

WORK ON NEW WYNNEWOOD ROAD IS GOING ALONG STEADILY

Work on the rebuilding of Wynnewood road goes along steadily. There have been some delays which could not have been avoided and which are always more or less incident to any good sized job.

So marked will be the improvement over the old road, however, that folks can well afford to be patient. When the road is finished it will put Narberth on the map in the most favorably light and will be a model for all communities seeking solution of difficult road problems.

One matter is connection with the construction of the road that has caused considerable difficulty has been the question of drainage. In this instance the service of the foremost expert in the country has been called into the case. With the execution of the drainage plan recommended by him it is believed the new road will be free from any serious drainage troubles.

NO FURTHER DANGER FROM SHARKS NEED BE FEARED

At a meeting of the Main Line Fishing Club the present epidemic of death from shark bites was discussed and these deep sea navigators did not delay deciding that it was up to the club to come to the rescue of humanity, or at least that part of it which wets itself in the Atlantic.

From now on it may be stated with confidence that no one need have any hesitancy in bathing or swimming, in the big pond, as the well-known Narberth organization has made up its mind to either catch or scare away any and all of the saw-toothed monsters that may be lingering in nearby salt water.

Only low grade fishermen—namely drop-line artists—will be selected for the job. The true sportsmen of the club, the real anglers, that is, will not be called upon. There are really but two drop-liners in the club, but these will be sufficient for the purpose. Any old fish, be he shark or sucker, has no show when he comes to stack up against the two expert hand-liners of the club, namely Messrs. Cummer and Verna. As these two champions are ready to get to work at once, all seashore folk have had a terrible load lifted from their shoulders. There is just one proviso to all this, namely, if the weather be the least bit rough, the sharks may be permitted to linger a few days or until the sea becomes smooth, as neither of the two worthies mentioned, in view of recent experiences, will care to venture on his voyage of mercy until all danger of seasickness is absolutely removed.

NARBROOK PARK TO BE COMPLETED SOON

It is reported that Narbrook Park will soon make a vastly different appearance to those who are observing the progress being made. Grading and seeding the ground are about all that remain to be done and these do not require much time to complete, but will make a decided change in the entire appearance of the project.

The same day Richard Odiorne, Herbert McCarter, Richard Compton and Edward Odell returned to Narberth, after a week's stay.

This camp is open until September 4th. Are you interested? If so, get full details from Secretary Hampton.

WHEN? July 22d and 23d. Leave Saturday afternoon. Return Sunday evening.

This is one of the most delightful and inexpensive of week-end trips. A full program or one just made to suit you, from the time you land till you return.

Do any of these features interest you: Base ball, tennis, hand ball, swimming, pocket billiards and billiards? If so, you had better go along. Phone or see Secretary Hampton immediately as reservations must be made.

Don't miss this opportunity to spend a most pleasant week-end. You'll feel better all week. Phone Narberth 694-W. Do it now.

MEN—VACATION

The Country Club of the Young Men's Christian Association of Philadelphia, at Dwight Farms, Downingtown, Pa., opened for the season on Saturday preceding Decoration Day and will close October 1st. The resort is open to members of any branch, department or division of the Young Men's Christian Association of Philadelphia and to the members of any other association who may be the temporary guests of these associations. Those who are members of other associations and not the temporary guests of the Philadelphia associations may, upon presentation of their membership cards, secure a pass from the executive secretary entitling them to the privileges of the resort, limited to the time of the stay. By the terms of the trust, the resort is open only to white members over eighteen years of age. Members may bring guests to spend the day, and excursions may be arranged for through the executive secretary or the secretaries of the different associations, departments or divisions.

Equipment.

Six comfortable cottages, each equipped with single beds, bath room and running water. An attractive dining hall, situated on the edge of the plateau, where an unsurpassed view may be had, and where refreshing breezes constantly keep the dining hall cool and inviting. The clubhouse, with its library, victrola, writing tables, pocket billiard and billiard tables, chess, checkers and other games, has two extensive fireplaces and wide verandas, one side overlooking the base ball field.

In the open, one will find a particularly good base ball diamond, tennis courts ready for use, hand ball court and swimming pool. These features and the good fellowship that prevails, the impromptu entertainments, music, sports and competitions, the camera room and the shower baths, make the Country Club an ideal summer resort for the man of moderate means.

The plateau upon which the club is placed rising over 500 feet insures cool breezes, invigorating air, and extensive views overlooking the Chester Valley, which form ever-changing pictures.

Much of the vegetables, fruit, milk, cream and other supplies are produced on the place, which assures an abundant and attractive table.

Rates.

There are no fees or charges beyond those for board and lodging. The rate for board and lodging, covering all other privileges, is $1 a day. Saturday afternoon to Sunday evening, $1.50; dinner, 50c.; breakfast and supper, 35c.; lodging, 35c. The moderate cost and the absence of fees and extras make this a vacation place second to none other.

Why shouldn't Narberth get a party to go up over some week end? Are you interested? If so, see Secretary Hampton for details, booklet, etc.

Do it now.

Peat is being used as fertilizer in greater quantities in the United States—$350,000 worth in 1914, against $170,000 worth in 1913.

WAYNE DEFEATS NARBERTH, 3-2

Overcome Lead and Score Three Runs in Seventh Inning— Fielding of Wallace a Feature

With a lead of two runs in the seventh inning, the Narberth boys thought the game was practically won, but in Wayne's half of the seventh inning they scored three runs, which Narberth could not tie up, which then necessitated the Boroughites going into second place, with the R. G. Dun & Co. in the lead again with a margin of one-half a game.

With Mayer going very steady and only four hits off his delivery, the Wayne team found itself and collected three runs which came from five hits, one being a double and Murphy being hit by a pitched ball.

The local aggregation scored the first run of the game in the fourth inning when Koons was hit by a pitched ball and Fleck singled, placing Koons on second. Dave Bennis then uncorked a two-base hit to center field, scoring Koons, after which Mellon was thrown out at first base and Fleck was out trying to score.

The Narberth team scored their second run of the game in their half of the sixth inning when Humphries led off with a single past second base, and Wallace was safe when Brooks dropped Weaver's throw at first, advancing Humphries to second. Koons then advanced both runners with a sacrifice, on which play Humphries was thrown out at the plate.

This ended the scoring for the Narberth team and looked like a pretty safe lead until the lucky seventh for the reorganized Wayne Club.

The fielding features of the day were carried away by Wallace for the Narberth team, while the work of Patterson for the home club excelled.

NARBERTH PLAYS AT BON AIR NEXT SATURDAY

In order to facilitate matters, the Narberth Base Ball Club has engaged several motor busses for the carrying of the local rooters over to Bon Air. The charge is twenty-five cents for the round trip, and the busses are scheduled to leave Narberth in front of the Y. M. C. A. at 2.15 sharp. It is hoped that a large quantity of the royal rooters will accompany the team to Bon Air.

Base Ball Pickups.

The Narberth team plays Cape May Wednesday and Thursday of this week at Cape May. See the Philadelphia papers for the results of the game, also next week's Our Town for timely notes.

Wallace still shines at the initial sack for the Boroughites.

Half a game behind Dun again.

Fleck had two hits, Koons, one, that being a triple in the first inning. Hard luck.

Hard game for Mayer to lose against his old teammates.

The rooters were very much against Mayer.

To the Editor of Our Town:

In your next issue will you please be so good as to publish some information with regard to the grading of Sabine avenue?

This work was started with a great hubalaloo one Saturday morning about two months ago and has never been touched since then.

Any information you can give as to why the work was stopped so suddenly and when it will be started again will, I am sure, be of much interest to the community and especially those living on or near Sabine avenue.

Yours very truly,
L. H. Williams.

To the Editor of Our Town:

Our "Year 'Round Home Town" has reason to be proud of its well kept lawn, its beautiful shaded streets and its comfortable homes.

But it can also boast of being a real suburban town—a suburban town to be attractive to urban people must have "country" nearby. Narberth has beautiful rural scenery within a fifteen to twenty minutes' walk of the station.

The following poem is literally true to Narberth:

Just Up the Road.

Just up the road are wondrous things,
The kind of things the summer brings,
That seem to come and go on wings.

Green fields refreshing to the sight,
Soft shining in the morning light,
Deep glowing at approach of night.

High knolls where you may win a view,
Stonewalls where chipmunks peep at you,
Tall ferns that wave the summer through:

And trees that give delightful shade,
A brooklet where the children wade.
In joyous hours that never fade.

Gay flowers are nodding all the way,
But changing hues from day to day,
So evanescent is their stay.

Round hills and evergreens galore,
And lovely wood-paths to explore,
For beauties that they have in store:

'Tis true that these last through the year,
But later on you'll call them drear,
Enjoy them while the summer's here.

The mossy carpets for your feet,
The air with piny odors sweet,
Ripe berries tempting you to eat.

The birds and bees and insects too,
Don't let them be sealed books to you
But read them ere the season's through.

As on and on the roadway winds,
One ever some new beauty finds;
'Tis many things to many minds.

WHERE WERE THE VOTERS?

Less than 250 of our voters cast ballots at the special school election last Saturday. Where were the remaining 200 or 300 voters? Some were on vacations and some were out of town on week-end trips, but we believe that the majority of those who did not vote were right here in Narberth!

Wake up friends and neighbors, and act as though you really believed in a democracy. It takes more than a hat-off-and-a-stand-up when the band plays the Star-Spangled Banner to make a good citizen of a democracy, and, to use a somewhat overworked editorial word, we "opine" that democracy and its prerogatives should begin at home.

CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATIONS.

In the lobby of the post office is posted a notice of United States Civil Examinations.

Positions for which examinations will be held are there listed. Further information may be obtained by those interested from the postmaster.

LOCAL SPARKS.

The fine maple trees along Woodside avenue have been attacked by some insect that has done considerable damage. It is hoped that the residents will be able to check the blight before it makes any more headway.

One of our residents informed the editor the other day that he was making a collection of discarded envelopes found around the railroad station, and that his collection to date included some of our best known citizens.

We are wondering how much better the town would look if folks who have vacant properties adjoining their homes were to forget where the dividing property line ran and were to run their lawn mowers over the "vacant" front lawns at least. There are several instances in the borough where otherwise fine avenues are marred by the uncut lawn on several vacant properties.

Let's see, weren't there to be two additional waste paper cans to be placed near the station? The railroad has been on the job and replaced the old cans on railroad property, with new ones; now we hope, that the other two cans are put into "action."

A WORD TO THE NEW RESIDENTS

For the information of the lately arriving residents of Narberth we announce again that to purchase postage stamps and stamped envelopes in the local post office is of great advantage to the office as its advancement is based upon the sales. We aim to be courteous and obliging. We also want to do business with our patrons. Edward S. Haws, Postmaster.

HAVE YOUR MAIL ADDRESSED TO YOUR BOX NUMBERS

Patrons of the post office should endeavor to have their mail addressed to their box numbers, as delays are frequently caused in the delivery of letters due to the address being simply given as Narberth, even when street and number is given it is frequently necessary to look up the name in directory before the mail can be cased up, causing extra work as well as necessary delay.

BETTER FACILITIES FOR POST OFFICE

Narberth post office is unable to take complete advantage of the second-class privilege owing to the lack of room in which to place the equipment that a second-class office is entitled to, such as modern casing racks sorting tables, cancelling machine, filing cases for supplies and records, sack racks for outgoing mail and many other things too numerous to enumerate. These will be secured when new quarters are provided.

SILAS BLAND'S LITTLE EXPERIMENT

I.

MOST men have a hobby, and rule. As a matter of fact, rey, was no exception to the in the fair county of Sur-Silas Bland, of the Beeches, one hobby did not satisfy him. He dabbled in nearly everything—chemistry, photography, geology, numismatics, mechanics, mesmerism, all had their attractions for him; but of recent years the inventions of Edison, the famous electrician, had absorbed the greater part of his attention. And now, as an elderly man of independent means, the sole occupant of a large and handsomely-furnished mansion, he gave up the greater part of his time to the study of the wonderful productions of the man he so much admired. It goes without saying that signs were visible all over the house of the old gentleman's proclivities.

Visitors never required to ring to gain admittance; in fact, there was no bell visible. The stone slab in front of the door yielded slightly to the pressure of the visitor's foot, and, as a consequence, an electric peal notified the servants of an arrival.

Telephonic communications reigned supreme, and from all the principal rooms in the house the master, without seeing his servants, could give his orders while sitting at his desk or reclining in his arm-chair. A complete set of electric burglar alarms attached to every door and window on the ground floor had hitherto afforded him immunity from nocturnal visitors, but as he contemplated shutting up the house for a month or so while he sought a change of scene, it behooved him to think of some method of subduing a burglar who, in spite of "war's alarms," knowing he was in an empty and isolated house, might defy the noisy demonstrations of the bells and proceed with his looting.

Silas settled himself to think it out one night, and a quiet chuckle at the end of an hour's meditation would have convinced a listener, had there been any, that he had worked out a plan to defeat and capture any bold emulator of Bill Sykes who might attempt to carry out his designs against the Beeches.

Now, Silas Bland's very latest "pet" was an improved Edison phonograph. It was a never-ending source of delight to himself and his friends to listen to the records of American orators and musicians which accompanied the machine. Then, with a large supply of blank cylinders he was prepared to preserve for posterity the voices of those friends who were privileged to speak into the wonderful machine. In some cases the reproductions were marvelous, and to strangers it would appear as if the voice they heard actually proceeded from the mouth of the person who, perhaps six months ago and three thousand miles away, had spoken into the machine.

For the benefit of those who have not had an opportunity of examining this delicate piece of mechanism, it may be as well to explain that as soon as the sound which it is desired to record has been graven upon the wax cylinder by the actions of the needle, obedient to the vibration aroused by the voice, it may be reproduced immediately by the reverse action. And not only once, but thousands of times. The cylinder, almost noiselessly revolved by an electric current, will receive and, in turn, deliver an oration of three minutes in length, every inflection of the voice being reproduced with absolute fidelity. Here, then, was Silas Bland's opportunity to defend his hearth and home during his absence and that of the servants.

He invited an actor-friend to dinner one evening, and afterwards got him to deliver certain carefully-prepared sentences in a stentorian voice, and in a most realistic style, into the phonograph.

A trial showed that the effort was most successful, and Mr. Bland soon afterwards completed his little arrangements, shut up his house, and departed on his holiday with a light heart and a curiously self-satisfied smile.

II.

Now, it happened that soon after Silas Bland's departure, one of those poor, oppressed, and down-trodden "knights of the jenny," William Macnamara by name, but more commonly known as "Bill Mac," being in the neighborhood of the Beeches one day "on business," cast an envious eye upon the apparently deserted mansion.

William felt particularly low just then, as his old and tried pal, Augustus Montgomery, had just been sentenced by a pessimistic judge to "eighteen months' hard" for some alleged trifling inaccuracy on the part of Monty, as Bill affectionately called him.

Bill had spent his all in his endeavor to get his chum off, but to no purpose, and now here he was, depressed in pocket and spirits, without a trust-worthy pal to work this likely "crib," as he termed the Beeches. Bill had made it a rule never to work single-handed. He preferred, being naturally of a timid and nervous disposition, to keep watch outside, while his more adventurous companion investigated indoors; but this looked like a safe thing, and in any case "needs must when the devil drives," and Bill wanted money badly.

Guarded inquiries in the neighborhood satisfied him that the house was absolutely unoccupied. Rumors were indeed current that extraordinary precautions had been taken with regard to window fastenings, etc., but, given a dark night, and an uninhabited and isolated house, what true burglar gives a thought to such trifles? So it did not take friend William very long to make up his mind to have a try. From all accounts the silver was of the right sort, and stowed away in the house. A survey of the premises led him to the conclusion that the library was the weakest point of attack. On the ground floor, with double French windows leading directly on to the lawn and easy of approach, there would be no difficulty in cutting a hole in the thick glass and undoing the bolts or catches.

Now, by a strange coincidence, Mr. Silas Bland had arrived at a similar conclusion in regard to the point of attack, and had made his arrangements accordingly. So that, when one dark evening Mr. William Macnamara had effectively used his diamond-cutter upon the library pane, had undone with as little noise as possible the folding glass doors, and had carefully slipped into the room, this was the sort of reception he met with.

There was no fussy alarm of bells as he had half expected, but as he felt his way along the wall before displaying the light of his lantern, a gentle whirring sound caught his ear, which he attributed to a dissipated moth having followed him into the room. Then he received a severe shock as a strong, hearty voice from out of the darkness broke upon his ear with the remark: "Ha, so you've come along, then! Glad to see you. Been expecting you for some time. Got you covered all right with both barrels, so take my advice and don't move. These express bullets made a nasty hole. Now just drop that revolver on the floor, and—ah! would you?" Bang!

William thought his last hour had come, as a shot, so close was he to the spread of the powder, nearly blinded him. He had made a movement as if to use his pistol, and this was the result. He was on his knees in an instant, crying out, "For hevin's sake, gov'nor, don't shoot. I am a lamb, I am. Starvation driv me to it. Gie me in charge, but spare my life."

behind you, and that the slightest movement means eternity for you."

Here the voice stopped abruptly with a sharp click, which William, with fear and trembling, thought he recognized as the snap of the lock over a fresh cartridge, so he remained rigid.

Then silence reigned, though he could hear the whirr of that uncanny moth, which seemed to have survived the rifle discharge.

III.

William realized that sooner or later, in response to that shot, assistance would appear, and he resolved after many internal tremors to make an appeal to the owner of the voice for clemency. So, still with his face turned to the wall, and in a most apologetic tone, he managed to falter:

"I feel my bloomin' 'air a-turnin' grey, sir. This 'as bin a hawful night for me. I can't 'ardly set on this chair wi' fright. Won't yer let a pore bloke off this time, sir? This shan't 'appen again, you bet, sir. I am on the straight after this little bit o' fun, I tells yer. Jest think o' the old 'ooman and the kids, guv-nor."

No response, and that moth is still audible in the midnight air.

"Blow that cussed insect," muttered William. "Don't I wish I was 'im; wouldn't I clear out o' this precious sharp."

"Ain't ye got a word, sir, for a chap as is sorry 'e's disturbed ye? I suppose the coppers will be here in a minute or two; won't ye give us a chance, sir?"

But the gentle William's appeals seemed thrown away, and as footsteps were heard approaching, he resigned himself to the inevitable. The policeman's bull's-eye soon discovered Mr. Macnamara in a most abject state of terror. Bearing in mind the awful result if he moved without instructions, he yelled to the officers, who were now in the room, to keep their hands off. "'E 'ad 'is instructions, 'e 'ad," and he wasn't going to move till they had altered what he felt sure to be the deadly aim of that rifle, or had its owner's permission to remove him.

"You get the guv'nor to say it's all right," he shouted. "I don't want to take no risks."

The policemen grinned broadly, and in spite of William's protestations, faced him round on his feet and securely handcuffed him.

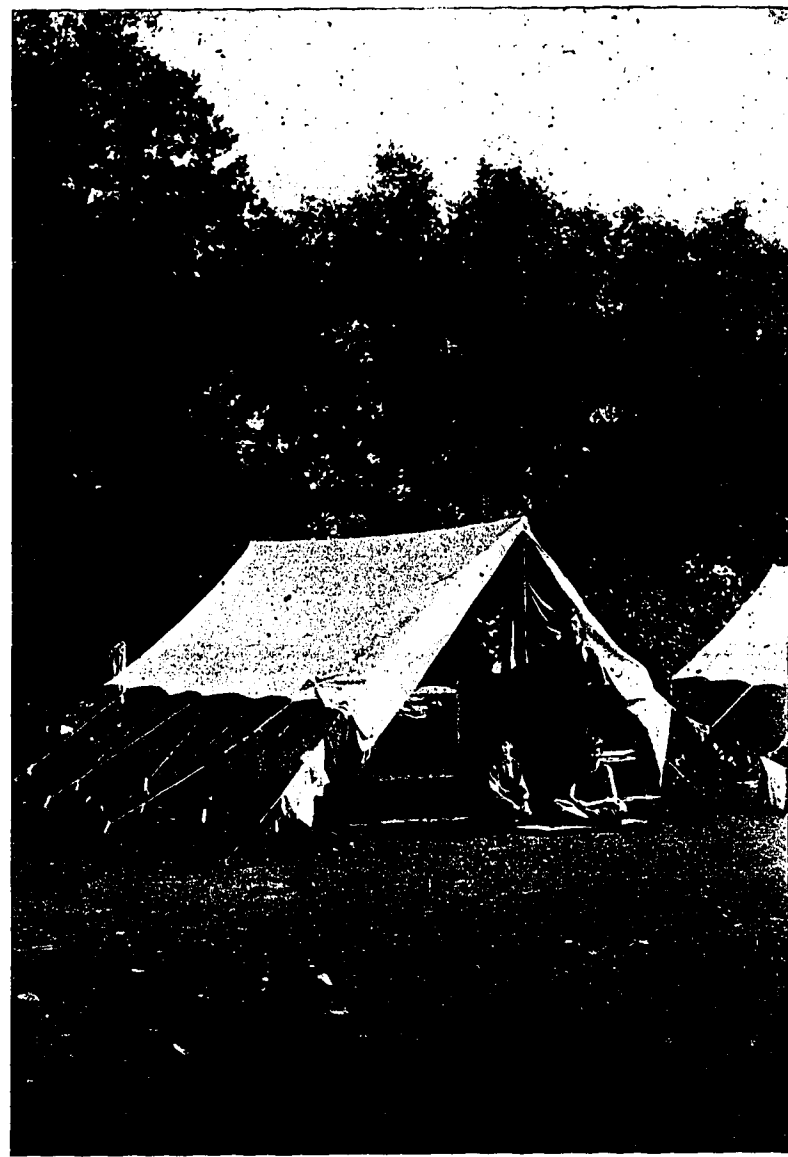

"That's all right," one of the men said, "the guv'nor won't interfere just yet; this'll bring him home sharp, though."

"Bring 'im 'ome?" echoed Bill. "I should jest like to know where 'e's been for the last 'alf hour."

"Oh, Mr. Bland's in Scotland safe enough; but I expect his little machine made things lively for you in his absence"; and the two men laughed.

"Machine!" ejaculated Bill, in an incredulous tone. "I wants to see the machine that can talk and shoot like that."

The officers turned their lantern on the unassuming little instrument, which had been the cause of all Mr. Macnamara's mental and physical distress. There it was, quietly whirring away, having come to the end of its repertoire. The revolutions of the driving wheel, which regulated the movement of the cylinder (still rotating) had caused the sound which William fancied was due to an erratic moth. A large trumpet-shaped funnel attached to the diaphragm had increased the volume of the voice, and rendered the sentences of Mr. Bland's actor-friend only too audible to poor Bill. An attachment between the phonograph and the window had set the machine in motion as soon as the entrance was tampered with, and the interval of a minute or so before the voice commenced was purposely calculated, in order that the burglar might get fairly into the room. The discharge of the rifle (blank cartridge) after the appropriate words, was arranged by an electric contrivance of Mr. Bland's own, on the supposition that the intruder would show fight.

He was so satisfied with the result of his experiment that he made it as easy as possible for William at his trial. Bill's language and reflections on his grasping the true position must be left to the reader's imagination. As that gentleman was sent to join his comrade for a similar period, he was heard to remark in soliloquy, "Billy, my boy, yer don't know enough to be a decent cracksmen. After this, better run straight." And he did, too.
