one Part of the Record of Conviction is more sacred than the other; and why therefore should not one Part be read as well as the other?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Can you shew any Case where the Indictment was read, upon the Prayer of the Prisoner, after Conviction, and before some Exception taken?

L. C. Just. We would be far from refusing any Indulgence to the Prisoner that by Law we are warranted to grant him; what you ask now, you must own is without any Precedent whatsoever. You know, that before the Act of Parliament you were not entitled to, nor could demand a Copy of the Indictment: It is very true what you say before the Act of Parliament; when it hath been desired by the Prisoner the Indictment hath been read, and that Method of proceeding having been allowed, gave him a Right to demand it; but you cannot produce any one Instance that ever he demanded this that now you offer; that ever he demanded the Venire should be produced and read to him.

Consider how strict the Law was in Cases of High-Treason; see the Act of Rights: The Course of the Court is the Law; this which you now desire was never so much as ask'd for, nor did this Court ever grant it; and if so, how can the Court be warranted to grant that which was never granted, nor was ever desired to be granted? The Reason of it is, that every Body was satisfy'd by Law it could not be granted.

You have instanced in Cases of great Persons, Colonel Sidney, Lord Ruffel, and others that have been attainted of High-Treason, who could not want Advice to desire any Thing that was proper, or that they had a Right to demand. Neither they nor any of the greatest Quality that have had the Misfortune of being try'd for an Offence of this Nature, ever demanded it; which is an Admission that they were not entitled to it; and if the Course of the Court be so, we must not establish a new Course; we can't see what the Consequences may be.

Mr. Just. Eyre. The Case of reading the Indictment to a Prisoner is certainly very different, and can be no Authority to warrant the reading of the Venire; for the Indictment is the Charge to which the Prisoner is obliged to plead, and he must know his Charge before he can give it an Answer: Besides, the Merit and Justice of the Case depend entirely upon the Indictment, which must be read, in order to understand the true State of the Question, and to see the Fact to which the Witnesses are to be examin'd. 'Tis therefore absolutely necessary, that the Indictment should be read; but none of these Reasons will serve for reading the Venire, which is only to summon the Jury, and bring them to the Bar; and therefore as it was never done, nor ever asked before, I can by no means think it fit for us to allow it now.

Mr. Just. Powys. I think it is a perfect Novelty what you demand, and not only so, but in its Consequences very dangerous: For, properly speaking, the common Usage to move in Arrest of Judgment, hath been out of the Indictment; but to run back to those Things, which if you had a Right to demand, it had been proper to have done it before; and since you have many Times known that nothing but the Indictment hath been read, since the Judges were never mov'd, nor any Thing of this kind done, and nothing in the World hath been demanded like it; if it should be granted at this Time, when Men are to receive Judgment, and Exceptions are to be taken to the Indictment, if they should run back to all the Proceedings, it would be a thing of strange Consequence. But besides that, it is a Thing you have no Example for, it hath been never done; and it hath been observed, that nothing but the Copy of the Indictment hath been read before this Act of Parliament of King William. Now there are two Things given by this Act of Parliament of King William; the Prisoner is to have the Copy of his Indictment five Days, the Copy of the Pannel of the Jury two Days before his Trial, and these were proposed as Advantages which the Common Law did not admit: Shall we come to unravel all the Matters preceding? it would be a Matter of strange Consequence, and what we can't do or warrant by Law: If you have any Thing to move out of the Indictment, we are ready to hear it.

Mr. Just. Fortescue Aland. This is perfectly new, or else in Favour of Life I should be ready to grant it: The true Reason of having the Indictment read is, that the Prisoner may know what his Charge is, in order to make his Defence at his Trial; but that Reason holds not in this Case, which is after Conviction, and what is ask'd now is not relative to his Charge, but concerns the Acts of the Court only. The Court will assist in Matters of Law, when they appear, but will never assist the Prisoner with Facts, in order to make Points of Law; and therefore it has been denied the Prisoner to take Minutes even of the Indictment, and for the same Reason Counsel has ever been denied, in all capital Cases, before the late Act of Parliament, unless a disputable Point of Law did arise and appear.

You move this Matter as a Motion purely at Common Law; and as such it will extend to all Indictments of Murder, and other capital Cases, which may be of very evil Consequence. It would be very strange to have all the Proceedings upon Indictments read to the Prisoner; and there is as much Reason to call for all as for the Venire facias: I take it clearly there never was a Case, where the Acts and Proceedings of the Court have been called for to be read to the Prisoner, and for no other Purpose but to make an Error: It is a Thing that is entirely new, the Consequences may be very fatal, and therefore I think it is an unreasonable Motion, and ought not to be granted.

Mr. Hungerford. I assure your Lordship I did not do it out of an Affectation of Novelty, neither shall I persist in urging it further, since the Court hath given their Opinion; but I thought the Reason of the Thing, in reading the Indictment, before the Act of Parliament was with me; but since it is your Lordship's Opinion that it is otherwise, I desire your Lordship to give me leave to go on.

Prisoner. I beg leave to say but a short Word in respect to this Objection that hath been made by Mr. Hungerford. If I take the Thing right, it is, that the Venire may be read, to see if it is properly issued, and I hope thus far it shall be granted, to shew a Reason why this Venire is returned on one Day, and the Jury appear on another; and if it doth appear that there is an Error in the Proceedings on the Foot of the Venire, I humbly hope I shall have the Benefit of it. The Objection, I take it, must be this; the Venire, I take it, is returnable the 19th of the Month of November, I was not try'd till the 21st; therefore, what I humbly offer is, whether or no, after the Return of the Writ, this is a good convening of the Jury together to try me on a Writ when there was no such Writ in being, more especially when the Proceedings against me are by Original, where the Returns in this Court are the same as in the Common Pleas; so I shall leave it to my Counsel to say the rest, and humbly hope, that I shall have leave to look into the Venire, and if it come out so, I hope it is erroneous, and that Judgment shall be arrested.

Mr. Hungerford. The Gentleman hath given Utterance to some of my Thoughts; and not by comparing of Notes, for I have not seen his Face, nor heard from him since I saw him here at the Bar at his Trial.

That which occurs to me on this Occasion, but I can but guess at some Part of the Fact, is, I take it, that the Venire bears Teste the last Day of October, and is returned the 19th of November; there are stated Return Days of the Law, and, my Lord, if a Man appears in a Court of Justice one Day, and he is not by the Course of proceeding indulged with a further Day of appearing, there is a Discontinuance of the Process, and the Man is out of Court. The different Days the Law takes notice of for this Purpose are, the Essoign Day, the Day of Exceptions, the Day of Appearance, the quarto die post; I take the quarto die post to be an Indulgence which a Court of Justice gives to a Suitor to appear at a further Day, when he ought to have appeared at a former Day; and this is the Practice in real Actions in the Court of Common Pleas. As to the Exception Day, the Use of that is, that a Man that is summon'd may object to the Summons, as not being a fit and regular Summons to draw him in Contempt.

But, my Lord, in Cases of Juries, who are not Suitors in Court, I take the Law and the Practice to be, that they are oblig'd to attend upon the Process of the Court; I take it, they must do Duty on the Return of the Venire, which, in this Case, is on Monday the 19th of November, and did not appear till Wednesday the 21st; so that if they were to appear on Monday the 19th of November, and did not appear then, there must appear some Act of the Court, by which they are indulg'd to a further Day: And I put it upon Mr. Harcourt to shew, whether there is any Indulgence of the Court entered upon Record for the continuing of the Jury till Wednesday following; and if there is not, there is then a Discontinuance of their being in this Court, and consequently the Proceedings are irregular, and the Trial a Mistrial: I shall quote some Authorities which justify this Observation; when a Man by a Process of Court appears on the Day of the Return of that Process, unless there be a Continuance of that Process, that ulterior dies datus est to the Party, or a subsequent Process issues that Day, the Law deems that Chasm in the Proceedings to be a Discontinuance, and that the Party is out of Court. It was so resolved in Yelverton, 204; and 2d Coke, 284. It is the Case of Bradley and Banks; and reported in both Books, but most fully in Yelverton. There is an Authority which weighs with me something more, more, and seems to be a Case in Point; it is the Case of Peplow and Rowley, 2d of Croke, 357. and and there the Case is on a Writ of Error brought upon Proceedings in the Court of Sbrewsbury, where the Usage was, to hold Plea in some real Actions, and there was an Entry that the Parties did not appear on a preceding Day, but made Default: And the Entry was habuit diem per default given to the Party by the Court, secundum consuetudinem villæ prædictæ. This came before this Court by a Writ of Error, and it was adjudg'd, that both the Entry and the Custom were naught. The Reason assigned why the Entry was so, is, for that the Party having made Default, was out of Court, and the Court could upon that Process give him no new Day to appear. And the Reason why the Custom itself is naught, is, for that there can be no Custom to help that (which the Book calls) a Discontinuance at Common Law; for if the Man be out of Court, he can't be brought in there again by the same Writ.

My Lord, if that be the Case then, that the Jury were to appear on the 19th, and there is no Entry to continue them till Wednesday the 21st, then by the Authority of these Cases they had no Call nor Right to appear, but were out of Court, the Trial was no legal Trial, and consequently no Trial at all.

I am told, that the Practice of all Trials at Bar is, that the Jury do appear here on the Return of the Venire, and immediately proceed to do Business; why should it not be so too in a criminal Case, as this is? I think the Reason in both Cases is the same: I humbly hope therefore, my Lord, that if the Fact be as I have represented, that there is no Entry to continue over the Attendance of the Jury from Monday to Wednesday, there is a Blemish in this Proceeding; and you can't proceed to Judgment against the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Ketelbey. If your Lordship will favour me ———

L. C. Just. You shall be fully heard; but because Mr. Hungerford hath appeal'd to Mr. Harcourt, I shall ask Mr. Harcourt this Question about the Matter of the Venire.

Mr. Harcourt. I shall be very tender in this Matter, where the Life of the Prisoner is at Stake, as Mr. Hungerford has observ'd, and will not say any thing but what I am sure is the Course of the Court. If a Venire be returnable the first general Return of the Term, the Appearance-Day of the Jury is the quarto die post, which is the first Day of the Term. If the Court be not pleased to try the Prisoner then, they may adjourn the Jury over to any Day before the next Return in the Term; but no Entry is ever made on Record of such Adjournment, and the Proceedings are always enter'd on Record to be at the Return of the Writ. In all other Returns in the Term, there is the same Course observ'd: The Jury is never oblig'd to appear before the quarto die post; nor can the Prisoner be try'd sooner. What makes this clear is, to consider the Proceedings on Distringas, where the Prisoner is not try'd on the Venire: In such Cases the Distringas is never tested on the Return-Day, but the quarto die post; which, if what is insisted on by the Prisoner's Counsel is Law, would make a Discontinuance, and that has always been held otherwise; for till there has been a Default of the Jury's appearing on the Venire, no Distringas can issue, and no Default can be objected to the Jury for not appearing till the quarto die post; nor are they amerçiable sooner for not appearing. This Matter was settled on great Deliberation, by my Lord Chief Justice Holt; and I am confident, has been ever since so practis'd.

Mr. Ketelbey. My Lord, it was my Misfortune not to get into Court sooner; so that I did not hear the first Application Mr. Hungerford made to your Lordship on Behalf of the Prisoner, nor shall I presume to break in upon what your Lordship has already determin'd; but whether or not we are entitl'd to see the Venire, or hear that Part of the Record read. I hope we shall be able to make out, that there has been a Mis-trial in this Case. The Venire, it is agreed on all Hands, was returnable oëtabis Martini, which was Monday the 19th of November. That the Prisoner was not tried till the 21st, is most certain. The general Return was oëtabis Martini, and he was not tried till two Days after; and notwithstanding what Mr. Harcourt hath said, I must beg Leave humbly to insist, that there hath been a Mis-trial, and Judgment ought to be arrested; and for that I have as strong an Authority as any that can be cited in this Court, 'tis the Trial of Rookwood; and for the greater certainty, I have brought the Book along with me, and have it in my Hand; where it is agreed, by the Court, and all the King's Counsel, that the Trial must be on the Day of the Return of the Venire, or else that it would be Error: And my Lord Chief Justice Holt declared, the Issue could not be tried after the Day of the Return: This Matter came before the Court upon an Exception taken by Sir Bartholomew Shower.

Mr. Just. Eyre. That was on a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, which was quite different; there is no quarto die post there, no Day of Appearance, but the Day of the Return of the Writ.

L. C. Just. It must be so, because there is no such Thing as a quarto die post in Commissions of Oyer and Terminer.

Mr. Ketelbey. I submit it to your Lordship, whether there is any quarto die post in a Venire?

L. C. Just. It is always so.

Mr. Just. Eyre. You know we had the Consideration of this when we appointed the Trial.

Mr. Ketelbey. I beg leave to offer one Word, that in case of a Venire, there is no quarto die post, because there is no Essoign, no Exception-Day for the Jury. The Authority in first Roll's Abridgment, 822. Placit. 4. & 6. is express, that in a Venire facias or a Scire facias, there is no Essoign: And where there is no Essoign, there can be no Day of Exception, because the Exception depends on the Essoign-Day, and consequently the Day of the Return, and of the Appearance must be the same. The Case of Essoign, Exception, Return, and Appearance-Days, concerns only original Writs, and the Plaintiffs and Defendants therein; there if the Defendant appears the quarto die post, his Appearance shall be accepted as good, and no further Process made against him. But who ever heard that a Jury were Essoign'd? There are several other Authorities for this. Dalton, 415. 2d. Instit. 125 & 33 H. VI. 5. b. that no Essoign lies upon a Venire facias; and the Essoign was quashed.

L. C. Just. This you now offer will set aside all the Proceedings either on the Plea Side, or the Crown Side.

Mr. Ketelbey. There is a Case reported in the Year-Book, Michs. 33 Henry VI. fol. 35. 36. and abridged in Brook, Title Nisi prius, Pl. 32. It was disputed by the Judges of the Bench, and at first there was a Difference of Opinion among them; but at last it was unanimously resolved, That the Nisi prius was not well taken. I will state the Case as it appears in the Year-Book and the Abridgment. There was a Writ of Nisi prius made with a certain Return, and the Justices tried the Issue upon a Day mesne during the Interval between the quarto die post, and the Return of the Writ. This was objected to, and said to be a Mis-trial; and afterwards the Judges agreed in their Opinion, that it was a Mis-trial, because it was not upon the Return-Day of the Writ of Nisi prius; and if not upon that Day, the Trial ought not to have been at all. And I don't apprehend any Difference between that Case and this, but only that was at Nisi prius, and this a Trial in Bank. There is no Continuance lies on a Venire facias; and if so, I shall submit it, whether there is any Day of Appearance.

Mr. Just. Eyre. Sure there is a Day of Appearance on the Venire facias; the Proceedings in this Case are like those upon an Original. The same Day which is the Day of Appearance for the Party upon an Original, is the Day of Appearance for the Jury upon a Venire.

Mr. Ketelbey. I believe it will be hard for Mr. Harcourt to shew where there is an Essoign on a Venire facias.

L. C. Just. We have heard already what Mr. Harcourt hath said. I desire Mr. Simmonds may inform you how it is on the Civil Side.

Mr. Simmonds. Our Process where the Suit is commenced by Bill, is return'd on a Day certain in Court; that doth not respect this Case.

L. C. Just. How is it when it is by Original?

Mr. Simmonds. Where it is by Original, it is always returnable as the Process is in the Common Pleas; and the Day of the Appearance of the Jury, I take to be the quarto die post.

Mr. Harcourt. If this was to be a Discontinuance, what will become of all the Records where the Proceedings are at general Returns, and which are tried on the Distringas, which always bears teste the quarto die post after the Return of the Venire? Every one of these Records, which are many every Term, would be discontinued.

L. C. Just. You can't but be sensible that there is nothing in this Exception.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. There is no Foundation for it in Practice.

L. C. Just. You need not labour it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. The Sheriff, or the Jury, are not amerciable, tho' they did not appear on the Day of the Return, if the Jury do appear upon the quarto die post; that shews it —

Mr. Att. Gen. If this Objection prevails, it will overturn all the settled Course of Trials at Bar.

Prisoner. One Thing I would humbly offer to your Lordship. I have not had my Books by me, but only what occurs to my Memory, I cannot be so exact as I ought to be. This Overt-Act in Essex of Treason found by the Jury to be so, I humbly apprehend, and I offer it to your Lordship's Judgment, in Law is no Overt-Act at all. All the Reason I shall humbly offer to your Lordship, that tho' it hath been said, that there was a consulting and agreeing in order to levy War, yet it doth not appear that War to be levied was such a War as in the Law is adjudged to be Treason. My Lord, this differs from the levying War it self. An Intention and Consultation, or a Conspiracy barely to levy War, unless War be levy'd, it is no Treason. If it be a Consultation to levy War against the King's Person, to imprison the King, to dethrone and murder him, it ever hath been adjudg'd to be Treason. If it be only a Consulting to levy War, as if to agree to break open Meeting-Houses, to throw down Houses, was the same as doing of it. There must be a War that is levy'd, or else it is no Treason. Not only that, but I beg leave to say one Word more. In my Case, all the Evidence given in respect of this Overt-Act in Essex, there is no Foundation for it; and if there is no Overt-Act in Essex, no Overt-Act elsewhere can affect me. It stands on the Evidence only of Mr. Lynch: He talks of a Declaration. Who read it? The only two Things are a Discourse between us, and a Declaration which I gave him to read. If that, as I humbly submit it, be an Act of Treason, it is carrying the Matter further than it hath been in those few Cases I beg leave to mention that just occur to my Memory. If I state them wrong, I shall be sorry. The Case of College, the Oxford Joiner. It was asked the Court, Do you take my Words distinct from my Actions? No, says the Court, we do not do so. You declared you would go down to Oxford, and assassinate the King's Person. In order to that, you went down with Pistols before you. That at that Time was declared to be an Overt-Act; the going down to Oxford in that Manner; and the Court seemed to rely upon it, as the Overt-Act of the Treason, and not the talking here, or conspiring that he would assassinate the King, but the going down in a hostile Manner. So likewise in the Case of my Lord Preston; there the Question was, whether those Letters that were found with him in the Ship; whether that was an Overt-Act of Treason. The Judges seemed to be of Opinion, that the taking those Letters with him as he was going to France, and there to consult the stirring up an Insurrection here, and to invite the French King to invade us, was an Overt-Act of Treason. But there is a stronger Case, the Case of my Lord Russel. He was indicted, as I am, for compassing and imagining the Death of the King. The Overt-Act laid in the Indictment to manifest that Intention, was, that he, with the rest of the Conspirators, consulted to seize upon the King's Guards: In pursuance to that Discourse and Conspiracy which they had had, it appeared that Sir Thomas Armstrong was sent to take a View of the Guards in order to carry on the Design. Notwithstanding there was a pursuing of their Design of seizing the King's Guards, in sending Sir Thomas Armstrong to view them, yet the Case was thought so very hard in respect to my Lord Russel, that his Attainder was reversed by an Act of Parliament. Therefore I only argue, with great Submission, that in my Case, where nothing is done but accidentally calling in at the Green Man, staying a little while there, and, as hath been sworn, here was nothing but a mere Discourse, and then I gave him a Declaration to read. If I did so, it was only Words. As to the second, it was nothing but publishing a Libel. And shall this be a Foundation to deprive me of my Life and Estate, to the utter Ruin of myself and Family? It is an unprecedented Thing, hath it ever been? Therefore I hope your Lordship, before you give any Judgment in this Matter, will take it into your Consideration, whether any Thing done in Essex doth amount to an Overt-Act of Treason.

and

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I humbly hope, as it is my Duty to do what Service I can to my Client, and as it is in Case of Life, that I shall have your Lordship's Indulgence for a few Words. My Lord, he hath justly observed —

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, I would not interrupt Mr. Layer, because it may be supposed he is not so well acquainted with the Method of Proceeding. But I hope I may take the Liberty to interrupt his Counsel, who know by very great Experience the Method of Proceedings, that they are not now to insist on the Nature of the Evidence, whether the Evidence that hath been given is sufficient to maintain the Indictment; that is not the Business of this Day. If they have any thing to offer, any Objections to make in arrest of Judgment, that is the Business of the Day: But to arraign the Proceedings upon the Trial, as it is said that the Evidence given did not amount to a Consultation, or to prove any Overt-Act of the Treason alledg'd, I don't apprehend it to be proper at this Time: I did not interrupt the Prisoner himself; but I hope his Counsel, who know the Method of Proceeding better, in Cases of High-Treason, shall not be permitted to go on in that Manner.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Gentlemen that are Counsel for the Prisoner know very well, that the Evidence given on the Trial is not now before your Lordship; the single Question that can now be made is, whether the Indictment is good, and the Facts charged and found by the Jury, are well laid, and do amount to sufficient Overt-Acts of the High-Treason, of which the Prisoner stands indicted. Mr. Layer hath been giving an Account of the Witnesses, and making Observations on the things which they swore; he was borne with: But the Gentlemen that are his Counsel, seem to be opening in the same Manner, but as to them, we must insist upon it, that they should be confin'd to what is proper, and apply themselves to move in Arrest of Judgment, if they can find any thing upon the Face of the Record of which they can take Advantage. But I think they are not entitled to go on with Observations upon the Evidence in the Manner they were beginning.

Mr. Hungerford. I assure your Lordship I did not design it, I did not intend to recapitulate any part of the Evidence, or to observe upon it. And therefore there was no Occasion for the Caution. I thank your Lordship for the Indulgence you give me, and I will conform myself to the Rules the King's Counsel prescribe, to observe upon nothing but the Record.

My Lord, the Indictment is in this Manner; the Species of the Treason laid to the Charge of the Prisoner, is the compassing and imagining the Death of the King. The first Overt-Act of that Treason, is, that he did meet, consult, conspire and agree to raise a Rebellion, and a Guerram in the Kingdom, which is no Overt-Act of compassing and imagining the Death of the King.

I know how the Authorities have been; but in the Case of Life, your Lordship will give me leave to observe, that by the Statute of 25 Edw. III. compassing and imagining the Death of the King —

L. C. Just. Mr. Hungerford, we would hear you in any thing that is proper, but consider if you are not offering a matter in Arrest of Judgment that hath been determined against you a hundred times. Hath it not been constantly allowed as an Overt-Act of Treason in compassing and imagining the Death of the King, if the Parties did meet, consult, and agree to levy War? Hath it not been constantly agreed, and doth it not stand allowed to be so? Now to persuade us at this Time to overthrow those Resolutions taken by our Predecessors, is such a thing as is not right. Do you think we will give a Judgment contrary to what our learned Predecessors have given in Cases of the greatest Moment? If I thought it was of any Effect, I should not grudge spending time to hear you, but you must agree, it hath been over-ruled a hundred times.

Mr. Just. Eyre. It hath been settled a great many times, particularly in the Case of Dorrel, Gordon and Kerr, in which it was argued over and over again, and the Court was of Opinion that the consulting and agreeing to levy War, was an Overt-Act of Treason in compassing and imagining the Death of the King, and gave Judgment accordingly.

Mr. Just. Fortescue Aland. Mr. Kettelbey was Counsel for the Prisoners in that Case, which was in this Court in the 1st Year of this King, when this Objection was made; and very well knows, that the Court, upon that Occasion, said, that they ought not to have suffered this matter to be made a Question, for that it was arraigning the Judgments of very many learned Judges.

Mr. Just. Powys. No one thing relating to Treason is more settled; and in that Case as hath been mentioned, it was agreed, and it was the Judgment of all the Judges that tried that Cause.

Mr. Hungerford. My Lord, I humbly hope —

Mr. Just. Eyre. It must not be admitted, we must not suffer so plain a Point to be disputed; it is not only mispending of time, but shaking what has been established by every Trial in which any thing of this kind has been mentioned, from the Case of the Regicides to this Day.

Mr. Just. Powys. In the Cases of the Regicides, these Matters are printed in Keyling.

L. C. Just. And in all the Trials ever since, there is scarce one Case hath happened, where the Case hath been for compassing and imagining the Death of the King, but that it hath been laid for an Overt-Act, that the Party charged, did consult and agree to levy War to bring his wicked Intentions to Effect.

Mr. Hungerford. There is no Doubt, but that the Regicides were the worst and most notorious Criminals that were ever brought before a Court of Justice; and yet there is one Circumstance of those Trials, quoted in the very Book which Mr. Justice Powys mentions, which was never practised before, and I am sure never was since; that is, the Judges who were to try the Criminals, and the King's Counsel who were to prosecute them, met and consulted together to form and fix the Accusation.

But if it is your Lordship's Pleasure, I shall speak no further to that Matter.

L. C. Just. You have the Opinion of the Court, and I dare say it is your own Opinion; and as the Resolutions are so positive, it is not for us to make Indictments at this Day.

Mr. Hungerford. I shall not press it any further. There is another thing arises upon another Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, that is, Publicavit quoddam Scriptum, &c. I apprehend the Substance of the quoddam Scriptum ought to be mentioned in the Indictment.

L. C. Just. It is mentioned in Effect, that it was to excite People to a Rebellion and an Insurrection.

Mr. Hungerford. Your Lordship will observe that the criminal Words in the Scriptum, are not mentioned in the Indictment; and by the Rule given by all the Judges of England in Dr. Sacheverell's Case, in all Accusations, whether by Information or Indictment, the Words supposed to be criminal ought to be inserted; and since that is not done in this Case, the Overt-Act is not well laid, and the Judgment ought to be arrested.

L. C. Jusf. You know, Mr. Hungerford, if but one Overt-Act is well-laid and prov'd, it is sufficient.

I don't know, I was sorry you forc'd me to remember what I would willingly have forgot. I remember, on that Occasion, you was pleas'd to compare it to a Ballad, which is an Expression that ought not to be us'd. Is that a Thing, when a Prisoner is on Trial for his Life, and a Matter of Insurrection is intended against the King, to be treated in so ludicrous a manner? It is laid as an Overt-Act of Treason, and what is an Overt-Act of Treason, if a Man's publishing a traitorous Libel, and exciting Persons to a Rebellion and Insurrection against the King is not? This is undoubtedly so: And when we are upon this Consideration, to compare it to a Ballad, and say he might as well publish a Ballad, and lay it as an Overt-Act of Treason in the Indictment; it is an Expression that ought not to be us'd, and I was very sorry you did use it.

Mr. Hungerford. I am sure I did not say he might as well publish a Ballad and make it Treason; I have a greater Duty, and a more tender Regard to his sacred Majesty, and the Quiet of his Kingdom and People, than to express myself so. What I then observed, as near as I can recollect, was, that there were but few Minutes to transact the Business at the Green Man; that what was done, could not amount to the publishing of a Declaration, when there was nothing done but a Man's reading to himself: I knew the whole Accusation did turn upon that Transaction at the Green Man; and in Service to my Client, I thought it my Business to make it appear as inconsiderable as I could; and if in this I have offended your Lordship, or the Court, I am heartily sorry for it, and beg their Pardon.

Mr. Ketelbey. If your Lordship please to favour me with a few Words.

I shall be very tender of offering to your Lordship any Thing on this Indictment, which hath been over-ruled in any of the Cases where I have been before concerned; whether conspiring to levy War, unless War be actually levy'd is an Overt-Act of High-Treason, was mentioned on the Trial of Dorrel, Gordon, and Kerr, and I then took that among other Exceptions in Arrest of Judgment, which were not allowed; but the Statute of 13 Eliz. cap. 1. was not at that Time mentioned; and I have some other Matters to offer on that Head, if it is now open to me.

L. C. Jusf. Consider a little how you treat the Court; the Objection hath been solemnly taken in this Court, argued and adjudged by this Court, and now you come to arraign that Judgment that was then given.

Mr. Ketelbey. I shall go off from that, and say no more upon it, since your Lordship is of Opinion that it is a Point settled. But, my Lord, I must beg Leave to take Notice of what Mr. Attorney has observed relating to the five Overt-

Acts laid in the Indictment, and submit to your Lordship; for I don't know that it was ever determined otherwise, but that if one of the Overt-Acts appears to be bad, Judgment must be arrested.

L. C. Jusf. Alas! quite the contrary: I believe you will find in Rookwood's Trial, which you have in your Hand: There it is said, if one Overt-Act held, the Indictment is good.

Mr. Ketelbey. If I am not mistaken, in Sir John Friend's Case it was not so: We can't take upon us to say, That all the Overt-Acts are wrong. Is it not like an Action in a Civil Case, where there are several Counts in the Declaration? If there be one wrong, that will stay Judgment for the whole.

L. C. Jusf. Because it is an entire Declaration; and the Jury instead of giving Damages on one Count, may have given it on the Count they ought not.

Mr. Jusf. Eyre. But if one Count be sufficient, the Plaintiff shall certainly have Judgment upon Demurrer.

Mr. Ketelbey. What I had to offer was, that if one Overt-Act is bad, the Indictment is bad; but if it be otherways, and if there be any one Overt-Act well laid, that that shall make the Indictment good; and your Lordship will maintain that Indictment: I have nothing else to offer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Say what you have a Mind to say.

Mr. Ketelbey. I did not know but I was right in what I was going to say; and I think it a Point too material to be easily given up.

L. C. Jusf. You allow one of the Overt-Acts is well laid; consider if there is no Overt-Act but that one; must there not be Judgment against the Prisoner? Suppose one Overt-Act that is not good, must that take off the Force of that which is good?

Mr. Ketelbey. I submit it, whether this is a Parallel Case in a Declaration for Work and Labour done, if there be but one Count, and that well laid, the Plaintiff shall recover: But if in a second Count, he comes and says in Court, that he had done such Work and Labour; that the Defendant promised to pay him such a Sum, if either these Counts are naught, it may be moved in Arrest of Judgment.

Mr. Jusf. Eyre. If the Damages are taken generally, otherwise not.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. You find in Rookwood's Case, it is there held, if the Jury found him guilty of any one Overt-Act, that it would maintain the Indictment: But what is your Objection?

L. C. Jusf. We will hear any Thing that you think material to offer.

Mr. Ketelbey. I would not have offered it, if I did not think it material; and for my part, I cannot find any such thing in Rookwood's Trial, or any where else, (I beg Pardon if I have overlooked it) that one good Overt-Act should maintain the whole Indictment; I admit three or four of them to be good, as they are laid in this Indictment; the only Objection I have, is, to the Uncertainty of that which relates to the publishing of a malicious, scandalous, seditious, and traitorous Writing, contenen' & purportan' exhortation' incitament' & premiorum promission' ad suadendum & excitand' subditos Domini Regis ad arma & guerram contra Dominum Regem, &c. My Lord, the Rule that my Lord Chief Justice Coke lays down in his first Institutes, f. 303. a. is, That in Indictments, a Certainty to a common Intent is not sufficient, no more than in Counts, Replications, or other Pleadings of the Plaintiff. Now whether this, as it is laid, hath the Certainty which that Rule requires, your Lordship will determine. In all capital Cases, especially in High-Treason, the Indictments must be drawn with the utmost Accuracy and Certainty. The Words here are, that he publicavit quoddam malitiosum, seditiosum, & proditorium scriptum: And then sets forth only the Substance of the Libel in general. Is there not the same Reason that the Words should have been set forth in this Indictment, as in an Indictment for a Libel, that so the Court might judge, upon the Face of the Indictment, whether they did import Excitement and Exhortation, levare Guerram. I must own, in two or three late Cases, the Words have not been set forth.

L. C. Just. Remember Francia's Case.

Mr. Ketelbey. I am going to mention Francia's, and hope I shall be able to account for that, as well as the others: In Francia's Case the Indictment was, that he wrote several Letters, notifying his Intention to levy War, and requiring Aid from Abroad, without particularizing the Words of those Letters, or the Substance of them. The Question was not upon an Arrest of Judgment; but it came on in the Course of the Trial, whether such Evidence should be allowed. It was insisted upon, that there was a Letter mentioned, and the Substance of that Letter ought to have been set forth in the Indictment; or else the Letter itself ought not to be read, much less a Copy of it entered in the Prisoner's Copy-book, as Evidence against him: And I must beg Leave to rely on the solemn Resolution of all your Lordships in Dr. Sacheverell's Case, that the very Words should be expressly set forth in all Indictment whatsoever. In Francia's Case, there was no Motion in Arrest of Judgment; for there was no Verdict against him: Therefore, whether that Precedent will stand in our Way, so as to stop us in our present Objection, your Lordship will determine: And in the Case of Colonel Sidney, the very Words are set forth, the Title of the Book, and the Part charged to be

- Trial 64. Treason. In Keylinge 22. in Twine's Case, he was indicted for compassing the Death of the King; and his Overt-Act was, the publishing a Book call'd, A Treatise of the Execution of Justice; and the Title of that Book, and the very treasonable Part objected against the Prisoner were set forth at large. In Coleman's Indictment, two Letters were mentioned, which were declared to be his Hand: There was no Counsel, nor Motion made in Arrest of Judgment. I don't remember any Case where they are laid so general, as in this Indictment, except Francia's and Coleman's. I shall only beg Leave to add, that where there is a Libel, a Book, or Letters, charged as the Overt-Act of that which is supposed to be Treason, and upon which the Offence is grounded, they ought to be so far set forth, that a Person may have an Opportunity to clear himself of the Accusation: I don't know any Precedent to the contrary, but that of Francia's Case, where there was not any Opportunity of debating it, he being acquitted on his Trial; and the Case of Coleman, which was before any Counsel was allowed.

L. C. Just. The Objection was taken then in Francia's Case as properly, as if it had been taken in Arrest of Judgment; for the Act of Parliament says, that no Evidence shall be admitted or given of any Overt-Act, that is not expressly laid in the Indictment, against any Person or Persons whatsoever. You took the Objection, and said, that this Overt-Act of Treason is not expressly laid in the Indictment; and therefore it ought not to be given in Evidence: You know, that that was over-rul'd at the Time of making the Objection, and that the Opinion of the Court was against you. As to what you say, that the Words must be set forth, it is perfectly wrong; a Man may set forth the Substance of the Words, without shewing the Words themselves: That is the Way that is proper to be taken, and when it is otherwise, it is not so as it ought to be done.

Mr. Jus. Eyre. It was indeed the Opinion of the Judges who were present at Dr. Sacheverell's Trial, that the particular Trial 181.

Words supposed to be criminal ought to be expressly specified in every Indictment or Information for any Misdemeanour by writing or speaking; and since it is urged as an Authority to conclude our Judgments, I can't forbear saying, that it was a great Surprize to Westminster-Hall, and particularly to those who attended this Court, to hear that any such Opinion had been given; for it had never been laid down in any of our Books as the Rule of Law or Practice, that the particular Words supposed to be criminal, ought to be specify'd in the Indictment or Information; and we had learned from my Lord Chief Justice Holt, that a Libel might be described either by the Sense and Substance, or by the particular Words, and that an Indictment or Information in either of these Forms would be good. If you look into the Books of Entries you will find several Instances where Slanders and Perjuries are charged in Latin, as false and scandalous Assertions, and not in the Words as spoken. And in Staley's * Case who was indicted for treasonable Words upon the Stat. 13 Car. II. it was charged in the Indictment, that he speaking of the King, had traiterously declared, quod ipse praedictus Staley ipsum Dominum Regem interficeret; and the Fact was, that Staley in Conversation had spoke Words to this effect in French, which were proved by two Witneses; and this Evidence was thought sufficient to convict him of High-Treason; and yet the particular Words supposed and adjudged to be criminal, were not specified in the Indictment; and there was an Information for Perjury †, in which all the great Counsel of England were concerned on one Side or other, which was tried at Bar in my Lord Chief Justice Holt's Time, and the Offence was charged in the same Manner; for the Substance of what the Defendant had sworn was set forth in Latin, and the Evidence which he gave in English being prov'd to be false, he was convicted of the Perjury without any Objection; and yet the particular English Words in which he gave his Evidence were not expressly specified in the Information; and I don't find that the specifying of the particular Words was ever said or suggested to be necessary, till this sudden Opinion was given; and therefore as I never thought it right, I can't hear it urged as an Authority without offering my Reasons to the contrary, and acknowledging that I have been long in a great Mistake, if there be any one Resolution in the Books to support it.

* Mich. 30 Car. II. B. R. Trial 74.

Mr. Just. Powis. In the Case of Francia it was insisted on in order to stop the Trial; the main of the Objection was, that they ought not to produce Evidence of the Letters, because those Letters were not expressly set forth in the Indictment, and that very Objection was made in order to stop the Trial. What was said there in Cases of Libels is intended when set forth in hæc verba, and not in Latin, the more common Way: But it is another Thing where it is an Overt-Act of the Imagination of a Man's Heart in Treason, it is sufficient to set forth the Substance of them; therefore it was so fully settled in Francia's Case, that I thought it would be never mentioned again; the Point was argued, the Objections were made and over rul'd, and it was the very Point on which the Trial proceeded.

Mr. Att. Gen. In my Lord Preston's Case there were several Notes, Memorandums and Writings, that were the very Overt-Acts of the Treason, yet they were not particularly set forth in the Indictment.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. There it was alledged, that the Lord Preston prepared and composed several Writings, several traitorous Notes and Memorandums, for the giving Instruction and Information for the French King how to invade England. I desire to put Mr. Ketelbey this Case: Suppose any one had proclaimed the Pretender at Charing-Cross, or elsewhere, and had read his Declaration, exciting the People to revolt and to come in to him, and promising them Rewards; and then the Declaration had been carried off, or so disposed of that it could not be recovered and produced in Evidence; I would be glad to know, whether that Person might not be indicted for Treason, without setting forth the particular Words which he read out of such Declaration; or whether he should escape Punishment for want of being able to set out the particular Words?

Mr. Ketelbey. The reading of the Paper in that Case would be sufficient.

L. C. Just. Have you done, or have you any thing further to offer for the Prisoner?

Cl. of the Cr. Christopher Layer, hold up your Hand. You have been indicted of High-Treason, &c.

Pris. I have nothing more to say now, because my Counsel have given it up. But after your Lordship hath passed Sentence upon me, I hope and desire, for the Sake of other People more than myself, those that I have had very great Dealings and Correspondence with, particularly my Lord Londonderry, and several others, that I would do Justice to; that your Lordship would give me a reasonable Time to make up their Accounts; and when that is done, I hope your Lordship will give me still a further Time to make up that great Account which I have in another Place: When this is done, if his Majesty doth not think fit graciously to continue me in this World, I will dare to die like a Gentleman and a Christian, not doubting but that I shall meet with a double Portion of Mercy and Justice in the next World, tho' 'tis denied me in this.

L. C. Just. Christoyber Layer, You have been indicted, and after a long Examination and fair Trial, have been convicted of High-Treason in compassing and imagining the Death of the King.

You have had all the Indulgence and Advantage that the Law would allow you. You have had Counsel assigned you of your own chusing, to advise you preparatory to your Trial, and to assist you in making your Defence at your Trial.

These Counsel have been permitted to say whatever they thought proper for your Service; and I heartily wish that I could say that they had not exceeded, that they had not taken a greater Liberty than they ought to have done: But however that was, the Court thought fit to permit it in them, that they might not be discouraged in offering any thing that was proper for your Defence; we did not censure it then, on this Consideration.

The Jury that have found you guilty, are such, as may be justly said, you yourself approved of; for, tho' the Law gives you a Liberty of challenging five and thirty, you challenged but four and thirty; so you allowed the rest to be an indifferent Jury, to pass between the King and you as to your Life and Death.

The Evidence on which you have been convicted, is the clearest and plainest that ever I heard. Your personal Conferences with the Pretender at Rome; your constant Correspondence with him and his Agents afterwards; the Scheme you had formed for the Executing this Treason; your Confession of the greatest Part of it before the Lords of the Council; and at last your Flight when in the Hands of Justice, out of Window two Pair of Stairs, and the Endeavours you used when retaken to corrupt and prevail with those that took you, by Rewards, to let you go off; these are Matters so very clear and plain, and did concur so exactly with the Evidence of the Witnesses, that it did not rest on their Credit; the only Question was, whether the Jury did believe what you yourself had declared on your Examination before the Lords of the Council, and by the Scheme that was found in your Custody.

This being the Nature of the Evidence, I must, according to what is usual, put you in mind of the horrid Wickedness you have been found guilty of.

The first Matter projected to be done, was to seize the Tower of London, to set a Guard at the Exchange and other Places; to seize the Bank, and take from thence what Money you had Occasion for; by which the whole City of London, and in consequence the whole Nation, would inevitably have been involved in Blood and Confusion; This was to have been the first Fruits of this projected Scheme.

The next Step to be taken by this execrable Scheme, was to seize the sacred Person of the King: a King, who during the whole Course of his Reign hath been the most religious Observer of our Laws, the most careful Preserver and Protector of all our Civil and Religious Rights, and the most merciful Prince that ever sat on the Throne of these Kingdoms; yet this, this most excellent Prince, was to be seized and made a Sacrifice to Popery and arbitrary Power.

The next Step to be taken, was to seize the Prince; and when that was done, no body can doubt but the young Prince and Princesses must and should have followed the Fate of their Father: So that the Project must and would have ended in the Destruction of all the Royal Family on on this Side the Water; and when that was done, 'twas thought 'twould be an easy Matter to set the Pretender on the Throne.

This being done, the King and the Royal Family destroyed, and the Pretender advanced to the Throne, what the Consequence of that must and would have been, is obvious to every body; it must have ended in the entire Destruction and Dissolution of our most happy Establishment and Constitution; the happiest, I think, that ever any People enjoyed; it must have ended in the Destruction of our Laws, our Liberties, our Religion, and the Church of England as by Law established; and we must have become from the most happy, the most miserable People on Earth.

These horrid and execrable Designs are so very heinous in themselves, that they hardly will admit of any Circumstance of Aggravation: But I must say, I can't avoid saying, that there are Circumstances with respect to you, that make them more heinous, if possible. You were bred up to the Law, and you must be supposed to know the Excellency of our happy Constitution and Government, and the Laws which you professed; which makes your Crime much the greater.

Another Matter, which is a great Aggravation of your Offence, is, that you were, or at least professed yourself, a Protestant, and a Member of the Church of England, whilst you engaged yourself in Measures which must inevitably have destroyed that Church which you profess yourself a Member of.

These are the Treasons which you are convicted of; and being so, the Law adjudges you not fit to live; and the Judgment of the Law is, and it is considered by the Court, that

You, Christopher Layer, be led to the Place from whence you came, and from thence you are to be drawn to the Place of Execution, and there you are to be hang'd by the Neck, but not till you are dead, but you are to be cut down alive, and your Bowels to be taken out, and burnt before your Face; your Head is to be sever'd from your Body, and your Body to be divided into four Quarters; and that your Head and Quarters be disposed of where his Majesty shall think fit.

Then the Prisoner was carried back to the Tower of London; but on Wednesday November 28. the Attorney and Solicitor General moved for a Rule for his Execution, and that the Court would appoint a Time and Place for that Purpose; and said, that the chief Design of executing such Criminals was to be an Example to others not to offend in the like Manner, and to deter them from committing Treason, and therefore they moved that the Execution might be in Middlesex, though the Fact was done in Essex, and said, that there were many Precedents for executing Criminals in such Places as this Court should think proper.

Thereupon the Court asked the Clerk of the Crown if he knew any such Precedents, who replied, that one *Fitzpatrick, who was an Associate with the Lord Audley, was executed in Middlesex for a Fact committed in Wiltshire, and two other late Precedents of the same Nature.

So a Rule was made to the Lieutenant of the Tower, to deliver the Prisoner to the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex; and another Rule to the said Sheriffs to execute him on Monday December the 12th, at Tyburn.

Then the King's Council moved the Court to alter the Rule made the Day before, for Mr. Morgan, the Clergyman, to attend the Prisoner, for that he was taken into Custody upon Suspicion of Treason, and had given Bond to appear in Court this Day.

The Court answered, That any Clergyman should be admitted to the Prisoner, who was a Person of known Honesty, Integrity, and Learning, but not such who might harden him in his Iniquity in his last Moments; so two more Clergymen were joined in the Rule, and the other two struck out.

Afterwards, and on that very Day before he was to be executed, he had a Reprieve, and there being some Opinions, that he could not be executed by Virtue of any Warrant signed by the King; but that a new Rule must be made in the Court of King's-Bench for his Execution, he was accordingly brought to the Bar in Hilary-Term following; and a Rule was made for his Execution on the 27th of March; but before that Time he procured another Reprieve, and afterwards another Rule was made to execute him on the 17th Day of May following, which was done accordingly. He made a short Speech to the Assistants, wherein he avow'd the Principles for which he suffered, recommending the Interest of the Pretender; and delivered a Paper to the Under-Sheriff, and also another to a Friend of his. His Head was afterwards carried to Newgate, and was the next Day, fixt upon Temple-Bar; but his Quarters were delivered to his Friends; who took care to get them decently interr'd. The Paper abovementioned was inclosed in a Cover, superscribed,

To Mr. Walter Price, Under-Sheriff, at his House in Castle-Yard, in Holbourn; And was as followeth, viz.

Mr. SHERIFF,

I Having previously resolved to employ all the Time allowed me at the Place of Execution, in Devotion, and making my Peace with God, thro' the All-Sufficient Merits and Mediation of my Gracious Saviour, I have, instead of any Speech I could make to the Spectators, on this unfortunate Occasion, committed my last Thoughts of all Worldly Affairs to Writing*, while I had some Intervals of Time for so doing; and have sent two Authentic Duplicates thereof, with my Hand subscribed to the Bottom of each Sheet, to two trusty Friends, to testify thereby to the World, in due Time, and as Occasion offers, the True Principles of both my Religion and Royalty, as well as the unparallell'd Hardships and Injustice I have lately met with; for which I pray God forgive the Authors thereof.

And to the End, that none of my Friends, who had Access to me since I was sentenced to die, may be liable to come into any Trouble upon the Score of publishing my said Writings, I sent the Draughts thereof sealed up, together with Draughts of two several Letters directed to certain Persons in the Administration, to One of my Friends abovemention'd, desiring him to copy them all over fair, and return them to me: And then I subscribed them, and returned them to my Friends, without letting the Bearers, First or Last, know any thing of the Contents.

So, taking Leave of this vain World, God in Mercy, Receive my Soul! Amen.

Christop. Layer.

CXCIV. Proceedings in Parliament against John Plunket, George Kelly alias Johnson, and Dr. Francis Atterbury, Bishop of Rochester, upon Bills of Pains and Penalties for a Treasonable Conspiracy, May 1723. 9 Geo. I.

THE abovenamed Persons having been taken into Custody by Order of the Government, for a treasonable Conspiracy, it was thought proper to lay the Letters, Papers, and Examinations relating thereto, before the Parliament; whereupon the House of Commons appointed a Committee, Jan. 15. consisting of the following Persons:

The Right Honourable Spencer Compton Esq; Speaker.
Robert Walpole Esq; Chancellor of the Exchequer.
Sir Joseph Jekyll, Master of the Rolls.
Paul Melbuen Esq; Comptroller of his Majesty's Household.
William Poulteney Esq;
John Smith Esq;
Richard Hampden Esq;
Lieutenant General Wills.
Sir Robert Sutton.

The Committee chose William Pultney Esq; their Chairman, and made their Report to the House, March 1. which was as follows:

THE Committee appointed to examine Christopher Lyster and others, in relation to the Conspiracy mentioned in His Majesty's Speech, to be carrying on against his Person and Government, having perused the several Papers and Examinations referred to them, and having gone through the Examination of those Persons, have agreed on the following Report.

In such various and so long Examinations, and in so extensive an Inquiry, your Committee are in Hopes that they need not be strictly ty'd to the Method and Order in which they were appointed, but may for the Ease of the House range the several Matters occurring to them, as near as they can, in the Order of Time in which they were transacted, or as they best serve by their mutual Connection to illustrate each other, without adding any observations of their own, but such as naturally arise from comparing the several Papers and Examinations together, and such as are necessary to help the House the more easily to perceive the Contradictions and Inconsistencies of the Confessions made by the Prisoners, as well as the Confirmations and Coincidence of the Facts inquir'd into.

The Committee observe in general, that a Design has long been carrying on by Persons of Figure and Distinction at home, in Conjunction with Traitors abroad, for placing the Pretender on the Throne of these Kingdoms. That various Methods have been attempted, and various Times fixed for putting this Design in execution. That the first Intention was to have procured a regular Body of foreign Forces to invade these Kingdoms at the Time of the late Elections; but that the Conspirators being disappointed in this Expectation, next resolv'd to make an Attempt at the Time that it was generally believed His Majesty intended to go to Hanover, by the Help of such Officers and Soldiers as could pass into England unobserved from abroad, under the Command of the late Duke of Ormond, who was to have landed in the River with a great Quantity of Arms, provided in Spain for that Purpose; at which Time the Tower was likewise to have been seized, and the City of London to have been made a Place of Arms: But this Design being also disappointed, by the Discoveries made in England, and his Majesty's putting off his Journey; by the Incampment of his Forces at home, as well as the sending for those from Ireland; and by the readiness of his Majesty's good Allies the States General to assist him in case of Need; by the Orders given in Spain, that the late Duke of Ormond should not be suffered to embark, and the like Orders issu'd in France, that he should not be suffered to pass through that Kingdom; the Conspirators found themselves under a Necessity of deferring their Enterprize till the breaking up of the Camp: during which Interval, they were labouring by their Agents and Emissaries to corrupt and seduce the Officers and Soldiers of His Majesty's Army, and depended so much on this Defection, as to entertain hopes of placing the Pretender on the Throne, though they should obtain no Assistance from abroad, which nevertheless they still continu'd to solicit for.

The Truth and Reality of these wicked Designs, your Committee are of Opinion will appear confirmed to the House by concurrent and unquestionable Advices from almost all Parts of Europe, sent by Persons who appear to have had no Communication with each other; which Advices have again been verify'd and supported by several Discoveries made at home, by the Informations and Confessions of some of the Persons concerned, as well as by a long and regular Series of Correspondence, which the Conspirators have furnished the Government with against themselves, and the several Branches of which appear to the Committee connected with one another, and all concurring in one continued Design of subverting our present happy Establishment, and involving these Kingdoms in Blood and Confusion.

The several Examinations, Letters, and other Papers, are all contained in an ^a Appendix to this Report; and as they are all severally numbred, so the several Paragraphs which are quoted from them have References to those Numbers, that they may the easier be turned to upon occasion, and be supported by the Authorities from whence they are taken.

That the first Design was to have been executed during the Elections, and to have been supported by foreign Forces, is collected from the following Circumstances:

Philip Neynoe Clerk (who was drowned in attempting to make his Escape from the Messengers) declared upon his ^b Examination before some of the Lords of the Council, 'That he had been employed by George Kelly, and one Watson, whom he took to be the late Earl Marshal, and who was in England last Spring, to draw up three several Memorials to the Regent of France, to solicit him to send Forces to the Assistance of the Conspirators. That the last of these Memorials was drawn up in December 1721, and contained a Demand of Five thousand Men, to be sent over by the Regent to invade these Kingdoms.'

This is confirmed by unquestionable ^c Advices from France, the 19th of April last, in which it is expressly affirmed, 'That repeated Application had been made to the Regent for some Time past, to furnish only a Body of Three thousand Men, by the help of which the Conspirators made no doubt but to be able to place the Pretender on the Throne.'

Layer, at his ^d Examination before a Committee of Lords of the Council, confess'd, 'That being in Discourse with Lord Orrery, soon after his first acquaintance with him, (which was before the Incampment) Lord Orrery said, Nothing could relieve the Nation, but a Restoration; and that he would be glad if he could contribute to bring it about: That it must be done by foreign Forces, and could be done no other way. That he often asked Lord Orrery what Methods they had taken to procure them? That Lord Orrery said, they had Friends abroad that had made Application to the Regent for Assistance to bring about a Revolution; but he does not know whom his Lordship meant; General Dillon might be his Correspondent for ought he knew: That Lord Orrery likewise told him, the Regent might be brought to wink at any thing, but was so perfidious that he was not to be trusted; and that the French had made a Tool of the Pretender.'

Layer repeated the same in part, at two other Examinations before his Trial, and has since confirmed to your Committee, upon his ^e Examination at the Tower, 'That Lord Orrery declared himself constantly of Opinion, that nothing could be done to any purpose in the Pretender's Favour, without foreign Forces.'

About the latter end of April, a ^f Letter was intercepted here, coming from Spain, inclosing the ^g Copy of one from O—— to L——, which will be shewn in the Sequel of this Report, to have been from the late Duke of Ormond; in which Ormond says, 'Pray tell Mrs. Chaumont, that since the Parliament is dead and gone, I think 'it is a good Time to make an Effort, when the Elector is gone to Hanover.' It will appear from the Sequel of this Report, that by Mrs. Chaumont is probably meant the Pretender.

On the 23^d of April another ^h Letter was intercepted, sign'd 1387, and directed to Mr. Jackson, which your Committee have good Reason to believe was from the Bishop of Rocheſter to the Pretender, as will be shewn in the following Part of this Report. In this Letter he says, 'Notwithstanding this Opportunity is elapsed, I agree with you another may offer before the End of the Year, though not perhaps every way so favourable.' This Letter was writ on the 20th of April, when most of the Elections were over, and consequently that Opportunity was elapsed.

That an Insurrection was thought of at the Time of the Elections, is farther confirmed from the following Particulars; Layer ^k confessed before the Lords, that Green the Gunsmith being in company with Lord North after Dinner, and talking of Five thousand Arms, and Seven thousand Arms that were ready, said, When the Westminster Mob were up, if they had had Arms! Upon which Lord North interrupted him, and said, Don't talk, you are a Citizen, you know there are no Arms; but that the Man insisted there were Five thousand Arms ready in the City.

Neynoe ^l declared, 'that Tbo. Carte, Clerk, made two Expeditions in the Spring (during the Elections) one into Cornwall, and another into the Counties of Warwick, Nottingham, Derby and Stafford; and that upon Neynoe's blaming the riotous Conduct at the Coventry Election, Carte replied, Hang the Election, you never saw Fellows of such Mettle, so well trained, so fit for business.

Among Mr. Dennys Kelly's Papers was seized an exact ^m List of the Quarters of all his Majesty's Forces in Great Britain, about the Time that they were drawn out of most of the great Towns and Boroughs, on account of the Elections.

From all these Circumstances the Committee see reason to conclude, that the first Design was to have been executed with the Assistance of foreign Forces, at the Time of the Elections; that the Pretender, the late Duke of Ormond, Lord Orrery, and the Bishop of Rocheſter were of this Opinion; that Memorials were drawn up here, to be presented to the Regent for this Purpose; and that those Memorials were actually presented, or at least Application made to the Regent in consequence of them, by Directions from Persons in England; and that such Dispositions had been made for this Enterprize at that Time, as broke out into Riots at some of the Elections: which must be allowed to have been no unfavourable Juncture for such an Attempt, considering the Discontents occasioned by the late South-Sea Scheme, which the Conspirators have all along flattered themselves they should be able to improve into a Spirit of Rebellion; and the Liberties usually taken at such a Season, when all the Freeholders of England are necessarily and legally assembled together, and when the whole Nation is too apt to be in a ferment, even in the quietest Times.

This Design failing, on account (as tis reasonable to believe) of the Conspirators not being able to obtain the Forces they solicited from abroad, and of their being themselves divided in Opinion as to the Time and Manner of Execution, their next Endeavour was to attempt an Insurrection at the Time when they supposed His Majesty would be going to Hanover.

Of the Reality of this Design your Committee have found such evident and concurrent Testimonies, that they think stronger could not reasonably be expected, in an Affair where it was so much the Interest of the Conspirators to act with the utmost Caution and Secrecy.

It has already been observed, that the late Duke of Ormond ^a thought the Time of the King's going for Germany, a favourable Opportunity for making an Effort, and that the Person who signs 1378, ^b says, 'Notwithstanding this Opportunity is elapsed, I agree with you another may offer before the End of the Year, tho' not perhaps every way so favourable.'

Layer confess'd to the Lords at ^c two several Examinations previous to his Trial, and has since ^d confirmed to your Committee, 'That he made Application to Lord Orrery to stand Godfather to his Child for the Pretender, intending that this Mark of Kindness from the Pretender should serve as a Credential to Lord Orrery to induce him to converse freely with him, in relation to the Pretender's Affairs: that their Acquaintance having begun in this Manner, ^e Lord Orrery sent to him to inquire into the Pretender's Character and Qualifications, and asked him several Times whether he had any Recommendation from the Pretender to any Person; that upon his answering No, his Lordship told him, that he seem'd to be an honest Man, and People of his Integrity should be always welcome to him, whether they had any Credentials or no; that he, Layer, then gave his Lordship an Account of what had pass'd between the Pretender and him during his Stay at Rome, and asked his Lordship what Hopes there were? To which his Lordship answered, that there were Hopes, for all the Nation were generally for the Pretender, except such as had Places, or Money due to them from the Government. That Lord Orrery farther told him, that Lord North, Sir Harry Goring, Lord Strafford and others were going to do a rash Thing in Favour of the Pretender, which he, Lord Orrery, was sorry for, because it would prove abortive, and hinder its succeeding another Time: That Layer asked him, who was to have the Command, and Lord Orrery told him, he believed Lord North and Grey was to have the Command, and that the said Lord had a Commission from the Pretender; that the Lord Orrery called this Design rash, because not duly concerted, nor supported by foreign Forces, without which, he said, he thought they must be more than Madmen to hope to do any Thing to Effect, for the Pretender's Service. That he, Layer, the next Time he saw Lord North and Grey, which was before the Encampment of the Troops, acquainted him with what Lord Orrery had said about the Rashness of the Design; that Lord North and Grey replied, Lord Orrery was a timorous Fellow, and was always making Difficulties, and Schemes out of his own Brain; that he knew 'nothing, nor should know; but that it was his, [Lord North's] Opinion, the Pretender might be restored by the People of England, without the Assistance of any foreign Force. That he, Layer, talked to Lord North and Grey of his Lordship's being General; but Lord North said, he was not popular enough, that the Duke of Ormond would be fit for it, and if they had him here, his Lordship believed most of the Soldiers would join him: That he, Layer, continuing to press Lord North and Grey on this head, by telling him that he was fitter for a General, and was popular, the said Lord answered No, the Duke of Ormond was the Man, he was the Soldiers Darling. That he, Layer, often talked of this Affair to the Lord North, being induced so to do, by the Impatience he observed in him, and in Lord Orrery, that something should be done.'

Matthew Plunket, Serjeant of Invalids, has ^f deposed upon Oath, 'that Layer told him (in July last) that the late Duke of Ormond would come in a single Ship with some Officers, and that it had been done long ago, if the French Ambassador had not been told of it, who told it again to the King.'

^g It appears to your Committee from several Depositions on Oath, as well as from Informations and written Intelligence, that in consequence of this Design of bringing over the late Duke of Ormond, Captain Charles Halstead, a Lancashire Man (who was concerned in the Insurrection intended at Oxford in the Year 1715) set sail from the River for Bilboa, about the 12th Day of March 17²¹/₂₂, on board the Ship Phineas of Bristol, William Arnold Master, with a Provision of Arms and Powder on board, which one of the Sailors on his ^h Examination declared, 'He apprehends to have been greater than was necessary for an ordinary trading Voyage. ⁱ That the said Ship was hired at one Hundred Pounds Freight per Month, two Hundred being paid in Advance (as Halstead himself owned) and had no Goods nor any Passenger on board, except the said Halstead, who went by the Name of Nowell, and was known to the Master and Sailors by that Name only, during the Voyage to Spain. ^k That the said Ship was cleared at the Custom-house in Ballast for Lisbon; but that when they came into the Bay of Biscay, the Master, who had Orders to follow Nowell's Directions, ^l gave private Instructions to the Pilot to steer to Bilboa; that they arrived there on the 25th of March, O. S. and that Halstead went on Shore, and lay that Night at Mr. Brown's an Irish Merchant, and the next Day went forward towards Madrid, being furnished with Horses by the said Brown, on which Journey he was absent about a Fortnight; that during his Absence, a ^m Report was current all over the Town of Bilboa, and particularly among the Convents, that the said Ship was come to fetch over the Duke of Ormond.ⁿ And Thomas Carter, one of the Sailors of the said Ship, who was employ'd by Halstead to wait on him as a Servant, has ^o deposed upon Oath, 'That three Days after the said Nowell's Return, the Deponent heard him propose to the above-named Captain Arnold, to carry the late Duke of Ormond and Four other Passengers to England; which the

‘ said Captain Arnold refusing to do, the said
 ‘ Nowell insisted, saying, the Ship was his so long ‘ as he paid the Hire of her, and the Wages and ‘ Victualling, and they had high Words upon it.
 ‘ Carter farther deposed, that Halstead received a ‘ Letter directed to Colonel Nowell Butler, which ‘ was the Name the said Nowell went by, when ‘ he was in Spain. That, when the Ship was re‘ leased, they plied off and on about four Hours ‘ off St. Andero, expecting some Body to come ‘ off in a Boat; but no Body coming, and Night
 ‘ drawing on, they made the best of their way ‘ to England, and arrived in the Downs the Be‘ ginning of July last.’ Allison, who came over to England a Passenger in the said Ship, has^a deposed upon Oath, ‘ that he left Madrid on the ‘ 4th of June, N. S. and that some Time before ‘ he came away, the late Duke of Ormond, who ‘ had resided a considerable Time at Madrid, had ‘ sent away his Horses and Equipage from thence,
 ‘ and put his Servants on Board-wages, and that ‘ it was reported he was to go to Ventofilla. That ‘ he, Allison, upon his coming to Bilboa, found
 ‘ the Ship Phineas bound for England, but stopt;
 ‘ that he agreed to take his Passage on board her,
 ‘ and going to the Corregidor of Bilboa for a Pass,
 ‘ he found there Mr. Brown a Merchant, and one ‘ who went by the Name of Nowell; that Brown
 ‘ asking the Corregidor why the Ship was stopt,
 ‘ he said, it was not the Ship, but Nowell’s Per‘ son, that was detained, by Orders from Madrid;
 ‘ that he, Allison, heard a Report at Bilboa,
 ‘ that the late Duke of Ormond was on the Coast
 ‘ in Disguise, and that Nowell had been at Madrid, ‘ and come back again in Fifteen Days; the ‘ Expedition of which Journey, and the Ship’s ‘ coming in Ballast, had raised a Suspicion in ‘ Bilboa, that Nowell came over to the late Duke ‘ of Ormond, on Account of the Conspiracy. The ‘ Sailors^b observed, that during Nowell’s Stay at ‘ Bilboa, Brigadier Campbell (a Person concerned ‘ in the Preston Rebellion) was frequently on ‘ board with him, but did not care to own his ‘ Name.’ The same Particulars are confirmed by ‘ Letters from Sir Anthony Wescomb, who was sent to Spain to gain Intelligence, with several other^d Circumstances relating to Ships, Arms and Recruits, provided for the Pretender’s Service in Spain.

During these Transactions, ‘ Colonel Stanhope, his Majesty’s Ambassador at Madrid, who does not appear to have known any thing of this Ship’s being come to Bilboa, having received Intelligence from other Hands, that the Duke of Ormond was preparing to set out for England with some Irish Officers, in order to put himself at the Head of the Rebels, obtain’d Orders from the Court of Madrid, to hinder the late Duke of Ormond’s
 Embarkation, as will appear more fully in the remaining part of this Report.

In consequence of these Orders, the King of Spain’s Officers^f came on board the Ship, and laid an Embargo upon her for about a Fortnight, till Halstead, finding himself disappointed of his Design, agreed that Part of a Cargo of Wooll and Iron should be put on board the said Ship by Brown and Slinger; and then returned to^g England with one Maxwell, whom the Sailors understood to be a Relation of the late Lord Marr’s, and two other Passengers, and arriv’d in the River about the 7th or 8th of July.

About the Beginning of May^h Letter was intercepted here coming from Spain, directed to Monf.
Dumville Procureur, and enclosed under Cover to one Wilmore at Mr. Stokoe’s Bookfeller near Charing-Cross. Who is meant by the Name Dumville, the Committee have not been able to discover.

In this Letter was enclosed theⁱ Copy of a Letter, which the Committee have Reason to believe was from the late Duke of Ormond to some Persons abroad, the initial Letter of whose Name is discovered by the Decyphers to be L.

The Letter to Dumville, as well as the Copy of the late Duke of Ormond’s Letter, was writ partly in Cypher; and among the Words out of Cypher several fictitious Names were made Use of, which the Committee observe is the Case also in several others of the intercepted Letters referred to them.

It was reasonable to expect, that in managing Correspondences of so hazardous a Nature, all sort of Art and Industry should be used, and all the Help of Cyphers and Jargon called in, to disguise the real Designs, and to conceal the true Names of the Persons concerned, in order to their avoiding the Danger of legal Conviction:
 but your Committee likewise observe, that several of these Disguises are so gross and obvious, that they only serve to betray themselves; others of them are explained by the Skill of different Decyphers, agreeing in the same Explication; which Explication is again confirmed by Facts unknown to those Persons at the Time of the Decyphering. Others are explained by Cyphers and Lists of fictitious Names, seized on the Conspirators themselves, as well as by comparing the several Parts of their Correspondence together; and others again by direct Informations upon Oath. And, as the Degrees of Evidence, in a Search of this Nature, must be various, the Committee have taken all the Care they can, to distinguish what appears to them fully proved, from what is supported by strong and probable Con-jectures only.

In this^k Letter to Dumville, dated the 27th of April 1722, (N. S.) mention is made of its being publickly known in Spain, by Letters from Bilboa and other Parts, ‘ that a Ship came to ‘ Bilboa, with an express to Ormond, in order to ‘ bring Ormond to England; that the said Ex‘ press went to the Place where Ormond was;
 ‘ that this had made so much Noise, that it
 ‘ was necessary to send to England with all pos‘ sible Dispatch; that a Ship’s coming with Bal- ‘ last only gave Occasion to those Reports, and ‘ that in order to stifle them it was necessary to ‘ put in the Ship Goods for England; that this ‘ would be a considerable Expence to Tom, who ‘ hopes that Friends will consider it, and send ‘ him if possible a greater Supply than the five ‘ Thousand Pounds that he wrote for in his of the ‘ 6th and 20th of April; that the Bills must be ‘ sent directly to B—, and may be bought at ‘ the Exchange of London.’

The Committee are of Opinion, that by B. is meant Brown the Irish Merchant at Bilboa, because the^l Cargo was put on Board by the said

Brown and Slinger; and it appears by subsequent Letters that this Brown had twelve Thousand Arms in his Custody, for the Service of the late Duke of Ormond. It is also proved ^b by the Sailors, that Halstead was frequently in Company with this Brown and his Nephews, and lay sometimes at his House.

Who is meant by Tom in the said Letter, the Committee will not take upon them to determine; but they believe it will appear probable to the House, from the Connexion and other Circumstances, that it must mean the late Duke of Ormond.

The Person that writes this ^c Letter to Dumville, adds, 'That since Mrs. Chaumont cannot meet Ormond at any Place on the Road, it is absolutely necessary that Ormond should have as good a Preparation of Arms as can be had there, and in order to make it, he will want more Money from Friends.'

The same Person says, that he had that Day received a Letter, importing, 'That M—— could get more Arms if he had more Money.' The Committee are of Opinion, that by M—— is meant Morgan, who is mentioned in several Letters from Spain, as Intendant of the Pretender's Ships at Cadiz, and active in procuring Officers and Arms; which Letters are confirmed by the Seizure of the Ship Revolution at Genoa, of which it appears by Captain Scot's ^e Letter from Genoa, that Morgan had the chief Care, going by the Name of Walton; which is again confirmed by a ^f Letter from Sir Anthony Wescomb at Bilboa.

The Person that ^g writes to Dumville, farther adds, 'That Ormond hopes Onslow and Hawley will send a Part of the Money they have raised directly to Ormond; for Ormond, upon the Hopes of it, has sent Credit to M——; he desires Dumville to mind this, and not to lose a Moment.'

Who are meant by Onslow and Hawley, the Committee cannot determine; but they are inclined to believe, that they are the same Persons, who in another ^h Letter, enclosed to Wilmore soon after, and writ in the same Cypher, are found by the Decyphers to have the initial Letters of their Names G—— and N——; in which Conjecture they are the more confirmed, by ⁱ a Cypher seized on John Plunket, in which the real Names beginning with G. are constantly designed by fictitious ones beginning with H. the Letter immediately following in the Alphabet, and the real Names of the Letter N. by others beginning with O.

In the ^k Letter to Dumville above-mentioned, was enclosed the ^l Copy of a Letter from the late Duke of Ormond to L. which was sent to Dumville as being in part an Answer to one received from him; who is meant by L, the Committee cannot determine.

In this Letter, the late Duke of Ormond mentions his having received an Account from D—— (General Dillon probably) that he had procured ten Thousand Arms, and advises the joyning Stocks with D——, since they cannot have too many Arms; and says he can only depend on two Thousand Arms from M—— (Morgan probably) but that he could have had more Arms, if he had had more Money.

The Committee observe, That this Account of ten Thousand Arms procured by D——, and of two Thousand by M——, agrees exactly with an ^m Account sent soon after from Mr. Stanbope at Madrid, and ⁿ confirmed by Sir Anthony Wescomb, that twelve Thousand Arms were lodged in the Hands of Brown at Bilboa, for the Pretender's Service; and that Morgan was ordered to the Bay of Biscay, in order to transport the said Arms to England.

The Committee take Notice likewise, that the very same Number of Arms is mentioned in a ^o Letter, writ, as they have good Reason to believe, by George Kelly, to General Dillon's Secretary; and the Arms are there spoken of, as provided by Mansfield's Relations, which Name George Kelly ^p explained to Neynoe to mean the late Duke of Ormond.

The Circumstance of Kelly's mentioning these Arms to Dillon's Secretary, makes it probable that by D. in Ormond's Letter, is meant the said Dillon, who, as your Committee are informed, is an Irish Roman Catholick, and quitted Ireland on the Capitulation of Limerick, and is at present a Lieutenant-General in the French Service, and has the Command of one of the Irish Regiments in France; and he appears to your Committee, from several Parts of the intercepted Correspondence, to have the chief Management of the Pretender's Affairs, and to be the principal Agent and Director of carrying on this Conspiracy.

Ormond in his ^q Letter to L—— afterwards says, 'That since the Parliament is dead and gone, he thinks it will be a good Time to make an Effort when the Elector is gone to Hanover; and adds, I hope you have agreed with D—— the Time of going for England, and when that is fixed between Mrs. Chaumont and D——, you will let Ormond know the Place of landing in England. I desire an Express may be sent to me, with particular Accounts of what is agreed on.' This, the Committee take Notice, agrees with Mr. Stanbope's ^r Intelligence, that Ormond was going for England, and likewise with ^s Intelligence sent from Rome, that the Pretender was to embark, as soon as two Officers, Relations of the late Duke of Ormond, should arrive at Porto Longone; which Circumstance makes it not improbable, that by Mrs. Chaumont may be meant the Pretender.

In the same ^t Letter to L——, Ormond says, 'I have ordered H——'s Ship, that I depended on, to return to England; it was not proper to make use of it, for Reasons not necessary to trouble you with. There was no Message sent by him, because of the Uncertainty of the Time of his getting to England.'

This Passage, the Committee are of Opinion, evidently relates to Halstead's Ship. Upon mentioning his sending back this Ship, he immediately adds, 'I have ordered M——'s Ship to come to A——;' which agrees exactly with Mr. Stanbope's ^u Account, that Morgan's Ships were ordered to the Bay of Biscay, to transport to England the Arms above-mentioned, together with Ormond, and what Officers could be got; and it appears by subsequent ^a Letters from Sir Anthony Wescomb at Bilboa, that the said Ships, under the Command of Morgan, did put in at Sainto Andera, which the Committee understand to be the Place meant by A——, to which Ormond says he had ordered M——'s Ship to come. The said Ships having put in at Andera, and staid there fifteen Days, is again confirmed by a ^b Letter from Genoa, writ by Captain Gardiner, who commanded the Ship Revolution lately taken.

Soon after this Letter to Dumville, ^c another was intercepted here coming from Spain, directed A Monsieur Dodsworth, not signed, enclosed under Cover to Wilmore as the former, and writ in the same Cypher; the most material Paragraph of which is thus explained by the Decyphers.

‘ I must again entreat you to use your utmost Endeavours, to get the five Thousand Pounds from Friends returned to O—— directly; the Hopes given by G—— to expect a great Sum, and by N——, that he had raised twenty Thousand Pounds, induced O—— to supply M——, and to make other necessary Provisions. If that Money be not returned, it will fall heavy upon O——, and he will be disabled from answering the Expectation of Friends, therefore ought to be your first and greatest Concern. All other Actions are Trifles in Comparison of it; for the Hopes of Success depend principally on O——. I mentioned this in former Letters, and Friends are desired to return more than five Thousand Pounds, if possible. If they do, more Arms and Ammunition, and Officers can be had here; and the End of raising Money by Friends, is to procure Arms, Ammunition and Officers.

To whom these Letters were writ does not appear; but the Committee observe that they are writ in the same Cypher with three ^d Letters, which they have Grounds to believe were from the Bishop of Rochester. They observe likewise that the same Cypher is sometimes made use of by ^e George Kelly.

Mr. Stokoe the Bookseller being examined about Wilmore, under whose Cover these Letters to Dumville and Dodsworth came enclosed, could give no other ^f Account of him, but that he was one who once writ a Letter in his Shop, and desired him by a Letter, dated Epsom the first of March, 1722, to take in such French Letters as should come directed to him; and by another Letter, dated Harwich the 14th of May, desired him to take in no more; that he, Stokoe, did receive two Letters from abroad so directed, which were fetched away, and paid for by Persons to him unknown.

That the late Duke of Ormond was expected to head an Insurrection in England, is farther confirmed by the following Particulars.

Neynoe upon his Examination before a Committee of Lords of the Council, ^g declared, ‘ That the first Design in the Spring was to have been executed in London, by seizing the Tower, and that the late Duke of Ormond was then to have landed in the River; but upon Discovery of the Plot, and the King's not going beyond Sea, it was put off for some Time; that the ‘ Bishop of Rochester, Lord Orrery, Lord North, and Sir Harry Goring, were the principal Leaders and Directors of the whole Design; and that Watson (whom he took to be the late Earl Marishal) had told him, Lord North and Grey was thought of for the Command.’

On the 29th of April, O. S. ^h Intelligence came from France, ‘ That the Week before the late Duke of Ormond had made Application to the Regent by a Person of great Distinction, for Leave to pass through France, under a Pretence of going into Italy, but that the Regent had absolutely refused him, and at the same Time had dispatch'd the necessary Orders to the Frontiers of Spain, to hinder him from passing either openly or in Disguise.’

On the 2d of May, O. S. Sir Luke Schaub sent ⁱ Advice, ‘ That one Lesley had been looking out for Lodgings at Paris for the late Duke of Ormond; and ^k on the 9th, that Alderman Barber carried with him Bills of Exchange for fifty Thousand Pounds Sterling for the Pretender; and that the same Sum was sent to Ormond by another Hand, to enable him to make the necessary Preparations in Spain and Italy.’ The Committee observe, that this agrees, as to the Division of the Money, with a Passage in another ^l Letter from Dillon's Secretary to George Kelly, dated the second of May, N. S. which will be farther explained in its proper Place.

On the 23d of May, O. S. Sir Luke Schaub sent ^m Advice, ‘ That the late Duke of Ormond was to set out from Madrid about the 20th of that Month, with his Family, without its being known whither he was going; that it was believed he would give out that he was going to settle at a certain Distance from Madrid, from whence he might steal away afterwards unobserved.’

On the 28th of May, O. S. Mr. Stanhope ⁿ writes Word from Madrid, ‘ That having had Intelligence to be rely'd on, that the late Duke of Ormond intended speedily to pass into England, with a great Number of Irish Officers at that time in the Service of his Catholick Majesty, in order to put himself at the Head of the Rebels there, and for that purpose was to set out from Madrid the next Day, under Pretence of going for the rest of the Summer to Ventofilla, a House of the Duke of Medina Celi, half-way between Madrid and Bilboa, but in reality to be thereby readier to pass to that Port, and with less Suspicion to embark from thence for England, whenever Matters should be ripe for his so doing; he made Application to his Catholick Majesty by the Marquiss de Grimaldo, for Orders to be sent to all the Ports of Spain, to prevent the said late Duke's embarking with the Officers above-mentioned, and received a Letter from the Marquiss de Grimaldo, (a Copy ^o of which is annexed to this Report) acquainting him, that the King of Spain had directed such Orders to be issued, and was ready on all Occasions, more particularly on this which regarded the Quiet and Tranquillity of his Britannick Majesty's Kingdoms, to contribute all in his Power towards his Majesty's Satisfaction.’

Andrew Pancier, formerly Captain-Lieutenant of Lord Cobham's Dragoons, has ^a deposed upon Oath, ' That being grown intimately acquainted with Skeene (now in Custody) a Person related to Marr, and engaged in the Rebellions of Pres-ton and Glensbeild, Skeene began to acquaint him, about June last, that there was a Design carrying on in England for placing the Pretender on the Throne, of which he at different times told him the following Particulars: That six or eight Battalions of Irish Foot, double Officer'd, were to have come over from Spain, which were quarter'd upon the Coast of Gallicia for that purpose; that the nine Spanish Men of War which have joined the Dutch, and four more to have been fitted out at Barcelona, and three at Alicant, (as he best remembered) being in all sixteen Spanish Men of War, were to have been employed in this Service. That these Troops were to have landed either in Cornwal, or near Bristol: That there were forty Thousand Stand of Arms in Great Britain, part in Scotland, other part in London, other part in Bristol, and other part in Cornwal. That there were seven or eight hundred Men, with Officers among them, in London, subsisted, and in readiness for such an Occasion. That a Sum of two hundred thousand Pounds had been raised by Contribution for carrying on this Design, and put into the Management of the Bishop of Rocheſter, who with the Lord North and Grey were the leading Men among them; and that the Lord Strafford and Lord Kinoule knew the Thing. That the Managers of this Affair in Spain, were the late Duke of Ormond and the late Earl Marishal; and those in France the late Lord Marr, and Lieutenant General Dillon. That the Court of Spain was in their Interest, but as to the Regent and Cardinal Du Bois, they could not tell what to make of them: That this Design was to have been executed some time ago, but was then disappointed by the Regent: That the late Duke of Ormond, and the late Earl Marishal, were to have come with the Troops before mentioned from Spain, and the Pretender about the same time was to have left Rome privately, and to have lain conceal'd somewhere near, from whence he would have come over when there had been a fair Prospect of Success. That as to any Opposition they could expect, we had but fourteen Thousand Men in all, of which three Thousand were necessary to guard London, three Thousand more for Scotland, and two Thousand for the Garisons; so that the Remainder would never dare to attack those who came from Spain: and in the Confusion, their (meaning the Pretender's) Friends would have been able to have got together, and made a Head. That in the Conduct of this Affair there passed little in writing, and only the four Lords before mentioned, viz. the Bishop of Rocheſter and Lord North and Grey principally, and Lord Strafford and Lord Kinoule, were concerned in the Management of it here. That the Business was to have been done before the Dutch Troops could come to our Assistance.

The Committee have laid these several Particulars together, though of different Dates, that the House may see at one view, the Reason there is to believe, that the late Duke of Ormond was to have landed in England with Officers and Arms, about the Time that it was generally supposed his Majesty intended to go to Hanover. The reason of Ormond's not coming, is sufficiently explained by the Orders issued at Madrid and in France, by the King's not going abroad, and by the Discoveries, and Disposition of the Forces made in England. And notice is taken, in ^b Letters to one of his Majesty's Secretaries of State from Rome, that a Person of great Distinction at that Place, had declared it as his Opinion, that the grand Project formed in the Conclave for placing the Pretender on the Throne of Britain, was going to be put in execution; but that the same Person afterwards assigned four Reasons for its having miscarried; which were, the Want of Money, the suspected Faith of the Regent, the Want of Skill in those who were to conduct it, and the Pusillanimity of the Pretender, who, to avoid hazarding his own Person, proposed to send his Child: which last Particular is again mentioned in another ^c Letter from Rome.

The Committee now return to shew what other Evidences they have before them, of a Design laid for beginning an Insurrection in London, at the Time when it was supposed the King intended to go to Hanover.

About the latter end of April, his Majesty received ^d Intelligence from abroad, upon which he can intirely depend, ' That a Design was laid for bringing in the Pretender, which was thought to be so well concerted, and conducted by Persons of such Experience, that, if the Secret was but kept, as was propos'd, the Success was looked upon as infallible; and that it was to be put in Execution about the end of April, or beginning of May.' The original Letter containing this Intelligence, has been communicated to your Committee, and an ^e Extract of it is annexed to this Report.

On the 29th of April, the same ^f Intelligence was repeated, with these farther Particulars, ' That the Conspirators did no longer think it necessary to insist on foreign Assistance, flattering themselves that great part of the King's own Forces would declare in their favour. That they now contented themselves with desiring the Regent should observe a Neutrality between his Majesty and the Pretender; and that Lord Lansdowne was to present, or cause to be presented, a Memorial to the Regent to this effect, that Day or the next. That the Design was probably to be executed in London; that the beginning of May was the Time fixed on; and that the Pretender was speedily to set out for England.'

Your Committee do not find that the above-mentioned Memorial was presented to the Regent; but in ^g Letters from Plunket to Dillon they find the same repeated in these Words; ' If the Regent stands neuter, we will soon bring the Law-suit to bear:' which Layr ^h explained to be the Pretender's Cause.

On the 24th of April O. S. Mr. Davenant, His Majesty's Minister in Italy, sent an Express from Rome, with ⁱ Advice, ' that the Pretender's Adherents were making Preparations in Cadiz, and other Ports of Spain, for an Attempt on England; that the Pretender was speedily to embark at Porto Longone, and was retired from Rome for ‘ that Purpose :’ And ^a it appears, that the same Advice was soon after confirmed to his Majesty, by a foreign Minister residing in England, who received the Intelligence from a Person of great Distinction abroad, and communicated it to his Majesty.

On the 9th of May, Mr. Craufurd, His Majesty’s Resident at Paris, ^b writes word, ‘ that the Jacobites in France expected soon an Insurrection ‘ in England, which was to be begun by the ‘ Heads of their Party here soon after His Majesty’s setting out for Hanover, and was to be ‘ supported by Irish Officers and Soldiers, who ‘ lay ready at Cadiz, besides such as should be ‘ able to pass over into England from France by ‘ stealth :’ and in his ‘ Letter of the 26th of May O. S. he adds, ‘ that the Grounds of this Expectation were, Assurances given from England, ‘ that the Conspirators would immediately make ‘ themselves Masters of the Tower, and City of ‘ London.’

This Intelligence agrees with a ^d Paper delivered to the Secretaries of State in July last, by one of the Lords of his Majesty’s Council, who, as they have ^e certified, assured them that a Person, whom he had good reason to believe to be deeply concerned in the Conspiracy, came to him in the Month of July, and brought him a Paper, which he affirmed he had copied by stealth out of the Scrutore of a noble Lord, whom he refused to name ; and that the said Person writ out a fair Copy of the Paper in his presence, which contains Minutes of Resolutions taken at a Consultation, and is in the following Words.

‘ R. That the Arms be dug up immediately, ‘ and dispersed in small Parcels. Begin in Southwark, Whitechapel, Wapping, Holborn and Smithfield. March into City. Possess the Gates. ‘ Against the Horse, Barricades in the narrow ‘ Streets, especially at both Ends of Fleet-bridge, ‘ Shoe-lane, Fetter-lane and Chancery-lane. Possess ‘ St. Clement’s Churchyard by a Party from Holborn. A strong Barricade in the narrow Part of ‘ that Street. Line the two first Stories. Bricks, ‘ Stones, &c. may be useful in the upper Rooms, ‘ and may be thrown by Women and others unfit to bear Arms. Lighters with Ammunition ‘ under Coals, lie at Blackfryars and Milford-lane. ‘ No Dependance or Assistance from Westminster ‘ and those Parts, except some few by Water, the ‘ Communication being cut off. Message to the ‘ Lord Mayor by three Lords. Proclamation ‘ made to oblige all who shall not come in, to ‘ bring in their Muskets, and Militia Arms. Declaration ready printed, to be dispersed among ‘ the People. Twenty three Officers of the ‘ Guards to be depended on : a great many ‘ others well affected, especially the common ‘ Centinels. Day resolv’d on April the 30th. ‘ R. That forty determin’d Persons be immediately pitch’d upon, armed with Swords and ‘ Pistols, to execute all Orders ; and that for the ‘ Subsistence of the said forty Gentlemen, Money ‘ be advanced out of the Fund, at the Rate of seven Shillings per Diem for Man and Horse. ‘ Commander in Chief Lord N. Time seven in ‘ the Morning.’

The Committee make no doubt but the House will readily observe, that this Scheme, drawn up in April, and delivered as aforesaid to one of the Lords of the Council in July last, has a near Affinity with ^f that of Layer, and appears to be the Groundwork of it, tho’ Layer ^g denies his having ever seen any such Paper of Resolutions, or having received any Instructions relating to his Scheme, except from Wilson a Surgeon, Murphey a Physician, and White a Serjeant.

The Committee likewise observe from this and Layer’s Scheme, as well as from a ^h Letter of Sample’s (of which notice will be taken in its Place) that the involving the City of London in Blood and Confusion, appears to have been universally understood and agreed on among all the Conspirators, as the first Step to be taken, and the Foundation of their future Hopes.

By another ⁱ Paper delivered in July last by the same Person, it appears, that when the Stroke was struck in London, there were to be Insurrections in several Counties of England ; and that the Numbers of Gentlemen and private Men, to be depended on both in London and the Country, were computed and set down : and the Committee observe, that the extending the Insurrection to the Country, after London was seized, makes likewise a Part of ^k Layer’s Scheme, and ^l Sample’s Letter.

The Committee farther take notice that in these Schemes, as well as in ^m Pancier’s Deposition, mention is made of great quantities of Arms conceal’d for the Use of the Conspirators ; and Layer having confess’d at his ⁿ Examination before the Lords, that he supposed there were Arms provided, and that Green the Gunsmith being in company with Lord North, had mentioned five Thousand Arms, and seven Thousand Arms, and insisted, in contradiction to Lord North who bid him hold his Tongue, that there were five Thousand Arms ready in the City ; the Committee examined him particularly on this Head, but could draw nothing more from him, than ^o that Green had told Captain Bonyn at Lord North’s, that he could help him to five or seven Thousand Arms at an Hour’s warning. And tho’ your Committee is fully satisfied that no Care has been wanting elsewhere to discover these Arms, and to defeat the Conspiracy in so essential a Circumstance ; yet they cannot but think it a melancholy Consideration, that through the determined Obstinacy of the Conspirators, these Endeavours have hitherto proved unsuccessful.

The Committee observe farther, that in the ^p Paper of Resolutions, Mention is made of a Fund of Money provided, and of a great Number of determined Persons subsisted in London for the Purposes of the Conspiracy, for the Execution of which a Day was likewise fixed on and appointed, and the Commander in chief known. All which several Particulars correspond exactly with the ^q Intelligence received at the same Time from abroad, with ^r Pancier’s Deposition, with what Layer ^s own’d Lord Orrery had told him, that he believed Lord North and Grey had a Commission for commanding in chief ; and with what Neynoe ^t was told by Watson, that Lord North and Grey was thought of for the Command ; as likewise with what ^u was told Matthew Plunket by Layer and John Plunket, that Lord North and Grey with others were ready to head an Insurrection.

Your Committee having thus laid before you the general Evidence, which convinces them that a Design was formed by Persons of Distinction, to invade these Kingdoms with a foreign Force; that being disappointed in this Expectation, they still persisted to make an Attempt, with such Officers and Soldiers as could be procured privately from Abroad; that the late Duke of Ormond was to have landed for this Purpose, and to have been followed by the Pretender; that Arms and Money were provided, and Men subsisted for this Service; that the Insurrection was to have been begun in London, and thence to have been extended over the whole Kingdom. They will now proceed more particularly to explain the several Parts, which the Leaders and inferior Agents appear to have taken in conducting this Design, as far as the same can be collected from the intercepted Correspondence, and other Papers referred to them, and from the Examinations of the Persons concerned; by which it will farther appear to the House, that the Design was constantly prosecuted in all Parts, without any other Relaxation or Intermission, than what the Necessity of their Affairs, and the Discoveries made, obliged them to, in order to lay their Measures deeper, and to make the Success of them more certain: And that the Enterprize, which was first calculated for the Spring, was to have been afterwards put in Execution at the breaking up of the Camp, with the Help of Officers and Soldiers from Abroad, if they could be obtained; if not, on the Strength of such as they hoped to be able to corrupt and seduce, among his Majesty's own Forces.

The Leaders, in order (as 'tis natural to believe) to save themselves from the Danger of legal Conviction, chose to manage their Correspondences by the Intervention of Persons of a meaner Rank and Figure, and of desperate Fortunes; who, they hoped, might escape the Observation of the Government, being no otherwise considerable, than as the Trust reposed in them made them so.

The Committee think proper to take notice, that of these inferior Agents, Layer appears to have been principally intrusted by Lord North and Grey, and Lord Orrery; and that Plunket, who travelled with Layer to Rome, and whose treasonable Practices and Correspondences are closely connected with those of Layer, writes of himself as transacting Part of his Treasons with Lord Orrery's Clerk, and sending frequent Accounts to the Pretender's Agents abroad, of Matters relating to the said Lord.

George Kelly, a Nonjuring Clergyman at present (tho' in the late Queen's Time, the Committee is informed, he took the Oaths to the Government, and likewise the Abjuration) appears to have been the Person principally entrusted by the Bishop of Rocheſter, and to have been employed in writing for him, and conveying Letters to him, until the Time that he, Kelly, was first taken into Custody; after which it appears to the Committee, that Thomas Carte, another Nonjuring Clergyman, was entrusted and employed by the Bishop in the same Manner. And the Committee observe, that George Kelly's Correspondence has a close Connexion with that of Dennis Kelly; and likewise that he appears to have been privy to Plunket's and Neynoe's Transactions.

The Person employed by the Duke of Norfolk, in conveying Letters between him and George Fernegan, an Agent of the Pretender's in Flanders, they find to be Mrs. Spelman, alias Yallop; who has likewise owned her conveying Letters in the same Manner between Mr. Harvey of Comb, and one Moor of Brownlowe-street, and the said Fernegan. The Committee observe, that John Sample acted under the Direction of Mr. Sempill (commonly called Lord Sempill) and his Son at Paris, and that he wrote Letters to the late Duke of Ormond and the Pretender; but whom he transacted Matters with in England, your Committee do not find, by his Examination, he would declare.

The Committee farther observe, that this treasonable Correspondence extended itself into Scotland; that William Erskine remitted Money to France for the Service of the Pretender's Friends, and had a Letter under the late Lord Marr's Hand found upon him, when he was taken into Custody. That Mr. Cockran, now in Custody, and others of that Country yet unknown, were concerned in the same treasonable Correspondence, carried on under the same fictitious Names and Expressions that are made use of by several of the Correspondents in England; and that the same Cant was likewise made use of, for the same Purposes, by Persons in Ireland. That all these several Negotiations and Correspondences concurred in one common Design, of stirring up an Insurrection in these Kingdoms, and placing the Pretender on the Throne.

The Committee have thought it proper to lay before the House such Particulars as occur to them relating to each of these Negotiations, and to begin with those of Layer and Plunket, as being closely connected with one another, and set on foot earlier than it yet appears the others were; and as being likewise what the House thought fit first to refer to the Examination of the Committee: And by comparing the Substance of the Papers, and Examinations of these two Persons together, the House will be enabled, at one View, to form a true Judgment of the Sincerity of their Confessions.

Before the Committee examin'd Mr. Layer, they acquainted him that the several Questions they intended to propound to him were reduced into Writing, and that to avoid all Mistakes, his Answers should be so likewise, and before they were reported to the House he should have the Perusal of them. Accordingly he did review his first Confession to the Committee, and made several Additions and Alterations, which will be taken Notice of in their proper Places.

Mr. Layer has own'd partly to a Committee of Lords of the Council before his Trial, and partly to your Committee (as will appear by reference had to his^a several Examinations annex'd to this Report) ' That being bred up under an Uncle ' who was a Nonjuror in Norfolk, he early im-
' bib'd those Principles; that having a private Af' fair to transact at Venice, this and a natural In' clination and Curiosity, which he had always had ' to see the Pretender, carried him on to Rome;
' that he set out from England on the first of April
' 1721, in company with John Plunket, now in ‘ Custody, who went sometimes by the Name of ‘ Rogers, whose Expences he bore on Account of ‘ his being useful to him, as speaking several Lan‘ guages. That he believes from the Time of his ‘ first acquainting Plunket with his intended Jour‘ ney (which was some Months before their setting ‘ out) the said Plunket, in order to magnify his Ser‘ vices to the Pretender and his Adherents, might ‘ write to General Dillon, and others of them, that ‘ he was going to Rome with a Friend, and that ‘ his and his Friend’s Journey would be of great ‘ Consequence to the Pretender’s Affairs.’ But this Particular he did not own till the Review of his Examination, when he found the Committee were apprised that Notice had been sent to Rome of his Journey; for he insisted at first that his Journey to Rome was purely accidental, and not concerted with the Pretender or any of his Agents.

He farther owned, ‘ That in their Way to Italy,
 ‘ they passed through Antwerp, and that Plunket
 ‘ there received a Letter from General Dillon, ‘ which he shewed to Layer, directing them whom
 ‘ to apply to on their Arrival at Rome, to intro‘ duce them to the Pretender.’ And on his reviewing his Examination, when he found your Committee were in Possession of that Letter, he own’d, ‘ That Francis Kennedy was the Person
 ‘ they were directed by Dillon to apply to.’ A Letter^a to that Effect being found among Plunket’s Papers, signed Dixwell, and the same being shewn by your Committee to Layer, he declared, ‘ That ‘ to the best of his Memory and Belief, it was the ‘ very Letter which was shewn to him by Plunket
 ‘ at Antwerp, and affirmed by Plunket to be from ‘ General Dillon: That he, Layer, believes Dillon
 ‘ goes by the Names both of Dixwell and Digby;
 ‘ and that by the Name of Joseph, in the said
 ‘ Letter, is to be understood the Pretender.

‘ That he and Plunket arrived at Rome the lat‘ ter End of May 1721; and that after he had ‘ been a Day at Rome, he sent to Francis Kennedy, ‘ Secretary to the Pretender, to let him know he ‘ should be glad to see him, and to renew Ac‘ quaintance with him.’

Being asked when and where he first became acquainted with Francis Kennedy, he said, ‘ That ‘ Kennedy has a Brother, Secretary to the late ‘ Duke of Ormond, with which Brother he had ‘ some Acquaintance; and he thinks he has former‘ ly been in Francis Kennedy’s Company at Lon‘ don along with the other Brother: But as to ‘ this Particular he cannot be positive.’ This is what he said relating to Kennedy at his first Examination; and your Committee observed by his Behaviour, that he was under Difficulties how to account for his applying to Kennedy, not having owned at that Time he had any Directions so to do, and being willing to have your Committee believe, that his Journey was not known of at Rome:
 But after Plunket’s Examination, being uncertain what Plunket might have confess’d, he thought it proper to be more open upon this Head, though contradicting in some Measure his own former Confession. He farther said, ‘ That upon his send‘ ing to Francis Kennedy, as above, the said Ken‘ nedy came to his Lodgings, which at the same ‘ Time he said he was surprized at, it being in the ‘ Face of all the English Gentlemen; but that ‘ Kennedy told him, he needed not be uneasy at his ‘ coming to his Lodgings openly, since he frequent‘ ed the Company of all the English Gentlemen that ‘ came to Rome, without Distinction. That at the ‘ first Visit he desired Kennedy to introduce him to ‘ the Pretender, which he promised to do. That ‘ Kennedy came to him again the next Night, and ‘ promised to introduce him to the Pretender pri‘ vately in an Evening, so that no Body should ‘ be able to prove his having been there.’

And when he reviewed his Examination, being asked by your Committee, whether he knew of any Letter to Plunket, on their first coming to Rome; and being asked it in such a Manner as let him understand that they knew from whom it came, and by whom it was writ; then, and not till then, he owned, ‘ That he believed Kennedy ‘ delivered to Plunket a Letter under the Preten‘ der’s own Hand, when Kennedy and Plunket were ‘ alone together; for the next Morning, as he,
 ‘ Layer, was in Bed, in a Room next adjoining to ‘ that where Plunket lodged, Plunket came to his ‘ Bedside, and told him with seeming Satisfaction,
 ‘ that he had got a Letter under the King’s ‘ (meaning the Pretender’s) own Hand; but that ‘ Kennedy never said one Word of this Letter to ‘ him, Layer. That Plunket shewed him, Layer,
 ‘ the said Letter, the whole of which he believes ‘ to have been writ in the same Hand in which ‘ the blank Receipts taken amongst his Papers at ‘ Mrs. Mason’s are signed, which he believes to ‘ be the Pretender’s own Hand. That the Sub‘ stance of the Letter was, that the Bearer, Fran‘ cis Kennedy, would introduce Plunket to the Pre-‘ tender. He said he could not be positive whe‘ ther it was said in that Letter, that Kennedy
 ‘ would introduce Plunket only, or whether he ‘ himself was mentioned likewise to be introduced ‘ by Kennedy. That Plunket told him he saw the ‘ Pretender the Night before Layer was introdu‘ ced to him.’

This Original Letter has since been deliver’d to your Committee, with the^b Depositions relating to it; by which it appears, that Plunket delivered it with other Papers to one Mary Fagban, about Michaelmas last, which was near the Time of Layer’s being taken up; it is dated Thursday Morn. signed James R. and directed to Mr. Plunket, and is in the following Words:

‘ This is only to direct you not to mention any ‘ Thing of Business to any Body, till I have seen
 ‘ you. I have not much Leisure to-night, expect‘ ing Visits; but however I shall be glad to see ‘ you alone, and agree with you the most private ‘ Way and Manner for your Companion and me
 ‘ to meet. The Bearer Fr. Kennedy will bring ‘ you very privately to my House to-night about ‘ eight a-Clock.

James R.

For Mr. Plunket.

Your Committee observe from this Letter, as well as from other Papers before them, what a Degree of Trust and Confidence Plunket was admitted to (notwithstanding he would endeavour by his present Appearance to make it seem incredible) and perceive likewise by this Letter, that his and Layer’s Journey to Rome had been represented to the Pretender as an Affair of some Importance.

^b C. 70, 71.

Layer farther said, ‘ That Kennedy, in his second ‘ Visit, appointed him to meet him and Colonel ‘ Haye in the Square before the Pretender’s House
‘ at Ten the next Night; that he met them there,
‘ and that they conducted him up a Pair of Back-
‘ Stairs to the Pretender.’

Before the Committee proceed to give an Account of the Conversation which Mr. Layer says he had with the Pretender, they think it proper to observe, that among Plunket’s Papers were found two foul Draughts of Letters, which are sworn to be Plunket’s Hand-writing, which give some Light to the Occasion of his and Layer’s Journey to Rome. The first is without Date or Direction, but appears evidently by the Matter to have been writ to the same Person, and about the same Time as the second, which is dated the 22d of March, 1721. (about ten Days before his and Layer’s setting out) and directed To Mr. Jackson, which Name is found in a ^a Cypher taken among Plunket’s Papers, and sworn likewise to be his Hand-writing, to denote the Pretender.

In the ^b first of these foul Draughts are these Words: ‘ There is one that sets out from Norfolk
‘ in a few Days to let you know they’ (that is the Tanners, which he ^c explained to Layer to mean the Tories) ‘ will stand by you on Occasion: He ‘ only stays for me, and offers to bear my Expences, so that I shall wait on you, and have the ‘ Satisfaction to tell you by Word of Mouth what will be acceptable. He carries The List with ‘ him, no doubt on’t you may have many such ‘ now.’

In the ^d Letter to Jackson of the 22d of March are these Words: ‘ The Gentleman I mentioned ‘ to you formerly, is come out of the Country,
‘ with Instructions to wait on you, and tender
‘ you his Service. He offers to bear my Expences.’

From these Passages compared with the ^e Letter received by Plunket from Dillon at Antwerp, in which Dillon says, ‘ I have sent Joseph Advice of ‘ your Journey, in which I wish you and your ‘ Companion, tho’ unknown, all Happiness:’ And then directs him to apply to Kennedy at Joseph’s House for Introduction; and compared likewise with the Pretender’s ^f Letter to Plunket, in which he directs him not to mention any thing of Business to any Body, till he had seen him alone, in order to agree with him the most private Way and Manner for meeting his Companion. It appears to your Committee to be most evident, that Layer did not undertake so long and expensive a Journey on uncertain Prospects of private Business, or out of mere Curiosity, but that his Journey was concerted with the Pretender’s Friends at Home, and notified to the Pretender and his Agents Abroad; and that he carried over with him Tenders of Service to the Pretender from Persons in England, as likewise a List of Names, which was of such Importance, and so well understood and expected at Rome, as to be mentioned by Plunket in one of his Letters to the Pretender, without any other Description than barely that of The List.

The Committee thought this Observation the more necessary to be premised, because Layer did of himself own to them his giving to the Pretender a List of Names, and the Pretender’s asking him at a second Interview, what he had to say in relation to his List; but yet endeavoured to explain that Affair in such a Manner, as your Committee apprehend to be no Ways consistent with Plunket’s foul Draughts abovementioned; nor with the Expectations that seem to have been raised in the Pretender and his Agents, from Layer’s and Plunket’s Journey.

Layer told your Committee, ‘ That on his being introduced to the Pretender by Kennedy and ‘ Haye, as abovementioned, the Pretender asked ‘ him the Occasion of his coming, and whether ‘ he had any Credentials from People in England?
‘ that he answered, Nothing but Curiosity and a ‘ Desire of paying my Duty to your Majesty has ‘ brought me hither. That the Pretender asked ‘ him, what Lords he was acquainted with? To ‘ which he answered, None but such as he was ‘ concerned with in the Way of his Profession.
‘ That the Pretender again expressed himself surprized at his having no Credentials nor Recommendations from any Person in England; and ‘ said, This Journey must have been very expensive to you, I believe it cannot cost you less ‘ than five hundred Pounds. To which he answered, That a private Affair, which brought ‘ him to Venice, would have defrayed the Expence,
‘ if it had succeeded; but that being disappointed
‘ in that, his Inclination drew him on to Rome, to ‘ pay his Duty to the Pretender, which he had ‘ long had in his Thought, so took this Opportunity of doing it. That one Plunket, who was ‘ now in Rome with him, had often told him that ‘ he need not fear being introduced, or to that Effect. That the Pretender said, He believed that ‘ Plunket was a very honest Man, and as proper a ‘ Person as Layer could have had for a Companion.

The Committee observe, that what is here said concerning the Pretender’s good Opinion of Plunket, and Plunket’s having given Assurances to Layer of his being introduced, was not mentioned by Layer, till after Plunket had been examined.

Layer farther said, that the Pretender again repeated his Surprize at his having no Recommendation from any Person in England; but said, I am informed by Francis Kennedy, who knows you, that you have a good Character, and for that Reason you are welcome without any Credentials. Yet your Committee observe, that Dr. Blackerby Fairfax (an intimate Acquaintance of Layer’s) has ^g deposed upon Oath, ‘ That Layer, since his Return from Rome, told him, that while he was in ‘ private Audience with the Pretender, a Scotch ‘ Colonel broke in upon them, upon which the ‘ Pretender took him into another Room; and ‘ that he, Layer, did there deliver his Credentials
‘ to the Pretender.’

Layer told the Committee, ‘ That the Pretender, after the Discourse abovementioned, asked ‘ him what County he was of, and what Gentlemen he knew: That he answer’d he was of Norfolk, and knew all the Tory Gentlemen of that ‘ County. That the Pretender asked him if he ‘ could recollect their Names, and put them ‘ down in Writing: To which he answer’d, He ‘ could easily do that, having brought with him ‘ Memorandums of their Names. That accordingly he drew up a fair List of the Tory Gentlemen of Norfolk, and gave the said List to the ‘ Pretender at a second Interview, thinking it ‘ would be agreeable to him. That the Pretender

‘ then

‘ then asked him, whether he would see the Queen (meaning his Spouse) and promised she should admit him to kiss her Hand.

‘ That about three Weeks or a Month after, Francis Kennedy and Colonel Haye appointed him to meet them at the same Place and Time as before, and introduced him to the Pretender and his Spouse. That the Pretender then called him to him, and asked him, Whether he had any thing to say in Relation to his List? that he answer’d, He forgot something which he had to communicate to his Majesty; that the Pretender said, His Wife would go out of the Room presently, and soon after spoke to her in Italian, to withdraw, as he believes. That the Pretender then asked him, What he had to say? to which he replied, I have nothing so material to offer as ought to have procured me this great Honour and Indulgence; but if there be any Service on Earth I can do, I am most ready. That the Pretender said, What can you do? have you any Acquaintance? To which he replied, that all the Persons mentioned in his List were entirely devoted to the Pretender’s Interest, and all the Gentlemen in England the same, except those in Places of Profit and Trust, and that all Parties were united in his Interest. That the Pretender then asked him, What the Gentlemen were whose Names were on his List? to which he answer’d, They were all Tories, and that he had not put down any of the Roman Catholics of Norfolk, of whom there were several, Men of Estates. That the Pretender said, he believed the People of England were generally well inclined to his Cause, and pretty well convinced of their Error; and then spoke of the Discontents occasion’d by the South-Sea Scheme.’

The Committee observe that in the Cypher which Layer received from Sir William Ellis, the Names of several Norfolk Gentlemen are inserted; who, they think it probable, made a Part of the List delivered by Layer to the Pretender; but at the same Time they think it a Justice due to those Gentlemen, to observe, that Layer has owned to the Committee, that, in order to magnify the Number of the Pretender’s Friends, he did, in several of the Lists found among his Papers, insert the Names of Persons, as well affected to the Pretender’s Service, without having the least Authority from them for so doing: And his false Assertion to the Pretender, that all the Gentlemen in England, except those in Places of Profit and Trust, were entirely devoted to his Interest, shews, that he made no Distinction between the Innocent and the Guilty.

He next acquainted the Committee, ‘ That after the Discourse before-mentioned with the Pretender in relation to the List, the Pretender commended his Zeal, and told him, he might depend on any Service he could do him. That he, Layer, then desired some Token, by which he might obtain Credit among the Pretender’s Friends of the Nobility in England, and obtained that of the Pretender and his Spouse’s answering for his Child;’ which the Committee avoid repeating, the Account he gave them agreeing with that printed in his Trial. He said, ‘ That upon his desiring a Letter to the Dutchess of Ormond, for her representing the Pretender’s Spouse, Colonel Haye told him, no Letter could be sent by him, but that Care would be taken the Dutchess should stand. That he likewife gave him a Message to the Dutchess, to this Effect, that the Duke of Ormond was well, and gone to Madrid, by which, he told him, she would understand the Business he came about.

‘ That he returned to England about the End of August or Beginning of September 1721, and waited on the Dutchess with his Request, adding, that he hoped she was not altogether a Stranger to that Affair; to which she returned him no particular Answer, but promised to stand Godmother, as he desir’d.

‘ That he then made Application to Lord Orrery to stand with her, by Thompson, whom he took to be her Chaplain, and by Swortfegger, Lord Orrery’s Secretary, who understood that Lord Orrery was desired to represent the Pretender. That the said Lord sent to the Dutchess to know whether she stood, who answered that she did; yet Lord Orrery refused; but upon farther Acquaintance, and hearing that Lord North and Grey had consented to stand, he sent for Layer, and made Excuses to him for his Refusal. That he made use of this Credential to Lord Orrery, to induce him to converse freely with him in relation to the Pretender’s Affairs, having heard that the said Lord was in the Pretender’s Interest.

‘ That upon his being refused by Lord Orrery, he made his Application to Lord North and Grey, as mention’d in his Trial, who stood; knowing, as he believes, that he stood for the Pretender. That this Transaction was the Beginning of his Intimacy with Lord North and Grey.

‘ That the first Conversation he had with Lord North, relating to the Pretender’s Affairs, was soon after the Christening; that he then asked Lord North, whether nothing could be undertaken in the Pretender’s Favour, his Lordship being a military Man. That his Lordship replied, he believed the Pretender had Friends enow, if they did but understand one another; that the Army in general, and most of the Half-pay Officers were well inclined to the Pretender.

‘ That in July last he, Layer, going down to Norfolk on the Circuit, called on Lord North at Epping, and again at his Return; that he then asked the said Lord again, whether nothing could be done in Favour of the Pretender? That Lord North said, How can any Thing be done, while so great a Body of Forces is encamped under the very Walls of London, besides the Encampments in other Parts of the Kingdom? That Layer told him, he found most of the Gentlemen in Norfolk that were Tories before, Jacobites now; that Lord North and Grey said, it was the same in other Counties, but that nothing could be done till the Camp should break up. That upon Layer’s pressing him to know whether any Scheme was formed, Lord North said, What does your Friend Lord Orrery think of Things? that he answered, Lord Orrery was of Opinion, nothing could be done without a Foreign Force; that Lord North and Grey reply’d, I cannot be of his Opinion, I believe the People of England may do it of themselves.

‘ That Layer visiting him during the Vacation, and staying two or three Days at his House, continued to press him about forming a Scheme; that Lord North reply’d, We Soldiers do not trouble ourselves much about Schemes: Be you quiet

‘ quiet something will be done’. And at his ‘ Examination before the Lords, he owned, ‘ Lord North and Grey said, If there be a Rising, you shall not want Men, or Money, or Arms.’

Layer farther gave your Committee an Account of his becoming acquainted with Lynch, and of his carrying him to Lord North and Grey, upon Lynch’s telling him that he had something to propose to that Lord, that might be of great Service to the Pretender’s Cause. But in giving an Account of what passed between Lynch and him at the Greenman, your Committee observed, that Layer took great Pains to shew, that he did not communicate any Papers to Lynch till after Dinner, and that he then only shewed him Memorandums, transcribed out of the Prince of Orange’s Declaration, tho’ Lynch has^b deposed upon Oath, that mention was made in that Paper of Lord Cadogan’s being seized, and remaining in the Custody of the Conspirators.

He owned to your Committee his having carried Lynch to Lord Cadogan’s, but said, ‘ He went thither only in relation to the Purchase of an Estate; that while they were waiting there in a Room next the Garden, Lynch viewed the Garden and House, and said, I can easily seize you this General: but he deny’d their having had any previous Discourse to this Purpose, and said the Proposal arose from Lynch, and that he, Layer, was mad enough to make it part of his Scheme.’

He said, ‘ That when Lynch and he came to Lord North and Grey’s, his Lordship asked him who Lynch was; that he said, he was an honest Gentleman, recommended by a particular Friend. That his Lordship said, I wonder you would bring him, you know I am not easy nor free before Strangers. That however, Lord North and Grey entertained Lynch civilly, and after Supper inquired of him, whether he was in the Army, to which Lynch answered, that he was bred up to Merchandize, but had been with the Pretender in Scotland, and had the Command of a Ship under the King of Spain in the Descent on Scotland, and enlarged much on his Loyalty and Zeal for the Pretender; but that Lord North waved the Discourse.

‘ That not long after, Lynch came down again to Lord North and Grey’s to Epping, while Layer was there a shooting, and was civilly receiv’d by his Lordship; and that after he was gone, Layer making Apologies for Lynch’s intruding, Lord North and Grey said, Lynch was a good honest Fellow, and had entertain’d them with several merry Stories.’

The Committee observed, That Layer in relating what passed while Lynch was at Lord North’s, took so much pains to shew that Lord North and Grey could have no private Discourse with Lynch, that he left no room for the said Lord North’s having had any private Discourse with him, Layer; which yet is inconsistent with his ‘ Examination taken before the Lords, as well as with his Confession to your Committee; in another Part of which he owns, that while Lynch was at Lord North’s, he, Layer, shewed Lord North some part of his Scheme or Heads relating to a Declaration, as he was walking with him in the Garden, and that they had some Discourse upon it.

They observe likewise, That what he owned to the Committee in relation to his introducing Lynch to Lord North and Grey, falls very short of what he confessed to the Lords of the Council on the same Subject, previously to his Trial. For he then said, ‘ That Lynch having told him he would seize Lord Cadogan, he carried Lynch to Lord North and Grey’s, and recommended him as a proper Person for such an Attempt. That he had before-hand proposed to Lord North and Grey the carrying Lynch to him, that his Lordship made a Difficulty of seeing him, but that he, Layer, insisted on Lynch’s being an honest Man, fit to be employed in an Insurrection for the Pretender, saying Lynch would do any thing his Lordship would have him, if there should be a Rising: That he was fit to be sent with a Party to seize any particular Person, and that Lynch was impatient to see his Lordship; Layer having told him, that his Lordship was at the Head of those Designs.’

Layer farther acquainted your Committee, ‘ That during his Stay at Lord North and Grey’s at Epping, in the Vacation, he again pressed his Lordship to bring Matters to some Issue in favour of the Pretender, saying, if something be not done speedily, we shall all be taken up; that his Lordship reply’d, Is not the Camp there still? if you can find some Expedient it would be well, it is more than I can do. That Layer said it was his Opinion something might be done even during the Encampment; and in order to discover whether Lord North and Grey and Lord Orrery had any Scheme of their own, he drew up a Scheme himself, and having so done, lodged it with Mrs. Mason, the Day before he was taken up. That he intended to have communicated this Scheme to Lord North and Grey and Lord Orrery; that he had some Discourse with George Wilson, Dr. Murphey AND OTHERS on the Subject of it, before it was drawn up.’ Being asked, who those OTHERS were, he said, ‘ He could recollect no one else but one who called himself Serjeant White, whom he saw in Company with Dr. Murphey at a Tavern, and inquired of him how far some Parts of his Scheme were practicable.’

Being asked whether he had shewn this Scheme to any Body? he said, ‘ He did shew the Heads of it to Lord North and Grey, as he was walking with him in the Garden, and that his Lordship said, all was impracticable during the Encampment: but that he never shewed his Scheme to any Body, after it was drawn up in the Form in which it was left with Mrs. Mason.’ Which last part of his Answer, the Committee observe may be evasive; since by his own Account, as soon as he had drawn it up in that Form, he lodged it with Mrs. Mason, and the Day after was taken into Custody.

The Committee farther take Notice, That the Accounts he gave when he was questioned before the Lords, whether he had shewn this Scheme to any Body, are inconsistent and contradictory.

For in some Parts of that ‘ Examination, he says, ‘ Lord North and Grey would not hear of any thing till the Camp was broke up; That the said Lord would not see his Scheme; That the said Lord said, he might keep his Heads and his Schemes to himself, for there was no-

^a B. 11.^b B. 1.^c B. 11.^d B. 11.^e B. 11.

‘ thing to be done ; That the said Lord said ‘ there was Time enough for forming a Scheme ; and yet in another Part of the same Examination, he says, ‘ Lord North did not dislike a Scheme in ‘ general, but disapproved his Scheme.’

Your Committee beg leave to make the following Observations on these Passages, with a Design to shew the Insincerity and Inconsistency of Layer’s Confessions, and without presuming to draw from them any other Conclusions.

First, That if what Layer said, was true, Lord North must have perused and examined Layer’s Scheme, since a Man that did not dislike a Scheme in general, could not be said to disapprove any particular Scheme, unless he had first considered and examined it.

The Committee observe farther, that the Scheme itself does not appear drawn up by a Man of Layer’s Profession, assisted only, as he would insinuate, by Murphey a Doctor of Physick, Wilson a Surgeon, and White a Serjeant ; and they cannot but think it very extraordinary, that his Scheme drawn up in August or September, should have so great an Affinity with the ^a Paper of Resolutions, for the digging up the Arms, &c. mentioned above, which was drawn up the April before ; and yet that Layer should have had no sight of that Paper, nor have received any Instructions or Assistance from any Persons, who were privy to those Resolutions which he has declared to the Committee he had not. And the Committee are farther confirmed, that the Scheme was not drawn up by himself, from a Particularity contained in a ^b Deposition of Dr. Blackerby Fairfax, who has sworn, that being for four or five Years past employed in reading Civil Law and French to the said Layer, he recollects that Layer once asked him the meaning of the French Motto, since prefixed to his Scheme in these Words, Au défaut de la Force il faut employer la Ruse ; and that upon Fairfax’s explaining it to him, Layer said, it had been explained to him in the same manner by others. Neither does the Scheme appear drawn up at a Venture, or merely with a View of engaging the Pretender’s Friends in the Execution of this, or some other Scheme of their own, as Layer would insinuate, but several Passages in it, compared with his other Papers, make it probable, that the Officers, Serjeants, Soldiers and Arms mentioned in the Scheme, were first engaged and prepared, and then the said Scheme drawn up, for employing in the best manner possible such a Force as had been so prepared.

This appears by comparing these Words in the third Paragraph of his ^c Scheme (‘ And as there ‘ is eight Serjeants, viz. Three of the first Regiment of Foot-Guards, Three of the second,
‘ and Two of the third, all ready at an Hour’s ‘ warning to obey Orders’) with two of his Papers taken with his Scheme at Mrs. Mason’s, viz. ^d That which contains a List of Thirteen Serjeants of the Guards, and another ^e Paper of Layer’s Handwriting, which contains Eleven of these Thirteen Serjeants Names, and Eight of those Eleven Serjeants have Marks set against their Names: so that it may be concluded from thence, that Layer had been able to engage but eight of the said Thirteen Serjeants, and therefore in his Scheme he mentions no more than Eight Serjeants.

The Truth of this Observation farther appears, by comparing Layer’s said ^f Examination of the ist of October, with the fourth Paragraph of his Scheme ; for in that Examination he says that George Wilson had assured him, that two hundred of the Soldiers in the Camp had been spoken to and were ready : and therefore Layer, in the said Fourth Paragraph of his Scheme, mentions only two hundred Soldiers to be ready, and gives every one of his eight Serjeants the Command of Five and Twenty of the said Two Hundred Men. From whence it may be concluded, that the Officer that was to seize the Tower, and the Arms for executing the Scheme, were also in a Readiness.

It is farther remarkable, that Layer intended, as he owned to your Committee, to communicate this Scheme in its present Form, to Lord North and Grey and Lord Orrery ; and yet several principal Parts of it are not explained as things new, but referred to as Matters already known and understood by the persons that were to see it, which could only be by previous Consultations on that Subject ; for Instance,

In the First Paragraph it is said, ‘ Let the General and only one Officer of note in the Camp agree ‘ upon a Day for Execution ;’ which must have appeared a most absurd Beginning to any Body that had not had some previous Discourse or Notice, of several Officers in the Camp engaged in the Design. And the same Observation will hold, with respect to the Paragraphs where Arms are mentioned as provided ; which shews, at least, that Layer believed those Persons that were to see his Scheme, had heard of Arms that were provided.

In the Third Paragraph, George Wilson is named in such a manner, as makes it probable he was already known to those who were to have a Sight of this Scheme ; and the Committee observe that Layer ^g confessed to the Lords that he had told Lord North and Grey, that Wilson was a Fellow who had served in the Army, had a general Acquaintance, and was fit to be employed if his Lordship would make use of him ; to which the said Lord replied, that when he had Occasion he would employ him.

In the Thirteenth Paragraph of the Scheme it is said, ‘ Let the General order four of the Half-pay Captains,’ without any farther Description ; which shews that Layer thought those to whom his Scheme was to be communicated, knew already of Half-pay Officers that were engaged, agreeably to what Lord North and Grey had ^h told him, that most of the Half-pay Officers were well inclined.

In the Nineteenth Paragraph, he allots part of the Execution of the Design to the Duke’s Barge-men, without any other Addition : which is a manner of Expression no one would have used in a Paper to be shewn to Persons, who were entire Strangers to the Affair.

Layer being in the Course of his Examination desired by the Committee, to explain by what Services or Merit on his Part, the Shyness, which, he would have it believed, the Pretender expressed towards him at his first coming to Rome, and the little Acquaintance he then had with Persons of Distinction at home in the Pretender’s Interest, came soon after to be changed into so great a degree of Confidence both at Rome and here, that he should be trusted with negotiating Blank Receipts, under the Pretender’s own Hand, for unlimited Sums ; he told the Committee, that during his Stay at Rome, he contracted a Friendship with Sir William Ellis, who is a Servant of the Pretender's, and that at his leaving Rome he settled a Correspondence by Cypher with the said Ellis, and acquainted him from time to time how the Pretender's Affairs went on here: but the Committee observe, that this general Answer does by no means account for the Terms of Thankfulness and Respect, with which ^a Ellis writes to him from the Pretender, nor lay a sufficient Foundation for his being admitted to so particular a Trust. He said that in the Course of his Correspondence, he writ to Ellis that he had got acquainted with Bursford and Symms (by the first of which Names he meant Lord Orrery, and by the latter Lord North and Grey) and that if he had but Blank Receipts, under the King's (meaning the Pretender's) own Hand, he believed he could raise a considerable Sum of Money upon them, and put the Pretender's Affairs in a great Forwardness, by engaging a considerable Part of the King's Army in the Pretender's Interest, with the Money so raised. That he did not name any particular Sum to Ellis, but hoped himself to have raised twenty Thousand Pounds by this Method. He said he received from Ellis only the ten Receipts taken among his Papers at Mrs. Mason's, that he received them at different times by the Post, and that the first of them came to his Hands the latter End of July last. He said farther, he intended to have tried to put off these Receipts among the Norfolk Gentlemen named in the List which he gave to the Pretender, but that he never had spoke to any of them on this Subject, nor received any Assurance from them.

Being asked by the Committee whether he had shewn these Receipts to any other Persons, or had any Discourse with any Body about raising Money this way? he said, he believed he had mentioned to Lord North and Grey and Lord Orrery, his having such Receipts in his Possession; and that the said Lords told him, they believed they would be of little Use, for that People would scarce venture to keep such Receipts by them, or to have them in their Custody, or Words to that Effect.

The Committee take Notice, That when he was examined before the Lords, he prevaricated in relation to the Cypher received from Sir William Ellis, which he said was an old Cypher, in use before the Preston Rebellion. But being shewn the Names of several Persons in that ^b Cypher, with the addition of their Employments, which they did not enjoy at the time of that Rebellion, nor some of them till very lately, he said that he applied to Plunket for such Names as were not in the old Cypher; tho' the Committee observe, that the whole Cypher is in the same Hand with the Letters he owned he received from Ellis, and that the Persons designed by late Employments are not added or interlined, but placed in their Alphabetical Order in the Body of the Cypher. Being asked by the Committee, whether he had seen or knew of any other Cyphers, he answered in the Negative; yet they observe that in the ^c Letter from Sir William Ellis dated the 1st of October, he desired to make use of a Pattern of Lace of Mrs. Kinders, (which Name he owned to the Lords to mean Mrs. Hughes, Nurse to the Pretender's Child) Sir William Ellis having lost or mislaid his own. Now the Word Pattern in Ellis's Cypher denotes Cut-Paper, which shews that Layer was privy to another Cypher of that Kind, in use among the Pretender's Agents.

He likewise denied his knowing any fictitious Names made use of by the Pretender or his Agents for carrying on their Correspondences, except those mentioned in his Examinations before the Lords; yet afterwards, upon being asked by the Committee, who was meant by Joseph in Dillon's ^d Letter to Plunket, he confessed that he knew Joseph was one of the Names made use of to denote the Pretender.

The Committee farther observe, that the Accounts he has given, do by no means clear up several Passages in Sir William Ellis's Letters, particularly one in the ^e Letter of the 30th of Jan. in which Ellis says, 'That Layer having read over several times the Paper he shewed him, and having a good Memory, Ellis does not think it necessary to send a Copy of it.'

Layer being questioned by the Committee about the Lists of Names taken at Mrs. Mason's, says he employed George Wilson and Dr. Murphey to enquire into the Characters of Officers and Soldiers, and that he received most of the Lists from Wilson, who told him, he believed if the late Duke of Ormond were to come over, and Lord Cadogan were shot, the Soldiers mentioned in those Lists, would readily joyn Ormond in favour of the Pretender.

That Wilson made most of the Marks against the Names, to explain what Men might or might not be confided in; from which Circumstance your Committee observe, that there were Persons in those Lists whom the Pretender's Friends could not confide in. He told the Committee, that Roath or Roach in the ^f List N^o 15, against whose Name is set 1000, is one whom he does not know; but that Murphey told him the said Roath or Roach, was a Person of great Interest in Staffordshire, and able to raise a thousand Men. That the ^g Paper N^o 11, at the Bottom of which is writ Enquire of North and Grey, was a Memorandum for enquiring of the said Lord whether he knew Cornet Redding in the Service abroad.

Being shewn the two Lists endorsed ^h Briquet's List, and ⁱ Lord Yarmouth's List, he says Briquet is an eminent Tobacconist in the City; that the said two Lists only contain Names of a Jury for a Relation's Cause, but that he intended to shew those two Lists to Lord Orrery and Lord North and Grey, as containing an account of Men to be raised for the Pretender's Service, in order to magnify to those Lords the Number of the Pretender's Friends.

Being asked by the Committee what was the Occasion of his taking away his Papers from Mrs. Mason's, when he went down to Epping, and what Papers he at that time took out? he said, he only took out a Paper containing a Transcript of the Prince of Orange's Declaration, and some other Memorandum Papers. He farther added, that he was to have gone to Lord North and Grey's to Dinner the Day that he was taken up, and that he sent his Servant to the said Lord's, to let him know he was arrested for High-Treason, that his Lordship might not be surpris'd at his not coming, and likewise that his Lordship might provide for his own Security: and before the ^a Lords he said, That he thought it reasonable to send this Notice to Lord North and Grey, apprehending that the Government would seize the said Lord immediately, on Account of what had passed between his Lordship and him.

It appears to your Committee, that Lord North and Grey did, in pursuance of this Message from Layer, endeavour to provide for his own Security, by making his Escape. Layer sent that Message to Lord North and Grey on Tuesday the 18th of September; the Day that he was taken into Custody; and Hugh Floyd, his Lordship's Servant who attended him to Portsmouth, ^b has declared, that Lord North and Grey came to Town from Epping on Wednesday the 19th of September (which was the Day after his receiving this Message from Layer.) That his Lordship did not go to his own House, but to the King's Arms Tavern in Paul's Church-yard, and there dismissed him, Floyd, with Orders to meet him at four in the Morning on the Friday following, over-against St. James's Church in Picadilly. That his Lordship came at the Time and Place appointed, in a hired Coach and Six, without Servants, and ordered the Coachman to drive on to Kensington, and then to Brentford, and so on from Town to Town, and bid him, Hugh Floyd, have nothing to say to any Body, nor take any Notice that he was travelling with his Lordship; so that in the whole Journey to Portsmouth, he remembered no Town but Kensington, Brentford and Egham. That the second Morning his Lordship proceeded on his Journey, with hired Saddle-Horses, without Boots, with a Guide and several other minute Circumstances, which may be seen in the ^c Examination of Hugh Floyd, and ^d others, in relation to his Lordship's Journey to the Isle of Wight, and to the manner of his endeavouring to escape from thence; which serve to shew the Precipitancy of his Lordship's Flight, and of what Importance he thought it to take Advantage as soon as possible of the Notice given him by Layer.

Layer being asked by the Committee from whom he received the ^e Names found in his own Hand-writing among his Papers, viz.

Digby. — Dillon.
Orrery. — Burford.
Regent. — Steele.
Tories. — Tanners.
Whigs. — Waggs.
Rogers. — Plunket.

said, the Names of some Persons whom he had Occasion to mention in his Letters to Sir William Ellis, not being inserted in the Cypher he had from Ellis, he applied to Plunket now in Custody, to know by what Names he should denote those Persons, and that Plunket gave him the six fictitious Names above-mentioned; which Names the Committee find frequently repeated in Plunket's Letters and Papers. Being asked if Plunket ever explained to him who were meant by Burford's Club (an Expression which is often used by Plunket in his Letters to Dillon, as will be observed in its Place) he said, that Plunket had told him, it was an Appellation made use of by the Pretender and his Agents, to denote a Club of Tory Lords and others, of which Club Lord Orrery was Chairman. That Plunket had named to him several Persons of Distinction, as Members of that Club, whose Names Layer repeated to the Committee, as contained in his ^f Examination, annexed to this Report. But the Committee think it a Justice due to several of the Persons named by Layer, to observe, that the Matters asserted of Burford's Club in Plunket's Letters, seem utterly inconsistent with the known Characters of some of those Persons.

Layer being asked by the Committee, whether he ever was employed by Plunket to transact Business with this or any other Club, in Plunket's Absence (which appears to the Committee to be asserted in ^g one of Plunket's Letters) he absolutely deny'd it; but admitted that he went often to visit Lord Orrery, and had frequent Conversations with him relating to the Pretender's Affairs, and the necessity of foreign Assistance. And that Mr. Swortfegger, Lord Orrery's Secretary, came to him once and told him, that Lord Orrery had left a Note in Writing, that if Layer came to Town, he should come down to Lord Orrery's in the Country, which Invitation he understood to be with an Intention of their discoursing more at leisure about the Pretender's Affairs, having never had any Business with Lord Orrery in the way of his Profession, nor any other private Business, that could give Occasion to such a Message; but that he did not go down at that Time.

The Committee observe, that a ^h Paper of Memorandums was taken in the Book-Cafe of Swortfegger, Secretary to Lord Orrery, which he declared to the Lords on his Examination, to be Lord Orrery's own writing, in which the Message to Layer is contained, and Swortfegger ⁱ owned, that he delivered this Message to Layer, and that he had sometimes seen Layer at his Lordship's House.

Layer being shewn by the Committee a ^k Letter taken among his Papers, signed J. Plunket and dated the 8th of November, 1720, owned that he received that Letter in Norfolk from Plunket now in Custody; that it relates to the Pretender's Affairs; that by Plunket's Friend in the said Letter is meant, as he believeth, Dillon, and by his Law-suit, the Pretender's Cause; in which Sense the Committee find the Word Law-suit frequently made use of in others of the intercepted Letters. Layer farther owned that Plunket gave his Wife a Letter of Recommendation to General Dillon, when she went to Paris, which Letter was signed Rogers.

Being asked by the Committee, whether Plunket had any Conferences with the Pretender or his Agents, during their Stay at Rome, or had owned to him his being employed by the Pretender in England, he said that Plunket had two private Conferences with the Pretender, and conversed often with Francis Kennedy, Secretary to the Pretender, and with others of his Agents at Rome. That Plunket has frequently owned to him, that he was employed in the Pretender's Affairs, but never explained to him by which of the Pretender's Agents particularly; and that he, Layer, never opened himself to Plunket in relation to the Pretender's Affairs, after their Return from Rome.

Yet the Committee observe, that Plunket in his ^l Letters to Dillon, speaks frequently of himself as privy to Layer's treasonable Transactions, and grounds his ^a Recommendation of Mrs. Layer, on his Knowledge of her Husband's Merit and Industry in the Service of the Pretender.

They likewise observe, that Layer owns he received the Names of Digby, Burford, &c. from Plunket since his Return from Rome, which they think plainly implies, that Plunket and he were privy to each other's treasonable Correspondence.

The several Particulars above-mentioned contain the Substance of what Layer confessed on his Examinations before the Lords, and before your Committee. And after this long Account given by him, in which there appear so many and such convincing Proofs of the Conspiracy in general, your Committee think it proper to observe, that though he affected a great Openness and Frankness, when such Questions were put to him as tended only to a general Discovery, to accuse himself, or such as he knew were escaped and fled out of the Kingdom, yet when such Questions were put to him, as he apprehended might affect or discover any others of the Conspirators, he always gave Answers with great Shyness and Reserve: and this Care to say as little as possible that might affect others in a criminal Way, joined with a Desire to seem candid and ingenuous, often produced the Inconsistencies and Contradictions, upon which the Committee have thought it their Duty to make the foregoing Observations.

Your Committee will now proceed to lay before you what they have been able to collect from the Papers and Examinations of John Plunket, whose treasonable Practices and Correspondences, as has been observed before, appear to be so closely connected with those of Layer, that they give great Light and Confirmation to each other.

The Committee observe, from a careful Perusal of the Letters and Cyphers seized at Plunket's Lodgings, that he not only of late, but for many Years past, has been employed in carrying on several treasonable Correspondences with Persons of high Rank and Distinction abroad; that a very great Share of Confidence has been placed in him by the Pretender, and several of the most considerable Agents for him, and that he has been a principal Actor in the late horrid Conspiracy, and too much, as they have Reason to believe, concerned in the blackest Part of it. And tho' the Evidence against him, in several Particulars, is most full and undeniable, yet his Behaviour on his Examination was so hardened and obstinate, and attended with such bare-faced Prevarications and Falshoods, that the Committee are very much confirmed in the Opinion of his Guilt, from the Pains he took to deny with solemn Imprecations the most evident Truths.

Layer ^b confessed to the Lords, that Plunket recommended Wilson to him as a Man of Integrity; that Plunket went by the Name of Rogers in Italy and since; and ^c signed the Letter which he gave Mrs. Layer for General Dillon, by the Name of Rogers. But the Committee observe, that Layer let them remain in the Error of believing that Plunket's Christian Name was James, till the Question was put to him, on his second Examination, in such a Manner, that he found the Committee was already apprized of his true Name, which he then owned to be John. He farther owned, as has been observed above, that Plunket received a Letter under the Pretender's own Hand at Rome, was twice in private Conference with the Pretender, conversed with Kennedy and other Agents of the Pretender, had assured him, Layer, of a good Reception at Rome, was kindly spoken of by the Pretender, had owned to Layer his being employed in the Pretender's Service, and his corresponding with Dillon, writ to Layer in Norfolk, in relation to the Pretender's Affairs, and gave Layer fictitious Names for Dillon, Lord Orrery, the Regent, &c. and among the rest, the Name of Rogers, to denote him, Plunket; which fictitious Names the Committee find all of them frequently used in Plunket's Papers.

It appears farther to the Committee from ^d Depositions upon Oath of Matthew Plunket, that John Plunket came to him in July last from Layer, to desire him to meet Layer at the Italian Coffee-house in Russel-Court, and named to him the same Persons, as ready to head an Insurrection, who were at some other time named to the said Matthew Plunket by Layer on the same Occasion.

That he ^e farther ask'd Matthew Plunket, whether he was well acquainted in the Army among the Soldiers? to which he replied he knew many of them that had been with him in Spain and at Preston. That John Plunket then told him, he came from Mr. Layer, and under the Arch going into Drury Lane, desired him to pick out as many Serjeants as he knew in the Guards to recommend them to Mr. Layer. That the next time he saw Matthew Plunket, which was in two or three Days, he invited him to his Chambers, and there told him Mr. Layer was a very good Man, and the only one he could depend on to do him Service: That the Design on which he, Matthew Plunket, was to introduce the Soldiers to Layer's Acquaintance, was to serve the Pretender by disciplining the Mob, who were to rise in his Favour. And that all the Transactions of John Plunket, with him, Matthew Plunket, were, to engage him in Person, and by his Acquaintance among the Soldiers, to serve the Pretender: That John Plunket meeting him afterwards in Covent-Garden, asked him what he had done, to which he replied, he went on very well, and John Plunket bid him go and tell Mr. Layer.

Matthew Plunket farther deposes that John Plunket told him, the Business (meaning the Invasion and Rebellion) had been done before, but that the French Ambassador wrote to the Regent, and the Regent wrote it to King George (or words to that effect) and it was upon that account the Army was sent to Camp.

Dr. Blackerby Fairfax has ^f deposed upon Oath, that being in Company with Plunket and one Jeffereys, Jeffereys among other Discourse said, Plunket, give the Doctor a Commission, adding, Plunket has Commissions, which Fairfax understood to mean Commissions from the Pretender; but that Plunket answered, the Doctor does not wear a Sword.

The Committee observe, that among Plunket's Papers was found a large ^g Cypher of Names with fictitious Names over-against them, ^h sworn to be all in Plunket's own Hand-writing, which Cypher tallies with, and explains an original ⁱ Letter of the 23d of July 1722, directed to Mr. Digby at Paris, and signed J. Rogers, which was stopt at the Post-Office, and is likewise ^a sworn to be Plunket's Hand-writing. And several other Letters directed to Digby, and signed J. Rogers, having likewise been opened and copied at the Post-Office, and then sent forwards, the Clerks who were employed in copying them have sworn, that, to the best of their Memory and Belief, the Originals of the said Letters were all writ in the same Hand with that of the 23d of July, which was stopped, and is sworn to be Plunket's Hand-writing; and the said Copies of Letters, treat of the same Matters as the other, and contain the same fictitious Names which are found in the Cypher sworn to be in Plunket's Hand-writing.

The Committee are informed, that it was thought proper to stop but one of the original Letters from Plunket, and to suffer the others to go on, because it was judged that one was sufficient to discover the Writer, and that the Permitting the Correspondence to be continued, might help the Government to farther Lights in this Affair.

The Committee likewise observe, that there was found among his Papers an ^b original Letter signed Digby, dated the 20th of May 1722, which is sworn by the Clerks of the Post-Office to be the same which they opened and took a Copy of, and which was directed to Mr. James Rogers, at Mr. Arthur's Banker in London, tho' the Direction is since torn off. From this Direction your Committee observe, that his Christian Name was disguised as well as his Surname. The Receipt of this Letter is acknowledged in the ^c Copy of one to Digby signed J. Rogers, and dated the 21st of May O. S. 1722.

The Committee observe, that the original Letter signed Digby, is in the same Hand with ^d another signed Dixwell, found also among Plunket's Papers, and owned by Layer to be the very Letter shewn him by Plunket at Antwerp, as from General Dillon; that the Letter signed Digby is also in the same Hand with ^e another Letter signed A. D. and directed to Robert Dillon Esq; which, as your Committee are informed, was taken on one Blunt a Popish Priest coming over from France, and owned by Blunt to be from General Dillon to his Nephew. And the Committee farther observe, that these three Letters signed Digby, Dixwell and A. D. are in the same Hand with ^f another signed C. Howell, found also among Plunket's Papers, which Name of Howell is explained in Plunket's ^g Cypher to mean Glasgow, whom the Committee see Reason to believe to be Christopher Glascock, an Irish Officer in Dillon's Regiment, who appears to be employ'd by Dillon in writing the treasonable Letters signed by Dillon himself, as well as in writing others of the same Kind, signed by fictitious Names belonging to him Glascock.

The Committee observe, that in the ^h Copy of the Letter, signed J. Rogers directed to Digby, and dated the 5th of July 1722, the Person who writ that Letter, says, that his Fellow-Traveller's Wife parted hence the Day before for Paris, and that he gave her a Letter to him, Digby: which agrees with Layer's ⁱ Confession that Plunket did give Mrs. Layer a Letter of Recommendation to Dillon, signed Rogers, and that he received from Plunket the Name of Digby to denote General Dillon, which Name was also ^k confirmed to Layer by Lord Orrery to mean Dillon. But that Dillon went by the Name of Digby is put past all doubt, by a Discovery made by Mr. Craufurd, his Majesty's Resident at Paris, who being ordered to discover the Person meant by that Name, made use of the following Contrivance, mentioned thus in his own ^l Letter.

^m I have just now found out, who Mr. Digby is. ⁿ I folded up a Paper in the Form of a Letter, and ^o sealed it, and directed it to Mr. Digby at Paris, ^p then wrapt it up in a Piece of waste Paper ^q with a Memorandum in it, to be informed at ^r Mr. Waters's, Banker in Christine Street, in what ^s Part of Paris Mr. Digby lived; I gave it thus ^t made up to a sharp young Fellow who speaks ^u both French and English, and ordered him to go ^v booted and a little dirtied to Mr. Waters's, to ^w open before him the sham Letter and read his ^x Memorandum, and to shew him the Direction ^y of the Letter, and to desire him at the same time ^z to send somebody with him, to conduct him to ^{aa} the Place where it was to be delivered; that as ^{ab} soon as he should come to the Door, where he ^{ac} was to deliver it, he should pretend to have ^{ad} left a Packet at Home, and making as if he ^{ae} would go back to fetch that Packet, he should ^{af} slip away from the Person who shewed him thi- ^{ag} ther. The thing succeeded better than I expected, ^{ah} for Waters was not at home, and my Man acted ^{ai} his part so well, that Waters's chief Book keeper, ^{aj} without giving himself the trouble of going, ^{ak} wrote the Direction for him upon my Sham ^{al} Letter, in the manner your Excellency will see ^{am} in the enclosed. The Book-keeper was very de- ^{an} sires to have the Letter in order to deliver it ^{ao} himself, but my Man insisted to deliver it with ^{ap} his own Hand, and answered boldly to some ^{aq} Questions which the Book-keeper asked him, ^{ar} pretending he was to return the next Day for ^{as} England.^{at} The Direction writ by Mr. Waters's ^{au} Book-keeper under the Name of Digby was, A ^{av} Monsieur Dillon, Rue Colombier à l'Hotel d' ^{aw} Hollande; which, as your Committee are informed, ^{ax} is the ordinary Residence of Lieutenant-General ^{ay} Dillon.

Upon this Discovery ^{ba} Notice was sent from France, by Dillon and his Agents, to his Correspondents in England, to forbid them making use any more of that fictitious Name, as shall be more fully taken Notice of hereafter in this Report.

Notwithstanding all this Evidence of Plunket's corresponding with Dillon, when he was examined, ^{bb} he denied his knowing General Dillon, or his having ever exchanged a Letter with Dillon, or his Secretary in his Life; he denied the Letter to Digby of the 23d of July, stopped at the Post-Office, and the Cypher found at his Lodgings to be his own Hand-writing; he denied the Receipt of the Letters from Howell, Dixwell and Digby, found among his Papers; but owned he had once received a Letter from one Farely a Popish Priest, formerly Governor to the Duke of Berwick's Children, signed by the Name of Digby, and relating to Stocks of Nicholas Wogan's and others. The Committee observe that in this prevaricating Answer he was labouring to account for the Meaning of the Word Stocks, which is mention'd in the Letter from Digby, but will be shewn in the Sequel of this Report, to be meant in a very different Sense from its natural Import, and to mean the Conspiracy only; and in Plunket's own ^a Cypher the fictitious Word Brokers, is explained Agents. Upon pressing him farther to see if he would own the Correspondence with Dillon, and acknowledge the Letters the Committee had such full Evidence were his, they found that, in order to avoid the owning it, he run himself into such an evident Absurdity and Inconsistency, as appears to them a strong Argument of his Guilt.

^b He affirm'd the Cypher (which is sworn to be his own Hand-writing) to belong to one Hugh Thomas, formerly of the Herald's-Office, who had lodged in the same House with himself; that he had heard this Hugh Thomas own in Company with Neynoe, that he corresponded with Dillon; that Hugh Thomas went by the Name of Rogers, and that he, Plunket, found this Cypher and several Letters directed to Rogers, among Hugh Thomas's old Books and Papers. Being asked whether Hugh Thomas ever signed Plunket, he said, not to his Knowledge; and then he endeavoured to impose on the Committee, by telling them his own true Name was Plucknett. Being asked what was become of this Thomas, he said, he had been dead a Year and a Half, and that he, Plunket, could not keep him alive. But the Committee observe, that the original Letter to Digby, signed J. Rogers, is dated the 23d of July last, and yet is in the same Hand with that Cypher, which he pretends to be the Writing of a Man, who has been dead a Year and a Half. They observe likewise, that the Letter from Digby directed to Rogers is dated the 20th of May 1722, and that most of the Letters directed to Rogers (which Plunket pretends were writ to Hugh Thomas) had the Name of Rogers blotted out, and that of John Plunket writ over it; and yet he owns, he never knew, that Thomas went by the Name of Plunket: Besides which it is notorious, that Plunket himself went by the Name of Rogers in Italy, and Layer has ^c owned not only that Plunket went by that Name, but that he signed Mrs. Layer's Letter of Recommendation to Dillon, by the Name of Rogers, and also gave him, Layer, the Name of Rogers to denote himself, at the same Time that he gave him the Name of Digby for General Dillon.

Your Committee are of Opinion, that these Circumstances laid together leave no room to doubt but that Plunket writ and received the Letter above-mentioned; the Contents of which will be explained in their Place.

Plunket being shewn a ^d Letter without Direction, signed N. Wogan, enclosing a ^e Cypher, which is called in the Letter the Duke of Berwick's Key, he said, this Letter and Cypher likewise belong'd to Hugh Thomas, who, he said, corresponded with the Duke of Berwick about getting Subscriptions to a Book; which Matter, the Committee observe, neither needed any Cypher, nor could well be treated of by the Help of that. They likewise take Notice, that Plunket owned the receiving a Letter from Digby in relation to the said Wogan's Stocks, and that Wogan is inserted in Plunket's own ^f Cypher by the Name of Xoland, which Circumstances make it probable he did correspond with Wogan.

There is one farther Particular relating to this Cypher, which the Committee think it proper to remark to the House, which is, that Plunket while he was in Custody, desired a certain Book might be brought to him from his Lodgings, but the Messenger's Wife, searching the Book before she deliver'd it, has ^g deposed upon Oath, that she found in it this Letter from N. Wogan. And as the Committee are informed, that most of his other Cyphers and Papers were found hid in the Leaves of his Books, they think it probable, that he singled out this Book in hopes of recovering and destroying the Cypher that serves to explain his Letters; the Contents of which the Committee will now proceed to lay before the House, and to avoid Repetition of Names, where-ever they can, will make use of the real Names found in his Cypher, instead of the fictitious ones, by which they are expressed in his Letters annexed to this Report.

Among his Papers was found the ^h foul Draught of a Letter, dated March the 22d, 1721, and directed to Mr. Jackson, which in his own ⁱ Cypher is explained the Pretender. In this foul Draught (which is sworn to be his Hand-writing) are the following Passages.

' I look, Sir, on your Law-Suit to be in such a Forwardness, that a speedy and happy Replication must inevitably ensue; the Waggs, as well as the Tanners (which Names he explained to ^j Layer to denote the Whigs and Tories) seem convinc'd that nothing less can redress their Ruin: Nay the latter is apprehensive the former will compliment you with it on your own Terms, in order to engross your Favour for the future. The Precepts my Friend and I gave in lately, have contributed much to this Emulation: We have more to give in; and if they improve them as they have the former, you will have a good Game on't.' The Words Replication and Precepts are not found in his Cypher, but the Sense of the former may easily be guessed at.

He afterwards adds; ' The Gentleman I mentioned to you formerly, is come out of the Country, with Instructions to wait on you, and tender you his Service; he offers to bear my Expences if I go with him: As I take it that my going will be of more use than my staying now, I believe I shall accept of his Offer.' In ^k another foul Draught of the same Letter, he says (as has been before observed) ' There is one sets out from Norfolk in a few Days, to let you know the Tanners will stand by you on Occasion, and offers to bear my Expences; so that I shall wait on you, and have the Satisfaction to tell you by word of Mouth what will be acceptable. He carries the List with him.' And in ^l Heads or Minutes of the same Letter, he says, ' Wag and Tanner will equally concur. — My Friend will wait on you to tender their Service — Our Messager will pin the Basket — You may have daily Messages of this Kind; you will be courted, 'tis the English Way —' and how strongly they contradict Plunket's bold ^a Affeuration, that he knew nothing of Layer's intending to go to Rome, before they set out.

The Committee think it unnecessary to repeat here, how inconsistent these Accounts of Layer's Journey, are with ^m those given by Layer himself;

^b Another foul Draught of a Letter was found among Plunket's Papers, and is sworn to be his Hand-writing; the Matter of which appears to your Committee very remarkable. It is not dated nor directed, but appears plainly to have been writ the Beginning of the last Year, and in it are the following Passages. 'I had four of Count Botbmar's Letters since my last to you; Mr. Burford had them all; his Clerk gave me to understand they were sent to Mr. Jof— This made me not to trouble you. This only to wish you a happy new Year. I hope it will bring the Law-Suit to bear, afore 'twill end; if they would have Courage and Integrity, they may walk K. George out afore Lady-day next—' (and in another Part he says, afore May come) 'He is weary of them, and thinks no more of staying among them.' It appears from this Paper, that Plunket had conveyed Copies of some Letters of Count Botbmar's to Lord Orrery; that Lord Orrery's Clerk had given him to understand, those Letters were sent to the Pretender (from whence it may be concluded, that either Lord Orrery or his Clerk had a direct Correspondence with the Pretender) and that Plunket was privy to some Design for walking K. George out (as he calls it) which Design required Courage and Integrity, and was to have been executed either before Lady-day, which was during the Elections, or by the Beginning of May, which was the second Period fixed (as has been observed) for beginning the Infurrection. Simon Swortfegger, Secretary to Lord Orrery, owned upon his ^c Examination before the Lords, that he was acquainted with Plunket, and had been in company with him and Layer at Mr. Aaron Thompson's Chambers. And Plunket ^d owned to the Committee his being acquainted with Swortfegger, and his having been in company with him and Layer, at Layer's House; but denied his knowing any thing of the foul Draughts of the Letters abovementioned.

Plunket in his ^e Letter to Digby of the 21st of May, says, 'I hope in a little Time Mr. Josepb (which Layer owned to be the Pretender) will be the Ministry's only Refuge. Burford (whom Layer declared likewise to be Orrery) and his Club seem to think so: They will have a Finger in the Pye if they can; I know they can come in for a good Share in it, if they can have a little Concert and Regulation; there are those that will undertake to do the Job in twelve Hours Time. A little Time will shew whether they will give fitting Encouragement; if two or three are taken off, no matter how, King George will go off by hook or by crook, and of course the Lowty will be for Josepb: This has been communicated to your Friends.'

What is meant by the Lowty, does not appear by his Cypher; but by the Sense, and the alphabetical Order of the Cypher, it is not improbable but it may mean the Ministry.

Whether the Job that was ready to be undertaken on fitting Encouragement, and to be performed in twelve Hours Time, relates to the rash Enterprize for surprizing the City of London, which has been already taken Notice of, or to the wicked and execrable Design for seizing and destroying his Majesty's Sacred Person, of which mention is expressly made in ^f two subsequent Letters of Plunket's, is left to the Consideration of the House.

But the Committee, from comparing the Memorandum at the End of the ^g Paper of Resolutions, in the following Characters Dis. C. W. M. with the two or three that are mentioned in this Letter to be taken off, and likewise with Wilson's Intimation to Layer, that if Lord Cadogan were but shot, the Soldiers would declare for Ormond; and also with Layer's Negotiation about seizing Lord Cadogan, and with the Paragraph in his Scheme for seizing some great Persons at their Houses, see Reason to believe, that by the first of those Characters is meant Dispatch Lord Cadogan; and by the others, two other Officers of Distinction.

In the same ^h Letter of the 21st of May, Plunket takes Notice, 'That Johnson, an Acquaintance, was taken up the Day before, but had burnt his Papers, and seemed to be easy in the Matter; and adds, I believe they will get nothing by him.'

Plunket being asked by the Committee, whether he was acquainted with George Kelly, alias Johnson, said he knew him by Sight and Coffee-house Acquaintance only; that he did not remember his having ever received a Letter from him; and Kelly gave the same ⁱ Account in relation to Plunket: Yet a ^k Letter from Kelly was found among Plunket's Papers; and John Malone, who waited on Kelly at his Lodgings, has named Plunket in his ^l Deposition, as one who often visited Kelly there. And the Committee are satisfied, that they were privy to each other's treasonable Correspondence, by some Passages in the ^m Letters to and from Kelly, in which mention is made of Plunket by the Name of Rogers, as will be shewn in its proper Place. Plunket concludes his Letter of the 21st of May with these Words: 'The Motive of my Journey is over at present, my Pocket feels it, the Man must be fed with Money now and then; the labouring Oar will, I believe, be laid on me.'

As he denied the writing these Letters, the Committee could not draw from him any Explanation of this Paragraph; but comparing it with the other Part of his Letter, where it is said, that a little Time will shew whether Burford (Lord Orrery) and the Club, would give fitting Encouragement for undertaking the Job; they think it appears probable, that some part in this Job is the labouring Oar referred to, for which he expected to be fed with Money.

His next ⁿ Letter to Digby is of the 31st of May, in which he says, 'He finds the Regent had a Hand in keeping K. George from going Abroad, so that the Ministry will carry on their Game safely and leisurely without any Opposition whatever from the Club, or any of the Pretender's Friends.' He adds, 'Let them be ever so sanguine, they can do nothing as long as the Regent stands by the Ministry: But should Ormond come, with half a dozen Regiments only he would carry his Point, and make K. George run for it.' This Passage confirms what hath been set forth above, that the late Duke of Ormond's coming over made a Part of the Original Scheme, and agrees with the ^o Accounts received from Spain, of Irish Soldiers provided there for the Pretender's Service.

Plunket then adds, 'If Burford (Lord Orrery) and the Club have a mind to have K. George delivered up to them he shall; there are those that will undertake it, and offer to do whatever required.' And in his ^a Letter of the 4th of July he says, '—I can assure you, Despair has made some to take a Resolution to lay violent Hands on K. George; but there is a Stop put to them at present: It is not the Pretender's Interest, but you can't do so always; an ill Precedent is dangerous.'

The black and villainous Design expressed by these two Paragraphs, needs no Explication from your Committee, who are sensible the House cannot have heard them read, without the utmost Horror and Indignation.

He speaks of himself in these Letters as knowing the Men, who had taken a Resolution to lay violent Hands on the sacred Person of his Majesty; and was himself so far engaged in this execrable Design, as to say in one of his Letters, If the Club desire it, His Majesty shall be delivered up into their Hands: And in another Letter dissuades it, not out of any Conscience or Remorse for the Crime, but merely for fear the same Barbarity should be retaliated on the Pretender: Yet this Man still continues so hardened and obstinate, as to renew his Guilt by refusing to make the least Discovery of his Accomplices, or to give this only Reparation and Atonement he is capable of, to a Country which he has been labouring to involve in the greatest Calamities.

He afterwards ^b says, 'That tho' there should be a Rising in most Parts, if the Mob is beat in one Place, the rest will go home and be quiet for seven Years more.'

His next ^c Letter is of the 21st of June: In this he says, 'That Burford and the Club think themselves slighted by the Regent and Ministry of France; and conceive, that the Regent joins with King George to be revenged on them. That he may have room to repent it early or late; for should the Parliament be broke, and a new one called, he might find himself more embarrassed than he is aware of.' He adds, 'If the Regent stands neuter, they will soon bring the Law-Suit to bear; so far I am satisfied of it, that four or five hundred Men, and as many Arms, with 1500 l. will complete the Matters in a little Time, and give a good Account of King George and the Ministry. The Army want only an Opportunity to do their Duty. This Scheme, if duly and discreetly managed, will give them an Opportunity to do it. Were we sure the Regent would not interpose, we would take it in hand forthwith.'

The Committee make no doubt but the House has prevented them, in observing how exactly this Letter agrees with the ^d Accounts sent some Time before from France; that the Conspirators reckoned on great Part of the King's own Forces; and only desired the Regent that he would keep himself neuter between the Pretender and his Majesty. And this Letter appears to have been writ at the Time when Layer, Wilson, Murphey and Plunket were labouring to corrupt the Officers and Soldiers of the Army.

Plunket adds in the same Letter, 'If the Regent and Court of Spain will but ply K. George with large Demands, and bring the Czar down to Hanover, the Pretender will have a Carte Blanche from the Ministry and King George, as also from all the rest of his Friends and Foes: This I take to be the best and safest Way, both for the Pretender and his Wellwishers.'

This Expression of the Pretender's getting a Carte Blanche from the King and Ministry, is repeated several Times in Plunket's Letters; and however extravagant and ill-founded such Suggestions were, yet the Committee cannot but observe, that his Representations appear to have met with such a Spirit of Credulity and Delusion in the Pretender and his Agents, that not long after he was vain enough to entertain Hopes of capitulating with his Majesty for the Crown, by that traitorous and insolent Declaration, against which both Houses have so lately expressed their just Resentment and Abhorrence.

Plunket's next ^e Letters are of the 4th and 5th of July, 1722; in which he has the Vanity to tell Dillon, 'That he had been desired, by some leading Members of the then Parliament, to acquaint the Regent's Agent here, that it was now in the Power of the Regent and Spain, to send away King George, and to send home Mr. Jof. with a bonne grace, and much to their Advantage; that it was only to insist on the Stipulation King George had made with them, and they would have a fair Pretence to do it.'

It appears by other Passages, that this supposed Stipulation relates to the Cession of Gibraltar.

He afterwards gives an Account, 'That he did, both on the 4th and 5th of July, wait on the Regent's Agent with this Message; and says, That as that Agent was acquainted with some of the Members of Parliament who employed him, he gave some Attention to him: But the Objections which the Regent's Agent made, appear to have been, That the Pretender had not the Name of a Man of great Parts or Resolution: That he had hitherto no great Opinion of Burford and the Club; and that such a Procedure on the Part of the Regent, would be a Violation of the bonne Foy. To which last Plunket replied, That it would be no Breach of their bonne Foy to be grateful to those who were their Deliverers formerly.' However, Plunket says, 'He convinced the Agent, that it was now in the Regent's Power to make the Ministry and King George give the Pretender a Carte Blanche; and by so doing, to make the Emperor vomit up what he has now in Flanders, without striking a Stroke. That the Common People, the Country Party, and all the English Gentlemen might be brought to join with the Regent in proper Measures to do it; or, that if the Regent would but stand neuter, they would soon bring the Pretender's Law-Suit to bear independent on any whatever.' He adds, 'That he is satisfied the Agent would write these Sentiments to his Court; and that it is Dillon's Business to let the Regent see he has the same Sentiments from other People here.'

Plunket being examined by the Committee, in relation to this Letter, ^f owned, he had frequent Access to one of the French Ministers on private Affairs: And that Layer knowing him to be acquainted with him, asked him, Whether he could not find out, by the help of that Minister, whether the Regent might not be brought into Tory Measures? and Stephen Lynch has^a deposed, That Layer told him, Application had been made, either by himself, or some other Person, to one of the French Agents here, to the Effect mentioned in Plunket's Letter. However, Plunket denied his having ever spoke to that Minister in relation to State-Affairs, or his having writ any such Account to France.

The Committee, from comparing this Relation of these two Conversations with what he says in other Letters, of bringing the Czar down to Hanover, in order to oblige his Majesty to withdraw from England; observe, that the Conspirators were so intent on compassing their wicked Designs by any Means, that having failed in their Applications for foreign Assistance, they were now labouring to make France and Spain insist on the Restitution of Gibraltar, to throw Flanders into the Hands of France, and to bring the Czar into Germany, in hopes to involve all Europe in Confusion, and thereby to pave the Way for bringing in the Pretender.

In the same^b Letters he tells Dillon, ' Now is the Time for the Regent and Ministry of France to serve you: If they do not, I can assure them, they may have room to repent it: For the Pretender's Friends will find Means to get into the Saddle, in spite of the Ministry and K. George.'

He adds, ' That the Army, will not stand by the King and Ministry, against the great Bent of the English Gentlemen, the common People, and the Country Party; who are so incens'd against the Court, that the least Accident would surely overturn what they have been doing these seven Years past.'

He then says, ' That his Fellow-Traveler is, and has been very active since his coming from his Travels, and is more serviceable than those who move in a higher Sphere: That he is spurring on the Club daily, and has made many of them more active in the Law-Suit, than they otherwise would have been. That his Wife parted the Day before for Paris; and that he gave her a Letter for Dillon; his Fellow-Traveler thinking himself intitled to it, or any other Civilities Dillon could shew her, during her stay there.' He adds, ' Your Friends continue their Preparation, and resolve to hold themselves in readiness on Occasion.'

The Committee take Notice, that these Letters were writ just about the Time that Layer went down to Norfolk. And they think the sanguine Manner in which Plunket writes, is in part accounted for by what Lord North and Grey^c told Layer, That the Encampment had spoiled the Project: But we shall have them again. And by his Lordship's saying, ' Be you quiet, something will be done: If there be a Rising, you shall not want Men, or Money, or Arms. And that these Letters and Passages make it highly probable, that the Substance of Layer's Scheme had not been only seen, but approved of.

Notwithstanding the Account which Plunket gives in this and other Letters, of Layer's Proceedings, yet Layer denied that he had ever opened himself to Plunket, in relation to the Pretender's Affairs, after their return from Rome; and Plunket affirmed, that he only knew Layer by Coffee-house Acquaintance, and never conversed with him but in the Streets publickly.

Plunket's next^d Letter is of the 23d of July, the Original of which being stopped, and being sworn to be his own Hand-writing, the Committee think it proper to lay the whole before the House, with the Explanation of the fictitious Names taken out of the Cypher, which is sworn to be his own Hand also.

A Monsieur Digby a Paris.

Under a Blank Cover to Waters.

July 23d, 1722.

' BY the Time this comes to hand, King George's Agent will arrive there: I'm glad on't, because I hope all the Negotiations and Proceedings of the Ministry and King George, will be laid before the Parliament, which will be a Means to send him to Hanover. Though he thinks to bring the Country Party to approve of whatever he will propose to the Parliament; he will hardly even bring the Court Party to do it. He thinks to disculpe himself at the Expence of the Dead. This I told some of the Parliament-Men; they say 'twont do for Love or Money. Certain Persons are forming Projects that will distress the Court of Spain, in case of War between Spain and the Emperor. Count Bohmar comes into it by King George's Connivance; 'tis now in Embrio: When it comes to Perfection, I shall be Master on't. I gave a Hint on't to the Regent's Agent; he was not a little surprized at it. They must not linger much longer; if they do, the Emperor and King George will find Means to distress the Court of Spain and the Ministry in France; they must hasten the Peace to prevent it.

' My Companion, who has been in the Country this three Weeks past, came to Town Yesterday: He seems to be sure of his Game, viz. that Mr. Joseph's Friends will run down the Ministry and King George, in a little Time, and bring the Law-Suit to bear on their own Bottom, and independent of the Regent, or any Body else. I am resolved to know nothing of their Proceedings; I am for having every Thing laid before the Parliament first, and then every Body will see we want the Pretender more than he wants us. Both Friend and Foe will join in any Enterprize that will be made in his Favour: Neither will they ever dare upbraid him, if, on any Occasion, he should look askint on 'em hereafter. I hinted often, the only Way to spirit 'em up, was to convince 'em the Law-suit would be brought to bear without them; and that by the Regent, and King George. The Construction they put upon this was, that the former was subtle enough to make use of the Folly of the latter, to play the Game to his own Advantage at our Cost, and that he will govern Mr. Joseph, when here, as he does now King George. This, or some such Imagination, gave them an uncommon Resolution; and I believe they will struggle hard for a Start in the Race of Honour. 'Tis in the Regent's Power to make King George, the Ministry and the Club, to give Mr. Joseph a Carte Blanche: 'Tis incumbent on you to convince him of it. I am sure his Agent here is already; for I gave him this Morning demonstrative Proof, that King George designs to support the Emperor against the French King and his Coss. and that without being seen in it.

I would be glad to know how the Duke of Berwick does, and if he continues there this Summer. I have little to do in Town, so I design to go to the Country for three Weeks. The Town is dull and empty.

We hear the Czar is in Motion, I wish it may be towards Hanover, for King George would soon move from his Country Seat here.

I believe Mr. Joseph will laugh, when he'll hear of the Stratagem I made use of to bring his Friends to so good Temper of Duty. I hope they will keep to it, which is the Wish of,

S I R,

Your humble, obedient Servant,

JO. ROGERS.

In his Letter of the 16th of August, he says, The Pretender's Law-Business continues in the same Plight. My Companion goes on, as he thinks, very successfully, and is confident he will bring the Business to bear in a little Time.

This Letter was writ nine Days before Laver went down to Lord North and Grey's with Lynch.

Plunket says in the same Letter, 'That the Pretender must promise the Regent and Ministry of France fair, and that he will be a fast Friend, when in his Power, and must seem to rely more on them, than any here; that this is the only Game he has to play at this Time.'

In his next Letter of the 23d of August, he says, 'That his Friend came out of the Country a few Days ago, and told him that his Clients seem now to despair of bringing the Law-Business to bear this next Term, except the Regent were made a Party; that he, Plunket, told him, in case the Regent were applied to in a proper Manner, he might be prevailed upon to come into proper Measures, at least indirectly, and that without Breach of the bonne Foy he owes King George or the Ministry.' He adds, 'that they (his Friend's Clients) are for any thing but under their Hands; and that if they should apply to Dillon, or the Regent (as his Companion had told him they soon would) they might safely offer at least to come into their Measures, to stop their Mouths hereafter; And he thinks, with Submission, 'tis pity to hinder them from plunging themselves, as they did before.' He adds, 'That it is in the Power of the Regent and Ministry of France, to make the ensuing Parliament give the Pretender his own Terms and that as the French King is soon to be of Age, he may do every thing with a good Grace and bonne Foy; and settle the Pretender so, that it will always be in his Power to serve him, and the Court of Spain.'

Plunket, who assumes to himself so considerable a Part in these Transactions, being asked by the Committee, to give some Account of his Life and Education, said, that he was born at Dublin, and bred up when a Boy, at the Jesuits College at Vienna; that he is a Roman Catholick, but not in any Orders. And tho' he endeavoured (as has been observed above) by his Dress, Appearance, and Behaviour, to represent himself to the Committee as very inconsiderable, and no ways equal to the Part he was taxed with, yet a great Number of Letters from Persons of the first Quality abroad, were found among his Papers, in which the Committee observe he is treated with great Intimacy and Confidence. And in a Letter from the Lady Middleton, of an old Date, Mention is made of her being to introduce him to the late King James's Queen in France; to whom, as he owned to the Committee, he had been introduced. And that the Trust and Confidence reposed in him, still subsists undiminished, appears to the Committee, not only by his own confessing, that he did walk and converse with the Pretender publickly in his Garden at Rome, but from Laver's Account, that he had two private Conferences with the Pretender; and above all, from the Letter under the Pretender's own Hand, which he shewed to Laver at Rome, and which has been communicated to the Committee, as before-mentioned; in which the Pretender treats him with such Distinction, as to charge him not to mention any Thing of Business to any Body, till he himself had seen him alone; than which, the Committee think a stronger and more convincing Proof of Trust could not well have been given. It appears also by several foul Draughts of Letters taken among his Papers, that he writ directly to the Pretender himself.

Mention being made in Plunket's Letters of Johnson, alias George Kelly, and some Extracts of Letters to and from the said Kelly having been referred to the Committee among Laver's and Plunket's Papers, by which it appeared to them, that Kelly's treasonable Correspondence had a Connexion with the others, and particularly, that he was privy to some of Plunket's Transactions; your Committee thought that their having a general View of all the Papers relating to the Conspiracy, might help to illustrate and explain the several Parts of it, in the same manner as Laver's and Plunket's Papers mutually confirm and give Light to each other.

For this Reason they moved the House to have those Papers laid before them, and to empower them to take such farther Examinations, as might be necessary to lead them on in tracing out the Source of the Treasons enquired into.

Having accordingly perused those Papers, and examined some of the Persons principally concerned in them, they now proceed to lay before you the Result of that Enquiry.

It appears to them, that George Kelly, Clerk, has been of late Years constantly employed in carrying on several treasonable Correspondences and Negotiations between the Pretender's Agents abroad, and Persons of great Distinction at home, tending to the bringing in the Pretender with an armed Force, and to the overturning the present happy Establishment in Church and State.

And here your Committee find themselves obliged to mention the Lord Bishop of Rochester, as principally aiding, directing and employing the said Kelly, in the Prosecution of his treasonable Designs.

As Kelly's Correspondences seem to derive their Weight and Significancy chiefly from his being employed by the Bishop of Rochester, your Committee will first lay before you the several Reasons that induce them to believe he was so employed, and the Part which it appears to them the Bishop has had in this Conspiracy.

It appears to your Committee, from several Informations of Philip Neynoe, Clerk, formerly mentioned, ' That George Kelly, alias Johnson, frequently told him, that the Bishop of Rochester held Correspondences with the Pretender and his Agents: That he, Kelly, was employed by the Bishop, in writing for him, and carrying on the said Correspondences; that Kelly told him, the Pretender relied more on Advices from the Bishop, than from any other Person; that he had several times left Kelly at the Bishop's Door, when Kelly went into the Bishop's House, and staid there an Hour or two, and upon coming back to him, Kelly made Apologies for staying so long, and told him, he had been writing the Bishop's Letters, which he always apprehended to be the Foreign Correspondence of the Bishop with the Pretender's Agents; and that Kelly told him, the Bishop never suffered him to take a Bit of Paper of the Bishop's Hand-writing out of the Room.

' That he knows Letters were directed to Kelly, by the Name of Moses Hancock and Hatfield; and that he has seen at Burton's Coffee-house a Letter to Kelly from Howell, (whom he takes to be Agent or Secretary to Dillon, and employed by Dillon in the same manner as Kelly was by the Bishop of Rochester) in which Letter there were Compliments to the Bishop, by the Name of Naunton, which Name Kelly explained to him to mean the Bishop. That Kelly has told him, the Bishop of Rochester went sometimes by the Name of Jones, that he had likewise heard the Bishop went sometimes by the Name of Illington, which last he was told by Mr. Carte, to the best of his Memory. That in the Letter which Kelly shewed him at Burton's Coffee-house, mention was made of Mansfield, which Kelly explained to him, to mean the late Duke of Ormond. That he has seen several Cyphers in Kelly's Hands, one in Figures, another of fictitious Names, in which last, Carpenters stood for Scotch Soldiers; Sadlers and Sophisters, for Irish Soldiers, and the like; that he has seen Kelly make use of these Cyphers, and that Kelly with great Freedom owned, that these Cyphers were for carrying on the Correspondence with the Pretender's Agents. That he had likewise seen Cyphers in Carte's Hands, who was also employed in writing Dispatches to the Pretender's Agents abroad. That he, Neynoe, had been employed to draw up three several Memorials to the Regent of France, to solicit him to send Forces to the Assistance of the Conspirators, the last of which was in December, 1721, and contained a Demand of five Thousand Men to be sent to invade these Kingdoms; that the Heads of these Memorials were given him by Kelly, and one who went by the Name of Watson, whom he took to be the late Earl Marishal.

' That in March last, Kelly brought him the Heads of a Letter, to be drawn up with a Design of its being intercepted by the Government, in order to amuse them into a false Security. That he drew up the said Letter in a Paper writ Column-ways; that this Paper was brought back to him, corrected by the Bishop of Rochester, as he believed.'

Your Committee are informed this Letter was not intercepted, but that a Copy of it was sent, about that Time, to one of the Secretaries of State, from an unknown Hand.

Neynoe farther declared, ' That the Bishop of Rochester, Lord Orrery, Lord North, and Sir Harry Goring, were the principal Leaders and Directors of the Conspiracy, which was first to have been executed in the Spring of the Year 1722, by seizing the Tower, upon which the late Duke of Ormond was to have landed in the River; that upon the Discovery of the Plot, and the King's not going abroad, it was put off for some Time, but that it was afterwards resumed to be attempted in the West.' Neynoe farther added, ' That Kelly assured him, the Bishop got Notice of his being to be taken up, some Days before it happened; and that this Notice was given the Bishop by one of the Lords of the Council.' But he afterwards confessed, (as your Committee are informed) that in this, and other Examinations, he had endeavoured all he could, to create Diffidence and Suspicions among his Majesty's Servants.

These Informations of Neynoe are contained, great Part of them, in a Paper^b writ with his own Hand, and deliver'd by him to a Committee of Lords of the Council. The other Part is extracted out of^c Papers which he dictated at his several Examinations; which Papers were read to him Paragraph by Paragraph, and agreed to by him before the Lords.

That Neynoe was intimately acquainted with Kelly, visited him often, and sometimes lay at his Lodgings, and thereby had a better Opportunity of being informed by him, appears from the^d Depositions of Stevenson and his Wife, Margaret Kilburn, Landlady to Kelly, and John Malone, Servant to Mrs. Barnes, who waited on Kelly at his Lodgings.

That the Bishop of Rochester was acquainted with Kelly, invited him to dine with him, sent his Servants to enquire after his Health, and wrote to him, appears from^e Stevenson's and Kilburn's Depositions, as also in Part from^h Mrs. Levett's.

But what gives the greatest Weight to the several Particulars contained in Neynoe's Informations, is, that they are corroborated and supported in every material Circumstance, by several concurrent Proofs, as will appear from the Sequel of this Report.

Pancier hasⁱ deposed upon Oath, that Skeene, among other Particulars of the Conspiracy, told him, that the Bishop of Rochester, in Conjunction with the Lord North and Grey, had the principal Direction of the Conspiracy; and that two Hundred Thousand Pounds had been raised, and put into the Management of the Bishop of Rochester, which was called the military Chest, and was to be kept together till the Project was put in Execution.

Your Committee are informed, that when the Bishop was taken into Custody, vast Numbers of Letters and Papers were found in his House, bearing Date before the Year 1712; but from that Time downwards, few of any Consequence, except these which follow.

^k One was from the Dutches of Ormond, dated January 14, 1721. in which are these Words: ' I resolved to send what I received: For tho' it had not happened to belong to the Person I addressed it to, I was sure it could not be put into better Hands.'

^a E. 7.—10.^b E. 7.^c E. 8.9.^d E. 12.^e E. 13.^f E. 14.^g E. 12. 13.^h E. 6. a.ⁱ D. 1.^k D. 5.

This Passage makes it highly probable, that the Bishop used to receive Letters from Abroad, directed by fictitious Names. Which is still further confirmed by the following Circumstances :

In the ^a Cypher which Laver owned he received from Sir William Ellis, the Bishop of Rochester is designed by the Name of Justus.

Neynoe ^b declared, that in the Letter which Kelly shewed him from Dillon's Secretary, there were Compliments to the Bishop of Rochester, by the Name of Naunton.

Among the Bishop's Letters was found one directed to Mr. Dubois, not signed with any Name, nor dated from any Place. It was in the following Words :

S I R,

FORGIVE my Silence. You easily conceive the Difficulties I am under in that Regard. I write this only to assure you of my sincerest and unalterable Respect; and refer you to the worthy Bearer for News, and for every Thing, which otherwise I should have found some Way or other of writing to you myself. I have heard nothing from you since the Letter I had about two Months ago by Mr. Johnson, to which I immediately in his Hand returned my Answer. A Rumour has reached me of your having written hither since; but I can find no Body that owns he has seen your Letters.

I am always, S I R,

Dec. 16.

Your truly Obedient, and most Humble Servant.

Your Committee observe, That Johnson is the Name by which Kelly constantly went, as appears to them from several ^c Affidavits: And that he was at Paris the 16th of December, 1721. N. S. and set out in two or three Days after for England, as appears from the ^d Pocket-Book taken upon him: And the Letter to Dubois seems to intimate such a Correspondence as made it unsafe to write openly, and without Disguise.

Among the Bishop's Papers was found another ^e Letter, dated Rouen, Jan. 15th, 1722. without any Name; and the Superscription torn off, Which Letter is mentioned to be sent by an honest Gentleman; and the Writer of it desires to know how he may direct; and desires to be directed to by the Name of Wishart, at Mr. Arbutnot's at Rouen, which is probably a fictitious Direction, no Name being subscribed to the Letter. He likewise mentions a former Letter sent under Cover to their common Friend Sir Red. Who Sir Red. is, does not appear to your Committee; but they find one Sir Red. Everard inserted in Plunket's ^f Cypher, and designed by the fictitious Name of Fly.

Among the Bishop's Papers were likewise found two ^g Letters from Captain Charles Halstead of Greenwich; the Person who, as has been mentioned above, was sent to Bilboa, to transport the late Duke of Ormond to England.

Some Letters having been intercepted, which there is good Reason to believe were from the Bishop of Rochester; and ^h one of these Letters being signed T. Jones, and another ⁱ T. Illington, your Committee will now lay before the House the Evidence they have found of the Bishop's being designed by those two Names, collected from Circumstances, which being in themselves seemingly minute, and of little Consequence, were for this Reason more frankly confessed by those, who were obstinate in concealing stronger Proofs; and yet at the same Time lead directly to the Discovery of the Person meant by those Names.

Mrs. Barnes being examined before a Committee of Lords of the Council, obstinately refused to make the least Discovery relating to George Kelly; but when she came to be asked what she knew about a Dog, sent over to Kelly from France; not suspecting this could lead to any Discovery, she readily ^k owned, That a spotted little Dog, call'd Harlequin, which was brought from France, and had a Leg broken, was left with her by Mr. Kelly, to be cured: That the said Dog was not for her, but for the Bishop of Rochester; and that Kelly promised to get the Dog of the Bishop of Rochester for her, in case it did not recover of its Lameness. This Declaration she made and signed in the Presence of the Committee of Council: And Kelly himself made no Difficulty ^l to own the receiving such a Dog from France.

But it appears to your Committee, by Letters intercepted between Kelly and his Correspondents in France (the Proofs of which will be set forth in the Sequel of this Report) That a Dog so named and hurt, was sent over to Kelly from France, to be delivered as a Present to the Person denoted by the Names of Jones and Illington.

For in his ^m Letter to Howell (who is explained in Plunket's Cypher to mean Glasgow, and has been observed above to be Dillon's Secretary) he mentions his having received the Present, and the Accident of a Leg being broken in the Voyage; and adds, I will inform Mr. Jones soon of it, to whom I know any Thing from that Quarter will be very acceptable. In the same Paragraph he says, Mrs. Jones died last Week; and when the Days of Mourning are over, he will, I hope, be fit for Business. This Letter was writ on Monday the 30th of April; and the Bishop's Lady ⁿ died the Week before, on Thursday the 26th of April.

Kelly in his ^o Letter to Musgrave, (which Name will be hereafter shewn to signify the late Lord Marr) dated the 7th of May, says, ' Mrs. Illington is in great Tribulation for poor Harlequin, who is in a bad Way, having slipp'd his Leg again, before it was thoroughly well: However, his Obligations to the Lady are as great as if he had come safe, which he desires you to let her know.'

The Words He and His being relative to Mrs. Illington, shew it is a Man that is spoken of: The Bishop's Lady was dead at the Time this Letter was writ. And this Disguise of putting Mrs. for Mr. is frequently made use of in the intercepted Letters, and is confirmed by a parallel Instance immediatly following.

May the 9th, Dillon's Secretary ^p writes to Kelly, and says, ' Mrs. Chivers, (which will be shewn to be General Dillon) prays you will condole in his Name on the Death of Mrs. Illington.'

^a B. Y. 1. ^b E. 10. ^c E. 6. 12, 13, 14. ^d E. 17. ^e D. 7. ^f C. 51. ^g D. 8. 9.
^h D. 10. ⁱ D. 11. ^k E. 4. ^l E. 1. ^m E. 35. ⁿ D. 47. 48. ^o E. 42. ^p E. 43.

It appears by these Passages, that the Dog was for Mr. Jones, alias Illington: And upon Kelly's writing word that Mrs. Jones was dead, the Correspondents condole on the Death of Mrs. Illington; which shews Jones and Illington to be the same, and both to be made use of to denote the Bishop.

On the 11th of May, Motfield (who is the same with Musgrave, that is, the late Lord Marr) sends a ^a Letter to Mr. Illington, enclosed under Cover to Kelly; in which, after acknowledging the Receipt of Illington's Letter of the 20th of April, he adds, 'I did not expect so soon after to have heard of a Loss you have had since; for which I condole with you, and nothing which concerns you so near can fail touching me, as in Friendship it ought. It is tho, becoming us, as it is our Duty, to submit with Resignation, to what the Just and Great God thinks fit to order for us in this vain and transitory World; but you know such Things so much better than I, that will not trouble you with saying any more upon it.'

This last Paragraph seems to point out the Character and Function of the Person to whom the Letter was writ.

Motfield adds, 'I would fain hope that your own Distemper will soon give you ease;' which agrees with the Circumstance of the Bishop's being ill of the Gout, at the Time of his Wife's Death.

This Particularity, as also several others, which will be taken Notice of, as to the Bishop's being in Town or in the Country, at the respective Times mentioned in the intercepted Letters, have been carefully inquired into; and it appears by a ^b Paper annexed to the Report, that these several Circumstances do exactly agree with what is mentioned in the Letters.

Kelly ^c writing to Musgrave (the late Lord Marr) the 7th of May says, Mrs. Jones is come to Town: The same Day writing to Chivers (Dillon) he says Mr. Illington is now in Town; which again confirms Jones and Illington to be the same, and agrees with the Inquiry made at that Time.

On the 10th of May, Kelly ^d writes to Dillon's Secretary, Illington is gone into the Country, and sent me word he would be in Town on Tuesday Night, when he has desired to see me at a particular Hour, by which I conclude it may be about Business. And on Monday the 14th of May, (the Day before, it is said, Illington was come to Town) ^e writing to the same Person, he says, Jones is still in the Country, but has sent me word he will be in Town to-morrow.

These several Circumstances, join'd to Neynoe's Declaration, that Kelly had told him, the Bishop went sometimes by the Name of Jones, and that Carte had told him, the Bishop went by the Name of Illington, shew, that wherever Jones and Illington are named in Kelly's Correspondence, the Bishop of Rochester is to be understood by those Names.

Your Committee therefore will next proceed to lay before you the Part which Jones or Illington appear to have borne in the treasonable Correspondence.

It appears by Kelly's ^f Pocket-Book, that Kelly set out for Paris on the 22d of February 1721-2, and return'd to London about the 8th of April following. It appears by ^g Mrs. Levett's and ^h John Malone's Deposition, that he came to Mrs. Barnes's on Wednesday the 11th of April, at eight in the Morning, extremely fatigued, and went immediately to bed. Mrs. Levett has deposed upon Oath, 'That Mrs. Barnes told her he was then just arrived from France, and brought over Letters with him: That several of the Disaffected had been at her House to inquire after him before his Arrival, and express'd the utmost Concern for fear he should be taken.' And ⁱ Neynoe declar'd, 'That he saw a great Bundle of Letters, which Kelly brought over from France.' Mrs. Barnes farther told Mrs. Levett, 'That the Day after, (viz. Thursday the 12th of April) the Bishop of Rochester sent his own Coach to fetch him, and that Kelly was absent in the Country till Saturday the 14th.' Two ^k Depositions, annexed to this Report, shew, that the Bishop of Rochester came to Town on Wednesday the 11th, and went to Bromley on Thursday the 12th of April.

It appears by a ^l Letter writ to Kelly from France by the late Lord Marr, and intercepted, that on Monday the 16th of April (which was the first Post-day to France, after the Bishop had sent for Kelly) Kelly had writ to Marr an Account of his Negotiations with Illington, and of Illington's Willingness to be reconciled to one, designed by the Name of Hacket. Who Hacket is, does not appear to your Committee, but he is describ'd in several of the Letters as a Person in ill Health, retired in the Country, and one in whom the Pretender's Agents at Paris place their greatest Hopes and Confidence next to Illington. This Reconciliation with Hacket, Illington was desirous might be kept secret for some Time, that it might not be known they acted in concert.

It appears by another ^m Letter to Kelly from Dillon's Secretary at Paris, that Illington had writ a mysterious Letter thither, and that Kelly had writ a subsequent one in Explanation of it, which had been shewn to Dillon.

The first ⁿ Letter that was intercepted from Kelly himself, was dated the 22d of April, signed James Johnson (the Name he always went by, and often signed by) and directed to Gordon junior, Banker at Boulogne, at whose House it is probable he had been entertained in his last Return from Paris; which Gordon is mentioned in a ^o Letter from Mr. Crausford, as being formerly the Pretender's Banker, and as one employed in hiring a Vessel to transport some of the Chiefs of the Conspiracy to England. In this Letter to Gordon, Kelly recommends to his Care a Packet enclosed.

This Packet was directed to Mr. Chivers (which will be proved to be Dillon) and consisted of three Letters, one to Chivers himself, signed T. Jones, another to Musgrave (which will be prov'd to be Marr) sign'd T. Illington, a third to Mr. Jackson (which will be proved to be the Pretender) sign'd 1378, which Number is found by the Decyphers, to denote the proper Name of a Person beginning with the Letter R, in the Cypher made use of in these three Letters, the Order of which, as your Committee is inform'd, is alphabetical. All the three Letters were dated the 20th of April, and appear by the Matter to be from the same Person, which prove 1378 to be the same with Jones and Illington. The Letters to Mus- grave and Jackson were enclosed in that to Chivers.

The Person who dictated these Letters speaks of himself as being in ill Health, in great Pain, under some sad and melancholy Circumstances, which made him incapable of doing any thing regularly at that time, but which he expected would soon blow over; which agrees with the Bishop's ^a Circumstances at that time, whose Wife was extremely ill, and died six days after, and he himself, as has been observed before, was at that time afflicted with the Gout.

The Letter to Chivers is a great part of it out of Cypher, and with the Decyphering is in the following Words.

I Ought to acknowledge in form the several Papers I have successively receiv'd from you, if I were capable at present of doing any thing regularly; but indeed I am not, as Hatfield well knows, and why I am not. Some time must pass before I am any way capable of Business; in the mean time you are in the right to press the Gentlemen concerned by all manner of ways you can think of, to furnish, what by being hitherto not supply'd, has render'd the thing impracticable. They were desirous of having that Matter intirely in their own Management, and I not unwilling that they should have it, being always diffident of Success on my part upon Interpositions of that kind; and therefore it gave me no concern to be so freely excused from any Share (as I was for a great while) in that trouble. At last indeed, when the point was found upon trial to be more difficult than they expected, I was press'd to undertake the Matter; but so late that I did not think it reasonable for me then to interpose, nor can I yet undertake any thing of that kind, it being what (since some former Mismanagement wherein I was deeply concerned) I have constantly declined, hoping that I might not be altogether unuseful to the Service, if I went on to promote it in my own, that is, in another way. I still hope so, and that a little time (which must be employed in doing nothing but soliciting Supplies) will give me room for entering into Measures that may be somewhat more significant than those formerly taken; this I shall endeavour, being at present perfectly tired by the distracting Measures which have been taken from several Quarters, by Persons no ways equal to the Work, and at the same time not agreeing among themselves. This is all I can say at present, but that I am, with the same entire Respect and Fidelity I ever was,

S I R, Your most, &c.

T. Jones.

I have communicated the Copies of Mr. Mansfield's and Jacob's Letters, which besides the ^b G, (whereof they had a Copy) were the only ones of those transmitted, that I was directed, or indeed thought proper so to do. Tho' I have for some time thought, that nothing of Importance should be trusted to the Post, and am resolv'd myself not to send that way; yet the Death of Lord Sunderland makes such a Caution more indispensibly necessary; for you may depend upon't, that those in Power here will now enter into Measures of more Severity and Strictness, and employ all their Diligence, as well as Power, on such Occasions.'

That Chivers, to whom this Letter was directed, means General Dillon, is evident from the following Circumstances.

On the 13th of May, Cane ^c writing to Kelly, owns the Receipt of these Letters from the Bishop, but over-against the Name of Cane in Plunket's ^d Cypher, is writ Dillon and Kelly ^e answering this very Letter of Cane's, directs to Chivers. Besides which, it appears from innumerable Passages that Cane and Chivers mean the same with Digby and Dixwell, which have been shewn at large to denote General Dillon.

The Bishop's Letter to Musgrave (who will be prov'd to be the late Lord Marr) is as follows:

To Mr. Musgrave.

S I R, April the 20th 1722.

I Received from Mr. Hatfield (after a long Intermiſſion of such Favours) a Letter which was very welcome to me: I have also consider'd carefully what he had to offer to me in particular, and intirely agree with what is propos'd; but my present sad Circumstances (of which he has already inform'd you) will not suffer me to be active soon, or even set forward the Affairs entrusted with me in so speedy a manner as I could wish. The best is, that as I cannot act openly, so neither is there, I think, any immediate Need of it, some time being requisite towards ripening Matters, in order to fix the ^f C 'd, which, if hastily begun, may be attended with Suspicions and other Inconveniencys; but you may depend upon it that the ^f : s committed to my care, shall be forwarded in due time to the Persons concerned, as also all such other ^f : s as I judge, and at the time I judge, they will best promote the Service. What is to be wish'd for, is, that the Person whom I am to act with, would come to Town, and his doing so may be facilitated better from your side, than by any thing that can be done here; by that time he comes, I hope I shall be able to take my part with him. I add no more now, being very unfit to say even thus much, but that I am with entire Respect and Confidence,

S I R, &c.

T. Illington.

That Musgrave (to whom this Letter was directed) means Marr, is thus proved.

Dillon's Secretary ^g writes to Kelly that Mr. Lane (over-against which Name in ^h Plunket's Cypher is writ Lord Marr) was much pleas'd with his first Letter, which, as has been observed before, was writ on the 16th of April.

Soon after a Person ⁱ writes to Kelly, acknowledging the Receipt of this Letter of the 16th of April, and expressing his Satisfaction at Illington's Willingness to be reconciled with Hacket; his Letter is sign'd 918, which Number is found by the Decypherers to denote the proper Name of a Person beginning with the Letter M, and Kelly ^a answering this Letter directs to Musgrave.

Besides which, Musgrave is found to be a Person, whose Pension is said to be stopt in England, at the very time that a ^b Pension granted to the late Lord Marr was stopt, and is spoken of in other ^c Letters as one suspected of betraying them, with such Circumstances as fix the Person meant to be the late Lord Marr.

The Bishop's Letter to Jackson (who will be proved to mean the Pretender) is as follows:

To Mr. Jackson, under the Cover of
M. Gordon le fils, Banquier à Boulogne sur Mer.

S I R, April the 20th, 1722.

I AM sorry to find by yours, which Hatfield brought, that you know our Circumstances on this side so well, because that Knowledge does not, I apprehend, give you any advantageous Opinion of us; however let that be as it will, 'tis not fit you should be deceiv'd, and rely on more than will be made good to you: if you guess'd at my right Mind, I dare say, it was agreeable to your own, and that you could not but see thro' the forwardness of all those unsupported pretending People. Notwithstanding this Opportunity is elapsed, I agree with you another may offer before the end of the Year, tho' not perhaps every way so favourable: however it became me to speak strongly on that head, especially at the time when the ^d: was drawn, which was long before it was transmitted, for it was kept back a great while, in hopes that Deeds might have accompany'd Words, and sent at last rather to justify the Writer in respect to that part he had undertaken, than to push on any Design in so unprovided a Condition. I find I was not mistaken and am glad I was not so, tho' every Word of that ^d: passed the View and Approbation of the Persons concern'd, but they were to be and shall always be by me treated tenderly; tho' nothing shall engage me to enter deep with them for the future. I had taken this Resolution before Hatfield's Return, and am pleased to find that you concur with me in Opinion. As soon as God restores me to my Health, and some other melancholy Circumstances are blown over, which will be as soon as there is any occasion for me, I will not be idle: in the meantime give me leave to withdraw myself seemingly from any Engagement of this kind; I shall return to it, I doubt not, with more Ability to promote the Work: not that I will decline any proper Occasions that may offer themselves to converse freely with the Men and in the manner I have been used to do, for it is fit upon all Accounts I should do so; but by little and little that Confidence will cool, and make room, I hope, for somewhat of a more solid and important Nature. I dictate this in great Pain, and for that Reason, and because I am not at present in any readiness to go further, shall add only my faithful Assurances of an entire and unalterable Respect for you.

R.

That Jackson (to whom this Letter is directed) means the Pretender, appears from ^e Plunket's Cypher, in which, over-against the Name of Jackson, is writ, the King; tho' two Names had gone before in that Cypher, over-against which is writ, King George.

Besides which, ^f Plunket's Letter mentioning his and Laver's Journey to Rome, is directed to Mr. Jackson; and Jackson appears from other Letters to be the same with Malcom, to whom Application is made in a ^g Letter from Edinburgh, for a Patent for Knight Baronet, and for Orders to raise one or two Battalions.

The Cypher made use of in these three Letters is the very same that is made use of in two Letters intercepted from the late Duke of Ormond's Agents in Spain, of which Notice has been already taken. And the same Cypher is also used in Letters from George Kelly, and to Dennis Kelly. And among the Papers of the latter was found a ^h Piece of a Cypher in George Kelly's Hand-writing, which your Committee are inform'd is a Supplement to the Cypher made use of in Jones and Illington's Letters.

The Clerks of the Post-Office, who opened and copied these Letters, having been shewn several Papers sworn to be George Kelly's Hand-writing, have ⁱ deposed upon Oath, that the Letter to Gordon junior, signed James Johnson, as well as the three Letters enclos'd in it, directed to Chivers, Musgrave and Jackson, were all, to the best of their Knowledge and Belief, writ in the same Hand with those Papers; which join'd to ^k Neynoe's Information, that Kelly had told him, he was employ'd in writing Letters for the Bishop to the Pretender's Agents abroad; that the Bishop never let him carry a Bit of his Hand-writing out of the Room; and that Kelly made use both of a numerical Cypher, and a Cypher of fictitious Names, for managing this treasonable Correspondence; appears to be a strong Confirmation that these three Letters were dictated to Kelly by the Bishop, and that the Bishop is the Person denoted by the Names of Jones and Illington, and by the Cypher 1378.

In what manner these Letters were convey'd to Paris, will be observ'd in that part of the Report which relates to Kelly. The Correspondents at Paris own the Receipt of the Packet from their Cousin Jones; and on the 7th of May, Kelly ^m writes Dillon word, that Illington is glad to hear his Letters came safe, and wishes his next be more to Dillon's Satisfaction.

Your Committee having thus laid before you the Grounds they have to be convinced, that these three Letters were sent from the Bishop of Rochester to General Dillon, the late Lord Marr, and the Pretender; they think it their Duty to make some Observations on the Contents of them.

They observe from his Letter to Dillon, that he has contracted a great Intimacy and Familiarity with a profess'd Roman Catholick, who appear'd openly in Arms against the late King William in Ireland, and being obliged to leave that Country so long ago as the Capitulation of Limerick, has ever since adher'd to the same Cause in foreign Parts, and is at present more active and industrious than any other of the Pretender's Agents in exciting a Rebellion in these Kingdoms. He is at this time a Lieutenant-General, and has the Command of one of the Irish Regiments in the French Service.

Your Committee observe, That as the different Professions of these two Persons could lay no sort of Foundation for any Intimacy or Intercourse between them, so the long Absence of General Dillon makes it highly probable, that their Acquaintance could not be commenced before his leaving these Kingdoms; and that it can only have proceeded from their being long united and confederated in the common Support of the same wicked Cause.

Yet their Intimacy is such, that the Bishop acknowledges the Receipt of several Papers from Dillon, together with Directions of communicating them, which the Bishop owns he obey'd as far as he judg'd it proper for the Service. Some of these Papers appear to have been from the late Duke of Ormond, who is attainted; and others probably from the Pretender, whom he has so often abjured.

He advises Dillon to press the soliciting Supplies; and owns he has been desired to undertake that Province himself, but that he had hitherto declin'd it; not from such Restraints as should naturally have arisen in the Mind of one of his Character and Function, but merely on account of some former ill Success and Mismanagement, in which he owns he had been deeply concern'd.

He afterwards advises Dillon to use the same Caution which he himself intended, of not trusting any thing of Importancé to the Post, endeavouring to act within the Shelter and Safeguard of the Laws for subverting our happy Constitution.

This great Caution, which (as Neynoe said Kelly told him) the Bishop used, made him so extremely careful, as not to let even the Man he trusted most, have one Line of his own Hand-writing; and shews that he was wonderfully solicitous, not to avoid the Guilt of Treason, but only to escape the Punishment due to it, by saving himself from the Danger of legal Conviction.

Another of his Letters is to the late Lord Marr, who so lately appear'd in Arms against his Majesty, and has since had a Post of the greatest Confidence and Trust near the Pretender.

In this Letter he owns the Receipt of one from Marr by Kelly, together with verbal Instructions; which, to cut off all Excuse of Surprize or Inadvertency, he says he carefully consider'd, and yet entirely agreed to.

He then mentions his present sad Circumstances, but comforts himself, that as they will not permit him soon to act openly; so neither is there, he thinks, any immediate Occasion for it, some Time being necessary towards ripening Matters. So that when a proper Opportunity should have offer'd, the Mask was to have been thrown off, and then he was openly to have avowed the Cause, which he has hitherto supported only in Disguise.

The other Letter of the Bishop's is to the Pretender himself, in defiance of that Law which makes the holding any Correspondence with him, or his Agents, High-Treason. In this Letter he owns the Receipt of one from the Pretender; and to shew how well he deserved that Confidence, he himself, who best knows the Thoughts of his own Heart, declares, that if the Pretender guess'd at his right Mind, he dares say it is agreeable to the Pretender's own.

He then encourages the Pretender to hope for a second Opportunity, tho' not every Way so favourable as the first, which was elapsed.

This favourable Opportunity appears to have been that of the Elections; and your Committee cannot but observe, that the two most riotous Elections of any throughout the Kingdom, were that of Westminster, a Place under the immediate Influence of the Bishop of Rocheſter; and that of Coventry, which appears by this Report to have been animated by Carte, an Agent of the Bishop's, and one employ'd by him in managing his treasonable Correspondence.

He afterwards takes to himself the Merit of some Writing, which he had drawn up and transmitted to the Pretender, after it had first passed the View and Approbation of the Persons concern'd: Tho' he says it had been kept back a great while, in hopes that Deeds might have accompanied Words. Which again shews his treasonable Intentions to have been the Result of mature Deliberation; and that tho' he had hitherto dealt in Words, yet other Acts of Treason were what he hoped for, and was aiming at.

As soon as God should restore him to his Health, he promises to abuse it towards the Prosecution of his Treasons, and in the mean Time desires leave to withdraw himself seemingly from any Engagements of that Kind, that he might return with greater Zeal and Activity to destroy this Church and State, by placing a Popish Pretender on the Throne, in violation of the most sacred Oaths so frequently taken by him.

Your Committee will now proceed to shew what farther Part the Bishop appears to have had in the treasonable Correspondence and Negotiations carried on with the Pretender's Agents in France.

On the 11th of May, Motfield answers Illington's a Letter sent to Musgrave (Marr) the 20th of April. This was inclos'd in a Letter to Kelly. The Substance of the Answer is to condole with Illington on his Loss, and to express great Satisfaction on finding him in the same Sentiments with Marr, in Relation to their old Friend and Acquaintance (Hacket) and in another d Letter, to Kelly; he lets Illington know how agreeable this Reconciliation would be to Farmer, and how much to Farmer's Interest.

Your Committee see Reason to believe from Passages in several of the Letters, that Farmer means the Pretender.

It has been observed above, one of the Periods of Time, fixed by the Conspirators for putting their Design in execution, was the Beginning of May 1722.

On the 1st of May, Dillon's Secretary e writes to Kelly, 'that Mr. Jones cannot take a better Time to have himself fitted with an easy Saddle, 'there being a Number of Saddlers idle in France 'at present, who in case of Wars would be so 'very busy there would be no coming at them.' This is explain'd by what d Neynoe said, that in Kelly's Cypher Sadlers stood for Irish Soldiers, tho' he did not know any Letters had been intercepted where that Term was made use of, and in e Plunket's Cypher Saddles stands for Regiments, and Girt for one hundred Men.

On the 2d of May, Dillon himself ^a acknowledges the Receipt of his Cousin Jones's Letters of the 20th of April, and 'expresses much Concern for that Lady's ill State of Health, being much afraid his own small Concerns can hardly be settled to Satisfaction, till she is able to solicit in his Favour.'

On the 7th of May, Kelly ^b writes to Musgrave (Marr) 'that he had communicated his Letter to Mr. Jones; and that Mr. Jones desir'd a Letter from Musgrave or Farmer (the Pretender) to Hacket, to bring him to Town, without which it would be impracticable for them to do Business together. That Jones finds Armstrong and Company very loth to be any way concerned, having no Opinion of the present Hands; however that it is still necessary to make the most of them.'

Who is meant by Armstrong and Company does not appear to the Committee.

On the 9th of May, Dillon's Secretary ^c writes to Kelly, 'That if this Post had not brought an Addition of three to the six formerly come from Repney, it is easy for Mrs. Jones to see what is still wanting for the Purchase she intends to make.' Who is meant by Repney is not certain, but in the following Part of this Report there will appear Grounds of a probable Conjecture.

This Passage relates to a Bill of Exchange (of six thousand Pounds probably) sent over to Calais, and thence to Waters the Pretender's Banker at Paris, on the 16th of April; the Receipt of which is acknowledged in several Letters both to ^d George Kelly and ^e Dennis Kelly. This Paragraph, which says, 'That if three more are not come, besides the six from Repney, it is easy for Mrs. Jones to see what is still wanting for the Purchase she intends to make;' shews plainly, that Jones was at least privy to that Remittance: which agrees with what Pancier ^f has deposed upon Oath, that he was told by Skeene, among other Particulars relating to the Conspiracy, that a large Contribution had been raised and put under the Management of the Bishop of Rochester, which was called their military Chest.

On the 10th of May (three Days after the Encampment) ^g Kelly writes to Dillon's Secretary, 'That it was reported the King had absolutely refused to put off his Journey, and intended to set out early next Month; and that if they could then compass Barrels enough, the sooner the Wine comes, he believes, the better. He adds, that Jones promises to be a good Customer, and that he hopes Hacket and Jones will give them the finishing Stroke.' The Time of Year in which this Letter was writ, and the absurd Supposition of its being more difficult to find Barrels than Wine, shew sufficiently that these Words are not to be taken in their literal Sense.

Your Committee are inform'd, that Wine was explain'd by Neynoe to mean Invasion, tho' he had never been told that any such Word had been made use of in these Letters, nor had been asked any Question about it; and in ^h Plunkett's Cypher, Barrels is explain'd Army, and Vines, one thousand Men.

On the 19th of May, Dillon's Secretary ⁱ writes to Kelly, 'That he is assured by good Hands, Hacket and Jones are the best-able to adjust his particular Concerns; that he does not question their good Dispositions, and that doing it timely will be a double Merit.'

On the 19th of May, Kelly was taken into Custody, about the 7th of June he was admitted to Bail, and on the 11th he ^k writes an Account of his Examination to one Gerrard, whom your Committee believe to be Sir John D'Obryan, whom Kelly ^l owned to be employ'd by Dillon in writing for him. In this Letter Kelly says, 'He was chiefly questioned about a little Dog he got from France, and about five or six cant Names, which were Illington, Jones, Cane, Howell, Quitwell and Hacket, and that whoever Illington is, he was the Person chiefly struck at.'

On the 18th of June ^m he writes to Dillon, 'That it is absolutely necessary to make no more use of their present Account-Book, since those that have got part, may by the same Method have got the whole; and that it will be highly improper for him to meddle with Business, at least for some Time.'

From this Time forward your Committee observe, that the Names of Jones and Illington are no more heard of in the intercepted Correspondence; neither does Kelly so frequently write Letters of great Business, but in his stead Thomas Carte, Clerk, takes up the Management of the Bishop's Correspondence.

The Letters from Carte are signed, and those to him directed by the Name of George Williams; and Mrs. Harbin, to whose House they were directed, having been examined before some Lords of the Council, ⁿ has deposed on Oath, that Carte desired her to take in Letters so directed, and that she delivered one so directed into his own Hands.

And in the ^o Cypher taken among Dennis Kelly's Papers in George Kelly's Hand-writing, Mr. Carte is designed by the fictitious Names of Thomas and Trotter, who appear, by comparing several Passages in the Letters, to mean the same Person with George Williams.

From the Time of George Kelly's being first taken up, the Bishop of Rochester is denoted by the Names of Rig and Weston, as will appear from the following Circumstances.

On the 30th of August, Kelly ^p writes to Dillon a long Letter, which contains the Particulars of the Bishop's being taken into Custody, examined and committed. On the 14th of September Dillon's Secretary ^q writes to Kelly, 'That his Letter on the 30th of August came safe, and that the Particulars he gave of Mr. Rig's Case were very acceptable to Dillon, whose Concern for a true and worthy Friend and Relation cannot be doubted and a longing Desire to know her entirely clear of her Distemper.' In the same Letter he desires to know what is become of Carte.

That Rig denotes the Bishop, is farther confirmed by these Particulars: Kelly in his first ^r Letter after his Enlargement, writes word to Gerrard; 'All I can do now, will be only to deliver to your Cousin Rig any Goods that you can send by private Hands: He is determined not to receive them any other Way, and indeed I cannot say he is in the wrong. How far this late Affair may affect him, I cannot tell.'

Now since it appears that Kelly was formerly employed in conveying Letters to and from the Bishop (which are often called Goods in the intercepted Correspondence) since the Bishop himself had desired in his Letter to Dillon, that no more Letters of Consequence might be trusted to the Post; and since Kelly's Examination about the Dog could affect no one but the Bishop, it may justly be concluded that Rig and the Bishop are the same.

That Weston is the Bishop, will appear from the following Circumstances.

On the 7th of June, Dillon's Secretary ^a writes to Carte, and acknowledges the Receipt of a Letter from him of the 28th of May (which was soon after Kelly's being taken up) and after expressing great Satisfaction, 'That the late Rumours of a Plot had not occasioned a total Interruption of Commerce, nor obliged any of their Correspondents to go aside;' he adds, 'That Dillon desires to be most kindly remember'd to his good Friend Mr. Weston, for whom he was in the greatest Concern, on account of a Story that his Clerk had been laid up for Debt; but that he hopes Carte's next Letter will put him at full Ease in this Matter.'

This plainly has reference to Kelly's being taken up; and his relation of Clerkship to the Bishop, has been fully explain'd by what goes before.

On the 14th of June, Carte ^b writes to Dillon's Secretary, and endeavours to put him at full Ease in relation to Mr. Weston, by telling him, 'That Mr. Weston is in the Country, that he saw him two Days ago; that he is perfectly well, and as easy in all his Affairs as any Man alive, and very much Dillon's humble Servant.' It appears by Depositions ^c annexed to this Report, that the Bishop was in the Country at that Time.

On the 14th of July, Dillon ^d writes to Weston, under Cover to Carte; and desires he will admit one Skinner (sent over from France express) to receive his Commands.

On the 26th of July, Kelly ^e writes word that Rig and Skin had been lately together; and that before they met, Rig sent to him to know how Skin stood with Dillon and his Partners.

On the same Day, Stanley (who appears by the Matter of his Letter to be the same with Skinner) writes ^f to Dillon, 'That he had been with the Correspondent, to whom the Letter of Credit was sent, and had partly engaged him in his Arrack Affair.' On the 30th of July, Carte writes ^g word, he had the Honour of introducing Stanley to Mr. Weston, and mentions the Arrack Affair, of which notice will be taken in its Place.

From these Passages it appears, that Weston (the Name made use of by Carte) means the same with Rig (made use of by Kelly) which last was shewn before to mean the Bishop of Rockester.

Rig therefore, and Weston being made use of to denote the Bishop; it remains to be considered what Part Rig or Weston appear to bear in the Sequel of the intercepted Correspondence.

It appears by the ^h Letter from Dillon's Secretary of the 7th of June, that they apprehended in general, on Kelly's being taken up, that some of their Correspondents would be obliged to go aside; but that their greatest Pain was for Mr. Weston, whose Intimacy with Kelly was such, that Kelly is styl'd his Clerk, which is no improper Name for one that kept the Cyphers, which are styl'd throughout the intercepted Letters, Books of Accompts; and in Layer's Cypher are call'd Renials. If Kelly had had no Secrets to reveal, the Pain for Mr. Weston; and the Fear of other Correspondents going aside, would not have been so considerable.

On the 14th of June, ⁱ Carte sets them at ease in relation to Weston, who was, he says, as easy in his Affairs as any Man alive: Which might be the Cause, Kelly having burnt his Papers; being bailed out, and at Liberty to assure his Friends that the Lords could get nothing out of him at his Examination, where he strenuously denied his having ever heard of the Names of Jones or Illington.

On the 11th of June, Kelly ^k sends his Friends at Paris an Account of his late Misfortune; and after complaining of their Neglect, in not bailing him out sooner, and intimating that such Usage might have provoked a passionate Man to betray their Secrets; he says, your old Friend Rig, indeed, offered all that could be expected from the poor Man. This Passage proves pretty plainly, that Rig was one of those whose Secrets it was in Kelly's power to have betrayed; and who therefore thought himself principally concerned to keep Kelly in good Temper, by all possible offers of Assistance.

Kelly in his next ^l Letter of the 18th of June, says, 'The Occasion of my Misfortune I will lay at no body's Door in particular; tho' your old Friend Rig seems to believe, it has rather proceeded from some pretended Friend than any real Enemy: And as his Conjecture lies on this side, you may easily guess the Point it tends to.' This Passage shews that the Discoveries made, were known by Rig to be well founded; since no one could be led to suspect, that an Information entirely false should proceed from some Friend entirely in the Secret: besides, it shews Rig had Friends, in whose Power it was to betray him; and that those Friends were known to the Correspondents in France, since Kelly says, they are able to guess who it is that Rig suspects on this side. This is a farther Intimation, that Rig had Friends on the other side of the Water, in whose power it was equally to have betrayed the Secret.

Kelly then tells Dillon, 'That it is absolutely necessary to make no more use of their present Accompt-Book; since they that have got part, may by the same Method have got the whole.' This is a direct Confession, that the Names of Jones and Illington, and others on which Kelly was questioned, were really a Part of the Cypher in use between him and his Correspondents in France: And as Kelly writ Word that Illington was the Person principally struck at, and knew very well by Mrs. Barnes's Confession about the Dog, who Illington was understood to be; it amounts to a Confession, that that Exposition of the Name of Illington was true.

He then adds, 'All that lies in my Power now, will be to deliver to your Cousin Rig any Goods you can send by private Hands; he being determin'd not to receive them any other way.' So that by private hands Rig was still willing to receive them.

However Kelly says, ‘ If your Business can be conveyed any other way to him, you cannot do me a greater Favour: For to tell you the Truth, it is against my Opinion and Inclination to have any farther Dealing that way.’ This shews what Dealing Kelly had hitherto had; and at the same time explains how Carte comes to be employed in managing the Bishop’s Correspondence for the future.

Kelly adds, ‘ That he does not know how far this late Affair may affect Rig.’ This shews that he knew Rig was engaged in some criminal Correspondence; since the receiving a Dog from France, or being called by a fictitious Name, could not otherwise have affected him.

On the 16th of July, Carte writes a long Letter about some MSS. and Weston’s Opinion of them, as also that of Finch. What is meant by Manuscripts, does not appear; neither is it certain who Finch is, but he is spoke of as being in high Repute with Weston.

On the 1st of August, Dillon writes to Carte, ‘ That he cannot apply to a more sufficient Judge than Weston about his Concern with Mr. Finch.’ And he often repeats, ‘ That he makes a most particular Case of Mr. Weston’s Judgment; and that he relies entirely on Weston’s Friendship and Advice;’ and other Expressions of the like nature.

On the 14th of July, Dillon writes a Letter to Weston (the Bishop) enclosed to Carte, in the following Words.

To Mrs. Weston, inclosed to Mr. George Williams, at Mrs. Harbin’s over-against Somers-et-House.

Dear Madam, Saturday 25 July 1722.

I cannot on any reasonable Grounds complain of your Silence, tho’ long it appears, because I am informed of the Situation of your Health, and the Concerns your Family are in, by Bankrupts and Law-Suits. Permit me, however, to fulfil a part of my Duty in presenting you my best Respects, and unalterable Attachment to you and yours. I wish this may find you so far recovered from past Mischances, as that you may be once more in a Humour of affording me a comfortable Line. I have all the Stock I bought lying by, and I intend it shall remain so, until you advise me of the proper Time to dispose of it: being fully convinced, that in the slippery Age we live in, I cannot confide to any better than you. I hear many say, that our Stocks will infallibly rise again to a good height, by Mr. Walpole’s wife and able Management; from whence I should hope not to be so much a Loser in reserving mine. Still my Lights at this distance can be but very imperfect: therefore, Dear Madam, I will earnestly pray your Direction, when you find leisure to grant me this Favour, as also of forgiving this Trouble, for which I offer amends in any manner I can be of service to you. The few Acquaintances of yours I converse with in these Parts, are well; and rely, as I do, on your friendly Advice in a most particular manner, about their Concerns in the Funds. They desire you will be pleased to admit Mr. Skinner to receive your Commands, who is directed to call upon you, and explain some Particulars too tedious for a Letter. He seems to be very ready at Business, and will obey your Orders punctually. I am, with the greatest Esteem and Sincerity,

Dear Madam,

Your most humble, and most Obedient Servant,

Digby.

On the 16th of July, Dennis Kelly writes word to France, that Skinner arrived in Town the Night before; that he had been to wait on him, longing much to know how the Fall of Stocks affected his Friends.

On the 26th of July, Kelly writes to Dillon’s Secretary, ‘ That Rig and Skin had been lately together; and that before they met, Rig had sent to him, to know if Skin stood well with Dillon and Partners.’ He adds, ‘ that Rig still seems to promise his Assistance, if he can get the better of his Suspicions: and that Rig went into the Country, the day after Skin and he had been together.’ It appears by a Deposition annexed to this Report, that the Bishop came to Town on the 19th, and return’d to Bromley on the 21st of July.

On the same Day that Kelly writ, Stanley (who is the same with Skinner) writes to Dillon, ‘ I have been with your Correspondent to whom the Letter of Credit was sent, who has partly answered my Demands, and promises to comply in all Points with your Directions.’ He then adds, ‘ I must now give you an Account of what Product may be hoped for from the Publick Funds.’

Then follows a Paragraph, some few Letters of which are in Cypher, but as your Committee is informed, in such an easy and obvious one, that any one that reads it, may with the least Attention decypher it. In this Paragraph, instead of saying a word about the Funds, he acquaints Dillon, ‘ That they are certainly betrayed by some one entirely in the Secret, who has given such Light into all their Affairs, that the most minute Circumstances are perfectly found out; that therefore he must caution him, as he is requested, to be very careful who he converses with, even at Paris, without excepting any one.’

This Paragraph explains sufficiently what is meant by Stocks and Funds; and it is remarkable, that in Plunket’s Cypher, Brokers is explained Agents. The owning themselves discovered by some one entirely in the Secret, proves there was a Secret, and that the Discoveries of the Government were well founded.

He then adds, ‘ I have partly prevailed with the Correspondent (Weston) to undertake what he had firmly resolved against, which is the procuring Arrack, which cannot fail succeeding by that Channel.’ And on the 30th of July, Carte writes to Dillon in the following Words:

‘ I had the Honour of introducing Mr. Stanley to Mr. West, who received him in the best manner, and assured him of his Readiness to serve him in what he could. Mr. St. was much pleased with him, but did not engage him to solicit in his Arrack Affair, which yet is of the greatest consequence to him, and Mr. W. is most capable of serving him in, because in the Esteem of all the Commissioners in whose Power it is to relieve him in the Case. And as Mr. W.

‘ would do it effectually, if engaged in it, so Mr. Stanley desires me to beg the Favour of you, to request the Favour of Mr. W. in a Letter from you to Mr. Stanley, which he is sure would fortify the good Inclinations Mr. W. has already to serve him, and effectually engage him in the Thing.’

The Original of this^a Letter being stopped, is, as your Committee are informed, in Carte’s own Hand-writing.

What is meant by these mysterious Passages about Arrack, must be left to the Conjecture of the House.

If this be compared with the Bishop’s^b Letter to Dillon, and with Pancier’s Deposition, it is not improbable that by Arrack may be meant Contributions of Money.

But whatever is meant by it, the Committee observe, that it was a Point of the greatest Importance to the Conspirators, since it was thought necessary to be laboured by a Person sent from France on purpose; and the Bishop’s Reluctancy to come into it argues it to have been something very dangerous, and beyond the ordinary Lengths of his Compliance.

And they observe that the principal Direction of the Conspiracy under all the Disguises of Stocks, Manuscripts and Arrack, is submitted to the Bishop’s Judgment, on which, it is often said, they do entirely rely.

Your Committee having thus laid before you the principal Matters in the intercepted Correspondence, that relate to the Bishop of Rocheſter more immediately, will now proceed to state to you what they find in the same Correspondence, relating to George Kelly; who, as has been shewn before, acted so much under the Direction and Influence of the Bishop, that it cannot be supposed he would take any Step of Consequence in an Affair of this Nature, without the Bishop’s being at least made privy to it.

The Committee forbear repeating what was mentioned before, about the Heads of Memorials to the Regent, brought by Kelly to Neynoe; but they find some farther Particulars^d in Neynoe’s Papers, relating to Kelly alone.

‘ That Kelly had owned to him his having been formerly at Avignon while the Pretender was there; that at his Return from France last Winter, he brought over several Papers and Letters, and among the rest, one in French, in the Hand-writing of Dillon’s Secretary, intitled, Reasons humbly offered to Cardinal Du Bois, proving that the establishing the House of Stuart on the Throne of England, preferably to that of Hanover, is the real Interest of the Crown of France, or to that Effect. That this Piece was brought to Neynoe to be translated, which being written by a Papist, and turning much on the Advantage that would accrue to Popery, Neynoe advised against publishing it.

‘ That Kelly told him at other Times, that one Hundred Thousand Pounds, nay, fifty Thousand Pounds would be sufficient for bringing in the Pretender; and that he would warrant that Sum would be found.

‘ That whenever there happen’d to be a Stand made for the Pretender, great Numbers of Volunteers from France would appear for him.’ Which agrees with the Accounts sent from thence, and with the Letter from Dillon’s Secretary about securing Sadlers, which Kelly explained to Neynoe to mean Irish Soldiers.

Neynoe farther said, ‘ That Kelly propos’d to him to go over to France, and to settle in Lord Landsdown’s Family, where he said he might be of Service, and promis’d to make his Reception easy.’ And your Committee observe, that the very Time when Neynoe was taken going to France, Kelly writ to Dillon’s Secretary, ‘ That he would soon see a young Fellow, whom he had mentioned to him some Time before; and that he might rely on his Honesty.’

Neynoe farther declared, ‘ That Bingley his Fellow-Traveller (now in Custody) lodging in the same House with Kelly, when Kelly was first taken up, burnt a Bundle of Writings he had that Day received from Kelly.’

John Malone (formerly Servant to Mrs. Barnes) who waited on Kelly at his Lodgings, has deposed, that this Neynoe, John Plunket (now in Custody,) Carte and Dennis Kelly, often visited George Kelly.

As George Kelly is frequently design’d by a great Variety of fictitious Names, in the intercepted Correspondence, the Committee think it proper first to apprise the House what Reason there is to assert that those Names do really belong to Kelly, and then to shew the Nature and Import of the Correspondence carried on under those Names.

It appears to your Committee, that since the Beginning of April 1722. (the Time of Kelly’s last Return from France) a great Number of Letters going to France were by Order of the Government opened, and Copies of them taken; and that several of those Letters, tho’ sign’d by different Names, were^h observ’d by the Clerks who copied them, to be all in the same Hand-writing; andⁱ one of the Originals having been stopped for a Specimen of the Hand, and having been shewn to John Malone, he has^k deposed upon Oath, that he had often seen George Kelly write, and that he believes it to be his Hand. Three other Papers, seiz’d at Mrs. Barnes’s, having been shewn to Malone, he has sworn them severally to be Kelly’s Writing; and the same three Papers having been shewn to the Clerks of the Post-Office, they have sworn, That to the best of their Knowledge and Belief, as well the original Letters stopped, as the others sent forwards, which were signed, some of them Johnſon, others Hatfield, J. J. G. H., and Wilkins, were all in the same Hand with those three Papers so attested.

This general Proof fixes several of the Names to belong to Kelly; and it is remarkable that if any one of the Names above-mentioned be allowed to belong to Kelly, all the rest by which he signs, or is directed to, may, by the Series of his Correspondence, be shewn to belong to the same Person.

But your Committee farther observe that almost every individual Name he makes use of is attended with some particular Proof, which determines it to belong to him; of which Notice will be taken as the Names are mentioned.

It has been observ’d already, that he came from France about the Nineteenth of December, N. S. 1721. and that a^m Letter was found among the Bishop's Papers, dated the 16th of December, in which mention is made of a Letter received by Johnson, and an Answer returned some Time before in Johnson's Hand.

Neynoe^a declared, that the last Memorial to the Regent, which Kelly employed him to draw up, was in December 1721, and that it contained a Demand of five Thousand Men for the Assistance of the Conspirators. In February following^b Kelly went again to France, and towards the End of April, the Government received unquestionable^c Accounts, that repeated Application had been made to the Regent for such a Body of Forces.

The Bishop in his^d Letters (writ soon after Kelly's Return from France) acknowledges the Receipt of a Letter, and verbal Instructions from Marr, by Hatfield, and of a Letter from the Pretender by the same Hand, and mentions Hatfield as knowing his present Unfitness for Business.

But the Letters signed Hatfield, which were copied at the Post-Office, are^e sworn to have been in the same Hand with other Papers which are sworn to be Kelly's Hand-writing. And it appears by a^f Letter from Marr to Hatfield, that he was the Person to whom the Dog was sent for Illington; which shews Hatfield to be Kelly, and confirms Neynoe's Information, that Kelly received Letters directed by the Name of Hatfield: And it appears that he not only brought over Letters from France, agreeably to what was told^g Mrs. Levett by Mrs. Barnes, and confirmed by Neynoe; but that he was trusted with a Letter to the Bishop from Jackson, the Name made use of for the Pretender in^h Plunket's Cypher; which Cypher it is evident Kelly was no Stranger to, since he makes use of several otherⁱ Names found in that Cypher, to denote the very same Persons that are there expressed and defined by those Names.

On the twenty first of April, Dillon's^k Secretary writes to Joshua Vernon (which will be shewn to be another of Kelly's Names) congratulating his safe Return, and tells him, 'That his first Letter was very pleasing to Mr. Lane (which is explained Lord Marr in Plunket's Cypher) who waited with much Impatience for those of Monday, hoping to receive a more particular Account of his Bills, which he daily becomes more pressed for; the Prospect of a good Vintage increasing by late Showers which had dropped there, and raised the Spirit of the Labourers. He adds, that it seems more plain, that on Advances of ready Money, good Bargains may be proposed.'

He afterwards tells him, 'That Dillon advises, the Money which Kelly mentioned in Clynton's Hands, should be equally divided between Medley and the Pretender.' Who Clynton is does not appear to the Committee; but they see Reason to believe, from Passages in other Letters, that Medley means the late Duke of Ormond.

He then tells Kelly, 'That Farmer and Family are well, and that Mrs. Hughes became so very uneasy she was dismissed, and is on return.'

This Passage shews that Farmer means the Pretender, it being well known that Mrs. Hughes was Nurse to the Pretender's Child, and was on her Return to England about this Time.

From this Letter your Committee observe, that Kelly was employed by Marr and Dillon, in soliciting Supplies for the Service of the Conspirators; and that he had acquainted them of a Sum of Money lodged in the Hands of one, whom they call Clynton, which they advised should be equally divided between the Pretender and Ormond. Whether Kelly was considerable enough to have this Advice sent him for his own Government and Direction, or was only to be the Channel for conveying it to some other Person of greater Distinction, is left to the Consideration of the House.

On the twenty third of April (as has been observed above) Kelly sent the Bishop's Pacquet of Letters under Cover to Gordon at Boulogne, with^l Orders to him to deliver it to a tall black Man, who would soon call on him for it.

This Person is in other Letters called Crow, and appears to your Committee by several concurrent Proofs, to be James Talbot, an Irish Papist, concerned in the Preston Rebellion, and now in the Spanish Service.

Kelly, in his^m Examination before the Committee, owned his being intimately acquainted with this Talbot, and his having seen him the Morning he left England; and aⁿ Letter signed J. Talbot, was seized among Mrs. Barnes's Papers, in the same Hand with a^o Letter sent from France to Kelly, signed J. T. which is an Answer to^p one writ by Kelly to Crow.

On the twenty ninth of April^q Gordon acknowledges the Receipt of a Pacquet (already proved to be the Bishop's) and says he delivered it to the Gentleman as he was directed, who set out for Paris on the thirtieth of April. On the first of May, Dillon's Secretary^r writes to Kelly, 'Your Friend Crow is arrived safe, and delivered the three Books you gave him, as directed.'

On the second of May, Dillon himself^s writes to James Baker (which will be shewn to be another of Kelly's Names) and says, 'I saw your Acquaintance Crow two Days ago, who delivered me a Present from my Cousin Jones.'

And on the same Day James Talbot^t writes to Kelly, 'That Mr. Gordon gave him the Pacquet at Boulogne, which he delivered safe on Monday last, as directed. He adds, the Person received me very obligingly, and was much more open to me than I expected. Then, and since, he let me know he does not despair of doing his Business.'

On the seventh of May, Kelly^v writes to Dillon, 'That Illington was glad to hear he had received his Letters by Crow, and wished his next might be more to Dillon's Satisfaction.'

From these Passages it appears at one View, that the Bishop's Letters were sent by Kelly to Boulogne, by the Post; and thence conveyed to Dillon at Paris, by Talbot, Kelly's intimate Friend.

On the twenty fourth of April, Dillon's Secretary^u writes to Kelly a long Account of one Xoland (Nicholas Wogan) who was to command one of the Ships that was to be hired of some Swedish Merchants at Cadiz.

^a E. 10.^b E. 17.^c A. 2.^d D. 11, 12.^e E. 19.^f E. 32.^g E. 6.^h C. 51.ⁱ Lane, Howel, Xoland, Cane.^k E. 30.^l E. 26.^m E. 81.ⁿ E. 3.^o E. 62.^p E. 55.^q E. 34.^r E. 37.^s E. 38.^t E. 40.^u E. 41. a.^v E. 31.

This agrees with Mr. Craufurd's ^a Letter of the twenty fifth of July, N. S. 1722. in which he says that Nicholas Wogan was to have the Command of one of the Ships under Morgan, one of which having been lately taken at Genoa, the Commander (as your Committee are informed) has writ ^b over hither, that she was hired of some Swedish Merchants at Cadiz, with several other Circumstances, which agree entirely with this Letter to Kelly, and shew for what Use those Swedish Ships were hired.

In the same Letter Dillon's Secretary takes notice 'How kindly Freeman (the Pretender) had ^c spoken of Kelly in his last.'

On the 30th of April, Kelly ^c answers this Letter, but calls Nicholas Wogan by the Name of Moore, and says, 'I wish his Chief may succeed in his Journey.' Which being compared with the Accounts ^d sent about that Time from Mr. Davenant at Rome, that the Pretender was preparing to embark, makes it more than probable that he is the Chief, to whom Kelly wishes Success.

Kelly then gives an Account of a very important Conversation he had with one Hore: Who is meant by Hore, your Committee will not take upon them positively to determine, but by comparing several Passages of the Letters together, it appears to them highly probable, that it is Sir Harry Goring; in which Opinion they are the more confirmed by Hore's being mentioned as ill of the Gout in France, on the 14th of September: And Kelly takes notice in his ^e Pocket-Book, that Sir H. G. went to F. the 23d of August, which was the Day before the Bishop was taken up.

In this Letter Kelly says, 'Hore is most impatient to have a more satisfactory Account from your Side; and hopes there may be room now to expect it, since there was nine remitted by Repney: he will soon, as he tells me, send you two more, which with the Twelve thousand Arms provided by Mansfield's (Ormond's) Relations, and which are now ready to be sent wherever design'd, and paid for too, will, he hopes, bring Matters to some Prospect of bearing.'

Your Committee observe, that this Impatience of Hore falls in, in point of Time, with the Account ^f Lord Orrery gave Layer, that Lord North and Grey, Sir Harry Goring, Lord Strafford and others, were going to do a rash thing in favour of the Pretender. That it likewise agrees with the ^g Letter to Dodsworth, mention'd in the former Part of the Report; where it is said, 'That the Hopes given by G. to expect a great Sum, and by N. that he had raised Twenty thousand Pounds, induced Ormond to supply Morgan, and to make other necessary Provisions;' part of which Provisions appear to have been the Twelve thousand Arms mentioned in ^h Ormond's Letter of the 27th of April, in ⁱ Mr. Stanhope's the 8th of June, and again in this Letter of Kelly's.

Kelly adds, 'That he hears Ormond continues still upon the old String, that he can get no Officers, and says, I wish the sending over Hore's &c. Commissions may not do more hurt than good; for that Affair is already become no Secret, and may pique some Friends, as well as put Ill-wishers on their guard.'

This Passage shews that the Scheme for an Insurrection was at that time in such Forwardness, that Commissions were actually sent over; and confirms the Account of the late Duke of Ormond's being expected with Officers and Arms to support it.

On the 1st of May O. S. Dillon's Secretary writes ^k to Kelly, 'That he believes they have a sufficient quantity of Barrels bespoke, for the Wine they intend to buy; and that he hopes Clynton and Company have sent Malcom half Money, which Hore said he had, to pay for the Barrels which Jacobs has at his disposal.'

It has already been shewn that Malcom means the Pretender, and as Clynton's Money, which was before to be divided between Ormond and Jackson, is now to be sent half of it to Malcom: This is a farther Confirmation that Jackson means the Pretender; and agrees with the ^l Intelligence from France, of Sums sent about this time to Ormond and the Pretender.

In a Letter to Kelly of the 2d of May, was inclosed one ^m from Dillon to Femison, who appears to be some intimate Friend of John Plunket's, and ⁿ was present in France, when the Cyphers were settled between Dillon and Kelly; but his real Name is undiscover'd.

In this Letter Dillon acquaints Femison, 'That Mrs. Freeman intends to bring her Cause to a Trial as soon as possible; and that he believes Mr. Abel's Departure will be no Detriment to her Pretensions.' This Passage, compared with other Letters, shews that by Freeman is meant the Pretender, and by Abel his Majesty; and confirms the Design of an Insurrection at the beginning of May.

Dillon then desires Femison, 'To assure his Cousin Rogers (John Plunket) of his best Respects, and how much he depends on her friendly and kind Offices in his Family-Concerns, which have great need of so good Assistance.'

Plunket being ^o examined by the Committee in relation to this Letter, denied his knowing any such Person.

On the 7th of May, Kelly ^p writes to Dillon, acknowledging the Receipt of the Letter for Femison, mentions a long Discourse he had with one whom he calls Mr. Fox, who repented his being put out of the Pretender's Service by Dillon; but Kelly endeavour'd to convince him that Dillon had no hand in it, and laboured to regain him. Who Fox is, does not appear to your Committee.

Kelly then takes notice, 'That the Pretender's Favours to Hore, &c. had given great Offence; and that Rogers (Plunket) hearing of the Freedom which Hore and some of his Partners took with him, is much disoblige'd at it, and order'd Femison to tell Dillon so.'

Your Committee observe from this Passage, that Plunket is treated as one whom it was thought of consequence not to disoblige; and that Kelly was apprised of his Intimacy with Dillon.

Kelly then gives an Account of his having called on Mrs. Medley's (the Dutches of Ormond's) Chaplain. The Letter which desired him so to do, was directed to James Baker; and this, in which he says he has called upon the Chaplain, is signed J. J. which shews that James Baker is the same with J. J. which are the initial Letters of James Johnson.

the Government, and the Encampment of the King's Forces; but your Committee observe his Assurances of Success were so strong, that in the same Letter he says, 'The King will go abroad next Month, and if you can then compass Barrels enough, the sooner the Wine comes, I believe the better.'

On the 19th of May he was taken into Custody; and it appears to your Committee by the Deposition ^a of one of the Messengers who seized him, that when he was seized he offered to draw his Sword, but was prevented. That the other Messenger being called out of the Room to rescue one of their Companions, who was in danger of being murdered in the Street, Kelly called to the People of the House to lock the Door; and seizing his Sword, which had been laid by in the Window, drew it, and made a Pass at the Messenger, who verily believes he did it with an Intention to murder him: That he afterwards made a second Pass, and swore if he came in again he would stab him; and said, that if the Secretary of State who signed the Warrant had been there, he would have done the same. That the Messenger going out to call for help, and returning within a Minute, was told, that Kelly had in the mean time burnt one of the Papers seized upon him.

Another of the Messengers ^b has deposed, that before Kelly offered this Violence, he had been shewn by the Messengers the Scutcheons or Badges of their Office, and likewise had been shewn their Warrant signed by one of the Secretaries of State: That the Warrant was also shewn to a Person present in the Room, who perused it, and declar'd to Kelly, that it was a sufficient Authority for apprehending him.

Your Committee think it unnecessary to make any Observation on a Behaviour, which implies his having so strong a Sense of his own Guilt, that he rather chose to stand all the Consequences of resisting and assaulting his Majesty's Messenger in the Execution of his Office, than to let his Papers fall into the Hands of the Government; fearing (as may justly be concluded) that such a Discovery might prove fatal to himself as well as others.

But your Committee find, that however careful he was to destroy all his Papers, yet one was seized upon him and preserved, which is of itself sufficient to prove him concerned in the treasonable Correspondence above set forth.

It was a List of Directions, in the following Words:

To Anthony Saunders Esq; or Mr. Joshua Vernon at Will's Coffeehouse Covent-Garden, London.

To Mr. James Baker, or Arthur Stephens Esq; at Burton's Coffeehouse in King's Street, near St. James's London.

By the three first of these Names, most of the Letters to him above mentioned came directed; and your Committee find, that a Person having been employed to watch at Burton's Coffeehouse, who should take up Letters directed to Mr. James Baker at that House, has ^c deposed upon Oath, That on the 14th of May, a Letter so directed being left there by the Postman, George Kelly came in and took the same, opened and read it, and went out of the House with a Letter in his Pocket to Mrs. Barnes's.

It appears to your Committee, that when he was ^d examined before the Lords, the 21st of May, 1722. he endeavoured to account for his receiving Letters by various Names, by saying, That one Mr. Talbot, who was under a Cloud, and who went for France or Spain about a Week before, had desired him to call at Coffeehouses for Letters directed to the said Talbot by several Names; and particularly that the Letter directed to Baker, which he own'd he took up, was for the said Talbot. Yet your Committee observe, that the said Talbot ^e arrived at Boulogne on the 25th of April, and did himself send a ^f Letter from Paris to Kelly, on the 2d of May, signed J. T. directed To Mr. James Baker at Burton's Coffeehouse aforesaid; and Letters ^g continued to be sent by that Direction from Paris, till the time that Kelly was taken into Custody, tho' Talbot was all that time in France.

Kelly being ^h examin'd by your Committee in relation to these Letters, persisted in the same Account, that they were for Talbot, and that the Occasion of Talbot's going abroad was, that Talbot had received an Account of General Crofton's being dead, and of his having left him what he had. Which Particular, your Committee observe, agrees in part with Neynoe's ⁱ Account, that Kelly had shewn him a Letter at Burton's Coffeehouse from Dillon's Agent or Secretary, in which it was said, that the Death of General Crofton would be a great Loss to Mansfield, which Name Kelly explain'd to him to mean the late Duke of Ormond.

Kelly farther ^k owned to your Committee, 'That he went to France the beginning of the Winter 1721. and again the Spring following, on account of Transactions he had in the Stocks there. That he was desired by a Brother of the Lord Dillon's to carry over to General Dillon an Act of Parliament relating to the Estate of that Family, but that this was the only Paper he carried' That he saw Christopher Glascock, who is a Captain in Dillon's Regiment, and knew Sir John D'Obryan, who is Dillon's Secretary, and had likewise seen Colin Campbell of Glenderoule at Coffeehouses, but had never spoke to the latter.

Yet your Committee observe, that as in his Letters he often sends Services to Sir John and Christy, he does also to Glen and Collins, which last Name is explain'd Glenderoule in his own Cypher ^l taken among Dennis Kelly's Papers. And when he was examined before the ^m Lords, he own'd his having receiv'd Letters from one Glasgow at Paris, which Name in Plunket's Cypher is expressed by the fictitious Name of Howell, and has been shewn above to mean the same with Quitwell, Querry, Bonnarville, and other Names which belong to Dillon's Secretary, and are subscribed to several treasonable Letters from France.

Kelly denied to your Committee his being at all known to the late Lord Marr, or Alexander Gordon of Boulogne; tho' he own'd his going by the Name of Johnson, by which Name the ⁿ Letter to Gordon was signed, and the ^o Answer from Gordon directed: And the ^p Letter from Marr was directed to Hatfield, which Name has been shewn to mean the same Person as James Johnson, and has been proved by other Circumstances to belong to Kelly.

He own'd his writing to a broken Banker at Paris by a fictitious Name in relation to Stocks, but said he had forgot the Name, and that he never received a Letter in his Life signed by a fictitious Name.

But your Committee had reason to believe from the whole Tenour of his Behaviour at his^a Examination, that he grossly prevaricated with them; for at his first coming in, before he would make any Answer, he very formally insisted that nothing he should then say should be made use of against his own Life, nor as Evidence against any other Person: And upon these Conditions he promised to answer directly to all Questions that should be ask'd him.

Your Committee seeing some Reason from the manner of his insisting upon these Conditions, to believe that he was dispos'd to act ingenuously with them, order'd him to withdraw, that they might consider amongst themselves, how far it was in their Power, or proper for them to agree to Conditions, which would have made his Examination of no Effect; and upon his being called in again, and receiving such Answer as the Committee thought it in their Power to give, he deny'd his knowing any thing at all of the Conspiracy. This your Committee apprehend to be altogether inconsistent with the Conditions he insisted on, which manifestly imply'd that a Confession of all he knew, might endanger his own Life, as well as affect other Persons. But in the Course of his Examination he owned to them, that the Promise they had given him, was not satisfactory, tho', as he pretended, he could not have answer'd their Questions in any other Manner, if their Promise had come up to the Conditions he insisted on.

Your Committee observe, that Kelly was admitted to Bail from his first Confinement about the seventh of June last, and they conceive it to be a great Aggravation of his Guilt, that he immediately took advantage of this Enlargement to resume the same treasonable Correspondences, and to send triumphant Accounts to France, of his having baffled the Government by the harden'd Obstinacy of his Behaviour; thereby improving, as far as in him lay, the Liberty granted him by the Favour and Indulgence of the Laws, to the Subversion of our happy Constitution. For on the 11th of June, but a very few Days after his being out on Bail, he sent a long^b Letter to Gerrard, (whom your Committee believe to be Sir John D'Obryan, as has been already observ'd) in which, the better to disguise the Matter, he gives an Account of his Cousin's late Misfortune, as from a third Person; but in a^c subsequent Letter to Dillon the 18th of June, he owns the writing this Letter himself.

In this Letter to Gerrard he says, ' That he was bailed the Thursday before, and that the Judges were never known so severe in any Case of the like Kind: That most of the Questions ask'd him at his Examination were about a little Dog which he got from a Surgeon when he was last in France; that they mention'd no Persons to him but General Dillon, and one Mr. Morgan: That to the first he owns he is a little known, having carry'd over an Act of Parliament to him that concerned his Family, but that the latter he never saw: That Lord Carteret had a List of five or six Cant Names, as he call'd them, which were, Illington, Jones, Howel, Quitwell and Hacket, and what he never heard of before; that however they would persuade him he knew some Persons that were meant by those Names, which he vows he never did, and whosoever Illington is, he was the Person principally struck at. That he is not at all satisfy'd with the Behaviour of his Friends: that Gerrard's old Friend Rig indeed offered all that could be expected of the poor Man; but others in whose Power it was to do more, shew'd no Concern at all for his Misfortune. That he lay ten Days in the closest Confinement, without so much as a Message from any of those he depended most upon; that it is well he had no Secrets to reveal, since such Usage might provoke a passionate Man; and that the World is pretty well convinc'd that he had not; since no Persons seem'd to be the least apprehensive that he could do them any Mischief.

' That this shews what the Friendship of some People is; but whilst there is one righteous Person, we must, for his sake, overlook greater Misfortunes.

' That he is very well, and under no great Concern for any thing as to himself but the Expence, having more than his own to answer.

' He concludes, with desiring Gerrard to direct under Cover to Mr. Andrews at the Dog and Duck in St. James's-street?

Your Committee find, that after this Time several Letters did come from France, directed to Mr. Andrews at the Dog and Duck, and that the Master of that House having been examined, has deposed on Oath, ' That one Andrews order'd him to take in Letters that should come by the foreign Post so directed, and that three of those Letters were directed to the Dog and Duck in King-street, by Mistake; but were afterward brought to his House in St. James's-street, and taken up by Andrews, who happen'd to be there when they came in.'

It appears farther to your Committee, that the said Andrews having been examined, has deposed on Oath, ' That Mr. Johnson alias Kelly, desired him to take in some Letters directed to him, Andrews, at the Dog and Duck Ale-house in St. James's-street; that he received in the whole four or five, in the Months of July, August and September last, to the best of his Remembrance; that they appeared by the Charge of Postage to be foreign Letters, and that he delivered them unopened to the said Johnson alias Kelly, who paid him the Postage; that he, Andrews, knew nothing of the Contents, nor ever returned any Answer to them.'

On the 18th of June, ^e Kelly writes to Crow (James Talbot) giving him an Account of his late Misfortune, and the Reasons of his Silence, and mentioning his Design of going over into France, as soon as his Appearance in Westminster-Hall should be over.

' He then sends his Service to all Friends, particularly to Sir John and Christy (Sir John D'Obryan and Christopher Glascock,) and desires Talbot to tell the latter he must find out some other Address for him to write by, since he has good Reasons for not using the former, which have prevented him from writing to him these ten Days past, and that if it were to a French Person, it would be so much the better.'

Your Committee observe, that soon after, a French Direction to Monsieur Maisonnewve ^a was sent over to Kelly by Christopher Glascock, which Kelly made use of for some Time, and the ^b original Letter in Kelly's Hand stopt at the Post-Office, is so directed. They likewise observe the Reasons which Kelly says he had, not to make use of the old Directions, appear evidently to have been, that he was questioned before the Lords on the Names of Howell and Quitwell, which were the Names made use of for Glascock.

He concludes his Letter to Crow, with desiring him to direct to him by the Name of Wilkins at Will's Coffee-house; and your Committee observe, that not long after ^c a Letter came signed J. T. and so directed; which was stopt, and is in the same Hand with the ^d Letter signed J. Talbot, seized at Mrs. Barnes's; which confirms Talbot to be Crow.

In this Letter to Crow was enclosed one from Kelly to Dillon by the Name of Dixwell; the Substance of which has been partly set forth in that Part of the Report, which relates to the Bishop of Rocheſter. In this Letter 'he desires to be excused from meddling in Business for some Time; but says, it does not proceed from any Change of Opinion, or Repentment of the little Concern that has been shewn him; but from a Conviction, that without changing both their Method and their People it will be impossible to make any Thing of it.'

Kelly adds in this Letter: 'Your Correspondents at Will's and Burton's are gone, and desire you may write no more that Way; and when you do me that Favour, please to address under Cover to Mr. David Wilkins at Will's Coffee-house, Covent-Garden, and not to Andrews, as I desired.'

This Passage confirms the List of Directions to Will's and Burton's, found in Kelly's Pocket; and shews that the Letters to Wilkins, as well as Andrews, were for Kelly, tho', as is before observed, 'he denied the having ever received any Letter under a fictitious Name.'

On the twenty-eighth of June, James Talbot ^e writes to Kelly, congratulating him on his Enlargement and Behaviour, and expressing his Surprise, that he should at such a Juncture have Reason to complain of want of Friends.'

On the same Day Glascock ^f writes to Ireton under Cover to Andrews; and as Andrews delivered these Letters unopened to Kelly, this shews that Ireton is another Name for Kelly, of which the Matter of the Letters furnishes abundant Proof.

In this Letter Glascock takes notice, that Kelly's Letter to Chitwood came safe. This refers to Kelly's Letter of the eighteenth to Dixwell, and shews Chitwood to be another Name for Dillon.

'That what he had recommended in relation to the New Book of Accounts would be observed, and that Forrester had the same Advice given to him and Ormond.' Who Forrester is does not appear to the Committee, but, as he is mention'd here with the late Duke of Ormond, he is probably the Person who wrote the Letters to Dumville and Dodsworth above-mentioned.

Glascock then tells him, 'That Ormond had expressed much Concern for what had befallen Kelly. He afterwards desires the Particulars of his Case, and to know what is wanting for paying off the Doctor's and Apothecary's Bills, acknowledges the Receipt of a Letter from Rogers, and inquires after Jemison.'

On the twenty-eighth of June, Kelly ^g writes to Talbot 'of the Neglect that had been shewn him, and the Reasons that he had to decline any farther Traffick with the Merchants here; he says, if Talbot perceives no likelihood of a sudden Change for the better, he must retire to some cheap part of the Country, if Dillon allows of it; expresses his great Obligations to Dillon, and his Readiness to execute any private Commands of his;' and adds, (what appears to your Committee very remarkable) 'If I were in a Condition to bear the Weight of publick Business, Dillon should never be at the Trouble to employ another, but that he is heartily sorry Dillon himself has done it so long, for ungrateful People on this Side; says, he never intended to trouble his Friends on this Side on his own private Account, but publick ones of this Nature are what he thinks they ought to take care of, since they are best able to do it, and expect the best Returns for it.'

Your Committee observe from Passages, that tho' Kelly would have it believed he only corresponded with Persons in France on private Affairs, relating to the Stocks, yet he here owns in Effect, that he had been trusted with Affairs of a publick Nature, and that those Transactions having brought on him the Displeasure of the Government, it was reasonable for him to hope for Support from those in England, who expected the best Returns from his and Dillon's joint Labours.

Your Committee farther observe, that this Letter was directed to Crow, and yet in it was enclosed one from Ireland, relating to Family Affairs, directed to James Talbot. Etq;

On the fourth of July, Glascock ^h writes to Kelly, 'That Dillon intended to have sent him a Letter of Credit by the Post, drawn on Mr. Harrold, but kept it back till he heard from him, for fear, by removal into the Country, or by any other Accident, it should be lost.'

On the eleventh of July, Glascock ⁱ repeats the same, and his Suspicion that the Letters to Andrews had miscarried. Then acquaints Kelly with kind Expressions that he had seen from Dr. Freeman and Mrs. Malcom (the Pretender and his Spouse) in relation to Hawksby's first Operation in his late violent Distemper.

Your Committee observe from what follows in this Letter, that, tho' in Plunket's Cypher Hawksby stands for King George, yet in the Pretender's Cypher it stands for George without any Addition, and appears for that Reason to be made use of to denote George Kelly in this Place. Be that as it will, it is evident from what follows, that Kelly is the Person here meant.

The Pretender's Words mention'd in this Letter are as follows:

Hawksby's steddly and resolute Behaviour in the first Operation, answers the good Opinion I have long had of him; I am fully persuaded that all the Surgeons will do hereafter shall not be able to alter his Temper, and I hope he will come off with Patience and a short Confinement, by which his Health will become more perfect and satisfactory to his Friends.'

^a E. 54.^b E. 21.^c E. 62.^d E. 3.^e E. 53.^f E. 54.^g E. 55.^h E. 56.ⁱ E. 57.

Glascock then adds, ‘ Mrs. Malcum (the Pretender’s Spouse) in her short way of Expression, says, I am truly glad that honest Hawksby is recover’d, for I take him to be a very valuable Man.’

Then he says, ‘ I know these Compliments will be comfortable to a sick Person from his Friends, for which reason I trouble you with them, as a Proof of my Attention towards one I wish so well.’

These last words shew, that this Comfort was intended for Kelly, to support him under his Trouble, which is disguis’d under the Notion of Sickness; and your Committee think it unnecessary for them to make any Observation on a Passage, which shews so plainly for whose sake it was understood he had brought this Trouble on himself.

Glascock next tells him, ‘ That as he is upon regulating his new Book of Accounts, he should be glad to know whether Kelly and Jemison had those by them, they and Glascock rectify’d together.’

This shews that Kelly’s Journeys into France were not wholly on private Affairs, and confirms ^a Neynoe’s Account of his having seen Cyphers in Kelly’s Hands, and is again confirm’d by the ^b Cypher found among Dennis Kelly’s Papers, which is in George Kelly’s Hand-writing.

Glascock then sends him the French Direction he had desired.

On the seventeenth of July, Glascock writes again to Kelly, to let him know why the Bill was not sent, and to desire a sure Address. He likewise cautions Kelly not to draw any more on Digby, but on Messieurs Chitwood and Dupleffis, at Mr. Hues Banker rue de la Monnoye. Your Committee observe, that this was about the time that Mr. Crawford ⁴ made the Discovery above related about the Name of Digby; and that for some time after, Kelly directs his Letters for Dillon to Dupleffis, till a new Cypher, which he, Kelly, sent over afterwards came to be made use of.

On the 19th of July, Kelly writes to Glascock, that Mr. Andrews received the several Letters from Glascock all together; which was occasioned by a Mistake in directing them to King-Street, instead of St. James’s; which agrees with Andrews’s ^c Deposition above-mention’d.

He then returns Thanks for the Letter of Credit intended him, and says it will come safe either to Mr. Wilkins at Will’s Coffee-house, or to Mr. Andrews at the Dog and Duck. This, compared with Andrews’s Deposition, shews that the Bill was for Kelly himself: which Observation the Committee think it proper to make, because, when he was examined before them in relation to the Letters directed to Andrews, tho’ nothing was said to him about the said Bill, he immediately endeavour’d to explain away that Matter by the following ^e Prevarication.

He said, ‘ He had been desir’d by one Mrs. Oxburgh in the City, Daughter to him who was executed, to receive some Letters for her from abroad, and that he did not know but he might employ one Andrews, or some other Friend to take up such Letters. That he had likewise received some Money on a Bill for the said Mrs. Oxburgh, of a little Man, a Banker in Lotbbury,

‘ or somewhere behind the Exchange, and that he had endorsed the Bill with his own Hand.’

Your Committee observe that this last Circumstance makes it probable the Bill was for himself, since his Endorsement on a Foreign Bill (which is not usually made payable to the Bearer) would not have entitled him to have received the Money, nor have been a sufficient Discharge except the Bill had been made payable to him.

They likewise observe, that Mr. Martin Harold, on whom the Bill was drawn, whom Kelly avoided to name, does live behind the Exchange, tho’ not in Lotbbury; and in Glascock’s ^h Letter of the Twenty-fourth of July, Kelly is particularly directed to endorse the Bill on Harold with his own Name. Your Committee submit it to the Consideration of the House, whether it is not evident from these Circumstances, that Kelly received the said Money for his own use, as a Reward for his Sufferings, and an Encouragement to persist in his Obstinacy.

On the 23d of July Kelly writes to Talbot, ‘ That this Bill and the hopes of Success in another Particular, when the Term is over, makes him a little easy.

‘ That as to what they had so often talk’d about, he did not know what to say to it, and that Nicholas Wogan’s Return gave him the less hopes of it; but that he heard the Beautiful Squire was certainly determin’d on something, but when, and in what manner, is what he knows nothing of.’ Who is meant by the Beautiful Squire, the Committee cannot take upon them to determine; but they observe this Letter was writ the Day after Layer’s return by Epping from Norfolk, at which time he told ^k Plunket, ‘ That the Pretender’s Friends would run down the Ministry and King George in a little time, and bring the Law-Suit to bear on their own bottom, independent of the Regent, or any Body else;’ as is related in Plunket’s Letter of the same Date with this of Kelly’s.

On the 2d of August, Kelly writes to Glascock, ‘ That he had received the Bill. That his Letter of Licence is not out till the end of October, and that his Creditors threaten then to shew him no mercy: In the mean time he must hope the best, and wish that some good Turn of Fortune may enable him to do them justice.’

He adds, ‘ That he expected to have sent the State of their Accounts before now, but that the Gentleman who was to carry them, met with an Accident the other Night, which prevented him; therefore he cannot do it till he recovers, or some other Opportunity offers.’ Then sends a long Account of Dennis Kelly’s being taken up.

On the 6th of August ^m he sends the same Account to Dillon, and mentions the great Terror the Guards are under from Informers; which Intelligence your Committee observe, was thought considerable enough to make an Article in the Pretender’s late Declaration.

On the same day he sends ⁿ Glascock an account of Sample’s, Cotton’s, and one Campbell’s being taken up; ‘ That there were Reports of one Sir Harry Goring’s being taken, and of Forces being sent for the Lord North and Grey,

‘ Lord

‘ Lord Strafford, and other Persons of Quality; but that he finds there is no Truth in them, and is told that the two last are come to Town. He then desires to know Dillon's private Thoughts from whence the ill Report of his Cousin's Circumstances comes, which has occasion'd this Severity from his Creditors, and says, he hopes soon to send the State of their Accounts, which has hitherto been delay'd for want of a proper Hand.’

On the 9th of August, Kelly^a writes to Glascock, ‘ That Den is come to Town, and behaves like a Friend; but that Rep is still in the Country, and so is Ho; and that the latter had earnestly desired Kelly to go to him for a few Days, which he had hopes of doing, but intended to make but a short stay.’

Your Committee see reason to believe, that by Ho is meant Hore; and they find an Entry in Kelly's Pocket-Book of his having been at Mrs. H's, and another Entry in these Words; To enquire for Mr. — at Mr. William Bayning's at Horn-Dean, which is a House much frequented by Sir Harry Goring, as appears by a^b Deposition annexed to this Report.

Who are meant by Den and Rep your Committee will not take upon them to determine, tho' they think this Letter compared with that writ three Days before, may lead to a Discovery of the Persons meant.

On the 13th of August, Kelly^c writes again to Glascock, ‘ That he intends to visit H. who being at a pretty good Distance in the Country, he cannot return under four or five Days. Which agrees with the Circumstance of his going down as far as Horn-Dean near Petersfield.

He afterwards adds a very remarkable Paragraph in these Words: ‘ what would you advise poor Trotter to do, he is ready to take a Voyage any where, and is, you know, an honest and fit Person for that Business; he has wrote very earnestly to me for my Advice, which I told him I could not give till I heard from you.’

Your Committee think it their Duty to observe to the House, that in the^d Cypher found among Dennis Kelly's Papers, in George Kelly's own Hand-writing, Trotter is one of the fictitious Names set over against the Name of Carte, and that on the Day this Letter was writ, His Majesty had issued his Royal Proclamation for apprehending the said Carte, against whom it is there set forth a Warrant had been issued by one of the Secretaries of State for Treasonable Practices, and that he had absconded and fled from Justice.

Yet it appears from this Letter, that George Kelly, far from discovering where the said Carte was conceal'd, was desirous to promote his Escape, by getting him invited to undertake a Voyage into foreign Parts; and that notwithstanding the treasonable Practices alledged against him, he here gives him the Testimonial of an honest Man, owns his having had Communication with him by Letter, after the Time of his Escape, solicited Glascock in his Favour, and undertakes to aid and assist the said Carte with his Advice, as soon as he should have an Answer from Glascock.

On the 13th of August, Glascock^e writes again to Kelly, in relation to the Bill on Harold, and mentions his expecting the Gentleman soon that was to clear Accounts.

He afterwards tells Kelly, ‘ That Mrs. Musgrave had received Advice from her Father, that she is not to expect a Farthing of the Allowance due to her for the Time past, or to come, which Allen had procured a seizure of, on account of her Husband's Debts and Mismanagement.’

Your Committee, from comparing this Letter with others, where Musgrave is mentioned, and from observing the Date, see reason to believe, that this Passage relates to the stopping a Pension, which the Committee are informed by his Majesty's singular Bounty and Indulgence, and upon Application from the late Lord Marr, and Promise of Services, was allowed to him; and they cannot reflect, without Indignation and Astonishment, on the black Ingratitude of Persons, who, while they were in a great measure subsisted by his Majesty's unexampled Liberality, were labouring by the most wicked and unjustifiable Practices to dispossess him of his Crown, and to destroy his sacred Life.

On the 17th of August, Glascock^f writes again to Kelly, and among other things says, ‘ He is contriving to get at Barker for a Relief in favour of Farmer's (the Pretender's) Children, in case their Step-Father should pretend to deprive them of their Due.’ It appears by another^g Letter, Barker means some considerable Person in France; but what this Passage particularly relates to, your Committee cannot with certainty determine. However they have thought it their Duty to lay this and other obscure Passages before the House, that it may be seen how much it is in the power of Persons now in custody to discover; and of what Importance it is to the Safety of his Majesty's Government, that such Discovery should be required at their Hands.

On the 20th of August, three Days before the Bishop of Rocheſter was taken into custody, Kelly^h writes to Glascock (the Original of which Letter is stopp'd, and sworn to be his Hand-writing;) and says, ‘ Your Cousins Ireton and Wilkins are both gone into the Country, and earnestly beg the Favour of you not to write to them any more for which you will soon know the Reasons.’

On the 30th of August heⁱ writes to Dillon; and after giving a very long and particular Account of all the Circumstances of the Bishop's being taken up, examined, and committed to the Tower, he says, ‘ You are by this satisfy'd of the Reasons of my late Silence.’ Your Committee observe, That these Passages shew the Connection which Kelly thought there was between the Bishop and himself.

In the same Letter of the 20th of August your Committee observe another very remarkable Circumstance; Kelly says, that he is going to the Country that Day, and he had said^k before that he was going to Mr. Hore's.

In his^l Pocket-Book notice is taken, that Sir H. G. went to F. on the 23d.

On the 14th of September, Glascock^m writes him word, ‘ That Mrs. Hore was under a Fit of her old Sickness at Rouen; but that it was not safe, for many good Reasons, to have her transported to Paris, there being abundance of Quacks going about, which cause much Mischief.’

From this Time forwards Kelly makes use of a new Cypher of Names, and new Directions to his Letters.

On the 27th Kelly, ^a writes again and says, 'That since Mr. G. Sampson went, he has not heard a Syllable from his Correspondents in France, which has been a great Detriment to several of their Friends.'

On the 9th of October, ^b Glascock sends him word, 'That all the Letters he wrote by the Post, came safe; but that he had not yet seen the Person who was to deliver him the particular Instructions and Address he was to make use of, that Person being still detained in the Country; but that he had taken Measures to get from him the Memorandum Kelly had given him.'

On the 17th of October, Glascock ^c sends Kelly word, That the Book of Accounts sent by G. Saunders is at last come to hand, tho' the Person that brought it is still in the Country, so that they are now in a Condition to settle Accounts with Kelly. And from this Time forward the Correspondents in France make use of a new Cypher of Names, and new Directions to their Letters.

From all these Circumstances, your Committee see reason to believe, that Kelly sent over a new Cypher, and a new List of Directions to France by Sir Harry Goring; in which they are the more confirm'd, by observing that this new Cypher appears fram'd in such a Manner, that the initial Letters of the real Names are always prefixed to the fictitious ones, which last are frequently varied, but the initial Letter never. This will be more clearly understood by instancing in one of the Names.

The Person who carried over the Cypher and List of Directions from Kelly, is in some Letters call'd G. Sampson; in others G. Stephenson, G. Saunders, and G. Sandford; and appears to be the same with Mrs. Hore, who was observed before to be probably Sir Harry Goring.

Your Committee farther observe, That all the Names made use of in the new Directions, were enter'd by Kelly in the ^d Pocket-Book that was taken upon him when he was last seiz'd, with such Marks and Observations before them, as need no great Explanation. Over-against the Names of Bonnawille and Disode, is writ the Abbreviation Glas. and a ^e Letter signed Disode, having been stopped at the Post Office, appears to be in the same hand as those signed Howell, Quitwell, Querry, &c. which were shewn above to have been writ by Glascock. Over-against Brisac and Du Puy, is writ Stur; and your Committee find that Letters came for Kelly, directed by these Names to Stur-gis's Coffee-house. Over-against Contade and Lunelle, is writ Slau; and your Committee find, that Letters thus directed were left for him at Slaughter's Coffee-house.

The Committee are sensible, that their entering into so minute a Detail, must be tedious to the House; but as the Conspirators have been no less industrious than they are obstinate in concealing their Teason, your Committee have thought it their Duty to trace it thro' every Disguise, as near as they could, and to lay before the House every Circumstance which may any way tend to a Discovery so necessary for the Safety and Quiet of these Kingdoms, and yet so little to be hoped for from the present Temper and Disposition of the Conspirators themselves.

The first ^f of Kelly's Letters, writ in this new Cypher, is of the 10th of September, directed to Bonnawille (Glascock) under Cover to Hues, Banker at Paris.

In this he says, 'I hope you have seen G. Stephenson before now,' and mentions a Trunk that he is soon to send to him; which Circumstance shews he is the same Person meant by G. Sandford in other Letters.

He then takes notice of a young Fellow that he had recommended, (which was observed before to be probably Neynoe) 'and earnestly begs the Goods he carries with him may be disposed of at any Rate; and, if possible, without Mr. L. Crawford's or his Partners being concerned in the Bargain.' Your Committee observe from Neynoe's Informations, that he was to be recommended by Kelly to Lord Lansdown's Family. They likewise observe from several other Letters, that Dillon, upon the Caution given him by Skinner from the Bishop of Rocheester, was grown very jealous of his former Friends at Paris; from which Circumstances, they think it probable, that by L. Crawford, is meant Lord Lansdown.

He then adds, 'Your Cousin C. Saunders is well, and with a Friend in the Country, who will take particular Care of her, till a better Service can be got for her.'

This compared with what he says in his Letter of the 13th of August, of Trotter's having writ to him for Advice, and wanting to be employ'd in a Voyage or other Business, makes it probable, that by C. Saunders is meant Carte.

He then adds, 'Your Relations, N. Crone and S. Farrel, have made several Bargains for ready Money in the third Subscription; and as the Time allow'd by Parliament for Non-prosecution will be out as soon as it sits, their Creditors will then fall upon them and all their Friends, and put them in Jail, except you can send them some Relief: And tho' your Actions are at a very low Price, however, I believe, they would be extremely pleased to have them sold at any rate, to enable them to pacify their Creditors on this Side, and to put them in a state of Safety.'

It has been observ'd that the Conspiracy is often treated of under the Cant of Stocks; and whether this third Subscription may not mean the third Period of Time fix'd by the Conspirators, and the Relief desired be not some Assistance from Abroad, is submitted to the Consideration of the House.

That this Passage cannot be understood in the literal Sense, is evident from its being said, that the Time of Non-prosecution expires at the Sitting of the Parliament; but your Committee apprehend, that the Meaning of this Paragraph is fully explain'd by another in the same Letter, in which Kelly says, 'There is no Prospect of the State Prisoners getting out till next Term, and if the Habeas Corpus Act be suspended at the Meeting of the Parliament, they will remain during the Government's Pleasure, and perhaps have Company enough.' Who are meant by N. Crone and S. Farrel, is submitted to the Conjecture of the House.

His next ^a Letter to Glascock is of the 27th Sept. in which he complains, ' That he has not heard a Syllable from D. Gainer (Dillon probably or G. Roberts (Glascock probably) since Mr. G. Sampson (Goring) went; which has been no small Detriment to some of their Friends.' He adds, ' The Term being soon at hand, we shall be much at a Loss how to manage without their Advice; which G. Sampson positively promis'd to send a speedy Account of.

' The Situation of your Friends stands much as it did, and nothing has happened of late in your Family to ease their Losses, or mend their Condition.'

He then gives a long Account of the Lord North and Grey's being seiz'd at Portsmouth, and of his being to be brought to Town that Night; and concludes thus:

' I must now plainly tell you, that I am afraid your Cousin N. Clifton is in a very bad Way, and a Person (whom he lately employed to manage some Things for him, particularly to compound some S. Sea Bargains) has not been true to him: For his Creditors have actually put him in Jail, and except you can contrive to send him some Relief from what Effects he put into your Mississippi (for I don't find he has any other Prospect) his Confinement will prove fatal to him. You know his Worth, and for Heaven's sake don't forsake him.'

This Letter being mentioned to be writ on the Day Lord North and Grey was brought up in Custody, your Committee cannot but be led to conjecture, that by N. Clifton is meant the said Lord, and that the Person said to be employ'd by him, and suspected of being false to him, is either Lynch or Layer; and if this Conjecture be admitted, it is not improbable that by N. Crone, in the former Letter, may be meant the said Lord North.

On the 20th October, Glascock ^b writes to Kelly, ' That D. Gainer (who in another Part of the Letter is call'd D. Gregory, and is probably Dillon) thinks very seriously of the Commissions with which Kelly had charg'd him for his Friends, and does not refuse to employ his whole Credit in that Affair; but that one single Article had consum'd the Bill of Exchange, which N. Cleaton sent, and that there is not any other come that Dillon knows of.'

Here N. Cleaton means evidently the same as N. Clifton in Kelly's Letter; and it appears he had sent a Bill of Exchange to France, which was all consum'd in one single Article of Expence. In former Letters notice was taken of a Bill of Exchange sent over by Repney, and of 20000*l.* raised by N.

In the same Letter, Glascock takes notice of some Goods sent by Contade and Lunelle for Kelly's Use, which he desires Kelly to send for, and to acknowledge the Receipt of them carefully.

It appears to your Committee, that these Goods were the Pretender's Declarations, which came inclosed that Post, or the next, under blank Covers to Contade and Lunelle at Slaughter's Coffee-house, agreeable to the Memorandum in Kelly's Pocket-Book.

In another Part of the foregoing Letter, it is said, that Mr. G. Sampson has sent over his Project of Accommodation, and waits the Event of it, which it is probable relates to the same Declaration.

Kelly being examin'd by the Committee in relation to the Names in his ^d Pocket-Book, said, ' They were Names of Persons, with whom he had transacted Stock-Affairs in France several Years ago. He own'd he had seen Letters at Slaughter's and Sturgis's Coffee-house, directed by some of those Names, but that it might easily happen, that there might be Persons in England of the same Names with others in France; and that it was his Misfortune Letters should come directed by those Names. He insisted, that his Pocket-Book, tho' taken upon him, was an old one, that had lain by neglected these three Years: Yet your Committee observe, the Memorandums in it were of a late Date, and contain'd a particular Account of the Time of his Journeys to and from France, and of the Days on which he and Dennis Kelly, and the Bishop of Rocheſter, were taken into Custody.

The House will observe, that this long and particular Account of George Kelly is extracted out of such Papers and Informations, as were in the Hands of the Government, relating to him, supported by such Explications as seem to the Committee naturally to arise from comparing the several Parts of them together; but that he himself upon his Examination refused to make the least Discovery that might give light to any part of this treasonable Correspondence, tho' he plainly intimated he had it in his Power to do it. And if in some Particulars, the Committee should have fallen short of the true and genuine Explanation of the Names, or other Facts, which may easily have happen'd in unfolding such Variety of Matter, so industriously wrapt up in the utmost Obscurity; yet they conceive it will not lessen the Credit of those Facts in general relating to him, which are supported by unquestionable Evidence, notwithstanding his denying of them, and his prevaricating so grossly with the Committee.

Your Committee will now proceed to lay before you such Particulars, as they have collected from the Papers referred to them, relating to Dennis Kelly Esq; who appears to them, from several Passages in the intercepted Letters, to have acted in Concert with the other Kelly, and behaved himself with the same Obstinacy on his ^e Examination before them.

Your Committee see Reason to believe, that the several fictitious Names of Kirton, Killegrew, Sandford, St. George, and Hubberts, are made use of in the intercepted Letters to express one and the same Person: And as this Person is frequently spoken of as living at the Cockpit, as being himself ill of a Fever and Ague part of last Summer, as having a Daughter who was troubled with Returns of spitting Blood at particular Times there mention'd, and as being to set out with his Family for France by Diepe, the latter end of July; these several Circumstances being confirmed to your Committee by the written ^f Examinations of Mr. Dennis Kelly's Servants to have been true of him, and being in the Opinion of the Committee applicable to no one else, they see Reason to conclude, that what is affirmed in the intercepted

Your Committee have likewise been ^a informed, that Enquiry having been made at the British Coffee-House, who took up Letters directed thither by the Name of Sandford, it was found that one Mr. Kelly, who frequented that House, took them up. And a Letter from France so directed, having been copied at the Post-Office, and then delivered out, the ^b Original of the said Letter, signed M. Digby, was found in Dennis Kelly's Pocket, when he was taken up, as appears by the ^c Affidavit of the Messenger who seiz'd him.

In this Letter Digby sends his Service to his Cousin Ireton, which has been shewn above to be one of the Names belonging to George Kelly; and also mentions Hore, who has been already explained to be probably Sir Harry Goring.

Your Committee observe, that the said Letter was writ in the same Hand with another ^d signed J. Gerrard, which was likewise found among Dennis Kelly's Papers, and has been observ'd above to be probably the Name made use of by Sir John D'Obryan, whom George Kelly declared to be Secretary to Dillon.

They farther observe, that both these Letters, signed Gerrard and Digby, were in the same Hand with ^e others found in his Custody relating to Dillon's private Affairs; which confirms Digby to be Dillon, and Gerrard to be one whose Hand Dillon makes use of for his Dispatches.

Another ^f Fragment of a Letter was found among his Papers, mentioning the Names of Ireton and Hore; which is in the same Hand with the Letters to Plunkett, signed Dixwell and Howell, and is therefore probably the writing of Christopher Glascock, George Kelly's Correspondent.

Some other ^g Papers were also found in his Custody, mentioning others of the fictitious Names used in George Kelly's Letters, as also a long ^h List of Names, with fictitious Names over-against them, and a ⁱ Cypher of Figures, which appear to be George Kelly's Hand-writing, and are sworn, by the Clerks of the Post-Office, to be the same Hand in which the Letters signed Johnson, Hatfield, &c. were writ. It has already been observed, that this Cypher of Figures is found to be a Supplement to the Cypher in which the Letters of the late Duke of Ormond, and the Bishop of Rocheſter were writ; and that the said Cypher last mentioned is made use of in ^k one of the intercepted Letters from Dillon to Dennis Kelly.

There was also found among his Papers, an exact ^l List of the quartering of his Majesty's Forces a little before the time of the Elections, and a ^m Scheme for erecting By-Boats between London and Boulogne, which seems referred to in the ⁿ Letters between George Kelly and Gordon of Boulogne.

There was also taken among his Papers a ^o Fragment of a very treasonable Letter, signed F. M. which your Committee conjecture was from one Francis Macnamarra, a Person concerned in the former Rebellion, there being ^p another Letter among his Papers, with the Name at length, in the same Hand.

Your Committee have laid together these several Circumstances, that it may appear Dennis Kelly was concerned in the treasonable Correspondence, which is confirmed by ^q Mr. Crawford's Letter from Paris, ^r $\frac{1}{2}$ of May, in which he says, 'There is one Captain Kelly, who frequents the Cocoa-Tree and Will's Coffee-house, who is much in the confidence of Dillon and Lord Lansdown, he was here some Months ago, and is at present very active in England.'

Your Committee find, that he was abroad for several Months the latter end of the Year 1721, and that some of the Letters sent to him by fictitious Names from France, were directed to Will's Coffee-house and the Cocoa-Tree.

The Matters which they find him principally concerned in by the intercepted Letters, are the ^s Remittance of the Bill of Exchange sent over from the Person called Repney, the Receipt of which is acknowledged in several Letters to him, his being present at a ^t Consultation with the Persons called Rep. Ho. and Den. and his being to carry over to France their final Answer, together with a new ^u Cypher, List of Directions, and other verbal Instructions, from George Kelly, for Dillon, Glascock and Talbot.

As George Kelly's Correspondence was closely connected with that of the Bishop of Rocheſter, Thomas Carte, and Dennis Kelly, and as he appears to have been privy to Plunkett's; so your Committee see reason to believe, that he was not a Stranger to that of Sample, who appears to be mentioned in a ^v Letter from Gerrard to Kelly.

Your Committee find, that John Sample, being examined before the Secretaries of State, and two of your Committee ^w, owned, that Francis Son of the Lord Sempill, commonly so called had been in England that Summer, and returned to France about three Weeks before his Examination, which was taken on the 4th of August last.

That during his Stay in England, he (John Sample) was twice in company with him, and that two Letters found in his Trunk were received by him from the said Francis Sempill before his coming to England.

In the ^x first of these Letters, dated June ^y $\frac{2}{3}$ 1722. Fr. Sempill tells him, 'That they are daily confirmed Mrs. Hews's Distemper is but imaginary or counterfeit.' By Mrs. Hews, he said, was meant the King, and by his Distemper the late Disturbances.

Fr. Sempill then tells him, 'That this has put a Stop to Mr. Standwell's Proceedings (Standwell he owned to mean the Pretender) but that this cannot disconcert Standwell's Measures, nor even delay any thing above a few Weeks.'

'That perhaps he may soon produce himself, to their Cost, but it is not yet full time to give him (Sample) hopes of that kind. He adds, that they have not yet heard from Mr. Houlder,' whom Sample explained to be the late Duke of Ormond.

Your Committee observe, That this agrees with the Accounts given in the former Parts of their Report, of the Attempts that were to have been made in England about the beginning of May, which were prevented, tho' not entirely discontinued, by the Discoveries made here, and by the Encampment.

Sample being shewn the Copies of several Letters, taken at the Post-Office, directed to Mr. Sempill at Paris, and enclosing others, owned, as appears by his ^z Examination, the writing of them all, and gave Explications of the Names made use of in them. ^a One of these Letters is to Standwell, whom he owned to mean the Pretender, and ^b another is mentioned to be for Glasgow's Master which is probably General Dillon. He likewise owned his having writ to the late Duke of Ormond, and to Kennedy his Secretary; and while he was in Custody of the Messenger, he begun to put down in writing a Confession of his Crimes, ^c which was found in his Room after his Escape. But tho' some of his Letters appeared dictated by him to other Persons, your Committee do not find he would discover who those Persons were.

Your Committee will next proceed to lay before you the Substance of the several Papers and Examinations refer'd to them, relating to Mrs. Spelman, alias Yallop; in doing which, they find themselves indispensably obliged to mention a Person of high Rank and Distinction, Thomas Duke of Norfolk, among others concern'd in the treasonable Correspondence convey'd thro' the Hands of the said Mrs. Spelman.

It appears to your Committee, that Mrs. Spelman being examined on the 19th of October, concerning several Letters from abroad, directed to her by the Name of Mr. or Mrs. Burton, has ^d declared upon Oath, 'That Mr. George Fernegan, (who as your Committee are inform'd, is a Roman Catholick, and appears to have been long employ'd by the Pretender) 'being in England about six Months before her Examination, did, 'upon his going for France, leave Orders with 'the said Mrs. Spelman to send to the Duke of ' Norfolk such Letters as she should receive from 'him, Fernegan, directed to Mrs. Jones; and to Mr. ' Harvey of Combe, such as she should receive from 'him, directed to Mrs. Williams, in Newgate-street, ' Norwich; and to Mr. William Moor (who lives, 'or did live in Brownlow-street) such as she should 'receive from him, directed to Mr. Frampton: 'and that it was agreed between her and Fernegan, 'that he should direct to her by the Name 'of Burton, when he did not do it by her own 'Name.

'That she did accordingly send (as had been 'agreed between them) the Letters that came 'to her with the Directions abovemention'd, 'having first enclosed them under new Covers, 'which she herself directed; that she sent them 'by common Porters, who always brought her 'back an Account of their having delivered them, 'or of the Person's not being at home; that 'particularly one to the Duke of Norfolk was 'brought back again by the Porter, his Grace 'not being in Town, which Letter she kept till 'he came to Town, and then sent it to him. 'That she once received a Message from the 'Duke of Norfolk by Mr. Edward Fernegan, that 'his Grace could not answer a Letter she had 'convey'd to him from George Fernegan, because 'he, the Duke of Norfolk, had not the Key of 'the Cypher, it being in his Brother's hands; 'she likewise own'd her receiving several Cyphers and Keys of Cyphers from George Fernegan, which she burnt between the time of 'her first and second Examination.'

was mark'd, A Key and Cypher, with Mr. Farmer and Jerry; and ^f another, D, O, and J; the first of which is probably a Cypher between the Pretender and Fernegan, and the latter between him and the late Duke of Ormond.

It farther appears to your Committee, that Edward Fernegan being examin'd in relation to the Message from the Duke of Norfolk abovemention'd, has ^g deposed upon Oath, 'That about 'a Fortnight before the Duke went to the Bath, 'being inform'd that his Grace had enquired for 'some of their Family, he, Fernegan, went to 'wait on him, and his Grace told him, that he 'had received a Letter from George Fernegan, who 'was then abroad, but that he could not answer it, Because his Grace's Brother had the 'Key of the Cypher, in which it was written; 'and that he, Fernegan, delivered this Message 'to Mrs. Spelman.

The first Letter directed to Mrs. Jones, (the Duke of Norfolk) of which a Copy was taken, is dated, Cambray, 12th July, 1722. and is partly in Cypher, but has been decypher'd in the manner following:

S I R,

'Various Considerations, which obliged me 'to submit, deprived me till now the Honour of Writing to you; therefore I flatter myself, you incline to favour me with opinion, that my Zeal and Attention are above falling into any Negligence, where your Sollicitude or private Satisfaction is concern'd. You have been in some manner a Witness of the late turn in Affairs, and undoubtedly know so much of them, that I fear it will prove superfluous to trouble you with the Particulars which I have: after several Meetings with some of our Friends at Paris, was of opinion, that the whole should be communicated to the Regent; which being agreed to, that Lord was deputed to wait on him: they met, and parted in appearance the best Friends in the World, notwithstanding immediately by the Regent's Orders the Secret was discovered to King George. How is it possible to arm one's self with sufficient Prudence against such a Conduct? These being our private Concerns, I leave 'em, to divert you with the publick News: the Over-ture of the Congress seems now in the way to be deferred to the K. of Fr. Majority, who, since his Removal to Versailles, is in a manner solely in the Hands of the Regent. His Coronation remains still fix'd to the 15th of October; so, in all appearance, this Year produces no Disturbance to the present Peace of Europe. The Emperor grows daily more powerful in Italy, by the Pope's falling into that Interest; he has lately seiz'd the Fortrefs of Massa in Florence, and promises the Investiture thereof, with that of Parma, to the Prince of Baviere, upon his Marriage with the Princess Josephina. Spain will be under great Difficulties to find means to support their claim to these Provinces, especially at a time that France seems negligent of every thing that concerns them. There is no Appearance likewise that the Affairs in the North produce any thing material this Season: the pacifick Temper of the K. of Prussia secures every thing on that side, and has probably prevented the Disturbance threaten'd in those Parts. Thus at present are the Affairs of Europe.

I did not fail to repeat my usual Solicitations in favour of your Brother, and to add what in Justice I thought you merited: This I did upon the first Occasion, after my coming over; to which, from the King, I have this Answer:

June the 15th.

No body has a better Opinion than I have of the great Person you mention; nor does his Character more Justice: I shall be always desirous to do what is in my Power to convince him of my Regard for his Brother, who now is in the Country with me; but I fear it will not be time to move in the Particular you mention of some Years yet, which will be the Case of all others who pretend to the same Right as I do.

Thus far was his. There is a Pleasure to see with what generous Virtue he repays all who consider his Misfortunes.

I presume to mention one Thing more, being moved to it out of a pure Consideration to the Credit it will give to your Name. Dr. Witham finds himself under the Necessity of building the old House, being ready to fall; and next Spring they begin, but upon so small a Fund as will never finish the Work, as it ought to be; the Consequence of which must necessarily oblige them to beg the Assistance of their Friends. I should be sorry upon this Occasion, that any other Person should distinguish himself so, by a Donation, as to merit his Arms to be placed in the Front, where I could wish to see your own. I have not spoke one word of this to any Person in the House, thinking it would look more generous in you, if dispos'd to take the Credit of laying the first Stone, to move and offer it yourself. As to other Matters, if I can be serviceable in these Parts, either in your particular, or to the Interest of the Party, you know me faithfully devoted to both. I have obtain'd leave to return by the end of the Summer, finding it inconvenient to my private Situation to remain longer Abroad: I hope then to present you with fresh Proofs with what Zeal and Respect I've the Honour to be,

Sir, your most Obedient and most humble, Servant.

Be pleas'd to address to me, à Monsieur Hooker under Cover à Monsieur Pigault Banquier à Calais.

Your Committee observe from this Letter, that Jernegan supposes the Duke of Norfolk already acquainted with a Design, on which Application had been made to the Regent, and with the Causes of its Miscarriage; that however, in order to shew his Zeal and Attention in any Thing, where he thought the Duke's Solicitudude concern'd, he sends him an Account of what had happen'd to their common Friends at Paris, and of the Secret's being communicated to King George by the Regent's Order; and then laments the impossibility of arming themselves with sufficient Prudence against such a Conduct, which, supposing it to have been such as they represent, yet could not possibly have appear'd blameable to any but the Enemies of our present happy Establishment.

VOL. VI.

He then shews from the Situation of Affairs in Europe, there is but little Prospect of any Rupture, which may be favourable or advantageous to their Designs.

He afterwards acquaints the Duke, that he had repeated his Solicitations to the Pretender in favour of his Grace's Brother, and had also added what in Justice he thought His Grace himself merited; to which he received an Answer from the Pretender (whom he styles the King) acknowledging his great Opinion of the Duke, and the Justice he does his Character, and his Readiness to convince his Grace of his Regard, by any Kindness he can shew his Brother.

And the Inference, which Jernegan makes from the Regard express'd towards the Duke in this Letter of the Pretender's, is; That there is a Pleasure to see with what generous Virtue he (the Pretender) repays all those, who consider his Misfortunes.

He concludes with telling the Duke, that if he can be serviceable in those Parts; either in his Grace's own Particular, or to the Interest of the Party; his Grace knows him faithfully devoted to both.

On the 23^d of August, Jernegan writes a second Letter to the Duke, as follows.

S I R,

THE Vicissitude in our Affairs being a perpetual ebbing and flowing, 'tis extremely difficult to assure any thing with certainty: In my last of the 12th I mention'd how Things had happened; and altho' the Fact was true, yet the Consequence did not answer what we apprehended: It was a politick Necessity; which urged and demanded that Conduct, and it appears now to have succeeded so well, that every Hand is at work, as before, to draw Things to a right Conclusion; brief's, we are flatter'd that the Regent is cordially in our Interest, and disposes every Thing to undertake the Work, which according to some Accounts will be put in execution within two Months; those, who are serious and make due Reflection on these Matters, know how far they may be useful to the Cause, and with timely and prudent Precautions may dispose their Friends to act a lively Part; whilst they themselves keep retired, till the Success one Way or the other determines what is necessary to be done.

I have Opportunity, by being in these Parts, of picking up several good Officers, and with a little Trouble as many as would compleat an entire Regiment, into which any Gentleman might enter himself, and do his Duty with Honour. This is what I thought fit to propose on this Occasion, and should be glad to know, if solely upon your own Bottom this may be thought on. I shall take all necessary Precaution, and shall first know certainly what there is to depend upon. Your Opinion on these Matters, with the Assistance of your Advice, will lay a most sensible Obligation on him, who entirely devotes himself,

Sir, your most Obedient and

most Humble Servant.

Let the Conveyer of these furnish you with my immediate Address.

Your Committee observe, that in this letter, Jernegan does, with an Air of great Satisfaction, try to lessen the Apprehensions and Discouragements, which he supposed his former Account of the Regent's having betray'd the Secret might have rais'd in his Grace, and says that every Hand is now at work as before to draw Things to a right Conclusion, without explaining what that former Work, or the right Conclusion hoped for is; which Particulars, it appears, he thought so well known to the Duke, as not to need the least Explanation.

Then after telling his Grace, We are flatter'd the Regent is cordially in our Interest, and is disposing every Thing to undertake the Work within two Months Time, he intimates, that from this Hint, one of his Grace's Seriousness and Reflection might be useful to the Cause, by disposing his Friends (who may justly be understood to be the Roman Catholics) to act a lively Part, while he himself lies retired, waiting till the Event should determine what part it was proper for him to take.

He then makes the Offer to his Grace of raising an entire Regiment of Officers in Flanders, into which any Gentleman might enter himself, and do his Duty with Honour; and desires to know, whether on his Grace's own Bottom such a Thing might be thought of.

This treasonable Offer, from an humble Servant of his Grace's, shews that Jernegan was at least persuaded it would not be ill received; which could only proceed from a thorow Assurance of the Duke's Inclinations to the Pretender's Cause, and of his Intentions to support it with Men and Money, whenever a Probability of Success should make it safe and proper for him to espouse it openly.

Your Committee farther observe, that this letter was writ about the same Time, that Plunket was so busy in pressing Dillon to solicit the Regent's Assistance; and that the Term for putting the Design in execution, which is mention'd in Jernegan's letter to be within two Months from the Beginning of August, has an evident relation to the third Period pitch'd upon by the Conspirators, which, as has been observed before, was the breaking up of the Camp. And it appears to your Committee, by several concurrent ^a Advices from France, Spain, and Italy, during the Months of July and August, that the Design, which had been suspended upon the first Discovery of the Plot, was again resumed, and Preparations made for the Pretender's leaving Italy about the Beginning of September; for which purpose the Ship Revolution (since taken) set sail for Italy the latter End of August, having on board near two hundred Men and a great Number of Officers.

Mention is made, in Jernegan's letters to Mrs. Spelman, of a great Number of letters written to and received from Mr. Harvey of Combe, by the Name of Mrs. Williams; and in ^b one of his letters to Mr. Harvey he says, 'The Regent plays a Game a-part, and confides in none but Britain, and has sacrificed Us to make a firm Friend of King George. The late Disappointment in our Affairs has given a surprizing Power to the Court of France: They silence all other Princes in regard to Us; none now dare look that way, or undertake the least trifling Service in our favour.'

On the 20th of July, Mr. Harvey sent an Answer to this letter, the Original of which is stopp'd, and is ^c sworn by Mrs. Spelman to be his Hand-writing; but it contains such an odd Heap of low and virulent Scandal, that the Committee do not think proper to trouble the House with any Extract of it, but have ^d annexed it entire to their Report.

Your Committee have already taken Notice, that the treasonable Correspondence, above set forth, was not confined to England only, but was carried on in Scotland, under the same Cant Expressions of Wine, Trade, Goods, &c. And it appears that the Pretender's Agents were equally busy in disposing Matters for an Insurrection in that part of the Kingdom, at the same Periods of Time as were fix'd on in England.

They find that the Government has receiv'd ^e Information upon Oath from one Lodowick Anderson, 'That on the 28th of January 1721, Bri-gadier Mackintosh was seen by him (Anderson) at the House of Sir John Mackenzie of Coul, and told Anderson that the Pretender design'd to have ^f on the Crown of Scotland before Midsummer, and that he was to be assisted from France, Spain, and Muscovy; that General Gordon and Captain Tulloch were to land at the Loach Elch with Arms for this Purpose.'

That Mackintosh was then in Britain, agrees with ^f Pancier's Deposition.

^g Anderson farther deposed, that on the 15th of February he met the Lord George Murray at a place not far from the Earl of Kintore's, who confirm'd to him what Mackintosh had said, with several other Particulars; that two Days after, he met Mr. James Keith, Brother to the Earl of Marishall, who after having told him that there would be a Descent in favour of the Pretender, named to him several Persons (specified in his ^g Deposition) that were come over to get Matters in a readiness.'

This, your Committee observes, answers to the first Period of Time for beginning an Insurrection with the help of foreign Forces during the Time of the Elections.

About the Beginning of May a ^h letter was intercepted, directed to Mr. Peter Smyth at Boulogne, and inclosing ⁱ another to De Martin: Which letters, as your Committee are informed, are in the Hand-writing of Mr. Cochran. Who is meant by De Martin, does not appear.

In this letter Cochran says, 'Our Customers, on this Side the Water, are as fond of taking our Goods, as you are of sending them; but I am afraid if they are not sent soon, the Market will be forestall'd, for our Enemies begin to be upon their Guard. He adds, that their Friends in England are willing to send Money to pay for them per Advance, and that they in Scotland are not backward, but hope, in a few Days to remit as much Money as will be sufficient for their Country. He then desires to know how soon they may expect their Wines on this Side the Water, that they may put themselves in a ⁱ sufficient Posture for receiving them.'

Your Committee likewise find that Christopher Glascock, Dillon's Agent, carried on ^j Correspondences to the same Effect, with one who went by the Name of James Johnston at Edinburgh; and that ^a George Kelly corresponded with the same James Johnston, and owned to the Lords at his ^b Examination, his having sent the said Johnston a Paper from Glascock, which he pretended related only to the Mississippi.

Letters were likewise intercepted going from Edinburgh, directed to Collins at Mr. Waters's, Banker at Paris; which Collins appears, by Kelly's ^c Cypher, to be Colin Campbell of Glenderoule.

In ^d one of these Letters to Collins, mention is made of a Person of great Consequence and Distinction, lately regained to the Pretender's Party, who insisted on a Sight of the Contract of Copartnery, which Collins is desired to send over by the first sure Hand; and Collins, in his ^e Answer, signed R. Broun, promises it shall be sent over.

Your Committee observe, that this Particular agrees with ^f Fairfax's Deposition upon Oath, That Loyer told him, The People of England were backward, but that those of Scotland had already entered into an Association.

In the same ^g Letter to Collins it is said, That the Person of Consequence, who had insisted on a Sight of the Contract of Copartnery, desired an Order from Mr. Malcom for raising one or two Battalions, but was told those Orders might come time enough by the hands of those who happened to come first to open the Commerce; which shews of what nature that Commerce was.

In the same Letter Application is made to Mr. Malcom for a Patent for Knight Baronet; both which Circumstances confirm Malcom to be the Pretender.

Your Committee observe, that these Letters, and ^h some others, which appear to have been intercepted about the Month of May, and are annexed to this Report, fall in with the second Period of Time fixed by the Conspirators in England.

And on the 18th of August, O. S. Mr. Stanhope ⁱ writes word from Madrid, that he had received Intelligence, that the Scotch had engaged to bring 22000 Men into the Field in ten days time, in case the late Duke of Ormond would come over with Arms to head them, and that they daily sent most pressing Messages to Ormond on that Subject; which shews that the Design was reassumed a third time in Scotland, as it was in England.

Your Committee farther observe, that agreeably to what was promised in Mr. Cochran's Letter of the 28th of April, ^k Mr. William Erskine did on the 3d of May, remit Two Thousand Pounds Sterling to Mr. Gerrard, Dillon's Secretary at Paris, and owned his so doing on his ^l Examination before the Lord Justice Clerk, but refused to discover who Gerrard was, or from whom and for whose Use the said Sum was remitted.

When he was taken into Custody, a Letter was seized in his Pocket, which, as your Committee is ^m informed, is all in the late Lord Marr's own Hand-writing, dated Paris, February the 9th, 1722. in the following words.

Paris, February 9. 1722.

I Have, William, yours of the 7th, for which I am obliged to you, and take all you say, as I ought, from the good Heart from whence I know it comes, tho' at the same time you put a greater Value on your Friend than he deserves:

But be that as it will, I am fully persuaded, as you may be, that he will never fail an Occasion for what you mean, nor neglect endeavouring to bring it about, where he sees it can be of Advantage to his Country; and his Friends and Countrymen may depend on it, when they see him engaged again, that the retrieving of it from the low Condition it is now in, and otherways ever like to be, is the chief Motive that induces him, and he hopes in that way he will not be without the Assistance of all who wish the same thing; and the more, that he will take all the care he can not to expose them for serving that of others, if at the same time he be not pretty sure of its doing effectual Service to their own, and putting it on a better foot than it has been these hundred years past. If he looked but to his own private Interest, he could perhaps find a way, which could conduce more to it: but he hopes, by his former Actions, it appears that he never put that in competition, with what he thought was the Interest of his Country, tho' in which he owns he was once mistaken, as many others may have been; but as he never scrupled owning his Fault, since he found it by Experience to be one, so he has ever since endeavoured to make amends, and will as long as he lives.

Things are in such a Situation at present over all Europe, that there appears little if any Opportunity of doing what is to be wish'd upon that Account; but things of this kind are very uncertain, and an Opportunity may come, or be brought about, when least expected; and you may believe it will not be neglected when it does: nor will any Endeavours be wanting to bring it to that pass. Hush! tho' must be the word, and Friends must not take amiss their not being acquainted previously to the Execution, in which it is to be hoped they will not fail.

You see I make no scruple in writing freely to you, but you know the Consequence of this coming into wrong hands, and those it is fit and of use to be told to, you know too: So I leave it to your own Discretion, of which you have given me many Proofs. I have been much out of use of writing to H. S. for some Years past, and I have not yet got a return of one I wrote him last Summer; but I shall write to him of what you mention in yours.

As to M——y, I care not to say more about him, and were it not that I think it for the good of a certain Person and Cause, I should not even wish to have all the truth told of him, since his being abroad. I cannot answer for what handles may be given him for his Justification; but let honest Men, who wish right, tell the Truth, where they know it and that it is necessary, and shame the Devil.

I wish you a good Journey and good Luck with all my heart, and that we may soon have an Opportunity to meet merrily, and be of use to our Country. My Compliments to my Friends, and I hope we shall never have cause to be ashamed of other.

I shall long impatiently to hear from you after your getting to London and Edinburgh; and pray do not fail writing after your coming to both Places, and have seen People.

‘ Send me your Address, and you may be sure

‘ use. Pleasure it would be always to me, but ‘ that must yield sometimes to Circumstances.

‘ My Family salute you, and wish you all Hap‘ piness, as I do, who am sincerely and affectio‘ nately yours, &c. Adieu.

‘ I wish you may have something agreeable to ‘ tell me of your Brother and Uncle, when you ‘ have seen them, and remember me kindly to ‘ your Father-in-law. Sure we must all wish
‘ the same way to our Country.

‘ What is become of our Cousin Will, who I ‘ hear is still where you have been for some ‘ time?

Your Committee likewise find evident Footsteps of this treasonable Correspondence ^a from Ire- land; but having already shewn sufficiently the Extensiveness of the Conspiracy, they forbear to tire the House with any further Particulars.

Your Committee have now gone thro’ the feveral Matters, that appear’d to them from the Examinations of the Persons or Papers refer’d to them; and they are in hopes, that in reporting every Circumstance, that seem’d material, they have strictly comply’d with the Intentions of the House in appointing them.

If the frequent Repetitions of the same Matter have swell’d the Report into too great a length, they are persuaded the House will excuse it, since it was, in all the Places where they have done it, necessary to explain the Passages related, or else to shew the Connection of the Treasons, as well as the Co-operation of the Conspirators in their wicked Design of dethroning his most sacred Majesty, and overturning our present happy Establishment in Church and State.

ON March 8. The House proceeded to take the said Report into consideration. Whereupon the House came to the following Resolutions, viz.

‘ That upon Consideration of the Report, and
‘ the several Papers and Examinations relating to ‘ the Conspiracy, it appears to this House, That ‘ a detestable and horrid Conspiracy has been ‘ formed and carried on by Persons of Figure
‘ and Distinction, and their Agents and Instru-
‘ for invading these Kingdoms with foreign For‘ ces, for raising Insurrections and a Rebellion at ‘ Home, for seizing the Tower and City of Lon- ‘ don, for laying violent Hands upon the Person
‘ of his most sacred Majesty and the Prince of ‘ Wales, in order to subvert our present happy ‘ Establishment in Church and State, by placing
‘ a Popish Pretender upon the Throne.

‘ That it appears to this House, that John ‘ Plunket has been a principal Agent and Instru‘ ment in the said horrid and detestable Conspi‘ racy, and has carried on several treasonable ‘ Correspondences, to procure a foreign Force to ‘ invade these Kingdoms, and to raise Insurrec‘ tions and a Rebellion at Home, and was en‘ gaged with others in the villainous and exe‘ crable Design of laying violent Hands upon His ‘ Majesty’s most sacred Person.

‘ That it appears to this House, that George ‘ Kelly, alias Johnson, has been a principal Agent
‘ and Instrument in the said horrid and detesta-

‘ ble Conspiracy, and has carried on several ‘ Treasonable Correspondences, to raise Insurrec-
‘ tions and a Rebellion at Home, and to pro‘ cure a foreign Force to invade these King‘ doms from Abroad.

‘ That it appears to this House that Francis
‘ Lord Bishop of Rochester was principally con‘ cern’d in forming, directing and carrying on the ‘ said wicked and detestable Conspiracy, for in‘ vading these Kingdoms with a foreign Force,
‘ and for raising Insurrections and a Rebellion at ‘ Home in order to subvert our present happy
‘ Establishment in Church and State, by placing
‘ a Popish Pretender upon the Throne.’

In Pursuance of these Resolutions, it was order’d by the House, that Bills of Pains and Penalties should be severally brought in against the said John Plunket, George Kelly, and Francis Lord Bishop of Rochester.

March 14. The House came to a Resolution to communicate their Report to the Lords at a Conference, and also (having obtained the King’s leave) the Letters and Papers relating to the Conspiracy.

March 16. The House of Lords chose the following Peers to be a Committee to enquire into the said Conspiracy.

His Grace the Duke of Dorset.

His Grace the Duke of Montrose.

The Earl of Scarborough.

The Earl of Lincoln.

The Earl of Illy.

The Lord Lonsdale.

The Lord Torrington.

The Bishop of Lincoln.

The Bishop of Salisbury.

This Committee made their Report on April 23d, which was as follows.

THE Committee to whom the Report and Original Papers relating to the Conspiracy, delivered by the House of Commons at several Conferences, were referred; and who were impowered by your Lordships to examine Christopher Layer, and such other Persons as they from time to time should think proper; having carefully compared the said Report with the Original Papers referred to them, and having examined several Persons in relation to the Treasonable Practices and Correspondences therein set forth, are fully satisfied and convinced, That a detestable and wicked Conspiracy has been formed and carried on for soliciting a Foreign Force to invade these Kingdoms, for raising a Rebellion and inciting Insurrections in London, and divers other Parts of Great Britain, and even for laying violent Hands on the sacred Person of His Majesty, and on His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, in order to destroy our Religion and Constitution by placing a Popish Pretender on the Throne.

And the Lords Committees think themselves obliged in Justice to observe, that the extraordinary Vigilance and Application which has been shewn by the House of Commons in detecting this Scene of Iniquity, and laying its most hidden Springs in so full and clear a Light, as it has greatly contributed to the Publick Safety, by opening the Eyes, and awakening the just Rement of an injur'd Nation; so it cannot fail to excite a proportionable Zeal and Emulation in your Lordships, for concurring with that House in the no less necessary Work of bringing the Authors of these wicked Designs to such exemplary Punishment as may be a lasting Admonition to Posterity, that Artifice and Disguise can no more lessen the Danger, than mitigate the Guilt of Treason; and that they act under a fatal Delusion, who hope to abuse the lenity of our Laws to the Ruin of our Constitution.

The Lords Committees think it a strong Confirmation of the Truth and Exactness of the said Report, that several material Observations which are there advanced as grounded on probable Conjectures only, have since been amply verified and supported by fresh Discoveries arising from the Papers lately refer'd to them by your Lordships; which Papers are contain'd in an ^a Appendix annex'd to this Report.

The Intelligence sent by Colonel Stanhope, and Sir Anthony Westcombe, in relation to the Pretender's Ships under Morgan, as well as the Explication given by the Committee of the House of Commons to several of the fictitious Names in the intercepted Correspondence, is very much illustrated and confirmed by papers seized on board the Revolution, and by the Examinations of some of the Prisoners belonging to that Ship.

It appears by ^b those papers and Examinations, that Morgan, who went by the Name of Walton, and Gallwey (an Irish Roman Catholick) who went by the Name of Gardiner, with others acting under their Direction, have for several Years past been employ'd in fitting out Ships under English Colours, which were ready on all Occasions to attend the Motions of the Pretender, who in ^c several of the letters is stiled their King, and their Royal Master. That the Money for these Ships was supply'd ^d partly by Persons in England, ^e partly by Waters the Banker at Paris, and ^f partly the late Duke of Ormond. That one of these Ships, in the Year 1719, ^g was sent by Morgan to the Groyne, with an Express to fetch the late Duke of Ormond to England; at which time it appears, ^h that Morgan and Gallwey were promis'd a Supply of fifty thousand pounds from Friends in England; that others of these Ships lay hovering about the Coast of Brittany, from the Year 1718, to 1721, ⁱ expecting to be employed either by Cane and Chivers (General Dillon) or ^k by Hore, (Sir Harry Goring) in what they call their Home Trade. That in the Year 1721, despairing of any Employment of this kind, on account, as is express'd in ^l one of their letters, of Hore and his Partners being Cowards in Trade, they engaged themselves in the Service ^m of the Swedish Madagascar Company, and in December 1721, rendezvouz'd in the Bay of Cadiz for this purpose; but this Project likewise failing, on account of some Deficiency on the part of the Swedes, Morgan waited on the late Duke of Ormond at Madrid, and was by him supplied with twelve thousand Pieces of Eight, for fitting out the Ships Lady Mary and Revolution ⁿ for the Pretender's Service; ^o soon after Morgan's Return to Cadiz, the Arms and Ammunition which had been prepared for the Madagascar Voyage, consisting of two thousand Muskets, two thousand Bayonets, one thousand Carbines, four hundred Barrels of Powder, and a proportionable Quantity of Match, Flints, &c. were consign'd to Morgan, and by him put on board the Pretender's Ship called the Lady Mary, and Morgan having embarked on board the said Ship with several Irish Officers, set sail from the Bay of Cadiz the latter End of April 1722, and went first ^p to Sancto Antonio, and then to Sancto Andero in the Bay of Biscay.

The Committee having sent for Mr. Gustavus Bâbr, formerly a Captain in the Swedish Service, who being at Cadiz on account of the Madagascar Expedition, had occasion to transact several Affairs with Morgan, and the other Officers of the Pretender's Ships, they were informed by him, that the Arms above-mentioned were brought, part of them from Gottenburg, and part from Hamburg, by one of the Pretender's Ships, named the Fortune, commanded by one Butler. That two thousand of the said Arms belonged to the Swedish Madagascar Company, and were delivered by him, Bâbr, to Morgan.

That the Remainder, which belonged to Count Rhenstierna, a Swede, were also purchased by Morgan, but not till some Weeks after the first two thousand. That Morgan went to Madrid, and returned with twelve thousand Pieces of Eight in Bills and Money, which Sum he, Bâbr, saw in Morgan's Hands. That Baron Seebach, and one Osthoff (who are frequently mention'd in Morgan's letters) as also Count Rhenstierna's Agent, who delivered the Arms to Morgan, declar'd to him, Bâbr, since his Return to Gottenburg, That Morgan was supplied with these twelve thousand Pieces of Eight from the late Duke of Ormond, and that the Arms were paid for out of the said Money. And Morgan's Son being examined by the Committee, owned that his Father went at that time to Madrid, that the late Duke of Ormond was then there, and that his Father did there receive Bills for fitting out the Ships, but from whom he cannot tell.

Bâbr farther declared, That all the Swedish Officers at Cadiz looked on Morgan's Ships as belonging to the Pretender, and spoke of them in all Conversations as such, which was confirmed to him expressly by Baron Seebach and Osthoff. And one of the Sailors of the said Ships owned to the Committee, That they went from port to port without taking in any Cargo; That they had sometimes but sixty, and sometimes one hundred and thirty Men on board the Revolution, and often received Orders for sailing with all possible Expedition, which Orders were afterwards countermanded, without any apparent Reason for one or the other; and that this unaccountable Proceeding satisfied him the said Ships were engaged in some unwarrantable Design. Bâbr farther declared, That Osthoff told him, the Ship Revolution was at first purchased in England, for transporting the late King of Sweden in Person, in his projected Descent on Scotland; and that he, Bâbr, saw the Name Carolus still standing in the Cabin of the said Ship, when he was last on board her. And Morgan's Son owned, That he had observed the Arms of the Crown of Sweden in the said Cabin, which he supposed were placed there as a Token that the said Ship was engaged in the Service of the Swedish Madagascar Company; tho' he owned that the other Ships engaged in the same Service had no such Token.

Some of the Particulars above related, do very much explain and confirm ^a O——'s Letter to L—— of the 27th of April, as also ^b those to Dumville and Dodsworth, in which it is said, That the Hopes of Remittances from Persons in England had induced O—— to supply M—— (which appears to be Morgan). That O—— could depend on two thousand Arms from M—— (which appear to be the two thousand Arms delivered to Morgan by Bábr ^c before the Date of O——'s Letter.) That M—— had writ from C—— (which appears to be Cadiz) that he could get more Arms if he had more Money; and accordingly the Committee find that a second Supply of Arms was purchased by Morgan from Count Rben-ffierma's Agent. O—— in his ^d Letter to L—— dated the 27th of April says, 'I have order'd ^e M——'s Ship to come to A——; and it ^e appears that Morgan did at that very time embark on board the Lady Mary, with the Arms above-mentioned, and ^f went first to Sancto Antonio, and soon after to Sancto Andero.

The Sailors on their Examination having mentioned one Hilton, as commanding a Ship under Morgan, and the Committee finding a ^g Letter from Morgan, directed to Don Nicholas, which in a subsequent ^h Letter is mentioned to have been writ to the said Hilton, they thought it probable Hilton might be a fictitious Name for Nicholas Wogan, in the same manner as Walton was for Morgan, and Gardiner for Gallwey. Having accordingly examined the Sailors as to this Particular, one of them said, he believed Hilton was a fictitious Name; and Morgan's Son owned that Hilton's true Name was Nicholas Wogan, and that he had been confined in England on account of the Preston Rebellion, as he was told by Nicholas Wogan Jun. who went by the Name of Paterfon: and one of the Sailors declared, that the said Wogan Sen. obtained the Command of one of the Ships under Morgan, after their Arrival in the Bay of Cadiz.

These Particulars agree with Glascock's ⁱ Letter to George Kelly of the 24th of April, O. S. in which he mentions Nicholas Wogan by the Name of Xoland, as being to have the Command of a Vessel at Cadiz, to cruize against the Turks, or for other Views, on which he will not pretend to decide; and Kelly ^k answering this Letter, wishes Wogan's Chief may succeed in his Journey. The same Particulars confirm Mr. Crawford's ^l Letters of the 18th and 25th of July, by which it appears, that the two Nicholas Wogans were at that time come to Morlax, expecting Morgan's Ships to follow them to that Port, in order to their setting sail for England; that the eldest of them was to have been Captain, and the other Lieutenant of one of those Ships, and that they owned the Project in Spain, by what they had learnt of it, was for the late Duke of Ormond to have landed in the West with Irish Officers and Arms.

On the 8th of June, N. S. Colonel Stanbope ^m writ Word that the late Duke of Ormond was preparing to embark with Arms and Officers for England. And your Committee find, that ⁿ about that time the Ship Revolution set sail from the Bay of Cadiz: That the Sailors knowing the Madagascar Voyage to be dropped, refused to do their Duty till they were satisfied as to the Place they were designed for. That hereupon Gallwey assured them it was to Gibraltar, in order to clean the Ship; but having got them under fail, and satisfied them about their Wages, they proceeded to the Bay of Biscay: That they put in at Sancto Antonio to take Morgan on board, and then joined the Lady Mary at Sancto Andero. That upon their Arrival at this Place, the common Report on Shore was, That the late Duke of Ormond, and four Companies of Soldiers, were to be taken on board the Revolution: That Corn and Cattle were provided for the said Soldiers; and that the late Duke of Ormond was within a short Day's Journey of Sancto Andero: That hereupon the first and second Mate of the said Ship, suspecting Gallwey to be engaged in some unwarrantable Design, agreed not to serve any longer, unless Gallwey would give them a Note under his Hand that they were forced into the Service, and would also declare whither they were bound, and give them Security that they should not be employed in any other Voyage than such as he should declare to them; whereupon one of them was confined, and the other discountenanced by Gallwey.

But that Gallwey's real Expectations were to have come over with the late Duke of Ormond, appears to the Committee most evident from the ^o Copy of a Letter of his, dated the 16th of June, the Day before he set sail from Cadiz, in which are these Words, 'I hope the —— will set sail to-morrow; your not repeating Orders and Advice concerning the Business in hand, gives me a thousand Apprehensions; God send our Bankers and the rest of our Friends are safe, and stand their Ground. I intend to embark myself on board the —— for fear my dear Aunt should have any Occasion for Assistance, of whom I am so tender that I would not if possible have the Care of her put into any other hands.'

The Committee observe that the same Expression of My Aunt is used in the Letter to Dodsworth, with such Circumstances as make it highly probable, that in that ^p Letter, as well as this of Gallwey's, it denotes the late Duke of Ormond. They likewise observe, that the Names of Mansfield and Medley are used in Morgan's and Gallwey's Letters, in such a manner as confirms those Names to mean the late Duke of Ormond, agreeably to the Explication given them in the Report of the Committee of the House of Commons.

Gallwey in his ^q Letter of the 3d of November 1722, says, He has a couple of fine Grey-hounds, a Dog and a Bitch, for Mr. Freeman; the same Dogs are mentioned in ^r another Letter, and in the ^s Depositions of two of the Sailors, to have been a Present from the late Duke of Ormond, to the Pretender: which confirms the Explication of the Name of Freeman, mentioned in the said Report, to be true.

There was likewise seized on board the Revolution, a ^t Letter to Gallwey, signed John Obrien; which appears to be in the same Hand-writing with the ^u Letters signed Gerrard and M. Digby, taken among Mr. Dennis Kelly's Papers, and confirms Gerrard to mean Sir John Obrien, one of Dil- lon's Secretaries, agreeable to the Conjecture in the said Report.

Gallwey, in a ^a letter dated from Alicant Bay, the 13th of September last, expresses his Concern for Kelly's Confinement, but hopes that is the worst that can befall him; and a ^b letter in Kelly's Hand-writing signed Ja. Johnson, directed for Gardiner, but enclosing a Note for twenty Guineas payable to Gallwey, was found on board the Revolution, as also a Direction entered with Kelly's own Hand in a ^c Pocket-Book, supposed to belong to Morgan. Kelly in his letters acknowledges the Receipt of one from Sir John (which is probably their common Correspondent, Sir John Obrien) and says their Friends in Spain are well, as one of the Family writes him word: which shews how extensive Kelly's Correspondences were.

Gallwey in a ^d letter from Genoa of the third of November, 1722, (which appears to have been writ to one of the Pretender's Family) says, he has acted for many Months past under the Direction of Medley (Ormond) who, he makes no doubt, has mentioned him to Mr. Freeman (the Pretender;) yet in his ^e letter to Lord Carteret, after his ship was taken, he has the Assurance to affirm, that he never saw the late Duke of Ormond since he left England, nor ever corresponded directly or indirectly with him or the Pretender, or any of their Adherents at home or abroad, but was always zealously well affected to his present Majesty and our happy Establishment.

Gustavus Bâbr above-mentioned ^f deposes among other Particulars, that he has been informed the Pretender's Agents had Arms for three thousand Men, lodged at a House belonging to the late Duke of Ormond, near Morlaix in Britanny; which port the committee observe was one of the usual Stations of the Pretender's Ships under Morgan. And it appears probable, that these three thousand Arms made part of the ten thousand mentioned in O——'s ^g letter to L—— as provided by D——, who is supposed to be Dillon.

Robert Franklyn, second Mate of the Ship Revolution, ^h deposes, that letters directed to John or James Jacobs at Genoa, were taken up at the Post-house by Gallwey. The Committee observe, that Jones in his ⁱ letter to Chivers, mentions his having communicated the Copies of Mansfield's and Jacobs's letters; and Glascock in his ^k letter to George Kelly of the first of May, says, 'He hopes Money is sent to pay for the Barrels which Jacobs has at his Disposal.' In both which places it is probable, that Jacobs means Gallwey; and that Barrels mean Stands of Arms, is confirmed by a ^l letter of Morgan's, in which speaking of that very Ship that brought the Arms above-mention'd from Gottenburg and Hamburg to Cadiz, he says, 'She had received Orders for taking in nineteen Barrels, with every thing necessary to make use of them:' Which last Words seem to refer to the Bayonets, Flints, and powder. ^m The Intelligence sent by Mr. Crawford, on the 27th of May, That Gordon of Boulogne was to have a Ship ready to transport some of the Chiefs of the Conspiracy to England; is confirmed by the Deposition of Roger Garth (already published) who declares, 'That the said Gordon (whom he had good Reason to believe to be an Agent of the Pretender's) did some time last ' Summer endeavour to engage him to ply off of that Station with his Sloop, in order to carry over such Persons as he, the said Gordon, should recommend to him, promising him that he should have Employment enough.'

The Lords Committees conceive, that the several particulars above related, will appear to the House very much to corroborate the Accounts received from abroad, of Ships provided for transporting the late Duke of Ormond to England, with Arms and Officers, the beginning of last Summer; and that they also confirm the Decyphering of the letters, and Explication of the Names, contained in the Report of the Committee of the House of Commons.

The Lords Committees observing that some paragraphs of the letters refer'd to them were writ originally in Cypher, thought it proper to call the Decyphers before them, in order to their being satisfied of the Truth of the Decyphering. The Account they received from those persons, was, that they have long been versed in this Science, and are ready to produce Witnesses of undoubted Reputation, who have framed letters in Cypher, on purpose to put them to a Trial, and have constantly found their decyphering to agree with the Original Keys which had been concealed from them. It was likewise confirmed to the Committee, that letters decyphered by one or other of them in England, had exactly agreed with the decyphering of the same letters performed by persons in foreign parts, with whom they could have no Communication; and that in some Instances after they had decyphered letters for the Government, the Keys of those Cyphers had been seized, and upon comparing them, had agreed exactly with their decyphering.

With respect to the intercepted letters in question, they alledged that in the Cypher used by George Kelly, they find the Words ranged in an alphabetical Order, answering the progressive Order of the Figures by which they are expressed, so that the farther the initial letter of any Word is removed from the letter A, the higher the Number is, by which such Word is denoted: that the same Word will be found to be constantly denoted by one and the same Figure, except in the Case of Particles or Words of very frequent Use, which have two or three Figures assigned to them, but those always following one the other in a progressive Order. They likewise set forth, that in the Cypher above-mentioned, a certain Order is constantly observed as to the placing of the Words made use of, that under each letter of the Alphabet the first Cyphers are allotted to the proper Names of places, the next to the proper Names or Titles of Persons, the next to whole Words in common Use, and the last to denote single letters.

As to the Truth of the Decyphering, they alledged that several letters written in this Cypher had been decyphered by them separately, one being many Miles distant in the Country, and the other in Town, and yet their Decyphering agreed; that Facts unknown to them and the Government at the time of their Decyphering had been verified in every Circumstance by subsequent Discoveries, as particularly that of H——'s Ship coming in Ballast to fetch O—— to England, which had been so decyphered by them two Months before the Government had the least notice of Halstead's having left England: That a Supplement to this Cypher having been found among Dennis Kelly's papers the latter end of July, agreed with the Key they had formed of that Cypher the April before: That the decyphering of the letters signed Jones, Illington, and 1378, being afterwards applied by them to others written in the same Cypher, did immediately make pertinent Sense, and such as had an evident Connexion and Coherence with the parts of those letters that were out of Cypher, tho' the Words in Cypher were repeated in different Paragraphs and differently combined. And they insist that these several Particulars duly weighed, amount to a Demonstration of the Truth of their decyphering.

As to the other Cyphers made use of by Jernegan, Stanley, and Walter Grabame, they consist only of twenty four Figures, for the twenty four letters of the Alphabet, and some other Figures for proper Names or whole Words, in the placing of which Names a certain Order is also observed.

These several Particulars they declared themselves ready to attest upon Oath, and to produce sufficient Witnesses to their Character and Integrity as well as their Skill.

The Committee being empowered by your Lordships to examine Christopher Layer, did accordingly spend some time in the said Examination, which produced a tedious Repetition of the particulars contained in his Examination before the Committee of the House of Commons, and some few Circumstances which they found he had recollected by reading the printed Report and Appendix.

All that he confessed to them which is new, was, that he did before his setting out for Rome acquaint Plunket with his Intentions of carrying over a Note of the Names of the Tory Gentlemen of Norfolk, if Plunket thought it would be acceptable; that during his stay at Rome, Sir William Ellis told him, that he had formerly corresponded with Plunket at the Request of the Lady Middleton, but that he had not, for some time past, corresponded with Plunket, or any one else, in relation to the Pretender's Affairs: for that from the time of the Action at Dumblain so many Scottish Noblemen and Gentlemen had come over to the Pretender, that he and all the rest of the old Servants had been forbid all Correspondence in England, or elsewhere. Upon Layer's desiring leave to correspond with him if it were practicable, he told Layer, that on Condition he would promise to write nothing but what might be shewn to the Pretender himself, he would settle a Correspondence with him; for that tho' he had followed the Fortunes of the late King James and his Family, ever since the Revolution; and had always been faithful to the Pretender, and for many Years his Cashier, yet if any of the Scottish Gentlemen that were about the Pretender, should know he received a letter without communicating it to him, it would cost him his place, and he should be in utter Disgrace: That Layer promising to write nothing but what might be shewn, Ellis gave him a Cypher of his own Hand-writing, as also another Cypher of cut paper for carrying on the correspondence; that he, Layer, likewise settled a Cypher of fictitious Names with Mrs. Hughes, Nurse to the Pretender's Child, and received a letter from her in relation to the Christening of his Daughter. He would not own that he knew of any other Cypher, and persisted that Mrs. Kinder meant the said Mrs. Hughes, tho' in Ellis's Cypher it stands for Mrs. Fox. He said that the paper which he desired a Copy of from Sir William Ellis, and which is referred to in ^a Ellis's letter of the 30th of January, was a short Scheme relating to the Preston Affair, shewn him by Ellis while he was at Rome, of which he remembers no other particulars, but that Insurrections were to be begun in several Counties in a dark Night. That when he made Application to Plunket for the fictitious Names of Burford, Steele, &c. he was forced to acquaint Plunket with his having settled a Correspondence with Ellis, which Plunket resented, and said he thought Ellis had been forbid all Correspondence with Persons here. That the Reason of his asking Plunket for a fictitious Name for Lord Orrery, was, that he had occasion to mention to Ellis a Club which Plunket had often told him of; that Plunket once shewed him a List of this Club, of his own Hand-writing, which he read over two or three times, but that Plunket talked so inconsistently of them, that he, Layer, verily believes it was a mere Fiction of his own, and that there never was any such Club. That he, Layer, thinks Lord Orrery mentioned to him Lord Strafford, as one of those, who, with Lord North, Sir Harry Goring, and others, were (as Lord Orrery was informed) going to do a rash thing in favour of the Pretender: but that he cannot be positive as to Lord Strafford. That he, Layer, wrote himself to the Pretender, concerning the Difference of Opinion which he observed in Lord North and Lord Orrery about the Means of restoring him, and the Necessity there was that the Regent should permit General Dillon to come over here with some foreign Forces. That he also drew up a Scheme of a Lottery to have been opened here in favour of the Pretender, and enclosed the said Scheme in a parcel with some silk Stockings, which he sent as a present to the Pretender and his Spouse by Andrew Hays, who travelled to Italy with Alderman Barber. That he delivered this parcel to Hays with his own Hands, who promised to convey it to Ellis, and said he could do it with Safety. That Hays, as he believes, understood the Stockings to be for the Pretender and his Spouse: That he likewise had some Discourse with Hays about getting Copper-plates engraved at Rome in English and Italian for the Tickets of the said Lottery, and desired him to receive Sir William Ellis's Directions about it, which Hays promised to do. That while he, Layer, was at Rome, Hays asked him whether he would not see the King, meaning the Pretender; and that the said Hays went frequently to the Pretender's Family in the way of his Business, and was, as he believes, present while the Pretender's and his Spouse's Pictures were drawn.

Hays being examined by the Committee, owned the Receipt of the Stockings, but denied their being delivered to him by Layer, or that he knew who they were for. He likewise owned the carrying a Packet to Belloni, the Banker at Rome, which was brought to him by a Porter from Layer, as he supposed.

Layer owns, that Haye told him Belloni was the Pretender's Banker, but denies his sending any such Packet by Haye: And in several other Particulars of their Examinations they contradicted each other.

A Scheme of the Lottery above-mentioned (for raising 225,000 Pounds Sterling) having been found among the Papers of Walter Jefferey's, now in Custody, the Lords Committees thought proper to examine him how he came by it. He owned his being acquainted with Layer and Plunket, that he saw Layer about the Time of his going abroad, and helped him to a Bill on a Banker at Antwerp: But he denied his knowing from whom he received the said Scheme, or his having had any Conversation with any one about it; and said it might be put into his Hands by Plunket, for ought he knew, but that he was not sure he had ever read it; and if he had known such a paper had been in his Custody, he should have destroyed it.

The Lords Committees being informed that Layer, between the Time of his delivering the larger and lesser Bundle of Papers to Mrs. Mason, had deliver'd to her a large Parcel covered with blue paper and sealed in several Places, and that he did within a few Days after take it back again, telling her he wanted to carry it to Lord North and Grey's: They examined Layer particularly on this head, but he denied that he ever delivered her any such Bundle.

The Lords Committees next proceeded to the Examination of John Plunket, who began with large Protestations of his Innocence, and offered of himself to account for three Facts charged upon him in the Report, and to shew they were great Mistakes. The first was, his receiving a letter from George Kelly; the second, his receiving the letter at Antwerp, signed Dixwell; and the third, his receiving the letter from the Pretender, taken at Mrs. Creagh's. And as in his Examination before the Committee of the House of Commons he had fallen on the Expedient of substituting Hugh Thomas to personate Rogers, so now they found he had furnished himself with three different Persons, at different Places, all of the Name of Plunket, to whom he would have it believed these letters were written; without offering any the least Proof or Circumstance of Probability to shew that such Persons were at all concerned in those letters, or that there ever were any such Persons in being.

The letter from George Kelly, he said was not writ to him, but to one Harry Plunket, who delivered it to him at Will's Coffee-House, Covent-Garden, and that it related to some Money that was to be raised on a Security of Mrs. Barnes's.

As to the Letter signed Dixwell, he said, there were two Clergymen of the Church of Rome, one or both of which travelled with him and Layer from Dover to Antwerp; that one of them went by the Name of Lloyd, but his real Name was Plunket. That this Man dropped the letter signed Dixwell at a Coffee-House; and he, John Plunket, taking it up with a Design of restoring it to him in Lorraine, (to which place sometimes one, and sometimes both of these Clergymen were gone) shewed it to Layer, who took it into his Head that this letter had been writ to him, John Plunket.

VOL. VI.

The letter from the Pretender, he said, fell into his Hands much in the same manner: That there is one Father Plunket at Rome to whom the Pretender always writes when any Body is to be introduced to him. Being asked whether Father Plunket travelled with Layer to Rome, (because mention is made in the Pretender's letter of a Companion of Plunket's) he said the Pretender always called the person that was to be introduced by Father Plunket, his Companion. That this Father Plunket happening to shew him this letter, and commending the Hand, he, John Plunket, said he had a Friend at Rome, that would be glad to see the Pretender's Hand-writing. And Father Plunket having accordingly left the letter with him, he shewed it to Layer, and forgot to return it to Father Plunket, who never called for it, having fifty more letters of the same kind by him.

Upon the Lords Committees asking him whether he went by the Name of Rogers, he said he went by several Names in his Travels, that he, might not be imposed upon in his Reckonings as the English generally are. Being asked whether he took the Name of Rogers to prevent his being thought an Englishman, he said that in Italy he was called Rogieri.

They farther asked him, whether he had dictated any fictitious Names to Layer, or had mentioned any Thing to him of a Club? To which he answered, That he had given Layer the fictitious Name of Bedford, or Burford, for Lord Orrery, which Name he had from Neynoe. That one Night being in company with Layer, and some Clergymen whose Names he has forgot, the Discourse turning on the Protests of the Lords, and the Names that were subscribed to them, one of the Company said, These are a Loyal Club; another said, They are Jacobites; and that he, Plunket, said, There was a Loyal Club of eighty or ninety Lords who would stand in Defence of their Country.

He farther observed to the Committee, that in the Bill now depending before your Lordships, he is not mentioned by the Name by which he was baptized and confirmed: He said, his Surname was Plucknet, but his Christian Name he declined telling; and seemed to place some Hopes and Confidence in this Subterfuge.

The Committee finding him trifle with them in this egregious manner, asked him in general, whether he had ever been in Conference with the Pretender, or had corresponded with him, or any of his Agents: To which he answered in the Negative.

The Committee next sent for George Kelly, who told them that the Affair being soon to be brought before your Lordships, he desired to be excused from answering any Questions; so that they had no Opportunity of examining him as to the new Matters alledged against him in the Depositions of Mr. Philip Caryll and others.

However they thought it proper to send for the said Mr. Caryll, and to ask him whether he had any thing to add to or retract from his former Accounts. His Depositions being read over to him, he expressed himself very angry and uneasy at their being made Publick; and told the Committee he was not disposed to answer any farther Questions, being sorry for what he had said already; ready; he likewise insinuated, that what he had said had not been taken down exactly as he dictated it, and seemed apprehensive that he was called upon to accuse himself of Matters that might be prejudicial to him. But upon the Committee's telling him that the most effectual Way he could take to do himself Service, was to make a candid and ingenuous Discovery of the whole Truth, he said he had already given a candid Account, and hoped he should not have been a Sufferer for his Candour. Being asked whether his Depositions had not been read over to him before he signed them, he said they were; but that he was in a great Confusion at the Time they were taken. Being then required by the Committee to read them over himself, and to shew in what Particulars they vary from his Sense and Meaning, he grew more composed; and having read over the first, dated the 27th of March, said, he believed it was right enough. In reading over the second (dated the 29th of March) he said it was not strictly true that Sir Harry Goring had told him what is there related, concerning an Invasion, Commission, &c. but that it was true, he had heard Sir Harry Goring say so; that as to Lord Lansdown's being to land in the West, he could not be positive, but he thinks Sir Harry Goring said so. He said, it was but a Supposition of his own, that the Discourse which occasioned the Bishop of Rocheſter's taking Sir Harry Goring by the Collar, related to the Pretender's Affairs: But that he remembers very well, Sir Harry Goring did affirm, that on his saying the Words there recited, (this is Rocking the Cradle indeed) the Bishop did take him by the Collar, and that he, Caryll, did apprehend the said Discourse to have Relation to the Pretender's Affairs. He said it was about two Years ago that being at Sir Harry Goring's he saw a letter lie on his Scrutore, directed to Mr. Hore, and upon his asking Sir Harry who the said letter was for, Sir Harry told him it was writ to himself. He said that the Words in his Deposition which import, that he, Caryll, had Reason to believe Kelly and Sir Harry Goring were settling together a Key at his House at North, by which they might correspond, are too strong; for that he, Caryll, did not see any such Key, only it was his Suspicion and Thought at that Time that they were framing such a Key.

He likewise said, that what relates to Boyce in the said Deposition is rather stronger than he meant it; for that Boyce only told him he was afraid the Servant, he, Caryll, had sent to him to help off, was Sample; alledging this Reason, that he had observed he was disguised, and that he was afraid he was somewhat like the Description given of Sample in the Proclamation. All the other Particulars of his Depositions he averred to be true, but said, he had nothing farther to add, and that he would rather a thousand Times die in Newgate than be an Evidence.

Boyce, being examined by the Committee, owned that Sir Harry Goring went to France in his Yacht, and that a Servant went over with him in a Black Wig, whom he had never seen with Sir Harry Goring before; but he utterly denied his having conveyed over any Person sent to him by Mr. Caryll, or his having had any Discourse with Caryll about any Person's answering the Description of Sample.

The Committee having summoned before them

William Beasing, of Horn Dean, and having read to him his former Depositions, find that he retracts what he had there deposed on Oath, of Caryll and Sir Harry Goring's being in Company at his House with the Person who had but one Hand: he says, such a Person was at his House with two other Gentlemen, but that he now recollects Caryll and Sir Harry Goring were not there at that Time. Being asked whether he had received any Letter or Message, since his being in Custody, which had helped to set him right in this Particular, he answered in the Negative.

The Committee observe from the Parts of Mr. Caryll's Depositions which he affirmed, that the Explication given to the Name of Hore, in the Report of the Committee of the House of Commons, as also the Decyphering of that part of Kelly's letter which mentions Hore's Commission, and the Conjecture of Goring's having carried over a new Cypher from Kelly to France, are very much confirmed. They likewise observe that what is said in Glascock's letter to Kelly of the 27th of October, concerning the Arrival of the little French Merchant, mentioned by Kelly, and the Precaution they intend to use in relation to him till some other appears with whom they may talk of Business more to the Purpose, has probably relation to Sample's being got safe to France. And the letters signed Fra. Phillips, which Caryll owns he received from Kelly, not only confirms Kelly's writing by fictitious Names, but is a strong Argument of his being the Person that writ the letter to Bonnaville of the 27th of September, and consequently the other letters charged upon him in the Report. For as in his letter to Caryll, he says: 'I have never heard a Syllable from your other Lawyer, (Sir Harry Goring) since you and I were with him, which you'll say is pretty surprising, and am afraid very detrimental.' — so in that to Bonnaville (writ within five Days of the other) he says, 'I have not heard a Syllable from D. Gainer, or G. Roberts, since Mr. G. Sampson went, which has been a great Surprise, and I may say no small Detriment, to some of their Friends.'

This Identity of Expression, in two letters writ so near the same Time, appears to be a farther Confirmation that the same Person writ them both, and confirms G. Sampson to be the same with the other Lawyer, which Caryll has explained to mean Sir Harry Goring.

The Lords Committees also find in the Papers referred to them new Evidence of Kelly's visiting, writing to, and receiving letters from the Bishop of Rocheſter, as appears by Affidavits from the Persons who carry'd Kelly to the Bishop's House, and who also delivered letters from him to the Bishop, and brought back the Bishop's Answers; and Mrs. Levett deposes on Oath, that Mrs. Barnes has told her, Kelly received in one Day as many letters from abroad as came to fourteen or fifteen Shillings, the Directions of which she, Barnes, saw, but they were in such odd fictitious Names, as no one could find out but Kelly, who had the Key; that among these letters there was one for the Bishop of Rocheſter, (as Kelly told her) which he was at that Time gone to deliver to the Bishop. And John Malone deposes, that among the letters which he carried from Kelly to the Post, there were some directed to Waters the Banker at Paris, under whose cover it appears that most of the Treasonable letters were sent; and the original^a letter in Kelly's own Hand stopt at the Post-Office was enclosed in a cover so directed. Mrs. Levett farther^b deposes that Mrs. Barnes told her, under Secrecy, that the Dog sent from France was a Present from the late Lord Marr, to the Bishop of Rocheſter's Lady; which is in some measure confirmed by the Draught of the Affidavit prepared for Birmingham at Paris, in which he is desired to swear that Lord Marr knew nothing of any such Dog. And tho' this Affidavit does not appear to have been sent over by Kelly directly, yet exprefs mention is made in the letter to Gordon, that the said Affidavit is the Copy of a Note from the Person concerned with the Substance of what he thinks requisite. This Circumstance of the Dog's having been sent by the late Lord Marr, which is not exprefsly alledged in any part of the Report of the Committee of the House of Commons, is a new Confirmation that the^c letter sign'd 918, which mentions the sending the Dog, is from Marr; and that Musgrave, to whom the Receipt of the Dog is acknowledged in^d two several Letters, is likewise a Name denoting Marr, agreeably to what is asserted in the said Report.

The Committee find by^e two Affidavits referred to them, that George Kelly, the last time he was taken into Custody, offered the Woman of the House a Gold Watch, forty Guineas in Money, and a Note for forty Pounds more, to let him escape.

The Committee have laid the Substance of these several Examinations together, as having some Reference to George Kelly.

They likewise examined Mr. Dennis Kelly, who utterly denied his being advised with, or knowing any thing relating to any Conspiracy. Several Papers found in his Custody being shewn to him, he denied his having ever seen them before, except when some of them were shewn to him, at former Examinations.

They next sent for Captain Pancier, and having ordered his^f former Depositions to be read to him, ask'd him whether he had any thing to add or retract; he affirmed every part thereof to be true, and said he had only this farther Particular to add, That having lately seen George Kelly, as he was brought down to the House of Commons; he recollects that he has often seen him at the Gaming-Tables with Skeene, and that Skeene and the said Kelly were intimately acquainted, as he is able to prove by several Witnesses of Credit. Skeene being call'd in, and having heard Pancier's Depositions read over to him, own'd that he was acquainted with Pancier, and had been in Company with him at several of the Times and Places mention'd in the said Depositions; That he was taken Prisoner in the Preston Rebellion, but is not related to Marr, nor has ever seen Mackintosh since he parted from him at Highb-gate. He own'd he had had general Discourse with Pancier relating to a Plot, and that Pancier had ask'd him several Questions about it, to some of which he (Skeene) assented and to others not; but he denied his having told Pancier any farther Particulars than were in the News-Papers, or in the current Report of the Town. As for Instance, when Pancier asked him where the late Duke of Ormond was, he told him the News-Papers said he was at Corunna; but he positively denied his having ever mentioned to Pancier any Particular Persons as concerned in the Conspiracy, or any of the Particular Facts specified in his Depositions.

He farther said, he had reason to believe that Pancier had sent to him since his being in Custody, to advise him to make his Escape; for that one Gerard Fitzgerald having been walking with Pancier in the Park, came directly from thence to him, Skeene, at the Messenger's House, and advised him to make his Escape; tho' he own'd that Fitzgerald made no mention of Pancier's having sent him any such Advice.

Fitzgerald being sent for by the Committee, owned he had been to see Skeene, and finding no body at that time in the House but a Woman, told Skeene, it would be an easy Matter for him to escape; but he cleared Pancier from having sent any such Intimation or Advice. He farther said, that Skeene told him he did not know but he might have talk'd foolishly to Pancier, but that if he had, Pancier was but a single Evidence, or to that effect.

The Committee find, among the Papers referred to them, a^g Copy of the Orders which Arnold received from the Owners of the Ship Pbineas, requiring him to follow the Directions of Roger Nowell (Halstead) during the Voyage; as also an^h Affidavit, by which it appears, that the said Halstead was to visit the Bishop of Rocheſter and staid an Hour at his House, a few Days before his setting out for Bilboa.

They also find a very remarkableⁱ letter sent to one of the Secretaries of State, by an unknown Hand, dated the 12th of February, 1721-22, and inclosed in^k one, dated the 31st of March; which first appears to be the Letter referred to in^l one of Neynoe's Examinations, as drawn up by Kelly and himself, and brought back to him corrected, as he believ'd, by the Bishop of Rocheſter.

They likewise find a^m Paper taken in Lord North and Grey's Study at Carlige, which contains several very extraordinary Reasonings on the Nature of Oaths; tending to prove, That the Oaths to the present Government are not Obligatory; and that tho' the taking such Oaths is in itself unlawful, and a grievous Sin, as being inconsistent with prior Oaths, or Obligations, yet neither the taking nor breaking them can in strictness fall under the Denomination of Perjury.

This is the Substance of what the Committee have been able to collect from a careful Perusal of the Papers referred to them, and a long Examination of several of the Persons concerned; in some of whose Power they have Reason to believe it was to have made ample Discoveries, if they had been disposed to speak the Truth.

And tho' the Lords Committees cannot reflect, without Pity and Compassion, on the misguided Zeal, and wretched Infatuation of those Men, who rather chuse to expose themselves to the greatest Dangers, than to discover the Authors or Accomplices of their Treasons; thereby declaring to the World, that the Leagues and Confederacies of private Villany are dearer and more sacred to them than the strongest Tyes and Obligations of Society; yet the Committee make no doubt but the Matters contained in the Report referred to them, and corroborated by the Result of their present Enquiry, will appear to your Lordships so clearly made out, that the Conspirators, sooner or later, will have leisure to repent of the rash and impious Choice they have made, of being rather true to one another, than to God, their Consciences, and their Country,

ON April 24 the House (according to Order) took into Consideration the Report from the Lords Committees, to whom the Report and Original Papers delivered by the House of Commons at several Conferences, were referred; and who were empowered by this House to examine Christopher Layer and such other Persons as they from time to time should think proper: And the said Report being read, It is resolved by the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Assembled, That this House is fully satisfied and convinced, That a detestable and wicked Conspiracy has been formed and carried on, for soliciting a foreign Force to invade these Kingdoms, for raising a Rebellion, and inciting Insurrections in London, and divers other Parts of Great Britain, and even for laying violent Hands on the sacred Person of His Majesty, and on His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, in Order to destroy our Religion and happy Constitution, by placing a Popish Pretender on the Throne.

Ordered, By the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament Assembled, That the Thanks of this House be given, by the Lord Chancellor, to the said Lords Committees, for their having discharged the Trust in them reposed, with great Exactness, Care, Fidelity, and Candour. Thereupon,

The Lord Chancellor addressing himself to the Lords of the said Committee, (viz. Duke of Montrose, Duke of Dorset, Earl of Scarborough, Earl of Islay, Lord Viscount Lonsdale, Lord Viscount Torrington, Lord Bishop of Sarum, Lord Bishop of Lincoln) gave them the Thanks of the House in the following Words:

My Lords who were of the Committee,

I Am commanded by the House to give your Lordships the Thanks of this House, for your having discharged the Trust reposed in you, with great Exactness, Care, Fidelity and Candour.

My Lords,

The Trust was as great as ever was reposed by this House in any of its Members. The Subject Matter of your Enquiry, a Conspiracy the most dangerous as well as detestable, big with Mischiefs of all kinds, and destructive of every thing that is valuable amongst us; carried on and managed in a new devised Method with the utmost Cunning as well as Wickedness, and covered with all the Disguises the most artful Dexterity could contrive: and which therefore required the greatest Penetration and Skill to lay open. And the Papers, some of them of such a Nature, that it was thought fit to refer them to your Lordships, lock'd up as they were, without reading them in the House.

My Lords,

Your Lordships have fully answer'd the Expectations the House entertained, when they pitched upon you for this Trust.

Your Application in going thro' so many Papers of affected and studied Obscurity, your Candour and Exactness in Examining the Persons concern'd, or any way capable of giving any Satisfaction, and in representing what they said, the Accuracy and Judgment of your Remarks; the Light you have so happily given to several Passages in the Report of the Committee of the Commons, which, tho' in themselves just, were yet liable to Cavils, by such as were loth to have the Truth found out, give, I dare say, a sensible Pleasure to every Lord here, that has heard your Report read, and finds himself thereby enabled to form a Judgment with so entire Satisfaction to himself, concerning this abominable Work of Darknes, which the Actors have endeavoured to surround with impenetrable Obscurity.

This noble Pleasure of seeing the Truth, notwithstanding so many Contrivances to hide it, and of being thereby enabled to come to right Resolutions in a Matter of such Importance, has very naturally and agreeably broke out into so unanimous a Resolution of returning the Thanks of this House to your Lordships, to whom they so much owe it. And in Obedience to their Commands, I do, with particular Pleasure, give your Lordships the Thanks of this House, for your having discharged the Trust in your Lordships reposed, with great Exactness, Care, Fidelity, and Candour.

March 19. The Bill to inflict Pains and Penalties on John Plunket was brought into the House of Commons, to which Plunket making no Defence, it pass'd that House on April 5. and was sent up to the Lords, who after hearing Counsel for the Bill, and Plunket himself against it, pass'd the Bill; which afterwards obtained the Royal Assent, and was as follows.

An Act to inflict Pains and Penalties on John Plunket.

WHEREAS in the Years One thousand seven hundred and twenty one, and One thousand seven hundred and twenty two, a detestable and horrid Conspiracy was formed and carried on by divers Traitors for invading your Majesty's Kingdoms with foreign Forces, for raising an Insurrection and Rebellion against your Majesty, for seizing the Tower and City of London, and for laying violent Hands upon your Majesty's most sacred Person, and upon his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, in order to subvert our present happy Establishment in Church and State, and to place a Popish Pretender on your Throne: And whereas for the better concealing and effecting the said Conspiracy, divers treasonable Correspondences were, within the time aforesaid, carried on by Letters written in Cyphers, cant Words and fictitious Names; which Conspiracy, had not Almighty God in his great Mercy disappointed the same, would have deprived your Majesty's Kingdoms of the Enjoyment of their Religion, Laws and Liberties, involved them in Blood and Ruin, and subjected your People to the Bondage and Oppression of Romish Superstition and Arbitrary Power: for which execrable Treason Christopher Layer hath been indited, tried, convicted and attainted. And whereas John Plunket hath been a principal Actor in the said horrid and detestable Conspiracy, by traitorously consulting and corresponding with divers Persons, to raise an Insurrection and Rebellion against your Majesty within this Kingdom, and to procure a foreign Force to invade the same; with a Design to depose your Majesty, and to place the Pretender on your Throne, by traitorously corresponding with the said Pretender; and by engaging in a most execrable and villainous Design of laying violent Hands upon the Sacred Person of your Majesty (whom God long preserve.) Therefore to manifest our just Abhorrence of so wicked a Conspiracy, and our Zeal and tender Regard for the Preservation of your Majesty's Person and Government, and for the Protestant Succession in your Majesty's Royal Family, the solid Foundation of our present Happiness and future Hopes; and to the End that no Conspirator may, by any Contrivance or Practice whatsoever, escape Punishment, and that all Persons may be by the Justice of Parliament for ever hereafter deterred from engaging in any traitorous Conspiracys or Attempts, We your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament assembled, do humbly beseech your Majesty, that it may be enacted; and be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That the said John Plunket shall be detained and kept in close and safe Custody, without Bail or Mainprize, during the Pleasure of his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, in any Goal or Prison within the Kingdom of Great Britain, to the Custody of the Goaler or Keeper whereof the said John Plunket shall from time to time be committed, in pursuance of this Act, by Warrant under the Hand and Seal of any Secretary of State of his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors: Which Warrant or Warrants any Secretary of State for the Time being is hereby authorized and empowered to make; and that the said John Plunket shall forfeit to his Majesty all his Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments, Goods and Chattles whatsoever.

And for more sure detaining the said John Plunket in safe Custody, be it further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That if the said John Plunket shall break such Goal or Prison to which he shall be so committed, or shall escape out of the Custody of the Person in whose Custody he shall be, by virtue of such Commitment, That then the said John Plunket, and all and every Person and Persons whatsoever, who shall be aiding or assisting the said John Plunket in breaking such Goal or Prison, or in making such Escape, as aforesaid, or who shall by Force take or rescue the said John Plunket out of such Custody, Goal, or Prison, during the Continuance of his Imprisonment by virtue of this Act, being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be adjudged Guilty of Felony, and shall suffer Death as in Case of Felony, without Benefit of Clergy.

The same Day the Bill to inflict pains and penalties on George Kelly alias Johnson was brought into the House of Commons, who after hearing Counsel for the Bill, and Kelly and his Counsel against it, pass'd it on April 6. and sent it up to the Lords, who heard Counsel for and against the Bill, when Kelly made the following Speech.

My LORDS,

SINCE my Counsel have so fully answered every Article alledged against me, it may seem unnecessary to take up your Lordships Time, by saying any thing for myself. And, indeed, it would be so, if my Charge were Ordinary or Particular. But, my Lords, I have been represented as a Person doubly guilty: First, In transacting Treason for myself: And, Secondly, In doing it for other People. These are Crimes, of the most heinous Nature; and if they were as clearly proved, as they have been strongly asserted, I should justly merit your Lordships highest Displeasure, and all the Pains and Penalties you could possibly inflict upon me.

And since my Charge is so very extraordinary; since these Proceedings seem to be without any Precedent; and, that the Innocence of other Persons calls upon me for publick Justice; I believe your Lordships will easily allow, That to be silent in such a Case would be truly criminal, and too justly censured.

To enter into all the Particulars of my Accusation, would take up more Time than is reasonable for me to ask, or for your Lordships to allow: And tho' the many Inconsistencies, Contradictions, and false Conclusions which appear in almost every Page of the printed Reports, plainly shew the Weakness, Absurdity and Sophistry of them; however, I shall only beg Leave to touch upon those material Parts which relate to myself, and my Defence to them.

The first Article which I find myself charged with, is, The employing of one Neynoe to draw up three Memorials to the Regent of France, to solicit Foreign Forces to invade this Kingdom. And for Proof of this, the Examinations of the same Person, which are neither upon Oath, nor so much as signed by him, (and whom the Committee of the Honourable House of Commons have represented as a very infamous Fellow) are the only Evidence assigned against me.

This, my Lords, is the Crime! and This the Proof!

And tho' the bare mentioning of it might be sufficient to convince your Lordships of its Weakness, however, since so great a Weight has been laid upon this Kind of Evidence in another Place, it will be necessary to be a little more particular about it.

The two first of these Memorials (viz. those before and after the South-Sea Scheme) are but slightly mentioned: But the One pretended to be drawn up in December 1721, (and containing a Demand of 5000 Men) and a letter said to be written the March after (to amuse the Government into a false Security) are the chief Things upon which any Strefs is laid. And how false both these Allegations are, has evidently appeared to your Lordships. For, had my Accuser been really employed to draw up any such Memorials, it is reasonable to believe, that he would have Copies of some, and especially of the last of them; since a Person who turned Informer so suddenly after, may very well be presumed to have had Thoughts of it

‘ for some Time before ; and such papers would,
 ‘ no doubt, give great Weight to his Information.
 ‘ But the Ministry have produced no such Copies ;
 ‘ neither do they pretend to have them : Which ‘ is a very great Indication, that there never were ‘ any such Memorials at all.

‘ Besides, There are no two of his Examinations of a piece. Nay ! he contradicts himself in almost every one of them. For in his second Examination he says, That these Memorials were all drawn up by the Order of one Henry Watson (whom he really did not know, but took to be the late Earl Marisball) without making the least mention of me. In his third Examination he says, They were delivered to me and Watson ; and in his fourth he says again, They were all drawn up by the Order of Henry Watson only. And in a few Lines after contradicts himself, and says, that the Heads of them were given to him by me and Watson : Which are such Inconsistencies, as (your Lordships will easily grant) are not to be reconciled : And if his Memorials were no better drawn than his Examinations, I believe they were not likely to meet with any great Success.

‘ As to the Earl Marisball, how reasonable it is to believe, that a person in his Circumstances should venture to come into England, and live so openly here, as to intrust himself, and a Secret of this Nature, to a Fellow, who (by his own Confession) did not know him, is humbly submitted to your Lordships. And as for my part, it is very plain that I could have no Hand in them, since the Minutes in my Pocket-book (in which I could have used no Disguise) agreeing with the concurrent Testimony of several Witnesses, plainly shew, That I was not in the Kingdom at the Times in which my Accuser pretends to have been so employed. For, by those Minutes, and their Testimony, it appears, That I went to France the 23d of November 1721, and did not return till the latter End of the next Month : And my Accuser himself owns in his first Examination, That he did not see me after my Return, till the January following ; which makes it impossible that he could have been so employed by me in December, since I was most part of that Month out of the Kingdom ; and the few Days of it that I was here, he owns he did not see me.

‘ Nor has the other part of his Information, relating to the letter (which he pretends to have drawn up in March) better Grounds — For, by the same Minutes, and by the same Evidence, it likewise appears, That I went to France the 22d of February after, and did not return till the middle of April ; which makes it as impossible that he could have been employed by me in March, since I was then likewise out of the Kingdom. Had this Examination been at any Distance of Time, it is possible he might be mistaken in it : But his first Information must have been about the middle of April, soon after my Return from France ; for he confessed to the person taken up with him at Deal, That he was the first who set the Ministry upon intercepting letters. And the first letters so intercepted are owned, in the 42d page of the Report made to the Lower house, to have been the 22d of April, 1722. — And, surely, he cannot be supposed to have forgot so soon what happened the very Month before ; especially ‘ since he has been so particular, as to name the very Day (Saturday) upon which he says this letter was so drawn up. By all which it plainly appears, That this Article is not only groundless, but evidently false ; and likewise, that he had no such Intimacy with me (as the Report pretends) since he has declared, That I never spoke to him of the Conspiracy ; and that I could be a Month at one Time, and Two Months at another, out of the Town, without his knowing any Thing of it. As to what is said of his coming sometimes to my Lodgings, I believe it may be true ; but it has been fully proved, That his Visits were never to me, but always to another Person who lodged in the same House. And I do solemnly affirm to your Lordships, that I never was acquainted with the late Earl Marisball, or with any such Person who went by the Name of Watson : That I knew very little of my Accuser ; so little, that I am confident, I never spoke to him Ten times in my Life ; nor ever employed him in this or any other Affair whatsoever.

‘ The second Article charged upon me, is, the carrying on a Treasonable Correspondence for the Bishop of Rocheſter. And for Proof of this, the Examination of the same Person is the only Evidence produced against me, wherein he says, That I frequently told him, the Bishop was concerned in such a Correspondence ; and that I managed it for him ; with other Particulars not worth mentioning. How reasonable it is, that I should tell such a strange Untruth to a Person that I knew so very little of, and what Credit ought to be given to his bare Assertion, who has affirmed such gross and notorious Falshoods in the former Article, must be submitted to your Lordships. And, in my present unhappy Situation, I cannot but think it a very great and singular Happiness, to have so publick and honourable an Occasion of purging myself from so vile a Calumny, and of doing Justice to that most worthy and learned Prelate.

‘ And I do solemnly declare to your Lordships upon the Faith of a Christian, That I never wrote or received a letter of any Kind for the Bishop of Rocheſter, or was privy to any Correspondence of his at Home or Abroad : That I never shewed him any letter that ever I wrote to France, or ever sent one there by his Privy or Direction : That I am very little known to his Lordship, went very rarely to wait upon him ; so rarely, that I am confident few of his Servants know either my Name or Face ; and I have not seen him above three or four Times these two Years past, and not above eight or ten Times in my whole Life.

‘ I do farther declare, That my Visits to his Lordship were always publick ; that I never went privately in a Chair to his House ; always found other Company with him, who were generally Strangers to me ; and never once mentioned his Name, upon this or any other Account, to the Person who thus accused me. Which, with the Evidence that has been produced of his own Confessions to that Purpose, is, I hope, sufficient to convince your Lordships of the Truth of it.

‘ And as for the Dog, which has been brought as a Circumstance to prove this Matter, I do in the same solemn Manner declare, That he was given to me by a Surgeon at Paris, (whose Affidavit ‘ Affidavit has been offered to be produced) and who, at that Time, I do verily believe, never heard of his Lordship’s Name; and that he never was design’d for any body but the Person I gave him to. And I appeal to the very Ministers themselves, if the British Resident at Paris (who is constantly attended by that very Surgeon, and examined him about it) has not confirmed the Truth of this Account to them. I do farther affirm, That the Bishop of Rocheſter never ſaw him; never received any letter or Meſſage by me, nor (do I believe) by any other Person, about him: Neither did I ever know or hear, That his Lordſhip had any Intercourſe or Correſpondence with the late Earl of Marr, or any other diſaffected Perſon abroad.

‘ My LORDS,

‘ It cannot be imagined, that I have any particular Intereſt or Concern in this Matter; for I never received any Favours from his Lordſhip; neither do I owe him any Obligations, but thoſe of common Juſtice: And thoſe I ſhould perform, where I have ſo much Truth of my Side, to the greateſt Enemy I have upon Earth. As for the other Circumſtances, which are brought to ſtrengthen my Accuſer’s Examinations, and are ſet forth in one Pancier’s Depoſition, They will appear, I don’t doubt, as groundleſs and inconſiſtent as the Examinations themſelves. For this Perſon ſwears, That another told him of this Conſpiracy; that ſix or eight Battalions of Iriſh Forces were to come from Spain to aſſiſt the Conſpirators; that 200000 l. were raiſed, and 800 Men regularly ſubſiſted for this Purpoſe in London. Theſe, My Lords, are called, in the 38th Page of the Report of the Lower Houſe, The concurrent and Corroborating Proofs of my Accuſer’s Examinations: And I humbly appeal to your Lordſhips, if any one of them carries the leaſt Colour of Reaſon or Probability with it. For can it be imagined, That ſuch a Force ſhould come from Spain, when there appears to be ſo ſtriſt a Friendſhip between the two Kingdoms? Or that 200000 l. could poſſibly be raiſed among all the diſaffected in England, in caſe there was a Licence for it? Or 800 Men regularly ſubſiſted in this City, without a Diſcovery? Theſe are ſuch idle inconſiſtent Tales, as (I am perſuaded) can never have any Weight with your Lordſhips. Beſides, my Lords, this is only bare Hear-ſay; and if the Hear-ſay of ſuch infamous Perſons (or, indeed, of any Perſons) be look’d upon as ſufficient Evidence, I believe no Man in England can be ſure of his Life or Liberty an Hour, ſince any two People may talk him into High-Treaſon whenever they pleaſe; and the greater the Perſon is, the greater his Danger always will be.

‘ The Third Crime which I ſtand charged with, is, the Writing of three treaſonable Letters for the Biſhop of Rocheſter, ſuppoſed to be to the Pretender, the late Earl of Marr, and General Dillon, which Letters are ſaid to have been ſent by me to Mr. Gordon at Boulogne, with Directions to be delivered to one Mr. Talbot: And for Proof of this, the Clerks of the Poſt-Office are produced, who ſwear, That thoſe Letters were (to the beſt of their Knowledge) written in the ſame Hand with an Original which was ſtopt as a Specimen of it: Which Original has been ſworn by two Perſons to be ‘ my Writing, and conſequently thoſe letters muſt be ſo too.

‘ My LORDS,

‘ Theſe letters are dated the 20th of April, and the Specimen ſo ſtopt the 20th of Auguſt, juſt four Months after. And how it is poſſible for People (who receive ſuch a Number of letters) to ſwear to a Likeneſs of Hands, at ſuch a Diſtance of Time; and what Weight ought to be laid upon this kind of Evidence; or upon that modern and myſterious one given by the Decypherers, in which they don’t pretend to a Certainty themſelves, muſt be ſubmitted to your Lordſhips. And as to the Perſons who have ſworn to my Hand, I hope it will be conſidered, That one of them is a Meſſenger, who never ſaw any of my Writing, but the Superſcriptions of a few letters, which (your Lordſhips may eaſily ſee) do not bear the leaſt Likeneſs with what he has ſworn to. Beſides, this very Perſon was turn’d out of his Employment upon my Account; and a few Days after he gave this Evidence in the Houſe of Commons, I ſaw a Paragraph in the News-Papers that he was reſtored to it again. And as to the other, it is to be hoped, That it will be likewise conſidered, that he is a Servant who attended me only about three Weeks, and was turned off for an infamous Action, which he has acknowledged himſelf to have been guilty of: Beſides he has confeſſed, That he never ſaw me write, but as he went backwards and forwards in the Room; and at ſuch a Diſtance as not to be able to diſtinguiſh one Character from another: And it has been proved by two Witneſſes, (one of which was a particular Friend of his own) That he declared he never knew any thing of my Hand; but was threatned by the Secretary, into the Affidavit which has been printed in the Appendix. And if that Paper had been my Writing, it is impoſſible they could be reduced to a Neceſſity of making uſe of ſuch improper Evidence, ſince no Pains have been ſpared to procure better; ſince Numbers of People have been taken up, confined and examined to this very Point; and Newgate ſent to, more than once, for Witneſſes to it. And tho’ it might be proved by the very Report of the Lower Houſe, that thoſe letters could not have come from the Biſhop of Rocheſter; however, my Buſineſs is only to convince your Lordſhips, That I was not the Writer of them, and of this, I believe it is impoſſible to give clearer Proofs than I have done: For if thoſe letters had been dictated to me the twentieth of April (as the Report pretends) it muſt have been at his Lordſhip’s Houſe in the Country; ſince it appears by the Depoſition of his Coachman, that he went there the 12th of that Month, and did not leave it till the 5th of May.

‘ But it has been proved, that I was in London all that time; and if it had been permitted, there is not a Perſon in the Biſhop’s Family but would teſtify, That I was not then at his Houſe in the Country; and conſequently could not have written any ſuch Letters for him. Beſides, I have brought ſeveral Perſons of Credit and undoubted Characters, who have all teſtified, that the Hand in which thoſe letters are ſaid to be written, is not mine, nor any thing like it.

‘ An Affidavit has been produced from Mr. Gordon, That he never received any such Letters from me, nor ever had any Correspondence, or even an Acquaintance with me.

‘ And it has been likewise proved, That Mr. Talbot, to whom those Letters are said to be delivered by Mr. Gordon, was in this Town the very Day upon which they are said to have been delivered to him at Boulogne: And if I had any such letters to transmit, can it be imagined that I would trust them to the common Post, when I had so good an Opportunity to send them by, or direct them to Boulogne, when the same Post might as well have carried them to Paris? These are such full, such evident Proofs, as, I hope, cannot fail of giving your Lordships the utmost Conviction in this Matter; and, consequently, that this Article is, like the rest, both groundless and manifestly false.

‘ But if any Credit is to be given to the Confessions which my Accuser made to the Person taken up with him, it is very plain that those letters must have come from another Quarter; and, to say no worse, were at least calculated to carry on his own base and villanous Designs.

‘ For it has been proved to your Lordships, that he confessed to have been employed by one of the Ministers; received 300 l. from him, and was to have 2000 l. more. That this Minister declared a personal Prejudice, upon some private Account, to the Bishop of Rochester; was resolved to pull down the Pride of that Haughty Prelate, and to squeeze me (as I think the Expressions were) to that Purpose.

‘ My LORDS,

‘ I say, if any Credit is to be given to this Confession, there can be no great Difficulty in tracing out the Source of this Part of the Conspiracy; and I am heartily sorry to say, That there are some Circumstances which seem to give but too great a Countenance to the Truth of it. For, my Lords, He made this Confession at a Juncture, when he may very well be supposed to have spoken in the Sincerity of his Heart; when he saw his Villany detected; believed himself to be in the greatest Danger, and depended upon the Person’s Assistance (to whom he made it) to help him out of his Misfortunes. — And how particular this Prosecution is, and how sufficiently I have been squeezed, are Things but too visible, and too well known to the World.

‘ Besides, the very Cypher by which those letters were written, (and which he owned to have received from that Minister) was actually caught upon the Person to whom he gave it; and he confessed, That he put a Paper of Directions into one of my Drawers, by which (the Report says) most of the treasonable letters were addressed. And it has been proved to your Lordships, that those Drawers were constantly open, and that he made some Pretext for being alone in my Lodgings, the very Night before I was first taken up. And since he was the first that set the Ministry upon intercepting letters, which he said were mine; it is very extraordinary, that such a material Part of his Evidence should be omitted in his Examination; or that the very first letters so intercepted, should be those alledged against the Bishop of Rochester: And if the Originals of those Three Letters were stop’t, I don’t at all doubt, but they might be proved to be my Accuser’s own Hand writing. And how strong a Sense he had of his Guilt, by attempting an Escape which proved fatal to him; and how visibly the Hand of God has interposed in that eminent Prelate’s Favour, by taking one of the Persons (designed for his Destruction) out of the World, and giving the other Grace and Virtue enough to withstand all Temptations to his Prejudice, are Things highly worthy of your Lordships just and most serious Consideration, and no small Indication of his Innocence. And as to the Money which my Accuser owned to have received, That there was a very sudden and extraordinary Change in his Condition; that from the lowest State of Poverty and Want, he soon arrived to that of a vicious and most profligate Affluence, is a Truth sufficiently known to all those who were acquainted with him. But from whence this Change proceeded, or what real Grounds he had for aspersing that Honourable Person, I will not pretend to say: But if those Aspersions be false (as I wish they may) it may be justly inferred, That a Fellow who was capable of vilifying one Person, may very well be judged as capable of doing so to another: And if his Veracity is not to hold good in one Case, there can be no Reason for allowing it in the other.

‘ The fourth Crime alledged against me, is, a Number of intercepted letters, supposed to be written to, and received from the late Earl of Marr, General Dillon, and other disaffected Persons abroad. And for Proof of this a Frenchman has been produced, who swears, That he once saw me take up a letter at Burton’s Coffee-house, by the Name of Baker, which Name (it is said) some of the treasonable letters were addressed by; and was, in a Paper of Directions, found in my Lodgings. — How that Paper came there, has been already proved; and as to the Person who has sworn to this Particular, I must observe, that when he gave this Evidence to the House of Commons, he did not know me, tho’ he spoke to me, and look’d several times earnestly at me: and for the Truth of this, I can appeal to most of the Members of that honourable House, who were Witnesses of it: And he would still have probably continued in his Ignorance, if some private Hints (as I have been told) were not given him, or the same Method taken which has been done with a Number of other strange Fellows, who were frequently sent to the Tower, and had no other Business but to take a View of me. Besides the People of the Coffee-house have testified the contrary, and that no such letter ever came to their House. And tho’ it be set down in my Examination before the Council, That I confessed to have taken up such a letter, I humbly appeal to my Lord Chancellor (if it can be worth his Lordship’s while to recollect it) if he did not ask me that very Question two or three times? and if I did not as often deny it? Neither is this the only Particular that is falsely set down in that Examination. And I do solemnly affirm to your Lordships, That I never did receive any such letter, nor ever saw that Paper of Directions, till it was printed in the Report. And there is one Circumstance ‘ circumstance pretty remarkable in this Correspondence, That as it began with my Accuser’s Information, so it ended with his being taken up. For immediately, after a new Correspondence is pretended to be discovered; and to fix this likewise upon me, it has been suggested, that I sent Cyphers by Sir Harry Goring to France, and had letters directed by them to Sturges’s and Slaughter’s Coffee-house.

‘ But, my Lords, no such Cyphers were found in my Custody, nor any Papers relating to such a Correspondence: and the People of those Coffee houses have all sworn, That I never ordered any letters of that kind to be taken in, or received one, either by my own or any other Name from them. Nay! one of them has sworn, That no such letters ever came to his House at all; and the other says, That a Messenger from the Secretary’s Office, was the only Person that ever called at his House for those directed to it.

‘ As to the printed Examination of one Mr. Carryl to this purpose, it were to be wished, That this Gentleman’s Reasons had been published, as well as his Accusation. For I am confident, he will not pretend to say, that ever he saw me write a line in his life, or give a piece of paper of any kind to Sir Harry Goring; and what Reason he could have for believing that we settled a Key for such a Correspondence, is very extraordinary: Nor have the other particulars which he has affirmed, the least Foundation of Truth; for I do solemnly aver, That I never saw Sample in my life, or gave Captain Bonin any such letter of Recommendation; neither had I ever the Honour of speaking to my Lord North and Grey, or of being any ways known to his Lordship: And that I should mention him so familiarly by the fictitious Name of Johnson, (and which, of all Names, I should never make use of in that manner) will, I hope, appear very incredible to your Lordships; especially since Mr. Carryl himself has furnished so good a Reason for the Disbelief of it.

‘ For he has likewise affirmed, That my Examination before the Council was read at Doctor Yalden’s House: The Doctor has, indeed, already done me Justice in that Point; and Mr. Tucker (who was all the while in company) will, I am very sure, do the same. And since Mr. Carryl appears to be so plainly mistaken in this particular, surely he may very well be supposed to be so in all the rest; especially since he has not assigned the least Reason for any of them.

‘ As to the rest of the intercepted letters, the people of the several Coffee-houses have likewise cleared me from them; and all testify, That they never delivered me any such letters, or received any Directions from me about them; which I hope will be sufficient to convince your Lordships, that I was not concerned in any such Correspondence; especially since no letters of this kind were found in my possession, nor any other papers relating to the Conspiracy.

‘ There are two other Crimes, in which I most humbly crave your Lordships patience to be heard, because they are the blackest that can be imagined, and seem to be personal. The First is a letter directed to Mr. Gordon at Boulogne, with two Affidavits, which have been printed, and are suggested to be sent by my Directions,

‘ in order to have him and one Birmingham perjure themselves upon my Account:—For in this letter it is said, That the Inclosed is a Copy of a Note from the person concerned, with what he thinks requisite.

‘ My LORDS,

‘ This letter is dated the 20th of March, at which Time, and for five Months before, I never was allowed the Use of Pen, Ink, or Paper, or the liberty of seeing any person that could possibly have conveyed such a Note for me; for I have been guarded in a different manner from other people in the Tower: My Warders were put into the very Room with me, and ordered never to stir a Moment, Night or Day, out of it; which Orders they punctually obeyed, and were constant Witnesses to all my Actions.

‘ And those Warders will depose, that they believe it was impossible for me to have written or sent out any such Directions; the Officers, I don’t doubt, will do me the same Justice. And when my Solicitor was admitted, finding that Mr. Gordon’s Affidavit might be of use, if allowed as Evidence, a person was immediately dispatched, and who brought it in a different Form from those which have been printed. And my Solicitor can testify, That no Draughts were sent by him; which, with the gross Management of the persons concerned in this Affair, is, I hope, sufficient to give your Lordships the clearest Conviction of my Innocence in it. And I do solemnly affirm, That I never knew any thing of them; never heard of the Name of Aikenhead before; nor can I find out any person (besides the Master of that Vessel) that ever did.

‘ The other Crime is set forth in one Levett’s Deposition, in the Report made to this most Honourable House: wherein (among a great many other most notorious Falshoods) she swears That one Mrs. Barnes told her, that I was instrumental in, or privy to, the shutting up of a person in a Dungeon, for fear of his turning Informer; and not only of him, but of 200 more upon the same Account. Which, I believe, is the most surprizing Crime that ever yet was alledged against any Christian. Mrs. Barnes denies every Syllable of this Conversation; and if the person that swears this against her had been produced, she would be proved to your Lordships to have been a vile infamous Creature all her life. And if she is to be believed, or that your Lordships can think it possible there can be the least Truth in her Deposition, it will be a Sin to let me live, and impossible to find out a punishment too cruel for me.

‘ These, my Lords, are the chief Crimes which I am charged with; and very great ones they are, had they been in any degree made out against me. I am a Stranger to the Methods of legal proof, but have been told by Counsel, That the greater a person’s Crime is, the clearer the Evidence ought to be against him; and how weak and insufficient the proofs produced for this purpose are, and how clear and convincing those which have been offered in my Justification, has, I hope, evidently appeared to your Lordships, and given you entire Conviction of my Innocence; and that all the Crimes alledged against me, are without the least Colour or Foundation of Truth. But how much

‘ I have suffered for these supposed Crimes; and
 ‘ what extraordinary Means have been made use ‘ of against me, are things much worthier of your ‘ Lordships judicial Consideration. To be taken ‘ up, and held to exorbitant Bail, without ever ‘ assigning any particular Crime against me; to ‘ suffer a long and close Confinement, where the ‘ Expence bears no proportion to my Circum‘ stances: To have Numbers of people, and ‘ some of them Creatures of the meanest Rank
 ‘ and Condition, taken up, examined, and tam‘ pered with, upon my Account; and Newgate ‘ sent to for Witnesses: To have a Servant (who ‘ was turned off for his ill Behaviour) brought as ‘ an Evidence, and my most intimate Friends im‘ prisoned for not swearing against me; are ‘ Hardships and Proceedings, I believe, hitherto ‘ unheard of in England; and such as, I hope,
 ‘ your Lordships will, in your great Wisdom
 ‘ and Justice, think fit to redress. All which is ‘ of a piece with an infamous offer made to my‘ self by one of the Under-Secretaries of State,
 ‘ who, the Morning after I was first examined,
 ‘ came to me with a Message (as he said) from ‘ one of his Superiors, to let me know, That I ‘ had now a very good Opportunity of serving myself;
 ‘ and that he was sent to offer me my own Conditions.
 ‘ And when I declared myself an entire Stranger
 ‘ to the Conspiracy, and was sorry to find that ‘ Noble Lord have so base an Opinion of me, he ‘ seemed to wonder that I would neglect so ‘ good an Occasion of serving myself, especially ‘ when I might have any thing I pleased to ask for.
 ‘ What Authority that person had for this Mes‘ sage, or the rest of his After-proceedings, I ‘ will not pretend to say: But as I have been ‘ ruined and utterly undone by them, I hope
 ‘ your Lordships will take my Sufferings, as well
 ‘ as Circumstances, into your Consideration;
 ‘ and, instead of inflicting any farther Pains
 ‘ and penalties, look upon me (as I really am) a ‘ person highly injured, and not a Criminal con‘ cerned in any Transactions against the Govern‘ ment.

‘ As for my Circumstances, they are but too
 ‘ well known in the World.

‘ And here I cannot omit my Gratitude to the ‘ late, and present Constables of the Tower: for ‘ the late Constable (tho’ I never had the Ho‘ nour to see his Lordship) was, upon a Repre‘ sentation of my Circumstances, so very good,
 ‘ as to procure me the promise of an Allowance ‘ from the Government: And his Lordship, the ‘ present, has been so kind as to get it paid.
 ‘ But the Officers of the place can testify, That ‘ this Allowance has not been converted to any ‘ private Use of mine, but constantly given to ‘ the persons appointed to attend me. And I ‘ must take leave to assure your Lordships, That ‘ it has cost me more since I was sent there, than
 ‘ the Government has now left me really worth
 ‘ in the World; and I must suddenly become a ‘ Sacrifice to my Necessities, if not set at Li‘ berty by your Lordships great Clemency and ‘ Compassion.

‘ If I have dropped any Expression which may ‘ not be so agreeable to some particular persons
 ‘ in power, I could wish that my Defence had not ‘ laid me under that Necessity: And I do so‘ lemnly protest, that they have not proceeded ‘ from any Resentment for my Sufferings; but ‘ from a sincere Endeavour to give your Lord-

‘ ships the clearest Conviction of my Innocence.
 ‘ And since I could not merit their Favour, I ‘ shall always endeavour to preserve their good ‘ Opinion.

‘ As to the Legality of these proceedings, and
 ‘ the Danger of making precedents of this Kind, ‘ those are things which have been already fully ‘ set forth by my Counsel, and must be submit‘ ted to the great Wisdom and Jurisdiction of this ‘ most illustrious Assembly: An Assembly! which ‘ is not only the Highest and most Honourable,
 ‘ but the Uprightest and most Impartial, I be‘ lieve, upon Earth; and whose Justice has ever ‘ appeared as extensive as their power. The ‘ great, and the only Argument, which I have ‘ heard offered for the passing of this Bill, is ‘ That the Occasion is extraordinary; that your ‘ Lordships are in your legislative Capacity;
 ‘ and tho’ the proofs may not be so legal, how‘ ever in Terrorem, it is necessary to pass it. But ‘ I humbly beseech your Lordships to consider
 ‘ where the Extraordinariness of this Occasion ‘ lies:—Has there been the least Commotion in ‘ any part of the Three Kingdoms? Or any ‘ person injured in his Liberty or Fortune, be‘ sides those who have been so unhappy as to fall ‘ under this Suspicion? Or, is this Occasion
 ‘ more extraordinary than when there was a ‘ publick Insurrection in the Kingdom? And ‘ when the persons concerned in it, were tried
 ‘ by the common and ordinary Courts of Jus‘ tice? And because your Lordships are vested
 ‘ with a Supreme Authority, and not tied up
 ‘ to the common Forms of law, can that be a ‘ Reason for your acting directly contrary to it?
 ‘ And to suppose your Lordships capable of do‘ ing so, was not, I must say, so becoming an ‘ Argument to have been offered upon this Oc‘ casion. And to have a Session, which opened ‘ with so mild, so gracious a Speech from the ‘ Throne, end in such an extraordinary Manner, ‘ must surely be very contrary to the Design and ‘ Intention of the Throne at that time; and is, I ‘ hope, so still; especially since no intervening ‘ Accidents have happened to ruffle the Quiet and ‘ Tranquillity of the Kingdom.

‘ My LORDS,

‘ The first extraordinary Bill, that, I believe ‘ ever passed in England, was that of the Earl of ‘ Strafford; and how much personal prejudice ‘ was in his prosecution, and how fatal that ‘ Bill proved in its Consequences, I need not ‘ mention, since the Royal Martyr himself has,
 ‘ in his dying Words, called it, An unjust Sen‘ tence, and imputed all his Misfortunes to it.
 ‘ And pray, my Lords, why was that Sentence ‘ unjust, but because it was not supported by ‘ law?—And, to the eternal Honour of ‘ this House be it said, That when the proofs ‘ upon his Trial were not found legal, they ‘ refused to find him Guilty. But when this ex‘ traordinary Method was taken, and the Tor‘ rent of the Times bore down their usual Justice, ‘ then the Flood-gates of all those Miseries were ‘ opened, which overwhelmed and sunk the Con‘ stitution: And of which, some of your Noble ‘ Predecessors had so strong and lively a Sense, as ‘ to declare in this very House, That they ‘ would be sooner torn in pieces, than come into ‘ such illegal proceedings; and so fell a Sacrifice
 ‘ to the love and laws of their Country.

‘ To which I shall only beg leave to add
 ‘ one Observation, that, I am sure, is but too
 ‘ well known to that Right Reverend Bench:
 ‘ ——— That of all the Prelates who advised his ‘ Majesty to the Passing of that Fatal Bill, not one ‘ of them escaped the Violence of those very Persons ‘ whom they endeavour’d to oblige by that Advice.
 ‘ These, my Lords, were the unhappy Effects
 ‘ and fatal Consequences of one extraordinary ‘ Bill: And what those of another may prove;
 ‘ the great Director of all Things only can fore‘ see!

‘ Many are the Arguments wick might be ‘ brought to shew the great Injustice, as well
 ‘ as Inconveniencies, of these Laws in particu‘ lar: But as my Liberty can be of no great ‘ Moment to the World, I shall only beseech
 ‘ your Lordships, not thro’ me to give a Wound
 ‘ to the Constitution, which, perhaps, may not ‘ so easily be cured. The great Characteristick ‘ which distinguishes England from the rest of ‘ the neighbouring Nations, is, the Excellency
 ‘ of our Laws, of which your Lordships are the ‘ great Guardians: And if you suffer those ‘ Laws to be broke in upon, and render Life or ‘ Liberty so precarious, as to be affected or taken ‘ away, by every idle Hearsay, that Excellency ‘ must soon disappear, and the best form of Go‘ vernment now upon Earth, consequently sink ‘ into Anarchy and Confusion.

‘ My L O R D S,

‘ The Words of my Bill are very severe, and ‘ do not bear the least Proportion to the Proofs ‘ which have been produced against me: And ‘ I humbly hope, That my past Sufferings will be ‘ looked upon as a sufficient Punishment; espe‘ cially since it is not pretended, that I have tran‘ gressed any Law yet in being. I propose no ‘ great Happiness in this Life, and would wil‘ lingly avoid as much Misery as I could: And ‘ must therefore humbly beseech your Lordships,
 ‘ to look upon me as a Stranger in your King‘ dom, and a Person (as I really am) inconsider‘ able in myself; and, consequently, incapable
 ‘ of doing the least Prejudice to any Govern‘ ment. For my Behaviour, I am willing to ‘ give the best Sureties that I am able: But if
 ‘ that be not approved of, I hope your Lord‘ ships will give me leave to retire to some other ‘ Part of the World, where I may enjoy my ‘ Poverty with Freedom. But, let my Fate be ‘ what it will, I shall ever pray for your Lord‘ ships particular Welfare, as well as the general ‘ Prosperity of the Kingdom.

‘ And so resign myself, with the utmost Hu‘ mility, to your Lordships great Clemency, ‘ Justice, and Compassion.

After which the House pass’d the Bill, which obtain’d the Royal Assent, and was as follows:

An Act to inflict Pains and Penalties on George Kelly alias Johnson.

‘ WHereas in the Years One thousand seven ‘ hundred and twenty one, and One thou‘ sand seven hundred and twenty two, a detestable
 ‘ and horrid Conspiracy was formed and carried ‘ on by divers Traitors for invading your Ma-‘ jesty’s Kingdoms with foreign Forces, for raising
 ‘ an Insurrection and Rebellion against your Ma-

‘ jesty, for seizing the Tower and City of Lon- ‘ don, and for laying violent Hands upon your ‘ Majesty’s most sacred Person, and upon his ‘ Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, in order ‘ to subvert our present happy Establishment in ‘ Church and State, and to place a Popish Pre-‘ tender on your Throne: And whereas for the ‘ better concealing and effecting the said Con‘ spiracy, divers treasonable Correspondences ‘ were, within the time aforesaid, carried on by ‘ Letters written in Cyphers, cant Words, and ‘ fictitious Names; which Conspiracy, had not ‘ Almighty God in his great Mercy disappointed
 ‘ the same, would have deprived your Majesty’s
 ‘ Kingdoms of the Enjoyment of their Religion,
 ‘ Laws and Liberties, involved them in Blood
 ‘ and Ruin, and subjected your people to the ‘ Bondage and Oppression of Romish Superstition
 ‘ and Arbitrary Power: For which execrable
 ‘ Treason Christopher Layer hath been indicted, ‘ tried, convicted, and attainted. And whereas ‘ George Kelly alias Johnson hath been a principal ‘ Actor in the said horrid and detestable Conspi‘ racy, by traitorously consulting and correspond‘ ing with divers Persons to procure a foreign ‘ Force to invade this Kingdom, and to raise an ‘ Insurrection and Rebellion against your Majesty ‘ within the same, with design to depose your ‘ Majesty, and place the Pretender on your ‘ Throne; for treasonable Practices in which ‘ Conspiracy the said George Kelly alias Johnson
 ‘ being arrested, and divers papers then found
 ‘ about him seized, in pursuance of a Warrant
 ‘ under the Hand and Seal of one of your Ma-‘ jesty’s principal Secretaries of State, for seizing
 ‘ and apprehending him the said George Kelly alias ‘ Johnson, together with his papers, and the ‘ said George Kelly alias Johnson being in Cus‘ tody of a Messenger by virtue of the said ‘ Warrant, did, by Force and Violence, with ‘ a drawn Sword, make an Assault upon, and re‘ sist the said Messenger, with intent to destroy
 ‘ the said papers, and did burn the same: There‘ fore to manifest our just Abhorrence of so wick‘ ed and abominable Conspiracy, and our Zeal
 ‘ and tender Regard for the preservation of your ‘ Majesty’s person and Government, and of the ‘ protestant Succession in your Majesty’s Royal ‘ Family, the solid Foundation of our present
 ‘ Happiness and future Hopes; and to the end
 ‘ that no Conspirator may, by any Contrivance ‘ or practice whatsoever, escape punishment, and ‘ that all persons may by the Justice of Parlia‘ ment be for ever hereafter deterred from en‘ gaging in any traitorous Conspiracies or At‘ tempts, We your Majesty’s most dutiful and ‘ loyal Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Tem‘ poral, and Commons in Parliament assembled,
 ‘ do humbly beseech your Majesty, that it may ‘ be enacted; and be it enacted by the King’s
 ‘ most excellent Majesty, by and with the Ad‘ vice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and ‘ Temporal, and Commons in Parliament assem‘ bled, and by the Authority of the same, That
 ‘ the said George Kelly alias Johnson shall be de‘ tained and kept in close and safe Custody, with‘ out Bail or Mainprize, during the Pleasure of ‘ his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors, in any ‘ Goal or Prison within the Kingdom of Great ‘ Britain; to the Custody of the Goaler or ‘ Keeper whereof the said George Kelly alias ‘ Johnson

‘ Johnson shall from time to time be committed, in pursuance of this Act, by Warrant under the Hand and Seal of any Secretary of State of his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors: Which Warrant or Warrants any Secretary of State for the time being, is hereby authorized and empowered to make; and that the said George Kelly alias Johnson shall forfeit to his Majesty, all his Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments, Goods and Chattels whatsoever.

‘ And for the more sure detaining the said George Kelly alias Johnson in safe Custody, be it further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That if the said George Kelly alias Johnson shall break the Goal or Prison to which he shall be so committed, or shall escape out of the Custody of the Person in whose Custody he shall be by virtue of such Commitment, that then the said George Kelly alias Johnson, and all and every person and persons whatsoever, who shall be aiding or assisting the said George Kelly alias Johnson in breaking such Goal, or Prison, or in making such Escape, as aforesaid, or who shall by Force take or rescue the said George Kelly alias Johnson out of such Custody, Goal, or Prison, during the Continuance of his Imprisonment by virtue of this Act, being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be judged guilty of Felony, and shall suffer Death as in Case of Felony, without Benefit of Clergy.’

Mrcb 22. The Bill to inflict Pains and Penalties on Francis Lord Bishop of Rocheſter was brought into the House of Commons, to which the Bishop making no Defence, it pass’d that House April the 9th, and was sent up to the Lords; where the Bishop made his Defence by Counsel; who were Sir Constantine Phipps, and Mr. Wynne: Sir Constantine Phipps spake as follows:

My Lords,

BY the Appointment of this Honourable House I have the Honour to attend your Lordships, as Counsel for the Reverend Prelate, the unfortunate Prisoner at the Bar: And persuade myself it will not be difficult to defend his Lordship from the heavy Pains and Penalties of this Bill; since the Counsel for it confess that it is supported only by circumstantial Evidence.

Bills passing into Laws for taking away Mens Liberties and Estates by Circumstances only, are new. Convictions by Circumstances were never heard of in Ages past; and I hope will never be known in this, or any which is to come: And tho’ one of the Gentlemen said, that Circumstantial Evidence is sufficient at This Time of Day, I hope, the Law is the same at This Time of Day, as ever; and that the Lives and Fortunes of English Subjects will be as well protected and defended by your Lordships, as they were by your Predecessors.

The Securities which the Laws have provided for our Liberties and Estates, and the Happiness that we cannot be depriv’d of them but by full and legal Proof, are Advantages which were obtain’d at great Expence of Blood and Treasure, by your Lordships Noble Ancestors: And we doubt not but You will transmit them to Posterity, as entire as they have been continued down to your Lordships.

The Law is the Rule of Mens Actions; and Persons accused as Criminals for Facts committed by them, ought to be tried by the laws that were in Force at the Time of the Facts committed, secundum Allegata & Probata. But laws made ex post-Facto, to punish Men for Facts which were not Offences when they were committed, render all things that are dear to Englishmen precarious; and for that Reason have been as often condemn’d, as they have been made.

The Charge against the Bishop and Mr. Kelly are so interwoven, that I beg you will excuse me, if, in my Vindication of him, I urge any thing, which I offer’d in behalf of Mr. Kelly, when I had the Honour to attend your Lordships as his Counsel: But I shall take care to repeat no more than is necessary.

My Lords,

I am very far from denying, or contesting, the Power of Parliaments as to Bills of Attainder; but I hope I may have leave to observe, that such a Power hath been very rarely exerted, unless upon extraordinary Occasions, and in Cases of Necessity. I hope too I may be permitted to shew, that the Case of my Lord Bishop is not within either of those Reasons.

He never withdrew himself out of the Kingdom; never fled from Justice, but was always amenable and forth-coming, ready to be try’d according to the usual and ordinary Methods of Justice. And the Attainders of Mortimer, and the Earl of Arundel, in Edward III’s Time, of Sir Thomas Haxey in Richard II’s Time, and others afterwards, were revers’d, because the Persons accused were forth-coming, and might have been brought to a Trial according to the usual Course of Justice. Wherefore I hope the same Reasons which prevail’d with those Parliaments to reverse those Attainders, will have Weight enough with your Lordships to prevent this Bill’s passing into a Law.

The Parliament, at the Restoration, did not think fit to interpose their legislative Authority even in the Case of the Regicides; but left such of them, as were alive, and forth-coming, to the ordinary Methods of Justice, and gave them a fair Trial for their Lives and Estates. The only remarkable Bill of Attainder, which hath been in some Ages (except of such as were in actual Rebellion, or fled from Justice) was that of Sir John Fenwick. I own, I mention’d this Case on behalf of Mr. Kelly; and it being a Case so material for my Lord Bishop’s Defence, I cannot in Justice to his Lordship omit making some Observations upon it: From which it will appear, that the Reasons given for passing that Bill are the strongest Arguments in the World against this.

The Preamble of Sir John Fenwick’s Attainder shew’d the Necessity of it: For the Preamble sets forth,—That Sir John Fenwick was, upon the Oaths of George Porter, and Cardel Goodman, indicted of High-Treason: That he obtain’d his Majesty’s Favour to have his Trial delay’d from time to time, upon his repeated promises of making an ingenuous and full Confession: That several times were appointed for his Trial; at one of which he had been actually try’d, had it not been for the Expectation of the Discoveries so often promised: That since the times appointed for his Trial, Cardel Goodman, one of the Witnesses, was withdrawn, so that he could not be had to give Evidence. And it appeared upon the Trial, that Porter had been tampered with, and had 300 l. paid him, and 200 l. more promised him, to go beyond Sea. This made the presumption very strong, that Goodman was sent away by some of Sir John's Friends. So that there was an Indictment against him; two Witnesses were sworn upon it, and proved the Treason; and he promised from time to time to make Discoveries.

Hath my Lord Bishop been indicted? Hath there been any Oath made against him? Did he ever impose upon his Majesty or the Ministry, by promising to make any Discovery? Hath he sent away any one that was Witness against him? Since these Circumstances were thought necessary by the parliament at that Time to induce them to pass that Act; and the present Case is not attended with any one of these Circumstances; this, we humbly conceive, is a Reason, why your Lordships should not pass this Bill.

The greater the Offence is of which any person is accused, the plainer and clearer the Proof ought to be: And my Lord Coke in his 4th Institute, page 37. (which I mentioned the other Day) speaking of the Attainder of Cromwell Earl of Essex by Parliament, says; 'The more high and absolute the Jurisdiction of the Court is, the more just and honourable it ought to be in its proceedings, to give Example of Justice to inferior Courts.'

The Offence charg'd on my Lord Bishop is of the highest Nature; and this Jurisdiction the most high and absolute: Therefore the proceedings, without doubt, ought to be the most Just and Honourable.

The Punishment inflicted by this Bill, is the greatest that can be, next to Death itself: For what can be worse, than for a Reverend Prelate of such advanced Years, and of so infirm a Body, to be banished into another Country, and be forced to seek his Bread in desolate Places?

The punishment is still much severer to his Lordship, who hath saved nothing to support himself: For his eminent Hospitality, and his extensive Charity, tho' they have fitted and prepared him to live in another World, yet have disabled him from subsisting in another Country: There he will himself want that Charity, which he so liberally bestowed upon others; and must beg upon his Crutches, or starve.

As to the Evidence offered against his Lordship, I humbly apprehend the Proof would not be sufficient at Law to support an Indictment for the lowest Misdemeanor. And will your Lordships, in your great Wisdom and Justice, convict a Lord of Parliament, a Member of your own Body, and subject him to such severe Punishment, upon Evidence that at law would not be sufficient to convict the meanest Subject of the most minute Trespas?

This, I humbly apprehend, will appear to be the Case, when the Charge against my Lord Bishop, and the Evidence to support it, have been considered.

The Bill recites, 'That there was a detestable and horrid Conspiracy for invading his Majesty's Kingdoms with foreign Forces; for raising a Rebellion; for seizing the Tower and City of London: and for laying violent Hands upon his Majesty's most sacred Person, and upon his Royal Highness.'

As to the seizing the Tower, and the City, and laying violent Hands on the King and Prince; neither of these Crimes is charged upon my Lord Bishop. But the Charge against his Lordship is, that he hath been deeply concerned in forming, directing, and carrying on, the wicked and detestable Conspiracy, by traitorously consulting and corresponding with divers Persons to raise an Insurrection within this Realm, and to procure foreign Forces to invade this Kingdom; and intending to raise a Rebellion, at the time of the Elections; and when the King went to Hanover; and at the breaking up of the Camp.

As to the first, viz. The sending for foreign Forces; the Bishop is not charged with being privy to any one of the three Memorials: For Neynoe says, he wrote them, and they were dictated to him by Kelly and Watson, whom he supposed to be the Earl Marishal.

As to the Charge of raising a Rebellion at the time of the Elections, 'tis founded on a letter, signed 1378, and directed to Mr. Jackson; which, the Report says, the Committee have good Reason to believe was from the Bishop of Rocheſter to the Pretender.

The letter says, 'Notwithstanding this Opportunity is elapsed, I agree with you, another may offer before the end of the Year.' And the Observation made upon it is, that it was wrote the 20th of April, when most of the Elections were over: So consequently the Opportunity was elapsed.

The letter of the 20th of April is supposed to be wrote to the Pretender at Rome. It supposeth a letter to the Pretender had been wrote, taking notice that an Opportunity was elapsed at the Elections; and that an Answer had been made to that letter by the Pretender, that another may offer before the end of the Year: which must be at least two Months before the Date of the letter; and that was before the Elections were begun.

As for raising a Rebellion, when the King went to Hanover; it is infer'd from dark Passages in letters of the 20th of May 1722, N. S. 9th of May O. S. and 10th of May O. S. which are said to have passed between Dillon, or his Secretary, and Kelly. And by comparing those Passages, you will observe what Foundation there is for such a Charge.

In the letter of the 9th of May O. S. 20th N. S. Quitwell, supposed to be Dillon's Secretary writes to Baker, supposed to be Kelly, 'That if this Post hath not brought an Addition of Three to the Six, formerly come from Repney, it is easy for Mrs. Jones to see, what is still wanting for the purchase she intends to make.'

In the letter of the 10th of May O. S. Hatfield, who is supposed to be Kelly, writes to Howell, who is supposed to be Dillon's Secretary, 'That the King intends to set out early next Month; if they could then compass Barrels enough, the sooner the Wine comes, the better; Jones promises to be a good Customer.'

From hence, and from what Pancier said Skeen told him, 'twas insinuated, that great foreign Forces were to be brought in for the Pretender; that great Sums of Money were contributed for that purpose; and that those Sums were under the Management of the Bishop of Rocheſter; and all this, because Quitwell tells Baker, if the last Post did not bring an Addition of three to six, Mrs. Jones may see what is still wanting for the purchase she intends to make.

Now suppose, by Quitwell and Howell, are meant Dillon's Secretary; and by Baker and Hatfield, Kelly is intended; and suppose, that by the Addition of three to six, is meant a Remittance of Money; by Wine are meant Soldiers; and by Mrs. Jones is meant my Lord Bishop of Rochester: Yet can what Dillon's Secretary writes to Kelly, or what Kelly writes to Dillon's Secretary, affect the Bishop of Rochester? If it can, it is in the power of any two Men, one residing here, and the other beyond Sea, to take away the life of any Man breathing. But suppose we can make it appear, as most certainly we shall, that by Mrs. Jones, cannot be meant the Bishop; then what becomes of this part of the Charge?

The next thing to support this Charge, is, a passage in an Extract of a letter dated the first of May, written from Quitwell to James Baker; in which 'tis said, that 'Mrs. Jones cannot take a better Time to have himself fitted with an easy Saddle, &c.' If an Extract of a letter can be of any Weight, and the Construction put upon it is to be allow'd; then the Bishop is turn'd General, or at least a Colonel. For by Neynoe's Information and Plunket's Cypher, Saddlers, and Saddles, are Irish Soldiers, and Regiments: so the Bishop is represented as undertaking to raise a Regiment of Irish Soldiers, and to mount on Horseback himself to command them.

As to the third thing charged, which was to raise a Rebellion at the Breaking up of the Camp; there is no Pretence of Evidence. So that, upon the whole, there does not appear to be any pretence for that part of the Preamble to the Bill, which chargeth the Bishop with having been deeply concern'd in forming, directing, and carrying on the Conspiracy.

The next thing charged against his Lordship, is, that he was concern'd in a Correspondence Abroad, and some Transactions at Home for bringing in the Pretender.

Now as to this, I would observe, that there is not one Witness against his Lordship of any criminal Act; that tho' all his Papers have been seiz'd, yet there appears not any Letter, or Paper, under his Hand, of a criminal Nature; nor any letter prov'd to be written or receiv'd by him, which is criminal: Neither is there any Charge of any Meeting or Consultation with any Persons for carrying on this Conspiracy. Indeed he is mention'd as a Member of a Club, call'd the Burford-Club, of which the Earl of Orrery was said to be Chairman; which Club (as I apprehend) was never heard of 'till Layer's Trial. This Accusation I know to be false; and never met with any one that believed it: Therefore shall not trouble your Lordships with any farther Observations upon it, than just to take notice, that tho' he who made the list hath joined me with persons of great Quality and Honour; yet I presume to say, that my Profession in the Law, as well as my Religion, has given me such a Sense of my Duty, that no persons whatsoever are great enough to draw me into a plot against his Majesty and the Government.

I beg leave to observe that this Charge is founded, partly upon the Hearsay of Pancier and Ney- noe, and partly upon the three letters dated the 20th of April 1722.

As to the Hearsay-Evidence; Pancier deposes, that Skeen told him, that the Bishop of Rochester and Lord North and Grey had the principal Direction of the Conspiracy; that 200000 l. had been raised by Contribution, and was put into the Management of the Bishop; and that it was call'd the Military Chest. Now can this be Evidence in an Indictment, or Action, for the most minute Trespass, or in any Case? Can it be imagin'd, that so much money could be raised among the Jacobites? or that such a Sum could be raised, and not one Contributor discovered? Can it be imagin'd that such a Sum should be entrusted with one Man? Or that my Lord Bishop would be that Man, who would have the Care and Trouble, and run the Hazard, of such a Sum? To which it may be added, that Skeen, the only Person living, who by any Person living is said to have said this, is now in Custody, ready to be examin'd upon Oath, and denies every Word of it.

As to Neynoe's Examinations, he speaks only what Kelly told him; and can what Kelly told him affect the Bishop? Besides, none of his Examinations are upon Oath, or so much as sign'd by him; (whereas the Examination of Goodman, that was given in Evidence against Sir John Fenwick, was upon Oath;) all of them appear to be taken after he was in Custody, under great Apprehensions and Terrors; nay, it appears that one of them was taken the Day before he drown'd himself: And moreover, that only one of them was read, which was extract'd out of three Examinations, mark'd A, B, C, and said to contain the Substance. We desire all the Three Examinations may be produced, and read; and then it will appear, whether that one contains the whole Substance; or whether there be not some Things very material omitted: And it will likewise appear, that there are such Inconsistencies in them, as will take off their Credit. For in one place he says, he saw Kelly make use of the Cyphers; and that Kelly own'd with great Freedom they were for carrying on a Correspondence with the Pretender and his Agents: and yet in another place he says, That Kelly never open'd himself as to the plot now on foot; that indeed he had seen several letters from Paris and other places, but they contain'd nothing material. So that it must be supposed, either that there was no Treasonable Correspondence carry'd on by Kelly; or that Neynoe was not so great a Confident of Kelly's as he pretended.

Neynoe says, he drew three Memorials; and the last was in December 1721, to the Regent for five thousand Men; that all the Memorials were drawn by the Order of, and dictat'd by, one Henry Watson, whom he did not know, but took to be the late Earl Marishal; that Henry Watson, whom he took to be Earl Marishal, was in England all last Spring, and that he lay with him several Nights.

'Tis very extraordinary, that the Earl Marishal should trust a mere Stranger to draw three Memorials, and one of them for five thousand Men to invade the Kingdom; and that afterwards he should lie with him several Nights, and not know who he was.

In one of his Examinations he says, the Heads of the Memorials were given him by Kelly and Watson; in another he says, they were all drawn by by Watson: And 'tis observable, that the rough Draught, or a Copy of any one of them, is not produced; which certainly, he that intended to turn Evidence, and so soon after became an Informer, would have done, if there had been any such.

The Committee are pleas'd in their Report, Pag. 38. to take Notice, that Neynoe said, Kelly told him, that a Lord of the Council gave the Bishop Notice of his being to be taken up, some Days before it happen'd; and are pleas'd likewise to say, that he afterwards confess'd, (as they were inform'd) that in that, and other his Examinations, he endeavour'd all he could to create Diffidence and Suspicions among his Majesty's Servants. And what Credit can be given, after this, to one, who had so little Regard to Truth, as to say any Thing, tho' never so false; to so wicked a Purpose, as to create a Misunderstanding among his Majesty's Servants? especially if one considers how probable it is, that the Remorse he had upon his Conscience, occasion'd by the Evidence he had given, and his Dread of the Shame of being forc'd, when he came upon his Oath, to deny what he had said when he was not upon his Oath, were the Reasons of his making away with himself. And we shall call some Witnesses, who will give a full Account of him.

We shall call one, who but lately depos'd before your Lordships, that Neynoe told him, he had said several Things to a great Man, which he neither would nor could swear without being perjur'd.

I most humbly beg your Lordships Pardon, for being so particular in a Matter which I had so lately an Occasion to mention: But this is the Hinge upon which the Weight of the whole Charge against the Bishop turns, and therefore I doubt not but your Lordships will excuse me.

The next Charge against my Lord Bishop ariseth from three Letters, dated the 20th of April, 1722. One signed J. Jones, innuendo the Bishop; to Chivers, innuendo Dillon: The second signed Illington, innuendo the Bishop; to Musgrave, innuendo Lord Marr: The third to Jackson, innuendo the Pretender; and signed 1378, innuendo the Bishop. These letters are said to be wrote by Kelly, and dictated by the Bishop.

Now as to these letters, I beg leave to observe there is nothing Criminal appears to be in any of one them. But then 'tis objected, that two of the Persons are attainted of Treason, and are Agents of the Pretender; and 'tis High-Treason to write to them: And the third is the Pretender himself.

Supposing Chivers were Dillon, and Musgrave were Marr; yet writing to them in private Matters, not criminal in themselves, nor relating to the Pretender, is not Treason.

But how comes the Lord Marr to be an Agent for the Pretender? He quitted the Pretender's Service many Years before; and from the Time of quitting his Service, till after the Date of those letters, had a Pension from his present Majesty. I believe the Counsel for the Bill, and all Mankind, will be at a Loss to tell by what Law writing to one, who hath quitted the Pretender's Service so many Years, and who hath subsisted ever since by a Pension from his Majesty, can be an Offence.

Indeed, if it be proved that Jackson is the Pretender, I admit Writing to him is Treason:

But if it be proved (as it will beyond all Dispute) that by Jackson neither is nor can be meant the Pretender; and that my Lord Bishop neither did nor could write or dictate any one of these letters; then the whole Charge against my Lord Bishop, founded upon those letters, falls to the Ground.

The next Thing I would observe, as to those letters, is from the Report, Page 42. where the Committee are pleas'd to observe, that the letter to Chivers is, great Part of it, out of Cypher; which seems to allow that the other Part was in Cypher. Therefore it was very necessary, I think, to have printed the letters in the Cyphers and Characters, in which they were written; and also as they are decypher'd: Then the Persons accus'd would have had an Opportunity of employing Men skill'd that way, to see if they were rightly decypher'd. This was done in Colman's Case.

The French Papers, in the Appendix, are printed first in that language, and then as they are translated; which was not so necessary as Printing the letters in Cypher in this Case: Because almost every one understands French enough to tell, at first Sight, whether a French letter be rightly translated; but 'tis impossible for a Man of the great Skill in the Art of decyphering, to tell, upon a sudden at the Bar, whether a letter be rightly decypher'd: So that all a Man hath in the World, is to depend upon the Skill and Integrity of the Decyphers. Nor are they infallible; for the Witnesses who decypher'd the letters, admit, that there are some Words in them which they could not decypher; and those Words may give a Turn to the whole Sense of the letters. Nay, Mr. Willes said, that one of the Numbers he could not decypher stood for two Words: He was likewise pleas'd to say, it was impossible that the Number he could not decypher could make an Alteration in the Sense; which is very extraordinary for a Man to swear: But if one Word could not make an Alteration in the Sense, surely two might.

The writing these letters is charged upon Kelly; which cannot affect my Lord Bishop, unless they were dictated by him, or written by his Direction, or Privity; of which there is no Pretence of Proof. And therefore I shall next offer to your Lordships some Observations upon the Arguments and Circumstances alleged to support this Charge.

It is observed in the Report, that the Person who wrote these letters, speaks of himself as being in ill Health, in great Pain, under some sad and melancholy Circumstances, which he expects will soon blow over; and from thence 'tis infer'd it must be the Bishop, because his Wife was then ill, and died in six Days after; and that he himself was at that Time afflicted with the Gout. One of the Gentlemen, who was Counsel for the the Bill, said, These were Circumstances, that did not happen to any two Men in the World at that Time: And give me leave to instance one other Circumstance, which, I believe, did not happen to any one Man in the World; which is, writing a Letter of Politicks, when his Wife lay a Dying.

Why these Circumstances must necessarily intend the Bishop, more than any other Person that was sick, and under Misfortunes, I cannot apprehend. That ill Health must necessarily imply the Gout; and that it must be intended; that no Man had had the Gout the 20th of April, but the Bishop; that melancholy Circumstances necessarily imply a Man's Wife being sick or dying; and that no Man had a Wife sick or dying, but the Bishop; is, in my humble Apprehension, a new way of arguing.

Another way of proving these letters to be wrote by the Bishop, is by the Names and Figures subscribed. For one letter is subscribed, T. Jones, and another letter is subscribed, T. Illington: And the Report observes, that wherever Jones and Illington are named, the Bishop is to be understood. But why the Bishop is to be understood by those Names, non constat; nor is there any Pretence of Evidence. And if we shew (as we infallibly shall) that by those Names the Bishop could not be meant, and that he could not write, or dictate those Letters; then the Inferences against the Bishop from those Letters, and from the subsequent Correspondence under those Names, become of no Force or Weight.

A Third letter is subscrib'd, 1378; which the Decyphers say denotes a Person, whose proper Name begins with an R. And the Report is pleas'd to infer, that it must be the Bishop of Rochester. Now why 1378 denotes a Person, whose Name begins with an R, the Decyphers only know: And we are as much at a Loss to know, why by a Name beginning with R, must be intended the Bishop of Rochester. If that Number appear'd to denote a Name beginning with R, and if no Name began with that letter but the Bishop of Rochester's; there would then, I confess, be some Weight in the Observation.

That Jones and Illington are not the same Person, appears from the letter of the 10th of May, from Hatfield to Howel; where, within the Compass of two Lines, they are distinguished. For in one Line he saith, Jones promiseth to be a good Customer; and in the next Line but one he saith, Illington is gone in the Country; which plainly shews them to be distinct Persons. Besides, in the Papers mention'd concerning the Duke of Norfolk, his Grace is several times denoted by the Name of Jones: In Layer's list, Sir William Ellis is described by that Name; and in Plunket's list Jones stands for the Germans.

The Evidence to prove Jones and Illington to denote the Bishop, and the Intimacy between the Bishop and Kelly, is the Present of a Dog called Harlequin.

The Evidence stands thus. — Rep. 40. E. 35.
 ' Hatfield, who is supposed to be Kelly, in his ' letter of the 30th of April to Howel, who is ' supposed to be Dillon's Secretary, writes thus.
 ' Mrs. Jones died last Week; pray present my ' Respects to Mr. Musgrave (meaning Marr)
 ' and let him know, I received the Present sent ' by the young lady; that he had a leg broken
 ' in the Journey: However I will take all the ' Care imaginable of him; and inform Mr. Jones
 ' of it, to whom I know any thing from that ' Quarter will be very acceptable.'

Hatfield, in his letter to Musgrave of the 7th of May 1722, says; ' Mrs. Illington is in great ' Tribulation for poor Harlequin: However his ' Obligations to the lady are as great, as if he ' had come safe.'

From these letters 'tis inferr'd, that by Jones and Illington the Bishop is meant; and that a young lady sent the Dog to Kelly as a Present for the Bishop: And 'tis urged, that Mrs. Barnes in her Examination of the 23d of May, says, The Dog was not design'd for her, but for the Bishop of Rochester: That Kelly told her, the Dog was for the Bishop; and that Kelly promised to get the Dog for her from the Bishop, in case it did not recover its lameness.

It is admitted, that Mr. Kelly brought such a Dog from France; that Mrs. Barnes had it; and that its leg was broken: But that it was design'd for the Bishop, or that the Bishop ever had, or saw it, there is no Pretence of Proof; and my lord Bishop utterly denies it; and Mr. Kelly hath solemnly deny'd it to your lordships: And instead of its being a Present from a young lady to the Bishop, Mr. Kelly says he bought it of a Surgeon at Paris, to give it to Mrs. Barnes.

There is one Expression in the letter of the 7th of May, which is remarkable; and, in my humble Opinion, enervates and destroys the Force of all those letters relating to the Dog: For it was written four or five Days after the Bishop's Lady was bury'd; and it says, ' Mrs. Illington is in great Tribulation for poor Harlequin.' Mr. Kelly was supposed to write that letter, and was supposed to be a Friend of the Bishop's; and could a Friend, could any Man of Common Sense, be guilty of such a foolish and ridiculous Expression? Could any Man say of one of my lord Bishop's Character, who was in the utmost Affliction for his Lady, that he was in great Tribulation for the breaking of a Dog's Leg? 'Tis evident, he who wrote that letter, did not know the Bishop's melancholy Circumstances: 'Tis likewise well known, that the Bishop never loved a Dog, nor ever had one.

The next Method of proving Letters upon the Bishop, is by Similitude and Comparison of Hands; not by comparing any Paper written by him with any other Writing; but by producing a letter supposed to be written by Mr. Kelly in August, and by proving that the three Letters written in April, were open'd and copy'd, and sent forward; and that those Letters were of the same Hand with that produced.

It was to be hoped, that, since Mr. Sidney's Case, the Evidence by Similitude of Hands in criminal Prosecutions would never have been offer'd: He was convicted upon such Evidence, and for that Reason his Attainder was revers'd in Parliament. And therefore, I humbly hope your lordships will not in your Legislative Capacity admit that to be Evidence in this Case, which in the same Capacity you were pleas'd to condemn in Mr. Sidney's.

In 1695, Crosby was indicted for writing treasonable letters; and the Evidence was Similitude of Hands: Which Evidence was disallowed by the Chief Justice Holt, and Crosby was acquitted.

In Francia's Case, my lord Chief Baron Bury declared Similitude of Hands to be no Evidence: And if it was not admitted in those Cases, where Papers, were produced, and proved to be of their own Hand-writing, and the Papers with which they were charged were produced, and compared with those other Papers; we presume, your lordships will not allow it in this Case, where it is carry'd farther than ever it was attempted before.

The Proof, as to this Point, stands thus. — Three Clerks of the Post-Office swear, that the 20th of April 1720. these three letters were open'd; that they took Copies of them, and seal'd them up again, and sent them forward; that that four Months after, another Letter came to the Office, which was stopp'd: That is produc'd; and they all swear, they believe the three Letters were the same Hand-writing with the Letter produc'd. Now that Men, who never saw a Hand but once, and thro' whose Hands so many letters pass in a Month, should be able to swear, that three letters, which were sent in April, 1720, were of the same Hand-writing with a letter which was stopp'd four Months after, is strange and incredible.

I beg leave farther to observe, that the Clerks of the Post-Office own they did not compare the Copies of the three letters with the Originals. And was ever a Copy allowed to be read, unless the Person who produc'd it swore that he compared it with the Original, and that 'twas a true Copy?

It is remarkable, that Clark, one of the Post-Office, said, It was impossible to write a Hand, that had any Resemblance to those letters; but yet, he said, the Figures bore a Similitude to the Hand-writing: So that one Hand cannot be like another; but Figures may be like a Hand-writing.

It is also observable, that the letter produc'd is proved to be Kelly's Hand-writing, only by Hutchins the Messenger; who says he had him in his Custody a Week, and saw him write several letters; and by Malone, who proves Mr. Kelly's Hand by a Superscription in French, and yet owns he cannot read French: Whereas, we shall prove by three positive Witnesses, that this is not his Hand. Besides, they might have produced the letter which he wrote to my Lord Townshend, which is admitted to be his Hand.

We shall likewise prove by several Witnesses, That at the Time when the three letters are said to be written, the Bishop was at Bromley, and so lame with the Gout, that he could not stir Hand or Foot; that his Lady was dying; that no Person was admitted to him, but two or three Servants; and that Mr. Kelly was not at Bromley at that time, nor for three or four Months before, or after. And therefore 'tis impossible those letters should be written, or dictated, by the Bishop.

The Evidence of Wood the Coachman, confirms this. For he swore, that he never saw Mr. Kelly, till he was carry'd to see him in the Tower; and that Kelly was not at Bromley; that no Stranger was at Bromley from the 12th of April till the 26th, when the Bishop's Lady died; and that he must have known it, if there had; that the Bishop never sent the Coach for Kelly, or any other Person in Berry-street, or any Place near Pall-Mall. So that by this, the Examinations of Elizabeth Levett and Neynoe are quite destroyed.

But 'tis objected, that a Man might put his Horse at an Inn, and come to see the Bishop, and Wood not know it. Can it be imagined, that Kelly, who is supposed to be so particular a Friend of the Bishop's, would leave his Horse at an Inn? But we shall examine other Witnesses to this.

It was objected, that on the 10th of June the Bells rang, and the Servants had Roses. But it appears, most of them were red Roses: And if it should be criminal to ring the Bells on the 10th of June, we shall shew that the Bishop knew nothing of the Ringing of the Bells, or of the Roses.

In the Report, Page 50. the Committee of the Commons are pleased to take Notice; "That

" on the 11th of June, Kelly sends his Friends at Paris an Account of his late Misfortunes; " and after complaining of the Neglect in not " bailing him out sooner, says, your Old " Friend Rig, indeed, offer'd all that could be " expected from the poor Man;" and infer, " That by Rig is meant the bishop of Ro- " chester.

Can it be imagined, that Kelly would call the bishop Gerrard's old Friend; who, 'tis not pretended, ever knew him, or saw him? and if poor Man be taken by way of Contempt; can it be imagined that Mr. Kelly, a Gentleman of that good Sense and Breeding, would use such an Expression of my lord bishop? If these Words are taken in the literal Sense, 'tis as improbable; for the bishop was not taken for a poor Man: Besides, how could he, who had 200,000*l.* Contribution-Money, and had the Command of the Military Chest, be said to be poor? And I dare say, there is nobody but believes, that if my lord bishop would have intermeddled on Mr. Kelly's behalf, he had Interest enough to procure whatever bail Kelly wanted: And therefore I apprehend, that Rig cannot be intended to be the bishop.

Indeed, no Credit can be given to Cant-Names; for the same Names are us'd for several Persons: As Laws in Plunket's Cypher stands for Marr; and in the Cypher found on Dennis Kelly, it signifies Mr. Cesar. Hawksby in Plunket's Cypher, stands for King George: And in the Report 62, there are Compliments from the Pretender and his Spouse to Hawksby; which, I presume, they did not mean for his Majesty. Jones is used many times for the Duke of Norfolk. It is used for Sir William Ellis; and it is also used for the Germans; as I before observ'd.

That Jackson cannot mean the Pretender, is plain. App. E. 30. A Postscript in the letter from Quitwell to Vernon says, " Mr. Chivers advises, that the Money you mention, in Clinton's " Hands, should be equally divided between " Medley (meaning the late Duke of Ormond) and " Jackson, meaning the Pretender." Now would any one devoted to the Pretender's Interest, put Ormond before the Pretender? Jackson is put for the Pretender only in Plunket's List; and yet 'tis observable, that Plunket in all his Correspondence never calls him Jackson, but Joseph, or Jephson: And in the voluminous Correspondence charged on Kelly, he is not once called Jackson; but the usual Names are Jephson and Joseph.

As for the letter to Dubois, it seem'd at first to be a letter written from France TO the bishop, by the Name of Dubois; and after a Month's time they find it to be a letter written BY the bishop. If so; Writing a letter, and not sending it, can be no Offence. But how comes the bishop to keep that letter seal'd, which he had written seven Months before? The Writer of that letter owns, he had receiv'd one from Dubois two Months before, by Mr. Johnson; which was the Name Kelly went by: And 'tis very strange, that the bishop should be so weak, as to mention the Name of the very Person, who, 'tis said, us'd to write his letters, and by whom he was suppos'd to carry on his Correspondence. If it be presum'd that He wrote this letter; it must also be presum'd, he was out of his Senses when he did it.

That letter was not signed, and was dated the 16th of Dec. but no Year; tho' they have put the Year 1721 to it. For a Month together they never thought the letter to Dubois to be the bishop's Hand; tho' they had several of his letters. As to the Observation made by one of the Gentlemen, that the letter to Dubois was sealed by a particular Seal, and not the Seal with which he seal'd such letters, as He intended all the World should see; that Gentleman would do well to let us know, what letters were written by the bishop, which he intended all the World should see.

That so many letters were written before 1712, and so few since, was occasioned by his lordship's great Correspondence about Matters of Learning at that Time, and his being from that Time often afflicted with the Gout, so that he could not write many letters, and consequently receiv'd but few. Besides, He was made bishop in 1713, and Dean of Westminster; so had not Time to write much himself, but kept a Secretary.

As the Matters before mention'd to be charg'd against my lord bishop, arose from letters supposed to be written by him; I shall next consider the Charge against Him, which arises from letters supposed to be written to Him.

There are Two Letters mention'd in the Report as written to Him; one of the 11th by Motfield, interpreted to be lord Marr, wrote to Illington; the other of the 25th of July from Digby, interpreted Dillon, to Mrs. Weston.

Now I would observe, That it is not pretended, that either of those letters was ever receiv'd by the bishop; so consequently must be intercepted: Therefore it would have been proper, to have produced the Letters, and to have prov'd the Hands.

As to the letter from Motfield, 'tis only a Compliment of Condolence: And 'tis infer'd that it must be the Bishop, because his Lady died a little before. The letter says, "We must submit with Resignation, to what the just and great God thinks fit to order; but you know such Things so much better than I do, that I will not trouble you with saying any more upon it." From these last Words it is infer'd, That this letter was written to a Clergyman, and consequently the Bishop.

What Weight this way of Reasoning will have with your lordships in criminal Prosecutions, is humbly submitted: But it must be observ'd, That this letter is said to be an Answer to the letter, said to be written the 20th of April to Musgrave. And as we have shew'd, that it was impossible the bishop should write or dictate either of the letters of the 20th of April, the Answer must fall with the letter. But from hence the Observation is natural, and undeniably true; that if Jones, who wrote the letter to Musgrave of the 20th of April, could not be the Bishop; and Illington, to whom Motfield wrote, be the same as Jones; then neither Jones nor Illington can denote the Bishop.

As to the letter from Digby to Mrs. Weston, who is interpreted the bishop; it was written the 25th of July, N. S. wherein Digby says, "I cannot on any reasonable Grounds complain of your Silence, because I am inform'd of the Situation of your Health, and the Concern your Family are in, by Bankrupts, and Law-Suits."

It must be observ'd, that on the 7th of July O. S. G. W. in his letter to Digby says, "I saw Mrs. Weston yesterday; she never was better in her Life than now." It is strange, that Digby the Week following should take Notice of the ill Situation of Mrs. Weston's Health. 'Tis plain both these letters can't be Genuine, and therefore no Credit can be given to such a Correspondence.

One Way of fixing the intercepted Correspondence, and the Cant-Names mentioned therein, upon the bishop, is, by the Coincidence of Times, and other Circumstances; as of his lordship being in Town, and out of Town: And there are several Mistakes in them. For in Hatfield's letter to Musgrave of the 7th of May, he says, Mr. Jones is come to Town only for a Day: If that be to be understood of the bishop, it is not true; for he came to Town the 5th of May, and did not go out of Town till the 10th.

In the letter from I. H. to Dixwell, of the 18th of June, 'tis said, 'Mr. H. Rig, and Rep. are I hear in the Country.' And 'tis said, by Rig is meant the bishop: Which cannot be, for the bishop was then in Town. So in a letter to Maisonneuve, of the 19th of July, 'tis said, 'Rig is in the Country.'" Whereas the bishop was then in Town. This is the more observable; because the Report, taking Notice of the bishop's being ill of the Gout, says, Page 41. 'This Particularity, as also several others, which will be taken notice of as to the bishop's being in Town, or in the Country, at the respective Times mention'd in the intercepted letters, have been carefully inquir'd into.' And in the next Paragraph, the Report, taking notice of the letter to Musgrave of the 7th of May, which says Mrs. Jones is come to Town, says, 'This agrees with the Inquiry.' And yet it will plainly appear, that there are such Mistakes, as to those Times, as I have before mention'd.

I hope I may have leave to observe, that these Mistakes escaped the Observation of the Honorable Committee of the House of Commons; and that tho' the letter of the 7th of May, in the Appendix, says, 'Mrs. Jones is come to Town only for a Day;' yet in the Report, the Words only for a Day are left out.

All the Circumstances before mention'd are made use of to fix the Names of Jones and Illington upon my lord bishop; and therefore the next Paragraph but one in the Report is very observable: Which is this.

'These several Circumstances, joined to Neynoe's Declaration, that Kelly had told him, the bishop went sometimes by the Name of Jones, and that Carte had told him, the bishop went by the Name of Illington, shew, that wherever Jones and Illington are named in Kelly's Correspondence, the bishop of Rochester is to be understood by those Names.'

So that the whole Proof of the Correspondence, charged to be carry'd on by my lord bishop under the Names of Jones and Illington, is resolv'd into this; that Neynoe DECLARED that Kelly and Carte TOLD HIM the bishop went by those Names.

I beseech your lordships, Is this Proof? Is this Evidence sufficient to deprive a Reverend Prelate of all his Ecclesiastical Preferments? And to send him into perpetual Banishment? Do the the Lives and Liberties of Englishmen stand upon so weak a Foundation? If they do, I presume to say they are very precarious, and the most innocent Man alive cannot say he is safe.

I beg your Lordships Indulgence to observe farther, that this heavy Charge against my Lord Bishop is supported only by Innuendos: And with what an Eye Innuendos have been always look'd upon in criminal Cases, many Instances may be given.

I shall trouble your Lordships but with one; which is full to this Purpose, and of the greatest Authority: I mean the Resolution of your Lordships in the Case of Sir Samuel Barnardiston in 1683. He was prosecuted for writing letters, alledged to be seditious, and highly reflecting on the Government, and the publick Justice of the Nation; and was found guilty, and fined 10000*l*. He brought a writ of Error in this most Honourable House, and your Lordships were pleas'd to reverse that Judgment; for that the Information being grounded on Letters, which in themselves were not criminal, but made so by Innuendos, your Lordships were pleas'd to declare, that Innuendos and forced Constructions ought not to be allow'd; for all Accusations should be plain, and the Crimes ascertain'd.

Now if it can be suppos'd, without any Evidence, that my Lord Bishop wrote the letters charged to be written by him; even then this Case is the same with Sir Samuel Barnardiston's. For the letters are not criminal in themselves; nor can be made so but by Innuendos, and strain'd, forc'd Constructions. Nay, I presume to say, there is not one Part of the Charge but subsists purely by Innuendos, and strain'd Constructions.

I will trouble your Lordships with instancing only one letter; which is that of the 20th of April, written to Mr. Jackson, and subscribed 1378. With the Innuendos it is thus. 1378, Innuendo a person whose proper Name begins with an R, Innuendo the Bishop of Rocheſter, did write to Mr. Jackson, Innuendo the Pretender; that, notwithstanding this Opportunity, Innuendo an Opportunity of raising a Rebellion in England at the Time of Elections of Members of Parliament, had elapsed; I, Innuendo the Bishop, agree with you, Innuendo the Pretender, that another, Innuendo another Opportunity of raising a Rebellion in England, may offer before the end of the Year, Innuendo at the breaking up of the Camp. Your Lordships will please to observe what a Superfetation of Innuendos (if I may so say) there must be to support this Charge; and without Innuendos no Part of the Charge against the Bishop can be maintain'd: And therefore I humbly hope that the same Reasons which induced your Lordships to reverse the Judgment against Sir Samuel Barnardiston, will prevail upon you to reject this Bill.

To what I have objected, I imagine it will be answered, That your Lordships are now acting in your Legislative Capacity; and that in your legislative Capacity you are not bound by the Forms of Law: But I humbly submit it, whether you will not think fit to proceed according to the Rules of law, tho' not according to the Forms of it.

Mens Lives, and Properties, are to be try'd and determin'd secundum Allegata & Probata; and the Proof in such Cases must be legal Proof. And I apprehend with great Deference, that when your Lordships proceed in your Legislative Capacity in other Instances, you proceed according to the Rules of Law: As in Bills for enabling persons to sell, or settle Estates; or for making Rivers navigable. If the Title or Property of any Person come in question, your Lordships are pleas'd to hold the parties to strict legal Proof: And why not in Bills of Attainder? Are Bills of Attainder (whereby Mens Lives are forfeited, their Estates confiscated, their Blood corrupted, and their Families undone) of less moment than Bills to enable Persons to settle their Estates for the benefit of their Families? I humbly apprehend that your Legislative and Judicial Capacities are here so united, that they cannot be separated. For a Bill of Attainder is a Condemnation by Parliament; and your Lordships always hear and judge whether a Party be Guilty, before you condemn him. Will you then be pleas'd to judge, and determine upon less Proof in one Case than in another? Can it be conceived that your Lordships will not act by the same Rule in both your Capacities? or that you will not have an equal Tenderness and Regard for the Lives, Liberties, and Estates of the Subject in one Capacity, as in the other?

When a Man flies from Justice, he gives Judgment against himself; and when a Person accused doth by corrupt or indirect Means conceal or convey away the Witnesses against him, then he is the Cause, why strict and legal Proof cannot be had: And that may be a Reason, why less Proof should be admitted. But in Cases not attended with either of these Circumstances, to say that less than legal Proof is sufficient for a Bill of Attainder, is to affirm that PRIVATE OPINION alone, without Proof, is a sufficient Foundation to pass a Bill of Attainder. And how harshly that would found in the Ears of Englishmen, is humbly submitted to your Lordships.

My Lords, By our Law a Judge cannot go according to his own private Opinion; but must be govern'd by the Evidence given before him in Court. For the Rule is, Nil refert, quod notum sit Judici; si non notum sit in Forma Judicii. And if Mens Rights and Liberties were to be determin'd by private Opinion; how precarious would the Lives and Estates of Englishmen be? The most innocent Man could not be safe; the wisest Man could not foresee, where it would end; and England must no longer boast of the Excellency of her Constitution.

It is a Rule, both in Law and Reason, that Nemo bis puniri debet pro eodem Delicto: And yet that may happen to be the Bishop's Case. For the Charge in the Bill is general; intending to raise a Rebellion, and holding treasonable Correspondence in order to bring in foreign Forces: But there is no particular Fact charged upon him. Now if he should be indicted for either of those Species of Treason; and particular Overt-Acts of such Treason should be alledg'd, as buying Arms, and listing Men for the Pretender, and the Overt-Acts should be proved by two Witnesses; he might be condemn'd and executed for it. For he could not plead this Bill in Bar to such Indictment; because the Indictment would not be for the same Facts, there being no particular ones charged in the Bill. And yet it may happen (as I said) that my Lord Bishop may be indicted and try'd for the Treason mention'd in this Bill: As in the Case of Hampden and Fitzbarris, which I lately mention'd. For Mr. Hampden was try'd for meeting and consulting to raise a Rebellion, was fined 40000*l.* and was afterwards tried for High-Treason for the same Fact: And tho' he insisted on his having been try'd for the same Fact, and desired to plead it; yet the Court would not allow it. And in Fitzbarris's Case, he was indicted for High-Treason, and pleaded an Impeachment; and averr'd, it was for the same Fact. But the Plea was overruled: For there being no particular Article, the Averment could not be supported; because he could not aver any thing that was out of Record.

I humbly hope your Lordships will excuse me for taking up so much of your Time. But the Multifariousness of the Matters of which the Accusation consists, and the Weight of the Subject, drew me into it. I humbly thank your Lordships for your great Indulgence and Patience in hearing me: And if, as a Lawyer, thro' my Zeal for my Client's Service, or, as an Englishman, asserting those Laws which I apprehend are the Security of British Liberties, I have let drop any Expression, which may be thought improper; I most humbly beg your Lordships Pardon. And if there be a difference between your Legislative and Judicial Capacity; I submit it, whether your Lordships will be pleased to give that Judgment in your Legislative Capacity, which the Counsel for the Bill do, in my Apprehension, admit you could not give in your Judicial. And therefore, I hope your Lordships will be pleased to reject this Bill.

Mr. Wynne (his Lordship's other Counsel) spake next.

May it please your Lordships,

I AM of Counsel for this Reverend Prelate: and however unnecessary I know Apologies to be before your Lordships, who are always ready to hear what the youngest and most unexperienc'd Person has to offer; yet it becomes me to say something for my first Appearance at your Lordships Bar, in a Matter of the last Consequence; and it was the Desire of this Reverend Prelate, rather to make his Defence by such weak Hands as mine, as if he was persuaded, that his Cause needed not the Assistance of Art or Experience, in order to move the Passions, or to impose upon the Reason of his Hearers; which he knows to be but an impotent Help to Persuasion, in comparison of Truth and Innocency. He appears before those, who (he hopes) will regard plain Facts and positive Law; and Truth, notwithstanding all the Disadvantages of an unskilful Pleader, will, he hopes, at last prevail.

For my own part, since your Lordships have assign'd me for his Counsel, I shall be under no Apprehensions of Danger or Displeasure in performing my Duty to him, in humbly offering every thing I think necessary for his just Defence: and I will not doubt, but I shall be fully and favourably heard. And tho' it is his Lordship's Misfortune to be already pre-judg'd in another Place, and to be condemn'd without Doors, by some few vulgar mislead Apprehensions; yet he hopes better Things of you, my Lords: He does not doubt, but that your Lordships, who in Matters of less Importance proceed with Calmness, Justice and Prudence, will be careful not to deviate from those Measures in a Matter which demands the greatest Caution and Deliberation:

For it is the Case, the Reputation, the Liberty, the Fortune, and (I was going to say) the Life of a most learned Prelate; because some Circumstances of this Bill are so cruel and extreme, that it is little better than if it had affected Life itself.

Every one that is a Friend to this Bill, must avow, that it is not to be offer'd without an evident and cogent Necessity. But, I hope, my Lords, tho' the Grounds and Suggestions of it were true, and duly proved, yet that there is no such Necessity.

In order to discover whether there be any such Necessity or not, I shall consider the End proposed by this Bill, and then weigh the Means whereby 'tis hoped to attain that End, and whether this Bill be a Means necessary or convenient to attain it.

The End, I hope, is the Security of the Government, and the Execution of Justice, and it ought to be pursued by all regular and lawful Means; and therefore, before I speak particularly to the Crimes supposed in this Bill, or the Proofs which have been offer'd to make them out, I shall beg leave to say something as to the Manner and Method of this Proceeding. Not that I shall presume to question your Lordships Power in such Cases: But, as on the one hand we must admit your Lordships may, and have in some Cases exerted your legislative Capacity, in declaring That a Crime which was not so before, or by inflicting particular or extraordinary Punishment on common and ordinary Crimes; yet, on the other hand, till that is done, I hope I am at Liberty freely to represent the Inconveniency, the Injustice, and the Imprudence of making such a Declaration, or of passing such a Law, in the Case now before you. If it should become a Law, his Lordship must dispute it no longer, but submit to it as just, whatever Hardships he may, in the Retirement of his own Heart, conceive introduced upon him by it. But, thanks be to God, this is yet no Law, and that I am at full Liberty to represent the Injustice and the Unreasonableness of this Bill; and to say, this is not a proper Occasion that needs or calls upon your Lordships to exert your legislative Power.

I might here enlarge upon the Injustice of all Laws made ex post facto, and for one particular Case or Person, and no other; that they are against the Common Law, and the Common Right which every one is entitled to, in the Place or Community where he lives; because Laws, in their Nature, ought to be Rules for the general Order, and Good of Society; and Natural Justice would surely in all such Cases stop the Precipitancy of your Lordships Resolution, by this Question; Against what Law hath he transgress'd? If he hath transgress'd any publick known Law, he is undoubtedly subject to undergo the Pains or Penalties enacted by it, when the Proof is duly and fully made which that Law requires. But if there is no such Law yet in being, or if there is no such Proof as that Law requires to suppose him guilty, will your Lordships introduce a new Law, or a new Sort of Proof to make him so? If these Methods are to be taken, the most innocent Man is not safe, and the wisest Man cannot judge what is an Offence, or in what Degree; what Proof is necessary for his Defence, or how he is to be try'd. And in vain does the Legislature every Session provide Laws,

Laws, if a particular Law or a particular Proof is still to be made for every particular Purpose, not only contrary to the Tenor of all the former; but such as is not to be a Rule or Law in any other future Case whatsoever.

Thus much I am sure may be justly urged in any Place of Judicature in the World, against all such Laws in general; but much more as we are Englishmen, as we have Laws, which my Lord Bacon calls wise and just, that give to God, that give to Cæsar, that give the Subject, that which belongeth to them. Not like those of other Countries, imposed upon the Subject at the Will of the Prince, before Probation or Trial, whether they are fit and convenient for the Genius of the People; nor the Production of one Man, or of one Parliament in any one Age, but the Wisdom and Experience of many Generations.

And I am sure one of the greatest Excellencies of this Law, beyond that of other Nations, has been always esteemed the common and ordinary Method of Trial. It has been always accounted the Birth-right of an English Subject to be try'd per Pares, according to the known Course of the Law.

And therefore, the better to shew the Difference, and to evince the Hardship of this extraordinary Proceeding, I shall a little consider the Nature of the ordinary Trial; and tho' I might do this in the Language of Magna Charta, and of many eminent antient Writers of the Law, I rather chuse my Lord Chief Justice Hales, that great and good Man, whose happy Moderation between the Prerogatives of the Crown, and the just Liberties of the Subject, can never be remember'd by Posterity, without the deepest Honour. He says^a it is the best Trial in the World, and one of the first Principals upon which our Constitution is erected. Here a Man has a legal Exception to any one of his Triers, if they have any Dependance upon either of the Parties, are prepossess'd or prejudiced before they hear the Evidence. All the Evidence is given openly, in the Presence of the Judge, Jury, Counsel, and Parties; not in private, before a Commissioner or a Clerk, (as in Chancery, or by the Civil Law) where oftentimes a Witness delivers that, which he will be ashamed to testify ore tenus, and where in a crafty Clerk will oftentimes make a Witness speak what he really never meant, by dressing up his Evidence in his own Terms, Phrases, and Expressions. Or a Man may depose in Writing, what the Fear of being falsified, or perhaps a better Recollection would not let him adhere to in open Court, where he has an Opportunity to correct, amend, or explain his Testimony.

Besides this, (says that learned Judge) a Jury must all agree in their Verdict, and are not to be concluded by a Majority; and therefore, tho' in some Cases, the Law don't positively require two, nor one Witness, viva voce; yet the Credit of a Verdict is great, where twelve Men on their Oaths unanimously agree.

The Counsel on the other Side may be apt to reply upon me, with the frequent Abuses and Corruptions of Juries. My Lords, I do agree, that may happen to be the Case; or it may happen that one more knowing or over-bearing Man among them, may sometimes govern all the rest. But, if the same may happen, and often does in every Society or Number of Men, and the best regulated Bodies in the World, surely that can never be a Reason to deprive a Man of his common Right, and to lay aside a most valuable Institution.

I am afraid, my Lords, this little has been too much upon a Point that so little needs it: but the Love of one's Country, and its antient legal Constitution, is an honest Prejudice, which every one is apt to indulge; and the Advantage of this Privilege, every one that hears me, (I doubt not) is in the Heart sufficiently convinced of, and would boldly insist on it as his Birth-right in any Case of his own, where his own Property, his Reputation, his Life, or his own Liberty was in the least concerned.

It is urged by the Counsel for the Bill, and indeed by the Bill itself, that this is an extraordinary Case, and requires an extraordinary Remedy, where the Offender has taken Care, by subtle Contrivances, to keep out of the Verge of the Law, and the Reach of all ordinary Proceedings. But if such a cruel artificial Suggestion be allow'd to be a good Reason to deprive a Man of the Benefit of the Law, no Man's Life or Liberty is safe. The same may be suggested of every Offender, and in every Offence: That a Man endeavours to evade the Punishment of the Law. The same may be said with more Justice of every one that pleads Not Guilty, and insists on his Trial, that he endeavours to evade the Law, because such an Accusation or such an Indictment is found against him. And yet the most rigid Casuist never yet maintained, but that any Man (tho' he knew himself to be a most guilty Criminal) might plead Not Guilty, and insist on his Trial.

But if this cruel Artifice is to prevail, and this should be a Reason to exert such an extraordinary Proceeding: Wo! be to all Men of Sense and Ingenuity. Nay, my Lords, if such a Notion is to take Place, the Bishop is in a much worse Condition, than if Neynoe were alive, or any other Witness would have deposed, viva voce against him, all they would have had them. For even then, his Accusation or Indictment must have been found upon the Oaths of Twelve Men at least, he would have had his legal Trial, and his Challenges. This I say upon a Supposition that the Gentlemen of the other Side may not allow his Lordship to be a Peer of the Realm; but if they do allow his Right of Peerage before your Lordships Bar, and consequently that he is intitled to a Trial by his Peers, yet still he would have had his legal Exceptions to the Testimony of the Witnesses; there must have been two positive Witnesses to the same Overt-Act; and his Accusation must have been found by twelve Men at least upon their Oaths; and, after all, if his Lordship should have been found Guilty, he might move in Arrest of Judgment. All which Benefits he is now utterly deprived of, by this Method of Proceeding.

We shall be told (I doubt not) by the Counsel for the Bill, that your Lordships sit now in a Judicial Capacity; that you are Judges of the Fact, as well as of the Law. No Man will doubt, but your Lordships have a Judicial Capacity, and have at all Times most worthily exercised it; but yet I must beg leave to doubt, whether your Lordships are now properly acting in that Capacity-or not? You have a Power, 'tis true, in this Method of Proceeding to condemn this Reverend Prelate, if Guilty; but not to save and acquit, if you are ever so well satisfy'd of his Innocency: and whether it be your Lordships Pleasure to pass or reject this Bill, I desire to know of the learned Counsel, whether it may be pleaded in Bar of a Prosecution in the Courts below, that he was auterfois acquit, or auterfois convict before your Lordships; or whether this Proceeding by Bill might be pleaded in Bar, even of an Impeachment for the very same Treasons; or whether your Lordships Resolution on this Bill (whatever it be) would be any legal Estoppel to any other Bill in a future Session. No, my Lords, I humbly apprehend, it would not be a good Bar or a legal Plea, either at Common Law, or according to any Rule or Usage, of Parliaments; and therefore we hope your Lordships will not do that, which after all cannot be a complete or a final Judgment, and by that means draw this Reverend Prelate into the Danger of a double Trial. Which, I am sure, is not only contrary to the Rules of Law, but also of Natural Justice. I have the more Countenance in saying this, not only from Hampden's Case, but from the known Case of Fitz-Harris, who pleaded this very Matter to the Jurisdiction of the Court of King's Bench, that he was impeached for the same Crime by the Commons of England: but it was the Opinion of that Court, with the Advice of all the Judges, that he might, notwithstanding, be try'd there: and in fact, was try'd and condemn'd by the Court of King's-Bench, though the Impeachment was still depending before your Lordships House.

But if your Lordships are resolved to proceed in your Legislative Capacity, and my Lord Bishop must, after all, be in Danger of the ordinary Method of Trial; yet suffer me to say what has been done, in former Times, by former Parliaments, on the like Bills: and how light soever other Authorities may seem, we hope your Lordships will have some Regard to your own Usage and Resolutions.

There have been too many Instances, I confess, my Lords; but those, that can be in any Degree justify'd, may be reduced to these few. They are such as pass'd against Persons dead, or who fled from Justice, and did not render themselves by the Time appointed; or they have passed against such as were in actual Rebellion, in direct Opposition to all Methods of Trial, and in Defiance to all Courts of Justice; or against such whose Treasons were flagrant and undeniable, but their Persons above the reach of inferior Courts and Commissions. Those few Sacrifices to the Heat and Necessity of the Times have been most of them revers'd with Infamy and Detestation, when Men were cool, and at Liberty to hearken to the Voice of Law and Reason, and began to consider they had only prepared Shackles for themselves. Those few melancholy Instances, procured without due Trial by an Excess of Prerogative, of Persons that have been forth-coming, principally because it was the Will of a Prince; are not to be mentioned without Horror and Detestation. Such as those, says my Lord Coke^a, auferat oblivio si potest, si non, utcunque tegat silentium. Let such gross Breaches and Violations of the sacred and unalterable Rules of Justice be forgot, if it be possible; or at least draw a Veil over them, and let them be buried in perpetual Silence.

But in all sober regular Times, a free Trial in the ordinary Course of Law has seldom been denied, even where the Facts have been so notorious as (one would think) almost to need no Trial, and so evident as to need no Proof; as the Regicides, except such as fled from Justice were admitted to Trial, no less than Twenty Nine before one Commission of Oyer, and every one heard with Patience in the ordinary Course. Even Felton, that stabb'd a Prime Minister in the Execution of a High Commission, tho' he confess'd the Fact, both before the Council and Court of King's-Bench, and justify'd it as a publick Service to the Nation, in the most daring and impious Manner, was brought to Trial, without superseding any of the ordinary Methods and Circumstances of Justice. Indeed where some flagrant Crimes have been legally prov'd and determin'd in the Courts below, Parliaments have sometimes thought fit to add to, or heighten the Degrees of Punishments. It was so resolved in the Case of the Gun-powder Plotters 5 November, that they were at first to be try'd at Law, and then the Parliament (if need be) to add a Confirmation to it. Nay, that Resolution went farther; it says they were not competent Judges of it, before it was found in the Courts below.

I might mention the Opinion of Judge Dodderidge, the Mirror of Justice, Lord Chief Baron Atkins, &c. who say the Parliament is a supreme Court of Oyer, and that the proper Subject of their Oyer is such Offences for which Right cannot otherwise be had, and to deal with Delinquents too high for the ordinary Courts. And, as I am before your Lordships Bar, I am very proper to mention the Resolution of your Lordships Predecessors, in the Case of Fitz-Harris, who (as I before mentioned) was impeach'd by the Commons of High-Treason; they refused to take him out of the Hands of ordinary Justice, and directed him to be proceeded against according to the Course of the Common Law.

And what Opinion subsequent Parliaments have had of my Lord Strafford's Bill of Attainder, best appears from the Words of the Act of Reversal, by ordering all the Records and Proceedings relating to it to be cancell'd and destroy'd, that no Remains of so evil and unjust a Precedent might be visible in after Ages, or brought into Example to any one's Prejudice. But even in that detestable Instance, such Informations and Evidence were not admitted, the Witnesses were all examin'd, viva voce, upon Oath, and he was first adjudged Guilty, by way of Impeachment at the Bar of the Lords, before there was any Order for a Bill. The very same Method was observ'd in the Cause of Archbishop Laud, and Articles fully proved against him, as they thought. If it had not been so, even that House of Commons, as bad as they were, and as thirsty as they were after the Blood of those Noble Persons, probably would not have ordered those Bills. But yet this latter Instance of Archbishop Laud, never had the Royal Assent: and 'tis well known in History, what desperate Measures were made use of to induce the Lords to pass it; and at last I think there were but seven of your Lordships whole House, that were present when it was passed. But if this Bill should pass, we must no longer blame and condemn those Instances; for this will, in effect, re-enact them, and many others, which the Wisdom of former Parliaments have revers'd with Marks of Infamy and Detestation.

How much more is there to be said of Sir John Fenwick's Case? he had been indicted upon the Evidence of two positive Witnesses: There had been several preceding Trials, at Law, by which it manifestly appeared that he was equally concerned with those that were found Guilty. Sir John Fenwick had likewise withdrawn himself from Justice, and was retaken; (a Circumstance always urged as a strong Presumption of Guilt.) He had protracted his Trial by Offers of Discovery, the Reason of which afterwards appeared to be, that one of the King's Witnesses might withdraw himself beyond Sea; and altho' that Witness was gone, yet his Evidence not only remained in Writing sign'd, and upon Oath, but was attested and confirmed by some of the Grand-Jury themselves that found the Bill, and by others of the Petty-Jury, before whom that Witness had given the very same Evidence. There was a Proof likewise that he had attempted to corrupt the remaining Witness, as well as some of the Jury. These were Circumstances upon which that Case was founded; no Man can say, but there was a reasonable Evidence, tho' not strictly legal; one full and positive Witness, and many strong undeniable Circumstances; and yet the Opposition, which that had in both Houses, was very great. Whether the Reasons that prevail'd for the passing of it were sufficient, becomes me not to enquire: Since it is still a Law, I must presume them just.

But is there any thing, my Lords, like that, in the Case now before your Lordships? Has there been any Attempt to withdraw from Justice; and yet that Honourable Committee have been pleas'd to observe, his Lordship had Notice that he was to be apprehended some considerable Time before. Has there been any preceding Trial, in which my Lord Bishop's name was mentioned as an Agent, much less (as this Bill suggests) a principal Manager and Director in the Conspiracy? Or, in that one Trial which hath been, has any thing appeared to derive the least Suspicion of Guilt upon him? Can any one say he has used any Methods or Artifices to avoid or protract his Trial in the ordinary Course of Law? Has he not on the contrary (and as one of the strongest Proofs and Convictions of Innocency) sought and petitioned to be tried? Yes, my Lords, he has applied in all Courts, and in all Places, in the most earnest and legal manner, to be brought to Trial. Has this Reverend Prelate used any indirect Measures to corrupt or withdraw a Witness? and yet Mr. Kelly, (who is the only Person supposed capable of testifying against him) 'tis well known, had his full Liberty, even after his Lordship's Apprehension, but would not hazard his Recognizance by one Day's Non-appearance. No, my Lords, nothing of that kind has been attempted to be prov'd, nor so much as insinuated in this Case; nor is there here before your Lordships any one positive Witness of any kind: Nor is there the Sanction of any one Oath here, or any where else, in any one material Point against his Lordship. What need therefore, or what Reason can there be for this Bill? Surely your Lordships will never pronounce a Judgment that shall affect any Man's Life, Liberty, or Fortune, without some Oath, and on Circumstances so widely different in every respect from those of Sir John Fenwick.

And if this Case bears no Proportion nor Similitude with that of Sir John Fenwick; I am sure it has much less, or rather none at all, with any of those before mentioned. For we hope, after so long and full a Discovery of the Conspiracy, and those many just Methods of Preparation against it, the Danger cannot now be so great or cogent, as to require so precipitate a Resolution. His Person, your Lordships see, is safe and forthcoming, and the Courts of Law in their usual and open Course; and at this Time filled with such learned and resolute Judges and Ministers of Justice, that they are equal and able to deal with the most bold and daring Offender.

There can be less Reason therefore, none at all we hope, for your Lordships at this Time to exert such an extraordinary Method of proceeding.

But there is this further Objection against proceeding by Bill, that it makes not only your Lordships pronounce Judgment against one of your own Members, and a very terrible one too; but it makes the King himself, without hearing one Word of the Defence, in Person, pronounce a Judgment upon his Subject, which his own gracious Temper must be averse to; which the Common Law therefore has wisely left to be pronounced by his Justices, even in those Courts where he is always supposed to be present. But in this Instance, there is something which must be still more ungrateful to him; in that it is to exclude a Branch of prerogative which his Majesty most delights in, and it must be some Surprise to every good Subject to find his Royal Judgment so highly mistrusted.

There is another Thing, which, I persuade myself, your Lordships will fully consider; that if this Method of Proceeding by Bill be encourag'd and grow familiar, it will put an End to one considerable Branch of Judicature, which your Lordships were heretofore so justly jealous of, as not to admit at any time the least Competition. The Lower House will hardly care to appear any more before your Lordships as Accusers or Prosecutors, when they can so easily partake in your Judicial Capacity. And every such Bill (especially against a Member of this House) is a direct Infringement and Diminution of that high and valuable Privilege, and will open a Door to some other Mischiefs to the Peerage: which I had much rather your Lordships would suggest to yourselves, than I express. It has been always doubted without Doors, whether your Lordships could begin such a Bill against a Commoner; but I think it may be more justly doubted, whether the Lower House can begin such a Bill against any one of your Lordships: and, if this Bill should have no other Consequence, it will establish this so far, as to bear no Question hereafter. My Lords, I need not say, how much more proper it would have been, for the Lower House to have left this Matter intire to your Lordships; because it has been so often resolv'd by your Lordships Predecessors, that the House of Commons have no Power of Judicature or Coercion against any one, but in Matters concerning that House. Whereas this is a Case of Peerage, the Punishment, and the Exclusion of a Member of this House. There is an Instance on your Lordships Journals, where the Lord Purbeck voluntarily surrendred his Title and Dignity of Viscount to the King by Fine, and yet your Lordships unanimously nimously revers'd that Judgment, and declared, that no Place could judge of, or intermeddle with Dignities or Rights of Peerage, but your Lordships own House.

And those my Lords of that Reverend Bench, will surely consider what a fatal Blow this Bill will give to the Discipline and Polity of the Church of England. They have more than ordinary Reason to be jealous of increasing such Precedents, and of introducing Methods of depriving Bishops and Deans, hardly known to former Ages. The antient Canons have already prescribed Methods of judging, censuring, and deposing Bishops, and the Cases when and where those Methods are fit to be exercis'd. I don't say the Parliament cannot do this, or any thing else which they think proper; but the Metropolitan, their Lordships know, is intrusted with this Power over his Suffragans, or a Provincial Synod. And 'tis plain, the Law of England takes Notice of no other Power, that can regularly deprive. For to mention but this Instance, if an Issue should be joined, whether a Bishop be deprived or not, the Court where such Issue should arise, could only write to the Archbishop to certify. And to prove this Assertion, I will not name Bishop Stillingfleet, or any of those great Ecclesiastical Authorities, (since possibly they may be excepted against, as Persons who have too much Interest in the Case to be impartial) but it is so laid down by my ^a Lord Chief Baron Atkins, in his great Argument of Ecclesiastical Commissions, and by my Lord Chief Justice Holt, and the Court of King's-Bench, in the Case of Dr. Watson, Bishop of St. Davids.

All Precedents, my Lords, will increase; and the Scorn and Contempt of Libertines against your Lordships sacred Order is too great, to drop or to forget a Precedent so grateful and pleasing to them as this will be. Every one knows the Destruction of the smaller religious Houses, only made way for that of the greater. A Time has been when their Lordships Predecessors were all excluded and sequestred; and it has been attempted, even since the Restoration, to take away Deans and Chapters. I am far from apprehending any such thing at present, and I hope it will never enter into the Heart of any Man. But, my Lords, I confess I thought as little at this Time of such a Bill as is now before you, to deprive a Bishop and Dean at once, not only of all his Dignities and Benefices, but from the Exercise of any Part of his holy Office and Function: And I will say, that if this Bill should pass, and by any of their Lordships Assent, such a Design will be rendred more easy and familiar, and much more unpitied, by all Mankind.

Give me leave, my Lords, next to observe, with what Caution and Moderation other Parliaments have proceeded, even in those Cases where they have thought proper to exercise their legislative Capacity. I pass over the Statute 7 W. c. 19. for Imprisonment of Sir Thomas Coke, &c. and many other such Cases, which were too great and intricate for the ordinary Course of Law, but yet too low and inconsiderable to enter into this Comparison. But the Statute 8 W. c. 5. may be named, I am sure, with that now before you, for the Imprisonment of Counter, &c. concern'd in the Assassination Plot, against all whom there was some positive Evidence upon Oath. Tho' the Zeal of that Parliament can never be question'd from an Act so full of Gratitude, and in such strong Terms and Accents of Loyalty to the King, yet they did not at once, and at one single Stroke, cut them off from the Land of the Living, and utterly deprive them of all the Necessaries of Life. The first Step that Parliament took was to pass an Act for the Detainment of them for the Space of one Year only, not to the Forfeiture and Deprivation of all they were worth, or to the Exclusion of his Majesty's Mercy, but even to leave a discretionary Power of Bailing within that Time, to any six of the Privy-Council, if they judged proper. Their further Obstinacy and Impenitency occasioning another Act, 9 W. c. 4. to detain them a Year longer, it was still under the same Exception. At the End of that Term another Act was made, empowering the King to detain them during his Pleasure, 10 W. c. 11. After these, two other Acts passed, empowering the late Queen and his present Majesty to detain them. What the particular Reason of these Alterations were, I cannot take upon me to determine, because the Acts themselves are wholly silent; but, my Lords, such were the prudent and moderate Steps taken by former Parliaments, even in that bold and wicked Conspiracy.

I may also justly take Notice of the Prudence and Clemency of the last Parliament, when there was so loud and so general a Cry for Justice, and when the Necessity of the Time seem'd to require a more speedy and extraordinary Degree of Punishment than the Common Law was acquainted with: but with what Difficulty, with what slow Paces, and with how many tender Circumstances did that Bill pass? Your Lordships will easily imagine, that the Persons I here speak of are the late Directors of the South-Sea Company.

It would ill become me, my Lords, if I had Inclination, to insult the Distresses, or to aggravate any of those Gentlemen's Misfortunes; but the Service of the Reverend Prelate now under Consideration, requires me just to mention what a State of Confusion they had reduced the Kingdom to: How many Thousands have felt, and still feel the pernicious Effects of that Scheme? Tho' their Crimes had no particular Appellation, or determinate Punishment in our Law, yet the ^b Civil, and the Laws of other Countries could have told us, that Crimen Peculatus, the Robbery of the publick Money, was such an infamous Transgression, that the Punishment of it was Death, both in the Principal and Accessaries. How different and how mild was the Punishment inflicted by the late Parliament, in comparison of that, I need not mention; and every one knows, how tenderly and sparingly that Law has since been executed upon them, and how much they still enjoy of the Spoils and Plunders of the Nation.

Let us not then follow every Precedent that has been, but the just and Prudent Precedents of moderate Times, and of good and peaceable Reigns. Let us not be ambitious to surpass the Proceedings of violent and arbitrary Men, which we or our Posterity may have Cause to repent of hereafter; but let us imitate such only as are agreeable to the Law and Constitution, such as are grounded upon true Reason, and the Principles of exact Justice.

Having thus spoken as to the Method of these Proceedings in general, and shown (in some measure, I hope) that they are contrary to the publick Wisdom, contrary to the known Rules of Law, and the common Right of the Subject, I shall, with your Lordships Favour, next examine the Foundations and Suggestions of this particular Bill. As for those general Matters and Allegations with which it is introduced, and upon which the Counsel for the Bill have spent so much Time, there is no Necessity, as we conceive, to answer to. We are here before your Lordships only as Counsel for this Reverend Prelate, one single supposed Conspirator; and it would ill become us in the least to controvert, that there has been a Conspiracy formed and carried on by some Persons abroad and by others at home, after it has been so solemnly resolved by both Houses of Parliament. Nor can we deny, but that Mr. Laver has been, Tried, Convicted, and Attainted of it: But we are yet to seek, how these Things have any Relation to the Case now before your Lordships; or how that unhappy Gentleman's Case comes to be connected and made part of my Lord Bishop's, as it is by this Bill. We may justly appeal to every one that heard or read that Trial, whether this Reverend Prelate's Name is so much as mention'd in any one Line of it; whether there are any Grounds to think, from any of that Gentleman's Papers or Examinations, that his Lordship was privy to, or in the least concerned or acquainted with his Person, or his Intentions: And I dare say, his Lordship is as much amazed at the Rashness and Folly of his Schemes, as he detests the Wickedness of them. Notwithstanding which, it is his Misfortune to be charged in this Bill as a principal Actor and Director in the framing and carrying on of those very Schemes and Designs for which that Gentleman has been convicted. And as to the Cyphers and Papers of Plunket, I am as much at a loss to imagine, upon what Grounds they should be given in Evidence against the Bishop, since 'tis not so much as suggested in the Bill; nor is there any thing throughout the Report or Appendix, that in the least charges his Lordship with any Inter-course or Correspondence with him.

It is strange, my Lords, that Persons Thoughts and Intentions, so widely distant in all other Respects, should yet center in such unnatural Projects, and wild Undertakings, without some previous Discourse, some Consultations, or Acquaintance one with the other; and yet as strange and unaccountable as it is, this Reverend Prelate is charged in the very same manner by this Bill, with consulting and endeavouring to raise an Insurrection, to procure a Foreign Force to invade the Kingdom, and Corresponding with the Pretender; and Persons employ'd by him, knowing them to be so employ'd. And if these Facts, my Lords, had been duly and legally proved, I should have very little to say in his Defence, but humbly intreat the Mercy and Compassion of this Honourable House; for they are Offences in themselves so great, that on the one hand they are not capable of Aggravation, nor on the other of Excuse or Diminution, by any thing I can say. But if the Facts have not been proved in the Whole nor in Part, the bare Affirmation or Allegation of them is only Brutum fulmen, and does his Lordship no more Harm, than any other innocent Man, whose Misfortune it is to fall under an unjust Accusation. Or if those Circumstances which have been proved, are not Criminal in themselves, they shall not, we hope, by Inferences and Deductions, be heightened into Crimes; and the Number or Complication of them, shall never make them exceed their Nature. And, my Lords, we hope, that notwithstanding all that has been affirmed, alledged, or proved, this Reverend Prelate can still say, not only in the Form of Law, but boldly and with a safe Conscience, and upon an impartial and serious Recollection, That he is Not Guilty of any one of the Charges contained in the Bill: That he is not conscious to himself of any one treasonable or irreverent Expression, or of any one Degree of Offence committed by him, with respect to any of those Charges. He can still say, that he has not acted in direct Violation of his Oaths and Obligations, nor to the Scandal of Religion or his Holy Function. I am sure, my Lords, I should not take upon me to say this for his Lordship, or any Man alive, unless I thought we had a full and positive Answer to every thing that has been said, unless I was verily persuaded we had a sufficient and a legal Proof to encounter all that has been offered on the other Side; or unless my Instructions told me, that many Things in the Course of their Evidence are utterly false and groundless; false, I say, as we shall prove (if my Instructions are true) by the fullest Proof, and the most satisfactory Evidence that is possible in the Case; by such Arguments and Reasonings, as we think are clear and undeniable; by some Witnesses we never saw nor heard of before, consequently the more credible and impartial; by others, whom I am sure we had no Opportunity to lead or instruct; and all (as I am informed) glad, that it is consistent with the Rules of your Lordships House, to receive their Testimony upon Oath. In short, every Circumstance, every Part of the Evidence produced against us, your Lordships, in the End, we hope, will find, turn strongly for us.

There is one thing which I take for granted, from the Nature of the Evidence that has been offer'd, That it is admitted as fully by the Counsel for the Bill (as if they had said so in express Terms) that there is no legal Evidence against his Lordship in all they have offer'd; or else this extraordinary Method of Proceeding, and this new sort of Evidence had never been set up. Nay, I am sure, it is a sort of Force upon those Learned Gentlemen, so well versed in Methods and Notions of Law, to maintain so many gross Paradoxes, which have not the least Colour of a legal, or even a reasonable Evidence, and would never be allowed, they well know, in any Court of Law or Equity. And tho' your Lordships have been pleas'd to permit those Papers and Letters to be read, your Lordships did not (as I apprehend) finally declare or determine them to be Evidence; but were willing to hear all Things, and afterwards judge how far it was reasonable or fitting to admit them as Ingredients in your Lordships Judgments. And whatever Opinion your Lordships might be of on the two former Bills, as we are Strangers to them, so we hope we are not precluded from offering any thing farther, why they ought not to be allowed in this Case. If it be your Lordships Pleasure at last to adhere to that Opinion, or to resolve the like in this Case, we must submit.

If there is any thing certain in Law, or agreeable to Reason, it is this, That in all Criminal Charges, the Evidence ought to be clear and positive; and that the higher and more heinous the Nature of the Charge is, the more clear and undeniable the Evidence ought to be by which a Man is convicted. Now, I beseech your Lordships to consider at one View (as far as it is possible in such various and perplexed Facts) the Methods made use of to prove his Lordship Guilty, and what they have offer'd to your Lordships under the Name of Evidence. Where Words have been capable, and sometimes where they have not been capable, of two Senses, an arbitrary and invidious Interpretation has been put upon them. Where Words have been plain and proper for the Occasion, and which considered separately by themselves, it was impossible to put a criminal Gloss upon, the Writer is supposed to have some mysterious Meaning or double Entendre; or else they are complicated and thrown together with those which will infer some criminal Meaning. In other Letters the Names and Words relative to Men, are supposed to be used for those of Women, and the proper and usual Appellation of Women, for those of Men; and because one fictitious Name will not answer all they would have it, the Names are often shifted, one and the same Person is supposed to pass under seven or eight different Denominations: and often two or three Names in the same Letter, within the Compass of two Lines one to the other, are urged to stand for the same Person. Some Letters which are writ of another, and speak in direct Terms of a third Person, they would have to mean the Writer himself, tho' as often without any Name, Date, Subscription or Superscription at all. Books of Accompt, Manuscripts, and common Mercantile Terms, which seem proper for the Person and the Occasion of the Correspondence; and the Name of Stocks, which every one knows the true Meaning of, and carries all the Appearance of Reality, are very particular and exact in the current Prices at that time, by a new kind of Metaphor are to be taken in an ill Sense. Others which are only to be informed of the Distemper of a Friend, the Variations which happen in it, and the Opinion of Doctors upon it, by a strange and arbitrary Construction are applied to explain very different Purposes: and, as if they were suspicious even of their own Suspicions, and distrustful of these Explanations, they call in for Aid several disjointed Fragments, Extracts, and Scraps of Papers, which no Man but themselves can tell what to make of; and when there happen to be some Words which cannot be reconciled with such a Construction, or the Uses which they would make of them, they are totally omitted, and we are told they are not material, or not yet decypher'd, or not legible in the Original, but your Lordships and the World must intend them to mean something criminal.

My Lords, if such foreign Suppositions, Glosses, and Intendments, such unnatural Constructions, false Inferences and Innuendos, are to be admitted as Evidence, and deserve the Name of Proof, I must confess, they have given you some.

If the Whimfies and Conjectures of Decypherers, the Hearsays and Reports of third, fourth, and fifth Persons are to take place in your judicial Proceedings, instead of that plain, honest, and positive Proof, which the Law requires; or if the Number of Facts and the Variety of Circumstances could make them alter or exceed their Nature, I must confess, they have offered some Things worthy of your Lordships Consideration.

But if it were your Lordships Pleasure to construe Things according to the most natural plain Sense and Import of the Words, as others would have understood them, and in such a Sense as the Writer probably meant them, or in that just manner which your Lordships have hitherto done on criminal Prosecutions, no one can say they have shewn one Degree of legal or reasonable Evidence, to prove any one Suggestion in the Bill. This I most humbly assert, and, I think, no one can disprove my Assertion.

Thus far in general of the Proofs that have been offered; but I shall, under your Lordships Favour, speak now more particularly to them, and shall be so far from abridging or sliding over any thing that has been said, that I am willing every thing those learned Gentlemen for the Bill have been pleased to offer, or that Honourable Committee have observed in their Report, should have its full weight, and be put in the strongest Light against us.

It has been observed, that there were three several Methods and Times fixed for the Execution of this intended Conspiracy.

The first was to have procured a regular Body of foreign Forces to invade the Kingdom, at the time of the late Elections, which was from the middle of March to the middle of April 1722.

But have they shew'd your Lordships any Evidence, or even one Passage in the Report of that Honourable Committee, that particularly charges his Lordship with being privy to any one of these three Designs thus generally and roundly affirmed? He is not charg'd with being privy to either of the three Memorials to the Regent for Forces. The only Passage that can be pretended to contain any Imputation of that kind, is in the Letter sign'd 1387 to Jackson, which, they say, there is reason to believe was from my Lord Bishop to the Pretender: but this we hope in the Course of our Evidence effectually to disprove.

The second Design was to have made an Attempt at the time it was believed his Majesty would go abroad; but all that is insinuated in relation to his Lordship, is contained in two or three obscure Passages relating to one Jones, in Letters said to have passed between Dillon, or his Secretary, and Mr. Kelly: which Passages being something ambiguous, are interpreted in an ill Meaning, by Hearsays from Neynoe and Pancier, and Plunket's Cypher; but cannot, without the greatest Absurdity, be thought to relate to his Lordship.

Two of these Passages relate to Remittances of Money, which they insinuate the Bishop was to furnish; but it amounts in the whole to no more than the bare Hearsay of one Man, and an arbitrary Interpretation of some Expressions in the Letters of two others, (to either of which his Lordship has not in the least been prov'd privy;) and the Whole depends upon a Supposition, that Jones here and elsewhere in the Correspondence means him; which depends again upon another Supposition, that the Bishop dictated those three Letters of the 20th of April, one of which is signed Jones; a Supposition which we hope likewise to prove absolutely false, and by that means shake the Foundation of the whole Charge.

The other Passage^a is in a Letter from Dillon's Secretary to Kelly, about Jones's fitting and providing himself with Saddles; which by the same Methods is explained to mean Soldiers and Regiments, which his Lordship is supposed to have undertaken to procure: and if the Words are to be taken in that Sense, and applied to him, he must likewise be supposed to have undertaken to be at the Head of them; which, considering his Lordship's Function, Age, and Infirmities, is so absurd and ridiculous, that, instead of spending more of your Lordships time in answering of it, I shall only make use of it hereafter, as one Instance (among many others) to shew, how much they are mistaken in affirming, that, wherever Jones is named, his Lordship is to be understood.

The third and last Design, tho' I must confess the most enormous, if it were true, because Part of it was the Seizure of his Majesty's Person, was to have been put in Execution at the breaking up of the Camp. But, I am sure, there is not one the least Hint throughout all this voluminous Affair, that his Lordship was concern'd or privy to that.

And therefore 'tis surprizing to think upon what Grounds his Lordship can be (as he is in the Preamble of the Bill) charg'd with having been deeply concern'd in forming and directing this Conspiracy; which, as your Lordships have heard, consisted of those three several Designs. The Counsel, indeed, for the Bill have endeavour'd by divers Methods and Reasonings, by some little Circumstances, and seeming Probabilities, to charge upon his Lordship in general such a Correspondence: And they may all be reduc'd to these four Heads:

1. Hearsays.

2. The three Letters said to be dictated by his Lordship, and wrote by Kelly to Lord Marr, Dillon, and the Pretender.

3. Two Letters said to be wrote to the Bishop.

4. The Co-incidences of Circumstances, Times, and Names, in the intercepted Correspondence, to induce a Belief of the before-mention'd Hearsays, and supposed Facts.

To all which I shall endeavour to give some Answers.

But before I enter upon these Particulars, I shall beg leave to observe to your Lordships, That if such Evidence is to be countenanced, it will be in the Power of any two Men, the one in England, the other beyond Sea, getting an Account of the Circumstances and Motions of a third Person, by an artificial intercepted Correspondence, to raise what Suspicions of him they please; and yet he be all the while innocent and ignorant of what is doing. Whether that is the Case here, I shall afterwards submit to your Lordships Judgments.

But it is very remarkable, that in all the intercepted Correspondence to and fro, there are no Footsteps or Descriptions which any ways point out to, or of whom they are written, but those alone which are supposed to relate to his Lordship; and in them, as the Counsel observe, things are said and done in such a manner, and with such particular Circumstances, as lead directly to him, and him only. And this being so contrary to the Caution and Reserve practis'd in all other Instances, carries in it some manifest Marks of Fraud and Contrivance.

This Remark I humbly apprehend to be the stronger, because there has been no Proof of any particular Meetings or Consultations with other Persons, towards carrying on these Designs. And how a Man can conspire with himself, I know not, except that it is barely alledg'd he was a Member of the Burford Club; the Falsity of which Assertion that Honourable Committee themselves seem so sensible of, and by that Indulgence and Enlargement which one of those Noble Persons (tho' said to be the chief of them) has since met with, is now so well understood, as to need no manner of Refutation.

I may also as justly observe, that there is no one Witness against this Reverend Prelate of any one criminal Act or Expression, from the Time of his Majesty's Accession to the Throne; tho' one of the Counsel (as your Lordships may remember) was very particular about the Manner of his passing of the 10th of June, which the Coachman gave them an Account of for four Years together; and tho' all his Papers were seiz'd, not one Letter, or Paper, under his own Hand, produced of a criminal Nature, or pretended to have been seen or intercepted. Not any one Letter intercepted that is pretended to have been written to him, much less any prov'd to have been receiv'd by him, the Matter of which appears to be Treasonable, or any ways Criminal. My Lords, I must own a great Consequence is drawn by that Honourable Committee, because a great Quantity of Letters and Papers were found dated before the Year 1712. This very Objection was made in the Accusation of his Lordship's worthy Predecessor, and a slight Answer satisfy'd his Examinants; and the plain Reason is, that his Lordship at that Time had a settled Correspondence with many eminent Men on Matters of Learning, which he esteemed so valuable as to preserve; but since the finishing of those Controversies, he had less occasion to write, and his Lordship's Merits having call'd him up to a more high and busy Station, he had less Opportunity to write; and he that writes little will receive but little. From that Year therefore (they justly observe) few of any Consequence were found, and even those few, (if no other than what are printed, and as yet produc'd) we beg leave to say, are of no Consequence at all, to support the Inference drawn from them.

The first, I think, is from a great Lady; but so general and uncertain, that it does by no means warrant the Conclusion drawn from it; for it does not so much as appear to have been a Letter, or what it was that was enclos'd. And I beseech your Lordships, what more can be inferr'd from Captain Halstead's Letter,^b the Contents of which are no more, than that a Neighbour, as

Captain Halstead was to the Bishop, desires leave to dine with his Lordship on a Thursday, which was his publick Day, in Company of 20 other People? I must confess they have laid a Stress upon the Character of the Man in their Opening; but nothing more has been prov'd, than that he was in a Ship by some Name different from his own. Another Letter that was said to be found among his Lordship's Papers, was that directed to Dubois. But this (my Lords) I shall beg leave to reserve for a more proper Occasion.

I shall now consider the four several Charges against the Bishop: And the First arises from Neynoe and Pancier's Informations, all mere Hearsays; some from living, and some from a dead Person; but positively and expressly denied by the living Persons, from whom such Informations are supposed to have come.

All that Pancier's Informations^a say, relating to this Reverend Prelate, is, That one Skeen told him, that the Bishop of Rocheſter had the Principal Direction of the Conspiracy; and that 200000*l.* had been rais'd and put into his Management. This Skeen, it seems, is still in Custody, and your Lordships will hear how far he will support this Charge.

Tho' the very Accusation itself we beg leave to call absurd and incredible; that such a Sum of Money as 200000*l.* could be rais'd and deposited in one Man's Hands, and not yet traced up to some of the Contributors, or to the Hand where it was deposited, especially when it is charged upon a Person not used to deal in Merchandizes, or Remittances. Tho' the Counsel for the Bill have slid over this, yet being often repeated in the Report, as if there had been some Weight in it, I thought myself oblig'd to take Notice of it, tho' it is so incredible, I confess, that it is scarce worth removing.

Of Neynoe's Informations, your Lordships may observe there are Four, but none of them sworn to nor signed; and it was expressly resolv'd, in Lord Audley's Case,^b by all the Judges of England, that no Examination without Oath ought to be read except of the Party himself that is tried. They are all either of a Date subsequent to his Lordship's Commitment, (and therefore till then thought^c inconsiderable, and not worth reducing into Writing,) or else they are of no Date at all. One of the Two without a Date appears manifestly to have been taken after he was seiz'd, and brought up from Deal in September, which sufficiently shews what just Distrust there was at that Time of his Credit; that on the 27th of September, was on the Day before he drowned himself; and both, when he is known to have been under the greatest Terrors and Apprehensions, in that he was not able to make good what appears by the Paper (mark'd E. 11. and found afterwards in his Pocket) to have been undertaken by him, or required of him. It is not said, as to one of his Examinations,^d before whom it was taken: Another of them, and the only one they now think fit to make Use of, is an Extract only from three other Papers, and said to contain the Substance of them; but the Papers themselves, out of which it was extracted, do nowhere appear. And there are some Particulars in the Report^e of that Honourable Committee, which he is said to have confess'd, which do not appear in any one of these Examinations, and are of such a Nature as to affect the Credit of all he said, and (if produced) would, we doubt not, in other Respects entirely blast the Credit of his Testimony. And, my Lords, if the Examination of a Man is thus taken to pieces, the Antecedents and the Consequents left out, Treason (and what not) may be made and inferred from the most innocent Things and Expressions.

But his Examinations, even as they lie in the Appendix, are full of Inconsistencies and Absurdities: Inconsistencies, I mean, not only with Pancier's and the Depositions of other Persons, but even with themselves. For Pancier says, little pass'd in Writing in the Conduct of the whole Affair: Neynoe says, there were many Bundles of Letters that Mr. Kelly brought with him from France, and which he had seen him write at several Times. But yet they are much more inconsistent with themselves; for instance, Neynoe says, in his Examination, mark'd E. 7. that he had seen several Letters written by Kelly, and sent to him from Paris, and other Parts, but they never contain'd any thing material: And yet in E. 8. he says, that he had seen several Cyphers of Kelly's, and seen him make use of them; and that Kelly with great Freedom acknowledged they were for carrying on the Correspondence with the Pretender's Agents. Whereas it is utterly incredible that a Man, who had really been so communicative in his Discourse, and of his Cyphers, should yet be so reserv'd as to hide from him any thing material in his Letters. In the very same Examination (he says) he was well acquainted with one Watson, i. e. the late Earl Marishall, and lay several Nights with him; but after all his Intimacy, at last it comes out, that he did not know really who he was. There are some other Inconsistencies, which have been already taken notice of by Sir Constantine, which I shall not repeat.

But, my Lords, if the Persons and Credit of Neynoe and Pancier were unexceptionable, yet what they say is only Hearsay, or mere Affirmation: And was ever that allow'd as Evidence in any material Point by any Law, or in any Court in the World? 'Tis expressly resolv'd in the Trials of Langborn and Lord Ruffel to be no Evidence; and it is the first Time it ever receiv'd so much Countenance as to be read in judicial Proceedings; and I dare say, there is no such Practice in the Courts of Inquisition abroad. Even common Fame and Reputation is but of little Weight in any Case that I know of. It may, my Lords, be a sufficient Ground for an Officer of the Peace, in some few Cases, to arrest a Person, or for a vigilant Ministry to make Enquiries, i. e. to accuse or apprehend; but was never yet allow'd to be a Guide in judicial Proceedings, or to condemn any Man in any Criminal Case, whatever. But even when the Commons (in the Case of the Duke of Buckingham, 1 Car. I.) had declar'd, that common Fame was a good Ground of Enquiry, it was complain'd of, and the Commons afterwards receded from it, and proceeded upon the Examination of Witnesses, and other Evidences, and in every Article of their Accusation the particular Facts are express'd. Much less will your Lordships allow the Hearsay of one single Man, and only Extracts of that Hearsay, to be of any Weight, nay, to be of more Weight and Authority now he is dead, than if he were living; for if he were living, and could only depose by Hearsay, no one surely can say it would be admitted as Evidence; but since he is dead, and we have no Opportunity of cross-examining of him, why ought not his Lordship to have the Advantage of it, as was resolv'd in the Case of the ^a King against Pain? Or like the known Case of a Man dying in Execution, the Law is satisfied, and his Creditor is without Remedy? And it cannot be deny'd, but if one of our Witnesses had died, and a Person had taken Minutes of what he could say, we should not have had the Benefit of his Testimony; and where there is the same Reason, there ought in Justice to be the same Law and Construction. And yet this is the Foundation and Support of the whole Charge against his Lordship. It is upon this Man's Examination singly that it is affirm'd, among other notorious Untruths, that the Pretender rely'd more upon Advices from the Bishop, than from any other Persons. But this, and whatever else is in them, with Submission to your Lordships, amounts to no more than this, that Neynoe was heard to say, what he heard Kelly say, what Kelly must have heard some other Persons say, what they had heard the Pretender say, what neither they, nor any one else, ever had Reason to say.

But, my Lords, there is still something more strange in what is now attempted; for the Persons of whom 'tis pretended they heard all this, and into whose Testimony it must all be resolv'd, are now both living, and are so far from supporting what 'tis pretended they have heard from them, that they absolutely deny and contradict every Word of it. One of them has already done it (if my Instructions are true) in the most solemn Manner, at your Lordships Bar, and the other is now ready to do the same. And Neynoe was so conscious to himself of the Falsity of what he had said, that he lost his Life to avoid the Punishment that might otherwise have fallen on him, (for his Flight, my Lords, can admit of no other Sense or Construction.) He could not apprehend himself in Danger, if what he had said was true; but on the contrary, had reason to expect Rewards, if he could make out the Truth of his Information. Charity forbids me now, my Lords, to say any more of him, unless it be thought requisite to prove the Falsity of his Information by his own free and voluntary Confession, often repeated and confirm'd to Strangers and indifferent Persons. And (if my Instructions are true) we have those that will speak most fully to it.

This is the first and the principal Part of their Proof; and if we take away this Foundation, all the mighty Superstructure raised upon it must fall to the Ground, and all their corroborative Proofs and concurrent Circumstances must come to nothing.

The second Head of Accusation against his Lordship, is, from three Letters, supposed to be dictated by him, of the 20th of April. The first to Chivers, interpreted Dillon, signed by the Name of Jones; the second to Musgrave, interpreted Marr, sign'd Illington; a third to Jackson, explain'd to mean the Pretender, sign'd 1378, and sometimes 'tis printed 1387; and therefore which of these two is right I cannot tell.

Before I speak of the Letters themselves, I shall mention one Word as to the Manner of their Conveyance: They are said to be enclosed in a Packet to one Gordon of Boulogne, in a Letter from Kelly himself, sent by the ordinary Post, and sign'd with a Name, which they say he most usually signed and went by. This is so improbable, that out of eight or ten Names they are pleased to give him, he could bethink himself at that Time of no other Name to sign a Letter enclosing three of the utmost Consequence; and is so inconsistent with that Caution and Subtlety all along insinuated in this Correspondence, that it almost needs no Confutation. But yet (if my Instructions are true) Mr. Gordon, to whom they are said to have been directed, and the only indifferent Person in the Case, and can be under no sort of Influence from hence, has attested upon his Oath, that there was no such Letter, or Packet, ever came to his Hands.

And supposing these Letters were sent, as they suppose, to the Persons they suppose, and dictated by the Persons they suppose; is there one Passage in them of such a criminal Import, as would be sufficient to found an Indictment at Law? If there is not, they are not to be made criminal by Arguments, Innuendos, and Implications. The Case of Sir Samuel Barnadiston, already mention'd by Sir Constantine, is expressly in Print; and the Reason given for the Reversal of that Judgment (as appears by your own Journals) is, because the Information was grounded upon Letters, which in themselves were not criminal, but made so by Innuendos, and forced Constructions. There is Crosby's Case to the same Purpose, before the Court of King's-Bench, in the Year 1695, who was indicted of Treason; and the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment, were for inviting the French King to invade the Kingdom, and by sending Letters and Instructions, how and where to make the Descent. Tho' the Court thought his Hand-writing was prov'd, and the Matter of the Papers of a very odd and suspicious Nature, and the French King frequently mention'd in them, and the Indictment supposed them to be contriv'd for to invite him over; yet they held it not Treason.

And the chief Thing that gives any Ground of Suspicion, in this Case, is, the Person to whom they are supposed to be directed: but I must submit to your Lordships, that there has been no Proof that either Chivers and Musgrave, or Jackson, are the very Persons supposed, or that his Lordship was privy to the Writing of one, or the other of them; nor are they capable of Proof, as we hope immediately to make appear.

However, for the present, supposing as they have supposed, that Chivers and Musgrave mean Dillon and Mar, and that such Letters were wrote to them by his Lordship without any Disguise, (unless the Matter of them, as I before said, were plainly criminal) or unless your Lordships will suppose (as they suppose) something criminal contained in the Words not decypher'd; and unless it could have been prov'd that the Persons writing or dictating these Letters, knew them to be the Pretender's Agents, and as such address'd to them; I dont know (my Lords) how it could be construed a treasonable or criminal Correspondence, either within the Letter or Intention of Stat, 14 W. III. c. 3. or any other Law whatsoever.

For tho' the late Lord Marr is an attainted Person, it can't be denied but he is still in many Senses a Subject of England, and is no more divested of his natural Allegiance, than a banish'd, or an out-lawed Man: and tho' he appeared in open Arms and Rebellion against his Majesty, he was not thought so dreadful a Man, as to have a Correspondence with him made Treason or Felony; but that was a peculiar Favour, reserved for this Reverend Prelate and his Friends. My Lords, I would not be understood to mean, as if the most innocent Correspondence with a Person under such Circumstances, was prudent or convenient; but I think I may affirm (even from the Clause of this Bill) it would not of itself have been criminal. But (according to my Instructions) this Reverend Prelate was little known to that Lord, and never had any Friendship or Acquaintance with him while in England, and cannot be supposed to have contracted such a Friendship since he was abroad.

That Dillon was an Agent of the Pretender's, nothing appears antecedent to these Letters: Nor did Marr at that Time appear to be one of his Agents, when it was so well known (as that Honourable Committee observe) that he was at that Time subsisted by a Pension from the Court of England. This Pension indeed, is said to be stopt last August; but the Letter to him of the 20th of April (by whomsoever wrote) was some Months before.

Indeed, if Jackson had been proved to mean the Pretender, the Writing to him would be High-Treason plainly within the Statute: but that the Pretender is not, and cannot be understood by that Name, we hope to make appear fully, before we have done, even from the Lights that Honourable Committee have afforded us.

I shall next consider the Nature of the Proofs to induce your Lordships Belief, that these Letters were dictated by my Lord Bishop: And the first they offer, is, Because the Matter of them agrees with his Lordship's Circumstances at that Time; i. e. his being ill of the Gout, and the approaching Death of his Lady; which (they say) is morally impossible should suit so exactly to any one Man else. These two Circumstances must be allow'd to be agreeable to those which his Lordship was then under: But one would think (my Lords) they are Circumstances so melancholy in themselves, that they might have been spared, especially considering the little Use or Advantage that can really be made of them. But these Circumstances were no Secrets: every one that knew his Lordship, must likewise know them; and whoever wrote these Letters with a Design to have them intercepted, and imputed to him, (as we hope to shew the Case really was) would certainly mention such Matters or Circumstances in them, as might be naturally thought to describe him. Or if they were written without his Knowledge, (as they will be clearly proved to have been) it is no wonder, if the Writer, who personated his Lordship, should insert all that was proper to fasten the Suspicion he intended on him.

Another Proof that they were dictated by his Lordship, they say, is, from the Subscription of the Names of Jones, Illington, and the N^o 1378, which are all affirmed to denote his Lordship: And the Reason why that Number belongs to him, is, because the Decypherer has found that Number to denote the proper Name or Title of a Person beginning with the Letter R. If this is his real Opinion, must that needs be the Bishop? Is there no body else, whose Name or Title begins with the same Letter?

But, with Submission to your Lordships, it seems impossible to affirm even thus much with any Degree of Certainty, and it must be only Matter of mere Conjecture. Dr. Wallis, who is allowed to be the Father of the Science, (such as it is) and was the Wonder and Envy of all Foreigners, directly owns, that the Whole was built upon Conjectures; and he that had the best Guess, was the best Artist. Such, my Lords, is the Science of Decyphering. And from such uncertain and conjectural Premisses, what certain Conclusion can possibly be drawn? And 'tis plain, Mr. Willes is not so infallible as he pretends to be, by that Number of Passages not yet decypher'd.

When we took our Objection first against the Nature of this new sort of Evidence, the Counsel for the Bill were pleased to cite a Statute in Q. Eliz. Time, wherein they said the Word Cypher is mention'd. I have since looked for that Statute, but could find nothing about it; and, perhaps, may be mistaken in the Statute which they mean. But, my Lords, I am sure they did not mention any particular Trial, where it was ever heard of, or allowed as Evidence. I rather believe, that, according to the Notions of those Times, (for soon after the Statute was made against Witches) if any Decypherers had appear'd then as Evidence, they might have been in more Danger than the Criminal.

But if there are any certain Rules, or any reasonable Methods in Decyphering, I am sure 'tis highly improbable, that Persons so cunning and wary, as these are all along represented to be, should be guilty of such a fatal Oversight, as just to sign with such Numbers, that all, it seems, who understand Cyphers, must necessarily know to be intended for the Initial Letter of their Names. It would, my Lords, in my humble Opinion have been more consistent with that Care and Caution, to have made those Numbers stand for quite contrary Letters, and those Letters to have been express'd by quite contrary Numbers; and there is no Doubt, but they might have made any others signify the same Thing. However, since the Decypherer has not shew'd us by what Methods he has arrived at this Conclusion, 'tis impossible for us, by any positive or direct Evidence to confute it: But 'tis sufficient for us, to deny on the one hand, what he has on the other hand affirm'd, without telling us the Reasons of it.

That the Names of Jones and Illington belong to his Lordship, is endeavoured to be proved by some Passages in subsequent Letters, and by refining on the Matter of them, which they think is applicable to his Lordship only.

I have already mentioned two of those Instances, viz. his Lordship's own Indisposition, and the Death of his Lady, which are likewise mentioned in the subsequent Letters, in order to fasten the Imputation intended, yet deeper on him. There is a Third, which relates to the Present of a Dog.

That such a Dog was sent does indeed appear; but that his Lordship had received it, or saw it, or had any Letter or Message about it, has not been proved, and he positively denies it; and to whom, or from whom it was really sent, Mr. Kelly can best determine, and his Lordship must refer himself to what he has always affirmed in his Examination; and (if I am rightly inform'd) since re-affirm'd at your Lordship's Bar, that he gave it to Mrs. Barnes, and designed it for her from the first, and for her only.

My Lords, I should apologize for taking Notice of such minute and low Circumstances; but it is the Evidence and Nature of the Proof made use of against us. I should rather have expected, that ingenious Gentleman (the Decypherer) would have shewn, by some Rules of his Art, that the whole Story of the Dog had been a Fable or Fiction, and explain'd it to something that was reasonable and probable, which I am sure this is not, to suppose (as the Letters read to your Lordships do suppose) Musgrave, i. e. Marr, in one Part of the World, General Dillon in another^a, widely distant one from the other, and a learned Prelate, to be in such Tribulation and Concern for a little Dog; which no way suits the Characters of any one of the Persons to whom it is applied; much less the Circumstances of this learned Prelate, who had at that time a much nearer Concern upon him, from the Death of his Wife, and was himself in such great Disorder and Weakness of Body. The speaking therefore of this Present, backwards and forwards, with such particular Circumstances, and the Report of it so industriously spread many Months before my Lord Bishop's Apprehension, (as some of your Lordships cannot but remember) is absurd and ridiculous upon all other Suppositions, but upon the Design of fastning something on his Lordship, the Point all along in their View.

If the Writer of these Letters had been really and truly informed of his Lordship's Circumstances, he might, perhaps more properly, have affirm'd it of his Lady; which 'tis plain, the Writer was not, because he speaks of her as Living 11 Days after she was Dead. And how ignorant of them the Writer really was, appears by another Passage in that very Letter; where he says, ^b 'Mr. Jones is come to Town for a Day only, 'May 7th.' Whereas his Lordship had been in Town Two Days, and staid Three more, as appears even by their own Evidence, Lawson and Wood.

By these your Lordships may see, how many forced Inferences and Constructions, and what a Train of Absurdities and Suppositions are necessary to support one poor, and (if true) yet considerable Assertion, when once we depart from the sure and known Rules of Law!

A Third Way of proving these Letters to be the Bishop's, is from the Hand-writing, which is supposed to be Kelly's, and he is supposed to have been his Lordship's Secretary in these Matters: Both which Suppositions are destitute of any proper or satisfactory Proof.

The first is attempted to be supported by the Testimony of the Clerks of the Post-Office. But before I speak to the Testimony which they have given, I must beg leave to offer one Word as to their manner of obtaining it; and shall endeavour not to transgress your Lordships late Resolution: And when I mention any Words of that Act of Parliament, it is only to shew the cautious Measures the Legislature took even in imparting this Power to them, and the just Apprehensions they had of the Abuses and ill Consequences that might attend it. My Lords, I am so far from endeavouring to bring them in danger of a Penalty, as the Counsel were pleased to object, that I am willing to suppose those Clerks had proper Warrants at that Time, and for that particular Opening and Detaining. But that is all which the Act gives, and the Words of it are fully satisfied by such a Construction, without going farther, and extending the Words of the Act to that which was not in the least within the Intention or Purview of it. It don't appear to me, my Lords, I confess, how they are empower'd to take Copies (for all such Acts which are in Restraint of Trade and Commerce, are to be strictly and literally construed :) But I am utterly at a Loss to know, from what Words of the Act it can be inferr'd, that such Copies shall be received as Evidence in Courts of Judicature; and not only against the Writer himself, but against other Persons too.

A private Act of Parliament (tho printed in Rastal and other authentick Collections of Statutes) has been disallow'd, when it has not been examined with the Record. But, my Lords, I don't know that a Copy of any Thing was ever allow'd as Evidence, but what was made by a proper Sworn Officer, known in Law, and where every one may have Access to it; and therefore, if false, may be disproved by the other Side. But is there the same Reason here? My Lords, can the Party ever have an Opportunity to disprove it, if falsely copied, when the Original is sent forward? Or, if it were still in their Possession, have we any Power to procure a Sight of the Original? or to have a Copy of that Copy? And therefore, we hope your Lordships will not regard that Part of the Evidence, if it were material. But to consider also, my Lords, what it is they have deposed of these Copies; That the Originals were written in the same Hand with some Papers shewed them; and which, they were told, were Mr. Kelly's Hand-writing. Your Lordships, I doubt not, observe the Time when they deposed this first, viz. the 24th of August, and afterwards the first of January last; i. e. The first of these Depositions four Months, the other eight Months, after they had seen the Originals of the 20th of April: For, they were forwarded by the Post, and the Clerks only took Copies of them, and did not detain any one Original for a Specimen till their first Deposition; and surely that was a little of the latest: So that it rests singly upon the Memory of the Clerks for four or eight Months. I think St. James says, That a Man may even behold his own Face in a Glass, but he is no sooner gone, but he straitway forgetteth what manner of Man he was: And it is much more impossible for any one so exactly and nicely to remember all the little Strokes and Dashes of the Pen, by which the Sameness or Diversity of Hands can only be made out.

And all Malone swears, is, That he believes it to be Kelly's Hand-writing; and 'tis remarkable, that his Deposition is but in January last, and he left Mrs. Barnes's Service in May, so that he could not have seen him write since that Time. He don't say, he ever read any of his Writing, or at most the Supercription of a Letter: He might, perhaps, see him write at some Distance, as he came in and out of the Room; but surely, that cannot be sufficient to form a Judgment of a Man's Hand-writing; and I am sure the Improbability is much greater after nine Month's Time. And Hutchins the Messenger, from seeing the Supercription of a Letter to the Secretary of State, has likewise, I think, taken upon him to swear the same thing.

But supposing these Persons had seen Mr. Kelly write frequently, and had, within a more reasonable Distance, swore it to be like his Hand, will any one say, That it is a sufficient, or even a reasonable Proof, in any criminal Case? But because Mr. Kelly is all along affirmed to have acted in these Matters as his Lordship's Secretary, I must beg your Lordships Patience to consider, How far that Doctrine of Similitude of Hands has prevailed.

Colonel Sidney's Case was the first wherein it was ever admitted as a Proof in a Criminal Case; but that Judgment was afterwards reversed by Parliament, as manifestly unjust. In Lady Car's Case, Sid. Rep. 419. which was only an Information of Perjury, yet a Letter under her own Hand was positively denied to be Evidence; tho' a Witness swore he believed it to be hers. I must own, my Lords, this Case at the late Trial of Mr. Layer, was not only denied to be Law, but all Men defy'd to make common Sense of it: But, with the utmost Deference to that learned Gentleman that said so, I beg leave to mention the Words of Sir J. Hawles upon that Case, who was of a different Opinion. 'At that Time, says he, when the Case of Lady Car was adjudged, besides Twisden and Keyling, two very eminent Judges, there sat in that Court Sir Wad. Windbam, whom all will own to have been the second best Judge who sat in Westminster-Hall since the Restoration; and if it is not Evidence in Misdemeanour, much less, says he, in Treason.' Which Inference, besides the Reason of the Thing itself, is supported by the Authority of Lord Coke.

In my Lord Preston's Case, his Hand-writing was proved by three Witnesses, that had belonged to him while in the Secretary's Office, and must necessarily have seen him write a thousand Times: But that was not all; for those Papers were seized on him, sealed with his own Seal, as he was going to France in the Heat of War, contrary to an Act of Parliament, which at that Time made it Treason.

In the Trial of the Seven Bishops, the same Question arose, Whether Similitude of Hands was a Proof in a Criminal Matter? and it was not admitted.

In Francia's Trial, before all the Judges at the Old-Baily, it is positively laid down by the Chief Baron, and not contradicted by any others, That it was no Proof or Evidence of itself; and the Letter in that Case would not have been admitted, but that it was found by his Bedside, and a Copy of the very same Letter enter'd in his Pocket-Book, which he had owned and explained to some Lords of the Council.

In Crosby's Case, the Hand-writing was sworn to by three positive Witnesses, and owned in one of the Papers by the Prisoner himself; yet Lord Chief Justice Holt and the Court held it no Evidence, Because one Hand, says he, may be like another, and Presumptions shall never take Place in Treasons.

In the late Case of Mr. Layer, 'tis well known, that besides the Proof of his own Hand-writing, the Treasonable Papers were delivered by his own Hand to the Witness; and 'twas upon that Ground only, they were permitted to be read against him. Besides this, he had said that before the Lords of the Council, which the Court thought amounted to a full Acknowledgment that it was his Writing. But even all this, my Lords, was made use of against him but as concurrent Evidence, because there were two positive Witnesses, viva voce, against him, as to the other Overt-Acts.

I will mention to your Lordships some Foreign concurrent Authorities upon this Point, to shew, that the Reason and Equity of this Doctrine has been uniform and universal, That Similitude or Comparison of Hands is not a sufficient Proof of it. There is a famous Case of Jean Millard, in a Book called, Le Journal du Palais. He had lived 40 Years from his Wife, and then returned and reclaimed her, after she was marry'd to another. One of his Methods made use of to prove him to be the same Person, was, the Hand-writing of Letters that had formerly passed between them: Which occasion'd this Question before all the famous Judicatures of France, 'Whether the Testimony of skilful Notaries, who fully deposed of the Similitude of the Hands, was a sufficient Proof in this Case?' and it was universally denied. And yet this, my Lords, was a Case highly favour'd in all Laws; but more highly in those Places, where Marriage is reputed as a Sacrament, and in favour of which they will often admit even the Party's own Oath.

Codex Fabrianus Lib. 4. Tit. 14. Def. 71. says, 'A Proof by Comparison of Hands, is a very dangerous Proof: Idque in causis civilibus duntaxat; sed in criminalibus, in quibus periculum majus versatur, aut capitis, aut existimationis, non item.'

Voet, an eminent Modern Civilian, Lib. 22. Tom. 4. Sect. 11. to the very same Purpose. And so does Cujacius in his Commentary on the Novels 73. 'The Romans, says he, never allow'd it, but when no other Proof could be had. And in latter Times, when Forgeries became more frequent, they would not allow of it at all, unless the Writing had been acknowledged by the Party, or proved by two Witnesses who saw him write it.'

And then it was necessary to bring both into Court, that the Judges themselves might make the Comparison, and not leave the Witnesses to be the only Judges of it.

But it was never known, and I may defy all the Writers of Law to shew me one Instance, that any Evidence of the Similitude of Hands (which can only be made out by Comparison) was admitted, but where the Papers pretended to be written in the same Hand, were produced and compared: Which is so far from being the present Case, that even the attesting Clerks, who are the only Witnesses in the Case, never had an Opportunity of comparing the Original Letter stopp'd in August last, with any one of the three original Letters dated April 20. or with any any of the intermediate Letters, which they affirm to have been written in the same Hand.

And if it be consider'd, how much more difficult it is to distinguish the Hand of one writing in Figures (which stand single one from another) from the Hand of one writing in Words at length (which are variously connected and combined) your Lordships will never give them the least Degree of Credit.

But at once to put an End to this Evidence (if my Instructions are true) it has already appear'd to your Lordships, upon Mr. Kelly's Bill, That the only Original Letter of the twentieth of August, stopt as a Sample at the Post-Office, and the only Ground of affirming these Three to have been his, was not his Hand-writing; and, if need be, we have the same and stronger Evidence to produce. Upon the whole therefore, I think I may affirm, That there is no legal or reasonable Ground to infer those Letters to have been wrote by Kelly.

And surely, my Lords, it was incumbent on them to prove, as well as to affirm, that they were wrote by his Lordship's Direction, before they can affect him; even tho' the Writer (whoever he was) had presumed to have signed them with his Lordship's own Name and proper Appellation. I beseech your Lordships, how does it in the least appear, that Mr. Kelly, or Mr. Carte, (as is afterwards upon no better Grounds suggested) was employ'd by his Lordship to carry on that Correspondence? It has, I confess, been frequently said at your Lordships Bar, as well as by that Honourable Committee, but like other Charges, without any Shadow of Proof; unless it be an obscure Passage in a Letter of Chitwell from abroad, to one Williams here, D. 27. which says, They had a Story in France of Weston's Clerk being laid up for Debt: Which, as I shall afterwards shew, could not possibly mean his Lordship. There is another Passage also in the Letter to Dubois, from whence the same Inference is made. What unknown Person that Dubois is don't appear, or whether it is a real or fictitious Name; for all their Lists and Cyphers afford nothing like it. The Committee are pleas'd to suppose it a Letter to the Bishop, and received by him from Abroad; and from thence infer, he us'd to receive Letters directed to him by fictitious Names. The Counsel for the Bill suppose it a Letter from himself to himself, because the Hand-writing, they say, (or rather the Letter e) is something like his Lordship's. It is not signed by any one, and dated only the sixteenth of December without any Year; and tho' that Honourable Committee are pleas'd to affix, in their Observations on it, 1721. because Johnson, they say, was about that Time at Paris, yet for what appears from the Letter itself, it might be written before his Majesty's Accession, or before the several Acts of Grace that have been; and if it had any Criminal Meaning, 'tis improbable his Lordship would have mentioned the Hand of Conveyance at length; and much more improbable, that he should have destroyed all his other Letters (as the Committee are pleas'd to insinuate) and to preserve this only, which is of no Consequence, but to furnish Evidence against himself, and to explain the Thing most wanted. Another Proof that it is his Letter, is from a broken Seal, which, they say, is made by the same Seal as that seiz'd on his Servant at the Tower. But consider, my Lords, how many Similitudes we are at last come to in this one Attempt, Similitude of Hands, Similitude of Figures, Similitude of Characters, and Similitude of Seals.

That Similitude of Hand-writing is no Proof, I have shewn by a Variety of the best Authorities: much less, the Similitude of one Letter in the Alphabet; that is, I dare say, a Conceit perfectly new. And 'tis well known, Artists are capable of counterfeiting any Man's Hand or Seal in such a Manner, that even the Person whose Hand or Seal it is, shall not be able to distinguish it from his own: And your Lordships yesterday saw an ample Specimen of it.

It is upon these Grounds, my Lords, that Kelly hath been affirmed to have been his Lordship's Secretary in these Matters; but there is not the least Charge or Pretence of his having writ any other Letters of any kind for the Bishop, but these Three only, and not one throughout the whole Correspondence charg'd to have been written by Carte, (tho' he is in general charged as another Manager of this Correspondence.) This, my Lords, we must insist, ought to have had the fullest Proof, and the most undeniable Evidence: For it is the Gift of the Offence, 'tis the Foundation of the Statute 14 W. III. c. 3. and 'tis the particular Suggestion of this Bill. 'Tis possible some such Letter might be wrote by Kelly or Carte to the Persons they are address'd to, without the Bishop's Privity or Direction; 'tis not so uncommon a thing to pretend Acquaintance with Persons of Distinction, or to make use of their Name and Authority, to give themselves a greater Degree of Credit with their Correspondents.

If this may be so, and ought now to be presumed so, since no Man has proved it otherwise; then no Man surely ought to suffer by the Act of another, or to be punished for another Man's Fault.

I believe no one will think it any Reflection to hear many of your Lordships Names in these Cyphers, and afterwards to find a frequent Mention of them in the Correspondence; or to find his Majesty's own Name in Plunket's Cypher, under the Disguise of Hawkesby, and Page 62 of the Report, Compliments from the Pretender and his Wife to one Hawkesby. No Man, I say, will apply these, or many other Names of Persons of Honour mentioned in them, to the Persons themselves, or imagine those Letters were really wrote by their Privity or Consent. By the same Rule of Justice, and by a Parity of Reason, my Lord Bishop's Name may be presum'd to have been made use of, without his Privity or Consent; and if there is any certain Rule or Position in Law, it is this, That all Presumption ought to be in favour of Innocency.

And to shew the little Intimacy there was between his Lordship and Mr. Kelly, (if Rig means his Lordship, as they suppose, or that Letter E. 64. was from Kelly, as they also suppose) it will be sufficient to remind your Lordships of one Part of it, where the Writer says,—
 ' That Rig and one Skin had been together;
 ' but the Result of their Meeting he knew nothing of. Rig had fixed his Suspicion somewhere, tho' I cannot find out the Place; but ' you will hear it from Skin, to whom, it's probable, ‘ bable, he may have communicated his Sentiments that way.’ That is, my Lords, if I understand the Meaning of those Words, that Kelly, the supposed Secretary on all these Occasions, knew nothing of the Matters, or at least much less than Skin, whom Kelly had but just before introduc’d into Rig’s Acquaintance.

There is another Letter which has likewise been read, E. 47. (if it is to be understood to be Mr. Kelly’s, as they suppose, and Rig is to mean his Lordship; tho’ we are far from admitting the one or the other) which we desire to make use of, and amounts to a full and direct Confession, that the Writer (whoever he is) had nothing in his Power or Knowledge to charge him with. I have the more Countenance, my Lords, to repeat the Words of this Letter, because that Honourable Committee have let it pass without Exception, Fol. 59. of the Report: Wherein the Writer vows, ‘ He never heard of the Cant Names of Jones and Illington, or who was meant by them: That some Persons in whose Power it was to do for him, had shewed no Concern at all for his Misfortunes; that it was well he had no Secrets to reveal, since such Usage might provoke a passionate Man.’ And all the World is since convinced he had not, since no Person seem’d to be apprehensive that he could do them any Mischief. My Lords, I say, if this Letter is to be understood as from that Gentleman, we think we are intitled to have the Benefit of his open and candid Declaration.

But however, my Lords, if we should not be allowed to make this Use of it, yet (if my Instructions are true) Mr. Kelly fully asserted this himself at your Lordship’s Bar; and even without it, we shall be able to make appear most plainly, in the Course of our Evidence, that Kelly did not, and could not write those Three Letters from his Lordship’s Mouth, or by his Lordship’s Direction.

The Date of all Three is 20 April; when this Reverend Prelate (as has been already mentioned to your Lordships) was deprived of the Use of both Hand and Foot: had for a great while been confined to his Room, under the greatest Weakness and Disorder, when his Lady lay in the next Room, on her Death-bed.

These, my Lords, and other remarkable Circumstances in his Family, which distinguish this particular Period of Time, as on the one hand, they have given the Writer of these fictitious Letters some Advantage towards fixing them on the Bishop; so, on the other hand, they afford his Lordship a like Advantage (in the most providential Manner, I may say) towards clearing himself from the Imputation of them. Because his Servants then attending him, are able to recollect what passed on that Occasion, and to be very positive and particular in their Evidence concerning it.

His Lordship happened then to have Three Men-Servants actually attending on him, and some one of these always, both Day and Night, either present with him in the Room, or waiting in the Passage at his Chamber-Door; and the Weather being warm, and the Room close, the Door was generally wide open: It was then this Reverend Prelate’s Misfortune, that he was not able, without their Help, to stir, or even to lift up what he eat or drank to his Mouth. Besides these, there were Two Women-Servants, which constantly attended his Lady in her Room, which is next adjoining, and came frequently to him (once or twice an Hour) every Day with Accounts how she did, the Bishop himself being disabled (for several Days before her Death) to go out of his Room.

And all these five Servants will depose, That for 14 or 15 Days before his Lady’s Death, no Stranger whatever visited his Lordship, much less stayed there any Time with him. This (my Lords) the Women-Servants will affirm, as far as their frequent seeing of him gave them Opportunity to make these Observations. His Coachman (tho’ now Witness against him) has constantly affirmed the same thing, both below as well as before your Lordships. But the three Men (one of which was always in the Room, Day and Night, as I before observed) can be most full and peremptory in their Testimony. So that the Bishop could not possibly dictate these Letters, either to Mr. Kelly, or to any Body else, without the Privity and Observation of some of them.

This being a Negative, it is impossible to be more fully proved in any Case; and nothing but the remarkable Circumstances which happened at that time, to which the Writer of those Letters unluckily pinned them down, could have help’d us to so strong and undeniable a Proof of it.

Whether Mr. Kelly was ever acquainted or visited his Lordship, indeed I am not instructed; their Evidence, ^a I am sure, has proved nothing like it, nor is it material, much less criminal. But as to the particular time (12 April) when Mr. Kelly is supposed to have told Mrs. Barnes, and she is supposed to have told Mrs. Levett, that his Lordship sent his Coach for Kelly, we shall expressly prove the contrary: and besides that it is only Hearsay of Mrs. Levett from Mrs. Barnes who denies it, and his Lordship’s Disability at that time to receive Company; I say (my Lords) besides these Circumstances, it is remarkable that the Coachman, and the Baker (who it seems were directed to keep a Diary of every Body that came, and of all that happened in his Lordship’s Family) say not one Word of this remarkable Incident, in either of their Depositions. The Coachman has denied that he ever fetch’d Mr. Kelly in his Lordship’s Coach since he lived with his Lordship, or ever was at Kelly’s Lodgings, or that he ever saw him or Mr. Carte in his Lifetime; and surely their Silence (if there were nothing else in the Case) is sufficient to infer, that he was not there at that time: And all Mrs. Kay and Malone swear is no more, than that they don’t remember Kelly lay at Mrs. Barnes’s that Thursday or Friday (the first only speaks in her printed Deposition of a Thursday or Friday about the middle of April.) And how is it possible they should remember the Time so exactly, for neither of them belonged immediately to Kelly, but were only Servants to Mrs. Barnes, who had other Lodgers in her House? They did not even make these Affidavits till the 6th of February last; and ’tis no easy Matter to remember such an inconsiderable Circumstance of a Lodger (ten Months together) unless they likewise had been instructed before-hand to keep Diaries of Mr. Kelly's Motions.

The Third General Charge against my Lord Bishop, is ^a the receiving of Letters from Abroad relating to this Conspiracy.

Two Instances only of this Kind have been ^b produced. The first from Motfield (interpreted Marr) 11th of May, addressed to Illington.

The other from Digby (supposed to be Dillon) 14th of July, addressed to Mrs Weston. Neither of which (do they pretend to say) came to his Lordship's Hands, or if they had, that there is one criminal Word contained in them, and consequently could not be (as I before proved) a treasonable Correspondence, within the Letter or Intent of any Law.

That of Motfield's is a mere Letter of Friendship, and (if from Lord Marr, as they suppose) is to a Person with whom he never had either Friendship or Acquaintance; but really seems designed for no other Purpose but to fix upon his Lordship the Letter directed to Musgrave of the 20th of April, (for the same reason interpreted Marr) the Receipt of which is there acknowledged; and in his Words of Condolence there is something, which, 'tis said, points out his Lordship's Character and Function, tho' in my humble Apprehension, no more applicable to his Lordship, either as a Bishop or a Clergyman, than to any other Person; especially if it be considered (as it really is) the Style of a Letter of Compliment. But if the Letter itself, to which this is pretended to be an Answer, should prove to be a mere fiction, the Answer to it (tho' it were Criminal) must fall with it, as a part of the same Contrivance.

And as to the Letter from Digby to Weston, tho' that Hon. Committee seem to lay some Strefs upon it, by printing it at length in their Report, yet there is nothing in it that can affect any Man criminally, but his Lordship not at all; because the passage in it relating to his Health, and the Concerns of his Family, cannot possibly be applied to him. It implies, that he was then in a very ill State of Health (July 25.) and his Family in great Disorder; whereas his Lordship (I can speak it, my Lords, upon my own Knowledge, as well as the Testimony of several Clergy of his Diocese, and others) was then perfectly well, and able to transact all the ordinary Business of his Diocese and Deanery, and had been so for above two Months, having myself the Honour at that time to be concerned with his Lordship in a very tedious and intricate Enquiry; and the Disorder in his Family (if it means the Death of his Lady, for that or nothing is meant by it) had been over a much longer space of Time.

Nor is it probable that such a Mistake should be made by the Person (whom the Name of Digby is supposed to denote) if what the Report p. 39. and the Appendix D. 32 and 29. informs us, be true, that two Letters had some time before been written to Digby, or his Secretary; the one (July 4) assuring, Weston was never better in his Life, the other (14 July) affirming he was then perfectly well. But it is still more improbable, if your Lordships will consider what that

Hon. Committee have justly observed, in the very same Leaf, that the Professions of these two Correspondents were so foreign and different, as to lay no sort of Foundation for Intimacy or Intercourse between them: and the natural and only Conclusion (we think) from hence, is, that the Letters on this Head, either from this or the other side of the Water, cannot be genuine; and that no fair or regular Correspondent could be guilty of such gross Mistakes.

And of both these Letters from Motfield and Digby, your Lordships have (I doubt not) observed, that there is no Pretence of Proof concerning the Hands in which they are written; which surely would have been more requisite, than the Application of feigned Names, to ascertain them. Otherwise any one who was acquainted with such Names might write Letters from the other Side, as coming from the Persons designed by those Names, which they themselves were ignorant of.

And as the Receipt of these Letters by his Lordship has not been proved, so there is not any Insinuation or Pretence that he ever answered them, tho' they both bear Date long before his Lordship's Commitment.

This part of the Scheme therefore for charging his Lordship with a foreign Correspondence under fictitious Names, was not so artfully contrived as the former; and seems, by so many grosser Mistakes, to have proceeded from Somebody that had a much worse Intelligence concerning his Lordship's Affairs.

I shall here beg leave to take Notice of the Letter taken from one of his Lordship's Servants in the Tower, on which the learned Counsel have laid such great Strefs, because there were no Professions of his Innocency in it. If there had been, I suppose they would not have been much regarded. Why therefore should it be any Argument against him, because there is no such thing? Matters are at a very low Ebb, when such Trifles are relied on. But there is another Reason. The Letter I suppose to have been intended for some near or intimate Friends, and to such Persons there was no need of making such a Profession. They knew (whoever they were) and were before sufficiently persuaded of his Lordship's Innocency, and that it was impossible he should be guilty of what is laid to his Charge. And by what has already appeared to your Lordships, I may say, this Reverend Prelate had no need of making such an Apology, and that the Persuasions of his Friends were not ill-grounded.

The Fourth Head, to which the Charge against his Lordship may be reduced, is the Coincidence of Circumstances, Times, and feigned Names in the intercepted Correspondence, to induce your Lordships Belief of the before mentioned Hearsays and supposed Facts, that his Lordship, and he only, is meant by that Correspondence.

And the chief Observation about the Coincidence of Times and Circumstances relates to the three Letters of April 20. his Lordship's Illness, and the Death of his Lady, and the Present of the Dog, about the same Time. All which have already been accounted for, either as Truths publickly known, turned by ignorant or malicious Correspondents to ill Purposes, or as absolute Falsties, as will appear to your Lordships by our Evidence.

1. As to the Article of Times, of his Lordship's coming and going, it must be own'd, the Penmen of these Letters are sometimes right, but they are as often wrong, and the Mistakes are of more Consequence to destroy what is inferred from them, than the real Agreements, in point of Time, are or can be, to establish it. There is no doubt, but the Correspondents on this Side (whoever they were, and whether out of Malice or Vanity) apprized themselves as well as they could of his Lordship's Motions, in order to give a colour of Probability to what they said of him; and yet it happens, that out of seven Instances occurring in these Letters, and referred to in the Report, three of them (if not four) are plain and gross Mistakes: two only are true in all their Circumstances; and of the other two, it may be doubted whether they answer the Truth in every respect, or not.

First, As to the two doubtful Instances, one is 49 pag. Rep. D. 29. where June 14. G. W. writes to Quitwell, Mr. Weston is in the County, I saw him two Days ago. If these Words mean, that he saw him two Days ago in the Country, (which is the most obvious Sense of them) then the Assertion is false; for his Lordship came to Town June 12. as appeared yesterday by the Coachman's Book: but if they mean, I saw him two Days ago in Town, then the Assertion may be true.

The other Instance is Report 51, 52. D. 14. somebody writes July 26. to Maisonneuve, that Rig and Skin had been lately together, and that Rig went into the Country the Day after. Now by Depositions D. 48. it appears, the Bishop went out of Town July 21. they must have met therefore on the 20th, which don't well answer the Word lately, which one would think imported 6 or 7 Days more. And therefore these two Instances we set aside, as neither plainly true nor plainly false. The three next are manifest Mistakes.

In Hatfield's Letter to Musgrave May 7. it's said, ^a Mr. Jones is come to Town only for a Day, and yet (if Jones means the Bishop) he had been in Town two Days, and stay'd in Town three Days longer; for he came 5th May, and returned 10th May, as appears by Lawson and Wood's Examination.

So in a Letter of J. H. to Dixwell, June 12. it's said, Rig. (supposed to mean the Bishop) is, I hear, in the Country; whereas his Lordship was at Westminster June 18 and 19, as appears by the Coachman's Books.

In a Letter to Maisonneuve, July 19. F. 59. Rig is again said to be in the Country, whereas his Lordship was at Westminster that very Day, and continued there till the 21st, as appears by the same printed Depositions.

And the Mistakes in these three Instances are the more remarkable, because they all affirm his Lordship to be in the Country, when he positively was not; whereas it was ten to one, but that even mere Guesses had been true, at a Time of Year that every one almost is in the Country, and his Lordship was really ten Days in the Country, to one that he was in Town during the whole Summer.

But, My Lords, I must with some Regret take notice, that none of these Mistakes are acknowledged in the Report of that Honourable Committee, tho' all the Letters and Passages are transcribed in it, particularly that of the 7th of May, E. 42. These Words are inserted in the Report, page 41. [Mr. Jones is come to Town] but the following Words [only for a Day] are omitted; and yet the Section concludes, that it agrees with the Enquiry made at that Time; which indeed it does (as far as it is there quoted) tho' not with the Appendix. E. 42.

What Enquiry of this kind was then made, and with what Views, we cannot say, unless we may suppose it to be made by his Neighbour Lawson. If it was, 'tis strange that he could not depose from his own Knowledge and Observations in May, but only as to what he had heard and was told by Wood, his Lordship's Coachman, so lately as the 19th of February last. I would reconcile this if it be possible: and the most natural Inference I can draw from it is, that Lawson (or whoever that Inquirer was) had pretended to take some Account of his own at the Time mentioned by the Committee, which, upon Comparison with that of the Coachman's, he found to be manifestly false and erroneous, and therefore would not produce or depend upon that: But we hope his Testimony can receive no Advantage from such a Conduct. And upon the whole it appears, that tho' more Industry has been employed on the Article of Enquiry, yet as many Mistakes, have been made in it, as in any other.

And as for the Coachman's Book, after all it cannot be entirely relied on; because the Entries made in his Book can only relate (as we apprehend) to the Charges of Turnpikes and Ferryings, or such other Matters for which he was accountable. He had no Reason to take Notice in such an Account, when his Lordship was in the Coach, when Not; and your Lordships have heard, cannot be positive on that Head. And therefore how exact soever his Accounts may be, in respect to those little Disbursements, they can add no Weight to the Observation drawn from them by that Honourable Committee; and tho' great Strefs has been laid on them, (with Submission to your Lordships) they amount to no more, than that some Persons on this side the Water, writing to some on the other side, are supposed to mention his Lordship, sometimes as in Town, or in the Country: and from thence 'tis inferr'd, that they had frequent Access to him, and consequently the Matter of their Correspondence is imputed to him.

Had these Correspondents been exact, my Lords, in all their Accounts of his Motions, surely no such Conclusions could have been reasonably made: but as they are oftner wrong than right, it follows, they were not so well acquainted with his Lordship or his Circumstances, as (to serve their evil Purposes) they have pretended to be.

Having thus spoken as to the Circumstances of Times, (which are thrown in to induce a Belief, that his Lordship was meant by that Correspondence) dence) I shall next offer something as to the Cant Names: And tho' it has been already observed to your Lordships in various Instances, that the Names of Jones, Illington, and Weston, could not possibly belong to him; yet give me leave (my Lords) to say further, that Jones is not only a very common Name (for in one Society, I think, I remember no less than sixteen of the Name at once) but that Name is manifestly applied to very different Persons, even in the Papers contained in the Appendix. In Plunket's Cypher Jones denotes the Germans: Twelve or fourteen times it is supposed to denote the Duke of Norfolk, in three other Places to denote Sir W. Ellis; and even in the Letters imputed to Kelly, there are ^a Passages (besides those already mentioned to your Lordships) which cannot with any Reason or Probability be applied to his Lordship: For instance, D. 23. Jones and Illington are within the Compass of two Lines plainly distinguished, as two different Persons, and therefore both cannot be apply'd to his Lordship. And in the same Letter as well as a preceding Letter, D. 13. Jones is mentioned as having undertaken to do something for a Boy at Eaton; where it is well known his Lordship has no Influence or Acquaintance, and if he had interested himself there on any such Account, it would easily have been discovered. And this, my Lords, is one strong Instance, to shew the Ignorance of the Writer, even in some of his Lordship's most notorious Circumstances.

A great deal of Pains has likewise been taken, by the help of divers Suppositions and Reasonings, to prove that Rig denotes his Lordship. However, I shall take Notice but of one, in the Letter to Gerrard, which is said to be Sir J. D'Obrion, Report 49 E. 47. where something is said of Rig, highly improper, and absolutely false, if to be understood of the Bishop. An Account is said to be given of the Difficulty Kelly had to get Bail, and it is added—Your old Friend Rig indeed offered all that could be expected of the poor Man. (If my Instructions are true) D'Obrion is a Name his Lordship never heard of before, nor had the least Concern in procuring Kelly's Bail, nor knows to this Day who they are; the only Words applicable to him in this Passage, are those of Poor Man; and his Lordship permits me to say, that he is really such, poor both in Body and Purse, and as poor as his Enemies almost can make him: and tho' he may have Reason (if your Lordships should pass this Bill with all the Severities intended by it) to be heartily sorry he is so, and that he has neglected those Opportunities of enriching himself, which others would have laid hold of; yet he gives me leave, my Lords, to say, he is not ashamed of that Poverty, because free from all unjust Acquisitions, and unworthy Compliances. But that he was a poor Man at that Time, i. e. unable to procure Bail, (which is the Sense that Writer means it in) cannot with any Decency or Justice be applied to one of his Lordship's Interest and Station, if he had concerned himself in it.

Give me leave, my Lords, to take Notice of another Mistake of that Honourable Committee in the very same Letter; I mean, a Passage cited from it which is not in it, to prove that Rig and his Lordship are the same Persons; which I should have omitted, but that it breaks at once the Chain of Reasoning there made use of. The Words are, how far this late Affair may affect him (Rig) I cannot tell, and E. 47. is cited for them. Now E. 47. gives an Account of Kelly's Examination promiscuously with other Matters, and was written June 11th; but the Letter where the Words really are, is E. 49. of the 18th of June (near a Month after Kelly's Examination.) Nor is there a Word in that about the Dog; but it might be proper to confound these two Letters, and connect these two Particulars, in order to make out, that Rig and his Lordship are the same, tho' they have really no Relation one to the other.

We might add, my Lords, many gross Errors in the Application of Names: but if your Lordships are satisfied with the Justice of those already mentioned, (as I hope your Lordships are) there will be no need to regard the rest; for tho' they have some little Coincidences of Time, yet they are dashed with so many Inconsistencies, and so many Falsities, that no fair Correspondent could be guilty of. But there is one which of all others bears hardest upon this Reverend Prelate, the most criminal in the Matter of it, and from which he is most deeply concerned to clear himself; i. e. the Letter of April 20th, which has been over and over affirmed by that Honourable Committee, as well as by the Counsel for the Bill, to be a Letter to the Pretender. If that be so, and had been proved by any Degree of Evidence, to have been dictated by his Lordship, we should have been utterly at a Loss what to have said, in a Case that would have been so fully within the Letter of the Law. Part of it, my Lords, we have already shewn to have been charged on his Lordship without the least Proof or shadow of Evidence; the other Part of the Charge we hope now to prove equally groundless and false.

That the Letter addressed to Jackson was not to the Pretender (whomever else it may mean) we think, appears clearly from the Words of it, our Circumstance on this Side; a Phrase not only used by all Writers, but is the constant usual Style throughout all the Papers in the Appendix, in contradistinction to France, which is the other Side, but never to Italy, as the Case must be here, if Jackson means the Pretender. The Instances in the Appendix are almost infinite.

Another Reason, why we think the Name of Jackson cannot reasonably be supposed to denote the Pretender, is from E. 30. where there is mention of dividing Clinton's Money between Medley and Jackson, i. e. says the Rep. p. 54. between Ormond and the Pretender. But it is not to be imagined that a Letter written from one devoted to the Pretender's Interest, should place Ormond before him; this is so unlikely, that even the Committee, speaking in their own Persons at the bottom of this very Page, slide naturally into the other Way of placing the Words, the Pretender and Ormond. Besides this, my Lords, there are so many Familiarities [to mention but one, all such pretending People] in the Letter itself that it could never come from any one (as I before said) devoted to that Interest, at least not to the Pretender himself, but to some Equal or rather to some Inferior. Jackson therefore must mean somebody else, somebody in France, and not the Pretender in Italy; and on this Supposition, every Word, and Phrase of that Letter is better accounted for than on any other.

The Committee of that Honourable House below, have been pleased also to observe, p. 45, 46. that Jackson appears from other Letters to be the same as Malcolm, (which they say means the Pretender) and for this Reason, because [p. 54. E. 30.] Clinton's Money is to be divided between Medley and Jackson. And pag. 56. somebody hopes Clinton has sent Malcolm half Money; which proves indeed, that either Medley or Jackson means Malcolm, but which, may be still a Question, as much as it was before.

That Malcolm means the Pretender, 'tis proved, because application is made to Malcolm, in a Letter from Scotland, for a Patent, and for Power to raise a Regiment, Rep. pag. 45, 75. But with Submission to that Honourable Committee, neither of these Instances prove that Assertion; since the most natural Way of applying in such Cases, is to Persons employed under the Principal, and not immediately to the Fountain Head itself: and if the late Duke of Ormond was to have come over last Summer to head the Scots, and they daily sent pressing Messages to that Effect, (as Mr. Stanhope writes from Madrid, Rep. p. 75.) who more proper to be applied to by a Scots Man on both these Occasions? Malcolm therefore (with Submission to the Committee) more naturally means the late Duke of Ormond.

I may add to this, my Lords, that in the Cypher inserted among the Scotch Papers, I. 14. Davis and Lloyd (not Malcolm) is said to be the Name and Designation of the Pretender.

I hope we may be allowed to argue in this Manner, from one Cypher to another, because the same Method has been made use of against us, upon this very Article, both by that Honourable Committee, and the Counsel for the Bill: for the only Colour there is for interpreting Jackson to be the Pretender, is taken from Plunket's Cypher, in which (as it is printed) Jackson is set over against the Name of the Pretender, and from the Titling to the Draught of a Letter of Plunket's to Jackson, C. 41. and admitting this Letter to have been so entitled by himself, (which has not yet been proved) yet it does not follow, (as I observed) that because a Letter address'd to one at Rome by Plunket under the Name of Jackson signified the Pretender, that another Letter directed to one of that Name in France, by a quite different Person, should likewise necessarily signify the Pretender. This, my Lords, I beg leave to say, is no certain or natural Consequence: but it is most certain, that that Draught (whomsoever it was intended to) was not written upon that Cypher which the Committee refer'd to, in order to have it thought to have been written for the Pretender; for there is but one only of the many Cant Names in the whole Letter, which is to be found in that Cypher. But if your Lordships will be pleased to consider that Cypher a little farther, it will appear, that the very Persons supposed to be concerned in dictating this Letter to Jackson, were utterly strangers to the Correspondence; for it consists of a hundred and fifty Names, and no Man can find above four that are in this Cypher, or in all that voluminous Correspondence attributed to Kelly; nor any of those four ever used in the Letters supposed to be writ by Kelly; but in those only supposed to be written to him from abroad.

The Name of Jackson is not once in all that Correspondence applied to the Pretender: and tho' there be a hundred proper Occasions of mentioning him, it is always under some other Appellation. And Plunket himself, in his Examination C. 73. Sect. 14. (when he could not possibly know the Tendency of the Question) not only says positively, that he never writ to any Person by the Name of Jackson, and does not know who is meant by it, but it is also remarkable (my Lords) that in all the Letters said to be written by him upon that Cypher (after it was formed) he never once styles the Pretender Jackson, but either Joseph or Jephson.

The first of these Letters is in May 1721, and therefore that Honourable Committee have with great Exactness placed this Cypher immediately before it, as supposing it about that Time framed; for all the preceding Letters are manifestly written upon another Cypher. Now this Letter of the 20th of April, supposed to be dictated by his Lordship, was written before that Cypher of Plunket's was framed, and consequently could not take a Name from a Cypher which then had no Existence.

There is another Observation of that Honourable Committee, which I beg leave to take Notice of. They say, that the Cypher made use of in this Letter to Jackson, is the same made use of in the Letters from the late Duke of Ormond's Agents, and in Letters to Dennis Kelly; and yet the Pretender has some other Names in such Letters, but in none of them ever once styled Jackson. How comes it then, my Lords, that he should be styled so once, in this one Letter, and never before, nor after, by that Writer or by any other?

We have been the longer, my Lords, in removing this Imputation, because of all others it is the hardest and most unjust upon this Reverend Prelate; and upon the whole, we hope it is fully and effectually done, (notwithstanding the Difficulties we had of proving a Negative) and even from those Lights and Materials the Committee themselves have afforded us: and if we had had an Opportunity of inspecting the Originals, we doubt not we should have been able to have proved much better, that Jackson (to whom this Letter of the 20th of April was directed) could not possibly mean the Pretender.

And if that be the Case, as it certainly is, and it appears farther by the Evidence which we shall produce, that these three Letters of April 20. were not, and could not possibly be dictated by the Bishop, the Foundation of the whole Charge is destroyed, and consequently, all the Superstructure must fall to the Ground. Nay, I will venture to affirm, that it is impossible for them to form any Scheme to prove the Bishop wrote these Letters but what is, and will be actually disproved and falsified, by some Part of their own Evidence.

Having thus, my Lords, gone thro' every Part of the Charge, I must crave your Lordships Patience, yet to speak to two Things, which have been much insisted on by the Counsel for the Bill. That when your Lordships proceed in a Legislative Capacity, you are not to be guided by the Rules and Niceties of Law, and therefore that we are not in this Case to expect an Evidence strictly legal. The other Thing was, that at this time of Day, circumstantial Evidence is sufficient in a Charge

Charge of High-Treason, as the Case now before you is. This (my Lords) we have heard fully and often repeated, as it were to anticipate us in this Objection, which they themselves know to be so justly founded.

I have so far acted in Complaisance to them, as to argue chiefly on the Facts and Circumstances themselves, and under the very same Lights they have presented them to us, and hope (my Lords) our Inferences from them have been more just, our Construction more natural, and our Probabilities much greater than theirs; and even in that View (considered abstractly from what the Common Law, and the Common Justice of the Realm requires). I hope we have fully shewn to your Lordships Satisfaction, and to the Conviction of every reasonable or impartial Person, that there are no Grounds for what is suggested in the Bill; and that all who hear me may justly wonder, how this Reverend Prelate comes to be charged (as he is in the Preamble of the Bill) with being deeply concerned in forming, directing, and carrying on a Conspiracy; when it has not been proved, that he entred into any one Consultation concerning any one Measure, gave any one Direction, that he has done any one criminal Act, written, dictated, or received any any one criminal Letter: and if we should wave insisting on an Evidence strictly legal, or a Proof according to the known Rules of Law; give me leave to say, my Lords, because it is true, there has not been a reasonable Evidence.

But yet, my Lords, I shall always insist, both as an Englishman, and as Counsel to this Reverend Prelate, that there ought to be a legal Evidence in these, as well as in any other Criminal Proceedings. If there is any Difference, it is in this only, that as there are certainly many greater Inconveniences to the Subject in this Method of Proceeding, there ought to be a stronger Proof, and a Conviction more strictly legal. I will always hope, your Lordships will expect a Proof in such heavy Charges, agreeable to the Laws of the Land, and the Rules and Resolutions of other Judicatures. I am far from thinking your Lordships are circumscribed by the Forms of inferior Courts, because they are in their own Nature discretionary, and the Courts themselves often vary and depart from them. But the fundamental Maxims of Law, the unalterable Measures of Justice, and the positive Directions of an Act of Parliament, are of another Nature; they are binding every where, to all Persons and Authorities, (as long as they continue Laws) the King himself not excepted. I should beg Pardon, for carrying my Assertion so far, but that I am taught by the Bill of Rights that the King himself is bound by the Law, that it is not in his Power to alter, suspend, or dispense with Laws. But if the Doctrine of the Counsel for the Bill is true, and every one at Liberty to follow the Dictates of his own Judgment, and what Rules he pleases; what Confusions, Uncertainties, and Arbitrariness must that introduce in all Proceedings! Private Opinion will too often be a Pretence to exercise private Malice, Revenge, or Ambition.

I might appeal to every one that hears me, whether he has not at some Time or other, believed some things, as strongly as he did at first this Reverend Prelate to be guilty of what was suggested against him, and has afterwards found himself mistaken? What is more common than for Men that agree in the same Notions of Morality, to deduce different Conclusions and Applications from them? (even where Interest or Partiality do not intervene;) and therefore the Wisdom of the Law of England has been, to determine general Notions of Justice and Right by particular Rules and Applications, in order to settle that Variety and Inconstancy, which without some established Rule must necessarily follow. Where then shall we go for true and proper Notions of Law or Equity, but to those great Oracles and Fountains, my Lords the Judges? What better Guide or more certain Rule, can any one of your Lordships propose to himself, than the constant and uniform Judgment of those, whom the Constitution of this Kingdom have made the proper Dispensers of Justice, and the Interpreters of Law?

'Tis your Lordships peculiar Advantage, to be continually assisted by some of my Lords the Judges; and we hope in this Instance (if any Doubt can at last remain) your Lordships will hear their Opinion, with the same Deference and Candor as in former Cases. Let it never be said, my Lords, that you, who are the supreme Oyer of the Kingdom, whose Judgments and Resolutions are Laws to other Courts, and ought to be an Example to all others, in the Justice and Equity of your Proceedings, that your Lordships will not regard the solemn Judgment of the Judges, or the Usages of former Parliaments: and let it not be said, that because other Courts are bound by a Law, to require such and such Circumstances to infer an Offence, or such a Proof before they condemn a Man, that you (my Lords) will follow your own private Opinion, make what you please to be an Offence, without any Evidence at all, but upon mere Hearsays, Conjectures, and Suppositions. Who can read that melancholy Case without Concern, which my Lord Coke has in his 3d Instit. of an Uncle that was condemned and executed for the supposed Death of his Niece, merely upon a Train of Presumptions and circumstantial Evidence; or Harrison's Case within Memory; where the Father and Mother both suffered upon Presumption for a supposed Murder? And with what Shame and Remorse did that hasty Judge see himself convicted by the Persons returning from beyond Sea? And every one almost remembers the Charge of Treason against this Reverend Prelate's Predecessor. If such a Bill had been thought on, or much stronger Evidence had been received, it might have pass'd before the Truth could have appeared. But happy was it for that innocent Prelate, that a quite contrary Method was taken, and his Accusers brought Face to Face to him, by which he quickly discovered the Villany of those Miscreants. Private Opinion or Persuasion therefore is such a Position, that every honest Man ought to disclaim in these Cases; and the greater the Crime is, in which he is to judge, the stronger Proof he ought to require: and when one adheres strictly to Justice, and goes according to the Allegata & Probata, by the best Rules and Reasons of Law; whatever Mistakes, Misinformations, or false Evidence may happen in the Case, he can never have Cause to repent, and neither the present Age nor Posterity can blame him.

It was formerly a Question, whether the Star-Chamber was bound by the Rules and Resolutions of of other Courts: and the many Excesses, and extravagant Opinions in this Respect was the Reason that ancient Court was laid aside. And it has been as great a Question, whether the Court of Chancery was to be guided by Rules and Precedents. But the better Opinion has always been, that a Judge in Equity ought to regard the Rules and Resolutions that have been in like Cases; unless he is resolved to make Decrees totally arbitrary.

For tho' Equity and Reason, in itself, is the same all the World over, and nothing can alter the proper and intrinsic Notions of it; yet, as the Matters about which it is conversant, are represented in different Circumstances, and, like Streams of Water, will receive some little Tincture from the Soil thro' which it runs, and there is something in every Man's Temper that will slide into his best formed Notions; it shews the Necessity of some fix'd and establish'd Rules, at all Times, and in all Places of Judicature. And therefore, in that high Court of Equity, tho' the Rigor of the Common Law is in some Respects softned, yet there is nothing more known, than that it is not to be impeach'd in any of its essential and fundamental Points.

I hope your Lordships will pardon me, if I mention an Authority or two of great Name, that expressly say, the High Court of Parliament is likewise bound by the Rules of Law. Lord Chief Justice Holt says, The Authority of Parliament, is from the ^a Law; and as it is circumscribed by Law, so it may be exceeded; and if they do exceed their legal Bounds and Authority, their Acts are wrongful, and cannot be justified any more than the Acts of private Men. I might add to this, the Opinions of Vaughan, Hale, and Hobart, to the same purpose; that the Rules of Law ought to guide in passing of Acts of Parliament, as well as in the ordinary Course of Judicature. But when I mention the Sense of a living Authority, that has filled the highest Stations in the Law, and so great an Ornament to your Lordships House, and whose Merits have been so lately distinguished by new Honours, I need cite no more. It was in a Case, where the same Doctrine was advanced (that the Parliament was not bound to conform to the Rules and Proceedings of other Courts:) In answer to which, that noble Lord with great Truth observed, that those Rules were not to be Patterns to them, only because they were Rules of those Courts, but because they were Reason, and Reason approved of by long Experience, and they obtain there as Rules for that Cause; and I hope (says he) that is a Cause why the House should imitate them, as much as Westminster-Hall; or else how can they be said to go according to Reason, or Justice, when they go beside, or transgress those Rules?

Besides these great Authorities, there have been Times, when Parliaments have thought themselves bound by the common Rules and Proceedings of Law, and Parliaments that were very tender and sensible of their own Power, in other Respects. Not to mention several antient Acts of Reversal, because Judgments given in Parliament were not pronounced according to the known Laws; there is the Act for the Attainder of the Earl of March, because he had been instrumental in procuring the Attainder of another Lord, under pretence of a Letter, which (the Record expressly says) was no Evidence. And the Record for reversing the Attainder of Roger Mortimer, 28 E. 3. Sir Thomas Haxley, &c. is expressly declared to be, because they were attained contrary to the good Laws and Customs of the Realm. And not only the Lawyers and the Histories of those Times condemn them as grossly contrary to Law and Justice, but the Stat. 1 E. 6. cap. 12. is directly levelled at them. For it recites that those Proceedings were terrible and extreme, introduced for particular Policies and Purposes, repeals several Statutes that had been enacted in the preceding Reigns; and, that there might be no more such for the future, reduces all Treasons to the antient Standard of the 25 E. 3. and goes on and enacts, That no Person or Persons (i. e. my Lords, as I humbly apprehend, no manner of Persons, in no manner of Place, Court, or Method) shall be convicted for any Offence of Treasons, Petit Treasons, Misprifions, for which the Offender shall in any wise suffer any Pains of Death, Imprisonment, Loss of Goods, or the like, unless accused by the Testimony of two lawful and sufficient Witnesses. The Stat. 5 E. 6. cap. 11. goes further, and says, There shall not only be two Witnesses, but those two Witnesses shall be produced in Person before the Party, and shall before his Face maintain and avow what they have to say. The Words of this Statute, as well as the former, are as general as they can be, without any Exception of Place or Proceeding.

But notwithstanding these two Statutes, there was still Occasion for the Stat. 7 W. 3. to ascertain Treasons, and to regulate the Method of Trials. For there had been several tender complainant Laws introduced by the pretended Zeal of Ministers, with a peculiar Eye to the Prince on the Throne; which tho' others could not apprehend the Justice or Necessity of, yet on these Laws there had been many unreasonable Penalties, undue and irregular Prosecutions, in the preceding Reigns, and which Sir Jo. Hawles remarks as one of the great and immediate Causes of the Revolution. And to shew the Resentment of the Nation on these Proceedings, they were all reversed by particular Acts of Parliament; and to prevent the same for the future, that glorious Statute was made of the 7 W. 3. cap. 3. That Persons accused as Offenders should be justly and equally try'd, and not debar'd of all just and equal Means for the Defence of their Innocency. And whoever casts his Eye over the preceding Trials, will find every Clause of that Statute as it were a particular Provision against the Mischiefs that had been, and to prevent the like for the Time to come.

I do admit (my Lords) there is a Proviso in the End of that Statute, that it shall not extend to any Impeachments or Proceedings in Parliament, and therefore I don't mention it as a Rule to Parliamentary Proceedings in all Respects, as it is to inferior Courts. But surely the Reason and Justice of that Act ought to be a Guide, as far as it is consistent with the Nature of your Lordships Proceedings. And inasmuch as it was the Sense of the wole Legislature, and the united Voice of the Nation at that Time, and on a dear-bought Experience, it is surely so far worthy of your

Lordships Imitation. It can never be consistent with publick Wisdom, to run again into the same Mischief from which we are so happily rescued, or to split on the very same Rocks, on which many of your Lordships noble Ancestors have perish'd.

And it can never be (with Submission to your Lordships better Judgments) a natural or a reasonable Construction of that Proviso to enlarge the Proceedings of Parliament, or to give a greater Latitude than ever they had before. And to remind your Lordships how the Usage of Parliament was, preceding this Statute, I need mention but two or three Instances out of many. Lord Delamere's Case in King James's Time, 1685, where there was one positive Witness and a strong circumstantial Evidence; and yet your Lordships Predecessors thought that not sufficient to find him guilty. The Lord Stamford's Case in the very same Year, where there was also one Witness, and strong Circumstances, and he was in the like manner acquitted. In the Case of the Earl of Pembroke, 1677, for Blasphemy and Abuse of the Sacrament, your Lordships Predecessors declared, That the single Testimony of a Commoner, tho' on Oath, was no sufficient Evidence against a Peer denying the Fact upon his Honour; and upon that address'd his Majesty that he might be released from his Imprisonment.

And, as I humbly apprehend, your Lordships have thought fit to admit some of the Regulations of that Act into your Proceedings, such of them (as I before said) as are agreeable and consistent with the Nature of your Proceedings. Your Lordships have been pleas'd to allow Counsel to a Prisoner in Treason, to speak to Matters of Fact as well as Law: You allow a Copy of the Charge against him; you require the Witnesses for him to be upon Oath, as well as against him; neither will your Lordships admit Evidence of a Fact not in the Charge. And surely (my Lords) there is as much Reason, and as much Equity to require (as that Statute requires in the Courts below) the Testimony of two lawful and sufficient Witnesses. Nay, my Lords, I hope the Reason is much stronger, because (altho' your Lordships should consider your selves as unrestrained by the Stat. 7 Will.) yet it is positively requir'd by both the Statutes of Ed. 6. which are general and without Exception, (as I before observ'd) and because it is agreeable to the Usage of Parliament (as I have likewise shewn) from that Time even down to the Stat. 7 Will. And if your Lordships are not enlarged by the Statute of King William, and the Statutes of Edw. 6. are still Laws, give me leave (my Lords) to say, it can never be just or lawful to take away any Man's Life or Liberty on less Evidence than what those Statutes require, in any Place, or by any Method whatsoever. Because I am taught by Casuists, that every just Law is a Rule of Conscience, whether divine or human; and no Man can say, his Conscience is void of Offence towards God or Man, unless he acts according to the Laws of the one Sort, as well as of the other.

And if your Lordships will give me leave to step once more out of the Verge of my own Profession, I will mention a Word out of the Civil Law conformable to this: That is a Law (my Lords) in some Degree receiv'd by all Nations, as a Scheme of the greatest Equity and Justice.

The Number of Witnesses by that^a Law, ought to be two at least, to make a full Proof, and free from all Exceptions, both as to their Persons and to their Deposition. The Testimony of a single Witness is of no Validity, unless where other Circumstances concur; and it was not the Manner of the Romans to condemn any Man, before that he, which is accused, have his Accusers Face to Face. And this (my Lords) is not only the dead Letter of the Code and the Dig. but the learned Groenw. in his Notes upon these Laws, says, It is the general Policy, and obtains at this Day in most Parts of the World. I do own that there are many Cases that happen with us in the Courts below, where the Testimony of two Witnesses is not required; but then, my Lords, it is, when the Trial is by Jury, that is, when twelve Men, coming from the Party's own Neighbourhood, and consequently must be supposed to know something of the Fact upon their own Knowledge, find a Verdict upon their Oaths. But I need not say, that even in a Trial by Jury, if it is a Case of High-Treason, like this now before your Lordships, there must be two Witnesses, and nothing less can warrant the Verdict. And surely, my Lords, it is a Practice founded on Reason; not because this or that Law, or this or that Court requires it, but because it is absolutely necessary for the Discovery of Truth, and for the forming of a right Judgment, whether what is swore be true or false. One Witness may mistake, or be perjured, and yet happen to be consistent with himself; but when there are two separately examined, the Truth is much more easily found out: And tho' a Criminal may now and then escape for want of such a Proof, yet that would be a far less Evil, than to trust so much, in Cases so Penal, to Circumstances and Presumption, and to the Malice and Mistakes of one Person.

But if, notwithstanding the Opinion of the greatest Lawyers both English and Foreign, your own uniform Usage and Resolution, and the Reason of the Thing itself, your Lordships are resolv'd, in this one Instance, to follow every one his own private and particular Conscience; let every one hearken to that still Voice within him with an honest Attention, unto those secret Whispersings, with Temper and Moderation. Let no Man be sway'd by Hopes, over-rul'd by Fears, or transported by Zeal beyond the Bounds of Justice, and through this Reverend Prelate's Side give a Wound to himself or Posterity, which may never be cured. Consider, my Lords, if not for his, yet for your own Sakes, the Circumstances, the Probabilities, and Evidence on both Sides, with an unbiass'd Conscience, and by the Measures of Law and Justice. For tho' some Proceedings may seem convenient to certain Times and Occasions, yet unless they agree with the Law, with Reason, and with Justice, no Man ought to think he has any Power to consent.

There is a noble Instance on Record of the Lord Digby, and worthy of every one's Imitation. He had been, my Lords, one of the most violent Managers in the Impeachment of the Lord Strafford; and yet when that Proceeding was wav'd, and a Bill of Attainder brought in, he spoke as violently against it: Tho' he was still of Opinion (he said) that that Lord was the same dangerous Minister, and great Apostate to the Commonwealth, who must not expect to be pardoned in this World till he was dispatched to another; yet he had rather lose his Hand than put it to that Dispatch. He put them in mind of the Difference between Prosecutors and Judges, and how unbecoming that Fervor was in them, now they were Judges, which perhaps might be commendable in them as Prosecutors: That when he gave his Consent to the Accusation, he was assured, his Crimes would have been fully and legally proved, which if they had, he cou'd have condemn'd him with Innocency, as he had prosecuted him with Earnestness; but as the Case then appear'd, no Man could satisfy his Conscience in the doing of it. The Parliament, 'tis true, had a Judicial and a Legislative Capacity; the Measure of the one ought to be legally just, the other political and prudential: but these two Capacities were not to be confounded in Judgment; they were not to piece up (says he) the Want of Legality by Matters of Convenience, to the Ruin of a Man, by a Law made ex posteriori.

What can I say more? For it must appear to your Lordships by this Time, that this Proceeding is contrary to the fundamental Laws of the Kingdom, contrary to Publick Wisdom, and unjust in itself: That the Reasons and Suggestions upon which it is grounded have not been proved with any Colour of legal Evidence, or with any Degree of Proof or Probability, which ought to satisfy the Conscience of an honest, reasonable Man. But if the Matters, which I have humbly laid before your Lordships, have not all the Weight, which I hope they have; or if I have omitted any thing that is material or necessary for this Reverend Prelate's Defence, Your Lordships, I hope, as Judges, and (consequently in some measure of Counsel for the Prisoner) will, from your own Observation, supply it. Or if I have laid them before your Lordships in an improper Light, or a less effectual manner than others might have done; yet the Case itself will speak better and more strongly than any Words or Expressions of mine can do. It is the Cause, the Fortune, and the Liberty of a most Reverend and Learned Prelate, who is to be strip'd and torn from those Dignities and Preferments which his own high Merits justly call'd him to, and which he has ever since adorned with the greatest Lustre. Upon what slender and insufficient Grounds, Your Lordships have already heard, and I was going to say, without Precedent: but I must own there have been Instances of Deprivation, some in the Beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, and some others since the Revolution. But yet they were upon a general Law, then in being, and an Incapacity voluntarily incurr'd by those Prelates, after the full Knowledge and Publication of those Laws, by refusing to give that Security to the Government, which at those Times was absolutely necessary. And tho' they were peremptory in the last Degree, and their Example might have produced worse Consequences than it did; yet their Punishment went no further. But this is a particular Law, to be introduced for this particular Prelate, subsequent to the supposed Offence, and which is not thought fit to be enacted as a Law for any other Person hereafter; and I wish, my Lords, I could say, this Act went no further. But this Reverend Prelate is likewise to be deprived, not of his Life indeed, but of all the Conveniences and Comforts of it, of the Commerce of his Friends and Relations, and of all that is valuable to an Englishman. He is to be doom'd to the Curse of Cain, and to be turn'd out of his native Country, full of Age and Infirmities, to the Cruelty of Strangers and Foreigners, and even beyond the reach of his Majesty's most extensive Goodness.

But if your Lordships should pass this Bill, he will still have, I doubt not, the Peace of his own Mind, and this comfortable Reflection, which no Man can take from him; That he shares the Fate of the greatest and most honest Statesman of the last Century: tho' in this Instance also 'tis his Lordship's Misfortune to be very much distinguish'd. For he, tho' innocent, was afraid of the Violence of the Times, and withdrew from Prosecution. But this Reverend Prelate has been all along forthcoming, and, as it were, fearful of nothing, and conscious of nothing but his own Innocence, has sought in all Places to be brought to Trial. That noble Lord's Crimes (or at least his Accusation) were going to be proved in a proper Parliamentary Manner by Numbers of Persons: But this Reverend Prelate is to be involved by Implications, Inferences, Constructions, and the Conjectures of Decyphers, in Crimes, which he is here ready to deny, and of which no Man accuses him.

I would not be understood, my Lords, by any Thing I have offered in relation to the particular Penalties, as if I thought any one Suggestion of the Bill had been duly proved, so as to deserve this or that Part of the Penalties; tho' I must say, they are all so extraordinary in their Nature, as to deserve your Lordships Attention. And I doubt not, but your Lordships in your Goodness will consider what is already pass'd, the Length and Closeness of the Imprisonment, which this Reverend Prelate has already suffer'd as a supposed Criminal. Prisons before Conviction are only for the safe Custody of a Man, and not for Punishment; but his Imprisonment has not been so: which (if my Instructions are true) has been attended with such unheard of Barbarities, and such distinguishing Severities, as are a Shame and Reproach to every civiliz'd Nation. The Case of Colledge every one has thought hard and barbarous; but 'tis this Reverend Prelate's Misfortune to be distinguish'd in this also, as well as in every thing else: For that Case was before the Law allowed Counsel or Solicitors to assist a Prisoner in his Defence, but now they are allowed by Law, and were actually and duly assigned to my Lord Bishop; and yet part of his Defence, and part of his Evidence torn and taken from him. So that, all these Things considered, his Lordship cannot escape without being a very great Sufferer, tho' your Lordships should utterly reject this Bill.

Your Lordships will also consider the Infirmities of Body, under which that great and noble Mind even now labours before you; which have render'd him almost incapable of attending his Defence. Your Lordships will also consider the Grief and Vexation it must be to appear as a Criminal before this Honourable House, where he has so long sat as a Judge, and under the Suspicion of those Crimes which are laid to his Charge; and how grievous it is for one of his Lordship's Character and Function, to be tax'd with Breaches of his Duty to God and Man, of Scandal to Religion, of Designs of overthrowing Church and State, in favour of Popery; who happens to be the only Clergyman in England, that ever thought it worth his while to draw his Pen in Defence of Martin Luther, the great Instrument of our Reformation from Popery; and who has, upon all other Occasions, appear'd the most strenuous Assertor of it. I might add much more of his Lordship's personal Merits, and of those high Abilities so eminently conspicuous in him; but that I know it is some kind of Violence to his Lordship to hear even thus much mention'd.

Yet suffer me to say, That if these Suggestions should be carried into a Law, without any Degree of Evidence or Probability, but rather (as your Lordships will immediately hear) against the strongest Evidence and Probabilities that are possible of the contrary: I say, if this Bill should pass on such Circumstances, whatever the present Age may think, his Case will be a standing Mark of Reproach to it, and he will be the Wonder and the Pity of all succeeding Generations.

I shall add to your Lordships Trouble but one Word more, in Behalf of myself: That your Lordships will pardon any Warmth of Temper, any unguarded Word or Expression that I may have been guilty of in the Course of this long Defence, in a Case, which every Englishman naturally considers as his own, and therefore will, in some measure, warm the most even Temper. And that this Learned (and whom I will now call Innocent) Prelate, will accept those little Services I have been able to perform, and will pardon the many Failings, which I may already have been guilty of, in his necessary and most just Defence.

After the Bishop's Counsel had done speaking, the Bishop produc'd several Witnessess to be examin'd, and on Saturday, May 11. Sir Constantine Phipps made a short Recapitulation of the Evidence, as follows.

My Lords,

WE have done with our Evidence; and hope we have fully answer'd every Part of the Charge contain'd in the Bill, and apprehend there is no one Circumstance left unanswer'd. Particularly, that we have totally destroy'd the Credit of Neynoe's Hearsay Evidence: For when the Improbabilities, Inconsistencies, and Contradictions of his Examinations are consider'd, and the Testimony of the Witnesses is duly weigh'd; no Person can give the least Credit to what He hath said, without offering the greatest Violence imaginable to his Reason.

And it is wonderful, that the Counsel for the Bill should insist he should be credited in any Thing: When we have proved, he had the Confidence to declare, that a Right Honourable Person had endeavour'd to persuade Him to accuse Persons of Quality of Things He knew nothing of.

Hath he not said that, when he was to be examin'd, That Right Honourable Person had him first in private, and told Him, what Questions would be ask'd Him, and what Answers He should give? Did he not say, that the very same Gentleman gave Him five Questions or Enquiries, and told Him what he should reply to each of them? Hath He not said, that refusing to give Evidence, He was threatned with Newgate; and that thereupon He gave Them Informations against my Lord Bishop and Others? Nay, had He not the Impudence to say, that the same Right Honourable Person offer'd Him 2000*l.* 500*l.* per annum, and a Place, to accuse the protesting Lords, the Earl of Orrery, and this Reverend Prelate? And that being ask'd whether He knew any Thing of the Plot, He swore No, nor Any body else: But that he knew of two other Plots, viz. One of Mr. Walpole against the Protesting Lords, the Other of Himself upon Mr. Walpole, to get 2000*l.* of Him. Nay, it is proved He declared that the same Gentleman press'd Him so hard to accuse some Persons, that He had it once in his Mind to take up That Right Honourable Person's Sword, and run him thro' with it; and so make an End of the Plot.

These are things which have been proved upon Neynoe: And all these Things being consider'd, I believe the Counsel for the Bill will readily agree with me, that no Credit ought to be given to one Word He has said: And if His Evidence be laid aside, the greatest Part of the Charge against my Lord Bishop falls to the Ground.

My Lords, The Evidence Mr. Lewis gave was very material. For he shew'd your Lordships, that Brockett, who was of the Post-Office, was so skilful in counterfeiting Hands and Seals, that he wrote the Supercription of a Letter, and took the Impression of a Seal, and seal'd it again; and did it so well, and gave it such a Lustre, that Mr. Lewis could not distinguish it from the Original.

The Engravers likewise said, they could take off the Impressions of Seals so well, that they could not be distinguish'd: Nay, tho' the Wax were broken, yet if no Part of the Wax were lost, it might be done.

Your Lordships observe how the Engravers themselves were mistaken in relation to some Impressions, which were produced to them: And You farther observe, that the Seal in question was a Cicero's Head, which all the Engravers agree to be a very common one; and they had many of them: So that no Objection can be made against my Lord on account of That Seal. Nay, one of the Engravers said, it appear'd to him that the Seals of the two Letters were not the same. As to the Dog, there is Mr. Crawford's Certificate, and Birmingham's Affidavit.

As to Mrs. Barnes's Evidence, she hath found out now, That there were Two Dogs, tho' nobody else ever heard of Two. She said, the first was for the Bishop of Rochester. Now it is plain, the First was sent in March; and it was His Leg that was broken: And Birmingham swears, and Mr. Kelly solemnly affirms, that it was for Mrs. Barnes, and not for the Bishop.

As to the Three Letters of the 20th of April, we have proved it impossible that the Bishop should write, or dictate, those Letters to Mr. Kelly. And your Lordships take Notice, how the Butler came to observe these Letters could not be written by the Bishop; and the Servants, tho' under Confinement, and not permitted to see any Body, agree in their Evidence. There is Gordon's Affidavit that he never had such a Pacquet: And James Talbot was here in Town the 29th of April.

Thus, your Lordships observe that a Bill of the most extraordinary Nature that ever was seen, hath been supported by the most extraordinary Evidence, that ever was heard: And we hope, we have set the dark Passages, of which the Charge is compounded, in such a Light, that every One may may plainly see the Right Reverend Prelate is not guilty of any One Offence charged against him.

Mr. Wynne spoke next.

My Lords,

I Shall beg your Patience to close our Defence with an Observation or two on the Evidence that has been given by my Lord Bishop: and I need take up the less of your Lordships Time, because our Witnesses have fully answered all I opened, and in many Things have exceeded my Instructions.

And for your Lordships clearer Apprehension of so many various and perplex'd Facts, I shall just recapitulate what I humbly conceive to have been the Substance of the Charge against my Lord Bishop, and, as briefly as I can, state the Evidence, which we have produced in order to falsify and disprove it.

The first and chief Accusation against his Lordship, was founded on the Informations of Philip Neynoe, and therefore the first Part of our Proof was as to his Credit. Your Lordships, I doubt not, remember the Purport of his Information read against us, and the many gross Absurdities and Inconsistencies in his other Information read by us; and likewise how fully they have been all disproved, and the Credit of them entirely blasted, even from Neynoe's own Confession, several Times repeated, and confirmed by three unexceptionable Witnesses.

Your Lordships have fully heard of the Terrors and Apprehensions he was continually under; because (as he himself express'd it) he had given false Informations against this Reverend Prelate, and so many other innocent Persons. Your Lordships have heard the Inducements he had to give those Informations, and how often he had declared his Intentions to escape, in order to avoid the Punishment which he apprehended most justly due to him, because he could not make out the Truth of them.

Two of those Witnesses (Bingley and Skeen) are still in Custody, and destitute almost of all the Necessaries of Life: I say, my Lords, they are still in close and strict Custody, and consequently there could have been no Opportunity to lead or instruct them in what they should say, or so much as to be apprized before-hand (which surely would have been a reasonable Liberty) whether they could say any thing material or not; and we are only beholden to those lights, which the Report of that Honourable Committee has afforded us: And all three of these Witnesses utterly unknown to my Lord Bishop, both in Person and Reputation, as well as his Lordship is unknown to them. They have not conversed together for several Months, but yet are perfectly consistent with themselves, and entirely supported and confirmed by each other. And all three declare, they had very early told, and frequently repeated this Account of Neynoe to their Fellow-Prisoners and Acquaintance, as long as they were permitted to have Access to them. Mr. Skeene being ask'd in relation to the Discourse between him and Captain Pancier, as in the printed Deposition of Pancier, App. D. 1. has denied on his Oath every Word of it. He says indeed, that Captain Pancier us'd all his Endeavours by Treats and Entertainments to induce him to support this Informations; but that he never gave him, nor could give him Grounds to say any such Thing of him.

We have shewn your Lordships, that Mr. Stewart in particular was so far from patching up, or contriving Evidence (as was objected to him by the Counsel for the Bill) after he had seen the Report and Appendix, that he had given this whole Account to several Persons long before. For he says, the Things which Neynoe told him were so surprizing, that he could not stifle them in his own Breast. Tho' your Lordships, I doubt not, observed with what Difficulty and Modesty he was brought to speak out in this publick Manner, where his Evidence seem'd to reflect on a great and Honourable Person.

Two of these Persons have likewise been produced to your Lordships. To one of whom (Mr. Gordon) he told these Matters some Days even before Neynoe's Death; and to Mr. Kynaston some considerable Time before the Meeting of the Parliament: and we could have called others to the same purpose, but that we were unwilling to give your Lordships further Trouble in a Matter which already had, as we thought, the fullest, the most satisfactory, and consistent Evidence that could be.

The second Head of Accusation against this Reverend Prelate, was upon Account of the three Letters of the 20th of April. The two first we before observed to your Lordships not to be criminal, if really designed for and addressed to the Persons supposed. The third we have likewise shewn by various Circumstances and Reasonings, could not possibly be addressed to the Pretender, whoever wrote it, or whomsoever else it might be wrote to.

And the Evidence offer'd to prove them to have been dictated or wrote by my Lord Bishop, was first by the Subscription of the common Name of Jones, which they would have to denote his Lordship. As to this, I doubt not, your Lordships remember, that even in the Cyphers and Letters that have been read, the Name of Jones is manifestly applied (as the Committee themselves have observ'd) to many different Persons; sometimes to one, and sometimes to another, as the Circumstances there mentioned seem'd to give Occasion; but cannot once in any Place, with Reason or Justice be applied to my Lord Bishop.

The next Proof that has been offer'd to your Lordships, to prove these Letters to have been dictated or wrote by the Bishop's Privy, is, from the ill State of Health, the Death of his Lady, and the Present of a Dog; Circumstances, which they say, are applicable to the Bishop, and to him only.

That his Lordship did not, nor could possibly write or dictate these three Letters, we have laid before your Lordships such a Proof, as the like hardly ever was before: and 'tis impossible, in my humble Apprehension, for a Negative to be more fully proved in any Case. Your Lordships have heard the great Weakness and Inability of this Reverend Prelate at that very Time for all manner of Business and Conversation. No less than six, if not seven of his Servants, have spoken fully and positively to it, That his Lordship was not able, without their Help, to stir, turn in his Bed, or even to perform the common and ordinary Offices of Life. One would think, my Lords, such melancholy Circumstances, in themselves, sufficient to guard any Man from Suspicion.

But

But the Witnesses have gone much further; for they have told your Lordships, that no Stranger approached the Bishop's Room all that Time; nor had any one been for a considerable Time before and after the 20th of April under his Roof. Even some of those Persons that usually were with my Lord Bishop at other times (as his Son, his Chaplain, and his Son's Tutor) happened then all to be absent at the Election of Westminster School.

One of those Servants, who happens to be a Prisoner with his Lordship in the Tower, being asked, whether my Lord Bishop had not put him in mind of these Circumstances, told your Lordships, that it was entirely his own Recollection, by casually taking up the Report, after my Lord Bishop was gone to Bed, and dipping on that Part of it, in which his Lordship is charged with having writ these three Letters. Upon which, the next Day (he said) talking to his Fellow-Servant, and he agreeing to the very same Circumstances, they acquainted the Bishop with what they had read, and how they could, from their own Knowledge and Remembrance, falsify and disprove that Circumstance.

I must likewise crave leave to observe to your Lordships, that four or five of these Servants, that have spoke to these particular Facts and Times, are still in Custody, under separate Messengers, without any Opportunity to converse together, and were hardly to be found by my Lord Bishop, when he had need of their Evidence; and yet every one of them have been perfectly consistent with themselves, and one with the other, and all equally positive.

The Bishop's Coachman, your Lordships, I doubt not, remember, tho' now under another Influence, and called as Witness against his Master, confirmed what they said, and was as positive and peremptory in his Testimony concerning this Matter, as far as the Nature of his Employment gave him an Opportunity to make such Observations. And upon the whole, I may now, with more Reason, and with greater Confidence, repeat my former Assertion, that it is impossible for them even to devise or frame any Scheme to prove his Lordship to have wrote, or dictated these three Letters, but what will be actually disproved and falsified by some Part of the Evidence.

Another Reason, by which 'tis proved that his Lordship wrote these three Letters, was, from the Subscription of the Number 1378, to the Letter addressed to Jackfon. Which Number Mr. Willes (a Decypherer) says, denotes the proper Name or Title of a Person beginning with the Letter R. The little Time we have had to enquire into this Assertion, and your Lordships not permitting some Questions, put by us to the Decypherer, to be answered, won't enable us flatly to disprove it. But with Submission to your Lordships, it seems impossible to affirm even thus much, with any degree of Certainty, and it must be (as I before observed to your Lordships) Matter of Conjecture only; and it appears manifestly to your Lordships, by several Passages occurring up and down in this Correspondence, not yet decyphered, that either the Art is not so infallible, or that Mr. Willes is not so great an Artist as he pretends to be.

But, my Lords, admitting such a Number in this Cypher does really denote a Person's Name, or Title, beginning with the Letter R. what a strange and uncertain Proof is that, to fix a Charge of High-Treason on the Bishop, when there are other Persons Names, and Titles, found like his, and many others which begin with the very same Letter; and this not to be admitted as Evidence in a minute or inconsiderable Circumstance, but in the very Gift of the supposed Offence, in the principal Foundation of the Charge, in the only Letter that is criminal, and which is to magnify and improve the rest into High-Treason?

Another way of proving these Letters to have been dictated by the Bishop, was, because another, supposed to be an Answer to this, mentions the Present of a Dog. I need not here repeat what Mr. Kelly himself has constantly said in his Examination, because your Lordships, I doubt not, remember what Mrs. Barnes said; that Mr. Kelly indeed sometimes told her of another Dog that was for the Bishop, but that she always apprehended that Dog, which she had in her Possession, was designed for her, and never heard of any other Dog that did come from France: She owns, that she never received any one Message from the Bishop about it, but still kept it, when it was recovered, as her own; as long as it lived; and tho' his Lordship never had, nor loved a Dog in his Life, yet it would have been natural, and good Manners to the Person that sent it, especially if so considerable a Person as is supposed, to have made now and then some little Enquiry about it, if my Lord Bishop had really known any thing of the Dog.

But we have shewn your Lordships by the solemn Attestation of Mr. Birmingham, the French Surgeon, that he was the Person who gave this Dog (in March 22.) to Mr. Kelly, for Madam Barnes, of whom he had received Civilities in London, and for no other Person, nor with any other Intent. He likewise says, that he never received any such thing as a Dog, or Message from Lord Marr, (as alledged in the Report) never had any the least Thought of the Bishop of Rocheſter; or his Lady, much less of making either the one or the other (to both of which he was utterly unknown) any such Present.

Your Lordships observe this to have been a solemn notarial Act upon Oath, of a Person not only reputed, but attested likewise by the Lord of the Seignury, to have been a legal Notary, and to have exercis'd his Office as such for some time. That the Testimony of such a Person beyond Sea is a good and unexceptionable Proof in every Case, I need not say; or that it has been often allow'd here, where no other is to be had, nor any other Method to have the Benefit of a Man's Testimony that is beyond Sea. And our Witness has told your Lordships that he has frequently translated such Instruments: That he believes it to be the Notary's Hand-writing, and the publick Seal of his Office. I need not, my Lords, have said thus much; for in all Events it must surely have been of more Weight in your Lordships Judgments, than the Extract of an Information given by a Person, infamous in his Character, absurd and inconsistent in all he said, and without being signed or sworn to, even by that Person.

But yet this Affidavit of Mr. Birmingham has the more Credit, because his Majesty's own Resident at Paris (Mr. Crawford) has been pleas'd to examine him about this Matter, (being employ'd by him in his Profession as a Surgeon) and he has confirm'd the same Account to him, which has been likewise transmitted, and read to your Lordships.

Another way of proving my Lord Bishop to have been concerned in these Letters, was from the Hand-writing, which is suppos'd to have been Kelly's, and he is suppos'd to have been his Lordship's Secretary in these Matters. But both these Allegations, we think, with Submission to your Lordships, are still utterly destitute of any proper or satisfactory Proof.

I before observ'd to your Lordships, that the first time the Clerks of the Post-Office have made any Deposition about the Similitude of the Hand-writing, was four and eight Months after they had seen the Original Letters; which is a little of the latest so exactly to remember all the little Strokes and Turnings of a Pen, by which the Identity or Diversity of a Hand can only be made out. That Malone, the Footman of Mrs. Barnes, was never called upon for his Testimony till January last, that is, nine Months after he had seen any of Kelly's Writing, and consequently not then very able (if ever he was) to form a Judgment of it.

I have already observed to your Lordships, that this was the first, and the only Instance, that any Evidence of the Similitude of Hands was ever admitted, but where the Papers pretended to be in the same Hand were produced and compared in Court; which is so far from being the present Case, that the Clerks of the Post-Office never had any Opportunity of comparing the Original of the 20th of August, with any one of the three Originals of the 20th of April, or with any one of the intermediate Letters which they affirm to have been in the same Hand: so that they are made the absolute and ultimate Judges of this Matter, without any Possibility on our Side of detecting any casual or wilful Mistake.

And I would not again repeat an Observation I have before made to your Lordships, that a great part of these Letters are in Figures, and how much more difficult it is to distinguish the Hand of one writing in Figures, from Words and Syllables in length; because we have shewn your Lordships, by three positive Witnesses (well acquainted with Mr. Kelly's Writing, one of them above 20 Years, and his School-fellow) that the only original Letter of the 20th of August, stop'd at the Post-Office, as a Sample to the rest, (and which is the only Foundation upon which those Clerks have affirmed these three Letters to have been Kelly's Writing) really and in fact, was not his, nor like it. This, my Lords, we have fully proved by three Witnesses; and as a Demonstration of what they said, they shew'd your Lordships, among a Variety of Papers produced to them at your Bar, that they could at once distinguish which was Kelly's Hand, which was any thing like it, and which was not.

We have likewise produced to your Lordships, the solemn Attestation, on Oath, of ^a Alexander

Gordon Junior, the Son, Banker at Boulogne, that no such Packet of Letters ever came to his Hands, as mentioned by the Counsel for the Bill; and consequently he could not deliver any such to Talbot, (who, they say, called for them at Boulogne.) He farther deposes, That he never had any Business or Intercourse with Kelly, or Johnson, nor ever had acquaintance with any Person so called, in his whole Life.

And we have proved to your Lordships, that James Talbot, the tall black Man, ^b described in the Letter printed in the Appendix, and who is suppos'd to have been the Person that called upon Alexander Gordon at Boulogne for this Packet, was so far from doing it, at the Time suppos'd, that he was at London that very Day, as appears by the unexceptionable Testimony of Edward Crofton, his Shoemaker, and by the Entries of his Shop-book, to whom he accidentally paid a Bill upon that very Day, at his House in London.

We have likewise shewn your Lordships by two Witnesses, Mrs. Kilborn, and her Maid Anne Ellis, that Mr. Kelly was at her House in London, on the 20th of April, (the very Day upon which my Lord Bishop is suppos'd to have dictated these Letters to him) and by a great Variety of Evidence, impossible to escape any one's Memory, that my Lord Bishop was ill in Bed, at Bromley in Kent: and Quod non datur actio in distans, is an Axiom of Reason as well as of Philosophy.

And I must humbly submit it to your Lordships, that it has not yet, in the least, appeared by any Shadow of Evidence, that Mr. Kelly ever was employed by my Lord Bishop to carry on a Correspondence; that he wrote any one Letter for the Bishop, upon that, or upon any other Occasion whatsoever.

That Passage in the Letter to Weston, that seems to give countenance to such a Supposition, the learned Counsel for the Bill told us yesterday they had waved, and were angry that we should offer to disprove that which they had not proved. But, with Submission to your Lordships, tho' they have been pleas'd to wave that Part of the Charge against my Lord Bishop, yet, as it makes no small or inconsiderable Appearance in the Report of that Honourable House, and will be so handed down to Posterity; we thought it proper to give an Answer to it; and, we hope, it has been to your Lordships Satisfaction and still in your Memory.

The next thing was the Letter to Dubois; and I confess myself at some loss to know for what purpose that was read in Evidence to your Lordships; for the Counsel for the Bill have not, as yet, made any particular and direct Use or Application of that piece of Evidence, and therefore I shall submit it to your Lordships upon the Observations I before made on it.

There was indeed some of your Lordships Time spent in comparing the Seal of that Letter, with that which happen'd to be taken on my Lord Bishop's Servant at the Tower: if it was intended as any Proof, I cannot at present judge; however, we thought it proper to follow them in the Course and Manner of their Proof, and your Lordships yesterday have fully heard the Danger and Uncertainty of admitting such a Proof. First, you have had some Account from Mr. Erasmus Lewis of the known Practice of one Brockett, who was able to counterfeit any Man's Hand or Seal, in such a manner that even the Person (whose Hand or Seal it was) should not be able to distinguish it from his own.

Then we produced to your Lordships two Seal-gravers, who fully attested the same thing. Mr. Atkins said, That he himself could make such an Impression, so as not to be distinguish'd by an Artist, and give it the very same Lustre. That he could even take an Impression from a broken Seal, and tho' there would at first necessarily be some little Flaw in it, yet he said he could mend it, and then make such an Impression from it, that even an Artist could not discover it from the Original.

Mr. Johnson, another eminent Seal-graver, likewise told your Lordships, that he could do the same thing: In particular, That he had once such an Impression taken in Paste by one Mr. Wisembergh, and from that he made another Impression, so perfect and exact, that Mr. Wisembergh himself could not distinguish one from the other: But as to the Seals of these two Letters, he doubted very much whether they were made by the same Seal or not; and from some little Strokes in the Head, that were very visible to any one, tho' not so easy to be expressed, he rather inclin'd to believe, that they could not be made from one and the same Seal.

And when your Lordships were pleas'd to enquire of them, How such a thing was practicable? They did not cover themselves (as their Decypherer did) by saying, It would discover the Secrets of their Art, but frankly told your Lordships the very Manner and Method of doing it.

Their own Seal-graver, Mr. Christian, owned, That this might be done, altho' he had never done it: And in the Experiment made on Mr. Raulus, their other Seal-graver, he was once plainly in the wrong, as well as once in the right. And it manifestly appears from every one of their Testimonies, that this Practice of taking Impressions is very easy. And, as one of my Noble Lords inform'd the House, his Footman could do it as well as any of them; and, as your Lordships yesterday observed, even to deceive Mr. Raulus himself, who, they say, is so great an Artist. And therefore, my Lords, it is a most dangerous sort of Proof, and too uncertain at the best, to receive any judicial Countenance in a criminal Matter.

So that I must humbly insist, that this Part of the Charge against my Lord Bishop has not been proved any better than the former; and that when your Lordships do consider the Evidence that has been given on the one Side as well as on the other, as to this particular Charge, we hope you will be of Opinion, that there is no just or reasonable Ground to presume, that these three Letters were wrote by Mr. Kelly, and much less that they were dictated by my Lord Bishop.

The next general Charge against this Reverend Prelate, was, the receiving of two Letters from abroad, in relation to this Conspiracy. The Counsel indeed for the Bill have waded the Letter signed Digby, address'd to Weston, and (as I apprehended from them last Night) did not now pretend to prove any Thing concerning the Bishop, under the Name of Weston.

Neither have they as yet pretended to prove, that the other Letter from Motfield to Illington ever came to his Lordships Hands, or in whose Hand-writing it was wrote; tho' if it were the Lord Marr's (as it is supposed) many of your Lordships must have been well acquainted with it. Nor has it been yet said, that my Lord Bishop ever returned any Answer to it.

And as we have now proved (and fully too, we apprehend) the Letters of the 20th of April, to which this is supposed to have been an Answer, to be a mere Fiction, or Imposition upon the Bishop; this, which is designed as an Answer to it, must likewise fall to the Ground; as Part of the same Contrivance.

The next and last general Charge arises from the Coincidencies of Times and Names in the intercepted Correspondence, the more readily to induce your Lordships Belief, that my Lord Bishop was really meant by that Correspondence.

Some of them I accounted for before, as Truths publickly known, but turned by ignorant and malicious Correspondents to ill Purposes, or else as absolute Falsties, and manifest Mistakes.

We have shown your Lordships by various Reasons, that the fictitious Names supposed to denote my Lord Bishop, cannot be applicable to him, with any Colour, Truth, or Decency; that there is a great doubt to be made, whether many others of those fictitious Names were really intended for the Persons supposed to be denoted by them: and especially, that Jackson, to whom the Letter of the 20th of April is address'd, we have proved by various Arguments, and even from those Lights the Committee have afforded us, could not possibly mean the Pretender, whomsoever else it may mean; and consequently that that Letter (if it were wrote by Kelly, and dictated by the Bishop) cannot be High-Treason.

And as to the Articles of Times, and the Accounts of my Lord Bishops coming and going, it must be owned, they are sometimes right, but as often wrong.

There is no doubt, but the Correspondents on this Side the Water, whoever they were, whether out of Malice or Vanity, or out of any other Inducement, appriz'd themselves as well as they could, of the Bishop's Motions to and fro, in order to give the better Colour or Probability to what they said of him. But yet it has happen'd, unluckily to them, as your Lordships have heard, that out of six or seven Instances occurring in these Letters, two only are true; two of them may be doubted whether true or false, because ambiguously expressed; but three of them are gross Mistakes, as appears even by the Accounts of their own Witnesses.

And the Mistakes are the more remarkable, because they all affirm the Bishop to have been in the Country, when he positively was not: whereas it was ten to one, but that the mere Guessees of a Stranger, at that time of the Year, had been true; and the rather, because his Lordship was really in the Country ten Days to one that he was in Town, all last Summer.

There is another Thing remains for me yet to speak to, and that is the Intimacy of my Lord Bishop with Mr. Kelly; which was likewise thrown in to swell the Number of Circumstances, and as another weighty Argument to induce your Lordships belief of the foregoing Matters.

But has any thing appeared to your Lordships like it, even upon their own Evidence? First, a Chairman is brought to tell your Lordships that he carry'd Mr. Kelly to the Deanery three or four Times about four Years ago, but the Bishop was not once at home. And a Porter says, he carry'd two Letters from Kelly to the Bishop; one of them about Christmas last was Twelve-month, and the other Letter some time before that; but received no Answer in Writing, nor Message, but only his Service to Mr. Kelly. But there is one extraordinary Circumstance, which shews him, I confess, to be a very willing Evidence, tho' not so very likely and credible; that is, that this Porter, dirty as he must be in the midst of Winter, deliver'd his Message to the Bishop in his Bed-Chamber.

And Malone, the Person that usually attended Mr. Kelly, and went on his Errands, was asked to the same Purpose; and one might have expected that he should have given some Account of it, and had been often employed on Errands to and from the Deanery: But I submit it to your Lordships Memory whether he did not say, that he never was at the Deanery in his Life-time, nor did know to this Day where it stood.

Mrs. Kilborn, with whom Mr. Kelly had lodged a considerable Time, says, she remembers a Message once came to Kelly from the Bishop; but positively denies that my Lord Bishop's Coach ever came to fetch Mr. Kelly at her House, as that Honourable Committee have been pleased to affirm in their Report. And I appeal to your Lordships Memory, whether Mrs. Barnes, whom the Counsel for the Bill think so credible a Witness in some other respects, and with whom it must be confess'd Kelly frequently lodged, was not equally positive in this Matter, and that she did not believe there could be any Friendship or Intercourse between the Bishop and Mr. Kelly without her knowing of it.

Thus the supposed Intimacy and great Acquaintance between my Lord Bishop and Mr. Kelly stand upon their own Evidence. And I beseech your Lordships to consider, what sort or degree of Proof all this can possibly amount to. But we have shown your Lordships the direct contrary, by no less than ten Witnesses, Servants to my Lord Bishop, some or other of which were always with him, whether he was in Town or in the Country, and every one of them has lived with his Lordship above two Years; and they say, as it were with one Voice, that they don't remember any such Person or Name as Kelly or Johnson coming to the House; as they must have remember'd him, they say, if he had been frequent in his Visits or Messages: and some of them say, they usually wrote down the Names of those that did come; and the Coachman in particular, who has liv'd four Years with his Lordship, and appears now as Evidence against the Bishop, and therefore cannot be suppos'd partial to him in his Testimony, is yet as positive and peremptory, that he never saw Mr. Kelly, or Johnson, at his Master's House, in all his Time. And being carry'd to the Tower by a Messenger, to see if he could recollect his Face, then frankly own'd, he had never seen his Face before. And being ask'd how he could pretend to know all Persons that came to the House, whose Business was at the Stables? He told your Lordships, that he was as often in the House, us'd to wait at Table when Company was there; and that let him come which way he would, he should have seen him coming or going, or have heard of him in the Family, if he was a Person that had frequented his Master's House.

Some of the other Servants likewise spoke as fully to these Circumstances.

We have likewise shewn your Lordships by Mr. Pope, who has been for these two or three last Years, the most constant Companion of his Lordship's Hours; two or three Days, he says, almost in every Week, and an Hour or two almost in every of those Days: That his Lordship generally sat in one Room, which I think was his Bed-Chamber; that he was admitted to him at all Hours, and into all Companies, and never found the Discourse change at his coming in: That his Lordship never in the least discover'd any Thoughts or Intentions like those now charged upon him; but had heard occasionally many Things drop from the Bishop, of a Tendency directly contrary. And to this we might have called many others, if it were necessary.

We were likewise ready to lay before your Lordships, several laborious and intricate Searches, several Publick Buildings, and Controversies in Matters of Literature with different Persons, which my Lord Bishop was engaged in last Summer; and would have been a full Employment for some Mens whole Lives: But your Lordships did not think it necessary; being (as we hope) fully satisfied and convinced of my Lord Bishop's Innocency, by that Variety of Proof which we had before made.

There are, my Lords, some other Observations that might be made: but have been, I doubt not, already much better taken notice of by the learned Gentleman that spoke before me: And I think this is the Substance and Purport of the Evidence that has been hitherto offer'd on both Sides.

What the Issue or Success of this long Hearing may be, I know not; That is in your Lordships Pleasure only to determine; to Acquit, or to Condemn: But I hope you will say, We find in him no Fault at all.

The Proof which has been against the Bishop, (if it can deserve that Name) has neither been such as is reasonable in itself, nor agreeable to the known Rules and Proceedings of Law; but chiefly by Probabilities, Circumstances, Conjectures and Suppositions: Whereas we have encounter'd and disprov'd even them, by far greater Probabilities, much stronger Circumstances, and also by such Evidence, as would be convincing and sufficient in any Court of Law or Equity within the Kingdom.

And, upon the whole, I hope I may venture to affirm, That there does not now remain the least Suspicion of the Charge brought against the Bishop; not even a Suspicion of a Suspicion of High-Treason; not one probable Probability, or one presumptive Presumption: I mean, That there is not now remaining before your Lordships, the least Degree of Probability, or the very lowest sort of Presumption that is known in Law: And therefore, shall humbly conclude with the same Prayer Sir Constantine Phipps has made before me, That your Lordships will reject this Bill.

The Bishop then spoke in his own Defence, as follows:

My Lords,

I Have been under a very long and close Confinement, and have been treated with such Severity, and so great Indignity, as I believe no Prisoner in the Tower, of my Age and Function, and Rank, ever was. By which Means, what Strength and Use of my Limbs I had, when I was first committed in August last, is now so far declined, that I am very unfit to make my Defence against a Bill of such an extraordinary Nature.

The great Weakness of Body and Mind under which I labour, such Usage, such Hardships, such Insults, as I have undergone, might have broken a more resolute Spirit and much stronger Constitution than falls to my Share.

Your Lordships were pleased to permit me to appear before the House of Commons, if I thought fit, lest my Silence should be turned to my Disadvantage; as, in fact, the Counsel for the Bill have done their utmost towards it.

I should not have thought to decline any Occasion of justifying myself; but I crave leave to tell your Lordships some Reasons why I did not appear there, and make use of the Leave your Lordships gave me.

After seven Months of close Imprisonment, I was not a little surprized when I heard, that on the 11th of March, by the House of Commons, it was thus resolved, 'That it appears to this House, that Francis Lord Bishop of Rochester, was principally concerned in Forming, Directing, and carrying on a detestable Conspiracy, &c.'

Upon duly weighing which Resolution, and the Copy of the Bill, I found not any thing charged in the Bill, but what was fully contain'd and previously resolved in this Vote; and therefore whatsoever should have been offered on my behalf to that House, would have been an express Contradiction to it. And what Hopes I could have of Success in such an Attempt, I need not say: What they sent me was the Preamble of the Bill only, which they could not alter, consistent with what they had resolved.

The Bill itself was to inflict Pains and Penalties, which followed; but there was no room to object against any of those which they had not then declared; they have since been added, and sent up to your Lordships, in like manner, without any Oath made, or any criminal Act proved against me by any living Witness. And is a Person thus sentenced below, to be deprived of all his Preferments, and his very Function, and to be a perpetual Exile, and to be render'd incapable of any Office and Employment? To be one whom no Man must correspond with by Letters, Messages, or otherwise? And, my Lords, one who is a Bishop of the Church of England, and a Lord of Parliament?

It is the first Instance wherein a Member of this House hath been so treated and prejudged, and (as I have once before said to your Lordships) I pray God it may be the last, and that such Precedents in this Kingdom may not be multiplied in After-Times.

My Counsel have amply done their Part, by arguing the Points of Law, by explaining and enforcing the Evidence, and shewing the little Colour, Appearance and Shadow of Proofs against me, (permit me to call them so) by answering what hath been offer'd against me, and by setting out the Consequence which such a Bill, founded and carry'd on in such a manner, and which enacts such severe Penalties, must and will be attended with.

Yet it becomes me to say something for my self, lest my Silence be construed Consciousness of Guilt, or at least, an Unwillingness to enter into Matters of so dark and perplex'd, so nice and tender a Nature; as if I was not able, or did not care to clear and explain myself, and rather chose to leave it to the Management of others: I thank God, I am under no such Restraint, and can speak to your Lordships on this Subject with great freedom and plainness.

But before I proceed, I beg leave that I may represent to your Lordships some particular Hardships under which I have laboured.

The first is, reading Extracts of anonymous Letters, without suffering any other Parts of the same Letters, tho' relating to the same Subject, to be read. — Another is, — Excusing the Decyphers from answering Questions asked by me, and which I thought necessary for my Defence, lest they should reveal their Art. — The next is, not suffering me to be answered by the Clerks of the Post-Office, lest the Secrets of that Office should be discovered. — Another was, not suffering a Person, who had been at least ten Years out of the Secretary's Office, to answer any Questions, which came to his Knowledge by being some Years in that Office.

Another is, reading Examinations neither dated, signed, nor sworn to.

Another is, reading Letters supposed to be Criminal, writ in another Man's Hand, and supposed to be dictated by me, without offering any Proof that I either dictated them, or was privy to them.

Another is, not allowing me Copies of the Decypher'd Letters, tho' petition'd for, till the Trial was so far advanced, and I so employed and weakened by it, that I had not sufficient time to consider them. — Another is, not allowing me to read out of the Collection of Papers before the House any part of them, in order to discharge myself, but what hath been read by Clerks. — And all this in a Proceeding where the Counsel for the Bill profess they have no legal Evidence, and that they are not to be confined to the Rules of any Court of Law or Equity; tho' as often as it is for their Service, they constantly shelter themselves under it.

My Lords, these are the Hardships which I previously mention, and humbly lay before your Lordships.

By your Lordships Leave, I proceed now to make that Defence, as well as I am able to make it, in the Condition of Health I am now in; humbly praying your Lordships, if I find myself in any degree sinking under it, that you will indulge me, and allow me a little Time to go on.

The general Charge of the Bill is, That I have been deeply concerned in forming, directing, and carrying on a wicked and detestable Conspiracy, and was a principal Actor therein.

The Charge is divided into two Heads:

First, That I traitorously consulted and corresponded with divers Persons to raise an Insurrection, &c. in this Kingdom, to procure foreign Forces to invade it, &c.

Z z z

Secondly,

Secondly, That I traitorously corresponded, with the same Intent, with Persons employed, &c. But neither part of this Charge hath been made good by the Counsel for the Bill, nor have they proved, nor attempted to prove me at one Consultation; nor is there any thing tends towards such a Proof, except the exploded Story of the Burford Club,^a and two or three Hearsay Informations which were mentioned of my Lord Strafford, Lord North and Grey, Lord Orrery, and Sir Henry Goring, said to be concerned in the Management of this Affair. I have met all these Lords, I own it, but at different Times; and upon the best Recollection I can make, I never was in all my Life with any three of them at once, unless perhaps about some general Matters depending in Parliament. The Earl of Strafford hath visited me, and I have, when in Health, dined with him once at his House. At my Lord North's Table I have not eat: Tho' I have great Honour for him, yet I never had any Intimacy with him, especially since the Affair of the Dormitory, wherein he appeared so against me, that I certainly had lost the Cause, had not his Affairs call'd him to Holland.

Lawson had sworn, that this Lord did often visit me at Bromley; but in truth he never was there above twice or thrice in all his life-time.

I have not been once these two Years with Lord Orrery on any Business whatsoever; we twice dined together at the House of a Person, whose Name if I should mention, your Lordships would not think there was any Harm at all in dining there. Sir Henry Goring I never saw in all my Life, till he saw me at St. James's, and he was but once at Bromley; and the Occasion of his coming to me, was his placing four Sons at Westminster-School, and intending to breed up some of them to the Gospel: The last Time I saw Sir Harry Goring, was about twelve Months ago, when I promised to bring down one of his Sons to be upon the Foundation; and I shall be sorry if I can't be as good as my Word.

Your Lordships will excuse me for being so particular, when you consider how dangerous the Charge is, and how fit it is to clear the Persons charged, from such mischievous Correspondence; especially since it is with these, and these only, that I have been speaking of, and it is insinuated that I have held Consultations with, to forward the Conspiracy.

The first is an Intent, and indeed a Conspiracy, without a Consultation. But how hath that too been made good? Your Lordships will observe, that there is not one Overt-Act, or Circumstance of Time or Place mentioned, proved, or alledged. I have not therefore consulted or conspired at Home.

The next, and the only material Part of the Charge is, corresponding abroad with the Pretender, &c.

A high and heinous Accusation, strongly asserted, much insisted upon; but how maintained, is the Question.

The true State of this part of my Charge, as well and as fully as I can recollect, is this, (I will not in any degree dissemble before you:) 1st, That I did the 20th of April, 1722. dictate three Letters to Mr. Dillon, the late Lord Marr, and to the Pretender himself, under the feigned Names of Chivers, Musgrave, and Jackson; to which Letters the Names of Jones, Illington, and 1378, were, by my Direction, subscribed.

Secondly, That afterwards two Letters, in answer to these two sent to Marr and Dillon, one dated May the 11th, and the other July the 25th, under the feigned Names of Molfield and Digby, were intercepted.

Thirdly, That there is certain intercepted Correspondence between the Pretender's Agents abroad and Kelly here, carry'd on by him; and that I was at the Head of it, and am answerable for what it contains.

This is the Substance of my Charge; all other particular Circumstances are made use of, as they thought would give Light and Strength to one or other of those Articles.

As to the first of these Points, that I did dictate these Letters.

That it could not be possible that I dictated these Letters, hath been made out to your Lordships by such a Concurrence of Evidence, so clear, so full and legal, as I persuade myself can have left no Doubt remaining upon any candid and indifferent Person: A plain Matter of Fact, supported by such Testimony, cannot be overthrown by little Guesses and consequential Surmises.

My Lords, I was under the known Difficulty of proving a Negative, which in many Cases is not to be done; but it so happens in this Case, that peculiar Circumstances attend it as to the point of Time. My being disabled in my Chamber, and attended before and after that Time by some of my Servants, and receiving frequent Messages from others: The agreeing Testimony of my Servants, that no Stranger came near me about that Time, and for some Time before and after; and the full Evidence of the School at Westminster, hath enabled my several Servants to recollect the Time, and to furnish such a Proof of my Innocence in this Matter, as is not to be mistaken, and shews the Clearness of the Impossibility of it.

The Clerks of the Post-Office swear, they believe these three Letters to have been in the Hand-writing of Mr. Kelly, my supposed Amanuensis. Your Lordships will remember, that their Oaths were at four Months distance from the Time of seeing those Letters; during the whole Series of which Time, it never hath appeared that they have compared one Original with another, and the only Original, as a Specimen, hath been proved at your Lordships Bar, not to be the Hand-writing of Mr. Kelly: And be pleased to remember, the very Supposition of Mr. Kelly's being my Secretary, or any ways intimate with me, hath been fully sworn to be false.

If it be said, Who then writ those Letters, and with what View were they writ? The Answer to this is obvious: my being here at your Lordships Bar sufficiently explains it. It is enough to prove that I did not write or dictate them, and I have proved it abundantly. Let but any momentous part of the Charge against me be made out with half the Evidence, and I will submit without any Dispute. Eight or nine such Witnesses would have borne down the Evidence of one or two that had sworn: But where there is none on the one Side, but all on the other Side who appear, and that give direct positive Evidence, can your Lordships deliberate a Moment for the Reason of giving your Judgment, which in doubtful Cases ought always to lean to the doubtful Side? And so taking this Point as it stands, there is an End of the whole matter; for all other Insinuations, feigned Names, and obscure Passages in Letters, depending upon this, must fall together.

As to the other Part of the Accusation, where it is said the Letter to Jackson was a Letter to the Pretender, I have nothing to do with it; he that writ the Letter, when known, will best be able, and most concerned, to disprove it.

Since this Objection carries a very odd Sound, I shall briefly shew your Lordships how that stands. Jackson, in a Cypher of Plunket's, is said to denote the Pretender: That Cypher consists of one hundred and fifty Names, of which not one is used in any of the Letters attributed to Mr. Kelly; three or four of these Names are used by Persons supposed to have writ to Mr. Kelly from abroad, but not one of them is used by him; nor doth Jackson ever, in his part of the Correspondence, stand for the Pretender, but he is always under other Appellations: Nay, Plunket himself, in all his Letters writ in decyphered Names, never styles the Pretender Jackson, but either Joseph or Jephson.—Why should a Name, used in Kelly's Correspondence, be explained by Plunket's Cypher, when Kelly appears to be no ways acquainted with him, and Plunket himself did never dictate to him? I forbear Repetition; I only add, that at this Rate, there is nothing that may not be proved.

The Letter to Dubois there is little said of, because there is no use made of it; it is charged in the Report as a Letter which I had received from abroad. The Tables are now turned, and I myself designed to have sent this Letter to a feigned Correspondent, but kept it among my Papers under my Seal: For what End? the Letter itself is an errant Delusion: Why, to furnish Proof, which is much wanted, of my receiving Letters that were directed Jones and Illington; and it is very strange, that I, who am represented as being so very cautious, should be so negligent in this, and preserve something that is of no use, and yet might hurt me so much, when discover'd.

It is absurd to think, that I should by that means mention the Name of my Correspondent, and mention the Name of Johnson, which the Committee of the Lower House observe was constantly with me.

I know not what farther can be said for this Matter, till the Counsel have further explain'd it, and shew'd what Use they make of this Letter, which hath given your Lordships so much Trouble, and which I own I do not comprehend.

Here is still a fifth Letter, which I have acknowledged to be my Hand; that which was taken on my Servant. Mr. Reeves hath made some uncharitable Observations upon it, which, for ought I know, may be allow'd as the Form of Law in the Ordinary Courts; but, I am sure, in a Court of Equity, the most favourable Construction ought to take Place. I have taken Minutes of his Observations, and I think they are these: He observes that the Bishop doth not in his Letter insist on his Innocence in general, but considers only what Evidence doth affect him.

It comes out, at last, for whom my Letter was designed, and I think that an Answer to Mr. Reeves's first Observation, and I shall explain it no further. He observes next, tho' I clear myself from the Knowledge of Laver, Neynoz, &c. there I say nothing of Kelly.

The Gentleman I designed the Letter for, knows it was in answer to one wrote to me about Laver, and will swear it himself, if there was room for it.

The third Observation is, where speaking of myself, I say, 'If I cannot ward the Blow, I must be a Prisoner some Years without Remedy:' from which he is pleas'd to infer, not in that good-natur'd way he generally did, my Meaning must be, that I was conscious of Guilt.

I apprehended an Impeachment would have been lodged and never prosecuted; as in the Case of my Lord Danby and the Earl of Oxford; and then I should have lain without Trial, and without Bread.

The second Article of my Charge, is the two Letters from Marr and Dillon, under the feigned Names of Motfield and Digby, which were intercepted.

One of these they have dropt.

That I received them, is not pretended; both Letters, tho' without a criminal Expression or Word of Business in either of them, would yet have affected me in some Degree, if received by me, and I was the Person as is supposed who writ the Letters to which they are Answers. That I used to have any Correspondence, is that proved? Is not one and the same necessary in order to ascertain the Charge?

Any Man that pleases may write to me, and take those Names upon him; I am not to answer for that, unless I have appeared to receive them, and kept up the Correspondence.

The Letter from Motfield, dated the 11th of May, cannot be reasonably thought to have been wrote with any other View than that of being intercepted, and of fixing upon me the Letter of April 20th.

This Letter is committed to the common Post-Office, and sent upon this Errand; one may doubt who writ it, but one cannot doubt with what Design it was writ: your Lordships Wisdom will see thro' those malicious Disguises, and not make me account for Letters which have been banded to and fro, between unknown Correspondents, on a Design to raise a Suspicion of a third Person, altogether a Stranger to what is writ. And here I desire that the Observation made by one of my Counsel may not be forgot; that is, All the intercepted Letters from abroad, mention Persons that lay hid under secret Names, and are discover'd by doing of such Deeds, and by such Circumstances as will fasten those Names upon them: Tho' the Committee were not at a Guess, yet they were often at a Loss.

In my Case the fictitious Names applied to me are often attended with such Descriptions and Circumstances, as very naturally lead those that offer these Letters to fix them on me. The Writers of them use all their Art not to disguise, but to open the thing, and seem to be in pain lest they should not be well enough understood.

This being contrary to the Method of Reserves in all other Cases, smells strong of a malicious Design.

The Letter of July 25th, from Digby to Weston, is not so well contrived as it should have been; yet I am to be understood by it, because of the Circumstances I was then under, which the Writer was apprised of.

These are the only two Instances of Letters supposed to be writ from abroad: They are not consistent: Shall they affect me in so high a manner?

It remains to be considered in the third place, Whether there was a supported Correspondence between the Pretender and his Agents, and Mr. Kelly here? Whether I was at the Head of it, and am justly to answer for it? Mr. Kelly, I hear, hath owned at your Bar, and declared, which I also declare, I never knew a Line of any Letter he writ to foreign Parts.

I meddle not with what concerns him any further than when it may affect me.

The chief Part is the Present of the Dog; the Account of that is in a Letter to Hatfield, dated May 5. not signed; in which are these Words The little Dog was sent ten Days ago, and ordered to be delivered to you: but there is no Intimation in this, or any other Letter from abroad, that this Present was intended for me.

In two Letters from hence, by whom writ it doth not appear, somebody is meant under the different Names of Mr. Jones and Mr. Illington, in such Manner as designed for the same Person; but the Circumstances are neither applicable to my self nor my Wife, particularly. The Letter dated May 7th, from Hatfield to Musgrave, being five Days after the Burial of my Wife, cannot mean her; and being but five Days after, it can as little mean me: So that the Writer of this Letter must either have known nothing of my Family-Affairs, or, if he did, must dissemble his Knowledge of them to raise a Suspicion; and in either Case what he says is not to be regarded. The Surgeon and Mr. Kelly only knew any thing of this matter, and they can best clear it.

Mrs. Barnes, she varies, and sometimes the Dog is for me, and sometimes for her.

As for myself, I never asked for, received, or saw this Present, nor know any thing of it, but from common Fame; nor have I, to this Day, had any Message or Letter whatsoever concerning it. The End of this Design seems to be, to point me out by the Name of Jones, and Illington, subscribed to the Letters of April 20th, by using them again in relation to this Present.

And perhaps they are not much in the wrong to think, that one intercepted Dog should be of as much use as Ten intercepted Letters. Both Contrivances then must have succeeded, had I not been able to prove that those Letters were not writ with my Order or Knowledge; and therefore the Use of those Names, in subsequent Letters, is a Continuance of the Fraud, and this obviously runs thro' the whole of the Correspondence: For wherever the Names of Jones and Illington are, they are used in applying them to me, because they are the same.

These Points have not only been deny'd, but disprov'd with all Manner of Credence and Clearness.

My Counsel have shew'd, that all these suspicious Correspondencies are to the last Degree absurd to apply to me, and no one would apply them: That I could not order the Letters of the 20th of April, to which the Names of Jones, &c. are subscrib'd, I think is plain, and then the Evidence falls which depends upon it.

As to the Journeys to and from Bromley, where the Prisoner Kelly had frequent Access to me, and therefore I might probably dictate those Letters, the Counsel for the Bill have not open'd themselves on that Head; but your Lordships have heard it made out, and because it is material I shall repeat it.

(Here Wood's Examination was read.)

By all these Accounts, nothing could have been easier for the Persons themselves to manage here, than getting an Account of my Neighbours, in order to render the Contrivance more plausible.

That Mr. Kelly is no Stranger to me I own: but that he is in any Degree intimate with me, or frequently saw me, I deny. And what Evidence is there from them to the contrary; or how is this solemn denial at your Bar contradicted?

The Chairman says, he carry'd him twice or thrice to the Deanery, three or four Years ago; and this Brown, the Chairman, he swears, he carry'd me once in three or four Years Time. I believe he may. The Porter he says, that he brought a Letter and some Stockings from Kelly to me. The Foundation of this Story is true, for Mr. Kelly used to furnish me with Beaver Stockings and Gloves: not but that the Circumstance of the Porter coming up to my Bed-Chamber at that dirty Time of the Year, is very extraordinary; and even this Evidence owns, he was never sent by me to him.

Now on the other Side, there is the Evidence of almost all my Servants, who have, upon Oath, attested, that they do not know either the Name or the Face of Mr. Kelly, which could not possibly be, did he use frequently to resort to me. Such a slight Acquaintance as I had with him, could not be any Temptation to enter into Secrets with him, of such a dangerous Consequence as these are, which the Report insinuates to have pass'd between us: However, Suspicion is not now the Business. They that prove some Things may be allow'd to suppose more; they that prove nothing have no Right to indulge their Suspicions and Conjectures to the Ruin of any Man: Twenty Probabilities, allow'd to be such, are not equal to any one Matter of Fact, well attested; it may strengthen the Fact, but cannot support it. They cannot be Evidence themselves, because one Probability may be set against another.

I use this Distinction between Evidence in Law, and reasonable Evidence, because the Counsel for the Bill have asserted something like it.

I own I always thought the Publick Law of the State, the Publick Reason of the State; and whatever it is in another Country, yet, in this Country, no Evidence can be reasonable that is not legal. But I ask, What sort of Evidence, either in Reason or Law, is brought against me? How am I prov'd to consult and correspond, to raise an Insurrection against his Majesty and his Kingdom, and to procure a foreign Force to invade the same in Favour of the Pretender?

How am I prov'd in the second Place, to have corresponded with the same Pretender, and with Persons employ'd by him? Is one Article of these Charges made out against me with any Colour Colour of Reason? Suppositions without Proof, Suppositions disprov'd, and shewn to be vain, and unjust.

If the Proof in these Cafes wants Strength, can the Hearsay of Neynoe supply the want of Proof, and render it valid, since Neynoe pretends, for ought that appears, not to have known any thing of me? He only heard Kelly say so, and Mr. Kelly denies it; and there is, I think, no Reason why such a dead Evidence should affect me, or Kelly himself, much less me thro' him. Was Neynoe alive, and Kelly dead, and incapable of contradicting what Neynoe said, I believe what Neynoe said would not be of any Weight; besides, what Neynoe dead says, and Kelly now alive denies, ought not to have any Force.

Concerning Hearsay Evidence in general, and concerning the due Regard to it, I humbly desire your Lordships, that a Passage may be read out of Sir John Fenwick's Bill of Attainder. [The whole Preamble read.]

My Lords, I humbly desir'd to have this read, because I thought it would take away a Distinction between Legal and Parliamentary Evidence; that what was not Legal might be Parliamentary. I believe here is a Condemnation of him by Parliament; therefore, I think, the Condemnation of him must be by Parliamentary Evidence. It is recited in this Act, as one of the Inducements that mov'd the King, Lords, and Commons to pass that Act, that Sir John Fenwick had contriv'd and fram'd several Papers, &c. only by Hearsay.

Shall that be accepted in this Parliament for Evidence, which is declar'd the only Motive of attainting a Man in another? If it was judg'd hard in Sir John Fenwick's Case to charge a Man by Hearsay, can the being thus charg'd be any Proof against me? Sure the House of Commons in 96, that brought that in, would have so thought, nor would those of your Lordships consented here, or elsewhere, to have pass'd it.

As for those that did not consent, I will venture to say, I am exceedingly puzzled to know why they did not oppose Sir John Fenwick, but favour'd his Case, and are yet against me. Is the Guilt objected to me, if prov'd, in any Measure like his? Or is there any Comparison between the Proof against him and me?

As to the Paper and Information given in by Neynoe, and printed in the Appendix, it is plain he was drawn in to have sworn backward or forward, to have affirm'd or deny'd any thing. He knew a certain Lord of the Council, that gave me Notice of my being taken up some Days before it happen'd. He knew what Use and Purpose the Protests of your Lordships were chiefly design'd for and calculated; and it appears by his Paper that was taken in his Pocket after his Death, that he had undertaken to give a positive Account, and design'd either to ask or receive such a Sum of Money.

'Tis said he was the late Earl Marisball's Bedfellow for several Months, and had drawn up Heads for Memorials to be delivered to the Regent; but he had kept no Copy of these Heads, or foul Draughts which would have shewn whether they were given in to promote it, or discover it; in either Case the Evidence of being then employ'd, would have been of Service: but they have not been able to produce a Line of such Heads or Memorials, yet the Report of the House of Commons, upon the Basis of these Memorials, builds the whole Fabrick. He knew that I went under the Names of Jones and Illington, and undoubtedly he knew Mr. Dubois: If the Scheme of writing that Letter myself had been seen, he would have found out a Reason for the Correspondence; and 500*l.* would have made him affirm, That he carry'd the Letter himself. He knew the Pretender's particular Opinion of me, or of any Body else, and that he rely'd on Advices from me: How did he know that? He told him so. Who told him? It is not suppos'd Mr. Kelly had it from himself, but from Persons of high Estate, and that were near the Pretender.

Let me speak, my Lords, as always I hope I shall, with that Modesty as becomes Justice, but yet with Freedom, to you.

Hath nothing been open'd to you concerning this Man's Character, and his secret Transactions? Is it possible to believe this Pretender to Secrecy could have had, or shall he still have any Degree of Weight, that threw away his Life, rather than venture to stand to the Truth of what he said before his Death, and then he could have been contradicted, or Pangs of Conscience might have made him unsay what he had said? But a dead Man can retract nothing; what he hath writ, he hath writ: The Accusation must stand just as it did, so far as it concerns him; and we are depriv'd of the Advantage, which Truth and Remorse once extorted, and would have again extorted from him. However, I would have been glad to have had all that ever this Wretch said; and would hope that by comparing of the several Stories, which he several Times told, some Light might have been gain'd, which is now wanted: — Particularly by the Knowledge of what he said freely and voluntarily, when he was in good humour, and before his rough Usage, on his Return from Rome, had frighted him; but I think we have the Evidence only of a few of the last Days of his Life, all the preceding Time is blank. He underwent frequent Examinations, but they were not, it seems so maturely weighed and digested as to be thought worth the committing to writing: but he is gone to his Place, and hath answer'd for what he hath said at another Tribunal. I desire not to disturb his Ashes, farther than what is necessary for my Defence.

Your Lordships will observe first, the Inconsistency of some Part of the Charge. Secondly, the Improbability of it. The Report takes Notice of three several Periods, or Stages of Time, when, by Consequence of some Informations from the Regent, the Design did not take Place: The first was, during the Election; the second was, the King's going to Hanover; and the third was, the breaking up of the Camp. There is not the least Hint as to the last of these three Designs, in any of the Papers; tho' in the Recital of the Bill it is mention'd as the third Part of the Plot, and the most detestable Part of the Design, to lay violent Hands on his Majesty and his Royal Highness.

There is not the least Colour of Proof, as to the first Part of the Conspiracy, which was to take place at the Election; their only Reason for that, is from a Passage, where it is said, that the present Opportunity is elaps'd, that is the Opportunity of the Election.

I shall recite the Passage, as it lies in the intercepted Letter, and make some Reflections on it: Notwithstanding the Opportunity is elaps'd, (says the Writer to Jackson) I agree with you, another may offer before the End of the Year, tho' not perhaps every Way so favourable.

The Committee suppose this Letter to be from Kelly, and dictated by me; and they suppose the Words to refer to the time of the Election, and from those Suppositions infer that I knew something of it. On the contrary, I shall, on the two first Suppositions shew the Impossibility of it; if this was a Letter from me, or from any other Person, dictated by me to the Pretender, I must write as in Answer to some Letter sent from them to me, in repeating the Expression; and his Opinion in the Letter must have been founded on Intelligence before receiv'd: This Intelligence, considering the Distance between London and Rome, must have been communicated two Months, if not longer, before the Date of this Letter, if we go back two Months, and talk of the Election being elaps'd, it was not begun; consequently that Opportunity in the Letter could not possibly mean the Time of the Election; and if so, it is impossible that it should be a Letter to the Pretender, that can consist with the Charge of the Person's writing in April 1720.

If it be a Letter writ in good Earnest, it appears they had given over all Thoughts at that Time: I agree with you, says he, another may offer before the End of the Year: and yet he finds some Words in a Letter writ ten Days after, wherein, under the Name of Jones, I am made to be deeply concern'd in a Conspiracy.

How can this be consistent, if I writ and directed that Letter, and was engag'd in the second Part of the Conspiracy.

Both cannot be true, both may be false? and I hope I have satisfy'd your Lordships, that as I did not dictate the one, so I was no ways concern'd in the other.

Can any one believe, that under the sad Circumstance of being afflicted by the Death of my Wife, I should be concern'd in an Affair of this dangerous Nature? Was that a Time to provide for a Stranger? And for a Man, unless under the Power of Prejudice, to believe such an Improbability, or that I had such a Conjecture? I forbear former Instances.

I shall now consider the Improbability, as well as Inconsistency of the Charge brought against me without positive Proof. You will allow me to answer the Indictment in the same Manner as it is laid.

Is it probable that if I were engag'd in any such Design, no Footsteps should be seen of any Correspondence I had with the late Duke of Ormond, to whom, of all Persons abroad, I was best known, and to whom I had the greatest Regard, and still have all the Regard that is consistent with my Duty to my King and Country?

Is it probable that I would choose rather to engage in such a Design with Mr. Dillon, a Military Man I never saw, and with the Earl of Marr, whom I never convers'd with except when he was Secretary of State?

Did I not know, what all the World thinks, that he had left the Pretender several Years, and had a Pension abroad? Is this a Season for me to enter into Conferences with him about restoring the Pretender; and do this not by Messages but by Letters, not sent by Messengers but by the common Post? That by thus writing to him by the Post, I should advise him after the same manner to write to me, and by these Means furnish Opportunities towards detecting the Persons, and bringing myself into Danger? How doth that consist with the Caution and Secrecy which are said to belong to me? Must not I have been rash to have laid myself open in such a Manner? This is an inconsistent Scheme, the other a bold Assertion. Is it probable, when attending the sick Bed of my Wife, and expecting her Death, not daily but hourly, that I should enter into Negotiations of this kind?

There was no need of dispatching any of those three Letters, merely to excuse my not writing: The Circumstances of my Family had been a sufficient Apology, and more effectual.

Is it probable, that when I was carrying on publick Buildings of various kinds at Westminster, and Bromley, consulting all the Books from the Westminster Foundation, engaging in a Correspondence with learned Men, about settling an Important Point of Divinity; that at that very Time, I should be carrying on a Conspiracy? Those that entertain such Thoughts without Reason, may also condemn me without Argument.

Is it probable that I should meet, and consult, in order to carry on and forward this Correspondence with no Body, and no where?

That I, who always liv'd at home, and except at Dinner-Time, never stir'd out of my Chamber; receiv'd all Persons that visited me, and was deny'd to none, should have an Opportunity to be so engag'd? And if I had, that none of my Domesticks and Friends should ever observe any Appearance of any such Thing? No Evidence among my Papers, tho' they were all seiz'd at both my Houses, and confining all my Servants, but one now, for about 10 or 11 Weeks, searching him twice in the Tower, and searching myself, nothing of Consequence appears, nor is there any one living Witness that charges me with any thing that is really true.

Is it probable, that I should form and direct a Conspiracy, and carry it on with any Success, that am not us'd to Arms, which I am no more acquainted with, than with the Persons employ'd on those Occasions? My way of Life hath not led me to converse with such Men and such Matters, except on the Occasion of meeting in Parliament; but in a Council of War I never was. Have I yet in any Instance of my Life meddled remarkably out of my own Sphere, in Affairs foreign to my Business or Character? I might have been thought to have been too active in my proper Station and Business; but I was never charg'd with War, nor any ways inform'd in the Art of it.

Is it just, that Persons concern'd in the Military Way, should be punish'd without any Proof?

And must I, whose Way of Life is set at the greatest Distance from such Persons, and from the very Suspicion of being concern'd with them, suffer all the Pains and Penalties, short of Death, which the Parliament can inflict, for a suppos'd I know not what, and what I don't to this Day apprehend?

Here

Here is a Plot of a Year or two standing, to subvert the Government with an armed Force, an Invasion from Abroad, an Insurrection at Home; just when ripe for Execution it is discover'd: and 12 Months after the Contrivance of this Scheme, no Consultation appears, no Men corresponding together, no Provision of Money, Arms, or Officers — not a Man in Arms — And yet the poor Bishop has done all this.

*L*ayer and Plunket carry on a Treasonable Correspondence: They go to Rome and receive Directions from the Pretender himself, to promote his Cause — It does no where appear that the Bishop has the least Share in, or is any way privy to their Practices — And yet the Bishop has done all; He is principally concern'd in forming, directing, and carrying on this Detestable Conspiracy.

What could tempt me to step thus out of my Way? Was it Ambition, and a Desire of climbing into a higher Station in the Church? There is not a Man in my Office farther remov'd from this than I am; I have a hundred Times said, and sincerely resolv'd, I would have been nothing more than I was at a Time when I little thought of being any thing before; and I could give an Instance of this Kind if I thought proper.

Was Money my Aim? I always despis'd it, too much perhaps, considering what occasion I am now like to have for it: for out of a poor Bishoprick of 500 l. per Annum, I have laid out no less than Two Thousand Pounds, towards Repairs of the Church and Episcopal Palace; nor did I take one Shilling for Dilapidations. The rest of my little Income has been spent as is necessary, as I am a Bishop. Nor do I repent of those Expences now, (tho' since my long Confinement I have not receiv'd the least Part of the Income in my Deanery) not doubting in the least, but that God who hath liberally provided for me hitherto, will still do it, and on his good Providence I securely rely.

Was I influenc'd by any Dislike of the Establish'd Religion, and secretly inclin'd towards a Church of greater Pomp and Power? I have, my Lords, ever since I knew what Popery was, oppos'd it; and the better I knew it, the more I dislik'd it.

I begun my Study in Divinity, when the Popish Controversy grew hot about that immortal Book of Tillotson's, when he undertook the Defence of the Protestant Cause in general; and as such I esteem'd him above all.

You will pardon me, my Lords, if I mention one thing.

Thirty Years ago, I writ in Defence of Martin Luther, and have preach'd, and writ to that Purpose from my Infancy; and whatever happens to me, I will suffer any thing, and will, by God's Grace, burn at the Stake, rather than depart from any material Point of the Protestant Religion, as profess'd in the Church of England.

Once more: Can I be suppos'd to favour Arbitrary Power? The whole Tenor of my Life hath been otherwise: I was always a Friend of the liberty of the Subject, and to the best of my Power constantly maintain'd it: I may have been thought mistaken in the Measures I took to support it.

It matters not by what Party I was called, for my Actions are uniform.

To return to the Point: The Charge brought against me in the Manner it is brought, is improbable: if I could be guilty of it, I must have acted under a Spirit of Infatuation; yet I have never been thought an Idiot or a Madman.

My Lords, as to the Pains and Penalties contained in this Bill, they are great and grievous, beyond Example in their Nature and Direction.

I am here, my Lords, and have been expecting an immediate Trial. I have, my Lords, declin'd no Impeachment. The Correspondence with the Earl of Clarendon was made Treason, but with me it is only Felony. He was allow'd the Conversation of his Children, by the express Words of the Act: Mine are not so much as to write, so as to be sent to me.

What is most particular in my Case I will repeat distinctly, that my Reverend Brethren may hear it. I am render'd incapable of using or exercising any Office, Function, Authority, or Power Ecclesiastical, not only in his Majesty's Dominions, but any where else. Very hard! That such Spiritual Power as is not deriv'd from Men, but God himself, should be taken from me!

And I am not only deprived of all Offices, Dignities, and Benefices Ecclesiastical, and for ever banish'd the Realm, but likewise precluded from the Benefit of Royal Clemency, and made utterly incapable of any Pardon by his Majesty, his Heirs and Successors.

My Lords, I insist on my Innocence, that I am not guilty; and if I am not prov'd so, your Lordships will thus judge; if otherwise, I persuade myself I shall find some Degree of Mercy.

You will not strip a Man of his Substance, and then send him where he cannot subsist; you will not send him among Strangers, and then hinder others from performing Humanity to him; you will not give him less time to order his Affairs and depart the Kingdom, than the Bill hath taken in passing thro' both Houses.

The Great Man, I last mention'd, carry'd a great Fortune with him into foreign Parts, and had the languages; was well acquainted abroad: The Reverse of all this is my Case; I indeed am like him in nothing but his Innocency, and his Punishment. It is in no Man's Power to make us differ in the one, but it is in your Lordships Power to make us differ widely in the other, and I hope your Lordships will do it.

But to sum up the Arguments: It hath been frequently observ'd, that the higher the Crimes are, the fuller the Proofs ought to be. Here is a Charge of High-Treason brought against me, with no Evidence at all.

My Lords, pardon me, what is not Evidence at Law, can never be made so by any Power on Earth: for the Law that requir'd the Evidence, is as much the Law of the Land, as that which declares the Crime.

It is equally unjust to declare any Proof legal, because of my Prosecution: As extraordinary would it be, to declare the Acts themselves, ex post facto.

Never was there a Charge of so high a Nature, and so weakly prov'd.

A Person dead, so that there is not an Opportunity to falsify him by contradicting him, a Charge not supported by any one Evidence, nor by any one Proof of any Thing that hath been writ or receiv'd by me, nor even by any one criminal Word prov'd to have been spoken by me: but by intercepted Letters and Correspondence, in which appears not the least Certainty.

Some of those letters, shown to Persons, with a Design to fasten something on them; others writ in Cyphers, and fictitious Names, throwing out dark and abstruse Hints of what Persons went by those Names, sometimes true and sometimes doubtful, and often false, who continue all the while strangers to the whole Transaction, and never make the Discovery, till they feel and find it advancing itself towards them: My Lords, this is my Case, in short.

I have a hard Task to prove my Innocency: Shall I stand convicted before your Lordships on such an Evidence as this? The Hearsay of an Hearsay; a Party dead, and that deny'd what he said; by strange and obscure Passages, and fictitious Names in letters, by the Conjecture of Decyphers, without any Opportunity given me of examining and looking into the Decyphering; by the Depositions of Post-Office Clerks about the Similitude of Hands; their Depositions made at distant Times, and without comparing any one of the Originals, by a strange Interpretation of them: for nothing more, I am persuaded, can be made of the Arguments, than what is call'd the intercepted Correspondence.

Shall I, my Lords, be depriv'd of all that is dear to me, and in the Circumstances I am in, scarce able to bear up, and by such an Evidence as would not be admitted in any other Cause or any other Court; and would hardly affect a Jew in the Inquisition of Spain?

And shall it be received against a Bishop of this Church, and a Member of this House? God forbid. Give me leave to make mention of a Text in Holy Writ: Against an Elder receive not an Accusation, but before two or three Witnesses. It is not said, Condemn him not upon an Accusation, &c. but receive it not: I am something more than an Elder; and shall an Accusation against me be countenanced, without any one Instance of Proof to support it?

This is not directly Matter of Ecclesiastical Constitution: There you read, one Witness should not rise up against an Elder; but here, at the Mouth of two Witnesses, or three Witnesses, shall the Matter be establish'd: And as this Rule was translated into the State of the Church, People always thought fit to allow it.

Shall I be the first Bishop in this Church, condemn'd upon Conjecture, on fictitious Names and obscure Passages in letters, instead of two or three Witnesses?

Will not others endeavour to make the same Precedent, and desire the same Influence of it to succeeding Ages; and even concur in such an Act, in order to render me incapable of using or exercising any Power or Authority, &c. Is this good Divinity, or good Policy?

As to the Justice of the Legislature, in some Respects it hath a greater Power than the Sovereign Legislator of the Universe: For he can do nothing unjust. But tho' there are no Limits to be set to a Parliament, yet they are generally thought to restrain themselves, to guide their Proceedings in Criminal Cases, according to the known Law.

The Parliament may order a Criminal to be tortured: Who can say they cannot? But they never did, nor never will, I hope; because Torture, tho' used in other Countries, is not known here.

Is it not torturing, to inflict Pains and Penalties on Persons only suspected of Guilt, not plainly prov'd guilty? It is not much unlike it. The Parliament may, if they please, as well upon Bills of perpetual Imprisonment, as upon Bills of perpetual Exile, reserve to the Crown a Power to determine the one as well as the other. They have reserv'd it in the former Case, but have not reserv'd it here in the other. The Law knows nothing of such absolute perpetual Imprisonments.

The Parliament may, in like manner condemn a Man on a Charge of Accumulated and Constructive Treason. They did so in the Case of the great Lord Strafford, and that by Accumulated and Constructive Proof of such Treason; that is, by Proofs so interpreted, as plainly to communicate Light and Strength to each other, and so to have all the Force without the Formality of Evidence. Was such proof ever admitted by any one to deprive his Fellow-Subject of his Fortune, of his Estate, his Friends, and Country, and send him in his old Age, without Language or Hope, without Employment to get the Necessaries of Life, to starve? I say again, God forbid.

My Ruin is not of that Moment to any Number of Men, to make it worth their while to violate, or even to seem to violate the Constitution in any Degree, which they ought to preserve against any Attempts whatsoever.

But where once such extraordinary Steps as these are taken, and we depart from the fixed Rules and Forms of Justice, to try untrodden paths, no Man knows where this shall stop.

Tho' I am worthy of no regard, tho' whatsoever is done to me may, for that Reason, be look'd upon to be just; yet your Lordships will have some regard to your own lasting Interest, and that of Posterity.

This is a proceeding with which the Constitution is not acquainted; which, under the pretence of supporting it, will at last effectually destroy it.

For God's sake lay aside these extraordinary proceedings; set not up these new and dangerous precedents; I, for my part, will voluntarily and cheerfully go into perpetual Banishment, and please myself that I am, in some measure, the Occasion of putting a Stop to such precedents, and doing some Good to my Country, and will live, where-ever I am, praying for its prosperity; and do, with the Word of Father Paul to the State of Venice, say Esto perpetuo: It is not my departing from it I am concern'd for; let me depart, and let my Country be fix'd upon the immovable Foundation of Law and Justice, and stand for ever.

I have, my Lords, taken up much of your Lordships Time, yet I must beg your Attention a little longer.

Some part of my Charge hath been disproved by direct and full Evidence, particularly that of writing the letters of the 20th of April, or that I knew who wrote them; which I utterly deny that I ever did, or as yet do know. Other parts of the Charge there are, which are not capable of such Disproof, nor indeed require it; there I rest. But my Lords, there is a Way allow'd of vindicating myself, it is generally Negative; that is, by protesting and declaring my Innocence to your Lordships, in the most deliberate, serious, and solemn Manner; and appealing to God, the Searcher of Hearts, as to the Truth of what I say, as I do it in what follows. I am charg'd in the the Report with directing a Correspondence to Mr. Kelly; but I solemnly deny that I ever, directly or indirectly, saw a single Line of any of their Letters, till I met with them in Print. Nor was the Contents of any of them communicated to me. I do in the next place deny, that I was ever privy to any Memorial to be drawn up to be deliver'd to the Regent. Nor was I ever acquainted with any Attempt to be made on the King's going to Hanover, or at the Time of the Election. Nor did I hear the least Rumour of a Plot to take place after the breaking up of the Camp, till some Time after Mr. Layer's Commitment. I do with the same Solemnity declare, that I never collected, remitted, receiv'd, or ask'd any Money of any Man, to facilitate these Designs; nor was I ever acquainted with, or had any Remittances whatsoever, from any of those Persons. I never drew any Declaration, Minutes, or Paper in the Name of the Pretender, as is expressly charg'd upon me. And I never knew of any Commission issu'd, Preparation of Arms, Officers, or Soldiers, or the Methods taken to procure any, in order to raise an Insurrection in these Kingdoms. All this I declare to be true, and will so declare to the last Gasp of my Breath.

And I am sure, the further your Lordships examine into this Affair, the more you will be convinc'd of my Innocency. These contain all the Capital Articles of which I am accused, in the Report of the House of Commons.

Had the Charge been as fully prov'd as ascertain'd, it had been vain to make Proteftations of my Innocency, tho' never so solemn.

But as the Charge is only supported by the slightest Probabilities, and which cannot be disprov'd in any Instance, without proving a Negative, allow the solemn Affeuerations of a Man in behalf of his own Innocence to have their due Weight, and I ask no more, than that they may have as much Influence with your Lordships as they have Truth.

If on any Account there shall still be thought by your Lordships to be any seeming Strength in the Proofs against me: If by your Lordships Judgments, springing from unknown Motives, I shall be thought to be guilty; if for any Reasons, or Necessity of State, of the Wisdom and Justice of which I am no competent Judge; if your Lordships shall proceed to pass this Bill against me, God's Will be done: Naked came I out of my Mother's Womb, and Naked shall I return; and whether he gives or takes away, blessed be the Name of the Lord.

May 13. was appointed for the Reply of the Counsel for the Bill, who were Mr. Reeve, and Mr. Wearg, Mr. Reeve spake as follows.

May it please your Lordships,

TO permit me to offer something, by way of Reply to the Arguments that have been made use of, and the Evidence that hath been given, in Behalf of the Bishop of Rocheſter.

My Lords, I shall not trouble your Lordships with entering far into the Arguments so much insisted on by the other Side, concerning the Power of the Parliament to pass Bills of Attainder.

They have been spoken of by the Counsel of the other Side, as inconsistent with our Constitution; Bills of Pains and Penalties, and Bills of Attainder, have been treated by them as unknown to our Constitution, unless in a few Instances, which afterwards have been condemned.

And yet they have mentioned the Case of Sir John Fenwick, which is a Precedent of a Person attainted without legal Evidence, tho' he were forth-coming and amefnable to Justice, and his Attainder remains still unreversed. And as to Bills of Pains and Penalties, they should, before they inveigh'd so much against them, have consider'd, that two such Bills have now already pass'd your Lordships House; and the Bills against Counter, Bernardi, and others, and against the late South-Sea Directors, are Precedents of Bills of this Kind.

They have mention'd many Instances, where Persons have been prosecuted according to the known Rules of Law, and the Parliament did not think fit to interpose. And doubtless, my Lords, generally speaking, where Evidence is to be had and to be produced, and the Persons are forth-coming, it is right to proceed according to the known Rules of Law, in the ordinary Courts of Justice.

But where Conspirators are carrying on their Designs with Art, and contriving to shelter themselves from those known Rules of Law; we apprehend, my Lords, the ordinary Prosecutions at Law will be no Argument against the Legislature's making use of their Authority, when the Circumstances of the Case, the Preservation of the publick Peace, and the Safety of the Constitution require it.

But I beg leave to mention one Instance, in which they are mistaken: They have said, that in the Case of the Regicides (that horrid and detestable Treason!) they were all prosecuted according to the ordinary Course of Law! but if they had look'd into the Acts of Parliament, they would have found, that some of them were punish'd by Bills of Pains and Penalties. The Lord Monſon and others, who sat as Judges in the pretended High Court of Justice, were reserv'd by two Acts of Parliament that pass'd, to have Pains and Penalties inflict'd upon them; and tho' there was Evidence in that Case to have attainted them according to the ordinary Course of Law, the Parliament did proceed to punish them by Pains and Penalties, and they were not try'd according to the ordinary Course of Law.

This I beg leave to observe to your Lordships, in relation to the Power and Usage of Parliaments, in passing Bills of this Kind.

My Lords, in the next place I beg leave to take Notice, that the Observations that have been made, and the Evidence that hath been given by them, as to Facts mention'd in the Report and Appendix, concerning which we have given no Evidence at all, ought to be laid out of this Case, as foreign to the Matter before your Lordships. The Matters we have given in Evidence, it was proper for them to answer; but they have gone into the Report and Appendix, in order to disprove Facts mention'd there; tho' we gave no Evidence concerning them; and we humbly apprehend, it is not necessary for us to follow them as to those Facts; for if we maintain the Charge we have given, it doth not concern us to make good every Article in the Report and Appendix, relating to this Reverend Prelate now before your Lordships.

My Lords, we must admit the Evidence produced to charge the Reverend Prelate at your

Lordships

Lordships Bar, is not all of it Evidence strictly legal against him, if he was to be try'd according to the ordinary Course of Justice in Westminster-Hall. But, my Lords, we humbly apprehend you are not tied to the Rules of Westminster-Hall; for if your Lordships are satisfied that the Facts proved, laying them all together, do conclude the Reverend Prelate at the Bar guilty, notwithstanding they do not amount to Evidence according to the ordinary Rules of Westminster-Hall, your Lordships will be of Opinion, that it is fit he should be punish'd.

My Lords, the Evidence that hath been given by us, as to Facts committed by the Bishop of Rocheſter, hath been chiefly from three Letters, dated the 20th of April, 1722; each of these was written in the Hand of Mr. Kelly, and dictated by my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter.

My Lords, these Letters are writ, some Part in Cyphers, and some Part not; they are sign'd by the Names of T. Jones, T. Illington, and the Figures 1378. My Lords, if these three Letters are proved, to your Lordships Satisfaction, to be the Letters of my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter, we humbly apprehend they do prove all the Allegations in the Bill, which my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter hath been pleased to call upon us to shew that he hath been guilty of. They do contain, as we say, and as plainly appears from the Letters themselves, Matters relating to consulting and conspiring to invite a foreign Force into this Kingdom for an Invasion, and to promote an Insurrection. And if the Name of Jackson is the Name by which the Pretender is signified, that Letter will prove the other Part of the Bill, that the Bishop of Rocheſter hath held Correspondence with the Pretender himself.

My Lords, I beg leave to observe upon the Word Jackson: It hath been insisted upon, that tho' it is contain'd in Plunket's Cypher, yet Jackson may signify in Mr. Plunket's Cypher one thing, and in these Letters another; and these Letters are contrived in Figures, and not those Cant Words and Names, as in Mr. Plunket's; but so far they go, to admit that in Plunket's Cypher the Name of Jackson stands for the Pretender.

My Lord Bishop of Rocheſter was pleased to observe, that in all the Correspondence between Mr. Kelly and the Persons with whom he corresponded abroad, there is no Name contain'd in Mr. Plunket's Cypher, which Kelly hath made use of in any of his Letters, but this.

My Lords, it appears to your Lordships, that in the Correspondence between Mr. Kelly and the Persons abroad, several other Names, mention'd in Plunket's Cypher, have been used: and it is not material, whether these Names are contain'd in the Letters writ by Kelly himself, or in those of his Correspondents writing to him. When his Correspondents write to him, in answer to his Letters, they use several other of the Names which are contain'd in Plunket's Cypher; which, my Lords, we humbly apprehend is the same Thing as to this Purpose, as if they were used in Mr. Kelly's Letters; for he must be presumed to know the Meaning of those fictitious Names, when they are contain'd in Letters that come in answer to Letters from him, in the Correspondence which he carries on; and we humbly apprehend, my Lords, that is as strong an Evidence, as if they had been contain'd in the Letters writ by Kelly himself. Therefore, my Lords,

I beg leave to take Notice of several Names that are in Mr. Plunket's Cypher, and used by Mr. Kelly's Correspondents, in their Letters to him.

There is the Name of Xoland, which stands for Wogan; the Name of Lane, which stands for Lord Marr; the Name of Cane, which stands for Dillon; and the Name of Howell, for Glascock. My Lords, all these Names are in Mr. Plunket's Cypher, and made use of in the Letters that pass'd between Mr. Kelly and his Correspondents.

My Lords, I shall beg leave to submit it to your Lordships, when, among Persons concerned in carrying on the same Conspiracy, Cyphers are made use of, and in the Cyphers of some of the Conspirators, the Names comprized in Letters writ by others of the Conspirators are contain'd, whether it is not a reasonable Evidence, that those fictitious Names contain'd in the Cyphers of one of the Conspirators, and made use of in the Letters of the other, signify the same Persons; unless there is something to distinguish the Case, and shew that the same Names are made use of to denote several Persons.

My Lords, we humbly submit it to your Lordships, that it is plain from the Evidence we have given, that these three Letters are writ by the same Hand; and by the Circumstances in the Letters, they appear to be dictated by one and the very same Person. Therefore, my Lords, the Enquiry will be, who is the Person described by the Names of T. Jones, T. Illington, and the Figures 1378: for if we have proved the Bishop of Rocheſter to be denoted in this Correspondence by the Names of Jones and Illington, and that these Letters were written by Kelly, and dictated by Jones and Illington, then the Bishop of Rocheſter is the Person by whom these Letters were dictated.

This will appear to your Lordships from other Facts contained in Letters intercepted in this Correspondence; Facts that, all of them together, can relate to no Person but the Bishop of Rocheſter.

The Circumstances of the Bishop and his Family, are exactly described in the three Letters of the 20th of April; and those Circumstances plainly shew, that all the three Letters were dictated by the same Person, and that the Figures 1378 denote the same Person that Jones and Illington do.

My Lords, there are several other Facts contain'd in the intercepted Letters, that denote Jones and Illington to be the Bishop of Rocheſter. One of them is, the Fact relating to a Dog sent over to Mr. Kelly, which appears, by the Evidence given, to have been design'd for the Bishop of Rocheſter: Therefore in the Letter mark'd E. 32. (that is, a Letter to Mr. Kelly by the Name of Hatfield, and directed to Mr. Hatfield, under Mr. Anthony Saunders's Cover, which is one of the Persons describ'd in the List of Directions taken in Kelly's Pocket-Book) the Letter mentions the little Dog was sent ten Days ago, and order'd to be deliver'd to you, &c.—My Lords, afterwards Mr. Kelly by a Letter dated the 30th of April, 1722, E. 35. (it is a Letter from J. H. one of Mr. Kelly's Names to Howell, and which have been proved to be Mr. Kelly's Hand-writing) says, I received the Present sent by the young Lady, but in such a bad Condition, that I am afraid he never will do well; for he had a Leg broken in his Journey, which is still very very bad with him; however, I will take all the Care imaginable of him, and inform Mr. Jones soon of it, to whom, I know, any thing from that Quarter will be very acceptable.

My Lords, it appears by this Letter of Mr. Kelly's, that this Dog, that is there mention'd, was not a Dog for Mr. Kelly himself, but for Mr. Jones; a Dog for a Person denoted and understood by the fictitious Name of Jones: So that if the Evidence that hath been given of this Dog being design'd for the Bishop of Rochester, is true; then it follows that Mr. Jones, mention'd in this Letter of Kelly's, denotes the Bishop of Rochester.

There is another Letter relating to this Dog, E. 42: there is mention'd the Concern Mrs. Illington was in for poor Harlequin; Mrs. Illington is in great Tribulation for poor Harlequin, who is in a bad Way, having slipped his Leg again before it was thoroughly well, however his Obligations to the Lady are as great as if he had come safe, which he desires you to let her know.

My Lords, this shews that Jones and Illington are the same Persons. It appears by the former letter, that the Present was for Mr. Jones, and he should soon know of it; this letter says, that Mrs. Illington is in great Tribulation, &c. However his Obligations to the lady are as great, &c. Tho' in the first Part of the letter it is Mrs. Illington, in the latter Part it is HIS Obligations to the Lady are as great as if he had come safe, which HE desires you to let her know. That shews, that the Person in the former letter, described by the Name of Jones, is in this letter described by Illington, and consequently Jones and Illington are the same Person.

My Lords, the next Circumstance observable in these letters, the intercepted Correspondence between Mr. Kelly and his Friends abroad, is the letter dated the 30th of April 1722, E. 35. which says, Mrs. Jones died last Week, and when the Days of Mourning are over, he will, I hope, be fit for Business.

My Lords, it hath been given in Evidence, that the Bishop's Lady, his own Witnesses as well as ours, have given an Account, that the Bishop's Lady died the 26th of April: This letter is dated the 30th of the same April, consequently this suits exactly with the Bishop's Circumstances as to his Lady being dead.

My Lords, that Jones and Illington are the same, appears likewise by the Answer given to this letter, dated the 20th of May, 1722, E. 43. which says, Mrs. Chivers gives you her kind Service, and prays you will condole in his Name on the Death of Mrs. Illington. My Lords, this letter is in answer to that of the 30th of April, for it begins, Yours of the 30th of April, which should have come by last Post, is come to hand; and this letter condoles on the Death of Mrs. Illington, whereas the letter of the 30th of April gave an Account that Mrs. Jones was dead. So that Jones and Illington appear by these letters to denote the same Person.

My Lords, these are letters writ by Correspondents, concern'd, one with another, in carrying on this Conspiracy. It hath been objected, on the behalf of my Lord Bishop of Rochester, that he is not concern'd in writing of these letters, nor did any of them come to his Hands, nor were they writ by his Directions, but that they passed between Mr. Kelly and his Correspondents abroad.

Your Lordships, we hope, will be of Opinion, in a Correspondence of this Nature, (unless they shew something to induce your Lordships to believe, that there hath been a malicious Design in the Parties between whom these letters pass'd, to denote the Bishop of Rochester, in order to charge him) that these are Facts, which amount to a certain Proof who the Person is, that used to go by the Names of Jones and Illington.

Your Lordships observe how the Matter stands: Mr. Jones and Illington is a Person described, by the Letters of the 20th of April, to be in great Pain himself, to be in melancholy Circumstances in other Respects: He appears by the Evidence at that Time to have been ill of the Gout, his lady appears to have been ill, and dying; Mrs. Jones and Mr. Illington is a Person to whom a Dog was sent, and it appears by the Evidence, that this Dog was design'd for the Bishop of Rochester. Mrs. Jones, in one letter 'tis said, died last Week; and in another letter they condole the Death of Mrs. Illington: and it appears the Bishop's Lady died the Week before the 30th of April.

My Lords, there are other Circumstances, which I should mention, in relation to the Times when the Bishop was in London, and when in the Country; which, we apprehend, is an additional Proof who was meant by the Names of Jones and Illington. Therefore in Letter E. 41. a. Kelly says, Mr. Illington is now in Town, and presents his kind Service to you; he is glad to hear you received his Letters by Crow, and wishes his next may be more to your Satisfaction.

This letter is dated the 7th of May; there it is said, Mr. Jones is now in Town: It appears, by the Examination of Wood the Coachman, that on the 7th of May my Lord Bishop of Rochester was in Town.

There is another letter dated the 7th of May 1722, directed to Musgrave, E. 42. which I beg leave to make some Observations on. There it is said, I had the Favour of yours, which I communicated to Mr. Jones, who is come to Town only for a Day.

My Lords, this letter shews, that the Person denoted by the Name of Jones was come to Town. But they object, that this letter cannot be apply'd to denote the Bishop of Rochester, because it appears by the Deposition of Wood, that the Bishop of Rochester staid in Town till the 10th of May; so consequently he did not come to Town only for a Day, and consequently can't be the Person meant in that letter.

My Lords, as to that it appears, that the Fact concerning Mr. Jones, applying it to the Bishop of Rochester, of his being come to Town, is true; as to the Bishop's being come to Town only for a Day, that is not Matter of Fact, but of the Apprehension of the Writer: He apprehended he was only come to Town for a Day, but he might be mistaken in that; but the Fact of his being come to Town is true, the Apprehension of the Writer that he came only for a Day, is false. But we must submit it to your Lordships; the Apprehension of the Writer is not sufficient to avoid the Truth of the Fact contain'd in that letter, when we have proved that my Lord Bishop of Rochester was in Town on the Day when Mr. Jones is mention'd to have been in Town in that letter.

Another letter dated Thursday the 10th of May 1722, E. 44. says, Illington is gone to the Country;

Country, and sent me Word he would be in Town on Tuesday Night, when he hath desired to see me at a particular Hour, by which I conclude it may be about Business; and the Tuesday following that Thursday happen'd to be the 15th of May. Another letter E. 45. dated the 14th of May, 1722, says, Mr. Jones is still in the Country, but he hath sent me Word he will be in Town to-morrow. My Lords, upon the Examination of the Coachman Wood, it doth appear, that the Bishop of Rochester was out of Town the 10th of May, out of Town the 14th of May, but that he came to Town the 15th of May, which is the Day mention'd in those letters that he had promised to come to Town: So that here are additional Circumstances, all agreeing to prove that the Bishop of Rochester was denoted by the Names of Jones and Illington. My Lords, we must submit it, that this is not probable conjectural Evidence only, as has been objected.

These letters contain Facts, and the Consequence from them is, that Jones and Illington is the Bishop of Rochester, in whom all these Facts agree. It is almost morally impossible, that all these Facts should agree in the Case of any other Person, as they do in the Case of the Bishop of Rochester.

It has been argued, as to the letters of the 20th of April; Was he the only Person that was in Pain and melancholy Circumstances at that Time? A great many might be so. They go thro' the Particulars of his being in Town and in the Country; a great many Persons might be in Town and in the Country on those Days besides him. It is true, it might be so. Was there no body whose lady died the Week before the 30th of April, but the Bishop of Rochester? Certainly, there are a great many to whom that Circumstance may be applied. But, my Lords, taking the Circumstances together, they cannot all of them concur in the Case of any other Person, as they do in the Case of my Lord Bishop of Rochester.

It may not be improper here to take Notice of some other of the intercepted letters, that have been given in Evidence to your Lordships, which mention the Names of Jones and Illington.

In Mr. Kelly's letters, giving an Account of his being taken up, and his Examination before the Council, he takes Notice of his being examined concerning the Persons that were meant by several fictitious Names, and, among the rest, Jones and Illington, who, he says, are chiefly struck at. This is to give an Intimation to his Correspondents abroad, that there had been a Discovery, that the fictitious Names, concerning which he had been examined, were made use of in their Correspondence.

My Lords, he comes afterwards and writes a letter, after such Time as he was bail'd (he was taken the 19th of May, and bail'd the 7th of June) wherein he says, it is absolutely necessary now, that there should be a new Book of Accounts; says he, they must use no more their present Book of Accounts, since those, who have got Part, may have got the Whole.

My Lords, we humbly submit it, that he having given an Account of his being examined concerning those several fictitious Names, after when he comes and says it is absolutely necessary to have a new Book of Accounts, it is a plain owning of Kelly by this letter, that the Names enquired after were the Names made use of in the Correspondence, and therefore he says, it is necessary to have a new Book of Accounts; that is, other Cyphers and fictitious Names, by which to carry on their Correspondence: He owns they have got Part, and fears they may have got the Whole.

From that Time the Names of Jones and Illington are no more met with in the Correspondence that follows. We have gone no farther in our Evidence to fix any other Names to mean the Bishop of Rochester, but only the Names of Jones and Illington. But there are other Names, which, in the Letters that follow, probably are design'd to mean the Bishop of Rochester; but they will be out of the Case, because we have given no Evidence concerning them: and the plain Reason why Jones and Illington are not made use of any longer, is, because it appears on the Examination of Mr. Kelly, that those Names were mentioned: therefore they were afraid, by making use of those Names, the Correspondence might be discover'd, and it might prejudice the Persons who went by those fictitious Names.

My Lords, this is the Substance of the letters, writ to and from Mr. Kelly and his Correspondents, concerning the Person that goes by the Names of Jones and Illington.

Tho' my Lord Bishop of Rochester insists, that he is not proved to be the Person concern'd in writing these letters, and that he had no Notice of them, and therefore they ought not to be look'd upon as Evidence against him; my Lords, we submit it to your Lordships, in a Correspondence of this Nature, when we pursue Facts and Circumstances that are stated and arise from the intercepted letters, which when they come to be apply'd together, are a plain Indication of the Person that is meant by them; when these Circumstances and Facts can fit none but the Bishop of Rochester; we hope, tho' it is not legal Evidence in Westminster-Hall, yet it is satisfactory Evidence to induce your Lordships to believe and be convinced, that no Person can be denoted by these Names but the Bishop of Rochester.

My Lords, this is a Matter that the Bishop of Rochester could not, with all his Care, be aware of; he takes Care that the letters of the 20th of April are in Cyphers, and not writ with his own Hand; fictitious Names are made use of, and he thinks he shall be sheltered by this Means from being found out to be the Person. The other Facts could not be supposed would come out to explain the Person.

But, my Lords, very often there is a Providence in detecting Things of this Nature; and where the greatest Caution and Care is used, Circumstances (that human Prudence could not guard against) are so strong and convincing, that they discover such secret Correspondence, and plainly prove who is the Person carrying it on.

Some Texts of Scripture have been cited on the other Side, my Lords, I beg leave to use one on this Occasion; and that is, Curse not the King, no not in thy Thought, for a Bird of the Air shall carry the Voice, and that which hath Wings shall tell the Matter.

In these treasonable Conspiracies and Correspondences against the King and Government, (notwithstanding they are carried on so secretly, that that the Conspirators think nothing can discover them) there happen sometimes, thro' Providence, such Circumstances which the Persons cannot be aware of, that bring those things of Darknes to Light: and we hope this may be an Example, that may deter any Person from going in the most secret and concealed Way to engage in any thing of this Nature.

My Lords, there is a Matter I shall beg leave to mention to your Lordships, because my Lord Bishop hath insinuated as if I made hard and harsh Application of the letter taken upon his Servant. My Lords, he says that the Construction I put upon that letter was not a natural but an ill-natur'd Explication. The letter mentions an Impeachment, and says the Bishop in the letter, if the Impeachment cannot be stopt, I am Prisoner for some Years without Remedy.

My Lords, I did observe to your Lordships on that Expression in the letter, that it seem'd to import a Sense of my Lord Bishop's Guilt, because he said he was unavoidably a Prisoner for some Years. My Lord Bishop says, this is by no means a natural, but a forc'd and ill-natur'd Explication; for in that place he meant no more than, if an Impeachment were lodged, it would not be prosecuted, but made use of only that he might be detained a Prisoner for some Years.

My Lords, I must submit to your Lordships, which is the most genuine and natural Interpretation, that which I put upon the Words, or that which my Lord Bishop of Rochester doth; which so highly reflects on the Honour and Justice of your Lordships and the House of Commons.

My Lords, I shall beg leave in the next place to take notice of the Evidence that hath been given on the behalf of my Lord Bishop of Rochester, and to consider, whether that is sufficient Evidence to satisfy your Lordships of his Innocence.

My Lords, we did read the Examination of Mr. Neynoe, one of his Examinations, and the last that was taken; they on the other Side called for three other Examinations, of which the last Examination, which we read, was an Abstract; they read them all, and, my Lords, the Examination which we read, was consistent with three other Examinations, with relation to my Lord Bishop of Rochester: and I must own that the Charge, in the Examination of Neynoe, upon my Lord Bishop of Rochester, is only Hearsay from Kelly; that Mr. Kelly did tell Neynoe, that the Bishop of Rochester held Correspondence with the Pretender and his Agents; and that he was employed by the Bishop in writing for him, and carrying on the said Correspondences: So far, my Lords, it is Hearsay, what Mr. Kelly told Neynoe. Now, as to Mr. Kelly himself, it did affect him, by charging that he had confess'd to Neynoe, that he did carry on such a Correspondence: but as to my Lord Bishop, it cannot affect him but as Hearsay; and we must agree that if there was nothing else in the Case but this, all the Arguments made use of against such Evidence would be of great Weight.

My Lords, I can't say that this Charge from Neynoe's Examination is of Weight to charge the Bishop of Rochester, so as to condemn him. My Lords, they have urged that if this Charge is not to be believed, all comes to nothing: This, say they, is the Foundation, and if Neynoe's Examination is not sufficient to affect the Bishop of Rochester, then all the subsequent Evidence falls to the Ground.

My Lords, I beg leave to observe first, that if we had not Neynoe's Examination, the Proof against my Lord Bishop of Rochester is as strong without it as with it; it is certainly Evidence of the Conspiracy in general, but as to the Bishop it is only a Circumstance, to shew that another Man had said of the Bishop of Rochester, that he was carrying on a Correspondence with the Pretender, &c.

But, my Lords, taking the Examination of Neynoe out of the Case, and considering the other Facts mention'd and prov'd to your Lordships, there is no Occasion of Neynoe's Examination; whether Neynoe's Examination be false or true, is not material: There is sufficient to prove the Bishop of Rochester guilty, for they can't destroy the other Facts and Circumstances; and as long as they subsist, they prove the Bishop of Rochester to be the Person concerned in carrying on this Correspondence.

My Lords, I beg leave to observe in Neynoe's Examination, there is something more than Hearsay, there is a Fact in it, and we are able to support that Fact by other Evidence. Neynoe says, that he hath gone several Times with Kelly to the Bishop of Rochester's, and hath staid a considerable Time for him. My Lords, we shall prove by another Witness, that Neynoe about that Time came several Times to a House, where he said he waited for a Friend of his that was gone to the Bishop of Rochester's, and he staid and waited for him three or four Times, for an Hour, and an Hour and an half together. This will confirm what Neynoe said in that respect to be true.

They say there are several Improbabilities contained in Neynoe's Examination, and Inconsistencies; as to the Improbabilities, some of them are mentioned as if there was great Weight in them. That so much insisted on by my Lord Bishop himself, is, that Neynoe says, he was employed to write Memorials, and the last he wrote was in December, and that was to desire the Regent of France to furnish a Body of 5000 Men, to come and invade these Kingdoms: The Observation made by the Bishop of Rochester is, Where are these Memorials? Why did he not keep Copies of them? For he was at that Time concerned in a Design to serve himself one way or other; if he designed to betray those Persons he corresponded with, it would have been of Service to have kept those Memorials, to have delivered them to the Government: If, on the other side, he had kept to his Friends, it would have been proper to have kept them, in order to create a Confidence in him, and to shew the Part he had in the Conspiracy. These Observations can have no Weight, when your Lordships come to consider this was in December, and there was never any Application by him to make any Discovery of this Conspiracy till July following. As to the Service it might be to keep them with respect to his Party, my Lords, we humbly apprehend that, considering him as a Man engaged in a Correspondence of this kind, a Memorial of this Nature drawn up by him can be of no Use, but to detect himself and injure his Party, if he happens to be taken up, and such a Memorial found upon him; therefore it was necessary to destroy it.

My Lords, there is another thing mentioned with relation to Watson, and the Improbability of his being the Earl Mareschal; but Neynoe does not say that he was the Earl Mareschal, but says, there was one Henry Watson, which he took to be a fictitious Name, and does not know who he really was, but he took him to be the Earl Mareschal, and he gave him the Heads to draw up these Memorials.

My Lords, we apprehend it is not material, who Watson was; he is a Person that employed Neynoe to write these Memorials, and he might be the Earl Mareschal: Neynoe says he took him to be so. Say they, if it was the Earl Mareschal, why should he lie several Nights with Neynoe? this, say they, is very improbable. If it was him, he was to conceal himself, and take the fittest Place for that Purpose; therefore conversing with Neynoe, and not owning himself who he was, is not improbable. It is probable he would not discover himself to every Person; and tho' Neynoe was a Person engaged in the Conspiracy, if Neynoe did not know him to be the Earl Mareschal, it might not be proper for him to discover himself to Neynoe.

My Lords, I think these are the principal Things objected; there are some other little Matters, but I think dwelling on such Objections as these, is but mispending your Lordships Time.

My Lords, that which we humbly insist upon is, Whether Neynoe's Examination is an Examination to be credited or not credited? We agree it is only Hearsay, as to the Bishop of Rocheſter, and if we had not other Matter, it would not be sufficient; so that we humbly apprehend it's being true or false won't affect this Case. If your Lordships are of Opinion 'tis false, there is sufficient Evidence against the Bishop of Rocheſter without it.

My Lords, in the next Place they have produced in Evidence several Persons that come and give your Lordships an Account of Neynoe's Confessions to them. There is one Mr. Bingley, Mr. Steward and Mr. Skeene, and two other Persons, that give an Account of what Mr. Skeene and Steward had told them Neynoe had said.

Bingley by his Evidence would have it believed, that Neynoe had told him, he was employed by some Person in Power, to fix several things upon several Persons that they were innocent of; that he had said several things that were false, and had imposed upon a great Man he had made Application to, and had got great Sums of Money out of him.

My Lords, I don't know how far they would carry this; for by what hath been insisted upon by my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter, and his Counsel, it should seem as if they were labouring to shew from these Persons, that they have call'd to be examin'd, that all the letters relating to this Correspondence, the letters of the 20th of April, and subsequent letters, that relate to the particular Facts, that denote Jones and Illington to be my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter, were contrived between Neynoe and some other Persons, in order to charge my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter with being concern'd in this Conspiracy. This seems to be what they are labouring at by this Evidence.

My Lords, as to Neynoe's being a Person employ'd in writing these letters of the 20th of April, or any subsequent letters, in manner as is suggested, we shall shew your Lordships that it's impossible to be true; we shall shew that the letters of the 20th of April, and all the other letters that mention the Facts which denote the Bishop of Rocheſter, were all intercepted and in the Hands of the Government, before such Time as it was known among the Ministry that there was such a Person as Neynoe: for Neynoe made Application to the honourable Person mentioned by their Witnesses, subsequent to all this Correspondence, when these letters were in the Hands of the Government, as a Person that could make Discoveries to the Government. Therefore that Insinuation must vanish, that Neynoe was employ'd to forge letters, which contain Facts under the Names of Jones and Illington, to charge the Bishop of Rocheſter; and that even those letters of the 20th of April were forged by him.

My Lords, we shall go into the Character of Mr. Bingley, who hath, at your Lordships Bar, owned, that he hath been whipt, pilloried, and imprisoned: and as he hath taken his Degrees, as he owned at your Lordships Bar, consequently he hath taken the Oaths.

As to the Character of Mr. Skeene, he hath likewise been produced as a Witness, and he carries his Evidence farther than the Evidence of Mr. Bingley; for whereas Mr. Bingley says, that Neynoe confessed he had imposed upon that Honourable Person, and had mentioned things that were false, yet he could not say that after the Time of his Examinations, after Neynoe was brought from Dover to Town, he had confess'd to him that what he had said on those Examinations was false: But Skeene says, that after his Examinations he own'd that they were false. The last Examination was the 27th of September, and he was drown'd that Night; but as to the Examinations before the 27th of September, and out of which that is collected, Mr. Skeene says, Neynoe said to him, that they were false.

My Lords, as to Mr. Skeene, we shall shew what sort of a Man he is, a Man attainted of High-Treason; and tho' he is pardoned, as to his having his life and liberty given him, he is in all respects an attainted Person: He was tried and condemned in the County of Surry, for being concerned in the Preston Rebellion, and consequently a Man of no Credit. And as to what he and Steward swear, relating to a Conversation with Neynoe, when in Custody, we shall shew they never were together after the first Night, when they supp'd together. He was asked, whether it was the first Night that he had this Conversation with Neynoe, and he did not pretend he had any Conversation of this Nature with Neynoe the first Night; and if it was not the first Night, we shall shew it could not be afterwards, for Neynoe was kept in a Room by himself, Skeene and Steward by themselves in a Room underneath; and therefore this seems to be a Story contrived between Skeene and Steward.

We shall shew it could not be possible for them to converse together, for Skeene and Steward were locked up in their Room; Neynoe was lock'd up in his Room separate and apart from theirs; so that they could never have Correspondence with him, nor come near him.

Another thing is sworn by one of them, about a Message sent to him by Neynoe, and a Paper, while while they were in Custody of the Messenger; and he says, this Paper was brought to him by the Messenger's Maid from Neynoe, and that this Paper contain'd a Justification of my Lord Orrery, expressing that he knew nothing of my Lord Orrery, but what he had said of him was utterly false; that the Messenger finding he had some Paper, he, to conceal this Paper, burnt it. But that the Maid came to him with such a Message or Paper is false; the Maid never did, nor did the Messenger know of the Paper, as we shall prove to your Lordships.

My Lords, when we have proved this, we humbly apprehend we have taken off any Credit that could be given to what these People have said, if they have said any thing material. My Lords, before I leave this Head, I beg leave to observe another thing as to Skeene. He, upon his Examination concerning a Discourse with Pancier, denies it intirely; but says, that what Pancier hath inform'd in relation to him, is false. We shall call Pancier, who will inform your Lordships, that Skeene hath own'd that he was privy to this Conspiracy, and knew who were concern'd in it.

I own there are several noble Persons named to be concern'd; that there is no Reason to say, from what Skeene may have said of them, that they are guilty: But such as he may have used the Names of great Persons designedly, to keep up the Spirit of their Party, by telling them such and such Persons were concerned: and if there is no other Evidence but what such a Person hath said, the noble Persons mentioned will not be affected by it.

My Lords, there is another Head I shall beg leave to mention, and what they have insisted upon under this Supposition; that they would have it taken that there was a Design to forge Letters, in order to charge my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter, and several other Persons. Say they, it was easy to get Information of such Circumstances relating to the Bishop and his Family, as are mentioned in the intercepted Letters, and then to write such Letters, with a Design falsely to charge the Bishop with having been concerned in carrying on a treasonable Correspondence. Your Lordships will please to consider who this Charge must fall upon, of forging the Letters of the 20th of April, or the Letters that shew Jones and Illington to be the Bishop of Rocheſter.

My Lords, we have proved them all to be Mr. Kelly's own Hand-writing, or Letters that have come in Answer to them. They have objected we have not given sufficient Proof of Kelly's Hand: Say they, it is proved by Clerks of the Post-Office, who never had compared one original Letter with another, but at last they stop an original Letter, dated the 20th of August, after the Correspondence had been carried on several Months; and then come and swear that the original Letters, that were forwarded, were of the same Hand-writing with that of the 20th of August. Can this be looked upon as sufficient Proof? But we submit it, their Evidence is much stronger than if they had only compared one Letter with another, for they not only had these Letters come every Week, but they were employ'd every time these Letters came, to copy them; so that the Hand-writing of these Letters must, by the constant stopping of these Letters, and their copying of them, be so imprinted on their Memory, that they are much better Judges of the Hand than if they had two of these letters to have only compared them together: And the Hand-writing was so well known to them, that they could, as they have informed your Lordships, when any of these letters came, distinguish them by the Hand-writing of the Superscriptions, before they had open'd them, and they never were mistaken. And this, we humbly apprehend, is as satisfactory an Evidence as can be given, that these letters were the Hand-writing of Mr. Kelly, provided the letter of the 20th of August, which I shall take Notice of by and by, is sufficiently proved to be of his Hand-writing.

Taking it then, my Lords, that these letters are the Hand-writing of Mr. Kelly, and of his Correspondents in answer to them, I don't find that my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter hath charged Mr. Kelly with having any Malice to him. And if he had no Malice to the Bishop of Rocheſter, what should induce him to write those letters, on purpose to charge the Bishop of Rocheſter with being concerned in this Conspiracy?

My Lords, we humbly apprehend the Pretence of these letters being forg'd, must insinuate, that Kelly, a vile Fellow, intending to charge the Bishop of Rocheſter with being concern'd in this Conspiracy, and make him liable to forfeit every thing that was dear to him, hath contrived letters containing Circumstances, in order to fix him to be the Person denoted by the Names of Jones and Illington; he hath written Letters, and by Combination received others in answer to them, for this Purpose; and by these wicked and malicious Practices, hath furnished this Evidence against the Bishop, who is an innocent Man.

My Lords, this is the Substance of the Defence on this Head; and whether your Lordships will believe this, we must submit to your Lordships. Your Lordships have had Kelly before you, and by his Behaviour have had no Reason to think that he had any Malice against my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter, or any Design or Intention to prejudice him.

My Lords, the next Part of the Evidence I shall beg leave to observe, is a Part very considerable, and is so far from being a Defence, that the Defence attempted, hath confirm'd and strengthen'd the Evidence against my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter; that is, with relation to the letter taken among my Lord Bishop's Papers, directed to Dubois; a letter, which, they observe, don't contain any Treason, or is of any treasonable Import; but it seems to be a letter of Indifference, and, I believe, as such, it was not taken care to be destroy'd, as it would have been, had there been any Apprehension that Use would have been made of it, as now, against the Bishop of Rocheſter.

My Lords, the Use we make of it is, to shew that Mr. Johnson, or Mr. Kelly, was a Person employed by my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter in writing Letters for him. My Lords, your Lordships will observe by the Letter, he says, I have heard nothing from you since the Letter I had about two Months ago by Mr. Johnson, to which I immediately in his Hand returned my Answer.

My Lords, if this is the Bishop of Rocheſter's letter, either in his own Hand, or his letter writ by another Person, it plainly proves what we infer from it, that Johnson, i. e. Kelly, writ for the Bishop. Your Lordships will observe, it is a letter writ in a Hand which no man writes, a stiff Hand almost like Print; and it is plain that it is writ to disguise the Hand of the Writer, whoever he was. At the latter End of the letter, when the Person that writ it comes to be tired and off of his Guard, there are several Letters which compared with the Writing of my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter, and what is own'd to be his, appear to be his writing. In the Date of the Letter, which is December, the D you frequently find in the Bishop's Hand-writing; your Lordships observe the Letter E that frequently occurs in the Bishop's writing; and your Lordships by comparing that with the Letter produced, will find that they exactly agree.

Whether or no your Lordships won't think it, on those Circumstances, to be the writing of my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter in a disguised Hand, we must submit to your Lordships. But, my Lords, suppose it was not his Hand-writing, here is Evidence that it was his Letter; and that is evident, because it is under his Seal, it is sealed with his own Seal, a Seal that he had in his Custody, and made Use of no longer ago than the 26th of February last: I think that is the Day a Letter was taken from his Servant. That we humbly apprehend, my Lords, will plainly shew it is the Bishop's Letter, because it was sealed with his Seal, and the same Seal is made Use of by the Bishop, on the letter that was taken upon his Servant in February last.

My Lords, this Matter hath been controverted by my Lord Bishop. He hath call'd Engravers, who believe Seals may be counterfeited, and Impressions may be taken off the Wax, and another Impression made, so as to make it difficult to know which is which. They were a little loose in answering the Question, Whether or no, if the Seal, from whence the Impression was to be taken, was broken in the Middle, it could be done. But one said, the Seal might be mended, and it might pass unobserved, but I find it is extremely difficult. But they did say, Seals may be so counterfeited, that it may be difficult to discover one from the other. My Lords, this is to insinuate, that after such Time as the letter was taken upon my Lord Bishop's Servant, the Person in whose Custody this other Letter of Dubois was (which is proved to have been taken the 24th of Aug. amongst the Bishop's Papers) hath caused an Impression to be taken off the Seal with which the letter to Dubois was sealed, (the Wax broken in two as it was) in order to fix it upon the letter that was taken upon my Lord Bishop's Servant, so as to prove the letter to Dubois to be the Bishop's Letter. Who is this to be fixed upon? Neynoe was gone; I don't know, unless upon the Committee of the House of Commons: for the Bishop's Letter was taken on his Servant the 26th of February, the Committee of the House of Commons made their Report on the 1st of March, and the letter to Dubois had long before the 26th of February been in Custody of that Committee. And yet while this letter is in Custody of a Committee of the House of Commons, they will have it, here, is an Impression taken off a broken Seal, and put on this other Letter, in order to shew that these are Letters of the same Person. Who can believe this to be the Case?

An Observation hath been made, that truly the Committee of the House of Commons have not made any Observation of this Kind, with relation to this letter to Dubois, that it is the Bishop's letter: which is true; for they had not this Matter relating to the Identity of the Seals, under their Consideration; but this is a new Discovery made since: And therefore, my Lords, they apprehended that this was a letter directed to the Bishop by the Name of Dubois, it being found amongst his Papers, and nothing to the contrary did appear, till after they had made their Report.

My Lords, there are other Things your Lordships would have expected to have had an Account of, in answer to this Evidence. Here is a letter found among my Lord Bishop's Papers; consequently so far we apprehend that this Evidence is a legal Evidence against the Bishop, as being a letter found in his Custody; this letter is directed to Dubois, and mentions the Hand of Johnson. Doth my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter give any Account who Dubois is? who this Johnson is? how this letter came there? No, my Lords, none at all. Doth his Lordship give you any Account of the Seal? and hath his Lordship said that the Seal, that sealed the letter taken on his Servant, he hath not? or that the Letter was not sealed with his Seal, or that he did not seal it himself? His Lordship did not say one Word to that Purpose, or make any Denial of the Matter, nor give your Lordships any Account who Dubois and Johnson were; nothing at all, but hath left it to your Lordships on that Foot: That the letter to Dubois had an Impression taken off, after it was in the Custody of the Committee of the House of Commons, and that Impression made use of on the other Letter: and that this is another Part of the Contrivance, in order to charge my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter with being concern'd in this Conspiracy.

My Lords, as to the Seal's being the same on the two letters, we humbly apprehend, the Evidence given on the other Side hath strengthened ours. We have produced two Engravers, one of them they own to be the top Engraver of England, Mr. Christian; he gave your Lordships an Account, that he verily believed these two Impressions to be taken off from the same Seal. Mr. Rollus said the same thing, and that he had used the Art long, and could judge. They made no Endeavours on the other Side to try the Skill of Mr. Christian: but as to Mr. Rollus, they hoped they should be able to puzzle him; and therefore have produced six several Impressions made on Wax by Seals to try his Art; and after he had look'd upon them, he gives you such an Account, that, I believe, your Lordships are satisfied that he is a Man of Skill and Art, and that if these Impressions had been taken off, as they would insinuate they were, he must have discover'd it.

My Lords, here is an Artist brought to make this Experiment on Rollus, to try his Skill; yet, notwithstanding all the Art hath been made use of in the Case, that could be, the Man was able not only to distinguish how many Seals the Impressions were made with, but also to give an Account that they were cast Seals, and not grav'd Seals, that made those Impressions.

This, my Lords, will have such a Weight with your Lordships, that we hope your Lordships will believe his Evidence is true; and if it is true, what Answer hath been given it, your Lordships have heard. Whether therefore any satisfactory Answer hath been given, to an Evidence so strong and convincing of Johnson's being employ'd in writing Letters for the Bishop of Rocheſter, we muſt ſubmit to your Lordships.

My Lords, the next Evidence they went upon was in relation to the Dog. Say they, we will ſhew that this Dog was not for the Bishop of Rocheſter, or any other Perſon but Mrs. Barnes. As to that, my Lords, I beg leave to remind your Lordships of the Evidence given by Mrs. Barnes, that Mr. Kelly told her it was for the Bishop of Rocheſter. It is a little improbable, if the Dog had been for Mrs. Barnes, that he ſhould come and deliver it to her, and tell her 'tis for the Bishop of Rocheſter. But it appears by Mrs. Barnes, that another Dog was deſigned for her, and that this Dog was for the Bishop of Rocheſter. They have read in Evidence a Certificate, ſign'd by Mr. Birmingham, and likewise an Affidavit, that there was, in the Month of March, a Dog deliver'd to Kelly in France for Mrs. Barnes. That, my Lords, muſt be another Dog, and not this, which we ſay was for the Bishop of Rocheſter; for this was not deliver'd to Mr. Kelly in France, but was ſent over to him after he was in England, as appears by the letters; and after he had receiv'd it, he writes, that he would inform Mr. Jones ſoon of it, to whom any thing from that Quarter would be very acceptable. So that, my Lords, if there was another Dog, and by Mr. Kelly deſign'd for Mrs. Barnes, we humbly apprehend it cannot be applied to this; for this Dog was deſign'd for Mr. Jones, and Mrs. Barnes ſays, that is the Bishop of Rocheſter.

My Lords, the next Evidence given by them is in relation to the letters of the 20th of April. They have endeavour'd to prove that, as to my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter, it is impoſſible that theſe letters could be written or dictat'd by him. He came to Town the 11th, and went to Bromley again the 12th of April; he had a Fit of the Gout ſoon after; had Servants that conſtantly attended him, more than one; and theſe Servants give an Account, that no Perſon whatſoever came near him, or could be employ'd by him to write thoſe letters.

My Lords, I beg leave to obſerve, firſt, That as to the applying their Evidence to the Writing of thoſe letters on the 20th of April, it is very poſſible that the letters were writ on another Day than when they bear Date: Therefore if they prove, that it was impoſſible that theſe letters ſhould be writ or dictat'd by the Bishop of Rocheſter on the Day they bear Date, yet they might be writ on another Day, and it is very probable they were.

Your Lordships will obſerve, that theſe letters are in Cyphers; and, I believe, where a Perſon dictates a letter to another, he doth not reduce the letter into Cyphers as it is dictat'd, but he firſt writes it out in Words at length, and afterwards puts it into Cyphers, and when it is proper to ſend it, then is the Time to date it; and if it be left with the perſon that puts it into Cyphers to ſend, as probably it was in this Caſe, it is left to him to date it when he pleaſeth: So that if they ſhould have ſhewn, that upon the 20th of April the Bishop was incapable of dictating or writing, it is no concluſive Answer to the Charge againſt the Bishop as to theſe letters.

Your Lordships will pleaſe to obſerve, that upon the 11th of April the Bishop of Rocheſter came to Town, on the 12th he went into the Country; notwithstanding what they have attempted to prove as to the Times that Kelly was in Town, and the Bishop was in the Country, yet upon the 11th and 12th they were both in Town; for Kelly came to Town from France the 11th, and the Bishop came to Town the 11th from Bromley.

When the Servants came to be examin'd, what time of the Day the Bishop came to Town on the 11th, they could not give any Account of that: When they were aſked, what time of Day it was when he went out of Town on the 12th, they could give no Account of that.

There hath been no Account given to your Lordships who was with the Bishop of Rocheſter the 11th and 12th when he was in Town, or where my Lord Bishop was at that Time: So that, my Lords, it is poſſible, from theſe Circumſtances, that theſe letters might be writ when the Bishop was in Town, and Kelly was in Town.

But ſuppoſe it ſhould not be ſo; the Queſtion is, whether they could not be writ at Bromley. On the 12th of April Mr. Kelly was at Mrs. Barnes's, he did not lie at home that Night; on the 13th he did not lie at home; on the 14th he came, and went to his old lodgings at Mrs. Kilbourne's. Theſe two Nights it doth not appear where he was; he might have been at Bromley, it is but an Hour's Ride. As to the Servants, ſay they, they ſhould have remember'd his ſetting up his Horſe;---He might ſet up his Horſe at an Inn, and go privately to my Lord Bishop.

Notwithstanding my Lord Bishop was ill, and tho' he ſhould have proved to your Lordships Satisfaction, that after he was ſo, he did not, nor could admit of Company, yet we ſubmit it to your Lordships that it is no Answer; for he was not very bad till he had been in the Country two or three Days, and theſe letters might be dictat'd or written in thoſe two or three Days before he was ſo ill.

My Lords, I beg leave to obſerve, what the Servants have ſworn. Here is Grant, that is my Lord's Butler, he ſays, that my Lord Bishop went the 12th of April to Bromley, and he attended him there till the 21ſt, and on the 21ſt he was ſent to Town upon ſome Matters relating to the Weſtminſter-Election; and another Servant about him gives an Account, that two or three Days after my Lord Bishop came down, he was taken ſo ill in his Hands and Feet, as not to be able to help himſelf.—Theſe are two or three Days beyond the Time that Kelly was out of his lodging, which was the 12th and 13th, (and theſe two or three Days muſt be the 14th and 15th) it may be my Lord Bishop was ſo diſabled indeed as he ſays; he ſays he is almoſt certain that no Stranger was with the Bishop; but he ſays the Apothecary or the Miniſter might be with him in his Illneſs, tho' he did not ſee them himſelf. If it is poſſible for the Apothecary or the Miniſter to be with him, and he not ſee them, why is it not as poſſible that Mr. Kelly might be there, and he not ſee him there?

The next Witneſs that is called only ſpeaks to the 18th and 19th; when Grant came to the Election, tion, another Servant was sent for, and he went, and he says my Lord Bishop was very ill. Samuel Steele gives an Account of my Lord Bishop's Illness, and his attending him.

My Lords, they have brought all the Servants of the House, the very Stable-Boy, to prove that my Lord Bishop could not see any body without their Knowledge; even the Nurse that attended his Lady when she was dying. The Servants that were waiting upon his Lady swear, That it was impossible any body should come to my Lord Bishop, and they not know it; and they are as positive, in relation to any body's coming to my Lord Bishop, as the Servants that immediately attended him.

But, my Lords, there is a Matter, which we shall offer in Evidence, that entirely destroys this Evidence of my Lord Bishop's being so ill, that he could not move Hand or Foot, and of his not being in a Capacity of dictating Letters: that he did actually send a Letter the 21st of April to a person in Town; and this very Grant, that hath given this Account to your Lordships, brought up the Letter to Town on the 21st of April. We have this to give your Lordships in Evidence; then what is the Evidence of all those Servants, who swear that it is impossible these Letters should be writ on the 20th of April, and that no body was admitted to come to him in order to write these Letters?

My Lords, as to the Evidence that hath been given, in relation to Kelly's Hand-writing, they have called Witnesses to disprove the Evidence on our Side, who, looking upon the Letter of the 20th of August, swear they do not believe it to be Kelly's Hand-writing. Our Witnesses do believe it; their Witnesses do not believe it to be his Hand-writing, and say that it is not like it.

There are several Letters shown them, tho' in a less Hand, that are agreed to be Kelly's Hand-writing; and your Lordships may judge, by looking on them, whether they are not of the same Hand with the Letter of the 20th of August; tho' the Character is something less, we humbly apprehend they will appear so to be. Besides, there are those Circumstances relating to the Hand-writing of Mr. Kelly, that put it beyond all Dispute that it is his Hand, and that is the Answers he hath received to those Letters which we charge to be written by him. We have traced him from place to place, where the Letters that came in answer to his Letters, were directed; to Mr. Andrews at the Dog and Duck, there Kelly employ'd a Person to take them up, and they were deliver'd to him; and at Burton's Coffee-House Kelly took up the Letters that were directed thither, in answer to those Letters that were of his Hand-writing. So there is not only the Evidence of Witnesses, that knew his Hand, and believe it to be his Hand, but here are the Answers to them actually taken up by Kelly himself: and that we humbly apprehend is so strong an Evidence, joined with the other, that, when one or two Witnesses come and say they do not believe it to be his Hand-writing, their Testimony shall not overthrow it.

My Lords, there is another piece of Evidence given by them, relating to the Letters of the 20th of April, which were enclosed in a Packet sent to Boulogne; the Packet is directed to Mr. Alexander Gordon Banker, at Boulogne: they have produced a Certificate from Boulogne upon Oath, wherein it is said, that he is no Banker, and denies that he received any Packet from Kelly, or that he knew him: This is a Certificate, and prov'd by a Person who believes it to be so. Your Lordships will please to observe what this Paper is, and that it is brought here by a person that knows nothing of its being sworn, but says, he is used to Transactions of this kind, and he believes it to be a Certificate from Boulogne.

My Lords, we shall produce a Gentleman, who was at Boulogne at the Time that the printed Report and Appendix of the House of Commons came there, and he was at Mr. Gordon's House; when they were discoursing about this Matter; and what they then said, we humbly submit will be believed; for what they then said was spoken as of an indifferent Thing, and they did not then see it could be of any Consequence to disguise the Truth. Mr. William Gordon the Father said, that he was at Paris when this Packet is supposed to have come: but Mr. Alexander Gordon the Son own'd that he was at home, and that this Packet came to him, but, said he, what was in it I know not, but I deliver'd it as is mentioned in the Appendix.

My Lords, there is another piece of Evidence, they have given, with relation to James Talbot, to whom the Packet was deliver'd at Boulogne. Here is a Witness produced to prove that he was in Town the 29th of April 1722, and he could not be mistaken, because he had paid him Money, and he had entred it in his Book. The Evidence goes no farther than to prove, that one James Talbot, that was a tall black Man, was then in Town; but it doth not appear that this was the person mentioned to have taken this Packet at Boulogne, and carry'd it to Paris: So that their proof, as to this Matter, is insufficient.

But we shall shew your Lordships, from an Account we have here from Mr. Crawford, his Majesty's Resident at Paris, that this James Talbot came to Paris that very Day, as he is mentioned to have brought those Letters to Paris, and was actually there at that Time: and that we humbly apprehend will be a full Answer to them, and take away any ground of Supposition, that the Evidence they have given concerning James Talbot, can be apply'd to that James Talbot who received the Packet at Boulogne.

As to the Evidence relating to Mr. Kelly's being in Town the 20th of April, we humbly apprehend from what hath been said, it is not material whether he was there or not; but they have not proved it, for Mrs. Kilbourne and her Maid, the two Witnesses produced by them for this purpose, say that he came to Mrs. Kilbourne's House the latter end of April, they believe the 20th, but they are not positive as to the Day. If he had been at Mrs. Kilbourne's the 20th of April, it is no Answer at all to our Evidence, and the strong Circumstances there are to induce a Belief, that the Letters might be dated at another time than really they were written.

My Lords, another Evidence is Mr. Pope, a Gentleman of Learning, with whom my Lord Bishop of Rocheſter used to converse; and he gives you an Account that he knew nothing of this Conspiracy, that the Bishop never open'd his Mouth to him about it, nor acquainted him with it; that he was frequently with him, and their Discourse was only about Matters of Literature.

No doubt my Lord Bishop hath conversed with Persons on different Subjects, to whom he would communicate nothing of an Affair of this Nature.

My Lords, upon the whole Matter we must submit it to your Lordships, whether we have not made out the Charge against my Lord Bishop of Rochester, to your Lordships Satisfaction, if not by legal Evidence, yet by Evidence that will satisfy and convince any Person that will consider it.

My Lords, a great deal of Regard is due to the Character and Function of the Reverend Prelate at the Bar: but if my Lord Bishop of Rochester hath departed from his Character and Function, and hath gone and engaged in a traitorous Conspiracy, and been guilty of Treason towards his King, and Perjury towards his God, we humbly apprehend, if this be proved, that his Character and Function are so far from being a Mitigation, that they are a great Aggravation of his Crime.

We shall submit it to your Lordships, to do what your Lordships think is consistent with Justice and Equity.

Mr. Wearg spoke next.

My Lords,

IT must be admitted, that the Reverend Prelate at the Bar, has made his Defence with the utmost Force and Beauty of Eloquence.

Was I capable of answering it in the like manner, which I own I am not, yet I should not think myself at liberty to do it, under the present Circumstances.

For, tho' it may be excusable, in a Person upon his Defence, to make use of that powerful Instrument of Error and Deceit, which always imposes upon the Reason, and misguides the Judgment in proportion as it affects the Passions; yet, I can't think the same Methods justifiable in a Person employ'd to carry on the Prosecution.

I shall therefore examine the Force of what has been offered on behalf of the Reverend Prelate, stripp'd of the Ornaments and Colours of Rhetorick.

I shall, in the first place, consider that Catalogue of Hardships, which his Lordship has complain'd of.

1. The first Complaint was that of Severities and Indignities offer'd him during his Confinement: but the Subject of this Complaint not arising from any of the proceedings before your Lordships, I can give it no other Answer, than by saying, that I am very credibly inform'd 'tis a Complaint without Foundation.

2. Reading Extracts of Letters was the next Hardship complain'd of by his Lordship, and represented as if they were read as Evidence against him; when it was declared by the Counsel for the Bill, that they were only read upon the general part of the Bill, and did not affect his Lordship.

3. The third Hardship was, excusing the Decyphers from answering such Questions proposed by his Lordship, as tended to a Discovery of their Art; that is, in other Words, refusing to do an Act which must prejudice another Person, and could be of no Service to his Lordship: for the Truth of what they testified, depended upon the Skill and Integrity of the Decyphers, and not upon the Method of coming at that Skill, which they could not disclose in so publick a manner, without doing a manifest Prejudice to themselves, which no Witness is ever compell'd to do.

4. The next Hardship is of the like nature, the not suffering the Clerks of the Post-Office to be examin'd, as to the Method and Authority by which they open'd Letters, by which they might have been subjected to the severe Penalties of the Statute 9 Annæ, if they had not exactly pursued the Methods prescribed by that Statute. But his Lordship's Innocence could not possibly have been manifested by it; for are the letters less criminal, if the Person who stopped them did not punctually pursue the Directions of that Statute? It would be thought a strange Defence in a common Offender, if, instead of proving his Innocence at his Trial, he should object that he was taken without a proper Warrant; which, if true, don't make him the less criminal.

5. The fifth Hardship was refusing to let Mr. Lewis declare any thing that came to his Knowledge by his being employed in the Secretaries Office some Years ago. This Hardship could be added only to fill up the Catalogue of Complaints, since, notwithstanding your Lordships Order, Mr. Lewis did declare what he was call'd for, tho' he afterwards own'd, that he came to the Knowledge of it by being employ'd in that Office.

6. The sixth Hardship was in reading an Examination not dated, sign'd, or sworn. But I apprehend the Counsel for the Bill have more reason to complain of Hardships of this sort, in reading Papers on behalf of his Lordship, as Examinations sign'd and sworn, without ever proving that they were sign'd or sworn to, or that any such Persons were ever examin'd; whereas the Examination hinted at in the Bishop's Complaint, was read as an Examination, or rather Confession of a Person since dead, not sign'd nor sworn to, and fairly left to your Lordships, to have such Weight as the nature of the Evidence deserved.

7. The next Hardship, viz. that of reading Letters wrote by another Person, without Proof that they were wrote with the Prelate's Privy, is begging the Question upon the whole Proceeding. For whether there was Proof of their being wrote with his Privy or not, is the Subject of the present Enquiry.

8, 9. The two last Hardships complain'd of, seem to be calculated for Persons without Doors, who are Strangers to what pass'd at your Lordships Bar, that he was denied a Copy of the letters in Cypher, until the Trial was so far advanced that he could not make the proper use of those Copies. Will any one who reads this Complaint in his Lordship's Speech imagine, that after he had a Copy of those letters, he had twice as much time for his Decyphers to peruse them as he himself desired?

Or will a Person who shall read the next Complaint in his Lordship's Speech, that he was refused to read any of the Papers contain'd in the Trunk that had not been read by the Counsel for the Bill, ever be persuaded that his Lordship read the three first Examinations of Neynoe, that had not been read by the Counsel, the Papers taken in Neynoe's Pocket, the Certificate of the Surgeon return'd by Mr. Crawford, neither of which had been read by the Counsel for the Bill; that his Lordship was expressly told, he was at Liberty to read read any Paper in the Trunk he should think necessary to his Defence; and was only refused reading one Paper, because he own'd it was for no other purpose, but to raise an Objection to a Matter which had not been insisted on by the Counsel for the Bill, that he might answer the Objection which he himself should raise?

These things will seem incredible to one who shall read this Catalogue of Complaints in his Lordship's Speech; and yet these are some of those Complaints, which with the Assistance of a warm and masterly Style, drew Tears from some of your Lordships Eyes:—

But when stripp'd of that false Beauty, and examined by the sure and unerring Rules of Reason, appear to be without Foundation; and to have been made without that strict Regard to Truth, which, I presume by some part of his Lordship's Speech, he would be thought always to have.

From these Complaints his Lordship proceeds to support some of the Objections taken by his Counsel to the Bill.

And one of the first Objections is of the same nature with some of the Hardships that have been complain'd of; that is, it might be an Objection, did it not want the Foundation of Truth.

The Objection I mean is, that it is a Bill ex post facto: Your Lordships have heard a great deal said upon the Hardships of Bills ex post facto.

We have been call'd upon to shew against what Law he has offended: it has been said, if he has not offended against any Law, will you make a Law in his Case, which will not be a Law in the Case of any other Man? This is a surprizing Objection.

The Notion I always had of a Law ex post facto was, where a Fact was made criminal by a Law, which was not so at the time that Fact was committed.

But is that the present Case? Was it no Offence, before this Bill was brought in, to correspond with the Pretender and his Agents, in order to subvert our Constitution?

Are we to be call'd upon to shew against what Law this is an Offence?

Or to have a Complaint made, that in punishing a Man for such an Offence, you are making a Law in his Case, that will not be a Law in the Case of any other Person?

I hope it will be a Law in the Case of every Man that equally deserves it.

But his Lordship is sensible of this Answer, and therefore gives it a very artful Turn, by applying it, not to the Fact, but to the Evidence. His Lordship seems to argue, that accumulative Evidence is as unreasonable as accumulative Treason; and objects that Proofs which communicate Light and Strength to each other, have only the Formality, without the Force of Evidence.

This Objecton is destructive of all Proof that is not Mathematical; for all other Proof must necessarily be what he calls accumulative.

That is, it consists of a variety of Facts and Circumstances laid together, sufficient to induce a Belief which any of them singly would not do. This is the very Principle upon which the Trial of every Matter of Fact, not capable of a Demonstration, does and must proceed.

Your Lordships in the next place have heard a string of Objections, that have been repeated against each of the Bills.

That a Subject of England ought to be tried according to the Laws of England and Magna Charta:

To be convicted by legal Evidence:

And that Distinction between legal and parliamentary Evidence is absurd.

All these Positions I agree to;

But at the same time I must affirm, that this is a Trial agreeable to the Laws of England and Magna Charta; and that a Proceeding of this Nature is as necessary a part of our Constitution, as the Establishment of the ordinary Courts in Westminster-Hall.

The difference between parliamentary and legal Evidence, taken in the general Sense of the word, Legal, is improper.

And I affirm, the Evidence which has been offered in support of this Bill, is legal Evidence.

What is legal Evidence, depends upon the Nature of the Inquiry, and the Judicature before which the Inquiry is made.

Depositions in writing are not legal Evidence in a Court of Law, but they are legal Evidence in a Court of Equity.

Upon an Indictment for Felony, or any other Misdemeanour, one single positive Witness, or Circumstances only without any positive Witness to the Fact, is legal Evidence.

But upon an Indictment for Treason, the Law requiring two Witnesses in the Courts below, one Witness, or Circumstances, is not legal Evidence.

In parliamentary Enquiries, which are excepted out of that Act and not restrained by any other, every thing is legal Evidence which may properly tend to a Discovery of the Truth.

I can't think myself at liberty at this time of Day, to mention what fell from the other side, against the Power of the Parliament in general, and the rather because the next Objection which they relied upon was introduced with an admission of that Power.

But they say it ought never to be exercised but in Cases of Necessity; and instance particularly in the Bill against the South-Sea Directors, as a Case of that Nature. Is there any Comparison between the Offence of those Men, and of one who has endeavoured to subvert our whole Constitution, to destroy our Religion, our Liberty, and every thing that is valuable?

When we reflect that these Endeavours have been constantly carrying on ever since the happy Establishment of the Protestant Succession;

That the many Discoveries of their Plots, the many Examples of publick Justice, have had no other Effect, than to make them more subtle and cunning how to avoid the common Forms of the Law:

These Reflections shew the Necessity of such a Proceeding, to convince the World, according to your Lordships Report, that as Artifice and Disguise don't lessen the Danger to the Publick, nor mitigate the Guilt of the Offender, so neither ought they to protect him from Punishment.

The next Objection was addressed chiefly to one part of your Lordships, who were told that no civil Power upon Earth could deprive a Bishop of the Exercise of his holy Function, but that must be done by another Judicature; and therefore fore it was observ'd by one of the Counsel, that wherever Issue is join'd in the Common Law Courts, whether Bishop or no, the Court where such Issue is depending, must write to the Metropolitan to try it, according to the Law of the Church.

Whether an Act of Parliament can deprive a Bishop, so as to make the Acts done by him afterwards invalid, is a Controversy not proper at this time; but it will be admitted on all hands, that an Act of Parliament may restrain a Bishop from the Exercise of his Function within any part of this Kingdom, so as to make the Exercise of it Criminal in him, or in any that assists him. And I believe if this Bill should pass into a Law, and there should be a Question whether his Lordship was afterwards Bishop of Rochester, the Courts of Law, upon producing the Act of Parliament, would hardly think it necessary to trouble the Metropolitan.

His Lordship has been pleas'd to say, that this is the first Instance where a Member of this House has been judged in another.

I wonder that his Lordship, who is so great a Master of our English Constitution, should have forgot the Case of one of his Predecessors in the See of Rochester, in the Reign of Henry VIII. against whom a Bill was brought in the House of Commons, inflicting severe Pains and Penalties, which pass'd in that House, and afterwards received the Approbation of this, and the Royal Assent.

They have clos'd their Objections to the Bill, with a very pathetick Admonition against the Consequences of it.

They say the wisest Man can't foresee, nor the most innocent Man declare himself safe from the Consequences of this Bill.

That a wise Man should not be able to foresee what will happen hereafter, is not very strange;

But he must be a very wise Man indeed, in my poor Opinion, who can foresee any danger to Innocence from the Proceedings upon this Bill. Your Lordships have attended with the utmost Patience, for seven Days together, to the Proofs for and against this Bill; and have given the Person accus'd all the Opportunities, afforded him all the Assistance possible to make out his Innocence.

And whoever shall use this Precedent as a handle for Oppression and Injustice, would certainly be guilty of the same Oppression and Injustice without this Precedent.

The next Part of their Defence, consisted in Observations upon the Evidence for the Bill.

They raise great Triumph from Neynoe's Examination, which they would represent as the Foundation of the whole Charge, or offered as such by the Counsel for the Bill.

But if it was, they have been so far from weakening, that they have added strength to that Foundation.

As to the Inconsistencies in it, they are not Neynoe's, but Kelly's. As to the Tale they have told, that at the very Time when he was deluding a great Man with Confessions, either to get Money out of him, or to find an opportunity of making his Escape, he should declare to Skeene and to Steward that what he had confess'd was false; I say, as this is improbable in itself, so it appears by our Evidence to be a mere Fiction of their own, without any possibility of being true.

It appears to be an Attempt, by a parcel of desperate People engaged in the same Interest, to weaken Neynoe's Evidence, whom they looked upon as a Betrayer of their Cause and Party.

From the Evidence of Neynoe they proceed to the other Evidence.

And here they tell your Lordships that we have supported the Bill by Innuendo's, Arbitrary and Invidious Interpretations; that when a Woman is named, it means a Man; that two different Names signify the same Person; that Books of Account, and mercantile Terms, by a new kind of Metaphor, are taken in an ill Sense: and all this assisted with the Whimsies and Conjectures of Decyphers.

These are pretty sounding Expressions; but, when consider'd, are nothing but Sound.

Is it an arbitrary Interpretation, when a letter says, I saw Mrs. Illington, He is in great Tribulation for poor Harlequin, but his Obligations are the same, which he desires may be made known; to apply this to a Man? When two letters are wrote by the same Person, but sign'd by different Names, to apply those two Names to that Person?

When letters give a Caution not to write any more, till new Books of Account can be settled and sent over by safe Hands;

Because those who have got part may by the same means have got the whole:

To express a doubt whether they have been betray'd by false Friends, or an open Enemy:

To talk of having Wine, but wanting Barrels: of the absence of the King and Court, as affording a proper opportunity of sending over and selling their Wine:

A Man must have laid aside his Reason, that can think this the language of Persons really dealing in a mercantile way: 'Tis the plain and common Cant of a treasonable Correspondence.

They next object to the unreasonableness of applying the Circumstances which relate to Jones and Illington, to the Bishop of Rochester.

Was no body else besides the Bishop out of Town? Was he the only Man that had the Gout, or who lost his Lady at that time?

Were these Questions to be asked singly, they might be answer'd, that there were other Persons in the like Circumstances.

But then the Answers would be nothing to the Purpose.

The only Question applicable to the present Case would be, Is there no other Person who was in Town on the seventh of May, out of Town on the tenth and fourteenth, in Town on the fifteenth; whose Wife died the Week before the thirtieth of April, he himself then ill of the Gout; to whom a Dog was sent from France of the name of Harlequin, that broke its Leg, and was brought to Mrs. Barnes, by Mr. Kelly, in order to be cured?

These are the Circumstances of Jones and Illington, and they are every one prov'd true of the Bishop of Rochester; and I believe your Lordships can hardly think they are so of any other Person.

They said they should falsify several of these Facts; but they have only said it.

In the Papers they have produc'd from the Surgeon concerning the Dog, he contradicts himself.

In the first he says, he gave Mr. Kelly a Dog for his own use, to dispose of as he pleas'd;

In the second he says, he gave it for Mrs. Barnes:

But Mrs. Barnes tells you, that the Dog design'd for the Bishop was in her Custody, when the other given by the Surgeon was expected over.

Their Attempt to disprove the Circumstances of being in Town, has met with as little Success.

In a letter of the seventh of May, 'tis said Mr. Illington is come to Town for a Day only:

We shewed that the Bishop was in Town upon that Day; they answer us by saying, he stay'd in Town two Days after.

Does this disprove his being in Town upon the seventh? or does it weaken the Proof of his being then in Town, because he alter'd his mind, and staid two Days longer than perhaps he at first intended?

This is the only Attempt they made to disprove any of the Circumstances relating to Mr. Jones and Illington. As to the other Instances which they pretend to disprove, they relate to Weston and Rig, and were not mentioned by the Counsel for the Bill.

They next object to the Method of proving the Similitude of Hands, and observe that the original letter prov'd to be Mr. Kelly's, and the three letters applied to the Bishop of Rochester, are dated at four Months distance; and how is it possible, that the Clerks of the Post-Office should be able to swear upon their Memories that they are of the same Hand-writing?

This is not a fair Representation of the Evidence: For the Clerks told your Lordships that there was not any one Post, during all that time, which did not bring some letter in the same Hand, all which they copied, and had by that means contracted a perfect Idea of the Hand; so that they did not swear from Memory, but from a Knowledge gain'd by Experience, and many constant repeated Observations upon the same Hand.

There have been some other Objections made, that are scarce worth taking notice of.

'Tis said Mrs. Illington is in great Tribulation for poor Harlequin, which Kelly could never say of the Bishop of Rochester.

Surely there is nothing in this;

'Tis an Expression that might be used of a Man of the gravest Character in a letter of this sort, to the Author of such a Present.

Mrs. Illington is mentioned eleven Days after the Bishop's Lady was dead. This is the Instance where 'tis said Mrs. Illington is in great Tribulation for poor Harlequin, but his Obligation is the same, which he desires may be made known.

That Jones is mentioned in other Cyphers for other Persons, as in one for the Duke of Norfolk, in Plunket's for a different Person.

But does it therefore follow that in Kelly's he can't mean the Bishop of Rochester?

It certainly does not.

And they seem to be convinced that the Bishop is too well described in this Correspondence, under the Names of Jones and Illington, to doubt whether he is meant by them.

And therefore they endeavour to give it another Turn, by saying this may be a malicious Contrivance of some Persons, who have inform'd themselves of his Lordship's Motions, and the Circumstances of himself and Family: And to make this the more probable, they say that Jones and Illington are the only Persons mentioned in this Correspondence of Mr. Kelly's, with Circumstances of this Nature.

One would not imagine the Persons who made this Objection, had so often heard the letters read.

E. 41. 'Tis said Hore is laid up with his old Distemper, Hobbert is pretty well recovered.

E. 45. Mr. Hore is laid up, and so is Jemison with the Gout.

These are all Instances where the same Circumstances are mentioned of other Persons, that are mentioned of Jones and Illington.

If Jones and Illington are oftneft mentioned, it is because he was the principal Person in this Correspondence.

But this malicious Contrivance must be carry'd on by Mr. Kelly: for

It has been proved that the Letters were wrote in his Hand, that the Answers were address'd according to his Directions;

That he received the Letters so directed.

I believe your Lordships have no Suspicion that Mr. Kelly bore an Ill-Will towards the Bishop:

I am sure there has been no Proof of it, nor of any malicious Contrivance against him.

But, my Lords, this is the common trite Excuse of every petty Offender.

Your Lordships can scarce read a Trial, where the Defendant don't complain that it is all a malicious Contrivance of his Enemies.

I heard this very thing warmly insisted upon a few Terms ago, at another Bar, and with as much Proof, by a Person concern'd in a Part of this Conspiracy, who has since been attainted and own'd his Guilt.

But we have gone still further, we have shewn that Kelly was an Acquaintance of the Bishop of Rochester's.

Which is indeed acknowledged, without any satisfactory account given for what Purpose his Lordship should contract an Acquaintance with a young Fellow, that has deserted his Orders, and is a professed Nonjuror.

Your Lordships, I presume, from the Behaviour of Mr. Kelly, can hardly be persuaded that he had no other Employment under the Bishop than to furnish him with Beaver-Stockings, which the Bishop owns to have received from him as a Present.

But we have proved by the strongest Evidence that can be, by a letter under his Lordship's Seal, and I may venture to say (from the Observations that have been made from the letter itself) under his Hand, that Johnson, i. e. Kelly, is the Person in whose Hand the Bishop returns his Answers. No Account is given of this letter, by whom it was wrote, nor to whom, nor how it came among his Lordship's Papers.

All that is said in answer to it is, that 'tis possible Seals may be counterfeited, or there may be be several Impressions of the same Seals: but is there any proof of this?

It appears that the Impression on the first letter was broke when seized; that it was in the Hands of the Committee of the House of Commons before the second letter was taken; which makes it impossible to imagine an Impression should be taken off the first to put upon the second.

But his Lordship is pleased to ask, Is it agreeable to the Cunning with which he is charged, to keep such a letter by him on purpose, as it were, to furnish his Adversaries with Evidence?

No, my Lords, neither do I imagine his Lordship knew he had it by him.

It was found amongst his papers, and, no doubt of it, was left there accidentally; and 'tis by such little Accidents that the most cunning Men are detected; there is no Danger of their committing greater Oversight.

His Lordship is pleased to observe, that at first the House of Commons represented this letter as a letter wrote to him; but now 'tis discovered to be wrote by him: It is so, and very plainly, and his Lordship may thank himself for the Discovery; and the not discovering it sooner is surely no Objection to the Truth of it when discovered.

It may be urged, and has been insinuated, that if Mr. Johnson is the person in whose hand the Bishop returns his Answers, yet how does it appear that these particular letters which are applied to the Bishop, were wrote by his Directions?

If it appears that Johnson is the person in whose Hand he writes, and that these letters are of the Hand-writing of Johnson, signed by that Name, which denotes the Bishop in the Correspondence, this will be thought a reasonable proof that they were wrote with his privity.

But they said they should prove it impossible that these three letters should be wrote with the privity of the Bishop; for they bear Date the 20th of April, whereas the Bishop came to Town the 11th, went to Bromley the 12th, and within two or three Days after was taken so ill with the Gout, that he had neither the use of his Hands nor Feet, and had a Servant always attending him, who will prove that no Stranger came near him all that time.

If this had been made out, it would not be a proof that the letters were not dictated by him; for both Kelly and the Bishop were in Town upon the 11th and 12th, and the Bishop was not confined at Bromley upon the 13th and 14th, when Mr. Kelly was out of Town, and probably at Bromley. And tho' the letters bear Date upon the 20th of April, yet 'tis not to be imagined, that they were wrote upon that Day; for it requires a good deal of time to reduce three letters into Cyphers; and the Method generally used, where letters are to be sent in Cyphers, is, to write them in common Hand first, and then reduce them to Cyphers after: so that it's probable the Substance of these letters was dictated many Days before they were perfected and sent.

But the Evidence given by the Bishop's Servants is not to be regarded.

The first Servant, when he had sworn what he thought was material for the Bishop, being pressed by a noble Lord with a Question relating to the letter directed to Dubois, refused to give any Answer, till the Bishop publickly gave him leave; tho' he was sworn to speak the whole Truth: which shews too great an Attachment to his Master's Interest, to deserve much Credit.

He and the second Witness did admit, that the Apothecary, or the Minister of the Parish, might be with the Bishop without their Knowledge; and if so, why not Mr. Kelly, whose Visits required more Secrecy than either of the others?

And I must here observe, that what the Reverend Prelate insisted upon, to add Credit to the Evidence of these Witnesses, is the greatest Objection to their Testimony imaginable.

They tell your Lordships, that tho' they were with the Bishop in the Tower, yet he never once spoke to them concerning the Matter they had given in Evidence, till they themselves recollected it upon reading the Report; and finding that the Bishop was charged with being the Author of three letters, dated the 20th of April, they immediately recollect that the Bishop was ill at that time, and they constantly about him. This seems to be a Story scarce credible,

That the Bishop himself, who was so nearly concerned, should not, upon reading the Report, recollect the Circumstances he was under at the time when those letters bore Date, if the Truth was as they would represent it; but that the Servants should first recollect this, and suggest it to their Master.

Or if the Bishop did recollect it, 'tis strange he should not mention it to those Servants, who were present with him in the Tower, and the only Persons, who, as they say, were capable of clearing his Innocence.

This had been very natural, and proper under his Circumstances: and his not speaking to them first, could hardly proceed from an unreasonable Scruple, lest he should be suspected of laying a byass upon them; since his Lordship has, after he knew they were to be Witnesses, given each of them a place under him as Dean of Westminster.

The rest of the Servants that were called, tho' they contradict the first, by admitting that two other Gentlemen were at the Bishop's at Bromley, during the Time in question; yet they plainly shew a greater Regard for their Master's Interest, than for Truth: for tho' one of them was but the Helper in the Stable, and another the Nurse that attended his lady in her Illness, yet they take upon them to swear, that they verily believe no Stranger could be with their Master in private, but they should have known of it, and that they never knew of Mr. Kelly's being there.

Every body's Observation must suggest to them that such a Belief must be without Foundation.

The next Arguments used on behalf of the Reverend Prelate at the Bar, were raised from his unambitious resigned Temper of Mind, and from the Style of the letters laid to his Charge, That it's not probable he should use so indecent an Expression of persons he was concerned with, as to call them pretending unsupported People.

What Weight there is in these Arguments, I must submit to your Lordships, who are much better acquainted with his Temper and Style than I can pretend to be.

The last thing pressed by the Reverend Prelate, is a solemn Protestation, I cannot say of Innocence, cence, because it seems to me to be conceived in such Terms as not to contradict any part of the Charge insisted upon by the Counsel for the Bill:

It is chiefly calculated to answer some particular Circumstances of Times, without any Denial of the general Charge, or the least Declaration of Affection or Loyalty towards his present Majesty.

But if his protestations amounted to a direct and positive Denial of the Charge, they ought not to have any Weight with your Lordships, since this is a Defence equally in the power of the most guilty as well as the innocent: a little proof is better than many protestations.

And I can't help observing upon this Head, and I hope his Lordship won't impute this Observation to ill-nature, but a Sense of my Duty, which obliges me to make all proper Observations, That it appears his Lordship has not always that strict Regard to Truth, which he ought to have, by the Papers taken upon his Servant at the Tower.

The Nature of the punishment has been much talked of in the Course of these proceedings, and great lamentations made upon it, but surely without any Reason.

For this Argument supposes the party guilty of the Charge, or else it's ridiculous to object to the Severity of the Punishment.

And I may venture to affirm, this is the mildest punishment that ever was inflicted for such an Offence.

His life is not touched; his liberty nor property affected; he is only expelled the Society whose Government he disapproves, and has endeavoured to subvert; and is deprived of the publick Employment which that Government had intrusted him with: The Enjoyment of his life, his private Estate, and his liberty, under any other Government that may be more agreeable, is allowed him.

This is scarce to be called a punishment, being nothing more than what was absolutely necessary for the publick Security.

The Commons of Great Britain have done their part towards providing this Security, and I don't doubt but it will meet with the Concurrence of your Lordships.

The Counsel having done, the Lords in a grand Committee went thro' the Bill, and about ten of the Clock at Night, adjourned to Wednesday, May 15.

Their Lordships being then sat, the aforesaid Bill was read the third time, and a Motion being made, that the Bill should pass, it occasioned a long Debate, in which the Bishop of Salisbury spoke as follows.

My Lords,

AS I have sometimes troubled your Lordships with what I had to say in other Debates, I believe it will be expected that I should say something in a Case so extraordinary as this is; and wherein a Brother Bishop is so nearly concerned. I beg leave to begin with taking Notice of some Things that were peculiarly addressed to this Bench, both by the Reverend Prelate, and his Counsel, from the Bar.

The first is, That we would consider how agreeable it may be to the Canons and Discipline of the Church, in this extraordinary Manner to deprive a Bishop of all his Preferments; and to prohibit him the Use and Exercise of his Function for his life.

As to this Objection, whatever influence it may have abroad among ignorant people, when the Speeches come to be printed; yet, as to your Lordships, who know our Constitution so well, I cannot imagine that it can have any Weight or Influence at all. And indeed when I consider all the Acts of parliament relating to the Supremacy, that have been made for near two hundred Years, when I consider the Articles of our Church, our Canons, and the Subscriptions that the Bishop himself must have made, and must have required from others, in the Exercise of his Function as a Bishop; when, I say, I consider all these things, it is matter of Wonder to me, that such an Objection should be made, either by a Bishop of the Church of England, or by a lawyer of the Kingdom of England.

I do not indeed recollect above one instance of a particular Act of parliament made to deprive a Bishop; which is, that of Fisher, Bishop of Rochester; who was so deprived in the Time of Henry VIII. But, as to general Acts of Parliament, whereby both Bishops and Presbyters have been deprived of their Preferments, we have a good Number. Thus, in the beginning of Queen Elizabeth's Reign, almost all the Bishops of England were so deprived: And at the Revolution, many were so; and all might have been so, if they had not complied with the Terms of the Act of Parliament: And at the Restoration, many hundreds of Presbyters were deprived in the same manner. And I conceive that it cannot well be doubted, but that the same Authority which can make laws by which the whole Bench may be deprived, may exert itself in a particular Case, if they have just Reasons for it.

As to the Trial of Bishops for any Crimes they shall be guilty of, we are to consider the different Nature of the Crimes of which they are accused; and the Trial by law must be accordingly. If the Crime be of an Ecclesiastical Nature, such as Ecclesiastical Courts can take Cognizance of, as Simony, Heresy, and the like; the Trial regularly must be by the Arch-Bishop of the Province, taking to his Assistance some of his Suffragan Bishops. But even in this Case, if either the Arch-Bishop shall, upon Complaint, neglect to try him; or, if upon Trial he shall acquit and absolve him; the Accuser may appeal to the King in Chancery: Which Court may appoint a Commission of Delegates, who may, by the Authority of the Crown, judge him, deprive him of his Bishoprick, prohibit him the Use of his Function for his life (if the Crime deserve it) tho' he were before acquitted by the Arch-Bishop. But if the Crime be of a Civil Nature, such as Treason (which is the Case now before us) the Ecclesiastical Authority has nothing at all to do with it; and should any Ecclesiastical Judge attempt to meddle with it, he would be judged to attempt against the King's Crown and Dignity, and quickly have his Proceedings stop'd, by a Prohibition out of the Temporal Courts. And I would beg leave to observe further, that were this Bishop to be tried in the common Course of law, for the Crimes whereof he is accused in this Bill, it must be either by your Lordships, as a Member of this House; or by the Judges and and a Jury in Westminster-Hall. I would not at present say which, because it would lead me out of the way : But in this Case, if either your Lordships, or the Judges below, should pass Sentence upon him for the Treason of which he is here accused, that Sentence would, ipso facto, deprive him of the Bishoprick : It would also make him liable to lose his life ; but it would not, ipso facto, take it away, as it would his Bishoprick : He might notwithstanding that Sentence live many Years ; but from the Moment of it, would be no more Bishop of Rocheſter.

These Things, I humbly conceive, are abundantly sufficient to answer this first Difficulty ; and therefore I shall add no more but this one Observation : That the way that is now taken to deprive him, is the only way that I know of, wherein the Bishops can have any Part in the Sentence of Deprivation.

The next Thing that was suggested from the Bar, particularly to this Bench, was, That we should consider well what we are doing, and have a care that we do not, by concurring in this Bill, make our Titles to our Bishopricks precarious.

As to this Admonition, the Answer is very easy, That it becomes us, as we have the Honour to have Seats in Parliament, to take care to do Justice ; as, on the one side, to the Prisoner, so on the other side, to our King and Country ; and to trust in God, that in so doing we shall neither hurt ourselves, nor our Successors. But, so far as just Judges may look to Events, the Argument seems to me to lie the other way : For, if for want of doing Justice against Traitors to King George, the Pretender should happen to prevail, (which God avert) the Title of Protestant Bishops is like to be very precarious indeed.

As to the power of Parliament to pass Bills of this kind, the Parliament always had it, has frequently exercis'd it, and always must have it ; it being essential to the very Being of the Supreme Power. The lives and liberties of every Man in England are subject to it : and tho' the Exercise of this Power may be dangerous to Persons who will venture upon treasonable Practices, trusting to their Cunning and Artifice to screen them from the Law ; yet I have that Confidence in the Integrity and Justice of the Crown, and two Houses of Parliament, that, so long as this Example is followed, of giving a full and fair Hearing to the persons accused, innocent Men cannot easily suffer ; or, in all Events, that if Corruption or Faction should ever so far prevail, that there should be Danger to innocent Persons, it will be much easier to corrupt Witnesses or Juries, or to find other Methods to destroy them, than it will be to prevail upon a Parliament to do it : As I am persuaded that, in this particular Case, had there been any Corruption, some other Method would have been found out, more effectually to come at the Person concerned than this is like to do.

The last Particular that the Bishop peculiarly address'd to this Bench, was, That we would consider the Words of St. Paul to Timothy ; Against an Elder receive not an Accusation, but before two or three Witnesses, 1 Tim. 5. 19. The Sense of which Words his Lordship understood to be, That an Accusation should not be so much as received against an Elder or Presbyter, and much less against a Bishop, but upon the Oaths of two or three Witnesses.

In answer to this, I beg leave to observe, that our Translation renders the Words, not, upon the Oaths, but, before two or three Witnesses : which seems to import a very different Sense from that his Lordship puts upon them. But, not to enter into any critical Examination of the Truth of our Translation, or what the real Sense of the Words is, I would only make these two short Observations : First, that the Sense the Bishop puts upon them, that an Accusation against a Presbyter or Bishop, must not be so much as receiv'd into Court, but upon the Oaths of two or more Witnesses, is not practis'd in the Church of England ; and, I believe, never was practis'd in any Christian Church whatever.

The second Observation I would make, is, That whatever be the Sense of these Words, it regards only the Conduct of a Bishop towards his Presbyters ; but certainly was never intended to give a Law to the Supreme Power of a Kingdom, in its Proceedings in Cases of High-Treason, against any Subject whatsoever.

But the Bishop urges further, that the Jewish Law did require at least two or more Witnesses in all Judicial Proceedings ; and from thence infers, that it ought to be so amongst us.

In answer to this it may be reply'd, That this is a part of the Judicial Law of the Jews, which was not given to us, and therefore doth not oblige us any more than the rest of that Law doth ; except where the Reason of the thing lays an Obligation upon us. But indeed, I am of Opinion, that that Law doth oblige us, so far as it was intended to oblige them, and so far as it can be adapted to the infinite Variety of Cases that must happen in Judicial Matters. That Law is very short, and therefore must leave many Questions that may be made about it undetermined : I shall at present take notice of these two only, which may be material to our present Dispute ; the first is, Whether the Meaning of it be, that all Controversies and Accusations whatever, must be determined by Witnesses and no other way ? or, Whether upon Supposition that the Matter be to be determined solely by Witnesses, and no light can be brought to it any other way ; that then the Witnesses must be at least two ? The second is, Whether those Witnesses must swear directly to the Fact ; for Instance, that they saw such a Man murder another, or the like ; or whether it may not be sufficient, that they swear to such Circumstances, as infer a strong and violent Presumption, that such a Fact was committed by such a Person ?

These things are left undetermined in that short Law of the Jews ; but, I humbly conceive, are sufficiently determined by the Nature of the thing, and by the Laws of all Nations, and particularly of our own. It is true indeed, that in Cases of High-Treason, we have from Political Considerations determined, that there must be two positive Witnesses, to some one or more Overt-Acts of the same Treason : but, as to all other Crimes, that equally affect the Lives and Estates of all the Subjects of England, this is not the Case ; and Men may by Law lose their lives when there is not so much as one positive Witness to the Fact.

I beg leave to explain this in the Words of my Lord Chief Justice Coke; ‘When a
 * 1 Instit. ‘*Trial is by Witnesses, * regularly the* fol. 6. ‘Affirmative ought to be proved by two or ‘three Witnesses; but when the Trial is by Verdict of ‘twelve Men, there the Judgment is not given upon ‘Witnesses, or other kind of Evidences, but upon the ‘Verdict; and upon such Evidence as is given to the ‘Jury, they give their Verdict; and many times Ju- ‘ries, together with other matter, are much induced
 ‘by Presumptions.’ And indeed, if no Man could be convicted of Murder, or Robbery, or other Crimes of that Nature, but by two positive Witnesses that saw the Fact done; nothing would be easier or safer than the Commission of those Crimes; and no Man could have any Security, either for his Person or his Estate: And therefore, if in Cases of High-Treason our Law requires positive Witnesses, it is not from any moral Necessity, or point of Conscience; but from political Reasons, which must, and always will be, subject to the Judgment of Parliament.

Having now done with what was from the Bar peculiarly applied to this Bench, and having, I hope, given a very plain Answer to it, I now beg your Lordships leave to proceed more directly to the Bill itself. And here, two things are necessary to be considered, in order to convince your Lordships, that it is a Bill fit to be passed: The first is, the Lawfulness of it; the second is, the Prudence or Expediency of it.

As to the Lawfulness of it, it will be necessary also to consider two things; first, Whether your manner of Proceeding in this Bill be lawful: secondly, whether the Bishop be really Guilty of the Crimes charg’d upon him.

As to the manner of Proceeding, many things have been objected: That it is by way of Bill, and not a Trial in the Course of Law; That Evidence has been admitted, that would not have been admitted in any of our Courts; That these Things are contrary to the liberty of the Subject; That every Subject has a Right to the Laws of his Country; and That he has an Injury done him, if he be denied the Benefit of them. This I take to be the Sum of what has been objected against the Justice of your proceedings in this Bill.

In Answer to these Objections, I beg leave to consider, first, wherein the liberty of England consists; which is a Point commonly pretty much mistaken. Many People are apt to imagine, that the Difference betwixt us, and some of our neighbouring Countries, is, that they are under Absolute Power, and we are not; whereas in truth all Countries, that are Supreme within themselves, have equally an Absolute Power; and in the Nature of the thing it cannot possibly be otherwise: No Government can subsist, if there be not a Power in it to change, to abrogate, to suspend, or dispense with its Laws, as Necessity or Conveniency shall require; which is what we call Absolute Power: and therefore, the Difference betwixt one Government and another, does not lie in this, that one has such a Power and the other has not; but lies merely in the Difference of the Hands in which this Power is placed. Where this is placed in one Hand, in the King, we call that an Absolute Monarchy: Where this is not solely in the King, but only as he acts in conjunction with the States of the Kingdom, that we call a Limited Monarchy; and the People that live under such Government, are called a Free People; because they live under Set Laws, which could not at first be made, nor can afterwards be altered or dispensed with, but by their own Consent. However, there is still in such Countries, a Power equally above all their Laws, as there is in the most absolute Monarchy in the World.

What I have said upon this first Head, will in a great measure explain a second Question: What that Right is, which the Subjects of this Country have to its Laws; which is, in short, a Right to claim the Benefit of them against the Crown, or any Court acting under the Crown, till the States of the Kingdom (which are virtually every Man in the Kingdom) think fit to consent to the Alteration of them. The King is indeed Supreme, but his power is only according to the Laws in being: By them he is bound to act, and if any of his Officers act contrary to them, what they do is null and void; and they are punishable for it; and the Subjects have a Claim of Right against them. But if the King and his People think fit to come to a new Agreement to alter any such Law, there’s an end of all Claim of Right in the Subject: the Claim is taken away by their own Consent; for, as I said before, every Man in the Kingdom virtually consents to what is done by an Act of Parliament.

And there is an absolute Necessity that there should be such a Power as this in every Country; for the State of human Affairs is so changeable, that it does not admit of any Set of unalterable Laws. What is good at one time, may be destructive at another; and what is generally good, may, under particular Circumstances, require a Dispensation by a proper Authority. And here, give me leave to observe to your Lordships, the Difference there is, betwixt the eternal Laws of Justice and Righteousness, and all positive Laws whatever. That as to the first, we are made for them, and the nearer we do in all things conform to them, the more noble, and lovely, and excellent Creatures we are: but as to positive Laws, they are all made for us; and the more they conform to us, the more they obviate all our Wants and Difficulties, the more they answer to all our Necessities, the better they are.

As to what is complain’d of, that your Lordships have admitted Evidence to be read, that would not have been admitted in the Courts below: I conceive, that acting in the Capacity you now do, you have a full Power to do it, and have not broken any of the general Rules of Justice by it. You have let in all the light that you thought might be proper to give you a full Knowledge of the Matter; and in the Capacity you now act, I cannot but humbly be of Opinion, it was your Duty to do so: but in forming of your Judgments, I take for granted, that your Lordships will distinguish, and lay no more Weight upon any thing than it deserves.

As to the Rules of receiving Evidence in Westminster-Hall, I conceive, that they are no part of natural Justice, but only artificial Rules fram’d for Conveniency; and bind no Courts, but as they have agreed to them, and so are become the Customs of the Court. That these Rules are no part of natural Justice appears from hence, that even among ourselves they are different in different Courts: That those used in our Courts, are very different different from those used in other Countries: That they differ here, according to the different Causes or Crimes that are to be tried. Nay, they are so far from being fundamental Parts of Justice, that they must require a good deal of Time and Art to form them. And I am persuaded, that was a Person of good natural Sense, who knows nothing of the Law, asked his Opinion; he would be apt to think it to be a Part of natural Justice, that every Person that prosecuted a Cause in any Court, should be at Liberty to produce before that Court, whatever he thought material to his Cause. And there is no doubt, but that this was the original Way of Proceeding: but that in process of Time, when Courts came to have a good deal of Business, and they found by Experience, that this Way of laying every thing before 'em, tended to lengthen Causes, (which was especially inconvenient where Juries are concerned, who must end a Cause before they part) these Rules were gradually found out; which, tho' they may be, for the Reasons above specified, generally convenient, yet may sometimes hinder Justice, by not suffering all the Light to come into Court, that may be material in the Cause.

Having said thus much concerning the Justice of your Method of Proceeding, I now come to consider the second and the main Point of Justice to be regarded in this Bill; which is, Whether the Bishop be Guilty, or not, of the treasonable Practices charg'd upon him in it. And in this I shall be the shorter, because your Lordships have heard the Evidence on both Sides, and all that has been said from the Bar by both Sides upon it; and because there are many Noble Lords in the House, much abler to lay things of this Nature distinctly and clearly before your Lordships, than I am.

The Cause of Kelly is so connected with that of the Bishop, that I must beg leave to speak a few Words to the one, before I proceed to the other. As to Kelly, I would observe in the first Place, that one strong Presumption of his Guilt is, that when he was first taken up, he resisted the Officers; that he seized his Sword, and some Papers that had been taken away from him; and was resolute to burn those Papers, tho' with the apparent Hazard of his own Life, and being guilty of the Murder of one of the Officers that had seized him.

In the next Place, it is prov'd before your Lordships, that after he was taken up, the People at his lodgings burn'd the rest of his Papers; a plain Evidence, that they who knew his manner of Life and Conversation, suspected that he was Guilty. And this is agreeable to what Neynoe told the Chancellor of the Exchequer; that there was at that time, a general burning of Papers.

Thirdly, Another Presumption of his Guilt, is, that when he was taken up the second time, he offered several Sums of Money to the People of the House where he was in Custody, to suffer him to escape, as appears from their Oaths at the Bar. These things I mention, not as full Proofs of his Guilt, but as strong Presumptions, that make every thing else that is sworn against him very credible.

The chief Evidences of his Guilt, are, a great Number of intercepted letters, both from him, and to him, containing treasonable Matters. Those from him, are by several Witnesses prov'd to be his Hand-writing, particularly by the Officers of the Post-Office, who took them and transcribed them. And as to those to him, several Witnesses have prov'd that he gave Orders at several Publick-Houses to take them in, when they came from the Post; that he himself received them from thence, opened, and read them: And it is also farther proved, that Answers were returned to them in his own Hand-writing. These things all together, I take to be such plain and strong Evidences of his Guilt, that I shall trouble your Lordships no farther about him.

As to the Person concerned in this Bill, tho' it be a great Trouble to me, to think that any Bishop of this Church should be guilty of so foul a Crime, as that objected to him; yet I cannot but be of Opinion, that if he be really guilty, the Interest of our Church, as well as Justice to our King and Country, do require, that he should be convicted and punished. And indeed, I cannot but be humbly of Opinion, that whoever believes Kelly to be guilty, must believe the Bishop to be guilty too.

I shall not insist upon what is commonly called Hear-say Evidence, tho' there be a great deal of it against the Bishop; only must observe, that the Conduct of a Protestant Bishop must have been very odd and unaccountable, if he be innocent, that so many Jacobites (as have done in this Case) should declare, that they not only esteemed him to be in the Plot, but to be the chief Conductor of it. It is, however, fit to say something as to the Case of Neynoe; because the Bishop and his Counsel have taken up so much of your Lordships Time, and produced so many Witnesses to prove him a Knave. I did indeed myself always think him to be a Knave, and that nothing that he said was to be believed, merely upon his Authority: But on the other side, the Testimony of the greatest Knave in the World, may be taken against himself: and they themselves have proved, that he was a Jacobite, and thoroughly in that Interest, even when he was making some Discoveries against them; and therefore, what he says, in that respect, bears some Weight; as being against Persons whom he favoured, and would hurt as little as possible. Some other Things that he had said are also confirmed by concurrent Circumstances, and other Discoveries; and these may have their Weight, tho' he were never so great a Knave. One of the Things that he said in his Confession, was, that he frequently went with Kelly to the Bishop of Rockester's, and left him there (as Kelly told him) to write his letters. This is confirmed by a credible Witness at your Bar, who swears, that Neynoe used to be frequently at his House, and told him, at least three or four times, that he waited there for a sensible ingenious Gentleman, that was gone about Business to the Bishop of Rockester: He did not indeed tell him his Name; but the thing seems to me to look stronger than if he had; because it would have looked more like a Piece of Art and Contrivance, to have told the Name of a Man, whom he knew to be gone to the Bishop about a criminal Correspondence. I would only beg leave to take notice to your Lordships of one thing more relating to Neynoe: the Bishop's Witnesses have fully proved, that Neynoe told them, that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had given him several Sums of Money, to endeavour to get out of Kelly, the Explication of the Cant Names that were used in the Correspondence;

dence; and that he had promis'd him much greater Sums, if he would go to France, and get it out of Dillon and the Jacobites there: The Inference from which I take to be very plain, that the Court did not then know, who the Persons were, that were designed by those Cant Names; and that they did believe that Kelly did know, and that Dillon and the Jacobites in France knew too: which effectually and fully confutes that Suggestion of the Bishop, of which he did not bring the least Proof, that the Plot was a Contrivance of Persons in Power.

The next Thing I would beg leave to take notice of, relating to the Bishop, is a letter (taken among his Papers) from a lady of great Quality; of which the Bishop, tho' it was objected to him by the Counsel for the Bill, has taken no notice; which I conceive he would and ought to have done, had it been possible to give any fair Account of it. The Lady * in that letter tells him, that she sent something that she had received, she could not tell for whom; but let it be for whom it would, she thought He might be trusted, and that it could not be put into better Hands. A strong Suspicion this, considering all Circumstances, that here was a Correspondence by Cant Names, which the Lady did not certainly know, but believed the Bishop might; or however, that he was in all Events a Person to be trusted.

Another very suspicious Circumstance against the Bishop, is, the letters from Captain Halfstead, and what has been proved at your Bar, that this same Captain Halfstead, a little before he went in his Ship to fetch over the Duke of Ormond, waited upon the Bishop, and stay'd with him an Hour. This Thing indeed directly proves nothing; but all things considered, is very suspicious: and the more so, because the Bishop has given no Account, either of his Acquaintance with him in general, or of the particular Reason of that Visit, at a time that leaves so much ground to suspect the worst.

The next Particular that deserves your Lordships Consideration, is, the letter to Dubois, found among the Bishop's Papers when he was taken up, and found now to be sealed with the same Seal with that letter taken upon the Bishop's Servant, which he confesseth to be his own Hand-writing. It is not indeed proved, that the letter to Dubois is the Hand-writing of the Bishop: but any body that reads it, will easily be persuaded, that it is not the natural and ordinary Way of Writing of any Person, but a disguised Hand like a Print; except only some few letters which escaped the Care of the Writer, and are very like those of the Bishop. But after a long Examination, which has taken up a great deal of your Lordships Time, it appears plainly, that the Seals are the same, and that the one could not be counterfeited from the other; because, the first letter was originally taken with the Seal broken, and was in the Possession of the House of Commons when the second letter was taken upon the Bishop's Servant. It appears plainly by this letter to Dubois, that the Person who wrote it was in a secret and dangerous Correspondence; that he was an Acquaintance of Mr. Johnson, or Kelly; that he received letters by his Hand, and wrote an Answer in his Hand. How far all these Circumstances, taken together, prove the Bishop to be the Author of this letter, I must submit to your Lordships Judgment: for my part, I think they do; especially considering, that the Bishop has given no Account of it, which he ought to do by Law, of a letter of this Nature, plainly proved upon Oath to have been in his Possession.

I now beg leave to proceed to that which is the principal Charge against the Bishop, the dictating to Mr. Kelly the three letters of the 20th of April; sign'd, one, by the Name of Jones; another by the Name of Illington; the third by the Figures 1378; which the Decypherers explain by the Letter R. The first, directed to Mr. Chivers, or Dillon; the second to Mr. Musgrave, or Lord Marr; the third, to Mr. Jackson, or the Pre-tender.

It may be proper, before I take notice of the Proofs which shew that the Bishop did really dictate these letters, to take notice of an Objection with respect to the Time: The letters are dated the 20th of April, and the Bishop has produced five or six of his Servants, who swear, that about that Time he was so very ill, that he could not write himself; and that he did not see any Person to whom he could dictate these letters. Now in answer to this, it may replied: That it does not appear, that all the Servants which the Bishop then had, were produced before your Lordships; and you cannot but be sensible, that treasonable Practices are commonly carried on in a very secret Way: and it appears, that the Bishop's Correspondence with Kelly has been so carried on; for tho' there is plain Evidence, that they were frequently together, and that they were acquainted is confess'd, both by the Bishop and Kelly; yet, scarce any one of the Servants produc'd, would confess, that ever they had seen Kelly, or so much as ever heard of the Name of Johnson, which was the Name by which he went. In the next place, none of these Witnesses prove, that the Bishop was so bad that he could see no Company, till about the 16th or 17th of April; and it's very probable, that the letters must have been dictated so long, if not longer, before the 20th on which they are dated; because Kelly was to transcribe and put them into Cypher, which is a Work of Time and Care; and perhaps after all, they might be designedly post-dated, that the Bishop finding himself going into a great Fit of the Gout, might have all that to plead which your Lordships have heard, if the Matter should ever be called in question.

Upon all these Considerations, I cannot but think it very clear, that the Bishop might have dictated these letters: We are now therefore to examine whether he did or no.

The first Thing that brought any Light into this Matter, was the small Accident of a Dog being sent from France, which, by the intercepted letters appeared to be sent to one that went by the Names of Jones and Illington. When Mrs. Barnes was examined before the Council, upon Kelly's being taken up, it appears plainly she was upon the Reserve, and would confess nothing that she thought might tend any way to hurt Kelly: but being ask'd about this little Dog, who it was for, she readily answered, that Kelly had told her it was for the Bishop of Rochebester; which she has since confirm'd by Oath at the Bar of this House. This little Accident, not suspected at the time of the Discovery to be of any any Consequence, has given Occasion since, to look into so many Circumstances, as plainly bring the matter home to the Bishop. And indeed, if all the particulars in the intercepted letters be compared, with those things that are in proof with respect to the Bishop, I believe your Lordships will be of Opinion, that they cannot all belong to any one Person in the World besides himself. In the first place, since it's proved that Kelly wrote these letters, the person who dictated 'em must have been an Acquaintance of Kelly's; it is confessed on all hands that the Bishop was so. In the next place, it is implied in one of the intercepted letters, that the person that went by the Name of Jones and Illington, was a Clergyman; so far still agrees to the Bishop. Again further: this person is mentioned in all the intercepted letters, as a person of great Consequence and Credit, upon whose advice the party very much depend: and indeed the very Air and Manner of writing the three letters, plainly shew, that the person who wrote 'em, thought himself so; this also agrees with all the other Discoveries about the Bishop. Were there no other particulars but these, it will be hard to imagine that they could well belong to any other person. But if we consider further, that this Jones or Illington came to Town such a Day of the Month, went out of Town such another Day of the Month, came back again to Town such another Day, was himself sick at such a time, that his Wife was sick at such another time, and that she died at such a time; all which are in Evidence with respect to the Bishop; if we do, I say, consider all these Circumstances together, it will plainly appear, that they can belong to no other Man in the World but the Bishop.

After this, I humbly apprehend nothing need be said; however I beg leave just to mention something relating to the letter that was taken upon the Bishop's Servant; by the whole Air of which letter, it looks as coming from a person who did not esteem himself to be innocent, but who thought, that nothing could be legally proved against him: and therefore there is not one Word of his Innocence in it, which is the first Thought that must naturally have come into the Head of any one that really was so. He writes wholly with the air of a Man that had been used to Intrigues; speaks of the Concern that his Friends should have for him and the Cause; discourses largely about the Kind of Evidence that was against him; takes notice in particular what cannot affect him: If (says he) the Narrative * relates chiefly to Neynoe's Sample's, and Laver's Affairs, so far it cannot affect me; for I never heard of the Names of either of the Three, till after this Plot broke out. It is plain by these Words, that he did not then know what was in the Narrative against him; but he is very sure, that neither Neynoe nor Sample, nor Laver could affect him. Could an innocent Man have thus distinguished, and could not they have affected him as much as any body else, if he really was innocent? Nothing can affect such a Person but Forgery, and that may come from any Quarter: but in the whole letter he does not express the least Suspicion of Forgery; and yet, as I said before, this is the first thought that must naturally have come into the Head of an innocent Person, because nothing but Forgery could do him any harm. I would only just beg leave to hint at this one thing more; That as he says, that these three Persons could not affect him, because he never knew 'em; so accordingly they have not affected him, or said any thing of their own Knowledge about him; which is one good Evidence, that what is said against him is not forged but real.

I am afraid that I have troubled your Lordships too long, tho' with a very imperfect Representation of the Justice of this bill; and therefore shall be shorter upon the next Head, which is the Expediency or Prudence of it.

Had there been what we call legal Evidence against the party concerned, your Lordships, I take for granted, would not easily have gone to this extraordinary Method of Proceeding: for tho' it cannot be doubted but that the Parliament have this Power, whenever they think proper to make use of it; yet, I do agree with other noble Lords, that it is a Power not fit to be used, but where and when the Publick Good requires we should use it, which I humbly conceive is the Case at present. A most dangerous Plot against the Government has been discovered: a great number of letters and papers relating to it have been laid before the two Houses of Parliament: these have been printed and published by Order of both Houses: The Eyes, not only of our own Country, but of all Europe, are upon us, to see what we will do. Tho' the Evidence of a Plot in general, be as clear as the light; and the Evidence against several particular Persons very plain; yet, as our laws are, it is not what we call legal Evidence: The Parties concerned will make no Confession, and we have not the Methods used in all other Countries, to extort Confession from them. What then? Shall we see our King and Country in Danger, and do nothing for them? Shall Conspirators go on with total Impunity, only because they are obstinate, and artificially screen themselves behind the law? I doubt, my Lords, that if this prove the Case, we shall appear ridiculous in the Eyes of all the World: That our Friends and Enemies both at Home and Abroad will think, that we have no Zeal for the Preservation of our King and Government; and if once they do think so, your Lordships cannot but be all sensible, how this must encourage our Enemies and discourage our Friends, and bring us into that contemptible State, in which no Government was ever long supported.

But a noble Lord has been pleased to observe, that the best way to serve the Government, is to do popular Things, and by that to procure the love of the people. I perfectly agree in this with the noble Lord, and cannot but be humbly of Opinion, that this Government has done so, as far as it has been able: Our Religion has been preserved; Justice has been equally administered to all sorts of People; none of our Rights or Liberties have been invaded; we have lived at Peace at home, while many other Countries have suffered all the Miseries of War: these are, or I am sure should be esteemed, popular things; and if some other things, which might have been for the Good of the People, have not been done, it has been the Fault of those that complain most, and not of the Government. And if there be Discontents now in the Kingdom, it's plain that the Foundation of 'em was laid long ago, by the Enemies to our present Happy Settlement: For I am persuaded, that the Discontents were higher and greater within four Months after the King came to England, and shewed themselves much more, in a number of Rebellious Riots and Tumults, than any thing that appears at present; and yet nothing then could be objected to the Government, but that some Persons were not preferred, who both before and since have made it too plain that they were not fit to be trusted.

But as it is the Duty of those in Power, to do all the popular things they can; so I must beg leave to observe, that it is the Duty of all the Subjects (and the greater they are the more it is their Duty) to put the best Interpretation upon the Actions of the Government, that things will bear; not to misrepresent; not to put false Colours upon things; and much more not to invent lyes and slanders, and disperse 'em up and down the Kingdom, in order to alienate the Affections of the People. These things have been done, and done with great Care and Diligence, and by some too, who would take it very ill to be called Jacobites. These are the chief Causes of the Disaffection among us, and indeed of all the real Grievances we labour under. Is the King forced to put the Nation to Charges, to keep up a greater Number of Forces than otherwise would be needful? It is intirely owing to this Cause. Are our Debts not paid? Is our Credit not so good as we would be glad to have it? Let this artificial Raising of Discontents once cease, and these things will quickly mend of themselves. Indeed, were this a time for it, I think it might plainly be proved, that the Debts we labour under had never been contracted, but for this absurd discontented Humour: Nay, it is to this, that we intirely owe the Danger we are in from this very plot; for it's plain from all the Intelligence we have about it, that it was carried on upon the Confidence, that all discontented Persons were Jacobites: and tho' the Conspirators did in this greatly deceive themselves: yet it's certain that they built their Hopes upon this Foundation.

But it's further said by the same noble Lord, that this extraordinary way of Proceedings will not procure Friends to the King; but will rather anger and provoke, and so hurt his Interest instead of helping it.

To this I answer, that I do indeed suspect, that many People will be angry; as I hear that the Jacobites thro' the Kingdom are: A plain Evidence this, that they do not think that the Friends of King George are worrying one another; for they would not be angry at that. Those that most desire to destroy our liberties, are become, upon this Occasion, the great patrons of liberty; as indeed they have been in a great measure ever since the Revolution, when any thing has been proposed for the Support of the Government. No sooner were their Schemes of Arbitrary Power in the Time of King James overturned, and a new Government settled which they did not like; but they, in order to destroy it, set themselves against every thing that was necessary for it's Defence, under the Colour of liberty; that is, they desired to have their own Hands as loose as possible, to hurt it; and the Hands of the Government as much tied up as possible, that it should not be able, either to hurt them, or defend itself. Thus at present, they clamour against the Additional Forces, tho' established by Parliament; and against all Methods, either to discover or punish the Conspiracy. And they judge right in this for their Cause; because, if they could have carried these points to their mind, they might then be more free in carrying on their Plots, and with less Danger put them in Execution. For these Reasons I take it for granted, that all these people will be angry; but I cannot but humbly be of Opinion, that it is much better they should be angry with us for defending ourselves, than that they should first sneer at us, as Fools for neglecting our Defence; and then be able more easily to undo us.

As to others, that possibly may be displeas'd at what we are now doing, I would hope, that a little Time and consideration will set them right, and convince them, that it is not only just, but (all things considered) necessary to be done; because, if the Parliament do, upon this occasion, shew their Zeal in the Defence of the Government, it will animate and give Courage to the Friends of it both at home and abroad. Foreign Powers will be apt to court the Friendship of a Prince, at the Head of a mighty Kingdom; if they see, that he and his Posterity are like to continue there: All the Affairs of the Kingdom, which respect them, will be managed with more Ease, with more Honour, and with less Expence; and they will be inclined, not to foment but to discover Plots, if they came to their Knowledge. But on the contrary, if we give 'em any Reason to suspect, that we look another way, they will quickly do so too, and strive which shall be forwardest to help the Pretender to involve us in Blood and Ruin. And as to the Subjects at home, I would only observe, that all Mankind are apt to shew most Zeal for a Government, when they think it safe, and like to stand, and be able to protect them: But to suspect the contrary is a most dangerous Temptation to the Fidelity of Subjects as has been seen by the Experience of all Ages. And therefore I hope, that your Lordships will, by your Unanimity and Zeal in this matter effectually convince the World, that the Danger does and shall lie in opposing, and not in defending the present Government.

I hope that what I have now been saying, has convinced your Lordships, both of the Justice and Prudence of this Bill; give me leave to observe, that your Moderation has been very great too, both in giving so full and fair a Hearing, and in making the Penalties so much less than the Crimes deserve.

It is now above a Year since the Plot was first discovered; a Plot of a most desperate Nature, to seize the Persons of the King and Prince, and to bring in a Popish Pretender upon us. The Execution of which, was to be begun by seizing the Tower, and attacking the City of London on all sides; and was thence to spread itself into all parts of the Kingdom. Lord! what Confusion; what Murders; what Plundering; what burnings must this have caused? Whatever had been the Issue, the very Attempt must probably have occasioned the Sacking and Burning of this great City: The utter loss at once of all publick Credit: The Murder of infinite Numbers of People: The Astonishment, and Amazement, and Undoing of almost all, but of those vile Wretches who would have had the plundering of all sides. If it had gone on, how many of the Noble Lords that I now see, would have been before this in their Graves? But I forbear going any further in this Tragical Representation, and desire only to observe, That tho' it has been discovered above a Year, how very little of it we yet know: and I do appeal to your Lordships Consideration, who know the State of the World very well, whether there be any Country in it either Bond or Free, which, had they discover'd but a fifth part of what we know of a Plot of this Nature, would not in a Week's time have found means to get to the Bottom of it. However, my Lords, I still commend your Moderation; and do hope, that we shall never find Reason to repent of it, and that this little which is now doing, will be a Warning to Conspirators, not to provoke further the Patience of an injured Nation.

I doubt not but upon this and all other Occasions, your Lordships will be ready to stand by a wife, a good, and a merciful Prince; and that you will, according to your Oaths, defend him, against all Treasons, and Traitorous Conspiracies whatsoever.

And in the last place, give me leave, as a Christian and a Protestant Bishop to hope, you will do your best, that a Popish Pretender may never be set at the Head of this Protestant Church: One, who must think himself bound in Conscience to destroy it; and instead of that pure Religion which we now enjoy, bring in horrible Superstition and Idolatry, Nonsense and Tyranny; attended with all the sad Calamities, which Popish Princes always have brought, and always must bring upon Protestant Countries.

After whom the Duke of Wharton spake as follows:

SOME Words which have fallen from the Reverend Prelate, who spoke last, have made it, in some measure, necessary for me to trouble your Lordships with the Reasons that induced me to differ with him in Opinion, and to give my Negative to the Bill now depending before us.

If I don't misunderstand his Lordship (and if I should mistake his Meaning, I hope he will set me right) he was pleased to say, That Persons without Doors would be apt to cast different Reflections on the particular Behaviour of every Lord this Day: That those who were for the passing of this Bill, would be accused of Malice and Partiality; and those who were of contrary Sentiments, would be branded with Disaffection to the present Happy Establishment.

For my Part, I am far from thinking, that Considerations of this Nature will have the least Weight with any of your Lordships; and am very certain, that every one, who gives his Vote on this important Occasion, has attended, with the greatest Care, to the Evidence that has been given at your Bar, which is the Foundation of this Day's Debate.

The Proofs that have been brought to support the Charge, and the Bishop's Defence, are to be thoroughly considered; and when your Lordships proceed according to the Rules of Justice, you will not fear, nor value, any Consequences which may attend the discharging of your Duty.

So far I will venture to affirm, That the best Way to shew our Zeal to his Majesty, and the present Government, is, To act in all Cases, both in our Judicial and Legislative Capacities, with that Honour and Impartiality, as ought to flourish in this great Council of the Nation.

I could have wished the Noble Lords who have given their Reasons for the passing this extraordinary Law, would have entred into the particular Circumstances of this Case, and considered it singly on its own Merits: But instead of speaking on that Head, I cannot but take Notice, That they have wandered from that (which ought to have been their only Consideration) into learned Discourses on Bills of this Nature in general.

I shall not trouble this House with any Arguments against Attainders. Many Lords, of greater Weight and Abilities than myself, have already spoke fully to this Point in the preceding Debates.

I shall only so far agree with the Reverend Prelate, who spoke before me, That it is proper, that such a Power of punishing by Bill, should be vested in the Legislature, to be exercised on extraordinary Emergencies: But then I must add, If ever that Power is abused: if ever it is employed to destroy innocent Persons, it is evident, That the lives, liberties, and Fortunes of every Subject in Britain are in the utmost Danger, and liable to be sacrificed to the Fury of a Party.

It has been admitted, That every Bill of Pains and Penalties is to stand upon its own bottom; and that the passing of one Act of this Nature, is not to be brought as a precedent for the supporting of another, unless there be convincing Evidence to enforce each Case. And therefore the proper Consideration now before us, is, Whether the Evidence offer'd against the Unfortunate Prelate, is sufficient to induce your Lordships to believe him Guilty of the heavy Crimes of which he stands accused?

My Lords, I shall take the liberty of considering the whole Proofs that have been brought on this Occasion, both by way of Charge, Defence, Reply, and Rejoinder; and tho' I own myself very unequal to this Task, yet, since no other Lord, who could do it much better, has undertaken it, I think it my Duty as a Peer, and as an Englishman, to lay it before your Lordships in the best Manner I am able.

The Method I shall observe for the more clear Stating of the Case, shall be to lay every particular Branch of Evidence before you, and to distinguish the several Parts of the Accusation, and consider them separately, to avoid Confusion, and to be the more exact in what I have to offer.

I hope, I shall have your Lordship's Indulgence for taking up so much of your Time as this will require: But I assure you, I shall endeavour to be as brief as the Nature of the Thing will admit, and will intrude on your Patience as little as possible.

I must also desire your Lordships will pardon me, if I repeat several Arguments that have been used by the Counsel at the Bar; and if I even mention some Things which fell from me in the Debate on Mr. Kelly's Bill, whose Case is very much interwoven with the present; so that it is almost impossible to avoid it.

Before I go any further, I cannot but say, That were these Crimes plainly proved against the Bishop of Rocheſter, his Sacred Function and Station in the Church would be Aggravations of his Guilt: But, as this is certain on the one hand, so on the other, your Lordships will require very clear Demonstration, before you can think it possible for a Bishop of the Protestant Church (who has signalized himself in Defence of the Reformation, and the only one of that Bench where he had lately the Honour of sitting, that ever wrote in favour of Martin Luther) to ingage in a Conspiracy for introducing Popery and Arbitrary Power amongst us.

My Lords, the Counsel for the Bill opened the Charge with acquainting the House, That it was only to be supported by producing of decyphered letters, full of fictitious Names and Cant Words: They were so very fair as to confess, they had not one living Witness that could charge the Bishop with any thing, nor even so much as a letter under his own Hand; therefore, on the first View, this Manner of condemning, on such kind of Evidence, ought to require our utmost Caution, lest we should establish a Method, which our Enemies may hereafter take to destroy the greatest and most innocent Subject in the Kingdom.

Mr. Wearg cited two Cases, which he would willingly have us receive as Precedents, to justify the admitting of circumstantial Evidence: The one was, the Case of Ashton, who was condemned on Circumstances only. But, my Lords, this was before the Treason-Act was passed, which requires Two Positive Witnesses; and nothing could induce the Legislature to pass that Law, but a thorough Conviction of the Danger that might attend the admitting of any Proofs which were not positive or certain.

The second Case he cited, was that of Harrison for the Murder of Dr. Clench; and the learned Gentleman tells you, that it was the pulling out of a Handkerchief that led to the Discovery of that Murder. It is very certain, Circumstances may lead to the Discovery of Evidence; but must be well supported before they can be converted into convincing Proofs.

The first Piece of Evidence that was offered at the Bar, was the Extracts of Letters from abroad, which this House seems, in some measure, to have declared to be immaterial, when they did not so much as desire to see Copies of the whole letters, nor the Originals; and even admitted one to be read which was Anonymous. But it will not be improper to observe, that thro' this whole Correspondence the Bishop of Rockester is not named. And therefore I cannot see why they took up our Time with reading Papers quite foreign from this Case; especially since every Body allows there has been a Conspiracy, which is the only Fact to be gathered from this Correspondence.

The next Point which was attempted to be proved, was, That Captain Halstead went to fetch the late Duke of Ormond, and was at the Deanery with the Bishop before he embark'd. There are also two letters found in the Bishop's Close-Stool, from this Gentleman to his Lordship, which were read, and are only Appointments for Visits, but mention nothing of this Design; and, I think, there was a Coachman, that proved Halstead was an Hour with him some Days before he left London.

This, my Lords, was opened as a Matter of great Importance: But your Lordships must remember, that the supposed Design of Halstead's bringing the late Duke of Ormond into England, is only proved by Hearsay. One of the Crew belonging to the Ship in which he went, has deposed, That it was the Common Report at Bilboa, that Halstead came there on that Errand.

How far common Fame is to prevail, I submit: But if this Hearsay were true, is every Person who was an Hour with this Gentleman before his Departure, supposed to be privy to this Project? And what a strain'd Construction is it to insinuate, the Bishop of Rockester knew of his Intention, because he received a Visit from Halstead, who was a Tenant under his Bishoprick? And this is the more extraordinary, since it has not been so much as pretended that any Correspondence has passed between the Reverend Prelate and the late Duke.

They then produced letters directed to one Dumvill, which were decyphered. And Mr. Willes was examined to prove, that they were rightly and justly explained.

My Lords, It very well deserves your Lordships Consideration, how far this kind of Evidence is to be admitted: It has appeared to your Lordships by the Oath of Mr. Willes himself, that it is an Art which depends upon Conjecture; for this Gentleman has confessed, that every Man is liable to a Mistake in this, as well as in other Sciences. He tells you, that he and his Brother Decypherer varied in One or Two Instances: He allows, that the Chasms, which they were forc'd to leave in those letters, might alter the Sense of them. And, therefore I cannot but think, that an Accusation grounded on such Proofs, is uncertain and precarious.

The Person who is the Decypherer is not to be confuted, and what he says must be taken for granted, because the Key cannot be produced with Safety to the Publick; and, consequently (if his Conjectures be admitted to be Evidence) our Lives and Fortunes must depend on the Skill and Honesty of Decyphers, who may with Safety impose on the Legislature, when there are not Means of contradicting them for want of seeing their Key.

My Lords, in the Case of Coleman, the Key was printed, as has been well observed by the Counsel at the Bar; and I am very much surprized, that Gentlemen of such Abilities and Integrity, as the Members of the Secret Committee (who, in another Place, were so exact as to print the French Originals with the translated letters, that the World might see how just and candid the Prosecutors of the Plot were) did not, for the Satisfaction of the Publick, permit us to see the Key in print, on the Truth of which depends such a Chain of Consequences.

I own myself intirely ignorant of this Art: But, as I should be very far from condemning a Man on my own Conjecture, I should much less do it on the Conjectures of others.

The greatest Certainty Humane Reason knows, is, a Mathematical Demonstration; and were I brought to your Lordships Bar, to be try'd upon a Proposition of Sir Isaac Newton's, which he upon Oath should swear to be true, I would appeal to your Lordships, whether I should not be unjustly condemned, unless he produced his Demonstration, that I might have the liberty of enquiring into the Truth of it, from Men of equal Skill?

I cannot think any Man will allow Evidence of this Nature to be good: But if in this Case relating to the decyphered letters to Dumvill, your Lordships should admit it, there is nothing mentioned in them that can affect the Bishop, neither is he at all nam'd in them, but they are only brought to prove the Conspiracy in general.

The Examinations of Mr. Neynoe are the next Points that are laid before your lordships: And indeed, I must do the Gentlemen at the Bar the Justice of saying, That they forbore mentioning any thing of them, when they open'd the Charge.

They were so sensible that such Proofs could not have the least weight to affect the bishop, that tho' in the Case of Mr. Kelly they were produced against him, as very material to support that Bill, yet they did not think proper to name them against the bishop; which, I am thorowly persuaded, is owing to what appeared at your Bar by the Examination of Mr. Bingley, and the universal Opinion which every Person seemed to have of the Villany of Mr. Neynoe's Transactions.

My lords, These Examinations were never signed by the Person, neither was he ever examin'd to them upon Oath: So that were they of Consequence, and he a Person of Credit, they could not be admitted to affect any Person whatsoever, in any Court of Justice or Equity. I don't mean, That they could not be read according to the strict Rules of Westminster-Hall; which is admitted on all Sides they could not: But I dare affirm, that no Credit can be given to 'em on any Account whatsoever.

The Person was closely confin'd, and consequently in the Hands of the Government; so that he was at that Time under the greatest Apprehensions, which might, in some measure, prevent him from speaking Truth, with that Sincerity and Candour of which every Person ought to be Master, when he is examin'd on Matters of such nice Nature.

Tho' these Papers were intirely given up by the Counsel for the Bill, yet the Extract of them was read, and they are the visible Foundation of this Charge; and if they are insignificant, the whole Accusation falls to the Ground: For the whole Proof of the bishop's dictating to Mr. Kelly, depends on Mr. Neynoe's bare Affirmation.

The whole of what Neynoe says, or is supposed to say, is, That Mr. Kelly told him he wrote the bishop's letters for him: Mr. Kelly denies it, and Mr. Neynoe was so conscious that he had been guilty of many Crimes, that he endeavoured to withdraw from Justice, and the Providence of God, it is said, intercepted him.

My lords, if you will consider the Improbabilities of this Evidence, altho' it were upon Oath, and signed by him, it cannot be supported. He tells you, That he was intrusted to draw up Memorials to the Regent: Yet none of those have been produced: And yet it is apparent the Copies of them might, with Ease, have been obtained, if he had been as thorowly pressed to deliver them, as he was to declare he wrote them.

These Memorials, he says, were wrote by the Order of Mr. Henry Watson, whom he takes to be the late Earl Mariball: And I am certain your lordships did not think that Fact material, when you came to a Resolution, That the bishop of Rochester should not be at liberty to ask, if Enquiry was made of the said Neynoe, or if he gave any Satisfaction to the lords of the Council, touching that important Fact of Watson's, whom he took to be Earl Mariball, lying with him several Nights.

It was very well observed by a learned Gentleman at the Bar, That no body can believe the late Earl Mariball would have reposed so great a Confidence in a Person, who was intirely a Stranger to him, and of such little Note; and the Jacobite Party must be in a low Condition, when they make use of such a Creature to write Papers of that Importance.

There is so much Improbability in this and other Points, and so much Contradiction in several Parts of his Examinations, that they appear to me, and must to all reasonable Men, as the Dictates of Fear, and not agreeable to Truth.

He mentions, That the Reverend Prelate (for such I still may call him) had some Favours offer'd him by the Court; but that cannot be true, and must be added to the rest of these Absurdities.

But, my lords, what in my Opinion clears up all these Matters, and makes it impossible for me to give the least Credit to this, or any other Part of the Charge, are, The several Testimonies of Bingley, Skeene, and Stewart.

I must observe to your lordships, That the two first Persons, Bingley, and Skeene, are actually now in separate Custodies; and consequently could have no Communication one with another. The Third is at Liberty; but his Testimony is so thorowly supported by Mr. Gordon and Mr. Kynaston, that no doubt can arise as to the Veracity of it.

These Gentlemen, who are in the Hands of the Government, are under Hopes and Fears; and therefore, it is certain, when they speak a Language, which, perhaps, may be disagreeable to those on whom they at present chiefly depend, it must be the Spirit of Truth that prevails.

Mr. Bingley was before us in the Case of Kelly, and was also examin'd at the Bar of the House of Commons, tho' not upon Oath; and tho' he has been more severely treated, as he told your lordships, and more strictly confined since his first Examination, yet he has persisted in his Story: And tho' he was so long at your Bar, and so many Questions put to him, yet he never varied in any one Circumstance, but appeared consistent thro' the whole Course of his Behaviour.

I shall not detain your lordships with recapitulating his whole Evidence, for I did it very fully on a former Occasion. But your lordships will remember, he told you, Neynoe abounded in Money, which Neynoe said (after he was apprehended at Deal) an Honourable Person (and on this Occasion, I hope, I may name him) Mr. Walpole gave him: And more particularly, he mentions 50*l.* which Neynoe said he received the Night before he went to France.

Bingley told your lordships, That Neynoe had assured him, he used to meet this Honourable Person in the Stable-Yard at Chelsea: And, my lords, the Errand on which he was going to France, was, To discover some Secrets relating to Cyphers, which he would have engaged Bingley to have done for him; and particularly, to get them, if possible, out of Mr. Kelly, Which, he said, could be obtain, would be of great Advantage to him.

That Neynoe had declared to him, He would be even with Mr. Kelly, before he was aware of it, or Words to that Effect: And that Mr. Kelly always seem'd averse to any Acquaintance with Mr. Neynoe, of whom he entertained a mean Opinion,

That Neynoe's Father refused him Money; which makes it highly probable that his Poverty was the Occasion of his Villany: And that when he was taken at Deal, he had declared to him, Mr. Walpole expected to find the Plot about him; and since Mr. Walpole could not, he must make one for him.

Neynoe told Bingley, That this Honourable Person had vowed Destruction to the Bishop of Rochester, by saying, He would pull down the Pride of this Haughty Prelate; which is sufficient to convince your lordships how little Regard ought to be had to the Hearsay Evidence of so false a Wretch.

Mr. Bingley says, That part of this Account he had given to the lords of the Council: And I could have wished, that his Examination (as well as some others to the same purpose, which were taken about the same time) had been laid before the Parliament.

Mr. Skeene, who is also in Custody, has deposed, That he lay in the same House with Neynoe, and had some Conversations with him.

That Neynoe had told him, What he had said of the Bishop of Rochester was intirely false. And,

That Mr. Walpole had offered him a considerable Annuity to turn Evidence; and had given him Instructions before he was called in to the Lords, what Questions would be asked him, and what Answers he should make, and threaten'd him with Newgate if he would not comply.

Skeene says further, That Neynoe swore (and I hope the Reverend Bench will, in such a Case, permit me to repeat the Words) by God, there were two Plots; One of Mr. Walpole's, against the protesting Lords, and one of his, to bite Mr. Walpole of Money: And this seems to be the only Time that ever Mr. Neynoe averr'd any thing upon Oath.

To convince the World, what a Creature this Neynoe was, he tells Skeene further, That once at Lord Townshend's Office, he had a great Inclination to have stabb'd the Chancellor of the Exchequer. He tells you, That Neynoe had wrote a Paper to declare. That all he had said of Lord Orrery was false.

My lords, The next witness was Mr. Stewart, who was unfortunately in Custody when Neynoe was brought to Town from Deal.

Stewart says, That he slept the second Night with Neynoe: That Neynoe had told him what he had said of the Bishop, was false; and that Mr. Walpole had offered him a great Sum of Money, if he would swear to what he said, and turn Evidence, which he declared he could not do.

That Mr. Walpole had taken him into another Room before he was examined, and told him what Questions he would probably be asked, and what Answers he should give.

He says, That Neynoe told him also, That he had like to have kill'd Mr. Walpole, and so put an End to the Plot: And that Mr. Walpole had given him a Paper of Directions, which he was to answer, in order to be a Witness against the Protesting Lords.

As a Confirmation of his Testimony, Stewart says, He told this to Mr. Gordon before Mr. Neynoe was drowned, and to Mr. Kynaston before the Meeting of the Parliament.

Mr. Gordon confirms this Part of his Evidence, and assures your lordships, that he had heard it from Stewart before the Death of Neynoe. And Mr. Kynaston, a Gentleman of an undoubted Character, lately a Member of Parliament for Shrewsbury, has assured your lordships, That he was acquainted with Stewart's Account of Neynoe before the Meeting of the Parliament: And adds this Circumstance, That when in the Appendix he saw those six Questions printed, he shewed them to Stewart, who seem'd rejoiced, and said, You see, Sir, what I told you is true.

Such concurring Testimonies from Persons kept so separate, and who are speaking against their own private Interest, must have the greatest Weight, and must at least prevent any rational and impartial Person from giving the least Credit to the bare Hearsay of this Philip Neynoe.

If any doubt could remain, as to the Validity of this Testimony, it is sufficiently confirm'd by the Persons brought to disprove it.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer himself does not pretend to deny that Neynoe told these Things, but only adds other Circumstances to convince you of Neynoe's Villany, and assures you, That at the Time he was receiving Favours from him, he was thörowly convinc'd he intended to cheat him, which was the Occasion of his being apprehended.

He own'd the Transactions between them before Neynoe went to France, and particularly the Money mention'd by Bingley; which are Proofs that Neynoe must have disclosed these Secrets since they could not come from Mr. Walpole; and He and Neynoe only were privy to it.

Mr. Walpole has shewn your lordships the foul Draught of the Questions mention'd by Stewart; and when he denies that part of Neynoe's Declaration relating to the Instructions given him before the Examinations, he owns, he was twice alone with him; once the first Night of his being brought to Town, and the second time, when he gave him the Paper of Directions, which might be Foundation enough for Neynoe to frame so notorious a Falshood.

The Witnesses brought by the Counsel for the Bill, to the Character of Mr. Bingley, seem rather to confirm it than otherwise; and all agree, they never heard any thing against his Morality.— They indeed have said, he bore the Character of a Jacobite; and suffered for having dispersed a Libel: But Mr. Baron Gilbert, who was his Judge when that Punishment was inflicted on him, has told your lordships, That his private life was not vilified at his Trial, and that neither Perjury nor Forgery were ever laid to his Door.

Tho' the Punishment he suffered was the Pillory, yet it is the Crime, and not the Punishment, that makes the Ignominy; and for this I can appeal to the learned Judges.

In order to destroy the Evidence of Mr. Skeene, they produced one Pancier, who tells you, That Skeene had revealed many Secrets to him relating to the Plot; and particularly of a Military Chest, which was collected to carry on these supposed Designs, and support the Jacobites.—But I presume every body who heard the two Persons at the bar, could not but remark the Steadiness with which Mr. Skeene denied these Affeверations, and the Confusion with which the other affirmed them.

Mr. Pancier seem'd to drop something which intirely destroys any Credit that could be given to him, by saying, That he had owned to Mr. Skeene, that he was a Friend to this Administration; and yet has sworn, That after such a Declaration, Skeene had still persisted in his Story, and revealed some Part of this Intelligence to him. How far this is probable, your lordships are the best Judges.

Mr.

Mr. Pancier goes further, and tells you, That Part of this Conversation happened in St. James's Park, in the presence of one Dufour. This Dufour was in the Hands of the Government; and I can't conceive why we have never seen him or his Depositions, when it would have been so easy to have brought this corroborating Witness to Mr. Pancier's Testimony.

I can't but think, That the not producing this Man's Evidence, is a strong Circumstance to convince your Lordships he did not agree in the same Story with Mr. Pancier.

They also produced Skeene's Attainder for the Preston Rebellion: But there have been many Acts of Grace since, so that he is capable of being an Evidence: and there has nothing appeared to traduce his Character as a Man of Morals.

In order to shew your Lordship's, that Neynoe could not possibly make these Confessions to Mr. Skeene and Mr. Stewart, the Counsel for the Bill maintain, That they will prove Neynoe and the Prisoners were not together after the first Night.

This, my Lords, would be very material; but I think it appears, by the proofs brought to support this Assertion, that they frequently have conversed one with another.

The first Witness they call'd, was Mr. Crawford the Messenger, in whose House the Prisoners were in Custody; and my Lords, I can't but say, it seems very odd, they should bring a Man to swear he had done his Duty: He has told your Lordships, That Lord Townshend had given him Orders, that Neynoe should be close confined; and if, after that, it should appear, that he had neglected such Directions, there is no question, but that he instantly, and deservedly, would have been removed out of his Employment.

This Messenger, in this Situation, tells you, That after the first Night they never convers'd, to the best of his Knowledge: That Mr. Skeene call'd Neynoe a Rogue of an Informer; and spoke in very hard Terms of him; which I indeed think it appears the Fellow well deserv'd.

Crawford says, That Mr. Neynoe had some paper, two Sheets of which he found missing. He likewise swears, That Mr. Stewart lay upon the Stairs; and owns, he had at that time two Servant-maids.

Mrs. Crawford, his Mother, swears, That, to the best of her Knowledge, the prisoners were never together: That she kept the Keys of the Rooms herself, but used to send up the Maid, Hannab Wright, with the Dinner.—Your Lordships will observe, that both this Woman and her Son swear to the best of their Knowledge only, and are far from positive Witnesses.

Hannab Wright, when she was first call'd, spoke in the same Language with them, tho' she afterwards recollected herself better.

When the Bishop came to rejoin, Francis Wood, Thomas Wood, and Mr. Russel severally say, That this Hannab Wright had declared to them, That she used to let the prisoners converse together whenever she had an Opportunity, which was when Mr. Crawford and his Mother were out of the way; and that she used to stand upon the Stairs and give Notice when any person came, that they might retire into their several Rooms. And the other Maid, whose Name is Christian, has deposed, That Hannab gave the Key of Neynoe's Room to Stewart, and several times desired Stewart to go up to him, and that they were together an Hour or more. And when Hannab was called a second Time, she own'd she was turn'd away for Suspicion of having help'd Neynoe in his Escape; That she has left Skeene's Door open, who lay near Neynoe; and that there was a large Hole in Neynoe's Door, thro' which they might converse.

She said, That Neynoe gave her a Paper, which she was to convey for him; but that it was taken out of her Bosom, and burnt by one of the Prisoners.

When Mr. Stewart said, That he sat upon Neynoe's Bed the second Night, and lay in the Garret where there was a Partition, but a Communication between 'em, Hannab said, She could not be positive to that, but believes it true.

Mr. Crawford, when he was call'd to that Point, according to his usual Custom denies it to the best of his Knowledge.

Your Lordships will now judge, whether the greatest Credit is to be given to the Belief of a Messenger and his Mother, who are swearing that they did their Duty; or to the positive Oaths of Skeene, Stewart, Gordon, Kynaston, Francis Wood, Thomas Wood, Russel and Christian, confirm'd by the Confession of Hannab Wright, when she came to be cross-examined and confronted.

This, my Lords, concludes what has appear'd at the Bar, relating to Mr. Neynoe and his Transactions; and I am pretty certain, every impartial Body must agree with me, That so far from giving the least Credit to what he says, there have appeared such Circumstances in the Transactions which are now come to Light, that must make the greatest Caution necessary, before we believe any other part of the Charge.

Your Lordships will take notice, That Mr. Crawford confesses Mr. Neynoe had the Use of Paper, and found two Sheets missing; and Hannab Wright owns she had a Paper from him, which was burnt by one of the Prisoners. This, my Lords, undoubtedly was the Paper relating to Lord Orrery, mentioned by Skeene in his Evidence.

My Lords, I am now coming to the great and only Foundation remaining to support this Bill, viz. Neynoe's Examination: for if his Hearsay is not to be believed, which is the Proof that was offered to shew that Mr. Kelly was the Bishop's Secretary, and used to write for him: and particularly, That the Bishop dictated Three Letters, which were wrote in Kelly's Hand, and transmitted to France under Cover to Monsieur Gordon le Fils;

Then, as every Body must agree, the Bishop ought to be acquitted; and when hereafter this great Affair comes to be canvass'd by Posterity, it will stand or fall as this Fact shall be strongly made appear,

They first read Plunket's Cypher, and Mr. Vanradike attests it to be his Hand-writing.

When this Piece of Evidence was offer'd, People were at a loss to know what they intended to make of it, and little thought that they should be drove to make use of Jackson, standing for the Pretender in that Cypher, to shew that the letter directed to Jackson (one of the three before-mention'd, affirm'd to be dictated by the Bishop of Rochester to Mr. Kelly) was to the Pretender. I shall take notice of this extraordinary Proceeding ing when I come to consider those Letters: I shall only say now, That were Mr. Plunket's Correspondence to be regarded, the plot is of a very deep Nature; for he has had the Impudence to insinuate the most ridiculous Aspersions against the greatest Men amongst us.

Three of his letters were read out of Cypher, in Two of which Mr. Johnson is named, that is Mr. Kelly; but neither Mr. Kelly; nor the Bishop of Rochester are allowed places in his Cypher, and consequently were not in an Association with him. Johnson is only spoke of by Plunket, when he is mentioning Domestick News, and in no other than might be in every News-Letter that went by the General Post.

My Lords, in order to shew that the Three letters sent under Cover to Mr. Gordon le Fils, were Mr. Kelly's Hand-writing, which they very justly thought was necessary to be made appear before they proved that the Bishop was concerned in them; they produced a letter of the 20th of August, which a Clerk of the Post-Office swears was stopt at the General Post-Office.

To convince us this letter is Mr. Kelly's Writing, Hutchins the Messenger says, To the best of his Knowledge it is Mr. Kelly's Hand; and at the same time owns, he never saw him write till after his Commitment, and then he stood by him while he wrote two letters, one to Lord Townshend, the other to Mr. Delafaye: Those letters were produced at the Bar, and therefore every Lord in the House is as good a Judge of the Similitude as the Messenger, who has lately been restored into Favour, on what Account I cannot tell.

If Mr. Kelly, during his Confinement, counterfeited and disguised his Hand, then the Messenger's Evidence can't be of any Weight; and if he wrote as usual, then every person is equally capable of framing an Opinion of it, who sees the Three Letters.

The next Witness is Malone, who swears, he has seen him direct letters, but can't tell how long since he saw him write, nor how often.

The persons who contradict this Evidence are, so positive, so clear, and so concurring in their Testimony, that no Doubt can rise upon it.

Mr. Bingley, when he was shewn this letter, swears it is not like his Hand-writing.

Mr. Brown, a Peruke maker, well vers'd and acquainted with his Writing, when he was shewn the letter of the 20th of August, and the Date of it hid, by the Counsel for the bill (so that he could not know what paper it was before him) swears, it is not his Hand-writing. When the letter to Delafaye was produced, he declared, That was his Hand-writing: When another paper was shewn, (I think it was the Marriage Articles) he said, That was more like his Hand-writing than that of the 20th of August, but he did not believe it was wrote by him; and when they question'd him upon the letter to Lord Townshend, he swore it was Mr. Kelly's Hand-writing.

Mr. Pickering, who had Occasion to know Mr. Kelly's Hand, having lent him some Money, and received several notes and letters from him during that Transaction, does agree with Mr. Brown in every particular and most minute Circumstance; which is a clear and evident proof, that this letter of the 20th of August was not wrote by Mr. Kelly.

The Difference which they tell your Lordships they observe, between the Cut of the letters in that of the 20th of August, and the others, is, That one is longer and straiter, the other wider and shorter: which is obvious to any body that will look on both, and is a Confirmation of their Veracity.

The prosecutors of the plot might have prov'd this better, and not have been driven to the Testimony of a Messenger to support this great Foundation of their Charge. It is notorious what Search they have made for Evidence of all kinds; and as Mr. Kelly was educated in a College, they might easily have found credible Witnesses to that point, if those letters had been wrote by him.

In the Case of Similitude of Hands, when it has been the most clearly and positively proved, as on the Trial of Colonel Sidney, it has been esteemed to be cruel, that a Man should be convicted on such kind of Evidence; and the Attainder of that unfortunate Gentleman was reversed for that Reason.

In Sidney's Trial, his bankers swore, They used to pay bills drawn by him in the Hand-writing they were shewn, and no persons could contradict them; and yet the Sentence against him was a great blemish to that Reign. The Great Lord Chief Justice Holt, in the Case of Crosby, refus'd to admit it; and the Lord Chief Baron Bury, on Francia's Trial, follow'd that Example.

At present, give me leave to say, There is no Evidence that it is Mr. Kelly's Hand, and there is positive proof that it is not.—Therefore, we who live under so equitable, just, and happy a Government, can never convict a Man, in these Days of Liberty, on such insufficient Conjectures.

They next produced the Three letters, which, they would insinuate, were wrote by Kelly, and dictated by the Bishop, which were mentioned by me before, and which were sworn by the Clerks of the Post-Office to have been stopt going to France.

The Bishop desired to examine them relating to these letters being detain'd, and would fain have known who took them out of the Mail: this he thought was proper for him to demand, since he seem'd to insinuate, That he question'd their ever having been in the Post-Office. But your Lordships would not suffer any Enquiry to be made on this Head, and voted it inconsistent with the publick Safety, and unnecessary for the Defence of the prisoner, to permit any further Questions to be ask'd in relation to this important Affair.

These honest Gentlemen, the Clerks of the Post-Office, have deposed further, That the papers produced, are true Copies of the Originals detain'd by them; tho', at the same time, they confess, they never examin'd them after they had copied them.

They positively swore further, That the Originals were of the same Hand with the letter of the 20th of August, tho' they affirm this barely upon Memory, never having mark'd any letter in order to know it again: and one of them declared upon Oath, That he did not believe there could be such an Imitation of Kelly's Hand as could deceive him; tho' the whole House agrees That Hands may be counterfeited so as to deceive the Men that wrote them.

They

They own, they never compared two original letters between the 20th of April, and 24th of August, tho' they might have stop't a letter one Post, without Prejudice to the Government, in order to be more certain in their Evidence.

Thus, my Lords, should this Bill pass, [this great Man must fall by the Dependence this House must have on the Memory of these Clerks.

Mr. Lewis, who has long serv'd in the Secretary's Office, tells us, that frequently letters and Seals used to be counterfeited: and, in a more particular manner, by one Brocket, who excelled so much in this Art, that he has cheated many Persons, and has so far deceived them, that they have not known his Copy from their own Originals.

When these letters, thus attested, came to be read, they are in Cypher; so that it must again depend on the Honesty of a Decypherer, before they can possibly be made Treasonable.

Mr. Willes declares, They were truly decyphered according to the best of his Judgment and Skill; and more particularly, that the Number 1378, which is subscribed to the third letter directed to Jackson, stands for the letter R. But when some Lords ask'd him a Question, which perhaps had he answer'd, might have proved him to be under a Mistake; he refuses to give an Answer, either in the Affirmative or Negative, for fear of revealing his Art. Your Lordships thought proper to prevent any further Cross-Examination of this Gentleman, by a Resolution.

Mr. Willes says. He shew'd these letters decyphered to my Lord Townshend, before he communicated them to Mr. Corbire, who is a Clerk in the Secretary's Office, and then he says, That Mr. Corbire and he agreed.

Before these letters can yet prejudice the Bishop, the Cant Names in them must be explain'd, according to the Key which the Prosecutors of the Plot have made; and in order to it we must believe that Jackson stands for the Pretender, because Mr. Plunket gave him that Title in his Cypher. Can there be a greater Absurdity, than to imagine a Person of the Bishop of Rocheſter's Capacity, should borrow a Name of that Consequence, from so insignificant a Wretch as Plunket, who it does not appear ever saw him?

Indeed, the Counsel for the Bill did not read these letters against the Bishop, since they had no Proof of his dictating them, and they were only read on Account of the general Conspiracy.

I must observe, It was a great Artifice of these learned Gentlemen, whenever there was a Piece of Evidence to which the Bishop objected, they constantly pretended, they produc'd it to the Plot in General; for they knew it could not be admitted against the Reverend Prelate: But yet when they came to sum up, they applied them to this particular Case; which is not agreeable to that Candour that is necessary on such Occasions.

If your Lordships should be of Opinion, that Kelly wrote them; that they were stopp'd at the Post-Office; that they were duly copied; that they were truly decyphered, and the Cant Names explain'd; yet still this cannot affect the Bishop, unless it be fix'd upon him that he dictated them: Two of them were sign'd Jones and Illington, and to induce your Lordships to believe the Bishop was Guilty, as they affirm'd, they endeavour to prove those Names must denote him. And, in Order to it, they read some letters, affirm'd in the same manner, (as before mention'd) by the Clerks of the Post-Office, to be his Hand-Writing: But first they read a Cypher taken upon Mr. Dennis Kelly, and sworn by the Messenger Hutchins to be wrote by George Kelly.

I can observe nothing upon this Cypher, but that the Bishop of Rocheſter is not mention'd in it; which seems very extraordinary, and is not a Proof of the Reverend Prelate's being in a Conspiracy.

The letters they read of Mr. Kelly are of no Moment, and are only calculated to fix the Names of Jones and Illington upon the Bishop.

They give an Account of his Lady's Death, the Bishop's own Illness, his going to and from Bromley; and in some of them, the Dog Harlequin is mentioned.

It seems repugnant to Reason, that in a Treasonable Correspondence of this Importance, a Gentleman should venture his life to give an Account of the State of one Person's private Affair, and entertain his Friends Abroad with no other Business in such a Tract of Time.

In the letters directed to Mr. Andrews at the Dog and Duck, which are proved to have been received by Mr. Kelly, Jones and Illington are not named; and those in which we find them, were such as pass'd thro' the Post-Office, and were attested like those under Cover to Gordon le Fils.

It is not likely, that in a Transaction of so secret a Nature, Mr. Kelly should take such Pains to give such a Description as might give the least room for a Suspicion that the Bishop was concerned; much less to have mentioned so many Particulars, as it may be suggested he has done, if there could be any Possibility of wresting the Meaning of Jones and Illington, and interpreting of them to mean the Bishop.

William Wood, the Bishop's Coachman, is brought to prove the particular Times of the Bishop's being in or out of Town, in order to shew, that they agree with the Times mentioned of Jones and Illington in the intercepted Correspondence; and he refreshes his Memory by a Book of Memo-randums, which might have been destroyed, if it had been apprehended by the Bishop's Friends, that such Evidence could affect him.

What they next attempt, was to shew, That the Dog brought over by Mr. Kelly from France, and which Mrs. Barnes swears, that he once told her was for the Bishop of Rocheſter, was a strong Circumstance to fix the Name of Illington on the Bishop.

My Lords, Mrs. Barnes, who is under the Custody of a Messenger, is the only Witness to this Point; and what she says, is only Hearsay from Kelly: She owns that Kelly never told her so but once, and that was when she thought to have kept it for herself: And indeed, it might be barely an Excuse to prevent his parting with it, for he had promised to bring her such a Present before he went to France.

She owns, that to her Knowledge, the Bishop never saw the Dog, nor sent any Message about it; which seems to be very extraordinary, that if this Present was of such great Consequence, he should not have had Curiosity enough, at least, to see it: An Affidavit was read from Birmingham, a Surgeon in Paris, which says, That he gave this Dog to Mr. Kelly, for Mrs. Barnes.

Before I leave this Circumstance of the Dog, it is proper to observe another great Improbability, which is, in a letter wrote a few Days after the Death of the Bishop's Lady, it is said, Mrs. Illington was in great Tribulation for the loss of poor Harlequin; and can it be supposed, that at a Time when the Bishop was in Affliction for the Death of his Wife, he should indecently discover so much Grief for such a Trifle?

I think this is sufficient to convince any Person whatsoever, that this Correspondence is of a very extraordinary Nature.

Mrs. Barnes has told your Lordships, That Mr. Kelly came from France the 11th of April.

My Lords, I am now come to the only Piece of Evidence that seems particularly levelled at the Bishop; which is, The Proof that has been given of the dictating those letters: and unless this be clearly and plainly made appear, I cannot conceive that any thing can be laid to this Prelate's Charge.

Unless it is evident, that the Bishop did dictate as alledged, I cannot think any of your Lordships can vote him Guilty according to the Rules of Justice; for no Man is safe either in his Life, Liberty, or Fortune, if he may be deprived of either, on account of a Correspondence in which it does not appear he was concerned. Tho' your Lordships should so far credit the precarious Evidence at your Bar, as to believe that Jones and Illington stood for the Bishop of Rochester; yet unless it is plain that it was with his privity, it is certainly impossible this Bill should pass: And if it should, it will hereafter be in the power of any two Men, one at Home, and one Abroad, to ruin the most innocent Person, by entring, without his Knowledge, into a Correspondence of this Nature.

If the being named in Treasonable letters be a Crime, tho' it does not appear it was with the privity of such Persons, I will submit to your Lordships, how far Men of the greatest Zeal to the present Establishment, are to be affected by Mr. Plunket's Insinuations.

No Man ought to suffer for the Suggestions of another Person, unless it appears he has given great Foundation for them. And in this Case, would it not be most extraordinary and most unjust, to punish this Reverend Prelate, for a Crime which there is no Proof he ever committed? I mean, the dictating of these letters. And if, on the other hand, the unfortunate Circumstances of his Affairs have furnished him with Means of shewing, beyond Contradiction, that he could not be concern'd in the letters of the 20th of April; that for a considerable time he could not see Mr. Kelly; and that there never was an Intimacy between them: Then, my Lords, I hope, every Man who gives his Vote for the rejecting this Bill, has the strongest Evidence of his Side to support his Opinion; and need not be afraid or ashamed to own it here, or any where else.

This part of the Evidence being of great Consequence, I must beg your Lordships Attention, whilst I recapitulate the Heads of it, as clearly and distinctly as possibly I can.

The first Witness they call'd, was Flower, a Chairman, who swears, That he carried Kelly twice or thrice to the Deanery; but that the Bishop was never at Home, and consequently did not see him. His Partner swore, he had carried him, with Flower, one of those Times.

The next Person produced, was a Porter, one Vanlear, who deposed, That he went about Christmas was Twelve-Months, twice, with Messages from Kelly to the Bishop; the last of which Times, he carried some Beaver Stockings; that the Bishop sent for him up Stairs, gave his Service to Mr. Johnson, and thank'd him for his Present.

Mrs. Kilburne, at whose House Mr. Kelly lodged, says, That once a Servant came from the Bishop, to know how Mr. Johnson did, and was sorry he could not have his Company at Dinner.

William Wood, the Bishop's Coachman, says, he, once stopp'd in Bury-Street; but does not know for what; and that the Bishop sent a Servant some where, who presently returned. And,

Lloyd, who keeps the Star and Garter in Palace-Yard, has told us, That Neynoe once came to his House, and told him, he staid for an ingenious Gentleman, who was gone to the Bishop of Rochester's House.

This, my Lords, is all the Proof they offered of this Intimacy; from which they would infer, that the Bishop dictated these letters, and is consequently Guilty of the Crimes laid to his Charge.

If your Lordships consider what was produced on the other side, I am sure you must agree there is no Foundation for this Assertion.

Mrs. Kilburne denies, to the best of her Knowledge, that the Bishop ever came to her House, or that his Coach ever stopp'd there, or ever was sent for Kelly.

That Kelly did not go out of Town, from the time he came from France, till he was taken up, the 19th of May, and never lay out of her House one Night.

This, my Lords, was confirmed by her Maid Anne Ellis.

Mrs. Barnes says, She never heard of any Message from the Bishop to Kelly, nor ever had any Conversation with him about the Bishop.

William Wood the Coachman, who liv'd with the Bishop four Years, has declared, that the Bishop of Rochester never sent him with his Coach to Bury-Street to fetch any Person from thence, that there was no Stranger at Bromley for a Fortnight before his Lady died, which was the 26th of April; that no-body could come in a Coach or on Horseback, but he must know it; that he never saw such a Person as Mr. Kelly, till he was shewed him at the Tower; and, that the Bishop went ill of the Gout to Bromley the 12th of April, and did not return to London till the 7th of May.

Malone, Mrs. Barnes's Servant says, That she never saw the Bishop, or any of his Servants, with Mr. Kelly.

Thomas Grant, who has been the Bishop's Servant nine Years, has declared, That the Bishop went to Bromley the 12th of April very ill of the Gout, and that no Stranger could come to him, from the time he went to Bromley, till after his Wife's Death; that one or other of the Servants always sat up with him; and that no Person could visit him, but they must know it; for they were either in the same Room, or the next Room to him: and that no Stranger, except Dr. Aldridge and the Apothecary, came near him. Grant says, That he was forc'd to go to Town to attend at the Westminster Election of Scholars on the 21st of April, but left Beauchamp there, who came down for that purpose on the 18th.

Beauchamp and Steen, who were the two Servants that attended with Grant, swear the same thing.

Susannah Harvey, Sarah Jones, Thomas Farnden, Elizabeth Higginson, and all the Servants agree, that they never heard of any person by the Name of Kelly or Johnson's being with the Bishop. And,

Mrs. English, who took the Names of the Bishop's Visitors for many Years, does not remember, that she ever heard of such a Person as Kelly or Johnson. And I doubt not, but that every Lord must allow, that it is not possible to have a more clear, a more strong, or legal Proof to a Negative, than this is.

I must observe to your Lordships, that most of these Servants have been in strict Custody, and severely used, particularly Farnden, and yet your Lordships see how unanimous they are in their Evidence: and their Testimony is so positive, that I cannot conceive any person can suggest there was the least Intimacy between this Reverend Prelate and Mr. Kelly; and much less, that he could be with him to write the letters that are dated the 20th of April.

Mr. Reeves did, indeed, so far agree, as to be of Opinion, that they might have been wrote the 11th of April, which was the Day Kelly came from France: But, my Lords, Mrs. Barnes has deposed, he went to Bed the Minute he came home, and lay there for a considerable time; besides, it is improbable that letters wrote the 11th, should not be sent till the 19th. But if any further Argument was necessary to confute this absurd Supposition, the Earl of Sunderland's death is mentioned in the letter to Chivers, and that Noble Lord died the 19th; at which Time it hath been proved, Mr. Kelly was not with the Bishop.

The Bishop of St. Asaph did at first peremptorily contradict one part of Mr. Grant's Evidence, by saying, he had received a letter from the Bishop of Rochester, at the Time which Grant has sworn he was so ill of the Gout that he could not write.

His Lordship positively affirmed, That he received this letter on Saturday the 21st of April in the Morning, and saw Grant in London between Twelve and Two: But when it was proved that Grant did not leave Bromley till the Evening of that Day, and that another person officiated for him as Butler in the Deanery, by Reason of his Absence, then the Bishop seemed to think himself under a Mistake, and allowed it might have been some time before.

His Lordship owned, He never received a letter from the Bishop of Rochester before nor since, and therefore was a Stranger to his Hand.

I could have wished this Reverend Prelate had recollected himself more fully, before he had given his Testimony in a Matter of this great Importance to one of his Brethren.

There was another Witness examined, which was Crofton the Shoemaker, to prove, that Talbot (who was said to have received the three letters directed to Gordon le Fils) was at that Time in London, when he was supposed to have been in Boulogne. Crofton swears he saw him in Town the 29th of April, and proved it by his Book.

There was another person called, whose Name was Donner, that deposed, Gordon owned to him the receiving of this packet; but an Affidavit was produced from Gordon, in which he denies it. Donner's Evidence is only hearsay, the other is positive.

My Lords the Counsel for the Bill produced some papers which were taken in the Bishop's Custody when he was apprehended, and endeavour to draw very ill-natured and forced Constructions from them.

The First was a letter from the Dutches of Ormond, in which she acquaints him, That she had something to send him, which she could not trust to a better Hand; or Words to that effect. And this they would pretend to insinuate, were some treasonable papers.

I appeal to all Mankind, whether it is not very extraordinary to suppose, that the Bishop should be presumed to convey a Traitorous Correspondence thro' that Channel. Every Body knows the Friendship which was between the Reverend Prelate and that Family; and it is not surprizing that this unfortunate Lady should think him a proper person to consult, and intrust with her own Affairs. Therefore I can't think, that these general Expressions can at all affect him.

The next they read, is a paper found, or pretended to be found, at the Deanery, subscribed to Dubois, but without Date: In this the Person who writes it, says, He received a letter by Mr. Johnson, to which he returned an Answer in his Hand.

The Secret Committee, at first, apprehended that this was received by the Bishop; and thus it passed, till upon seizing a letter wrote in the Tower by his Lordship, they found a Similitude in the Seals, which immediately enlightned them, and then it was presently said to have been wrote by the Bishop.

They then wanted to fix this to be the Bishop's own Hand-writing, and they could find no other Way of doing it, but pretending there was a Similitude between the E's in this letter, and those which the Bishop generally used. I believe it is the first time that ever such an Argument was brought to prove that the whole letter has been wrote by a Person: much less was it ever pretended to be offered to a Court of Justice against any prisoner whatsoever: But, I believe, there is no Man acquainted with the Bishop's Hand, but sees it is not wrote by him.

They would also affirm, that when in this letter the Bishop is supposed to say, That he returned an Answer in Mr. Johnson's Hand, it must be understood to be his Hand-writing: which, I must confess does not at all appear to be a necessary Conclusion; for he might deliver his Answer into Mr. Johnson's Hand, which, I think, is more natural to suppose than the other.

Your Lordships must judge, how improbable it is, that the Bishop should keep such a letter by him, which he wrote himself; or that when such Care is taken, as the prosecutors of the plot themselves say, for preventing any person's discovering the Intimacy between Mr. Kelly and him, such a Secret should be trusted in Writing, and even without a Cypher. — The Two Seals which gave this Turn, are Cicero's Heads, which are very common. And are to be found every where. They are one broke, the other whole, which must make it very difficult to judge of them: and it is allow'd, that, at best, it is but precarious Evidence.

If Mr. Neynoe speaks Truth, when he said, The Bishop had Notice of the Storm that threatned him, I am certain, that this paper, if it could have been apprehended of Consequence, would have been destroyed: But, I believe, it was impossible for him, or any body else, to think it should meet with such an Explanation.

The next letter they produced, which they seemed to think material, was that which was seized on his Servant going to Mr. Morrice: In this he says, That the Evidence of Plunket, and those people, could not affect him; but as he does not mention Mr. Kelly, they would have it presumed, that this a proof, that Kelly could have said something of him. But, I think, this must appear to be a very ill-natured Assertion.

Your lordships will consider, he was then writing ing to his Son-in-law; and therefore no great Accuracy was necessary.

In another place, he says, That if they impeach'd him, he should remain in prison for some time; and this they would decypher to be an Implication of his Guilt.—But, in my poor Opinion, it is the Reverse: He seems to say, That if the Commons should be induced to send up an Impeachment against him, he was so satisfied of his own Innocence, and your Lordships Justice, that he thought the Confinement till his Trial, would be the only Misfortune that could attend him. The Example of the Earl of Oxford was recent in his Memory, and might justly create in him a Fear of undergoing a long Imprisonment.

It is objected, That he, in this Letter, makes no protestations of his Innocence: But if you will consider he writes to Mr. Morrice, I believe every body will agree, that such Declarations were not necessary.

Mr. Layer's Attainder was read; but it does not appear, That the Bishop had any Correspondence with him; therefore I can't conceive why we were troubled with it.

My Lords, I have now gone thro' the whole Evidence that is brought to justify this extraordinary proceeding, and must observe the Steps that have been taken to procure all the possible Means to work the Destruction of this Great Man.

You have seen his very Servants confined, who, it does not appear, were guilty of the least Glimpse of Treason.

Lawson, a Baker of Bromley, who appeared at your Bar, has been employed to examine the persons in the Bishop's Neighbourhood, in order to find the least particular that could amount to the Shadow of a proof; and went so far, as to offer Wood the Coachman the Wages that were due to him, if he would have gone the lengths that were required.

Mr. Bingly told us in the Case of Kelly (and as it has not been disproved, it is to be taken for granted) that a Warrant was shewn by the Messenger, signed by a Secretary of State, to carry him to Newgate, which he was told was unavoidable, unless he would own the letter of the 20th of August to be Mr. Kelly's Hand-writing: But it appeared the next Day, to be nothing but in order to terrify him.

Mr. Kelly himself has told your Lordships, That Mr. Delafaye offered him his own Terms, if he would have turned Evidence: And this was done to destroy the Bishop of Rocheſter; or, to speak in the language mentioned at your Bar, To pull down the Pride of this haughty Prelate.

Your Lordships may remember, That Mr. Wearg objects to the Bishop's Servants, because two of them had Employments, as appears by his Lordship's own letter: but, my Lords, when they were examined, they acquainted the House, that it was upon reading of the Report, that they recollected the Bishop's Circumstances before the Death of his Wife. And if every Man who has a Place under the Bishop, is not to be esteemed a free Agent, when he is upon Oath, I hope it will be allowed, on the other hand, that those who have Employments under the Government, ought not to be admitted; then all the Witnesses that have been brought to support the bill, from the Decypherer to the Messenger, will be discredited, and the whole Prosecution must fall to the Ground.

My Lords, it has been a Hardship that has attended the Bishop, that he has been forced to prove a Negative; and the Difficulty has been the stronger upon him, that your Lordships have not permitted Mr. Kelly to be examined, as was moved by a Learned Lord, in my Eye; and if the Gentleman had sworn what he so solemnly affirmed at your bar, relating to this Affair, I can't conceive we could have had the least Debate.

The Noble Lords who appeared the most zealous in this prosecution, were those who opposed the Examination of Mr. Kelly; which in my poor Opinion, is a strong Argument, That, if he had been brought before us, he would have persisted in his Declarations of the Bishop's Innocence.

The Reverend Prelate has desired of any Lord in the Administration, and even the Honourable Person who appeared at your bar, to declare, whether any one single Person had charged him (on their own Knowledge) of being guilty of any treasonable Practice. And it has appeared to the contrary: Therefore this whole Charge is founded upon the slight Circumstances and improbable Innuendoes before-mentioned.

Another Objection, which has been raised, is, that Mr. Kelly made Resistance, when he was seized, till he had burnt some of his Papers: But, my Lords, I don't see any Reason to lay this to the Charge of the Bishop.

Kelly is to answer for his own Actions, and is unfortunately like to suffer for 'em: A Person of his Age might have many letters in his Custody, which he did not Care should be seen, and yet of a different Nature from a Traiterous Correspondence.

After this Evidence is considered, I cannot think your Lordships will establish such a Precedent, which hereafter may be employed to ruin the greatest amongst you. And if ever hereafter, pains and penalties are unjustly inflicted on any person, posterity will derive the Original of such Bills from the proceedings of this Parliament; and what Opinion will be framed of us, should this be passed into a Law, I submit to every impartial Person.

It must be left to your Lordships Consideration, which will be of most fatal Consequence to the Publick, The leaving this Precedent (of Condemning on such kind of Evidence) like a Sword which your Enemies may take up when they please, or the banishing the Bishop of Rocheſter, in the Evening of his Days, who alone could do, in his single Person, no Prejudice to the Constitution. If he were inclined to overturn it, as his Enemies suggest, he is in a better Situation Abroad than at Home, to execute that Design, and direct the Counsels of the Disaffected. The Ruin of one Man will not heal the Wound, that the passing of this bill seems to make in the Government of this Kingdom.

It has been said in the Debate, That the bishop ought to have made Protestations of his Zeal for his Majesty and his Family: But, I think he took the most ready Way of performing his Duty, when he shew'd himself Innocent of the Crimes laid to his Charge.

If he had made use of any Expressions, which those lords blame him for omitting, the same Good nature would have call'd it Hyprocrisy; and those who are displeas'd with his Silence, would have accused him of Insincerity.

My

My lords, this bill seems as irregular in the Punishments it inflicts, as it is in its Foundation, and carries with it an unnatural Degree of hardship.

It is Felony for his Children to correspond with him: And in this Circumstance, it is different from the only bill that carries with it the least Resemblance of this; I mean, That for the banishment of the Earl of Clarendon.

The Earl had flown from the Prosecution, and retired beyond Sea. The Charges against him were, principally, for advising a Standard Army; and another Article exhibited was, That he had advised and procured divers of his Majesty's Subjects to be imprison'd against Law, in remote Islands, Garisons, and other Places, thereby to prevent them of the Benefit of the Law, and to produce Precedents for the Imprisoning any other of his Majesty's Subjects in like Manner.

The 7th Article against him was, That he had, in a short Time, gain'd to himself a greater Estate than can be imagin'd to be gain'd lawfully in so short a Time: And contrary to his Oath, he had procured several Grants under the Great Seal from his Majesty, for himself, and his Relations, of several of his Majesty's Lands, Hereditaments and Leases, to the Disprofit of his Majesty.

There need not have been any Witnesses of these Crimes, for they were apparent; and every body knew that he was Prime Minister: Yet Sir Francis Goodier, upon that Debate in the House of Commons; declared the Sentiments which I express'd at the Beginning, That he was not against Proceeding, but unsatisfied to do it without Witness, it being like swearing in verba Magistrum.

Another great Man, upon the same Question, and an Ancestor to a Noble Lord near me, said; That if the Parliament set aside Law in this Case, we should be happy to see Law declaring the Power of Parliaments.

The Punishment for Corresponding with the Earl was High-Treason, and then Two positive Witnesses were necessary to convict: But in this Case, one corrupt, terrified, and perjurd Person may take away the Life of the most innocent Man.

There is another great Misfortune which this Bill brings upon the bishop, which is, That he is incapable of receiving his Majesty's Pardon. This, my lords, is an Entrenchment upon the Prerogative. And what must make it the more severe in this Case, is, That his Majesty's Inclinations to Mercy (which are the distinguishing Characters of his Life) are stop'd by this Law, which the unfortunate Prelate might have Hopes of receiving when he had merited it, by a dutiful behaviour to the Country that had sent him to wander abroad in Exile, and by his future Conduct have confirm'd, if possible, the Evidence he has given of his Innocence.

My lords, in the Case of the Earl of Danby, your lordships have declared, That his banishment should be no Precedent, nor drawn into Example for the Time to come, and have so enter'd it in your Journals.

It has been prov'd, That this Reverend Prelate was at the time that he was suspected to be acting in Treason, engaged in Studies of the most high Nature, which is a Circumstance that ought to have some Weight.

If this Bill pass into a Law, such Evidence is establish'd, and such a Method of Proceeding introduc'd, as must effectually render all that is dear to us precarious; and if ever, hereafter, we should see a wicked Administration, supported by a corrupt Majority in Parliament, this Step taken in these Times of Liberty, will be a sufficient Precedent to give a Colour of Justice to the Actions of those who should be wanton in Tyranny.

The Reverend Prelate, who spoke before me, mentions some Cases relating to Bills of Attainder, which in my poor Opinion, differ very much from our present Question.

The Attainder of Sir John Fenwick was only to supply the want of a Witness who had deposed against him upon Oath before the Grand-Jury, and who was spirited away by the Prisoner's Friends: But at present, your lordships are to supply the Defect of Evidence, by condemning on improbable Conjecture. There was a Noble Lord in this House the other Day, I don't see him now, who made the greatest Figure in Opposition to that Bill, I wish we could have his Assistance on this Occasion.

My lords, since that Reverend Prelate has quoted some Cases, he will permit me to remind him what has been formerly said upon Acts of Attainder; That such Bills, like Sisyphus's Stone, have frequently roll'd back upon those that were the chief Promoters of them.

This prudential Argument should restrain us from being too forward with them at this Time of Day.

The Act for the Attainder of the Earl of March pass'd, because he had been instrumental in procuring the Attainder of another lord, under pretence of a letter, which the Record says, was no Evidence.

The lord Cromwell is another known Instance of this Observation: He was the first who advised this violent Proceeding in Henry the 8th's Time: And it is remarkable, that the Advice he gave to the Ruin of others, prov'd, not long after, fatal to himself.

I have now given your lordships the Reasons why I am against the Bill. I fear I have tired your Patience, and shall therefore conclude with the Words of the Great Man I before mentioned; I mean, Sir Heneage Finch, in the Case of the Earl of Clarendon — 'We have an Accusation upon Hear-say, and if it is not made good, the blackest Scandal Hell can invent, lies at our Doors.'

The Result of this Debate was, that the Bill, pass'd the House; it afterwards obtain'd the Royal Assent, and was as follows:

An Act to inflict Pains and Penalties on Francis Lord Bishop of Rochester.

WHEREAS in the Years One thousand seven hundred and twenty one, and One thousand seven hundred and twenty two, a detestable and horrid Conspiracy was formed and carried on by divers Traitors for invading your Majesty's Kingdoms with foreign Forces, for raising an Insurrection and Rebellion against your Majesty, for seizing the Tower and City of London, and for laying violent Hands upon your Majesty's most sacred Person, and upon his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, in order to subvert our present happy Establishment in Church and State, by placing a Popish Pretender on your Throne: And whereas for the better concealing and effecting the said Conspiracy, divers treasonable Correspondences were, within the time aforesaid, carried on by Letters written in Cyphers, cant Words, and fictitious Names; which Conspiracy, had it not been disappointed by the Goodness of Almighty God, would have deprived your Majesty's Kingdoms of the Enjoyment of their Religion, Laws and Liberties, involved them in Blood and Ruin, and subjected your people to the Bondage and Oppression of Romish Superstition and Arbitrary Power: For which execrable Treason Christopher Layer hath been indicted, tried, convicted, and attainted. And whereas Francis Lord Bishop of Rochester, notwithstanding the many solemn Assurances by him given of his Faith and Allegiance to your Majesty, by taking the Oaths by Law appointed to be taken, instead of the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy; which Oaths he had likewise taken at sundry Times, during the respective Reigns of their late Majesties King William and Queen Mary, and of her late Majesty Queen Anne; and notwithstanding he had frequently abjured the Pretender, hath, in direct Violation of his said repeated Oaths and Obligations, and to the great scandal of Religion, and his Holy Function, been deeply concerned in forming, directing, and carrying on the said wicked and detestable Conspiracy, and hath been a principal Actor therein, by traitorously consulting and corresponding with divers Persons to raise an Insurrection and Rebellion against your Majesty within this Kingdom, and to procure a foreign Force to invade the same, in order to depose your Majesty, and place the Pretender on your Throne; and by traitorously corresponding with the said Pretender, and Persons employed by him, knowing them to be so employed: Therefore to manifest our just Abhorrence of so wicked and abominable a Conspiracy, and our Zeal and tender Regard for the Preservation of your Majesty's Person and Government, and of the Protestant Succession in your Majesty's Royal Family, the solid Foundations of our present Happiness and future Hopes; and to the end that no Conspirator may, by any subtil Contrivance or Practice whatsoever, escape Punishment, and that all others may by the Justice of Parliament be for ever hereafter deterred from engaging in any traitorous Conspiracies or Attempts, We your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament assembled, do humbly beseech your Majesty, that it may be enacted; and be it enacted by the King's most excellent Majesty, by and with the Advice and Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons in Parliament assembled, and by the Authority of the same, That the said Francis Lord Bishop of Rochester, from and after the first Day of June, in the Year of our Lord One thousand seven hundred and twenty three, shall be, and is hereby, to all Intents and Purposes, deprived of all and singular his Offices, Dignities, Promotions, and Benefices Ecclesiastical whatsoever, and that the same, and every of them, shall from thenceforth be actually void, as if he were naturally dead; and that the said Francis Lord Bishop of Rochester shall from thenceforth for ever be disabled, and rendered incapable of and from taking, holding, or enjoying any Office, Dignity, Promotion, Benefice, or Employment within this Realm, or any other his Majesty's Dominions, and also of and from using or exercising any Office, Function, Authority, or Power Ecclesiastical or Spiritual whatsoever; and shall and do suffer perpetual Exile, and be for ever banished this Realm, and all other his Majesty's Dominions, and shall depart out of the same on or before the Five and twentieth Day of June, in the Year of our Lord, One thousand seven hundred and twenty three: And that if the said Francis Lord Bishop of Rochester shall return into, or be found within this Realm, or any other his Majesty's Dominions at any time after the said Five and twentieth Day of June, in the Year of our Lord, One thousand seven hundred and twenty three, he the said Francis Lord Bishop of Rochester, being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be adjudged Guilty of Felony, and shall suffer and forfeit as in Cases of Felony, without Benefit of Clergy, and shall be utterly incapable of any Pardon from his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors.

And be it further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That all and every Person and Persons, who shall, from and after the said Five and twentieth Day of June, in the Year of our Lord One thousand seven hundred twenty three, be aiding or assisting to the Return of the said Francis Lord Bishop of Rochester into this Realm, or any other his Majesty's Dominions, or shall harbour or conceal him within the same, or any of them, being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be adjudged Guilty of Felony, and shall suffer and forfeit as in Cases of Felony, without benefit of Clergy.

And be it further enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That if any of the Subjects of his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, except such Persons as shall be licensed for that Purpose by his Majesty, his Heirs or Successors, under his or their Sign Manual, shall, from and after the said Five and twentieth Day of June, in the Year of our Lord One thousand seven hundred and twenty three, within this Realm or without, hold, entertain, or keep any Intelligence or Correspondence in Person, or by Letters, Messages, or otherwise, with the said Francis Lord Bishop of Rochester, or with any Person or Persons employed by him, knowing such Person or Persons to be so employed, such Person so offending, being thereof lawfully convicted, shall be adjudged Guilty of Felony, and shall suffer and forfeit as in Cases of Felony, without benefit of Clergy.

And be it further enacted, That if any Offence against this Act shall be committed out of this Realm, the same shall or may be alledged, laid, enquired of, and tried in any County within Great Britain.

In pursuance of this, on Tuesday the 18th of June, the deprived bishop of Rochester, accompanied by his Son-in-Law Mr. Morrice and his Wife, embark'd on board the Aldbrough, one of his Majesty's Ships of War, and on Friday the 21st, landed at Calais.

CXCV. The Trial of Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, before the House of Lords, for High Crimes and Misdemeanors in the Execution of his Office, May 6, 1725.
10 Geo. I.

The FIRST Day.

BOUT Eleven of the Clock, the Lords being seated in their House, the Managers for the House of Commons being in the Conveniencies made for them at their Lordships Bar, Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, having a Stool plac'd for him within the Bar, and his Counsel, viz. Mr. Serjeant Probyn, Doctor Sayer, Mr. Lingard, Common-Serjeant of the City of London, Mr. Robins, and Mr. Strange, standing near him at the Bar, the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation as follows :

Serj. at Arms, Oyez, Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then the Serjeant at Arms again made Proclamation as follows :

Serj. at Arms. Oyez, Whereas a Charge of High Crimes and Misdemeanors has been exhibited by the House of Commons, in the Name of Themselves, and of all the Commons, of Great Britain, against Thomas Earl of Macclesfield; all Persons concern'd are to take Notice, that he now stands upon his Trial, and they may come forth in order to make good the said Charge.

Then the Clerk-Assistant, by Direction of the Lord-Chief-Justice King, Speaker of the House of Lords, read the Articles of Impeachment, the Earl of Macclesfield's Answer, and the Replication of the House of Commons, as follows :

A R T I C L E S

Exhibited by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses in Parliament assembled, in the Name of Themselves, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, against Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, in Maintenance of their Impeachment against him for High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

WHereas the Office of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain is an Office of the highest Dignity and Trust, upon the impartial and uncorrupt Execution whereof the Honour of the Crown, and the Welfare of the Subjects of this Kingdom greatly depend: And whereas Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, in or about the Month of May, in the Year of our Lord, One thousand seven hundred and eighteen, by the great Grace and Favour of his most Excellent Majesty, was constituted and appointed Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, and did thereupon take the usual Oath for the due Execution of that High Office, whereby he did swear well and truly to serve our Sovereign Lord the King, and his People, poor and rich, after the Laws and Usages of this Realm, and such other Oaths as have been accustomed; and the said Earl continued in this great Office until about the Month of January, in the Year of our Lord, One thousand seven hundred and twenty four, and in Right thereof was intrusted with the Nomination and Admission to the Offices of Masters of the Court of Chancery, which Masters of the said Court are Officers of great Trust sworn to serve the King and his People, and associated to the Lord Chancellor for his Assistance in the due Administration and Execution of Justice in the said Court: And whereas his Majesty, upon the said Earl's being appointed to the Office of Lord Chancellor, did, of his Grace and Bounty, bestow upon the said Earl the Sum of Fourteen thousand Pounds, or some other great Sum, and did likewise grant unto George Parker Esq; now commonly called Lord Parker, Eldest Son and Heir Apparent of the said Earl, a Yearly Pension of Twelve Hundred Pounds, payable out of his Majesty's Receipt of the Exchequer, during the joint Lives of his Majesty and the said Lord Parker, determinable upon his Majesty's making a Grant to the said Lord Parker, in Possession of the Office of one of the Tellers of his Majesty's Exchequer, for the Term of his natural Life, which Office being of the yearly Value of Fifteen hundred Pounds, or upwards, has been since granted by his Majesty unto the said Lord Parker for his Life, who in or about the Month of July, in the Year of our Lord, One thousand seven hundred and nineteen, was duly admitted to and doth still enjoy the same; and the said Earl during the Time of his continuing Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, did not only enjoy the usual Salary, Fees, and Profits belonging to his Office, of a very great annual Value, but also did continue to receive an annual Pension of Twelve hundred Pounds, which his Majesty in or about the Month of June, in the Year of our Lord One thousand seven hundred and sixteen, had granted to him and his Assigns, during his Majesty's Life; and did likewise receive from the Crown a further annual Allowance of Four thousand Pounds, and many other Advantages: Yet the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, not being satisfied with this large and ample Revenue, nor regarding the Obligation of his Oath, or the Duty of his high and important Office, but entertaining wicked and corrupt Designs and Views, to raise and procure to himself excessive and exorbitant Gain and Profit, by divers unjust and oppressive Practices and Methods herein after-mentioned, whilst he continued in the said Office of Lord Chancellor, did Illegally, Corruptly, and Extorsively take and receive to his own private Use the following or some other great Sums of Money.

ARTICLE I.

A R T. X.

That the faid Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, whilft he continued Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, did Illegally and Corruptly Ordain, Name, and Make divers other Officers and Minifters of his Majesty, for Gift and Brocage, and did likewise illegally and corruptly fell divers other Offices, touching and concerning the Administration and Execution of Juftice in the Court of Chancery, to feveral Perfons, for divers great Sums of Money, which the faid Earl did receive from the faid Perfons for their refpective Admiffions into fuch Offices, and before they were admitted thereinto, and in order that the faid Perfons fhould have, exercife, and enjoy the fame, in great Breach of the Trust in him reposed, and of his Oath as Lord Chancellor, contrary to the Duty of his Office, and againft the Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

A R T. XI.

That the faid Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, whilft he continued in the Office of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, in order to advance and increase the illegal and corrupt Gain, arifing to himfelf from the Sale and Difpofal of the Offices of Masters of the Court of Chancery, in Violation of the great Trust reposed in him for the Care and Protection of the Suitors of the faid Court, whose Money and Effects were, by Orders of the faid Court, lodged in the Hands of the Masters of the faid Court of Chancery, did admit feveral Perfons to the faid Offices of Masters of the faid Court of Chancery, who, at the Time of fuch their Admiffions, were of fmall Subftance and Ability, very unfit to be trusted with the great Sums of Money and other Effects of the Suitors of the faid Court, lodged in their Hands by the Orders of the faid Court; and did publickly in open Court, when he fat there as Lord Chancellor, falfly represent the faid Perfons, fo by him admitted to the Offices of Masters of the faid Court of Chancery, as Perfons of great Fortunes, and in every refpect qualified for the Trust reposed in them, to the manifft Deceit and Injury of the Suitors of the faid Court.

A R T. XII.

That whilft the faid Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield executed the faid Office of Lord Chancellor, an unjust and fraudulent Method was practifed in the Court of Chancery upon the Sale of the Offices of Masters of the faid Court, and upon the Admiffions of new Masters, that the Prices or Sums of Money agreed to be paid for the Purchase of the faid Offices, and for the Admiffions thereinto, were fatisfied and paid out of the Monies and Effects of the Suitors of the Court deposited in the Hands of the refpective Masters, furrendring their Offices, or dying, either by way of Retainer of the Purchase Money in the Hands of the Master refigning, or of replacing the Money difburfed for fuch Purchase or Admiffion by the fucceeding Master, out of the Money and Effects of the Suitors coming into his Hands; by which Practice the Price and Value given upon the Sale of the faid Offices, and Admiffions thereinto, during the time aforefaid, were greatly advanced, and feveral Perfons of fmall Ability and Subftance were encouraged to contract for the faid Offices, upon a Profpert of the eafy method of paying for the Purchase of the fame, by means whereof great Deficiencies have incurred in the Offices of feveral Masters of the faid Court, admitted by the faid Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, which they have not been able to anfwer and make good; and although the faid Practice was notorious and publick, and the faid Earl was well informed thereof, and fully acquainted therewith, yet the faid Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, in order to increafe his own unjust and corrupt Profit in the felling the faid Offices, and the Admiffions thereto (which in confequence of this evil Practice was raifed and received by him out of the Effects of the Suitors, for whom he was intrusted) did not at any Time, whilft he continued in his Office of Lord Chancellor, ufe or take any meafures to reform the faid Abuse, or to prevent the fame, either by caufing proper Schedules to be taken of the money and Effects of the Suitors delivered over and transferred, or by appointing any Person, in his Behalf, to infpect or fupervife the Transfers or Deliveries thereof, or in any other manner; but on the contrary, the faid Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, unjustly, corruptly, and contrary to the Duty of his faid Office of Lord Chancellor (to whom the Superintendency of the faid Masters, and and of their Accounts did appertain) did suffer the said fraudulent Practice to proceed and be exercised without any Controul or Check, whereby great Embezzlements have been made of the Suitors Money and Effects, to their great Loss, in the Offices of several of the Masters of the said Court, who have not been able to answer and pay their respective Ballances owing upon their Accounts, in breach of the Trust reposed in him for the Preservation of the Estates and Effects of the Suitors, to the Dishonour and Discredit of the said Court, and to the great Injury and Defrauding of the said Suitors, in a Court of Equity, established for their Relief and Protection.

A R T. XIII.

That Fleetwood Dormer Esq; one of the Masters of the Court of Chancery, having embezzled great part of the Money and Effects belonging to the Suitors of the said Court, with which he was intrusted by the said Court, and disposed of the same for his own private Advantage, by Means whereof there became, and still continues a great Deficiency in that Office, to the Amount of twenty five thousand Pounds, or some other great Sum; and the said Fleetwood Dormer, having absconded, and for some time absented himself, Application was made to the said Earl of Macclesfield, then Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, to secure the Person of the said Fleetwood Dormer, and to take proper Methods for compelling the said Fleetwood Dormer to make Satisfaction to the Suitors for the Money and Effects, which he had so embezzled, yet the said Earl, from an Apprehension that a publick Discovery of the said Deficiency might lessen the unjust Gain he proposed to make to himself, by selling and disposing of the said Offices of Masters of the said Court, neglected and declined either to secure the Person of the said Fleetwood Dormer, and his Estate and Effects, or to make a proper Enquiry into the said Deficiency: But on the contrary, the said Earl, whilst he continued Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, did endeavour, by many indirect Practices, to conceal from the Suitors of the Court, the true State and Condition of the said Office, as well with respect to the Effects of the said Fleetwood Dormer, as to the Debt due from him to the Suitors of the Court; and upon Motion made in the said Court of Chancery (after the said Earl knew that the said Fleetwood Dormer had so absconded) on behalf of some of the Suitors of the Court, to have their Effects transferred from the said Fleetwood Dormer to some other Master, for the better securing thereof, the said Earl of Macclesfield, (in order to delude the Suitors of the said Court into a Belief that their Effects were safe, and thereby to prevent a publick Enquiry) then sitting as Lord Chancellor in open Court, did say, That the said Parties need not be in haste, and did at the same time falsely and deceitfully declare, that the said Fleetwood Dormer was only gone to take the Air in the Country, and that he would return in a little time, and all would be well, or to that Effect.

A R T. XIV.

That the said Fleetwood Dormer, having towards Satisfaction of the Suitors of the said Court, assigned to Henry Edwards Esq; (who succeeded him in his Office of Master of the said Court of Chancery) a Debt of Twenty four thousand and forty six Pounds four Shillings, or some other great Sum due from William Wilson, a Banker, to the said Fleetwood Dormer, to the intent that the Money received on Account thereof should be applied and disposed of, as the said Court of Chancery should order and direct, the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, whilst he continued Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, for the unlawful Purposes aforesaid, without Regard to the Interest of the said Suitors, by colour of his Office, did, in an unwarrantable, clandestine, and unusual manner, authorize, direct, and establish a precarious and trifling Composition with the said William Wilson, upon the Terms of the said William Wilson's paying the Sum of Fourteen hundred sixty three Pounds, two Shillings and a Penny, and assigning Ten thousand Pounds, part of a Debt of Twenty two thousand and sixty Pounds, twelve Shillings and five Pence, pretended to be due to the said William Wilson from Edward Poulter, or to that effect, in Discharge of the said Debt; and to that End, upon the Report of John Hiccocks Esq; then one of the Masters of the said Court, without any Attendance order'd or had thereupon, and without Notice to the said Suitors, did, by a private Order not made in open Court, order the said Henry Edwards to accept of the said Composition, in full Discharge of the said Debt, which said Edward Poulter was a Person insolvent, and has since absconded for Debt, and none, or but a very small part of the said Ten thousand Pounds, has been or is ever likely to be received.

A R T. XV.

That the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, whilst he continued Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, to carry on his corrupt and unjust Purposes, and to conceal the Deficiency that was in the Office of the said Fleetwood Dormer, did, in or about the Month of February, in the Year of our Lord, One thousand seven hundred and twenty, order the several Masters of the said Court of Chancery to bring in their Accounts of the Cash, Effects, and Securities in their Hands belonging to the Suitors of the Court, not with a Design of examining their Accounts, or securing the Estate and Effects of the Suitors, but with an intent to terrify the said Masters, and thereby oblige them to contribute great Sums of Money towards answering the Demands that should, from time to time, be made upon the said Office; for which purpose, he the said Earl did at several Times represent, or cause to be represented to the said Masters, that if they refused so to do, the Money and Effects of the Suitors would be taken out of their Hands, and the said Masters deprived of making any Profit of the same; by which Practices the said Earl, being then Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, by colour of his Authority, did persuade and induce nine of the Masters of the said Court of Chancery, to pay Five hundred Pounds each for the purposes aforesaid, several of whom paid the same out of the Money or Effects of the Suitors in their Hands; but after such Payments, the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, did not oblige the said Masters to deliver in their Accounts in pursuance of such his said Order.

A R T. XVI.

That Elizabeth Chitty, Widow, having obtained an Order of the Court of Chancery, on or about about the seventeenth Day of March, in the tenth Year of His present Majesty's Reign, made by the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, then Lord Chancellor, whereby Henry Edwards Esq; one of the Masters of the said Court of Chancery, who succeeded Fleetwood Dormer Esq; in the said Office, was ordered to pay her the Sum of one thousand Pounds, part of the Sum of ten thousand Pounds, or other great Sum of Money, formerly paid into the Hands of the said Fleetwood Dormer, as a Master of the said Court, and by the said Order mentioned to be then in the Hands of the said Henry Edwards; and the said Henry Edwards complaining to the said Earl, that the making Orders upon him to pay Money which had been received by the said Fleetwood Dormer, was a very great Hardship upon him the said Henry Edwards, in regard he had not any Money or Effects in his Hands to answer such Demands, the said Earl of Macclesfield, being then Lord Chancellor, in further prosecution of his unjust and corrupt Purposes, did, by colour of his Authority, endeavour to prevail with the Masters of the said Court of Chancery, to raise the said Sum of one thousand Pounds out of their Effects, by representing to them, that a Discovery of the Deficiency in the said Office might occasion a Parliamentary or Publick Enquiry into the Nature and Condition of their Offices, and hazard the Forfeiture of the same, by reason of their having bought the said Offices contrary to Law, which the said Earl then declared would affect him, but themselves much more, or to that effect; but the said Masters refusing to raise the said Sum of one thousand Pounds, the said Earl of Macclesfield did order his Secretary Peter Cottingham Esq; to pay the said one thousand Pounds; who, in pursuance of the said Earl's Directions, in or about the Month of July, one thousand seven hundred and twenty four, did pay the same to Ascan Christopher Lockman, for the Use of the said Elizabeth Chitty; and the said Earl of Macclesfield, upon Application made to him by the said Ascan Christopher Lockman, for Payment of the said Money, did acquaint him, that he, the said Earl, had given Directions to his Secretary for payment of that Sum, but at the same time declared to the said Ascan Christopher Lockman, that he, the said Earl, believed this would be the last payment she was like to receive out of the said Money paid into the Hands of the said Fleetwood Dormer, for the Residue thereof was in great Danger of being lost, by reason of the Deficiency in the Effects of the said Fleetwood Dormer, or to that effect. Notwithstanding all which proceedings, in this and several other Articles mentioned, upon a Motion made in the Court of Chancery before the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, then Lord Chancellor, on or about the fifth Day of December last, in a Cause there depending between Jane Harper, Plaintiff, and Thomas Case, and others, Defendants, relating to the Sum of two hundred and sixty Pounds, or some other Sum, deposited in the Hands of the said Fleetwood Dormer, before his absconding, and which was then apprehended in great Danger of being lost, the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, then sitting in Court as Lord Chancellor, did publickly, falsely, and deceitfully declare, that he had heard there was a Deficiency in the Office of the said Fleetwood Dormer, but that he, the said Earl, knew nothing of it, only as publick News, or to that Effect; and thereupon did order, that the said Henry Edwards should examine in what Manner the said two hundred and sixty Pounds was deposited with the said Fleetwood Dormer, and whether there was likely to be a Loss of any Money deposited with the said Fleetwood Dormer.

A R T. XVII.

That notwithstanding the said Earl of Macclesfield well knew that there was a very great Deficiency and Loss by the Failure of the said Fleetwood Dormer, and that the said Henry Edwards, his Successor, had not sufficient in his Hands to pay the whole Money due to the Suitors of the Court, that had been received by the said Fleetwood Dormer on their Account; yet the said Earl of Macclesfield, being Lord Chancellor, in order to carry on his unjust Designs of concealing the said Deficiency, and to prevent any publick Enquiry that might arise from the just Complaints of the Suitors of the said Court, did, from Time to Time, in manifest and wilful Violation of the Trust reposed in him, make Orders on the said Henry Edwards for Payment of the Money belonging to several particular Suitors, which had been lodged in the Hands of the said Fleetwood Dormer; in Obedience to which Orders several Sums were paid, without regard to, or consideration of the Proportion which the rest of the Suitors were entituled to, out of the Effects of the said Fleetwood Dormer, whereby many of the said Suitors lost the Benefit of their proportionable Share, to which in Justice they were entituled.

A R T. XVIII.

That the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, notwithstanding that he very well knew, and was informed that the Masters of the said Court did, or that it was in their Power, from Time to Time, and at their Pleasure to dispose of and employ the Money and Effects belonging to the Suitors of the said Court, which were intrusted with them respectively, and more particularly, that the Deficiency appearing in the Office of Fleetwood Dormer, Esq; one of the Masters of the Court of Chancery, was chiefly occasioned by his, the said Fleetwood Dormer's, having taken upon himself unduly to dispose of and employ the Money and Effects belonging to the Suitors of the said Court, which were intrusted in his Hands; and notwithstanding that, soon after the said Fleetwood Dormer became insolvent, it was represented and proposed to the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, then Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, in order to prevent for the future any Losses that might happen to the Suitors of the said Court, that the several Effects and Securities belonging to the Suitors should be placed out in such Manner, as that the Power of disposing, imploying, or in any manner trading with the same, might be totally taken away from the said Masters, for the effecting of which just Design, a particular Method was laid before the said Earl; and it was also further proposed, that the said Masters should give some reasonable Security to answer the Ballance of such Cash, as should, from Time to Time be in their Hands; and notwithstanding the said Earl was credibly informed, that the Sufficiency of some other of the said Masters was very much suspected, yet the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, whilst he was Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, contrary to the Duty of his Office, and thereby proposing to make unlawful Gain himself by the Disposal and Sale of the Offices of Masters of the said Court of Chancery; and in order to induce Persons to give him, the said Earl, a greater Price or Reward for their being admitted to the same, did not require or demand any Security whatsoever, to be given by any of the said Masters, upon their being admitted to their Offices, or at any other Time; and the said Earl with the same corrupt View and Intention, and to keep up the Price of the said Offices, totally neglected to enquire into the Accounts of the said Masters, and did fraudulently, unjustly, and in Breach of the Trust reposed in him, permit and encourage the Masters of the said Court, to employ and traffick with large Sums of Money belonging to the Suitors of the said Court, and to make Interest thereof for their own unjust Gain and Profit; and the said Earl, after such Proposal made to him, as aforesaid, or at any other Time, during his Continuance in the said Office did not take any Care that the Effects of the said Suitors should be placed out in such Manner, as to prevent the Masters from trafficking therewith, or that the said Masters should give such Security, as was proposed; by Means whereof great Deficiencies, to the amount of many thousand Pounds, have been, through such Default of the said Earl, occasioned in the Offices of several other of the Masters, to the great Loss and Injury of the Suitors of the said Court.

A R T. XIX.

That whereas his most Sacred Majesty, out of his fatherly Goodness to his People, did, in or about the month of November last, direct an Enquiry to be made into the Accounts of the matters of the said Court of Chancery, to the Intent that proper methods might be taken for the Security of the Suitors of the said Court; the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, being then Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, and one of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, in order to obstruct the same, and to prevent a parliamentary Enquiry into the State and Condition of the Offices of the said Masters, in Breach of the several great Trusts reposed in him, did give Advice and Encouragement to the said Masters to assist and supply each other with money and Effects, and did represent to the said Masters, that it would be for their Honour and Service, to appear able and sufficient, and that, if they made a bold Stand now, it might prevent a parliamentary Enquiry, or to that Effect, and did persuade several of them to make false Representations of their Circumstances to his Majesty, by adding a Subscription to their respective Accounts delivered to the said Earl, to be laid before his Majesty, to the Effect following (viz.) That they were able to answer the money and Securities in their Hands, and were willing to pay the same to such Persons as were entitled thereunto, although the said Earl knew, or had good reason to believe, that several of the Masters were not then able to answer the Ballance of their Accounts, nor are they yet able to satisfy or make good the same; and when the said Masters were afterwards required to produce the Cash and Effects of their Suitors in their Hands, some of the said Masters, according to such Advice and Encouragement given by the said Earl, did supply others of them with Cash and Effects, to make a false shew and appearance of their Ability and Readiness to answer the Ballance of their Accounts.

A R T. XX.

That the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, whilst he continued in the Office of Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, in Breach of the Trust reposed in him, and contrary to the Duty of his Office, did, at several Times, borrow and receive of some of the Masters of the said Court, several great Sums of the Money belonging to the Suitors of the said Court, deposited in the Hands of such Masters, and did make use thereof for his own private Service and Advantage, so long as he had occasion for the same.

A R T. XXI.

That the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, whilst he continued Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, did, in an illegal and arbitrary Manner, extend the Power and Authority of Lord Chancellor, and of the Court of Chancery, beyond their lawful and just Bounds, and did arbitrarily and illegally assume to himself, as Lord Chancellor, and by colour of Office, an unjust and unlimited power of dispensing with, suspending and controuling the Statutes of this Realm, made for the Security and Preservation of the Estates and Properties of the Subjects of this Kingdom, to the great Oppression of the Suitors of the said Court, in subversion of the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, in manifest Breach and Violation of the Rights and Liberties of his Majesty's good Subjects, and of his own most solemn Oath, as Lord Chancellor of Great Britain; and more especially, when Francis Tyson, Esq; deceased, being seized, and possessed of a real Estate of the Value of Three thousand Pounds per Annum, or some other great annual Value, did, by his last Will and Testament in Writing, duly executed, in or about the month of October, One thousand seven hundred and seventeen, give and devise all his said real Estate to the Child his Wife was at that Time enfeint with (if such Child should be a Son) for his Life, without Impeachment of Waste, with Remainders to the first, and other Sons of the said Infant in Tail male, and did likewise by such Will expressly nominate and appoint his said Testator's Wife, Rachel Tyson, to be the Guardian of all his Children, during their respective minorities, if she should so long continue a Widow; and the said Francis Tyson, soon after died, leaving one Daughter, and the said Rachel, his Widow, with Child, after whose Decree the said Rachel was delivered of such Child, being a Son, afterwards named Francis John Tyson, in whose Right by Virtue of the said Will, and of the Statute made in the twelfth Year of the Reign of King Charles, the Second, intituled, An Act for the taking away the Court of Wards and Liveries, and Tenures in Capite, and by Knights Service, and Purveyance, and for settling a Revenue upon his Majesty in Lieu thereof; the said Rachel Tyson did lawfully take into her Care and Custody her said Infant Son, and the Estate so devised to him, or was willing and endeavoured so to do, and to undertake the management of his said Lands and Tenements for his best Advantage, and demeaned herself therein, without any misbehaviour; yet the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, being then Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, under colour of his Office and Authority, did, by several Orders made by him, in the months of January and February, in the fifth Year of Majesty's Reign, or in one of them, illegally and arbitrarily, and in direct contravention of the Statute made in that Behalf, remove and exclude the said Rachel Tyson, the Guardian of the said Infant, and also John Nicholas Esq; (a Person of good Substance and Ability, nominated by the said Rachel Tyson, to be Receiver of the Rents and Profits of the said Infants Estate, and approved by Robert Holford, Esq; one of the Masters of the said Court, and for that Purpose, who had given sufficient Security for the due Execution of his said Trust) from the Management and Receivership of the said Infant's Estate; and did, by such Orders, unduly and injuriously nominate and appoint Robert Doyley, Esq; a Creature and Confident of his own, and a Person altogether unfit and unqualified for so great a Trust, to be Receiver of the Rents and Profits of the said Infant's Estate, and to have a Salary for the same with a Power to let such Part of the said Estate, as was or should become untenanted, with the Approbation of the said Robert Holford, although the said Rachel Tyson did expressly object unto, and oppose such Appointment of the said Robert Doyley, and did insist to have the Benefit and Exercise of her Right in that Respect, as the Guardian appointed and intrusted by her late Husband; and the said Robert Doyley, after he was so admitted into the said Receivership, did for several Years receive the Rents and Profits of the said Infant's Estate, to the Amount of about Ten thousand Pounds, or other great Sum, and in his Lifetime did embezzle and convert to his own Use great Part thereof; and in or about the month of November, One thousand seven hundred and twenty two, died insolvent and indebted to the said Infant and his Estate, in the Sum of Two thousand six hundred Pounds, or other great Sum, upon the Ballance of his Account, no Part whereof hath hitherto been satisfied or paid; and the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, in further Abuse of his Power, and in contempt of the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, when upon Debate of the matter in the said Court of Chancery, before the said Earl, being then Lord Chancellor, in the month of January or February, in the fifth Year of his Majesty's Reign, or in one of them, it was insisted upon, in Behalf of the said Rachel Tyson, by her Council of great Ability and Experience in the said Court, that such the Proceedings of the said Earl, as Lord Chancellor, were a reviving the Power of the Court of Wards, and were not supported or warranted by any Precedent in the Court of Chancery, he, the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, then sitting in the Court as Lord Chancellor, did not only persist in such his Appointment of the said Robert Doyley, but did also arbitrarily, and in Defiance of the said good and beneficial Statute, say and declare, in open Court, that then he would make a Precedent in that Instance, or he, the said Earl, declared and expressed himself to that Effect; which Actings, Proceedings, and Declarations of the said Earl, have been and were not only very injurious and prejudicial to the Right and Interest of the said Rachel Tyson, as Guardian, and to the great Damage and Loss of the Infant Francis John Tyson, and a notorious Violation of Property, but were also a dangerous Exercise of illegal and arbitrary Power, to the Destruction of the Laws and Constitution of this Realm, in manifest Breach of his Oath as Lord Chancellor, and in great Abuse of his Authority.

And the said Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses, by Protestation, saving to themselves the Liberty of exhibiting, at any Time hereafter. any further Articles, or other Accusation or Impeachment against the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, and also of replying to his Answers which he shall make unto the said Articles, or any of them, and of offering Proof to all and every the aforesaid Articles, and to all and every other Articles, Impeachment, or Accusation, which shall be exhibited by them, as the Case shall, according to the Course of Parliament, require, do pray, that the said Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, may be put to answer the said Crimes and Misdemeanors, and that such Proceedings, Examinations, Trials, and Judgments, may be thereupon had and given, as are agreeable to Law and Justice.

The Answer of Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, to the Articles exhibited by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses in Parliament assembled, in the Name of themselves, and of all the Commons of Great Britain, in Maintenance of their Impeachment against him, for high Crimes and Misdemeanors, supposed to have been by him committed.

THE said Earl, saving to himself all Advantage of Exception to the said Articles, and of not being prejudiced by any Words or want of Form in this his Answer, and also saving to himself all Benefit and Advantage of the Act for the King's most gracious, general, and free Pardon herein after mentioned, and all Rights and Priviledges belonging to him as one of the Peers of this Realm, for Answer to the said Articles saith, That he, having for several Years executed the Office of Chief Justice in the Court of King's-Bench, his Majesty of his royal Grace and Favour was pleased, the tenth Day of March, One thousand seven hundred and fifteen, to advance the said Earl to the Dignity of a Peer of this Realm, and created him Baron of Macclesfield; and, in regard to his Circumstances at that Time, was further pleased, for the better Support of that Honour, to grant to the said Earl the pension of Twelve hundred pounds per Annum, in the Articles mentioned, payable at the Receipt of the Exchequer; and his Majesty was then likewise pleased to declare his Royal Intentions of giving to the said Earl's only Son, George Parker, for his Life, an Office of considerable Profit, when a proper Opportunity should offer; that in the Beginning of May, in the Year One thousand seven hundred and eighteen, he the said Earl, was, by his Majesty's great Grace and Favour, appointed Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, and was sworn before his Majesty in Council the fourteenth Day of that Month, when the following Oath, being the usual Oath of Lord Chancellor, was administered to him, (viz.)

YOU shall swear, that you shall well and truly serve our Sovereign Lord the King, and his People, in the Office of Chancellor of Great Britain; and you shall do Right to all Manner of People, Poor and Rich, after the Laws and Usages of this Realm; and truly you shall Counsel the King, and his Council you shall lain and keep; and you shall not know nor suffer the Hurt or Disberiting of the King, or that the Rights of the Crown be decreased by any Means, as far forth as you may lett, and if you may not lett it, you shall make it clearly and expressly known to the King, with your true Advice and Counsel; and that you shall do and purchase the King's Profit in all that you may; all which you shall do to the best of your Skill and Knowledge,

As God shall help you.

And

And the said Earl at the same Time took the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, but no Oath of Office besides that above set forth; and the said Earl doth admit, that, during his Continuance in the said Office of Lord Chancellor, he did enjoy the usual Salary, Fees, and Profits belonging to such Office, which, he says, are of much less annual Value than they are generally (as he believes) esteemed to be; and that his Majesty was pleased to grant him the Salary or Allowance of Four thousand pounds per Annum, in the Articles mentioned, during such Time as he should continue to be Lord Chancellor; but the same is so far from being particular in the Case of the said Earl (as the said Articles would insinuate) that it is no other than what hath been for many Years past constantly granted to, and enjoyed by his predecessors in the said Office; and the said Earl doth likewise admit, that his Majesty did, of his royal Grace and Bounty, sign a Warrant for payment of the Sum of Fourteen thousand pounds mentioned in the said Articles, to the said Earl, out of the Receipt of the Exchequer, whereof Two thousand pounds was the constant usual Allowance from the Crown to the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper, for and towards the Expences in entering upon the said Office; and the Residue of the said Fourteen thousand pounds, over and above the usual Fees and Deductions upon payment thereof, was his Majesty's royal Munificence to the said Earl, and the same was received by him accordingly; and the said Earl doth likewise, with the greatest Gratitude, own, that about the same Time, his said Son being then of a proper Age, and desirous to go abroad to travel, his Majesty was pleased to grant to the said George Parker the yearly pension of Twelve hundred pounds, payable out of the Receipt of the Exchequer, during the joint Lives of his Majesty, and the said George Parker, determinable upon his Majesty's granting to him, the said George Parker, in Possession or Reversion, the Office of one of the Tellers of the Exchequer, for Life, and his coming into the actual Possession thereof, and which the said Earl likewise admits has been since granted to his said Son, and that he came into the actual possession thereof in or about July, One thousand seven hundred and nineteen, whereby the said yearly pension is determined; and the said Earl saith, that, during his continuance in the said Office of Lord Chancellor, or at any other Time, he never once had a Design, or View, or Wish to raise to himself any exorbitant Gain or Profit, much less used or ever thought of using any Unjust or Oppressive Methods to Extort or Obtain any Sum whatsoever, as in the said Articles is suggested, but such Views and Practices are inconsistent with the whole Tenor of his Life and Actions; and in case it shall be thought proper for the said Earl to lay before your Lordships an Account of his Estate and Fortune, and of the considerable Sums of Money he has distributed for the Relief and Support of others, it will appear that he is not such a designing, avaritious, and oppressive Man, as in the said Articles he is represented; and the said Earl humbly hopes, that he shall be allowed, in this his Answer, to distinguish between Acts themselves, and the Inferences drawn from them by the said Articles, and that, whenever he admits any Fact, he may not be understood to admit that such Fact was by him done or committed upon such Motives, and with such Designs, or in such Manner, as is suggested in the said Articles, and with this Reservation he answereth, as followeth: By way of general Answer to such of the said Articles, as relate to the making any present by persons admitted to the Office of Masters in Chancery; the said Earl doth say, that the same has been long used and practised in the Time of his Predecessors, in the said Office, and that such presents have been reckoned amongst the ancient and known perquisites of the Great Seal, and the making and accepting thereof has been notorious to all the World, and never before looked upon to be criminal or complained of as such; and the said Earl humbly hopes, that the giving or receiving of a Present on such Occasion is not criminal in itself, or by the Common Law of this Realm, and that there is not any Act of Parliament whatsoever, by which the same is made criminal, or subject to any Punishment or Judgment, which can be prayed in this Prosecution; and the said Earl thinks himself obliged humbly to lay this before your Lordships, not only in his own Defence, but in Vindication of the Honour of so many Great and excellent Men, who have been his Predecessors in the said Office, and have all along done the same, for which the said Earl is now complained of, and of others having been Lords Chief Justices of the King's Bench and Common Pleas, Masters of the Rolls and other Judges, who have likewise received Presents in Money, upon the Admission of the several and respective Officers under them, in several Courts of Justice, and who, the said Earl is assured, never apprehended themselves to be Guilty of any Crime against any the good and wholesome Laws or Statutes of this Realm.

I. &c. To the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth, and seventh Articles, the said Earl further saith, that long before the 24th of July, One thousand seven hundred and twenty one, he did admit and swear Richard Godfrey, James Lightboun, John Borret, and Edward Conway Esquires, into the Offices of Masters of the Court of Chancery, and every one of them did freely and voluntarily, and of their own accord, as former Masters had done to the Predecessors of the said Earl, send to the said Earl a Present upon Occasion of their respective Admittances, which the said Earl accepted, and that after the said 24th of July, One thousand seven hundred and twenty one, he did admit and swear William Kynaston, Thomas Bennet, and Francis Elde into the Offices of Masters of the Court of Chancery, and saith, that every of the said Persons last named, did freely and voluntarily, and of their own Accord, in like Manner, send a Present to the said Earl upon Occasion of their respective Admittances, but saith, that, it being pretended by the said Kynaston and Bennet, that they were by such Presents disabled from answering so much of the Money due from them to the Suitors of the Court, he the said Earl did afterwards, and before the Impeachment, deliver the Present so sent him by the said William Kynaston, being fifteen hundred seventy five Pounds; and also the Present so sent him by the said Thomas Bennet, being the like Sum of Fifteen hundred seventy five Pounds, into the Court of Chancery, in open Court, to be applied for the Benefit of the Suitors, as the Court should Direct, and that the said Earl retained of the Present so sent him by the said Francis Elde, no more than the Sum of One thousand eight hundred and fifty Pounds.

by

VIII. To the eighth Article the said Earl further saith, That in July last the Office of one of the Masters of the said Court became vacant by the Death of John Borret Esq; who died intestate, but whether solvent or not, he cannot say; but upon notice of his Death, the said Earl did at first desire Richard Godfrey Esq; one of the Masters of the said Court, who had been very well acquainted with the said Mr. Borrett, and his Affairs, and afterwards the said Mr. Godfrey and John Bennet Esquire, another of the Masters of the said Court, to inquire into his Effects, and to take what Care they could about the same, who, after some Inquiry, informed the said Earl, that they believed there would be no Deficiency, and secured a considerable Part of the Effects of the said Mr. Borrett, and entred a proper Caveat in the Prerogative Court, to prevent Administration being granted to any Persons who might embezzle the said Borret's Estate; and afterwards, at the Request of the said Earl, proceeded so far, as to obtain a Sentence in the said Prerogative Court, for Administration to be granted, for the Benefit of the Suitors of the Court, to them, the said Mr. Bennet and Mr. Godfrey, which was afterwards, upon their waving thereof, granted to Mr. Paxton, as the said Earl believes, but the said Earl thought it proper and necessary to admit another Master in his Place, to carry on the Business of the Court, and to be intituled to demand the Effects of the Suitors, from the Representative of the said Mr. Borrett, when one should be appointed; and therefore, about the fifth Day of August last, did admit and swear Mark Thurston Esq; into the said Office, vacant by the Death of the said Borrett, and the said Earl admits the said Mark Thurston did upon that Occasion freely and voluntarily, and of his own Accord, send a Present, whereof two thousand Pounds, and no more, were retained.

IX. In Answer to the ninth Article the said Earl saith, That he believes Thomas Bennet Esq; in this Article named, was possessed of the Office of Clerk of the Custodies, in the Article described, and that such Office is in the Gift and Disposal of the Crown, by Grant under the Great Seal, but denies that he did at any time insist upon the Sum of one hundred and five Pounds, or any other Sum of Money, to permit or accept of the Resignation of the said Thomas Bennet, or did refuse to permit or accept thereof, until the said Thomas Bennet had agreed to pay the same, or any other Sum on that Account; but saith, That although the said Office be usually granted by the Crown, yet it has always been looked upon to be the Right of the Lord Chancellors, or Lord Keepers, to recommend to that, and other Offices under the Great Seal, and to approve and allow of the Deputies to execute the same; and, upon such Recommendations and approving of Deputies, have accepted Presents, and looked upon the same as their Right; and further saith, That there have been two of such Offices granted in his Time, one of which appearing to him to be a Case wherein the Party had suffered great Hardship, the said Earl passed the same without any Present whatsoever, though the Office be of considerable Value; the other was the Case of Mr. Hamerley, in the Articles mentioned, in which the said Earl owns he did accept a Present.

X. In Answer to the tenth Article the said Earl saith, The same is conceived in such general Terms, that it is not to be expected he should give any particular Answer thereto; however, he saith, That, during the whole Time of his being Lord Chancellor, he never once took any Money, Present, or Gratuity whatsoever, for or upon Account of the naming, making, or admitting any Officer whatsoever, other than before particularly named, except in the Curfitor's Office, where he owns he has done, as was done by all his Predecessors before him.

XI. In Answer to the eleventh Article the said Earl saith, That the same not containing any particular Charge, he apprehends himself not obliged to give any particular Answer thereto; but however, in general, does say, That he never did admit any Person into the Office of a Master of the Court of Chancery, but who was either known to be of Substance and Ability, and fit to be trusted in such Office, or, upon a proper Enquiry, very well recommended to him as such; and, whenever there have been several Candidates, the said Earl has constantly given the Preference to him that he thought would best discharge the Office, and most for the Honour of the Court, and the Advantage of the Suitors; and believes that he may, upon some Occasions, have declared, that he thought the then Body of Masters as good, with respect both to their Estates, and Ability for Discharge of the Office, and their Integrity, as had been at any time before, or to that Effect, and what he did say to that Purpose, he thought to be really true.

XII. To the twelfth Article the said Earl saith, That if there was any such Practice as is mentioned in the Article, of paying for the Places of the Masters out of the Money and Effects belonging to the Suitors of the Court, he was totally ignorant of it; but admits, that he did not, nor did any of his Predecessors, that ever he heard or believes, give any particular Directions for Schedules to be made of the Money and Effects of the Suitors of the Court to be delivered over to the succeeding Masters, but believes, that in virtue of the general Order of Transfer made of course upon every Admittance, such Schedules were made between the new Masters and their Predecessors, or the Representatives of their Predecessors; and if the ill Consequences, in the Articles alledged, had followed from such Practice, or the not ordering such Schedule, which he does not admit, he insists that the same could not render him criminal.

XIII. In Answer to the thirteenth Article the said Earl saith, That after Christmas, in the Year one thousand seven hundred and twenty, he was informed, That the said Fleetwood Dormer had withdrawn himself to Holland, where he then was, and thereupon the said Earl used all the properest Methods he could for securing his Effects, and particularly directed Mr. Hiccocks and Mr. Rogers, the then two Senior Masters of the Court, to make an Enquiry into his Affairs and Accounts, and to consider what would be most proper to be done; and the said Earl believes, that the said two Masters, in pursuance of the Directions from the said Earl, did search the Chambers of the said Fleetwood Dormer, in Lin- coln's-Inn, to see what Books, Accounts, or Effects could there be met with, but found no Account whatsoever, nor any Effects of Value, and did put a stop to the transferring of the Stock, then in the Name of the said Fleetwood Dormer, in any of the Publick Companies; and the said Fleetwood Dormer's Person being thus out of Reach, and his Accounts and Effects wholly unknown, except the Stock, which could not be disposed of without his Concurrence, a Proposal was some time after made to the said Earl, That the said Fleetwood Dormer might have a Promise of his Liberty from the said Earl, and upon that Condition he would come over, and assign all his Effects, and assist in getting them in, and settling and adjusting his Accounts; and the said Earl, seeing no other Way open to get any thing for the Suitors, and being made to believe, that if any Deficiency should happen, the same would be made up by the other Masters, did agree, That in case the said Fleetwood Dormer would come over, and make a full Discovery of all his Effects, and assign the same for the Benefit of the Suitors, he the said Earl would allow him his Liberty on that Condition, and not otherwise; and the said Earl was soon after informed, That the said Fleetwood Dormer submitted to those Terms, and would very soon come over, and discover and deliver up his Effects; and the said Earl did not doubt, but the whole Debt upon the said Fleetwood Dormer would be paid. And the said Earl saith, That he does not remember that any Application was ever made to him, by the said Masters of the said Court, for any Assistance of the Court, touching the Person or Effects of the said Fleetwood Dormer, but what he granted, so far as he thought it tended to the Benefit of the Suitors, and believes that no Application was ever made to him by the Suitors, or any of them, or any other, to secure the Person of the said Fleetwood Dormer, or for compelling him to make Satisfaction to the Suitors; and the said Earl saith, That he never endeavoured to conceal the true State and Condition of the said Office from the Suitors of the Court, nor did any of them apply, till very lately, to the said Earl to look into the same; and further saith, That he remembers nothing of his ever using any such Expression, as is charged in the said Article, at any time before or after he knew that the said Fleetwood Dormer absconded.

XIV. To the Fourteenth Article the Earl saith, That Henry Edwards, Esq; in this Article mentioned, succeeded to the Office of Mr. Dormer, about the the eighteenth Day of May, one thousand seven hundred and twenty-one; but, by reason of the Disorder the said Office was then under, and the great Danger of a Loss therein, the Earl had given up and quitted all the Advantage which might accrue to him upon the Disposal thereof, and left it entirely to the other Masters to raise what money they could thereby, which was agreed to be all applied towards making good any Deficiency or Loss, which might happen to the Suitors of the Court concerned in that Office; and thereupon the Sum of five thousand Pounds was raised, by the Disposal of the said Office to Mr. Edwards, and was applied accordingly; and the said Earl believes the Debt from William Wilson, in this Article mentioned, was assigned by the said Mr. Dormer to the said Mr. Edwards in Trust, and to the Intent, that he should pay, apply, and dispose of the said Debt, or such Part thereof, as should be, from time to time, by him got in, and received of and from the said William Wilson, in such manner as the Court should order and direct, or to that Effect; after which said Assignment so made, the Earl believes that the said Mr. Edwards used great Endeavours to obtain Payment and Satisfaction of the said Debt from Mr. Wilson; but finding all his Endeavours fruitless, and that the said Wilson had long before stopt Payment, and was in no Condition of paying his Creditors the whole of their Debts, but that he was willing, and had offered to come to a Composition, and to pay them in Proportion the utmost he was able; the said Mr. Edwards thereupon, about the thirtieth Day of June, in the Year of our Lord, One thousand seven hundred and twenty two, preferred his Petition to the said Earl, as Lord Chancellor, setting forth in Substance the State of the Case, as before-mentioned, and praying that it might be referred to one of the Masters of the Court, to see if such Composition, so proposed by the said William Wilson, were for the Benefit of the Persons intituled to receive the same; and the same was accordingly, by Order of the said Earl, referred to Mr. Hiccocks, the then senior Master of the Court, to enquire into, and make his Report therein; and about the six and twentieth Day of July, then next following, the said Mr. Hiccocks made his Report, that the said William Wilson had, under his Hand in Writing, proposed to assign over to the said Mr. Edwards, as a Composition for, and in full Discharge of, the Sum of twenty four thousand forty six Pounds and four Shillings, therein mentioned to be due and owing from him to the said Mr. Edwards, as Assignee of the said Mr. Dormer, the Sum of ten thousand Pounds, Part of a large Sum due to the said William Wilson, from Edward Poulter of Hackney, Gentleman, in this Article mentioned, and to pay the said Mr. Edwards in Specie, the Sum of one thousand four hundred sixty three Pounds, two Shillings and one Penny, over and above the Sum of five hundred and sixty Pounds, then already paid to the said Mr. Dormer, in part of the said Composition; and that upon Consideration had of the Circumstances of the said William Wilson, and the said several Matters, he was of Opinion, that the accepting the said Composition would be for the Benefit of the Person or Persons intituled to receive the same; upon which said Report the said Mr. Edwards, about the third of August then next, preferred another Petition to the said Earl, with the said Report annexed, and thereby expressly prayed the said Earl to order him, the said Mr. Edwards, to accept of the said Composition, whereupon the said Earl, in a proper and usual manner, ordered the same as prayed; and the said Earl saith, that he was informed, and believes, that the said Composition was made and agreed to, upon a Consultation of all or most of the Masters of the said Court, who the said Earl did believe would use their best Endeavours to get as much as they could; and the said Earl saith, he hath heard, and believes it to be true, that besides the one thousand four hundred sixty three Pounds, two Shillings and one Penny, then paid down, there hath been since got in by Mr. Edwards, on account of the said Debt from Edward Poulter, the Sum of one thousand Pounds, or thereabouts; and that at the time of the said Assignment, the said Debt, claimed by Wilson from Poulter, was a just Debt, and Judgment at Law has been since obtained for eighteen thousand Pounds, Part thereof, and the said Poulter was looked upon to be a substantial Person, though, to avoid Payment of the said Wilson's Debt, which arose on account of their Dealings in South-Sea Stock, and Subscriptions in the Year one thousand seven hundred and twenty, the said Poulter not only brought his Bill in Chancery, but, after the same was dismissed, and that he was taken in Execution at Wilson's Suit at Common Law, he found means to make his Escape out of the Custody of the Marshal of the Court of King's Bench, and to get over to France or Holland, where he still continues, as the Earl is informed; but he is likewise informed, that, after the said Escape, a Commission of Bankruptcy was taken out against him by the said Wilson, upon which some Effects were recovered, and likewise an Action at Law brought, and a Verdict and Judgment for eighteen thousand Pounds and upwards obtained by the said William Wilson against the Marshal, on account of the said Escape; and saith, he hath likewise been informed, That the said Edward Poulter and the Marshal have each of them offered considerable Sums of Money by way of Composition for the said Debt; but the said Wilson, from a Persuasion of the Abilities of the said Edward Poulter to pay the Whole, did at first refuse any Composition with the said Poulter, and since hath been afraid to make any Composition, either with Poulter or the Marshal; and what may be the Consequence thereof, with regard to the Suitors of the Court, or what further Sums of Money may be recovered upon account of the said Debt, towards making them Satisfaction, the Earl saith, he cannot with any Certainty take upon him to answer.

XV. To the fifteenth Article the Earl saith, That about the Month of February, in the Year of our Lord one thousand seven hundred and twenty, he gave Orders to his Secretary to write to the several Masters of the Court of Chancery, to bring in their Accounts of the Cash, Effects, and Securities in their Hands, belonging to the Suitors of the Court, and believes he did so, but denies that the same was done with any unjust Purpose, or with any Thought to terrify the said Masters to make any Contribution, towards satisfying the Demands upon the said Office of Fleetwood Dormer, but believes, what they did contribute, they paid freely and voluntarily, and out of their own Money, and therein, as the said Earl believes, did no more than follow a Precedent of the like Nature, on the Failure of Dr. Eddisbury, formerly a Master of the said Court; and the said Earl saith, That his real and whole Intention in calling for the said Accounts, was to inform himself, in the best manner he was able, of the State and Condition of the several Offices, and thereby to be the better able to make proper Regulations concerning the same; and therefore, though the said Article seems to insinuate, as if the calling for the said Accounts was dropped, as soon as the Masters were prevailed on to contribute, the said Earl saith, That afterwards, and without any Regard thereto, he still continued to call for the said Master's Accounts, and not finding them brought in, as he expected, he did, about the beginning of November following, cause another letter to be sent to them, requiring them to bring in their Accounts; and, by both the letters sent to them on that Occasion, he directed the particular Method in which he would have their Accounts made up; but the said Earl, being afterwards convinced how difficult and tedious a Work it would be, and what Obstruction it would give to the Business of the Court, and that at last it could not be depended upon with any Certainty, was forced to lay aside that Design, and to content himself with going on in the same Road which his Predecessors had done; and humbly begs leave to observe, That what has been lately done, with respect to the Accounts of the said Masters, plainly shews the insuperable Difficulties of such an Undertaking.

XVI. To the sixteenth Article the Earl saith, That he believes that, on or about the seventeenth of March, one thousand seven hundred and twenty three, such Order was made, as in the said Article is mentioned, for Henry Edwards Esq; to pay Elizabeth Chitty one thousand Pounds, part of the Money brought before Mr. Dormer, but does not remember that the said Henry Edwards made any Complaint thereof to the said Earl, but believes Mr. Edwards, not having then sufficient Effects of Mr. Dormer's in his Hands, refused Payment thereof; and that in July following, Mr. Lochman, in the Articles named, applied himself to the said Earl several times, and in a very earnest manner, to help the said Mrs. Chitty to the said one thousand Pounds, alledging that he the said Mr. Lochman was to marry her, and that he had made a Composition with his Creditors, upon which one thousand Pounds was to be paid in a very short time, which he then mentioned; and that he the said Mr. Lochman was to have the said one thousand Pounds for that Purpose; and that, if he had it not by the Time, the Composition would be void, and he should be utterly ruined; and at length the said Earl, being greatly moved by the pressing Importunities of the said Mr. Lochman, and by Compassion for the very great Distress in which he then appeared to be, did promise to supply him with the said one thousand Pounds out of his own Pocket, and accordingly directed Mr. Collingbam, then his Secretary, to pay it, taking from the said Mrs. Chitty an Assignment of the Benefit of the said Order, and believes the same was done accordingly; and that, upon Mr. Lochman's pressing for a further Sum for the said Mrs. Chitty, for her own Use, the said Earl might tell him, that the said one thousand Pounds was all that he must expect from the said Earl; and the said Earl does not believe that he had any Discourse with the said Masters to persuade them to pay the said one thousand Pounds to Mr. Lochman.

And as to the last Branch of the said Article the said Earl saith, that the Fact was, that one Jackman, having, in the Cause in the Article mentioned been confirmed the best Purchaser of part of the Estate of T. Harper at the Price of two hundred and sixty Pounds, so long ago as the nineteenth of December, one thousand seven hundred and seventeen, and it being at the same time ordered, That the Writings belonging to such Estate, should be delivered to his Counsel, and that the Tenants should attorn to him, on his his bringing his Purchase Money before Mr. Dormer, then one of the Masters, and the said Money having been brought before the said Master the twenty fourth Day of December, one thousand seven hundred and seventeen, and the Tenants, having attorned to Jackman, but the Conveyances not being then executed, though long before approved, a Motion was made in the Court of Chancery before the said Earl on the fifth Day of December last, that all Parties might execute the Conveyances, and the two hundred and sixty Pounds be paid to the Plaintiff, towards Satisfaction of a Demand she had out of the Estate of the said Harper; and those that were to have the Residuum of the said T. Harper's Estate, insisted, that they were always ready to join in the Conveyances, if the Purchase Money were applied to discharge the rest of the Estate, that they were apprehensive of a Deficiency of Mr. Dormer's Estate, and therefore neither they nor the Plaintiff ought to be Sufferers by such Deficiency, the Delay having been occasioned by the Purchaser, and not by the Plaintiff, and therefore scrupled executing the Deeds, unless upon Payment of the Money to the Plaintiff, and discharging the rest of the Estate therefrom; and this being the first Time that any Question relating to Mr. Dormer's Deficiency had been laid before the Court, by any of the Suitors, the said Earl took notice of its being so, and believes he might express himself to this Effect, That he had indeed heard of the said Dormer's Deficiency, but that it had never yet come judicially before him, upon Complaint of any of the Suitors of the Court; and further declared, That if there should be any Deficiency in his Office, several Circumstances had concurred thereto, as Wilson the Banker's stopping Payment, greatly indebted to him, Poulter's going away in Wilson's Debt eighteen thousand Pounds, and upwards, after a Verdict and Judgment at Law, and Poulter in actual Execution for it; and that, as he had heard, Wilson had then lately brought an Action of Escape against the Marshal, and recovered a Verdict against him for the like Sum; and how all these Matters would at last come out, the said Earl said he did not know, or he expressed himself to that Effect, and no other; and thereupon ordered, that it should be referred to Mr. Edwards, to examine whether the said two hundred and sixty Pounds was deposited with Mr. Dormer for the Benefit of any particular Person, and whom, and what was the Occasion of the Delay, that the said Conveyances were not executed, and the said two hundred and sixty Pounds, Purchase Money, paid out before the Year one thousand seven hundred and twenty; and whether there was likely to be a Loss of any Money deposited with the said Mr. Dormer, and that upon the Master's Report such further Order should be made, as should be just; and the said Earl hopes the said Order was very proper and necessary, and takes the Liberty of representing to your Lordships, That this was after the Accounts of the Masters had been laid by the said Earl before the Lords of the Council, and had been for some Time under the Consideration of the Judges and others, appointed by His Majesty to inspect the same.

XVII. To the seventeenth Article the Earl saith, That he never endeavoured to conceal the Deficiency occasioned by Mr. Dormer's Failure, but as the said Earl was under a full Persuasion, that the same would all in due time be made good, and as Mr. Dormer's Effects were coming in by degrees, and no Application was made to him by any of the Persons concerned, to put a stop to, or any Restraint upon, the Payments, he did not think it incumbent upon him, ex Officio, to make a Declaration of an Average. And the said Earl saith, That he does not know that any Order was made by him for Mr. Edwards to pay any Money that had been lodged with Mr. Dormer, except the Order aforementioned, in the Case of Chitty, but believes several Orders have been made by the Court for that Purpose, and that the said Mr. Edwards, under a firm Persuasion that the whole Deficiency would be made good, paid out the whole Sums so ordered, so far as the Money then in his Hands would extend.

XVIII. To the eighteenth Article the said Earl saith, he never knew how the Masters kept or disposed of the Money and Effects belonging to the Suitors of the Court; and as he believes, that after Dr. Eddisbury's Failure, the then Lord Chancellor, so he knows that after Mr. Dormer's misfortune, the Earl thought of several methods to prevent any Inconvenience upon the like Accident for the future; but they had both the same misfortune, not to bring any of them to such perfection, as to venture to put them in practice.

That several Proposals were made to him by the Persons he consulted upon that Occasion, but none that he believes, it will be held criminal not to have then established; some things were proposed that he thought impracticable, some insufficient, some inconsistent with that compleat Regulation he hoped to make, the Objects he proposed to himself, were to provide for whatever Deficiency might happen in the Office late Mr. Dormer's, to secure the Suitors from any future Loss, and to make several Regulations relating to the Offices of the Masters, and he thought these would be best done together, nor had he perfected the Scheme of any one of them to his own Satisfaction; he remembers no Proposal, that he thought would take it totally out of the Power of the Masters, to dispose of the Securities or Effects, or effectually secure the Cash. The said Earl admits, that he did not demand any Security to be given by any of the said Masters at the time of their Admittance, because it had not been done by his Predecessors, who were much wiser Men than himself, nor was he so much as asked by any of the Parties interested so to do; as to what the said Earl did with relation to the Accounts of the said Masters, he hath already set forth, and saith, That he gave no Permission nor Encouragement to the Masters of the Court, to employ or traffick with the Suitors money for their own Gain or Profit; he owns, that with respect to the Securities in the Hands of the Masters, he made no general Order, and thinks it the less material, because, notwithstanding what is alledged in the Close of this Article, he believes all the present Masters did, in December last, produce all the Securities in their Hands, and the Court of Chancery hath since secured the same for the Benefit of the Suitors.

XIX. To the nineteenth Article the said Earl saith, That upon great Consideration of Mr. Dormer's Deficiency, and of the Danger there might be of further Inconveniences, with relation to the Money and Effects in the Hands of the Masters, Masters, and of several Disputes and Differences that had arisen in the Court of Chancery, and of some Applications of the said Masters, for establishing them in their just Rights, and of some Practices of the Masters, which the said Earl thought ought to be reformed; he was convinced, that the same was a work of too great Consequence for him singly to attempt, and being highly sensible of his most sacred Majesty's paternal Goodness to his people, did presume humbly to beseech his Majesty, as the Fountain of Justice, to depute some of His most Honourable Privy Council, to take the matters aforesaid into Consideration, in order to the establishing such Regulations, as might tend to the Honour of that High Court, and to the Advantage of his Majesty's Subjects being Suitors there; which Request, His Majesty, out of His wonted Goodness, was pleased to receive very graciously, and named several Lords, and other Honourable Persons of His Privy Council, to be a Committee, to take the same into Consideration; and pursuant to His Majesty's Command, the said Committee met, and began with the Accounts of the said Masters, wherein the said Earl begs leave to appeal to such of your Lordships, who attended in that Committee, whether he did not contribute to the utmost of his Power, to have every thing done which the said Committee thought expedient: And the said Earl saith, that he made all such Orders as were by them judged requisite, and so pressed the Execution thereof, that not only the Accounts of all the Masters then in being were brought in, but all the Securities in all their Hands, and the Cash of most of them were actually lodged in the Bank of England, and therefore the said Earl is greatly surprized, to find himself charged with obstructing the taking those Accounts, which he had thus desired might be taken, and contributed to the taking of them with all his Power. And the said Earl saith, That he never thought of preventing a parliamentary Enquiry, any otherwise, than by making it unnecessary, and procuring to the Suitors a full Redress of all their Grievances, and rectifying whatever he found amiss, and that he looked upon to be his Duty, and begs leave to say it here once for all, in answer to all the several Insinuations of that kind contained in the Articles.

And the said Earl further saith, that while the said Accounts were taking, every one of the said Masters declared over and over, that they had Effects sufficient to answer their whole Accounts, and the said Earl firmly believed the same to be true, and as all of them, that he saw (which he believes were all, or at least all but Mr. Kynaston) had told the said Earl, that they were able to answer their Accounts; and when they brought their Accounts to the said Earl, for him to lay before the said Committee, Mr. Holford had wrote under his Account some Declaration to that Effect, and some others of them, as he remembers, had made use of some other Expressions, which he thought not so proper; and some, as he believes, had wrote nothing (but he cannot distinguish the Persons) and the said Earl thinking that when the said Accounts came to be laid before the Committee of Counsel by him, it would be proper that the same Thing should be declared to the Committee, which had been said to him singly, he advised them all to write the same Words under their Accounts, and did tell them, in great Sincerity and Friendship, that at a Time when so many Men's Mouths were open against them as Insolvent, it would be for their Honour and Interest to make it appear, that they were able and Sufficient, as he then believed them to be, but never thought of a Contrivance to have them Deceitfully appear or seem what they really were not; and he says they did then withdraw to make the Subscription, or at least so many of them whose Accounts were then ready; and soon after delivered them to the said Earl, who carried them with him to the Committee of Council, whither he was then going, without looking upon them; but upon reading them at the Council, it was observed that they had not all used the same Words, having varied considerably, but what any of the Subscriptions were, he cannot take upon him to set forth.

And the said Earl further saith, that a subsequent Order being made by the said Earl, for the said Masters to produce their Securities, and their Cash, before the Persons appointed to inspect their Accounts, they made great Complaint, that so many hundred thousand Pounds should be required at so short a Warning, and some of them saying, that though they had Effects sufficient, and could raise the Whole, if they had a little Time, desired the said Earl to allow them further Time for that Purpose; but the said Earl saith, that he required them to bestir themselves, and raise it immediately, telling them that since they had Effects to give Security, they might find Friends to furnish the Money; and believes he did say, that some of their own Brethren might perhaps be able to let them have Money till they could raise it another Way.

But if any of them did supply others with Cash or Effects to produce, only to make a false Shew and Appearance of their Ability, and Readiness to answer the Ballance of their Accounts, the said Earl knows nothing of it, and is sure they had not the least Encouragement from him so to do.

XX. To the twentieth Article the said Earl saith, that it never entered into his Thoughts, to make use of, nor did he ever make use of any of the Money belonging to the Suitors of the Court, for his own private Advantage; but believes, that in December, One thousand seven hundred and twenty, having Occasion for the Sum of One thousand five hundred Pounds, and asking his Secretary, Mr. Cottingham, whether he could lend him the same, he said he could not, but would procure it for him, and accordingly borrowed the same from Mr. Godfrey, one of the Masters of the said Court, and the said Earl gave his own Note for Payment thereof to the said Mr. Godfrey, and in February following repaid One thousand Pounds, part of the said principal Sum; but in the same Month of February, One thousand seven hundred and twenty, upon a fresh Occasion borrowed again Part of the said One thousand Pounds so paid back, and a Note or Notes were given for the Payment thereof; and some Time after the Earl ordered the whole Money borrowed of the said Mr. Godfrey to be paid, with all the Interest due for the same; and the said Godfrey received the Principal, but would not be prevailed upon to take the Interest, or any Part thereof: and the said Earl saith, that all the said money was repaid within the Compass of a Year, after it was borrowed; and the said Earl declares, that he never received or borrowed any Sums of money whatsoever of any of the Masters of the said Court, except as above set forth.

XXI. To the One and twentieth Article the said Earl saith, that upon the strictest Review of his own Behaviour, during the Time he had the Honour of serving his most Sacred Majesty in the Office of Lord Chancellor, he is not conscious to himself that he ever did, in any illegal or arbitrary manner, extend his Power, or the Power of the Court, beyond their lawful and just Bounds, or that he did arbitrarily or illegally assume to himself, as Lord Chancellor, or by Colour of his Office, any unjust and unlimited Power of dispensing with, suspending, or controuling the Laws or Statutes of this Realm, or that he any ways oppressed the Suitors of the Court, or was guilty of any Breach or Violation of the Rights or Liberties of the Subject, or of his own Oath, as Lord Chancellor: And with regard to the particular Complaint against him in this Article, the said Earl saith, that Rachel Tyson, in the Article named, as the Earl is informed, caused a Bill to be exhibited in the Court of Chancery, in the Name of her Son and Daughter, in the said Article likewise mentioned, by their Prochien Amy, against herself, and the said John Tyson and others, to have the Trusts in the Will of her late Husband duly performed; and the same was brought to Hearing at the Rolls the seventh Day of July, One thousand seven hundred and eighteen, and by the Decree then made, it was amongst other Things ordered, upon the Prayer (as the said Earl hath heard and believes) of the Counsel employ'd by the said Rachel Tyson, that a Receiver should be appointed of the Rents and Profits of the Real Estate, who was to have a Salary allowed him, and Power to let and set the said Estate, as there should be Occasion, with the Approbation of the Master, to whom the Cause was referred: and the said Earl saith, that an Execution of that Part of the Decree, which directed a Receiver to be appointed, the Master having certified that he had appointed John Nicholas, Esq; to be the Receiver of the Rents and Profits of the said Estate, the said John Tyson, thinking himself aggrieved thereby, did, in the usual Course of Proceedings in the said Court, cause Exceptions to be filed against the same, and upon the arguing thereof before the said Earl, by Counsel of both Sides, Affidavits were read, to shew that the said John Nicholas was an improper Person; that the said Testator had declared in his Life-Time, that the said John Nicholas by Name should not have any Thing to do with the management of his Estate; and that a considerable Part thereof consisted in old Houses and Water-Works: and the said Earl, upon a full Hearing of both Parties, was of Opinion that the said John Nicholas ought not to be appointed the Receiver; and upon the Proposal of the said John Tyson, then in Court, order'd Robert Doyley, Esq; to be Receiver, he giving Security to be approved of by the said Master; which Order was made, as he believes, on the fifteenth of January, in the Year One thousand seven hundred and eighteen; and affirmed upon the Re-arguing the said Exceptions on the sixth of March, in the Year One thousand seven hundred and eighteen; since which Time the Parties interested have never thought fit to complain thereof to your Lordships by Appeal, in order to have it reversed, as mistaken or unjust, though now the making thereof is complained of as a crime; and the said Earl is not ashamed to own, that he was very well acquainted with the said Robert Doyley for some Years before the said Order, and believed him to be a Person of great Honour and Integrity, Application and Exactness, and believes there are several Persons of Distinction to whom he had the Honour to be known, who had the same Opinion of him; but the said Earl did not appoint him Receiver because of his own Respect for him, but because he was named by the said John Tyson, who was Uncle of the said Infant, and Executor of his Father's Will in Trust for him, and by the same Will appointed his Guardian in case of his Mother's Death or Marriage, and to whom the said Testator had devised the said Estate, in case of the Death of the said Infant without Issue Male, and whose Interest it therefore was to take Care of the Infant's Interest in that particular; and the said John Tyson and Sir Cesar Child (whose Daughter the said John Tyson had married) had such Confidence in him the said Robert Doyley, that upon the eighteenth Day of March, One thousand seven hundred and eighteen, they entred into a Recognizance, together with him, in the Penalty of seven thousand Pounds, for the said Robert Doyley's duly accounting for and paying the money he should receive out of the said Infant's Estate; and the said Earl saith, that no Complaint was ever made to the said Earl against the said Robert Doyley to the Time of his Death, but he owns that he hath heard, that upon the Master's Stating the Accounts since Christmas last, there does appear due from the said Robert Doyley about Two thousand and five or six hundred Pounds, but believes there is not any Fear or Doubt but that the same is very well secured by the said Recognizance.

And the said Earl saith, that he does not remember the particular Expressions used by the Counsel or himself, upon arguing or re-arguing the said Exceptions, but he cannot believe that any Counsel of great Ability and Experience in the said Court, would have thought what the said Earl did extraordinary, much less would have used such an Expression to the said Earl as in the Articles, which is an indecent Censure of his Proceedings; and here being a Decree in this Case, approved of by all Parties, that a Receiver should be appointed to receive the Rents and Profits of the Infant's Estate, the said Earl is at a Loss to understand, how the fixing on the Person to be the Receiver, upon good Security, to account for and pay the same for the Infant's Use, is Reviving the Court of Wards, whose Business it was to take the Rents and Profits of the Infant's Estate for the King's Use, without accounting for any of them to the Infant, but barely providing a maintenance for him, at the Discretion, perhaps, of some Grantee of the Custody.

Thus the said Earl has laid his Case before your Lordships, and doth further, for answer to all the said Articles, say, that he is not guilty of all or any of the matters contained in the said Articles, or any of them, in manner and Form as they are therein charged against him; and the said Earl doth further insist upon the Benefit of his Majesty's most gracious and general Free Pardon, granted to all his Subjects (not therein excepted) in and by an Act of Parliament for that Purpose made in the seventh Year of his Majesty's Reign, in Bar of, and in his Defence against the said Impeachment, and the said Articles exhibited in maintenance thereof, and all and every the Proceedings thereupon, so far as the same extend to any Neglect, Offence, or Misdemeanor, or supposed Neglect, Offence, or Misdemeanor, or any other Act, Matter, or Thing, suffered, done, or committed, or omitted, by him the said Earl, before the four and twentieth Day of July, in the Year One thousand seven hundred and twenty one, and doth humbly insist, that no Evidence ought to be given against him for or concerning any of the Matters or Things aforesaid, in and by the said Act pardoned, or any of them; and doth aver, that he is not within any of the Exceptions in the said Act contained.

The Commons REPLICATION to the Answer of Thomas Earl of Macclesfield.

THE Commons have considered the Answer of Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, to the Articles exhibited against him by the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes in Parliament aſſembled, and obſerve, that the ſaid Earl hath induſtriouſly avoided giving a direct and particular Answer to ſeveral matters poſitively and certainly alledged againſt him in the ſaid Articles, which, from the Nature of the Facts themſelves, muſt neceſſarily lie in his own Knowledge, and hath attempted to diſguiſe and cover the real Crimes laid to his Charge, by immaterial and evaſive Inſinuations of Facts of a different Nature; and that many Parts of the ſaid Answer are contradictory to, and inconfiſtent with each other, upon which they might demand your Lordſhips immediate Judgment: Yet the Commons being able to maintain the Truth and Juſtice of their Accuſation, are willing to enter into the due Examination thereof: and do aver their Charge of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors againſt the ſaid Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield to be true, and that the ſaid Earl is Guilty, in ſuch Manner as he ſtands impeached; and that the Commons will be ready to prove their Charge againſt him, at ſuch convenient time as ſhall be appointed for that Purpoſe.

Lord C. J. King. Gentlemen of the Houſe of Commons, you may proceed as you pleaſe.

Sir G. Oxenden. My Lords, the Commons of Great Britain in Parliament aſſembled have, out of their indiſpenſible Duty to his Sacred Majeſty, and Zeal for the Security of the Eſtates and Properties of their Fellow-Subjects, exhibited a Charge of High Crimes and Miſdemeanors againſt the Earl of Macclesfield, late Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, complaining of many dangerous and corrupt Practices, many grievous and heinous Offences committed againſt the good and wholeſome Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

The firſt and principal Accuſation of the Commons is, That the Earl at the Bar, whiſt he continued in the Office of Chancellor, did illegally and corruptly inſiſt upon, and take of divers Perſons, ſeveral great and exorbitant Sums of Money, in order to, and before their Admiſſion into their Offices of Maſters in Chancery; and that thoſe Offices concern the Adminiſtration of Juſtice in that Court.

This, my Lords, is a Charge of the deepeſt Dye; The Crime alledged ſtrikes at the very Root of Government itſelf; it is the Eſſence and Stability of Society, that Juſtice ſhould be adminiſter'd with Clearneſs and Impartiality, that the People may fit eaſy under the Wings and Protection of the Laws, and their Properties be guarded from unjuſt Invaſions. In the Progreſs of the Charge your Lordſhips will obſerve, That almoſt all the other Crimes and Miſdemeanors, of which this noble Perſon ſtands accuſed, are ſubſervient to this chief Deſign of amaſſing together vaſt and immense Sums of Money, and that they have a tendency to advance the Price of theſe Offices: Whether they be acts of unjuſt Oppreſſion; of wilful Neglect; or of partial and unequal Adminiſtration of Juſtice; whether they be acts of open Violation of Duty, or of ſecret and private Intrigue to elude the publick Juſtice of the Kingdom: Your Lordſhips will find theſe Arrows drawn all from the ſame Quiver, dipt in the ſame deadly Poiſon, and directed to the ſame Mark.

In order to ſet this in the cleareſt light, I muſt go on and obſerve, That the Commons charge in the next place, That inſufficient Perſons were found out and pitched upon, to be admitted Maſters of the Court;

Men of ſmall Subſtance and Ability; no ways fit to be entrusted with the great Sums of Money and Effects lodged in their reſpective Hands.

My Lords, the natural Qualities and Endowments requiſite to recommend Men to ſo great a truſt ought to have been Honesty and Probity; the acquir'd ones, thoſe of Knowledge and Experience; without a due Mixture of theſe it was very hazardous to admit any into truſt: But no doubt Credit and Competency of Fortune were Ingredients perfectly neceſſary; becauſe whatever Loſs, or Miſfortune, might attend the Management of a Maſter ſo accompliſhed, in the ordering the Suitors Money, here might be ſome Proviſion coming out of his Eſtate to make Reparation. Your Lordſhips will, no queſtion, at the firſt View, think it carries an odd Appearance, when this unfortunate Earl had reſolved within himſelf, at all Hazards, to raiſe exorbitant and immense Treasures out of the Sale and Diſpoſal of the Maſters Places, how it ſhould answer his corrupt Deſigns to admit into them Perſons of ſmall Subſtance, and ſome of almoſt deſperate Fortunes, utterly unable to lay down the vaſt Prices thoſe Offices were ſold for at publick Auction: But, my Lords, the Vaſtneſs of the Price was no Objection, or Diſcouragement, to a Perſon already undone, provided he might be made eaſy in the manner of Payment, and run no Hazards. Men of Subſtance might very well be afraid to Preſent, as his Lordſhip's Phraſe is, a whole Eſtate at once for an uncertain and precarious Proſpect, either of Succeſs in the Office, or of Life, or Health, to enjoy it; ſo that the fitteſt Engines and Instruments to effect the noble Lord's Purpoſes, were Men of ſmall and ſhattered Circumſtances. And therefore the Commons go on and charge, That there was a fraudulent and unwarrantable Method made uſe of in paying for the Maſters Offices out of the very Money belonging to the innocent Suitors of the Court.—That this Practice was notorious and publick, and the Perſon at the Bar well acquainted therewith. Your Lordſhips now obſerve, That the greateſt Difficulty of all to an indigent Perſon, viz. the Payment of the Money, was, by this dangerous and unjuſtifiable Contrivance, totally removed, and when a Man was neither to be out of Pocket himſelf, nor thrown into any Fears and Apprehenſions of being queſtioned for miſapplying the Suitors Money, is it at all to be wondered at, that the price of theſe Offices ſhould ſwell to that Bigneſs, as long to be the topick of Converſation in the World about us, and at laſt become the Subject of a national Enquiry? This ſcandalous Method of Payment is of the moſt malignant Kind, and a Suitor is, contrary to the Law of Nature, made the Instrument of his own Deſtruction; his Subſtance which ought to be his Support and Relief, is turned to his Oppreſſion, or if Part only be taken from him, it is in order to arm another to diſpoſſeſs him of the Reſt. The great Perſon, whoſe Duty it is to protect his Property, is the Promoter of his loſs, and is the more unpardonable in it, as he turns that loſs to his own Advantage. If it be a thing univerſally condemn'd, for a Perſon in the Earl's late high Station, to borrow a Suitor's Money without his Knowledge, notwithstanding he offers a moderate Intereſt for it, becauſe it is encouraging the Maſters, by his own Example, to lend out Sums with as much Juſtice to other People, How infinitely greater is this Offence? If it be a Crime to put Mens properties to hazard, how much blacker is it to take them to one's ſelf, and incorporate the Widow's Mite with one's own Heap! But, my Lords, when ſuch such prodigious Sums were extorted from the Masters, could it be any Mystery how they were to re-imburse themselves? For although they paid no Money of their own, yet they made themselves accountable for what they used of the Suitors; was it not an obvious Consideration, That if they dared pay for their Employments with part of the Trust-Money, they meant to traffick and game with the remainder too? They came in Masters upon such Terms, for no other Purpose but to pillage and fleece those under their Care. What must be the natural and unavoidable Consequence of lodging in their Hands such uncontrollable and licentious Power over their Cash, but that the first ill Run would crush them at once, and pave the Way to great Deficiencies! But lest the prospect of so calamitous a Case should deter the most greedy from contracting for a Master's place on Terms the most inviting, you will see, in the Series of this Affair, what Shifts, what Artifices were employed, to hide such a miserable Scene from the Eyes of the World. For the Commons in the next place charge, That Fleetwood Dormer, Esq; having embezzled great part of the Effects belonging to the Suitors of the Court, died, indebted to them in divers Sums of Money, amounting in the whole to 25000*l.* and upwards; that the noble Lord at the Bar has not made any proper Inquiry into Dormer's Deficiency, taken no Care about his Effects, but has endeavoured to hide and conceal, from the Suitors, the State and Condition of the Office, and that this Concealment was, lest a publick Discovery of the Deficiency might lessen the unjust Gains he proposed to himself from the sale of the Masters places. Your Lordships observe here, That one Accusation is, a great and manifest Neglect in the Execution and Discharge of his Duty; a wilful and deliberate Neglect; not arising from the Infirmary of human Nature, but growing out of the Corruption of it; mitigated by no one Shadow of Excuse, but aggravated by the Attendance of many foreseen ill Consequences. If an Office abused in the most fatal Manner, on the Brink and precipice of utter Destruction, was not a proper Object of his immediate Inspection, no wonder the most prosperous Offices did not deserve his Care; what Master, who was an Eye-Witness of this, would be under that decent and necessary Awe of the presiding Person, and keep himself within the just Bounds and Limits of his Office? This, my Lords, is indeed a wilful Neglect: But if you look on it in another Light, in order to conceal the Deficiency, that the Value of the Masters Places might not be run down, it will appear, in its worst Colours, an Artifice to support and carry on a Fraud, a Contempt of Duty for the sake of Corruption. The Series of the Accusation will evidently shew, that the Earl's Heart was set upon this Concealment; for we shall now find him beginning to display his utmost Ingenuity; here was an Accident, which, unless great Care were taken, would entirely frustrate and blow up his Designs; were Dormer's Deficiency divulged abroad, and the whole Body of the Suitors (who had sure a Right, even from Compassion, to be taken care of) made acquainted with the ruinous Condition of his Office, who would answer that the Government itself might not have been alarmed, and a publick Inspection made four Years ago into the other Masters Accounts too? The dread of a publick Examination now overballanced all other Considerations; and as some of the Suitors (whose Intelligence and Sagacity were better than the rest) were daily pressing and soliciting for their Due, the Office-money embezzled, no care taken to secure Dormer's Effects, all Supplies and Demands on Wilson cut off by the wretched and unwarrantable Composition made for the Suitors without their Consent or Knowledge: These Distresses and Difficulties pressing and surrounding this unfortunate Earl, it was necessary some measures should be immediately concerted to prop and support this tottering Office; and therefore, my Lords, you will now find him arming himself with the Weapons of Authority and uncontrollable power, and playing the Tyrant under the specious pretence and colour of Duty. For the Commons go on and charge, that the Person at the Bar, during the time he was Lord Chancellor, made an Order for the Masters to bring in their respective Accounts of the Cash and Securities in their Hands; (a very proper Inspection, no doubt, had it been well designed) but your Lordships will observe the Charge is, That this was done to terrify and induce the Masters to contribute money towards Dormer's Deficiency; to conceal the true State of the Deficiency from the Knowledge of the World: and they further alledge, That in pursuance of this intimidating Order, money was contributed for that purpose, part of which we shall prove to be paid since the act of Grace, on the 11th of August, 1721, and that those Accounts were not insisted upon after that. My Lords, This proposal met with its deserved Opposition from the Masters; however, the apprehension of losing the Cash and Effects prevailed at last, the point was carried, and a Sum accordingly contributed. When your Lordships have but just now seen that there was a very visible, and designed Neglect in forbearing to inquire into Dormer's Effects, and to go to the Bottom of his Deficiency; is it to be imagined, that this calling for the State of their Accounts cou'd be done out of Vigilance and Duty? No man can think so; were they ever insisted upon after the Contribution? His Lordship knows they never were; if the real Design was to search and examine them, it was as proper a time to do it after the 11th of August as before, no body believes they were in a better Condition, the Masters had the same free power of their Cash, and the Person at the Bar had as deep a Sense of his Duty after that day sure, as before. If the misbehaviour of Dormer gave occasion to this designed Inspection into the general Condition of the other Offices, how came it about the Design was never carried into practice, till his Majesty, out of Compassion and paternal Goodness to his oppressed People gave directions for that End? The Deficiency of Dormer continues still, and yet the Earl impeached has made no Regulations in the Offices, examined no Accounts during the Time he remained in that high Post; nor set up any Lights, or Land-marks, whereby the present deficient Masters might have cleared the Rocks on which they have split. No, my Lords, this was only a pretence of regulating; a Dissimulation of Duty, for the better Concealment of Dormer's Frauds. Besides, the Proposal that the Masters should contribute to the patching up a Deficiency in another's Office, is unjust in itself, and fatal in its Consequence. Can any thing be more repugnant to Justice than to oblige one Person to repair the Losses of another, incurred without his Knowledge or Fault? Or where is the Advantage to the Offices in general, allowing it to be just? If Dormer's Deficiency be supplied out of other Offices, will not those Offices miss those Supplies, and be as much impoverished in the general, as Dormer's is mended in particular? Surely, my Lords, there needs no reasoning about this, the Thing speaks itself. The Commons take notice of an alternative in this Article offered to the Masters, either to consent to a Contribution, or to be immediately stripp'd of the Cash and Effects; so that upon paying down the Sum demanded, a Master was confirmed afresh in the ill Conduct of his Affairs, he pays his Fine, and renews his Lease of Knavery and Impunity; his Books may be kept as close from Inspection as the Books of the Sybils, they contain alike the Destiny of Mankind, and he may go on with Authority ty to prey upon the properties of the Fatherless and Widow; and no doubt the Master argues upon as good Grounds as the noble Earl; and concludes, that if for the Advantage of his unjust Schemes, the impeached Lord thinks it highly reasonable to extort money from him belonging to the Suitors, which is never to be restored, it may, with parity of Justice, be as decent for him to take the same liberty with their Cash too, for the Service of his own. But the Commons detest the corrupt Practices of both, and expect exemplary Justice on the great Offender at the Bar.

Thus far I have touched in a general manner on the Management and Artifices used in the Concealment of Dormer's deficiency, and, no doubt, it must create an universal Astonishment in your Lordships, how it could ever enter into the inmost Recesses of his thoughts, that so great a Calamity as this could possibly be for ever hid in Darkness; that so torn and ghastly a wound could ever heal of itself; or rather, that it should not by long Neglect become quite incurable.

Your Lordships will observe in the ensuing Charge, That Mrs. Elizabeth Chitty, an unfortunate Widow, having obtain'd an Order from the Earl at the Bar, by virtue of which Mr. Edwards, Dormer's Successor, was to pay her 1000*l.* part of a much larger Sum deposited in the Hands of Mr. Dormer, and Edwards refusing to pay the same, not having sufficient in his hands, out of Dormer's Effects, to answer the said Demand. The impeach'd Lord did again make use of the same Artifices and Stratagems to compel the several Masters to contribute this further Sum of 1000*l.* to stop the Complaints, and stifle the murmurings of Mrs. Chitty; and did also intimidate them, by representing, That if the Deficiency were known, a parliamentary Enquiry would probably ensue, and the Masters be deprived of their Offices, having bought them contrary to Law: This not taking Effect, the Commons charge, That in order to accomplish his wicked and corrupt Purposes, he did himself pay the 1000*l.* into Lockman's Hands, for the Use of Mrs. Chitty, saying, this was the last money she was ever likely to receive, by reason of a Deficiency in Dormer's Office. My Lords, you see here is a second Attempt, a fresh Endeavour to conceal the deficiency by the aid and assistance of the same measures made use of before, but backed by the Terrors of a national Inspection. The Continuation of these Arts is no small presumption, that the End designed was unjust in the Earl's own Judgment. His Condemnation, in this Instance, arises and springs out of his own Arguments and Conduct. If a publick Discovery of this Deficiency would lay the Foundation of a publick and national Examination; what safer, what more expedient measures could be concerted and taken, than immediately to satisfy Mrs. Chitty's Demands; by the Refusal of which, this publick Discovery, so much, and so justly apprehended, might come out? And what stronger Inducement could he lay before the Masters, why the Burden of this Payment should fall upon them, than by shewing in how fatal a manner that national Examination would affect themselves? He represents to them their having purchased their Offices (and many of them of himself too) in direct defiance of the Law, and that it was their near Concern to avoid the Pit, in which they were likely to be swallowed up. My Lords, I take this to be a plain Confession of his Crime: Our Accusation is, That the sale of these Offices is repugnant to Law and Justice; here is his own manifest Acknowledgment that it is so, but aggravated and heightened by this flagitious Circumstance, That whilst he is reminding the Masters of that Guilt which he himself shared, he draws an Argument from that very Guilt, why they should assist him in a fresh Offence; and since they had already offended against the Laws of the Land, if they would avoid Punishment, the best way of doing it, was by a new Transgression. You have his own Word for it, that he knowingly exceeded the statutable Limits prescribed by the Wisdom of our Ancestors, for the Safeguard and Protection of the Rights and Properties of the British Nation. If the Buyer is Criminal, how can the Seller be Innocent? And yet his Lordship, it seems, knows of no Statute now in being, on which Judgment can be prayed in this Prosecution. 'Tis this wilful and deliberate Transgression of the Laws that has opened that Fountain of Iniquity which has drowned and laid waste the Fortunes of our Fellow Subjects.

In stating the Charge thus far, it is evident, That neither a wilful Neglect of Duty has been wanting, nor a thorough Contempt of Justice; no Pains spared, no Artifices unemploy'd to plunge the Deficiency in Dormer's Office in the deepest Obscurity. You have found him forcing and wresting a Contribution from the Masters; not such a one, my Lords, as would equally answer all Demands on the Office, but as a bare Sufficiency to satisfy the Importunities of Persons for the present, and thereby lull others into a destructive and fatal Security; to make a false shew and appearance of Ability in this Office, which the Masters were afterwards directed to do in theirs. Your Lordships shall soon find him acting another Part, and disheartning Lockman from engaging any further in the Marriage with Mrs. Chitty (for the Sollicitations of a weak Woman to have her just Due might be easier dealt with) assuring him, that the Deficiency was such as must infallibly root out all future Hopes and Expectations on her Account; and yet the close of this Article sets forth, That so lately as the fifth of December last, this Earl sitting then in open Court, did, in a Cause depending before him, protest and affirm, That, for his part, he knew nothing of Dormer's Deficiency, but as publick News. My Lords, if Truth and Sincerity are not to be found in the Seat of Judgment, where must we look for them? Where shall we place our Confidence, if there is no Dependence on the Affirmation of a Judge? Where shall we seek Examples worthy our Imitation, if the uprightest Places afford them not? But to pass over this displeasing Scene, your Lordships will be pleased to take notice, That the unfortunate Person at your Bar, in hopes still to cover the Deficiency, made divers Orders on Mr. Edwards for the discharging and paying the intire and full Dues to some of the Suitors, whilst others were put off with an inconsiderable Share. Is there any thing more noble in the Mind of Man, than a desire of distributing equal Justice? Without equality Justice is destroy'd and sacrificed to the Passions and Infirmities of Men; and yet your Lordships will find there is no Virtue so lovely, no Principle so amiable, but must be abandoned and prostituted to the carrying on this wretched Scheme. Such is ever the miserable Fate of those who dip their Hands in Corruption; they engage originally in one Vice only, but are forced to adopt and cherish a number of others to keep that one a Secret from the World. For it becomes, at last, necessary to do injustice for the sake of Security; Peoples Necessities, tho' they may be alike, yet are their Passions quite different, and a necessitous and starving Suitor of a broken and worn-out Spirit might be turned away from his Lordships Presence with a tenth Part of his Right, whilst one of a more obstinate Make, and a bolder Constitution, would insist upon, and wrangle for the whole. This difference of Tempers might facilitate, possibly, such unjust Dealings for a Time; but could this partial Preference of one Person to another, in manifest Contempt and Violation of the Rules of Equality, be be any otherwise of Service to this Noble Lord, or make any amends for diminishing Reputation, but by stopping the mouths and Cries of the solliciting Suitors with such Proportions as would go down with them, prevent the Contagion from breaking out, and disappoint the Application of a publick Remedy! You see plainly the miserable Consequences the Sale of the Masters Places has been attended with; the fraudulent method of Payment; the unjust and uncontroled Abuses of the Masters; the great Neglect of Dormer's Deficiency; the unjustifiable Concealment of it; the stretches of Art and Injustice in the manner of doing it; 'tis one continued Series and Succession of male-administration, calculated for the advancing the Profit and Gain of the Person at your Bar. Your Lordships would, no doubt, wonder else, why so great a Trust as upwards of a million of money, should be reposed in the Masters, without some reasonable Security on their Part, or some proper Restraint laid upon them for their due and fair Discharge of it, especially, since Dormer had broke, and brought upon the Sufferers so fatal a misfortune: And this it is, my Lords, that raises the resentment and amazement of the Commons, who farther charge, That, notwithstanding the Earl well knew that Dormer's Deficiency was chiefly occasion'd by the liberty he assumed to himself of Trafficking and Gaming with the Suitors Effects, and that the other Masters did, or had it in their Power so to dispose of, or otherwise misemploy the money and Securities in their Hands; and, notwithstanding a reasonable and proper Scheme was laid before him, whereby the like misfortune might be prevented for the future, yet the Earl never required any Security, or laid any Restraints on the Masters, but left them to the wide and boundless Liberty of abusing their Trust as Avarice and Ambition suggested Occasions. I will not enter into the Consideration how far it may have been the Practice not to require Security, I take it for granted, if none has been formerly demanded, it was because the Presiding Persons were vigilantly executing the Duty of their Offices, and by frequent Inspections into the Masters Accounts, restraining them from the Exercise of unwarrantable Power. But were that otherwise, bad Precedents, my Lords, will not justify Omissions; no, nor extenuate them, tho' I believe not any Instance can be produced, not so much as the Appearance of any, where it was so indispensibly and absolutely Necessary as in this Case; there was no need or use of any Example to remind him of it, common Prudence teaches us the Necessity of providing against Disorders or Losses for the time to come, which our past Negligence has once brought upon ourselves or others; 'tis the only Attonement a man can make for his former Faults; and if the Person at the Bar had had at heart the least Intention of repairing the Breaches made in the Justice of that Court where he governed, here was the most fortunate Opportunity of doing it; for your Lordships shall find the very Masters themselves, in a manner, importuning and solliciting him to tie up their Hands by such proper and equitable Restrictions, as would put the fluctuating Fortunes of their Fellow-Subjects on the firmest Establishment. Had the Noble Lord listened to this Proposal (which will come more properly within the Province of another Gentleman to open to your Lordships) the unhappy Deficiencies in the present Masters Offices had been fortunately prevented, the Clamours of the World about us had been stopt, and the Nation easy. Did not Necessity demand it? The deplorable Havock committed since shews it did. Did not the national Voice call aloud for it? The Prosecution of this Day is sufficient Testimony. Was it not his Duty? Sure I am, it would have been his Happiness. And shall not the Ruin of Widows and Orphans plead for Punishment and Reparation? The Commons rely upon your Lordships Justice that they shall.

But, my Lords, there is a Charge behind, which contains matter worthy your Observation; it sets forth; That his most sacred Majesty, out of his fatherly Goodness to his People, having directed an Enquiry to be made into the accounts of the Masters in Chancery; in the month of November last, the Earl impeached did; by his advice and authority, persuade and induce them to make false Representations of their Accounts and Circumstances to his Majesty in Council, and to assist one another with cash and effects to make a false shew and appearance of their ability, that a parliamentary Enquiry might be prevented; and did oblige them to declare in Writing, at the Foot of their Accounts, That they were able and willing to pay the Ballance, although the Earl well knew many of them were not. Your Lordships, sure, cannot but be astonish'd at the Boldness of this Attempt, to defeat and frustrate the gracious Intentions of his most sacred Majesty, to take from his unfortunate Subjects that redress and satisfaction, which their Duty and Loyalty, their Wrongs and Sufferings had claimed in his Royal mind; to deceive his Majesty at the very Council-Table, where he had the Honour himself to sit; and to deprive the Commons in Parliament of that Inquisition for Justice, which the Nation expected at their Hands. The Dread and Apprehension of parliamentary Justice is a strong Presumption of his Guilt. Why, my Lords, should publick Enquiries terrify and dismay an innocent Person? National Acquittals are eternal Monuments of Renown; they are more glorious and lasting than Pillars of Marble, or triumphal Arches; they remain upon Record to all Posterity, never to be defaced by the malice or Teeth of Time. But, my Lords, as there are monuments of Praise, so there are Columns of Infamy; there are National Condemnations as well as National Acquittals; and the noble Lord must now take his Fate in the Judgment of your Lordships, which he so much dreaded. It is an Evidence of a Man's Crime, if he flies for it; it betrays a Self-Conviction in the Party accused, in that he dares not abide a legal Trial; it is another Circumstance against a Man, to be found tampering with a Witness, and carries with it some Presumption of his Guilt; because no innocent Person wants the aid and assistance of a false Evidence. Your Lordships have seen him as it were flying from his Trial, and you will now find him tampering and intriguing with the Masters in the most dangerous and artful manner; and that the Masters are Evidence, and close ones too, will fully appear at your Bar. You shall find him colouring and glossing over the Masters Accounts, with Touches and Strokes of his own, hoping to shelter his own male-administration, by putting the Vizard of Integrity on theirs; this is the glorious Exit he makes; thus he finishes his Impartial and Just Administration.

My Lords, the Evidence to support this Charge will be opened to you, by the learned Gentlemen to whom the particular Proofs are assigned; I shall not therefore take up your Time in entering upon that which exceeds my Province; I only beg leave to hope for your further Indulgence, while I make a general Observation or two on the Nature of the Charge.

The Ground-work and Basis of this noble Person's Crimes is Corruption, a thing in private life the most detested, and in publick Persons, of the most malignant Influence to the State. It deprives the Crown of that solid Strength and Grandeur, that shining Lustre and Beauty, which a just Execution of the Laws reflects upon it; it disarms the People of that Security and Safety which naturally flows upon them from an impartial and uninterrupted Administration of Justice. The Consequence quence of which will ever be, the Crown will lose that proper reverence and veneration from the People which are its due; and the Subjects, restless and uneasy for want of Justice, will lay hold on the first Opportunity of throwing off Allegiance itself. It brings a national Reproach upon us; and, by sowing the Seeds of discontent at home, exposes us to the Incurfions and Depredations of our Enemies: But, my Lords, when it protects itself under the Shadow of Justice, and puts on the Smiles of Innocence, 'tis high time to rise up in Defence of our violated Laws, and set a publick mark of infamy upon it. To what purpose are Judges and Ministers restrained, by the Provision of Acts of Parliament, from selling Offices under their Protection and Care, if Men shall hide themselves under example in bar of the Laws! Will Example plead for him? Surely, my Lords, there are none such: Or, if there were, what would that be but to defend Crimes by their own Blackness and Malignity? As if a Distemper were not to admit of any Remedy, because it is general and contagious. But supposing, for Argument's sake, there have been Great Persons, his Predecessors, who have ventured upon small Presents and Gifts on such Occasions, does it follow, with any colour or pretence of Reasoning, because those have been confined within the bounds of moderation, therefore the Extortion of exorbitant Sums, to connive at outrageous Measures and Oppressions, exceeding almost the Fears of the Oppressed themselves, should take Shelter under the poor Pretence of Precedent and Example? Alas! my Lords, I am afraid Example only operates according to Mens Appetites and Passions; else whence comes it about, that Example should have all the Beauty of an Angel in this Instance, and all the Deformity and Horror of a Fiend in another? His great * Predecessor made no Attempts to conceal a deficient Office in his Time. No, my Lords, he had no corrupt Purposes to feed. The same noble Person never ordered some Suitors their entire Demands, and left others groaning and starving under the Pressure of an unequal Distribution; he did the direct contrary. Happy had it been for this unfortunate Person, happy for the Widows and Fatherless, had he copied after the Example of his renowned Predecessors, in their wise and upright Distribution of Justice, as well as shewn to their eminent Names for Protection, in the illegal Practices wherewith he is charg'd! To what a low Ebb is the Virtue and Reputation of this Nation reduced, if Impunity shall justify Offences; if Bribery shall receive a Patronage from great Examples, and the basest Actions be adorned with the same Lustre and Honour, that are only due to the most virtuous. But, my Lords, the Commons have found him bargaining and bartering an † Office, in the Gift of the Crown, for the poor and sordid Advantage of an hundred Guineas. This is an Instance wherein the very Person of the King is insulted in the most flagrant manner; 'tis a Prostitution of the Regal Honour and Dignity, by one who had the Trust reposed in him, as one of the joint Guardians of the Realm during his Master's Absence: As if too there was no Access to the Throne for Grace and Favour, no tasting the refreshing Streams of that Fountain of Goodness, which rises in his Majesty's Breast, for the universal Comfort of a dutiful and happy People, but by the Assistance of the most abandoned Measures. Can your Lordships any longer wonder the People's Properties were employed to ill Purposes, when his Majesty's Prerogative is traffick'd with and sold? Could it be expected a poor Suitor's Rights should remain secure under his Protection, as Chancellor, when the King's were precarious in the Hands of his own Trustee? And yet, my Lords, how often and how gloriously has this Nation vindicated and asserted its own Honour, in the Ruin it has poured on the Heads of corrupt Judges and Ministers! It was the Loss and Forfeiture of all the Lands and Estate of Sir William Thorpe, Justice of the King's Bench, who was sentenced for Bribery in the Reign of Edw. III. Nay, the Sentence extended even to Loss of Life itself, though that part has been thought not sufficiently warranted, and should have ended in Imprisonment only. Every one knows the Vengeance hurled on the Earl of Middlesex, which is to be found in the Rolls of Parliament. This unfortunate Earl, having delayed Justice to the Farmers of the Customs, in a Matter referred to him by King James I. and having polluted his Hands with exorbitant Bribes, was sentenced in Parliament to lose all his Offices, which he held in the Kingdom; to be forever incapable of any Office, Place, or Employment in the State; to be imprisoned in the Tower of London during the King's pleasure; to be fined 50,000 l. never to sit in Parliament any more, nor to come within the Verge of the King's Court. The Case of my Lord Bacon is another Instance of the Virtue and Integrity of your Ancestors, in the Abhorrence they shewed, and the Punishment they inflicted on that Great Man's Crimes.

My Lords, if the Offences committed by the Earl, and those of the great Persons just mentioned were compared, and the Consequences naturally flowing from them, it would be found how much greater Guilt is comprehended in the Charge of this Day. I will not spend your Lordship's Time, in enlarging on a Distinction between Bribery In an Office, and Bribery by Colour of an Office; between Bribery in a Judicial Way, on Account of Judgment in Causes, and Bribery in the Disposal of Offices, that concern the Administration of Justice; but only observe, that the Sale of the Masters Places, accompanied with the Circumstances I have already explained, is attended with more mischievous and oppressive Consequences to the Subject, than a Judge's accepting a Bribe in Causes depending before him. By means of the latter a Person is put to an extraordinary Expence indeed to come at his Right; or, if he is deprived of it by a corrupt Determination, yet still there is another Resource; and his Happiness is, that he may appeal to Parliament for Redress. But the Consequence of the other Case is, he can come at no Right at all; his Money is embezzled and lost, the Master runs away, the Chancellor is in the Secret, and there is no Remedy left. Is it any Excuse to say, that the Master is liable to answer for his own Frauds, and not the impeached Lord? I beg only to put the following Case. If a Keeper, who has undertaken the Care and management of a madman, wilfully neglects his Duty, sees the disordered Person going to do Mischief, and does not interpose, is not the Keeper responsible? Surely, my Lords, by the Law of Reason he ought. But what if the Noble Lord did not foresee the mischief, and yet be the Occasion of it, from the Exercise of an unlawful Act, there is no question but he would be answerable. A Person intends to rob the King's Forrest, and shooting at a Deer, kills the Keeper, is not he guilty of murder? No doubt he is: Because though he did not intend murder, yet the Act he was about, was an unlawful Act. But, my Lords, the Person at your Bar has not this Excuse; he foresaw the Consequence, and his Intention was bad.

When the Commons consider the high Station in which this noble Lord was placed, the many signal marks of his Majesty's Favour and munificence bestowed upon him; the notorious Breach and Violation of his Oath, and of the several great Trusts reposed in him; when they have found him prostituting and abusing the Authority and Dignity of the Crown, trampling upon the Laws and Statutes of the Realm, destroying and confounding the Properties and Rights of divers of his Majesty's Subjects; the Commons could not sit still, and see this great Offender triumph in the Luxury of unpunished Crimes, without using their best and most effectual endeavours to bring him to Punishment, and to make him an Example of the Justice of the present Age, a Warning and a Terror to Times to come.

* Lord Cowper.

† Clerk of the Custodies.

Sir Clement Wearg, Solicitor General. My Lords, I have likewise received the Commands of the Commons, to lay before your Lordships the Evidence, in maintenance of the Charge of High Crimes and Misdemeanors, against Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield.

The Nature of the Charge consists,

In illegally and corruptly selling and disposing of Offices, which concern the Administration of Justice; in using and practising many indirect and unjustifiable methods, for the keeping up the Price of such Offices, in order to advance his own unjust Gain.

My Lords, the Honour of every Government, and the Happiness of every Nation, depend upon nothing more than a strict impartial Administration of Justice; and the Justice of every Court depends not only upon the Uprightness of the Judge that pronounces the Decree, but likewise upon the Honesty and Unconcernedness of the lesser Officers, who are Assistants to him, and upon whose Reports and Representations his Decrees are founded.

It was doubtless from a just Sense of this, that the Legislature, in the fifth Year of Edward VI. in order to prevent such a corrupt Bartering for Offices, which was before that Statute, against Law, wisely provided, that where any Office, which concerned the Administration of Justice, not excepted in that Statute, was procured for money, the Office should become void, and the Parties concerned in the corrupt Bargain disabled from holding it.

The Court of Chancery, in which the Earl presided, must be allowed with regard to the Number and great Value of Suits instituted there, to be by far the most considerable Court of Justice within this Kingdom.

The Masters of Chancery are (next to the Person that has the Custody of the Great Seal, and the Master of the Rolls) the great Officers of that Court.

They are, by Commission under the Great Seal, associated with the Judges in hearing Causes, and claim a Right to interpose their Opinions in the making of Orders and Decrees under that Commission.

They are intrusted by the Court to state and report matters of Fact, upon the Truth and Fairness of which Reports the Justice of the Decree of the Court must depend. They are sworn to advise the Chancellor himself.

And of late Years they have been intrusted with the Effects and Estates of the Suitors of the Court, to an immense and incredible Sum.

My Lords, great part of the Charge against the Earl consists in setting up those Places to Sale, in using unwarrantable methods to encourage Purchasers, and increase the Price.

It is matter of great Surprise, to find in his Lordship's Answer an Insinuation, that it is not illegal, or against any Statute, to sell those Offices.

Surely, my Lords, there are no Places, that concern the Administration of Justice, more improper to be sold from the Nature of them, or the Selling of which is more evidently against the Statute of Edward VI. than the Masters in Chancery, unless it be Judges themselves.

But it must be owned, the Expressions made use of by his Lordship, are conceived in such doubtful Terms, that it is difficult to know whether he intends to represent the lawfulness of selling those Places for a Price; or only of taking a Present which the Party gives freely, voluntarily, and of his own accord, and which his Lordship says his Predecessors used to take.

There possibly may be a Difference between a Present and a Price; if there is, it is the latter his Lordship is charged with taking; a Price fixed by his Lordship, insisted upon, haggled for, and with Unwillingness paid by the Purchaser.

But, my Lords, even this may be said to be nothing more than an Offence against the Statute of Edw. VI. which as it creates the Offence, so it prescribes the Punishment.

Where the Person admitted to the Office is in all Respects equal to the great Trust reposed in him;

Where the Price given bears a Proportion to the lawful Gain arising from such Office, there may be some Pretence to say, it is only an Offence against that Statute.

But if Persons are admitted to an Office, by which they are intrusted with near 100,000 l. and give as much, or more, for that Office, than their whole Substance amounts to;

If the Price they give is greater than can possibly be given, by one who would be contented with the honest Profits of the Office; if that Price is paid for out of the money of the Suitors of the Court; if, to make the Officers amends for giving such extravagant Prices, they are connived at, indulged, encouraged to traffick with the Money and Effects of the Suitors of the Court, lodged with them for safe Custody only;

This is something more than barely an Offence against the Statute of Edward VI.

'Tis selling a Licence to abuse and defraud the Suitors of the Court, and making the Suitors themselves pay the price of that Licence.

It is this the Commons have charged the Earl of Macclesfield withal. And this surely is illegal, and against some Law or Statute in being.

My Lords, the ill Consequences of this Practice are very obvious; the least of them is a Delay of Justice, from the Masters using Shifts and Excuses to continue that money in their Hands, which they are allowed to make a Gain by, and which probably, when called for; may be locked up by some hazardous Contract.

But the most fatal Consequence is, what cannot be mentioned or thought of, without feeling the greatest Compassion for the unhappy People concerned in it; the Loss which the Suitors of the Court are likely to sustain by it. The Hazard was all theirs, but the Gain belonged to others.

My Lords, whatever Excuses might be made for his Lordship, from the great Variety of Business his high Office engaged him in, which might prevent his Attending to those Things; an Accident happened in his Lordship's Time, sufficient to awaken the most engaged Attention.

When Dormer withdrew from his Office, the Masters themselves were alarmed at it.

When it appeared his misfortunes were brought upon him by trafficking with the money of the Court, and lending it to Goldsmiths at 10 l. per Cent. they expressed a Concern for the Suitors of the Court.

And to prevent the like mischief for the future, a Proposal was made to his Lordship by one of them, that the Masters might give some Security for the money in their Hands; that the Effects might be put in the Name of more than one Master, to prevent their being trafficked with.

This might have prevented the mischief for the future, at least in some Degree.

But

But who then would have given 6000*l.* for the Purchase of a vacant Place? Who would have given 1500 Guineas to procure an Admission?

For these Reasons the Commons charge the Proposal was not listned to, was not put in Execution.

My Lords, another Accusation against the Earl consists in his amusing the Suitors of the Court, with a false Representation of the Masters Substance, by declaring from the Bench, That they were men of as good Fortunes as ever filled those places.

Such an Encômium from a Chancellor would have been a great Honour, had all the persons really deserved it.

But it surely reflects Dishonour, if spoke at a Time when scarce any one person, who heard it, could give credit to it.

When it was the Subject of common Conversation, that one third of the Masters had given as much, some of them more, for the Purchase of their Places, and to procure their Admission, than they were worth in the World at the Time of their purchase. And the person, for whose sake the Compliment was made, least deserved it of any; having but lately been a Receiver of a County, nominally discharged by substituting his Brother into his place, and having paid off a large Arrear, soon after he got the Money of the Suitors into his Hands, out of that money.

But there was then a Master's place vacant.

His Lordship is further charged with endeavouring to conceal the Deficiency in Dormer's Office;

With making a trifling, precarious Composition, for a large Debt assigned for the Benefit of the Suitor, in a very unwarrantable manner;

With making Orders for the payment of money out of that deficient Office, without regard to the other Suitors, who were entituled to a proportion of what was left.

His Lordship seems to intimate, That he never thought there would be any Deficiency in that Office, but is under a full persuasion that all would be made good.

How that is consistent with his quitting 1500 Guineas from the Danger of a great Loss in that Office, I shall submit to your Lordships; but surely the manner in which Dormer withdrew was a strong symptom of a Deficiency, when the Masters intrusted to secure his Effects found little more than the Debt from Wilson to answer a Ballance of near 40,000*l.*

When that Fund was reduced to nothing by a Composition made for half that Sum upon a Beggar, who has since escaped out of Goal, and absconds for Debt.

From whence those full Assurances could arise, we must wait to hear from his Lordship.

That his Lordship did endeavour to conceal this Deficiency, needs no other proof than his not doing any one Act in publick relating to it.

Had Mr. Dormer's person been rendered sacred, by that extraordinary promise of Security, mentioned in his Lordship's Answer, yet he might have been examined upon Interrogatories to disclose his Effects.

The Suitors might have had some Warning to have used their Diligence in discovering his Estate, and preventing any Concealment of it.

Nothing of this done, but on the contrary, upon an Application by one of the Suitors to have his money transferred to another Master, from an Apprehension of Loss, after Dormer had absented himself from the Office, he was informed from the Bench, that his Fears were rash, the Master only gone to take the Air, and that all would be well.

From this Time every thing was carried on with the greatest privacy between his Lordship and the Masters.

Orders were made for the payment of money out of that Office, as if it had been clear from all Suspicions of Loss, contrary to that Rule of Equality, which is a fundamental principle of a Court of Equity, That where several persons have Demands out of a Fund like to prove deficient, they must bate in proportion.

And altho' where that Fund is in the Hands of private persons to be paid by them, it may be intelligible to talk of judicial Knowledge, and an ex Officio Declaration of an Average,

Yet where the Fund is in the Hands of the Court, the payment is to be made by the Court, and the Loss sustained while the Court was possessed of that Fund.

Every Knowledge of such Loss is judicial, and the Court ought in Justice, by what means soever the Knowledge of that Loss comes before the Court, to direct the payment in proportion only.

There is but one Article more that I shall take particular notice of, whereby his Lordship is charged with endeavouring to disappoint His Majesty's gracious Intent of having the Accounts of the Masters, and the State of their Office enquired into.

His Lordship, to put a stop to such Enquiry, persuaded several of the Masters to make a false Appearance of Substance, and a Shew of Readiness to pay over the money and effects of the Suitors of the Court in their Hands.

This was not only a Breach of his Duty as Chancellor, but a great Violation of that high Trust reposed in him as he was a Privy-Counsellor; and if his Lordship did at the same time in Council seem to promote every Step taken there, that is a very great Aggravation of his Crime.

Such, my Lords, is the Nature of the Charge, which the Commons have exhibited against the Earl of Macclesfield; which they are able to make good by plain and clear proof.

Sir William Strickland. My Lords, The Gentlemen who have spoke before me, having fully opened to your Lordships the general Charge against the Earl of Macclesfield, it is my province, and that of the Gentleman who is to speak after me, to open the Evidence we shall produce to make good the several Facts contained in the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th Articles; but as the ninth differs very much in its Circumstances from the other four, I shall say nothing to that Article, but leave that to the Gentleman to whom the opening of these Articles is likewise allotted.

My Lords, We shall shew you, that notwithstanding the many great and beneficial Favours bestowed upon this Earl by the bountiful Hand of his Majesty; and all those Honours confer'd upon Himself and his Family; the Dignity of his high Office, and the great Trust reposed in him, have been prostituted, in order to satiate a boundless Appetite for unlawful Gain.

This I shall now particularly proceed to shew, by mentioning to your Lordships, in the first Place, the several Grants which the Earl, in his Answer, has own'd to have receiv'd; and, afterwards, by opening the Evidence, the Commons will produce, to make good their Charge contain'd in the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th Articles abovementioned, which relate to the illegal and corrupt Admission of four Masters in Chancery.

The first beneficial Grant the Earl, in his Answer, owns to have receiv'd from his Majesty, before the Honour of Peerage was conferr'd upon him, was 1200*l.* a Year granted to him and his Assigns, during the life of his Majesty, in, or about June 1716; in the next place, that in the Year 1718 he was created Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain; and, that at the same time, his Majesty, out of his Royal Bounty, did bestow upon him 14000*l.* and likewise granted to his eldest Son, now Lord Parker, an annual pension of 1200*l.* payable during the joint Lives of his Majesty and the said said Lord Parker, but determinable whenever he should be put into possession of one of the Offices of a Teller in the Exchequer for Life, and which Office he has since obtained; and over and above all these great and beneficial Grants, the usual Salary of 1500 l. a Year out of the Hanaper Office; the other great Profits and legal Perquisites of his high Office, the Earl owns to have had an allowance of 4000 l. a Year. As these were all marks of the greatest Honour, Esteem and Confidence from his great and munificent Benefactor, so surely they ought to have produced in him all suitable Returns of Gratitude, by a just and impartial Execution of the Trust reposed in him, to the Honour of his Majesty, and the Good and Welfare of his Subjects.

But, my Lords, The Thirst of Gain was predominant; and in pursuance of that, he did, in a manner highly derogatory to the Dignity of the Office he then bore, illegally, corruptly and extorsively, by Himself and Servants, treat and barter for the Sale of Offices of Masters in Chancery, which Offices concern the Administration of Justice; and, in the same manner, did take very great Sums of Money for their Admissions into the said Offices.

I must take notice that his Lordship, in his Answer, does not deny to have taken all the several Sums laid to his Charge by the Commons, on the Admission of the Masters, mentioned in the Articles of Impeachment, to their respective Offices; but alledges that he took them as Presents only, freely and voluntarily given, and such as had been usual on such Occasions. But, my Lords, we shall shew you that the Sums of money taken by him were taken in the Manner alledged in the Articles; and by the Evidence I shall now open, your Lordships will see how very different this matter will appear from that which the Earl would insinuate in his Answer; I shall begin by opening the Evidence to the 5th Article, which relates to the illegal and corrupt admission of Mr. William Kynaston to the Office of a Master in Chancery, in August 1721. We will shew you that before Mr. Kynaston was admitted to be a Master, he was advised by Mr. Rogers (with whom he had then contracted for the Sale of his Office for 6000 l.) that the Lord Chancellor would expect 6 or 700 l. for his admission; upon this he applied to my Lord's Secretary, Mr. Cottingham, (who appears to have been the Broker on all these Occasions) and desired to be recommended to the Chancellor for that Office, and told Mr. Cottingham, that if it was necessary, he could obtain my Lord Bradford's Recommendation; the Secretary only answer'd, that another Master had given 1500 Guineas on the same Occasion; Mr. Kynaston then offered 1000 l.; Cottingham reply'd, he could mention nothing less to the Lord Chancellor than 1500 l.; but being afterwards asked by the person who was to pay the Money, what Sum would be insisted on; answered, It must be 1500 Guineas; nothing it seems was to be abated, for this (Mr. Cottingham told Mr. Kynaston) was one of the best Offices, being the fullest of Money and Securities. Money and Securities, my Lords, the property of the Suitors of the Court; and how fatal the Masters making Use of such Money for their own Profits has been, in order to reimburse themselves for the very great Sums paid for their Offices, is now too severely felt by Numbers of helpless Orphans and injured Suitors. Mr. Kynaston, however, seeing no Possibility of admission without paying the whole sum of 1500 Guineas, comply'd at last, sent the Guineas to Mr. Cottingham, who afterwards paid them to the Chancellor; and the next Day Mr. Kynaston was admitted and sworn a Master.

I come now to open to your Lordships, the Evidence which we shall produce to make good the 6th article, which relates to the illegal and corrupt admission of Mr. Thomas Bennet to the Office of a Master in Chancery.

Mr. Thomas Bennet, about May, 1723, bargain'd with Mr. Hiccocks, then a Master in Chancery, for the Sale of his Office, at the price of 7500 l. The next Thing to be done, was to apply to Mr. Cottingham, which he did, desiring to be recommended to my Lord Chancellor for that Office, Mr. Cottingham did recommend him, and told him, that the Lord Chancellor had no Objection to him, that he knew his Father, and should be glad to oblige him; the Compliment, however, ended with a proposition of a present, as he call'd it, and said, he indeed would name no Sum, but that his Brother, then a Master in Chancery, and Mr. Godfrey would easily chalk out a Method for him. Mr. Bennet, my Lords, after consulting these Gentlemen, offer'd 1000 Guineas; Mr. Cottingham shook his Head, and said, he did not care to go to the Chancellor with an offer of that Sum, that more had been given, and he hoped Mr. Bennet would not lower the Price. Mr. Bennet gave some Reasons why he hoped Lord Macclesfield would accept the 1000 Guineas, and said he did not care to give more; Mr. Cottingham again told him, he did not care to go with that message; upon which Mr. Bennet asked him what had been given by other Masters; Cottingham told him 1500 Guineas.

However, Mr. Bennet again desired he would go to the Chancellor, and said that if the Sum he had offered would not do, he would give 1500 l.; Cottingham desired to be excused from going on that message, and said my Lord did not love Haggling; and that if Mr. Bennet would give no more, he might lose the Office, for that if the Chancellor should refuse that Sum, he would not go with any other Offer. Upon this, my Lords, Mr. Bennet at last, consented to give the 1500 Guineas; and this will appear to have been what the Lord Macclesfield calls Mr. Thomas Bennet's free Gift. The Guineas were paid to Mr. Cottingham, who paid them to the Chancellor, for which Mr. Bennet was admitted into his Office, which appears to have cost him 9075 l. and that very Sum, upon the making up of his Accounts, appeared to have been wanting in his Office, for the making up of his Ballance due to the Suitors of the Court. I must take Notice to your Lordships, that the Lord Macclesfield, in his Answer, alledges, that the said Kynaston and Bennet pretending they were disabled from answering to the Suitors of the Court, so much Money as he had taken from them at their respective Admissions, the said Earl did, before the Impeachment, pay into the Court of Chancery, for the Use of the Suitors of that Court, the two several Sums received by him from Mr. Kynaston and Mr. Bennet; but, my Lords, that we shall shew to be a gross Mistake in the Answer, for we shall prove the said Sums were not repaid by him till after the Impeachment, and after they had by Affidavit charged the Payment of these Sums as one Cause of the Deficiency in their Offices.

I come next to shew the Manner in which Mr. Francis Elde was admitted to his Office of a Master in Chancery, which happened in February, 1723, upon the Death of Mr. Fellows; we shall shew your Lordships, that Mr. Elde applied personally to the Chancellor, who told him he would treat with him in a different manner from any man living; in two or three Days after this he applied again to the Earl for the Office, and then did mention a Sum of 4 or 5000 l. my Lord told him, Mr. Elde and I must not make Bargains. So, my Lords, Mr. Elde after this went to Mr. Cottingham, ham, and told him of his intention to give the Chancellor 5000 l. Mr. Cottingham advised him to make it Guineas. And, in pursuance of this Advice, Mr. Elde did, on or about the 1st of Febr. 1723, carry to the said Lord Macclesfield's house 3000 Guineas and 2100 l. in Bank-Notes, muffled up in a Dutch-Basket, which he sent up to my Lord by Mr. Cottingham, who left it with his Lordship, brought down word all was well, and within a day or two after Mr. Elde was sworn into his Office.

I would observe upon this, That a Present, which might have been innocently made, and as innocently received, had needed no such secret Conveyance. But, my Lords, the Suitors of the Court now began to be awakened by the Apprehensions of their Losses, and the Voice of the People to exclaim against that infamous manner of admitting Masters in Chancery; and therefore I presume, my Lords, Privacy was now come to be thought so necessary, that the Secretary himself, tho' concerned in the Transaction, was kept ignorant of the Contents of the Basket.

I come next to open the Evidence we will produce, to prove the illegal and corrupt Admission of Mr. Mark Thurston to be a Master in Chancery, as it is laid in the VIIIth Article. He succeeded Mr. Borrett about the 5th of August last past: And, my Lords, notwithstanding what the Earl of Macclesfield alledges in his Answer, That he was informed by Mr. Godfrey and Mr. John Bennet, that there was like to be no Deficiency in that Office. We will shew your Lordships, That before Mr. Thurston's Admission there was a great Confusion in it; and that his Lordship must have forgot himself, when he says he ever was acquainted by those two Masters, that there was like to be no Deficiency in that Office.

This, my Lords, the Commons will produce to shew, That, notwithstanding the very great losses already sustained by the Suitors of the Court of Chancery, from the great Prices given by the Masters for their Offices, the great Confusion then in that Office, and in which there is a Deficiency of more than 10,000 l. yet, in the same unlawful Pursuit of Gain, he did admit Mr. Mark Thurston to the Office of a Master in Chancery, for the Sum of 5000 Guineas. The manner of it was thus, my Lords.

Mr. Thurston, upon Mr. Borrett's Death, applied to Mr. Cottingham about that Office, and the Price agreed upon betwixt them was 5000 Guineas; with this Agreement Lord Macclesfield was acquainted, and seemed to agree to it: But afterwards, upon a Report's being spread, that Lord Macclesfield designed to give the Office to Dr. Sayer, Mr. Thurston (well advised no doubt) applied to Lady Macclesfield; and, after many Arguments used to persuade her to write to my Lord in his Favour, produced at last 5000 Guineas in Bank-Notes, which had their desired Effect; my Lady wrote, and Mr. Thurston in two or three Days was admitted to his Office.

My Lords, I will make this Remark upon this Transaction; That the taking such an extravagant Sum of money for an Office, in which there was like to prove a great Deficiency, was so far from being thought blameless even by the Earl himself, that it looks as if this Way was necessary to be found out, to hide this Transaction too from the Secretary, who had had the first hand in it: And, to take all cause of Suspicion away from him, he was ordered to be sure to take no Money from Mr. Thurston, on account of his Admission; which he observed so religiously, that I think he scrupled even his own Fees.

Before I conclude, my Lords, I must take notice of an Expression in the Earl's Answer to the two last Articles I have mentioned.

That, of the money he received from Mr. Elde, he retained no more than 1850 l. and, of that received from Mr. Thurston, no more than 2000 l. By this, I presume, the World is to believe, the Earl made an immediate Restitution of the Remainder of the money: But, my Lords, we will shew you, that no money was returned to Mr. Elde till November last, a Time that he stood in need of it to shew and produce his Balance; nor to Mr. Thurston, till October last, at which Time it was evident an absolute Stop must be put to the infamous Practice of Stock-Jobbing with the Suitors Money; and which of consequence would put those two Masters out of a Possibility of reimbursing themselves the great Sums so lately paid for their Offices.

My Lords, the next thing we shall prove will be, That in all these Transactions Mr. Cottingham has acted by my Lord Macclesfield's immediate Directions; and when we have proved that, and the several Facts I have now opened to your Lordships, I doubt not but you will be of opinion, that we have fully made out the Allegations in the Vth, VIth, VIIth and VIIIth Articles, in their utmost Extent; and that the said Earl has taken the several Sums laid to his Charge, illegally, corruptly, and extorsively, in Breach and Violation of his Oath as Lord Chancellor, and of the great Trust in him reposed, contrary to the Duty of his Office, and against the good and wholesome Statutes of this Realm.

Mr. Doddington. My Lords, I am commanded by the Commons to assist the Gentleman who spoke before me, in making good the Vth, VIth, VIIth, VIIIth and IXth Articles against the Earl of Macclesfield, which relate to his taking money for Offices.

The Commons look upon this part of their Charge as a necessary Foundation of the whole, because from this insatiate Desire of Gain have sprung all the Evils and mismanagements, charged upon the Earl in the rest of the Articles.

The Charge against the Earl in four of these Articles is in short this, that he took several great Sums for the Admission of several Persons into the Office of Masters in Chancery; and that he took them illegally, extorsively, corruptly, in Breach and Violation of his Oath as Lord Chancellor, and of the Trust in him reposed.

My Lords, these Facts have been so clearly stated to your Lordships, and the extorsive and corrupt manner in which they were committed, in Breach of his Oath as Lord Chancellor, so strongly enforced by the Gentleman who spoke before me, that I shall not trouble your Lordships upon those Heads.

As to the Illegality of such Practices; that has been laid before your Lordships by the learned Gentleman who opened the general Charge; and, I do not doubt, will be further explained by other Gentlemen to your Lordships Satisfaction: But when the Earl is pleased to say, in his general Answer to all these Articles, "That he hopes receiving Presents on such Occasions is not criminal in itself, or by the Common Law of this Realm, and that there is not any Act of Parliament by which the same is made criminal," Though I have not had the Happiness to have been bred to the Profession, I must beg leave to remind him of the Statutes of Richard II, and Edward VI, as to the Statute Law: And by all that I have ever heard, or can learn, the whole Tenor and meaning of the Common Law does disapprove and condemn such Practices, (though possibly it has not been an adjudged Case) And the Statutes I have mentioned are one Proof of such meaning of the Law, to me, at least, who have always looked upon them to be Comments and Declarations, made from time to time to explain and enforce such Construction.

Putting up Offices of Justice to Auction, my Lords, is repugnant to the Dictates of plain Reason, and consequently frequently to the whole Sense and Spirit of the Common Law of this Realm, which is founded upon Reason; and in this Repugnance to the Intent and meaning of the Law of the Land, lies this Offence, (in my poor Judgment) as to the Illegality of it.

We hope therefore, my Lords, (when we have given our Evidence) that it will fully appear to your Lordships, from what we have opened, That the Earl of Macclesfield has taken the Sums charged upon him; and that he has taken them, as they are charged in the Articles, extorsively, corruptly, illegally, in Breach and Violation of his Oath as Lord Chancellor, and of the Trust in him reposed.

I am now come to the IXth Article, which I am commanded to open to your Lordships; and, indeed, it is a most extraordinary Instance of human Frailty: The Earl of Macclesfield here is not charged with taking money of a Person who received an Office from him, but of one who quitted an Office; not for an Admission, but for a Resignation.

I believe, this is the first Instance, my Lords, where any Person, on the other side of this Bar, was ever accused of forgetting his own Dignity, the Dignity of the August Body he belonged to, and the Honour of his Sovereign, whose Counsellor he was, and whose Royal Authority was, at that time, lodged in his Hands, for an hundred and five Pounds. This is so amazing, that did I not know there was full Evidence to the most minute Parts of this Charge, I myself should not believe it; and I am sure your Lordships Hereditary Greatness of Mind must make it so inconceivable to you, that I shall need all your Patience and Indulgence in what it is my Duty to state to your Lordships, till you hear the Evidence we shall produce.

The Case, my Lords, is this: Mr. Thomas Bennet, one of the Masters mentioned in the VIth Article, soon after his Admission, was desirous to part with his Office of Clerk of the Custodies, (which is in the Gift of the Crown) to Mr. Hamersley; but being unwilling to do any thing, without my Lord Macclesfield's Approbation, he applied to Mr. Cottingham, his Secretary, to obtain it upon this Occasion. Mr. Cottingham promised to acquaint his Lordship with this Request. In a few Days Mr. Cottingham told Mr. Bennet, that he had acquainted my Lord with his Design, but said, a Present was expected of him; and asked him, what he would give? (Your Lordships will observe, that this was their constant method, in driving all these Bargains; for they were conscious that they were doing what was illegal) Mr. Bennet replied, That he did not apprehend that any thing was due to my Lord on this Account; for that he succeeded his Brother, Mr. John Bennet, and neither himself, nor his Brother, made Lord Cowper any Present: And further added, That he hoped my Lord would not insist upon any thing, on so trifling an Occasion, since he had so lately paid him so considerable a Sum. But still Cottingham insisted that a Present was required. Upon which Mr. Bennet seeing himself so hard driven, said he would give my Lord 105*l.* In a few Days Cottingham told him, That my Lord accepted the 105*l.* but that he was to look upon it as a particular Favour, that he accepted so small a Sum; and that if he would bring the money to him, Cottingham, he need take no farther Trouble, for my Lord would apply to the King, for leave to resign. Accordingly on the 28th of July, 1723, Mr. Bennet carried a Bank-Note of 105*l.* to Cottingham; and, in about three Weeks time, (your Lordships will be pleased to remember, that his Majesty was then abroad) Cottingham told him, that the Sign Manual was come over, and chid him for not taking out the Patent; The Consequence of which was, Mr.

Bennet did take it out, and when it came to the Great Seal, no Consideration was had of what he had given before, but it cost him about 64*l.* for the Seal.

We shall call Mr. John Bennet to inform your Lordships, that when he resigned to his Brother, he asked the Lord Cowper if any thing was due to his Lordship; who told him nothing was due.

This, my Lords, is the naked State of the Case, and I shall make no Remarks upon it; I think nothing can be added to illustrate it, because I am confident there never was any thing like it.

But I think, out of Duty to the Commons, and Justice to the Earl of Macclesfield, I am obliged to take Notice of what he alledges in his own Defence against this Charge.

His Lordship is pleased to say, "That tho' this Office of Clerk of the Custodies has been usually granted by the Crown; yet it has been always look'd upon as the Right of the Lords Chancellors, or the Lords Keepers, to recommend to that, and other Offices under the Great Seal, and approve of the Deputy to execute the same; and upon such Recommendations, and approving of Deputies, have accepted Presents, and look'd upon the same as their Right."

I should not have taken Notice of his putting this Part of his Defence in the plural Number, and endeavouring to shelter himself under the pretended Practices of his Predecessors, if he had confined it to this Article; but in his general Answer to all the Articles we have opened to your Lordships, he says, "That he has done no more than his Predecessors, Great and Able Men have done before him, and therefore hopes that it shall not be imputed as a Fault to him." And indeed this Reasoning runs through almost his whole Defence.

My Lords, we could shew, That he has done more than any of his Predecessors; but your Lordships very well know, that is not now in question. I am sure, how Great or Able soever a Man may be that commits a Fault, your Lordships will always be Great enough, and Able enough to punish him for it, when he comes before you. And I am surprized the Earl should suppose, that you will connive at a corrupt Practice in him, (if this be one) because you have not condemned it in others, who were never called to answer it before you, if any have been guilty of it. I hope your Lordships will look on it as a new Way of Reasoning, first made use of by the Earl of Macclesfield, to justify his own Faults by the Faults of another, and extenuate the Danger and malignity of a Distemper by the Extent and Inveteracy of it.

By the rest of this Argument of his, your Lordships plainly see, that he himself thinks that the Acceptance of any Gratuity for advising the King, as a Counsellor, to grant this Office, had been highly Criminal, for he was, at that Time, one of the Lords Justices, and during this whole Charge a Minister of State; but he does not say that he obtain'd leave for Mr. Bennet to resign, and a new Grant of the Office as a Favour from the Crown; no, that he seems to admit would have been highly blameable; but he says, that as Lord Chancellor, he had a Right of Recommending to this Office; and his whole Conduct unhappily explains, that he looked upon a Right of Bestowing or Recommending to be a Right of Selling; so that by his own Argument, he thinks himself justifiable in doing that as the chief Officer and Distributor of Justice, which he seems to own would be highly unjustifiable in a Minister or Servant of the Crown.

I shall take Notice of but one Part more of his general Answer to the Articles, which we have opened to your Lordships, and that is where he says, "That during his Continuance in the said Office of Lord Chancellor, or at any other Time, he never once had a Design or View, or Wish to raise to himself any exorbitant Gain or Profit, and appeals to the whole Tenor of his Life and Actions for the Truth of his Assertion."

This, my Lords, is an Instance how little the greatest Men are acquainted with themselves, and how much they are liable to mistake, when they talk of their own Actions; many of his Transactions in money matters, have been opened to your Lordships; more will be opened; and surely, my Lords, you must be of Opinion, that this inordinate longing after Gain, this Impotence of Mind where Money was concerned, is a constitutional Weakness in the Earl of Macclesfield, which has given a Tincture to every Thing that passed thro' his Hands: Your Lordships have seen him taking great Sums, accepting small ones, taking 5000 l. accepting 105 l. taking for Offices in his own Gift, for Offices in the Gift of the Crown, taking for Admissions, taking for Resignations; in this, indeed, he has shewn an Impartiality that, on every other Account, were highly to be wished in a Judge.

My Lords, I would not trouble your Lordships again after our Evidence is examined, and therefore beg leave to say, that the Commons look upon these Practices so nearly to concern the Welfare of the People, they represent, that, notwithstanding the great Part they bear in the Constitution of this Realm, they have thought it indispensibly necessary to appear themselves, and demand Justice of your Lordships, and we do it with the more Pleasure, because we are assured, that when the Commons are Prosecutors, and your Lordships Judges, the meanest Subject will have Justice, and the greatest will not find Favour.

And, my Lords, considering that the Earl of Macclesfield is to be judged by the most august Assembly in the World, of which he is himself a Member; it is but a suspicious Symptom of his Confidence in his own Integrity, when he lays hold of any Subterfuge to avoid your Judgment, or endeavours to secure himself against any Part of it by any Plea but that of his Innocence, and the Justice of his Cause.

Sir Thomas Pengelly, his Majesty's Serjeant. My Lords, before the Managers lay before your Lordships any Evidence upon the particular Articles, there are some Things, we apprehend, necessary to be taken Notice of in the Introduction to the Articles, which are not sufficiently admitted to the Lord Macclesfield, in his Answer, and wherein we apprehend it will be necessary to give your Lordships some Satisfaction; and that is relating to his immediate Duty as Lord Chancellor, and the Obligation he is under of an Oath, which is administered to his Lordship, and is established by Act of Parliament. My Lords, we think it proper to lay this before your Lordships, because the noble Lord has forgot it, not only in his Answer, but in his Conduct. The Oath is establish'd by the Statute of the 12th of Rich. 2. which enacts, That the Chancellor, &c. shall not name or make any Officer, or Minister, of the King, for any Gift, or Brocage, but make all such Officers and Ministers of the best and most lawful Men.

My Lords, I beg leave to shew, that this Oath is establish'd by Act of Parliament, and afterwards shew your Lordships, that it has been administered to, and taken by the noble Lord within the Bar. It is the Statute of the 12th of Rich. 2. chap. 2. which enjoins this Oath to be taken by his Lordship.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we are not willing to trouble your Lordships with more than is necessary, or to go about to prove those Things that are admitted by the Earl's Answer, but where they are not fully admitted in such a Manner as they are charged, and with all that Advantage that we think we can make of them, we must beg leave to trouble your Lordships with the Proof of them. My Lords, it is admitted by the Answer, that there was an Oath of Office taken; and it is likewise set forth in the Answer, what that Oath was, but the Answer goes no farther, and doth not admit any Thing as to another Oath founded on the Statute of the 12th Rich. 2. which hath frequently been taken by the noble Lord; we think it therefore necessary to have the Statute of Rich. 2. first read, and the Oath that is there prescribed, and to shew you that the Noble Lord within the Bar, did take that Oath several times.

Then the Clerk read the Statute of 12 Rich. 2. chap. 2. viz.

"Item, It is accorded that the Chancellor, Treasurer, Keeper of the Privy-Seal, Steward of the King's House, the King's Chamberlain, Clerk of the Rolls, the Justices of the one Bench and of the other, Barons of the Exchequer, and all other that shall be called to ordain, name, or make Justices of Peace, Sheriffs, Escheators, Customers, Comptrollers, or any other Officer or Minister of the King, shall be firmly sworn, that they shall not ordain, name, or make Justices of Peace, Sheriff, Escheator, Customer, Comptroller, nor other Officer, nor Minister of the King, for any Gift or Brocage, Favour or Affection; nor that none which pursueth by him, or by other, privily or openly to be in any manner of Office, shall be put in the same Office, or in any other, but that they make all such Officers and Ministers of the best and most lawful Men, and sufficient to their Estimation and Knowledge."

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We beg leave that Mr. Eyre may be produced and sworn, in order to prove the Administration of this Oath, and to prove the Noble Lord's taking it several Times.

Mr. Thomas Eyre sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Eyre may be asked, Whether he is an Officer of the Exchequer, and what that Book in his Hand is?

Mr. Eyre. My Lords, This Book I have had in my Custody ever since I have been in the Office. I have been there forty Years. This is the Book in which the Statute of 12 Rich. 2. is enter'd; and, before the Privy Council name the Sheriffs, this Statute is read over to them, and then the Privy Counsellors are all sworn.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we desire the Oath may be read.

Mr. Eyre. There is no Oath in the Book, 'tis only the Statute.

Earl of Macclesfield. Will your Lordships be pleased that he may speak aloud. He says there is no Oath in the Book.

Mr. Eyre. The Statute is read, and as soon as it is read the Book is presented to the Privy Counsellors, and they are sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire he may be asked, Whether he was present at any Time when the Earl of Macclesfield has taken the Oath to perform this Statute in the Court of Exchequer?

Mr. Eyre. Yes, several Times.

Earl of Macclesfield. I beg leave to ask this Question in the first place, Is there any Oath there in that Book?

Mr. Eyre. No, nothing but the Statute of Rich. 2.

Earl

Earl of Macclesfield. Nothing but the Statute of Rich. II? What is it you read, or do at that Time when you say the Privy Counsellors are sworn?

Mr. Eyre. As soon as this Statute is read, the Bible is presented to the privy Counsellors, and they kiss the Book.

Earl of Macclesfield. Is there any one Word said to them, or by them?

Mr. Eyre. No, the Statute is read over, and the Privy Counsellors kiss the Book.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire he may read it.

Earl of Macclesfield. My Lords, I desire that he may read the very Words in the Book, as he reads them in the Exchequer.

[Mr. Eyre reads the Statute.]

Anno xii Richardi Secundi.

ITEM, Accorde est & assentez' que le Chancellor & Tresurer Gardein du Privy Seal Senescall' de Hosteil le Roy, Chamberleyn du Roy, Clerke du Rolls, Justices de lune Bank & de lautre, Barons de le Exchequer & toutz autres, que Serrount Appelles Dordoigner nomer ou fair Justices de la Peace, Viscounts Escheators, Customers Comptrollers, ou Ascune autre Officer du Roy, ou Ministre, seroit fermement Jurez, & Serementez, quils ne Ordeigne noient ne facent Justices de la Peas, Viscounts Escheators, Customers Comptrollers, ne null autre Officer ne Ministre du Roy, pur null' manner Don' ne Brocage favor n'affection, nique null que parsui par luy ou par autr' en priv' ou en Apert Destre en Ascune manner Office, soit mijs en mesme l' Office, ou en Ascune autr', unque que ils facient toutz tielz Officers & Ministers de le plus Bon & Loyalz & les plus sufficientz a lour essient & lour Conscience.

Earl of Macclesfield. Those you say are the very Words you read at that Time when the Sheriffs are nominated in the Court of Exchequer?

Mr. Eyre. Yes.

Earl of Macclesfield. I suppose you read in that very manner.

Mr. Eyre. Yes.

Earl of Macclesfield. Do you say any one Syllable more?

Mr. Eyre. No.

E. of Macclesfield. In the next place, I desire he may tell your Lordships what it is that the Officer does at this time?

Mr. Eyre. He carries the Book to all the Privy Counsellors, and they kiss it.

E. of Macclesfield. Does he not carry it to the Judges too?

Mr. Eyre. Yes every one present kisses the Book.

E. of Macclesfield. Does he say any thing to them?

Mr. Eyre. No.

E. of Macclesfield. You say he doth not say any thing to them?

Mr. Eyre. No, nothing at all.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Eyre may be asked, whether, during his time, this hath not been the usual method of Swearing the Lords of the Privy-Council?

Mr. Eyre. Yes, my Lords, it has.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, it seems to be a Question whether this is swearing at all. Therefore the Question I desire may be ask'd this Witness, is, what Book it is they kiss?

Mr. Eyre. My Lords, it is the Bible.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, whether this hath not been taken to be Swearing them to do what is commanded by this Statute?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we beg leave to object to that Question. We apprehend the Witness is only called to give Evidence as to the Fact, and not to state his Reasons and Constructions of Fact.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I beg leave then to ask a Question that I hope they won't object to: Whether or no this is not the manner of Swearing the Lords, upon the Nomination of Sheriffs in the Court of Exchequer?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we humbly beg leave to object to that Question: We apprehend That centers in the same thing with the former. The Witness has already given your Lordships an Account of all that is said and all that is done when this Act of Parliament is produced. He tells your Lordships the Act of Parliament is read; they kiss the Book; nothing is asked of them, nor is any thing answered: And yet the Gentleman is pleased to ask, whether this is called a Swearing? The Witness has given his Evidence, your Lordships will determine whether it be a Swearing or no.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, whether this Kissing the Bible upon the reading this Act, is not usually done at the time of appointing the Sheriffs?

Mr. Eyre. As soon as ever the Act is read over, the Privy-Counsellors kiss the Bible.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I desire it may be asked, whether they proceed to name or appoint any Sheriffs before they kiss the Book in this manner?

Mr. Eyre. No, they do not.

M. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we shall rest this matter here.

Lord Lechmere. My Lords, I would be glad if this Question might be asked the Witness; Whether there is any Entry or memorandum made upon Record in the Court of Exchequer, of any Oath taken by the Privy-Counsellors on this Occasion?

Mr. Eyre. No, there is not.

Mr. West. We submit this matter to your Lordships: This Statute prescribes, that an Oath shall be particularly taken; the Fact has been stated by the Witness: And whether it does not amount to the Proof of an Oath, that they will comply with that Act of Parliament, we leave to your Lordships Judgment.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We shall leave this Evidence to your Lordships, and submit it your Determination, whether this noble Earl can excuse himself from his Obligation to this Act of Parliament, as an Oath? It is very probable, by his future Conduct, he might be of Opinion, that there was no Obligation of any Act or Oath upon him: But upon the Evidence given, we shall submit this Fact: And shall next proceed to call some Witnesses to give an Account of the Nature of the Offices of the Masters in Chancery, who are admitted, by the noble Lord, within the Bar. We shall first produce the Oath which is administered to every Master in Chancery upon his Admission: Then we shall shew the Commissions from Edw. the Vith's time, and so from time to time, to this Day; wherein the Masters in Chancery are joined with my Lords the Judges, to hear and determine Causes in the Absence of my Lord Chancellor; to punish Contempts, to execute and administer a Jurisdiction in that Court.

The particular Oath very little varies from the Oath administered to the Lord Chancellor, which, in his Lordship's Answer, is set out at large. However, we shall now beg leave to produce the Oath, ; and to that purpose, we desire Mr. Pynsent, the Deputy-Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, may be examined, and he will produce the Oath before your Lordships.

Mr. Pynsent sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Sir, will you produce, before the Lords, the Oath administered to the Masters in Chancery, upon their Admission to their Offices?

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, we hope he shall give an Account, whether he hath seen the Oath taken, and hath administered it?

Mr. Pynsent. Yes, my Lords, I have seen the Oath taken, and have administered it myself.

Reads the Oath.

Sacrm Magistorum Cancellarie } YE shall swear that well and trulie Ye shall serve the Kinge Our Sovereign Lord, and his People, in the Office of one of the Maisters of his Chauncerye, to the whiche Ye be called: Ye shall not assent, ne Procure the Disberytaunce, ne perpetual Damage of the Kinge, to Your Power, ne fraude; Ye shall doe or cause to be made wrongfullye to anye of his People, ne in any thinge that touchethe the Seale: And lawfullye Ye shall Counsaile the thinges that touchethe the Kinge, when ye shall be thereunto required. And the Counsayll that Ye shall geve touching him, Ye shall not disclose. And yf Ye know anye thinge of the Disberytaunce or Damage of the Kinge, or fraude to be made upon anye thinge that touchethe the keeping of the Seale: Ye shall put Your lawfull Power it to redresse and amende; And yf that Ye cannot do, Ye shall advyse the Chauncellor, or Lorde Keper of the Seale, or other whiche may that amende, to Your Power. As God you helpe, and by the Content of this Boke.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, there will be Directions given to lay a Copy of this Oath, as well as Copies of other Records, upon your Lordships Table.

The next Evidence we shall produce, are Commissions beginning in the Time of Edw. VI. to this time, granted to Masters, appointing them to hear Causes, &c. The first Commission we shall produce, is dated the 9th of October, the 4th of Edw. VI. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Paxton may be sworn, who has Copies of these Commissions, and has examined them with the Records.

Mr. Ralph Paxton sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire that he may be asked, whether the Copies in his hand are true Copies, and where they were examined?

Ld. Ch. Just. King. Are they true Copies, and where did you examine them?

Mr. R. Paxton. My Lords, they are true Copies. I examined them in several Places. I must look upon each of them, and then I shall tell your Lordships where I examined them. I examined some at the Rolls, some at the Petty-Bag Office, and some at the Report-Office.

Ld. Ch. Just. King. Did you examine them all there?

Mr. R. Paxton. I did.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Are they true Copies?

Mr. R. Paxton. I believe they are, I took a great deal of Care and Pains in examining of them.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire that these Copies may be read.

Mr. Strange. Are they upon Stamps?

Mr. R. Paxton. Yes, Sir, with a double Sixpenny Stamp.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, it seems they are Stampd; since they make an Objection of that Nature, we desire they may be read.

We shall now desire to read some later Commissions; some granted when the noble Lord within the Bar had the Custody of the Seals himself.

W R I G H T E.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we don't apprehend it necessary to read all the others over; we shall deliver them in; unless it be desired by the noble Lord. My Lords, we now beg leave to call Mr. Meller, who hath executed the Office of a Master in Chancery for several Years. He will give your Lordships some Account of the Nature and of the manner of Execution of that Office, in support of what the Commons have charged.

Mr. John Meller sworn.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we desire Mr. Meller may be asked whether he hath executed the Office of a Master in Chancery, and how long, and what is the nature of that Office?

Ld. Ch. Just. King. Sir, you hear the Question?

Mr. Meller. My Lords, according to the best of my Remembrance, I was admitted a Master the latter End of the Year 1708, and continued so till July 1720. The general Nature of the Office is, to digest and sum up those matters which are ordered upon Hearing to be referred to us, by way of Report: That is the general Business. There is a further Business, when Bills of Coſts are to be taxed, they are taxed and adjuſted by us what is to be paid. I don't recollect any more particular Buſineſs.

Mr. Lutwyche. I deſire he may be asked, for whoſe Service and Uſe thoſe Reports are made?

Mr. Meller. Thoſe Reports are made for the Uſe of the Suitors of the Court. 'Tis to ſtate the Facts that the Lord Chancellor has referred to the Maſter, that are too tedious for the Court to look into.

Mr. Lutwyche. To whom are they returned and directed?

Mr. Meller. Theſe Reports are made to the Court, to the Lord Chancellor, or the Maſter of the Rolls. They have theſe Reports, and make a final Order upon them.

E. of Macclesfield. I deſire he may be asked, when Reports of the ſeveral matters referred to the Maſter to conſider of, which would take up too much Time of the Court to ſettle, are made, whether thoſe Reports of the Maſter are at all concluſive? Or what is the method in caſe the Parties don't acquieſce?

Mr. Meller. My Lords, the Report is only to ſtate the Facts to the Court; and till the Report is confirmed by the Court, what the Maſter hath reported has no Effect. So that I apprehend it is only to lay the State of the matter before the Court: If what the Maſter reports, ſeems agreeable to the Court, then they confirm it; if not, they vary it, or ſometimes ſend it back again to the Maſter for his further Conſideration.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, I deſire that Mr. Meller may inform your Lordſhips, if any Perſon apprehends the Facts miſtaken, whether they have not an Opportunity of rectifying this Report of the Maſter.

Mr. Meller. My Lords, ſo far as I apprehend, the Rule of the Court is this, when a Report is drawn up, the Parties on both Sides have Liberty to object to that Report before the Maſter; and whatever they put in by way of Objection before the Maſter, they may ſpeak to thoſe ſeveral Points when the Report comes before the Court.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. What are the matters that are generally referred to the Maſters by the Court?

Mr. Meller. The Chief matters are the ſtating of Accounts.

Mr. Strange. My Lords, I beg leave to aſk the Witneſs this Queſtion. Whether any matters of Judgment are at any Time referred by the Court to the Maſter?

Mr. Meller. The Nature of Reports requires ſome Conclusion upon them, to be given by the Maſters according to the beſt of their Opinion. But the Court gives a Sanction to thoſe Reports.

Mr. Strange. Whether in any one Inſtance, the Judgment of the Maſter is final to the Suitor?

Mr. Meller. I will recollect, and give your Lordſhips the beſt Account that I can remember as to that. I think when a Maſter has taxed a Bill of Coſts, there is a Subpœna taken out for the Coſts upon the Maſter's Report, without going to the Court. I am not ſure.

Mr. Com. Serj. When Exceptions are taken to a Maſter's Report, doth the Maſter or the Court paſs a Judgment upon them?

Mr. Meller. The Method is this, when a Report is drawn up, a Copy is given to both Sides, and each Side puts in ſuch Objections to it as they think proper; the Maſter goes through thoſe Objections, and having gone through them, he forms an Opinion upon the whole. Then it goes to the Court, and the Parties have Liberty to go upon thoſe Objections before the Court, who finally determine.

Mr. Com. Serj. I deſire, my Lords, that Mr. Meller may acquaint your Lordſhips who preſided in the Court when he came in?

Mr. Meller. My Lord Cowper, I take it, was then Chancellor; it was in the Year 1708, or the Beginning of 1709.

Mr. Com. Serj. We deſire to know whether he gave any Money when he came into the Office, and to whom?

Mr. Plummer. We have called this Gentleman to give an Account of the Nature of the Office of a Maſter in Chancery, we are not come to that Matter of giving of Money; we ſubmit whether it is neceſſary to enter into that Queſtion now?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. If this Gentleman is to be called again, we beg leave to reſerve that Queſtion till they come to that Part of the Charge.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, I have another Queſtion to aſk: It has been aſked, whether the Determination of a Maſter in Chancery is final? I deſire it may be aſked, if the Maſter in Chancery makes a Report, to which there is no Exception, whether the Decree in Chancery is not according to that Report?

Mr. Meller. I take it, after the Maſter has made a Report, and there is no Exception to it, that Report is firſt confirmed niſi, and then it is confirmed abſolutely upon a ſecond Motion.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I deſire he may be aſked another Queſtion: If there be a Reference concerning an Answer which is alledged insufficient, and the Maſter reports it insufficient, whether it is not final and concluſive, unleſs the Party takes Exception to ſuch Report?

Mr. Meller. Unleſs the Party takes Exception, 'tis looked upon as final: For then he ſubmits and puts in a farther Answer, and then the End of referring it to the Maſter is answered: But the Party may except if he pleaſes.

Mr. Lutwyche. As to the taxing of Coſts, whether when the Coſts are taxed to a particular Sum, that is not final and concluſive, unleſs the Party makes Application to the Court?

Mr. Meller. I apprehend I did answer that before. The Maſter, after he has taxed the Bill of Coſts, the Clerk in Court, as I take it, makes out Subpœnas for Coſts of courſe: But I cannot ſpeak to that ſo well as the Clerks in Court; but I take that to be the Practice.

Earl of Abingdon. I would be glad to be informed in this Point: Suppoſing a Sum of Money to be laid out upon a Purchase or Mortgage, whether the Titles of thoſe Eſtates are not commonly referred to a Maſter, and whether the Maſter does not judge of, or determine thoſe Titles?

Mr. Meller. In that Caſe, I can only ſpeak to what came before myſelf. When there was an Order to put Money out upon a Mortgage, the firſt Step I took was, I ſent the Title-Deeds to ſome able Counſel; when I had his Opinion, I uſed the beſt of my Judgment to inform myſelf: If I found no Objection, then I thought I was obliged to allow the Security, and accordingly made my Report of Allowance; and then, as Maſter, ſet my Hand to the Side of the Deed.

Mr. Lutwyche. Another Queſtion I would beg leave to aſk. Tho' it is well known, yet it is fit it ſhould appear from the Witneſs, and that is, whether the Masters don't fit upon the Bench with my Lord Chancellor in open Court in Westminster-Hall every Term?

Mr. Meller. My Lords, in Westminster-Hall three Masters are required to attend the Chancellor; at his own House two; and the like at the Rolls.

Mr. Com. Serj. If the Gentlemen have done, we beg leave to ask one Question: Whether even in the Case of Costs, if the Parties are dissatisfied, Application is not made to the Court (tho' not by way of Exception, yet by Motion) to refer it back again?

Mr. Meller. In the Case of Costs, it hath been a very rare thing to apply to the Court. Some Instances there have been, I believe, but few.

Mr. Com. Serj. I beg leave the Master would inform your Lordships, whether in the Case of Titles, if there happens any Difference in the Opinion of the Parties, they apply to the Court, or are concluded by the Opinion of the Master?

Mr. Meller. I never knew, during the Time that I was in the Office, that any Title was ever contested before the Court; I mean in my own Case.

Mr. Com. Serj. Whether or no he knows any Case where the Parties have differ'd in Opinion about a Title, that the Master's Opinion has concluded the Parties?

Mr. Meller. I don't know, while I was in the Office, that there was ever any Objection before me in the Case of a Title.

Mr. Robins. Give me leave to ask one Question: You say three Masters sit with my Lord Chancellor at Westminster, two at his own House: I desire to know what they do there, whether they sit as Assistants?

Mr. Meller. My Lords, I don't know that ever their Advice was asked.

Dr. Sayer. My Lords, I would ask whether they ever interposed by way of Judgment, or took upon them to act as Judges?

Mr. Meller. My Lords, I think not, I don't remember any Instance of it.

Mr. Strange. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, whether what the Master ever does is confirmed of course, or is there not a Motion for that purpose?

Mr. Meller. I thought I mentioned that before: I shall repeat it again. There is first a motion to confirm nisi Causa; and upon the second motion, unless there is Cause shewn, it is confirmed.

Mr. Strange. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, if there is not an Affidavit of Service of the first Order?

Mr. Meller. I believe there is; but that is the Business of the Solicitor.

Mr. Strange. My Lords, I beg leave he may be asked one Question more, whether there is not a Certificate also from the Register that no Cause is shewn?

Mr. Meller. My Lords, I can't speak particularly as to that; it is a Business that does not lie before the Master in his Office: I believe in many Cases the Register certifies.

Dr. Sayer. We will trouble your Lordships with no more Questions except this one; that is, Whether we shall see Mr. Meller again? For if we are to take our leave of him now, we should offer some other Questions before he departs.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I can't tell whether the managers will have any Occasion to call him again; but he shall stay here to attend, in order to be called when he is wanted, either by the Noble Lord or any other Person. We don't think fit to trouble your Lordships with any other Evidence as to that matter. Their Authority in Court appears by the Commissions that have been produced. It is not said in the Introduction to the Articles, that the Masters are to controul the Lord Chancellor, but to assist him in the Administration and Execution of Justice, of which we think we have produced the fullest Proof; and beg leave to proceed to another Part of our Evidence, that which relates to the Profits of the Office of Lord Chancellor. The ordinary Profits, not to mention the extraordinary ones, which have been made by the Noble Lord within the Bar, I think may be computed to amount to 8000 l. a Year, or thereabouts; so that there is no Occasion to use other Means. But not to enter into them all, we shall only beg leave to call one Witness to prove one gross annual Sum of 1500 l. a Year paid out of the Hanaper-Office. My Lords, we desire Mr. Pynsent may be asked, for what annual Sum he accounted to the late Lord Chancellor out of the Hanaper-Office, during his Time of being in the said Office; how much he has paid him?

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, I beg leave to oppose that Question. I believe there is no Payment from the Crown but what is always upon Record; and therefore that being a matter of a higher Nature, they ought to produce those Records, and not examine Witnesses viva voce to it.

E. of Macclesfield. I believe this Gentleman is right in his Objection in Point of Law. But however, as this Person is the proper Officer, and I believe an honest Man, I will not insist upon the Nicety.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire to know how much a Year he has paid to the impeached Lord out of the Hanaper-Office?

Mr. Pynsent. I have no Voucher with me; but as far as I can charge my memory, 'tis about 13 or 1400 l. a Year.

E. of Macclesfield. If he had had his memorandum with him, I was willing he should give your Lordships an Account of that matter; but if he speaks only by an uncertain memory of it, I hope I shall not be bound by it, especially when he himself assigns the Want of his Vouchers as a Reason why he cannot be certain.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire he may be asked, How much he can take upon him to say he has paid? It is not material whether by Warrant or Special Direction: it is only a Question of Fact, whether he can be certain to a Sum, either 13 or 1400 l. a Year, or other Sum?

Mr. Pynsent. I can say above 1000 l. a Year. If I had my Vouchers here, I could be more certain.

Mr. Com. Serj. The Noble Lord waved the Objection, upon a Supposition that he had a certain Account. As he has not, I must beg leave to insist upon the Objection that I made against the legality of the Proof.

Mr. Lutwyche. We only ask in this Case to a Fact, what he paid to him; and I will add this further, for what Time?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we must insist upon our Objection. The Witness says he is uncertain how much he has paid: He says he has Vouchers which will shew the particular Sums he has paid; and and since it is in their Power to produce those Vouchers, we must submit it that they shall produce the best Evidence they have in their Power to give, and that the Receipts and Vouchers shall be produced.

Mr. Com. Serj. The Answer of the Honourable managers to the Objection, is no Answer. They say 'tis a matter of Fact; but that matter of Fact is matter of Record: it must be proved by the Record, because the Law expects the highest Proof to be made that can be, even in trifling Cases, and much more when the Honour of so great a Lord is in Question.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire to know if there is not constantly a Receipt given upon every Payment?

Mr. Pynsent. Yes, and those Receipts are carried into the Auditors Office, and there they rest.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Then they can be come at?

Mr. Pynsent. Yes, they are carried in yearly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, I did not expect this Objection: But we must submit it whether there is any Foundation for it. If the matter of Record be insisted on, only with respect to the Receipt given, there is no Need of it: better Evidence cannot be given to prove Payment, than the man who paid it. The common Evidence to prove Payment of Money, is to produce a man to swear that he paid that money. No better Evidence can be given; and tho' a Receipt is given, yet when a Person proves he paid the money, he need not produce the Receipt: it is better Evidence than the Receipt: A Receipt may be given without Payment. Therefore we apprehend that the Witness's Proof of the Payment, is sufficient to prove this matter of Fact.

Mr. Com. Serj. I apprehend there is no money either received or issued out by the Crown, but what appears by Record. It is not only those Receipts that is the Strength of the Objection; but when there are matters uncertain, and the Witness says he can't declare what it was, whether upon that Foundation your Lordships won't expect a certain Evidence, not only from the Nature of the Thing, but from the present Circumstances of this Case, when the Witness declares that he cannot remember it?

Mr. Strange. My Lords, I wonder to hear it said, that a Person who swears to the Payment of money, is the most certain Evidence. He may be mistaken, the Receipt cannot. Therefore we must submit it, as they have opened it, whether this is the best Evidence?

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I wonder your Lordships should be troubled with any Thing of this Kind, in order to prove a Salary of 1500 l. a Year belonging to the Noble Lord's Office, when we ask only to the Quantum of the Sum which he did receive from Mr. Pynsent: The Question is, whether we shall be admitted to ask that Question? It is admitted that the Witness paid the Salary: All the Question is, what he paid?

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, I am sorry your Lordships Time should be taken up about a Thing of this kind. When the Objection was first made by my Counsel, which I apprehend is right, I stood up to acquaint your Lordships, that I did not insist upon the Nicety of it. This Gentleman used to pay me money, and I believe he is a very honest Gentleman; but when he comes to say he is not sure how much, and they were working him up to a higher Pitch, and these Gentlemen, for ought I know, or their Sollicitor, may have the Receipts in their Pockets, I thought it was then high Time to stop them. This Gentleman did say it was more than 1000 l. My Lords, I admit it, I believe it to be 1100 l. a Year, or thereabouts: if I knew exactly, I would tell it, I never intended to dispute the Matter.

Mr. West. I would not have your Lordships imagine that the Commons are capable of working up a Witness. It is unworthy of the Commons of Great Britain, of the Gentlemen appointed managers in their Behalf; it is impossible that they should have any View but the Truth of the Fact, and the Justice of the Cause. The Question asked was only what it was he paid; it was not endeavouring to work him up to any Thing. If this was a Question relating to the Crimes charged upon his Lordship, I should not have been so much surprized; but this is only an Aggravation contained in the Preamble. I think the litigating the Point is as great an Aggravation, as the proving the Payment of the Money.

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, I did not intend any Reflection upon the Commons; nor did I say any thing which amounts to it. I did say the Solicitor might have the Receipts, I don't know what they have in their Hands. The learned Gentleman that spoke last, says 'tis not a Charge, only an Aggravation: if it be an Aggravation, should it not be proved, and legally proved? But I have been ready to make this matter easy, for I agreed it to be as much as their own Witness can with any Certainty say it was, and I don't think it to be any Aggravation; and therefore told your Lordships I believed it might be 1100 l. a Year, or thereabouts, not being willing to take up any more of your Lordships Time about it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, the managers for the House of Commons do not think it so material whether it be 11 or 1500 l. a Year. We will take the Noble Lord's Admission: And we apprehend, as it is 1100 l. a Year, it is a reasonable Addition to the Salary of his Office.

E. of Macclesfield. I only would ask this Question, Do you remember what the Chancellor's Annual Salary is?

Mr. Pynsent. No, I do not.

E. of Macclesfield. That is Part of the Particular that makes up the 1100 l. per Annum?

Mr. Pynsent. I think it is so.

E. of Macclesfield. Is it not 300 l. per Annum?

Mr. Pynsent. I think it is thereabouts.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, whether or no this 1100 l. a Year hath been usually allowed to the preceding Lords Chancellors?

Mr. Pynsent. I take it for granted that it was so.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we shall now proceed to call our Witnesses in Support of the Ninth Article, that being a distinct Particular, relating to a Sum not at all involved in the Questions touching the Masters; and, as we apprehend, received by the Noble Earl under Circumstances of the greatest Aggravation that is possible; abusing the Royal Authority, or that Share of it which the Noble Lord enjoyed at that Time when he was one of the Lords Justices. Therefore we give Preference to that Article, and desire Mr. Thomas Bennet, whom I see in your Lordship's House, may be sworn and examined.

Mr.

Mr. Thomas Bennet sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, Mr. Bennet was the Person who was possessed of the Office of the Clerk of the Custodies, at the time of the Resignation of it for the Benefit of Mr. Hamersley, who has now a Patent. We have the Patent here; and if that be read, it will more fully acquaint your Lordships with the Nature of the Office, and then we shall acquaint your Lordships with the Nature of the Transaction.

The Patent begun to be read.

‘ Teste, &c. 5^{to} Septemb’ An. 10 Georgii Regis.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Tho’ the Noble Lord’s Name be not mentioned in the Patent, yet it is sufficiently known from the Date and Time of it, that it was when the Noble Lord was one of the Lords Justices, and had the Custody of the Seals, and that at that time he affixed the Seals to this Patent.

Then the Patent was begun again to be read.

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, I beg Pardon for interrupting, I don’t know whether they think it of any particular Use to read it through; if not, for saving your Lordship’s time, I admit that a Grant was made of the Office to Mr. Hamersley, on the Surrender of Mr. Bennet.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, as it is necessary to shew the Resignation of Mr. Thomas Bennet, so likewise the Nature of the Office; and therefore to the end that may be the better seen, we beg leave the Patent may be read.

Clerk reads.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. The Reading of these Letters Patents shews, that this Office is in the Gift of the Crown: It likewise shews, that the Resignation of Mr. Tho. Bennet was for the Benefit of Mr. Hamersley, for that is recited in the Letters Patents themselves. Now, my Lords, we shall shew your Lordships upon what Consideration or Bargain that Resignation and new Grant were made.

Mr. Com. Serj. I beg leave to make an Objection to that: The Foundation of this Article is a corrupt Agreement for the Resignation of an Office accepted by the Lord Chancellor. Now, in the Letters Patents in general, a Resignation is taken notice of; but they ought to make it appear, That his Lordship's Permission or Acceptance of it is necessary. The Resignation is not made to the Lord Chancellor: Therefore we hope it shall not, by way of Conclusion and Implication, be an Evidence to prove this Resignation to be accepted or procured by him. The Resignation was in fact made without his Privy; and the Resignation itself is of Record, and must be proved by Record.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, I can hardly think myself at your Lordships Bar, by the Objections which are made by the Counsel for the noble Lord. They object before they hear us: They object we cannot prove the Resignation to the Earl: When we have produced our Proof, then they will see whether it be sufficient: 'Tis time enough for them to make the Objection then. If we are to be objected to, upon every Witness we call, before we have asked them one Question, I am afraid a great deal more Trouble will be given your Lordships than we are willing to give. We are first to ask our Questions: if we ask an improper Question, they may object to the Question: Or, if the Answer don't prove our Charge, they may observe on it when it is given. I little expected this Method at your Lordships Bar.

Lords. Go on, go on.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We don't apprehend there is any Occasion to enter into this Objection. It is a Resignation to the Crown, but through the Hands of the Lord Chancellor: He is the Lord that puts the Seal to the Instrument: But if further Evidence be necessary, they must object to that when we have gone through the Proof. Therefore we beg Leave to ask Mr. Tho. Bennet.

Mr. Lutwyche. I thought they would have objected to our asking Mr. Bennet any Questions at all.

Mr. Onslow. It is rather an Observation upon our Evidence, which will be more proper for them when they come to make the noble Lord's Defence.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We beg leave to ask Mr. Bennet, what Application he made for Liberty to resign this Office, and for Mr. Hamersley to be admitted?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. My Lords, as soon as I was admitted a Master of the Court of Chancery, which was the 3d of June 1723, I thought it inconsistent to hold this Office of Clerk of the Custodies, which I had before; and therefore I intended to surrender it to some Person that was proper: And after I had found Mr. Hamersley, and made an Agreement with him, I applied to Mr. Cottingham, then Secretary to my Lord Chancellor. I told him I was possessed of an Office in the Gift of the Crown, and was willing to surrender, and was going to apply to a Secretary of State, to get the King's Leave to surrender, for the Benefit of Mr. Hamersley. I told him that the Office being in the Court of Chancery, the Secretary of State would naturally ask my Lord Chancellor, whether the Person I proposed was well-affected to the Government, and qualified for the Place: And therefore, for that Reason, I thought it my Duty to acquaint my Lord Chancellor with my Intention, and who the Person was, I intended to succeed me. I desired Mr. Cottingham to acquaint my Lord Chancellor that Mr. Hamersley was the Person. Mr. Cottingham replied, he would acquaint my Lord Chancellor, and I should have an Answer as soon as possible. He appointed me to meet him the next Day, when he told me he had acquainted my Lord Chancellor who the Person was, and that my Lord Chancellor said he had not any Knowledge of him. I told Mr. Cottingham he might have acquainted his Lordship that he knew him, for he lived the next Door to him: He is a Gentleman at the Bar well known; and I do assure you he is in the Interest of the Government. Says Mr. Cottingham, my Lord Chancellor don't know him, nor do I. I was surprized at that. But however, said he, Mr. Bennet, there is a Present expected by my Lord Chancellor, and if I made that Present, the thing might be made easy, and my Lord Chancellor would do what I desired; that is, to acquaint the Secretary of State, that Mr. Hamersley was a Person well affected to the Government; and that I desired he might succeed me in my Place. Mr. Cottingham said, there must be a Present. On this, I told Mr. Cottingham, that it was not usual to give any Present upon this Occasion; that, in my own Case, when I came in, I gave none to my Lord Cowper, and my Brother told me that he gave none; and that at his coming in, he asked Lord Cowper if any thing was due to him, and my Lord Cowper denied that any thing was due, and absolutely refused any thing: Besides, said I, it is very hard for my Lord Chancellor to ask or accept any thing from me, because I so lately paid him so great a Sum as fifteen hundred Guineas for my Master's Place; but if he will have it, I will give him one hundred Guineas. He said he would acquaint my Lord Chancellor with it; and the next day, or the day after, he told me that my Lord Chancellor would accept of that; but it was a very small Present, and it was a Favour my Lord accepted it; and my Lord would send over to Hanover for the King's Warrant, and I need have no further Trouble besides passing the Patent.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, whether he paid the one hundred Guineas to Mr. Cottingham, and in what manner?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I did pay it, I think it was in a Bank Bill of 105 l.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Do you remember at what time?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. It was long before the Resignation: For, some considerable time after, Mr. Cottingham asked me what I meant that I did not pass the Patent, for the Warrant was come over. I said I had employ'd Mr. Tench to do it; but however I would speak to him again; which accordingly I did, and Mr. Tench passed the Patent, and I paid him 64 l. 17 s. the Fees for passing the Patent.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was that over and above the one hundred Guineas?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Yes, my Lords.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was there any Deduction upon the Payment of the one hundred Guineas?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. None at all.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, how long this was after he was admitted a Master in Chancery?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I believe it was about six Weeks. I was admitted a Master in Chancery the Beginning of June, and the latter End of July following, I surrender'd my Office of Clerk of the Custodies.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We have done with Mr. Bennet.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. If the Gentlemen have done with him, we beg that he may be asked a few Questions on behalf of my Lord Macclesfield. What was it you desired Mr. Cottingham to say in your Favour to my Lord Macclesfield?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I desired Mr. Cottingham to acquaint my Lord Chancellor, that I intended to apply myself to the Secretary of State, for Leave to surrender the Place of Clerk of the Custodies, and to beg the Favour, that if the Secretary of State should enquire of him after the Abilities and Circumstances of Mr. Hamersley, he might assure the Secretary of State, that he was a man qualified for the Place, and well affected to the Government.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Was that all?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I think that was all.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Was that all that Mr. Cottingham told you he had asked?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I don't remember any thing more, but only Mr. Cottingham returned for Answer, my Lord did not know Mr. Hamersley, and I must make a Present, and then what I desired would be complied with.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I think you say you had some Treaty with Mr. Hamersley about the Surrender of your Office?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Had you come to any Agreement with him for the Office, if you could procure a Surrender and Admittance?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Then I desire to know what Sum of money he was to pay you for that Office, if you could procure him to be recommended?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We hope the Counsel will not ask such a Question.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is not so proper for us to object: The Objection is to come from him: We may tell him that he is not bound to answer such a Question, unless he pleases.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I desire to be excused answering a Question that is not material on one side or the other.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I hope it will be thought reasonable, that he should inform your Lordships, what was the Consideration that induced him to surrender his Office, or what money he was to have?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I might have surrendered that Office without receiving any Money for it; whether I gave it away, or whether I sold it, is not material.

Mr. Strange. I desire to know whether he gave it away.

Mr. West. The Question is only to induce him to accuse himself of a Fact which may be prejudicial to him, and it hath no influence on the Question before your Lordships; which is not, whether this Gentleman had a Right to give away or sell his Office, but whether the Earl of Macclesfield corruptly took money.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is our Duty that he should not be surprized into a Question that may subject him to Punishment. It is not properly an Objection from us; but we ought to let him know, that an Answer to the Question may subject him to a Prosecution. If he thinks fit to answer, we have nothing to say to it.

Mr. Plummer. I have another Objection to the putting of this Question. I perceive the Counsel intend to draw out this Trial to an excessive Length; I hope your Lordships, for your own Sakes, Sakes, will not permit this Question to be answered?

E. of Abingdon. If this Point be insisted on, on both Sides, it cannot be avoided but they must withdraw: But I hope the Counsel for the noble Lord will consider very well of it, before they give your Lordships or the Managers that Trouble: For if your Lordships should judge the Question unreasonable, it would throw a Disgrace upon themselves, and be at least of no Service to the noble Lord that is impeached.

E. of Macclesfield. I humbly apprehend this Question to be extremely material, as that Circumstance of his having made this Present of One hundred Guineas out of Two thousand, perhaps, which he received for surrendring the Place, must set this matter in a different light than it would appear in, if nothing else had been done but the bare paying of the One hundred Guineas; but since I perceive it to be your Lordships Sense that he should not be asked the Question, I therefore decline insisting on it.

Dr. Sayer. My Lords, I beg leave to ask Mr. Bennet this Question: He was pleased to say that he gave a Hundred Guineas. Now I desire it may be asked of him, whether he gave it to permit him to resign, or to give a Recommendation of Mr. Hamersley, or what else. That he would please to explain it, what it was given for.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I have said it twice; but I will repeat it again. I said that it was that my Lord Chancellor might recommend the Person to the Secretary of State; for I apprehended it was not in my Lord's Power or Gift: He might have done it without taking any Money.

Dr. Sayer. With Regard to the 64 l. odd money, what was that paid for? Whether to the Great Seal only, or for the whole Fees in passing the Patent through all the Offices?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. It was paid to Mr. Tench the Clerk of the Patents, who passed this Patent thro' all the Offices; and the Great Seal was included in it, as I apprehend.

Dr. Sayer. I ask who this Mr. Tench is, whether he is an Officer belonging to the Great Seal, under the Lord Chancellor?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. He is Clerk of the Patents; I do not know who he belongs to.

Mr. Robins. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, Whether Mr. Cottingham told him, that the Lord Macclesfield insisted upon any particular Sum?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Mr. Cottingham told me, that my Lord insisted upon One hundred Guineas; and I argued the Unreasonableness and Hardship of it.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, I desire Mr. Bennet may acquaint your Lordships, whether ever he made any Application to the noble Lord for Permission to resign?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I never spoke to my Lord myself.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. If the Gentlemen have done with him, we beg leave to explain this Matter, and to ask him upon what Account it was that Mr. Cottingham, from my Lord Macclesfield, said a Present was expected?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I can't say what was Mr. Cottingham's Reason; but he said my Lord Chancellor did not know Mr. Hamersley; and then he went on, and said, a Present was expected. I apprehended, Mr. Cottingham took it, that I could not do it without my Lord Chancellor's Consent.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, Whether the Hundred Guineas was paid for a Recommendation of Mr. Hamersley, or that the Whole, of procuring the Warrant for the Patent, was to be done for it?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Mr. Cottingham assured me, I need have no farther Trouble about it, if I would pay the Hundred Guineas: He would get the King's Warrant; and I should have no farther Trouble, but passing the Patent.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, whether he depended upon these Assurances, or whether he made Application to any body else?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I never made any other Application; and I told Mr. Cottingham, if any Accident happened of Death, &c. before the Warrant came over, I hoped my Lord Chancellor would return the Hundred Guineas; and he said, surely so.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I beg leave to observe, that the Patent proves that this corrupt Bargain was executed.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, whether Mr. Cottingham delivered to him the Sign-manual, or whether Mr. Cottingham got the Patent passed?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I never saw the Sign-manual. He delivered it, as I believe, to Mr. Tench.

Mr. Lutwyche. Did Mr. Cottingham give you Notice when the Sign-manual came over?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Yes, he did give me Notice it was come over, and was very angry I did not go about it.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire Mr. Bennet may give your Lordships an Account what Time it was?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. About the latter End of July.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked, whether he had not made Application to the Secretary's-Office?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. No, I had not made any Application at all.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Did you never make any Application to any other Person, either before or after?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I am positive I did not.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Did you ever say about that Time, that you had made Application to any other Person?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. No, I don't remember that I did.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. No; did you never make Application to any body else?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I never told any body, to the best of my Knowledge and Belief. I am very confident I never did.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, if they have done with this Witness, we beg leave to call Mr. Cottingham, who was an Agent, and paid over this money to my Lord Macclesfield.

Mr. Peter Cottingham sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we only call Mr. Cottingham to acquaint your Lordships when he paid over these Hundred Guineas to my Lord Macclesfield.

Mr. Cottingham. In July I think it was.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. How long after you received it from Mr. Tho. Bennet?

Mr. Cottingham. I believe I paid it over that Day, or the Day after.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, how long before the Patent was passed?

Mr. Cottingham. I can't tell, because I can't certainly say when the Patent passed.

Mr. Lutwyche. We desire to ask him, whether it was that Year when the King was beyond Sea?

Mr. Cottingham. I think, my Lords, it was; it was in July 1723.

Mr. Com. Serj. If the Gentlemen of the House of Commons have done with him, I beg that he would give your Lordships an Account what Discourse he had with Mr. Bennet?

Ld. Ch. Just. King. You hear the Question?

Mr. Cottingham. Mr. Tho. Bennet told me he had agreed with Mr. Hamersley for the Place of Clerk of the Custodies; and that he did not think it convenient to keep two such considerable Places which depended upon his own Life only; that is, the Master's Place, which he had before purchased, and this. He told me he had disposed of this Place to Mr. Hamersley, in order to reimburse himself Part of the money he had paid to Mr. Hiccocks for his Master's Place that he had purchased of him, and for that Reason he did not care to keep both.

Mr. Com. Serj. Did he tell you how much he had disposed of it for?

Mr. Cottingham. No, he did not.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, I desire Mr. Cottingham may be asked what it was Mr. Bennet desired him to request of my Lord Macclesfield?

Mr. Cottingham. To the best of my remembrance, he said, he hoped that his Lordship would accept of a Hundred Guineas, because he had received from him so lately a Present for his master's Place, and he desired his Lordship to forward his Petition to his Majesty.

Dr. Sayer. Was this on the first Applications?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes; he never made but one Application to me.

Dr. Sayer. It is of Consequence; and therefore I desire it may be asked, whether at the first Time he applied, he made this Offer of One hundred Guineas?

Mr. Cottingham. He did, and I paid it over to my Lord Macclesfield.

Dr. Sayer. I desire Mr. Cottingham may be asked, whether he knew Mr. Hamersley before this Time?

Mr. Cottingham. I knew him very well, he was my next Door Neighbour both in Town and Country.

Dr. Sayer. Did you tell Mr. Bennet you did not know him?

Mr. Cottingham. No, I never told him so, it was impossible I should; he was my next Door Neighbour both in Bell yard, and at Hampstead.

Dr. Sayer. What Character had Mr. Hamersley?

Mr. Cottingham. A very good one.

E. of Macclesfield. When you first spoke to me of this matter, what did you tell me?

Mr. Cottingham. I told your Lordship Mr. Hamersley was my next Door Neighbour both in Town and Country; and that he was a Gentleman of as unquestionable a Character as any at the Bar; and your Lordship was pleased to depend upon me for his Character.

Mr. Strange. He is pleased to say Mr. Bennet did not inform him what Agreement was made between him and Mr. Hamersley. But did not he say on what Account he resigned?

Mr. Cottingham. He told me he surrendered the Office, to reimburse himself the Money he had paid to Mr. Hiccocks for his Office.

Mr. Strange. What Office was that?

Mr. Cottingham. The Master's Office.

Mr. Strange. Did he mention that?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, he did mention it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. If they have done, we beg leave to ask Mr. Cottingham, since he informed my Lord, of the Circumstances of Mr. Hamersley, whether he acquainted my Lord of Mr. Hamersley, before or after the Time he paid the 100 Guineas?

Mr. Cottingham. I acquainted his Lordship before.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I beg leave to ask another Question. If this Gentleman can inform your Lordships upon what Account it was, he received the 100 Guineas from Mr. Bennet?

Mr. Cottingham. I received the 100 Guineas upon Account of his Surrender of his Office.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We beg leave to ask another Question. Whether before he agreed with Mr. Bennet, he had informed my Lord Macclesfield of any Proposal, or what was to be expected?

Mr. Cottingham. No, I don't remember I did. All that passed on that Occasion was, Mr. Bennet said he was willing to give 100 Guineas, and he hoped his Lordship would not insist upon more.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I beg he may be asked another Question. Whether when he came back from my Lord Macclesfield to Mr. Bennet, with the Account of the Acceptance of the One hundred Guineas, he did not tell Mr. Bennet he ought to take it as a favour that his Lordship accepted so little?

Mr. Cottingham. I can't remember, but I think I did not.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Can you say you did, or you did not?

Mr. Cottingham. To the best of my Remembrance I did not.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire he may inform your Lordships what Answer he brought to Mr. Bennet from my Lord Macclesfield?

Mr. Cottingham. The Answer my Lord Macclesfield ordered me to give Mr. Bennet, was, that he agreed to accept of the 100 Guineas according to his Proposal.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether was this Offer of the 100 Guineas the first Time, or after Mr. Cottingham had spoken to my Lord Macclesfield about it?

Mr. Cottingham. Mr. Bennet proposed to me to give the 100 Guineas before I spoke to my Lord about it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether it was the first Time he offered the 100 Guineas, or some Time after.

Mr. Cottingham. He offered the 100 Guineas the first Time.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether Mr. Cottingham did not say the first Time, that something was expected?

Mr. Cottingham. I believe I did say the Great Seal would expect something.

Mr. Lutwyche. Mr. Cottingham says, he believes he did say something was expected. Then I desire to refresh his Memory, and that he would acquaint your Lordships whether that was mentioned before the 100 Guineas were offered?

Mr. Cottingham. No, not as I remember.

Mr. Lutwyche. What did you say on that Occasion?

Mr. Cottingham. I said on that Occasion, as he he offered 100 Guineas, I told him my Lord was willing to accept of it.

Mr. Lutwyche. I am speaking of the first Discourse he had with him, I think he does recollect that he said my Lord expected something on the Account of this Office?

Mr. Cottingham. The first Discourse when that was mentioned, I told him my Lord expected something to be paid by way of Compliment.

Mr. Lutwyche. Was that the first Discourse?

Mr. Cottingham. The first that I remember.

Mr. Lutwyche. I beg another Question. If Mr. Cottingham told Mr. Bennet that my Lord expected something by way of Compliment, how came Mr. Cottingham to know that?

Mr. Cottingham. Mr. Bennet asked me if I believed his Lordship would not expect a Compliment? I told him I believed his Lordship would, and then he said he would give 100 Guineas.

Mr. Lutwyche. Had you any Discourse with my Lord Macclesfield before?

Mr. Cottingham. No, none at all. I told him it was usual to make a Present; and then he told me he was willing to give 100 Guineas.

Mr. Plummer. I know Mr. Cottingham is a very honest Gentleman. I desire to ask him, if Mr. Bennet did not then tell him, that when his Brother was admitted, my Lord Cowper would take nothing?

Mr. Cottingham. He did not, upon the Oath I have taken, this is the first Word I heard of it: I did not know whether his Brother paid any thing or nothing.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. There is some little Variation, tho' not material, between Mr. Bennet and Mr. Cottingham; we beg that Mr. Bennet may come to the Bar again.

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, I don't oppose Mr. Bennet's coming to the Bar again; but I think it is very extraordinary for Persons to produce Witnesses to confront their own Witnesses.

Mr. Lutwyche. We do it to confirm the Testimony of our Witnesses.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. In an Affair of this Nature it is impossible to produce direct Evidence, without producing the Agent employed. Mr. Cottingham was the Agent made use of by the Chancellor, and we beg leave to ask of Mr. Bennet what Answer Mr. Cottingham brought or said he brought from my Lord Chancellor relating to this Affair.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. When Mr. Cottingham went from me to my Lord Chancellor, there was not a Word of money mentioned the first Time. I would not so much as put it into his Head; and he returned to me the next Day, and told me my Lord Chancellor insisted upon a Present. Then I said it was very hard, and I would give my Lord 100 Guineas if it must be so.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was it not at the second meeting that he insisted on a Present to my Lord?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. At the second meeting. At the first Time he did not, because there was no mention made of money.

Mr. Cottingham. All that Mr. Bennet said to me on that Occasion was, that in regard a Compliment of 1500 Guineas had been so lately given to his Lordship, he hoped his Lordship would take no more of him than 100 Guineas.

E. of Macclesfield. These Gentlemen are pleased to differ in their Evidence. I would ask Mr. Bennet a second time, whether Mr. Cottingham told him that he did not know Mr. Hamersley.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I am sure Mr. Cottingham told me that my Lord Chancellor did not know him, and I think he told me that he did not know him. That made me say, Why, Sir that is strange you should not know him, when he lives the next Door to you!

E. of Macclesfield. Before, he said Mr. Cottingham said he did not know Mr. Hamersley. I think he told your Lordships so, that he did not know him.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. It is impossible to swear to a Conversation at so great Distance.

E. of Macclesfield. You are not positive?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I am not positive.

E. of Macclesfield. Then, if he is not positive whether Mr. Cottingham told him so, I desire he may be asked whether he is positive that he answered Mr. Cottingham, Why Sir that is very strange that you should not know him, when he lives the next Door to you!

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I am as positive of the one as of the other. This Conversation passed between us, as near as I can remember.

Mr. Cottingham. It is very strange I should say so of my very next Door Neighbour, and a Gentleman at the Bar.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Therefore I wondered at it.

Mr. Lutwyche. There is but one Thing more relating to this Article. It is very well known that his Lordship was one of the Lords Justices.

Mr. Cottingham. It is very strange sure, Mr. Bennet, that I should not know him. He is a Gentleman at the Bar, I see him every Day at Westminster Hall.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. That was the Wonder I made of it. I might mistake you; I am sure you said my Lord did not know him, and I believe you said you did not know him. Mr. Cottingham is very deaf, and he might mistake me.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we apprehend, the noble Lord does not put us on the Proof of his acting as one of the Lords Justices.

E. of Macclesfield. If Mr. Delafaye is there, I desire he may be called to give an Account of my acting.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What I call Mr. Delafaye for, is to give an Account of my Lord's acting as one of the Lords Justices. If they don't admit it; we must call him.

Dr. Sayer. My Lords, we desire he may be called.

Mr. Delafaye called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire Mr. Delafaye may be sworn.

Mr. Delafaye sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Since that is insisted upon for Form-sake, which is notorious to the whole Kingdom, we only beg leave to ask Mr. Delafaye, whether my Lord Chancellor acted as one of the Lords Justices at the Time of this Patent. [shewing him Mr. Hamersley's Patent.] Look upon the Date of that Patent.

Mr. Delafaye. Yes my Lords.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we only ask this Witness whether my Lord Chancellor, who had then the Custody of the Great Seal, acted as one of the Lords Justices?

Mr. Delafaye. Yes, my Lords, he did.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I beg leave to ask him, whether he knew any thing of Mr. Bennet's Petition being transmitted to his Majesty abroad, and by whose Direction?

Mr. Delafaye. Mr. Bennet's Petition was transmitted mitted to his Majesty abroad, by the Direction of the Lords Justices.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire this Witness would inform your Lordships, whether in Mr. Bennet's Petition it was desired that a Grant of his Office should be made to any, and what particular Person.

Mr. Lutwyche. I think we may reasonably object to that Question. We are not for troubling your Lordships with unreasonable Objections; but when a Gentleman experienced in the Law shall ask Questions, concerning written Evidence, we must oppose that, and submit it to your Lordships.

Then the managers for the Commons acquainting the House, that they had gone through with their Evidence to the Ninth Article, did intend next to proceed to the Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth Articles; and alledging it was requisite their Evidence should be given entire, submitted it to their Lordships whether they should now proceed; whereupon, they and all Parties were directed to withdraw, and the Lords resolved to proceed further in the Trial To-morrow at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon, and adjourned to Nine a Clock To-morrow morning.

Friday May 7. The second Day.

The Lords being seated in their House, and the managers being come, and the said Earl sitting on a Stool as before, and his Counsel at the Bar; Proclamation was made by the Serjeant at Arms as follows.

Our Sovereign Lord the King strictly charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Then another Proclamation was made as on the first Day, That all Persons concerned were to take Notice, that Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield now stands upon his Trial, and they may come forth, in order to make good the Charge.

Ld. Ch. Just. King. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, you may proceed in your Evidence.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. The Managers will now proceed to the Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, and Eighth Articles, being all of the same Nature and Kind, relating to the corrupt taking of Money on the Disposal of the Offices of the Masters in Chancery. The Question between the Commons and the Lord impeached upon these several Articles, is, the manner of taking this money. The Commons charge the taking of the money to be by Extortion, and Corruption, and to be drawn out of the masters against their Consent; the Lord in his Answer insists, that it was freely and voluntarily given, as Presents, upon their respective Admittances. The managers apprehend that they shall give your Lordships full Satisfaction, that the Charge of the Commons is true, and that the manner of taking these Sums charged on the Lord, will be supported by the Evidence that will be produced. The first Witness that we shall call is Mr. William Kynaston to the Fifth Article.

Mr. William Kynaston sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire that Mr. Kynaston may be asked, when he was admitted to be one of the Masters of the Court of Chancery?

Mr. Kynaston. On the 9th of August, 1721.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire that he may be asked, concerning the manner of his Admittance, what Transactions there were before-hand about it, with whom, and what he gave the Lord Chancellor for his Admission?

Mr. Kynaston. After I had agreed with Mr.

Rogers for the Purchase of his Office, I desired one Mr. Baily to go to Mr. Cottingham, my Lord's Secretary, to know what my Lord Chancellor would expect for my Admission into the Office, and treat with him about it. Mr. Baily told me it was best for me to talk with Mr. Cottingham myself. So I went to him, and told him my Case. He mentioned to me that other Masters, particularly Mr. Conway and Mr. Borret, had given Fifteen hundred Guineas apiece. I proposed to him One thousand Pounds, or One thousand Guineas; he said he could not mention it to my Lord Chancellor under Fifteen hundred. I agreed to give it, but I thought he meant Pounds, and made Preparations for it accordingly; but Mr. Baily afterwards telling me that he had seen Mr. Cottingham, and that he insisted upon Guineas, I sent them to him on the 8th by Mr. Baily, and the 9th I was admitted and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Arguments were made Use of by Mr. Cottingham, to raise the Price from One thousand to Fifteen hundred Guineas?

Mr. Kynaston. I don't particularly remember; but either Mr. Rogers or Mr. Cottingham said it was the oldest and the best Office.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether any thing was said that the Office was full of Cash?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We apprehend that a Leading Question.

Mr. Lutwyche. It is a proper Question. But however, if they do not like it in those Words, we will put it into another Form. Whether there was any Discourse about the Profits of the Office?

Mr. Kynaston. I don't remember it.

Mr. Lutwyche. Was there any Discourse about your being recommended by any one?

Mr. Kynaston. I told him I had the Honour to be known to the late Lord Bradford, and desired to know whether his Recommendation might be necessary.

Mr. West. What Reason did they give you why it was the best Office?

Mr. Kynaston. Because it was the Senior Office, and had most Causes in it.

Sir Wm. Strickland. I desire to know what Answer Mr. Cottingham gave him, when he said he believed he might obtain that noble Lord's Recommendation?

Mr. Kynaston. I don't remember any he made.

Mr. Plummer. Whether any Objection was made by him to the Price; upon his coming into the Office, by reason of any Deficiency in Dormer's Office?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. That Question is liable to the same Objection that was made to the former; it is too leading.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is a fair Question, whether any Objection was made by him, on Account of the Deficiency of Dormer's Office?

Mr. Kynaston. I mentioned this to Mr. Rogers; he made little of it; I mentioned it afterwards to Mr. Cottingham, he too seemed to make light of it, and said it would be made up: So that I apprehended it would be of no great Consequence.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Reason did he give, why he thought his Admission to the Office was not worth Fifteen hundred Pounds?

Mr. Kynaston. I don't know that I mentioned any thing.

Mr. Lutwyche. In what manner was the money paid?

Mr. Kynaston. I did not count it, but the Sum of of fifteen hundred Guineas was carried in a Bag by Mr. Baily to Mr. Cottingham.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, whether he had any Discourse with Mr. Rogers the former Master, about the Value of this Office, before he spoke with Mr. Cottingham?

Mr. Kynaston. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. How much did he say it was worth?

Mr. Kynaston. He said, he usually made 1700 l. a Year of the Office, and sometimes 2000 l. a Year.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, what Sum of money he gave Mr. Rogers for his Place?

Mr. Kynaston. 6000 l.

Dr. Sayer. I desire this Gentleman may be asked, at what time he paid Mr. Cottingham this fifteen hundred Guineas; whether it was before or after his Admission?

Mr. Kynaston. Before; I believe it was the 8th or 9th of August in the morning.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire this further Question, whether he paid it out of the Suitors money, or out of Effects of his own?

Mr. Kynaston. It could not be paid out of the Suitors money, for I was not then admitted.

Mr. Com. Serj. Whether Mr. Baily, or any body else, concerned in negotiating this Affair, gave any Account of your Substance and Ability?

Mr. Kynaston. No, I believe not.

Mr. Lutwyche. If the Gentlemen have done, I beg leave to ask him one Question, and it is in relation to what he was examined to first: He said there was a Discourse, that the Office was worth 1700 or 2000 l. a Year. Now, my Lords, I would ask him, how it was Mr. Kynaston apprehended these great annual Profits did arise? Whether by the ordinary Profits of the Office, or the making use of the Suitors money?

Mr. Kynaston. I understood it of both together.

Mr. Lutwyche. There hath been one Question asked, as if there was no Colour to say this money was paid out of the Suitors money: But I would beg leave to ask another Question to explain that: I think Mr. Kynaston says, that the money paid for him by Mr. Baily, was not out of the Suitors money, because he was not then admitted; but I would ask, How it was repaid or replaced?

Mr. Kynaston. I did not imagine, when I came to Town, that the Place would have come to so much: There was 1100 l. and 400 l. I borrow'd of a Gentleman, one Mr. Rogers at Temple-Bar; and I afterwards accompted with him for that money, for I kept an Account of the money of the Court with him.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Sum of money was reported to be in your Office, and to go along with the Office as Cash?

Mr. Kynaston. I was told there was about 20,000 l.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire to know who told him so?

Mr. Kynaston. Mr. Rogers.

Lord Lechmere. When the 1100 l. and the 400 l. was accompted for to the Person that first lent it, if I did understand him right, he says he accompted for it, and it was allow'd out of the Suitors money.

Mr. Kynaston. Yes, my Lords, the money lent me to pay Mr. Cottingham, I did accompt for that money out of the money belonging to the Suitors of the Court: I understood it was usual to do so, and that others had done it.

Lord Lechmere. My Lords, I would ask him another Question; I think Mr. Kynaston talks of 6000 l. being paid by him to his Predecessor: I would be glad to know in what manner that was paid, and out of what money or effects?

Mr. Kynaston. My Lords, when I treated with Mr. Rogers, he mentioned to me what money he had in his Hands belonging to the Office; and we entred into Articles in relation to my paying him 6000 l. for his Place: And when I came up to Town, in order to take the Office, before I went to my Lord Chancellor's, I gave him a Bond for 6000 l. This was the 9th, and on the 12th he deliver'd me up the Bond, and paid me 9 l. in money; and I gave him a Receipt for six thousand and nine Pounds.

E. of Strafford. I desire he would explain himself on that part; where he says, he gave him up his Bond; whether he reckoned the 6000 l. so much short of the Suitors money?

Mr. Kynaston. Yes, my Lords, I did.

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, I desire he may be asked this Question. He speaks of a Gentleman that paid him 1100 l. part of the 1500 Guineas; I desire he may be asked, whether that Gentleman had any, and what money of his in his Hands?

Mr. Kynaston. My Lords, I had money in that Gentleman's Hands: When I lived in the Country, he used to receive money for me in Town, on Government Securities, and other Occasions, and pay as I directed: There was an Accompt current between us, and I did not then precisely know what Balance was then in his Hands; but I have cast it up since, and find that there was about 300 or 400 l. due to me at that time.

E. of Macclesfield. If I apprehend him right, he says he had an Accompt current with that Gentleman at that time, and kept Cash with him.

Mr. Kynaston. He used to receive and pay money for me when I was in the Country.

E. of Macclesfield. I beg leave to ask one Question more, if Mr. Kynaston did not afterwards keep, with that Gentleman, the Cash of the Suitors, as well as his own Cash, promiscuously?

Mr. Kynaston. Yes.

Sir Wm. Strickland. When were the fifteen hundred Guineas paid?

Mr. Kynaston. On the 8th the fifteen hundred Guineas were paid, and the 9th I was admitted.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We don't now proceed to examine relating to the manner of payment for the Offices out of the Suitors money, because there will be a distinct Examination as to that, upon another Article; the present Question being only about the Sum paid for the Admission, and not out of what money, which we don't enter into at present.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we think it necessary to mention this, because otherwise it will take up a great deal of your Lordships time unnecessarily, and it will be proper to keep the Evidence entire; and therefore we hope the Counsel on the other Side shall be confined to ask such Questions only, as are proper to the Article they are upon. My Lords, we desire Mr. Charles Baily may be called.

Mr. Charles Baily sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, Whether he paid any money, and what Sum, to Mr. Cottingham, and when?

Mr. Baily. My Lords, a Day or two before Mr. Kynaston was admitted, I paid fifteen hundred Guineas, Guineas, which was given for his Admission. I delivered it in a Bag to Mr. Cottingham.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. For what Use was it paid?

Mr. Baily. I apprehend it was for the Use of my Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Lutwyche. Upon what Account?

Mr. Baily. For his Admission to the Office, on Mr. Rogers's Surrender.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I think he says it was paid a day or two before he was admitted.

Sir Wm. Strickland. Before the payment of this money, what Discourse was there between you and Mr. Cottingham?

Mr. Baily. I was requested, by Mr. Kynaston, to attend Mr. Cottingham, to know what was expected; and Mr. Cottingham told me fifteen hundred Guineas was expected to be paid, as a Sum for Mr. Kynaston's Admission.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. If the Counsel for the noble Lord don't ask this Witness any thing, we beg leave to call another Witness.

Mr. Com. Serj. There are several matters we apprehend proper to be asked now, and yet may fall under the other Article. Whether it is your Lordship's Pleasure that we shall now ask Mr. Baily as to the Circumstances and Character of Mr. Kynaston?

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, there is an express Article to that point; wherefore when we come to that, then is the time.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. One Question may be proper to be asked before this Gentleman goes, and that is, Whether when Mr. Cottingham told him what was expected on his Admission, he told Mr. Kynaston of it?

Mr. Baily. Yes, Sir, I told Mr. Kynaston that fifteen hundred Guineas was expected.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Then I desire he may be asked, whether Mr. Kynaston did not immediately consent to give it, or what did Mr. Kynaston say?

Mr. Baily. Mr. Kynaston said he must submit to it, and do as Mr. Cottingham had mention'd, or to that purpose.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether Mr. Kynaston informed him of offering him any less Sum, and what?

Mr. Baily. Mr. Kynaston mentioned to me that he thought it had been but 1500*l.*

E. of Macclesfield. How came Mr. Baily to know it was Guineas?

Mr. Baily. Because Mr. Cottingham told me so.

Mr. Cottingham called, but did not immediately appear.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we are unwilling to give your Lordships Trouble, only beg leave to take notice, that Mr. Cottingham was Secretary to the Lord impeach'd, during the whole Course of his Administration; he is not immediately under the Power of the managers, but he is under the Obligation of a Summons, and had Notice to attend.

Mr. Cottingham appears.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire he may be sworn.

Mr. Cottingham sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we beg leave to ask Mr. Cottingham this Question; The money that he received from Mr. Charles Baily, whether he paid it over to the late Lord Chancellor, and when?

Mr. Cottingham. The money which I received from Mr. Charles Baily, the fifteen hundred Guineas, I paid it to my Lord in a day or two I believe; I believe the next day; it was very soon after I received it from Mr. Baily.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether he acquainted the Earl of Macclesfield that he had received it upon Mr. Kynaston's Admission?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, my Lords, I told the Earl of Macclesfield that Mr. Baily had paid me the money, by the Direction of Mr. Kynaston.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. How long was that before Mr. Kynaston was admitted?

Mr. Cottingham. I can't say justly the time, it might be two or three days. There was a day appointed for the Admission of Mr. Kynaston, but something happened that he could not be admitted that day.

Sir Wm. Strickland. My Lords, I desire to ask this Witness one Question: At that time, whether Mr. Cottingham can recollect himself, if Mr. Kynaston did not make an Objection of the great Deficiency that had happened in Dormer's Office?

Mr. Cottingham. Upon the Oath that I have taken, he did not.

Sir Wm. Strickland. I desire another Question, whether he did not tell Mr. Kynaston that this was one of the best Offices?

Dr. Sayer. My Lords, I ask your Pardons; I hope they shall be confined to the general Question, What was said, and not to Particulars.

Sir Wm. Strickland. What was said in relation to the Goodness of the Office?

Mr. Cottingham. I did say before the Honourable Committee, that when he agreed to give the fifteen hundred Guineas, I told him that he had purchased a very good Office; and I did say, that there was a great deal of Business in it; but I never knew what money was in the Office; nor do I know it to this day. I own I did say before the Honourable Committee, that I told him he had purchased a good Office.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether was this before or after the Agreement made with Mr. Kynaston?

Mr. Cottingham. I think at the same time; just after we had settled the Compliment to be paid to my Lord Macclesfield, I told him he had purchased an Office with very good Business in it.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire one Question more; Whether he remembers that there was any mention made of 1000*l.* or one thousand Guineas by Mr. Kynaston?

Mr. Cottingham. No, I remember nothing of it. He asked me what my Lord expected; I told him what my Lord had from the preceding Masters, he expected the same from him: I never heard a Word of 1000*l.* or one thousand Guineas, nor knew nothing at all of it. I have given you the best Account I can as to the Fact that happened relating to the Agreement: Mr. Baily may remember more of it; the Fact is above four Years ago.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we now beg leave to proceed to the 6th Article, relating to Mr. Thomas Bennet, who was admitted the first of June, 1723.

(Mr. Thomas Bennet sworn before.)

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Bennet may give an account to your Lordships when he was admitted, and upon what Bargain? Give an account of the whole Treaty.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I was admitted the 1st of June 1723. and before my Admission, and as soon as I had agreed with Mr. Hiccocks my Predecessor, I applied to Mr. Cottingham, and desired him that he would acquaint my Lord Chancellor I had agreed with Mr. Hiccocks to succeed him in his Office, and desired him to let me know know my Lord Chancellor's Thoughts, whether he approved of me to succeed Mr. Hiccocks. Soon after that, I believe the next Day, or a Day after, he met me, and told me he had acquainted my Lord with the Message I sent; he said my Lord expressed himself with a great deal of Respect for my Father Mr. Serjeant Bennet, and that he was glad of this Opportunity to do me a Favour and Kindness, and he had no Objection in the World to me: That was the Answer Mr. Cottingham returned; he then mentioned there was a Present expected, and he did not doubt but I knew that; I answered, I had heard there was, and I was willing to do what was usual; I desired to know what it was that was expected, and what would be expected; he said he would name no Sum, and he had the less Reason to name a Sum to me, because I had a Brother a Master, and I was well acquainted with Mr. Godfrey who had recommended me, and I might apply to them, and they would tell me what was proper for me to offer. I told him upon that Occasion I would consult my Brother and Mr. Godfrey; accordingly I did, and I returned to Mr. Cottingham, and told him, I had talked with them about it, and their Opinion was a thousand Pounds (but I believed, I said, I would not stand for Guineas) was sufficient for me to offer. Upon this Mr. Cottingham shook his Head, and said, That won't do Mr. Bennet, you must be better advised; Why, said I, won't that do, I think it is a noble Present: Says he, A great deal more has been given: Says I, I am sure my Brother did not give so much, nor Mr. Godfrey, and those Persons, you advised me to consult with, told me it was sufficient, and I desire you to acquaint my Lord with the Proposal: Says he, I don't care to go with that Proposal, you may find some-body else to go: Says I, I don't know whom to apply to: Says he further, Sure Mr. Bennet, you won't go to lower the Price, (these were his very Words, at least I am sure that was the meaning of them) I can assure you Mr. Kynaston gave 1500 Guineas. I said that was above three or four Years ago, and since that Time there have been several Occasions of lowering the Prices; the fall of Stock hath lowered the Value of Money; and I think I mentioned Dormer's Deficiency, and I did not know what the Consequence of that might be; and therefore, I thought at this time of Day, when Stock and every Thing was fallen, a thousand Guineas was more now than 1500 when Mr. Kynaston gave it. He still insisted he did not care to go with that Message. Says I, Only acquaint my Lord with it, and if my Lord insists upon more, I will consider of it: Says he, There is no haggling with my Lord, if you refuse it, I don't know the Consequence, he may resent it so far, as not to admit you at all, and you may lose the Office. Then I began to consider, and was loth to lose the Office, and told him I would give 1500 l. he said Mr. Kynaston had given Guineas. Then I asked whether it must be in Gold. He said, in what you will, so it be Guineas. In a Day or two after he came and told me, that my Lord was pleased to accept of me, and he should admit me as soon as Opportunity served, and he would give me Notice. He accordingly gives me Notice about the latter End of May; he told me my Lord had fixed a Day for my Admission, and my Father and I went to my Brother Bennet's, and took him up by the Way, in order to pay our Respects to my Lord on that Occasion. We had not been there long, but there was a message brought to my House, to let me know that my Lord was very ill, and I could not be admitted; but I should know in a little Time when I should: Upon that, I saw Mr. Cottingham afterwards, and I asked him how my Lord did, and when I should be admitted: Says he, I can't fix the Day; but be in a Readiness, and I shall send for you. Accordingly, on the 1st of June, 1723. he sent, and desired me to come immediately, and to come alone, and bring no Body with me, for my Lord would swear me in that morning. Accordingly I went, and the first Question Mr. Cottingham ask'd me was, if I had brought the money? I told him, to be sure I should not come without it. He asked what it was in? I told him in Bank Bills, two Bank Bills, one of 1000 l. and the other 575 l. He took them up, and carried them to my Lord: He returned back, and told me my Lord was ready to admit me. I was carried up Stairs, and then sworn in his Bed-chamber.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I desire, if he can remember, he may be asked in what Name those Notes were made payable, or in what manner they were made?

Mr. Tbo. Bennet. I can't remember the Names the Notes were made payable to, they were sent for, from the Bank for this Purpose; but I believe they were feigned Names.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, why he thinks they were feigned Names, and for what Reason the Notes were taken in feigned Names?

Mr. Tbo. Bennet. The Reason was, because I did not think it proper to take them out in the noble Lord's Name, nor in my own Name.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, of whom he received those Bank Notes, whether they were his own, or whether he borrowed them.

Mr. Tbo. Bennet. I borrowed a Draft upon the Bank, of my Brother; he kept his Cash at the Bank, and he gave me a Draft upon the Bank, and I sent to the Bank, and ordered the Notes to be made out in feigned Names.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether by his Brother, he means his Brother the Master?

Mr. Tbo. Bennet. Yes, my Brother the Master?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. And where did he keep his Cash?

Mr. Tbo. Bennet. He kept his Cash at the Bank.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire Mr. Bennet may inform your Lordships what Conversation he had with my Lord Macclesfield when he was admitted?

Mr. Tbo. Bennet. I had no Conversation with him before I was sworn. At that Time my Lord was in Bed, and as soon as I was sworn in, my Lord called me to him, shook me by the Hand and wish'd me Joy, and said he had a Respect for my Father Serjeant Bennet, his old Friend and Acquaintance, and the Family; and said he, You are sworn in by a dying Chancellor. I told him, I hoped his Lordship would live a great many Years.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire Mr. Cottingham may be called.

Mr. Cottingham called, and appeared.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I desire Mr. Cottingham may be asked, to whom he paid the 1500 Guineas which he received from Mr. Tho. Bennet?

Mr. Cottingham. I paid it to the Earl of Macclesfield.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether he carried it immediately or not, or at what Time?

Mr. Cottingham. Mr. Bennet brought it to me, as I remember, in a Bank Note of 1500 Guineas, and I gave it to my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether this was done immediately after you received it?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, my Lords, immediately.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. That is all we ask. My Lords, we only beg leave to observe one thing that arises from the Answer of the Lord impeached to these two Articles, which is, that afterwards, and before the Impeachment, he did deliver the Present so sent to him by the said William Kynaston, being 1575 l. and also the Present so sent to him by the said Tho. Bennet, being the like Sum of 1575 l. into the Court of Chancery, in open Court, &c.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords we desire that Mr. Cottingham may be asked one Question, what Conversation there was between him and Mr. Bennet, concerning the Payment of this 1500 Guineas?

Mr. Cottingham. Mr. Bennet told me, that he had agreed with Mr. Hiccocks for the Surrender of his Office. He told me he was a Person known to the Earl; but if he wanted a further Character, his Father, Sir John Bennet, and his Brother, would give him a further Character. I acquainted the Earl; his Lordship told me that he knew Mr. Bennet, that he had a good Character, and had married a good Fortune, and the Family was a wealthy Family, so that the Earl would oblige him, and admit him. A Day was appointed to admit Mr. Bennet; but the Earl falling Sick before the Time came that he was to be admitted, which was, I think, the last Day of Easter Term, 1723, it was then delayed; Mr. Bennet was prodigious pressing to have it done, and said that Mr. Hiccocks refused to go on with any Business in the Office; and he had been complimented upon it, the Family knew it, and he was loth to be disappointed, and he teized me almost out of my Life; upon that, I promised to speak to the Earl, and as soon as the Earl was able to do Business, it was done.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. If you please to recollect yourself, what was the particular Sum Mr. Bennet offered?

Mr. Cottingham. 1500 Guineas.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Did he talk of any less Sum?

Mr. Cottingham. Not a Farthing less; he asked me what was expected, I told him the Sum Mr. Kynaston had paid, which was 1500 Guineas; and he never offered a Farthing less.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We desire, Mr. Cottingham, that you would recollect your self, and tell us whether he offered 1000, or 1500 Guineas?

Mr. Cottingham. I have recollected, and what he offered to me was 1500 Guineas, and I never heard of a Farthing less; I never heard a Word of 1000 Guineas.

E. of Macclesfield. If your Lordships please, I desire Mr. Cottingham may be asked, what Condition I was in, in Respect to my Health at that Time?

Mr. Cottingham. The Earl at that Time was very ill, Mr. Bennet having pressed to be admitted the first Opportunity; I think your Lordship fell ill the last Day of Easter Term, 1723, and I meeting with Doctor Mead, the Doctor told me, the Earl was in so dangerous a Condition, that if his Distemper had not a Turn, he thought he could not live 24 Hours. The Doctor and I went and supped together; he bid me to be at the Earl's next Morning; I met him there, and he told me the Earl's Distemper had a Turn, and he might get over it: I asked the Doctor, telling him there was a Business that Mr. Bennet pressed me to do, if it would be safe for the Earl to do it. He told me if it did not admit much Thought and much Company, it might be done. I told him it would not admit much Thought or Company, and he said it might be done.

E. of Macclesfield. What was the Occasion that Mr. Bennet was desired to come alone?

Mr. Cottingham. The Reason was upon the Account of your Lordship's Indisposition; and for that Reason I sent to Mr. Hiccocks for his Surrender, because my Lord could not see much Company.

Mr. Strange. I desire to ask you, upon whose Importunity it was you asked Dr. Mead this?

Mr. Cottingham. I asked it my self, but it was, because Mr. Bennet importuned me so: And I remember this Circumstance, when I went to his House, he had something of the Jaundice, and looked ill. I asked him if he was fit to be admitted: I thought Mr. Bennet would not have been so eager, if he did not think the Earl had been dying, and that then he would have waited longer.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, if the Gentlemen have done, I desire to ask one Question; Whether on Occasion of these Masters Places being vacant, he took Directions from my Lord Chancellor to set a Price, or did it of his own Head?

Mr. Cottingham. I had no Directions in this matter; but when any Vacancy or Alienation happened, and they asked me what Compliment I thought would be acceptable, I told them the Compliment that had been before made. I spoke it as my own Opinion, and without any Directions from the Earl.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether ever he concluded any Bargain with any of these Masters, without his Lord's Approbation?

Mr. Cottingham. No, I did not.

Mr. Onslow. I would ask Mr. Cottingham one Question, which, I think, he hath not answered; I ask whether he had not, in general, Directions from the Lord Chancellor, to insist upon, or ask any particular Prices for these Places?

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, I am sorry the the learned Gentlemen do not observe their own Rule, in confining their Examinations to such Articles as they go upon, those they have a Right to ask to, and those only; therefore with humble Submission, it is more proper to each Article where they charge me to have insisted upon a Price, to ask to that Price, than to ask these general Questions, whether I did ever direct him to insist upon any Price? It is not that I am afraid of the Question that is put, but I am afraid of its being made a Precedent for giving your Lordships a great deal of unnecessary Trouble.

Mr. Onslow. This is proper to this Article, because it charges the Earl with insisting upon Prices. Therefore I desire to know, whether the Earl did ever give any Order to him to insist upon any of these Prices? I hope the Gentleman shall answer the Question.

Mr. Lutwyche. We apprehend we are upon a proper Question, on the one Side we say these Sums were insisted upon, and that there was an Agreement made for them; on the other Side the noble Lord in his Answer says, they were Presents, without any Regard to any Agreement, and voluntary, as if there had been no Bargain at all.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we only propose a general Question, which, we apprehend, arises from Mr. Cottingham's Examination. When Money is expected, we apprehend it is the same as insisting upon it: Therefore we desire Mr. Cottingham may inform your Lordships, whether he insisted upon any of these Prices without Direction from my Lord Macclesfield?

Mr. Cottingham. The Masters proposed those Sums to me, to make such a Compliment to my Lord, and I acquainted the Earl with it: I did nothing without the Earl's Approbation.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked if he did not insist on those Prices?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I beg the Question may be confined to some particular Article they are now upon; for as they are now upon two particular Articles, they cannot, according to the Rules they were pleased themselves to lay down, ask any Question, but what relates to them: We therefore desire they may confine themselves to these two Articles. As to any Question they propose to any of the Articles they have opened, let them be as general as they will; but we desire they may confine themselves to those Articles: Otherwise one Question may involve all Articles together.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether we should now ask to Bennet or Kynaston, or to those who came after, we are under your Lordship's Direction: But we desire he may be asked, whether from the Direction he received from the Earl of Macclesfield, he did not insist on those Sums from Kynaston and Bennet?

Mr. Cottingham. I have told you that they had both voluntarily agreed of their own Accord to give 1500 Guineas, and I told my Lord Macclesfield of it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether he did not by Direction of my Lord Chancellor insist upon those Sums, and he would not receive under?

Mr. Cottingham. I did not. They asked me what I thought the Earl expected, I told them 1500 Guineas, as I mentioned before; they agreed to give it, and my Lord said he would take it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. At the Time when the Lord Macclesfield agreed to take those Sums, whether he did not insist upon the full of those Sums to be paid?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, he said he would take them.

Mr. Plummer. My Lord Macclesfield does not disown in his Answer the accepting of a Present in general; but avoids saying what Sum in particular he accepted. Therefore I am apt to think the Instructions the Secretary had, might be like the Answer: So that it is very proper to ask whether he had not general Instructions, that when any Master's Place was vacant, or like to be vacant, he should insist upon such a Price.

Mr. Cottingham. I had no such Instructions: The Gentlemen came and talked to me, and proposed to me the Sum they were willing to give, and I laid it before the Earl: I had no particular Instructions.

Mr. Plummer. With Submission, Mr. Cottingham has not answered the Question, therefore I beg leave to ask him further, whether he hath not said elsewhere, that he received particular Directions from my Lord Macclesfield to insist upon such a Sum?

Mr. Cottingham. I cannot say but I have, and if you name the Masters, I can answer more particularly.

Sir Wm. Strickland. I would ask him this Question, whether he has not directly said, that he transacted none of these Affairs without my Lord's Direction?

Mr. Cottingham. I own it I have said so? I own it before your Lordships, that I said that what I did he approved of.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire he may be asked this Question, to each distinctly, whether I so much as knew any Thing of the matter as to any Sum offered by Mr. Kynaston or Mr. Bennet, till he told me the whole Sum?

Mr. Cottingham. No, never.

E. of Macclesfield. Whether I had any Discourse about Mr. Kynaston or Bennet, being admitted, or the Money they should give, till he told me they would give me 1500 Guineas?

Mr. Cottingham. No, not any Discourse: I told the Earl what they offered, and he was pleased to accept it.

E. of Macclesfield. I beg leave he may be asked this other Question, since these Gentlemen have gone now into that matter, whether he did not tell me at the same Time that Mr. Kynaston said he would give me 1500 Guineas, that he likewise said, if that was not sufficient I might please myself?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I hope the Question may be asked in general, when they have taken Liberty to interrupt the managers for asking leading Questions; and hope his Lordship will ask nothing that is leading.

E. of Macclesfield. Then I desire he may be asked when Mr. Kynaston offered 1500 Guineas, whether he said any Thing concerning any further Sum?

Mr.

Mr. Cottingham. To the best of my Remembrance, I speak it doubtfully, I am not certain Mr. Kynaston told me if the 1500 Guineas would not satisfy the Earl, he should satisfy himself.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know certainly whether he told me so?

Mr. Cottingham. I am sure I did.

E. of Macclesfield. What did I say thereon?

Mr. Cottingham. Your Lordship said you would take 1500 Guineas, and you would take no more.

Mr. Plummer. I desire to ask this Question, How Mr. Kynaston came to offer more, or to think the Earl so insatiable that the Earl expected more: I ask Mr. Cottingham how he came to offer from Mr. Kynaston more than was asked?

Mr. Cottingham. I told you what my Lord Macclesfield put to me. I certainly told him so. But as to what Mr. Kynaston told me, that I speak doubtfully; it is a considerable Time ago; I cannot speak it positively, I speak doubtfully, to the best of my Remembrance it was so: I told your Lordships before.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we shall not trouble your Lordships with calling any more Witnesses on this Article, when it appears plainly, that he was intrusted to adjust the Prices, and whether they were given to him or my Lord is not material. As to this Article and the Article relating to Mr. Kynaston, we shall leave it with this Observation, He is pleased to say in his Answer, as to the few Presents received from Mr. Kynaston and Mr. Bennet, that he the said Earl did afterwards, and before the Impeachment, deliver the same into the Court of Chancery, in open Court. All that we beg leave to put your Lordships in mind of, is, that from your own Journals it will appear, the Impeachment was brought up here the 13th of February 1724. When my Lord comes to shew at what Time he paid the money, we apprehend it will be ten Days after. The next Article relates to Mr. Francis Elde.

Mr. Elde called.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Elde may be sworn.

(Sworn accordingly.)

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we desire Mr. Elde may be asked when it was he was admitted a Master in Chancery?

Mr. Elde. My Lords, I was admitted the first Day of February last was twelve month.

Mr. Lutwyche. We desire he may be asked, whether he applied in Person to my Lord Macclesfield to be admitted into this Office, and whether it was upon Death or Resignation?

Mr. Elde. Upon the Death of Mr. William Fellowes some of my Friends came to me, and put it into my Head that this Office might be a proper Office for me, and I took some Time to consider of it. I had some Encouragement at the Bar, and was very unwilling to quit it, but after two Days Consideration I went to my Lord himself; I told his Lordship an Office was fallen by the Death of Mr. Fellowes; if his Lordship thought me a proper Person; and I should be glad to have it. I was come to wait upon him about it. His Lordship said, he had no manner of Objection to me, he had known me a considerable Time, and he believed I should make a good Officer.

Mr. Lutwyche. What further Discourse was there?

Mr. Elde. My Lord at that Time desired me further to consider of it, and come to him again: And so I did. I went back from his Lordship, and I came again in a Day or two, I believe it was the second after I came back from his Lordship, and told him I had considered of it, and desired to know if his Lordship thought fit to admit me; and I would make him a Present of 4 or 5000 l. I cannot say which of the two I said, but I believe it was 5000 l.

Mr. Lutwyche. What Answer did my Lord return, when you made him that Proposal?

Mr. Elde. My Lord said, Thee and I, or You and I, my Lord was pleased to treat me as a Friend, must not make Bargains.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we desire he may be asked, whether my Lord Macclesfield said in what manner he would treat with him, whether in a more beneficial manner than any Body else?

Mr. Elde. My Lord Macclesfield did say, that if I was desirous of having the Office, he would treat with me in a different manner than he would with any man living; those were the Words my Lord used, to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. After this Answer of my Lord Macclesfield, That they must not make Bargains, what further Application did he make?

Mr. Elde. I made no further Application at all, but spoke to Mr. Cottingham, meeting him in Westminster-Hall, and told him I had been at my Lord's, and my Lord was pleased to speak very kindly to me, and I had proposed to give him 5000 l. Mr. Cottingham answered, Guineas are handsomer.

Mr. Lutwyche. We desire to know what he paid, and in what manner, and in what Specie?

Mr. Elde. My Lords, I paid my Lord, — I cannot say I paid it him, but I paid 5000 Guineas.

Mr. Lutwyche. In what Manner? Who did you pay it to?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. After this Agreement with Mr. Cottingham to make it Guineas, as being handsomer; we desire he may inform your Lordships what he did pursuant to this, and what he carried with him?

Mr. Elde. Upon this I immediately went to my Lord's: I was willing to get into the Office as soon as I could. I did carry with me 5000 Guineas in Gold and Bank Notes: I am not certain whether there was 3000 Guineas in Gold or two, but I think there was three, and the Residue of the money was in Bank Notes. This I brought to my Lord's House.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire he may be asked what they were put into, or in what they were carried?

Mr. Elde. I had the money in my Chambers. I could not tell how to convey it; It was a great Burthen and Weight, but recollecting I had a Basket in my Chamber, I put the Guineas into the Basket, and the Notes with them; I went in a Chair and took with me the Basket in my Chair. When I came to my Lord's House I saw Mr. Cottingham there, and I gave him the Basket, and desired him to carry it up to my Lord.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Answer did he return?

Mr. Elde. I saw him go up Stairs with the Basket, and when he came down he intimated to me that he had delivered it.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we desire he may be asked whether he acquainted Mr. Cottingham with what was in the Basket?

Mr. Elde. I did not.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. After Mr. Cottingham came and acquainted you he had delivered the Basket, how long after that was it before you saw my Lord?

Mr. Elde. I did not see my Lord after that, till I was sworn in.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. How long was that after?

Mr. Elde. I cannot be positive, but it was within a Day, either the same Day, or if not, it was the next Day after.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, when Mr. Cottingham returned down Stairs after the Delivery of the Basket, what he said to him about the Time of his being admitted?

Mr. Elde. I do not remember he said any thing to me about my being admitted. I took that for granted.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. And when he was admitted, whether he was admitted in the Closet, or in what Room?

Mr. Elde. When I was to be admitted, my Lord invited me to Dinner, and some of my Friends with me; and he was pleased to treat me and some Members of the House of Commons in a very handsome manner: I was after Dinner sworn in before them.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire to ask, Whether he had the Basket again?

Mr. Elde. Some months after I spoke to my Lord's Gentleman, and desired him if he saw such a Basket, that he would give it me back; and some time after he did so.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was any money returned in it?

Mr. Elde. No, my Lords, there was not.

Mr. Lutwyche. There is one Thing in the Earl's Answer, that he retained only Part of the Present so made him by Mr. Elde. I perceive the Gentlemen of the other Side do not ask any Questions about it; if they do not, we shall go on.

Sir Wm. Strickland. I desire to know what Mr. Cottingham did say, after he had carried up the Basket, and came down again?

Mr. Elde. To the best of my Remembrance, he said nothing to me, but as I repeated it before, he intimated to me that he had delivered it to my Lord Macclesfield. I cannot say as to any particular Discourse; but I understood that he had delivered it.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, if they have done with Mr. Elde, I would beg Leave to ask him one Question, and that is in relation to what the impeached Earl said in his Answer, that he retained of the Present sent him by the said Mr. Elde no more than the Sum of 1850*l.* We desire therefore that he may be asked, how much was returned to him of the 5000 Guineas which he at first paid?

Mr. Elde. 3400.

Mr. West. When was that returned again to him?

Mr. Elde. In November last, to the best of my Remembrance.

VOL. VI.

Mr. Onslow. In what manner was that money returned to him?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We have not yet done with him. I desire to know when you went out of Town, and when you returned, and how long after your Return was it repaid?

Mr. Elde. It was repaid to me, to the best of my Knowledge, within three, four, or five Days after my Return. As soon as I came from the Country, the Earl took notice of it, and said that he would repay me: For some Time in May before, or thereabouts, the noble Lord had taken notice, that he had received this Present from me, and he would make me exceedingly easy.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. This was before you went out of Town?

Mr. Elde. Before I went out of Town.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. When did you return to Town?

Mr. Elde. I returned the 19th, 20th, or 21st of November.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. How soon after you came to Town did you see my Lord?

Mr. Elde. Very soon after I came to Town.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. What Discourse had you with him about it?

Mr. Elde. My Lord told me he would return me my money again, he did not say all, but he would return me my money; and that he had done it before, had it been convenient.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. How soon after this Discourse was it, that the money was returned?

Mr. Elde. I believe two or three Days.

Mr. Onslow. If the Gentlemen have done, I desire he may be asked in what manner this money was returned, and by whom?

Mr. Elde. After this Discourse, my Lord Parker sent for me, my Lord Chancellor was then at Westminster-hall, and told me my Lord Chancellor had desired him to pay to me 3400*l.* and he did pay it.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, if I understand Mr. Elde right, he said there was something mentioned by my Lord of this Kindness before he went into the Country. I desire he may be asked, Upon what Occasion he was going into the Country at that time?

Mr. Onslow. I desire that he may first answer in what manner, by whom, and where, this money was repaid to him, whether in money, or notes, or how?

Mr. Elde. To the best of my Remembrance it was paid in this manner, there was 1400*l.* in Bank Notes, and 2000*l.* in India Bonds.

Mr. Onslow. Who was this paid by?

Mr. Elde. By my Lord Parker.

Mr. Onslow. Whether he gave any Receipt for the money, or any Part of it, and to what Effect.

Mr. Elde. When my Lord paid me the money, he said my Lord Macclesfield had ordered me to be paid the money; but his Lordship not having so much by him, therefore he had ordered him to make it up, and to pay me two thousand Pounds out of his own money; and that as 2000*l.* of it was his own money, he desired me to give a Note of the Receipt of it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether was that Note, a Note for Repayment of the money, or a Receipt?

Mr. Elde. It was not for Repayment, that I remember, but it was an Acknowledgment of the Receipt of the money, that I had received so much.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether it did not contain a further Acknowledgment, for Repayment?

Mr. Elde. Not that I know of.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was it said upon whose Account the money was paid?

Mr. Elde. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire he may be asked, How many Days before he was to produce the Balance of his Cash before the Commissioners, that he received this money?

Mr. Elde. I cannot say how long before; it might be a Fortnight or three Weeks; I cannot say it was not long before.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether it was not necessary for him to make use of this money, in order to make up this Balance?

Mr. Elde. I will answer that Question as well as I can: I did make use of it to that purpose, as having it by me; but I was not so poor as to be put to a Necessity of so doing; I could have had the money any where of any body that knew me.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, Whether he can remember the particular Time to a Day, when it was repaid him?

Mr. Elde. Upon my Oath, I cannot tell the particular Time.

Mr. Onslow. Was it after the Inquiry was directed to be made by the Lords of the Council?

Mr. Elde. Yes, my Lords, I was in the Country when the Inquiry was directed to be made, and a month after.

Mr. Lutwyche. I mentioned a Question before; Mr. Elde was mentioning that my Lord Macclesfield had said to him before he went out of Town, that he would make him exceeding easy: I desire he may be asked where he was then going, and upon what Occasion?

Mr. Elde. My Lords, I was going into Staffordshire, where the little Effects I have in the World lie.

Mr. Lutwyche. I would know upon what Occasion?

Mr. Elde. I never missed going into the Country the Beginning of August, for these ten Years past.

Mr. Lutwyche. Whether there was any particular Occasion for his going down into the Country at that Time?

Mr. Elde. If your Lordships are of Opinion that this is a fair Question, I will as fairly answer it. I went down to my House, to look into what little Affairs I had there. I called at Stafford first, and there declared myself a Candidate for the Election that was to ensue.

Mr. Lutwyche. We desire he may be asked, When he returned?

Mr. Elde. I returned about the 19th or 20th of November.

Mr. Plummer. Mr. Elde says, when my Lord Parker paid him, he had a Note from him, acknowledging the Receipt of the money: I desire to know, Whether that Note was taken up again, and when?

Mr. Elde. The Note I gave my Lord Parker?

Mr. Plummer. Yes.

Mr. Elde. My Lord Parker sent for me, and gave me the Note again. I do not know that I saw my Lord Macclesfield till after I had seen Lord Parker, and he had given me up the Note again.

Mr. Plummer. I desire he may be asked, When the Note was delivered up to him?

Mr. Elde. That was asked before; I cannot tell the Day.

Mr. Plummer. It was never asked here before: The Question I ask is, When the Note was delivered up?

Mr. Elde. I do not remember the Day.

Mr. Plummer. As near as you can?

Mr. Elde. In the Beginning of December.

Mr. Sandys. I beg leave to ask one Question: He says that he applied this money, which he received of my Lord Parker, towards making good the Ballance of his Account; Whether or no, he did not first refuse to swear to the Ballance of that Account; and what was the Occasion of it?

Mr. Elde. When I had delivered in my Account, the Question I was asked the first Time, was proposed to me, not by any of the Judges who were appointed to inspect our Accounts, but by Sir Nathaniel Gould, who proposed it in such a manner, that I could not by any means take it. He asked me, Whether I owed any thing, and I was to swear I owed nothing: I told him I could not swear any such thing. I had some Arguments with him about the Absurdity of such an Oath, and said, if I owe a million of money, that is nothing to the purpose: There is the money due on the Ballance of my Account; I deliver it to you; I laid the money upon the Table, and insisted upon leaving it with them.

Mr. Sandys. Whether that Note was delivered to him after he refused to take the Oath?

Mr. Elde. It was.

Mr. Sandys. Whether that Note was not the Occasion of his refusing to take the Oath?

Mr. Elde. I cannot say but it was an Ingredient in it.

Sir George Oxenden. I would be glad to know where this Note is?

Mr. Elde. When my Lord Parker delivered it to me, I lapt it up, and put it in my Pocket: My Lord asked me why I did so? I answered, I would keep it as a memorandum of my Lord Chancellor's Favour to me; but when I came home, considering that it would be of no Service, and that it might be hazardous to keep it by me, I tore it.

Dr. Sayer. I desire he may be asked, Whether he did not look upon himself entirely discharged from any Demand on Account of that money, or did think himself bound to answer it?

Mr. Elde. I do not think myself bound to answer it.

Dr. Sayer. Whether he apprehends it to be a free and perfect Gift?

Mr. Elde. I do, my Lords.

Mr. Cottingham called again.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we left the Basket in the Hands of Mr. Cottingham; therefore it is necessary that Mr. Cottingham inform your Lordships what became of it afterwards; what he did with the Basket, after he had it from Mr. Elde?

Mr. Cottingham. My Lords, I carried it up to my Lord, and set it down in his Study.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What did you say to my Lord?

Mr. Cottingham. Nothing. Mr. Elde ordered me to carry up the Basket; I carried it up, and there I set it down: I never saw it afterwards.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether do you remember what Answer my Lord Macclesfield made at that Time?

Mr. Cottingham. None that I remember.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether did he open the Basket?

Mr. Cottingham. No. The Basket was covered up, and I set it down in my Lord's Closet.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether after that Time he appointed any Time for Mr. Elde to be admitted?

Mr. Cottingham. I think he was admitted that very same Day.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire this Witness may be asked, whether he received any Thing from Mr. Elde, besides what was in the Basket?

Mr. Cottingham. Not a Farthing; except my Fees: Nor no more of any of the Masters than my usual Fees.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We desire Mr. Cottingham may be asked, whether at this Time, when Mr. Elde desired to be admitted into this Office, there was any other Person who desired it; or made any Offer for it?

Mr. Cottingham. Mr. Lucas, a Gentleman of the Temple, was recommended to the Earl by Mr. Bulstrode, who is since dead. He had been formerly a Commissioner of the Excise; his Name was Woollock Bulstrode. Mr. Lucas did tell me upon that Occasion, if the Earl would admit him, he would give him 6000 l. for the Office. I took a Memorandum of it at that Time, and I had it in my Hands four or five Days ago.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. When Mr. Lucas told you this, whether did you inform the then Lord Chancellor of it?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, I am sure I did; and the Answer he made me was, that Mr. Elde was of a Family which were his particular Friends and Acquaintance, for whom he had a great Friendship and Value, and that he should have it 1000 l. cheaper, or lesser than any Body else.

Mr. Strange. I desire he may be asked, whether before Mr. Elde was admitted, he did not acquaint the noble Lord, that this Mr. Lucas would give 6000 l.?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, I did.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire to know whether I understand Mr. Cottingham right? He says, that my Lord would let Mr. Elde have it cheaper than any Body else: Whether he understood by that, that my Lord expected some Body else would give him more?

Mr. Cottingham. My Lord said he would let Mr. Elde have it upon the Score of particular Friendship and Acquaintance.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. If I heard him right, I submit it to your Lordships, whether he did not say that Mr. Elde should have it 1000 l. cheaper than any other Person. I ask whether he did not understand my Lord Macclesfield would have 1000 l. more from any other Person?

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords; I hope I am not to be charged with the Imaginations of this Gentleman; he is asked about his Apprehension of my Intention in a Case that did not happen. I desire he may be asked; if he knew what Character Mr. Elde had?

Mr. Cottingham. A very good one.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire it may be asked whether he did not know that I had a great Opinion of Mr. Elde's Ability and Integrity?

Mr. Cottingham. He was one your Lordship had a great Opinion of, and that he was very deserving. I never heard your Lordship express a better Opinion of any Man than of Mr. Elde.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We have done with this Article: The next Article is the 8th. We desire Mr. Thurston may be sworn.

Mr. Mark Thurston sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Thurston may give your Lordships an Account, When he was admitted into one of the Offices of the Masters in Chancery, and upon whose Death?

Mr. Thurston. My Lords, I was admitted into this Office upon the Death of Mr. Borret, and the Day of my Admission was the 5th of August last.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, Whether, before his Admission, he had made any Application either to my Lord Macclesfield or his Secretary, or any Person concerned for him?

Mr. Thurston. My Lords, before my Admission, I did make some Application to my Lord Chancellor's Secretary Mr. Cottingham; and at that Time I made a Proposal of making a Present of 5000 Guineas, to be admitted into the Office. Mr. Cottingham asked me several Questions about my Circumstances, and what Persons I could name that would recommend me to his Lordship: To which I gave the proper Answers, and mentioned several Gentlemen he knew. After that, I having the Honour of being acquainted with my Lord Commissioner Gilbert, before I took any other Steps, I waited on his Lordship, and acquainted him with my Resolution, and begged the favour of him, that he would take the Trouble to recommend me to my Lord Chancellor, as his Friend, and a fit Person for the Office. His Lordship did take that Trouble, and waited upon my Lord at Westminster, who was then sitting upon the Bench; and after Notice was sent him of that Gentleman's being in the little Room behind, his Lordship came off the Bench; and some Time being spent in Conversation between them, I was called in, and kindly recommended by that honourable Person; and my Lord Macclesfield seemed to approve of me upon his Recommendation. But I should acquaint your Lordships, that as to that Part of the Transaction with Mr. Cottingham, he said that he would report those Things to my Lord Macclesfield, of my Character and Person, though he never reported any thing back to me again upon it: But I took the next ensuing Steps, by the intervention of the honourable Gentleman, my Lord Commissioner Gilbert.

Sir Will. Strickland. Whether he did not understand, that my Lord Macclesfield agreed to his Proposals?

Mr. Thurston. Yes.

Sir Will. Strickland. After this Transaction with Mr. Cottingham, what further Application was made? And why he was not immediately admitted at that Time?

Mr. Thurston. It was not expected by me to be immediately admitted at that Time: Because my Lord Chancellor did not absolutely determine me to be the Person; but said he had so good a Character of me, that he believed I should be the man.

Sir Will. Strickland. Whether Mr. Thurston, being uneasy about the delaying of admitting him, did apply to any other Person afterwards?

Mr. Thur-

Mr. Thurston. After my being introduced to my Lord Chancellor, there was some Time for my Lord's Consideration. Near a Week after, a Message was sent me by Mr. Cottingham, that my Lord would be ready to admit me such a Day. Before the Day came, I had a Message contradicting it, upon my Lord Chancellor's being engaged to attend the Council on that Day. After that, I expected the Appointment of another Day for that purpose; and in the mean time this Affair had got into the publick News-Papers, as every thing does, and I was named by every body to be the Person fixed upon; and People resorted to me to transact the Business of the Office, which I could not do without being duly admitted. And shortly after that Time, there was a Report spread, that my Lord Chancellor had designed to make a Present of the Place to some Gentleman in the Country, which gave me an Uneasiness, and put me upon an Expedient, that since I could not have ready Access to so great a Person as his Lordship, I went to Kensington one morning to wait upon the Countess of Macclesfield; and upon sending up my Name, and that I desired to speak with her, in a short Time I had the Honour of seeing her, and acquainted her that I was the Person that my Lord had promised the Office to, and that I could not proceed therein without being sworn; therefore I desired her Ladyship to intercede with my Lord, that I might be speedily sworn in. Her Ladyship said, she never did meddle in any Affairs of a publick Nature. I used several Arguments with her, as that the Thing was now publick and in Print, that it might be a great Disappointment to me, and might affect my Character, if my Lord did not think fit to admit me. I laid a good deal of Stress upon these Arguments, and I acquainted her Ladyship that I did not expect or desire to come in without the due Present that is always esteemed the Perquisite of the Great Seal. Then I repeated those other Arguments again, that my Character might be affected by these Disappointments; whereby her Ladyship was prevailed upon to promise she would write a letter, and acquaint my Lord Chancellor with it. Before I went away from the Room where I had the Honour to be with the Lady, I did leave upon the Table, Bank Notes to the Value of 5250 Pounds.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. How were they directed?

Mr. Thurston. I directed them to the Countess of Macclesfield.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, How soon after this he was admitted?

Mr. Thurston. I believe it was within two or three Days after at farthest, that I was admitted and sworn into this Office.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire he may give your Lordships an Account who was his Predecessor?

Mr. Thurston. Mr. Borret, as I acquainted your Lordships before.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire he may acquaint your Lordships of the State of the Office, as it came into his Hands. What was the Deficiency of the Office, due to the Suitors of the Court, not answered by the Effects of Mr. Borret, when it came into your Hands?

Mr. Thurston. That is a Question I can't possibly answer, because I never had those Accompts under my Inspection; and I don't find the Gentlemen that have, can give an Account of it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I do not ask to a particular Sum; but whether there was a Deficiency, any Deficiency, and about what Sum?

Mr. Thurston. I do not know any Thing at all about the matter; I might as well guess what a Gentleman is worth that I know nothing of.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether there were Effects sufficient to answer all the Suitors Demands?

Mr. Thurston. I cannot tell; because there was not any particular or exact Accompt taken of it, that is come to my Knowledge.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether the Suitors have been paid the money left, or deposited by them in the hands of Mr. Borret?

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, if there be any Order of the Court for their being paid, it will appear, and they may produce those Orders to your Lordships: How can they pay without any Order?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I do not speak of Orders, I only ask, Whether he knows that the Suitors have been paid?

Mr. Thurston. It is impossible for me to have any Knowledge of it, for the Reasons I gave you before; having had no Inspection of those Accompts.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, Whether any Effects, or Money, or Cash, and to what Value, have been transferred to him, as the Effects of Mr. Borret?

Mr. Thurston. About 4200 l.

Mr. Lutwyche. Whether he knows what the Cash was, that was in Mr. Borret's Hands?

Mr. Thurston. No, my Lords, I do not know.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, Whether he has been applied to by any of the Suitors of the Court, upon the account of money deposited in Mr. Borret's Hands?

Mr. Thurston. I cannot say no body has applied to me for money due in Mr. Borret's Office; several Suitors or their Representatives have been enquiring after such Things, who have been satisfied with having such an Answer as the present Circumstances would furnish. There were some Sums of money, before this broke out, paid to Suitors, that was Interest money; and who were represented to me as People in Necessity, to the amount of 3 or 400 l. When this broke out, I then desisted Payment, upon the Advice of a great Friend.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he would explain himself, what he means by saying, before this broke out?

Mr. Thurston. What I mean was, the Inquiry made into the Masters Accompts, by his Majesty's Direction in Council.

Mr. Lutwyche. The Sum of money he paid, I desire he may be asked, Who he received that Sum from?

Mr. Thurston. I received it from Mr. Godfrey, the Master in Chancery.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, Whether he knew of any Administration taken out to Mr. Borret, and at what Time?

Mr. Thurston. I believe Mr. Godfrey and Mr. Bennet were desired to take that Trouble upon them, to look into Mr. Borret's affairs, by the Lord Chancellor; which they proceeded and took some steps in, till till they were discouraged from it by the Enquiry that was set on foot. They tell me now, that Administration is granted to Mr. Paxton.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may inform your Lordships, since he paid the Interest, why he did not pay the Principal?

E. of Macclesfield. I believe it would save your Lordships time, if Mr. Serjeant would ask his Questions in such a manner, as not to imply something which was not admitted, or said by the Witnesses. The Question supposes a principal Sum demanded; the proper Question is, first to ask if any principal Sum was demanded, and whether it was, or was not paid.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I apprehend that Mr. Thurston says, That Creditors came to him, Suitors of the Court, and he could not pay any more than the Interest; therefore I apprehend they came to him for the money lodged in the Hands of Mr. Borret. Therefore I desire he may be asked, whether any of those Persons that demanded their money were paid?

E. of Macclesfield. I desire he may be asked, whether any demanded the principal Sum? and by what Order?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire to ask my own Questions; I apprehend I am not to be directed in the asking my Questions by the Lord impeached. I desire to ask what Suitors applied, and what Sums they demanded?

Mr. Thurston. The Names of the Suitors I can't recollect, I believe it is not necessary to trouble your Lordships with them. The Sums demanded were only Interest money. The principal Sum, for which I paid the Interest, to the best of my remembrance, was 700*l*. There was no Demand made of principal money to be paid. But there might be Enquiries made, I believe, by a noble Peer of this House, which I was so very unfortunate, that I could not inform his Lordship of the State of what he enquired after.

Mr. Plummer. Mr. Thurston says, he desisted from paying any further Sums, upon very good Advice; I desire to know why, or by whose Advice, he desisted paying?

Mr. Thurston. It was upon a prudential Reason I did desist; because, when a publick Inquiry was set on foot, I did not know how far I might be affected, in being made answerable my self for it.

Mr. Plummer. Whether he had any Suspicion that there was a Deficiency in Mr. Borret's Office?

Mr. Thurston. There was a Suspicion that there was not competent money to satisfy all the Suitors Demands.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, whether there was not an Order for transferring the Effects in Mr. Borret's Hands to him?

Mr. Thurston. Upon the Admission of every master, there is an Order of Course signed by the Lord Chancellor, to transfer the Effects to the Successor.

Mr. Lutwyche. I ask if any such Order came to him?

Mr. Thurston. There did, my Lords.

Mr. Lutwyche. Was there any Transfer of the Effects according to that Order?

Mr. Thurston. No, there was not a compleat Transfer.

Mr. Lutwyche. Why was it not, as usual in the Case of other masters, that either are removed, and are able to transfer; or in Case, upon Death, where their Representatives are able to do it?

Mr. Thurston. The Reason it was not done, I conceive, was because it was impracticable, there being no Representative of my Predecessor, no Administration being taken out.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may inform your Lordships, whether he was not applied to, by a noble Peer of this House, concerning some Effects deposited in the Hands of Mr. Borret, and what account he then gave him of the State and Situation of the Office?

E. of Macclesfield. I am really very sorry to trouble your Lordships so often. What is it to me what this Gentleman said? He is now upon his Oath, and to give to your Lordships an Account what he knows; but to ask him what he said at such a Time, to affect me, I hope they will not insist upon it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When he has declared what he said, then there will be another Question, whether that was true in Fact? And that Question will then affect the impeached Lord.

E. of Macclesfield. If Mr. Serjeant will ask a proper Question first, he may; but he should not ask an improper Thing, because he will ask a proper Question afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We apprehend it is proper Evidence to be given, that he gave such an Account of the Office, in answer to the noble Lord: Therefore I desire to know what Account he gave to that noble Lord?

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, I humbly oppose that Question, and desire your Lordships Judgment, whether he is to ask what this Person said?

Mr. Lutwyche. I believe the same End may be obtained by asking a Question without Dispute, and to which there can be no Objection; that is, Whether or no he had any Reasons to think that there was a Deficiency in the Office, and what those Reasons were?

Mr. Strange. My Lords, we beg leave to oppose that Question: What his private Opinion may be, is no Evidence; he and another may think variously of the same matter. They are to ask him as to Fact, and not to his Opinion.

Mr. Plummer. I have not had the Happiness to be bred a Lawyer, and therefore may be mistaken as to legal Evidence: But surely when your Lordships are examining a Person to the Deficiency of his own Office, none can give a better Account than himself. I desire he would answer what he knows, whether he had the compleat money of Mr. Borret's transferred to him?

Mr. Thurston. The compleat money of the Office hath not been transferred to me, and for the Reasons I have mentioned to your Lordships; for want of an Administration.

Sir Wm. Strickland. I would beg leave to ask Mr. Thurston one Question, and I hope a material one; Whether, on his Admission into that Office, he did not find a great Confusion in it?

Mr. Thurston. I can't say that upon my Admission into that Office I found great Confusion in it, because all Papers that came within my View were very regular, and well adjusted to dispatch Business upon.

Sir W. Strickland. I desire he may be asked, whether, if he had known the State of this Office, he would have given Five thousand Guineas for it?

Mr. Thurston. If I had known the State of the Office, and the Consequences of it, as appear at this Time before your Lordships, rather than have given 5000*l.* for it, I would have given 5000*l.* to have been without it.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Of the money he paid or left at the time he mentions, on my Lady Macclesfield's Table, I desire to know if he received any of it back again?

Mr. Thurston. I received back again, from the Lady Macclesfield, the Sum of 3250*l.* in Bank-Notes, the same as I enclosed, when I first left it.

Dr. Sayer. Do you know the particular Circumstances of that Transaction, and upon what Occasion the Money came to be returned? Give a full Account of that whole Transaction.

Mr. Thurston. Soon after my Admission, and as soon as I could adjust the Affairs of my Office, it being the latter End of Summer, and little Business stirring, I went into the Country for my Health. The Servant I left in Town, sent me word, that there were several Messages from my Lord Chancellor, that he supposed might be of Importance. As soon as I could conveniently, I returned to London, and in a Day or two went myself to my Lord Chancellor's House, and I sent to know what the Occasion of those messages was. They said, it was not from my Lord Chancellor, but it was a message from my Lady Macclesfield. Upon that I immediately after waited upon her Ladyship. She informed me then, that she did not know that I had left so large a Present with her, as she found it was: And declaring I should be used with Honour, she returned to me 3250*l.* and the other part, she said she would appropriate to her own Use.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We desire Mr. Thurston may be asked, if there was any notice taken of any Order or Directions from my Lord Chancellor about re-payment of the Money? or whether it was only a Transaction between him and my Lady Macclesfield.

Mr. Thurston. There was no Notice taken of any Orders from my Lord Chancellor; rather an express Desire that my Lord Chancellor should never be acquainted with it.

Mr. Strange. I would ask when this money was restored?

Mr. Thurston. The time when the money was restored, was about the middle of October.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked, whether at the time he first applied to Lady Macclesfield, he laid down the Paper those Bank Bills were in on the Table, before he received any Answer from my Lady, or afterwards?

Mr. Thurston. I laid down the Bank Bills on the Table, to the best of my Remembrance, at the time of my coming away, and taking leave.

Mr. Com. Serj. Whether they were inclosed in a Paper?

Mr. Thurston. They were inclosed in a Paper, and also sealed up.

Mr. Com. Serj. Whether they were opened during the Time he was there?

Mr. Thurston. No, they were not.

Mr. Com. Serj. Or taken up by my Lady during that Time?

Mr. Thurston. No, my Lords, I don't remember they were.

Mr. Com. Serj. Whether he named the particular Sum to her Ladyship?

Mr. Thurston. No, my Lords, not in the least. I did not give any Intimation what Sum was inclosed.

Mr. Strange. I desire he may be asked, whether he can remember that my Lady did or did not open it, before he went away?

Mr. Thurston. To the best of my Remembrance it was not opened, before I went out of the Room.

Mr. Strange. I desire he may be asked this further Question, whether he apprehended that my Lady Macclesfield was acquainted with the Contents, till after he was gone?

Mr. Thurston. I did not apprehend that my Lady Macclesfield was acquainted with the Contents of it, till afterwards.

Mr. West. Since that Gentleman hath been asked concerning his Apprehension, I desire he may be asked another Question of the same kind, which is, Whether he apprehended he should have been admitted, if he had not left the money?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We submit it to your Lordships, whether that be a fair Question.

Mr. West. Really I think it is a proper Question, upon the Foundation of the Question asked before. The former Question was, whether he apprehended my Lady knew what he had left? I ask, whether he apprehended he should have been admitted, if he had not left that Sum?

Mr. Thurston. I do not apprehend, that if I had come without the money, I should have been admitted. But if the Notes had been return'd to me without any other Answer, then I should fully have apprehended that I should not have been admitted.

Sir John Russhout. I desire he may be ask'd, whether he had any particular Acquaintance with the Lady Macclesfield before?

Mr. Thurston. I had not that Honour.

Sir John Russhout. Whether he had ever seen her, or been in her Company before?

Mr. Thurston. My Lords, I believe I never was.

Sir John Russhout. My Lords, we desire he may be asked what he apprehends was the Reason of 3250*l.* being returned to him?

Mr. Thurston. I know not whether I should trouble your Lordships with my Apprehensions, they may not be just; but so far as I could collect from the Lady's Discourse, the Reason was, she thought it too large a Present.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be ask'd, when the 3250*l.* was returned, in what month it was?

Mr. Thurston. It was in October.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether he can recollect in what Time of the month?

Mr. Thurston. I believe it was about the middle of October, to the best of my Remembrance.

Dr. Sayer. My Lords, we desire he may be ask'd, whether the return of this money was before or after the then first Seal before Michaelmas Term?

Mr. Thurston. To the best of my Remembrance, the first Seal was about the middle of October, and it was returned before the first Seal.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I desire he may be ask'd, whether there was any message sent about the returning of the money, before the Return was made?

Mr. Thurston. I have acquainted your Lordships that several messages past, while I was in the Country.

Mr. Robins. When he waited upon my Lady Macclesfield, after his Return out of the Country, I desire he may be asked, whether she mentioned any Thing to him of the Reason of those messages?

Mr. Thurston.

Mr. Thurston. She mentioned the Reason, and said, that it was to return the money, which she said was too large a Present, and that she was afraid my Lord Chancellor should come to the knowledge of it.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he would inform your Lordships, when he went to Kensington to my Lady Macclesfield, where my Lord Macclesfield was?

Mr. Thurston. When I went to Kensington to my Lady Macclesfield, my Lord Macclesfield was then engaged in the Business of the Court of Chancery, at the latter end of the Sittings, or first Seal after Michaelmas Term.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. In what state of Health was my Lord Chancellor at that time? Had he not continued some time before at London, and not at Kensington?

Mr. Thurston. My Lord Chancellor, by the enquiry I made, was at that time in London.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. How soon after your Admission did the Lord Chancellor go into Oxfordshire?

Mr. Thurston. The very Day after my Admission, my Lord Chancellor went into Oxfordshire, as I was informed by one of my Lord's Officers, who came to me that Day upon some Business.

Mr. Cottingham again call'd.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I desire Mr. Cottingham may be asked, whether upon the Proposal of 5000 Guineas made to him by Mr. Thurston, he acquainted my Lord Macclesfield with it?

Mr. Cottingham. I acquainted my Lord Chancellor with the Proposal made by Mr. Thurston of 5000 Guineas.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether did he approve of it, or reject it?

Mr. Cottingham. I am not very certain, whether the Earl did not say he would take time to consider of it. But in the main, according to my Apprehension, the Earl seem'd to approve of it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be ask'd, Whether he receiv'd any thing for my Lord Macclesfield's Use upon Mr. Thurston's Admission?

Mr. Cottingham. No, my Lords, I receiv'd nothing but my own Fees.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. If he received nothing, Whether he received any Directions from my Lord Chancellor, relating to his receiving, or not receiving any thing from him?

Mr. Cottingham. The Earl was pleased to tell me, he had a design to have given that place to Dr. Sayer, but he was at that time in the country, out of town, at Durham: He proceeded so far as to order me to take no money of Mr. Thurston.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When was that?

Mr. Cottingham. Very soon before he was admitted.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we submit this as Evidence of the Lord's knowing of the Receipt of this Present of 5000 Guineas.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I desire to know of Mr. Cottingham, Whether my Lord Macclesfield had any acquaintance with Mr. Thurston before this Proposal?

Mr. Cottingham. I can't say as to that, whether he had or had not; I believe he had not, as I apprehend.

Mr. Plummer. I desire he may be ask'd one Question, Whether he made any difficulty of accepting his Fees on Mr. Thurston's Admission?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, I did.

Mr. Plummer. And why?

Mr. Cottingham. The Earl ordered me to take no money of him. Upon that general Order I made a little difficulty, and told him of it; the answer he made me was, Why should I make any difficulty, when he had been thus generously dealt with by my Lord Chancellor?

Sir Wm. Strickland. Whether at that time, when he first mention'd the 5000 Guineas, it was not a Day or two before his admission?

Mr. Cottingham. I believe it was a Day or two before his admission.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we have done with Mr. Cottingham; since the name of Dr. Sayer is mentioned on this Occasion, whom the noble Earl declared he would compliment with the Place that fell vacant, I desire this Witness may be asked, Whether that was a real Compliment to Dr. Sayer, or whether Dr. Sayer made any application, or was to give any thing for it?

Mr. Cottingham. I believe, if Dr. Sayer had been then in Town, my Lord would really have made him a Compliment of it without any present. My Lord told me Dr. Sayer was his particular Friend, and he had a great Value and Respect for him.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, I beg leave to ask a Question upon that Question. He says he thought my Lord Macclesfield would have given it him for nothing; I ask him, If he then thought he gave it Mr. Thurston for nothing?

Mr. Cottingham. The Answer I can make to that Question is, that I did not apprehend my Lord was so well acquainted with Mr. Thurston, as to give it him for nothing.

Dr. Sayer. I desire he may be ask'd, Whether he did not represent to the Earl of Macclesfield, that there was a necessity for the immediate putting a Master into that Office, for the dispatch of Business?

Mr. Cottingham. I did represent it to the Earl, that it was necessary to put somebody into the Office, for several Practisers had been with me about their affairs in that Office, and otherwise the Business might be transferred to another Office, which would have been a great prejudice. Upon that the Earl said, Mr. Thurston should be admitted.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Whether you had not application from the Suitors themselves, and whether there was not a Clamour from them on account of the stop it put to Business?

Mr. Cottingham. Yes, there was; it happened to be in the long Vacation, and something, I told the Earl, must be done, there was an absolute Necessity to come to some Resolution or other in the matter.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. In this Article, as an aggravation, it is alledg'd, that Mr. Borret died insolvent: We beg leave to call some Witnesses to give an account of the State of the Office at his admission, and afterwards at the time of his Death.

Mr. Meller called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire Mr. Meller may be ask'd, what Sums in Cash and Effects he delivered over to Mr. Borret, at the time of his coming into the Office?

Mr. Meller. My Lords, I take it to be about 120,000*l*. I refer myself to the account given in to the Judges, and Directors of the Bank, and signed by my Hand.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we submit it, whether this is regular, to examine to an Accompt Viva Voce, which account hath been reduced into writing?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Surely the Witnesses may make use of his own paper to refresh his memory.

E. of Macclesfield. I don't know what these Gentlemen intend. They are reading a Charge against Mr. Borret, to shew what was delivered over to him, at the time he came into the Office. Is it expected I should be able to give an account what was paid to him, or by him, while he was Master? that I should give an account of his Estate and Effects, what it is, and if there was sufficient to pay, in his Hands, or not? If these Gentlemen had any Order of the Court, in which this had been fixed and settled, that might have been something. It is impossible for me to enter into it.—It appears he died intestate, Administration was not granted till a great while after his Death; not till very lately: What account hath been taken of his effects I don't know, nor can any way shew. They are beginning with an account which I apprehend is not a proper Evidence to be given as against me, to prove that this Gentleman had not Effects sufficient to answer the Demands upon his Office.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, this Evidence relates to an accompt delivered in by the approbation of the Lord impeached, on the Enquiry made before the Lords of the Council. As this Accompt was delivered in before them, we apprehend so far it is a proper Evidence, and a Foundation for a farther Enquiry, how much of it remains in the Office: We shall ask other persons afterwards, as to the Deficiency. All the use we now make of it, is, to shew the gross Sum that was at first transferred over to him.

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, if they mean only to satisfy your Lordships Curiosity, by shewing how great a Sum there was in that Office, I think it is of no great importance.

Mr. Lutwiche. All that we endeavour to prove now, is, what was very notorious at the time of Mr. Borret's Death; that there was a great Deficiency, and that he died insolvent, and the Earl goes a great way in this matter in his own answer. He says in his answer, That on the Death of Mr. Borret, he desired Mr. Godfrey and Mr. Bennet to enquire into his Effects, and to enter a proper Caveat in the Prerogative Court, to prevent Administration being granted to any person who might embezzle the said Borret's Estate, and to obtain Administration to be granted to them for the benefit of the Suitors of the Court. This goes a good way, I apprehend, to incline your Lordships to believe, that there were those steps used, which are unusual in the case of a man's Solvency. Therefore what we would ask to, is, that the Witnesses would give an account of what he knows concerning the Deficiency in this Office, or give an account of such Circumstances, as may induce your Lordships to believe there was such a Deficiency.

Mr. Com. Serj. If the Gentlemen who appear on the behalf of the House of Commons think fit to rely upon our answer, they may do it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I think Mr. Meller hath proved that he transferred 120,000*l.* to Mr. Borret; we will now go on, and prove the Deficiency.

Mr. Com. Serj. Mr. Meller hath spoke Viva Voce, in a matter which we apprehend is capable of much better proof; therefore we hope what he has said shall not go for Evidence. There must have been a Schedule, and he has the counterpart of that Schedule, by which the Effects were deliver'd over.

Lord Trevor. Mr. Meller hath a Paper in his Hand; I desire to know, What that Paper is?

Mr. Meller. The Paper I have before me, is the very Account of the money delivered to Mr. Borret, and the several Times when; it is made by way of Schedule. There is another Paper by way of Abstract. I drew them together at the time I delivered it to the Judges. I had not time to draw out the full account, and therefore I made an Abstract, both which are signed.

E. of Macclesfield. The noble Lord asked the Question exceeding proper. The Question asked is, What this Paper was? Perhaps it is the very accompt Mr. Borret and he made up between them, and signed. I ask therefore, Whether it is the accompt between them, or whether it is an accompt of his own drawing up since?

Mr. Meller. This is the accompt I drew up from my Books, of which Mr. Borret had a Duplicate. I verified all these Items, and likewise proved the payment of the money by Goldsmiths and Bank Notes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We apprehend that this is as full Evidence as can be laid before your Lordships.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We submit it, Whether your Lordships are of opinion, that this is proper Evidence? Mr. Meller hath been proposing a Paper, which is not the original accompt delivered; it is not the Book, but a Copy of the Book taken out, and given in Evidence in another place: Now he would by this Evidence, signed by himself, charge Mr. Borret with money deliver'd over to him; but as it is an accompt only signed by Mr. Meller, we submit it, Whether it can be a Charge upon the Representative of Borret, and consequently if it can be any Evidence at all?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We beg leave to insist upon it as proper Evidence. When a person makes up an accompt of his own Hand-writing, and draws it up, and swears that to be a true accompt upon his own Knowledge, Whether this is not proper Evidence?

E. of Macclesfield. This Gentleman has really given his Evidence, though it was objected to: It will be a proper enquiry hereafter, when we come to consider the Evidence that hath been given, Whether it be good proof of what it is brought for?

Dr. Sayer. We shall reserve our Objection to the last.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They may reserve what Observations they please; it is an Objection to be made now, or not at all.

Lord Lechmere. It would be of some Service to prevent mispending your Lordship's Time, if the noble Lord would distinguish between Objections and Observations; for a great deal of Time has been taken up in Observations on Evidence, which are proper afterwards on the Defence.

Mr. William Thompson called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Mr. Thompson is one of the Gentlemen, who by the consent of the Lord within the Bar, as well as of the rest of that Committee, did examine into the accompts of the Masters in Chancery; and we beg leave to ask him, In the accompt delivered in before the noble Lord himself self, what appeared to be the Deficiency upon Mr. Borret's Account?

E. of Macclesfield. If it does appear by those accounts, those accounts may be produced before your Lordships, and your Lordships may be Judges; but I beg they may not insist upon this Gentleman giving his Opinion, in order to affect me with his Collections or Inferences upon them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The original accounts are here. They are on your Lordships Table. It will be proper to examine this Gentleman as to that.

Mr. Plummer. I beg leave to make one Observation, and I believe it may prevent mispending your Lordships time. They make an Objection to this Evidence, as if your Lordships were going to try how the Deficiency was made up; whereas your Lordships are only trying, whether there was or was not a Deficiency.

E. of Macclesfield. If the accounts are before your Lordships, and lie upon your Lordships Table, and he only declares to your Lordships his Observations on those accounts, for your Lordships Ease, and to save you some Trouble, I have no Objection to it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Upon the stating the account, which we apprehend is a matter of Evidence, when a Gentleman computes the Sum on one Side, and the Sum on the other Side, we desire to know what appears to Mr. Thompson to be the Deficiency?

Mr. Thompson. I can't rely upon my memory for the Sum, but I have in my Hand a Report made to the Committee of Council, that I signed with my Name; by which it appears, that Mr. Meller, at several times, paid to Mr. Borret 120,000*l.* That Mr. Borret paid out to the several Suitors 77,485*l.* and I find the Charge remaining on Mr. Borret's Office unpaid to the Suitors, is 42,515*l.* These are the Sums that, upon Examination of the accounts, we find to be right.

Dr. Sayer. If the Gentlemen that are Managers for the House of Commons have done, we beg leave to ask Mr. Thompson this Question, Whether on the making up of these accounts any Executor or Administrator of Mr. Borret was present.

Mr. Thompson. When we examined the accounts, we understood there was no Representative of Mr. Borret; and I think it is put in the Report, that we could get no account but from his Clerk, Mr. Godfrey and Mr. Bennet, two Masters in Chancery.

Mr. Com. Serj. What Books were they he formed those accounts from?

Mr. Thompson. The first Charge, or the Charge from Mr. Meller on Mr. Borret, was taken from Mr. Meller's account. The 77,485*l.* paid out, was an account from Mr. Borret's Books, made up by his Clerk, under the Inspection of Mr. Godfrey and Mr. Bennet.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked, Whether he himself knew those to be Mr. Borret's Books, or only by relation from other Persons?

Mr. Thompson. Only by relation from his Clerk.

Mr. Com. Serj. Then, with Submission, they must go further before the Ballance can be taken notice of. They must establish that these Books are Mr. Borret's Books.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have done with Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We hope the Counsel for the Earl impeached, will be pleased to read his own Answer, wherein he owns that Mr. Godfrey and Mr.

Bennet, were employ'd by himself to take the Effects of Mr. Borret into their Custody.

E. of Macclesfield. If I apprehend Mr. Thompson, he says, the Charge is taken from the account given by Mr. Meller himself. I desire to know, Whether Mr. Meller was not called upon to discharge himself of the money he had in his hands, before he surrender'd to Mr. Borret, and whether that was not the Occasion of his being there?

Mr. Thompson. I apprehend Mr. Meller was sent for, in order to know the State of the Office at the time he left it.

E. of Macclesfield. So he gave an account how it stood at the time of quitting the Office, and what he paid over to Mr. Borret?

Mr. Thompson. I apprehend he did so.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire Mr. Thompson may be ask'd, Whether the 77,485*l.* Discharge, was taken from the relation of Mr. Godfrey and Mr. Bennet, or from the Books themselves; or whether he did examine the Books himself?

Mr. Thompson. I went through every Particular of Mr. Meller's account; as to the other, my memory does not serve me to answer particularly.

E. of Macclesfield. Whether they did not report at that time, they could not take the accounts perfectly, for want of an Administrator?

Mr. Thompson. I believe, my Lords, we might do so; and I believe, if the Report is turn'd to, it will appear so. I don't mention these Sums as an exact account, they were the best accounts we could get?

Dr. Sayer. The Question I would trouble your Lordships with, because it is of great consequence, is, Whether the account of 120,000*l.* which lies as a Charge upon Mr. Borret's Office, is not the account which Mr. Meller is to discharge himself by, and of those Effects for which he otherwise remains responsible?

Mr. Thompson. How far Mr. Meller is to discharge himself, I am no competent Judge. This is the account that the Office, as I apprehend, stood charged with.

Dr. Sayer. To put the Question shorter, Whether it is the account of Mr. Meller, as Predecessor in the Office to Mr. Borret?

Mr. Thompson. I apprehend it so.

Mr. Plummer. Whether Mr. Meller did not produce Receipts for Mr. Borret, for this whole account?

Mr. Thompson. To the best of my remembrance, Mr. Meller did produce Vouchers for every article set down in his account.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be ask'd, Whether there were any Proofs made of these Vouchers?

Mr. Thompson. What the Gentleman means by Proofs, I don't know. They were Receipts under Mr. Borret's own Hand for the whole Sum.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be ask'd, Whether he is acquainted with Mr. Borret's Hand-Writing, or whether there was any Proof made of it?

Mr. Thompson. Mr. Borret's Clerk was there, and affirm'd every Receipt to be Mr. Borret's Hand-writing.

Mr. Com. Serj. I would ask, if there was any Oath made, or if it was only upon his Word?

Mr. Thompson. If your Lordships will give me leave to have recourse to the Report, I will recollect myself. I can't say whether Mr. Borret's Clerk was sworn or no, I think he was; I don't find it set down in the Report.

Mr. Lutwyche. I would beg leave to ask this Question; This Report, that is sign'd by him as one of the Committee, whether it was laid before the Council, and to whom delivered in, in order to be laid before the Council?

Mr. Thompson. This very Report was delivered by Mr. Baron Gilbert, to the Committee of Council.

E. of Macclesfield. I hope it is the same that is before your Lordships, if it is not, I can't tell what to say to it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. This is the original Report, of which your Lordships have a Copy on your Lordships Table.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire it may be delivered in, and lie upon the Table.

Mr. Godfrey called.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We desire Mr. Godfrey may be ask'd, Whether upon the Death of Mr. Borret, he was directed to take an account of the State of his Office?

Mr. Godfrey. Upon the Death of Mr. Borret, my Brother Bennet and I were desired by my Lord Macclesfield, to look into the Affairs of Mr. Borret's Office, and see how the accompt stood; and likewise to see what Securities were in the Bank, in the Exchequer, and East-India Company, and other Funds. Accordingly, I went to the Bank, and the East-India House, and took an Account of what I found stood in his Name there. I believe Mr. Bennet will satisfy your Lordships, he went to the Exchequer and other Places. I applied first to the Bank, to Mr. Hanger, who was then Deputy Governor, and he was so kind to send an Officer to search the several Books, and I had this Accompt: There was in Mr. Borret's Name 1000*l.* in 5*l.* per Cent. Annuities, 1000*l.* Bank Stock. And then I went to the East-India House, and there was 240*l.* East-India Stock in his Name. This was all the Account I took.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In what State was the Office in general?

Mr. Godfrey. I did not look over the Office Books. I believe Mr. Bennet, who was with me, took that Charge upon him: I believe he is capable of giving you an account. I did not see the Office-Books at all: But upon my talking with Mr. Bennet about it, he found there was more Stock and Security in Mr. Borret's Name in the several Funds, than he could find him charg'd with in the Books of the Office.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When Mr. Thompson and the other Gentlemen enquired into the particular Effects, whether, when he appear'd there, the accompt he gave in was a true accompt?

Mr. Godfrey. To the best of my knowledge, in relation to Mr. Borret's, it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I desire one Question more, Whether it is usual to enquire into the Effects of a Predecessor, unless there is reason to suspect a Deficiency?

Mr. Godfrey. I don't know whether it is usual, but it is extremely necessary. When this Gentleman was expiring in such an Office, having no Friends in Town, nor any intimate acquaintance besides myself to take care of his Effects; I thought I ought to take some care, that his Office should not be plundered; and that was the only Reason that induced me to take care of his Effects, that they might not be embezzled.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether they did not find the Office in great Confusion?

Mr. Godfrey. In that Part of his Office which was at his Chambers in the Temple, we found his Papers in great Confusion, lying without any method or order. We collected them as well as we could, and what Things we found of Value, or belonging to the Suitors, as Goldsmiths Notes, Notes under Hand for money, we put them upon a File; and that File, together with other little moveables we found belonging to him, as rings and a watch, were all put in a Bag, and sealed up by Mr. Bennet and myself, Mr. Grant, who was Mr. Borret's Lady's Father, and Mr. Grant the Clergyman, who was his Lady's Uncle; and we put them into a Trunk, and lock'd them up; and they are now at my House.

Sir Wm. Strickland. I would ask him, Whether the next of Kin did not refuse to take out Administration, because of the Deficiency?

Mr. Com. Serj. Here can be no answer, but yes or no; I hope Gentlemen will not ask such Questions.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire he may be ask'd, Whether any Advice was given concerning taking out, or not taking out Administration?

Mr. Godfrey. Mr. Grant the Uncle said, that he was a Creditor of Mr. Borret's by Bond (which indeed I was surprized to hear, I did not think he owed any man a Shilling) between 6 and 700*l.* And being so great a Creditor, he thought if he took out Administration he should be paid first. I told him, as Mr. Borret had been in an Office of great weight, and there was a great Trust, I could not tell how matters stood in the Office; and if there should prove a Deficiency, I believed he would involve himself in taking out Administration, in much more trouble than he was aware of.

Sir Wm. Strickland. I desire he may be ask'd, If he did not apprehend there would be such Deficiency?

Mr. Godfrey. I did not apprehend at that time there would be any Deficiency. He had been in the Office about four Years; he had had Opportunities of re-imbursing himself: He had a handsome Fortune of his own when he came in, and had with his Lady 3000*l.* therefore I was under no apprehension that there would be a Deficiency.

E. of Macclesfield. I beg leave I may ask Mr. Godfrey, Whether he was acquainted very well with the Affairs of Mr. Borret, and knew his Circumstances?

Mr. Godfrey. I have had some Years acquaintance with Mr. Borret. As to his real Estate, I was not perfectly acquainted with it, I had it only by common relation, that he had an Estate of about 400*l.* a Year, or rather better; but I don't know it of my own Knowledge.

E. of Macclesfield. As to his real Estate, you say you don't know it of your own Knowledge; Whether are you particularly acquainted with his personal Estate?

Mr. Godfrey. No, my Lords.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire Mr. Godfrey to inform your Lordships, what he said to me after Mr. Borret's Death, Whether there would be a Loss or not a Loss in Mr. Borret's Office?

Mr. Godfrey. I can't at present remember what Discourse passed between the noble Earl and myself, upon the death of Mr. Borret. I believe I might say, and it was my opinion, that there would be no Deficiency. I have heard his Estate was such, and I knew very well that his Lady's Fortune was so much, and that he disposed of a Place, which was the Filazer of Yorkshire, for which he had, as I have been inform'd, 4200*l.* And these were the Reasons that induced me to believe there wou'd be no Deficiency; and I knew very well that I could say of my own Knowledge, Mr. Borret liv'd at no extravagant rate; for I am sure all the Time he was a Master, and in Town, he never spent 200*l.* a Year.

Sir Wm. Strick. He says, he has heard he had 400*l.* a Year in Land: Does he not as well know that that Estate was settled upon his Family and Children?

Mr. Godfrey. I have heard, that upon his Marriage, some part of it was settled, but whether all be settled, or not, I can't tell.

E. of Maccles. It seems this Gentleman says, he did not spend 200*l.* a Year. How came you to imagine that he should spend no more than 200*l.* a Year?

Mr. Godfrey. He told me so.

E. of Maccles. Where was his Family?

Mr. Godfrey. In the Country.

E. of Maccles. With whom?

Mr. Godfrey. With his Lady's Father; and when he was in Town, he had private Chambers in the Temple, and only kept one Servant, and one Horse.

E. of Maccles. I desire he may be asked, whether he did not once intend and propose himself to take out Administration to Mr. Borret, and if he did not take some Steps towards it?

Mr. Godfrey. I had so great a concern for the Office, and the Securities not being transferred to a proper Hand, that I was willing to take out Administration, rather than there should be any clamours on account of the neglect of Business in the Office. But, my Lords, upon considering the Matter, I did not apprehend that I was so fit a Person for that purpose. I was not very young my self, I had two Children, and those young: I apprehended that if I should drop off before things were settled, the Case might be still the same as I found them: Therefore, I desired I might have somebody joined with me in this troublesome Affair, for I did foresee a good deal of Trouble in it. However, I said I was willing to engage in it, if my Brother John Bennet were joined with me, rather than there should be any clamour upon the Office; and I persuaded him to do the same; and accordingly, I went down to the Commons, to see if Administration could be granted to us two. The Relations in the Country, and those People concerned for them, were very willing that Administration should be granted to Mr. Bennet and my self; and accordingly Process was sent to cite the Children; and that done, as I am inform'd, Sentence was given, that I and my Brother Bennet should have the Administration. But then this unhappy enquiry coming out, we did not know what Situation we might be in, and for that Reason I declined it.

E. of Maccles. Has Mr. Borret a Wife living, or is she dead?

Mr. Godfrey. His Lady died a month before him.

E. of Maccles. What age are his Children?

Mr. Godfrey. The eldest is about three Years old, and the youngest about two, as I am informed; I never saw them.

Mr. John Bennet was called and sworn.

Sir Wm. Strick. The Question I desire he may be asked is, whether he did not, upon the enquiry into the Affairs of Mr. Borret's Office, apprehend that there was a Deficiency.

Mr. J. Bennet. I did hear it reported that there would be a great Deficiency in that Office, at the Time I was desired by my Lord Macclesfield to look into it; and I was likewise informed soon after, that there was like to be no Deficiency.

Sir Wm. Strick. I desire he may be asked, how he found it?

Mr. J. Bennet. I found his Papers and Accompts in the utmost Confusion. His Accompts were mostly in loose Papers: There was one Book indeed, but that extended no farther than to the Christmas before his death, which was near three quarters of a Year before he died. Mr. Godfrey desired I would join with him in taking out Administration; after a good deal of importunity I did consent.

Sir Wm. Strick. I desire one Question more. He says he was informed soon after, there was like to be no Deficiency in the Office. I desire to know, whether he did inform the Earl of Macclesfield there was like to be no Deficiency?

Mr. J. Bennet. No, I did not, but I did inform him, that there was not so great a Deficiency as was reported, which was 25 or 30,000*l.* I could make no regular Computation, every thing was in the utmost Confusion, as I acquainted my Lord.

E. of Maccles. I desire he may be asked, whether he did not inform me, that he found more Stock in Borret's name, in the Books of the several companies, than he could find charged upon him in the Office?

Mr. J. Bennet. Not to my Remembrance; for I did not look into the Stocks of the Companies; that was Mr. Godfrey's Business.

E. of Maccles. You then look'd into his Books?

Mr. J. Bennet. I did so.

E. of Maccles. Then upon your looking into his Books, and Mr. Godfrey's looking into the Companies Books, and comparing them together, I desire you would inform my Lords, whether you did not take more to be in his Name, than he was charged with in the Books of the Office?

Mr. J. Bennet. Upon Mr. Godfrey's Accompt there appeared, upon casting it up, to be more Stock in his Name than the Securities he was answerable for to the Court.

E. of Maccles. He has said, he could not tell what the Deficiency would be, because he could not make up a regular Accompt; I desire he may be asked, whether he did not tell me that he believed there would be no Deficiency?

Mr. J. Bennet. No, I did not.

E. of Maccles. Did you not upon your Oath?

Mr. J. Bennet. After Mr. Borret's death, I did say to several People, when they were clamorous (but whether I said so to my Lord Macclesfield, I can't tell) that upon the best Accompt I could make of his confused Affairs, there would be a Deficiency of 4 or 5000*l.* and I believed not more.

Mr. Com. Serj. Tho' Mr. Bennet did not look into the Books of the publick Companies; yet whether he did not examine at the Exchequer upon that Occasion?

Mr. J. Bennet. Yes.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked, whether he did not tell Mr. Godfrey afterwards, that upon what appear'd, there would be no Deficiency?

Mr. J. Bennet. No.

Mr. Plummer. Mr. Bennet has said, upon comparing the Books, he found more Stock in Mr. Borret's Borret's Name, than he was charged with to the Court. I desire he may be asked, if he found more Stock than the money and the Effects he was charged with to the Court?

Mr. J. Bennet. No my Lords, the best Calculation I could make, was, that there was near 4 or 5000 l. Deficient.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We shall leave this Article, with this Observation, that Mr. Borret died insolvent, and a debtor to the Suitors of the Court, of which we have given full Evidence; and that Mr. Thurston was admitted into that Office by the Earl Impeach'd, without procuring satisfaction to the Suitors of the Court, or Security for their Debts: If that was done, it lies upon the noble Lord to prove it.

Mr. Onslow. My Lords, the Commons having made good that part of their Impeachment, by which the Earl of Macclesfield stands charged with extorting many great, and extravagant Sums of money, for the admission of several of the Masters of the Court of Chancery into their respective Offices: We shall now proceed, my Lords, to support the Eleventh and Twelfth Articles, which contain many corrupt Practices, used by the said Earl, to advance and encrease the illegal Gain, arising to himself from the Sale and Disposal of those Employments.

The Eleventh Article charges him, my Lords, with admitting several Persons to those Offices, who at the Time of their Admission, were of small Substance and Ability, and highly unfit for so great a Trust, as by the nature of their Employments at that Time, was to be placed in 'em.

The Masters in Chancery, my Lords, have of late Years, been the Treasurers of that Court; the Repository of the money and the Effects brought into the Court; brought there my Lords, not by the choice and consent of the Parties concerned, but by the compulsion of the Court, under the Faith of a better Security: But so, my Lords, has it fallen out, that this pretended Security, has served only to delude the Suitors of the Court, into a false Quiet, whilst their Estates have been made a Prey to infamous Stock-jobbers, and wantonly wasted, by some of 'em, to support the extravagancy of their Living.

The Fortunes, my Lords, of Orphans and Lunatics, are from the Compassion of our Government, a part of the Care of the Court of Chancery; and have been lodged in the Hands of the Masters, as a Place of Sanctuary, till the Owners should become capable of managing their Estates themselves: When they come my Lords, to require their Fortunes, he, who was the Supreme Judge in a Court established for their Relief; He, who was the Great Guardian of Infants and Lunatics, will be found to have suffer'd an advantage to be taken of the weakness of the One, and the misery of the Other, to render their helpless condition a means of their Ruin, instead of their Protection.

This, my Lords, is the nature of the Trust reposed in the Masters of the Court of Chancery, and this the Use they have been permitted to make of it. The Greatness of the Trust, will shew your Lordships, what Precautions a Lord Chancellor ought to have taken, as to the Officers admitted into these Employments; and the Abuse of this Trust, will demonstrate how little His care has been, whose Duty it was to provide Persons of Integrity, and responsible Men, for the execution of these Offices; but who, my Lords, unfortunately for the Suitors, and to the dishonour of the publick Justice of the Kingdom, presided seven Years in the Court of Chancery; in which Time, a deficiency of above four-score thousand Pounds, has happened upon the Masters He admitted; and, what perhaps may be worthy of your Lordships particular Notice, of the six masters on whom there appears to be a Deficiency, Four of them were admitted by Him. If our Evidence, my Lords, as to this Article, rested only on the Proof of these Deficiencies, it would, we apprehend, be sufficient to evince what the Commons have here alledged, That Persons of small Substance and Ability, have, by the Earl at the Bar, been preferred to be masters of the Court of Chancery. But, my Lords, to bring this Charge still nearer to the Earl, we have it in Proof, and strongly so, that little or no inquiry was ever made by him, into the Characters and Circumstances of those He admitted into these Offices. That in fact, my Lords, they were Men of very mean Fortunes. No security ever required of Them; which still made it the more necessary, that their own Ability should be thoroughly looked into and well approved. We shall shew your Lordships, That they were entrusted, some of 'em, with forty, sixty, one of 'em, I think, to the amount of a hundred thousand Pounds in Cash and Securities: And yet, my Lords, no other Use was made of This, but to enbance the Price of the Office, when it was to be Sold and Barter'd, for the benefit of the Earl. The Argument used; to bring up any Person to the Rate the Earl insisted on, was the largeness of the Sum to be transferr'd to the Purchaser. The Temptation generally succeeded: The Reason your Lordships will easily imagine; and when the Price was thus agreed upon, no other Qualification was required, the Person stood right in the Earl's Opinion, and was thought proper to be Associated to him. — Were it only that, my Lords, the Commons would not have troubled your Lordships with this Article, — but to be Associated to him in the Administration and Execution of Justice, and to be entrusted with the Fortunes of whole Families, whose only support, perhaps, depended on the Ability and Integrity of these Men: How well, my Lords, the Earl consulted in the appointment of these Officers, the Honour of that publick Justice they were to assist him in; What Regard He has had for the Interest of Those, whose Estates He thus flung into their Hands, The Evidence we shall produce to your Lordships, and your own Observations upon it, will abundantly shew, notwithstanding his flat denial of this part of the Charge.

I will trouble your Lordships but with one particular more in this Article, and it is what the Article concludes with. A remarkable Declaration by the Earl, of the Ability, and other Qualifications of the Masters, particularly those promoted by him; and this happened, my Lords, upon as remarkable an Occasion. A very honourable Person, then a Judge also in that Court, and now justly at the Head of it, having seen with Indignation, the Havock that was making of the Effects of the Suitors; out of compassion to them, and from a Zeal for Justice, endeavour'd to put some stop to it, in an Instance that came within his Cognizance. An Order was made by him, my Lords, on one of the masters, to allow some Profit to a Suitor arising from her own money, which the master designed as it was thought, to have sunk to his own Use. The master thought himself aggrieved, and fled for Redress to his Patron, tron, the then Lord Chancellor, the Earl now under your Lordships Consideration; and he was secure in so doing, for the Order was immediately discharged; and then it was, my Lords, to obviate the Clamours that were breaking out from all sorts of People against the Masters, that the Earl did in open Court, then sitting as Lord Chancellor, in his judicial Capacity, declare, that the present Masters were Men of as great Probity, Fortunes, and Abilities, as any set of Masters that ever were in that Court; and that he had had the Satisfaction of putting in most of them himself. As this, my Lords, was spoken in general of them all, but with a peculiar Regard to those he had admitted; the Commons have laid it to be to the manifest Deceit and Injury of the Suitors of the Court, which they are justified in doing, by the Thing itself being false, by the Proof we have, my Lords, that the Earl must know it to be false, and by the Resemblance it bears to that Series of other mean Artifices he had long been practising to give a counterfeit Credit to these corrupt Officers. A Credit, my Lords, he was soon to receive some Benefit from; for the Witness will inform your Lordships, that a Vacancy of a Master in Chancery happened the Day before this significant and memorable Declaration was made.

My Lords, The Commons have made this Article a part of their Charge against the Earl of Macclesfield, as being the great Source of the Evil that is likely to befall the unhappy Sufferers in the Court of Chancery; and as it was the Means he made use of to draw to himself those extravagant Sums of Money we have proved him to have received: For Men of small Fortunes, my Lords, as they have more Temptations, so they run less hazard than others in preying upon Money that is entrusted with them; and it is this, my Lords, that encourages such Men to give exorbitant Rates for Employments which afford them those Opportunities.

Thus, my Lords, I have opened to your Lordships the Substance of the Eleventh Article, and the nature of our Proof upon it. The Twelfth Article will be opened and enforced to your Lordships by the Gentleman who is to come after me. I shall therefore detain your Lordships no longer than to make this one Observation, That as the Office of a Master in Chancery is of great Trust and Importance, that as these Officers are appointed to this Trust by the sole Discretion of the Lord Chancellor; and that the Effects of the Suitors of the Court are deposited in their Custody, by his immediate Orders, which he might have placed in safer Hands if he had thought fit; he becomes by all this in the nature of a superior Trustee for, and is therefore justly answerable to the Suitors for the Behaviour of these Men. So, my Lords, in some Degree may the Publick be thought answerable for him; which makes his Guilt without Measure, who has thus brought a Disgrace upon his Country, by prostituting one of its highest Courts of Justice to his own Avarice and Corruption, to the Rapine and Corruption of his inferior Officers, and to the Undoing of those, who, by the Constitution of the Kingdom, have been forced into his Power.

Mr. Palmer. My Lords, The Gentleman that spoke last has fully opened the Evidence of the Eleventh Article, and has shewn to your Lordships, that for his own private and illegal Gain, the impeach'd Lord did commit the Money and Effects of the Suitors, to Men no way of Substance sufficient for so great a Trust. The Twelfth Article will lay before you a most corrupt Practice, used without Controul, while the Earl was Chancellor, by which this illegal Gain was immensely increased; and whereby those Masters of whom the Commons complain in the preceding Article, were tempted and enabled to buy their Offices at extravagant Prices.

Your Lordships will see what Methods were used on the Admission of Masters in Chancery: Great Sums were paid for the Surrenders and Admissions, and those Sums were taken from the Money of the Suitors; sometimes the Purchase-Money was borrowed; but after Admission, repaid from the Cash of the Office; sometimes the Value of the Purchase was left in the surrendering Master's Hands: Whatever different ways were taken at the beginning, they all tended to this; the Suitors were to make the Purchaser easy, and the People were persuaded to bid high, by being told how easily the largest Sums could be raised.

It was a common Recommendation to a Purchaser, to tell him how much Cash was in the Office; and that he need not be afraid to make any Contract good, Money would be ready as soon as he was admitted: Your Lordships will see the Consequences of such Recommendations. Masters did offer, and give more than could be presumed they were worth, the Suitors Money was at Hand to make good the Bargain; and these are the masters in whose Offices appear the greatest Deficiencies.

It will appear to your Lordships, that Mr. Kynaston, and Mr. Thomas Bennet, procured their Places in this manner. Mr. Kynaston discharged a Bond of six thousand Pounds to his Predecessor, by giving a Receipt of the same Value. Mr. Bennet gave a Receipt to his Predecessor for ten Thousand Pounds; both acknowledged a Transfer of so much of the Suitors money, the one received but Nine Pounds, and the other Fifteen Hundred, the rest was kept back as part of the price of their Office; and is now a part of their Deficiencies. How great their Deficiencies are, may be observed to your Lordships; Mr. Bennet's is near Ten Thousand Pounds, and Mr. Kynaston's above Twenty Thousand.

This is the Practice, the impeached Lord, in his Answer, declares himself totally ignorant of, and is what the Commons declare he knew, connived at, and encouraged; and as they have been always careful to aver nothing but what they are satisfied will be fully maintained, this Article will be supported by Proofs, that the impeached Lord was well informed of what he now denies the Knowledge of; that it was the Subject of his Discourse, and that he feared, and endeavoured to prevent a Discovery.

And your Lordships will find him observing on the Accounts of some of the Masters, as they were given in on the late Enquiry, That they were given in in the worst Manner; That they should convince the World that they paid for their Places out of the Suitors Money; and, That they would at last discover what he had always, when asked, taken care to deny.

The impeached Lord admits, in his Answer, that he never caused any Schedules to be made of the Suitors Effects, to be transferred over to succeeding Masters: That it was what his Predecessors never ver did before him, and that if the Consequences alledged by the Commons, have arisen from this Practice, or the not ordering such Schedules, he thinks he is not Criminal.

My Lords, the Charge of the Commons is general, that he knew the Abuse, and took no Care to reform it; if he had taken Care that the Effects of the Suitors should have been transferred by Schedule; if he had appointed any one to overlook the Transfer; if he had taken any method at all to be assured that the Effects of the Suitors were duly made over according to this Order of Transfer, the Commons would not have charged as they have done, and perhaps he had not at this Time appeared so nigh your Lordships Bar.

But if the impeached Lord thinks he is justified by saying, it was not his Duty, and therefore the Omission no Offence: The Commons aver in their Article, that it is the Duty of the Chancellor of Great Britain, to superintend the Masters and their Accounts; and it is submitted to your Lordships, whether he is not Criminal, if he suffers money deposited by the Orders of his Court in the Hands of the masters, to be without Order, conveyed or left in private Hands.

I shall say no more to your Lordships on this Article, but leave the Proof of it to the Evidence.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, the Proof in support of these Articles, will go to them both promiscuously. In the first Place we beg leave to shew to your Lordships, the several Orders of Court, which state the Deficiencies of several Masters.

Mr. Ralph Paxton sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire he may be asked, whether the Papers he produces, are true Copies of the Orders Examined by the Books in the Office.

Mr. R. Paxton. My Lords, they are true Copies, I examined them.

Lords Com. Ordo Curie.

Veneris 29. Die Januarii, 1724.

WHEREAS, by an Order made by the Rt. Hon. the late Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, the Seventeenth Day of December last, it was (inter al') ordered, That the Bank Notes, and other Effects therein specified, produced before Mr. Baron Gilbert, Mr. Justice Denton, and Mr. Justice Raymond, Sir Nath. Gould, Mr. Thomson, and Mr. Hanger, three of the Directors, and one of them Deputy-Governour of the Bank of England, by the several masters of this Court, upon the Examination of their Accompts, for or towards answering the Ballance of Cash admitted by their said Accompts, to remain in their respective Hands belonging to the Suitors of this Court, should be deposited in several Chests, and that then the said Chests should be locked up and left in the Custody of the Bank of England, in such manner as by the said Order is provided: And whereas, the masters had in their several Accompts, given in Particulars of Stock and of Annuities, transferrable in the Books of the several Companies, standing in their Names, which belonged to the several Suitors of this Court, or as their own proper Stock and Annuities, by which part of the Ballance of Cash in their Hands might be made good, or secured. It was further ordered, That they should each of them forthwith, deliver into the respective Companies, a Declaration in writing, wherein such Stock in each respective Company, or the Annuities there transferrable, as by their respective Accompts appeared to belong to the Suitors of the Court, and likewise the Stock and Annuities by them respectively proposed towards making good, or securing their Ballance of Cash, or so much thereof as should equal the Ballance of their said Accompts; in Case they had in their Names, more than sufficient for that purpose should be declar'd to be upon Trust to attend the Orders of this Court: And it was further order'd; That the said several masters, should forthwith give to the said Mr. Baron Gilbert, their Post Accompts of their Receipts and Payments since the former Accompts; and by a subsequent Order of the 21st Day of the said December, It was order'd, That the several and respective masters, whose Effects so ordered to be secured, did not amount to the whole Ballance of the Cash admitted by their Accompts to be in their Hands, should forthwith secure the rest of the Ballance of the Cash appearing to be due on their respective Accounts, by depositing in like manner Bank Notes, or other Effects to the Amount thereof, or enter into a Recognizance in a competent Sum of money, with two or more Sureties to be approved of by Mr. Baron Gilbert, Mr. Justice Denton, and Mr. Justice Raymond, or any two of them, for duly answering from Time to Time as this Court should direct, such Sum and Sums as the remaining Deficiencies of their said respective Ballances amount unto. And whereas, Mr. Edward Conway, one of the masters of this Court, did, on the 19th Instant, attend the Right Hon. the Lords Commissioners for the Custody of the Great Seal of Great Britain, and acknowledge that he was Debtor to the Suitors of the Court on the Ballance of his Cash Accompt, the Sum of 13039*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* $\frac{1}{2}$. and that he had brought into the Chest the Sum of 3000*l.* only, so that he remains Debtor on the said Cash Ballance, the sum of 10039*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* $\frac{1}{2}$. and that since making the said former Orders, he had sold 3500*l.* South Sea Stock, in the Cause between the Lord and Lady Faulconberg, which was intended a Security for the sum of 3425*l.* and that he had since paid off only the sum of 2593*l.* 9*s.* 3*d.* pursuant to the Orders of this Court in that Cause, so that there remained the sum of 831*l.* 10*s.* 9*d.* in his Hands, to be applied to the Parties concerned in that Cause; and that he had since sold 2000*l.* South Sea Annuities Stock, part of the Sum of 17950*l.* South Sea Annuities Stock, belonging to the Suitors of the Court in several Causes, which he ought to re-place. Their Lordships did thereupon order, That the said Mr. Conway, should in a Week, depostite the Sum of 10039*l.* 4*s.* 4*d.* $\frac{1}{2}$. and also the said Sum of 831*l.* 10*s.* 9*d.* belonging to the said Cause of Faulconberg and Faulconberg in Bank Notes, or money in his Chest at the Bank of England, and also should replace the said Sum of 2000*l.* South Sea Annuity Stock, or that he should enter into a Recognizance of 26000*l.* with two sufficient Sureties to be approved of by one of the Lords Commissioners for the Custody of the Great Seal of Great Britain, for answering the said Sums, and replacing the said 2000*l.* South Sea Annuity Stock, in such such Manner as this Court should direct: And this Court being Yesterday informed by Mr. Attorney General, on behalf of the Suitors of this Court, that the said Mr. Conway had not deposited either of the Sums aforesaid, or entered into a Recognizance with two Sureties, as by the said Order he was directed: It was thereupon ordered that he should on this Day attend the Court, to shew Cause why he did not yield Obedience to the said Order. And he now attending accordingly, and admitting that he had not deposited either of the Sums aforesaid, nor replaced the said 2000 l. South-Sea Annuity Stock, or given Security with two Sureties, as by the said Order is required: And whereas he did formerly upon Examination of his Accompts, produce to the Persons who inspected the same, bank bills, and notes, sufficient to make good the said Sum of 13039 l. 4 s. and 4 d. $\frac{1}{2}$: being the whole ballance of his Cash Accompts, but had only deposited 3000 l. part thereof in pursuance of the said Order: And it being several times demanded by the Court, whether he did know or remember the Names of the person or persons from whom he had the said bank notes, or any of them, or did know or remember the Names of the person or persons to whom he had since paid or delivered them, or any of them, he declined giving any direct Answer to the said question relating to his own proper knowledge and remembrance, but upon Oath said, it was impossible for him to answer the same; whereupon, and upon hearing of Mr. Attorney General and Mr. Sol. Gen. on behalf of the Suitors; and what was farther insisted on, this Court doth declare, that the said Mr. Conway is guilty of very high Contempts, and doth therefore do for his said Contempts, stand committed to the prison of the Fleet; and that for making provision for the Execution of his Office, and that no prejudice may happen to the Suitors of the Court by reason of the said Commitment, he do in the Custody of the Warden this Afternoon, deliver all his books and papers belonging to his Office, unto Mr. Holford one other of the Masters of this Court, who is to act therein as he the said Mr. Conway ought to have done during his Commitment; and the Clerk of Mr. Conway is to be at liberty, if he thinks fit, to attend Mr. Holford therein, and Mr. Conway is at liberty from time to time to make such Proposals to the Court for making good his Deficiency as he shall think proper.

R. P. Examined the 6th of May, 1725. by the Book of Entries. Cur' Canc' Letter B.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Managers for the House of Commons lay before your Lordships these Orders, to shew, that the several Masters therein mentioned, were deficient. It will be incumbent on the noble Lord to shew; that when they were admitted, they were of Ability proper for such a Trust. We now proceed upon the Declaration that was made on the 21st of January last was twelve-month, and desire that Mr. Waller may be called.

VOL. VI.

Mr. Waller Sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, we desire he may be ask'd, whether he applied to my Lord Chancellor upon an Order made by his Honour the Master of the Rolls, relating to Mr. Conway; and what it was my Lord Chancellor said on that Occasion?

Mr. Waller. In July 1723. I had Directions from my Client, to apply to Mr. Conway, to lay out upon South-Sea Annuities the Sum of 4000 l. that had been brought before him in a Cause between Mr. Davenant and my Lord Cardigan. The Master told me at first, he would take Care of it. Upon further Application, he said the Order had directed another Sum of Money should be brought before him in the same Cause, and that he could not put out the one without the other. Upon this, I applied, by Petition, to the Master of the Rolls, praying, that Mr. Conway might be oblig'd to put out the Money, and that he might answer Interest for it after he had had it a reasonable Time in his Hands. Upon that, the Master of the Rolls directed he should lay out the Money immediately.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I beg your Lordships Pardon for interrupting this Witness. In the manner he is going on, your Lordships observe, he is taking Notice of Orders, Petitions, Acts of the Court, and this he gives upon his Memory. We think these ought to be produced.—

Mr. Sol. Gen. If they are desirous to entertain your Lordships with them, we have them all here. We only make use of them to let in the Declaration of the noble Lord.

E. of Maccles. If that be all the Use, there is no need to produce these Orders: But if they are to introduce Evidence with relation to the Merits of the Cause, it is proper to have them produced.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We don't dispute the Justice of the Order then made, but ask the Occasion of it; and all we desire is what was declared, and what was the Occasion of the Declaration.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. The Managers don't enter into the Consideration whether the Order is just, or no. All they represent to your Lordships, is the Occasion of this Declaration. Whether a Man acts justly, that detains Money, and does not pay it out when he ought to do it, that we leave to another Determination. But what we ask now, is the Declaration of the Earl of Macclesfield, and the Occasion of it.

Mr. Waller. Upon the Petition to the Master of the Rolls, he made an Order to put the Money out, and that the Master should pay some Interest. On this, he applied to my Lord Chancellor, to discharge this Order. My Lord, upon that Occasion, said, the Master was not to blame, and that the then Masters were a Set of Masters of as great probity, ability, and fortune, as ever had been before; and that his Lordship had had the Satisfaction of having put in most of them himself. I can't say that these were the very Words, but it was to this Effect.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When, at what Time was this?

Mr. Waller. This Declaration was made the 21st of January, 1723.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was it?

Mr. Waller. In Court, at my Lord's House in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, where he usually sat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there at that time any Vacancy of any Master's Office; and how long did that Vacancy happen before?

Mr. Waller. Mr. Fellowes died either the Day before, or the Day but one before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any Observations made at that Time of any Person in Court that took notice of what was said?

Mr. Waller. One of the Counsel took Notice of somebody taking Notes, and said he believed it would be in the Amsterdam Gazette in a short Time; or to that Purpose. My Lord Chancellor ask'd who he was?

E. of Macclesf. I desire he may tell your Lordships, when Application was made to me by way of Complaint of it, what it was I said at that Time?

Mr. Waller. I don't remember.

E. of Macclesf. Pray recollect your self, if I did not say it was right, and they had a Right to take Notes there.

Mr. Waller. I don't remember that you did.

E. of Macclesf. Did I make no Answer?

Mr. Waller. Not as I remember.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be ask'd, whether he kept any Notes or Memorandum of the Words that were then said?

Mr. Waller. No, my Lords.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. How does he then come to remember the very Words?

Mr. Waller. Since my Lord Macclesfield's Counsel will have it, I must acquaint your Lordships, that it struck me with so much Astonishment to hear such a Declaration made on the Masters, which most People thought they did not deserve, that indeed I could not but remember it, and have remembred it ever since.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We have several other Persons who were present at this Time, when this Declaration was made; but we apprehend it was so publick, so notorious, and has been so distinctly proved by a Person present, that it will be unnecessary to call further Evidence to it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We beg leave to trouble your Lordships as to one Circumstance, to ascertain the Death of Mr. Fellowes: We have one of Mr. Fellowes's Servants here.

Edward Ange sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We desire he may be ask'd, whether he was a Servant to Mr. Fellowes?

Mr. Ange. I was a Clerk in Mr. Fellowes's Office, at the Time of his Death, and many Years before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When did he die, what Day?

Mr. Ange. Upon the 19th of January, 1723.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It was the 21st that the Declaration was made, so that it seems that it was necessary; and such a Declaration was wanting at that Time to keep up the price of the Office.

Mr. Lightboun called.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We desire Mr. Lightboun may be ask'd, whether he gave any Intimation to the Earl of Macclesfield, that the Circumstances of some of the Masters were suspicious, before the 21st of January was twelve-month?

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire Mr. Lightboun would give your Lordships an Account what Discourse he had concerning the Masters with the Earl of Macclesfield.

Mr. Lightboun. I can't say I acquainted him with my suspecting any of the Masters by Name, being deficient, but I told him in Conversation, that as a Deficiency had happened in Mr. Dormer's Office, the like Accident might happen in others; and that it might be proper for his Lordship to take some measures to prevent the like for the future, if possible.

Mr. Lutwyche. In the Year 1723. Whether had you any Discourse with my Lord Chancellor relating to the Circumstances of any of the Masters, or about any Proposals of Security to be given by them?

Mr. Lightboun. In the Year 1723. I had some Conversation with my Lord upon that Subject, and it was upon the Occasion of my Lord's sending for me to know why I had not complied with a Proposal of the Masters, to pay 500*l.* towards making good Mr. Dormer's Deficiency. I ask'd, whether it was his Lordship's Proposal, or whether it was a Proposal from some of the Masters. My Lord said, it was mention'd by the Masters, and he approved of it; and as the rest had complied, he hoped I would.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You need not now give a particular Account of this; this will be proper on another Occasion; that I desire to ask you now, is only in general, whether before the 21st of January 1723. you had any Conversation with my Lord about the Deficiency of the Masters, and that there was Reason to suspect a Deficiency in some of the Masters?

Mr. Lightboun. I did not mention any particular Person, but only that an Accident had lately happen'd, and as it had happen'd, it might happen again; but I was far from mentioning any Master by Name, for I might thereby have made my self liable to an Action.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We don't desire to ask him whether he mention'd any particular Master, but only in general, whether he did not say he had Grounds to suspect some of them? The Question is in general.

Mr. Com. Serj. The Question was first ask'd in general, but the Answer not coming out to their Satisfaction, they now apply it to a particular Fact, to which the Answer required is only Yea and No. This we apprehend not to be altogether so regular, we therefore desire the Question may be ask'd in other Terms.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, I will ask the Question in general, whether he gave any Intimation in general, that there might be a Suspicion of the Masters?

Mr. Lightboun. I did in general acquaint my Lord, as this Accident had happen'd, I did not know how soon it might happen again. The Year 1720. had made great Havock, and I did not know what Effect it might have had amongst us.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire Mr. Lightboun may be ask'd, whether he can recollect that he had any Discourse with my Lord Macclesfield to that Effect at any other Time before January 1723.

Mr. Lightboun. My Lords, I can't confine my self to a particular Time. I have had the Honour of many Conversations with my Lord Macclesfield on this Subject, and what passed at one particular Time

Time more than another, I can't remember I have often had the Honour to hear his Lordship mentioning the Methods which he thought of, to prevent it, and to propose such Methods as I thought of, but I can't tell all the particular Times.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be ask'd, whether from the Conversation which pass'd between the Earl of Macclesfield and himself, it appear'd to him, that the Earl had any Suspicion of a Want of Substance in the Masters?

Mr. Lightboun. My Lord, when I mention'd it, seem'd unwilling to think so. He said he hop'd not; he hop'd there was no manner of Danger, they were all recommended to him for Men of Fortunes, or to that Effect. Latterly, this last Year, when my Lord was talking of this Matter, he seem'd to think there was a Necessity that there should be an enquiry into this Affair: and when the Masters were ordered to bring in their own Accompts, I remember I told my Lord I question'd if they were able to do it. My Lord said he hop'd it, and wish'd it.

E. of Abington. If Mr. Lightboun be left to his own Discretion, to relate without Interruption whatever he can recollect that pass'd between him and Lord Macclesfield before January 1723. when this Declaration was made in Court, it may give your Lordships a fuller Light and Satisfaction.

Mr. Lightboun. I don't remember to have had any particular Conversation about the Abilities of the Masters, farther than I have mentioned to your Lordships. I have told you that I did give some Hints in a doubtful Manner, that I was dissatisfied; but it would very ill have become me to have mentioned particular People whom I was doubtful of.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we proceed now to examine some Witnesses upon the Article relating to the Masters coming in, and in what manner the Money was paid upon their Admission, either on a Surrender, or Death of a former Master; and out of what Fund that Money was paid. We beg leave to call Mr. Kynaston.

Mr. Kynaston called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We beg leave he may be ask'd, in relation to his Treaty with Mr. Rogers, when he came into his Office? and in what Manner the Money paid for the Office was rais'd?

Mr. Kynaston. It was in May 1721.

Mr. Com. Serj. Before Mr. Kynaston answers to this, we hope the Managers shall intimate to your Lordships, that they have Evidence to apply this to the Lord who now stands accused; otherwise a bare Discourse between Mr. Rogers and Mr. Kynaston, cannot affect the Earl of Macclesfield.

Mr. Lutwyche. I apprehend this Interruption is very unnecessary: It is the first part of the Article we are going to prove, that it was a Practice among the Masters in Chancery, to pay the Money for their Places out of the Suitors Money; and that though the Chancellor had good reason to suspect or know this, yet he applied no Remedy or Redress, but let it go on for his own Benefit: Therefore we must begin with the first part of the Article. They are not to examine and ask the Managers, whether they have any Proof of the latter part of the Article; we are beginning with the first part of the Article, and then shall bring it home to the noble Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We shall prove the whole, that there was such a Practice, and that it is reasonable to think the noble Lord knew it, or had reason to suspect it, and did not prevent it. We must first begin with the Practice.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire he may give your Lordships an Account of the Methods taken at the time he came into the Office, of selling and paying for those Offices, and in what Manner the Agreement for his Office was transacted?

Mr. Kynaston. My Lords, I treated with Mr. Rogers for the Sale of his Place in May, 1721. I did understand then, and had heard before, that the Method was, that they retained so much of the Money belonging to the Office for their places, and that such had been the practice. I did agree with him, and entered into Articles to pay him 6000*l.* for his Place. I went for some time into the Country, and when I was there, he wrote to me, and told me that he designed to resign the place on the 9th of August. I did come up to Town, and on the 9th of August I gave him a Bond for 6000*l.* Then I went with him to my Lord Macclesfield, and was sworn in Master. There was a general Order for him to deliver over the Effects and Securities to me; after this he delivered up the Bond which I had given him, and retain'd so much Money belonging to the Suitors of the Court, as amounted to 6000*l.* He paid me nine Pounds, and delivered me up my Bond, and I gave him a Receipt for 6009*l.*

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire to know what was paid for his Admission?

Mr. Kynaston. 1500 Guineas were paid to Mr. Cottingham by Mr. Baily.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. How was it repaid?

Mr. Kynaston. In February afterwards, I stated an Account with the Person that was my Cash-Keeper and kept my Money, in relation to the Money receiv'd and paid, and he charg'd me with the 1575*l.* and deducted it out of the Money of the Suitors which he had received.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, how much Cash, what Sum of Money, came to his Hands from Mr. Rogers?

Mr. Kynaston. Something above 20000*l.*

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether when these Effects were by the Order of Transfer delivered from Mr. Rogers to him, there was any Person present on behalf of my Lord Macclesfield, to see them delivered over?

Mr. Kynaston. No.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was there any Account demanded of him afterwards, either by my lord Chancellor or his Agent, of the Quantum of the Effects or Cash?

Mr. Kynaston. I don't remember there ever was.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I beg leave to ask, whether at that Time he had Money enough of his own to pay Mr. Rogers 6000*l.* for his Place, and 1500 Guineas to my Lord Macclesfield for his Admission?

Mr. Kynaston. Yes, I believe I had more Money at that time, but it was out upon Security; I was worth more.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What was his Inducement to come into this Office?

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Or, I would ask it in other Words, whether the easiness of his paying for his Place was not one Thing that induc'd him to Purchase?

Mr. Kynaston. Yes, I believe it was one Inducement to me to purchase the Place.

Sir Wm. Strickland. I beg leave to ask another Question. Mr. Kynaston says he had more Money of his own at that Time, but I desire to know whether he could have paid 7575 l. which he gave for his Office, unless he had paid it out of the Suitors Money?

Mr. Kynaston. No, I could not have paid the whole.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. If the Gentlemen have done, I desire he may be asked, what Money he had of his own at that Time, either in Cash, or in his Banker's Hands; or in Security?

Mr. Kynaston. I really cannot tell, I believe I might have between 2 and 3000 l.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. How much can you take upon you to say you had?

Mr. Kynaston. Really I cannot tell.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Speak to the nearest you can.

Mr. Kynaston. I believe I had about 2000 l. very near three in Money and Effects.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. What other Estate had you? Had you any real Estate?

Mr. Kynaston. I had an Estate settled upon me at my Marriage, no other Estate.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire you to give an Account, whether you had any other personal Estate?

Mr. Kynaston. No. I do not remember I had; except you reckon Timber such.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire my Lords, he may be asked, what the annual value of his real Estate was?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I submit, whether he be obliged to tell his whole Circumstances?

Mr. Kynaston. I am very willing to tell, it was about 400 l. a Year.

Mr. Com. Serj. Whether he had not his Estate without Impeachment of Waste?

Mr. Kynaston. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Of what Value might the Timber be?

Mr. Kynaston. I was once bid 2500 l. for it, but now they know I have an Occasion to sell, they will not give me so much.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I beg leave he may be asked, whether at that Time his Father was living?

Mr. Kynaston. Yes, he was at the Time of my purchasing the Place.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. As the Cash was above 20000 l. of what Value were the Securities?

Mr. Kynaston. Really I cannot tell, I have given in an Account of the Effects.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. About what Sum?

Mr. Kynaston. I have given it in my Accounts what it was.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. To what Sum doth the whole both in Cash and Securities amount?

Mr. Kynaston. I believe under 50,000 l. about 46000 l.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. The Securities as well as the Cash?

Mr. Kynaston. I mean the Securities and the Cash together.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Upon this evidence, we submit it to your Lordships, whether the Timber upon his Estate was a proper Security for 50,000 l. to be put into his Hands.

E. of Maccles. He now represents his Estate to be 400 l. a Year. How was it reputed?

Mr. Kynaston. I believe about 500 l. per Annum.

Mr. Plummer. I desire to ask him, whether if he had felled every stick of Timber on his Estate, that and his personal Estate would have paid what he was to give for his Master's Place?

Mr. Kynaston. No, it would not.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, We make Use of this as a Proof of the former Article.

Mr. Thomas Bennet called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, We desire he may be asked in what manner the Transfer of his Office was transacted, and how the money was paid for his Master's Place?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. My Lords, when I treated with Mr. Hiccocks about the Surrender of his Office, one of the first Things he told me was, that I need raise no money to come into this Office, for whatever money we agreed for, should be deducted out of the money to be paid over to me, which I understood to be the money belonging to the Suitors of the Court.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What was done in pursuance of this?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. This encouraged me to go on and proceed, in order to come into this Office, I supposed this to be the Practice, else I had not gone in.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether was that generally reputed to be the Practice?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I own I thought so. I was a younger Brother, and had not money enough of my own to come into that Office.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We beg leave that he may inform your Lordships how much he was to pay, and how it was raised and paid?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. The Sum I agreed to pay Mr. Hiccocks was 1500 l. and the Sum to my Lord Chancellor was 1500 Guineas, which is 9075 l.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We hope that he shall inform your Lordships how it was raised and paid.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. As to the 1500 Guineas, I acquainted your Lordships I borrowed it of my Brother, and the next Day returned it him again out of the money I received of Mr. Hiccocks. As soon as I was admitted, I went to Mr. Hiccocks, and demanded of him the Suitors effects. He paid me 1500 l. and told me I must give a Receipt for 9000 l. I told him, it was hard to have no more money paid me, when he told me there was much more Cash in the Office, and that I had given my Lord Macclesfield more than he had offered to pay me: He said he should pay me more afterwards, but he insisted on my taking this now, so I took the 1500 l. and gave him a Receipt for 9000 l.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether upon any Occasion he had any Discourse with the Earl of Macclesfield relating to the method of his coming in, or about the re-payment of the 1500 Guineas he paid him.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. In order to give an account of this, I must acquaint your Lordships of the Occasion of my waiting on his Lordship. Mr. Holford told me, that my lord Chancellor had sent to him, and desired that he and my Brother John Bennet would endeavour to accommodate matters between Mr. Hiccocks and my self, on Occasion of the Deficiency of my Accounts. Mr. Holford said he did not care to go, but my Brother did go to Mr. Hiccocks. He would do nothing, no Accommodation could be made; but my Brother told me that my lord Chancellor would pay back to me the 1500 Guineas which he had received, so the matter with Mr. Hiccocks might be accommodated.

Mr. Serj.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When was this?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. It was about the time of our giving in our Accompts.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was it before Christmas, or after?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. It was before Christmas last, in December. I think about the 7th of December. Upon that I asked my Brother, whether I might depend upon it, that my Lord Chancellor would pay back the 1500 Guineas? And he said, Yes, he had it from his Lordship; and he did assure me I might depend upon it; but he said nothing could be done with Mr. Hiccocks. Then I desired them to acquaint my Lord with it; they both declined it, and desired I would go my self upon this Occasion. I went, and I told my lord, I was come to wait upon his Lordship to thank him for the kind Offer he had made to my Brother, of returning the 1500 Guineas, and I wished the same could be said of Mr. Hiccocks, and I could prevail with him; but nothing could be done: I came to return his Lordship thanks; and I thought I should have received the Money then. My Lord asked me to sit down, and then told me if he had known I had been to give so great a Sum of Money for the Office, he would not have admitted me. I told him I did give so great a Sum, but immediately as soon as I was admitted, I ensured my Life to the Value of 8000*l.* which cost me 400*l.* so that if I had died, no harm would have come to the Suitors. My Lord said, it was very honourably done. Soon after that, he said, he was very sorry to see the Items that were put into my Accompt and Mr. Kynaston's in relation to Sums in the Hands of an honourable Person; for, says he, that hath discovered the Method of purchasing these Offices, that the Money is deducted out of the Suitors Money, which, said he, I have always taken pains to deny, when ever I have been asked the Question.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We beg leave now to ask him, how much the whole of the Cash, and Securities transferred from Mr. Hiccocks to him, amounted to?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I believe near 100,000*l.*

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I apprehend he said before, he was a younger Brother, and had but little Fortune of his own; I desire he may be asked whether any Care was taken by my Lord Macclesfield as to the transferring the Effects of the Suitors in Mr. Hiccocks's Hands over to him? and whether any Person was employed by my Lord to see the Effects transferred over?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. No.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether there was any other Security for this great Sum of Money deposited in his Hands, besides what was made by this Insurance on his Life?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. No, my Lords, I know of no other Security. That was a voluntary Act of my own, and I paid for it.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, Mr. Bennet says, he had some reason to hope that the 1500 Guineas would be given him back again; I desire he may be asked whether there was any subsequent Overture about paying the 1500 Guineas back again?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. My Lord Chancellor dismissed me at that time, and told me, I should not know by what means, or by what methods I should receive the Money, or by whose Hands; but his Lordship would take Care that one way or other I should receive it: He would not say how, because I might be called upon to answer what Discourse passed between his Lordship and me in another place.

Mr. Lutwyche. Was there any thing done upon that?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Hearing nothing from my Lord Chancellor for a Fortnight after, I went to his Secretary, Mr. Dixon, and told him that I had used such Expressions in my Accompt, that if the Money was not produced, it would oblige me to name my Lord Chancellor; and I desired him to acquaint my Lord that I could not pay this Money, and that I must discover it in a Day or two. This was Sunday Night: The same Night Mr. Dixon return'd from my Lord, and told me, that if Mr. Holford would be present the next morning at the payment of the Money at Mr. Kynaston's Chambers, that Mr. Kynaston and my self should receive it. We were there the next day. Mr. Dixon came, but brought no Money, said my Lord expected some Indemnification. We said, as to an Indemnification we could give none. He said he would go to my Lord. I was in hopes he would have brought the Money; but when he came back, he said it was an Holiday, and no Money could be had, and desired we would go to the Judges, and desire two or three days time to produce this Money. I told him we could not do it, for that very Night the Report was to be laid before the King and Council. He then returned again to my Lord Chancellor, as he told us, and when he came back, he said my Lord Chancellor was gone out. Upon that we gave in my Lord Chancellor's Name to the Judges, and the Gentlemen of the Bank, and they gave it in to the Council, as I am informed.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords we desire he may answer this Question, whether it was explained what that Indemnification was, which was expected, and in what manner it was to be?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. My Lords, Mr. Dixon explained it thus, —

E. of Macclesfield. I hope whatever Mr. Dixon said, shall not affect me; but that they will produce him: He is able to speak for himself.

Mr. Lutwyche. Then I only desire he may be asked what Officer Mr. Dixon was under my Lord Chancellor?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Mr. Dixon was my Lord's Secretary.

Mr. Lutwyche. Whether at that time that you had the Discourse with my Lord Macclesfield, you mentioned or said any thing of Mr. Dixon's having come to you, in my Lord Macclesfield's name?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. No my Lords, that was before Mr. Dixon's coming to me.

Mr. Lutwyche. Did you take Notice at any time to my Lord Macclesfield of Mr. Dixon's coming to you?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. No, I never spoke to my Lord Chancellor afterwards. This was the 27th of December, and it was the 7th of December that I waited upon my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We think it appears that Mr. Dixon was an Agent of my Lord Macclesfield's: I desire to know what the Nature of the Proposal of Indemnification was, that he made?

E. of Macclesfield. I can't think Mr. Serjeant is in earnest. Have they proved that he was employed ployed by me? I have heard no proof of it, only Mr. Serjeant hath said it. Mr. Dixon himself is the proper person to give an Account of what he told them from me. If they do insist upon it, I must beg your lordships Judgment.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. If it is insisted upon by the Noble lord, to disavow the proceedings of his own Agent, we will wave it.

E. of Macclesfield. I neither avow nor disavow, but I object to the Evidence of this Gentleman about the Discourse of what Mr. Dixon said, who is living, and can speak for himself.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. If the noble lord will ask him any thing, he may, we have done.

E. of Macclesfield. I beg leave that Mr. Bennet may be asked two or three Questions: He has indeed given Evidence which greatly surprizes me. In the first place I desire he may inform your lordships, whether, when he was with me, he did not tell me that if Mr. Hiccocks would pay 2000 l. he would make good the whole Money?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. No, I did not say so; I could not make good the whole Money, or any thing like it. I said that such a Report had been spread, that I proposed, that if Mr. Hiccocks would pay me 2000 l. I would answer the rest; but I was not able.

E. of Macclesfield. I would be glad to know how he came to tell me of a Report of his own Act: Was it a Report without any Foundation?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I went to Mr. Hiccocks, and told him I wanted 6000 l. but he said if 2000 l. would do, he believ'd he could lend me that. Lend it me, said I; if you give me 2000 l. it is something. And this was the Foundation of this Report.

E. of Macclesfield. I cannot give Evidence myself to disprove him in this; and therefore I desire to know whether he has said to any other Persons, that if Mr. Hiccocks would pay him two thousand, or three thousand Pounds, or thereabouts, he would pay the rest?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I might say, I would endeavour to raise the rest; but I never said I would pay the whole, for I knew I was not able.

E. of Macclesfield. Mr. Bennet understands my Question, to which he hath given no Answer. My Question is, Whether he hath not told some other People, that in Case Mr. Hiccocks would pay 2 or 3000 l. he would pay all the rest?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. No, my Lords, I never told any Body that I would pay the rest; but I believe I might say, if Mr. Hiccocks would give me 2 or 3000 l. I would stand the Hazard; for I did not expect that all the Money should be taken out of my Hand.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire he may be asked, whether at that time he was with me, I did not ask him, with what Conscience and Honesty he could buy a Place, when he had not Money to pay for it? or whether it was not in answer to that, that he told me that he had insured his life?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. My Lord did say so to me. I answered, I had not Money; that I had not bought the Place, had it not been for the Cash of the Suitors; and that I had since insured 8000 l. on my life, in order to secure the Suitors.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know what visible Estate the Gentleman then had, and of what yearly Value?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. My Lords, when I came into the Office, I believe I had about 250 l. a Year, or thereabouts.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know whether he was married before?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I was.

E. of Macclesfield. What Fortune had you with your Wife?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. The Fortune I had with my Wife, was in the Whole between 2 and 3000 l. part of it was an House.

E. of Macclesfield. What was the Value of that House?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I had not let it then, but since my coming into the Office I have let it for 90 l. a Year.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know if he did not keep his Coach and Equipage at that time?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I did set up my Coach in the unfortunate Year 1720. I was once worth 20,000 Pounds, but lost it all, and became much indebted; the Estate I had of my own was mortgaged for more than it was worth.

E. of Macclesfield. Whether he was married in the Year, 1720?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. No, I was not.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know what Estate he hath given into the Court of Chancery?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. That Account lies upon the Table.

E. of Macclesfield. What yearly Value is that?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. About 900 l. per Annum; part of it is settled, the rest mortgaged, and an Annuity charged on it more than it is worth.

E. of Macclesfield. Has any Estate been purchased with your Money, or Money which came from you, since you was a Master?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Part of that given in was so, 68 l. per Annum, and 40 l. per Annum.

E. of Macclesfield. Has any other Estate been purchased with your Money, or Money which came from you, since you was a Master?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. None, but what I have given in. I have given in every Shilling.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, whether he was not at the Time of his becoming Master in Chancery, in Possession of the Office of Clerk of the Custodies?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Yes, I was.

Mr. Com. Serj. Now, my Lords, it will be very proper to ask him what that was sold for, that the Value of his Estate may be known.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. That may affect me and my Successor.

Mr. Lutwyche. I don't know whether we need put you in mind, that the late Act of Parliament only indemnifies the Masters, but there is none to indemnify the Clerk of the Custodies.

Mr. Com. Serj. Which way it will affect Mr. Bennet I don't know. I apprehend no Action can lie against him for the Money he received, nor any criminal Prosecution or Information. But that I may not mispend your Lordships Time; I desire Mr. Bennet may inform your Lordships of the yearly Value of the Place.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. It is about 250 l. a Year.

E. of Macclesfield. A Patent for Life?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Yes, my Lords.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. How much hath it been sold for?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I can't tell what it hath been sold for: It may have been once sold for about 1200 l.

Mr. Serj.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. At that time when you surrendered, what might it have been sold for?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I beg leave to submit, whether I am obliged to answer that Question.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. If it was not saleable by Law, it was not worth a Farthing. I beg leave to put your Lordships in mind, that Mr. Bennet was excused Yesterday from answering a Question of the same Nature: The Counsel hope that this Day, being a new Day, they may have Liberty to ask the same question over again.

Mr. Com. Serj. There was another Ingredient in your Lordships Resolution Yesterday. I hope it is no Injury to him to answer how much he hath known it to be sold for; without mentioning by whom.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We hope Mr. Bennet will answer the question, what is the most he hath known it to be sold for?

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, I object to his answering that question, because if he did sell it himself, that might be the greatest Sum that he hath known to be given for it, and that will subject him to a Penalty.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We don't ask who gave it, or who received it: but what is the greatest Price he hath known that Office to be sold for?

E. of Macclesfield. He says he hath known it to be sold for 1200 l. I desire he may be asked whether he hath not known that it hath been sold for more?

Mr. Thomas Bennet. I believe it hath been sold for more.

E. of Macclesfield. And how much more?

Mr. West. This question is an indirect way to come at that question that was denied them Yesterday.

Sir Will. Strickland. My Lords, with humble Submission, the question asked by the Noble Lord, tends directly to make Mr. Bennet tell what he sold his own Office for; for if his own Office was sold, it is probable that he sold it for the greatest price; and to tell that, is to make him say what he sold his own Office for.

Mr. Lutwyche. By this method your Lordships Resolution of Yesterday will be evaded. We took it then, that the Witness was not obliged to discover what he sold the Office for. Now they are asking what is the greatest price he knew the Office sold for? Then the next question may be, to whom was the Office sold, and by whom was it sold? Therefore we must humbly submit it to your Lordships, that it is not a question to be asked.

Mr. Com. Serj. To object to a question because another may follow, is odd arguing. When such a question is made, it will be then time enough to oppose it: Therefore I hope that we shall go on.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I apprehend this question is proper, and the Answer to it is necessary.

Lord Lechmere. Your Lordships will observe some Rules in your proceedings. An Objection hath been made: An Answer hath been given: both Sides insist upon your Lordship's Judgment: that being done, they must withdraw. Therefore I desire they may withdraw.

E. of Macclesfield. The Reply is not yet made; something has been said by the Gentlemen who are managers by way of Objection to the question that was proposed, which, if they insist upon, I desire my Counsel who are to reply, may be heard before they withdraw.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. The managers for the House of Commons have been pleased to examine into the Circumstances of Mr. Bennet, at the time he was admitted Master, in order to shew that he was then not of Substance fit to be intrusted with so great a Sum of money. We are then in Duty obliged to examine him as to that substance, and the value of his Effects. He hath told your Lordships what Estate he hath in land; we are now to examine him as to his personal estate: He hath told us he had an Office, the Clerk of the Custodies; that he hath parted with it; the money arising by that Office must be reckoned as part of his personal Estate. To come at the Value of the Office, we do not ask him any question that makes him liable to a penalty; but such a question, where the answer to it may be given with safety; and that is, what is the greatest sum he hath known to have been given for the Office of the Clerk of the Custodies? He may answer this without involving himself in any Difficulties, for it is not asked what he himself hath sold that Office for? No answer to this general question can affect him with any ill Consequence.

Dr. Sayer. I humbly apprehend this is no way irregular. We are inquiring about his Effects; it is owned he had the Office of Clerk of the Custodies, therefore that must be a part of his personal Estate: The answer to our question can't any way involve him in Danger, or subject him to any Penalty; because it doth not necessarily follow that he sold his place at the greatest price that he ever knew it sold for. We submit it, whether it is not a question fair with regard to the Witness, and proper to be put to him.

Mr. Robins. We agree that where he may subject himself to a loss, there is no forcing him to answer; no person is bound to accuse himself. But this is only a matter of discovery what the Value of this Office is; the answer cannot affect him; and therefore we hope we shall have an answer.

Mr. Strange. My Lords, I am surprized to hear it said that this is not a question material for the Noble Earl's defence: Surely it is as material for us to increase his estate, as it is for them to diminish it. They have already examined into particulars, to shew what small substance he was of, and what the Estate he had was mortgaged for: the proper answer to be given to that, as far as it will go, will be to shew that he had other Estate and effects, and we are not able to shew that without examining him. I humbly submit it therefore that we are as proper to go into that Evidence, as they were; it is equally material; and as they have examined to it on behalf of the Commons, we are intitled to examine to it likewise on behalf of the Noble Earl.

E. of Macclesfield. I apprehend the Objection is, That he is not to be asked a question, which if he answers he will charge himself with a Crime or penalty. Whatever answer he makes to this question cannot charge him: Let him answer and say that he hath known this place sold for 1000, 1500, or 2000 l. can that be given in Evidence so as to affect him? Therefore the Question to Day is not the same as was asked yesterday: It was then asked, what he had received for his place? and if he had had answered and said what he had received, it would have been a Confession, which would have convicted him: But if the Answer be, That he knows it was sold for such a price, and that is given in Evidence, by that answer it doth not appear that he sold it: Therefore upon that I humbly submit to your Lordships, and we are ready to withdraw.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. This is by a Side-wind to know your Lordships Opinion upon the 9th Article.

E. of Macclesfield. I beg leave to interrupt that worthy Gentleman. I agree that the Commons that bring in the Charge, have a right to reply; but with Submission this is an Objection arising from my Counsel, and the reply belongs to them.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we apprehend the Objection arises from the managers, and therefore the Reply belongs to them. The managers made the Objection, therefore we beg leave to observe, that this is in Consequence to desire your Lordships Judgment upon the 9th Article, Whether the office of the Clerk of the Custodies be saleable by law, or no? If he is obliged to answer this Question, it is upon a supposition that the Transaction is lawful: Therefore in an Affair of this Nature, there can be no other View but to get an opinion upon this article. My Lords, we apprehend this proceeding is in consequence the same as if a question was proposed to your Lordships, whether my Lord Macclesfield could by law sell the Place of Clerk of the Custodies?

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I must beg leave to mention this to your Lordships. When it is considered upon what Foundation this question is asked, and what it doth mean, it can be only to elude your Lordships Resolution yesterday, and to make that of no Effect. My Lords, there should be always the greatest candour used before your Lordships, that no Tricks or Methods should be made use of to ask that which should not be asked. Now, my Lords, what is the question they are examining to, and the Use to be made of it? Here is a Person that is alledged to be of mean Ability, and the question is, What Substance and Estate he hath? and they would reckon into part of his Estate an Office not saleable by law, and ask him, what that Office is worth? From whence the Inference must be, that he sold it.

E. of Macclesfield. That is not the question, what it is worth; but a particular Fact, what is the most that it hath been sold for?

Mr. Lutwyche. What doth that tend to? The question is, What Estate this Gentleman had that could enable him to pay this money for this office? They have examined him about his own Estate, and his Wife's Estate, but then there is another part of his Estate; which was this office of Clerk of the Custodies. What is that? It is that very thing which we say it is unlawful to sell. Therefore we submit it to your Lordships as no way material to the Defence of the Earl. We hope your Lordships will not admit that to be done by an indirect method, which would not be admitted to be done by a direct one.

Ordered to withdraw. Which was accordingly done; and all parties concerned being after some time called in again,

The Lord Chief Justice King declared to them, That it was the order and judgment of the Lords, that the said question was not to be asked.

Mr. Plummer. I would ask Mr. Tho. Bennet one question, Whether every thing he had in the World at the Time of his Purchase of the Mastership, was worth the money he gave for it?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. All I had in the World was not worth it.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, Mr. Bennet says he mortgaged his Estate for more than it was worth; I desire he may be asked whether he knew at that time, that it was not worth so much as it was mortgaged for?

Lords. No, No.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, I beg leave to ask this question, and I hope it will be very proper, that is, I desire to ask Mr. Bennet, as he hath given an account of a conversation with my Lord Macclesfield; I desire to know if my lord Macclesfield, at the time of his Admission into his office, did ask him what he was worth?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. My lord Macclesfield never asked me any questions in Relation to my circumstances, or any thing like it.

E. of Macclesfield. My lords, I desire he may be asked, whether I had any notice of his losses by the South-Sea?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Not that I know of: I don't know that my lord Chancellor had any Notice of it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, if the Counsel have done, we shall not give your Lordships any farther trouble on these two Articles: Both of them are as clearly and as fully proved and substantiated as it is possible. It comes out now upon the Examination, that tho' several masters were intrusted with 40, 50, or 80,000 l: they were not of any competent Substance, not really worth what they paid for their particular places. As to the manner of their paying for their places, if we have not given a direct evidence that his Lordship knew it, yet the practice and notoriety of the Fact being proved, and that it was thus generally understood, is a reasonable evidence in itself, and by the notice the Earl took of it himself by the several questions he hath asked, we think it is yet clearer. We humbly submit whether upon this evidence every part of these two Articles is not sufficiently proved? We depend upon the Examination already taken, and will take up your Lordships time no farther.

Then the Managers and the Counsel were directed to withdraw; and the Lords adjourn'd to the next Morning at Ten a Clock in the Forenoon.

Saturday May 8th. The Third Day.

THE Lords being seated in their House, proclamation was made by the Serjeant at Arms for Silence; and another Proclamation, That all persons concerned were to take Notice, that Thomas Earl of Macclesfield now stood upon his Trial, and they might come forth in order to make good the Charge.

Lord Ch. Just. King. Gentlemen of the House of Commons, you may proceed in your Evidence.

Mr.

Mr. Gibbon. My Lords, Your Lordships having already heard what has been offered in Support of the preceding Articles, I am commanded by the Commons to assist in maintaining the 13th and 14th Articles of their Impeachment against the Earl of Macclesfield.

The Charge in these Articles is, That the Earl knowing Mr. Dormer (one of the Masters in Chancery) had disposed of great Part of the Suitors Money for his own private Advantage, by which there became and still continues a Deficiency of at least 25000*l.* and that Mr. Dormer absconded upon that Occasion; That Application was made to the Earl thereupon, who instead of taking proper Methods to compel Mr. Dormer to make Satisfaction to the Suitors (from an Apprehension that a publick Discovery of the said Deficiency might lessen the unjust Gain the Earl proposed to himself, by selling and disposing of the said Offices) did endeavour by many indirect Practices to conceal from the Suitors of the Court the true State and Condition of the said Office, and did falsely and deceitfully declare that Mr. Dormer was only gone to take the Air; that he would return in a little time, and all would be well. That Mr. Dormer having towards a Satisfaction to the Suitors of the Court, assigned to Mr. Edwards (who succeeded him in his Office of Master) a Debt of 24046*l.* 4*s.* due from Mr. Wilson (a Banker) to Mr. Dormer, to the intent the Money received on that Account should be applied as the Court of Chancery should direct, the Earl of Macclesfield, for the unlawful Purposes aforesaid, without regard to the Interest of the said Suitors, by Colour of his said Office, did in an unwarrantable, clandestine, and unusual Manner, authorize, direct and establish a precarious and trifling Composition with the said Wilson, upon his paying 1463*l.* 2*s.* 1*d.* and assigning 10,000*l.* part of a Debt of 22,060*l.* 12*s.* 5*d.* pretended to be due to the said Wilson from Edward Poulter, in Discharge of the said Debt; and to that End, on Mr. Hiccocks's Report, then one of the Masters of the said Court, without any Attendance ordered or had thereupon, and without Notice to the said Suitors, did by a private Order, not made in open Court, order Mr. Edwards to accept the said Composition in full Discharge of the said Debt; which said Poulter was a Person Insolvent, and has since absconded for Debt, and none, or very small part of the said 10,000*l.* has been, or is ever likely to be received.

Your Lordships will please to observe, that the Earl is charged with the highest Breach of Trust in relation to the Suitors of the Court of Chancery, and to have committed that Breach of Trust for the most unjustifiable End.

The Crimes, my Lords, stated in these Articles, are in themselves so heinous, they need no aggravation; and I think the noble Lord's Answer shews they are capable of no Excuse.

He is pleased to say, "That Mr. Dormer being out of Reach, his Effects unknown, except the Stock, which could not be transferred without his Concurrence, and the Earl seeing no other way open to get any thing for the Suitors, and being made believe, if a Deficiency

" should happen, the same should be made up by other Masters; did agree, that in Case Mr. Dormer would come over, and make a full Discovery of all his Effects, and assign the same for the benefit of the Suitors, the said Earl would allow him his Liberty on that Condition, and not otherwise.

The noble Lord says, No other way was open to get any thing. Sure, my Lords, the granting of a Sequestration would have been one and the speediest way to have found out and secured the Effects; but it might have been a way too open; for it must have published the Deficiency of the Office; whereas Mr. Dormer's coming home, and quietly resigning, hushed all Enquiry.

What the Earl means by being made to believe the Deficiency should be made up, I am at a Loss, my Lords, to know. Made believe! how, or by whom? It does not appear the Masters entered into any Contract to do it; and could his Lordship think any Discourse between him and the Masters (if such there was) could be a sufficient Security for the Suitors of the Court?

But suppose the Masters had contracted to supply the Deficiency, I submit to your Lordships how far that Contract would have been justifiable; for how should that Supply arise? If out of the Suitors Money in the Masters Hands, that was only supplying one Deficiency by making another; and if it was to be out of their own Estates, that likewise, by lessening the Substance of the Masters, would diminish the Security of their own Suitors; and what, my Lords, could induce the Masters to enter into such a Contract? I can imagine nothing, but to conceal the Deficiency, in order to raise a Value on their own Places upon their Resignations. I therefore submit to your Lordships, whether the Earl's Answer is not an implied Confession of an Endeavour to conceal this Deficiency, in order to keep up the Price of the Office? Your Lordships observe on what Condition the Earl says he permitted Mr. Dormer to come over. But I do not find the noble Lord alledges, that in order to gain the End proposed, Mr. Dormer was examined on Interrogatories touching the Debts due to the Suitors of the Court, or to what Estate or Effects he had to answer the same: We can shew your Lordships there was no such Examination. We shall prove, that Mr. Dormer did not give a satisfactory Account of his Balance, and with great Difficulty was prevailed on to convey his Estate for the Benefit of the Suitors: But yet, my Lords, he continued to have his Liberty. How the Earl will account for those Proceedings, I leave to your Lordships Consideration: I can see no possible Account can be given but this, that an Examination on Interrogatories touching the Debts of the Suitors, and Mr. Dormer's Answer and Confinement, must have published the Deficiency of the Office. The Earl is pleased to say, "He did not doubt but the whole Debt upon the said Fleetwood Dormer would be paid.

I presume he did not doubt but it would be, because he knew in Justice it ought to be paid; and since it is before your Lordships, I likewise do not doubt but it will be paid.

The noble Lord in his Answer is pleased to quote on some Occasions the Example of his Predecessors; I wish, for the Sake of the unhappy Suitors, and for the Honour and Justice of the Court of Chancery, he had here followed the Steps of his Predecessors in the Case of Dr. Eddisbury.

“ The noble Lord insists, He does not remember any Application made by the Masters for any Assistance of the Court, touching the Person or Effects of Mr. Dormer, but what he granted, as far as he thought tended to the Benefit of the Suitors.

We shall offer Proof to the contrary: But had that been so, was that, my Lords, sufficient? Was the Earl to wait the setting of a Prosecution on Foot, ’till Application made by the Masters? It was not probable many of them (who had bought at high Prices, and on Resignations, were to make the most of their Places) would apply for the securing the Person or Effects of Mr. Dormer, they would not willingly have had a Master imprisoned; the Discovery of a Deficiency in him would have made other Suitors apprehensive that the same might have happened to them; for every one knew how freely those Gentlemen trafficked in the fatal Year 1720. The very Notion of a Deficiency would have put the Suitors on an Inquiry, and upon calling the Money out of the Masters Hands. Could then the Earl expect they would interest themselves much in an Examination of this Kind? But was it less his Duty to enquire and give all necessary Orders, and take all proper Precautions for the Suitors Safety, because the Masters neglected it? No, certainly, unless for the Reason assigned in the Article.

The Earl says, “ He did never endeavour to conceal the true State and Condition of the Office from the Suitors, nor did any of them, until very lately, apply to him to look into the same.

He well knew, that many of them called for their Money, and were ordered their whole Demands, while Mr. Edwards had wherewithal to pay; but those unhappy Suitors, who did not know of the Deficiency and, from such Orders for the whole Money, might well be persuaded there was no Deficiency, and consequently did not complain, have now, I fear, a melancholy Case. And with what Grace the Earl can insist, that no Suitors ever did, or at least till very lately, complain, I leave to your Lordships Consideration.

The Earl is pleased to say, “ He remembers nothing of his using the Expression charged in the Article, either before or after he knew of Mr. Dormer’s absconding.

I believe the noble Lord, on a little Recollection, will easier call to Mind what he said on this Occasion, than be able to give a justifiable Reason for it.

He is pleas’d to say in his Answer to the 14th Article, “ He quitted all the Advantage of the Disposal of Mr. Dormer’s Office.

The Gentlemen, who have spoke before me, have, I hope, sufficiently made it appear to your Lordships, that there could be no such legal or just Advantage. Where then is the Generosity? A Sum of Money, which he ought not to have taken, is given up towards answering the Debt of the Court, for which I take it his Lordship himself is answerable.

He is pleased to say, “ That after Mr. Dormer’s assigning Mr. Wilson’s Debt to Mr. Edwards, the Earl believes Mr. Edwards, used great endeavours to obtain Payment and Satisfaction of the said Debt from Mr. Wilson; but finding all Endeavours fruitless, and that Mr. Wilson had stopped Payment, and was in no Condition of paying his Creditors the whole of their Debts, but had offered to come to a Composition, and to pay them in Proportion the utmost he was able, Mr. Edwards thereupon petitioned his Lordship.

What those great endeavours were, I am, my Lords, at a Loss to know; for I can’t find there was any Commission of Bankruptcy taken out against Wilson (though that was advised and pressed as a safe and necessary Method) no Suit in the Court of Chancery, or in any other Court commenced against him, to get in this Debt, or that he was so much as served with any Process about it. How then the Earl can say, that all Endeavours were found fruitless, I leave to your Lordships Consideration.

He is pleased to say, “ Mr. Hiccocks reported, ’twas his Opinion the accepting the said Composition would be for the Benefit of the Persons entitled to receive the same.

My Lords, It does not appear Mr. Hiccocks had looked much into Wilson’s Circumstances, had examined the Particulars of his Books on Oath, had called the Creditors before him to enquire into the Justice of their Debts, or to know the Amount; but yet took upon him to apportion Part of Poulter’s Debt, as a Composition for the Suitors of the Court, though it will appear that Wilson paid several of his Creditors afterwards their full Demands.

Strange Proceeding sure in an Affair of this Nature! for which I will not pretend to Account. But, my Lords, I cannot but observe that the two Masters, who were employed to take Care on this important Occasion, for the innocent unhappy Suitors, were very soon (pending the Affair) allowed to sell their Places at exorbitant Prices. Mr. Rogers, August 1721. for 6,000*l.* and Mr. Hiccocks, June 1723. for 7,500*l.* and which very Sums now remain a Debt to the Suitors of the respective Offices. Your Lordships have already heard what was demanded and paid on those Resignations.

The Earl is pleased to say, “ That on Mr. Edwards’s second Petition with Mr. Hiccocks’s Report annexed (in which Mr. Edwards expressly prayed, that he might be ordered to accept the said Composition) the Earl in a proper and usual Manner ordered the same as prayed, and was informed, and believes, that the said Composition was made and agreed to on a Consultation of all or most of the Masters of the said Court.

I have heard, my Lords, the proper and usual Manner is to have Petitions of this Nature set down to be heard in Publick, and the Parties concerned concerned to be summoned; Petitions relating to Bankrupts, to Lunaticks, to Ideots, I believe are so: The Statute in the Case of Bankrupts directs publick Notice to be given in the Gazette, for the Creditors to meet; they have an Opportunity there to make all proper enquiries, and see every thing done that may be most for their Advantage; the Bankrupt is not entitled to his liberty, nor any Benefit allowed him, without a Certificate that he has made a full Discovery of his effects, and that there appears no Reason to doubt of the Truth of such Discovery; and not then neither, unless four Parts in five in Number and Value of his Creditors sign such Certificate, and testify their Consent. How the Earl could think it just that the Suitors of the Court of Chancery (whose money was forced from them by the Power of that Court, and put into the Hands of a Bankrupt Master) should have less Care taken of them, less Privileges allowed them for their Security, than any other Creditors in the Kingdom, I can no way comprehend, but must think, my lords, this clandestine and unusual Proceeding a strong Proof of the Crime charged in these Articles.

“As to what the Earl says of the Composition on being agreed to by most of the masters; if that, my Lords, had been so (though we shall give Evidence to the contrary) I should not at all have wondered at it; for any Composition obstructed the Inquiry and Proceedings, which otherwise must necessarily have been publick: But, my Lords, had the Composition been agreed to on a Consultation of all or most of the Suitors concerned, that indeed would have been a good Defence of the noble Lord.

“He is pleased to say, at the Time of Wilson's Assignment of Poulter's Debt, that Poulter was looked on to be a substantial Person.

We shall produce to your lordships evidence to the contrary: And I must observe that the Earl does not offer to shew any proper Inquiry was made touching his Solvency. Sure, my lords, when that Debt was taken as a Payment for the Suitors of the Court, his Circumstances should have been carefully looked to, and a Recognizance with Securities taken in Court; but that could not be done without a publick Notice of the Deficiency.

When I consider, my lords, the long experience and great Abilities of the noble Earl, I can never think the Remisness in this Inquiry these clandestine and unusual Proceedings, this precarious and trifling Composition, could have happened through Inadvertency only: I therefore, my lords, must insist upon it as a manifest Proof of the Charge contained in these Articles.

The Gentleman who speaks after me on this Occasion, will open the evidence we shall offer, and I will therefore take up no more of your lordships time.

Mr. Hedges. My lords, it falls to my Share to endeavour to be Assistant to the Gentleman who spoke last, in maintaining the 13th and 14th Articles; which I shall do by stating the evidence to your lordships, as shortly as I can.

My lords, The 13th Article sets forth, that Mr. Dormer having embezzled great Part of the Suitors effects, to the amount of 25,000 l. or some other great Sum, and he thereupon absconding, Application was made to the Earl of Macclesfield, then lord Chancellor, to secure his Person and Effects, which his lordship neglected and declined to do; and endeavoured to conceal the true State of the Office, as well with respect to Mr. Dormer's effects, as to the Debt due from him to the Suitors. And upon motion made in the Court of Chancery (after his lordship knew that Mr. Dormer had absconded) that the effects of some of the Suitors might be transfer'd to a more secure Office, his lordship in order to delude the Suitors into a Belief of the Safety of their effects, and to prevent a publick Inquiry, then sitting in open Court, did say, That the Parties need not be in haste; falsely and deceitfully at the same Time declaring that Mr. Dormer was only gone to take the Air in the Country, and that he would return in a little time, and all would be well, or to that Effect. And, my Lords, notwithstanding the Earl's Endeavour in his Answer to evade the Charge contain'd in this Article, I am persuaded, upon hearing the Evidence, your Lordships will rest satisfy'd, that it has been made out in every particular. For, my Lords, as to the first part of the Charge, where he denies that he was ever advis'd to secure Mr. Dormer's person, it will be made appear to your Lordships, that Mr. John Bennet, and Mr. Lightboun, went from a Meeting of several of the Masters, and in their Names acquainted the Lord Chancellor, that it was their Opinion, that Mr. Dormer had not fairly stated his Accounts; that there was a Deficiency of upwards of 20,000 l. and that it was necessary for example's sake, he should be committed, according to the Precedent set him by the lord Cowper in Dr. Eddisbury's Case. But the Earl insisting on Mr. Dormer's Liberty, they again repeated the necessity of making such an Example, but at last left the Earl fixed in his Resolution of continuing Mr. Dormer at Liberty.

My Lords, this Promise of Freedom to Mr. Dormer was only conditional; If he gave in a fair and just Account, and assisted in getting in the Debts. But he was so far from complying with these Conditions, that when he gave an Account in Writing of the Ballance of his Cash, amounting to 49,000 l. he only inform'd them, that 24,000 l. of it was due from one Wilson a Banker, since broke; but as to the Remainder, the Master, to whom it was given, could never obtain from him any other Notice where it lay, or what was become of it.

Immediately upon this, the Masters were summon'd, and acquainted with it; and the next morning that Account was left with Mr. Cottingham for the Lord Chancellor's perusal.

Your Lordships will be farther inform'd, that Mr. Rogers and Mr. Hiccocks, being directed by the Lord Chancellor to procure a Conveyance of Mr. Dormer's Estate to them, for the Benefit of the Suitors, it was with the greatest Difficulty that Mr. Dormer was prevailed upon to comply with it.

In the next place, my Lords, his Lordship, in his Answer, denies, that he endeavour'd to conceal the true State of the Office from the Suitors; or that he remembers any thing concerning the Expression he is charg'd with; that Mr. Dormer was only gone into the Country to take the Air, and that he wou'd return in a little time, and all wou'd be well.

My Lords, I must agree, that, since his Lordship is resolv'd to deny that he endeavour'd to conceal the State of the Office, it were to be wish'd by him that he cou'd safely deny this Expression, since if true, it proves that endeavour directly upon him. But, my Lords, the Words were spoken by his Lordship in open Court, and can be sworn to by a Person, whose Business in Court at that time was such, as can possibly leave no room for a Doubt, or a Mistake.

For farther proof, my Lords, of his Lordship's Endeavour to conceal the State of this Office, we shall shew, that a message was sent from the Lord Chancellor to Mr. Lightboun with a Proposal that he shou'd advance 500 l. towards this Deficiency: Acquainting him, at the same time, that it was for the Honour of the Court; and that the Appearance of a Deficiency wou'd be attended with ill Consequences. But Mr. Lightboun refus'd to comply with that Demand, which he thought wou'd only skin over the Wound, and not effectually cure it. And yet, my Lords, this Proposal, which Mr. Lightboun had the Honesty and Courage to reject, was enforc'd by the impeach'd Earl with the Threats of a Parliamentary Enquiry; asserting, that if the masters did not contribute towards the Concealment of this Deficiency, it would occasion a publick Enquiry; wherein, if it shou'd appear, that they had bought their Places contrary to the Statute 5 and 6 of Edward 6. it might go ill with him, but that it wou'd fare much worse with them; turning even that Parliamentary Enquiry, which he ought to have dreaded as his sure Punishment, into means for extorting of money. We have also Proofs that at another meeting of the masters, a farther Demand was made upon them, in order to conceal the State of that Office; but all the masters then refusing to contribute to a Concealment so unreasonable in its own nature, the Lord Chancellor paid that Demand of 1000 l. himself; not out of any just regard to the Suitors, but for his own Profit and Advantage, well knowing, that the Notoriety of this Insolvency, wou'd make the masters Places less valuable; and therefore was content to part with this Sum, to insure to himself a greater prospect of Gain at his next Sale. Nor was it necessary for those, who dealt at this Auction, to bring any money of their own to it; the mere admittance into the Office immediately giving them Possession of a Cash sufficient to answer his Lordship's Expectations. And thus Beggars were his best Purchasers; though sure to be the worst Trustees for the Publick.

How great a Hardship must it be, my Lords, to the Suitors of that High Court, to be contending many Years for their just Property, at an Expence possibly no ways proportionable to their remaining Fortunes; and to find at last, when they had obtain'd a Decree in their Favour, that their money was lost in a Bankrupt Office, without hopes of recovery? This is a Consideration in which every man in Great Britain is more or less concern'd. For what Estate is there, which may not some way or other in the Course of a few years, come under the Direction of that Court? How much then does it concern every Individual, and even the Legislature itself, that all its Avenues of Justice shou'd be safe and open? But how much more does it concern the Honour and Conscience of the Person, who presides in it, if there shou'd be a dangerous Precipice in the way, to be the first in setting up a Mark for all the World to avoid it?

But, my Lords, if in this Article, which I have open'd to your Lordships, there appears a Criminal Endeavour to conceal the Deficiency of this Office, supported by a false Assertion made in open Court, in order to delude the Suitors into an Opinion that their Money was safe, and a great neglect in not securing Mr. Dormer's Person; in the 14th Article, he will appear in a yet more guilty Light, not only neglecting, as in the former, to enquire into his effects, but on Enquiry made, and Time had for mature deliberation, confirming a precarious and trifling Composition, and tying down the Suitors of the Court by his Authority, to the certain Diminution of one half at least of their effects, and in all probability to the irrecoverable loss of the whole.

My Lords, in the Answer which his Lordship returns to this Article, he denies none of the matters of Fact contain'd in it, but admits them as they there stand charg'd. I shall therefore only make some Observations on the nature of this Transaction, and on the Assertions in his Lordship's Answer.

In the first place, my Lords, he insinuates that Mr. Edwards us'd great endeavours to obtain payment from Wilson, but found them fruitless; Wilson having stopp'd payment long before.

My Lords, I know not what endeavours his lordship can prove Mr. Edwards to have us'd; but whatever they were, they were not unlikely to prove fruitless, since as his lordship adds immediately, Wilson had long before stopp'd payment: But this we can prove, That Wilson's Books were never inspected by Mr. Edwards; that he never knew what his Debts were; nor any thing more of him, than that Wilson came voluntarily to Mr. Edwards, and propos'd of himself to pay him 1400 l. in ready money, and to assign over to him a Debt of 10,000 l. due from one Poulter, whose Circumstances were still more precarious than his own.

In the next Place, his Lordship asserts, that he order'd this whole Affair of Wilson's Composition in the usual manner; and is inform'd, and believes, that this Composition was made and agreed to, upon a Consultation of all, or most of the Masters. But, my Lords, we shall make it appear, that the Delivery of the Petitions, the Orders made upon them, and the whole Transaction of this Affair, was carried on from first to last in a clandestine, private, and unusual manner.

As to the Consent which his Lordship says he believes the other masters gave to this Composition, we shall prove my lords, that Mr. Edwards was the only Person concerned on behalf of the Suitors, and so far was he or any of the rest of the masters from taking the best Care they could, that the first Draught of a Composition, which Wilson brought, was accepted and settled between him him and Mr. Hiccocks. And that when Mr. Edwards did mention this Composition to some of the Masters, they were so far from approving of it, that Mr. Edwards acquainted the lord Chancellor, that it was the Opinion of one of them, that a better Composition was to be had. And another of the Masters was so far from agreeing to this Method at all, that he propos'd a Commission of Bankruptcy as the only means to bring this matter to a proper Light.

But that Light, my lords, was what his lordship was most afraid of. That wou'd have discover'd the deficiency of this Office, which would have brought a disrepute upon others, and consequently have lower'd their Price. This was his lordships only Care; whilst for the rest he cou'd sit unconcern'd, and see so great a Sum of the Suitors Money wasting away to nothing, as it pass'd thro' the Hands successively of three Bankrupts.

But, my lords, we shall farther prove, that when his lordship order'd a Petition to be prefer'd to himself, that he might approve of this Composition, he never order'd the Suitors to be acquainted with it, nor had they any Notice of it. Nor did his lordship ask, if Wilson had compounded with any other Creditors, nor so much as enquire if he had sworn to his Circumstances.

It will be made appear, that at this very time Mr. Edwards was inform'd, and did believe that Poulter's Circumstances were very bad, and that neither he nor any one else attended the Commission of Bankruptcy against Poulter on Behalf of the Suitors.

And, my lords, to judge a little farther of this matter, by a very sure Rule of Justice; that, of doing as one would be done by: Your lordships will find that Mr. Edwards confesses, that if it had been his own money, he wou'd have lookt more carefully after it.

Farther yet, my lords, we shall prove, that notwithstanding this Debt was compounded with Wilson, yet he has paid the whole Amount of other Debts, with Interest, to several of his Creditors.

Lastly, my lords, his lordship in his Answer says, that he believes Mr. Edwards has since got in one thousand Pounds of Poulter's Debt. The Truth is, one thousand Pounds has been recover'd; but it was by an accidental Discovery of conceal'd Effects belonging to Poulter; one thousand Pounds of which was paid to Mr. Edwards by Wilson, as Part of Poulter's Debt.

But does his lordship seriously intend this for any Vindication of himself, or any Compensation to the Suitors, that after four or five years expectation, instead of twentyfour thousand Pounds due to them, he believes one thousand Pounds may have been since recover'd?

I cannot help observing here to your lordships, how different a Care has appear'd throughout his lordship's whole Behaviour, with Regard to his private Advantage, and the Safety and Protection of the Suitors of the Court.

In their Case, he could think it equitable to subject their Estates to the losses of a Master in Chancery, who had squander'd and gam'd away their Substance and his own. But in his own private Affairs, how cautiously circumspect was his lordship? The least Advantage was not neglected, and if a Master's Place was to be alienated, a difference of Guineas was meanly insisted upon, instead of the Pounds which had before been oppressively extorted.

But, my lords, in this impeachment, the Commons, with Regard to the Dignity of their own Proceedings, with Regard to this august Judicature, are not desirous to enlarge upon Matters of smaller Moment. His lordship might have enjoy'd his hundred Guineas in quiet, had not a long Series of his Conduct in so high a Station, tended to destroy the Reverence due to the laws, by an Execution of them instrumental to the Ruin of the Subject.—Against apparent Extortioners and Robbers, we guard ourselves with a Caution proportionable to the infamy of their Characters: But when the Sanctity of the laws, and the Ensigns of Authority, design'd to defend and protect us, are made use of to invite us into Ruin, how sure and extensive must that Ruin be?

My lords, The Commons have beheld with the deepest Concern such corrupt Practices in this high Court; such, as have deform'd the Beauty of Justice, and render'd the Administration of it grievous, and even fatal to the Subject. They have beheld that Minister of Justice, whom the laws of the land have invest'd with an extraordinary Power to punish Frauds and Deceits, himself carrying on a most pernicious Deceit, to the great dishonour of the Court, and the ruin of its Suitors. The Guardian of Orphans become their Oppressor, the Keeper of the King's Conscience prostituting his own, and the Dignity of his high Station, to an ignominious Traffick with the best bidder, and employing the SCALES OF JUSTICE in the Business of an Usurer.

But, my lords, that Parliamentary Enquiry is now come, with the Terrors of which he forc'd the Masters into Compliance with his arbitrary Demands. He then foretold it might possibly GO ILL WITH HIM, tho' it would fare worse with them. So just a Decree pronounc'd by himself against himself, is, we trust, in no Danger of being revers'd; but rest assur'd, that as far as it regards him, it will be unanimously confirm'd by your Lordships.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we shall now proceed to our Evidence on these two Articles together: To shew to your Lordships that the Deficiency of Dormer's Office was endeavour'd to be conceal'd by many indirect Practices: and first of all we shall call a Witness to prove Mr. Dormer's Deficiency to be about twenty-five thousand Pounds.

Mr. Thomson called, and appeared.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Thompson may refresh his Memory, as this Matter was referred to him to examine; and that he would please to give your Lordships an Account how he found the State of Mr. Dormer's Office, and what Deficiency there was in it?

Mr. Thompson. My Lords, I find in our Report the Debt due from Mr. Dormer's Office was stated at 49604*l.* 11*s.* 11*d.* and I find that Mr. Edwards, who succeeded Mr. Dormer in that Office, had paid to the Suitors 23725*l.* 15*s.* 9½ so that there remains due to the Suitors of the Court, such as have paid their Money into Mr. Dormer's Office, the Sum of 25878*l.* 16*s.* 1*d.* ½. And this I believe to be a true State of the Account, from such Evidence as was laid before us.

Mr. Lutwyche. If the Counsel on the other Side don't think fit to ask this Evidence any Question, we beg Leave to call Mr. Edwards, who succeeded Mr. Dormer, and will give your Lordships an account of the State of that Office, and what the Deficiency was.

Mr. Henry Edwards sworn.

Mr. Lutwyche. My lords, we desire that Mr. Edwards may be asked, how much the Deficiency is in Mr. Dormer's Office?

Mr. Edwards. My lords, according to the Account given in, the Deficiency appears to be about twenty five thousand odd hundred Pounds; but since that, there is discover'd about fifteen hundred Pounds more, which was not brought into the Account. It was discover'd about three Weeks or a Month ago, and not before.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be ask'd whether he knows of any other Deficiency discover'd?

Mr. Edwards. No, my lords, I do not.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, I desire Mr. Edwards may be asked, that as there hath been a further Deficiency discovered, whether there hath not also been a Discovery of further Effects?

Mr. Edwards. Not as I know of. I am inform'd Administration hath been lately taken out to Mr. Dormer, that there hath been a Discovery of Effects, but to what Value I can't tell.

Mr. Strange. I would desire he may be ask'd, whether he hath had any Account from the Administrator?

Mr. Edwards. I have seen Mr. Paxton, who I understand administr'd. He told me he had discover'd some Effects, but he did not tell me to what Value.

Mr. Lutwyche. If the Counsel for the noble Earl have done, we would beg leave to ask another Question, in relation to this matter. They examine what were the other Effects of Mr. Dormer, we desire to know, if Mr. Edwards can inform us, how long ago this Discovery was?

Mr. Edwards. I can't certainly tell. I believe it is about two months ago that Mr. Paxton hath had Administration; and since that he hath made this Discovery.

Mr. Lutwyche. It is proper from this Question that hath been ask'd by the Counsel for the noble lord, to call another Witness to prove that there have been effects discovered, and that there have been Goods laid by three or four Years, and almost spoil'd, because no Care was taken of his Effects.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, before this Gentleman goes, I beg leave he may be asked one other Question, whether he had not Notice before Christmas last, that there were other Effects of Mr. Dormer, and from whom?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, I believe I had; and when I understood that Mr. Paxton was the Person who had taken out the Administration, I told him of it.

E. of Macclesfield. My lords, I desire he may be asked who it was that brought him Notice of these Effects?

Mr. Edwards. It was a Gentleman that came out of the Country. I don't remember his Name. He was a Person that lived near the Place where Mr. Dormer's Country House was. I have forgot his Name.

E. of Macclesfield. Can you recollect if you hear his Name? Was his Name Goodfellow?

Mr. Edwards. I believe it was.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire, if you can recollect, who he said he came from?

Mr. Edwards. I think he said he came from Mr. Cottingham; I don't know that he mention'd your lordship. I understood your lordship had been acquainted with it, but not that he acquainted you of it.

Mr. Campbel sworn.

Mr. Lutwyche. My lords, I desire that this Witness may be asked, whether he knows of any Goods or Effects of Mr. Dormer being discover'd, and at what Time, and how long they had lain in that Place where they were found.

Mr. Campbel. In the Year 1721, I did buy a Parcel of Hops, but who they belong'd to I did not then know; but since I find they were Mr. Dormer's. They were one hundred and forty eight Bags of Hops. I sold sixteen of them the same Year, one hundred and one since. I bought them of Countrymen; some of one man, and some of another. I bought them by Commission, but Mr. Dormer was not the man that employ'd me, neither did I receive the money from his Hands.

Mr. Lutwyche. We desire to know how long the Goods did lie in that Place where they were; and whether there were any Loss by the Sale of those Goods, being left so long there.

Mr. Campbel. They had lain there above three Years, and I believe, modestly speaking, there was above five hundred Pounds loss upon them.

Mr. Plummer. I desire Mr. Campbel may be asked how he came to know they were Mr. Dormer's Hops?

Mr. Campbel. I never did know they were Mr. Dormer's Hops, nor do I still know it, but as I am told.

Mr. Plummer. My lords, I desire he may be asked who told him so?

Mr. Campbel. This Gentleman told me so [pointing to Mr. Paxton.]

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My lords, we shall now call Mr. Paxton, who hath taken out Administration by the Direction of the lords Commissioners of the Great Seal; and under that Administration he hath possess'd himself of those Effects, which were scatter'd and lay waste before.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, I beg leave this Witness may be first asked one Question. I think he hath said that he bought those Hops by Commission, not by the Order of Mr. Dormer, nor for Mr. Dormer: I desire he may be asked, by whose Direction they were kept so long by him?

Mr. Campbel. He that gave me the Orders to buy them was not Mr. Dormer, neither did he pay me the money. The Reason they lay so long was, I had no orders to sell them.

Mr. Serj. Prob. Who was the Person that gave you orders to buy them?

Mr. Campbel. The Person's Name is Mr. Longmead.

Mr. Serj. Prob. Where does this Person live?

Mr. Campbel. He lives at Islington.

Mr. Com. Serj. My lords, I desire this Witness may be asked, whether or no about the time that these Hops were bought, they were not very cheap, and at a low Price?

Mr. Campbel. They were at a low Price.

Mr. Com. Serj. Whether a great Number of People have not kept Hops upon a Supposition that they would rise?

Mr. Campbel. Yes they have a great many.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, whether he did not keep other Hops as well as these by him, for the Advantage of a better Market?

Mr. Campbel. Yes, I had several other Hops bought in that Year that I kept for a better Market, and still had a worse. I have Hops by me cost me 5*l.* a Hundred, not worth now 10*s.* a Hundred.

E. of Macclesfield. How much a Bag might that be?

Mr. Campbel. I can't tell how many hundred may be in a Bag: I can't tell, because they are not weighed.

E. of Macclesfield. Whereabouts?

Mr. Campbel. Sometimes there are three hundred, sometimes 2 and a half, sometimes 2 and 3*qrs.*

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, to explain this Matter I desire he may be asked, whether this Loss he speaks of, of 4 or 500*l.* happened in the Difference of the Price, or by the Hops being spoiled?

Mr. Campbel. Both by the Difference of Price, Hops being cheaper, and by the Antiquity of the Hops.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we desire he may be asked who is this Mr. Longmead?

Mr. Campbel. He keeps a Shop in Islington, he keeps a Grocer's Shop.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I desire he may be ask'd, whether he is not Mr. Dormer's Servant, or an Agent for him?

Mr. Campbel. For any thing I know he was an Agent for Mr. Dormer.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, we desire he may be ask'd, whether for ought he knows he was not an Agent for Mr. Dormer?

Mr. Campbel. I believe he was an Agent for him, and I have good Reason to believe it, because he paid me all the Money, and gave me Orders to buy the Goods.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know whether the Witness infers that Longmead was Mr. Dormer's Agent because he paid him money; might not he have paid him the money, tho' he had not been his Agent?

Ld. Ch. Jus. King. Speak your own Knowledge, whether he was Agent for Mr. Dormer or no.

Mr. Campbel. I never did ask him whose they were: He employed me, and I bought the Goods, and did suppose they were for Mr. Dormer. I never ask'd him whether they were his Goods or not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Paxton may be called, to shew how he discovered these Effects.

Mr. Nicholas Paxton Sworn.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we desire Mr. Paxton may give your Lordships an Account what he knows of these Hops.

Mr. Paxton. After I had got Letters of Administration to Mr. Dormer granted me, I did make what Inquiry I could, relating to the Effects of Mr. Dormer. This Mr. Longmead came and told me of some Hops; that he was Servant to Mr. Dormer, and had bought them by his Direction. Then we went to Mr. Campbel's who took out a Handful and said they were Saleable, and would bring in about 200*l.* He told me they cost 800*l.* and it would be best to dispose of them as fast as I could, that there might be no more Loss.

They are not yet sold, they may be worth about 200*l.*

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, It is admitted by the Answer, that Mr. Dormer absented himself and absconded. It was notorious, and talked of by every Body: It will lie upon this Noble Lord to give an Account what he did thereon. My Lords, we will now proceed to give your Lordships an Account of this Composition made with Wilson who was indebted to Dormer. This Wilson was a Banker, the Person that Mr. Dormer intrusted with Money; and upon that Occasion, there being a great Debt due to Dormer, as is set forth in the Articles, a Composition is made with Wilson on Account of that Debt. There were such Dealings and Proceedings therein, as will appear to your Lordships to have been unusual and unwarrantable. We beg Leave therefore to shew your Lordships a written Evidence, an Order under the Hand of this noble Lord himself for this Composition though never drawn up: And indeed your Lordships will observe that through the whole Course of these Proceedings, there is not any one Affidavit, or any one Order, or any Report filed in the usual Manner. From whence we may infer, that it was intended to be a clandestine thing, that nothing might appear of it upon Record, as other things do. The first thing we shall beg Leave to shew is, an Assignment from Mr. Dormer to one of the Masters in Chancery of this Debt. When we have shewn that Assignment, then we shall beg Leave to give your Lordships an Account of the Methods and Proceedings thereupon.

Mr. William Green sworn, and the Assignment produced.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we desire this Witness may be asked, whether he saw this Deed executed, and by whom?

Mr. Green. My Lords, I did see this Deed executed by the late Mr. Dormer: I am one of the Witnesses to it, and John Jones is the other Witness.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we desire this Deed may be read.

Clerk reads. This Indenture made the six and twentieth Day of July, Ann. Dom. 1721, and in the seventh Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord George by the Grace of God, King of Great-Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. Between Fleetwood Dormer of Lincolns-Inn in the County of Middlesex, Esq; late one of the masters of the High Court of Chancery of the one Part, and Henry Edwards of Lincolns-Inn aforesaid, Esq; one of the masters of the said High Court of Chancery of the other Part. Whereas William Wilson Citizen and Goldsmith of London, is and stands justly indebted unto the said Fleetwood Dormer upon Account, in the full and just sum of twenty four thousand and forty six Pounds and four Shillings of lawful money of Great Britain, or upwards, as by the Books of the said William Wilson may and doth appear: And whereas the said Fleetwood Dormer is and stands justly indebted to divers Persons, Suitors in the said High Court of Chancery, in several considerable sums of money, for and on Accompt of moneys brought before and paid to him as one of the masters of the said Court: Now therefore for the more speedy getting in and recovering of the aforesaid Debt, due and owing by and and from the said William Wilson as aforesaid; and also for the more speedy and effectual Payment of all such Sum and Sums of money as are owing by the said Fleetwood Dormer as aforesaid: This Indenture witnesseth, That for the Ends and Purposes aforesaid, and for and in Consideration of the sum of 10 s. of lawful money of Great-Britain to the said Fleetwood Dormer in Hand paid by the said Henry Edwards, at or before the enfealing and delivery of these Presents, the Receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged: He, the said Fleetwood Dormer, hath granted, assigned, transferred, and set over, and by these Presents, doth grant, assign, transfer, and set over unto the said Henry Edwards, his Executors, Administrators, and Assigns, the said Debt or Sum of twenty four thousand and forty six Pounds and four Shillings, and all and every Part thereof, and all and every other Debt or Debts, Sum or Sums of money any ways due or owing by or from the said William Wilson to the said Fleetwood Dormer and every Part thereof, and all Interest due or to grow due for the same, and all Bonds, Bills, Notes, and other Securities, for the same or any Part thereof. And all the Right, Title, Interest, Property, Benefit, Advantage, Claim, and Demand whatsoever, both in Law and Equity, of him, the said Fleetwood Dormer, of, in, to, or out of the same, and every or any part thereof, to have, hold, receive, perceive, take, and enjoy the said Debt or Sum of twenty four thousand and forty six Pounds and four Shillings, and all such other Debts and Sums of Money as are due or owing to the said Fleetwood Dormer by the said William Wilson as aforesaid, and every Part thereof, and all the Benefit thereof, and all and singular other the Premises unto the said Henry Edwards, his Executors, Administrators, and Assigns upon trust. Nevertheless, and to the Intent and Purpose that he, the said Henry Edwards, his Executors, Administrators, or Assigns, shall and do issue, pay, apply, and dispose of the same, or such Part or Parts thereof, as shall from time to time be by him or them got in and received in such manner as the said high Court of Chancery shall in that Behalf order or direct, for and towards Payment and Satisfaction of such Debts and Sums of money as are now due and owing by the said Fleetwood Dormer, for or on Account of monies brought before and paid to him, as one of the masters of the said Court. And in the mean time, after Receipt thereof, and until the same shall be so paid, applied, and disposed of, shall and do deposit, lend, or place out the same, or any part thereof, in such manner as the said Court of Chancery shall in that Behalf order or direct. And for the better enabling the said Henry Edwards, his Executors, Administrators, and Assigns, to get, call in, and receive the aforesaid Debt or Sum of twenty four thousand and forty six Pounds and four Shillings, and other the said hereby assigned Premises upon the Trusts aforesaid; He, the said Fleetwood Dormer, hath made, ordained, constituted and appointed, and in his Place and Stead put and deputed, and by these Presents doth make, ordain, constitute and appoint, and in his Place and Stead, put and depute the said Henry Edwards, his Executors, Administrators, and Assigns, his true and lawful Attorney and Attornies irrevocable for him the said Fleetwood Dormer, and in his Name; but upon the Trusts aforesaid, to ask, demand, sue for, recover, and receive of and from the said William Wilson, his Heirs, Executors, or Administrators, and all and every, or any other Person or Persons whom it may concern, the aforesaid Debt or Sum of twenty four thousand and forty six Pounds and four Shillings, and other the said hereby assigned Premises, and every or any Part thereof upon the Trusts aforesaid, and likewise to compound for the same, and every or any Part thereof, as he or they shall in their Discretions think fit, and upon Non-payment of the same Debt or Sum, Debts or Sums, or any Part thereof, or bring, commence, and prosecute such Action or Actions, Suit or Suits, either at Law or in Equity, or elsewhere, for the Recovery thereof, as he or they shall be advised, and on Payment thereof, or any Part thereof, to give Receipts and Discharges for the same, and one or more Attorney or Attornies for the Purpose aforesaid, to make and constitute, and at Pleasure to revoke, and generally to do and act in the Premises for the recovering and obtaining of the said Debt or Sum of twenty four thousand and forty six Pounds and four Shillings, and other the said hereby assigned Premises, and every or any Part thereof, as fully and effectually to all Intents and Purposes as he the said Fleetwood Dormer, his Executors or Administrators might have done; giving and hereby granting unto the said Henry Edwards, his Executors, Administrators and Assigns, the full and whole Power and Authority of him the said Fleetwood Dormer, in and about the Premises upon the Trusts aforesaid; hereby ratifying, confirming, and allowing all, and whatever the said Henry Edwards, his Executors, Administrators, or Assigns, or his or their Attorney or Attornies shall lawfully do or cause to be done in or about the Premises by Vertue of these Presents. And the said Fleetwood Dormer doth hereby for himself, his Heirs, Executors, and Administrators, covenant, promise, and agree to and with the said Henry Edwards, his Executors, Administrators, and Assigns in manner following: That is to say, that he, the said Fleetwood Dormer, hath not received, compounded, released or discharged, or consented to the receiving, compounding, releasing, or discharging the said Debt or Sum of twenty four thousand and forty six Pounds and four Shillings, and other the hereby assigned Premises, or any part thereof, and that he, his Executors, or Administrators shall not, nor will at any time hereafter, receive, compound, release, or discharge the same or any part thereof, without the Consent of the said Henry Edwards, his Executors, Administrators, or Assigns, first thereunto had and obtained in writing under his or their Hands. And further, That he the said Fleetwood Dormer, his Executors and Administrators, shall and will at the Requests, Cost and Charges of the said Henry Edwards, his Executors, Administrators, or Assigns, make, do, and execute, or cause and procure to be made, done, and executed, any further or other lawful and reasonable Acts, Deeds, Powers and Authorities, for the better enabling him, the said Henry Edwards, his Executors, Administrators, and Assigns, to sue for, recover, and obtain the said Debt and Premises hereby assigned, and every or any part thereof upon the Trust aforesaid. And it is hereby declared and agreed that the said Henry Edwards, his Executors, Administrators, or Assigns shall not be charged or chargeable with, or accountable for any more monies than he or they shall actually receive, or shall come to his or their Hands by Vertue of these Presents; and that it shall and may be lawful lawful to and for the said Henry Edwards, his Executors, Administrators and Assigns, in the first place, by and out of the premises, to deduct and reimburse him and themselves all such losses, costs, charges and expences as he, they, or any of them shall sustain or be put unto, by Reason of the Trust hereby in him reposed, or the Management or Execution thereof, or any other thing in any wise relating thereunto: In witness whereof, the said parties to these presents have hereunto interchangeably set their Hands and Seals the Day and Year first above written.

Fleetwood Dormer.

Mr. Lutwyche. The next thing we shall trouble your Lordships with in relation to this matter of the Composition, is a petition of Mr. Edwards, to which there is an answer. The answer is writ by Mr. Cottingham, and signed by the noble Lord. I mentioned to your Lordships that no Order is drawn up upon it: Nothing appears in publick: Therefore we must beg leave to prove the Earl's Hand to this Order made upon this Petition.

E. of Macclesfield. After taking the petition in his Hand and looking upon the Name subscribed to the answer written upon it, said, My Lords, this is my Hand.

Clerk reads,

To the Right Honourable Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain.

The humble Petition and Representation of Henry Edwards, Esq; one of the Masters of the high and honourable Court of Chancery.

Sheweth,

THAT William Wilson, Citizen and Goldsmith of London, is and stands justly indebted to Fleetwood Dormer, Esq; late one of the masters of this Court upon account, in the full Sum of twenty four thousand and forty six pounds, four Shillings, as by the Books of the said William Wilson doth and may appear.

That the said Fleetwood Dormer is and stands justly indebted to divers persons, Suitors in this Court, in several considerable Sums of Money. And for the more speedy getting in and recovering the said Debt, and effectual Payment of all such sum and sums of Money as are owing by the said Fleetwood Dormer as aforesaid, the said Fleetwood Dormer, for that End and Purpose, hath by Indenture bearing date the 26th of July 1721, granted, assigned, transferr'd, and set over to your petitioner, his Executors, Administrators, and Assigns, the said debt or sum of twenty four thousand and forty six pounds four Shillings in Trust, and to the Intent that your Petitioner shall pay, apply, and dispose of the same, or such part thereof as shall from time to time be by him got in and received of and from the said William Wilson, in such Manner as this Court shall order and direct.

VOL. VI.

That it appears to your Petitioner, that the said William Wilson is indebted to divers other Persons in great Sums of Money, and for some time hath not been able to carry on his Business, or to make good and pay the said Debt so assigned to your Petitioner; but hath lately offered to your Petitioner and his other Creditors to come to a Composition, and to pay them in proportion the utmost he is able. And your Petitioner doubting whether he can with safety to himself, agree to any such Composition, Humbly prays your Lordship would be pleased to refer it to one of the masters of this Court, to see if such Composition so proposed by the said Wilson be for the Benefit of the persons intituled to receive the same.

And your Petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

30th of June, 1722.

Be it as is prayed, and to that End let it be referred to Mr. Hiccocks one of the Masters of this Court, and let the Master speed his Report: After which, such further Order will be made as shall be just; of which give Notice forthwith.

Macclesfield C.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I beg leave to take Notice, that in this Petition it is expressly recited, that Dormer was indebted to the Suitors of the Court, and that being so, we apprehend the greatest Care should have been taken for their Benefit. Your Lordships shall see in the Progress of this thing, how it was transacted. I believe any person that is concerned in the Court of Chancery, hath not known such a Proceeding in the most trifling Matter whatsoever. My Lords, the next thing is a second Petition, said to be with a Report annexed, but we can't find it filed; here is a paper of Mr. Hiccocks not stamp'd nor filed, which we do apprehend to be the Report meant, and therefore we desire that may be first read.

Clerk reads,

26th of July, 1722.

WHEREAS by an order made by the Right Honourable the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, the thirtieth of June last, upon the humble Petition of Henry Edwards, Esq; one of the Masters of this Court, I am directed to see if the Composition in the said Order mentioned, to be offered or proposed to be made by William Wilson, Citizen and Goldsmith of London, to the said Mr. Edwards, as Assignee of Fleetwood Dormer, Esq; late one of the masters of this Court, who was a creditor of the said William Wilson, for the Sum of 24046l. 4 s. in the said petition mention'd, be for the Benefit of the Persons entituled to receive the same. I have been attended by the said Mr. Edwards, and by the said William Wilson, and considered of the several Matters by the said Petition and Order to me referr'd: And the said William Wilson hath under der his hand in Writing propos'd to assign over to the said Mr. Edwards (as a Composition for, and in full Discharge of the said Sum of 24046 l. 4 s.) the Sum of 10000 l. part of a larger Sum due to the said William Wilson, from Edward Poulter of Hackney, in the County of Middlesex, Gent. and to pay to the said Mr. Edwards in Specie the Sum of 1463 l. 2 s. 1 d. over and above the Sum of 560 l. already paid to the said Mr. Dormer in part of the said Composition. And upon Consideration had of the Circumstances of the said William Wilson, and the said several Matters, I am of Opinion that the accepting the said Composition will be for the Benefit of the Person or Persons entitled to receive the same. All which I humbly certify and submit to his Lordship.

Hiccocks.

Mr. Lutwyche. Now read the Petition of Mr. Edwards, and the Order thereupon.

Clerk reads.

To the Right Honourable Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain.

The humble Petition of Henry Edwards, Esq; one of the Masters of the high and honourable Court of Chancery.

Sheweth,

THAT upon your petitioner's former petition preferr'd to your Lordship relating to William Wilson, Citizen and Goldsmith of London, your Lordship the 30th of June last was pleased to refer it to Mr. Hiccocks, one of the Masters of this Court, to see if the Composition mentioned in the said petition and Order to be propos'd by the said Wilson, would be for the Benefit of the Persons entitled to receive the same.

That the said Mr. Hiccocks having been attended by your petitioner, and the said Wilson, hath pursuant to your Lordship's said Order, made his Report dated the 26th of July last, whereby he certifies, that he is of Opinion that the accepting of the Composition in his Report mentioned, will be for the Benefit of the Person or Persons entitled to receive the same, as by the Report annexed.

Wherefore your petitioner most humbly prays your Lordship to take into your Consideration the Matter of the said Report, and to order your petitioner to accept of the said Composition upon the terms therein mentioned, if your Lordship shall so think fit, or to make such other and further Order in the premisses, as to your Lordship shall seem most meet.

And your petitioner shall ever pray, &c.

3^d of August, 1722.

On the Report annexed be it as is prayed. Of which give Notice forthwith, Macclesfield, C.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I must beg leave to make one Observation upon this, that the noble Lord may explain it, for I believe there is no precedent for it; when there is a Composition thus to be made, and thus referr'd, and a Report hath been made, the Prayer of the Petition is, that Mr. Edwards may be ordered to accept of this Composition, or to make such other Order, as his lordship should think fit. The Answer to it is, Be it as is prayed, of which give Notice forthwith; by which I suppose the parties understood that it was ordering Mr. Edwards to accept of this Composition. Now it is wonderful to me, if he was ordered to accept of the Composition, why it is said, give Notice forthwith? What? when the thing is done? Besides, there is another thing more material, to whom should such Notice be given? surely to the suitors of the Court. But it is well known his lordship had not appointed any solicitor for the suitors of the Court, and they had no Notice, tho' here is a semblance or shew of what is done in other Cafes. We shall beg leave to shew next to your lordships, that these Orders on these Petitions, this Report, and these Proceedings, were not one of them entred or filed as Orders usually are.

Mr. Plummer. My lords, I beg leave to make one observation before this matter goes over. The petition is by Mr. Edwards only, one of the masters, and it is that my lord Macclesfield would be pleased to order him to accept of the Composition. None of the suitors of the Court, who were the persons entitled to receive the same, are petitioners.

Clerk reads two Certificates from, and signed by Edward Goldsbrough, Deputy Register, that there were no such orders entred, nor no such Report filed.

Mr. Lutwyche. My lords, the Composition is signed by William Wilson. I desire Mr. Edwards may be asked whether he knows Mr. Wilson's Hand?

Mr. Edwards. This is signed by Mr. Wilson; it is Mr. Wilson's Hand.

Clerk reads,

Whereas a suit in Chancery is now depending between Mr. Edward Poulter of Hackney, and myself, for the sum of 22060 l. 12 s. 5 d. which he agreed to pay me for and upon closing all accounts between us: And whereas Fleetwood Dormer, Esq; late a Master in the high Court of Chancery, being indebted to divers persons, suitors in the said Court, in several considerable sums of money, for and on account of money brought before and paid to him as one of the masters of the said Court, he the said Fleetwood Dormer, for the better payment thereof, did by Assignment dated the 26th of July 1721, assign over to Henry Edwards, Esq; one of the Masters of the said Court, a debt or sum of 24046 l. 4 s. which was and is due and owing from me to him the said Fleetwood Dormer: And whereas I being incapable of paying the said Debt of 24046 l. 4 s. did lately propose as a Composition for and in full Discharge of the same, to assign to the said Henry Edwards the sum of 10000 l. part of the sum of 22060 l. 12 s. 5 d. due to me from the said Edward Poulter, as aforesaid; and likewise to pay to him the said Henry Edwards, the sum of 1463 l. 2 s. 1 d. in specie, over and above the sum of 560 l. before paid to the said Mr. Dormer, in part of the said faid Composition: And whereas on a petition prefer'd to the Right Honourable the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by the said Henry Edwards, representing the matter of the said proposal; and after several subsequent proceedings had upon the said petition, his lordship was pleas'd, by Order dated the third of August, 1722, to order the said Henry Edwards to accept of the said Composition: And the said Henry Edwards having thereupon agreed to accept of the said Composition, accordingly I do hereby, in Consideration thereof, assign over to the said Henry Edwards the sum of ten thousand pounds, part of the sum of twenty two thousand and sixty pounds, twelve shillings and five pence, due to me from the said Edward Poulter as aforesaid, having already paid him, the said Mr. Edwards, the other sum of 1463 l. 2 s. 1 d. before-mentioned. And I do hereby promise to pay to the said Henry Edwards, Esq; or his order, the said sum of ten thousand pounds, on my recovering the sum of twenty two thousand and sixty pounds, twelve shillings and five pence aforesaid, or otherwise to pay him a like proportion of what I shall recover, more or less, from the said Edward Poulter. And I do hereby further promise, that I will not do any Act to incumber or discharge the Demand I now have against the said Edward Poulter, without the Consent of the said Henry Edwards. And whereas the said Mr. Edwards does now accept of the said Composition, I do hereby declare and agree, that if I do not on Demand pay him the before-mentioned proportion of what I shall recover from the said Edward Poulter as aforesaid, or do any ways discharge the Demand I now have against him, without the Consent of the said Henry Edwards, that then the said Composition so made by the said Edwards, shall be void, and of no effect, as if it had never been made. And I do hereby further promise, I will at my own Charge prosecute the said suit, and also do and execute all further and other acts that shall be necessary for the better assigning to the said Henry Edwards, Esq; the before-mentioned proportion of what I shall or may recover as aforesaid, from him the said Edward Poulter, as he the said Henry Edwards shall at any Time require. Witness my Hand this twenty eighth Day of August, 1722.

William Wilson.

31st of October, 1724. Paid to Henry Edwards, Esq; the sum of one thousand pounds, in part of this Note or Assignment.

William Wilson.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, this Composition which hath been read to your Lordships, is recited to be in full Satisfaction and Discharge of Wilson's Debt. Now we beg leave Mr. Edwards may be asked, whether he made any Application to the Earl of Macclesfield, before the first petition was preferr'd?

Mr. Edwards. My Lords, I had received proposals from Mr. Wilson, he came to me and told me, he had a sum of money in his Hands, and was willing to pay the Debt to Mr. Dormer, in proportion with his other Creditors, and asked me whether I would accept of a Composition, and give him a Discharge in full. I told him I had no power to make a Composition, but however I would represent it to some of the masters; and accordingly I spoke to Mr. Hiccocks, who was then senior master, and told him the proposal Mr. Wilson had made; and I believe I mentioned it to others, but especially to Mr. Hiccocks, he being the senior master, and more particularly concerned in Mr. Dormer's affairs. Mr. Hiccocks was of Opinion I could not safely make a Composition. I asked, What method then was the most proper to be taken? if that was really all he had to pay, I had better secure that than have nothing. He said he did not see why it might not be in this Case as in other cases; whether upon a petition to my Lord Chancellor, he might not direct an Enquiry to be made by a master, whether it was for the Benefit of the parties to make such composition or not. Upon that I waited on my Lord Chancellor, and acquainted him with Mr. Wilson's proposal. I told his lordship, I thought I had not power to do it. He said, I think so too; I don't see that you have power to do it. Said I, I am informed that it is usual in cases of this Nature, to apply to the Court by petition, that it may be refer'd to a master, to see whether the accepting of this composition be for the Benefit of the parties concerned or not. Yes, says my lord, I think that is very proper, that will indemnify you, I would have you prefer a petition; which accordingly I did.

Mr. Lutwyche. I would beg leave to ask in Relation to what he mentions, that it was taken Notice of that he had no power to make such composition, whether any thing was said whether my lord Macclesfield had such a power?

Mr. Edwards. No, there was nothing said of that.

Mr. Plummer. My lords, I desire he may be asked, whether any of the suitors were acquainted with this intended composition?

Mr. Edwards. No.

Mr. Sol. General. Did my lord Macclesfield give any Direction to give Notice to any of the suitors?

Mr. Edwards. No.

Mr. Plummer. My lords, I desire he may be asked if he himself attended Mr. Hiccocks when Mr. Wilson was before Mr. Hiccocks?

Mr. Edwards. I am not sure I was there at any time with Mr. Wilson.

Mr. Plummer. If he knows what methods were taken to know what Mr. Wilson was worth?

Mr. Edwards. I understood that Mr. Hiccocks and Mr. Rogers, the two senior masters, upon Mr. Dormer's absenting himself, had Mr. Dormer's accompts laid before them, and that they were directed to inspect those matters; and I was informed they did look into Dormer's Books, and had also the perusal and inspection of Mr. Wilson's Books, to see how Mr. Dormer's affairs stood in those Books.

Mr. Plummer. My lords, I desire Mr. Edwards may be asked if any Body was employed for the suitors on their Behalf?

Mr.

Mr. Edwards. I was before Mr. Hiccocks, but not present with Mr. Wilson.

Mr. Plummer. I ask if any Body on the suitors Behalf was before Mr. Hiccocks, when Mr. Wilson was there, to see and cross-examine him?

Mr. Edwards. I don't remember there was.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My lords, I desire Mr. Edwards may be asked whether this petition is of his own Hand-writing?

Mr. Edwards. No, my lords.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Do you know whose it is?

Mr. Edwards. It is my Clerk's Hand.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether the two last lines were struck out before the answer to the petition, and by what Hand?

Mr. Edwards. I don't know when they were struck out.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we will beg leave to mention what it is. At the End of the first petition, the master desires an indemnification by the Order of the Court: Part of the petition is, that he may be indemnified and saved harmless in making such Composition. But that is struck out before the answer, which shews, as I humbly apprehend, the very Notice that the Earl of Macclesfield himself took, how dangerous and hazardous that Transaction was.

Read the Words.

Clerk reads. And that your petitioner may be indemnified and saved harmless in making such Composition.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Do these Words stand now in the Reading?

Clerk. No, they are razed out.

Mr. Edwards. I remember this was a paper that I laid before the honourable Committee. I was a little surprized to see those Words struck out; but when they were struck out I can't say, nor by whom.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, if they were struck out before he delivered the petition into the Committee?

Mr. Edwards. Yes they were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, we desire he may be asked how much he hath received of this Composition?

Lord Lechmere. I desire him to explain himself, whether these Words were struck out after the petition delivered, and before the order made by the noble Earl?

Mr. Edwards. My Lords, I don't remember ever to have taken Notice, that those Words were struck out, till I had occasion to look for it to lay it before the Committee.

Lord Lechmere. Whether he hath any Doubt whether they were struck out before they were delivered into the Committee?

Mr. Edwards. They were struck out before I delivered them into the Committee.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In whose custody was this petition?

Mr. Edwards. I believe part of the time in Mr. Hiccocks's; Mr. Hiccocks sent it to me, and I have had it ever since.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether he struck out these Words that were inserted for his own indemnification?

Mr. Edwards. No, upon my oath I did not.

Earl of Abingdon. As I apprehend, there was no Commission of Bankruptcy against Wilson, therefore I would know what method was taken to inform the Court of the real Substance and Ability of Wilson before this Composition was made?

Mr. Edwards. I know of no other Application made to the Court by Mr. Wilson.

Earl of Abingdon. Was Wilson examined upon Oath?

Mr. Edwards. Mr. Hiccocks told me that Mr. Wilson had made an Affidavit, that this Sum of money which he proposed as a composition, was what he was able to pay in proportion with the rest of his creditors, and that he grounded his Report thereupon.

Mr. Lutwyche. Was this Affidavit ever filed?

Mr. Edwards. No, my lords.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My lords, we desire he may give an Account how much he hath received of this ten thousand pounds.

Mr. Edwards. The first Sum was fourteen hundred and odd pounds, and the Sum of one thousand pounds since.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How much of this was of the ten thousand pounds?

Mr. Edwards. Only the one thousand pounds.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is become of Poulter?

Mr. Edwards. Wilson hath told me that he is in Holland or France.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was his character, as to substance at the time of his composition?

Mr. Edwards. I never met any Body that could give an Account of his Character. All I heard of him was from Mr. Wilson himself.

Mr. Lutwyche. My lords, I desire he would acquaint your lordships when the one thousand pounds was paid?

Mr. Edwards. I can't recollect exactly the Time.

Mr. Lutwyche. As near as you can, before or since Christmas?

Mr. Edwards. I believe it was in September or October last; I believe in October.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I desire Mr. Edwards may inform your lordships what he thought of Poulter, at the Time of the composition, whether he looked upon him as a man of substance?

Mr. Edwards. I could make no Judgment of the man, I never saw him before; I know nothing of him, otherwise than as Mr. Wilson told me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That is no Answer to my Question, which is what his opinion was as to his substance at the time of the composition, whether he would have trusted him with one hundred pounds?

Mr. Edwards. I can't tell what Answer to give to it; Wilson represented him to me as a man able to pay the Debt; and from his Representation I believed that Poulter was sufficient.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Whether he enquired into Poulter's Character?

Mr. Edwards. There was no Body I knew to enquire of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he enquire, or did he not?

Mr. Edwards. I asked Mr. Wilson as many questions as I could, and what his opinion was about him. He told me he believed he was able to pay his Debts, and he told me one Helbut a Jew, who was

was his Bail, could tell his Substance. I happen'd to meet Helbut at the Rainbow Coffee-House, and I ask'd him if he knew Poulter. He said Yes. Says I, Is he a man of any Substance, What is he? No, says he, I believe he is in very mean Circumstances. This is all I ever ask'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was your Opinion of this Man's Abilities?

Mr. Edwards. My Lords, I told you that as to the account I had of him, Mr. Wilson gave me a great assurance that he was a Man of Ability.

Mr. Plummer. I desire he may be ask'd, whether Mr. Wilson hath not paid his whole Debt to several other Creditors?

Mr. Edwards. I am inform'd he hath paid his full Debt to some Creditors.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, I desire he may be ask'd, what Directions he receiv'd from my Lord Macclesfield to inquire into this Man's Circumstances?

Mr. Edwards. I had no Directions.

Mr. Plummer. Whether any inquiry was made by the Earl of Macclesfield?

Mr. Edwards. Not as I know of.

Mr. Lutwyche. I think he mentioned one Helbut as his Bail: I desire to know whether there was a Suit commenced for this Debt assign'd?

Mr. Edwards. I understood it was for this Debt assign'd, which Wilson recovered at Law.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I desire he may be ask'd, whether Mr. Poulter hath appeared here and been esteemed solvent, or a Person quite gone away?

Mr. Edwards. I have not seen Mr. Poulter, nor any that have seen him, for some considerable Time.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I beg leave to make one Observation, and it is to save your Lordships Time; that is, That you would be pleas'd to observe in the Proceedings upon this Article, the several Acts and Orders made by the Earl of Macclesfield relating to this Deficiency of Dormer's, do take Notice of his Deficiency, and you'll find the Earl himself doing one Act which makes a Deficiency; that is, compounding a Debt due from Wilson to Dormer; and therefore those Orders having been read before your Lordships, you will please to retain them in your memory, till we come to the 6th Article, wherein it is charged that there was a Deficiency in Dormer's Office, and there we shall shew that this noble Lord declared that he never knew of any Deficiency; and by an Order made in Court, pronounced by himself, he then did direct that a Master should inquire if there was any Deficiency in this Office; so that those publick Acts won't be necessary to be read over again upon that Article, but as now produced, will be sufficient to prove the Notice the noble Earl had of this Deficiency, and that even he made part of the Deficiency himself.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we have done upon these two Articles we have opened.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, if the Gentlemen have done, we desire to ask some Questions, and first we beg leave that he may be ask'd, whether any of the masters were acquainted with this Agreement or Composition with Mr. Wilson.

Mr. Edwards. I don't remember that any were, but Mr. Hiccocks.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we desire he may recollect whether there was any Consultation between him and any other master, as to the manner that this Composition should be made, before it was accepted, and whether it was a reasonable Composition or not?

Mr. Edwards. I mentioned it to two or three other masters at the publick Office, but I can't charge my memory particularly who they were.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Was that before the Time that the Composition was made?

Mr. Edwards. Before the Time I applied to my Lord Macclesfield.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, I desire that Mr. Edwards may inform your Lordships from whom it was that he received this Information, that several of the Creditors of Wilson were paid their full Debts?

Mr. Edwards. The first Person that informed me was Sir Laurence Carter; I happened to be at his Chambers, and naming to me the Affair of Wilson, he told me his Brother Mr. Thomas Carter had received 120*l.* which Mr. Wilson owed him, and which was his whole Sum.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire to know when it was that he received that Sum?

Mr. Edwards. There was no Time mentioned when that was paid him: As near as I can recollect the Time, when Sir Laurence Carter told me this, it was soon after the Composition.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, I desire he may recollect, whether this Payment was made before the Composition or after; did not he say it was before the Composition?

Mr. Edwards. No, I don't remember that.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, whether he knows any thing of this Payment to Mr. Carter of his own Knowledge?

Mr. Edwards. No, I don't know it of my own Knowledge, but I believe it to be very true.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Since he had this Information of one Debt being paid intirely, tho' he had compounded with others, I desire he may be ask'd whether he ever charged Mr. Wilson with it?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, my Lords, I did: A little after I went to Mr. Wilson, and I told him that I was informed he had paid Mr. Thomas Carter his full Demand, and it was rumoured about that he had paid several others their full Debts, and that it look'd unfair. Says he, this Money was lent me by my particular Friend, to pay off some little straggling Debts to keep me up in my Business, and therefore I was unwilling he should lose it.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Whether did he apprehend this to be a new Debt contracted since his Failure, or an old one due before?

Mr. Edwards. I don't know when the Debt was contracted.

Mr. Com. Serj. I apprehend he says, that this money was lent him by some Friends to set him up again?

Mr. Lutwyche. Really, my Lords, we would not interrupt the Gentlemen, but I take it, what they are going on with is not Evidence. We must submit it, whether what Mr. Wilson said is Evidence, either on the one Side or on the other?

Mr. Com. Serj. We must humbly be in your Lordships Judgment, whether this kind of Evidence be not as proper on our Side as on the other? most of the Evidence Mr. Edwards has given to affect the noble Earl, has been only Informations he has had from Wilson or Sir Laurence Carter, and yet now the learned manager objects the same Information must not be admitted as Evidence on the other Side. I apprehend if any Favour is to be shewn on either Side, it should rather go on in the support of Innocence.

Lords. Go on, go on.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, we don't oppose their going on, we only beg leave to set your Lordships right. We did not give a Tittle of Evidence of what Mr. Wilson said: We have proved the Petitions, we have proved the Orders, we have proved the Facts; we did not mention a Word of Sir Laurence Carter, it sprung from this Examination; but we are willing they may go on, if your Lordships think fit.

Earl of Macclesfield. My Lords, I apprehend there is no Occasion to give your Lordships any trouble. If what this Gentleman hath said, with relation to Mr. Wilson's Payment to his Creditors, is no Evidence, it needs no Answer.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Edwards may inform your Lordships, whether or no there was any Consultation among the Masters relating to this matter, and what their Opinion was?

Mr. Edwards. I don't know of any Consultation about it.

Mr. Com. Serj. We desire that he may inform your Lordships, whether he made any Acknowledgment for his being admitted into his Office, and to whom this money was paid, and to what Purpose, and how applied?

Mr. Edwards. My Lords, the Steps I took to be admitted into my Office, if your Lordships will give me leave to trouble your Lordships with the Narrative, were these. First, I applied to Mr. Godfrey one of the Masters, with whom I had most Acquaintance: I told him I heard Mr. Dormer's Office would be disposed of; he told me he believed it would. Says I, if I could be accepted I have some Thoughts of treating for it. What is the usual method in those Cases to be recommended to my Lord Chancellor? Says he, you must apply to my Lord's Secretary Mr. Cottingham; accordingly I did, and I told Mr. Cottingham that I had heard Mr. Dormer's Office was to be disposed of. Mr. Cottingham told me it was to be disposed of. I then talk'd to him about the Terms. Mr. Cottingham told me, As to the Price and the Person, my Lord Macclesfield had left it intirely to the other masters; for whatsoever that Place could fetch, was intended to go towards making up Mr. Dormer's Deficiency.

Upon that, my Lords, I went again to Mr. Godfrey, and after a meeting or two, I concluded to give five thousand Pounds if I could be admitted. Whether Mr. Godfrey, or Mr. Cottingham, or who went to my Lord I can't tell. I had not the Honour to see my Lord till I was admitted: But upon these Terms I was approved. I had Directions, I can't say whether Mr. Godfrey or Mr. Cottingham gave me the Directions, that I should pay my money into the Hands of Mr. Rogers the then senior master; accordingly I did pay five thousand Pounds, and in three or four Days after I had the Honour to be admitted and sworn in.

Mr. Strange. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, whether at the time of his Admission any Presents were made by him to the Earl of Macclesfield or to his Secretary?

Mr. Edwards. None at all, but the Secretary's Fees as usual in those Cases.

Mr. Strange. Whether at the Time he agreed to pay the Sum of five thousand Pounds for the Office, he knew how the money was to be apply'd?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, Mr. Godfrey told it me when I went back to him from Mr. Cottingham; I remember to have asked him several Questions, and made him several Proposals relating to the Office, for we differed a great deal about its Value; I think I first proposed three thousand Pounds for it; but he disliking that and some other Offers I made him, I desired to know how much it was that my Lord Macclesfield insisted upon? to which he answered, that it was not my Lord's Intention to take any thing for the Admittance, but that he had left it to the Disposal of the Masters, to make the most of it for the Benefit of the Office.

Mr. Com. Serj. Whether he knows how this money was disposed of, and to what Use employed?

Mr. Edwards. I can't remember the Time, but some short Time before Mr. Rogers surrendred his Office, he paid me back this five thousand Pounds which I in a little Time paid to the Suitors of the Court.

Mr. Strange. Whether before he surrendred his Office, he had any Discourse with the masters how Mr. Dormer's Debts were secured?

Mr. Edwards. No otherwise than upon this Treaty. I told Mr. Cottingham, I hear there is a Discourse of a Deficiency in Mr. Dormer's Office; says he, I believe there is, but how much I can't tell; but that can be no Objection to you, because you are to answer for no more than you receive. Matters are all settled and taken Care of, that what Deficiency soever there is shall be made good.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. By whom?

Mr. Edwards. He did not say by whom, or in what manner.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Had you any Discourse with any other master?

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, I beg leave to make one Observation. The Counsel says with any other master, and the Gentleman at the Bar says it was Mr. Cottingham told him so.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. This Gentleman I am examining amining is one of the Masters, therefore it is not improper to ask whether he had any Discourse with any other of the Masters?

Mr. Edwards. I made the same Objection to Mr. Godfrey, and he answered me much the same. Mr. Godfrey said he could not tell what the Deficiency was, but whatsoever it was, that would be all settled and made good.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. As he had this Discourse with Mr. Godfrey, I desire he may be ask'd, whether he hath not likewise had some Discourse with Mr. Rogers how this Deficiency was to be made good?

Mr. Edwards. No, I don't remember I had any Discourse with Mr. Rogers.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, I desire he may inform your Lordships, whether at any other time he had any Discourse with any of the masters about this matter?

Mr. Edwards. My Lords, I often talk'd upon this Subject with the masters, as a matter which very much concern'd my Office. This I mention'd at the time I came in. They were then all of Opinion that this Deficiency was to be made good. I don't remember that any Body told me in what method or particular way it was to be made good.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he would inform your Lordships, as near as he can remember, whether it was said that it would be made good, or that it was to be made good?

Mr. Edwards. I can't remember the distinct Words, I took it to have the same tendency and meaning.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be ask'd, whether he hath not several times and on many Occasions heard the masters declare, that this Deficiency was to be made good, and by the masters?

Mr. Edwards. I have heard them several times declare, that they did not doubt but it would be made good; but I never heard them say that it would be made good by the masters. I have often heard the masters say they would not make it good.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be ask'd, whether about the time that the masters advanced the five hundred Pounds apiece, he did not hear them declare how this Deficiency of Dormer was to be made up?

Mr. Edwards. My Lords, when I came into the Office, I think the very Day that I was admitted, Mr. Rogers paid five hundred Pounds; eight more paid five hundred Pounds apiece, some at one time, some at another; they did not all pay at the same time. That I heard was to go towards making up this Deficiency; but how far the masters intended to contribute further, I can't say.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may inform your Lordships, whether he did not apprehend that the making up of this Deficiency was a great Concern to him?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, I think it hath been of a great Concern to me.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire to know then how it comes to pass that he inquired no more into it?

Mr. Edwards. My Lords, I remember I was once asking some Questions relating to that Account, and it was told me, that the State of this Deficiency had been laid before my Lord Chancellor before I was admitted. Upon that I did conclude, that this contribution of the masters, of five hundred pounds apiece, had been in Concert with my Lord Chancellor. I understood it to be so; I don't know whether my Lord gave Orders that it should be so.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked who it was that told him so?

Mr. Edwards. I think Mr. Hiccocks told me so.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we have done.

Mr. Robins. I desire to know what Answer Mr. Hiccocks gave to the Questions he asked?

Mr. Edwards. Only that my Lord was acquainted with it, and had the State of Mr. Dormer's Office laid before him.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, if they have done, we only beg leave to observe, that they have been establishing the Notice of this whole Deficiency on the Earl, upon the first Vacancy in the Office, even before Mr. Edwards came in; so that the whole Transaction afterwards proceeded upon a full Notice of the Circumstances and State of the Office. The Evidence of the Contribution of the masters, and of the Earl of Macclesfield, towards making good this Deficiency, prevents, in a great measure, our bringing any Proof to the fifteenth Article, which is now going to be opened.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, if they have done, I only beg leave to observe, that the very letting Mr. Edwards pay his five thousand Pounds to the Deficiency of the Office, and my Lord Macclesfield's not taking it to his own Use, is a sufficient Proof of his Knowledge of the Deficiency. And as to this Composition, I have one Question more to ask. I think he says he mention'd it to two or three masters; I desire to know if he did so, and whether they approved it?

Mr. Edwards. I think one of the two or three masters was Mr. Lighboun. He was there, and he did say, as I remember, that he thought we might as well lose the whole, as take so small a part of such a Debt.

Mr. Plummer. I desire another Question, and that is, if he consulted any of Mr. Wilson's Creditors before he made this Composition?

Mr. Edwards. No, my Lords, I did not know any of them.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. How much did he receive in the whole from the masters?

Mr. Edwards. I received five hundred Pounds from nine of them.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Did any of the masters, and which, refuse?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, Mr. Lighboun refused.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. For what Reason?

Mr. Edwards. That I can't tell; he did not give any particular Reason.

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, I believe it may be necessary to trouble your Lordships with asking another Question: Whether this Discourse in relation to this Composition, was before or after the Composition was made?

Mr. Edwards. I believe it was before.

Mr.

Mr. Com. Serj. Then I desire to know whether Mr. Edwards, upon that or any other Occasion, acquainted the noble Earl of it?

Mr. Edwards, No, I don't remember I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, I believe we have done with these two Articles.

Sir John Rusbout. My Lords, the Commons proceed to the fifteenth Article against Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, and they have entrusted me to lay open to your Lordships the Subject matter of this, and the two ensuing Articles, and the Nature of the Evidence they think proper to produce to make good the Charge in these Articles; by which it will appear to your Lordships very fully, that the Crimes charged upon the Person at your Bar, which have already been manifested in so many Instances, did not proceed from mistake, or mere Negligence; altho' these would have been Faults not excuseable in a Person placed in so high a Station, but that they were the Effects of Art and Contrivance, formed to carry on and promote a corrupt and illegal Gain and Advantage to himself.

It may seem at first sight very surprizing, and may not readily obtain Belief with your Lordships, that a Person raised by his Majesty's abundant Goodness, to Stations of so great Honour and Profit, who had received large Additions to a plentiful Income by successive and repeated Grants from the royal Bounty, that such a Person should condescend to receive, much more that he should use Arts and Stratagems to obtain further Supplies to his insatiable Thirst of lucre.

But this your Lordships will plainly see to be the Case, when we have given our Proofs to the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth Articles. Your Lordships have already heard that there was a very great deficiency and loss of the Suitors money in the Office of Mr. Dormer, a late master in the Court of Chancery; that the Earl at your Bar then presiding in that Court, well knew that there was such a Deficiency; that instead of applying Remedies to redress the Evil, he made use of several Methods to cover and conceal it; it being very obvious for him to reflect, that, if such a Deficiency was publicly known, and not effectually remedied, none would ever after purchase a master in Chancery's Place, at least not at such exorbitant Prices to which the Purchase had lately been raised.

What then must be done? here was like to be an entire Stop put to this Branch of Revenue which had yielded so plentifully, and proved so beneficial to his Lordship.

The Contrivance therefore is to oblige the masters, who had already paid for their Places, to pay again towards making good this Deficiency, and by an artful drawing them to a Compliance in this Point, to conceal and continue the mischief.

This is what the Commons charge in the fifteenth Article, that the Earl of Macclesfield, to conceal the Deficiency in Mr. Dormer's Office, did order several masters of the Court to bring in their Accounts of the Cash, Effects, and Securities belonging to the Suitors which were in their Hands, with Intent to terrify the masters thereby, so far, as to oblige them to contribute large Sums to answer the Demands of that Office: And further to engage them to a Compliance in that Respect, he represented to them, that unless they would do it, the money and effects of the Suitors would be taken out of their Hands: That by this means he did induce nine of the masters to contribute five hundred Pounds apiece, which several of them did, out of the Suitors money in their Hands; and this being done, they were never obliged to bring in their Accounts.

What Answer is given to this Charge? The Answer hath been read, and I need not trouble your Lordships with a Recital of it. But the Earl admits that he gave such Orders that the masters should bring in their Accounts:

That several masters did afterwards pay and contribute as is charged:

That they were not afterwards obliged to bring in their Accounts:

But then in Excuse he alledges, That this was not done to terrify the Masters to make any Contribution to the Demands on Dormer's Office:

That what they did contribute, he believes they paid freely, and out of their own money:

That he believes he follow'd therein a Precedent of the like Nature in the Failure of Dr. Eddisbury:

That he continued to call for the Accounts, but was convinced how tedious a Work it would be, what Obstruction it would give to the Business of the Court; so he laid it aside: And observes, that what is lately done with respect to the Accounts of the Masters, shews the insuperable Difficulties of such an Undertaking.

From this Answer your Lordships may reflect, how just the Observation is, that the Commons have made in their Replication, when they say, the Earl of Macclesfield hath industriously avoided giving a direct and particular Answer to several matters positively and certainly alledged against him, which from the Nature of the Facts themselves must necessarily lie in his own Knowledge.

For he admits the Fact charged upon him by the Article; but to that part of it which charges that this was done to conceal the Deficiency in Dormer's Office, he makes no Answer at all.

And where the Article charges, that in order to obtain what is own'd to be done, he did represent to the masters, that unless they would comply, the money and effects of the Suitors should be taken out of their Hands; to this likewise he makes no Answer.

My Lords, It may be difficult for me who am little conversant in Law Proceedings, to lay this matter in its strongest light before your Lordships. But I take the Case to be this.

The Commons charge, that the Earl of Macclesfield, to conceal the Deficiency in Dormer's Office, order'd the masters to bring before him their Accounts of the Suitors Effects, and threatened that unless they would contribute towards that Deficiency, those Effects should be taken out of their Hands: They contribute, the matter is dropt, and no Accounts are ever brought before him.

The Earl acknowledges that he ordered those Accounts to be brought before him; that upon his giving that Order several masters contributed 500*l.* apiece, and that afterwards the bringing the Accounts was dropt; that this was done to conceal Dormer's Deficiency, and procured by the menace of taking the Effects of the Suitors out of the Hands of the masters cannot be denied: What part of the Charge then remains unadmitted? I must submit it to your Lordships, whether, upon what the Earl hath allowed in exprefs terms by his Answer, as well as what he hath admitted by not answering at all, the whole Charge of this Article doth not stand confessed, and the Commons might demand Judgment against the Earl, upon this Article, on his own Confession.

But the Earl adds some things by way of Excuse, I suppose, or Extenuation of the Offence; how immaterially and how evasively your Lordships will soon observe.

He denies, that the ordering the masters to bring in their Accounts, was done to terrify them to make any Contribution towards Dormer's Deficiency, and yet there is not the least Appearance of any other End or Design, for which it could be done; nor does he mention, or so much as pretend to any other End which with the least Colour of Reason could be intended by it; he says, indeed, he had a mind to know the State and Condition of the several Offices, that he might be able to make proper Regulations concerning them; but the thing was dropt before he had this Knowledge given him, and before he made any one Regulation in the matter; and yet he solemnly declares that this was his real and whole Intention: If it was his Intention, how came he to alter it so soon? Could it not last till one Regulation was made in a matter which wanted it so much?

Your Lordships will from hence judge, That the Crime which the Commons charge upon the Person at your Bar was not a Sin of Ignorance; he was informed of the miscarriage of the Officers of his Court, he was conscious that it needed Regulation, he had sometime a Thought and Intention to make such Regulation; but, alas, it soon proved abortive, and the intended Reformation, however necessary for the Honour of the Court, as well as the Safety and Advantage of the Subject, was soon laid aside: A Conduct so weak and so greatly inconsistent, as not to be accounted for in any Person, who had not been capable of pleading Innocence and Pardon to the same Fact.

However his Lordship having found it necessary to excuse this proceeding with the masters, by pretending an Intention to make some Regulations concerning them; it became as necessary, in the next Place, to make some Apology for not proceeding to such Regulations.

And for this he says, that it would be a difficult and tedious Work:

That it would be an Obstruction to the business of the Court:

That what has been lately done shews the insuperable Difficulties of the Undertaking.

I may reasonably fear I should grow tedious to your Lordships if I should attempt to take notice of all the Inconsistencies, Inconsequences and Evasions in the Answer to this single Article.

Upon what account was the Person now at your Bar advanced to the highest Station of the Law; intrusted with the Distribution of Justice and Equity in his Majesty's supreme Court in Westminster-Hall, if it was not to secure the Property of the Subject to those to whom it did in Conscience belong? And upon what Account were the moneys brought into Court deposited with the masters, but only for safe Custody, till it appeared to whom Equity would determine the Right?

But when it was once manifest that those, who were employed in this trust, had shamefully broken it, and by notorious mismanagement were likely to bring Ruin to all the Suitors of the court, was it fit to cherish and cover up the Evil because it was a difficult and tedious Work to redress it? Was it likely to be less difficult by the Delay, or rather did not every Day propagate and increase the mischief, and make it less capable of Remedy? Or could any thing be more proper for the Business of the court?

Your Lordships have too great Sagacity not to discern the Weakness of such an Excuse, nor will you easily be persuaded to believe, That the Earl of Macclesfield was only going on in a Path his Predecessors trod before him, or that he is to be sheltered, because what hath been since done hath met with Difficulties in the Undertaking.

It is known, how upon the first Failure, in the Time of his Predecessors, an effectual Remedy was immediately applied; and that those, who have since attempted to give an helping hand, have prevented any new Eruption of the Evil complained of; and if the undertaking was attended with Difficulties, their care and commendable Zeal for the publick Service have already been able to surmount them in some measure; altho' the gross encouragements given by the Earl of Macclesfield had laid such a strong Foundation for those Difficulties, as if he had designed really to make them insuperable, that they might serve for such a Sort of Excuse as he now endeavours to draw from them.

But the Earl alleges further, that he believes the masters, who contributed towards Dormer's Deficiency, did it freely and out of their own money; and that in bringing them to contribute he followed the Precedent in Dr. Eddisbury's Case.

I need not trouble your Lordships long upon this Branch of the Article, since no one besides his Lordship can well believe the masters contributed freely; and the Proof we shall lay before your Lordships upon this Head will give full Satisfaction, that none of them did it freely, nor all of them out of their own money; nor is it the crime the Commons charge, that the masters were prevailed on to contribute towards the Deficiency; but that the Earl, whose high Station made it his Duty, when he was informed of the Deficiency, to take care to redress it, did not, as in the case of Dr. Eddisbury, provide that the whole money belonging to the Suitors should be effectually answered; but instead of following that Precedent in the just and honest use of it, he turned it to answer his own corrupt purposes, and to conceal from public notice, that loss to the Suitors which it was his Duty to have wholly prevented.

The next Article we proceed to is the sixteenth, which charges, that one Elizabeth Chitty having obtained an Order of the 17th of March, in the tenth Year of his present Majesty, whereby Mr.

Edwards, who succeeded in Mr. Dormer's office, was order'd to pay 1000*l.* part of a very large Sum due to her, which had been paid into Dormer's Hands; Mr. Edwards complained of this as an Hardship to him, who had never received the money; upon this the Earl would have persuaded the rest of the Masters to pay the money to prevent a Parliamentary Enquiry, and they refusing, he paid it himself to one Mr. Lochman for the use of the said Mrs. Chitty; with Intimations however, that she must not expect any more of the 10,000*l.* which had been paid on her account into Dormer's Hands.

Your Lordships will be surprized at the Detection here made both of the Guilt and the Boldness of the Offender; that the Person, who is so sensible of his Crime, as to tell the Masters this matter would affect both himself and them, who discerns the monstrous consequences of the mischief before him, who foresees the Punishment of that crime by a Parliamentary Enquiry; that this Person, instead of applying Remedies to the Evil, should use little Artifices only to conceal it.

What Answer gives the Earl to this charge? He admits the Order made, and that Mr. Edwards refused to pay the 1000*l.* that he himself paid the money, and told Lochmann that was all they must expect from him; but he does not believe he had any Discourse with the Masters to persuade them to pay the 1000*l.* to Lochmann.

Your Lordships must be convinced of the Guilt, when the Offender himself hath not the assurance to deny it; he cannot deny but that he knew and represented the consequences that would ensue what was done; that it would produce a Parliamentary Enquiry; that it would affect himself as well as the masters, and that it would hazard the Forfeiture of their Offices. Your Lordships have now an Opportunity to vindicate the Honour of Parliaments, and to leave this Instruction to Posterity; that those who foresee their unwarrantable actions will give occasion for a Parliamentary Enquiry shall not be able by any contrivances, by any means whatever, to evade the Justice of it.

As to the last part of this Article, which charges, That on a motion in a cause, Harper against Cafe and others, relating to 260*l.* which having been paid into Mr. Dormer's Hands was in Danger of being lost, the Earl falsely and deceitfully declared he had heard there was a Deficiency in Dormer's office, but knew nothing of it only as public News: The Commons will give sufficient Evidence to your Lordships of the Truth of this charge.

The Earl indeed gives a large Account of this cause and the Orders made in it, and then concludes, he believes he expressed himself to this Effect, That he had indeed heard of Dormer's Deficiency, but that it had never come judicially before him upon complaint of any of the Suitors of the court; that several circumstances taken Notice of at large had concurred thereto, and adds, that he said he did not know how all these things would come out, and expressed himself to that effect and no other; and upon all this Circumlocution in the Answer, without any denial of the Words as they stand charged, we have reason to believe your Lordships would be very well satisfied without further Proof, that the Words mentioned in the Article were undoubtedly used by the Earl of Macclesfield.

It is further observed by the Earl, that this happened after such time as the Masters Accounts had been laid before the Lords of the Council, and had been under the Examination of the Judges and others to whom they had been referred by his Majesty; and there may be some reason to doubt whether the Knowledge of a Deficiency had been so soon declared by his Lordship, if the Examination under which his Majesty's abundant Goodness and Care for his People had put those Accounts, had not already laid open and made a public Discovery of it.

The 17th Article charges, That tho' the Earl of Macclesfield knew of the great Deficiency in Dormer's office, yet to conceal it, in order to carry on his corrupt and unjust Designs, he made Orders upon Mr. Edwards for the payment of several sums, which were paid without Regard to the Proportion the rest of the Suitors were justly entitled to out of Dormer's effects, and consequently to their great loss and Prejudice: To this the Earl answers with his usual Candour, That he never endeavoured to conceal the Deficiency, but as he was under a full Persuasion it would in due time be made good; that he did not think it incumbent on him ex officio to make a Declaration of an Average; that he doth not know any Order was made by him for Mr. Edwards to pay Money lodged with Mr. Dormer, but believes several Orders were made by the Court for that Purpose.

Your Lordships upon the bare reciting the Words of the Answer, will perceive the Art and Fallacy of the Answerer; he doth not know any Order was made by him, but believes several were made by the Court; as if he could hope to make your Lordships believe, he was a Stranger to, and unconcerned in the Orders made by the Court, of which he was the only Judge.

He admits he did endeavour to conceal the Deficiency, but was persuaded it would be made good in due time, without acquainting your Lordships with any Grounds for that Persuasion, or even mentioning when he thought that due time would come.

He intimates it was incumbent to make a Declaration of an Average, but thought it not incumbent upon him to make it ex officio: He could not deny it to be the most equal rule, that if a loss was inevitable, an Average ought to be made; that the loss might be born equally and in proportion among all: He could not deny the making Orders to pay some was inconsistent with, and destructive to this Equality; and he could not however think it incumbent on him to do this ex officio: and yet it belonged to no body's Office but his own to effect it.

Thus your Lordships may observe how, to every Article, the Answer either admits the charge or uses loose, general, or foreign Circumlocutions to evade it, when the Evidence of the Fact will not allow him to deny it; yet he would be thought to say something at least in excuse: But his Knowledge of your Lordships superiour Understanding, ought to have deterr'd him from all Expectations of imposing upon your Lordships by any little Shifts and Artifices of this kind; nor should he hope to pass here the Answer as sufficient which must have been reported contrary, If I am rightly informed of the Practice, by any of the Masters of his Court.

But

But I shall not longer detain your Lordships with Observations in matters in themselves so evident; what is admitted to every one of these three Articles is sufficient to justify the Charge of the Commons, and whatever remains but imperfectly admitted, we doubt not, by Witnesses and other Proofs, to make out to your Lordships entire Satisfaction.

My Lords, It is a Province enjoined me likewise, to maintain the Charge exhibited by the Commons of Great Britain, in the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth Articles of their Impeachment against Thomas Earl of Macclesfield. And it is with the greater Chearfulness I undertake that Province, since I come to demand that Justice, which your Lordships are always disposed to administer, to every Subject of Great Britain; and therefore I cannot but be fully assured of your just Inclinations, to do equal Right where it is demanded by the House of Commons, the Representative Body of the whole united Kingdom.

It is very strange, that the Earl now under Prosecution; who hath been so many Years within the Walls of this House; who hath so long been Witness of your Lordships great Integrity and Wisdom, should not thereby be deterred from attempting what might subject him to your Censure. But it is still more unaccountable, that a Person, who hath had so long Experience of that Judgment and Sagacity, whereby you skilfully distinguish between right and wrong, should hope, by the Artifice of Words, and loose, general, evasive Expressions; that he should ever hope, I say, my Lords, by such Fig-leaves as these, to hide himself from the Eyes of your Lordships impartial Justice.

The worthy Gentleman, who hath preceded me upon this Head, hath so fully open'd the several Articles now under Consideration, and hath so clearly detected the Sophistry and Insufficiency of the Answers that are given to them, that I shall not need to be long upon that Head; it would indeed be difficult to add any thing new to what hath already been observed, did not the innumerable Fallacies and Inconsistencies with which his Answer abounds, continually supply fresh Materials for Observation.

But I shall content myself only to take Notice upon the Answer to the fifteenth Article, that the Earl stands in a manner convicted by his own Confession: He admits the Fact, but would avoid the Consequence by saying, that he really intended to make the Masters bring in their Accounts, altho' he did not do it: If it was intended, why was it not done? It was a difficult and a tedious Work.

I am surprized, my Lords, to find that any Person should expect to satisfy your Lordships, by so weak, and frivolous an excuse.

A Person who presides in the highest Court in Westminster-Hall, is informed of some unwarrantable Practices of the Officers to whom the money of the Suitors is intrusted, which for want of due Care hath already proved very pernicious, and must in Time prove destructive to the Property of all the Suitors of that Court, unless some speedy Check be put to this growing Evil: is convinced the matter needs Regulation; but he lets it go on, because it would be a difficult and tedious Work to redress it.

In moral Evil, my Lords, the Continuation of the Practice of an ill Habit, because it is difficult to break it, is so far from extenuating, that it is justly esteem'd to aggravate the Fault; and I don't doubt but that your Lordships will have the same Sentiments in this Case; for since it was necessary to apply a Remedy, the sooner it was done the better, and the Difficulty of the Work should have been a Spur, rather than a Check to a vigorous Endeavour for redressing it.

In his Answer to the sixteenth Article, your Lordships will observe the same Prevarication spread through the whole: The Widow Chitty having a considerable Sum of Money, to which she was intitled, brought into Court, and deposited in Mr. Dormer's Hands for the safe Custody of it only, petitions for 1000 l. part of her own money; such a petition could not be denied entirely, without bringing on a speedy Enquiry of the Causes and Occasions of the Embezzlement which had happen'd in that Office; and the Discovery must have brought on a Necessity of remedying the Evil, that would thereby have been made so publick, and so notorious.

An Order therefore is granted, that the 1000 l. should be paid; but then the Difficulty is renew'd, how to make that Payment without discovering to the Publick the Mismanagement; which must have put a Stop to the Sale of the Masters Places, which were disposed of at exorbitant Prices, and brought in an immense, tho' illegal Gain. Mr. Edwards would not pay it; he had no money of Mr. Dormer's in his Hands; the next Application was made to the Masters of the Court, to see if they could be prevailed on once more to raise a Sum by Contribution amongst them; to this End they were told, that if they did not comply, Dormer's Deficiency would be discovered; and that might occasion a Parliamentary Inquiry, the Consequence of which might be, the Forfeiture of their Offices, bought contrary to the Statute of Edward the sixth: that this might affect himself a little, but them much more; all this my Lords, is charged in this Article, and not denied by the Earl, but in such a lamentable, evasive manner, as betrays more Guilt than an open, and ingenious Confession.

It passes my Observation, in that little View I have been able to make of past Times, that any Judge of a Court in Westminster-Hall, should own the Knowledge of so great a Crime in the Officers of his Court, as that they came into their Places contrary to Law, without any Censure, or Blame for it.

But that a Person raised by the unmerited Bounty of his Majesty, to preside in the highest Court there, to conduct the Administration of Justice agreeable to the Rules of Equity and good Conscience, as his Majesty's Vicegerent in that great Station; that such a Person should not only be conscious of the Illegality of the Masters obtaining their Places, and a Party to such Illegality, but should have the Assurance to make use of that as an Argument, to extort money from them, in order to prevent the Discovery, and the Punishment consequent thereto, will, I persuade myself, stir up in your Lordships the greatest Indignation.

It seems he apprehended the Terror of a Prosecution by Parliament might have some Effect upon them, and engage them to comply with his Demands, mands, altho' it had not the least Effect upon himself. It was a proper Expedient to bring them into a Contribution of 1000*l.* but it was not sufficient to deter him from those Practices, which justly merited such a Prosecution.

Our Ancestors thought it became them to keep in Awe the greatest Subjects in the Realm, and none were too big to be call'd to Account for the Wrongs and Injuries they did the Publick; the Case of Michael de la Pole in Richard the Second's Time, and Card. Woolsey in Henry the Eighth's, with many others, some of which have been already mention'd to your Lordships, are flagrant Instances of it. And we have now a just Opportunity of shewing, that we have the same Regard for the Honour of Parliaments, and the Good of the People; that no one ought to presume to transgress the Laws, be his Station, or his Power never so highly advanced, upon prospect of Impunity; since a British Parliament can reach the most lofty, and punish the most insolent, corrupt Offender: So that he, who is not restrained within the limits and boundaries of the Law out of Awe and Reverence to it, must expect to fall a Sacrifice to the Power of their Justice.

Your Lordships have here an Instance of one placed at the Head of the Law, who is conscious that his Actions are contrary to it; who makes no Scruple of avowing this, where it may serve his Interest, defies a Parliamentary Inquiry, and goes on in Practices which he knows, and professes to be illegal. Your Lordships will observe how he endeavours to shelter himself from Danger, and by an infamous Degree of Dissimulation; what he openly avows, to raise a Contribution from the Masters of the Court, he more publickly denies, with Design to carry a plausible appearance in this Affair to the People.

The Deficiency of Dormer at last became a publick Clamour; it was not Mrs. Chitty only, but many others wanted their Money deposited and entrusted in the Hands of the Court, and by the Court entrusted to the Custody of the Masters; and the Suitors then made open Complaint upon this Subject. In the Cause therefore of Harper and Case, a motion being made, that 260*l.* lodged in Dormer's Hands might be paid before the Execution of the Conveyance, directed by the Court; he who had been so long inform'd of the shameful Embezzlement of the Money of the Suitors in Dormer's Office, who had invented so many artful Contrivances to conceal the Knowledge of it from the Publick, in order to serve his own private, unjust, corrupt Designs, the matter being now declared in open Court, he could no longer deny the Knowledge of what he was so plainly inform'd of; that therefore all By-standers might imagine his Care and Concern for the publick Good was so extraordinary, that he could not have forbore to have remedied the mischief if he had been before apprized of it; he then publickly and falsely declared that he had heard there was a Deficiency in Dormer's Office, but that he knew nothing of it but as publick News. In the Earl's Answer, my Lords, he explains this Expression, by saying, that it never came judicially before him upon the Complaint of any of the Suitors of the Court: This I am persuaded your Lordships will think a very poor Excuse, that he who was the Protector of all the Fortunes of the Fatherless and Lunatics, should not upon the first Intimation, or even Suspicion that they were like to be Losers, cause a strict Examination to be made into it.

It can scarce be believed a Person who has so great a Capacity to judge in what manner he ought to act, should ever descend to so low a Degree, so unworthy the Station in which he was placed, so unworthy the Dignity and Honour to which he had been advanced, as to deny the Knowledge (otherwise than as News and accidental Discourse) of what he had been so frequently inform'd of, and what he had taken Pains so long, and so deliberately to conceal.

I need not use any Words to represent to your Lordships the Indignity of such Prevarication, who will upon the first Intimation be sensible of every thing that may seem in the least Degree to depart from the Rules of Honour: It is indeed almost inconceivable, that a Person advanced to be a part of your noble Body, should so far forget himself and you; it is what, if he could have expressly denied by his Answer, we must have despair'd to have gain'd Credit in, tho' we could have proved it by inferior Witnesses; but his Answer will sufficiently convince your Lordships of the Truth of the Allegation; for he who could not directly deny a Charge of so gross a Crime, must by his own Silence, in a matter of so heavy a Nature, be concluded to be guilty of it.

I have already detain'd your Lordships so long upon this sixteenth Article, that I shall not take the liberty of trying your Patience by making any Observations upon the Seventeenth, but shall leave it to the Gentleman that is appointed to assist in it.

It contains only repeated Instances of a corrupt Endeavour, still to conceal the Knowledge of that Deficiency from the Publick, which it was his Duty to have prevented; or at least to have supplied, and rather to have made it good, than have conceal'd it. What Ground or Reason could there possibly be, why a mischief of this Kind, if it did happen by Accident, should with so much Industry be covered and continued? When that Concealment could answer no good or honest Purpose, but must by the Delay increase and grow more desperate, and tend to bring Destruction and Ruin on the Suitors of the Court?

But as your Lordships, by the Proofs upon the former Articles, had an Opportunity to take notice what large Sums of Money had been paid for the Purchase or Exchange of the Places of the Masters of the Court of Chancery; it is natural to conclude from thence, that the Masters were necessarily to be indulged in making use of the Suitors Money in their Hands, in order to make up the vast Sums they had given for their Offices; and if there had been miscarriages in Attempts of that Kind (which in bold Adventurers for such Ends could hardly be avoided) the Discovery of such a mischief would have made it absolutely necessary to have removed the Money from those who had proved such unfaithful Stewards, or at least to have obliged them to have given proper Securities to indemnify those, whose Fortunes were intrusted to their Care, from any loss which might happen by their mismanagement; the Consequence of which Caution must unavoidably have drawn on a Retrenchment trenchment of the exorbitant Prices which of late have been given for those Places.

But I need not give your lordships any further Trouble, by enlarging more upon this Topick, who ought rather to make Apology for having been already so long upon it; the Gentleman who went before me, and he that will follow me upon this Head, will be sufficient to give your lordships more ample Satisfaction; and the Certainty of the Facts (which the Earl himself seldom hath the Assurance to deny, but only attempts by false Colours to avoid the Inferences from them) will, where-ever there is need or occasion, be supported, and made good by full Evidence.

Mr. Thompson. My Lords, I am commanded by the Commons to assist in maintaining the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth Articles of their Impeachment. The Gentlemen who have gone before me, have acquitted me from giving your lordships any Trouble upon two of these Articles; and I count it my good Fortune that the third is fallen to my Lot, since the Evidence to prove the Charge contain'd in it, is so very clear and direct, that little need be said, either to shew the Necessity of the Accusation, or the Truth of the Facts alledg'd by the Commons.

Mr Lords, I will avoid, as much as I can, recapitulating any Evidence which has been opened before; but the Crimes of the unfortunate Earl of Macclesfield are so interwoven, that it may be sometimes necessary for me to look back upon Circumstances that have been spoken to upon other Articles.

The Commons in the seventeenth Article set forth, 'That the Earl very well knew there was a Deficiency in Mr. Dormer's Office, and that Mr. Edwards (his Successor) had not sufficient in his Hands to pay the whole money due to the Suitors.' My Lords, as to the Earl's Knowledge of this Deficiency, he admits it in his Answer, by saying, 'He never endeavour'd to conceal it:' and Mr. Edwards has not only declared upon Oath this Day at your Bar, there was a Deficiency, but also, 'That it was laid before my Lord before he was admitted.'

Yet 'Notwithstanding he very well knew it,' the Commons aver, 'That he did from time to time make Orders for the Payment of several Sums out of this Office,' and in support of this Charge, we shall produce divers of his Lordship's original Orders.

And, my Lords, I appeal to the Testimony of every master in Chancery, who has been, or may be examined before you; I appeal to your Lordships Observations upon the Evidence you have already heard, whether or no such Proceedings were not calculated, 'to carry on his unjust Designs, and to prevent a Parliamentary Enquiry.'

As to the latter part of the Article, 'That Sums were paid without any regard to, or consideration of the Proportion the rest of the Suitors were entitled to,' we shall not only prove the Fact, but shew likewise that this Partiality was not carried on inadvertently, but deliberately; that this unequal Distribution of Right did not flow from a supine Neglect, or careless Oversight, but sprung from a deprav'd Intention, and determin'd Corruption,

Mr. Edwards will acquaint your Lordships, that he forewarn'd the Earl of the Consequences that must follow from his Payments, who still bid him 'continue paying,' and Mr. Lightboun (reasoning with him as became a Person associated to the Chancellor) urg'd, 'that he did not think any measures justifiable in a Court of Equity, where- by any undue Preference might be given, and some have their whole money and others be left in the Lurch.'

So that this Misdemeanor, this Fraud, was in 'manifest and wilful Violation of the Trust re- pos'd in him,' a Trust, my Lords, (when faithfully executed) wherein consists the Glory and Happiness of this Kingdom. It is the Security of all our Properties, a Refuge for distressed Widows, and a Protection to helpless Orphans; and when the Commons saw that Oppression had possess'd the Seat of Justice, that Partiality had usurped the Throne of Equity, that the Guarantee for our Fortunes was become the Invader of them, they beheld it with Indignation and Horror, and have applied to your Lordships to demand Redress and Vengeance.

Now, my Lords, I beg your Attention, whilst I take a view of the Earl's Answer.

He says, 'He never endeavour'd to conceal Dormer's Deficiency.' You will hear that he did, and alledg'd, 'It would be for the Honour of the Court to conceal it.'

The accus'd Earl proceeds, 'As he was under a full Persuasion the same wou'd be made good.' I dare say the Earl of Macclesfield will at a proper time acquaint you what were the Grounds of this 'Persuasion.' The Commons observe, with the deepest Concern for the miserable Suitors, that they have met with no Foundation, no Colour of Reason to induce 'Them' to entertain such Hopes. On the contrary, the Master who succeeded to Mr. Dormer's Office frequently represented to the Lord Chancellor, 'The Hazards the Suitors were in from this Deficiency.'

Yet the Earl boldly asserts, that this very Master 'Mr. Edwards was under a firm Persuasion the whole would be made good.' We shall convince your Lordships he never had the least Prospect, the least Glimpse of it; and I'm afraid the Earl and he had just the 'same full and firm Persuasion of the State of this Office.'

The noble Lord goes on: 'And as no Application was made to him by Persons concern'd to stop Payment.' I suppose he means before that remarkable Motion which produc'd his extraordinary Declaration in open Court.

Perhaps the learned Lord will here make another notable Distinction, and explain by the Words 'Persons concern'd,' the 'Suitors only;' and have recourse to his old Subterfuge, 'That it never came judicially before him.' We think, and no doubt your Lordships will think so too, that 'Mr. Edwards was a Person concern'd;' that his pressing Applications ought to have been sufficient, and that our Evidence is not to be defeated by so weak an Evasion.

But admitting, my Lords, 'That the Earl had this full Persuasion, and that no Application was made to him to stop payment:' What Justification does he draw from thence? 'That he did not think it a Duty incumbent upon him, ex officio, to make a Declaration of an Average.'

How contradictory, my Lords, how inconsistent is this with his Answer to the fifteenth Article! There he pleads the Case of Dr. Eddisbury, and in that Case an Average was declar'd. The Precedent was follow'd to encourage Contribution, but was laid aside when it directed him to secure the Suitors their Proportions. Here I can't help observing, that, as the Earl has thro' the whole Series of his Actions copied Precedents from the worst Views, so he has now quoted them in the most disadvantageous manner. When his Predecessors took small Sums, he ventur'd by their Examples to swell his Demands to exorbitant Prices; but when their Patterns shou'd have led him to a nice and scrupulous Caution in the Choice of his Officers, he disdain'd to tread in their Footsteps. And, my lords, this Precedent was good for the corrupt Purpose of concealing a Deficiency, but ceas'd to be so, when it was to do Justice to the injur'd Suitors. He has turn'd his Weapons upon himself, and if Dr. Eddisbury guards him in one Article, he must of necessity wound him in another.

What I shall next take notice of in his Answer is, "That he does not know any Orders were made by him except in the Case of Chitty." That Case is attended with such Circumstances, and may be follow'd by such Consequences, that he has not yet, nor will, I dare say, soon forget it: However, I presume he will recollect others, when we produce his own original Orders for three several Payments, one of 400 l. another of 642 l. and a third of 2000 l.

This Evidence alone, my lords, would support this Article, but the Earl has thoroughly confirm'd the Charge in his next Sentence. "He believes Orders have been made by the Court."

Tho' his own Orders were criminal, Orders from the Court were innocent, till they received his Stamp of Guilt, who knowing the Condition of the Office, commanded "Payments to be made as Orders came in." The impeach'd lord (and were this his only Offence, therefore justly impeach'd) commanded these Payments.

His Defence is again become his Accusation. Orders from the Court wou'd have ended, had he suffer'd the Master to stop Payment, but that would have discover'd what he took such unwarrantable Pains to conceal; and from that Concealment arose the Injuries to the Suitors: that was the malignant Ground-work of his infamous Designs, and is now the Subject of our just Charge.

Certainly the Earl did not mean here obliquely to insinuate that he had a Sharer in his wicked Administration, or to bring another great Name in question with his: That were not for his Service. Characters, my Lords, receive their Lustre from their Foils.

My Lords, I have open'd to you, that we shall prove the Accusation contain'd in the Article, and enforce it from the Earl's Answer. If your Lordships find we have made good our Charge, I submit it to your Lordships what Judgment you will pass upon such "manifest and wilful Violations of the Rights of the Subject."

Far be it from me to add load to the Guilty; here indeed it is impossible. Crimes committed by a Lord Chancellor, are capable of no Aggravations; his Station enhances his Guilt. Such Crimes are now become a parliamentary Enquiry, as the Chancellor's conscious Heart long since pre-fag'd; and the Commons think they have shewn good Reason why your Lordships should convince the Earl of Macclesfield that he flatter'd himself with vain Hopes, when he menac'd the Masters, "That this Enquiry would affect him, but them much more."

The Commons are sensible, that he who has so long been a Stranger to Justice, will at last meet with it here; and that your Lordships providential Wisdom will never suffer such Reproaches to be cast upon this, as have been thrown out upon another Nation. "That a Judge is an Evening Wolf; that Justice standeth afar off, and Equity cannot enter."

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we beg leave to call our Witnesses in support of these Articles. We desire Mr. Conway may be call'd.

Mr. Conway call'd and sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My lords, we beg leave that Mr. Conway may be ask'd, whether he paid any money in the Nature of a Contribution, and when? We have the Receipt here (shewing it to Mr. Conway.)

Mr. Conway. My Lords, this is a Receipt given me by Mr. Edwards, Aug. 11, 1721. for the Sum of 500 l. contributed by me.

He reads the Receipt.

Aug. 11, 1721.

Receiv'd then of master Edward Conway, Esq; the Sum of 500 l. voluntarily contributed by him in Aid of the Deficiency of my Predecessor Fleetwood Dormer, Esq; in the Cash of his Office, which I promise to repay in case the same shall at any time hereafter be otherwise made good,

H. Edwards.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire he may be ask'd in what manner he paid it, whether it was out of his own money or stop'd out of any other money paid into Court?

Mr. Conway. Soon after, (my Lords) I was admitted a master, Mr. Dormer's Deficiency broke out; and the Contribution of the masters being then spoken of, I was among the rest applied to, to contribute: I was sworn in in January 1720, and this Receipt is in August 1721, when Mr. Edwards came to me to bring me some junior masters money, which he was to deliver to me, out of which he stop'd this 500 l. upon account of the Contribution which I had promis'd to come into.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We beg leave that Mr. Conway may be ask'd, whether the 500 l. was allowed or deducted at that time out of the Suitors money?

Mr. Conway. Yes, my Lords, it was stop'd by him at that time.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Persuasions were made use of to induce the masters to contribute to pay this money?

Mr. Conway. When the Affair of Mr. Dormer came out, what I can remember is, That letter that came from him from Holland was sent to Mr. Hol- ford to be read before the Masters in the publick Office, and there the Masters spoke of it what they thought proper.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Intimation was there from him, or from any other Person, of any Direction from my Lord Macclesfield relating to the Payment of this 500 l. Contribution?

Mr. Conway. I think my lord Macclesfield's Secretary was there at the time Mr. Dormer's letter was read. I think he had spoken what he had principally to say before I came in, but I think he said the Consequence might be fatal to the Masters, if we did not take care of this Deficiency.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We would not presume to interrupt the learned Managers; but I think the particular time when this was done, and the particular Sums that were paid by each Master should be stated. I remember Mr. Edwards was pleas'd to say the first 500 l. that was contributed was paid upon the Day he was sworn in, which I think was in May 1721. We desire therefore that he would please to express the Day, when every other Sum was paid in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We only desire this Gentleman to speak to his own Payment.

Mr. Conway. The Receipt is dated August 11, 1721. Then Mr. Edwards stopt so much Money.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire he may be asked how he paid that Money, whether voluntarily, or freely, or upon what Ground?

Mr. Com. Serj. I beg Pardon, but I must beg leave that the Witness may declare at what time this Transaction was.

Mr. Conway. It was the Day the Receipt bears Date, the Transaction happen'd Aug. 11, 1721.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We desire he may be ask'd what induced him to pay in this Sum?

Mr. Conway. It was stopt as a Contribution towards making up Mr. Dormer's Deficiency.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, we desire that this Witness may be ask'd, whether there was any preceding Promise or Agreement to pay this money?

Mr. Conway. My Receipt mentions a Promise.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Then I desire to know how long before this Promise was made?

Mr. Conway. Soon after the Deficiency was spoken of in Mr. Dormer's Office, in February 1720. about three Weeks after I was admitted.

Mr. Edwards called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we only call Mr. Edwards to ascertain the time when he received the Money of Mr. Conway for his Contribution.

Mr. Edwards. My Lords, according as I have taken it out of my Book, it was the 11th of August 1721.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Now, my Lords, we shall shew the manner how this Payment was made.

Then Mr. Lightboun was called and appeared.

Mr. Plummer. I desire Mr. Lightboun may be ask'd if he was ever press'd to pay 500 l. by whom, and for what?

Mr. Lightboun. Not long after Mr. Dormer's Failure, Mr. Cottingham—

Mr. Com. Serj. My Lords, I hope Mr. Lightboun shall mention the time as he goes along.

Mr. Lightboun. Not long after the Failure of Mr. Dormer, I met Mr. Cottingham by accident at my Lord Chancellor's Room at Westminster, and he ask'd me, whether there had been mentioned to me a Proposal of paying or advancing 500 l. a piece towards making up the Deficiency of Mr. Dormer's Office, for carrying on the Business there? I said I had heard it; he said it was proposed that it should be immediately raised, that the Business of the Office might be carried on, till Mr. Dormer's Effects could be disposed of and sold; and some Intimation was given, that possibly we might have our money again as Dormer's Effects came in. I have heard such a Thing talk'd of, says I, but I will never come into it; I thought it attended with dangerous Circumstances, and a dangerous Precedent, and therefore I was resolv'd I would not contribute.

Mr. Plummer. Can you recollect what passed afterwards?

Mr. Lightboun. He said all the rest would. I said I would not, and I continued the same Resolution when I talked with the masters about it.

Mr. Plummer. I desire he may be asked if my Lord Macclesfield ever press'd him to pay this money, and when?

Mr. Lightboun. It was often mention'd to me by the masters, why I did not contribute as the others did, and I was made not a little uneasy for not having done it. I think in the beginning of the Summer 1722, as near as I can remember the time, my Lord Chancellor coming out of Court at his own House, (where I had the Honour to have been sitting with him) said, Mr. Lightboun, I would speak with you. I followed his Lordship into his House up into his Study, where my lord was pleas'd to say, Mr. Lightboun, I am very sorry to hear that you have not contributed your 500 l. towards making up Mr. Dormer's Deficiency; for, says he, it must be considered, that it will be attended with ill Consequences, if that matter is not taken care of. I asked him, was it your Lordship's Proposal? He said it came from the two senior masters, but he approved of it. I answered, that if it had come from his lordship, it might have had a different Consideration, but as it was theirs, and to serve their own Purposes, I hop'd his lordship would not insist upon my coming into it. The two senior masters had been long in their Offices, were grown in Years, and were willing to get out, and fell at high Prices; one of them had slipt out, and the other was about it; that I was but lately come into the Office, and intended to continue in it, and said, I will not concern my self in this Affair, unless the Office can be put upon such a Foot that the Suitors may be made safe and easy.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My lords, I desire he may be ask'd, whether at this time my lord Macclesfield made use of any Reasons, Arguments or Promises towards prevailing upon him to pay this money?

Mr. Lightboun. I can't say my lord press'd me; he left me to my own Inclination, but advis'd me to pay it, and not to stand out; to do as the rest did, and not to stand alone in it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether did he mention of what Consequence or Advantage it would be to the Masters?

Mr. Lightboun. His lordship said, if there were not some measures taken it might be of ill Consequence, and that this was the only Expedient he thought thought of. I told his Lordship, I thought there were many others, but this was one I would not come into; but that it was not for me to presume to dictate to his Lordship, I thought it did not become me.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I desire he may be ask'd, if after these Discouragements my lord Macclesfield did not again demand money of him, and when?

Mr. Lightboun. My Lords, in the Year 1724, about the latter end of July, I met Mr. Cottingham by accident at the Tavern. He came in and desired me to go into a Room, for he had something to say to me. He told me, that my Lord Macclesfield had sent him to tell me, that he wonder'd that I had not paid my 500 l; that there was 1000 l. to be paid to Mrs. Chitty, or to Mr. Lockman, that must be immediately paid; that my lord had been apply'd to, and much press'd, and it must be forthwith paid, and he expected that I would advance the 500 l. and the rest of the masters 50 l. apiece, which would make up the Sum. I said to Mr. Cottingham, I cannot think my lord Macclesfield would send you on such an Errand to me; I told my Lord formerly I would not pay it, I was with his Lordship this morning and he said nothing of it, and shall have the Honour of waiting upon him in a Day or two, and if he then think fit to talk to me about it, I shall give him a proper Answer; but I don't care to send my Message to him by you, because messages are liable to be mistaken and misrepresented, and I will give my Answer myself. Upon that Mr. Cottingham began to be angry at my distrusting him and thinking that he came of his own Accord, and averr'd to me that he came with my lord Chancellor's Privy. I repeated the same Answer again to him, that I would give my own Answer to his Lordship, and would return none by him. In a Day or two after there was an Intimation given that my lord Chancellor expected all the masters to attend him at six a Clock in the Evening: we imagined that it was a call upon the other masters for more money, and for my five hundred Pounds. They had all declared to me they would never contribute any thing more, and therefore I desired them that in case that were the Business, they would freely declare their Thoughts before my Lord himself. I believe it was the senior master I pressed to do it, saying to him, it best becomes you to give the Answer; says he, if the Question be put, I shall propose that we may have time to consider of it. I desired he would not do that, it would encourage my lord, and he might think that if he importuned it farther we would comply, and for my part I am determined not to do it; so we went on to my lord, and were carried up Stairs, when we came there, my lord said, there hath been an Application made to me on the behalf of Mr. Chitty or Mr. Lockman, I think he was the Person expressly named, and that he had been much pressed by Persons of Distinction; and then he turned to me, and said, Mr. Lightboun, I am extremely surprized you have not paid the 500 l. as the rest have done. After he had us'd a good many Persuasions and Arguments, I told his Lordship it was with great Concern that I refus'd to do any thing that his Lordship could desire of me; but this was a Thing of such a dangerous Consequence, that I would not contribute one Farthing, and that I had given his Lordship my Reasons before; if he would hear them again, I would repeat them again; but this one was of most Weight with me, that it might be a Precedent, and look'd upon as an Undertaking for one another, if ever there should be a national Inquiry into these matters; and that I would be answerable only for my own Debts: That as I had not contributed towards the misfortunes of others, I would not contribute towards Payment of their Debts; that I did not know but the paying Contributions to make good the Demands on other Offices might make Deficiencies in our own; I had always refus'd it, and never repented it, and I had the pleasure of hearing every master repent the doing it. I called upon the rest of the masters to deal ingeniously with my lord, to tell him what they had said when they had talk'd over the matter among themselves, that they would not contribute any more; upon that Mr. Holford got up and said, he would never do it. Then my lord said, he either would pay it himself, or take care it should be paid.

Mr. Plummer. I desire he may be ask'd, if my lord Macclesfield used any insinuations with respect to the Parliament?

Mr. Lightboun. I forgot that my lord Macclesfield was pleased to say, that the Consequences of not contributing to raise a Sum of money to pay the Debt of Mr. Dormer, might be that the money and Securities would be taken out of our Hands. I told him I was ready to deliver both the money and Securities the next Day, if his Lordship made the proper Orders, and I was properly indemnified. I think his Lordship said further, this may produce a Parliamentary Enquiry, and should it be resolved that purchasing a master's Place is contrary to the Statute of the fifth and sixth of Edward VI. you might lose your Places; to that I replied, I would quit my Office rather than hold it upon those Terms of paying other masters Debts. He went on further about a Parliamentary inquiry; I said, let the Consequence be what it will, I would not pay it. Then I called upon the other masters, who said they would not pay it.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My lords, As to the paying of the 1000 l. to Mrs. Chitty or Mr. Lockman, I desire Mr. Lightboun may be ask'd whether the late lord Chancellor was pleased to say that he had or would take care to pay the 1000 l. himself, or what the particular Expression was that he then made use of, that he had taken care or would take care?

Mr. Lightboun. I can't remember at this distance of time, whether he said he had, or would take care to pay it. There is so little Difference, that I cannot say which. I do not pretend to say those were the very Expressions my Lord used to me, or I to him. I speak as to the Tenor or Purport of our Conversation, I would neither aggravate nor soften matters.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. The next Witness we call is Mr. Holford, who was present at this Conversation.

Mr. Holford sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire Mr. Holford may be asked, whether he was present at this time, as is mentioned, when the Masters were required by the Earl of Macclesfield to raise this 1000 l. for Mrs. Cbitty or Mr. Lockman.

Mr. Holford. My Lords, I was present at that Meeting. It was desired, as I apprehended, by my Lord Macclesfield, for us to attend him at Six o'Clock. When we came up there, I think, the first thing that my Lord Macclesfield said was, he asked Mr. Lighboun why he would not pay his 500 l. as others had done. Mr. Lighboun did give this Answer: That he had told him several times before, that he would not do it; he had given his Reasons, and it was in vain to repeat those Reasons again, he was of the same Mind still. My Lord then spoke of a Demand there was of 1000 l. on Mr. Dormer's Office for one Mrs. Cbitty, and Mr. Lockman, and I apprehended, my Lord mentioned it as if he intended that the Masters should contribute towards making it up; but he after said he would take Care of it. After that my Lord did not mention the 1000 l. but, in general, spoke of the Deficiency in Mr. Dormer's Office, and it ought to be made up; and he proposed, as I did apprehend, that the Masters should make it up. Mr. Lighboun did call upon me to declare; upon that I told my Lord, it was very unadvisable to contribute towards a Deficiency which no Body knew what it was; and the doing so would only be ruining one's self, for fear of being undone; and, for my Part, I was unwilling to do it; any Body else might do as they thought fit.

Mr. Plummer. In what Manner did my Lord address himself to Mr. Lighboun, did he do it in gentle Terms, or how?

Mr. Holford. He spoke pretty sharply to him.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What was said by the Earl of Macclesfield, to persuade the Masters to come into this Contribution?

Mr. Holford. My Lord said it was a grievous thing, there had not been that due Care taken there ought to have been; that those who came first had all their Money, and those that came after would have none; which would make a great Clamour upon the Masters.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What was said upon that?

Mr. Holford. I don't remember what in particular.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What was said, as to a Parliamentary Enquiry?

Mr. Holford. I remember my Lord did say, it might perhaps occasion a Parliamentary Enquiry. Suppose, said he, the Parliament should resolve, that the Office of a Master in Chancery is a Place relating to the Execution of Justice, and resolve that every Body that hath purchased those Offices is within the Statute of the 5th and 6th of Edward VI. It may affect me in some Degree, in the loss of the Disposition of the Offices; but it will affect you in the loss of the places themselves.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether any Person then asked my Lord, in what Manner it might come before the Parliament?

Mr. Holford. I asked my Lord myself, and said it would be a Favour if he would give us his Opinion, in what Manner it might come before the Parliament, and in what way. He said, it might come in by the Committee for Courts of Justice, appointed by the House of Commons at the Beginning of every Session. But when I came out of the Room, I said, it was more likely to come by Way of Complaint than that Way.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether, at this time, the Masters agreed to come to a Contribution to pay this 1000 l. and what was said about it.

Mr. Holford. It was disagreed to; and when it was so, my Lord did say, that he himself would pay the 1000 l.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We leave that as a Circumstance of my Lord's endeavouring to prevent a Parliamentary Enquiry.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we desire Mr. Holford may be asked, whether he can be positive as to the time of this Meeting?

Mr. Holford. I believe it was in July, or August, 1724.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. You can't be positive?

Mr. Holford. No, I can't be positive.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Whether was there, at that time, any Proposal made to raise Money, by any annual Sum or Payment out of the Offices, towards paying the Deficiencies by Degrees?

Mr. Holford. I do not remember any such thing.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Was such Proposal made at any other Time.

Mr. Holford. I don't remember that it was ever proposed by my Lord. I have heard talk among the Masters of a great many Schemes and Proposals; but they never did agree in any one thing.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may refresh his memory, and that he may inform your Lordships if there was not a Proposal made, that if they might be maintained in their Offices, as they then were, they would not then consent that a Contribution should be raised among the Masters.

Mr. Holford. No, I don't remember that; I believe it was mention'd, that supposing the Masters might be continued on the Foot they were, whether they would not think it worth their while to do it. I said it was a Matter fit to be considered, and I did not know but it might; but there was no Method proposed but what seemed difficult; and I don't remember that any thing was agreed to.

Mr. Strange. I desire he may be asked, whether, after they had contributed the 500 l. a piece, their accompts were called for by my Lord Macclesfield, in the Manner they were called for before?

Mr. Holford. I don't know but they might. The Manner of calling for those Accompts was thus: There was a Writing left in the publick Office, in which there were a great many Items in what Method those accompts should be brought in. I had prepared mine, and waited till they should be called for; but they were not called for, nor demanded; so I laid mine by.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked, whether this Discourse, in relation to the raising of Money, was to pay off the whole Deficiency, or confined to pay off this Demand of 1000 l.

Mr. Holford. I don't remember any Proposal, but only a Discourse that was started. I did not apprehend the whole Deficiency was intended to be paid; for I never knew any Body that could tell what the whole Deficiency was, till of late.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire to know, whether he speaks this from his Memory?

Mr. Holford. I can speak from nothing but my Memory.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire that he will inform your Lordships, whether he doth not remember, that in November last there was a Signification to the Masters, and to him in particular, to bring in their Accompts?

Mr. Holford. Yes, my Lords.

Mr. Com. Serj. If there was such an Intimation in November last, to deliver in their Accompts, how comes it that you say you have them by you still?

Mr. Holford. This is a Mistake; you misapprehend me. The Accompt, that I mentioned before, was what was immediately called for, after the Failure of Mr. Dormer; but the Accompt in November last was what was called for by the Judges, and delivered into the Council.

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, I desire to know, whether Mr. Holford can remember what the particular Directions, as to those Accompts, were, and whether the Accompts he prepared were drawn up according to those Directions?

Mr. Holford. Those Directions were many; in drawing up my Accompt, I did not draw it up exactly according to those Directions; but I drew them up to shew the Ballance of Cash and Securities in my Hands.

E. of Macclesfield. I would desire to know, whether they were not the like Directions as in November last, and whether the Masters did not think it impracticable to draw it up accordingly?

Mr. Holford. Yes, my Lords, they did; they thought it difficult; I thought it was not practicable without a great deal of Trouble.

Sir George Oxenden. I desire to know, whether it was required by my Lord Chancellor to look into Dormer's Deficiency, to see what the true State of it was at that Time?

Mr. Holford. All I heard of it was: I heard that my Lord had ordered Mr. Edwards to deliver in an accompt of Mr. Dormer's Office to me and Mr. Bennet: He did deliver one; but it was an Accompt done in Hast, and did not shew what the Deficiency was. For some of the Payments said to be made, no proper Vouchers were produced; there were mistakes, and it was not a proper accompt; and without examining it we could not depend on it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. He mentions, that at this meeting it was said, supposing the Masters might be continued on the same Foot they then stood, &c. I desire Mr. Holford may explain what he meant by the Foot they then stood on; what liberties and privileges were meant by that Expression?

Mr. Holford. I understood it was their continuing in the Possession of the money.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether that was to lock the money up in a Cabinet, or to have Power of the money to make use of it?

Mr. Holford. For my own Part, I should not have lock'd it up.

Mr. Lutwyche. I would beg leave to ask him, as he hath mentioned the calling for the accompts, whether he delivered any accompt to the Earl of Macclesfield, till the Order made by the Council?

Mr. Holford. My lords, I did deliver an accompt to my lord Macclesfield, or to Mr Cottingham, of my money, but not of the Securities.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire Mr. Edwards may be called again.

[Accordingly Mr. Edwards was called and appeared.]

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My lords, we beg leave that Mr. Edwards may give your lordships an account (because he was immediately concerned in a Demand made upon this Office) what application was made to him for this Mrs. Chitty's money; and what application he made to the Earl of Macclesfield on that Occasion.

Mr. Edwards. My lords, there was an Order brought to me, that was made by my lord Macclesfield, for the Payment of 1000 l. to Mrs Chitty. I told the Party, I had not money in my Hands of Mr. Dormer's, sufficient to answer the Demand upon the Office. I then went to my lord Macclesfield. I told him (I had been forced to trouble him pretty often upon that Occasion) that it gave me a great deal of Uneasiness, that there was no Fund in my Hands to answer those Demands that were upon my Office. I hoped his lordship would take Care that there should be a Supply, or that he would not be pleased to make orders upon me for payment of money.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Give an account of the whole that passed, the whole Conversation.

Mr. Edwards. My lord Macclesfield, in answer to that said (at least, it was what I understood by his answer) that, if the People would but have a little Patience, he was doing every thing necessary, and making proper Regulations for that Purpose.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether my Lord Macclesfield, at that time, directed him to proceed to make any further Payments, or encouraged him to go on to make Payments?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we apprehend that is too leading a Question.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What Directions he had, in general.

Mr. Edwards. My Lords, I had no other Directions that I remember.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may acquaint your Lordships, whether he said any thing relating to the State and Condition of the Suitors of the Court?

Mr. Edwards. Several times that I had the Honour to wait on my Lord Macclesfield, I told him there was like to be a great Deficiency in Mr. Dormer's Effects: All that had been raised out of Dormer's Effects was exhausted and gone, and there were a great many Demands; and I hoped Provision would be made to answer them: It was not for me to do it else; and I hoped it was not expected that I should.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was any thing represented at that time, concerning paying some of the Suitors of the Court, and not others?

Mr. Edwards. About that time, or rather since, as I remember, I told my Lord Macclesfield that I saw the masters were determined not to make any further Contributions; and if that were to be the Case, and there was to be no further Supply of money, it would be very hard for some to have all all their money, and others none at all. My Lord Chancellor said, I do not know what to say to it; I think it is very hard it should be so; I will take all the Care I can, and hope to make every Body easy.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, whether he had not paid all the Money, or near all, when this Discourse happened?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, My Lords.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, whether he was present at the meeting of the masters, when this 1000*l.* was insisted upon, and on what Occasion it was?

Mr. Edwards. It was upon a Summons that all the masters should attend his Lordship; I am not sure, as to the Day; I think it was the latter End of July: We waited upon his Lordship about six of the Clock in the Evening, and my Lord mentioned it to Mr. Lightboun, that he was surprized that he had not contributed his 500*l.* he wonder'd that he should be so backward in doing what others thought right to do, and that there was Occasion at that Time for the Payment of 1000*l.* he mentioned, either to Mrs. Chitty or Mr. Lockman. Mr. Lightboun told him, that he did not expect to be asked again upon this Subject, he had so often told his Lordship he would not contribute; other People might do what they pleased, but, as for his Part, he was determined not to do it.

Mr. Lutwyche. We desire to know what passed, and what was said by the Earl, at that meeting?

Mr. Edwards. When this was refused by Mr. Lightboun, there was a Discourse in the Company, that if the rest of the masters would advance 50*l.* a piece, and Mr. Lightboun his 500*l.* it would make up the Sum. The masters, most of them, spoke their mind, and shewed an Unwillingness to contribute any more. My Lord Macclesfield was pleased to say, this is a Thing of Consequence, a matter that ought to be considered; here is a very pressing Occasion for a Sum of money to be immediately paid; if not paid, I don't know what the Consequence may be; Clamours begin to grow pretty strong, I don't know but it may occasion a parliamentary Enquiry; or to that Effect.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be ask'd, whether there was any further Discourse what the Parliament might do?

Mr. Edwards. My Lord Macclesfield was pleased to say further, I don't know, if this matter comes into the Consideration of Parliament, how far it may affect your Offices, the Sale of them is against an Act of Parliament: Suppose it should be resolved by the House, that these Places, being bought contrary to the Act of Parliament, are forfeited, I can't say how far it may affect me in some measure, but it will affect you much more.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. These are the very Words of the Article, and we may rely upon the Opinion of the Earl himself, when he was in the Possession of that great Office?

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, I desire Mr. Edwards may be asked, whether the Subject Matter of this Discourse was the Payment of this 1000*l.* or making good the Whole of Dormer's Deficiency?

Mr. Edwards. I understood the only Subject to be this 1000*l.*

E. of Macclesfield. You understood it so?

Mr. Edwards. And the Reason why I understood it so was, because if Mr. Lightboun would have been pleased to have paid his 500*l.* and the other masters 50*l.* a piece, it would have made up the Sum.

E. of Macclesfield. Was the Proposal of paying 50*l.* a piece, after Mr. Lightboun had refused the Payment of 500*l.*

Mr. Edwards. I believe it was.

E. of Macclesfield. What Occasion was there for the Proposal to pay 50*l.* a piece, when the Payment of 500*l.* was absolutely refused?

Mr. Edwards. I believe it was understood by several, that, if the other masters would have contributed 50*l.* a piece, it would have been an Inducement for Mr. Lightboun to have come in and paid his 500*l.*

E. of Macclesfield. Some body must propose this that had that Apprehension?

Mr. Edwards. I can't say who proposed it, nor whether it was proposed by my Lord Macclesfield; but 50*l.* a piece was mentioned.

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords; I desire to know of Mr. Edwards, whether the masters did not at any Time agree to make good Dormer's Deficiency?

Mr. Edwards. My Lords, I think I remember a meeting of the masters at his Lordship's House, not long before this, where they seemed inclinable to agree, that if they were continued in the Rights of their Office in all Respects, and on the same Foot as they had enjoyed them; that then they would have endeavoured to have made this Deficiency good.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know if he hath not said, that on his coming into the Office, the masters told him, they would make good the Deficiency?

Mr. Edwards. I can't say the masters ever told me, they would make good the Deficiency; I can't say I ever heard them say, that they would make it up.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire you would recollect yourself, whether, when you was with me, and I desired you to give an Account of this matter, you did not say, that the masters did promise to make it good, or else you would not have come into the Office?

Mr. Edwards. I don't remember I told your Lordship so; I believe it was designed by the masters to have it made up, if not the Whole, the greatest Part of the masters, were inclinable to make up the Deficiency.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire an Answer to the Question, whether he did not say, that the masters did promise him to make good the Deficiency?

Mr. Edwards. I don't remember that I said so directly; I told your Lordship, that unless I had had Assurances, that the Deficiency of the Office would have been made up, I never would have meddled with it. These Assurances I had from Mr. Cottingham and Mr. Godfrey.

E. of Macclesfield. I think you say, the masters did seem to agree, that if they were kept in Possession of the Rights of their Offices, they would contribute. Had you two meetings with me in July, or August?

Mr.

Mr. Edwards. I think there were two in the same month of July: Within a Month the two meetings were.

E. of Macclesfield. Whether the masters have not made several Complaints to me, of the Invasion of their Right in their Offices, and desired me to make an Order to redress them?

Mr. Edwards. Not only Complaints of that Sort were made, but I believe those Complaints were reduced into Writing, and laid before your Lordship; there were frequent Complaints by Concurrence of all the masters.

E. of Macclesfield. How long before that Time were Complaints made to me, of the masters being injured in the Profits of their Office?

Mr. Edwards. I believe near a Twelvemonth.

E. of Macclesfield. Was it not more?

Mr. Edwards. It was a full Year.

Earl of Macclesfield shews Mr. Edwards a Paper.

Mr. Edwards. This is what I mentioned, a Representation in Writing laid before your Lordship.

E. of Macclesfield. Pray look upon that.

[Shews another Paper, which Mr. Edwards looks upon.]

E. of Macclesfield. Are those two Papers signed by you, and the other masters whose Names are at the End of them?

Mr. Edwards. Yes.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know in the next Place, whether I was not much pressed by the masters to have made some Alterations in the Proceedings of the Court? And what Answer did I give?

Mr. Edwards. Upon this Representation there were a great many Applications made to my Lord Macclesfield. I went several Times myself. Sometimes two or three would make Application to him, that he would be pleased, if he thought the matters represented to be Grievances, that he would redress them. My Lord did say, that he thought, that the matter of our Complaint was just, and that those matters were proper to be rectified, and he would take all proper measures to do it.

E. of Macclesfield. And why were not all these Things set right?

Mr. Edwards. I remember one Circumstance that I believe will be an Answer to the noble Lord's Question. Those matters were not laid together all at once before my Lord Chancellor, but some at one Time, and others at another Time; and my Lord Macclesfield did say, I would have you draw up a State of all these Grievances you complain of, and then I shall see them better under one View, and take them together.

E. of Macclesfield. Was there any Order made in Favour of the masters, and to redress these Grievances?

Mr. Edwards. I remember we were a little impatient that there was no Order made; we often solicited on several Accounts before they were made.

E. of Macclesfield. For what particular Reasons were you so impatient?

Mr. Edwards. It is impossible to recollect the particular Reasons; they were, in many Instances, relating to the Proceedings at the Rolls, and the Innovations there to the Prejudice of the masters Offices.

Mr. Plummer. My Lord Macclesfield hath ask'd several Questions, and I would make an Observation upon this Evidence, That these Gentlemen applied to Lord Macclesfield to redress Grievances, but he would not promise them a Redress till they paid this Debt.

Sir George Oxenden. I desire to know what he means by the Profits of the Office?

Mr. Edwards. The principal Thing that I mean is the keeping of the money; but there were several other Things in which we thought our Offices lessened, by taking away the customary Fees which usually belonged to the masters.

Sir George Oxenden. If the Profits of the Office was the keeping of the money, I suppose they made use of it?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, my Lords, I believe it was not understood by any Body, that the money was designed to be lock'd up. By the Profits of the money is meant the putting out the money at Interest for ourselves. But that is not all, the placing the same out at Interest for the Suitors occasions several Perquisites, as Reports and other Things, which would be lost by taking away the money.

Mr. John Bennet called again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, we desire Mr. John Bennet may be ask'd, whether he was present at the meeting at the Lord Chancellor's, when Proposals were made for the raising this 1000*l.*

Mr. Bennet. My Lords, I was there, and my Lord Macclesfield was earnest in persuading Mr. Lighboun to pay his 500*l.* Mr. Lighboun said he had much rather bring in all the money and Securities he had in his Hands, and deliver them up, than pay this 500*l.* Upon which my Lord Macclesfield said, delivering up the money and Securities too might be the Consequence, but that was not the worst; there might be Votes of the House of Commons, that the Office of a Master in Chancery did concern the Execution of Justice, and that the masters in Chancery, by purchasing their Offices, had incurred the Penalty of the Statute of Edward the VIth, and thereby forfeited their Places, and that a new Set of masters might be put in; it might redound to some Loss to his Lordship in disposing of those Offices, but it would redound much more to their Loss, the Loss of their Places.

Mr. Lutwyche. When the masters refused to contribute to this of Chitty, what said my Lord?

Mr. Bennet. My Lord said, he would take Care of it himself, or that he would pay it himself, I can't say which.

Mr. Lutwyche. Whether any thing was said concerning the Consequence of not paying this 1000*l.* and whether any mention was made of Dormer's Deficiency?

Mr. Bennet. There was mention made of Mr. Dormer's Deficiency, and one master mentioned, that it was a bottomless Pit; and as my Lord had desired me and Mr. Holford to take some Account of it, we both declared, we had not received such a satisfactory Account from Mr. Edwards, as could be depended upon, and that the Deficiency appeared to us to be very uncertain.

Mr.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, whether any mention was made of any Fear of the Discovery of that Deficiency?

Mr. Bennet. I can't say by whom it was said, but it was said in Discourse, If this 1000*l.* was not now paid, the Deficiency of Mr. Dormer's Office would be discovered.

Mr. Lutwyche. Pray recollect who was that said by?

Mr. Bennet. I can't take upon me to say whom it was said by, but it was said in the Conversation that passed at that time.

Mr. Lutwyche. And who were then present?

Mr. Bennet. I believe, all the masters.

Mr. Lutwyche. And who besides?

Mr. Bennet. My Lord Macclesfield.

Mr. Lutwyche. Were not all the masters against making up the Deficiency?

Mr. Bennet. Yes, all of them.

E. of Macclesfield. Was Dormer's Deficiency then known?

Mr. Bennet. It was known abroad, but it was not known how much.

E. of Macclesfield. Were there two meetings between me and the masters in July, or the Beginning of August?

Mr. Bennet. I believe within a month there were two meetings.

E. of Macclesfield. What was the subject matter of the other meeting?

Mr. Bennet. The first meeting was to put us all in mind of our Duty, and to admonish us to avoid any Complaint?

E. of Macclesfield. That was the first meeting. Was there any thing said about Dormer's Deficiency?

Mr. Bennet. I don't remember there was.

E. of Macclesfield. What Admonition was it that was given to the masters, and what was said to them, if they did fail in their Duty?

Mr. Bennet. The Admonition was generally to take Care to perform our Duty, not to give any Cause of Complaint, and, in particular, not to go out of town, till a Week after the last Seal.

E. of Macclesfield. Do you not remember, that I said in my admonition, that if any master failed in his Duty, I owed it to the rest to punish him, and to make him an Example?

Mr. Bennet. I believe you did say so.

Mr. Lutwyche. At the time when this Admonition was given, was any thing then said about your Accompts?

Mr. Bennet. No, I don't remember that any thing was then said on that Subject.

E. of Macclesfield. In Point of Regularity, when these Gentlemen speak of this 1000*l.* they should produce the Order?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. It is here, and it is admitted in the Answer.

[The Order produced, proved by Mr. Ralph Paxton, who swore it to be a true Copy of the Order taken from the Report-Office.

Mr. Paxton begins to read.

Martis decimo septimo Die Martii Anno Regni Georgii Regis decimo, inter Prideaux Sutton Cler. & Annam Uxorem ejus, Mercy Shelden Spinster & Egidium Laurence Executor. Winifred Shelden Spinster Defunct. Quer. Elisam Chitty, Johannem Russel & alios Defendentes.

VOL. VI.

Whereas the Defendant, Elizabeth Chitty, —

E. of Macclesfield. It is not necessary to trouble my Lords in hearing the whole Order, only the ordering Part?

Mr. Paxton reads again,

His Lordship doth order, that the said master do, out of the said money in his Hands, pay unto the Defendant Eliz. Chitty the Sum of one thousand pounds, and to the Plaintiffs the Sum of five hundred pounds, subject to the further Order of this Court.

Mr. Lovibond sworn.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Lovibond may be asked, whether he was at the meeting, when the masters attended my Lord Macclesfield about July last, and what passed at that meeting?

Mr. Lovibond. I was at that meeting with several of the other masters, I think most of them: As to what passed then, according to the best of my Recollection, the first thing was, my Lord Macclesfield turned to Mr. Lightboun and asked him, why he had not paid the 500*l.* as well as the rest of the masters; to which he replied, he never would, and gave my Lord some Reasons why he would not. Then my Lord Macclesfield was pleased to say, there was a matter that required Expedition, a further Demand was made of a Sum of money, by one Mr. Lochman, who belonged to the Prince's Court, and it did behoove us to find out some Way to make him easy. He proposed that the masters should raise that money among them. The masters in general said, that they could not do it.

Mr. Lutwyche. What Arguments were made use of by my Lord Macclesfield, to persuade them to it?

Mr. Lovibond. I remember that Mr. Lightboun said, rather than pay it, he would deliver up all the money and effects in his Hands, and my Lord Macclesfield did reply; Perhaps that is not the worst of the matter, it may be worse than that; suppose there should be a Parliamentary Enquiry, and the Parliament should come to a Resolution, that you have forfeited your Offices, by having bought them against the Statute of Edward the VIth.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, whether any Encouragement was given, in case they would pay this money?

Mr. Lovibond. I don't remember there was any thing spoke by way of Encouragement to the masters, for Payment of that Sum of money.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire to know what was the Result of this matter, as to this Sum of Money being to be paid, and who it was that said it should be paid?

Mr. Lovibond. Upon the Refusal of the masters, my Lord Macclesfield said, Well, I will take Care of that Part myself.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, whether any thing was then said in relation to the Deficiency of Dormer's Office?

Mr. Lovibond. Yes there was some Discourse about that matter, and my Lord Macclesfield did express himself as though it would be an unlucky Thing, and it must be made up one Way or other. and he desired the masters to think of a Way to make it up. My Lord Macclesfield said, if you can have the Enjoyment of your Places, as you have had them these Forty Years, will you come into some Terms to make up that Debt? Some said they could not come into it; some said there might be a means of paying it by Annual Installments out of their several Offices, some seemed to agree to it; others said we may as well make good the Bankers Debts, as make good this Debt.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire he may be asked, whether he did not agree, that this Deficiency should be made good by Annual Payments?

Mr. Lovibond. No, I did not.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know, whether the rest of the masters did not?

Mr. Lovibond. I believe some of the masters did.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know, whether they did all agree?

Mr. Lovibond. I believe the major Part did. I did not.

E. of Macclesfield. Do you believe any besides yourself disagreed?

Mr. Lovibond. Indeed I can't tell. The greatest Part did agree. I can't say I heard any Body refuse.

E. of Macclesfield. Some, he says, did agree to it, the major Part, and none that he heard refused. I desire to know, if it was not endeavoured to find out a Way to make up whatever Deficiency there was; and whether this was the subject matter, the making good the 1000 l. or the whole of the Debt?

Mr. Lovibond. The making good the whole of the Debt, as I understood it.

E. of Macclesfield. I think he said, that I said then, I would take Care of the 1000 l. Whether was that after they had agreed that the Deficiency should be made good, or before?

Mr. Lovibond. No, I think it was before.

Mr. Plummer. I desire to know, if my Lord Macclesfield did say, he would take Care of it, when the masters refused to contribute?

Mr. Lovibond. To the best of my Remembrance, it was upon their Refusal, that he said so.

Mr. Thomas Bennet called again.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. My Lords, before the managers propose a question, I beg the Favour to mention a Thing that my memory slipped me in Yesterday. My Lord Macclesfield then asked me, what Estate I had purchased? I said 68 l. a Year in Kent, and 40 l. per Annum in Suffolk. I forgot a House I bought for 700 l. which is mortgaged for the same Sum. The Accompt lies upon the table, I forgot it then, and I did then refer to my Accompt that lies upon the table, that I might not be mistaken.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I desire he may be asked, whether he was present at this meeting at my Lord Macclesfield's.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Yes, I was summoned to attend my Lord Macclesfield on this Occasion. I dined that day with my Brother and Mr. Lovibond and one more; and my Brother told me, that there was a proposal come from my Lord Macclesfield by Mr. Cottingham. He said it was, that the masters should advance 50 l. a piece, towards a Demand in the Court of Chancery; and in case we would do it, my Lord Macclesfield would make Mr. Lightboun pay his 500 l. We, who were then present, seemed to agree, that if my Lord would make Mr. Lightboun pay his 500 l. we would pay our 50 l. a piece. In the Evening, when we attended my Lord Macclesfield, his first Application was to Mr. Lightboun, and as soon as we came, he said to him, Mr. Lightboun, I am surprized you have not paid your 500 l. as the rest have done, I wonder at it; and he used some hard Expressions, that I wonder he could stand it, I could hardly have done it; but Mr. Lightboun did stand it, and refused to pay it, and gave his Reasons for it, and said he had given them over and over again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Reasons were laid before you to pay it?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. The Reasons laid before us by my Lord Macclesfield were, that there was a Deficiency in Dormer's Office, which he was afraid would break out; for here was a Demand of a Sum of Money by one, for whom he had been spoken to, by a Person of very great Distinction. I did not know who it was then, but I afterwards understood it was Mr. Lockman, that was the Person that was to have the money; and he asked, if we did not think it for our Interest to make such a Person our Friend?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any thing more said?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. My Lord Macclesfield said, that in case this money was not paid, and some method found to make up the Deficiency of Mr. Dormer, he believed it might occasion a Parliamentary Enquiry, which might hurt him very much, but, said he, I believe it will hurt you, Gentlemen, much more.

Mr. Lutwyche. Were there any of the masters that asked him any questions, how he apprehended it would come into Parliament?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. Yes, Mr. Holford asked him the question, Can your Lordship imagine, in what method this may come into Parliament? My Lord answered, Upon the meeting of every Parliament, Committees were chosen by the House of Commons, and among the rest there was a Committee of the Courts of Justice, and he thought it very likely, that That Committee might take this under Consideration.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was said upon the masters refusal to raise the 1000 l.?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. After Mr. Lightboun refused to pay towards the 1000 l. my Lord then said he would make up that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any Talk of Dormer's Deficiency?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. There was some Discourse about making up Mr. Dormer's deficiency. Several of the masters were against it. No Scheme could be found that would make it up. I said upon that Occasion, that it was a bottomless pit, and Mr. Edwards had not given Satisfaction to any of the masters what the deficiency was.

Sir George Oxendon. Was there any mention made at this meeting of the Statute of Edward VI.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. My Lord Chancellor said, He did not know but our Offices might come within the Statute of Edward VI.: And, if that should be so resolved by Parliament, we must forfeit our Offices; and therefore had we not better do something than forfeit our Offices?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we beg leave to call Mr. Lockman, to whom this 1000 l. was paid, paid, and to shew your Lordships the Declaration that was made by the Earl of Macclesfield at that Time.

Mr. Lutwyche. We beg Leave first to read the Order in the Cause of Harper and Cate.

[The Order is proved.]

Mr. Ralph Paxton reads.

Sabbati quinto Die Decembris, Anno Regni Georgii Regis undecimo, inter Jana' Harper vidua' Quer' Thoma' Case Clericu' & Sara' Maria' uxor' ejus, Henricu' Halsey, & alios Defendentes.

UPON opening of the matter this present Day unto the Right Honourable the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by Mr. Solicitor General and Mr. Williams, being of Counsel for the Plaintiff; and Mr. Benjamin Jackman, in the Presence of Mr. Talbot, of Counsel for the Defendants: The Cases. It was alledged, That it being, by the Order made on the hearing of this Cause (inter alia) ordered and decreed, that the Sum of 500 l. Pounds, part of the Marriage Portion of the Plaintiff, receiv'd by Thomas Harper Clerk, her late Husband, should be made good to her with Interest from his Death, at the Rate of 5 l. per Cent. per Annum, together with her Cofts of this Suit, to be taxed by Dormer, then one of the Masters of this Court, out of the said Thomas Harper's Estate (for which, and other Purposes, in the said Order, so much as should be necessary of the said Thomas Harper's Estate was to be sold to the best Purchaser that could be got for the same, with the Approbation of the said Master:) And the said Master having, by his Report, (made pursuant to the said Order, and) dated the 12th of December, 1716, certified the Sum of 557 l. 16 s. 5 d. to be due to the Plaintiff for Principal and Interest, besides Cofts. And the said Defendants having been served with a Writ of Execution of the said Decree, the said Master, by his Report dated the 9th of November, 1717. allowed the said Jackman the Purchase of three Houses at Kensington (Part of the Premises directed to be sold) at the Sum of 260 l. And the said Master's Report being afterwards absolutely confirmed, the said Jackman obtained an Order of the 19th of December, 1717. whereby it was ordered, That the Writings belonging to the said Estate, purchased by the said Jackman, should be deliver'd to his Counsel, and that the Tenants of the said Estate should attorn to him, on bringing his Purchase money before the said master. And the said Jackman did accordingly, on the 24th of the same December, bring his said Purchase money before the said master, as by his Certificate of that Date, now read, appears, and the Tenants attorned to the said Jackman: But the Defendants have ever since, by trifling Pretences and Excuses, put off the executing proper Conveyances to the said Jackman, although the same have been long since settled and allowed by Mr. Edwards, one of the masters of this Court, the said Mr. Dormer's Successor, as by the Affidavits of Joseph Herring and Thomas Atwood appears. It was therefore prayed, that all Parties may forthwith execute Conveyances of the said Houses to the said Mr. Jackman, or as he shall appoint: And it was on the Plaintiff's Behalf prayed, that the said Purchase Money may be paid to her, towards Satisfaction of what is due to her, by vertue of the said Decree: Whereto the Counsel for the Defendants had Cases alledged, that they are intitled to the Residue of the said Tho' Harper's Estate, after such Payments, as are directed by the said Decree to be made out of the same, are made, and the Defendants Case and his Wife were always ready to join in executing the said Conveyances, upon an Application being made of the said Jackman's purchase Money towards what is due to the Plaintiff; but being apprehensive of a Deficiency of Mr. Dormer's Estate, to answer the Monies brought before him, pursuant to the Orders of this Court; and conceiving they ought not to be Sufferers, though such Deficiency might appear, and the Delay being occasioned by the Purchaser, and not by the Plaintiff, and the said Master not having settled the said Conveyances, they did therefore scruple to execute the said Conveyances, until the said Jackman's Purchase Money should be applied to the Purposes in the said Decree; but are willing, if the Court should so think proper, on Payment of the said 260 l. Purchase Money to the Plaintiff, and the said Tho. Harper's Estate being discharged of so much, to execute the said Conveyances. Whereupon, and upon hearing of the said Affidavits of the said Joseph Herring and Thomas Atwood, and an Affidavit of Notice to the Defendant Halsey read, and what was alledged on both Sides; His Lordship doth order, that it be referred to the said Mr. Edwards, to examine, whether the said 260 l. was deposited with the said Mr. Dormer, for the Benefit of any particular Person, and whom, and what was the Occasion of the Delay, that the said Conveyances were not executed, and the said 260 l. Purchase Money paid out before the Year 1720. and whether there is likely to be a Loss of any Monies deposited with the said Mr. Dormer: And, upon the said Master's Report, such further Orders shall be made, as shall be just.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, this Order was made in December last: It is a Direction to Mr. Edwards to see, whether there was likely to be any Loss of any Monies deposited with Mr. Dormer: We pray that Mr. Lockman may be sworn.

Mr. Lockman sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We beg Leave that Mr. Lockman may be asked, whether he attended upon the Earl of Macclesfield at any Time relating to a Sum of Money, and where.

Mr. Lockman. I received an Order from the Earl of Macclesfield upon Mr. Edwards for 1000 l. but not being able to receive it of Mr. Edwards, I went to Kensington to wait upon the Earl of Macclesfield, and told his Lordship the Necessity I had for this 1000 l. which belonged to Mrs. Chitty, but the Benefit of it was made over to me; that I had the Misfortune to be backwards in my Affairs, and had some South-Sea Contracts to make up, and had made a Composition of my Debts, for which I had about three Weeks to pay it in, and therefore I desired the Favour of his Lordship to order me the Payment of this 1000 l. His Lordship was pleased to tell me, that if I attended him in Town, and applied to him there, I should have the Money paid. Upon which I waited upon his Lordship in Town; and when I had the Honour to see his Lordship, he told me, that he had enquired into the Affair relating to that Money upon which the Order was made, that it was in Mr. Dormer's Office, where there was a Deficiency, that he could not yet bring all the Masters to settle that Matter; but if I would come a few Days after, he would see what he could do for me. Thereupon I attended several Days, and went to Westminster-Hall, and spoke to Mr. Cottingham, and he said great Pains had been taken by my Lord, but he had not yet been able to bring any thing to bear, but he did not doubt but in a little Time he could bring it to bear to his Satisfaction; there had been some Motions made by Serjeant Chefshire, &c. which had frightened the Masters from raising Money; but if I attended in a few Days, he would do what he could for me. I waited some Days, and at last I took the Freedom to wait upon my Lord Macclesfield at his own House in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and I told his Lordship I had attended many Days in Town, and had neglected my Duty and Service; that the next Day was the last Day appointed to pay my Composition, and having depended upon this Money, I had made no other Provision. Whereupon his Lordship said, he had taken a great deal of Pains, and had spoken to the Masters, and that I should attend his Lordship next Day at Westminster at Ten, and he would see what he could do for me, but that there was none of the Estate of Mr. Dormer left. I waited upon his Lordship accordingly the next Day at Westminster. His Lordship called me into his Room, and told me that Mr. Cottingham should pay me the 1000*l.* but he believed there would come no more, that this would be the last of the Money, or the last Sum that Mrs. Chitty would receive; and that if she had nothing else, I might, by marrying her, in Expectation of a Fortune, make myself worse than I was.

Mr. Dodington. I desire Mr. Lockman may be asked, what the whole Sum was that was paid in?

Mr. Lockman. I took it to be about 10,000*l.*

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, if the Earl of Macclesfield gave any further Reasons, why it was like to be the last Sum?

Mr. Lockman. The Earl of Macclesfield did not, at that Time, give me any Reason; but the Day before, when I had the Honour of seeing his Lordship, at his House in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, and once before that, his Lordship told me that the Masters in Chancery were apprehensive of losing a great deal of their Privileges and Profits of their Places; and therefore some of them were not willing to advance any money.

Mr. West. My Lords, I beg Leave to ask Mr. Lockman, whether he received any Direction or Intimation, as to the keeping of this private, the telling, or not telling it?

Mr. Lockman. I did receive no Intimation at that Time; afterwards, when the Solicitor met me, he ask'd me, Pray, says he, Mr. Lockman, have you received the 1000*l.* you solicited for? Yes, I have received it. Pray, who then paid it you? I told him Mr. Cottingham; says he, Mr. Cottingham denied it to me. Upon that I met Mr. Cottingham some Time afterwards in the Court of Requests. He told me I should say nothing of it: Besides this, I received no Intimation to keep it secret.

Mr. West. What did he say to you then?

Mr. Lockman. He said at first meeting me,

You can't fare well, but you must cry out Roast-meat. I, being not well acquainted with that Phrase, did not know what he meant. I did not know that I had ever eat Roast-meat or boil'd meat with him either; so I told him, if that was in relation to his paying me the 1000*l.* it was only what was due, and I hoped there would be Care taken to answer the Remainder. He answered, he could not tell what the Consequence would be, whether ever it would be made up, or not, he could not tell, he was very uncertain.

E. of Macclesfield. Sir, I desire to know of you, whether you did not represent yourself to me to be in the utmost Distress, if this money was not paid to you, that in such Case you must be ruined?

Mr. Lockman. I remember I told his Lordship, that this money, I had borrowed of Mrs. Chitty, that I had settled a Composition with my Creditors and wanted this money to satisfy them; that it must be paid the next Day; and if I did not then pay it, it would be a great Damage to me; but I pressed his Lordship more, as I depended upon his Lordship's Promise, and that was the Reason I press'd it the more.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire he may be asked, whether I ever promised to pay him at any Time before that?

Mr. Lockman. When I went to wait upon your Lordship at Kensington, your Lordship promised me it should be paid; that, as soon as you came to Town I should apply to your Lordship, and you would give Orders, and it should be done.

E. of Macclesfield. Whether he did not look upon it, that I did this out of Compassion to him?

Mr. Lockman. I took it as Part of a Sum of money due, and I did not look upon it as Charity, or out of Compassion.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know, whether he did not intreat it of me as an Act of Compassion to him?

Mr. Lockman. I don't understand the English Terms, I did not use the Word Compassion; I beg'd that your Lordship would be so good as to order me the money.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know, whether the first Time he applied to me I promised to pay the money?

Mr. Lockman. Your Lordship promised the Order should be given to the master, and that I should be paid.

E. of Macclesfield. When was that Promise?

Mr. Lockman. When you promised to order the master, and I should have the money.

E. of Macclesfield. How long before?

Mr. Lockman. I can't very well remember; because the Solicitor waited several Times upon the master, and the master told him there was nothing. I went to the master's House, and then to the Rolls, and there I saw him; and he told me there were no Assits in his Hands of Mr. Dormer's.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know, whether he did not desire a further Sum, after this 1000*l.* was paid by Mr. Cottingham, and how much?

Mr. Lockman. My Lord, I ask your Lordship's Pardon, I don't remember I then ask'd any other Sum. When I saw your Lordship afterwards, I asked your Lordship, if it was not possible to have another 1000*l.* You was pleased to tell me, there could be no more paid.

E. of

E. of Macclesfield. Did not you sollicit for a further Sum, till Mr. Cottingham chid you?

Mr. Lockman. Mr. Cottingham was a little angry, when I pres'd him. I went out of Doors, Mr. Cottingham followed me. I stood in the Yard, Mr. Cottingham came out, and told me he had an Order from my Lord Chancellor to call the masters to a meeting, and see what could be done. I said, still this is uncertain, how shall I do if I have not this money? it will be a great Prejudice to me.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know whether he did not ask a further Sum of 500 l. or 570 l.

Mr. Lockman. There was an Order, on a letter of Attorney from Mrs. Chitty, for that Sum. But never, after I was at your lordship's House at Kensington, did I ask if I could have a thousand Pounds more.

E. of Macclesfield. When was that 500 l. paid?

Mr. Lockman. I don't know.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know, whether between the Time you say you was promised the 1000 l. and the Time of paying it, you did not desire to have the Sum of 574 l. advanced for Mrs. Chitty's Use.

Mr. Lockman. When your lordship had told me that 1000 l. was all that could possibly be obtained, I made no further Sollicitations.

E. of Macclesfield. How long was it that you came to Kensington, to ask me for that 1000 l. before the other 1000 l. was paid?

Mr. Lockman. Three Weeks before.

E. of Macclesfield. Then after that Time you never demanded any more?

Mr. Lockman. After your lordship had told me that was all that could be obtained, then I desisted from asking any more.

E. of Macclesfield. And that was about three Weeks before the Time you received the money?

Mr. Lockman. I believe, between a Fortnight and three Weeks, or thereabouts.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may be asked, whether he can be certain as to the Expression, whether this was the last money that was like to be paid, or that my lord would pay.

Mr. Lockman. It was, as I remember, in these Words: If the lady hath no other Fortune than what is in Chancery, in the master's Hand, this will be the last of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We desire Mr. Atwood may be called.

Mr. Atwood sworn.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire Mr. Atwood may be asked, whether he was in Court at the Time a Motion was made upon an Order in a Cause between Harper and Cate.

Mr. Atwood. My Lords, I was at the late Lord Chancellor's House, where, about the 5th of December last, the motion was made. I was Solicitor for Mrs. Harper in the Cause. The Occasion of it was, There was an Estate decreed to be sold, and the money was to be paid into the master's Hands, who was Mr. Dormer: The money was accordingly paid, and the Conveyances approved of by the Counsel, and a Fine agreed upon; but at last the Parties would not execute, unless the money was paid them; objecting there would be a Deficiency in Dormer's Office: Therefore they mov'd that they might not be obliged to execute the Conveyance, till the money was applied and paid to the Plaintiff. My Lord Chancellor was pleased to declare thereon, that he had heard there would be a Deficiency of Mr. Dormer's Effects; but it had never judicially come before him; and what Knowledge he had of it was only as publick News, and referred it to Mr. Edwards to examine, whether there was likely to be a Deficiency, or not. I was near two months before I could get this Order passed; and then the Impeachment came on. The Register told me, he was afraid this Order would do some mischief. When I had got the Order, I was told by several People about the Town, that Mr. Dormer's Effects were very defective; and that my Lord Chancellor had directed a Composition to be made with one Wilson who was a Banker; and had directed Mr. Hiccocks to compound for Half a Crown in the Pound, and that others had twenty Shillings. Lord Chancellor had directed an Enquiry to be made whether any Deficiency. I was advised to put in these Words: By what Means; because I was told then it was, by reason of compounding that Debt with Wilson; but the Register would not let them stand.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. The making of the Order, in this Case, confirms the Evidence of Mr. Atwood, that his Lordship declared he had heard of it no otherwise than as publick News; because by this Order he directs Mr. Edwards to enquire, whether there was likely to be a Deficiency, or not, although it had been so well known to his Lordship some Years before.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. He says there are Words struck out of the Order; I desire to know, whether those Words were not added by himself to the Order?

Mr. Atwood. Yes, they were added by me before it passed.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. When?

Mr. Atwood. After I had the Order from the Register.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When was that?

Mr. Atwood. It was near two months before I could get the Order passed.

E. of Macclesfield. Had you the Order passed before the Impeachment?

Mr. Atwood. Yes, I believe I had.

E. of Macclesfield. Had you it passed before this matter came into Parliament?

Mr. Atwood. I don't particularly know; I believe it was before your Lordship was impeached.

E. of Macclesfield. Whether was it after I had parted with the Seals?

Mr. Atwood. I believe after.

E. of Macclesfield. How long was it before you added those Words?

Mr. Atwood. Two or three Days after I had got the Order.

E. of Macclesfield. When was it the Register struck out those Words?

Mr. Atwood. I can't say, I believe it was before the Impeachment. The other Side had let those Words be in; but yet the Register struck them out.

E. of Macclesfield. Was it after I had ceased to be Chancellor?

Mr. Atwood. I believe it was.

E. of Macclesfield. Was any thing said, at that Time, of the Accident of Wilson's breaking and Poulter's going off?

Mr. Atwood. I do remember your Lordship said Wilson was become Bankrupt, and that he had Money of Mr. Dormer's; and you said something of a Person that was sued by Wilson, and of a Recovery against him, and of an Action brought for an Escape; and you concluded, upon the Whole, that all you knew of the Matter was only as publick News. This was after you had given an Account of the matter of Wilson and of the Marshal.

Dr. Sayer. I desire he may be asked, whether my Lord did not express a Doubt, how these matters might come out?

Mr. Atwood. I don't know what his Lordship was pleased to doubt of.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire Mr. Atwood would recollect himself whether there was any Notice taken, how this might come out, when the Report of the masters should be made?

Mr. Atwood. I don't remember any thing tending to that.

Mr. Com. Serj. Whether he took any Memo-randa of these Words, and when?

Mr. Atwood. No, I took no Memoranda of them, till I was summoned to attend the Committee.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire Mr. Atwood may give a Reason, how he comes to forget Facts, and remember a Form of Words?

Mr. Atwood. I don't remember all the Facts that have been asked.

Mr. Robins. Whether my Lord did not mention a particular Sum that was owing from Wilson to Dormer?

Mr. Atwood. I believe my Lord did mention a Sum, and I believe it was 18000*l.*

Mr. Robins. Whether he did not mention that Wilson had brought an Action of Escape against the Marshal?

Mr. Atwood. Yes, that Wilson had brought an Action of Escape against the Marshal.

Mr. Robins. Whether he did not mention, that Wilson had recovered a Judgment against the Marshal?

Mr. Atwood. Yes, that Wilson had recovered a Judgment.

Mr. Robins. Whether was there any thing said of the Escape of Poulter?

Mr. Atwood. Yes, my Lord did mention, that there was an Action brought against the Marshal, for that very Escape.

Mr. Com. Serj. Whether my Lord having mentioned these Particulars, he did not from thence infer, he could not then tell, how matters might come out?

Mr. Atwood. I do not remember any thing of that.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I shall only make one short Observation. The lord Macclesfield saith in his Answer, that he doth not believe that he had any Discourse with the Masters about the Payment of this 1000*l.* I submit it to your Lordships, whether there are not four or five Witnesses to it. We have now done with the Sixteenth Article.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We shall proceed to our Proofs on the Seventeenth Article. And it will be necessary to lay before your lordships three or four Orders, for the Proof of this Article.

Mr. Ralph Paxton, being called, appeared, and proved the several Orders following, which were then all read.

An Order, dated 18 January, 8^o Georgii Regis.

Another, dated 8 March, 8^o Georgii Regis.

Another, dated 5 July, 8^o Georgii Regis.

Another, dated 22 December, 9^o Georgii Regis.

Jovis decimo octavo Die Januarii Anno Regni D'ni Georgii Regis octavo, inter Jonathan' Jones Infant' per Eliza' Jones Vidua' prox' Amit' & dicta' Eliza' Jones Quer', Thoma' Jett Arm' & Petru' Wise, Defendentes.

UPON opening of the matter, this present Day, unto this Court, by Mr. Serjeant Cbeshire, of Counsel with the Plaintiff Jonathan Jones, in the Presence of Mr. Kettleby, of Counsel with the Plaintiff Elizabeth Jones; and the Defendant Wise, and Mr. Horsely, of Counsel with the Defendant Jett. The Counsel for the Plaintiff Jonathan Jones alledged, that Jonathan Jones deceased, Father of the Plaintiff Jonathan Jones, and Husband of the Plaintiff Elizabeth, by his Will, devised one Moiety of his Estate, which was wholly personal, after Payment of his Debts and Funeral Expences, to the Plaintiff Elizabeth, and the other Moiety to the Plaintiff Jonathan Jones, when he should attain his Age of One and Twenty Years; together with the Produce thereof, and made the Defendants, Jett and Wise, Executors in Trust for the said Plaintiffs, who duly proved the said Will. That the Plaintiffs having brought their Bill in this Court, to have an Account of the said Testator's Estate, for a maintenance for the Plaintiff Jonathan, during his Infancy, and a Performance of the said Will: Upon the Hearing of this Cause, it was referred to Mr. Dormer, then one of the Masters of this Court, to take an Account of the said Testator's Estate; and the Surplus thereof, after the Deductions therein mentioned, was to be divided into Moieties; and the Plaintiff Elizabeth's Moiety was to be forthwith assigned to her; and the other Moiety was to be placed out at Interest, by the said Master, for the said Infant's Benefit. And the said master was to assign a Maintenance for the said Plaintiff, for the Time past; and was also to consider what was proper to be allowed for his Maintenance, for the future. That the said Master, having proceeded to take an Account of the said Testator's Estate, it appeared, that so much thereof was raised by the Sale of Bank and South-Sea Stock, and brought before the Master, as amounted to Five Thousand, Nine Hundred, and Eighty-five Pounds, Three Shillings, and Four Pence, one Moiety whereof, after Payment of her Share of the Costs of this Suit, belongs to the Plaintiff Elizabeth Jones, and has been accordingly paid to her. And the other Moiety belongs to the Plaintiff Jonathan Jones, and is now in the Hands of Mr. Edwards, one of the Masters of this Court, who succeeded the said Mr. Dormer, and to whom the Reference in this Cause, hath been transferred. That the Plaintiff,

Jonathan

Jonathan Jones, hath now attained his Age of One and Twenty Years, as by Affidavit and Certificate appears, and is intitled to receive his Moiety of the said Monies, after Deduction of his Share of the said Costs. And having contracted some considerable Debts, for his Maintenance, and otherwise, during his Infancy, for which he is threatened to be arrested, in case the said Debts are not speedily paid: It was therefore pray'd, that the said Master may, out of the Monies in his Hands, pay to the Plaintiff, Jonathan Jones, the Sum of Four Hundred Pounds, which, upon reading the said Affidavit and Certificate, and upon hearing the Counsel for the Plaintiff, Elizabeth Jones, and the Defendant, Wife, who consented thereto, and the Counsel for the Defendant, Jett, who did not oppose the Payment thereof, is ordered accordingly.

Jovis octavo Die Martii Anno Regni D'ni Georgii Regis octavo, inter Jonathan Jones & Eliza Jones Quer', Thoma Jett Arm' & Petru Wife, Defendentes.

UPON opening of the Matter, this present Day, unto the Right Honourable the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by Mr. Serjeant Cheshire, being of Counsel for the Plaintiff, Jonathan Jones, in the Presence of Mr. Kettleby, of Counsel for the Plaintiff, Elizabeth Jones, and for the Defendant, Wife: It was alledged, that Jonathan Jones deceased, Father of the Plaintiff Jonathan Jones, and Husband of the Plaintiff Elizabeth Jones, by his Will, devised one Moiety of his Estate (which was wholly personal) after Payment of his Debts and Funeral Expences, to the Plaintiff Elizabeth, and the other Moiety to the Plaintiff Jonathan Jones, when he should attain his Age of One and Twenty Years, together with the Produce thereof; and made the Defendants, Jett and Wife, Executors in Trust for the said Plaintiffs; and the said Defendants duly proved the said Will. That the Plaintiffs exhibited their Bill into this Court against the Defendants, to have an Account of the said Testator's Estate, and a Performance of his Will. And upon the hearing of the Cause, it was referred to Mr. Dormer, then one of the Masters of this Court, to take an Account of the said Testator's Estate; and the Surplus thereof, after the Deductions therein mentioned, was to be divided into Moieties; and the Plaintiff Elizabeth's Moiety was to be forthwith assigned to her. And the other Moiety was to be placed out at Interest, by the said Master, for the said Infant's Benefit. That the said Master having proceeded to take an Account of the said Testator's Estate, it appeared, that so much was raised by the Sale of the Bank and South-Sea Stocks, and brought before the said Master, as amounted to Five Thousand, Nine Hundred, and Eighty-Five Pounds, Three Shillings and Four Pence, one Moiety whereof, after Payment of the Plaintiff Elizabeth Jones's Share of the Costs of this Suit, belonged to her, and had been accordingly paid to her. And the other Moiety belonged to the Plaintiff Jonathan Jones, and was in the Hands of Mr. Edwards, one of the Masters of this Court (who succeeded the said Mr. Dormer.) That the Plaintiff, Jonathan Jones, has attained his Age of One and Twenty Years, as by Certificate and Affidavit appears, and is intitled to receive his Moiety of the said Money, after Deduction of his Share of the said Costs: And he had contracted, for a Post in the Army, which, with his Equipage, will amount to Two Thousand Pounds, which he is advised will be very advantageous for him to purchase; and therefore it was pray'd, that the said Master may pay to the Plaintiff, Jonathan Jones, out of the Money in his Hands, a Sum not exceeding Two Thousand Pounds, to be laid out in the Purchase of a Commission, and for other Purposes. Whereupon, and upon hearing of the Plaintiff, Elizabeth Jones, and Defendant Wife's Counsel; and hearing an Affidavit of Notice of this Motion to the Defendant, Jett, read, and what was alledged by the Counsel on both Sides: It is ordered, that the said Master do, out of the Money in his Hands, pay unto the Plaintiff, Jonathan Jones, the Sum of Two Thousand Pounds; the Plaintiff, Elizabeth Jones, and the Defendant, Wife, having subscribed the Register's Book, signifying their Consent thereto.

Jovis quinto Die Julii Anno Regni D'ni Georgii Regis octavo, inter Jonathan Jones & Eliza Jones Quer' Thoma Jett Arm' & Petru Wife, Defendentes.

UPON opening of the matter this present Day, unto the Right Honourable the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, by Mr. Serj. Cheshire, being of Counsel for the Plaintiff, it was alledged, That Jonathan Jones deceased, Father of the Plaintiff Jonathan Jones, and Husband of the Plaintiff Elizabeth Jones, by his Will devised one moiety of his Estate (which was wholly personal) after Payment of his Debts and Funeral Expences, to the Plaintiff Elizabeth, and the other moiety to the Plaintiff Jonathan Jones, when he should attain his Age of One and Twenty Years, together with the Produce thereof, and made the Defendants, Jett and Wife, Executors in Trust for the said Plaintiffs, and the said Defendants duly proved the said Will. That the Plaintiffs exhibited their Bill into this Court against the Defendants, to have an Account of the said Testator's Estate, and a Performance of his Will, and upon the hearing of the Cause, it was referred to Mr. Dormer, then one of the masters of this Court, to take an Account of the said Testator's Estate; and the Surplus thereof, after the Deductions therein mentioned, was to be divided into moieties, and the Plaintiff Elizabeth's moiety was to be forthwith assigned to her, and the other moiety was to be placed out at Interest, by the said master, for the said Infant's Benefit. That the said master having proceeded to take an Account of the said Testator's Estate, it appeared by several Certificates from the said master, that so much thereof was raised by the Sale of the Bank and South Sea Stocks, and brought before him, as amounted to Five Thousand nine Hundred and eighty five Pounds three Shilling, and four Pence, that one moiety thereof, after Payment of the Plaintiff Elizabeth Jones's Share of the Costs of this Suit, hath been in pursuance of several Orders of this Court paid to her, and the other moiety, which belonged to the Plaintiff Jonathan Jones, was paid over to Mr. Edwards, one of the masters of this Court (who succeeded the said Mr. Dormer.) That the Plaintiff Jonathan Jones, having attained his Age of One and Twenty Years, and being intitled to receive his moiety of the said money, after Deduction

Deduction of his Share of the said Costs, and he having contracted for a Post, in the Army, which, with his Equipage, will amount to two Thousand Pounds, he did, on the eighth Day of March last, apply to the Court for that money, and it was then ordered, that the said master should, out of the money in his Hands, pay unto the Plaintiff Jonathan Jones the Sum of two Thousand Pounds, the Plaintiff Elizabeth Jones, and Defendant Wife, having subscribed the Register's Book, signifying their Consent thereto; that pursuant to the said Order, the said master paid the said two Thousand Pounds, and there now remaining in his Hands of the Plaintiff Jonathan Jones's Share of the said money, about the Sum of six Hundred and forty two Pounds. That the said Plaintiff Jonathan Jones, having present Occasion for the said money, hath executed a letter of Attorney to the Plaintiff Elizabeth Jones, his mother, dated the Five and Twentieth of May last, empowering her to receive all monies due to him from the said master, and the Interest thereof, for the purposes therein mentioned. It was therefore prayed, that the said Master may pay to the said Plaintiff, Elizabeth Jones, the Remainder of the Money which is in his Hands, belonging to the said Jonathan's Share, pursuant to the Letter of Attorney, executed for that Purpose, which, upon hearing of Mr. Horseley, of Counsel for the Defendant Jett, and what was alledged on both Sides, his Lordship held reasonable, and doth order the same accordingly.

Sab'ti vicesimo secundo Die Decembr' Anno Regni D'ni Georgii Regis nono, inter Prideaux Sutton Cler' & Anna' Uxor' ejus Mercy Sheldon Spinstr' & Egidiu' Lawrence gen' Extor' Winifred Sheldon Spinstr' Defunct' Quer', Elizam Chitty & Job'em Russell & al' per Billa' ad revivend' & Supplement' Defend',

WHEREAS the Defendant Elizabeth Chitty, on the Eleventh of this Instant December, preferred her petition to the Right Honourable the Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, shewing, That the Plaintiff and Winifred Sheldon, since deceased, having executed their Bill for an Account of the Estate of Ralph Sheldon, who died in the East-Indies; and to have their Shares and Proportions thereof, pursuant to his Will: It was on the hearing of this Cause, the eight and twentieth of May, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Fifteen, declared, That the Defendant Elizabeth Chitty was intitled to one Third of the said Estate, under the Will of the Testator Sheldon, her second Husband, in her own Right, and to a Moiety of the other two Thirds, in right of, or, as surviving the Children she had by the said Sheldon, who were dead, and that the other Moiety of the said two Thirds belonged to the Plaintiffs, or those whom they represented and decreed the same, after just Allowances to be paid and distributed accordingly; and Sir Robert Nightingale, Bart. since dead, having by his Answer, admitted to have in his Hands Ten Thousand Four Hundred and Seventy Pounds, three Shillings and Six-pence, part of the Testator's Estate: It was ordered, That he should carry Ten Thousand Pounds thereof, before Mr Dorner, then one of the Masters, to be by him placed out at Interest, on Government, or such other Security as he should approve of, for the Benefit of the Parties to whom the said should belong. In pursuance whereof, the said Sir Robert Nightingale carried the said Ten Thousand Pounds before the said Master, who placed the same out at Interest, and on the nine and Twentieth of July, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Nineteen, though the said Ten Thousand Pounds, with the Interest, which had been received by the said Master, amounting to Eleven Thousand three Hundred and fifty-nine Pounds, seven Shillings, and three Pence, the said Master, by his Report, certify'd, That he had placed eleven Thousand three Hundred Pounds, Part thereof, out on the Land Tax, for the Year One Thousand Seven Hundred and Nineteen, at four Pounds per Cent. and that the Nine and Fifty Pounds seven Shillings and three Pence remained in his Hands; that on the third of August, one Thousand Seven Hundred and Twenty, the Plaintiffs, by Petition, applied to his Lordship, That the Master might pay them some money to carry on this Cause, and for their other Occasions; upon hearing whereof, they were ordered Six Hundred Pounds out of the money in the Master's Hands, which they have received accordingly. That the Defendant, Elizabeth Chitty, had, ever since the Death of her late Husband, Josiah Chitty, wanted money, not only to defend the said Cause, but also for her Support, and other necessary Occasions, and that neither she, nor her late Husband, had received any Part of the Principal or Interest before the Master, nor any other Part of the Testator's Estate, except some Jewels which were delivered up by the Trustees of the Testator's Will in India, to her and her late Husband, which, or the greatest Part thereof, she claimed as her Paraphernalia, but that she had no Benefit or Advantage thereof, her Husband having sold and disposed of them in his Life-time. Therefore, and for that the Money in the Hands of Mr. Edwards, one of the Masters of this Court, who succeeded the said Mr. Dorner in his Office, were considerably increased by the Interest which had been received by him, and for that the said Mrs. Chitty was, as aforesaid, intitled to two Thirds of the said Testator's Estate, except what should be decreed thereout to her Children, by her first Husband, who were intitled to one moiety of their Father's Estate, which was possessed by the said Ralph Sheldon, and for that she was obliged to maintain them, it was prayed, That the said Mr. Edwards might, out of the money in his Hands, and which should be paid in, upon the coming in of any of the Securities taken for the same, pay unto the Defendant Mrs. Chitty such Sum of money as his Lordship should think fit, to enable her to carry on the said Cause, and for her immediate Support, and other Occasions. Whereupon all Parties were ordered to attend his Lordship, on the then next Day of Petitions. And whereas the said Plaintiffs, on the eighteenth Day of this Instant December, also preferred their Petition to his Lordship, shewing, inter al' That they were, thro' their great Occasion for money, forced to apply the greatest part of the money, ordered them as aforesaid, towards their Support; and that the said Cause had been long depending, and very expensive, and was likely to undergo greater Travail before the said Master, before the said Account could be taken, so that they

They had great Occasion for more money, not only to carry on the said Cause, but also for their Support, and other necessary Occasions; and therefore praying that the said Master might also out of the monies in his Hands, and which should be paid in, upon coming in of any of the Securities taken for the same, pay unto the Plaintiffs, or their Solicitors, such Sums of money as his Lordship should think fit, to enable them to carry on the said Cause, and for their immediate Support and other Occasions; and the matter of the said Petition, being ordered to come on with the Defendant Chitty's Petition; and Counsel on both Sides this Day attending accordingly. Whereupon, and upon hearing both the said Petitions read, and what was alledged by the Counsel on both Sides: His Lordship doth order, That the said Mr. Edwards do, out of the money in his Hands, pay unto the Defendant, Mrs. Chitty, the Sum of Six Hundred Pounds, and also unto the Plaintiffs One Hundred Pounds a-piece, and it being now alledged, that John Wyvill, Esq; having exhibited his Bill against the said Giles Lawrence, for Payment of a legacy of two Hundred Pounds, bequeathed to him by the Will of the said Winifred Sheldon. It was on the hearing the said Cause, the first Day of December, One Thousand Seven Hundred and Twenty One, decreed, That the said Mr. Wyvill should be paid the said Legacy and Interest, together with the Costs of that Suit, out of the Assets of the said Ralph Sheldon. It is further ordered, that the said Master, do, out of the money in his Hands, pay the Plaintiff, Lawrence, the further Sum of Three Hundred Pounds, to enable him to satisfy the said Decree.

Mr. Lutwyche. Pray shew Mr. Edwards those Orders.

[The Orders shewn to Mr. Edwards.]

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Edwards may be asked, whether he hath paid any money in that Cause?

Mr. Edwards. Here are two Causes, which is it you mean, that of Jones and Jett?

Mr. Lutwyche. Yes, that of Jones and Jett.

Mr. Edwards. The money ordered, by those several Orders, hath been paid by me.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire to know, whether Mr. Edwards can inform your Lordships, whether it is the whole money, or but in part?

Mr. Edwards. It is the whole money in the Cause.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, whether the money was paid out of Mr. Dormer's Effects, or out of his own?

Mr. Edwards. Out of Mr. Dormer's Effects.

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, Mr. Edwards is a little mistaken, please to put the Orders in; here are three Orders in one Cause, and one in another; I desire to know, whether in both Causes the whole money was paid out?

Mr. Edwards. In that between Jones and Jett, the whole money was paid out, in the other between Sutton and Sheldon, the whole was not paid, but only Part.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We beg leave to ask Mr. Edwards, whether he did not pay the whole that was ordered by those several Orders?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, my Lords.

Mr. Lutwyche. Mr. Edwards did tell your Lordships before, that all the money, arising by Mr. Dormer's Effects, was paid out and gone.

VOL. VI.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we have gone through these three articles that have been opened, and we shall call no more Proof to them.

Then the House adjourned to Monday next at Ten o' Clock in the Forenoon.

The FOURTH DAY.

MONDAY, May 10.

The Lords being seated in their House, and the Managers being come, and the Earl sitting on a Stool, as before, and his Counsel and Solicitors at the Bar, the Sergeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence, as also another Proclamation, That all Persons concerned were to take notice, that Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield, now stood upon his Trial, and they might come forth in order to make good the Charge.

L. Ch. J. King. GENTLEMEN of the House of Commons, you may proceed.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, I am commanded by the Commons, to assist in maintaining their Impeachment against Thomas, Earl of Macclesfield; and when I consider how necessary it is for the Honour of his Majesty's Government, that an impartial Examination should be made into the Behaviour of this Earl, while he enjoyed the High Office of Chancellor; I am persuaded, that every good Subject must with Pleasure observe in what manner this Prosecution is carried on; it must be a Satisfaction to them, to see the Commons placing a Confidence in your Lordships Justice, and proceeding in the Legal Parliamentary method by Impeachments, and your Lordships meriting that Confidence, by laying aside all useless Ceremonies, and making the Prosecution practicable and easy. A harmony between the two Houses of Parliament always to be wished for, and which alone can bring impeachments to a happy issue, and deter great Offenders from oppressing their Fellow Subjects.

My Lords, In former Reigns, Prosecutions of this kind, have met with other Obstructions, and the Crown has often interposed its Authority to save a Favourite Minister; but, his Majesty, who has no other Views, but the Welfare and Happiness of his People, and who is always attentive to their interest, was the first who took notice, that the Earl of Macclesfield had abused the Trust and Confidence reposed in him. And who can (without the deepest Sense of Gratitude) consider the Conduct of his Majesty in this Affair, who immediately dismissed him his Service, and left him to the Justice of an injured Nation? And the Earl of Macclesfield himself will have this Advantage by it, that his Name will be delivered down to Posterity, as a monument of his Majesty's Paternal Goodness to his People. The immense Liberalities, the great Honours, the high Dignities conferr'd on him by his Majesty, will be so many marks of his Royal Munificence to the Earl, while he appeared to be his Worthy and Faithful Servant. And Posterity will with due Veneration observe, that neither the greatest Favour, the nearest Access to his Sacred Person, nor any former merits towards Himself, and his Royal Family, could in his Majesty's Reign, shelter the Highest Officer of the Crown from Justice, who, presuming on those Advantages, would venture to oppress his Majesty's Loyal and Faithful People.

My Lords, The particular province, assigned me in this Prosecution, is to make good the 18th Article, wherein I shall have the Assistance of a Gentleman, who will amply supply all the Defects or Omissions I shall be guilty of.

As this Article has been read by your Lordships Clerk, I shall not mispend your Time in a needless Repetition of it; but will observe, that the Substance of the Charge contained in it, Is a wilful Neglect of the high Trust reposed in the Earl of Macclesfield, as Chancellor, That he did not restrain the masters of the High Court of Chancery, from trafficking with the Suitors money and Effects, but did permit and encourage that Practice, tho' he was advised to put a Stop to it, and fully informed of the Dangers, which were then likely to ensue, and which have since actually ensued, to the great loss and Injury of the Suitors of the said Court.

My Lords, As this wilful Neglect is highly criminal in itself, so it is greatly aggravated by the unjust and corrupt Views which induced him to be guilty of it, and the pernicious Consequences which have necessarily attended it; and, my Lords, since you have heard the Evidence that has been given on the former Articles, of the exorbitant Sums of money which he exacted for the Disposal of the Offices of masters in Chancery, even after Dormer's Failure, we don't doubt but your Lordships are convinced that he left the masters that unreasonable unlimited power, over the Effects of the Suitors of the Court, with no other View, but as a bait and incitement to others, to purchase those Offices (when Vacancies should happen) at the same, or greater Prices.

As I have stated the Charge contained in this Article, in as clear a manner as I am able; I beg leave, my Lords, to make some Observations on the Earl's Answer. He begins with an absolute Denial of his knowing, how the masters kept or disposed of the money and Effects belonging to the Suitors of the Court. This Answer, my Lords, was a Surprize to the Commons, as well because such an Ignorance would have been criminal in the Person, who ordered such prodigious Sums of money into their Hands, and who should be supposed to have had some Care of the Suitors; as also because We have the clearest Proofs imaginable, that he did know it, and it has already been proved by the Examination of several of the masters before your Lordships. But what Want can we have of Proofs? when the Earl of Macclesfield himself in his farther Answer to this Article confesseth it, by saying, that after Mr. Dormer's misfortune, he thought of several methods, and several Proposals were made to him by Persons he consulted on that Occasion, to prevent any Inconvenience on the like Accident, for the future. Pray let us consider, What was Mr. Dormer's misfortune? What was this Accident? Why truly, Mr. Dormer had trafficked with the Suitors Money and Effects, and had lost near 30,000*l.* And this the Earl of Macclesfield knew, and this made him think how to prevent such Inconveniencies, for the future. My Lords, here is one of those Inconveniencies the Commons take Notice of in their Reply, and on which (without any farther Proofs) they might safely demand your Lordships Judgment.

But to consider his Answer farther: He says, he believes it will not be held criminal in him, not to have established any of the Proposals that were made to him by the Persons he consulted on that Occasion: Some Things were proposed that he thought impracticable, some insufficient, and some inconsistent with that compleat Regulation he hoped to make: The Objects, he proposed to himself, were, to make good Mr. Dormer's Deficiency, to secure the Suitors from any future Loss, and to make several Regulations relating to the Offices of the masters: And he thought these would be best done together; nor had he perfected the Scheme of any of them to his own Satisfaction.

My Lords, I am unwilling to make any Observations on this Part of his Answer; it is in itself so gross, I am afraid, if I took it in Pieces, I should appear ludicrous, which I shall take great Care to avoid on so solemn an Occasion.

But I appeal to your Lordships, if a Person was to read this Answer, who was not acquainted with the Times of these Occurrences, whether he must not imagine that the Earl of Macclesfield had quitted the Great Seal within some very short Time after Mr. Dormer's Failure. Whereas it has appeared to your Lordships, that Mr. Dormer went away from that Office in the Year 1720. and that the Earl of Macclesfield continued Chancellor till January last, which is more than four Years after, during all which Time (by his own Confession) he knew the Affairs of the masters of the Court of Chancery to have been in great Disorder, and to have wanted several Regulations: But, because he could not think of a Scheme perfectly to his Mind to answer all his Designs, he therefore has done nothing. This Answer must be left to your Lordships Judgment, but I am afraid, my Lords, the letting the masters go on, without any Check, was the Scheme the most to his Satisfaction, and most effectually obtain'd the Ends he really propos'd to himself, which were the making an exorbitant Gain by the Sale of their Offices, which must have fallen in their Price, if a Stop had been put to their trading with the Suitors money.

My Lords, he farther answers, That he remembers no Proposal that he thought would take it totally out of the Power of the masters to dispose of the Securities or Effects, or effectually secure the Cash. I can't omit taking Notice of the wording this Paragraph; and I believe your Lordships will agree with me, that the Words HE THOUGHT, TOTALLY, and EFFECTUALLY, are thrown in with great Caution. My Lords, We think we can prove to You that a Proposal was made to him, that would have taken it out of the Power of the masters to have disposed of the Securities and Effects, and would have secured, in great measure, the Cash; and this Evidence the Earl of Macclesfield must be well aware of, for He has it in his Hands as well as We; and I foresee the Strength of his Defence, in this Point, lies in the Caution of his Answer: But, my Lords, if any Proposal was made to him, which would have cured the greatest Part of the Evils the Court laboured under, I am sure your Lordships will hold it criminal in him not to have made use of it, and the rather, because he substituted no other in its room.

My Lords, He admits he took no Security of the masters, and says, he was never asked so to do. My Lords, We will prove that he was asked so to do, and that taking Security was part of the Proposal I have mentioned. In this Place he takes Notice of his Predecessors, who (as he says) were wiser Men than himself, and who took no Security of the masters. My Lords, We don't accuse his Predecessors, nor are we obliged to justify them; but, if I may be permitted to give my own private Opinion, It is, that if such misfortunes had happened in his Predecessors Days, and such Application had been made to them, they were so wise, they would have applied a proper Remedy: His not doing so, under these Circumstances, We look on as a plain Permission, and a strong Encouragement to the masters to traffick with, and employ the Suitors money for their own Gain and Profit. And it must appear so in a stronger Light, when your Lordships are acquainted that Mr. Lighboun, who is himself a master in Chancery, was the Person who made the Proposal, and who must (by my Lord's not using it) plainly see, that my Lord was resolved to lay no Restraint on them, which might have tempted Mr. Lighboun himself to have made an ill Use of that Power: But as he professed to my Lord Chancellor his Abhorrence of the masters abusing their Trust, by alienating the Suitors Effects, and desired my Lord to put a Stop to that Practice; so it appeared by his Accounts given in before the Judges, that he had appropriated the specifick Securities of the Suitors to every particular Cause. And, my Lords, we look on it as a great Aggravation of the Crimes contained in this Article, which I have now gone through, That my Lord Macclesfield should continue to act with such mean, low Views, as were unbecoming a master in Chancery, when he had the Assistance of a master, who behaved himself with a Prudence, Integrity, and Resolution, which would have been becoming the Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Cary. My Lords, It is my Province to assist the Gentleman, that spoke before me, in supporting the Charge of the Commons in the 18th Article, which he has open'd with so great Force and Perspicuity, that it is unnecessary for me to give your Lordships more Trouble upon it, than by making an Observation or two on the most material parts. The Beginning of this Article sets forth, That the Earl of Macclesfield very well knew, or was inform'd, that the Masters did, or that it was in their Power to dispose of, and employ the Suitors Money and Effects. To which, he is pleased evasively to answer, "That he never knew how the Masters kept, or disposed of the money and Effects belonging to the Suitors of the Court." The contrary of this will be abundantly prov'd; in the manner the Gentleman has already stated it.

But were it not, my Lords, so strong in Proof, the Guilt to me appears self-evident; 'tis much the same, whether he knew it, or knew it not; his Lordship may take the Alternative. What! did He, Lord Chancellor, supreme Director of the Court, the great Trustee of England (who order'd the money into the master's Hands, who order'd it out of their Hands) did He know nothing of their Power over it? Was he the only man in England that knew nothing of their Deficiency? And if he was, my Lords, Is that Ignorance an Excuse, or Aggravation? But we shall prove to your Lordships, that he not only was told of this Traffick with the Suitors money, but was foretold the Consequences of it, the Danger of future losses was pointed out to him, and proposals for preventing 'em were given him in Writing.

And who was it, my Lords, that made these proposals? Who gave him this Warning? One of the masters of the Court, One interested in the Traffick of the Suitors money, a Gamester at the same Table with the impeach'd Earl. Advice from such a Hand must be sincere and unsuspected; nothing but Justice, or a strong Apprehension of their common Danger, could have extorted it; nothing but the blindest Avarice could have prevented the Compliance with it. But what still renders this Conduct more amazing is, that the impeach'd Lord had not the Advantage of a single proposal only, and from a single master, but of several proposals; and from several of 'em. Mr. Knayston will inform your Lordships, That he and other Masters waited on the Lord Chancellor, and propos'd to give Security in Land, or Money, for their Cash, and to make their Trust less by putting the Securities in two Masters Names, or in the Names of the Parties and one of the Masters; with which he then appeared pleas'd, tho' he afterwards did nothing in it, and expres'd his dislike of the proposal. Yes, my Lords, the proposal was too reasonable to be refus'd, and too self-denying to be follow'd. So far was the unfortunate Lord from following it, or acting in any manner consistent with it, that soon after the Failure of Mr. Dormer, after these proposals were made to him, he sells the Offices of several masters at most exorbitant Prices. And was this what my noble Lord sets forth in his Answer, as one of the Expedients he thought of, after Dormer's Misfortune, for preventing any Inconvenience, on the like Accident, for the future? Was this the only Method of Cure the noble Earl brought to such Perfection, as to venture to put it in Practice?

My Lords, the Gentlemen, embark'd in the same Bottom with this unhappy Lord, saw the Ship sinking, and propos'd throwing over-board part of their unjustifiable Gains, to prevent their general Wreck; but the impeach'd Earl does not only boldly steer on the same Course, but takes in lading, more Weight of Guilt, if not in defiance of the danger, certainly in the Neglect of it.

And how, my lords, does his Answer excuse this Conduct? He admits that several proposals were made on that Occasion, but some he thought impracticable, some insufficient, some inconsistent with that compleat Regulation he hoped to make. And because some were insufficient, some inconsistent, and not answering the full Idea of Perfection propos'd by his lordship, must therefore nothing be attempted? Must we have no Relief, because we despair of an absolute Cure? Must no Remedy be apply'd to a dying Person, because it is not certain it will restore him to his perfect Strength? Thus far indeed is certain, It is much better to do nothing, than to continue such methods, as first brought the Distemper upon him. We must therefore leave it with your Lordships to judge, whether the Inconsistency of the proposals with the Earl's private Views was not the true Reason of their being thought impracticable and insufficient. And what those Views really were, the whole
Tenor

Tenor of our Evidence has, and will shew. Views beneath the Dignity of his high Office, and far below a Member of this August Assembly.

My Lords, the Commons farther charge this unhappy Earl, that he not only knew, but conniv'd at, and encourag'd this destructive Traffick: And in answer to this, He says: "That he gave no Permission nor Encouragement to the Masters of the Court, to employ or traffick with the Suitors Money." We have shewed your Lordships, he knew it, and knew it in the most affecting manner, by the Ruin it had produced. We need not shew you that He had power to prevent it. And surely, my Lords, to know it and not prevent it, in his Situation, was to permit it. And as his not preventing it was a Permission, so his Example was an Encouragement: And when the Masters saw him (the greatest Object in the Compass of their View) taking every indirect method to make the most of his High Office; sure, they must think that Example (join'd to the Necessity he Himself laid them under by the exorbitant Prices he exacted) a sufficient Encouragement to authorize them in the like Practices in theirs. The Examples of great Men, my Lords, are Encouragements, and the Assembly I see before me is an illustrious Proof, they ought to be so, and will do Honour to those who follow them: And from the Influence those Examples have, and ought to have over the rest of mankind, it has been suppos'd, that the only Passage to Honour was through the Temple of Virtue; but, my Lords, tho' there be but one Passage to it, there are many from it; and so many are the Frailties of human Nature, that the Building would be imperfect, without a Back-door to let out, whatsoever fullies or pollutes it: A Door, my Lords, your Ancestors have opened to former Lord Chancellors.

But we shall call our Evidence, and submit the whole with the greatest Security and Satisfaction to your Lordship's Judgment.

Mr. Plummer. I desire Mr. Lightboun may be called.

[Mr. Lightboun being called appeared.]

Mr. Plummer. I desire Mr. Lightboun may inform your Lordships, whether he had any Discourse with my Lord Chancellor, about putting the Offices of Masters of Chancery into a better Regulation?

Mr. Lightboun. My Lords, in order to answer this question it will be necessary for me to repeat some part of the Account I gave when I was last at your Lordship's Bar. I then acquainted your Lordships, that in the Beginning of the Summer, in the Year 1722, the Lord Macclesfield, having directed me to attend him, told me that he had heard I had not contributed my 500 l. towards making up Mr. Dormer's Deficiency, as the other masters had done; that he did not expect I would have stood out, and was sorry to hear of it, as he had a more particular Regard to my Conduct than any of the rest, because I was the only master of his immediate Choice; and on his Lordship's telling me that it was first propos'd by the masters, and not by his Lordship, I told him I was not willing to comply with it, and thought it a dangerous Expedient; that it might be hereafter looked upon as an Undertaking one for another, and therefore I would not come into it; and that as this Accident had happened to Mr. Dormer, the like might happen again to others, and might be the Ruin of us all, if such a Construction were put upon it. My Lord was pleas'd to say, it was the only Expedient he could think of for making good the deficiency. I told him I had as much at Heart the doing of that as any Body; and that if a proper Expedient could be found out to pay Mr. Dormer's deficiency, and prevent the like Accident among us for the future, by putting the Offices on such a Foot, that the masters might execute them with Honour to the Court and themselves, and with Safety to the Suitors, I should be glad to contribute to such Regulations. His Lordship said he should be glad if any such Thing could be thought of, and asked me, if I could think of any method by which that might be done. I told him I believed I had, at which he expressed great Satisfaction; and we being then standing, his Lordship desired I would sit down. He then asked me, in what manner it was that I propos'd the Suitors should be made safe: I told his Lordship that I apprehended it was impossible to expect, that the masters could give a Security adequate to such a Trust; that there were many Instances of great Officers, whose Trust was so great as to be above giving ample Security, particularly the Tellers of the Exchequer, and the Treasurers of the South-Sea and East-India Companies: But if a competent Security were taken, and such I apprehended might be given, I hoped it would answer the Intent, and give Satisfaction, since ample Security for so great Trust could not be expected. I then told his Lordship, that if the Causes of Mr. Dormer's misfortunes were considered, they would be found not only to proceed from squandering or misapplication of the Cash, but from Power over the Securities in his Hands; for that the money could not be so much, but the Securities amount'd to a greater Sum. He said it might be so, but how to prevent it he would be glad to know. I told his Lordship, that if the Securities, for the future, were to be taken in the Names of the master, and one or more of the Parties, the Suitors would be safe. It was then observed, but whether by my Lord, or me, I do not remember, that an objection might arise to this method, for that if either the master or the party should die, the Trust would survive; and thereby either the Court lose its Power over the Security, or the master's sole Power over it be restored; but, to prevent that, I propos'd that they might be taken in the Name of two or three, or more of the masters, with or without the Persons interested, as the Court should think proper; and that it was hardly to be imagin'd that all the masters would betray their Trust, and risque their Fortunes to oblige any one, by suffering him to traffick with the Securities of the Court, taken in their joint Names; especially, if Care was taken, that such master, as was to be joined, or be a Check upon another master, should have a Third to be a Check upon him. My Lord Macclesfield objected, That there was a great Number of South-Sea and India Bonds, and other Securities, payable to the Bearer, that could not be in the Names of any particular persons, and so could not be secured in that manner; and that it would be troublesome to lock them up. To which I replied, I knew no occasion for putting out money on South-Sea or India Bonds, or such securities, since there were other Securities sufficient, sufficient, which might be under a proper Restriction, and which were not partable, but are transferrable in Books at the Bank, or elsewhere, viz. Stocks, Bank-Annuities, Civil-List Annuities, Four per Cent Annuities, Land and Malt Tallies, and Lottery Orders, which were assignable by Indorsement; and that, if these Securities were taken in the Names of several Persons, it would be impossible for any one Person to dispose of them, without the Knowledge and Consent of all. My Lord expressed great Satisfaction at this Proposal; and then asked me, in what manner Mr. Dormer's Deficiency would be provided for? I then acquainted his Lordship, that there was always a considerable Cash in each master's Hands; and that if some part of that was placed out at Interest, in the Name of all the masters, it would be no Injury to the Owners, if it was ready, when called for; and the produce would raise a Fund to pay Mr. Dormer's Debt; and that it was very likely the Lords of the Treasury might, on such an occasion, give us the Preference, and let us choose a proper Part of the loans on the Land and Malt-Tax, to lend the money upon; that if any master wanted any Part of the money he had placed out on that Occasion, to answer the Suitors Demands, such Securities were easily converted into money. I was unwilling to fix any Sum for each master to advance; but believe I did mention 3, 4, or 5000 l. for his Lordship's Consideration; and took Notice that would amount to 40 or 50,000 l. and would, in due Time, raise a Sum of money sufficient to answer the Deficiency of Mr. Dormer. My lord made some Doubts; but said he would be exceeding glad to give his Assistance; but was afraid he could not properly order the Suitors money to be laid out, but for their Benefit whose money it was. I said, I thought that might be done without any Order, if his lordship approved it, and the masters all came into it, and placed it out in all their Names; and that at any Time, by disposing of the Security taken for it, the money might be raised, when wanted. My lord made some Doubt, whether it could well be done; but was pleased with the Proposal: And many other Things were said, which I cannot, at this Distance of Time, recollect. I had, my lords, two Views in it, but won't be positive that I mentioned them to my lord. I apprehended it would not only raise a Fund to pay Mr. Dormer's debt; but that it would divest each master of the power over 5000 l. of the Suitors money, which he had in his Hands. I also took Notice, that if some small Security was taken from the masters, but am not certain that I mentioned any Sum; but believe I might say 5000 l. and that such a Security, with our Offices, valued at about 5000 l. a-piece, would, with the money placed out for the Payment of Mr. Dormer's Debt, be a Security for the money in our Hands, were we but divested of the power over the Securities, which was four parts in five of the Trust: And tho' 15,000 l. will not answer the money which a master may sometimes have in his Hands; yet, where a man gives a Security for 14 or 15,000 l. he'll scarce run away for 20,000 l. This I thought, might be of Service to the publick, and desired my Lord to consider of it: And his Lordship said, that something might be grafted on this Plan; and desired me to put it in Writing. I told his Lordship I did not know, whether this Scheme might be agreeable to every Body; that I came into the Office but very lately; and that it was necessary for me to have a good Correspondence with my Brethren; and that I was afraid, if it should be known that I proposed any thing without their privacy, I should be used more unkindly among them than I had already been; and therefore hoped his lordship would not let them know, that it was my Proposal, nor shew them any thing of mine in writing; and took my Leave of my lord at that Time. The other masters knew I had been with my lord; but I did not communicate the Occasion of my going to him, or the Proposal; but I sounded the rest of the Masters, how any proposal of this Kind was agreeable to them: Most of them were averse to it, particularly that of divesting them of the Securities; because that shew'd a Distrust of them, and, they said, would diminish the Reputation of the Office. They were against placing out any such Sum as 5000 l. some were rather willing to contribute annually, than to pay such a Sum of money down: And finding them averse to it, I was a little cautious how I put this Proposal into Writing. It was near a month before I set about it; and then did it by way of letter, in which I took Notice in the Beginning, that it was in Obedience to his Lordship's Command.

Mr. Plummer. I beg pardon for interrupting the Witness; I desire he may be asked, if he did not send that Letter to my Lord Macclesfield?

Mr. Lightboun. I wrote a Letter, to the same Purport or Effect with what I had proposed, except in some Instances which I found other masters averse to, and was cautious of carrying it too far; and believe, instead of 5000 l. to be placed out, I only mentioned 2000 l. or such other Sum as should be agreed on. And though I mentioned a larger Sum, when I was with my Lord, and a smaller by Letter, I left that to my Lord's Direction, as his Lordship should think necessary. I don't remember, or believe, that I took notice in my Letter of the small Security I proposed to be taken, the rather, because the masters differed much in their Thoughts about that: Some of them were for giving none; therefore I said nothing of it. I thought that was my Lord's province more than mine; but I stuck the more closely to that of placing out of the money, for payment of Mr. Dormer's Deficiency, and taking the Securities in several masters Names. And when I had writ the letter, I sent it to my lord about June, or July, 1722, by my Clerk, who told me he delivered it to my Lord's Servant.

Mr. Plummer. I desire to know, if he kept any Copy of that letter?

Mr. Lightboun. I kept the original Draught, which I apprehend I writ the letter from. I can't say it is an exact Copy; because in transcribing, I might alter Words which I disliked, and put in others; and therefore I am not sure it is a true Copy; it may vary in Form, but not in Substance.

Mr. Plummer. I desire he may be asked, whether ever he spoke to my lord about it, and that my Lord acknowledged the Receipt of this letter?

Mr. Lightboun. My Lords, I think I did say, in the Prefence of some of the masters, when my Lord talked of taking Security in several masters Names, that if his Lordship would look into the letter I writ to him at such a Time, he would find that Propofal made: I don't remember my Lord made any Reply, he did not deny it. But not long before Christmas, my Lord did mention this letter to me, upon this Occasion: When I was passing my Accompt before the Judges, and the Directors of the Bank, I had told them of this letter; which his Lordship, having heard of, asked me, what I had said about it? I told his Lordship, I had acquainted them with the Contents of the letter I wrote: Says He, I have that letter by me.

Mr. Plummer. I desire Mr. Lightboun may produce the letter.

Mr. Lightboun. My Lords, I have not the letter.

Mr. Plummer. The original Draught you mention.

[Mr. Lightboun produces the Draught.]

Mr. Plummer. Is that your own Hand-writing, and the Substance of the Letter you sent to the Lord Chancellor?

Mr. Lightboun. It is my Hand-writing, and the Substance of that Letter.

Mr. Plummer. I desire it may be read.

[Mr. Baily reads the Draught.]

My LORD,

I N Obedience to your Commands, I here lay before your Lordship my Thoughts upon the Affair you were pleased to mention, when I had last the Honour to wait upon your Lordship; and must own, that a provision, for the Demand upon Mr. Dormer's Office, might answer our present purpose: But, with great Submission, I think it concerns the Honour of the Court of Chancery, to find out some proper Expedient to prevent the like Accident for the future: And I beg leave to observe, that the great Difficulty, which this Gentleman has brought upon himself and the Court, proceeds not only from his Squandering or Misapplication of the Court Cash in his Hands (were that all, his Estate and Office would much more than have answer'd the Demand) but I am afraid it is too obvious, that his Power over the Government Securities, that had been transferr'd to, or brought before him, or upon which he had placed out the Money of the Suitors of the Court in his own Name, has been the Occasion of this great Deficiency, which I hope may be provided for, and the Credit of the Court retrieved and supported, by every Master's advancing 2000*l.* or such other Sum as shall be agreed on, out of the Cash of the Court in his Hands; which being placed out at Interest, the yearly Income thereof, together with the Produce of Mr. Dormer's Estate, will answer the Demands that may be expected on his Successor; and will, in due Time, make good the Debt upon the Office, provided the Money that has already, or may hereafter be raised, from his Estate, or any other Way, for that purpose, be forthwith apply'd to discharge such Demands as carry Interest, or be invested in such Securities as have been disposed of by Mr. Dormer, belonging to the Suitors, to answer the same and the accruing Interest, which I hope the Gentleman that succeeds him has already taken Care of, if not, the Demand will rather encrease than diminish.

And having before observed, from whence this great Deficiency has arose, I submit it to your Lordship, whether the taking all Government Securities for the future, in the Name of two or more Masters, may not prevent the like Misfortune hereafter: And the Deposit to be put out to Interest, to raise a Fund for the Payment of Mr. Dormer's Debt, together with our Office, wou'd in a great Measure, be a Security for the Cash with which we should then only be intrusted.

I expect it will be objected, against the Deposit, that some masters may not always have that Sum in their Hands; but I will venture to say, 'tis scarce probable that can happen, if the Money be directed as usual, to be brought before the Masters, both by Your Lordship and the Master of the Rolls, without which the Masters can't think themselves much interested in the Event of Mr. Dormer's Affair.

It may also be objected, that the Alteration proposed, in the future taking Government Securities, will shew a Distrust, and cause Reflections upon the masters; but I shall think it a Happiness, to be divested of a power never to be used, without the greatest Violation of the Trust reposed in us that can well be imagined; and I think it evident, that it had been a much greater, if we had never been intrusted with it; and as this Variation may be begun by ourselves, without any publick Direction or Alteration in future Orders, I think it will rather turn to our Reputation than Disadvantage, and will certainly ease the minds of the Suitors, which ought to have some Consideration in this Affair. I am unwilling to trespass longer on your Lordship's Time; but if I have the Happiness to have offered any thing thought practicable by your Lordship, when I have the Honour to be admitted to wait upon you, I hope to satisfy your Lordship, that I shall, with Pleasure, contribute, as becomes me, to facilitate any Undertaking of this Kind; and that I have as much at Heart the Reputation of the Office I had the Honour to be placed in by your Lordship, as any of my Brother masters. But as we have different Views, it is not surprizing that we think not alike; which makes me fear that nothing of this Kind will be approved of, unless recommended by your Lordship; and am,

My LORD,

Your Lordship's

Most obedient Servant,

J. LIGHTBOUN.

Mr. Plummer. What Date is it?

Mr. Lightboun. I did not expect when I wrote this letter, that I should have been called upon to give any Account of it, and did not put any Date to it; but to the best of my Knowledge, it was in June, July, or August, 1722; but it is from Circumstances I recollect that, rather than from any Remembrance I have of the exact Time.

Mr. Lutwyche. I only desire that Mr. Lightboun may recollect the Time, when he first mentioned this to my Lord Macclesfield, and this letter was taken Notice of to him?

Mr.

Mr. Lightboun. Indeed, my Lords, I cannot do that, I believe it was at a meeting of several of the masters, at my Lord's House. I often had the Honour to be admitted to him, with or without other masters. His Doors and Ear were always open to me; and I was often troublesome to his lordship. But I cannot recollect the Time, when this was first mentioned.

Mr. Plummer. I think he says the Masters might have different Views. I desire he would explain himself, what he meant by that?

Mr. Lightboun. I meant by that to put my Lord in mind of what I had said, when I had the Honour to be with him last, when his Lordship told me, that the proposal of a Contribution came from the two senior masters, I then said that their Design was only to skin over this Wound, till they could get out: That one of them had slipp'd his Neck out of the Collar already, and another was about getting out. I told his lordship, that, as I was but lately come into the Office, I proposed to spend my days or wear myself out in the Service of the Court. Therefore, that their Design was to get out, and mine to continue in, was what I meant by different Views.

Mr. Plummer. Mr. Lightboun hath given your Lordships an Account of his Proposals and Arguments used with my Lord Chancellor; I desire to know, whether he used any other inducements to persuade my Lord to make some Orders relating to the masters?

Mr. Lightboun. It was a long Time before I heard any more of this Affair. As they were quiet, without any Application to me for the 500*l.* or to come into any Contribution, which I was resolved against; so I did not think it prudent for me to make any Bustle amongst my Brethren. I thought I had done my Duty, I had given my Opinion when it was required, and I did not stir in it till the masters apprehended themselves very much aggrieved, by the Variation the master of the Rolls was pleased to make in the Practice of the Court, by directing all the money of the Suitors to be brought before his Usher, and sometimes to be put out by him without the masters Approbation; which not only deprived the masters of any Advantage from thence, but of those Fees that were due to them, on the receiving and placing out at Interest, or paying it out again; and, as I took it, it no Way answered the End, nor was for the Benefit or Security of the Suitors: Because if the Trust was too great, and the Suitors Property not safe in eleven Men's Hands, much less was it safe in the Hands of one. Therefore I apprehended there was Reason for Complaint. On this Account we had several Meetings; I was always ready to come into any Representation to my Lord, in hopes that Grievances of all Kinds might be looked into, and, I believe, often complained to my Lord of these matters. We went to my Lord Chancellor, and acquainted him of our Grievances; my Lord desired us to put them into Writing, we all readily concurred in that: Accordingly we drew up our Complaints of these, and other Incroachments on our Offices, by Way of Representation, which was delivered to my Lord Chancellor, and after my Lord had had it some Time, and nothing done, we frequently importuned my Lord, to consider the declining

State of our Offices; and, I concluded, that would bring the other matters on the Stage, without which, nothing effectual could be done. My Lord said he would have a Conference with the master of the Rolls, and the Masters, in order to debate these matters; and I did not doubt, but, upon that Occasion, the Deficiency of Dormer's would come out, and that something might be done for us, consistent with the Honour of the Court, and the Suitors Safety. But that Conference was delayed; the Grievances in all Respects grew greater; we grew more troublesome to my Lord Chancellor; my Lord then said, there was a Necessity of redressing all the Grievances; he mentioned the masters giving Security, that of taking Securities for the Suitors in other People's Names, and continuing the Masters in the Enjoyment of their Offices, as they had used to have them, and said it would be best to do all together. With this we were put off for some Time, but, on further Solicitation, my lord said, he was now determined to do something in this Affair, and his Lordship desired a more particular Account of the Grievances complained of by the masters, and their Reasons, and the Inconveniencies to the Suitors that accrued from the new methods, which the master of the Rolls had turned the Business of the Court into; and that the matter, both with respect to the Suitors and the masters, might be fully understood, his lordship pressed, that something of that Kind might be drawn up in Writing and laid before him, and he would make Orders proper to make a thorough Reformation in the Court: And, I remember his Expression to me was, it would save him much Trouble, if what was drawn up by the masters, not only contained the Things which they had Grounds to complain of, but was put into the Form of Orders necessary to be made, for him to consider of, and alter, and add such others as he had prepared, or thought necessary. And soon after, a second Representation was prepared and was delivered to my lord. And after his lordship had had it some short Time, there was a Meeting at my lord Chancellor's, where the master of the Rolls and the masters were present, and at that Time there was a good deal of Discourse about the money. But when the master of the Rolls began the Topick of his Jurisdiction, exclusive of the King's Commission, Heats arose, and little was done at that meeting. I think some Persons of Quality came to speak with my lord, and that broke it up. I was soon afterwards with my lord, and I asked his lordship what he intended to do: He said he was sorry Matters were got to that Height, but that he found if the Masters would give up the Judicature, they might be made easy in their Demands, and Things put upon the old Foot, and the Suitors made safe too. Upon that Occasion, I did take the liberty to say, if there was a judicial Power in the masters by Vertue of the King's Commission, as it was his Majesty's Prerogative to grant, we could not give it up; and that, for my part, I would not exchange or barter it for the Custody of the Suitors Money. I believe my lord proposed, at this meeting, to have had the Assistance of the Master of the Rolls in making these intended Orders; and I recollect, that after the Deficiency of this last Representation, which I was present at, I heard that my lord had shewn it to the master of the Rolls before the meeting, which I took amiss, my lord desiring it for his own private Use: Upon which I went to him in order to withdraw it, and told him it was done in such Hast, that all the Masters had not considered it; but whether I alledged to him, or He to me, I don't remember, but it was said, that it was very proper the Masters should all sign it; and I think I carried it back to the Masters, and that we all signed it; and then it was delivered back to my Lord. And, I believe, upon the Face of that Representation it will appear, that it was drawn up at my Lord Chancellor's Request.

The first Representation was chiefly confined to such Grievances as affected our selves, the second is more at large; I don't know whether his lordship will produce it. Some Things in it may seem to bear hard upon his Honour the master of the Rolls, and may give Offence; but it will be considered, that it was written at a time when there were great Differences between the master of the Rolls and the masters. Nay, I think I may say, the whole Court of Chancery was in a State of War.

Mr. Plummer. I desire he may be asked, if he ever laid before my lord Chancellor the Expectations of the World; that he would reform these Abuses and Grievances?

Mr. Lightboun. I have often mentioned that to my Lord, and pressed it rather more and oftener than became me. I was ashamed to be so troublesome, and I was surprized that my lord did not do something in it; tho' I soon found, and have often told one or other of the masters and others, that my lord would do nothing in it. However, I continued to persevere in pressing it; and expressly mentioned the great Inconveniencies the Court would be run into, for want of a proper Regulation, and with what an ill Grace we could apply to his Successors to redress these Grievances, in Case his lordship grew weary of the fatigue of Business, and quitted the great Seal; that they would tell us, we had long acquiesced under them, and that his lordship not having so much as looked into them, they would not care to meddle or interfere in it. I pressed it home to his lordship, and thought he made Doubts and Difficulties where there were none. Indeed I thought in this his lordship wanted his usual Resolution, and almost ventured to say so. I know not whether it is very proper to mention it, but I did take the liberty to tell his Lordship, that if he did not redress these Grievances, unless my lord Lechmere succeeded him, I despaired of seeing them settled on any better Foot. I hope my lord will pardon my mentioning his Name.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My lords, We have done with Mr. Lightboun.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, when the first Application was made by the masters to redress their Grievances?

Mr. Lightboun. I really can't tell. I went so frequently to my lord, that I cannot distinguish one Time from another; I believe other masters that went seldomer can tell better; but I believe it must be a Year and a half, or 2 Years ago, or more: I cannot tell the Time.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, whether there was any second Application, before the Representation was put into Writing?

Mr. Lightboun. Immediately upon the master of the Rolls's varying the method of the Court, and directing the money to be paid in to the Usher, the masters went to my lord Chancellor's, which I believe must be before Christmas, 1722. I believe Mr. Holford remembers it better; and that from Time to Time, I have often told him that my lord Chancellor would do nothing in it.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire to ask him, when that meeting was between the late lord Chancellor and the master of the Rolls?

Mr. Lightboun. That I believe was the beginning of last Summer.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We desire he may say who was then present at that meeting with the master of the Rolls?

Mr. Lightboun. My lords, At that meeting with the master of the Rolls the lord Chancellor was there, had the great Seal before him; and the two Senior Registers were there, with Pen Ink and Paper before them, in proper Habits; the Master of the Rolls, and all the masters in their Gowns; and the Secretary was there, and the masters all hoped the Orders were to be then pronounced; but I can't remember that the Registers set Pen to Paper. The Usher was likewise there.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may, if he can recollect it, give a particular Account of what passed at that meeting.

Mr. Lightboun. The masters insisted they had a Right by Custom to have the money brought before them, where there was any Reference to a master, whether it was by Orders made upon hearing, or by Interlocutory Orders, or if there was a Direction in that Order, by which the money was brought in for the Payment, or Application of it; in these Cases they alledged, that the money had, time out of mind, been brought before the master, to whom the reference was directed; and they did admit, that where money was brought in upon Bills of Interpleader or Interlocutory Orders, where there was no Reference to a master, the money had usually been directed to be brought into Court, in Order to be kept till it could be determined whose it was, or to what Use it was to be applied; and there they admitted the money was formerly kept by the Usher. This I apprehended was insisted upon by the masters as their undoubted Right, and it was expected an Order would have been then made, declaring it so.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire to know what further passed relating to Facts only, without any Account of his own Expectations?

Mr. Lightboun. Some Debate arose about the master of the Rolls's Judicature, started I think first by himself.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to put Mr. Lightboun in mind of some Things, and first to ask him, whether upon that Application they had made to me in relation to the Alteration or Variation, as he calls it, in the Practice of the Court, by the Orders made by the master of the Rolls, whether I did not require them to lay Precedents before me, that I might be satisfied how that matter stood?

Mr. Lightboun. Your lordship did; but it was long before that meeting, I believe a Year and more.

E. of Macclesfield. Whether there had not been like Directions, that the Usher should lay Precedents before me?

Mr. Lightboun. I don't know of any such Directions to him, but I remember my lord Chancellor called for his Precedents, and wondred he had not brought them, if he had any for his purpose.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire Mr. Lightboun may recollect whether the question was not put to the Usher, with relation to the Usage of the Court, to put the money into the masters Hands, in all Cafes where the money was brought into Court, to be disposed of, either to be put out at Interest, or paid to Creditors, or Legatees, whether he had any one Precedent to the contrary?

Mr. Lightboun. I remember he had none, and I apprehended the Usher did not make out any sort of Claim to keep such money.

E. of Macclesfield. I don't ask what the Usher made out, but what Questions were asked him about the Usage and Precedents.

Mr. Lightboun. I believe they were ask'd for, and I am sure he then produced none.

E. of Macclesfield. Pray recollect, and consider; did I speak to him, as to one that had not any Precedents to produce; or did I make mention as if he had brought Precedents, and ask him if he could say, that among those Precedents there was one to the Purpose, to make out that the Usage was not so?

Mr. Lightboun. I say your lordship blamed him for not bringing these Precedents. I believe your lordship asked him, if he could bring any Precedent to the Point? and, to the best of my Remembrance, he said he had none, or gave no satisfactory Answer, but such as I thought evasive; but I cannot remember particularly what your lordship and he said to each other.

E. of Macclesfield. This is a very indifferent Account; since Mr. Lightboun hath so good a memory, I desire to know whether the Usher was not told, that his Precedents had been read, and possibly I might have overlooked some that were material; and therefore desired him to shew whether there was among them any one Precedent, that related to money brought in, in these Cafes?

Mr. Lightboun. He produced none.

E. of Macclesfield. Did it not appear that he had produced Precedents before, and they had been read, and that possibly I might have overlooked some of them?

Mr. Lightboun. On your lordship's mentioning of it, I do recollect something did appear, that your lordship had seen his Precedents, and did expect he should have brought more.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire he may be asked whether he did pretend he could produce more?

Mr. Lightboun. My lords, I cannot be particular in that.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to know whether he did not own that he had no such Precedents?

Mr. Lightboun. In Answer to that, my lords, I cannot say positively he did or did not; for I believe I have seen some few Orders of antient Dates, that were Precedents of money being brought into the Usher's Hands, in Order to be disposed of after hearing. But there were but few of them.

E. of Macclesfield. My lords, I desire Mr. Lightboun may be asked whether the Registers were not asked about the Practice of the Court and if in all their Observation and Experience the money in the Cafes before specified was order'd to the Usher?

Mr. Lightboun. They were, my lords.

E. of Macclesfield. And what Answer did they make?

Mr. Lightboun. They answered, that the money, after hearing, and on interlocutory Orders, where the Application was directed, had been usually ordered to the masters.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire Mr. Lightboun may be asked, whether it was not after this, that the master of the Rolls began to speak with relation to the Judicature, and how that was introduced?

Mr. Lightboun. I have forgot the Circumstances and Manner of its being introduced by the Master of the Rolls. But I remember one Expression of his Honour's, That he would have the Masters consider how proper it was for them to insist upon a Judicature, which would impower them to order Money into their own Hands. But how he introduced that Discourse I don't know; but I saw the lord Chancellor had not a Mind that Topick should be touched upon, and that the Master of the Rolls brought it in much against his Lordship's Inclination; but how I don't remember. If your Lordship puts me in mind, I may recollect.

E. of Macclesfield. The Usher, was not he apprized of this meeting?

Mr. Lightboun. Yes.

E. of Macclesfield. Did the Master of the Rolls give any Opinion relating to this Matter of the Money being paid to the Usher?

Mr. Lightboun. He insisted on his own Judicature, and both introduced and stuck to that Discourse.

E. of Macclesfield. Do you remember his saying that the Masters must not expect favour at the Rolls, if they contended for Jurisdiction?

Mr. Lightboun. My Lords, I do not.

E. of Macclesfield. You spoke of my irresolution: Was it not with respect to the Dispute between you and the Master of the Rolls?

Mr. Lightboun. I could not tell were it stuck, there was some Difficulty made of determining that Matter; but your Lordship did not communicate to me your Reasons why you did not proceed upon that or any other of the Masters Affairs.

E. of Macclesfield. I presume, Mr. Lightboun, you did not every time you came to me, speak to me of the Affairs wherein the Masters thought themselves hurt?

Mr. Lightboun. No, my Lord, I did not.

E. of Macclesfield. You sometimes spoke to me about the Money, and at other Times relating to the Master of the Rolls; I desire to know, when you applied to me with respect to the Disputes with the Master of the Rolls and the Innovations made on your Offices; if it was not upon that you found me irresolute?

Mr. Lightboun. Your Lordship always said it was proper to settle all at one Time, that some Security should be given by the Masters, and something done to make it reasonable to expect it from them; which was to establish the Masters in their just Rights, and upon that occasion your Lordship mentioned taking Securities in different rent Persons Names, and upon that Score the old Proposal of mine was revived.

E. of Macclesfield. I have no further Question to ask.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire Mr. Holford may be called.

Mr. Holford called:

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, We desire Mr. Holford may be asked, whether at any time, and when, he heard of a Proposal made by Mr. Lightboun, and whether it was made publick?

Mr. Holford. My Lords, a good while ago; I believe two or three Years, Mr. Lightboun and I had a great deal of Discourse about the Condition and Circumstances the Court of Chancery was then in; and about the Confusion that was like to happen by the unfortunate Accident that had happened to Mr. Dormer. We did talk of a great many Things that were proper to remedy it. A great many were the same that are mentioned in the Letter that hath been read. I think I told him, it was very right, especially as to the matter of the Securities, which was the greatest power a Master was trusted with; for, as the Securities were above three Parts in four of the whole Trust, if there could be a way found out to secure that, it would be a taking away three Parts in four of our Trust; and consequently would not leave so great a Power in the Masters; but as long as they were taken in the Name of one Person, and no trust declared, he could dispose of those Things, and no body could hinder it. Therefore I thought it proper to be taken in two or three Names. I believe when it was proposed to be in two Masters, it was mentioned there might be a third, and then no harm could happen to the Suitors, unless Corruption ran through the whole Office. I remember some time after, that Mr. Lightboun did shew me the rough Draught of this Letter, which he said he had sent to my Lord; and we read it over together at my House: I told him, it was very right, and that he had put it upon as good a Foot as upon the first Consideration it could be put upon: That every new Method was liable to Inconveniencies, but for my Part I thought it looked fair, in that, as to the Matter of the Securities, the Money in the Masters Hands was left pretty much to the Direction of my Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether these Proposals that were made were agreeable to him, so far, that if they were directed by my Lord Chancellor, he would have submitted to them?

Mr. Holford. Yes, my Lords, I should have readily submitted to them.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether he remembers any Discourse of these Proposals before my Lord Chancellor in his presence?

Mr. Holford. I don't remember I ever had the Honour of speaking to my Lord Chancellor about any of them; nor to have been at any meeting where they were spoken of before my Lord Chancellor.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I desire he may be ask'd, whether he can recollect when he had this Discourse with Mr. Lightboun, and when this Draught of the Letter was shewn him?

Mr. Holford. About two Years ago; some time after it had been written, and sent to my Lord, Mr. Lightboun told me, says he, I have writ to my Lord to the Effect of what we talked of; and I will shew you the letter; and he pulled out the Copy and shewed it me.

E. of Macclesfield. Was you at that meeting which Mr. Lightboun hath mentioned, when the Masters and the Master of the Rolls were there? And what passed, as near as you can remember?

Mr. Holford. My Lords, I think it was upon Midsummer Day, if I remember right, and the Masters, the Ushers, the Registers, and the Master of the Rolls, were all there. My Lord Chancellor declared there had been some Disputes in the Court of Chancery, and he had called them together to adjust those Disputes, especially in relation to the Money of the Court. I believe the Usher was called upon to know whether he had any Precedents to offer in Justification of his own Right, or of what he claimed as a Right; and the Usher, I think, said at that Time, he had no more than he had already delivered to his Lordship; I believe his Lordship said those Precedents were not much to the Purpose; the Usher said he had no more, and delivered no more; and after some Discourse, there were several People spoke, the Usher insisting there were some Precedents to the Purpose. Then a Dispute arose about the Jurisdiction of the Master of the Rolls; and so the Affair broke up at that time. I think nothing more was done.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Kynaston may be called.

Mr. Kynaston called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, We desire that Mr. Kynaston may give your Lordships an Account, whether he knows of any Proposal made to the Earl of Macclesfield, relating to the securing the Effects of the Suitors?

Mr. Kynaston. Yes, My Lords, I do; there were several meetings among the Masters privately before they came into an Agreement. I think they all did agree, that they would go to my Lord Macclesfield, and propose to him to give Security, and to settle the Matter of the Securities so, that it should not be in the Masters power to dispose of them. I remember it was agreed upon, that it should be so represented to my Lord, and I believe all, or most of the Masters, went to my Lord Macclesfield, and did propose it to my Lord. I am very positive some Proposals were laid before him. Some proposed to get People to be bound with them, but there might be some Difficulty in that; others proposed that they should give Land Security, but it was thought likewise that might meet with Difficulties in relation to the Title.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was there any Proposal made as to the Securities in their Hands?

Mr. Kynaston. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. In what manner was it proposed that the Securities should be taken?

Mr. Kynaston. I am not positive, but it was to this purpose; that they should be put in one or two of the Masters Names, and of the Persons concerned. I am not certain how that was, but it was something of that Kind.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I beg leave to ask this Witness when this was?

Mr. Kynaston. I do not remember the time exactly. I believe it was some time about Christmas was twelve Month.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, We shall call no further Witnesses upon this particular Article; but beg leave to refer to your Lordships recollection what passed Yesterday, from the Examination of all the Masters, relating to the Encouragement and Inducement that proceeded from my Lord Macclesfield, to the Masters, to persuade them to make up Dormer's Deficiency, if their Offices should be established on their old Foot; which sufficiently proves the Notice the Earl had of their trafficking and dealing with the Money belonging to the Suitors of the Court. In the next place we shall lay before your Lordships an Order, made by the Earl of Macclesfield, of the 17th of December, 1724. Tho' as to the several Proposals made to his Lordship by the Masters, he doubted of the power he had to make any Order, yet when it was too late, or after the losses had happened, when the Affair of this great Deficiency appeared, then doth he make an Order, that looks with some Care, but with this Introduction, that it was not usual for the Masters to give Security; tho' it appears to your Lordships that they had offered it, and were willing to do it.

Mr. Ralph Paxton proves the Order.

Clerk reads, Ordo Curiae Fovis Decimo Septimo die Decembris, 1724.

Whereas his Majesty has been pleased to appoint a Committee of several Lords and others, of his most Honourable Privy Council; to make some Inquiries concerning the Court of Chancery, and particularly concerning the Monies of the Suitors of that Court, in the Hands of the Masters or other Officers of that Court, and to consider which way the same may be best secured; and the Lord Chancellor having at their Desire ordered the several Masters to give in their respective Accompts, which they accordingly did; and Mr. Baron Gilbert, Mr. Justice Denton, and Mr. Justice Raymond, and likewise Sir Nathanael Gold, Mr. Thompson, and Mr. Hanger, three of the Directors, and one of them Deputy Governor of the Bank, having been appointed and desired by the said Committee, to inspect and examine the said Accompts, and who have proceeded so to do, and after having been several Times attended by the said Masters, have made a Report thereof to the said Committee of Counsel; whereby it appears, that, tho' all the Masters of the said Court have produced before them all the Securities and Certificates of their having the Stock and Annuities in their Names; which upon their Accompts, they appear to be chargeable with as belonging to the Suitors of the Court, and much the greater Part of the Masters have brought before the said Mr. Baron Gilbert, and other Persons above named, their Cash or Securities easily convertible into Money, Certificates of Stock, and Annuities sufficient to make good the Ballance of their Accompts: Yet upon the said Report it appears that there are yet considerable Deficiencies of Monies, which were in the Hands of some Masters, who are dead; and that some of the present Masters have not produced the Ballance of their Cash, nor given a satisfactory Account how the same is to be made good, and it not having been usual for the Masters of the said Court to give Security for the Money in their Hands, the said Committee thought adviseable, that till this Affair could be more maturely considered, and proper methods established for security of the Suitors of the said Court, the Effects herein after mentioned, which have upon this Occasion been produced, should be at present secured in the manner herein after mentioned, and recommended to the Right Honourable the Lord Chancellor, to take such Order therein, as should be proper; all which being communicated to all the said Masters, and the said Report now read in the presence of them all, except Mr. Kynaston, who is indisposed, and thereby prevented from attending; and upon hearing what was alledged by the said Masters, and the Facts of the said Report, so far as concerns their respective Securities in their Hands and Power, and the Ballance of Cash in their Hands not being controverted, his Lordship therefore doth think fit, and so order, that the said masters, Mr. Holford, Mr. Lovibond, Mr. John Bennet, Mr. Godfrey, Mr. Lighboun, Mr. Conway, Mr. Edwards, Mr. Thomas Bennet, Mr. Elde, and Mr. Thurston, all now present, and likewise Mr. Kynaston, do forthwith prepare and send to the Bank of England, every one a Chest with one Lock, and Hasps for two Padlocks; the Key of the Lock to be kept by the master, and the Key of one of the Padlocks by Mr. Smith, and Mr. Malthus, two of the Six Clerks of this Court, or one of them, and the Key of the other by the Governor, Deputy Governor or Cashier of the Bank; and that all the Bonds, Exchequer Annuities and Orders, and other Securities given in upon their said Accompts, as Securities belonging to the Suitors of this Court, or as the proper Securities of the said masters, towards making good the Ballance of their respective Cash; and likewise the Bank Notes and Cash so given in, and not since paid to, or laid out for the Suitors of the Court, be deposited in the said Chests, under the Inspection of Mr. Baron Gilbert, and the other persons appointed, as aforesaid, to inspect the masters Accompts, or of some of them; and that then the Chests be locked up, and left in the Custody of the Bank of England; but so to be kept, as that the masters may have easy Access thereto, to comply with the Orders of this Court, till further Order may be taken concerning the same; and whereas the masters have in their several Accompts given in particulars of Stock, and of Annuities, transferrable in the Books of the several Companies, standing in their Names, which belong to the several Suitors of this Court, or as their own proper Stock and Annuities, by which part of the Ballance of Cash in their Hands may be made good or secured; it is further ordered, that they do each of them forthwith deliver in to the respective Company, a Declaration in writing, wherein such Stock in each respective Company, or the Annuities there transferrable, as by their respective Accompts, appear to belong to the Suitors of the Court, and likewise the Stock and Annuities by them respectively proposed towards making making good, or securing their Ballance of Cash, or so much thereof, as shall equal the Ballance of their said Accompt; in Case they have in their Names more than sufficient for that Purpose, it shall be declared to be upon Trust, to attend the Orders of this Court; and the said respective Companies are to take Care, that proper Entries be made thereof in their Books, so that such Stock or Annuities be not transferred, but by Order or Leave of this Court; and the said masters, upon performing the Order above, are to take proper Certificates, signed by Mr. Baron Gilbert, and the other Persons appointed as aforesaid, to inspect the said Accompts, or some of them; and by the Persons keeping the Keys of the said Chests, of the Particulars of the Bonds, or other Securities; Cash and Notes, deposited and locked up in such Chests, as aforesaid, and Certificates Signed by the same Persons, and by a proper Officer of the Bank, that such Chests are deposited in the Bank, and Certificates signed by the proper Officers of the respective Companies, of the Declarations made as aforesaid, by the respective masters, and of the Entries thereof; and it is further ordered that the Goldsmiths Notes, produced by the said masters, in giving in their Accompts, be by them turned into Bank Notes, and so deposited as aforesaid; and the said several masters are forthwith to give Mr. Baron Gilbert Post-Accompts of their Receipt and Payments, since the former Accompts, and a Copy hereof is to be deliver'd to Mr. Kynaston, he not being now present; and another Copy left at the publick Office of the masters, with their Clerk there, for their more easy Recourse thereto, in order to their exact Compliance therewith.

EDW. GOLDESBOUHL.

Deputy Register.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. By this Order your Lordships will observe, that some of the insuperable Difficulties were surmounted, and some of the Evils cured; and tho' that Method will not take it totally out of the Power of the masters, yet why the noble Lord could not have proceeded so far before, is left to your lordships Determination; we shall not call any further Witnesses on these Articles, we apprehend we have fully made them out. The honourable Gentleman who opens the next Article, will proceed.

Lord Morpeth. My Lords, It falls to my lot, to open to your Lordships the 19th Article of this impeachment, and, it being some time since it was read at your Table, 'twill be necessary for me shortly to recollect it.

The Article charges, ' That his Majesty, having in Novemb. last, directed an Inquiry into ' the Accounts of the masters, to the intent, that ' proper methods should be taken, for the Security of the Suitors, the Earl of Macclesfield, ' being then Lord Chancellor and one of the ' Privy Council, in order to obstruct the same, ' and to prevent a parliamentary inquiry into the ' Condition of the Offices of the masters, did, in ' the first Place, advise the masters to assist each ' other with Money and Effects; and for their ' Encouragement, represented to them, that it ' wou'd be for their Honour and Service to ap' pear able and sufficient, and that if they made ' a bold stand now, it wou'd prevent a parliamentary Inquiry. In the next Place, That ' the Earl persuaded several of them, to make ' false Representations of their Circumstances to ' his Majesty, by adding a Subscription to their ' Accounts, that they were able and willing to ' Answer the Effects in their Hands, tho' the ' Earl then knew, or had good reason to believe the contrary; and that several of the ' masters, according to the Earl's advice, did ' supply others with Money and Effects, to make ' a false Shew, and Appearance of their Abilities.

Your Lordships take notice, that the time mentioned in the Article, is November last; at which time, and for some Years before, the Kingdom had rang of the Abuses and Corruptions of the Court of Chancery, with little hopes of Redress, but from the Justice of Parliament: The Earl cou'd not but foresee, that the Period was then drawing near, when the Cries of the Oppressed and the universal Dissatisfaction, rais'd against his Administration, wou'd some way or other, force its Relief.

This Cry for Justice having reach'd his Majesty's Ear, He was pleas'd to direct the Inquiry mention'd in the Article, and whilst this was depending, the impeached lord finish'd that Scheme of Iniquity, he had carried on so long without controul.

The Facts charg'd in this Article contain in themselves the vilest Deceit and Treachery; heighten'd, and aggravated by the wicked Purposes, for which they were contrived; First, to have misled the Council Board into a groundless Belief of the masters sufficiency to answer the Suitors; and on this Foundation he built a more impious, but more fatal Project, the preventing a Parliamentary Inquiry.

The Answer given by the Earl to this Article deserves a particular Notice; He says, ' That upon great Consideration of Dormer's Deficiency, ' and the Danger there might be of further Inconveniencies with relation to the Suitors Effects, of some Disputes in the Court, and of ' some Practices of the masters, which he thought ' ought to be reformed, he was convinced, it was ' a work of too great Consequence, for him singly ' to attempt; and being highly sensible of his ' most sacred Majesty's paternal Goodness, did ' presume humbly to beseech his Majesty, as the ' Fountain of Justice, to depute some of his ' Privy Council to take the Matters into Consideration.

My Lords, Seven Years, and more had pass'd since he was made Lord Chancellor, three Years, since Dormer's Deficiency, without one honest Thought, for any thing that has yet appear'd, or one sincere Step taken by him, for the Honour of the Court, or the safety of the Suitors, if the Examination order'd by his Majesty, did spring from his Lordship's Request, his real Intention, in desiring it, will be best known from his former Conduct, and from the Use, we shall prove, he intended to have made of that Inquiry; his past Behaviour has already appear'd to your Lordships, to have been a Series of Extortion and Oppression, constantly attended with the vilest and meanest Artifices to keep it secret; the King's paternal Goodness was most notoriously abused, by him, who was intrusted to dispense Dispense it; and that Fountain of Justice polluted, which he now dares to name in his Defence.

I think my self justified in charging this Part of his Defence, as an Act of high Dissimulation before your Lordships; and a presumptuous Attempt, to cover his own Guilt under his Majesty's sacred Name, and the Orders he was pleased to give for that Inquiry. The Earl has, indeed, acknowledged one Truth, in this part of his Answer, 'That the great Deficiencies, and Danger to the Suitors, and the Practices of the Masters (which he does not name, but says) ought to be reform'd, had convinc'd him, that the Reformation of them was a Work too great for him, singly, to attempt.'

My Lords, The many Prostitutions of the Dignity of the great Office, which have been proved upon him, had doubtless greatly wounded the Honour, and Authority of the Court itself; and the Earl had bound himself so fast to those Masters, whom he had admitted, by the Bands of Corruption, which he had not Power to break through, that nothing which tended to the Honour of that high Court, or the Advantage of the Suitors, cou'd be expected from his Hands.

The next Passage of his Answer is a wretched Mixture of the most abject Flattery of such of your Lordships, as attended that Committee, to whom, I believe, his Lordship very truly Declares, he was entirely subservient; and of false Praises of himself, for the great Services he contributed to that Inquiry: However, after this Introduction, the Answer goes on and declares, 'That he is greatly surprized, to find himself charged with Obstructing the taking of those Accounts, which he had thus desired might be taken, and had promoted with all his Power.'

This is a poor Evasion and Affectation of Innocence, and the more surprizing, to come from his lordship, whose misconduct had so notoriously been the Occasion of that Inquiry. And the Charge is not, as he insinuates for obstructing the taking the Accounts, but, for procuring false Accounts, and Representations to be laid before the Council, by which means that inquiry might have been frustrated.

But he proceeds in his Answer to a Declaration, the most astonishing of all others, 'That he never thought of preventing a Parliamentary Inquiry, any otherwise, than by making it unnecessary, and procuring to the Suitors a full Redress of all their Grievances, and rectifying whatever he found amiss; and that he looked upon to be his Duty, and begs leave to say it here, once for all, in Answer to all the Insinuations of that kind contained in any of the Articles.'

By the last Words, the Earl, in a very summary manner, pronounces his own Acquittal; but your lordships will observe, that the Article charges him, in plain Words, with actual advising the masters to misrepresent their Accounts, in order to prevent a Parliamentary Inquiry, and that, if they made a bold stand now, it might prevent one; His lordship answers, that he never thought of preventing it, otherwise, than by procuring full Redress, &c.

By this he confesses, he did think of preventing the Inquiry of Parliament.

He has not dared to deny the Facts charged, from which this Design was manifest, because he knew they would be fully proved, But the Subterfuge he flies to, viz. that he did intend to prevent it, by rendring it unnecessary, is impossible to be believed, tho' the Commons shou'd offer no Proofs at all to this part of the Article; unless his Lordship imagines, that he is able to carry on the Imposition so far, as that the concealing from his Majesty the true Condition of the Suitors, by the methods he was then practising with the masters, should be taken by your Lordships to be the means of procuring them full Redress; and it is self-evident, that if his Contrivance had taken place, the immediate and full Relief of the Suitors, which was his Majesty's gracious Purpose, had thereby been wholly defeated: The Commons therefore may insist upon it, that this flagrant Circumstance is established by his own Confession, especially since your Lordships find that in the following parts of his Answer, the Earl declares, 'That Mr. Holford having subscribed his Accounts, with a Declaration of his Abilities, and Readiness to answer the Suitors, and some of the masters having used Expressions, as he thought, not so proper, others of them having made no Conclusions at all; he did advise them all to write the same Words under their Accounts, as Mr. Holford had done, and did tell them, in great Sincerity and Friendship, that at a Time when so many Mens Mouths were open against them as insolvent, it would be for their Honour and Interest to make it appear that they were able.'

Thus far the Answer is a full Confession, that he advised all the Masters to add Mr. Holford's Conclusion to their Accounts.

His Lordship says, he was induced to do this from their assuring him they were able; this Assertion will appear to be notoriously false; however, if it had been true, his Lordship, it seems, took their bare Words for it, at the same Time that he declared to them, that so many Mens Mouths were open against them as insolvent: But here, unhappy Man, he flies again for Sanctuary to the Integrity of his own Heart, and assures your Lordships, 'That he never thought of a Contrivance to have them deceitfully appear to be what they really were not'; tho' this Declaration of the Innocence of his Mind stands also in direct Contradiction to the Fact he had just before confessed; and in the very next Lines he again confesses, that some of the masters, pursuant to his own Directions, did withdraw to add the same Words to their Accounts, as Mr. Holford had done to his; which he carried to the Council without looking into them, and, when they were read there, the Masters, it seems were honest Men than the Earl expected, or would have had them to be; for, notwithstanding his Advice, all of them did not make these Subscriptions to their Accounts.

To the other Charge in the Article, of his advising them to stand by one another and appear able, his Lordship has given a particular Answer, 'That an Order being made upon the Masters, to produce their Securities and Cash, and the Masters complaining of the short Time to produce such great Sums, he confesses, he did say, that

‘ that he required them to bestir themselves, and ‘ might say, that some of their Brethren might ‘ perhaps be able to let them have Money, till ‘ till they could raise it another Way.’

The Excuse he offers for this Advice, is a very unjustifiable one, it is, that the masters declared to him, that they had not the Suitors Effects ready, which, by the Duty of their Offices, his Lordship knew they ought to have had, but had Effects sufficient to raise the whole, if they could have had more Time. By his own account of this Matter ’tis plain, that the Masters did at that Time disclose to him one of the Practices, which ’twas his Duty to have reformed; and yet your Lordships see what Consideration he had of it; even at this Juncture he advised them to supply one another, which they accordingly did, and the Deceit prevailed, till the Order for carrying the Securities and Cash to the Bank made the Discovery.

Perhaps, my Lords, I have dwelt too long on the Earl’s Answer; but, I think, it will appear to your Lordships to betray such a Confusion of Mind, as nothing but the heaviest Pressures of Guilt could have produced, and is a stronger Conviction of him than a thousand Witnesses.

I will, in the next Place, give some short Account of our Evidence to this Article. The Masters themselves will prove the Earl’s Directions, either given by his own Mouth, or by his Secretary’s, when they were required to make up their Accounts to be laid before the King in Council, that they should stand by one another, and give the best Account, they could, to prevent a Parliamentary Inquiry, and that they need only to produce or shew Bank or Goldsmith’s Notes; and that it was a critical Juncture, and that the Strong should assist the Weak, and that they must make a Stand, and defeat the Designs of their Enemies.

We shall farther prove his Lordship’s express Directions to the masters, to add the same Conclusion to their Accounts, as Mr. Holford had done to his, which was, that they were able and ready to answer their Balances: tho’ the Earl did not so much as ask any of them whether they could make it good, and some of them declared the contrary; and at that Time also he told them, that it would be for their Honour and Service, and that it would look well to the Council to appear able and willing.

We shall also prove, that this false Advice of the Earl was followed by several of the Masters, in both Respects; and that afterwards, when the Suitors Effects were to be carried into the Bank, several of them who had before appeared able, now proved deficient in great Sums, and Bank and Goldsmiths Notes, and other Effects, to a great Value, with which several of them had been accommodated, and which they had produced to the Persons appointed to examine the Accounts, and which, as appears by the Reports on your Lordships Table, they had sworn to be their own, and not lent them for the Purpose of accounting, now vanished, and a Deficiency appeared of fourscore thousand Pounds and upwards, which still continues.

This Evidence will fully maintain our Article, and, if any Proof is necessary, will sufficiently clear up the Earl’s Intentions.

My Lords, The Part which still remains to me is such, as I own my self utterly unable to perform, I mean, to aggravate this Offence in such Manner as it deserves; the amazing Scene this Article has opened, must not be judged of singly, and by it self; nor can it be accounted for but as the Offspring of a Mind thoroughly debased and flowing from the most incurable Corruption: And tho’ they have issued from that Source, as from an unexhaustible Fountain, yet it can’t be denied, but as the Earl’s thirst for Lucre grew stronger upon him, with that his Invention also has constantly improved into some new Device or Management for securing his exorbitant Advantages, by preserving the Secret. ’Twas a remarkable Law, in one of the wisest of the Grecian Governments, arising from their Dread and Abhorrence of a corrupt Judge, That no Man, bred up to Merchandice, should be admitted into any Office of Judicature, till he had quitted that Employment for at least ten Years; and the Reason was, because the Fingers of Merchants had been too much used to Traffick.

The Earl’s Administration, in the highest Seat of Justice in this Kingdom, has appeared to your Lordships to have been one continued pyritical Trade; during the Course of which, from Time to Time, as Opportunities have offer’d, he has prey’d alike upon Masters and Suitors; his craving Appetite was, in no Sort, check’d by the approach of Death itself; and the Hand of a dying Chancellor, as he express’d himself to one of the masters, was open’d to receive that unjust Gain he had so plentifully fed upon in full Health: To which, and his other Misbehaviours, your Lordships now see, that not only the Ruin of many even of the Masters, but the Dishonour, Distress and Confusion still remaining in that part of the publick Justice must be imputed; and how groundless and unaccountable soever the repeated Assertions in the Earl’s Answer, that the Masters freely and voluntarily parted with their money to him, now appear to be; yet, from the Unwillingness and other conscious Circumstances, with which he has since, at several Times, refunded some parts of his extorsive Gains, tho’ the Guilt is not lessen’d, his Lordship is thereby Self-condemn’d.

The Fund out of which he has raised his unwarrantable Profits, ought to have been held by him as sacred and inviolable, being deposited in the Sanctuary of his own Court: His Extortions therefore must be judged of, not as private Violations of Property, but as Pillage taken from the Treasure of the Publick; the Livelihood of the Widow and Fartherless under the Protection of the Law, in a Court of Justice; great part of it, perhaps, dedicated to Charities: And how far your Lordships may, in this Respect, consider it as a sacrilegious Plunder, is left to your Judgment: However, the injuries done to distressed, ship-wreckd Sufferers, have been always esteemed the highest Barbarity.

But the Methods the Earl has used from Time to Time to excuse and cover his Crimes, tho’ they were the natural Refuge of an obstinate unrelenting mind, yet are more heinous than the Crimes themselves. Your Lordships can’t forget the Oath of his Office, which he has set forth at large in his Answer; he was sworn to do Right to all manner of People, poor and rich, according to the Laws and and Usages of the Realm, and not to do or suffer the Hurt of the King, if he could binder it; if not, clearly and expressly to make it known to him, with his true Advice and Counsel. 'Tis surprizing to find his Lordship to have so utterly abandon'd all Regard to this solemn Obligation, as the whole Course of his Behaviour fully demonstrates. You have also heard the Oath he caused to be administer'd to the masters, immediately after he had shared with them the Estates of the Suitors; by which Oath they were likewise sworn neither to do Hurt to the King, nor to do any Fraud to the Hurt of any of the People; and it has appear'd in what manner they have since been practis'd and tamper'd with by the Earl himself, in order to conceal and suppress the Knowledge of the Grievances of the Subject, which he had procur'd; sometimes they were threaten'd, at other Times cajoled and seduced, but always deceived; and this Artifice, disclosed by this Article, was his last Shift. When he saw the Storm began to arise, he deliberately contrived to turn the fatherly Goodness of his bountiful master to the Destruction of his People, and, by this most unparallel'd Attempt, to have render'd the Throne it self the Shelter of his Iniquities, and accessary to his Oppressions; but 'twill now appear, that this was conducted to another Point, to skreen himself from the Justice of Parliament.

My Lords, There have been Crimes so unexampled, and of so horrid a Nature, that the Malefactors have been try'd at midnight, and immediately drown'd, and the Journal Books burnt, in Compassion to mankind, that the memory of the Proceeding being destroyed, the Crime it self might not be propagated.

The Offences of the impeached Lord are ripened to a Fulness surpassing all Belief, too big indeed for the ordinary Hand of Justice; but the Commons of Great Britain, whose Inquiry he vainly flattered himself he could prevent (tho' the Terrors of it had long lain upon his Breast) have, by this Time, I presume, convinced his Lordship; and his Example will, I hope, convince the World, that no Offender, how great or subtil soever, can escape their Justice, of which this publick Proceeding will be an eternal monument, as well as of the Shame of the unfortunate Earl.

The Lord Bacon, one of his Predecessors, made a frank Submission to your Lordships Ancestors upon the Accusation of the Commons, and taking Comfort to himself from his Afflictions, uses these Words, ' That hereafter the Greatness of a Judge or magistrate shall be no Sanctuary or Protection to him against Guilt; and that, after his Example, it was like, that Judges would fly from any Thing in the Likeness of Corruption, tho' at a great Distance; which tends to purging the Courts of Justice, and reducing them to their true Honour and Splendor.' He did, indeed, urge it as no small Excuse for himself, that Bribery and Corruption, the Vices of which he stood impeached, were the Vices of the Times; but the Commons rejoyce to find, that the Earl, now before your Lordships in Judgment, has no Ground to claim the same Excuse.

The Admonitions left by that penitent great Man, and the just Punishment he underwent, have, I believe, conduced to prevent the like Evil for near an hundred Years, tho' they had not an immediate Effect: For an eminent Historian of those Times has recorded, that some Time after his Sentence in Parliament, meeting the Earl of Middlesex, then Lord Treasurer (whom he had Ground to suspect to have been instrumental in his Disgrace) in Discourse with him he recommended it as a Rule to be observ'd by the Earl, and all great Officers, to Remember a Parliament will come.

And the same Author further observes, that tho' the Lord Bacon had not the Spirit of Divination, and tho' the Treasurer despised and laughed at his Advice, yet, within two Years after, the Treasurer also was condemned in Parliament for Bribery, Extorsions, Oppressions, and other grievous misdemeanors.

I will conclude with one Observation more: It may, my Lords, be too justly apprehended, that the most dangerous Symptoms of a declining Commonwealth do then appear, when Men in the highest Stations in Government, especially those which concern the Administration of Justice, shall be so far lost to all Sense of Virtue, as to be guilty of such odious Crimes as those now charg'd upon the Earl; yet, we promise ourselves, that your Lordships Justice, in the Punishment of those Crimes, will afford us a hopeful Prospect of a reviving State; and that whenever the Crimes and Misdemeanors of this unfortunate Earl shall hereafter be mentioned, it will be remembred at the same Time, for the Honour of your Lordships, and the Benefit of the whole Nation, that he received a Condemnation suitable to his Guilt.

Mr. Snell, My Lords, I would gladly have been excused this Service, because I have been extreamly indispos'd, ever since I receiv'd the commands of the House of Commons, and because I am otherwise truly sensible of my Inability to execute those Commands, in the manner they ought to be executed. But these Reasons, being thought insufficient by others to prevail for my absence, it is no longer a matter of Choice, and I must comply with the duty imposed upon me. Your Lordships therefore will be pleas'd to consider (as the Truth is) that what I have to say is only the Product of a few Hours, and that it is impossible for me, in so short a Time, to offer any Observations, any Arguments, but such as will appear crude and indigested on this great and important Subject.

The Earl then at the Bar stands under an Impeachment of all the Commons of Great Britain, of high Crimes and Misdemeanors in his late Office of Lord high Chancellor, and tho' the Charge against him in the Article now under your Lordships consideration, be of a different Nature, yet in every Circumstance it is as highly criminal, as any of those that have gone before it. The Accusation hitherto has generally run upon Corruption in the sale of Offices, Extortion, and a Series of foul Practices to cover and conceal the Deficiency in Dormer's Office, which had drawn upon him an universal Cry for Redress. All the little Arts, that had been plaid over and over again upon the Masters, either by applying to their Hopes, or Fears, as opportunity offer'd, had prov'd ineffectual; and some other expedient must be found out, some new Stratagem invented, to quiet the clamours of the injur'd Suitors. These clamours had justly arisen arisen from a Supposition of the Masters Insolvency, and no method could be so likely to serve his turn to appease them, as one, that would make the Masters seem to be solvent. He therefore ventur'd to advise them to assist one another, to represent their Circumstances in a false Light, by Subscribing their Accounts as Mr. Holford had done; and thus he propos'd to deceive the Suitors, and to make the Masters appear to the World able to answer the Monies and Effects in their Hands: But this last Effort was as unsuccessful as his former. For if the Masters were able and sufficient, what reason could he have for his Apprehensions of a Parliamentary Enquiry? If they were not able, he had indeed reason for such Apprehensions, which leaves your Lordships no room to doubt, but that this Advice was given with a View only to keep the Affair out of Parliament; and the constant Anxiety he labour'd under to secure that main Point, does more than decypher the Secret of the whole Transaction.

Now, my Lords, this extraordinary Step could not proceed from any Doubt the Earl could have, whether the Parliament was able and willing to redress these Grievances and Inconveniencies, or whether it would contribute its Assistance to the Relief of the Suitors: No, my Lords, he knew very well, that the Parliament was the proper Place for redressing Abuses in the Courts of Justice. He was sensible too, that it had always interpos'd with Accusations and Impeachments, and that ill actions had, in no Age, met with Favour there. He could have no Hopes that his Ambiguity of Expression, his Dexterity in playing upon Words, in wresting their proper Sense and Meaning, could stand him in any Stead; or that all his Subtilty could be a Match for the Wisdom of the Legislature: But, perhaps, he might imagine, that a Committee of Council might be wrought upon, and misled by Appearances, at least so far, as to protract the evil Day; and who could tell what Time or Accident might bring about? Another Act of Grace might come, and expunge the whole Score.

I should have congratulated your Lordships and the House of Commons, and even the accused Earl himself, if the just Apprehensions he conceiv'd of a Parliamentary Inquiry had rais'd in him a compassion equal to the Sufferings of the Suitors: If it had begot a Repentance of his former Misdeeds and Crimes, and a Resolution of future Innocence and Uprightness: But your Lordships find, it had a very different Effect; it only produced a vile Contrivance to guard himself against Punishment for what was past, and to make it more difficult hereafter, to detect him in the same Practices. This is a Behaviour my Lords, which is so far from deserving your Mercy, that it calls aloud for your Indignation, as well as Justice. This is a Circumstance, which is not only a high Aggravation of his Guilt, but a great Indignity to the Authority and Honour of Parliament; which I hope will never be eluded by the Artifice of the most cunning and skilful, nor controul'd by the Influence of the most powerful and favour'd Minister of State.

But, if the impeach'd Earl's Actions may be allow'd to be any Proof of his Intentions, the Fact stated in this Article goes further, and implies a bold and desperate Attempt to mislead his Majesty, and to obstruct his gracious Endeavours to find out proper Methods for securing the Money and Effects of the Suitors, which is an Instance on one Hand of his baseness and ingratitude to his Sovereign, to whom he ow'd every thing; on the other of his Injustice and Barbarity to those of his fellow Subjects, whom he had injur'd, whom he had oppress'd, during the whole course of his Tyrannick Administration.

What, my Lords, must have been the Consequence, if this Contrivance had pass'd? And it would have pass'd upon a Prince of less Discernment than his Majesty. Whenever it had been discovered, all the Obloquy would have been thrown upon his sacred Person, as if he had been engaged in a Confederacy to skreen that Guilt which he was labouring to detect. But the Earl's avaritious Temper had set so wrong a Bias upon his Actions, that the Means by which he propos'd to shelter himself, and to conceal his Depredations, have brought upon him (what he so long dreaded) this just and necessary Prosecution.

As to the Earl's Answer to this Article, I hope I may be excused the Liberty of saying, that it is either vain, evasive, or false.

He begins with enumerating the many Inconveniencies and Abuses, which he thought necessary to be reformed in the Court of Chancery, and with assuring your Lordships of his good Intentions to contribute to the Reformation of them; but your Lordships will best judge of this pretended Zeal, and of the Sincerity and Candour, with which it is urged, by considering the constant Tenor of his Actions, by examining whether he can produce any Instance of his having endeavoured to correct these Abuses, or to remove these Inconveniencies. Now I don't find thro' his whole Answer, nor have I heard it asserted, that he ever attempted any Thing of that Kind. On the Contrary, it is too apparent, that many of them took their Rise while he presid'd in Chancery.

In the next place, my Lords, he arrogates to himself the Merit of that Enquiry, which his Majesty had directed to be made by a Committee of his Privy Council; and insists, that it was the Effect of his Application.

How true this Assertion is, some of your Lordships may know. But the Part he acted in that Enquiry, might have oblig'd him to Silence, or at least have restrained him from boasting of his Conduct. The Commons charge him directly with obstructing the Methods then propos'd for securing the Property of the Suitors; and it is not a sufficient Answer, to say, that this Enquiry was begun at his Instance, and that he press'd the Masters to bring in their Accompts: For all this may be true, and yet he might give them the Advice I have already mention'd, and complain'd of to your Lordships. Surely, my Lords, it is a Justice due to his Majesty, to observe upon this vain-glorious Part of the Earl's Answer, that, whatever Share He had in setting this Enquiry on foot, all the good Fruits, to be hop'd for from it, are the Result only of his Majesty's Paternal Care of his People.

He further says, That he never thought of preventing a Parliamentary Enquiry, any other way, than by making it unnecessary, and by procuring curing the Suitors a full Redress of all their Grievances, &c.

This is another Instance of his Disingenuity: For the Grievances complain'd of, could no where be redress'd but in Parliament; and therefore nothing more can be understood by the Words [Any other ways, than by making it unnecessary] than by making it SEEM unnecessary; which is a poor and mean Prevarication.

Nor is there any Credit to be given to what he urges in Excuse for his Fraudulent Proposal to the Masters, viz. That while the Accompts were taking, all the Masters, at least all that he saw, except Mr. Kynaston, had declared that they had Effects sufficient to answer their whole Accompts, &c.

For we shall prove to your Lordships by Mr. Thomas Bennet, and Mr. Kynaston, that it is false, unless you'll suppose them perjur'd: For they are very positive, That the Earl never ask'd them whether they had Effects to answer, or not, or were able to pay in their Cash-Ballance: Nay, they are sure they did not tell him so, because in Fact it would have been false, if they had.

Besides, your Lordships will have the concurrent Testimony of almost all the Masters to prove, that (while they were making up their Accompts to lay before the Committee of Council) they were directed by Cottingham and Dixon to assist one another in making a Shew of their Abilities; and that some of them, viz. Mr. John Bennet, Mr. Godfrey and Mr. Conway, complied with this Direction, which we must ascribe to the Earl himself, as being given by his Two Chief Agents and Ministers.

Who is it, my Lords, that has been guilty of the Crimes, laid in this Impeachment? It is a Peer of Parliament! A Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain! And how precarious must be the Property, how deplorable the Condition of the Subjects of this Kingdom, if such Crimes should not be punish'd in so exemplary a manner, as to carry down Terror to all succeeding Chancellors?

My Lords, If I have express'd my self with too much Acrimony on this Occasion; if what I have said, has any way offended the Impeached Earl, I hope he will do me the Justice to believe, that I meant it only in Detestation of his Crimes, and not in Disrespect to his Person. For I assure him, I should have been heartily sorry for the Misfortune he has brought upon himself, if it had proceeded from Ignorance or Neglect, and not from an insatiable Appetite after illegal Gains, which he is pleas'd to mis-call Voluntary Presents, and for which I must ever entertain the Utmost Abhorrence. I will therefore conclude with a Word of Advice out of the Scripture for his future Conduct, That he shall receive no Gift; for a Gift blindeth the Wise, and perverteth the Words of the Righteous.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we beg leave that Mr. Thomas Bennet may be examin'd, and that he may give your Lordship's an Account of what pass'd after this Inquiry directed by his Majesty, begun; what Order and Direction the Masters receiv'd from his Lordship in the Execution of that Inquiry?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. My Lords, I think, on the 3d of November last we receiv'd an Order from my Lord Chancellor, to make up our Accompts. It was a very particular Order, express'd abundance of Items, and Columns, in what manner those Accompts were to be made up. The Masters had a meeting on this occasion; and a great many, if not all of them, agreed, that the making up of the Accompts in that manner as my Lord Chancellor had directed, was impracticable in so short a time; for we were directed to do it forthwith. It was represented by some of the Masters to Mr. Cottingham, and I believe, by him to my Lord Chancellor, that it was impossible to do it in so short a time, and it would take up a Month or two, or more. I did not know what other People could do: I had begun to make up my Accompts; I could have done it in a short time, having been in but a little while: Others, indeed, that had been in twelve Years, and must have given an Accompt of the whole Proceedings of that time, could not do it. I was inform'd by my Brother, that he could not have done it in a Year: But soon afterwards I was told, that the Order was dispens'd with, by my Lord Chancellor; and all we were to do, was to make up an Accompt of the Ballance of the Money and Securities that were in our respective Offices distinctly, the Money and Securities in Two Distinct Columns, only the Sum total at the Bottom. This Order the Masters all comply'd with, as appears by their Accompts: And between that and the 9th Day of November following, we had several Messages from my Lord Chancellor by Mr. Cottingham to dispatch these Accompts; for they were much wanted, being to be laid before the Committee of Council. On the 10th of November we had express Orders to appear at my Lord Chancellor's House with our Accompts ready. All the Masters, except Mr. Conway, were there.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be ask'd, if there was any other meeting before that of the 10th of November?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I think there were some meetings at Mr. Edward's House by Mr. Cottingham's Direction before, and after that at my Lord's House. At those meetings, at one of them, I particularly remember (which was the most material of all) Mr. Cottingham brought Mr. Dixon with him, and introduc'd him, saying, we need not be afraid of Mr. Dixon; for he brought him there by my Lord's Direction, because he himself was deaf, and could not well hear what was said. Upon that he began his Message, and said, Our Accompts were then laid before the Council just at that Time: But, said he, suppose my Lord Chancellor or the Council should expect, that the Bonds and Securities should be inspected, would you be willing, that any Officer from him should inspect your Books and Securities? The Masters answer'd, They were ready and willing to do it; I don't remember any body that oppos'd it. The next Question Mr. Cottingham ask'd, was, whether we could produce the Ballance of our Cash, and shew that we had the Money? To that all the Masters spoke in general, that they were under a great Concern and Surprise, and desir'd to know what Mr. Cottingham meant by that: Whether it was only to produce the Money, or the Money to be taken from us? and whether there was any Danger of that? Says Mr. Cottingham, you are only to produce the Ballance of Cash, and shew it. We asked, whether we should produce it in Goldsmiths Notes, or Bank Notes? Says he, I believe Goldsmiths Notes will serve: You are to shew the Ballance of your Cash; but I think, Bank-Notes will do better. Upon that Mr. Lightboun said, I don't know what the Consequence of this may be. Suppose, when we have produced these Notes, they should be detain'd from us, I am afraid most of the Goldsmiths Shops about Temple-Bar would be shut up the next Day, and Inquiry would be made what Holiday it was, and Thousands of Families might be ruin'd by this Transaction. Mr. Cottingham propos'd, You may stand by, and assist one another. Mr. Kynaston, said, I find, we are like to be sacrific'd, and given up; for my part, I will neither borrow, nor lend: Any one that borrows is a Knave, and he that lends is a Fool. Upon this, the Masters were in great Concern. Mr. Cottingham and Mr. Dixon went back to my Lord Chancellor, and staid about an Hour and half, and then return'd to us, and said, my Lord was very busie, and dismiss'd us, and so we went home.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When was the next meeting?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I don't remember; we had several meetings. I don't remember when the next was.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What pass'd on the 10th of November in the Presence of my Lord Macclesfield, at his House?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. When we came to my Lord Chancellor's House, upon the 10th of November, all the Masters then present carry'd up their Accompts: Two or three had not their Accompts ready; my Brother and Mr. Conway had not theirs; but all that were ready, carry'd them up to my Lord, and, according to Seniority, delivered them to his Lordship. The first was Mr. Holford: He had added to his Accompt, a letter, I don't remember the Words, or that it was read; but I remember a Subscription, which my Lord Chancellor read, and that he said it was very good, and he lik'd it very well, and, I think, he laid it down upon the Table. The next master gave his Accompt, and so all the rest. My Lord look'd them all over; some of the masters he objected to. I remember I had written at the Bottom of my Accompt, as near as I can remember, I am ready and willing that the Bonds and other Securities in my Hands, may be inspected by such Person as your Lordship shall appoint. My Lord, after looking them all over, said he lik'd Mr. Holford's Subscription, and, says he, I wish you would all make use of that: For it would be for your Honour and Service, to make yourselves appear able and sufficient to answer the Effects in your Hands. Somebody ask'd my Lord, what might be the meaning of this Commission being appointed by his Majesty? This, says he, I apprehend, will prevent a Parliamentary Inquiry.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We desire that Mr. Bennet may repeat the Expression my Lord made use of to persuade them to subscribe, as Mr. Holford had done.

Mr. Tho. Bennet. That they might appear able and sufficient. I think, those were the Words.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I desire he may be ask'd, whether my Lord had at that time made an Inquiry of the masters, whether they were able and sufficient?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I can only answer for myself. My Lord did not ask me, whether I was able and sufficient; but only directed me to write that Subscription that Mr. Holford had done; and I did go down, and write, in effect, that Subscription. I did subscribe thus: 'My Lord, I have all the Securities standing in my Name, as in the within mention'd Accompt are specified; as also the Tallies, Orders, and Bonds in my custody; and as to the Money, I am ready to give your Lordship satisfaction, that I am able to answer it to every Person that is entitled thereto. The Words, to a Demonstration, which are in Mr. Holford's Subscription, I omitted, because I could not make it out to the Lords of the Council.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, We beg leave to produce these Accompts, and shew to your Lordships that Subscription of Mr. Holford, that was to be followed by the other masters, and the first Subscription of Mr. Bennet.

Mr. Onslow. Pray, tell my Lords, if you can remember, was there any other Expression made use of at that time?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. The Expression was, it would be for our Honour and Service, to appear able and sufficient.

Mr. Onslow. No other Words?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. And it would be a means to prevent a parliamentary Enquiry.

Mr. Onslow. Was there nothing mentioned relating to a Stand?

Mr. Tho. Bennet. I don't remember that then; Mr. Cottingham said something of that at a meeting at Mr. Edwards's.

(The Subscription shew'd to Mr. Bennet. And proved by him to be Mr. Holford's Hand.)

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords we beg leave, that this Subscription may be read, which was to be follow'd by all the masters.

Clerk reads.

'I have all these Securities standing in my Name, as in this Accompt is specified, and will procure Certificates from the proper Offices, that I have, and had them before the Account, if your Lordship requires it. And as to the money, I am ready to give your Lordships satisfaction, to a Demonstration, that I have it in my power to answer it to every Person, that shall appear to be entitled to it, and who can give me a Legal Discharge.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. We beg leave to read Mr. Tho. Bennet's First Subscription, that my Lord was not satisfy'd with.

Clerk reads.

'My Lord, I am ready and willing the Securities in the foregoing Account mentioned, shall be inspected by such Person or Persons as your Lordship shall be pleas'd to appoint.

Tho. Bennet, 10th Novemb. 1724.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Your Lordships observe, there is nothing in this Subscription, as to the Cash, and the producing it. Now we beg leave to see the subsequent Subscription.

Clerk reads.

'10 Nov. 1724. My Lord, I have all the Securities standing in my Name, as in the within mention'd Accompt are specify'd; as also the Tallies, Orders and Bonds in my custody. And

‘ as to the Money, I am ready to give your Lordship satisfaction, that I am able to answer it to every Person that is entitled thereto.

Tho. Bennet.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Your Lordships observe, he hath left out the Words To a Demonstration, because he thought that he could not so clearly make it out. I beg leave to mention, that these Accompts and Subscriptions thus alter’d, were actually delivered in, and laid before the Council, and are the Original Accompts.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I would ask Mr. Bennet, when this Proposal was offer’d to him, that he should subscribe as Mr. Holford had done, whether he made any Excuse, or pretended he was not able to do it?

Mr. Thomas Bennet. No, I did not; I did as the rest of the Masters did.

Mr. Com. Serj. I desire he may inform your Lordships when this was?

Mr. Thomas Bennet. I think, it was the 11th or 12th of November; I can’t be positive as to the Day.

Mr. Kynaston called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire that Mr. Kynaston may give your Lordships an Account, whether he was present at this Meeting on the 10th of November, and what passed there relating to their Accompts?

Mr. Kynaston. Yes, my Lords, I was there the 10th of November.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What passed at that Time at the Earl of Macclesfield’s?

Mr. Kynaston. I think I came there before the rest of the Masters, or only two or three were there before me. We gave my Lord an Account, that we had drawn out our Accompts of the Securities and Cash, and the Ballance in each Master’s Hands. Soon after the rest came. My Lord first received Mr. Holford’s Accompt, being the Elder Master. A Letter at the End of his Accompt was read: My Lord seem’d to be affected with, and to approve very well of it. There was some Writing at the End of it relating to the Ability. My Lord said, it would do very well to have something to the same purpose at the End of the other Masters Accompts, and mentioned to us to go down and write it; accordingly we did go down, and most of us, if not all, did write to that Purpose.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Can you recollect what Expressions the Earl of Macclesfield used, to recommend it to the Masters?

Mr. Kynaston. My Lords, I can’t justly recollect; I think it was, It would look well before the Council, and prevent a further Enquiry, or a parliamentary Enquiry, I am not positive which: But that I understood to be the meaning of it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What was it that would look well to the Council?

Mr. Kynaston. What Mr. Holford had writ at the Bottom of his Accompt, That they were ready, &c.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I desire he may be ask’d, whether there was an Enquiry made by the Earl of Macclesfield, as to his Ability or Sufficiency?

Mr. Kynaston. No, I am sure as to my self; and I don’t know as to any body else.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he would inform your Lordships, what Subscription he had first made, and what was added, or what Advice was given?

Mr. Kynaston. I had writ before: ‘ My Lord, the Person I employed to write out this Account, has only gone thus far as to the Number of the Bonds. I have brought the Bonds with me, and desire you’ll appoint any Person to inspect them, and the other Securities I have here given an account of.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What was writ afterwards? This is wrote with a different Ink from that before: And as to the Money, I am ready to pay it to the Persons entitled thereto. That is with a different Ink.

Mr. Kynaston. I believe, upon looking upon it, I went down with the rest, and writ that in the Parlour in my Lord’s House.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether he, or any other of the masters then received any Explanation how this Sufficiency or Ability was to appear?

Mr. Kynaston. Not then, I don’t remember any thing of it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Or at any other Time?

Mr. Kynaston. Some time after this, this was the 10th of November, and I believe, between that and the 16th, when we were to attend the Judges, the masters were summon’d to meet at Mr. Edwards’s House: I understood, it was a Summons from my Lord Macclesfield; and when we were here, there came Mr. Cottingham and Mr. Dixon. I don’t remember all the Discourse; but they were telling us what was to be done: First, we were to produce our Securities, and there would be no great Nicety in producing them: And then, next, we were to produce the Ballance of Cash: And I remember, on that, Mr. Cottingham said, You must stand by one another, and assist one another. Bank-Notes, said he, will be best; but if you can’t get them, then Goldsmiths Notes. You must get one or other to produce and shew.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, what he thought he meant by the Proposal of getting Goldsmiths Notes, or Bank Notes?

Mr. Kynaston. I did take the meaning in the worst Sense to be, for the Masters barely to make a Shew of them; and that made me complain; and I spoke warmly, and said, I saw what the Design was; and whoever borrow’d any money on that Occasion, was a Knave, and he that lent it was a Fool.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be ask’d, whether there was any Recommendation by Mr. Cottingham or Mr. Dixon, and in what particular Expressions those Recommendations were made?

Mr. Kynaston. I believe, Mr. Lightboun express’d himself, That if they borrow’d Goldsmiths Notes, and they were detained, the Goldsmiths Shops would be shut, and People would be enquiring what Holiday it was.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, what was said about making a Shew? if Mr. Cottingham own’d what was the meaning of those Words?

Mr. Kynaston. I don’t remember: They were pretty warm and said they would go to my Lord Macclesfield, which they did, and return’d again.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, I desire he may be ask’d whether it was generally understood among the masters, that giving of Bank-Notes and Goldsmiths Notes was to be understood borrowing?

Mr. Kynaston. I understood it so myself, and I believe several others did; Mr. Lightboun, and Mr. Holford, and some of the others did so, by what they said.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we have done with this Witness.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I desire to ask this Witness the same Question that I ask'd the other; and that is, whether at the time when this Proposal was made to him, that he should subscribe as Mr. Holford had done, he made any Objection to it?

Mr. Kynaston. No, I did not make any Objection to it. I had been there first, and with my Lord, and at the farther End of the Room, that I remember less what happened at that time, than other People did.

Mr. Lightboun called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lord, we desire that Mr. Lightboun may give an Account of what passed at this meeting, relating to the bringing in of the Accompts?

Mr. Lightboun. What meeting? That at Mr. Edwards's, or that at the Earl of Macclesfield's?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. That at Mr. Edwards's.

Mr. Lightboun. I was at Mr. Edwards's about that Time, at some meeting when our Accompts were talked of, but whether it was before they were delivered in, or afterwards, I cannot tell. We had so many meetings about that time at Mr. Edwards's, that I don't remember exactly, which was before, and which after. I remember, at the meeting when Mr. Cottingham and Mr. Dixon both were there, there was some Discourse relating to the Producing of the Securities, and of the Ballance of the Cash. I then asked, whether we should produce it in Bank notes, or Goldsmith's Notes, and I understood, it was hinted that the Goldsmiths that we had dealt with, would assist any master that wanted money, but by whom it was said, I can't recollect. The Answer I made to that, was, that I should be sorry that any master should borrow Notes of a Goldsmith, and that they should be stay'd or secured when produc'd, which I apprehended would be done; and next morning several Goldsmiths would be forc'd to shut up their Shops, and it would look like a Holiday in Fleetstreet.

Mr. Lutwyche. Do you remember any Thing concerning a Net?

Mr. Lightboun. I don't remember the Expression of a Net.

Mr. Lutwyche. What Application was made to any of the masters to carry in their Accompts, and to whom?

Mr. Lightboun. My Lord Macclesfield one morning sent for me, and desired me, that when the Accompts were brought into the Council, I would be thereabouts, that if there was any occasion to clear up or explain any thing, or give farther satisfaction to the Council, I might be ready. I told his Lordship, I would give no Satisfaction about any one's Accompts but my own. But if his Lordship pleased that I should attend, I would be thereabouts; and if his Lordship pleased, I would have another master with me: I nam'd Mr. Holford, and my Lord desired me to acquaint Mr. Holford with it, which I did; who said, he was ready to go with me to answer any Questions that should be ask'd, arising on the Perusal of his Accompts.

Mr. Lutwyche. What did he desire you to attend for?

Mr. Lightboun. To resolve any Question or Difficulty that should arise before the Council. After this, Mr. Cottingham told Mr. Holford at Mr. Ed- wards's, that my Lord desired that two of the masters should attend the Council with the Accompts of the whole, and that Mr. Holford being the senior master, should be one, and he was to choose whom he would have go along with him; and I having given Mr. Holford intimation before of my Lord's inclination, Mr. Holford desired me to go with him. I told him, I did not care to carry in any other Accompts than my own; as I had not concerned my self in other masters Accompts, I would not then begin; I would not carry any but my own, and no body else should carry mine; I would not be a Representative of the Body. Upon that, Mr. Holford recollected himself, and said, nor he neither; he would carry no Accompts but his own. I said, the Accompts were call'd for by my Lord Chancellor, and not by the Privy Council, and thereupon I thought it proper to wait upon my Lord Chancellor, and deliver them to him.

Mr. Lutwyche. Your Lordships will observe, the Persons thought most proper to appear for the rest of the masters, Mr. Holford and Mr. Lightboun, were so apprehensive of the masters being deficient, that they did not care to appear for them. I desire Mr. Lightboun may be ask'd, what pass'd on the 10th of November, when the Accompts were deliver'd to the Earl of Macclesfield?

Mr. Lightboun. My Lords, upon the 10th of November my Accompt was not ready at the time I was to deliver it. I rather chose it should not be ready; because I did not care that it should be carry'd in by any body but my self. However, I waited at the proper Time; and when we came there, Mr. Holford deliver'd in his Accompt, and a Letter he had writ to his Lordship, and fix'd to his Accompt, which was there read. My Lord seem'd to like the Letter, and took notice of it; and I think, another or two, who were my Seniors, deliver'd in their Accompts. When it came to my turn, I acquainted my Lord, that mine was not ready; but I would go home and finish them, and attend his Lordship with them at the Cock-pit by Eight of the Clock. Accordingly I did, and sent it in to his Lordship.

Mr. Lutwyche. What pass'd farther relating to their signing of the Accompts?

Mr. Lightboun. I know nothing of it; for I went away to finish my own.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we desire that Mr. John Bennet may be call'd.

Mr. John Bennet appeared.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, we desire that Mr. John Bennet may be ask'd, whether he was at this meeting at Mr. Edwards's House, and what pass'd at that time?

Mr. J. Bennet. My Lords, I was at that meeting at that time, when Mr. Cottingham and Mr. Dixon came in, and told us they came from my Lord Chancellor; and Mr. Cottingham said, he had brought Mr. Dixon with him, because he was deaf, and could not well hear. Mr. Cottingham said, he had two Questions to propose; first whether we were willing that all our Bonds, and other Securities in our Custody, should be inspected by him or any other? All of us were willing, and agreed to that. The second was, whether we were willing, or would produce the Ballance of Cash in our hands before the Council? To this the masters made a Stand, and said, The Cash was considerable;

ble; and it could not be presum'd that they kept it lock'd up in Chests or Trunks in their own Houses; that was the way to have our Throats cut: But we believ'd we could do it in a reasonable Time. To which Mr. Cottingham said, Can't you produce it in Bank Notes or Goldsmiths Notes? Bank-Notes, said he, will be best; but do it in Goldsmiths Notes, if you can't get Bank Notes. To which Mr. Lightboun said, If we produce them in Goldsmiths Notes, and there should happen to be a Net thrown over 'em, and they should be secur'd, the Goldsmiths might be oblig'd to shut up their Shops, and People would be enquiring what Holiday it was; and it might be a great Damage to those Goldsmiths.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be ask'd, whether any thing was said of assisting one another?

Mr. J. Bennet. Mr. Cottingham press'd us very much to help and assist one another, as far as we were able.

Mr. Lutwyche. Whether was any other Expression made use of by him?

Mr. J. Bennet. I don't remember there was: But he repeated it several times, that we should stand by, and assist one another with Cash.

Mr. Plummer. My Lords, I desire to ask this Witness, if, in pursuance of the Advice given by Mr. Cottingham, he did assist any of the masters, or was assisted by any of them?

Mr. J. Bennet. One of the Gentlemen did assist me with Cash, which is lock'd up in the Chest: I gave him Security for it. And as to my assisting any Body, Mr. Conway inform'd me, he had a Real Security for 9000*l.* and begg'd, if I could, that I would assist him with 5000*l.* and in two or three Days I should have it again: I told him, I had in my Accompt mentioned my Cash, and that I had offered to make up the Ballance by my Real Estate, and so could not assist him with any Cash. He ask'd me, if I had any Bonds by me? I told him I had 2000*l.* Bonds; and if he could engage to bring them back to me in two Days, he should have them: And upon lodging a Bag of Writings with me, which he told me was a real Security for 9000*l.* I accordingly did lend him them, and he brought them back again to me in two Days Time.

Mr. Plummer. I desire he may be ask'd, what his Inducement was for lending the Bonds?

Mr. J. Bennet. The real Inducement was the real Security which was given me: But it had been recommended by Mr. Cottingham too.

Mr. Plummer. I desire to know whether he open'd the Bag, to see what the Security was, or took it by Content?

Mr. J. Bennet. No, I did not open it; Mr. Conway assured me it was so.

Mr. Plummer. What use did he make of those Bonds?

Mr. J. Bennet. Indeed I don't know.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I desire he may be ask'd, whether those Bonds belong'd to the Suitors of the Court?

Mr. J. Bennet. They were brought in by the Suitors of the Court after my Accompt was deliver'd in, and I must give them in my Post-Accompt: Therefore I said, I must have them again in two Days time.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be ask'd, whether this was after he had given in his own Accompt?

Mr. J. Bennet. Yes, it was after I had given in my own Accompt of my Money Securities, and the Accompt of my Estate.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire to know what Subscription Mr. John Bennet made to his Accompt at first, and what afterwards?

Mr. J. Bennet. I came to my Lord Macclesfield just after the Gentlemen had been delivering in their Accompts; and they were below, writing their Subscriptions to their Accompts. I had then made no Subscription to my Accompt; they told me what my Lord had recommended to them to write; and I had one of them laid before me. I took my Pen and Ink, and varied it in some measure, and made the Subscription in this manner: 'I have all the Securities in my Name, as 'specified on the other Side; and all the Bonds 'and Orders are in my Custody; and I am 'ready to satisfy your Lordship, that I am able 'to answer the money to every Party, that is 'entitled, or shall have a right to receive it.

J. Bennet.

Mr. Lovibond called.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I desire he may be asked, whether he was present at this meeting (that hath been so often mentioned) at Mr. Edwards's?

Mr. Lovibond. My Lord, I was there but a very little while.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, while he was there, whether any thing was proposed, and by whom, for the masters to lend one another money or Notes?

Mr. Lovibond. There was Mr. Cottingham and Mr. Dixon, and one of them said, that the masters should stand by one another, and recommended it to them to assist one another with Bank Notes or Goldsmiths-Notes.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. To what Purpose?

Mr. Lovibond. Neither of them said to what Purpose.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What was the Discourse about at that Time?

Mr. Lovibond. The Discourse was about the Accompts, and how every Man's Ballance was to be made up.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire to know, during that Time, whether Mr. Lovibond observ'd that Mr. Cottingham or Mr. Dixon went to my Lord Chancellor?

Mr. Lovibond. Yes, my Lords, they both went, and I came away, and did not stay till they return'd.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire to ask, Whether Mr. Lovibond did not lend some of the masters some money?

Mr. Lovibond. I lent some money to Mr. Bennet.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. How much was it?

Mr. Lovibond. It was 10,200 and odd Pounds.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire to know, whether Mr. Lovibond was present upon the Delivering in of the Accompts on the 10th of November last?

Mr. Lovibond. Yes, my Lords, I was.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he would look upon that Subscription he at first made upon the Accompt, when he delivered it in.

Mr. Lovibond. It is here.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Read it.

Mr. Lovibond reads. 'All which before-'mention'd Particulars I am ready to answer on 'demand, or to give Security so to do, whenever
'requir'd.

H. Lovibond.

Mr.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be ask'd, whether my Lord Macclesfield made any Objection to any Part of that Subscription, and what Part in Particular?

Mr. Lovibond. He made an Objection to the latter Part of it, because that might imply that my Effects were not ready.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether did you alter it afterwards, or was it recommended to you to alter, and in what manner?

Mr. Lovibond. My Lord Macclesfield mention'd, that Mr. Holford's Conclusion of his Accompt was most proper; and I had best alter it to that, and make that the Form; accordingly I did, I went down Stairs, and altered it as it now stands.

Mr. Lutwyche. Read this Subscription.

Clerk reads.

‘ All these Securities standing in my Name as in this Account is specified, I am ready to procure Certificates from the proper Offices, that I have, and had them before this Account, if your Lordship requires it; and as to the money, I am ready to answer it upon Demand to every Person entitled thereto, and who can give me a legal Discharge.

November 10th 1724. H. Lovibond.

Mr. Lutwyche. My Lords, I beg leave to make one Observation upon this: I would not trouble your Lordships with observing upon every one of them; but there is something very particular and remarkable in this Case of Mr. Lovibond's. Mr. Lovibond had said, as the Truth of the Case was, when he delivered in his Accompt, and this Subscription, that he was able to produce or give Security, &c. That would have lookt before the Council as if the money was not ready to be produced, it was only giving Security; and for that Reason this Alteration is to be made, to make it look as if he had the actual Ballance in his hands.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, we desire he may be asked, whether at the Time that he wrote this Subscription, he was not able to produce the Ballance?

Mr. Lovibond. My Lords, I did in my Conclusion offer it; and I could have done it the next Day.

Mr. Strange. I desire he may be ask'd, whether he could have done it out of his own Estate, or Effects?

Mr. Lovibond. I could have done it out of my own Estate.

Mr. Strange. Did not you mention the Sum of 10,000 and odd Pounds lent? I desire to know, whether you took real Security for it?

Mr. Lovibond. Yes, I have a Real Security.

Mr. Strange. In Land?

Mr. Lovibond. Yes, in Land.

Mr. Plummer. I desire he may be asked, if my Lord Macclesfield asked him any Questions about his Ability?

Mr. Lovibond. No, my Lord did not ask me any Questions about my Ability.

Dr. Sayer. I desire he may be asked, whether at that time he did not believe, that all the masters were sufficient and able to make good their Accompts?

Mr. Lovibond. I did believe so, from what Discourse I heard pass among themselves. I had no Knowledge of their Affairs, or of their Estates.

Mr. Edwards called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, I desire Mr.

Edwards may give your Lordships an account of what passed at this meeting at his House?

Mr. Edwards. My Lords, I received a message from Mr. Cottingham, to know if I would give Leave for the masters to meet at my House? to which I consented. Some came before Mr. Cottingham, and asked me if I knew what this meeting was about; I could give them no Account of it. Mr. Cottingham soon after came, and the rest of the masters. Mr. Cottingham said, he had two or three matters to lay before them; One was, whether we were willing that our Bonds and Securities should be inspected, by my Lord Chancellor, or by any Person he should appoint? Every body consented hereto. I think, another thing was, my Lord Chancellor thought it proper, we should carry our Accompts to the Council: There were some objected to that, and we thought it not proper; and the Conclusion of that was, we were to deliver them to him, as being most proper for my Lord Chancellor to carry them to the Council.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was that all that was offer'd at that meeting?

Mr. Edwards. Really I don't know but that there was a third thing mention'd. I can give you but a very imperfect Account of this meeting; and that for this reason; it was not thought proper that my Servants should come in, and they oblig'd me to go often out, which I did; and afterwards I heard the chief Substance of this meeting. And I remember, that after I had heard the main matter, I said, Gentlemen, the chief Consideration is to get your money ready as soon as you can; I think the intent is plain to get the money away from you.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether do you remember any Advice that was then given, relating to the making up of the Ballance?

Mr. Edwards. No, my Lords, I do not remember: I heard something afterwards by the masters, about producing Notes; but if any thing was mention'd about it, it was when I was out of the Room.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether on the 10th of November was you present at the Earl of Macclesfield's?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, my Lords, I was.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Look upon that Accompt and Subscription.

Mr. Edwards looks upon it.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, what Subscription he first made, when he gave it in, and whether any Alteration or Addition was made by him afterwards?

Mr. Edwards. Some of the masters were at my Lord Chancellor's before me: I did not think it necessary, nor had written any thing to my Accompt before I came there: So I went into a Room, and writ this that was first writ: ‘ My Lord, I am ready and willing, the Securities in the foregoing Accompt mention'd, shall be inspected by such Person or Persons as your Lordship shall be pleased to appoint.

H. Edwards.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. What other Subscription was made after that?

Mr. Edwards. After I had made this Subscription, I carried my Accompt, and deliver'd it to my Lord Chancellor; who looking upon this Subscription, did not seem to approve of it: But he thought Mr. Holford's more proper, and desir'd me me to alter it, that all might be as Mr. Holford's was. I then went out of the Room, and transcribed the Substance, if not the Words of Mr. Holford's upon my Accompt, and then I delivered it to my Lord again.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Read that Subscription.

Mr. Edwards reads.] 'The several Sums of money and Securities mention'd in this Accompt are what have come to my Hands since I was admitted a Master, separate from what were in the Hands of Mr. Dormer during the time he was a master (the account whereof, by reason of the Shortness of time, I have not been able to settle; but will as soon as possible) and for which I am ready to procure Certificates from the several Companies and Offices, if your Lordship requires it. And as to the Money, I am ready to pay it to every Person lawfully intitled thereto, having a proper Discharge for the same.

Nov. 10. 1724. H. Edwards.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, if they have done with this Witness, I desire he may be asked, if he was not ready to pay his Ballance according to his Subscription?

Mr. Edwards. Yes, I was; I could have paid it in a Week sooner than the time required.

Mr. Conway called.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My lords, I desire that Mr. Conway may give your lordships an account whether he was at this meeting?

Mr. Conway. My lords, I was present at the first meeting at Mr. Edward's House, when Mr. Cottingham deliver'd my Lord Chancellor's Command, that we should provide and prepare our Accompts: But nothing more happen'd during the time of my stay at that meeting: I went away immediately. At the second meeting Mr. Cottingham and Mr. Dixon were there: Mr. Cottingham had a great Cold; and, as I remember, there were two Proposals made: The first was in relation to our Bonds and Securities; and the 2d. was in relation to the Money and Cash. After every Master had deliver'd his Opinion to these Points, Mr. Cottingham and Mr. Dixon went to wait upon my Lord Chancellor with an account of what the masters had said; and before they came back, I was gone.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be ask'd, whether at that time, when it was propos'd to the masters to produce their Cash, they said they were able to do it?

Mr. Conway. Every master deliver'd his Opinion as he thought fit. Mr. Lightboun merrily said, If we produced Goldsmiths Notes, and they should be secured, the Goldsmiths Shops would be shut up, and People would be enquiring what Holiday it was. Mr. Kynaston made some Observations; every one spoke as they thought fit.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether they all declared, they were able and ready to make good their Accompts?

Mr. Conway, I think they all did.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether to produce their Effects or their Cash?

Mr. Conway. I am not sure, whether it was mentioned Cash or Effects; we made no distinction at that time between Cash and Effects.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether he himself declared, that he was able and ready to produce his Effects?

Mr. Conway. I did declare it at that time, as I afterwards writ, that I would endeavour to produce my Effects?

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether there was any, and what Advice or Instruction given, relating to their assisting of one another?

Mr. Conway. No such thing happened while I staid there.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire it may be asked, whether Mr. Conway at any time afterwards borrowed any money of any of the masters and of whom?

Mr. Conway. The first time I attended the Judges and the Directors of the Bank, I did bring my Securities, and an Account of my Effects at the same time, without borrowing a Farthing from any Person: Before the Securities were gone through, and the Account of my Effects taken, it was observed, that the same was liable to Objection, as consisting of Land, Mortgages, Bonds and Notes, and things of that kind. And before I went, I was told, that some of the masters had taken an Oath; I desired to know what that Oath was: It was answered, that it was a voluntary Oath; and I said, I could only swear, that I had Effects to answer; and that I would endeavour to turn those Effects into Cash, and so withdrew.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether he borrowed any money?

Mr. Conway. Some time after this I waited upon Mr. Godfrey; and before I came away, he asked me if I had any Bonds? I told him I had; then pray, says he, let me have what you can spare, and send them immediately: Whereupon I went Home, and sent him 5000*l.* India Bonds. Some Days after that I expected Mr. Godfrey to return me the Favour; and I carried to him Effects to (as I apprehended) the Value of 6 or 7000*l.* or more; and I desired him to lend me Bonds, and he seemed unwilling without the Security, and he kept the Security.

Mr. Lutwyche. He hath not answered to those Questions, whether he borrowed money, and what Sums.

Mr. Conway. Mr. Godfrey lent me upon the Bonds, 9000*l.* and Mr. Bennet, 2000*l.*

Mr. Lutwyche. Only to pursue this Question, I desire to know, whether the Securities were turned into money, or into Notes?

Mr. Conway. Yes, my lords, they were turned into Notes.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, whether they were lock'd up, or he did take them back again?

Mr. Conway. I took them back again.

Mr. Lutwyche. What became of them afterwards?

Mr. Conway. Some of them I paid off, others I returned to the Person that had advanced me money on those Bonds.

Mr. Lutwyche. I take it, he says, he had the Effects that produced those Notes from Mr. Godfrey and Mr. Bennet; therefore I desire to know, what became of those Notes after he carried them back from the Judges?

Mr. Conway. I returned them to the Person that had advanced me the Notes on those Bonds.

Mr. Lutwyche. Who was that?

Mr. Conway. The Goldsmith, Mr. Rogers, at Temple-Bar.

Mr.

Mr. Plummer. I desire to know when he returned those Bonds again?

Mr. Conway. In a few Days after.

Mr. Lutwyche. My lords, it may be necessary to examine how it was that he persuaded the Goldsmith to let him have those Notes?

Mr. Conway. I gave him Bonds for them.

Mr. Lutwyche. Whether were those the Bonds that you had from Mr. Godfrey and Mr. Bennet?

Mr. Conway. They were.

Mr. Lutwyche. Whether they were not delivered to the Goldsmith in the Nature of a Pledge for those Notes?

Mr. Conway. Yes, they were.

Mr. Lutwyche. What became of the Bonds?

Mr. Conway. I return'd them.

Mr. Lutwyche. To whom?

Mr. Conway. To Mr. Godfrey and Mr. Bennet.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. When he carried back the Notes to the Goldsmith, at that time, whether he took up the Bonds?

Mr. Conway. I did.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. As I apprehend, he says, he had lent Mr. Godfrey 5000 l. India-Bonds, and in return he expected that Mr. Godfrey should assist him; I desire he may be asked this Question, whether the 5000 l. in India-Bonds he supplied Mr. Godfrey with, was after or before he produced his Cash to the Committee?

Mr. Conway. After.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was it before Godfrey had done it?

Mr. Conway. After he had produced his Securities.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Was it before or after he had produced his Cash?

Mr. Conway. It was after he had produced his Securities, and before he had produced his Cash.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we think it will be very necessary to lay before your lordships a General State or Account of the total Deficiency; to shew how much, upon the Examination and Enquiry that hath been made, the total of the Deficiencies in the several Offices amount to; and we apprehend, that we are able likewise to give an Account of some additional Deficiencies that have been discovered since. I apprehend, there was at that time near 100,000 l. Deficiencies.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be ask'd, whether at that time when he wrote the Subscription, he was able to pay the Ballance of his Accompt?

Mr. Conway. I was, in Effects I had, and I said no otherwise.

Mr. Sandys. I desire he may be asked, if my Lord Macclesfield asked him as to his Ability?

Mr. Conway. No, my Lords, he did not; to my remembrance he did not. I deliver'd my Accompt to Mr. Cottingham.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, what Deficiency there remains upon his Office; whether he can recollect how much it is?

Mr. Conway. My Lords, I believe it is 13,000 l. my Charge, of which I can take off something in my Post-Accompt.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I desire he may be asked, whether he is now able to make good the Deficiency in his Office?

Mr. Conway. Yes, my Lords, I am.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Whether he hath made any Conveyance of any Estate as a Security for it?

Mr. Conway. I have.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I desire he may be asked, whether any thing, or how much hath been rais'd out of that Estate?

Mr. Conway. It is made so very lately, that I don't know that any thing hath been raised since: It is but a few Days ago that it hath been made.

Lord Lechmere. My Lords, I would be glad to know, as there is a Ballance of 13,000 l. whether he stands indebted to any other Persons, but to the Suitors of the Court, and to whom?

Mr. Conway. No, my Lords, I don't owe any thing to any body, to my Knowledge.

Mr. Lutwyche. I should be very glad if Mr. Conway could extricate himself out of the Difficulties on Account of the Deficiency in his Office. It is very proper to inquire how, and by what Estate, that is to be made good.

Mr. Conway. It is to be made good by an Estate in land.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire to know whether that Estate is settled, whether it was not settled upon his marriage?

Mr. Conway. It was never settled on my marriage. I was Tenant in Tail, and my Wife and Son joined with me in levying a Fine.

Mr. Lutwyche. Whether it is not settled by Will?

Mr. Conway. I was Tenant in Tail by the Will of my Father; I have levied a Fine, and my Wife and Son have joined with me.

Mr. Onslow. What Interest had your Son in it?

Mr. Conway. No Interest, as I apprehend; but I thought it was necessary he should join, to take off all Difficulties and Objections to the Title.

Mr. Onslow. Whether there are no Annuities charged upon that Estate, and what they are?

Mr. Conway. There are no Annuities charged on that Estate.

Mr. Onslow. No Payment to the Mother?

Mr. Conway. There is, out of another Estate.

Mr. Onslow. What are the rents of the Estate you have secured for the Payment of this money;

Mr. Conway. Between 5 and 600 l. a Year.

Mr. Onslow. Is that your Computation, or is it let at so much now?

Mr. Conway. I can't say it is all let so; there are some Demefns.

Mr. Onslow. What are the Rents of that part of the Estate that is let?

Mr. Conway. I take it to be 500 l. a Year.

Mr. Onslow. What, let at 500 l. a Year?

Mr. Conway. Yes, or thereabouts.

Mr. Onslow. Do you reckon the whole Estate to be worth 500 l. a Year?

Mr. Conway. No, I don't reckon in the whole Estate, but only that which is conveyed for the securing of this money.

Mr. Onslow. Then I desire to know what are the Rents of this Estate as it is let?

Mr. Conway. I take it to be 500 l. a Year, or thereabouts, that is applied for, and as a Security to answer my Deficiency.

Lord Lechmere. This 13,000 l. Ballance is due to the Suitors, which he says is secured by this Estate: I would be glad to know how the Deficiency came, and what is become of this 13,000 l. that is due to the Suitors?

Mr. Conway. The Occasion of it was, my coming into the Office cost me to my Predecessor 6000 l. I paid besides 1500 l. upon my Admission, and 500 l. Contribution towards making good Mr. Dormer's Deficiency.

Mr. Onslow. How was the rest of the Debt contracted? You have mention'd but about 8000 Pounds.

Mr.

Mr. Conway. I believe I might, upon Account of my Brother, borrow 1500 or 2000*l.*, to satisfie his Account to the Crown.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Out of what Cash did you repay it?

Mr. Conway. I believe it might be out of the Office.

Mr. Onslow. What is become of the rest; how did you apply the Remainder?

Mr. Conway. The Remainder; I can't tell but I may have so much due among my Acquaintance; I believe I may.

Mr. Onslow. Did you then lend your Acquaintance out of the Suitors money?

Mr. Conway. I believe I might at times lend Friends out of the Cash that remained dead and useles, and because I apprehended it was Secure.

Mr. Onslow. You say, you have lent to several of your Acquaintance out of the Suitors Cash; I would have you name any one Person to whom you have lent any of the money of the Office?

Mr. Conway. I remember a noble Person, if it is proper to mention his Name, to whom I lent 2600*l.* he is now dead.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. I don't know whether your lordships will not be pleased to confine the managers to examine only to the particular Article they are now on.

Mr. Onslow. We are now upon the Article of the Deficiencies, and the Question hath been asked by the Counsel for the Noble Lord, whether this Deficiency can be made up by Mr. Conway? therefore it is proper to know, whether this Deficiency is likely to be made up, and to know where the Money is, and therefore I would ask who this six and twenty hundred Pounds was lent to?

Mr. Serj. Probyn. My Lords, I submit it whether that Question be proper, because Mr. Conway hath given Land Security to make good this Deficiency; and therefore it is not material for your lordships Judgment, to enquire how this Deficiency happened.

Mr. Lutwyche. I am very sorry to lay before your lordships the Reasons and the Order upon which he was committed. I apprehend it extremely material upon this Point, and ariseth from what the Counsel for the noble Lord have entred into themselves; for they have asked, whether he was able to make good his Deficiency: Now is it not proper for us to ask the particular Circumstances, to find out the Truth, whether he is so or not. Therefore I beg leave to ask one Question, not waving the other, whether he hath assigned over all his Debts that he could, to make good his Deficiency?

Mr. Conway. I have assigned over all my real Estate.

Mr. Lutwyche. Whether he hath assigned over this 2600*l.* due to him?

Mr. Conway. That is applied.

Mr. Lutwyche. Applied, How?

Mr. Conway. Applied amongst my Causes.

Mr. Lutwyche. Did he lend a Nobleman a Sum of money, and apply it to a Cause?

Mr. Conway. That Sum of money you are pleased to enquire after, I applied to a Cause.

Mr. Onslow. He said he lent a Sum of Money, &c. I desire he may be asked, who this 2600*l.* was lent to?

Mr. Conway. I was applied to by a Nobleman to lend him the Sum of 2600*l.*

Mr. Onslow. By whom was you applied to?

Mr. Conway. By my Lord Bulkeley, and accordingly it was advanced to him, and it is since applied in a Cause.

Mr. Onslow. Applied, How?

Mr. Conway. Applied in a Cause, with the Approbation of the Parties.

Mr. Onslow. Hath it been repaid?

Mr. Conway. No, It is applied in a Cause of a Suitor, and now it remains as Security.

Earl of Abingdon. I am so nearly related to that Noble Lord that is mentioned, that I must do that Justice, as to put Mr. Conway in mind, as I did Mr. Hiccocks before, That if any Question is ask'd him, which may personally subject him to any Penalty, or, as he hath the Bar Gown, may concern his Client, he ought to be left to his Discretion, whether he will or will not answer.

Lord Lechmere. A Person is not obliged to answer any thing that may criminally affect him; but where the Enquiry is after a Debt, in order to explain his Oath as to his Sufficiency, which is the matter of Debate, surely that is material, and ought to be answered to; and I desire to be informed, whether this 2600*l.* which he said was lent this noble Lord out of the Suitors money, was repaid to him by my Lord Bulkeley, and when?

Mr. Conway. It is not repaid. It is applied in a Cause; the parties have approved of it as a Security.

Lord Lechmere. When was this money in the Hands of my Lord Bulkeley applied to the Benefit of any Suitor, and by what Order or Authority?

Mr. Conway. It is some Time since, some months ago, five or six months ago.

Lord Lechmere. Was this by any Order of the Court of Chancery?

Mr. Conway. No, my Lords, by the Approbation of the Parties.

E. of Macclesfield. My Lords, if you please to give me leave, I would suggest something, that possibly may help towards the better understanding him. If my Guess be right, this relates to his Post-Accompt. He hath said his Charge is 13,000*l.* And he hath said, he could discharge 2000*l.* or more, of that Ballance by a Post-Accompt; Now I apprehend this he is speaking of now, is that Article of the Post-Accompt. I don't know, if I guess his meaning right, but I desire he may inform your lordships, in case it be otherwise.

Lord Lechmere. It may be for your Information to know who are the Persons to whom this is applied; that it may be known whether it is in the Post Accompt or not?

Mr. Onslow. My Lords, We desire first to know, what Security my Lord Bulkeley gave?

Mr. Conway. He gave a Bond and Judgment.

Mr. Onslow. Who is it you have applied the Security to?

Mr. Conway. It is in the Cause of Faulconberg contra Faulconberg.

Mr. Onslow. Do you reckon this Part of the 13,000*l.* now deficient?

Mr. Conway. No, I do not reckon it in that Sum.

Mr. Onslow. Your Lordships will please to recollect, that his Deficiency is 13,000*l.* We ask him how that Deficiency came; he hath given Your Lordships an Account of 10,000 odd hundred Pounds; and first said the Residue was in the Hands of his Acquaintance, and named 2600*l.* money of the Suitors to be in the Hands of my Lord Bulkeley; now he saith this last Sum is not Part of the 13,000*l.* Therefore now I would ask, how the Remainder of his Deficient money was applied, or how the Debt happened?

Mr. Conway. If my Lords will please to give me leave to explain it; As to the Remainder of the 13,000*l.* you have been pleased to reckon 10,000 odd hundred Pounds to be made out; then there is 2100*l.* odd money I have laid out in land, which I have since conveyed, which makes 12,000 odd hundred Pounds; and the rest I have in Bonds and Notes, which I have to make up the Residue.

Mr. Lutwyche. I desire he may be asked, whether he hath those Notes, and they are ready? I desire to know, whether they have not been paid into Court to make up his Deficiency?

Mr. Conway. No I humbly hope to have it allowed me on my Post Accompt, being applied in the foresaid Cause with Approbation of the Parties.

Mr. Onslow, We have done with him; and leave him to Your Lordships Observation.

Mr. Thompson called.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we beg leave, that Mr. Thompson may give Your Lordships an Account, upon the Inspection and Examination of those Accompts, how much the Deficiency of the several masters amounted to?

Mr. Thompson. So much as the several masters stood charged with by their own Accompts, and did not lock up or produce proper Securities for, I account a Deficiency; and by this Rule, I have collected the Deficiencies of the several masters, from the Reports made to the Committee of Council.

Mr. John Bennet's Deficiency amounts to L. 17,541: 15: 10.

Mr. Conway's Deficiency in his Cash only amounts to L. 10,039: 4: 4½, but Mr. Conway, while his Accompts were under Examination, sold 2000*l.* South Sea Annuity, and 3500*l.* South Sea Stock; and of the money arising thereby, he paid to the Suitors, to whom such Annuity and Stock did belong, no more than L. 2593: 9: 3. so that his Deficiency is increased by the Sum of L. 3550, somewhat more or less, according to the Price he sold at.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. Was what he sold, part of the Suitors Security?

Mr. Thompson. Yes,—Mr. Kynaston's Deficiency amounts to L. 26,908: 11: 3 ½.

Mr. Thomas Bennet's Deficiency amounts to 9075*l.*

The Total of the Deficiency of the present masters is L. 67,114: 11: 5 ¾.

The Charge that remained upon Mr. Borret's Office, amounted to L. 56,050: 10: 1 ½. But Mr. Bennet and Mr. Godfrey, the masters, who had the Care of his Effects, gave it as their Opinion before the Judges and Directors, that the Effects he left, would produce 44,000*l.* and upwards; so that I compute the Deficiency of Mr. Borret's Office at L. 12,050: 10: 1 ½.

The Total Charge upon Mr. Dormer's Office, when he resigned to Mr. Edwards, amounted to L. 49,604: 11: 11; but Mr. Edwards has paid in Discharge of that Sum, the Sum of L. 23,725: 15: 9 ½. so that the Deficiency of Mr. Dormer's Office amounts to L. 25,878: 16: 1 ½.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. Whether in that is Mr. Wilson's and Mr. Poulter's Security included in Dormer's Accompt?

Mr. Thompson. Mr. Dormer's Deficiency I take to be L. 25,878: 16: 5 ½; and the whole Deficiency I take to be L. 105,043: 17: 8 ¾. And if any Securities or Sums of money belonging to the Suitors are omitted in the masters Accompts, such Securities and Sums are not included in this Estimate.

E. of Macclesfield. Have you had before you the Administrator, either of Mr. Borret or Mr. Dormer?

Mr. Thompson. No, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. My Lords, we shall beg leave to call one Witness to give your Lordships an Accompt of another Deficiency of 2000*l.* upon Mr. Conway, which is not charged in his Accompt. We desire that Mr. Sanderfon may be called.

Mr. Sanderfon sworn.

Mr. Lutwyche. We desire, that Mr. Sanderfon may give Your Lordships an Accompt of any money in Mr. Conway's Hands, and how much it is, that is not brought to Accompt?

Mr. Sanderfon. My Lords, I was concerned as a Solicitor in a Cause in Chancery, between Sir Erasmus Norris and Alexander Norris; soon after the Accompts were brought into the Register's Office, I went to look and see if Mr. Conway had charged himself with a Sum of money paid in, in that Cause. I found by his Accompt, that it was not charged. I had drawn up the Accompt, and given a Copy of it to Mr. Conway, which he did not deny, but he said, there was not so much by 1 or 200*l.* Said I, there is no Entry at all of the Cause, and no mention of any Sum. I told him, it was an Omission not to mention the Cause or Sum. He said, that he believed it was not so much, he did therefore not mention it. I asked him, why he did not insert, how much it was as he thought it? He said, because he would pay in all.

Mr. Serj. Probyn. We desire he may be asked, how much the whole money in that Cause was?

Mr. Sanderfon. L. 2274: 8: 11. besides Interest from Lady Day last was Twelve-month.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, this is the Sum of the Account we had to lay before Your Lordships of the Deficiencies, notwithstanding the masters represented themselves as able to pay the whole. We would not represent it to Your Lordships, that this will certainly be the Loss, because some of the masters have given Security for some Part; tho' we apprehend the Security given will not be sufficient for half.

E. of Macclesfield. I desire to ask Mr. Thompson, whether this Charge he makes upon Mr. Borret's Office be a Charge taken from the Office, or only an Account taken from Mr. Meller?

Mr. Thompson. This Charge was taken from the Vouchers, which Mr. Meller produced.

E. of Macclesfield. Are there any Payments allowed, made by Mr. Borret in his Life time?

Mr. Thompson. A great many.

E. of Macclesfield. Who gave you an Account of that?

Mr. Thompson. Mr. Meller, my Lord.

E. of Macclesfield. But I speak of the money paid by Mr. Borret himself, not what Mr. Meller paid. Have you any Account what Mr. Borret paid out himself?

Mr. Thompson. The Account we had of this, was from one Mr. Parker, as I think his Name was, who was Clerk to Mr. Borret. He produced several Receipts for Sums paid: And the masters in Chancery, who had the Care of Mr. Borret's Effects, allowed the Books and Papers produced by Mr. Parker, to be the Books and Papers belonging to Mr. Borret's Office.

E. of Macclesfield. As to the Effects belonging to Mr. Borret, who gave you the Account of them?

Mr. Thompson. Mr. Bennet. and Mr. Godfrey.

E. of Macclesfield. Do you know who is Administrator to Mr. Borret?

Mr. Thompson. I have heard that Mr. Paxton is.

Mr. Nicholas Paxton. Yes, my Lords, I took out Administration to Mr. Borret, about the middle of April last.

Lord Lechmere. I desire to ask Mr. Thompson whether the Computation he hath made of the several Deficiencies, amounting to an hundred and five thousand Pounds, is taken from the Voluntary Accompts of the masters delivered in, or whether any of the Suitors were concerned in those Accompts, or have been Parties to such Computations?

Mr. Thompson. From the masters Voluntary Accompts only.

Mr. Serj. Pengelly. I beg leave to ask one Question, which arises from the Question, which the Lord within the Bar hath been pleased to ask, whether Mr. Godfrey and Mr. Bennet were not the master that appeared, and were employed under the Earl of Macclesfield at that Time, and had the Custody of the Effects of Mr. Borret? Mr

Mr. Thompson. Mr. Bennet and Mr. Godfrey were the Persons that appeared to us to have the Care and Custody of Mr. Borret's Effects.

Lord Lechmere. As to the Nature of these Deficiencies, I think he says, these Deficiencies arise upon the Cash Ballance. Then I would be glad to know, whether in the Accompts that he hath perused, and in the Computation of those Deficiencies, the several Deficiencies of the Cash Ballance arise upon the whole Ballance, or are appropriated to any particular Suitors concerned in those Ballances?

Mr. Thompson. No Part of the Cash Ballance is appropriated to any particular Suitor.

Mr. West. My Lords, the Commons have now produc'd a very long, and as they apprehend, a very full and convincing Evidence, in maintenance of the Impeachment by them exhibited against Thomas Earl of Macclesfield, for high Crimes and Misdemeanors; and I am commanded to acquaint your Lordships, That they do not intend to trouble this House with any further Examination. But, my Lords, the Commons considering the Length and Variety of the several Facts and Circumstances, that have been offer'd, are of Opinion, It may be of Service to that Cause, in which their Zeal for publick Justice has made them to engage, that the whole of what they have insisted upon or produc'd, shou'd in such manner, as I am able to obey their Commands, be shortly recapitulated and presented in one View to your Lordships Consideration.

The Charge in general, and the several Articles of it, have been fully open'd by those Gentlemen, who preceded me upon this Occasion. The Witnesses who have been examined, and the other Evidence that has been read, have been fully considered, so far as they relate to those Particulars, that were the immediate Occasion of their being produc'd; I shall not therefore waste Time, by enumerating once more the Articles of the Charge, nor by too minutely repeating the whole Evidence that has been given: But shall endeavour to reduce this long and various Examination to some general Heads, that may express the Substance of the general Articles, and then remind your Lordships of what I can recollect to have been most materially offer'd in Support of them. To this End, my Lords, I beg leave in the first Place, to observe that strict Union and Connection there is between the Crimes of which this Earl stands charged. Your Lordships cannot but remark, that the Articles mutually support, and almost prove each other; so that if any one be admitted to be proved, it is difficult, if at all possible, to doubt the Truth of the rest.

A wicked and corrupt Design and View to raise and procure to himself excessive and exorbitant Gain and Profit, was the fatal Principle, from which all this Mischiefe sprung. It was this that prompted the Earl of Macclesfield to extort those large Sums of money, which he received from the several Persons, whom he admitted to the Office of masters of the Court of Chancery. The gratifying this Avarice engaged his Lordship to neglect every other Consideration, to overlook that Care he ow'd to the Suitors of the Court, and to admit Persons of small Abilities, and every way unqualified for the Discharge of so great a Trust. — This, oblig'd him to connive at, and permit the fraudulent Practice of paying the Excessive Price of their Places, out of the money belonging to the Suitors of the Court. — That again, forc'd him to suffer, or rather to encourage the purchasing masters, to traffick and game with the Estates of the Suitors. — There was no other way, by which these liberal Purchasers, cou'd Reimburse themselves. — And this Circumstance, even after it was apparent the Suitors were likely to lose a great Part of their Effects, reduc'd him to the unhappy Necessity of refusing to take those measures, that were necessary to prevent that Practice for the Future. And when the fatal Effects of this unbounded Liberty, which he permitted the masters to enjoy, began to appear, then was He compell'd to become a Confederate with the deficient masters, to prevent its being known to the World. — From hence sprung the unequal Composition with Wilson: The partial Orders for the Payment of money: The private Contribution, to answer the most pressing Demands: And from hence his own Liberality to Lockman. But when all these Methods prov'd ineffectual, and he found the Cries of the Widows and Orphans had reach'd his Majesty, then, my Lords, did the Lord high Chancellor of Great Britain combine with these Masters, advise and persuade them to make false Representations of their Circumstances and Accompts, in Order to deceive his Majesty, to frustrate his most gracious Intentions for the Good of his Subjects, and to prevent (what he most fear'd) a parliamentary Inquiry.

These, my Lords, are the malignant Consequences of that Corruption of which the Earl of Macclesfield is accus'd; and which the Commons apprehend to be perfectly consistent with the whole Tenor of his Actions, during the Time of his being Chancellor.

The Commons began their Evidence with that Oath, which it was prov'd the Earl had taken, in Consequence of the Statute of the 12 Ric. II. and which was administered in the usual and accustomed manner. I should not have reminded your Lordships of this Circumstance, if it was not for that unaccountable Attempt, to quible away the Sanctity of an Oath, and to represent it as a meer Ceremony and Form, for no other Reason, but because it was read to him in French, and when he kiss'd the Bible, his Lordship and the Clerk said nothing to each other. They afterwards gave other Evidence, relating to such Profits as he had made of the Office of Chancellor, which he did not admit in his Answer. But I do not apprehend it necessary to mention them particularly to your Lordships.

The first general Head of Accusation against the Earl, is, That he Corruptly, Illegally, and Extorsively insisted upon, and received great Sums of Money, for the Admission of several Persons into Offices relating to the Administration and Execution of Justice.

To lead the Way to this Charge, the Commons began their Evidence with the 9th Article, which relates to his taking 100 Guineas from T. Bennet for permitting him to resign his Office of Clerk of the Custodies, and for procuring a new Grant of that Office to Hugh Hamersley.

The Commons chose to begin with this Article, not because they thought the Sum taken so considerable, as to have any great Influence upon the Judgment your Lordships may give upon this Occasion; but because the Fact discovers the Man, and fully explains, what manner of Mind he must be endu'd with, who could stoop to an Action so low and fordid. This Article does of it self lay a Foundation of Probability for the others, in which he is charg'd with the extorting of much larger Sums. It is true, His Lordship in his Answer gives himself a very different Character, and offers to produce a Catalogue of his own Generosities. What Argument there would be in this when produc'd, I cannot comprehend. I will therefore endeavour to save your Lordships that Trouble. I can admit even more than is desired: Instead of being Generous, I will suppose his Lordship (far from the Truth) to have been profuse: Yet still would it prove nothing: For surely, it is not a new Character in History, that even Squanderers should be Rapacious.

To prove the Particulars of this Article, the Resignation of Bennet and the new Grant to Hamersley, were both both prov'd. And as to the Payment of the money, Mr. Cottingham, who was Secretary to my Lord Macclesfield, and who, thro' the whole Course of the Evidence, appears to have been his great Agent and Confident: He owns the Receipt of the hundred Guineas, and swears he paid 'em to the Earl, within a Day or two after he received them. He also owns the Consideration, for which this money was paid, That it was for permitting Bennet to surrender his Place. — Were there no Evidence but Cottingham alone, the Commons think they have sufficiently prov'd this Fact. But the Evidence of T. Bennet puts it beyond Contradiction, and makes it manifest, that the hundred Guineas were in a manner extorted. — He swears soon after he was admitted a Master, he was desirous to part with his Place of Clerk of the Custodies; and to that End apply'd to Cottingham for my Lord Macclesfield's Favour, and acquaints him with the Person, to whom he desired the new Grant should be made: Cottingham upon this speaks to my Lord, and some short time after tells Mr. Bennet, that neither my Lord nor himself knew Hamersley. Your Lordships may remember that the Earl by his cross Examination, seem'd to endeavour at some small Triumph upon this Circumstance. My Lords, it is not so wonderful, that Cottingham should not speak Truth, there is no giving Evidence to the Tone of the Voice, nor the Air and Manner, in which a Conversation is carry'd on; more especially, if it be considered, that Cottingham was a Man who doubtless upon these Occasions would not have known his Father without the mediation of Gold. Bennet was surpriz'd at this Speech, as well he might, when Hamersley lived next Door to Cottingham. However, Cottingham at last explain'd the Mystery, by letting him know, a Present was expected by the Earl, and Cottingham himself own'd, he did say the Earl insisted upon a Present.

Mr. West was here interrupted by the Earl of Macclesfield, who said that Cottingham's Words were not, That he insisted upon, but that he expected a Present. Upon which Occasion Mr. Onslow represented warmly to the Lords, that the Behaviour of the Earl was Irregular, and that the Managers ought not to be broken in upon while they were speaking. And then Mr. West went on,

My Lords, It is my Duty to represent the Actions of this Earl in the strongest Light; and the strongest Light is the justest Light. Upon Recollection I do not think the Word I us'd to be of Force equal to the Fact. My lords, The Expectation of a Chancellor communicated by a Secretary to a new made Master, is more than to insist. But be that as it will; Bennet in answer to these Expectations, represented the Hardship of being oblig'd to pay Money upon this Occasion, when he had so lately paid a very large Sum to the Chancellor; and by way of Argument told him, that when he came into the Place himself, he paid nothing; and his Brother told him, that lord Cowper upon the like Occasion had taken nothing, because as that Noble Earl said, nothing was due. At last, my lord Macclesfield and his Secretary, being both inexorable, Bennet agreed to pay the one hundred and five Pounds. After this Agreement was made, Cottingham acquainted his lord with the Bargain, and then told Bennet, that the Earl agreed to it: But withal, that it was a great Favour he would take so small a Sum; and Cottingham at the same Time made this very remarkable Declaration, That if Mr. Bennet, would bring the hundred Guineas, he need take no farther Trouble, for the Chancellor would apply to the King for leave for him to resign, and would take Care of the other necessary Steps. And accordingly the Bargain was executed in that manner. For Mr. Bennet knew so little of the intermediate Proceedings, that he has told your Lordships he knows not how, or by whom the Warrant came into the Hands of the Clerk of the Patents.

It is difficult not to feel some Indignation rise at the bare relating this meanness! Mean it would have been in any Man: But for a Peer of Great Britain, an Earl, Lord Chancellor of the Kingdom, and a Chancellor oblig'd and so dearly bought, to prostitute so many illustrious Characters, in so low a manner as to become a Broker for the Hire of 100 Guineas, is astonishing. But, my Lords, when I consider that this Earl was at the same Time one of the Lords Justices of the Kingdom, in a Commission to execute some of the Functions of Majesty itself, I want Words to express such a Transaction in its proper Colours.

My Lords, I have mentioned the Evidence relating to this Point something the more particularly, because the Proof comes up to the express Words of the Statute of the 12 of Ric. II. and proves, as I apprehend beyond Contradiction, that the Earl of Macclesfield dispos'd of this Place for Gift and Brokage.

Before I quit this Article, I beg leave to observe to your Lordships, that my Lord Macclesfield in his Answer insists upon it to be the Right of the Chancellors to accept Presents; and therefore owns he did in this Case accept a Present. But then he avoids, as he every where else does, the naming any particular Sum that he accepted. I wou'd willingly ask, why this Precaution, if what he did was lawful and right? I would also observe, that there is something strangely equivocal in that Part of his Answer, where he denies he insisted on 100 Guineas, or any other Sum. This Answer both explains his extorsive Method of proceeding, and almost demonstrates the Practice of it. For it is very remarkable his Lordship does not deny he insisted upon a Present in General, but only that he did not insist upon any particular Sum.

My Lords, your Lordships will find by the Course of the Evidence, that this Artifice of not naming any particular Sum was not peculiar to this Instance; but my lord Macclesfield, whenever a Master's Place, or any other Place was to be sold, carefully avoided fixing the Price by demanding a certain Sum. No, — It was more gainful to set every Thing up to the best Bidder, and resolve never to dispose of any Office, till the sanguine Purchasers, by bidding on each other, were artfully screw'd up voluntarily to offer a Present, his lordship gently phrases it, but as the Commons think, they have prov'd the Fact to be, a Corrupt and Exorbitant Price, equal to the avaricious Wishes of the Seller.

The next Instance to which the Commons call'd Evidence, was the illegal Sale of several of the Offices of Masters in Chancery. Now, my lords (not to be tedious in mentioning the Evidence) it is manifest from the Oath of Office, which they take, from the Commission granted to the Masters in Conjunction with the Judges, and from the Evidence given by Mr. Mellor, relating to that subordinate Jurisdiction, which they exercise, That these Offices do relate to the Administration and Execution of Justice.

My lord Macclesfield, in his Answer to this Part of the Charge, indifferently is silent as to the particular Sums which he received, altho' your lordships will observe, that Payment of the individual Sums charg'd in the Articles has been prov'd by the Persons themselves, who paid the Money. Kynaston and Bennet express as to the Payment of 1500 Guineas each; Mr. Elde is positive as to his carrying to the Earl 500 Guineas in a Dutch Basket; and Mr. Thurston swears, he left 5000 Guineas with lady Macclesfield. Now my lords, as the Earl insists that it was a known Perquisite of the Great Seal to accept of Presents upon the adm-ting new Masters; why does he not own the Receipt of the several Sums, with which he is charged? If it was a known and establish'd Perquisite, doubtless the Sum payable would have been as known and establish'd. And this Consideration I apprehend to be the Reason of his lordship's Caution. He cou'd not but feel the Absurdity of his own Argument, and yet I will admit as much as his lordship or his Counsel can desire upon this Occasion. His Predecessors possibly may have accepted small Gratuities from new masters, after their Admission. Therefore He may publickly, and without any other Consideration, sell them to the best Bidder for the most he cou'd get. My lords, the Argument wou'd have been just as good, during the Time that it was usual for the Gentlemen at the Bar, to give New Years Gifts to the Chancellor, to prove he might have sold his Favours, and boldly suffer'd no one to plead before him, who wou'd not farm his Practice, and pay the full Price of what it might be worth.

To support this Imagination of its being a common Perquisite of the Great Seal, my Lord Macclesfield does in his Answer aver, that every one of the masters I have named, did voluntarily and of their own Accord send a Present to his Lordship on Occasion of their respective Admittances. How far it was a Present the Evidence I shall mention to your Lordships will fully explain. At present, I beg leave to observe the Equivocalness of these last Words, On Occasion of their several Admittances. This was not accidental, but calculated on Purpose to make the whole appear like a common and usual Perquisite. As the Words stand in the Answer, the natural Construction is, that these masters voluntarily made the usual Present to his Lordship, after they were admitted to their Offices: And yet the critical Sense of the Expression does not exclude the Payment of the money, even by way of Bargain, before their Admission. For even in that Case, the money may as truly be said to have been paid on Occasion of their Admittance. I should not have mentioned this Part of the Answer, if it was the only Instance of his Lordship's deviating from Truth. I should have imagin'd it to be an Oversight, of either his Lordship or his Counsel. But by the Observations, that have been made by the Gentlemen who opened the several Articles; Contradiction, Equivocation, and (I wish I cou'd not say) Untruth shine in every Part, and appear to be the predominant Qualities of the whole. My Lords, I mention this, not only as an Aggravation, but even as a Proof. For what Cause must it be that reduces a Man of the Abilities this Earl is known to possess, and of the Character He did once enjoy, to make use of such mean, such contemptible Arts? Arts! Unworthy a great Man; unpractic'd by an innocent Man, and I doubt not, will prove usefess to the Guilty.

The Fact upon the Evidence appears to be thus, Kynaston, Bennet, Elde and Thurston, all concur in this Circumstance, That they paid their money before they were admitted into their Offices. Mr. Cottingham also owns that he received the money of Mr. Kynaston and Mr. Bennet, and carried up the Basket of Mr. Elde, before any of them were sworn. All these Persons likewise agree, and Cottingham confirms their Testimony, that they apply'd to him as the proper Person to recommend them to my Lord Macclesfield, and to be inform'd of what Sum they must offer, in order to render themselves acceptable to his Lordship. The Evidence of Kynaston proves it to be a direct Bargain, for he swears, when he acquainted Cottingham of his having agreed with Rogers for the Purchase of his Place, that he offer'd but 1000 l. as a Present to the Chancellor: Upon which Cottingham said, he wou'd not mention to my Lord any Sum under 1500 l. and when Kynaston agreed to give that Sum, Cottingham again represented that it must be Guineas, upon which the 1500 Guineas were paid.

Mr. Bennet, he says, that when he had agreed with Mr. Hiccocks, he also applied to Cottingham to know what Sum was necessary to be paid the Earl. Cottingham agreed that a Present was necessary, but he wou'd not name the Sum. Upon this, after Bennet had consulted with his Brother and Mr. Godfrey, he again went to Cottingham, and offer'd 1000 Guineas; but Cottingham, dissatisfy'd with this, shook his Head, and said, He would not go to the Chancellor with that Sum; a great deal more had been given, and he hoped he would not lower the Price. Bennet however still press'd Cottingham to offer the 1000 Guineas, to which Cottingham replied, there was no baggling with the Chancellor; and that if he would not give more, he might be absolutely refused, and lose the Place. Bennet, struck with this Reply, agreed to give the 1500 Guineas, tho' Cottingham graciously told him, he need not bring it in money, for Bank Bills would do as well. I cannot help observing, that there was a strange Caution used as to the Payment of this money, altogether inconsistent with the Nature of an establish'd Fee, or regular Perquisite. Mr. Bennet sent his Clerk to take out the Bills in a feign'd Name, and for this Reason, because otherwise they could not so easily be parted with. Cottingham it seems, was something jealous of a Man, who had the Confidence to persist so long in offering but 1000 Guineas, and therefore the first Word he said to him, when he repair'd to the Chancellor to be sworn in, Have you brought the Money? Bennet answered like a Man, who perfectly well knew the Family, He should not have ventur'd to have come without it. Upon this the money was paid, the master was sworn, and the whole Bargain fully executed.

These kind of Bargains were now become so much the Subject of common Discourse, that the Earl thought it necessary to be something more cautious, and even Cottingham was not now to be so much in the Secret as formerly. Mr. Elde applied to the Chancellor himself, and without any Ceremony offers his Lordship 5000 Guineas for this judicial Office. The Earl, it seems, was not at all offended with this Liberty, but answered with the engaging familiarity of a great Man; Thee and I must not make Bargains. I will treat thee in a different Manner from others. My Lord Macclesfield was as good as his Word, for upon this Elde went to the Secretary, and offer'd him 5000 Guineas, and he reported to his Lord what pass'd: So that Cottingham was not dismissed this Service at once; and the matter was so far agreed, that Mr. Elde went in a Chair to the Earl's House, with his Basket, in which he swears, he put 5000 Guineas, and delivered it to Cottingham, who carried it up to his Lord: But at the same Time he swears, he did not know what was in it. Upon this, Elde was introduc'd, and sworn into his Office. Your Lordships will observe that the BASKET was no Part of the Bargain, and therefore the scrupulous Earl return'd it back to him Empty.

The last Person examined as to this Point, was Mr. Thurston, and He also was treated in a Manner different from all others. He was certainly better recommended than any of them, and in the Strength of that was very well received. Upon which he was Sanguine enough to expect he should have the Place. But, my Lords, before he was recommended, Mr. Thurston likewise apply'd to Cottingham, and offer'd 5000 Guineas. Cottingham said he would report; but he was not trusted to return an answer.—In the mean Time Care was taken by the artful spreading of Rumors, That Mr. Thurston should hear the Chancellor intended to give give the Place away to another Person. Alarm'd at this, and seeing all other methods of Recommendation avail'd nothing, he applied to my Lady Macclesfield; and after using several Arguments to no purpose, As that his Name had been printed in the publick News, to be the succeeding Master; That Persons applied to him for the Business of the Office; and that his Reputation and Character depended on his Success; He at last told her he did not expect to have the Place for nothing, and therefore he left Bills for five thousand Guineas upon the Table, and so retir'd. These he found were the best Arguments, and the best Recommendation; for within two or three Days after he was sworn into the Office. This new Way of Proceeding, deceiv'd even Cottingham himself so much, that he even scrupled to take his own Fees. I know not whether I ought to mention any other Particulars; but by the Questions put to the Witnesses, when they were cross examined, it seems as if his Lordship would persuade you, that this was entirely a Transaction between Mr. Thurston and my Lady Macclesfield, and in which he was in no wise concerned. If your Lordships can believe that the Earl intended really to give away this Place for nothing, the Earl will be fortunate: For Mr. Thurston himself own'd, he did not think he should have had the Place, if he had not left the money.

I have repeated this Part of the Evidence more fully to your Lordships, because, as I apprehend, it clearly explains the Earl's artful methods of Extortion, and also proves that in this whole Proceeding, The Money, instead of being voluntarily given, was unjustly extorted, and that instead of being a Present or usual Perquisite, it was an illegal and corrupt Bargain and Sale of Offices, relating to the Administration and Execution of Justice.

The last Thing I shall mention to prove this Point is an Evidence, to his Lordship, most unexceptionable. I mean the Earl of Macclesfield himself; for my Lords, consider once more his Answer in Relation to this very Point. What Caution! What Equivocation! What Confusion of Mind! That could make him even forget the Time of his own Impeachment. What other Circumstances of Guilt! That during the Course of this Trial have been visible to your Lordships.— Bank Bills taken out in feign'd Names, the Secrecy with which the money was paid, the dead Silence as to the Price agreed: One five thousand Guineas in a Basket; another five thousand Guineas left on a Toilett; and lastly, His own Declaration to the masters almost in a Body; How much they, how much himself might be affected. I submit to your Lordships what Inference is to be drawn from all these Particulars. The Commons are persuaded all flowed from this Principle, That his Lordship, the Masters, the Seller, and the Buyer, were all conscious that the whole Transaction was illegal and corrupt.

Before I quit this Head of the Charge, I must take Notice of that Part of his Lordship's Answer, wherein he hopes that the receiving Presents on such Occasions is not criminal in it self, or by the Common Law of this Realm; and that there is not any Act of Parliament whatsoever, by which the same is made Criminal. I hope his Lordship intends that the Words, Or by the Common Law of this Realm should be understood as Explanatory of the Expression, Criminal in it self; otherwise it supposes a very strange Distinction. For surely an Action cannot be conceived to be Criminal in it self, and at the same Time not contrary to the Common Law of this Kingdom. Is it possible for any one to imagine, that Corruption in the Officer is not the necessary Consequence of being obliged to purchase his Place? This is in Terminis the Reason of the Statute of Edw. VI. Is it possible for any one to imagine, that Oppression of the Subject must not be added to this Corruption? Or, can the Man, who sells these Places, with no other View than to satisfy his own Avarice, retain his Integrity, and be a severe or competent Check upon the Actions of those Officers, to whom he has sold? And that is the Reason of the Judgment reported by Moor, viz. That the Sale of Offices is Malum in se, and therefore finable. But when to what I have now said, I add the Consideration of the Oath enacted by the Statute 12. Rich. II. (his Lordship will be pleased to add his own Opinion and Apprehensions) I do not conceive it possible to doubt, but that the Sale of Offices relating to the Administration of Justice, is criminal in it self, criminal by the common Law, and criminal by Act of Parliament.

The next Point to which the Commons gave Evidence, is the necessary Consequence of what I last mentioned: I mean the admitting Persons to the Office of masters, who were of mean Substance, and every way unqualified for that Trust. The Evidence given of the Deficiency, now in several of those Offices, is so full and uncontestable, that I shall avoid the Repetition of it, and only just name Mr. Thompson, and refer your Lordships to the Report made to the Council, the Orders of the Court of Chancery, and the other Papers now upon the Table. Their being deficient at this time is a violent Presumption, and that, in Point of Law, is some Degree of Proof, that they were of small Substance at the time of their Admission. How else is it to be conceiv'd that masters, who have been so short a time in their Offices, should be so much in Arrear? Kynaston was admitted but in August 1721, and in 1724 there appears a Deficiency of 26,908 l. T. Bennet is admitted but in June 1723, and in little more than a Year there is a Deficiency of 16,075 l. And it is remarkable, that both these masters have sworn, all they were owners of in the World, was not sufficient to have paid the vast Prices they gave for their Offices. Yet these Men were chosen out to be trusted, one with near 50,000 l. and the other with near 100,000 l. of the money belonging to the helpless and the miserable. By the skill my Lord Macclesfield shew'd the other Day, in endeavouring to prove a Man illegally worth 1000 l. or 1500 l. who had own'd himself to be worth nothing; your Lordships may see it was not want of Knowledge how to make an Inquiry, that made his Lordship neglect it. It was because he never once concern'd himself, whether they had Substance or not. The Sum he himself was to receive, was his only Consideration, and therefore his only Care; for as Mr. Bennet has expressly declared, he never once asked him, either before or after his Admission, any one Question in order to be inform'd of his private Circumstances.

And yet, my Lords, these are the Men, whom his Lordship, as Mr. Waller has particularly sworn, thought fit in open Court, and while he was sitting in the sacred Seat of Truth and Justice, to declare Men of as great Fortune, Abilities and Skill, as had ever sat in that Court. I much more readily concur in the Truth of the other part of his Lordship's Declaration, and proved by the same Witness, That he had great Satisfaction in the having admitted most of the masters himself. The Reason Mr. Waller gave, in Answer to some quibbling Questions of his Lordship's, for his particularly remembering this remarkable Speech, is clear and convincing to every Man; That the Astonishment he was struck with at the Hearing, made him to remember it. And happy would it be for his lordship, was it possible ever to be forgotten!

But what could make the Earl of Macclesfield break out into this Panegyrick? A Reason so mean, and at the same time so gross, that I almost wonder even his Lord-Lordship would venture to act upon it in Publick. A Day or two before this happened, a master died, and a new Purchaser was to be invited.

I have just now mentioned the Satisfaction his Lordship had in the Sale of these Offices. The Effect of which was, that the Earl connived at and permitted the unjust Method that was practis'd, for the purchasing masters to pay the Price of their Offices, out of the money belonging to the Suitors of the Court. This Practice the Commons charge to have been notorious, and the Evidence produc'd to your Lordships proves that it was so. Godfrey, Conway, Kynaston, and Bennet swore, that this Circumstance induc'd them to become Purchasers; and indeed as to them, the Fact proves it self, even though they had not sworn it to be so. For they have both own'd, they were not able to buy without it; nay, they were so low that even the fifteen hundred Guineas, they paid the Earl himself, was out of the Suitors money. And thus far the Earl of Macclesfield himself has own'd in his Answer. But alas! That would prove nothing, if it was not accompanied with a Fact, that cannot be disbelieved; My Lords, He has repaid the Money!

After this, I think, I need not repeat the Evidence so minutely as to explain the particular method, in which this Fraud was transacted. The whole seems obviously calculated for no other End or Purpose, than to induce Persons of small Abilities to become Purchasers, by facilitating and making easy the method of Payment. And indeed it was so easy, that I wonder his Lordship did not meet with Persons, who would agree to give one half of the money, for an opportunity of running away with the other. And if they had, I do not see but his Lordship's Defence would have been just as good as it is now. Such a Price might with as much Reason be called a Perquisite, as his condescending to take but five or six thousand Guineas, when no one would give more. It is true my Lord Macclesfield does in his Answer say, that he was ignorant of this Practice, But I apprehend his Lordship to be as much mistaken in this, as he has been in other particulars: For, my Lords, it appears by Mr. Bennet's Evidence, that he not only knew of this Practice, but endeavour'd to conceal it.

It happened that when this Mr. Bennet delivered his Accounts to the Privy Council, he concluded with a very remarkable Article; Item, In the Hands of Persons of Ability and Honour, 9075 l. My Lord Macclesfield, at sight of this Particular, asks him the Reason of it; Mr. Bennet explains it, That as to 1575 l. he meant his Lordship, and as to the Residue, Mr. Hiccocks, of whom he bought, had detained so much of the Suitors money in his Hands, by way of Payment for his Place, and at the same time he complain'd to his Lordship of the Hardship with which he had been us'd. The Consideration that induc'd him to give so large a Price, was his being immediately to receive a very large Cash; and yet the first time he waited on Mr. Hiccocks for that purpose, he could get but 1500 l. and that upon the hard Terms of giving a Receipt for 9000 l. During this Conversation, Bennet swears, the Earl said with some Concern, That his Accounts were made up the worst way in the World, for every Body would now judge, that what he paid for his Office, came out of the Suitors Money, and that what had been so much suspected would be now discovered, and what he himself had taken so much Pains to deny, whenever he was asked the Question. After this his Lordship and Bennet enter into a serious Consultation, how to make up this Affair. The Chancellor bids him go to Mr. Hiccocks, to try what he would do. But it seems he could not be brought to do more, than to lend 2000 l. which Bennet absolutely refused, and insisted upon its being given him, or not at all. He reported this to the Earl, who displeas'd at it, said, Hiccocks should pay 2000 l. and that he himself would repay the 1575 l. but it should be in such a manner, as that Bennet should not know in what manner it was done. Most profound politicks this! Bennet afterwards told your Lordships, that he found the Earl intended to trick him out of this money; for several Times and Places were appointed for Payment, without any Effect. And therefore the Accounts were delivered in, and the Story comes out. Your Lordships certainly observ'd, that my Lord Macclesfield was very much offended with Mr. Bennet's Evidence, and therefore took care to cross examine him most accurately. But that Fatality which constantly attends Guilt, was so strong upon him, that the Answers given by this and almost every other Witness, to the Questions propos'd by the Earl, and his Counsel, evidently, as I apprehend, destroy his own Answer, and confirm our Accusation. But, my Lords, it is not only the Answers of the Witnesses, but even his Lordship's own Questions that afford Evidence against him. For to what part of the Charge am I now speaking? Why to that, wherein he is accus'd of knowing and endeavouring to conceal the Practice of paying the Purchase out of the Suitors money. And what does his Lordship ask! Did not you at this Meeting tell me, that if Hiccocks would pay 2000 l. you then would make up the rest your self? By his Lordship's own Confession therefore, Bennet was with the Earl upon this Occasion; they did talk upon the Subject, Bennet has inform'd your Lordships. Hiccocks retaining the Suitors money, was part of the Conversation. Else why should he pay 2000 l.? His Lordship did concert how to make up this Affair, and consequently how to conceal the whole. To this Question of the noble Lord's Bennet answers consistently with what he had said before, That he did not say, if Mr. Hiccocks would pay 2000 l. that then he would stand the rest. And the Reason he gives is good, He was not worth the Money. Your Lordships remember the other part of the Dialogue. I shall only add, that the Earl being angry at this Evidence, asks Mr. Bennet, And how could you, as an honest Man, offer to buy a place, when you were not worth the purchase Money? I submit to your Lordships, whether it was not as honest for him to buy without Money, as for his Lordship to sell without Right.

I have now stated to your Lordships the Fact, as to this scandalous Practice. And I think it can never be thought reasonable to suppose the Earl of Macclesfield only ignorant of what every one else knew: Or that he did not know of what he endeavour'd to conceal. And if it is certainly true, that the Office of Chancellor is an Office of the highest Trust, it is as true, that every wilful Neglect of what is necessary to be done, in order to discharge that Trust, is criminal. It cannot be doubted, but that this Practice was unjust, and fraudulent upon the Suitors of the Court. It cannot be doubted, but that the Earl of Macclesfield knew of this Practice. It cannot be doubted but that the Chancellor was the proper Person, because in Fact, he was the only Person, who could, ex Officio, either remedy or prevent this Abuse. What ought to be the Consequence of these Premises, the World will learn by your Lordships Judgment.

Hitherto, my Lord's, Avarice, uncorrupted Avarice! has been the only Principle of this Earl. In what follows, your Lordships will perceive Apprehension and Fear begin to mingle in all his Actions; and for this Reason the Bankruptcy of Dormer was to be concealed, that the Clamours of the World might be hushed. It has appeared in Proof to your Lordships, that upon Dormer's absconding, the Deficiency in his Office amounted to upwards of 52,000 l. for the Account upon the Table, which reduces the Ballance to 49,000 l. was made up long after the masters had been obliged to contribute their 500 l. each.— When Dormer run away, it is natural to imagine, that even this Chancellor should have turned his Thoughts to the Security of the Suitors: Not because it was his Duty so to do, but as Mr. Dormer was a master whom he had not had the Satisfaction to admit himself, he might with the more Security have given himself the Show at least, of acting vigorously in relation to his Affairs. By the Evidence that has been given it appears his Lordship's Behaviour was quite the Reverse; my Lord Macclesfield, instead of being Sollicitous for the Good of the Suitors, was apprehensive only of the loss that might happen to himself, by sinking the Price of Places, and thereby defeating that gainful Trade he carried on in the Sale of them. But this Thought was attended with another Consideration, that this open Acknowledgement of the Bankruptcy of one master might induce the World to suspect the Abilities of the rest, and as he best knew what Care, what Circumspection he had used upon their Admission, so he was determined to prevent an Incident of that kind. With these Views therefore every Step that was taken was mysterious, and the Deficiency itself with the utmost caution kept secret; so secret, that at last some of the masters themselves, his own masters, for that very Reason, refused to contribute any farther towards it. It is a bottomless Pit, says one; We know not what it is, says another.

The first Step the Earl took was to direct Mr. Rogers and Mr. Hiccocks to carry on a private Negotiation with Dormer, for his Return into England, assuring him in his Lordship's Name, that his Person should not be confin'd, provided he made an Assignment and Discovery of his Estate and Effects. Upon this Dormer returns, and executes an Assignment; but I do not find he was ever examin'd upon Interrogatories, or that any of his Creditors attended, in order to enquire into the Truth of his Discovery. Your Lordships observe, that the Promise of liberty was conditional; but Dormer, and the Earl, tho' for very different Reasons, were equally afraid of this Commitment; and therefore his Lordship took Care not to direct any Proceeding, that might lay him under a Necessity of doing it. If there was nothing else in the Case, this Behaviour was sufficiently Gross. But, my Lords, it was still worse; for Mr. Lightboun has acquainted your Lordships, that soon after Dormer's Failure, he waited on my Lord Macclesfield, and told him, that he suspected the Account given in by Dormer was not Fair and Just; and that therefore he ought to be committed for example's sake. This Witness added another Circumstance, that justifies what I have before suggested to your lordships, as the Reason of the Earl's Conduct. He says, that in this Conversation with his lordship he intimated and gave broad Hints of his suspecting the abilities of some of the other masters; he represented that the Year 1720 had been a very fatal Year, and might affect the masters as well as other People; that what had been might be, and several other matters of this Nature. Your Lordships remember the manner in which this evidence was given, there was an air of Probability and Truth, that appeared in it; he own'd indeed, when the Noble Earl ask'd the Question, for fear, I suppose, lest your lordships should want Proof of there having been such a Discourse, that he did not name any master in particular whom he suspected. He did not know how far an action might lie, and if known, it would make him unacceptable to his brethren, and himself might be made uneasy in his Office, and several other Reasons of that kind; and therefore he chose to express himself in general Terms. Your lordships will observe that the Earl was very early in this Resolution, some way or other to patch up this affair of Dormer's, so far at least, as to make it last his Time: For Mr. Kynaston has informed your lordships, that when he was in Treaty with Mr. Cottingham, to be admitted Successor to Mr. Borret, he objected this very Deficiency of Dormer's as a Reason why the Chancellor should not insist upon so large a Sum, since the Consequence of it must naturally lessen the Value of the Office. But he made light of it, and said, it would soon be made up. Mr. Edwards also, who succeeded Dormer, said he never would have bought the Office, if he had not been assured the Deficiency would have been made good. Here your lordships may also remember, that my lord Macclesfield, by cross-examining this Gentleman, laboured to prove, that the masters had actually agreed, in all events, to make good Dormer's effects. Mr. Edwards said, he could not say 'twas actually agreed, he hoped they would, and by Conversation he had had, imagined they were inclined so to do, &c. Upon this the Earl asked, From whom then had you those Assurances that it would be done? His lordship (ever fortunate in his Questions!) I believe was not well satisfied with the answer; for says Edwards, I had them from Cottingham and Godfrey. Their Names and Qualifications are well known to your lordships.

The next Step that was taken, relates to the Composition of a Debt of 24,046 l. due from one Wilson a Banker, to the estate of Mr. Dormer. This Composition the Commons do aver the Earl did direct and establish, in an unwarrantable and clandestine manner. On the other hand, my Lord Macclesfield does in his answer say, that it was done in the proper and usual manner: Your lordships will judge of the Truth between us. The Commons, to prove their Averment, have produced the original Instrument of Composition, by which it appears that this Debt of 24,000 l. was to be discharged for the Sum of 1463 l. in money, and an Assignment of 10,000 l. or a proportionable part of what should be recovered of a desperate Debt of 22,600 l. due from one Poulter (who also is a Bankrupt) to Wilson.

The Introduction to this Affair was thus; Mr. Edwards, to whom Dormer assigned his Effects, acquainted the Chancellor that Wilson proposed a Composition, but apprehended he had not Power to conclude any such Agreement. To this the Chancellor agrees, and therefore advised him to apply to the Court by way of Petition for that Purpose. Edwards followed this Advice, and petitioned. Upon which the Earl referred the matter to Mr. Hiccocks, who made his Report, which being annexed to another Petition, the Composition was confirmed. In the Answer which the Earl gave to the second Petition, these Words are inserted, Of which give Notice forthwith; To what Purpose these Words were inserted, I cannot comprehend, unless it was to deceive the poor master, who trusted him, into Ruin, by craftily laying a Groundwork for throwing the Blame of the whole upon him, unless he could divine to whom this Notice was to be given. For his Lordship took Care not to give any Directions, as to what Persons, or in what manner it should be done.—During this whole Transaction Wilson was never examined upon Interrogatories; No one Creditor ever summoned to attend; the Character of Poulter perfectly unknown, or by what they did know, they might have reasonably suspected what afterwards happened; No Knowledge of Wilson's Affairs but what he communicated himself; the first Proposal he made was accepted; no Consultation with any other of Wilson's Creditors; and to show how useful that might have been, it has been proved to your lordships, that Wilson has paid several of his Creditors their whole Debt.

This was the Care the Earl thought fit to take of the Suitors of the Court: Doubtless he imagin'd, that tho' more vigorous measures might secure more money, yet they might at the same Time make the Circumstances of the Court too publick; for, at the same Time his Lordship took abundant Caution to prevent any of these Particulars coming to the Knowledge of the Suitors, or of the World. For, my Lords, not one of these Facts appears upon any Record or Register whatsoever; the Whole was a private and clandestine Transaction between his Lordship, two or three masters and the Bankrupt himself. Your Lordships have a Certificate from the proper Officers for what I now say, That none of these Petitions, Reports, or Orders, were ever regularly drawn up, or filed.

My Lords, this Caution, this Secrecy, this Mystery, is a strange Way of proceeding for Justice and Equity; but, if the contrary be supposed to have been his Intentions, the Whole is of a Piece, natural and consistent.

Permit me, my Lords, once more to observe upon his lordship's Cross-Examinations. And, First, He very nicely examin'd Edwards, as to what he had receiv'd by virtue of this Composition; and certainly it receives a wonderful Justification from Mr. Edwards's owning that he received in October last 1000*l.* The next Point he examin'd to, was his lordship's Diligence in securing Dormer's Effects. The Commons brought Evidence to shew, that some of Dormer's Estate had been conceal'd, and, for ought I know, it may be true, that one Goodfellow, by his lordship's means, did give the Administrator (appointed since his lordship's Dismission) the first Notice of it. The Fact is, that a Parcel of old Hops, 500*l.* the worse for keeping, were not long since sold for the precise Sum of 100 Guineas. To which I shall only say, that I wonder his lordship chose to recal that Sum into your lordships memory.

My lord Macclesfield hitherto might possibly meet with the Approbation of those masters, on whom he vouchsafed to smile: Both he and they seem to have considered themselves as in an Interest separate, and quite opposite to that of the Suitors. His View was to keep the Circumstances of the Court secret, and to prevent any Thing that might happen to lessen his Profits in the Sale of Places: Theirs was to retain the money of the Court in their Hands, and for that Reason to hush any publick Clamour that might occasion the taking it away. I think I am not mistaken in this Conjecture, because I find his lordship himself was of the same Opinion: For this was the great Artifice and Machine, which his lordship employ'd, to terrify them into a Contribution of 500*l.* each, towards supplying the Deficiency of Dormer's Office. To shew how much this Custody of the money was in the masters Thoughts, your lordships will be pleas'd to remember, that all the masters own'd, that it made a very considerable Article in what they call'd, the Profits of their Places. Mr. Holford (on whom the only blemish I know, is the misfortune he has had of being a master) acknowledg'd, in answer to a Question propos'd by a Noble lord, That he understood it so; for he never propos'd to lock the Money up, but to employ it for his own Use. In fact, it was what the masters bought, and what the Chancellor sold, or rather, Widows, Orphans, Lunaticks, the Wards and Suitors of the Court were the wretched unhappy merchandise, in which the Earl of Macclesfield thought fit to deal. When Kynaston was to buy, he swears that Cottingham, or Rogers, or both, recommended it to him as being the Senior Office, and therefore the best. And Cottingham himself own'd, the first Day of this Trial, that he had acknowledg'd to a Committee of the House of Commons, that he said to Mr. Kynaston, You have purchased a very good Office; for there is a great deal of Money in it. But, my lords, the Thing proves itself: Consider the Nature of the Office, the attendance and labour that is required; deduct the unlawful Interest made of the Suitors money; how can the honest Fees (even supposing it lawful to sell) be worth 6, 7, 8, or 9000*l.* I leave this for my lord Macclesfield to explain, and shall at present take it for granted, that the masters esteem'd the Custody of the money to be part of their Bargain.

That there was, in fact, a Contribution by the masters of 500*l.* each, is evident from the Receipts now upon your lordships Table; and Mr. Holford fully explains the method that was taken to draw them into it. He received, soon after the Report of Dormer's Bankruptcy, an Order from Mr. Cottingham to prepare and bring in his Accounts to the Chancellor; soon after that, it was intimated to him, that a Contribution of 500*l.* was necessary towards supplying the Deficiency of Dormer: Upon which he paid his money, and his Accounts (tho' ready, as he swears expressly) were never afterwards called for.

Lightboun was another master, who received Orders to prepare his Accounts; but not paying his money, Cottingham, some short Time after Dormer broke, ask'd him if he had not heard of the Proposal to contribute 500*l.* Lightboun own'd he had: Cottingham then said, 'twas necessary to raise some money to go on, and that, if he contributed, possibly the money might be repaid. Still Lightboun was inflexible, and said it was a dangerous Step, and he would not pay the money. Upon this Refusal, he inform'd your lordships, that he was look'd upon as a very troublesome Fellow, among the masters, and little Arts were us'd to make him uneasy in his Office: But when this likewise prov'd ineffectual, the Earl himself, at last, condescended to talk with him, and in the beginning of the Year 1722, he was taken into his lordship's Study; and the Earl told him, he was sorry to hear he did not pay; desired him to consider the Consequences, and how dangerous it was, not to take Care of Dormer's Affair. Upon this, Lightboun still refus'd to pay, saying he did not know how far a Contribution of this Kind might be constru'd to be an Undertaking of the masters to answer one for the other: At the same Time he boldly and honestly represented to the Chancellor, how cautious his lordship ought to be; that this method was no Cure for the mischief; and that as to its being propos'd by the Senior masters, 'twas no Argument to him, and ought to raise some Jealousy in his lordship, since they were visibly endeavouring to withdraw from the Court, and came into a Project of this Kind, only to keep up the Credit of the Court, till they found an Opportunity of selling their Places at great Rates; and a great deal more to this Purpose; and concluded with a peremptory Refusal to contribute.

However, as the other masters paid their money, the Earl was not discourag'd, but depended upon it that some Time or other (as he told Mr. Edwards) he should be able to force Mr. Lightboun to comply and therefore, as he thought; he had by this means contriv'd a Fund to answer any Demands upon Mr. Dormer's Office, he went on, just as if there had been no Deficiency at all. By the Orders that have been read to your lordships, and by the Evidence of Mr. Edwards, who paid the money, it appears that he made several Orders for the Payment of money, without any Regard to that due Proportion all the Suitors of the Court were entitled unto. His lordship in his Answer says, It was not incumbent upon him, ex officio, to declare an Average. If it was not his Duty, my Lords, for God's sake, whose Duty was it? This is too gross to be a Sin of Ignorance. A Barrister of but a Term's standing knows, nay, it is obvious to the lowest Capacity, that where several Persons have Demands out of one Common Fund, and that Fund proves to be defective, all ought to be upon the same Foot, and be paid in an equal Proportion. Mr. Lightboun, Mr. Edwards, both represented to him the Hardship of one Creditor's receiving his whole Demand, and another Creditor, who had equal right, losing his whole Debt. The Reason therefore of this otherwise absurd Proceeding cou'd only be, that the Declaration of an Average wou'd publish that Deficiency to the World, which he had us'd so many Stratagems to conceal.

I cannot conclude this Part of the Evidence, which relates to that Criminal Design the Earl carried on of concealing this Deficiency, and of deceiving the Suitors of the Court, without reminding your lordships of one other Instance of this noble Earl's great Regard for Truth and Veracity. Mr. Atwood, who was the Solicitor in the Cause of Harper and Case, in which the Deficiency of Dormer being mentioned, the Earl took occasion to declare, That indeed he had heard of the Deficiency, but nothing of it had ever come judicially before him; and that he knew nothing of it but as publick News. This, my Lords, was after he had paid 1000*l.* towards it himself. After what I have said, I shall not attempt to aggravate this Prostitution of the Seat of Justice. But this did not satisfy his lordship: That his Dissimulation might for ever remain upon Record, he thought fit to pronounce an Order, that is now upon your lordships Table, and dated no longer ago than in December last; in which he directs the masters to enquire, whether there was any Deficiency in Dormer's Office; and whether the Suitors were likely to lose any Part of their Money, or not.

Your lordships know the Contract that was made between the Chancellor and the masters: I therefore shall not waste your Time in mentioning Evidence to prove, that they, who gave such vast Prices for the Custody of the money, did not neglect the Opportunity of employing it for their own Use. The Proof is but too visible: They who are rich, confess it; and they who are poor, dare not deny it: It was the necessary Consequence of his lordship's Extortion; and that put it out of his Power, to take those Measures that were necessary to prevent that Practice. The misfortunes of the South-Sea Year were so universal, that surely any Man of even common Sense would have been upon his Guard: My Lord Macclesfield knew, that these masters gam'd with the Suitors money themselves, or for an extravagant Interest lent it to those who did: He knew that this was the Occasion of Dormer's Deficiency: He knew that the other masters had it still in their Power to do the same; therefore he permitted it: He took no measures to prevent it; therefore he encouraged it.

But what could engage this Earl (whose Understanding is no wise question'd) after so fatal a Year, thus to risque his own Character; and what perhaps he values more, his own Fortunes not only upon the Understanding, the Integrity, but even the good Fortune of a parcel of Men, whom he had thus pick'd up, without either Enquiry or Care? My Lords, as the Borrower is to the Lender, so a corrupt Chancellor is the Servant of his confederate Officers. He durst not put a stop to their Practices (tho' his own Estate was embarked with theirs) lest Resentment and Revenge should make 'em discover the infamous Secrets, with which they were entrusted. How durst he demand Security from those whom he had admitted, knowing they were able to give none? Surely, my lords, no Reason, but such as I have now mention'd, cou'd induce his lordship to neglect (and a long neglect amounts to a Refusal) the obliging these masters to give Security, or else to call them to a strict Account, as to their Cash and Securities, after he had been inform'd by Mr. Lightboun, that some even of the masters were to be suspected. But Mr. Lightboun this Day went farther; he represented the Danger of trusting Men with such vast Sums: That this Credit had been the Occasion of all the Losses in the Court, and therefore propos'd a Scheme of Security, to prevent any Losses for the future. The Chancellor did not absolutely reject this Proposal; that was too gross even for himself: He therefore desires Mr. Lightboun to put it in Writing: 'Tis done; and his lordship most carefully kept it by him for two Years, without taking any notice of it. But, my lords, there is one Circumstance in this Neglect, that in Equity (and surely a Chancellor will not decline to be try'd by that Rule) makes his lordship answerable for a very large Sum in one Case only, without entring into any the other Consequences of his Crime. Mr. Kynaston, your lordships remember, was prov'd to be deficient in the Sum of 26,000 odd hundred Pounds; and yet, my lords, this very Kynaston did, in the Year 1722, propose to his lordship, to give land, or other Security, for the Effects with which he was entrusted. I know his lordship will object what this Gentleman has before sworn, in relation to his own Circumstances: But what is it to the Suitors, whose Land it is, provided it be pledg'd for their Safety? What Answer, my Lords, must we give to our Fellow-Subjects, those unhappy People, who are undone, I will not say by Kynaston's and the other masters Deficiency, but his lordship's own wilful Neglect? I will not take up any more of your lordships Time upon this Head. In what I have already mention'd, it is proved, notwithstanding what the Earl in his Answer says to the contrary, that he knew the masters converted the money of the Suitors to their own Use. And he himself owns, that he did not insist upon any Security from them. In a late Order of his own making, he has recited it not to be usual in the Court of Chancery, Chancery, for the masters to give Security; and therefore in his Answer covers himself under the Practice of his Predecessors. My Lords, the Reasonableness and Necessity of Security depends upon the Greatness of the Trust committed, and the Qualities of the Persons intrusted. In Dr. Edisbury's Case, tho' there was a Stop, yet there was no loss, for his Estate prov'd sufficient to answer all Demands. And therefore his lordship's Argument, in my Apprehension, amounts to this, That because his Predecessors did not insist upon Security from Persons who wanted none, therefore he might justly entrust those who were able to give none.

My Lords, I am come to the last Head of our Charge, and your Lordships will now see the Earl of Macclesfield abandon'd to all his Fears! Even Avarice forsakes him! The Dread of a Parliamentary Inquiry sits heavy on his Mind; and I firmly believe, he now repents his having illegally taken this money, because he parts with it to prevent, if possible, that Punishment he most justly deserves for having received it. He finds all his Arts in vain to hinder his Practices being known to the World; and therefore his whole Study is now bent how to ward off their coming into Parliament.

The first Instance of this appears in the Case of Mrs. Chitty. The Fact is thus: An Order was made for the Payment of 1000*l.* to her, Part of a Sum upwards of 11,000*l.* belonging to her, and which had been paid into the Hands of Mr. Dormer. She, it seems, assigns this Order to a very importunate Solicitor, one Mr. Lockman, who, as he has told your Lordships, diligently pursu'd the Chancellor from London to Kensington, from Kensington to Westminster-Hall, and the Court of Chancery it self. He represented to his Lordship the Circumstances he was in; that he had compounded some South-Sea Contracts, and absolutely wanted, and insisted upon his money to compleat his agreement, and set himself at Liberty. The Chancellor finding himself so press'd, was at last forc'd to promise him, that he would take care to get the money paid. Upon this he summons a meeting of the masters, in order to persuade them to pay the money, by a Contribution of fifty Pounds each; and in the mean while it had been given out among them, that such a Contribution was expected. Cottingham himself, as Mr. Lightboun says, told it to him, and at the same time made a fresh Demand of the old Sum of 500*l.* and ask'd him what Answer he would send to the Chancellor? Lightboun prudently replies, he would deliver his Answer himself; and in the mean while he applies to the other masters, tells them the ill Consequences of what they had done, and works them all up to a Resolution not to comply with this fresh Demand. He desires 'em not to give the Chancellor false Hopes, but to speak their mind freely. And thus prepared, they all repair to his Lordship's House. I need not upon this Occasion repeat the Names of the Witnesses, for all the masters present concur in giving the same Testimony. His Lordship began the Conference with asking Mr. Lightboun, in a very angry Tone and manner, why he did not pay his 500*l.*? Who reply'd, he had often told his lordship the Reason, and that he neither cou'd nor wou'd pay, and was confirm'd in his Resolution, by his having since heard all, or most of his Brethren repent of their Compliance. The Earl, without regarding Lightboun's Reason, propos'd the Necessities of the Court to the other masters, in relation to this 1000*l.* The masters not seeming willing to comply, he us'd many Arguments to persuade 'em to it: He desires 'em to consider the consequences; the occasion presses, and Clamours grow strong; and if this Affair was not taken care of, Dormer's Deficiency must break out; and therefore what he propos'd, was the only way to prevent a Parliamentary Inquiry: Upon this Lightboun interpos'd, and said. If it was so, he could not help it: That he had rather lose the keeping of the money and Securities; than hold it upon those Terms. The Chancellor reply'd, But that is not the worst: Suppose the House of Commons should in a Committee of Justice resolve, that your Offices relate to the Administration of Justice; that the buying them is contrary to the Statute of Edward VI. and therefore forfeited. Consider (says he) tho' it may affect me, as to the Disposal of these Places for the future, yet it will affect you much more in the Loss of your Places; and therefore, upon the whole, desired them to agree to the Contribution. My Lords, the Masters were Proof against his Lordship's Eloquence, and seriatim refus'd to comply. Upon which the Earl was struck, and with a vast concern said, Then I will pay it my self. What Guilt, what Fear, must this Noble Earl be sensible of, thus to part with that money he had so sacrific'd his Honour to get! In this manner the Earl parted with his masters, and Lockman returns again to the Charge; and at last, meeting the Chancellor in the Room behind the Chancery Court, he got a Promise from him, that Mr. Cottingham shou'd pay the 1000*l.* But at the same Time his lordship (I suppose to get rid of so troublesome a Suitor) advis'd him not to engage with the Widow Chitty; for if her money in the Court of Chancery was all her Fortune, that Sum was all she was like to have. Soon after this, Cottingham paid the money. But it seems he forgot to desire Lockman to keep the Secret; so he told it about so much, that Cottingham meeting him rebuk'd him for it, saying, Can't you fare well, but you must cry Roast Meat? Your Lordships undoubtedly remember, that the Earl endeavoured to shew, by Cross-examining, that he had generously given this 1000*l.* to Mr. Lockman, out of meer Charity and Compassion to his miserable Circumstances. Lockman reply'd very reasonably, that his Circumstances were not so low as to want his Charity; for he might have discounted the Order; and he did not think it a Favour that he was paid his own.

The Evidence I have now last mention'd to your lordships, even without the Assistance of other Proof, almost maintains the whole Charge. By the Testimony of a Cloud of Witnesses his lordship here confesses the Sale of Offices, and owns that Sale to be illegal: He acknowledges his being acquainted with Dormer's Deficiency; and at the same time endeavours to conceal it: He in a manner confesses his own Guilt, pronounces Sentence upon himself, and therefore proposes methods to prevent a Parliamentary Inquiry.

But, my lords, there is still more behind: There is not only a Connection among the Articles, but the Crimes charg'd in 'em rise upon each other. Hitherto his Deceit has extended only to the Subject, but now he attempts the Throne it self. His Majesty graciously directed an Inquiry to be made into the Disorders of the Court of Chancery. His lordship knew that this dutiful House of Commons wou'd not interpose in the Affair, till his Majesty's Commands were obey'd, and therefore he now summons all his Arts and Skill to ward the Blow, and deceive his his Majesty into a Belief, that the World had taken a false Alarm; and that the Circumstances, of the Masters were much better than they were represented to be: That they were able to answer all Demands; and that consequently the Suitors of the Court were not in any Danger. His Agents are sent among the masters, to encourage them to stand by each other; that they should make a bold stand, and defeat the Designs of their Enemies. He himself becomes their Counsellor, and advises, and (without Inquiry, or Regard to either Truth or Justice) he persuades them to make such a Subscription to their Accounts, as might mislead the Council in any Report they should make to his Majesty.

All his Thoughts, Counsels, and Measures, are now swift and precipitate. Your Lordships have heard Evidence of the several Discourses of Cottingham and Dixon; the meeting of the masters at Mr. Edwards's, and the last Conference with the Chancellor himself; all within two or three Days of each other, and all tending to the same End of deceiving the King, and preventing the Parliament. My Lords, all the masters concur in the meeting at the Chancellor's House; when, it seems, his Lordship, upon considering their several Accounts, declared his Approbation of Mr. Holford's Subscription; and without any the least Inquiry into their Abilities and Circumstances, he advis'd them all to make the same Subscription as Mr. Holford had done.

Your Lordships have likewise heard it prov'd, that the masters, in order to make a Shew, were advis'd to assist and stand by each other. Bennet and Conway are both Instances of this Counsel's being put in Practice; and—— But why should I abuse your lordships' Patience with particularly recapitulating the Evidence that has been this Day given? I observ'd the Attention with which it was heard, and any Thing I can say, will only weaken that Impression it must naturally have left on your Lordships' mind. I shall therefore conclude the Whole with an Observation from the Parliament-Roll of Henry IV. Complaints and Subsidies belong to the Commons, Judgments belong to the Lords, and Redress is the Glory of the Crown.

My Lords, The Commons have now discharg'd their Duty; they have declar'd their Grievances, explain'd the Crimes, and produc'd the Offender. They are assur'd the King will of his Fatherly Goodness, grant a just Redress, and apply a proper Remedy; and they doubt not but your Lordships will pronounce a righteous Judgment.

Then the House adjourned to Wednesday next, at Ten of the Clock in the Forenoon.

Wednesday, May 12. The fifth Day.

THE Lords being seated in their House, the Serjeant at Arms made Proclamation for Silence; as also another Proclamation, That all Persons concerned were to take Notice, that Thomas Earl of Macclesfield now stood upon his Trial, and they might come forth, in order to make good the Charge.

L. C. J. King. Gentlemen, You that are Counsel for the Earl of Macclesfield, may now proceed.

Mr. Serj. Probyn.

May it please your Lordships,

I HAVE the Honour to be Counsel for the Noble Lord within your Bar, the E. of Macclesfield, who stands impeach'd for high Crimes and Misdemeanors in the Name of all the Commons of Great Britain.

My Lords, When I consider the Importance of this Charge, in respect to the Noble Earl impeach'd, the great Experience and wise Conduct of the several Gentlemen of the House of Commons, who are intrusted to manage the Prosecution, and the great Variety of Arguments they have used to enforce and aggravate their Charge, it is with the utmost Concern that I presume to appear before your Lordships in his Defence; not but that I am well assured of the Truth and Justice, the Strength and Fulness of the Defence which may be made in his behalf, but out of real Consciousness of my own Inability to discharge so great a Trust.

Unequal to it I should have been, had the longest Time been allowed me to prepare myself; but I shall now appear much less capable, having so very little, so few Days Notice of your Lordships' Pleasure in appointing me for that Service.

If therefore I shall be so unhappy, as to offer any Thing in this Case less proper, or correct, than might otherwise be expected from me, I hope I shall obtain your lordships' greater Indulgence.

The Offences, which are charged to be committed by the Noble Earl impeach'd, are contained in many Articles, no less than twenty one in the whole; but the Gentlemen of the House of Commons have been pleas'd to wave several of them, and, I hope, when your Lordships have heard us, and our Evidence, you will be pleas'd to acquit him of all the rest.

These Articles have been conceived with the greatest Caution, and opened with the greatest Art, heighten'd with every Circumstance that may induce Resentment, and urged against the Noble Earl impeach'd with a particular Zeal, well becoming the great Concern which those Gentlemen always shew for what they apprehend the Publick Service, and the faithful vigorous Discharge of the great Trust reposed in them by the House of Commons.

The impeach'd Earl is pursued back from his late Resignation of the High Office of Lord Chancellor, through every Stage of Publick Life; and, with inquisitive Eyes, they have also view'd and pry'd into even his most private Transactions, so as not even the least Indiscretion has passed unobserved.

Some Actions, which in themselves are truly innocent, and are declared to be so by the constant uniform Practice of all the Great and Honourable Persons that have gone before him, are here represented as highly culpable.

Others, which we humbly apprehend, are not only innocent, but commendable and meritorious, even his personal Acts of Charity, are imputed to him as Crimes.

But in one Respect I must beg leave to congratulate the impeach'd Earl, and think it is his great Felicity, that in this so publick an Examination, so strict and rigid a Scrutiny into his whole Conduct, at least ever since he was first advanced to the Great Seal, there is not one Objection made, one Instance given of Corruption, Partiality, or Oppression, in his own personal Administration of Justice; and therefore, I hope, I may well conclude (since it is admitted by the Prosecutors themselves) that he has deny'd Justice to no Man, he has delay'd Justice to no Man, he has sold Justice to no Man.

The principal Objection that seems to be rely'd on by the learned Managers, and the only one which I humbly apprehend can any Way affect the impeach'd Earl in the present Case, is, that possibly he may have been too easily lead into a good Opinion of some Persons, who in the Eye of the World appeared appeared to be Men of good Substance, and fair Reputation, Persons that were recommended to him by others of undoubted Honour and Credit; that he has admitted these Persons into Offices of great Trust and Profit under him; and they have at length been found not to have deserved the good Opinion, which he at first had been persuaded to entertain of them.

Some of these Officers have been negligent, others unfaithful in the Discharge of their Duty; and in their Crimes 'tis now attempted to involve the impeach'd Earl as their Principal and Patron.

And, in regard the principal Complaints against the noble Earl are founded upon the Disposition of the Offices of Masters in Chancery, therefore it has been thought necessary (in the Preamble of the Articles exhibited) to represent the Masters in Chancery as Officers of very great Trust, sworn to serve the King and his People, and associated to the Lord Chancellor by particular Commissions, for his Assistance in the due Administration and Execution of Justice.

My Lords, what Use Masters in Chancery might formerly be of, and what Assistance to the Lord Chancellor they might antiently give, I know not; but at present they seem to be of very little Advantage to him in the Determination of Causes in Court.

They sit indeed in Court, at proper Distances, on each side the Chancellor, and sedulously attend his Motions, but never pretend to advise or interpose in Judgment.

They have likewise the Honour to be named in Commissions of Association to the Lord Chancellor; but the whole Body are not always named in such Commissions, but only such particular Persons as his Majesty is pleased to think fit: And this appears from one of the oldest Commissions that has been produced and read before your Lordships, I think it was the Commission granted to Robert Southwell and others the 9th of October, 4 Edw. VI. wherein there were not more than four or five of the Masters named; tho' I believe in the later Commissions their Names are usually all inserted. But what Power or Authority is given them by this Commission? None at all, that they can execute of themselves in the Absence of the Master of the Rolls, or some of the learned Judges named therein; for the Judges and the Master of the Rolls are only included in the Quorum.

But, my Lords, Commissions of this Kind are not uncommon: Clerks of Assize, and other Officers, are named in the Commissions of Association to the Judges of Assize, in their respective Circuits, yet act as ministerial Officers only under them.

And I humbly apprehend, that in this Case it has been sufficiently proved before your Lordships, by a Gentleman (that was once a very good Master in Chancery) that they now pretend to exercise no judicial Authority whatsoever.

They examine and state such particular Matters and Facts, as the Court is pleased to refer to them, for its better Information, and which the Court itself has not Time to look into; they settle Accounts depending between the Suitors of the Court; they look into, and take Counsel's Opinions upon Titles of Estates bought and sold by Order of the Court; and they tax Costs.

This seems to be their principal Concern; and yet, in this they are not absolute Judges, they determine nothing finally; for when they have made such Enquiry as the Court directs them, they only certify their Opinions of the several Matters referred to them by way of Report, which Report is not conclusive to the Parties; for either of the Parties that thinks himself aggrieved by such Report, may take Exception to it; and the Court, on hearing such Exception, will controul the Master's Report, and determine as they think Just. And in case the Parties themselves do not controvert the Matter reported, but totally acquiesce and submit to it, yet is not the Master's Report a final Judgment, nor will bind the Parties thereto, till it be afterwards confirmed by the Order of the Court: It receives its Authority and Sanction from the Order of the Court, and has none without it.

But it was certainly very rightly judged by the learned Managers, and they have thought it very material for them, to advance the Reputation of these Offices, in order to make it more penal to have any Present or Compliment made to the Great Seal, upon the Admission or Resignation of the Masters.

Another Observation was made by one of the learned Gentlemen of the House of Commons, in relation to their general Charge, which is this; They charge, that the Earl, in or about May, One thousand seven hundred and eighteen, by the great Grace and Favour of his Majesty, was constituted Lord Chancellor, and did thereupon take the usual Oath for the due Execution of that Office, and such other Oaths as have been accustomed; in order, as I conceive, to insinuate that he had acted contrary to, or in Violation of some particular Oath which had been administer'd to him.

The Earl in his Answer admits, That on the fourteenth of May, One thousand seven hundred and eighteen, he took the Oath of Office as Chancellor, which is set forth in his Answer; that at the same Time he took the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, but no Oath of Office, except that above set forth.

To this Part of the said Earl's Answer, the learned Managers are pleased to object, That the Oath prescribed by the Statute of Richard the Second, had been frequently administer'd to the noble Earl, but that he had forgotten that Oath in his Answer, as well as in his Conduct and Practice.

And to prove this Fact, Mr. Eyre (one of the Officers of the Exchequer) was produc'd, on whose Evidence it did appear (as we apprehend the Fact truly is) that when the Honourable Privy Council are annually assembled in the Court of Exchequer, to prepare a List of Names of proper Persons to be presented to his Majesty, for his Choice of Sheriffs for the Year ensuing, and the Judges then also attending, one of the Officers of the Court reads over the very Words of the Statute of Richard the Second in French, and then the Bible is presented to the noble Lords, and others of the Privy Council, and also to the Judges present, which they kiss, and then proceed to the Nomination of the Sheriffs for the several Counties in England.

My Lords, I must observe that upon this Occasion no formal Oath is administer'd, in pursuance of this Act of Parliament; nor any Entry or Record made of any Oath taken by all or any of the Persons present.

The Words of the Act of Parliament are, That the Chancellor, Treasurer, and other great Officers therein named, the Justices of the one Bench, and of the other, the Barons of the Exchequer, and others, who shall be called to ordain or make Justices of Peace, Sheriffs, or other Officers therein named, or any other Officers or Ministers of the King, shall be firmly sworn that they shall not ordain, name, or make such Officers for any Gift or Brokage.

This Act of Parliament doth direct an Oath to be administer'd, tho' the precise Form of the Oath is not prescribed.

But the Act of Parliament it self can't be called that Oath which itself directs; nor the reading or hearing that Act of Parliament read, be called the administering or taking that Oath: The Oath must be something distinct from the Act of Parliament which directs it.

Therefore, my Lords, I humbly submit it to your Lordships, that the reading of this Act of Parliament, upon this particular Occasion, is rather used as a particular Exhortation or Admonition to that August Assembly, how they ought to demean themselves in that single Instance of their Duty (the Choice of Sheriffs) than to have an universal Obligation in respect to the Nomination of all other Officers in general.

If this was intended to be administer'd as an Oath of Office, then being once taken by any Person in Office, it need not be taken again, during the same Person's Continuance in the same Office; but this Act of Parliament is annually read over upon the Return of every Election of Sheriffs, and seems to be particularly applicable to that Duty.

Sheriffs are indeed very great Officers, have whole Counties under their Influence and Jurisdiction; and therefore very singular Care ought to be taken in their Nomination.

The Chief Justices and Judges present upon that Occasion, use the same Ceremony of Kissing the Book; and if this should be interpreted an Oath, it would be of great Extent, and the Consequence of that must be, that the best Offices should have no Candidates for them; for the latter Part of the Oath, directed by this Act, is, That none, who pursueth by him, or by other, privily or openly, to be in any manner of Office, shall be put in the same Office, or any other.

So, if this be consider'd as an Oath, every one of the great Persons that have taken it, must be indispensably obliged not to give any Office to any Person that hath even ask'd, or made Application by himself, or any one in his Behalf, for that or any other Office whatsoever.

If this Construction, which is now contended for, was admitted, a great many Persons might be thought guilty of Perjury, who themselves never apprehended it; and how far the Guilt of this Perjury may be extended, is not easy to determine.

But, my Lords, it is not the noble Earl's Intention to incur the Censure of quibbling himself out of the Obligation of an Oath, or the Letter of an Act of Parliament; we beg leave to insist, that in whatever Light this Transaction is taken, it can't be constru'd to be the taking an Oath within the Intention of the Charge contain'd in the present Articles, which is, That he took the Oath of Office, and such other Oaths as have been of Right accustom'd.

This Charge, my Lords, must be confined to some reasonable Time, wherein these other Oaths charged must be suppos'd to be taken: I apprehend it can relate to such Oaths only, as the noble Earl took at the same Time, when the general Oath of Office was administer'd to him.

And the Earl, by his Answer, certainly understood it in this Sense; otherwise, to make a compleat Answer to so general a Charge, he must have been under a Necessity, to have set forth all the Oaths which he hath taken in his whole Life-time; at least, since his first Oath as Chancellor.

He took the Oath of Office as Chancellor the fourteenth of May, One thousand seven hundred and eighteen; this Proceeding in the Exchequer is proved to be in November following: Who would understand that this Charge intended to couple two Transactions together, that in themselves were so distinct and remote?

Having thus endeavoured to remove these Objections, which seem to be no Part of the Charge, but only used as introductory to it, I shall now proceed to the Charge itself.

The first and general Charge is, That the said Earl, not regarding the Obligation of his Oath, or the Duty of his Office, but, entertaining wicked and corrupt Designs and Views to procure himself exorbitant Profit, by divers unjust and oppressive Practices, whilst he continued in the Office of Chancellor, did illegally, corruptly, and extorsively, take and receive to his own private Use great Sums of Money, in Breach of his Oath, and Violation of his Duty as Lord Chancellor.

This is insisted on by the Gentleman, who first spoke, as an offence of the deepest Dye, which strikes at the very Root and Foundation of all Civil Government; and to render it more odious, it is introduced as an Act of the highest Ingratitude to his Majesty, as well as injurious and oppressive to his Subjects. To demonstrate this, it is represented, that upon the said Earl's being appointed Lord Chancellor, in May, One thousand seven hundred and eighteen, his Majesty was pleased, of his Grace and Bounty, to bestow upon him the Sum of fourteen thousand Pounds in Money, and to grant him several other yearly Pensions and Payments, which another Gentleman (in observing the Evidence given on this Head) was pleased to say, did, together with the usual Salary, Fees, and Profits, belonging to the Office, amount unto near ten thousand Pounds per Ann. and this was strongly urg'd as enough to satiate the Appetite of the most Avaricious, and prevent any illegal and corrupt Extortions of other Sums from his Majesty's Subjects.

To this, my Lords, we hope your Lordships will think the noble Earl has put in a very plain and satisfactory Answer.

That he had, for several Years before his Advancement to the Great Seal, the Honour of serving his Majesty in the Office of Chief Justice of the Court of King's-Bench; and as a Reward for good and faithful Services in that high Office, his Majesty, out of his Royal Grace and Favour, upon the 10th of March, One thousand seven hundred and fifteen, was pleased to advance him to the Dignity of a Peer of this Realm; and for the better Support of that Honour, to grant him a Pension of twelve hundred Pounds per Annum, and to declare his Royal Intentions of giving the said Earl's eldest Son an Office of considerable Profit, when Opportunity should offer.

That in May, One thousand seven hundred and eighteen, his Majesty was pleased to appoint him Lord Chancellor; on the 14th of the said Month of May, he took the usual Oath of Office, and at the same Time the Oath of Supremacy and Allegiance, and no other Oath of Office.

That during the Time he continued in the Office as Lord Chancellor, he enjoy'd the usual Salary, Fees, and Perquisites, which Mr. Pynsent (who was called as a Witness to this Particular) proved to be about eleven or twelve hundred Pounds per Annum.

That his Majesty also granted to him the Salary of four thousand Pounds per Annum, during his Continuance in that Office; which was not particular in his Case, but constantly granted to, and enjoyed by all his Predecessors.

That to this, his Majesty was further pleased to sign a Warrant to him for fourteen thousand Pounds, as mention'd in the Articles; whereof two thousand Pounds was the usual Allowance to other Lord Chancellors, or Keepers, towards the Expences in entering upon the Office; and the rest was his Majesty's Royal Munificence, and received as such.

The Noble Earl likewise admits, that his Majesty was also pleased to grant his only Son, then going to travel, a yearly Pension of twelve hundred Pounds, determinable upon his Majesty's granting him one of the Offices of Teller of the Exchequer for Life; which was accordingly granted, and he came into the Possession of it, in One thousand seven hundred and nineteen, whereby that Pension determined; so that the yearly Payments to his Lordship were but six thousand four hundred Pounds per Annum, besides the Pension of twelve hundred Pounds to his Son, which soon after determined, upon his coming into Possession of his present Office.

This is all the Revenue which the Noble Earl received during his Continuance in this great Office: And, I humbly presume, this can't be thought excessive, considering the great Fatigues, Difficulties, and Expences, that necessarily attend the Execution of this high Office: Perhaps other Offices might be found, that are less difficult in the Execution, and yet superior in Profit.

But, my Lords, the Objection does not seem to turn that way; but rather, that this Noble Lord, not contented with these several Instances of Royal Grace and Bounty, illegally, corruptly, and extorsively took and received other great Sums from other Persons to his own Use.

This the Noble Earl expressly denies, and says, That during his Continuance in the Office of Chancellor, or at any other Time, he never once had a Design or View, or even a wish, to raise to himself any exorbitant Gain or Profit, much less to extort Money by any unjust or oppressive Methods whatsoever.

And indeed, my Lords, this is a Charge that gives the Noble Earl at once the greatest Trouble and Surprise; he never suspected a Crime of this Sort, so contrary to his Nature, and the whole Tenor of his Life, could ever be objected to him: And to shew that this is without any Foundation of Truth, the present Circumstances of his Family and Fortune (when laid before your Lordships) will abundantly demonstrate and convince Mankind, that he is not that rich, that avaricious, and corrupt Man, he is represented.

As he has received large Bounties from his Majesty, he has been abundantly liberal to Persons that were proper Objects of Charity; and his Purse has been always open to succour and relieve the Distressed.

This, my Lords, brings me on to the material and principal Part of the Charge, which is, That he did illegally, corruptly, and extorsively take and receive to his own private Use great Sums of money, in Breach of his Oath, and Violation of his Duty as Lord Chancellor.

The Instances given of this corrupt taking of money refer to the several Sums mentioned in the five Articles, which the Gentlemen of the House of Commons were pleased first to enter upon, and which relate to the several Sums of money received from the four masters in Chancery, mentioned in the fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth Articles, and the Clerk of the Custodies mentioned in the ninth.

If the Charge contained in these several Articles be a Crime, it must appear to be so in its own Nature; to be an Offence at Common Law; or made such by some Act of Parliament. I submit it to your Lordships that taking a Present, or taking money from Persons upon their Recommendations or Nominations into Offices, though they do concern the Administration or Execution of Justice, is not a Crime in its own Nature; it is no Act of Immorality; it is no Act of Injustice to any Man; for no Person has any particular Right to these Offices, but his Advancement must be owing to the Favour or Friendship of him, who has the Right and Power of Nomination: And if the Office itself be valuable, so is the Right of Nomination to it, and may be esteemed as Part of the Estate of that Person to whom it belongs. And if we consider it in this Light, I think it can't be denied but that every Man has a natural Right to dispose of his own Estate or Interest, his own Friendship or Favour, upon what Consideration he pleases: It is his own, and therefore he has a Right to make any just and legal Advantage of it.

From hence, my Lords, I would beg leave to infer that the taking a Gratuity or Sum of Money from any Person, upon his Nomination to one of these Offices, is not criminal in itself, if simply considered, and distinct from the Good or Evil Consequences that possibly may attend it.

And, in the next Place, I humbly submit it to your Lordships, that it is not a necessary Consequence, that every one that buys an Office, must and will behave himself either unfaithfully or corruptly in it. Instances may be given, and those very antient ones, of Offices of Justice, Offices of the highest Character in the Administration of Justice, that have been purchased, and purchased from the Crown.

In Mr. Madox's History of the Exchequer, Page 43. we find that Richard Fitz-Allured, in the Time of King Stephen, fined fifteen Marks of Silver, that he might sit with Ralph Bassett to hold the King's Pleas; and in Page 743. of this Book it appears, that Ralph Bassett was the King's Justicier. Here we see one of the Justices of the King's Bench purchasing his Office for fifteen Marks in Silver.

And

And in the same Page of the said Book it appears, that in the seventh Year of King John, Walter de Gray gave the King five thousand Marks pro habenda Cancellaria Domini Regis tota vita sua, & pro habenda inde Charta Domini Regis.

These, my Lords, are great Instances what the antient Usage was, in purchasing even the highest Offices of Justice.

Inferior Offices were doubtless disposed of in the same manner; and if this had been thought Criminal, we should have had some Instances in our Law Books, wherein they would have appeared to have been adjudged so.

I beg your Lordships leave to consider in the next Place, and that very briefly, whether this can be taken to be criminal within the Words of the Statute of Edward VI. which has been taken Notice of by some of the learned Managers.

By the 5th and 6th of Edw. VI. c. 16. it is Enacted, That if any Person or Persons shall at any Time thereafter bargain and sell any Office or Offices, or take any Money, Fee, or Reward, or any other Profit, directly or indirectly, for any Office or Offices, which shall in any wise touch or concern the Administration of Publick Justice; All and every such Person and Persons that shall so bargain and sell, or take any Money, Fee, or Reward, for such Office or Offices, shall not only lose his Right, Interest and Estate in such Office or Offices, but also every Person and Persons that shall give or pay any Sum of Money, Reward, or Fee, shall be adjudged a disabled Person in the Law, to have, occupy, and enjoy the said Office or Offices.

This is the Purport of this Act of Parliament, so far as it relates to the Offence charged in these Articles; and I apprehend it cannot be extended to the present Case.

Here are no prohibitory Words that Persons shall not bargain and sell Offices, nor any Words declaratory that they could not do so before, by Common Law.

And all Penal Laws are to be construed favourably for the Benefit of the Subject, and not extended beyond the Letter.

But on the contrary, by the many Provisoes after contained in this Act of Parliament, it is plain that all Offices, before the making of this Act, might be bought and sold without Offence; and many Offices are authorized and intended by the express Provisoes of this Act, to continue to be bought and sold for the future.

For by the first Proviso in this Act, it is declared not to extend to any Office of Inheritance; which is an express Declaration that Offices of Inheritance were to be bought and sold even after the Act should take place.

The second Proviso I apprehend is stronger to our Purpose; for by that it is declared, That this Act shall not extend to any Contract made or agreed before the first of March then next, but all such Bargains and Contracts to be good, as if the Act had never been made.

And, my Lords, there is yet a further Proviso, That this Act, or any Thing therein contained, shall not extend, or be prejudicial, or hurtful to any of the chief Justices of the King's Courts, commonly called the King's Bench and Common Pleas, or to any of the Justices of Assize, as now be, or hereafter shall be, but that they and every of them may do in every behalf, touching and concerning any Office or Offices to be given or granted by them, as they, or any of them, might have done before the making of this Act, any Thing therein contained to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.

What is that which these great Officers of Justice might have done before the making this Act? They might have given, granted, bargained, or sold, the respective Offices under them, in such manner as they thought fit; and by this Proviso they may continue do so still.

What Alteration then is made in the Law by this Act of Parliament? Here is no new Offence created, but a particular Penalty given, to be inflicted on all that shall buy or sell Offices, not contained in any of the subsequent Provisoes; that is, the Contract made between the Buyer and Seller is declared void: The Party selling loses his Estate and Interest in the Office; and the Party buying is render'd incapable to hold and enjoy it.

In Castle's Case, Cro. Jac. 644. it was adjudged, That when a Statute appoints a Penalty for the doing a Thing, which was no Offence before, and appoints how it shall be recovered, it shall be punished by that means, and no other.

Therefore, my Lords, in the present Case, supposing that the Presents proved to be sometimes made to the impeached Earl, upon the Nomination of Masters in Chancery, can be interpreted a selling of an Office, or taking Money for an Office, within the Intention of this Act of Parliament, it can be liable to no other Punishment than what the Act it self directs; and this the Noble Earl has already suffered by his Loss of the Great Seal. The Statute inflicts a Penalty upon the Seller of an Office, only of forfeiting the Nomination to the Office for the future; and no other Penalty or Punishment ought to be inflicted by virtue of this Act of Parliament; and consequently the Offence, as now charged against the Noble Earl, and the Facts, as proved before your Lordships, cannot subject him to any Punishment or Judgment, that can be prayed in this Prosecution, upon the present Articles of Impeachment.

But my Lords, there is another Answer, which the Noble Earl has been pleased to make to this Part of the Charge against him, and which I hope your Lordships will have great regard to.

It is the Example of the many great and learned Persons, who have executed this high Office before him.

The Precedent is too antient, for us to discover when it was first made; and I humbly submit it to your Lordships, that the immemorial constant Usage and Practice of it in all Ages since, will sufficiently establish the Reasonableness and Justice of the Precedent.

The same Objection, which is now made against the Noble Earl impeached, in this particular Instance, might undoubtedly have been insisted upon against every one of his Predecessors.

And

And I doubt not but we shall be able to prove, that these Officers have made Presents to the Great Seal, as frequently and constantly as the several Vacancies have been supplied.

This noble Lord has only followed the Example of his Predecessors; he has trodden in their Steps: And I must beg leave to say, There must be something peculiar in his Case, if the same Paths, which led them to Honour and Immortality, shall betray him to Infamy and Disgrace.

This Objection, my Lords, some of the learned Managers of the House of Commons were well aware of; and therefore they have endeavour'd to distinguish the present from the preceding Cases.

They admit it to be true, that small Sums have been formerly given to, and accepted by former Chancellors, upon Admissions into these Offices, by way of Compliment or Present, and this without a Crime: But then they urge, that the Sums now complain'd of are exorbitant; they are bargain'd, haggled for, and given unwillingly by the Purchaser; and that there is a great difference between a Present given, and a Price bargain'd for and paid.

My Lords, I can't deny but that this Distinction is just: A Present implies a voluntary Gift of something less than the Value of the Thing given, or promised, for which that Present is to be made; a Price, the full Value of the Thing contracted for.

And I think the Earl's present Case is exactly within this Distinction, and justifies the Earl's Answer in this respect.

The Present which Mr. Kynaston made to the Earl, upon his Admission, was One thousand five hundred and seventy five Pounds. The Price he paid Mr. Rogers for the Purchase of his Office, was no less than six thousand Pounds.

The Present which Mr. Thomas Bennet made to the said Earl, upon his Admission, was One thousand five hundred and seventy five Pounds. The Price he paid Mr. Hiccocks for the Purchase of his Office, was seven thousand five hundred Pounds.

Mr. Eld, upon his Admission into the Office, upon the Death of Mr. Fellowes (the former Master) made a Present to the late Chancellor, of five thousand two hundred Pounds. But when his Lordship consider'd the Greatness of the Sum, he returned him all but eighteen hundred Pounds: When at the same time Mr. Lucas offered six thousand Pounds for the same Office.

Mr. Thurston has also proved, that he left Bank-Notes to the amount of five thousand two hundred and fifty Pounds, sealed up in a Letter at the Earl's House, before his Admission, upon Mr. Borret's Death. But when the Lady, to whom the Letter was directed, discovered how great the Sum was, she, without any Application made to her for that Purpose, returned all but two thousand Pounds.

And this, my Lords, was done before the Seal, before Michaelmas-Term last, before the Masters were ordered by the Privy-Council to give in their Accounts; and when the present Prosecution was not in any sort apprehended: And it is likewise proved, That Mr. Lucas, upon this Occasion, renewed his Offer of Six thousand Pounds for the Office; and Mr. Thurston was admitted for a less Sum of Money.

These, my Lords, we humbly hope and insist, are not Instances of a corrupt Mind, an avaricious, rapacious Temper, such as some of the Gentlemen Managers have been pleas'd to represent them. On the contrary, we humbly hope, that upon the Evidence already given, it plainly appears, that these Payments were not Sums of Money extorted and unwillingly paid by the Gentlemen, who were admitted into the several Offices that have been mentioned, but Presents voluntarily made, and press'd upon the Earl impeach'd, with such Application and Earnestness that shews, that at the Time they were offered, the Persons offering thought they were not equal to the Value of the Favour they expected. And their Importunity was so great, that Mr. Thomas Bennet one of the present Masters, that has been so often examined, would endure no delay, but impatiently press'd to be sworn into his Office, at a time when the late Chancellor was sick, and by his Physician thought to be dying. This may rather be said to be extorting a Favour from the impeached Earl, than Money from Mr. Bennet, ev'n upon his own Evidence.

My Lords, We do humbly insist, That as the noble Earl within your Bar was not conscious of any Crime in accepting these Presents, so he is justified in so doing, by the Example of many successions of great and learned Men, who have done the same in the like Case. And should this now be adjudged Criminal, what Numbers of very good and just Men must be involved in the Imputation of this Guilt? It must necessarily spread an universal Cloud of Infamy and Reproach over the Ashes of many just and upright Sages of the Law, whose Memories have hitherto been preserved as venerable and sacred; Men who despised Riches, and abhorred the remotest appearance of Bribery, and never were, nor were suspected to be Corrupt: yet these Men thought it a just Duty, owing to themselves and Successors, to adhere to the known and just Rights, the ancient established Fees and Perquisites of their Offices; and believ'd it as justly due to them, as the Salaries which were annexed to their said Offices.

My Lords, We shall beg Leave to shew that this has been the ancient Usage and constant Practice of all Ages; and that the several great Persons, who successively have presided in the greatest Courts of Law and Equity, from the earliest Times to the present, have disposed of the several Offices in their Gift, as they became vacant, for Money.

Frequent Instances of this kind will be produced before your Lordships, in our Evidence.

My Lords, I would not be understood to mention this, so as to insist that the Actions or Examples of the greatest Persons will alter the Nature of Good and Evil, or give a Sanction to any Action that in it self is really Criminal; but only as an Argument (and I apprehend it a very strong one) to prove, that it was the concurrent Opinion of all those Great Persons that have taken Presents, upon their Disposition of Offices, that it was not criminal to do so.

The Opinion and Judgment of so many learned Persons must have very great Weight in a Case of this Nature: And if in strictness it can't be said to justify the Action, it will certainly very much Ex-tenuate the Guilt.

In the next place, the Gentlemen are pleas'd to proceed to shew, That Masters in Chancery, being, as before represented, very great Officers in that Court; the noble Earl within the Bar, for his own corrupt Gain, has admitted Persons into that Office, that were not duly qualified for it, and forced them to give great Prices, and bartered and haggled for such Prices.

This, my Lords, is urged as the greatest Inconvenience, That Men who have no Substance of their own, should be trusted with such large Sums of other Persons Money.

It is insisted, That honesty, Probity, and good Substance, are absolutely necessary for the Suitors Security; yet Inferior Persons have been put in by his Lordship, who had little or no Substance of their own: That they paid great Sums for their Places, yet paid it out of the Suitors Money; and that this was known, connived at, and encouraged by the noble Lord that then presided in the Court of Chancery. This therefore could only be with a view to enhance the Price of those Places: For what would not People hazard, who had nothing of their own to lose? If any Profit could be made, it was their own; if any Loss, the Suitors; for no Security was given to answer the Effects in their Hands.

My Lords, It must be confess'd, that this way of Arguing has a very popular Appearance, and finds an easy Access to every Ear.

The Court of Chancery must be admitted to be the greatest Court of Justice in the Kingdom: And it must be also admitted, That the Business of that Court has of late Years increased, in Proportion, more than any other Court; and consequently, much greater Sums of Money are now deposited in the Hands of the Masters of that Court, than formerly.

This may possibly make it to be wished, that some better Method might be found out, for the Suitors Security, than has been formerly used.

But in what Manner this Reformation is to be made, is beyond the Power, or at least the Prudence of any one Judge or Chancellor to determine; the ancient Practice of every Court is the Law of that Court; and it would be a dangerous Experiment for any one presiding Judge to vary it: If any ill Consequence to the Suitors attended such an Alteration, he that made the Alteration would certainly be answerable for the Consequences of it; for every Suitor will then say, Why was the ancient Practice vary'd? He that made the Alteration, surely did it for his own Advantage; and then every Argument that in the present Case is only colourably made use of, in that would be obvious and natural, and be apply'd with double Force.

He that acts without a Precedent, acts upon the Peril of his own Judgment: But he that acts against Precedents, against ancient, concurrent, uniform Precedents and Practices, is without Excuse, and justly to be suspected of some particular View, in the Language of the present Articles.

The Earl of Macclesfield, when he was first intrusted with the great Seal, found the Suitors Money in the Custody and Care of the Persons who were then Masters of the Court, and without any Security given or demanded for it.

He consider'd, that his Predecessors were a Succession of Great and Honourable Persons, of equal if not greater Sagacity and Learning, Probity and Experience, than any that ever had fate in any Court; they found the Masters in possession of the Suitors Money upon the same Establishment, and they left them so.

Was it proper or prudent for him to oppose his single Opinion to the united Judgment of so many wise and great Men that had gone before him? surely, no. Inconveniencies had been seen before, and Deficiencies had happened, and those Deficiencies had been supply'd by a voluntary Contribution of the other Masters then in Being. Why was not Security then demanded? and why not all the other Masters then called upon to bring in their Accounts, to prevent the like Deficiency for the future? If that Method had been thought either prudent or practicable, no doubt it would have been then taken: And this being then not done, or ever before or after attempted to be done, is a good Argument, that it was not expedient, or, it may be, possible to be done, at least upon the single Authority of one Lord Chancellor. And that therefore is a good Excuse for the Omission or Neglect in that Particular, in the present Case.

But, my Lords, It is now objected, That as the Sums of Money in the Masters Hands are greater than ever, and it may not be proper to alter the ancient Method of the Masters receiving and keeping it for the Suitors Benefit; yet greater Care ought to be taken of the Persons to be admitted Masters, upon Vacancies and Resignations. And therefore another part of the Charge against the Honourable Earl impeach'd, is, That he appointed Persons to be Masters of the Court, that were not proper or sufficient either in Substance, Knowledge, or Probity.

These are said to be all essential Requisites in the Character of every good Master; but grossly neglected in the present Case: And a Reason is given, or (if I may presume to say) rather invented, in the present Case, that it was the Advantage of the Earl impeach'd, to put in such unqualified Persons; because such Persons would be drawn in, to give larger Prices for their Places, and consequently it redounded to the Earl's Advantage.

My Lords, I must beg Leave to observe, that in the Evidence that has been given, there has not been any one Instance proved (or at least, that I can recollect) that any of these Masters were really Insufficient in any of the Particulars objected to, at the Time of their respective Admissions into their several Offices; or at least that the noble Earl impeached, then knew that they were Insufficient, or had any reason to suspect it: They were all Gentlemen of good Families, well Educated; each of them a Barrister at Law (which, I submit to your Lordships, is not the least expensive Education) and had all visible Fortunes, and appeared as Persons in very plentiful Circumstances.

Even Mr. Conway and Mr. Thomas Bennet (who are the Persons intimated to be the least qualified in Point of Fortune and Substance) had at that time very good Estates in their Possessions; Mr. Bennet had then also a very valuable Office, Clerk of the Custodies; had married a Lady of considerable Fortune, kept a Coach and decent Equipage in Town; was the Son of Sir John Bennet, tho' a younger Son; and the whole Family then seem'd to be in a very prosperous Condition. Mr. Thomas Bennet has proved to your Lordships, that he was worth twenty thousand Pounds, in the Year 1720. And it does not appear, that the late Lord Chancellor was ever informed of any Incumbrances upon his Estate (tho' now, he says, there are great ones) or that his Circumstances were less at the Time of his Admission, than in the Year 1720. Surely then the late Lord Chancellor had at that time no reason to suspect his being unqualified in Point of Substance.

Mr. Conway had also then a very good visible Estate in Land, an Estate of Four or Five hundred Pounds a Year; had been Receiver-General of several Counties in Wales, had discharged his Office punctually, and produc'd his Quietus to the Lord Chancellor, before Admission.

Mr. Kynaston had, at the time of his Admission, an Estate of Four hundred Pounds a Year in land, Timber of very considerable Value, and a Personal Estate of two or three thousand Pounds; and moreover, was a Gentleman of a very good Family and unblemished in his Character.

Mr. Thurston, I think, the Gentlemen of the House of Commons don't object to in any respect. None of their Reputations, in respect of their Probity, have been called in question, 'till their late Misfortunes: And as to their other Personal Endowments, their good Sense and Judgment, I need only refer to your Lordships own Observations, upon their several Examinations in the present Trial.

But, my Lords, great Strefs seems to be laid upon the Masters paying for their Offices out of the Suitors Money; or replacing the Money so paid out of the Suitors Money.

Suppose that was the Practice amongst the Masters; does it appear to your Lordships, that the impeached Earl had any Notice, or the least Information given him of this Practice? Or if he had known it, how could he possibly have prevented it? Certainly, no other way, than by ordering all the Money immediately out of their Hands. And then another Difficulty would have occurred, how that Money should have been disposed of. Publick Societies would not submit to be under the immediate Direction of the Court of Chancery; and no private Person could be trusted with so great a Sum, or give Security for it.

The Masters of the Court are in nature of Cashiers; they subsist upon Trust and Credit; and no Security can be expected to answer the Quantity of Cash in their Hands, more than in the Case of a common Banker. People will trust Men in Credit with the Custody of a Thousand Pounds; when if they propos'd to borrow an Hundred Pounds on Security, would scruple to let them have it. But the Objection is carried yet farther: It is said, if Security could not be expected, why were not their Books inspected, upon one's transferring to another, and Schedules taken of their Effects?

To this it must be answered, That the Lord Chancellor has not Leisure to attend this Duty Personally. And what other Person can be appointed more fit to be trusted (as an Inspector of the going-out Master's Accounts) than his Successor, who is to stand charged with all the Money and Securities, and the whole Effects transferred?

Can any Obligation incline a Man more strongly to Care and Exactness in Business, than private Interest? And his own private Interest will oblige him not to make himself accountable for more than he actually receives, and has transferred to him. And when the succeeding Master has examined the Effects of his Predecessor, by proper Schedules approved of by himself, they are then transferred to him by a General Order of the Court, and he becomes accountable for what is so transferred.

This, my Lords, we humbly submit, has been the ancient Usage and Practice of the Court in these Cases; and that the same Method was used by the present Earl Impeached, the same Care taken, as had been formerly in the like Cases by any of his predecessors.

But, my Lords, I would beg leave to submit it, That supposing it to be possible that greater Care might have been taken by the late Lord Chancellor, in inspecting the Schedules and Transfer of the Effects of Masters to their Successors; Does it appear that the Suitors of the Court have been any way injured or prejudiced by that pretended Neglect? Or would the greatest Care, the greatest Exactness in this Particular, have given the Suitors any greater Advantage or Security? Certainly, not at all: For let the Effects of the preceding Master be never so carefully and justly Examined and Scheduled, and after that transferred, and actually delivered to the succeeding Master; has not the new Master to whom these Effects are thus carefully and justly delivered, the same power over them, to manage and dispose at his pleasure, as he would have had, in case such Transfers had been made with less Caution and Exactness, as in the present Case?

If any corrupt agreement had been made by any new Master, upon coming into his Office, and previous to this Transfer, to have repaid or replaced any Sum of Money, before borrowed by him, either for the purchase of his Office, or any other Occasion; could not he have complied with this, and paid it out of the Suitors Money or Effects, the very next Moment after they were transferred to him? And would the previous Care and Caution in any degree obstruct or prevent his so doing? I apprehend, not at all; for as soon as the Master is in possession of the whole Money and Effects, he may return any part that he pleases to his predecessor, by virtue of an Agreement before made for that purpose; which would be as much to the prejudice of the Suitors, as if what was so returned to the predecessor, after a Transfer made, had been retained in the first Instance by the predecessor, and never actually delivered over to his Successor.

Therefore, my Lords, this Security, as projected, is but Imaginary; and gives the Suitor no greater Advantage than he had before; and consequently this ought to be no Ingredient of Complaint against the Impeached Earl.

But, in the next place, it is strongly urged, that tho' the Noble Earl during his High Offices, might not have Leisure to attend little Occurrences, or regard small Neglects; yet the Going-off of Mr. Dormer should have awaken'd him; some Care should, upon that Accident, have been taken. If what had pass'd before was only Supineness, this was a wilful Neglect; and not enquiring into the State of his Affairs, and securing his person and Effects for the Suitors, was concurring in Defrauding the Suitors.

My Lords, this was indeed a remarkable Occurrence: The Going-off of Mr. Dormer was unforeseen, and unsuspected: His person was withdrawn, and out of the power of the Court; but all imaginable Care was taken to secure his Effects.

The two Senior masters immediately were directed to enquire into his Effects, secure his Chambers, and put a stop to all transfers in his Office. What more possibly could be done in this Emergency, his person being out of the power of the Court?

A proposal is made on his Behalf, That if the then Chancellor would engage that his Liberty should be secured to him, he would return, and discover discover and assist to get in his Effects. This is thought reasonable, and for the Suitors Benefit, and accordingly complied with; and thereupon the unhappy Man returns, and not only makes the best Discovery of his Effects, but delivers all in his power, for the Benefit of the Suitors. Could any thing be more Advantageous to the Suitors, or contribute more to their Interest than this?

The Impeached Earl had indeed promised his person should not be imprison'd; and it would have been the highest breach of Faith to have departed from it. Had not that promise been made, Mr. Dormer had not return'd, nor any Discovery been made by him; but by this means they had the Benefit of the best Discovery that could be had, and the best Assistance the Noble Earl could give them. He never deny'd or discouraged any Application that was made by or for the Interest of the Suitors in that respect, nor endeavour'd to conceal the true State of his Effects, and the Condition of his Office. And as to the Expressions insisted on to delude the Suitors, by saying, as has been objected, That Mr. Dormer was only gone to take the Air, and would soon return; tho' these Expressions have been much insisted on, in the Arguments against the Impeached Earl, I do not remember that they have been mentioned in the Evidence.

And, my Lords, to shew that the Impeached Earl did all that was in his power to render what Assistance he could give the Suitors; when a new Master was to be appointed; he left the Disposition of the Office to the Direction of the other masters: And Mr. Edwards gave no less than Five thousand Pounds for that Office of Mr. Dormer's, which was wholly apply'd towards the making up his Deficiency. By this Enquiry, Dormer's Real estate was secured to the Suitors; and it was expected by the Earl himself, and by Mr. Edwards who succeeded Mr. Dormer, that the rest of his Deficiency, which was then uncertain, would have been supplied by the other Masters, provided they could be continued in their Offices upon the old Establishment.

It may not be improper to observe further in this Case, That Mr. Dormer's Deficiency does not appear to have happen'd through any Extravagance of his own, or by his misapplication of the publick Money: He employ'd Mr. Wilson, then a person in good Credit, as his Banker, and entrusted him with his Cash. Wilson had Dealings with Poulter in the fatal Year 1720. Wilson was reduced, and stopped payment; his Debt to Mr. Dormer was then Twenty four thousand and forty six pounds; this, Mr. Dormer assigns to Mr. Edwards his Successor in the Office; it was all that Mr. Dormer had, all therefore that he could restore, and more than could be got in: For Mr. Edwards applying for this Money, found Mr. Wilson not able to pay the whole Debt, and thereupon a proposal is made of a Composition.

The Masters considering this, thought proper to petition the Lord Chancellor, that it might be referred to the Senior Master, Mr. Hiccocks, to examine and report, Whether it was for the Benefit of the Persons entitled, that a Composition should be accepted.

The Master to whom this Question was referred, Reports it Reasonable; and an Order is made, upon a second Petition preferred, That the Composition should be accepted.

This, my Lords, we apprehend, was an engaging in this Affair with all the Zeal that could be desired on the Earl's part; no Evidence of any Design or Endeavour to conceal the Deficiency: All or most of the Masters consulted upon this Composition, and consented to it: And as for those that were not Parties to it, they are not bound by it.

But it is objected, That this Transaction was Private and Clandestine between the Masters and the then Chancellor; not carried on in the usual Manner, nor any Notice given to the Suitors in Reality, tho' a Pretence of uncertain Notice mentioned at the Bottom of the Order.

My Lords, we hope this cannot affect the Noble Lord within the Bar; it is the Duty of the Chancellor to pronounce Orders in Court; but it is the Care and Duty of the Solicitors or Clerks in Court to see them Drawn up, Entred and Registered, in proper Time and Form.

The Substance of the Order is pronounced by the Court: The Form is the Act of the Register; and the Chancellor can't have Leisure to attend the Entries of all his Officers.

Fourteen hundred Pounds was paid in upon this Composition; One thousand Pounds has been brought in since, out of Poulter's Effects: so much has been secured at all Events by this Composition, and the Suitors have received the Benefit of it. Have the Gentlemen on the other Side shewn, that without this Composition, any thing could have been secured to the Creditors in General, or that any other Creditor has obtained more advantageous Terms? It was said indeed that other Creditors had received their full Demands: But I submit to your Lordships, that no Proof has been made thereof, only an uncertain Hear-say of small Sums sent, to give him new Credit after his first Absconding. But when the Composition was made, a good Debt was subsisting to Wilson from Poulter, and Judgment obtained against him, and he committed to the King's-Bench Prison in Execution. The Marshal suffers him to Escape: thereupon an Action is brought, and Judgment obtained against the Marshal, for his Escape; and at length the Marshal is run out of the Kingdom, to avoid making a proper Satisfaction.

What a Series of evil Accidents concur to increase this Misfortune, and prevent the just Design of the Earl to do the Suitors all the Justice in his Power! But to whom has he been Defective, if all prudential Steps have been taken? It is hard that he should answer for the Consequence, that he could not, it was not in his Power to prevent.

But, my Lords, in the 15th Article, it is objected to the Impeached Earl, That to carry on his unjust Purposes, in Concealing Dormer's Deficiency, in February one thousand seven hundred and twenty, he ordered the masters to bring in their Accounts of their Cash, Effects, and Securities; not with a real design to Examine the Accounts, and secure their Effects, but to terrify them into a Contribution; and threatned that the Cash should be taken out of their Hands, if they did not comply; by which means he got nine of the said masters to contribute Five hundred Pounds a-piece out of the Suitors Money, and then no farther proceedings were had upon their Accounts.

My Lords, One would have thought that these Proceedings, which so plainly tended to the Good of the Suitors, could not by any Artifice have been interpreted to their Prejudice. In

In February 1720, the late Lord Chancellor (finding Mr. Dormer's Deficiency like to be greater than at first it was apprehended) was willing to look into the State of the Accounts of the other Masters, to guard against the like Misfortune; and at the same time proposes to them to advance Money to help to pay Mr. Dormer's Deficiency. Five hundred Pounds a piece is raised by nine of them, and applied accordingly; the last of these five hundred Pounds paid in August 1721. And upon the 7th of November 1721 a second Letter is written to hasten these Accounts, and every Argument used that could be thought likely to induce them to it: But the Labour proved too difficult, and the Pursuit was forced to be given over 'till a more convenient Time and Opportunity should present. What was done in this Instance also, I beg leave to say likewise, was following the Example of another Great Man, in the Method he took in the Case of Dr. Eddisbury, and that has some Circumstances less favourable than the present: Dr. Eddisbury was always in Town, or at least within the Reach or Power of the Court, and yet his Person was not secured for many Years after his first Failure.

Upon the 29th of January, 7 Annæ, there is an Order entred in his Case, (the only one we can find on the File) for Dr. Eddisbury to deliver up his Effects to the two Senior Masters: It recites, That Dr. Eddisbury had several Sums and Securities for Money in his Hands, and that several Orders had been made for Money out of his Hands; which were not complied with; and that he declared himself not able to pay; and that his Accounts given in were not full: It is therefore Ordered, That in four Days time after Notice, he do Account to the several Masters, and deliver in to the said Masters what he hath in Hand, and the Report to be taken in ten Days.

My Lords, By this Order it appears that Dr. Eddisbury had several Orders made upon him for Money to be paid, not in Average, for some Time, and those Orders not complied with; and that he had not given full Examination, and had Prevaricated with the Court; yet the last Extremity, the Committing his Person, and ordering Payment in an Average, was not thought of, 'till it was certainly known, and he had actually confessed, that he had not Assets to pay the Whole.

In the present Case, Mr. Dormer was examin'd; discover'd his Estate, assigned the Whole in Trust for the Suitors, but died before the Enquiry could be perfected.

In Dr. Eddisbury's Case the other Masters contributed at first to supply his Deficiency, as they since did in the Case of Mr. Dormer: And this without doubt was so done; in hopes that his Effects, when fully discovered, would in time prove sufficient to answer all, or much the greatest part of the Suitors Demands: And thus far both Cases are parallel; and Orders made for Payments to the respective Suitors in general, as they applied for them. And no Average was directed in the Case of Dr. Eddisbury, 'till it appeared even by his own Confession, that his Assets were not sufficient to make good the Suitors whole Demand: And when the quantum of the Deficiency was known, Payments were directed by the Court to be made in Average. So, in all probability, in due time the like Order would have been made in the present Case: But that could not possibly be done 'till the Value of Mr. Dormer's Effects could be known and ascertained, in order to fix the Proportion to be paid, in Average. And this, my Lords, to this time, through the many Accidents before mentioned, it has not been possible to effect: And therefore, the not directing Payments in an Average, can't be reasonably objected to the present impeached Lord as Criminal: His Intention throughout the Whole appears to be calculated for the alone Service and Benefit of the Suitors of the Court, without any Prospect or Possibility of Advantage to himself. His Design was, to procure every Suitor full Satisfaction for his Demand: And if nothing had happened to interrupt so just a Design, 'tis possible that his great Zeal for the publick Good, and his indefatigable Industry, might in due time have had their desired Effect.

But greater Powers have now interposed, and this Difficulty being found to exceed the single Authority of a Chancellor, may be thought to deserve the greater Power, Care, and Wisdom of the Legislature.

My Lords, What afterwards happened in the Case of Mrs. Chitty, is in part answered, in what has been observ'd upon the last Article; and I humbly apprehend, that a plain Narrative of that Fact, will be a sufficient Answer to the Objection that has been made in this respect. The Earl of Macclesfield having no certain Account what Cash of Mr. Dormer's remain'd in his Successor Mr. Edwards's Hands, made Orders for payment of Sums of Money, from time to time, as Application was made in Court; and particularly to pay Mrs. Chitty One thousand pounds, part of eleven thousand pounds of her Money which had been brought into Court in Mr. Dormer's time. Mrs. Chitty assigns this to Mr. Lockman. Mr. Lockman applies to Mr. Edwards, the present Master, for payment, and is there disappointed of his Money: Then he applies to the Lord Chancellor, and represents the pressing Necessities they laboured under, That the payment of one thousand pounds to him at that Juncture of Time, would be of greater Service to him than the whole Money could be at any future Day: That this Sum of Money, if immediately advanced, would make his Creditors easy; and without it, he must inevitably be thrown into a Goal.

This, my Lords, we shall be able to make out in proof (tho' Mr. Lockman, upon his Examination, deny'd it,) and the late Chancellor, out of pure Compassion and Charity to this Gentleman, and believing his Circumstances to be as he represented them, pays him the Money out of his own pocket; and at the same time, or soon after, told him, that he must expect no more from him, but must wait 'till Mr. Dormer's Effects could be got in, or the Money could be advanced some other way.

What Objection can be reasonably made to this part of the impeached Earl's Conduct? To deliver a Suitor in Distress; to extend a Charitable Arm to rescue him from the very Gates of a prison just opening to receive him. If this be a Crime, and to be objected to him by the very person who now enjoys his Liberty, as the Gift of this noble Lord's generous but undeserved Bounty; I must not pretend to say that he has many Virtues.

On the contrary, I hope it will abundantly appear to your Lordships, even from this Instance, and from the whole Series of this noble Lord's Conduct, that he firmly believ'd that all the Suitors of the Court would, in due time, be made easy, easy, and their whole Demands be made good to them. And had the whole Body of the Masters as cheerfully concurred in this good Design, and contributed as generously to support the Honour of the Court, and themselves, 'tis more than probable that the Suitors would not long have had any just Occasion of Complaining, nor your Lordships the Trouble of this Prosecution.

It was for this End, that the Masters were so often called upon to make a reasonable Contribution, and all Arguments made use of that would either persuade or terrify them into a Compliance, in making the Suitors easy, 'till a proper Fund or Method could be found out to give them entire Satisfaction. Most of the Masters, I think all but one, were convinced that this was a reasonable and just Proposal, and express'd a Readiness to come into it; and 'twas for this Purpose, that they were bid to consider of the Consequences of forfeiting their Offices, and of a Complaint in Parliament.

And for whose Benefit were these Arguments thus made and pressed upon the Masters? Who could profit by their Compliance, or suffer by their Refusal? Not the Chancellor himself: He had no other Interest to serve, no Inclination to gratify, but a just Zeal for the publick Good, and a generous Concern for the great Loss that was like to happen to the Suitors of the Court, without his vigorous Interposition and Assistance.

This, my Lords, I humbly hope, appears to be the sole and just Principle upon which this Noble Lord has founded all his Designs and Actions, to restore the Credit of the Court, which had been greatly injured by other Mens ill Conduct; to procure the Suitors in general the best Satisfaction that could be obtained; not partially preferring one to another, but endeavouring to do every Suitor full and equal Justice, in order, as their Complaints were brought before him.

As to the Expressions proved to be made use of by the impeached Earl, in the Case of Harper; surely they can have little weight.

Can it be imagined, that after so many Transactions had happened in the Court of Chancery, in relation to Mr. Dormer's Misfortunes, and the great Losses that were like to happen to the Suitors thereby, the then Chancellor himself should be the only Person that had never heard of it; and even after such time as he had been endeavouring to find out Means to remedy so great an Evil? Could any Man of less Sagacity than he must be allowed to have, conceive that he could be credited, even in the Court wherein he presided, in saying (as it is now represented) That he was a perfect Stranger to the Affair of Mr. Dormer; that he had heard nothing of it, but as idle News, a flying Report, that might be true or false? No, my Lords, that certainly could not be his Intention, in speaking the Words that are said to be uttered by him on this Occasion.

But when a Purchaser under the Decree of the Court, that had paid his Money in to the Master, and required his conveyances to be executed, could not procure the Parties interested to execute, without actual Payment of the Purchase-Money to them at the Time of the Execution, and that Money was sunk in Mr. Dormer's Hands; this first brought the Deficiency of Mr. Dormer in Judgment before his Lordship; and it was the first time it came regularly before him in Judgment.

Upon this he declared, That then it was a proper Time for him to make a strict Enquiry into this Matter: He could not properly enter upon this Enquiry, upon the uncertain Reports of Persons about the Town, or upon any private Conversation or Information that he might have received, and possibly might have the Expression of common Talkers of News; but now that it came judicially before him, he would thoroughly examine into the whole Matter, and endeavour to apply a proper Remedy.

This, my Lords, we shall prove to be the Occasion and Manner of the speaking these Words, by Persons that were then present in Court; and this happened but in December last was Twelve-month; and accordingly it was ordered to be put under the immediate Examination of Mr. Edwards, who succeeded Mr. Dormer in the Office, and who must therefore be admitted to be the most proper Person to perfect that Enquiry, and also because he was the most concerned in the Consequences of it: But Time has been wanting to proceed as far as he intended in that necessary Work.

My Lords, Tho' by this time, it can't be pretended but the late Chancellor, as well as every other Person belonging to the Law, must know of Mr. Dormer's Deficiency; yet I believe, that none had then discovered, or even imagined how great it was; and that even his Lordship, and most other Persons, were persuaded, that whatever should appear to be wanting in his own Effects, would be supplied by the other Masters; or some other Method would be found out to prevent any real Loss to the Suitors; and in virtue of this Persuasion, Orders were made for Payment of Money to the Suitors, as they apply'd for it, without directing an Average.

This is exclaimed against, as contrary to all Equity; some to have all, and others to lose all, when they were all to be paid out of one Common Fund.

My Lords, Had it been proved to you, that when these Orders were made, it had legally appeared to the then Chancellor, that Mr. Dormer's Effects would at all Events prove Deficient, and that no way had been foreseen, whereby that Deficiency could have been supplied; I must admit this Objection would have been very strong: And in that Case, to have order'd full Payment to those Suitors who first applied, and left nothing for those that came after, would have been a manifest Partiality.

But this is not the present Case. When the Court ordered the first Payments to be made, it does not appear in Proof (as I humbly apprehend) that there would at last be any certain Deficiency in Mr. Dormer's Effects, or at least no pretence of judging how great that Deficiency was like to be. And consequently, the Payment of the whole Demand to the Suitors that first applied, does not necessarily infer that there would be any Loss to those which came after. His Effects, upon further Enquiry, might possibly come out to be more than were at first discovered; they might prove sufficient to answer all Demands: Or in case the Deficiency was not very great, a moderate Contribution from the other Masters, or, it may be, a reasonable Addition intended to be made to that by the Chancellor himself, would have supplied that that Defect. And that this was really intended, I apprehend that the Evidence already given does abundantly demonstrate.

Another Objection has been made; That very great Sums of Money have been deposited in the Masters Hands, without any Security; and that some proposals have been made to the Noble Earl, for securing in some measure those great Sums, and preventing the Masters having too great Power over so great a Cash.

Mr. Lighboun, one of the present Masters, first mentioned the Proposal: He had before communicated it to Mr. Holford. The Chancellor received it kindly, desir'd him to reduce it into Writing; took Time to consider of it, and frequently talked with him about it; always shewed an earnest Desire that this might be done, but thought the proposed Scheme not effectual. Many Consultations were had upon this proposal; at last he summons all the Masters of the Court, the Registers, the Usher, and other Officers of the Court; obtains the Favour of the Master of the Rolls to join with him and them in the general Consultation; and every one expected some effectual Resolution would have been made, upon this grand Affair.

But the Master of the Rolls then taking notice that there were other things in the Court that required a Reformation, as well as this; and taking notice that the masters in Chancery had lately assumed to themselves a Power of Judicature in the Court, in opposition to him; insisted, That this pretended Power of Judicature in the masters should be given up by them, before he would enter into the Debate of the other Question.

Mr. Lighboun, upon whose original proposal this great Assembly was convened, was the first, if not the only Person that opposed the relinquishing this new-assumed power, tho' he knew the Consequence would be the Destruction of the other proposition which himself had made.

He preferred the Affectation of this Power of Judicature in his Office, more than the Interest of all the Suitors; and upon this, the great Expectation of this solemn meeting was disappointed, and nothing done.

What could a Lord Chancellor do more, that has the Honour of the Court and Interest of the Suitors the most at Heart?

Mr. Lighboun himself tells your Lordships, that after this last Attempt proved unsuccessful, he began to think there was but one single Lord in the World that had sufficient Spirit to undertake it.

But during all this time, nothing had happened to give the late Chancellor any just Jealousy or Suspicion of the Deficiency of any of the other Masters. They are proved to have often declared they were Sufficient; nay, they have themselves sworn, upon the giving in their Accounts, that they were able to make good the Balance. The Noble Earl Impeached, sincerely thought they were so; and therefore when their Accounts were brought to him, in order to be laid before the Counsel, in Obedience to His Majesty's gracious Commands, he did all that was in his power or Capacity to forward that good Design, and make it successful: He ordered the Masters to speed their Accounts: And when they were brought before him, he observing that the Senior Master had under-written his Account in a full, and plain, and more direct Manner than the other masters had done, he told them, He liked the Form which Mr. Holford the Senior Master had used, and thought it a proper precedent for the rest. They all complied, without Hesitation or Objection; no one pretended they had not sufficient then in their Hands to make good their Balance; and accordingly subscribed to it, That they were able and willing to make good their respective Balances; or to the like Effect.

Can it be imagined, that this so fair and candid a Transaction, intended for the Satisfaction of the Council, and the good Security of the Suitors, can by any means be interpreted an Imposition upon His Majesty, by the late Chancellor? It was for His Majesty's Service that the Accounts should be laid fully and truly before him in Council; and it must likewise be a great Satisfaction to His Majesty, to find that his Subjects money in the masters Hands was secure, by seeing their Acknowledgment, under their Hands, that they were able.

The late Chancellor knew no more than any of the rest of the Honourable Privy-Council, or His Majesty himself, that this Declaration was false; and therefore it was equally an Imposition upon Him and Them; but no Fraud, no Crime in the Chancellor himself; which is the Objection now made against him. And indeed, many of the masters which have been now examined before your Lordships, have, upon their Evidence, Declared, That the Subscriptions thus made to their Accounts, were true, and that in Fact they have given good and effectual Securities to answer the respective Balances of their Accounts.

How hard a Work this Regulation of this great Abuse in the Court of Chancery was, the late Experience has shewn; and a total Reformation of it hereafter, would have proved more difficult, without the prudent and cautious Preparation, which the Noble Earl within the Bar has made for it, and which in due time he might have been able to effect.

Thus my Lords, I have endeavoured (but very imperfectly, I am sensible, and confusedly) to offer what occurs to me in the Impeached Earl's Behalf. I ask your Lordships Pardon, and His, for taking up so much of your Time so unprofitably. What Omissions I have made, I doubt not, will be supplied by the several learned Gentlemen that are to speak after me.

I have this very great Satisfaction, that before your Lordships, the Merits of this, or any other Cause, will not suffer through the Incapacity of the Advocate on the one side, nor the Solemnity of the Prosecution on the other. When Facts are proved before your Lordships, no Observations can be equally Instructing as your Own. And upon the Evidence given, your Lordships will undoubtedly form a Just Judgment: A Judgment, I humbly presume to hope, That the Impeached Earl is Not Guilty of any of the Articles exhibited against him.

Dr. Sayer. My Lords, I am likewise of Counsel for the Noble Earl Impeached.

I am afraid it may seem somewhat improper, that I should engage in a proceeding of so much Difficulty, foreign to the profession in which I am bred: But as the very great Obligations I have to the Earl, prevail on me so far to forget my own Unfitness, I hope they will, on your Lordships, to excuse it.

The Articles exhibited by the Honourable the House of Commons, charge him with Corruption tion and Extortion, in the most odious Manner; and the learned Managers have heigten'd every Circumstance with the greatest Art and Eloquence; every ill Turn which his Actions, his Words, his very Omissions, could be imagined capable to receive, hath been given; Suspicions and Jealousies have been rais'd; and every Consideration forgot, which could interpret them in his Favour.

This my Lords, was their Duty, as Managers; and tho', by some, undertaken with Reluctance; yet, I may venture to say, it has been perform'd by all with great Success and Reputation.

But however unanswerable their Eloquence may be, we hope to be able to defend the Earl against the Facts they have alledged; and shew, That they were either not done, or done with Innocence and Honour. Against meer Imaginations, nothing can secure him, but your Lordships Candour and Justice.

The words Orphans, and Widows, and Lunatics, have been employ'd to raise Tenderness and Compassion, and arm your Lordships against every Argument which we can offer. Well was it commanded by the Jewish Law, Not to respect the Person of the Poor, in his Cause; knowing the Disposition of Human Nature, and the Necessity of guarding against this generous Weakness. This Caution ought particularly to be remembered by Englishmen, who are allow'd to be more subject to an Excess of it, than those of any other Nation.

The learned Managers have very rightly observ'd, how much your Lordships Honour is concern'd in this Prosecution. My Lords, It was with the greatest Satisfaction I heard them say it; for I am by it induced to think, that notwithstanding the Zeal which has been express'd, they will be much pleas'd to find every Member of your Lordships Body Innocent.

It appears from the Answer, and needs no Proof, That the Noble Earl was once Lord Chief Justice of the King's-Bench: And his Conduct in that great Station, will, I hope, be some Defence.

I may appeal to those Gentlemen who are now Managers against him, whether they have not applauded him with Warmth? whether they have not commended his Zeal and Intrepidity in the Cause of Liberty and our Country? his steady Adherence to the Protestant Succession? his uninfluenced Behaviour? My Lords, I would ask, whether then they did not praise and love him? whether they did not esteem his being placed in that High Station (which he executed with Honour) their Comfort, their Security.

My Lords, I beg pardon, for replacing those Times before your Thoughts, or for desiring any to consider, how an Accusation against him, supported by meer Refinements, would at that time have been regarded. My Lords, his experienc'd Merit would then have silenc'd every Objection.

If there wanted any Evidence of the High Character he bore while in that Station, we might appeal to the great Rewards His Majesty has bestow'd upon him: Those very Graces which have been exaggerated against him, are the noblest Testimony in his Favour. His Majesty thought him worthy of the Great Seal, because he had found him faithful in his other Trusts. His Majesty approved him, because his Subjects had:

It was for their Sakes (the constant Motive of his Choice) that he appointed him Lord Chancellor.

This once was the Earl's Character; this once his Merit. These were, nay, are still our Obligations to him. My lords, experienc'd Worth has a Right to greater Confidence and Credit: This is a Rule of Evidence, and of common Justice; and unless the most convincing Proofs are offered, your Lordships never can believe, that one who has done so greatly Well, can do so Basely as is suggested by the Charge.

But supposing, upon so very strict an Enquiry into the Conduct of any Great Man, something amiss was found (for the Greatest are but Men, and must have Failings) yet is former Merit not quite to be forgot. Publick Services are thought just Reasons for Remission of the highest past Offences, though done perhaps meerly with a View of obtaining it: And shall those done upon a more generous Principle, arising from an honest disinterested Heart, deserve a less Regard?

But my lords, that I may have the better Opportunity of observing, on the Evidence brought for the Commons, as well as on the Arguments offered, I shall beg leave to follow the learned managers in the method they took themselves.

The Foundation of their Charge, is, The disposing of several Offices for considerable Sums of Money. This is the Corruption! This the Extortion! And to aggravate the Guilt of this, and raise your Lordships Indignation, the Preamble sets forth, "That in or about May 1718, the Earl was appointed Lord Chancellor of Great Britain, and did thereupon take the usual Oath for the due Execution of that High Office, and such other Oaths as have been accustomed." And the subsequent Articles proceed to charge his lordship with Breach and Violation of his Oath, as Lord Chancellor. The learned Gentlemen who had the Conduct of the Evidence, justly sensible of the Expectation they had raised by this Aggravation, did attempt a Proof.

The Earl, in his Answer, had set forth at large, the Oath he took as Lord Chancellor, when first appointed; and had insist'd, that he took no other Oath of Office. Was this the Oath the Earl had thus broke and violated? No, it was not this; but one, which, by the Articles, he is no where charged with ever having taken. Upon the Choice of Sheriffs, it seems, the 12th of Ric. II. is annually, in Old French, read over by the Clerk; and all present at the Council kiss the Bible. It is this Transaction with which they would affect the Earl. But, my Lords, it is notorious, that the Statute is so far grown obsolete, that in no other Instance besides this of Sheriffs, is it at present taken notice of. And as the Oath upon this Occasion must be absolutely confin'd to the Choice of them; so is it evident, that the Statute it self never did nor was intended to reach Officers of the nature with these in question; as I shall further observe. And indeed, with the Oath directed, the Statute is so extremely rigid, that I must own, for my part, I do not see any Service it can do Society, in its full Extent. It may perhaps afford some Protection to a First Minister, in laying him under the Obligation of an Oath, to put none into any Office who shall pursue or solicit by himself or by other.

However,

However, I can't help thinking that the learned Manager had but very small pretence for the Reflection he was pleased to make, in saying, that the Earl seemed to have forgot this Oath not only in his answers, but in his conduct; when it appears that he himself had forgot how he had charged it in his Articles. If he will cast his eye back upon them, he will find that the Preamble makes mention of no Oaths, but what were taken by the Earl upon his Majesty's Appointment of him to the Seal; and the Articles charge him only with Violation of his Oath, as Lord Chancellor.

Having justified the Earl's Memory in this Point, I proceed to justify his Conduct in others; and I hope the Defence he has made by his Answer will have its Weight with your Lordships. The Earl has insisted, "That the making Presents has been long used and practised in the Time of his Predecessors; That such presents have been reckon'd amongst the antient and known Perquisites of the Great Seal; that the making and accepting them has been Notorious to all the World, and never before looked upon as Criminal, or complained of as such." My Lords, this (as far as Proof is requisite) We shall make fully appear by great Numbers of Witnesses, who are able to speak to both the Opinion and Practice of the Earl's PREDECESSORS. To this it has indeed been said, that the Earl may be Guilty, tho' his Predecessors have escaped unscathed or unpunished. My Lords, the Examples we have followed are too Worthy to lead us into Guilt: But, my Lords, if the Earl has only done what they have done, and received what they esteemed an honest Perquisite; was the Practice in it self not quite so regular at first, yet, Sunt tolerabilia, quæ consuetudo comprobatur—Usage (if antient) has so great Authority, that it makes the Common Law of England; and tho' with us it cannot repeal a Statute, or destroy its Force, which it does in other Countries, yet, my Lords, there is an Equity to be observed; and Reason as well as Humanity must inform your Lordships, that no Man ought to be treated with the utmost Severity, which an old Statute may direct; when great Examples may have led him to the Action, and a long Connivance of his Predecessors promised him Security from Censure.

But the Earl's Defence stops not here; he says, "He humbly hopes that the giving or receiving Presents on such Occasions is not Criminal in it self, or by the Common Law, and that there is not any Act of Parliament whatsoever, by which the same is made Criminal, or subject to any Punishment." To this the learned Gentlemen have given but very general Answers. Some have by Rhetorick, instead of Reason, endeavoured to persuade your Lordships, that the Act it self is highly Sinful, and that the Corruption in selling Offices is greater and far more dangerous to Society, than even selling Justice it self: Others have talked of Common Law, and Statutes, but have produced none, except those of 12th of Rich. II. and V. and 6 of Edw. VI. and a few Inferences drawn from them, which I shall speak more largely to immediately: And as the Learning and Experience of those Gentlemen are too great for any Law to escape their Observation, as is their Honour to reserve any for their Reply, I shall take it for granted, that since no other has been mentioned, there is no other.

My Lords, the Writers upon the Law of Nature have properly distinguished between selling Justice and Offices concerning the Administration of Justice: and not as the learned Managers have done. With them the selling Justice is absolutely forbid, is absolutely Corrupt and Immoral. The selling Offices is Matter of meer Policy, varied in different Governments, prohibited in some, allowed in others.

Among the Romans the Law in this Particular fluctuated and changed, and tho' the Sale of Offices was generally forbid, yet it received great Alterations, as the Emperors or the People were disposed: When Elections of the Magistrates were Popular, the Suffragia, or Votes of the People were bought and sold; but as this Practice produced frequent Riots and Disorders, frequent Laws were made to restrain it, which are still extant, and part of the Body of the Civil Law: However, all proving unsuccessful, the Emperors took occasion from it to usurp upon the People, and name the Magistrates themselves: This Translation of Authority carried the Benefit to Courtiers, and other Men of Power, who took a sort of Brokage for their Interest. Theodosius, the Emperor, so far gave Countenance to this Practice, that he even allowed an Action for the Recovery of what was promised for Procurement of any Place. In process of Time the Emperors themselves participated and took a Share of this Advantage, which introduced a distinction of Suffragium Dominicum, and privatum. Suffragium privatum, quod Aulicis dabatur; and Domicum, quod Imperialibus rationibus inferebatur. This Distinction, as well as the Practice, is very Evident from the two Novels of Justinian, which were intended absolutely to prevent for the future all Sale of Offices. In Novel 161. it is said, Ejusmodi Dominica suffragia magnum reddebant pecuniarum cumulum; and in Novel 8. that by the Prohibition, Questus immodicus imminuitur imperio.

It is well known that in France, the Laws have varied in like manner. Sometimes the Sale of Offices was permitted, sometimes forbid; but at present, and for this last Century, it has been so far encouraged, that Officers retain the Right of Resignation even in Succession, and transmit it to their Heirs, in case they have paid the Annual Tax or Duty within the Year.

I mention this to shew what the Opinion has been of other Governments; that they have not esteemed this Practice so highly Criminal, or unreasonable; and as they have not, so neither have we: For notwithstanding what has been urged with so much Ingenuity; (according to my poor Apprehension) that very Statute of Edw. VI. so much insisted on, is the strongest Proof which can be given, not only that in particular instances the Sale of Offices is now permitted, but that it was in general before that Statute, by the Common Law of England. This Statute in Sect. 3d. enacts, that "All Bargains, Sales, Promises, &c. shall be void." And yet by Sect. 6th, it makes Provision, that "It shall not extend to any Bargain, Sale, Gift, Grant, &c. concluded and agreed before the First Day of March next coming, but that the same Bargain and Sale so concluded and agreed, shall always remain, continue, and be in such force, strength, and effect, as if this Act had never been had or made." If Bargains and Sales, agreed before the First of March, are to continue in such Force, &c. as if this Act had never been made, the Consequence to me seems certain, tain, that those Bargains and Sales had Force, and that they were before Effectual and Legal; for otherwise the Provision would be absurd and ridiculous.

The 7th Section of this Statute still goes further, and makes a perpetual Provision, that “This Act, or any thing therein contained, shall not in any wise extend, or be prejudicial or hurtful to any of the Chief Justices of the King’s Courts, commonly called the King’s Bench, or Common Pleas, or to any of the Justices of the Assize that now be, or hereafter shall be; but that they, and every of them, may do in every Behalf, touching or concerning any Office, or Offices to be given or granted by them, as they, or any of them, might have done before the making of this Act.”

If this Statute be Explanatory of what the Common Law was before, and as such it was insisted on, it is certainly impossible to doubt, but that by the Common Law the Sale of Offices was allowed: “the Chief Justices, &c. may (TOUCHING THEIR OFFICES) do as they might have done before:” This Act is to prevent the Sale of Offices, and yet not of their Offices: They had been used to bargain, and sell them, and still may do it, for this Act is not to be in any wise prejudicial, or hurtful, to any of them. This is the plain Sense, this the very Language of the Provision.

But I humbly conceive that this Provision is not only an Evidence of what the Common Law it self was, but that the Act of Rich. II. (of which I before made mention) could never be intended to reach Offices of this Nature; for as the Act of Rich. II. directs an Oath, which the Chief Justices, &c. are expressly required to take, can it be imagined without the greatest Extravagance of Fancy, that the Legislature should be so very forgetful, as to guard and secure to them a Privilege, which they could never exercise without the highest Perjury?

This, my Lords, is the only Statute, which, as I apprehend, any way concerns the Charge brought against the Noble Earl: But does this Statute make the Sale of Offices Criminal? Does it direct a Punishment, or even by any general Clause forbid the Practice of it? ’Tis true the Bargains are hereby made void, the Person who sells, does lose his Right of Nomination, and he who gives or pays, is to be adjudged disable in Law to have the Office. My Lords, these are the Discouragements, which the Legislature then thought proper to lay such Bargains under, these the only Penalties: If the Earl has by his Conduct done what this Statute disapproves; if he has bargained and sold Offices, which your Lordships judge within the Statute, and the constant Usage of his Predecessors will not give Protection, the Statute points out your Lordships Justice. But, my Lords, this unfortunate Great Man, we think, has already more than satisfied this Law, he has resigned the Seal, and yet stands Impeached before your Lordships.

Offences are to be judged of by the Penalties and Punishments the Legislature has annexed; for in determining the Penalties, it determined the Sense it had of the Offence: When Penal Laws are made, it must always be supposed, that a Consideration was had of the Malignity of the Act forbid, and of its Influence on Society, and that the Punishment directed was esteemed adequate and just: By this rate it is easy to guess what the Legislature thought of the Offence of selling Offices. And, indeed, it would have been (if I may use the Expression) unbecoming the Legislature to have inflicted severer Penalties, while by the same Law it permitted the first Judges in the Nation to do what it seemed to condemn in others.

When a Law is once past, the Transgressor of it is subject only to what that Law directs; to inflict a greater Punishment, would be deserting Law, and acting arbitrarily. This Observation will hold in every Instance, in Matters of Common Justice, as well as Publick Policy: To forbid to Rob, or Murder, is only to enforce what was always Law; to forbid to sell Offices, is to lay a Political Restraint on Acts indifferent. And yet in the former Case, to punish the Offender beyond the Law, would be unjust and arbitrary. Are Prohibitions meerly Political more Sacred? Or is a Trespas against them more severely to be treated, than one against the Law of Nature, the Law of God? No, Your Lordships (I say it with Submission) are the Supreme Judges of the Nation; as such, the Supreme Judges of the Law; for by the Laws your Lordships always judge: It is the peculiar Blessing of our Nation, to have known certain Laws, to be the Guide of our Actions, and the Measure of our Punishments; to secure to us this Blessing has been the Labour and the Glory of our Ancestors. For the Sake of this, the REVOLUTION is beloved; and for a steady Adherence to this Sacred Rule, his MAJESTY is esteemed the Joy, the Safety, the Liberty of his People.

I beg Pardon for dwelling so long upon this Subject; but the Honourable Gentlemen of the House of Commons having made the Sale of Offices the Foundation of their whole CHARGE, I thought it of some Consequence to prove to your Lordships, that it is no ways Criminal in it self: And, my Lords, if it be not Criminal, Where is the Corruption? Where the Extortion? Is it in the Manner of receiving Presents? How that was, the Learned Serjeant of Counsel with me has already given your Lordships an Account: An Account, which we hope does sufficiently justify the Earl against the Imputation of Haggling, or of screwing up the Candidates to what they gave. But as these several Articles will be more fully spoke to, when we come to produce our Evidence, I shall pass them over with an Observation or two. If the Earl had so great a Thirst for Gain, and was so resolutely bent to amass such excessive Sums of Money, it is to me very strange, that whenever his Opportunity offered, and he had the free and full Disposal of an Office upon a Vacancy by Death, he should always receive a much less Sum, than what from the very face of the Articles themselves appears constantly to have been paid by Master to Master. Had the Earl put the Office up to Auction, or even insisted on a Price, Is it probable that he should not be able to obtain one as great?

However, as I pass, I can’t help taking notice of the Circumstance with which the Article of Mr. Thurston’s admission is introduced, “That Borrett died insolvent, greatly indebted to the Suitors, and the said Earl did, without securing a just Satisfaction, admit him.” Your Lordships must have observed, that the Earl is not so much as charged here with a knowledge of this insolvency; and, my Lords, knowledge only can create the guilt. If the Earl did not know it, can your Lordships censure him? If it be asked asked why he did not? Mr. Godfrey, who was produced and examined by the managers, has already given a full Answer: Mr. Godfrey was most intimate with the Affairs of Borret, and as such was directed by the Earl to inspect them; he has deposed, that he told the Earl, he thought there would be no deficiency in his Office, this (your Lordships may remember) he said was his own sincere Opinion, and he gave good Reasons for it. Mr. Borret had a very good Income, reputed 400 l. per An. besides his Place; he had lately married a Wife of Fortune; his Family lived with his Father-in-law; and he himself a man of no Expence: My Lords, Mr. Godfrey told you, he was so fully in this Opinion, that when Mr. Green, the deceased's Uncle, made a demand of a debt, he was greatly surpris'd, not imagining that he had owed one single farthing. Whence this deficiency (if there is any) none can tell: But, my Lords, that fatal Year of 1720 is not so long past, as to leave us quite without conjecture; a Year, my Lords, when the Contagion was so virulent, that scarce any Virtue was left uninfected; and those who sunk under it, remarkably deserve our Pity, as sad Instances of human Frailty: To this Year, the masters owe their whole Distress, and to them the Earl, tho' innocent, this aggravated Charge: But, my Lords, supposing a Deficiency in this Office, and known too by the Earl himself, what Satisfaction to the Suitors was from him expected? What could he possibly secure? There is but one Method: which, I hope, he will not, by the Managers, be thought criminal in not taking, since it is that, which they themselves condemn as illegal and corrupt.

It may be expected, that I should shew some Regard to the 9th Article: But as it is that which the learned Gentlemen made choice of to begin with, I apprehend greater Difficulties than I see; and therefore shall leave the Consideration of it to those, who are much more able to surmount them than myself: But I must ask Pardon, that I can't reach a Distinction on which great Strefs has been laid: It has been observed by more than one, that in this Case, the money was paid for the resignation, and not for the admission. Is there any real Difference, whether the Buyer or the Seller pays the Compliment? Must it not be supposed that it was considered in the Bargain, and part of it? Or is it imagined that a greater Hardship was in this Case done Mr. Thomas Bennet, by a seeming Obstruction of his Inclination to part with an Office, when in fact the Earl could not binder his resigning it? For notwithstanding the Observation made by a learned Gentleman, that the Lord Chancellor was the King's Officer, and therefore a Resignation to the Crown was the same as to him; yet am I from his very great Abilities persuaded to believe, that he is not so entirely a stranger to the Thought of that high Office, as not to be able to distinguish the Crown from the Seal, and to know that in many Instances of Patronage they are different: The Lord Chancellor being the King's Officer, a Resignation to him may in some Cases be equivalent in Law to one made to the Crown itself, but never è contrario. As to this particular Office, and indeed to many others of the like Nature, we shall make it fully appear, that tho' the Officer himself is in the Nomination of the Crown, yet has he always been under the Recommendation of the Seal, and has as constantly paid Acknowledgment to the Lord Chancellor.

Upon these Charges are built the whole of the following Articles: Every Expression, every Action which could bear an ambiguity, has been collected to form a Crime. The Earl has received money for his Offices, his Aim is therefore Gain by Sale of Offices, an easy Inference; and whatever is after said or done, or vice versa, is at first Suspicion, and then an Evidence against him.

But, my Lords, before I proceed to try Particulars upon this Head, I must beg your Lordships Patience to compute in general the very small Advantage the Noble Earl could propose by the Scheme, the learned Gentlemen have projected for him: The Office of Lord Chancellor is precarious, and only during Pleasure: The King, for his Subjects Welfare, jealous of every Minister, and ready to remove the greatest Favourite upon the very first Offence; and upon this Contingency, what would the Chance of disposing of a Master's Place be worth? A very trifle, I may boldly say, not so much as what he has refused the Opportunity of gaining upon every compleat vacancy he has disposed of. And can your Lordships suspect a Character once so dear, once allowed so worthy, of doing such little Things, I should say, such base Things, for no Advantage, and yet to promote this illegal and corrupt Gain on which his Heart was eagerly set? The noble Earl is further charged "with having admitted several Persons to the Offices of Masters, who were at the Time of small Substance and Ability:" Against this there lay an obvious Objection; Why Persons of small Substance? When the Earl might have, and indeed always had, when of his own Choice, others of Sufficiency. Wherefore, to make their Charge consistent, a fraudulent method is supposed to be introduced, of paying for their Places out of the Effects of the Court; a Method best suited to such Persons: But your Lordships Justice must have led you to observe, that they no where so much as insinuate, that the Earl knew them to have been as charged: They were sensible of the proper Caution he had taken, and (as it will appear in Evidence) that not only previous Inquiries were always made, and none admitted, who came not well recommended, or personally known to the Earl himself; but that when several Candidates have offered, his Lordship has been so unmindful of the little Views, he is supposed ever to have acted with, that he has constantly preferr'd him he thought the worthiest, tho' the present to the Earl was far less than what others gave him Expectation of. This surely, my Lords, will be enough to vindicate his Care; and tho' it should appear, that he was deceived in any single Instance; nay, tho' the Man himself should be the Evidence of his own Deceit and Fraud, yet I hope, my Lords, such Person will have his full Compliment of Credit, if he is believed in the Character he gives of himself. But to make some excuse for the Earl's good Opinion of this Mr. Thomas Bennet, and his Circumstances, I must observe, that it is Evident from his own Account which lies upon the Table, that when he was admitted, he had an Estate of between 5 and 600 l. per An. he had besides an Office for Life of 250 l. per An. he kept his Coach, and then lived in Reputation: However, I must confess, that in further Proof of his great Integity, this Gentleman has deposed, that Part of his Estate was then Mortgaged for more than it was worth. I should upon this this Occasion put your Lordships in mind of what happened upon this Gentleman's Confrontation, because he has been singular in his Evidence on more Facts than one; but we shall take another Opportunity of displaying this Worthy Person's Veracity, that your Lordships may know how much Regard to pay to him, by seeing how little Regard he has for Truth.

As to the Schedules, the Neglect of which is made so Criminal, it would be enough to say, that the taking them could not prevent the Fraud complained of; for what would be the Difference in deducting the Sum agreed on for the Purchase upon the transfer, or repaying it the minute after? And if the new Master is really able and sufficient, where is the Injustice done in either Case? But we submit whether such Schedules must not be made between master and master: For without them their Accounts cannot be settled; and as it is for the Interest of him who succeeds, so is it for the Security of the other who resigns. But supposing the Practice to have been as charged, and their Transfers were not complete, the only Consequence I see is, that both masters are bound, and the Suitors have by it a double Security. It has happened so in the Cases of both Mr. Hiccocks and Mr. Rogers; they imprudently retaining the Effects of the Court, for the Sale of their Offices, have thought it proper to petition the Lords Commissioners to repay the money: So that some good Fortune has attended this Practice, ill as it is, the Suitors have by it got so much money more, than what otherwise they would have had.

My Lords, when Dormer's Affair (tho' sufficiently unfortunate) is considered by your Lordships, I hope that the noble Earl will not be thought to have acted otherwise than as became his Character: Upon the first notice of the misfortune, the Earl took all possible Care both to save the Effects, and secure the Office; he sent the two senior masters to search his Chambers, and to stop the Transfers of all Stock, which stood in his Name, in any of the publick Companies. My Lords, had the Earl had that Eye on Gain, had he had that Apprehension of Discovery, which is represented, he would scarce have taken this last Step, which must and did make a Suspicion of the Office publick: When Mr. Dormer was returned, and upon such Terms as the Managers themselves can't say were unreasonable to grant to one, whose Person was out of reach, and whose Effects and Accounts were in the greatest Confusion: His Liberty was all he asked, and that upon Condition only of a full discovery and a fair Assignment of all he had. I say, my Lords, when Mr. Dormer was returned upon these Terms, which we hope he has honestly performed, his Office was sold, and every Thing done, not to conceal, but to supply the Deficiencies. I would not enter too minutely into the Composition with Mr. Wilson: It will, I conceive, be a full and satisfactory Answer to the Charge, to observe that as the Suitors were not Parties to it, they can no ways be injured by it. If the Composition be precarious, trifling, and unjust, the Suitors are still at Liberty to proceed: If more could be had, they still may have more; but till more is recovered, it must be admitted that the little, which is gained, is owing to the Composition. Had the Suitors been Parties, the Order so much complained of for its Irregularity would not have been made without a Notice; but as Mr. Wilson, whose particular Interest it was to have them Parties, did not desire it, we apprehend the Order to be in the usual manner. My Lords, the masters (as is in Evidence) having in some measure engaged themselves to make good the Deficiencies, if any should happen, the Earl could have no reason to doubt the Justice of the Proposal of Mr. Wilson, after Mr. Hiccocks had reported it, and Mr. Edwards, the Successor in the Office, had prayed the Earl to order him to accept it.

It seems, my Lords, a very forced and unkind Construction, which the Articles put upon the Accounts his Lordship had required of the masters; but the worthiest Behaviour may be thus misconstrued. The masters themselves had made the Proposal of contributing, and it will appear that they all (except Mr. Lightboun) did pay their Money voluntarily. What occasion then for such Methods as are suggested to terrify and oblige them to this Contribution? Is it in Proof that the requiring the Accounts did influence one single master? No, my Lords, but, on the contrary, you will find that the Payment by the masters did not prevail on his Lordship to desist; for it will be in Evidence, that the Earl still persevered, and that by the Earl's direction a Letter was wrote to the masters, after the several Payments were made, complaining of their Delay, and requiring their Accounts. The Earl, indeed, upon Representations, did afterwards think the method impracticable, which he is the better justified in saying, because the very same method has been since found so by the Honourable Committee for inspecting their Accounts, and departed from as such.

Upon this Subject of Dormer's Deficiency, I must beg leave to remind you of what Mr. Edwards told your Lordships. He said, "That they were all of Opinion, that the Deficiency would be made up; and unless he had believed it, he would not have entred into the Office." If Mr. Edwards, who was so much concerned, was in this Persuasion, why might not the Earl too with Innocence? And, my Lords, this Persuasion, this Expectation, is, I humbly conceive, a very satisfactory Reason, why the Earl, had he been obliged to have declared an Average ex officio, in common Cases, might be excused the doing it in this.

As to the Cases of Chitty and Harper, when the Circumstances which attend them, are laid before your Lordships, the Inferences drawn from each will appear equally unreasonable: For the Earl can no more be supposed to have intended a Concealment of Dormer's Deficiencies by the Order he made, after he had expressly mentioned in open Court the several Accidents, by which they had happened, than he could by the Payment of 1000*l.* to Mr. Lockman, when he told him, that it would be the last Payment Mrs. Chitty was likely to receive, the residue being in great danger from Dormer's Deficiency. But when we prove to you the very great distress Mr. Lockman represented himself to be in, your Lordships will be convinced that the money was by the Earl advanced from no other motive, than a generous and compassionate Regard to him: This at that time was Mr. Lockman's own Sense of it; this he has often since acknowledged, tho' upon his Examination he was pleased to claim it as his Right, and own no Obligation.

I think

I think it will be (I should say, it is already) very full in Proof, that the Earl desired a thorough Reformation of his Court; and tho' Difficulties have obstructed it, yet surely, my Lords, it can't be imputed to any omission of his, in the light the Charge would place it. There were Difficulties, not only with Regard to the Masters and their Accounts, but to their Jurisdiction and Privileges: Difficulties of such a nature, that one of the Witnesses thought they required the greatest Resolution to surmount them. If the noble Earl had not a Resolution quite sufficient, it might perhaps be his misfortune, but surely not his Fault. But what Proposals of Security the Masters could possibly make, which they esteemed useful or convenient to themselves, and the Earl should refuse, I can't conceive. I imagined from the Scheme on which the Charge is founded, that their Interest had been the same, had been one, and what served their purpose must have served the Earl's; and yet now we are told the contrary.

How the learned Gentlemen have made out the several Deficiencies, must be considered, when we are upon their Evidence to that Article: I will only observe, that no permission or encouragement of the Earl's has been proved, by which they are increased; that no Money has been compelled into court, by any Order he has ever made, to advance their Offices, nor any Countenance given by him to any one ill Practice.

How far the Earl is guilty of obstructing the inquiry his Majesty had directed, or how far he was instrumental in deceiving the Council Board, we submit upon their own Evidence: It appears, that at the meeting at Mr. Edwards's House, all of them declared they were able to answer their several Ballances; and when the Subscriptions were Signed, they were believed to be as they had declared themselves: If they were, where was the Fraud in the Proposal to assist each other? Or how could it be understood to make a false Appearance with Propriety of Language, or common Justice? But it is remarkable, that this Advice, however fair and honest, was not given by the Earl, but by Mr. Cottingham, and without his privity or knowledge, and occasionally in Conversation with the Masters: And as to the Subscription, which they added; did the Earl use any Arguments to persuade them to it? Did he press them, or even desire them to Sign it? No, they themselves confess, that he but barely recommended it, as being what their senior Master had made, and better in Form than some others, which were then produced. He used no Arguments, he pressed them not; and they, honest Men (as they themselves have deposed before your lordships) made no Scruple or Objection to it. I beg Pardon: I should do Justice to Mr. Thomas Bennet, who I think had his Scruple to the Word Demonstration. So that if false Representations have been made, they who have made them are the guilty; they have deceived the Council-Board, and not the Earl; the Action was their own, free and unsolicited.

But, my Lords, not to detain your Lordships longer; one of the learned Managers seemed sensible of the force of one Evidence we have to offer in Vindication of the Earl from the Charge of Avarice; and therefore, without denying a publick Fact, he was pleased by his Eloquence to try whether he could not bring Charity itself under suspicion: Whether he could not confound the difference between the most worthy Generosity, and the Luxury and Debauchery, and the Riots of a CATILINE! What innocence is secure against the Power of such Eloquence? My Lords, had he not thought this a Defence against the very Foundation of the whole Charge, he would not have surprised us with such an Answer: He well knew that the Earl could have Orphans and Widows, the poorer Clergy, and the Youth of the University, to appear and acknowledge their Obligations to him: Obligations made greater by being unasked; I cannot say unexpected, because every Object in distress within his Knowledge, had Reason to expect Relief. I would ask the learned Gentleman, whether Expences of this kind were part of CATILINE's Profuseness?

This, my Lords, will be an Answer to their oft repeated Imputations, and must clear the Earl from all suspicion of ever having acted from such fordid motives, or from any thirst or impotence of Gain. Is it likely that he should incourage the highest Villany to raise a Sum, and then apply it to relieve the Poor and the Distress? Is it credible, at the same time, that Virtue and Baseness should thus jointly govern him? Hard indeed is the Condition of the Earl, when his very Virtues, when his most commendable Actions, are turned to his Disgrace and Injury! But under all, it is a great Satisfaction to him, that your lordships are his Judges; and he submits his whole Conduct to your Justice.

Mr. Lingard, Common Serjeant.

My Lords, the Gentlemen that have gone before me upon this Occasion, have so fully opened the Nature of the noble Earl's defence in general, that I shall not presume to take up any more of your lordships Time, by following them in that Method; but shall confine myself to the 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th Articles; and shall beg leave to inform your lordships what we have to lay before you, in relation to the Matters contained in those Articles. But before I proceed, I shall beg your lordships Permission to go out of those Articles, so far as shortly to observe, that in the Preamble to the Articles of Impeachment, where the several Favours and Advantages, which the noble Earl at the Bar received from the Crown, are enumerated, those which were the peculiar Marks of his Majesty's Royal Bounty to him, and those which were the ordinary Benefits and Allowances, which the Earl enjoyed in common with his Predecessors in that Office, are so blended together, and set in such a light, that at least it gives an occasion to mistake some of the latter Sort, for those of the former; if it does not amount to an Insinuation to that Purpose, in order to enhance the particular Advantages which the noble Earl has received, above what they really were.

My Lords, I should be injurious to that noble Lord, who is possessed with Sentiments of the deepest Gratitude to his Majesty, should I endeavour to lessen the Instances of his Royal Munificence towards him: And I purposely omit mentioning any thing of the noble Earl's Merit upon this Occasion (tho' I humbly apprehend that I should be thought very excusable in so doing) because I am sensible, that he chooses to owe every thing purely to his Majesty's goodness: Yet as he has (very properly as we humbly apprehend) in his Answer, set one of those Matters in its true Light; by informing your Lordships that the Annual allowance of 4000 l. per Ann. mentioned in the Preamble to the Articles, and which he admits to have been granted to him, during the Time he should continue Lord Chancellor, is no way particular in his Case; but that the same has, for many Years past, been constantly granted to, and enjoyed by his Predecessors; give me leave, my Lords, for a Proof of what is so insisted on; to refer your Lordships to what appears upon your own Journal, in the Case of the Lord Somers, upon the Impeachment exhibited against him by the House of Commons, for high Crimes and Misdemeanors; where, in the Introduction of the Charge in the 8th Article, this Appointment of 4000 l. per Ann. to him is alledged in Aggravation of that Charge against him. His Lordship, by his Answer thereto, admits, that during his Custody of the great Seal, he did receive the Profits and Perquisites thereto belonging, which before his Time were become very inconsiderable; and that he did also receive an Annual allowance from his then Majesty, of 4000 l. per Ann. being the like Pension that had been allowed to several of his Predecessors. This, we humbly apprehend, plainly shews both that this allowance has been usual, and likewise the Reason of making such allowance; which is the inconsiderableness of the ordinary Profits and Perquisites belonging to that high Station.

I shall now proceed to the Articles I proposed to speak to; in which the Matter, which is charged as Criminal upon the Earl, is, That he did illegally, corruptly, and extorsively, insist upon, take and receive, the several Sums of Money therein respectively mentioned, for the admitting the several Persons named in the 5th, 6th, 7th, and 8th Articles, to be Masters of the Court of Chancery; with a small variation in the 8th Article, by way of Aggravation, that there was a deficiency in that Office; which is there taken notice of: And for permitting Thomas Bennet, as it is alledged in the 9th Article, to resign his Office of Clerk of the Custodies; which is agreed to be a Charge much of the same Nature with that in the four preceding Articles; and is alledged to be against the good and wholesome Laws and Statutes of this Realm.

It has been strongly insisted on, by the Gentlemen appointed to manage this Prosecution, that this is a Matter which is Malum in se, and consequently a Crime at Common Law, as well as expressly against the Statute of 12 Rich. II. and 6th of Edw. VI. and no Means, that could be thought of, have been wanting to represent it under all the most aggravating Circumstances, and in the most odious and frightful Appearance, that the blackest Colours could give it.

My Lords, The Earl, by his Answer, denies that he did at any time insist upon the Sum of 105 l. or any other Sum of Money, to permit or accept of the Resignation of Thomas Bennet, mentioned in the 9th Article; or did refuse to permit or accept thereof, until the said Thomas Bennet had agreed to pay the same, or any other Sum of Money on that Account: Which is a denial of that, which is properly the Charge in that Article: He does indeed admit, that he did receive a Present from Thomas Bennet, under the Circumstances mentioned in the Answer to that Article; and likewise that he accepted the Presents, which were freely and voluntarily sent to him, by the several Persons mentioned in the four preceding Articles; in two of which Instances, all, and in the other two, great part of what he so received, has been returned. But his Lordship very rightly (as we humbly apprehend) insists upon it in general, that the acceptance of Presents upon such Occasions has been long used and practised by his Predecessors; and that they have been reckoned as the antient and known Perquisites of the said Office: That it is not Criminal in itself, or by the Common Law, or against any Statute of this Realm; or subject to any Judgment, which can be prayed in this Prosecution.

The Gentlemen of the House of Commons, my Lords, in order to support what they have insisted upon, and to make it appear that such an Acceptance of Presents is Criminal, have caused the Statute of 12 Richard II. to be read to your Lordships; and have produced Mr. Ayres, to give an Account of the Ceremony, which is annually practised upon the Occasion of Nominating of Sheriffs.
