THE VAUXHALL GARDENS were opened last evening, and presented a display of taste and skill, comfort and conveni. race that we did not anticipate for a commencement. The preprietors appear to be spirited and experienced. They must have been at great expense, and certainly deserve well of encouragement and aid to the individual who (teatless of encouragement and aid to the individual who (teatless of the public. With the improvement of the health of the city will be concomitant the increase of the population, trade and wealth. In 1810 the population of the city was but 17,242; in 1800, it was 27,176; and in 1830, it was 46,310-while now there is a permanent population averaging 55,000 and a transitory approximating 25,000.

The value of the exports from the city is nearly 40 million dollars; and that of the imports is about 8.

The banking capital of New Orleans averages 40 million dollars; but the floating capital approximates 400 million. Through the tributary streams of the Musissippi, products come or will soon come to the city from lake Eric by the Ohio; from lake Michigan by the Illinois; from the northwestern territories by the Missouri and upper Mississippi; from the borders of the Pacific ocean by the Red, White and from the borders of the Pacific ocean by the Red, White and the special entertainment, and, for aught we knew, the instruction of our fair cenders. Les feinings aux Etats Unis, Arkansas river; from Texas by the Red River and the Sabine. and shortly from Tonnessee, Kentucky, Mississippi and Virginia, by the railroad hence to Nashville, and its lateral branches-being an extent of country of almost 10 million square miles, or 6400 million square acres. Nor will New Orleans cease with these her gigantic strides an the highway of improvement. The city is midway between Boston and Mexico; and with all the cities between those places, she will shortly centend in commerce and means of travel. The Atlantic perboard line between New York and New Orleans will manifest or augment the extent of our resources. The packet lines which are expected to be established hence to different ports in Europe, will not only be an admirable outlet for our exports; but will afford facilities for imports, which must concentrate most of the interior merchandize and marketing in this city. The want of these lines have been full too sensibly already, not to awake the attention and speculation of the concentration of the interior merchandize and marketing in this city. The want of these lines have been full too sensibly already, not to awake the attention and speculation of merchandize and speculation of merchandize are served to the interior merchandize and speculation of merchandize and marketing in this city. The want of these lines have been full too sensibly already, not to awake the attention and speculation of merchandize and premature destruction." Blue eyes and hack have are a very pretty union, more scientifically accounted for than accurately observed; for, unless our own eyes deceive us, it is not more frequent than elsewhere. M seems to have engrossed the trade of the eastern parts of the eyes deceive us, it is not more frequent than elsewhere. M Mediterranean: Philadelphia has penetrated to China; Baltimore to the regions of South America—while New Orleans has scarcely dared to venture for her imports beyond the gulf of Mexico: hense the value of her imports is but one. so great as they certainly would be, were the commodities

Bulwer had indeed provoked satire, not only from his caricature of Scotchmen in Paul Clifford and most of his writings; but from his continued attacks on Sir Walter Scott—which have been very illiberal in many instances. Tenayson fiell under the disapprobation of Lookhart, by an attack on his edition, the first opin for the candor of an intelligent critic, ditigently seclecting the beautes, yet designating the defects. In a second edition, Tennyson wrote a stanza by way of satire on that criticism—the supposed wit of which consisted in telling Christopher North that the poet forgave him as his praise. Most critics generally find all their praises similarly forties of genius. Bulwer had indeed provoked satire, not only

While zorrow's memory is a sorrow still.

Dr Madden' also fell under the lash of Lockhart, from some remarks on Sir Walter Scott. It is indeed too true that most enticisms are created or controlled by private feelings: the satirical remarks made may indeed be more or less correct; but the critic might have passed over errors, if private motives did not instigate to their exposure. Such is unfortunately the infirmity of man, kindly blind to the defects of a friend; but ready to casp at those of an enemy.

Lockhart's translation of Spanish poems, emittles him to that most enticisms are created or controlled by private feel-

'Les femines aux Etats Unis,' Women in the United States, -such is the caption to an article in the March number of the Rorac Francaiss, extracted fom a work recently published in France by M. de Beaumont, sent a gear or woo since to this country by his government to examine and report upon State prizons. While performing his public duty, which he did most efficiently, M. de Beaumont like a gallant Franchman, varied his occupation of discovering the beauties of our pentientary system by studying the beauties of our women, and we are sure that none but a countryman of Louis XIV. could have seen so much in so short a time. He commences thus:—

"American women have generally well cultivated minds, but httle imagination, and more sense than sensibility. They are pretty: those of Baltimore are famed above all others for

The nairect of this is delegisful. The unconsciousness of the writer that in this one passage, in which he describes so triumpliantly the French woman, he is revealing one of the chief causes of European deprayity, is villy edifying. It is like a man opening his mouth to deseant on the beauty and indispensableness of good teeth, thinking that he has them, and displaying to his hearers by the act a head ful of hollow relices and blackened stumps.
