Such are the principal changes and improvements intended by the new proprietors of this paper, which has never pretended to enter in competition against its powerful rivals, but by the liberality and liberality of its principles, and which on that account has deserved the patronage of the public. The editorial part of the Bee being still continued to the same person, the liberal principles which have always been advocated in its columns during the greatest heat of political discussions, shall continue to be the motto of the Editors, but faithful servitors of the public and of our sacred institutions, they will never hesitate upon all necessary occasions, to take an independent stand in favor of the rights of the people - they will not be the less ready to scrutinize at all times the official conduct of any public officer who might be wanted in the performance of his duties. Such is the motto which the public before whom they now appear themselves as candidates, for a continuation of the patronage heretofore granted to this paper, will soon be able to feel in the sincerity of their services, and the number in which they will fall them, is the only criterion by which they are to be judged.
