred, an Impossibility that he was guilty of actual firing, his Firelock appearing not to have been discharged, and a strong Improbability that he was conscious of having given any criminal Orders, since without necessity he freely presented himself to Justice.

Now as to these Matters, it must be observed, First, That the Condition in which the Pannel's Firelock appeared, can yield no Evidence for him: A Piece that has been fired may be re-loaded, and so cleaned and brushed up, as to leave no Vestige or Mark of the former firing; and the Piece which the Pannel made use of in firing, might have been changed, and another produced to the Magistrates in the Room thereof.

But 2dly, The Indictment no where avers, that the Pannel made use of his own Piece when he fired. Where he is first charged with firing, no more is said, than that he levelled the Firelock that was in his Hand, and fired it at Charles Husband. Now the Firelock that was in his Hand, might have been that belonging to another Man, as well as his own: And in the other part of the Indictment, where he is charged with firing, it is said that he made use of a Musket or Firelock that was in his Hand, having either re-loaded, or caused to be re-loaded his own Piece, or having taken another out of the Hand of one of the Guard: So that the Lybel in every Article of it may be true, and proved; and yet it may be also true, that the Pannel did not fire his own Piece.

And as to the Article, That the Pannel, conscious of no Guilt, appeared voluntarily before the Magistrates, when he could easily have made his Escape: It can possibly infer no Presumption for his Innocence, if the Facts charged in the Indictment are made good. Whoever shall be satisfied by the Proof, that the Pannel acted in manner lybelled, must be convinced, that he was governed in his Actions by no Principle of Discretion, and must therefore lay no weight upon an Act of his, which can yield no Inference, unless he is supposed to have been governed by Discretion and Prudence.

Having thus run over the several Circumstances of the Pannel's Narrative. The Prosecutor apprehends, he may safely conclude, that they cannot jointly or separately, be sustained as a Defence, against the Charge laid in the Indictment: Because, tho' every Circumstance alledged, were undeniably proved, the unhappy Pannel might nevertheless be guilty, and a positive Proof of the Facts charged must necessarily prevail with every unbiassed Jury-man, to join in a Verdict against him.

The Prosecutor is nevertheless far from wishing, that the unfortunate Pannel, should be deprived of an Opportunity of laying every Circumstance, that may make for his Defence before the Jury by Proof, tho' he humbly insists they cannot be sustained as a Defence Relevant to absolve from the Indictment. It is possible the Fact may come out otherwise in the Trial, when Witnesses are upon Oath, than it did when the Examination was taken in the Precognition; and should the Proof of the Indictment be in material Circumstances defective, the Evidence offered for the Pannel may have its weight; wherefore, so far as the Forms of the Court will allow, the Prosecutor makes no Opposition to the indulging the Pannel to bring what legal Evidence he can, for the Information of the Jury.

It is far from being the Interest of the Crown, or of the Publick that an innocent Man should suffer; but it is greatly the Interest of both, that a fair and strict Enquiry be made, where the Guilt lyes, when a Massacre so cruel and so dangerous happens, to the end, that if the Officer, who has Power put in his Hand, for the Preservation of the Peace, and for the Protection of the People, should, from any unjust Motive whatever, make use of that Power in breach of the Laws, to the Destruction of the People, he may be made an Example to restrain others in the same Circumstances, from the like monstrous and dangerous Abuses in time coming.

In respect whereof, &c. Sic subscribitur.

Information for John Porteous late Captain Lieutenant of the City Guard of Edinburgh, against His Majesty's Advocat.

THE Pannel stands indicted at the Instance of His Majesty's Advocat for his Highness Interest, for the Crimes of Murder, and Slaughter, Maiming, and Wounding; and the Facts charged against him, from whence these Crimes are pretended to be inferred, are these following; That the Pannel being one of the Captain Lieutenants of the said City Guard, was by the Magistrates of the City, ordered to attend with a Detachment of about Seventy Men of the said Guard, at the Execution of Andrew Wilson, sentenced to be hanged by the High Court of Justiciary; and that the said Andrew Wilson, having hung upon the Gallows, erected for his Execution, in the Street called The Grass Market, until he was dead, at least for a considerable Time, and so long, that there was ground to conclude he was dead, he the said Pannel, conceiving a wicked and malicious Purpose of destroying, wounding, and maiming the Persons, Inhabitants of the said City, and others, assembled at the said Execution, did, without any just Cause or necessary Occasion, order the said Detachment, under his Command, to fire upon the People so assembled; and that some of the Men having fired, as it would seem the Pannel apprehended, over the Heads of the Multitude, with Intention to avoid doing them harm, he the said Pannel, did with Threats repeat his Commands to fire, calling out to the Men, to level their Pieces and be damn'd, or Words to that Purpose; and that at the same Time, he levelled the Firelock that was in his own Hand, taking Aim at one Charles Husband, and having fired the said Firelock, the said Charles Husband immediately dropt to the Ground, having receiv'd a Wound or Wounds by Bullets or large Drops of Lead, whereof he died in a short Space; and that by the Pannel his said Example and Command, severals of the said Guard, to the Number of about Twenty, did, at the same Time, or soon thereafter, fire upon the Innocent Multitude, by which Fire, two other Persons were killed, and several others wounded, maimed, or hurt; and that the said Pannel having thereafter marched off the said Detachment of the Guard into that part of the Street aforesaid, called The West Bow, he did again, without any just Cause or Occasion, order the Men under his Command, to face about and fire upon the People; and that at this Time, the said Pannel did fire a Musket, that was in his own Hand, having either reloaded, or caused to be reloaded, his own Piece or Firelock, or taken another out of the Hands of one of the Guard; and that severals of the said Guards, did upon that second Example and Command of the Pannel's, fire upon the Multitude, by which Fire, Three other Persons were killed; at least that, by the said Firings of the Pannel, or of the Firings of the other Men in the said Detachment of the Guard, proceeding from the Pannel's Order and Example, the several Persons, mentioned in the Indictment to have been killed, maimed, or wounded, were all respectively killed, wounded, or maimed: Whereby the Pannel is guilty of the Killing, Wounding, or Maiming the said Persons; at least is Art and Part thereof, or accessory thereto; from whence the Indictment concludes, That the Pannel out to be punished with the Pains of Law, i. e. Capitally.

To this Indictment the Pannel pleaded not Guilty; for that he had, at no time, during the Execution of Andrew Wilson aforesaid, given any Order, or shewed any Example to the said Detachment of the Guard then under, or that ought to have been under his Command, to fire upon the Multitude so assembled; and that he did, at no time, fire any Piece or Firelock himself upon the said Crowd; that tho' it might be true, that at, or about the Time of the said Execution, several Persons were killed and wounded by the Firings of that Detachment of the Guard, which indeed ought to have been under the Pannel's Command, and which he does, with great Grief and Sorrow, regrette; yet that, as such Firing proceeded wholly from the Men in the said Detachment, without any Order or Example from the Pannel, so he could not be charged therewith, however fatal or tragical the Consequences of such Firing may have proved.

That tho' the Pannel, as conscious of his own Innocence, could safely rest his Trial upon the Denial of the Facts aforesaid, and upon such Proof, as he could bring, by the Evidence of Multitudes of Persons of undoubted Credite, who happened to be present, close by him, during this unhappy Scene, that he was nowayes instrumental in the Killing or Wounding the said Persons, but that upon the contrary, he did all that was in his Power, to prevent and restrain the said Firing upon the Multitude; yet, that he was advised by his Council, that they could not, during the conducting of his Trial, consistent with their Duty, suffer him the Pannel, to omit or abandon any Defence that was compitent to him in Law; and that therefore, as by the Law of Scotland, the Pleading to an Indictment, upon supposed Facts, is no legal Admission of such Facts, the Pannel was at Liberty to plead any other Exception, that lay against the Form of his Indictment, or even to plead, that tho' such Firing had proceeded from his Order or Example, yet even in that Case, such Firing, and the Consequences wherewith it was attended, was not sufficient to support the Charge against the Pannel, of the Crimes of either Murder, Slaughter, Maiming, or Wounding, or to render him obnoxious to the Pains libelled,

And in the Entry of the Debate, The Procurators for the Pannel ask Liberty to offer to the Court, a full Recital of the Behaviour of the Pannel, during the Execution of the said Andrew Wilson, and for some short Space previous and subsequent thereto; and also, to offer a short Relation of what they apprehend was the Cause, that the Execution of the said Andrew Wilson was attended with such an unusual Confluence of People, and was ordered to be guarded and over-seen by such a numerous and unaccustomed armed Force.

The said Andrew Wilson, along with one Robertson, and others, had been sentenced to Death by your Lordships, for robbing one of the Collectors of His Majesty's Revenue of considerable Sums of Money of the Publick; and while they lay under this Sentence, they were allowed, as usual, to go to the Church adjoining to the Prison, for the Benifite of Divine Service, under the Custody of a small Detachment of the City Guard; and while the Convicts were thus at Church, Robertson, one of them, found means to escape from his Keepers of the Guard, by suddenly jumping over a Pew, and getting out at the Door of the Church; his Retreat apparently being favoured by the Mob, or lowest Sort of the People, he easily made his Escape, without having been ever since overtaken.

From this Escape of Robertson's, so favoured by the Mob, and from strong Surmises and Suggestions, that, at the Execution of Wilson, a Rescue was intended by the Mob, which indeed there was a reasonable Ground to apprehend; because the Commons have imbibed a pernicious and absurd Conceit, as if the Robbing of the Publick Money, was a Crime more pardonable, than private Robbery: Therefore it was, as the Pannel apprehends, that the Magistrates of the City, from a Sense of their Duty to prevent the Execution of the Laws being any further defeated by the Rescue of Wilson, took the strongest Precautions that the Execution of him should be made effectual.

In Consequence whereof, as would seem, the Provost of the City, sent for the Pannel, in whom, he must take the Liberty to say, Confidence was generally put upon those difficult Occasions, and told him, that there being great Apprehensions of a Mob at Andrew Wilson's Execution, that therefore there was a Necessity to be well prepared to prevent their Designs; and for that end, that he would have the whole City Guard, to attend at the Execution, he having given Orders to the Town Treasurer to furnish the Men with Powder and Shot, and such other Military Ammunition as might be necessary for the Use of the Men in maintaining the Peace of the Town, and supporting the Execution of the Laws. And this Conference with the Provost happened upon the Monday preceeding the Execution of Wilson, which followed on the Wednesday thereafter. But it seems the Magistrates of the City, not thinking even this Precaution sufficient, upon the Tuesday thereafter, the Provost sent the Pannel with a Letter to General Moyle's Residing near the City, and Chief Commander of the Forces in Scotland, telling the Pannel, that the Import of this Letter was, desiring from the General an Order for a Party of the Regiment lying in the Cannon-gate to enter the City (a Thing very uncommon, except in the Case of urgent Necessity) in order to over-awe the Mob, and thereby maintain the Peace during the said Execution.

It seems this Letter to the General induced him to send a verbal Message in return thereto, by a Person of known Honour and Veracity, Major Pool, of that Regiment now lying in the Cannon-gate, who told the Provost, that the General wanted to know of him, what part the King's Troops were to act, and what Precautions had been taken for preventing any Insult or Invasion that might be made upon the Troops, or what Length these Troops might go in the case of Tumult or Disturbance. To which the Provost made answer, That there was no reason to apprehend any Inconveniency would happen to the King's Troops, because he would have them only to parade, for a Terror to the Mob, in a Street called the Lawn-market, removed from the Sight of the Execution, but at a small Distance only, where nevertheless they would be ready at a Call in case of Necessity; but that he had ordered the whole Band of the City Guard to attend at the Execution it self, with proper Arms and Ammunition, namely, Slug Shot, with Orders to repel Force by Force, and even to discharge their Arms among the Mob in case of Resistance.

On Wednesday the Day of the Execution, in the Forenoon, the Pannel attended the Provost; and told him, That in Obedience to his Commands, the Men were all ordered to be in Readiness, their Arms put in order, and loaded; whereof the Provost approved, and told the Pannel, That he was to be ready betwixt Two and Three in the Afternoon, with his Guard, and to draw out until the Party of the King's Troops, from the Cannon-gate past him; and that so soon as the King's Troops were drawn up in the Lawn-market, the Pannel, with the City Guard should forthwith march to the Prison, and conduct the Prisoner to the Place of Execution, without allowing him first to go to the Town's Council-house, as usual, still with Intention, as would seem, to prevent any Opportunity of Rescue, or Disturbance upon that Head; and at this Time in the Forenoon the Pannel humbly proposed to the Magistrates of the City, that they would send a Proclamation through the Town, as a Caution to such Innocent unwary People, as might by Curiosity be drawn to the Sight of the Execution, warning them of their Danger, in case any Disturbance should happen, or attack be made upon the Guard. And accordingly George Lindsey one of their Clerks, made a Scroll of the said Proclamation to be sent through the Town; but for what Reason it was not proclaimed, the Pannel knows not, and at the same time the Pannel remembers some one or other of the Common-Council of the City proposed in case of Disturbance, the reading of the Riot Act, and for that Purpose sent for a Dozen of Copies of the Act to a Booksellers Shop, in order to distribute them among the proper Officers of the Law, authorized to read and proclaim such Act; but it seems at no time either of those Proposals were put in Execution; nor at the Time of the said Execution, did any Officer of the Law, authorized to proclaim such Act, attend with the Pannel.

A short space before the Pannel marched with his Men from the Guard-house, towards the Place of Execution, he was heard say, That he had no Cartrages in his Box; on which a Corporal told him, that he would get him some; and accordingly the Corporal did, in presence of several of the Men, open the Pannels Cartrage Box, wherein it was observed there were no Cartrages, and put three Cartrages therein, with one of which the Pannel loaded his Piece, and immediately marched away with the Men.

When the Criminal was conducted to the Scaffold erected for his Execution, the Detachment of the City Guard were posted on the the Street, in a Circle surrounding the Scaffold, in order to keep off the Mob; but because of a certain Building, called the Corn-market, nigh adjoining to the Scaffold, part of the Men did also incircle that Building. And here it may not be improper for the Court to cast their Eye upon a Plan of the Ground, and the Posture of the Men, in order to have a clearer view of the Descriptions to be hereafter mentioned.

So soon as the Criminal was thrown over the Ladder, and so left hanging upon the Gibbet, the City Baillies immediately withdrew nigh to, directly opposite, and in view of the Scaffold, but without leaving any Order or Officer of the Law to attend with the Pannel: And it had happened, that some short Space before the Act of Execution, while the Minister was assisting the Criminal by Prayer, the Pannel had gone up to join, leaving his Piece with the Serjeant; and so soon as publick Prayer was ended, or some short time after, and the Convict left to his own private Devotion, the Pannel took back his Piece in his Hand, and afterwards came off the Scaffold, and posted himself at the West End of the Detachment of the Guard.

So soon as the Convict had been hung up as aforesaid, and that the City Baillies had withdrawn from the Scaffold, the Mob became to be troublesome, intending, as would seem, to use this last Shift, immediately to cutt down the Criminal, and endeavour to bring him to Life by bleeding; an Expedient, which when timeously applied, has on many other Occasions been known to be attended with Success, and the Mob fell a murmuring, that they would have him instantly cutt down, and if it were not quickly done, they would do it themselves: And at this time they pressed hard upon the Guard, striking at them with Sticks, seizing of their Fire Arms and Bayonets, and throwing exceeding big Stones at the Guard; one whereof cutt a Drummer to the Scull, another broke one of the Men's Shoulder Bones, another wounded one of the Men's Legs, and several others of the Men were wounded, whereby they are yet unable to do Duty: The Truth of all which can be attested by their common Surgeon, who is by the City ordered to attend them upon all Exigencies.

This Insolence in the Mob alarm'd the Pannel, and still observing it to encrease, he was apprehensive that the Mob might obstruct the perfecting of the Execution; for no Criminal can be cutt down from the Gibbet, but upon the Order of a City Bailiff, upon a Judgement that the Criminal has hung up until he is compleatly dead, agreeable to the Sentence which always commands such Convict to be hang'd until he be dead; therefore it was that the Pannel sent a Message to the Bailiffs, to know if he should suffer the Criminal to be cutt down from the Gibbet; who brought back an Answer, That the Convict was to hang there yet for a Quarter of an Hour.

At this time the Mob wax'd exceeding bold, became very turbulent, and prest hard upon the Guard, and while the Pannel was endeavouring to keep off the Crowd from pressing among the Soldiers, at one End of the Scaffold, some of the Convicts Friends, assisted by the Mob, catched an Opportunity and cutt him down without any Order: And tho' the Convict, being thus cutt down, was in the Possession and Keeping of the Mob, who were endeavouring to recover him to Life, by causing the Veins of both Arms to be opened: Whither it was that they were apprehensive, that the Guard would recover him out of their Hands, as having been cutt down without Order; or that the Officers of the Law were designed to see to his Interment, and that he was executed to death; or that the Convict's Body was intended to be given to be anatomized by the Surgeons, as is sometimes practised, where Persons of low Degree or notorious Offenders, are sentenced to Death; or from whatever Motive it proceeded, the Mob began to insult and attack the Guard: And upon this Attack it was, that the Man aforesaid had his Shoulder Blade broken; and another so bruised, that he has been never able to do Duty since; and the Timber of the Drum was broke by the force of an exceeding large Stone that was thrown, and several others of the Men were hurt and wounded.

This Violence in the Mob so alarmed the Pannel, that he made a Step or two forewards to the Westward of the Scaffold, turning about his Face towards the West Port, from whence the throwing of the Stones mostly proceeded; and having put his Piece to his Shoulder, he levelled it at the Mob, and pointing it around to them, threatening with an audible Voice, That if they would not be at Peace, and leave off throwing Stones, and attacking the Men, he would fire among them; but immediately recovered his Piece without firing it; the Threats being only intended to intimidate the Mob.

But unfortunately upon this ensued the whole Tragical Scene; for no sooner had the Pannel stept forward, threatening to fire as aforesaid, but one of the Men came up from behind him, and running by him upon his Right Hand, instantly discharged his Piece, upon which one of the Crowd dropt down, supposed to be Charles Husband, and which Charles Husband will upon Proof be found to have been the Person who tumultuously stept in and cut down the Criminal.

Immediately upon this first Fire, another of the Guard came up to the Pannel, with his Piece presented and cocked, and ask'd if he should fire; to which the Pannel answered with some Vehemence, No, by no Means, and struck up his Piece, bidding him go to his Rank, and actually thrust him thereto.

After the Example of this first Fire, several more of the Men were heard to discharge their Pieces, but upon what Provocation the Pannel cannot tell; these Shots having been at a considerable Distance from the Pannel, proceeding, as is supposed, from such of the Men as were standing at the South-west Corner of the Corn-market; whereas, as has been noticed, the Pannel was still standing at his former Station, to the West of the Scaffold and Gibbet.

The Pannel not knowing the fatal Consequences of those Shots, but suspecting however that Mischief would happen, seeing the Men had been so rash as to fire without Orders, thought it was the best Course he could take, to lead off the Men of the Guard as soon as he could; and for that end he called aloud to them to follow him, and after having given Orders to the Serjants to gather them together (for it was impossible to bring them into Ranks by the confusion of the Mob) he marched off as many of them as he could find, by the North-side of the Scaffold, towards the Foot of the West Bow, and towards a Parcel of the Men, whom one of the Serjants had gote together at the Foot of the Bow, but as he was going to join that Parcel of the Men, he heard a Piece fired near him, with which he was a good deal surprized, and yet more, when he observed two or three People fall to the Ground, and which Observation was the first first thing that greatly alarmed the Pannel, as knowing from thence, that certainly Mischief was done: But it is certain that this fatal Shot did not proceed from the Pannel, but from a certain Man in the Guard, that can be well proven; who, after having fired this Shot, immediately retired amongst the Croud, and then gote himself joined to the Party: And surely the Magistrats of the City will remember, that when a Precognition was taking of the several Facts and Occurrences upon this tragical Day, that a certain Person told them, That if they would be pleased to sift the whole Band of the Guard before them, he would point out the Man who made this last Fire, but the Magistrats overlooked this Offer.

As soon as the Pannel saw there was no restraining the Men from Irregularities, he marched off so many of them as he had gote together, without taking time to forme them into any Order; giving Orders at the same time to the Serjants, to beat and press off the rest with all manner of Dispatch. Upon which he observed those that had straggled come off partly from about the Scaffold, and partly from East-end of the Corn-market, and fall into the Rear; and while the Pannel was thus marching up the Bow, upon the Front of the foremost Part of the Men, and had come as far as the Turn of the Bow, he heard some dropping Shots firing in the Rear, and about thirty or forty Paces distant from him, which he supposes may have proceeded from those Men who were straggling upon the East-side of the Corn-mercate, nigh to the Head of the Cow-gate, but upon what Occasion the Pannel knows not; but being alarm'd with the Shots, he looked back, supposing the Men might be attack'd by the Mob, and observing no Marks of any such Attack, he thought the most prudent Course he could take was forthwith to march off the Men.

It falls here to be noticed, That all this Firing, from first to last, and whereby so much Mischief has been done, lasted not above two or three Minutes; and therefore, considering the Violence of the Mob, and the straggling Situation of the Men of the Guard, and supposing the Truth of the above Narrative, which will be attested in proper Time by the Oaths of many Gentlemen of undoubted Veracity; and who had fair Opportunity of Observation at the Time, it is left with the Court, and to every impartial By-stander, whether the Pannel could well have done more for the Safety of the Burgh; considering that it shall also be proved, that during these few Minutes of Firing, accompanied with great Hurry and Confusion, the Pannel gave several repeated Orders to the Men to restrain from firing; but observing those Orders prove ineffectual, he endeavoured to sweep them off the Field with all manner of Precipitation.

The Pannel marched on with the Men to the Guard-house, and as he thinks with Coolness and Deliberation, passing by the King's Troops in the Lawn-market (a Thing generally esteemed somewhat inconsistent with Guilt, especially such horrible Guilt as he is charged with.) Upon his Arrival at the Guard-house, he drew up his Men there, sending a Serjant to the Provost for Orders, which were brought, That they should wait on their Arms till the King's Troops past; and some of the Men in waiting, offering and attempting to clean their Guns, but the Pannel discharged it, and would not allow it to be done; mean time a certain Person of Credite came up to the Pannel, and asked if he had fired? To whom he made answer, He had not; but the Person not being satisfied with the Answer, put his Finger into the Muzzel of the Pannel's Piece, and after having rubbed it about, and after having also viewed the Lock, said to the Pannel, I see you have not fired, and I am glad of it.

The King's Troops having passed the Guard, the Pannel filed off the Men into the Guard, and ordered the Serjeants to keep them close till further Orders, and by all means not to suffer them to clean their Pieces: And at the same time the Pannel delivered his Carabine, loaded as aforesaid, at the Guard Door, to one of the Guard, neither entering the Guard himself, nor any other House, but went immediately to the Provost: Thus his own Piece was brought back loaded, and apparently without having been fired, and the other two Cartrages which he had gote at the Guard were found upon his return in his Cartrage Box.

When the Pannel went up to the Provost, some Person there present alledged he had seen the Pannel fire, which he contradicted, and beg'd the Provost to send for his Piece, which he told he had deliver'd at the Guard as aforesaid, and that it would appear from inspecting of her, that she had not been fired: And the Piece being accordingly sent for, and brought up to the Council Chamber, and after being strictly inspected, it was agreed by all present that she had not been fired; and in this Condition she still lies loaded, in the Custody of the Magistrates along with the Cartrage Box, containing the two Cartrages, as aforesaid.

Tho' the Pannel has a pretty important Prize at Stake, yet he rests in full Security, that he will prove to the Conviction of the Court every Article above recited, and a good deal more in his behalf to be hereafter mentioned: And if it should here be made matter of Wonder, how such different Accounts as are given of this Matter can consist together, seeing Numbers of People are impressed with the Guilt of the Pannel, and that even good, well-meaning People, who were present upon the Spot, persist in affirming that the Pannel was guilty, by both firing himself, and giving repeated Orders to fire.

The Pannel can give no other Account of this Matter than in this Way. A miserable Slaughter was, some how or other, committed within the Town. The Guilt must be laid to some-body's Door; and whether any Art might be used to lay the heavy Load upon the Pannel, in order to draw the Attention of the Multitude from another Point in View, the Pannel shall not say; but intreats the Honourable Court, and every candid Reader, who may happen to take up this Information, to look into the Caledonian Mercuries of the fifteenth and nineteenth of Aprile last, Papers supposed to be published by Authority; where will be found a most charitable Account of the Matter, touching this misfortunate Pannel, who was then lying in close Confinement, without any body being allowed Access to him; and of consequence, could have no Opportunity of vindicating himself, until once the Prejudices were deep-rooted and rivetted, so as even to catch the unwary, though well-meaning, Part of the People; and these beautiful Relations of this Transaction, are adorned with some witty Sarcasms, very proper to this melancholy Occasion, and painted out with ingenious Reflections, and quaint rhetorical Invectives, very suitable to the Authors of these historical Relations.

And indeed the Authors of these Accounts of the Matter, whoever they are, have the Impudence to affirm, and the Wickedness to endeavour to fix it upon the Pannel, as an Instance of Premeditation and Felony forethought, that the Pannel had ordered the Detachment of the Guard to load with Ball and Slug-shot, before they marched from the Guard: And this worthy Author affirms, that such doing was unprecedented, and such as the Pannel would not pretend Orders for; notwithstanding that it is now, with his usual Candor, admitted by his Majesty's Advocat in his Information against the Pannel, and dare not be denied, but that the Pannel had Orders to see the whole Mens Pieces loaded with Bullet and other Shott, and even to fire those Pieces amongst the Mob in case of Exigency.

The Prejudices against the Pannel being once artfully rooted, it was an easy Matter to catch the giddy Mob, who are not able to look back and discern the true Springs and Causes of Things: For such is the Nature of human Passions, that if they are once artfully moved, they will be apt to misguide the Understandings; even of Persons of Observation; and thus the Speat having once been created against the Pannel, it grew into a Torrent, and flew like a Train of Fire, every one adding Fuel to the Flame, and Sparks originally increase into a mighty Combustion; and so, in like manner, Things entirely of themselves innocent, may be multiplied into horrid Cruelties and savage Barbarity.

It might also operate to the Prejudice of the Pannel, that this Scene was acted in a very short Space, attended with great Commotion and Confusion. Words and Actions might be misconstrued (whereof more particular Notice shall be taken hereafter) whereby Persons even of Judgement, might be deceived, and thereby fall into the vulgar Notions. And here it cannot be deemed an useless Digression in the Pannel to give a Caution to all Gentlemen, who may happen to be called in Evidence upon this Trial, (for 'tis feared the Mob are not capable of this Advice) not to affirm Things upon Oath, except their Observations have been accompanied with all that Certainty which those Sensations wherewith Mankind is endued, can admit of; because any inconsiderate Rashness to the Prejudice of the Life or Fame of the Pannel, cannot fail, for hereafter, to be attended with very painful Stings of Remorse.

It was observed for the Pannel, as a Thing that could not be denied, that upon many former Occasions, he had been singled out as the fittest Person to maintain the Peace of the City, by quelling of Mobs and Tumults; and that he had never hitherto, during all the many Occasions on which he had been employed, ever discovered any imprudent Rashness or cruel Temper in the Exercise of his Command, but had exposed his Person to very great Danger, rather than involve the City in Blood, or proceed to such Extremities, as the Law even would have entirely justified.

It was also observed in Behalf of the Pannel, that it was no new Thing for the private Men in the City Guard, who, though they are tolerably acquainted with Discipline, yet are not subject to the military Law, to take upon them to fire upon the Multitude, without any Order from their Commander, whereof the following Instances are offered, and which cannot be denied; to witt;

That at the Settlement of Mr. Wotherpoon, as a Minister in the West Church Parish, a Party of the City Guard under the Pannel's Command, did, one or more of them, in the Rear Ranks, within the West-gate of Edinburgh, while the Pannel was marching on their Front, face about and fire upon the Mob, without any Order, and by which Fire severals were dangerously wounded; and the like happened in a few Years ago, after the Execution of one Campbel, when a Detachment of the City Guard were conducting the Corps of the Person executed, which was delivered over to the Surgeons of Edinburgh, by Order of the Magistrates. And the same Thing happened a few Years ago at a Race at Leith, where the Party of the Guard was commanded by Captain Lind, whereby several Persons were wounded. And another Instance was given, where the same Irregularity happened, within these few Moneths at the Execution of Brown the Smith, when the Detachment of the City Guard was commanded by both Captains, Lind and Ferguson. And, indeed, innumerable other Instances might be given of the Rashness of the Men in this Particular, which it is needless to condescend upon, because they are notourly known in the City.

It may also deserve Notice, that the private Men of the Guard might be prompted to fire without Orders, partly from Resentment, that Robertson before-mentioned had escaped out of their Hands, and partly from being encouraged by the general Order they heard was given by the Magistrates to fire, in case of Resistance: For it is now found, that severals of them were heard say before they went out to the Execution of Wilson, that now they had got Arms and Ammunition put in their Hands, and therefore would not fail to use them, in case they were attacked, or any Resistance made.

These Observations 'tis humbly thought cannot fail to operate in favours of the Pannel, in case the Proof of the Libel shall be attended with any Uncertainty or Dubiety: And altho' the Pannel is not so weak of Judgement, as to imagine that such Presumptions can prevail against positive and certain Proof; yet he doubts not, that in due Time, when the Proof is led, such Observations must have Weight with the candid Jury.

One Thing more we must observe in general, That as he has been employ'd for these many Years past, as the Scourge of the Mob, tho' never once known to proceed to Extremities; yet such Station of his may be the Cause of drawing Resentment from the lower Sort of the People against him.

The Pannel has just Reason to ask the Forgiveness of the Honourable Court for dwelling so long upon Generals; but 'tis hoped, from what is above noticed, and that this is the first Occasion he had of vindicating himself from the Aspersions and Prejudice of his Adversaries, he may merit the Pardon of the Court.

And now to proceed to the Particulars in the Indictment: And whereas it sets forth, That the Pannel conceiving a most wicked and malicious Purpose

Purpose of destroying, wounding, and maiming Numbers of his Majesty's Subjects, Inhabitants of the City of Edinburgh, had acted the several Matters and Things charged in the Indictment: The Pannel must observe, that the Circumstances of the Case naturally exclude any Supposition of premeditate Malice and Resentment in the Pannel, because 'tis impossible to conceive, that the Pannel should have retain'd any Malice against a Multitude of Persons, of whom he neither had, nor can be supposed to have had, any Acquaintance: And tho' it was admitted, that the Circumstances of the Case do exclude any supposed long premeditated Malice; yet it was urged, that in Law every wicked Action does presume Malice, tho' instantaneous to such Wickedness committed.

To which it was answered in Behalf of the Pannel, That the Circumstances of the Case, as laid in the Indictment, do even exclude any Presumption of Malice accompanying the Acts charged in the Indictment; because every Action must be construed in the most favourable Sense; and therefore the Actions charged against the Pannel, must even be construed to have proceeded from a principle of Duty in the Pannel, in maintaining the Peace of the Place, and in supporting the Authority of the Laws, and the guarding of that Execution of them, which was committed to him by lawful Authority.

In the next Place, An Exception was taken to the Indictment, as not having been laid with sufficient Certainty; the Indictment no where expressing the particular Places of that large Street wherein the Guilt is charged to have been committed, whereby the Pannel was precluded from making his Defences with Certainty: For had it been laid in the Indictment at what Places in the Street the particular Persons, affirmed to have been killed and wounded, were so killed or wounded; the Pannel might have had an Opportunity of proving, from the Circumstances of his Situation at the several Periods, that it was impossible that such Wounds could have been received from his Hands. And tho' it may be true, that such Part of the Indictment as charges the Pannel's Order to fire, would be of universal Influence, and reached over the whole Circumstances of Guilt charged in the Indictment, yet as actual Execution made by the Pannel was charged separate from his Order to fire, such Proof of Innocence, whereof the Pannel pleaded an Opportunity might have afforded him a Defence against such Part of the Indictment as charges his own Firing and Killing.

To this it was answered by his Majesty's Advocat, That the Lybel was as particular as the Law required, describing the Street where the Execution was committed, which is all that the utmost Scrupulosity could expect in this Case: Because minute Circumstances cannot be known to the Prosecutor, or certainly discovered, but by Proof upon Trial, and that every Circumstance of the Pannel's own acting must be known to him. And therefore, if from the Position or Situation in which he was at the Time of the Firing, the Pannel can shew that it was impossible he could have killed the Person whom he is charged to have shot; by describing and proving these Circumstances, he may have Advantage from them, but cannot object to the Prosecutor, that he did not minutely describe his Situation, which was not known to him; and that by the describing of which, perhaps erroneously, the Prosecutor might minister an unjust Occasion to a Criminal to escape Justice.

To which it was replied for the Pannel, That tho' it is true that, in most Cases, the describing the Street where the Guilt was committed, would be a sufficient Description; yet, that, in the present Case, where it was laid in the Indictment, That in a Crowd or Multitude, various Shots were fired by different Hands, and thereby Wounds given; 'tis even necessary to describe the particular Place of the Street where such Wounds were received, in order to form a Judgement from whose Hands those Wounds had proceeded. The Pannel might have fired elusory, or in the Air, and the Wounds received may have proceeded from the Shots of others: That tho' the Pannel knows his own Position and Situation, and can prove them; yet such Proof could not avail him, nor be received by the Court in the Point of Relevancy; because it would be a simple Negative, which could not be admitted of, nor would not apply, unless the particular Places of the Street, in which the Wounds are said to have been received, had been described to him; a Situation which the Pannel cannot be supposed to know; whereas the Prosecutor must be supposed to have known it, seeing the same Information that led him to know of the Wounds received, must necessarily upon Inquiry have certiorated him at what Places of the Street such Wounds were received, seeing the Matters and Things laid in the Indictment, are charged to have been committed at High-daylight, in Presence of Multitudes. And tho' the Pannel is fully satisfied of the good Disposition of the Honourable Prosecutor, to lay a fair and certain Inditement against every Pannel, yet it must be admitted, that all Indictments ought to be laid with all that Accuracy and full Description that the Nature of the Thing can admit of: And, as to such Part of the Answer for his Majesty's Advocat, as saith, that such particular Description of Place, if perhaps erroneously described, might minister an unjust Occasion to the Pannel to escape Justice; it's answered, That such erroneous Description of Place could in no sense affect the Trial, because tho' such Description should not be proved, it would not vary the Case, providing the act of Killing were proved against the Pannel, because such Description of Place is but a Circumstance immaterial to be proven by the Prosecutor; but for the Reasons above assigned, highly material for the Pannel to know, in order to lay his Defence before the Court.

It was in the next Place offered as a Defence for the Pannel, That the Resistance of the Mob was so great, and the Attack of the City Guard so violent against them, in beating, bruising, and wounding the Men, as has been above noticed, while they were in the lawful Execution of that Office, committed to them by lawful Authority, that such Resistance and Attack must have justified the Guard, in repelling the Violence of the Mob; since such Proceedings in the Guard were acted in support of the due Execution of the Laws, which the Mob were highly Criminal in disturbing. That this Argument as pled for the Pannel, was not only consonant to the Rules of Reason, but agreeable to sundry Judgements and Precedents of the Court, particularly that in the Year One thousand six hundred and ninety two, it appears from the Books of Adjournal, That James Gordon Messenger at the Execution of a Caption, did, with many others his Assistants, armed with Guns, Swords, and other hostile Weapons, shoot several Shots, whereby one Alexander Jack was killed dead upon the Spot, amidst a numerous Crowd, which the Alarm of Noise and Tumult had drawn together, and whereof only part can be supposed to have come there with Intention to resist the Messenger; and the said James Gordon and the others his Assistants, being indicted for Murder, the Lords sustained this Defence to him, relevant to elide the Libel simply, viz. That he, in the Execution of a Caption, haven his Blazen displayed, was by force of Arms hindered to enter the House of Loanmy, by the Persons within that House, and that they did threaten and menace the Messenger and his Assistants, and that they threatened to raise the Country, and that the Country did accordingly rise, and beset and surround the Messenger, either in the House, or without the House; the said Country People being armed with Guns, Swords, and other invasive Weapons.

Here your Lordships perceive, that the Court justified the Messenger in shooting amongst the Mob, and killing; because the Persons in the House forcibly hindered him from entering, and threatened and menaced him, being armed with invasive Weapons; and the present Case is more favourable in behalf of the Pannel, who acted by lawful Authority, as well as Gordon in the other Case did, and who was supporting the Execution of the Laws, as well as Gordon was; with this Difference upon the side of the Pannel, That he was not only hindered and menaced in the Execution of his Duty, but he and his Guard invaded and assaulted, beat, bruised, and wounded, as has been above noticed, and whereof a strong Proof shall be brought; and that the Mob in the present Case were not only armed with, but in their Attack upon the Guard, made use of, big Stones, of Two or Three Pound weight, which must be allowed to be very invasive Weapons; and therefore the Pannel subsumes, that the Defence offered for him in the present Case, is stronger, and ought rather to be allowed him, than that which was sustained to Gordon. Only the Pannel must do the Justice to His Majesty's Advocat, as to acknowledge, that this Precedent was not hitherto offered in the Debate; but when the Record is inspected, will be found to stand in the precise Terms as above-mentioned.

There was in the former Debate, a Precedent of the Court offered, as against the Pannel, which the Pannel, with Submission, apprehends makes for him, namely Captain Wallace's Case, sometime after the Revolution. Captain Wallace was indicted in the One thousand six hundred and ninety two, for having refused in the One thousand six hundred and eighty eight, to deliver up himself, in Obedience to an Order of the President of the Council, and several Privy Councilers, whereof Two were Officers of State; and the Bailiffs of Edinburgh, having gone down to the Cannon-gate, with a Heralld and Pursevant, with their Coats of Arms displayed, to put the Order of Privie Council in Execution; notwithstanding which, Captain Wallace would not deliver himself up, but retired with the Men under his Command to the Abbey, and defended himself, and fired upon the Bailiffs, Herallds, and Pursevants; shot several Persons dead upon the Spot, and wounded a great many others.

The Defence pled for Captain Wallace was, That the keeping of the Abbey was committed to him by order of the Privy Council, which he was obliged to maintain so long as the Trust of it was committed to him; That as to the Order of Privy Council, to deliver up his Person, it was contrair to an Act of Parliament James the Sixth, whereby any General Warrant, for putting the Person of any Man in Ward, except where such Warrant was signed by four Officers of State, whereof the Chancellor, Treasurer, or Secretary of State to be one, which had not been practised in Wallace's Case, was prohibited and discharged.

The Lords, after a very learned Debate, did sustain these Defences to Captain Wallace, viz. That on the Sabbath Night, or shortly before, a Rabble did meet in several Places, in great Numbers, and that severals of them did declare to John Paterfon their Resolution to trouble the Pannel on his Guard, and to pillage the Abbey, relevant to restrict to an arbitrary Punishment.

Here your Lordships perceive, that the Court sustained a previous Intention only declared, that they would trouble the Pannel on his Guard, and pillage the Abbey, sufficient to moderate the Punishment; so tender are the Laws towards any Person committing Hostility in Defence of his Guard: And then the Lords sustained the following Defence relevant to elide the Libel altogether, to wit, That the Rabble did, in a tumultuous Manner, come down the Cannon-gate with Swords and Fire Arms, and did beat some of the Pannels Centinels; and being desired to stand, they notwithstanding advanced so near, that the Pannel could speak with them; and after he had desired them to remove, or be at their hazard, they, notwithstanding thereof, still persisted to advance.

The Application in the present case is easy: The Pannel many Times exhorted the Mob to stand off; notwithstanding of which, they still pressed upon him; he many times advertised them of their Hazard; threatned to fire upon them if they would not keep off; his Centinels were not only beat, but bruised and wounded; all which is offered to be proved.

Another case was mentioned in the Debate to your Lordships, which strongly supported the Plea of the Pannel, because it was a Judgement of your Lordships pronounced but very lately, after the most solemn Declaration of the Court; and wherein, the Pannel is informed, The Court was unanimous; and which Judgement seemed to be of that Importance, as to induce the Court to reverse the Proceedings of the High Court of Admiralty, after a solemn Trial by Jury in that Court; a Verdict returned, finding the Lybel proven, and the Defence not proven; and a Sentence of Death pronounced by the Judge of the High Court of Admiralty.

The case before the Admiralty was this; A Corporal and a private Centinel in Collonel Hamilton's Regiment were indicted before the Admiral for Murder; for that they had, upon the High Seas, killed Hugh Fraser younger, of Belnain, by stabbing him with a Bayonet in the Breast, Breast, and afterwards throwing him into the Sea, whereof he instantly died.

The Defence plead for the Pannels, was this, That the Pannels were by military Order, appointed to attend the Officers of the Customs in seizing of Goods by Law made seizable; and that the Pannels being in a Boat, upon the Seas, along with the Custome-house Officers, in quest of such Goods, the Person killed did come up with them in another Boat, with others in Company with him; and that Frazer the deceas'd jumped into the Boat, where the Pannels and the Custome-house Officers were, and endeavoured to take hold of their Arms; which was both a Resistance and an Attack of the Custome-house Officers while in the Execution of their Duty.

Upon the other hand, it was pled against the Pannels, That Frazer's jumping into the Boat, was with no Intention to make Resistance, but rather to save his own Life from the Thrusts of the Pannels, their Pieces having been aimed at him; that those in the Custome-house Boat could have no just Apprehension of being mastered by Mr. Frazer, he having no invasive Weapon about him whatever, and being the only Person who offered to get into the Custome-house Boat, in which there were several Persons well armed.

The Judge of the High Court of Admiralty admitted of the Pannels Plea, in this Manner only, sustains the Defence of Self-Defence proponed by the Pannels, that the killing of the said Hugh Frazer, by them, or either of them, was in the necessary Defence of their Lives, and repelled the whole other Defences proponed for the Pannels.

The Jury returned their Verdict, finding the Pannels both guilty, art and part, of killing the said Mr. Frazer; and finding it not proven, that the killing of Mr. Frazer was in the necessary Defence of the Pannels Lives: Upon which Verdict returned, the Judge sentenced both the Pannels to be hanged,

The Proceedings of the Court of Admiralty were laid before your Lordships for a Review, which, 'tis believed, is the single Instance wherein it was ever contended, that the Proceedings of the High Court of Admiralty in Matters Criminal could be reviewed by any other Court.

Notwithstanding of which, your Lordships, were pleased to reverse the Sentence of the Judge Admiral; no doubt, upon supposed Error in his Proceedings; because the Verdict of a Jury, pronounced upon Evidence, cannot be reversed; and in consequence of which Judgement of your Lordships, the Pannels were sett at Liberty.

Now the Pannel is advised, that such Judgement in your Lordships could stand upon no Foundation other than this, viz. That your Lordships had reversed the Judgement of the Admiral as erroneous, in not sustaining this Defence to the Pannels: That they were resisted by Mr. Frazer deceas'd, while they the Pannels were in the Execution of their Duty.

And as the degree of Resistance offered by Mr. Frazer to the Pannels, was by the Pannels themselves maintained to have been no higher than what has been set forth to your Lordships; the forsaid unanimous Judgement of your Lordships pronounced after many solemn Deliberations, does by consequence show, that it was your Lordships unanimous Opinion, that a very small degree of Resistance of Persons in the Execution of their Duty; will justify the Persons resisted in the Act of killing the Resister.

And if that was the solemn and unanimous Opinion of the Court in a Case so recent; must not such Judgement afford a strong Argument to the Pannel, that he and his Guard were resisted, while in the undoubted Execution of their Duty, in being beat, wounded, and bruised by an unruly Mob; who, there was good Reason to apprehend, intended to defeat the Execution of the Criminal;

To this last Case, the Pannel met with no other Answer from his Majesty's Advocat, but this, That the Pannel cannot plead the Benefite of this Case; because he neither does, nor can aver that the firing proceeding from him or his Order, was necessary for securing of the Execution of that Trust that was committed to him: His Majesty's Advocat does admitt, that where a Person has by lawful Authority Weapons put into his Hands, to be employed either in defence of his Life, when attackt, or in support of the Execution of the Laws, or of the Property of the Crown, or Property of the Subject; such Person may use those Weapons, not only when his own Life is so far in danger, that he cannot probably escape without making use of them, but also where there is imminent Danger, that he may by Violence be disabled to execute his Trust: But withall seems to contend, that the Pannel was under none of those Circumstances at the time he committed the Guilt charged upon him in the Indictment; for that the Execution of the Criminal was over before the Scuffle began, or any Resistance was made to the Pannel, and the Guard under his Command; and that being the Case, the Pannel can plead no other Defence, than such as might arise from his being put under the imminent Danger of his Life.

But with great Submission, These Positions of his Majesty's Advocat are assumed without any Authority, and, as would appear, not only in plain Opposition to the Laws, but to the many Precedents already offered in behalf of the Pannel; for it's hoped it must be admitted, even by my Lord Advocate himself, and is indeed so admitted by him, that the Pannel was once in the lawful Execution of his Duty, and was obliged at all Hazards to support the Execution of that Criminal who was committed to his Guard; surely then, the Execution of the Pannel's Duty can never be said to have been at an end, until once the Criminal was fully executed to Death, and as such ordered to be cut down by lawful Authority; unless it shall be said that it was the Pannels Duty, the Moment the Convict was hung up, to let him instantaneously be cut down, rescued by the Mob, and brought to Life again; which seems to have been their plain Intention: For it seems to be confessed upon all Hands that there was danger of a Rescue, which seems to have been the occasion of all this extraordinary Apparatus; and for preventing of which 'tis admitted, that the whole Guard was sent out with their Pieces loaded, and even with Orders to fire at all Ventures in Case of such Rescue. Was it not then a necessary part of the Pannel's Duty to protect and support the Execution of the Convict, when hanging by the Neck in the Air, until such time as he was cut down by lawful Authority, as supposed fully dead? And 'tis certain that in answer to the Pannel's Message, Orders were brought brought from the Bailiffs that he should yet hang a quarter of an Hour, which surely it was the Pannel's Duty to see obeyed, and which Orders of the Bailiffs the Mob nevertheless did resist, and cut down the Criminal long before that time was elapsed, and which the Pannel was in duty bound to oppose; and from this Contrast, it is offered to be proved, all the Violence in the Mob proceeded: But can it be with any Justice affirmed, but that the Pannel was in the Execution of his Duty, while he and his Guard were standing upon the Spot under Arms? Is not every Person in the Execution of his Duty while he is either going to, or coming from any lawful Expedition? and therefore it seems impossible to maintain, but that the Pannel, and the Detachment under his Command, were in the lawful Execution of their Duty, until they had once returned, and were dispersed and dismissed from Duty, at which time only they were reduced under a private Capacity.

And even the Protection of the Hangman, who had actually received several Wounds and Contusions, and was in danger of being tore to Pieces by the Mob, was a part of the Pannel's Duty: For tho' he is a Minister of the Law, somewhat odious; yet he is a necessary One for the Society, and lies under a greater Necessity of being protected, from his being so obnoxious to the Resentment of the Mob; and at least in Humanity, must have such Protection afforded him, as to defend him from having his Brains knocked out.

How then can it be said, in any Sense, that the Pannel was in such Situation, that he could only plead the Benefite of Self-defence? It is a known Rule in Self-defence, that a Person invaded must retire as far as he can with Safety: But if that is the Case of a City Guard (maintained at great Expence) that so soon as they are invaded, they must immediately betake themselves to their Heels, it will be apparent, that they are but kept up for very useless Purposes.

At the same time the Pannel can with great Candor aver, That he is far from being of that Disposition of Mind, as to be ready to take the Advantage, which the Law might afford, against an unruly giddy Mob; whereof he has given Proof upon many former Occasions, as must be allowed him; and whereof even the present Case will be an Instance in his Favours, if he meets with Justice from the Evidence: But with all, he must be allowed to observe, that it would be a dangerous Position, That a Guard kept up for the Maintenance of the Peace of the capital City of this part of the Nation, when they are assembled together upon Duty, should be allowed to plead no higher Privilege, than that of Self-defence in the strictest Sense.

And whereas my Lord Advocate seems only to admitt, That a Person who has Weapons put in his Hands by lawful Authority, for the Defence of the Property of the Crown, or Liberty of the Subject, may only use these Weapons when he is in imminent Danger of having the Execution of his Trust defeated by Violence: If such is the Case, the Execution of Duty will become a very ticklish Point; and 'tis apprehended, that few Folk will be fond of it, if they can possibly live without it; and of Consequence, such Doctrine must very much discourage any Persons from offering their Service, either to the Crown or Commonwealth.

And as the Supreme Executive Power is by the Constitution vested in His Sacred Majesty, our Sovereign; therefore my Lord Advocat, who, by his Office, is of Council for His Majesty in all Causes, will, no doubt, have due Consideration, how far an Argument is to be pressed against the Pannel; which by plain Consequence, must tend to weaken, if not defeat, the Execution of the Laws.

One would rather be inclined to think, That where a Person has the Trust of the Execution of the Laws committed to him, the smallest Resistance to this Trustee, as such, is a guilty Aggression, and that every Opposition of such Aggression is lawful Defence; because no Man must be above the Laws; and the Life of the Laws, in which the common Good is employed, is of greater Value than the Lives of any One or Number of the Individuals, and so ought to be defended at all Perils.

His Majesty's Advocat upon this Head, in his Information against the Pannel, does assume this Fact, That the Mob or Multitude assembled at the Execution, were behaving themselves peaceably; and from this seems to draw his Inferences against the Pannel, which indeed will run high enough. The Pannel very well knows, that no Order whatever will justify the Person executing that Order, if such Order appears evidently to be unlawful; and yet in Cases which appear doubtful, an Order from a Superiour will have it's own Weight; more especially in military Matters, or such other Things as resemble them.

But with Submission, This Reasoning upon the Mobs being supposed quite peaceable and innocent, is entirely out of the Case; for, as we are now upon Relevancy, the Facts must be supposed, and then the Argument considered in that View: And as the Pannel does aver, That he and his Guard, while in the Execution of their Duty, did meet with strong Resistance from the Mob, in so much that many of the Men were greatly hurt and bruised: And if that was the Case, it was an unlawful Invasion of Persons, to whom the Execution of the Laws were committed; and so might be by them, in support of those Laws, resented to a pretty great Length; except it shall be maintained, that in the Situation of the Pannel and his Men were posted, they could plead no higher Priviledge than that of Self-defence; which, with great Respect, cannot be maintained, but rather seems to be a Contradiction; because they had not only their own Defence to take care of, but also the Defence of the Peace and Quiet of this City, and of the Execution of the Laws, and that due Obedience was given to them.

In a Word, upon this Head, the Pannel's Argument is not only supported from the Nature of the Thing, because a Man who fights with the Laws upon his side, fights with great Advantage against those who are fighting against the Laws; and for that reason, if a Man were to fight a Duel, the Laws would be the best Second; but also, 'tis believed, that no Instance can be given in this Country, or in any other of civilized Policy and Government, where a Person, proceeding to what Extremities whatever against Persons who had assailed him, while in the due Execution Execution of the Law, ever suffered the Pains lybelled.

My Lord Advocat seems to insinuate, as if the Reading of the Riot-act, had been a Duty incumbent upon the Pannel, whereby the Innocent Part of the Multitude would have had time to have taken care of their own Safety: But then his Lordship will be pleased to consider, that no Person is by Law authorized to proclaim that Act, other than a Justice of Peace, Sheriff, Mayor, Bailiff, or other Head Officer; and no Person, under any of these Characters, was left with the Unfortunate Pannel; but he was abandoned and left to grapple with Occurrences in the best Manner his own Discretion could suggest to him.

But then the Reading of that Act could not answer the present Exigency: For tho' the Reading of that Law may perhaps sometimes answer the End for which it was intended, namely, The preventing the Demolition of any House or Meeting-house; but if the Pannel in the present Case, should be supposed bound to have kept his Hands across for the Space of one Hour, after the Reading of this Act; then it is certain that the Mob might have prevented the Execution of the Law in far less Space. And it is certain, that by the Act, the Mob is not put in Contempt, or exposed to the Penalties of it, until once they continue together one Hour after the Reading thereof.

His Majesty's Advocate is also pleased to hint, as if the offering of this Plea in Behalf of the Pannel, founded upon the Resistance of the Mob, was in some sort inconsistent with another to be hereafter mentioned for him, viz. his Innocence of the Facts: But, no doubt, my Lord very well knows, that by the Laws of Scotland there is no Inconsistency in such different Pleas. And this leads to the Consideration of the Exculpation offered for the Pannel, arising from his Innocence of the Guilt, either of the Action, Command, or Order charged against him in the Indictment.

And in the first Place, as to such Part of the Indictment as charges him with either having fired himself, or having given Orders to fire, whereby Charles Husband was killed. Though it is indeed true, that it is impossible, from the Nature of the Thing, for the Pannel to prove an absolute Negative; because, as His Majesty's Advocate very justly argues, if the Charge in the Lybel is proven, to witt, That the Pannel either did fire, or gave Orders to fire, at this Time himself, no negative Evidence can prevail against it; yet as to this Point, the Pannel offers to prove, what the Lawiers call a circumstantiate Negative, which in a good Measure resolves into an Affirmative, viz. That at this Time, when Charles Husband fell, and got the Wounds charged in the Indictment, whereof it's supposed, he died, the Pannel as has been above recited, was in the following Situation; that is to say, he was pointing his Piece with his Face towards the West Port, threatening the Mob, that if they would not keep off, he would fire; and that immediately, upon this Expresssion, a private Centinel of the Guard, came up from behind him, and discharged his Piece, by which it will be proven Charles Husband received his Death Wounds; because it shall be proven, by Persons of undoubted Veracity, that were hard by the Pannel all the Time, that they not only observed, that he did not fire his own Piece, and gave no Order for firing; joined with this other Circumstance, that no Proof will appear, during the whole Scuffle, that ever the Pannel made use of any Firelock, but his own; and that his Piece, when returned to the Guard, was found loaded, and in such Condition, that it was even confessed by the Magistrates themselves, and many others, not to have been fired; with this further Addition to exclude that further Part of the Charge in the Inditement, of the Pannels having made use at any Time of any other Piece than his own, viz. that he carried his own Piece in his Hand the whole Time, except during the Space of Prayer above-mentioned, when he gave it to his Serjant: And it shall also be proved, that there was but one Shot fired at this Time, at which Charles Husband is supposed to have received his Death Wounds. And as to the other dropping Shots that are charged in the Indictment to have followed upon this first Shot, if from the Evidence adduced, the Pannel's Proof shall appear to be most pregnant, that he gave no Orders to fire at this Time, then he is not chargeable with the Consequence of such Firings.

And this further Circumstance must strongly operate in favours of the Pannel; to witt, that at the Time of this supposed Orders to fire, the Men were not drawn up in a regular Line or Band; but were either straggling, mixt with the Mob, or in a circular Form, surrounding the Scaffold in the Grass-Market, which excludes all Possibility of any supposed general Order to fire; unless it be supposed that the Pannel was a mad Man, seeing any Compliance with such Order must have led the Men to fire each in his opposite Neighbour's Breast, and a great many into that of the Pannel.

It is not altogether impossible that the Pannel's Expresssion of the Word Fire, might have erroneously induced this Fellow that came from behind his Back (who of himself perhaps was too forward to embrace such Order, had it been given) to discharge his Piece: And if the Person firing was guilty of an Error, or of a Misconstruction of Duty, the Pannel is not chargeable therewith; seeing that every Person that has the least Knowledge of the Exercise of Arms, must know, that he is not to receive an Order to fire from Implication, but from some known certain Rule of Discipline.

And for this Reason it is, that the Pannel takes it to be a very wise Part of the military Institution, to avoid Misconstructions, That no Man receives Orders to fire (especially when he is resting or shouldering his Arms) but upon a precedent Series of Exercise attended with some Solemnity, to avoid Mistakes; greater or less indeed according to the Nature of the Occasion.

Sometimes indeed, as was observed in the Debate on the Side of his Majesty's Advocate, Persons will, very justly, fire upon so short Advertisement as the Tuck of a Drum; but 'tis believed, that is never practised, but during the Noise or Tumult of Battle; when it is supposed that the Voice of verbal Order cannot reach the Men; and then this Tuck of the Drum, or any other Signal of firing, must be previously advertised to be the Signal of such Action.

Another thing falls also to be noticed here, touching this first Charge in the Indictment, and which may be even taken thro' the whole ; That when two or more Persons are nigh together, levelling their Pieces at the same time, it is not easy for the sharpest Eye, especially if at any Distance, to determine from what Piece the Fire proceeded ; and of this Point military Men, best acquainted with the Exercise of Fire Arms, can give the best Account.

And lastly, upon this Head, the best Conjecture the Pannel can make, is this, That upon this first Fellow's firing, without either Order or Example from the Pannel his Commander, the other dropping Shots that ensued, proceeded from other rash Fellows of the Guard ; who encouraged by this first Example, directed and discharged their Pieces against such Part of the Mob, as they respectively supposed any Injury or Invasion upon them had proceeded.

The next material Circumstance, charged in the Indictment, is that, touching the Pannel's Behaviour at the West-bow ; where it is charged, That he commanded the Men to face about, and fire upon the People ; and that at or about the same time, he fired a Musket or Firelock that was in his own Hand ; having either reloaded, or caused to be reloaded, his own Piece, or taken another out of the Hand of one of the Guard ; and that upon this second Example and Command of the Pannels, several others of the Guard, under his Command, did fire ; whereby the Persons mentioned in the Indictment were killed and wounded.

As to which Part of the Charge, the Pannel offers the following Proof: And First, As to Order he shall prove by Multitudes of Persons nigh him at the time, and who were narrowly observing him (and Orders are generally given with an audible Voice) they heard no such Order given, nor heard no Expression of the Pannel, that, by the most remote Consequence, could have been interpreted an Order to fire: And here the Pannel's Memory, upon the most ferious Reflection, cannot divine what could have given Occasion to any Body's conjecturing that he gave an Order to fire at this time. And here also the former Observation falls to be noticed, touching the Solemnity of an Order for firing.

2^{do}. As to the Action of firing charged against the Pannel himself, for firing at this time ; the Pannel offers to prove the very Centinel, at least, that it was a Centinel of the Guard, who gave the first Fire at this time, which was the Shot at Robertsons Closshead. And the Pannel is informed, as has been above noticed, That at the time of taking the Precognition, an Offer was made to the Magistrates to single out the Fellow, if they would suffer the Guard to be drawn out, who fired that Shot towards Robertsons Closshead, by which the two or three People fell. And further, The Pannel offers to prove, upon this Head, not only that this Fellow was the first Person that fired, without any Order from the Pannel circumstantiated, as is above noticed, but also by many Persons of undoubted Credite, that they could not observe the Pannel fire, or discharge any Piece himself, during the whole Time that this Firing is supposed to have continued. And here the Pannel could evidently cast up many Inconsistencies to your Lordships, that must necessarily be implied, and many Presumptions that strongly exclude any supposed Order or Example of the Pannel at this Time ; but does not think it altogether so prudent to mention them at present.

As to the taking a Piece out of another Man's Hand, and firing of it, such Action was a remarkable Occurrence, and must have fallen out under Observation ; and so the Pannel can say nothing about it, but leave it to Evidence, with this only Observation, That, as it was a notable Event, it will operate almost as strong in the Negative as in the Positive. And it must be left to the Jury to balance the Evidence, if a Contrariety shall appear ; and to lean to that Side attended with the greatest Credibility, taken the known Rule of the Law into the Compass, namely, Favour to the Pannel in case of Dubiety. Only this Observation falls to be made to your Lordships, That the Circumstances of the Case call aloud for the Pannel's being allowed a Proof upon this Part of the Indictment.

The Pannel does agree with His Majesty's Advocate, That no negative Evidence can take away a positive Proof ; but the Pannel humbly thinks he has offered a pretty circumstantiate one : And as my Lord Advocate seems to admitt the Necessity of a Proof on both Sides, so the Pannel will not labour that Point with your Lordships ; not doubting but you will allow him in general, to prove what he can, to exculpate him from the Guilt laid in the Indictment ; and that your Lordships by your Interloquitor will allow him as much Scope in that Particular, as any Precedent of your Lordships Court can authorize. And there are several Instances, and one very particular one, wherein great Latitude was allowed, both as to the Circumstances precedent, concomitant, and even subsequent to the Acts charged in the Indictment.

Some general useful Reflections might be made, but this Paper is already drawn out into too great Length, and as the Pannel has learned Judges, and a discerning and candid Jury, the less needs be said ; because 'tis supposed they will naturally occur to these interested in the Trial ; and no doubt such will lay aside all Prejudices and Prepossessions ; and will never once think of, but utterly despise the Consequences of popular Rage or vulgar Clamour.

If the Pannel is guilty of the Charge in the precise Way and Manner it is laid against him in the Indictment, he is of Opinion himself he deserves to suffer : But if upon the other hand, it shall come out that he is entirely innocent of the Blood of those Men where-with he is charged ; he thinks his Case deserves singular Commiseration : Because, if Bonds and Imprisonment, Loss of Employment and Bread, Obloquy, and Reproach of Blood-guilt, and Massacre, and, of Consequence, loss of Character, be Calamities in human Life ; then has he had as great a Share of them as ever attended Innocence. Sic subscribitur.

INDICTED and ACCUSED as in the former Sederunt,

The Lords, Justice Clerk, and Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the Indictment pursued at the Instance of Duncan Forbes Esquire, his Majesty's Advocate, against John Porteous Pannel, with the foregoing Debate thereupon, FAND, That the Pannel having at any of the Times and Places libelled, fired a Gun among the People assembled at the Execution libelled, or having given Orders to the Soldiers under his Command to fire; and thereupon, they the Soldiers or any of them having accordingly fired; and upon the firing, either by himself or them, the Persons mentioned in the Indictment, or any of them, were killed or wounded, or the Pannel's being art and part of any of the forsaide Crimes; all seperatim relevant to infer the Pains of the Law: But allowed the Pannel to adduce what Evidence he could with respect to his Behaviour at the Time the forsaide Crimes are libelled to have been committed; for taking off the Circumstances which should be brought for inferring his being guilty, or art and part of the Crimes lybelled; and remitted the Pannel and the Indictment as found relevant to the Knowledge of an Affize, Sic Subscibitur

Andr. Fletcher, I. P. D.

The Lords, Justice Clerk, and Lords Commissioners of Justiciary, continued the above Diet at the Instance of his Majesty's Advocate, against Captain John Porteous, till Monday next at Seven of the Clock in the Morning; and ordains Assysers and Witnesses then to attend, under the pain of Law, and the Pannel to be carried back to Prifon.

JOHAN PORTEOUS lately one of the Captain Lieutenants of the City Guard of Edinburgh, Pannel,

VOL. VI.

INDICTED and ACCUSED as in the former Sederunts. Thereafter the Lords proceeded to make Choice of the following Persons to pass upon the Affize of the said John Porteous,

A S S I Z E,

Sir John Inglis of Cra- mond.	James Hunter , Wright there.
Alexander, Gibson of Pent- land.	William Wight , Baxter there.
George Halyburton of Fordell.	John Bell , Brewer in Edinburgh.
James Baird of Chester- hall.	James Davidson , Book-feller there.
John Hogg of Cambo.	David Inglis Merchant there.
Thomas Dundas of Le- them.	Alexander Sharp , Mer- chant there.
Alex. Brand of Brand- field.	Patrick Manderstoun , Merchant there.
John Follie , Vintner in Edinburgh.

The above Affize being all lawfully sworn, and no Objection of the Law in the Contrary;

THE Pannel John Porteous judicially confessed, That Time and Place libelled, the several Persons mentioned in the Indictment to have been killed and wounded, viz. Archibald Ballantyne, Son to John Ballantyne the younger, Dyster in Dalkeith; Margaret Arthur, alias Airth, Residenter in the Cannon-gate near the Water-gate thereof; John Anderson, Son to George Anderson in Craighead, Drover; Jean Peat, Servant to James M^r Dowal, Merchant in Edinburgh; David Wallace, Journey-man Wright in Edinburgh; James Philp, late Servant to Lauder Esq; Residenter in the Cannon-gate; David Kidd, Taylor in Edinburgh; Patrick Spaldan, Apprentice to David Mitchell, Jeweller in Edinburgh; James Lylk, and Alexander Wallace, both Servants to James Wight, Staymaker in Edinburgh; John Miller, Taylor in Edinburgh; David Ogilvie, Writer in Edinburgh; and James Nevin, late Servant to William Sellers, Writer in Edinburgh, now Residenter in the Potteraw; Alexander M^r Niel, Son to Edward M^r Niel, Indweller in Mertounball; Margaret Gordon, Servant to William Ogilvie, Taylor in Saint Mary Wynd, in Edinburgh; and Henry Grabame, Taylor in Cannon-gate; and Charles Husband, Servant to Paul Husband, Confectioner in the Abbey of Holy-rood-house; were so killed or wounded by Firing proceeding from the Party of the City Guard, then under his Command, as mentioned in the Indictment. Sic subscibitur, John Porteous.

Andr. Fletcher, I. P. D.

His Majesty's Advocate for proving his Lybel, adduced the Witnesses after deponing, viz.

JAMES DRUMMOND Merchant and Residenter in Edinburgh, aged Thirty Years or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, that Time and Place libelled, and after Andrew Wilson had hung some Time upon the Gallows, about a quarter of an Hour, as the Deponent thinks; he saw the Executioner going up the Ladder, as the Deponent apprehended, to cut him down; upon which he saw some small Stones thrown by the Mob at the Executioner;

some whereof the Deponent believes might have fallen upon the Guard : Upon which he saw the Pannel advance from the Guard West-ward, resting his Firelock upon his Thigh; as if he had been bending it, and thereafter saw him raise it to his Breast, moving it from one Point to another : And soon thereafter, the Deponent heard a Shot from the Place where the Pannel was standing, but did not observe, whether the Shot came from Captain Porteous's Firelock; and, much about the same time, observed one of the Soldiers go out of his Rank Westward, and upon the North-side, and saw him go further West than the Place where Captain Porteous was; the Side of the Window, where the Deponent was standing in Robertson's House, covered the said Soldier from the View of the Deponent, by the Time the first Shot was fired; and which Soldier had a Gun and a screwed Boyonet in his Hand, levelled with the Butt end of it at his Breast; and the Deponent did apprehend at the time that Captain Porteous had fired, because he saw him in a firing Posture, and immediately heard a Shot, and saw a Man in a few Minutes thereafter, as soon as the Mob dispersed, lying upon the Street, upon a Line, whither the Deponent saw Captain Porteous's Piece directed; and that the above-mentioned Soldier came from the Body of the Guard which was behind Captain Porteous. Causa Scientiæ patet. And this is the truth, as he shall answer to God. Sic subscribitur

J. Drummond.
Andrew Fletcher.

Sir William Forbes Advocat, aged Thirty Years or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That Time and Place libelled, and after the deceast Andrew Wilson had hung about Twenty or Twenty-five Minutes upon the Gallows, The Deponent from a Window in Orr the Stablers House, opposite but a little to the West-ward of the Gallows, saw the Executioner go up some Steps of the Ladder, as the Deponent believes, to cut down the said deceast, and saw thereupon, Stones thrown at the Executioner; upon which the Executioner immediately retired to the Guard, and the Mob continued throwing of Stones; so that the Deponent does believe some of the Stones might have touched the Guard; and about this time, the Guard were drawing together to the North and West of the Gallows, where the Captain was standing, and did soon thereafter see the Pannel, advancing Westward, fire his Gun among the People assembled at the Execution; and observed the Fire and Smoak issuing out at the Muzzle of his Piece, to the best of the Deponent's Observation; which he thought at the time very distinct, and that the said Shot was the first which the Deponent heard; and the Deponent at the Time did imagine, that the Pannel had fired his Shot high, but whether that proceeded from the Situation that his Firelock was in, or from the Appearance that the Fire and Smoak made that issued out of his Piece, the Deponent cannot now particularly charge his Memory. That thereafter the Deponent heard several dropping Shots, about Twenty, but cannot be positive as to the Number; that when the forsaide Facts happened, the Deponent was upon the South-side of the Street, and the Pannel to the North of the Middle of the Street almost opposite to the Window where the Deponent was; and when the Pannel so fired, the Deponent did not observe any Soldier so far advanced West-ward from the Body of the Guard as the Pannel was. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God. Sic subr.

William Forbes.
Andrew Fletcher.

Mr. William Fraser Son to the Lord Saltoun, aged twenty four Years or thereby, unmarried, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That he was in a Window in one Orr's House in the Grass-Mercat, the South Side of the Street, that Day that Andrew Wilson was execute; that after Wilson had hung some time on the Gallows, he saw the Executioner go up some Steps of the Ladder, as he apprehended, to cut him down; and then saw the Mob throw Stones and Dirt at him; upon which the Hangman came down, and went in amongst the Soldiers that were standing at the Foot of the Scaffold: That soon after the Hangman had come down, he saw the Pannel present and level his Gun, moving the Muzzle to and fro, and then saw him fire; and to the best of his Knowledge or Apprehension, saw the Smoak issue out of the Mouth of the Piece; that immediately thereafter within a Second or two, he heard several dropping Shots fired by the Soldiers, who were there on their Arms; that he thinks the dropping Shots he then heard came from near the Place where the Pannel was standing. And deponed, that at the Time forsaide the Pannel fired his Gun, he did not observe any of the Soldiers advance before him and present their Guns. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God. Sic. subr.

William Fraser.
Ja. Mackenzie.

Mr. William Urquhart of Meldrum, aged thirty eight Years or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, that he was present at Andrew Wilson's Execution the Time libelled, in the House of one Orr, on the South Side of the Street, in Company with Sir William Forbes and Mr. Fraser, the preceeding Witnesses; that after Wilson had hung some Time, he saw the Executioner go up some Steps of the Ladder in order to cut him down, as he apprehended, and saw the Mob throw several Stones at him; upon which he came down, therefore the Mob continued to throw Stones, some of which fell amongst the Guard; whereupon he heard several dropping Shots fired by the Soldiers; that he saw the Pannel present his Piece, immediately heard a Shot, which he apprehended was Shot by the Pannel, but did not observe it so narrowly as to see the Smoak or Fire issue out of his Piece. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God. Sic subr.

William Urquhart.
Ja. Mackenzie.

James Dewar of Vogrie, aged sixty-four Years, or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That Time and Place libelled at Andrew Wilson's Execution, he was in a Window in his own House at the Foot of the West-bow, in the East-side of the Way; that he saw the Hangman go up some Steps of the Ladder, after Wilson had hung some time; and saw the Mob throw some Stones, one of which hurt the Executioner on the Face; upon which he came down the Ladder; whereupon he saw the Pannel present his Piece and Fire, which was the first Shot he heard or saw; that when he saw the Pannel fire, his Side was to the Deponent, and that the Pannel was then standing on the East-side of the Gibbet; and that he fired his Piece to the West: And Deponed, he saw the Fire of the Powder from the Pan, and heard the Report of the Shot. Depones, That when the Pannel fired, as aforesaid, he was standing on the South-east side of the Scaffold. Deponed, That Wilson was cut down not by the Hangman, but by some that were standing at the Foot of the Gallows, and that Wilson was cut down before he heard any Shots: Deponed, That he stood at his own Window before Wilson was thrown over, and continued looking at the Place of Execution till he was cut down, and heard the Shots as before mentioned. And being interrogated what kind of Cloaths Captain Porteous had then on, declares he cannot be positive, but believes they were Red Cloaths; but is positive that he knew Captain Porteous Face when he saw him fire. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God. Sic subr.

James Dewar.
Ja. Mackenzie.

George Drummond, Esq; One of the Commisioners of the Customs, aged Years, or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That at the Time and Place libelled, the Deponent was in the House of Baillie Halyburton on the right Hand, on the North-side of the Corner of the Srait-bow, the Third-story, at the time of the Execution of Andrew Wilson, and from a Window of the said House, after the Criminal was thrown over, and had hung for fifteen or sixteen Minutes, the Executioner was about going up the Ladder; and after he went up two or three Steps, he observed several Stones thrown at him; which made him return; and while he was on the Ground, he observed his Nose bleeding; and at this time he observed one or two Persons or more standing at the Foot of the Gallows; one of whom streatching up his Arm with a Knife, he observed cut the Rope; the Executioner having mixed with the Soldiers, he did observe the throwing of Stones to continue, and some of them fell among the Soldiers. Deponed, That immediatly thereafter he observed one of the Soldiers advance a little before Mr. Porteous to the West-ward, with a Gun in his Hand, which he presented; and immediatly thereupon the Deponent heard a Shot, which he imagined to be from that Soldier, but did not observe Fire or Smoak; tho' at the Time he concluded it was from that Soldiers Gun, and is positive that that was the first Shot that was fired; and the Deponent did not think that the Stones that were thrown, did give any just Cause for the Firing. Deponed, That about the Time when he observed the Soldier present his Gun, as said is, he also observed the Pannel holding his Gun in his Hand in a Level, but is not sure of his putting the Butt of it to his Shoulder. Deponed, That after the said first Shot, within a Minute he heard another, and so it continued till about the Number of Eighteen or Twenty; and this was at the Time of the Firing observed by the Deponent; but within some Minutes thereafter, there was a second Firing, which he did hear, and upon hearing came to the Window, and observed some Lime fallen from an opposite House, which he judged to have been occasioned by the Bullets: And as to the eighteen or twenty dropping Shots, in the first Firing, were from the Soldiers immediatly behind the Pannel, betwixt whom and them, he observed no Person interposed; and he observed the Time of the first Shot the Pannel's Face was looking West-ward, as was all the Soldiers behind him, Deponed, That the Soldiers at that time, who fired, were to the Deponent's best Remembrance to the North-ward of the Scaffold; and the Pannel was then, to the best of his Remembrance, either upon a Line to the Gibbet, or a little Westward of it. Further deponed, That the Soldier who first fired, as said is, advanced from behind the Pannel, and past upon his right Hand, to the North-ward of him. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God. Sic subr. 1736.

Ge. Drummond,
Da. Arskine.

William Johnston, Druggest in Edinburgh, aged Forty Years, or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, Time and Place libelled, he the Deponent being present at the Execution of Andrew Wilson, he did observe the Pannel take a Gun out of a Soldier's Hand, at which Time he was standing 'twixt the Corn-mercate and one Tod's Shop, which is under Baillie Halyburton's House; thereupon he observed the Pannel advance some Steps Westward, and did see him present and level his Gun, that is to say, Hold it out and fire amongst the Multitude; and did observe the Smoak come out of the Gun: And deponed, That this was the first Shot he heard, which Shot immediatly followed after the Criminal was cut down by a Hand standing at the Foot of the Gibbet; and the Deponent at the Time was standing in a Window in the House of one Gairdner, Horse-Ferrier by the Muse Well; and when the Pannel was taking the Gun out of the Soldier's Hand, he appeared to be in Passion, and it was some short time before he was Master of the Gun. Deponed, That to the best of his Remembrance the Pannel was cloathed in red, but he being well acquainted with the Pannel's Face, he is positive, that he was the Person that took the Gun and fired as aforesaid. And Deponed, That he believes there was about thirty Yards Distance betwixt the Window where the Deponent was, and the Pannel, at the first firing. Causa Scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God. Sic subr.

Wm. Johnston,
Da. Erskine.

Mark Sprot, Skinner, and one of the Constables of Edinburgh, aged twenty-eight Years, or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That Time and Place libelled, as he stood on William Orr Stablers Window, South-

South-side of the Grass-mercate, he saw Wilson the Criminal cut down from the Gibbet; upon which Occasion he did not observe that there was any greater Disturbance than usual at Executions: That a very little while after the Criminal was so cut down, he observed the Pannel advance before the Soldier, and upon the North-side of the Scaffold over-against the Gibbet, he saw him fire his Piece towards the West, and the Smoak issue out of the Mouth of his Gun; this he says was the first Shot that was fired; but immediately, upon the back of that, a tall Man with his own Hair, about the third behind the Pannel, as he thinks, fired off his Piece likewise towards the West, but up in the Air over the Heads of the Multitude: That very soon after several other dropping Shots followed after, which when the People fell back and opened, he observed a young Man lying upon the Ground as dead, directly opposite to the Place where the Pannel fired. Causa Scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God. Sic sub^r.

George Campbell, Wright in Edinburgh, aged Twenty eight Years, or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That Time and Place libelled, the Deponent stood in the Window of Mr. Carmichael's House, in the South-side of the Grass-mercate, directly opposite to the Gibbet; That a very little after Wilson was cut down, he observed the Pannel with four or five of his Men about him, and that as he pointed his Piece to and fro towards the Multitude, he observed him receive a Stroak by a Stone thrown from behind the Scaffold, off which it rebounded and struck him; upon which he immediatly fired his Piece; but whether this was the first Shot or not, the Deponent cannot tell for there was three or four fired much about the same time; but that the Pannel fired, he is sure, for he saw Fire and Smoak issue from his Piece. That upon these Shots already mentioned, he saw a Man fall down upon his Back on the Street: That after this he saw the Pannel raise his Muffket, and put his Hand to his Cartrage Box, as if he intended to load again; but does not know what followed upon this, because he immediatly lost Sight of him. Deponed, That when the Pannel fired his Piece as above, he was standing towards the South-east Corner of the Scaffold, and pointed his Piece towards the South-west: That the Pannel's Fire with the Shots that went off at the same Time, were the first that were made on that Occasion. Causa Scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God. Sic sub^r.

George Campbell.
Gilb. Eliot.

James Bald, Merchant in Edinburgh, aged Thirty two Years, or thereby, Widower, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That Time and Place libelled, the Deponent stood in the same Window with the immediate preceeding Witnes, or at least in a Window in the same Room: That a little after Wilson was cut down from the Gibbet, he saw the Pannel advance a little Westward from the Corn-mercate, towards the South-side of the Gibbet, and fire off his Piece West-ward, toward the Muse Well: That at this Time he saw none of the Soldiers near him, nor observed any other fire but his; and before there was any more firing, when the Multitude fell back, he saw a Man lying dead, towards the Place that the Pannel pointed his Piece; that he is sure the Captain fired, since he saw the Fire and Smoak issue from his Piece. Causa Scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God. Sic sub^r.

Andrew Daw, Servant to James Montgomery, Brewar in Potteraw, aged Twenty-two Years, or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That Time and Place libelled, the Deponent was standing at the foot of Robertson the Stabler's Clofs, when Wilson was cut down from the Gibbet; immediately after which, the Pannel, who was standing in the middle of the Street, between the Deponent and the Corn-mercat, fired his Piece toward the Place, where the Deponent was standing; upon which a Baxter in the Abbey, called Charles Husband, dropt just by the Deponent; and his the Deponent's Coat was torne in the Shoulder with the same Shot; that he heard the Report of the Captain's Piece, tho' he neither saw the Fire nor the Smoak, yet he is sure the Pannel fired, because he saw no other Piece presented at the same time: That the Pannel when he fired as above, was as near to the Deponent, as the End of the Table where he now stands, is to the West-end of this Room. Deponed, That the Shot mentioned to be made by the Pannel, was the first he heard that Day. Deponed, That during the whole time of the Execution he never came nearer the Scaffold than Robertson's Clofs-foot (by Robertson's Clofs-foot is meant the end nearest the Grass-mercat). Causa Scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he should answer to God, and declaired he cannot write. Sic sub^r.

Walter Sheargold Indweller in Edinburgh, aged Twenty eight Years, or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That he was present the Time and Place libelled; and after the Criminal Wilson was cut down, he saw Captain Porteous fire his Gun, holding the same streight out at the Multitude; and that the Deponent was then within three Yeards of the Captain, when he saw him fire, and that after he had fired, he heard him call, Fire; then heard some Shots, but does not know from what Hands they came, for he immediatly retired to the Lawn-mercate. Deponed, That when the Pannel fired, his left Hand was towards the Scaffold, and he fired towards the West-port. Deponed, That the Scaffold was nearer to the West-port than the Pannel was when he fired, that is, the Pannel was nearer to the Corn-mercate: Deponed, That this Shot by the Pannel, was the first that he heard at that time, and that he was present all the time of the Execution; that he was so near as to see the Fire and the Colfine fly out of the Pannel's Gun, Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he should answer to God. Sic subscribitur

John Ritchie Servant to Mr. Archibald Murray, Advocate, aged Seventeen Years, or thereby, unmarried, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That the Time and Place libelled, the Deponent was present at the Execution of Andrew Wilson; and after the Criminal was cut down, he saw and heard about Three Shots fired; and then he heard a Fourth Shot, which was by Captain Porteous; and that he saw a Man fall down, but the Deponent imagined it was from the Pressure of the Croud, that there was very short time betwixt the Shots, but that which was by Captain Porteous was the last in order. That after the Criminal was cut down, the Guard drew towards the North-side of the Scaffold, that the Deponent was standing within Two or Three Yards of the Foot of Robertson's Clofs, when he saw and heard the firing: Deponed, he heard the Pannel mention the Word, Fire, before the firing, deponed, That the Pannel was, to the best of the Deponent's Remembrance, standing as far West as the Gallows; but he cannot be very positive; the Mob and Crowd was such, that he could not very distinctly discern: Deponed, That the Shots mentioned by the Deponent, first Three, and then a Fourth, was the first he heard that time. Causa Scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he should answer to God. Sic sub.

James Neilson Gardiner in the Bull Clofs of Edinburgh, aged Thirty one Years or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, Time and Place libelled, the Deponent being standing within the Foot of a Turnpike near the Muse Well, saw the Pannel who was then standing upon the North-side of the Scaffold, a little to the East-ward, where the Gallows was; and saw the Pannel advance West-ward, towards the Multitude, with his Firelock in his Hand, moving it to and again, as if he had been beating back the People; and at the Third or Fourth Motion, saw the Pannel fire the Piece that was in his Hand upon the Multitude, pointing it Westward, and saw the Smoak issue out at the Muzzle of the said Piece. That this was the first Shot which the Deponent heard, which was soon followed by others; for the Deponent observed the Pannel after he had fired his Piece retire some Yards to the Soldiers, and saw Five or Six of these Soldiers advance and fire upon the Multitude; and soon thereafter when the Multitude were beat off, the Deponent saw a Boy with black Hair lying within ten Yards of the Turnpike where the Deponent was standing, and saw Four other Persons lying at different Places upon the Street; and saw the first mentioned Boy bleeding at the Ear. Causa Scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he should answer to God. Sic subscribitur

James Maxwell, Servant to Colin Alison, Wright in Edinburgh, aged thirty-two Years, or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, purged of partial Council, examined and interrogated, deponed, That the Time and Place libelled, after Wilson was cutt down and put in his Coffine, there was some Stones thrown by the Mob amongst the Guard; upon which he heard the Pannel to order the Soldiers to turn in; and immediatly heard him give the Soldiers Orders to fire, and be damn'd; and then saw him advance two or three Paces, and saw his Gun cocked, and his Thumb upon the Doghead, and saw him fire the Gun; and immediatly before he heard any other Shot, he saw a Boy fall near a Coppersmith's Shop, to the North-west of the Place, from which the Pannel fired his Gun. There were six or seven more Shot after the Orders were given; and then he saw three Men and a Woman fall, one of which had a Wound in his Forehead, and another in the Side of his Head: That after the Soldiers fired as aforesaid, he heard the Pannel say to one of the Soldiers, That if he did not fire, he would take his Piece from him. Deponed, That he the Deponent was then standing on the South-side of the Scaffold, helping to pull it down, when he heard and saw what is above deponed upon; and that the Pannel was upon the North-side of the Scaffold, about ten Yards from it, over-against the Middle of the Scaffold: And deponed, That the Pannel's Shot at that Time was the first he heard then shot. Deponed, That he was present at the Time from Wilson's coming down to his Execution, till after he was cutt down and carried away; during which Time he heard no Shot fired, until that fired by the Pannel. Causa Scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he should answer to God. Tic subscribitur.

Archibald Yetts, Litster in the Abbey of Holyrood-house, aged forty-eight Years, or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That the Time and Place libelled, a little after Wilson was cutt down from the Gallows, he saw the Pannel fire his Piece among the Multitude; and immediatly heard him say to his Men, Level your Pieces, and fire and be damn'd! Whereupon there were a great many Shots fired by them, and saw the Pannel take a Gun from one of the Men, which he the Pannel fired. Deponed, That he the Deponent was within six Yards of the Pannel when he fired, and spoke the Words before-mentioned. Deponed, That at the Time when the Pannel took the Gun from the Soldier, he laid his own upon the Scaffold, and that there were some Persons, but very few, then standing upon the Scaffold. Deponed, That betwixt the Time that the Pannel fired his own Piece, and his taking the Gun from the Soldier, as aforesaid, it might be about eight or nine Minutes: And deponed, That at the time he fired the second Gun, there were several other Guns fired at the same time. Depones, That there was no Shot fired before the first fired by the Pannel; and that the second Shot fired by the Pannel was near the same Place where he fired the first; and that he had not moved above six or seven Yards betwixt the first firing and the second; and that some of the Soldiers followed the Pannel in that Space, and returned with him again again to the Place where he fired first. Causa Scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he shall answer to God. Sic sub.

G George Smeiton, Writer in Edinburgh, aged thirty Years, or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That Time and Place libelled, he was present at the Execution of Wilson: That when the Executioner was doing his Duty, he saw Captain Porteous come off the Scaffold, because the Mob was crowding upon the Guard; and while the Pannel was endeavouring to keep off the Mob, he saw a Man with a Silk Napkine about his Neck, press upon the Pannel, and seem to endeavour to gressp at; but that a young Gentleman there, in green Cloaths, kept him off; and then the Pannel returned to the Scaffold; but about the time the Criminal was cutting down, or to be cut down, the Pannel went off the Scaffold again; and about that Time there was Stones thrown by the Mob at the Hangman, and the Guard; and some of them fell amongst the Guard: That so far as the Deponent could observe, being upon a Bartizine, upon the South-side of the Scaffold, five Story high, the Stones seemed to be pretty large, but the Deponent cannot tell the Dementions; and then he soon observed a Shot, which was the first that he observed, and came from one of the Soldiers; and this Shot was after the Criminal was cut down; and after this Shot, in a very little followed three or four other Shots; and at this Time the Pannel had his Piece presented towards the Multitude; and that he saw the Flash of the Pan of the Soldier's Gun that fired the first Shot. Deponed, That the Pannel was pretty near the Soldier that fired the first Gun. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he should answer to God. Sic sub.

Thomas Harton, Doctor in the Regiment of Welsh Fuzieleers, in the Cannongate, aged thirty nine Years, or thereby, unmarried, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, Time and Place libelled, he was present at the Execution of Wilson, when he saw several Stones thrown by the Mob at the Guard, of such Bigness, that was sufficient to have killed them, in case they had hitt them in a proper Place; which continued some little Time. Deponed, That while the Criminal was hanging upon the Gallows, the Deponent saw a Man press towards the Pannel; and being come near him, he held up his Hand to him, in a threatning Manner; but the Deponent did not hear what Words he uttered. Deponed, That when the Pannel was upon the Scaffold, he had no Gun in his Hand; but when he came off again, he took a Gun from a Soldier. Deponed, That when the Pannel came off the Scaffold, he went about to the West-side, and turned about towards the North, endeavouring to get his Men together, which he could not weel do, they being so much intersperfed with the Mob; and they continuing still to throw the Stones, the Pannel turned about with his Face towards the West; and having his Fuzie in such a Manner in his Hand, as if he had not designed to fire, but waving it from Side to Side, rather seeming to intimidate them: And at this Time there was a Soldier came upon his Right Hand, and fire close by the Pannel; and this was the first Shot the Deponent observed: And deponed, That he had his Eyes strictly upon the Pannel all this Time. Deponed, He did not see the Pannel fire; and he is very well assured, that he did not fire at that Time. Deponed, That this Shot was immediatly after the Criminal was cut down. Deponed, That after this, the Pannel endeavoured to carry off his Men. Deponed, That the Soldier that came up by the Pannel's Right-side, came up from behind him. Causa scientiæ patet. John Clark, Serjeant in the Regiment of Welsh Fuzieleers, aged Thirty-three Years, or thereby, unmarried, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That the Time libelled, the Deponent was sent by the Captain who commanded the Detachment of the King's Forces in the Lawn-mercate to the Place of Execution, to get Orders from the Magistrates or the Pannel; and having gone up to the Scaffold, and while the Deponent was conversing with the Pannel, he saw a Stone thrown at the Executioner, which cut him in the Nose so that he bled ; and about the same time there was a Stone, about the Bigness of the Deponent's two Fists, hit the Calf of the Deponent's Leg ; upon which the Deponent with the Pannel came down from the Scaffold, and thereafter saw the Pannel moving his Fuzie in order to keep off the Crowd, who had by that time pressed upon the Guard, and drove them about four or five Yards from the Place where they were posted at first ; and thereafter the Deponent saw Captain Porteous endeavouring to keep off the Mob with his Fuzie, weaving it to and again, telling them to keep off, or he would fire, but that there was no Fire at that time : And the Deponent then walking towards the West-bow, saw four or five of the Soldiers presenting their Pieces, and saw one of them advance to the Right where the Deponent was standing, and fire upon the Crowd ; which was the first Shot the Deponent heard ; at which time the Deponent saw the Pannel upon his Left Hand, about seven Yards from him ; and then the Deponent saw two other of the Soldiers come up betwixt the Pannel and the Deponent, and fire in the Air ; and thereafter heard four or five more Shots, which the Deponent thinks was fired betwixt the Place where the Deponent was standing and the Pannel ; and the Deponent during that time had his Eye fixt upon those who fired, and did not observe Captain Porteous fire or give Orders to fire ; and upon the first Shot as aforesaid, the Deponent observed a Man drop at the Entry of Robinson's Clofs. Causa scientiæ patet. James Armour, Writer to the Signet, aged Fifty Years and upwards, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That he was looking over a Window, to see the Execution of Andrew Wilson; after the Criminal was thrown over, and cut down, he observed the Croud of People throwing Stones of considerable bigness, but against whom they were directed, he knew not, but they fell among the Soldiers; upon which he heard Two or Three Shots, but from whose Hands he did not observe: Thereupon there was an Intermission for Two or Three Minutes; but thereafter, when the Pannel with his Party were retiring, which they did in great Confusion and Disorder, the Croud pursued after them, renewed the throwing of great Stones, and in great Number; upon which, some of the Soldiers turned about, and marched back, some Eight or Ten Paces, still in disorder; and then heard a good Number of more Shots fired, which to his Grief he saw did great Execution. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he should answer to God. Sic sub.

John Robertson, Stabler in the Grass-mercato of Edinburgh, aged Thirty Years, or thereby, married, solemnly sworn, purged of Malice, partial Council, examined and interrogated, Deponed, That at the Time libelled, as he stood in his own Window, in the Grass-mercato, he saw the Pannel with his Piece in his Hand, moving it to and again, keeping off the Mob; and heard him say, Fire, or I will fire, does not know which of the Two: That immediatly after this, he saw a single Man step out, three or four Paces before Captain Porteous, and fire his Piece; and the Deponent verily believed, that the People who fell near his Closs, got their Wounds by that Shot; because they were lying that Place towards which the Man seem to point. Deponed, That he heard some firing towards the Foot of the Bow, before the last mentioned Shot. Causa scientiæ patet. And this is the Truth as he should answer to God. Sic sub.

JOHAN PORTEOUS lately one of the Captain Lieutenants of the City Guard, Pannel, INDICTED and ACCUSED as in the former Sederunts.

The Persons who past upon the Assize of the said John Porteous, returned their Verdict in Presence of the saids Lords; Whereof the Tenor follows.

Edinburgh, July, 20th, 1736.

The above Assize having inclosed, did choice Sir John Inglis of Cramond, to be their Chancellor; and James Davidson Bookseller in Edinburgh, to be their Clerk: And having considered the Indictment at the Instance of Duncan Forbes of Collodden, Esq; his Majesty's Advocat for his Highness Interest, against John Porteous, late one of the Captain Lieutenants of the City Guard of Edinburgh, Pannel; with the Lord Justice Clerk, and Lord Commissioners of Justiciary, their Interloquitor thereupon; and Depositions of the Witnesses adduced for proving thereof; the Pannels own judicial Confession, and Depositions of the Witnesses adduced for the said John Porteous Pannel; his Exculpation. They all in one voice fand it proven, That the said John Porteous Pannel, fired a Gun among the People, assembled, at the Place of Execution, and time libelled. As also, That he gave Orders to the Soldiers under his Command, to fire; and upon his and their so firing, the Persons mentioned in the Indictment were killed and wounded. And fand it proven, That the Pannel and his Guard were attacked and beat by several Stones of a considerable bigness, thrown amongst them by the Multitude; whereby several of the Soldiers were bruised and wounded. In Witness whereof our said Chancellor and Clerk, in our Name, have subscribed their Presents, Day, and Place for said. Sic subr.

THE Lord Justice Clerk and Lord Commissioners of Justiciary, having considered the Verdict of Assize returned against John Porteous Pannel of this Date, They in respect thereof, by the Mouth of John Dalgleish Dempster of Court, DECERNED and ADJUDGED the said John Porteous, To be taken from the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, upon Wednesday the Eighth Day of September next to come, to the Grass-mercate of Edinburgh, the common Place of Execution of the said Burgh, betwixt the Hours of Two and Four of the Clock of the Afternoon of the said Day, and there to be hanged by the Neck upon a Gibbet, by the Hands of the Executioner, until he be dead; and ordained all his Moveable Goods and Gear to be Escheat and Inbrought to His Majesty's Use, which was pronounced for Doom. Sic subr.

The Prisoner being thus ordered for Execution, presented the following Petition to her Majesty,

To Her Most Excellent MAJESTY,

QUEEN CAROLINE,
GUARDIAN of these REALMS;

The most humble PETITION of JOHN PORTEOUS late Captain-Lieutenant of the City-Guard of Edinburgh; now under Sentence of Death:

SHEWETH,

THAT a certain Person named Andrew Wilson, being convicted in the High Court of Justiciary of Scotland, for a Robbery of the Publick Money, committed on the High-Way, was sentenced to Death for that Offence; and it being apprehended, the Populace would rescue the said Offender, or commit some Outrage at his Execution, your Petitioner was appointed by the Magistrates of the said City, to attend such Execution with a Detachment of the City-Guard, with-with Orders to see the same duly executed, and to suppress any Tumults that might happen upon that Occasion: And, for that End, the said Detachment had Powder and Ball delivered to them out of the City Magazine.

That, while the said Offender was hanging upon the Gibbet, the Populace began to insist to have his Body cut down, before the Magistrates had given Orders for that Purpose; and your Petitioner having no Authority to consent thereto, without such Orders, they threatened to cut him down by Force; and, in order so to do, crowded in great Numbers upon your Petitioner and his Men, and did actually assault them with large Stones, by which several of the Detachment were hurt and wounded.

That, during this Tumult, divers of the said Detachment, without Order from your Petitioner, unfortunately fired upon the Multitude, whereby several Persons were killed, and others wounded.

That your Petitioner, after having used his utmost Endeavours to restrain such Firing by his Men, perceiving them to run into Confusion, and to act without Orders, drew them off as fast as possible to the Guard; and committed such as he suspected to have fired, to the Custody of the Guard, together with their Pieces, which he ordered to be kept for Inspection, in the same Condition as they were then in.

That your Petitioner being accused of having himself fired upon the Multitude on this Occasion, and also of having ordered the Detachment to fire, without any just or reasonable Cause, your Petitioner was put upon his Trial in the High Court of Justiciary aforesaid, for the said supposed Offence, and the Jury empannell'd to try your Petitioner, by their Verdict, found, That it was proved, that your Petitioner had fired a Gun, and also had given Orders to the Detachment and Guard under his Command, to fire upon the Multitude so assembled; from which firing, either of your Petitioner, or of the Detachment of Guard under his Command, by his Order, the several Persons specified in the Indictment against him, were respectively killed and wounded. And also found it proved, That the Mob assembled at the Execution aforesaid, did invade and attack your Petitioner, and the Detachment of Guard under his Command, with Stones, of a considerable Bigness, whereby several of the Men of the Guard were bruised and wounded.

Upon which Verdict returned by the Jury, the Court decerned and adjudged your Petitioner to be hanged upon a Gibbet, upon the Eighth Day of September next.

That tho' your Petitioner is sensible of that Deference and Respect that's due to the Verdict of a British Jury, yet he humbly begs leave to represent to your most excellent Majesty, the following Circumstances as they appeared upon his Trial; to wit, That the Evidence against your Petitioner, as to his having fired, or given Orders to fire, was very contradictory and inconsistent; for tho' some of the Witnesses deposed, that your Petitioner fired the first Shot, yet they differed extremely as to your Petitioner's Situation, at the time he is alledged to have so fired, as well as in other Circumstances; some placing him at one Corner, and others at a quite opposite Corner of the Scaffold: Some alledging, that none of the Soldiers were then near your Petitioner, and that no other Shots were fired at that time; while others describe your Petitioner as encompassed with Soldiers, and say, that several Shots were fired instantly upon your Petitioner's firing such first Shot; and some agree, that the first Shot was not fired by your Petitioner, but by a Centinel of the Guard, who was close by your Petitioner.

Whereas, a great many Persons, of undoubted Credit and Veracity, produced on the Part of your Petitioner, expressly swore, That, during the whole time of the Firing, (which continued about four or five Minutes) they took exact Notice of your Petitioner's Behaviour and Conduct, and could not observe that he fired at all; but that, upon the Mob's pressing severely upon your Petitioner and his Men, and pelting them with large Stones, your Petitioner called aloud to keep off, otherwise he would fire; and that upon your Petitioner's pointing his Piece, in order to intimidate the Mob, a Centinel of the Guard, (unknown to the Witnesses) advanced from behind your Petitioner, and fired the first Shot, upon which one of the Multitude fell to the Ground: From which Example, they supposed, several others fired; by means whereof, the several Persons in the Indictment mentioned, were either killed or wounded.

And as a farther Circumstance, to shew that your Petitioner did not fire, it was proved, that upon his Return from the Execution, your Petitioner went directly of his own Accord to the Magistrates, who examined his Piece, and found the same loaded, and in such Condition, that they agreed and were satisfied, it had not been fired; and the Sergeant of the Detachment attested, that your Petitioner having delivered his Piece to the Deponent to keep, while your Petitioner attended the Devotions at the Execution, the Deponent restored the same again to your Petitioner, just before your Petitioner descended from the Scaffold, which is a strong Circumstance to shew that your Petitioner must have fired his own Piece, if he had fired at all.

Your Petitioner also begs leave humbly to observe, that when a Band of armed Men are together, and some of them fire, it is very difficult, especially for those at a Distance, to discriminate the Persons that actually fired; and your Petitioner is in Charity led to believe, that the Circumstance of your Petitioner's levelling his Piece, and threatening to fire, attended with that of the Centinel's having fired just behind your Petitioner, may have induced some unwary Persons, in the heat of popular Fury and Repentment, to be too positive in the Assertion of Facts, in their nature dubious and uncertain.

And as to your Petitioner's having given Orders to the Men to fire, though two or three Persons gave Evidence against your Petitioner as to that Fact, yet neither did they agree touching the Place where your Petitioner was standing, nor in the Form of Words pretended to be used by your Petitioner in the giving thereof. Whereas it was deposed by a great Number, particularly of the Soldiers, who were close by your Petitioner during the whole Time of the Fray, that they could not observe that your Petitioner gave any such Orders; but on the contrary, that he called aloud to the Men, Don't fire, and that he push'd back the Man that fired the first Shot into his his Rank, (which shews that your Petitioner did not approve thereof;) that he drew off the Men as fast as he could; and that being pursued and pelted by the Populace, divers in the Rear turned about and fired, when your Petitioner was at such Distance, that he could not possibly be privy or consenting thereto.

It was likewise observed at the Trial, and not contradicted, That upon many former Occasions of Tumults, when your Petitioner with the Guard hath been ordered to quell the same, your Petitioner had bore great Insults from the Populace, even to the Danger of his Life, without firing, or ordering his Men to fire, and that in Cafes where he would have been well justified by the Law in doing either.

So that upon the whole, as your Petitioner hath the inward Satisfaction of being conscious to himself of his Innocence of the Facts charged against him, so he humbly apprehends, that the Evidence adduced to prove the same, when compared with your Petitioner's Defence, will not appear to be certain or conclusive.

But in case your Petitioner had been guilty either of firing, or ordering his Men to fire, upon the Occasion aforesaid, your Petitioner most humbly intreats your Majesty to consider, that your Petitioner was in the Exercise of a Trust delegated to him by the lawful civil Authority; that he and his Detachment were first unlawfully assaulted and invaded by the Populace, and divers of his Men bruised and hurt; and if, in the Case of such an Insult upon the Laws, your Petitioner had proceeded to repel Force by Force, your Petitioner humbly begs leave to observe, That tho' he should look back with the utmost Sorrow upon so fatal an Event, yet he humbly hopes, that the Provocation and Aggression aforesaid, would be considered by your most excellent Majesty, in your profound Wisdom, as a great Extenuation of an Offence, which could not be supposed to be attended with any prepense Malice of your Petitioner, against Persons of whom he had no Knowledge; and that your Petitioner would be deemed a proper Object of the Royal Clemency.

Your Petitioner therefore most humbly prays your most excellent Majesty, to take your Petitioner's unfortunate Case into your Royal Consideration; and to extend that Mercy and Compassion to your Petitioner, by which your Majesty, adorned with all Excellent and Princely Qualities, is so remarkably distinguished; and that your Majesty will be graciously pleased to issue your Royal Warrant for your Petitioner's Pardon. And your Petitioner, whose Duty hath hitherto rendered him, on all Occasions, most zealously attached to his Majesty, and our happy Constitution, will, from the additional Bond of the most powerful Gratitude, devote that Life to the Service of His most excellent Majesty, and His Illustrious House, which he shall enjoy as the Fruit of Your Majesty's Clemency and Grace.

Her Majesty was pleased so far to comply with this Petition, as to grant a Reprieve, which was signified as follows.

Directed on the Back thus,

To the Right Hon. the Lord Justice General, Justice Clerk, and other Lords of the Justiciary at Edinburgh.

HEREAFTER, the said Lords, gave their Warrant to the Magistrats of Edinburgh, for stopping the said Execution, whereof the Tenor follows. By the Right Honourable the Lord Justice Clerk, the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary: WHEREAS Her Majesty Guardian of the Kingdome, has been graciously pleased by a Letter signed by his Grace the Duke of Newcastle, one of His Majesties principal Secretaries of State, to signifie Her Pleasure to us, That the Sentence of Death pronounced against John Porteous, late Captain Lieutennant of the City Guard of Edinburgh, present Prisoner in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh, which was to have been execute upon him, upon the eight Day of September Instant, be respited for six Weeks from the Time appointed for his Execution. THESE THEREFORE, In Obedience to Her Majesties Commands, discharge and prohibite the Magistrats of Edinburgh, and all other Officers of the Law, from putting the forsaid Sentence of Death in Execution, upon the said John Porteous, till the Twentieth of October next to come; on which Day, the said Magistrats of Edinburgh, are hereby required and ordained to put the former Sentence of Death in Execution, upon the said John Porteous EXTRACTED furth of the Books of Adjournal, upon this, and the preceeding One hundred and twenty-four Pages. By me John Davidson, Clerk to the Court of Justiciary.

Jo. Davidson, Clerk.

But the Populace being greatly displeas'd with this Favour shewn to Captain Porteous, against whom they were mightily incens'd, audaciously took upon them to execute the Sentence themselves. Accordingly on Tuesday, September the 7th, about Ten o'Clock at Night, (being the Night preceeding the Day, which had been appointed by the Court for his Execution,) some Men by Surprize, entered the City, seized all the Fire-arms; Battle-axes, and the Drums belonging to the City Guard. The Mob in a few Minutes lock'd and secur'd all the City Gates, and with Drums beat an Alarm, then attempted to force open with Hammers and other Instruments the Prison Door; but these failing, they set fire to it, and burnt it. When they entered the Prison, they called upon the Under-Keeper who was within, and made him open the double Locks of the Apartment where Captain Porteous was; it had also a Bolt within, but was not bolted, so they had ready Access. He beg'd they would spare him till next Afternoon; but they refus'd his Request, and immediately hurried him away, which was about Eleven o'Clock. When brought out of Prison, he was heard to cry. They then marched out with lighted Torches before them: In their Way to the Grass-market, passing by a Barber's Sign-post, some called out to hang him up there; but it was resolv'd to hang him where the Murder was committed; so they proceeded to the Place that the Gallows used to be fixed for Execution, where he was about a Quarter of an Hour, till they opened a Shop and brought out a Rope, one End of which they threw over a Sign-post, about 20 Foot high, belonging to a Dyer in the High-street, near the ordinary Place of Execution. He desired some Time to prepare for Death; but they answered, They would allow him no more than those who were shot. They then pulled him up in the Dress in which they found him, viz. a Night-Gown and Cap. He having his Hands loos'd, fixed them 'twixt his Neck and the Rope, where-upon one with a Battle-ax struck towards his Hands. They then let him down, and having on two Shirts, they wrap'd one of them about his Face, and tied his Arms with his Night-Gown; then pulled him up again, where he hung next Morning till Day-light. When he was cut down, and carried to the Grey-Friers Church, upon inspecting his Body, it appeared his Left Shoulder was wounded, his Back discoloured, and his Neck broke.

It was observ'd, that this Mob was under a stricter Concert and better conducted than usual; for as marching along to the Execution, Porteous observing a Gentleman of his Acquaintance, he gave him a Purse of 23 Guineas, which he desir'd might be delivered to his Brother. They left the Prison Doors open, and Liberty to the Prisoners to make their Escape; and after the Execution was over, they left the Arms and Drums on the Place of Execution, where they were found the next Morning. During the Tumult, Parties of armed Men, with Drums, patrolled in the different Streets, to prevent any Surprize from the King's Forces, quarter'd in the Suburbs. After the Execution was over, they went to the Lord Provost's House, and told him, they were satisfi'd, and so dismiss'd, without offering any other Violence.

There is one further Circumstance, That in order to supply the Want of Clergymen, they order'd two of the gravest of their Number to exhort him, as he went to the Place of Execution.

CXCVII. The Trials of Samuel Goodere, Esq; Matthew Mahony, and Charles White, for the Murder of Sir John Dineley Goodere, B^t. (Brother to the said Samuel Goodere) on Board his Majesty's Ship the Ruby: At the Sessions of Peace, Oyer and Terminer, and General Goal-Delivery, held in and for the City of BRISTOL, and County of the same City, in the Guild-hall of the said City; before the Right Worshipful Henry Combe, Esq; Mayor of the said City, Michael Foster, Esq; Serjeant at Law, Recorder; and others his Majesty's Justices of Goal-Delivery. Begun on Tuesday, the 17th of March 1740. and continued by Adjournment to Thursday, the 26th of the same Month, 1741. Published with the Approbation of Mr. RECORDER.

ON Wednesday, the 18th of March, 1740; a Bill of Indictment was found by the Grand Inquest for the City of Bristol, and County of the same City, against Matthew Mahony and Samuel Goodere, for the Murder of Sir John Dineley Goodere; when Dr. Middleton (Mr. Goodere's Physician) acquainted the Court, That, in his Opinion, Mr. Goodere was, through bodily Indisposition, unable to undergo the Fatigue of his Trial. But being ask'd by Mr. Vernon (of Counsel for the King) whether the Prisoner's Health would not permit him to be brought into Court and plead to his Indictment; and the Doctor declaring his Opinion, that he might be brought up, Mr. Recorder was pleas'd to order, that he should be brought up the next Day, in order to plead to his Indictment. Accordingly, on Thursday the 19th, Mr. Goodere and Matthew Mahony were brought to the Bar; when the Court proceeded thus:

Clerk of the Arraigns. Matthew Mahony, hold up thy Hand; Samuel Goodere, hold up thy Hand; (which they severally did.) You stand indicted by the Names of Matthew Mahony, late of the Parish of St. Stephen in the City of Bristol, and County of the same City, Labourer; and Samuel Goodere, late of the same Parish, City and County, Esq; for that you, not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, on the 19th Day of January, in the 14th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Second, by the Grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, and so forth; with Force and Arms, at the Parish aforesaid, in the City aforesaid, and County of the same City, in and upon one Sir John Dineley Goodere, in the Peace of God, and of our said Sovereign Lord the King, then and there being, feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice aforethought, did make an Assault; and that you, the aforesaid Matthew Mahony, a certain Cord, of the Value of one Penny, about the Neck of the said Sir John Dineley Goodere then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of thy Malice aforethought, did put and fasten; and that you the aforesaid Matthew Mahony, with the Cord aforesaid, (by you, the aforesaid Matthew Mahony, so about the Neck of the aforesaid Sir John Dineley Goodere put and fastened) then and there him the aforesaid Sir John Dineley Goodere feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice aforethought, did choak and strangle; of which said Choaking and Strangling of him the aforesaid Sir John Dineley Goodere, by you the aforesaid Matthew Mahony in manner and form aforesaid done and perpetrated, he the aforesaid Sir John Dineley Goodere then and there instantly died: And that you, the aforesaid Samuel Goodere, then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of thy Malice aforethought, was present, aiding, abetting, comforting, and maintaining the aforesaid Matthew Mahony in manner and form aforesaid, feloniously, voluntarily, and of his Malice aforethought the aforesaid Sir John Dineley Goodere to kill and murder; and so you the said Matthew Mahony, and Samuel Goodere, in manner and form aforesaid, the aforesaid Sir John Dineley Goodere then and there, feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice aforethought did kill and murder, against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity.

Clerk of the Arraigns. How sayest thou, Matthew Mahony, art thou guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof thou standest indicted, or not guilty?

Mahony. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

Mahony. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Cl. of Arr. How sayest thou, Samuel Goodere, art thou guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof thou standest indicted, or not guilty?

Samuel Goodere. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried ?

Samuel Goodere. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God fend thee a good Deliverance.

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Recorder, I attend as Counsel for the King on this melancholy Occasion, and it is with no small Regret and Concern I at any time act in this Station against my Fellow-Creatures, when under Circumstances like those of the Prisoners at the Bar ; and the rather, as knowing it almost impossible so to act, in a Business of this nature, as not to be thought on the one side to have done too much, and on the other too little : However, Sir, I shall, in the Course of this Prosecution, endeavour to observe that Mediocrity which is ever inseparable from humane Minds ; and if I can be so fortunate as to conduct myself to the Satisfaction of you, Mr. Recorder, and the Court, I shall readily give up the rest, and content myself with the Thoughts of having aimed at a just Discharge of my Duty.

Sir, the Prisoners, Mr. Goodere and Mabony have thought proper to plead in chief to their Indictment, and put themselves upon their Trial in the ordinary Course of Law ; and as far as may be judged from outward Appearance, Mr. Goodere seems able enough at present to take his Trial on the Merits or Demerits of his Case : And if so, we for the King are ready, on our Parts, to enter upon our Duty. On the other hand, if, in the Opinion of that learned Gentleman [Dr. Middleton] Mr. Goodere is not in a fit Condition (through bodily Weakness or Indisposition) to be brought upon his Trial, God forbid we should be for pressing it on with such Celerity, as to prejudice him in making of his Defence. But then, as we would not be for accelerating his Trial, so neither would we be for giving into any affected Delay. I therefore hope, Sir, such a Day will be fix'd for the coming on of this Business, as that the Sea-faring part of our Witnesses, whom at present publick Justice calls for abroad as well as at home, may be dispatched at due time for the other necessary Service of their King and Country.

Mr. Recorder. I think we ought to proceed to the Trial immediately, unless Cause be shewn to the contrary.

Mr. Frederick, Counsel for Mr. Goodere. I appeal, Sir, to the Doctor, whether Mr. Goodere's Case and Circumstances will at present admit of it.

Mr. Recorder. Let Dr. Middleton be sworn.

Dr. Middleton sworn.

Mr. Vernon. Dr. Middleton, I think, Sir, you have attended Mr. Goodere (the Prisoner at the Bar) during the Course of his Illness, will you please therefore to give the Court an Account of his present State of Health ?

Dr. Middleton. Mr. Goodere has been my Patient for some time in a malignant Fever, which left him last Sunday Evening, and since that time he has been growing better, and on the mending hand ; in his Fever his Head was very much disordered (as at present happens to be the Case of many that are seized with this Epidemical Fever, the Head being generally much affected in most of them) I think he will not be able to bear the Fatigue of his Trial at present. If he is put upon his Trial, it will be an hardship.

Mr. Recorder. If the Case be so, that his Head is disordered, whereby he is render'd less capable of making his Defence, I think it would be a Piece of Inhumanity not to put off his Trial. What if we adjourn it to this Day seven-night ?

Mr. Vernon. I am heartily glad to find Mr. Goodere is on the mending hand, and hope he will continue to mend ; his Counsel seems to think he may now come upon his Trial ; yet, for the honour of Dr. Middleton, I would not press it on at this Juncture.

Mr. Recorder. What doth Mr. Goodere himself say to it ?

Samuel Goodere. I hope in eight or nine Days to be better, or dead.

Mr. Recorder. I have propos'd this Day seven-Night.

Samuel Goodere. Whatever you please I submit to.

Mr. Vernon. Dr. Middleton, Sir, as you are known to be a Gentleman of great Honour and Abilities, we may safely depend upon your Account ; therefore I should be glad to know how soon (humanly speaking) Mr. Goodere's bodily Health may admit of his taking his Trial. I know, Sir, you are a Gentleman that has a great Regard and Care for your Patients.

Dr. Middleton. I should rather choose to exceed in Care than fall short of it.

Mr. Vernon. But 'tis possible to have an over-care : Therefore, Sir, I would ask you, whether, upon your Oath, you do not think he will be able, in point of Health, to take his Trial in three or four Days ?

Dr. Middleton. The Captain may put himself on his Trial now, if he pleases ; but I don't think he's fit for it, upon my Oath. If it was left to me, I should desire the whole Time the Recorder has mentioned.

Mr. Frederick. That is to this Day seven-night, we shall not be able to attend the Court sooner. We hope the Trial will be put off till this Day seven-night ?

Mr. Recorder. Let it be so.

Cl. of Arr. Matthew Mabony, you stand charged likewise upon the Coroner's Inquest for the same Felony and Murder, art thou guilty, or not guilty ?

Matthew Mabony. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Samuel Goodere, you likewise stand charged upon the Coroner's Inquest for the same Felony and Murder ; art thou guilty, or not guilty ?

Samuel Goodere. Not guilty.

Mr. Recorder. The Prisoners may withdraw.

On Thursday, the 26th of March 1741, the Court met according to Adjournment ; and, being open'd, the Prisoners Matthew Mabony and Samuel Goodere, were brought again to the Bar ; and the Court proceeded as follows :

Mr. Shephard, Counsel } Mr. Recorder, the for the Prisoner Goodere. } Prisoner Goodere has in a great degree lost his Hearing, therefore desires that he may be brought nearer the Witnesses, that he may be able to hear what they say.

Mr. Recorder. Let him come nearer. Mabony, are you willing to come forward to the Bar ?

Mabony. Yes, my Lord, I am hard of hearing.

Mr. Shephard. He desires the same Indulgence.

Mr. Recorder. If he desires it, let him come forward too.

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Recorder, by this Indulgence being moved for on the behalf of Mahony as well as Mr. Goodere, I presume these Gentlemen attend as Counsel for them both, if Matter of Law should arise.

Mr. Frederick. No, Sir, I do not.

Mr. Shepherd. No, Sir, I do not.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make a Proclamation for Silence.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez; The King's Majesty's Justices strictly charge and command all Manner of Persons to keep silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Cl. of Arr. You Matthew Mahony and Samuel Goodere, now Prisoners at the Bar, these Men which you shall hear called, and will personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your several Lives and Deaths; if you, or either of you, will challenge them, or any of them, you must speak unto them as they come to the Book to be sworn, before they be sworn. Cryer, make an Oyez, and call the petty Jury.

Cryer. Oyez; You good Men that are impannelled to try between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Prisoners at the Bar, answer to your Names, and save you Fines.

Mr. Recorder. Prisoners, you have each of you the Liberty of challenging twenty of the Jurors, without shewing Cause: But you must now declare whether you will challenge severally or not; for if you do not join in your Challenges, we must try you severally.

Mahony. I leave it to the Captain to challenge.

Cl. of Arr. Christopher Bromadge.

Cryer. He appears.

Cl. of Arr. Mr. Bromadge, to the Book.

Cryer. Christopher Bromadge, look upon the Prisoners; you Prisoners, look upon the Juror; you shall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make, between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Prisoners at the Bar, whom you shall have in Charge, and a true Verdict give, according to your Evidence: So help you GOD.

And the same Oath was administered to the rest, (which were sworn) and their Names are as follow:

- Christopher Bromadge*, - - - - - sworn.
- Isaac Brodrigg*, - - - - - sworn.
- John Merewether*, - - - - - sworn.
- Christopher Lilly*, - - - - - sworn.
- James Wimble*, - - - - - sworn.
- Joseph Gregory*, - - - - - sworn.
- John Scott*, - - - - - sworn.
- Isaac Bannister*, - - - - - sworn.
- William England*, Capt. Goodere, I challenge him.
- Francis Billow*, Capt. Goodere, I challenge him.
- William Jones*, - - - - - sworn.
- Samuel Page*, - - - - - sworn.
- John Perks*, - - - - - sworn.
- William Dyer*, - - - - - sworn.

Clerk of Arr. Cryer, count these.

- Christopher Bromadge*, John Scott,
- Isaac Brodrigg*, Isaac Bannister,
- John Merewether*, William Jones,
- Christopher Lilly*, Samuel Page,
- James Wimble*, John Perks,
- Joseph Gregory*, William Dyer.

Cryer. Twelve good Men, and true. Gentlemen, are ye all sworn?

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez; If any one can inform the King's Majesty's Justices, the King's Serjeants, the King's Attorney or Advocate, before this Inquest be taken between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Prisoners at the Bar, of any Treason, Murder, Felony, or other Misdemeanour, committed or done by the Prisoners at the Bar, or either of them, come forth, and you shall be heard, for the Prisoners stand at the Bar upon their Deliverance; and all Persons bound by Recognizance to prosecute them, or either of them, come forth, and prosecute, or you will forfeit your Recognizances.

Cl. of Arr. Matthew Mahony, hold up thy Hand; Samuel Goodere, hold up thy Hand. Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoners, and hearken to their Charge; they stand indicted by the Names of Matthew Mahony, late of the Parish of St. Stephen in the City of Bristol, and County of the same City, Labourer; and Samuel Goodere, late of the same Parish, City and County, Esq; for that they not having, (as in the Indictment before set forth.) Upon this Indictment they have been lately arraigned, and thereupon have severally pleaded not guilty; and for their Trials have put themselves upon God and the Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is, to inquire whether they, or either of them, be guilty of the Felony and Murder in manner and form as they stand indicted, or not guilty. If you find them, or either of them, guilty, you shall inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements they, or either of them had, at the time of the Felony committed, or at any time since: If you find them, or either of them, not guilty, you shall inquire whether they, or either of them fled for the same: If you find that they, or either of them did fly for the same, you shall inquire of their, or either of their Goods, and Chattels, as if you had found them or either of them guilty: If you find them, or either of them not guilty, and that they or either of them did not fly for the same, say so, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Vernon. May it please you, Mr. Recorder, and you Gentlemen that are sworn on this Jury, I am Counsel for the King against the Prisoners at the Bar, who stand indicted for the Murder of Sir John Dineley Goodere; they stand also charged on the Coroner's Inquest with the same Murder: And tho' it is impossible for human Nature not to feel some Emotions of Tenderness at so affecting a Sight as now presents itself at the Bar; yet, Gentlemen, should the Guilt of this black and frightful Murder be fixed upon the Prisoners (as from my Instructions I fear it will) Pity must then give way to Horror and Astonishment at the Baseness and Barbarity of the Fact and Circumstances; and our Sorrow ought to be, that through the Lenity of the Laws, the Unnatural Author and Contriver of so shocking a piece of Cruelty, and this his Brutal Accomplice in the Ruffianly Execution of it, should be to share the common Fate of Ordinary Malefactors. Gentlemen, you perceive it is laid in the Indictment that the Prisoner Mahony strangled the Deceased, and that the Prisoner Goodere was present, aiding and abetting him in that barbarous Action, and so involved in the same Guilt, and equally a Principal in the Murder: But, Gentlemen, Mr. Recorder, I believe, will tell you, that the only Matter for your Inquiry will be, Whether the Prisoners were concurring in the Murder of the Deceased, and present at the Strangling of him; for if so, whether Mabony, Mr. Goodere, or another in fact strangled him; it will in consideration of Law be the same thing, and the Act of Strangling will be as much imputable to each of them, as if they had both assisted in putting the Cord about the Neck of the Deceased, and been his actual Executioners; nor will it be material whether they strangled him with a Rope, a Handkerchief, or their Hands, so the kind of Death be proved. And, Gentlemen, as to the Crime set forth in the Indictment, I have Matter; in my Brief, for a very heavy Charge against both the Prisoners, but distinguished against the Prisoner Mr. Goodere with this black Characteristick, that he was Brother of the Deceased, and, as such, bound by the Ties of Blood and Nature, to have preserved his Person from Violence; and yet, Gentlemen, I am afraid it will appear, that his Brother died by his Procurement, and in his Presence, which is the same, in effect, as if he had perished by his Hand. But as it would ill become me to aggravate in a Case of this nature, I shall only state to you the most material Passages relating to the Murder of that unfortunate Gentleman, and leave the rest to come from the Mouths of the Witnesses themselves. And, Gentlemen, (as I am instructed) there had been a long and very unhapy Difference between the deceased Sir John and his Brother the Prisoner, owing to various Occasions; and amongst others, to Sir John's having cut off the Entail of a large Estate in Worcestershire, to which Mr. Goodere (as the next Remainder-man) would have otherwise stood intituled, in default of Issue of Sir John. Gentlemen, this Misunderstanding by degrees grew to an inveterate Grudge and Hatred on the part of Mr. Goodere; which was so rooted in his Heart, that it at length worked him into a formed Design of destroying his Brother, and making away with him at all hazards and events. The great Difficulty was, how to get Sir John into his Power, for he generally travelled armed; nor was it easy to get together a Sett of Fellows, so base and desperate, as to join with him in the carrying off his Brother. But, unfortunately for the Deceased, the Prisoner, Mr. Goodere, having been lately honoured by his Majesty with the Command of the Ruby Man of War, happened, in January last, to lie stationed in King-road, (as much within the County of Bristol, as the Guild-hall where this Court is sitting.) Sir John (who was advanced in years, and very ailing) had, it seems, been advised to come to Bath for the Recovery of his Health: And having occasion to transact Affairs of Consequence at Bristol with Mr. Jarrit Smith, Mr. Goodere took this Opportunity of laying a Snare for his Brother's Life, as you will find by the Event. He applies to Mr. Smith, and taking notice to him of the Misunderstanding between himself and his Brother, pretends a sincere Desire of Reconciliation, and desires Mr. Smith, if possible, to make up the Breach between them; and Mr. Smith promised to do his utmost towards effecting a Reconciliation, and was as good as his Word; for, by his Interest and Persuasions, he at length prevailed upon Sir John to see and be reconciled to his Brother. And Sir John having appointed Tuesday the 13th of January last in the Morning for calling on Mr. Smith at his House in Colledge-green, Mr. Smith soon made his Brother, Mr. Goodere, acquainted therewith; and no sooner was he informed of it, but he begun to take his Measures for the executing his wicked Scheme against his Brother's Life. For on Monday (the Day before Sir John was to be at Mr. Smith's) Mr. Goodere, with the other Prisoner Mabony, (his inseparable Agent and Companion in every Stage of this fatal Business) went together to the White Hart; an Ale-house near the foot of the Colledge-green, in the View of, and almost opposite to Mr. Smith's, in order to see if it was a fit Place for their desperate Purpose: and finding it to be so, Mr. Goodere commended the Pleasantness of the Closet over the Porch, and said he would come and breakfast there the next Day. And accordingly the next Morning (which was Tuesday the 13th) Mr. Goodere, with his Friend Mabony, and a Gang of Fellows belonging to the Privateer called the Vernon, whom they had hired to assist them in the way-laying and seizing of Sir John, (but whom, one would have thought, the Name of that gallant Admiral should have inspired with nobler Sentiments) came to the White Hart, where having ordered they should have what they would call for, he went himself to breakfast in the Closet over the Porch, from whence he had a full View of Mr. Smith's House, whilst the others posted themselves below on the Look-out for Sir John; and it was not long before he came on horseback to Mr. Smith's: But his Stay was very short, being obliged to go to Bath; however, he promised Mr. Smith to be in Bristol again by the Sunday following. He was seen from the White Hart by Mr. Goodere and his Spies upon the Watch; but having a Servant, and riding with Pistols, they did not think proper to attempt the seizing of him then; but, as he rode down the Hill by St. Augustine's Back, Mr. Goodere called out to Mabony in these Words, Look at him well, Mahony, and watch him, but don't touch him now. And in fact, Gentlemen, the Prisoners and their Companions followed and watched Sir John a considerable way. Afterwards Mr. Smith acquainted the Prisoner Mr. Goodere, that his Brother was to be with him on the Sunday following; and little thinking that an Interview between Brothers could be of a fatal Tendency, advised him to be in the way, that he might bring them together: Which Advice the Prisoner observed with but too great Punctuality, taking care, in the Interim, to lay such a Train, as that it should be hardly possible for his Brother to escape falling into his Hands. He ordered the Man of War's Barge to be sent up for him on the Sunday, accordingly it came up about 2 or 3 that Afternoon; of which Mr. Goodere being informed by one Williams, a Midshipman, whom he had ordered up in it, he enquired of Williams, if he knew the River, and Brick-kilns going down it? And Williams telling him he did, Mr. Goodere ordered him to get all the Boat's Crew together, and be sure to place the Barge at the Brick-kilns, and leave but two or three Hands to look after the Barge, and bring all the rest of the Men to the White Hart Ale-house, and wait for him there, for he had a Certain Person coming on board. Accordingly, Gentlemen, Williams and most most of the Barge-men came to the Place of Rendezvous at the White Hart, where Mahony, with several of the Privateer's Men (I believe, all, or most of the same Gang that had been there on the Watch the Tuesday before) were also met by Mr. Goodere's Orders to way-lay and seize Sir John, and stood at the Window on the Look-out, in order to watch his coming out of Mr. Smith's. Thus, the Ambuscade being laid, the Prisoner Mr. Goodere goes to Mr. Smith's about three in the Afternoon, (the Hour at which Sir John had appointed to be there;) he went directly towards his Brother Sir John, and kissed him, (what kind of Kiss it was, will best appear by the Sequel) and observed to him with an outward Shew of Satisfaction, that he looked in better Health than he had formerly done. Mr. Smith was so good to drink Friendship and Reconciliation between the two Brothers: Mr. Goodere pledged it in a Glass of Wine, which he drank to his Brother Sir John; and Sir John (being under a Regimen) offered to pledge him in Water, little thinking his Brother designed to end their Differences, by putting an End to his Life. But that, Gentlemen, you'll soon see was the sole End he had in view; for Sir John in about half an Hour taking his Leave, Mr. Goodere was following him, Mr. Smith stopt Mr. Goodere, saying, I think, I have done great things for you. Says Mr. Goodere, By God this won't do; and immediately followed his Brother: And meeting some of the Sailors whom he had posted at the White Hart, says to them, Is he ready? and being answered, Yes, he bid them make haste. Mahony, and the other Fellows who were on the Look-out at the White Hart, seeing Sir John go down St. Augustine's Back, immediately rush'd out, and (as they had been ordered by Mr. Goodere) seiz'd Sir John as their Prisoner. Just then Mr. Goodere himself was come up, and had joined his Companions, and shewed himself their Ring-leader: For (according to my Instructions) he gave them positive Orders to carry Sir John on board the Barge, and they but too exactly observed the Word of Command. They hurried on Sir John with the utmost Violence and Precipitation, forcing him along, and even striking him in the Presence of his Brother, and (as the Romans used to do their Malefactors) dragged him through the publick Way. The poor unfortunate Creature made repeated Outcries of Murder, that he was ruined and undone, for his Brother was going to take away his Life. He made what Resistance he could, and called aloud for Help, but all was to no purpose. Several Persons indeed followed them, and asked what was the matter? but they were answered by Mr. Goodere and his Associates, that the Person they were haling along was a Murderer, had killed a Man, and was going to be tried for his Life. The most of this Ruffianly Crew being armed (it seems) with Bludgeons and Truncheons, obliged the People who came about to keep off; holding up their Sticks at them, and threatening to knock them down. Gentlemen, when they had thus forced Sir John towards the End of the Rope-walk, Mr. Goodere (who all along bore them Company, and animated them as they passed along) bid them make more Dispatch, and mend their Pace. Accordingly they took up Sir John, and carried him by main Force a considerable way, then set him down again, and pushed and halled him along; till they had got him to the Slip, (opposite to the King's Head.) Sir John cried out, Save me, save me, for they are going to murder me. There the Barge came up, and the Prisoner Mr. Goodere had his Brother forced on board, and with Mahony and the rest went also into the Barge. Sir John then called out, For God's sake run to Mr. Smith, and tell him, I am going to be murdered, or I am an undone Man. And crying out that his Name was Dineley, Mr. Goodere stopt his Mouth with his Hand, to prevent his telling his other Name: And though Sir John was in an ill State of Health, yet his hard-hearted Brother forcibly took his Cloak from off his Back, and put it upon himself: And having thus got him into his Power, he ordered the Men to row off, telling his Brother, that now he had got him into his Custody, he would take care of him, and prevent his making away with his Estate. But, Gentlemen, in fact, so little did he think himself concerned in what Sir John did with the Estate, that he was of Opinion, no Act of Sir John's could affect it longer than his Life; and that it must necessarily devolve to him (as the next in Remainder) on his Brother's dying without Issue. And this, Gentlemen, he declared to Mr. Smith but a few Days before. And indeed his Brother at once saw what kind of Prevention it was he meant; I know, says he to Mr. Goodere, (soon after his being forced into the Barge) you intend to murder me this Night; and therefore you may as well do it now, as carry me down. Poor Gentleman, his Heart misgave him, that the Design of this base and daring Outrage was to make the Ship his Prison, one of his Cabbins his Slaughter-house, and the Sea his Grave, and therefore he made it his Choice to be thrown overboard in the River (where his Body might be found) rather than buried in the Ocean. The Prisoner Goodere denied, indeed, he had any such Design, but yet could not refrain from the usual Exhortation to dying Persons, that HE WOULD HAVE HIM MAKE HIS PEACE WITH GOD. At the Redcliff the Privateer's Men were set on shore; and, I think, about Seven in the Evening the Barge reached the Ruby Man of War, then in King-road. Mr. Goodere had, in their Passage, talked of bleeding and purging his Brother to bring him to his Senses, pretending he was a Madman; for he knew very well that very few of his own Men would have assisted him in such an Enterprize, had they not been under a Belief that his Brother was really mad. And to keep up such a Notion, as soon as he had got him on board the Ruby, he hurry'd him down what, I think, they call the Gangway, into the Purser's Cabin, making an Apology, that he had brought a mad Fellow there; then ordered two Bolts to be clapt on the Cabin-door, for the making his Prison more secure; which was accordingly done. And now having made his Brother a Prisoner, his next Step was to destroy him. He took Mahony with him into his own Cabin, and there the cruel Means of murdering his Brother were concerted between them. They agreed to strangle him; and engaged one White (who is hereafter to stand to the Justice of his Country) to assist them in the Butchery. I should have told you, Gentlemen, that it is usual in Ships of War to place a Centinel over Persons under Arrest; and accordingly one was placed by Mr. Goodere's Order with a drawn Cut-las in his Hand at the Door of the Cabbin where Sir John was confin'd. This Centinel, about twelve at Night, was relieved by one Buchannan. It was impossible for the Prisoners to put their wicked Design in Execution whilst this Buchannan remained at the Cabbin Door; so, to remove that Obstacle, Mr. Goodere, (after having been in close Conference with Mabony and White) comes down to the Purser's Cabbin, takes the Cutlas from Buchannan, and orders him on Deck, posting himself at the Door of the Purser's Cabbin, with the drawn Cutlas in his Hand. I shall open none of the Circumstances disclosed by Mabony in his Confession, as being no Evidence against Mr. Goodere, but it will be made appear to you in Proof, that Mabony and White came to the Purser's Cabbin whilst Mr. Goodere stood posted at the Door of it; that they were let into the Purser's Cabbin by Mr. Goodere himself. Mabony in particular was seen by one Macguinefs (who kept watch in the Gun-Room) to go into the Purser's Cabbin, Mr. Goodere at the same time standing Centinel at the Door of it, and waving his Cutlas at Macguinefs, to make him keep back. He did so; but Mr. Goodere waved the Cutlas at him a second time, and bid him keep back. Then, Gentlemen, it was that Mr. Goodere and his two Accomplices effected the cruel Murder of his unfortunate Brother. Mabony was heard to bid him not stir for his Life; and then in conjunction with White, whilst Mr. Goodere stood watch for them at the Cabbin Door (which Mr. Recorder will tell you was the same as being actually within it) fell on this unhappy Gentleman, as he lay in the Cabbin: And one of them having half throttled him with his Hands, they put a Rope about his Neck, and at length strangled him. Great were his Agonies, and long and painful the Conflict betwixt Life and Death. He struggled violently, and kicked against the Cabbin, crying out several times very loud, Murder! must I die! help, for God's sake; save my Life, here are twenty Guineas, take it: For he well knew they were strangling him by his Brother's Order, and therefore offered them a Bribe to spare his Life, but the Ruffians were relentless and inexorable. The Ship's Cooper (one Jones) and his Wife lying in the adjoining Cabbin, heard his dying Out-cries, and the Noise occasioned by his kicking; his Cries too were heard by others far beyond the Cabbin-Door. Nature at length gave way, and he expired under these Cruelties. Then Mabony called for a Light, that they might all have the Evidence of their Eye-sight that Sir John was actually dead; and (which is a shocking Circumstance in the Case) Mr. Goodere himself handed them in the Candle on that Occasion. Buchannan perceiving the Light disappear, was coming to him with another; but Mr. Goodere waved his Cutlas at him to stand off. Such, Gentlemen, was the fatal Conclusion of this tragical Business. What was seen by the Cooper and his Wife after the Candle's being handed in, with regard to rifling the Deceased, I choose should come from their own Mouths. The Murder being thus effected, Mr. Goodere locked the Door, and withdrew to his own Cabbin; Mabony and White were, by his Order, put aboard the Yawl, and sent to Bristol. They did not fly the City, Gentlemen, depending that their Fellow-Murderer would some-how smother this Deed of Darkness, and take care of their Security for the sake of his own: But Divine Providence ordered otherwise.

The honest Cooper, though he durst not give the Alarm whilst the Murder was committing, for fear of sharing the same Fate with Sir John, yet, as soon as he could with Safety, made a Discovery of the whole that he had heard and seen. 'Twas concluded Mr. Goodere had made away with his Brother; which too evidently appeared on the Cooper's forcing open the Purser's Cabbin-Door, where Sir John lay murdered, and thereupon the Cooper had the Resolution to seize the Murderer, who remained on board (though his Captain.) He pretended Innocence; and when brought by Warrant before Mr. Mayor and other of the City Magistrates, publickly declared he did not then know that his Brother was murdered, and went so far as to deny his having had any Hand in either the seizing, detaining, or murdering him. But, Gentlemen, if my Instructions don't mislead me, we shall fix the thing at least as strongly upon Mr. Goodere as Mabony, and more strongly upon them both than I am willing to open it. We shall therefore call our Witnesses, and, upon the whole of the Evidence on both sides, appeal to your Judgments, and to your Consciences, whether both the Prisoners, by the Parts they bore in this horrid Action, have not forfeited their Lives to the Justice of their Country as Accomplices in Guilt, and Principals in the Murder of the unfortunate Sir John Dineley Goodere.

Mr. Shephard. Mr. Recorder, I beg leave, before the Witnesses are examined, to say, that there are a great many Circumstances in the Case laid before this Court, and I don't know how material it may be for the Witnesses to withdraw, and not be in the hearing of each other during the time of Examination; I submit it to you, as it is usually done in Cases of this nature, whether it ought not to be done in this Case, where it appears from the Gentleman's own Opening, there are Variety of Circumstances. I doubt not, Sir, but that you will see equal Justice done between the King and Prisoner.

Mr. Recorder. It cannot be insisted on as a Matter of Right that the Witnesses be examined apart; but it is generally so ordered, if it is desired. I hope, Sir, you will observe too, that the Prisoner hath no Right to be heard by Counsel, unless in Matters of Law. If any such Matter arise, I shall be ready to hear you.

Mr. Vernon. If Mr. Shephard moves this as a Matter of Right, I would just remind him of what Lord Chief Justice Treby says in Peter Cook's Trial, that it is not of Necessity that the Witnesses should be examined apart at the Instance of the Prisoner, though an Indulgence generally granted. Sir, the Crown, perhaps, has a Right to such Examination, but not the Prisoner. We have a great Number of Witnesses, all of whom attend here on the publick Service, (and some of them Persons of Figure;) and it would, I doubt, be casting a sort of Blemish on their Credit to examine them apart. Could that Gentleman shew the least Glimmering of Suspicion as to the Fairness of our Witnesses, they ought in Justice to withdraw; but as they are free from the least Imputation in that respect, I see not why they should be incommoded, and hope he will not contend for it.

Mr. Shephard. I own it is not of Necessity that the Witnesses be examined apart in favour of the Prisoners, nor do I intend to throw any Imputation on the Witnesses; but by Mr. Vernon's Opening, some of them appear to be Witnesses nesses who were concerned in taking away the deceased Gentleman to the Ship, and all these, I suppose, are intended to be called as Witnesses. I own it is a Matter of Indulgence, and I dare say, Sir, that you will indulge a Prisoner, in these unfortunate Circumstances, the Benefit of making the best Defence he can.

Mr. Recorder. Let the Witnesses withdraw. Officers, clear the Way.

Mr. Vernon. We hope, Sir, it is not intended that all our Witnesses in general should withdraw without Distinction.

Mr. Farrit Smith, (Solicitor for the Prosecution.) We desire there may be a Room for our Witnesses, where they shall be together, or I may lose half my Witnesses. I am myself a Witness, Mr. Recorder, must I withdraw?

Mr. Recorder. No, you shall not go out.— Who do you call first, Mr. Vernon?

Mr. Vernon. Cryer, call Thomas Chamberlayn Esq; (Mr. Chamberlayn sworn.) I think, Sir, you have been for some time acquainted with Mr. Goodere, the unhappy Gentleman at the Bar.

Mr. Chamberlayn. A late Acquaintance.

Mr. Vernon. Pray, Sir, will you give an Account to Mr. Recorder and the Jury, whether Mr. Goodere, at any time, and when, desired your Interposition with Mr. Farrit Smith to bring about a Reconciliation between him and his Brother Sir John Dineley Goodere?

Mr. Chamberlayn. Yes, Sir, he did. The Captain applied to me to go to Mr. Smith to interpose for him with Sir John; and I did apply.

Mr. Vernon. Pray, Sir, how long was it before this unhappy Affair happened?

Mr. Chamberlayn. About three Weeks, I believe.

Mr. Vernon. And did Mr. Smith undertake that good-natur'd Office?

Mr. Chamberlayn. Mr. Smith said, he should be ready to do it, and promised me to do all he could in the Affair.

Mr. Vernon. When you applied to Mr. Smith, was you alone, or was Mr. Goodere with you?

Mr. Chamberlayn. I went first alone; afterwards Capt. Goodere went with me to Mr. Smith's House.

Mr. Vernon. What was the Occasion of your going to Mr. Smith's?

Mr. Chamberlayn. To intreat him to use his good Officers to get a Reconciliation between Sir John and the Captain.

Mr. Vernon. Be pleased, Sir, to tell us what passed on that Occasion, and whether Mr. Goodere acquainted Mr. Smith with the Nature of the Misunderstanding between him and his Brother.

Mr. Chamberlayn. Yes, Sir; that they had been both at Law a great while, and spent a great deal of Money, and therefore Mr. Goodere was willing to have Mr. Farrit Smith to reconcile the Matter between them, to prevent the Ruin of the Family, and many more such Expressions as these.

(Mr. Farrit Smith sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Smith, will you give an Account of what you know of this fatal Business.

Mr. Farrit Smith. Some few Weeks before this Murder happened, Mr. Chamberlayn applied to me, and told me, that Mr. Goodere (the Prisoner at the Bar) desired that I would use my utmost Endeavour with Sir John Dineley Goodere to be friends and reconciled with Mr. Goodere, and that I would suffer him to bring Mr. Goodere to my House. I told him, I often heard Sir John say, that there had been warm Disputes between them, but would make use of all my Endeavours to reconcile them, and that it was pity they should live in hatred, as they were the only two Brothers. Some time after Mr. Chamberlayn brought Mr. Goodere to my House, where they staid about a Quarter of an Hour, when Mr. Goodere gave me Thanks for the Promise I had made to Mr. Chamberlayn, and he then desired I would do all I could to promote a Reconciliation. I told him, I should be glad to be a happy Instrument of that sort; and that the first time I saw Sir John I would speak to him on the Affair, and endeavour to prevail on him to meet Mr. Goodere. The Captain said, if any Man in England could do it, I could. I told him, I hoped to succeed. Mr. Chamberlayn and Mr. Goodere went away. Some little time after they were gone, I saw Sir John, and told him, that Mr. Goodere had applied to me to do all I could to reconcile them. Sir John seemed to speak much against it at first, and thought it would be to no Purpose; for that he had been a real Friend to the Captain, who had used him very ill; but at last he was pleased to pass a Compliment on me, and said, I can't refuse you any thing you ask of me. He then mentioned several Things the Captain had said; and in particular told me, that at the Death of Sir Edward Goodere his Father, Mr. Goodere the Prisoner had placed several Persons in the House where Sir Edward lay dead, in order to do him some Mischiefs, and he apprehended to take away his Life.

Mr. Shephard, I must submit it to the Court, that what Sir John said at that Time is not matter of Evidence.

Mr. Recorder. It is not Evidence, but perhaps it is introductory to something Mr. Smith has further to say; if it be not, it should not have been mentioned.

Mr. Farrit Smith. And that he had endeavoured to set aside a common Recovery, and made strong Application to the Court of Common-Pleas for that Purpose.

Mr. Shephard. Whether this be Evidence, I insist upon it in point of Law that it is not, and it may have an Effect on the Jury.

Mr. Recorder. I will take Notice to the Jury what is not Evidence. Go on Mr. Smith.

Mr. Farrit Smith, After Sir John had repeated several Stories of this sort, he concluded at last (as I told you before) and why, Mr. Smith, if you ask it of me, I can't refuse. I saw Mr. Goodere soon after, and told him I had seen Sir John, and talked with him, and he was pleased to tell me, that he would see him, and bid me contrive a convenient Place to bring them together. I told Mr. Goodere about the Attempt to set aside the Recovery. I wonder, said Mr. Goodere, he should mention any Thing of that, for I can set it aside when I please. I told him, I thought he could not; for, said I, I have had a good Opinion on it, and am to lend a large Sum of Money upon the Worcestershire Estate. He said, I wonder that any body will lend him Money upon that Estate, I am next in Remainder, and they will run a Risque of losing their Money I do assure you; and he cannot borrow a Shilling on it without my Consent: but if my Brother was reconciled, then, if we wanted Money, we might do it together, gether, for he cannot secure it alone. He told me, that he should take it as a great Favour, if I could fix a Time as soon as I could to bring them together. Soon after I saw Sir John, and he told me he was very deaf, and was advised to go to the Bath, and then appointed to be with me on Tuesday the 13th of January last in the Morning, when he would talk with me about the Business of advancing the Money on his Estate. After this I saw Mr. Goodere, and told him that I had seen his Brother; that he was to be with me on Tuesday the 13th of January last, and desired him to be in the Way, for Sir John was always very punctual to his Appointment; and if Business or any Thing happened to prevent him, he always sent me a Letter. Mr. Goodere thanked me, and told me he would be in the way: and on the Tuesday Morning Sir John came to me on Horseback, just alighted, and came into my Office. I asked him to sit down, which he refused, saying his Head was bad; that he must go for Bath, having been advised to go there for some time, and then he did not doubt but he should be better. I told Sir John, that his Brother knew he was to be in Town, therefore hoped he would sit down a little, for that I had promised him to bring them together. He said, I can't now; but you shall see me again soon, and then I may do it. I asked him, when shall I see you again, to finish the Business you and I are upon, the Writings are ready, name your own Time, the Money will be paid? He appointed to be with me on Monday Morning to settle that Business; and said, I shall come to Town the Saturday or Sunday before, and when I come I will let you know it: He then mounted his Horse and rid off. Shortly after (as I was going to the Tolzey) at, or under Blind-gate, I met Mr. Goodere, and told him I was glad to see him, and that his Brother had been in Town. He said, he had seen him, and thought he looked better than he used to do. I told Mr. Goodere, that his Brother had appointed to be with me Monday Morning next on Business, and I expected him to be in Town either the Saturday or Sunday before. I then had many Compliments from Mr. Goodere, and he said, how good it would be to make up the matter between him and his Brother. I heard nothing of Sir John being in Town till Sunday the 18th of January last in the Morning, when he sent me a Letter to let me know that he came to Town the Night before, and would be glad to call upon me at any time I would appoint. I sent him for Answer, that I was to dine from Home, but would return, and be at Home at Three o'Clock that Afternoon. And as I was passing by, I stopt the Coach at Capt. Goodere's Lodgings in Princes-Street. I asked if he was at Home? found him alone, and then shewed him Sir John's Letter. He read it, and asked the Time I appointed. I told him Three o'Clock that Afternoon. Said he, I think my Brother writes better than he used to do. I said, Mr. Goodere, I think it would be best for you to be accidentally on Purpose at that Time at my House. No, says he, I don't think that will be so well, I think it would be better for you to send for me. I returned to my House, and my Servant told me that Sir John had called, and that he would be here again presently. Whilst my Servant was telling this, Sir John came in; I took him by the Hand, and asked him how he did? I thank God, says he; I am something better; and after I have settled this Affair with you, I will go to Bath for some Time, and then; I hope, I shall be better. I said, Capt. Goodere is waiting, I beg you will give me leave to send for him; you know you said you would see him. With all my Heart, says Sir John; I know I gave you leave. I then sent down a Servant to Captain Goodere's Lodgings, to let him know that Sir John was with me, and desired him to come up. The Servant returned, and said, here is Captain Goodere; on which I said, Sir John, please to give me leave to introduce your Brother. He gave me leave; Captain Goodere came in, went directly and kissed him as heartily as ever I had seen any two Persons who had real Affections one for the other. I desired them to sit down. Sir John sat on one side of the Fire, and Captain Goodere on the other, and I sat between them. I called for a Table and a Bottle of Wine, and filling a full Glass, I said, Sir John, give me leave to drink Love and Friendship. Ay, with all my Heart, says Sir John; I don't drink Wine, nothing but Water; notwithstanding, I wish Love and Friendship. Captain Goodere filled a Bumper, and pledged it, spoke to his Brother, and drank Love and Friendship, with his Brother's Health. We sat some time, all seemed well, and I thought I could have reconciled them. The Cork lying out of the Bottle, Captain Goodere takes up the Cork in his Hand, put it into the Mouth of the Bottle, and struck it in very hard. I then said, though Sir John will not drink Wine, you and I will. No, says Captain Goodere, I will drink Water too, if I drink any more; and there was no more drank. After they had talked several things (particularly Captain Goodere of the Pleasantness of the Situation of the Estate in Herefordshire, and Goodness of the Land) in a very pleasant and friendly way, Sir John rose up, and said, Mr. Smith, what time would you have me be with you To-morrow morning? I appointed nine o'clock. He said, Brother, I wish you well; then said to me, I will be with you half an Hour before. Sir John went down the Steps the Captain was following; I stopt him, and said, pray don't go, Captain, let you and I drink a Glass of Wine. No more now, I thank you, Sir, said he. I think, said I, I have done great Things for you. He paused a little, and said, By God, it will not do; and in a very short time the Captain went very nimbly down the Steps. I followed him to the Door, and observed him to go after Sir John down the Hill; and before he turned the Church-yard Wall, to be out of my Sight, I observed some Sailors come out of the White Hart Ale-house within view of my Door, and they ran up to Captain Goodere. I heard him say, Is he ready? (I thought he meant the Boat) They said, Yes. He bid them make haste. Then they ran very fast towards the lower Green, one of them having a Bottle in his hand; Captain Goodere went very fast down the Hill, and had it not been by mere accident I should have followed him, (but some People think 'twas well I did not) for I promised my Wife to return to the House where we dined in Queen's Square, where I went soon after.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Smith, did they all go towards the lower Green?

Mr.

Mr. Farris Smith. No, Sir; but some towards the Butts on St. Augustin's Back. Sir John went that way, and Captain Goodere followed him; but the Men who came out of the Alehouse went towards the lower Green some of them. About 5 o'clock in the Evening, as I was riding up the Hill towards the Colledge-green, I observed a Soldier look'd hard at me into the Coach, as if he had something to say, and seem'd to be in a Confusion. I walked into the Court, the Soldier with me, and then he said, I am inform'd, Sir, your Name is Mr. Farris Smith. Yes, says I, it is. (What I am now going to say, Mr. Recorder, is what the Soldier told me.) He told me, that as he was drinking with a Friend at the King's Head Ale-house at the Lime-kilns, he heard a Noise, and ran out to see what was the matter, when he saw a Person dress'd (as he describ'd) like Sir John's Dress.

Mr. Vernon. Pray, Sir, how was Sir John dress'd?

Mr. Farris Smith. Sir John was dress'd in Black Clothes, he had a ruffled Shirt on, a Scarlet Cloak, a Black Velvet Cap (for the sake of keeping his Ears warm) and a broad-brimm'd Hat flapping. He describ'd this exactly, and told me likewise, that the Captain of the Man of War and his Crew had got the Person into Custody, and by force had put him on board the Man of War's Barge or Boat lying near the Slip, by the King's Head; that the Gentleman cry'd out, for God's sake, if you have any Pity or Compassion upon an unfortunate Man, go to Mr. Farris Smith, and tell him how I am us'd: and that the Captain hearing him cry out, stopt his Mouth with his Hand.

Mr. Recorder. What did the Soldier desire of you?

Mr. Farris Smith. The Soldier desired me to inquire into it, for that he did not know the Intention of taking off a Gentleman in that way.

Mr. Recorder. Did you do any thing on that Request of the Soldier?

Mr. Farris Smith. Yes, Sir; it immediately occurred to me, that Sir John, when he left my House, told me that he was going to his Lodgings. I went to his Lodgings, (which was at one Mr. Berrow's near the Mint) I there asked for him, and related the Story I had heard; they told me they had not seen him since he went to my House.

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Smith, Sir, will you inform us by what Name the unfortunate Gentleman (you are speaking of) was commonly called.

Mr. Farris Smith. Sir John Dineley Goodere; his Mother was a Dineley, and there came a great Estate from her side to him, which occasion'd his being called by the Name of Dineley.

Mr. Vernon. When Sir John went from your House on Tuesday, was he alone, or had he any Attendants with him?

Mr. Smith. Sir John was well guarded; he had Pistols, and I think his Servant had Pistols also.

Mr. Vernon. I think you told us but now, that Sir John was to be with you on the Sunday; pray, when did you let Mr. Goodere know it, Sir?

Mr. Smith. I met Captain Goodere that very Day at Blind-gate, and told him of it; and he said, he had met his Brother himself.

Mr. Vernon. Pray, Sir, did Mr. Goodere tell you, to whom the Estate would go on Sir John's Death?

Mr. Smith. Yes, he has often said he was the next Remainder Man, and that the Estate would come to himself, on his Brother's Death.

Mr. Recorder. Well, Mr. Goodere, you have heard what Mr. Smith hath said, have you any Questions to ask him?

Mr. Shephard. Mr. Recorder, what I have to ask of you, with Submission, in behalf of Mr. Goodere, is, that you will indulge Counsel to put his Questions for him to the Court, and that the Court will then be pleas'd to put them for him to the Witnesses. It is every day's Practice at the Courts of Westminster, Old Bailey, and in the Circuit.

Mr. Vernon. This, I apprehend, is a matter purely in the Discretion of the Court, and what can neither in this or any other Court of criminal Justice be demanded as a Right. The Judges, I apprehend, act as they see fit on these occasions, and few of them (as far as I have observ'd) walk by one and the same Rule in this particular: some have gone so far, as to give leave for Counsel to examine and cross-examine Witnesses; others have bid the Counsel propose their Questions to the Court, and others again have directed that the Prisoner should put his own Questions: The Method of Practice in this point, is very variable and uncertain; but this we certainly know, that by the settled Rule of Law the Prisoner is allowed no other Counsel but the Court in Matters of Fact, and ought either to ask his own Questions of the Witnesses, or else propose them himself to the Court. I have one more Question to ask of Mr. Smith before we part with him.

Sir, I think you was present when Mr. Goodere was brought to Bristol, after his Brother's being killed, I'd be glad to know whether you then heard him say any thing, and what concerning this foul Business?

Mr. Smith. I was present when Mr. Goodere was brought to Bristol after this Murder happened, when he was asked (before the Justices) about the seizing, detaining and murdering Sir John Dineley; and he then directly answer'd, that he did not know that his Brother was murdered or dead. He was then asked in relation to the manner of seizing him, and carrying him away; he said he knew nothing of it till he came to the Boat, and when he came there he saw his Brother in the Boat; but he did not know that his Brother had been us'd at that rate.

Mr. Shephard. Mr. Smith, Sir, you are speaking about Sir John; by what Name did you commonly call him?

Mr. Smith. Sir John Dineley Goodere.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Goodere, have you any Questions to ask, Mr. Smith?

Samuel Goodere. Yes, Sir. Mr. Smith, I ask you, what Sir John Dineley's Business was with you, and how much Money was you to advance?

Mr. Smith. Five Thousand Pounds, Sir; and I told him that I was satisfi'd that it was a good Title?

Samuel Goodere. I ask you, if you knew him to be a Knight and Baronet.

Mr. Smith. I can't tell, I never saw the Letters Patent.

Samuel Goodere. Can't you tell how you stiled him in the Writings?

Mr. Vernon. I am very loth to interrupt Mr. Goodere, but must submit it, Sir, that this Question is extremely improper, because personal Knowledge is by no means legal Evidence of his Brother's having been a Baronet; for Baronetage must be derived from Letters Patent: Neither can I see, Sir, (with great Submission) how it would be at all material in this Case, whether the Deceased was a Baronet, or not. By the Indictment the Prisoners stand charg'd with the Murder of one Sir John Dineley Goodere, and the Witness Mr. Smith proves that the Party whom we shall shew to have been murdered, commonly went by that Name.

Mr. Shephard. With great Submission, Mr. Recorder, I think it a very material Question in point of Law: Upon the face of the Indictment it appears, that he is described by the Name of Sir John Dineley Goodere, in a Declaration for the King, the Party ought to be set forth with his Additions and Titles, the Persons committing the Fact, as well as the Person on whom it was committed: The Deceased is described by the Name of Sir John Dineley Goodere, and if he was a Baronet by Patent, it's not his Title, and it amounts to the same as if they had mistaken the Christian Name; if the Deceased was a Baronet, then he is improperly described, and then the Prisoners can't be found guilty on this Indictment. The Question before you, Sir, is, Whether this Question was proper to be asked the Witnesses?

Mr. Recorder. Can I presume him to have been a Baronet, or can I admit of parol Evidence to prove him so?

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Recorder, I beg leave to be heard in answer to this Observation of Mr. Shephard's, which I apprehend to be one of the most extraordinary I have ever heard from a Gentleman of the long Robe, and am bold to say the learned Gentleman who made it (if in earnest) is much mistaken in it, and in the Doctrine he hath advanced concerning it. With great Deference to your Judgment, Sir, I speak it, his Objection (if I apprehend it rightly) is, that the Person mentioned in the Indictment to have been murdered, is there described by the Name of Sir John Dineley Goodere only, and that by the Evidence it appears the Person murdered was Sir John Dineley Goodere Baronet; and he would from thence infer, that there is a Mistake in the Description of the Person murdered, and a Variance between the Indictment and the Evidence. Our Baronets, 'tis well known, are but of modern Institution, and their Creation by Patent from the King, as the Fountain of Honour; and whoever reads Lord Coke's 12th Report, will find it to have been resolved, at a learned Conference in the Time of James the First, That the King could erect such a Dignity by Patent descendable to the Heirs Male of the Body, as a Fee conditional and forfeitable for Felony.—But that where a Baronet is murdered, it is necessary to set forth his Name (or more properly Title of Dignity) in the Indictment, I must take the liberty to deny: The Difference, which I apprehend has been always taken and allowed, is between the Indicttee or Person charged by the Indictment with committing the Offence, and the Person on whom the Offence is laid therein to have been committed. 'Tis indisputably true, that the Indicttee's Addition (whether of Title or otherwise) must be set forth in the Indictment; but what is the Reason? Why, because it is expressly so required by the Statute of the 1st of Henry the 5th, which directs, that in Indictments and Writs where Process of Outlawry is awardable, the Estate, Degree or Mystery of the Defendant shall be superadded to his Name, to prevent troubling one Person for another. But, Sir, with great Submission, that Statute was never taken to extend to any other but the Defendant. All the Law requires, as to the Person on whom the Offence is laid to have been committed, is a convenient Certainty in the Description of him; and surely a Description by the right Christian and Surname is such, and sufficient to ascertain the Person murdered, especially where it does not appear there was any other of the same Name. In the Indictment against Coke and Woodburne on the Coventry Act, for disfiguring Mr. Coke's Brother-in-Law Mr. Crispe, and which was settled with great Advice, the Person disfigured is described as here, one Edward Crispe only; and all the modern Precedents of Indictments at the Old Baily are silent, as to the Addition of the Person on whom the Offence is said to be committed; and it is certainly best and safest to omit it. Lord Coke in his first Institute lays it down, that a Person may have divers Surnames, and that a Purchase by either of them is sufficient, and yet but one of them is his true Name; which shews the Law is not so over-curious in the manner of describing Persons: and, if I mistake not, it has been held that even the Indicttee himself can take no Advantage of a Mistake of his Surname, if his Christian Name be right, and he be otherwise described with convenient Certainty. Besides, Sir, this is begging the Question; for it does not appear in Proof that the Deceased was a Baronet, he might for aught appears judicially to the Court have been baptized by the Name of Sir John. Baronetage as a Patent-Dignity we know is Matter of Record, which is a thing proveable only by itself; therefore if they would have taken any Advantage of it, they should have had the Letters Patent of Creation, or an Exemplification of them, at least En Poigne, (as the Law terms it) ready to produce in Court: and for an Authority in Point, Sir, I beg leave just to mention the Case of Sir Richard Grabme (Titular Lord Preston); he was indicted as a Commoner, and objected that he was a Lord, and as such triable by his Peers. But Lord Chief Justice Holt, and other Judges then present, acquainted him they could take no judicial Notice of his being a Lord (though they themselves called him so out of Courtesy when they spoke to him) unless he produced the Patent of Creation, or a Copy of its Inrollment, because Matter of Record; so his Objection vanished, and so I hope will this Gentleman's. Had we called the Deceased in the Indictment Sir John Dineley Goodere Baronet, then, Sir, we should probably have been told, that we had failed in Proof of the Identity of the Person, for that the Baronetage was in its Creation annexed to and made a Concomitant on the Patentee's Surname of Goodere, and waited only on that Name, and that the Deceased, considered as a Baronet, was not of the maternal Name of Dineley, and so upon the matter no such Person as Sir John Dineley Goodere Baronet ever in Rerum Natura.

Mr. Shephard. Mr. Recorder, Mr. Vernon says it does not appear that Sir John Dineley was a Baronet, and that we ought to produce the Letters Patent to shew him such; I think it a pretty hard Objection, considering that by Law a Prisoner cannot look into his Indictment, nor have a Copy of it, in order to be advised thereon. Here it comes out only on hearing the Indictment read, and the Person killed is therein described by the Name of Sir John Dineley Goodere only, without adding the Title Baronet; so that it was impossible for us to be prepared with the Letters Patent, or with any Evidence of his being a Baronet; therefore humbly hope we are proper in asking this Question of the Witness Mr. Smith, who was so conversant with the deceased Gentleman, had the Perusal of his Writings; all his Title-Deeds lay before him, so that he cannot but know the Certainty of his Title and Degree.

Mr. Recorder. It is a great Mistake to say, that it is necessary to set forth in the Indictment the Addition of the Person on whom the Offence is supposed to be committed; the Law requires no such thing, and the Prisoners suffer no manner of Inconvenience by leaving out the Addition; because on this Indictment if they should happen to be acquitted, or should be convicted of Homicide under the Degree of Murder, they may plead that Acquittal or Conviction in bar of a second Prosecution for the same Fact, with an Averment that the Party mentioned in both Indictments, though under different Descriptions, was one and the same Person: It is sufficient that the Deceased is described by his Christian Name, and the Surname by which he was commonly called. The Question proposed to the Witness is improper; for it is not at all material in the present Case, Whether Sir John was a Baronet, or no. I would not deny the Prisoners any Advantage they are by Law intitled to, but I cannot admit of Evidence which can serve only to amuse.—Mr. Goodere, Have you any more Questions to ask this Witness? Mahony, have you any Questions to ask? [Both silent.]

(Morris Hobbs sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Hobbs, I think you are the Landlord of the White-Hart Alehouse.

Hobbs. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Vernon. Pray whereabouts is the House?

Hobbs. Over-against St. Augustine's Church.

Mr. Vernon. Can you see Mr. Jarrit Smith's House from the Window of yours?

Hobbs. Yes, Sir, very plain.

Mr. Vernon. I presume you are not unacquainted with the Prisoners Faces?

Hobbs. I have seen the Prisoners several times.

Mr. Vernon. I would not lead you in your Evidence, but would be glad you'd give an Account to Mr. Recorder, and the Jury, whether Mr. Goodere (the Gentleman at the Bar) applied to you about coming to your House; if so, pray tell us when it was, and upon what Occasion?

Hobbs. The 12th of January (which was on Monday) Captain Goodere and Mahony came to my House; Captain Goodere asked my Wife, Have you good Ale here? She said, yes; he also asked, What Place have you over head? I answered, a Closet, a Place where Gentlemen usually sit to look out. Will you please to let me see it? says he. Yes, Sir, said I. I went up to shew it, he and Mahony went up; the Captain said it was a very fine Prospect of the Town; he asked for a Pint of Ale, I drew it, and he gave it to Mahony, he drank it: and then the Captain asked my Wife, whether he might have a Dish of Coffee made to-morrow Morning? Sir, said she, 'tis a thing I don't make use of in my way; but, if you please, I will get it for you. Then he told her, he would be there to-morrow Morning by about Nine o'clock. Mahony was by then.

Mr. Vernon. Did you hear this Discourse pass between your Wife and Mr. Goodere?

Hobbs. Yes, I did, and then the Captain paid for his Pint of Ale, and went away; and the next Morning (being Tuesday the 13th of January) he came again to my House before my Wife was up, and I was making the Fire, (for I keep no Servant.) I did not know him again, I thought he was another Man; says he, Landlord, can't you open them Windows in the Parlour? I told him, I would, and so I did; he looked out, and I thought that he had been looking for somebody coming from Colledge Prayers. He asked where my Wife was? Says I, she is a-bed; because, said he, I talked with her about having some Coffee for Breakfast. I told him, she should come down presently, but I had much rather he would go down to the Coffee-house, where he would have it in order. No, says he, I will have it here. My Wife came down, he asked if he might go up stairs where he was before; he went up, and by and by Mahony and three Men more came in; I did not know Mahony's Name: When they came in, the Captain was above stairs, he directed me to make his Men eat and drink whatever they would, and he would pay for it; I brought them Bread and Cheese, they eat what they pleased; Mahony went backwards and forwards, up stairs and down several times; he went out, but where, or what for, I did not know.

Mr. Vernon. Did Mahony, when he went up stairs, go in to Mr. Goodere?

Hobbs. Yes, several times; Mahony put the Coffee, and some Bread and Butter, and made the Toast, and done every thing for the Captain, I thought he had been his Footman. When the Captain had breakfasted, and had made the Men welcome, he shifted himself, (some Porter brought fresh Clothes to him). By and by a Man rid along, who, I believe, was Sir John Goodere's Man, with Pistols before him; I heard somebody say that it was his Man: and soon after the Captain had shifted himself, Mahony went out about a Quarter of an Hour, and came back sweating, and went up to the Captain; and I looking out of the Window saw the Man on horseback, and leading another Horse, (which I took to be his Master's); and by and by Sir John mounted, and rid down between my House and the Church; and I had some glimpse of him, and heard the Captain say, look well at him, but don't touch him.

Mr. Recorder. This you heard the Gentleman above stairs say to the four Men below?

Hobbs. Yes, Sir, he spake those Words to the four who came in.

Mr. Vernon. Did Sir John and his Man appear to have any Arms?

Hobbs. Yes, Sir, they had both Pistols before them.

Mr. Vernon. Those Men that were along with Mahony, do you know what Ship they belong'd to?

Hobbs. There was a young Man, I believe something of an Officer, came to my Wife, and asked her, Is the Captain of the Man of War here? She answered, that she did not know; but there was a Gentleman above, and there were six other Men besides in the other Room in another Company, which I did not know belonged to the Captain, until he order'd six Pints of Ale for them. The Captain ordered Entertainment for ten Men.

Mr. Vernon. Where were those six Men?

Hobbs. In the Kitchen; they did not belong to the Man of War, nor were not in Company with the other four.

Mr. Vernon. Now, will you proceed to give an account what followed upon Mr. Goodere's saying, Look well at him, but don't touch him.

Hobbs. As soon as Sir John went down the Hill, this Mahony slept up to the Captain and came down again, and he and the other three in his Company went down the Hill, and the Captain followed them; the Clothes which the Captain pulled off were left in the Room; when the Captain was going out at the Door with his Sword and Cloak, I thought I was pretty safe of my Reckoning, because of his Clothes being left. The Captain said at the Door, Landlady, I will come back and pay you presently.

Mr. Vernon. How long was it before Mr. Goodere returned to your House?

Hobbs. He came again in about a Quarter of an Hour: When he came again, he went up stairs, changed a Guinea, he asked what was to pay? I told him four Shillings and one Penny half-penny, and then went away. About an Hour and a half after Mabony and the other came again, sweating, and said they had been a Mile or two out in the Country. Mabony asked Credit for a Tankard of Ale, and said his Master would come upon Saturday following, and then he would pay for it: Well, said I, if he is to come up on Saturday, I will not stand for a Tankard of Ale; but if he don't come, how shall I have my Reckoning? Says Mabony, I live at the Scotch Arms in Marsh-street. Well, said I, I will not deny drawing you a Tankard of Ale, if you never pay me. Said he, you had best get the Room ready against Saturday, and make a Fire, and just dust it.

Mr. Vernon. Pray, when Mr. Goodere went away from your House, was he in the same Dress as when he came first there that Day?

Hobbs. No, Sir. When he came there he had a light-coloured Coat, and he looked like a Country Farmer at his first coming in; but when he was out, he had a Scarlet-Cloak on, wore a Sword, and had a Cane in his Hand; a Porter brought him the Things.

Mr. Vernon. Do you know any thing of what happened on the Sunday following?

Hobbs. Yes, Sir; the Sunday Morning Mabony came to my House, having Trousers and a short Jacket and Leather-Cap on, asked for a Quart of Ale, this was Sunday: My Wife said, don't draw any more upon tick. Mabony gave a Six-pence and paid for it, and said, See that the Room be clear, the Captain will be up in the Afternoon, and then he'll be here: And as he was going out of the House, he said to me, if you fortune to see that Gentleman go up with the black Cap before that time, do you send a Porter to me to the Scotch Arms. I told him I had no Porter, and could not send. About 3 o'clock in the Afternoon, when he came again with a Person who had a scalled Face, and one or two more, a Man who lodged in the House came and told me, that they wanted to go up stairs; but I would not let them, because it was in Service-time: They all went into the Parlour, and had a Quart of Ale, and when that was drank, Mabony called for another; and then eight or nine Men more came and called for Ale, and went into the Parlour, but still kept looking out; and one of them being a little Fellow, I don't know his Name, kept flammng the Door together, ready to break the House down. Says I, don't break my House down about my Ears, don't think you are in Marsh-street; then the little Fellow came up as if he was going to strike me, as I was coming up out of the Cellar with a Dobbins of Ale in my Hand, for a Gentleman going to the Colledge: I saw this Gentleman (pointing to the Prisoner Samuel Goodere) and the Deceased walk down the Hill, I looked after them, and so did Mabony; and then all those Men rushed out, and followed them. Mabony paid the Reckoning, and went away; I ran in to see after my Tankard, for I was more afraid of losing that than the Reckoning. And that is all I do know from the Beginning to the End.

Mr. Vernon. How long did he continue at your House on the Sunday?

Hobbs. I believe, Sir, an Hour and an half; and there was some or other of them still looking out, and waiting at the Door.

Mr. Recorder. You say that Mabony desired you that if you saw the Gentleman in the black Cap go by, to send a Porter; who did you apprehend that Gentleman to be?

Hobbs. The Gentleman that rode down the Tuesday.

One of the Jury. To what Place was you to send the Porter?

Hobbs. To the Scotch Arms in Marsh-street, where Mabony lodged, if the Gentleman in the black Cap did go up to Mr. Smith's.

Mr. Vernon. I think, you say, you saw Mr. Goodere on the Sunday go down the Hill, after the Gentleman in the black Cap.

Hobbs. I did, Sir; but nobody at all was with him.

Samuel Goodere. Did you see me at all that Day?

Hobbs. Yes, Sir, I saw you go into Mr. Farrit Smith's; and when you came down the Hill, after the Gentleman in the black Cap, you called out to Mabony and his Company, and bid them to look sharp.

Samuel Goodere. Did you see any body with me that Day? I was not at your House that Day.

Hobbs. I did not say you were; but as you was going to Mr. Farrit Smith's, I heard one of your Men say, there goes our Captain, or else I had not looked out.

Mabony. I beg leave, my Lord, to ask him who it was that the Captain bid Mabony to look sharp to?

Hobbs. The Gentleman with the black Cap.

Mr. Recorder. Was the Gentleman in the black Cap, at whose going by they all rushed out, the same Gentleman whom you had seen before go to Mr. Farrit Smith's?

Hobbs. Yes, Sir; but Mabony gave Half a Crown for my Reckoning, and as they rushed out so hastily, I was afraid they had taken away my Tankard; for which Reason I went to look after it, and saw no more.

(Thomas Williams sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Williams, I think you belonged to the Ruby at the time when this melancholly Affair happened?

Thomas Williams. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Vernon. What Station was you in?

Thomas Williams. I was ordered to walk the Quarter-deck.

Mr. Vernon. Will you give an Account of what you know in relation to the ill Treatment of Sir John Dineley Goodere? tell all you know about it.

Thomas Williams. I came up on Sunday the eighteenth Day of January last for my Commander, went to his Lodgings, he was not at home; I was told there, that he dined that day at Dr. Middleton's, and he was just gone there. I went to Dr. Middleton's after him, and he was just gone from thence; I then returned to his Lodgings, and found him there; I told him the Barge was waiting for his his Honour. He ask'd me if I knew the River, and if I knew the Brick-yard at the Lime-kilns? I told him that I knew the Lime-kilns, and at last I recollected that I did remember the Brick-yard he meant. That is well enough, says he. While I was there, Mahony came up to him, and the Captain desired of me to go down stairs, for he wanted to speak to Mahony in private. I went down stairs, by and by Mahony came down and went away; then I went up to Captain Goodere again, when he directed me to get all the Hands together, and go down into the Barge, and, says he, let it be landed at the Brick-yard. He asked me if I knew the White Hart in the Colledge-green? I told him I did, and he directed me to take eight Men up with me to the White Hart, and let two remain in the Boat, for I have a Gentleman coming on board with me. I did as I was ordered; and when I came to the White Hart, I saw Mahony, and some of the Privateer's Men with him there in a Room; I did not like their Company, I went into the Kitchen, I asked the Landlord to make me a Pint of Toddy, he asked me whether I would have it hot or cold, I told him a little warm; he was going about it, but before it was made, Mahony and the Privateer's Men rushed out of the House: I seeing that, followed them, they had the Gentleman in possession before I came to them, and were dragging him along. I asked them what they were at? One of the Privateer's Men told me, if I did not hold my tongue, he would throw me over the Key River, and immediately Captain Goodere came there himself: The Privateer's Men asked what they should do with him, and he directed them to take him on board the Barge. I followed them down the Butts, the Gentleman cried out Murder, Murder! Mr. Stephen Perry the Anchor-smith came out of his House, and asked me what was the matter; I told him I did not know: Mahony said he was a Murderer, he had killed a Man on board the Man of War, and that he had run away, they had carried him before a Magistrate, and he was ordered back to the Man of War to be tried by a Court Martial.

Mr. Recorder. Was the Captain within hearing at the time Mahony said that?

Thomas Williams. He was just behind.

Mr. Recorder. Was he within hearing?

Thomas Williams. He was; and when they had brought him into the Barge, Captain Goodere desired to have the Cloak put over Sir John to keep him from the Cold, but Sir John said he did not want a Cloak, neither would he have it. The Privateer's Men wanted me to put them on the other side the Water, but I said I would not without the Captain's Orders. They asked the Captain, and he directed me to do it, and I put them ashore at the Glass-house, and just as we came over against the Hot-Wells, there was a Gentleman standing whom Sir John knew, to whom Sir John cried out, Sir, do you know Mr. Jarrit Smith? But before he could speak any more, the Cloak was thrown over him to prevent his crying out, and the Captain told me to steer the Barge on the other side, until we got clear of the noise of the People; and when we was got clear, he directed me to steer the Boat in the middle, as I ought to do. I obeyed his Orders.

Mr. Recorder. Who threw the Cloak over him?

Thomas Williams. The Captain. And the Captain being as near to Sir John as I am to your Lordship, Sir John asked the Captain what he was going to do with him? Says the Captain, I am going to carry you on board to save you from Ruin, and from lying rotting in a Goal.

Mr. Vernon. And what Reply did Sir John make to that?

Thomas Williams. He said, I know better things, I believe you are going to murder me; you may as well throw me overboard, and murder me here right, as carry me on board Ship and murder me. No, says the Captain, I am not going to do any such thing, but I would have you make your Peace with God. As I steered the Boat, I heard all that passed. We brought Sir John on board between seven and eight o'clock, he could hardly go up into the Ship, he being so benumbed with Cold; he did go up of his own accord, with the Mens Assistance.

Mr. Vernon. How was he treated on board the Man of War?

Thomas Williams. Sir, I don't know how they treated him after he went on board the Ship, I was excused from watching that Night, so I went to my Hammock; but after I was got out of my first sleep, I heard some People talking and walking about backwards and forwards: I was surprized; at last I peeped out of my Hammock, and asked the Centinel what was o'clock? he said, between Two and Three. And then I saw Captain Goodere going down the Ladder from the Deck towards the Purser's Cabbin, but for what Intention I know not, I believe he came from his own Cabbin.

Mr. Recorder. Whereabout is the Purser's Cabbin?

Thomas Williams. The Purser's Cabbin is in a place called the Cock-pit, the lower Steps of the Ladder is just by the Door of the Purser's Cabbin.

Mr. Recorder. And it was that Ladder you saw the Captain go down, was it?

Thomas Williams. Yes, Sir, it was.

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Williams, you have not told us all the Particulars of Sir John's Treatment between the seizing and carrying him to the Barge.

Thomas Williams. One of the Men had hold of one Arm, and another the other, and a third Person was behind shoving him along.

Mr. Vernon. Where was Captain Goodere then?

Thomas Williams. He was just behind him.

Mr. Vernon. How near was he to him.

Thomas Williams. Sometimes he was as near to him as I am to you.

Mr. Recorder. How many were there in the Company, do you think, in the Rope-walk, when they were carrying Sir John along?

Thomas Williams. There were five of the Privateer's Men, and Mahony made six, and there were nine belonging to the Barge; about sixteen in all.

Mr. Recorder. At what distance was you?

Thomas Williams. At a pretty great distance; I walked just before them; I saw them take him along in the manner I have said; I heard Sir John cry out Murder several times as he went, as they took him along the Rope-walk.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Goodere, will you ask Williams any Questions?

Samuel Goodere. What side of the Gun-room did you lie in?

Thomas Williams. The Star-board side of the Gun-room.

Samuel Goodere. Why then it was impossible for you, as you lay in your Hammock, to see any body go down to the Cock-pit.

Thomas Williams. Not at all, Sir; the Gunner's Cabbin comes out further than ever was known of that fort.

Samuel Goodere. Are there any other Cabbins besides the Purser's in the Cock-pit? did you ever examine them how strong they are, and what Partitions are there between them?

Thomas Williams. I don't know any other Cabbin but the Purser's in the Cock-pit; the Cooper lies in the Slop-room.

Samuel Goodere. Was you never in the Doctor's Cabbin?

Thomas Williams. No, never in my Life.

Samuel Goodere. Do you know where-about the Ruby lay, when you brought that Gentleman on board, where did you apprehend the Ship was?

Thomas Williams. I did not know the Situation of the Ship, I had no business to know that; I was but a Foremast-man.

(Samuel Trivett sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Will you give an Account to Mr. Recorder and the Jury of what you know relating to this Business.

Samuel Trivett. On Sunday the eighteenth of January last I was at a Publick House in the Rope-walk, I heard a Noise of People cryed Damn ye, stand off, or else we will knock your Brains out; I stepp'd up, and asked what Right they had to carry a Man along after that manner? I followed them; their Answer was, it was a Midshipman who had committed Murder, and they were taking him down to the Ship to do him Justice: other People likewise followed enquiring what was the matter: the Gentleman was behind, and ordered them to make more haste.

Mr. Vernon. Look upon the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Goodere; is that the Gentleman that ordered them to make more haste?

Samuel Trivett. I believe that is the Man, my Lord: On the Gentleman's ordering them to make more haste, five or six of them caught him up in their Arms, and carried him along, and as they were got down about the Corner of Mr. Brown's Wall, he insisted upon their making more dispatch, and then they hurried him as far as Captain Osborn's Dock. By that time his Clothes were ruffled, and shoved up to his Arm-pits; they put him down, and settled his Clothes, and then I saw his Face, and knew him to be Sir John Dineley: He cried out Murder several times, and said, they were taking him on board to kill him, he believed. As they were going with him along, he cried out to Mrs. Darby, for God's sake assist me, they are going to murder me. I told Mrs. Darby, it was Sir John Dineley: She said, she knew him; the Cloak was then over his Face. As they got him further, he called out to a little Girl, to get some boy to assist him for they were going to murder him. They pushed him along to Mrs. New's House, and made a little Stop there, and then they brought him to the Water-side, where was a Boat; they put out a Plank with Ledges nailed across; he was ordered to go on board the Boat; they got him on board, and put him to sit down in the Stern-sheet: then he cried out, for God's sake, Gentlemen, if any of you know Mr. Jarrit Smith in the Colledge-green, tell him my name is Sir John Dineley. One of the Men put his Cloak and covered him, and before he could say any more, that Gentleman (pointing at the Prisoner Goodere) took his Hand and put it on his Mouth, and would not let him speak any further, and ordered the Boat to be pushed off, which was done; and the Tide making up strong, the Boat got almost to the other side. I heard that Gentleman (pointing as before) say, Have you not given the Rogues of Lawyers Money enough already? Do you want to give them more? I will take care that they shall never have any more of you; now I'll take care of you.

Mr. Recorder. Prisoners, will either of you ask this Witness any Questions?

Samuel Goodere. No; I never saw the Man before in my Life.

(Thomas Charnbury sworn.)

Thomas Charnbury. On Sunday the eighteenth of January last, between the Hours of four and five in the afternoon, I was on board the Ship called the Levant, lying in Mr. Thompson's Dock; I heard a Noise coming over the Bridge of the Dock, and I saw a Man in a scarlet Cloak, and a parcel of People, some before and some behind, guarding of him, and he made a noise. I went towards them, to see what was the matter, and at Mr. Stephen Perry's Counting-house (they rested) I asked, what was the matter? They said, he had killed a Man on board a Man of War; that he had run away; and they had had him before a Magistrate, and he was ordered on board the King's Ship to be carried round to London to take his Trial. Mr. Perry (on hearing the Noise) came out and saw him; says Mr. Perry, Gentlemen, do you know what you are about? I would not be in your Coats for a thousand Pounds, for it is Esq; Goodere. They threatened to knock down any that should come near; a Fellow, I take him to be Mabony, came up to me, and threatened to knock me down several times. They took and carried him as far as Captain James Day's Lofts and Warehouse, where he keeps his Hemp; and there they rested him again, and threatened to knock down any that should come near them. Then said Mabony, Damn ye, here comes the Captain. Immediately I turned about, and saw a Gentleman with his Cane poised in one hand, and his Sword in the other, he had a dark shag Coat and yellow Buttons, whom I take to be that Gentleman the Prisoner at the Bar. They took up the Man in the scarlet Cloak again, and carried him so far as coming out from the lower College-green into the Rope-walk: the Prisoner Goodere came up to them, and ordered them to mend their Pace; they took him up again, and carried him as far as Brown's Garden, at the lower end of the Rope-walk, as fast as they could well carry him, where they settled his Clothes, and in the mean while the Prisoner Goodere came up to them again, and ordered them to mend their Pace. With much difficulty they got him between the Gate and Stile, and carried him as far as the Warehouse at the Corner of the Glass-house, there they rested and settled his Clothes again: Then they took him up and carried him down to the Lime-kilns, as far as the lower part of the Wall below Madam New's; and then brought him down to a Place opposite to the King's Head, and then they put him on board a Boat (I take it the Man of War's Barge) having ten Oars, and they handed him in. After, the Prisoner Goodere went into the Boat after him, and set Sir John on the Starboard side, and the Prisoner Goodere on the Larboard side; then Sir John cried out, Murder! you Gentlemen that are on shore, pray tell Mr. Jarrit Smith that my Name

Name is Dineley, and before he could say Goodere, the Gentleman took up the Flap of the Cloak, threw it over the Face of Sir John, and stopp'd his Mouth; and, says he, I will take care of you, that you shall not spend your Estate; and ordered the Barge to be put off: And then he took the Gentleman's Cloak from his Shoulders, and puts it on his own.

Mr. Recorder. Who was it that stopp'd his Mouth with the Cloak?

Mr. Charmbury. That Gentleman the Prisoner at the Bar. The Boat was so full, had so many People in it, that they were obliged to row but with eight Oars: And when they proceeded down the River, it being about three quarters Flood, and the Gentleman continually crying out, they went out of sight, and I saw no more of them.

(Mrs Darby sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Mrs. Darby, I think, you live at the Lime-kilns.

Mrs. Darby. Yes, Sir, I do.

Mr. Vernon. What do you know of this tragical Affair?

Mrs. Darby. I saw Sir John Dineley forced along between two Men, he crying out Murder, Murder, for the Lord's sake save me, save me, for they are going to kill me!

Mr. Vernon. Pray what were they doing to him at that time?

Mrs. Darby. Forcing him along, Sir; one had him under one Arm, and another under the other.

Mr. Vernon. Did you then know him to be Sir John Dineley Goodere?

Mrs. Darby. Yes, Sir; last Summer we mended his Chair for him. I knew him very well.

Mr. Vernon. You say you knew Sir John; pray did you know this Gentleman? (pointing to Mr. Goodere.)

Mrs. Darby. There were a great many other Persons there; they told me that the Captain of the Man of War was there behind them, which I believe to be the Gentleman at the Bar: He was dressed in a dark Drabb-coloured Coat, and his Waistcoat trimmed with Gold.

Mr. Vernon. What further did you see pass?

Mrs. Darby. I saw them hurrying him on board the Boat, but I did not go any further than over-against my own Door; but when they were turning the Boat, I heard him cry out, but what he said I know not.

(William Dupree sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Give an Account of what you know of this Matter.

William Dupree. On Sunday the eighteenth of January last I was at the Sign of the King's Head, upon the right-hand side of the Red Lion as you go down to the Hot Well, with a Friend of mine, a Man that works with me, drinking a Pint of Ale; there was a young Woman, she was reading at the Window. She said, she heard a great Outcry, we heard the same, we went out, saw a Company of Men forcing a Gentleman along; I saw Captain Goodere the Prisoner at the Bar coming behind them: when they came down to Scriggins Slip, they gave out a Report, that the Gentleman had murdered a Man on board a Man of War, and they were taking him on board for Justice. They put him on board the Yawl, and Captain Goodere stood by whilst they did it. The Gentleman cried out, for God's sake go and acquaint Mr. Farrit Smith, for I am undone, they will murder me. I went into the House again; the People advised me to go to Mr. Farrit Smith, and inform him of it: as I came home I called at Mr. Smith's, and told him what I had seen and heard, and he told me he would see about it.

Mr. Vernon. I'd be glad to know whether upon the Gentleman's crying out you saw any thing, and what, done to him.

William Dupree. I saw the Captain, the Prisoner at the Bar, put his Hand and stop his Mouth.

Mr. Vernon. Are you positive you saw that?

William Dupree. Yes, I am.

(Theodore Court, Master of the Ship sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Will you tell Mr. Recorder and the Jury what you know concerning the Death of Sir John Dineley Goodere?

Theodore Court. On the eighteenth of January last, being Sunday, the Barge went up to fetch Captain Goodere from Bristol, and about seven of the clock in the Evening he came on board, and when he came into the Gangway, says he, how do you all do, Gentlemen? Excuse me, Gentlemen, from going the right way to-night, for I have brought an old mad Fellow on board, and I must take care of him. I saw a Gentleman with a black Cap coming up the Ship's side, and his Groans shocked me, so that I could not help him; he looked much surprized as a Person used ill: As soon as he was on board, he was taken into custody, and carried by the Captain's Orders down to the Cock-pit, and put into the Purser's Cabbin, and a Centinel ordered upon him; and I saw him no more at that time. Next Morning I was told that the Captain's Brother was murdered, and that the Captain had given Charles White and Mahony leave to go on shore.

Mr. Recorder. By whose Direction was he put into the Purser's Cabbin?

Theodore Court. The Captain himself went down, and see them put him in.

Mr. Vernon. Whereabout in the Ship is the Purser's Cabbin?

Theodore Court. In the Cock-pit.

Mr. Vernon. Was it a Place where Gentlemen who came on board commonly lay?

Theodore Court. No, nobody had laid in it for a considerable time. The next Morning the Cooper met me, and said, here is fine doings to-night, Mr. Court! Why, what is the matter, said I? Why, said he, about three o'clock this Morning they went down and murdered Sir John. The Ship was in an Uproar; the Cooper said, if Mr. Perry (the Lieutenant) did not secure the Captain, he would write to the Board: We had several Consultations in the Ship about it. The Captain sent for me to breakfast with him, I accepted of his Invitation: I can't say but he behaved with a very good Name to all the People on board. About Ten o'clock Mr. Perry, myself, and the other Officers, with the Cooper, consulted about securing the Captain. Mr. Perry caution'd us not to be too hot; for, said he, if we secure the Captain before we know Sir John is dead, I shall be broke, and you too. We sent for the Carpenter, and desired him to go down and open the Cabbin-door, the Centinel who stood there having said it was lock'd; the Carpenter went down, opened the Cabbin-door, and came up and said Sir John was murdered; and that he lay on his Left-side, with his Leg up crooked. I told them, Gentlemen, there is nothing to be done before the Coroner comes; and therefore we must not touch him: Whereupon the Door was ordered to be fastened fastened up: We then consulted how to take the Captain, and a Method was agreed on for that purpose. And as soon as the Captain was taken, he declared he was innocent of it, that he knew not that his Brother was murdered. When the Coroner came, I saw the Deceased, and my Heart aaked for him.

Mr. Recorder. Who was it put the Centinel upon Sir John?

Theodore Court. The Captain ordered it to be done.

Mr. Vernon. Is it usual to place a Centinel at the Purser's Cabbin-Door?

Theodore Court. No, it is not; unless there be somebody there under Confinement.

Mr. Vernon. Is there any other Cabbin near the Purser's?

Theodore Court. Yes, there is the Slop-Room just by; there the Cooper and his Wife lay that Night: there is just a little Partition of about half-inch Deal, parting the Slop-Room from the Place where Sir John lay confined.

Mr. Vernon. Pray, will you tell us whether any, and what Discourse passed between Mr. Goodere and you, about sailing; and when it was?

Theodore Court. Sir, in the Morning he asked me, will the Wind serve to sail? He said, he had another pressing Letter from the Lords of the Admiralty to sail as soon as possible. I told him, that the Wind was West-South-West, and that we could not go out to Sea; for no Pilot would take charge of the Ship, I believed. And as this is a Harbour where a Pilot is allowed, I don't pass for this Place; otherwise I must have observed his Orders.

Mr. Vernon. Did he acquaint you how far, or to what Part, he would have you sail?

Theodore Court. Yes, he said, if he got no further than the Holmes, he did not care; and asked me, if it was safe riding there. I told him, it was not; for it was foul Ground for such a Ship as ours.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Goodere, will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Samuel Goodere. What Cabbins are there in the Cock-pit?

Theodore Court. I know no Cabbins there but the Purser's Cabbin and the Slop-Room, &c.

Mr. Vernon. Call Mr. Williams.

(William Williams sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Williams, have you any Watch in your possession belonging to Mr. Goodere.

William Williams. I have a Watch in my Possession.

Mr. Vernon. Please to produce it, and let us know how you came by it.

William Williams. I had it from a Vault in Back-street.

Mr. Vernon. How came it to be searched for there?

William Williams. The Night this thing was under Examination, I was at the Council-House, and Culliford who keeps the Brockware Boat on the Back, was there under Examination; he then reported that there was a Watch and some Money left in his House: Upon which a Person was sent down, and Culliford's Wife at first denied the Watch, but not the Money; but at last, after close Examination, she confessed that she had thrown the Watch into the Vault. Upon which, by the Order of Mr. Alderman Day, I, with a Mason, opened the Vault; where, on Search, I found the Watch, and took it out. Here is the Watch; but whose it is, I know not.

Mr. Vernon. Now I desire that Watch may be shewn to Mr. Court. [The Watch is delivered to Mr. Court.]

Mr. Vernon. Now you have looked upon the Watch, tell us if you can, whose it was.

Theodore Court. I can't swear positively to it; but I believe it was the Captain's Watch, he had such a one.

Mr. Vernon. Did Mr. Goodere use to carry a Gold Watch about him?

Theodore Court. The Captain did not usually wear a Gold Watch; but I have seen such a Watch as this is, hanging up in the Captain's Cabbin. I believe it to be the same.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Court, you was asked by Mr. Goodere, how many Cabbins there are in the Cock-pit?

Theodore Court. There is the Steward's Room, the Purser's Cabbin, and the Slop-Room.

Samuel Goodere. Where is the Steward's Room?

Theodore Court. That is the Place where the Centinel stands; and there is a Place on the other Side where the Surgeon lies.

Samuel Goodere. What Persons were in that Place that Night, do you know?

Theodore Court. The Surgeon, I suppose.

Samuel Goodere. What other Persons were in any other of the Cabbins that Night?

Theodore Court. The Cooper and his Wife.

Samuel Goodere. Has the Cooper a Wife?

Theodore Court. I believe so.

Samuel Goodere. How long before the nineteenth of January did you new-moor the Ship?

Theodore Court. Thursday the fifteenth of January.

Samuel Goodere. How were the Bearings then?

Theodore Court. (Looking on his Journal) Posset-Point West and by South, Denny-Island North-west and by West, distant by Computation about four Miles: And the Point to the Westward of the Hole's Mouth South-South-East.

Mr. Recorder. Were those the Bearings on the Eighteenth too?

Theodore Court. I know no Difference; it is said here, ditto 18th: if there had been any Variation, I should have taken notice of it.

Mr. Vernon. In what Part of the River did the Ship lie when Sir John was murdered?

Theodore Court. She lay in King-Road.

Samuel Goodere. Do you know the Denny?

Theodore Court. Yes, I do.

Samuel Goodere. Suppose there was a strait Line drawn from the South Corner of that Island to the North part of the Water of Avon, would the Ship Ruby have been on the East or West part of that Line?

Theodore Court. As to that I am not a Judge, unless I saw a strait Line drawn.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Court, how long did the Ship continue in this Mooring?

Theodore Court. I new moor'd the Ship the Sunday following.

Samuel Goodere. Did the Wind then blow Easterly or Westerly?

Theodore Court. The Wind blew hard Westerly the Sunday.

Samuel Goodere. As to the Distance from the Denny, I believe, you are right enough; but I have a Gentleman here who hath taken a Survey of the River: and the Situation of the Ship, as it lay Sunday day the eighteenth of January, was in the River Severn, very far Eastward of the Water of Avon.

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Recorder, by Mr. Goodere's present Enquiries, he seems to be putting his and his Fellow-Prisoner's Defence on the Points of the Compass; I hope he has some better Point to go on: for if not, these I doubt will stand him in very little stead. It appears in Proof, that the Ship was stationed in King-road, when this Murder was committed: Now King-road, we all know, has been all along reputed and allowed to be within the local Limits of the City and County of Bristol; and the City Process runs thither, which shews it to be within the Franchise of the City; and the Sheriffs of Bristol do there constantly execute Writs and other Process from above, which shews it to be within their Bailiwick as a County, whose Bounds and Circuit are best ascertained and pointed out by Reputation and consentaneous Usage, which stand as perpetual Monuments of their Limits, after other Marks are effaced or obscured by Time.

Mr. Shephard. I don't at all question but this City has great Powers, and its Limits are undoubtedly set forth by Charter.

Mr. Vernon. I should be very sorry to find the Jurisdiction of a City (whose Rights are dear to me as my own) shaken by a Side-wind, and hope an Attempt of this nature will not be suffered.

(Duncan Buchanan sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. I think you was one of the Company that was at the White-Hart upon Tuesday the twelfth of January last?

Duncan Buchanan. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Vernon. Will you give Account by whose Directions you came up there?

Duncan Buchanan. On Tuesday the thirteenth Day of January last the Boat and Barge were ordered up to Bristol; but upon what account, I knew not. I was ordered to go to the White-Hart to attend the Captain, and there was Mahony and the Privateer's Men drinking hot Flip. I knew nothing of what they were upon. I saw a Gentleman come out of Mr. Smith's, I suppose it was Sir John Dineley Goodere; he mounted his Horse, and had Pistols before him, and his Servant followed him with Pistols also. Then some of the Men ran out; and Captain Goodere went out after them, and ordered them to follow the Gentleman. I staid there till the Captain came back again; and I know nothing more of what was said or done then.

Mr. Vernon. Will you give an Account what happened on the Sunday following?

Duncan Buchanan. On Sunday the eighteenth Day of January about seven o'clock in the Evening the Barge came along-side the Ship with the Gentleman in it, I stood in the Gang-way to receive him; when he came up, I heard him to make a moan, and the Captain said I have brought a Madman on board, bring him along, I will bring him to his Senses by and by. I saw them take him along the Gang-way; you must not mind what he says, said the Captain; and he was ordered down to the Purser's Cabbin; I was ordered Centinel there. About twelve o'clock the Captain sent for me to come up to him, and I laid down my Sword and went up, and Mahony was there with him; and there was a Bottle of Rum and a Glass before them: the Captain asked me to drink a Dram, I thanked him and drank. He asked me how his Brother was? I told him he groaned a little; says the Captain, I know the Reason of that, he is wet, and I am coming down by and by to shift him with dry Stockings: so I left the Captain and Mahony together. Some time after the Captain came down to me, as I was at my Post at the Purser's Cabbin; he asked if his Brother made a noise? I told him no: upon which the Captain listened a little time at the Door, and then said, give me the Sword, and do you walk upon deck; for I want to speak to my Brother in private. Soon after this, Mahony went down, and very soon after Mahony was down, I heard a great struggling in the Cabbin, and the Gentleman cry out Murder! I then thought the Gentleman had been in one of his mad Fits; but now I suppose, they were then strangling him. As I was walking to and fro in the Gun-Room, I looked down, and saw the Captain take the Candle out of the Lanthorn, which was hanging up there, and he gave the Candle into the Cabbin.

Mr. Recorder. Where was Mr. Goodere when you heard the Cry of Murder?

Duncan Buchanan. In the Cock-pit by the Purser's Cabbin-Door, with the Sword in his Hand.

Mr. Recorder. What time of the Night was this?

Duncan Buchanan. Between two and three o'clock; I lighted a Candle at the Lanthorn in the Gun-Room, and was going down to the Captain with it, as supposing him to be without Light; and as I was going down with it, the Captain held up his Sword, waved it, and said, go back and stay where you are.

Mr. Recorder. You said, that Sir John Dineley cried out Murder! was that before you offered the Candle to the Captain?

Duncan Buchanan. Yes, Sir; it was before.

Mr. Recorder. How long?

Duncan Buchanan. About a Quarter of an Hour.

Mr. Recorder. How long did the Cry of Murder continue?

Duncan Buchanan. About three or four Minutes: Soon after the Captain had ordered me to keep back, he called for a Candle, and I carried one down, and he gave me the Sword, and bid me stand upon my Post; and, said he, if my Brother makes any more noise, let him alone and send for me; and he locked the Purser's Cabbin-Door, and took the Key away with him: And in the Morning the Doctor's Mate, the Cooper and I consulted together about it; and I was willing to know, if Sir John was dead, or not? And when we peeped into the Cabbin, we saw him lying in a very odd sort of a Posture, with his Hat over his Face, and one of his Legs lay crooked: upon which, we concluded he was dead.

Mr. Recorder. How long was you off your Post from first to last?

Duncan Buchanan. I can't tell exactly.

Mr. Recorder. Recollect as well as you can.

Duncan Buchanan. About three quarters of an Hour.

Mr. Recorder. And could you see who was at the Purser's Cabbin-Door all that time?

Duncan Buchanan. Yes, Sir; I saw the Captain stand at the foot of the Ladder at the Door, with a drawn Sword, from the time I went up to the time I came down again; he locked the Door, and carried the Key away with him.

Mr. Vernon. Pray, were there any Bolts on the Purser's Cabbin-Door?

Duncan Buchanan. Yes, there were Bolts on the Door; they were put on soon after Sir John came on board: Sir John was in that Cabbin when they were put on.

Mr. Vernon. You say you heard a Noise and Outcry of Murder, how far was you from the Cabbin-Door when you heard that Cry of Murder?

Duncan Buchanan. I was walking to and fro the Gun-room.

Mr. Vernon. How far is that from the Purser's Cabbin-Door?

Duncan Buchanan. As far as I am from you.

Mr. Vernon. Whom did you see go into the Purser's Cabbin to Sir John?

Duncan Buchanan. I saw Mahony go in there.

Mr. Vernon. Did you see any other Person go in besides Mahony?

Duncan Buchanan. No, I did not; I saw Mahony go in just before the Cry of Murder, but no other Person.

Mr. Vernon. Do you know any thing about securing the Captain?

Duncan Buchanan. Yes, I will tell you what happened then. We went and secured him. As soon as he was laid hold of, he cried out, Hey! hey! what have I done? We told him his Brother was murdered, and that he had some Concern in it. He said, what if the Villains have murdered my Brother, can I help it? I know nothing of it.

Samuel Goodere. Did you see me in the Cabbin at all?

Duncan Buchanan. No, Sir, I don't say you was in the Cabbin.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Goodere, the Witness does not say he saw you in the Cabbin, but at the Door, and with a Sword in your Hand, and that you handed in a Light after the Cry of Murder was over.

Samuel Goodere. I could not have been in the Cabbin without Buchanan's seeing me go in, because he stood at the Bulk-head of the Gun-room.

Mr. Recorder. Mahony, will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Matthew Mahony. Are you certain that I was in the Cabbin when you heard the Groans?

Duncan Buchanan. I am positive you was there in the Purser's Cabbin, when I heard the Murder cried out.

(Daniel Weller sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. I think you are the Carpenter belonging to the Ruby Man of War.

Daniel Weller. Yes, Sir, I am.

Mr. Vernon. Give an Account to Mr. Recorder and the Jury of what you know relating to this Business.

Daniel Weller. The eighteenth of January last, about seven o'clock in the Evening, the Captain came on board in the Barge; as I attended him, I observed he seemed in a pleasant Humour, he came upon the Deck at once, and said he had brought a poor crazy Man on board, who had been the Ruin of himself and Family, and that he had now brought him on board to take care of him: He took him down to the Cock-pit, and having been there a little while, one of my People came and asked for some Bolts;

I asked, what for? He told me, it was to put on the outside of the Purser's Cabbin-door, to bolt the crazy Gentleman in. I gave him a Bolt; after he had nailed it on, he came and wanted another: I had another, gave it to him, and went down to see the Bolts put on. Sir John cried out, What are you doing, nailing the Door up? I answered, No. I ordered the Door to be opened, to turn the Points of the Nails. The Door being opened, Sir John asked whether the Carpenter was there? I told him I was the Man. The Centinel told me no-body must go in there; however, I went in, while they turned the Points of the Nails. Sir John bid me sit down, and asked me, what does my Brother mean by bringing me on board in this manner, to murder me? No, Sir, says I, I hope not, but to take care of you. He asked me, if his Brother told me that he was mad? I saw no more of him till next Morning.

Mr. Vernon. And what did you see then?

Daniel Weller. Next Morning the Lieutenant sent me down to see if Sir John was dead. I went down, and asked the Centinel for the Key; he told me the Captain had been there in the Night, and had taken away the Key in his Pocket. I broke open the Cabbin-Door, and Sir John was lying on one side dead, with his Right Leg half up bent, his Hat was over his Face, with Blood bespattered about his Mouth and Nose. I went directly up, and told the Lieutenant of it.

Mr. Recorder. By whose Orders did you put the Bolts on the Door?

Daniel Weller. One of my People came to me for Bolts, and told me he was ordered by the Captain to put the Bolts on; and none of them ever came for any thing to be done, without an Order of an Officer.

(Edward Jones sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Jones, I think you are the Cooper of the Ship Ruby.

Edward Jones. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Vernon. Was you on board upon Sunday the eighteenth of January last?

Edward Jones. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. Vernon. In what Cabbin did you lie that Night?

Edward Jones. I had no Cabbin, but I made bold to lie in the Slop-Room that Night, having my Wife on board.

Mr. Vernon. Pray what is that you call the Slop-Room?

Edward Jones. It is like a Cabbin.

Mr. Vernon. How near is the Slop-Room to the Purser's Cabbin?

Edward Jones. Nothing but a thin Deal-Partition parts it from the Purser's Cabbin.

Mr. Vernon. Will you relate to Mr. Recorder and the Jury, what you know about the Murder of Mr. Goodere's Brother: Tell the whole you know concerning it.

Edward Jones. About Wednesday or Thursday before this happened, the Captain said to me, Cooper, get this Purser's Cabbin cleaned out, for he said he expected a Gentleman shortly to come on board. I clean'd it out; and on Sunday Evening the Gentleman came on board, when the People on Deck cried, Cooper, shew a Light. I brought a Light, saw the Captain going down the Cockpit Ladder, the Gentleman was halled down; he complained of a Pain in his Thigh by their halling him on board. The Captain asked asked him if he would have a Dram? he said no; for he had drank nothing but Water for two Years. The Captain ordered Mahony a Dram, he drank it: He also ordered one Jack Lee to put two Bolts on the Purser's Cabbin-Door. The Gentleman walked to and fro the Purser's Cabbin while they were nailing the Bolts on. He wanted to speak with one of the Officers. The Carpenter told him he was the Carpenter. Says the Gentleman, Do you understand what my Brother Sam. is going to do with me? and said, his Brother had brought him on board to murder him that Night. The Carpenter said he hoped not, but what was done was for his Good. The Captain said, they must not mind what his Brother said, for he had been mad for a Twelvemonth past. And the Captain went up again, and went into the Doctor's Room. I went to Bed about eight o'clock. Some time about eleven of the clock at Night I heard the Gentleman knock, and said, he wanted to ease himself; to which the Centinel gave no manner of heed. Is it not a shame, said he, to keep a Gentlemen in after this manner? At last some other Person spoke to the Centinel, and says, why don't you go up and acquaint the Captain of it, that the Gentleman may ease himself? Soon after Mahony comes down with a Bucket, for the Gentleman to ease himself. Mahony sat down in the Cabbin, and he and the Gentleman had a great deal of Discourse together: The Gentleman said he had been at the East-Indies, and told what he had got for his Merit; and Mahony said, some by good Friends. I heard the Gentleman, after Mahony was gone, pray to God to be his Comforter under his Afflictions. He said to himself, he knew that he was going to be murdered, and prayed that it might come to light by one means or another. I took no notice of it, because I thought him a crazy Man. I slept a little, and about two or three o'clock my Wife waked me. She said, Don't you hear the Noise that is made by the Gentleman? I believe they are killing him. I then heard him kick, and cry out, Here is twenty Guineas, take it; don't murder me; must I die! must I die! O my Life! and gave several Kecks with his Throat, and then he was still. I got up in my Bed upon my Knees, I saw a Light glimmering in at the Crack, and saw that same Man Mahony with a Candle in his Hand. The Gentleman was lying on one side. Charles White was there, and he put out his Hand to pull the Gentleman upright. I heard Mahony cry out, Damn ye, let us get his Watch out; but White said he could not get at it. I could not see his Pockets. White laid hold of him, went to tumbling him up to get out his Money, unbutton'd his Breeches to get out his Watch; I saw him lay hold of the Chain; White gave Mahony the Watch, who put it in his Pocket; and White put his Hand into one of the Gentleman's Pockets, and cursed that there was nothing but Silver: But he put his Hand in the other Pocket, and there he found Gold. White was going to give Mahony the Gold: Damn ye, says Mahony, keep it till by and by.

Mr. Recorder. In what Posture did Sir John lie at that time?

Edward Jones. He lay in a very uneasy manner, with one Leg up; and when they moved him, he still remained so; which gave me a Suspicion that he was dead. White put his Hand in another Pocket, took out nothing but a Piece of Paper, was going to read it; Damn ye, said Mahony, don't stand to read it. I saw a Person's Hand on the Throat of this Gentleman, and heard the Person say, 'tis done, and well done.

Mr. Recorder. Was that a third Person's Hand, or the Hand of Mahony or White?

Edward Jones. I cannot say whether it was a third Person's Hand or not. I saw but two Persons in the Cabbin. I did not see the Person, for it was done in a Moment. I can't swear I saw any more than two Persons in the Cabbin.

Mr. Recorder. Did you take notice of the Hand that was laid on Sir John's Throat?

Edward Jones. I did.

Mr. Recorder. Did it appear to you like the Hand of a common Sailor?

Edward Jones. No; it seemed whiter.

Mr. Vernon. You have seen two Hands held up at the Bar, I would ask you to which of them it was most like in colour?

Edward Jones. I have often seen Mahony's and White's Hands, and I thought the Hand was whiter than either of theirs; and I think it was neither of their Hands by the Colour of it.

Mr. Recorder. Was Sir John on the Floor, or on the Bed?

Edward Jones. On the Bed; but there was no Sheets: It was a Flock-bed, and nobody had lain there a great while.

Mr. Vernon. How long did the Cries and Noise which you heard continue?

Edward Jones. Not a great while; he cried like a Person going out of the World, very low. At my hearing it I would have got out in the mean time, but my Wife desired me not to go, for she was afraid there was somebody at the Door that would kill me.

Mr. Vernon. What more do you know concerning this Matter, or of Mahony and White's being afterwards put on shore?

Edward Jones. I heard some talking that the Yaul was to go to shore about Four of the Clock in the Morning, and some of us were called up, and I importuned my Wife to let me go out. I called, and asked who is Centinel? Duncan Buchanan answered, It is I. Oh, says I, is it you? I then thought myself safe. I jumped out in my Shirt, went to him, says I, there have been a devilish Noise To-night in the Cabbin, Duncan, do you know any thing of the Matter? they have certainly killed the Gentleman, what shall us do? I went to the Cabbin Door where the Doctor's Mate lodged, asked him if he had heard any thing To-night? I heard a great Noise, said he. I believe, said I, they have killed that Gentleman. He said, he believed so too. I drew aside the Scuttle that looked into the Purser's Cabbin from the Steward's Room, and cried, Sir, if you are alive speak. He did not speak. I took a long Stick, and endeavoured to move him, but found he was dead. I told the Doctor's Mate, that I thought he was the proper Person to relate the Matter to the Officer, but he did not care to do it then. If you will not, I will, said I. I went up to the Lieutenant, and desired him to come out of his Cabbin to me. What is the Matter? said he. I told him I believed there had been Murder committed in the Cock-pit upon the Gentleman who was brought on board last Night. Oh! don't say so, says the Lieutenant. In that Interim, whilst we were talking about it, Mr. Marsh the Midshipman came, and said, that there was an Order to carry White and Mabony on shore. I then swore they should not go on shore, for there was Murder committed. The Lieutenant said, Pray be easy, it can't be so; I don't believe the Captain would do any such thing. That Gentleman there, Mr. Marsh, went to ask the Captain, if Mabony and White must be put on shore? And Mr. Marsh returned again, and said, that the Captain said they should. I then said, it is certainly true that the Gentleman is murdered between them. I did not see Mabony and White that Morning, because they were put on shore. I told the Lieutenant, that if he would not take care of the Matter, I would write up to the Admiralty, and to the Mayor of Bristol. The Lieutenant wanted to get the Captain to drink a Glass of Wine; the Captain would not come out of his Cabbin: Then the Lieutenant went in first, I followed him. I told the Captain that my Chest had been broke open, and I desired Justice might be done. Then I seized him, and several others came to my Assistance.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Goodere, do you ask Mr. Jones any Questions?

Samuel Goodere. Do you know whether the Midshipman was sent away on the King's Business or else only to put those two Men on shore?

Edward Jones. I know not; you was the Captain of the Ship.

Mr. Recorder. Mabony, will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Mabony. Did you see me lay Hands on the Gentleman?

Edward Jones. Yes I did, as I have already related. (Margaret Jones sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Mrs. Jones, pray acquaint Mr. Recorder and the Jury what you know about the Murder of Sir John Dineley Goodere, (the Gentleman ordered by Mr. Goodere into the Purser's Cabbin.)

Margaret Jones. About seven o'clock in the Evening, the eighteenth of last January, the Captain (having been on shore) came on board, and came down into the Cock-pit, and asked if the Cabbin was clean? My Husband answered, Yes. On which the Captain gave Orders to bring down the Gentleman; and the Captain said to the Doctor, Doctor, I have got an old mad Fellow here, you must doctor him up as well as you can. They brought the Gentleman into the Cabbin, the Captain asked him how he did now? The Gentleman complained that he had a great Pain in his Thigh, he was hurted by the Mens halling him as they had done. The Captain asked him if he would drink a Dram of Rum? He answered, No; for he said he had drank nothing but Water for two Years past. The Captain gave a Dram to several Persons there; and he gave Orders for some Sheets to be brought; and he said to Mabony, As his Clothes are wet, do you pull them off: And the Gentleman said to Mabony, Don't strip me, Fellow, until I am dead. The Gentleman said, Brother Sam. what do you intend to do with me? The Captain told him, that he brought him there to save him from rotting in a Goal. About ten o'clock Mabony was left there; the Gentleman desired him to go; but Mabony said, I have Orders to abide here to take care of you. The Gentleman said to Mabony, I can abide by my self. Before the Captain went away, he bid Ma- bony to see if his Brother had any Knife about him. The Gentleman gave up his Knife to Mabony, desired him to care of it, for it was his Son's Knife. The Gentleman asked about the Knife several times in the Night. About twelve o'clock I went to sleep; about two o'clock I a-waked again: I heard the Gentleman talk to Mabony, but Mabony advised the Gentleman to go to sleep. He said, I cannot sleep. They talked together a great while. Mabony said, I am to go on shore in the morning, and if you have any Letters to send to Bristol, I will carry them for you. I heard somebody say to the Gentleman, You must lie still, and not speak a Word for your Life. Some Minutes after I heard a great Struggling; who it was, I don't know. The Gentlemen cried out, Murder, help for God's sake! and made several Kecks in his Throat as though somebody was stifling him. I shook my Husband, told him that somebody was stifling the Gentleman. I heard two People in the Cabbin whispering; I don't know who they were. The Gentleman cried out Murder again, Help for God's sake! He said, I have twenty Guineas in my Pocket, here take it; must I die! Oh my Life! And just about that time, before he was dead, somebody from the Outside offered to come into the Cabbin: But I heard one of the Persons on the Inside say, Keep out, you Negro; and then a great Noise was made, I thought the Cabbin would have been beat down. Some few Minutes after the Gentleman had done struggling, a Candle was brought; I soon got up and looked through the Crevice: I saw a Man, who I believe to be White, take the Gentleman by the Coat, and pulled him upright. I saw Mabony with a Candle in his Hand; I observed the other to put his Hand in the Gentleman's Pocket. One of them said, Damn ye, pull out his Watch. Then I saw the Person take hold of the Watch-string and pull it out, and he said to the other, Here 'tis, take it, and put it into thy Pocket. Then one of them put his Hand in another Pocket, and took it out, said, here's nothing but Silver; and then he searched another Pocket, and said, here it is; and pulled out a Green Purse: Soon after that, the Door was unbolted, I heard a Person say, Where shall I run? who I believe was Mabony; and the other, Charles White, said, Follow me, Boy. And they went to go upon Deck through the Hatch-hole, which is an uncommon way: And that is all I know.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Goodere and Mabony, do either of you ask this Witness any Questions?

Samuel Goodere. No.

Matthew Mabony. No.

(James Dudgeon sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Dudgeon, I think you are the Surgeon's Mate belonging to the Ruby?

James Dudgeon. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Vernon. Give Mr. Recorder and the Jury an account what you know relating to this Matter.

James Dudgeon. I am very sorry that I should come on this Occasion against Captain Goodere, because he ever behaved towards me in a genteel manner. The Week before this happened, I was told by one of the Officers, that the Captain was going to bring his Brother on board; and on Sunday the eighteenth of January, about the dusk of the Evening the Barge came down to the Ship. I was at that time walking the Quarter-deck: some some of our People seeing the Barge a coming, they said, our Captain is coming on board with his Brother sure enough; but instead of coming up the Quarter-deck, the Captain went down upon the Main-deck, and I still kept walking on the Quarter-deck, expecting to see the Gentleman when he went into the Great Cabbin; but I afterwards found that he was ordered down to the Cock-pit. Soon after, I went down there myself; and the Captain being there, said, Doctor, I have brought a Madman to you, I don't know what we shall do with him, but we must make the best of him that we can; and Mahony came down likewise: The Captain sent his Steward for a Bottle of Rum, Mahony had a dram of it. The Captain asked Sir John, if he would have one? Sir John replied, no; for, said he, I have not drank any thing of that nature for two Years past: he groaned several times. There was then one Cole at the Foot of the Ladder, to whom also the Captain gave a Dram: then there was a Centinel put upon the Cabbin-door; but Cole asked the Captain if he might go in, and the Captain said he might. The old Gentleman made a noise as the Captain went up the Ladder; the Captain told him, we have now brought you on board, and will take care you shall want for nothing. After the Captain was gone, Cole wanted to go in, but the Centinel would not let him; telling him, that his Orders were to let none in but Mahony: however Cole went up, and got leave of the Captain to go in, and he did go in. Soon after this, the Captain came down again to the Cock-pit, and came into my Place, and sat down; and after talking of things promiscuously, he said, he believed it would be proper for me to go and feel his Brother's Pulse; or else, Doctor, he said, do you chuse to leave it alone till To-morrow Morning? I made answer, that To-morrow Morning might be the best time; because the Gentleman may be much confused, by being brought down on the Water. Come, said he, let us go in now; for I believe, it will be as well. If you please, Sir, said I, I will; so the Centinel opened the Door, and we both went in. Immediately after, the Captain went out again, and forthwith the Door was shut upon me; which very much surpris'd me, to think that the Captain should leave me with a Madman, and I observed the Captain to peep through: I then asked the Gentleman what he mostly complain'd of, and felt his Pulse; he then made some Groans, and told me, that he had got a great cold last Week at Bath, and that he felt a severe Pain in his Head. I was going to ask him some more Questions, but the Captain called me, and said, Don't ask him any more questions, but only feel his Pulse. Then the Centinel opened the Door, and I came out, and the Captain and I went into my Place again. Well, Doctor, said he, how do you find his Pulse? Why, Sir, said I, his Pulse are very regular. Why, said he, I believe he was pretty much hurried upon the Water. Then the Captain went up the Ladder, and a little while after he came down again; there were two Midshipmen with me in my Place, and when the Captain came in, they went to go out, but he desired one of them to stay, for he had something to say to him, because he was to go up for Letters in the Morning: so we sat down, and talked of various things; but I informed the Captain, that the old Gentleman have had hard Lodging To-night. Why, said he, I would put another Bed in there, and have given him clean Sheets, but he would not hear any thing of this kind. Then said he to me, Doctor, I believe it will not be amiss to take an Inventory of every thing he has about him, for fear it should be reported that he is robbed. I replied, Sir, it may not be amiss. By and by Cole came tumbling down the Ladder, the Midship-man opened the Curtain to see who it was; Captain, said he, that is Cole; and I then told that Cole had been drunk a great Part of that Day. Soon after that the Captain opens the Curtain, and sees Mahony stand by the Centry. Mahony said he, I thought you had been about the thing which I sent you to do; which, I take to be getting the Money out of the Gentleman's Pocket. No, Sir, said he, I chuse to do it after he is asleep. Very well, said the Captain. Then the Captain spoke to the Midship-man, and said, Mr. Morsb, you are to go up for Letters to-morrow, and if any one takes notice of what was done to-day, you may tell the People that it is my Brother, and he is very much disordered in his Brains, and I have got him on board in hopes of getting Relief for him. Sometimes, Doctor, says he, he can talk as well as you or I; but at other times, he is very much out of order. About eight o'clock I was for going to bed, but did not till an Hour and a half after; and about that time Sir John was making a great noise, and asking who is without the Door, what must I do my affairs in the Cabbin, what a shame is it, will not you let me have any thing to do it in? But nobody made any Reply. Upon which I said to the Centinel, why don't you answer the Gentleman, are not you ashamed of it? Upon which, I suppose, one went up to the Captain, and he came down, and said, he was sorry that the Gentleman should make such a Disturbance; but he hoped, that the first Night would be the worst: Upon which the Captain went up, and Mahony went in; and I heard the Gentleman and him talking together, and he asked Mahony, what his Brother was going to do with him? What, says he, does he say, I am mad? Formerly I used to be so, but now I have not tasted any thing stronger than Water these two Years, But, said he, to be sure these Fellows are not Sailors, who attacked me this day; they are not Sailors, for if so, they are sadly degenerated from what Sailors were formerly; for I myself have been at Sea, and might have been a Commander. About half an Hour after Ten, I fell asleep, but was very uneasy. About twelve the Centinel was sent for to go up to the Captain, but soon came down again; and about half an Hour after two I awaked, hearing some stir in the Cock-pit; and I heard Mahony's Voice in the Cabbin, saying, Lie still, and sleep, Sir. In a short time after that I heard a Struggle, and Sir John cried out, here is twenty Guineas for you, take it; must I die? And it seem'd to me by his speaking, that they were stifling his Mouth. Upon which the Person who stood Centry on the Cabbin turned the Key, whereupon Mahony cried out in a terrible pucker, Damn ye, keep the Door fast. Upon which I spake, and said, What is the matter, what a noise is that? And the Person who stood Centinel made answer, Nothing at all, nothing at all; so I lay still a while, and all was pretty quiet. A little time after that, Mahony called for a Light and the Cabbin-door was opened, and a Light handed handed in; the Cock-pit was then in Darkness, so all was quiet again for some time. Soon after that the Cabbin-door was opened again, and I heard as if two or three People were coming out of the Cabbin, and heard Mabony say, Which way shall I go? And somebody made answer, You may go through the Hatch-hole. He repeated the Question, Which way shall I go? And the other answered, By the Ship-side. I then thought somebody had been murdering Sir John sure enough, and they are carrying off his Body that way; at the same time a Person stept up the Cock-pit Ladder, and I heard the Captain's Voice, and he said, Centry, if he makes any more noise, let me know it; but I thought within myself, that he was past that. After this was past, all was pretty quiet, and the Centinel kept walking without my Room: I was cautious of speaking to him, not knowing who he was; but soon after one of the Captain's Servants came down to the Store-room for Liquor, and he asked the Centry whether he had made any noise lately? To which he reply'd, you may tell the Captain that the Gentleman hath been at the Lock. About half an Hour after, the Person who was upon the Watch came to me, and asked, If I had any Commands on shore, for the Boat was going up? I told him no; but, perceiving by his Voice who it was, I called him to come to me in the dark, and I whisper'd and said to him, Mr. Heathorne, here hath been a hellish Cabal to-night, I believe they have murdered the Gentleman; doth Mabony go on shore? He answered, that he did; then, said I, the thing is done. I then asked who was the Centry without my Door, and he told me; whereupon I called the Centry to me, and asked him, what noise and cabal is this that hath been here to-night? He said, he did not know; but the Captain, said he, hath been down several times to-night, and that he had taken the Sword from him. Just after this, in came Edward Jones the Cooper, and his Wife, shaking and trembling; and said, White and Mabony had murdered the Gentleman sure enough. I told them, I did believe they were both going on shore; and I would, said I, have you tell the Lieutenant what you saw of the matter, and let him know that I am of the same opinion with you: but do you first go into the Steward's Room and draw the Scuttle, and then you'll see whether he is dead, or no. Upon which they went and drew the Scuttle, and a Cat fled in their Face, and they found the Gentleman lay in the same posture as White and Mabony left him. I then bid them go and tell the Lieutenant the matter, that those Fellows might be prevented from going ashore; but yet, said I, we can't stop them neither, seeing they have the Captain's Orders. Then went Jones up forthwith, and, I believe, told the Lieutenant; and I also stept up to him just after, and told him, that I believed Sir John was actually murdered; for said I, there have been a terrible noise in the Cock-pit to-night, and the Captain himself was there this Morning when 'twas almost three o'clock, and the Men that were with him are going on shore. The Lieutenant answered, that he could not stop these Men from going ashore, because the Captain hath given them leave; so, said he, we must let it alone till Morning, to see whether the Gentleman is dead, or no. About eight o'clock in the Morning I went to him again; but he told me it was best to defer it till we did see whether the Captain sends down to him, or not. It is, said he, no way proper for us to think of seizing the Captain, till we see that the Gentleman is actually dead, and have reason to think he is murdered. When the Captain's Breakfast was ready, he sent for the Lieutenant and me to come and breakfast with him: accordingly we did; and soon after there was a Shore-boat came towards us, and then Mr. Chamberlayne came on board, and went to the Lieutenant's Cabbin; and the Lieutenant told that Gentleman, that they were then going to seize the Captain, for it was believed that he had been accessory to the Murder of his Brother. Immediately a Message was brought by one of the Men, that Sir John was dead: upon which the Captain was forthwith seized by eight or ten Men.

Mr. Vernon. How far was your Cabbin from the Purser's?

James Dudgeon. I can't say certainly, but believe about three Yards.

Mr. Vernon. Did you view the Body of the Deceased whilst he lay dead in the Purser's Cabbin?

James Dudgeon. I did.

Mr. Vernon. And did you find any visible Marks of Violence upon him?

James Dudgeon. Sir, I saw no Rope, but he had a Neck-cloth about his Neck, and there were some Marks in his Neck, which looked like the scratching of Nails; and I believe that he was strangled, the Blood came out of his Nose and Mouth.

(William Macguinis sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Was you on board the Ruby Man of War at the time when this matter happened?

William Macguinis. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. Vernon. Then give an account of what you know concerning it.

William Macguinis. The Night in which the Gentleman came on board, I was appointed to be the Centinel at twelve o'clock; but when the Gentleman came on board, I was in my Hammock. I was called up to stand Centry in the Gun-room; and (please you, my Lord) I had not been long on my Post before I saw the Captain come down; and soon after I saw Mabony, that Man there (pointing at the Prisoner Mabony) also come down. I stopt him, and asked him where he was going? Damn your Blood, you Son of a Bitch, what is that to you; how busy you make yourself? And when he came to the bottom of the Cock-pit-Ladder, I heard him say to another Man, Come here, this is the way? But who it was he spake to, I know not. This was a little after two o'clock. The Captain espied me, he made towards me, and waved his naked Cutlash, and said, Stand back! stand back!

Mr. Vernon. Where was Mr. Goodere, when he advanced towards you, and bid you stand back?

William Macguinis. The Captain was down in the Cock-pit then.

Mr. Vernon. Had he any thing in his Hand?

William Macguinis. Yes; he had a Cutlash. Duncan Buchanan had been standing Centinel in the Cock-pit, but was released by the Captain.

Mr. Vernon. What more did you see?

William Macguinis. I saw Mabony go into the Purser's Cabbin, and afterwards, I saw the Captain and Mabony come up again from the Cock-pit.

Mr. Vernon. About what time?

William Macguinis. I believe it was then about three o'clock.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Goodere and Mabony, do either of you ask this Witnesses any Questions?

Samuel Goodere. No.

Matthew Mabony. No.

(Mr. Walker sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. I think you are the City Mason?

Walker. I am.

Mr. Vernon. Look upon that Watch, and give an Account how you came by it?

Walker. I found it in the Necessary-house, at the Brockware-Boat, a Public-house on the Back.

Mr. Vernon. Who kept that Public-house at the time you found the Watch?

Walker. One Culliford.

Mr. Vernon. Was it accidentally, or upon Search that you found the Watch?

Walker. I searched for it in the Necessary-house, by the Justices Orders; when I found it, the Case was in one Place, and the Watch in another, about a Yard apart.

(Sarab Culliford sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Look upon that Watch, Mrs. Culliford; you live at the Sign of the Brockware-Boat on the Back, do you not?

Sarab Culliford. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Vernon. Do you take that to be the same Watch, that was found by Mr. Walker, the City Mason, in your Necessary-house?

Sarab Culliford. Yes, Sir; I believe it is the same.

Mr. Vernon. From whom did you receive it, before it was thrown into the Necessary-house?

Sarab Culliford. I received it from Mabony's Hands, that Man there; (pointing to the Prisoner Mabony.)

Mr. Vernon. How long before he was apprehended?

Sarab Culliford. I had it in my Possession about two Hours before, and two Hours after he was taken up.

Mr. Vernon. And what became of it afterwards?

Sarab Culliford. This young Man (meaning the Prisoner Mabony) was drinking in my House, he pulled out the Watch, delivered it to me, and desired me to keep it for him until he did call for it: Some Time after I had Business to go out, I went into Town, and had the Watch in my Pocket; when I came back, my Children told me that the Constable had been there to search the House for it, which much surprized me; I went and threw the Watch into the Necessary-house, for fear I should come in Trouble.

(Josias Fussell sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Fussell, look on that Handkerchief, and give an Account from whom you had it, and when?

Josias Fussell. I had this Handkerchief from Mabony, on the 19th of January last, the Night when we took him, I found it upon his Neck; when he was seized, he took it off; I took it out of his Hand, it was bloody then as it is now, I put it into my Pocket.

(Mr. John Mitchel, Chief Clerk to the Town-Clerk, sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Mitchel, what Paper is that in your Hand?

Mr. Mitchel. The Examination of Matthew Mabony, the Prisoner at the Bar, taken before Henry Combe, Esq; Mayor.

Mr. Vernon. Did you see the Prisoner Mabony sign it in his Presence?

Mr. Mitchel. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Vernon. Did he do it voluntarily?

Mr. Mitchel. He did.

Mr. Vernon. Did you see Mr. Mayor sign that Examination?

Mr. Mitchel. Yes, I did.

Mr. Vernon. Then I desire it may be read?

Mr. Recorder. Read the Examination?

Clerk reads the Examination, in these Words:

City and County } to wit; THE voluntary Examination and Confession of Matthew Mabony, a Native of Ireland, aged about 21 Years. This Examinant confessedli and faith, That about sixteen or seventeen Days ago, and several times since, he was desired by Mr. Goodere, Captain of the Ruby Man of War, now lying at King-Road, in the County of the City of Bristol, to seize his, the Captain's Brother, Sir John Dineley Goodere, Bart. and bring him on board the said Man of War; and that on Tuesday last, this Examinant and the Crew belonging to the Man of War's Barge, and Edward Mac-Daniel, John Mac-Graree, and William Hammon, Privateer's Men, were placed by the said Captain at the White-Hart Alehouse opposite St. Augustine's Church, in order to seize Sir John Dineley Goodere that Day; but it so happened, the Captain forbid them to do it then. And that on Sunday last, this Examinant, the said Barge's Crew, or the greatest Part of them, and George Best Cockstern of the Barge, the said Edward Mac-Daniel, John Mac-Graree, William Hammon, and one Charles Bryer, Privateer's Men as aforesaid, were again placed at the White-Hart aforesaid, to seize the said Sir John Dineley Goodere, and waited there for some Time; and he coming out of Mr. Jarrit Smith's House, and coming under St. Austine's Church-Yard Wall, this Examinant and his Comrades pursued him, and near the Pump there, they came up with him, and told him there was a Gentleman wanted to speak with him; and he asking where the Gentleman was, was answered a little ways off, and he went quietly a little way, but no one appearing, he resisted and refused to go, whereupon this Examinant and Comrades sometimes forcibly halled and push'd, and at other Times carried him over St. Austine's Butts, Captain Day's Rope-walk, and along the Road to the Hot-Well, (Captain Goodere being sometimes a little behind, and sometimes amongst the Croud all the way) till they came to the Slip where the Barge lay. But Sir John was very unwilling to go, made the utmost Resistance, and cryed out Murder a great many Times; and when he was put into the Barge, called out and desired somebody would go to Mr. Jarrit Smith, and tell him of his ill Usage, and that his Name was Sir John Dineley. Whereupon the Captain clapt his Hand on Sir John's Mouth to stop his speaking, and told him not to make such a Noise, he had got him out of the Lion's Mouth (meaning the Lawyers Hands) and would take care he should not spend his Estate; and bid the Bargemen row away, which they did; and in their Passage to the Man of War, the two Brothers bicker'd all the Way: But when they came to the Man of War, Sir John went on board board as well as he could, and the Captain took him down into the Purser's Cabbin, and staid a little Time with him, and treated him with a Dram of Rum, and then left him for a considerable Time. And in the Interim sent for this Examinant into his, the Captain's Cabbin, and there told this Examinant he must murder his Brother, for that he was mad, and should not live till Four o'Clock in the Morning; and this Examinant reasoning with him, and telling him he would not be concerned, and that he thought he had brought him there with Intent only to bring him to Reason, and take care that he should not spend his Estate in Law, and to have a perfect Reconciliation; but the Captain still insisting, that as this Examinant had taken him, he should do it; and this Examinant then saying, he was not able to do it of himself; the Captain replied, if this Examinant could get nobody else, he and this Examinant must do it themselves. And then ordered him to call one Elisba Cole, and he being too drunk to undertake such an Affair, bid this Examinant call one Charles White, a very stout lusty Fellow, and the Captain gave him a Dram, and bid him sit down, and soon gave other Drams, and ask'd if he could fight, and told him here's a Madman, he must be murdered, and thou shalt have a handsome Reward. And this Examinant, the said Charles White, and the Captain, being all agreed to murder the said Sir John Dineley Goodere, the Captain then propos'd the Method, and produced a Piece of Half-inch Rope of about nine Foot long, and Charles White having made a Noose in the Rope, the Captain said, applying himself to this Examinant and the said Charles White, You must strangle him with this Rope, and at the same time gave the Handkerchief now produced, that in case he made a Noise, to stop his Mouth; and said, I will stand Centinel over the Door whilst you do it; and accordingly instantly went out of his own Cabbin, and turned the Centinel from the Purser's Cabbin-Door, and let this Examinant and White into the Purser's Cabbin, where Sir John Dineley Goodere was lying in his Clothes on a Bed: The Captain having pulled to the Door, and standing Centinel himself, the said White first strangled Sir John with his Hands, and then put the Rope about Sir John's Neck, and halled it tight, and Sir John struggled, and endeavoured to cry out, but could not. And this Examinant confesses, that whilst White was strangling Sir John, this Examinant took care to keep him on the Bed, and when one End of the Rope was loose, this Examinant drew and held it tight; and thus each bore a part till Sir John was dead; and they having rifled the deceased of his Watch and Money, knock'd at the Door to be let out; and the Captain called out, Have you done? They replied, Yes. He opened the Door, and asked again, Is he dead? and being answered in the Affirmative, and having a Light, swore by God he'd be sure he was dead; and then went in himself, and returning, locked the Door and put the Key in his Pocket, and they all went together to the Captain's Cabbin again, and there this Examinant gave the Captain Sir John's Watch, and the Captain gave this Examinant his own Watch in lieu of it; and then the Captain gave them both some Money, and White afterwards gave this Examinant eight Guineas, as part of the Money he took out of the Deceased's Pocket, and then the Captain ordered them to be put on shore in his own Boat. And further, this Examinant confesses, and saith, That before and after the Murder was committed, the Captain, Charles White, and this Examinant consulted what to do with the Corpse; and the Captain propos'd to keep it two or three Days in the Ship, and as he expected to go to Sea, would sew it up in a Hammock, or something else, and there throw it overboard: And that before this Examinant and his Comrades were sent to seize Sir John, as is before set forth, they were ordered by Captain Goodere, that, if they met with any Resistance they should repel Force by Force, and were prepared with short heavy Sticks, or Bludgeons for that purpose.

Matthew Mabony.

Mr. Recorder. [Speaking to the Jury.] Gentlemen, you are to take notice, that this Confession is Evidence against the Prisoner Mabony alone, and so far only ought you to regard it. It is no Evidence, nor ought you to lay any Strefs upon it, as against the Prisoner Goodere.

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Recorder, we have gone through with our Evidence of the Fact, and here we should have rested it, were it not that Mr. Goodere, by his strict Enquiry into the Spot where the Ship lay, seems to question whether it was within this County or not: A Question, which, I confess, I no more expected to hear of, than whether we ourselves are now within it. However to obviate all Pretence of that Kind, and give the Gentlemen of this Jury as full Satisfaction in the Point, as undoubtedly the Grand Inquest for the Body of this County had before they found the Bill, we shall beg leave to call a Witness or two, just to shew that King-Road has been constantly taken to lie within the City and County of Bristol; and that accordingly the Sheriffs Officers of Bristol, from time to time, have used to execute both the City and County Procefs in King-Road; which, I apprehend, will of itself be satisfactory Evidence, without entring into any other Disquisition of the County Limits. Call Mr. Wint.

(John Wint sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Wint, what Officer are you in Bristol?

John Wint. I am an Officer to the Sheriffs of Bristol, and have been so for these thirty Years and upwards.

Mr. Vernon. Have you been used, as an Officer to the Sheriffs of Bristol, to serve Procefs in King-Road?

John Wint. I have served Procefs in King-Road forty or fifty Times.

Mr. Vernon. How far down the River?

John Wint. Very often down as far as Poffet Point.

Mr. Recorder. What Kind of Procefs have you served there?

John Wint. Town Actions out of the Mayor and Sheriffs Court, and out of the Piepowder Court.

Mr. Recorder. Have you ever executed Procefs there which was directed to the Sheriffs of Bristol?

John Wint. Yes, Sir, I have served Sheriffs Warrants, or Writs, issued from above, out of the Court of King's-Bench and Common-Pleas to the Sheriffs of Bristol.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Goodere, will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Samuel Goodere. Yes, Sir: Is all that is called King-Road within the Liberty of the City of Bristol?

John Wint. Yes it is.

Samuel Goodere. Are you sure of it?

John Wint. I know where the Ship Ruby lay was within the City of Bristol.

Samuel Goodere. How do you know that?

John Wint. Because I have been 'down with the Mayor to the Holmes.

Mr. Vernon. Call Mr. Lowden.

(Mr. Lowden sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. What Officer are you, Mr. Lowden?

Lowden. I have been an Officer in this City about nineteen Years: I have served Town Actions, Town Warrants, and Warrants made out upon Writs from the Courts of Westminster-Hall, and the Admiralty, in King-Road: And any Part of King-Road on the Southward of the Denney, we always take it to be in the Liberties of Bristol.

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Recorder, we have done.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Goodere, and Matthew Mahony, the Counsel for the King has gone thro' with his Evidence, and now is your Time to enter upon your Defence.

Samuel Goodere. May it please your Lordship, I shall endeavour to give you and the Jury as little Trouble as possible. I shall call Evidence to prove that the Gentleman was a Lunatick, and disordered in his Senses, and I was doing my best to take care of him.

Call Mrs. Getbins.

Mr. Recorder. What do you call her to prove?

Samuel Goodere. I call her to prove that before my Brother was taken on board, I was to take an Upper-room of her to put him in, where he might be taken care of, to cure his Madness.

Mr. Recorder. What, Mr. Goodere, do you admit then that you did take your Brother on board?

Samuel Goodere. I do admit that I carried my Brother on board. I went in the Boat along with him.

(Mrs. Getbins sworn.)

Samuel Goodere. Mrs. Getbins, did I not speak to you a Fortnight or three Weeks before my Brother was taken on board the Ship, to have a Garret of you to put him in, and that Mahony was to have five Pounds a Month to take care of him?

Mrs. Getbins. The Prisoner Captain Goodere, did ask me if I had not a Garret to let him keep his Brother in, for that he was a Mad-man: And Captain Goodere never made it a Secret that he intended to take and keep his Brother as a Mad-man.

Samuel Goodere. Whether I did not tell you that Mahony was to take care of my Brother a Fortnight or three Weeks before he was taken on board? Speak to the time as near as you can recollect; and whether you knew that Mahony was to have five Pounds a Month, and that I made no manner of Secret of it, and that I endeavoured to take care of him as a Lunatick.

VOL. VI.

Mrs. Getbins. Sir, I have already said that you spoke to me about a Room to put your Brother in, but what you mention about Mahony, I know nothing of that.

Mr. Vernon. Pray is King-Road in the Road to your House?

Mrs. Getbins. No, Sir.

Mr. Vernon. Was your Garret a proper Place of Accommodation for a Gentleman, and one who was esteemed an English Baronet think you? Pray, do you keep a Mad-house, Madam?

Mrs. Getbins. No.

Mr. Vernon. Don't you think such a Confinement would have been the way to have made him mad?

Mr. Recorder. Was any Person as you know to have taken care of him in your Garret?

Mrs. Getbins. I have heard the Captain talk with his own Doctor about it.

Samuel Goodere. I shall give you and the Jury as little trouble as may be. I have an Evidence in Relation to Mahony and White's going away at Four o'Clock in the Morning, because it is charged that I sent them away. The Boat went away in the King's Service to bring Letters.

(Mr. Marsh sworn.)

Samuel Goodere. Did you go ashore in the Morning about the King's Business, or what Business did you go about?

Mr. Marsh. I had an Order about Eight o'Clock the Night Sir John was brought on board to go up in the Morning to Bristol for the Letters from the Admiralty, and about Four of the Clock in the Morning I was called up to go; but the Lieutenant seemed much disordered, and bid me come to him before I set out. I waited on the Lieutenant, and told him, that White and Mahony said they had Liberty to go on shore, that the Captain had given them Liberty to go; the Lieutenant said, he knew nothing of it. But as it is always my way, before I carry any body off, I said, I would go to the Captain and ask leave. I went to the Captain, and asked him, if White and Mahony had Liberty from him to go on shore? and he said, Yes, let them go.

Samuel Goodere. Mr. Marsh, did you go upon the King's Business, or on purpose to take up these Men?

Mr. Marsh. I went about the King's Business.

Mr. Vernon. But it was after Sir John was brought on board, that Mr. Goodere ordered you to go up?

Mr. Marsh. Yes, Sir, it was.

Mr. Vernon. Did any body else go up with you, besides Mahony and White?

Mr. Marsh. No, there did not.

Mr. Vernon. Did Mr. Goodere give you Orders to put them on shore in any particular Place?

Mr. Marsh. I will do Justice between Man and Man; the Captain did not give me Orders to put them on shore in any particular Place.

Mr. Vernon. Were they landed publickly or privately?

Mr. Marsh. I put them on shore at the Gibb, about six of the clock in the Morning.

Samuel Goodere. Now, may it please you, Sir, I shall shew that Mahony had business at Bristol that Day by Appointment, to receive some Wages that was due to him; for which purpose I shall call Mr. Dagg.

(Abel Dagg, Keeper of Newgate, sworn.)

Samuel Goodere. Do you know any thing of Captain Mervin, and of Mabony's coming to Bristol on the Monday to settle an Affair with him?

Abel Dagg. There was one Captain James Mervin who failed into this Port, and on his coming was charged as a Debtor in my House, at the Suit of some Gentleman in London, in an Action of three or four hundred Pounds. Mabony was one of his Sailors until he was prest, and he charged the said Mervin with an Action for his Wages. Captain Mervin had a desire to make up the matter with Mabony. I went to the Captain of the Man of War the Tuesday or Wednesday before this Affair happened, which was the first time I ever saw him, to the best of my knowledge: The Captain said he would meet me the Monday following, in order to accommodate the difference.

Mr. Vernon. Was Mabony appointed to meet you that Day, or not?

Mr. Recorder. Mind the Question, was Mabony to come that Monday?

Abel Dagg. The Captain made an Appointment, my Lord, to meet on the Monday; and I told Mr. Taylor the Attorney, that Mabony was to come on shore that day, to make up the matter between him and Mervin.

Mr. Vernon. I would ask you another Question; Had White too any Affair to make up at Bristol?

Abel Dagg. No, I know nothing of that.

Samuel Goodere. Now I call Bridget King.

Mr. Recorder. What do you call her for?

Samuel Goodere. Touching the Lunacy of Sir John Dineley.

(Bridget King sworn.)

Samuel Goodere. Mrs. King, will you give the Court an account of what you know of the Lunacy of my Brother Sir John Dineley.

Bridget King. Please you, my Lord, I think he was mad; for he would get up at two or three of the clock in the Morning, and call his Servants up, and fall a singing; and then he would go to bed again, and swear it was but twelve o'clock at Night, and lie a-bed all Day. He would send his Boy out all over his Grounds to pick up Stones, and have the Wheelbarrow rattling about the Streets on a Sunday: he hath ringed the Bell to call his Servants up to his Bed-side, and when they were come up, he would ask them what they did there, and swear they were come to shoot him? He himself hath gone over all his Grounds on a Sunday to pick Sticks, and hath sent his Servants to Market when there was none; and he would be busy in every thing, and hang on the Pot himself; and he hath been quite raving mad.

Mr. Vernon. Did you live as a Servant with Sir John?

Bridget King. I lived as a Servant with him in London, and he came down for the Air to Tockington; he brought me down to go to Bath.

Mr. Vernon. How long did you continue with him?

Bridget King. A Twelvemonth, Sir.

Mr. Vernon. And how durst you venture to live so long with a Mad-man? He did not go mad for love of you, I hope? Have you lived any time in Bristol?

Bridget King. No.

Mr. Vernon. Then I suppose you came but now from London.

Bridget King. Yes, I did.

Samuel Goodere. Do you believe he was a Mad-man?

Bridget King. In the Actions that I have seen by him, I have reason to think he was a Mad-man.

(Mrs. Mary Stafford sworn.)

Samuel Goodere. Mrs. Stafford, will you tell his Lordship and the Jury what you know of Sir John being a Lunatick?

Mary Stafford. Sir John hired me for a House-keeper in London, and told me he had a great many Servants, and he wanted a House-keeper. When he brought me down, he ordered me to his Seat at Tockington; where, he said, he had a great deal of Company frequently. When I came there, I found there was nothing in what he had told me; for, instead of a great many Servants, he had but one: a poor old shat-tered House, ready to tumble down about one's ears, and the Household Goods all to pieces: he was a Mad-man; for if I had followed his Directions in any thing, I should have done mischief. He hath sent me and the rest of his Servants to Thornbury Market, when there was none; he hath ringed the Bell to call his Servants to come to his Bed-side to him, and when we have come up to him, he hath asked us, what we did there? Sir, said I, you called me up; he hath said, he did not: and after we had been there a quarter of an Hour, he would take a Knife, Fork, Glass-Bottle, or any thing that came in his way, to throw at us, asking of us, what did we come to rob him? And I was afraid of my Life, to live with him. I do believe he was a Mad-man, or else he would never have acted as he did: he would go into the Kitchen, and take the Pot and hang it on the Fire. I style him a Mad-man by his Actions.

Mr. Vernon. And must he therefore be hanged himself like a mad Dog, think you?

Mary Stafford. I know nothing of that, Sir.

Mr. Vernon. How long did you live with Sir John?

Mary Stafford. Three Months, Sir.

Samuel Goodere. Call Mr. Robert Cock.

Mr. Recorder. What do you call him to prove?

Samuel Goodere. My Lord, in order to prove Sir John Dineley a Lunatick. Mr. Cock, will you give an account to my Lord and the Jury what you know of the Lunacy of Sir John Dineley?

(Robert Cock sworn.)

Robert Cock. My Lord, I have known Mr. Dineley at Charlton for some Years; I have been several times in his Company; I have seen him do several Acts of Lunacy as a Mad-man.

Mr. Vernon. Where do you live?

Robert Cock. I live in Cumberland, when I am at home.

Mr. Vernon. Are you of any Business?

Robert Cock. I am an Officer belonging to his Majesty.

Mr. Vernon. What kind of Officer?

Robert Cock. A Salt Officer.

Samuel Goodere. I will not give your Lordship and the Jury much more trouble. I am entirely innocent; they have not proved that I was present at the Death of Sir John Dineley.

Mr.

Mr. Recorder. Don't deceive yourself; though they have not proved that you was actually in the Cabbın, when Sir John was murdered, yet they have given Evidence of that, which (if the Jury give Credit to) will amount to Presence in the eye of the Law.

Samuel Goodere. I shall now call some Witneses to my Character, and likewise to shew how improbable it is, that I should be guilty of the Murder of my Brother. Call Mr. Pritchard.

(Mr. Pritchard sworn.)

Mr. Pritchard. I have known Mr. Goodere, the Prisoner at the Bar, many Years: He always bore the Character of a good Husband, a good Neighbour, and a kind Friend.

Samuel Goodere. I shall call a Person who saw the Will of Sir John Dineley; and then any body would think that I should be the maddest Man in the World to commit a Murder that I knew would be Forty Thousand Pounds Damage to me. It was my business, considering the Circumstance of the Will, and that I was Sir John's Heir at Law, at all events to preserve him. Call Mr. Watkins.

(Reverend Mr. Watkins sworn.)

Samuel Goodere. Mr. Watkins, did not you see or hear the Contents of Sir John Dineley's Will, and did you not tell me presently after the Will was made the Contents of it, and how long was that before his Death?

Mr. Watkins. It was above three Months, or half a Year before his Death, to the best of my Knowledge. It was so long ago, as you dined with me at Croftborne.

Samuel Goodere. Did you not inform me, that that Will did cut me off of every thing, and gave the Estate to the Foots; and that Sir John told you so?

Mr. Watkins. Sir John told me that he had made his Will, and had cut his Brother off from every thing; and that he had given the Estate to the Foots: of which I told Mr. Goodere soon after.

Samuel Goodere. How long ago?

Mr. Watkins. I can't tell exactly; about half a Year, or three quarters of a Year, it might be.

Mr. Vernon. They have been giving Sir John the Character of being a Lunatick; I think, Sir, you are Minister of Croftborne, and must, I presume, have been pretty conversant with Sir John, and a frequent Witness of his Behaviour in that Neighbourhood; be pleased therefore to speak what you know, as to his Sanity or Infanity of Mind.

Mr. Watkins. Sir John's Character in my opinion hath been very much misrepresented to the World. During my Acquaintance with him, I have found him to be a good Neighbour, and a kind Friend: He was a Man of strong Passions; if any one affronted him, he would let the Party know that he did resent it. All his Tenants of our Country, and those I have conversed with say, that he was one of the best of Landlords.

Mr. Vernon. I don't ask you, Sir, concerning his moral Character; but whether he was in his Senses, or not?

Mr. Watkins. In his Senses! I saw him last Christmas, he was making up his Accounts with several of his Tenants; he was then in very good Understanding.

Mr. Vernon. Pray did you ever know him visited with Lunacy?

Mr. Watkins. I never did; but on the contrary, I take him to have been a Man that always had his Senses in a regular Exercise.

Mr. Vernon. Do you know, Sir, whether there was any Misunderstanding between the two Brothers?

Mr. Watkins. There has been a long Misunderstanding between them.

Mr. Vernon. What have you heard the Prisoner Mr. Goodere say, in relation to Sir John's making his Will?

Mr. Watkins. I believe he told me, that Sir John had not power to make a Will: I told him it was my Opinion, if they would be reconciled together, Sir John's Will would not stand.

(Mr. Thomas sworn.)

Samuel Goodere. Mr. Thomas, how long have you known me, and what was my Character?

Mr. Thomas. I have known the Prisoner, Mr. Samuel Goodere, a great many Years, have very often been in his Company: I never found but that he ever behaved with all the Good-nature that possibly could be. I always took him to be a good-natured well-behaved Man, and he is a Man well-beloved in his Country.

(Mr. Ashfield sworn.)

Mr. Ashfield. I have known Mr. Goodere a great many Years, I never heard any ill of him till this Affair; he is reputed in the Country of a general good Character. I have been concerned for him in several Suits, I never knew any ill of him.

Mr. Vernon. Pray, Sir, what have you heard Mr. Goodere say, concerning his Brother's cutting off the Entail of his Estate?

Mr. Ashfield. I have heard Mr. Goodere say, that his Brother had no power to cut off the Entail, and that he would set the Recovery aside; I have heard him say that forty times.

Mr. Vernon. What is your opinion as to the Sanity or Infanity of Sir John?

Mr. Ashfield. I never thought him a Mad-man; I always thought him one of the best Understanding in the whole Family.

(Reverend Mr. Rogers sworn.)

Mr. Rogers. I have been acquainted with the Prisoner Goodere several Years, I know he hath behaved very well, done good Offices to all Mankind; and I never heard any other of him:

[Mr. George Forcevil sworn.]

Mr. Forcevil. The Prisoner Goodere hath been my Neighbour for fourteen or fifteen Years; he hath always behaved well in his Neighbourhood, and has a very good Character; he constantly attended his Church twice a Day Sundays, and would be there at Prayers almost every Day; he was always a sober Man, and a good-humoured Gentleman. I thought him to be a good Man.

Samuel Goodere. Mr. Recorder, I would not give you and the Jury any more trouble in relation to my Character; all I have to say further is, my being deprived of Evidence in my Behalf, by reason of my Disorder and the Sickness in the Goal, which hath prevented my Friends from coming to me to advise me about making my Defence; and also of having several Witneses from on board the Ship, which might have been of great Service to me. I had an Order from the Lords of the Admiralty to require them to stay on shore, if I had occasion for them; but, as the Ship was gone before the Letter came to my hands, I have no occasion now to tell the Names of the Persons.

[Mr. Goodere held up the Letter in his hand, but the Court did not receive it.]

Mr. Frederick. Mr. Recorder, there have been several Aspersions published in the New-papers, to the prejudice of Mr. Goodere; there has been a Pamphlet also published, which I have here in my hand, intitled, The Bristol Fratricide; but I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will take no notice of, nor be influenced by them against the Prisoner.

Mr. Vernon. I dare say they will have no Regard to any Book, but that on which they have been sworn: those who know them and their Characters, must certainly think so.

[The Jury declared they had never seen any such Pamphlet, or Papers.]

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Recorder, we must beg leave to ask Mr. Jarrit Smith's Opinion, as to Sir John's being a Lunatick, or not?

Mr. Jarrit Smith. Mr. Recorder, I am surpris'd to hear it said by some of Mr. Goodere's Witneses, that Sir John Dineley Goodere was mad; I knew him fourteen or fifteen Years, and conversed with him both in Person and by Letter; but never discovered that he was in the least disordered in his Senses, I always took him to be a Man of sound Understanding. On the Sunday, the Day before his Death, he expressed himself with a great deal of Good-nature and Affection at the sight of his Brother.

Mr. Shephard. Mr. Recorder, with humble Submission, I am instructed to offer it in Evidence, that the Place where the Ship lay is not within this City and County of Bristol.

Mr. Vernon. We have already proved it to be within the County of Bristol; nor is there the least reason to apprehend, that Mr. Recorder will extend the Rule of Boni Judicis est ampliare Jurisdictionem to the extending of the County an Inch beyond its ancient and known Limits: He is too just to attempt it. On the other hand, we may depend he will not suffer the County-Limits to be abridged, but servare Jus illasum; and (as he hath hitherto done) discountenance all Encroachments on the Rights and Franchises of Bristol.

Mr. Recorder. It has been proved, and indeed it can't be denied, that at the time the Fact in question was committed, the Ship lay in King-road; and I think the Evidence which has been given of the Exercise of Jurisdiction by the Magistrates of the City and County of the City in King-road, and of the Sheriff's Officers executing Procefs of all kinds there, amounts to a full Proof that King-road is within the Body of the County of the City of Bristol. It is the same sort of Proof by which the Bounds of every County in the Kingdom must be ascertain'd, the doing Acts in the Place in question by the Officers of the County, which must be done in that County, and no other.

Mr. Goodere. All King-road is not in Bristol. Will your Lordship please to admit me to call Mr. Hill? he is a Gentleman that has survey'd the Situation of the Place where the Ship lay, and will describe it.

Mr. Vernon. I am sorry to find Mr. Goodere driven to this Subterfuge in his Defence, I could wish he had one to make on the Merits; if he stands upon his Innocence, what need of all this Stir about the Station of the Ship, or where on Earth can he hope to be tried before a fairer, or more impartial Judicature than the present?

Samuel Goodere. Call Mr. Hill.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Goodere, if you can shew that any Part of King-road is, or ever was esteem'd to be in any other County than the County of the City of Bristol, I will hear you; otherwise it will be to no purpose to describe the Situation of the Ship, since it is admitted that she lay in King-road.—Mabony, have you any thing to say?

Mabony. I hope your Lordship will consider that I was a poor, press'd Servant, and I was drunk when I made the Confession, and I was frightned out of my Wits.

Mr. Recorder. You say you were drunk when you made the Confession; 'tis possible, that Night when you were first taken and brought before the Magistrates, you were in Liquor, but it seems your Confession was not taken 'till the next Day.

Mabony. My Lord, I was in Bridewell, I did not sleep a Wink the whole Night.

Mr. Recorder. Have you any Witneses to call?

Mabony. No, please your Lordship, I am a Stranger here, I have no Witneses to call.

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Recorder, I apprehend we are in a Case exceeding clear against both the Prisoners at the Bar; and, considering that Death and Life are in the Power of the Tongue, I am unwilling to reply, where Life is at stake; but, as Mr. Goodere seems to lay some Stress on the Circumstance of his not being actually in the Cabbin, at the time his Brother was murder'd there, I beg, Sir, you will indulge me an Observation or two as to that single Point: Not that I imagine the least Doubt in Law can remain with Mr. Recorder, but being in the Case of a Capital Prosecution, I would leave no Objection unanswered that has the least Dependence on the Law; and I agree, Sir, that in order to bring Mr. Goodere within the Compass of the Indictment, he must appear to have been present, as an Abettor, at the Perpetration of the Murder. The Law is extremely clear in this Particular, but then it is as clear, that if several Persons are engaged in a Design of murdering another, and one of the Party stands upon the watch, at the Room or House-door, whilst the rest actually commit the Murder, he is, in the Judgment of the Law, present at the Murder, and as much a Principal in it as the rest: and the Law is the same, though he stood at a considerable distance from the Place where the Murder was committed, as at the Gate or the Lane's End; for it is not necessary he should be in Conspectu, if near enough at hand to embolden his Accomplices in the Murder, through the Hopes of present Assistance, or Security from the Person upon the watch. And so it is expressly laid down, in Lord Chief-Justice Hale's History of the Pleas of the Crown, in the Chapter of Petit-Treason; where he says, that if a Wife or Servant conspires with a Stranger to kill the Husband or Master, and be in the same House with the Stranger whilst he commits the Murder, the Wife or Servant is guilty of Petit-Treason, though not in the same Room where the Murder was committed. The same Doctrine is laid down in second Hawkins's Pl. Cor. 312. (whom as a living Author I cite, only for the sake of the Authorities he has been at great Pains in collecting.) And the Case of Lord Dacre is full in point: My Lord Dacre, with Mansel and several others, went by Night into another's Park, unlawfully to kill Deer; my Lord waited about the Park-Gate upon the watch, whilst the rest went a quarter of a Mile into the Park, where they met met and killed the Keeper; Lord Dacre, though at so great Distance when the Keeper was killed, was adjudg'd a Principal in the Murder, and accordingly died for it. And agreeable to this, was likewise the Case of Berry, (the Porter of Somerset-House) who was concerned with Green, Hill and others, in the Murder of Sir Edmund-Bury Godfrey; some of them way-laid that worthy Magistrate, and having incited him into the Yard leading to Somerset House, Green, Hill and others strangled him. Berry was one of their Gang, and whilst the others were committing the Murder, stood at a great distance from them on the watch, upon the Stairs leading to the upper Court of Somerset-House: he was indicted with Green and Hill, as being present and abetting the Murder, and upon this Evidence was convicted and executed. Gentlemen of the Jury, in the Case now before you, it is fully made out in Proof, that the Deceased was under one continuing armed Force, from the Instant of his being seized to that of his Death; and that his Brother (the Prisoner Mr. Goodere) put and kept him under that Force. Then, Gentlemen, Mr. Goodere's displacing Buchanan from the Cabbin-door, and placing himself there in his stead, with the drawn Sword in his Hand; Mahony's entering into, and being let out of the Cabbin, whilst Mr. Goodere kept Guard at the Door of it; Mr. Goodere waving his Sword at Macguinis, and handing in the Candle; the dying Outcries of his Brother (which could not but reach his Ears, thought not his Heart) and other black Ingredients in this dreadful Case, are an undeniable Proof that Mr. Goodere was concerned with Mahony and White as their Accomplice in his Brother's Murder, and took his Stand at the Cabbin-door with no other Intent than to embolden and assist them in the Perpetration of that cruel Act, and keep off others from coming to his Brother's Relief, or from disturbing them in the fatal Business they were about. Under which Circumstance he is guilty in the same degree as Mahony; and in the Eye of the Law looked upon to have been as much present at his Brother's Death (as an Abettor of the Murder) as if he had stood by the Bed-side and held the Sword over his Head, whilst Mahony was strangling him. So that, Gentlemen, I apprehend we have made good the Indictment against both the Prisoners, by clear and convincing Evidence; and therefore doubt not but their Guilt will stand recorded to future Ages by the Justice of your Verdict.

Mr. Shephard. Mr. Recorder, will you please to indulge me a Word as to the Point of Law? Mr. Vernon mentions, in the Case of the Park that he hath taken notice of, the Lord Dacre and his Party came by Night unlawfully to kill Deer, and therefore the Law presumed they all came with an intent to oppose all that should hinder them in that Design; and so when one killed the Keeper, it must be presumed the Act of all, because pursuant to that intent. But whether the present Case is circumstanced as that Case, ought to be considered. I do admit that Mr. Goodere was down in the Cock-pit at the time this Fact was done, and he was certainly obliged (as hath been observed) by the Law of Nature to take care of his Brother. But if he had no other Intention of carrying him on board the Ship, than to secure and take care of him as a Person whom he looked upon as disordered in his Senses, and with a view of reducing him to Reason; then surely Mr. Goodere's Case is very different from the Lord Dacre's. And that Mr. Goodere did look upon his Brother to be so —

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Shephard, you are going off from the Point of Law to Matter of Fact; I shall charge the Jury, that if they believe Mr. Goodere stood at the Cabbin-door in order to prevent any Persons coming, who might have prevented the Murder, or to encourage those within the Cabbin in the Business they were about, they must find him guilty on this Indictment; otherwise they must acquit him.

Mr. Shephard. If he was not there with that Intention, he cannot be guilty; and in this Case no such Intention appears.

Mr. Recorder. His Intention is Matter of Fact; which must be left to the Jury on the whole Evidence.

Gentlemen of the Jury,

THE Prisoners at the Bar, Matthew Mahony and Samuel Goodere, stand indicted for the Murder of Sir John Dineley Goodere. And the Indictment charges that Mahony strangled him; and that the Prisoner Goodere was present, aiding and abetting him in the Fact. They are both charged as Principals in the Murder. For, Gentlemen, in the Eye of the Law, the Person who is present, aiding and abetting, is as much a Principal in the Murder, as the Person who actually commits the Fact. Whether the Prisoners, or either of them, be guilty in manner charged in the Indictment, you are to determine upon the Evidence you have heard.

The Evidence has been very long; but I will endeavour to lay the material Parts of it before you in such a light, as may best assist you in your present Enquiry.

'Tis out of all doubt, that Sir John Dineley Goodere was strangled on board the Ruby Man of War in King-road, in the Night between the eighteenth and nineteenth of January last. And therefore what past at that time, which may affect the Prisoners, or either of them, as they stand charged on this Indictment, will deserve your principal Attention. But as the Prosecutors have (very properly I think) gone pretty far back in their Evidence, in order to shew by what means Sir John was got on board, it will be necessary for you to take that Part of the Evidence likewise into Consideration.

The first Witness is Mr. Chamberlayne, who tells you, that about three Weeks before the Murder happened, Mr. Goodere desired him to use his good Offices with Mr. Jarrit Smith a Friend of Sir John's, in order to bring about a Reconciliation between Sir John and him.

Mr. Smith tells you, that Mr. Chamberlayne did apply to him for that Purpose; and afterwards brought Mr. Goodere to his House on the same Errand: And that Mr. Goodere then repeated the same Request Mr. Chamberlayne had before made in his Behalf. He says he proposed the matter to Sir John, who with some Difficulty consented to give Mr. Goodere a Meeting; which was fix'd for Tuesday the 13th of January, at Mr. Smith's House in the Colledge-Green, of which Mr. Goodere had timely Notice. That on Tuesday the 13th, Sir John rode up to his Door, and having just alighted and acquainted him that he could not at that time stay; but that the next Time he came to Town, which would be the Saturday or Sunday following, he would meet his Brother; he mounted his Horse, and went off, attended by his Servant, both armed with Pistols. He says, that on the same Day he met with Mr. Goodere, and acquainted him, that Sir John would be again at his House on Saturday or Sunday; and it was then agreed that Mr. Goodere should have notice when Sir John came. He says, that on Sunday Morning the 18th of January Sir John sent him word, that he would be at his House that Day, at any Hour he should appoint; and accordingly Three in the Afternoon was appointed. He says, that the same Morning he gave Mr. Goodere Notice of the Appointment. That in the Afternoon Sir John and Mr. Goodere met at his House, where mutual Civilities passed between them: That Sir John soon took his Leave, the Witnesses and Mr. Goodere waiting on him to the Door. He says, that he press'd Mr. Goodere to stay longer; and said to him, I hope I have done great Things. To which Mr. Goodere reply'd with some Emotion, By God this will not do; and immediately followed Sir John down the Hill. He says, that standing at his Door he observed a Company of Sailors gathering about Sir John, and heard Mr. Goodere say to them, Is he ready, or is it ready? (he is not, I believe, positive, what were the Words;) To which some of the Sailors answered, Yes, Sir. Whereupon the whole Company went hastily off, some towards the Butts, others towards the Lower Green; and Mr. Goodere follow'd them by the Butts. Mr. Smith had no Suspicion at that time that the Sailors were offering Violence to Sir John, and so made no farther Enquiry into the matter; 'till a Soldier, who is likewise produced as a Witness, told him what happen'd at the Barge.

The next Witness they produced is Maurice Hobbs, who, it seems, keeps the White-Hart Alehouse at the Foot of the Colledge-Green: And, Gentlemen, you will observe, that from the Front Windows of that House, one may have a View of Mr. Smith's. And he tells you, that on Monday the 12th of January last the Prisoners at the Bar came to his House; that Mr. Goodere desired to see an upper Room, over the Parlour, fronting the Street; and having seen it, said, he would come the next Morning and drink Coffee in that Room. Accordingly, the next Morning he came (early for that time of the Year,) before the Windows were opened, or Fires lighted; his Dress so different from what he wore the Day before, that the Witness did not at first recollect him. But, it seems, he changed his Clothes after he came thither. He seem'd willing to drink his Coffee in the Parlour; but being desir'd to walk up stairs, he went into the Room he had pitch'd upon the Day before. Soon afterwards the Prisoner Mabony, with three other Persons, came in; and after them, five or six more. These People, Gentlemen, were not all together in one Room; but they were all entertain'd at Mr. Goodere's Expence. The Witness tells you, that Mr. Goodere ordered they should be entertain'd; and at going away paid the whole Reckoning. He says, that while the Company was at his House, Mr. Goodere above stairs, and others below, Sir John Dineley Goodere rode by from Mr. Smith's, attended by his Servant; and that as they pass'd by, Mr. Goodere called out to the People below, Look well at him, but don't touch him. He says further, that on Sunday the 18th of January, Mabony came to his House in the Morning, and desired him that if he saw the Gentleman in the black Cap (by which Description it appears Sir John was meant) go towards the Green, he would send a Porter to him at a Publick House in Marsh-street: That in the Afternoon Mabony came again, with a great many other People, all appearing by their Dress to be Sailors. And that as the Deceased walked by the House, they all rush'd out and went off. He goes, I think, no farther in his Evidence; for he seems to be too much concern'd for his Reckoning and his Tankard, to mind any thing that pass'd afterwards.

The next Evidence is Thomas Williams, who belongs to the Ruby. He says, that on Sunday the 18th, he brought up the Barge from King-road; and was order'd by Mr. Goodere to leave two Hands aboard the Barge, and take eight of the Crew to the White-Hart Alehouse on the Colledge Green, and there wait for him: for, said he, I have a Gentleman to go on board me. He accordingly went to the White Hart with his Men, and there found Mabony and four or five People belonging to the Vernon Privateer. He says, he had not been long there, before the Company rushed out of doors: Upon which he followed, and found they had laid violent hands on the Deceased, and were carrying him on board the Barge; giving out, that he had murdered a Person on board the Ship, and that they were carrying him thither in order, as they pretended, to bring him to Justice. He tells you, that the Prisoner Mabony was very active in this Outrage; and that the Prisoner Goodere was present, seeing and hearing all that pass'd. He likewise gives you an Account of the Conversation that pass'd between Sir John and the Prisoner Goodere, after they were in the Barge; and, among other Things tells you, that upon the Deceased's saying, You are carrying me on board to murder me; the Prisoner Goodere answer'd, No, I don't intend to do so, but I would have you make your Peace with God. This Witness speaks little to what pass'd after they came on board the Ship; for, says he, I had been employ'd all Day, and went To-bed early. But he tells you, that in the Night he heard a very unusual Noise on board; and that about Two in the Morning, he saw the Prisoner Goodere go down the Ladder leading to the Purser's Cabbin.— You have heard, Gentlemen from the Witnesses, whom I shall mention presently, that the Murder was committed in this very Cabbin.

The Prosecutors then called several Witnesses, Samuel Trivet, Thomas Charmbury, Mrs. Darby, and William Dupree; who all speak to the manner of carrying Sir John from the Colledge-Green to the Place where the Barge lay.

These Witnesses agree in general, that he was treated with great Rudeness by the Company in whose Hands he was. But, as the Prisoner Goodere admits, that he did take his Brother on board; and, as Mabony endeavours to excuse the part he had in it, by alledging that he was under Command; I need not be very particular in repeating the Circumstances attending this part of the Affair. Only, Gentlemen, it may be proper for you to observe, that the Pretence given out to blind the People who enquired into the meaning of this Outrage, was, that the Gentleman had committed a Murder on board the Ruby. And that when Sir John was on board the Barge, and calling out for Help to the People on shore, telling them his Name, and begging them to let his Friend Mr. Jarrit Smith know what had happen'd to him; the Prisoner Goodere at that instant stopt his Mouth. This Circumstance is prov'd by three of these Witnesses.

The next Set of Witnesses who have been called, are Persons belonging to the Ruby. And from them you have an Account of what pass'd from the time Sir John was brought on board to the time of the Murder.

The first is Theodore Court, the Master of the Ruby; and he tells you, that about seven in the Evening Sir John was brought on board, and immediately by Mr. Goodere's Order carried down into that part of the Ship which is called the Cockpit, and secured in the Purser's Cabbin, and a Centinel set on him. He tells you further, that Mr. Goodere, as soon as he came on board, said to him and the other Company present, I have brought a Mad-man on board. And, Gentlemen, you will observe, that the Ship's Crew were made to entertain an opinion, that Sir John was mad; says Mr. Goodere, don't mind what he says, he is mad. This, all the Witnesses agree in. And you may remember too, that when the poor Gentleman was dragg'd and hurried along towards the Barge, then he had murder'd a Man on board the Ruby. Now he is brought aboard, where that Pretence cannot serve, he is a Mad-man, and must be confin'd. This Witness was present the next Morning when the Purser's Cabbin was broke open, and Sir John was found there murdered: upon which, he says, Mr. Goodere was made a Prisoner. But he tells you, that before this, Mr. Goodere expressed a great Inclination to sail that very Morning; and upon his representing to him the Danger of attempting the Bristol Channel without a Pilot, he answer'd, if I can but get as low as the Holms I don't care.

This Witness was ask'd a Question by Mr. Goodere, touching the Place where the Ruby was moor'd, at the time the Fact in question was committed; and he says, that she then lay in King-Road, and has described her several Bearings to Ports-head Point, the Denny, and the Hole's Mouth. But, Gentlemen, it will not be material in the present Case, in what part of King-Road the Ship then lay, if you are satisfied from the Evidence you have heard, that King-Road is in the County of this City, because it is admitted by the Prisoner; and indeed it is too plain to be denied, that the Ship was then in King-Road.

The next Witness is Duncan Buchanan, who was one of the Company at the White-Hart Ale-house, on Tuesday the 13th; and he confirms what Hobbs told you, that when Sir John and his Servant rode by, the Prisoner Goodere call'd to Mahony and the Company at the White-Hart, and bid 'em mind him well, but not to touch him. He says too, that Mr. Goodere at the same time order'd some of the Company to follow Sir John. He speaks much to the same purpose as the last Witness, touching the bringing Sir John aboard, and carrying him into the Purser's Cabbin; and adds, that two Bolts were put on the Out-side of the Cabbin Door by Mr. Goodere's Orders. He tells you, that he was the Centinel placed at the Cabbin-door by Mr. Goodere, who, you are to take notice, had then the Command of the Ship; and says, that about Twelve at Night he was sent for into the Captain's Cabbin, where he found both the Prisoners at the Bar together. That Mr. Goodere enquir'd of him, whether his Brother made any noise, and said I believe he is wet in his Feet, I'll carry him a Pair of clean Stockings? That between One and Two the Prisoner Goodere came down to the Cock-pit, and listen'd some time at the Cabbin-door, where Sir John was; and soon afterward took the Sword from him, and order'd him up to the Deck; and stood himself as Centinel at the Door. He says, that being on Deck he saw the Prisoner Mahony go down the Ladder towards the Purser's Cabbin, and is positive he went into the Cabbin; the Prisoner Goodere standing at the same time Centinel at the Door. He tells you that a short time after this he heard a great noise and struggling in the Cabbin, a Person crying Murder, like one going into a Fit: that, I think, was his Expression. This Noise, he judges, continued four or five Minutes; and is positive that the Prisoner Goodere stood at the Door all that time, with the Sword in his Hand. He says, that after the Noise in the Cabbin ceas'd, he saw the Prisoner Goodere hand a Candle into the the Cabbin; and that he, seeing Mr. Goodere had no Light with him, lighted a Candle at the Lanthorn upon Deck, and was going to carry it down; upon which he says Mr. Goodere waved the Sword towards him, saying, Keep back, stay where you are. He says, that soon afterwards the Prisoner Goodere call'd for a Light, deliver'd back the Sword to him, lock'd the Cabbin-Door, and put the Key in his Pocket; and said, if my Brother makes any more noise, let me know of it.

The next Witness is Daniel Weller, the Carpenter of the Ruby: He agrees in the main with the two former Witnesses, touching the bringing Sir John aboard, the carrying him into the Purser's Cabbin, and putting the Bolts on the Door; and gives an account of the Conversation he had with Sir John in the Cabbin while the Bolts were fastening on: from which it seems natural to conjecture, that Sir John expected he should have foul play for his Life. He did not stay long with him; for it seems nobody was to visit the poor Gentleman but Mahony. He says, he broke open the Cabbin-Door next Morning, and found Sir John dead, and observ'd some Blood about his Mouth and Nose; which, Gentlemen, is what may be expected in case a Person is strangled.

The next Witness is Edward Jones, the Cooper of the Ruby; and he tells you, that on the Thursday before the Fact in question was committed, Mr. Goodere order'd the Purser's Cabbin to be clear'd out; for, said he, I shall bring a Gentleman aboard. He says, that soon after Sir John was brought aboard, Mr. Goodere came down to the Purser's Cabbin, and offer'd him a Dram of Rum, and also persuad'd him to make use of some to chafe his Leg, which it seems had received some hurt that Day. He says, that Mr. Goodere, speaking of Sir John to the People present, said, Don't mind what he says, he'll be well enough again. He tells you, that about eight o'clock he went to bed in the Slop-Room, which, it seems, is parted from the Purser's Cabbin by a thin Deal Partition. That before he went to sleep, he heard what pass'd in the Cabbin, particularly the Discourse between Sir John and the Prisoner Mahony, which I need not repeat to you. And says likewise, that he heard Sir John praying to God to deliver him him out of his present Distress, and expresses himself as a Man sensible of his present Danger, He tells you, that between Two and Three in the Morning, his Wife, who happened then to be aboard and in bed with him, waked him, and that he then heard a great Struggle in the Cabbin, Sir John crying out, as a Person in great Confusion and Distress, Here's Twenty Guineas, take it, take it, must I die? He says, that in a little time all was quiet, from which he concluded the Gentleman was dispatch'd; and then a Light was brought into the Cabbin; upon this he says, he got up upon his Knees, and peep'd through a Crevice in the Partition, and saw the Prisoner Mahony and one Charles White rifling the Pockets of Sir John, who was laid upon the Bed, in the Posture he has described to you, and motionless. He says, at this time he saw a Hand at Sir John's Throat, and heard a Person say, 'Tis done, and well done; he cannot say who the Person was whose Hand was at Sir John's Throat, but believes 'twas not the Hand of White, or Mahony, for it was a white Hand, and not like either of theirs. He says that he lay in fear of his own Life (as indeed I think he had great Reason) 'till about Four in the Morning, and then the Men belonging to the Yawl being called up, he got up too, and acquainted the Lieutenant with what passed, and consulted with him and others of the Officers about apprehending Mr. Goodere, which was afterwards done in the Manner you have heard.

The next Witness is Margaret Jones, Wife of the last Witness. And she gives much the same Account of the bringing Sir John aboard, and Mr. Goodere's offering him Rum, as her Husband does. And says farther, that Mr. Goodere talk'd of ordering Sheets for Sir John's Bed. But, Gentlemen, it does not appear to me that any Sheets were ordered, or indeed any sort of Refreshment provided for him, except a single Dram of Rum, which he refused, having forborn the Use of strong Liquors of all sorts for a considerable time. This Witness likewise gives an Account of the Conversation between Mahony and Sir John, and tells you, that when Mahony offer'd to pull off Sir John's Stockings, he said to him, Pray don't strip me till I am dead. She says, that about Two in the Morning she heard Mahony desire Sir John to compose himself to sleep; and soon afterwards the Light was put out, and she heard Mahony say, You must lie still and not stir for your Life; and immediately she says there was great struggling in the Cabbin, two Persons whispering, and Sir John crying Murder, and kecking in his Throat (as she expresses it) so that she concluded they were strangling him. At this time, she says, somebody on the outside of the Door offer'd to come in; upon which, those in the Cabbin said, Damme you Negro, keep out. She says, the Noise and Strugglings continued for a short time afterwards, and then all was quiet, and a Light was brought into the Cabbin. She then saw the Prisoner Mahony, and Charles White, the Person her Husband spoke of, rifling Sir John's Pockets. The particular Circumstances she mentions in this part of her Evidence I need not repeat. She says, that after this was over, they went out of the Cabbin, and the Door was lock'd and bolted; and she heard one of the Persons say, Which way shall I go, where shall I run? To which the other answered, Follow me, my Boy.

The next Witness is James Dudgeon, who, it seems, is the Surgeon's Mate. And he tells you, that when Sir John was brought aboard, he was carried directly to the Purser's Cabbin, and a Centinel placed over him. Says Mr. Goodere to this Witness, Doctor, I have brought a Mad-man on board, you must do the best you can with him; pray go and feel his Pulse now; or you may let it alone till to-morrow, the first Night will be the worst with him. The Doctor did go, but was told by the Centinel, that he had Orders to let no body in but Mahony; however, he went in and felt Sir John's Pulse, and found no Disorder there but what might be occasioned by the fatigue he had undergone that Afternoon. This Witness, who, it seems, lodg'd in a part of the Cockpit near the Purser's Cabbin, says, that about Two in the Morning he heard an unusual Stir in the Cock-pit, and overheard Mahony, who was in the Purser's Cabbin, say, You must lie still, don't stir; and immediately there was a great Bustle in the Cabbin, Sir John crying, Murder, and saying here's Twenty Guineas, take it, take it. He says, that by the Noise he heard, and from other Circumstances he has mention'd, he then apprehended that somebody was strangling the Gentleman. Before the Noise was quite over, he says he heard the Lock of the Cabbin go; upon which somebody within cry'd, Damn ye, keep the Door fast. The Witness hearing this, call'd out and enquired what was the Cause of the Noise; and he says that the Person who then stood at the Door answered, 'Tis nothing at all. He does not say who the Person was, but says he is sure that the Prisoner Goodere was in the Cock-pit while the Outcry was in the Cabbin. Soon after the Noise was over, he says, a Light was called for, and carried into the Cabbin; and in a little time he heard the Tread of People running out of the Cabbin, and is sure he heard the Prisoner Mahony say, Which way shall I go? To which Answer was made, You may go by the Ship-side. He says, about this time a Person stept up the Ladder from the Cock-pit, towards the Deck, and he then heard the Prisoner Goodere say, If my Brother makes any more Noise, let me hear of it. These Words, Gentlemen, if you believe Duncan Buchanan, were spoken to him at the top of the Ladder. It seems indeed probable, that Mr. Goodere was solicitous to know whether Sir John made any Noise or no, after this time; for this Witness tells you, that Mr. Goodere's Servant, some time afterwards, came to him to enquire whether he had lately heard any Noise in the Cabbin? Yes, says the Witness, I heard something at the Lock. This Noise the Witness supposes was occasioned by a Cat which had been lock'd in the Room. This Witness inspected the Body the next Morning, and tells you, that he found great Impressions about the Neck, and the Marks of Nails and Fingers on it; and upon the whole, is of opinion that Sir John died by Strangling. And, Gentlemen, whether a Rope was made use of in the Business, or whether it was done by thrusting their Fingers between the Neck and Cravat, and so straining the Cravat close about the Neck, will not be material; for though the Indictment charges that it was done with a Rope, yet if it appears on the Evidence, that the Deceas'd was strangled by any Means whatever, such Evidence will be sufficient to maintain the Indictment.

The next Witness, and the last that has been examined touching what was done on board the Ship, is William Macguinis, the Centinel at the Gun-room. And he tells you, that after Two in the Morning, the Prisoner Goodere went down into the Cock-pit; that soon afterwards the Prisoner Mabony push'd by him; he says he would have kept him back, but Mabony gave him ill Language and pass'd on, and call'd to another Person to follow him. He says, that Duncan Buchanan was ordered up to Deck, and that he saw Mr. Goodere standing at the Purser's Cabbin-Door with a Sword drawn in his Hand; and remembers, that when he offer'd to come near the Cabbin, Mr. Goodere order'd him to keep back: This was at the time the Noise and Outcry was in the Cabbin. He says further, he saw Mabony go into the Cabbin before the Noise was heard there; and, that about Three in the Morning, he saw both the Prisoners at the Bar go up the Ladder from the Cock-pit to the Deck together.

The Prosecutors then examined two Witnesses touching the Gold Watch which has been produced. One of them, Sarah Culliford, says that the Prisoner Mabony, the Day he was apprehended, deliver'd the Watch to her, desiring she would put it by for him; that she, upon hearing that Mabony was taken up for the Murder, in a Surprize, threw it into the Vault. The other Witness tells you, that he, by Order of the Magistrates, open'd the Vault and found the Watch there. This Watch the Prosecutors would fix upon the Prisoner Goodere, and to that end, it was shewn to Theodore Court, who was examin'd before, to other Points. And he says, he cannot be positive, but believes it to be Mr. Goodere's Watch, having often seen it, or such a one, hanging up in his Cabbin. The Prosecutors then produced a Handkerchief, which was taken out of Mabony's Pocket the Night he was apprehended; it appears to be a little bloody, but I don't see what use they make of that Circumstance.

The next Piece of Evidence the Prosecutors went to, was Mabony's Examination and Confession, which has been read to you. This, Gentlemen, is very proper Evidence, and ought to have its Weight with you, as far as it concerns Mabony himself; but with regard to the other Prisoner Goodere, you are to lay no manner of Stress upon it, it is no Evidence against him.

The Prosecutors then proceeded to shew, that King-road, where the Ruby lay at the time the Fact was committed, is within the County of Bristol. I think indeed that some Evidence of that kind was proper to be given, for your Satisfaction, and to that end they have called Mr. Wint and Mr. Lowden, two ancient Officers well known to you all. And they say, in general, that King-road has always been esteemed to be within the County of Bristol. And they go farther and say, that they have constantly, as Occasion required, executed Procefs of all kinds in King-road; Warrants from the Mayor and Aldermen, Procefs from the Mayor's and Sheriff's Court, and Warrants grounded on Writs from above, directed to the Sheriffs of Bristol. And, Gentlemen, I must say, that tho' another sort of Evidence might have been given, touching the Bounds of this County by Water, I know no Evidence so proper to prove the Bounds of any County, as the constant Exercise of Jurisdiction in the Place in question, where that sort of Evidence can be had.

I think, I have repeated to you the material Parts of the Evidence which has been given against the Prisoners at the Bar; and you will now consider what they have offered by way of Defence to this Charge.

As for Mabony, I do not hear him say any thing by way of proper Defence, nor has he called a single Witness. He hopes indeed, that it will be taken by way of Excuse, that he was a poor press'd Servant, and acted by Command. But, Gentlemen, if you believe the Evidence which has been given against him, no Command of any Superiour whatsoever (supposing that to have been an Ingredient in his Case) will excuse him.

Mr. Goodere says, that his Brother was a Lunatick, and that he being his only Brother, thought it his Duty to take Care of him in that Condition; that in order thereto he had endeavour'd to get a Lodging in this City, where he was to be confin'd under the Care of the Prisoner Mabony, who was to have 5 l. a Month for his Attendance on him. That not being able to get a Lodging for the Purpose in the City, he took him on board the Ruby; in order to have him taken proper Care of there. He denies that he ever consented to the Murder, or had any Knowledge of it; and insists on the great Improbability there is that he should be concern'd in the Murder, since, he says, he knew that Sir John had cut off the Entail of the Family-Estate, and had actually made his Will, by which he had devised the Estate to another Branch of the Family. So that, says he, Sir John dying while this Will stands, I have no Chance for the Estate: whereas, as long as he lived, my Chance as Heir at Law continued; for he might have chang'd his Mind, and alter'd or destroy'd his Will.

The first Witness he call'd was Mrs. Getbins; who, I suppose, lets Lodgings in the City; and she says, that Mr. Goodere never made a Secret of his Design, of confining his Brother as a Lunatick; and that about three Weeks before this Matter happen'd, he spoke to her for a Garret in her House for that Purpose; but she remembers no Discourse the Prisoner had with her about Mabony.

Mr. Goodere then call'd two Witnesses in relation to something which was open'd against him, (but not directly prov'd by any of the Witnesses call'd by the Prosecutors) touching his sending Mabony and White away in the Yawl the Morning the Fact was committed:

They were Mr. Marsb and Mr. Dagg.

Mr. Marsb says, that on the Sunday in the Afternoon, after Sir John was brought aboard, he was order'd by Mr. Goodere to go up in the Yawl early the next Morning, to fetch Letters from the Post-Office; and he tells you that as he was setting out on Monday Morning he was inform'd by some of the Ship's Company, that Mabony and White were to go with him. Upon which he went to the Captain to have his Orders; for, said he, I never take any body ashore without leave. And he tells you, that Mr. Goodere did order him to take White and Mabony up in the Yawl. He says, that he had no Orders to land them at any particular Place; and that they were put ashore at the Gibb, the usual Place of Landing, about six in the Morning.

Mr. Dagg tells you, that Mabony had charg'd one Mervin in his Custody in an Action for Wages; that the Wednesday or Thursday before this Matter happened he waited on Mr. Goodere from Mervin, in order to accommodate Matters with Mabony: And that Mr. Goodere appointed to meet Mervin on that Affair the Monday following. He cannot say, that Mabony was to meet on that day (tho' indeed he says he did tell a Gentleman so) and knows not of any Business White had that day in Bristol.

Mr. Goodere next called three Witnesses to the Point of Sir John's Lunacy. The two first have lived with him as Servants, and they give you divers Instances of an extravagant unaccountable Behaviour haviour in him; from which they conclude that he must have been a Madman. The other Witness says, that he knew Sir John for some Years; and in general says that from his Actions he took him to be mad.

He then called several Witnesses, Gentlemen of Worth, who have known him many Years; and they all agree in giving him a very good Character, as to his former Life and Conversation: and particularly say, that they always took him to be a good-natur'd, well-behav'd Man, and one that merited the Love and Esteem of his Neighbours. One of these Witnesses, Mr. Forcevil, says, that he was constant at Church on Sundays twice a Day, generally attended the Church-Service, and seldom misfed attending at the Sacrament.

Another of these Witnesses, Mr. Ashfield, having given the Prisoner a good Character, was ask'd touching Sir John, particularly with regard to his Sanity; and he seems surpris'd to hear Sir John represented as a Mad-man; and tells you, that he always took him to be a Man of good Understanding: and goes so far as to say, that he took him to be the Man of the best Sense in the Family. He was ask'd, touching the Prisoner's having been inform'd of the Contents of his Brother's Will; and he tells you that the Prisoner was inform'd of the Purport of the Will; but adds, that the Prisoner declar'd that he did not value the Will: And says, that there had been a long Misunderstanding between the Brothers.

Mr. Goodere call'd a Witness (Mr. Watkins) to prove that he was inform'd of the Contents of Sir John's Will. And he tells you, that about half a Year, or three quarters of a Year ago, he did inform Mr. Goodere, that Sir John had made his Will, and had given his Estate to the Foots; who, it seems, are Nephews to Sir John and the Prisoner. But he tells you, that the Prisoner then said, he thought Sir John had no Power to make a Will. He says, that in discourse about the Will, he spoke it to the Prisoner as his Opinion, that if Matters could be reconciled between Sir John and him, that Will would not stand long: For, Gentlemen, he likewise says, that there has been a long Misunderstanding between the Brothers. This Witness was likewise ask'd, touching Sir John's Lunacy, and he seems surpris'd to hear that his Sanity is call'd in question; and gives him an advantageous Character in other Respects too.

This, Gentlemen, is the Substance of the Evidence that has been given on the one side and the other. And though the Evidence has been very long, and, as you observe, chiefly pointed at the Prisoner Goodere; yet with regard to your present Enquiry, the Matter after all will lie in a narrow compass. You observe, Gentlemen, the Indictment charges that he was present, aiding and abetting the Murder; and therefore however instrumental you may suppose him to have been in procuring the Death of Sir John, by carrying him on board, and treating him there in the manner you have heard; yet if you have not Evidence to induce you to believe that he was present, aiding and abetting at the Murder, he will not be guilty on this Indictment. But, Gentlemen, you must not be deceiv'd by the meer Sound of Words. It is not necessary, in order to render a Person guilty as a Principal in Murder or other Felony, that he should be in the same Room, or on the very spot where the Fact is committed, or even in sight or hearing of it: If he be engaged in the Design, and posts himself at the time of the Execution in a proper Station to give Assistance, if need be, or to prevent a Surprise whereby the Persons actually committing the Fact are encouraged in the Perpe-tration of it, he is in the Eye of the Law present, aiding and abetting, and equally a Principal in the Fact with those who actually commit it. An Instance or two may make this Rule better understood. If several Persons agree to commit a Murder on the High-way, or in the open Fields, and one Party of them undertakes to see the Fact committed; the others disperse themselves to their several Stations, and stand upon the Watch to prevent a Surprise: they are all equally guilty, and in the Eye of the Law present at the Fact. So, if a Number of People agree to commit a Murder, and to that end break into a House, and then disperse themselves into several Rooms; or, if any of the Company stand without, and keep the Door while the Murder is committed within, they are all equally guilty, and in the Eye of the Law present. Nay, tho' the original Intention might be barely to commit a Robbery, yet, if in Prosecution of that Design a Murder is committed, the whole Company, those who stood upon the Watch, as well as those who committed the Fact, are all equally guilty and Principals in the Murder. And therefore, Gentlemen, if, upon the Evidence which has been given, you believe that the Prisoner Goodere did stand at the Door of the Purser's Cabbin while the Murder was committed, in order to encourage those within in the Perpetration of the Fact, or to prevent any Assistance which might have come, you must find him guilty. And, Gentlemen, I must observe to you, that it is proved by four Witnesses, that he was in the Cock-pit while the Cry of Murder was heard in the Cabbin. Two of these Witnesses are positive that he stood at the Cabbin-Door at that time with a drawn Sword in his Hand; and that while he was there posted, he order'd them to keep back. And one of the same Witnesses is likewise positive, that soon after the Cry of Murder ceas'd, Mr. Goodere handed a Candle into the Cabbin.

Mr. Goodere indeed has call'd several Witnesses, who have given him an advantageous Character; but, Gentlemen, I think it my Duty to tell you, that tho' Character ought to have its weight when Matters are in themselves doubtful, or where the Charge is supported by Witnesses of doubtful Credit; yet in clear Cases, and when the Credit of the Witnesses is not impeach'd, I think Character alone ought to weigh very little with you. And upon the whole, if you believe the Witnesses for the King, you must find him guilty; if not, you must acquit him.

As to Mabony, I think you can have no Difficulty if you believe the Evidence of Jones and his Wife, and lay any Stress on his own Confession; and indeed he now rather endeavours to excuse than denies the Fact.

Then the Jury withdrew, to consider of their Verdict; and after a short space, return'd again.

Clerk of Arraigns. Gentlemen, answer to your Names. Christopher Bromadge.

Christopher Bromadge. Here. [And so of the rest.]

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Who shall say for you?

Jury. The Fore-man.

Cl. of Arr. Matthew Mabony, hold up thy Hand. You of the Jury, look upon the Prisoner: How say you, is Matthew Mabony guilty of the Felony and Murder, whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements had he at the Time of the said Felony and Murder committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge?

Jury.

Jury. None.

Cl. of Arr. Samuel Goodere; hold up thy Hand. You of the Jury, look upon the Prifoner: How fay you, is Samuel Goodere guilty of the Felony and Murder, whereof he ftands indicted, or not guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, &c. (as before.)

Jury. None.

Cl. of Arr. Hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it. You fay that Matthew Mahony is guilty of the Felony and Murder, whereof he ftands indicted: You fay that Samuel Goodere is guilty of the Felony and Murder, whereof he ftands indicted; and that they, nor either of them, had any Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the Time of the faid Felony and Murder committed, or at any Tince fince, to your Knowledge; and fo you fay all.

Cl. of Ar. Keeper, take Matthew Mahony and Samuel Goodere the Prifoners from the Bar, and look to them; they ftand convicted of wilful Murder.

Then the Court adjourn'd to the fame Place the next Morning Eight o'Clock.

The Trial of Charles White, for the Murder of Sir John Dineley Goodere.

ON Friday the 27th of March 1741, Charles White was brought to the Bar of the Court, to be arraigned for the Murder of Sir John Dineley Goodere, upon an Indictment found by the Grand Jury for the City and County of Bristol on the Day preceding; and the Court proceeded thus:

Clerk of the Arraigns. Charles White, hold up your Hand. [Which he did.]

You ftand indicted by the Name of Charles White, late of the Parifh of St. Stephen, in the City of Bristol and County of the fame City, Labourer, for that you and one Matthew Mahony, late of the fame Parifh, City and County, Labourer, not having the Fear of God, &c. on the nineteenth Day of January, in the fourteenth Year, &c. in and upon one Sir John Dineley Goodere, in the Peace of God, &c. then and there being, feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice afore-thought, did make an Assault; and that the faid Matthew Mahony, a certain Cord of the Value, &c. about the Neck of the faid Sir John then and there feloniously, voluntarily, and of his Malice afore-thought, did put and faften: And that the faid Matthew Mahony with the Cord aforefaid, by him fo about the Neck of the faid Sir John put and faftened, then and there, him the faid Sir John feloniously, &c. did choak and ftangle; of which faid choaking and ftangling of him the faid Sir John by the faid Matthew Mahony, in Manner and Form aforefaid done and perpetrated, he the faid Sir John then and there instantly died. And that you the faid Charles White, then and there feloniously, &c. was prefent, aiding, abetting, comforting and maintaining the faid Matthew Mahony in Manner and Form aforefaid, feloniously, &c. the faid Sir John to kill and murder; and fo that you the faid Charles White, in Manner and Form aforefaid, the faid Sir John then and there feloniously, &c. did kill and murder, againft the Peace, &c.

How fay'ft thou Charles White, art thou guilty of the Felony and Murder, whereof thou ftandeft indicted, or not guilty?

Charles White. Not guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

Charles White. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God fend thee a good Deliverance.

The Court proceeded in like manner as upon the Indictment againft Mr. Goodere and Mahony; and the Names of the Jury fworn, were as follow:

John Nafb. William Williams.

Joseph Wilfon. William Arnold.

Samuel Cave. John Willis.

William Abraham. Cornelius Sandford.

William Jones. John Taylor.

Robert Moody. Thomas Seed.

Then Proclamation for Information was made, and the Jury charged with the Prifoner.

Mr. Vernon. May it please you, Mr. Recorder, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am Counfel for the King againft the Prifoner at the Bar, who ftands indicted for the Murder of Sir John Dineley Goodere; and the Indictment charges that one Matthew Mahony (who has already undergone the Juftice of his Country) ftangled the Deceased, and that the Prifoner at the Bar was prefent, aiding and abetting him in the Perpetration of that horrid Fact; and which (if true) will be the fame in confideration of Law, as if the Prifoner had with his own Hands ftangled the Deceased, and actually drawn the fatal Cord which put a period to his Life. Gentlemen, it is with an aking Heart I difcharge this melancholy Task againft the Prifoner, but criminal Juftice muft be adminifter'd as well as civil, and the great Safety of the Innocent is in the Punifhment of the Guilty: And of this the Prifoner may be affured, that as he now ftands at the Bar for his Life and Death, and unaffifted by Counfel in Matter of Fact, I fhall carefully confine my felf to the Letter of my Inftuctions, without any Aggravation of Facts or Circumftances, and endeavour fo to difcharge my Duty on this melancholy Occafion, as that he may have nothing to fear but from Guilt, or to hope but from Innocence. And, Gentlemen, as I am inftucted, Captain Samuel Goodere, late Commander of the Ruby Man of War, and Brother of the late unfortunate Sir John Dineley Goodere, having on Sunday the eighteenth of January laft, with the Affiftance of Mahony and other Rufians, forcibly feized upon Sir John, and hurried him on board the Ruby, (which then lay ftationed in King-road, within the Body of your County) with a defign of murdering Sir John; the Prifoner (a private Mariner belonging to the Ruby) was pitch'd upon by the Captain as a Perfon fit to be concerned with Mahony in the Execution of that bafe and barbarous Defign. And accordingly, on Monday the nineteenth about One in the Morning, the Prifoner was called up by Mahony to attend the Captain in his Cabbin, which he did; and the Captain after plying the Prifoner pretty plentifully with Rum, propos'd to him the murdering of his Brother, in conjunction with Mahony; and no fooner faid but done, Gentlemen: for this infatuated Wretch the Prifoner, influenc'd by the ftrong Delufion of Wickednefs, and Temptation of miftaken Gain; and not content with his honeft Wages, nor confidering that the Wages of Sin are Death, gave at once into the monftrous Propofal for the fake of Plunder. In a word, Gentlemen, he readily followed Mahony into the Purfer's Cabbin, where Sir John lay confined; and as that unhappy Gentleman had from the time of firft feizing him been treated as a Malefactor, fo they executed him as such; for Mabony seiz'd him by the Throat, and then fastening about his Neck a Rope, which they had brought with them for the purpose, strangled him in the Presence and with the Assistance of the Prisoner; and indeed without his Assistance, Sir John being strong and of an undaunted Spirit, would probably have been able to have defended himself against the Attack of Mabony. Gentlemen, no sooner had they robbed Sir John of his Life, but they fell to rifling him of his Watch and Money; they divided the Spoil between them, and then betimes in the Morning the Prisoner with his Accomplice Mabony made off from the Ship, and took refuge in this City; a very unfit Sanctuary for Ruffians and Murderers, considering the good Order and Government of the Place, and the constant Care of its worthy Magistrates in the due Execution of the Laws. But Justice pursued, and will, I doubt not, overtake him. He was apprehended, and made an early Confession of his Guilt, and comes now to answer for his Delinquency. Gentlemen, we shall call the Ship's Cooper and his Wife, who heard the Groans and Outcries of the Deceased, and were Spectators of what passed in the Purser's Cabbin immediately after this Tragedy, and saw the Prisoner in the very Act of rifling the Deceased, almost at the instant of his Death. We shall also lay before you the Prisoner's own Confession, on his Examination before the Justices; and then, Gentlemen, we doubt not, but you will be of opinion, that by the Laws of his Country he ought to die for his Transgression, as some Atonement for his own Guilt, and an Example of Justice to others.

(Edward Jones sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Edward Jones, tell Mr. Recorder and the Jury what you know concerning the Death of Sir John Dineley Goodere?

Edward Jones. On the 18th of January last, at night, I was in bed with my Wife in the Slop-room, next to the Purser's Cabbin down in the Cockpit in the Ruby Man of War, then lying at King-road, and Sir John Dineley was then confined in the Purser's Cabbin. I heard him pray to God to be his Comforter under his Afflictions; he said that he knew he was to be murdered there; and he prayed that it might come to light by one means or another. But I took no notice of him, because I thought him a crazy Man, as I had heard the Captain say he was. After that, I fell asleep; and, I believe, about two or three of the clock my Wife waked me, and said to me, Don't you hear the Noise that is made by the Gentleman? I believe they are killing him. I then heard Sir John kick, and cry out, Here is twenty Guineas, take it, take it; don't murder me; must I die! must I die! Oh my Life! and gave several Kecks with his Throat like a dying Man, and then he was still. I would have got out of bed, but my Wife persuaded me not, for fear I should be killed too. It was dark; but a Light was handed in to the Purser's Cabbin, and then I got up upon my Knees, and I could see a Light glimmering through the Crack of the Boards; I saw Mabony with a Candle in his Hand, Sir John was lying on his Side. The Prisoner Charles White was there, and he pulled Sir John to turn him about, and White said he could not get the Watch out of his Pocket; and he tumbled him up to come at the Money, and unbuttoned his Breeches. I saw him get hold of the Watch-Chain; and White gave Mabony the Watch; and White put his Hand in one of the Gentleman's Pockets, and cursed that there was nothing but Silver; he put his Hand in another Pocket, and there he found the Gold; he offered it to Mabony, but Mabony damned him, and bid him keep it till by and by. White pulled out a Piece of Paper from one of Sir John's Pockets, and was going to read it; but Mabony said, Damn ye, don't stay to read it now.

Mr. Vernon. Was Sir John dead in appearance when you saw them rifling his Pockets?

Edward Jones. As they were turning him about, one of his Legs was crooked, which made me think he was dead, and that they had killed him in the Dark. The next Morning I saw Sir John dead, lying in the Purser's Cabbin, and I believe he was strangled.

Mr. Recorder. Prisoner, will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Charles White. Please you, my Lord, I desire you will ask Mr. Jones, whether Sir John was living or dead when he saw me in the Cabbin first?

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Jones, the Prisoner asks you whether Sir John was living or dead when you first saw him in the Cabbin?

Edward Jones. Sir John was dead when White turned him about, for they killed him in the dark. I heard two Voices.

Charles White. Whether Edward Jones saw any body strangling Sir John besides Mabony?

Mr. Recorder. The Witness does not say that he saw any body strangling Sir John, that he says was done in the Dark: but, he says, he heard two Voices in the Cabbin, and as soon as the Light was brought in, he saw you rifling Sir John's Pockets.

Mr. Vernon. Call Margaret Jones.

(Margaret Jones sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Mrs. Jones, will you give Mr. Recorder and the Jury an Account of what you know in relation to the Death of Sir John Dineley Goodere?

Margaret Jones. Yes, Sir. On the 18th of January last, at Night, I lay on board the Ruby Man of War with my Husband, and in the Purser's Cabbin, next to where we were in bed, Sir John was under Confinement; the Captain said he was a Mad-man, and that he brought him there to save him from a Goal. About ten o'clock Mabony was left there with Sir John; Sir John desired him to go, but Mabony said he had Orders to stay there to take care of him. About 12 o'clock in the Night I went to sleep; about two o'clock I awaked, and heard the Gentleman talk to Mabony, and Mabony persuaded the Gentleman to go to sleep; the Gentleman said he could not: they talked together a good while. I heard somebody say to the Gentleman, You must lie still, and not speak a word for your Life; and then I heard a great struggling; who it was, I don't know. The Gentleman cried out, Murder! Help, for God's sake; and made several Kecks in his Throat, as though somebody was stifling him. I shook my Husband, and waked him. I heard two People in the Cabbin whispering; the Gentleman cried out Murder again, Help for God's sake! he said, Here's twenty Guineas in my Pockets, take it, take it; must I die! Oh my Life! And somebody in the out-side offered to go into the Cabbin; but one of them within said, keep out, you Negro; and then a great noise was made, as tho' the Cabbin would have been beat down; and then a Candle was brought in. I got up and look'd through a Crevice: I saw a Man, I believe it was White, pulled the Gentleman upright. Mabony had the Candle in his Hand. I observed the other put his Hand in the Gentleman's Pockets; one of them said, Damn ye, pull out his Watch: I saw the Person take hold of the Watch-string, and pulled it out, and said to the other, Here thee take it; and then searched another Pocket, and said, said, Here's nothing but Silver: but then he searched another Pocket, and said, Here it is; and pulled out a Purse. And soon after that I heard the Door unbolted, and then I heard Mabony say, Where shall I run? And another said, Follow me, Boy. And they went upon Deck through the Hatch-hold.

Mr. Vernon. Did you know the Voice of either of the two Persons whom you heard speaking to one another?

Margaret Jones. Yes, I knew Charles White to be one of the Men by his Voice. I knew his Voice when he said to Mabony, Follow me, Boy. I am certain the Prisoner at the Bar was in the Cabbin; I observed his Bulk, but could not look earnestly at him, being very much shocked and surpris'd; but my Husband told me it was Charles White.

Mr. Recorder. White, will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Charles White. Please you, my Lord, to ask her, whether she can say that she ever heard my Voice in the Cabbin?

Mr. Recorder. Mrs. Jones, the Prisoner asks you, if you heard his Voice in the Cabbin?

Margaret Jones. I could not know his Voice in the Cabbin, for he spoke low; and when a Person whispers, the Voice is not so distinguishable: but as soon as he spoke aloud, I knew it to be his Voice.

Mr. Recorder. Did you see him in the Cabbin, Mrs. Jones?

Margaret Jones. My Lord, I did not see his Face, but by his Voice when he went out, I knew him to be the same Man.

Charles White. Please you, my Lord, to ask her, whether she ever heard me say, Follow me Boy, before?

Mr. Recorder. Mrs. Jones, you hear the Question, give an answer to it.

Margaret Jones. I never heard him say so before; but I knew his Voice perfectly well, having been acquainted with him for two Years.

Mr. Vernon. We must now desire that the Prisoner's Examination may be read. Cryer, swear Mr. James Britten, (second Clerk to the Town-Clerk.)

(Mr. Britten sworn.)

Mr. Vernon. Mr. Britten, what Paper is that?

Mr. Britten. The Examination of the Prisoner at the Bar taken before Mr. Mayor.

Mr. Vernon. Did you see the Prisoner sign it in Mr. Mayor's Presence?

Mr. Britten. Yes, I did.

Mr. Vernon. Did you see Mr. Mayor sign it?

Mr. Britten. Yes.

Mr. Vernon. Is that his Hand?

Mr. Britten. Yes.

Mr. Frederick, Counsel for the Prisoner. It is opened by Mr. Vernon, that this Examination contains the Prisoner's Confession of the Fact. I would ask Mr. Britten, Was the Confession voluntarily made or not? for, if it was not voluntarily, it ought not to be read.

Mr. Recorder. That is an improper Question, unless the Prisoner had insisted, and made it part of his Case, that his Confession was extorted by Threats, or drawn from him by Promises; in that Case, indeed, it would have been proper for us to inquire by what means the Confession was procured: But as the Prisoner alleges nothing of that kind, I will not suffer a Question to be ask'd the Clerk, which carries in it a Reflection on the Magistrate before whom the Examination was taken. Let it be read.

Cl. of Arr. Reads:

City and County of } the City of Bristol. } to wit,

20 January, 1740.

The Examination of Charles White, a Sailor belonging to the Ruby Man of War, now lying in this Port, born in Drogheda in Ireland, aged about thirty-six Years.

THE Examinant voluntarily confesseth, and saith, That he hath been a Sailor on board the said Ship for about seventeen months last past; That about one of the clock in the Night of Sunday last, the eighteenth Instant, he was asleep in his Hammock on board the said Ship, and was called out by one Matthew Mabony, another Sailor on board the said Ship (and now in Custody) who told him that the Captain (meaning Captain Samuel Goodere, Commander of the said Ship) wanted to speak with him in his Cabbin; and accordingly he went to him: and when he came to him, the Captain asked him to sit down, and then gave him a Wine-Glass of Rum, and after that four or five more, and then asked him if he could kill a Spaniard? and this Examinant answered him, That he never did. Upon which the Captain told him, he had got a Job for him to do, if he would undertake it: And this Examinant ask'd him what Job it was? And the Captain told him, it was to make away with his Brother, whose Name (as this Examinant is informed) was Sir John Dineley Goodere, Bart. who was in the Purser's Cabbin on board the said Ship: and the said Matthew Mabony told this Examinant, that he must go with him to help do it. Whereupon the said Captain went out of the Cabbin first, Mabony followed him, and this Examinant went next; and when he came to the Purser's Cabbin-door, where Sir John Dineley was, the Captain was standing Centinel himself at the Door with a Cutlash in his Hand, and Mabony had entered the Cabbin, and this Examinant entered likewise, where Mabony was talking with the said Sir John, and had a piece of Rope, called three-quarter of an Inch Rope, in his Hand, about six Foot in length, and Sir John was lying on the Bed; and particularly Mabony ask'd Sir John how his Head was, and what he had got about it? and at last told him, it did not signify talking about it any longer, and then fell on him on the Bed, took hold of his Throat with his Hand (his Stock being on) and so strangled him with his Stock, and afterwards put the said Rope about his Neck, (which was prepared for the purpose, with a Noose in it, before it was brought out of the Captain's Cabbin) and then Mabony halled the Rope tight about his Neck; and upon this Examinant's asking him what he did that for? he said, For fear he should not be dead enough. And this Examinant took a Knife out of his Pocket, and cut it off his Neck, and threw it over-board. During all which time the Captain stood Centinel at the Door as aforesaid; and as soon as this Examinant had so cut the Rope off, the Captain handed a Candle to Mabony, who gave it to him, and Mabony took the Watch and Money out of Sir John's Pocket; and then the Captain ask'd them, Have ye done? meaning, (as this Examinant apprehended) murdered the said Sir John. And then came in himself, and this Examinant went through the Hold, and came upon Deck, where he walk'd for about the space of half a quarter of an Hour, and the Captain and Mabony went into the Captain's Cabbin together, and then this Examinant went into the Steridge, and Mabony called this Examinant into the Cabbin, where the Captain had undressed himself in order to go to Bed; and there the Captain gave him five Guineas, and this Examinant had received of the said Captain a six and thirty Shilling Piece of Gold before the said Sir John was murdered. And further this Examinant saith, That Mabony shewed the Captain the Watch he had taken out of Sir John's Pocket, and the Captain gave Mabony his own Watch, and kept Sir John's himself; and Mabony likewise shewed the Captain the Money he had taken out of Sir John's Pocket, who bid him keep it; and Mabony gave it to this Examinant, who put it in his Pocket, and he and Mabony shared the Money on the Fore-castle, and this Examinant had two Pieces to one, in consideration that Mabony had the Watch; and this Examinant believes they shared about thirty Pounds between them. And further, this Examinant saith, That the said Captain told him and Mabony, that they might go any where for three Weeks, and he would send them their Tickets. And lastly, this Examinant saith, That between four and five of the clock the same Morning the Man of War's Yawl was going to this City, and he and Mabony landed at the Gibb here.

Charles White.

Mr. Recorder. Well, Prisoner, what have you to offer in your Defence?

Charles White. Please you, my Lord, I was in my Hammock between the Hours of Twelve and One, and this Mabony came to me and said, Charles White, Charles White! I said, what do you want? He said, Turn out. I asked him what he wanted of me now? He said again, Turn out, turn out. And with that I turn'd out, and went upon Deck to make Water, and while I was doing it, he told me that he wanted me to go with him. I asked him where he was going to bring me? But he led me into the Cabbin where the Captain was. When I came in, the Captain bid me sit down. I begged him to excuse me from taking so great a Freedom as that, in his Company. But at last I sate down, and I drank a Glas of Rum. Then the Captain ask'd me, whether I had ever kill'd a Spaniard? I told him, No, I never was engaged with one to kill him. Drink about, Mabony, said the Captain. With that we drank about, and finished a Bottle and a half in raw Drams. With that he said, come along with me. I ask'd him where he was going? I went with him, the Captain first, and Mabony after him; and they went below, and to what Intent I knew not, being quite in Liquor with drinking so much Rum. Said the Captain to me, when we came down, Tarry here 'till I call you. Soon after, Mabony came to me, and told me the Captain wants you. Then I went down into the Cabbin, and sat down in it, and Mabony and the Captain were talking together; but what they did I know not, for I never laid a Hand near the Gentleman.

Mr. Recorder. You say you were in the Purser's Cabbin, and do you not know what happen'd there?

Charles White. I cannot tell, Sir, what pass'd.

Mr. Recorder. If this Defence be true, how came you to be so unjust to your self, to make the Confession which has been read?

Charles White. Please you, my Lord, I was in Liquor, and did not know what pass'd between them, for I had not my Senses about me.

Mr. Recorder. Why, 'tis charg'd upon you, by the Cooper, that you examin'd Sir John's Pockets, and took out his Watch and Money, and a piece of Paper which Mabony perswaded you to throw away, as of no Consequence, or else to put it into your Pocket, and read it at another Time.

Charles White. Please you, my Lord, I know nothing of it; I have several Witnesses to my Character.

Mr. Recorder. Call your Witnesses.

(Michael Smith sworn.)

Mr. Recorder. How long have you known the Prisoner?

Smith. From a Child, Sir; we went to School together for eight Years.

Mr. Recorder. What do you know of him?

Smith. Sir, I never heard to the contrary but that he was an honest Man, and bore a good Character.

(Theodore Court sworn.)

Court. I never knew any Harm of the Prisoner until this unhappy Affair; but I have been inform'd, that since he hath been under Confinement, he hath told several People who have gone to see him, that if he can get clear of this, he will kill my Mate.

(Edward Jones.)

Edward Jones. I have known the Prisoner for three Years, but never knew any Harm by him; I was with him in the West-Indies, in the Kingsole Man of War, but 'till this Misfortune happened, I never knew any Harm by him.

Mr. Recorder. Are you sure then, that you saw him in the Cabbin, rifling the Deceased's Pockets?

Edward Jones. Yes, my Lord, I am sure of that.

(William Macguinis sworn.)

Macguinis. Please you, my Lord, I knew the Prisoner at the Bar ever since he was an Infant, I went to School with him, and never knew any Harm that he did before; I have often both eat and drank with him, and when he is sober, he is as good and civil a Man as need to be.

(Daniel Wellar, Carpenter of the Ship, sworn.)

Wellar. I have been about sixteen or seventeen Months with him, and he always behav'd himself well on board, and I never knew any Harm of him before; but his Voice is known from all the Men in the Ship.

Mr. Recorder. To what purpose do you say, that his Voice is known from all the Men in the Ship?

Wellar. Because they talked about his Voice oftentimes.

Mr. Vernon. If I apprehend him right, Sir, he speaks this in Confirmation of Mrs. Jones's Evidence, who swore she knew the Prisoner's Voice. Gentlemen, I was in hopes the Prisoner would have stood to his former Confession, instead of endeavouring to retract it, and have given Glory to God by a public Penitence and Sorrow for the Heinousness of his Crime, instead of putting on a Shew of Innocence against Proof so apparent of his Guilt. — Defence, I apprehend, he has made none; he has called indeed some Witnesses to speak to his Character; and Character, it must be admitted, is of weight, by way of balancing the Proofs, where the Fact is doubtful and uncertain; but when the Evidence is strong and pregnant, and Guilt stares the Prisoner in the Face, Character weighs not a single Grain in the Scale of Justice. How far the Prisoner's Character and early Confession of the Fact, with some Ingredients in his Case, may be of Service to him in another Place, is not the present Consideration; he stands now at the Bar for your Justice, not your Pity; and it fully appears in proof, that he was an Accomplice with Mabony in this barbarous Murder, as laid in the Indictment; so that Life ought to go for Life, by the Laws of God and Man, and I doubt not in the least, but that you will conscientiously discharge the Duty you owe to God and your Country, by going according to your Evidence, and finding the Prisoner guilty.

Mr. Recorder.

Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted for the Murder of Sir John Dineley Goodere. The Indictment charges, that that the Deceased was ftrangled by one Matthew Mabony, and that the Prifoner was present, aiding and abetting him in the Fact.

To fupport this Charge, the Profecutors have called two Witneffes, Edward Jones, and Margaret his Wife. Edward Jones fays, that he lodged in the Night between the eighteenth and nineteenth of January laft, in the Ruby Man of War, in the Slop-room, which adjoins to the Purfer's Cabbin; where, he fays, the Deceased was confined. He tells you, that about Two in the Morning he was waked by his Wife, and heard Sir John crying out, Here's twenty Guineas, take it, take it; don't murder me; muft I die? He fays Sir John gave feveral Kecks with his Throat like a Man expiring, and quickly after was ftill. He tells you, that then a Light being brought into the Cabbin, he got up and look'd through a Crevice in the Partition, and faw the Prifoner at the Bar engaged in rifling Sir John's Pockets, Mabony ftanding by with a Candle in his hand. He fays, that Sir John was dead, as he believes, when the Prifoner was rifling his Pockets; and from what he obferv'd the next Morning, that he was ftrangled.

Margaret Jones is fomething fuller in her Evidence, as to fome Circumftances previous to the Murder; but in the main, agrees with her Husband touching the rifling of Sir John's Pockets after he was dead. She is fure Mabony held the Candle, and that another Perfon whom ſhe takes to be the Prifoner at the Bar, was rifling his Pockets. She fays, ſhe had not a perfect view of him; but by his Bulk, and from what her Husband then told her, ſhe concluded at the time, that it was the Prifoner at the Bar. She fays further, that when Mabony and that other Perfon went out of the Cabbin, ſhe heard Mabony ſay, Whither ſhall I run? The other answered, Follow me, my Boy. And then ſhe fays, ſhe knew it was the Prifoner made that Answer, by his Voice. She fays ſhe knows the Prifoner's Voice perfectly well, having been acquainted with him two Years.

The Profecutors then read the Prifoner's Examination, which contains a full Confefſion of the Fact, as laid in the Indictment.

You have heard, Gentlemen, what the Prifoner has ſaid to this Charge. He admits that he went into the Purfer's Cabbin, but ſays, that being much in Liquor, he knows nothing of what paſſ'd there; and denies that he had any Concern in the Murder. He called ſome Witneffes to his Character; and I muſt obſerve to you, that one of his Witneffes, Daniel Wellar, ſays, that the Prifoner's Voice is diſtinguiſhable from the Voices of all the Men in the Ship. This will give ſome Weight to Margaret Jones's Evidence, That ſhe knew him by his Voice.

And, Gentlemen, upon the whole, if you believe the Evidence for the King, and give Credit to the Prifoner's Confefſion, you muſt find him guilty. Then the Jury withdrew, to conſider of their Verdict; and after a ſhort Space returned again.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, answer to your Names: John Naſh.

John Naſh. Here. [And ſo of the reſt.]

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. The Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Charles White, hold up thy Hand. You of the Jury look upon the Prifoner; How ſay you? is Charles White guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands indicted, or not guilty?

Jury. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the time of the ſaid Felony and Murder committed, or at any time ſince, to your knowledge?

Jury. None.

Cl. of Arr. Hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it: You ſay, that Charles White is guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he ſtands indicted, and that he had no Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the time of the ſaid Felony and Murder committed, or at any time ſince, to your knowledge; and ſo you ſay all.

Cl. of Arr. Keeper, take Charles White the Prifoner from the Bar, and look to him; he ſtands convicted of wilful Murder.

On Saturday the 28th of March the Prifoners were brought again to the Bar, in order to receive their Sentence; and the Court proceeded thus:

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, open the Court.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez; all manner of Perſons that have any more to do before the King's Maſteſty's Juſtices of Oyer and Terminer, and general Goal-Delivery for this City and County, and were adjourned over to this Time and Place, draw near, and give your Attendance.

Cl. of Arr. Mr. Recorder, will you pleaſe that the Prifoners ſhall be called up to Judgment?

Mr. Recorder. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Keeper, ſet Matthew Mabony, Samuel Goodere, and Charles White to the Bar; which was done.

Mr. Recorder. Ask them what they can ſay to hinder Judgment?

Cl. of Arr. Matthew Mabony, hold up thy Hand. Thou haſt been indicted of Felony and Murder, thou haſt been thereupon arraigned, thou haſt pleaded thereunto not guilty, and for thy Trial, thou haſt put thy ſelf upon God and thy Country, which Country hath found thee guilty; what haſt thou to ſay for thyſelf, why the Court ſhould not proceed to give Judgment of Death upon thee, and award Execution according to the Law?

[He offered nothing, but begg'd for Time to prepare himſelf.]

Cl. of Arr. Samuel Goodere, hold up thy Hand. Thou haſt been indicted of Felony and Murder, &c. what haſt thou to ſay? &c.

[He offered nothing, but begged alſo for Time to prepare himſelf.]

Cl. of Arr. Charles White, hold up thy Hand. Thou haſt been indicted of Felony and Murder, &c. what haſt thou to ſay? &c.

[He offered nothing, but declared he was drawn into it, and begged for Transportation for Life.]

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation for Silence.

Cryer. Oyez; The King's Maſteſty's Juſtices ſtraitly charge and command all manner of Perſons to keep Silence whiſt Judgment is giving, upon pain of Imprifonment.

[Then Mr. Recorder ſpoke to the Prifoners thus:]

Mr. Recorder. Samuel Goodere, Matthew Mabony, Charles White, and * Jane Williams, you have been all convicted, upon very full Evidence, of one of the greateſt Crimes human Nature is capable of; deliberate and wilful Murder. A Crime, which in all Ages, and through all Nations, hath been had in the higheſt Detefation. For however Mankind have differed in other Matters, they have been in one Sentiment concerning this Crime

and

* Convicted at the ſame Sefſions for the Murder of her Baſtard Child.

and the Demerits of it; as if they had been all Witnesses to the Promulgation of the Precept, Whoever sheddeth Man's Blood, by Man shall his Blood be shed.

But this Crime, great as it is, is capable of several Aggravations, arising from the Circumstances which attend it.

To lay violent Hands upon a Person who never gave his Murderer the least Offence, whom perhaps he never saw till the Moment he was mark'd out for Execution; and to do this for Hire, shews a Mind lost, I fear, to all the Impressions of Humanity.

But what then is the Case of one, who can procure all this Mischiefe, and involve others in this Guilt; especially if the Person to whom the Violence is offered, is near to him by the Ties of Blood or Friendship?

'Tis true, Murders of this kind are not very frequent; and less so in this Nation than in any other. But in the Case in which three of you are concerned, they all concur.

A Gentleman of Distinction is murdered by Persons, who, in a manner, were Strangers to his Face, and his only Brother aiding and abetting the Murder. I may say thus much, because your Country hath upon full Evidence found it so.

I will carry these Reflections no farther: I choose to leave that Part to your own serious Consideration.

I hope I need not persuade you to employ the Time you have to live, in making your Peace with God: I hope, I say, that a Sense of your own Condition hath already put you upon that Work. And pray don't suffer yourselves to be diverted from it by the Hope or Expectation of Mercy from the Crown. His Majesty's Disposition to Mercy is great; but his Love of Justice, and his Love to his People is still greater. And because I would not mislead you, nor have you deceive yourselves in a Case of this Importance, I think it my Duty to deal freely with you.

I do not see what room any of you have to expect Mercy.

You who have been the immediate Actors in this Affair, what have you pleaded in mitigation of your Crime? One says, he is a poor, press'd Servant; and the other, that he was drunk when the Fact was committed. Neither of those Excuses can avail you. You both undertook the Murder for Hire, rifled the Gentleman's Pockets, and shared the Plunder between you.

You had, perhaps, no Design upon the Gentleman's Life, till near the Time of Execution. This is no Excuse. It shews you were ready to shed innocent Blood at the first Call: That you yielded to the first Temptation. And if Drunkenness could be admitted as an Excuse for Crimes of this nature, this would be no World then of Virtue and Sobriety.

You, Sir, who have been the principal Actor in this Affair, what have you offer'd for your self?

You admit, that you employ'd a Number of People to seize your Brother, here in the Heart of the City, and in the Face of the Sun, and to carry him on board the Ship of which you had then the Command. This is too evident to be denied, and for that Reason only, I fear, 'tis admitted.

To give some Colour to this unparallel'd Outrage, you say, that your Brother was distracted, and that you took him on Board in order to put him under Confinement. Admitting that your Brother was distracted, was the Place you carried him to, or the Hands into which you committed him, or the Treatment which he met with from them before he was got aboard the Barge, at all proper for his Case, or fit for a Brother to think of?

You called Mrs. Getbins to prove, that Mahony was to have had five Pounds a Month for looking after him at her House. She remembers nothing of Mahony. But, had that been proved, could it at all avail you to say, that for three Weeks before the Murder was committed, you intended to have confined him under the Care of the very Man who now appears to have murdered him?

Indeed, you have denied all Concern in the Murder, or the least Knowledge of it. But it hath been proved by three Witnesses, that you were in the Cock-pit while the Murder was committing, and might have heard the Noise and Struggle in the Cabbin, the Cry of Murder, and your Brother's dying Groans, as well as they did.

Nay, two of them are positive, that you stood Centinel at the Door, with a drawn Cutlash in your Hand, while the Fact was committing. One of them says that you delivered a Candle into the Cabbin, after the Cry of Murder ceased; and that you, soon after, lock'd the Door, and took the Key with you. And it is agreed on all hands, that when the Door was open'd the next Morning, your Brother was found there murdered.

Those Facts, with other Circumstances, are strong and pregnant Proofs of your Concern in the Murder; unless the Credit of the Witnesses could be impeached, which you have not attempted to do.

It was charged as a Circumstance against you, that after the Fact was committed, Mahony and White were sent ashore by you. This likewise you denied. But it came out of the Mouth of a Witness called by yourself, that they went up in the Yawl by Leave from you.

I have nothing more to do, before I proceed to that which the Duty of my Place obliges me to, than to exhort you all to make your Peace with God by a serious and hearty Repentance. His Mercy is infinite, and to that we must leave you. For the Judgment of this Court is, That you, Samuel Goodere, Matthew Mahony, Charles White, and Jane Williams, go from hence to the Prison from whence you came; and from thence you shall be led to the Place of Execution, where you shall severally be hanged by the Neck till you shall be dead. And the Lord have Mercy on your Souls.

Then the Keeper carried away the Prisoners to the Goal, to be reserved till their Execution.

On Wednesday the 15th of April following, the Prisoners Matthew Mahony, Samuel Goodere, and Charles White, were executed at Bristol, according to the Sentence pronounced against them. They all confessed the Fact. The Body of Mahony is hung in Chains near the Place where the horrid Fact was committed.

At the same Court Charles Bryan, Edward M'Daniel, and William Hammon, were indicted, tried and convicted, for a Misdemeanour, in forcibly assisting and seizing Sir John in the Parish of St. Augustine, in the said City and County, and carrying him on board the Barge belonging to the Ruby Man of War; and were fined 40*s.* each, to be imprisoned for one Year, and then each to give Security for his good Behaviour for one Year more.

CONTAINING

Several RECORDS relating to the foregoing TRIALS and PROCEEDINGS.

THE Second and Third Trials in this Collection being for Heresy (a Crime heretofore very frightful, and punished with great Severity) it may not be amiss to state how the Law formerly stood relating thereto, and, since we have not the Precedents of the Process issued in those particular Instances, to give a Precedent or two in some others of the same Nature.

By the ancient ^a Law, Burning was the Punishment for Heresy; but the Party accused was first to be tried and convicted thereof by the Archbishop and the rest of the Clergy of his Province assembled in Convocation. After Conviction the Offender was delivered over into Lay-Hands, and the Sheriff of the County, by virtue of the Writ de Hæretico comburendo, was to cause him to be burnt. Brit. lib. 1. c. 17. Bro. Abr. tit. Heresy. Fitz. Nat. Brev. 595.

The first Statute in relation to Heresy is the 5th of Rich. II. cap. 5. whereby it is enacted, That the Sheriffs and other Civil Officers should apprehend and imprison Persons suspected of Heresy, in order to their being tried by the Laws of Holy Church; and it being found inconvenient to summon the Convocation for the Trial of every Offender, a Statute was made the 2d of Hen. IV. cap. 15. empowering every Diocesan to imprison Persons suspected of Heresy in their respective Diocefes, and try them (so that such Diocesan proceeded judicially and openly against such Persons) and where any Person was convicted, he might be imprisoned at the Discretion of the Ordinary; or, if the Party refus'd to abjure his Errors, or, having abjured them, relaps'd, he was to be left to the Secular Arm; and the Sheriff (whom the Ordinary might call to be present at the Trial) was to cause the Party to be burnt in some high (or open) Place.

The Lord Chief Justice Brook (in his Abridgment, Tit. Heresy) says, that upon this Statute it was resolved, That if a Person was convicted of Heresy in the Presence of the Sheriff, the Ordinary might commit him to the same Sheriff, and he was to cause him to be burnt without the Writ de Hæretico comburendo; but if the Sheriff was absent, or if the Heretic was to be burnt in another County, in either of these Cases the Writ de Hæretico comburendo must be first obtained, before the Sheriff could burn him.

Some Authors have wonder'd, Why the Writ de Hæretico comburendo was issued for the burning of Sawtre, when by the last mentioned Act the Sheriff was empowered to execute Persons convicted of Heresy without that Writ: But the Wonder ceases, if we consider that the Sheriff could not proceed to execute the Offender by his own Authority, unless he was present at the Conviction; and though the Diocesan might call the Sheriff to attend the Trial, yet he might too convict the Offender in his Absence. And further, Sawtre was convicted by the Convocation; and it may be difficult to give one Instance where the Convocation called the Sheriff to assist at the Trial of an Heretic; and, if they had, such a Conviction was not within the Letter of the Act: Therefore, upon this Conviction, the Sheriff was under a Necessity of waiting for the Writ de Hæretico comburendo, before he could execute him †.

By the 2d of Hen. V. cap. 7. all Civil Officers were to be sworn to assist the Ordinaries in extirpating Heresies; and one convict of Heresy was to forfeit his Goods and Chattels, and Fee-simple Lands.

By the 25th of Hen. VIII. cap. 14. the Act of the 2d of Hen. IV. is in part repealed; and it is thereby provided, That no Person shall be executed as an Heretic, without the Writ de Hæretico comburendo first obtained.

By the 1st of Eliz. cap. 1. the abovesaid Statutes, as well as that other Statute of the first and second of Phil. and Mar. cap. 6. against Heretics, are repealed.

^a See Whitlock's Speech in behalf of James Naylor, Vol. II. p. 273. N^o. 53 See also Hales's H. P. C. Vol. I. p. 392. Note (b) and p. 394. and Note p. 709.

† The Writ for burning Sawtre seems to be a special Act of Parliament made for that purpose for it is tested Per regem & concilium in parlamento, which is to be intended of an Act of Parliament. See 8. Co. Rep. 19. a. Prince's Case. See also Hale's Hist. P. C. Vol. I. p. 396.

And by the 29th of Car. II. cap. 9. the Writ de Hæretico comburendo, with all Proceedings thereon, and all Capital Punishments in pursuance of any Ecclesiastical Censures, are from thence forth utterly abolished.

So that at this day a Person convicted of Heresy is liable only to Excommunication, and such Pains and Disabilities as Persons standing excommunicated for any other Offence.

JAMES REX.

JAMES, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. To our right-trusty and right well-beloved Counsellor, Thomas Lord Ellesmere, our Chancellor of England, Greeting. Whereas the Reverend Father in God, John Bishop of London, having judicially proceeded in a Cause of Heresy against Bartholomew Legatt, of the City of London, in the Diocese of the said Bishop of London, concerning divers wicked Errors, Heresies, and blasphemous Opinions, holden, affirmed, and published by the said Bartholomew Legatt, and chiefly in these Thirteen blasphemous Positions following, viz. That the Creed called the Nicene Creed, and Atbanasius's Creed, contain not a Profession of the true Christian Faith, or, that he will not profess his Faith according to the same Creeds; That Christ is not God of God begotten, not made, but begotten and made; That there are no Persons in the Godhead; That Christ was not God from everlasting, but began to be God when he took Flesh of the Virgin Mary; That the World was not made by Christ; That the Apostles teach Christ to be Man only; That there is no Generation in God, but of Creatures; That this Assertion, God to be made Man, is contrary to the Rule of Faith, and monstrous Blasphemy; That Christ was not before the Fulness of Time, except by Promise; That Christ was not God otherwise than anointed God; That Christ was not in the Form of God equal with God, That is, in Substance of God, but in Righteousness and giving Salvation: That Christ by his Godhead wrought no Miracle; That Christ is not to be pray'd unto: Wherein he the said Bartholomew Legatt hath, before the said Reverend Father, maintained his said most dangerous and blasphemous Opinions, as appeareth by many of his Confessions publickly made and acknowledged. For which his damnable and heretical Opinions, he is by definitive Sentence by the said Reverend Father John Bishop of London, with the Advice and Consent of other Reverend Bishops, Learned Divines, and others learned in the Laws, assisting him in Judgment, justly adjudged, pronounced, and declared to be an obstinate and incorrigible Heretick, and is left by them under the Sentence of the great Excommunication, and therefore as a corrupt Member to be cut off from the Church of Christ, and Society of the Faithful, and is to be, by our secular Power and Authority, as an Heretick punished, as by the Significavit of the said Reverend Father in God the said Bishop of London, bearing Date at London the third day of March, in the Year of our Lord 1611, in the Ninth Year of our Reign, and remaining in our Court of Chancery, more at large appeareth. And although the said Bartholomew Legatt hath, since the said Sentence pronounced against him, been often very charitably moved and exhorted, as well by the said Bishop, as by many grave and learned Divines, to dissuade, revoke, and remove him from the said blasphemous and heretical Opinions, yet he arrogantly and wilfully persisteth and continueth in the same. We therefore, according to our Regal Function and Office, minding the Execution of Justice in this behalf, and to give Example to others, lest they should attempt the like hereafter, have determined, by the Assent of our Council, to will and require, and do hereby authorize and require you our said Chancellor, immediately upon the Receipt hereof, to award and make out, under our Great Seal of England, our Writ of Execution, accord-

^b This Person was executed according to the Writ in the Year 1401, and was the first who was burnt in England for Heresy. See an Account of the Proceedings against him, and of his Execution, Fox's Acts and Mon. Vol. I. p. 586.

The Writ de Hæretico comburendo.

REX Vicecomitibus London salutem. Cum Reverendus in Christo Pater Johannes, London Episcopus, nobis significavit, quod cum ipse in quodam hæreticæ pravitate negotio contra quendam Bartholomeum Legatt, subditum nostrum civitatis London, dicti London Episcopi dioces' & jurisdic't', rite & legitime procedens per acta inactitata, deducta, proposita, & per confessiones ipsius Bartholomei Legatt coram præfato Episcopo judicialiter factas & recognitas, comperit & invenit præfatum Bartholomeum Legatt quamplurimos nefandos errores, falsas opiniones, hæreses & blasphemias execrandas, & scelerata dogmata catholicæ & orthodoxæ fidei & religioni, & sacrosancto Dei Verbo expresse contraria & repugnantia, scienter, maliciose, animoq; pertinaci, obdurato, planeque incorrigibili credere, tenere, affirmare, & publicare; idem Reverendus Pater London Episcopus, cum consilio & consensu tam Reverendorum Episcoporum & aliorum Theologorum, quam Juris etiam peritorum in judicio assiden' & assisten', eundem Bartholomeum Legatt, per sententiam suam definitivam, obduratum, contumacem, & incorrigibilem hæreticum pronunciavit, decrevit, & declaravit, eaque occasione tanquam protervum hæreticum, & membrum putridum & contagiosum, ab ecclesia Christi & fidelium communi-one recisum & amputatum fore. Cum igitur sancta mater Ecclesia non habeat quod ulterius facere & exequi valeat in hac parte, idem Reverendus Pater præfatum Bartholomeum Legatt, ut blasphemum hæreticum, brachio nostro seculari reliquit condigna animadversione plectend', prout per Literas Patentes præfati Reverendi in Christo Patris London Episcopi in hac parte superinde confect' nobis in Cancellar' nostram certificat' est. Nos igitur ut zelator justitiæ, & fidei catholicæ defensor, volentesq; Ecclesiam sanctam, ac jura & libertates ejusdem, & fidem catholicam manutenere & defendere, ac hujusmodi hæreses & errores ubiq; (quantum in nobis est) eradicare & extirpare, ac hæreticos sic convictos animadversione condigna puniri, attendentesq; hujusmodi hæreticum in forma prædict' convictum & damnatum juxta leges & consuetudines regni nostri Angliæ in hac parte consuet', ignis incendio comburi debere: Vobis præcipimus, quod dictum Bartholomeum Legatt, in custod' vestra existen', apud West-Smithfield in loco publico & aperto, ex causa præmissa, coram populo publice igni committi, ac ipsum Bartholomeum Legatt in eodem igne realiter comburi fac' in hujusmodi criminis detestationem, aliorumq; Christianorum exemplum manifestum, ne in simile crimen labantur; & hoc sub periculo incumbente nullatenus omitatis. The Writ for burning an Heretic in English.

THE King to the Sheriffs of London, Greeting. Whereas the Reverend Father in Christ, John Bishop of London, hath signified unto us, that when he in a certain Business of heretical Pravity against one Bartholomew Legatt, our Subject of the City of London, of the said Bishop of London's Diocese and Jurisdiction, rightly and lawfully proceeding by Acts enacted, drawn, proposed, and by the Confessions of the said Bartholomew Legatt, before the said Bishop judicially made and acknowledged, hath found the said Bartholomew Legatt very many wicked Errors, false Opinions, Heresies, and cursed Blasphemies, and impious Doctrines, expressly contrary and repugnant to the Catholick Faith and Religion, and the holy Word of God, knowingly and maliciously, and with a pertinacious, obdurate, and plainly incorrigible Mind, to believe, hold, affirm, and publish; the same Reverend Father the Bishop of London, with the Advice and Consent as well of the Reverend Bishops and other Divines, as also of Men learned in the Law, in Judgment sitting and assisting, the same Bartholomew Legatt, by his definitive Sentence, hath pronounced, decreed, and declared to be an obdurate, contumacious, and incorrigible Heretic, and, upon that Occasion, as a stubborn Heretic, and rotten contagious Member, to be cut off from the Church of Christ, and the Communion of the Faithful: Whereas the holy Mother Church hath not further to do and prosecute in this part, the same Reverend Father hath left the aforesaid Bartholomew Legatt, as a blasphemous Heretic, to our secular Power, to be punished with condign Punishment, as by the Letters Patents of the said Reverend Father in Christ the Bishop of London, in this behalf above made, hath been certified unto us in our Chancery. We therefore, as a Zealot of Justice, and a Defender of the Catholick Faith, and willing to maintain and defend the Holy Church, and Rights and Liberties of the same, and the Catholick Faith, and such Heresies and Errors every where, what in us lieth, to root out and extirpate, and to punish with condign Punishment such Heretics so convicted, and deeming that such an Heretic, in Form aforesaid convicted, and condemned according to the Laws and Customs of this our Kingdom of England in this part accustomed, ought to be burned with Fire; we do command you, that the said Bartholomew Legatt, being in your Custody, you do commit publickly to the Fire before the People, in a publick and open Place in West-Smithfield, for the Cause aforesaid; and that you cause the said Bartholomew Legatt to be really burned in the same Fire, in Detestation of the said Crime, for the manifest Example of other Christians, lest they slide into the same Fault; and this that you in no wise omit, under the Peril that shall follow thereon. Witness, &c.

ff. Carolus Dei gratia Angliæ, Scotiæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Rex, fidei defensor, &c. Thesour' & Baronibus de Scaccario suo, salutem. Tenore cujusdam brevis nostri sub magno sigillo nostro Angliæ confect', geren' dat' quarto die Augusti, anno regni nostri undecimo, in rotulis Cancellar' nostræ irrotulat', per quod Vic' com' nostri Bucks, Ball' & Burgen' burgi & paroch' de Buckingham, Major', Ball', & Burgens' burgi de Chipping-Wiccombe, alias Wiccombe, ac probis hominibus in eisd' burgis & paroch', & membris eorund', & in villis de Agmondesham, Wenderover, & Marlow magna, & in omnibus aliis burgis, villis, villatis, hamlet', & aliis locis in dicto com' Bucks, mandavimus, quod pro defensione regni, tuitione maris, securitate subditorum nostrorum, ac salva conductione navium & merchandizarum ad regnum nostrum Angliæ venien', & de eod' ad partes externas transeun', pararent unam navem de guerra portagii quadringent' & quinquagint' dolior', cum hominibus tam magistris peritis, quam marinariis valentioribus & expertis centum & octogint' ad minus, ac etiam tormentis tam majoribus quam minoribus, pulvere tormentario, ac hastis & telis, aliisque armaturis necessar' pro guerra sufficien', & cum duplici eskippamento, necnon cum victualibus ad certum diem, in eod' brevi content', ad tot homines competen', & abinde in vigint' & sex septiman', ad custag' hominum & terr' tenen' burgor', vill', villat', hamlet', & al' locor' supra mentionat' in dicto com' Bucks, tam in victualibus, quam in hominum farlar', & al' ad guerram necessar' per tempus illud super defensionem maris in obsequio nostro, in comitiva custod' maris moratur', & ad portum de Portsm', circa tempus in eod' brevi limitat', duci facerent. Quodque respective affiderent omnes homines in præd' burg' & paroch' de Buckingham, & burg' de Chipping-Wiccombe, alias Wiccombe, & cæteris burgis, villis, villat', hamlet' & aliis locis in dicto com' Bucks, & membris eorund', & ter' tenentes in eisd', ad contribuend' expensis circa provisionem præmissor', & ad cætera faciend' & exequend', modo & forma prout per idem breve præcept' fuit; vobis mittimus præsentibus inter claus' breve, pro eo quod salus regni nostri Angliæ, & populi nostri ejusdem periclitabatur, quod e dicta Cancellar' nostra emanari narravimus, inter al' breviam ad hujusmodi provisionem & assessament' faciend' per singulos com', civitat', burg', vill', villat', hamlet', & locos regni nostri Angliæ & Walliæ, & membris eorund', e Cancellar' nostr' præd' nuper emanat', & ibidem similiter irrot'; ac etiam etiam quod dictum al' breve nostrum ad certificand' nobis in eand' Cancellar', tam de nominibus hominum & terr' tenen' in præd' burg' & paroch' de Buckingham, & burg' de Chipping-Wiccombe, alias Wiccombe, & in cæteris burgis, villis, villat', hamlet' & locis dicti com' Bucks, qui de mandato nostro præd' ad contribuend' erga provision' præmissor' assess' fuerint, ac de nar' super ipsos sic assess' non solver', quam de separal' portionibus & denar' summis super homines & terræ tenen' illos sic onerat' & imposit', necnon certificationes quasdam in scriptis, virtute brevis illius reduct', & in dictam Cancellar' nostram mis'. Vobis etiam mittimus præsentibus interclus', mandantes, quod inspectis brevibus & certificat' præd', ulterius inde pro levatione, collectione, & receptione omnium & singularum præd' denar' summar' de præd' contributionibus adhuc non solut', fieri fac', prout de jure & secundum legem & consuetudinem regni nostr' Angliæ fuerit faciend'. Teste meipso apud Westm' quinto die Maii, anno regni nostri tertio decimo. E Y R E.

Sicut in eisdem brevibus, & schedul' eisd' annex', in Scaccar' dicti Dom' Regis certificat', & ibidem in custod' Rememorator' ejusd' Dom' Regis de record' remanen' plenius continetur. Quibus lectis, auditis, & per ipsum intellectis, idem Johannes queritur, se colore separal' brev', return' eorund', & schedul' eisd' annexat', graviter vexat' fore & inquietat', & hoc minus iuste; quia dicit, quod præd' separal' brevia superius mentionat', return' eorund', & schedul' eisdem annexat', materia in eisd' content', minus sufficien' in lege existunt ad onerand' ipsum Johannem Hampden de aut cum solutione præd' summ' vigint' solid' super ipsum in schedul' præd', modo & forma præd', taxat' & assessat', aut alicujus inde parcell', ad quæ ipse necessè non habet, nec per legem terr' tenetur respondere. Unde ob insufficien' præd' separal' brevium superius mentionat', return' eorund', schedul' eisdem annex', ac materiæ in eisdem brevibus ac schedul' content', ipse idem Johannes Hampden petit judicium, Si dictus Dominus Rex nunc ipsum de præd' vigint' solid', aut aliqua in-de parcell', ulterius impetere, seu onerare debeat aut velit.

Robert Holborne.

Et Johannes Banks Mil', Attorn' Dom' Regis nunc general', qui pro eodem Domino Rege sequitur, præsens hic in cur' ad eund' diem in propria persona sua, dicit, quod præd' separal' brevia, & return' eorund', ac schedul' præd' eisdem annex', materiaq; in eisdem content', sufficien' in lege existunt ad præd' Johan' Hampden de præd' vigint' solid' super ipsum in forma & ex causa præd' assessat' onerand'; quam quidem ma-teriam ipse dictus Attornat' dicti Dom' Regis general', pro eodem Dom' Rege paratus est verifi-care; quamq; materiam præd' Johannes Hampden non didicit, nec ad eam aliquid respondit, sed verificationem illam admittere omnino recusat:
Pro eodem Dom' Rege idcirco petit judicium, & quod præd' Johannes Hampden de eisd' vigint' solid' oneretur, & inde satisfaciatur, &c.

Johannes Banks.

often, that we see plainly the Apprehensions of Discontent in the People is no Argument at Court; and tho' our Prince be in himself an excellent Person, that the People have the greatest Inclination imaginable to love, yet we must say, he is such an one, as no Story affords us a Parallel of. How plain, and how many are the Proofs of the Designs to murder him? How little is he apprehensive of it? Et in altera parte ejusdem libelli continentur hæc falsa, ficta, & scandalosa verba sequentia: ff. My Lords, I hear of a Bargain in the House of Commons, and an Address made to the King; but this I know, and must boldly say it, and plainly, That the Nation is betray'd, if upon any Terms we part with our Money, till we are sure the King is ours. Have what Laws you will, and what Conditions you will, they will be of no Use, but Waste Paper before Easter, if the Court have Money to set up for Popery and arbitrary Designs in the mean while. On the other hand, give me leave to tell you, my Lords, the King hath no reason to distrust his People. No man can go home and say, That if the King comply with his People, they will do nothing for him but tear all up from him. We want a Government, and we want a Prince that we may trust even with the spending of half our annual Revenues for some time, for the Preservation of these Nations. In malum & perniciosissimum exemplum omnium alior' in tali casu delinquent', contra pacem dict' Dom' Regis, coronam, & dignitat' suas. Unde idem Atornat' petit advisament' cur' in præmissis, & debit' legis processum.

Rex versus Cellier^m, for a Libel.

32 Car^o II. O. B.

ff. JURatores pro Dom' Rege super sacramentum suum præsentant, Quod Eliz' Cellier uxor ----- Cellier, de parochia sanct' Clementis Dacor' in com' Midd' Gen', eadem Eliz' existen' religionis papalis, Deum præ oculis suis non habens, sed instigatione diabolica mot' & seduct', & falso & malitiose machinans & intendens, serenissimum Dominum nostrum Carolum secundum, Dei gratia Angliæ, Scotiæ, Franciæ, & Hiberniæ Regem, & gubernationem suam hujus regni Angliæ, necnon veram religionem protestan', infra hoc regnum Angliæ lege stabilit', in odium, infamiam, & contemptum inducere & inferre, & scandalum & infamiam imponere super quibusdam personis, qui producti fuissent testes, & testimon' dedissent ex parte dicti Dom' Regis contra præd' Eliz' Cellier, & alias personas, de alta proditione indictat' primo die Augusti, anno regni dicti Dom' Regis tricesimo secundo, apud prædict' parochiam sancti Clemen' Dacor', in com' Midd' præd', falso, malitiose, & seditiose scripsit & publicavit, & scribi, imprimi, & publicari causavit, quendam fictum, falsum, & scandalosum libellum, intitulat', Malice defeated, or a brief Relation of the Accusation and Deliverance of Elizabeth Cellier; wherein her Proceedings both before and during her Confinement are particularly related, and the Mystery of the Meal-Tub fully discovered; together with an Abstract of her Arraignment and Trial, written by herself for the Satisfaction of all lovers of undisguised Truth. In quo quidem libello continentur hæc falsa, ficta, & scandalosa verba, & figuræ sequentia: ff. I hope it will not seem strange to any honest and loyal Person, of what Way or Religion soever, that I, being born and bred up under Protestant Parents, should now openly profess my self of another Church (Ecclesiam Romanam innuendo) for my Education being in those Times, when my own Parents and Relations, for their constant and faithful Affection to the King and Royal Family, were persecuted, the King himself murdered, the Bishops and Church destroyed, the whole loyal Party, meerly for being so, oppressed and ruined, and all, as was pretended by the Authors of these Villanies, for their being Papists and Idolaters, the constant Character given by them to the King and his Friends; and to make them odious, they assuming to themselves only the Name of Protestants, making that the glorious Title by which they pretended Right to all things. These sort of Proceedings, as I grew in Understanding, produced in me more and more Horror of the Party that committed them, and put me on enquiring into that Religion, to which they pretend the greatest Antipathy, wherein, I thank God, I found my innate Loyalty not only confirmed, but encouraged; and, let Calumny say what it will, I never heard from any Papist, as they call them, Priest or Layman, but that they and I, and all true Catholics, owe our Lives to the Defence of our lawful King, which our present Sovereign Charles the Second is, whom God long and happily preserve so. These sort of Doctrines agreeing to my publick Morals, and no way, as ever I was taught, contradicting my private ones, commending at the same time to me Charity and Devotion, I without any Scruple have hitherto followed, glorying my self to be in Communion with those (Papistas innuendo) who were the humble Instruments of his Majesty's happy Preservation from the fatal Battle at Worcester, and whom, though poor, no Temptation could invite to betray him to those, who by a pretended Protestant Principle sought his innocent Blood. These Truths, I hope, may satisfy any innocent Person in my present Change; nor can they wonder at my Continuance therein, notwithstanding the horrid Crimes of Treason and Murder laid to the Charge of some Persons, considerable for their Quality and Fortunes, in that Party: For when I reflected who were Witnesses, and what unlikely things they deposed, and observed that many of the chiefest Sticklers for the Plot were those, or the Sons of those that acted the principal parts in the last Tragedy, which History told me too had the Prologue of a pretended Popish Plot; I say, these things made me doubtful of the whole; and the more I searched for Truth, the more I doubted that the old Enemies of the Crown were at work again for its Destruction. I being fully confirmed in this, thought it my Duty, through all sorts of Hazards, to relieve the poor imprison'd Catholics, who in great numbers were locked up in Gaols, starving for want of Bread; and this I did some Months before I ever saw the Countess of Powis, or any of those honourable Persons that were accused, or receiving one Penny of their Money, directly or indirectly, till about the latter end of January

(1678) the Prisoners increasing very much. Et in alia parte ejusdem libelli (inter alia) continentur hæc falsa, ficta, & scandalosa verba, ff. About this time I went daily to the Prisons, to perform those Offices of Charity I was obliged to; and on Thursday January 9, (1678) I dined in Newgate, in the Room called the Castle, on the the Master Debtors side; and about Four in the Afternoon I came down into the Lodge, with five Women, of which three were Protestants; and we all heard terrible Groans and Squeeks, which came out of the Dungeon called the Condemned Hole: I asked Harris the Turnkey what doleful Cry it was; he said it was a Woman in Labour; I bid him put us into the Room to her, and we would help her; but he drove us away very rudely, both out of the Lodge, and from the Door. We went behind the Gate, and there listened, and soon found that it was the voice of a strong Man in Torture, and heard, as we thought, between his Groans, the winding up of some Engine. These Cries stopped the Passengers under the Gate; and we six went to the Turner's Shop without the Gate, and stood there, amazed with the Horror and Dread of what we heard; when one of the Officers of the Prison came out in great Haste, seeming to run from the Noise: One of us caught hold of him, saying, Ob! what are they doing in the Prison? Officer. I dare not tell you, Mistress. Cell. It's a Man upon the Rack, I'll lay my Life on't. Offic. It is something like it. Cellier. Who is it, Praunce? Offic. Pray, Madam, do not ask me, for I dare not tell you; but it is that I am not able to bear any longer; pray let me go. With that he ran away towards Holbourn as fast as he could. We heard these Groans perfectly to the End of the Old-Baily: They continued till near Seven of the Clock; and then a Person in the Habit of a Minister, of a middle Stature, grey-haired, accompanied with two other Men, went into the Lodge; the Prisoners were locked up, and the outward Door of the Lodge also, at which I set a Person to stand and observe what she could; and a Prisoner loaded with Irons was brought into the Lodge, and examined a long time; and the Prisoners that came down as low as they could, heard the Person examined, with great Vehemency say often, I know nothing of it; I am innocent; he forced me to bely my self; what would you have me say? will you murder me because I will not bely my self and others? Several other such like Expressions they heard spoken, as by one in great Agony. About four of the Clock the next Morning the Prisoners, that lay in a place about the Hole heard the same Cry again two Hours, and on Saturday Morning again; and about eight of the Clock that Morning, a Person I employed to spy out the Truth of this Affair, did see the Turnkeys carry a Bed into the Hole: she asked who it was for; they told her it was for Praunce, who was gone made, and had torn his Bed in pieces. That Night the Examiners came again, and Praunce was led away to the Press-yard. This, and many things of like nature, made me very inquisitive to know what passed in the Prison. Soon after this Francis Corral a Scotchman, that had been put into Newgate upon suspicion of carrying away Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey's Body, and lay there thirteen Weeks and three Days in great Misery, got out: I went to see him, and found him a sad spectacle, having the Flesh worn away, and great Holes in both his Legs, by the Weight of his Irons; and having been chained so long double, that he could not stand upright: He told me much of his hard and cruel Usage, as that he had been squeezed and hasped into a thing like a Trough in a Dungeon under Ground, which put him to inexpressible Torment, insomuch that he swooned; and that a Person in the Habit of a Minister stood by all the while; that a Duke beat him, pulled him by the Hair, and set a drawn Sword to his Breast three times, and swore he would run him through; and another great Lord had laid down a heap of Gold, and told him it was Five hundred Pounds; that he should have it all, and be taken into the aforesaid Duke's House, if he would confess what they would have him: And one F. a Vintner, that lives at the Sign of the Half-Moon in Ch——— St———, by whose Contrivance he was accused, took him aside, and bid him name some Person, and say they employed him to take up the dead Body in Somerset-yard, and gave him Money for so doing; That if he would do this, both F. and he should have Money enough. He also told me, that he was kept from Thursday till Sunday without Victuals or Drink, having his Hands every Night chained behind him; and being all this time locked to a Staple, which was driven into the Floor, with a Chain not above a Yard long; that in this great Extremity he was forced to drink his own Water; and that the Gaoler beat his Wife because she brought Victuals, and pray'd he might have it, and threw Milk on the Ground, and bid her be gone, and not look at him. Et in altera parte ejusdem libelli continent' (inter al') hæc falsa, ficta, & scandalosa verba sequentia: ff. My Arraignment, which, in Confidence of my own Innocency, I continually press'd for; not but that I knew the Danger, as to this Life, of encountering the Devil in the worst of his Instruments, which are perjurers encouraged to that degree, as that profligated wretch (quendam Thomam Dangerfield testem product' ex parte Dom' Regis contra præd' Elizabetham Cellier, pro alta prodicione innuendo) was, and has been since his being exposed to the World in his true Colours, both at mine and another's Trial. Et in altera parte ejusdem libelli continentur hæc falsa, ficta, & scandalosa verba sequen': ff. Nor have I since received any thing towards my Losses, or the least Civility from any of them, whilst Dangerfield, (prædict' Thomam Dangerfield iterum innuendo) when made a Prisoner for apparent recorded Rogueries, was visited by and from Persons of considerable Quality, with great Sums of Gold and Silver, to encourage him in the new Villanies he had undertaken, not against me alone, but Persons, in whose Safety all good Men (as well Protestants as others) in the three Kingdoms are concerned. Et in altera parte ejusdem libelli, vocat' A Postscript to the impartial Reader, continent' hæc falsa, ficta, & scandalosa verba sequentia: ff. And whensoever his Majesty pleases to make it as safe and honourable to speak Truth, as it is apparent it hath been gainful and meritorious to do the contrary, there will not want Witnesses to testify the Truth of more than I have written, and Persons that are above being made the Hangman's Hounds for weekly Pensions, or any other Considerations whatsoever. In malum & perniciosissimum exemplum omn' alior' in tali casu delinquin' contra pacem dict' Dom' Regis, coron', & dignitat' suas.

Et etiam de hiis quæ ibidem ad gentem dict' Dom' Regis, hæred', vel successor' suorum mahemand', vel interficiend' in insidiis jacerent, vel in posterum jacere præsumerent. Ac etiam de hostellar' & al' omnibus & singulis personis, qui in abusu mensurar' & ponderum, sive in venditione victual' contra formam ordination' & statut', vel eor' alicujus inde pro communi utilitate regni sui Angli', & populi ejusdem nuper Regis, hæred' & successor' suorum ejusdem edit' & edend' delinquerent vel attemptarent in civitate prædicta, & libertate ejusdem, seu extunc in posterum delinquere vel attemptare præsumerent. Ac etiam de quibuscunque Vicecom', Constabular', Custod' gaolæ, & al' offic', qui in execut' officiorum suorum circa præmissa, vel eor' aliqua indebite se habuer', aut in posterum indebite se habere præsumerent, aut tepidi, remiss', vel negligentes fuer', aut extunc tepidi, remiss', vel negligent' fore contingerent infra civitatem prædictam & libertatem ejusdem, ac de omnibus & singulis articulis & circumstant', & al' quibuscunque, per quoscunque & qualitercunque in civitate prædicta & libertate ejusdem fact' sive perpetrat', & quæ extunc ibidem fieri, vel attemptari contingerent qualitercunque præmiss', aut eor' aliqua concernen'. Et ad indictament' quæcunque, quæ coram Majore aut Recordatore civitatis prædictæ pro tempore existens, & hujusmodi, ut præfertur, Aldermann', vel quatuor aut pluribus eorundem, quorum dict' Major vel Recordator pro tempore existens unum esse voluit, tunc in posterum caperent' inspiciend', & ad process' inde versus omnes & singulos sic indictat', vel quos in posterum sic indictat' contingerent, quousque caperent', redderent se, vel utlagarent' faciend' & continuand', & ad omnia & singula murdra, felon', venefic', incantat', scortileg', artes magic', transgress', falsas conspiration', & al' malefact', forestall', regretar', ingrossar', extortion', conventic', indictament' prædicta, cæteraque omnia & singula præmissa secund' leges & statut' regni sui Angli', prout in hujusmodi casu fieri consuevit aut debuit, audiend' & terminand', & ad easdem delinquen', & quamlibet eorum, pro delictis suis per fines, redemption', amerciamen', forisfactur', aut al' modo, prout secundum legem & consuetud' regni sui Angli', ac formam ordination' & statut' eorundem fieri consuevit aut debuit, castigand' & puniend', ac ad omnia al' & singula faciend', exercend', audiend', terminand', & exequend' infra civitatem prædictam, ac libertatem ejusdem, quæ Justiciarius ad pacem per leges vel statut' hujus regni sui Angli' facere, exercere, inquirere, vel exequi possent & valerent, & in tam amplis modo & forma prout aliquis al', aut aliqui al' Justiciarius ad pacem in aliquibus al' comitatibus hujus regni sui Angli' legitime facere, exercere, inquirere, punire, vel quoquo modo exequi possent aut valerent, prout per easdem literas patentes (int' al') plenius apparet. Quodque prædict' Dom' Rex nunc, per literas suas patentes sub magno sigillo suo Angli' figillat', gen' dat' apud Westm' prædictam 24^o die Junii, anno regni sui decimo quinto, quas iidem Major & Communitas, ac Cives civitatis London hic incur' proferunt, omnes concession' & al' quæcunque in prædictis literis patentes, prædict' nuper Regis Caroli primi superius specificat', pro eodem Domin' Regis nunc, hæred' & successor' suis, Majori & Communitati, ac Civibus civitatis London prædictæ, præd', & suor' successor' in perpetuum, ratificavit & confirmavit, prout per easdem literas patent' ipsius Domin' Regis nunc (inter al') plenius apparet. Et iidem Major & Communitas, ac Cives civit' London ulterius dicunt, quod tempore confectio' præd' literar' patent' præd' nuper Regis Caroli primi, & diu antea, & extrunc hucusque fuer', & adhuc existunt Major & Recordator civit' præd', ac Alderman' ejusdem civit', qui Major dictæ civit' extitissent, & onus Majorat' civit' illius sustin', ac tres & plures al' Alderman' ejusdem civit', qui onus Majorat' civit' ill' non sustinuerunt. Quodque a tempore confectio' earundem literar' patent' præd' nuper Reg' Caroli primi hucusq', Major & Recordator civit' præd' pro tempore existen', ac hujusmodi Alderman' ejusd' civitat' pro tempore existen', qui onus Majorat' civit' ill' sustin', necnon tres senior' Alderman' civit' præd' pro tempore existen', qui diutius in officium Aldermannat' civit' præd' steter', & onus & officium Majorat' civit' ill' non sustin', virtute literar' patent' ill' fuer' Justic' ad pacem infra civit' præd', & libertat' ejusdem conservand', ac virtute literar' patent' ill', & secundum formam & effectum eorund' de tempore in tempus, per tot' tempus ill', tenuer' session' pacis, & placita coron', scilicet, talia placita coron', qual' Justic' Dom' Regis ad pacem conservand' assign' per idem tempus legitime tenuer', vel tenere potuer' infra eandem civitat'.

Et eo warranto iidem Major & Communitas, ac Cives civitat' London, per tempus in informatione præd' superius specificat' usi fuer', & adhuc utuntur, ac clamant habere & uti libertat', privileg', & franch', quod Major dict' civit' & hujusmodi Aldermann' ejusdem civit', qui onus Majorat' civit' ill' sustinuer', ac inde fuerunt dimissi, ac tres seniores Aldermann' ejusdem civit', qui diutius in offic' Aldermannat' civit' præd' steter', & onus & officium Majorat' civit' ill' non sustinuer', fuer' Justic' dicti Dom' Regis ad pacem infra civit' præd' conservand', ac ad session' pacis, & placita coronæ, scilicet, talia placita coron', qual' Justic' Dom' Regis ad pacem conservand' assign' legitime tenere possent, infra eand' civit' tenend', ac ad omnes felon', riot', rout', & conventicul' illicit' infra civit' præd' inquirend', audiend', & terminand', prout eis bene licuit & licet.

Absque hoc, quod iidem Major ac Communitas, ac Cives civit' London, de libertat', privileg', & franchis' ill' super dictum Dom' Regem nunc, per tempus præd' in informatione præd' superius specificat' usurpaver', seu usurpant, prout per inform' illam pro dicto Dom' Rege nunc superius supponit'; quæ omn' & singula iidem Major & Communitas, ac Cives civit' London parati sunt verificare; unde petunt judicium, & quod libertat', privileg', & franch' ill', eis & successoribus suis in perpetuum deinceps allocentur & adjudicentur, ac quod ipsi quoad præmissa illa ab hac curia dimittantur, &c.

Et quoad resid' libertat', privileg', & franch' in informatione prædict' specificat', per ipsos Majorem & Communitat', ac Cives civitat' London superius minime clamat', iidem Major & Communitas, ac Cives civit' London libertat', privileg', & franch' illis nunquam usi fuerunt, seu utuntur, sed de eisdem penitus declamant, &c.

Et præd' Robertus Sawyer Attorn' dicti Dom' Regis nunc General', qui pro eod' Dom' Rege in hac parte sequitur, habito auditu placiti præd' having in their late Session, in pursuance of your Majesty's Direction, entred upon a strict and impartial Inquiry into the horrid and execrable Popish Plot, which hath been for several Years last past, and still is carried on, for the Destruction of your Majesty's Sacred Person and Government, and Extirpation of the Protestant Religion, and the utter Ruin of your Majesty's Protestant Subjects: And having so far proceeded therein, as justly to attain, upon full Evidence, one of the five Lords impeached for the same, and were in further Prosecution of the remaining four Lords, and other Conspirators therein: And as well the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, as the Commons in your said Parliament assembled, having declared, That they are fully satisfied that there now is, and for divers Years last past, hath been a horrid and treasonable Plot and Conspiracy contrived and carried on by those of the Popish Religion in Ireland, for Massacring the English, and subverting the Protestant Religion, and the antient established Government of that Kingdom: And your said Commons having impeached the Earl of Tyrone, in order to the bringing him to Justice for the same, and having under Examination other Conspirators in the said Irish Plot: And your said Commons having likewise impeached Sir William Scrogs, Chief Justice of your Majesty's Court of King's Bench, for Treason, and other great Crimes and Misdemeanors, in endeavouring to subvert the Laws of this Kingdom by his arbitrary and illegal Proceedings; and having voted Impeachments against several other Judges for the like Misdemeanors, your Petitioners, considering the continual Hazards to which your Sacred Life and the Protestant Religion, and the Peace of the Kingdom are exposed, while the Hopes of a Popish Successor gives Countenance and Encouragement to the Conspirators, in their wicked Designs: And considering also the Disquiet and dreadful Apprehensions of your good Subjects, by Reason of the Miseries and Mischiefs which threaten them on all Parts, as well from Foreign Powers, as from the Conspiracies within your several Kingdoms, against which no sufficient Remedy can be provided but by your Majesty; and your Parliament were extremely surprized at the late Prorogation, whereby the Prosecution of the publick Justice of the Kingdom, and the making the Provisions necessary for the Preservation of your Majesty, and your Protestant Subjects, have received an Interruption. And they are the more affected herewith, by reason of the Experience they have had of the great Progress which the emboldened Conspirators have formerly made in their Designs, during the late frequent Recesses of Parliament; but that which supports them against Despair is, the Hopes they derive from your Majesty's Goodness, that your Intention was and does continue by this Prorogation to make way for your better Concurrence with the Counsels of your Parliament. And your Petitioners humbly hope, that your Majesty will not take Offence that your Subjects are thus zealous, and even impatient of the least delay of the long hoped for Security, whilst they see your precious Life invaded, the true Religion undermined, their Families and innocent Posterity likely to be subjected to Blood, Confusion, and Ruin, and all these Dangers increased by reason of the late Endeavours of your Majesty and your Parliament, which have added Provocation to the Conspirators, but have had little or no effect towards securing against them; and they trust your Majesty will graciously accept of this Discovery, and Desire of their loyal Hearts to preserve your Majesty, and whatever else is dear to them, and to strengthen your Majesty against all Popish and pernicious Counsels, which any ill affected Persons may presume to offer: They do therefore most humbly pray, that your Majesty will be graciously pleased (as the only means to quiet the Minds, and extinguish the Fears of your Protestant People, and prevent the eminent Dangers which threaten your Majesty's Kingdoms, and particularly this your great City, which hath already so deeply suffered for the same) to permit your said Parliament to sit from the Day to which they are prorogued, until by their Counsels and Endeavours those good Remedies shall be provided, and those just Ends attained, upon which the Safety of your Majesty's Person, the Preservation of the Protestant Religion, the Peace and Settlement of your Kingdoms, and the Welfare of this your ancient City, do so absolutely depend; for the pursuing and obtaining of which good Effects, your Petitioners unanimously do offer their Lives and Estates, and shall ever pray, &c. Ac ad tunc & ibidem ulterius agreever' & ordinaver', quod petitio ill', post præsentation' inde eidem Dom' Regi, impressa foret per talem personam, qual' dictus tunc Major civitat' London præd' appunctuaret; quæ quidem petitio sic fuit imprimi ordinat', ea intentione, quod publicatio falsor' rumor' & relation' de & concernen' præd' petition' dicto Domino Regi exhibit' evitaretur, inimici Domini Regis, & conspiratores præd', a procedendo in conspiratione sua præd' deterrentur, perturbationes, quas boni & fideles subditi dicti Domini Regis nunc in animis suis ex causis prædictis concepissent, alleviarentur, & cives & inhabitant' ejusdem civitat' melius scirent quid factum fuisset in dicto Communi Concilio de materia in petitione præd' eidem Communi Concilio, ut præfertur, exhibit' content'. Quodque præd' petitio dicto Dom' Regi sic præsentari agreeat', postea (scil', præd' decimo tertio die Januarii, anno tricesimo secundo supradicto) eidem Dom' Regi humillime præsentat' fuit, videlicet, apud London præd', in prædicta parochia sancti Michaelis Bassishaw, ac postea (scil', decimo quinto die ejusdem mensis Januarii) per Samuelem Roycroft, quem dictus Patient' Ward tunc Major civitat' London ad inde appunctuavit, impressa fuit juxta ordinem præd' in ea parte fact', videlicet, apud London præd', in parochia prædict'; quæ quidem petitio, & impressio inde in forma prædict', & ea ex causa præd' fact', sunt eadem petitio, & impressio, & publicatio inde in præd' placito præd' Attorn' generalis superius replicando placitat' spec': Absque hoc, quod aliqua petitio de vel concernen' prorogation' parliamenti præd' fact', ordinat', publicat', seu impress' fuit, alit' vel alio modo, quam iidem Major & Communitas, ac Cives civitat' London superius allegaver', prout idem Attorn' generalis pro dicto Domino Rege superius suppon'; & hoc similiter parat' sunt verificare. Unde iidem Major & Communitas, ac Cives civitat' London non intendunt, quod ipsi per aliqua præallegat' præd' libertat', privileg', & franchis' fore de seipsis unum corpus corporat' & politicum in re, facto, & nomine, per nomen Majoris & Communitat', ac Civium civitat' London, ac per idem nomen placitare & implacitari, respondere ac responderi, per ipsos superius, ut præfertur, clamit' forisfecer', ac, ut prius, pet' judicium, & quod libertat', privileg', & franchis' ill' cis & successoribus suis in perpetuum deinceps allocentur & adjudicentur, ac quod ipsi, quoad quoad præmiss' ill', ab hac cur' dimittantur, &c.

Et quoad exit' int' Dom' Regem, & Major' & Communitat', ac Cives civitat' London superius in forma præd' junct', idem Attorn' dict' Dom' Regis nunc general' dicit, quod Major & Communitas, ac Cives civitat' London præd', sunt partes Defendentes, vers' quos idem Attorn' dicti Dom' Regis nunc general' profecut' est information' præd', & ea de causa pet' breve Vicecom' Hertf. Et quia præd' Major & Communitas ac Cives civitat' præd' hoc non dedicunt, ideo præcept' est Vic' com' Hertf. præd', quod Venire fac' coram Dom' Rege a præd' die sancti Michaelis in tres septiman' ubicunq; &c. duodecim, &c. de vicineto præd', per quos, &c. & qui, &c. ad recogn', &c. quia tam, &c. Idem dies dat' est tam præfat' Roberto Sawyer Miles, qui sequitur, &c. quam prædict' Majori & Communitat', ac Civibus civitat' London prædict', &c. Et præd' Attorn' dicti Dom' Regis nunc general', quoad placitum præfat' Major' & Communitat' ac Civium civitat' London præd' superius rejungerendo placitat', pet' inde diem interloquendi coram dicto Dom' Rege, a die sancti Michaelis in tres septiman' ubicunq; &c. & ei conceditur, &c. idem dies dat' est præfat' Majori & Communitat', ac Civibus civit' London præd', &c. ad quas quidem tres septim' sancti Michaelis coram dicto Dom' Rege apud Westm' venit tam præfat' Robertus Sawyer Miles, qui sequitur, &c. quam præd' Major & Communitas, ac Cives civitat' London præd' per Attorn' suum præd'. Et præd' Vic' com' Hertf. non misit inde breve, ideo sicut alias præcept' est Vic' com' Hertf. præd', quod venire fac' coram dicto Dom' Rege in octab' sancti Hilar' ubicunque, &c. duodecim, &c. de vicineto de villa Hertf. præd', &c. per quos, &c. & qui, &c. ad recogn', &c. quia tam, &c. idem dies dat' est tam præfat' Roberto Sawyer Militi, qui sequitur, &c. quam prædict' Majori & Communitat', ac Civibus civitat' London, &c.

Et præd' Attorn' dict' Dom' Regis nunc general', qui, &c. quoad placitum ipsorum Major' & Communitat', ac Civium civitat' præd', quoad confectionem & publicationem legis pro levatione denariorum de personis ad publica mercata infra civitat' præd' tent' cum victualibus & provisionibus ibidem vendend' acceden', ac exactionem & levationem hujusmodi denar' superius fieri supposit' per ipsos Majorem & Communit', ac Cives, superius rejungerendo placitat', pro eodem Dom' Rege nunc dicit, quod per aliqua per ipsos superius inde allegat' libertat', privileg', & franchis' fore de seipsis unum corpus corporat' & politicum in re, facto, & nomine, per nomen Majoris & Communitat', ac Civium civitat' London, ac per idem nomen placitare & implacitari, respondere ac responderi per ipsos superius, ut præfertur, clamat', eisdem Majori & Communitat' ac Civibus allocari non debent, quia protestando, quod ipsi præd' Major & Communit', ac Cives civitat' London præd', decimo septimo die Septembris, anno vicesimo sexto suprascripto, in replicatione præd' mentionat', necnon continue postea, & a tempore cujus contrar' memoria hominum non existit' minime seisit' fuer', seu adhuc seisit' existunt de & in publicis mercatis præd' in dominico suo, ut de feodo, nec per totum idem tempus sumptibus suis propriis providerunt, seu providere consuever' & debuer' fora mercatoria, sive loca ubi hujusmodi mercata tent' fuer' quotiescunq; necesse fuit, stallas, stationes, & alias accommodationes pro personis ad eadem mercata venien' cum victualibus & provisionibus ibidem vendend', pro meliori & magis conveniend' vendition' & exposition' eorundem, prout præd' Major & Communitas, ac Cives superius rejungerendo allegaver'; protestandoq; etiam, quod rat' præd' per actum sive ordination' præd', ut præfertur, solvi ordinat' præd', tempore confectionis ordinationis illius, & extunc hucusq; non fuer' rationabiles, nec adhuc rationabiles existunt, prout iidem Major & Communitas, ac Cives superius similiter allegaverunt. Pro placito tamen idem Attorn' dict' Domin' Regis nunc generalis dicit, quod per quendam actum in parlamento dict' Rom' Regis nunc tent' apud Westmonaster' per separales prorogationes, decimo quarto die Februarii, anno regni dict' Dom' Regis nunc vicesimo secundo (inter alia) inactitat' fuit, ad finem quod apti & commodi loci infra dictam civitat' & libertat' ejusdem, extraposit' & appunctuat' forent pro reædificand' & custodiend' mercata ampliori convenientia quam antea fuer', ita quod principales strætæ non forent impedit' (Angl' pestred) & obstruct' perinde, prout antea consuet' fuit, & quod Regale Excambium, Guildhall, le Sessions House in le Old Baily, & commun' gaolæ & prisonæ infra præd' civitat', forent amplificat' & fact' magis commoda pro publicis usu & ornament' Civitatis, & melius securitand' a periculo & casualitate conflagrationis, & quod aliquæ convenien' distantia, intervall' & circuitus fundi forent relict' inter Regal' Excambium, & alias domos ædificand' infra civitat' præd', quod Major, Aldermanni, & Commun' civitat' præd' in Commun' Concilio assemblat' impenderent (Angl' should and might employ) & per actum præd' autoritat' fuer' impendere talia loca & portio' fundi infra Civitat' præd' & libertat' ejusdem, prout per & cum dicti Dom' Regis nunc approbation' tunc fuer', vel ante decimum diem Martii, millesimo sexcentesimo sexagesimo nono, forent extraposit' & adjudicat' necessar' & convenien', tam pro publicis mercatis ibidem, quam etiam pro ornamento, amplificatione, & convenien' præd' Regal' Excambii, & aliorum locorum præmentionat', & cujuslibet vel alicujus eorundem respectivo, & ad intention', quod rationabilis satisfactio dat' foret proprietar', & aliis habent' aliquem statum sive interesse in fundis & locis, quæ fuissent vel forent extraposit', capiend' & occupand' pro publicis locis mercatoriiis, præd' Major, Aldermann', & Commun', per ipsos, vel alios in ea parte fore appunctuat' & autorizat', tractarent & agrearent cum proprietar' & al' interessat' in eisdem, & in casu voluntariæ recusationis, sive alicujus talis inhabilitatis, sive impediment' qual' in quodam al' actu parlamenti in eodem actu specificat', pro reædificatione civitat' London, nuper antea fact', mentionat' fuer', seu alius incapacitat' cujuscunq; in proprietar' inde, vel al' interessat' in eisdem, ad tractand' & agreand', præd' Major & cur' Alderman' forent & fuer' per actum præd' autorizat' & requisit' causare jur' fore impannellat' in tal' modo do & forma, prout per actum præd' direct' & appunctuat' fuit, ita quod null' duo jur' præd' sic fore impannellat' venirent ex una & eadem warda, adjudicare & assidere qual' compensation', & satisfaction' in quibuslibet casibus præd' forent adjudicat', & dat' respectivis proprietar', & aliis interessat' in fundis & locis sic extraposit', capiend' & occupand' pro aliquibus usibus vel propositis, ut præfertur, in prosecutione ejusdem actus, secundum tal' eorum respectivos status & interefs'. Et ulterius inactitat' fuit, quod pro omnimodis carbonibus, quæ ab & post primum diem Maii, millesimo sexcentesimo & septuagesimo, & ante vicesimum nonum diem Septembris, qui foret in anno Dom' millesimo sexcentesimo octogesimo septimo, forent importat' & adduct' in præd' portum civitat' London, seu rivum Thamesis, infra libertat' civitat' præd' super eundem rivum, solut' foret per viam impositionis superinde, secund' ratas postea mentionat' (videl') pro omnibus tal' carbonibus, qual' ibi importat' & induct' forent ab & post primum diem Maii, millesimo sexcentesimo & septuagesimo, & ante vicesimum quartum diem Junii, millesimo sexcentesimo septuagesimo septimo, solut' foret pro qualibet celdar' seu tonna inde duos solidos ultra imposition' duodecim denar' pro celdar' seu tonna per præd' actum pro re-ædificatione civitat' London appunctuat' solvend', & pro omnibus tal' carbonibus, quæ ibidem importat' & induct' forent ab & post prædict' vicesimum quartum diem Junii, millesimo sexcentesimo septuagesimo septimo, & ante præd' vicesimum nonum diem Septembris, millesimo sexcentesimo octogesimo septimo, solut' forent pro qualibet celdar' sive tonna inde tres solidos; & iidem, vigore actus præd', forent collect', levat' & solut' in tali forma & modo, in omni & quolibet respectu, prout in & per præd' priorem actum fuit limitat' & appunctuat' pro collectione & levatione debit' duodecim denar' pro celdar', sive tonna carbonum imposit' per priorem actum præd', & omnes & quilibet potestat', autoritat', directiones, & provision' in vel per præd' priorem actum mentionat', vel provis' pro levatione & collectione inde: Omnesq; quidem denar' sic recipiend', super comput' præd' respectivarum imposition', seu earum ulterius de tempore in tempus forent solut' in receptu Cameræ civitat' London, & abinde forent emanat' & solut' secundum directionem & appunctuation' præd' actus de anno vicesimo secundo supradicto, & non aliter; & præd' Camera civitat' London stare & onerat' foret cum toto resid' denar' præd' ibidem solut', qui non sic emanat' forent & solut'. Et ulterius inactitat' fuit, quod omnes & quælibet summa & summæ monet', quæ levat' foret super reception' separal' & respectivarum imposition' præd', sive per tal' additional' debit' in casu concealament' inde, prout per præd' priorem actum appunctuat' fuit, foret occupat' & disposit' modo & forma sequen' (videl') una quarta pars omnium denarior', quæ ab & post præd' primum diem Maii, millesimo sexcentesimo & septuagesimo, & ante præd' vicesimum quartum diem Junii, millesimo sexcentesimo septuagesimo septimo, forent levat', sive solubil' super reception' præd' imposition' duorum solid' pro qualibet celdar' vel tonna carbonum, seu in casu concealament' inde, ut præfertur, foret occupat' & disposit' pro & erga sa-

Et præd' Attorn' dict' Dom' Regis nunc general', qui, &c. pro eodem Dom' Rege nunc ulterius dicit, quod virtute actus illius iidem Major & Communitas, ac Cives civitat' London præd', ante confectioem & publicationem legis præd', scilicet, primo die Septembris, anno regni dicti Dom' Regis nunc vicesimo sexto supradicto, apud London præd', in parochia & warda præd', habuer' & receper' pro debito & vectigali præd' de duobus solidis pro qualibet celdar' sive tonna carbonum in civitat' London, sive portum ejusdem importat', ingent' denariorum summam ad proposita præd'. Et ulterius idem Attorn' Dom' Regis nunc general', qui, &c. pro eodem Dom' Rege nunc dicit, quod Major & Communitas, ac Cives civitat' London, absque aliquo jure, titulo, sive autoritat' quibuscumque, præmissis præd' non obstantibus, præd' die Jovis, scilicet, præd' decimo septimo die Septembris, anno regni dicti Dom' Regis nunc vicesimo sexto supradict', in eorum Commun' Concilio adtunc tent' in camera Guildhall civitat' London præd', videlicet, in parochia sancti Michaelis Bassishaw London, insimul assemblat', fecer', condider', & publicaver' præd' legem per ipsos de facto inactitat', pro levatione separal' denar' summar' præd', de omnibus subditis ac ligeis Dom' Regis nunc, tam liberis quam non liberis hominibus civitat' præd', & aliis extraneis ad publica mercat' infra civit' præd' tent' acceden' cum victual' & provisionibus suis ibidem vendend', ac easdem separal' denar' summas, sub solo colore & prætextu legis præd' sic per ipsos, pro eorum privato lucro & comodo, illegaliter fact', & absque aliquo alio jure, titulo, sive autoritat' quibuscumque, per præd' spatium septem annorum post præd' decimum septimum diem Septembris, anno vicesimo sexto supradicto prox' sequen', & amplius, apud London præd', in parochia præd', de omnibus dict' Dom' Regis ligeis & subditis ad præd' publica mercata, per totum tempus præd', infra civitat' præd' tent', cum victual' & provisionibus ibidem vendend' accedentibus, exeger' & levaver', & exigi & levare fecer', & denar' ill' ad eorum proprios usus, converterunt & disposuerunt, in subversion' boni regiminis & gubernation' civitatis præd', & in magnam oppression' & depauperation' omnium dicti Dom' Regis nunc ligeorum, ad mercata præd' cum victualibus & provisionibus suis acceden' & venien', ad grave dampnum & nocumentum omnium ligeorum & subditorum dicti Domini Regis, in augmentation' preciorum omnium victual' & provision' in mercata præd' vendit', ac in dicti Domini Regis nunc & coronæ suæ Regiæ exhæredationem manifestam, ac contra fiduc' in ipsis, ut corpore corporat' & politic', per Dom' Regem ac leges hujus regni Angl' reposit', prout præd' Attorn' dict' Dom' Regis nunc generalis pro eodem Dom' Rege nunc superius replicando allegavit; absque hoc, quod præd' Major & Communitas, ac Cives civitatis London, a tempore cujus contrar' memoria hominum non exigit, habuer', seu habere consuever' tolner', ratas, sive denar' summas per ipsos Majorem & Communitat' ac Cives civitat' præd', superius supposit' fore per præfat' legem sive ordination' præd' assess', & in certitudinem reduct', prout per placitum ipsorum Majoris & Communitat', ac Civium civitat' London præd' superius rejungerendo supponitur. Et hoc idem Attorn' General' pro eodem Dom' Rege nunc parat' est verificare; unde & ex quo iidem Major & Communitas, ac Cives, libertat', privileg' & franchis' præd', fore de seipsis corpus corporat' & politicum, ex causa præd' forisfecer', idem Attorn' General', ut prius, pro eodem Dom' Rege nunc pet' judicium, & quod præd' Major & Communitas, ac Cives civitat' London præd', de præmissis convincantur, ac de libertat', privileg' & franchis' illi' abjudicentur & excludantur, &c.

Et quoad placitum præfat' Majoris & Communitat', ac Civium civit' London præd' superius rejungerendo placitat', quoad resid' præd' placiti præfat' Attorn' general' in assign' forisfactur', ut præfertur, superius replicando placitat' idem Attorn' dict' Dom' Regis nunc general', protestando, quod præd' prorogatio dicti parliamenti per præfat' Dom' Regem fuit pro diversis necessar' & urgentibus causis, bonum & utilitatem dicti Dom' Regis & regni sui concernen', & secundum veram & indubitat' prærogativam & potestatem dicti Dom' Regis nunc; & per eandem prorogationem prosecutio publicæ justitiæ regni, & præparationis (Angl' the making Provisions) necessar' pro præservation' dict' Dom' Regis, & ejus subditorum Protestantium, non recepissent obstructionem (Angl' Interruption) prout per petitionem præd' per vota & suffragia præfat' Majoris & Communitat', ac Civium civitat' præd' in dicto Communi Concilio assemblat', sic ut præfertur ordinat', false & malitiose allegatur; pro placito tamen idem Attorn' general' pro eodem Dom' Rege nunc dic', quod placitum præfat' Majoris & Communitat', ac Civium civitat' London præd' superius rejungerendo in ea parte placitat', materiaque in eodem content' minime sufficien' in lege existunt ad ipsos Majorem & Communitat', ac Cives civitat' præd' ad clamand' libertat', privileg', & franchis' præd', fore de seipsis corpus corporat' & politicum in re, facto, & nomine, per nomen Majoris & Communitat', ac Civium civit' London præd', ac per idem nomen placit' & implacit', resp' & responderi, sibi allocand', seu adjudicand' manuten'. Quodq; ipse idem Attorn' gener' ad placitum ill' modo & forma præd' placitat' pro eodem Dom' Reg' nunc necesse non habet, nec per legem terræ tenetur aliquo modo respondere. Et hoc idem Attorn' dict' Dom' Regis nunc general' pro eodem Dom' Rege nunc parat' est verificare. Erratum est etiam in hoc, viz. quod crimina in & per indictamentum prædict' versus prædict' Thomam imposit', per leges hujus regni Angliæ incerte, dubie, & nimis generalit' allegat' existunt, quodque idem indictamentum supposuit, & eidem Thomæ onerat & imponit crimina diversimoda, & toto genere inter se discrepantia, quodque iudicium superinde reddit', sit & existit contrarium legibus Angliæ, & minime pronuntiand' vel imponend' pro vel super hujusmodi crimina, qual' in indictamento prædict' supponuntur, & in eo manifeste est errat', unde pet' iudicium cur' hic in præmissis, & quod iudic' & attinctur' prædict' ab error' prædict', & al' in recordo & process' prædict' compert' existent', reversetur, annulletur, & penitus pro nullo habeatur, & quod ipse prædict' Johannes Walcott filius & hæres prædict' Thomæ, ad omnia quæ ipse præd' Johannes, occasione iudicii & attinctur' prædict' amisit, restituatur, & quod cur' hic procedat ad examinationem tam record' & process' prædict', quam materiar' superius pro errore assign', &c. & quia cur' dicti Domini Regis hic de iudicio suo de & super præmissis reddend' nondum advisatur, dies inde dat' est præfat' Johanni Walcott in statuto quo nunc, &c. in cro' sanctæ Trinitat', coram Domino Rege, ubicunque, &c. de iudicio suo inde audiend', &c. ad quod quidem crast' sanctæ Trinitat', coram Domino Rege apud Westm' ven' prædictus Johannes Walcott per Attornat' suum prædict', &c. ut prius, petit iudicium, & quod iudicium & attinctur' prædict', versus prædict' Thomam Walcott reddit', ab error' prædict', & al' in recordo & process' prædict' compert' & existent', reversetur, annulletur, & penitus pro nullo habeatur, & quod ipse prædict' Johannes Walcott, filius & hæres prædict' Thomæ, ad omnia quæ ipse idem Johannes, occasione iudicii & attinctur' prædict' amisit, restituatur, & quod cur' hic procedat ad examination' tam record' & process' prædict', quam materiarum superius pro errore assign', &c. And after many Continuances 'tis entred thus: Super quo vis', & per cur' hic intellectis omnibus & singulis præmissis, diligenterque examinat' record' & process' prædict', & err' per prædict' Johannem Walcott superius assign', & al' in record' & process' prædict' compert' existent', maturaque deliberatione inde prius habita, considerat' est, quod iudicium prædict' ab error' prædict', & al' in record' & process' prædict' compert' existent', revocetur, annulletur, & penitus pro nullo habeatur, & quod prædict' Johannes Walcott, filius & hæres prædicti Thomæ Walcott, ad omnia quæ ipse occasione iudicii & attinctur' prædict' amisit, restituatur, & quod prædict' Johannes Walcott eat inde sine die, &c. Et super hoc Johannes Trevor Miles, Attorn' Domini Regis nunc general', qui pro eodem Domino Rege in hac parte sequitur, coram Rege ac proceribus hujus regni Angliæ hoc prædicto parlamento apud Westm' in com' Middlesex assemblat', in propria persona sua ven', & dicit, quod in record' & process', ac etiam in redditione iudicii super prædict' priori brevi dicti Domini Regis de errore corrigend', per prædict' Johannem Walcott prosecut' pro revocatione & adnullatione iudicii prædict' versus prædict' Thomam Walcott, super indictamentum prædict', pro alta prodicione prædict' reddit', manifeste est erratum in hoc, viz. quod ubi per recordum prædict' supponitur, quod prædict' Johannes Walcott posuit loco suo quendam Benediçt' Browne Attornat' suum ad prosequend' prædict' primum breve de errore in & super indictament' prædict' pro alta prodicione prædict', quod tamen Benediçt' Browne nullum habuit warrant' Attorn' pro eodem Johanne Walcott de recordo affilat', ideo in eo manifeste est errat'. Errat' est etiam in hoc, viz. quod per record' prædict' apparet quod iudicium prædict' pro revocatione & adnullatione iudicii prædict' versus prædict' Thomam Walcott, in forma præd' reddit', redditum fuit pro præd' Johanne Walcott versus dict' Dominum Regem, ubi per legem terræ hujus regni Angliæ iudicium ill' reddi debuisset pro dicto Domino Rege versus eundem Johannem; ideo in eo scil' manifeste est errat', & hoc parat' est verificare, unde pet' iudicium, & quod iudic' ill' ab error' prædict', & al' in record' & process' prædict' existent', revocetur, annulletur, & penitus pro nullo habeatur, & quod dictus Dominus Rex, ad quæ omnia ipse occasione revocation' & adnullation' iudicii prædict' amisit, restituatur, &c.

Rex versus Sidney^c, for High-Treason.Mich^o 35 Car^o II. B. R.The Plea (drawn by Mr. Serjeant Rotheram) which he offered to the Court.

PRædict^{us} Algernon Sidney dicit, quod per statut^{um} in parlamento inchoat^{um} & tent^{um} apud Westm^{onasterium} octavo die Maii, anno regni Domini Regis nunc decimo tertio, & ibi continuat^{um} usque tricesimum diem Julii tunc prox^{imum} sequen^{tem}, & ab eodem tricesimo die Julii adjornatum uique vicesimum diem Novembris tunc prox^{imum} sequen^{tem}, intitulum, An Act for the Safety and Preservation of his Majesty's Person and Government against Treasonable and Seditious Practices and Attempts, inter alia, ordinat^{um} & inactitat^{um} fuit, per autoritatem parlamenti prædicti, quod null^{us} persona sive personæ, virtute actus prædicti, incurreret aliquas penalitates in actu prædicto mentionat^{as}, nisi ipse vel ipsi prosecut^{us} esset vel essent infra sex menses prox^{imum} post offens^{um} commiss^{um}, & indict^{us} esset superinde infra tres menses post talem prosecutionem, aliquo in statuto prædict^o content^{um} in contrarium non obstante. Et prædict^{us} Algernon ulterius dicit, quod ipse prosecut^{us} fuit & commissus prisonæ Turris de London, pro offens^{um} in indictamento prædict^o mentionat^{um}, vicesimo sexto die Junii ultimo præterito, & non antea, & ibidem continuat^{um} prisonar^{um} huc usque, & quod ipse prædict^{us} Algernon non fuit indictat^{us} pro aliquo vel aliquibus offens^{um} in indictamento prædict^o mentionat^{um}, infra tres menses prox^{imum} post prosecutionem prædict^{am}. His Grace complained to the King of the ſcandalous Miſrepresentation that was made of him in the Monday's Gazette, upon which the Gazetteer was called to an Account for it, who alledg'd for himſelf, that a Perſon of great Quality ſent him in Writing the Words therein recited, commanding him to put them in the Gazette. Yeſterday being the laſt Day of the Term, all the Priſoners that were in the Tower upon the late ſham Presbyterian Plot (conſpiration' & proditiion' præd' innuendo) were diſcharged upon Bail; Mr. Braddon, who proſecuted the Murder of the Earl of Eſſex, the Information put in againſt him in the King's Bench by Mr. Attorney, for a pretended Subornation, &c. was not proſecuted, and his Bail was diſcharged; and the paſſing Sentence upon the Author of Julian the Apoſtate, and the Printer of the late Lord Ruſſel's Speech, was paſſed over with Silence. Great Applications are made to his Majeſty for his pardoning Mr. Sidney in the Tower (dictum Algernon Sidney, ut præfertur, convict' innuendo) which is believed will be attained, and that he will be baniſhed. The Lord Howard (dict' Willielmum Howard innuendo) appears diſpiſeable in the Eyes of all men; he is under a Guard at Whitehall, and (as believed) will be ſent to the Tower, for that the Duke of Monmouth (Jacobum Ducem Monmouth innuendo) will accuſe him concerning the Teſtimony he hath given, &c. (evident' ſuper triation' & conviction' præd' W. R. & A. Duc' M. innuendo) that no Age or Hiſtory can parallel. I am now thoroughly ſatisfied, that what was printed in the Monday's Gazette is utterly falſe, and you will ſee it ſo declared ſhortly. The King is never pleaſed but when he is with him, hath commanded all the Privy Council to wait on him, and happy is he that hath moſt of his Favour: His Pardon was ſealed and delivered him laſt Wedneſday; 'tis ſaid, he will be reſtored to be Maſter of the Horſe, and be called into the Council Table, and to all his other Places; and 'tis reported he will be made Captain-General of all the Forces, and Lord High Admiral; and he treats all his old Friends, that daily viſit him, with great Civilities; they are all ſatisfied with his Integrity, and, if God ſpares his Life, doubt not but he will be an Inſtrument of much Good to the King and Kingdom: He ſaid publickly, that he knew my Lord Ruſſel (dict' Willielm' Ruſſel pro conſpiration' & proditiion' præd' convict', attinct', & execut' innuendo) was as loyal a Subject as any in England, and that his Majeſty believed the ſame; now I intend ſhortly to wait on him my ſelf. It would make you laugh to ſee how ſtrangely our high Tories and Clergy are mortified, their Countenances ſpeak it; were my Lord S—— to be moved for now, it would be readily granted. Sir George (Georgium Jeffreys Mil' & Bar', Capital' Juſtic' Dom' Regis ad placita in cur' ipſius Dom' Regis coram ipſo Rege tenend' aſſign', adtunc & adhuc exiſten' innuendo) is grown very humble. The ſham Proteſtant Plot (conſpiration' & proditiion' præd' innuendo) is quite loſt and confounded. The Earl of Mackleſfield is bringing Actions of Scandalum Magnatum againſt all the Grand Jurymen that indicted him at the laſt Aſſizes; and the ſeveral Gentlemen that were indicted in Cheshire and Northamptonſhire, will bring their ſeveral Actions at Law againſt them. Expectation, a Warrant is signed at last for beheading Mr. Sidney (dict' Algernon Sidney innuendo) at Tower-Hill next Friday: Great Endeavours have been used to obtain his Pardon, but the contrary Party have carried it, which much dasheth our Hopes; but God still governs. Justic' nostris ad placita coram nob' tenend' assign', salutem. Quia in record' & process', ac etiam in redditione judic' cujusdam indictament' coram Justic' nostris ad gaolam nostram de Newgate de prisonar' in eadem existen' deliberand' assign', versus J. H. de paroch', &c. in com' Midd', Gen', pro altis proditionibus contra person' Dom' Caroli secundi nup' Regis Angliæ, fratris nostri præcharissimi, unde coram eis nup' attinct' fuit, ut dicitur, error interven' manifest', ad grave dampn' ipsius Johannis, sicut ex querela sua accepimus: Nos error', si quis fuerit, modo debito corrigi, & eidem Johanni plenam & celerem Justic' fieri volentes in hac parte, vobis mandamus, quod si judic' inde reddit' sit, tunc visis & examinat' record' & process' præd', quæ coram nob' certis de causis Venire fecimus, & coram vobis jam resident, ut dicitur, ulterius inde pro errore ill' corrigend' fieri faciatis, quod de jure & secund' legem & consuetud' regni Angl' fuerit faciend'. Test' meipso apud Westm' 14 die Maii, anno regni nostri secund'. Et sup' hoc idem J. H. dic', quod in record' & process' præd', necnon in redditione judicii attinctur' præd' manifest' est errat' in hoc, videlicet, quod ubi per indictament' præd' mentionatur quod deliberatio gaolæ in recordo judicii, & attinctur' præd' mentionat', tent' fuit pro com' Midd' apud Justice Hall in le Old Baily in suburbiis civit' London', non apparet per record' præd' quod Justice Hall, nec le Old Baily, sunt in com' Midd', ideo in eo manifest' est errat'. Erratum est etiam in hoc, videlicet, quod indictamentum præd' mentionatur fore capt' 7 die Decemb' in record' præd' mentionat', coram Justic' de audiend' & terminand' in recordo præd' mentionat', & per eos fore deliberand' Justic' ad gaol' deliberation' in eodem recordo specificat', 30 die Decembr' tunc postea in forma juris terminand', sed non apparet per record' convictionis præd', quod sessio de audiend' & terminand' habuit aliquod adjournament' vel continuation' usque dictum 30 diem Decembr', ideo in eo manifest' est errat'. Erratum est etiam in hoc, quod verba vi & armis, &c. omittuntur in indictament' præd', ideo in eo manifest' est errat'. Errat' est etiam in hoc, quod constat per record' præd', quod process' & judic' præd' sunt intrat' & recordat' sup' record' Justiciar' de audiend' & terminand', & non super record' Justic' gaol' deliberand', ideo in eo manifest' est errat'. Errat' est etiam in hoc, videl', quod non apparet per record' præd', per qualem autoritat' Justic' ad gaol' deliberation' in record' præd' mentionat', process' & judic' præd' reddider' versus ipsum præd' J. H. sup' indictament' præd', ideo in eo manifest' est errat'. Errat' est etiam in hoc, quod sup' reddition' judic' in record' præd' mentionat' non apparet quis fuit, qui ex parte Dom' Regis pro eodem Dom' Rege pet' judic' sup' conviction' de materiis in indictament' præd' mentionat', ideo in eo manifest' est errat'. Erratum est etiam in hoc, quod in record' præd' dicitur, quod ad deliberation' gaol' Dom' Regis de Newgate, tent' pro com' Midd' apud Justice Hall in le Old Baily in suburbiis civit' London', die Mercur', scil', 9 die Decembr' coram Justic' gaol' deliberation' in eodem record' mentionat', quod ista gaol' deliberatio adjorn' fuit per præfat' Justic', ubi dici debuit adjornat' est, & non exprimi via recitationis in tempore præterit', & in alio loco record' mentionat' præd' dicitur, quod ista gaol' deliberatio tent' fuit, ubi debuit exprimi tent' est, & non quod tent' fuit, quia in sensu præterito est mera recitatio tenendi & adjornandi cur' ill', & non positivus actus cur' ill' gaolæ deliberation' de determination' indictament' præd', ideo in eo manifest' est errat'. Erratum est etiam in hoc, videl', quod judic' præd' reddit' est pro Domino Rege, ubi reddi debet pro defend', & in eo manifest' est errat'. Et hoc parat' est verificare, unde pet' judic', & quod judic' & attinctur' præd' ob error' præd', & al' in record' & process' præd' apparen' compert' existen' revocetur, adnulletur, & penitus pro nullo habeatur, & quod ipse idem J. H. ad communem & liberam legem hujus regni Angliæ, & ad omnia quæ ipse occasione judicii & attinctur' præd' amisit restituatur, & quod ipse, tam de eadem convictione & attinctur', quam de indictament' præd' per cur' hic dimittatur & exoneretur, & quod cur' hic procedat ad examination' record' & process' præd', &c. & quia necessar' & expediens est, antequam cur' hic in hac parte procedat, quod tenentes terrar' & tenementor', quæ fuer' præd' Johannis 20 die Julii, anno regni dict' Dom' Caroli secundi, nup' Regis Angliæ, &c. 35. quo die alta proditio præd' fieri supponitur, vel unquam postea præmuniantur effendi, coram dict' Dom' Rege nunc auditur' record' & process' præd', si, &c. ideo præcept' est Vic' com' Midd' præd', quod per probos & legales homines de balliva sua, Scir' fac' separatim tenent' terrar', & tenementor', quæ fuer' præd' Johannis prædict' 20 die Julii, anno regni dicti Dom' Caroli secundi nuper Regis Angliæ, &c.

- The Prisoner insists that a Peer need not hold up his Hand when he is arraigned* IV. 211
- Lord High Steward is Judge, and has no Vote among the Lords Triers, where the Trial is by Commission out of Parliament* ib.
- The Indictment for High Treason, in conspiring the Death of the King, raising a Rebellion, &c.* ib.
- The Prisoner delivers a Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court, setting forth that he ought to be try'd by the whole Body of the Peers, the Parliament not being dissolved* 212
- And for that the House of Lords, were already possessed of the Cause* ib.
- The King's Counsel insist, that, during a Prorogation, the Proceedings are always before the Lord High Steward by Commission* 213
- And that the House of Lords were not possess'd of the Cause, they having only petition'd his Majesty that the Prisoner might be brought to his Trial.* ib.
- Also that his Plea was in Paper, and in English, without Counsel's Hand, and therefore not necessary formally to demur to it* ib. 214
- The Prisoner desires Counsel, and Time to draw up his Plea* 214
- He is answered, that, in a Plea to the Jurisdiction, the Party ought to be ready to maintain it presently* ib.
- The Lord High Steward insists that he is sole Judge in this Court, and need not advise with the Peers about it* 215
- The Plea is over-ruled; and he pleads Not Guilty* ib.

- Saxon's Evidence of the Prisoner's employing him to stir up the People, and sending him to the Duke of Monmouth in the West* 229
- The Prisoner moves the Court to adjourn till the next Morning, that he might review his Notes, and prepare for his Defence, it growing late* 230
- The Lord High Steward proposes it to the Judges, whether the Court can legally adjourn after Evidence given* 231
- The Lords withdraw, and the Judges likewise, to consider of it* ib.
- The Judges declare, there has been no Precedent of the Peers separating after the Evidence given* 232
- That a Jury, once charged, are not to be discharged, till they have given their Verdict* ib.
- That, indeed, at the Trial of a Peer in Parliament the House may, and often has adjourned; but there the Lords are Judges: in this Case, they are in the Nature of a Jury* 232
- The Lords Triers may consult the Judges in the Prisoner's Absence; but they can ask no Questions of the Lord High Steward in his Absence, nor can he withdraw with them* IV. 232
- At a Trial in full Parliament it is otherwise* 233
- In full Parliament the Lord High Steward has a Vote; but, when he sits by Commission, he has none* ib.
- The Lord High Steward refuses to adjourn; and directs the Prisoner to proceed in his Defence* ib.
- The Prisoner permitted to charge the King's Evidence with particular Crimes* 234
- The Prisoner proves that Sir Robert Cotton, Mr. Offley, and himself, were none of them at his House, when the King's Evidence depos'd they were* 236 & seqq.
- Mr. Solicitor-General Finch sums up the Evidence* 243
- It is not usual for the High Steward to repeat, or observe upon, the Evidence* 246

And of the Countess of Berkeley 523
Evidence of Lady Harriett's being mov'd from Place to Place. 527
Mr. Williams's Speech for the Defendants 533
Lord Grey's own Account of the Affair 535
My Lord Grey committed till he produced the Lady Henrietta ib.
The Lady Henrietta admitted to be sworn as a Witness in this Cause, though it was strongly oppos'd by the King's Counsel, her Evidence tending to excuse her unlawful Love, &c. 539
She denies upon her Oath that ever my Lord Grey advis'd her to, or had any Hand in her Escape, or knew any thing of it ib.
Lady Henrietta being ask'd who assisted her to make her Escape, it is rul'd by the Court, that if he was no Party to the Information, she was not bound to discover him; for though one is sworn to speak the whole Truth, that is to be understood only in relation to the Point in Issue 540
And rul'd, That if the Court will ask her no Questions, she is not to tell a Story of herself ib.
The Chief Justice, in summing up the Evidence, tells the Jury, the Charge was double. (1.) The soliciting the Lady to unlawful Love. (2.) The carrying her away from her Father, under whose Tuition she was 541
There having been a Writ de Homine Replegiando issued against my Lord Grey for the Lady Henrietta, she is examin'd in Court, whether she is under any Restraint 543
To which she answering, She was not, the Lord Chief Justice orders her to be deliver'd to her Father the Lord Berkeley ib.
Whereupon she affirm'd she was married to one Turner; and Judge Dolben held, they could not dispose of another Man's Wife 544
My Lord Grey's Counsel insists on his being discharg'd from his Imprisonment, the Lady being produced; to which the Court agreed. Per Cur. no Judgment could be given that Term, there being not four Days left ib.
Mr. Justice Dolben questions whether the Court had Power to commit my Lord Grey on the Homine replegiando, he being a Pecr ib.
The Person essoign'd is properly the Plaintiff in a Homine replegiando; and the Court directed my Lord Grey should give Security to answer the Lady's Suit upon that Writ ib.
Which he did, and is admitted to Bail ib.
The Lord Berkeley demands his Daughter again; and there being a Scuffle about her in the Hall, the

HAMILTON, James Duke, and Earl of Cambridge, his Trial for High Treason, before the High Court of Justice, the 9th of February, 1648 II. 1

The Charge, for levying War, in behalf of the King, against the Kingdom and People of England ib.

The Duke's Plea ib.

Moves for Time to send for his Witnesses; but is denied ib.

Counsel assign'd him 2

Evidence of the Duke's surrendering upon Articles; one of which was, That his Life should be secured ib.

The Commissioners who treated with him, depose, they intended only to secure his Life from the Soldiers, and not from the Civil Power ib.

The Governor of Windfor-Castle deposes, that the Duke made his Escape, though he had given him his Honour he would not attempt it II. 3

The Duke's Defence ib.

He insists upon the Articles ib.

The Duke's Counsel speak to Matter of Law 5

They urge, that the two Kingdoms were independent; and the Duke, being a Native of Scotland, could not be a Traitor to England ib.

Mr. Steel's Argument for the Common-Wealth 7

The Earl born after King James's Accession 8

All who are born in Scotland since King James's Accession, deem'd as Natives of England to all Intents. Calvin's Case 9

So the Natives of Gascoigne deem'd Denizens of England, when it was under the Dominion of the King of England ib.

Ligeantiam naturalem nemo ejurare potest, nec patriam exuere ib.

Object. That the Nations were again divided at this Invasion ib.

Answ. That the Acts of Union stood unrepeal'd ib.

That Allegiance was due to the King in his Politick Capacity, and consequently to the Kingdom ib.

The Oath of Allegiance permitted to be taken therefore to the King till his Death ib.

Authorities cited for charging the Duke as Earl of Cambridge, and not as Duke 10

Scots tried for Treason here before the Union, on account of the Homage that Kingdom owed to this ib. 11

The Duke a Traitor by the local Allegiance he owed ib.

That the Act for naturalizing the Father, extended to his Issue born before the Act, without special Words 12

Not so in the Case of Denization ib.

A Native of England may travel without a Licence ib.

The Earl's sitting in a judicial Capacity in the English Parliament, made another Argument of his Denization ib.

Treason for the Earl to join English Rebels, while the Nations were in Amity 13

It was not material, whether the English Rebels fought under his Standard, or he under theirs ib.

Articles enter'd into by Military Officers, could not pardon Treason committed against the Civil Power; for that the Power of Pardoning is incommunicable 14

The Intention of the Parties in all Comports was to be considered; nor could the Commissioners have bound the Civil Power, if they had stipulated to do it 15

That the Duke had lost the Benefit of his Surrender, by making his Escape ib.

That the Duke had received some Benefit by his Articles, by being allowed a fair Trial, and not being put to the Sword immediately ib.

The Duke's Plea rejected, and he found guilty 16

Sentence passed ib.

Put to the Vote, if the Duke should be reprieved ib.

His Behaviour at Execution ib.

Of the Commissions receiv'd from Rome 883
Bedloe complains that a Papist took Notes in Court 887
Oates deposes, 800,000 Crowns were rais'd at Rome for carrying on the Popish Plot, and Mr. Langhorne had Notice of its being paid at Paris 890
Mr. Langhorne objects, that an Approver being pardon'd, could not be a Witness against the Appellee; and the same Reason holds as to another Accomplice in the Crime 891
The Court over-rule the Objection; and add, that the Witnesses being maintain'd by the Government is no Objection to their Testimony ib.
Oates complains to the Court, that Papists came into Court with their Swords on 892
The Prisoner produces many Witnesses to prove Oates was at St. Omers when he pretended to be here at the Consult ib.
The Prisoner is not admitted to prove what the Witnesses swore against him at another Trial 899
The Witnesses who appear for the Prisoner, abus'd by the Mob ib.
The Chief Justice admits that a Witness may be confronted by another, to prove what the Witness swore at another Trial, relating to the Prisoner, was false 900 for High Treason, by an extraordinary Commission of Oyer and Terminer at Guild-Hall, London, 24th, 25th, and 26th of October, 1649

 VOL. VI.

 II. 19
Lilburne shews he was taken at Brentford, and has been arraign'd before the Lord Chief Justice Heath at Oxford, for High Treason against the King 20
He objects, that extraordinary Commissions of Oyer and Terminer are illegal 21
That it was illegal to keep him in Prison seven Months, and not bring him to Trial 23
That he was apprehended by Soldiers, and carried to Paul's, their Main-Guard; whereas he ought to have been put into the Hands of the Civil Magistrate, if he had offended the State ib.
That he was committed for refusing to accuse himself, which they themselves had censur'd as illegal Practice in the Star-Chamber ib.
That his Estate of the Value of almost 3000 l.
was taken from him without legal Process 24
He demands of the Court a Sight of their Commission; which is refus'd 25
The Court tell him that the Supreme Authority was now in the Commons, as they said it was also in the Times of the Romans and Saxons 26, 27
He refuses to hold up his Hand, till the Court tell him what is meant 27, 28
Desires a Copy of his Indictment, and Counsel; but to no effect 31
Urges that he had Counsel assign'd him by the Judges who try'd him at Oxford before he pleaded 32
Pleads Not Guilty 30
Has Time till the next Day to prepare for his Defence 39
Insists on a Precedent of Counsel being assign'd to Major Rolfe ib.
That Case debated 40
The Names of the Jury 42
The Indictment for High-Treason, in printing and publishing several treasonable Books against the Common-wealth, and stirring up the Soldiers to Mutiny ib.

Soldiers 48
And inciting them to Mutiny ib.
His publishing the Salva Libertate prov'd 50
The Book entitled An Impeachment, &c. prov'd to be publish'd by him 51
He objects against the Evidence of Col. Purefoy, he being a Member of Parliament ib.
Evidence concerning the Preparative to the Hue and Cry after Sir Arthur Haslerig 52
That he own'd them at the Attorney-General's Chambers ib.
Several Passages read out of his Books 53
And two Ordinances of the House of Commons, declaring what Offences shall be adjudged High-Treason 54, 55
The Attorney-General applies the Evidence, to prove him guilty of High-Treason 56 & seq.
He tells them most of the present Council of State must go to Tyburn or Tower-Hill 57
Says that Misery and Poverty never were so extreme under the worst of our Kings ib.
That the power of Thieves and Robbers was as lawful as the Authority which created the High Court of Justice

And lastly, that he is not charged with any thing declared, by any Law or Act of Parliament, to be Treason ib.
The Counsel against him reply, that to accept any Office without Consent of the Parliament, is Criminal 965
And his signing this Commission a Proof of his framing or advising other Acts of State against them, to disturb the publick Peace ib.
That his joining the Traitor, James Graham (the Earl of Montrose) was a taking up Arms against his Country ib.
Which is High Treason by an Act of Parliament in 1584. 963, 966
Sir Robert rejoins 966
Insists that he was promised Quarter upon surrendering himself 968
Is answered, that it is not in the Power of any private Man in the Army to give Quarter to an Opposer of The Solemn League and Covenant, as he had been 969
And if Quarter were to be allowed to other Prisoners, yet not to him, whom both Parliaments of Scotland and England, had excepted from Pardon 970
Sir Robert insists further, that the Benefit of Quarter given is secured to all Prisoners by the Laws of Arms and of all Nations, as well in Civil as in Foreign Wars ib.
Otherwise, a Door would be opened to all manner of Cruelty 971
And no Clause in The Covenant could oblige to go contrary to the Laws of War or of Nations 972
That the Question is not of Pardon; but of Quarter already granted, for securing his Life 973
His Reasons why he cannot enter upon any other Defence till this be discussed 977
The Report from the Commissioners for the Process to the Parliament against him 978
He is declared Guilty; and condemned 979

That he could not be call'd to Account for what he transacted by Authority of Parliament, the Parliament being co-ordinate with the King 443
And that, being indicted in Middlesex, Evidence could not be given of Treason committed in Surrey ib.
He is answer'd that the Parliament under which he pretended to act, was dissolved by the Death of the late King 444
As to the King's being out of Possession, this had been urg'd by Watton the Jesuit, who was indicted for Treason against King James, before his entering into England; but was over-ruled ib.
And as to the Parliament being co-ordinate with the King, this Parliament had not a greater Power than other Parliaments, by 17 Car. though they had a longer Duration ib.
And that the Parliament being under a Force, and most of the Members excluded, their Acts were of no Authority ib.
Privilege of Parliament no Shelter for Breach of the Peace; much less for Treason ib.
Sir Henry Vane convicted ib.
His Papers that he had prepared for his Defence ib.
He is call'd to Judgment, and offers a Bill of Exceptions 450, 451
He urges the same Points in Arrest of Judgment, that he had insisted on at his Trial 453
He insists much on the 11 Hen. VII. and says it ought to be taken largely for any Sovereign Power, be it a Protector or other; and that, had the late Protector taken the Name of King, no Treason could have been committed against the King de jure out of Possession ib.
The Petition of both Houses to his Majesty, in behalf of Sir Henry Vane 459
