MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I shall support the provision as reported by the committee, and if the language of the committee was stronger, and could go further towards repressing the evil of stock gambling in this State, I should support it more heartily. If there is any one evil, above all other evils, that is affecting the people of California to-day, it is the evil of stock gambling, in my opinion. And as I believe it a part of wisdom to legislate, and to treat of the evils that we have, and not of those that have ceased to operate, and gone out of existence years and years ago, I propose, in so far as I can, to have a clause in the Constitution repressing this evil, and if the introduction into the Constitution of new clauses for the purpose of repressing this evil should bring upon us the laughter of the people of to-day or of succeeding generations, I am willing to stand my part of the laughter. I feel upon this subject very much as the old darkey is represented to have felt, when he asked the white friend of his to write him a letter, which he wanted to send to a rival in the affections of a certain lady. The young man asked, "What shall I say?" "Well," says the old darkey, "you can commence 'hell and damnation,' and grow hotter and hotter as you go on." Upon the subject of stock gambling that would be the kind of clause I would introduce into this Constitution, and clinch it as much as it would be possible to do. I have no more sympathy with a stock gambler than I have with any other kind of gambler. If we are going to protect this kind of gambling I am in favor of having lotteries and gift enterprises—a new way of getting around lotteries; and I do not see why three-card monte, and, equally, why the national game of faro should not be attended with all the dignity that it once held among men. I read a definition not long ago of what buying and selling stocks upon margin was, and it strikes me as being a most admirable definition of that transaction. It is about as Mr. Wilson and Mr. Terry gave it, except that it is a little more sententious. It said that the transaction was one where the man who sold that which he did not have, and the man who purchased, was a man who had nothing with which to purchase. That was selling stocks upon a margin. After all other kinds of concentrated capital has been let loose upon the people of this State, unrestrained by law; after Stanford has thrown to each all that he sees proper; after land monopoly can run right along with all the fraudulent transactions of the Land Office that can be conceived of to monopolize the land; after all the water can be taken up in the like way and under like transactions; after all these things can be concentrated in order to rob the producing classes of this State; then it is that this stock gambling board is reared up in this City of San Francisco, which is intended for the benefit of the washerwoman and the hands who work in the harvest field, as a place for all their little loose cash. It is held up as a glittering prize by which they can become millionaires; that they can make a short road to fame and fortune: that they can grow up and be the O'Briens; and they can be these great names that are constantly kept before the people by the public press of this State; and the whole people of this State are set in a flame with the idea of obtaining fortunes by gambling, or in any other way than that of patient industry by which a nation succeeds and is exalted. If it would not be improper here I would just say that righteousness exalteth a people, but sin is a reproach to any nation. We would come under that saying in a very short time more. I hope there will be no elimination; that there will be nothing that will make this section thinner, or more like milk and water. I want it concentrated and stewed down until it will be like one of those concentrated drinks frequently taken on California street. I want it concentrated and made strong, if it is possible, so far as I am concerned. I am induced to say this much because I told those who voted for me that when this proposition came up I would say it, and then I would vote it. I have said it to redeem that pledge and to discharge the duty I owe to my conscience. And having said it I am not the least afraid that any lobby will prevent me from voting it. I will be on hand to vote it whenever the vote comes.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: As I moved this proposition in the committee which has excited some discussion here, and I have no doubt, if we adopt it, will excite a great deal more throughout the State, I propose to say a few words in support of the proposition. First, permit me to say, with regard to the last clause, that that was inserted after the committee had agreed to the proposition as I had first moved it and after a motion to reconsider. I confess I was not entirely satisfied with it, and believe still that it ought to be amended; and if some gentleman should move such an amendment, I would be in favor of making that clause read this way: "All contracts made in the stock board or other stock market for the sale of shares of the capital stock of any corporation or association, on margin or to be delivered at a future day, shall be void; and any money paid upon such contracts may be recovered by the party paying it, by suit in any Court of competent jurisdiction."

I do think there is some point in the objection which has been made as to the manner in which that last clause reads with reference to sales in all other places. The object of the committee is to remedy what I believe to be the greatest evil of the Pacific Coast. I am disposed to believe it is the greatest evil in our whole country anywhere; and it is not confined, as some suppose, to one class or locality. The evil is widespread. It extends all over the State. There is scarcely a town in the State of California that has a telegraph station, that does not daily receive the reports of the sales of the stock board in San Francisco for the information of the numerous people in the different locations throughout the whole State, who are engaged in stock gambling. It is confined to no particular class. It includes all—professional men, merchants, laborers, rich and poor, of every condition in life; and, as the gentleman says here, ministers also. In fact I remember as an illustration of the widespread nature of the evil in one community, that it was said, during the great mining excitement in San Francisco about three years ago, that the ministers were so absorbed in this mining speculation, that when stocks were about at their highest, a certain clergyman was heard to close one of his prayers with "over three hundred and fifteen—amen!" The manner of doing business has been referred to by gentlemen, and I need not dilate upon it. Everybody who has been in San Francisco "knows how it is himself." A good many of us have been there, not on the inside, unfortunately. I have no connection with stocks myself; have not had for a long time. I am aware that there is a great deal of good advice given—some of it for sale, some of it that is given freely. One of the very best points perhaps which they give and which is thought to be a certain rule and not fail, is to "buy 'em when they are low and sell 'em when they are high." My friends lost most of their money by buying them when they were low and they went a good deal lower.

The Committee on Legislative Department thought this was an evil which ought to be treated in this Constitution, and therefore we put in this brief proposition:

"The Legislature shall pass laws to regulate or prohibit the buying and selling of shares of the capital stock of corporations in any stock board, stock exchange, or stock market under the control of any association."

We could not reach the sale of stocks elsewhere. The object of this is to give the Legislature the authority to regulate or prohibit the whole business; and I believe if the Legislature should do so, it would remedy one of the greatest evils the State has ever known. I think, when the passions of this hour have passed away, and the history of the great excitement in San Francisco shall come to be written, it will be found that the real source of the great public discontent in this State, especially in the City of San Francisco, was the widespread ruin occasioned by speculation in mining stocks, sold in the boards. The object of all law is to commend what is right and prohibit what is wrong. We have proposed in this section, so far as possible, to authorize the Legislature to prohibit this great wrong. I do not propose, however, to discuss this matter any further. I hope that the Committee of the Whole will agree to the section as reported by the Committee on Legislative Department, and while I do not wish to discuss this last proposition, I will say, if the gentleman from San Francisco will move an amendment to insert the words as I have stated, so as to confine these transactions, so far as sales on margin or on time are concerned, and rendering such contracts void, to the contracts connected with the sales in the Boards, I should vote for it. I do not see any difficulty in that respect.

MR. MCCONNELL. I demand the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, to strike out all after the word "association," in line seven.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty-six by inserting the words 'gambling and' after the word 'prohibit,' and before the word 'the,' in the second line."

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: The amendment is only to prohibit gambling.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I think there is no necessity for that amendment. The Legislature has always prohibited gambling. This section is intended to affect a very large interest in this country, and the word is unnecessary. There is no necessity for instructing the Legislature upon that subject. I prefer to have it passed as reported by the committee.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I offer a substitute for the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all down to the word 'State,' in line four, and insert as follows: 'No lottery, nor any gift enterprise, nor any scheme in the nature of such, shall be permitted in this State; and it is hereby made the duty of the Legislature to prohibit the sale of lottery or gift enterprise tickets, or tickets in any scheme in the nature of a lottery or gift enterprise.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kern, Mr. Gregg.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I will call the attention of the committee to the fact that the section, as reported by the Committee on Legislative Department, is not as strong as the old section of the present Constitution. The present section says that the Legislature shall have no power to authorize lotteries. I do not apprehend that it is necessary to prohibit the Legislature from authorizing lotteries or gift enterprises, and I am unwilling to leave out the prohibition of the present Constitution. That expressly says that no lottery shall be permitted in this State, nor shall the sale of lottery tickets be allowed. Now, the section, as reported by the committee, departs from that and says that the Legislature shall have no power to authorize lotteries. Now, I apprehend that it will be better to outlaw lotteries, to prohibit lotteries and gift enterprises the same as the old Constitution does, say that no lottery nor gift enterprise, nor any scheme in the nature of such, shall be permitted. That will be substantially the provision of the old Constitution, and then I have added, "and it is hereby made the duty of the Legislature to prohibit the sale of lottery or gift enterprise tickets or tickets in any scheme in the nature of a lottery or gift enterprise." This goes a little farther than the present Constitution does in this. That, whereas the present Constitution only prohibits lotteries in the State, and does not prohibit the sale of lottery tickets of other States in this State, this will prohibit the sale of foreign lottery tickets in this State. It is a large business. The sale of tickets in the Havana lotteries, the Mexican lotteries, and the numerous schemes gotten up in the various States on the other side of the Rocky Mountains is carried on extensively in the City of San Francisco, with ramifications all over the State, all over the coast. It is that I wish to prohibit.

MR. MCCALLUM. If you will just insert section twenty-seven of the old Constitution, that "No lotteries shall be authorized by this State, nor shall the sale of lottery tickets be allowed," that will cover the whole ground. I do think there is a little omission in the phraseology.

MR. REYNOLDS. My amendment goes a little farther than that. Everybody knows that a Constitution is not self-executing, and we simply provide that the Legislature shall enforce the provision. I have added that it is especially made the duty of the Legislature to prohibit the sale of lottery or gift enterprise tickets, or tickets in any scheme in the nature of such, in this State.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds.

The amendment was rejected on a division, by a vote of 35 ayes to 42 noes.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I move to insert, to precede the section, the present section of the old Constitution, "No lottery shall be authorized by this State, nor shall the sale of lottery tickets be allowed."

MR. HAGER. If the gentleman puts in, as an amendment, the section of the old Constitution prohibiting lotteries, and the sale of lottery tickets, then he ought to strike out the provision that the Legislature shall pass laws to prohibit the sale of lottery tickets.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: If I know anything of the English language, this section is complete and ample, and all that is necessary is reported by the committee, and to prefix anything before it would be simply surplusage and tautology. It would be repeating the same thing over again. It is complete as it is. It says, "The Legislature shall have no power to authorize lotteries or gift enterprises for any purpose." Very well; it has no power to authorize it. "And shall pass laws to prohibit the sale of lottery or gift enterprise tickets, or tickets in any scheme in the nature of a lottery in this State." Now, I submit that it covers the whole ground, and if you repeat it forty times you would not, and could not, make it more comprehensive than it is. First, it prohibits the Legislature from authorizing a lottery or gift enterprise for any purpose. Then it goes on to say that the Legislature shall pass laws to prevent the sale of lottery tickets or gift enterprise tickets. I submit that to prefix anything would be surplusage. There is no need of anything more than is expressed in that section. It covers the whole ground.

[Cries of "Question," "Question."]

THE CHAIRMAN. There is no question before the committee at present.

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by striking out the words 'or prohibit,' in the fourth line."

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. Mr. Chairman: I offer that because the effect of the section is to destroy, as must be well known to every gentleman, associations which are formed, and which have been formed in all commercial cities, for the purpose of carrying on stock operations. Every large city has a stock exchange, and almost all stock transactions are carried on in that way, through brokers in stock exchanges. It is not to be supposed that a person who may desire to buy or sell a few shares of stock would want to go to San Francisco for the purpose of transacting that business himself. I do not see any way in which that class of business can be transacted except through the stock exchange. It seems to me that it is granting too much license to the Legislature to say that they shall prohibit one of the grandest institutions of the world, and that is the stock exchange.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to striking that out, sir. It says, "The Legislature shall pass laws to regulate or prohibit the buying and selling of the shares of the capital stock of corporations in any stock board, stock exchange, or stock market under the control of any association." It only applies to these private stock boards. I think it is right. It does not apply to sales in open market, but only where the stock board is controlled by an association where they shut the public out.

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. It says in any stock board. There no free stock boards. It is so all over the world. I do not expect this amendment to be voted for; I merely want it to be shown where I stand on it.

MR. HAGER. These stock boards in San Francisco are not open to the public; you cannot get into them unless you have a permit. I do not buy stocks, and I do not sell stocks, but I know, to get into the stock board, you have to have a permit. It is under the control of some association. If it was public, I would say that the words "or prohibit" ought not to be there, but, as I understand this section, it does not apply to public places; and that association can exclude anybody they see fit.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I think the section can be adjusted by striking out the first line and the second line down to the word "prohibit," and inserting in lieu thereof the words, "no lottery or gift enterprise shall be allowed for any purpose in this State, and the Legislature shall;" and then it reads right on.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tuolumne, Mr. Walker.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty-six by striking out down to the word 'prohibit' in line two, and inserting the words, 'no lottery or gift enterprise shall be allowed for any purpose in this State, and the Legislature shall.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The question was put.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is no quorum voting. There is evidently a quorum in the house. I will put the question again.

The question was again put.

THE CHAIRMAN. Only seventeen in the affirmative; manifestly a minority of the committee. The amendment is lost.

MR. HERRINGTON. That is a majority of those voting.

MR. MCCALLUM. I ask leave to read my amendment to section twenty-six: Insert, "No lotteries shall be authorized by this State, nor shall the sale of lottery tickets be allowed;" and strike out all between the words "shall," in line one, and the words "pass," in line two. That will meet the objection of the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

A division was called for and the question put.

THE CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting. There is manifestly a quorum in the house. The Chair will put the question again.

The amendment was rejected, on a division, by a vote of 28 ayes to 51 noes.

CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no further amendment to section twenty-six, the Secretary will read section twenty-seven.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 27. When a Congressional District shall be composed of two or more counties, it shall not be separated by any county belonging to another district. No county or city and county shall be divided in forming a Congressional District so as to attach one portion of a county or city and county to another city and county; but the Legislature may divide any county or city and county into as many Congressional Districts as it may be entitled by law.

CORPORATIONS.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no amendment to section twenty-seven. The Secretary will read section twenty-eight.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 28. The Legislature shall pass laws for the regulation and limitation of the charges for services performed and commodities furnished by corporations, and where laws shall provide for the selection of any person or officer to regulate and limit such rates, no such person or officer shall be selected by any corporation, and no person shall be selected who is an officer or stockholder in any corporation.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section twenty-eight. It is provided for in sections nineteen and twenty of the article on corporations.

MR. TERRY. I do not see it.

MR. SCHELL. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by inserting after the word 'corporations,' in line three, the following: 'other than railroad and other transportation companies.'"

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee: Section twenty-eight as reported by the committee, as the same now reads, seems to me to be in conflict to a certain extent with certain sections adopted and forming a part of the article on corporations other than municipal. In that article we have designated three persons as Railroad Commissioners, who shall have power to fix the rates of fare and freight, and generally have control of the railroad and transportation companies of this State. Now, section twenty-eight, as the same now stands, says the "Legislature shall pass laws for the regulation and limitation of the charges for services performed and commodities furnished by corporations." Here the Legislature is given the power to regulate charges and generally to control corporations, and in the article on corporations other than municipal, we give this power to three Railroad Commissioners. There seems to be an apparent conflict between the Legislature and these three Railroad Commissioners. I think, Mr. Chairman, that this can be avoided, and unless an amendment be offered to that effect, I propose, at the proper time, to offer the following amendment: by inserting after the word "corporations," the last word in the present section, "Provided, that nothing in this section shall be construed to give to the Legislature the authority to act contrary to the provisions of article ——, of this Constitution, relative to corporations other than municipal." That is, to prevent the Legislature from having any power or authority over those things specially given into the hands of the three Commissioners; and unless we make this express reservation there will be a conflict of authority. I am not in favor of striking out the present section. I am not in favor of the motion of the gentleman from Kern, to strike out this section, because if this section is stricken out we will have no right or authority to control companies and corporations other than railroad corporations. I believe that the present section gives us the power to control water companies, and if we were to strike this out we might not have the power to control the Spring Valley Water Company and other gigantic water companies. I will read it:

"SEC. 28. The Legislature shall pass laws for the regulation and limitation of the charges for services performed and commodities furnished by corporations, and where laws shall provide for the selection of any person or officer to regulate and limit such rates, no such person or officer shall be selected by any corporation, and no person shall be selected who is an officer or stockholder in any corporation."

A water company furnishes a commodity. Of course, under this section, the Legislature has power to fix the rates of charges that a water company can charge for its water. Unless a section of this character be contained in the Constitution, water companies and companies other than railroad corporations may escape under their charters. They may claim exemption from legislative control. I believe the section to be absolutely necessary in order to control these companies which furnish the commodities of gas and water. I believe the section as it stands should remain, word for word, with the addition that the Legislature shall have no power, by reason of the existence of this section, to in anywise control the acts of the Railroad Commissioners. I think the section ought to remain as a part of the Constitution.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: When this section was reported, which was, of course, before the Committee of the Whole had acted upon the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, it was intended to cover all corporations, by providing that the Legislature should fix the rate of charges for services and commodities. Since the adoption by the Committee of the Whole of the twenty-second section of the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, this section, perhaps, ought to be modified. That is, to insert after the word "corporations" in the third line, the words "other than railroad and other transportation companies."

THE CHAIRMAN. That is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Stanislaus, Mr. Schell.

MR. TERRY. That is all that is necessary. The Legislature has all the powers we do not prohibit them from exercising; but we can require of them to do some things, and they are here required to pass laws for the regulation and limitation of charges for services performed and commodities furnished by corporations.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I would ask the gentleman if the effect of the amendment of the gentleman from Stanislaus would be to simply except those corporations over which the Railroad Commissioners are to have control?

MR. TERRY. That is what I understand.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Then I am satisfied with the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I rise more for information than anything else. This section seems to be very general. It says that "the Legislature shall pass laws for the regulation and limitation of the charges for services performed and commodities furnished by corporations." I see no limitation in it. Now, I would like to know whether it is intended that the Legislature shall regulate the charges for services performed and commodities furnished by all corporations? It seems to me that it would be imperatively their duty, for another section of the Constitution makes this mandatory. Now, would it not be obligatory on the Legislature to regulate the price of all services by all corporations, and all commodities of all corporations? For instance, if we had some of these corporations that have been mentioned by the gentleman from Monterey, Mr. Wyatt, for hatching chickens, raising pigs, etc., it would be obligatory upon the Legislature to fix the price of chickens and pigs.

MR. WYATT. I think those gentlemen would disincorporate then and it would act most admirably.

MR. ROLFE. It would require them to set a price upon the blankets of this woolen mill over here—they are now incorporated. They must go into these details. And I would just suggest would it not be advisable for us to amend our previous section limiting the session of the Legislature to sixty days? Now, I do not know as there is anything wrong in it but it seems to me that it would be imposing a great labor upon the Legislature, whereas the intention is to relieve them of business. With that understanding I think I shall vote in favor of striking it out.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: If gentlemen will look at proposition number two hundred and thirteen, on file, they will find this proposition. I confess that the effect of this would be to require the Legislature to pass laws to regulate all that class of corporations which are generally known as monopolies. The proposition, as I presented it, will be found numbered two hundred and thirteen, in this language: "Corporations other than municipal may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special Act. All laws heretofore passed, or which shall hereafter be passed in pursuance of this section, may be altered from time to time, or repealed."

That language occurs in the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, and therefore it should be omitted here. Therefore it should start in at this place: "Laws shall be passed for the regulation and limitation of the rates of freights and fares, and the rates of gas and water, and other services and commodities performed and furnished by such corporations. In case of the selection of any persons or officers to regulate such rates, they shall be selected as may be provided by law, which shall in no case authorize the naming of any such person or officer by any corporation."

MR. TERRY. Suppose a wharf company should monopolize all the frontage on the City of San Francisco.

MR. ROLFE. The Legislature has the power to do it anyway.

MR. MCCALLUM. I think the language is not sufficiently specific; that it might be made more so, so as to cover the particular kind of corporations that the gentleman means. But as to the point of the gentleman—that same point was made in the committee, and I confess I thought there was something in it. It was answered that it would do no harm, as no action would be taken. Perhaps that is a sufficient answer. I confess that I would prefer the proposition as originally presented, with perhaps some slight amendment, so as to meet the point made by the Chairman of the committee, so as to legislate on that class of corporations doing business for the public at large. Therefore, when an opportunity shall present itself—I believe there are a couple of amendments pending now—I propose to offer an amendment to cover that ground. With reference to the conflict between this section and the article on corporations other than municipal, that can be remedied by inserting, after the word "corporations," in line three, the words "except as otherwise provided in this Constitution," because the report of the Committee on Corporations does not cover other transportation companies than railroad companies. If you put in "except railroad and other transportation companies," you leave other transportation companies than railroad companies wholly unprovided for, either in the report of the Committee on Corporations or in this article. The point is, that in the railroad article it refers exclusively to railroad corporations. I am aware that others thought it would bear a different interpretation, but the Chairman of the committee held that that was the object.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. It is evident to me that this section requires some examination, and we cannot get through with this article to-night. I move, therefore, that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Legislative Department, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

RESOLUTION.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. President: I ask leave to introduce a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the State Controller be and is hereby ordered to issue warrants to be used in transmitting memorials relative to Chinese to the President of the United States, Senate and House of Representatives, Governors of the Pacific States and Territories, and to all the Governors of the several States of the United States, to the amount of five dollars in favor of the Secretary, for purchasing postage stamps, and for other correspondence of the Convention.

Referred to the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses.

NOTICE.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. President: I send to the desk a notice I want to give.

THE SECRETARY read:

Mr. President and gentlemen of the Convention:

I give notice that I intend to rise to a question of privilege on Monday, the twenty-third day of December, at two o'clock P. M., in regard to certain criticisms on my conduct in connection with articles five and six relative to calling a Constitutional Convention for the State of California; for the free exercise of my own judgment, and having a desire to represent my constituency with extreme fidelity, I was cited to appear before a private caucus to answer, and was ignominiously expelled.

Herewith is appended a correct copy of such citation:

SENATE CHAMBER, December 21, 1878.

P. F. Dowling, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: In accordance with resolution passed at meeting of the Constitutional Club, held Thursday evening, December twentieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, you are requested to attend the meeting of said club, to be held this evening, in room fifty-nine, State Capitol, and show cause, if any, why you acted contrary to the wishes of said club in relation to the election of representative to fill vacancy occasioned by death of B. F. Kenny.

Yours respectfully,

JAMES N. BARTON, President.

J. FLYNN, Secretary.

MR. TERRY. Mr. President: I move the Convention do now adjourn.

THE JOURNAL.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, and the same approved.

Carried.

MR. AYERS. Mr. President: I ask that the proposition presented by me on Saturday and referred to the Committee on Apportionment and Representation, be referred to the Committee on Legislative Department. I understand that the Committee on Apportionment and Representation is not in working order.

THE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT—CORPORATIONS.

MR. TERRY. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Legislative Department.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section twenty-eight, and the amendments offered thereto, is pending before the committee. The Secretary will read the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Mr. Gregg moves to strike out the section.

"Amendment by Mr. Schell:

"Amend by inserting after the word 'corporations,' in line three, the following: 'other than railroad and other transportation companies.'"

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer an amendment, to go in after the word "corporations," in line three.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert after the word 'corporations,' in line three, the words 'in all business in which the public has a use.'"

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I will state that this is the language of the Elevator cases. I do not understand that we have a right to control the business of corporations in any other class of cases except that in which the public has a use. That is the language used in the Elevator cases. The Chief Justice says:

"When, therefore, one devotes his property to a use in which the public has an interest, he, in fact, grants to the public an interest in that property, and must submit to be controlled by the public for the common good, to the extent of the interest he has thus created."

Now, we are going as far as I think the recognized principles of law, as they have been determined by the supreme tribunal of the country, have gone, and not beyond it. For instance, we have in this country corporations for the manufacture of soap, and the gentleman from San Bernardino suggests, for the manufacture of blankets, and for the manufacture of brooms, and all that class of business in which the public has no interest, and therefore I see no propriety and no necessity for acting upon that class of business. Let us act upon that class of business in which the public has an interest. That is as far as the Supreme Court of the United States has gone, and, I think, is quite far enough, and will cover every evil at which we aim. Therefore I hope that the Chairman of the Committee on Legislative Department will agree that that amendment is correct.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I do not suppose that there is any very great objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles; but the idea of the committee in reporting this section was, that there should be no corporations except for public benefit. That is the rule which is laid down in the books, that corporations are not formed for the profit of the individual corporator, but are rightly only formed for such purposes as are beneficial to the general public. In that view of the principle it occurs to me that there would be properly no corporation which the public had not the right to use; and it was the purpose of the committee to discourage the formation of corporations, simply for the private advantage of the corporators.

REMARKS OF MR. GREGG.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: I heartily support the amendment of Mr. Howard, and in fact, withdraw the motion to strike out the motion made by me on Saturday. The section as it originally reads does not meet the evil that is complained of in debate. I believe that the water companies, the gas companies, and the wharf companies are engaged in business in which the public has a use. This section is not directed at individuals. I suppose that these gas companies and water companies could put all their property into the hands of an individual in trust for them, and still go on with their monopoly. This word "corporation" seems to be sufficient for the Convention. If the word "corporation" is there, they expect to go at it like a trout for a worm. I cannot see that the report of the committee brings about any good results. It simply makes them change their form of business, and allows them to continue their monopoly. The evil is nothing if the word "corporation" is not there. They go for it simply because the word "corporation" is there. Now, then, under the statute, a corporation can be dissolved, and can sell its property. A water corporation can do so, a gas corporation can do so, the telegraph companies can do so, and then you have nothing to resort too but the common law, and your Constitution is no good to you at all. It is simply there as a catchpenny, and amounts to nothing that is real. If it had meant business it should have said "individuals, or corporations engaged in a public employment," which would have included the words of the Supreme Court of the United States, and would have included all classes of business. But as it is, it is insufficient.

MR. HOWARD. I would say to my friend from Kern, that under the amendment which I have offered the Legislature would have the right to control the water companies in their charges for the distribution of water both in the cities and for irrigation purposes; and also gas companies.

MR. GREGG. I admit that, but you do not include the word "persons," or "individuals."

MR. HOWARD. If you suggest that amendment I will accept it.

MR. GREGG. I will suggest that the word "individuals" be inserted into the amendment offered by General Howard.

MR. SCHELL. Would it include telegraph companies?

MR. HOWARD. It will include them, of course, because they are corporations in which the public has a use. I will except the case of individuals, because in the Elevator cases it was not a corporation.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment of Mr. Schell will not prevail. I hope the amendment of Mr. Howard will prevail. The amendment of Mr. Schell proposes to insert in line three, after the word "corporations," the following words: "other than railroad and other transportation companies;" so that the section will read: "The Legislature shall pass laws for the regulation and limitation of the charges for services performed and commodities furnished by corporations other than railroad and other transportation companies." Now, if these words are inserted, it clearly limits the Legislature from doing anything in relation to the regulation of railroad or other transportation companies, and we do not propose to prevent the Legislature from acting in regard to railroad and other transportation companies where the power to act has not been exclusively given to some other body. We have given the power to regulate fares and freights to a Railroad Commission, but we have not lodged all power in that Railroad Commission. There may be a great many things to be done which the Railroad Commission would have no power to do. In the course of time, as new matters arise, it may become necessary to enact laws and to regulate in particular departments and directions where the Commission would be powerless, and the Legislature ought to have the right in the premises wherever the power is not specially conferred upon the Commission. But, if you go and cut the Legislature off absolutely from acting at all, then the Commission not being able to act, and the Legislature also being unable to act, of course, by inserting the words that Mr. Schell has suggested, you virtually legislate in favor of the corporation. There is no doubt but what cases may rise where there ought to be a discretion lodged outside of the Commission, and it seems to me that the insertion of the words offered by Mr. Schell, preventing the Legislature absolutely from doing anything at all in relation to corporations and transportation companies is very dangerous. Very dangerous! And in the course of years may prove to be suicidal to this State. I am opposed to it. The amendment of Mr. Howard is a proper amendment.

MR. BROWN. I would like to hear that amendment read.

"Insert after the word, 'corporations,' in line three, the words, 'in all business in which the public has a use.'"

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I am willing to accept the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I understand that General Howard consented to the suggestion made by my colleague from Kern to insert the word "individuals," after the word "corporations."

MR. HOWARD. Let me see how it would read.

MR. MCFARLAND. I understand that the gentleman from Los Angeles accepted the amendment to insert, after the word "corporations," the word "individuals."

MR. HOWARD. I think it had better be omitted and an addition can be made to the section afterwards to cover the case of individuals.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend by inserting after the word "corporations," in the third line, the words "and persons."

MR. BEERSTECHER. (Soto voce.) Vote it down.

MR. HOWARD. There is no objection to it.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is no such amendment before the committee as yet.

MR. BEERSTECHER. The idea of the Legislature regulating private business enterprises.

MR. MCCALLUM. I have not heard any amendment read. I will offer an amendment to prevent the apparent conflict between this section and the article on corporations.

"Insert in line three, after the word, 'corporations,' the words, 'except as otherwise provided in this Constitution.'"

MR. HOWARD. I second that amendment.

MR. SCHELL. I rise to a point of order. That amendment will strike out the amendment of General Howard.

MR. MCCALLUM. Not at all.

THE CHAIRMAN. It cannot come in after the word "corporations." We have already adopted an amendment to follow the word "corporations."

MR. HOWARD. The gentleman might make that precede the section.

THE CHAIRMAN. It can follow the amendment, but it cannot precede it. I think it will read badly, but I will put the question.

The question was put.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is no quorum voting. There is evidently a quorum in the committee. Those in favor of the amendment will rise and stand until the Secretary counts them.

[Cries—"Read, read:"]

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will not prevail. I do not see any conflict between this section and section twenty of the article on corporations. This says: "The Legislature shall pass laws for the regulation and limitation of the charges for services performed and commodities furnished by corporations." Now, if the Legislature should pass laws or regulations in conformity with the action of the three Railroad Commissioners, there would be no objection to that. Then section twenty of the article on corporations has nothing in regard to commodities furnished. Then it goes on—Mr. Howard's amendment—"in all business in which the public has a use; and where laws shall provide for the selection of any person or officer to regulate and limit such rates, no such person or officer shall be selected by any corporation, and no person shall be selected who is an officer or stockholder in any corporation." There is nothing in conflict in these provisions. Beside that, we cannot tell what may be done with section twenty. I would prefer to allow the section to stand as it is, for the time being at all events. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I think that the original section is good enough if the word "corporations" is limited, and if I get an opportunity I shall offer an amendment limiting it to telegraph, gas, and water companies. I think that will meet the case exactly. If an opportunity presents itself I shall offer that substitute.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I am very much surprised that there should be any objection to this amendment. In the article on corporations it is provided that the Commissioners to be elected by the people shall regulate the freights and fares of the railroad companies. This section, as it now reads, provides that the Legislature shall regulate the rates in all cases of services performed or commodities furnished. Certainly it is inconsistent with what we have done on the subject of railroads. The object of this amendment is to except what we have already agreed to. We cannot act intelligently, it appears to me, except by assuming that the Convention is going to ratify what has been done in Committee of the Whole. To leave the section to read as it now does, without this amendment, is to adopt a section here contradicting what we have already adopted in Committee of the Whole on corporations. I have paid a great deal of attention to this section, and I have drafted it in a great many ways.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda will be adopted. I think it cannot possibly do any harm, and it may be that it will do a great deal of good. That amendment removes all doubt.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda. Now, it is evident that this Convention does not want to indorse any principle that will come in conflict with anything that has been done heretofore. I find in section twenty of the article on corporations, as indorsed by this body, that "said Commissioners shall have the power, and it shall be their duty, to establish rates of charges for the transportation of passengers and freight by railroad or other transportation companies, and publish the same from time to time, with such changes as they may make; to examine the books, records, and papers of all railroad and other transportation companies," etc. Now, should we pass this and give this power to the Legislature, and it would appear by this section twenty-eight to be given entirely to them, it would be directly in conflict, in my opinion, with what has been done already, and would to a great extent destroy section twenty of the article on corporations as it has been adopted by the Committee of the Whole. I am, therefore, in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, that there may be no conflict whatever, and that the provision may be clear in this respect and agree with that which has gone before.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. MCFARLAND. I offer an amendment to section twenty-eight.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by inserting after the word 'corporations,' in line three, the words 'and persons.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment is out of order. The committee has already adopted an amendment to follow the word "corporations."

MR. MCFARLAND. This is an independent amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think so.

MR. MCFARLAND. I do not understand——

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair has decided the question.

MR. SCHELL. I move to insert the words "persons or," before the word "corporations," in the second line.

MR. McFARLAND. I second the amendment.

MR. HOWARD. That is right, Mr. Beerstecher, let it go.

MR. BEERSTECHER. No, it is not. Mr. Chairman: I hope that an amendment of that character will not prevail. The idea of placing into a Constitution a provision that the Legislature shall have the power to fix, and regulate, and limit the charges for services performed, and commodities furnished by persons. That would allow them to regulate the price of a pound of butter, or a hundred pounds of wheat. The thing is absurd. The people who read the Constitution would laugh and sneer at it. It is encroaching upon private rights, and I hope it will be promptly voted down.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: If this Convention, or rather the Committee of the Whole, want to make themselves extremely ridiculous, and their actions and conduct such, it will be very proper for them to support this amendment, offered by Mr. Schell. I cannot see how any man can be so blinded as to fall into this trap.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will be adopted. I do not see anything ridiculous about it, and I think it would be extremely ridiculous if we should not adopt it. The gentlemen opposing this must be laboring under the impression that we would give the Legislature power to regulate the price of everything that any person had to dispose of. That is certainly a mistaken idea; it is only commodities and services in which the public have a use, and if the gentlemen will refer to section one thousand two hundred and thirty-eight, and one or two sections following, they will see that this is strictly in accordance with the Codes of this State regulating the right to exercise eminent domain. Now, that section does not use the words "person" or "corporation," does not apply to either, particularly, but the right of eminent domain can be exercised in any manner in which the public have a use. Now, I understand that the object of this is to direct the Legislature to pass laws to regulate the price of water and gas. If a corporation appropriates water out of some of the streams, which they can do under the Act of Congress, for the purpose of supplying water to some city or town, they are subject to control and regulation because the use is public; but according to this provision, without the amendment, if an individual appropriates the water and furnishes it to the city or town, although the public have the same interest, yet then the Legislature cannot regulate the price. Now, I say it makes no difference who it is that performs these services or furnishes these commodities—whether it is an individual or a corporation—the public interests are the same; therefore, I say, when the use is public, and not private, the Legislature should come in and regulate the price, or should have the power to regulate the price; but when the use is strictly private of course there would be no sense in the Legislature coming in and regulating the price. As was said by the gentleman from Los Angeles, a corporation formed for the purpose of making butter and cheese, manufacturing blankets, and such things, is not a public use any more than an ordinary drygoods store. But where the use consists in supplying a city with gaslight, and where the person or company who is supplying that gaslight have a monopoly—maybe the only company or person who is authorized or who can come in and supply that gas or water—then I say that the Legislature should have the right and it should be their duty to come in and regulate the price. Under the laws of Congress, as they stand now, I, as an individual, could go and locate a ditch for the purpose of taking out water, where it had not been previously appropriated, for the purpose of supplying water to a town, and it might be the only source of supply of water for that town, and I, by my diligence as an individual, go and appropriate all the water, and take it out of that river, and make a ditch and supply the town with the water, then I have a monopoly of that water, and unless I incorporate myself as a corporation the Legislature cannot regulate the price of that water. I may own all the water, appropriate it, or by some other means own all the water which would supply a whole neighborhood for farming—and I know of such instances existing in this State—and the whole neighborhood will be dependent upon the supply of water which they will have to purchase of me. It is, in the highest sense, a public use. Now, if this section stands as it is now, without this amendment offered by the gentleman from Stanislaus, then that right of the Legislature to regulate the price of water is restricted to corporations, and unless I go and form a corporation of myself, or associate three or four other gentlemen with me, I am not subject to control. I have a monopoly in that case where I have all the waters to supply a whole neighborhood for farming, or a whole town for domestic use, and it is in the highest sense a public use, and the whole neighborhood or town is at my mercy because I am an individual and not a corporation. According to these Elevator decisions, where it is a use that is public, the Legislature has a right to come in and regulate the price, and it makes no difference whether it is supplied by a corporation or an individual. If the gentleman will take the pains to read the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the Elevator cases, he would see that it does not apply to corporations any more than to individuals. It is the use that governs the case.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of this amendment, for the same reasons stated by Judge Rolfe, and for the further reason that in the article on corporations, in regard to railroads, where we have made transportation companies common carriers, and not individuals, it will give the Legislature the power to control freights and fares where an individual runs a railroad and owns a railroad; whereas, otherwise, neither the Commission nor the Legislature would have all the powers that the State should have under the Constitution. It is held by many, and I presume it is the law, that the Legislature would have the power without any provision in the Constitution—but then there might be a doubt when the State, by its Constitution, undertakes the whole power. Now, in the article in regard to railroads it is provided that all railroads and transportation companies shall be common carriers. If an individual owns a railroad, or if an individual owns a steamboat line, he is not a common carrier under the Constitution, but he must be a company to make him a common carrier—that is, if you go on the idea that you are confined to the definition in the Constitution as to what is a common carrier. Now, I hope that when we go back to that it will be remedied. It is better to have the Legislature control this than not to have any power in the State to control it, which may be the case under some construction. I do not see why one individual doing the same that a corporation is doing in any business in which the public have a use should not be subject to the same control.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: It appears to me that this amendment will embrace, in the connection in which it would stand, more than any man would desire. Now, it seems to be admitted by the gentleman from Kern, and I suppose would be regarded as a correct principle in law by the members of this Convention, that the Legislature would have the right to regulate corporations, but I do not believe that it is admitted that without a constitutional provision, the Legislature would have any right to regulate the charges for services performed by individuals; and it is upon this ground that I would utterly object to the position taken by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, because, in every case of service performed by individuals, the Legislature would be called upon to regulate charges; and not only called upon, but it is mandatory. In selling fruit, in selling grain—anything of the kind, the Legislature shall pass laws for regulating and limiting the charges. It is a plain case. Now, I am not under the impression that this body wishes to descend to any such course as this, or to the indorsement of any such principle as this. Besides, the inconvenience and evil would be manifest. Now, I am under the impression that it has been intended to regulate the business of corporations, but let this amendment come in, and it comes down to all private dealings; and the Legislature shall do it—not only may, but shall regulate everything of this nature; that is, charges for services performed and commodities furnished by individuals. Now, this is not buncombe; it is the fact of the case. That is what it would do. In this ridiculous way this Constitution would be loaded down. I am in hopes that all such amendments at this time and henceforth will be promptly voted down.

MR. LEWIS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one or two questions? I would like to ask if he contends that this Convention, or any body of the people in the State, can give the Legislature any more power than they have?

MR. BROWN. They can give to them any power that is put into this Constitution, and make it mandatory.

MR. TERRY. Can we give the Legislature any power? Can this Convention confer any power upon the Legislature?

MR. BEERSTECHER. No.

MR. BROWN. I must admit that Judge Terry is rather heavy timber to run against, but if this body says so it is so.

REMARKS OF MR. LEWIS.

MR. LEWIS. Mr. Chairman: I presume that this Convention takes this position that the Legislature has the control, or has the power to control, the operations of individuals or corporations where their operations become public, and when they are engaged in a business in which the public has a use; that this Convention can confer no power on the Legislature to control individuals in their individual action, but if an individual, as an individual, enters into any business by which his business becomes public, where the community at large is dependent upon his action for their welfare, under the common rule of self-protection, the Legislature would be compelled, or ought to, at least, and would step in and control it the same as if he were a corporate body. In certain towns in this State there are corporations for the purpose of taking wharfage. They control some portions of the waterfront and individuals own other portions of it. Without this amendment the individuals, not being controlled, could freeze out the corporate bodies, and cause them to abandon their business.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the Convention: I find that the amendment which was offered by General Howard, and which was adopted, materially changes the reading of the whole section, and when I objected to the insertion of the word "persons," it was considering the section as it stood without the amendment of General Howard. The amendment of General Howard, following the word "corporations," in line three, reads, "in all business in which the public has a use," so that if the words, "persons or," were inserted it would read: "The Legislature shall pass laws for the regulation and limitation of the charges for services performed and commodities furnished by persons or corporations in all business in which the public has a use;" and in the light of the amendment which is put to the section by General Howard, I am in favor of the words, "persons or," being inserted. If the section read as it was originally, of course the words would be objectionable because it would give the Legislature the right to interfere with private business. It certainly would raise the question as to the right of the Legislature to interfere with private business; but as it stands with this amendment it limits the interference of the Legislature to those classes of business in which the public has a use. Of course whether the business be performed by an individual, by a single person, or whether it be performed by a company, or by a corporation, as long as the public has a use and an interest in that business, the public ought to have a right to regulate it. That, certainly, was the decision in the Elevator cases; and therefore I am in favor of the amendment.

MR. ROLFE. We accept your apology.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me there is danger of going too far—the danger of going so far that what was a good purpose may end in an absurd result. Now, if I understand the purpose of the amendment, it is to insert the word "persons," and if I understand the result of it, it seems to me it would be to make a very bad section in our Constitution. If we propose to fix this matter so that the Legislature shall regulate the price of all services performed and commodities furnished, certainly we are going much too far. I cannot consent to any such proposition as that.

MR. HOWARD. I will ask the gentleman, whether we insert it or not, if under the decision in the Elevator cases the Legislature would not have that power anyhow.

MR. CROSS. It would in certain cases; but that modification has not been made to this section.

MR. HOWARD. They have the right under the Elevator cases. The Elevator cases refer to a private company. The Supreme Court held that the Legislature had the right to regulate it, because it was a business devoted to a public use. Now, whether we insert it or not, the Legislature has the power.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: In answer to this interruption, I have to say that I have studied the Elevator cases with great care, and I understand why the ruling was made as it was. It was because the prosperity of the whole Northwest depended upon that case. Let me amplify what I mean. In Chicago there was a system of elevators in connection with the system of railroads. A man shipped a carload of wheat to Chicago; that carload of wheat was sampled by a Commissioner; when sampled by the Commissioner, the wheat was dumped into a bin of the same grade of wheat—grade one, two, or three, as the case may be. Then when the man went to get his carload of grain, he could not get his own grain; he could simply get a carload of grain out of the same class of wheat into which they said his had been dumped. He could not see where it had been dumped, and he could not ship to A, B, or C. He could ship his grain and it went into whatever elevator the railroad chose to dump it. Now, sir, these companies, and the elevators themselves, attempted to take control of private property, and to do it by such rules as they saw fit to adopt, and hence the Supreme Court of the United States said that they would protect the public good. I do not pretend to say that the Supreme Court of the United States ever did intend to say that the Legislature could fix the price which A, B, or C could charge for his commodities or for his services. No power in the State has a right to say that a man shall work for one dollar a day. If we can do this, we can say that the State can corral Mr. Grace, and say that he shall work for a dollar a day. We do not want anything of that kind in the Constitution. I do not believe that any member of this Convention does. In this State we have granger stores. They produce eggs, sugar, tea, etc. If we adopt this amendment we will make it mandatory on the Legislature to say what the price shall be that they may charge for their commodities. This word "commodities" should be defined by those gentleman who put it into this section, and so also should the word "services," and if we add to it this word "persons," we shall make something monstrous in the way of a Constitution. To say that the Legislature shall regulate by law and shall limit the charges to be charged for services performed by persons, and commodities furnished by persons, would be something ridiculous, and I cannot consent to it.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: The section reported by the committee does not fully define the terms, but it is just as good because the word corporation, as defined by section thirty-three of our Constitution, is this: "The term corporations, as used in this article, shall be construed to include all associations and joint stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships." It is apparent how words have a tendency to throw the whole section into ridicule. I do not entirely agree with the proposition which has been presented here, that the Constitution of the State of California can confer no power upon the Legislature. At any rate, I believe that it can practically confer power in this view. After all that has been said about what has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, it is a fact, that the Supreme Court of California has not expressly passed upon these questions. The decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States are not necessarily authority in the State of California, in cases arising in our State Courts. It is argument, it is reason for such decision. I suppose were we to insert in the Constitution of the State, that the Legislature shall have the power to do some certain things, that no Court in the State of California would ever go behind that declaration in the Constitution; and that is one reason, perhaps, why this should be asserted as to the power; but so far as the phraseology of this section is concerned it expresses more—that is, it says that the Legislature shall pass laws for the regulation, limitation, etc., and the provision agreed upon in the Bill of Rights, declares that the provisions in this Constitution shall be mandatory, and in no case directory. Then here is a mandatory expression to the Legislature. I will assume, however, that the Legislature has this power, which it has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States to possess. In that view it is unnecessary to assert it in this section. The theory heretofore upon which it was argued that corporations could be regulated as to their charges, was, at least so far as understood in California, generally, because they were corporations; and it was under that clause of section thirty-one, article four, which gave the right to alter or repeal the Acts under which corporations were organized, that that authority was claimed. In the case decided by the Supreme Court of the United States it seems to proceed mainly upon another ground, because the services performed or the commodities furnished were a public use. Now, if we insert the words "persons or," before the word "corporations," as suggested by the gentleman from Stanislaus, there would be some embarrassing questions arising as to what might be deemed public use when furnished by persons; but when furnished by corporations we have that authority, and there is reason why it should be exercised, for the two following reasons: First—Because corporations are for the public use; next, because the services performed and the commodities furnished are by corporations, which, as I have said, include all associations and joint stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships. If this committee seriously would desire to adopt such a proposition as that which has been suggested here, it had better be done by a separate section. I hope that the friends of this proposition, and I certainly regard it as a very important one, will stand by the proposition as it has been presented. I confess that my preference would have been to specifically name every great corporation which we recognize as a monopoly. I have thought upon this subject a good deal, and can think of none except gas companies, water companies, and the telegraph companies. That includes all the great corporations, and my preference would have been to have inserted them in general terms.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Are not the words "public use" well understood in the Courts?

MR. MCCALLUM. I think so. Well, I will not say to what extent they are understood in this country.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Would not that prevent objection in this case?

MR. MCCALLUM. I think that while the words "public use" are pretty well understood, that there are questions that might arise which would be very questionable. I believe in Europe the "public use" has been held to extend to the furnishing of bread, to the price of loaves of bread, as well as to the weight of loaves. At any rate there is no necessity of embarrassing our action here by inserting such a proposition.

MR. ROLFE. Do you think the Legislature should regulate and limit the charges which this carriage manufacturing company shall charge for their carriages and wagons?

MR. MCCALLUM. I think not. Whether that would be the effect of the present section or not I am not prepared to say; but to avoid that, and to avoid all questions of that kind, I hope that my fellow delegates, if they agree with me upon that proposition, will yet restore the original proposition, so that so far as commanding the Legislature is concerned, we shall specify the corporations that we refer to—water companies, gas companies, and telegraph companies. I do not mean by water companies the companies furnishing to the cities and towns alone, but to all water companies throughout the State which come under the general head of corporations, as defined in section thirty-three, of article four, of our present Constitution. That is my judgment about it, and it would avoid all these embarrassing questions which may arise.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: What is the object of this section twenty-eight? If it has any object at all, the object is to regulate any persons who may acquire a monopoly either of some of the natural resources of the country or of some business. Now, sir, what is the difference whether that monopoly is in the hands of a corporation, joint stock company, or individual. Some gentlemen have an idea that a large class of work cannot be done without the formation of corporations. That is not so at all. Let us take the ordinary case of a water company. We all know that, under the laws of this State, parties who first appropriate the water of a stream on the public domain own it, and there is no power to take it away except by the power of eminent domain. Now, suppose a company got possession of some water right—and it must not necessarily be a corporation—they can supply a town as an ordinary partnership or as an individual. If you pass a law of this kind, they can transfer their property to private individuals, and they can go on with their monopoly the same as before. Now, sir, if you intend to regulate things of that kind, why not regulate them in the hands of private individuals as well as in the hands of corporations. You might say there is no necessity for this section at all, so far as the Legislature having the power is concerned; that all laws may be amended or repealed. Of course, the power to amend a corporation law is limited. That is the decision of the Courts. That is the law as announced on this floor—that under the general law, reserving the power to amend or repeal a general corporation law, you may regulate it in any way, if you can regulate it to any extent.

MR. MCCALLUM. In the case of water companies—simple companies, not incorporated—I ask if they do not come within the definition of our Constitution?

MR. MCFARLAND. Certainly not.

MR. MCCALLUM. "The term corporations, as used in this article, shall be construed to include all associations and joint stock companies having any of the powers and privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships."

MR. MCFARLAND. I would like to know what powers of a corporation Booth & Company, of this city, have? An ordinary partnership has none of the peculiar powers of a corporation. What powers have an ordinary partnership or association not having any special privileges? What powers have they that are akin at all to corporations? None whatever! Now, sir, a great many of the water companies in this State are owned by individuals, with none of the powers of corporations, and those that are incorporated could easily disincorporate. Supposing we adopt this section, leaving out the word "persons," and a water company that has an exclusive property chooses to sell out to individuals, and disincorporate. Where are you then? They own the water that supplies the town, but they own it as individuals. You cannot regulate them under this law at all, sir; unless you can do it under the general doctrine of the Elevator cases, and then you can do it without this. As the gentleman from Los Angeles says, if we can do it under the Elevator cases there is no necessity of this provision.

MR. HOWARD. I do not oppose its being put in. I am in favor of its being put in.

MR. McFARLAND. If you are going to say that the Legislature shall regulate corporations that enjoy monopolies, why not apply that to persons as well as corporations? The individuals can do the same thing in their individual capacity just as well as the corporations. A corporation is nothing more than an individual formed under a general law; for instance, with the power to sue and be sued. That is about all there is of it. Now, under the law as it stands you can regulate corporations to your heart's content, but you cannot regulate individuals or ordinary partnerships. Now, if you are going to do this thing, why not put in persons or individuals? then you are in a position whenever they have conducted a business in which there is a public use, as they did in the Elevator cases, you can regulate them. If you leave it as it is you will find that nearly all the corporations in the country will convey their property to individuals, and be out of reach of the Legislature.

MR. McCONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend by striking out all after the figures, "twenty-eight," in the first line. I hope that we will not incorporate this in the Constitution. It is entirely unnecessary. I hope that the whole thing will be stricken out. The Legislature possesses power sufficient to regulate any abuses that may exist in relation to these matters, and I think the whole section should be stricken out, and I hope that it will be.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I now move the previous question on the pending amendments.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Stanislaus, Mr. Schell, to insert before the word, "corporations," the words, "persons or."

A division was called for.

The question was put and there were 45 ayes and 30 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is no quorum voting. There is evidently a quorum present. Those in favor of the amendment will rise and stand until counted. All the members are requested to vote.

The amendment was adopted by a vote of 44 ayes to 33 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Sacramento to strike out section twenty-eight.

MR. McCALLUM. I rise to a point of order. Having inserted some amendments it is not in order to strike out.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair entertains no doubt in the world that the motion to strike out is in order.

The motion prevailed on a division, by a vote of 56 ayes to 22 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The section is stricken out.

MR. JOHNSON. Is a substitute in order now?

MR. McCALLUM. I give notice that I will on to-morrow move to reconsider the vote by which the section was stricken out.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section twenty-nine.

TAXATION OF CORPORATIONS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 29. Dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liabilities of the corporators and other means as may be prescribed by law. The property of corporations now existing, or hereafter created, shall forever be subject to taxation, the same as the property of individuals, and the franchises of such corporations shall be assessed at their actual cash value, and taxed accordingly.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: This section, sir, is almost the identical section two of the article on corporations reported by the committee. I move to strike it out.

MR. HOWARD. I second the motion.

The question was put, resulting in 45 ayes and 31 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting. Gentlemen will please vote.

The question was again put.

THE CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting.

MR. McCALLUM. There are a number of us not voting. If he refers to section two of the article on corporations, it is not a similar section. We do not vote because we think there is a misapprehension.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. It should be in the article on taxation.

MR. GREGG. That is where it belongs; one part in the article on corporations and the other in the article on taxation.

MR. EDGERTON. This section says: "dues from corporations shall be secured by such individual liabilities of the corporators and other means as may be prescribed by law. The property of corporations now existing, or hereafter created, shall forever be subject to taxation, the same as the property of individuals, and the franchises of such corporations shall be assessed at their actual cash value, and taxed accordingly." I believe that the proper place for that is in the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation. It is considered there and set forth in detail. I do not see why it should be in a provision relating to the Legislature.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: It appears that we cannot get a quorum to vote upon any of these propositions. I understood the Chair to say that there was no quorum voting. For one, I do not desire to sit here unless we have got a quorum, and therefore I move that the Committee rise and report progress.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair will put the question again. There is a way to ascertain whether there is a quorum present or not.

MR. BARBOUR. The gentleman from Alameda says there seems to be a misapprehension. I will call attention to sections two and three, with the amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole in considering the report of the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal. I call his attention, then, to the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation. They cover the ground of the taxation of the property of corporations more fully than is done in section twenty-nine. That is the proper place to deal with the subject, and I do not see the necessity of wasting our time upon it here.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I understand that these subjects are fully covered by provisions in other articles. This is not the place to determine what shall and what shall not be taxed. In this article we are trying to define the powers of the Legislative Department. We are not taxing property in this part of the Constitution. That is the reason why I vote to strike this out.

MR. McCALLUM. I think it right now. It belongs to that department.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out section twenty-nine.

The motion prevailed on a division, by a vote of 68 ayes to 12 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The section is stricken out. The Secretary will read section thirty.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 30. The term corporations, as used in this article, shall be construed to include all associations and joint stock companies having any of the powers or privileges of corporations not possessed by individuals or partnerships. And all corporations shall have the right to sue, and shall be subject to be sued in all Courts, in like cases as natural persons.

MR. TERRY. That is the same as section four of the article on corporations. I move it be stricken out.

The motion prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section thirty-one.

BANK CHARTERS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 31. The Legislature shall have no power to pass any Act granting any charter for banking purposes, but associations may be formed under general laws for the deposit of gold and silver and other lawful money of the United States; but no such association shall make, issue, or put in circulation any bill, check, ticket, certificate, promissory note, or other paper, or the paper of any bank, to circulate as money.

MR. TERRY. I move that be stricken out.

The motion prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section thirty-two.

PAPER MONEY.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 32. The Legislature of this State shall prohibit, by law, any person or persons, association, company, or corporation, from exercising the privileges of banking or creating paper to circulate as money.

MR. GREGG. I move that section be stricken out.

The motion prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section thirty-three.

LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 33. Each stockholder of a corporation or joint stock association shall be individually and personally liable for his proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred while he was a stockholder, and the Trustees or Directors of such corporation or association, and each of them, shall be responsible individually for the misappropriation by the officers thereof of the funds or deposits of such corporation or association.

MR. TERRY. That is provided for in section three of the article on corporations. I move that it be stricken out.

The motion prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section thirty-four.

MUNICIPAL INDEBTEDNESS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 34. It shall be the duty of the Legislature to provide, by general laws, for the organization of city, town, and county governments, and for assessing and collecting taxes for the support of the same; provided, that no city, city and county, town, or county, shall ever incur a debt which, together with existing indebtedness, shall exceed two per cent. of the assessed value of the property therein. Such value shall be ascertained from the assessment roll for State and county purposes made immediately previous to incurring such indebtedness; provided, however, that a city, city and county, town, or county, may borrow money under and in accordance with the following conditions and limitations in addition to any other conditions and limitations contained in the Constitution, namely: The debt must be for some single work or object only; and must be authorized by a resolution passed by a vote of three fourths of all the members elected to the Board of Supervisors, Common Council, or local Legislature. Such resolution shall also distinctly specify the single work or object for which the debt is to be created, and the amount of the debt authorized, and shall contain provisions for a sinking fund, to meet the same at maturity, and requiring at least ten per cent. of the principal to be annually raised by taxation and paid into the Sinking Fund. Such resolution shall not take effect until it shall be ratified at an election held in said city, city and county, county, or town, at which no other matter is voted upon, and which shall be held within —— days after the passage of said order or resolution. The Legislature shall make such laws as may be necessary to provide for holding such election and ascertaining the result thereof.

MR. TERRY. I move to fill the blank by inserting "thirty."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. SCHELL.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that that subject properly comes within the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations. That committee have already made their report, and in that report they have covered every proposition contained in this section. It seems to me that this is an improper place for this section. The report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations has fully covered all the points, and I have no doubt will be satisfactory to every member of this Convention; and it seems to me that it should properly come within the report of that committee. I move that the section be stricken out.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: This is a very good section and ought to be adopted. It does not make any difference. If it happens to be in the wrong place, as I do not think it is, the Committee on Revision and Adjustment can put it in its proper place. I think it a good provision to put a limitation upon the power of local legislation to run in debt upon the people and the taxpayers. The fact that this is incorporated in another report makes no difference. I do not know whether the points are covered or not, as I have not got them here. I do not think that is a reason for striking it out; it may be a reason for postponing it.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: The report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations covers the whole proposition reported in this section. A committee was appointed by this Convention, the title of which is Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations. Now, this section says: "It shall be the duty of the Legislature to provide, by general laws, for the organization of city, county, and town governments." That is the very subject-matter that was referred to the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations, and of course if this should be adopted it would cover substantially the report that has been made by the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations. The report of the committee is number five hundred and twenty-one, and I suppose the members have it upon their desks. By referring to it it will be seen that everything relating to counties, cities, and townships, is embraced in that report. It takes in city governments, county governments, and consolidated city and county governments, and provides for township governments. Section four provides that the Legislature shall establish a system of county governments, which shall be uniform throughout the State. In regard to cities it provides for their government by general laws, and it provides a government for townships whenever the Legislature shall see fit to authorize the organization of townships. Then it contains a limitation upon indebtedness.

MR. FREUD. Where does it provide a limitation?

MR. HAGER. There are a great many sections to this report; take section twenty, it says:

"SEC. 20. No county, city, town, township, Board of Education, or school district, shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner, or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for them respectively for such year, without the assent of two thirds of the voters thereof at an election to be held for that purpose; and in cases requiring such assent no indebtedness shall be incurred (except by a county, to erect a Court House or Jail) to an amount, excluding existing indebtedness, in the aggregate exceeding five per centum on the value of the taxable property therein, to be ascertained by the assessment next before the last assessment for State and county purposes previous to the incurring such indebtedness, and unless, before or at the time of incurring such indebtedness, provision shall be made for the collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such indebtedness as it falls due, and also to constitute a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof within forty years from the time of contracting the same."

The committee decided to insert the word "forty;" originally it was "thirty." The point to be submitted to the Convention is simply this: The committee appointed by the Convention to take into consideration this proposition—all these things that relate to the government of cities, counties, and townships—having reported upon the same, I suppose that we could consider the merits of that report in discussing the proposition here presented by the Committee on Legislative Department. I do not say that it is not within the province of the Committee on Legislative Department to go as far as they have gone, but I do say that the first paragraph in section thirty-four, "It shall be the duty of the Legislature to provide by general laws for the organization of city, town, and county governments," is comprehensive enough to take in the whole scope of the duties of the committee on that subject; I therefore think that this matter had better be deferred—this section thirty-four—until the report of the committee on the subject is taken up for consideration, and if there is anything in section thirty-four which the Convention would prefer to that which is contained in the report of the committee on that subject it can be adopted. I suggest, therefore, that section thirty-four be not considered by the Convention at the present time.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the motion to strike out will prevail. So far as relates to the sections which have been stricken out are concerned, it will be noticed that under the arrangements of subjects in the old Constitution these matters in reference to corporations, banking, etc., came under the head of the legislative department, and they were properly enough considered by the Committee on Legislative Department; but I think the Committee on Legislative Department trenched upon the ground of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations. That committee has presented a very full report, and it seems to me that the proper time to consider this subject will be when that report comes up. I hope the motion will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: It has occurred in the introduction and reference of the propositions which have been submitted to the Convention, that the same subject-matter has been referred to more than one committee. In some of the propositions—I think the proposition of Mr. Laine—the whole subject of legislative department was referred to the Committee on Legislative Department. Some of them referred to corporations; some of them referred to municipal and other indebtedness; some of them to the power of municipalities. As they were referred to the committee the members of the committee thought it was their duty to report upon them, without any intention of trenching upon the ground of any other committee. They simply report to the Convention their ideas upon the subjects referred to them by the Convention. I have no objection to defering this section thirty-four until the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations is taken up, but I do object to having it stricken out, because I think it is more full and explicit, and throws more safeguards around the interests of municipalities and counties than the section reported by the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations. We provide here a rule under which a city, county, or town may borrow money; that it must be for some single object; and we provide for a sinking fund. I think the section should be adopted by the Convention. I do not care whether it is adopted while we are considering the report of the Committee on Legislative Department, or whether it is adopted when we consider the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations. I oppose the motion to strike it out, but have no objection to the motion of Mr. Hager to postpone it.

MR. SCHELL. I believe that Mr. Hager did not make the motion, but if he will make it as an amendment to my motion, I will accept it.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I have no objection, as I stated, to having any recommendation of the Committee on Legislative Department considered in connection with this report when it is taken up. I think, as a matter of respect to the committee, that it should not be stricken out, but deferred. I have no objection to that. I move as an amendment to the motion, that instead of striking out the section we defer action upon it until the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations is taken up for consideration.

MR. SCHELL. I accept the amendment.

MR. HAGER. The Committee of the Whole will report that they have deferred action upon this section thirty-four until the report of the other committee is taken up.

MR. LEWIS. Is not the section passed; is it not passed by the Chairman?

THE CHAIRMAN. Section thirty-four is now before the committee.

MR. LEWIS. It seems to me that the section had better be passed, and then let it take its chances.

MR. SCHELL. I withdraw the motion.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I would suggest that it would be in order to move as an amendment to withdraw this section from the report and consider it in connection with the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations. It seems to me that it is out of place in this article. It seems to me that system and order would require that this be placed in the article on city, county, and township organizations.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I presume that the proper motion would be that the committee report to the Convention that they have deferred action on section thirty-four, and recommend that it be reconsidered in connection with the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations. That will be the report of the Committee of the Whole to the Convention, and the Convention will so determine.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. That would not withdraw it from this article.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: It appears to me, sir, that this Committee of the Whole has rather resolved itself into a Committee of Revision and Adjustment. Now, when there is anything before this body from one committee, and it is correct in principle, although it may be supposed that there is something from another committee that covers the same ground, I do not think it fair in this body to propose to state that that ground is entirely covered, and for us to take action upon it. I am convinced that when anything comes from a committee that it is our duty to act upon it, and afterwards if it covers the ground that the report of another committee has covered, the Committee on Revision and Adjustment will regulate it. But I am convinced that we cannot do it properly in the Committee of the Whole. It may be that the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations has something equally as good as this, and it may be better, but it takes up more time to investigate and talk over the matter, than it would to discuss the section and dispose of it. I would be in favor of going through with this report.

MR. MCCONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

THE CHAIRMAN. This Committee of the Whole is bound to go through with the whole report. We can postpone it temporarily. The only other way that it can be got at is by rising and recommending the Convention to refer it.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: I move that the section be stricken out. When the other report comes up it can be amended by inserting this section if the committee so desire. There is no necessity of acting upon it here, because it can be acted upon then although it be stricken out here.

MR. TERRY. Can it be offered in connection with any other report?

THE CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly it can.

MR. HAGER. If we strike the section out it will come up for consideration in full Convention just the same as now. I think the best way would be to strike it out.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out section thirty-four.

The motion prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section thirty-five.

ELECTIONS BY THE LEGISLATURE.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 35. In all elections by the Legislature the members thereof shall vote viva voce, and the votes shall be entered on the Journal."

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendment to section thirty-five, the Secretary will read section thirty-six.

THE GENERAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 36. The general appropriation bill shall contain no item or items of appropriation other than such as are required to pay the salaries of the State officers, the expenses of the government and of the institutions under the exclusive control and management of the State.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by adding 'and such aid as may be granted to private institutions conducted for the support and maintenance of orphans, half orphans, abandoned children, or aged persons in indigent circumstances.'"

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: The reason I offer that amendment is in order that there may be no conflict between this section and section twenty-two, which provides that money can be drawn from the treasury for the support of these orphans; and, Mr. Chairman, I want to give the Legislature the power in this section to place it in the general appropriation bill, where it should be.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: Mr. Wilson's amendment covers the whole ground. It states that nothing contained in any other portion of the Constitution shall interfere with the carrying out of the section allowing the appropriation to orphans. It is sufficiently comprehensive.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I consulted with Mr. Wilson, and Mr. Wilson thought that it did not provide for it. In fact, he originated that amendment, and I promised him to offer it in his absence, and if he had not done it, I should have offered some such amendment.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: There is no conflict between this section as it now stands, and the amendment adopted the other day to section twenty-two. This section is limited expressly to the general appropriation bill, and it is generally understood that that bill should be confined to appropriations to the State government; but as it now stands, there is no conflict at all. So far as Mr. Wilson is concerned, he called my attention to it, and upon that suggestion he said that he thought the section should stand.

MR. STEDMAN. He wrote that amendment himself.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I would like to ask the gentleman from Sacramento, if this section was adopted, if it would not be an entire limitation against passing any appropriation at all except for the expenses of the government?

MR. EDGERTON. Not at all. There is nothing in the section but what is limited to the general appropriation bill. That phrase, "general appropriation bill," controls the whole section. The last appropriation bill embraces appropriations for various charitable purposes—for the orphans, etc. All these appropriations should be in the nature of special appropriations, and ought not to be combined in any instance with the appropriations for the State government.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: The member from Sacramento has very correctly stated the nature of the general appropriation bill. It is a bill which should appropriate money for the institutions of the State fixed by law. The special appropriation bills include those items that are not definitely fixed, and there is a large number which are not definitely fixed, and they are usually reported in all legislative bodies in a different bill. They include all appropriations, the amount of which is not fixed by law. It would be entirely improper to place this in this section, and from this consideration: that the amount to be allowed to these different institutions is optional with the Legislature, and each case being contingent upon their judgment, they will recommend what special amount shall be allowed to this, that, or the other institution. Therefore they will properly be placed in a special appropriation bill.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I call the attention of the author of this amendment to the fact that the section limits the appropriations in the general appropriation bill to the salaries of the State officers, the expenses of the general government, and of the institutions under the exclusive control and management of the State. That includes the insane asylums, the State prisons, and Normal School, etc. But the difficulty has been found in every session of the Legislature that I have been a member of, that some person will want an appropriation for this charity, and another for another charity, and they combine and clog legislation in reference for the appropriations for purely governmental purposes. This section, as it now stands, is eminently proper, and would prohibit such special appropriations as were contemplated by the amendment that was adopted the other day being put in the general appropriation bill. I think the section should stand as it is.

REMARKS OF MR. HILBORN.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that it is immaterial whether the section stands or falls. In section sixteen we have introduced an amendment which does away with the objections which the gentleman from Sacramento has pointed out. It is true that it is customary to load down the general appropriation bill with various appropriations not connected with the expenses of State government, but there is an excellent provision embraced in section sixteen, that the Governor at the time of signing a bill may object to any of the items, and the appropriation so objected to shall not take effect unless passed over the Governor's veto. That removes that objection, and makes this section, it seems to me, absolutely unnecessary. It makes no odds, whether the appropriations are in one appropriation bill, or whether they are in special appropriation bills, for if the Governor does not approve of any special appropriation he can strike it out. Under the former rule they could group their appropriations and get them into the general appropriation bill which was passed near the close of the session, and the Governor had to sign it or else have a special session of the Legislature. If that condition of affairs was continued, it would be proper that this section thirty-six should be in the Constitution, but since the Governor has the right to strike out any particular item of the appropriation, I cannot see any reason for putting this section thirty-six in the Constitution.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I perfectly agree with the gentleman from Sacramento. This section is as it should be. It should not be left to the Governor to determine this question. This section will preclude him from having that power. This puts a limit upon the general appropriation bill, by saying that it shall contain nothing except for the support of the government. This is in the interests of legislation. It is one of the most important sections we have acted upon.

REMARKS OF MR. BARRY.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will be adopted. While it might be true, as the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, intimates that it is already sufficiently covered by section twenty-two, and that this is somewhat in the nature of special appropriations, that is, the objects to be attained by the amendment to section twenty-two which the committee very wisely and properly adopted, yet I think, in order to make assurance doubly sure, it would be well to adopt this amendment. I believe that the committee, when they adopted the amendment to section twenty-two, were of the opinion that special appropriation should be granted to these charitable institutions. That being the case, I presume they are still of the same opinion, and if they are to make this matter safe and to provide that these appropriations may be considered to be included in the general appropriation bills of the Legislature, then it would be well to adopt this amendment. In constitution making we cannot have matters too clear. It ought to be so clear that there would be no question about it whatever. It should be so in law making of any kind. That has been the great trouble with the Legislature in many cases. The laws were too ambiguous and it was rather difficult to ascertain what the law makers intended by a certain section of a law. If we adopt this it removes all doubt.

REMARKS OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: The object evidently of the committee in getting up this section was to protect the State appropriations of this State. Now, of course, every one knows that the appropriations for the pay of State officers is a matter that cannot be avoided. There must be money appropriated to run the State government. Now, when that bill comes up in the Legislature these institutions that are demanding aid from the State come forward, through their friends in the Legislature, and ask for appropriations in the general appropriation bill. One institution wants one sum, and another another, and so on, and they get their friends in the Legislature to demand that these appropriations be included, or they will fail to appropriate anything for the sustenance of the State government. It is only necessary for me to call attention to the last moments of the last Legislature. The appropriations were all tacked on to the general appropriation bill, and those who were in control said to the Legislature: "You must vote this enormous appropriation or we will not let you have anything to run the State Government." And the Legislature was for a number of hours placed in that ridiculous predicament that they were compelled to observe the will of the lobby or call an extra session of the Legislature. I say this section should be allowed to stand.

MR. HILBORN. Would not that be entirely cured by section nineteen, lines fourteen and fifteen?

MR. TINNIN. I propose that the appropriation to pay the salaries of State officers and the expenses of State government shall stand alone. This body has voted to pay a certain amount to the orphans. Suppose they come here and tack their appropriations on to the general appropriation bill, and compel the Legislature to pay them or call an extra session. I hope the section will stand as it is.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section will remain exactly as it is, and I will briefly state my reasons. Now, the section, as drawn, relates exclusively to the general appropriation bill; not to special appropriation, but to the general appropriation bill. It says: "The general appropriation bill shall contain no item or items of appropriation other than such as are required to pay the salaries of the State officers, the expenses of the government, and of the institutions under the exclusive control and management of the State."

Now, that is the general appropriation bill; it must be acted upon and passed by itself. It should not be cumbered up with extraneous matter that would delay its passage until the last moments of the session. This section does not prevent the Legislature from passing any special appropriation bill. All that has been said in regard to the Governor having power to veto certain items in a bill applies to a special appropriation bill as well as to the general appropriation bill. The vice is not because something improper may get into an appropriation bill and that the Governor may not veto it—that is not the trouble, but, as has been said, there is a contest in the Legislature in regard to the appropriation bill by loading it down with improper appropriations and endangering the whole bill. I have been compelled, sometimes, to vote for the general appropriation bill when I have disapproved of a great many of the items in it. By this section we get rid of this trouble at once. The general appropriation bill is presented, providing for all the necessary expenses of the State, and then let all special appropriation bills come up afterwards, or at any time, on their merits, and the members may vote for it or against it, and then the Governor may veto it if he chooses. Now, look at appropriation bills of the Congress of the United States. More bad measures have been gotten through Congress in that way than in any other; why, they even admit a State into the Union in a general appropriation bill. The admission of the State of California was under the general appropriation bill, and the bill delayed the progress of that session of Congress until the time for adjournment had passed by several hours—that was in eighteen hundred and forty-nine—just because it came in in an improper place. The purpose is that the appropriation bill here should stand by itself, and contain only appropriations for the expenses of the State government. Suppose this section was not adopted, or this amendment should prevail, some one would come to the Legislature and ask for an appropriation for a canal for draining lands here, and another for a canal there, and by combinations they get it into the general appropriation bill—you are compelled to vote against the whole measure or else you have got to vote for it with these provisions in it. Now, if there is any merit in a proposition let it stand by itself, on its own merits, and not come up in the general appropriation bill. I hope that this amendment will be voted down, not for the purpose of depriving the orphan asylums of appropriations, if the Legislature see fit to make them, but that they may stand upon their merits in a special appropriation bill, and that they should not come up in the general appropriation bill that relates only to the expenses of the State government.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: The reason for the adoption of this section as it stands has been given by the gentleman from Sacramento, and the gentleman from Trinity. Now, if the amendment proposed is adopted it places it in the power of a combination in the Legislature to prevent the passage of the general appropriation bill, unless they can have whatever provision they please, no matter how extravagant, for the support of the orphans, half orphans, abandoned children, and aged persons in indigent circumstances. That is just what we desire to avoid. The gentleman from Solano refers to section sixteen. Section sixteen offers no remedy at all. The theory of our Constitution is that the legislative power is reposed in the Senate and Assembly. If the Legislature, not wishing to defeat an appropriation bill, would include in it a larger amount of subsidies than they ought to give for the support of these institutions, the Governor may disapprove it, says the gentleman. But the Governor may not disapprove it. We are, in that case, having the will of the Governor and a certain faction of the Legislature, who have forced the Legislature into the adoption of their measures against the express will of the majority of the Legislature. Now, there is no sort of difficulty in the Legislature providing by law for the support of orphans, half orphans, abandoned children, and aged persons in indigent circumstances, in a law by itself, which will stand upon its own bottom, and rest upon its own merit. That is all that anybody ought to require. The general appropriation bill ought always to be confined simply to the necessary expenses of running the government, and the support of the institutions which are exclusively under the management of the State. In that way there is nobody interested in making them more or less than they should be. There is nobody interested in adding on to an appropriation, or in detracting from it, because the salaries are provided by law, and the expenses are ascertained before the appropriation bill is passed. To be sure, a great many of the objections to the present mode of conducting legislation, have been done away with by the clause prohibiting special legislation; but that does not do away with the whole evil. We will have, as we know, strong outside influence brought upon the Legislature for the purpose of increasing the amount of these appropriations. They started out with twenty-five dollars and thirty dollars; they then got up to fifty dollars, and seventy-five dollars, and now it is seventy-five dollars and one hundred dollars; and they may come to the Legislature and ask two hundred dollars and three hundred dollars. If they ask it and are entitled to it, if they show any reason why they should have it, then the Legislature can give it to them; but we do not want it in their power to come forward and say, your general appropriation bill shall not pass unless you will appropriate two hundred dollars apiece for half orphans, and three hundred dollars apiece for orphans. Let them get their appropriation in a bill by itself. The bill can provide for aid in the support of orphans cared for in these institutions, and let the general appropriation bill perform only its legitimate object, that is, carrying on the running expenses of the government, and paying the salaries of its officers.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: Gentlemen are in favor of this amendment because they think it will be a benefit to the orphans. Now, I am just as strongly in favor of allowing the Legislature to appropriate money to aid in the support of orphans as any gentleman on this floor. I would be the last man to do anything which would prohibit that. But gentlemen who are in favor of adopting this amendment, seem to forget that it cuts both ways. Now, as has been illustrated here, there might be a small faction that could compel the Legislature to attach on to the general appropriation bill an exorbitant amount for the support of orphans. That is so; but while they could do that, they could, on the other hand, compel a majority of the Legislature to only allow the orphans a very insignificant amount before they would allow the general appropriation bill to go through. Therefore, I am in favor of letting the general appropriation bill stand on its own merits, and the orphan appropriation bill stand upon its own merits. And, as for making this doubly sure, I think we have already made it sure enough. I am in favor of it, but why reiterate it here? Why, if it is sure, what is the use of making it doubly sure?

MR. HOWARD. I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section thirty-seven.

GRANTS TO RELIGIOUS SOCIETIES.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 37. Neither the Legislature, nor any county, city and county, township, school district, or other municipal corporation, shall ever make an appropriation, or pay from any public fund whatever, or grant anything to or in aid of any religious sect, church, creed, or sectarian purpose, or help to support or sustain any school, college, university, hospital, or other institution controlled by any religious creed, church, or sectarian denomination whatever; nor shall any grant or donation of personal property or real estate ever be made by the State, or any city, city and county, town, or other municipal corporation, for any religious creed, church, or sectarian purpose whatever.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

"Insert in section thirty-seven, line seven, after the word 'whatever,' as follows: 'Except as otherwise provided in this Constitution.'"

MR. FREEMAN. I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section thirty-seven, by adding thereto: 'Nothing in this section contained shall prohibit the granting of aid by the State to institutions or associations for the maintenance of orphans, half orphans, abandoned children, or indigent persons, although such institutions or associations be under the control of some religious sect or association.'"

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I have no objection to that except that it is not concise enough. I think that the amendment I have offered covers it. We have provided in section twenty-two that the Legislature shall have power to appropriate money to these various institutions. My amendment to this section is to add: "Except as otherwise provided in this Constitution," that is, in section twenty-two. I think that covers it amply.

MR. EDGERTON. I would ask the gentleman if that is not Mr. Wilson's amendment.

MR. STEDMAN. That don't make any difference.

MR. EDGERTON. Well, perhaps it might make a good deal of difference.

MR. STEDMAN. The committee have the power to vote it down.

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I doubt whether the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco is sufficiently specific. We have one section, it is true, section twenty-two, which authorizes aid to be granted to orphan asylums. Now, we have here another section, which prohibits any aid being granted to any institution under the control of a church. Now, it seems to me that these two sections standing together would simply mean that we might grant aid to orphan asylums, provided they were not under the control of any church or sect. It seems to me, therefore, that my amendment, or one more explicit than that offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, is necessary to harmonize these two sections, and show what the two together mean.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I call the attention of the authors of both these amendments to the language of the amendment adopted to section twenty-two. It seems to me, in view of that, that no amendment is necessary. It reads: "Provided, that notwithstanding anything contained in this or any other section of this Constitution, the Legislature shall have the power to grant aid to institutions conducted for the support and maintenance of minor orphans, or half orphans, or abandoned children, or aged persons in indigent circumstances." There is no necessity for either of these amendments. There is an explicit provision that, notwithstanding anything contained in any section of this Constitution, the Legislature shall have that power.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento will not be adopted. The effect of it is to authorize grants of money and donations to any religious society that can manage to connect itself with an asylum. I am opposed to that. If the authors of the American revolution achieved anything, or one thing more particularly than another, it was the separation of church and State.

Now, sir, I am opposed to all measures by which any connection between church and State can be run in. What is the effect of it? Suppose a Buddhist church establish itself, as has been threatened, in San Francisco? It is a religious sect. Suppose it connects itself with the support of orphans? Then the Legislature can grant to it donations of money, and in that way uphold the sect; and so with every other sect. Suppose that the Chinese—as they will do if they are permitted to continue coming here, and get the right of suffrage—connect their Joss houses with the support of orphans, or charities of some other character? Then the Legislature may make an appropriation to support a Joss house. It seems to me that we are running wild on this subject. We ought to take care that we do not infringe upon the principles of the American Government, and that is by the State not to support any church or any religious creed. In what we have done the other day, we have gone far enough, God knows, and let us stop there. It seems to me that the proposition that you will support a church because it connects itself with some charity, is perfectly monstrous, and this Convention ought to set its face against it.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I think this subject has been fully illuminated. I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section thirty-eight.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 38. The Legislature shall have no power to give or to lend, or to authorize the giving or lending of the credit of the State, or of any county, city and county, city, township, or other political corporation or subdivision of the State now existing, or that may hereafter be established, in aid of or to any person, association, or corporation, whether municipal or otherwise, or to pledge the credit thereof, in any manner whatever, for the payment of the liabilities of any individual, association, municipal or other corporation whatever; nor shall it have power to make any grant, or authorize the making of any grant of any public money or thing of value to any individual, municipal or other corporation whatever; and it shall not have power to authorize the State, or any political subdivision thereof, to subscribe for stock, or to become a stockholder in any corporation whatever.

MR. SCHELL. I move to strike out the section. I do so for this reason, that in the article on corporations which has already been adopted, is this section: "Sec. 13. The State shall not subscribe to or be interested in the stock of, or in any manner loan its credit to any person, company, association, or corporation." The Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations have reported a section which reads as follows:

"SEC. 14. The Legislature shall have no power to impose taxes upon counties, cities, towns, or other public or municipal corporations, or upon the inhabitants or property thereof, for county, city, town, or other municipal purposes, but may, by general laws, vest in the corporate authorities thereof the power to assess and collect taxes for such purposes."

Section twenty-one of the same report reads:

"SEC. 21. No county, city, town, or other public or municipal corporation, by a vote of its citizens or otherwise, shall become a subscriber to the capital stock, or a stockholder in any corporation, association, or company, or make any appropriation or donation, or loan its credit to, or in aid of, any person, corporation, association, company, or institution."

That section, in connection with the section already adopted by this committee in the article on corporations, covers the whole subject-matter of this section completely, and therefore I think it is proper to strike it out, and for the further reason that the subject-matter would more properly come in under the article on city, county, and township organizations. So far as the State matter is concerned, it is provided for in the article on corporations.

MR. BARBOUR. I second the motion.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I can find no place more appropriate for limiting the power of the Legislature than in the article on legislative department. I can find no committee who can more properly report a limitation upon the power of the Legislature than the committee who have in charge that portion of the Constitution. Now this section, as reported, is simply a limitation upon the power of the Legislature; that the Legislature shall not authorize the State, or any county in the State, to do certain things. It comes peculiarly within the province of that committee, and was reported by that committee. So far as this section of Committee on Corporations is concerned, I will say that when that section thirteen was read I did offer this section as a substitute for it. It was afterward recommitted to the committee, and I think that it belonged to the Committee on Legislative Department. It does not cover the provisions of this section, and if it did there is no reason why this should be stricken out. This reads:

"The Legislature shall have no power to give or to lend, or to authorize the giving or lending, of the credit of the State, or of any county, city and county, city, township, or other political corporation or subdivision of the State now existing, or that may be hereafter established, in aid of or to any person, association, or corporation, whether municipal or otherwise, or to pledge the credit thereof, in any manner whatever, for the payment of the liabilities of any individual, association, municipal, or other corporation whatever; nor shall it have power to make any grant, or authorize the making of any grant, of any public money or thing of value to any individual, municipal, or other corporation whatever; and it shall not have power to authorize the State, or any political subdivision thereof, to subscribe for stock, or to become a stockholder in any corporation whatever."

It is a limitation upon the power of the Legislature; and where can it be more properly put than in the article on the legislative department. If the section is a good one, this is the time to adopt it, and this is the place where it ought to be put.

REMARKS OF MR. BELCHER.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that if this provision is to be found in the Constitution at all, it should be found here. The question might arise when we are considering the power of municipalities, as to whether they might be permitted to subscribe for stock in any corporation, but it belongs to the power of the Legislature; because whatever a municipality does in the way of subscribing for stock, it does only under the authorization of the Legislature. It seems to me that this section ought to remain here, and when the other sections covering the same ground are reached in the other place, they ought there to be stricken out. This ought to stand.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I believe it was the general understanding that if this section was adopted when we came to it, in this report, that we should strike out the section in the article on corporations when it was taken up again. It was conceded by a large number of gentlemen on this floor that this limit should extend in some section to each municipal subdivision in the State, so that there should be no doubt, and not be embodied in four or five different sections. I believe it should be passed as it is. If I understand this matter it is one which belongs in the article on legislative department.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: This article is the very place in which to limit the power of the Legislature. It is true that the report of the Committee on Corporations limits what the State may do in regard to loaning its credit to corporations, but this section goes farther, and provides what the State may not do, not merely in aid of corporations, but in aid of city, county, township, and other political organizations; also, in favor of individuals. Now, if we should strike this section out, a very important portion of this provision would not appear anywhere in this Constitution. It seems to me that there are provisions in this section that are not contained in any other section.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Stanislaus, Mr. Schell, to strike out the section.

The motion was lost.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert in line eleven, after the word 'State,' the words 'or of any county, city and county, or other political corporation.'"

MR. TERRY. Is that any more comprehensive than "or any political subdivision thereof?"

THE CHAIRMAN.. The Chair hears no second.

MR. STEDMAN. I second it.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Under the decisions of the Supreme Court, as I understand them, that does not mean anything, because the subdivisions of the State heretofore have been allowed to contribute and subscribe to the stock of railroad companies. I do not see why it should be left out here, when it is in the first part of the section.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I would like to offer an amendment to the first line, and make it conform to the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section thirty-eight, line one, by inserting, after the word 'power,' the words 'by a vote of the electors or otherwise.'"

MR. HAGER. The object is——

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment is not in order. There is another amendment pending. The vote will be taken on that first.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: If there is no particular reason for this I will withdraw the amendment. I know no reason why they should not be included in the latter part of the section.

MR. TERRY. The reason is, that the whole matter is covered by the words, "or any political subdivision thereof." That is broad enough to cover them all.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kern, Mr. Smith.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: This provides that the Legislature shall have no power to give or to lend, or to authorize the giving or lending of the credit of the State, or of any county, city and county, city, township, or other political corporation or subdivision; but the Legislature might authorize a county or city by a vote of the people themselves to do this thing.

MR. GREGG. In the sixth line it is provided for. It says in "any manner whatever."

MR. LEWIS. Does not the word "authorize" in the second line cover the amendment?

MR. HAGER. Perhaps it is strong enough; I do not know but the section is strong enough. I will withdraw my amendment.

MR. BARTON. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

MR. HERRINGTON. I send up an amendment.

"Insert in line eleven, after the word 'any,' the words 'municipality or.'"

MR. GREGG. Is there any political subdivision in a municipality?

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: The reason I propose this amendment is because we all understand how easy it is, when the Court makes up its mind that a political subdivision of a State might possibly not with propriety be extended to a municipality, or rather that a municipality was a kind of political subdivision of a county, that they could so decide. I think it will make it a little more explicit, because municipalities are carved out of counties, and are really subdivisions of a subdivision; and as long as that course has been pretty general throughout the Constitution, I think it not inadvisable to insert that word, so as to make it definite and certain, in consequence of having made use of the word in another provision of the Constitution, that it was really intended that they should not be construed as a political subdivision.

MR. HITCHCOCK. I move the previous question.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section thirty-nine.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 39. The Legislature shall have no power to grant, or authorize any county or municipal authority to grant, any extra compensation or allowance to any public officer, agent, servant, or contractor, after service has been rendered, or a contract has been entered into and performed, in whole or in part, nor to pay, or to authorize the payment of any claim hereafter created against the State, or any county or municipality of the State, under any agreement or contract made without express authority of law; and all such unauthorized agreements or contracts shall be null and void.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Legislative Department, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

NOTICE.

MR. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Chairman: I send up a notice.

THE SECRETARY read:

I hereby give notice that I will move to amend Standing Rule Number Fifty-three, by striking therefrom the words following, to wit: "Two hundred and fifty copies of the file for each day shall be printed."

Laid over for one day.

The hour having arrived, the Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M. President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and a quorum present.

MR. TERRY. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Legislative Department.

MR. STEDMAN. I second the motion.

MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. President; I rise to a question of privilege. I want to explain in reference to a resolution published in various newspapers libeling me.

THE CHAIRMAN: The gentleman will have leave.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. President: I regret to have to rise before this honorable body for a question of privilege, but, sir, when a few men try to dirty my name, try to stain my honor, I would be a coward and a man unworthy of the esteem of any one if I did not reply. When I see men who, for the sake of ambitious purposes, want to stain what I hold dearer than life, I declare that I will not be immolated as a lamb. This question, I want it well understood, is not one of party; the party is free from any of those acts, and I am glad to state it; it is a personal affair—it is only a question of supremacy of a few men over a few others. But, Mr. President and gentlemen of the Convention, if the men that have been the cause of such shameful proceeding have lost all sense of justice, I am determined to explain myself if the earth itself was to give way beneath my feet, and I should fight it on this line if it took all my life. I hold, sir, a letter which has been sent to me, and I wish the Secretary would read it.

THE SECRETARY read as follows:

SENATE CHAMBER, December 21, 1878.

A. VACQUEREL, ESQ.: Dear Sir: In accordance with a resolution passed at a meeting of the Constitutional Club, held Thursday evening, December twentieth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, you are requested to attend a meeting of said club to be held this evening at room fifty-nine, State Capitol, and show cause, if any, why you acted contrary to the wishes of said club in relation to the election of a representative to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of B. F. Kenny.

Respectfully,

JAMES N. BARTON, President.

J. L. FLYNN, Secretary.

MR. HOWARD. I rise to a point of order, sir; that, under the authorities, this is not a question of privilege. I read from the Law and Practice of Legislative Assemblies, by Cushing, section fifteen hundred and three:

"It has accordingly been decided, in that assembly, that the following subjects, among others, may be entertained therein as matters of privilege—that is to say, questions relating to the right of members and delegates to be qualified—including, of course, their credentials—namely: members who are duly returned, but were not present at the organization of the house; members entitled to seats by the determination of a controverted election, and members returned to fill vacancies; questions affecting the right of members to their seats, whether existing in the shape of charges contained in a petition, or in resolutions reported by the Committee on Elections, or otherwise, and pending in the house; questions relating to the character or conduct of members—as, for example, resolutions to censure or expel a member; the right of a member to defend himself against the charge in a petition lying on the table; the report of a select committee for investigating certain charges against a member; a complaint of one member against another for a supposed insult in the house, for words used by the former in debate; and in considering and returning the letter of a public officer containing injurious reflections upon a member for words used by him in debate; questions relating to the conduct of persons in the employment of the house—as, for example, a resolution to dismiss one of its printers for charging a member with falsehood, or to expel a reporter from the house for giving a false and scandalous account of a debate; questions relating to the general or aggregate privileges of the house—as, for example, the remonstrance of a foreign diplomatic agent, to one of the heads of departments, on the passing of a certain bill of Congress; a common report that members had been threatened by a mob; resolution for correcting the Journal when it is not made up according to the facts, and the correction relates to some matter then pending before the house; a false account, in a public newspaper, of what took place in the house on a certain occasion; a report, lying on the table, concerning a personal conflict between two members; whether the Journal of the house has been printed, by its direction, according to the requisitions of the Constitution; the report of a committee, charging a witness before them with contumacy; questions relating to an impeachment, and to the report of a committee appointed to investigate the conduct of the Secretary of the Treasury in reference to a certain matter."

THE CHAIR. The Chair entertains no doubt in the world that the case presented here is not only a breach of the privilege of the member, but also a gross breach of the privileges of the Convention itself. The point of order is overruled.

MR. VACQUEREL. Now, gentlemen, have I been recognized as a delegate on this floor, according to section five of an Act to provide for a Convention to frame a new Constitution for the State of California? If I am a delegate, as such I am entitled to the same privileges as any other. Now section six says: "For any speech or debate in the Convention the delegate shall not be questioned in any other place." And further, "The Convention shall have the power to punish as a contempt," etc. (Section five.) I ask you, gentlemen, if that letter is not in direct opposition with the Act that created this Convention, and if it is not a control or influence over me as a delegate and over my vote? Now, Mr. President, I want to refer to malicious reports published in different papers. And paragraph three of section six says that the Convention shall have power to punish as a contempt any malicious report of the conduct of a member in his delegate capacity. A resolution has been published in almost all papers:

"WHEREAS, On the sixteenth instant, this Club, by its unanimous vote, agreed to nominate and support Hon. J. R. Sharpstein for delegate to fill a vacancy in consequence of the death of Hon. B. F. Kenny; and whereas, P. T. Dowling did, on the eighteenth instant, conspire with enemies of the Workingmen's party to place in nomination a candidate in opposition to said candidate of said Club, the said Dowling being himself present and participating without objection to said nomination; therefore,

"Resolved, That P. T. Dowling be and is hereby expelled from this club and his name be stricken from the roll.

"Vacquerel was also expelled for the same reason, except that he was not present and did not participate in the nomination of Sharpstein."

Now, gentlemen, I am punished for a crime that I have not committed. I am expelled because I was not present in the club, and because I did not participate in the nomination of Mr. Sharpstein. But it appears that I have conspired with the enemies of the Workingmen's party. Why? Because some gentlemen elected on the Non-partisan ticket voted for Mr. Kenny. Why, I ask, in the name of God, how, and by what means, did my opponents expect to name Mr. Sharpstein? Was it not with the aid of the votes of the Non-partisans? And am I a conspirator and they are not? I let you judge, gentlemen.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I rise to a point of order. The gentleman in speaking to his question of privilege, as I understand it, complains that his rights have been infringed upon under the law which provides that for any speech or debate in the Convention the delegate shall not be questioned in any other place. He has read a resolution calling him to question and expelling him from a voluntary association, which states distinctly that it was not for any speech or debate, and he himself states that it was on account of a vote cast and after the vote was cast.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman cannot argue the question.

MR. REYNOLDS. No. The gentleman does not wish to argue it, but wishes, if possible, to state the point raised. Now, the section of the statute which he read does not say that he shall not be called in question for any vote. Now, the point I wish to make is, that he is pretending to have been influenced in casting a vote that was already cast and passed into the record. He has been called to question concerning what had already taken place, and, therefore, could not have been influenced.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman's point of order is not well taken. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Vacquerel, will proceed.

MR. VACQUEREL. But, Mr. President, I do not want to argue my cause with the help of the law that created this Convention, as perhaps those men, having not created that law, do not care about its right, although when Saturday night comes they find the law to be a very good one. I will only take the platform, and constitution, and resolutions of the party which I am accused to have betrayed, and will explain and prove my reasons for voting for Mr. Kenny, as I have stated in my answer; I will not read it, it will be superfluous, and here it says: "Resolved, First—That we recognize the Constitution of the United States of America as the great charter of our liberties and the paramount law of the land." Therefore, if we do recognize the Constitution of the United States, I, as a citizen, claim my equal right. Further: "And, whereas, our Courts have been corrupted, the equal rights of the people violated until the administration of justice has become a mockery and a farce." As Mr. Sharpstein—and I wish you well to understand that I do not say anything against the gentleman; I do not know him, I never spoke to him—but this is the question: As Mr. Sharpstein has been a Judge, and administrator of justice, I thought, having no exception made in his favor, that he belonged to the whole crowd, and, to not make any mistake, I kept him there. Further it says: "Resolved, That all candidates for election to any office in the gift of the Workingmen's party of California must be selected from the ranks of the clubs, trade unions, societies, and associations, and that the names of such candidates must be found on the rolls of such clubs, trade unions, societies, and associations." Having been a member of the Charter Oak Hall Convention, I know very well the gentleman came in just for the nomination, and was not a member of any club; if he is since I cannot say. But further, I will come to the pledge I have taken: "That I will discourage all office seeking." Then, as I took a pledge to not encourage office seeking I thought that a man beaten by the people, beaten by this Convention, bringing or authorizing his name to be brought up again to try to defeat others who never sought for the position, was an office seeker, and if it is not office seeking then I acknowledge that I am at a loss to know what office seeking means.

But, gentlemen, section eight of the same platform says: "We repudiate all spirit of communism." Do the authors of such resolutions and such proceedings against me know what communism means? Why, as French by birth, I can explain it to them. A Communist—not a communalist—is a man that wants liberty, fortune, land, privileges, and so forth, all to himself; providing that his neighbor shall have none of the same, no matter how he may need it. The maxim is: All for me—nothing for others; and I hope the Convention will judge if I am a Communist; because I claim for myself the same rights as I claim for others—which rights are denied to me. I ask you, gentlemen, if I have ever departed an inch from my oath? On the nineteenth of June last, the day of the election, was there any specification on the ticket that some of the candidates were to be speakers, others to manage the cat-o'-nine-tails, and I nominated to be whipped? No, we were all equal; same rights, no more nor less power one than another; and still, to-day some take the power to force me to vote, to gag me, and to try to stain me, but I will not submit to it.

But why all this trouble because I have voted for an honest workingman, a man that has done for the party more than a good many of his antagonists have done? Has it not been declared in this hall that we did not want any "old fossil," and because I vote for a young man I am treated worse than any criminal. Explain what you want, gentlemen. I try to do according to your own words, and you are not pleased. Really I cannot understand such inconsistency. Now, that is not the question. To serve your own purpose you want to destroy a man that acts right—a man that dares say to your face, "The Workingmen's party has no worse enemies than some of you." You might not do it purposely, but you do it independently, of your own free will. Why, you deny my right to vote. What would you have said on election day if you had been forced to vote for a Non-partisan, or Republican, or Democrat? Would you not have rebelled? And still you find it extraordinary that I protest. But why did you not take the same steps toward other delegates who voted for Mr. Kenny? Why do you attack only Mr. Dowling and I? Why, I will tell you. Because you dare not do it, knowing that these men would act as manly as I do, if not more. Do you for an instant suppose, gentlemen of this Convention, that I, who have abandoned friends, position, family, because I could not live under a despotic government—I, who came into this land of the free, where one can breathe freely, thank God, where the sun shines for everybody, should have come to be a slave? Why, Mr. President, have I fallen so low as that? No, thank God; the blood that circulates in my body is not the blood that will submit to slavery. Such resolutions as the one adopted—not unanimously, I am glad to say, for I know the best intelligences took my side; I know them, and I thank them—such resolutions, I say, I treat with the contempt it deserves; and I declare it in the face of all, and wish to God that my voice could be heard all over the State of California—nay, over the whole Union—that the meanness of such resolutions or slurs shall never, never attain the height of my disdain and contempt for its authors.

I have now but a very few more words to say. Last Friday night I happened to go to the office of a newspaper in this city—the Record-Union. I did not know that I was doing any harm. I really had no such intention; but several gentlemen came to me and said it looked suspicious to go to the Record-Union and try to have anything published. Well, gentlemen, I went to the Record-Union, and I want to tell you why: to have an article inserted in that paper, which is entitled "A Countryman of Lafayette Speaks for the Flag," and if I did wrong in going and defending the flag that I have sworn to sustain you can blame me for doing it. I thank you very much for your kind attention.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. President: I send up a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

WHEREAS, On the twentieth day of December, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, the following named persons were nominated for election to fill the vacancy in this Convention caused by the death of Honorable Bernard F. Kenny, of San Francisco, namely: John R. Sharpstein, John J. Kenny, one Lloyd, and Leonard; and whereas, I cast my vote for the said John J. Kenny; and whereas, on the twentieth day of December, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, I was cited to appear before the Workingmen's Constitutional Club, assembled in room fifty-nine, State Capitol, Sacramento, to show cause why I should not be expelled from membership in said club for having cast my vote as above stated; and whereas, at the time aforesaid I was a member of said club in good standing; and whereas, I refused to appear before said club for the purpose of being questioned or punished for having cast my vote as above stated, the said club proceeded to expel me, and did expel me on said day from said club, and cause my name to be stricken from the roll of said club, as a punishment for having voted in this Convention for the said John J. Kenny, and for the purpose of disgracing and degrading me in the eyes of the people of this State, and for the purpose of menacing and influencing me, and compelling me in the future to cast my vote according to the wishes of the other member of said club, and in utter disregard of my privileges as a delegate in the Constitutional Convention of the State of California, and in contempt of the law and the dignity of this Convention; and whereas, the said club is composed of the following named persons, who were present and who voted for my expulsion from said club, and who authorized the above citation to be served on me, namely: James N. Barton, President of said club; J. Flynn, Secretary; Clitus Barbour, C. J. Beerstecher, Barry, Bell, Condon, Cross, Davis, Dean, Farrell, Gorman, Grace, Harrison, Herrington, Joyce, Morse, Nelson, Reynolds, Smith, Stedman, Swenson, Wellin, West, White, and Wyatt; be it therefore

Resolved, That the above named persons, and each and every one of them, are guilty of a breach of my privilege as a member of this Convention, and of contempt of this honorable body; and be it further

Resolved, That they be cited to appear before this Convention to answer therefor; and be it further

Resolved, That a committee be appointed by the President to investigate the charges above fully set forth, and report thereon.

P. T. DOWLING.

December 21, 1878.

MR. CROSS. Mr. President: I wish to set myself right now. I wish to say that I never had anything to do with this matter. If I had I would stand up to what I did. I have not attended the meetings of the club, because I did not think I needed the counsels of anybody. My name appears in that list, and I wish to say now that I have not had anything to do with it.

MR. DEAN. I can say the same.

SPEECH OF MR. DOWLING.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. President: If the facts which I have stated in connection with the resolution just sent up to the Clerk's desk be true—and I invite investigation—it is quite clear to my mind that my privilege as a delegate to this Convention has been violated, and this honorable body treated with contempt, by the parties named in the resolution. The law denies the right to any person or association of persons to question a member of this Convention about anything which he may say or do on this floor. Yet this so called Constitutional Club has not only asserted this right, in defiance of the law, to question me for the way in which I cast my vote in the matter of filling the vacancy occasioned by the death of Honorable B. F. Kenny, but have assumed the right to punish and disgrace me. Considerable ill feeling has been created in the premises, owing to the part I have acted. Unfortunately, however, my real intentions have been dwarfed, contorted, and misconstrued. I have been accused of conspiracy, of treachery, to break up our organization, and create dissensions in the ranks of the representatives of the Workingmen. And what for? Because I considered I was right—for exercising my own cool, calm, and deliberate judgment; and certainly I was right. I can die for my principles, but I cannot afford to expire twice for a man. I do not like to see the organization to which I belong made an instrument by which political aspirants can rise themselves into prominence and power; or, in other words, I don't like to see Workingmen made stepping-stones of any longer. As I belong to the Workingmen's party, I certainly want to see workingmen nominated to fill positions for which they are capable. Why, sir, I can take a riata and swing it at leisure and lasso as many men from among the common people, with the same amount of intelligence, as this Convention possesses; and still, when an office is to be filled, we must have a lawyer to come forward. I have nothing against lawyers, in their particular sphere, at all, but our great misfortune is that they form the aristocracy in a democracy. De Tocqueville says that if he were asked where would he place the aristocracy of America, he would place it on the bench and at the bar. The great curse of our common country to-day is that the government is in the hands of the non-producing classes, and taken away from the source to which it properly belongs—from the hands of the great industrial masses of the community.

Who is Judge Sharpstein? I don't know anything about his antecedents prior to the time I tendered him the nomination to be a candidate on our ticket at large for a delegate to this Constitutional Convention. He never appeared in the movement until the party was built up, and then he only figured as a candidate for office. Subsequently, however, he gained considerable notoriety, and lately he has been looked upon as a sage, a martyr for the cause. I saw in the election of Sharpstein ominous signs for the Workingmen's party; indeed, the game was made, and every time that I can kick at a ring, I certainly will.

"I saw it all in fancy's glass—
Herself the fair, the wild magician—
Who bade each splendid day dream pass,
And named each gliding apparition."

If Sharpstein wants to be a benefactor to the people, he must not bite every time that an office is held out to him. Although Sharpstein was brought into the movement for a purpose, he nor nobody else must think that they can use it for a purpose. I do not care if he were the greatest man in the world, I could not conscientiously vote for him, under the circumstances.

Local representation is the great principle of democracy. It is nearer and dearer to me than all, and still for having adhered to this paramount principle I am disgraced in the eyes of my constituency, held up to mockery, and pointed at with the finger of scorn. This principle was admitted on this floor on more than one occasion. It was admitted in filling the vacant chair of the late lamented ex-Governor H. H. Haight, from Alameda; it was admitted in filling the seats made vacant by the two deceased members from Merced and Mariposa; but was it admitted when the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Mr. Morris? No. The electors of the Sixth Ward in San Francisco were not consulted; but in that case it can be overlooked, from the fact that that ward had but a half organization. However, Mr. Sharpstein was nominated, and I sustained him; but he was defeated. One defeat is enough for any man to sustain on this floor.

On this occasion considerable animosity was manifested, and the private and public character of the man assailed on every side. In the present instance it is, however, different—the chair made vacant by the death of Mr. Kenny. The ward which he represented has an organization, and according to well established principles, every ward in San Francisco has a right to nominate its own representative, taken direct from the ward clubs; and Judge Sharpstein did not either belong to that club or reside in the ward at all. And for daring to give this ward a representation in this honorable body, I am denounced in the most embittered terms. This is my crime, and this is the reason I am hauled over the coals—for daring to come out boldly and squarely against one of the most popular men, in the estimation of some of the San Francisco delegation; for daring to vote against a caucus nominee; for daring to do as my head and heart dictated. If that is a crime, they can make the most of it. My obligation to the caucus ceased the day previous, when the whole matter was postponed. But, sir, in my estimation, a caucus is a fraud, a slimy treacherous traitor, and a stain upon American politics. I abhor a caucus, I repudiate a caucus, as inimical to every well regulated government, and as a libel on the principles and platform of the young organization to which I belong. It is a star chamber in the broadest sense of the term. I never joined the Workingmen's organization to go into secret conclave at all. We do all our business open and aboveboard, in the free air, under the sacred dome of heaven. I did not know what a caucus was until I came to Sacramento. I learned what it was in this Capitol, and I find out that it is a nice contrivance for a few men to swing the party lash, and make deaf mutes out of honest and intelligent Workingmen. Of course, the poor Workingmen are not statesmen; they are not able talkers, but they are, I think, honest and sincere.

Now, sir, I claim it is my privilege to vote fairly and squarely, in accord and in harmony with the dictates of my own conscience, on all and every proposition, and the law strictly defines that right and privilege; therefore, I submit these resolutions for your consideration.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: I did not intend to pay any attention to this airing of the dirty linen of this Convention. I believe, sir, that by the resolution there, I am accused of a breach of the high privilege of a member of this body. I deny the jurisdiction of this Convention over me and my associates in the matter of who shall associate with us and who shall not, and that is all there is of it. I will not pretend to discuss the question here as to the discipline of a party, or anything of that sort; but I will simply remind this Convention that we—myself and my associates here—are the judges of whether we will associate with men who break their word and betray their honor. I care nothing about these resolutions. It was never heard of, and it was never dreamed of, that the action of political assemblies, which were organized by Republicans, by Democrats, by Whigs, or what not in Congress, or in the State Legislature, or anywhere else, should be called in question, or that a Convention would undertake to determine who should associate with them, and who should not. Sir, it is monstrous, and I deny the authority of this Convention to determine that matter. What can you do with these men? Can you send them back into the club? Can you restore them to their standing there? Why, sir, we are the judges of that matter. You propose to go into an investigation of what a political club, or caucus, or whatever you call it, has done. Was ever such a thing heard of before? [To Mr. Dowling.] There is one place for you to go, sir, and that is back to your constituents in San Francisco, and do not come complaining and whining to your enemies.

[Applause.]

MR. DOWLING. I can go back to my constituents when I have made my pledges good.

MR. BARBOUR. You made pledges that you would answer to your constituents, and to no one else, and now you are whining and complaining here in this Convention.

MR. DOWLING. No; when I——

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from San Francisco will take his seat.

MR. BARBOUR. That is all I wanted to say.

MR. HILBORN. I have a report from a Committee on Mileage and——

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

MR. BARBOUR. I call for the ayes and noes.

MR. HITCHCOCK. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

MR. AYERS. I second the motion.

REMARKS OF MR. GRACE.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: As my name is in that list I want to say a word. I would rather that this resolution would not lie on the table or be indefinitely postponed. I would like to see the thing come right square up. I do not speak in defiance. I consider that that gentleman violated the rules of that club. They violated their pledge; they violated their platform; and both the gentlemen were in Charter Oak Hall when they unanimously adopted the Hibernian resolution which excluded them from voting for or nominating any man that was an officer of a Ward Club; and as I am credibly informed Mr. Kenny was Secretary of a Ward Club. He was ineligible for our votes, while Mr. Sharpstein was not. The gentleman sat in the club and indorsed the nomination of Mr. Sharpstein, or at least did not oppose it; and I claim that no man can go back on that and be a gentleman.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me, sir, that nothing can more impede our progress in this Convention than anything which is calculated to engender ill feeling among the members. Now, sir, if these resolutions are taken up and voted on it will engender ill feeling. From this time on our work, instead of being considered carefully in the interest of the State, will be more or less tinged with the ill feeling which will be created by this resolution. It seems to me that no benefit can grow out of a vote on this resolution. It seems to me that it will be in the interest of this house that nothing should be done to stir up any further ill feeling, and, therefore, I hope that the motion of the gentleman from San Joaquin will prevail, and that this matter will be indefinitely postponed.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Joaquin.

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. President: As I seem to figure at the tail end of this farce, it is probably necessary that I should figure as one of the culprits pleading before the people of the State of California, and what I have to say is this: that in so far as I had anything personal against Mr. Vacquerel or Mr. Dowling, it is as far from me as the east is from the west; but the delegates of this Convention, elected and known as the Workingmen's delegates of the State of California, have an organization here known as the Constitutional Club. That club is attended by the delegates, largely, of the Workingmen of this Convention, and it is attended for the purpose of consultation, and for the purpose of organization, and for the purpose of ascertaining what our action will be upon a given question or point, and for the purpose of holding us level upon the principles upon which we were elected, sir, and for the purpose of maintaining them in the face of the great opposition or of the small opposition, and for the purpose of putting them forth and holding them up at any and all risks. These two gentlemen have been members of that club, and me, as a member of that club, thought that they had gone back on us in their action with reference to the nomination of Judge Sharpstein; and I, as one member of that club, want no further association with them there. So far as that club was concerned, sir, and so far as I was authorized to speak for the club and for the Workingmen's party of this State, I did vote to fire them out; and I will vote a thousand times in that direction if it is ever presented under similar circumstances. And if it is the will of this Convention that I shall be fired out for doing these things, now is as good a time to fire me as you will ever get. I will stand the fire if I am fired on that.

MR. HOLMES. Believing that the Convention has no desire to figure in this at all, I move the previous question.

MR. REYNOLDS. As my name is included in these——

THE PRESIDENT. The previous question has been called for.

MR. HOLMES. I give way.

REMARKS OF MR. REDDY.

MR. REDDY. Mr. President: The charge has been made on this floor that the privileges of a member, or of two members, have been violated. Now, it is in the first instance, under the rules, the duty of the Chair to say whether there is a question of privilege involved in this charge or not; and I deem it to be the duty of this Convention, if the law has been violated, to maintain its dignity and honor and protect its members from the lash of any party. It is simply dodging the question to postpone this matter. If the privileges of these men have been violated, let us stand up like men and investigate it. These men claim that they have not violated these privileges. Let that question be tried. This is not the way for men to act. Why, the members of this Convention could be trampled upon every corner; they may be hooted at for the votes they may give in this Convention; you may find members hooted as they pass in the streets if you do not stand up and protect yourselves and your dignity, and protect the dignity of this Convention. It is true that there is a large body of men here who are opposed to this proceeding. Why? because the proceeding is threatened against members of a secret society; I do not say whether it is secret or public, but a society that holds its members under certain by-laws and rules peculiar to themselves. Again, we hear applause coming from the lobby. It seems to me there is a widespread sympathy between the gentlemen named and the lobby. There is a great sympathy between them. But I care not for the lobby; I care not for the opinions of those men who would drive us from our duty. No man can deny that it is the duty, if the President should decide that there was a question of privilege involved here, of this Convention, to investigate it; and if it is a simple matter of the right of one gentleman or set of gentlemen, to associate with another set, as claimed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, the Convention will so decide. But, as I understand, it does not involve any such proposition. These gentlemen, as I understand, voted, as they state, according to the dictates of their own consciences. Another set of men issued to them a notice, by authority of a certain club signed by the President of that club, demanding their attendance at a meeting to show cause to them and answer to them why they should not be expelled and punished for voting in a given way. Now, if the statute means anything, it means that an act of this kind shall not be permitted. We all understand the force of numbers. We know that forty or fifty men combined in this matter can exercise a great influence. They can exercise a great influence on this floor, and they propose to take a member out of this body, single him out, make him bend before this forty or fifty, and there give an account of his action in this Convention. If that is the way this Convention is to be run, if it is to be run by forty or fifty men, by whipping and lashing their members into the traces, we might as well go home now, for the people will not adopt the offspring of such a piece of slavery—will not adopt the offspring of slaves—for men are slaves who can be treated in this way. It is beneath the dignity and honor of this Convention to allow these members to be overhauled in this way. This action is in violation of the law of the State to-day. It is in violation of every principle of right. If any set of men in the world should be protected against influences of this kind, it is a body like this. I have heard these same gentlemen, on this floor, denounce men as corporation fuglers, as men belonging to the corporations or influenced by corporations. I do not care who did it; I am not talking about individuals, and I care nothing for these individuals I am speaking about now any more than I do for any member of this Convention. I have respected them, though they are not particular friends. I have no reason for advocating their cause. I know it was an unpopular move to make, but I have not come here to seek popularity; I have come here to do my duty. I say there is a principle involved here; one that we should not allow any man, or set of men, to trample upon; and I, for one, dare and will defend this principle at all times and at all hazards. Now, it is for the Chair to say whether there is a question of privilege involved here under rule thirty-nine, of this Convention. Now, shall we, by a motion to postpone this matter, dodge our duty and allow a man, or a set of men, to attempt to influence members of this Convention as to how they shall vote?

It has been said, and I think it is a very small technicality, that the vote had already been taken, hence the action of this club could not influence the vote of the member. If a man knows he will be punished for an act, it certainly must have a great influence upon him one way or the other. We make laws to deter men from committing crime, and punish one for the purpose of deterring others from committing the same crime. It is generally supposed that that law has an influence to prevent the commission of an act. Then what is this notice given for? To make these men come before them and acknowledge their jurisdiction and then punish him if he does not.

MR. BARBOUR. Did not your client belong to that organization.

MR. REDDY. You have no right to call him my client.

MR. BARBOUR. Didn't you draw up these papers?

MR. REDDY. Yes. I did it because I thought his privilege had been violated, and I would do it for any gentleman who asked my assistance under similar circumstances.

MR. GRACE. I would like to know if you was ever in a Democratic caucus?

MR. REDDY. In the first place it is none your business, and in the second place I never was in a Democratic caucus, nor any other caucus, and I denounce a caucus, and the whole caucus business, whenever it attempts to control men who are sworn to do their duty. When men are not sworn let them do as they please. I know this is an unpopular move.

MR. WEST. Mr. President——

MR. REDDY. Now, if you will allow me to go on you will have all the chance you want to reply, and perhaps if I have a chance to reply to you, you will be sorry you availed yourself of the opportunity. Now, sir, they cite these gentlemen to appear.

MR. WEST. May I explain?

MR. REDDY. I presume that when you are called to the bar of the Convention you will have an opportunity. Now, it is claimed that the vote was already cast, and that therefore they did not attempt to influence that particular vote. The law is broader than that. The law treats it as a breach of privilege and a contempt of the Convention to influence any member, in any way, or upon any measure pending in this Convention. Then what was the purpose? It was to punish this man. Why? In order that a like offense would not be committed again; in order that the next time he would vote according to the wishes and dictates of that club. Because he did not do that they expelled him. Why? In order to retain their influence over the balance, just as the law punishes for an act. It desires to make an example of a party who commits a crime. So this club, in order to make an example, in order to deter others from doing the same thing, expels these men. If they keep on upon this principle we may not have a quorum. However, that is aside. Then this was done for the purpose of influencing the action of members. Was it not calling them to account for an act done on this floor? There can be no question about that, it seems to me; and if so they are clearly within the statute and should be dealt with according to the judgment of this Convention. Now, if a charge of this kind was preferred against a corporation, or against some one who was supposed to be in sympathy with the Non-partisan side; if they had been called to an account, would not the gentleman who are resisting this measure now, be only too glad to pounce upon them, and have them dealt with according to law. The very thing that they have denounced, putting men under improper influences, they seem to exercise themselves through a party organization. Now, I simply demand that the Chair, first, in accordance with the rule, will declare this a question of privilege, which I know the Chair will do. That being done I hope the Convention will investigate, and if there is guilt punish the guilty parties.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: Trusting to an opportunity to get the floor, I did not interrupt the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Dowling, to ask him what I now ask. While speaking to his question of privilege, or his resolutions, he did not inform us which, he denounced the caucus—repudiated the caucus. I ask him now, since when does he repudiate the caucus? Since when does he denounce the caucus? Was it since last Monday evening, when he participated in the nomination of Judge Sharpstein in the caucus? Was it only since he entered into a conspiracy to defy and defeat the will of a caucus in which he participated without raising his voice against it?

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman is out of order with such remarks. It is a question with the conscience of the member.

MR. REYNOLDS. The President need not be so tender of the gentleman's conscience. I ask him if it was since——

MR. DOWLING. I will answer the gentleman. The caucus was a job ever since it commenced; it was a humbug. [Laughter.]

MR. REYNOLDS. That is the gentleman's opinion. I thank him for that answer, and if the caucus, if the club, as he says, has been a humbug, I ask him what sort of man is he who has been an active member of it from the beginning? What sort of man is he who has participated in almost every meeting of that humbug club, in its action down to the very nomination of the gentleman against whom he entered into the conspiracy to defeat? [Applause and laughter.] Yes, sir, since when did he discover the club was a fraud? I will answer. Sir, it is since the time when he entered into the conspiracy with a gentleman who acknowledged on this floor that when two men were candidates for the same office, he signed the recommendation of one and spent his money to elect the other. Yes, sir, it was since then that he discovered the caucus and the club to be a humbug and denounced it. They are fit associates. They ought to be proud of each other.

And now, to show what a shallow pretense all this privileged question business is, I ask the Secretary to read a few lines from the whereases to the pending resolutions.

THE SECRETARY read:

WHEREAS, On the twentieth day of December, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, I was cited to appear before the Workingmen's Constitutional Club, assembled in room fifty-nine, State Capitol, Sacramento, to show cause why I should not be expelled from membership in said club, for having cast my vote as above stated; and whereas, at the time aforesaid, I was a member of said club in good standing; and whereas, I refused to appear before said club for the purpose of being questioned or punished for having cast my vote as above stated, the said club proceeded to expel me, and did expel me on said day from said club, and caused my name to be stricken from the roll of said club, as a punishment for having voted in this connection for said John J. Kenny.

MR. REYNOLDS. I denounce those recitals as untrue, as deliberate falsehoods, and the gentleman who offers this resolution knows it, and now I will prove it. For that purpose I will ask the Secretary to read the following preamble to the resolution expelling Dowling and Vacquerel, passed by the club.

THE SECRETARY read:

WHEREAS, On the sixteenth instant, this club, by its unanimous vote, agreed to nominate and support Hon. J. R. Sharpstein for delegate to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. B. F. Kenny; and, whereas, P. T. Dowling did, on the sixteenth instant, conspire with the enemies of the W. P. C. to place in nomination a candidate in opposition to said candidate of this club, the said Dowling being himself present and participating without objection to said nomination; therefore, be it resolved, etc.

MR. REYNOLDS. Now, Mr. President, there is the preamble to the resolution of expulsion: the record of the action of the club. It gives the lie to the assertion that these gentlemen have been called to account for the votes they cast, but distinctly states that they were expelled from the club because, having participated in its action, they deliberately entered into a conspiracy to bring out another candidate in opposition. The gentlemen themselves know their preamble and resolutions to be false. There is not a gentleman on this floor but knows they are false. They are but a shallow pretense got up to make a case against the Workingmen's delegates in this Convention. This has been the aim of some gentlemen even from the beginning of the session until now, but they have met with disappointments at all points, as they will now. It is a mere sham and trick, inspired by the vain hope to create dissension among the Workingmen, but it will fail. This Convention should be in better business. It should be attending to the duties imposed on it by law, and not prying into matters over which it has no authority. But, sir, I challenge you all, if you think there is any political capital to be made out of it, pass this resolution; raise a committee of investigation; go into the examination; make the most of it,

"And damned be he who first cries hold, enough!"

MR. HOWARD. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

MR. WEST. Mr. President: I desire to say to the Convention, that inasmuch as grave charges have been made here against members of this Constitutional Convention, charges which are false in themselves, false in the beginning, and false in the ending, so far as it relates to any action of any member of this Convention, and my name having been falsely placed there—I care not whether Mr. Reddy wrote it or not—I ask this Convention to adopt the resolutions and have an investigation.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to indefinitely postpone the resolution.

MR. REDDY. Mr. President: I object to the gentlemen voting who are charged in these resolutions. They have no right to vote. Under parliamentary rules they have no right to vote.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman's point of order is well taken. When a charge is made against a member he cannot vote upon it.

MR. REDDY. Mr. President: I ask that these members be requested to withdraw, or keep their seats.

[Cries of "Call the roll;" "Call the roll."]

MR. AYERS. I demand the ayes and noes.

The ayes and noes were demanded by Messrs. Freud, Howard, of Los Angeles, Keyes, and West, and the Secretary commenced calling the roll.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: I claim my right to vote.

THE PRESIDENT. The member being charged in the resolution, cannot vote upon it. That is the universal parliamentary law.

MR. LARKIN. I would ask for the reading of the names.

THE PRESIDENT. Under universal parliamentary law, any member against whom a charge is made, cannot vote upon it.

MR. BARBOUR. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

MR. CROSS. I was not going to vote upon it, but if you make it a party issue, why not let the Non-partisans settle it?

MR. HARRISON. Mr. President——

THE PRESIDENT. No motion can be made. The roll is being called.

MR. HARRISON. My name is called there, and I want to explain the law.

THE PRESIDENT. No explanations can be made when the ayes and noes are being called.

MR. HARRISON. I hope I will be heard afterwards.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I object to the vote of Mr. Reddy. I do not believe a paid attorney can vote.

MR. BARBOUR. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

MR. STEDMAN. I second the appeal.

THE PRESIDENT. No appeal can be entertained now.

MR. BARBOUR. Then I ask permission to place on record a protest.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I understand——

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman will take his seat. He is out of order. Proceed with the roll call.

MR. KENNY (when his name was called). Mr. President: I desire to be excused from voting, as I am an interested party.

MR. SWEASEY (when his name was called). As I belong to the club, although my name is not on the proscribed list, I decline to vote.

The roll was called, and the motion to indefinitely postpone prevailed by the following vote:

LEGISLATIVE DEPARTMENT.

MR. TERRY. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Legislative Department.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The committee had under consideration section thirty-nine. If there are no amendments the Secretary will read section forty.

AMENDMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 40. The Legislature shall not ratify any amendment to the Constitution of the United States which may be proposed by Congress, except such as shall have been proposed and published at least thirty days next preceding the general election for members of the Legislature ratifying such amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out that section. This amendment as first proposed was, that no amendment to the Constitution of the United States should be ratified except by a popular vote. That, for very good reasons, was abandoned, and this section forty substituted in its place:

"The Legislature shall not ratify any amendment to the Constitution of the United States which may be proposed by Congress, except such as shall have been proposed and published at least thirty days next preceding the general election for members of the Legislature ratifying such amendment."

Now, I wish to call attention to the language of the Constitution of the United States upon this subject, in section one, article five. This provision is, that these amendments shall be ratified by the Legislatures in the different States, as may be provided by Congress. Therefore the State has nothing to do with the manner of ratifying the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and I submit that it is a violation of that principle of the Constitution of the United States to say that the Legislature of the State shall not ratify an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, except in the manner provided in this section forty. It says that the Legislature shall not ratify any amendment, "except such as shall have been proposed and published at least thirty days next preceding the general election for members of the Legislature ratifying such amendment." Suppose they are not published then? Two thirds of each branch of Congress propose an amendment, and it is ratified by the Legislatures or Conventions of other States. No provision is made here for the publication of these amendments to the Constitution of the United States, and then if they never should be published, then they are never to be ratified, and that by a provision of the State Constitution. Section one, of article five, of the Constitution of the United States, says:

"The Congress, whenever two thirds of both houses shall deem it necessary, shall propose amendments to this Constitution, or, on the application of the Legislatures of two thirds of the several States, shall call a Convention for proposing amendments, which, in either case, shall be valid to all intents and purposes, as part of this Constitution, when ratified by the Legislatures of three fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three fourths thereof, as the one or the other mode of ratification may be proposed by the Congress."

There is a proviso then following which has nothing to do with this question. Suppose the Legislature assembles and acts upon a proposed amendment to the Constitution of the United States—ratifies it—are we to have the question raised in the Courts whether that is a valid amendment, because the provision of our State Constitution said that the Legislature should not ratify until the proposed amendment had first been published at least thirty days next preceding the general election for members of the Legislature ratifying such amendment? I do not know, Mr. Chairman, why there is any necessity for any provision upon this subject. It seems to proceed upon the idea that some amendments to the Constitution of the United States have been ratified that ought not to have been, in some hasty or unconsidered manner. I am not aware that such action has been taken. If it has been, it is a question for the general government and not for the State.

But there is a special reason why I give some importance to this matter. In the last Presidential election the fact was developed that there is a provision in the Constitution of the United States so uncertain in its meaning as to be as dangerous and threatening in the different constructions which may be given to it, as the different constructions of that Constitution as to the right of secession. Such men as Morton upon the one side, and Edmunds, and other men like him in the same party, upon the other, entertained opposite opinions about the construction of the Constitution of the United States, as to whether the Vice-President could declare the result of a Presidential election, a question which agitated this country from center to circumference, and only by the wisdom and the patriotism of men coming together of both parties, was this country saved, perhaps, from another war. Notwithstanding that occurred in January, eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, or about that date, there has been no amendment yet provided in the Constitution to avoid that very dangerous question. I believe that all will agree with me that it is of the utmost consequence that that provision of the Constitution of the United States which makes it, to say the least, doubtful, whether the Congress or the Vice-President shall declare the vote, ought to be amended. If this amendment should be adopted, and it requires the vote of California to make the three fourths of the States, we could do nothing whatever upon the subject unless we would violate our own Constitution in voting upon that amendment. Now, sir, I see no necessity for that section, and I hope it will be stricken out. It is wrong in principle and wrong in policy, and might lead to disastrous results.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: Several gentlemen have called upon me since my remarks here on the question of privilege, believing that the names set forth in the resolution sent up by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Dowling, were written by me—that is to say, that I had put their names down. They seem to be under that impression. I wish to say now to the gentlemen whose names appear in that resolution, that I do not know anything about those names. I simply suggested the form of those resolutions, and I never saw a single name written. They were inserted in a blank space left for that purpose, and I state this that the gentlemen may not take it as an assertion upon my part that they were a party to anything. I had nothing whatever to do with these resolutions, beyond suggesting the form in which they should be put. My remarks were aimed at the principle involved.

MR. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman: My name is on that list, and I am very glad it is on the list.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I accept the apology.

MR. REDDY. I hope the gentleman will understand me. There seems to be quite a breeze because I dared to exercise my privilege and speak upon this subject, and I have been surrounded on all sides. Now, I want it understood that anybody who does not like my remarks may make a note of it; that I am responsible for them at all times and in all places, either in the daylight or in the dark.

AMENDMENTS TO THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the most important duty which the Legislature is ever called upon to perform is the ratification of an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and it does occur to me that the persons who are called upon to discharge that duty should be elected with some reference to the question which is involved in it. Now, it is proposed here that the proposed amendments to the Constitution of the United States shall be passed upon, so far as the State of California is concerned, by a Legislature, the members of which have been elected after the amendment has been proposed, so that the people, in selecting their members of the Legislature, may do it with some reference to the opinions and views of the candidates upon the ratification or rejection of the amendment. If that thing had been done in the past, perhaps some of the amendments which are now a part of the Constitution would not have been ratified. The fifteenth amendment was never ratified according to the Constitution, but the question cannot rise, because it was proclaimed by the Secretary of State as having been carried by the requisite number of States; but we do know that there were certain States in which subsequent Legislatures elected by the people undertook to withdraw that ratification. So, that if that election had been held, or if a provision of that kind had been in the Constitution, in the States of New York, Oregon, and another—I do not remember the third—requiring that the ratification be by a Legislature, the members of which were elected after the amendment was proposed, it would perhaps never have been ratified. Now, I do not complain of the fifteenth amendment. The fathers of it are beginning to be a little afraid of their own bantling, and after a number of years even-handed justice has returned the poisoned glass to the lips of those who prepared it. Other amendments will come up. Amendments to the Constitution of the United States may be proposed, and the Legislature of this State, and the Legislatures of other States, enfranchising the Chinese, or affecting our interests equally. In a case of that kind, or in case of the proposal of any amendment which involves the interest of the people, I propose that the members of the Legislature shall be voted for with reference to that question.

MR. McCALLUM. Does the enfranchisement of the Chinese require an amendment to the Constitution or the naturalization laws?

MR. TERRY. Well, it might require an amendment to the Constitution, or at least it could be done by an amendment.

MR. McCALLUM. Does it not depend upon the naturalization laws?

MR. TERRY. It does now, but it might be done by a provision in the Constitution. They might extend the provision to everybody in the country. But there are other questions which might arise. Under the naturalization laws, as they now stand, the Chinese may be prevented from voting, not being native citizens of the United States; but there may other questions come up, and it is proposed here in this section that upon any question involving a change in the organic law of the confederation or Union, that the people should speak through their ballot box: that they should elect the men who are to pass upon it after the amendment is proposed, in order that the will of the people may be expressed.

MR. McCALLUM. Suppose the present session of Congress should propose an amendment to the Constitution of the United States with reference to the counting of the electoral vote.

MR. TERRY. It would be published a long time before the members of the next California Legislature are elected, and therefore would not cut any figure.

MR. McCALLUM. Published how?

MR. TERRY. If it was printed in any newspaper in the land it would be published within the meaning of the section.

MR. ESTEE. That is the objection.

MR. TERRY. It does not say published by the authority of Congress, or published by the authority of the State, or published by any authority.

MR. ESTEE. What I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to is this: that the Courts have held that where a law prescribes publication it means publication according to law, and therefore, merely publication in a newspaper or in the proceedings of Congress would not be a publication.

MR. TERRY. Where the law prescribes a particular mode of publication, that is true, but where simple publication is required any publication will answer. This section says: "The Legislature shall not ratify any amendment to the Constitution of the United States which may be proposed by Congress, except such as shall have been proposed and published at least thirty days next preceding the general election for members of the Legislature, ratifying such amendment." It must have been known. The people must know that such an amendment is to be voted upon by the Legislature, at least thirty days before the general election, so that the people may understand that that is one of the duties which that Legislature to be elected will be called upon to perform. I can see no great hardship in it. I can see no purpose in being in a tremendous hurry about such an important matter. The Legislatures of the different States meet at different times. They meet biennally, some on the odd numbered years and some on the even numbered years, and they could not ratify an amendment in any one year. I do not believe that three fourths of the Legislatures of the different States meet in one year, so that there is no necessity for being in a hurry about it, and in a matter so important as this the people ought to have an opportunity to select men whose views upon that particular question would be known to the people before they were voted for.

MR. McCALLUM. Don't you think there is a necessity for a hurry in making that plain which is said now to be doubtful as to the counting of the electoral vote? Don't you think that ought to be done before the next Presidential election?

MR. TERRY. I think that can be done by an Act of Congress.

MR. McCALLUM. It is in the Constitution.

MR. TERRY. I think this Constitution sufficiently plain on that already; but if this present Congress should pass the law which the gentleman speaks of it will be published more than thirty days, and more than six months before the next general election in this State for members of the Legislature. I think it is an important provision. Perhaps, if the Legislature should disregard this provision of the Constitution, no question could be raised as to the validity of their action if it was proclaimed by the Secretary of State at Washington that an amendment had been ratified by three fourths of the States. I do not know of any means by which you could go behind that return and disprove the fact which it purported to certify.

MR. EDGERTON. I would like to ask a question. Is there any doubt but that section forty contemplates an official publication under the authority of law?

MR. TERRY. I do not understand it so.

MR. EDGERTON. I should suppose that there was no doubt about it. It would be held to be an official publication under authority of law. I was going to ask if he is to rely upon the publications that occur in the press that an amendment is proposed by two thirds of both houses, with the discussion that has there occurred, or if it was an amendment proposed by a Convention which was called for that purpose, whether it is not altogether probable that there would be such a discussion of it that it would be known to every elector in the country.

MR. TERRY. Certainly.

MR. EDGERTON. Then why the provision for thirty days' publication in the State. It seems to me as it stands it is altogether too indefinate to be of practical value.

MR. TERRY. The object is to have the people know just what the amendment is before they elect the men who are to cast their votes.

MR. EDGERTON. Suppose that the ratification of an amendment depended upon the vote of California alone, and then they turn to this provision which requires a thirty-day publication, but which does not say what kind of a publication, how, in what papers, where or when. It is left altogether indefinite. It seems to me that it ought to be clearly defined if it is to be put in the Constitution at all, or else omitted altogether. I do not see any necessity for it.

MR. TERRY. If it is printed in a newspaper it is known. If it is printed in the statutes, if it is printed in the proceedings of Congress, that is a publication. But if the gentleman wants to make it more clear—if he wants to suggest any amendment—I have no objection. It is clear enough to my mind now. I think the provision is an important one and should be retained in the Constitution. I think that any pub lication will answer the exigencies of that section.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I think it would be a useless provision. I think if the people of this State got notice of an amendment, twenty-nine days or twenty-eight days prior to the election, that there would be ample notice to the Legislature.

MR. HOWARD. I move to amend by inserting, after the word "published," in line three, the words "as directed by the Governor."

MR. TERRY. I move to amend by striking out the words "and published."

MR. HOWARD. I accept that as an amendment. There is no doubt that in the absence of an Act of Congress, this fortieth section is valid and ought to be adopted.

MR. BLACKMER. I send up a written amendment to strike out those two words, "and published."

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I desire, in justice to the committee, to correct a mistake made by the gentleman from Alameda in regard to the original form in which this proposition was brought before this committee. I recollect myself, distinctly, that it was brought almost exactly in its present form, but the gentleman from Alameda understood it to mean that the ratification should be by the people on a popular vote: but we readily made him understand that he was mistaken in that interpretation of the proposition, and he did understand it, and he is now thinking of the original idea as he understood it when first brought before the committee. I do this, Mr. Chairman, in justice to the committee, for I am prepared to assert that, in my judgment, there was no member of that committee so stupid or ignorant as to have made such a proposition, because they must all have known that the Constitution of the United States provided that the ratification should be by the Legislature.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the principle involved in this contest. What is it? We all agree that under the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, the alteration, modification, or adoption of new sections to the Constitution must be proposed by Congress and ratified by the Legislatures. There is certainly no difference of opinion in regard to that. The real question at issue here is, are the people, in their primary capacity, to take primary action before the Legislature? Now, Mr. Chairman, if I understand the theory of the American system of government, it is based upon the fundamental principle that all sovereign power and authority is inherent in the people, and the formation of organic law is the highest, and the most solemn and important duty of that supreme power. Where is that supreme power? Is it your Legislature? Certainly not. The Legislature is but the creature of that supreme power—the people. The Legislature exercises certain specific and well defined powers, limited by the Constitution—the State Constitution, and the Constitution of the United States; but in the formation of an organic law of the nation, surely they are not the sovereign, paramount, original authority, because, as I remarked, that sovereign, paramount authority is inherent, not in the Legislature, but in the people: therefore I hold, Mr. Chairman, that this solemn act of the formation of fundamental law must be primarily acted upon by that original, paramount authority—the people. How shall we accomplish this result? We will say, for instance, that here is a Legislature in session, and an amendment to the Constitution of the United States is proposed while it is in session, and it is called upon to ratify, and is, in case that they carry it, then ratified. Now, I ask you, Mr. Chairman, and I submit it to the candor of all intelligent men, whether the original, paramount, sovereign authority of the people has ever been consulted. I say it has not. So far from having been consulted, the measure has been proposed subsequently to the time that the Legislature was elected. The sovereigns knew nothing of it at the time that this Legislature was elected. Now, how can they have acted? How can there have been any rightful action of the sovereign in this State; because, as I remarked, the Legislature is not the sovereign; it is but the servant of the people; the agent of the people, exercising certain well defined, limited, and circumscribed powers. This question, which is raised in regard to publication, it seems to me, with all due deference to the gentleman, is but a quibble; and inasmuch as the Chairman of the committee has proposed to strike out the words "and published," that certainly removes all objections, and it does seem to me that if gentlemen are prepared to stand up and defend that fundamental principle upon which all governments are founded in this country, to wit: that the sovereign, original, paramount, and supreme power is in the people, that they can have no earthly objection to this proposition of submitting the question to the sovereigns and then to those who are to carry out their will. No proposition could be plainer, because, if we take the converse of the proposition and assume that the Legislature, the creatures and servants of the people, elected without any reference to this proposed amendment, can exercise this highest, this most solemn, this most fundamental function of government, why, then, it seems to me that we are ignoring, setting aside, and repudiating that fundamental principle upon which all American governments are substantially founded.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to strike out the words "and published."

The amendment was adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion to strike out section forty.

The motion prevailed on a division by a vote of 47 ayes to 39 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section forty-one.

CONTESTED ELECTIONS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 41. In case of a contested election in either branch of the Legislature, only the claimant decided entitled to the seat shall receive from the State per diem compensation, or mileage.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section forty-one. It is contrary to the general parliamentary usage. I have never known a contest in the United States House of Representatives where per diem and mileage were not allowed to a contesting member. It would often operate injuriously, for the reason that it might deprive a county or a constituency of the services of a man really elected and really entitled to his seat, because he might not be able at his own expense to prosecute the contest. At all events, it is safer to leave it to the Legislature to determine whether, and under what circumstances, he should be allowed mileage and per diem.

MR. BARTON. I second the motion.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that contests are rather encouraged by the fact that a man cannot lose anything anyhow. He comes here and stays to the full length of the session at the Capital, and he draws his per diem and mileage. Now, in all other litigation the losing party pays the cost, and sometimes the costs of the other party too. I do not see why a man should receive pay unless he brings forward such a case as insures his success.

MR. HOWARD. I will ask my friend if the contestant does not represent the people rather than himself? Is it not safer to leave it to the Legislature to say whether it is a frivolous contest or not?

MR. TERRY. Theoretically, the people are represented; practically, it is the man himself and not the people. I do not see why a man should be paid for making a false claim.

MR. SCHELL. Would it not be necessary that the question of mileage should be deferred until the very last end of the session, because it might occur that the contests would not be decided until the very last end of the session.

MR. TERRY. Where would be the hardship of that? Then if he was entitled to the mileage he would get it. Let them have it at the end of the session.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I hope the motion of the gentleman from Los Angeles will prevail. It seems to me that this is getting down to rather small business; we have left many things to the Legislature. Of course, if there is no merit in the contest there should be no allowance. If there is merit in it, the allowance should be made, because the prosecution is ready in behalf of the people, and the people might be defeated of their actual will by reason of the candidate not being able to prosecute the contest at his own expense. Therefore I do not see the necessity of descending to particulars of that kind.

MR. TERRY. In a contest of any other kind a man pays his own expenses. In case of two men claiming to have been elected County Judge the people are just as much interested as they are in men claiming seats in the Legislature. Yet in all those cases the losing party gets nothing.

MR. SCHELL You propose to make a man wait until the end of the session. That is a very exceptionable case.

MR. TERRY. The law now provides that when a man's right to an office is contested, that he cannot get the salary until the case is decided. I can see no hardship in subjecting members of the Legislature to the same rule. After the matter is decided the man gets it in a lump.

REMARKS OF MR. BELCHER.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me this section can perform no good office. It is unquestionably true that men are sometimes thrown out of legislative bodies when they have been in fact elected, after serving a considerable time. This has been true in Congress as we are told on many occasions, when somebody had a seat there, and the question arose as to the right of another party to that seat. Now, no longer ago than at the first meeting of the present Congress one Representative from this State, who had the certificate, and it was decided by the Supreme Court of this State that he was entitled to it, was thrown out by the present majority in Congress.

MR. HOWARD. I never knew a contested election to be determined on any other than party grounds. The party having the majority holds on to it.

MR. TERRY. If he was in the minority, he ought to have sense enough not to go there.

MR. BELCHER. The gentleman from Los Angeles says he has never known a contested election case to be determined on any other than party grounds. Now, suppose a man is elected to Congress, and goes and serves two or three months, and then he is turned out for some reason or other, and then it is decided that he shall have neither mileage nor per diem? The same principle is involved here. A man comes up from the southern part of the State with the certificate of a member of the Legislature. Upon the face of it he is entitled to a seat in the Senate or Assembly of the State. Suppose the question is raised as to his right to the seat; suppose after he has served a month, or two months—nearly to the end of the session—it is determined by a majority of the house to which he is sent, for partisan purpose, as it may be, that he is not entitled to that seat, and that his antagonist is. What Congress does, this State may do. What Congress has been doing during the whole history of our Government the Legislature may do, if it never has done it. Now, I say when a man has served in the Legislature as the party having the certificate of election, he ought to be paid for the time that he serves. Why should not the Legislature give him the pay to which he is entitled for the time he actually performed the duties of a legislator? Yet, if this amendment is adopted, nobody can have any per diem or mileage until it is finally determined. The man going away, poor perhaps, with his certificate, is finally turned out for the motives I have suggested, and told to go home without a cent in his pocket, though he was, in fact, entitled to his seat. There is no harm in leaving it as it has been. It is not a large amount for the State to lose. I think if you decide otherwise, by putting in this amendment, you deter a man who is poor from coming here if there be a contest about it. He cannot afford to come here and spend one month, or two months, waiting the determination of the Legislature, because if it is determined against him he will have nothing to pay his expenses with. I think, therefore, that this section should be stricken out.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, to strike out section forty-one.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 61 ayes to 27 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section forty-two.

TERMS OF OFFICERS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 42. In order that no inconvenience may result to the public service from the taking effect of this Constitution, no officer shall be suspended or superseded thereby until the election and qualification of the several officers provided for in this Constitution.

MR. TERRY. That properly belongs to the Committee on Schedule. There is no objection to striking it out.

MR. MORELAND. I move to strike it out.

CONTROL OF CORPORATIONS.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer an additional section on the same subject that was covered by section twenty-eight. I ask leave to read it myself, and then I will send it up to the Secretary. Insert as follows:

"SEC. 28. The Legislature shall provide by law for the regulation and limitation of rates of the charges by all corporations for furnishing water or gas and for telegraphing; also, for freights and fares, except as otherwise provided in this Constitution; and where laws shall provide for the selection of any person or officer to regulate or limit any such charges, no such person or officer shall be selected by any corporation or by any officer or agent thereof, and no person shall be selected who is an officer or stockholder in any such corporation."

I wish to call attention to the position in which this question stands. After having amended the section, a majority of the Committee of the Whole struck it out. I will state to the gentlemen that I have prepared the amendment very carefully to cover all those great corporations which, by common usage, are known as monopolies—the gas companies, the water companies, and the telegraph companies; and I refer to other companies not provided for except as otherwise provided in the Constitution, which, of course, refers to the action of the Committee of the Whole on the article concerning railroads exclusively. That committee did not see proper to provide for the regulation either by the Commission or by any mandatory provision upon the Legislature to provide for the regulation of charges in any case whatever, except solely railroad companies. Some language is used there about railroad companies and other transportation companies, but as I see that the Chairman is now present, and I understand him to explain, and I believe it is the understanding of the Convention that although the general language is used, "other transportation companies," railroad companies are meant; as the gentleman illustrated, such companies as the White Star Line and the Red Line—any particular company running trains on the bed of a railroad company proper, in the sense in which we usually use that phrase. Therefore, the Committee on Corporations made no provision whatever with reference to the regulation of the charges of any corporation whatever, except railroad companies. Now, it is just as important, if this principle is right, that there should be a mandatory provision requiring the Legislature, by a Commission or otherwise, to provide for the limitation and regulation of the charges of other great monopolies. Now, as to all the other corporations, that may be proper in a separate amendment. I submit to the Convention that as we have applied the principle to one monopoly, consistency would seem to require that we should carry out the principle in all.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer a substitute. With the leave of the Convention I will read it:

"SEC. —. The Legislature shall pass laws for the regulation and limitation of the charges for services performed and commodities furnished by telegraph, gas, and water corporations, and the charges by corporations or individuals for storage, wharfage, and water, in which there is a public use; and where laws shall provide for the selection of any person or officer to regulate and limit such rates, no such person or officer shall be selected by any corporation or individual interested in the business to be regulated, and no person shall be selected who is an officer or stockholder in any such corporation."

MR. HOWARD. I second the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. HILBORN.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to both the original section and the amendment. I believe the proper way to dispose of this whole thing is to place their regulation in the hands of the municipal authorities at the place where the works are located. It has always been the law of this State. Of course the Legislature has always had power to regulate the rates of gas and water, but it has been impracticable for the Legislature to exercise its power for this reason: it has been insisted that these laws should be uniform in their operation. They must be governed by general laws. Therefore when an effort was made to regulate Spring Valley or the gas company in San Francisco, the rates which were fixed in that general bill were so low that they frightened the members from the country, because the rates that were in those bills were lower than gas or water could be furnished in any of the other cities throughout the State. The consequence is, that the members from the country would combine and do that which those large monopolies desired, namely, beat any general bill. Now, there never will be any general bill passed in this State to fix the rates of gas and water, because if it is fixed as it should be for San Francisco, gas and water cannot be furnished at those rates in any of the country cities or villages of the State. Therefore I believe that it is best to leave these matters to the several cities and villages to regulate the rates of gas and water.

MR. MCCALLUM. I will ask the gentleman if this does not require an Act of the Legislature? I agree with the gentleman that it should be left to the municipalities, but I inquire if it does not require an Act of the Legislature to get that through. My amendment does not interfere with the gentleman's views in the slightest degree.

MR. HILBORN. I think we had better put it into the Constitution that these municipalities shall have the power to regulate these things. Why not do it in that direct way?

THE SECRETARY read Mr. Johnson's amendment.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I think that amendment is well drawn, and I hope it will be adopted. It meets a want.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say a word on this proposition. It was understood by the Committee on Corporations that the Committee on Legislative Department had already handled this matter, and that section twenty-eight, as reported by them, would meet the issue. So far as I am concerned, I heartily indorse the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Johnson, because it leaves out the question as to freights and fares entirely. I do not think the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda is necessary. I hope that the amendment to the amendment will be adopted. I suppose it makes no difference who offers an amendment, so long as we get what we desire.

MR. MCCALLUM. The proposition of the gentleman from Sonoma includes individuals. The amendment I presented is simply with reference to corporations, and only those corporations which are named. I did not insert that, because after the vote here in which a similar proposition was voted down, I did not propose to ask another vote on a proposition in that shape. That was substantially the proposition which the committee voted down this morning.

MR. HOWARD. It applies to individuals only when there is a public use.

MR. MCCALLUM. The gentleman had those words inserted this morning, and after the Convention inserted those words, then they struck out the whole section. That is the history of it.

MR. HOWARD. If we voted wrong then is there any reason why we should do it again?

MR. MCCALLUM. I have no objection to striking out that clause. The only reason I put it in there is because the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations explained that they did not provide for any transportation companies whatever except railroad companies. Now, take the case of the Steam Navigation Company; there is no provision according to the explanation of the Chairman of the committee to reach the regulation of charges in that case.

MR. ESTEE. I do not recollect of ever saying that it does not reach any other than railroad companies. I did say that it reached these big transportation companies like the Star Line, and the White Line, etc., but I did not say that it did not reach others.

MR. MCCALLUM. Do you understand that these Railroad Commissioners would have the right to regulate the rates of any transportation company whatever except a railroad company?

MR. ESTEE. I am not speaking of the duties, I am speaking of the liabilities.

MR. HOWARD. It does give express power.

MR. ESTEE. I understand that the term railroad and other transportation companies is a generic term and means all of them.

MR. MCCALLUM. I admit that is a fair construction, but I do state that when the question arose it was stated by the Chairman of the committee, and by a number of other gentlemen, that the meaning of that was, that it had reference to other railroad companies, and that if it was not sufficiently clear the word railroad would be inserted there. I will ask now to amend my proposition by striking out that last clause in reference to transportation companies. Strike out "also for freights and fares except as otherwise provided in this Constitution."

MR. BARBOUR. I would like to ask the author of the amendment whether this provision being mandatory will not debar a municipality from regulating the rates of water and gas.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Johnson.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 62 ayes to 30 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment as amended.

Adopted.

NUMBER OF ASSEMBLYMEN.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer an additional section to the article.

THE SECRETARY read:

"After the year eighteen hundred and ninety, the Legislature may increase the number of Assemblymen to one hundred and twenty, provided two thirds of all the members elected to each house shall vote in favor of such increase."

MR. WYATT. I second the amendment.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I believe it is the opinion of a majority of this Convention that at some time not far in the future, that the Assembly should be increased. We have provided in this article a number, which makes it mandatory, and there is no possible opportunity to change it, unless by an amendment to the Constitution. I believe that the Senate should be a conservative and small body of men, consequently I have not provided for any increase of the Senate; but I believe it would be wise, and that it is the sense of this committee, that after the year eighteen hundred and ninety, the Legislature should have the power to increase the number of Assemblymen to one hundred and twenty. I have not numbered it, leaving it for the Committee on Revision and Adjustment to put it in where they see fit, if the committee should vote in favor of this proposition. I hope it will be adopted.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I send up an additional section to article four, to be known as section twenty-nine.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature shall have power to increase the number of members of Assembly to one hundred, at the first session of the Legislature after the adoption of this Constitution, and the number of Senators and members of Assembly shall be apportioned among the several counties and districts to be established by law according to the inhabitants, to be ascertained by the number of the electors, multiplied by five, as registered on the Great Registers of the several counties on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and eighty, which shall be the apportionment and basis of representation until otherwise provided by law."

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I might say in regard to this matter that I am not particular as to the wording of the section, but as to the principle involved here. This inflexible rule established in the fifth section of this article does a great injustice to some of the interior counties. The county that I represent, having a population of about ten thousand, has no representative at all, neither has the County of Tulare, which is much larger. Now, if the population of this State should increase in proportion as it has, and we should have twenty thousand or thirty thousand population, we would still have no representative while this inflexible rule of forty Senators and eighty members of the Assembly prevails. Unless there is some kind of apportionment, we will have no representative. There is a great opposition to this measure coming from a majority of the members from the central portion of the State, and whether it is passed or not, I want to lift my voice in favor of those whom I represent. In nine cases out of ten, when there is anything coming up in this State in which the people of the State are interested, the distant portions of the State are not heard on account of the slimness of their representation. I leave it in the hands of the Convention to do what they please with it.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I am not rising before you, sir, in this body, to exactly a question of privilege, but it does appear to me that although the gentleman has a right, if he thinks so, to say that his county is not represented, he has no right to say that Tulare is without representation. He is wrong. [Laughter.] Now, sir, we have not the numbers that the population, according to the vote of eighteen hundred and seventy-six, would give to Tulare. We have a right, taking that as a basis, to a larger representation, numerically. That is correct, but it is hoped, with what assistance Tulare may be able to bring to bear, that we may be able to remedy that by the assistance especially of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers, and I think the gentleman from Kern will also assist in this matter.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. When I spoke of the gentleman's county I had reference to the Legislature and not to this body.

MR. BROWN. Tulare has never failed to be represented in the Legislature of this State. [Laughter.] I believe that in addition to that I am opposed to the gentleman's amendment, but I would like to hear it read.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature shall have power to increase the number of members of Assembly to one hundred, at the first session of the Legislature after the adoption of this Constitution, and the number of Senators and members of Assembly shall be apportioned among the several counties and districts to be established by law according to the number of inhabitants, to be ascertained by the number of the electors, multiplied by five, as registered on the Great Registers of the several counties on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and eighty, which shall be the apportionment and basis of representation until otherwise provided by law."

MR. BROWN. I believe, as we have all heard it now, I shall say nothing against it and make no further explanation.

REMARKS OF MR. SHURTLEFF.

MR. SHURTLEFF. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that we ought not to adopt these amendments. There will be inequalities under any apportionment, and some of the counties cannot have representatives. If we go upon that principle we shall have to extend it, so that the number would be beyond all reason. I believe that the State of Massachusetts had the most popular deliberative body on the face of the earth. It consisted of seven hundred and thirty members. Now, the experience of that State has proven that the body was too large, and they are pretty slow there to deviate from the old rules. But Massachusetts found wisdom—she found that she had a more popular branch than necessary. She has cut down piece by piece, until to-day, with a million six hundred thousand inhabitants, where she had seven hundred and thirty members, she has now two hundred and forty. The Eastern States, generally, have cut down the old popular branch. It seems to me that this State is represented enough in both branches, and will be for the next twenty-five years. Why, in the State of New York a Senator represents a greater constituency than does a member of the lower house of Congress from this State. I think that there is no necessity for this provision.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I will ask the gentleman if the population of that State is not more equally distributed than that of California?

MR. SHURTLEFF. Certainly it is; but then eighty members of the Assembly is a large enough number. The State of Texas, a larger State than this, has just the same, except that the Senate has ten less, and the popular branch ten more. It seems to me that this provision to make this increase is unwise, and would lead, by and by, to an increase of the number of members of the Legislature that would be no benefit whatever. I hope the Convention will adhere to the decision it made the other day, and let it stand just where it is in the old Constitution—forty Senators and eighty Assemblymen—and no power to increase it.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I, too, hope that it will be left as it is. It is amply sufficient for all the purposes of representation, and this effort to raise it is only an effort to increase politicians in this State. I hope it will be allowed to remain as it is.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kern, Mr. Smith.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer.

The amendment was rejected.

MOTION TO RECONSIDER.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I rise now for the purpose of taking up my motion to reconsider the amendment to section twenty-four of the article on legislative department, offered by Mr. Smith, of Santa Clara. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Smith, was adopted, providing that "all laws of the State of California, and all official writing, and the executive, legislative, and judicial proceedings, shall be conducted, preserved, and published in no other than the English language."

THE CHAIRMAN. It is a very doubtful question whether the committee can entertain a motion to reconsider any of its votes. Under the general parliamentary law no such motion can be made in the Committee of the Whole.

MR. AYERS. Is that the decision of the Chair?

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that it cannot be entertained, and was about to state the reason why. One reason, I presume, for it is, that the action of the Committee of the Whole is not final. It reports back the original proposition referred to it with any amendments which may be offered by the committee, and when it comes into the house they may be amended again or rejected. We have two rules adopted by this house bearing upon this question. One is upon the subject of reconsideration, which requires a notice to be given, and then after lying over one day, a motion to reconsider. Another rule of the Convention is, that the rules of the Convention will be observed in Committee of the Whole so far as they are applicable. A similar rule exists in the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, and the uniform decision there has been that a motion to reconsider cannot be entertained in the Committee of the Whole; that it is not applicable; that the business of the Committee of the Whole may be obstructed and delayed indefinitely by such a motion. The Committee of the Whole may be ready to report back its action to the house in an hour, and if such a motion were entertained it might be tied up by a notice of a motion to reconsider, which cannot come up for twenty-four hours afterwards. Therefore, as there is no rule of this Convention contrary to the general parliamentary rule, the Chair decides that a motion to reconsider cannot be entertained in Committee of the Whole.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: Then I move that this committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. I make this motion for the reason that there is a proposition which has been referred to the Committee on Legislative Department which I wish to be reported back to the Committee of the Whole before it finishes the consideration of this article.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise and report this article back to the Convention, with the amendments adopted by this committee, with the recommendation that it be printed with the amendments, and placed upon the calendar.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Legislative Department, have completed their consideration of the same, and report it back to the Convention with the recommendation that the article, as amended, be printed and placed on the calendar.

MR. TERRY. I move that the report of the Committee of the Whole be printed and placed on the general file.

The motion prevailed.

REPORT—MILEAGE.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: I send up a report from the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses.

THE SECRETARY read:

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses have had under consideration Resolution No. 100—relative to the mileage of the newly elected members—and find that W. J. Howard is entitled to mileage for three hundred and twelve miles, and J. J. Kenny for one hundred and eighty-six miles; we, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Controller be directed to draw his warrants, payable out of the appropriation for the expenses of this Convention, in favor of W. J. Howard for the sum of forty-six dollars and eighty cents, and in favor of J. J. Kenny for the sum of twenty-five dollars and twenty cents, the same being the amounts to which they are respectively entitled as mileage as members of this Convention.

Your committee have also had under consideration Resolution No. 101—relative to postage stamps for the Secretary—and herewith report the same back without recommendation.

HILBORN, Chairman.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman: I move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was adopted.

MR. HILBORN. I now move that the resolution in relation to appropriating five dollars for postage stamps, for the use of the Secretary, be adopted.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the State Controller be and he is hereby ordered to issue warrants to the amount of five dollars in favor of the Secretary, for purchasing postage stamps, to be used in transmitting memorials relative to Chinese to the President of the United States, Senate, House of Representatives, Governors of the Pacific States and Territories, and to all the Governors of the several States of the United States, and for other correspondence of the Convention.

The resolution was adopted.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. President: I move that this Convention do now adjourn until Thursday, December twenty-sixth, at two o'clock P. M.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: I move to adjourn.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the motion of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, that the Convention adjourn.

The motion prevailed.

And at five o'clock and five minutes P. M. the Convention adjourned.

Carried.

REVENUE AND TAXATION.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. President: I desire to offer a proposition, and ask that it be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SECTION 1. Taxes shall be levied as hereinafter provided. All taxes upon property shall be uniform within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws.

"SEC. 2. All property, the income from which is not taxed, excluding growing crops, private property exempt from taxation under the laws of the United States, public property belonging to the United States or to this State, or any municipality thereof, and property used exclusively for charitable purposes not exceeding —— thousand dollars, belonging to any one institution, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law.

"SEC. 3. The Legislature shall provide by law for the assessment and collection of a tax upon incomes derived from investments in bonds, notes (whether secured by mortgage or not), or securities of any kind owned by individuals, and upon the gross incomes of all railroad, navigation, or banking corporations, bank and exchange agencies, and insurance companies, foreign or domestic, or any other corporation (other than municipal) or association whatever, formed for profit or doing business in this State; provided, that all notes, bonds, or securities of any kind, the income from which is taxed, and all property owned by and necessarily used by corporations or associations in producing incomes which are taxed, shall be exempt from an ad valorem tax."

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. President: I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

THE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection it is so ordered.

CHRISTMAS ADJOURNMENT.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: I desire to offer a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That when the Convention adjourns this day, it be to meet on Thursday, December twenty-sixth, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, at two o'clock P. M.

MR. MCCALLUM. I send up a substitute for that resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That when this Convention shall adjourn to-day, it will adjourn to meet on Friday next, at two o'clock P. M.

MR. WHITE. I move to amend by making it nine o'clock.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: I think sufficient time, considering the amount of work we have before us, if we adjourn to-day over until Thursday. If we adjourn to-day, these members will go home this afternoon and will return by Thursday at two o'clock. The interests of this Convention demand that we shall be continuously at work in order to complete our work. I think that our duty to the people of this State compels us to remain in session every hour that we can. We have been adjourning for the benefit of the gentlemen from San Francisco, and I desire this adjournment simply for their benefit.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I hope these motions to adjourn will be voted down, and that we will adjourn until Thursday, until half-past nine o'clock. If the Convention is going to keep right at it, all right; I am going home.

MR. SCHELL. I hope no adjournment will be had, even over to-morrow. These gentlemen who are so industrious, and think we have such mountains of work to do and no time to do it in, ought to be permitted to stay here, and so far as I am concerned, I am willing to meet these identical gentlemen at work here to-morrow, and not adjourn over at all.

MR. KLEINE. Mr. President: If the holidays are more important to these gentlemen, let them go home and stay home.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum.

The amendment was lost on a division vote of 36 ayes to 47 noes.

THE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the adoption of the resolution offered by the gentleman from El Dorado, Mr. Larkin.

The resolution was adopted.

FUTURE AMENDMENTS.

MR. WHITE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Future Amendments. This is a matter that we can finish this morning, and it will be out of the way. If we leave it we will lose a half day at it some other time. I hope the motion will prevail.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: I am opposed to taking up this proposition. I hope we will go on with the article on taxation.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: It is immaterial to me personally. I shall support the motion of the gentleman from Santa Cruz, because two or three gentlemen are absent who desire very much to be here when the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation is considered. Mr. Shafter is absent, sick; Judge Hager was called to San Francisco yesterday on account of sickness in his family; Major Biggs was called home on business. Everybody knows he has been sick a long time. These gentlemen, and other gentlemen, asked me to urge upon this Convention the postponement of the consideration of the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation until the Convention meets after the holidays.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. President: As Chairman of the Committee on Future Amendments, I do not object to the report being taken up at this time. I did not suppose it would come up so soon, but as the report is a short one, we may get through with it this morning, whereas we could not finish some of the reports that were sent in before it. I think the committee are likely to tear it all to pieces, but if the Convention think best to take up the report of that committee, I do not object to it.

MR. TERRY. Mr. President: A resolution has already been passed that the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation should follow immediately after the report of the Committee on Legislative Department.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Santa Cruz, Mr. White, that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Future Amendments.

MR. LARKIN. It requires a two-thirds vote.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen, those in favor of the motion will rise and stand until the Secretary counts them.

The division resulted in 52 ayes and 23 noes.

THE PRESIDENT. No quorum voting. There is evidently a quorum in the Convention.

MR. LARKIN. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of considering the article on revenue and taxation.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is not in order at present. We are taking a vote on the motion to go into a Committee of the Whole on the article on future amendments. Members are requested to vote on one side or the other.

The amendment then prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 56 ayes to 27 noes.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. WEST. Mr. President: I rise to a point of order on the vote just taken.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Convention has gone into a Committee of the Whole.

MR. EDGERTON. Has the Convention resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole?

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

MR. LARKIN. Does the Chair decide that two thirds voted to go into Committee of the Whole?

THE CHAIRMAN. No two-third vote is required. The Secretary will read the article reported by the Committee on Future Amendments.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 1. Any amendment or amendments to this Constitution may be proposed in the Senate or Assembly, and if two thirds of all the members elected to each of the two houses shall vote in favor thereof, such proposed amendment or amendments shall be entered in their Journals, with the yeas and nays taken thereon; and it shall be the duty of said Legislature to submit such proposed amendment or amendments to the people, in such manner and at such time as may be deemed expedient. Such amendment or amendments shall be published in full in each county in the State wherein a newspaper is published for at least three months next preceding the election at which they are to be submitted. Should more than one amendment be submitted at the same election, they shall be so prepared and distinguished, by numbers or otherwise, that they can be voted on separately. If the people shall approve and ratify such amendment or amendments, or any of them, by a majority of the electors qualified to vote for members of the Legislature voting therefor, such amendment or amendments shall become a part of this Constitution.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendment to section one, the Secretary will read section two.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 2. Whenever two thirds of the members elected to each branch of the Legislature shall think it necessary to revise this Constitution, they shall recommend to the electors to vote at the next general election for or against a Convention for that purpose, and if a majority of the electors voting at said election, on the proposition for a Convention, shall vote in favor thereof, the Legislature shall, at its next session, provide by law for calling the same. Said Convention shall consist of a number of delegates not to exceed that of both branches of the Legislature, which shall be chosen in the same manner, and have the same qualifications, as members of the Legislature. The delegates so elected shall meet within three months after their election at such place as the Legislature may direct. The Constitution that may be agreed upon by such Convention shall be submitted to the people at a special election, to be provided for by law, for their ratification or rejection, in such manner as the Convention may determine. The returns of such election, shall, in such manner as the Convention shall direct, be certified to the Executive of the State, who shall call to his assistance the Controller, Treasurer, and Secretary of State, and compare the returns so certified to him; and it shall be the duty of the Executive to declare, by his proclamation, such Constitution as may have been ratified by a majority of all the votes cast at such special election, to be the Constitution of the State of California.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise and report back this article, with the recommendation that it be adopted, and that it be placed on the general file.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Future Amendments, report the article back and recommend its adoption, and that it be placed on the general file.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. President: I move that the article be printed and placed on the general file.

The motion prevailed.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. President: It seems to me that this is rather an extraordinary proceeding in this matter. There are many of us who have not read this report. My recollection is, that it was not laid upon our tables until yesterday.

THE PRESIDENT. What does the gentleman make?

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

MR. GREGG. I move we adjourn.

The motion was lost.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from El Dorado, Mr. Larkin.

The motion prevailed.

The article is as follows:

REVENUE AND TAXATION.

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. All taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws.

SEC. 2. All property, including franchises, capital stock of corporations or joint stock associations, and solvent debts, deducting therefrom debts due to bona fide residents of this State, and excluding growing crops, private property exempt from taxation under the laws of the United States, public property belonging to the United States, or to this State, or any municipality thereof, and all property and the proceeds thereof which is used exclusively for charitable purposes, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law.

SEC. 3. Land, and the improvements thereon, shall be separately assessed. Cultivated and uncultivated land, of the same quality and similarly situated, shall be assessed at the same value.

SEC. 4. Every tract of land containing within its boundaries more than one government section shall be assessed, for the purposes of taxation, by sections or fractional sections; and where the section lines have not been established by authority of the United States, the Assessor and County Surveyor shall establish the section lines, in conformity with the government system of surveys, as nearly as practicable. Each section or fractional section shall be valued and assessed separately; and for the purpose of subdividing and assessing, the Assessor and Surveyor, and their assistants, may enter upon any land within their respective counties.

SEC. 5. A mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby. Except as to railroad and other quasi-public corporations, in case of debts so secured, the value of the property affected by such mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or obligation, less the value of such security, shall be assessed and taxed to the owner of the property, and the value of such security shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof, in the county in which the property affected thereby is situate. The taxes so levied shall be a lien upon the property and security, respectively, and may be paid by either party to such security; if paid by the owner of the security, the tax so levied upon the property affected thereby shall become a part of the debt so secured; if the owner of the property shall pay the tax so levied on such security, it shall constitute a payment thereon, and, to the extent of such payment, a full discharge thereof.

SEC. 6. Every contract hereafter made, by which a debtor is obligated to pay any tax or assessment on money loaned, or on any mortgage, deed of trust, or other lien, shall, as to any interest specified therein, and as to such tax or assessment, be null and void.

SEC. 7. No corporation, except for benevolent, religious, scientific, or educational purposes, shall be hereafter formed under the laws of this State unless the persons named as corporators shall, at or before filing the articles of incorporation, pay into the State treasury one hundred dollars for the first fifty thousand dollars or less of capital stock, and a further sum of twenty dollars for every additional ten thousand dollars of such stock; and no such corporation shall hereafter increase its capital stock without first paying into the State treasury twenty dollars for every ten thousand dollars of increase.

SEC. 8. No license tax shall be imposed by this State, or any municipality thereof, upon any trade, calling, occupation, or business, except the manufacture and sale of wine, spirituous and malt liquors, shows, theaters, menageries, sleight of hand performances, exhibitions for profit, and such other business and occupations of like character as the Legislature may judge the public peace or good order may require to be under special State or municipal control. But the Legislature may by law impose any license, or other tax, on persons or corporations owning or using franchises or corporate privileges.

SEC. 9. The Legislature shall provide for the levy and collection of an annual poll tax of not less than two dollars, for school purposes, on every male inhabitant of this State over twenty-one and under sixty years of age, except paupers, idiots, insane persons, and Indians not taxed. Said tax shall be paid into the State School Fund.

SEC. 10. The power of taxation shall never be surrendered or suspended by any grant or contract to which the State shall be a party.

SEC. 11. The Legislature shall provide by law for the payment of all taxes on real property by installments.

SEC. 12. The Legislature shall by law require each taxpayer in this State to make and deliver to the County Assessor, annually, a statement, under oath, setting forth specifically all the real and personal property owned by such taxpayer, or in his possession, or under his control, at twelve o'clock meridian, on the first Monday of March.

SEC. 13. Assessors and Collectors of State, county, city and county, town, or district taxes, shall be elected by the qualified electors of the county, city and county, town, or district in which the property taxed for State, county, city and county, town, or district purposes, is situated; provided, that vacancies may be filled by appointment, according to general laws.

SEC. 14. The State tax on property, exclusive of such tax as may be necessary to pay the existing State debt, shall not exceed forty cents on each one hundred dollars for any one year.

SEC. 15. A State Board of Equalization, consisting of two members from each Congressional District in this State, shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective districts, at the general election to be held in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, and every four years thereafter, whose duty it shall be to equalize the valuation of the taxable property in the State for purposes of State taxation. The Boards of Supervisors of the several counties in the State shall constitute Boards of Equalization for their respective counties, whose duty it shall be to equalize the valuation of the taxable property in the county for the purposes of county taxation.

SEC. 16. The State Board of Equalization shall assess the value of all the property of all railroad corporations in this State. For the purpose of taxation, the value of all lands, workshops, depots, and other buildings belonging to or under the control of each railroad corporation, shall be apportioned by said Board to the counties, cities and counties, cities, townships, and districts in which such lands, workshops, depots, and other buildings are situate; and the aggregate value of all other property of such railroad corporation shall be apportioned by said Board to each county, city and county, city, town, or district in which its road shall be located, according to the ratio which the number of miles of such road completed in such county, city and county, city, town, or district shall bear to the whole length of such railroad.

SEC. 17. The value of the capital stock of a corporation shall be assessed in the county in which its principal place of business is located, and separately from all other property belonging thereto; and such stock shall be assessed at its market value when the assessment is made. The real and other personal property of such corporation shall be assessed in the several counties respectively in which the same is situate. The value of such stock, over and above the aggregate value of such real and other personal property, according to such assessment, shall be taxed in the county in which the principal place of business of such corporation is located; and the value of such real and other personal property shall be taxed in the several counties respectively in which the same is situate. The shares of stock belonging to the stockholders in such corporation shall be exempt from taxation; provided, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to railroad corporations.

SEC. 18. The Legislature shall pass all laws necessary to carry out the provisions of this article.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section one.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 1. All taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws.

MR. LARKIN. I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute for the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SECTION 1. Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law."

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again. I make that motion so as to move a call of the house. The question was put and resulted in a vote of 31 ayes and 38 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting. There is evidently a quorum in the house.

MR. REYNOLDS. I desire to state——

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable. Those in favor of the motion will rise and stand until they are counted. Members are requested to vote on one side or the other.

The division resulted in a vote of 35 ayes to 41 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. In order to ascertain whether there is a quorum present, the Chair will direct the Secretary to call the roll, and members are directed to answer to their names as they are called.

THE SECRETARY called the roll, and the following members answered to their names:

THE CHAIRMAN. There is a quorum present.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again. I make this motion, because I am sure that this house does not intend, to-day, to take up the question of taxation. We can take up some other report and proceed to business, and I hope it will be done.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen, the Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. HERRINGTON. I desire to send up a minority report from the Committee on Education.

THE SECRETARY read:

MINORITY REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION.

To the President and Gentlemen of the Convention:

The undersigned, a minority of the Committee on Education, herewith presents his report, and asks that it be referred to Committee of the Whole, to be considered in connection with the report of the majority, as printed.

Section six of the majority report, in defining the system of public schools, provides for "such normal schools, high schools, evening schools, and technical schools" as the Legislature may prescribe, or as may be established by any municipality or school district of the State, in addition to primary and grammar schools, but excludes from the system the State Normal School.

The branch of the system called high schools, as now conducted, which this section perpetuates, is a continued source of public dissatisfaction. It permits instruction in all languages—ancient and modern—and prevents uniformity in the courses of instruction therein pursued. It is not probable that any two districts in the State will require the same kind of text-books.

The qualifications required to teach in this branch of the system may differ greatly in the several districts, while heavy special taxes will be required in the districts for the support of high salaries to classical educators for the benefit of a small proportion of the children of those districts, without any general beneficial results.

Objections equally valid may be urged against technical schools, and the multiplicity of normal schools which the majority report contemplates, while the exclusion of the "State Normal School" from the "system" is its practical abandonment and ultimate destruction.

I therefore propose the following as a modification of section six, as reported by the majority, and ask its adoption as a substitute:

SEC. 6. The public school system shall include primary and grammar schools, and such evening schools as may be established by authority of any municipality or school district of the State, and all instruction imparted therein shall be confined to the English language. All revenue derived from the State School Fund and State school tax shall be applied exclusively to the support of primary and grammar schools.

Respectfully submitted.

D. W. HERRINGTON,
Of Committee on Education.

December 28, 1878.

Laid on the table, and ordered printed.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I move the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on the Right of Suffrage.

The motion prevailed.

The article is as follows:

ARTICLE II.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

SECTION 1. Every native male citizen of the United States, and every naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the State one year next preceding the election, and of the election district in which he claims his vote ninety days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law; provided, that no idiot, insane person, or person convicted of any infamous crime, shall be entitled to the privileges of an elector; provided, that the Legislature may by law remove in whole, or in part, the disabilities to exercise the elective franchise on account of sex.

SEC. 2. Electors shall, in all cases, except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest on the days of election, during their attendance at such election, going to and returning therefrom.

SEC. 3. No elector shall be obliged to perform militia duty on the day of election, except in time of war or public danger.

SEC. 4. For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States, nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of this State or of the United States, or of the high seas; nor while a student at any seminary of learning; nor while kept at any almshouse or other asylum, at public expense; nor while confined in any public prison.

SEC. 5. All elections by the people shall be by ballot.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section one.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 1. Every male citizen of the United States, and every naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the State one year next preceding the election, and of the election district in which he claims his vote ninety days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law; provided, that no idiot, insane person, or person convicted of any infamous crime, shall be entitled to the privileges of an elector; provided, that the Legislature may by law remove in whole, or in part, the disabilities to exercise the elective franchise on account of sex.

MR. BLACKMER. I send up an amendment to section one.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the word 'male,' in line one.

SPEECH OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: Owing to the unprecedented course that this committee has taken upon this subject, to take it up at this time, I am not prepared to discuss this question as I had hoped to discuss it, and if it were of any use I would certainly earnestly protest against this subject being taken up at this time, when there is barely a quorum here; when members, whom I know are anxious to discuss this question, are absent; when it will be impossible to get an expression of the sentiments of the committee upon this question which is to come before us. I know that it is looked upon by a great many in this Convention as a question that perhaps ought not to be raised here, but, sir, I beg leave to differ with all those gentlemen, and to assert that I consider it one of the most important questions that is to be discussed during the session of this Convention. I know that the time which I shall be allowed to give to it is limited, and that I cannot, without the preparation that I had intended to make to condense what I had to say, do the subject justice. But I shall endeavor to answer some of the objections that I believe are raised to striking out this word "male" in this report. In the first place, sir, we have but to go back but a short time to find woman occupying a position very much inferior to the one she occupies at present, although to-day she is politically in a position of degradation; but, sir, she has been taking higher and higher ground continually. But to come down at once to this question of the right of suffrage. At the close of the American Revolution there was even in this republic a property qualification in almost all of the States. But, sir, it was not long before the people who had been recognized as the people in the Constitution of the United States began to feel the oppression of that, and very soon there came to be a very strong influence brought to bear upon the authorities of the government to remove that disability. And what was the reason? Because there was something behind it. And then that property qualification was removed, eventually, I believe, in all the States, and then we had a government of the Anglo-Saxon race in this country. Well, immediately after that there began to grow into importance the great questions between free and slave labor in this country, and that went on until it carried this country to the very verge of destruction, and that question was finally settled, and it was found necessary, or deemed so, by a great majority of the people in the country, to give to that race that had been enslaved the ballot also for its protection, and then and since then we have had an aristocracy of sexes in this country, and we have been governed by this aristocracy of sex. Let us go back a moment and see how it is.

Now, sir, we are told that if this word "male" is stricken out of this place, and women are allowed to go to the ballot box, that they will go out of their sphere. Now, sir, I beg to know by whose authority has that sphere been determined. They have never yet been allowed to develop themselves without restraint, in the sphere that God and nature intended for them, and no class of people, whether they be men or women, in any community, under any government, can ever develop to their full capacity unless they are unrestricted in every direction. Why, sir, how do we know that the lark that sings at the very gate of heaven would do that if we had never seen him except he was imprisoned within the bars of his cage? Take off the restrictions that keep this class of people where they are, and then it will be time to determine what their sphere is.

But, Mr. Chairman, we are told that they are not asking for it; that there is no demand for this. Why, sir, the demand has been made in this country and in the old countries for more than thirty years. During the last session of Congress more than forty thousand men and women petitioned for this disability to be removed. It has been agitated, and discussed, and legislated upon in almost every State in the country. In our own State we have nearly three thousand men and women asking that we frame a Constitution here that shall not put any disability on them on account of sex. It makes no difference, sir, if it is right, if it is just, if there is only one woman who feels herself aggrieved by the political position in which she finds herself, it is but right and just that she have the privilege that she asks. Next, Mr. Chairman, we are told that it will unsex her. Well, sir, if the exercise of a political right, or a political function, under any government, will succeed in doing that which neither God nor nature can affect, it will then be time to argue that they will be unsexed. I am ashamed of men who take that position. It is entirely begging the whole question.

But, sir, we are told, further than that, that if this disability should be removed, that only the lower and degraded class will go to the polls and vote, while the better and more respectable class of women will stay away. Now, sir, in the first place I deny that this is true, and there is plenty of evidence, not only in our country, but in the countries of the Old World, where women do vote upon the same property qualifications as do men; as they do in England, voting at all the municipal and parochial elections; and it is expected very confidently that the next session of Parliament will allow them to vote also for members of that body. But suppose it was true that only the lower and more degraded class of women would vote. Suppose that every inmate of every brothel in the State were to go and vote, and every respectable woman stay away, it makes no difference upon the principle upon which it is based. Women are not sole traders in this business, and I am pleading not for a universal suffrage, but for an impartial suffrage, that whatever restrictions are placed upon any class, shall be placed upon all alike; and it matters not how degraded or low a man may be it does not disqualify him unless he has been under the criminal law. If you do not disqualify men for voting because they are the associates and the partners in this business, I ask in the name of heaven why should you disqualify women? I am indeed very sorry that I am taken so completely by surprise in regard to the discussion of this question, and I do think that it is taking an unfair advantage of those who have been so anxious to discuss this question fully before this committee. It seems to me that it is not dealing justly with those whom I know are anxious to discuss this question. It is brought up here at a time when it cannot have any consideration at all. There are so many, many arguments that can be used in favor of this proposition. In the first place, the Constitution of the United States has determined what shall be the governing class in the country. They have defined the bounds of citizenship, and they have done it in an amendment to the Constitution, which says that all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof, are citizens of the United States and of the State wherein they reside. It is this class of people that are meant when the Constitution says: "All persons born and naturalized." Because man made laws have selected from that class and made a disqualification on account of sex, it does not follow that other citizens have not a right to a voice in the government. It cannot follow by any rule of justice, and I contend that whatever rights are given to one citizen, ought to be given, under the same rule, to every other citizen. If we are to have intelligence as a test for the exercise of this right of the elective franchise, let us have intelligence in the case of all citizens. The government has a right to regulate this franchise. It has a right to say that no citizen shall be allowed to exercise it unless they are of a certain age; it has a right to say that those who are not of sound mind shall not exercise it; it has a right to say that insane persons shall not exercise it; but, sir, it has no more right to say that people who are of sound mind, and of age, this whole class of citizens embraced within this definition in the Constitution of this country, shall have no voice in the concerns of this government. Mr. Chairman, I cannot do justice to this argument now. No man can do it. I cannot do it being taken by surprise here, and I wish to refrain from further discussion, hoping that the committee will see fit to postpone it to some future time when it can be discussed as it ought to be. I claim it is not in the interest of making a good Constitution to do work in this manner. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I hope the motion will prevail. I do not know——

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is not debatable.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I am in favor of giving the gals a chance now.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer, that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The motion was lost.

REMARKS OF MR. EAGON.

MR. EAGON. Mr. Chairman: As Chairman of that committee I wish to state that I am not prepared to go into a regular discussion of this matter and to consider this report. The committee, sir, reported a portion of this first section more as a compromise than for any other purpose, and I am a little surprised, sir, now, that this committee should attempt to consider a question of so much importance to the people of this State as this is, with so slim a committee as we have here at present—hardly a quorum, sir. It is one of the most important questions that will come before this Convention for its action during its session. I would like to see a full Convention when this question is discussed. The committee were of different opinions in regard to certain questions in the report. As to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer, I will say that with one exception the committee were unanimously opposed to that amendment. The other portion alluded to, by an amendment to an amendment, was a compromise with the committee, each member of the committee reserving a right to act upon it in the Convention as he saw fit. Now, I know that a number of the committee are not present. I know that a majority almost of this Convention is absent, and I do hope that a motion that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, will prevail. It seems to me that it ought to do so in order to do justice to a question of such magnitude as this. I renew the motion.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I would suggest that the committee recommend that it be taken up on Thursday.

MR. EAGON. I do not think there is any great difficulty about that.

MR. ROLFE. Why not go on and discuss this question without taking any vote.

MR. EAGON. I suppose that gentlemen making arguments would like to make them before the Convention.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I think entirely too much importance is given to the action of the Committee of the Whole. I was a member of the Committee on Suffrage. I think entirely too much consequence is given to the action of the Committee of the Whole in view of the fact that all these questions will come before the Convention, and I have no idea that any gentleman will be deprived of discussing the question then if he shall not have a fair and full opportunity to discuss it in Committee of the Whole. My preference is to take these reports in their order and act upon them, whoever may be present, and if there is not a full discussion, or full vote, that can easily be remedied when we act in the Convention. I must say that I sympathize with the eloquent remarks of the gentleman who first spoke to us upon this question, but I cannot say that I think there is any probability that the amendment offered by the gentleman will prevail, and it will be unnecessary to occupy much time in discussing it, although the gentleman has a right to do so. I think we had better go ahead and discuss it, and if it is in order I wish to offer an amendment to the first section; that is, to add to the end of the section "by a vote of two thirds of the members of each house in favor of such change." This is to remove a disability on account of sex. In the Suffrage Committee a proposition was for some time considered whether we should ask the Convention to submit a separate proposition, to be voted on separately, on this question of suffrage. It was thought, for reasons which need not be stated here, that that would not be proper. All that was left for the committee to do was to submit a proposition of this kind. But under the proposition, as presented by the committee, a mere majority of the Legislature could change the Constitution of the State; that, I think, would not be proper in any case, and it would be regarded, perhaps, as very objectionable if we put it into the Constitution, but if a vote of two thirds of the members of each house shall be in favor of such change, I do not see any reason why we should not submit it in that form; that certainly never will occur until public sentiment shall demand it, and demand it by a decided majority. I am one of those who believe that the time will come when public sentiment will demand that justice.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: There is nothing more important to put into a Constitution than that which provides for the elective franchise. That goes, sir, to the very source of political power. Now, we have a general vague idea that all people have a right to vote; but political power is confined to about one quarter or one fifth of the population—a particular class designated by age, sex, and citizenship. Now, sir, if this question as to the elective franchise had come before this committee to-day in its regular order, if we naturally and according to our general file had reached it to-day, the day before Christmas, with scarcely a quorum here, I should have said this should take its natural chances and be discussed to-day. But what right, what justice, is there in passing over some four or five less important matters and taking up this? We have the report of the Committee on Education, the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, and others, which are passed over.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will confine his remarks to the question before the committee.

MR. MCFARLAND. It is certainly unjust to take up this report now. I desire to discuss it myself, but I do not propose to do so when there is barely a quorum present. I doubt whether there is a quorum here now.

REMARKS OF MR. GRACE.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I am in hopes that this matter will be passed over now for the present. I was surprised to come here this morning and find this question under consideration, when I venture to say that there is not a quorum present. I believe that this is an important question, and the manner in which this subject has been treated by this Convention, and by some people who are inclined to sneer at the right of women to the suffrage, is not creditable. I consider it taking mean advantage. I intend to speak upon this subject in this Convention, but I do not intend to speak to empty seats. I have some authorities that I wish to quote that are at home, and that I could not get here to-day; I have prepared some notes upon it that I have not got here. I believe that a woman who has to pay her taxes has as good a right to vote as a man. If we give negroes, and Chinamen, and everything else, a right to vote, and proclaim the universal brotherhood of man and fatherhood of God, why in the name of God don't you give them equal rights? The woman is just as intelligent——

MR. TINNIN. Are you going over to that doctrine of the universal brotherhood of man?

MR. GRACE. In regard to women, I am. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Right of Suffrage, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I move that this Convention do now adjourn.

The motion prevailed, and at ten o'clock and fifty minutes A. M. the President declared the Convention adjourned until Thursday, December twenty-sixth, at two o'clock P. M., in accordance with the resolution previously adopted.

NINETIETH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Thursday, December 26th, 1878.

The Convention met, pursuant to adjournment, at two o'clock P. M.

THE SECRETARY. In the absence of the President and President pro tem., I will call the Convention to order. Nominations for Chairman are in order.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Secretary: I nominate Mr. Larkin for temporary Chairman.

MR. LARKIN was chosen temporary Chairman.

The roll was called, and members found in attendance as follows:

RESOLUTION IN RELATION TO MR. O'DONNELL.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: I ask leave to send up a resolution out of order.

No objection.

THE SECRETARY read the resolution, as follows:

WHEREAS, Charles C. O'Donnell, a member of this Convention, has recently been publicly charged with the commission of infamous crimes, which unfit him to sit as a member of this Convention, which charges purport to be based upon sworn testimony, taken in a Court of justice, in the regular course of judicial proceedings; therefore,

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the President, whose duty it shall be to examine such charges, and the proof in support thereof, and report the facts to this Convention as soon as practicable; and such committee shall have power to send for persons and papers.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: These matters have arisen from subjects pending in this Convention, and it seems to be proper that they should be investigated; and I ask the Secretary to read an extract from the San Francisco Chronicle, which I send up.

THE SECRETARY read as follows:

"Many members of the Constitutional Convention have expressed a keen sense of indignation that they should have been placed in association with the infamous O'Donnell, and it is not probable that they will permit of any delay in the imperative recourse for relief. From a like feeling prevailing among the leading and respectable Workingmen, the party is not in a disposition to bear the odium of his disgrace, and doubtless a motion for O'Donnell's expulsion will proceed promptly from the San Francisco delegation."

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. I have no objections to the passage of the resolution, except that part providing for sending for persons and papers. There is no money to do that with. It is absurd to talk about sending for persons and papers when there is no money to do it with.

MR. GREGG. Mr. President: Personally, I have no objections to the resolution if Dr. O'Donnell was in his seat. For the reason that he is away, I move to lay the resolution on the table.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I hope the motion will not prevail. This Convention has a deep interest in this matter.

The ayes and noes were demanded by Messrs. Larkin, Barbour, Lampson, Joyce, and Barton.

The roll was called, and the motion to table lost by the following vote:

AYES.

REVENUE AND TAXATION.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to consider the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section one, and the amendments of the gentleman from El Dorado, are before the committee.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: It will be observed that the second section of the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation provides for a direct tax upon property, based upon the ad valorem principle. There is another kind of taxation that is not covered by section two. My impression is that it is better to strike out that section and adopt the provision of the old Constitution that "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this State." This has been interpreted by the Supreme Court over and over again, and the people understand it. I would suggest to the gentleman from El Dorado that he modify his motion in order that a motion may be made to strike out section one.

MR. LARKIN. I withdraw it.

MR. EDGERTON. With a view to offering the amendment I have suggested I now move that section one be stricken out.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: It is proposed then to retain the present system entirely.

MR. EDGERTON. Not at all, sir. It is merely to declare in the Constitution the principle that no man can object to, the general principle that taxation, no matter upon what it is imposed, or what other principles it may involve, it shall rest upon this principle, that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this State; that is all, and we have not come to that yet.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section will not be stricken out. I am impressed with the idea that the intention of the committee was to tax all property, and tax it equally, and tax it but once, but I am opposed to the way it reads, and have prepared an amendment which provides that all taxation shall be uniform upon the same class of property of equal value within the limits of the authority levying the taxes, and shall be levied and collected under general laws; so it would be plain that all classes of property, which are of equal value, would be uniformly taxed, and that is one thing that the public mind has been reaching after—it is the one thing which has been so much desired. I am, therefore, opposed to the striking out of the section. I send up this amendment to be read.

Not read.

REMARKS OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: As I understand it, this second section has connection not merely with section three, but also with section five. I find by reference to the fifth section, "except as to railroad and other quasi-public corporations, in case of debt so secured, the value of the property affected by such mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or obligation, less the value of such security, shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof, in the county in which the property affected thereby is situate," etc. Now, there is a different rule here in the fifth section for the property of corporations. Now, in regard to the matter of taxing railroad property, there has been great diversity of opinion. In some places it is taxed just so much on the old iron and wood, and that seems to be pretty much the rule we have adopted in this State. Now, the first section of the report evidently was intended to enable us to classify the different subjects of taxation. Now, as far as railroads are concerned, if you adopt the rule of uniformity that is here laid down, you would have really no taxation upon railroads, as I understand it, because you are taxing their property in the first instance as so much old iron, and certain tracts of land, and then deduct from the amount of that tax the amount of their indebtedness and bonds issued.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: As far as the taxation of railroads is concerned, the gentleman will find that section two expressly provides that "all property, including franchises, capital stock of corporations or joint stock associations, and solvent debts, deducting from such debts due to bona fide residents of this State, and excluding growing crops, private property exempt from taxation under the laws of the United States, public property belonging to the United States, or to this State, or any municipality thereof, and all property and the proceeds thereof used exclusively for charitable purposes, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law." If the gentleman will also turn to section sixteen, he will find that every description of railroad property is taxed, and it was concluded by the committee that railroad property in this State should be taxed on some plane analogous to that adopted in the States of Illinois and Missouri. Under their laws and Constitution the property of railroad corporations is assessed by the State Board of Equalization, and not by local Assessors at all. The proprietors of these properties have to submit a detailed statement of all the property belonging to the corporation in the State to the State Board. The property is then assessed in this way: in the first place, there is what is called railroad track, that embraces the right of way, structures, irons, depots, workshops, etc. All the property is listed under different heads. They take the aggregate cash value of the capital stock, and a fair cash value of the indebtedness and bonds, and add them together, and from that deduct the value of the taxable property, and tax the excess as capital stock. By reference to the second of Otto, it will be seen that the Supreme Court of the United States sustained that principle of taxation. The principle I am advocating in offering to strike out is the ad valorem principle, which puts the tax upon the subject itself.

MR. CAMPBELL. There can be no doubt that, under this first section, the stock would be taxed at its fair cash value.

MR. EDGERTON. I ask the gentleman if there is any doubt about section thirteen, article eleven, as it stands: "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this State?"

MR. CAMPBELL. It has not operated very equally as interpreted. That has been one of the great causes of complaint. It seems to me that the section, as it stands in the report, is perfectly plain and reasonable.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section will be stricken out. That section means nothing as it reads: "All taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws." That is so obscure that it certainly ought to be stricken out, and I submit that we should substitute for it something that is as plain and explicit as the language of the old Constitution. The language of the old Constitution is infinitely more explicit, and is susceptible to but one construction, while this section has no definite meaning. The old Constitution reads:

"Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this State. All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value."

Now, that is clear. So far the section of the old Constitution is certainly unobjectionable. As to the amendment of the gentleman from Tulare, I have read that, and it proposes to strike out the word "subjects" and insert the words "property of equal value." That is simply an amendment which is no amendment at all. It would be no improvement on the section. It leaves it where it is, and the whole section ought to be stricken out, and something substituted that is susceptible to but one construction. I therefore hope the whole section will be stricken out. Then there will be time to substitute something in its place that means absolutely some one thing.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I am informed by persons who have lived in Pennsylvania that a cow or a horse is taxed at so much (forty cents, I believe), no matter what the value is. Taxation there is not based upon the ad valorem principle. They are taxed as subjects, and not upon the principle of value at all. In that State the government is sustained, in a large part, and the interest upon the public debt is paid, by a tax of three quarters of a cent upon the gross income of corporations, and they pay very little attention to these particular matters outside of that. And because this section is ambiguous and objectionable on account of its obscurity, I move to strike it out and substitute the provision of the present Constitution.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Does the gentleman think that section one, taken in connection with section two, would allow that kind of taxation he speaks of?

MR. EDGERTON. I say that one class of property should not be taxed any more than any other class, and that is why I am in favor of striking out this section.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me there is something in the point raised by the gentleman in relation to this section. I had come to the conclusion that it did not mean that my cow and his cow, if he has one, should be taxed alike, but that it meant that his cow and my cow should be taxed at an equal amount on the one hundred dollars worth. It would allow the Legislature, if they saw fit, to place a tax of three dollars on the one hundred dollars worth of land in California, if they wished to raise a large proportion on real estate, while they might, at the same time, allow an exemption of personal property under this wording. They might levy a tax of twenty-five cents on the one hundred dollars worth of cows, while on land they might vary the rate, but to rate it all equally according to its class. I thought that was the logical construction. I thought that was the working of the Pennsylvania and Missouri system, but I find I am mistaken. I am in favor of striking it out and incorporating a separate section, that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this State. We can then proceed to correct the cause of the present grievances.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I suppose the Chairman of the committee is correct in saying that all the members agreed on this question. I was supposed to have agreed to it myself. I recollect of referring to the old section, but there was something said about cases where school districts should assess, and road districts should assess, and townships should assess; hence this term that directly limits it to the authority levying the tax. But my own idea now is that the old section is preferable. We see men running after the Constitutions of other States, and because these things are found in other Constitutions seems to be reason sufficient, in the minds of some, for their adoption. Now, the words equality and uniformity do not mean the same thing. In Virginia we have this uniformity. Watches were taxed, say, one dollar and twenty-five cents each; cows were assessed at a given sum, and the same with regard to horses. They had uniformity, but not equality by any means. If all watches are assessed alike, that is uniformity, but not equality. One watch may be worth five hundred dollars, and another fifteen dollars, but they are assessed alike. There is no equality in such taxation: there is no equity. It is for that reason that the word "equal" is put in here—that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value. That makes it perfectly plain and comprehensive. There is another good reason for retaining the section of the old Constitution, which is sufficient for me, and that is that we should retain the language of that instrument, unless there is some good reason for changing it. We should keep what we have until we get better. It strikes me that the language of the old Constitution is better and less equivocal than that of any that has been mentioned here. It starts off with a general unequivocal declaration that covers the whole subject, and that is, that "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this State." There could not be words any more explicit. "All property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained according to law," is put in here, but the other is better. What more explicit combination of words can be found? There is no difficulty about it. If there is any conflict between this first general declaration and the subsequent section, the subsequent section should be brought in harmony with the first. Let us lay down the general doctrine first, and make the provisions of the article conform to it. Now, the last part of the section we have left off, because that is where the whole difficulty was—in the local Assessors—from whose decisions there was no appeal. That part must be left out. I hope we shall strike out, and insert this much of the old Constitution, down to the words "Assessors and Collectors."

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: In examining that section, and comparing it with section eight, as reported by the committee, it struck me in this way: section eight authorizes a license tax for certain things: among other things, for instance, on the manufacture and sale of wines. Now, a man may have ten acres in vineyard, and make a thousand gallons of wine a year, and his business is of the same class as the man who has two or three hundred acres, and makes a great deal more wine. Now, if we impose a license tax upon the sale of wine, would it require the same amount of license—say one hundred dollars a year—would we require the small manufacturer to pay the same amount of license as the large manufacturer who makes one hundred thousand gallons a year? Now, if it is required to be uniform upon that same class of subjects, it would have to be in the same amount, it seems to me. If the man who makes one hundred thousand gallons only has to pay the same as the man who makes but one thousand, it would certainly not be right.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I would like to modify my motion so as to strike out section one and substitute the following:

"SECTION 1. Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this State."

THE CHAIRMAN. The first amendment is that offered by the gentleman from Tulare, Mr. Brown, to strike out the word "subjects," and insert the words "property of equal value."

Lost.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment. I desire to offer section one of the proposition I offered here several days ago. I desire to offer it, and I shall, at the proper time, move to strike out the other sections and substitute this proposition.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SECTION 1. Taxes shall be levied as hereinafter provided. All taxes upon property shall be uniform within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws."

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I shall offer a substitute at the proper time, and I wish to have it read by the Secretary for information.

MR. VAN DYKE. I wish to suggest to Mr. Dudley to insert before the word "uniform" the words "equal and."

MR. DUDLEY. I have no objection to the amendment.

MR. WEST. I desire to have this substitute read for the information of the committee.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SECTION 1. Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All private property in the State, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Dudley.

SPEECH OF MR. SWING.

MR. SWING. Mr. Chairman: I hope there will be no restrictions at all placed upon the Legislature in regard to taxation. I hold, whatever have may been said about the Legislature not regulating corporations, that the Legislature will not fail to devise a system of taxation. Taxation is a matter which the people feel very quickly, and when an Act is passed imposing grievous taxes, one not uniform, nor equal, nor just, the people very soon see and feel it, and look out for a fit man to send to the Legislature to regulate the matter. Now, it is all very nice to say that taxation shall be equal and uniform, as is said by this provision in the old Constitution, but we can't make taxation equal and uniform simply by saying it shall be so, simply saying so does not make it so, and one reason why they have not been equal and uniform has been because of that very provision in the old Constitution. Now, we know from experience that a vast amount of property has escaped taxation in the past, under and by reason of that very provision. I believe, by a fair estimate, that sixty per cent. of the real estate of the State is now under mortgage, and by that very provision that taxation shall be equal and uniform, sixty per cent. of the mortgages have never paid a cent in taxes. A few years ago the Legislature passed an Act requiring that mortgages should be taxed, and we all know that this law has been declared unconstitutional, which acts as a restriction upon the Legislature. Now, I believe it is better not to put any restrictions whatever upon the Legislature, but leave them free to act in this matter. Leave them the right to enact just such laws as they may think are required. I believe it will be better to leave the Legislature unrestricted in the matter, than to put in these high sounding terms which only serve to hamper them.

MR. EDGERTON. According to your theory the Constitution should be silent.

MR. SWING. I believe it should be silent. Some gentlemen seem to think that unless they put this in the Constitution the Legislature will have no power to tax mortgages. We know that is not the case. The Legislature has absolute power, except where that power is restricted by the Constitution. We know it is the theory of our government that this matter of taxation should lie with the people themselves as far as possible. We do not know whether the system we are devising is going to work well or not. If it is left to the Legislature, the representatives of the people can at any time change the system of taxation whenever the circumstances demand a change. I believe it is better not to say anything, but to leave the power of taxation entirely unrestricted. We all know that if it had not been for this provision in the old Constitution, taxation would have been much more nearly equal and uniform than it has been under that provision.

MR. EDGERTON. Is the gentleman not aware that the Legislature has even exempted certain property from taxation?

MR. SWING. Yes, sir; they did so, and when they found it did not work well they passed other laws taxing mortgages, and they were declared unconstitutional, under these very fine and high-sounding terms. Therefore I say it is better to leave them unrestricted, and when they find that men are paying no taxes, they will have a right to change the law so that these persons cannot escape their share of taxes. I prefer to leave this matter to the Legislature.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: This subject at this time is in rather a peculiar shape, and there seems to be a lack of disposition to discuss it. There seems to be no definite idea as to the effect of striking out the section as reported by the committee and inserting the section of the old Constitution. I have heretofore occupied but little of the time of this Convention, and I desire now to occupy a short time in discussing this subject. I did not intend to speak at this stage of the discussion, but circumstances impel me to say what I have to say now, and I shall ask the indulgence of the committee in order that I may be permitted to complete what I shall have to say, even if it should extend beyond the allotted fifteen minutes. Considering the great diversity of opinion among the people, and among members of this Convention, concerning the question under consideration, it is unfortunate that the Committee on Revenue and Taxation did not succeed in harmonizing their views and in agreeing to a unanimous report; but whatever differences of opinion there may be as to systems or methods of taxation, it will be generally conceded that the subject is a difficult one. It is this question that has disturbed the public mind more, perhaps, than any other upon which we shall be called to deliberate. The uneasiness felt with regard to the present system, more than anything else, in my opinion, caused the people to call this Convention. It may seem very easy for one who has given the subject little consideration, to formulate an article to be engrafted into the Constitution that shall form the groundwork of a system of taxation that shall work harmoniously, dealing out equal and exact justice to all taxpayers; but once an investigation is undertaken, difficulties arise, new elements, essential to a correct solution of the question, which have never before been thought of, must be considered. The more thoroughly it is considered, the more complex it appears. No system of taxation has ever yet been devised against which serious objections could not be urged. The subject has received the consideration of the best minds for centuries, and yet no uniformity of conviction has been reached, except as to one general principle, which is, "that the burdens of taxation should be equally borne," that each should be called upon to contribute his just proportion toward the support of the government. There is probably no difference of opinion here on that point. The question here upon which there is such a diversity of opinion is not what ought to be done, but how shall it be done? How shall taxation be equitably distributed? How shall each individual or interest be made to bear his or its just proportion of tax? Shall anything be exempt? If so, what?

The effects of taxation are far reaching. We may unjustly relieve, or we may unjustly burden, classes and interests. To relieve one interest is to unjustly burden all others. The expenses of the government must be paid. What one does not pay another must. Unequal taxation is confiscation. Property taxed is decreased in value as compared with property not taxed, and to exempt any class of property from taxation is to add to its value at the expense of all property taxed. There are certain maxims laid down by Adam Smith, which have been so generally acceded to since his time that Mr. Mill tells us they have become classic. The first of these maxims is this—without pretending to quote the exact language: "That each individual should contribute to the support of the government in proportion to his ability; i. e., in proportion to the amount of revenue derived by such individual under the protection of the law. This maxim is undoubtedly correct. It is true that, under our American system of State taxation, taxes are levied upon property, not upon incomes; yet, as a rule, all taxes are paid from incomes. The law does not inquire what incomes have been derived from property, but presupposes that all have used their property to equal advantage, and that the ability and consequent duty to pay tax is measured by the amount of property owned or possessed. It is not necessary here to stop to consider whether this presumption is a correct one or not. It is the basis upon which taxes are levied in most of the States of the Union; it has been the basis of taxation in this State in the past, and, I presume, will continue to be in the future. I have seen no disposition here to change. I would like to see a change made. I am in favor of substituting a tax upon incomes derived from certain sources, in lieu of a tax upon the property from which such incomes are derived.

I introduced a proposition to that effect, numbered five hundred and twenty-eight, to which I desire to call the attention of the members of the Convention. But such a proposition seems to find but little favor here, and the system that we shall adopt will probably be based upon property; and acknowledging the correctness of the maxim before mentioned—and I presume no one will dispute it—we are to assume that the ability to pay tax is measured by the property in possession, and provide for levying taxes accordingly. To do this equitably, all private property, whether belonging to individuals or corporations, should be taxed equally, i. e., in proportion to its value. Value is the element taxed. There should be no exemptions. Every kind and class of property should find its value subject to taxation.

There is another maxim laid down by Adam Smith, which is, that: "The time of payment, the manner of payment, and the amount of payment ought to be clear and plain to the contributor and to all others." It is certainly important that the system of taxation that we shall adopt shall conform to this maxim. Very few persons who contribute nothing to the support of the government will vote with that discrimination necessary to the stability of republican institutions. The man who pays no tax has little regard for the public expenditures; he will not have that interest in and will not use his influence and exertions to the same extent to secure economical and good government that the citizen will who pays tax. The residence in the State of a class of wealthy citizens who annually pocket a large part of the net proceeds of the community's labor, and who are entirely exempt from the payment of all direct taxes, will always beget dissatisfaction and uneasiness on the part of those who are compelled to pay tax. Every individual should be required to pay tax in proportion to the value of his property; every one should not only know when he pays, but just how much he pays, and that, too, at the time of payment. No system should be here adopted that will recognize the right of any one to shift his burden of tax on to another.

For a few years past, under the rulings of our Courts, credits have been relieved from taxation, and that under the very article of the Constitution which it is here sought to engraft in the new Constitution. Notwithstanding that for nearly twenty years prior to that decision assessments were made, and there was a general acquiescence in that system of taxation, there was no general cry of oppression under that system. The dissatisfaction was confined to the moneyed interests of San Francisco, which sought to reverse that system and secure exemption for certain classes of property. They were successful, and since that time these credits have been exempted. But why should they be exempt? Are they not valuable? Are they not liable to attachment and sale in satisfaction of debt or judgment? Do they not bring a revenue to the owner? Can you not as easily determine the value of a note as you can the value of a horse or a cow? Are they not subject to all the laws, rules, and usages that govern and control other classes of personal property? Why then should they be exempt? We may not agree on a system of taxation that will be exactly just to all classes; we do not expect to reach perfection; but we ought to come as near justice and equality as possible. If each individual is to be required to pay tax in proportion to his ability, certainly the owners of capital invested in notes or interest-bearing bonds are possessed of ability, and ought in justice to be compelled to pay their fair share of tax. We have no means of knowing exactly how much there is of this class of property in existence at the present time; but I find by the Controller's report that the year following the decision of the Supreme Court in the mortgage tax cases—which exempted credits from taxation—that the assessment roll of the State fell off over a hundred millions of dollars, notwithstanding very considerable efforts were made by Assessors to make up the deficit occasioned by the exemption of credits, by assessing growing crops, and in some parts of the State, by increasing the valuation of land. In my opinion one hundred and fifty millions, or one fifth of the assessable values of the State, is probably not an overestimate of the amount of that class of property which, at the present time, altogether escapes taxation. If this class of property was added to the assessment roll, to raise the same amount of revenue now received would require a tax rate of one and six tenths per cent. instead of two per cent. as now, which is about the average rate in the State. The effect of assessing and taxing this class of property, and the consequent decrease of the tax rate, is to decrease the tax burden of those least able to pay tax, and to increase the burden of those best able to pay.

Take the case of two individuals, a mechanic entirely dependent upon his labor for a living, and a capitalist who has a surplus capital of one hundred thousand dollars invested in interest-bearing obligations. The mechanic is the owner of a house and lot where he resides, valued at one thousand five hundred dollars. The capitalist is the owner of a house and lot valued at fifteen thousand dollars. At the present rate of tax—two per cent.—the mechanic will have to pay thirty dollars, and the capitalist three hundred dollars; but if evidences of indebtedness were taxed the tax rate would be reduced to one and six tenths per cent., and the mechanic would have to pay twenty-four dollars only, and the capitalist would have to pay one thousand eight hundred and forty dollars. If every individual were strictly honest, and would render to some official, when required by law to do so, a correct statement of all incomes derived by him, or her, from all sources, and we could equitably adjust and collect a tax upon such incomes, it would be generally admitted to be the best system of taxation that could be devised, but the investigation of economists, and experience of people who have tried it, have developed the fact that when this system is applied to all classes of people, and all classes of business, there are insurmountable obstacles in the way of its practical administration, because of the almost universal disposition of mankind to shirk taxation, and the willingness on the part of many to tamper with their consciences by rendering false statements concerning their incomes, and because of the ease with which incomes may be covered up. The conclusion has been reached by many that while an income tax is theoretically the most just, it is practically the most unjust system that could be adopted.

But why is it the most just system theoretically? Plainly because a man's income marks more correctly and more justly than any other index, his ability and duty to pay tax. But property, being more easily found, and not so easily covered up as income, we say that the property possessed or owned, instead of incomes, shall be the index of a man's ability and duty to pay. The per cent. is levied upon the value of the property in lieu of a tax upon the income derived from it. If we were going to adopt this theoretically just system of taxing incomes, not even the most ardent advocate on this floor of exempting credits from taxation would contend for a moment that incomes derived from investments in notes, bonds, or other securities, should be exempt from tax. Precisely why a piece of property should be exempt from taxation when the tax is levied upon its value, and not be exempt when the same tax is levied upon the income derived from it, I confess is beyond my comprehension. In either case the tax is paid from the same source, and in either case the effect upon the owner is the same; that is, his income is reduced by the amount of tax paid, and if there is any good reason why an exemption should be made in one case and not in the other, it has not been assigned in my hearing in the course of this debate.

Immediately, if you talk of taxing credits, somebody cries out double taxation. Now, this double taxation is a sort of scarecrow, or ghost, that has been conjured up by the bankers, money lenders, and shylocks of the nation, for the purpose of frightening nervous and innocent people. It has taken possession of, and haunts, the brains of people; it stalks through the country and through our business centers; and whenever any one suggests that owners of evidences of indebtedness from which large and princely incomes are derived, ought in justice to contribute, directly, something to the support of the government, this hobgoblin immediately rises up and cries out double taxation.

Now, sir, I am not at all nervous about this matter, nor at all afraid of this cry. I do not forget that taxes are a part of the cost of doing business in any community, and no small part of that cost, neither, in some places. I am aware that our merchants would sell goods cheaper if they were exempt from paying taxes. I am also aware that in the course of business they reimburse themselves for all taxes paid, at the expense of their customers. I am aware, too, that rents would be cheaper if all dwelling houses were exempt from taxes. I am aware, also, that landlords always reimburse themselves, at the expense of their tenants, for all taxes paid. I am aware that securities will be cheaper; that is, they will draw a less rate of interest, if they are exempt from taxation, than they will if they are taxed. I am also aware that the owners of this class of property will always reimburse themselves, at the expense of their customers, for all taxes paid, so far as possible. But would you exempt the merchant and the landlord from taxation, because, in the course of business, such tax is refunded to them by their customers? I think not. Then why exempt the money lender for that reason? The goods of the merchant and the houses of the landlord must find their value subject to tax. Why should not the note and the bond find their value subject to the same burden? We want a system of taxation that will require every one, whatever his business may be, and whatever shape his capital may assume, to pay directly his just share of the expenses of the State.

Let us look at this matter of double taxation a little further. Let us suppose there are five individuals in a community. A has a farm valued at ten thousand dollars; B has one valued at eight thousand dollars; C has one valued at six thousand dollars; D has notes valued at five thousand dollars; and E has notes valued at three thousand dollars. It becomes necessary in this community to raise a revenue of three hundred and twenty dollars. If the visible tangible property, as gentlemen are pleased to call it, only is assessed, the assessment roll will show twenty-four thousand dollars, the property of A, B, and C, who, to raise the required revenue, will have to pay a tax of one and one third per cent., and A will pay one hundred and thirty-three and one third dollars, or one third more than he would if the credits belonging to D and E were assessed. So of all the rest. But if the credits are assessed, the roll will show thirty-two thousand dollars, and the tax rate will be only one per cent., instead of one and one third per cent. as before, and A will pay one hundred dollars; B, eighty dollars; C, sixty dollars; D, fifty dollars; and E, thirty dollars. Now, it will be remembered that these credits belonging to D and E are the first and best claim to one third of the property of this community. They are claims that under certain circumstances will set the others houseless and homeless in the street; claims, too, which bring into the pockets of their owners annually one third of the net proceeds of the community's labor; and the only wrong done in this case by taxing these credits is, that while D and E have the first and best claim to one third of the visible tangible property, and are annually pocketing its proceeds, and ought to pay one third of the taxes, and would if the tax was upon incomes, they are only required to pay one fourth. Certainly this comes nearer justice than to exempt them entirely. Where is the fallacy in this? You may add to this community as many as you like holding property in different quantities, and as many as you please holding securities, and in any proportion that you please, until you have a case such as you actually find in any community. In doing so, you will add to the intricacy of the problem, but it is susceptible of mathematical demonstration that to assess credits will more equally distribute the burdens of State than to exempt them. That assessment is nearest correct that comes nearest justice, whether it represents the property once, twice, or three times.

Let us look further into this subject. Let us suppose a colony of a dozen or twenty families settling in a new country. They buy land, build homes, and cultivate the soil, all except one, who, disinclined to engage in any of the active pursuits that involve manual labor, concludes to loan his capital to his neighbors and live from the interest received. These people are men and women of intelligence and culture, and know the advantages, and I might say, the necessity of education, and as soon as they have provided themselves with shelter, begin to discuss the matter of furnishing school facilities for their children. The first thing in this line is to build a school-house, and they meet together and consult with regard to the means for carrying out that purpose, and very naturally conclude that the best way is to determine the kind of a house, and the cost, and then each subscribe to a fund in proportion to their means. The subscription paper is started, and all pledge themselves, except the man who has loaned his money. Let us suppose that this man, when he is asked to sign, should say: "Gentlemen, it is true I have a family growing up that ought to be educated, and I am anxious to have a school, and need one as bad as any of you, and I hope you will go on and build a house, and employ a teacher as soon as possible, but you cannot expect me to give anything. You know I have nothing. I have loaned all my money to you, and if I should give anything it would be a double contribution. All those who have borrowed my capital have contributed, and you ought not to expect anything from me." What would be thought of the meanness of such a man? Why, sir, he would steal pennies from a blind beggar; and if the gentleman from Sacramento should be called upon to characterize such a man, he would pour out his entire store of withering sarcasm upon that individual's head and fail to do the subject justice.

But the case is not even supposable. No American citizen ever reached that degree of meanness. No, sir, that man would recognize his duty to his children and to the community of which he was a member, and give his share towards the construction of a school house. He would do more. When the house was built he would go so far as to pay the tuition of his own children.

But this colony increases. There come into it selfish men, who are willing to reap the benefit of this school for their children, but are too penurious to voluntarily give, towards its support, their just proportion of the expense. The colony is called together again, and the members resolve—that is, enact a law that these contributions which have heretofore been but free will offerings, shall be considered a tax for the purpose of maintaining a school, and shall be collected by compulsory process, if need be. According to the logic on the other side, this would change the case entirely, and this man who had loaned his money would be exempt from paying anything, because he would have nothing but evidences of indebtedness, and to tax them would be double taxation. Of course it is double taxation, because honorable gentlemen affirm that it is. But precisely why he ought to pay, while the contribution is voluntary, and be exempt when the same contribution is made compulsory, it might be difficult even for some of the learned gentlemen on the other side to explain. We do not assess property for the purpose of ascertaining how much property there is in the State, but for the purpose of ascertaining who shall pay, and how much; for the purpose of ascertaining the liability of the citizen to pay tax, such liability being in proportion to the property owned; and that assessment is nearest correct that most justly determines that liability. We do not tax property, but owners of property. Property is passive and indifferent, and any inequalities in taxation will work injustice not to property, but to owners of property. If it were possible to get a full cash value of all the visible, tangible property, and if it were possible to get a full and complete list of all debts incurred for a valuable consideration, and deduct the debts from the value of the property, and collect the tax on the credits from the holders thereof, and tax owners of property for what they actually own, it would undoubtedly be—next to an income tax—the most equitable mode of taxation that could be devised. But the difficulties surrounding this method are more insurmountable, if possible, than those that stand in the way of an income tax. It is utterly impracticable. The system has been tried in New York and New Jersey. Upon this point I desire to read from the report of the New York Commissioners appointed in eighteen hundred and seventy-one. They say:

"And yet, at the same time, it is difficult to see how a system which proposes to tax all personal property uniformly can be made to work with any degree of success, unless the right or privilege to offset or diminish valuation by indebtedness is strictly and explicitly forbidden, inasmuch as it is this very right or privilege which furnishes the opportunity whereby personal property can most successfully evade taxation. Nothing is more easy than to create debts for the purpose of diminishing valuation, which no investigation on the part of the Assessors will suffice to prove fictitious, and yet of such a character that individuals of easy conscience will find no difficulty to making oath to their validity. * * * One of the most common and successful methods now resorted to is the taking of an unfair, but apparently strictly legal, advantage of the law exempting the securities of the United States from taxation. Thus, for example, an individual desiring to evade taxation on capital invested in general mercantile or speculative business, first purchases United States bonds, we may suppose to the amount of one hundred thousand dollars. He then borrows on his promissory note, using the bonds as collateral, one hundred thousand dollars, or some smaller sum, and invests the money so obtained in the business in question. When the day of assessment comes around, a return is made, under oath, if need be, of one hundred thousand dollars business capital: one hundred thousand dollars just debts and liabilities; no personal property subject to taxation. If inquiry is made further respecting the United States bonds purchased, the answer is made legitimately, that in respect to these the State authorities have no jurisdiction. Since the commencement of the present year, moreover, a case involving this principle of exemption has been brought before the Supreme Court of New York (general term, January third, eighteen hundred and seventy-one), by the Tax Commissioners of the City of New York, and a decision given in favor of the legality; thus illustrating how difficult it is, holding on to a system of universal taxation, to once exempt any description of tangible, incorporeal property from assessment, without at the same time opening a door to innumerable opportunities for fraud and evasion."

Sanford E. Church, a member of the New York Constitutional Convention, uses this language: "In the country and in the towns and cities in the interior of the State, the rule is almost universal for persons to get up an indebtedness of some kind or other so that their property may escape taxation. Some persons will give notes to their children; others will exchange notes with their neighbors, and others will enter into obligations for the purpose of creating a liability, just about the time the Assessors come round."

Hon. Thomas G. Alvord, in the Constitutional Convention of New York, says: "It would be well to particularize some of these attempts to get rid of taxation. Among other things, sir, we have official bonds given by different officers holding places of trust at the hands of the people, either locally or as a State. Such officers find no difficulty, in the positions which they occupy, in not only getting a number sufficient for their purpose, but in absolutely having persons ask the privilege of getting on these official bonds; and these persons, by a sort of conscience which I do not understand, when the Assessor shall come around, in their minds consider this a liability which they may possibly be under the necessity of meeting in dollars and cents, and thus calming their consciences in regard to the matter—swearing off their personal liabilities to taxation. * * * I know a case in my own county where an individual, unquestionably one of the wealthiest men in the county, and that wealth largely consisting of personal property in bonds and mortgages, having a large family of children, who had grown up to years of discretion and who had become workers in the world, who kept his day-book in this way: As he received money from A, B, and C upon mortgages, he first credited to the parties who had executed the mortgage, and then he gave credit on the book to the individual son or daughter, from time to time, for the money received from that mortgage; but never, in any one instance, does he make the assignment that the law contemplated for the purpose of passing the mortgage; and never, in any single instance, does he pay over to his children the identical moneys thus received. But when the tax gatherer comes round he has no personal property."

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not true that this Commission, the report of which he is reading, were entirely opposed to taxing indebtedness in any manner or form whatever, solvent debts or mortgages, and if that particular passage he is reading in regard to changing the forms of property, is not given as one of the modes resorted to, in order to evade taxation. I understand that to be the position taken by the Commissioners. They were entirely opposed to the taxing of debts in any form whatever, solvent notes or otherwise.

MR. DUDLEY. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman is correct; I understand that Mr. Wells was contending for the exemption of this class of property. I understand, further, that he is in favor of the exemption of all personal property. If the gentleman will read the report, he will find that to be the position of the Commissioners.

MR. EDGERTON. I think the gentleman is in error. I do not think the Commission was theoretically opposed to taxing personal property.

MR. DUDLEY. It is a matter of indifference whether the Commissioners were theoretically opposed to taxing all personal property or not; the fact remains that they did recommend that all personal property be exempt from taxation, on the ground that so much of it could be covered up or hidden away from the Assessor that a uniform or equal assessment of personal property was impracticable. They, therefore, recommended that, in lieu of a personal property tax, there be levied an arbitrary house tax, or tax upon the rental value of houses; that is, they assumed that a man's mode of living indicated, as a rule, his ability to pay taxes, and they proposed to levy a certain arbitrary tax upon the house and its surroundings, which was to be in proportion to the rental value of the house. I simply read from this work to show where it will lead to if we open the door to exemptions of any kind—that it will lead to frauds of the worst kind. Upon this subject I read the report of the Massachusetts Commissioners:

"If the deductions be allowed from one kind of property they can discover no satisfactory reasons why they should not be equally allowed from another. If the man holding his farm, and earning by labor a support for his family, be not allowed to lighten his taxes by deducting his debts from his taxable estate, why allow such deductions to the wealthy holder of notes, mortgages, and bonds? The difficulties necessarily encountered in carrying out the principle on which the present laws are in this behalf based, form, in the judgment of the Commissioners, a weighty argument against the principle itself. It is found, upon experiment, to be attended with so many and serious evils as to forbid its impartial application. The effort to alleviate these evils by restricting its application to the holders only of personal estate, is an admission of the unsoundness or impracticable nature of the principle, and will necessarily impose an increased and disproportionate burden of taxation on the agricultural and landed interests of the State. Personal property in New Jersey, as in all prosperous communities, consists largely of rights and credits—termed in the law, incorporeal things. They are evidenced and secured by notes, bonds, mortgages, book accounts, certificates of stock, and other contracts, express or implied. They constitute a most important and considerable part of the wealth of the State. They are, to their holders, property of the most productive and available kind. More than all others they occasion the litigation that occupies our Courts and brings into play the expensive machinery and agencies of the law. Why should the holders of this species of property enjoy immunities or be entitled to deductions not allowed to the holders of lands?"

As a member of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, I dissent from section two, which allows for the deducting of debts owing from debts due. I am opposed to it, because it is only the wealthy man, as a general rule, that has debts due him. While the poorer classes, or those in limited circumstances, are, as a rule, owing more or less, yet very few of them have anything owing to them. They are not, under this section, permitted to deduct debts owing from the value of their visible, tangible property; the deduction is only to be made from the value of the debts owing to the taxpayer. It is plain to be seen that this system is only a relief to those who have capital loaned, and no relief at all to those who most need it—those who are indebted but have nothing owing to them from which they can deduct the value of their indebtedness. The system is therefore unjust, and I am opposed to it.

Section five provides for the deduction of the mortgage from the value of the real estate. Now, there is one reason why I am opposed to that, because it is discriminating against unsecured indebtedness and in favor of secured indebtedness. If I give a note secured by mortgage, for a certain amount of money, I am permitted to deduct the debt from the assessed value of my property. But if I am good, if I am considered a man of honesty and integrity, and my neighbor is disposed to take my note without security, I have no rebate or relief whatever. It is making a distinction that ought not to be made.

I now come to the proposition which I introduced the other day. I am not particular as to the form. I introduced a plan similar to this in the early part of the session, for the purpose of calling the attention of the members to the proposition of adopting some other system than one based entirely upon property valuations, because I believe that system to be wrong. Rather than confine taxation entirely to a tax upon visible, tangible property, I would prefer to have the Constitution silent with regard to taxation, and trust the whole subject to the wisdom and honesty of future Legislatures. I desire that we shall adopt some measure in this Constitution looking toward getting a revenue from some other source than from a direct and exclusive tax upon property. I believe it is safe to say that half the property in this State, at the present time, evades and shirks the tax gatherer, and contributes nothing toward the support of government. I desire to engraft some provision in the Constitution looking toward the remedying of this; something that will compel this capital to contribute its just proportion toward the expenses of government. I do not make any pretentions to legal knowledge, or claim any ability in formulating ideas into sentences that will bear the criticisms of the Courts.

I present it in this form more for the purpose of calling attention to the idea. Yet my opinion is that under this proposition a system of taxation might be elaborated that would be far more just than the present one. I will read the sections which I have introduced:

"SECTION 1. Taxes shall be levied as hereinafter provided. All taxes upon property shall be uniform within the territorial limits of the authority levying the tax, and shall be levied and collected under general laws.

"SEC. 2. All property, the income of which is not taxed, excluding growing crops, private property exempt from taxation under the laws of the United States, public property belonging to the United States or to this State, or any municipality thereof, and property used exclusively for charitable purposes, not exceeding —— thousand dollars belonging to any one institution, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law.

"SEC. 5. The Legislature shall provide by law for the assessment and collection of a tax upon incomes derived from investments in bonds, notes (whether secured by mortgage or not), or securities of any kind, owned by individuals, and upon the gross incomes of all railroad, navigation, or banking corporations, bank and exchange agencies, and insurance companies, foreign or domestic, or any other corporation (other than municipal), or association whatever, formed for profit or doing business in this State; provided, that all notes, bonds, or securities of any kind, the income from which is taxed, and all property owned by and necessarily used by corporations or associations in producing incomes which are taxed, shall be exempt from an ad valorem tax."

It is difficult to tell exactly what per cent. of income is paid by the average taxpayer to the State in taxes. From the best estimate I can make—and other gentlemen can estimate it as well as I can—I find that the average taxpayer pays not less than six and one half per cent. of gross income. But I believe that estimate is low. A gentleman said to me the other day, who owned property south of San Francisco, that the tax upon it amounted to about twenty per cent. of the rental. He said he sold the property, as no man could live and pay such a percentage of his income. Now, if there is any reason why other interests should not bear their share of the burdens of taxation, in proportion to their value, I confess I am unable to see it.

I have taken the trouble to examine the report of the Insurance Commissioners, and find that the California Fire Insurance Company has a gross income of sixty-six per cent. of its capital stock, and a net income of thirty-three per cent. It paid in taxes nine hundred and ninety-eight dollars and fifty-five cents, or less than half of one per cent., and thirteen times less than the average taxpayer. On its net income it paid taxes on less than one per cent., or fourteen times less than the average taxpayer.

The California Farmers' Mutual Fire Insurance Company has a capital of two hundred thousand dollars, and a gross income of one hundred and thirty-one thousand one hundred and thirty-seven dollars and ninety-nine cents, or sixty-five per cent of its capital stock. Taxes paid, six hundred and sixty dollars and sixty-seven cents.

The Commercial Insurance Company has a capital of two hundred thousand dollars, and a gross income of one hundred and eighty-three thousand two hundred and seventy-nine dollars and eighteen cents, or ninety per cent. of its capital, and a net income of twenty-six per cent., or fifty-three thousand seven hundred and forty-eight dollars and sixty-seven cents. Amount of tax not given.

The Fireman's Fund Insurance Company has a capital of three hundred thousand dollars; gross income, five hundred and fifty-two thousand seven hundred and eleven dollars and ninety-six cents, or one hundred and eighty-four per cent. of the capital; net income, one hundred thousand nine hundred and twenty dollars, or thirty-three per cent. Taxes paid, nine thousand two hundred and forty-two dollars and eleven cents; per cent. of gross income paid in taxes, sixteen thousandths; per cent. of net income, nine hundredths.

The Home Mutual Company has a capital of three hundred thousand dollars, with a gross income of three hundred and seventy-two thousand three hundred and twenty dollars, or one hundred and twenty-six per cent.; net income, one hundred and twenty-four thousand two hundred and twenty-five dollars, or thirty-four per cent. They pay in taxes, one thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine dollars and twenty-three cents, or about one half of one per cent.

The Fireman's Fund Insurance Company is the only one of our home companies that pays anything like a fair tax. With the exception of this company there is great uniformity in the ratio of tax paid to gross income, the per cent. being about one half of one per cent. The average, taking all the home companies together, is about seven mills, while the average per cent. of gross income paid by the average taxpayer is not less than six or seven per cent. I do not find, by the Insurance Commissioner's report, that the foreign companies doing business here pay any tax at all, and yet they are doing more business than our home companies, their receipts reaching millions of dollars annually.

As a further proof of the fact that corporations pay less taxes in proportion to ability than the average taxpayer, I call attention to the Central Pacific Railroad Company. This company has been so much talked about here that I should prefer to say nothing about it; but it is the principal railroad interest of the State, and is a case in point. I do not know that their receipts are positively known, either gross or net, but a statement has been going the rounds of the newspapers that the gross earnings for the current year would reach seventeen million dollars, about fifty per cent. of which, according to other statements, is net earnings. The President of that corporation, in a paper laid upon our desks, boasts of having paid five hundred thousand dollars in taxes. If that corporation had paid as large a per cent. of its income, either gross or net, in taxes, as the average taxpayer is compelled to pay, instead of boasting of having paid five hundred thousand dollars, might have boasted of having paid more than one million dollars. It is claimed that this railroad interest is great, and of great importance to the State, and ought not to be burdened too heavily.

But however great or important the railroad interests of the State may be—and I believe I realize their importance—they are not more important or greater than the interests of an equal amount of capital invested in lands and improvements, and in personal property used thereon, lying along the lines of those railroads, nor are the railroads of any more importance to the people who have made those investments than those people are to the railroads. The advantages are mutual, and there is no good reason why the burdens of State should not be mutually and equally borne; and if the present system of taxation does not equalize those burdens, it is the part of wisdom for us to provide a way for the trial of some other system.

Now, sir, this proposition of mine proposes that "the Legislature shall provide by law for the assessment and collection of a tax upon income, derived from investment in bonds, notes (whether secured by mortgage or not), or securities of any kind, owned by individuals, and upon the gross incomes of all railroad, navigation, or banking corporations, bank and exchange agencies, and insurance companies, foreign and domestic, or any other corporation (other than municipal), or association whatever, formed for profit or doing business in this State; provided, that all notes, bonds, or securities of any kind, the income from which is taxed, and all property owned by and necessarily used by corporations or associations in producing incomes which are taxed, shall be exempt from an ad valorem tax."

Now, sir, I am aware that evidence of indebtedness, whenever you seek to list it, will hide away. It is often in the possession of men of easy consciences, who will, whenever it is possible, cheat and evade the Assessor, but the report of the committee proposes to tax that class of property, and if it can be found for the purpose of taxing it on its value, it can be found for the purpose of taxing its earnings in the way of incomes. We will get as much one way as the other. It is a tax which will be taken directly from the owners of the property. When you come to apply that principle to corporations, and take the income of the corporations, there is no very serious difficulty in the way of ascertaining their incomes. They keep books, and their incomes may be ascertained, and there is no difficulty. The tax will be paid by the corporation, and will distribute itself among the shareholders. It will prevent double taxation, which gentlemen pretend to stand in so much fear of. The property will be taxed once, and only once. The incomes of the insurance companies, foreign as well as home, can be ascertained. They are ascertained by the Commissioner, and if there is power in the State to compel them to render correct accounts to the Commissioner of their receipts, there is power to compel them to pay in proportion to their receipts, and there is no possibility of getting any tax from them unless by taxing their incomes, for they possess very little property. I am under the impression that the mines should be taxed in the same manner, but I do not care to dwell upon that branch of the subject, but merely wish to bring all these matters to the attention of the Convention.

I have not talked for the purpose of displaying my forensic powers, but solely for the purpose of impressing upon the members of the Convention the importance of resorting to some other system of taxation than the old one. There are subjects of taxation upon which I have not touched, and which the Convention will be unwise if they do not consider—whisky and tobacco. These are luxuries of very doubtful utility, and if they should be taxed to the extent of discouraging their use, or if they should be taxed out of existence, there would probably be no great harm done. I believe a system of taxation in the way of a heavy license on whisky and tobacco might be made to bring in a vast amount of revenue, either by the use of the Moffat bell-punch system or some other mode—I have no particular system now in my mind. I appeal to the agriculturists in this hall, and the small property owners, to hesitate long and consider well before they shall adopt any measure which shall seem to perpetuate upon us the present system of taxation. While I know it is urged by gentlemen here that the present system is just and equitable, yet, sir, I believe there is no system of taxation we can possibly resort to that would be subject to greater inequalities, or do more wrong than the present system.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I was in hopes that some member of the committee would have defended this report. Neither the Chairman nor the members of the committee have indicated anything clear or definite as to what they intend to do. As far as this question is concerned——

MR. EDGERTON. The gentleman could not have paid very much attention to the proceedings, because there is a motion pending to strike out section one and insert something else.

MR. LARKIN. I understood you had an amendment, and that the gentleman moved a substitute to your amendment. I am opposed to this report, because there is nothing definite or tangible in it, and it will be construed in all sorts of ways. We want a system that will be construed alike by every Judge in the State of California. There may be one or two sections that we can adopt, but we should first adopt a general system of taxation, that will be equal and uniform. I hope we will adopt the language of the old Constitution, and then proceed to the second and fifth sections. I am in favor of the Boggs proposition for taxing property. It comes at once to the question that all property shall be taxed, and that no double taxation shall be allowed, and that growing crops shall be exempt.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I understand the question before the committee to be upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Solano. Now, I think the principle contained in that amendment a very dangerous one, and it ought not to be adopted. It provides for an ad valorem tax upon property, and in addition to that an income tax. Now, it seems to me there is a very great inconsistency here in the gentleman's proposition and speech. I understand him to say he is opposed to a property tax, levied on the ad valorem principle, but section two certainly provides for that mode of taxation, and no other.

MR. DUDLEY. I did not say I was opposed to it.

MR. EDGERTON. I do not know of any other mode indicated in this plan, unless it is the plan of an income tax. I think the amendment ought to be voted down. The amendment which I offer will be much safer as a starter. It is the declaration of a principle, that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this State.

SPEECH OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I think this debate, as far as it has gone, has pretty clearly demonstrated the necessity for striking out this first section entirely, and leaving no substitute for it. All the trouble we have had in this State in regard to taxation has arisen out of the construction of these words, "equal and uniform taxation," in the old Constitution, by the Supreme Court. There is another plan that might be adopted in this State, which would be the means of producing large revenues to the State, which, perhaps, could never have been adopted under the construction placed by our Supreme Court upon the words "equal and uniform." I mean a tax levied upon the estates of deceased persons. I believe we should have such a tax in this State. There is no tax which we could impose which would be so willingly paid, and one which would not work a hardship upon any one. I would not levy the tax upon small estates. I would provide that every man should have enough for the support of his family and the education of his children. I think a graduated tax should be imposed. Suppose a man dies worth twenty thousand dollars, you impose a tax of one eighth of one per cent. upon his estate. You go on raising the tax, until when a man dies worth ten millions you have a tax of say ten or fifteen per cent. upon his estate. You do no wrong or injustice to any one upon earth. If he has children, millions remain for them after the tax is paid. If he desires to leave his riches to strangers, there is no injustice done in imposing such a tax. It is, to a certain extent, a matter of natural right. We find in some countries and in some States of the Union these drafts, made by law, upon the estates of deceased persons. In some instances a man may will away every acre of his land, and give all his property to perfect strangers. In other places the laws of primogeniture prevail. This matter of the disposition of estates is one of mere statutory regulation. Now, I conceive of no better way of raising revenue, one which will do less damage to the individual, as when a man dies a part of the large property which he has earned, and which has been protected by the State, a part of it shall be taken by the State. Now, that system would be somewhat inconsistent if these words "equal and uniform" are allowed to remain.

MR. EDGERTON. It would be competent to levy such a tax now. If the gentleman will consult the statutes he will find that it has been done over and over again.

MR. CAMPBELL. I say these words might be construed to conflict with the system. If it was to be equal and uniform—equal on the round amount, there would have to be the same tax on an estate amounting to ten thousand dollars as on an estate of one thousand.

MR. EDGERTON. The words "equal and uniform" have been in the Constitution since eighteen hundred and forty-nine, and these succession taxes have been sustained by the Courts.

MR. CAMPBELL. There has never been any graduated taxation. There would be some question about it.

MR. EDGERTON. The Supreme Court has always held that no property can be exempted from taxation.

MR. CAMPBELL. That is what I understand. They have so decided, and therefore you could not exempt property to a reasonable amount for the support of the family. Now I desire, for that reason, to omit those words from the Constitution. They may so hamper the Legislature that they could not adopt such a graduated succession tax. It is a just and impartial tax. If we had such a tax in this State at the present time the entire expenses of the State could have been paid from the estates of deceased persons up to the present time from this source alone. Four or five men have died during the past year whose estates, under such a tax, would have paid the entire current expenses of the State Government during that period. Therefore, I do not wish to tie the hands of the Legislature by retaining those words. We shall tax a class of property that now so largely escapes taxation, and in other respects leave the Legislature free as to the mode they may adopt of raising revenue.

MR. EDGERTON. I would like to ask the gentleman what he means by equal and uniform taxation?

MR. CAMPBELL. They may have entirely different meanings. Equal taxation may mean an equal tax upon amounts of property; it may mean that property shall be taxed absolutely to the same extent, according to its actual value; it may mean that personal and real property shall be taxed at precisely the same rate; it may mean that cultivated and uncultivated land shall be taxed at precisely the same rate—that the value of an entire tract of land may be taken in solido; that it shall be taxed just the same as small tracts devoted to other uses. I cannot say what construction may be given to it. I would say that they mean this, that all property valuations shall be taxed at an equal rate. Then, in connection with the other section, that all property, with certain specific exceptions, might be taxed; certainly there could be no exceptions except specifically named.

MR. EDGERTON. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken when he states that, either in the Legislature or out of it, in the Supreme Court or out of it, any difficulty has arisen from that clause. Now, sir, it was actually stated by the Supreme Court that the Legislature has power to exempt property. In the twenty-second California it was expressly held that the Legislature had that power, also in the thirty-fourth California. In the case of the People vs. the Hibernia Bank, the question was on the taxation of solvent debts, and there the Court held that solvent debts were not subject to taxation, because it would be, in effect, double taxation. There the question turned upon this clause: "All property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law," and not upon the clause the gentleman is discussing.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. Mr. Chairman: I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

The hour for recess having arrived, the Convention will take a recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called, and quorum present.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I ask indefinite leave of absence for General Miller, on account of sickness in his family.

Granted.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: When the Convention took a recess, we were discussing the article on revenue and taxation. I have been requested to consent to the taking up of the article on right of suffrage this afternoon. In view of the importance of this question, and the very thin house to-day, I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the article on the right of suffrage.

MR. GRACE. Mr. President: I am in hopes this motion will not prevail. I do not know that there is anything of more importance than this question of suffrage. I propose to discuss this question, and I want it discussed by a full house.

MR. SMITH, of Kern. Mr. President: I hope this motion will prevail. This subject of taxation is one of very great moment, and should not be slighted.

MR. GRACE. Mr. O'Sullivan, one of the oldest advocates of woman suffrage, is away. [Laughter.]

MR. WINANS. Mr. President: It appears to me that the main purpose of this motion is to defer the consideration of this important subject until such time as there can be a full attendance of members. I do not conceive that there will be anything gained by discussing this most important subject to-day. If the matter is passed now, it will have to come up again in Convention, and if the decision arrived at shall not meet the views of the majority, it will be reversed in Convention. A large number of gentlemen are away, necessarily absent. This absence is not the result of caprice on their part, but they have simply gone home to attend to private business. When gentlemen came here they came under the impression that the session would last one hundred days and no longer, and they made their business arrangements accordingly. Many gentlemen have important interests of their own, which they have sacrificed to the public service. Having found that the Convention will not be able to close its labors within the limits prescribed, they now find themselves so circumstanced as to be compelled to go home and arrange their business for another fifty days. I hope this motion will prevail.

MR. WEST. Mr. President: There are other men whose interests ought to be taken into consideration. It is that class who cannot return home on Saturday, and who are looking anxiously forward to the time of final adjournment, and every delay of this kind makes that day more distant. It is due to this class that the Convention proceed as fast as possible with its labors, complete its labors, and submit the result to the people. I hope we shall take up these reports in their regular order. If there is a quorum present it is competent to consider any subject.

MR. EDGERTON. The Sergeant-at-Arms informs me that there is no quorum present. I suggest that the roll be called.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: I am opposed to any change in the order of business. We have as many of these lawyers present probably as we shall have at any time from this on. There are men who have been more hours on the road from here to San Francisco than they have on this floor. Now, these men will continue that course. We can proceed with this work now. It is the most important question before this Convention, and I insist upon proceeding with the discussion until it is disposed of.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. President: If gentlemen are so deeply interested in this subject, certainly they would have made an effort to be here. I move to amend the motion by inserting the words "revenue and taxation," instead of "suffrage."

THE CHAIR. The motion is not amendable.

MR. GRACE. I move to lay the motion on the table.

No second.

The motion to take up the report of the Committee on Right of Suffrage was lost.

REVENUE AND TAXATION.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I move that the Convention do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section one and amendments are before the committee.

REMARKS OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton, this morning made certain assertions in regard to the decision of the Supreme Court, in regard to what were known as the mortgage tax cases. My impression was at the time that he was wrong, and I have since looked at the decisions. I refer to the case of the Savings and Loan Society against Austin, in forty-sixth California. The part of the decision I have referred to will be found on page four hundred and fifty-seven, which shows that the question of equal and uniform taxation was raised by counsel, and was determined by the Court. I will first read from the argument of counsel, page four hundred and fifty-seven, to show that the question was raised by counsel:

"The Constitution, which prescribes that all property shall be taxed according to its value, prohibits just as much the taxing of property for twice its value as it does the taxing it for half or a third of its value. Besides, the tax is unequal, and not uniform, for you tax the solvent debt twice—once in the hands of the debtor, and once in the hands of the creditor—while all the other things, such as lands, horses, cattle, etc., you only tax once. Can a law be constitutional in California which enacts that a certain property, viz.: solvent debts, shall pay two taxes a year, but that all the other property shall pay only one tax?"

So much for the argument of counsel. Now I wish to refer to the opinion of Justice Crockett, who gave the prevailing opinion of the Court, which was concurred in by a majority of the Court. He says:

"The real point to be decided is, whether the same property has been twice assessed for the same tax; for it is obvious that if the subject-matter of the tax is the same, it cannot be twice assessed for the same tax, and it is immaterial in such a case by whom the title is held. If, for example, the statute should provide that all lands should be assessed on the first of March in each year to the then owners of them, and that if any land thus assessed should be conveyed during the fiscal year it should be again assessed to the new owner, no one would doubt that under our Constitution the second tax would be void, as violating the principle of equality and uniformity prescribed by that instrument. (People vs. Kohl, 40 Cal. 127.) And yet, in such a case, if the first tax had been paid by the former owner before the conveyance, so that it was no longer a lien upon the land, it might be said that it was no concern of the purchaser that his vendor had been once taxed, nor of the latter that his vendee had been again taxed on the same land. But in such cases the true point for inquiry is, has the same property been twice assessed for the same tax? And in solving this question, the fact whether the property belonged to one person or another is a false quantity. The tax being upon the property itself, the inquiry is, whether it has been twice taxed, and in solving the point, the question of ownership is immaterial."

It is unnecessary to read further. The Court goes on at considerable length. That opinion was concurred in by Judge Wallace, except as to some particulars, which I believe refer to the State Board of Equalization. Judge Belcher discusses the question as to whether it is double taxation or not. Under that decision there was an end to mortgage taxes. So I think the gentleman will find he is entirely wrong in his views, that the Court did not consider that question in making that decision.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I am surprised that a lawyer so distinguished, and justly distinguished, as my friend from Alameda, should make such an assertion in relation to the mortgage tax case, when it was expressly overruled in the case of the People vs. The Hibernia Bank; and I think the gentleman himself, when he comes to study the question, will take a different view.

MR. CAMPBELL. That principle was never overruled.

MR. EDGERTON. Yes, sir. it was in the case of the People vs. The Hibernia Bank, and the whole thing turned upon this point, whether or not solvent debts were within the definition of the word "property," as used in the Constitution. That is the point, and you can appeal to one of the ex-Judges on this floor. If the gentleman will read the Hibernia Bank case, he will find it turns entirely upon the construction of the word property, as used in this part of section thirteen, that property shall be taxed in proportion to its value to be ascertained according to law. They say that solvent debts depend on so many contingencies that it is hard to ascertain whether they are property within the meaning of the Constitution, and that clause is a limitation upon the power of the Legislature to tax anything but property. They say no Assessor can ascertain the value of solvent debts. If the gentleman will look at these cases in the fifty-first California——

MR. CAMPBELL. That does not, as I understand it, overrule the principle that it must be equal and uniform taxation, and that to tax them would be to tax the property twice.

MR. EDGERTON. If it is not overruled, then there has never been a case overruled in this State.

MR. SWING. The People vs. Eddy.

MR. EDGERTON. The Legislature of eighteen hundred and sixty-nine passed an Act, the object of which was to avoid double taxation, and exempting all property from double taxation, and the case of The People vs. Eddy grew out of that statute, the Supreme Court holding that it was not constitutional, and that the debts were subject to taxation.

MR. SWING. The result of that decision is as stated, that the Legislature had no power under the Constitution to exempt any property from taxation, and the fifty-first California does not overrule that decision, and I do not see why the principle does not stand that solvent debts are property.

MR. EDGERTON. That whole line of decisions has been overruled.

SPEECH OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I am afraid that discussions of this character will lead us away from the real point before the Convention. I do not see what reference the discussion has to the amendments pending here. The proposition is to strike out the whole of the first section, which reads that taxation shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects. It is proposed to insert in lieu of that, that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this State. The question that has come before the Courts heretofore, has simply been as to the violation of this principle of equality and uniformity. I am opposed to the leaving out of the words "taxation shall be equal and uniform." If those words are not put in the Constitution, the Legislature may tax one class of property four times as much as another. I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Dudley, because it is more diffuse than the other, and would result in far greater expense. I trust the gentleman from Sacramento will add to his amendment the other words of the old Constitution, that "all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value." The language of the old Constitution, in this respect, is plain and explicit, and cannot be misunderstood. Under Mr. Dudley's amendment there would have to be a large number of Assessors. We do not want three or four different assessments of the same property. Let us have one Assessor, and let the property be assessed for all purposes at once. I hope we shall adopt this provision of the old Constitution, then there will be no difficulty. It is the right principle to engraft in the organic law, that taxation shall be equal and uniform, and that all property shall be taxed according to its value, to be ascertained according to law.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: The report of this committee is so much better than I had expected, that I am in favor of treating it with all due consideration. As to the pending amendment, to strike out the first clause and insert the language of the old Constitution, I think it ought to be adopted. Not that I think there is any very great practical force in these words, because it all depends on the administration of the thing. It all depends upon how you assess. But they are words proper to be in the Constitution, and have been rendered proper by the decisions of the Supreme Court. I am glad to see some things in this report. I am glad to see that my friend from Sacramento has come round in favor of Commissions. I thought he would get straight before the session was over. But this Commission is a little too large. Two Commissioners from each Congressional District would make rather too large a Board of Equalization. I think a Board consisting of four would be large enough. Three would be better than four. My friend from El Dorado, Mr. Larkin, says he is opposed to taxing credits. I regretted very much to hear him say so, because if you are going to tax all property, the moment you start out on that proposition to tax all property you fail of the end, if you don't tax credits, because they are property, and so classed by eminent writers on political economy, and I shall refer to a very able writer on that subject. I shall ask the Secretary to read an extract from the "Science of Wealth."

THE SECRETARY read from the desk the following:

"It has sometimes been maintained that credits ought not to be taxed, but all assessments be made upon values, or property, personal and real. Taxes, it has been argued, ought not to be laid upon persons, but upon that out of which they can alone be paid, viz., property.

"But credits are taxed as well as values. A holds a farm worth ten thousand dollars, mortgaged to B for five thousand dollars. A pays taxes upon the whole valuation, and B upon five thousand dollars, as money at interest. A, it is said, is doubly taxed. This is a practical question, that has puzzled legislators in every age and country. Let us therefore carefully examine it.

"Suppose A and B, aforesaid, form an entire community, and that the whole tax of one hundred and fifty dollars is imposed on property. The whole valuation will then be ten thousand dollars (A's farm), and the rate one and one half per cent., which A pays, and B goes untaxed. We will now change the principle and have both property and credits taxed. The valuation will then be: A's farm, ten thousand dollars, and B's money at interest, five thousand dollars—total, fifteen thousand dollars: and, with the same amount to be assessed (one hundred and fifty dollars), the rate will be one per cent., of which A pays one hundred and B fifty dollars. So, then, we discover that A is not doubly taxed, as assumed, but at the worst pays only twenty-five dollars—or one third—more than his share. Such must, in principle, be the result of this kind of taxation, taking a whole community together. All the amount taxed upon credits is so much relief to taxation upon property. This seems to be clear, and the justice of the thing is established by the fact that A bought his farm knowing that it would be subject to a full taxation, and bought it cheaper, as we have shown in another place, on that account. B, on the other hand, accepted his mortgage on the same ground, knowing it would be subject to tax on the common valuation. Is either party, then, wronged?

"But perhaps another reason may be given why A should pay taxes upon the whole value of his farm, viz.: That, having the usufruct of the whole, he is entitled to all the profits on the farm. 'But he don't own the whole of the farm.' True, that is his misfortune; if he did he would obtain a larger amount of net profits, but his obligation to pay tax on the whole is not impaired, because he has the use of a part of B's capital. As the owner of the farm, A has a chance for all the profits that can be made from the whole, while, by the taxation of B on the mortgage, the former saves a part of what he would otherwise pay in taxes. One pays taxes for the profits of business, the other for the income on his capital.

"In this case we find another very clear illustration of the correctness of the income tax policy. If there were no other tax than upon income, the matter would stand thus:

A's income from his farm, say	$900
He deducts the interest he pays B	300
A pays tax on his net income of	$600
B's income is taxed upon	300
Total income to be taxed	$900

"Amount to be raised, one hundred and fifty dollars. Of this, A will pay one hundred dollars, and B fifty; and there would be no question as to the justice of the system by which both were thus taxed. If A's income should be more or less than nine hundred dollars, he would pay more or less, and B must pay less or more accordingly.

"In the absence of the income tax principle, what can be more equitable and just than the practice of taxing both mortgagor and mortgagee? If the former were allowed to deduct from his inventory the amount he owed the latter, it would often happen that, the mortgagee not living in the same town or State, so much property would escape taxation altogether. This, in some communities, especially our Western States, would be a great evil. That much hardship may often result from taxing credits as well as property, is undoubtedly true; but that only affords additional evidence that the income tax principle is the only correct one. Next to this would be the levying of all taxes upon property exclusively, and if adopted at the very commencement of a social organization, as at the landing at Plymouth in sixteen hundred and twenty, it would secure a just taxation, because all property would be created, held, and transferred under the well known condition."

Now, I am in favor of the provisions of this report to tax moneys loaned on mortgage, and deduct the amount from the value of the real estate, and assess the residue to the owner of the real estate. It is said that this is double taxation. I do not understand that the Supreme Court has so decided in any case. If it has, the decision is against all the writers on political economy. The authority which I have just read is considered good. Amasa Walker is now dead. He will be remembered as having delivered a very able address in San Francisco some years ago. Now, I think it would be perfectly proper to tax both parties. They both have a certain interest in the property, and both receive governmental protection, and both should contribute to the support of the government which affords them protection. I am in favor, to some extent, of the proposition of the gentleman from Solano, for an income tax. I introduced a proposition of that sort at a very early day myself. The matter of mortgages perhaps might as well be left to stand as it is in the report, because there is no trouble in finding the mortgage, but it is difficult to find the other credits. For that reason, it appears to me, an income tax is eminently useful. And I shall be in favor of extending the income tax (that was my proposition) to United States bonds. And I think we have a perfect right to do so, because, although the Act of Congress exempts bonds themselves, it does not exempt the interest, and therefore we have a right to levy an income tax—a moderate income tax—upon the interest which comes from the bonds to the holder. This provision of the Act of Congress exempts nearly one sixth of all the property of the United States from taxation, and it seems to me a very great injustice to all the balance of the taxpayers in the country. I have already shown what Mr. Walker says in regard to an income tax. I do not intend to pursue this subject, however, at this time. But I lay it down as a legal proposition that we have a right to lay an income tax upon the interest derived from government bonds, and I shall prepare myself with ample authorities on this point.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I ask if it would be in order to discuss that branch of the proposition relating to solvent debts, at this time?

MR. EDGERTON. I would suggest to the gentleman that that question will be reached for consideration in a very short time; it is the next question after this section is disposed of. Perhaps we had better dispose of this first.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Dudley.

The amendment was lost.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer the amendment of which I gave notice awhile ago.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 1. Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property in the State, not exempt under the laws of the United States, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law. The word 'property,' as used in this article and section, is hereby declared to include moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, dues, franchises, and all other matters and things capable of private ownership, real, personal, and mixed."

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: We have had considerable discussion as to the correctness of the decisions of the Supreme Court of the State of California. I apprehend that the whole matter rests upon what the meaning of the Constitution is when it makes use of the word "property." I do not wish to discuss it at length, but I introduce it as a definition of the word "property," and thereby to test the sense of the Convention in relation to taxing credits. The amendment declares that moneys, and everything capable of private ownership, everything subject to transfer, everything that has value, shall be taxed. I believe it is the correct system, and I offer it in order to test the sense of the Convention upon the propriety of taxing incomes and credits.

MR. EDGERTON. I do not see why the gentleman desires to mix up the definition of the word "property" with the declaration of a broad principle. I hope that it will be voted down, and when we get to the next section, it will be pertinent to consider it. There is ample time to consider this question of the definition of property, but this is not the place for it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. West.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: As far as I am concerned, I am not fully satisfied as to how I should vote upon the pending amendment, because I do not think we have a thorough understanding as yet as to how much power should be given to the Legislature, and how much should be retained from the Legislature. Now, I have studied this subject considerably, and for some time, and the more I have studied the matter the more I find complications connected with the subject of taxation, and the more I am convinced that it cannot be now settled definitely by the Constitution, but that as far as possible it should be left to the Legislature.

Now, before I came here, in speaking upon this question, there were several propositions, on account of decisions of the Supreme Court, to which attention had been drawn. One of these was in relation to the taxation of mortgages, and connected with that subject there was a general idea prevailing that a large amount of property in this State that could be taxed was not taxed, owing to the decisions of the Supreme Court. Now, it is undoubtedly the case that there is a large amount of property in this State now exempt from taxation, by reason of the decisions referred to, and the people thought that perhaps this Convention could remedy this matter. But there is also an additional amount of property in this State that cannot be reached, and there is no system that can be devised, or ever has been fixed by any State in the Union, for one time or for all time, as far as authority before us and the experience of the country is concerned, or that of any other country, by which this class of property can all be reached. We find by the elaborate report of Mr. Wells, that in New York there has been great difficulty upon this subject. There they have unequal taxation, and there are various plans suggested in this report to the Legislature. We find that in the State of Pennsylvania there is still another plan. We find in the State of California still another plan, and in all the States there are various plans for taxation, all trying to fix on a uniform system of taxation; and, although one of these plans may do in one State—may be the best that can be established for that particular State it would be utterly unsuited for another. Now, the system established in the State of Pennsylvania is perhaps the best that can be devised for that State. It is a system founded upon the taxation of corporations, because there are a great many corporations in that State; for instance, railroad corporations; and because there are a great many local corporations all over the State, and by taxing the corporations there is a division of taxation among all the people in the State. Now, if that system should be established in this State it would be a very diffuse system, because we have not corporations throughout the State. There are some counties which have none at all, and consequently a great many people and communities would be exempt from taxation; and while it would be well to tax corporations enough, to a great extent, still it would not cover the whole subject.

Now, this State has changed. After awhile it may be well to establish the system which they have in Pennsylvania. But suppose this Convention should attempt to fix a system of taxation, does it not appear at once that after awhile the system now fixed would be inoperative and of no effect in many respects? Therefore, I say that this subject should be left to the Legislature, as far as it is possible to do so. And yet I am not in favor of taking away all restrictions from the Legislature. There is one subject connected with taxation that it seems to me that this Convention should look into, that we should do something for, and that is as to assessments—a system for the assessment and collection of taxes. Now, for instance, the Supreme Court has interfered by its decisions with the powers of the Boards of Equalization, and it has been established as a principle that the Board of Equalization cannot raise or lower assessments; in certain cases, according to the decisions, it cannot at least; that for the purpose of equalization, as I understand it, there can be no raising of taxation. But there are cases, and the conclusion is that Boards of Equalization could not raise—they might lower, but they could not raise assessments. It is sufficient to say that the powers of the Board of Equalization are insufficient, and it is for this Convention to look into the matter, and to give to these Boards full power to review all assessments. Now, if we could get some clause that will provide that the Legislature shall have full power over all assessments, that there shall be no discrimination as to persons, it would be well.

As for myself, I am not satisfied to vote upon this question with what little attention this Convention has been able to give to the matter. I would not have said a word, but it seemed to me that it was going by default. I had intended to bring authorities here, in order that we might be able to discuss this matter more intelligently. I only rise now because it seems to me that the matter is going by default; and right here, before we take a single step, there ought to be some general clause in order to give the Legislature full and complete power in the matter of taxation.

SPEECH OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I do not propose to detain this committee long in the discussion of a plan for the assessing and collecting of taxes. That is not the question that is before the committee at the present time. The only question now is to define the principle of taxation; that is all there is in the consideration of this first section. If the committee undertakes to define the principles of this question, it should do it correctly. It may not be necessary, at all, but if it is done, it should be done correctly. I am opposed to the section as reported by the committee, and opposed to the section as it stood in the old Constitution. The words "equal" and "equal taxation" are a delusion and a snare. As has been said, there is no such thing as equal taxation. There is no such principle as equal taxation. There never was intended to be such a principle. We know no taxpayer in this State who pays taxes, but who feels that he is unjustly discriminated against, and is bearing an unequal burden in the payment of these taxes. It is a physical impossibility to have equal taxation, but uniform taxation can be established. The principle of uniform taxation can be reached—uniform upon the same classes. It is for that reason that in all the modern Constitutions the word "equal" is left out, and the word "uniform" is retained; but the committee, after having used the word "uniform," propose now to add the word "equal," and leave it as it was in the old Constitution, and thus remand us back to the old troublesome system. There never was a time when a citizen could not go before the Court and say that his tax was unequal. Now, as I understand it, there are but two correct principles of taxation—one is uniformity, and the other is the character of the tax itself. An ad valorem tax is probably the best and most correct tax that can be put upon property. The committee should have inserted in their report, after giving a definition of taxation, after the word "taxation," "ad valorem on all property subject to be taxed." I notice in the Constitution of Georgia, adopted about a year ago, that in addition to uniformity of taxation, there is a clause providing for an ad valorem tax. If the motion to strike out and substitute the old provision shall not prevail, I shall offer an amendment, to add, that the tax shall be "ad valorem on all property proposed to be taxed." That, it seems to me, is a sufficient declaration of the principle of taxation.

MR. CROUCH. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SECTION 1. Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law."

MR. EDGERTON. That is the old Constitution.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Napa, Mr. Crouch.

MR. EDGERTON. I accept the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. Then the question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton.

MR. HITCHCOCK. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SECTION 1. Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law. Everything material, visible, or transferable, that has a value, shall be considered property, for the purpose of taxation."

MR. EDGERTON. I arise to a point of order. There is no necessity for the amendment. If there is anything material or visible that has a value, is it not property.

REMARKS OF MR. HITCHCOCK.

MR. HITCHCOCK. Under the old Constitution certain things were exempted from taxation, such as mortgages, because it was decided that they were not property in the meaning of the Constitution. As I understand the word property, I think it means everything that has a value. I think every species of property that is owned by individuals should bear its just proportion of the expenses of government. As I understand this form of government, the people and property should support it. I believe every man should pay taxes on his head, because we are all equal before the law.

MR. ROLFE. Would you tax a man's head according to its value, also?

MR. HITCHCOCK. No, sir. I believe that all property should assist in supporting government. The idea that mortgages and notes, which require more protection at the hands of government than any other class of property, should pay no tax, is wrong. The man who owns lands don't go into Court. It is these promissory notes and mortgages that make so much litigation, and which pay nothing in the support of the law. I think every species of property should be compelled to bear its just proportion of the burden of government. I do not think anything ought to be exempted. It is urged that growing crops ought to be exempted. I cannot see any good reason for it. If it has any value, and you can ascertain its value, I cannot see any reason why it should not be taxed.

MR. HOWARD. Have you got any crop until you cut it?

MR. HITCHCOCK. No, sir; I say where you can ascertain its value, that crop is a part of the real estate, and not personal property.

MR. EDGERTON. It is subject to execution and attachment.

MR. HITCHCOCK. It is a part of the real estate, and adds value to the real estate; in either case, land with a crop on it is worth more money than a piece of land without a crop. I think property should be assessed at its value. That is the question here, at its value. If a piece of land, with a crop on it, is worth more money than a piece of land without a crop on it, I think it should be so assessed. Every species of property should be assessed at its actual value, and pay taxes to the State accordingly. Suppose I give a mortgage on my house, and the house burns up, and the man holds me for the debt; the property is gone, but he holds the mortgage, and goes into Court, and if I have anything he will make me pay it, and he will get a judgment and hold it over my head until it is satisfied. Therefore, I say he should pay on his mortgage while I pay on my property. I sell a man a horse, and take his note; the horse dies, but still I have the note, and can make him pay me. I am protected in my property by the law, and I should contribute to the exact extent of my debt. Therefore, I say, everything that has a value should be taxed.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I differ with the gentleman from San Joaquin. The reason why is this: that growing crops are not property in the true sense of the term. That growing crops are prospective incomes. If we are going to tax incomes, then we should pay taxes as others do; but you are not taxing incomes; at least you have not heretofore. We have been taxing property, and if we adopt that principle of taxation, and do not tax incomes, then we should not make an exception of the farmer, and tax his income while exempting the income of other pursuits. Now, the Assessor goes on the farm and assesses the land for what it is worth. He assesses the house, and barn, and tools, and all there is upon it, and then, according to this proposed principle of assessing growing crops, he assesses the farmer's income too. That would be all right if other incomes were assessed; but I do protest to selecting out the farmer, and imposing upon him an additional burden of taxation which is not imposed upon others. If we are going to discriminate in favor of any interests in this State, I would rather it would be in favor of the farmer than any other interest, for the reason that his business success, his prosperity, is the prosperity of the whole State. The business in which he is engaged is one upon which all other business interests rest. Now, Mr. Chairman, while I claim no exemptions in his favor, I do most earnestly protest against any discrimination against him. And that is exactly what the taxation of growing crops means. It is taxing property, and then taxing the farmer's income. It is unjust. It is an unjust discrimination.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of Mr. Hitchcock.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton.

SPEECH OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: The first two sections of the report of the committee deal with two separate subjects—subjects which are separate in the report, and which ought to be separate in their consideration here. Early in the day the Chairman of the committee proposed to strike out the first section, and insert in its place the old Constitution, that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this State. It seems to me that those words ought to be inserted there. And if his amendment had been permitted to stand, I should have voted for it; for, sir, I know that one of the objects of a general principle of taxation should be equal and uniform taxation throughout the State. And if we have failed to realize equality and uniformity in taxation, or if we shall in future fail to realize it, still it is something which, like perfection, should be striven after. But now the gentleman has accepted, as a part of his amendment, the subject-matter which is treated in section two of the report, that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law. I hope this amendment will now be voted down; first, because it introduces now into this section a subject which the Convention has not been considering, but a subject-matter which is to be determined in the second section. Upon the first proposition, that taxation should be equal and uniform throughout the State, we have attempted to agree. That ought to be the first question that should come before the Convention for its consideration. But that amendment embraces more than this proposition. It embraces a proposition upon which I do not think this Convention is likely to agree. If that is adopted, credits cannot be taxed, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the State. I hope the amendment in its present form will be voted down, and if it is, I shall then ask to propose an amendment in the words offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, that "taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State."

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I am sorry the gentleman accepted the amendment. I am sorry for the reasons suggested by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman. The subjects are not the same. The first proposition contained is simply the broad declaration that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. It is a distinct and separate proposition. It stands alone. The next subject treated of is declaratory of the class of property that shall be subject to taxation. I was in hopes that the committee would deal with these subjects separately. I will state why. To the second section, which deals with the question of property, and the definition of the word, a proposition has been made and considered. It is not my own, sir; it was one that was presented by a gentleman who is out of the city to-day. That deals with the question of property, and contains the substance of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Napa, Mr. Crouch, with the qualification. That qualification deals with the question of indebtedness, evidences of debt, growing crops, property of the United States, property belonging to this State, and property exempt from taxation by the laws of the United States. It amounts to the definition of what property shall be subject to taxation. It seems to me these subjects should be treated of in separate sections. It seems to me the Chairman has very properly treated these subjects as separate matters. We are all agreed that taxation shall be uniform, but we are not all agreed as to what property shall be taxed, and that question is not receiving the attention which its importance demands; by the report it was made a special and distinct section. In the old Constitution the whole subject is dealt with in one section. It seems to me better, therefore, in the interest of simplicity, to keep the matter separate. I hope, therefore, that this matter will all be voted down.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say, as far as the report of the committee is concerned, that there was barely a majority of the committee in favor of any particular proposition, with two or three exceptions. Now, I have always been in favor of adhering to the existing Constitution as far as possible, and upon this matter of taxation, in my opinion, the system existing in this State to-day, under the decision of the Supreme Court in the Hibernia Bank cases, is an eminently wise, and just, and judicious system. Now, the existing section was taken from the old Constitution of Texas—the Constitution of eighteen hundred and forty-five—which Constitution has been imported down through various States, since. It is all in one section. I had supposed that the Convention desired to have this all in one section. However, it is immaterial to me.

MR. HALE. It is evident that the Convention cannot deal with it properly in that way.

MR. EDGERTON. It was my impression that it was better to deal with it as one section, and that is the reason why I accepted the amendment. In reply to the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, I do not think that his authority—Mr. Walker—is very good authority upon the subject of taxation. I will be able to give him two or three authorities to one on that proposition.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section will be allowed to stand just as it is. Some allusions have been made here to the last part of a section because it includes growing crops and other property. Well, the same objection holds good as to that part of the section that taxation shall be equal and uniform, and then exempting property from taxation. If you exempt half the property, it is not equal and uniform. If growing crops are exempted from taxation it destroys the doctrine of equality. Equal and uniform taxation will include all property. The last half of the section points out the way property is to be taxed. We want a system of taxation that throws the burden on all property alike and taxes no property twice. It seems to be necessary to except growing crops from the operation of the assessment. It seems to be necessary to do it. I do not like to have growing crops taxed specifically. They belong as a part of the real estate, and ought to be considered as a part of the value of the land in all cases. They ought not to be assessed separately, for they are not separate property. They belong as a part of the land, and should be so assessed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton.

Division being called for, the committee divided, and the vote stood: ayes, 33; noes, 40.

THE CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting. There is evidently a quorum present, and I will put the question again.

The committee divided again, and the amendment was lost: ayes, 27; noes, 51.

MR. BARTON. I offer a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Taxation shall be equal throughout the State; all property shall be taxed according to its real value, and the word 'property' is hereby declared to include all moneys, bonds, mortgages, credits, stocks, dues, and franchises, everything having a private ownership, real, personal, and mixed, taxing all lands of equal capacity equally, taxing improvements separately, exempting therefrom growing crops, property belonging to the United States or to this State; and the Legislature shall fix a day for the listing of all property within this State, and shall authorize the levying and collecting of all taxes by a general law."

MR. FREEMAN. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the whole thereof, and insert the words 'taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the substitute.

Adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended.

MR. EAGON. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law, and all mortgages and other evidences of indebtedness, secured by a lien on real estate, shall be considered as property for the purpose of taxation."

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the original amendment as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman.

The committee divided, and the amendment as amended was adopted: ayes, 59; noes, 21.

THE CHAIRMAN. No further amendments are in order.

MR. BARTON. What disposition was made of my substitute?

THE CHAIRMAN. The committee adopted an amendment to the substitute. The Secretary will read section two.

MR. BARTON. I desire to inquire if the amendment just passed is an amendment to my substitute?

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir; an amendment to your substitute, and the committee adopted it.

THE SECRETARY read section two.

SEC. 2. All property, including franchises, capital stock of corporations or joint stock associations, and solvent debts, deducting therefrom debts due to bona fide residents of the State, and excluding growing crops, private property exempt from taxation under the laws of the United States, public property belonging to the United States, or to this State, or any municipality thereof, and all property and the proceeds thereof which is used exclusively.

MR. HALE. I offer a substitute for section two. It is not mine. It is one known to many members as the Boggs proposition. I present it at his request, and would like to have it printed in the Journal.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 2. All property within this State, including franchises, and the capital stock of corporations, shall be taxed in proportion to its value; provided, always, that no tax shall be imposed on growing crops, debts, evidences of debt, private property exempt from taxation by the laws of the United States, property belonging to the United States, or to this State, or any municipality thereof. No deduction shall be made from the assessed value of property on account of any debt or debts owing by the owner or owners of such property, but such debtor or debtors shall, upon payment of such indebtedness, be entitled to retain therefrom a sum, with interest thereon at the same rate borne by such indebtedness, to be computed from the time or times of the tax payments which shall equal the amount of taxes which may have been paid by such debtor or debtors, during the existence of said indebtedness, upon property of like amount in value of said indebtedness; provided, further, that if any such indebtedness shall be paid by any such debtor or debtors after assessment and before the tax levy, the amount of such levy for that year may likewise be retained by such debtor or debtors, and shall be computed according to the tax levy for the preceding year."

MR. HUESTIS. I offer the following as a substitute for the proposition of Judge Hale.

THE SECRETARY read:

"All property in this State, including franchises, capital stock of corporations or joint stock associations, and solvent debts, excepting growing crops, private property exempt from taxation under the laws of the United States, public property belonging to the United States, or to this State, or any county, city and county, city, or municipality thereof, and including all property, real and personal, belonging to and devoted to public use in all public school districts and departments in this State, shall be taxed in proportion to its cash value, to be ascertained as directed by law. A mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation, by which a debt is secured, shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby. Except as to railroads and other quasi-public corporations, in case of debts so secured, the value of the property affected by such mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or obligation, less the value of such security, shall be assessed and taxed to the owner of the property, and the value of such security shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof in the county, or city and county, in which the property affected thereby is situate. The taxes so levied shall be a lien upon the property and security respectively, and may be paid by either party, or his successor, to such security; if paid by the owner of the security or his successor, the tax so levied upon the property affected thereby shall become a part of the debt so secured. If the owner of the property or his successor shall pay the tax so levied on such security, it shall constitute a payment thereon, and, to the extent of such payment, a full discharge thereof. And in respect to all other solvent debts, there shall be no reduction made, as herein provided, from the full cash value of all property of the debtor or debtors owing the same, on account of such debt or debts; but he or they shall, on payment thereof, be entitled to retain therefrom a sum, with interest thereon at the same rate borne by said indebtedness, to be computed from the time or times of the tax payments, which shall equal the amount of taxes which may have been paid by such debtor or debtors during the existence of such indebtedness, upon property of like amount in value of said indebtedness; provided, if any indebtedness shall be paid by any such debtor or debtors after assessment and before the tax levy, the amount of such levy, for that year, may likewese be retained by him or them, and shall be computed according to the tax levy for the preceding year.

SPEECH OF MR. HUESTIS.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: Whether secured or not, solvent debts should be taxed, because they are property in law and in fact. This is abundantly proven by the fact that they may be sold and transferred, and the purchaser becomes the absolute owner, and is entitled to collect and retain the amount due on them. He must also by statute sue in his own name, and this, too, whether the demand is on a note or an account, or even an unliquidated claim for damages. At his death all solvent, and for that matter all debts of whatever kind or nature, pass to his executor or administrator, and, after payment of debts, go to his heirs or devisees. In bankruptcy proceedings, they pass to the assignee; and they may also be levied upon and sold on execution; and they are also made the subject of larceny. It will thus be seen, Mr. President, that money secured by mortgage and solvent debts are rationally enough considered and treated as property in every sense of the word by the statutory law of this State. Strange as it does seem, the only purpose for which they are not considered property is that of taxation. Is this just, or even politic? I think not. And when we take into consideration another fact, which is, that money secured by mortgage (and other liens) and solvent debts, are entitled to and receive the same protection that surrounds other kinds of property, I cannot for the life of me discover how, either in reason or justice, it can be held that these species of property should be exempt from bearing their proportional part of the burden of supporting the government by which they are protected; and that, too, Mr. Chairman, in the plain palpable violation of that provision of our present Constitution, which declares that "taxation shall be equal and uniform."

It is plain, it seems to me, that solvent debts, whether secured or not, are, within the meaning of both the statutory and organic law of the State, and also in the very nature of things, property, and that being property, and as such protected by the law, should be taxed as other property is taxed. And why are they not so taxed? The answer is: Because the Supreme Court has so construed the language of the Constitution as to decide that solvent debts are not property, within the meaning of that instrument. If the language of the Constitution had been so plain and unequivocal as to leave no chance for such a construction, all solvent debts would be taxable to-day. And I submit, Mr. Chairman, that it is the imperative duty of this Convention to frame a Constitution of that kind; one which it will not be possible to misconstrue on this point; a Constitution that declares, in unmistakable terms, that solvent debts, whether secured by mortgage or not, are property, and shall be taxed. But it is argued by some that taxing solvent debts is double taxation. I answer, that while the taxation of solvent debts, as heretofore managed, may have resulted in double taxation in some cases, yet that is not a necessary or inevitable result; in other words, I believe it to be possible to tax solvent debts in such a manner that it will not result in double taxation.

Mr. Chairman, I hold it to be a correct principle that taxation should be so laid that each and every citizen shall bear such part of the public burdens necessary for the maintenance of government, as is proportionate to his property protected by the State. For the purposes of taxation I do not regard growing crops as property distinct from the land, and am opposed to taxing the same. With this qualification, and the exemption authorized by State and National laws, I am decidedly in favor of the equal taxation of all property. This renders necessary such a revision of our revenue laws as will secure an impartial assessment of the value of all property, to the end that large estates as well as small shall be compelled to bear their full and fair proportion of the public expenses. It also renders necessary the taxation of money secured by mortgage, or other liens, and the taxation of all solvent debts. This species of property is tangible in law, and calls for protection which the State insures, at whatever cost, and therefore it is but just and reasonable that it should be equally taxed with other property.

These, Mr. Chairman, briefly stated, are the views and principles involved in this question of taxation, by which I was actuated, before I was elected to a seat in this honorable body; and these are the views and principles which I to-day entertain and advocate for adoption by this Convention. Let these principles be engrafted in the organic law, and invest the legislative branch of the government with the power to provide such legislation as may be necessary to avoid double taxation, and to provide such methods of equalization, and the establishment of such equitable rules and regulations governing assessments, and the classification of property, as experience may prove to be necessary and expedient, and we will have done a much needed act of justice to the people of this commonwealth. Now, sir, one of the principal points involved in the consideration of the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, reduced to the form of a question, is: Should solvent debts, including money secured by mortgage, and other liens, be taxed; and to whom should this species of property be taxed? As already intimated, I unhesitatingly answer that this species of property should be taxed, and in effect to the creditor, or mortgagee, as the case may be. To prove this let us examine the question somewhat critically. It is an axiom in government, that every species of private property should be taxed. And as money is property, in the ordinary acceptation, it follows that the tax should lay hold of this primarily. But, says the mortgagee, there is a stipulation in the mortgage to the effect that the mortgagor shall pay the taxes on the money so secured. Now, Mr. Chairman, this doubtless would satisfy the State, but, sir, is it just? Is it equitable? In the case just mentioned, I contend that the mortgagee has not borne his just proportion of the burden of taxation; he has merely extracted from the unfortunate borrower more interest. In no civilized State should such a monstrous wrong be permitted to exist under the sanction of law; for, sir, it must inevitably lead to consequences of the most serious character. Mr. Chairman, while I am a firm believer in the rights of capital, and would lay no obstruction in the way of its accumulation and its full and free development by all honorable and legitimate means, yet, sir, I am also a sympathizer with those whose necessities have made them borrowers, and I am impressed with the criminal folly evinced by some speakers and writers upon the subject now under consideration, whose prominent, and I may say sole endeavors, have seemingly been put forth with the view of conciliating capital only. There is no good and valid reason why the money of the wealthy usurer should not be taxed primarily, in support of the government which insures him in the protection of his ill-gotten gains. Every other species of property is liable to this inflexible rule, and why solvent debts and money secured by mortgage or other liens should be exempt, I contend has never been clearly demonstrated.

But, Mr. Chairman, one of the most fruitful sources in assisting and forwarding the sophistry of the mortgagee, is the tax on land. Taking what to him is a seeming advantage of this position, he says, "if the land is taxed the mortgage should not be, for it is evidently double taxation." This is his fallacy, and at one bound he leaps to an erroneous conclusion. He assumes double taxation, and with a self-consciousness, which he never forgets, says, "the mortgage should be exempt." Well, sir, for the sake of argument, admitting it to be so, which I deny, who, I ask, should bear the tax? Has not that land been secured to him, the mortgagee, by an instrument in writing, the tenor of which debars all others from trespassing on his rights, to which the Courts yield a specific, complete, and unquestioning deference? And in the event of a failure upon the part of the mortgagor to fulfill his obligation, proceed to foreclose and sell, the expenses of the foreclosure and sale coming out of the mortgaged estate. And for all this protection the mortgagee pays not one cent in taxes.

To confirm this (the creditors' views), the Supreme Court has been invoked, and its decision, in conformity with the Constitution of the State, has been against the taxing of lands and mortgages in this double sense, adroitly ignoring the main issue, which is, "Should solvent debts, including those secured by mortgage, be taxed?" The fallacy becomes instantly apparent when the issues are separated. The question not being as presented for the consideration of the Court, namely, "The taxation of lands and mortgages," but "Should money secured by mortgage not bear its proportion as wealth or property in relation to the taxes?" I concede, sir, that with the question as presented, the Court could not do otherwise; but this decision, far from being an injury, is a staff to lean upon, and a light in the darkness which surrounds the solution of the question now at issue. For in all this, we see no release from paying taxes by the mortgagee; but, upon the contrary, it becomes apparent that he should be taxed directly. The land has not changed its intrinsic character by becoming a collateral security to the mortgagee, as the land is taxed at present to its full cash value, according to the schedule of the Assessor, without deducting the incumbrance for which it becomes security. If, therefore, the land, for State purposes, does not increase or diminish in value, and the incumbrance resting solely with the mortgagor, it clearly follows that the mortgage is an independent issue above and beyond the land, drawing a specific profit to the mortgagee, and as a logical result, should be taxed directly to him. The postulate then is reduced to this form: "Tax mortgages directly to the mortgagee, and cast upon him the burden of taxes thereon."

Mr. Chairman, this question of the taxation of mortgages and solvent debts has again been made the subject of a recent diatribe in a late issue of the Record-Union, a newspaper of undoubted respectability and influence, published in this city; and that paper, to assist it, has called in the services of Professor Sturtevant, a good old Knickerbocker, I believe, but who, doubtless, has an eye to the accumulation of money by the acretion of untaxed mortgages:

"TAXATION OF MORTGAGES.

"Several resolutions have been introduced providing for the taxation of mortgages. These are all propositions looking to the establishment of double taxation, and they should be killed in committee. A provision to the effect that all property shall be taxed does not involve the assumption that any property should be taxed more than once, yet nothing can be clearer than that if mortgages are taxed one piece of property must pay double taxes. The case has been clearly put by Professor Sturtevant in his recent treaties on 'Economics.' He supposes the case of a loan of one hundred thousand dollars in gold, and proceeds: 'The question is certainly a fair one, how the transaction should affect the two parties in respect to their liability to taxation. By the laws of some of the States the Tax Assessor disregards the transaction entirely; he estimates the property of the debtor just as if the debt did not exist, and the property of the creditor as though the gold was still in his hands. It is only necessary thus to state the case to convince any candid mind of the unreasonableness of the law. That item of one hundred thousand dollars is doubled in the assessment, and twice taxed. A State that makes out its tax lists on that principle estimates the property of the people of the State at an amount immensely greater than it is in truth. Such an assessment is a delusion, and a tax levied upon it is a public oppression. It would be easy to show that, if taxes are assessed on this principle, the same property is not only liable, as in the case above given, to be reckoned twice over, but to be repeated any number of times. It is wonderful that any legislator should fail to notice the bald injustice of such a system of taxation.

"The real cause of controversy in this subject is as to who shall pay the tax—the debtor or the creditor. The debtor is anxious to escape the burden. The creditor insists that he ought not to be made to pay for what another is enjoying the use of. The opinion of economists has usually been that it is impossible to prevent the debtor from paying the tax, since the creditor will make it a condition of the loan. Professor Sturtevant, while holding that the creditor ought to pay the tax, since the ultimate disposition of the property rests in him, has the following suggestions: 'If the person in whose name any taxable property stands is required to make an exhibit of his property, he will, of course, for his own protection, make known any indebtedness which can be offset to it. Let him also be required to give the creditor's name and residence. Let the neglect of the creditor to pay the tax work a forfeiture of his claim against the debtor; in which case, the debtor being released from his obligation to pay the debt, shall become liable for the tax. The effect of such a law would doubtless be, that in the original contract for the loan the debtor would agree to pay the tax, as a part of the consideration for the use of the money. In such a case the property of the borrower would be estimated without reference to the debt, and the creditor would be unknown in the assessment, and would simply receive a lower rate of interest on account of his exemption from taxation. This arrangement, so perfectly equitable, between the parties, would secure to the State precisely the amount of revenue to which it was entitled.' We recommend these ideas to the attention of the Convention, and especially to those delegates who think that property can be taxed in more than one place without the perpetration of injustice. The most curious circumstance in this connection is that the men who demand the taxation of mortgages are also the men who oppose the taxation of growing crops."

It will be seen, Mr. Chairman, that the principal argument here presented is the old, frayed, feeble, and battered one, namely: the fear of double taxation. Is it not a little marvelous, sir, that this fear has only haunted the defenders of the innocent and defenseless creditor, while the mortgagor and his friends are never overcome by the same scruples? The one hundred thousand dollars mentioned in the article I have read has only to be invested in a loan on real estate and secured by mortgage, to exempt its holder from the onus of the Assessor and Tax Collector. Is not that the logical sequence of his proposition? To what other conclusion can we arrive? It is clearly apparent in the learned Professor's mind that the one hundred thousand dollars should be taxed, yet his mental strabismus never permits him to see any other party to exempt than the poor defenseless creditor.

But, sir, a little further on, in the article to which I have referred, its author says: "The creditor insists that he ought not to be made to pay for what another is enjoying the use of." Now, I submit to the enlightened judgment of the representatives of the people, whom I now have the honor of addressing, that this is only another phase of the artful sophistry used in shielding the creditor from bearing his just measure of the public burdens. Why, gentlemen, do we not all well know that the creditor class has been clad in a coat of mail, as impenetrable as the hide of a crocodile, and any measure having in view the equalization of taxes has been frowned down, and enveloped in a nebulous obscurity by the sycophantic servility of those who ought to defend the principles of equal taxation.

The proposition I have just quoted, to wit: "The creditor insists that he ought not to be made to pay for what another is enjoying the use of." is, as applied, altogether illogical, since, as here invoked, it can be made equally applicable to any other transaction in business, and with as equal a regard for correct reasoning as in the present case. For, when in any case property is purchased on credit, it can be said, with equal justice, that the purchaser enjoys the property of another; and, as a consequence, if the reasoning of the proposition just cited is good, the seller should be exempt from taxation. Mr. Chairman, the mere statement of the proposition prostrates itself, and its fallacy grows thinner the more it is watered.

But, Mr. Chairman, it is a common and prominent objection frequently urged against the foregoing plan of distributing the burdens of taxation, that as a resultant, the revenues of the government necessary for its support, and which must of necessity be derived from taxation on property, will be measurably if not fatally impaired; that they will be so impaired, on account, as it is said, of granting to the debtor classes a credit or rebate of the sum of their debts from the total value of their mortgaged properties and charging the sum of such rebate over to the creditor or mortgage classes, for the purposes of taxation; that in effect this works as against the government a surrender of its lien on property as a security for the prompt payment of the taxes levied thereon, and accepts, in exchange, only the personal responsibility therefor of the creditor classes, who, by reason of non-residence or other causes, may be beyond reach of the Tax Collector, or even if within reach, may be practically irresponsible. And it is also urged by some that in this way it would most likely happen that only the excess in value of the aggregate property within the State over and above the aggregate sum of all indebtedness due from all the taxpayers in the State, would be subjected to the burdens of taxation, instead of all private property within the State, and that in this way taxation would become unequal, and, for that reason, manifestly unjust.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in answering these objections, which I claim are not well taken, it may safely be admitted that the results predicted would likely follow, if, indeed, the plan I suggest for the adoption of this Convention really involves the release of any portion of the private property within the State from its just proportion of the common burdens of taxation. And it may be further conceded, that all property, as well as the owners thereof, are justly held liable and responsible to the government for the taxes which are properly collectible for the maintenance of the government, for the very good and sufficient reason, sir, that the protection and maintenance of the rights of all property, both public and private, within the State, are among the most responsible and onerous duties of the government, for the support of which taxes are levied and collected. And if it be further queried, How all property can be held chargeable for taxes assessed upon it, and at the same time the State collect from the creditor classes their just proportion of taxes due from them, on account of their interests by way of mortgage and other liens on the property held by the debtor classes, to secure the payment of debts due from the latter to the former? I answer that this result may be accomplished in this wise: While all private property and the respective owners thereof (which include all mortgaged properties, and both the debtor and creditor classes), are to be respectively held liable and responsible for the just payment of all taxes levied and assessed on all property; and, as the government must needs have primary recourse to the taxed property for the prompt payment of the taxes, it will therefore result that the debtor class will primarily be compelled to pay all taxes chargeable on the properties held by them, notwithstanding such properties may be covered by mortgage or other liens belonging to the creditor classes, who are justly chargeable with such proportion of the taxes so chargeable to, and we will suppose actually collected, from the debtor classes, corresponding with the relative values of such credits and the properties on which their payment is secured. Yet, the plan I advocate contemplates that the payments of taxes so made by the debtor class, which is in reality made for the creditor classes, and on account of their interest in the property covered by the mortgage and other liens held by them, shall, by an inflexible law, to be imbedded in the State Constitution itself, be treated and held by all Courts as an absolute payment, pro tanto, of the debts secured on the property on account of which the tax payment is so made. In this way the tax burden is with absolute certainty thrown back on the creditor classes, where, as I think, it has been demonstrated, it rightfully belongs, and the debtor classes are effectually relieved of its burden.

Mr. Chairman, it will be observed that by section five of the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, it has been attempted to present in detail a plan for the consummation of the results above set forth; and while the section, considered structurally, may be open to just criticism on the score of incertitude and inadequacy, yet these defects, if they exist, may be readily remedied by appropriate amendment, and the section be rendered apt and sufficient for the designated purpose.

Mr. Chairman, I now come to the consideration of the mode in which the burdens of taxation on solvent debts, other than those secured by mortgage and other liens on property, should be distributed to the proper parties who should be made to bear them. And here, Mr. Chairman, it must be distinctly borne in mind, that every reason that has been, or that can be, urged in favor of taxing debts secured by mortgage to the mortgagees, and of relieving the mortgagor of this burden on his incumbered property to the extent of the actual value of the credit so secured on his property, applies, with equal force, in favor of making the creditor class chargeable, and of relieving the debtor class of the burdens of taxation in respect to all solvent debts not secured by mortgage. To my mind it is clear that in effect the same rule of liability and exemption may rightfully be applied to both classes of debts. If solvent, the debt is equally a burden to the debtor class, whether it is or is not secured by mortgage; and it is equally valuable as property, and equally within the recognition and protection of the law, and with equal right should be made the subject of a tax burden to the creditor class. And with all due respect for an honest difference of opinion, this proposition seems too clear to require further elaboration.

Now, Mr. Chairman, having submitted the proposition that solvent debts, whether secured or not, should be made the subject of a tax burden to the creditor class, it remains therefore only to delineate, or point out, a feasible plan for securing this result. And, sir, in treating this particular class of debts for the purposes of taxation, it must be constantly borne in mind that the fact of solvency of the debt is the all important factor; that is to say, there must be the concurrence in fact, first, of the legal obligation on the part of the debtor to pay, and the right of the creditor to receive the sum of money represented by such debts; and second, the assurance in fact of the faithful discharge of the obligation by the debtor, and the realization in due time of the reciprocal right of the creditor to receive the payment. With such concurrence of fact the debt is solvent, and as I have shown, should be taxed to the creditor, and the debtor should be correspondingly relieved of the burden of taxation, but not otherwise.

Now, in the very nature of things, since the assurance of payment cannot be practically guaranteed (as in the case of debts secured by mortgage or other liens), there can be but one way of rendering practically certain the fact of solvency of such unsecured debt, and that is by its payment as an accomplished fact. By payment only then can the fact of solvency of the unsecured debt paid be conclusively established, so as to create correlatively the obligation of the creditor to pay the tax on the debt, during the period of its existence, and the right of the debtor to be relieved correspondingly of the burden of such taxation.

But, Mr. Chairman, as I have already shown, as I think conclusively, while treating of debts secured by mortgage, that it is necessary to hold all properties and their owners primarily liable to the government for the taxes chargeable to such properties, it logically follows here, as there, that the integrity of the public revenues for the support of the government, equally requires that all property belonging to the debtor, the existence of his unsecured but solvent debt, which is involved in and represented pro tanto therein, notwithstanding, must be made primarily chargeable in his hands, and collected from him. In other words, Mr. Chairman, the debtor must promptly and faithfully pay all taxes chargeable on all his property, precisely the same as if he were absolutely free of the debt; and yet, in fulfilling this obligation, he (the debtor) has, in fact, as we have already seen, really paid to the government the taxes which, in part (if the debt be solvent), is rightfully chargeable to his creditors. But, because this be so, is the debtor remediless? I answer, no! The remedy is both absolutely certain and adequate for his relief, and is entirely feasible in any and every case that can be suggested. Let it be borne in mind what the needed remedy really is, to wit: to require and secure from the creditor, the payment to the government (or rather the repayment to the debtor) of the sums of money which the debtor has been compelled, from the necessity of the case, to pay for the creditor, and, on his account, to the government, in the shape of taxes on his (the debtor's) property, in which, however, the creditor had, in effect, an interest during the period of the existence of the unsecured debt (the solvency of which has been conclusively demonstrated by the fact of its payment to the extent of the sum of the debt so actually paid). Now, in every such case, the law, which I suggest should be made at once permanent and certain, by being engrafted in the Constitution, should be so framed as to guarantee to such debtor, at the time of making such payment, a credit thereon, as of the date or dates of his tax payments, and in a sum equal to the sum of such tax payments, on such proportion of his property so taxed, equal in value to the sum of his unsecured solvent debt. And thus the debtor will, by reason of such credit, be effectually reimbursed for all payments he has been compelled to make for the creditor, and by the same act the creditor will have been made at once to assume and fulfill his obligation to pay the taxes on his solvent credits. I think it safe to say that by this plan the government will be secured in the prompt and faithful payment of the taxes on property necessary for its support, and the debtor and creditor classes will have been respectively compelled only to pay the just proportion due from each of them of the sum of the taxes paid—that is to say, the debtor will have, in effect, only paid taxes on his property less the sum of his solvent debts, and the creditor will, in effect, have paid the taxes due on his solvent credits, during the whole period of its existence as such.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as practical conclusions of the argument which I have presented, and which seems to me to be capable of practical use in framing that part of the Constitution dealing with the subject of taxation, I submit: that solvent debts, including those secured by mortgage, should be assessed to the respective owners and holders thereof: that the making of contracts on the part of one person to pay the taxes assessed to another should be prohibited by law; and that the lender be also prohibited from raising the rate of interest on account of the tax on the mortgage or other solvent debt. Devolve in the manner I have delineated the duty of paying the taxes on debts secured by mortgage and other liens on property upon the owners and holders thereof, and at the same time relieve the debtor class or mortgagors of the burden, to the extent of the just value of such secured debts. Invest the Legislature with power to provide by law, from time to time, as experience may show to be necessary, to prevent the lender from taking an unjust advantage of the necessities of the borrower on account of such taxation.

With these provisions embraced in the law governing the subject of taxation, in my humble judgment, the way would then be opened to the taxing of all property once and no property twice, and in making the proper parties pay the taxes.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, in the amendment which I have submitted, and which has been read at the Clerk's desk, I have endeavored to embody and reflect the principles which I have advocated in my remarks addressed to the committee, and believing them practical and expressive of sound governmental science, I ask a favorable consideration for them by the committee.

MR. EDGERTON. If I understand the amendment, it is a sort of an anomalous provision, carrying the provisions of several sections, covering mortgages, solvent debts, etc. Of course, if this is adopted, section five will be no longer needed.

MR. HUESTIS. It does, in effect, cover what is embraced in sections two and five, and, as a matter of course, section five will no longer exist.

MR. EDGERTON. I think now it is better to keep these sections separate and distinct. It would complicate matters to adopt such an extremely long amendment as this, involving so much matter. We would undoubtedly run against a great many snags before we got through. I would not want to take that amendment without a good deal of examination.

MR. SHOEMAKER. I move the committee rise.

Lost; ayes 17.

REMARKS OF MR. BELCHER.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: I would like to have the Clerk read over the amendment again.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 2. All property in this State, including franchises, capital stock of corporations or joint stock associations, and solvent debts, excepting growing crops, private property exempt from taxation under the laws of the United States, public property belonging to the United States or to this State, or any county, city and county, city, or municipality thereof, and including all property real and personal belonging to and devoted to public use in all public school districts and departments in the State, shall be taxed in proportion to its cash value, to be ascertained as directed by law. A mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation by which a debt is recovered, shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby, except as to railroads and other quasi-public corporations; in case of debts so secured, the value of the property affected by such mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or obligation, less the value of such security, shall be assessed and taxed to the owner of the property, and the value of such security shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof in the county, or city and county, in which the property affected thereby is situate. The taxes so levied shall be a lien upon the property and security respectively, and may be paid by either party, or his successor, to such security; if paid by the owner of security or his successor, the tax so levied upon the property affected thereby shall become a part of the debt so secured; if the owner of the property or his successor shall pay the tax so levied on such security, it shall constitute a payment thereon, and to the extent of such payment a full discharge thereof. And in respect to all other solvent debts there shall be no reduction made, as herein provided, from the full cash value of all property of the debtor or debtors owing the same, on account of such debt or debts; but he or they shall, on the payment thereof, be entitled to retain therefrom a sum with interest thereon at the same rate borne by said indebtedness, to be computed from the time or times of the tax payments, which shall equal the amount of taxes which may have been paid by such debtor or debtors during the existence of such indebtedness upon property of like amount in value of said indebtedness; provided, if any indebtedness shall be paid by any such debtor or debtors after assessment and before the tax levy, the amount of such levy for the year may likewise be retained by him, and shall be computed according to the tax levy for the preceding year."

MR. BELCHER. I see no particular objections to the form in which it is brought in, though the Chairman says the committee thought it would be better to divide the two sections. As I heard it read, it seems to me not improper to embrace the matter in one section. Now, there is no doubt but there has been and is a widespread dissatisfaction upon this subject of taxation, and it is probably the most important question that is to be passed upon by this Convention, in the view of the people of this State. For many years the Legislature has acted upon the subject, sometimes making solvent debts taxable, and sometimes not; sometimes declaring that all property should be assessed, and sometimes exempting some property from taxation. These questions were taken before the Supreme Court, and there were various conflicting decisions; and, up to a recent period, the decisions were to the effect that solvent debts were property, and subject to taxation. In the case referred to in the fortieth California, it was decided by the Court that debts and credits are property, and subject to taxation. Since that it has been decided, in the case reported in the fifty-first California, that debts are not property, in the sense of the Constitution, and therefore not subject to taxation. Debts are property in the ordinary sense; there can be no doubt about that. A man holds a mortgage, secured by valuable property, for ten thousand dollars. We would ordinarily say he is worth ten thousand dollars, because he can get that for it. That is the value of the mortgage. Now, it does seem to me, sir, that it is right to tax the man who owns the debt. The trouble has not been so much, is not so much, that you are taxing debts, but it is that you are taxing the man for more than he is worth. Go around the State, and you will find men in debt, and you are assessing them all for more than they are worth. That is not right. The true theory should be that men should pay taxes on what they are worth, and no more. But go out among the farms and you will find the farmer farming one hundred and sixty acres of land, with a mortgage on it, and he, up to the time of this decision of the Supreme Court, was not only paying taxes upon the land, but when he gives a mortgage he is obliged to pay taxes on that, too. If the mortgage was worth half the land, he must pay taxes on three times what it is worth—twice upon the value of the land, and then upon the mortgage. Now, that is all wrong. It was burdensome. The Supreme Court came to his relief, and said he need not pay on the mortgage; and now you go out and find a farmer with a piece of land worth ten thousand dollars, mortgaged for five thousand dollars, paying taxes on the full amount, when he is only worth five thousand. He is assessed upon twice as much as he is worth. Now, there is something wrong about that system; hence this widespread dissatisfaction. Now, I do not believe, because a man has a farm worth ten thousand dollars, and mortgaged for five thousand, that there is fifteen thousand dollars' worth of property. There is only ten thousand dollars' worth of property. The mortgagor and the mortgagee have, between them, and both should contribute equally towards the support of the government. That is all there is of it. They are equally interested, and should both pay. At present the farmer must pay the taxes.

Now, I say, as gentlemen have said here before, that it is not right that the farmer, who has property really worth but five thousand dollars, should be required to pay taxes on fifteen thousand. The committee say the property itself must be taxed. All property must be taxed if it is visible. There must be some means of raising revenue, and you must assess the property. Having assessed the property at ten thousand dollars, the farm stands good for it; the owner of it may pay, or the man who holds the mortgage may pay; somebody must pay the taxes upon the farm, but when the taxes are paid the burden should be divided between the lender and the borrower—the owner of the money should pay his part, and the owner of the property should pay his part. I believe in this report in that respect. I believe it is an effort to overcome a wrong. The question arises farther, whether you can carry out the same system with regard to other solvent debts. Now, there has been a statute in this State that solvent debts might be offset against credits, where there was no mortgage; that is when the Assessor comes to a man he is permitted to offset the debts owing by him against those owing to him. The committee propose to carry that idea out here to that extent. But the latter part of this amendment proposes to carry it still farther, and provides that in all cases when a man pays taxes he shall be assessed upon all that is due him—upon his credits. Then, when he has paid, he ought to be permitted to deduct the amount he owes his creditors, so that his creditors will be taxed upon the same basis. This is right in theory. The man who loans money should pay taxes upon it. That is the correct theory. There will, probably, be a difficulty about putting any theory into practice—a great many difficulties. Some kinds of property is exposed; the Assessor can find it when he comes around; other property can be concealed, hidden out of sight. Property can be hidden, and it is often done. When a man is honest, and the Assessor comes and asks him what he is worth, he tells him honestly. Unfortunately there are many who are not so honest, and who do not hesitate to make false statements as to their property, though they are under oath. Now, you can never make taxation equal and uniform in fact, but you must work towards it in theory, and make it as nearly so as possible—the theory must be right. We must make the theory right, and work up to it as far as may be. I think the theory is right when you say that everything shall be taxed that can be found. Debts are property, horses and cattle are property, and land is property. Land is assessed for what it is worth. If there is a mortgage on it, let the tax be divided between the owners in fact; do not make the apparent owner pay all the taxes, but make both pay according to the interest they have.

I see some objections to a part of this section. All property is to be assessed. Here is a corporation, say a woolen mill. We have a woolen mill up here. It has a large body of stock—made up goods—on hand. All property must be assessed, and that must be assessed at its value. Now, if I own ten thousand dollars worth of stock in that corporation the Assessor must assess my stock at its value. The capital stock must be assessed to me—my share of it.

MR. EDGERTON. Has not the Supreme Court said that that was not legal?

MR. BELCHER. You could not do it before. But now you say that all property shall be assessed, including the capital stock of corporations. Now all the property of a corporation must be taxed. You tax a railroad with its track running over the State. You tax their improvements; tax the land; tax the cars, machines; tax everything that is visible. Then you must assess, according to this, its capital stock, that certain persons own. I do not believe it is right to assess both. After all, it is the property you want to get at. I don't know but it would be fair with a certain class of mining corporations which have no property. This may be a hit at them, where their stock is worth money, and they have no property. To that I have no objection. But I object to double taxation in any form. Assess everybody once; assess all property once: and once only. I believe a man should be assessed for what he is worth, and no more. Every man should bear his just portion of the burdens of government. When that is done there can be no just cause of complaint. The people are unjustly burdened, and we are sent here to equalize these burdens. We must make the burden to bear upon all alike. Let us make every man pay upon what he is worth. Let us make the burden as near uniform as possible.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHINESE.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. Mr. President: I send up a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

WHEREAS, Senator Grover has introduced a bill in the Senate of the United States for the express purpose of preventing any Chinese or Mongolian from drawing out of the treasury of the United States, either directly or indirectly, any of the people's money, in accordance with the express wishes of the people of the Pacific Coast; and whereas, the people of the State of California do unanimously indorse the above named bill as introduced by Senator Grover; therefore, be it

Resolved by the People of the State of California, through their representatives in Constitutional Convention assembled, That it is contrary to the wishes of the people of this State that any Chinaman or Mongolian should, either directly or indirectly, receive for labor any of the people's money. Second—That it is contrary to the wishes of the people that any of the people's money should be paid for any manufactured articles or goods in which any Chinaman or Mongolian is employed in the manufacture of, either directly or indirectly. Third—That the Board of Directors, Commissioners, and all other officers in this State, who have contracts to work on behalf of the State, should insert in their advertisements for proposals, and in their specifications, a provision setting forth that no proposal will be received or considered for any Chinese or Mongolian labor, or for any manufactured article in which any Chinese or Mongolian labor is either directly or indirectly employed in the production of. Fourth—That the Secretary of this Convention is hereby instructed to send a copy of these resolutions to all the constitutional officers of this State, and to all Boards of Directors and Commissioners that have charge of institutions of the State that are supported by the people's money.

MR. STUART. I move that it be laid on the table.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman from San Francisco is on the floor.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. Sir, some of the officials, before their election, went so far as to say that the Chinese immigration must be stopped, even if they had to destroy the steamers that brought them here. I hope the Legislature will pass a law that will apply to the whole State, forbidding the employment of Chinese on public work, so that some officials cannot make the excuse that they do now. We should say to these servants of the people: "When advertising for proposals, insert a provision that no Chinaman shall be directly or indirectly employed." What chance have the people to get rid of these Chinamen when those who are bound to serve the people do all in their power, notwithstanding their pledges, to help them here? I find that contracts have been awarded to furnish cloth to the State Prison to men who employed Chinese labor. In San Francisco they have employed Chinese in defiance of law. It is time this was stopped, and that these servants should obey the will of the people. I hope the resolutions will be adopted.

MR. STUART. I move that the resolutions be laid on the table.

The question was put, and resulted in a vote of 38 ayes to 37 noes.

THE PRESIDENT. No quorum voting. There is evidently a quorum in the house. Gentlemen will please vote one way or the other.

The question was again put and the motion lost, on a division, by a vote of 42 ayes to 45 noes.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. President: I move to refer the resolutions to the Committee on Chinese.

The motion prevailed.

REVENUE AND TAXATION.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section two, and the amendments thereto, are before the committee.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I understand that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, Mr. Huestis, is before the committee. Since the adjournment I have examined it more carefully. It is open to several serious objections. In the first place, it provides that solvent debts shall be taxed in proportion to their cash value, to be ascertained as directed by law. And in the last clause of the amendment, following that—I ought to premise by saying that it adopts section five of the report of the committee, which provides that in case of a mortgage, or lien upon property, that the interest of the mortgage, or the value of the lien, shall be treated as an interest in the property affected by it; that the property affected by the mortgage or lien shall be assessed and taxed to the value of the property, less the value of the security. The value of the security shall be assessed and taxed to the owner, though either party may pay the tax. If the mortgagee pays it, it is to be added to the debt, and the property is to be held as security. If the mortgagor pays it, he is to have, to the extent of the amount paid, a discharge of the obligation of the debt for which it is a security. Now, this section, after providing that solvent debts shall be taxed according to their cash value, provides: "And in respect to all other solvent debts, there shall be no reduction made, as herein provided, from the full cash value of all property of the debtor or debtors owing the same, on account of such debt or debts; but he or they shall, on payment thereof, be entitled to retain therefrom a sum, with interest thereon at the same rate borne by said indebtedness, to be computed from the time or times of the tax payments, which shall equal the amount of taxes which may have been paid by such debtor or debtors during the existence of such indebtedness, upon property of like amount in value of said indebtedness; provided, if any indebtedness shall be paid by any such debtor or debtors after assessment and before the tax levy, the amount of such levy, for that year, may likewise be retained by him or them, and shall be computed according to the tax levy for the preceding year."

That provision, as I understand it, is the same as offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Hale—the amendment of Mr. Boggs, of Lake County. The objection I make to this part of the proposal of the gentleman from Humboldt is that in the first place the debt shall be assessed and taxed to the owner of the debt, so that the owner of the debt has to pay the tax to the government; and in addition to that it provides that the debtor shall pay the tax on his property, and he shall so be entitled to an offset for the amount that he pays upon the property equal to the amount of his debt. That is substantially double taxation. Further it provides—there is a little confusion growing out of the arrangement of the first part of the section. In the first place there is an enumeration of property, which shall be subject to taxation, then follows the exceptions, and then comes another enumeration. That is to say, "all property in this State, including franchises, capital stock of corporations, or joint stock associations, and solvent debts, excepting growing crops, private property exempt from taxation under the laws of the United States, public property belonging to the United States or to this State, or any county, city and county, city, or municipality thereof, and including all property, real and personal, belonging to and devoted to public use, and all public school districts and departments in this State." Now, I suppose of course it was the intention of the author of the proposition to express this idea: that all property devoted to public use, that is for school purposes, should be exempt. Is that the idea? But it might include the property of a railroad, a quasi-public corporation. It seems to me that this amendment is no improvement. It is nothing but an omnibus section embracing sections two and five of the report of the committee, and the amendment of the gentleman from Lake, Mr. Boggs, is open to the objection which I make to it, on account of the double burden upon the owner of the debt. I think that the amendment should be voted down, and that we should consider these propositions separately.

REMARKS OF MR. GREGG.

MR. GREGG. Mr. President: Many members of the Convention, it seems to me, are in favor of taxing solvent debts and mortgages, upon the theory that it is property escaping taxation. If I understand the theory of taxation, it is to take property wherever it is found, and the question of who owns it or who should pay the tax should be a matter of indifference to the State. If a piece of land worth twenty thousand dollars is taxed and the State receives the money, then it becomes a matter of private business who pays the tax. It makes no difference whether the man who owns it pays the tax, if he chooses to make a contract with the mortgagee to that effect. Now, this system, this idea that men are taxed, I think, is a mistake. It is property that is taxed. If you do not find an owner for it, you tax it to an unknown owner. If it is personal property, you proceed in rem. and sell the property for the taxes. But the idea is, all the time, that the property pays the tax; it makes no difference whether it belongs to John Jones or to John Smith. When it comes to taxing property that is mortgaged, a man may pay the tax, and when he comes to settle with his creditors, it may be by a bargain between them that that shall be deducted from the debt; but that has nothing to do with a system of taxation, as I understand it. I think it is a mistaken theory, as soon as you show that it is a matter of individual personal taxation, which it is not.

Now the statement made by Judge Belcher is true if you take the matter in the abstract, but it is not the purpose of the State to hunt up persons. It may go through twenty hands, and still the State simply looks to the property for the taxes. Who shall pay them? Why, the man who owns the property, if he desires to preserve it. It makes no difference to the people, to the State, or the county. The county sells the property, because it is the property that is liable for the taxes. Every time that we lose sight of property and proceed upon individuals we open the door for fraud. Suppose you adopt this plan, what have you done? You have simply interferred with private business. You say that a man must pay it, and yet all you have done in the world is to leave the subject to men's honor. That is, the man pays it in the first instance, and you can take it back or leave it alone, if you desire it. It is utterly impossible to tax mortgage securities without making a limitation upon interest. If you tax mortgage security and tax the man, then you must limit the rate of interest before you can escape double taxation, because the loaner always has control and will not loan his money without interest sufficient to pay him, and without receiving the compensation that he can receive in any other market for his gold. The result is that the borrower must pay an interest sufficient to pay the taxes, and you only make your system of taxation more difficult without any good result. I think that we should proceed to tax all property as you do to-day. The Assessor comes and asks you if you have any property, and it is property that is supposed to be taxed. And now, because there happens to be a hue and cry, men must turn round and say that it is not property that should be taxed, but men alone must be taxed. It becomes a question of mixing up the collection of taxes. I am not in favor of the section as reported by the committee, for the reasons I have stated, that I think property simply—real, tangible property—should be subject to taxation. If the Convention will excuse me, I will again allude to the horse. If A owns a horse and B owns nothing, and A sells the horse to B for three hundred dollars and takes his note, there is no property created. If B sells the horse to C for three hundred dollars and takes his note for him, there is no property created; but under this system there would be six hundred dollars of solvent debts to be taxed, and yet no property created. There is only the same amount of property, and that is the horse.

MR. CROSS. Haven't you created a value?

MR. GREGG. You have created a chance of receiving something in the future; just as you may have a crop next year, or your wife may have a baby next year. There is another objection to the report of the committee. "All property, including franchises, capital stock of corporations," etc. Now, the capital stock of corporations in some form, certainly, should be taxed, or franchises should be taxed. I am satisfied that corporations owning franchises of great profit should be taxed. The Spring Valley franchise should be taxed. But when you tax the capital stock of corporations you turn the greater portion of the tax into the treasury of the City and County of San Francisco, because nearly all of the capital stock is owned there. Franchises include capital stock, and if you tax one you should not tax the other. Then, again, when you tax the franchise and capital stock of corporations you are endangering the mining interests of the State. Mr. McCoy lives in a mining locality. He is perfectly willing that the Assessors should come to his mine, and taking into consideration the profits of it, assess it at its value. That mine has a tangible value. It is assessed at twenty, or thirty, or forty, or one hundred and fifty thousand dollars, because it has proven itself of that value. If it is declining in value that is always considered by Assessors. Men understand it in giving in their property, and consider their value in accordance with their circumstances. But if you tax it as a corporation, the capital stock, the mine, and property that is situated in that county, escapes the tax. If you tax the franchise then there is no means of estimating its value. You have got to proceed all the time as if the property had an actual value. The franchises of gas companies, water companies, etc., should be taxed in proportion to their value, but when we include everything under the head of franchises, it is too broad and too general, and it is interfering with the mining interest of the State. Now, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, Mr. Huestis. It provides, for instance, for the taxation of the mortgage, and it provides that if the mortgagee pay it it increases his credit to the amount of the tax paid. I believe that this question should be left as much as possible with the Legislature. Every limitation we have within the Constitution is subject to a construction by the Courts, and must necessarily be so, because it is supposed that the Constitution means what it says.

The amendment of Mr. Hale is simply a hocus pocus; that is all. It means nothing. It is simply words without sense, so far as the Constitution is concerned. What is the use of saying that a man should have a credit when the tax is paid. It is a simple contract between men, and this hocus pocus business should not be left to stand. It means nothing to say that when I do a piece of business with the gentleman on my right, and then pay taxes, in the future that I shall be entitled to a credit on the debt. Why, if I desired that when I made the bargain I could say so.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's fifteen minutes has expired.

MR. GREGG. I did not expect to speak fifteen minutes, and I have but little more to say. I will admit that the cry is that the rich are growing richer, and poor poorer, and that there is a demand for a change in the system of taxation, but whatever the cry is we should proceed philosophically and calmly in such matters as this. Now, many men tell me that the people desire that solvent debts and mortgaged securities should be taxed; that may be; they may know the result before they see it, but I cannot tell. I know that in conversation with a large number of men in the locality from which I come, they agree substantially with me. The complaint is now, in the section from which I come, more among men of small property, that money is too difficult to get. A man must make ditches; that requires money. When he goes to borrow money he discovers that, even now, it is difficult for him to get it. He has to pay large interest, almost more than he can bear. He wants it in small amount, money loaners charge him a higher rate of interest, because they do not like the trouble of putting it out in small amounts. When we put a tax upon solvent debts and mortgaged securities you simply increase his burden. The minute that you levy your tax you have increased the burden of the borrower. And who is your borrower? The poor man, who wishes to make an improvement or put in his crops. These men say, it makes no difference to us, we have to pay it anyway. If we escape it by hocus pocus, we pay it directly to the men who loan us the money. It was but a very few days ago, when I was at home, that I talked with business men, and farmers, men who knew what they were talking about, and it is the universal sentiment of men who have examined this question that you are only making your system of taxation more difficult. Tax the property where you find it. Let the mortgagor and mortgagee make their own contracts. This amendment says that growing crops shall not be taxed. I claim that as soon as a man plows his land there is an improvement there that has value. As quick as he sows his land, there is an improvement there that is value. I believe that is a part of the land, and should be taxed, not as a growing crop subject to taxation, but simply as an improvement, and nothing more. If you say that growing crops shall not be taxed, there is not an Assessor in the State of California but what will go and make a deduction. For instance, a man has a piece of land worth ten dollars an acre, upon which a crop is growing which will bring him in the future thirty dollars or forty dollars an acre; the Assessor comes and sees it and says: "That is worth twenty dollars an acre." "True," says the owner, "but the Constitution says that growing crops shall not be taxed." And then the Assessor takes the value from it, and leaves it assessed just like the outside land. Then we have, in my section of the country, acres of alfalfa—one man has about four thousand acres—that will grow several crops of pasture, and is capable of sustaining thousands of cattle—that is a growing crop. The Assessor comes and says it shall be taxed according to its value.

MR. LARUE. Is it not assessed higher because it——

MR. GREGG. The land immediately adjoining will produce alfalfa, but does not have any growing upon it. Why not say that the growing crops should be considered as an improvement, and when they come in that form should be subject to taxation? I consider growing crops an absolute improvement, because you must improve your land. Every ditch you make is an improvement; you build a house or barn, and it is an improvement, and I hold that growing crops should be considered as improvements, only for the purposes of taxation.

REMARKS OF MR. BIGGS.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I do not propose to take up the time of this Convention, but when I see a man get up here and make statements, when I know he is better informed, I propose to note a few of his remarks. In the first place, if I had a boy that was twelve years old, that did not know that a mortgage was not good unless it was recorded, I would spank him and send him back to school again. I do not presume that my friend intended any disrespect to the intelligence of this Convention; but for a gentleman, a member of the bar, of fine legal attainments, to get up here and make such statements, is ridiculous and preposterous. Every gentleman here knows that a mortgage has to be recorded before it is good.

MR. ROLFE. You are mistaken, Mr. Biggs.

MR. BIGGS. Hasn't it got to be recorded in the county?

MR. EDGERTON. No.

MR. BIGGS. They want these mortgages to go scot free from taxation. There is the whole thing in a nutshell. They make a hue and cry about land. It is not land they want to tax. I ask any man here, did you ever know a piece of personal property taxed to an unknown owner? If you did, you might go and tax all the sheep that run in the mountains. You might travel around and find the same band of stock in different places, and assess it to unknown owners. The gentleman claims to be opposed to taxing growing crops, but is in favor of having them taxed as improvements, which is the very same thing. He is not consistent there. You have your note secured by mortgage; it is bearing interest; it is productive; it produces a certain interest; yet you do not tax that. Here is my friend, Colonel Reed, he don't know whether he will get one bushel to the acre, or twenty bushels, or thirty bushels. He cannot tell anything about the harvest. Three years ago, when growing crops were assessed, the Assessor came along and assessed my crop. He found grain in store and assessed that. The gentleman states that in some counties they assess the land just the same, whether there is alfalfa growing upon it or not. I tell you if that is the case the Assessor is not doing his duty. It is a well known and established fact, that alfalfa is worth from fifty dollars to one hundred dollars per acre. There is very little good alfalfa land in this State. I want to see these mortgages taxed, and every evidence of indebtedness taxed, and let a man pay on just what he is worth, and no more. But gentlemen say that the people are opposed to taxing mortgages. I say that it was one of the first planks in the platform in the northern part of the State.

MR. STUART. Does the farmer pay a tax on gathered crops?

MR. BIGGS. Yes, sir. I pay on every bushel that I hold over. Yes, sir; and I have got my barley two years on hand.

MR. STUART. Suppose you sell the wheat?

MR. BIGGS. I pay taxes on my grain, on my hogs, on my beehives, and everything; and you money loaners go with your hundreds of thousands of dollars in bonds, and do not pay one simple cent of taxes to support the government. You will tax the little lambs almost before they can bleat. I hope this Convention will tax mortgages and solvent debts, and I want to see gentlemen placed upon the record. I want to see my friend Larkin on the record; and let the State know whether the Convention is in favor of taxing mortgages or not. Be consistent, gentlemen. All I ask is this: let me pay in proportion to my neighbor. I have a little alfalfa, and that land is assessed twice as high as the land I sow in wheat; and if there is a farmer here that has a good piece of alfalfa land and it is not assessed three times as high, I am very much fooled. Land is all graded by the Assessor, first, second, and third quality. Tax your growing crops as part and parcel of the realty just the same as any improvement, but for God's sake don't go and tax them separate. Members say that if you tax the mortgage, the borrowers will have to pay a higher rate of interest. We will attend to that. I want a man who takes a mortgage to pay his pro rata share of taxes.

REMARKS OF MR. EAGON.

MR. EAGON. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say a few words upon this question, and I will state, sir, that if it were not for the proposition now before this body, none of us would be occupying seats upon this floor. This was the only question that was advocated in the calling of this Convention, and it seems to me that the will of the people in this regard should be respected by the members of this Convention. Now, in the argument, it seems to me that the gentlemen have overlooked a very large class of the community; that there are only two classes—that is, the borrower and the lender. I contend that there is another class that requires the consideration of this Convention, equally with those classes, if not still more so, and that is the well-to-do farmer, the man who is neither a borrower nor a lender; one, sir, who is adding to the prosperity and the material wealth of the State. These men should be taken into consideration, as well as those who are borrowing money every day. Now, let me take occasion here to say that there is not so large a portion of the community that are borrowing money as gentlemen upon this floor would have us believe. There is not so great a number loaning money as gentlemen upon this floor would have us believe. However, let that be the case. We are not here for the purpose of legislating or acting in this Convention for any particular class of this community. We are here for the purpose of doing the greatest good to the greatest number. Now, sir, if a man has to borrow money, is it right that my friend Hitchcock, or Mr. Boggs, or Mr. McConnell, who are not borrowing money, should pay taxes to make up the taxes that would be necessary to allow him to borrow money cheap? No man could come before the people of this State and ask them to place in their Constitution anything that would allow men to borrow cheap money to the detriment of those who are not borrowing money. We have to make up so much taxes every year, and every man should pay taxes on what he owns. This thing of taxing mortgages is what the people of this State require. It is nothing but right and just. There will, in any law that we may pass, be a little injustice to some individuals. There will be a little double taxation in any way that we may manage it. In taxing mortgages and evidences of indebtedness, I am free to admit that there will be a little double taxation; but it is impossible to escape this, and if taxed, we would get more property tax, and would get it on a basis that is more just; and while taxation should be uniform and equal, it should be just. There is nothing wrong in taxing mortgages. It is the very best way we can get at it. It cuts the rate of taxation down. Now, this idea of exempting from real estate the mortgage, will raise the rate of taxation. That is what has been the trouble. It is because property has not been taxed equal and uniform, and because all the property has not been taxed. We want to get a larger assessment roll. We want to do it honestly and honorably. The larger the assessment roll, the lower the rate of taxation. So far as this borrowing class is concerned, let me state this: they say that when a poor man goes to borrow money, that they will exact the tax upon the mortgage. That is not the case. If the man chooses to allow them to do so, they might do it; but money, like every other commodity, is governed by the law of supply and demand. If money is plenty, interest will be low, and if it is scarce, interest will be high, and that is all you can make out of this; because, if a man has money on hand he is not going to keep it on hand and pay taxes on it. That is all a cry got up by the money lender, and nobody else. Money will come to this State from other sources, if those who have it here now will not loan it, because there is no better place in the world for the investment of money. It would come here by millions, if every dollar that we have to-day was taken out. There is capital now anxious for investment at a lower rate of interest than we have at present. But we are not legislating for the borrower or the lender. If we would legislate for the borrower, why not for the lender? The fact is, this borrowing class is not half so large as gentlemen would have us believe.

I say that we are here only upon this proposition. We must get up something in this Constitution that will suit the people on this matter, or we will not have the Constitution adopted. I am satisfied that the old Constitution is good enough in all things except this. There was no cry for anything else but this. I say, do this, and one or two other things in regard to this matter, and we will have done all that we were sent here to do. We must protect the people of the State of California against those who would injure her interests; who would escape taxation and shift it upon others. We should have done it long ago. It does not require any great amount of statesmanship to see these things. It is a simple plain business proposition that any man can see and understand. It does not require us to go back and take up old musty books and experiments that have been tried in this land and the other. It is only a plain simple proposition that we have to act upon in a business sense, and that every business man in the community will understand. It is, while you make taxes equal, uniform, and just, and while you make it light upon one class, you bring down the burden upon the other class. Does this require any amount of statesmanship or experience? It is a matter that the common people understand and have sent us here to do, and to do nothing else, in my opinion. All this talk about Chinese, about corporations, about everything else, were secondary considerations with the people of this State. It was to bring taxation equal and uniform that we were sent here, and for no other purpose. When we have done this, we can well adopt the balance of the old Constitution, and go home to our constituents with the assurance that our work will be approved; but if we do anything else, we can be assured that our work will be rejected. I wish to see every species of property taxed uniformly, equally, and justly.

REMARKS OF MR. OHLEYER.

MR. OHLEYER. Mr. Chairman: It is with extreme diffidence that I rise to say a word on this question. It may well be considered presumtuous on my part, to venture to enlighteen this Convention on the subject under consideration, in the face of so much learning, wisdom, and experience as we find represented on this floor. I have listened with deep interest to the debate on revenue and taxation, and regard this the most important question that can come before this body. I trust, therefore, that it will receive that careful consideration that its importance demands.

I hope this Convention will adopt no system of exemption except public property, and property belonging to the United States. The danger is, when once we open the door to exemptions there will be no end to it. It will tend to the creation of fictitious indebtedness until the burdens of taxation would fall almost entirely on the poorer classes, whose property could not be hid away from the Assessor's scrutiny. Take, for example, the merchant. It is seldom that he does business on his own capital. But we will suppose he has five thousand dollars of his own money; he will lay in a stock worth ten thousand dollars, for a time owing for half his goods. The Assessor comes along, and takes a look at the stock of goods. As some of the goods have been sold they find it difficult to arrive at the true value for taxable purposes, and the Assessor, not knowing or understanding the subject, will finally compromise with the merchant, and call it six thousand dollars, which to him seems a fair figure. Having decided this point, the merchant produces evidence of indebtedness to the amount of five thousand dollars, and has it subtracted from his total assessment. And thus we find him doing business on a capital of ten thousand dollars, and paying tax on but one thousand dollars, and apparently no great wrong done by the merchant.

I hold it right and proper that every man should pay tribute to the government on the business he does. If a merchant can make more money on a capital of ten thousand dollars than he can on five thousand, he should pay taxes on the ten thousand. And so with the farmer, if he can do twice as well on a ten thousand dollar farm than he can on one of five thousand, he should pay on this larger amount. Under the system proposed by the committee and by their amendments, he might be carrying on a ten, fifteen, or twenty thousand dollar farm, and yet only pay taxes on five thousand dollars, the amount originally invested by him. As he is protected in the whole of it, he should also pay taxes on the whole of it. Not to do so is an encouragement to go yet deeper in debt until ruin shall finally overtake him. Nor will it do to say he should not pay because you propose to make the lender pay. I, too, would make the lender pay his tax simply because it is his business. He prefers to loan his capital, receives the protection of the State, and should pay his pro rata towards the support of his government. In this view (that is not double taxation), I am supported by General Howard and other speakers who have preceded me, who have cited ample authority to sustain this position. The principle of deductions or credits is a dangerous, and to my mind, an impractical one. There would be no end to the frauds committed. The best system ever invented by man has been circumvented by the dishonest. It seems to me this system is a bid for dishonesty. Good men are often found to act as though they thought it shrewd to evade the scrutiny of the Assessor, and thereby defraud the State out of their just proportion of their taxes.

In Oregon this system prevails, to what extent I am unable to say. But in the very last annual message of the Governor of that State, the system is condemned. And the reasons given, if I am correctly informed, was the continued evasion and reduction of the Assessor's roll, and the encouragement to the people to run in debt, either fictitiously or otherwise.

Mr. Chairman, for these reasons, briefly given, I cannot support these propositions. And when the proper times comes, if no one else does, I will move to strike out of section two all that pertains to the rebate or credit system in assessments, to the end that all may pay and none escape, and thus create a larger assessment and consequent lower rates of taxes. Thus the poor, honest, and prudent will be encouraged in their course, while the proposed system will lead to temptation, profligacy, and recklessness.

It has been stated, and I have no doubt of the fact, that were all property taxed, it would increase the State's tax roll one hundred per cent. In that case it would decrease the rate of taxation fifty per cent. Hence all parties would show a greater willingness to pay their proportion. There would be much less cause for the masses to evade the Assessor. It would substitute an entirely practicable, safe, and simple method of raising the necessary revenue, in place of a cumbersome, complicated, and unsatisfactory method.

A word in regard to the taxing of growing crops, and I am done. Were all property and things of value taxed, the farmer would have little cause to complain if he had to pay tax on his growing crop, for the rate would be so low as to be but little felt. But I hold such a tax would be wrong and unjust, and a discrimination against the agriculturist. He would pay revenue on something he himself had not yet received. Such a course is certainly unnecessary, as whatever the farmer makes more than a living he always reinvests, when it becomes tangible property and subject to be assessed. The State can well afford to wait a year for revenue from this source.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: My friend, Mr. Biggs, from Butte, is very anxious to know how I shall stand on this question. I am very willing to inform him that I believe in the assessment of every dollar's worth of property in this State—every dollar's worth—and no more; that every foot of land, every horse, every cow, every dollar in money, should be assessed upon the Assessor's roll, and that the party in possession should give in the list of the property, and should pay the tax. And I would provide that where other men hold accounts against that man, that he should have rebate for their interest in that property. I propose to assess the property, leaving notes and mortgages as simple evidences that these parties have an interest, and then when they settle the debts let the man who owns the property have a rebate to the amount of the tax. It is as clear a proposition as the noonday sun. Take an enterprising man who has partly enough money to build a house; he builds a house and goes in debt for part of it. Under the system of taxing mortgages, notes, and solvent debts, you compel that man to pay double taxation. This provision offered by Mr. Boggs avoids that. It provides that the party in possession of the property should give it in, and that whenever a mortgage, or note, or book account is settled, that the party assessed shall have a right to the amount of taxes that he has paid on that note, account, or mortgage. Is there anything there that is not just? Is there anything there but what is equal and uniform? No plainer proposition was ever presented to any Legislature or Convention in this State. This committee here has adopted in part the same proposition. The same proposition has been before every Legislature for the last fifteen years in one shape or another. But in this proposition of Mr. Boggs we propose to carry it out. There certainly should be exemption in this case as well as in mortgages; but it is simply a question between the men.

MR. BIGGS. Why are you so opposed to deeds of trust and mortgages being specified—that they shall be taxed? Why go around and come in the back door? Why are you so violently opposed to the words "mortgages and deeds of trust?"

MR. LARKIN. They are not property.

MR. BIGGS. We propose to make them property.

MR. LARKIN. They are only evidences that a man has an interest in certain property.

MR. OHLEYER. Are you not in favor of taxing all the property?

MR. LARKIN. I say a man should pay taxes on just what he is worth. If a merchant starts trade in a city, and has but a thousand dollars, and borrows another thousand dollars, and borrows on a note another thousand dollars, and another thousand dollars worth of goods he gets trusted for, that man does not own all this property; he owns it less these three amounts, and in these three amounts these other men are his partners. Admit that a man should pay on all that he has; let him give in the whole property at the time of the assessment, and pay the tax, but when he comes to settle with the other parties he should have a rebate to the amount of the tax on what he owes.

MR. EAGON. Suppose you have real estate to the amount of ten thousand dollars, and you come to me and borrow five thousand dollars to carry on some arrangement outside, and I loaned it to you and take a mortgage upon your property. Does that make the value of your property any less? Should you not pay taxes upon the value of that property? Would you deduct that five thousand?

MR. LARKIN. I do not propose to deduct anything. I propose to assess that property. But when I pay you that money I have a right to take out the amount of tax I have paid on it.

MR. EAGON. I think not.

MR. LARKIN. I am in favor of taxing all the property. If I have real estate to the amount of ten thousand dollars and borrow five thousand dollars of you I then have fifteen thousand on which I should pay the tax. I should then have a rebate of the amount of tax I paid on your five thousand dollars.

MR. EAGON. That only complicates it.

MR. LARKIN. It don't complicate it at all. Otherwise you could go scott free. But these gentlemen say you cannot force these men to pay this rebate. That is child's talk. You cannot force men to be honest, but still we have statutes to keep men from stealing. The principle is right in this proposition, the theory of it is right, and if carried out by proper legislation it will work equal taxation in the State. So far as the proposition of the gentleman from Humboldt, Mr. Huestis, is concerned, he has combined three propositions—the proposition of Mr. Boggs, the proposition of the committee here in section five, and some new matter of his own.

MR. HUESTIS. If the gentleman will permit me I will state that the difference between the amendment of Mr. Boggs or Judge Hale, and my amendment is, that in one case the principle of the taxation of money secured by mortgage and solvent debts is established, and in the other it is not established, but it is claimed by the friends of the other that it works out the same result.

MR. LARKIN. It will accomplish the same result. But there is no provision excepting railroad companies. Let us provide for the assessment of every man for just what he is worth and no more; and when he pays his debts let him compel the party that he pays that debt to, to return to him the amount of taxes he has paid during the time he owed the debt. If that is not just, what is just taxation? I did not intend to detain the committee half so long.

REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: It appears to me that there is no one sentiment more universal in the whole State than the sentiment that mortgages and solvent debts should be taxed in some just way. I am in favor, therefore, of taxing them. But the manner in which they should be taxed is a thing that should be discussed. I like Mr. Boggs' proposition. The idea that there should be a rebate, it occurs to me is a good idea. The idea that solvent debts should not be taxed amounts to this: An Assessor comes to a farm. Say he finds a farm worth twenty thousand dollars—the land. Well it is worth twenty thousand dollars. He puts it down. The farmer shows him everything he has on the farm—and I do insist that the farmers are more candid, as a class, than any other in showing up their property. They show them everything they have. They hold nothing back. The Assessors go around and examine everything; they examine the whole of the furniture, and leave nothing untaxed. They go to the wife and ask her to show them the chickens, and turkeys, and ducks, and they go down. Everything on the farm goes down, and it is all summed up. Well, that farmer would naturally say, if he was in one of the other States: "I am in debt; I have a mortgage on this place of ten thousand dollars; I am not worth ten thousand dollars, and I can show it to you." But the Assessor in our State says: "I cannot take any notice of all that; I must put down thirty thousand dollars, that you are in possession of here." And he puts it down, and the man has to pay it. Now, he goes to another man, and asks what he is worth, and he swears that he is worth, say fifty thousand dollars. He takes his oath, no matter whether it is good or not. But, in that case, ought he not to put down that he was worth two hundred thousand dollars, because he has taxed the farmer four times what he is worth, and why not tax him four times what he is worth.

Now this is a thing that cannot be endured. I say that this question of taxation is what has brought this Convention together in a great measure. That and the Chinese trouble have been two great motive powers that have brought this Convention together, and I say we will have to plan out some way in which we can get equal taxation. We must get some way that the man in the country will not pay three times his just taxes. Every single law within the Code bears down to-day upon the farmers. This taxation business bears upon them terribly. The way in which land is held bears upon them, prevents the settlement of the State, and requires some alteration. I appeal to gentlemen here to do their utmost to relieve the State from these things which are retarding its growth and progress. It is this taxation question and the way in which land is held in this State that is driving the people of the State into the cities. They come in and they have no possible means of support. The interior is depopulated, and the city is growing up. You are astonished to see in San Francisco an immense crowd of starving people. The reason is, that all the laws that we make are tending to drive men away from the cultivation of the soil. In every other country they make laws to try and assist in the cultivation of the soil, to take men out there, and they make exceptions in their favor, but here it is exactly the opposite.

The gentleman from Kern, Mr. Gregg, talks about taxing growing crops. Why, sir, that was the law, and what was the result of it? The Supervisors refused to direct the Assessors to do it, and the universal feeling was such in the State that they never assessed them. There is something so unjust, and so contrary to the will of the people in it, that it is impossible to enforce it. I tell you, sir, when a man goes on a farm, and does not know whether the crop is going to come to anything or not, he looks upon the man who would tell him that he must pay a tax on his prospect for a crop, as an enemy, and as a man who is actually trying to rob him. The consequence is, you cannot enforce such a law. There is no use of putting it into the Constitution. You cannot enforce it. It is one of those things that is so obnoxious to the feelings of the whole people that they will not see it carried out. I trust that there will be no hesitation in trying to fix this tax matter in some way that it will bear equally upon all classes. Now, even in these republics in South America, they make the greatest efforts to get people on the soil. They give them two or three hundred dollars—loan it on their lands—and leave it so many years without taxation. Although we call them half savages and benighted people, compared with us, yet we are, to-day, in California, doing whatever we can to crush down the farmers and the cultivators of the soil. Look at Santa Clara; San José has one third of its population within its limits. Look at San Francisco, filling up every day with people, not on account of the demand for population, for if that was the case we would not find them starving there. But it is because we pay no attention at all to those laws that should be enacted that would encourage people, and induce them, and almost force them, out on the soil to cultivate it. I trust that there will be no hesitation about this matter of taxing mortgages, and taxing solvent debts, and doing it in such a manner as will avoid injustice, and that it will work fairly to all classes.

REMARKS OF MR. STEELE.

MR. STEELE. Mr. Chairman: We have now reached one of the most important questions that can come before this Convention. In fact, it was the question that induced the calling of this Convention. The Grangers throughout the State were in favor of the taxation of mortgages, and after the decision of the Supreme Court that mortgages could not be taxed, the people of the State felt outraged; they felt that there was a property interest in mortgages, and that they ought to be taxed. Why, sir, the great majority of the people of this State who hold farms to-day are deeply in debt, and they are paying the taxes, not only upon the property that they own, but upon their debts. It is inequality of taxation that has caused such a complaint throughout the State, and we must arrange the matter here, in our Constitution, to avoid that, or our Constitution will not be adopted. The question of taxation is a very intricate question, and if we attempt to go into details here we will make a mistake, but if we confine ourselves to fundamental principles, the Legislature will be able to arrange the details. We ought to define what property is, for the purpose of taxation, and I believe that property should embrace everything that is of value in this State—land, personal property, bonds, mortgages, solvent debts, franchises, and every conceivable thing of value, and taxed in the hands of the man that holds it. I cannot believe with my friend, Mr. Gregg, that it makes no difference. The people of the State have an interest in the prosperity of the State, and if a portion of the people are borne down with taxation, and crushed into the earth, and another part are exempt from taxation, then the prosperity of the State is crippled, and the very foundation of industry destroyed. There is the trouble. We want to tax the property in the hands of the individuals that own it, and then we are doing justice, and nobody is injured. Now, let us look at this matter of taxing mortgages. Why should they not be taxed? If it is not property it is productive capital, and the most productive capital in the State, and, if the interest is not paid, it takes the real estate for its satisfaction. And, sir, the interest has to come, no matter whether the farmer raises a crop or not; no matter whether it rains or is a dry season; and if it is not paid the farmer sacrifices his property, which is security for the debt. What reason is there that the man who owns this mortgage, and who is receiving this interest, should not be taxed upon it? Some say tax the mortgage and let the mortgagor pay it too. If the mortgagor pays the interest, is not his liability to pay taxes diminished? It is diminished very much because he pays an exorbitant rate of interest. Why, they say, you cannot make the mortgage pay the taxes. Let the people elect honest men to enforce the laws and we will have justice yet. I will admit that if we tax mortgages it will necessitate a usury law. I do not doubt that; but let us have it. Let us go right after this thing. Why, if there is not something done, these moneyed men, who have dictated to this State the system of revenue and taxation, will have the entire State in their hands, and by so doing they will kill the "goose that lays the golden egg." They will find that it is to their interest to allow this money to be taxed. They will be very glad to get it back into the hands of men who can use it. It is coming to that. If the farmers have got to pay the rate of interest and taxation that they are paying now, it will be but a short time before the land of the State will be in the hands of these men, and they will be glad to get it back and take a fair amount of interest. The reason is that the investment is a secure one. They know that their money is secure and that they will get their interest regularly. If they would take a less amount of interest, and take security on the land, the difficulty would be obviated, and we would have peace and prosperity all over the State. What we want is to have all the property of this State pay taxes. There is now probably not over two thirds of the property of this State listed to pay taxes. I presume that there are over two hundred millions in this State that does not pay a cent of taxes, and has not for the last ten or fifteen years. If we do our duty we will call upon the Legislature to enact an honest law, and then it will rest with the people to elect honest and efficient men to enforce that law. If we must have a usury law, let us have it. Do not let us falter or hesitate. Let us lay down correct principles and we shall certainly reach correct results in time; but we can never expect to reach proper results unless we lay the foundation for them in this Constitution. There is the place to begin the reform, and if we are honest and act honestly we shall have done our part, and the people will do theirs.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: If we expect to make a perfect system of taxation by any efforts that we may put forth here, we might as well adjourn to-day and go home, because it is not among the possibilities, in my judgment. But it is certainly within the reach of this body to come much nearer to it than we have heretofore. Now, sir, I believe that the true theory of taxation is, that the assessment should be put upon all persons and property according to their ability to pay the tax. Property represents an ability to pay its proportion for the support of the government, and so do persons so far as their ability to acquire property is concerned. Now, sir, the taxes are assessed upon individuals by reason of their connection together as society. Taxes are made a necessity because of this very society, and taxes bring with them not only protection, but they bring privileges besides. A person is not only protected in his life and in his property by reason of these taxes, but he is also accorded certain privileges in connection with his life in that society that he could not have if it were not for the taxes. Now, then, a man should not only pay for the protection that the taxes give him, but he should also pay for the privileges that are his by reason of them, in excess of the protection. Now, how shall we produce this result? How shall we make people pay for the protection and the privileges in addition to the protection? The first thing, it seems to me, to do, is to determine what can afford to pay taxes. In my judgment there are three things upon which taxes can justly be levied. The first is property, the next is credits, and the third is labor; because all these bring an ability to pay. Property certainly represents an ability to pay the tax. Credits are in themselves an ability to pay the tax, because they can be bought, they can be sold, they are of value, they are protected by the laws. And so it is with labor. Labor can be bought and sold, and it represents an ability to pay the tax, and this would come under the head of income, because the labor produces an income.

Now, then, as regards property, I think every kind of property should bear its share of the burden of taxation, except that which is public property of the United States, or public property belonging to the State. That, of course, would be useless to tax, because it is simply taking the money out of one pocket and putting it into the other. But every kind of property ought to bear its fair proportion of the burdens of taxation. We must arrive at property by taking the real property and the personal property and putting its proportion of the taxes upon that. Then, if we only tax that, and leave out of the question the credits and the ability of men, we put an unjust proportion of the burden upon the property and those who hold it, and we leave a great portion of that ability to pay, without putting any burden upon it at all. Now, sir, we should tax the credit to the man who holds it. If I have in bank, when the Assessor comes around on the first of March, three thousand dollars, I must pay the tax upon it, and that tax is for the money during the year for which the tax is levied. But if before the Assessor comes around, perhaps the day before, I have loaned it to a man and taken his note for it, and it is secured by a mortgage upon real estate, then, under the present law, I do not pay taxes upon it. Why? Because I have, the day before the Assessor came, taken that money out of the bank, and taken a note for it on which I am to receive interest. Why should I be exempt from paying my portion of the tax? I have the same ability as I had before. I am protected by the government in the possession of this three thousand dollars, the same as I was before. There is no justice in exempting that three thousand dollars because I have taken it from the bank and taken a note for it. It represents my ability to pay that tax. And so it is, too, with labor.

I will go a little further. We must tax the property and the credit, or else a large portion of the money will escape its share of the burden. Now, how is it with labor. Here is a man who has the ability to earn a large salary. He has, perhaps, taken the earnings of years and put it into his head, as we have examples here on this floor. They think more, perhaps, of taking the money that they have earned and educating the brain with it, and they may be able to earn four, five, ten, or twenty thousand dollars a year. That is an ability to pay for the protection that they have while they are acquiring it, and not only the protection, but the privileges. But, they say if you tax this you tax a man double, because he may take his money and invest it, and it is subject to taxation. But I claim not. If a man is taxed upon an income, it must be put upon his income retrospectively. You must tax the income that the man has received during the year previous to the one in which the assessment has been levied, and that money, if invested, will be subject to taxation the next year, but not the year by which it is taxed as income. Now, as to this question of ability, I think most of us would be willing to take the ability that a man has to earn ten thousand dollars a year by his brain work, and be willing to bear the burden of the taxation that comes with it. He has the ability to pay, and the protection of the government in the acquiring of the income and in the spending of it. And even if the man spends it as fast as he gets it, he has, beside the protection of the government, the privileges which the taxes bring, the education of his family, the use of the streets, and all the other privileges which he enjoyed by reason of the assessment of these taxes. And why should he not pay for it? If, after he pays the income tax, he invests his money, it is subject to taxation, but not at the same time that it is taxed as an income. Now, in order to arrive at a fair assessment of the taxes, if we tax credits, all property should be taxed at a fair cash value. It will not do to tax it at less than its fair cash value and then tax the credit at its full value, because that is unequal. We have no right to tax a credit to its full amount and then tax the property for less than the fair cash value. And so, in order to do that, all property shall be taxed for its fair cash value.

But it is claimed that credits are not really property. And here was the case cited by the gentleman from Kern, Mr. Gregg, where one man owned a horse worth three hundred dollars and sold him to another man and took his note for him, and that man sold him to another man and took his note for him, until there were six men who had bought the horse. The gentleman says no new property was created, and held that the man who had simply given his note, or who had received a note, should not pay taxes on it. Now let us suppose that that horse was all the property and these six men were all the men there were to pay taxes in the community. Each man had the ability to pay the note, or the men who sold the horse never would have taken his note. If the horse must pay all the tax, then one man must do it and the other five of them who have the ability to pay the value of the horse escape taxation entirely. But what should we do if the horse should die? The State would be bankrupt or else you must tax the ability to pay. It is absurd. We must not only look for the property, but we must look for the ability to pay the tax which pays for the protection and privileges.

And now, sir, in regard to growing crops. There is not a man in the State but what has a prospective income. Do you tax him upon that? A growing crop is nothing more than a prospective income. It may grow, it may mature, it may be gathered; but on the other hand, the blasts of heaven may come down upon it and blot it out in a single night; and not only the crop itself, but the labor, the sweat, and the toil of the men who have put it in have gone. The hopes that were raised are blasted and the ability of the man to pay the tax on it has gone. It is only a prospective income and we have no right to tax it.

One other word in regard to capital. They say if we put a tax on credits, one of two things will follow: either the man who lends the money will compel the borrower to pay the tax, or else, if that is not accomplished, money or capital will leave the State, and it cannot be borrowed. Well, now, if it could depend perhaps entirely upon the individuals in this State who have money to loan, that condition of affairs might occur. The capital might be withdrawn until they could bring the people to the necessity of paying what they saw fit to ask for it. But, fortunately, capital is like all other commodities; it follows the law of supply and demand. It seeks the best market always; and if there are not people in this State who are willing to loan money at a fair rate of interest, there is plenty of capital elsewhere that will find out that condition of things and come here for investment. That is nothing but a bugbear. I tell you that the property is good for the capital that is loaned upon it, and capital will come here, and distance is no bar to the travel of capital. It goes wherever the telegraph goes, and it goes in an instant.

Now, sir, there is just one other word I wish to say in regard to the plan introduced by Judge Hale. If I understand it correctly, it not only compels the person who has the property in his possession upon which a mortgage rests to pay the tax upon the full value of the property, but if he has borrowed money, he must also pay the additional tax upon the borrowed money. If I own a farm worth ten thousand dollars and the Assessor finds me in possession of it, I am taxed for that farm ten thousand dollars. If I have borrowed five thousand dollars and the Assessor comes to me and finds that I have borrowed five thousand dollars—perhaps I have not had time to put it into improvements upon my farm—he finds it in my possession and I am taxed on the additional five thousand dollars; so that instead of having to pay taxes on the ten thousand dollars, I have to pay on the fifteen thousand dollars.

I have no redress; I have no rebate. I have no relief until I am able to pay that money back again. Now, that is no relief to men when they need it. Men need this relief when they are borne down by the burden of debt. When they are ready to pay the indebtedness, when fortune has smiled upon them and they have succeeded in gathering together the means with which to relieve themselves of this burden, then they do not so much need this rebate. They need it when it pinches upon them.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that no other matter which we have considered will have so much weight as to whether this Constitution is adopted or not, as a wise article in regard to taxation. Now, sir, having been a member of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, I have been very careful in examining the various propositions in committee. One gentleman has stated that as long as the State got the revenue, it made no difference who paid it. That is, that all the State has to do is to get its revenue out of the property in the State. Now, it seems to me that this is not all there is in this proposition. It is not enough that the taxes shall be collected from the property of the State. We must go farther, and say who shall pay them, and there is where the difficulty comes in. Unless the State is just in dealing with its citizens, we cannot expect that the citizens will be just in dealing with each other; and it seems to me that the true proposition, in determining as to whom the tax shall be collected from, is this: That each man shall pay taxes upon what he is worth. Now, this question of the taxation of mortgages has become an interesting one, not only to the borrower and lender, but to the men who neither borrow nor lend. The natural sense of justice which exists in every man's mind, and which controls the way in which he thinks and acts, has had some weight in this matter. The men who neither borrow nor lend stand up and say that the law should be just as between borrower and lender. Now, sir, I know a man who loans two hundred and forty thousand dollars, and receives quarterly a high rate of interest—a rate of interest that has broken many a man who attempted to pay it—and, sir, he pays taxes on three thousand five hundred dollars, being the assessed value of the house in which he lives. And yet his income, in the way of interest, is nearly forty thousand dollars a year. Now, sir, the people of this State look at such examples as that, and they say that a law which results in a man's being taxed on three thousand five hundred dollars who has a regular income on two hundred and forty thousand dollars, is an unjust law. This must be remedied, and it must be remedied in the simplest way. We must make not only a law in regard to taxation which is just, but we must also make a law which shall be practicable. A law which is just, and which cannot be carried out, would be a very poor law indeed. It seems to me that the propositions of Mr. Boggs and Mr. Huestis have at least one element that is a strong element, and that is that they are practicable. They collect the taxes directly from the property. They make the property, where it is found, pay the taxes, but at the same time they adjust the relations of debtor and creditor in such a way that while the debtor directly pays the tax the creditor indirectly pays his share of it.

Now, sir, the proposition introduced by the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, in section five of their report, and which is incorporated into the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, Mr. Huestis, has one strong feature in its favor which is not in the proposition of Mr. Boggs, and that is this: Supposing that my friend here, Mr. McCoy, has a farm worth forty thousand dollars, upon which Mr. Larue has a mortgage of thirty thousand dollars, the mortgage due in three years. Now, sir, there is a little injustice in proposing that Mr. McCoy shall pay the tax on Mr. Larue's thirty thousand dollars, and wait three years to get the benefit of it. The proposition comes down to this, that Mr. Larue has an interest in that property to the amount of thirty thousand dollars on the day that it is assessed, and yet you say that Mr. McCoy shall pay the tax on Mr. Larue's thirty thousand dollars, and wait three years to get it back. Now, sir, this portion of Mr. Huestis' proposition is better even than Mr. Hale's. In the same respect is section five of the committee better than Mr. Hale's, for the reason that the tax is assessed directly against the mortgagee, and he shall pay the tax he ought to pay.

MR. HALE. Is not the matter between the debtor and the creditor made exactly even and right?

MR. CROSS. If he has got one thousand dollars and wants to put it out at interest, he has got the right to do it; but if he has not got the one thousand dollars, then what? Why, he has got to advance it at the rate of interest which he is paying on the mortgage.

Now, I pass to another proposition in the amendments. I refer to the matter of taxation of the capital stock of corporations. I was not here until this morning, but I have inquired of gentlemen who have been present, and they tell me that this matter has not been touched upon. Now, with regard to the taxation of the capital stock of corporations two propositions are involved. This section, as presented by the committee, and the amendments offered by Judge Hale, for Mr. Boggs, and also by Mr. Heustis, say, in effect, that the capital stock of joint stock corporations shall be taxed. That, taken in connection with the first section, amounts to this: that it shall be taxed at what it is worth. This matter of capital stock, to my mind, presents itself merely as an evidence of ownership in property. If I own ten shares in any corporation, I care not what, I have to stand my tax upon the property which that corporation owns. That is, taxing it once. Again, when the capital stock is taxed, that same property is taxed again. Then, sir, I must pay a double taxation. Suppose my friend here, Mr. Reed, is engaged in farming a place which involves a large outlay of money. He, to-day, has to pay a tax upon land which is worth four hundred thousand dollars. Suppose that he and Mr. Caples, and Mr. McFarland, and Mr. Kelley, and others, should incorporate that property and proceed with the same class of business, carrying on his agricultural pursuits. Now, the property is worth four hundred thousand dollars; then the capital stock of the corporation will be worth four hundred thousand dollars. No new property has been created, but the company will have to pay the tax on four hundred thousand dollars of property, and the stockholders will have to pay a tax upon the four hundred thousand dollars of capital stock, while the amount of property taxed is only worth four hundred thousand dollars. I am opposed to double taxation, because I believe that double taxation is unjust. It is double taxation to tax the property and then tax a certificate of stock which represents that property. What does that certificate show? It shows what share I have in the property, and that is all it shows. It is just the same as if I had a deed to a rancho. If I have a deed for a rancho, would any man say that I have to pay on the ranch, and then on the deed? Tax the property, tax the tangible thing, tax the thing that has the value, but the capital stock has no value of itself. Why? Because the corporation to-morrow may sell the rancho, and then what is the stock worth? It is worth nothing, because the thing it represented is no longer the property of those holding the capital stock. Now, sir, the capital stock has no value in itself, only as it represents something else. I would suggest that it might be proper to have it read "capital stock of corporations, or joint stock corporations, owning, controlling, leasing, or occupying property out of this State." That, sir, will cover, it seems to me, all the property of which we desire to tax the capital stock, and the reason why I would be in favor of taxing that class of capital stock would be this: Take, for instance, the Comstock mines; a large proportion of the stock is owned in this State, and that class of property has to be protected here. Our State is liable to be put to the expense of proceedings in Courts for the purpose of protecting that property, and, it seems to me, that the State should derive some revenue from it; and if an opportunity offers, I shall offer an amendment to this section, or to this amendment, if it should be adopted, that the capital stock of corporations owning property out of this State should be taxed.

SPEECH OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: Members have occupied a great deal of time, amounting to five or ten thousand dollars in cost, in the statement of an opinion in which we all concur—that we ought to provide for a good system of taxation.

Considering that point as determined, we may properly turn our attention to the precise question before us. The report of the Committee upon Finance and Taxation proposes to tax the capital stock, the franchises, and all the visible property and assets of corporations. The amendments of Mr. Boggs and Mr. Huestis each propose to do the same thing. These amendments each further propose to tax solvent debts, when unsecured, bringing them into the same category as debts secured by mortgage, as to set-off of debts due from against credits due to the person assessed. There is a slight difference between the two as to the time of adjustment of taxes paid, as between debtor and creditor, but the result as to the government is the same. Both these amendments, however, keep up the idea of double taxation. A sells to B a chattel for a given sum, and takes his note for the amount. A is taxed for the note, and B for the chattel. This, of course, is double taxation. It is said this result can be obviated by allowing one sum to be deducted from the other, or by some forced adjustment between the parties as to the tax. That the general principle, that a man should be taxed for only what he has, would bring these cases within the category existing as to mortgages, admits of no doubt. But the want of practicability in this scheme deterred the committee, as it has others hitherto, from its adoption. The opportunity for imposition, oppression, and constant dispute which would arise under such a plan, have been regarded as too formidable to be unnecessarily encountered.

The second section proposes that all property, including within that term franchises, and the capital stock, and all tangible property of corporations, and joint stock associations, shall be taxed. I quite concur in what has been said by Mr. Cross, that it is quite correct to tax franchises, the right to do business, and the visible property only, as these constitute all there is of value belonging to the corporation.

There are some of these eastern Constitutions that in terms tax corporate property by four or five names, every one of which includes everything they have got. The great injustice of taxing a franchise, and all the property of the corporation to it, and at the same time taxing their equivalent, the capital stock in the hands of the stockholder, seems never to have occurred to the framers of such Constitutions. But a discussion of this provision will more properly arise after these amendments are disposed of.

In the fifth section the ruling language in which is my own, and was drawn for the purpose of complying with the wishes of members of the committee, I have expressed the principle as to taxation of mortgages, I hope satisfactorily. I think it necessary, however, to warn gentleman that the borrower of money will be in no way benefited by this provision. Perhaps if the proposal of Judge Steele was to be adopted, the enactment of an usury law, supplemented by a provision compelling the holder of money to lend it at the legal rate, the borrower might be much relieved. But nothing short of this promises any advantage to him. The only possible advantages I can see in this provision, are justice in the allowance of the set-off taxing the whole value of the mortgaged property in the county in which it is situated, and creating in the mortgagee an interest in the rate of taxation and in good government. As this provision contemplates a fixed rate of interest, having no fluctuations dependent upon high or low taxes, it behooves the mortgagee to interest himself to keep down taxation. Now, so long as his security is absolute, he is a simple spectator without any interest to interfere in public economics.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Would not the rate of taxes affect the rate of interest?

MR. SHAFTER. Undoubtedly; for the anticipated tax will necessarily enter into the rate of interest. As I have already said, the main benefit to be derived will be to the whole community by stimulating both parties to the mortgage, to a vigilant discharge of their duties as citizens. It is perhaps not beyond hope that this increased interest may sometimes procure us a Legislature having some slight fitness to pass upon this knotty question of taxation. This provision in the fifth section increases the chances in this direction.

Any attempt to prevent the lender from recouping the tax which he may have to pay, will simply drive money out of the country. Perhaps it would have been better for us if money had been kept out, and we had not borrowed so much. I assent to the statement that the mortgagees are going to own this State under the present system. I think as things are now that we are in the hands of the money changers, or soon will be, unless some other scheme is devised before long.

The material trouble we have had is our utter inability to secure equality in assessment. There has been no central authority having the power of equalization. The Spaniards who were in the first Constitutional Convention, jealous of the Americans, insisted upon confiding the power of assessment to County Assessors without any control or supervision. The result has been a most perfect inequality. The whole intent expressed in the initiatory clause of our Constitution, that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, by the action of the Assessor is entirely defeated.

Taking these various provisions together, the proposals of the committee (saving double taxation) meet with my approval, and, as I see in the amendments proposed only change for the worse, I trust they will be defeated, and the report in these respects confirmed.

The creation of the Board of Equalization will relieve us from the scandalous condition now existing. Lands in some counties assessed at from twenty-five cents to one dollar per acre, and sold at from three to ten dollars per acre, while in other counties improved lands are assessed so high as to reduce the net income to less than six per cent. per annum, and in some cases the result is simple destruction of all value in the property. My taxes are sixteen to twenty per cent. upon the gross revenue, and that is equivalent to confiscation. This state of things creates with me the strongest motive to sell out.

There is a proposition spoken of here to provide for an income tax. The evils resulting from this variety of tax are too well known I trust to leave such a proposal any chance of adoption. Perjuries, now unfortunately not rare, would become the rule and not the exception.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's fifteen minutes have expired. [Cries of "leave," "leave."]

MR. SHAFTER. I am obliged to the gentlemen. The provision in these amendments, as to the time of offset of a tax paid by the debtor upon his debt, and the method of ascertaining the amount in case of payment after assessment and by levy, are so uncertain as to leave the provision seriously objectionable. In the proposal of Mr. Huestis there is an attempt to consolidate at least the matter of several sections into one. I think this destroys perspicuity, and that it is much better to leave distinct matters in separate sections, notwithstanding that they belong to the same general subject.

If the compilers of the Scriptures were authorized to separate the text into chapters and verse, where no such arrangement originally existed, for the sake of perspicuity I trust we may do it here.

I hope we may adopt the second and fifth sections, with the exception of what relates to franchises and stock corporations.

I am obliged to the Convention for its courtesy.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: It is utterly impossible for me to discuss, as I desire, a proposition in Mr. Boggs' amendment, simply because I have not the voice to do so, and must therefore content myself with making a very brief suggestion. It has been suggested by the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter, that the scheme of the Boggs amendment is open to the same subjection which he says lies to the Huestis amendment, namely, that it provides for double taxation, although he does not speak confidently upon that point. I wish to say that as to the manner of the taxation of the capital stock, if this proposition shall, in its general provisions, be accepted, the committee can correct it in that respect if they deem it faulty. The only proposition I wish to address myself to is the distinguishing feature of this amendment, and that which distinguishes it from the report of the committee and the Huestis amendment; and that is the mode in which it deals with the question of debts and credits. The proposition, as I understand it, and it seems to me that it does not admit of two interpretations, is this: that debts and credits shall not, for the purpose of taxation, be taken into account by the Assessor; but that in view of the fact, which is recognized as such in the article, that the debt—or to speak more correctly, the credit to the creditor—is nevertheless an interest in the property of the debtor, and on which the debtor pays taxes, and he ought in justice, as between himself and the debtor, pay a tax upon so much of the property of the debtor as is represented by the credit. I am not certain that I make myself clear, but the intention of the article is this: that every creditor has an interest in the property of his debtor to the extent of his solvent credit. Because, if it be not solvent, or in other words, if the debtor has not the property out of which to pay the debt, it is not solvent, and the proof of the solvency is established by the fact of payment. No question can arise, because the fact of payment establishes the fact of its solvency. Now, then, the debt being paid, thus establishing the fact that it was a solvent debt to the creditor, a debt solvent as against the debtor, then comes the question: What shall be done as between the two in respect to the taxes paid upon the property which was represented by the debt before its payment? This article deals with it from this standpoint: that upon payment being made, thus establishing the solvency of the debt, that the creditor shall rebate, or the debtor shall have a credit upon the payment of all the taxes which he has paid, and interest upon the taxes he has paid, at the same rate which the debt bore, which is paid. Now, the assumption is that this makes the matter exactly equal and fair between debtor and creditor. The government must look to property for the payment of its taxes. All of this discussion, proceeding upon the assumption that the government may look to the creditor to pay taxes, is pure absurdity. It is utterly impracticable. Government must look to property that is visible and tangible and out of which the taxes can be obtained. All the experienced writers upon the subject agree substantially upon this proposition. And, therefore, when you undertake to divide up between the debtor and the creditor as in respect to mortgages, and say that you will make the mortgagee pay the taxes upon the value of the mortgage, and if you then tax the mortgagor or the owner of the property, all the excess of the value of the property over and above the debt, and release him as to the balance, then you have got nothing but the personal responsibility of the mortgagee. He may be in New York; he may be in London; he may be in Paris, and you will find it impossible to collect the revenue upon that basis. If you attempt that, you will only be getting taxes upon the difference between the indebtedness of the county and the value of the property. Now, then, in view of the fact that the government must look to the tangible property in the county for its revenue, you must adopt a system by which you can realize a tax upon its full value. It is said, and said truly too, that a solvent credit to a creditor is properly within the protection of the law, and is as beneficial to him as any other property, and upon every consideration of justice and equity, should bear its burden. Nobody can question the truth of this. But it is likewise represented in the value of the property upon the faith and credit of which it has been loaned. That is all there is to it. Now, it makes no difference whether solvent debts are secured by mortgage or not secured by mortgage. We know as a matter of fact that a large percentage of the commercial transactions in San Francisco are not so secured. Merchants in the country owe bills in San Francisco. Money loaned there to carry on manufactories and other business, is not secured generally by mortgage. It is only in the farming business where debts are secured by mortgage to any great extent. No man can give a reason why a solvent debt, not secured by a mortgage, should be any more exempt from taxation than where it is secured. The same rule which will apply to one will apply to both. It takes no more money to pay an unsecured debt than it does to pay one secured.

This scheme treats of debts from the simple standpoint of their solvency. The fact of solvency can alone be established by the fact of payment, and when the payment is made, then there is a complete and equitable distribution, because the creditor is compelled to make a rebate equal to the amount of taxes paid and the interest upon the taxes at the same rate that the debt has borne. It is equal and just. It is as simple as the proposition can be, and I say that it does not involve double taxation by any possibility. It simply eliminates from the taxation roll the gross credits of the State. Mr. Chairman, I believe it is a simple, a correct, and a satisfactory solution. I believe that it would work practically in the community; that it establishes the relation between the debtor and the creditor, and their duty to the government. The debtor has the property, and if he fails to pay the tax, you have recourse to the property by protest in the nature of an execution. There is no escape from that. That is the interest of the government. Then, as between himself and his creditor, this rule disposes of the matter, and makes each part bear its proper burden. If I am a farmer worth ten thousand dollars, and my friend, Mr. Edgerton, loans me five thousand dollars, which I may use in making improvements, for nobody borrows money to put in the bank. A man is a fool that would borrow money to hoard it. When I borrow the money I do not keep it; I put in improvements; and, therefore, all the money I have is represented by the property which I have. Now, the government must look to me for the taxes on that ten thousand dollar farm; but when I come to pay Mr. Edgerton, who has all the time had an interest in my ten thousand dollar farm equal to five thousand dollars, he must pay me back the taxes I have paid upon this five thousand dollars, and interest at the same rate which it has borne. Neither of us have been compelled to pay more than that which we were equitably bound to pay, and the government has secured the taxes upon the whole property. I say that this solution is absolute: it reaches every case of debt in the State; it covers all cases; it is practical; and it is a solution of this question which I believe will be satisfactory to the people. I trust it may be adopted. With respect to the question of the taxation of the capital stock and franchises, if we agree upon this main proposition, we can remedy it in its details when we come to that part, after we have passed upon the main proposition. I do maintain that this proposition is simple; that it is correct; that it will work satisfactorily; and is a solution of the question.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have directed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. BARTON. I ask permission to introduce a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the President of this Convention be directed to appoint a committee, to be known as the Committee on Income Tax, and it shall be the duty of said committee to prepare and report to this body, within five days after their appointment, a plan for the levying and collection of an income tax, said committee to consist of five members.

THE CHAIRMAN. The hour having arrived, the Convention will take the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M. President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

RESOLUTION.

MR. BARTON. Mr. President: I wish to call up the resolution I offered before recess, and move its adoption.

THE SECRETARY read the resolution:

Resolved, That the President of this Convention be directed to appoint a committee, to be known as the Committee on Income Tax; and it shall be the duty of said committee to prepare and report to this body, within five days after their appointment, a plan for the levying and collecting of an income tax, said committee to consist of five members.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

MR. EDGERTON. I move the gentleman name the committee. I think it is a very singular time to offer such a resolution as this. I hope the resolution will not be adopted. I move to lay it on the table.

REVENUE AND TAXATION.

MR. EDGERTON. I move the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the article on revenue and taxation.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section two and amendments are before the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: The matter before the committee is the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt, Mr. Huestis, and the amendment of the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale. While I find a great deal that is not satisfactory to me in the amendment to the amendment, there is one proposition in it that appears so extraordinary to me that I must be excused for bringing it before the attention of the committee. I will read the amendment:

"All property in this State, including franchises, capital stock of corporations, or joint stock associations, and solvent debts, excepting growing crops, private property exempt from taxation under the laws of the United States, public property belonging to the United States, or to this State, or any county, city and county, city, or municipality thereof, and including all property, real and personal, belonging to and devoted to public use in all public school districts and departments in this State, shall be taxed in proportion to its cash value, to be ascertained as directed by law. A mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby. Except as to railroads and other quasi-public corporations, in case of debts so secured, the value of the property affected by such mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or obligation, less the value of such security, shall be assessed and taxed to the owner of the property, and the value of such security shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof in the county, or city and county, in which the property affected thereby is situate. The taxes so levied shall be a lien upon the property and security, respectively, and may be paid by either party, or his successor, to such security; if paid by the owner of the security, or his successor, the tax so levied upon the property affected thereby shall become a part of the debt so secured. If the owner of the property, or his successor, shall pay the tax so levied on such security, it shall constitute a payment thereon, and, to the extent of such payment, a full discharge thereof. And in respect to all other solvent debts, there shall be no reduction made, as herein provided, from the full cash value of all property of the debtor or debtors owing the same, on account of such debt or debts; but he or they shall, on payment thereof, be entitled to retain therefrom a sum, with interest thereon at the same rate borne by said indebtedness, to be computed from the time or times of the tax payments, which shall equal the amount of taxes which may have been paid by such debtor or debtors during the existence of such indebtedness, upon property of like amount in value of said indebtedness; provided, if any indebtedness shall be paid by any such debtor or debtors, after assessment and before the tax levy, the amount of such levy, for that year, may likewise be retained by him or them, and shall be computed according to the tax levy for the preceding year."

Now, sir, if that language means anything it means simply that if the debtor gets to the office of the Tax Collector first, and pays this assessment on this mortgage, he saddles it upon the creditor. But if the creditor, being more fleet of foot, should get there first, and pay it, he saddles it upon the debtor. Now, sir, I confess I am at a loss to understand the object in view. But it does seem to me he must have had in mind——

MR. HUESTIS. The object was to protect the revenue of the State by providing that in case the debtor refused to pay the tax on the property the creditor could do so, and then have recourse upon the debtor for the amount.

MR. CAPLES. If the gentleman made any mental reservations, I am not responsible for it. As far as security to the State is concerned, the property itself is there and is security for all you assess against it, and you need have no fears about the security, because the property is always there, and you can enforce the demand by taking the whole property. I defy any gentleman to give it any other construction than the one which I have put upon it. You cannot torture or twist the language so as to make anything else out of it. It is so evidently a joke that I feel at liberty to assume that the gentleman so intended it.

There are several distinct systems or theories of taxation proposed. It is proposed to have a system of credits and demerits. The proposition embodied in the amendment of the gentleman from Placer, embraces, in my judgment, perhaps the best solution of this question of any that have been conceived. This amendment, however, embraces some matters foreign to the subject, which should be left out. And I understand Judge Hale to say that he will move at the proper time, to strike out that matter concerning corporations—taxing the capital stock of corporations—for there is merit in this new idea which ought to be presented to this committee alone by itself, so that it could stand upon its own merits, and be judged without being hampered by other matters. Therefore, I hope that he will move to strike out that extraneous matter. Then we may be brought to a vote upon this new proposition called the Boggs proposition, which is simply this. And I will undertake to say that no system of taxation has been proposed that was so simple, and yet so well calculated to secure the ends of justice, secure the taxation of all property, and yet tax no man twice. It has been urged by gentlemen who have not taken the trouble to inform themselves in regard to the nature of this proposition, that it would defraud the State of revenue, as though it was proposed to allow this rebate against the State. Now, I must beg these gentlemen to read the section, and they will find there is no rebate proposed as against the State. On the contrary, all the property a man has, personal, real, and what not, shall be taxed without rebate at all, as far as the taxing power is concerned, as far as the State is concerned. He must pay it all. But he is allowed a rebate as against the creditor. Now, there can be no confusion. The Assessor has nothing whatever to do with the matter. He simply assesses what is in sight. All the property he can find, of whatever character, he must assess. And this matter of rebate is left between the debtor and the creditor. The State has nothing to do with it, further than to guarantee the right of rebate to the debtor.

I say that of all the systems of taxation that have been proposed this is the simplest of any, and the most illiterate man may comprehend it at a glance. There are other systems proposed, and I propose to notice casually some of their merits. The other has, perhaps, more strength than any other. It says that all property, and all credits, bonds, and evidences of debt shall be taxed. Of course this would preclude the idea of rebate, and it would be in fact double taxation, because if you assess all property without allowing any rebate, and then assess the creditor separately on his bonds, or mortgage, or his notes, you simply assess him twice. You allow no rebate; it is out of the question. If the proposition be adopted to assess all property and all evidences of indebtedness, we must leave out the other proposition, and allow no rebate as against the creditor. It is argued for this proposition that it will increase the aggregate of taxation of the property in the State, and it would undoubtedly do so to the extent of three or four hundred millions of dollars; and that the increase in the aggregate would reduce the rate. To that extent it would be a relief; but, sir, we must not forget that justice and right between man and man ought to be the leading consideration in framing an organic law. Let us see how this would operate. The rate is reduced, say from forty to thirty per cent., by increasing the amount of taxable property, and he who is not a debtor would be benefited to the extent of this reduction. But how is it with the debtor? How is it with the unfortunate debtor, who is entitled to more sympathy than any other class, for the reason that they are engaged in those industries which help to develop the resources of the State under very great difficulties—that is, they lack capital. They must borrow it, and under this system they would pay on all the property in sight, notwithstanding that they own but a fraction of it. It may be that a farmer has fifteen thousand dollars capital. That is all he is worth; that is all he has. His place is mortgaged for ten thousand dollars. Here is a man in reality worth but five thousand dollars, yet he is compelled to pay taxes on fifteen thousand dollars. The people of this State demand that this Convention shall relieve that class of men from this unjust burden. No other thing was so well understood, as that the man with limited means should have the burden removed from his shoulders; that he should be compelled to pay only on what he is worth, not upon what he has not got; pay for his own part of the property, and that his creditor should be compelled to pay on that part of the property that he holds as security for the payment of a loan. That is so right, and honorable, and just, that no man ought to dispute it.

But gentlemen say if you tax the mortgage you simply impose upon the debtor the obligation to pay on all his property the whole aggregate amount, and then he will have to pay again on the mortgage, and that the owner of the mortgage will demand a stipulation of this kind. That is the most potent argument in favor of the Boggs proposition. That cuts off every species of double taxation, and imposes a tax upon every man for what he has, and not for what he has not got. If you go through the whole list of schemes, you will find in every instance that there are some principles which will bear unjustly upon this man, or upon that class. But this proposition introduced by Judge Hager is free from charges of that kind, as far as I have been able to reason upon the subject. As far as I have heard the views of the gentleman, I have failed to find, in a single instance, where a single valid objection can be made, or where the proposition is not reasonable or just. The argument against it is made by those who have not taken the trouble to inform themselves, that it would complicate assessments. Now, that is a very great mistake. On the other hand, if you should undertake to assess evidences of indebtedness, then indeed would you be confronted with difficulties higher, in fact, if not utterly insurmountable. Because I defy any intelligent man to devise a law whereby it can be done. He might do it to a limited extent, but it has never been done within thirty per cent., nor within fifty per cent., according to the reports of the New York Commissioner. It has been almost an entire failure, and we can all see why it is a failure. The Assessor comes along and says: "What have you coming to you; money loaned?" "No, sir; no money loaned." Very well, sometimes he is sworn and sometimes not. I will undertake to say that in a majority of cases it makes little difference whether he is sworn or not. The truth is that whatever system is adopted we must avoid, above all things, offering a bonus for trickery, fraud, and perjury; and any rebate as against the State, would, I undertake to say, take away from the State her revenues. The assessable property of the State amounts to six hundred million dollars. It would fall away, under a general system of rebate, to a very small part of that sum, and the State would be without revenue. Therefore I assume that this proposition will not be seriously considered. In fact, it is simply and entirely unworthy of any consideration, and has very few defenders upon this floor. The real contest here is between the Boggs proposition and the other to assess all property and all evidences of indebtedness. That is where the real contest lies. One system reduces the rate of taxation and benefits him who is not in debt. But the point to be reached is, is it just. Is it just to the debtor. The true theory of taxation is to impose upon every man an obligation—an absolute obligation—to pay and contribute to the support of the government, in proportion to what he is worth, in proportion to what he is able to pay. Now, sir, it appears to me that there can be no question that the proposition proposed by Judge Hager, if this other matter be taken out, is the best and most just system that can be adopted, and at the proper time, after the disposal of this other amendment, I shall move to strike out this other matter. Then the committee will be in a condition to express an opinion upon the merits of the proposition.

SPEECH OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I recognize, notwithstanding that every succeeding report has been designated by members as the most important yet before the Convention, that the question of taxation, now being discussed by the people of California in their Constitutional Convention, is, perhaps, of more importance and greater in its bearings than any of the great reforms now demanded to be remedied. And, sir, it is to some extent a new question. While other States have been making advancement, while new issues have been arising in the politics of the country, as in the matter of the regulation of corporations, etc., we find, sir, that none of them have made any material advancement upon the question of taxation. A perfectly uniform and equal system of taxation has not yet been attained by any of the States. It is remarked by a late writer in the International Review, written since this Convention assembled, that reform in taxation, as yet, cuts no figure in American Constitutions. But it is a fact of importance, that due deliberation is evident, and I am glad to see this solicitude on the part of this Convention. In consequence of the great inequality, and the heavy proportion of the burden borne by the poor, by the manufacturing and producing classes, the grievance is deep and widespread, and all eyes at this hour are turned toward this Convention, anticipating some remedy. And the more we consider this great question the more we are forced to concede that we know little about it. The idea with a great many is, that by simply taxing all securities we will satisfy the people. We know that such is not absolutely an equal system of taxation, and so long as there is a feasible proposition which aims nearer than such system seems to do, it should command at least a thorough investigation. Such a proposition I conceive to be that which is offered by my colleague, Judge Hale, originated by the gentleman from Lake, Mr. Boggs, wherein it is declared, or the foundation is laid for a system, declaring what shall be taxed; or, in other words, everything that possesses value. It provides for the payment of taxes upon all property, but it also provides that those least able may escape from the payment of taxes upon that which, in reality, they do not own.

Under our present system, every industrial interest which ought to be fostered and protected is burdened out of existence. The farming interest has been spoken of here. The farmer is, from necessity, compelled to expose everything he has in his possession, and it is all taxed. Nothing escapes; nothing can be hidden. The merchant and trader have no means of escape. The manufacturer, though compelled to borrow money at high rates, is also compelled to pay taxes on every dollar in his possession. And while this is a fact, that this class, above all others, which we should foster and aid and protect, under a wise system, yet, sir, vast concentrations of capital—water companies and insurance companies, banking corporations, railroad and steamboat companies—have escaped taxation in a large degree. Under our system it is so plain that the money lender absolutely escapes taxation, and grows fat on the proceeds of his wealth, while those to whom he lends are frequently taxed twice. And I shall oppose the idea of taxing all the property, and also the securities. I will remind those who do, of this proposition. We have had a large experience in California in that system; in fact, we have had most all kinds of systems here, and it occurred to me, while the gentleman from Alameda and the Chairman of the committee were debating over the decisions of the Supreme Court, that you could prove almost anything by the decisions of the Supreme Court of this State. We had a system at one time when mortgages were taxed. Under that system I will ask, was not this the fact: a man going to another for the purpose of borrowing money was confronted by the fact that he would be compelled to pay the tax on this mortgage, and of course he must demand a little higher interest, which of necessity was conceded. Hence the party borrowing the money, though paying taxes on the property, at the same time had to pay taxes, in the shape of a higher rate of interest, on the mortgage; and hence, sir, while the system involves absolutely double taxation, the double taxation falls upon the poorest man, and the one least able to pay. Therefore, it is time we had a system by which the poor man will be able to pay on what he owns, and no more.

Now, sir, we have a proposition here which is worthy of careful consideration. I don't say it is perfect; but I will state to the gentlemen who attack it, that while it may be defective in some respects, nevertheless it is within the capacity of this Convention to remedy such defects as may exist in this section. I do not believe it was proposed to offer a complete system in one single section. But it is founded on equality and justice, and after we adopt the principle we can follow it up and make it effective, and arrange the details. The idea laid down here is that all property, all wealth in the State of California, of whatever character, shall be taxed—everything that has value, shall be taxed according to its value. By this means we will bring the assessment roll up to something near what it ought to be. It is estimated that about sixteen twentieths of the property of California escapes taxation, and, sir, to provide a way by which this property can be brought to bear its proper burden of taxation, and if we can do that, the mere pittance of the cost of this Convention will be more than paid for in three months, under such a system. By adding to the assessment roll that which now escapes, we necessarily reduce the rate of taxation, and of course this will result in great benefits to the people, and will be fully appreciated. It is our bounden duty to bring this property on to the assessment roll. Now, if some of it is incumbered, in that event the incumbrance might be held by parties outside of the State, and by deducting the amount of incumbrance, we would lose so much tax on that property. Take a railroad company. Most of their debts are owing to foreigners. Therefore, let us assess every bit of property at its precise value.

MR. BLACKMER. Tax everything that can be exchanged.

MR. FILCHER. I say the paper has no value; it represents something tangible somewhere else—either in land, or other possessions. There are certain tangible values—money, real estate, personal property, etc—existing. If we can find all this property we will add greatly to the assessment roll. But where a man is so unfortunate as to have ten thousand dollars worth of property incumbered to the extent of nine thousand dollars, I say it is not just; he has to pay interest on that, and he must work his way out. I say that one thousand dollars should be his just tax, and no more; therefore, it is provided in this that he shall have a rebate to that extent. It holds the property wherever found, for the tax, no matter who owns it, or in whose possession it is. I would make the property pay the tax; if you do not you are liable to lose it. But, though the party holding it may not own it in fact, on account of the incumbrance, yet he pays the tax and is entitled to a rebate to the amount of the incumbrance, and he therefore pays taxes on exactly what he is worth—such a system is defined in this section. If I pay taxes on five thousand dollars worth of property which is incumbered, though I pay the tax this year, and perhaps the year following, yet, when such time may come round that I shall pay off my indebtedness, then I go to my creditor and get both interest and principal back upon the taxes I have paid for him. He is the man that is worth the money, and why should he not, at least indirectly, be made to pay the tax? That is the system here. That is the idea. I, in the meantime, pay exactly what I am worth, and he is paying on what he is worth. The system is not direct, but we have to do the best we can. It is conceded that you cannot do it directly. The ingenuity of the members here will not do it. The intelligence of the world for the last two hundred years, though striving after this result, has never produced a system that is direct. I do not believe that we can frame, with all our wisdom, a system that will work perfect equality, but we are justified in driving at that end, and coming as near to perfection as possible. I say that while this system may be good in many respects, it is good as far as it goes, and I think it becomes our duty—we are not prepared to vote on it now—to consider it and satisfy ourselves whether there is any other system advocated here which will be better.

There is another very important proposition. There are institutions on this coast, foreign institutions, insurance companies, etc., who are doing business on a capital of almost millions, many thousands at least, and when the Assessor goes there he finds in their possession a few hundred dollars worth of property, and there is not a thing he can find to assess of all their wealth, while, at the same time, their hundreds of thousands invested draws from the people of the State a large interest. I do not know how we will reach them, and yet, if they can be reached, I say we should do it. The system of taxing everything will reach them largely, because their money will be found at the banks to some extent. I have no labored argument to make, I am simply in favor of this proposition. Perhaps it is not, within itself, a perfect system, but let us give it our calm and earnest consideration, and if we discover where it is defective, let us proceed to remedy it.

SPEECH OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I do not propose to occupy much time in the discussion of this question. I feel my inability to understand the subject. It is with extreme hesitation, even, that I venture to cast my vote. I have not heard all the discussion since the question of taxation first came up; but there are certain ideas that occur to me. I have certain opinions as to what is best in the abstract; and I have a sort of a knowledge, too, as to the opinions of others.

This subject of taxation is one in which we should not only be governed by our own judgment as to what we consider best, but also as to what is most satisfactory to the people. Now, there may be several systems proposed, one of which you may think is best, but which I might think bad, and a majority of the people might be better satisfied with some other system. Therefore, I think it is my duty to favor, as far as I can conscientiously, that which will be more satisfactory to the people of the State on the subject of taxation, because it is the people who have to pay, and above all things else taxation should be as near as possible satisfactory to the people. This subject is one that was discussed as much as any other during the canvass preceding the election, as well as subsequent to the election. I heard other questions discussed, but none to such an extent as this. Now, it was conceded that our system under the old Constitution was very defective—did not work equality. The old Constitution, with the construction of the Supreme Court, whether the people were right or wrong, worked what they considered to be inequality. They demanded that all property should be assessed. I have heard them say that a man who loans one hundred thousand dollars, and lives on the interest, should pay taxes on that one hundred thousand dollars, and that it should be assessed as a debt. It is not necessary for me to express my views individually as to whether it is right or wrong, or whether it is advisable, or politic, or impolitic, good or bad. I am satisfied that a majority of the people of this State demand that everything that has a value shall be taxed. On the other hand it is urged by one or two gentlemen here that only tangible property should be assessed. I might personally be in favor of that principle. But let us do one of two things. Let us say that no property except that which is actually visible, shall be taxed, or else let us tax everything that represents value. Tax a man's debts and dues, and credits, and income, and capital; tax notes, bonds, mortgages—tax them all, and allow no deduction whatever, or else tax none of them.

Now, this scheme proposed by the gentleman from Placer, I say, as far as that is concerned, if it is adopted by this Convention, annulling all the reforms for which this Convention was called, it is useless. There is nothing in this scheme that could not have been passed by the Legislature under the old Constitution, and this Convention was called mainly for the purpose of remedying the evils existing under the present Constitution in regard to taxation. Our Constitution requires that all property shall be taxed uniformly and equally. Our Supreme Court has decided that notes, bonds—evidences of indebtedness—are not property. This scheme does not propose to remedy this defect. It does not propose to tax these evidences of indebtedness. It does not claim to, or else the last two gentlemen who advocated it are wrong. I say it is double taxation to tax these things, but I am not prepared to say that it is wrong. There are strong reasons in its favor. But this scheme does not propose to tax debts. It only changes it, and interferes with people's private transactions, so that if a man owes one thousand dollars and pays ten per cent. per annum, why, when he comes to pay up the note, at the end of two or three years, he can deduct the amount of the taxes on that for the whole time. If I owe John Smith one thousand dollars, and the tax on that is at the rate of twenty-five dollars a year, then I may, at the end of the year, pay him that one thousand dollars, after having deducted the twenty-five dollars from the amount of the note for the taxes which I paid. I would like to know if there is anything in the present Constitution prohibiting the Legislature from passing a law allowing him to do that? I think not. That is a matter entirely within the control of the Legislature.

Now, the advocates of this measure of taxing debts argue like this: that property and men should be taxed in accordance with the protection they receive from the Government. The protection a man receives is in accordance with what he owns—what he has. Therefore I might not be worth a single dollar; but I come here and settle down, and find somebody who will sell me a farm on credit, worth, say five thousand dollars. I take the farm and use it. It is worth five thousand dollars. The Government protects me in the possession of that five thousand dollars' worth. I have the use of it. If any trespasser enters there, I can appeal to the law to eject him, as in any other respect my right in respect to that farm can be protected by appealing to the law. Therefore, according to the theory which these gentlemen who are in favor of taxing everything advance, that farm should be assessed without deducting anything. Now, the reasoning is good, because the Government protects me to the extent of the value of that farm. On the other hand, the gentlemen say I have five thousand dollars borrowed from my neighbor. I pay taxes on the money, while he is taxed on the note, and they say that is double taxation. I say it is double taxation, but is it wrong? My creditor pays taxes on the five thousand dollars, because the Government protects him in the possession of it, and if any person should steal it, the Government would arrest the thief, convict him, and send him to State Prison; and he receives five thousand dollars' worth of protection. And if I refuse to pay him the debt, he can appeal to the law and compel me to pay him, and, therefore, in that respect he is protected by the law. Therefore, the advocates of that system of taxation say that only in that way can it be made equal. Whatever my private views may be, I know that the people demand that everything shall be taxed, not only tangible property, but evidences of indebtedness. Now, if we do it, let us tax everything. Let us have no delusions. Gentlemen say that they shall not be taxed directly, but that the debtor shall have a right to deduct the amount of the debt from the value of his property. That is only a delusion; it is no reform. It only says one person shall pay taxes instead of another. The Legislature can say that now. It does not say now that the taxes shall be paid by the borrower or owner of the property, because sometimes it is a very difficult thing for even the Courts to decide who is the owner of the property. They say it is sufficient to hold a man liable to pay the taxes, simply because he has possession and control of it. Now, I am not in favor of interfering in any way between the debtor and creditor. Let them attend to their own affairs. Some men will be wealthier than others. Brains has ruled the world over, and some men will get rich and some will remain poor. I say let us enact a clause directly, declaring that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value. Then let us go on and define what property shall consist of. Let us say it shall consist of everything tangible or intangible, debts, capital, and everything of value capable of private ownership. Let us define the word "property." Then leave everything else to the Legislature to collect the tax, and let them say who shall have charge of it. If the Legislature in their wisdom had thought it advisable to pass a law like any of these propositions here—like this one, for instance—why, under the present Constitution they had full power to do so. They may say the debtor may pay the tax upon his debts and then deduct the amount from his creditors, or any other arrangement of the kind they might see fit. But why should we make it a constitutional provision? It is entirely experimental, and if we find we have made a mistake, as we are liable to, then you cannot correct it except by calling another Convention. Whereas, if we declare the broad principle, and leave the minutia to the Legislature, to pass laws regulating it from time to time, then, if the scheme does not work well, the very next session of the Legislature it can be modified. The great evil has been in the past that the Legislature has been hampered too much.

Time having been called the gentleman took his seat.

SPEECH OF MR. REDDY.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: This article, this section, says taxation shall be uniform. The people of this State have been complaining for years because they were not uniform. We have heard what the farmers had to say. They have stated their wrongs. I don't think the people sent us here for the purpose of making a Constitution for the farmers alone, or for any class of persons or property in the State. Now, the farmer complains about many inequalities—that he is treated unjustly. What would he say if he was first taxed for the privilege of engaging in farming, taxed for following the occupation of farming, and then taxed on the value of his farm, and of his personal property, and then, if he happened to incorporate, taxed on his capital stock? Let us see how many times miners are taxed, and see how the farmers would like to be taxed that way. In fact, if the State is going to be taxed four or five times over I am perfectly willing, but I am not willing to have the miners taxed four or five times, and allow the farmers to escape with one tax. There is a provision in the legislative article that each corporation shall be assessed so many dollars upon each share of their stock, or on each one thousand shares, which amounts to a considerable sum. In many cases the money paid to the State would be a great deal larger than the amount of money required to incorporate the enterprise in view, for many times it takes one thousand, or two thousand, or may be twenty thousand dollars to determine whether there is any prospect or not, and if half that sum has to be paid into the State treasury, the enterprise will fall to the ground. That is a tax upon the right to mine in this State. I had always understood it to be the policy of this State to encourage mining, but that seems to be a direct blow at the industry. It is said, however, that it is simply to prevent wildcat mining. Then what is the result? The general enterprise must be destroyed, if there can be no prospecting done. Every mining enterprise that proves a failure, I suppose, may be termed "wildcat," for in every case it requires work and money to determine whether there is a mine or not. But in order to prevent a few wildcat speculations you are willing to destroy the entire industry of legitimate mining. Now, that is the first tax the miners have to bear, and it amounts to a very heavy assessment.

The next is, to assess all property owned by a corporation in the county where the property is. The man works in Winter getting out ore to be worked in Summer, and when the Assessor comes around he taxes ore on the dump. Now, the farmer says that growing crops should not be taxed. The miner takes out ore during the Winter and places it upon the dump, expecting to realize upon it during the Summer season. But that is again taxed. Then, if he does not get through with this ore in time, the Tax Collector will come around again and collect another tax upon the bullion, under this system. Now, we will leave the county. I think he has been taxed sufficiently. I think the farmer would be satisfied with that tax. I think he would conclude that he was pretty thoroughly taxed. Now, go to the City of San Francisco, and there he will be taxed on the corporate stock of his company—another tax. How is that tax to be ascertained? By the value of his mining property held by the company in another county. Is that the end of it? Now, there is where the trouble comes in. You tax the property at its full value, and then tax the corporate stock, which is the mere representative of that property. Now, he is taxed again upon his corporate franchise. What is that corporate franchise? It involves the sole right to some concern. He is taxed three times. Now, are gentlemen really serious in attempting to load the mining industry of this State by such onerous taxes as these? There are certainly three taxes. The franchise has no value in itself; it represents the possessions of the company. It is considered but as a representative of value. Then the capital stock, which is only a representative of value. Then the property itself can be taxed again in the county. There are three distinct taxes based upon one and the same property. It needs no further argument to show that this blow at the mining industry is entirely unnecessary. I do not know anything about this question which has been pending here for some time, between the miners and the farmers along these streams. I do not know whether or not it has any influence here. It certainly should not have any influence with the farmers, for it is not to their interest to strike a vital blow at the great mining industry of the State. They cannot afford to destroy the mines. Certainly, such a course as has been pursued here is not suggested by reason. If taxes are to be uniform, this action is certainly not the result of reason. It is not a just conclusion to arrive at, no matter how you look at it.

There are three distinct taxes. It is sheer nonsense. It is destructive of the great interests of this State. If gentlemen mean to be fair—and we are bound to presume that they intend to be so—then this proposition is indefensible upon any ground of common sense or reason, for it is not fair to anybody. That it is not good policy seems too plain for argument. It is not good policy for any class of persons in this State to attempt to destroy as valuable an industry as this seems to be. And if it is unfair and impolitic, I do not see why it is to be done, because it is nonsense to say that it is done to prevent fraud. It will not affect wildcats, except as to this first assessment, and that will be avoided. That assessment will fall only upon bona fide transactions. The wildcats have nothing to tax, nothing that you can collect on. There is a misapprehension in regard to wildcats. A wildcat is one that is incorporated for the purpose of selling stock, when there is no property of which that stock is the representative. I appeal to the sense of fairness and justice of this Convention to defeat these measures in the article reported by the committee. I ask you to look at the policy of the thing. If it be desirable to have this Constitution adopted it will be necessary to strike this out, for, in addition to the people who are opposed to this Constitution, you will array every miner in this State against it, because the miners cannot vote for an instrument which is aimed at their destruction. They are not simple-minded enough to indorse a measure which will cut their own throats. And when the proper time comes, if these amendments are voted down, and the opportunity presents itself, the proper amendment will be offered.

REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I would like to say one word in explanation to Mr. Reddy. I don't know of any antagonism between the farmers and the miners. The interests of the farmer are just the same to the State as the interests of the miner. They are two great interests upon which the prosperity of the State rests, and I am certain there is no farmer in this Convention or out of it, who wishes to do anything to cut at the interest of mining, or prevent the working of the mining claims of the State. I have paid no attention to the section which relates to miners and that interest, because I hoped such gentlemen as Mr. Reddy and others, who are well acquainted with the subject, would get up and speak and show us what would be fair. The reason I rose was to assure the gentleman, that as far as I know, there is no antagonism between the farmers and the miners. They both well know that it is necessary to be fairly taxed, and that the prosperity of both farmer and miner depends upon our doing so. And his allusion to what he thought was making the farmers feel hard towards the miners, I think is a mistake. I don't think there will be any measures adopted that will injure the miners. Never such a thought came into my mind. They are only anxious to be taxed equally and fairly, like every other occupation in the State. I say there is the same reason for showing leniency towards the miner that there is towards the farmer, because the miners' prosperity is the farmers' prosperity, and the prosperity of these two great interests means the prosperity of every other interest in the State.

REMARKS OF MR. STUART.

MR. STUART. Mr. Chairman: I do not know what they are discussing here. I believe it is the taxation article. I don't know of any gentleman either who understands what they are discussing. When I was elected here, I was elected under a promise to tax mortgages. We were all elected on that platform from my county. We were all placed before the nominating convention and catechised about it. I think the only thing we need is the old Constitution, and a provision in it that mortgages must be taxed. Then let the Legislature make its laws governing the details. As far as the farming interest is concerned, I am one of the farmers and a vine-grower. We are taxed largely. We first pay one hundred dollars to the government for a license. We pay so much on every gallon of brandy made. We pay taxes on the product every year, if we keep it over more than one year. Then we pay taxes on the property, and upon the soil. Now, I would like some gentleman to offer an amendment to the old Constitution taxing mortgages. That is all we want.

MR. ROLFE. Would you not tax all solvent debts?

MR. STUART. Certainly; tax all solvent debts. The merchant is taxed on what he has on his shelves. He gives his estimate of the value. He knows about what his stock is. The farmer is taxed on everything that is seen. As well described by Mr. White, the Assessor takes carpets and all. We don't open a silver box when we answer the questions. Now, I would just add one line to the old Constitution, and then adopt it. One line, I believe, would contain all we want to add to the old Constitution. I am satisfied that I pay as much tax as any man on this floor who is engaged in the cultivation of the soil, hence I speak knowingly when I say that the farmers do not demand the complete destruction of the old Constitution. I make these remarks in order that we may get down to work and amend this article by the change of a line or two.

SPEECH OF MR. BARTON.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: The question seems to be pretty well exhausted. I listened yesterday with a very great degree of pleasure, to the very able address delivered by Judge Belcher. I think there was more in his language than in that of any other gentleman I have heard. As has been remarked, this subject is perhaps one of greater importance than any other which will have to be handled and discussed by this Convention. The proposition of my colleague from Humboldt, in my humble judgment, not only meets the desires of the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Stuart, but it goes farther and shows the way clearly how the difficulty can be adjusted between the borrower and the lender. In regard to this subject of taxing mortgages, it is one of the utmost importance to the people of this State. We find to-day the whole business system of the State demoralized. For instance, two gentlemen came from the State of Iowa—which is a case in point—came into this State with fifty thousand dollars each. One of them, being of rather a thrifty turn of mind, says to his friend: "I have fifty thousand dollars, and I see my coin will bring one and a half and two per cent. per month, therefore I propose to loan my money out to these gentlemen who are engaged in agriculture, and take a mortgage, and I can then retire to my home and sleep in perfect security, and know that not only my interest but my principal is secure and safe." He proceeds accordingly. The other visits the country and says to his friend: "I am not much of a Shylock, and I prefer to engage in active, energetic business; I will engage in the manufacturing business." When the Assessor comes around, he has no trouble in assessing the man, for his property is all visible, and he assesses it to the full extent. Well, the other individual who holds his mortgages drawing interest, pays not a dollar tax to the county or State. That is the condition the State is in to-day, especially the lumber interest in the county which I in part represent. Every mill in that county, without exception, is to-day locked up, and not a wheel is being turned. Why is this? Because of the untold millions that men have locked up in real estate under mortgage, where they escape taxation. Now the people demand this reform at our hands. I do not believe any honorable man will refuse to listen to that demand. We have heard gentlemen talk about public clamor, but this demand comes up in such a shape that we cannot disregard it. It is one of the clamors that you must listen to. In regard to the personal plans laid before us, I do not understand them. They are either too deep for my comprehension, or so mystified that I cannot grapple with them. I do believe that the system now before this body is an intelligent and feasible one. I had hoped that there would be a committee appointed for the purpose of drafting a plan for an income tax, in connection with the report of this committee. I still believe that the only way out of this difficulty is the creation of a new committee to investigate and act upon the subject. The plan presented by Mr. Huestis is clear in the extreme to my mind; much more so than anything that has been presented before this body, and I hope it may be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I don't expect to take up the time of this Convention. It has been ably discussed, and at some length. Taking the different arguments, and the different speeches, and the different views expressed upon this subject, and it would seem that we had almost enough of it. I have heard something said with regard to double taxation, and that it is looked for by the people. Now, I am not going to argue the propriety of double taxation at all. In a constitutional provision, providing for raising revenues for the State, the great object is to get that which is just to the State and to the people, and it is not the part of a Constitutional Convention to go out of the way in order to regulate matters between individuals. That may be done by act of the Legislature, or otherwise. The subject of rebate has been brought up. It looks very plausible and quite feasible. But in the midst of all this matter, it is necessary that we should recollect the manner in which the members look upon this subject, when they were almost as well informed upon it as now, before the people of the State, who, by reason of their oppressions, have taken the matter into serious consideration. There is hardly any portion of the country but what knows men who, owing to the inequalities in this respect, that were worth ten thousand, or hundreds of thousands, who escape taxation. Now, I am satisfied and convinced that many members of this body came here pledged to tax mortgages and solvent debts. They advocated it before the people. I am impressed with the opinion that this doctrine should be carried out by constitutional enactment. Now, I am fully convinced that it is wrong to make any man pay more than he should, on account of the decisions that have been rendered in regard to notes and mortgages not being taxable. By reason of this exemption some men pay more than their proper amount. This has been one of the great causes for calling this Convention. We should be careful and not disappoint the people. We should carry out these principles.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. It seems to me that this house is too thin to come to a vote to-night, and I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section two of the report of the committee, and the amendments thereto, are before the committee.

REMARKS OF MR. RHODES.

MR. RHODES. Mr. Chairman: I do not propose to discuss this question at length, but with the indulgence of the committee I desire to comment upon section two of the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation. At the outset I desire to say that I cordially indorse that system of assessment and taxation, which contemplates a tax upon the net value of the taxpayer's property; or, in other words, I propose to allow the taxpayer to deduct from the assessed value of his property the entire amount of his indebtedness to bona fide residents of the State. I believe, that while no system can be devised which is absolutely and positively correct, and which will bear equally upon all, this system approaches nearer a correct system than any other that has been suggested. Under this system the taxpayer pays only on what he is actually worth. The second section of the report I believe recognizes that principle, and to that extent I shall heartily support the section as reported by the committee; but there is one other feature in that section which I cannot indorse, and when an amendment is in order, if an amendment of that kind is not offered by some other member of the committee, I shall offer an amendment with the view of eliminating that portion which relates to the assessing or taxing of the capital stock of corporations. I believe that that is seeking to tax not only the substance, but the shadow of the substance. The property of a corporation is its money, and its credits, and its personal property, and when all its property is taxed, the duty of the Assessor should end there, and he should not proceed to assess the capital stock of a corporation, which is simply a name. You might as well assess a building during the daytime, and at the same time assess the shadow of that building. The object is to reach certain corporations who have offices in this State, who are doing business here, and yet whose property in whole or in part is beyond the boundaries of the State. If that is the intent of that section, I think that it is in the nature of a penalty imposed upon the members of the corporations who are endeavoring to do business in this State, and I think there is a more direct and more equitable way of reaching it. It discriminates against that class of men who are doing business here as against our own citizens, and to be consistent with ourselves we should discountenance any proposition which looks to a discrimination, either between our own citizens, whether they have property here or not, and those who have property here. I therefore oppose that feature in section two. With that exception I am prepared to sustain that section. I believe it approaches nearer to what is demanded by the people of the State than anything else proposed.

In regard to the amendments, the result would be the same. I think that the mode prescribed of reaching the same result would be more circuitous, and that it would not work practically. It would not work without a good deal of friction, and in fact in less than twelve months would be thoroughly and heartily condemned by the taxpayers of the State. It is entirely too uncertain in its operations, and involved in too many intricacies. It might work well in some few instances, where the taxpayer was indebted to one or two individuals, but it is no part of the duty of the Assessor to keep accounts between men, and when it comes to the case of business men, whose debts are multitudinous and in various accounts, I apprehend that it would fail entirely to work. I believe that the result would be that it would be heartily condemned in less than twelve months from the time it came into operation. For that reason I am opposed to the amendment, and in favor of section two of that report, only amended so as to eliminate from that report the proposition to tax the capital stock of corporations.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I did not intend to say a word upon this subject, but there seems to be so much apparent misunderstanding, not to say bad feeling abroad in the Convention—and by that I mean divided upon the mortgage question, and not in a political sense—that I feel obliged to offer a word or two. The gentleman who preceded me says he is opposed to the amendment before the committee, because it is involved in intricacies. I am opposed to it for the same reason, that it involves too much arithmetic. I am likewise opposed to the first amendment, for the same reason. I am opposed to the report of the committee for the same reason—sections two, five, and eleven—they involve too much calculation and arithmetic, matters that ought to be confined to the revenue bill to be enacted by the Legislature. There is no doubt but what the most of us were elected with the understanding that the desire of our constituents was that mortgages should be taxed. Indeed, it was so expressed in some of the platforms, but by that I do not understand that the people meant that a man should be taxed for all the property that he possessed, and then taxed again if he happened to owe something on that property. That is the proposition. If the term "taxing mortgages" means such a proposition as that, it seems to me that there can be no doubt that it is double taxation in its worst sense and in its worst form. It is certain to operate against the debtor class, and in favor of the creditor. Now, I apprehend that the true doctrine, which will not be disputed by any one, is that the State seeks to tax once, and only once, all the property in the State, and to tax no fictitious evidences of indebtedness. To do that, I apprehend it is not necessary to tax mortgages, and it is not necessary to go into the intricate system reported by the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, or even that proposed by the amendment now under consideration. Instead of that scheme I would endeavor to adopt something like this: the declaration is that "all property shall be taxed, except"—and then let the exceptions follow. First, that belonging to the United States; second, that belonging to the State; third, if so decided, growing crops, or anything else decided to be an exception. I would then simply declare, in three lines, "no deduction shall be made from any assessment on account of debts of the person assessed." I would then declare that the tax assessed to and paid by any debtor shall be, at the time of such assessment or payment, an offset to the debt to an amount in proportion to the whole amount so assessed to him. There is an end to the whole matter. Upon those three declarations I apprehend it would not be difficult for the Legislature to build a revenue law that would be as perfect as anything human can be.

As to the assessment and taxation of the franchises and capital stock of incorporated companies, there is no doubt but a better scheme ought to be devised than any now existing for that purpose; but I do not understand what gentlemen mean when they say—and I find it in the report of the committee and both of the amendments—that all property, including the franchises and capital stock of corporations, shall be taxed. It seems to me that they must mean double taxation. It seems to me that it must mean that the franchises of corporations must be taxed, and that the capital stock of the corporation must be taxed. I am not in favor of such a proposition as that. I do not think it is right to tax a corporation more than any person. If they are taxed once that is sufficient. I am in favor of taxing the capital stock of all companies incorporated and doing business in this State, in the principal office of the corporation, in place of any kind of property that they may own. It seems to me that is the best way to get at the value of the property. It comprehends everything. It comprehends all the property, the good will, and everything. It is all expressed in the market value of its capital stock. I am in favor of taxing all domestic corporations in that way. Foreign corporations we cannot, and must go for their property as we do for other property. Hence, I do not see that we ought to include the word "franchises," unless we say that this shall not be construed to mean double taxation. Then I do not know but that it would be well enough; but I do not see any need of it.

I would like to answer one objection to this scheme of prohibiting any deductions from the assessment and of making the debtor pay the tax in the first place, and that the tax be a receipt to him in full for so much of his debt. A gentleman spoke to me of the case of a merchant doing business in the interior and owing money in San Francisco, for instance. How shall that be arranged? The Assessor comes round and taxes the stock of goods he has in his store, and he owes money to different persons in San Francisco, and how shall we arrange this matter? It is the simplest thing in the world. On the day on which the merchant at Auburn is assessed for the stock of goods in his store, on that day he writes up his ledger and charges to the account of his creditor in San Francisco such proportion of the tax assessed to him, as the debt that he owes him has to the whole amount of property assessed by him. It is that day a lien against the debt. It is on that day made a receipt against that debt, and there is no arithmetic necessary scarcely. And I will say that this is a thing which occurs every hour of the day in every bank in the State. A debtor there owes the bank. He fails to pay the tax. The bank ascertains that to be the case, pays the tax, and immediately charges up to that debtor the tax paid on that mortgaged property. And so on. A single instance illustrates the whole business. I have yet failed to notice a single illustration where there is any inequality in the working of the rule, or where it would be liable to work any injustice. Yes, there is one, and that is the case of a merchant at Auburn, for instance, who has nothing at all except money to pay freight, and his credit in San Francisco on which he gets goods and puts them in his store in the interior. The Assessor comes round the next day and he does not assess him at the cash value of the goods, but he puts it below. Even if the freight is added it is assessed less than the invoice value of the goods. That is said to be the general rule of assessment in the interior, at least it was so stated to me by an ex-Assessor. Supposing that to be the case, then I would say that he would collect of his creditor more tax than he has paid himself. But then there could not be a very great difference. If such did happen to be the case it would be so small that it would amount to nothing, and is one of those imperfections of all human things that cannot possibly be avoided.

MR. OHLEYER. Do you argue that it would be right to exempt that man from taxation although he did business on ten thousand dollars, or five thousand dollars?

MR. REYNOLDS. I exempt him from nothing. I tax the goods. The goods are taxed in the store, the whole of them, and if he owes for the whole of them the whole tax is set off. The man has got nothing. He has nothing to tax; then why tax him?

MR. OHLEYER. It seems to me that he ought to pay something for the protection of his goods, and for the privilege of doing business in that community.

MR. REYNOLDS. That is the very mistake that gentlemen make here. When they undertake to tax evidences of indebtedness and tax protection that have no value in themselves. The mistake is made when you depart from the fact that the State is entitled to a tax upon property alone and nothing else.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired under the rule.

[Cries of "Leave" and "No."]

MR. CROSS. I move that the gentleman have leave to proceed.

MR. REYNOLDS. I do not desire any further time. I will just say one thing, that it seems to be a matter of no concern to the State whatever who owes, provided all the property in the State is once taxed. That is sufficient, and if we can arrive at a scheme of that kind without involving ourselves in intricacies, even though it is a departure from the ordinary method we have been pursuing, I do not see why it should not be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. STUART.

MR. STUART. Mr. Chairman: I do not think that I will change any one's ideas by speaking, but I am opposed to all rebate of taxes. I am opposed to all double taxation. I think that the only thing we require to perfect our work is to place a few lines in the old Constitution defining what property is. Mortgages and solvent debts are property. When you commence a system of deductions you open the door to fraud. All experiments of that kind in other States have shown it to be so, and I do not know that I can express it better than to have the Secretary read a paragraph from the report of the Tax Commissioners of New York; it is on page sixty-two.

THE SECRETARY read:

"And yet, at the same time, it is difficult to see how a system which proposes to tax all personal property uniformly can be made to work with any degree of success, unless the right, or privilege to affect or diminish valuation by indebtedness, is strictly and explicitly forbidden, inasmuch as it is this very right or privilege which furnishes the opportunity whereby personal property can most successfully evade taxation. Nothing is more easy than to create debts for the purpose of diminishing valuation, which no investigation on the part of Assessors will suffice to prove fictitious, and yet of such a character that individuals of easy conscience will find no difficulty in making oath to their validity. In the debate which took place on this subject in the Constitutional Convention of eighteen hundred and sixty-seven and eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, numerous examples were given by delegates of expedients of this character which had fallen under their observation, and the Chairman of the Finance Committee declared: 'that in the county and the towns and cities in the interior of the State the rule is almost universal for persons to get up an indebtedness of some kind or other, so that their property may escape taxation.' One of the most common and successful methods now resorted to is the taking of an unfair but apparently strictly legal advantage of the law exempting the securities of the United States from taxation. Thus, for example, an individual desiring to evade taxation on capital invested in general mercantile, or speculative business, first purchases United States bonds, we may suppose, to the amount of one hundred thousand dollars; he then borrows on his promissory note, using the bonds as collateral, one hundred thousand dollars, or some smaller sum, and invests the money so obtained in the business in question. When the day of assessment comes round, a return is made under oath, if need be, one hundred thousand dollars, business capital; one hundred thousand dollars, just debts and liabilities; no personal property subject to taxation. If inquiry is made further respecting the United States bonds purchased, the answer is made legitimately, that in respect to these the State authorities have no jurisdiction. Since the commencement of the present year, moreover, a case involving this very principle of exemption, has been brought before the Supreme Court of New York (general term, January third, eighteen hundred and seventy-one), by the Tax Commissioners of the City of New York, and a decision given in favor of its legality, thus illustrating how difficult it is, holding on to a system of universal taxation, to once exempt any description of intangible, incorporeal property from assessment, without at the same time opening a door to innumerable opportunities for fraud and evasion. And it should be further borne in mind, that this door has been most effectually opened, both by National and State authorities, and that it is now entirely beyond the power of any individual State to close it."

MR. STUART. I have nothing further to say. I think we are ready for a vote.

MR. BIGGS. I believe that only relates to the personal property.

MR. STUART. No deduction whatever.

REMARKS OF MR. KEYES.

MR. KEYES. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, Mr. Huestis, and for these reasons: It looks to me as if opening the door for this rebate or deduction would do away with all our taxes, and in a little while there would be nothing paid. If you allow the individual to deduct his liabilities, I do not see why you would not have to do the same with the corporations, as they all ought to be treated alike. If you allow the deduction in the case of an individual, why not allow it in the case of a corporation? If you allow it in the case of a corporation, it would be exempt entirely from taxation. To my mind, the only thing to do is to tax all the property we can find. I believe in taxing mortgages; I believe there is property in a mortgage. I do not know any reason why a man should not pay a tax on his farm. He is equally protected in it as if he had no mortgage on his farm. He borrows five hundred dollars, or one thousand dollars, or any other sum upon his farm. It does not put that money out of existence. He pays the tax on the farm, and the other man pays the tax on the mortgage. I cannot see any double taxation in that. They both have an interest in the country; they both have means here. One has lands and the other money. He simply exchanges the money for the mortgage. The money is all there, and I think they are both subject to taxation.

MR. TOWNSEND. I should call it double taxation. For instance: two men own a farm worth one hundred thousand dollars, each having an interest of fifty thousand dollars in it. One sells to the other his interest in the farm, and takes a mortgage for fifty thousand dollars on the whole farm. There is not a dollar exchange, but they have created a debt of fifty thousand dollars, which, under your system, would be an increase of property to the amount of fifty thousand dollars without a dollar created in any way at all.

MR. KEYES. Could you not get fifty thousand dollars for your mortgage?

MR. TOWNSEND. No. It is only paper.

MR. KEYES. You might call it a double taxation, but I cannot see it in that light. I see a commercial value which you have created.

MR. TOWNSEND. Have you increased the property?

MR. KEYES. Certainly you have. You have created a commercial value.

MR. HEISKELL. Why do you buy a mortgage?

MR. TOWNSEND. There is nothing exchanged except the mortgage. There is nothing tangible created, but, in fact, there is fifty thousand dollars more to be assessed, according to his theory. It is to be assessed when, in fact, it does not exist.

MR. HEISKELL. Something exists.

MR. TULLY. The mortgage is worth fifty thousand dollars.

REMARKS OF MR. EVEY.

MR. EVEY. Mr. Chairman: I do not expect to enlighten this Convention upon this subject much, but I wish to say a few words. This question of taxation seems to be a mooted question, and seems to be hard for the Convention to understand. It has always been considered a very difficult question, one of the most difficult in all the range of political economy. So long as government exists so long will taxes have to be collected for the support of that government. The object should be to collect just a sufficient amount of money from the people to support an economical and efficient government. Anything above that amount would be robbing the people. Now this amount of taxes should be levied so as to operate equally upon all the people of the State, in proportion to what they possess. That is to say, every man ought to pay taxes for what he is worth and no more. I believe this we all agree to. The manner in which to obtain this end seems to be the difficult question. Now I am opposed to assessing the debts and then making an offset. I believe the proposition of Mr. Boggs, as presented by Judge Hale, of Placer, would attain that end better than any other proposition I have heard proposed yet in this Convention, and it seems to me as if it was easy of execution. Under that proposition it seems to me that every person in this State would pay his equal proportion of the taxes, and there is no other way that I can see that we can arrive at it. I shall sustain that proposition and give my vote for it.

REMARKS OF MR. TOWNSEND.

MR. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman: I do not wish to be understood that I am not in favor of taxing mortgages and trust deeds and evidences of indebtedness. I am in favor of it, but I believe that the deductions should be made. I think to assess both the property and the mortgage upon it would be unquestionably double taxation, consequently I am opposed to that. But I am in favor, where these are a matter of record, that they should be assessed, and that the person owning the property should pay the tax, and that that should be a receipt against his debt. His Sheriff's receipt should be a credit upon the debt. That would obviate all the difficulty. If the debt was never paid he certainly could not be any the loser. The property would have paid the tax, so that they could not trump up any case to escape it.

MR. REYNOLDS. I would like to ask one question—if that plan will not operate in making a distinction between debts of record and other debts, between mortgages and evidences of indebtedness not secured by mortgage?

MR. TOWNSEND. A solvent note is an evidence of indebtedness.

MR. REYNOLDS. But if there is no evidence it is very easy for a man to say he did not own one.

MR. TOWNSEND. The commercial business of any country is upon the basis of security. All indebtedness is secured in some way, and is in notes, mortgages, or trust deeds, and is a matter of record. To carry it further than that would be to complicate the system so that it would be entirely impracticable.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: It is evident that all property should be taxed, and it seems from the expressions of the members of this Convention that the intention is to tax all property. There has been a difference of opinion as to what constitutes property. A certain kind of paper called mortgages has been decided by the Supreme Court of our State not to be property. Now, we know there was a time when such were regarded as property, and taxed accordingly. The great question comes up, should all men pay in proportion to what they are protected in? For instance: if two men have a band of sheep; one has two thousand, and the other has one thousand. This man who has one thousand pays one third of the expense in taking care of that three thousand. The same in cattle; and it should be the same in every description of property. Say, for instance, a man has a mortgage on a certain amount of property. There may be three thousand dollars' worth of property, and the mortgage covers one thousand dollars' worth. Here is the man that has the land. The land is under his supervision; he has it still, and he is protected in it by law; and the man who holds the mortgage to the amount of one thousand dollars is protected in it by law. The law sustains him in that; it is worth that amount to him; that belongs to him; and the laws of the land, which require him to pay taxes, protect him fully and effectually in that mortgage and what it demands; it is a worth of so much, and he is protected in it. As to going outside of the assessment to show how this worth originated, it is out of the bounds of a constitutional clause. But has he that much worth that he is protected in? We all know he has. Then let the property, whatever it be, be assessed to the man who has it when you find it. When you find a man who has three thousand dollars' worth of property under his supervision, and he is protected in it by the laws of the State, let him pay his taxes on that; and the other man, who has his one thousand dollars' worth of actual property—for it is worth that to him; it is good for that amount, and the laws of the country protect him in it—let him equally, justly, squarely, and fairly, pay upon the worth of that. We must come down to this main principle, that every man shall pay in proportion to the amount of value in his possession. Then we have got the main principle which the people of this State have demanded. I know that by talking upon the matter, and arguing, and using words, we come to believe a good deal like the ancient philosophers, who believed that there is no truth in anything: but if a man has in his possession anything from which he can realize so much, it is worth that to him; and if he is protected in it by the laws of the land, he should pay his taxes accordingly.

REMARKS OF MR. GREGG.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: This thing of taxing solvent debts will not do. I have read it, and I believe it, that the debts of this land are about five times greater than the amount of property in it; and if we tax solvent debts, and deduct them from the property, it will come about one fifth from giving any taxes from any source. When we realize that the debts are so much greater than the actual property, we see at once that it is utterly impossible to get any taxes whatever, if we deduct solvent debts. Now, there is over one tenth of the business of the land—Mr. Edgerton says ninety-two per cent.—that is carried on by credits. Almost all of the business goes through clearing houses. Everything is a system of credits. Even money is a system of keeping accounts; that is all. Property alone is subject to taxation, and the right to transact business is not property. A credit is simply an adjunct to the right to transact business.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I understand there are now before this committee two amendments, one offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Hale, for Mr. Boggs, and the other offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, Mr. Huestis. I am opposed to both of those amendments. Now, sir, it has been stated that this Convention was called for the express purpose of reaching this question of revenue and taxation. I have heard more reasons assigned for the calling of this Convention than the college students give for the downfall of Rome.

I believe that the people never intended to call this Convention at all. It was only called through skillful manipulation of a party in the printing of the tickets. One party paid no particular attention to the subject in the printing of their tickets, while the other almost universally had printed upon their tickets "For a Convention." Men in voting the tickets paid no attention to that part of it, so long as it contained the names of the candidates they desired to vote for. Even then it only carried by about four hundred votes. No doubt there was something said among the people upon the subject of taxation, but I understand that the great evil to be remedied, and the object to be attained, was to get rid of that provision about the election of the Assessors and Collectors, so that we might have a State Board of Equalization. There were two other questions discussed to some extent: whether growing crops should be taxed, and whether debts should be taxed. I am opposed to growing crops being taxed. Crops are a part of the land, and after you have assessed the land you might as well assess the trees, the vines, or anything that is on it, as to assess growing crops. They make the value of the land and are a part of it. The next question is, whether solvent debts shall be taxed. I would like to call the attention of the gentlemen to my left here who are farmers to a provision of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale. Now, these farmers say that they want these solvent debts taxed, because it will add to the taxable property of the State, and thereby reduce the general rate of taxation; but I would like to call their attention to the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer does not add a single dollar to the taxable property of the State. The amendment merely provides that when a person owning land which is mortgaged, shall pay the tax upon that land, he may deduct it from the debt owing on the mortgage. That does not add a cent to the taxable property of the State. The fact of the business is, that amendment is not germane to the subject of taxation at all, because it only attempts to regulate the private contracts between the mortgagor and the mortgagee. That you cannot do. It is beyond your jurisdiction. If the lender has to pay the tax he will put it into the interest. That is as plain as sunlight. Therefore, the amendment cannot relieve the borrowing class any, because they will have to pay the amount of the mortgage tax in increased interest.

The only question left is whether debts should be taxed. Now, gentlemen try to make a distinction between debts secured by mortgage and debts not secured. There is no distinction, except, perhaps, the one may be the more readily found. My objection to an attempt to tax debts is, that you cannot make the system uniform, nor approximate uniformity. One of the best evidences is that it shall apply to all classes of persons owning the property referred to. You cannot do that exactly, but in other classes of property you can approximate it. It would be unjust if one man's property be taxed and another man's escapes. It would perhaps be unjust to exempt the whole class of property; but still that would be remedied by the general business of the community, and the property would take its value according to its taxation. But if one man pays taxes on his land, and another does not, that is unjust all around: it gives one man an advantage over another. If you tax one man's mortgage, and do not tax another's, it is unfair. Now, when you come to tax debts you arrive at that condition of things inevitably. It is utterly and entirely impossible to approximate uniformity or justice in the taxation of debts. Here are two men, each having ten thousand dollars owing to them, possessing about the same degree of solvency. One man, being particularly conscientious, gives in the whole ten thousand dollars. The other, not being troubled that way, finds objection to the solvency of his debtor, and makes up his mind to give in to the Assessor, four thousand dollars. There one man escapes the taxes upon six thousand dollars, which the other man pays. You cannot avoid it. You will lose that rule of uniformity which ought to be applied. You may say that so far as mortgages are concerned, they are of record, and can be found; but it would be unjust to tax money secured by mortgage, and not tax money secured by good security.

MR. TOWNSEND. Can't you assess a note, which is a security?

MR. MCFARLAND. No. In the first place you have got to find it.

MR. TOWNSEND. If you mean that men perjure themselves, that is a different thing.

MR. MCFARLAND. I do assume it. It is a well known fact to every gentleman on this floor that when the Federal Government imposed an income tax, men working for wages, and clerks in offices, paid more income tax than their employers, because it was well known what the men received. But in the case of the others there was no means of ascertaining it except upon their own statement. The richest men paid the smallest amount in proportion to their income.

MR. TOWNSEND. There is a law to punish it. Suppose you and I start out in life with fifty thousand dollars each—it is not likely, but suppose we should. I invest my money in land, I build houses, and barns, set out orchards, and help improve the country. You loan your money upon a mortgage, or note, and you receive your interest. Do you propose that you shall escape taxation entirely and I shall pay the taxes?

MR. MCFARLAND. Yes, for this reason; that it is impracticable to undertake to assess it with any degree of justice or uniformity whatever. And I say that it is utterly impossible to do it in the case of debts. It will never be done, and when you undertake to require men to put in all the debts that are owing to them, and make them swear what is solvent and what is not, they will not do it.

MR. TOWNSEND. Are they not a matter of record?

MR. MCFARLAND. Not one tenth part of the debts are secured so that you can see them on the record. You can make the tax on mortgages uniform, because there is record evidence of it; but it would be unjust to tax mortgages, and not tax money on other securities. In the first place, that rule would operate as a hardship upon the poorer class of citizens. If I am a poor man, having a little house and lot, and it is necessary for me to borrow two or three thousand dollars, I have got to give a mortgage, or I cannot borrow it. It is on record, and I have got to pay the tax of the man who loaned me the money. If Michael Reese was alive to-day, he could do it on his note, and there would be no possible way of discovering the fact that he had borrowed that money. He would get rid of the increased taxation, while the poor man, who is trying to get a homestead, and who has to give a mortgage, cannot escape it. It would be most unjust to compel a man who can only borrow money upon mortgage, to pay a tax, and allow men of personal wealth, who can borrow ten or twenty thousand dollars at any time on their own note, to escape taxation. There is no justice in saying that you will tax debts secured by a mortgage, and not tax debts secured by personal security, and the whole question comes back to whether or not you will tax debts. As I said before, the main objection is that you cannot make it uniform. But in the second place, who will it benefit? Why, it is the clearest proposition in the world, that it will not benefit the borrower. Now, both of these amendments go entirely upon the theory of compelling the lender to pay part of the tax. I cannot understand the amendment of the gentleman from Humboldt, and I have read it one, two, or three times. So far as mortgages are concerned, his proposition is, that the land should be assessed at its full value to the owner, and that he shall deduct from his debt the amount of the taxes. Now, that does not at all add to the taxable property of the State, and it does not make the lender pay it, because it is as clear as crystal that the borrower pays the tax in increased interest. And what does that amount to in the way of a principle of taxation? It simply undertakes to make the lender pay the tax, which you cannot do. When you take both these propositions together, they do not add anything to the taxable property of the State. They do not allow the farmer to get off with any less taxes. You cannot deduct it from the debt, because that is a part of the contract, and you cannot impair the obligations of a contract. Now, the only way to add to the taxable property of the State at all, is to tax the debt, whether secured by mortgage or not, and make no deduction. If a man owns a farm worth ten thousand dollars, and borrows five thousand dollars on a mortgage, tax him for ten thousand dollars on the farm, and tax the mortgage for five thousand dollars, and then you have added something, or, rather, you have five thousand dollars of moonshine property. Then you have got to tax every man in the same way, and you will perhaps add to the taxable property in the State. Where it comes from God only knows. I do not understand that if half the people of the State should give their note to the other half, you will have any more property. And yet that is the theory. Somebody says, for instance, that I have got a mortgage, and asks, is not that mortgage worth ten thousand dollars? Why is it? Because it is secured by the land. What is your land worth, then? It is worth nothing. If I own a piece of land which I have secured by giving a mortgage for ten thousand dollars, I certainly do not add ten thousand dollars to the property of the State. If the mortgage, which covers the full value of the land, is worth ten thousand dollars, the land is not worth anything.

MR. TOWNSEND. Does not the man own the land that has the mortgage?

MR. MCFARLAND. No, sir; he does not own the land at all. The title of the land is in the man that gives the mortgage.

MR. LARUE. Suppose the money is used somewhere else?

MR. MCFARLAND. Wherever the money goes you find it in property. I don't know where your ten thousand dollars goes. Wherever it goes you get it.

MR. TOWNSEND. You say that you do not create anything?

MR. MCFARLAND. No; you don't create ten thousand dollars more property.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired under the rule.

[Cries of "Leave!" "Leave!"]

MR. MCFARLAND. I believe that all the trouble comes from the fact that in every community some gentlemen, by fortunate circumstances, happen to get hold of some money and everybody in the community wants it. All the business of this country is done upon credit. There is not a gentleman on this floor who is worth five thousand dollars to-day who has not been in debt. It is a very nice thing to say, "Pay as you go!" It is good as to the luxuries of life, but it is not good in regard to the business of life. There is scarcely a man who does not borrow money. There is scarcely a farmer that has enough money to pay for his farm when he commences. He sees a chance to buy a farm worth five thousand dollars, which he considers cheap. What does he do? Why, he goes to one of these money lenders and he lends him the money at the current rate of interest. The man says he can make more out of the money than the current rate of interest. Now, the money lender is really a public benefactor. The man goes on, and in the course of five or ten years he has got a farm. It is for the interest of the whole community that money should be obtainable as low as possible. "Money makes the mare go," and it makes the prosperity of the country. It builds up your little homes that you talk about, and yet you want to load it down with all the burdens you can put upon it, and think it is helping somebody. Who is it helping? If you want to help the borrower and the man who is trying to get a home for himself, you certainly do not help him. He has got to pay whatever interest the money is worth. He cannot get out of it. If the man from whom he borrows the money has to pay the tax upon it, he has got to pay the tax in interest. You help nobody in the world, and you simply undertake to cripple and fetter that which is the very life of business in any country.

Now, sir, if the rule could be enforced; if it was practicable at all; if you could find out how much solvent debts were owing to every man; if you could approximate it in the least, there might be some reason for attempting it; but knowing that this rule would give unscrupulous men an advantage over their neighbors, and looking at the fact that it does nobody any good, I am opposed to it. I have listened to the other gentlemen who have addressed the committee, with a great deal of attention, but I have not been convinced that this system of taxing these promises to pay will be a good one. I believe that the true policy is to tax tangible property. I believe that one of the best of prayers is "Lead us not into temptation," and I believe that any system like this, that goes into the private affairs of men, tempts men to corruption and perjury.

MR. TOWNSEND. You believe then that money lenders are more liable to perjure themselves for the purpose of escaping taxation than men who own other property?

MR. MCFARLAND. No, sir; but men who own other property have not the opportunity.

MR. TOWNSEND. Other men have the same chance to perjure themselves on personal property.

MR. MCFARLAND. I admit that personal property of many kinds should not be taxed on account of the difficulty of making it uniform. I know that you cannot tax all the personal property. Farmers do not always give in all their cattle, although they are generally honest; but now and then you will find a farmer that will not give in all he has. I say this system is impossible. It is such an easy matter for a man to say "John Doe owes me a thousand dollars; he may perhaps be able to pay me, but I hardly think I ought to give that in, because he may not do it. I do not know whether he will or not." If you undertake to prosecute that man for perjury you cannot convict him. There never was more than half a dozen men in the world convicted of perjury.

REMARKS OF MR. MORELAND.

MR. MORELAND. Mr. Chairman: I have listened patiently to the debate of the past two days on the subject of taxation. I am sorry, sir, that I cannot say that I have listened with profit. I have endeavored to gather from the many diverse ideas and arguments that have been presented for our consideration, some material out of which a theory might be evolved and a solution reached of this vexed but important question. I have carefully read section two of the committee's report, but to my mind it is such a meaningless jumble, such a wishy washy nothing, such an aggregation of words full of sound and fury signifying nothing, that I would be loath indeed to support it. I have also given due consideration to the pending amendments, but I consider them so new in theory, so far outside of ordinary constitutional enactments, so involved in construction, and so difficult of application that I would have to be hard pressed indeed before I could give them my support. I want something to meet the requirements of the times, something short, crisp, and clear cut, something which, when incorporated in a Constitution, will have some binding efficacy. Something that no man can misunderstand and no Supreme Court can misconstrue. Now, sir, let us get back to first principles. Why are we here? Why are we to-day endeavoring to perfect a scheme of taxation? Why was this Convention called, and why are we honored with seats in this Convention? Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter. Because the Supreme Court of this State has decided that bonds and notes and mortgages are not property, and therefore not subject to taxation under our present Constitution. That is the great, the moving reason, the people of this State had in mind when they ordered this Convention. Now, sir, knowing these facts, what ought to be the course of fair minded men? Why, simply to remedy the wrong committed on the people of this State by the Supreme Court and go home. But, sir, instead of doing that what are we now doing? Here we are wading through a long tedious article on the subject of taxation, embracing seventeen sections, containing long, tedious, involved, meaningless, and ungrammatical sentences that will give rise to endless litigation, and about one hundred decisions of the Supreme Court as absurd as the last one it delivered on that subject. My venerable colleague from Sonoma struck the keynote of the whole matter last Saturday, when he suggested that we had better stop talking and fix the Constitution by defining what property is. Now, sir, I have a substitute that I propose to offer when an opportunity occurs. It is in accordance with my views, it meets the views of many gentlemen on this floor, and more than all it meets the decision of the Supreme Court squarely. Here it is:

"SEC. 2. All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law. For the purposes of taxation, bonds, notes, mortgages, evidences of indebtedness, solvent debts, franchises, and everything of value capable of transfer or ownership, shall be considered property. Growing crops, property belonging to the United States, to this State, or any political subdivision thereof, shall be exempt from taxation."

As I have already said, the Supreme Court has already decided that mortgages, solvent debts, choses in action, and the enumerated items are not property. Now, sir, it does not become me, as a good citizen, and a law abiding man, to impugn the motives of the Judges of the Supreme Court. I do not do so. But I have the right to say, and I will say, that in the definition of the word "property," they have been very inconsistent, to say the least. In eighteen hundred and sixty-six they decided that bonds were property, and therefore subject to taxation. In eighteen hundred and seventy-six they decided that notes and mortgages were not property, and therefore not subject to taxation. I contend, sir, that their first decision was the correct one.

MR. HOWARD. I will read from a recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of State Tax on Foreign-held Bonds, 15th Wallace, page 320:

"To call debts property of the debtors, is simply to misuse terms. All the property there can be, in the nature of things, in debts of corporations, belongs to the creditors, to whom they are payable, and follows their domicile, wherever that may be. Their debts can have no locality separate from the parties to whom they are due. This principle might be stated in many different ways, and supported by citations from numerous adjudications; but no number of authorities, and no forms of expression, could add anything to its obvious truth, which is recognized upon its simple statement."

In other words, the Court decided that bonds issued by a railroad company, are property, and are properly assessed to the owners.

MR. EDGERTON. Was not the case thus: that they attempted to tax the interest stipulated in bonds held by non-residents of Pennsylvania, and it was decided that the State of Pennsylvania could not tax it?

MR. HOWARD. That was the main question; but they also considered another, and the Supreme Court held that they were property, and properly assessed to the owner.

MR. EDGERTON. They did consider another question which was not before the Court, and the gentleman knows that was no decision at all.

MR. HOWARD. My friend cannot befog that decision.

MR. EDGERTON. Nor you either.

MR. HOWARD. I am not in a befogging state.

MR. EDGERTON. You are always in a fog.

MR. HOWARD. I always find you there, if I am.

MR. MORELAND. I hope this side show will come to an end, and that I will be allowed to proceed with my remarks.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must not give up the floor, then.

MR. MORELAND. I contend that they are property. For all purposes, except taxation, they are looked upon and held to be property. They are subject to attachment and garnishment, as other property. When a man dies possessed of bonds, notes, or mortgages, they are administered upon as other property. They are subject to larceny, just as other property is. They may be bought, sold, and transferred, as other property. The men who own them receive the protection of the law, just as other men do. They are property. I hold in my hand a work entitled "Introduction to Political Economy," by Perry, published last year, and I will read a sentence or two from it:

* * * "Besides, as all taxes must come from the gains of exchanges, it would seem reasonable that each man's taxes should be in exact proportion to the sum of his gains by exchanges. I do not think that there can be any other just rule of taxation. It is sometimes said that each man should be taxed according to his property; but when we come to analyze this remark, it amounts to what has just now been said. What is property? The old Roman law said, and said rightly: Property is anything which can be bought and sold. The very substance of property is the power and right to render services in exchange; the test of property is a sale; that which will bring nothing when exposed for sale, either never was, or at least is not now, property; the right of the government to tax anybody, consequently, depends on the question whether he has something to sell, or has actually sold something; and the amount of the tax would seem to be determined by the amount of the sales, just as the ability to pay the tax certainly hinges on the fact and the amount of the sales."

Now, sir, gentlemen may say that my proposed amendment, if adopted, will produce double taxation. I admit, in a certain degree and to a certain extent, it will; but the same person will not be twice taxed on the same property, which is the true test of double taxation. But, sir, it will materially lessen the burdens of double taxation, and it will lessen it on the debtor class of the community. We have now the very worst form of double taxation. The owners of visible, tangible property now pay all the taxes, no matter how much it may be incumbered. They pay for themselves, and they pay for their creditors. Consequently the amount of assessable property is small, and the rate of taxation is high; so, sir, if we can bring into the list of taxable property some two hundred and fifty thousand dollars' worth heretofore untaxed, the amount will be large and the rate low. And, sir, this bugbear of double taxation that has been raised does not come so much from those who are now doubly taxed as from those who are not taxed at all. What right have they to complain if we only ask and require them to pay on the property they possess? I look upon the systems proposed as full of interminable difficulties. If we go to dabbling in offsets, and rebates, and credits, and divisions, we shall complicate our system of taxation so that it will be worth just nothing.

I hope, sir, that the pending amendments and the original section will be rejected, and a section similar to the one I propose to introduce will be adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, Mr. Huestis.

MR. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman: I have been listening for the last ten years to these fine-spun theories about double taxation, and I find out that the fact of it is simply this: that the poor man pays the taxes, while the rich man and corporations go free. I am opposed to the reductions proposed by this Convention. I am satisfied that it will only open the floodgates of fraud, and not remedy the case a bit.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Humboldt, Mr. Huestis.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. MORELAND. Mr. Chairman: I now send up my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 2. All property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law. For the purposes of taxation, bonds, notes, mortgages, evidences of indebtedness, solvent debts, franchises, and everything of value capable of transfer or ownership, shall be considered property. Growing crops, property belonging to the United States, to this State, or any political subdivision thereof, shall be exempt from taxation."

REMARKS OF MR. WELLER.

MR. WELLER. Mr. Chairman: Taking into consideration the subject of taxation, as it has existed heretofore in this State, and the subject of taxation as it has existed all over the United States, and throughout the world, there is no equal taxation. There is no taxation that a person can reduce down to a fine point and call it just to all. Governments are instituted for the benefit of the governed, and it is the governed that are interested in the matter; not only the property owners and the individuals that have an interest in the property, but all persons that are among the governed should bear their proportion of the burdens of the government under which they live. Our present system of taxation in the State of California has thrown the burden of the government of this State upon one class of persons alone. It is the business class, the people who have employed the labor, that have taken the risks of all the business that has been done in this State, that have borne the burden of the government—that class of individuals have paid the taxes. The other class that have been employed by that class of people, and the other class that they have borrowed from, have enjoyed the benefits of the government, the benefits of the Courts, and all the benefits that the other class have, and at the same time, they have borne no proportion of its burdens. Now, take this matter into consideration; take it into consideration so far as deductions are concerned; that if you take all the property in the State perhaps it would not pay its debts. Through the extravagance of our people, and through their great desire for gain, a great many of them have overreached themselves perhaps, and have involved themselves to a certain extent, and the State in general. All business men and corporations are involved to such an extent that if the property were put up for sale to-day, perhaps it would not pay its indebtedness. But upon that indebtedness that has been incurred it is not proposed by the owners of the franchises, nor the property owners, that the property is going to be given up for that purpose. Now, the capitalist is interested, and has the benefit of the government of this State just as much as the business man is that employs the capital, and that class of people that take all the risks of business, and that class of people that employ labor, develop the country, and bring out its resources and make it productive for capitalists to come here, and men that have got money to come among us—certainly that ought not to be the class that the whole burden should be placed upon; they should have some sympathy. It should not be a clear gain to the individual that loans his money, so far as the burden of the government is concerned, because business must pay for the margins that they make or else they must make an inroad upon what they have, and it would be no more than right that capitalists should be compelled to pay something, out of their margin, also, for the support of the government. At the same time, under the present circumstances, they take no risks at all upon their capital, while the business men have been making inroads upon their actual property in bearing the burdens of the government, and enriching that class of people who have no burdens to bear—they have been gaining all the time. There are no dry years with them; they do not meet with any losses; they gain all the time, every day in the year. But those that are in business are obliged to take risks and incur the contingencies of the seasons and the contingencies of business, pay for the labor that they employ, and bear the burden of the government too.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in regard to the matter of equal taxation. There is not wisdom enough, I believe, in this Convention, to arrive at it. From the reports that I have read from various Commissions that have been appointed by different Legislatures throughout the United States, I find that none of them have arrived at that golden rule of equal taxation. It is a question yet and a matter of discussion with them. We can discuss this matter for a month, and yet arrive at no better conclusion perhaps than they have. Now, we may say here, I have a mortgage on my farm. I borrow money to the amount of five thousand dollars and place upon the real estate a mortgage. I give the mortgage for the purpose of giving the person good security. It is called the best. I get my money on better terms from the fact that I give the real estate. It cannot go away. I get more leniency from him by giving him that security. The consequence is that that is considered the best security, and I get my money at a better rate. Now, it does not follow that that five thousand dollars that I give this security for is incorporated in that piece of land. I may take the money and go to Washington Territory and speculate, or buy public land there. I may take it and invest it in other business. The theory that the gentleman here at my left offered is that this money is incorporated in the property upon which the mortgage rests, and he says it is double taxation. It is double taxation now, because the debtor pays on the debts and pays on his property. He pays it all at the present time. These individuals that have these mortgages do not pay anything, although it is the best of property. If it was not the best they would not invest their money in that way. They would risk it in business the same as other men do. No; they consider that it is more secure and safer for them, and if they can loan their money on good security and receive the interest, they would rather enjoy life that way and not take the risks of business. The consequence is that they choose to employ their money in that way, and another man chooses to employ his in the cultivation of the soil, or any other business that he chooses to embark in. Now, for the last fifteen years we have been taxing the real estate. We tax all the property, regardless of indebtedness; regardless of this other property, which is the best kind of property, and which is in the hands of that large class of people in this State who are making their living and making their fortunes by loaning money to this class of business men. They are enhancing their wealth constantly, while the other class, under the contingencies and vicissitudes of business, taking the risks, some of them win and some lose. At the same time they are the real benefactors of the country. The great benefactors of the country are those individuals who develop its resources and carry on its business. They are the individuals that open up and develop enterprises, and make it an object for capital to come to the country; and they make it an object for immigrants to come here.

Now, the question is here, if we take the proposition introduced by the gentleman from Sonoma, we are now making the business men of the country bear the full burden of the government; taxing them to the full extent of their wealth, and also their indebtedness. We are giving the lender the advantage. His property consists of promissory notes secured by mortgage, which are worth their full value. The business man is taxed to the full value of his property in cash, and also his indebtedness. He pays on both. The consequence is that he pays more than the individual who has the solvent debts in his hands; and that is giving the individual that holds these solvent debts a better opportunity than if the indebtedness was deducted, from the fact that it increases the amount of assessment and the amount of the assessed property, in the same ratio that it would decrease the rate of taxation. The rate of taxation would be less upon his margin of his rate of interest than it would be if the matter of the solvent debt was deducted from the property and then paid upon the property alone and the debtor was allowed to pay upon the debt. It would make a greater tax upon the capital. We are willing to give capital that much advantage of the business men, and take this proposition. The argument that is used by our political economist is this: that if we tax a negotiable note that bears a certain rate of interest that that individual cannot get his amount of interest that the law allows him, from the fact that the taxes will take away a certain portion of that rate; and if the taxes are two per cent. and he was getting eight or ten, why his rate of interest would be reduced that two per cent., and he would only get six or eight; and if a usury law existed it would be taking away that much of his interest which he would be allowed according to the usury law. Now, then, if the amount of property is increased, and the indebtedness paid on and the obligation also paid on, why then the margin or percentage would be less upon the obligation, and it would be in his favor; and it would result in this, that he would be taxed for his privilege of living under the government, at a less rate even than the individuals who are carrying on the business of the country and taking the risks of business.

It is certainly a fact, that in one county in this State, last year, which was a disastrous year, there was over five hundred thousand dollars of taxes raised from the farming community and the business men of that county, and their margins did not amount to that five hundred thousand dollars. They paid more into the treasury of that county than they made out of their farming and business. Here was the bankers and money lenders who held the mortgages and notes of these farmers and business men, who drew their interest and paid no tax. It all came in and they were enriched, and the others were impoverished beyond their ability to pay, allowing them even the same chance that the capitalist has. The burden of our government at the present time is and has been very oppressive, and to allow this matter to pass over and throw the burden where it is at the present time, is wrong; it is oppressing the class of people that, as a general thing, there has not been much mercy shown to; but it is doing this, Mr. Chairman, whether they get any sympathy or not, it will result in this in the end, that it will kill the goose that laid the golden egg. The very interest that keeps up the country, the very interest that develops its resources, the very interests that employ all the labor, that employ the capital, that develop its enterprises, will be crushed and crippled to that extent that its prosperity will be gone.

REMARKS OF MR. STEELE.

MR. STEELE. Mr. President: I believe that the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland, and also the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Hale, for Mr. Boggs, are now before the Committee of the Whole. Well, sir, I am in favor of direct taxation. I believe in direct methods, and for that reason I am in favor of the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Sonoma. I believe that all property in the State should be taxed, and taxed directly in the hands of the parties that own it. The advantage of direct taxation is, that it brings the taxpayer in direct connection with the government and gives him an interest in the government. Men prize that for which they pay, and if a man pays taxes for the support of the government, it ought to give him such an interest in the government as that he would strive to look after the affairs of government, and see that they were justly administered. That is the object of direct taxation. It connects every person directly with the government, and makes him personally responsible for the government. The method of collecting taxes directly ought to be more simple than collecting them indirectly. Gentlemen tell us that you cannot reach solvent debts, and all this sort of thing. Now, sir, if it is true that it is impossible for us to make the parties pay taxes who own property, who are really the rich parties, and who are the parties able to pay taxes—if they are to escape and we cannot compel them to pay their proportion of taxes—then it is time to surrender the government into the hands of Kearney, or somebody that can collect the taxes. I believe that we can, through proper tax laws, and through their proper execution, reach a majority of the property in this State, and I believe that we ought to do it. And in order to do it, we ought to initiate this principle in the Constitution and make it mandatory upon the Legislature to enact such laws that they will list all this property, and then clothe the Assessors with authority to list it in the hands of the men who own it. Having done that, I think that this enigma of taxation will, in a great degree, have been solved.

Some gentlemen say that we ought to tax growing crops. Now, sir, the difficulty with that is that growing crops possess no definite or determinate value. You cannot tell anything about it. It depends upon other contingencies. It depends upon the weather. I do not believe in taxing labor directly, but taxing the products of labor. When labor has resulted in something tangible, tax it; but not before. That is the difficulty with taxing a growing crop. You cannot reach it; you cannot estimate it. But the other kinds of property enumerated in this section suggested and presented by the gentleman from Sonoma, you can reach and tax through a proper adjustment of the tax law.

REMARKS OF MR. TULLY.

MR. TULLY. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma will pass. I do not wish to make a speech, but I simply wish to say that I am opposed to making any deductions, or rebate, as it is termed. I am opposed to converting the State into a bookkeeper, to go around and settle up all the business of the citizens of the State. I think that the State should tax things—should tax property—and if the word property is not sufficiently comprehensive to include mortgages, bonds, promissory notes, and evidences of indebtedness, I am in favor of enlarging the definition so as to include them. I am utterly at a loss to understand how my friend, Judge McFarland, of Sacramento, reaches his conclusions. How any man can stand with a promissory note in his hand, say for ten thousand dollars, which is perfectly good, and tell me that he has no property, passes my comprehension. If the gentleman should lose his note, or it should be stolen from him, I apprehend that he would arrest some person perhaps, charging him with stealing a certain promissory note, and perhaps send him to the penitentiary. I am utterly at a loss to see how any gentleman of a sound mind can say that a mortgage upon a piece of property is not property. If the gentleman has a mortgage, say for ten thousand dollars, he can take that mortgage down to the bank and get ten thousand dollars for it. I cannot see why that is not property. I know that there are persons in the county where I live that are worth a great deal of money. I know gentlemen there who loan money, from one to two hundred thousand dollars—my colleagues here know the same—who do not pay taxes on over one thousand. That is the truth. There is no getting around it. There is no justice in any system of laws which makes these distinctions. Some gentlemen advocate that we should make deductions on corporations and not on persons. I am in favor of treating all alike. I believe that the State should go around and assess the property as they find it, and leave the condition of indebtedness for the people to settle themselves.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will be voted down, and for the reason that has been stated a hundred times on this floor: that it proposes to tax fictitious values. It recites, "for the purposes of taxation, bonds, notes, mortgages, evidences of indebtedness, solvent debts, franchises, and everything of value, capable of transfer or ownership, shall be considered property." Now, Mr. Chairman, a great many things have value that are not property. It is the thing of value for me to own, or to have the handwriting of the gentleman from Sacramento, acknowledging that he owes me money. It is a thing of value to me; but it is not a thing of value to the State that the gentleman from Sacramento owes me, or that A owes B. The good will of a trading firm, while it is a thing of value that a person may have, it is not property that the State has any concern about. The principle should be established and adhered to, that the State desires to collect taxes upon the land, and goods, and money, belonging to its citizens. It does seem very wonderful to me that the debtor class who favor this proposition to tax all these things, are the very ones who are bound to pay taxes a second time. There is no such thing as avoiding the fact that when you have taxed a man upon all his property, subject to no deduction, and then put another tax upon the debt that he happens to owe, that he is going to pay double taxation.

MR. HITCHCOCK. You say a thing of value. What do you mean by a thing of value?

MR. REYNOLDS. That is the language of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, and that is just exactly what is obscure about it. I was attempting to describe that what might be a thing of value to me, might not be a thing of value to the State. It is a thing of value to me to have a man's signature acknowledging that he owes me money, but it is no concern of the State that he owes me money. It is the concern of the State that it has assessed that money in his hands, and it ought to be assessed but once. It is unjust that it, having been assessed to him, they should assess it to me. It is a fact that this taxation of mortgages is bound to press hard upon the debtor class. And why? Because when men make contracts to loan money, it will be at a certain rate of interest free of taxation, and if it is understood at the time that the lender will have to pay two per cent. taxes, the rate of interest fixed will be two per cent. higher, and there is no avoiding it. And when you have taxed the debtor for all the property he has got, and then tax what he owes, you are as sure to make him pay the additional tax on the debt as you are to put the machinery of law into operation. And that is why I say that this amendment should be voted down, and that we should adopt that simple principle. Its simplicity commends it. To tax all the property, the land, the goods, and the money of the State in the hands of the person wherever found, once, and only once, and there stop. Let the machinery of the law stop there and not go into the conditions of debtor and creditor that exist in the community. It is no concern of the State who owes who. I am in favor of taxing the mortgages in this way: that if A owes B—if A has a farm and is owing money to B—that all his property and money should be taxed to him, and when he comes to settle with B, that the taxes should be an offset to that amount. It is a matter of not the slightest consequence whether it is secured or unsecured; but if you go into this principle of taxing debts, and do not allow a reduction, you are making a distinction. I do not propose to make any reduction at all—no reduction on account of debts owing to the person assessed.

The rebate I propose is to have the tax paid by the debtor offset on the debt when he pays it. We have got all the property already. The property has already been assessed in the hands of the debtor. According to this principle, Mr. Chairman, of taxing everything of value, why, the more mortgages a poor man has upon his homestead the better he would be off; and after he had succeeded in borrowing all the money anybody would loan him, why, he ought to fill his pockets with mortgages and go around and give them to his friends. The more mortgages he would have the better he would be off; and he ought to build a vault and fill it with mortgages. For this and other reasons I hope this will be voted down, so that we can adopt a simpler proposition. First tax all property, except that belonging to the United States, to this State, and so on. Then when the Assessor approaches the citizen to ascertain what property is assessable in his hands, he first finds out all the real estate and all the personal property, and then all the money he has, and there stops. No deduction shall be allowed to him on account of any debts that he may owe. And every person the same way. But if that citizen does owe anything, when he comes to pay that money, interest, or principal, the tax that has been assessed to him, or paid by him, shall at that time be set off, and the tax receipt shall be just as good as the creditor's receipt exactly. I have reduced it to a few words, and if I can get an opportunity, I shall offer this amendment:

"All property shall be subject to taxation, except as follows: First, that belonging to the United States; second, that made exempt from taxation by the laws of the United States; third, that belonging to this State, or some political subdivision thereof; fourth, growing crops. No deduction shall be made from any assessment on account of debts of the person assessed. Taxes assessed to or paid by any debtor shall be at the time of such assessment or payment a set-off against the debt to an amount equal to such proportion as the debt bears to the whole amount of the property assessed to him."

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH, OF FOURTH DISTRICT.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I do not wish to detain the committee long. I only rise to question one feature of the last amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland. I had myself an amendment written out very much like the one he has introduced, and am therefore in favor of the principle involved in the amendment, and, so far as I understood the argument of the last gentleman who spoke, it seemed to me that he was in favor of the same principle, for, if no qualification is placed in the Constitution, it is a direct taxation upon all property in the State, not allowing any reduction. It is an inflexible rule applied to all property in the State. Now, the question is, whether we wish in this Convention to make an inflexible rule of direct taxation of all the property in the State. As I understand Mr. Moreland, his idea is to have the Legislature unrestricted in regard to the taxation of property. I believe it is the understanding of this Convention that all property should be taxed, and that there should be no qualification of the word property. Now, in order to prevent a qualification of that word, there must be a broad definition of property. As long as a single word is placed in the Constitution by a certain meaning of that word, the Legislature is restricted, and if you wish to prevent a restriction upon the Legislature, you have got to have the broadest definition of that word. Now, we have used here the word property. There is a restriction upon the Legislature—by the definition of that word, and in order to prevent that restriction, it is necessary to give the broadest and fullest definition in the Constitution of the word property. But in doing that are you not giving another qualification, and making a rule of direct taxation of all property—of every conceivable thing that has no value whatever? Now, it seems to me that there should be one qualification in this amendment, and that qualification should be such as to give the Legislature some power of direct taxation upon one species of property, or upon another. To invent a scheme that may be suitable to-day, and may not be suitable to-morrow, or any other time, suppose, for instance, that includes both franchises and capital stock. Then, without qualification, the Legislature could not have the power to levy a tax upon the property of corporations by the word franchises alone. It would have to levy taxes upon the franchises and upon the capital stock also, which would be double taxation. Now, if the Legislature had power to tax the corporation in one way, so as to get at the value of all the property of the corporation, it would be all that would be required. I am not so much afraid of this double taxation. I think it is very difficult to get double taxation, as is clearly shown by the report of the Commissioners of New York. I had in the amendment which I had drawn, the words, "under the direction of law," so as to read "all property in this State shall be taxed under direction of law, in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law." Now, "under the direction of law," or some such words as these, would give the Legislature the power to fix a scheme of taxation. Let them try it. If it fails, let them try another scheme, as an experiment. But it seems to me that it is necessary to give the Legislature this power to fix the scheme of taxation, because a scheme which would be good for one time would not be good for another, and we should give the Legislature that power.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say just a word in regard to this amendment as offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland, and to compare it with the amendment which is proposed by Judge Hale, because there is a point upon which we differ, perhaps, in both amendments, although parties who are advocating the one proposition and the other claim that they wish to have all the property in this State taxed; but there is this difference between the two: one party claims that an evidence of indebtedness is not property. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland, distinctly says: "For the purposes of taxation, bonds, notes, mortgages, evidences of indebtedness, solvent debts, franchises, and everything of value capable of transfer, or ownership, shall be considered property." Now, if we believe that they should be considered as property, we should support that amendment, and have that property included in the assessment roll, because if it is property it should be so included, and thereby increase the assessment roll, and by that means reduce the rate per cent of the taxation. While, upon the other hand, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Hale, distinctly says, in so many words: "No tax shall be imposed on growing crops, debts, evidences of debt, private property exempt from taxation by the laws of the United States, property belonging to the United States, or to this State, or any municipality thereof. No deduction shall be made from the assessed value, on account of any debt or debts," etc. There is the difference between the two propositions. One party claims that evidences of indebtedness are not property, and consequently should not be taxed; the other claims that they are property, and if so should be included in the assessment roll, and thereby reduce the per cent. upon the dollar for taxable property. I believe that evidences of indebtedness, for the purpose of taxation, should be considered as property, and I think the definition, as stated in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, is concise and clear, and could be perfectly understood, and we ought to divide here upon that one proposition, whether these mortgages, or the evidences of indebtedness which they secure, are to be considered as property for the purposes of taxation. The proposition of the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale, does not consider them property until the debtor has been able to secure the money with which to pay the indebtedness, and then be allowed to retain in his possession the amount of taxes paid. But excluding them from the assessment roll increases the rate of taxation upon every dollar of the property. If we are to have them as property in any sense, they should go into the assessment roll as property, thereby increasing it and reducing the rate per cent.

REMARKS OF MR. GREGG.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: The reason why I shall vote against this proposition is this: it recites that mortgages, evidences of indebtedness, solvent debts, franchises, and everything of value, shall be taxed. A mortgage is an abstract thing; a note covered by a mortgage is an abstract thing. I owe a man five hundred dollars and it is a solvent debt. A note is the evidence of it. Then a mortgage secures the note, and you tax a man for the mortgage and then tax him for the evidence of the debt. I shall vote against the amendment, because, as I have stated, I am in favor of taxing property once. Here is a note secured by mortgage on a piece of property; you propose to tax the property, and then the note, and then the mortgage.

MR. HOWARD. Have not the Courts decided that a note is a mere incident of a mortgage?

MR. GREGG. No. The mortgage is an incident to the debt. Here you have got triple taxation. The mortgage is incident to the debt, it is true, but not for the purposes of taxation, because your Constitution says that mortgages must be taxed, the evidence of your debt must be taxed, and then the debt itself must be taxed. If you don't have any note, you tax the debt, and then you tax the mortgage.

I am opposed to taxing franchises, as such, as I said the other day. You incorporate a mine; men purchase it and they own a franchise there. All it is worth is the property in it. The mine is worth fifty thousand dollars, and it is a franchise worth fifty thousand dollars. You go to Inyo, where the mine is located, and tax it there as property. If it is not property it is not worth anything. Being property, it is taxed in Inyo County; then the franchise is taxed in San Francisco, where the company's principal place of business is located. If it is true that a mortgage includes the debt, then the franchise includes the property, and your mine located in Inyo is taxed in San Francisco.

Growing crops are an improvement. A man may have a piece of land that is only worth two dollars an acre, as it lies idle. Nobody will give more for it. But there is forty bushels to the acre of wheat growing upon that ground, it adds to the value of the property: it is a part of the realty and it makes the property more valuable, but the Constitution says it is a growing crop, and cannot be taxed. It is a false quantity.

MR. HEISKELL. Is not the production reduced by raising a crop every year?

MR. GREGG. If a farmer is a farmer he sometimes manures his land.

MR. STEELE. Can a man determine how much wheat there will be when it is gathered?

MR. GREGG. Can you determine how much your house will be worth next June? That house may burn down. Personal property is an uncertain thing. I am not in favor of taxing a growing crop as a growing crop, but it is a part of the realty. It is an improvement. It is valuable in proportion as it adds value to the land. Separate and apart from the land I think it ought not to be taxed, but when you say that growing crops shall not be taxed, you have got a false quantity. A man sows on the first of March; the Assessor comes on the first of June——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The report provides that they shall be assessed all on one day.

Mr. GREGG. That is another false quantity. It is an impossibility. I say that the system of taxation in California has been bad. The Board of Supervisors really had not the power to put a value upon property. They had no power to increase it or decrease it without the complaint of some person. One neighbor would not complain of another. The Assessor and his half-dozen deputies assessed property unequally. The County of Kern to-day pays more taxes on stock than the County of Tulare, because of the want of the power of equalization. This thing is only a false quantity. After long struggles in the Courts they were compelled to decide simply that property alone should be taxed, and that when a thing was not property it should not be taxed. For that philosophy they have been condemned. Why? Because politicians have traveled over the State and started the howl that the rich man is escaping taxation, and the poor man is bearing all the burdens of government—it is an ignis-fatuus. I say there is not a man in the State of California who is in favor of taxing but property. When you say that these debts shall be taxed you are doubling and tripling taxation, and the poor man and producer must always pay.

Mr. WILSON, of Tehama. The law says mortgages shall be exempt. There is where the wrong comes in.

Mr. GREGG. It does not say that mortgages shall be exempt.

Mr. WILSON, of Tehama. The decision says so.

Mr. GREGG. I own a lot and borrow one hundred thousand dollars to build a house. The house is built with the money I borrow. Then you propose to tax the house and the thing that was in existence before. I object to this amendment because it uses the franchises. It is a false quantity and will cause taxes to be levied in San Francisco which should be levied in Kern. I object to taxing mortgages and evidences of debt, and solvent debts, because it is a gain of false quantity. Three independent transactions that you must tax to each individual separate. I object to excluding growing crops and taking property away from taxation. I shall vote against the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman says that a loan is a mere abstraction. That is, if I have one thousand dollars in gold when the Assessor comes, he says that is property, and I am compelled to pay the tax upon it. But if I loan the one thousand dollars to my friend from Kern, and have not only the one thousand dollars, but receive interest upon it, he says that is an abstraction. I would like to have a good many of those abstractions. The trouble with me is I have not got enough of them. Now, as to the matter of franchises, the gentleman says that is an abstraction also. Well, as I shall show presently, he disagrees with the Supreme Court of the United States; and the Supreme Court of the United States unfortunately does not happen to be equal in metaphysics to some gentlemen on this floor. What is a franchise? It is a privilege for certain persons to associate and by associating make money, or accumulate property in a particular manner, and the Supreme Court of the United States has held that a franchise is property, and is liable to assessment for taxes. I refer to the late decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of The Delaware Railroad Tax, eighteenth Wallace, page two hundred and thirty-one. The Court says:

"The State may impose taxes upon the corporation as an entity existing under its laws, as well as upon the capital stock of the corporation, or its separate corporate property. And the manner in which its value shall be assessed, and the rate of taxation, however arbitrary or capricious, are mere matters of legislative discretion."

Thus it is perfectly legitimate, the Courts say, to tax a franchise and also to tax the property; and there is no injustice in it because both are property. The franchises of mining corporations are taxed now. The Court goes still further, and says:

"A tax upon a corporation may be proportioned to the income received, as well as to the value of the franchise granted or the property possessed."

That covers the whole question. Now, gentlemen get up here and state propositions of law which seem to me most absurd, because I do not find any books supporting them, unless it may be a contradicted decision which has been contradicted four or five times by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. The way the advocates here argue matters of law reminds me of a definition once given of law. It was said that law was that which was boldly asserted and plausibly maintained. I think some of them have fallen upon that definition.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

Mr. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: The amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland, appears to me to be a simple solution of the difficulty which we have been wrestling with for several days past. The object is to have all the property of the State taxed according to its value; and because of contradictory decisions as to what is property, it is necessary that we should here define what we mean by the word property. It seems to me that the definition given here is sufficient to cover the ground, and to cover every species of property. Now, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Placer, as I understand it, exempts evidences of indebtedness from taxation. What is a bond issued by the State of California but an evidence of debt? What is a bond issued by a county or city of this State but an evidence of debt? The owners of these bonds, according to the amendment offered, are not owners of property at all, and therefore are exempt from taxation. A man can set himself down with one hundred thousand dollars in the bonds of California, and draw his interest annually from the taxpayers of the State. He does not own any property, he only owns bonds, issued by a perfectly solvent debtor, upon which he regularly draws his interest. It seems to me that anything which can be reduced into money, anything that has a value in the market, anything which can pass in exchange between man and man, is property, and ought to be taxed.

Mr. REYNOLDS. When you bought these bonds and understood you were to pay two per cent. a year taxes upon those bonds, did it not mean, and did you not compute two per cent. from interest on those bonds?

Mr. TERRY. When I bought those bonds I supposed I would buy them for just as little as I could. If I thought it was worth more than the money I invested, I bought.

Mr. REYNOLDS. And if you knew that you had to pay two per cent. taxes it would be two per cent. less on the bonds when you bought them.

Mr. TERRY. I do not know what it would mean. I know that if I had one hundred thousand dollars of the bonds of the State of California, I should consider myself worth one hundred thousand dollars in good property, and there would be no reason why I should not be taxed upon them. If a man steals one of them, I can get it back; and for the protection of this property, or this thing which is not property, if you please, it is right that I should pay.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Will a bond that is required to pay two per cent. taxes bring as much as one that does not?

Mr. TERRY. I do not know, and I do not care. An acre of land does not bring so much when it is taxed higher, so that the argument is as strong in favor of exempting land as it is in favor of exempting a bond. It is better property.

As to the question of franchises, a gentleman stated that a franchise was just the same as a property of a corporation. Why, in hundreds of instances the property bears no relation to the franchise. Take the case where a man has got a ferry, and an exclusive right to ferry people across. His ferryboat is worth five hundred dollars, and his franchise is worth ten thousand dollars.

Mr. GREGG. Don't you pay a license upon your ferry? Then you are taxed.

Mr. TERRY. You are taxed upon the property, of course. The real value of a thing is so much money as it will bring. It is all property. It is all protected by the law, and all ought to be taxed.

Mr. TULLY. Would not the franchise be valued in going into insolvency?

Mr. TERRY. Of course it would. Take the case of a man who has an exclusive franchise for a bridge. If it was burned down or carried away by a flood he could replace it for a thousand dollars; yet his franchise might be worth twenty thousand dollars.

Mr. HEISKELL. There is the Oakland Ferry franchise.

Mr. TERRY. Do your steamboats upon that ferry bear any sort of proportion to the value of the franchise? I suppose that money enough is taken in there every week to build any one of those boats; probably a half dozen of them.

Mr. GREGG. Take for instance the Call and Bulletin establishment. The property may be worth twenty thousand dollars, and the good will worth one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. TERRY. It is income derived from the brain, and it may produce a great many thousand dollars. We do not tax that income.

Mr. TOWNSEND. If you own a farm worth twenty thousand dollars, and it is mortgaged for five thousand dollars, and you are assessed for twenty thousand dollars, don't you pay upon all the property there is in existence?

Mr. TERRY. No, sir, I pay upon what I have got. There has been a thousand millions of bonds issued by the United States Government, which is simply evidence of debt, and backed up in property and in mortgages, and still it is property.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then if you have to pay for that property and are permitted to receive a credit on your debt, would not that be eminently just between the parties?

Mr. TERRY. There is no justice in it. Let every man pay upon what he has got.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Does not the State receive all that it is entitled to?

Mr. TERRY. No. Every man is equally protected, and the State should tax every man, no matter in what shape the property is.

Mr. EDGERTON. You base it upon protection.

Mr. TERRY. Upon what else is it based? People go into society for the purpose of protection. Upon what other principle do we pay taxation except that we have a protection for our persons and property?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is not the deed as much value as a mortgage?

Mr. TERRY. No. The deed represents the property.

Mr. TOWNSEND. The mortgage takes the property.

Mr. TERRY. The mortgage does not take the property. It gives you a right to have the property sold, and out of the proceeds of the sale to pay the mortgage.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then a man who holds the land is paying on more than he is worth.

Mr. TERRY. Call it double taxation, if you please. You reduce the rate of taxation. If I have got a mortgage for ten thousand dollars on a place that is worth twenty thousand dollars, I have got ten thousand dollars worth of property.

Mr. TOWNSEND. But the man is worth ten thousand dollars.

Mr. TERRY. I don't care what the man is worth. The man who owns the land gets the whole benefit of the land. He has the use of it. What is the difference, now? You, gentlemen, say, notes are not property, yet it is a promise to pay money. The bonds of the State of California are promises to pay just as much as notes are. You say they are not property, but still there is nobody here who would not be willing to take any amount of them. If I own one hundred thousand dollars in bonds of the City of Sacramento, I can go into the Courts and force my right, and I am protected by the law. I say that is the basis of taxation. We pay for the protection of the government thrown around our persons and our property; that is the only reason taxes are levied. Men have gone into society for that purpose. In a state of nature every man enforced his right as he could, but when he went into society, it is necessary that society should be supported. All we get from society is protection.

MR. REYNOLDS. I would like to ask one question more. Supposing all the property in the State was owned by the citizens thereof, and each in his own right, without any debts or credit at all in the State, then what would the taxable property consist of, lands, goods, and money?

MR. TERRY. Yes.

MR. REYNOLDS. And there would be no evidences of debt?

MR. TERRY. Certainly.

MR. REYNOLDS. If, on the following day, commercial transactions should commence, and debts be incurred, and credits given, would there be any more property to tax?

MR. TERRY. Yes; there would. I owe a man five thousand dollars, and he has got a mortgage. His remedy is not entirely against that land. He has got his lien upon my work, my labor, my ability to earn money for the years afterwards.

MR. TOWNSEND. But you are so much poorer.

MR. TERRY. No, sir; he has got a record of that; he is not confined to that remedy. He has got everything else that I have got, or that I may acquire afterwards.

MR. STEELE. And if a thief should steal the note, could you not punish him?

MR. TERRY. Certainly.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to section two.

SPEECH OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I hope this last amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma will pass, not because it meets my peculiar views individually, because if I had an exclusive right to get up a system of taxation I am inclined to think I would tax no debts, solvent or otherwise; but I am satisfied that would not meet the views of the people, or a large part of the people, of this State. Therefore I am willing to compromise to a certain extent, and yield part of my views for the purpose of deciding upon some general system of taxation. But I am opposed unconditionally to this thing of making deductions, or rebate. I look upon it as introducing something into the law in which the State has no concern whatever. I agree with the gentleman from Sacramento, Judge McFarland, when he said such a provision has no place in the taxation law. If it be the policy of this State to compel my creditor, when I go to pay my debt, to deduct from the debt an amount equal to that which I have paid for taxes, then, I say, let that provision be placed in some other part, and not in the tax law. It has nothing to do with taxation whatever. Let it be placed in that part which regulates the rights of debtors and creditors.

Now, I will endeavor to illustrate, in my poor way, why I think it is unjust and unfair to make my creditor deduct anything from my debt that I owe him, in consequence of the tax I have paid for him. For instance: I am a lawyer (though a very poor one). But I go into a place and begin to make a living, provided I can get a little start, for I have no capital, except my efforts, whatever they are worth. I find some one willing to take the chances, and loan me one thousand dollars. I take the money, and with it purchase a law library, fit up an office, and go to work. I have the office and library. I have control of the library. It is mine. That property is mine. If my enemies come and threaten to take that property and pile it into the street, and set fire to it, I can appeal to the law to protect me. I can bring my complaint before a magistrate, and if I can establish the fact that my enemies have threatened to destroy my property, I can compel them to give bonds to keep the peace towards me. I can do all that at the expense of the State. The State is bound to give me protection. And if a thief comes and steals my property, and carries away my office furniture, I appeal to the law of the State, and no matter what the expense may be, the State follows that thief, and if he can be found, he is tried, convicted, and incarcerated in the State Prison, at an expense, it may be, of ten times the value of the property which he stole. The State protects me in that regard; and my creditor has no more interest in the protection of that property than any other citizen at large has. You may say he is interested so far as my ability to pay him is concerned, but that is only incidentally.

Now, I say I have had the use of that property, the State protects me in the use of it, and I can, if my rights are interfered with, come into Court and ask the State to vindicate me in my rights. That is not the rights of my creditor, but my rights. If a man comes into my office and interferes with my property there, it is my right that he interferes with, and I can appeal to the strong arm of the State to protect me, and the State is bound to do it.

Now, then, I say I am protected just in proportion to the amount of property I own. If I have borrowed ten thousand dollars and fitted up my office with it, put that amount of property in it, then, I say the State protects me just that much more. Now, when I come to pay my creditor at the end of the year, or at the end of three years, if I have made enough money to do so, I say what justice is there in saying that my creditor shall deduct from the amount I owe him, the amount of taxes I have paid on that property for the support of the government which protects me. I say there is no justice in it. I say that if there is any justice in it at all, it is in not taxing the debt to him. I would much prefer to see the debt go untaxed, than to make my creditor pay it. To illustrate further, suppose a man owns a ferry franchise. He owns a ferry, and the right to keep that ferry. This property is worth something; if he pays a license it is worth that much less, but he owns a ferry franchise and is going to do business. He says, here, if I had one thousand dollars I could make money running that ferry. He borrows the money of his neighbor—I do not care whether it is secured or not, whether he gives security or not, makes no difference—he finds a neighbor who loans him one thousand dollars to build a boat with, after a while he takes that thousand dollars and builds a boat, thereby enabling him to go into business, and the State is bound to protect him in that property. If his neighbor comes and cuts the line and takes off that boat in the night, he can appeal to the strong arm of the law, and the Government will follow the trespasser and bring the property back to him, no matter what the expense may be. If any trespasser interferes with his rights in the use of that property, in any way whatever, he can appeal to the Courts, and the Courts are bound, if it is proven that his grievances are well founded, to punish the trespassers, and may award him damages—he may collect money for damages sustained. Thetr espass is not committed upon the man who loans him the money—he is entirely disinterested; he has no more interest than any other man at large in the community. Of course we are all more or less intercsted with individual rights, but this is only as part of the community at large. But the man who is directly interested in the protection of that property is the man who borrowed the money with which to build a boat for his own use. Now, he runs a ferry upon borrowed capital; the Assessor comes along and assesses that boat to him at one thousand dollars, and he pays the tax on it, as he ought to. Now, I say, what justice is there, what right is there, when he comes to pay his creditor who has loaned him this money, what justice or right is there in saying that the creditor shall deduct from the debt, with interest from the date of payment, the amount of taxes which he has paid on that thousand dollars? I am unable to see any justice in it at all.

A farmer may have a tract of land worth five thousand dollars. He has nothing else in the world. He knows if he had some capital to carry on business he could make money. He knows a neighbor who is willing to loan him the money, five thousand, or two thousand, say. I don't care whether he takes a mortgage or not, because it makes no difference in the principle. His neighbor loans him two thousand dollars. With that money he buys horses, and wagons, and plows, and other farming tools. He has the use of that property on the farm, and is thereby enabled to make the farm pay. Now, if his rights in the possession of that property—ownership of that property—though bought with borrowed money, are interfered with; if one of his neighbors comes in and drives off his stock, and takes down his fences, he can appeal to the Courts, and the Courts will follow that neighbor and compel him to pay the amount of the damage. It is not his creditor who loaned him the money who appeals to the Court. It is not the rights of the creditor that have been interfered with; it is his rights. Or, if an incendiary comes and burns up his stacks of wheat, and kills his horses or steals them, he can appeal to the law, and, without expense to himself, punish the wrongdoers. It is his right. The State is bound to use its best endeavors to see justice done, though it may cost ten times the amount of the property stolen. It is the duty of the State to do it; she is bound to do it. Therefore I say that a man should pay taxes in accordance with the amount of protection he receives from the Government. What justice is there in the case of a man who owns a five thousand dollar farm, and is doing business on borrowed capital, protected fully in the possession of his land and improvements, to the value of seven thousand dollars in all—what justice is there in saying that when he goes to pay his creditor the creditor shall deduct from the amount that is due him the amount of taxes which have been paid on that two thousand dollars? I say there is no justice in it at all. It is not protection to the creditor which the State has afforded during this time; it is the debtor who has had the full protection of the law. If the creditor pays taxes on the debt, which is assessed to him as a debt, let him pay it directly, because there is reason in that, and reasons against it, too. But I am willing to tax every debt that exists. I am willing to compromise. But I say make no deduction. If I loan a man two thousand dollars and he refuses to pay me, I will appeal to the law and the law will compel him to pay me. I have protection, and the debtor is protected in the use of his property. Therefore, I say in this view I can see no justice in making these deductions, and I hope this amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma will prevail, and assess everything that has value, everything that is property.

SPEECH OF MR. BELCHER.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: We have declared that taxation shall be equal and uniform. I suppose we all desire to see the burden of taxation equal and uniform. But we have great difficulty in devising a scheme that will effect this end. In comparing views, it seems that while we are all disposed to effect the end, we are not all agreed as to how that end can best be effected. I suppose there is no gentleman here who does not wish to do it, because, by a large majority here, we have declared that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this State. Now what is that, if it is not that all property shall be burdened alike, and that every man shall pay in proportion to his ability to pay? If it be that every man must pay in proportion to the protection he receives from the Government, as suggested by the last gentleman, then you levy taxes without reference to property. A man may not be worth a dollar, and yet he can demand protection from the Government. A man may have no property in reality—that is, he may be in debt for the last dollar he has, so that all his property would go to his creditors, he simply managing it in the interest of his creditors for the time being, and yet he really be worth nothing. Now, if a man like that is to be assessed in proportion to the protection he receives, then that is one rule. But that is a rule that goes independent of property. The idea is that all property is to be assessed, and that taxation is to rest upon property, and upon property alone. During the whole history of this State we have assessed men—with the simple exception now and then of a poll tax and succession tax—for property, and property alone. And I supposed that was what we were trying to do here, to place the burden eventually upon property, and property alone.

Now, sir, the proposition here is the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma. Several gentlemen have expressed the wish that the proposition might be adopted. It seems to me there are serious objections to it. It does not effect the end sought, and it is to these objections I propose to speak. As I understand it, sir, it is that all property of every kind—everything capable of ownership, or sold, shall be subject to taxation. And then gentlemen say there shall be no deductions from this. Whatever a man has that he can sell, shall be assessed at its cash value. Now, that is not according to the history of this State in the first place. Go back over the history of this State and you will find we have never done that. I have just looked at the revenue law passed in eighteen hundred and fifty-one. Under that law solvent debts—all solvent debts—over and above a man's indebtedness, were assessed. And I have looked at the law passed in eighteen hundred and sixty-one, by which all a man's solvent debts, over and above indebtedness, were to be assessed. According to the proposition here by the committee, the indebtedness is to be deducted from the solvent debts. If we go back all through the history of this State, there is nothing up to this time—I have just now looked at the revenue law of eighteen hundred and fifty-one and eighteen hundred and sixty-one—and I say, if my recollection is right, all through the history of the State, from time to time, that when solvent debts were assessed at all, only the balance over and above a man's indebtednesss was assessed. Now, why should this not be so? What reason is there against it. The gentleman says a man may resort to the Courts for protection. That may be so; but go all over this State, and in every town and village you will find men engaged in trade as well as in the cities. The man from the country goes to the city and buys a bill of goods. He takes along, perhaps, money enough to pay for half the goods, the balance he gets trusted for. He takes these things and sells to the miners, receiving some cash, and charges on his books a portion of the goods. Now, he is both in debt and has debts due him. Suppose when he went into business he had ten thousand dollars to start with. That money he invests in goods and goes in debt ten thousand dollars. He has sold goods on trust until he has ten thousand dollars due him. Now, the Assessor comes along and finds, say ten thousand dollars worth of goods in his store and assesses him. That is what he is worth. That is all the property he has. Why should he be assessed for what is due him, making no deductions for what he owes? Why should he be compelled to pay on thirty thousand dollars, when he is only worth ten thousand dollars? Now, I say why do it, when we never have done it before? All along through the history of this State we have deducted the amount of his debts. Why not do it now? But the proposition of the gentleman from Sonoma says, he shall be assessed for all goods he has, and all the credits he has, with no deductions whatever for what he owes. I say it is not right. There is no justice or propriety in it. It is not sufficient answer to say that he may collect these debts through the medium of the Courts. He may do it. If his creditors do not pay him, he may have occasion to resort to the Courts. But you are going to assess him upon this theory upon the property he has—the property he has in goods—and then on his credits without paying his debts. He should be assessed on his goods and then upon his credits over and above his debts. That is all he has, and all he ought to be assessed upon, unless you change the theory of taxation, and say that a man shall be assessed for the protection the law gives him, and not for the property he has.

Take another case. All that a man has, all that a corporation has, all that anybody has, that is capable of sale and delivery for value, must be assessed. The Hibernia Savings Bank of San Francisco is a corporation. It has deposits to the amount of fourteen million dollars. Those deposits are from the poor men of San Francisco, mechanics, laborers, men of small means, men who are unable to use their money profitably, who are unable to loan it, and they take it to the bank to be loaned out, and they receive the interest at the end of six months. Now, every man who goes and makes a deposit there receives a passbook. As between him and the bank, the relation of debtor and creditor arises. If that be true, when the Assessor comes around this fourteen million dollars must be assessed to the several depositors there, because it is something of value, and a great deal of value. There is something that can be sold and transferred.

MR. TERRY. Is it not a fact that money has always been taxed from the very beginning?

MR. BELCHER. Yes, sir. If you take the savings banks of San Francisco, it is said that there are sixty million dollars deposited there, and these sixty million dollars must be assessed to the small depositors. I do not object to the assessment of all the property there is, for I say that is the end we all want to effect. But what follows? When you have assessed these sixty million dollars to the small depositors, the Assessor goes to the bank and finds that the bank has loaned this money out, and has mortgages for it. The banks owe it—the banks are not worth anything themselves—it is the creditors of the banks who own that property, but the banks have sixty million dollars in their possession, and it must be assessed to them again. The creditors have been assessed once for this same money, and now the banks must be assessed. Now, the bank pays the depositors the surplus interest which this money loaned out on mortgages has earned, so that when the creditor is assessed once, and the bank is assessed again, then all these poor people have to pay the second tax on their money, which they cannot afford. You effect just this end.

Gentlemen say it is the protection they receive that they are assessed for, because they are protected. In a certain sense they are. They have the benefit of the law. If you have a deposit in a savings bank, and the bank refuses to return it to you, the law will compel the bank to pay you. But is that any reason why this money should be assessed once in the hands of the depositors, and again in the hands of the bank, thus taking two taxes out of the depositor? That is precisely the end which this amendment purposes to effect. And there are at least sixty millions of dollars that will be reached and doubly taxed in this way if you adopt this proposition. I say it is simply wrong. It is unjust. It is enough if men are assessed once for what they are worth, for what they have. I do believe, sir, in making deductions. I do believe that a man who is in debt should be assessed for only what he is worth, and not on what he owes. Property must be assessed, because government must have revenue. You cannot say, if I am a farmer worth ten thousand dollars, that you may assess me for so much of the farm as I may own, over and above the mortgage, because, perhaps, I have given the mortgage to somebody in New York, or somebody in Europe. My property must be assessed at what it is worth, because the government must have revenue. It is a right you have to assess property. But it is not right, after you have assessed my property, after I have paid taxes upon all the property I have, for all I am in fact worth or have of value, to assess me on anything else.

Now, sir, the proposition here is to assess my farm for what it is worth. And if I owe to the bank half or three quarters of its value, you are going to assess it again to the bank. And if you allow business to be done as it has been done, you allow them to put a provision in the mortgage that I shall pay that tax too. What right have you to assess me once, twice, or three times what I am worth. It is wrong. You have a right to make me pay on what I am worth, but there your right ends. It is idle to talk about the increased value of property by assessing these things, and the consequent cutting down of the tax rate.

The gentleman from Sonoma says when a man has a note, he has something of value. So he has, in a certain sense; but because he has a note he adds no property to the property of the State. If I am worth fifty thousand dollars to-day, and give a note for twenty-five thousand dollars—half of what I am worth—it does not add any property to the State. It does not increase the property at all. Take a case which has been cited here many times: Suppose all the property in the State were owned by one man, to the value of one million dollars; one man has the whole of it. Now, sir, suppose he sells to B, and takes a mortgage for one million dollars. When it was assessed to A, it was assessed at one million dollars. When it was sold to B, a mortgage was given for one million dollars. Now, we haven't two million dollars worth of property; you have only the same one million dollars worth. It is all the property there was before the note was given; it is all the property there is after the transfer. You don't make property by giving notes.

Suppose, as suggested here, that a man has a horse worth one hundred dollars, and sells it and takes a note for the amount; you have not increased the aggregate value—there is one horse left, and that is all there is. If the second man sells the horse to a third party, and takes a note, you haven't got three hundred dollars worth of property. You don't make property by selling it. In a certain sense you may have the right to the protection of the law in the possession of these things. Each man who holds a note may resort to the Courts for the collection of the money, but there is no more property, and so long as the basis of taxation is property and not protection, you have nothing but the horse. You have the single item of the horse and that is all.

We are here to remedy this evil. It is to relieve these poorer classes if we can, from the burdens which oppress them, instead of making the burden to bear still more heavily upon them. There are men all over the State who are paying taxes on what they do not own.

MR. TERRY. By increasing the aggregate amount of property on the assessment roll you decrease the tax rate accordingly.

MR. BELCHER. Yes, sir; the man who has no debts, simply has property, gets the benefit of it. Suppose the assessment roll in this State foots up one million dollars. If I have one hundred thousand dollars' worth of property, and am not in debt, if you can increase the assessment roll to one million five hundred thousand dollars, you will reduce the per cent. I have to pay, and that will be a benefit to me. But the man who is in debt, and has to pay on more than he is worth; who has one hundred thousand dollars' worth of property and owes fifty thousand dollars, and has to pay upon one hundred thousand dollars, will pay on more than he is worth. I am benefited, because my property is clear, and I pay only on what I am worth; but the extra burden falls upon the man who is in debt; you still make him pay on all his property. The burden is still upon the poorer classes. It is the wealthy class of men who are the least sufferers.

I object to another proposition in the report of the committee as well. They say, and I suppose this body will agree to it, that growing crops should be exempt. Now, sir, I think not. I think growing crops should not be exempt by a constitutional provision. Suppose they are to be exempt, for what reason? Why, gentlemen say the crop may turn out to be nothing. That may be. You come to the people on the first of March and find a crop growing, see the field, but there may be no crop harvested from it; therefore, gentlemen say it should be exempt. Not that you should not consider it with the land, but arbitrarily exempt it by constitutional provision. Why, sir, when the Assessor comes around, he can take no account of the growing crop, with this provision in the Constitution. What will be the effect. I have a section of land of a certain quality, and you have a section of land adjoining of the same quality, and the land that you have and the land that I have should be assessed equally, it may be ten dollars an acre. Now suppose I have planted my land at an expense of three dollars an acre. Suppose I have put in a crop of wheat, expending so many dollars an acre. I have put that much money into the land, say four dollars an acre. The first of March comes, and the land will sell under the hammer for all I have put into it. I can find a purchaser any time who will give me all I have put into it. It is a growing crop. Now, why say in the Constitution that I shall not pay on this three or four dollars an acre I have put into the land, that is there to be seen, that may be sold, that anybody will take, that adds to the value of the land. Why say in the Constitution I shall not pay anything for that, while if you have the same amount of money invested in any other industry you will be compelled to pay taxes on it. I might lease a piece of land and put in a crop on it. I own no land, but I have a crop growing. The Assessor comes to me and finds my crop growing, which is worth money, which I can sell or mortgage, and I say, my property is exempt under the Constitution. It is exempt. The man who owns the land and has money borrowed on it, pays two taxes, or on twice as much as he is worth, while I, with my valuable crop, in which I have invested my money, am exempt from taxation. I say it works a wrong, because you allow me to have my money invested there with no taxes to pay on it.

Take the case of Dr. Glenn, of Colusa County, where he has under cultivation thousands of acres. He has tenants cultivating the land, and he takes one fourth of the crop, without putting in a crop. The money is invested in the crop until harvest. The Assessor comes along, but he cannot assess anything there, though it may be worth thousands and thousands of dollars, and the land must be assessed as if it was not cultivated land, for you must assess the land without reference to the crop that is on it.

MR. STEELE. The man pays taxes on his seed wheat, tools, etc.

MR. BELCHER. The assessment comes on the first of March. I know that crops sometimes fail, but I know, too, that they do not always fail. In this great country we have, we raise good crops nearly all the time, though they are sometimes short. In a Winter like this, in this cold weather, cattle are dying upon the plains; sheep are dying, too. Property fails. The flood comes along and destroys one man's property. We have big fires. A fire comes and burns up the barn or the house. But that does not meet the question. Here in this county, with one hundred and fifty miles of territory, with farms scattered all over the valley, are you to say there shall be no assessment at all, no reference whatever to the growing crop when the Assessor comes around? Will you say that all property shall be taxed except that, and that taxes shall be equal and uniform throughout the State?

Now, sir, I have a thousand acres of land, with a growing crop on it which cost me, say five dollars an acre. I have the crop in on the first of March. I would have expended five thousand dollars in putting in that crop. The land is worth ten thousand dollars, and the five thousand dollars I put into the soil brings the whole up to fifteen thousand dollars, which I am worth on the first day of March. Now, sir, you propose to say that the Assessor shall assess me only for ten thousand dollars, because I put my money in that crop that is growing; because, perchance, it may turn out no harvest. Why say so? Why say there may be no harvest, and therefore this five thousand dollars which I have put into that crop shall not be taxed? What reason is there for it, if you are going to say that everything that has a value, everything else, shall be assessed? Why say that this growing crop shall go free, when it can be sold as cows and horses and sheep can be sold? I can go to the banks and mortgage this crop, and raise money on it. Why exempt it from taxation?

Now, sir, I do not believe in taxing growing crops in view of the harvest. But I do believe if I have put five thousand dollars into my land, in putting in a crop, that it adds to the value of my farm, and in that form should be considered and assessed. The very moment I have planted my land, and put one thousand or three thousand in it, I can sell it for so much more money. If I am worth three thousand dollars more, why should I not be taxed? A man should pay taxes on what he is worth, and not on what he has not. You should not let anybody go free, nor should you demand more of any man than he is able to pay. Let us make the burden as equal as we can.

Now, I prefer this second proposition, reported by the committee, to the proposition submitted by the gentleman from Sonoma. I do not believe his will work. This does not meet my view exactly, but it is much more easy to criticise than to remedy. Much easier to pull down than to build up. There is great difficulty in making a system of taxation satisfactory to ourselves.

MR. ROLFE. Could not the Legislature, under our present Constitution, adopt the same system which you advocate, without changing the Constitution at all?

MR. BELCHER. The Legislature has unlimited power, if we don't restrict them. It has been legislating in this State upon the subject. It is true that the Supreme Court has declared that debts are not property within the meaning of the Constitution, and hence were not subject to taxation. But there is no difficulty now in the Legislature doing what I am proposing, that is, to equalize the burden of taxation between the debtor and the creditor. This system must not be a cast-iron system, because there may be something in it that won't work. If you are going to take the system proposed, that all things shall be taxed, and that all things that have any value are property; that whatever a man has that is valuable, that may be sold, shall be assessed to him without discount or reduction, that will be an iron rule, and one which it seems to me will bear heavily upon the people. It would bear heavily now and in the future. We want a system that will come as nearly as possible making the burdens of taxation upon men in proportion to their ability to bear them. I say that a man who is worth one hundred thousand dollars should pay ten times as much as the man who is worth ten thousand dollars, and the man who is worth ten thousand dollars should pay ten times as much as the man who is worth one thousand dollars. I say that the proposition reported by the committee is better than those which are offered as substitutes, and I am opposed to them. If something better cannot be devised I am for it. Other propositions may follow which will work better. A proposition which says assess everything you can find that has value, credits included, without making any deductions, can work only mischief.

SPEECH OF MR. SWING.

MR. SWING. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, not because I am in favor of putting in restrictions or making any declarations in the Constitution, or of affecting the right in any way of the Legislature to regulate the matter of taxation. I believe now, as I believed when this first section was up, that what we want is a system of taxation that can be made to conform to exigencies as they arise. We don't know what is the best system of taxation. We can only find out by trial. And when we have tried a system, if it is satisfactory; if it makes the burden of taxation fall where it should fall, we want to keep it. But if it is pernicious; if it does not meet the end which is sought to be arrived at, we want to reserve the power to change it. But I am in favor of this section, because it says that taxation shall be equal and uniform. I am willing to take it, and leave it to be construed hereafter. We have had a trial of that first section, and I believe there has never been a case, whether overruled or not, which has decided that under that system mortgages could not be taxed. Under that system I believe there has been a vast amount of property in this State which has been paying no portion of the taxes. Therefore, I am in favor of this amendment, because it will give a construction to the words "equal and uniform," and I think it will make these words of some meaning. I believe the only remuneration which the State gives to the taxpayer is the protection which he receives. I believe that is the only difference between taxation and robbery. It is taking the property of another against his will, forcibly, with the intention of appropriating it to their own use. And I believe there is no other difference between taxation and robbery than the security which the State affords the taxpayer. Now, if that is the difference, then I say that they should be given themselves the right that every taxpayer should pay in proportion to the security he receives; not in proportion to the amount of land he owns, merely; not in proportion to the amount of horses he owns, but he should pay in proportion to the security he receives. Now, taxation should be equal and uniform.

Now, there have been some illustrations given here to show that by taxing notes you thereby make double taxation. Now take this instance: Suppose I own a horse. I sell the horse to General Mansfield and take his note for it. He sells the horse to Mr. Reddy, and takes his note for it. Those notes are running yet, not having been paid. Well, General Mansfield has the right to enforce the collection of that note and take back the horse. I have a right to enforce the collection of my note and take back the horse. During that time I have had protection in my note, and General Mansfield has had protection in his note, and Mr. Reddy has been protected during that time in his horse. We have had equal protection, equal security. These notes have to be collected. We have each had equal security. We stand in the same position that we did before. Who has paid for that security? Mr. Reddy has paid for it. General Mansfield and myself have not paid a single cent. There is that illustration carried to its legitimate end. Do you call that equal and uniform? Now, if the horse was worth one hundred dollars, and the rate is three dollars, then Mr. Reddy would have paid it, and we would have paid nothing. If you had taxed the notes, Mr. Reddy would have paid one dollar, I one dollar, and General Mansfield one dollar. Isn't that nearer equality and uniformity than to compel one man to pay it all?

There has been another illustration given here: Suppose that all the property in the State is worth a million dollars. That is all the property there is. Suppose I own it all. (That is hardly possible.) Suppose I sell that property to Mr. Reddy, and take a mortgage upon the property. The property has got to pay, and we two are the only taxpayers in the community. Now, I require protection for my mortgage; I require the right to enforce the collection of it through the Courts. I can enforce it by taking back the property. Now, under the system which the gentleman advocates, while I have protection for my mortgage, and can take back the property, he has to pay for the entire amount of security, and I pay nothing for the protection I receive. Is that justice? Is that equal and uniform taxation? On the contrary, should not each one of us pay our share, because we each one had equal security during that time?

I want a low rate of taxation, and for different reasons. I would rather incorporate into the Constitution a clause that not more than one cent on the dollar should ever be levied in this State than to incorporate any other kind of provision. Find more property, but expend less money. I want a low rate of taxes, because a low rate will encourage property to come to this State; it will encourage capital to come to the State. A business man in the East, with a million dollars, is desirous of investing in some mining property here, or buying a ranch, or a water ditch in this State. The first question he will ask is in regard to the rate of taxation. If he finds the rate is two and a half per cent. he says, at once, that is too much. He prefers to invest less, and pay less taxes, in the East. He finds also that he has to pay taxes on the enterprise in which he invests, that the burden rests upon the very enterprise in which he desires to invest. He don't come here.

Again, if you tax notes and mortgages it discourages the loaning of money, the holding of money, and the dealing in money, notes, bonds, etc., and encourages the investment of capital in permanent property. It reduces the rate of taxation upon real and personal property, thereby encouraging the investment in that direction. Now I am not in favor of encouraging enterprise for the benefit of the poor man, or for the benefit of the rich man. But I am in favor of doing things which will give employment to laborers and decrease crime, and decrease the expenses of government, and which will bring happiness to this country, where there is now sorrow, distress, and starvation. I am in favor of a provision that will encourage the investment of capital in enterprises which will give employment to those who need employment.

Again, I am in favor of exempting growing crops. And the reason is this, that you cannot properly assess growing crops. The Assessor starts out on his mission of destruction about the first of March, and he goes to A and assesses him. His wheat is just coming out of the ground and his corn, perhaps, is not yet planted. He assesses the wheat, and puts the corn at the same figure as the wheat, for a small amount. He goes on his round and reaches B along about the last of June, or the last of May, and his crop by that time is matured. It is in good condition. It is no better than A's, which was assessed on the first of March, but he pays ten times as much taxes on it as A pays on his.

Again, I am in favor of exempting growing crops, because I am in favor of encouraging that kind of employment. Not because I want to help the farmer, because I do not care any more for the farmer than I do for the lawyer, or the doctor, but because I want to encourage that kind of enterprise. Why? Because it gives employment to more men and brings happiness to more households. And I am in favor of it because, if growing crops are exempt, it will encourage men to engage in the cultivation of the soil, and discourage the holding of idle land.

SPEECH OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: A gentleman started out on Saturday in a very clear and forcible speech upon this subject, basing his opinion that solvent debts ought to be taxed, upon the principle of protection. To-day the distinguished gentleman from San Joaquin argues that theory before the committee. Now, sir, I deny that that is a fair principle upon which to base any system. To carry it out to its logical conclusion, suppose the theory of protection comes up in this way: if the maker of a note refuses to pay, the holder of the note can enforce his demand through the Courts; that is, he can enforce his right, and there the theory of protection ends. If it is stolen, he can invoke the authority of the State to punish the thief. Suppose a man publishes a libel on my friend from San Joaquin? He has his action at law; he has his remedy; he invokes the judicial and executive power of the State to redress the wrong. The cases are precisely analogous. He can resort to criminal prosecution, the same as he can if a man steals a promissory note. Now, then, why not tax the other men for the protection they receive against criminals, as well as the holder of a solvent debt? It is no more than right, if it be true that protection is the proper basis of a system of taxation. I deny it. What is that theory?

MR. TERRY. The protection you receive from the government.

MR. EDGERTON. The burden of government should be placed upon values—actual wealth—and not upon a conclusion of law, for that is all under heaven that a promissory note is—a mere conclusion of law, a mere deduction of law, that the person holding it has the right to recover whatever property is mentioned in it. Now, a good deal has been said here, when an important subject is under discussion, about the people, and gentlemen upon every occasion invoke the people, and claim that the people have sent them here from some obscure corner of the State—Jackass Gulch, or somewhere else. I don't mean to imply that the gentleman from Sonoma came from there. [Laughter.] If I have read the opinion of the people aright, from what I can gather by conversing with them, and by newspaper reports, it is that the constitutional tinkers do not understand their trade. I say there is no reliable evidence at hand as to what the desire of the people of this State is, as regards the taxation of solvent debts, mortgages, notes, and bonds. Now, I have a right to assume that it is the wish of the people that there shall be deductions made for what a man owes from what is owing to him.

MR. HEISKELL. I never heard of it in my county.

MR. EDGERTON. Your representatives have voted upon it. Now, sir, in eighteen hundred and fifty, the Legislature—many members of which were members of the Constitutional Convention which framed this provision referred to by the gentleman from Sonoma, who thinks the Supreme Court made a very great mistake—the men who made the Constitution under which this decision was made, put a provision of this kind in themselves. The Act of eighteen hundred and fifty provides, in defining personal property, that all moneys at interest owing to the person to be taxed more than they pay interest for, or other debts owing to them from solvent persons more than they are indebted, shall be taxed. That was the very first Act of the people of this State, through their representatives, in eighteen hundred and fifty. In eighteen hundred and fifty-one, another Act was passed, providing that all money at interest owing to the person to be taxed, more than he pays interest for, shall be taxed. In eighteen hundred and fifty-two, the law was, that money at interest, solvent debts, deducting indebtedness; and in eighteen hundred and fifty-three, the law provided that all money loaned on interest should be taxed, and no other provision as to taxing the indebtedness. Now, there is one instance where the people receded from the position suggested here now: that solvent debts should be absolutely taxed, without any deductions whatever, and the next Legislature in the following year restored the old provision. The representatives had gone home, and had got the will of their constituents; and they sent back their representatives the next Winter to restore the old provision: that money at interest, exceeding indebtedness, should be taxed. Then, in eighteen hundred and fifty-five and eighteen hundred and fifty-six, and way down to eighteen hundred and fifty-seven, there was no law passed, but that general enactment covering the whole time. In that year they provided that money on hand, or deposited, or invested, or money at interest, secured by mortgage or otherwise, and solvent debts—no deductions were made that year, or until the Legislature again met in eighteen hundred and sixty-sixty-one, when they enacted a new revenue law, which was enforced as a general system until the Codes came in. That provided for taxing solvent debts in excess of indebtedness.

Now, I undertake to say, backed by indisputable authority, that it is the will of the people of this State, as expressed in their laws over and over again, that solvent debts should be taxed, but that there should be deducted therefrom the indebtedness owing to other persons. Now that rule, I undertake to say, never would have been changed if it had not been for the rule laid down in this case reported in the thirty-fourth California, in eighteen hundred and sixty-eight. In that case the Court held that solvent debts were property within the meaning of the Constitution, and they further held that it was incompetent for the Legislature to exempt any property from taxation, though in another case they held directly the other way, and made the question squarely presented. Afterwards the people, through their Legislature, sought to elude even that stringent iron rule of law laid down in that case, and the Legislature of eighteen hundred and sixty-nine passed a law in express terms to prevent double taxation, and the people of this State enacted that law for the express purpose of exempting mortgages from taxation, and I think my friend from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, was one of the counsel in that case—The People vs. Eddy—in the Supreme Court, a case growing out of the statute. Now, sir, that is the history of the legislation on that subject.

Now I would like to call attention to this proposition now before the Convention. In the first place I would like to ask the author what he means when he says "franchises of corporations."

MR. MORELAND. The privileges they exercise.

MR. EDGERTON. Well, that applies to mining corporations, incorporated for the development of mines. They are assessed perhaps two, three, four, or ten thousand dollars, to try an experiment, to see whether they can develop and bring to light millions of dollars, which will result in adding a large volume of taxable property to the tax rolls. They are to be taxed, under this provision, for that privilege.

MR. TERRY. Taxed according to their value.

MR. EDGERTON. How are you going to estimate the value?

MR. ROLFE. I can tell you what a franchise is.

MR. EDGERTON. I didn't ask you. Now, sir, this provision provides that notes, evidences of indebtedness, and solvent debts shall be subject to taxation. Now, take that class of savings banks, such as the Sacramento Savings Bank; they have in that bank five or six million dollars; Mr. Freeman, the attorney of that bank, is here. For the purposes of illustration, say it has five million dollars. I believe the great bulk of that money belongs to poor people—wash-women and men who work by the day—it don't belong to lawyers, and merchants, and rich men, sir. Now, if I understand the proposition—the result of this proposition—one of these persons goes to the Sacramento Bank with five hundred dollars, the accumulation, perhaps, of two years' labor, and they issue to him a passbook. It is an evidence of indebtedness between the depositor and the bank. The bank is simply organized as an agent for the purpose of loaning out money, the accumulations of this class of depositors, and the interest is turned over to them after deducting the expenses of the bank. Now, the bank is an independent person before the law. It is a person just as much as a depositor. It loans out this money again, secured by mortgage. Now, according to this provision, as I understand it, you tax the person with the passbook for the five hundred dollars, and then tax the bank on the mortgage for five hundred dollars, which amounts to a clear case of double taxation. The party who owns the passbook pays one tax and the bank pays another tax on it. Now there is a double tax on all the money deposited in that bank in the same way. Somebody ought to pay the tax, but this is a proposition to make the same persons pay taxes twice. In addition to that there is a tax upon the franchise of the bank, according to the phraseology of this provision. I say it is preposterous.

Now, as to this question of growing crops. It seems to be a very ill devised system that taxes the land, and then the house, and then the fences, and then the barn, and then taxes the growing crops—all in separate columns. But I understand this system grew up from this state of things: in early days the land was supposed to belong to the government, and this system of taxing improvements has grown up because of that, as the improvements were the only things they could get at. They taxed improvements on possessory claims. That was the only way to get any revenue. But where titles are settled, it seems ridiculous to multiply subjects in this way. It ought to go on as real estate. In older States, land is listed at its value, and everything from the center of the earth to the sky is land, and everything raised on it is land. It is listed once, and that list remains for ten years, and the tax is based upon it. In some of the States it is listed once in five years. It seems to me that values have become permanent and settled enough now in this State to permit of that kind of taxation. It is wrong to multiply these subjects in this way. Now, sir, I am opposed in toto to any tax of any kind on any crop. I am not opposed to it for the benefit of the poorer classes, but for the benefit of that portion of the community that develop the resources of the country; that develop farms; that develop manufactures; that makes real, substantial property, which is subject to taxation.

Now, sir, my friend from Los Angeles, General Howard, the other day read the case of The People vs. The Hibernia Bank, and he commented on Judge Wallace's opinion in relation to the feasibility of taxing solvent debts, even under the old Constitution. He says in that case that a tax on a mortgage must be paid eventually, not by the creditor, but by the debtor. And, sir, I undertake to say that no system of taxing these conclusions of law can be devised which will not cast the burden of the tax upon the borrower, the ones who are aiding in developing the country.

MR. MORELAND. I ask the gentleman if he has not reported a section to prevent this. I will read section six: "Every contract hereafter made, by which a debtor is obligated to pay any tax or assessment on money loaned, or on any mortgage, deed of trust, or other lien, shall, as to any interest specified therein, and as to such tax or assessment, be null and void."

MR. EDGERTON. The gentleman from Sonoma has a fund of sarcasm in his speech, and a funny look on his face, and I suppose he is ready to criticise the grammar for my benefit. As to the obscurity of this report, the gentleman from El Dorado complained about that the other day. Mr. Chairman, this Convention imposed upon the Committee on Revenue and Taxation a very arduous task, to present something for a basis of action for this Convention. But they did not impose upon the committee the impossible task of furnishing these gentlemen with comprehension and ideas. As a gentleman once said of another, you could not get a joke into his head without performing a surgical operation upon him. Now, I do not propose to undertake a surgical operation on my friend Larkin.

MR. MORELAND. I ask the gentleman if he did not admit that he did not understand this section, and ask to have it stricken out.

MR. EDGERTON. No, sir, the gentleman has gone wrong again. It is very difficult to make the gentleman understand anything. Now, as to this section two, I expressly stated that this report expressed the sense of a majority of the committee. It is not my report. There is a good deal in it I like, and a great many things I do not indorse, and do not want to go into the Constitution.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Which member of the committee is responsible for the grammar?

MR. EDGERTON. The gentleman from Los Angeles, and the Chairman of the Committee on Corporations, have occupied so much time here on the question of corporations, that they have demoralized the whole Convention on the question of grammar.

MR. HOWARD. I supposed the grammar of the report was the grammar of the Chairman.

MR. EDGERTON. I have no doubt—I would be willing to father it. We paid no special attention to the grammar, but I challenge any gentleman to point out any difficulty with the grammar.

Now, the difficulty encountered by the Supreme Court in this Hibernia bank case, was that it was found to be utterly impossible to make a correct assessment on these solvent debts that would be equal and uniform on other kinds of property. It seems to me that is unanswerable. Now, as to the question of policy. Why, there are men in San Francisco who own millions of money and bonds, and when the time comes round, they send it right over to Virginia City, and avoid taxation. They would be out of the jurisdiction of this State. There is the case cited by General Howard——

MR. TERRY. They decided, in that case, that the ownership followed the residence of the owner.

MR. EDGERTON. Senator Jones lives in Nevada.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Suppose a man in this State owns bonds, and lives here——

MR. EDGERTON. Here is a thing I want to call your attention to. I say this provision of Mr. Moreland's will have a tendency to make a race of shifts, a race of hybrids. That has always been the result of attempting to subject this kind of property to taxation, and men seem to settle down to think it is all right as far as the taxation of these things are concerned, to manufacture debts, and get rid of taxation in that way, or to send money out of the State. I wish to read a few lines from the report of the New York Commissioners, on this subject of taxation. They say, in short, that under such a system there is hardly an assessment roll that does not work or tell lies. That was the fact in this State up to the time that solvent debts were declared not to be taxable. The best way to reach correct conclusions, it seems to me, is to take experience as our guide and test. Now, the Legislature of the State of New York passed a law authorizing the Governor to appoint a commission to investigate this whole question, and present some plan to the Legislature of the State. Among the men on that commission was Mr. Wells, a man of very large experience, and for many years connected with the revenue department of the government. He is recognized everywhere as high authority upon this subject. Now, the gentlemen read a few extracts from this report, such as suited their views, but why did they not go further? Why didn't they say that the commission reported against the taxation of personal property in any form—any personal property whatever. I read from the report, page sixteen:

"Within the last few years, moreover, such changes have been made in the tax systems of several of the States contiguous to New York, either by special enactments, variations of the methods of valuation and assessing of property, or a diminished necessity for the raising of revenue, as to place New York relatively at great disadvantage, and urgently call for the adoption of measures, on the part of the State, which will at once prevent the arrest of its development and the deviation of its legitimate capital, population, and enterprise. Thus, for example, the Legislature of the State of New Jersey, during the year eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, exempted, in certain of the counties and cities of that State, which lie contiguous to New York, all mortgages from taxation, by a provision of law."

The report goes on to show that the State of New Jersey offered such strong inducements that many capitalists were induced to change their residence, and invest their money in New Jersey, and that the State of New York, by continuing its taxes on mortgages and bonds, limited and obstructed the flow of capital in that channel, which, the report goes on to say, contributes so much to small enterprises, gives employment and homes to the working classes of our population, and augments the amount of visible tangible property available for taxation.

One gentleman said if money leaves the State other money will come in and take its place. Upon what process he arrived at the conclusion that if you tax money out of the State, the same kind of taxation is going to bring it in again, I cannot understand. I would not tax money at all, sir; not one cent. Now, this report says further:

"In forty-three out of the sixty-five counties of Pennsylvania, all mortgages, judgments, recognizances, or moneys owing upon articles of agreement for the sale of real estate, are exempt from all taxation, except for State purposes, while the maximum of tax at present levied by the State upon this species of property, in common with all other moneys loaned at interest, is only three tenths of one per cent."

I read further from page seventy-six of the report:

"On the other hand, New Jersey and Pennsylvania, with a wider experience, have, as before shown, entirely exempted mortgages from taxation over a large part of their territory, and will, no doubt, at no distant day, make the exemption universal."

And here occur points to which special attention should be given, viz.: in both of these States it is represented to the Commissioners that the demand for this exemption came not in any degree from the capitalists, but from the small landholders, particularly those of the working classes: and, further, that the influence of the exemption has been most beneficial to the districts affected by it—so much so, to use the words of one conversant with the question, "that if it were possible to take in, from an eminence, a view of the whole State, the counties in which mortgages were exempt from taxation would be as readily distinguished from the others as would be a field of luxuriant wheat or corn from a field of scrub oak or brushwood."

Now, sir, what is the condition of things in this State? There are many enterprises that would never be started, if you load down money in this way. I say the more you load down money with taxes the dearer you make it to those classes who need it to develop the State. Money is the instrumentality under which the great material resources of the country are brought out. The gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer, insists that the rate of taxation will become less and less as you increase the assessment roll. That is all true, but it will never be swelled by taxing solvent debts. You have to swell the assessment roll by something out of which taxes can be paid, like actual wealth—tangible things. I do not deny that a solvent debt is property in a vulgar sense. It is protected. A promissory note is protected. But look a moment and see whether there is any actual wealth. Suppose my friend from San Joaquin loans me ten thousand dollars on my ranch worth twenty thousand dollars. I apply to him and he loans me ten thousand dollars in gold notes. By some accident these gold notes are destroyed out of existence. Now, that is a matter between him and me. The land is there worth twenty thousand dollars, but there is no money.

MR. TERRY. My note is secured by your ability to make the money.

MR. EDGERTON. I might get to be an old man and yet not make that much money. There is an illustration given by Justice McKinstry, in the Hibernia Bank case. He says:

"Independent of other constitutional restrictions, the State might take such portions of the wealth within its borders—the burden being distributed with uniformity—as the legislative department might deem necessary for the support or defense of the government. In this respect there would be no limitation, save that resulting from moral considerations, addressing themselves to the consciences of individual legislators. Supposing—what would thus be possible in theory—that the necessities of government required a tax of one hundred per cent. on all values, or, what would be the result of such a tax, an appropriation of all the property in the State, it is plain that the State would receive no benefit from evidences of debt due by some of her citizens to others, and payable out of the tangible property which the State had already taken. It is property in possession or enjoyment, and not merely in right, which must ultimately pay every tax."

Now, a ranch, if it has value, is something tangible out of which the tax can be collected, but a solvent debt has no value independent of the property which it represents. That note which the gentleman has is worth just half my ranch. The note can be sold; why? Not because it has any value of itself, but because it is backed up by the property out of which it can be paid. Because it is a representative of value, and not value itself. Now, sir, for these reasons I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma.

MR. CROSS. Is land valuable in itself, or because it is capable of producing something?

MR. EDGERTON. Because it produces something.

MR. CROSS. Isn't that the reason a note is valuable, because it is capable of producing something?

MR. EDGERTON. No, sir; because you may destroy the note, or it may be lost, or burned up, but the property is there always. Destroy the property and your note is not worth a snap. The property is there always. It is visible, tangible. The Assessor can see it, and assess it in proportion to its value.

Now, I am opposed to this. I do not believe it will satisfy the people. I think gentlemen are in error when they strive to establish their own popularity by voting for such measures as this. I say the legislation of this State shows quite the reverse. And upon the grounds of policy it is wrong.

Now, so far as the taxing of capital stock of corporations is concerned, I understand that can be done now; but the shares cannot be taxed to the individual shareholders too, because that would be double taxation.

Now, a great deal of the complaint has come because of careless or dishonest Assessors, and because we have not had a State Board of Equalization with full power to raise and lower taxes. I think if this Convention adopts the report of this committee, and establishes a State Board of Equalization, with full power to act, there will be no more complaint about the taxation of solvent debts.

SPEECH OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I agree with the gentleman who has just taken his seat, that a great deal of dissatisfaction has been owing to the incompetency and dishonesty of Assessors in improperly assessing the value of property. I say I admit that. Now, what the opinion of a majority of the people of this State may be I do not know. What the people demand I do not know. I have never received any instructions in regard to what the opinion of the people of this State may be on this subject. But I proposed to them before I came here, and I propose now to do, as far as my action and words can have any influence, what, in my opinion, will be for the best interest of the people of the whole State. When I have done that I shall have done my duty. Whether the people shall approve of the Constitution when we get through with it is their business and not mine. I do not propose to stop to inquire whether it is popular or not popular. I propose to exercise my best judgment as to what is right, and I do not care whether it is popular or not.

MR. EDGERTON. I do not propose to place my views upon that——

MR. TERRY. You spoke of some gentlemen from obscure corners of the State.

MR. EDGERTON. I didn't mean you. [Laughter.]

MR. TERRY. I propose to do what is right. It is for the people to say whether they approve of it or not. Now, the propositions of these gentlemen seem to be two—I allude to the gentleman from Sacramento and the gentleman from Yuba—First, that evidences of indebtedness are not property. Second, that if they are property, it is impolitic to tax them. A great many people live very comfortable on this kind of property, and if I had a few thousands of these conclusions of law, I could quit work and live very easy. And I should think one hundred thousand dollars worth of bonds of the State of California, or of any county in the State of California (except the county from which Mr. Larkin comes), I would consider it very tangible property. It would furnish me with food and lodging, clothing and drink, and all the necessaries and luxuries of life. If I had all these things why should I not pay taxes on them? I could change it into real estate to-morrow. I could buy land and houses, and all kinds of property. It affords me a revenue more perhaps than the land would afford. Why should I not pay taxes upon that property, as well as my neighbor, who pays upon his land and house? Why should I be allowed to invest one hundred thousand dollars in bonds, and set down and rent a house, or board at a hotel, and make no contribution whatever to the support of the government, which protects me in my personal property, while my neighbor is compelled to pay taxes on everything he has. There is no fairness, or justice, or honesty in such a proposition.

Now, the gentleman from Yuba contended that growing crops should be taxed. That while neither bonds, nor notes, nor the interest which they bear should be taxed——

MR. BELCHER. I don't want them exempted.

MR. TERRY. But he excepts taxes upon bonds which produce interest—the notes that produce interest. Why the debt grows every day by interest. The growing crop is but the interest which the land produces. Why should he insist upon taxing the interest which the land produces, and refuse to tax the interest which the note produces? The growing crop is simply the interest which the land produces by being cultivated, the interest of the labor and capital expended on it. I cannot understand it. The farmer pays taxes upon the land, tools, horses, cows, and the products of the land is the interest on the labor and capital expended in producing the crop. There is no more justice in taxing that interest than there is in taxing the interest on bonds.

Now, my friend from Sacramento says that to attempt to tax indebtedness in any shape is to manufacture a nation of liars; that men are not honest enough to tell the truth when you ask them how much they have due, and when the Assessor comes around he will meet men who will perjure themselves. Now, I do not believe that the majority of the people of this State will perjure themselves for the purpose of escaping taxation. I don't believe, when the Assessor goes to a man and asks how many notes he has, how many solvent debts he has, for the purpose of assessing him, that he is going to commit deliberate perjury. To be sure, men will sometimes do it, but I think it will be found to be the exception, and not the rule. The rule will be that true statements will be given, and the roll will be greatly increased. I think the other proposition, to deduct what a man owns from what is owing to him, would be productive of much greater abuse, and open a wider door to fraud and perjury.

Now, I think fairness and justice require that every man who owns property in the State, whose property is protected by the laws of the State, should pay his fair proportion of taxes upon the value of his property.

MR. EDGERTON. Suppose that is so, should he pay twice? Would you have them pay twice, as the savings bank depositors would have to?

MR. TERRY. Certainly not. Under the law, as it stands now, a person who has money must pay taxes upon it.

MR. EDGERTON. Is it not double taxation, to tax the passbooks and then the money?

MR. TERRY. The money is taxed now.

MR. EDGERTON. But they will tax the passbooks and then go to the bank and tax the mortgage. The depositor pays two taxes upon the same property.

MR. TERRY. Certainly not, because if there is five hundred dollars loaned on mortgage it is no longer in the bank. It is taxed as indebtedness. The law now provides that you shall pay taxes on money in your possession or deposited in bank. A mortgage or note is another thing. If his five hundred dollars has been loaned on mortgage it is no longer on deposit. It is not double taxation.

MR. EDGERTON. The gentleman is mistaken. In the case of the People vs. the Hibernia Bank that precise thing was double taxation.

MR. TERRY. It is no longer deposited if it is loaned. If the money has been loaned on mortgage it is no longer on deposit, and is not taxed as a deposit.

MR. EDGERTON. The passbooks represent the entire amount of money that is in the bank. Now, you tax them. Now, when you come to the bank you find that this money has been loaned on mortgages, and you tax the same money again, or the mortgages, which is the same thing.

MR. TERRY. Certainly not. You tax the money in the hands of the owner of the passbook. Then you tax the evidence of debt, which the bank has; you tax it as any other evidence of debt.

MR. EDGERTON. That money belongs to the depositors—the Court has said so.

MR. TERRY. I know the Supreme Court have said a great many things at different times. I understand that every dollar of money that is put into the bank as a general deposit, belongs to the bank. The bank may take and loan that money—may take it and use it for any purpose. You have no right to go and demand it back as you would a special deposit; it is the money of the bank; the bank owes the depositor that amount. They have a right to deal with it as their own—loan it or pay other depositors with it.

MR. BELCHER. The Hibernia Bank has fourteen million dollars. The depositors pay taxes on this fourteen million dollars, and the bank pays taxes on the same fourteen million dollars.

MR. TERRY. And suppose it is twice taxed? They loan it out and take the evidence of indebtedness, and it is their property. The bank makes the profit on it. They never pay to the depositor the whole amount of interest they receive. I don't understand that any bank pays anything of the kind. They allow such a per cent. to time depositors. I never heard of a bank loaning money at the same rate of interest as they pay their depositors. Here is a bank with one million dollars, and not paying a cent to the support of the government. They draw interest, and don't pay one cent of taxes. That is sufficient argument for my side of the case. Here is an institution with one million of dollars that don't pay one cent of taxes to the support of government—men who have occasion at every term of Court to go into Court and invoke the aid of the Courts to foreclose mortgages and collect money.

As to this question of franchises, gentlemen don't seem to discriminate between a franchise that is worth something, and one that is worth nothing. We do not propose to tax a franchise at any particular amount, but to tax each franchise in proportion to its value. There are many corporations whose franchises are worth nothing. There are others whose franchises are worth ten times the amount of property they own. Take a bridge company; the value of the franchise bears no proportion to the price of the bridge. Take a ferry, the same way. Take the case of a company with a franchise to lay down city gas, with the exclusive privilege; the value of the property bears no proportion to the value of that exclusive privilege. Take street railroads; what proportion do the cars and old horses and track bear to the value of the franchise and the privilege of collecting tolls? They have the exclusive right to lay down tracks in certain streets. Now, they should all be taxed. Every man should pay a fair tax on what he is worth. It may be that there will be individual instances where there will be double taxation, where men will have to pay twice on the same property. If that be the case, when you increase the volume of property you decrease the rate. As the rule stands now, the most wealthy men, and those best able to bear taxation, escape altogether. This is extreme injustice. It is neither fair nor honest. I hope that the proposition introduced by the gentleman from Sonoma will carry, and that every person in the State, who owns property of any description, shall be called upon to contribute to the support of the government.

SPEECH OF MR. DUDLEY.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: If it should happen that this Convention should make what I should consider a great mistake, and continue this system and confine taxation to property values alone, I should certainly be in favor of the principle involved in the proposition offered by the gentleman from Sonoma. But I do not think it is possible for this Convention to make a greater mistake than to confine taxation to property values. Under our present system it is often the case that parties are subject, to a certain extent, to double taxation. Now, the system of levying taxes is a system grown up and confined to the United States. The old State Boards levied their taxes on a different basis entirely. It has grown up in the western country when that country was thinly settled. It was made at a time when there were no corporations, few lenders, and few banks. When, in fact, all the property there was, was visible, tangible property. The idea that taxes should be based on this basis alone, grows out of that school of political economy which ignores entirely the man and considers wealth only. It does not rest upon the plane of judicial or political science.

It is assumed here that the passbooks shall be subject to taxation. I do not understand by that construction that the passbook itself, which is only a certificate that the bank has a certain sum of money, can be taxed.

The gentleman from Sacramento is very hostile, and afraid of an income tax. He rises to his feet, and very generously, after discussing it awhile, moves to lay the question on the table. Now, sir, the Assessor comes to my farm and assesses it, and assesses my plows, and harrows, and cultivators. He makes a list of the furniture in the house and everything he can find, and puts me under oath. He asks me how many hogs, and cows, and sheep I have, and if he doubts my word he proceeds to count them. That is not inquisitorial, there is nothing inquisitorial about that, but he goes to the banking house in town, and asks the President of the bank what his income is, and that is inquisitorial in the extreme. Now, sir, I cannot see wherein it is inquisitorial to ask a man under oath what his income is, any more than to ask me how much stock and furniture I have. I think the banks should be compelled to pay taxes on their income. I understand, sir, that you can make out a case in theory, but when you come to put that theory into practice, it does not always prove correct. Gentlemen say here, that if you tax money that it will be simply added on as interest, and the borrower will have to pay the tax in the end. Now, if it is true that the rate of interest will be raised just exactly in proportion to the amount of taxes paid, then it would be true also that money loaned under the rule of not taxing solvent debts, that the rate of interest would decline. Is there a gentleman here who will tell me when the Supreme Court made their decision exempting that class of property the rate of interest declined? Did any gentleman who had money loaned out reduce the rate of interest, or loan money at any less rate than he had before? Again, sir, it is well known to every gentleman here who had occasion to borrow money that the rate of interest declined faster and more in the six years preceding that decision than it has in the six years subsequent to it, and neither the gentleman from Sacramento nor any other gentleman, can make it plain, that there is any danger of capital fleeing this State because of being compelled to pay its just share of taxation, for there is no place under heaven where capital can earn as much as it can here.

When taxation is levied on property values alone, it works a very great hardship and injustice. Under that system there is a vast amount of property that pays no taxes, and that puts an undue burden on property which is due to taxation. I am in favor, right here and now, of making these large capitalists contribute something for the support of the government, something in proportion to their ability to pay. Small property holders are compelled to pay in excess of their ability by reason of the exemption of this other class. I don't know of any way of coming at that except by levying an income tax upon the incomes of these corporations. If you loan money upon the income of borrowed money, that is always something tangible. There is no more difficulty in getting at the income of the Sacramento Bank, than there is in getting at the number of cattle and sheep a man has. There is no difficulty in taxing incomes. It is not listed for a direct tax, and as a matter of course there is no double taxation about it. I don't want the Convention to forget the proposition I introduced the other day. I propose, at the proper time, to offer that, and I believe it is the only solution of this question. I believe it is the only possible way in which you can get this class of property to contribute, and yet avoid the semblance of double taxation. I am opposed to taxing growing crops. It is a discrimination against the man who cultivates his land and invests his money in producing a crop, and in favor of the man whose large tract of land lies idle and uncultivated. The crop is the prospective income, the product of this investment of labor and capital. No product should be assessed until it is matured. You might as well tax the wool growing on the sheep's back, because that is something that is growing and may grow into money. There would be just as much sense in going into the orchard and assessing the young fruit; and yet the horticulturists would not think of such a thing. The whole thing is absurd upon the face of it. There ought to be no system adopted looking toward the assessment of any immature crop, no matter what that crop may be.

MR. BARRY. I move the committee now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentlemen from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland.

SPEECH OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: This subject has been very thoroughly discussed here. In regard to this amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, it seems to me that there is one objection to it which has not been stated in this Convention. Now, sir, as I understand it, the class of people who complain are of the debtor class; they are the ones who complain of the present system of taxation. Now, if the proposed amendment does not, in some degree, relieve that class, then these complaints will continue. It seems to me, sir, that the adoption of this substitute will cause an increased burden to fall upon the debtor class. Now, I don't know whether I understand the temper of the people or not—the Chairman of the committee claims to understand it—and other members claim to understand the temper of the people; but if I understand this question, what a majority of the Convention desire is to relieve somewhat the burden of taxation from the debtor class, and, perhaps, from the poorer class. Gentlemen have suggested that the energy and enterprise of this State is largely in the debtor class—the class of men who do business on borrowed money are perhaps the most energetic class of people in the State. They are the class of men who bring labor and capital together, and make both productive, and that is certainly something to be desired in the present condition of the State, in which there is so much capital and so much labor unemployed. Now, any measure that will sever these two interests would be a most unwise measure, and a measure certainly which increases the burden of the borrower must of necessity have that result. Now, we have heard so much about farm mortgages from men who never owned a farm—in fact a farm with a mortgage on it has become a nightmare with doctors, and laboring men, and men who never owned a farm or a mortgage. These gentlemen who argue so learnedly about a farm with a mortgage would do well to recollect one fact. Now, for instance, Mr. Dudley has a farm worth thirty thousand dollars (I believe that is the standard price of farms in this Convention), and he wants to borrow ten thousand dollars on it. This provision requires him to pay taxes on what his farm is worth—thirty thousand dollars. When the Assessor comes to him he will assess it at thirty thousand dollars. And when he wants to borrow ten thousand dollars, these men who make a business of loaning money, if a tax is imposed on solvent debts, will say to him: "I shall have to increase the rate of interest so as to include the tax upon the mortgage." Now, sir, if that is to be the case, if the proposition of these gentlemen who are familiar with the subjects of loans be true, then the result will be this: the debtor must first pay taxes upon the whole value of his farm, and in the next place he must, indirectly, pay taxes on the mortgage, or money which he borrows, and the result will be that this debtor class, instead of being relieved, will, after the adoption of this provision, be burdened with double taxation.

Now, sir, another matter has been lost sight of. All these taxes, whether they are laid upon the land or upon the mortgage, must come out of the produce of the land. The mortgage itself creates nothing. Money creates nothing. But when a farm has a mortgage on it, the owner of the farm and the owner of the mortgage divide the profits of the farm. The farm produces but one profit; but if a man has a mortgage on that farm, he gets part of the profits of the farm, and the owner of the farm gets what is left. Now, sir, if a farm produces twenty thousand dollars, and there is a mortgage, the interest on which is ten thousand dollars a year, the mortgage gets half the profits, and the owner gets half. The farm produces it all. It is the only thing that produces or can produce anything. The note can produce nothing. Now, sir, since the two receive the profits of that farm, and since the two divide the profits of that farm, and since the two have to be taxed, it is their farm, and since the two have equal protection from the government, they ought to share the burden of expense alike between them, in proportion to the interest that they own. But this provision proposes that because the profits of that farm are divided between them, that therefore they shall pay double taxes upon it. That is not right, sir. Neither has any method been proposed by which those men who divide the profits shall divide the expenses of government, except the proposition of Mr. Boggs. It is the only provision which will accomplish this result. And, sir, the proposition of the gentleman from Sonoma will have the effect, instead of relieving these poorer classes, of increasing their burdens. I am opposed to the proposition for that reason, and I hope that this Convention will vote it down and adopt the Boggs proposition.

SPEECH OF MR. ANDREWS.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I don't understand that the gentleman from Nevada is correct in his proposition, that all the complaint concerning taxation comes from the debtor classes. I understand the complaint comes from various classes, that those who are able to pay taxes are not taxed. I am in hopes the amendment will pass, because I believe it is the only method by which we can reach and tax solvent debts. I do not understand whether the gentleman who has just taken his seat has defined his position, whether or not he is in favor of taxing solvent debts.

MR. CROSS. In the way suggested in the Hale amendment, yes, sir.

MR. ANDREWS. Do you believe that credits, notes, mortgages, bonds, etc., are property?

MR. CROSS. I believe that class of indebtedness should be treated as an interest in the property. If you owe me a solvent debt of two thousand dollars I have an interest in your property, and when the debt is due I can take out an attachment and take that property.

MR. ANDREWS. Should you not pay part of the expenses of the Government? Should you not pay for the protection you have, and the privilege you have of taking out an attachment and collecting that debt?

MR. CROSS. Yes, sir.

MR. ANDREWS. The gentlemen have ignored in this argument a very important class in the State of California, I mean the frugal class, that class who pay as they go. That is a class who are neither debtors nor creditors; that is a class who are no expense to the Government. That is the class who will be directly benefited, and should be benefited, by the taxation of solvent debts.

MR. REYNOLDS. Is an evidence that some man owns an interest in some other man's land, property?

MR. ANDREWS. I say it is property, and has been so decided by the highest Courts in the land.

MR. REYNOLDS. If I have a mortgage on your land, is that evidence property, or is it merely an evidence that I have an interest in your property?

MR. ANDREWS. It is property. The party in possession of the farm owns it and has the title.

MR. REYNOLDS. Does he own the whole of it, or merely an interest in it?

MR. ANDREWS. He owns it, has the right to sell it, subject to the lien upon it. The only right the mortgagee has is to collect his money when it is due. The gentleman from Nevada, and other gentlemen here, have failed to come squarely up to the proposition. Are they in favor of taxing solvent debts? Are you in favor of taxing State bonds? Are you in favor of taxing county bonds and county warrants? The gentleman from Nevada says yes, by a shake of the head. Then, I say he would not accomplish it through the Boggs amendment—that would exempt them from taxation, if I understand the amendment. It exempts all debts and evidences of indebtedness. Are not these warrants money; are they not worth the amount for which they call? Are they not the best class of investments that can be had in the State? I say if you are going to attempt to assess mortgages and solvent debts, that the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma is the only method by which they can be reached.

MR. BIGGS. Will not the amendment be double taxation?

MR. ANDREWS. No, sir; not really double taxation. The notes are property. The gentleman might as well say that the taxation of State and county bonds and county warrants is double taxation. The history of legislation in this State, as cited by the Chairman of the committee, is in favor of taxing solvent debts. The only exceptional instance was the Legislature of eighteen hundred and sixty-nine and seventy, and the gentleman says that Legislature represented the will of the people. I ask the gentleman if that Legislature was not called a recreant Legislature, which did not represent the will of the people. Let him look into the history of that Legislature in relation to the taxation of mortgages. The gentleman knows the history of that Legislature on that question full well, and I need not rehearse it. It will be remembered that the Bank of California withheld from their depositors their proportion of the money that it cost to get that legislation through. If there is any Legislature that has ever been marked, and derided, it is that very Legislature in its action on the mortgage tax question, and the gentleman knows too that afterwards in the Courts the banks failed to recover the money from their depositors, which it had cost to get that legislation through. Then I say, sir, that it is only through the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Sonoma that we can reach this desirable result. That is the only way we can reach solvent debts. Now, in relation to the assessment of banks. Under the present plan we assess the amount of money by the statements of the banks, made out at the time of the assessment. It is a well known fact that in the case of some of the banks in this State, that mode of procedure does not reach more than twenty per cent. of the money actually in those banks, as shown by their semi-annual statement. It is only through the assessment of solvent debts that we can get at the actual amount of money in these banks. If the gentleman from Nevada proposes to tax county and State bonds, and county warrants, the only way he can reach them is through this Moreland amendment. As I said, I believe in the assessment of solvent debts. I believe they are property. I believe it is the very kind of property that should bear a part of the expenses of government. I say that class of our population alluded to by Mr. Eagon is a very important class. It is composed of saving, careful men, who pay as they go, and are neither debtors nor creditors. They always pay their taxes.

REMARKS OF MR. REDDY.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: I would like to ask the gentleman from Sonoma some questions in relation to this amendment.

MR. MORELAND. Certainly.

MR. REDDY. It reads, "everything of value capable of transfer," etc., shall be considered property. I want to know if it is the intention to tax corporate stock under that clause.

MR. MORELAND. I think it is the intention to provide for it under another section.

MR. REDDY. I will ask you whether it would not be taxed under this provision.

MR. MORELAND. Not if we make no exception.

MR. REDDY. Then you intend to tax the property, and afterwards the representative of that property—the corporate stock.

MR. MORELAND. No, sir; we have another section—section seventeen, of the report of the committee—which covers that ground.

MR. REDDY. Has that been adopted.

MR. MORELAND. We propose to adopt it.

MR. REDDY. Why not reach the matter through this section. This provides for taxing the corporate stock of the corporations, and also the capital stock.

MR. MORELAND. Not if we provide otherwise.

MR. REDDY. We certainly don't intend to adopt another section that will be in conflict with this.

MR. MORELAND. No, sir; it is a very simple exception.

MR. REDDY. It would be very short. Why not add it to this section; put an exception in here before we pass this section? Have you any objections to that?

MR. MORELAND. Yes, sir; I don't want it too long. I want it so it can be understood. You can provide for that in another section. Read section seventeen, and you will understand it.

MR. REDDY. I don't see that it belongs there at all. It will only make this section stronger. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there is a determination on the part of many delegates here to impose a tax of this kind on these corporations. The injustice of such a measure has been pointed out, and I hope that any gentleman having such a tax in view will come out squarely, and not put it in the shape of a little joker like this. If it is desired by this Convention to tax corporate property, and then tax it again, I hope they will say so plainly, all the way through. Here is the proper place to deal with this question. If such a tax is not to be imposed, then this is the proper place to make the exception, and unless it is made here I shall oppose the measure.

REMARKS OF MR. LARUE.

MR. LARUE. Mr. Chairman: I had not intended to say anything on this question, but I have listened to the theories expressed by these theoretical farmers, and they remind me of the theoretical farming in newspapers—all very nice on paper, but not practical. In thinking this matter over, I have had occasion to refer to some old books and receipts. In eighteen hundred and sixty-seven I bought a tract of land, eight hundred and forty acres, for ten dollars an acre. The following year it was assessed at six dollars an acre, which was a fair valuation. All property guarantees and indebtedness were assessed at that time. The tax on the land was one hundred and twenty-three dollars and forty cents. Subsequent to that time, so much property had been exempted that the land was assessed at twenty-seven dollars and fifty cents an acre. The rate was one dollar and sixty-seven cents on the one hundred dollars, and the assessment was four and a half times as much as it was before. The rate of taxation has increased steadily, and the valuation of our land has increased until now the tax is nearly three times as much as it was then, and I can account for it no other way than that so much property escapes taxation. It costs less to run the government now than it did ten years ago. Our taxes are now about fifty cents more on the acre. Ten years ago it was only assessed at six dollars an acre. I hope the Convention will adopt this amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma. When we have done that we have done all the Convention was called for. The amendment of Mr. Boggs leaves it as it is now, and I know the people desire a change in that respect.

SPEECH OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: During the course of this amendment I have not been able to ascertain whether the friends of the Moreland amendment support it because it is politic to impose a double tax upon the borrower, or on the ground that it is not double taxation to tax solvent debts. Now, we do not want to have any uncertainty upon that point. It is desirable that we shall proceed upon some distinct principle, either to have one assessment upon property pro rata—applying to property in its true sense—or else we should distinctly and intelligently proceed upon this basis: that it is best to tax some species of right, under the name of property, whereby we claim right to a thing, the tax upon each being double taxation.

Now, it seems to me there is an extensive idea here—somewhat extensive—how prevalent I do not know, because the language of the gentlemen will not enable me to determine, that solvent debts—in whatever form, whether they be secured by mortgage or not, or whether by any other instrument or not, that to tax those debts is not double taxation. It seems to me that there are many who seem to have an idea that debts are property, in the same sense as the property which was taxed last year is property. I hold that nothing is more certain than that this is a fallacy, and if the gentlemen will consider the very section which the gentleman has introduced here, it will be evident that he recognizes the fact in his own mind that solvent debts are not property, in the same sense as the present property, for if they were, it would not require a constitutional enactment of this Convention to make them property, and that is just the office which this amendment proposes, to declare that certain things shall be property for the purpose of taxation.

MR. MORELAND. That is not because I did not consider them property, but because the Supreme Court did not so consider them, and I wanted to define it.

MR. JONES. Then the gentleman disagrees with the Supreme Court, and announces clearly that in his opinion solvent debts are property, in the same sense that cattle and horses and land are property. Then all we have to do to make ourselves rich is to execute notes enough, and the State will be immensely wealthy. The more we owe to each other the richer we will be. If any one can explain in what manner any new value is created, it will remove a great doubt from my mind. I would like to know how to create something out of nothing. You are creating wealth by getting another man's goods and not paying for them.

MR. MORELAND. I ask the gentleman if he considers State bonds property?

MR. JONES. In the sense in which the word has been used for the purposes of taxation, they are not property. They are a confession upon the part of the State that the State has got so much property which belongs to somebody else.

MR. MORELAND. Is the gentleman in favor of taxing State bonds?

MR. JONES. That is another question. It does not change the question as to the word property. For myself I distinctly declare that in the scientific sense in which the words are used, no credit is property at all, except the mere value of the paper it is written upon. They are no more property than the expectation which I may have of acquiring some property hereafter, whether by industry or donation.

MR. TERRY. Suppose a man steals a note, does not he commit grand larceny?

MR. JONES. Yes, sir.

MR. TERRY. If it is not property, then he has not stolen anything. If the value is over fifty dollars he is guilty of grand larceny.

MR. JONES. Yes, sir; but this does not meet the question. The gentleman may go round it, but I am going to meet the matter squarely. Now, what is a promissory note? What does it mean? It means that, whereas, I, Mr. Jones, have received one thousand dollars cash from Mr. Wyatt, and am not able now to pay him, I promise to pay him when I can, and will pay interest in addition. That is a strict and correct definition of a note, though not as perfect as it might be. It is a certificate that so much money is owing by the maker of the note to the holder. That is what it signifies. If there is any value created by it, I would like to have some gentleman point it out, for no political economist has ever yet succeeded in creating values in that way. It is a generally recognized idea, and a sound idea, that the property of this world consists of the earth, its fruits, and the production of labor. What else? What else is there? What else are you going to call wealth? If these evidences of debt are property, they are not the product of labor, nor the product of nature. They are the product of the pen, and there is no limit to the amount of them which can be created. The consequence of such a doctrine as that, that they are property and part of the wealth of the State, is to say that the wealth of the State depends upon the indebtedness of its citizens. The more they owe, the more wealth the State has. According to that doctrine the more the people of the State are oppressed, the more prosperous the State will be, and the larger will be the assessment roll, and the larger the amount that can be collected for taxes. I say such a doctrine as that is not tenable, and you cannot evade it when you adopt the idea. You are trying to create value out of nothing, and if you can succeed in doing that you will have certainly found the philosopher's stone. We do not need any philosopher's stone in this State when, by simply signing our names we can get a million dollars where there was not a cent before.

As soon as I borrow one thousand dollars of my neighbor, as soon as it is delivered it is mine, not his. As soon as I receive it and give him my promise that I will return it at the end of two months, or two years, I am the owner of it, and he ceases to be the owner. He does not own one cent of it. He could not do it. He has my written promise that I will pay it, and that is no better in law than my verbal promise, and my verbal promise is no better than my implied promise. Then you propose to tax it in his hands when it is in my hands. He could not get it until it becomes due under the agreement. Then he is entitled to receive it again, and then he has it again, and I have it not. But we cannot both have the one thousand dollars at the same time, and it is impossible to tax it in the hands of each one of us without imposing double taxation, unless you can create wealth by mere fiat power, and that is what the thing leads to. If it is good policy for an individual State it ought to be good policy for the national government, and the idea of basing the national credit upon national wealth is a fallacy. Better base it upon manuscript and pen and ink. That is all you need to create wealth. After a little start you get a debt created, and soon you are wealthy.

We want to proceed upon some principle or other. Either that we can tax actual wealth, the actual property of the State, once and no more, or twice and no more, or else that we will tax a certain portion of it twice, and another portion once. It follows, of course, that whenever the credits of the State are taxed to the creditors, and whenever the property upon which these credits are based are taxed to the debtors, then there is double taxation. The same value is twice taxed, and twice one is two. That is certainly a very simple mathematical statement, that the property is twice taxed. All I ask is that this Convention shall understand clearly what they are doing. I don't mean to imply that any gentleman does not clearly understand it, but they should have some harmony of views, and not proceed to do what would be propriety under one theory and not upon another. It is competent for the people of this State to declare that anything shall be property. That might be extended to the expectations of people who have wealthy relatives in critical health. All these things might be taxed. It would not be desirable to propose it, but I say if you can declare that these other things are property, you can, with equal propriety, declare anything to be property. It is in the power of the people of the State to declare that these debts shall be taxed. They may declare that they shall be taxed once or twice, or three times, if they see fit.

If this Convention should declare that a credit shall be taxed, and the property upon which it is based, which it represents, shall also be taxed, then that is clearly double taxation upon that class of property: then that principle is established; then it will become a matter of policy, and as to the matter of policy, I do not think it is a wise policy to do that, because it is not in accordance with the idea of justice, or fairness, or equality. I think all property should pay alike, as far as possible, an ad valorem pro rata tax, for the support of the Government. I do not think it is just to those who are the better class; they are, already, too greatly oppressed, and instead of giving them any relief by the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma, both taxes shall be laid upon their shoulders; they will find the tax from both the money they borrow, and the note which is held by their creditor, will be laid upon them. The tax upon the note, in the shape of increased interest, will be greater, in my judgment, than the actual tax itself. Money will be less easy to borrow; the annoyance of the creditor will make him less desirous of loaning money, and he will charge a little more interest, and be a little more slow in loaning. Even if he imposes half, or two thirds, or three quarters upon the debtor, it becomes a heavy burden upon the borrowing class of this State, from which they cannot escape. I think there will be a very great demand for the renewal of notes, and I do not think they will be renewed. I know, from observation, that the rate of interest dropped down more than one half per cent. after the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of "The People vs. the Hibernia Bank," it dropped down and stayed down. I know there were thousands of dollars loaned at one per cent. upon the express condition that if the man who loaned had to pay the taxes it would be one and a quarter per cent. I do not doubt that it will be the case again. There is no injustice in it; everybody deals in that way. Everybody charges for his goods according to the expense attached to their disposal. If you tax credits the whole tax will undoubtedly fall upon the borrower. I do not know, but I believe that under any system which this Convention may devise, it will fall upon the debtor eventually, to a very great extent.

The proposition introduced by the gentleman from Placer is less objectionable, because there is no double taxation imposed. It taxes the mortgage in the hands of the creditor, by allowing the debtor to deduct the amount. As to the strict fairness or justness of it, I don't propose to speak; but at any rate there is but one tax levied, and that one the debtor is allowed to retain out of his debt when he pays it. I say, in point of fact, it is far more just than this proposition, which proposes to tax the property itself and then tax the representative of that property. I do not consider the Boggs proposition philosophically correct, but I would assent to it if it seemed to meet the views of this Convention; but I will never consent to a proposition which proposes to impose two taxes upon one portion of the community and only one tax upon another. I know it is a desirable thing to reach the rich man; it is desirable to make him contribute his portion of the taxes to the State. But we will never be able to do it if we continue to grope in the dark as we have been doing. I do not profess to be a political economist, but I can see no way out of the dilemma but by adopting an income tax—net incomes. That is the only way by which the rich can be reached. Their money will do them no good unless they invest it or let somebody else use it. If he retains it he will have to pay the taxes upon it. I say it is desirable to reach this class, and I know of no method by which it can be done effectually except by an income tax. I would levy a tax upon net incomes. In the case of money loaned on a note it is all net except attorneys' fees. The revenues of farmers, merchants, and others are not net. Oftentimes there is a loss, hence it would not be just to tax gross incomes. At something I think it would be desirable, and I would be in favor of exempting a certain amount of income. I don't propose to enlarge upon that. Gentlemen know just as much as I do about it. I believe that to be the only way by which you can reach these large accumulations of capital. The objection is made that there would be a great deal of lying. There is a great deal of lying anyway about taxes, and the smaller we can make it the more we can commend our system to the consideration of the people. But if this Convention undertakes to levy double taxation, they may be sure that men will lie about their property. It is human nature, and always was and always will be.

One other objection is made to an income tax, and that is that it is an inquisitorial tax. Well, sir, I am not aware that it is so. The only income tax with which we have had any experience, was that levied during the war, and to some extent that was inquisitorial. But I ask you if it is any more inquisitorial than the assessment will be under the section offered by the gentleman from Sonoma? I say it is not, for this reason: the Assessor has his book upon which he must put down every species of property he can imagine. I don't understand whether the gentleman means to include a contract to build a bridge, and which may be sold for five hundred dollars. I don't know whether he means to include contracts to survey and dig canals, or something of that kind. I don't know, by the terms of his amendment, whether he means to include those contracts or not. He might include a contract to build a Court House, as such contracts are transferable, and have value. Such rights have value, and are often transferred for large considerations. The Assessor comes round with a book upon which everything that can be called property in the sense of the amendment, everything that can be transferred, everything that has value, must be entered. Have you got any land? Yes, sir. How much? So many acres. What is it worth? Not to multiply words, he goes through the entire list, and gets everything you have. How much money, how much scrip, how many State bonds, and what the face value of them is. He wants to know who owes you any money, and how much they owe you; how many notes; how many chickens you have; how many watches. If you have a family, how many stoves; how many dishes; how much furniture, and how much it is all worth. I don't object to it, for it is the only way to get at it; but how much less inquisitorial is it than an income tax? Not materially less, certainly. All he has got to ask is, what were your gross receipts during the past year, and what is your total expenses? Deduct one from the other. I believe it will not be any more inquisitorial, and certainly it is the most just system that can be adopted. It will not hurt the poor man, the producer, but will reach the rich, and make them contribute their share of the burdens of government.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. TULLY. Mr. Chairman: I feel that this question has been discussed enough and I therefore move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Smith, of Santa Clara, Lampson, and McComas.

THE CHAIRMAN: The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Division was called for; the committee divided, and the main question refused, by a vote of 42 ayes to 57 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The committee refuses to order the main question, and the Secretary will read section three.

TAXING LANDS.

THE SECRETARY read section three as follows:

SEC. 3. Land and the improvements thereon shall be separately assessed. Cultivated and uncultivated land, of the same quality and similarly situated, shall be assessed at the same value.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

ON ADJOURNING OVER.

MR. EDGERTON. I move we do now adjourn until Thursday, at ten o'clock.

MR. HALE. Will the gentleman withdraw that motion for a moment.

MR. EDGERTON. Certainly.

MR. HALE. Mr. President: I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment that has been agreed upon by the friends of the Boggs amendment which makes some modifications. I desire to have it read as a substitute, and printed in the Journal.

THE PRESIDENT. There being no objection it will be printed.

Following is the substitute:

"SEC. 2. All property within this State, including the excess in value, if any, of the capital stock of all corporations and joint stock associations, over the value of their property, including franchises, subject to taxation within this State, shall be taxed in proportion to its value; provided, always, that no tax shall be imposed on growing crops, debts, and evidences of debt due or to grow due in this State, except State, county, or municipal bonds, and evidences of State, county, or municipal indebtedness; on private property exempt from taxation by the laws of the United States; property belonging to the United States; property belonging to this State, or any municipality thereof, or public school property. No deduction shall be made from the assessed value of property on account of any debt or debts owing by the owner or owners of such property, but such debtor or debtors shall, upon payment of such indebtedness, be entitled to retain therefrom a sum with interest thereon at the same rate borne by such indebtedness, to be computed from the time or times of the tax payments, which shall equal the amount of taxes paid by such debtor or debtors, during the existence of such indebtedness, upon property of like amount in value of said indebtedness; provided further, that if any such indebtedness shall be paid by any such debtor or debtors, after assessment and before the tax levy, the amount of such levy may likewise be retained by such debtor or debtors, and shall be computed according to the tax levy for the preceding year."

MR. HALE. I now renew the motion of the gentleman to adjourn until Thursday, at ten o'clock.

The ayes and noes were demanded, on the motion to adjourn, by Messrs. Smith of Santa Clara, Larue, Brown, White, and Larkin.

Herold,

MR. AYERS. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to consider the report of the Committee on Harbors, Tide Waters, and Navigable Streams. It won't take over twenty minutes.

Lost.

MR. BARRY. I move to substitute revenue and taxation.

MR. EDGERTON. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to consider the article on right of suffrage.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is to go into Committee of the Whole, to take up the article on revenue and taxation.

Adopted.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on section three of the report of the committee.

MR. CAPLES. I move to strike out the section.

Lost.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I desire to amend section three by striking out the word "quality" and inserting "agricultural capacity." Instead of the word "quality" add the words "agricultural capacity." Land might be of the same quality, and yet not be fit for cultivation.

The quality of the soil might be the same, and yet the agricultural capacity be entirely different. "Similarly situated" means in the same locality.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. The gentleman draws a very fine distinction. That term was thoroughly considered in the committee, and it was thought it would express it. "Land of the same quality, and similarly situated." The gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, had a section in which he used the word "located," but we found that the word "situated" was broader and more comprehensive. The section is right as it stands. The amendment of the gentleman would limit it to the agricultural capacity of the land. Now, why should not grazing land be assessed upon the same principle? I can see no reason for the distinction.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: The first clause in this section three is all well enough: "Land, and the improvements thereon, shall be separately assessed." I have no objections to that, but the last clause is simply nonsense, and if adopted will operate to defeat the equality and uniformity of taxation that we have declared for here. Take the river lands on the Sacramento, or any of our rivers here, if they were cleared out they would be worth say from fifty dollars to one hundred and fifty dollars an acre; but suppose it is not cultivated, or that it is covered with brush, it would cost fifty dollars an acre to clear it up; now, are you going to assess that land as much as the other? Such a theory is in direct conflict with the principle which lays at the basis of the system proposed to be established, and that is, to assess property in proportion to its actual value. Now, when you undertake to say arbitrarily where this dividing line shall be you at once destroy uniformity. Take any class of lands. The gentlemen who are advocating this amendment say that uncultivated land ought to be assessed as much as cultivated land. But there is another side to that question. Here is a piece of land that has been under cultivation for twenty years, it was thin soil in the first place, and is about worn out now; and that land close alongside of it, that this committee make pay as much taxes, is worth double as much. How are you going to get at it? Under this rule you are binding the Assessor to assess all kinds of land at the same price. Now, is that not a clear conflict with the theory of equality? There are one hundred thousand acres of this land about worn out; been cropped year after year until it is not worth half as much as the land right alongside of it; now, I cannot see the justice of assessing that land under an arbitrary rule for the same price as the land right alongside of it, which is worth twice as much. It takes away from the Assessor all discretion with which he ought to be invested in order to discharge the duties of his office—in order to do justice. It is a blind discrimination which ought not to be allowed. Now, sir, if it be in order to move as an amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. Larkin, to strike out all after the word "assessed," in the second line, "cultivated and uncultivated lands, etc., shall be assessed at the same value," and leave the section stand that "lands and the improvements thereon shall be separately assessed," I am utterly at a loss to comprehend any good end that is to be secured by retaining the latter clause; it certainly can operate only in the one way, to absolutely force the Assessor to assess property without reference to its value, and under an arbitrary rule. I protest against it, and I hope the last clause will be stricken out.

No second.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from El Dorado.

REMARKS OF MR. BARRY.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not prevail. I do not see that there is any necessity for the amendment. It seems to me it is a distinction without a difference. I believe the committee carefully canvassed this matter, and I think they use a word about which there can be no doubt. If there was anything to gain by the amendment I should be glad to favor it, but there is nothing to gain. As I understand the section, the object is to reach that class of land in this State which is now almost exempt from taxation. There are thousands of acres of land in the southern portion of the State, very valuable land, that is not assessed, in many cases, for more than one quarter or one sixteenth of its value, and we want those who own that land to pay for what it is worth—on its actual producing capacity. That this land, and land similarly situated and under cultivation, shall be assessed alike. Now, I believe I recognize the necessity for such an amendment as this. It is for the purpose of compelling the large landholders to pay their share. If this is done—if this section is incorporated into the Constitution, together with the taxation of solvent debts, and other evidences of indebtedness, then, sir, we will have equal and uniform taxation. Then the wealthy will help bear the burdens of government, and the poor and middle classes will not have to pay more than they ought to pay. I do not see the necessity for the gentleman's amendment. I believe this fully covers the whole matter. That it is intended that agricultural land of the same producing capacity shall be taxed the same, when similarly located. In other words, it shall be taxed in proportion to what it is worth. That is all we desire in this Convention.

MR. CAPLES. Would you have uncultivated land assessed the same when it is only worth half as much as land that is cultivated?

MR. BARRY. I don't understand that this section says any such thing.

MR. CAPLES. Suppose the cultivated land is worn out.

MR. BARRY. If it is worn out it is not of the same quality as land which is capable of producing. But the idea is that land of equal producing capacity shall be assessed alike when they are similarly situated. If land is capable of producing, and does not produce, we propose to tax it the same as land that does produce.

MR. LARKIN. You understand the section to mean the producing capacity of the land?

MR. BARRY. Yes, sir.

MR. LARKIN. Why not put in the words "producing capacity?"

MR. BARRY. If it is the same quality it will produce the same.

MR. LARKIN. Suppose the land is covered with brush?

MR. BARRY. I don't care. I say this: if it is of the same producing capacity, then it ought to be taxed the same as that immediately joining which is cultivated. I propose to stand by the section.

MR. CAPLES. Who is to be the judge? Who is to determine that the land is of the same producing capacity?

MR. BARRY. I believe this: that as far as the Board of Equalization is concerned, the Board of Supervisors, or Assessors, are fully capable of determining.

MR. CAPLES. Suppose, now, that the latter part of the section is stricken out, and allow the Assessor to assess the land according to its value, wouldn't it amount to the same thing?

MR. BARRY. No, sir; I don't think it would. I hold that this is only carrying out the desires of the people, that cultivated and uncultivated land of the same quality shall be assessed at the same price, so that there shall be no discretion. There will be no judgment about it.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me there are good reasons why this part of the section should be stricken out. I am utterly at a loss to understand where the good comes in, because there must be some power, some authority to determine whether the land is of the same producing capacity. Who is to determine? Is it the Assessor or is it the Board? Very well, suppose it is stricken out, the Assessor and the Board will be guided primarily in their action by the rule of valuation. Is not the same object accomplished, and through the same agency, by striking out this clause? If we adopt this clause it ties the hands of that discretionary power, and forces the Assessor to assess land that is worth only fifty dollars an acre for as much as land that is worth one hundred dollars an acre. Now, such a rule is unjust upon the face of it. There is but one rule that is just, and that is to assess anything and everything by that broad universal rule of actual values. Why is it proposed to make an exception in this case? It is not certainly in the interests of justice.

MR. INMAN. What is it that places value upon agricultural lands, except their power to produce something?

MR. CAPLES. I will answer the gentleman. Again I say that land is worth just what it will sell for, and its value must be determined by some authority.

MR. INMAN. In determining the value of agricultural land, is it not by what it will produce, what it is capable of producing?

MR. CAPLES. Let me illustrate——

MR. INMAN. That is not answering the question.

MR. CAPLES. Here is a tract of land on the American River, half of it under cultivation, which is worth one hundred and fifty dollars an acre. The other half, covered with brush and drift, would not sell for more than fifty dollars an acre. Now, the Assessor, if he be a man of information, acting honestly, with such a knowledge as he should have in determining the value of that land, will assess it at what it is worth, one part at fifty dollars, and the other at one hundred and fifty dollars an acre. That is the rule of equality and justice. I deny utterly that it would be in conformity with equality and justice, to assess the two parts of that tract at the same figure. That is my answer to the gentleman. It is utterly impossible to attempt by statute, whether it be by organic statute or legislative law, to fix the value that is to determine the action of the Assessor or Board of Equalization. It would be quite as possible to attempt the most impossible thing. You have but one way, and that is to elect an Assessor who is an honest and intelligent man, if you can find such. Elect an Assessor who will assess all property at what it is worth, no more, no less. But if you attempt to tie him up by restrictions, how can he exercise that discretion that will do justice. He cannot do it. By this rule we bind him to assess land that is worth fifty dollars an acre, and land that is worth one hundred and fifty dollars an acre, at the same price. If any gentleman can see justice, or equality, or uniformity in taxation of that kind, I would like to have him explain it. I cannot see it. There is no justice in it. It is wrong. The people will not thank you for it. Where is the equality? Where is the uniformity? I say again it is not right, and there is no justice in it.

REMARKS OF MR. REED.

MR. REED. Mr. Chairman: I desire to state a case that has come under my own observation, which will show the necessity for a section like this. I own a tract of land which has been under cultivation for many years. On two sides of my land are two large tracts, entirely uncultivated. I have been assessed two or three times as much as these other parties are assessed at. I have complained to the Assessor, and have been before the Board and asked for a reduction. I have been met with the answer that my cultivated land is worth more. I am, in reality, taxed for my energy and enterprise. This is true of my neighbors, also. I have tried to buy this land I speak of, and the owners refuse to sell it. I have offered to rent it, and they refuse to rent. They will neither rent nor sell, nor yet pay taxes. They put a higher value on my land because I cultivate it and make it produce something.

SPEECH OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: The question now before us I regard as of vital importance. Members on this floor do not need to be reminded of the continuous cry raised against land monopoly. Owing to the system of Spanish grants, a few men hold large tracts of land. There is no country on the face of the globe that could stand it, and the only reason that it has not entirely destroyed our prosperity is, that we have been so favored by Providence. This great evil should not be permitted to continue. The evils of land monopoly, the concentration of great bodies of land in the hands of the few people, is one of the greatest evils of which the people of this State complain. To meet this evil measures of the strongest kind have been constantly advocated, and even communistic doctrines have been favored by some. Sir, as one who has continually and honestly opposed this evil, in its present form, I have every belief that a just and equitable system of taxation will remedy it to a great extent, and this section I consider of the highest importance in that view. We know it is the case to-day, that parties own large tracts of land and escape their due proportion of the burdens of taxation. We have examples right here next door to Sacramento, in the Norris grant, and other grants. We have large tracts of land in the western portion of my county, that is better land, on an average, than land right west of it, which is assessed at from eight dollars to fifteen dollars an acre; and under the present system there is no justice, there is no equality; it is pernicious in its character, and it becomes the duty of this Convention to remedy it. I can see no injustice in this system proposed. Certainly, if land will produce as much, and is of equal capacity to other land in the same vicinity, which is cultivated and made to produce something, it ought to be taxed the same. It is worth just as much, and oftentimes more. Why should it not be assessed for as much? Why is it not worth as much? It is a well-known fact that new land will produce more than land that has been used for a long time.

I know of men who have recently paid more for new land than they would have paid for land that has been under cultivation, because they were certain of getting a better crop. I say the quality of the land includes its productive capacity. If cultivated land is assessed at ten dollars an acre, and there is land adjoining which is not cultivated, and which will produce the same crop, it should be assessed at the same price. If I have a small piece of land fenced, the Assessor comes and finds it worth ten dollars an acre—he will put it down at that—whether it is cultivated or not, merely looking at the quality of the land—its productive capacity. When he climbs over the fence on to the next one hundred and sixty acres, he does not inquire whether it belongs to a land monopolist or not, or whether it is cultivated or not; if it is capable of producing the same crop as mine, he assesses it at ten dollars an acre. If he finds it belongs to the same man as the last one hundred and sixty acres, or if he finds a thousand acres belonging to the same man, it is no concern of his. I want it so that the man who can afford to own ten thousand acres, or one hundred thousand acres, shall pay the same tax that I pay on my small tract. I am willing he should own it, but I want him to pay taxes on it, and if he does that, perhaps he will not be so anxious to hold it in idleness. As a matter of fact, he could not afford to hold it unless some use is made of it; and it was for this purpose that this section was framed, in part. It is to break up land monopoly. There is General Bidwell, and other landholders, who own large tracts of land, but they cultivate it and make use of it. If men who own large tracts of land can afford to let them remain idle, let them pay taxes for the support of the government. The man who cultivates his land produces something which adds to the wealth of the State, and gives employment to labor. The land that is not in cultivation produces nothing, but is capable of producing as much as the other. I do not believe there are any two sections in this report that will secure to the people so much good as sections three and four. For my part, though I had a proposition differing somewhat from section three, I am satisfied with the section as it stands, and I hope it will be adopted. It might be improved, perhaps, but I shall vote for it as it is.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Steele, West, Evey, and Brown.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried, and the main question ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from El Dorado.

Lost.

MR. BROWN. I move an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the word 'and,' in line two, and insert after the word 'situated,' the words 'and possessing the same advantages of location.'"

Lost.

MR. CAPLES. I move to amend section three by striking out all after the word "assessed," in the second line.

Lost.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I move to amend by adding, "provided that lands belonging to the Government of the United States, to which homestead or preëmption rights have not been perfected, shall not be assessed."

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments the Secretary will read section four.

SUBDIVIDING LAND.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 4. Every tract of land containing, within its boundaries, more than one government section, shall be assessed, for the purposes of taxation, by sections or fractional sections; and where the section lines have not been established by authority of the United States, the Assessor and County Surveyor shall establish the section lines, in conformity with the government system of surveys, as nearly as practicable. Each section, or fractional section, shall be valued and assessed separately; and for the purpose of subdividing and assessing, the Assessor and Surveyor, and their assistants, may enter upon any land within their respective counties.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert after the word 'lines,' in the fifth line, the words 'at the expense of the owner.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I see in this section, as it now stands, an opportunity for the Assessor and County Surveyor to run up a very large bill against the county, for the purpose of establishing these section lines. The County Surveyor will say to the Assessor, "Why, the Constitution requires you to have these section lines established. You cannot assess the land properly unless they are established." And he will have a pretty good leverage upon the Assessor to induce him to set him at work on these lines, so that the land can be assessed by sections. I do not think it is policy to give an opportunity for an officer to run up such a bill against every county in this State. If this is to be done it ought to be done at the expense of the owner of the tract, if it has not yet been sectionized. For that purpose I offer this amendment. I do not wish to occupy the attention of the committee any longer.

REMARKS OF MR. STEELE.

MR. STEELE. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will not prevail. If this section is for the benefit of the State, to enable the State to derive a larger revenue from this land, the State ought to pay the expense of it. There are very many large ranch owners in this State who are subdividing their lands for the purpose of selling them off, and you now propose to tax them for a resurvey of it. It is not for their benefit, but for the benefit of the State.

MR. BLACKMER. Does not the section already provide that, where the section lines have been established?

MR. STEELE. They are not surveyed according to sections. The tracts they wish to sell off are surveyed without reference to the section lines. Now, to put this additional tax on them is an injustice. Where they have had their lands surveyed it would be a manifest injustice to compel them to go to the additional expense of surveying it by sections. It is for the benefit of the State; let the State bear the expense. The State would derive a much larger revenue by having it done, and she ought to pay for it.

MR. REYNOLDS. I move an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by adding 'and the expense of said survey shall be assessed to the land so surveyed, and collected with other taxes.'"

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: The reason I desire to make the expense of these surveys part of the assessment is to make it definite. That is the objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Diego. I do not suppose that this Convention desires that the State shall go into the business of surveying private property for the benefit of private property. Even for the purpose of taxation we do not propose to survey other people's lands, and under the provisions of section four it will only be a cheap method of getting large tracts of land surveyed at the public expense. And if it is desirable that the State should have these tracts of land surveyed, I wish to have it done at the expense of the owner of the land, and collected as other taxes are collected.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: The theory of this section is, that the exact value of a large tract of land, owned and held in one body by one person, shall be approximated as near as possible for the purposes of taxation. Now, sir, the mode suggested by this section is simply to arrive at the value of a particular tract of land. It is in aid of the assessment of certain kinds of property, and I ask the gentleman from San Diego why it would not be just as proper to charge the owners of other kinds of property with the expense of assessing it? It is of no benefit at all to the owner. It is not for his benefit to have the property subdivided. He has ten or fifteen thousand acres of land which he holds for the purpose of grazing. Now, I am informed by the Surveyor-General that the expense will be absolutely nothing, except the time it takes with a pen and ruler to make the maps. It can all be done in the Surveyor-General's office.

MR. TERRY. Isn't it a fact that all the land is divided into sections—all the land disposed of by the United States?

MR. EDGERTON. This only applies to the grants made by the Government of Mexico. I think they have all been surveyed.

MR. HOWARD. They have not been sectionized.

MR. TERRY. I propose to the gentleman from San Francisco to insert after the words, "United States," the words, "or the State." Swamp lands are surveyed by the State.

MR. EDGERTON. What I object to is making the owner of the property pay the expense. There is no reason in it.

MR. LARKIN. If the Assessor goes to the merchant, would it be necessary for him to hire an expert.

MR. EDGERTON. The Assessor is paid by the county. But when you come to assess a specific piece of property, and you make the owner of that property pay for the expense, I say there is just as much justice in making a merchant pay the expense of assessing his property. It is a mere mode of ascertaining its value.

MR. REYNOLDS. I ask leave to withdraw my amendment.

MR. TERRY. I move to amend section four, by inserting after the words "United States," in the fourth line, the words, "or the State."

MR. EDGERTON. I think that is a very proper amendment and should be adopted. I would inquire of the gentleman from San Diego, if he withdraws his amendment.

MR. BLACKMER. No, sir.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. This section is very objectionable as it comes from the committee, and the amendments make it worse confounded. They are improvements over the other way. Now, sir, permit this section to stand, and you will roll up an expense that will be enormous, and will extend over a period of years. As a matter of public policy it is unwise, and I very much desire that the section shall be stricken out, and I shall move to that effect. And, now, sir, in regard to the amendments here offered, let us see what they amount to. I would like to inquire of the legal gentlemen, if there be any such advocating these amendments, where they find any law, or logic, or right, or justice, in forcing a man to pay such an expense as that. I call your attention to a celebrated case just decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, a case which was taken up from the State of Kentucky. The Legislature of that State by statute required that all owners of unsurveyed and unoccupied lands should do certain surveying within a given period of time. The land owners appealed, and the Court held that it was unconstitutional, as it was. And it stands substantially and precisely upon the same basis. If that was unconstitutional this would be. I deny that there is any necessity for this expense. What is your Assessor for but to go and work at the land and value it. How will his labor be facilitated by surveys? He might survey it till doomsday, and yet get no more information about the value of it than he would by riding over it without a compass. It requires no great amount of knowledge if a man rides over a piece of land to tell its value. He can do it just as well as if he had a whole corps of surveyors there. What I object to is this attempt to interfere with private rights. It is nothing more nor less than inquisition, because that is what it amounts to.

MR. SWING. I call your attention to section three thousand six hundred and thirty-four of the Political Code. That is law enough. This is no new principle. It is the statute law already.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to this section, and opposed to the amendment, and when opportunity offers I will offer a substitute. I do not believe it is right for the State to go into the business of assessing these tracts of land at public expense, neither do I believe it is right to compel the owners to have it surveyed at their own expense. I will offer a substitute that where the section lines have been run it shall be surveyed by sections.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: For the purpose of preventing land monopoly this is the most important section in this whole report. And as we are not in a condition to dispose of it to-day, I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

PRESENTATION.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I was about to make a motion to adjourn, but some of my young friends have some business on hand, and I will defer it.

At this point Master Henry Durner, one of the Pages, stepped in front of the desk and addressed President Hoge as follows:

Mr. President: I have been chosen from among the Pages to present you with this testimonial. The time has arrived when the Pages of this Convention—J. D. Ricks, August Rose, M. Shepley, E. H. Morris, Carey Goods, J. Doak, Willie Campbell, and myself—desire to show our gratitude towards you for appointing us to the position. We thank you most heartily for the many kindnesses you have shown to us during the session of this Convention. We have not chosen anything costly, but something which will, we believe, be appreciated by you. Many were the aspirants for positions in the Convention, but you have seen fit to choose from among them the eight who are now assembled around you. Through our appointment many a heart has been made glad and many a home rendered happy. We have tried hard to do our duty, but in our efforts if we, perchance, have made mistakes, we hope that you and the Convention will overlook them. We hope that with this, our testimonial, our names will remain in your memory. We know that you are growing old, that by and by we will be taking your place, but, nevertheless, I hope you may have many, many years to live, and that this simple testimonial will often bring our names back to your memory. [Applause.] The Convention, I have no doubt, feel proud of you, in guiding them in this, a great era in the history of the State of California. This Convention is, perhaps, the last that will be called during your life, or even during ours. This Convention, we hope, will not only be remembered by our people here, but throughout the United States and throughout the world. I desire now to present you this testimonial, in the name of the Pages, who join in wishing you a happy New Year, and may your life be all sunshine and no shadow. [Applause.]

The cane was carried up and handed to the President by little Willie Campbell, one of the Pages, amid great applause.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. EDGERTON. I move that the Convention do now adjourn until Thursday, at two o'clock P. M.

Carried.

And at twelve o'clock and thirty minutes P. M., the Convention stood adjourned until Thursday, January second, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, at two o'clock P. M.

THE JOURNAL.

MR. LINDOW. I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

So ordered.

NOTICE OF MOTION TO ADJOURN SINE DIE.

MR. FINNEY. Mr. President: I give notice that I will, on Saturday morning, introduce the following resolution in regard to adjournment:

WHEREAS, This Constitutional Convention was ordered by a small majority of the people of the State, showing that they were unprepared for any radical change in the organic law; and whereas, this Convention was called by a hostile Legislature which so framed the calling Act as to render impossible the completion of its work in any such thoughtful and finished manner as to make it acceptable to the people, or a credit to the State; and whereas, the time fixed by the Legislature for the session of this Convention has now expired, and the State authorities seem disposed to construe against it every technicality of the law; and whereas, it is now evident that only a doubtful quorum can be kept together, which will not fully represent the various interests of the State; and whereas, it seems to us desirable to resubmit the whole matter to the people of the State, that they may take such action therein as may to them appear best; therefore,

Resolved, That the President appoint a committee of five, whose duty it shall be to prepare an address to the people of the State, setting forth briefly the various causes and circumstances which have prevented the Convention from completing its labors, and requesting them to elect a Legislature which shall make the necessary appropriations for the completion of the work of the Convention, if, on full consideration, they desire it to be completed; the address to be reported on or before the sixth day of January, instant.

Resolved, That when this Convention adjourns on the sixth day of January, it stands adjourned to the first Monday in September, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty, at which time it shall convene and proceed with its work, provided the Legislature shall have made the appropriations necessary for the expenses of the Convention.

MR. CAPLES. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

MR. WHITE. Ayes and noes. I want to know who the traitors are.

MR. FINNEY. The resolution is not offered yet. I simply read it for information. I ask leave to have it printed in the Journal.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The gentleman has not offered the resolution yet. He asks leave to have it printed in the Journal.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. That is a motion, and I move to lay it on the table, upon which I call the ayes and noes.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. President: I do not understand that the resolution is before the Convention at all. The gentleman merely gave notice that he would introduce it.

MR. WHITE. I hope it will not be allowed to go on the Journal, for I think it is disgraceful, and I think it should not go on the Journal.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is to print it in the Journal.

MR. EDGERTON. He simply gives notice that he will introduce that resolution on Saturday.

MR. CAPLES. He asks to have it printed in the Journal.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I believe the motion was to print.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. I understood the gentleman asked leave to have it printed in the Journal.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. That is a motion, and a motion to lay it on the table is in order.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. There is no second.

MR. AYERS. Fire it out.

MR. EDGERTON. I move the Convention resolve itself——

NEW RULE.

MR. CROSS. Before that motion is put, I wish to send up a notice.

THE SECRETARY read:

I hereby give notice that at the next session of the Convention I will move to adopt an additional standing rule, as follows:

When the Convention shall have refused, by vote, to have the previous question put, the Convention shall proceed in all respects as though no such vote had been taken.

Laid over for one day.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. President: I ask leave to read a proposed section in relation to fire and marine insurance companies. I ask leave to have it printed in the Journal and referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SECTION 1. The amount named in either a fire or marine insurance policy shall be deemed to be the true value of the property insured.

"SEC. 2. Fire and marine insurance companies shall not combine for the purpose of regulating the rates of insurance, under penalty of forfeiture of charter, or the right to do business in this State."

Referred to the Committee on Miscellaneous Subjects.

REVENUE AND TAXATION.

MR. EDGERTON. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committtee of the Whole, the President pro tem. in the Chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The second section and amendments are before the committee.

[MR. EAGON in the chair.]

SPEECH OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I have not monopolized any of the time of this Convention in the discussion of this subject, and I shall endeavor now to be brief in what I have to say. I wish to call your attention to such points as I deem worthy of consideration. There are certain well established and conceded principles in regard to taxation, to which it will be well enough to advert, and which we should bear in mind, that we may not be led astray by false lights.

Mr. Cooley says, in his Constitutional Limitations: "Taxation is the equivalent for the protection which the government affords to the persons and property of its citizens; and as all are alike protected, so all alike should bear the burden, in proportion to the interests secured." Again: "When taxation takes money for the public use, the taxpayer receives, or is supposed to receive, his just compensation in the protection which government affords to his life, liberty, and property, and in the increase in the value of his possessions, by the use to which the government applies the money raised by the tax; and either of these benefits will support the burden."

Again, he cites the case of The People vs. The Mayor of Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 419, with approval, in which the Court say: "A rich man derives more benefit from taxation in the protection and improvement of his property than a poor man, and ought therefore to pay more."

The very able Chairman of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation in the Ohio Constitutional Convention of eighteen hundred and seventy-three and eighteen hundred and seventy-four, in speaking of the provision in the Ohio Constitution of eighteen hundred and fifty-one, in respect to taxation, says: "It is, in fact, and should ever be recognized as the true mode of distributing the public burdens, for it measures every man's contribution to the government by the amount of protection which the government gives to him and his property. The principle of taxation should be, and must be, in all well regulated governments where there are no privileged classes of property, that all the property should pay its distributive share to the support of the government, and to the discharge of the public burdens, just in proportion to the amount of the value of the property protected by the government and its laws."

I cite these authorities because some gentlemen are very sensitive about double taxation, and in order that we may go back to the true theory of taxation, the basis upon which this sovereign power rests, which is the protection which the citizen derives from the Government. If, therefore, the citizen transfers his property, and receives in lieu thereof something else, which has a money value, be it a mortgage, a note, or simply a parol promise to pay, and government protects him and his legal rights in this line of business, opens the doors of its forums of justice to vindicate his claim for redress, when his debtor fails to respond to his obligation, on what principle can it be insisted that he should not pay for this protection in the form of taxation, when taxation is based upon the protection which the government gives to the citizen.

One man sells his land and gets in lieu thereof mortgage notes. Government protects the vendor in his mortgage notes, and the vendee in his land. There is no increase in property, but there is a change of properties, which the government recognizes and upholds, and it is this protection which the government extends over a man's property, and all the changes and shapes which it assumes in the business affairs of life, which underlies the sovereign right of taxation.

Passing from this point, as to what constitutes the basis of taxation, I come to another proposition, and to sustain this I also cite from Cooley. He says: "Absolute equality and strict justice are unattainable in tax proceedings. It must happen, under any tax law, that some property will be taxed twice, while other property will escape taxation altogether. Instances will occur where persons will be taxed as owners of property which has ceased to exist." It must be borne in mind, therefore, that, so far as the equality or justice of taxation is concerned, it is only approximative, and long after this Convention shall have ended its labors, the Sisyphean toil will remain for other Constitutional Conventions to grapple with, how nearly can the approach be made to the ideal standard of equality and justice in taxation. My proposition is, that perfect equality in taxation is a chimera, an eidolon of the brain.

They who claim that only tangible and visible property should be taxed, cannot fail to see that this is not entirely practicable. The retail merchant often buys his goods of the wholesale merchant who has paid the taxes on the goods, and then takes them to another jurisdiction, to a different locus, where he is assessed for the same goods, and is compelled to submit to double taxation. In formulating any system of taxation, we must take human nature just as we find it, with its disposition to shirk the demands of the State, and, on the other hand, the imperious exigencies of the State itself, its duty to extend protection to all its citizens and property of every kind, and maintain its dignity and power; and from these postulata we must systematize our tax laws so as to make them as nearly as may be practical, effectual, equal, and uniform. Abandoning Utopian theories and aspirations after perfect equality and ideal perfection, we must come down to practical details. The armor of constitutional provisions is generally iron-clad, and we are not in favor of inaugurating any experiments in it, especially on this all-important subject of taxation. We want to wait no long efflux of years for some slow problem to work its own solution, such as David A. Wells, the distinguished financier, has proposed. He says, "that all taxes equate and diffuse themselves, and that if levied with certainty and uniformity upon tangible property, and fixed signs of property, they will, by a diffusion and repercussion, reach and burden all visible and also all invisible and intangible property with unerring certainty and equality." His doctrine is to "tax but a few things, and then have those taxes diffuse, adjust, and apportion themselves by the inflexible laws of trade and political economy."

The people of California have been waiting ever since the decision of our Supreme Court, in the case of The People vs. Hibernia Bank, for these taxes on tangible property to equate and diffuse themselves, so that by some system of diffusion and repercussion they would reach and burden all visible property. But the process is too slow; the Fabian tactics of delay, the Micawber expectancy of something's turning up, must be abandoned for a system of taxation, which shall be general, vigorous, and operative. We have had enough of this diffusive, repercussive taxation. By way of further elucidation of our proposition that there is no such thing as perfect equality in taxation, we may instance the fact that the shapes which taxation practically assumes are protean. It may be in the form of duties, imports, and excise. It may be in the form of license fees. It may be specific, as on corporations, in reference to amount of capital stock, business done, or profits earned. It may be direct on property according to value, as on real estate and tangible personal property; but there is one great underlying principle which should govern all taxation, and that is, uniformity in the tax levy. This requirement is universal.

If all men were honest; if the laws would not be evaded; if no encouragement to deception, lies, and perjury was given thereby, so as to make it against public policy, it would seem that for the purposes of taxation debts should be deducted from credits; in other words, that intangible indebtedness should be deducted from intangible credits, and that the residuum and all visible property should be taxed; but, at any rate, if this cannot be done successfully, all visible property should be subject to the burden, because it has a situs and can always be reached, and mortgages and solvent credits should also be taxed, because, though they have not a situs as visible or tangible property, they are equally protected by the government and represent a money value, and for all purposes of transfer and exchange are property. They have all the indicia of property. Lands, houses, and all other visible property may be purchased with them, and no other values be passed between the contracting parties. The coffers of any bank will respond to their presentation, and in the business ramifications of life, they are not only valuable, and universally regarded as such, but they also subserve the purposes of mutual convenience. They are the subjects of the law's protection, as much as any other kind of wealth. They are equally protected by the civil and criminal laws. Larceny may be committed of them, and many a felon has experience to his sorrow, that as between them and other kinds of property, "their partitions do their bounds divide." The difference is a good deal like the difference between a Jew and a Christian, in the language of Shylock:

"Hath not a Jew eyes; hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same food, hurt with the same weapons, subject to the same diseases, healed by the same means, warmed and cooled by the same Winter and Summer, as a Christian is? If you prick us, do we not bleed? if you tickle us, do we not laugh?

if you poison us, do we not die? and if you wrong us, shall we not revenge."

But it is said that our Supreme Court, in the case of The People vs. Hibernia Bank, have decided that credits are not property. That decision was based upon the provision in our present Constitution, section thirteen, article eleven, requiring that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. It is very apparent that this idea of equality and uniformity was predominant in that decision, for they say: "That causes of action are dependent on too many contingencies to be capable of appraisement which shall accord with any rule of equity or uniformity of value, is too plain for argument." Again, they say: "The Constitution provides that no property, as property, shall be taxed except such as is capable of valuation by the Assessor, which shall be relatively equal and uniform with that affixed to all other property." In the case of Savings and Loan Society vs. Austin et al., in forty-sixth of California Reports, I notice, in the argument of a distinguished gentleman of this Convention, that he gives it as the result of his investigations, that credits are taxed in Florida, Indiana, Kansas, Minnesota, Michigan, Oregon, Ohio, West Virginia, Louisiana, Kentucky, Maine, Iowa, Connecticut, Massachusetts, New York, Maryland, New Jersey, New Hampshire, Wisconsin, Georgia, Alabama, and Missouri, either under direct and explicit constitutional provisions, or legislative enactments in pursuance of the reserved sovereign powers of the Legislature.

I must admit, Mr. Chairman, that I have some objections to the amendment proposed by my colleague, but they are not of such a character as will prevent my voting for it. I will state concisely what my preference would be. I find in the Constitutions of North Carolina, Ohio, Arkansas, and Minnesota, the following provision:

"Laws shall be passed taxing, by a uniform rule, all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise, and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money."

Now, if we eliminate from this provision "stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise," which I would have provided for in a subsequent section, and then, if we insert the bonds, mortgages, and franchises, the provision will read thus:

"Laws shall be passed taxing all moneys, credits, mortgages, investments in bonds, franchises, and all real and personal property according to its true value in money."

Of course this would be followed by subsequent sections as to taxing stocks, and deducting debts from credits, if this latter should be deemed advisable. I believe such a provision, besides substantially complying with the constitutional provisions in four or five of the States of the Union, would be a clearer and more potent provision than that contained in the proposed amendment. The word "credits" is shorter, and will include "notes, evidences of indebtedness, and solvent debts," in the Moreland amendment; besides, the words "solvent debts," is a misnomer when applied to choses in action held by the creditor—they are not his debts, but his credits. Again, the word "solvent" is misapplied, limiting only debts, and not applying to bonds, notes, mortgages, and evidences of indebtedness. This misapplication would occasion the same animadversion which the Supreme Court gave utterance to in the case of The People vs. Hibernia Bank. Referring to the provision in our Political Code, to the effect that personal property includes money, goods, chattels, evidences of debt, and things in action, they say that under that provision, "unless the provision in the Constitution limits or restrains the power of the Legislature, it is the duty of Assessors to assess, not only mortgages, but all debts, solvent or not solvent, and also all rights of action, whether arising ex contractu or ex delicto." I refer to this because I think the word solvent misplaced. But, in the provision which I have suggested, the word solvent is not necessary, because everything is to be assessed according to its true value in money. It is my judgment that a provision of this kind would be more satisfactory, and a clearer expression of the subjects of taxation, and, although I shall vote for my colleague's amendment, yet I wish to say that in the event it does not prevail I shall offer the following:

"Laws shall be passed taxing all moneys, credits, mortgages, investment in bonds, franchises, and all real and personal property, according to its true value in money, except as hereinafter provided; and no property shall be exempt from taxation except growing crops and such as may be used exclusively for public schools, or places of burial not used for private or corporate profit, and such as may belong to the United States, this State, any county or municipal corporation within this State, and institutions of purely public charity."

I use the words "investment in bonds," instead of simply "bonds," as in the Moreland amendment, which includes too much. There are a great many different kinds of bonds, and some of them do not prove to be an investment.

Inasmuch, also, as there are specific taxes sought to be laid on corporations in a subsequent section of the committee's report, I think it would be advisable to qualify the words that "laws shall be passed taxing all real and personal property according to its true value in money," by the additional words, "except as hereinafter provided."

It will be noticed, also, that the words in the clause excepting certain property from taxation, as I have suggested, leave less room for doubt, and they are substantially the same as in the Constitution of Missouri of eighteen hundred and sixty-five. The power to exempt from taxation property for charitable purposes is left with the Legislature in the following Constitutions: Pennsylvania, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Minnesota, North Carolina, Ohio, Oregon, South Carolina, Virginia, and West Virginia. And in most of these Constitutions the same power is left with the Legislature in respect to exempting cemeteries. In many of the other Constitutions there is very little said about taxation, leaving the whole subject with the Legislature; and of course, under the general grant of legislative authority over the subject of taxation, as well as where nothing is provided on the subject, the Legislature possesses the power of exemption, but I have not had time to examine the laws of those States and ascertain to what extent the exemption has been carried in respect to charitable institutions.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I have this to say, that there is nothing in which the people of my county are more interested than in the taxation of mortgages and solvent credits, and therefore I am willing to support any amendment which has a prospect of success, that will accomplish this most desirable result, although differing, as I do, in matters of detail and the phraseology to be used. In other words, I will support no proposition or amendment which omits from the list of taxable property mortgages and solvent credits.

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I regret very much that I was not able to be present in the Convention at the opening of this discussion. A great many gentlemen have already expressed their views upon the subject under consideration. Coming here without a pledge to anybody, with a desire to arrive at what will be best for the people, and being ready now to be convinced by any arguments which may be presented, I regret that I did not hear the arguments of all who have spoken, as I might have obtained some information convincing me as to the right course to pursue here. I have given this subject, for some years past, considerable thought. I have some preconceived notions upon the subject—notions which have been formed after a good deal of study, and which are more and more confirmed as I continue to read and hear the matter discussed. Not that I am beyond the reach of conviction, for I hope never to be, but as far as my information goes, and as far as my studies go, my preconceived notions stand confirmed; yet I am ready to give way whenever any gentleman shall present views to the contrary which are well founded and demonstrative of the right. I hope to have an opportunity of presenting my views here to gentlemen who are willing to be convinced, and I hope there is no member who, upon being convinced as to what is right, will not be willing to act upon that conviction.

This subject is a difficult one. That it has intrinsic difficulties there is no doubt. It is a subject that has occupied the minds of great students, great political economists, and great statesmen. Alexander Hamilton, who was the first Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, says, "There is no part of the administration of government which requires such extensive information and a thorough knowledge of the principles of political economy so much as the business of taxation." The arguments here must have convinced everybody of the intrinsic difficulties of the subject, and therefore, in approaching the subject, I shall present my views in no dogmatic manner, but with the earnestness of sincere conviction.

Now, I agree with the last gentleman who addressed this body, and the authorities which he cited, showing that absolute, mathematical equality is not to be obtained. But it should be approximated as nearly as possible. I do not suppose any member will disagree with this proposition. It is a principle to be followed as a landmark, and the fact that we cannot absolutely obtain equality is no reason why we should not approximate to it. Therefore, looking at it in a practical way, I insist that equality and uniformity must be sought after. It is impossible to discuss any great question of government, or religion, or ethics, unless we agree upon some general and common propositions; for, if we differ on elementary principles and attempt to discuss them, we shall never arrive at a solution of the questions before this body. We must, therefore, have some common ground on which to stand; some base, from which to start; certain axioms; some agreed platform of great underlying fundamental principles. So agreeing, we can proceed to discuss and solve the matter which is really in dispute. What, then, shall we agree upon? In the first place, that taxation must be equal and uniform, and I will not debate the question now before this body with any one who will not agree to that proposition. He is beyond my reach who says taxation should not be equal and uniform. That is almost a universal provision in American Constitutions. There is hardly a Constitution to be found in which it is not expressed in precisely these terms, that taxation shall be equal and uniform, and all lawyers and Courts start out with this proposition as something not to be disputed.

What is the next proposition? That there shall be no double taxation. That is another elementary principle that we all agree upon. I hardly think any gentleman will be found who will declare himself to be in favor of double taxation. Of course, there may be occurrences of double taxation under any system, but it will be vague in its character and infinitessimal in amount. But we must be careful not to admit the principles of double taxation. If you tax a man's house twice, or his stock twice, you admit the principle of double taxation, and assert the right to tax the homestead over and over if a single assessment is not sufficient to raise the required revenue. It is a principle that certainly ought not to be laid down in the Constitution. Therefore we should, as an essential principle, avoid double taxation. We should also avoid a government capitation tax, except to a very small degree, usually called a poll tax. We have had a poll tax for a number of years, but it is hardly worth mentioning, except to distinguish between it and the tax upon property. So, that is out of view. As my friend from Kern County observed, it is a false quantity—a very proper phrase. As in mathematics, a false quantity is to be rejected, so here we reject this, and arrive at another elementary principle, and that is that taxes are to be levied upon property.

Now, we will assume these great elementary principles to be the principles upon which to base our action, and it remains for us only to determine the property to be taxed, and the mode and manner of taxing it. Now, what is taxation? It has been defined here by several gentlemen in different ways. The last gentleman who spoke, the gentleman from Sonoma, gave Cooley's definition. Cooley is only one of probably a hundred writers upon that subject. It has been defined in various ways, sometimes as far back as the old black letter tomes.

[Mr. Wilson here gave definitions of taxation according to several authors which he cited.]

The power of taxation is one of the greatest attributes of sovereignty; it is a necessary power. It may be regarded as an exaction which the highest power—the sovereign—makes of the subject, to pay for the support of the government. The question of protection, as a consideration for taxation, amounts to nothing, for the humblest citizen—the tramp, who has not a dollar in the world, or reputation, or home, or place to lay his head—is entitled to the protection of the law. Government is a complex piece of machinery, and only runs at great expense. The true question, then, is this: What is the best system of taxation for the support of the government? In every State in the Union, with the exception of the instances mentioned by gentlemen here, the matter of taxation is left to legislative discretion, with only certain broad principles on the subject laid down in the Constitution. In some few States the Constitution fixes the objects and subjects of taxation, and makes it mandatory upon the Legislature. In most cases it is left with the Legislature to select the objects and subjects on which taxes should be levied consistent with the general principles of equality and uniformity—the tax being upon property, and not upon persons. The Legislature should have this discretionary power. My individual opinion is that the Constitution should only prescribe that all real estate and all tangible property shall be taxed, and that such taxation shall be according to value, and that the Legislature should have, beyond that, the power and discretion of imposing any other tax that it might see fit, except a capitation tax. Then the Legislature, in its discretion, could enact a stamp act, a tax upon incomes, or a tax upon anything else, according to the necessities of the State at the time.

That would be justice to all, and would leave it more elastic—in a better condition, and more in accordance with the general principles prevailing in all the States of the Union. That would tax everything that should be taxed, except in some particular crisis, when it might become necessary to pass a stamp Act, or enforce an income tax, or tax on something else. The question here is, what shall we prescribe in the Constitution? What should be put into it in the shape of mandatory provisions, compelling the Legislature to act? Shall the tax be upon real estate? Everybody agrees to the proposition that real estate should be taxed. Everybody, I believe, agrees that tangible personal property should be taxed. When we have gone beyond that, we have entered upon a very disputable domain. Now, in its true and proper sense, when we have taken real estate and tangible personal property, we have all there is that is property. When you go beyond that, you are getting into deep water. Debts are incorporeal; they are simply creations of the mind, and exist only in contemplation. A right of way across a man's land would be incorporeal. It is not real property; it is not personal property. It may be of great value, and yet not be property. He does not own the land; he does not own a stick grown on the land; and yet the right to pass across it is a valuable right. It is incorporeal. And there are vast numbers of things which are valuable, and which are taken cognizance of by the law, and yet which nobody ever thought of putting on the assessment roll and taxing, because they are purely creations of the mind. We find far back in very early times that this doctrine was laid down very plainly. I will read now a few brief extracts from an authority which my friend from Sonoma will recognize:

Sir William Blackstone says (Blk. 2 Com., p. 17), in defining hereditaments, that they are of two kinds—corporeal and incorporeal. "Corporeal consist of such as affect the senses; such as may be seen and handled by the body. Incorporeal are not the object of sensation; can neither be seen nor handled; are creatures of the mind, and exist only in contemplation. An incorporeal hereditament is a right issuing out of a thing corporate (whether real or personal), or concerning, or annexed to, or exercisable within the same. It is not the thing corporate itself, which may consist in lands, houses, jewels, or the like, but something collateral thereto, as a rent issuing out of those lands, or houses, or an office relating to those jewels. In short, as the logicians speak, corporeal hereditaments are the substance, which may be always seen, always handled. Incorporeal hereditaments are but a sort of accidents which inhere in and are supported by that substance, and may belong, or not belong, to it, without any visible alteration therein. Their existence is merely in idea and abstracted contemplation, though their effects and profits may be frequently objects of our bodily senses. And, indeed, if we would fix a clear notion of an incorporeal hereditament, we must be careful not to confound together the profits produced, and the thing, or hereditament, which produces them. An annuity, for instance, is an incorporeal hereditament, for though the money, which is the fruit or product of this annuity, is doubtless of a corporeal nature, yet the annuity itself, which produces that money, is a thing invisible, has only a mental existence, and cannot be delivered over from hand to hand."

A laborer's lien, for instance, exists purely in contemplation. Therefore, it is called in law an incorporeal right. It cannot, like corporeal property, be seen and handled. It exists merely in contemplation; there is nothing corporeal, and there is therefore no property. He cannot take it and handle it, and yet it is of value to him. Choses in action are things which you cannot recover without a lawsuit, unless voluntarily paid. The gentleman from San Joaquin says, a man can be put in jail for stealing a promissory note. I say at common law it could not be done, because it was held not to be property. It is only by virtue of a California statute that stealing a promissory note is made a larceny. But the English law, from which we derive the great bulk of our laws, did not regard a promissory note as property, and it was no larceny to steal it. Nor was a debt, as a debt, assignable; negotiable paper, which depended upon great mercantile principles, was assignable, but a debt itself was not, as such, assignable at law, because it was not a thing corporeal. Debts were simply incorporeal things, and not assignable. There are many things which may be mentioned of the same character which have value, but which could not be taxed. Let us take some instances. A man rides upon the railroad, and through some negligence of the railroad employés has his leg broken. He has a cause of action against the railroad company. He has a chose in action. He has a claim for damages for a broken leg. Are you going to tax that claim? When the Assessor comes around to the hospital where the man is lying with his broken leg, and learns that he has a claim against the railroad company because of his broken leg and injured feelings, is he to tax that claim? Is it property? It has value. He has a claim at law and he may assign it, because we have changed the common law with regard to the assignability of choses in action.

We next find a man with a patent right. It may be most valuable. Some of the most valuable things owned are in the shape of patent rights. So, also, I may own a patent almost indispensable to a railroad company, and I may charge a large royalty for the use of it. It is mine; it is the result of my ingenuity, and they cannot use it without paying me a royalty. The Government has given me the exclusive right for the purpose of encouraging invention. Yet, whoever thought of taxing that kind of property? Take, also, a copyright. I have written a book. No man can print it except by my consent. It is valuable; but whoever thought of taxing it? Take a newspaper with an immense circulation, and the value of the actual property employed bears no relation to the real value of the concern; yet whoever heard of the good will of a newspaper being taxed? You may tax the type and the press; but the great value of a newspaper is its popularity with the public. Its value lies in the good will; but whoever heard of taxing the good will of a newspaper? It is an intangible, incorporeal thing, which depends upon enterprise, energy, tact, talent, management, and popularity with the people. We had an instance of it in the City of San Francisco, where a newspaper with a very wide circulation and great success and prosperity went suddenly down, and was worth only what its type and presses would sell for. Take the San Francisco Herald at the time the Vigilance Committee existed. It had a very wide circulation and a large patronage. It took a position against the committee and lost its patronage. Before that, the institution could have been sold for two hundred thousand dollars. The next day there was simply a lot of old type and presses. Whoever thought of taxing the good will of a newspaper?

Take a policy of insurance, the option to purchase property, etc.; they are valuable, but who ever thought of taxing them? Take the right I have to the earnings of my son until he is twenty-one years old. He must work upon my farm, or in my shop, or in my office, until he is of age. His labor is mine, and it is valuable to me; yet who ever heard of taxing it? All these things it is impossible to tax, and therefore no one has ever thought of taxing them. Therefore the idea of universal taxation must be abandoned. It is not necessary to equal and uniform taxation that it should be universal. Those things occupy the same position precisely as a debt. A debt is incorporeal, exists in the mind, in contemplation, and it is no answer to say that you can get something for that debt. So you can for a copyright; so you can for a claim for a broken leg which has been caused by the negligence of a railroad employé. Now, I say that all modern political economists insist that taxation should be limited to visible, tangible property, with a very few exceptions, and the leading minds of the age contend that the best mode of taxation is to tax that which is visible and tangible only—real property and personal property that you can see and handle. Men who have studied taxation—all great publicists—say so. It is curious that there is such uniformity of opinion among learned and able men, who have studied the philosophy of taxation, if they are not right in those views. Alexander Hamilton says that taxation ought to be based upon tangible, visible property, and a mind greater than his never existed in the United States. These New York Commissioners, who have been referred to, proceed upon the same basis, and, in an article in the Atlantic Monthly, Charles Francis Adams lays down the same proposition exactly, and denounces the system of taxing mortgages as an absurd system.

Now, suppose some gentleman starts to go through the State of California, in order to ascertain the material wealth of the State. Let him start with the land and assess it at its value. Let him take the cattle and other personal property upon the land. Let him find all the things that are to be seen and handled—drygoods, produce, and stock of all kinds. When he shall be through and shall have added the figures, will we not have, beyond all question, the material wealth of the State? Now, if we should ascertain that half the citizens of the State have borrowed from the others an amount equal to one half that material wealth, have we added anything to the material wealth of the State by that debt? Now, is it a debatable proposition in political economy that he should stop when he has assessed all the visible and tangible property? But in despite of all this, it is said here that we must tax mortgages, which are evidences of the debts of the people. The farmer who desires to improve his place has borrowed ten or fifteen thousand dollars for that purpose, and insists that the mortgage should be taxed. It is one of the most curious features of this thing that the farmer who has to borrow money should want mortgages taxed. I do not understand why he insists on this, for he wants to use the land for the purpose of negotiating a loan upon it. I don't care if he is perfectly independent and free from debt to-day; independent of everybody and everything: still he does not know what misfortune may happen to him. He may want to enter upon some new enterprise, some new developments, and he may want to borrow some money upon the farm. If mortgages be taxed it is the borrower who must pay the tax by a great law of trade. He cannot escape; he must pay the tax upon the land and upon the mortgage too. He may struggle as he pleases, he will never get the money except by paying it. We may provide that there shall be no contract between the mortgagor and the mortgagee; that the mortgagee shall pay the tax. We may pass a usury law to prevent high rates of interest, and when we get through we will find, as a result, that the farmer cannot borrow ten cents upon his land. He is merely rendering it unavailable as a security. His land may be very productive; situated in a fine portion of the country; accessible to market; but when he offers it to a business man as security for a loan, he will be laughed at if such restrictions as these are prescribed.

If you tax land and then tax mortgages, you, in the first place, raise the price of interest which the land owner pays. If, to prevent that, you pass a usury law, you render land unavailable as a security. The borrower inevitably pays the tax in all cases, upon the mortgage, and the borrower should cry aloud against a mortgage tax. As a friend to the farmer, I am opposed to a tax upon mortgages. The money lender will take care of himself. He has the money, and he can command the terms upon which he will loan it, and the farmer who wants to borrow must accede to those terms or he will not get the money. When he has paid taxes upon the land, for God's sake don't tax him upon the mortgage too, when he seeks to raise money for the purpose of developing the resources of the State. What else will this tax effect? It will drive away capital from loans upon farms. This New York Commissioners' report which has been referred to, expresses the idea, when it says that if you want capital to develop your land do not raise the price, cheapen it. You will then bring money down where the farmer can reach it for the purpose of developing the land. They say the State of New York has been set back and retarded ten years in its growth by not having correct ideas of taxation, and by the taxation of mortgages. It is against the interest of the country, and particularly against the interest of that class who develop the resources of the country on borrowed capital. It is against the interest of the land owner. It does not cheapen money, and the tax must fall upon the borrowing class. You cannot make a man lend you money according to your wishes. He will loan it according to the principles and rules of trade and business, and he will send his money, to subserve his own interest, from one city to another, as shown by the New York Commissioners. Wherever it is paid best, there will it go. Sometimes it comes here, sometimes it goes away. It is plenty here now, because it pays here. It is scarce at another time, because it doesn't pay here. The laws of trade will control, and we cannot control the laws of trade by constitutional enactment. We must conform to them, abide by them, and act upon them; and the man who does not act upon the great laws of trade is as foolish as the man who expects the tide to obey his wishes.

I do not propose to go into any further details in this matter in showing how it is double taxation, because it is manifestly double taxation. There is no property but that which we see and handle, except in mere contemplation. The gentleman from Sacramento read you authorities and precedents from other States, which show that the people, desiring to arrive at what is right and best for the State, exempted mortgages from taxation, and under circumstances, too, where there was no question as to the power of the State to tax mortgages. They found from experience that it was inexpedient to tax mortgages, and resolved on a different course, to their great benefit. Now, as I said, there is no property in these incorporeal things. They are simply the representatives of property. I do not intend to introduce the same old horse which has been trotting around this Convention in my absence, as an illustration. But there are many things that illustrate the falsity of the idea that these ideal and incorporeal things are property in the true sense. The very moment we tax a debt, we are taxing property doubly. I have seen illustrations of these mortgage tax matters in my professional experience, one of which I will mention here, which demonstrates the workings of the mortgage tax law. A number of years ago, and before the decision of the Supreme Court in the Hibernia Bank cases, a firm in San Francisco had loaned one hundred thousand dollars and taken a mortgage upon land near Marysville. The Assessor came along and viewed the land, and assessed it to the owner at one hundred thousand dollars. Then he went to the records, found the mortgage, and assessed it to the mortgagee at one hundred thousand dollars. Now, there was the land taxed, and the money loaned upon it taxed, and then the mortgage taxed. The borrowers failed in the enterprise for which they borrowed the money, and became unable to repay the one hundred thousand dollars secured by the mortgage. They went to the mortgagee and said: "We cannot redeem, and will convey you the land in payment of our mortgage debt." The arrangement was made and the land was conveyed to the mortgagee before the tax was payable. Now, after the mortgagee had become the owner of the land, along came the Tax Collector; the mortgagee had only the land; he had loaned one hundred thousand dollars on the land, and had taken the land in payment. And yet the Tax Collector said: "I have a claim against you on the assessment of one hundred thousand dollars, the value of the land, and on the assessment of one hundred thousand dollars on the mortgage. The land was assessed and you have now the land and must pay the tax. The mortgage is gone, but the assessment was made and cannot be changed; so you must pay the tax on the land and the tax on the mortgage;" that ideal thing, which did not exist even at the time, except in contemplation, and now even that is gone. That one hundred thousand dollars, treated as property, was annihilated; it had been absolutely destroyed by the transaction of taking the land for debt. Was the material wealth of the State lessened one hundred thousand dollars by that transaction? I submit it to you as political economists. In my judgment, not at all. It is simply absurd. There was no destruction of property because there was no property to destroy. Therefore, when this citizen came to pay, he was compelled to pay a double tax upon the value of that land. You cannot escape from the logical result of the transaction. The land was worth one hundred thousand dollars only, and yet he was compelled to pay on two hundred thousand dollars. Now, the gentleman from Sonoma earnestly desires to tax mortgages. I hold he cannot do it unless he taxes an ideal thing or a mere piece of paper. I desire to call his attention——

MR. HITCHCOCK. Suppose the mortgage was upon a house for one hundred thousand dollars, and the house burned up?

MR. WILSON. I cited this illustration for the purpose of showing that there was no loss of material wealth. If the house is burned down there is a loss of material wealth. The State has lost property worth so much money. That is the proposition I have presented. When the mortgage is lost or canceled, there is no loss of material wealth. There is no wealth destroyed. When the house burns down, there is a loss of material wealth. You are speaking of one thing and I am speaking of another. Next in order I would ask, are you going to tax debts? I will assume that I owe Mr. Gregg a debt. He is taxed upon it. He owes me a debt and, under the law, they are both satisfied and annihilated, because one offsets the other. Here is no loss of property. When there is only one debt owing, it is asserted that there is property to be taxed, but when a counter debt is owing, then the first debt is met by the offset, and there is no property whatever.

MR. McCALLUM. Suppose you owe Mr. Gregg one thousand dollars, and he owes you one thousand dollars, is there any debt existing in that case?

MR. WILSON. Yes, sir; there are two debts. He owes me and I owe him. Suppose he sues me and I do not plead my debt as an offset. Then he gets judgment for the full amount.

MR. McCALLUM. There is an action in each.

MR. WILSON. Of course, I was showing you the nature of these things which are to be called property, and the absurdity connected with their taxation. You may say such and such things are property, but they are not real, tangible property, and ought not to be taken cognizance of by the Assessor for the purposes of taxation.

Now, I wish to call attention to the first proposition in this Moreland amendment, as it is called, and if the Convention can adopt this as a whole, they can stand a good deal. "All property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law." So far, so good. There is hardly anything so bad but that you can find a little good in it. But that is about the provision of the old Constitution. "For purposes of taxation, bonds, notes, mortgages, evidences of indebtedness, solvent debts, franchises, everything of value capable of transfer or ownership, shall be considered property," etc., excepting growing crops. This is double taxation and you cannot escape it. Take the elementary principles which I laid down in the beginning, and you cannot avoid the conclusion. Now, the first error is that the terms "solvent debts" ought to be "credits" instead of "debts." We have been using the term "debts" here in this debate when we really have meant "credits." However, we understand what is meant. The term "solvent debts" either embraces bonds, notes, mortgages, and other evidences of debt, or it does not embrace them. If it does embrace them, then they ought to be stricken out, because when you have one comprehensive word which embraces everything which you desire to enumerate, that is the word to use. But, if there is the least obscurity, or doubt, or confusion, then, of course, it is better to make it plain. Therefore, if you mean that bonds, and notes, and mortgages are solvent debts, you ought to say so.

If this proposed amendment should be adopted as it now is written, and comes to be judicially considered, this charitable view will not be taken of it, because it is the universal legal rule that every word and sentence, or portion of a sentence, is to be considered as having some force or meaning. Legislative or constitutional bodies are supposed to have used particular words because they convey particular ideas. Therefore the Court construing it will say, "solvent debt" occupies one position, performs one office, and the mortgage is a different thing entirely. What is the result then? The judicial interpretation will be this—that when you have taxed "solvent debts," you have taxed only one of the things which are mentioned. You have not finished; you must go farther. Here is the note; you must tax that; you must tax the evidence of indebtedness, independent of the debt, or else there is no sense in this provision. You propose to tax mortgages. What is a mortgage? It is a mere instrument in writing by which a debt is written. It is a contract. All these paper writings, and evidences of contract, would have to be taxed, independent of the debt. It proposes, also, to tax a bond, or a note, irrespective of solvency. By this amendment it is proposed to tax bonds. What kind of bonds? Why, all bonds. Official bonds are literally embraced in the term, and are you going to tax them? Officers give official bonds for good conduct and the faithful performance of official duty, such as Sheriffs, County Clerk, etc. Are you going to tax such bonds—attachment bonds, appeal bonds, indemnifying bonds, and the thousands of bonds of various kinds known to the ordinary business affairs of life—are you going to tax them? Now, mortgages may be given for something else besides money. They are given for the purpose of carrying out collateral engagements. I may become surety for a man, and he may give me a mortgage to indemnify me for any losses which may arise. Now, should it be taxed? There is no money due upon it. These are only a few of the difficulties which may arise if this loosely drawn provision is inserted into the Constitution. Evidences of debt are to be taxed, not the debts themselves. What does that mean? Why, if you are a merchant and keep books of account, they are evidences of debt, under the law. You may introduce these books of account in evidence against a man to whom you have given credit, and they are considered as very potent evidence. A man might write a letter in which he admits that a certain debt is due, and that is one evidence of debt. There are many evidences of debt which are not negotiable. They are not money. Shall the State tax them? It is not the debt, because you have already once taxed the debt under the first head, "solvent debts." Why, then, do you hunt for the evidence of that debt, and tax it also? Besides, it would seem that the evidence of debt is to be taxed whether the debt itself is solvent or not. The proposed amendment provides that everything of value, capable of being transferred or owned, shall be considered property. Now, that is very broad language—very sweeping. Let us see what it leads to. Let us see what is capable of being owned. A man's deed to his land is valuable to him. It is owned by him—he can transfer it. Are you going to tax his deed? A claim for unliquidated damages is owned by a man. He may have a libel suit, and may assign his cause of action. There are also copyrights, the good will of a newspaper, and hundreds of things which are capable of being owned and transferred, which ought not to be, and never have been, regarded as proper subjects of taxation.

MR. MORELAND. Did you ever hear of a mortgage or note being taxed?

MR. WILSON. I never did; it was always the money at interest that was taxed, and there never was any attempt to tax bonds or anything else of that kind. It was heretofore expressly provided that it was money at interest that was to be taxed. If a man sold a farm and took a mortgage without interest to secure the unpaid purchase money, it was not taxed at all under the old law. It was only taxable when it ran on interest. It never was sought to tax it in any other way. It is also proposed in this amendment to tax the property of corporations, and then tax the capital stock. That is one of the remarkable features of this amendment. Now, to tax the property of a corporation, and then tax its capital stock, is double taxation under all the authorities. It has been decided in six or eight States that it is double taxation, and is not, therefore, in accordance with true principles of political economy. When you tax the property and money of a corporation, you have taxed every piece of property it has. If, after that, you tax the capital stock, you are taxing that corporation twice on the same property. So it has been held by all the Courts of the Union.

Again, this exemption of growing crops is one which, in my opinion, ought not to be made. The views presented by the gentleman from Yuba, Judge Belcher, exhausted the whole subject. Instead of taxing them as growing crops, the Assessor should go upon the land, and whatever he finds he should assess for what it is worth, whether it is growing crops or anything else. He should assess the land of my friend Colonel Biggs for what it is worth. We want to arrive at the value. Let the Assessor use his best judgment in arriving at the value. I would take into consideration everything regarding the land, just as if I were buying it. If I were buying the land I would take the crop into consideration. I would not estimate separately at all, but would assess the land with the growing crop on it; looking at the land in such or such a condition, I would say it is worth so much. If I found a good crop on it, I would consider it more valuable than if it were lying uncultivated. I would not tax it as a growing crop, but part of the value of the land.

With regard to the proposition of the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale, I will say one word. It comes nearer to my idea of fair and just taxation than the proposition of the gentleman from Sonoma. It comes nearer to a just and correct mode of taxation. There are some objections to it in its present shape; there are some things which should be corrected to make it altogether fair and just. Certainly it comes nearer to the true principles than the Moreland amendment. I should like, however, to see it amended in some respects, and then adopted, if it is the best we can do. It certainly does not permit double taxation in its main provisions; it distributes the tax between the borrower and the lender, and altogether comes nearer to equality and uniformity; therefore, I would like to see the Hale amendment divested of some objectionable features. If it shall be permitted by parliamentary usages, at some time to offer an amendment, which I am unable to do now, I shall propose to reform the Hale amendment so as to read something like this:

"All property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as prescribed by law. No tax shall be imposed upon debts or evidences of debt, upon private property exempt from taxation by the laws of the United States, or property belonging to the United States, this State, or any municipality thereof. No deduction shall be made from the assessed value of property on account of any debt or debts, owing by the owners of such property."

The other portion of the amendment to stand as it is. I would not allow deductions to be made for ordinary little debts like butcher, and baker, and grocer's bills; I would avoid all of these objections. There ought to be an amendment, too, of this kind, that the debtor, in making these deductions, should have paid the taxes upon the property; that he should not escape his taxes and then deduct from others; and, also, that this should not apply to the bonded debts of corporations. With these exceptions I shall sustain the amendment of the gentleman from Placer in preference to that of the gentleman from Sonoma. The latter is utterly wrong, and contrary to all principles of political science, justice, and right.

Another word in relation to bonds, spoken of here. If you tax State or municipal bonds, it is taking money out of one pocket and putting it into another, because if you tax them it will affect their market value, and thus be a loss to the State or municipality issuing them. That is the reason why the United States provided that their bonds should not be taxed, for if they might be taxed at all they might be taxed to such an extent as to ruin their value. These things are all governed by the laws of trade. There is no use in running one's head against a stone wall. Tax these bonds and the State will not get as much for them as she would without the tax. The market value of the bonds will drop down just in proportion to the amount of the tax upon them. Leave off the tax and they are a more desirable investment, and the State gets more for them. No government ever taxes its own bonds. My own idea is that all we should require of the Legislature is that real estate and tangible property should be taxed, and beyond that, leave it to legislative discretion as to whether they will tax anything else. I shall favor the Hale amendment with the alterations I have suggested. Failing in that, I cannot conceive of anything more objectionable than this Moreland amendment, not even a deluge. [Laughter.] I would rather take this report of the committee, including all of its objectionable features. I prefer the Hale amendment. But either is infinitely better than the Moreland amendment. Its adoption into the Constitution would set this State back in its growth and development ten years.

SPEECH OF MR. REDDY.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: I hope that whatever I may have to say upon this subject will not be construed as my remarks were the other day, when the gentleman from Santa Cruz represented me as attempting to create hostility between the farmers and the miners. I agree with him fully that the two interests are united, or ought to be so. That the interest of one is the interest of the other.

Now, sir, we have laid down one very clear, distinct rule in this first section of the report of the committee, and that is, that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this State. Now, you might as well strike out that section at once, unless you are going to be guided by it as a fundamental principle. It should be our guide all the way through. It seems the committee, and also the gentleman who has offered this amendment, lost sight of this rule, because they provide in the next section for taxing the property of corporations, and then taxing the capital stock. It is only necessary to mention the fact to show you that it is a clear violation of the principle I refer to. Now, for the purpose of comparison let us see how the farmer will stand under this proposed provision, and how the miner will stand, and see whether the taxes which the miner has to pay are not more onerous than the farmers' taxes. The great cry before was that taxes were unequal in this State, and that a great deal of property escaped taxation. That I believe to be true. A great deal of property did escape taxation, but I wish to call your attention to a certain kind of property that has escaped taxation, and which, if this provision is adopted, will continue to escape. One little item will give some idea of what the gross amount would be. The wheat export from this State during the year eighteen hundred and seventy-seven was valued at eleven million seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars, to say nothing about what remains in this State. The total exports, exclusive of bullion, was twenty-nine million nine hundred and fifteen thousand two hundred dollars. How much of this balance is produce, I do not know; but most of that which was raised on farms escaped taxation entirely. Growing crops are exempt from taxation, and why? I presume as a matter of policy, to encourage that industry. Another reason given is that it is part of the realty while it is growing, and that it is impossible to determine its value at the particular time when the Assessor comes round. It is impossible at that time to tell whether the growing crops will mature or not. Now, if that is the reason, we can avoid that difficulty by having the Assessor wait a little while, until they harvest the crop (by machinery made in the East), and until they have it put in sacks, and then the Assessor can ascertain the value. But that is not done, and by this means the entire crop is exempt from taxation. Now we can easily correct that by having the Assessor come a little later.

Now, there is another reason, perhaps, for exempting this property from taxation. They say that the farms some years don't raise a crop; that it is an arduous business. That is true; but is not mining an arduous business? I have never raised but one crop by mining, and every gentleman who invests in mines must realize that fact. And yet these people are not exempt from taxation; nor are the miners assessed upon their crops; they are assessed upon holes in the ground; upon their hopes and expectations. The miner does not ask that his property shall be exempt from taxation; all he asks is, that other interests shall not be exempt, but that all shall be assessed equally and fairly. He wants the mining interest assessed fairly, like every other interest in the State. He wants one tax upon his property, and only one. Tax the stock, if you will, but don't tax the mine and the stock, too. There is no reason in that. It is the worst kind of double taxation, while the rule that we have laid down is, that there shall be but one tax, and that shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. Now, if it is equality to exempt any property—the property of the farmers of the State—and taxing the miners twice, I am unable to see it. If the farmer can exempt his growing crop from taxation, under the pretense that it is part of the real estate, and for that reason should be exempt, they should allow the same rule to apply to the miners. But it is a mere technicality upon which the farmer seeks to have all this property exempted. The farmer has his seed, and puts it into the ground. The farmer manages to keep the Assessor away while this seed wheat is personal property, so as to avoid having it taxed as personal property, and to have him come after it is in the ground, when it at once becomes part of the real estate. That is probably equal to the ingenuity of the farmer I heard of in Sonoma County, or somewhere up there, who usually took counsel from a lawyer in Sonoma, or somewhere up there. [Laughter.] He was called upon to pay a dog tax. He kept two dogs for the purpose of keeping squirrels off his growing crop. That was their usual occupation, except about the time the Assessor came around. He trained them so that when the Assessor came around the dogs would run up near the house and stick their tails in two holes in the ground made for the purpose, and the farmer claimed that they were exempt from taxation, on the ground that they were part of the real estate. [Laughter.] This was about on a par with the exemption of growing crops.

Now, it is said by some gentlemen here that this amendment does not tax the capital stock of corporations. It is clearly stated here that everything capable of transfer or ownership shall be considered property. I believe the capital stock of mining corporations is capable of being transferred. It is capable of ownership, and hence would be considered property and subject to taxation. But we are told that we are relieved of taxation by section seventeen. I don't so understand it. That section reads as follows:

"SEC. 17. The value of the capital stock of a corporation shall be assessed in the county in which its principal place of business is located, and separately from all other property belonging thereto; and such stock shall be assessed at its market value when the assessment is made. The real and other personal property of such corporation shall be assessed in the several counties respectively in which the same is situate. The value of such stock, over and above the aggregate value of such real and other personal property, according to such assessment, shall be taxed in the county in which the principal place of business of such corporation is located; and the value of such real and other personal property shall be taxed in the several counties respectively in which the same is situate. The shares of stock belonging to the stockholders in such corporation shall be exempt from taxation; provided, that the provisions of this section shall not apply to railroad corporations."

Now, as I understand it, the section provides that the corporate property and the corporate stock shall be assessed. It provides that only the stock held by individuals shall be exempt, while that held by the corporation shall be taxed. Now, the reason why that held by individuals should be exempt and that held by the corporation taxed, I cannot understand. It seems to me it should make no difference who holds the stock. That is not in accordance with this principle laid down here. It is clearly double taxation, and no man can gainsay it. Now, I hope the members of this Convention, when this matter comes to a vote, will not saddle any such a double load as this upon the miners. That is certainly just as important an interest as you have to deal with; perhaps not quite as important as the farming interest, but nevertheless very important. It is the interest which keeps the factories and machine shops of San Francisco running, and furnishes employment to thousands of people, and as it is an industry which can only be carried on by corporations, it seems to me you should not seek to heap any more burdens upon them. All I ask is that you shall make one general rule, that shall bear alike upon the miner and the farmer. If you choose to do otherwise and enact this provision, the miners will swamp your Constitution. They will not stand still under this unjust discrimination. The mining interest is one that should be fostered, as well as the farming interest.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: Section first of this article, as adopted by the committee, provides that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout this State. The section proposed by the gentleman from Sonoma is not in harmony with this proposition. I am opposed to it for many reasons. First—I think it is open to the very grave and just criticism made to it by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson. Second—I think that the language used by the gentleman in his proposed amendment does not convey the idea which he himself seems to think it does; and for that reason I am persuaded that when the Courts shall hereafter undertake to construe this section, they may, and probably will, give it an entirely different meaning from that which the gentleman now attributes to it.

The amendment, among other things, provides that: "Everything of value, capable of transfer, shall be taxed." A warehouse receipt is a thing of value, capable of transfer. Then why cannot it be taxed? I am not here to defend the farmers; they need no defense, but I submit to them—are they willing that the evidence that they have a certain amount of property in a warehouse, like a warehouse receipt, for instance, shall be the subject of taxation? And I submit to them, will not such an evidence—namely, the warehouse receipt—be subject to taxation under the proposed amendment?

It is true, we are here to form an organic law for the whole people of the whole State, and not for any particular class. Yet the illustration that I make must necessarily strike home to all that class of people who keep their property in store like the farming community.

It has been stated on this floor that a caucus was held by a portion of this Convention upon the adoption or rejection of the proposed amendment, and that in that caucus it was agreed that this amendment should be adopted, and therefore I am led to believe that there is very little use in discussing the question in open Convention if that be true. Because if a grave question of constitutional law can be settled outside of the Convention, by the action of a portion of the Convention, without the knowledge of another portion of the Convention, then discussion here on this floor seems to be utterly useless and unnecessary. But I cannot believe that the thoughtful people of this State will indorse our action if we adopt the proposed amendment so earnestly asked for by the gentleman. "Everything capable of transfer that has value" shall be taxed according to this amendment. You can hardly imagine a written instrument that has a value that can't be transferred, and yet under this amendment it will be taxed. This will necessarily lead to double taxation, and double taxation is necessarily wrong.

The great secret of good government is to tax every dollar in the State, and to tax it once and tax it alike. All property should be taxed once, and only once. I know it was stated on this floor the other day by one of the advocates of the proposition now under discussion that this section would lead to double taxation. The admission of the proposition is as remarkable as the fact itself is dangerous to civil government. If some property is taxed twice and other property is taxed but once, why then could not some people be taxed on their property, and other people be entirely exempt from taxation? The enforcement of a rule of this kind would necessarily lead to tyranny. It could not be just. It is anti-republican. It is not necessary in order to remedy the evils of the past to provide greater dangers for the future. Because in the past some property has not been taxed and other property has been taxed, gives us no license to make a solemn provision in the organic law of the State sanctioning double taxation.

Double taxation is repugnant to every fair-minded man. It is uncertain, and an uncertain rule of taxation is necessarily a dangerous rule. In San Francisco alone it is said there are over forty millions of dollars in savings banks, I do not recollect the exact amount, but I think this belongs to twenty thousand depositors. Most of these banks have a rule that no deposit above five thousand dollars shall be received by the bank. The result is that those depositors are generally people of small means, people who know little of business affairs or of the laws of the State. They only know that it is their duty to obey the laws. That class of people always pay their taxes. Now you provide that their bank books shall be taxed, and then you provide that the money in the bank shall be taxed, and then you provide that the mortgages shall be taxed. For instance, A has one thousand dollars on deposit in the savings bank. You go to him and he gives in the amount of his money, one thousand dollars. The bank is then called upon for the amount of money that they hold in trust for A, they give him the amount, then they go through the books of the bank, and they find the amount of mortgages, that is the amount of money held by them in trust for others that is loaned on mortgage, and these are taxed.

This must necessarily amount to an oppression, not upon those who are best able to stand it, but upon those who have but little, and who invariably pay their taxes. Shall they pay these taxes once, or more than once? It is not the poor people of the State, or the people of limited means, that evade taxation. They always help to support the Government by paying their full quota of the taxes. In time of war they are the first to enlist, and in time of peace they are the first to contribute their quota towards making up a sum necessary to sustain the Government. It is those only who possess very large means, and who have both the ability and the power of evading the payment of taxes, that don't pay the taxes on their property. You are, then, punishing the small property owners for the benefit, in my judgment, of the large property owners.

MR. JONES (interrupting). I will ask the gentleman, if in addition to that, the Assessor does not go out and find the money of the poor depositor in the savings bank wherever it is, and also assesses it wherever so found?

MR. ESTEE. He can do it; it is frequently done; indeed, it would be his duty to do it under this amendment. It would appear to me, sir, that by reason of the excitement and dissatisfaction that now prevails in this State relative to the mode of taxation, some gentleman desired to go beyond what I consider right and just. In trying to remedy an admitted evil, I fear there is a class of people who would bring down upon our heads greater evils than those we now endure.

It is undoubtedly a recognized fact that there are certain large capitalists, individuals, as well as banks engaged in loaning money, and that they have never paid their proportion of taxes upon the amount of money owned by them. In other words, all the money in the State owned by the citizens of the State, has not hitherto been taxed. Now, in order to reach that evil, the gentleman from Sonoma has presented this very broad amendment, providing that these documents, in whatever shape or form they may present themselves, shall be termed property, and shall be taxed to the person whose name is written upon it. The motive may have been correct; the result will be a failure. There are always some means provided for the people to evade a clearly unjust law, and in this, as in other cases, the means will be found when a necessity for doing so arises. I maintain that it is the settled law of this State to-day, that equal and uniform taxation means that property can be assessed and taxed but once. I affirm further that it is the settled law of the country, and of all the States in the Union, where there has been a judicial determination of this question, that the presumptions are all in favor of taxing property but once. In the present Constitution we propose to define what the word "property" means, and you propose to say by this amendment that everything that has value and is capable of transfer shall be deemed to be property; that solvent debts shall be property; that a note shall be assessed as property, and that a mortgage shall be property. Now, a note is not a mortgage; nor is a mortgage a note. The mortgage is assessed in the county where it is recorded; the note is assessed where you find it. They are two separate things; they both represent a value. One, it is true, made to secure the payment of the other, yet under this amendment both would have to be assessed. And I would like to ask the gentleman from San Joaquin whether he does not think that the proposed amendment will in many instances lead to double taxation.

MR. TERRY. No, sir.

MR. ESTEE. You cannot convince the people of this State that that is true. All the people demand is that all the property in the State shall be taxed. Here has been the great evil. All the property has not been taxed. But the people do not demand—common honesty does not require that any particular or specific property shall be twice taxed. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale, is definite—points out exactly how property shall be taxed, and will require every species of property in the State to be taxed once, no more. And I am unable to see, if this be true, why that amendment should not be adopted in place of the one proposed by the gentleman from Sonoma.

MR. WELLER. Would not a warehouse receipt escape because it is not assignable?

MR. ESTEE. No, sir; a warehouse receipt is assignable; it has value. And if it is assignable, and if it has value, under the Moreland proposed amendment it must be taxed. Take a bill of lading; that is assignable. It is a thing of value to the party to whom it belongs. Why can it not be taxed? The goods, it is true, may not have arrived in the State; but the consignee of the goods has the bill of lading. It is a thing of value, and under any reasonable construction of this section it must also be subject to taxation.

tion, and that they will not be called upon to protect the people from a great and unbearable wrong by adding to the organic law what the makers of that law failed to do themselves. For the people of this State will not, for any period of time, endure double taxation. It is tyranny in its worst form; it is uncertain; it leaves to Assessors the power to oppress the people; it places the power in the hands of the Legislature to enact such a revenue law as will imperil some of the most important financial interests of the State.

Again, you propose to tax the property of a corporation, then to tax its stock, each for its full value. What does the stock represent but the value of the property? I make this illustration, not in the interests of corporations, but in the interest of common fairness. Money will never seek investments where one man's dollar is not the equal of another man's dollar before the law. I confess I am in favor of taxing the franchises of corporations for what they are worth—it has a value; if it had not a value they would not possess it. Without the franchise the corporation itself would be of no value; it gives them the right to call into exercise the full power of the State. In condemning property it gives them the privilege, as in the instance of railroads, to cross private lands, public highways, and the like. It certainly has a value, but this property, like all other property, should be assessed at what it is worth in the market. This question of taxation is one of the most important questions that can come before this Convention. It ought to be treated with the greatest care and the utmost candor, and in the interest of all the material rights of the State. A Constitution should not be made to punish even the strongest man in the State, or to reward even the humblest. It is intended to survive through a long period of time, and be the charter by which the people of this State are to direct the course of the Ship of State. For these and other reasons, sir, I am opposed to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland.

SPEECH OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I had not expected to say anything upon this question, but as only one side has been alluded to in this body this afternoon, I deem it due to myself to state the reasons why I shall support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland. Not that I concur in all the provisions of that amendment, fully, but I believe it comes nearer to what is right than any other proposition now before this body, and I shall support it. I do not concur in some of the exemptions set forth in the amendment, but I hope that our country friends, before we are through with this subject, will reconsider this matter, and allow themselves to be taxed as all other persons are taxed in this State. I hope, sir, that in the end they will concur with us by placing themselves upon an equality, and not resolve themselves into eleemosynary institutions, asking that their property be exempted. I hope they will place themselves on a level with the miners of Siskiyou and Inyo, and not insist on any special privileges. But now as to the question. I concur with the distinguished gentleman who has preceded me on the other side, in saying that the subject of taxation is the most difficult problem which will come before this body. When this Convention was called, the principal object of the people was to have it deal with this question. It is a fact that the laboring and producing classes have contributed more than their quota of the taxes. Any system that can be devised which will more evenly distribute this burden ought to receive the support of this body. I propose to support the Moreland amendment. I am willing to admit, in fact I know, that in some instances it will work double taxation on certain kinds of property, and that this tax will fall to a great extent upon the laboring and producing classes.

MR. ESTEE. Will that be honest?

MR. TINNIN. I propose to explain. During the past ten years two or three hundred millions of property in San Francisco has escaped taxation. Under this proposed amendment this property will be placed upon the assessment roll, and this will more than compensate for the double taxation which it causes, by decreasing the rate. It will bring these parties up and compel them to pay their taxes.

SPEECH OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I propose to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma, because I feel it to be my duty to take the best that is offered. I can do this consistently, because I did not support the clause in section one, that taxation shall be equal and uniform. And I still insist that to be consistent, if this amendment is adopted, that part of section one must be stricken out. The gentleman from San Francisco insists that this provision is found in a majority of the Constitutions. I deny the proposition, sir. In an examination I find that only eleven of the States retain in their Constitutions the principle of equal taxation, while all the modern Constitutions have dropped the word "equal," and substituted the word "uniform."

Now, my idea briefly stated is this: that taxation should be laid upon all property in the State. As to debts, assess the amount which the individual has coming to him in excess of what he owes. I am content to make the offset in that way, but I am not willing to offset a debt against property. There may be some inequalities in this mode, but we must place the Assessors of this State in a different attitude from what they have been, otherwise by changes between individuals, shoving property back and forth, it would escape taxation. I am in favor of this system of taxation because it meets the demands of the people. The people have expressed themselves upon the question, and the poor depositors in the savings banks in San Francisco, who are to be so cruelly taxed, according to these gentlemen, have spoken in favor of it. The people have been oppressed by the escape of millions of property from taxation, and while the gentlemen upon the other side are deprecating double taxation so loudly, they might profitably consider the fact that these poor people have submitted to double taxation for years, by reason of the escape of all this property. These mortgages must be taxed. We want to declare here fairly and squarely that they are property, so that the Supreme Court cannot get around it. We want to settle that question by declaring that they are property and subject to taxation. This also declares in favor of exempting growing crops. I accept that because the people demand it. If I cannot get exactly what I want I will accept the best that is offered, and I believe that to be contained in the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma.

I am somewhat astonished at the hypercriticisms of some of the gentlemen. One says that "bonds" may include official bonds. Why, sir, an official bond has no value. If it has, it should be taxed. That is a term that is well understood. It is contained in many of the Constitutions which tax bonds and shares of capital stock. What we want is to establish a system of taxation that will be fair and just, and tax all property in the State. It is an indisputable fact that millions of dollars which have been produced in this State, and which have gone into these securities, escape taxation continually. Gentlemen say they are but bits of paper. Call them bits of paper, or what you please, but they are powerful enough to draw the money of the people into the vaults of the moneyed institutions of the country. Forty or fifty millions of the money of the people have been gathered in and put into this class of securities. This Convention will remember the assessing of mining stocks in San Francisco. The mining stock was not more than half the amount of church property. Nine hundred thousand dollars was the total amount assessed, and not more than one fourth of that was collected; and yet, sir, twice that amount changed hands in a single hour oftentimes. Is that fair and just? I say we can reach that property, and it is the duty of this Convention to reach it, and tax it for what it is worth.

MR. GREGG. How much mining property have you in San Francisco?

MR. BARBOUR. I do not know how much there is. There are millions. It is not all in the hands of the companies, it is in the hands of thousands of men.

MR. REDDY. Are you in favor of taxing corporate property, and then taxing the capital stock too?

MR. BARBOUR. No, sir; tax the stock at its market value.

MR. REDDY. I am perfectly willing to do that, but I say you should not tax both.

MR. BARBOUR. I do not suppose we will tax the value and the representative of that value in the same hands, but when it is in different hands——

MR. CROSS. Will you allow me to ask you a question?

MR. BARBOUR. No, sir; not you [laughter]. As I said, I want to lay this burden of taxation where it belongs. If the rich pay their taxes as they should do, there will be no cry of oppression from the producing classes, for all will be taxed alike, and the burden will be light.

SPEECH OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I am like most of the gentlemen who have spoken on this subject—the amendment does not quite come up to my idea of what it should be, but, sir, I am in favor now of what is known as the Moreland amendment, as against all others that have been presented before the Convention. I am instructed, so far as I am concerned, to vote for the taxation of mortgages, as they were taxed before the decision of the Supreme Court rendered their taxation a nullity; and the constituency which I represent are intelligent enough to comprehend that money loaned out at a high rate of interest on mortgage security, upon the real estate of the State, so that the money cannot be lost or thieved; so that it cannot be wiped out by fire or flood; so that it will stand when other property ceases to have value, is property that should be taxed. And I am here, in obedience to that opinion, to see that such property should be taxed. I believe it is property of the best kind, and ought to be taxed. As I understand it, property is that which has value, not that which is of utility—horses, cattle, hogs, land, and everything else—is property by reason of being valuable, not by reason of anything else. It is that which has value, and it makes no difference whether it is a horse or a piece of paper, if you can go into the market and sell it, the thing is of value. They are all equally protected by the laws of the country. I want this Convention to rebuke the Supreme Court of this State and declare that this is property, and as such must be taxed. It belongs to the legislative department of the government to declare what shall be taxed, and not to the Supreme Court. I want a provision in there that will stop the mouth of the Supreme Court, for that Court has become too uncertain upon that subject, starting with the twenty-second volume with one decision and winding up with the thirty-fourth with another and different decision. When it comes to a test case between money bags and the people, we have seen to our sorrow which way the decisions of the Supreme Court go. A mortgage, which has been described as only a piece of paper, is better than money, for money can be stolen from you or destroyed, but a mortgage never dies and cannot be stolen. Money can be sunk in the river or in the middle of the ocean, but a mortgage never. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

MR. HUESTIS. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section two, and amendments, are before the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I agree with one proposition which was advanced in argument yesterday, that the taxation must be upon property. Now, the question is, what is property? And here let me say, sir, what I observed the other day, that I regard this report, on the whole, as presenting very good provisions on the subject. The only objection that I find to it is this principle of rebate which it contains, and which I think, under all the authorities, is objectionable, because it leads to fraud and a loss of revenue, and I think the amendment which is accepted to the first section has not improved it at all. I think that the original section, as it stood, was better than it is now with the amendment.

But as to property. Gentlemen deny that credits are property. Upon what principle they make that denial, or upon what authority, I do not know. No well considered work on political economy has been produced which is not directly to the contrary. No work upon the common law, in relation to this subject, since the reign of Queen Anne, has failed to say that commercial paper is property. No adjudication of any Court, English or American, from that day to this, upon this subject, has failed to announce the principle that choses in action are property, and I challenge the production of any such proof. Now, sir, it is a little extraordinary that we forget our horn-book here so quickly, and the gentlemen rise here gravely, and, because we insist upon the doctrines of the common law and the decisions of the Courts, they charge us with ignorance, with stupidity, and with barbarism. Now, sir, it is a question of authority, and let us see how it stands. I refer, in the first instance, to Williams on Personal Property, page four:

"Choses in action, though valuable rights, had not in early times the ordinary incident of property, namely: the capability of being transferred; for, to permit a transfer of such a right was, in the simplicity of the times, thought to be too great an encouragement to litigation, and the attempt to make such a transfer involved the guilt of maintenance, or the maintaining of another person in his suit. It was impossible, however, that this simple state of things should long continue. Within the class of choses in action was comprised a right of growing importance, namely: that of suing for money due, which right is all that constitutes a debt. That a debt should be incapable of transfer, was obviously highly inconvenient in commercial transactions; and in early times the custom of merchants rendered debts secured by bills of exchange assignable by indorsement and delivery of the bills. But choses in action, not so secured, could only be sued for by the original creditor, or the person who first had the right of action. In process of time, however, an indirect method of assignment was discovered, the assignee being empowered to sue in the name of the assignor; and, in the reign of Henry VII, it was determined that a 'chose in action may be assigned over for lawful cause as a just debt, but not for maintenance, and that where a man is indebted to me in twenty pounds, and another owes him twenty pounds by bond, he may assign this bond and debt to me in satisfaction, and I may justify for suing it in the name of the other at my own costs.' Choses in action, having now become assignable, became an important kind of personal property; and their importance was increased by an Act of the following reign, whereby the taking of interest for money, which had previously been unlawful, was rendered legal to a limited extent."

MR. VAN VOORHIES. What are you reading from?

MR. HOWARD. Williams on Personal Property. Then, sir, the book goes on to state that by the statute of Anne choses in action were made assignable, and from that time to this they have been recognized as property in all treaties and all decisions in relation to the common law. Mr. Walker, in his work on American law, at page sixty-two says:

"The term of 'property' includes every valuable thing which can be made the subject of exclusive ownership, and the laws which regulate the acquisition, enjoyment, and disposition of it, form a large part of the laws of every society."

Chancellor Kent announces the same doctrine, that choses in action are property; and by the Courts everywhere they are treated as property, and it would be most extraordinary if that was not the case, for the largest part of the transactions of the country are evidenced by credits, or in other words, by choses in action, and I supposed that our State had set that question at rest, so far as we are concerned. The fourteenth section of the sixth subdivision of the Political Code declares:

"The words 'personal property' include money, goods, chattels, things in action, and evidences of debt."

So that it seems that Mr. Moreland, in using the term "evidences of debt," has only used the language of the Political Code. And yet gentlemen get up here and tell us that choses in action, credits, are not property, and they denounce our assertion that they are property, as stupid and as ignorant, in short. A celebrated Englishman said that his objection to Macauley was that he was always too cock-sure. I regret that I do not see the gentleman from San Francisco in his seat. If he were here I should say that in his argument upon this subject he had been somewhat too cock-sure, and the books do not bear him out. It is in violation of all the principles of law, and all commercial principles, in relation to this subject.

Now, sir, the gentleman says that certain things cannot be levied upon; certain things cannot be taxed. That is true. For instance, you cannot tax the genius of Bulwer or Dickens, but the English Government reaches it by levying an income tax upon the works, and each and every year's income. After the reënactment of the income tax of eighteen hundred and forty-two, by Sir Robert Peel, they were compelled to return the amount of the profits which they had reaped from their books and their genius; so that there are things that can be reached. For, although the genius of the author cannot be reached or taxed, yet an income tax is levied in England upon his works, because he is bound to render a faithful account, under oath, of all his income. Therefore it is certain that it is a mistake to say that everything which results in property cannot be taxed. It is taxed under a proper system of taxation. The gentleman instanced a variety of things which could not be reached by taxation. Those instances that he put are true enough, but they do not illustrate the principle. I will state one myself which I think illustrates it much better: A distinguished head of the New Orleans bar, whom Judge Story pronounced the greatest advocate in America, and whose income was large—but it was always scratched out of his pockets by the tiger—[laughter], owed everybody, and never paid anybody except at the end of an execution. On one occasion he won a large suit, and his clients sent him a present of a fine span of horses and a barouche. The advocate was in great difficulty, but he got into the barouche, invited a friend to drive with him, drove down the shell road, and at last up to the St. Louis Exchange for a drink. As the gentleman got out of his barouche, the Sheriff stepped up and levied on the horses for a debt. The advocate simply remarked: "Well, I have had one glorious ride and you can levy on them and be damned to you!" [Laughter.] But one thing was undisputed: this credit, this chose in action, brought the blood, and it takes Grimes' horse and carriage. So it is not so harmless a thing as the gentleman seems to suppose. It is a real, tangible thing. The gentleman says you can tax only tangible property, but here is tangible property.

Suppose, under the present law, you go to the United States treasury and you deposit your coin, and you take a certificate of deposit; it passes in the Custom House, it passes in commerce. You can go back to the treasury and get your money. Is not that tangible? Is he not able to touch the property which that instrument evidences? What is more tangible than that? Isn't it the same thing, only more convenient than it would be if you had the money in your hand? The gentleman says it is not property; it is a mere imagination, a sort of coloring in the mind; or, to use his own language, an anticipation. Well, I think it would be a tolerably lively anticipation if a man had one of those treasury certificates. It would not be so remote as the gentleman seems to suppose. Suppose a party brings a suit in an English Court in relation to money, and the adverse party comes in and says: "You have a twenty pound bank note of the Bank of England, which is a legal tender, and is to you so much gold." The party replies: "But it is not property; it is merely imagination; it is an anticipation." What answer would an English Court make to an advocate who rose upon the floor and made such a plea? Why, sir, they would pooh-pooh him out of Court. That is what would happen to him. He would be either considered a lunatic, or so far gone in stupidity as to be unworthy of his position. So of an exchequer bond and of an exchequer bill. Now, sir, is not a greenback property? It was not very much at one time, but latterly it is an equivalent of gold. Suppose I take my friend's greenback off his table, and he brings a suit against me for recovery of it, would I be heard to say, that is not property; that cannot be sued for. Why, it is a legal tender, it is the equivalent of so much gold. It is not only so much property, but so much property in gold. Under our statute it has been decided, in the case of Lazard vs. Wheeler, that detinue lies for a warrant issued by a County Treasurer, which his deputy got into his possession and transferred wrongfully. Although transferred and not in existence, they gave a judgment in detinue for the specific recovery of the warrant, or its equivalent in cash. The gentleman cannot look into a new book on the subject that does not tell him that detinue lies for a debt.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired under the rule.

[Cries of "Leave!" "Leave!"]

MR. HOWARD. Now, sir, I say there is no book of respectability but what says that choses in action are property. It is so said by Adam Smith; it is so said by Mr. Mill; it is so said by Walker; it is so said by every book on the subject, and there is no authority to the contrary. It is true, sir, that the Supreme Court of this State have said, or decided—that I believe is the last turn of the slate—in the case of the Hibernia Bank, that it was not property taxable under the peculiar language and phraseology of the Constitution of eighteen hundred and forty-nine. But the Court admitted in the argument—in the opinion—that in ordinary language, and in vulgar terms, it was property.

Now, sir, here we propose to remove all doubt upon the subject, by saying that it is property, and is to be taxed. We propose, then, by our action, if it is vulgar, to make it polite literature, in the immortal jurisprudence of this country. We propose to make it so plain that no Supreme Court that comes hereafter can dodge out of it. And, with all due respect to my friend from San Francisco, however ignorant he may esteem us, I think we have the better case, and it is our duty to so make the law in this Convention.

The next idea advanced in opposition to the amendment is that property must be taxed uniformly. The language is, that taxation shall be equal and uniform. It means that all mortgages shall be taxed alike, and that all other property in the same class shall be taxed alike. It was a provision of the section, and a good provision, as it originally stood, and it means nothing else. It means that there shall be no favoritism; no discrimination; no letting off of a party, merely because his property is in money, or in credits. That is the true meaning of it, because we have had abundance of instances of parties going untaxed. The gentleman from Solano, the other day, in his able speech, stated, and stated correctly, that one half of the property in this State goes untaxed. The principle is that all who receive the protection of the government, and all who enjoy the advantages of the government, should contribute to its support. Now, then, the gentleman from Solano instanced the insurance companies, which pay only one half of one per cent., as he estimates, and which therefore escape taxation nearly altogether. Now, sir, I wish to refer the Convention to an English work upon this subject, to show the duties on fire and marine insurance. It is a work by Mr. Levi, on taxation:

"The first duty upon insurance was a sixpenny stamp charged on the policy, without distinction between fire, life, and marine insurance, but the rate for fire insurance was afterwards increased at different times. In seventeen hundred and seventy-five the duty was six shillings on policies of all amounts below one thousand pounds sterling, and five shillings more on insurances of sums of one thousand pounds sterling and upwards. In seventeen hundred and seventy-two a percentage duty at the rate of one shilling and sixpence per one hundred pounds sterling was first imposed. This was afterwards increased, in seventeen hundred and ninety-eight, to two shillings per cent., and in eighteen hundred and four, whilst the policy duty was reduced to one shilling, the percentage duty increased to two shillings and sixpence per one hundred pounds sterling. The duty was further raised to three shillings per cent., in eighteen hundred and fifteen, and at this rate it has continued to this day."

And he goes on to say that the taxes collected by the British government from this source alone was between eight and nine million dollars. Now, sir, they tax credits. They tax profits. They make everything pay, either by a direct tax upon property or an income tax. I remember some months ago—and I have been trying to find the article—there was published in a San Francisco newspaper, during the excitement about the deposit banks, a statement of one of the savings banks, in which it was stated, if my memory serves me, that the capital stock was two hundred and thirty-seven thousand dollars, and the bank had received as deposits and loaned on mortgage seven million dollars capital. Now, sir, without seeking to comment upon the safety of that system of banking, let me ask, does not that statement show that this bank must be making large profits from the reception and loaning of this money? And is it not right that by an income tax, or by some other method, their profits should be reached? Is it not honest? Is it not fair? And, although the taxes upon the deposits, or rather upon the loans made, fall ultimately upon the depositor, primarily the bank pays them; and at all events the bank is liable to an assessment upon the profits which they make, which must be charged out of the reception and loaning of this money.

Why should a party be allowed to change his real estate in the State into State or municipal bonds and escape taxation? It is contrary to public policy; for the public policy of the country is that the funds of the country and money of the country should be kept in active productive business, as a matter of business interest and as a matter of justice on the subject of taxation. Now, there is not a piece of real estate in San Francisco that pays as much profits as the interest on State and municipal bonds. There is not a farm in the whole country that pays as much profits as the interest of these State and municipal bonds—not one. Why, then, should these parties be allowed to convert their property into State and municipal bonds to escape the burdens of government and their just contributions for its support?

Now, sir, take by way of illustration an anecdote that was told me the other day by a gentleman in Stockton. The Assessor went to him to get an assessment of his property. He says: "Well, I live here in this rented house. My furniture is worth about a thousand dollars; you may have it for a thousand dollars." So the Assessor puts it down for a thousand dollars. "Well," says the Assessor, "your money." "I have got a twenty-dollar piece." So the Assessor puts down the one thousand dollars for the furniture and twenty dollars money. The Assessor says: "Is this all the money you have? You have money at interest?" "True, I have ninety thousand dollars at interest, but that is not taxable, under the late decision of the Supreme Court, and I do not put it in." Therefore he escapes taxation on pretty near all his property, and makes no contribution to the support of the government which protects him, and whose Judges, and whose Sheriffs, and whose officers he must have in order to enable him to collect the interest on the money and the money itself which he has loaned out. It strikes me, sir, that such a system of taxation is monstrous, and there is no defense for it.

Now, sir, we propose here to make a law that will remedy this. I do not criticise the decision in the case of the Hibernia Bank. It may be good law, perhaps, under the old Constitution. I do not find it necessary to discuss that question; but I say we propose to make a different law, which will be just and honest, and we propose to so make it that we can hold the Courts to its execution.

But it is said here that the taxation of mortgages is double taxation. I deny it, sir. The money, if taxed to the creditor, is a single taxation, and the land, less the face of the mortgage, if taxed to the owner of the land, is single taxation. I read the other day, and I will read again, a paragraph from Professor Walker on that subject. It is headed "Taxation of Credits:"

"It has sometimes been maintained that credits ought not to be taxed, but all assessments be made upon values, or property, personal and real. Taxes, it has been argued, ought not to be laid upon persons, but upon that out of which they can alone be paid, viz.: property.

"But credits are taxed as well as values. A holds a farm worth ten thousand dollars, mortgaged to B for five thousand dollars. A pays taxes upon the whole valuation, and B upon five thousand dollars, as money at interest. A, it is said, is doubly taxed. This is a practical question that has puzzled legislators in every age and country. Let us, therefore, carefully examine it.

"Suppose A and B aforesaid form an entire community, and that the whole tax of one hundred and fifty dollars is imposed on property. The whole valuation will then be ten thousand dollars (A's farm), and the rate one and a half per cent., which A pays, and B goes untaxed. We will now change the principle, and have both property and credits taxed. The valuation will then be: A's farm, ten thousand dollars, and B's money at interest, five thousand dollars; total, fifteen thousand dollars; and, with the same amount to be assessed (one hundred and fifty dollars), the rate will be one per cent., of which A pays one hundred dollars, and B fifty dollars. So, then, we discover that A is not doubly taxed, as assumed, but at the worst pays only twenty-five dollars, or one third, more than his share. Such must, in principle, be the result of this kind of taxation, taking a whole community together. All the amount taxed upon credit is so much relief to taxation upon property. This seems to be clear; and the justice of the thing is established by the fact that A bought his farm knowing that it would be subject to a full taxation, and bought it cheaper, as we have shown in another place, on that account. B, on the other hand, accepted his mortgage on the same ground, knowing that it would be subject to tax on the common valuation. Is either party, then, wronged?

"But perhaps another reason may be given why A should pay taxes upon the whole value of his farm, viz.: that, having the usufruct of the whole, he is entitled to all the profits on the farm. 'But he don't own the whole of the farm.' True, that is his misfortune; if he did, he would obtain a larger amount of net profits; but his obligation to pay tax on the whole is not impaired, because he has the use of a part of B's capital. As the owner of the farm, A has a chance for all the profits that can be made from the whole, while, by the taxation of B on the mortgage, the former saves a part of what he would otherwise pay in taxes. One pays taxes for the profits of business; the other for the income on his capital.

"In the absence of the income tax principle, what can be more equitable and just than the practice of taxing both mortgagor and mortgagee? If the former were allowed to deduct from his inventory the amount he owed the latter, it would often happen that the mortgagee not living in the same town or State, so much property would escape taxation altogether."

And that is the objection I have to the rebate principle in the report of the majority of the committee.

"This in some communities, especially our Western States, would be a great evil. That much hardship may often result from taxing credits as well as property is undoubtedly true; but that only affords additional evidence that the income tax principle is the only correct one."

Now, it is a mistake—it is an entire mistake—and it cannot be demonstrated either legally or mathematically, that a tax of the money to the lender, and a tax of the property, less the amount of the money, to the owner of the property, is double taxation. I deny it altogether. It is not true. But if true, it is just.

It is argued also that the tax must be equal—must be uniform, and must be equal. Now, sir, absolute uniformity and absolute equality in taxation has been proved to be an impossibility. All that you can do is to approximate to it. It is a good general principle, but when you come to the practical working of the thing it is not possible, to an absolute mathematical demonstration. John Stuart Mill says:

"The proper sense to be put upon it, as we have seen in the preceding example, is, that people should be taxed, not in proportion to what they have, but to what they can afford to spend. It is no objection to this principle that we cannot apply it consistently to all cases. A person with a life income and precarious health, or who has many persons depending on his exertions, must if he wishes to provide for them after his death, be more rigidly economical than one who has a life income of equal amount, with a strong constitution, and few claims upon him: and if it be conceded that taxation cannot accommodate itself to these distinctions, it is argued that there is no use in attending to any distinctions, where the absolute amount of income is the same. But the difficulty of doing perfect justice, is no reason against doing as much as we can. Though it may be a hardship to an annuitant whose life is only worth five years' purchase, to be allowed no greater abatement than is granted to one whose life is worth twenty, it is better for him even so, than if neither of them were allowed any abatement at all.

"Before leaving the subject of equality of taxation, I must remark that there are cases in which exceptions may be made to it, consistently with that equal justice which is the groundwork of the rule."

That is the true principle. If we cannot arrive at absolute equality we get as near it as we can.

Now, sir, another objection is raised to the report and also to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland, that it taxes franchises. Now, sir, under all the authorities, franchises are held to be property. They are property separate and apart from the business itself. A franchise, the Supreme Court says, "is the privilege or right of association in a particular manner to accumulate property and make money. The grant of a corporate existence is the grant of special privileges to the corporators enabling them to accumulate property, free from individual liability." That is a franchise. It is a separate thing; separate from the property of the corporation; separate from the stock of the corporation; and under all the authorities it is rightfully taxed, and properly taxed. And, as was said here yesterday, in argument, a man may have a ferry franchise. His boat may not be worth a thousand dollars, but his franchise may be worth a thousand dollars a day. Therefore it is that by adopting the principle of the gentlemen upon the other side, you do not reach him at all if you tax nothing but his boat.

Again, sir, it is said that we ought not to tax both the franchise and the corporation. Well, sir, the Supreme Court of the United States has held that it is legitimate to tax the franchise; it is legitimate to tax the corporation as an entity; it is legitimate to tax the stock; it is legitimate to tax the net proceeds; it is legitimate to tax the profits. I read from the Delaware Railroad Case, 18 Wallace, 208, and shall read only the head notes:

"The State may impose taxes upon the corporation as an entity existing under its laws, as well as upon the capital stock of the corporation or its separate corporate property. And the manner in which its value shall be assessed and the rate of taxation, however arbitrary or capricious, are mere matters of legislative discretion.

"A tax upon a corporation may be proportioned to the income received, as well as to the value of the franchise granted or the property possessed.

"The fact that taxation increases the expenses attendant upon the use or possession of the thing taxed, of itself, constitutes no objection to its constitutionality.

"The exercise of the authority which every State possesses to tax its corporations and all their property, real and personal, and their franchises, and to graduate the tax upon the corporations according to their business or income, or the value of their property, when this is not done by discriminating against rights held in other States, and the tax is not on imports, or tonnage, or transportation to other States, cannot be regarded as conflicting with any constitutional power of Congress."

Is there not sense in that decision? The franchise is one thing, the capital stock is another thing, and unless the corporation is a humbug the books show the amount of money paid with which to commence business. The property of a corporation may be an entirely different thing, and is, in this State, because it consists mainly, or to a large extent, of lands outside of the corporated towns, granted by the Federal and State Governments to the railroads, in order to enable them to build them. It is therefore right that there should be a separate tax upon the franchise, a separate tax upon the capital stock, and a separate tax upon the property owned by the corporation, just as much as there should be a separate tax upon the property owned by an individual. These objections to this report are all sophistry. They have no solid foundation either in science or law. The gentleman from San Francisco said he was open to conviction. So am I, and I am quite anxious to be enlightened, but he will pardon me for suggesting that his attack upon the report and the amendments reminds me a good deal of a Mexican war: the pronunciamento is fierce, but the fight don't come off. There is no sympathy, there is no relation between the two things. Now, no doubt, as he seems to suggest, that a man's opinions may be somewhat influenced by the atmosphere in which he moves, the company he keeps, and the constituents whom he represents. Those of us who come from the pure air of the country districts are disposed to have justice done, and to have all men taxed alike upon their property, but those who live in a community of lenders, where the most influential persons are lenders, may have their views very much clouded. If his constituents are mainly money changers, and belong to that class of persons that Christ drove out of the temple, he may have very different views from those who come from the country.

MR. WILSON, of First District. As the borrowers always equal the lenders, there is no point to the argument.

MR. HOWARD. The borrowers are not mostly in the city. Suppose they were, is that any reason why the lenders should escape?

MR. WILSON, of First District. What point is there to the argument when I am living where there are more borrowers than lenders?

MR. HOWARD. The gentleman might as well ask me what relation there is between chalk and cheese.

MR. WILSON. I would if you would try to make them appear the same.

MR. HOWARD. You try to make a thing which is cash in your pocket, nothing.

MR. WILSON. No. You are dodging the proposition. You say I live in a community of money lenders. I only say to you that there are more borrowers in the community in which I live than lenders.

MR. HOWARD. What of it?

MR. WILSON. That answers your proposition completely.

MR. HOWARD. It is no answer at all. Suppose there are, does that prove that the lenders ought to rob the borrowers?

MR. WILSON. No. But it proves that I am not clouded by living in a community of lenders when there are more borrowers there than there are lenders.

MR. HOWARD. I was only speaking of the influence on your views of your surroundings. I do not say that you are quite as much controlled by the influence of the money changers as I am by the influences surrounding me.

MR. WILSON. I do not think that either of us are controlled upon this proposition.

MR. HOWARD. But I say that our opinions may be influenced by the opinions of our constituents, the men with whom we associate, and by our surroundings. It is a curious fact here that when an attempt is made to regulate and control corporations, gentlemen get up here and say you cannot do it because it is private property; but when you want to tax them for the purpose of forcing them to pay their due proportion towards the expenses of the Government, then it is said, "Oh, it is not property, and you cannot tax it, it is an imagination." It is somewhat singular but it so happens day after day in this hall. Now, sir, we ask for no injustice. We ask that all men, as provided for in this report, and these amendments, should contribute according to their means. It makes no difference whether it is done on the ground of protection, or as an exaction. As an exaction it is not right unless all contribute in proportion to their property.

Now, in relation to the remarks made by my friend from Inyo, Mr. Reddy, yesterday. I am inclined to agree with him, that there is injustice in the manner in which mining corporations and mining interests are taxed. My idea of a proper tax upon a mine would be an income tax, because, unless a mine produces, or as it is termed by the Mexicans, in bonanza, it is not property at all.

MR. REDDY. How do you like the Nevada system, where they tax the proceeds of the mine?

MR. HOWARD. That is the same thing. The proceeds then should be above the expenses. For instance, if you tax a railroad. A railroad has property, it has a franchise, it has a right of way, it has its rolling stock, its roadbed, its depots, and its other property, and, therefore, it is right to tax their property. But, if you put up expensive machinery on a mine and, to use a miner's phrase, the mine peters out, the property is valueless.

MR. GREGG. When it is taxed upon a franchise and taxed upon the mine, is it not double or even triple taxation?

MR. HOWARD. Not necessarily.

MR. GREGG. Inyo County raises half its taxes upon mines. One half of them are incorporated and have their principal place of business in San Francisco. Now, if you tax the franchise in San Francisco and the mine in Inyo is not that double taxation?

MR. HOWARD. No, sir; you are confounding the franchise with the stock of the mine. They are not the same. They are not treated, under any enlightened system of taxation, as the same. Now, I know that a friend of mine put up extensive works upon a mine. The machinery was of the most expensive character. He worked a little while, and found he had no mine; therefore his property was a dead loss. His franchise was nothing; his stock was nothing; his income was nothing, and even the machinery that he had there was comparatively of no value. Therefore it is, I say, that a mine should not be taxed unless it yields, and then it should be taxed by an income tax. If it yields well, the miner ought not to object, and will not object, to a reasonable income tax, or any other reasonable tax which reaches his property. I do not speak, sir, now, of one species of mining business which is carried on in this State. Legitimate mining is a great productive interest which ought to be encouraged; that is, a mine where parties combine and extract the bullion from the earth and bring it into commerce. But that is not the history of a large portion of the mining in San Francisco. I read some years ago, in Blackwood's Magazine, that a clerk in London hired a room, bought and sold, put a pen behind his ear, and levied contributions upon the world. But we have got ahead of John Bull, particularly in San Francisco. They find a fellow—we will call him Snooks—who tells somebody that he has seen some nice signs up in the mountains somewhere. They buy him some grub and a pick, and they send him up. He digs a hole in the ground, and reports that the thing looks rich. A company is incorporated, and stock is offered in the exchange for sale, although nothing has been discovered, actually, as yet, and nothing has been sent to market. Sharon and Jones patronize the hole in the ground, and presently the papers come out and say that Snooks has struck a perfect mountain of gold. The stock goes up. The drayman, the farmer, the milliners, the seamstresses, are running with all their little cash to put into this hole in the ground. It is worked on awhile, and there comes a report that the mine is filled with water; because, they say, good mines always do fill with water. Then it is necessary to have an assessment to pump out that water. Then it is stated that it is frozen up, but it will thaw out in the Spring, and it will be all right. But the Spring never comes, and in a few months the hole in the ground sinks into oblivion, and gives way to the next new swindle. Now, it would be no use to tax the capital stock, because it is nothing but lies, and a lien upon it would not be worth having. The stock probably has been sold upon a margin, at large prices enough to break a multitude of people. But my friend from San Francisco comes and tells us all these people are of age; you cannot wet-nurse these people; let them gamble on margins. But, sir, in this Convention we have endeavored to stop these sales and their gambling, and I think we will succeed.

I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland. At the proper time I shall move to strike out the words "evidences of indebtedness," so that it will read "for the purposes of taxation, bonds, notes, mortgages, solvent debts, franchises, and everything of value capable of transfer or ownership, shall be considered property." It seems to me that in the words "evidences of indebtedness" there is mere tautology; for when you tax bonds, notes, mortgages, solvent debts, franchises, and everything of value, you certainly tax evidences of indebtedness.

MR. EDGERTON. If you tax solvent debts, is not that taxing evidences of indebtedness?

MR. HOWARD. Yes. Any Court would hold it to be the same thing, but if you tax the debt I do not see any necessity of taxing the evidence of the debt.

MR. EDGERTON. If you tax the debt, why do you see any necessity for taxing the note?

MR. HOWARD. I propose to strike out "evidences of indebtedness," and then it is precisely the proposition of Mr. Boggs, except that that proposition provides that the State shall be a bookkeeper between the lender and the borrower, and that it shall make an official settlement between the two.

MR. SCHELL. Why not strike out mortgages?

MR. HOWARD. Because we want to have it in, to show that we decided here that mortgages are a legitimate subject of taxation.

MR. EDGERTON. Is not the mortgage a mere incident of the debt? What does it amount to in foreclosure? It is a mere incident of the debt. If you tax a debt, why do you tax the mortgage which is given to secure the debt?

MR. HOWARD. The mortgage is the debt, and means the debt, and nothing else. It is mere hypercriticism to say that it means anything else.

MR. EDGERTON. Did the gentleman ever hear any Court call the mortgage the debt?

MR. HOWARD. It is always called the debt.

MR. VAN VOORHIES. Is the evidence of indebtedness the mortgage or the note? Is the mortgage the debt, or the note the debt, which?

MR. HOWARD. Both. Both evidence the same thing. Taken together they constitute one debt.

MR. SCHELL. Do you propose to tax the mortgage and the debt which it secures separately?

MR. HOWARD. That is the report. The report is to tax the debt to the lender, and the property, less the amount the money loaned, to the owner.

MR. SCHELL. If you had a debt of one thousand dollars, do you propose to require the Assessor to assess that debt at one thousand dollars and then to assess the mortgage, as contradistinguished from that debt, again?

MR. HOWARD. I do not propose to assess it at all that way. The gentleman is confounding himself on his own conundrums. In that case the equity of the law would be to tax one half to the lender and one half to the owner of the property. That is the meaning of it.

MR. EDGERTON. Do you claim that the Moreland amendment allows any rebate under any circumstances?

MR. HOWARD. No; and that is the reason I support it. It allows no rebate.

MR. EDGERTON. You were understood to say that it did.

MR. HOWARD. I did not say so. That whole subject is provided for in your report on the subject of mortgages. It is all provided for there, and therefore it is not necessary to provide for it here.

MR. EDGERTON. Do you propose to adopt section five with the Moreland amendment?

MR. HOWARD. I propose to retain section five to the extent of taxing the land to one party and the loan to another.

MR. EDGERTON. Then you are right. Then you do admit the principle of rebate.

MR. HOWARD. No, sir.

MR. EDGERTON. That is the theory of section five.

MR. HOWARD. No, sir. It is the theory of section five that the lender should pay on the loan, and the owner of the property should pay on the property, less the amount of the mortgage.

MR. EDGERTON. That is not the Moreland amendment at all.

MR. HOWARD. In taxing mortgages you tax the money to the lender and the land to the owner of the land, less the amount of the mortgage.

MR. EDGERTON. Yes, certainly; but that is not the Moreland amendment. He taxes both.

MR. HOWARD. He does not do any such a thing. He does not supersede the part with reference to taxing mortgages. He is not dealing with the subject, but leaving it to the other section.

MR. EDGERTON. Then the gentleman supports section five. He would have section five retained with the Moreland amendment?

MR. HOWARD. Yes, to the extent which I have mentioned. I have not criticised it closely. I think that section five, so far as I recollect it, is right in principle:

"SEC. 5. A mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby. Except as to railroad and other quasi-public corporations, in case of debts so secured, the value of the property affected by such mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or obligation, less the value of such security, shall be assessed and taxed to the owner of the property, and the value of such security shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof, in the county in which the property affected thereby is situate."

That I support. That is perfectly consistent with Mr. Moreland's amendment.

MR. EDGERTON. I would be obliged to you if you would demonstrate it. Perhaps you don't want to perform that surgical operation on my head that was alluded to the other day.

MR. HOWARD. I do not see why the gentleman should contend that the Moreland amendment, which leaves untouched the fifth section, is inconsistent with the fifth section. If it was inconsistent, so as to obliterate the fifth section, then there would be some force in the position, but that is not the case. The whole idea is that the amount of money should be taxed to the lender, and the land, less the amount of the money, should be taxed to the owner of the property. That is the whole principle of the report, it is the whole principle of the amendment, and it is all that justice requires upon the subject. Therefore, it is, I say, that I shall vote for the Moreland amendment, and trust to getting any improvement upon it hereafter which may be necessary. I believe that the Moreland amendment is right in principle.

MR. EDGERTON. The gentleman from Los Angeles, and the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry, who is a distinguished lawyer and an ex-Justice of the Supreme Court, take an entirely different view of the Moreland amendment. The latter insisted that it did subject the credits to a tax, and in addition to that it subjected the mortgage to a tax.

MR. TERRY. I insisted that the mortgage was not the man's only remedy, because he had a lien upon all the property of the borrower, and all the property that he might acquire.

MR. EDGERTON. There is an illustration. The gentleman from San Joaquin takes one horn of the dilemma, and the gentleman from Los Angeles takes another.

MR. HOWARD. The gentleman is mistaken. The Supreme Court of the State decided, in the ninth volume of reports—the opinion by the learned gentleman from San Joaquin—that credits were property, and a part of the property of the county.

MR. EDGERTON. That is not the point I am making. The point I make is that you have got a double view of it. You do not agree upon it. It is dangerous because it is uncertain.

MR. HOWARD. We have got no double views whatever. There is no conflict between us who are supporting the Moreland amendment; and the gentleman will excuse me for saying that his point reminds me of what General Randolph said about the point of the gentleman from Rhode Island. He said it reminded him of a point in Delaware called Point No Point.

MR. EDGERTON. That is a good peroration to your speech.

MR. HOWARD. It shows there is no point in you anyhow.

REMARKS OF MR. WICKES.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: We all wish to arrive at a just system of taxation, such as will do justice to all. The legal definition of the word taxation given by Mr. Wilson was undoubtedly correct originally, but that meaning of the term has become obsolete. A tax now is an obligation. It has been dwelt upon here that the basis of obligation is protection. Now, government is instituted not alone for protection, but it is instituted in the interests of human progress. Its province is to secure protection to all, to promote industry and enterprise, to facilitate commerce and trade, to encourage literature, science, art, and religion. Here are higher interests to subserve. Now, that country is the best where wealth and intelligence are most generally distributed. Now, a system of taxation which makes the rich richer and the poor poorer should be avoided under our enlightened and republican form of government. We must adjust our system of taxation and our legislation to meet such issues and such disparity as may arise from one class becoming rich and another poor. All property should be taxed. Property now is that which in itself is something tangible, of tangible and material value. Property takes many disguises. If we follow property through all its ramifications we will find that one species of property generates another. I may have a fine growth of trees that are growing upon my land. That growth of trees may be taxed. The trees may be cut down and sawed into lumber and taxed again as lumber. The lumber may be built into a house and taxed again. Thus we can call it triple taxation. I will say here that none of the propositions fully meet my views. Mr. Moreland's proposition, I think, is too broad. Evidences only, that are properly secured, should be taxed. Take notes; there is a great difference in value. Some notes are not worth much, and other notes are as good as gold. Evidences of debt, properly secured, are as much property and have as much intrinsic value as the coin that bears the government stamp. I think Mr. Moreland's proposition is too sweeping, and covers too much. I am in favor of taxing evidences of indebtedness when they are properly secured. Mr. Hale's proposition is good, because it provides that a man should pay taxes upon what he really has. He should pay only upon property free from incumbrance.

Further, to meet the principle of the greatest good to the greatest number, and to distribute wealth as much as possible, I am in favor of a graded tax, or an income tax. Wealth is a reproductive power, and why should it not be taxed in a geometrical progression? A man that has ten thousand dollars has more than ten times the facility of the man that has but one thousand dollars. Mr. Peabody himself says that it cost him more effort to acquire his first ten thousand dollars than all his vast fortune afterwards.

I do not believe in taxing growing crops, but I do believe in taxing the grain when it is in the granery. I am not in favor of taxing the voluntary offerings of the people for charitable, educational, or religious purposes. I am not in favor of taxing institutions whose benefits are public. With regard to taxing educational institutions, it is a principle of our State that we should encourage education. I know you all agree with me that the educational system of the State, the common schools, should not be taxed; but I am not in favor of taxing private educational institutions, because they save the State a vast amount of money. I believe we have no right to tax the voluntary contributions of the people for religious purposes. The Christain church is the right arm of the government. I do not know how the State would do without it. I think that the church, in education, is at least of as much importance as the magistracy. A good government must rest upon an educated conscience as well as upon the accumulated property of the people. I say that the State should do nothing that would injure the church in any of its branches. It is the province of the State to strengthen the bond between the church and the State.

REMARKS OF MR. FREUD.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: It is not my intention to speak at length of the virtues and vices of the amendments now before the committee, but sir, I merely wish to say that I cannot, with any degree of consistency or with any shadow of reason, support the amendment offered by my young friend from Sonoma, in its present shape. Upon its face it is fair and inviting, but when thoroughly examined, it is, in a great many respects, monstrous and hideous. Now, sir, I wish to state to you a little piece of personal history in relation to the effects of this amendment. I had occasion, very recently, to renew a mortgage of some eight thousand dollars upon a piece of property in the City of San Francisco. That mortgage had been running at the rate of seven per cent., the banker now demanded eight per cent., and I asked him why? He said he had read of and expected the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution that would levy a tax upon mortgages, and upon the probability of the adoption of that amendment in the new Constitution he had raised the interest upon that mortgage one per cent. There, sir, is an example of the effects of this amendment. I am in favor of the taxation of mortgages, but I want the weight of that taxation to fall upon the mortgagee and not on the mortgagor. And that is what the granger element of the State wants, and all the borrowing portion of the population of this State wants. It is an outrage upon reason to think that any borrower would commend a mortgage tax if the weight of it would fall upon himself. The amendment upon its face is fair, but, sir, I believe that the men who to-day cheer you on in the hope that the weight of this taxation will fall upon the mortgagee, when they come to see, in paying their own interest and their own taxes, that it falls upon themselves, they will curse instead of praising those who vote for the amendment.

MR. MORELAND. Did the gentleman ever hear any complaint until the decision of the Supreme Court declaring that mortgages were not property?

MR. FREUD. Well, I do not see as that would affect the argument. I merely cited this as the effect.

MR. MORELAND. This simply restores the thing just as it was before that decision, nothing more nor less.

MR. FREUD. I have heard complaints, and I am willing to support an amendment so worded that the weight and burden of the matter will rest upon the man that loans the money.

MR. MORELAND. We propose to insert another section which prohibits the making of any contract, directly or indirectly, by which a debtor is obligated to pay the tax.

REMARKS OF MR. REED.

MR. REED. Mr. Chairman: I had not intended to have said anything on this subject, but the question has taken such a wide range, and there is such a diversity of opinion on the question, that I deem it proper to briefly give my views on this important matter as affecting the agricultural interests of this State. The question of taxation has seriously engaged the attention of the best writers on political economy for many years, such writers as Bastiat, Foster, David A. Wells, George W. Cuyler, and Edwin Dodge, and pronounced one of the most vexed questions that modern writers have to deal with; but all have agreed that no healthy system of revenue can be devised except based on real, tangible, property. The agriculturists of the country have felt aggrieved that, as a large class of borrowers, they have been compelled to pay more than their just share of taxation; and hence the general cry from the farmers that mortgages and evidences of indebtedness should be taxed. But I venture the assertion, at the risk of political ostracism, that the farmers, as a class, neither ask, desire, or expect any system to be devised that will, in effect, be double taxation, for they know full well that double taxation means increased rates of interest for them. Sir, I have been engaged in agricultural pursuits for over twenty-five years in this State, and my facilities, from official positions honored by the farmers, and intimate, close relations throughout the State, have given me abundant opportunities to study the condition of the agriculturists in this connection. By far the largest number of the farmers of this State commenced with comparatively but little money, and, owing to the variableness of the seasons, they have struggled hard from year to year, and necessarily have become borrowers, and I venture the statement, that during any one year nine tenths of the farmers are borrowers; i. e., that there are times in every year that nine tenths of the farmers are compelled to borrow; as during harvest season, purchasing sacks, paying hired help, before the grain can be sent to market. And I make this statement, without fear of contradiction, that there is no industry in this State less remunerative, and pays a higher rate of taxation, than agriculture, and I repeat it.

The property of the farmer cannot escape taxation; the property is real and tangible; the Assessor has the opportunity to see and examine it, and while this is true, knowing that agriculture is the basis of wealth, they naturally feel indignant when they go to the capitalist, compelled to borrow, that that man is a non-producer and non-taxpayer; and this has naturally aroused the people, the producing classes, throughout this State, and to that extent, my fellow-members, your existence here to-day is due. And the farmer knows full well that if the mortgage is taxed, and he is also taxed on the value of his farm, that he is compelled, by the exactions of the money lender, to pay both; for the lender will ask higher rate of interest to cover the taxes on the mortgage, and the actual result is that the borrower really pays a higher rate than he is now compelled to. And if any system can be devised by which the mortgagee and the mortgagor can share in the taxes on the property, I am satisfied that the agriculturists throughout the State will be perfectly satisfied; and of all the propositions thus far, the amendment of Mr. Hale strikes me as the best, and when digested, will give greater satisfaction to all classes than any hitherto offered. I regret that some members have apparently discovered an antagonism between the farmer and the miners. I am certain no such a desire exists, and would deprecate such a feeling.

As to taxation of growing crops, there is no principle of justice or fairness in it. It is not definite or tangible; it is a tax sought to be placed on his labor, industry, and energy; it is the same as an income: it is his income after paying his expenses, and the profits go into next year's assessment, as the farmer must invest it on his farm, as they rarely engage in outside speculations; hence it is really taxed the succeeding year, the same as the income of the lawyer, the physician, and other professions—many of whom realize large incomes but are not taxed—and the profits are invested is some productive property as an investment, and hence are taxed the succeeding year. Now, in conclusion, I appeal to those in this Convention engaged in agriculture, to pause well before they adopt any system that will create such friction between the borrower and the lender that double taxation will produce. And I really do not believe that the farmers of this State intend to tax mortgages in the sense as will be effected by the Moreland amendment. Although the popular cry throughout the agricultural districts has been, and now is: taxation of mortgages! arising, as I have heretofore said, from the fact that the farmers, having been taxed beyond endurance, and required to borrow money, are compelled to ask of him, the non-producer and non-taxpayer, assistance by way of a loan. This has well called forth this popular demand, and, sir, I deny that the farmers demand any system that will create double taxation; and when they investigate this amendment, I am fully satisfied I shall be substantiated in my assertions by the agriculturists throughout this State, and, therefore, sir, I prefer the amendment offered by Mr. Hale as a more satisfactory solution of this vexed question to any other that has been presented.

MR. HITCHCOCK. Would not the loaner, knowing that the tax would be deducted from the claim, require a higher rate of interest?

MR. REED. Under any proposition that is submitted or adopted, the farmer in the end will have to pay it any way.

MR. LARUE. According to the gentleman's argument, the farmer pays all the tax at present. By assessing mortgages you increase the assessment roll and decrease the rate. Suppose he has to pay it in the end, is he any worse off? Let us divide the thing a little.

MR. REED. That is my proposition. Let us divide it. He has to pay double according to the Moreland amendment. If I have a mortgage of ten thousand dollars on your property worth twenty thousand dollars, you are assessed twenty thousand dollars and I am assessed ten thousand dollars, and you have to pay it all.

MR. LARUE. There is only a certain amount of money to be raised, and you say the farmer has to pay it anyhow.

SPEECH OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I have been requested by one or two of the committee to make a statement in regard to section two. The section reads as follows:

I am informed that there is an impression resting upon the minds of many members of the Convention, that the object of that section is to deduct the indebtedness that a person owes from the entire property subject to taxation. I have already stated that there is a misprint in the printed report, but that, there can be no doubt, according to the original report, means that the indebtedness shall be deducted from the solvent debts. Now, sir, the author of that part of the report introduced it originally in the form in which it stands, except that it was in one sentence, "solvent debts deducting therefrom debts due to bona fide residents of this State." There never has been any doubt what that meant, and that it meant deducting the indebtedness from the debt.

I propose, if we should ever come to a vote upon that subject, to offer an amendment, which shall read as follows: "All property, including franchises, capital stock of corporations or joint stock associations, and solvent debts, deducting from such debts indebtedness due to bona fide residents," etc., so that there would be no question; and there would be no reduction of indebtedness from the other property owned by the person to be taxed. I desire to say a word or two further in answer to the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, and that is with regard to this Moreland amendment. There can be no doubt about this, that it imposes a tax upon the credit to the extent of the value of the credit, and that in addition to that it imposes a tax upon the entire property. There can be no doubt about it, and the author of this amendment expressly said that that was one of its cardinal principles, and that it was because it did propose that system of taxation that he supported it; and he made the antithesis clearly that this did not allow any rebate, whereas sections two and five did. That was the view taken by the distinguished gentleman from San Joaquin, and every gentleman here, until the gentleman from Los Angeles spoke. Now, sir, it is dangerous to adopt a proposition when two lawyers of admitted ability and eminence, like the gentleman from Los Angeles and the gentleman from San Joaquin, take these two opposite views upon it. Is it safe for this Convention to adopt it? And another thing which I cannot understand at all, is this: I do not see how the gentleman from Los Angeles arrives at the conclusion that there is no conflict between section five and this Moreland amendment. One word more. I understood my friend General Howard to say that he had no criticism to pass upon the opinion of the Supreme Court in the Hibernia Bank case; that he had no fault to find with the law of that case.

MR. HOWARD. I said that I did not make any criticism upon that case because the proposition would render another such decision impossible.

MR. EDGERTON. I say that the Moreland amendment does not help the gentleman at all. It will leave the Supreme Court in the same relation with the Hibernia Bank case. We have started with the general declaration that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State. That has been agreed to. Then everybody here has agreed to the declaration that all property in this State shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law. These two propositions everybody has agreed to. Then you go on and declare that solvent debts shall be taxed. Now, that is just the precise case of the Hibernia Bank. They undertook to tax the solvent debts, and the Supreme Court held in the case of the Hibernia Bank that that could not be done, because solvent debts, credits, bonds, and mortgages, could not be assessed. They would not be capable of definite assessment by any rule of equal and uniform taxation with other property.

MR. HOWARD. Did not the Courts say in that case——

MR. EDGERTON. I am coming to it.

MR. HOWARD. They say that credits are property, but they are not property for taxation under the Constitution of eighteen hundred and forty-nine.

MR. EDGERTON. I will make my point so plain that even the gentleman from Los Angeles cannot misunderstand it.

MR. HOWARD. Suppose we say that credits are property in the Moreland amendment, adopt the fifth section and let both provisions stand together.

MR. EDGERTON. I do not know what somebody else is about to add to the amendment. I am talking of the amendment as it now stands. I understand that the Moreland amendment is not now open to amendment.

MR. HOWARD. I take the Moreland amendment to be a supplement to the fifth section.

MR. EDGERTON. Now, let us see. The Supreme Court, Justice McKinstry delivering the opinion, in the Hibernia Bank case, 51 Cal. 245, says:

"That causes of action are dependent on too many contingencies to be capable of appraisement which shall accord with any rule of equality or uniformity of value, is too plain for argument."

Then he goes on to say:

"The Constitution provides that no property, as property, shall be taxed, except such as is capable of a valuation by the Assessors, which shall be ratably equal and uniform with that affixed to all other property."

And again, construing the very terms of the Constitution which we all agree to adopt:

"The thirteenth section of article eleven of the Constitution requires that each article of property capable of valuation, shall be fixed or estimated, and the owner thereof made to pay a sum which shall bear the same proportion to the whole amount levied as does the value of the particular property to the aggregate value of all the property in the State or tax district. Under our Constitution, therefore, the subject of taxation is the sum of all the values."

Then he goes on to say that the very idea of taxing these credits, bonds, and mortgages, under the provisions of the Constitution which says that "taxes shall be equal and uniform throughout the State, and that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law," would involve a contradiction in the Constitution, and that is just what you propose, by the Moreland amendment, to write into the Constitution of this State, and leave the Court to declare that it is idle to undertake such taxation:

"The Constitution, in its application to the various departments of the Government, and to individual rights, must receive such a construction as to give it a practical operation. There would be a contradiction in the single section of the Constitution if it were construed as requiring that all property should be taxed equally and uniformly with reference to its value, and that the word 'property' includes those things practically incapable of an appraisement bearing any definite relation or proportion to other things or property."

That is just what you are attempting to do. You propose to write, in express words, the unmistakable and flat contradiction which is pointed out here, and made as clear as the noonday sun, which nobody can answer, and nobody has attempted to answer. Though I have once or twice before called the attention of the committee to it, no gentleman has seen fit to allude to it. Now, sir, am I not right? Suppose you had the present Supreme Court to decide upon a case under this amendment, as you propose it? They would say, all you have accomplished is written in the Constitution—the very contradiction which we pointed out in The People vs. Hibernia Bank—and it cannot be sustained. Nobody has cast any slur on the Supreme Court; that is, they say they do not; but it is perfectly evident that they are trying to get around that Court. No man on this floor stands higher for integrity, and no man ever breathed the breath of life more unapproachable than Justice McKinstry, who wrote that opinion. He is a sound and an able lawyer, and everybody admits it. He has had an experience of a quarter of a century upon the bench. I would like to see some gentleman before the Supreme Court with this Moreland amendment in the Constitution. He would be told: "All you have done is to write in the Constitution the very contradiction that we pointed out in the case of The People vs. The Hibernia Bank."

MR. BLACKMER. If this Constitution, after saying that taxation shall be equal and uniform, should then go on and say that mortgages should be taxed, do you mean to say that the Supreme Court would again decide that mortgages could not be taxed?

MR. EDGERTON. I mean to say that the Supreme Court has said if the present Constitution contained that it would be a contradiction, and you propose to put it into the Constitution.

MR. TERRY. Do you mean to say that the hypothesis of the Court is the judgment of that Court?

MR. EDGERTON. I say it is the ground of the decision. It is the reasons upon which the Court based their opinion. These things are not capable of appraisement, and by putting it into the Constitution it would be a contradiction. You might elect Judges perhaps who would take a different view. Men may argue around it, but when we come to take cold law, no gentleman, in my judgment, can escape the conclusion which I point out. The gentleman from San Joaquin was very much puzzled the other day, and did not acquit himself with his usual success when he was pressed upon the subject of double taxation. I say that no man has yet answered the assertion, that this amendment calls for double taxation and of the most odious form. And these gentlemen from San Francisco, who represent the workingmen, the poor people in San Francisco, how in the name of God they can support this amendment I cannot see; when their platform commands them to support a proposition for taxation which admits of a rebate. I read it for the consideration of those gentlemen. It is the twenty-fourth article in their platform:

"No person shall be taxed for that which he does not own; in other words, debts due by the person assessed should be deducted from the assessable value of his property, and should be assessed against the person to whom they are payable."

MR. MORELAND. Now read the seventh plank.

MR. EDGERTON. "Money, mortgages, and bonds must be taxed"—Yes. [Laughter.] When gentlemen have got through with their mirthful demonstrations I will proceed. I say I am talking to the San Francisco Workingmen. When you say a man should be taxed according to what he owns, it means the principle of rebate upon which section two is based, and it means nothing else. And that is what many of your representatives say—and I was about to say your recognized leader; but there seems to be some controversy as to who is the leader. I supposed in the first place it was Dennis Kearney. Then I thought it was Mr. Reynolds. Then it appeared for awhile to be Mr. Barbour. Then I thought that my friend from El Dorado, Mr. Larkin, was going to loom up, until I find that my distinguished friend from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry, is the boss of the Workingmen's Party. [Laughter.] Now, sir, you talk about platforms and instructions. The Workingmen's Party on this floor is under an obligation; it is under an instruction. If there is anything binding in platforms they are bound to support the report of this committee in some form. Now, sir, I have heard a statement to-day that bears out with the utmost force what I said the other day, coming from my friend from San Francisco, Mr. Freud, and I cannot understand why such declarations will not convince members here. The gentleman gives an instance under his own knowledge where a mortgage was held upon a piece of property, and he was paying seven per cent. interest. He goes and wants it renewed, and they immediately raise the rate in anticipation of what you are doing here, in view of the very attempt at double taxation, in view of the very suggestion of taxing mortgages. What is the effect? How sensitive this thing of capital is. Up it goes, and they will not renew it now short of one per cent. advance.

MR. TERRY. It might have been demanded for the purpose of frightening somebody.

MR. EDGERTON. That won't do. My friend Dr. Shurtleff has just been home, and he brings back the information that they are printing their forms for mortgages and notes already, in view of what you are doing here, so as to add the burdens you propose to impose here upon the contracts that they make with the borrowing class.

MR. ESTEE. In some of the savings banks they are making loans only on trust deeds, and with provisions for no notes at all.

MR. EDGERTON. Take this amendment in connection with section six, which is as follows:

"SEC. 6. Every contract hereafter made, by which a debtor is obligated to pay any tax or assessment on money loaned, or on any mortgage, deed of trust, or other lien, shall, as to any interest specified therein, and as to such tax or assessment, be null and void."

Now, how idle it is for anybody who has ever had any experience in these matters, to talk about printing any section in any law or in any Constitution, to govern this subject.

MR. MORELAND. Did not the gentleman report that as Chairman of the committee?

MR. EDGERTON. I dissented from it.

MR. MORELAND. I do not dissent from it.

MR. EDGERTON. You never dissent from anything. This is the proposition of Mr. Laine, of Santa Clara. I am opposed to writing sections into a Constitution, or into a law, that will lose their prestige or authority, or will never get any prestige or authority; and the ability of man has never yet invented any law by which you could prevent people from paying any amount of interest they have a mind to agree upon. How easy it would be for a savings bank to avoid this. Mr. Moreland goes to a savings bank in San Francisco and wants to borrow twenty thousand dollars. They say: "All right; but there are taxes to pay, and you must pay them." "But the Constitution says that any contract we make would be void." "That is all right. You go and give my attorney a bonus in advance, and you can have the money." There are ways enough to avoid it. It is idle to rely upon it. They have had a usury law in New York during this whole century, yet interest runs all the way from three per cent. to fifteen, sixteen, seventeen, and eighteen per cent., the same as here. I assert that interest in California is cheaper than it is in any State in this Union. You can get money in this State cheaper than in any State in this Union. You can get any amount, on good security, at seven per cent. or eight per cent.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. I have been a borrower to a considerable amount, and I believe the security furnished is good, but ten per cent. is the best I can get.

MR. WHITE. It is one and a quarter per cent. a month, compounded every three months, in my county.

MR. EDGERTON. The quicker you get out of that neighborhood the better for you.

MR. TERRY. I know a prominent banker who has made his money by borrowing in New York at four per cent. and loaning it here for twelve and fifteen per cent.

MR. EDGERTON. When did he tell you that?

MR. BOGGS. I am informed that one bank lately loaned two hundred thousand dollars at seven per cent.

MR. MCCALLUM. I will state that the Hibernia Bank has had a standing advertisement in the papers offering to loan sums of thirty thousand dollars and upwards, on city property, at seven per cent.

MR. GRACE. Is that on Convention scrip—seven per cent.? [Laughter.]

MR. EDGERTON. There is a very great difference in loans. The gentleman from San Joaquin talks about twelve and fifteen per cent. There is a very great difference between call loans and loans secured by a mortgage on real property. My friend from Butte asked me if the Hibernia Bank makes these loans outside of the city. I saw a statement in the Bulletin not many days since, that they were loaning money outside of the city.

MR. MCCALLUM. I understand not. Not even in Oakland.

MR. EDGERTON. I certainly saw the statement that some of the banks in San Francisco had departed from that rule and were now loaning money in the country in some instances.

MR. MCCALLUM. The regular rate in Oakland is ten per cent.

MR. EDGERTON. Judge Schell says there are several loans in his county as low as ten per cent.

MR. WEBSTER. I borrowed some money on property in Oakland from San Francisco, for eight per cent for one year.

MR. EDGERTON. There cannot be any escape from this conclusion, that the more you relieve capital from these burdens, the lower the rate of interest will be. Every tax you put upon capital is bound to be paid by the borrower, as Chief Justice Wallace says, in his opinion in the Hibernia Bank case, no matter in what shape it is imposed, as the borrower is bound to find out it has got to be paid by him. Now, I never heard anybody deny that mortgages were property in one sense. It is admitted.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Wilson did. He denied that any credits were property.

MR. EDGERTON. I do not understand so. The Justice, in the Hibernia Bank case, admits that it is property in the vulgar and technical sense, but the question is whether we should treat them as property for the purposes of taxation, and I say no.

MR. HEISKELL. I would like to ask Judge Schell if the money he refers to was loaned to individuals or to the banks.

MR. SCHELL. Loaned to individuals, sir, in a good many instances that I know of, and even as low as eight per cent.

MR. EDGERTON. I do not profess to be a financier, and until I came to this Convention, my reading on the subject had been exceedingly limited. I had read in days gone by, what John Stuart Mill had to say, and the works of some great political economists on the subject of taxation; but I assert unhesitatingly, that my friend, General Howard, cannot produce a respectable authority on the other side of the Atlantic in the last fifty years, that has advocated the tax of personal property directly.

MR. HOWARD. They reach it there by an income tax.

MR. EDGERTON. They go to the land and tax a man according to its rental value. They do not tax his property in this way there. They used to, sir, but for the last hundred years they have not done it. In the report of the New York Commission, they point out a system in England, Belgium, and France, where they have abandoned the whole thing after experimenting upon it since the time of Henry VIII. Tax them on what they make, but do not tax this intangible thing of a debt which comes back on the borrower. You tax the money where you find it. Now, sir, this Moreland amendment seems to me to be full of these difficulties. Gentlemen make a very great mistake in attempting to arrive at the result which they seek to reach, through the medium of such an amendment as that, and I challenge anybody to take the rule laid down by the Supreme Court in the case of The People vs. Hibernia Bank, fifty-first California, and controvert the position that the Supreme Court would have to ignore it, because you would have adopted the very contradiction pointed out in that decision.

MR. HOWARD. What force has that if you make a new law?

MR. EDGERTON. You will have to abandon the two propositions which are adopted, or rather the first proposition, that taxation shall be equal and uniform throughout the State, and the first part of the Moreland amendment, which provides that all property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law. You have got to abandon these two propositions in order to sustain the remainder of the Moreland amendment.

MR. MORELAND. Judge Campbell raised that very point about equality and uniformity the other day, and the gentleman denied it.

MR. EDGERTON. I said that the principle of the Hibernia Bank case was, that they were not subject to taxation, because they could not be assessed by any rule which would agree with that rule by which you assess other property; and, notwithstanding that you incorporate this provision in the Constitution, it cannot be affected, because the Supreme Court say:

"* * * No property, as property, shall be taxed, except such as is capable of a valuation by the Assessors, which shall be ratably equal and uniform with that affixed to all other property."

If the gentleman will give me his attention for one moment I will read it again:

"There would be a contradiction in the single section of the Constitution if it were construed as requiring that all property should be taxed equally and uniformly with reference to its value, and that the word 'property' includes those things practically incapable of an appraisement bearing any definite relation or proportion to other things or property."

I say again, that this Supreme Court, as now organized, would be compelled, unless they went back on their decision in the case of The People vs. The Hibernia Bank, to say that the amendment of Mr. Moreland contained an indisputable clause which worked its destruction.

MR. PULLIAM. Was there not general dissatisfaction throughout the country on account of that decision—that the Supreme Court had used favor?

MR. EDGERTON. Yes, Mr. Chairman; but I know that the gentleman has too high intelligence himself to attempt to countenance any such talk on this floor.

MR. PULLIAM. I do not believe it myself.

MR. EDGERTON. It has nothing to do with the question. As I said the other day, I deny that the people demand this kind of taxation; and I repeat, that the history of legislation in this State shows that they do not demand it; that the farthest they have ever claimed in this State has been taxation subject to reduction in some form. That is what the people of this State have always demanded. Nobody undertakes to deny that.

Now, so far as I am personally concerned, as to the amendment before this body, I believe that the amendment of the gentleman from Lake is the best proposition that has been submitted here, so far as these credits are to be listed by the Assessor and the Collector at all; but, at the same time, to be entirely frank upon the subject, I do not think that will amount to much, because the whole thing will be remanded to adjustment between the debtor and the creditor.

MR. HALE. Yes, sir.

MR. EDGERTON. It seems to me that is the proper place to leave it, if it is to be left anywhere.

MR. HALE. So far as section two is concerned, it remands that question to the creditor and the debtor, in this sense: that in the absence of any special contract the law fixes the rule of rebate. Of course there will be those who are favorable to the adoption of this section six. That is independent.

MR. EDGERTON. I want to know if there is any gentleman in this Convention who has any idea that he can go to a money lender and borrow money except upon certain terms agreed upon between him and the lender? And after they had agreed upon certain terms, is there a gentleman in this Convention who would countenance their violation? Talk about Constitutions and laws! What would such a law amount to among men of honor?

MR. MCCALLUM. If all men were honest and honorable, what need would there be of any Constitution or laws?

MR. EDGERTON. That requires some consideration. I refer you to my friend from Los Angeles, General Howard.

MR. HOWARD. My friend has provided for it in his report, by declaring that all contracts which compel the borrower to pay the tax shall be void.

MR. EDGERTON. I stated that I opposed that in committee, and I oppose it here.

MR. HOWARD. I thought you was the father of this report.

MR. EDGERTON. I am the father of very little in this report. I am the father of all that is good, and nothing that is bad. If the amendment is adopted you will have to strike out section two and section five, because the theory is, that it treats the mortgage, or the lien, or the trust deed, as an interest in the thing which is affected, and the mortgage, or the lien, or the deed. It then subjects the property to the tax, the property being all the amount of the assessment less the value of the debt. It then provides that the owner of the property may pay the entire tax, or the creditor may pay the entire tax. Either party may pay the tax. If the mortgagee pays it, it becomes a part of the debt secured. If the debtor pays it, he is allowed so much as a set-off. It is rebate, and nothing but rebate, whereas the Moreland amendment admits of no rebate at all. Section two and section five will have to go out of the report, if the Moreland amendment is adopted. I did not hear the speech of my friend from Trinity, but I have read a report of his remarks, and he takes a very singular ground. What surprises me is, that having understood it as he does, and as I do, he can find it in his constitutional conscience to support it, because he squarely says that he supports it because it is double taxation, and because it imposes the burdens of that tax upon the borrowing classes, and upon nobody else.

MR. TINNIN. I said, Mr. Chairman, that I acknowledged it was double taxation; that the Moreland amendment would admit double taxation, but that in doing so, it would raise the assessment roll so much, and take in so much property that entirely escapes taxation now, that the burden of taxation would be reduced upon these persons, and in the end they would pay less than they do at present.

MR. EDGERTON. Let us see what the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin, did really say, and newspapers never lie:

"Mr. Tinnin spoke in favor of the Moreland amendment. He did not agree with it entirely, but he hoped that the farmers would yet decide to allow themselves to be taxed the same as the miners, and not ask to be exempted from their just portion of the burdens of the State. He knew that the proposition would cause double taxation, and it would fall mainly upon the poor people, but he would support it because it would bring upon the tax list two or three millions of property in San Francisco which had hitherto escaped taxation, and thus reduce the rate of taxation."

I hope, for the future prospects of the gentleman, that the Record-Union does not circulate in Trinity County.

MR. TINNIN. That is a condensed report of my remarks, and does not bear me out entirely in what I said.

MR. EDGERTON. I do not see much difference. I hope that the Moreland amendment will be voted down. It will be a source of difficulty whenever it is submitted to litigation, as it assuredly would be.

SPEECH OF MR. MORELAND.

MR. MORELAND. Mr. Chairman: The opposition which my proposition has encountered in this Convention has been no surprise to me. I expected, sir, that it would encounter opposition, and that opposition has come from the very parties whom I expected to oppose it. It is entitled to opposition, sir. Now, Mr. Chairman, I was going to say this proposition puts in issue the whole question of taxation between the people and the parasites. Now, sir, this proposition is no new thing, and I claim no particular credit for introducing it. The effect of it will be simply to reëstablish the system of taxation that was in vogue in this State before the decision of the Supreme Court that has been so often referred to during this debate. And, sir, I hold that system ought to be reënacted and perpetuated in this State. I hold that the people were satisfied with that system, and that the dissatisfaction arose after this decision had been rendered; and, sir, no amount of ridicule, no amount of sophistry, no amount of quibbling, no amount of special pleading, no amount of denunciation shall swerve me from its support. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, in a set speech, yesterday, in which he occupied about one hour and a quarter in telling us what he was opposed to, and about one minute and a quarter in telling us what he was in favor of, criticised the proposition because, in his opinion, it was not perfect. Now, Mr. Chairman, the supporters of this proposition never claimed that it was perfect. Mortal man has never conceived, and mortal hand has never penned a paragraph so perfect as

"Whoever thinks a perfect work to see, Thinks what ne'er was, ne'er is, and ne'er can be."

And, sir, if the gentleman wants to see perfection, he had better put on his white robe and ascend. When he gets up there among the angels, with a crown upon his head and a palm leaf in his hand, probably he may find perfection; but here on earth, never! never!

MR. EDGERTON. Except in this Convention.

MR. MORELAND. I do not think that the imperfection of this amendment is what alarms these gentlemen so much as the very perfection of it. It aims to reach, and it does reach, the Shylocks of this State, and it aims to make them come up at the proper time and interview the Assessor, and to give in their property; and it aims to make them also come up at the proper time and interview the Collector and pay their taxes; and it is perfect enough to accomplish this object. Now, sir, the gentleman from Sacramento the other day in his remarks endeavored to belittle and ridicule this proposition, because it came from a member who has not heretofore taken a very active part in the proceedings of this Convention, and who he insinuates——

MR. EDGERTON. You are mistaken about that. I used no such language.

MR. MORELAND. You insinuated that I came from a remote and sparsely settled portion of the State. When I look at the gentleman and see the silver hairs among the gold, it admonishes me that he has already reached if not passed the meridian of life. I know that he has the advantage of myself in age and experience. I admit that he has sat at the feet of the modern political Gamalians for years. He has had better opportunities than myself for acquiring a knowledge of the ins and outs of modern legislation. I admit, sir, that he lives at the Hub of the State; I admit he resides in a city that was once the home of Max Marcuse, and Samuel Poorman, and Tom Lawton; I admit that he lives in a city which is now and has been for years past the abiding place of Anderson and Troy Dye. [Laughter.] I place him, sir, far above and beyond my humble self; but my life, however short, has been not altogether uncheckered by those scenes through which we must all at some time pass. I have learned some things, sir, the memory of which only death can efface. I have learned, sir, not to gauge or criticise a proposition by ridiculing its author. I have learned, sir, that the truth is the truth, though it be uttered by a beggar. I have learned, sir, that falsehood is falsehood, though it fall from the lips of a king. Now, sir, this sneering at the humble origin of the proposition is no new thing. The gentleman does not deserve a patent for it. More than eighteen hundred years ago it was a mooted question among the pharisees of that day whether or not any good thing could come out of Nazareth; and yet, sir, some good things did come out of Nazareth, and the mild teachings of the gentle Nazarene have continued to influence mankind from that day to this, and will continue until time shall be no more.

Again, sir, I repel the insinuation that I come from a remote and sparsely settled portion of this State. The county that I have the honor in part to represent is situate nearer the metropolis than that in which the gentleman lives. It has five members upon the floor of this Convention. It has a population of more than thirty-five thousand of as sober, industrious, and virtuous people as are found within the boundaries of this State. It pays upon an assessed valuation of property under the present arbitrary, tyrannical, and vicious system of taxation, which the gentleman says that he wants to see perpetuated in this State, of seventeen million dollars.

Now, sir, the criticism which the gentleman passed upon the proposition itself was, that if it were adopted and incorporated in the Constitution of this State, it would have a tendency to make the people of this State a community of liars. Sir, I deny the assertion. But, sir, admitting that it were so; admitting that it would have a tendency to make the people of this State a community of liars; I submit that the adoption of sections two and five, as embodied in the report of this committee, would make every man in this State an Ananias in less than two years. Under this proposition he could pile up fictitious indebtedness against property until there would not be twenty-five cents worth of taxable property in the State.

MR. EDGERTON. That is what they have been doing for twenty years.

MR. MORELAND. I warn gentlemen that this projected system of rebate of credits, if adopted in this Convention and incorporated in the Constitution, will prove a delusion and a snare. The people of the State of Oregon had almost exactly the same system. They tried it for themselves; they weighed it in the balance, they found it wanting, and they have spewed it out of their mouths. Now, sir, I do not consider it necessary to restate all the arguments that have been used in support of this proposition, or to attempt to traverse all those which have been used against it. I do not think it necessary to restate all these arguments. The Convention is weary, the subject has been exhausted, and therefore I shall not continue to argue that part of the subject.

In conclusion, I will say that it was an understanding between many of the members of this Convention from the interior counties of this State, that if they were elected to this Convention they would use their best endeavors to have the species of property taxed which is mentioned in that amendment. That was the understanding between these members now around me and their constituents, either implied or expressed by speeches, by pledges, or by platforms. Now, sir, as the gentleman has seen fit to read from platforms here I propose to read a little from platforms also, and see how we stand on that subject. I read from the platform which was adopted in Butte County—adopted by the level headed constituents of my friends Pulliam, Boucher, Biggs, and Chapman. We will see what they say, and this is only a specimen of the platforms that were adopted in almost all of the interior counties of this State:

"Resolved, That we are in favor of that system of taxation which shall be equal and uniform. That notes, mortgages, bonds, and choses in action, should be regarded as property, and bear their just proportion of taxation, etc."

That is from Butte County; from the platform of the Non-partisans. Now, I propose to read from the platform of the Workingmen of San Francisco, and I will read first section seven:

"Money, mortgages, and bonds must be taxed."

I now read from section nine:

"The legislator who violates his pledges given to secure his election should be punished as a felon."

MR. REYNOLDS. Now read section twenty-four. Will the gentleman read section twenty-four?

MR MORELAND. It simply provides for offsets like this amendment over here does.

[Cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

MR. MORELAND (reading). "No person should be taxed for that which he does not own; in other words, debts due by the person assessed should be deducted from the assessable value of his property, and should be assessed against the person to whom they are payable."

Now, sir, I know that that looks like an apple to the eye, but it will prove to be the bitterest of ashes to the taste.

MR. WHITE. Allow me to ask a question?

MR. MORELAND. Not at present, if you please. Now, sir, I want to see in this supreme moment in the history of this State, whether pledges are given only to be broken. I want to see who intend to stand by their pledges, and who intend to abandon them. I want to know, sir, whether platforms are made simply to catch votes. I know that it is very easy to promise; I know that it is sometimes hard to perform. "Faith without works is dead." Let us to-day prove our faith by our works. Adopt this amendment, and the people of this State will say: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant."

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have directed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

NEW RULE.

MR. CROSS. Mr. President: On yesterday I gave notice that to-day I would move an additional standing rule for the government of this body. This is made necessary by reason of the state of our business, when gentlemen sometimes call for the previous question before the house is ready to sustain it. When this is done, and the previous question is voted down, the section goes over for one day. That has caused some inconvenience, and some delay in the business. When the previous question is not sustained, the section goes over. For that reason, I offer this additional rule.

THE SECRETARY read the proposed rule:

"When the Convention shall have refused by vote to have the previous question put, the Convention shall proceed in all respects as though no such vote had been taken."

MR. HUESTIS. I move the adoption of the rule.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. President: I think this amendment is a very desirable one. I think it is a very good rule. I would like to ask whether, in its present shape, it will embrace the Committee of the Whole, as well as the Convention?

MR. CROSS. The rules we are acting under provide that the same rules shall govern the Committee of the Whole as govern the Convention, except two or three, of which this is not one.

MR. WILSON. If it applies to the Committee of the Whole, I am in favor of it; if not, I would move that it apply also to the Committee of the Whole.

THE PRESIDENT. The rule will apply to the Committee of the Whole. The question is on the adoption of the rule.

Adopted.

REVENUE AND TAXATION.

MR. WEST. Mr. President: I move that the Convention do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

So ordered.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section two and amendments are before the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I desire very briefly to explain a few of the reasons why I shall, in the first place, support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland, and if that should not carry I shall then support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale. In doing so, permit me to say that the people of this State, and I might say the people of the United States, have exhibited in their popular capacity an unrest, a discontent, a want of satisfaction, and mutterings are heard all over this country, and, in fact, all over the world, as we see by the resolutions and platforms adopted in public assemblages, which demand a redress of their grievances, and remedies for the evils complained of by the people. Now, I am not one of those that believe that these popular commotions—these tidal waves—have their origin in natural causes. I believe that all effects are produced by some underlying cause, and that it is the duty of the members of this Convention to seriously, and honestly, and steadily inquire what the meaning of this is: where the evil sprang from; and what remedies can we provide in this Convention to redress the grievances complained of, if any. I need not inform members, for every gentleman knows it full well, that the one great cause for the calling of this Convention was the inequalities in taxation in this State. The poor and the rich have not been equally taxed. The workingmen—and when I say workingmen, I mean all those persons who make their living by industry, whether it is the result of their muscles or their brains—have not been equally compensated. You may think it a strange expression. When the workingmen used to work for three dollars a week, then they were amply paid. Now they get six, seven, nine dollars a week for the same amount of labor. So it is not the amount of compensation of which we complain, but the want of equality of compensation furnished to the different employments, the different interests of the State, which is not equal or uniform. The man who drives a dray receives double the compensation he did years ago, yet he has a harder struggle to keep the wolf from the door than he did when he received three dollars a week. Since the termination of our unfortunate civil war, an era of prosperity, we are told by the politicians, has spread all over the country. Now, what are the facts? I admit the general principle, that our country is growing and becoming richer; but, sir, dividing this increase, and you find that the poor are constantly becoming poorer and the rich are becoming richer; that the money and wealth are concentrated in the hands of the few, and that power follows the accumulation of wealth; that this interest domineers over the laboring and producing interest of the country. And, while the laboring man is receiving more compensation in dollars and cents than he did years ago, he is growing poorer every day, while the wealth, and power, and political influence is concentrated in the hands of those who control these monopolies. The few men who have been fortunate enough, by the turn in fortune's wheel, or by their own exertions, to amass wealth, are constantly growing richer, and the spectacle of a man amassing millions of dollars in a year or two is not so strange as it used to be years ago when there were very few millionaires, and the man who was worth half a million was accounted a very rich man; and now, unless he can count his money by millions, he is not considered rich.

It is this wealth in the hands of the few that has caused the first ground-swell. It is this conviction in the minds of the people, that the laboring men are in danger of extermination, that wealth is every day growing more tyrannical in its power, until all other interests are in danger. Can we stop it? Can we remedy it? Is there any power in any political organization which can check it? If there is, then we, as just and reasonable men, should try and find a remedy. We should devise some system, if we can, that will stop this inequality, that will protect the laborer and the result of his industry in this country.

But we are told that this class who have amassed all this wealth, these great monopolists, are a class over which we can have no control; that we cannot tax them. The gentleman from Sacramento says we cannot; that the moment you impose a tax upon them they will transfer it to the poor. While I admit that may be true in practice, it is unjust in principle. It is unjust in principle, and we are told there is no remedy. Is there no remedy? Shall we sit supinely down and kiss the hands of the tyrants, and say we have no remedy against their oppressions? While we are building up the foundation for an organic law, the foundation of all the laws of the State, can we not devise and interpose some remedy? If we cannot, then let us say so by a resolution of this Convention, and adjourn and go home, as was proposed yesterday. Let us admit to the people at once that we are incompetent to perform the duty for which we were selected. Let us invite Governor Stanford to frame an organic law from his own supreme and infallible brain, and let us declare that the people are serfs, and that the money lenders and monopolists are the only rightful rulers of this great commonwealth. Let us do that, and act upon a common sense principle, and carry out the principles of gentlemen on this floor who declare that we cannot control this element. They would make us believe that they are above and beyond the reach of the law. Sir, I do not propose to be driven out of this country. I propose to try if we cannot find a remedy. I do not admit, nor will I admit, that these men are above the law.

Now, the idea—I take a small amount of money—that when you loan forty thousand dollars on interest, and you exact from the borrower a mortgage security for money loaned; you get your mortgage recorded: you have your debtor effectually under your control; you have a mortgage upon his farm; a mortgage upon his industries, and his wife and children, because they must deny themselves of the common comforts of life, that you may receive your one and a half per cent., which accumulates night and day. The simoon may desolate the country, and destroy the industry of the country; fire and flood may destroy property and the industries of the country, but your mortgage never dies; it lives and draws interest when you are asleep and when you are awake: you get your interest whether your debtor gets anything or not. But a very few years will roll around, as has been well said here, until you take the property of your debtor, and there is no reprieve. If you see your debtor has got cramped a little, his credit failing, and he cannot meet his engagement, when he comes to you for further time you demand two per cent. interest on the money. Shylock-like, I want my money, I can loan my money, you say, at two per cent. per month, and unless you will pay me that rate of interest, you cannot have it any longer. It is not a matter of objection, not a matter of contract, but a matter of dire necessity. He has the unfortunate man down, with his foot on his neck, and he extorts the two per cent. a month. That was a case which occurred to my knowledge He had borrowed the money of one of the principal banks, and when the time was up they demanded it, or two per cent. A neighbor was fortunate enough to have money, and let the farmer have it, and he came into the bank about an hour afterwards and says: "Here's your money." "Oh, you could have had it just as well as not: we didn't intend to put you to any trouble. It can just run along." But when they thought they had him at a disadvantage they wanted their money.

Now, sir, we have started out by declaring that all property shall be taxed. For the purposes of taxation, we propose to say that all values shall be considered property; that wealth shall be considered property. Now, in the name of all that is true, in the name of all that is sensible and logical, is not forty thousand dollars, secured by three dollars for one dollar, property? Is there any better property in the whole country? Is it not property in the sense that it brings a sure and certain income, and wealth, and power? And ought not such property to be taxed? You must not tax it, says the plausible and ingenious gentleman from San Francisco, because it is not property. The Supreme Court has so decided, he says. Now, sir, I have some veneration for Supreme Courts, but I believe Judges are no better now than they have been—perhaps a little wiser and more shrewd in the way of evading things. I have lived long enough to see the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States reversed upon general principles, and I hope I will live long enough to see the decisions of the Supreme Court of California reversed, and I believe they will be reversed, and that mortgages, whether as collateral security, or as real estate security, shall be taxed. Now, these attorneys need not be told by a farmer that a debt may be secured by a mortgage without a note. I think it was a very unnecessary criticism upon the Moreland amendment, in regard to what is termed unnecessary language. The gentleman very well knows that if I borrow ten thousand dollars of the Chairman, and give him a mortgage upon my farm, that there is no evidence of that debt but the mortgage.

Now, sir, we propose to assert in the organic law a declaration that these evidences of debt, whether secured by mortgage or otherwise, shall be property in the sense of the law, and that they shall be taxed; and I would like to know upon what principle the Supreme Court will decide that you cannot levy and collect a tax upon that piece of property. But, say the attorneys, that question has been decided. It is decided in the old Constitution, which the people have decided to ignore. They have tried again and again to have this class of property taxed. I assert here, that had it not been for that decision of the Supreme Court, this Convention would never have been called. The people have been clamoring for years against it, in fact ever since that decision was rendered. Why, sir, there are a certain set of gentlemen in this State who have been in the service of these corporations so long, who have been sucking the public pap so long, that they have become oblivious to the wailings of the people in their demands for reform.

Now, I wish to refer to a party platform, adopted by the best men in my county of all parties—farmers, merchants, mechanics, business men, and I believe there were some editors there too. There were as intelligent men as any in the country. It says that such constitutional plan of taxation should be such as will throw the burdens of government upon all alike, in proportion to their wealth, whether that wealth be railroads, stocks, mortgages, moneys, or lands, etc. Now, sir, the labor of this country has been oppressed. It demands relief. But it demands no unjust discrimination in its favor. The laborers of the State say they are willing to bear their just proportion of taxes, but they are not willing that there shall be any privileged class established in this country, to reap the benefit of their labors and the sweat of their muscles. Tax all property, tax all values, tax stocks in a railroad wherever you find it, no odds who owns it, no difference in whose possession it is, let it pay its just proportion of the expenses of government.

We are told, sir, that no political writer of repute has ever advocated the taxation of anything but tangible property, and they have read from a few of their select authors, men who are of the same mind with themselves, men who view things from the standpoint of wealth, and one would think from hearing them that these were the only authors who have ever spoken on the subject. My honored colleague read you from Amasa Walker, in his work entitled "The Science of Wealth." Permit me to refer briefly to the report of the committee appointed to investigate the subject in New Jersey, in eighteen hundred and sixty-two–three. "Taxes on property are defined," they say, "as the tribute that all property owes the State for the security it receives from the government. If the owner of land be indebted to his debtor to the value of the land, and this indebtedness is represented by a note of hand, the land is one property and the note another."

MR. EDGERTON. In eighteen hundred and sixty-nine the State exempted all that kind of property.

MR. WEST. I will read this paragraph from the report in full:

"Taxes on property are defined to be the tribute which that property owes to the State for the protection, security, and consequent value it receives from the government of the State. The protection so received is commensurate with the property held, and not with the sum, or balance, the holder may be found to be worth. If the owner of the land be indebted to his creditor for the value of the land, and this indebtedness be represented by note or bond, the land is one property, and the note or bond another. Each is protected by the law, and each owes its tribute to the law. They are in no sense the same; different in their natures, their titles, and the uses to which they may be put. Each may be sold and transferred by the holder without regard to the other; nor does the note necessarily represent or depend for its value on the land. It may be paid by other means and other property; by the industry, the labor, or the future services of the maker. For all other purposes the note and the land are regarded by the law, and are treated, in fact, as distinct and valuable things. Why should they not be treated as such in the levying of taxes? The credit is given, and the note, or bond, or mortgage is made, because the convenience and advantage, both of buyer and seller, are thereby subserved. The buyer prefers the one property, the seller the other. Taxing each property once is not double taxation."

Now, this cry of double taxation is a great bugbear. It is something like the skeleton we used to set up to scare off the birds. This cry of double taxation is merely a cry gotten up for the purpose of scaring off the simple minded. I am not arguing the question, whether it is tangible property or not; I am arguing this broad proposition, that as far as the law is concerned, it has its value. It is valuable; it is a source of income; it is in all respects property, and ought to be taxed. This kind of property exercises Government in its protection more and to a greater extent than any other. This is the kind of property that goes into the Courts. It always has an amply guarded provision under which the maker of the note always pays the expenses of prosecution and attorneys' fees, so that the holder is not out a dollar. If there is any immunity to be granted to any species of property, it ought certainly not to be granted to this species of property, which enjoys the full protection of the law. And we are told that if we tax evidences of debt that they will, through some contract or other, implied or understood, saddle it on to the debtor. Now, we propose, if this section is not strong enough, to adjust and amend it, until it is so strong and so well guarded that it cannot be evaded, cannot be disregarded. We propose by this following section to say that if any such contract be made it shall be void, and the holder shall not be entitled to collect any interest. I agree with the committee in that section, and when we come to vote upon it, I shall vote for it; and if it needs any amendment to make it stronger, we can get at it and make it so it will hold and cannot be evaded.

Again, it has been charged that the rate of interest will be increased. Well, now, I understand that money is a mercantile article. This money will go where it will produce the largest revenue to the owner. It goes from place to place, seeking the best investment. It will invest itself where it can earn the most interest for the owner, and it can only do that even if you do tax it. I propose to add a usury law, beyond which they cannot go, for the purpose of preventing these enterprising money lenders from oppressing people and shirking taxation. We propose to tax them, and we propose that they shall not escape that tax.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: Permit me a moment. The gentleman from Los Angeles has quoted extracts from the report of the New Jersey Commission of eighteen hundred and sixty-two. Seven years later, in eighteen hundred and sixty-nine, the New Jersey Legislature passed a law exempting, in certain counties of that State, those lying contiguous to New York, all mortgages. They had tried the other plan and found it a failure. The gentleman can read the law for himself.

MR. WEST. I admit, sir, that there never has been an effectual reform accomplished in any State, and especially in the State of New Jersey, which has not united the monopolies in an attempt to crush it out, and New Jersey was the victim of a combination of capitalists who have been said to own the State. The Amboy Railroad Company, and other large companies, have control of the State. There is no other State in the Union so cursed by monopoly and capital as the State of New Jersey, and they are powerful enough to crush out any reform, as they have done in the case cited by the gentleman. That is my answer.

SPEECH OF MR. OVERTON.

MR. OVERTON. Mr. Chairman: I have listened patiently to the various arguments made, with considerable interest and a great deal of instruction to myself. I have been both edified and instructed. I may say in the opening that while I favor the amendment of my colleague, Mr. Moreland, I do not do it solely out of courtesy towards him, but because I believe that it is the most correct amendment yet offered. I believe it has objections. As he and other gentlemen have said, we must not expect perfection. We do not expect perfection. This Convention is not more wise than other Conventions which have preceded it. But I believe, sir, that the people that sent us here expect some reform in the way of taxation. I know, as far as my constituency are concerned, had it not been for the one fact, of the exemption of mortgages, and the consequent discontent arising from it, this Convention would not have been here. As far as my immediate constituency are concerned, I am satisfied we would not. They would have voted against the calling of the Convention. I believe, while I am here for the purpose of making reforms, I do not believe this is going to affect particularly the man who has got to borrow money. I doubt very much whether it will be to their interest at all, but my constituency want it, and as far as I am concerned I want them to have it. I believe it is right. I believe that every individual, I care not who it is, who receives the protection of the Government, should contribute towards the support of the Government. I believe the rich and the poor ought to be taxed alike, though personally I am interested in having the decision of the Supreme Court remain the law of the land. Since that decision I have been the gainer several hundreds of dollars, which I, by having mortgages, have not been taxed on. But I have never approved of that decision. I believe in being taxed upon what property I have, I believe it is right; but at the same time, while I expect to be taxed upon mortgages, I am frank to say that the man who borrows my money will pay the taxes. You may make it as strong as you please, you may pass a usury law, but the man who borrows my money, or any other man's money who loans money, will have to pay the tax. It is self-evident. The man who loans money produces nothing. If he makes nothing, how can he, as far as he is concerned, pay any taxes. The interest he receives is the source from which he pays the tax. There is nothing made except what is produced from the earth, or manufactured by hands. The man who loans money makes nothing, produces nothing, and adds nothing to the wealth of the country, and I care not what provision you put in this Constitution, I say the man who uses the money, whether laborer, farmer, or manufacturer, will have to pay the tax. There is no question about it. But at the same time, while I am willing to admit that to be the fact, there is such a thing as apparently making things equal and just to the people, to the common mind. And I say it is right. I say we all understand that these men who loan money have an equal interest in the country, and should be made to pay their share of the taxes for the support of the government. And I know, too, that no other means will satisfy the public mind of this State, and hence I am unequivocally in favor of taxing all property, in favor of taxing mortgages, in favor of taxing evidences of debt, or credits, choses in action, everything which a man has. I believe this will stop the discontent. It is to the interest of capitalists that every man should be treated alike.

Now, one word about double taxation. It is a bugbear. There is nothing in it; nothing in the world. As far as mortgages are concerned, I do not intend to spend any more time trying to convince this body that they are property, because they are unquestionably property. It represents value. A greenback is not property, in one sense. A gold note is not property in the sense that the gentlemen speak of, but they are based on property, and are valuable. It is the same with a mortgage—it represents value, and is property of the very best kind. It is safer than a greenback, backed up by the Government. If a greenback falls in the fire, you lose the face value of it; it is gone, and you cannot recover. If you have a mortgage, and the mortgage is lost or destroyed, you do not lose it. You can go to the record, and you will find it there. If a man has a note secured by mortgage, he can walk into the bank any time, and get twenty-dollar gold pieces for it. Then how can you say it is not property? Take a promissory note, signed by my friend from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, and, if I mistake not, you can go into any bank in San Francisco and get the money on it, in gold coin. Is not that property? It represents property.

MR. JONES. Allow me to ask you a question.

MR. OVERTON. No, sir.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Allow me a question.

MR. OVERTON. No, sir; not now. I expect to make but one speech on this subject, and I do not want my time cut short by questions. When I get through, gentlemen can speak.

MR. WILSON. I wanted to know merely if you would indorse my note?

MR. OVERTON. No, sir, I would not. [Laughter.] I would buy it, though. Now, the question of double taxation, sir, is a bugbear. It is not double taxation. When a mortgage is assessed, it is assessed for its face value, whatever it calls for. Now, sir, there is one assessment. Now, we come to assess the land, and land in this State is not assessed at its full value. Take the assessment of land in this State to-day, and add it to the mortgage, and I say it would not more than bring it up to the true value of the land. It is a notorious fact, not only in this State, but in most of the States, for the last quarter of a century, that land has not been assessed at more than from forty to sixty per cent. of its actual cash value; and every man on this floor who has had any experience in real estate, knows that to be a fact. Admitting that proposition to be correct—and I hold that it is—there is but one assessment on the full value of the land, even assessing the mortgage at what the face calls for and the land, and taxing both to the owner of the land, and he would pay but one tax on the full value of his land. It is not double taxation at all.

Now, in relation to rebate. I opposed that section in the report which provides for rebate. I go a little further than mere rebate on visible property, and object to even a rebate on mortgages.

MR. EDGERTON. The gentleman, I believe, voted for section two.

MR. OVERTON. I voted against rebate. If I voted that way it was a mistake. I claimed that right in the committee to oppose that principle on the floor, and I think the gentleman will bear me out. Here are two gentlemen who say so. If the report shows it, the report is in error.

MR. EDGERTON. In the committee the ayes and noes were called by the Clerk, and the gentleman is recorded as voting in favor of section two.

MR. OVERTON. I care not what the Clerk has recorded, I stated these facts in the committee, that I was opposed to that principle. I remember the speech I made, and other gentlemen also remember it. If the report shows a different state of facts, the report is in error. Now, sir, I say there ought to be no rebate. There ought to be no rebate on mortgages. They ought not to be taken from the value of the land, for the reasons I have already shown. I say the land in this State is not assessed at its full value, and you may take the mortgages of this State and add them to the assessed value of the real estate, and it will not more than come up to the true cash value of the land. Then why should there be any rebate? If this system of rebate is allowed I do not believe there will be anything left to assess in California. There are a great many more debts owing by people in this State, among neighbors and business men, than most people think. Business is transacted to a very great extent upon the credit system, and I do not think it is safe to rebate debts from visible property. I think it ought to be assessed. And prior to the decision of the Supreme Court that was the law in this State. It permitted at one time the deduction of debts from credits. But there was no deduction made from visible property. If you are going to permit debts to be deducted from visible property, you may be sure that you will have very little left to assess, because in many instances the debts are not assessable, because they are out of the State.

Now, some gentlemen say they are going to put in some provision which will prohibit the borrower from paying this tax. Mr. West says he don't intend that the borrower shall pay the tax. I am willing to chance that, as far as I am concerned. They may make the strongest kind of a usury law, and yet they will not accomplish it. Men who want to borrow money will be the first ones to regret a usury law. There is nothing more desirable than cheap capital. And here let me say, as there has been some discussion on that question, my position has been such as to ascertain the effect of the decision of the Supreme Court, and I believe that decision had a very decided effect in reducing the rate of interest. Either that or some other cause reduced the rate of interest one quarter of one per cent. in my community. I believe that any system that will add to the expenses of capital will add just that much burden to the borrower. The farmers, who at certain seasons of the year have to borrow money, will be the first to feel the effect of this tax.

MR. ESTEE. Will my friend allow me to ask him a question?

MR. OVERTON. No, sir. I have but a minute to spare. The amendment of Mr. Moreland is founded on correct principles. It taxes a man for all he is worth. That is the spirit. It taxes promissory notes, evidences of indebtedness, and everything else that is valuable.

SPEECH OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: There are three things aimed at by this Moreland amendment: corporeal or natural property, solvent debts, and mortgages. In regard to corporeal or visible property, in the estimation of this body, there exists no difference of opinion as to its being taxable. In its very nature and character it is property, and should be taxed. But, sir, when you come to the question of solvent debts, and of mortgages, that is entirely different. Look at a solvent debt, and what is it? It is something that represents an indebtedness from debtor to creditor, in consequence of the creditor's having parted with personal property to the debtor. Personal property has passed from the creditor to the debtor, and the credit passes to the creditor. Moreover, it is valuable only to the extent of the estates and property of the debtor—his tangible, material assets. Now, those being the subjects of taxation, must be taxed in the hands of the debtor. And when the property has been once taxed in his hands, if you tax the debt besides, in the hands of the creditor, you cannot avoid the conclusion, by any sophistry or ingenuity of argument, that this constitutes double taxation, which is incompatible with the fundamental principles of justice.

Now, as the gentleman from Los Angeles has taken occasion to refer to an obsolete New Jersey law, I wish to refer to another and more recent authority, which stands as high as any that can be produced. I refer to Professor Sturdevant, one of the ablest political economists in the United States. In his work on Economics, or the Science of Wealth, he says, page 308, Sec. 223:

"The question is much agitated at present on what forms of property taxes may be properly levied. One of the most important points in this discussion relates to the adjustment of tax levies in respect to debtors and creditors. A definition of property has been proposed, according to which, debts due any one are not property, and are, therefore, not taxable. All property, it is claimed, has materiality and a local situation. Debts due to any one have neither, and are therefore not property. The reader need not be told that we cannot accept this definition. According to our definition of wealth, skill and power to labor are property, yet they have no materiality. An invention is a mere conception of the mind, yet it is property. But in the case under consideration, the definition of property proposed, even if admitted, would not avail. A man may be to-day the owner of one hundred thousand dollars in gold, to-morrow he may lend it, and receive for it real estate security; he has not, by that transaction, divested himself of all his property, or of any of it. Indeed it matters not whether he has taken security on real estate or relied on the bare credit of the borrower, the moment the loan is made he owns the property of the borrower to the amount of one hundred thousand dollars. The evidences of indebtedness which he holds is the proof of his right to such an interest in the property of the borrower; it is his title deed. The borrower may use the gold as he pleases, but the creditor is the owner of that amount of property which is in the present possession of the borrower. The question is certainly a fair one, how the transaction, as thus described, should affect the two parties, in respect to their liabilities to taxation? By the laws of some of the States, the Tax Assessor disregards this transaction entirely; he estimates the property of the debtor just as if the debt did not exist, and the property of the creditor as though the gold was still in his hands. It is only necessary thus to state the case to convince any candid mind of the unreasonableness of the law. That item of one hundred thousand dollars is doubled in the assessment, and twice taxed. A State that makes out its tax lists on that principle estimates the property of the people of the State at an amount immensely greater than it is in truth. Such an assessment is a delusion, and a tax levied on it is a public oppression. It would be easy to show that, if taxes are assessed on this principle, the same property is not only liable, as in the case above given, to be reckoned twice over, but to be repeated any number of times. It is wonderful that any legislator should fail to notice the bald injustice of such a system of taxation. Nothing can be plainer than that the same property should be taxed but once."

But, sir, the process, while it begins, does not end with double taxation. A man has a piece of land worth one thousand dollars. He sells it and takes the purchaser's note in payment. The purchaser, in turn, sells to another, for the same price, and takes his note in payment. It is sold in the same way again, and again, until the transaction is multiplied twenty times. There are twenty notes of one thousand dollars each, all taxed in the aggregate at twenty thousand dollars, against only a thousand dollars worth of property. It is remarkable that any member should contend, upon this floor, that a system under which such a state of things is rendered possible, is right. I say it is wrong in its effect, wrong in its principle. It does not contain a single element of morality or justice. Gentlemen have admitted practically that it is oppressive to place a heavier burden upon the poor, but that it is necessary to inflict this wrong in order to avoid a greater. That argument is unsound in principle, and cannot stand. The gentleman from Los Angeles has referred to the case reported from New Jersey, but he is entirely overruled in reference to that report, by the later consideration of this question, and by the practical adoption of the offset theory. That system has been found to work safely, as it always will.

The gentleman who last addressed this body, contended that it was perfectly right that there should be double taxation. At the same time, he admitted that the borrower would be the one who would invariably have to pay the tax. He also admitted that interest fell one quarter of one per cent. in consequence of the decision of the Supreme Court exempting mortgages from taxation. That was so much of a burden taken from the shoulders of the borrowers. They had been paying the tax upon these mortgages, which was a tax upon the money in their hands, and a tax upon the land on which the mortgages were based. If it is wrong to tax solvent debts, it is wrong, in a much greater degree, to tax mortgages. It is clearly double taxation, and the tax invariably falls upon the borrower. Now, sir, in San Francisco there were twenty-five thousand men who signed a memorial remonstrating against the taxation of mortgages, and all the succeeding candidates for office were pledged to the effect that they would oppose taxation of that kind. That was just before the decision of the Supreme Court in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-two. It has been remarked upon this floor, in my absence, that these people were obscure persons, and that there was no evidence that they were citizens, or taxable at all. Sir, that list embraces the names of men who are familiar to every resident of that city; men of integrity and character, and high standing in the community; men of various callings, merchants, traders, laborers, mechanics, wealthy men, and men of every trade and calling. And, sir, I know, and proclaim, that thirty thousand men would rise up to-morrow in that city, in indignant opposition against any attempt to force upon them that odious system of taxation. There is an entire mistake in regard to the sentiment existing there. Sir, upon this question San Francisco may be called, as she unquestionably is, a unit. There is but one feeling, one opinion there, upon this subject. There may be exceptional cases, but they are very few.

MR. MORELAND. More than thirteen thousand citizens of San Francisco have already voted to do that very thing.

MR. WINANS. They do not demand the taxation of mortgages, except in a conditional way, in order to reach a result which we predict can never be attained. They would never consent to double taxation, and that is what this plan proposed amounts to. You may qualify and qualify, to avoid such a result, but your efforts will be unsuccessful. There is no such thing as evading the compulsion of the borrower in such cases to make payment of the tax. Laws cannot prevent it; human ingenuity is utterly powerless to ward off the consequences which are sure to follow. If it is not an increased interest which the borrower is compelled to pay it will be something worse. Pass your usury laws, and you will find them entirely unavailing. I refer you to the State of New York, where they had usury laws of the greatest rigor, and they were every day evaded and defied. No scheme has ever yet been devised, nor can the art of man contrive a law that will prevent the evil I have predicted. The law will be spurned or counteracted—if not directly, indirectly. Capital ever flows in channels of its own creation. You might as well attempt to dam the waters of the Sacramento in the seasons of its flood, and turn its waters from their natural career, as to stop the arbitrary flowing of these streams of capital.

Now, sir, I protest that under such circumstances we would be doing a grievous wrong to make mortgages taxable. We ought not to meet here to legislate for any special class. We assemble here to devise a scheme intended for the whole people and the general good. I know no man as a Granger; I know no man as a miner; I know no class of men as a distinctive class; I know of no such persons here; I only know we are a body met together at the call of the entire community for the welfare and protection of all the citizens of the State at large; and we are doing wrong to attempt to create a war or controversy between factions, interests, or classes. There exists no such war or controversy without, and here it only exists in the minds of certain factious men. The taxation of mortgages is so unjust and oppressive that I wonder at the idea being seriously entertained by those who wish to avoid the strife of factions, and to seek alone the common good.

There has been a disposition shown in this Convention to create antagonism between the interior and the metropolis. That spirit certainly should not prevail in a body of this kind, met together, as we profess to be, to legislate for the welfare of the commonwealth at large. San Francisco has the same interest in this matter as the interior. The borrower in San Francisco will find this extra tax saddled on his shoulders, and the borrower in the interior will have exactly the same experience. It is said here that the poor will have to bear their share of the burdens in order that the rich may be reached. Sir, the rich cannot be reached in this way, and the poor will have had their burdens thus enforced on them to bear in vain. Now, sir, as the interests of San Francisco and the interests of the remainder of the State are thoroughly identical, in this behalf, there ought, therefore, to be harmony of feeling. I regret the disposition to look upon these great questions from a sectional point of view. Let us fraternize and act together. Let us study the advantage of the great masses of the people, and not be devoted exclusively to the petty interests of this locality or that. Let us stand up as the champions of all, and do our duty fearlessly and firmly.

Now, sir, the right way to reach the rich men and prevent them from escaping taxation by transferring their money or their property from hand to hand while the Assessor is going on his round, is to make the assessment on all the property within the State at once and on a given day. Then, if you do not catch the money in the hands of the lender, you reach it in the hands of the borrower. I have heard it urged here that the laws were the only means of protecting morality; and I have heard it said, also, that in the absence of morality there was little power in the law. But what can laws accomplish for the enforcement of a constrained morality in the absence of its existence in the sentiments and conduct of the people? All we can do is to devise a system just in itself, and then allow the Legislature to enforce it on the people, if the people will submit. If they will not, sir, then we have reached a state of anarchy. But let us discharge our duty here in a faithful and conscientious way. If the populace approve our work, they will adopt the Constitution which we offer, and then it will be the duty of the Legislature to enforce its provisions in harmony with its requirements and design.

I think, sir, the last gentleman who addressed the Convention made a mistake in his illustration when he said that gold notes represent value. Gold notes do represent value in a certain restricted sense, but the value which they represent is not taxable. Now, all that is wanted to reach the evils complained of here, is to change our method of assessing, and you can reach every man in the State who has property to tax, without perpetrating a wrong. We must not impose double taxation upon the people. We have already adopted the principle of equality and uniformity, and if we adopt this amendment the two sections will be entirely inconsistent, for no man can show that this system does not, and few have the hardihood to deny that it does, impose double taxation. Most of those here assembled have the fairness and frankness to admit that it does amount to double taxation. But they do not go far enough and admit that double taxation is a curse to a people professing to be free. It is in open conflict with the section which provides for equality and uniformity. If one man is taxed twice while another is taxed once, do you call that equal and uniform taxation? It would be better to leave things as they are rather than resort to this unjust expedient. It would be better, far better, to rather bear the ills we have than fly to others that we know not of.

SPEECH OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I will not attempt to discuss this question at length. The time for argument and discussion has gone by. The argument is exhausted, and if there can be found any pretenses, or masks, or disguises, it is time, sir, for some of them to be torn off. If I can find any such, I will address myself for two or three minutes to the task of tearing off some of them.

Mr. Chairman, great is humbug; and the man who expects to return to the Legislature is his prophet; yea, verily. [Laughter.] And, as I am not one of those, nor one who expects to be elected to the Board of Supervisors, or some other high office, I can afford to tear off some of these masks. How does the case stand here? These things are either true or admitted: First, that the land and chattels comprise all the property in the State. Second, that when you go beyond that for the purpose of taxation, you are swelling and watering the assessment roll with fictitious values. Third, it is admitted that for every dollar of those fictitious values that goes upon the assessment roll, it is double and treble taxation to the man who is in debt, to the advantage of the man who is not. That was admitted by the mover of the pending amendment; it is admitted by the gentleman from Los Angeles; it is admitted throughout this debate, and yet it is pretended—pretended, I say—that the people demand it. I declare that, sir, to be a false pretense and a fraud. I declare it to be untrue, and the gentlemen who have the hardihood to stand on this floor and make such statements, will sooner or later learn the fact to their sorrow. I declare this Moreland amendment to be a fraudulent pretense. I declare it to be abominable. I do not need to declare it. It is a vile pretense, keeping the promise to the ear while it intends to break it to the hope, and the gentleman who moves it knows it. Every gentleman who sustains it knows it. I promised not to debate the question, and I will not. But I will say that the trouble throughout this State is not that mortgages are not taxed, that debts are not taxed, that the assessment roll is not watered. That is not the trouble. What is it? It is, sir, that property goes untaxed. That's what's the matter! Your broad acres of rich land goes untaxed. You have spread a net over it to keep the people off. The land that you value at six bits an acre, whereas, the land alongside of it, no better than yours, which supports numerous families, is taxed at forty dollars an acre. That's what's the matter with you Grangers. That's what ails the assessment roll. That's what ails the people. Go to the city and what is the trouble? The little homestead occupied by the working man and his family, with a mortgage on it, is taxed for the last dollar it will sell for. By the side of it, the brick mansion, worth millions, is taxed by a bribed Assessor for one quarter or one tenth of its actual value. And that's what's the matter with you workingmen. That's what ails the assessment roll in San Francisco. And the gentlemen talk to me about inflating the assessment roll to reduce taxation. You have admitted here in this debate—you have admitted in your amendment—that for every dollar you have inflated the assessment roll, you have doubled the tax upon the man who has a mortgage on his homestead, while the man by the side of him, Michael Reese, or Flood, or Sharon, and others who have no mortgage on their property, have their rate of taxes reduced.

And now one word in regard to platforms. Don't deceive yourselves about your platforms. Don't deceive yourselves about what your constituents want. That is my advice, and I do not charge you a cent for it. You say the people want mortgages taxed. Very well, but you know that they do not want to be doubly taxed. Oh! you think they will never get it into their heads that you are doing it. I charge you—pause; they will find it out. Sometimes the people in their platforms express in a very awkward manner their views. They say they desire mortgages to be taxed. Well, they do, but in a qualified sense. And it is in the sense that it shall not operate to increase the burden which they already have to bear. And if you expect, after adopting the amendment now pending, to go back to the people and cajole them into the belief that you have kept your promise in good faith, you will find to your sorrow that you are mistaken. They will find out the truth of the matter sooner or later. And when they find that you have misinterpreted their language and instructions, there will be no excuse for you. It will be too late then for you to retrace your steps. You have voted to tax them doubly, and they will find it out. And that is what I ask you to do, is to interpret their instructions correctly; to interpret their platforms correctly, and their resolutions and their wishes. But I do not want you to inflate the assessment roll, because it is easier to do that than it is to do the right thing. But, sir, do the right thing, and interpret truly the mind of the people, and then you can go home to your constituents, and they will return you to the Legislature, or elect you to the Board of Supervisors.

This amendment contains no provision for deduction, and that is another reason why it is infamous. But gentlemen say they intend to amend it, so that it will provide for deductions, that is, some of them do, and others do not. But when you do that the remedy will be almost as bad as the disease. Now, sir, one word more. This debate has taken a wide range, and I will not consume any more time. But I do appeal to the consistency of this Convention, when they say they are in favor of executing the will of the people, not to do that which the people will rebel against. You are mistaken if you undertake to interpret their will in that way. They may have made a mistake; they may have expressed themselves awkwardly, but they will not excuse you in shirking your duty. They will not excuse you from acting the demagogue. I ask the Workingmen, what are you going to do with your platform? Are you going to stand by it? "No person shall be taxed for that which he does not own." And you know that the Moreland amendment does tax a man for what he does not own. And, sir, if you think the man in San Francisco cannot understand it when he is taxed for the whole value of his little homestead, and for the mortgage too, you are a deluded victim, and I am sorry for you.

And now I appeal to you to retrace your steps and get back to solid ground. Put that on the assessment roll which is property, and not any fictitious value. If you do, you will find it a delusion and a snare.

And I call upon you Grangers, when you go home from this Convention, and you come to fix a value upon your lands——

MR. HITCHCOCK. We do not fix the value upon our land, it is the Assessor does that.

MR. REYNOLDS. Put in the valuation of your broad acres that you have spread your titles over, that you never use, that you are holding away from those who would cultivate it, value it at the same rate that the little homestead is valued at, which supports a family. And you gentlemen from San Francisco, from the same city I live in, when we go home to San Francisco, let us endeavor to elect Assessors who will value the brick mansion for what it is worth, as well as the little homestead. Let us assess railroad companies, and banks, and their contents at their actual value. Do that and you will put an end to all this complaint. But do not water the assessment roll, for there will be no relief in that. I have said enough.

SPEECH OF MR. EAGON.

MR. EAGON. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that the opponents of this amendment are arguing from a false basis. They argue from two standpoints—first, that evidences of indebtedness, notes, mortgages, etc., are not property. Now, if anything in the world is property, a note secured by a mortgage upon real estate is property. That proposition has already been argued to such an extent that I will not argue it any more. The Supreme Court, in the ninth California, says that "property is what we have the exclusive right to possess, enjoy, and dispose of. It is the right or interest which a man has in land or chattels, to the exclusion of others." That definition is comprehensive enough to embrace all species of property, real or personal. Can a man not own, and enjoy, and dispose of a note? Would it not come within the definition given by the Supreme Court as property? If it is property it should be taxed the same as any other property. I cannot see any reason why it should not be.

But gentlemen go off on the other proposition, that if these things are property it is not of such a class as ought to be taxed. And they argue from that standpoint that these notes and mortgages are things which men often have without value received; that notes are merely given in child's play. But in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred promissory notes given have been given for value received, and in most instances for twenty-dollar pieces. Why do they not represent value? I will not say, like Judge Terry, and other distinguished gentlemen, that it may not make double taxation in some cases. I believe it does. I am something like Mr. Tinnin on that matter. I take this amendment as the best we can get. I think it comes nearer to equal and exact justice than any other proposition presented to this Convention. Now, sir, these notes are valuable, and ought to be taxed. If a note is given that is good, it is creating value, and that note ought to be taxed the same as the value of real estate. I can see no difference in the two propositions. If one is taxed the other should be. Then gentlemen argue from another standpoint which I wish to notice, and that is that it will increase the rate of interest. Sir, we are here endeavoring to pass upon a great principle to assert in the Constitution of the State, and that is in relation to the question of taxation, regardless of whether it allows me to get cheap money or not. That is, to make all men pay their proportion of the burdens of government. It is for the purpose of making taxation rest equally upon all property.

It is admitted on all hands that millions of property escapes taxation. Is it right that this money should escape taxation? Under the present Constitution it is admitted that there are three hundred millions of property escapes taxation. We are here for the purpose of devising some means by which we can follow these men up and make them pay taxes. We are not here for the purpose of providing that men shall have cheap money, but for the purpose of devising a system of taxation that shall be just and equal. We have heard a great deal here in the way of sympathy for poor men. But heretofore we have not heard that the money lenders had very much sympathy for the poor man. It is the money lender who seems to be complaining about this amendment. I see poor men here who are in favor of the amendment. I have not heard any man who is borrowing money complaining.

Now, a word in regard to platforms. I am one of those who believe in carrying out promises made to the people. I believe that platforms sometimes express the will of the people. I do not believe in repudiating platforms, under the guise that the people have changed their ideas, when it is we ourselves who have changed. Platforms should bind us. I say the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds, has changed in this matter from the position he took last Summer. When he says that the people have changed since then he is mistaken. He has changed himself, and he has no right to say we must change our positions, because he has changed, or to say that the people have changed. It was the cry all through the State that mortgages must be taxed, and I think they are right. I thought so then. I think so now. The people of San Francisco, a short time ago, took a vote on this proposition, and there were over thirteen thousand people in that city who voted for the gentleman and his colleagues upon this very proposition, upon this very platform. And still the gentleman says we must go back upon the platform.

MR. REYNOLDS. I beg pardon, I have never said any such thing. I said, and I say now, that we must act upon it, but we must act upon the whole of it. I think the Moreland amendment only includes half of it.

MR. EAGON. Your platform says money, mortgages, bonds, etc., must be taxed. That a man must not be taxed for that which he does not own. Now, if you tax mortgages, and deduct it from the land, that is another thing. That does not affect the main question of the taxation of mortgages. But I understand the gentleman to say we should not tax mortgages.

MR. REYNOLDS. The gentleman does not understand me to say any such thing, because I never said it.

MR. EAGON. Then I am mistaken; but the same thing has been said by others. Now, sir, in regard to this great petition talked about here, before this body, as evidence why we should not tax mortgages, I recollect very well when that petition was gotten up. It was gotten up by the money lenders, sir, and not by the people who were borrowing money. It was the money lenders, who had power over certain people at that time. They exercised control over them, because they were borrowing money, and they threatened that if they did not do so and so, they would put this additional tax on them; and, for the purpose of obtaining mere temporary relief, hundreds of men signed this petition. How is it now? Do they come before you here and ask this thing as a matter of justice, as a matter of right? Not one word of it. But these other men come before you with a threat. They say, "We have been exempt, for a number of years, and if you do anything of this kind, to make us pay our portion of the taxes, we will oppress your poor men—oppress the men who borrow money, and the great mass of your people." That is the class of men—the rich—who are protesting. The gentlemen cite a number of suppositious cases, of how this will oppress the poor man; that we propose to tax the passbook; then follow the money to the bank and tax it there, and then when it is loaned out, tax the mortgage. There are no such cases. They cannot point to a single instance where this was ever done in the State of California, when we were operating under the mortgage tax law. The money is placed there in small quantities. When the Assessor comes around, he asks how much money the man has on hand. He answers: I have none. Have you any deposited or at interest? I have so much deposited in a certain bank, and here is the certificate of deposit. Well, says the Assessor, that is simply an evidence of indebtedness, and we can't tax it. Then he goes to the bank and propounds the same questions. The banker says you cannot tax it, because it is loaned out on mortgage. He then finds the man who has borrowed the money, and says, where is the money? I see you have borrowed so much money. Why, says he, that has been paid out for the expenses of living—for board. So the money is not taxed.

Now, they say that the money lenders, themselves, when you go to borrow money, will add the tax to the interest, and make you pay it in that way. Might not the farmer, when you go to tax him, just as well say, you must not tax me because I raise wheat, and wheat makes flour, and flour makes bread, and bread is the staff of life, and if you tax us we will simply add the tax to the price of bread, and the poor men who eat bread will have to pay it after all. It is to the interest of all men to have cheap wheat, and therefore you must not tax us. Is not that in keeping with the demands we hear on this floor? The shoemaker might set up the same claim, that it is to the interests of the people to have cheap shoes. But none of these are exempt, although they are all producers. The money lender alone, doing nothing for the support of Government, claiming constantly the protection of Government, only claims exemption. I say it is in very bad taste for them to come before the Convention and ask immunity.

Now, sir, this amendment does not suit me in all respects, but it is the best I have seen. Mr. Reddy thinks it may be construed as taxing certificates of ownership in mining corporations; if that is so, there is nothing but double taxation in that; it would hamper the mining interests. I agree with the gentleman that the agricultural and mining interests should go hand in hand together. The one depends to a great extent on the other. If one is prosperous the other is also. I believe that the mining interest should be encouraged, that it ought to be fostered. The proper way to tax them, in my judgment, would be to tax either the gross or net proceeds of the mine. Tax them for their improvements, but do not tax them upon their evidences of ownership in the mines. You might as well tax the farmer upon his land and then turn round and tax him upon his deed, which is nothing more than the evidence that he owns the land. There is no intrinsic value in the deed, none in a certificate of mining stock, and if that is the intent or effect of this amendment, I may say that I am opposed to that feature in it.

SPEECH OF MR. BIGGS.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I do not desire to take up the time of this Convention but a few moments. I do not propose to discuss the question but a few moments. I propose to sustain the action of the committee. I am opposed to both amendments. I wish to call Judge Winans' attention for a moment, to the general inconsistency and fallacy of the arguments here——

MR. WILSON. If the gentleman is going to do that we had better adjourn this Convention to some other day. [Laughter.]

MR. BIGGS. I don't mean the gentleman, I mean Mr. Winans. The gentleman cited a case of a farm that was sold for a thousand dollars, twenty times over, and notes taken each time. Now, I ask my friend, and the gentlemen upon this floor, to go way back, before the decision of the Supreme Court which has been referred to here; when we deducted our indebtedness from our debts. I ask them to go back to that time, and adopt the report of the committee, which is merely to engraft what was upon our statute books in eighteen hundred and sixty. Gentlemen have objected to this section offered by the committee, but I want to assure this Convention that they are laboring under a misapprehension, as far as that is concerned. Every gentleman knows we had a good law, with the exception of four years, from eighteen hundred and fifty-one down to the very time that the Supreme Court rendered this decision in the Hibernia Bank case. Now, a great hue and cry was raised, which has been going from that day to this, throughout the length and breadth of the State, to have what was then on the statute books engrafted in the organic law. And that is what this report of the committee does do, engraft it into the Constitution. I am in hopes the Convention will take the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation and examine it, and if that is not coming nearer what the people of this State want than either of the two amendments, then I am greatly mistaken.

I want to notice one more question. The question has been discussed here about men reflecting the will of the people. Yes, sir; I am one of those who believe in that. I was in the Convention that administered the pledge to the Butte delegation.

MR. PULLIAM. I construed that resolution differently.

MR. BIGGS. My friend Pulliam got up then on the floor of that Convention and told them he was in favor of taxing mortgages and solvent debts, and that is what I ask him to do now. I say I am in favor of that, and I propose to show why I stand upon the platform, as far as taxing mortgages and solvent debts is concerned. The platform says we are in favor of taxing mortgages and solvent debts. I do not speak for the Butte delegation. As a member of the committee, I have a right to vote as I please. You have the same right, and you are amenable to the people of Butte County, who sent you here, and to the people of the State. I don't come here wishing to dictate to any man, but for the welfare of the people of the State of California, and offer this as a compromise, as an olive branch, between the two contending parties—the Hale amendment and the Moreland amendment—and I say to them: come and go with us, and we will do you good.

Now, sir, I am a Granger, and I have the utmost confidence in the Grangers, and I want to correct the insinuation thrown out by Judge Reynolds. He said that some of the Grangers' land—miles I believe—was assessed at seventy-five cents an acre, but here is a man with his little homestead assessed at forty dollars an acre. That was his general language. Now, if the Grangers are that class of men I am deceived. As a Non-partisan here I am opposed to that kind of thing, and I propose to have every piece of land assessed at its full value, and if the Assessors don't do their duty, we will turn them out of office. I am for assessing real estate at its cash value, and solvent debts at their cash value, and that is all the people want. Convince a man against his will, he will be of the same opinion still, and I don't propose to try to convince the gentleman.

MR. REYNOLDS. I will give you an instance, in one of the upper counties. One man was the owner of eight hundred acres of land with a house on it. His neighbor was the owner of seventeen hundred acres, with three houses on it. The former was taxed sixty-five dollars more than the latter.

MR. BIGGS. Here you said one was assessed at seventy-five cents and the other at forty dollars. If there are any such cases it is the fault of the Assessors and not of the owners of the land. I would remind Senators that the question here has not been on the amendments so much as it has been on sustaining the decision of the Supreme Court. It has resolved itself into a question that we must sustain the action of the Supreme Court in the Hibernia Bank case. And they say that twenty-five thousand taxpayers of San Francisco signed this petition. Mr. Winans would have you believe that all the lawyers in San Francisco sent a memorial protesting against the taxation of mortgages and solvent debts, and perhaps he is correct.

Now, sir, I propose to show gentleman of this Convention that these twenty-five thousand distinguished persons of San Francisco, voted the other way at the last election. If I am wrong I hope the gentleman will correct me. I believe the party that was successful there had a platform, which declared in favor of taxing mortgages and solvent debts. The Democratic party in San Francisco put out a ticket for delegates to this Convention, both State and city and county ticket, and I believe they had in their platform that mortgages and solvent debts should be exempt from taxation. The great Democratic party of San Francisco adopted a platform that mortgages and solvent debts should be exempt from taxation. What was the result? Why, sir, only eighteen hundred or two thousand votes was polled. Now, where was the twenty-five thousand men who signed that petition that Mr. Winans talks about. When that very question was before the people, they only got eighteen hundred votes.

MR. WINANS. You will find them all when your Constitution comes to be voted upon.

MR. BIGGS. Yes, sir; and if we put in this clause taxing mortgages, I venture the prediction that there will be fifty thousand votes rolled up in favor of it, over and above what there would be if we strike it out. Exempt mortgages from taxation and you won't receive a Corporal's guard.

MR. WILSON, of First District. May I ask you a question.

MR. BIGGS. Yes, sir.

MR. WILSON. Don't you know that the Democratic Committee agreed not to run a ticket, but to vote the Non-partisan ticket.

MR. BIGGS. I know you voted the full Democratic strength at the last election.

MR. WILSON. I say it bore no proportion to the Democratic vote, and everybody knows it that knows anything.

Mr. BIGGS. I am in hopes we will carry on this discussion good naturedly. I do not want to be interrupted too often. If the Workingmen had made their canvass on the issue that mortgages should be exempt, they would not have seats on this floor.

MR. REYNOLDS. If the Colonel will allow me, I will answer that question.

MR. BIGGS. Proceed.

MR. REYNOLDS. I am happy to state to the gentleman that the Democratic platform contained no such provision as the one he referred to.

MR. TINNIN. There is no Democratic party in this contest.

MR. BIGGS. I quoted this merely to show where these twenty-five thousand votes went to. It seems to me that the object here is to break up my argument. I propose to go a little farther, and say that every taxpayer in this State shall be taxed on what he is worth, and no more. I believe that is but just, and ought to be engrafted in the Constitution. I know the people desire it, for the very reason that it was the law way back before the Supreme Court made that decision, and there was no complaint from the people then. I think that was the worst decision ever made in the State of California, and we are told here that we must sustain that decision; that if we tax mortgages we will set this State back ten years. Now, does any gentleman believe any such stuff as that? The people were prosperous and contented then. The discontent has grown out of that decision. Why not adopt the report of the committee? I believe in that report. I believe it is better than either of the amendments. It will satisfy the people. Adopt this section and the people will say: "Well done, thou good and faithful servants, thou hast been faithful over few things, we will make you rulers over many." If you do not, this Convention will be a great political graveyard. I say it is the duty of every man to carry out his pledge to the people, and if he can't, he had better resign and go home and let them send some one else. We must engraft this provision in the organic law, that mortgages shall be taxed.

MR. HUESTIS. The question has been suggested by Major Biggs, in regard to the Democratic platform. I find that the Major was right. I have that platform here, and I find just such a clause in it. It says that the taxation of mortgages and solvent debts must be forever prohibited.

MR. BIGGS. You see I was right after all.

MR. TINNIN. I deny that this is the Democratic platform. It is the platform of a few individuals.

MR. BIGGS. Are you the mouthpiece of the Democratic party of this State?

SPEECH OF MR. BARRY.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: I don't intend to take up the time of this Convention. I must say, I am highly gratified at the amusement afforded myself and this committee by the gentleman from Butte, Major Biggs. I am exceedingly gratified, because the Workingmen have scored another point. But, sir, I am not here for the purpose of speaking for future political success for myself. When I stood before the people of my district I proclaimed that securities should be taxed; that the property of the rich should be taxed as well as the little homestead of the poor. If that, sir, is demagogism; if to say that the people of this State shall no longer suffer from the oppressions and burdens of the past; to say that the rich shall pay their share for the support of the government, as well as the poor—if that is demagogism, then, sir, I stand before this Convention and the people of this State as a demagogue. I believe, sir, that when a man is a candidate for a public station, I care not how humble it is; that when he declares himself in favor of a certain proposition, in favor of certain principles which he believes to be right; that he wants the people to understand that if he is elected he will carry out; if he does not do it, I hold, sir, that he is recreant to his trust, recreant to his pledges, recreant to his sense of duty, to himself, and to all sense of honor, when he violates those pledges. I am one of those who believe that pledges and platforms are not molasses to catch flies, but that they are the expression of the will of the people, even when he makes no pledges, when he is elected upon a platform of that character. When the people select him to carry out their wishes it is his duty to do it. I don't wish to be understood as saying that the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds, is disobeying the wishes of the people of that city, but he seems to charge men in this body with being recreant, because they have expressed themselves on this floor in favor of what they consider and believe honestly that the people desire. It is only the demagogue who pretends to acquiesce in the popular will in order to obtain votes. I believe the members on this floor are doing what they believe to be right; that they are trying to carry out the will of the people, as they interpret it; that they are governed by the wishes of the people of this State. I do not want to believe that any man here is governed in his action by purely personal motives; who is willing only to vote and talk to carry out his own personal ends, but I would rather believe that they are acting from honest conviction, for the good of the whole people. That is as it ought to be in this Convention.

As I said in the start, I am in favor of taxing the rich equally with the poor. I am in favor of taxing mortgages and solvent debts. I believe there is a large amount of capital which has all along escaped taxation, which ought to be taxed. Under the decision of the Supreme Court of this State, more than one hundred millions of property were stricken from the assessment roll, which operated to increase the burden of taxation upon the poor, and the working and middle classes. Those who can afford to pay taxes, never pay on what they are worth. It operated as a heavy burden upon those who did not escape by reason of the decision of the Supreme Court. I say one of the great incentives on the part of the people for calling this Convention, was this question of the taxation of mortgages. I apprehend that this body will be willing to abide by this idea, and be governed by it. The only reason there seems to be in the opposition is that it will affect corporations and capitalists generally. Now, sir, I say this because I have heard these remarks myself. Now, I believe our action thus far has shown that we are not controlled by capitalists and corporations. I believe our action on these great questions will convince the people that we are desirous of promoting their best interests. The Supreme Court has decided that certain things are not property, but I believe there will be a majority rolled up in this Convention that will set aside that decision and establish a different rule.

Now, sir, as to the amendments upon this question, I am somewhat inclined to oppose them all. There is not one that fully conforms to my views except the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland, and I would like to have some amendments to that, and that is, that the orphan asylums, and the asylums for the aged and infirm, should be exempt from the provisions of that article. I believe, sir, when this Convention decided that appropriations from the State for this purpose should continue, they did right. We are now trying to extend aid with one hand while we hold it away with the other. I think it is our duty to hold that these institutions should not be taxed. They are doing a grand work for the State. They are performing their work better than the State could do it. I think the Convention thought so when they passed a section which farther guarantees the appropriation. I think they ought to be exempt from taxation, because they are in the same position as institutions controlled by the State.

Now, sir, I would prefer the report of the committee as it came from them, provided they would strike out the words "capital stock of corporations, and joint stock associations." It would do a great injury to the mining interest of this State, and thereby injure the whole State, to tax them twice; it is double taxation, and double taxation injures not simply the miners themselves, but the whole State, and I cannot believe this Convention will do so unwise an act. The mining interest should be encouraged as well as the farming interests. Those who incorporate for the purpose of developing the great mineral resources of the State ought not to be doubly taxed; if you do that you tend to discourage a large class which is doing a great work for the State, which adds wealth to the State, which is one of the most important interests in the State. Mining and farming are the two great leading interests of the State; they should not be discouraged by loading them down with taxation. I will also say that for the same reason I do not think that growing crops should be taxed. The farmer is taxed for all his personal property and real estate. It is true that the Assessors in many cases do not do their duty, but that is the fault of the people in electing that class of men. I believe the people will hereafter elect that class of men who will do their duty; who will assess property for what it is worth. I believe when the Assessor assesses the land for what it is worth, and the personal property for what it is worth, that is all that should be taxed.

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Division being called for, the committee divided, and the motion prevailed by a vote of 73 ayes to 42 noes.

So ordered.

IN RELATION TO ADJOURNING SINE DIE.

MR. FINNEY. Mr. President: I wish to call up and move the adoption of the resolution sent up to the desk, in relation to adjournment, and if I can get a second I wish to say a few words in relation to it.

THE SECRETARY read the resolutions, as follows:

WHEREAS, This Constitutional Convention was ordered by a small majority of the people of the State, showing that they were unprepared for any radical change in the organic law; and, whereas, this Convention was called by a hostile Legislature, which so framed the calling Act as to render impossible the completion of its work in any such thoughtful and finished manner as to make it acceptable to the people, or a credit to the State; and, whereas, the time fixed by the Legislature for the session of this Convention has now expired, and the State authorities seem disposed to construe against it every technicality of the law; and, whereas, it is now evident that only a doubtful quorum can be kept together, which will not fully represent the various interests of the State; and, whereas, it seems to us desirable to resubmit the whole matter to the people of the State, that they may take such action therein as may to them appear best; therefore,

Resolved, That the President appoint a committee of five, whose duty it shall be to prepare an address to the people of the State, setting forth briefly the various causes and circumstances which have prevented the Convention from completing its labors, and requesting them to elect a Legislature which shall make the necessary appropriations for the completion of the work of the Convention, if, on full consideration, they desire it to be completed; the address to be reported on or before the sixth day of January, instant.

Resolved, That when this Convention adjourns on the sixth day of January, it stands adjourned to the first Monday in September, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty, at which time it shall convene and proceed with its work, provided the Legislature shall have made the appropriations necessary for the expenses of the Convention.

MR. FINNEY. Mr. President——

MR. WHITE. I rise to a point of order. Is there anything before this Convention?

THE PRESIDENT. Yes, sir; the resolutions are before the Convention, and the author is entitled to the floor.

SPEECH OF MR. FINNEY.

MR. FINNEY. Mr. President and gentlemen of the Convention: Before going into my reasons for offering these resolutions, I wish to make, in justice to myself, one statement. I have been here in attendance upon this Convention from the start, and I have up to this time occupied less than thirty-five minutes of the time of this Convention in all that I have said and done upon this floor. If, therefore, I shall be unable to finish in fifteen minutes what I have to say, I hope I may receive the indulgence of the Convention. I also wish to clear up, in a few words, a little of this excited rubbish that has drawn itself around the offering of these resolutions. I offered them the other day for reading, as has been the custom in this Convention, and as I believe is right, that no important matter should be sprung unadvisedly—that they may have time to be considered. I need not remind the gentlemen of the Convention of the peculiar courtesy with which these resolutions—certainly unopprobrious in themselves and not improper to be introduced here—were received by the tender consciences of some gentlemen, and I use that word in its parliamentary sense. One gentleman, for whom I had the highest respect, and with whom I had counseled, who, while not giving his adhesion to the idea, still professed to me that they were unobjectionable and perfectly proper, made the sneering remark, "Sensational!" I beg to assure the Convention that the sensational idea never presented itself to my mind. It was the furthest possible thought from my mind. My desire was simply and alone to call the attention of the Convention to certain things which seemed to me we are apt to lose sight of. I disclaim entirely any design to lecture or tutor this Convention. I recognize myself as one of your weakest and most youthful members. Another person sprang to his feet and, in an excited manner, impugned my motives. He sneered at the proposition, and said the matter was a disgrace to the author and an insult to the Convention. There are persons from whom such talk is the highest compliment that can be received.

I throw myself upon the Convention to know if they believe, for one moment, that any intention of insult to this body can come from me? The word "traitor" was hissed through the room. In the name of God, gentlemen, traitor to whom? Traitor to what? Was it treason to my constituents? Although repeatedly urged to do so, they have ever refused, up to this day, to instruct me as to my duty on this floor. Was it treason to party? Gentlemen of the Convention, I know no party here. In a Democratic district I was elected by three fourths of the votes cast, against the regular Democratic nominee. All parties combined, and requested me to take this place, and serve them here one hundred days. Was it treason to the State? That suggestion does not come well from those who stayed at home, as against a man who for years marched under the stars and stripes in defense of his country. The word was unworthy to be uttered here; unworthy of the men, whoever they may be, and I know them not, who uttered it. Since then it has been called a political dodge. I scorn it. Every man in this world who knows me, knows, that as for politics, I have no ambition. I have ever refused to have anything to do with it. I made a vow, as a boy, that I never would take an office within the gift of the people, and if my place here is an office, I have, for the first time in my life, violated that vow. And I wish to say another word in justice to my friend Johnson, the Secretary of this Convention. An intimation of this thing was published, several days ago, in the Oakland "Times," and it has been charged that if I had no political ends to subserve that I had done it as his toady. Whether it is a Caliban or a Miranda, this child is mine. I talked the matter over, before I offered it, with a good many of the gentlemen of this Convention, and I mentioned it to the Secretary, among others, who happened to be in my room as I was working upon it. It was a surprise to him, as it was to many others; and in a conversation in the "Times" editorial rooms a few days afterwards, the matter was mentioned by him, and unknown to me or him, and without prompting, it was mentioned editorially the next day, by the acting editor. And perhaps, gentlemen, it may turn out that the avidity with which the editor, in daily communication with the people all over the State, seized upon the idea, may go to show more closely the views of the people of the State. A Convention that can calmly vote down the American flag, and coolly sit here day after day and listen to imprecations and threats to flush the sewers of San Francisco with human blood, and devastate the fairest portions of our land, provided this Convention did not raise the flag of rebellion against the General Government, and the moment an intimation was offered that they were unable to accomplish miracles; the moment their amour propre was touched in the least, could be thrown into such a pitiable state of excitement, demonstrated that there was a weakness that certainly needed no such evidence.

As I said, I have been here from the start. I have missed but two roll-calls. One day I was confined to my bed by sickness, and the half-day after Christmas that the Convention attempted to meet, I was absent on business. I am willing and glad to give the State the benefit of that day and a half, and stay here until Tuesday night, and fill to the full extent the contract which I made with the State to serve for one hundred days in the preparation of a Constitution. How many gentlemen are there here who can say more? I have carefully watched the action of this Convention—perhaps more carefully than many who have taken a more active part in the proceedings on the floor. My physical infirmity has prevented me from doing and saying many things, and perhaps the Convention is not sorry for it. I have tried to believe, and I still really believe, that this Convention is a great educational institution. I do believe that forty elections could not have brought together a more intelligent body, a more able body, or a body better fitted and calculated to carry out the objects for which the Convention was assembled. But, gentlemen, the magnitude of the work was underrated. Look at it for a moment. Just think what the work was that was given us to do. Our coast line extends over a distance equal to that from Boston to South Carolina. The interests embodied in these districts are as diversified as those in the district extending from the pine woods of Maine and Wisconsin to the orange groves of Florida and the cattle-covered plains of Texas. Every interest is represented here in our midst. More than that, we have a mining interest that is not equaled in the world More than that, we have a giant public interest growing up among us in the shape of an irrigation system which will, in a few years, equal the old time works of the far East. And all these interests—conflicting interests many of them—with all their industries, prejudices, and passions, were thrown into the cauldron here together to be reconciled and conformed one to the other. Each one felt a particular interest in his district. A great many were, to some extent, ignorant of the wants and industries of the other sections. At any rate, they did not realize their wants so keenly as they did those of their own districts. Even metropolitan San Francisco claims often, without blushing, that she is the State. Her interests are to be regarded, as the interests of other sections, in proportion to their magnitude, but she is not the State. It is perfectly evident that so coming together—such men from such districts, representing such interests, coming together here—an educational process was necessary before the work could intelligently commence. Delegates must rise to broader views here. They must see and know and understand the interests of the whole State. Then, if they could be reconciled here in the Convention, so that each man would think that the thing that was done was the best under the circumstances that could be done for the whole State, it was reasonable to suppose that when they went home they would educate their people to the same views. The only hope on the face of the earth for success—the only hope that a Constitution could be adopted by this Convention that would afterwards be ratified by the people—lay in the fact that if the delegates would come here, and, seeing the whole ground, make up their minds that the thing done was the best that could be done; that they would go home and educate their people to the same belief, and that their labors would secure a ratification of the Constitution.

But there were many of the delegates who came here with the express intention of not voting to support any Constitution that might be made. I say it not as a slur upon delegates, but simply this, that they represented a constituency who believed, with them, that changes in the Constitution were not necessary, and were dangerous. Under such fear they came here representing that idea. Others came here without seeming to rise to the dignity of the case at all, as you have heard often yourselves. As, for instance, the other day I heard a gentleman say he was not going home to spend Sunday, but "would stay and coach for the debate" coming on the next week. The highest idea he seemed to have was that it is a country school house debating society. An earnest, hearty, thorough appreciation of the work before the Convention has been lacking to a certain extent. This has been commented upon by the press, it has been commented upon by letters, it has been commented upon by the people of this State. I do not say it of myself, I say what others have said; I say what every man knows is said. The country has not yet got over the nausea occasioned by the tremendous mass of propositions and amendments which came pouring in the first few days of the session, when the people wanted but a few simple amendments to cure a few glaring evils, and it has been freely said, and said with a sneer, that if the multiplication table could come before the Convention fifty members would desire to amend it, and if the Decalogue or Lord's Prayer were offered here they would be torn to pieces, and a substitute offered. This shows one thing, and that is that the people of this State were not ready for any change. They had no such well defined grievances, they had no such well defined intentions in their minds when they sent their delegates, that they could come here, knowing what was the thing to do, and to say let the rest alone—hands off. It seems much more the idea of delegates to find a change which they can get hold of, so as to make their constituents believe that they are doing something to earn their regular ten dollars a day, than any earnest desire to remedy an evil that exists, ascertained and known to all. Now, the hope of their reconciling feelings, interests, and wishes is gone. The great idea of the Convention is hopeless.

MR. HEISKELL. If the fifteen-minute rule applies here, I shall object.

THE PRESIDENT. I will notify the Convention when the time expires.

MR. FINNEY. From thirty to fifty members have of late been absent daily; those, too, who must frequently and necessarily be absent, and it is anxiously asked if this Convention can keep a quorum together. The work of a bare quorum of this Convention must of necessity be bad work. The essential element of success is wanting in the Convention. We desire that the entire interests of the State shall be harmonized and brought together. A rump Convention can make only a rump Constitution. I find that twenty-five committees have been appointed to prepare work on which we must act. Of the twenty-five, eighteen have reported; and of the eighteen, only eight have been passed upon. Of the eight, only two should have consumed more than a day's time.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman's time has expired.

[Cries of "Leave!" "Leave!"]

MR. WHITE. I object.

MR. HEISKELL. I object.

MR. HUESTIS. I object.

THE PRESIDENT put it to a vote, and leave was granted the speaker to proceed.

MR. FINNEY. Gentlemen, I thank you. The ninth report is now being considered. Of all the sections of that report we have not yet finished the second section. We have nine reports now on the file waiting action. Six or seven of them are of the greatest importance, as much so as any that have been or can be considered. And yet, gentlemen, we have not even got out of the Committee of the Whole. And all this work must be gone over again in the Convention, and that the work in the Convention will not be slight, I ask each member to bear me out. How often do we hear the remark: "We will fix that when we get into Convention;" "Never mind that, let it go until we get into Convention?" Every member knows how hastily things have been passed over in the Committee of the Whole, with the expressed design that when we get into Convention, where perhaps the circumstances surrounding the subject will be more auspicious, the work can be better done. It is often said: "We will force things; we will move the previous question right along. Discussion will not be allowed." Gentlemen, this is the idlest of talk. In talking it, we simply show that we do not appreciate the situation. You cannot cram things down men's throats. Members must feel that when a thing is done, it is the best thing that, under the circumstances, was possible to be done. They must not feel that their views have been slighted and overridden. If there is any deep feeling of dissatisfaction among the members, when the work is done, where is there any hope of harmonizing the people? Any crude, hurried work will prove unsatisfactory both to us and to the people. Then, when the work is finished, it must pass through the hands of the Committee on Revision, and the work of that committee will not be slight. Then, again, it must come before the Convention for its approval. That Committee on Revision will be more fortunate than any committee we have yet had, if they are not extensively snubbed and their work extensively reconsidered. No body of men ever worked more industriously than this Convention. But we undertook too much. The work was underrated; it was not understood. If we undertake to finish it, we will slight it, and the results will be crude and unsatisfactory. Now, nobody will be hurt. There is no confession of weakness. There is no lowering of dignity, if we simply say to the people, you have given us a task to perform and we have not had time to do it to your satisfaction. If you want us to finish it, give us more time. It is not consistent with a decent self-respect to stay here and hurriedly and imperfectly perform the work for fear the people will never let us try our hands again.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. President: As far as this resolution is concerned, the gentleman had a perfect right to offer it, and no personal reflections as to his motives are called for or are justified. He is entitled, as a member of this body, to have his resolution respectfully considered at the hands of this Convention. But having said this much, I disagree altogether with the resolution. I think, sir, that all the business can be done under the five minute rule of speaking. I think the speeches made amount to very little else than talk. We can finish up in ten days, after the one hundred days have expired, all the work we have to do. That is the whole of it. Now, sir, there is no necessity for us to precipitate ourselves home, or to serve notice on the people in the manner of a common laborer, that if he is not paid next Monday he is going to quit. I do not see any propriety or sense in that course. Now, sir, there is a suggestion in an evening paper of San Francisco of last evening which I think eminently worthy of consideration, and that is that we finish the finance report, and the matter of water rights perhaps, and perhaps the matter of ocean freights, which will not take more than an hour apiece, and we shall have done all that is really necessary to be done here. As to the judicial department, if nobody else does, I shall move to adopt the article in the old Constitution in place of it. I think the amendments proposed by the committee will injure the character of the Courts, and increase the expense fifty thousand dollars a year, and be worse in every respect than the present system. Therefore, I do not, for one, propose to vote for the report of that committee. Now, sir, I hold in my hand a note from a gentleman who has filled some of the highest positions in this State, a man of good common sense and business capacity. He says the great incentive in calling this Convention was our system of taxation, so greatly impaired by decisions of the Supreme Court. If there be any remedy provided in the new Constitution, its ratification will follow. Every item of property, of whatever character, must be taxed. The people do not want any homestead exemption. They want taxation equal and uniform. Tax all equally, he says, and the burden will be light.

I know that this resolution recites that the Legislature making the appropriations was hostile. That is true. I know that the monopoly and corporation organs have prophesied that we will never get through, and that whatever we do will be voted down. But, sir, the Constitution, in my opinion, will be ratified by twenty thousand majority. This is a work in the interest of the people. The people have demanded it, and we can bid defiance to corporations and monopolists.

MR. INMAN. Mr. President: I don't suppose any one wants to hear discussion, and I do hope the Convention will meet this thing squarely, and settle the matter now.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. President: I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

MR. HUESTIS. I second the motion.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

The ayes and noes were demanded by Messrs. Beerstecher, Brown, Inman, White, and Heiskell.

The roll was called, and the Convention refused to adopt the resolution by the following vote:

MR. INMAN. What has become of the memorial on the Chinese question?

THE PRESIDENT. It is being engrossed.

REVENUE AND TAXATION.

MR. AYERS. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to consider the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. MORELAND. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Howard, Perry, Shurtleff, Smith, of Santa Clara, and Weller.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried on a division vote—ayes, 57; noes, 44.

MR. EDGERTON. I desire to state, before the vote is taken, that I am paired with Mr. Ohleyer. He would vote aye, and I would vote no.

MR. BLACKMER. I am paired with Mr. Estee. He votes no, and I vote aye.

MR. TULLY. I am paired with Mr. Wilson, of San Francisco, who will vote no, and I would vote aye.

MR. HALE. I call for a division of the question, if that be permissible.

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Division being called for, the committee divided, and the amendment was lost—ayes, 47; noes, 68.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale.

MR. TULLY. I am paired with Mr. Wilson, of San Francisco, who would vote aye, while I would vote no.

MR. EDGERTON. I am paired with Mr. Ohleyer, who would vote no, while I vote aye.

Division was called for, the committee divided, and the amendment was rejected—ayes, 36; noes, 76.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I send up a substitute to section two, in behalf of a majority of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation. We have remodeled it in order to remove some ambiguities.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 2. All property, including franchises, capital stock of corporations or joint stock associations, and solvent debts, deducting from such debts indebtedness due to bona fide residents of this State, and excluding growing crops, private property exempt from taxation under the laws of the United States, public property belonging to the United States or to this State, or any municipality thereof, and all property and the proceeds thereof used exclusively for charitable purposes, shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law."

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer a substitute.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at present.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I desire simply to state to the committee that the only change made by this is to substitute the words "from such" for "therefrom," in line two.

MR. REYNOLDS. I desire to offer a substitute.

THE CHAIRMAN. Not in order at present.

MR. REYNOLDS. The gentleman offers an amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. He offers a substitute for the whole section.

MR. REYNOLDS. Then I offer this as an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"All property shall be subject to taxation, except as follows: First—That belonging to the United States. Second—That made exempt from taxation by the laws of the United States. Third—That belonging to this State or some political subdivision thereof. Fourth—Growing crops. No deduction shall be made from any assessment on account of debts of the person assessed. Taxes assessed to or paid by any debtor shall be at the time of such assessment or payment a set-off against the debt to an amount equal to such proportion as the debt bears to the whole amount of property assessed to him."

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: This is the Boggs amendment pure and simple, without any of the trimmings that have been sought to be incorporated into it. I assert, sir, without fear of contradiction, that this is the only true policy of assessing, to assess the property of the State in the hands of the owners, and then stop, and then, if you please, leave the adjustment of debts and credits to the citizens themselves. When you have assessed a man for all he is worth, and collected the tax thereon, you have cleaned up that job. If he happens to be a debtor, and you wish to give him a set-off against the debts he may owe, you can make the tax receipt a legal set-off, anywhere, in any Court, not only as to mortgages, but as to every other debt. This amendment contains no other than the usual statutory exemptions, all property belonging to the United States, and so on, and growing crops. There has been so much said upon this subject that it is useless to go into a discussion of it. There can be no doubt but that this is the correct mode of assessing property.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. TINNIN. I believe this subject has been fully discussed, and I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Howard, Ayers, Terry, and Larkin.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment, offered by Mr. Reynolds.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton.

Lost.

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. I offer a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"All property in this State shall be taxed. Franchises, money, and credits represented by mortgage, bond, or note for money loaned, and solvent credits not represented by securities, shall be considered property, and be taxed in proportion to its value as directed by law. Property exempted by, or belonging to the United States, or to this State, or any political subdivision thereof, and growing crops, shall be exempt from taxation. The Legislature may exempt specified solvent credits."

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Laws shall be passed taxing all moneys, credits secured by mortgage or trust deed, or unsecured investments in bonds, franchises, and all other property, real and personal, according to its true value in money, except as hereafter provided; but the Legislature may authorize, except in the case of credits secured by mortgage or trust deed, a deduction from credits of debts due to bona fide residents of this State. Growing crops and such property as may be used exclusively for public schools, and such as may belong to the United States, this State, any county, or municipal corporation within this State, shall be exempt from taxation."

SPEECH OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say that the first part of this amendment is the same as in the Constitutions of North Carolina, Ohio, and I believe Arkansas, and one other State which I do not call to mind. They provide that laws shall be passed taxing all moneys and credits. Now, I have used that much of the phraseology. I should have added, also, investments in bonds. There has been something said about including official bonds, and bonds of different kinds. But this phraseology cannot be misconstrued. It says investments in bonds. This same provision is found in four different Constitutions of this Union. Now, I have added also, credits secured by trust deed or mortgage, and in order that there may be no controversy that these credits are property, I have added, "all other property, real and personal," so as to show clearly what is property. It is also stated here, following the language of these other Constitutions, that this property shall be taxed according to its true money value, except as hereafter provided. This exception was put there because I think section five will be substantially adopted. Section five should be adopted for this reason, because the interest of the real estate is taxed, and the interest of the mortgage is taxed. The mortgage constitutes a part of the land. I say section five is good, though it may need a little amending. Therefore, I suppose the committee will adopt section five; and I say, "except as hereafter provided," so as to cover the taxation of capital stock of corporations, and the subsequent section, which is a different process from direct taxation. I have added there, also, that the Legislature may authorize, except in cases of debts secured by trust deed or mortgages, a deduction of debts from credits, where the parties are bona fide residents of this State. It may possibly become a hardship by and by, and I have put this in so that if the people demand it the Legislature can make the change. I do not want to lay down an iron rule in that regard. In the case of mortgages and trust deeds section five will provide. This same provision is in the Constitution of Ohio, adopted in eighteen hundred and seventy-three and four. The exemption clause is substantially the same as that in the Moreland amendment, only the phraseology is a little different, being taken from the Missouri Constitution, except as to growing crops. I think, sir, that the adoption of this amendment will be satisfactory. I do not think there is any ambiguity about it, and I believe the principles are right.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I was about to make a motion, and I ask leave to make an explanation. The motion is, that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again, for the purpose of moving that the two amendments before the committee be printed. There are plenty of sections yet to be disposed of. There are a number of gentlemen who have not had time to study these amendments as closely as they desire, before voting on them. I therefore move that the committee rise.

Lost.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I second the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma, and also call attention to one point in that amendment which, in my judgment, has not yet been presented to this Convention, and I deem it one of a good deal of importance. It is this: that the word property includes all kinds of property, assessed at its true value in money. Now, I believe that it is the judgment of a large majority of this Convention that these evidences of indebtedness should be taxed. I think it is evident to all that this is the sense of this Convention. Now, if these are taxed, they will be taxed at their true value in money, and those who are investing in them will pay taxes on their true value. If that be so, then we should see that all property in the State, no matter of what nature, whether solvent credits, real estate, or personal property, should be also taxed at its true value in money, or else we will do a great injustice to all who are taxed upon money loaned. Consequently, all property in the State should be taxed at its true value in money, and then you have equality.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman——

MR. REYNOLDS. I would like to ask the gentleman if he thinks equality consists in taxing secured debts, and allowing unsecured debts to go free?

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Los Angeles.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I do not rise for the purpose of discussing the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma, though I favor it. But I think we have debated this question long enough, and I call for the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Terry, Freeman, Brown, and Huestis.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma.

Division was called for, the committee divided, and the amendment was adopted—ayes, 75; noes, 24.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

Adopted.

MR. TINNIN. I send up an amendment to be added to the end of the section.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order.

MR. TINNIN. I propose to add to it.

THE CHAIRMAN. You cannot add to it or detract from it. The Secretary will read section three.

MR. McCALLUM. The amendment adopted was a substitute.

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir; and stands as section two of the report. The Secretary will read section four; section three was adopted.

THE SECRETARY read section four:

SEC. 4. Every tract of land containing, within its boundaries, more than one government section, shall be assessed, for the purpose of taxation, by sections or fractional sections, and where the section lines have not been established by authority of the United States, the Assessor and County Surveyor shall establish the section lines in conformity with the government system of surveys as nearly as practicable. Each section or fractional section shall be valued and assessed separately, and for the purpose of subdividing and assessing the Assessor and Surveyor, and their assistants, may enter upon any land within their respective counties.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: The amendment offered by Judge Terry was accepted by Mr. Blackmer. I desire to state that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Joaquin is entirely acceptable to the committee. The other amendment I am opposed to. I think it is unjust that the expense of these surveys should be imposed upon the owners of the land. The survey is made for the benefit of the State, and for the benefit of the counties, and the political subdivisions thereof, that they may all derive additional revenues from the property of the State. The object is to benefit the public, and not to benefit the owner of the land, and the owner of the land ought not to be made to pay for it. As to the expense, it will amount to a mere bagatelle.

MR. TERRY. There is very little land that has not been surveyed.

REMARKS OF MR. GREGG.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: I intended to make a motion to strike out all after the word "section" in line three. The reason is this: As I understand it, the land from Lake County to Vallejo is all covered with grants. The original grant lines meander with the running streams. The result would be that the land would have to be surveyed, and it would do no good, except to make a big job for County Surveyors and Assessors. Again, in Kern County there are grants of perhaps two hundred thousand acres. I am told in the Surveyor-General's office that the per diem is six dollars a day. There will be a chance to roll up an enormous bill. Of course, I recognize as well as any gentleman the good that is expected to come from these surveys in certain counties. Judge Fawcett offered this proposition in the committee. He says there is a great deal of open land that escapes fair taxation by reason of being returned in large tracts. Admitted, but that is the fault of the Assessor, because he can just as well see the land and estimate its value without surveying it as he can to survey it. The Supervisors can raise the assessment if it is too low. If there have been such outrages, why is it that nobody has complained? Let the Assessor go over these tracts of land and fix a fair valuation upon them, as they do in my county. I hope there will be no such chance offered for a job as this affords. Some counties are entirely surveyed, and there will be no expense there, while others are not. I wish to strike out all after the word "section," in the third line, down to and including the word "practicable."

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I hope, sir, that section four will be stricken out. If it is necessary to provide for surveys in order to make an estimate of value of some particular great ranch, it is entirely competent for the Legislature to do it. Sir, the remedy for these abuses is not in the County Boards of Revision, but in the State Board. It is provided for in the Code now, and would be continued under this Constitution. While we had the State Board of Equalization in operation, we were fast making encroachments upon inequalities in land assessment in this State. We propose now to reëstablish that Board. All these Boards of Equalization are now powerless, unless a regular lawsuit is commenced, and those lawsuits are surrounded by technicalities common to lawsuits in the State of California. And when you go to the assessment roll, and turn over the leaves, and find that a hundred acre tract is assessed at one hundred dollars an acre, while a ten thousand acre tract is assessed at two dollars and eighty cents, and we know the Board is powerless to remedy it, certainly every candid man will admit that it is time for a change. It can only be remedied by a sworn complaint, and that complaint has to be heard, surrounded by all the technicalities of Courts of justice. Summonses have to be served, time set, witnesses summoned from different parts of the county, and then the question comes up, who is to furnish the money for all this? Who is going to be patriotic enough to begin a lawsuit against his neighbor, in order to put some money in the county treasury, in which he has no more interest than any other citizen of the county? Who is going to incur the displeasure of the men who own these vast possessions? I tell you they will not do it. We want the County Board to have power to do it. The Board should be vested with power by this Convention to raise or lower, on their own motion, any assessment on the list, and the same power should be extended to the State Board. And then, if there is any necessity for a clause like this, the Legislature will be competent to put it upon the books, but let us not put it in the Constitution. It is too much like details, and is uncalled for. I hope, therefore, that section four will be stricken out.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section will not be stricken out. I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Kern, to strike out all after the word "section," down to the word "practicable." I am in favor of it, because if the survey be necessary the Legislature can provide for it. The remarks of the gentleman from Monterey are applicable. There can be no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Kern. I am in favor of retaining the balance of the report, because there is no section in the whole report that will do so much to prevent land monopoly. If the lands in this State are taxed according to their real value, the owner of eleven leagues will not long retain his eleven leagues. He will find it to his interest to sell the land and put the money at interest. That will be a perfectly just and legitimate mode of breaking up land monopoly, and I think it ought to be adopted by all means. It is a movement in the right direction, and it is a movement of which the land owner cannot complain, for he has no right to complain when his land is assessed at its true value, as other people's property is assessed.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of striking out the whole section. I cannot see the good of spending public money for the purpose of surveying this land. These large land owners, when they see we are going to assess their land, will be very anxious to sell, and they will be very glad to have it surveyed off in sections at the expense of the State. It does look to me like this is a provision in the interest of the men who own the land. We are inaugurating a system of surveys here which will cost more than all the revenue which the land will bring in. I am in hopes this whole section will go out.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: The committee the other day adopted this proposition, that cultivated and uncultivated land of the same quality and similarly located, should be assessed at the same value. Here is a man who has six hundred and forty acres under a high state of cultivation, improved with buildings, etc., and immediately joining it is a Spanish grant, or tract of land, with the title clear, fifty thousand to one hundred thousand acres, all in one body. A great deal of it is of the same quality as the six hundred and forty acres, and a good deal of it is not. How are you going to carry out this provision which we have already adopted? It cannot be done. There has to be a subdivision of this land into small tracts. I can see no objection to taking out that part of section four included in this amendment. But it seems to me section three will be rendered nugatory unless we adopt at least a part of section four. For myself I regard it as a mere matter of legislation, entirely unnecessary to be put into the Constitution. But a majority of the committee thought it ought to be incorporated into the organic law. That was the view they entertained. By subdividing these immense tracts of land the Assessor gets the benefit of comparisons, as he steps from one section to another.

MR. REED. Mr. Chairman: I have prepared a substitute which I will read:

"Every tract of land containing within its boundaries more than one government section, shall be assessed and valued, for the purposes of taxation, by sections or fractions of sections, in such manner as the Legislature may by law provide."

I will offer that when it is in order.

MR. EDGERTON. In behalf of the committee, I believe that will be satisfactory.

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Yolo will prevail. I had occasion to be in the Surveyor-General's office yesterday, and I made some inquiries in regard to this matter, and I found that Government pays six dollars per mile for sectionizing land. That would come to thirty-six dollars for surveying each section, and there would be a tremendous job in it. Let the Legislature arrange this matter as they may see fit.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: While I think it very advisable that these large tracts of land should be divided so as to be assessed according to their value in different localities, still, I think this section devised by the committee, as well as the amendments, are bad. We have a very large number of these tracts, and sometimes portions of them are entirely worthless, while there are many choice spots. Now, it would be very desirable to have the tract disposed of in some way so that we could get at the choice spots without surveying all the comparatively worthless land. But this section four, as well as the amendments before the Convention, contemplates that these large tracts shall be, where there is no Government section line run, that Government section lines shall be run. That is, if a man has a ranch of eleven leagues, and the Government lines have not been run, that the only mode of subdivision is by Government survey. Now, I know of my own personal knowledge of several instances in this State where large tracts of land have been divided without any reference to Government lines. I know a large ranch in San Bernardino County that is divided up in this way. The Government lines have not been run, yet it is divided up into eighty-acre tracts, so that the Assessor has no difficulty in assessing it. A great portion of it is still owned by one man, and amounts to more than one Government section, still it is divided so that the Assessor can assess it in eighty-acre pieces if he wishes to. I know of several such instances. They are laid off in tracts of twenty, forty, and one hundred acres, according as is most convenient. In such cases it is entirely unnecessary for the State of California to require that these lands should be surveyed off in Government sections. Gentlemen tell me they know of large ranches which have been subdivided in the same way. Sometimes they are divided and bounded by running streams, in order to make more convenient farms. Where a man already has his land subdivided in that way, there is no need of requiring anything more.

MR. AYERS. Would not fractional sections cover that point?

MR. ROLFE. I think the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Yolo, Mr. Reed, will cover that point, "in such manner as the Legislature may provide." There is another thing, Government sections are not recognized except where Government runs the lines. This State undertook to survey off the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, for the purpose of obtaining title, and the Supreme Court has decided, in a case in the Twenty-seventh California, and also in the thirtieth volume, that until the Government lines are run by the Government of the United States, no such things exist as sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections. This section says the County Surveyor shall establish Government section lines. It would be useless, for the Supreme Court would not hold it valid. The amendment of the gentleman from Yolo will probably cover the ground. I hope the others will be voted down, and something like this adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman at whose solicitation this provision was adopted by the committee, is absent from the Convention to-day. The reasons which he gave have some weight in them: I will try and reproduce them as near as I can. Judge Fawcett was the man who advocated this amendment—the theory was this: that if a man has a tract of forty acres, or one hundred and sixty acres, it is assessed at its value, or very near its value, for the reason that a small tract of land is salable at a reasonable price at any time, but a large tract of land, say fifty thousand acres, or one hundred thousand acres, or two hundred thousand acres, would be much more difficult to sell in a body, and that the means by which the owners of the large tracts of land shirk a reasonable assessment, is to say that the tract will only bring so much if offered at forced sale in a body. Under that pretense these large tracts of land have been assessed at a mere nominal figure. If these lands were required to be sectionized, and each piece assessed by itself, then these men will have no opportunity to avoid a reasonable assessment. But it seems to me the provision is in very bad shape. For instance, "every tract of land containing within its boundaries more than one Government section."

MR. EDGERTON. I will ask leave to present an amendment which will meet that suggestion, "owned or held in one body."

MR. CROSS. I think that would improve it some. However, no such amendment is before the committee, and we come to the next proposition. That they shall be divided into sections, or fractions of sections. The remarks of Judge Rolfe were to the point. I know a tract of land in Yuba County, perhaps, of forty thousand acres, the Johnson grant. That was all surveyed, and the government exterior boundary lines run when the land was patented. He afterwards sold off tracts, of which the lines ran diagonally. It has been divided off and is occupied in small tracts. Now, if the latter part of the provision is adopted, that immense tract of land would have to be resurveyed, so as to be able to assess it. And what benefit will it be? Why, none at all. It is now divided into small tracts. These tracts can be assessed. The improvements are not hard to find. It seems to me to adopt the latter part of this section would be an absurdity. If these large tracts of land be divided into quarter sections, without reference to government lines, the Assessor will be able to assess it at its actual value. The latter part of the section is objectionable; also, where it says each section and fractional section shall be assessed separately. This refers to the previous part of the section, where it says they must be according to government survey, so that a man who owns twenty acres may have it assessed in three different parcels. Now, if you lay down an iron rule like this it will be a good job for the surveyor. I am therefore in favor of the Reed amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer.

MR. REED. Mr. Chairman: I now offer this as a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Every tract of land containing within its boundaries more than one government section shall be assessed and valued for the purpose of taxation by sections or fractions of sections in such manner as the Legislature may by law provide."

The amendment offered by Mr. Blackmer was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Yolo, Mr. Reed.

MR. STEELE. I offer the following amendment, to be added:

"Provided, that all land in this State included within the boundaries of Spanish grants, which have been subdivided by private survey, though the lines of said subdivision do not conform to the lines established by the United States in this State, shall be assessed in subdivisions or tracts not exceeding six hundred and forty acres."

MR. ROLFE. I will inform the gentleman that there is but few Spanish grants in this State. There are a great many Mexican grants, but they are different.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. STUART. Mr. Chairman: I call for the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Ayers, Evey, West, and Wilson.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. Steele.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Yolo, Mr. Reed.

Adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section five.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 5. A mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation, be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby. Except as to railroad and other quasi-public corporations, in case of debts so secured, the value of the property affected by such mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or obligation, less the value of such security, shall be assessed and taxed to the owner of the property, and the value of such security shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof, in the county in which the property affected thereby is situate. The taxes so levied shall be a lien upon the property and security, respectively, and may be paid by either party to such security; if paid by the owner of the security, the tax so levied upon the property affected thereby shall become a part of the debt so secured; if the owner of the property shall pay the tax so levied on such security, it shall constitute a payment thereon, and to the extent of such payment, a full discharge thereof.

MR. EVEY. Mr. Chairman: I offer a substitute for the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 5. A mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation by which a debt is secured, shall be assessed and taxed to the holder of such security, and be deducted from the value of the individual piece or parcel of property affected by such security, and the value of such security shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof, and in the county in which the property affected thereby is situated. The taxes so levied shall be a lien upon the property and security, respectively, and may be paid by either party to such security. If paid by the owner of such security the tax so levied upon the property affected thereby shall become a part of the debt so secured; if the owner of the property shall pay the tax so levied on such security it shall constitute a payment thereon, and to the extent of such payment a full discharge thereof."

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. I ask the author if he supported the Johnson amendment? There is a direct conflict between the section proposed by the gentleman, and the Johnson amendment. The Johnson amendment provided that there should be no deductions at all upon credit secured by mortgages. The gentleman had better refer to that section as adopted, which says that the Legislature may authorize such deductions, except in the case of mortgages and trust deeds. There can be no doubt about that. It allows no deductions from this class of debts whatever. "The Legislature may authorize, except in the case of credits secured by mortgage or trust deed," etc. That is to say, the Legislature may authorize the deduction of debts from credits, except in the case of mortgages or trust deeds, in which case no such deductions shall be made.

MR. BEERSTECHER. It seems to me there is no trouble about this at all. It simply means that you may set off any indebtedness as against any credit, except a credit secured by mortgage. There is no confusion at all.

MR. EDGERTON. It means just what it says. Let us see. If I should owe my friend Ayers five hundred dollars, and he should owe me two hundred dollars, and there is no mortgage, the Legislature may authorize a set-off; but if my claim is secured by mortgage, there can be no set-off.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I don't agree with the gentleman at all. This is a mere question of power. Surely, the author, the gentleman from Sonoma, did not so understand it, because he stated that he was in favor of the fifth section. I think these two provisions should stand together and be construed together.

MR. EDGERTON. It is a mere question of power as to debts not secured by mortgage, because the Legislature has power to authorize a set-off in that regard. But the Legislature is prohibited in the case of credits secured by mortgages.

MR. AYERS. The Legislature is inhibited from making offsets in these things, because they are made in the Constitution itself.

MR. TERRY. There is no conflict between the sections here. They are intended to stand together. It is not intended to have an offset in favor of a mortgage, because the mortgage is treated as an interest in the land.

MR. EDGERTON. I am not talking about section five. I am talking about the substitute offered by Mr. Evey.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. The difference between the section reported by the committee and the substitute is, that the latter provides an exception: "except as to railroads and other quasi-public corporations." It seems to me the exception is a very important one.

MR. BARRY. I think the committee can act more intelligently after lunch, and I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

RECESS.

The hour for recess having arrived, the Convention took a recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M. President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

BOX RENT.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I have here a bill handed me by the Sergeant-at-Arms for box rent at the Post Office. I send it up, with the request that it go to the Committee on Contingent Expenses.

So referred.

NOTICE TO AMEND RULE FORTY-THREE.

MR. NOEL. Mr. President: I desire to give notice that, to-morrow, I shall move to amend Rule Forty-three so as to read as follows:

"RULE FORTY-THREE.

"No member shall speak more than once on one question, nor more than ten minutes at a time, except the Chairman of a standing committee, who may speak twice on the same question, and shall be allowed thirty minutes each time. This rule shall not be suspended except by unanimous consent."

Laid over for one day.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Three days' leave of absence was granted to Mr. Lindow.

PROPOSITION—TRADEMARKS.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. President: I ask leave to introduce a proposition out of order.

THE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the gentleman will have leave.

THE SECRETARY read the proposition as follows:

"Trademarks shall be deemed property."

Referred to Committee on Miscellaneous Provisions.

TAXING SOLVENT DEBTS.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I move that the Convention do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

So ordered.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section five and the substitute, offered by Mr. Evey, are before the committee.

REMARKS OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I was not on this Committee on Revenue and Taxation, but it does occur to me that this section is in as good shape as it can be. The theory is this: we all know that a mortgage is not an interest in the land under the present law, though in some States it is. But under our law it is not an interest in the land. It is merely security, that is all. It is simply a security to the extent of the debt. Now, the committee say, for the purpose of adjusting this matter, a mortgage shall be treated as an interest in the real estate, which alters our rule. For the purposes of taxation, the mortgage shall be treated as real estate. Then there are two interests in the real estate. One interest is the mortgage, which is held by the mortgagor, and the other is the interest of the holder and owner of the property. There are two interests. Now it is proposed to apportion those two interests so that the tax on each interest shall be according to the value of the interest. The land being the visible, tangible object, according to the theories of taxation, simply bring about this adjustment so that each interest shall pay in proportion to its value. So there is no occasion to rebate. That is the reason that in the amendment I proposed there is an exception, as far as legislative control is concerned, in regard to rebates on mortgage debts. There is the mortgage, and there is the land, and there is nothing to deduct, because the two interests constitute the entire property. That is the reason the exception was made, that the Legislature shall not have power to deduct debts from credits of that character.

The only difference between section five and the amendment is this: that the words "contract or other obligation" are used. In Convention I shall move to insert these words, if this passes, as I hope it will. In other words, besides the debt being secured by mortgage or deed of trust, I will move to insert the words, "or other obligation." That will bring the two sections into entire conformity, except there is an exception as to railroad and other corporations. Those corporations are governed by sections sixteen and seventeen, and that is the reason the exception was made by the committee. It will be premature to discuss these sections now, but I think no better section could be gotten up than this section five. Indeed, I attributed the paternity to the distinguished gentleman from Sacramento, until I heard otherwise. But I gave him a good deal of credit, but he ignores the paternity, and I suppose it must be given to some other member of that committee. I would suggest to gentlemen that it is impossible to get everything in one section. One gentleman suggests that this may involve double taxation. When it comes to that we will try and see if we cannot prevent it. We are going along in the right direction. This section five is in entire harmony with the other, with the exception of these words, "contract or other obligation," which will bring them into entire harmony. Now, the amendment, as I understand it, leaves out these explanatory words, that a mortgage is an interest in the real estate. We all know that under the present law a mortgage is not an interest in the real estate. It is simply security. If the note should be transferred it carries the mortgage along with it. It is not an interest in the real estate. This section says it shall be an interest in the real estate. No system of rebates can apply to this property, because there is nothing to deduct. Section five is gotten up with a great deal of care.

MR. EDGERTON. I fixed it up. [Laughter.] I am afraid they will beat it now. [Laughter.]

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: We see how we get into difficulties when we depart from solid ground. Since the passage of the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma, I have conversed with about a dozen gentlemen who voted for it, and each one of them asked me what it meant. I told them I did not know. I have asked others what it meant, and not a man has been able to tell me. The gentleman who offered the amendment says he will move an amendment to it in Convention, and he explains and explains and explains, and tells us that it will be further necessary to explain when it comes to section sixteen, and still further necessary to explain when it comes to section seventeen, and I am very much afraid that explanations will be in order from this on till the end of the session. And explanations will be in order before the people, when this Constitution comes to be voted on. Explanations will be in order when the Legislature meets; explanations will be in order when the Assessors go to work, and explanations will be in order when the Supreme Court comes to interpret this language. All this shows what difficulties we encounter when we undertake to tax things that are not property. Now I suppose the members are nervous already for fear that I shall talk my full fifteen minutes. I shall do no such thing. I only rise to say that I am opposed to this amendment. I have stated that I do not understand section two. I have not addressed a man yet who does understand it, or pretends to understand it. I defy any one to explain what it means. If it means anything at all, if it can be made to mean anything, it is that by adopting this scheme of taxation we have offered a premium to the citizens of California to vote against the Constitution. It is as villainous a scheme as the old United States income tax. That is admitted to be wrong.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. The explanations of the gentleman from San Francisco have made this thing as clear as mud, and I move the previous question.

MR. EDGERTON. If the gentleman will withdraw a moment I will renew the motion. I have been asked by three or four gentlemen, since the Convention took a recess, what was the meaning of this exception, "except as to railroad and other quasi-public corporations." Why these corporations are exempted. It was made to appear to the Committee on Revenue and Taxation that the railroad companies were in debt in very large sums, in the form of bonds, and that those bonds were held in Europe, New York, and other places outside of this State. Now, sir, under a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States—the decision referred to by the gentleman from Los Angeles the other day—it has been held that these bonds are not within the jurisdiction of the State, and cannot be taxed. So, unless this exception is made, the railroad companies will have a good thing of it. When the Assessor came to assess them they would deduct the amount of these bonds from the value of their property here, and the bonds being out of reach of the State the State would get very little tax.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. EDGERTON. I renew the motion for the previous question.

The call for the previous question was seconded by Messrs. Howard, Ayers, Evey, and Stuart.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried, by a vote of 63 ayes to 25 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Evey.

Lost.

MR. HEISKELL. I move to strike out section five.

REMARKS OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to section five in toto, because I believe it would entirely destroy the object for which this Convention was called, and that is to equalize taxation. Section five, as it now stands, makes a preference in the way of taxation in favor of persons owing secured debts on mortgages. If my friend over there owes me five hundred dollars and I have his note for it, the Assessor comes along and assesses me on my property and on the note also. That makes a discrimination in favor of the party who has his money loaned on mortgage securities, so that you entirely destroy the equality of taxation. I am opposed to the section. It will destroy the equality of the whole thing if debts secured by mortgage are not required to pay just as much taxes as the unsecured. I want the whole thing taxed.

REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I do not understand how the gentleman talks of equal taxation, and at the same time talks about taxing a man for more than he is worth. If I see a piece of land worth twenty thousand dollars that I wish to buy, and I have only ten thousand dollars, I go to the man and tell him, and he gives it to me and takes a mortgage for the balance. Now, I am only worth ten thousand dollars, and he is worth ten thousand dollars. Now, I would like to have the gentleman explain why I should pay taxes on twenty thousand dollars, and the man who owns a half interest in that land pays nothing. I want to pay taxes on what I am worth, and I want every other man to pay taxes on what he is worth. We are not here for the purpose of putting a still heavier burden upon the poor than they already have to bear. We are unanimous for the taxation of mortgages. There is no doubt about that. But we are also unanimous that if a man is only worth ten thousand dollars, he shall not pay taxes on twenty thousand dollars. I do not ask any man to come here and pay taxes on what he is not worth. It is an inequality that we have been trying to get changed. This Convention was called for that purpose. The poor men and the farmers have been paying four times as much as they are worth, and the rich monopolists have not paid anything. The burden of taxation has been upon the producer and the laboring man. We must try and equalize this thing. This section does it. I trust the amendment will be adopted as it comes from the committee, and there will be rejoicing all over the State, except by the money lenders.

REMARKS OF MR. DUDLEY.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: I did not approve of section two as adopted. Having adopted section two, this Convention has effectually opened the door for the escape of all unsecured debts in this State. The man who owns a note need not pay taxes on it, because he can cover it up. But as section two has been adopted I hope section five will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I hope section five will be stricken out. There is nothing good in it, and there is a good deal in it that is bad, very bad. Some days since, when this section was considered, I called attention to the monstrous absurdity of it. As it appears to have escaped the attention of the committee, I will again call attention to it. It says the taxes so levied shall be a lien upon the property, and may be paid by either party to such security. If paid by the owner of the security, it shall become a part of the debt so secured, and if the owner of the property shall pay the tax it shall constitute a payment on the debt. Now, that language amounts to this: that if the mortgage holder gets to the office of the Tax Collector first and pays the taxes, he saddles it upon the debtor. But if the debtor should be swifter of foot and gets there first, he saddles it upon the creditor.

MR. DUDLEY. The gentleman is certainly laboring under a hallucination. It makes no difference who pays the taxes; the one who pays the taxes has a lien upon the other for his share of the taxes.

MR. CAPLES. The language is not susceptible of any such interpretation. It applies only to that part which is covered by the mortgage, and it amounts simply to this, that whoever gets to the office first saddles the tax upon the other. It is a provision in favor of the mortgage holder, because he generally lives near the towns. He is supposed to have ready money to pay with. The poor man labors under the disadvantage of being short of ready money, and cannot take advantage of this provision. He is deprived of the advantage that is given to the mortgage holder. If the gentleman can explain the language in any other way, I would be glad to hear it.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section will be adopted as it is. I think it is very strange, indeed, that the gentleman from Sacramento, Dr. Caples, cannot understand the last clause of this section. That clause simply treats the mortgagor and the mortgagee as tenants in common, as far as the payment of the tax is concerned: that the debtor shall only be held accountable for his pro rata of the tax accruing on that part of the real estate. That if I have a mortgage on Mr. Caples' homestead, it is supposed that I own that amount in his homestead, and that I shall be held responsible for the tax on the interest which I hold, and that the land shall be responsible primarily for the tax. This whole matter is clearly explained in the section, and I hope it will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me the gentleman from Sacramento, Dr. Caples, who is usually very clear, has become very much confused as to the intention of section five. The intention of section five is clearly to tax mortgages, trust deeds, or other obligation. Any Court construing section five would construe it that the tax upon the mortgage, or the money secured by mortgage, may be paid by the party owning the mortgage, and the residue by the party owning the land, and it cannot be otherwise construed.

MR. CAPLES. Does it not provide that, in the event that the creditor pays it, it shall become a part of the debt?

MR. BEERSTECHER. Yes, sir.

MR. CAPLES. And if the debtor pays it, it shall be a discharge of so much of the debt?

MR. BEERSTECHER. Yes, sir. It says the tax so levied shall become a lien upon the property secured, and may be paid by either party to such security. If paid by the owner of the security, the tax so paid shall become a part of the debt. Of course the Court would construe it as being a part of the debt only to the extent of the amount which the debtor was obliged to pay, because it is especially provided that the owner of the property shall have a set-off for the amount of the tax on the mortgage. It seems to me very clear.

Now, I would call the attention of the Workingmen to section twenty-four of the Workingmen's platform, which says that no person shall be taxed for more than he is worth. If we adopt section five, we will be carrying out that part of the platform. Section two, as adopted, clearly says that there may be a deduction provided for by law, as to all unsecured debts. That answers the argument of Mr. Tinnin, that there is a discrimination in favor of secured debts. Section two expressly says that the Legislature can by law provide for deductions of debts from credits. The purpose of section five is to oblige the man holding liens upon real estate to pay taxes on the amount they hold, and to have the owner of the land pay taxes only on the amount of his interest in the real estate. We all understand the theory to be to make the owner of property pay the taxes. Men who have vast landed possessions and vast amounts of personal property that require the protection of the State, should be compelled to contribute to the support of the State. For them Government is established. The individual who has nothing but the clothes upon his back pays but little tax, and requires but little protection. The man who owns much should pay much, and the man who owns little should pay little, because he receives little or nothing. Property should pay the taxes, and in order to encourage men who have a little to invest that little, we must tax them only on the amount of their investment. If a man buys a tract of land worth twenty thousand dollars, and pays ten thousand dollars on it of his own, and borrows ten thousand dollars, he should pay taxes only on the amount of his interest in the land, which is ten thousand dollars; and the man who loans him the ten thousand dollars should pay his share of the tax, or half of it. Unless we adopt section five, having adopted section two, mortgages will absolutely escape taxation.

MR. STUART. I move the previous question.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me there is a great deal of obscurity in this section, unless I am mistaken in my reading of it. Certainly I understand it so. As the gentleman who has just taken his seat said, the intention is to get at and tax money represented by mortgages, trust deeds, and other contracts; that is the intention of the section, but I do not think that result will be arrived at. It is simply a roundabout way of taxing the land; it distributes the payment between the owner of the land and the owner of the mortgage on the land. Now, if A buys a piece of land worth ten thousand dollars, and mortgages it for five thousand dollars, the two men have an interest in that land. Now, A takes that five thousand dollars and puts it in bonds, or county warrants, or United States bonds; now he has fifteen thousand dollars' worth of property and only ten thousand dollars are taxed. If the owner of the mortgage pays his share of the tax, the owner of the land only pays on five thousand dollars. Now, if we are going to get at this matter let us do it, and not play with words for the purpose of taxing the land in a roundabout way. There is a great deal of ambiguity and obscurity in this section. Now, the amendment to section two, proposed by the gentleman from Sonoma, is not clearly understood. If I had it before me, and had time to study it, I might possibly be able to understand it, and vote for this section five. It may be that gentlemen may be able to make these things clear. I do not understand it, and I do not think the members of this Convention understand it, and I do not think we can vote intelligently upon this section until we do understand it; therefore I hope we will not be called upon to vote on this section until we see the section as passed.

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I intend to be one of that number who are in favor of taxing mortgages; and, above all things, I am in favor of compelling the mortgagee to pay the tax. I want the person who is taxed for the interest that he is supposed to have acquired by reason of his security, to pay that tax, and nobody else. And how does this section accomplish that result? I am sorry to say (and perhaps I ought not to say it), but it does occur to me that there are a lot of figureheads who jump up and move the previous question when men are laboring with all their faculties to arrive at just conclusions as to what the Convention ought to do. When a proposition is presented that is so crude that we are not able to understand it, these men seem desirous of rushing it through the Convention without regard to whether it is digested or not. Many of the provisions already adopted have had to be taken on trust, on account of the ill-considered action of gentlemen who spring this previous question upon the committee. Now, let us see who pays and who does not pay, under this provision that is presented here. "The tax so levied shall be a lien upon the property and security respectively." That is to say, the tax levied against the security shall be a lien against the security, and the tax levied upon the land (which constitutes the security, for that matter) is assessed to the owner of the property. Now, what does this "respectively" mean? The tax, so far as the loan is concerned, is only a lien upon the security. What is the security? Will gentlemen say it is the interest in the land? And will gentlemen contend that it will be paid out of the land, which is supposed to constitute the security? If that be the understanding, it could have been expressed in plain terms, so that there would be no doubt as to who should pay the tax. Now, it is the duty of this Convention to express its intentions in language that cannot be misunderstood. I am willing to stay here until we do adopt something that will meet the wants of the people—something that will be understood, emphatic, and plain. Under these circumstances, I do not want this previous question sprung upon the Convention. We want to tax mortgages, and we want the man who owns the mortgage to pay the tax. It is not in the form we want it in. We want to add some provision at the bottom of this section whereby the person who owns the land or other property may pay the whole tax, and retain it when he comes to pay his debt, before the tax is due. That is the proposition we want to cover. We want to fasten it upon this section, because we may not be able to do it afterwards. Now, it is not a very hard matter to put this matter in such a shape as to accomplish the results we seek to accomplish. It takes time to do this, and these gentlemen who know nothing but to move the previous question had better keep their seats.

MR. AYERS. Will striking out the word "respectively" cure the defect?

MR. HERRINGTON. No, sir, not altogether. It will cure one defect, but not the whole defect. We want some provision which will allow the mortgagor, or person giving the security, the right to retain the amount of the tax when he comes to pay his debt.

MR. AYERS. That is just what this section does now.

MR. CROSS. Will the gentleman read the last clause of the section and see if that does not cover it.

MR. HERRINGTON. "If the owner of the property shall pay the tax, it shall constitute a payment thereon, and to the extent of such payment a full discharge thereof." Now, sir, if he pays the debt before the tax is due, he cannot have an offset. I say when the mortgagor comes to pay that debt before the taxes are due and payable, and after the tax levy, he should have the right to deduct the amount from the debt. I am for making the mortgagee pay the tax. That is the man you are looking for. The borrowers have been ground down and under the heels of the money lenders too long already, and I want to afford them relief.

MR. AYERS. Have you read the last clause of this section?

MR. HERRINGTON. Yes, sir; I have.

MR. AYERS. Could the English language make it more clear or explicit—"if the owner shall pay the tax it shall constitute a payment thereon, and to the extent of such payment, a full discharge thereof?"

MR. HERRINGTON. If the debt is paid before the tax is due and payable, the man will have no recourse. He cannot pay the tax, because no one will receive it; yet it is levied, and stands against the property. You cannot collect the tax upon the real estate until it is due. There is no one to collect it or take charge of it. Hence, he can have no offset against the debt.

MR. AYERS. These are very exceptional cases.

MR. HERRINGTON. Yes, sir; and there would be exceptional cases all the time.

MR. AYERS. Will the gentleman offer an amendment that will cure this defect?

MR. HERRINGTON. Yes, sir; I will do it if you will wait. I have been fighting off this previous question.

MR. AYERS. I thought the argument was exhausted upon some of these sections.

MR. HERRINGTON. You find it is not.

MR. WEST. Did you not inform us the other day that this section had more sense in it than the whole report?

MR. HERRINGTON. Yes, sir.

MR. WEST. That there was not an omission of a single dot?

MR. HERRINGTON. Yes, sir; I will admit all that. But that was on first reading. I have given the subject a good deal of thought and reflection since that time. It is only the man who has not a great deal of comprehension that does not change his mind. [Laughter.]

MR. WEST. The gentleman explained it so clearly the other day that I changed my mind in favor of it.

MR. TINNIN. The fifteen minutes are up; I object.

THE CHAIRMAN. Shall the gentleman have leave to proceed?

Leave was granted.

MR. HERRINGTON. I wonder at the gentleman objecting. He has only made about four different speeches, and I have made none. I was proceeding to say, when the gavel knocked my arm down, that until the tax was actually paid it could not be pleaded as an offset, under the provisions of this section. It is the man who owns the mortgage that I want to see pay the tax. I want to protect the mortgagor by providing for his reimbursement for the tax which has been levied, when the debt is paid before the tax is payable. I propose to offer an amendment, to add to the section the following: "Provided further, that if any such indebtedness shall be paid by any such debtor or debtors after assessment and before the tax levy, the amount of such levy may likewise be retained by such debtor or debtors, and shall be computed according to the tax levy for the preceding year."

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that of all the work of this committee, none has been more efficient, more serviceable, than this particular section. Now, sir, it has been claimed here that the mortgagee has an interest in the property mortgaged. Of course the amount of that interest is measured by the amount of the mortgage. There is nothing in this section which is difficult to understand, or doubtful in its meaning. The wording is clear and precise, and shows plainly the meaning.

Now, sir, a good deal has been said on this floor about keeping pledges. Now, those who support this section will exactly comply with the pledges they made to their constituents. The platform of the Workingmen's party says that mortgages shall be taxed. This section says that mortgages shall be taxed as plainly as words can say it. Now, section twenty-four of that platform says that a man shall pay taxes on what he is worth, after deducting indebtedness. This section clearly carries out that idea. The provision of the platform which says that mortgages shall be taxed is here fully complied with, and that part of the platform which says that a man shall pay taxes only on what he is worth, is also fully complied with. The mortgagor has the amount of the mortgage deducted from the value of his land, and pays taxes on the balance. I understand also that the platforms adopted by the Non-partisan Conventions contain also substantially the same provision.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Suppose a man owns a piece of land worth ten thousand dollars, and borrows five thousand dollars, according to this does he pay taxes on any more than five thousand dollars?

MR. CROSS. He has to pay on the five thousand dollars, his interest in the land, and on the money which he borrowed.

MR. SMITH. Suppose he invests it in government bonds.

MR. CROSS. He has a right to escape taxation if he does, under the laws of the United States. There is nothing in that objection. It is said that this provision is obscure. Let us take it up, line by line, and see if it is. "A mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation,"—anybody can understand that—"by which a debt is secured"—no difficulty about that—"shall, for the purposes of assessment and taxation,"— who cannot understand that—"be deemed and treated as an interest in the property affected thereby." "Except as to railroad and other quasi-public corporations, in case of debts so secured, the value of the property affected by such mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or obligation, less the value of such security, shall be assessed and taxed to the owner of the property;" that is, if I have a farm worth twenty thousand dollars, and there is a mortgage on it for ten thousand dollars, I am assessed for ten thousand dollars, and the owner of the mortgage for ten thousand dollars. "And the value of such security shall be assessed and taxed to the owner thereof, in the county in which the property affected thereby is situate. The taxes so levied shall be a lien upon the property and security, respectively, and may be paid by either party to such security." If the mortgagee pays the tax to protect his mortgage, he is entitled to add the amount to the mortgage debt. There is no obscurity about that. It is as plain as the nose on a man's face. The owner of the property may pay the tax if he chooses, and the amount which he paid for the mortgagee he may deduct from the debt when he comes to pay it. There is no absurdity in that; there is no obscurity in that. There is no conflict between this section and section two. They are perfectly harmonious. This exception in case of unsecured debts was necessary. There can be no conflict, and there is no obscurity in this section.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman; I have an amendment to the section.

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion is to strike out the section.

MR. WINANS. I wish to offer an amendment to strike out the word "respectively."

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: To my mind, sir, there is a defect in this section, and I think the objection made by the gentleman from Santa Clara is well taken. It seems to me, sir, that under the peculiar phraseology of this section, that if the mortgagor were to pay the mortgagee the debt after the assessment lien had accrued, and before the tax was collectable, there would exist no lien for the payment of the mortgagor. I believe that the owners of mortgages will find a way of evading the payment of taxes in any form. I believe there will be methods found, and a way invented, to circumvent its objects, but it is our duty to prevent it if we can. I hope the Johnson amendment will be adopted, and that in addition there will be other means devised to compel the mortgagee to pay the tax; something that will afford them no means of evasion.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: This matter was before the committee, and it was understood and disposed of upon this theory, and the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara is not necessary, because it is the State tax, and everybody knows what it is. It is levied and stands for two years. And I think it is generally understood what the county tax will be in the several counties. My judgment is that it would be better, after all, to adopt some such provision as that in the Boggs amendment, offered by Judge Hale, "providing that if such indebtedness shall be paid by the debtor after assessment and before the tax levy, the amount of such levy may be retained by the debtor," etc.

MR. HERRINGTON. If the gentleman will give way I will offer that amendment now.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to the section: 'Provided further, that if any such indebtedness shall be paid by any such debtor or debtors after assessment and before the tax levy, the amount of such levy may likewise be retained by such debtor or debtors, and shall be computed according to the tax levy for the preceding year.'"

REMARKS OF MR. ANDREWS.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I hope this section will be stricken out. I believe that it ought to be stricken out, because I believe it is inconsistent with section two. The Non-partisan platform read by the gentleman from Nevada, is inconsistent with this section. The reason I am in favor of striking out this section is that, by the action of this committee in adopting section two, we have looked upon solvent credits as property. The resolution in the platform read by the gentleman from Nevada says such credits are property. And it is for the reason that this section provides that they are not property that I am in favor of striking it out, because it is inconsistent with section two as already adopted. Why, sir, should we, in our organic law, offer a premium on mortgages? If a debt unsecured is property, why is not a note secured by a lien upon real estate just as much property? I say, sir, that when we incorporate such a provision as this into our organic law, we are indorsing a glaring inconsistency. If a solvent debt unsecured is property, as we say it is, a solvent debt secured by mortgage is property, and ought to be taxed as any other solvent debt. I believe in meeting this question squarely, and I hope the section will be stricken out.

REMARKS OF MR. BIGGS.

MR. BIGGS. I did not intend to say anything, but the gentleman made some allusion that solvent debts should be taxed as property. If the gentleman had paid a little attention to the argument of Mr. Cross he would have understood this question better. We propose to make them property. If the debtor pays the tax, he is entitled to have the amount taken off of his debt. If the creditor pays the tax he can add it on to the debt.

MR. WHITE. I call for the previous question.

REMARKS OF MR. PROUTY.

MR. PROUTY. Mr. Chairman: I was surprised at the gentleman when he favored taxing the land and taxing the mortgage also. Now, you will all admit that land is not taxed at more than two thirds of its actual value. I know of cases where the mortgage on the land amounts to more than the valuation put upon it by the Assessor. I know a case where a man has property worth six thousand dollars, and it is only assessed at four thousand dollars. Now, that man has a mortgage on the land for four thousand dollars. The Assessor puts down the mortgage, but when he comes to the farm there is no land left to tax.

MR. BIGGS. It is a well known fact that bankers never loan more than half or two thirds of the value of the security. If there is an occasional case of the kind mentioned by the gentleman, I do not think we should enact a special clause for his benefit.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I am very sorry to see these mortgage men disagree. Brethren should dwell together in peace.

MR. MORELAND. So should the Workingmen.

MR. REYNOLDS. Never mind the Workingmen. You have got into the difficulty which you will always have to meet when you depart from solid ground. And now, to save time, just imagine that I have made my other speech over again: I will not repeat it here. Whenever you undertake to make property out of that which is not property, you are bound to get into difficulties. But there is one comfort I have, and that is this quarrel among the mortgage men; they have been trying to shove through this Convention a provision by which they can tax the debtor class doubly and trebly, while those who do not owe anything get the benefit of the double taxation. When you go home to your constituency they will villify you——

MR. MCCALLUM. I understood the gentleman to say that he was not going to repeat his speech over again.

MR. REYNOLDS. I give you notice that you cannot sneer these facts out of existence. When you have taxed a man's homestead for six thousand dollars, directly and indirectly, when it is only worth two thousand dollars, I give you due notice that you will not be able to sneer these facts out of the minds of the people.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Winans, to strike out the word "respectively."

Adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that this section had better stand, in that respect, as it was originally formed. You had provided for assessing two parties. This amendment provides for allowing one of them to retain the tax which the other should pay, but makes no provision either for his paying the tax into the county treasury, or doing anything with it to discharge the tax lien which is already resting upon the mortgage. When the property is assessed the mortgage is assessed to the mortgagee. He is the person responsible for the tax. Now, if this provision is passed, the amount of that tax is retained by somebody in certain cases, with no obligation on his part to devote it to the payment of taxes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Division was called, and the amendment was adopted: ayes, 58; noes, 34.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the section.

Division was called, and the motion was lost by a vote of 31 ayes to 50 noes.

MR. EDGERTON. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

MR. FREEMAN. I offer an amendment to section five.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert after the word 'county,' in line eight, the words 'city or district.'"

MR. FREEMAN. There are city taxes to be levied, and district taxes to be levied, and it seems to me that in order to carry out this idea clearly through the whole system, that this amendment should be adopted.

MR. EDGERTON. I have no doubt the amendment is a very proper one.

The amendment was adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section six.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 6. Every contract hereafter made, by which a debtor is obligated to pay any tax or assessment on money loaned, or on any mortgage, deed of trust, or other lien, shall, as to any interest specified therein, and as to such tax or assessment, be null and void.

MR. MCCOMAS. I offer a substitute for the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No contract or obligation hereafter made or entered into in this State for the payment of any money or other thing of value, shall have any validity or be enforced in any of the Courts of this State, or be entitled to record in any county thereof, that provides for or obligates the obligor or payor, directly or indirectly, to pay or cause to be paid any of the taxes assessed to or against the owner of such debt or obligation upon the same obligation or debt."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute.

Lost.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add after the word 'lien,' the words, 'or attorney fee for enforcing such lien or contract.'"

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: The amendment simply adds to the prohibition attorney's fees for enforcing such lien. One of the greatest oppressions imposed upon the borrowing class, upon those who are unable to pay, is to provide for most enormous attorney fees in cases of foreclosure.

MR. EDGERTON. I would call the attention of the gentleman that, notwithstanding this inhibition, it is a matter of discretion with the Court.

MR. WYATT. As I understand it now, notwithstanding an attorney fee may be contracted for, the Court may fix the fee. The Court can lessen the amount notwithstanding the contract.

MR. EDGERTON. The whole question lies in the discretion of the Court. There are many cases where it is eminently just that these fees should be paid. Every lawyer knows that oftentimes the debtor postpones the payment of the debt until the last possible moment, and puts the creditor to the expense of going into Court and enforcing the mortgage, and I say in such cases it is unjust that his debt should be depreciated and reduced to the extent of the attorney fee which he has paid. I think it is right, and the discretion should be left with the Court.

MR. WINANS. It is perfectly right the way it is now. The Courts have the power to fix these fees according to the exigencies of the case, and there is where the matter should be left. It ought not to be put in the Constitution, where it might work a hardship in many cases.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Division was called, and the amendment was lost, by a vote of 37 ayes to 40 noes.

MR. HALL. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend section six.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert after the word 'therein' the words 'other than the rate of interest prescribed by law.'"

MR. EDGERTON. I second the amendment, so as to get it before the Convention. I will state that the same proposition was discussed before the committee, and they solved the problem by adopting it as it now stands.

MR. HALL. As I understand it, the creditor will be enabled to avoid these provisions, not by an agreement whereby the debtor agrees to pay the tax, but an agreement whereby the debtor agrees to pay a higher rate of interest, which shall indemnify the creditor for the taxes he shall pay on the security. The object of this amendment is to prevent that. The same result would be accomplished by the creditor by charging a rate of interest which shall indemnify him for the taxes paid on his security.

MR. EDGERTON. Many of these mortgages already stipulate that the mortgagor shall pay all taxes upon property, and all assessments levied. This provision not only provides that all such stipulations shall be void, but void as to all interest.

MR. PULLIAM. I ask the gentleman if he knows of any man who would put such a thing in a mortgage after this thing is passed. No man would be fool enough to do that.

MR. HALL. It has this objection to it, that the contract is rendered a nullity as to any rate of interest, any rate of interest whatever, though that should be the rate of interest established by law. That idea is not a good one. The contract should be at least good to the extent of the interest which the law authorizes to be paid.

MR. EDGERTON. The amendment is simply to modify the penalty, to modify the punishment. As the section now stands, the mortgagee or grantee would be deprived of the entire interest. By this amendment he would be deprived simply of the interest in excess of the rate fixed by law. That would be saved to him.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the word 'other' and insert the word 'greater.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: The way the amendment now reads it would at least imply that if a person make a loan at a less interest than that prescribed by law, it would be void. I am satisfied that the author did not intend to produce that result. I propose to insert the word "greater" in place of the word "other."

MR. HALL. I accept the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is, then, on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from San Joaquin.

The amendment was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. Are there any further amendments to section six?

MR. ROLFE. There being a slim house, I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

No second.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section seven.

FEES FROM CORPORATIONS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 7. No corporation, except for benevolent, religious, scientific, or educational purposes, shall be hereafter formed under the laws of this State, unless the persons named as corporators shall, at or before filing the articles of incorporation, pay into the State treasury one hundred dollars for the first fifty thousand dollars or less of capital stock, and a further sum of twenty dollars for every additional ten thousand dollars of such stock; and no such corporation shall hereafter increase its capital stock without first paying into the State treasury twenty dollars for every ten thousand dollars of increase.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section seven.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out section seven.

SPEECH OF MR. REDDY.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: I cannot see any good purpose that this section can serve. I do not see why you should desire to impose a tax of this sort upon corporations. It is pretty well settled in the minds of all mining men that mining can only be carried on, and the mineral resources of the country developed, through corporations. Now, if we impose a tax of this sort upon companies desiring to incorporate, you are taking away the incentive to develop the resources of the country. Under this section, taking the usual number of shares—fifty thousand—it would cost ten thousand dollars to incorporate. Fifty thousand shares, at the par value of one hundred dollars per share, as is the custom in this State, would cost ten thousand dollars to incorporate. Now, that is the penalty you put on an incorporation at the start. Who is going to pay to this State ten thousand dollars for the privilege of incorporating? Incorporating for the purpose of what? To develop the wealth of the State. Why is this desired? Why levy this enormous tax upon them? Why impose such a tax as this upon men who desire to come here from the East to invest their money in such enterprises? What madness to compel them to pay to this State ten thousand dollars for the privilege of investing one hundred thousand dollars in the development of the resources of the State. What civilized government has ever done such a thing? They even pay a premium on such enterprises. But here parties seek to tax the corporations ten thousand dollars for the privilege of investing their money in the development of the resources of the State. The farmers have set up a wail here and described the difficulties they have had down in these valleys in establishing homes. The miners themselves, many of them, have sailed clear around the horn, and many of them have been balanced upon the point of a horn ever since, in an honest endeavor all the time to find something that would add to the wealth of the State, and certainly they have succeeded, because I see that during the year eighteen hundred and seventy-seven they have produced nearly nineteen million of dollars; and yet these learned statesmen want to go to work and impose this onerous tax upon the men who are endeavoring to bring this wealth to the surface. It is the only industry to-day in this State which pays to laboring men three dollars and four dollars a day. In my county the ruling rate is four dollars a day for miners. Now the laboring men cut up so about wages down in San Francisco that they have got the wages down to nothing. The only men who pay them full wages in this State are the miners, and yet the Workingmen stand up here and vote to tax them out of existence, and prevent the organization of companies which will pay them better wages than they can get in any other place. Nor does this apply to mining corporations alone. If men desire to invest their money in manufacturing enterprises, they are met at the very outset by the fact that they must pay ten thousand dollars into the State treasury before they can be privileged to incorporate under the general laws of this State. If you do this thing in preference to paying these enormous sums to the State, these capitalists will go into some other State and incorporate there, and then this State will be deprived of the business. It is impossible to get money to-day to develop, and explore, and prospect the mining ground of the State. Where is the capital to come from? Already they are organizing mining boards in New York, and there is a desire throughout the eastern States to invest in mining property in this State. Now, suppose the prospector goes out and finds what appears to be a valuable mine, as far as surface indications go. The indications all point to a good prospect. He wants money to open a mine; how will he get it? The capital must come from the eastern States to develop this mine. If there was nothing in the way, it would come, but we levy this enormous tax upon them for the privilege of incorporating under our laws. As soon as the eastern capitalist finds that he must pay ten thousand dollars for the privilege of incorporating, that is the end of it. This provision will tend to prevent the investment of money in enterprises in this State. Before a man can stick a pick in the ground he must pay ten thousand dollars into the State treasury. It would be far better for the State to pay a premium for the investment of money in the development of our resources, than to compel them to pay a tax. Ten thousand dollars is more capital than many of the mining companies have to start in with. If gentlemen desire to prevent mining they could not adopt a more effectual plan than this. This will do more, it will prevent companies from incorporating in this State at all, not only for the purpose of mining, but for all other purposes.

Now, is it desirable to have corporations at all? If it is, then wipe out this section. If you do not want them, let the section stand as it is, and you will soon accomplish that result. Now take Bodie, in Mono County. To my knowledge they never could have developed the mining property there had it not been for the capitalists of San Francisco, who came there and invested their money. They thought the prospects were good, and they were willing to invest their money and take the chances, and put in a given amount of money. They purchased from these miners who had been struggling for so long. So these men incorporated with less money than would be paid to this State if this section is adopted, and proceeded to develop the mines. These men had been laboring there for years, but had not the necessary amount of capital to open up these same mines, and only raised it by incorporating.

Gentlemen say they want to crush out the wildcats. Now, would it be advisable to crush out these very corporations that are developing our mines in order to reach a few wildcats? Hadn't we better allow a few mining swindles than to crush out all corporations, and prevent incorporations in future? It may be but a few years until other industries will be found for which it will be necessary to raise money in this manner. Are you going to enact a clause in the organic law which will forever debar them? It is the wildest legislation ever heard of under the sun. Gentlemen may get up here and howl about poor people being swindled by wildcat mining operations. I don't know anything about these swindles that they have down in San Francisco—I am speaking about mines—I am not talking about swindles, but about the mining industry, and I say it is a legitimate, honest industry, and one to be encouraged in this State, and because some foolish persons have allowed themselves to be swindled, that is no reason why we should crush out the mining industry. Is it desired to load down that interest and hamper it with taxes, over and above all the taxes imposed upon other property?

MR. CROSS. I think there ought to be some guarantee, so that if there are wild schemes there would be some place of responsibility.

MR. REDDY. I do not see how this tax is going to protect the individual. Individuals must rely upon their own common sense to protect them against swindles. Men who invest their money must ascertain what kind of an investment it is for themselves. The State cannot protect each individual against his own folly.

The gentlemen have not yet answered my question. Is it desirable to load down this interest and hamper it by taxes far in excess of taxes imposed upon other property? If so, why? Are all the swindles perpetrated in San Francisco based on mining operations?

MR. TULLY. Mostly wildcat swindles.

MR. REDDY. If the gentleman can suggest any provision which will prevent wildcat schemes, so as not to injure the honest ones, I will agree to support it. But if you propose to crush out the honest industry, in order to reach the wildcats, that is one thing. You must do one of two things—you must take the bitter with the sweet, or crush the whole thing.

Another thing, let me say. Suppose a bank had to pay ten thousand dollars into the State treasury; would that help the people any? It strikes me it would be of no benefit to the people at all. You have made directors of corporations responsible, and if you are satisfied with one you ought to be with the other. There is speculation in everything. Why, men in this State get up enormous speculations in wheat, and break up at it. Is that any reason why you should prevent the raising of wheat? It is so with many industries. There is speculation in everything, but that is no reason why any honest industry should be made to pay the penalty. But there seems to be a wild desire here, without reference to reason, without reference to any rule of political economy, to make war on corporations. If corporations commit a wrong I am perfectly willing to punish them. I am perfectly willing to throw around the people all the safeguards possible, by adopting such measures as will protect them. But how do the mining corporations injure the people of this State? I have heard it stated that farmers have invested in mining stocks, and have been brought to the brink of ruin. What stocks? Why, in the stock of the mines of the State of Nevada. They have never been brought to the brink of ruin by any California mining stocks, because there are no mines in California which purport to be speculative mines. Perhaps if these farmers had considered the interest of their own State a little more, and their own selfish interests a little less, and invested their money in California mines, they would have been better off to-day. If the poor of San Francisco have been swindled out of their earnings, it has been through these Nevada mines, and not through California mines. I do not call it robbery. The Government cannot take care of the private interests of every individual. They must take care of their own interests, for Government has too much else to do to descend to that kind of business. If a few laboring men and washerwomen have been robbed in San Francisco, by reason of investments in mining stocks, will gentlemen take into consideration the number of poor women that have been maintained; take into consideration the number of poor men employed in the mines of this State, and see if there is not ample compensation? The payroll of these corporations in Mono County alone, amounted to not less than one million dollars last year. Is that an injury to the State? Does not the State derive revenue from the investment of all this money? And are there not thousands of people employed by these corporations who would otherwise hang around your cities, working for one dollar a day? Instead of being well paid, they would be hunting around for a hay stack to sleep in. We do not make them furnish their own blankets, but pay them so they can sleep in a house.

Now, when this subject was up before, under another section of this report, I spoke upon it, not for the purpose of arraying one interest against another, as gentlemen seem to persistently claim. I could have no interest in making war between the mining interest and the farming interest. As I understand it we are in the minority here, and why should we make war on the majority. But I come before you representing this interest, and ask my fellow delegates to do what is just and right, to tax our property as you tax all other property, and don't impose a tax of ten thousand dollars upon us for the privilege of carrying on the mining business. Ten thousand dollars for the privilege of sinking a shaft in ground which may not be worth ten cents, and which, if it does prove valuable will be of immense value to the State, as well as to some of her citizens. Why should the State want to crush out an industry which is giving employment to thousands of her people and increasing her wealth year by year? We are willing to bear our just burden of taxes like all other industries.

Now, sir, gentlemen seem to understand that we want to introduce war between the two interests, and I took special exceptions to the language of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Winans, the other day, when he said that parties who came here with special interests to advocate, and who tried to inaugurate war between different interests, were acting in a spirit of demagogism. Now, sir, I happen to be one of those who rose here to protest against this injustice to mining corporations. What I have said here I said because I believed it. The gentleman may have been laboring under excitement when he said it, but if he had reference to me, there is not one word of truth in it. I have not charged any gentleman with improper motives on this floor, nor do I intend to do so, and when the gentleman made the statement he did, he made a statement that is utterly lacking in truth. I speak for myself and for the other gentlemen who have spoken on this side of the question, when I say the language was unjust, unwarranted, and unnecessary.

MR. STEELE. I move that the committee rise——

MR. REDDY. I move the gentleman do sit down until I get through. [Laughter.]

MR. WINANS. I did not hear what you said. I am told you said I had reflected upon the mining interest, and upon those who represent them.

MR. REDDY. That is what you said yesterday.

MR. WINANS. I said yesterday that I did not come here to represent any class exclusively. I did not mean the mining men at all, or any other interest in particular. I said I was desirous of protecting the State at large. The gentleman must be very thin-skinned, because there was no malice in my heart. The gentleman is utterly mistaken.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

THE JOURNAL.

MR. CROUCH. Mr. President: I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with and the same approved.

Carried.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

MR. TULLY. Mr. President: I arise to a question of privilege. On Saturday a resolution was introduced, that when this Convention adjourns on the sixth day of January, it stands adjourned until the first Monday in September, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty. I find that I am reported in the Record-Union as having voted "aye" on that proposition. I voted "no," and I prefer that the matter should be so understood, and I hope that the matter will be so understood.

AMENDMENTS TO RULES.

MR. NOEL. Mr. President: I desire to call up my motion to amend Rule Forty-three.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No member shall speak more than once on one question, nor more than ten minutes at a time, except the Chairman of a standing committee, who may speak twice on the same question, and shall be allowed thirty minutes each time. This rule shall not be suspended except by unanimous consent."

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. President: I move to strike out "by unanimous consent," and insert "by a two-thirds vote."

MR. GRACE. Mr. President: I am opposed to this thing, and I claim that one man has just as good a right to occupy time on this floor as another. There are certain gentlemen who get their time extended and there are others who do not. One man has as good a right to half an hour's time as another. There are men on this floor, not Chairmen of committees, who can enlighten this Convention as well as those who are, and they have the same right to occupy the time of the Convention; if they are not allowed to then certain counties are not as fairly represented as others. There are a great many things that we do not speak enough on. I therefore move the whole matter be laid on the table.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 45 ayes to 43 noes.

MR. McCOMAS. Mr. President: I send up a notice.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Mr. President: I hereby give notice that, on to-morrow, I shall move to change Rule Two so that the Convention shall hereafter hold evening sessions, commencing at seven o'clock P. M."

REVENUE AND TAXATION.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. A motion to strike out section seven is before the committee, and the gentleman from Inyo has the floor.

REMARKS OF MR. REDDY.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: In the course of my remarks on Saturday last, I took exceptions to a portion of the speech made by Mr. Winans when the Moreland amendment was under consideration, and I find since, that I was so unfortunate as to totally misunderstand the gentleman's intentions, and perhaps his language, and I regret very much that I should have criticized it as I did. If I have said anything which has at all wounded the gentleman's feelings I sincerely regret it. I am conscious of the indulgence that the committee has conferred upon me heretofore, and I will not detain it but a few moments on this question. The idea of this section is to prevent wildcat mining companies circulating their stock in this State. The section will not effect that object. They may incorporate in Nevada, put their stock in the San Francisco Board, and no one will inquire whether it is a California or Nevada corporation, and it will sell as freely as if it was incorporated in this State; hence this section can do no good. It will drive legitimate enterprises into that State for the purpose of incorporation. Our citizens will be compelled to go abroad in order to incorporate. I do not think that gentlemen understand the value of the mining interest in this State, nor do they seem to understand the wants of the mining districts. Commencing at the Nevada line in Mono County, and in Inyo, there are two ranges of mountains already partially explored. These ranges are four hundred miles in length and upward, and besides these two ranges there is range after range of mountains filled with minerals already ascertained. We are only waiting for capital to develop these resources. Capital must come from abroad; home capital has all gone into the Comstock, hence the California mines must go farther for capital to develop them. Suppose a gentleman should go to the eastern States for the purpose of raising capital; everything is arranged; he obtains the capital desired, and that being done, the next query is, "Where shall we incorporate?" "Why, of course, in the State where we are carrying on our business." "How many shares of stock?" "Well, a hundred thousand shares is the usual number; we want that number of shares to circulate in this eastern market." But the gentleman from California has got to confess that this State will require parties to first pay to the State the sum of twenty thousand dollars before they will be permitted to bring the amount of capital required into the State. That certainly would be bad policy.

Now, aside from the miner, what other corporations will be affected? A large number. We have oil companies, and that interest will become a valuable one in this State; but if so it will be through the instrumentality of corporations. We have companies for mining quicksilver, for ship building, for flumes to bring lumber from the Sierra Nevadas down to the valleys, for warehouses, for iron foundries, and for swamp land reclamation. We have companies for irrigation, and here is, perhaps, the most imorptant subject for which companies will be formed. There are many valuable streams in this State, which certainly the farmers all well know could be utilized in the valleys and make homes and farms for the people; but individuals have not been able, for the want of capital, to make these streams of water valuable. How will it be done? Every man must know that it will be necessary to incorporate as the first step in order to raise the capital. But here is a complete embargo. Here is a complete prohibition of any irrigation at all, for the first step is to pay in ten or twenty thousand dollars. Now, sir, no one wants to discourage corporations for this purpose. The State will not deal with the subject, and it will have to be dealt with by corporations. I will give you another instance, going back to the mines for a moment. There are many districts in the State where there are ores enough taken out to supply a mill or a furnace, but no capital to put one up. Now, if parties go there with capital enough to put up a mill or a furnace, it will give employment to these miners and enable them to develop their claims. Now it would cost, say, twenty thousand dollars, to put up a mill and furnish facilities for the reduction of the ores of the district. But it is necessary to incorporate, and before you can do so you have got to pay just the cost of the mill to incorporate. So that it would seem to me very bad policy to impose upon a company desiring to incorporate for this purpose such a tax. It is retarding the development of the State. Now I will go back to irrigation again. There are valleys in this State—I have one in my mind now, over eighty miles in length, which could be irrigated from one end to the other, at a cost of about one hundred thousand dollars. It will be done surely, and done through an incorporation; but if they have to pay ten or twenty thousand dollars to the State out of the capital, it may be retarded for years. It seems to me that any further argument is entirely unnecessary, and I feel that the committee are pretty well satisfied that this proposition ought to be stricken out. I believe I have taken up the time of the committee as long as it is necessary, but I will give one more instance where corporations are useful. That is, in the construction of wagon roads. In a new mining district a wagon road is the first thing to be built to make it valuable. It is generally done by incorporating, so that every step you take in the development of a new country the corporation is essential; and in most cases the capital required for a particular purpose would not exceed the amount of money demanded by the State for the privilege.

REMARKS OF MR. MARTIN.

MR. MARTIN, of Santa Cruz. Mr. Chairman: At the risk of being expelled from the silent members club of this Convention, I desire to say a few words on section seven. I am in favor of striking it out entirely, for the reason that I do not wish to cripple legitimate enterprises by imposing a special tax, or rather by compelling them to pay for the privilege of doing business. In my immediate section of the country are lumber, lime, powder, sugar beet industries, quicksilver mines giving employment to a large number of men, some of them perhaps incorporated; whether they are or not, I do not wish to impair their usefulness or put a damper on their industry by a special clause in the Constitution we are trying to adopt. The farmers in that part of the State which I have the honor to represent, and from whom I received a very flattering vote, are, as a general rule, well to do, and need no class legislation. Neither do the other interests need any class legislation, especially such oppressive measures contemplated by this section. I do not propose by my vote to impair the usefulness of honest industry in order to protect a few men by unjust discrimination. While there may be a small class in my section clamoring for a tax on mortgages, still there is also a demand for more capital to be employed, and by a singular coincidence the cry is uttered by the same people. My colleague, Mr. White, would have you believe that the farming interest is suffering for want of some special constitutional enactment; that they are mortgaged to death, and expect this Convention to keep people from the wiles of bunko sharps or wildcat mining corporations. The idea has always prevailed that an American citizen could take care of himself. Of late years the parental idea of government has entered somewhat into our State machinery. The people have been able to work out their own destiny in spite of legislation, and I am certain we do not need such an extravagant enactment as section seven in our organic law—hence, sir, I shall vote to strike it out.

REMARKS OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I am aware that most of the points at issue have been covered by those who have preceded me, but owing to the importance of this subject, and as affecting the interests of the people with whom I have lived for many years, I desire to add a few words in addition to what has been already said. I am fully aware, Mr. Chairman, that the object of the committee in bringing forth this section seven, and asking its adoption here by this Convention, was in a laudable spirit, and was for a good object, as they thought. That was to destroy the speculations in wildcat mines in this State. But, sir, I am confident that the object of the committee will not be fulfilled in adopting this section, for the reason that it proposes to levy a license, or a tax, whichever you may call it, to prevent these parties from carrying on their schemes. It is a settled fact that you cannot stop crime by compeling them to pay money. Crime will never submit, for the reason that they will pay the money, and it will virtually license them to carry on their nefarious operations, and under this very system the wildcat mines would pay the tax and sell their stock the same as ever. It would be an untold evil to the prospecting and improving of the mines in this State. How is that done? Any one who is conversant with the system of mining knows that it is done by the hardy, restless, energetic men who endure all manner of hardships. They find what they deem a prospect, or a quartz ledge. They have no money to develop the mine. They go to their neighbor, who may be a successful miner, and ask assistance. The answer is that he will give five hundred dollars or one thousand dollars, and others are willing to do the same thing. The next thing is, you must incorporate, because under a system of partnerships it is developed to the satisfaction of every practical man you cannot enforce assessments. If one gets contrary, and refuses to pay, you are compelled to go into the District Court, and are hampered with a long lawsuit. Under a corporation you can sell the stock. What is the condition? As soon as the money is made up it is necessary to pay one hundred dollars. For what? For the privilege of mining. Suppose you were to charge one hundred dollars for farming, what would be the result in this Convention? Why there would be a howl against it as loud as the Pacific Ocean. You cannot regard it in any other light. In the next section you provide that "no license tax shall be imposed by this State, or any municipality thereof, upon any trade, calling, occupation, or business, except the manufacture and sale of wine, spirituous and malt liquors, shows, theaters, menageries, sleight of hand performances, exhibitions for profit, and such other business and occupations of like character as the Legislature may judge the public peace or good order may require to be under special State or municipal control."

Now, sir, if this is not a license, what is it? I contend that it can be nothing else but a license; and if you enforce that it will be necessary to strike out section eight, for they would certainly be inconsistent with each other.

MR. MCCALLUM. I notice in the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, that as to section seven, Messrs. Cross and Turner dissent. I wish to inquire if all the rest of the committee were in favor of it?

MR. EDGERTON. Ten to two.

MR. HUNTER. I was opposed to it, but was not there when the report was signed.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Hunter was the thirteenth juror, and he was not there.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I proposed to say something upon this subject, but as the speaking has all been on our side, I propose to wait until I hear the reasons on the other side.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I should like to hear from the Chairman of the committee, or from some member of it, some reasons for which the committee have reported this section seven. It may be that reasons exist which are not perceptible to many members on this floor, but to my mind the section is objectionable at all points. Thus far—so far as I recollect—no member of the Convention has explained or given a reason for its adoption. We have simply the fact that the report of the committee contains this section. For the reasons that were given by the gentleman from Inyo, Mr. Reddy, and which others have suggested, it seems to me that this should be unanimously rejected. Now, if it be true, as many think, and I am one of them, that our corporation laws are by far too broad for legitimate purposes, the remedy does not lie in imposing a tax upon the legitimate use of corporate power, but it lies in the sound exercise of legislative discretion—in placing proper restrictions upon the exercise of that right. Properly and fairly considered, the province of corporations, as understood at this day, throughout the civilized world, is only the power of associating capital for the promotion of private and public enterprises. We realize, at this day, Mr. Chairman, that there are many enterprises, private as well as public, which require an aggregation of more capital than one individual can command. A million dollars cannot be commanded or combined by individuals without the protective forms of corporations. It may be said that if partnerships or ordinary associations are formed, that you may equally aggregate capital. In one sense you can. The difficulty lies, however, largely in this: that enterprises of large magnitude require not only large capital to carry them on, but they require a long period of time for the consummation of their schemes. Difficulties such as cited by the gentleman from Trinity, arise in partnerships and associations, and are obviated under the corporation laws. Now, sir, it is not to the point that our law has been made so broad as to allow corporations to be formed for illegitimate purposes, nor that they have been so loosely drawn as not to contain the proper safeguards. That is a question that directs itself to the discretion of the Legislature, and so it is left to the article on corporations.

What does this section seven propose? It is to lay a direct tax of one hundred dollars upon the formation of a corporation with a capital stock of fifty thousand dollars, and a further tax of twenty dollars for every increase over the sum of ten thousand dollars. Now, it will be observed, if you figure it out, that the ordinary corporation would be required to pay one thousand dollars into the treasury. Now, I beg of any gentleman of the committee, who have formulated this section, to tell us why this burden should be imposed. Assume that our laws were properly formed, and permitted corporations to be formed only for legitimate purposes, and then if there be an enterprise, public or private, which involves the aggregation of capital to a large amount, why should this exaction be made? Our mining operations are necessarily conducted under the forms of corporations. And while, sir, if I were a member of a legislative body, as I am of this body, I should aim to interpose some restrictions, some safeguards, which our laws do not now contain, yet I recognize the scheme to be wise, the system to be a necessary one. I say, therefore, that it is wise that these enterprises should be permitted to be organized and conducted like all other organizations for the management of business without restriction.

I see no useful office for this section. It will array against the Constitution ten thousand votes in this State; it will work its defeat, although I would not urge it for that reason. We ought to reject nothing because of what may be said, and we ought to adopt nothing for a like reason, but we should have this thing in view. You will find that all the interests in the State that realize the necessity of aggregating capital in the form of corporations, will say that this is a fatal blow at their enterprises, and will exercise themselves to the utmost to defeat it. I trust that this section will be rejected entirely.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I am delighted to see, even at this late day, that these gentlemen who have been assailing corporations have had their bowels of compassion finally moved in behalf of the poor corporations. I do not stand here particularly as the special advocate of this section. The section was incorporated into this report from the Constitution that was drafted by Mr. Laine, of Santa Clara. It has a twofold purpose—and, as suggested by my friend, Major Biggs—who will undoubtedly commend it further. Mr. Laine took it from the Constitution of Missouri.

MR. TINNIN. Is Missouri a mineral State?

MR. EDGERTON. Why, it is one of the greatest mineral States in the world. [Laughter.] You come from Missouri and do not know that? [Laughter.] They have mining corporations there, and it would take you a week to count them.

MR. HOWARD. I would ask the Chairman of the committee if it would not be well to except mining corporations.

MR. EDGERTON. Those are the very ones we are after.

MR. TERRY. Out of fifty-four companies fifty-three are mining corporations.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: This section was adopted after a very mature deliberation and protracted discussion, by a vote of ten to two. Its special advocates were Judge Overton, Mr. Casserly, and Mr Shafter, and those gentlemen are not here now to sustain it. It has a double purpose: one for revenue and one to cut up, root and branch, perhaps, nine tenths of these mining corporations that have been referred to. I think my friend from Inyo, Mr. Reddy, is in error as to the cost of incorporating. It would only cost two hundred dollars on a capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars. The section provides that the company shall pay into the treasury one hundred dollars for the first fifty thousand dollars, and twenty dollars for each ten thousand dollars after that.

MR. REDDY. I say that where the capital stock is divided into fifty thousand shares at one hundred dollars a share the cost would be ten thousand dollars.

MR. EDGERTON. With a capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars it would cost two hundred dollars to incorporate; three hundred thousand dollars, it would cost three hundred dollars, and so on. With a capital stock of one million dollars, it would cost two thousand dollars; ten million dollars capital stock, would cost twenty thousand dollars. I believe that most of these mines nowadays have a capital stock of at least ten million dollars. Ten million dollars is the standard, as suggested by the gentleman.

MR. MCCOY. Are you not mistaken in your figures?

MR. EDGERTON. I understand that the Consolidated Virginia, the California, and all these companies, are incorporated in the City of San Francisco. Many of them are incorporated in this county. It would be a very strange thing if there is a county in this State that has not got a greater or less number of the incorporated sores. The committee had no intention of aiming any blow at any mining corporation, or any other corporation formed for a legitimate business. If I thought the section would strike a blow against any legitimate enterprise I would vote against it. I have yet to be convinced of that fact. As to putting an obstacle in the way of the development of the mines, I do not see that my friend from Inyo has given any satisfactory showing tending to that result. He says that if a man comes here from the State of New York with a hundred thousand dollars to invest in mines that this would prevent an incorporation. Now, sir, if anybody has got one hundred thousand dollars, or fifty thousand dollars, or any other sum of money that they honestly intend to devote to the development of a mine, what necessity is there for incorporating at all? I do not see. As I understand the history of these incorporations a very large majority of them do not incorporate for the purpose of developing anything. They incorporate for the purpose of getting out fifty thousand, or one hundred thousand of those beautiful pictures, in script, with the name of the company elegantly printed thereon, like the Garrison Mining Company, or the Ralston Mining Company—very attractive—capital, ten million dollars.

MR. EAGON. Do you know of a California mine in the market to-day?

MR. MCCALLUM. There are two or three, four or five.

MR. EDGERTON. That makes no difference with the proposition. I know a certain instance where there was no mine in existence at all. Some years ago, I know from my personal knowledge, a mine was incorporated as the Garrison mine. The trustees were appointed, and some very respectable gentleman were connected with it. They went in upon the representations of others. Stock was issued to a large amount, and a great many people bought the stock. It was not long before in the local columns of a certain journal it appeared that this mine gave most flattering prospects of success; it would undoubtedly in a short time go into bonanza. It was not long after that when there was published a very horrifying and terrible accident that occurred in the mine. There had been a premature explosion of a blast, and several miners were killed or injured. Numerous notices appeared in this newspaper to attract public attention toward the mine, and a good deal of stock was sold. Finally it occurred to somebody that they would go and visit the mine. They never could find it. The whole thing was a fiction from beginning to end. I am told, and I believe, that this is the history of a great many of these corporations. It was made to appear to the committee that by far the greatest majority of these corporations were formed for no other purpose in the world than to prey upon the credulity and the cupidity of the public, and that the poor people of the State were drawn into these speculations, and the rich people too, and that they tended to the demoralization and corruption of public and private morals, and that there could be no better or more exalted field for the reformer than to cut off in some manner or other this evil.

MR. HALE. Admitting all that you say, does not your argument go too far? Does not this remedy, which you say will cut off, by proper legislation, these fraudulent operations, go to the extent of prohibiting incorporation for legitimate purposes.

MR. EDGERTON. We will take the case of a mine where they have got a good prospect; they think they have got a good thing. Now, sir, I want to know what necessity there is for incorporating upon that mine with a capital stock of ten million dollars or one hundred thousand shares at one hundred dollars each. I want to know why that should be done if their object is simply the development of that mine? The object is to speculate with the shares; if not, what is the necessity of having so many shares?

MR. HALE. It is this. Take the case you have supposed. Here is a prospect of a good mine. Whether it will be valuable or not depends upon development. Suppose it needs fifty thousand dollars to develop it. There is no ascertained value to commence upon. The basis of corporation is that a certain number of men of means and responsibility will associate themselves together and become subscribers to the stock covering the probable outlay, and not putting in the capital stock at the start, but paying in by installments. Therefore an assessment upon the capital stock is sufficient to cover the probable expenditure in a development of the mine.

MR. EDGERTON. The case presented is one where responsible gentlemen are willing to put in that money—fifty thousand dollars. If they put in that money they propose to own it, and that represents the whole thing—the whole stock in trade absolutely. Why not put that into shares of one thousand dollars each? Why go to San Francisco and put it into one hundred thousand shares at one hundred dollars each, unless it is for the purpose of bringing everybody else into the concern that know nothing about it?

MR. HALE. Those of us who are opposing this section are not the advocates of the San Francisco wildcat schemes; we are from the mountains, and know whereof we speak. We have mines that are not swindles, and the prosperity of the State rests largely upon them. We are as much opposed as the gentleman from Sacramento to the wildcat schemes in San Francisco, yet we recognize the necessity of being protected in this our honest industry.

MR. EDGERTON. Why do not the gentlemen who put their fifty thousand dollars in Placer County put it in there and limit the number of their shares. It does not make any difference to a man who pays in ten thousand dollars whether it is represented by ten shares or one hundred shares; he proposes to invest his money, and why divide it up into so many shares unless it is for purely speculative purposes?

MR. REDDY. You are in favor, then, of compelling these corporations to limit the number of shares of capital stock, say five shares.

MR. EDGERTON. That is not what I am in favor of.

MR. REDDY. We will bring them down to five shares. Now, as I understand the provision, for anything less than fifty thousand dollars you will have to pay so much; if they have five shares you tax them twenty dollars a share right on the start. If you limit the number of shares why the tax becomes heavier upon each share.

MR. EDGERTON. I think the idea of the section is a proper one, even if it would not allow anybody to incorporate at all for the development of a mine, and for the very reason that we ought to reach this great evil that exists in this State. If gentlemen have money that they want to develope a mine with why do they not apply it to that purpose? What necessity is there for a corporation?

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired under the rule.

[Cries of "Leave!" "Leave!"]

MR. EDGERTON. I do not care to take up the time of the committee. I have been asked the reasons why the committee incorporated this section in their report, and I have given them as I understand them. It was believed that it would strike a fatal blow at the evil which I have attempted to describe, and that it would not work an injustice or injury to any interest. I do not believe that if there had been such a section in existence at any time in the last twenty-five years it would have obstructed the development of any interest.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I have been in favor of bridling corporations and protecting the people against——

MR. EDGERTON. I have now in my hand the Constitution of the State of Missouri, adopted in eighteen hundred and seventy-five, where substantially the same provision is found which is offered by the committee:

"SEC. 21. No corporation, company, or association, other than those formed for benevolent, religious, scientific, or educational purposes, shall be created or organized under the laws of this State, unless the persons named as corporators shall, at or before the filing of the articles of association or incorporation, pay into the State treasury fifty dollars for the first fifty thousand dollars, or less, of capital stock, and a further sum of five dollars for every additional ten thousand dollars of its capital stock. And no such corporation, company, or association shall increase its capital stock without first paying into the treasury five dollars for every ten thousand dollars of increase; provided, that nothing contained in this section shall be construed to prohibit the general assembly from levying a further tax on the franchises of such corporation."

That last proviso is not in our report.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I am one of those who believe, and have acted upon that opinion, that corporations should be bridled and controlled by specific laws; that the people should be protected against any abuse of power that may grow out of corporations. But, believing that this State is rich; rich in her undeveloped mines; rich in her varied mineral resources, not only in the precious metals, but in other minerals; that our mountains lie undeveloped; that her wealth is buried deeply in her own bowels; and that in order to develop the industries of the State it is necessary that risks should be assumed; that experiments should be tried; that corporations should be formed, so that men with even moderate means might have an opportunity of engaging in this business of developing the resources and wealth of this State—I believe we would do the State a service by striking out this section entirely, and leave it to a future Legislature to provide by law for whatever may be necessary to protect the people, and yet permit the different corporations to be organized in this State for the development of its resources. Not only are they a source of revenue, but they are a source of wealth in this State. It is no time for us to discourage these developments. The labor market is crowded. The workmen and the laborers of the country are asking for employment. Let us encourage a diversity of employment, and a circulation of the money of the country that lies in the banks and the coffers of the rich. Let us encourage this surplus money to go into corporations and enhance the future growth of the State and its prosperity. Now, if the last clause of the eighth section is adopted, I think it will be all that is necessary in this direction. It says: "But the Legislature may by law impose any license, or other tax, on persons or corporations owning or using franchises or corporate privileges." Now, I think that the Legislature will have ample power to enact such laws as in their wisdom the exigencies of the case may require, and therefore I hope that the seventh section will be stricken out.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the seventh section will be stricken out. Those of the members who have in a measure voted against corporations, have nevertheless recognized that corporations have rights as well as duties. The seventh section would not only affect wildcat corporations, but would affect every legitimate enterprise directly in the channel of the corporation. It seems to me that the adoption of the seventh section would be loading down the Constitution, and the State does not desire to raise revenue in any such way. It is of no good. The Legislature can provide what the advantages of incorporation and the increase of capital stock shall be, and in my opinion the seventh section ought to be stricken out.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I think the section ought to be stricken out for two reasons; first, because it does not confine itself to mining corporations, but will include every kind of manufacturing interest that is started here, if it is done by corporations. If men wish to come in here and establish an interest that is to grow in the near future into large proportions, in this State, they cannot incorporate for the purpose without being taxed for the privilege, in the first place, by paying this tax upon incorporations. Another reason is, that the tax upon the corporation is a tax for a privilege which is the franchise of the corporation. Now, we have already provided in the section that we have adopted, that the franchises for these corporations shall be taxed. Furthermore, it will leave it in the power of the Legislature, especially if we adopt the section following this, the eighth section, as has been said by the gentleman from Los Angeles, to impose in the shape of a license any other tax that it may deem necessary for any of these purposes. As we have already provided for taxing the franchise, which is the privilege, and this, if it is put upon them, will be nothing but taxing the privilege, which is the franchise, we will be virtually taxing the franchise twice, and I hope that the section will be stricken out.

MR. LARKIN. I move the previous question.

REMARKS OF MR. WELLIN.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. Chairman: I have no doubt that every gentleman upon this floor admits the evil arising from these wildcat mining speculations, but gentlemen seem to forget altogether that we have not sustained this loss from the mines of California. The hardships complained of come from the Comstock. The corporations, it is true, have been in California. But, if we adopt this section seven, the result will be that any business of this kind will simply incorporate in the State of Nevada and carry on the business, and we will have all the evils without any of the gains whatever. We are perfectly willing for that committee or any other committee of this Convention to adopt some plan by which corporations can be managed honestly, and the people saved from robbery. We are perfectly willing and anxious that some plan be devised to break up the system of robbery carried on by the San Francisco Stock Board. But I don't see that the seventh section will accomplish that result. It forces us to yield up all the rights and privileges granted by the system of incorporation. It drives legitimate business outside of the State unless it can be carried on by individuals or partnerships. It gives us no relief whatever and I see no use of it. The reasons offered by the Chairman of the committee were certainly not very strong. It was entirely beyond his depth. Why, so far as the mines in California are concerned, I only know of two before the people, there may be others, on the San Francisco Stock Board, and I do not know that the people have complained of these two. The cause of our complaint is the management of the Comstock mines and the drain has been upon the people of California. Give us some remedy for that.

MR. EDGERTON. Under this section it does not make any difference where the property is situated. The corporations are all formed here.

MR. WELLIN. They can just incorporate in Nevada and open an office in San Francisco.

MR. KLEINE. Don't you deal in stocks yourself?

MR. WELLIN. That is my business. I suppose because the gentleman once in awhile wins a dollar or two, he considers it all right. I maintain that the San Francisco Stock Board has been the cause of more poverty, and of the concentration of more wealth into a few hands, than any other system of business carried on in the State of California. I have no doubt but what I can prove it. But this section seven does not prevent that kind of business. They can incorporate in Nevada and open an office in San Francisco, and do their business, as they have done before. Instead of remedying this evil, you shut off every legitimate business in the State of California. They have some good mines over there; but they have many worthless ones. Do not ask us to suspend all our corporation business in order to reach these swindles.

MR. McCALLUM. It will be unnecessary to extend this discussion, but if the gentleman wishes to speak, I will withhold my motion.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I thank the gentleman, and will not detain the committee long. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this section, because I believe it will tend to discourage one of the most nefarious practices that was ever indulged in by a civilized community in the name of business. I do not believe that it will discourage legitimate enterprises of any kind whatever. It certainly will not discourage legitimate mining enterprise. It has been well said by the Chairman of the committee, that if any man or association of men desire to open a mine and conduct their mining enterprise, they can do it with their own money. They can do it if they have it. They can do it without incorporating, with five or ten millions of capital stock. They can do it with fifty or one hundred thousand dollars, or two hundred thousand dollars of capital stock, as well as ten million. But that does not suit the game. That means to pay. Then they will have to represent their capital stock. But that is not their game. When they have represented every share of stock for about what it is worth in property, or in a mine for the purpose of development, why, the hostlers and the chambermaids cannot buy that stock. They cannot pay a hundred dollars a share for five or ten shares of the stock. No; it must be watered. It must be thinned out, so that there can be a raid made on the chambermaids; a raid made on the hostlers; a raid made upon the lawyers; and a raid made on these good old honest grangers; a raid on the preachers; and a raid on everybody. That is the true inwardness of this little business of watering capital stock and floating shares in such enormous sums of money. It has been well said by one of the San Francisco newspapers, that it is to make a raid on the savings banks. Now, sir, it will cripple and discourage no legitimate enterprise, because legitimate enterprises can be represented by men and by money. There is no use in their having paper for any legitimate purpose. There must be a diabolical scheme to rob the community put up, and it can be done by this means, and not otherwise.

MR. REDDY. You think that these corporations are put up for a swindle on the public. Then according to this section the State is perfectly willing to allow the swindle to go on if the State has a dividend. The State wants part of the stealing.

MR. TERRY. Just as they license gambling.

MR. REYNOLDS. No, sir; it is not for the purpose of licensing them, but it is for the purpose of prohibiting and preventing them, and I can tell you how. I will have to describe just for a moment the manner in which these schemes are put up in San Francisco. Gentlemen have been telling that they come from the mountains. I come from the mountains too, and have lived about as long in the mountains as any gentleman on this floor, and I know how the thing is done. A number of curbstone brokers—and perhaps, curbstone brokers that have lost all their money in some speculation—they put up a scheme, get a parcel of them together, and incorporate. How do they incorporate? They select some good business man, some merchant, with whom one of them has had a personal acquaintance. In better days he may have bought a bill of goods of him. He goes to him and tells him a fine story, and finally tells him: We want to put you in as one of the corporators. They go and print their stock on credit. They struggle around and raise the fifteen dollars necessary to pay the officers' fees for filing the certificate. By and by when the printer wants his pay they go and strike this gentleman whom they have put in as one of the corporators for fifty dollars, or one hundred dollars, for the expense of printing their stock and for office rent, where they have out their sign and commence selling this stock, and so they ring in one after another. This is the kind of corporation that we desire to discourage. Now, if they have to pay one hundred dollars down, instead of fifteen, they could not incorporate at all, because they could not get this gentleman whom they afterwards strike to put up for one hundred dollars to begin with—not a bit of it. Now, a gentleman has just handed me one of these certificates as an example, and it is stated to me as a fact—"capital stock, one hundred thousand dollars." This is an old one; they do things better now, they make it ten million dollars. This one hundred thousand dollars they sell, and it is just such a scheme as I have described you, there never was a scratch in the ground, and there never was a claim staked off.

MR. AYERS. What company?

MR. REYNOLDS. This is only one of hundreds and hundreds of them. The newspapers give you every morning two or three of these things that are started, and there is not a dollar, or a mine, or anything at all. You say that people have no business to invest their money in that kind of a swindle.

MR. REDDY. How many swindles do you know in connection with irrigating companies?

MR. REYNOLDS. I am not in the watering business. I am in favor of squeezing the water out of them.

MR. REDDY. How many swindles are there among the companies formed for swamp land reclamation?

MR. REYNOLDS. All that catechism is aside from this argument. This committee well know that this is a blow at the wildcat schemes put up in California street.

MR. GREGG. Cannot these corporations be formed out of the State?

MR. REYNOLDS. They can be formed elsewhere, but not here. There is a law on the statute books that no foreign corporation shall enjoy any of the privileges of the law of this State concerning corporations, without first complying with the law relating to domestic corporations. Now, sir, there is scarcely a corporation on the Pacific Coast that is not incorporated in San Francisco. There is a reason for this. What is the reason? Why do they come to San Francisco? Because San Francisco is the field for them to pluck. It is their harvest field. It is the place where they must go in order that they can get hold of that great community of three hundred thousand people, and through them the other six hundred thousand people of the Pacific Coast. Talk about incorporating a mine in Inyo County, or in El Dorado County, and then undertaking to float it on the stock market in San Francisco! Why, you never would hear of it. The result is, that where there is a legitimate enterprise on foot, and they desire to incorporate in San Francisco, they will incorporate there, and they will pay this one hundred dollars fee for doing so, if there is anything in their business. But if it is a wildcat scheme, and there is nothing in it, and they have got to put up one hundred dollars before they can start, it never will be put up. So that there is never going to be any harm done to legitimate enterprises. It is easy to see that, because nineteen twentieths of the incorporations of the Pacific Coast are filed in San Francisco, there must be some good reason for it. I tell you, it commends itself to the intelligence of every member of this committee, that if there is a good reason for it, and if the company desire to incorporate a legitimate enterprise, a hundred dollar fee, or a two hundred, or a three hundred dollar fee, for that matter, would never discourage them. But I tell you I know whereof I speak, when I say that two or three hundred dollars, or one hundred dollars, will discourage the best part of these wonderful corporations which you read about in the newspapers that are constantly being filed on the list in the office of the Secretary of State.

SPEECH OF MR. KLEINE.

MR. KLEINE. Mr. Chairman: I have heard considerable about mines here among gentlemen, and about wildcats, and about swindling. The gentleman that just sat down, he exhibited a certificate. I have no doubt that is the way he lost all his money. Well, Mr. Chairman, I have heard considerable about the cause of the many men that have committed suicides about mining stocks, but not one of these gentlemen have told us about the blessings from these mines. I will tell you, gentlemen, some of the blessings now, some of the benefits which the Comstock has produced upon the State of California and Nevada. In the first place, I know whereof I speak. I lived on the Comstock eleven years, and I know something about it. The Comstock pays up over one hundred and seven millions in dividends. The mines in the State of Nevada employ over twenty thousand men; they support their families: men, women, and children, depending on the mines; and do they work for a dollar a day? No, sir! They get four dollars a day for eight hours' work—thanks to the Miners' Union for that. In Virginia City alone we have about twenty or twenty-five great mines—what I call mines—that have produced—and every man has been buying mines. And these gentlemen who are members of this Convention are crying against these mines; why? I tell you why. They have been the victims. They have dealt in mining stocks and they have lost their money, and they are cursing the mines. They bought mining stocks with the intention of getting the best of these men and these men got the best of them, and now they are cursing them.

Now you cut away the mining interest in this State and I tell you it is only to help the Mongolian to stay. And I predict that property on California, Pine, and Montgomery streets, and all property in San Francisco, will depreciate fifty per cent., and the Chinamen would occupy that part of the city, and the City of San Francisco would pray for the stock board again. I am no stock gambler; I am a working man. I work with my hands and I intend to do so as long as I live. I have done it and I expect to do it till my life has an end. But I say mining stocks and mines in this State are a blessing to the country.

Now I know—I heard a gentleman say—a great many blow their brains out. Gentlemen, I know business men sometimes blow their brains out. The man that would blow his brains out because he loses a little money in mining stocks, that same man will blow his brains out when he loses in business or anything else. I say that a man that will blow his brains out because he loses money, I don't think that man is of sound mind.

Now, gentleman, as I have said, remember that there are between twenty-five thousand and thirty thousand families depending upon the mining interest of Nevada, and if you put this down, you put down the best interest in the State. There are many men that go down to the stock market to buy stocks. For what pursose? For the purpose of getting the best of these men. And some men are so foolish. They buy this mining stock—they never will use their judgment as they use it in other business, but they will buy the very lowest wildcat stock, and they are so foolish they never will buy real good stock, where they expect to develop ore. They always buy up some old wildcat.

Now, gentlemen, I ask you, in the name of common sense, what is a wildcat? [Laughter.] I remember eight years ago—I recollect the California mine and the Consolidated Virginia mine was a wildcat. So it was. They had nothing in there, and it was sold for one dollar and fifty cents a share. Well, it was considered a wildcat. What did it prove to be? It proved to be a mine—the richest mine that ever was discovered. They paid over fifty million dollars to its shareholders. What did they do? When they went down to prospect that mine they could not prospect that mine except it was an incorporated company for private individuals could never have developed the Comstock lode. You must remember that there is a difference between a silver mine and a gold mine in California. These mines in San Francisco cost millions and millions of dollars; it costs millions of dollars to sink a shaft. It costs millions of dollars to erect the machinery, and therefore it requires assessments in order to develop these mines: and I say that the man that finds fault with them, all he has to do is to let him stay away from them. No man compels you to buy mining stock if you don't see fit to do so. Therefore let us go for the land grabbers! [Laughter.] Let us go for these men that hold five or six hundred thousand acres of land. They pay no taxes. Go for them, and then you will have accomplished everything. And I say to you delegates from San Francisco, if you want to make yourselves conspicuous, go for those men, and not make people believe that you want to do something by going for the mining interest. No, you won't do it! Not a bit of it.

Let mining prospecting go on, and not discourage it, and encourage it all you can. But I say these mines, or this wildcat stock—which some of the gentlemen declare wildcat stock—I warn you keep out of them; don't buy them. I know that men want to buy them if they think they can double their money on them. That is what all these men are after that purchase mining stocks. Now, gentlemen, for my own part I am not a mining stock gambler, although I purchase mining stock once in awhile—I always use my judgment. I never purchase wildcat stock. [Laughter.]

MR. MCFARLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman what stock to buy?

MR. KLEINE. Yes, I will tell you what to buy if you want to make money. You buy the stock when it is low and sell them when they go up, and when you purchase, then don't you buy them on a margin. [Laughter.]

REMARKS OF MR. BARRY.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that this section should be stricken out. I believe that the only reason the committee had was that they aimed to strike at a great evil—that of dealing in the class of mines to which the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds, has referred, and which, perhaps, the gentleman himself has dealt in. But it has nothing whatever to do with the honest legitimate mining of this State. It has nothing to do with the incorporations and those that form incorporations for the purpose of developing the resources of the State; not for the purpose of taking the money from the chambermaids and those who are in the humblest walks of life; those who may be hostlers. But this section aims a direct blow at the legitimate mining interests of this State, and if not a death blow, certainly one that would work a serious injury, if not an irreparable one. In every mining county in this state mining corporations are formed for the purpose of developing the hidden resources of the hills. It requires a large expenditure of money, in many instances hundreds of thousands of dollars, to develop a mine. In many instances they prove very valuable, not only to those who are interested, but to the county and the State at large. It has been admitted that these mining interests are of great benefit to the State. There is no man who is aware of the great good that is done in legitimate mining enterprises but who would admit that to incorporate this section into the Constitution of this State would be dealing a very serious blow, to say the least of it, to legitimate mining. It would arrest the golden stream which is flowing continuously into the lap of commerce, which has helped to build up the State and make it the pride and admiration of every Californian. How can any man wish to destroy this interest for the sake of reaching the evil which the gentleman from San Francisco has pointed out, and which we all admit to exist? But I say that the result desired will not be accomplished by this section. These men who form these companies for the ostensible purpose of developing mines in Nevada, when it is really only a mine upon paper, will not be arrested in their work by this section. They will still continue to incorporate because they are able to pay the amount required by this section, because they know that they can fleece those who may be gulled by their operations. If we would encourage this great industry, if we would not thwart the honest purposes of miners to help themselves and to build up the mining resources of the county in which they incorporate, and in which they do their business, to the benefit of the whole State, then I say that this section should be stricken out.

It would also do injury in other cases. There may be corporations formed for manufacturing purposes, and for many other classes of business which would be discouraged, and in many cases they would be wholly prevented from forming themselves into corporations, for not only their own good, but for the interest of the people. I trust that the good sense of this committee will determine that this section would do more harm than it would do good; that it would strike a very serious blow at our legitimate enterprises. If these gentlemen desire to correct a great evil, and I must say that we are all with them in that, let them adopt another mode. Let them provide another section to strike at these great evils, and I say that we from the mountains and from the interior generally, will be with them heart and soul.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I would like to see this discussion closed. But these gentlemen seem to desire a direct tax to be raised upon incorporations to be formed in the future. Under the last clause of section eight, the Legislature may impose any license or other tax on persons or corporations owning or using franchises or corporate privileges. Under that provision the twenty thousand corporations may be licensed, and should be licensed. In that way a revenue can be obtained, and those corporations holding property and not doing business may be compelled to disincorporate. There should be a license of that class of corporations to show whether they have any vitality, and if they do not pay their license they should be wiped out. But this proposition is only for a direct tax upon incorporations filed in the future. This is not the way to arrive at this question. I desire to license all corporations doing business in this State. It makes no difference whether they are incorporated under the laws of this State or not. I think that the section should be stricken out, and allow the Legislature to license all corporations incorporated under the laws of the State, or doing business in the State. I think that would be much better.

MR. LAMPSON. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of striking out the section, but I think there has been sufficient discussion, and therefore I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out section seven.

The motion prevailed.

LICENSES.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section eight.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 8. No license tax shall be imposed by this State, or any municipality thereof, upon any trade, calling, occupation, or business, except the manufacture and sale of wine, spirituous, and malt liquors, shows, theaters, menageries, sleight of hand performances, exhibitions for profit, and such other business and occupations of like character as the Legislature may judge the public peace or good order may require to be under special State or municipal control. But the Legislature may by law impose any license, or other tax, on persons or corporations owning or using franchises or corporate privileges.

MR. STUART. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert after the word 'liquors,' in the fourth line, the words 'by other than the grower of the product from which they, or any of them, are manufactured.'"

MR. STUART. Mr. Chairman: This is only to relieve the producers of wine, or the growers of grapes, from being classified with the retailers, and the theaters and managers of other institutions to be licensed. I think, sir, that it is not proper that they should be placed there. I think that our interest is sufficiently taxed to warrant us to claim exemption from the ordinary retail dealers' license. I therefore offer this amendment to the section as being only just to ourselves, and think the Chairman will probably accept it as an amendment.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section eight.

MR. AYERS. I second the motion.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: It is wholly unnecessary. It is an attempt to do that which should not be done in a Constitution. It is proposed here to do a certain thing, and then it empowers the Legislature to do it. It is a species of attempt to legislate upon every trivial matter—matters that should be left wholly to the Legislature; and the section itself does leave it to the Legislature. Therefore, why put it into the Constitution at all. I do earnestly desire that it be stricken out. There is no necessity for the section at all.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the motion made by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Caples, to strike out this section, will prevail. The matters treated of are matters purely of legislative discretion. It ought not to be expected that this Convention should designate what matters should be taxed in this respect. These are not fundamental matters. These are matters upon which the Legislature can safely be trusted. These are matters upon which we ought not to provide by the higher rule of the Constitution. I know that hitherto the policy of the State, and of all the States, has been, to a great extent, to provide a considerable portion of its revenue by licenses upon various occupations. Whether that is a correct or an incorrect policy, I think it is at least safe to leave it as a question of legislative discretion, and not undertake to perpetuate an error which we may fall into in this Constitution.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Stuart.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Caples, to strike out section eight.

The motion prevailed.

POLL TAX.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section nine.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 9. The Legislature shall provide for the levy and collection of an annual poll tax of not less than two dollars, for school purposes, on every male inhabitant of this State over twenty-one and under sixty years of age, except paupers, idiots, insane persons, and Indians not taxed. Said tax shall be paid into the State School Fund.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section nine.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I wish to move to amend the section so as to make the tax payable into the county Hospital Fund of the county in which it is collected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's motion is not in order at present.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: There was a division in the Committee on Revenue and Taxation on this section. I opposed it altogether, with Messrs. Dudley, Overton, Tully, and Turner. I see that Major Biggs is here. He offered it in committee, and I call upon him to state to the committee the reasons upon which he based his support.

REMARKS OF MR. BIGGS.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I will state in a few words why I offered this amendment in the committee, and I was very much surprised to find a dissenting voice in the committee. I am more surprised to see gentlemen on this floor opposing it who have repeatedly announced that one great cause of complaint against Mongolian immigration was that the Chinamen were no benefit to the State. Sir, when I was elected to a seat upon this floor I promised my constituents that I would do everything in my power to get rid of this Mongolian element that is here. Almost all of the other gentlemen came here under similar promises, and I am surprised to find that they do not want to tax them one dollar for school purposes, or for any other purpose. They want them to stay here and live under the protection of the Government, free.

MR. EDGERTON. They have been taxed by the Legislature, always; ever since the State was organized.

MR. BIGGS. We propose to tax them in our organic law, and we propose to do it annually, in the sum of two dollars per head. And I want to know if there is a man here, or a good citizen anywhere in the State, who is not willing to pay two dollars a year for the common schools of this State. I want it paid into the General School Fund of the State. And if there is a gentleman here within the sound of my voice who would not pay two dollars a year to educate the youth of this State, why I say he is made of different material from what I am. There is no road tax—only a poll tax of two dollars on the head, and that for school purposes. Let gentlemen think what amount San Francisco would receive from Chinamen alone. In San Francisco the Chinamen number—how many Mr. Barbour?

MR. BARBOUR. About thirty thousand—permanent.

MR. BIGGS. Yes; thirty thousand permanent, and perhaps ten thousand more floating. That would make eighty thousand dollars you can collect from the Chinamen alone in San Francisco for school purposes. I want to tax every man over twenty-one and under sixty years of age, and I want it paid into the General School Fund. The rest of the people are willing to pay this tax so that we can get it from the Chinamen too. You who are really opposed to Chinese immigration ought to join me, and let us tax them in every way, shape, and form, until we get rid of them.

MR. TULLY. When we get rid of them we don't want this in the Constitution.

MR. BIGGS. First catch your hare.

MR. STUART. Are there any children of Mongolians that go to the schools?

MR. BIGGS. There are.

MR. STUART. The public schools?

MR. BIGGS. I do not know, but I want to make them pay. Our prisons are filled with them, and our hospitals are filled with them. Let us do it. They will not tax you. You are too old——

MR. STUART. I am not too old to be taxed, or drafted into the army. Does not the gentleman know that there is a law that prohibits the Mongolian children receiving any of the benefits of our School Fund; that the negro and the Indian have a right to education, but that the children of the Mongolian have none?

MR. BIGGS. I propose to tax them.

MR. STUART. Do you not know that the Mongolian now pays his tax more freely and more punctually than the white man that travels the country. The gentleman knows these things and so do these other gentlemen, and when he comes to talk on that subject I am going to have a talk on it.

MR. BIGGS. I am not as fortunate as to employ such help as he does. I employ the Anglo-Saxon race. I do not employ one Chinaman—except a cook. [Laughter.] The gentlemen may laugh. I would not give one old fashioned negro for a dozen of them.

MR. STUART. In olden times I would not.

MR. BIGGS. I would tax every man under sixty years of age, and I want to make it a general fund.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I hope this section will not be stricken out, as I wish to introduce an amendment prohibiting any poll tax or capitation tax.

MR. EDGERTON. That would not be an amendment—to prohibit what the section provides for.

MR. SMITH. It seems to me that this kind of a tax should not be allowed. Now, so far as my experience and knowledge of collecting taxes of this kind is concerned, it seems to me to be one of the most fruitful sources of swindling, and taking money by the Tax Collectors. There being no assessment of poll taxes, the Tax Collector can put into his pockets thousands of dollars and nobody know anything about it. The idea that we have established, so far as we have gone, is to tax all property. The idea is that the poor man, who has no property, pays no tax. He pays more taxes in proportion to his ability than the richest man in the country. Taxation shifts itself. Every man who pays a tax shifts it upon somebody else. A tax is shifted from one to the other until it goes down to the bottom, where it can be shifted no longer. Those men who have property shift it upon those who rent property from them, and it rests finally upon the shoulders of the poor man. The tax is taken from the poor man before he gets his pay. It is taken from the amount that he earns. And then you are going to pile on more taxes by taxing him for his head. It is against principle; it is against policy; it is against the theory of taxation, and I hope that the section will not be stricken out, but that we will amend it so as to prohibit the tax. If we strike it out the Legislature will have the power to levy a poll tax. If we say nothing about it we give the Legislature that power. I say that it should be prohibited in this section.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I voted against the section in the committee for the reason that I do not believe it is a fit place for it in the Constitution of the State. I think it may be very properly left to the discretion of the Legislature, and for the same reason I shall vote to strike it out here.

MR. TULLY. For the same reasons assigned by the Chairman of the committee I hope that it will be stricken out.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I shall not be content with the mere striking out of this section. I want a distinct and positive declaration here that this oppressive tax, which is not justified by any proper principle of taxation at all, that the Legislature shall be forever prohibited from imposing any tax upon the poll. I propose to offer a section exactly the same as it is in the Ohio Constitution. I believe it contains the correct expression of the doctrine. It is as follows:

"The levying of taxes, by the poll, is grievous and oppressive; therefore the General Assembly shall never levy a poll tax for county or State purposes."

According to all the tenor of all the debates in this Convention, it seems to me that gentlemen cannot consistently oppose the insertion in the Constitution of a proposition like that. All have contended that taxation should be upon property, and upon property alone. Now, sir, has a head any value? I can prove by the Sacramento Record-Union that two thirds of the heads in this Convention have no value. What better authority do you want than that?

MR. BIGGS. Those men pay no taxes, but they receive protection.

MR. BARBOUR. Is that your principle of taxation—protection?

MR. BIGGS. Yes.

MR. BARBOUR. Are you in favor of equal taxation? The gentleman declines to answer. It is not equal. It does not work equally. The tax is made to fall—all taxes are made to fall—upon the laborer. It is a demonstrable fact that the taxation of the country must necessarily fall upon the labor of the country. All writers on political economy admit and state the truth of that proposition. Ultimately the whole burden of taxation falls upon the laborer. The labor constitutes the wealth of the country, and pays the taxes. It is not merely the man who takes the sack of corn up to the counter. He is from the producing community.

MR. TULLY. Does not the laborer escape taxation on that?

MR. BARBOUR. No. He pays the tax. Every man who is laboring constantly produces wealth, and he pays the tax. Now, you propose to stick an extra tax upon his poll and all he has produced during the year. It is unjust and oppressive, and I hope the Convention will not be content with striking it out, but will put in a positive declaration that such a tax shall not be levied.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I have no objection to striking out the whole matter and leaving it to the Legislature, but if that is not done I shall certainly insist upon my amendment. In answer to the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, I have something to say. I do not know how I can illustrate better than to give a little of my own experience. I, Mr. Chairman, have been a large employer for the last twenty-nine years; have had in my employ thousands of men; and I make the assertion here that ninety-five per cent., or more than ninety-five per cent. of the men that I have had in my employ, spent their money as fast as they earned it—it goes to the saloons; this is true as regards seventy-five per cent. I have often, actuated by a feeling of charity, remonstrated, more particularly with men advanced in years, who were in my service, on the folly of abusing themselves in that way, and have reasoned with them in this way: "Now," said I, "you are getting old, and after awhile you will be sick and unable to work, and you will come to want." "No, no, by no means; there is a county hospital. No danger of us coming to want, there is a county hospital provided for us." Now, I ask, in all common reason, if those men live and squander their money in this way, should they not be compelled to contribute a little mite to the common fund, I do not say to the School Fund, but to the County Hospital Fund, to provide them with the refuge that they rely upon, when you tax every economical, industrious man upon everything he acquires from his earnings? I say that the proposition is founded in wisdom, in justice, in equity, and that no man can complain. Therefore, if the motion to strike out fails, I shall insist upon my amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. GRACE.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: The argument of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Caples, is a strange one. Just suppose that the laboring class of this State; the men that do the work; the producers; the men that pack the hod, that plow the sod; supposing that they never save a red cent—and I recognize the fact that they don't save a great deal—is there any justice, any logic, any reason to be given why the State should say: "These boys are going to work for a week, and they will be discharged as soon as they are through." Now, we can steal two, or three, or four dollars from them. This State can catch them now, and take the money out of their wages before they are paid. It is not right to take it, but then they give it to the saloons, and we only take it for a hospital fund. They can die in the poorhouse." This is a brilliant idea to bring here before an intelligent body of men. I tell you that the comforts are not very great in a poorhouse. I tell you that the working men that produce all the wealth of the world have little themselves, and it is robbery to impose a poll tax upon them. I have seen the injustice of it. I have felt it. I have been a tramp. I have tramped through fourteen States of the Union, all the Territories, and elsewhere. I have traveled fifteen hundred miles in a line, working at almost everything. I am a carpenter. I have packed my tools upon my shoulder through every street in San Francisco. I can shove a jack plane, and I can come and talk constitutional law with the lawyers. [Laughter.] I say that the man who has no property ought not to pay taxes, and I am opposed to this section, and hope that it will be stricken out and Mr. Barbour's amendment put in.

REMARKS OF MR. GREGG.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: My friend Mr. Barbour is just beginning to get his eyes open. I used, the other day, the very argument which he uses now, that the poor man has to pay the taxes. It results in that. I am opposed to this section. I am opposed to levying any poll tax. A poll tax is an odious thing. It is odious because it is levied indiscriminately against those who are able to pay and those who are not. I would like to see the scheme of my friend Barbour carried out even where this tax is collected. The poll tax man puts a large quantity of it into his pocket. The public never get the benefit of it. I hope there will be an absolute prohibition against any poll tax whatever, for when the farmer pays the property tax he will see where the money goes.

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the section will be stricken out, and the amendment of Mr. Barbour adopted. A man who has nothing pays plenty of tax in the exactions that are made upon him for living. The man who has nothing but his head to protect, gives more protection to the community, in my view, than any other man in the community, as regards his relationship to the community in his individual capacity. What would the property in this State be worth if it was not for the two or three hundred thousand men who are comparatively propertyless? Who could defend you in war or make you strong in peace? Who can carry forward the great works that are necessary to be carried forward in order to maintain the State in all its relationships to itself and to society, but this vast army of men who own comparatively no property? They are a security to you who do own the property. They are the men who make property valuable to you, and without them you could not own property. You could not stand here as a little handful of capitalists and land owners. In connection with owning these fields, you have also to bring with you the laboring man, the poor man—he who fills up society; he who is the army; he who is that substratum upon which society is founded, rests, and exists. His presence alone is worth more than the presence of anybody else, as compared with his relationship to the State. Therefore I am in favor of striking out the section, as reported by the committee, and inserting the one proposed by Mr. Barbour.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of striking out this section. I will not say that it is not right to impose a poll tax, but I think it is impolitic. If I was a tramp I would take some pride in saying that I had done something to the support of the Government, but I think a poll tax is impolitic; therefore, I am in favor of inserting a provision that would prohibit one. I am, of course, interested in the support of education. I believe that I can appreciate the benefits of the common school system, but I am in favor of levying the tax for the support of the common schools upon property, and upon that alone. In that way we will have a sure foundation.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I rise for the purpose of inquiring what will be the effect of striking out the section.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out section nine.

The motion prevailed.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I offer this in place of section nine.

THE CHAIRMAN. It can be offered afterwards. The Secretary will read section ten.

SUSPENSION OF TAXATION.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 10. The power of taxation shall never be surrendered or suspended by any grant or contract to which the State shall be a party.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendment to section ten the Secretary will read section eleven.

TAXES BY INSTALLMENTS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 11. The Legislature shall provide by law for the payment of all taxes on real property by installments.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section eleven.

MR. EDGERTON. I have no objection to that section.

MR. AYERS. I have a strong objection to striking that out.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I would like to state why that was inserted. I will state that the reason for it was simply this: This is a twofold proposition. It is well known that by the present system, at the first of the year we pay into the State and county treasuries about fifteen million dollars. That money is collected up and not disbursed for twelve months. The object of this section is to keep the money in circulation. Let the Legislature provide that half can be paid on the first of January and half on the first of July. It would be a benefit to every person that owes a dollar. They could have the privilege of paying all at once, or they can pay half each time, in some manner to be prescribed by the Legislature.

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. If the money is not used, why not make it all the first of July?

MR. BIGGS. Because we must have some. The object is that a man can pay one installment on the first of January, and another on the first of July. I am no stickler for it personally, but I favor it at the suggestion of a great number of persons. Instead of this large amount of money being hoarded up in the treasury, it gives the taxpayer the use of it. Nobody is benefited by it in the treasury. I think it would be a good thing.

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: As I introduced the proposition, which was referred to the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, on which this section is founded, I deem it but right to say that I consider this as important a section as could be adopted in this Constitution. As Mr. Biggs has very justly said, it will keep in circulation the tax money of this State and allow it to remain with the people instead of being locked up altogether at one season of the year. It is cramping business and creating commercial difficulties which should not occur. The custom of collecting taxes in installments prevails in a number of the countries of Europe. In France it has proved a very successful system. There, at least in Paris, they are divided into twelve parts. These parts are represented by coupons and can be paid monthly. The result of that system is that the money is constantly flowing in and flowing out to the relief of the finances of the State. We have found by experience that at that season of the year when the taxes are collected, that a vast amount of money is withdrawn from circulation and locked up in the county and State treasuries, and that it is almost impossible to find enough money to carry on the ordinary business; and, further than this, if even this were a fictitious case, if even it were a fiction that money was scarce, lenders take the advantage of the withdrawal of this money for taxes for the purpose of imposing more usurious conditions upon business borrowers.

Now I assert, and I believe, that if the Legislature, under this authority, shall enact a judicious mode of collecting the taxes by installments that it will prove a relief to the business people throughout this State, and that it will be a measure for which the people will thank us.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I hope this section will be retained. I know, sir, that in the State of Pennsylvania a system of this kind has been in vogue for years. It has worked well. It has left a very large amount of money, in the aggregate, in the hands of the people. The money has been paid into the different treasuries of the State, as it has been needed. Now, we all know, as has been very well expressed by my colleague, Mr. Ayers, that the first of January, the time when our taxes become delinquent, is a very cramped time. Under our present system every one wants money to pay taxes at the same time, and that fact is taken advantage of. That money, or the greater portion of it, lies idle for the greater part of the year. I do believe that the Legislature could provide for a semi-annual system of taxation on real property by installments, which would be a vast advantage to the taxpayers of this State, and the business of the State would not suffer thereby. I hope that this section will be retained, and that the business and producing portions of this State will have the benefit of one half of the taxes for a half year at least.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I believe that the principles involved in this section are correct, and, out of respect to public opinion in my section of the country, I hope the section will not be stricken out.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I have had some little occasion to examine this proposition, and I think there is merit in it; and, to emphasize what the gentleman from Los Angeles has stated, which certainly amounts to very cogent reasons for the adoption of this section, I will merely add that I have made some inquiry and investigation, and so far as I can ascertain, it will add nothing to the expense of the collection of the revenue. At first thought, when the subject was first presented to me, I was under the impression that it would involve some additional labor and cost in the collection of the revenue, but from what investigation I have been able to make, I am satisfied that it will not, and that it will be, in the first place, an advantage and benefit, and a relief in a measure to the taxpayers; and in the second place, that it will operate beneficially in keeping the money in circulation, and prevent the accumulation of idle money in the State and county treasuries, to the detriment of general trade, and the stringency of the money market. I therefore hope that the section will be retained, for while I see many advantages that may grow out of it, I have been utterly unable to find any disadvantages that would attend the adoption of that principle for the collection of the revenue.

REMARKS OF MR. LARUE.

MR. LARUE. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the motion to strike out will not prevail. I am satisfied that this is one of the most important questions before the people to-day. I see, from the report of the Controller, that the whole amount of the taxable property is five hundred and eighty-four million five hundred and eighty-three thousand dollars. At the rate of two per cent., which is about the State and county rate, it produces in round numbers the sum of about twelve million dollars; that money has been paid into the State and county treasuries within the last twelve days—to-day is the last day. I, for one, do not think it is easier to pay twelve million dollars than it is to pay six million dollars or three million dollars. We have one million dollars now lying in the treasury that has been there for three quarters of a year. I have been figuring a little. Taking the State, county, and municipal taxes of this State, and the difference paid in quarterly installments will pay the expenses of the Sheriff's office, County Recorder's office, and County Treasurer's office of this county, to say nothing of the convenience to the people in having the money in circulation. I say that the people will save that in interest, besides the great convenience of having the money. We all know how difficult it is to raise money when twelve million dollars is tied up in the different treasuries. The people find it a great hardship to raise all this money at once, and I ask why we should not collect this money as we need it?

MR. GREGG. Is it not the custom of the people to put off paying their taxes until the last minute? And will not the result be that all your tax will be paid at the July call?

MR. LARUE. The Legislature could provide for that by making a penalty. Would it not be easier to pay one hundred dollars now than two hundred dollars?

MR. WEST. In the State of Pennsylvania their system provides that each person pay one half on the first of January, or at the time the tax becomes due for the fiscal year, and by paying then he is allowed to let the other half stand for six months. Those who fail to do are compelled to pay just the same as if there was no such law in existence.

MR. GREGG. Have not the taxpayers now from the first of August to the first of January? And if they have until the succeeding first of July, is there any means of forcing them to pay before that?

MR. LARUE. They are now compelled to pay annually. They can just as easily be compelled to pay semi-annually, or quarterly.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: The attention of the public has been repeatedly called to that fact, if it be a fact, by the public press, especially in the large money centers, that under the present system, very large sums of money, running into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, are paid into the public treasury, and moulder in the vaults there for months. I am opposed to striking out this section, because it is not merely declaratory of a principle. It is not mandatory upon the Legislature to devise and perfect some scheme by which the exigencies of the public service can be met by the payment of these taxes from time to time, as the public needs the money. Now, sir, I do not see why one hundred thousand dollars should lie in the county treasury for five, ten, or twelve months; I do not see why large sums should lie there without any benefit to the Government or the individual. It seems to me to be entirely practicable for the Legislature to devise a system by which these taxes may be paid into the treasury by installments.

MR. REYNOLDS. Is it not a well known fact that the public funds are usually in arrears for many months preceding the time that taxes become delinquent?

MR. EDGERTON. There may be some instances of that kind. I am merely stating the facts as they appeared before the committee. I saw a statement that there was some several hundred thousand dollars lying in the San Francisco treasury, that had been there for a long time. I have heard a great deal of suggestions as to the propriety of providing for a call loan of that money, with proper security, at two or three per cent. I do not see any reason why these large sums of money should lie in these vaults and moulder away.

MR. AYERS. It is deposited in some of the banks in some of the counties.

MR. LARUE. The great responsibility of the County Treasurer is another argument in favor of it.

MR. REYNOLDS. I would like to know if the taxpayer has not had an opportunity to pay in his taxes from the first of August to the first of January, in installments, or the whole of it.

MR. BIGGS. No, sir, not the first of August.

MR. EDGERTON. Perhaps it is not improbable that the exigencies of the Government would be met if there was a provision that these taxes should be paid in once in three months, or two months, or once a month. The public school teachers are paid once a month. I do not see why a financial system might not be devised that would cover that.

MR. MCCALLUM. Has not the Legislature the power to make this provision without any constitutional provision?

MR. EDGERTON. Undoubtedly. I consider it a proposition which might with great propriety be left to the Legislature.

MR. TULLY. Do you think the Legislature would be compelled to adopt that plan under this section?

MR. EDGERTON. The phraseology is that "the Legislature shall provide by law for the payment of all taxes on real property by installments."

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: The evils arising from this system of having the collection made at one arbitrary period of the year are just beginning to manifest themselves throughout the State, and they are very serious in their character. It happens either that there is an excess of money in the treasury, that lies there undisposed of, bearing no interest, conferring no benefit upon the people, where there is not a demand upon it, or by the converse of the rule, it happens that where the State demands, or demands upon municipalities exceed that, there is no money to meet them, and they must remain unpaid until the period of the annual return of taxes. This evil exists, not only in the State Department, but in the counties. In the State Department I have known it to manifest itself in an inability to pay money due to the University for the maintenance of that institution. It also manifests itself in the city departments; there the evil is very severe and aggravated; there there is oftentimes a pressure for money, and no money to pay, and the creditors are compelled to wait until the annual collection can be made, because no man will pay until compelled. The payment of taxes is always made with reluctance, and will never be made voluntarily without the absolute legal demands enforced by penalty. Now, sir, to meet this difficulty, and keep the treasury of the State and the municipalities supplied with money from taxes at the proper time, so that it can be used when it comes in, there is no system that can be adopted other than that of having payments made by installments, and its enforcement guaranteed by the same penalties that exist in reference to the payment of taxes now. There is great merit in the proposition, and there is great necessity for the adoption of the section. The effects of it, not only in San Francisco, but in the entire State, will be realized in the form of pecuniary blessings to the community. But, as there is an objection to putting a mandatory provision in the Constitution, which might result in hardships in the future, I offer the following amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert in section eleven, after the word 'shall,' the words 'have the power to.'"

MR. WINANS. It is said by some gentlemen that they have the power already; but a question might arise as to whether that power existed or not. They have never assumed the right to exercise that power. It is proper that the Constitution should give them the right to act.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Brown, Larkin, McComas, and Morse.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Winans.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 44 ayes to 36 noes.

MR. EDGERTON. I see no reason why it should not be stricken out now.

MR. HALE. I favor striking it out now.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the section.

The motion was lost, on a division, by a vote of 28 ayes to 50 noes.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. I move to add that the taxes may be paid in the lawful money of the United States.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have directed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention then took the usual recess, until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. Schell was granted two days' leave of absence.

REPORT OF THE COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO INVESTIGATE THE CHARGES AGAINST C. C. O'DONNELL.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: I ask leave to make a report out of order.

THE PRESIDENT. If there are no objections, leave will be granted.

THE SECRETARY read the report, as follows:

To J. P. Hoge, Esq., President Constitutional Convention:

Your committee to whom was referred the case of a member of this Convention, Charles C. O'Donnell, charged with grave crimes, have considered the same, and submit the following report:

The history of the events leading up to the appointment of this committee is matter of public notoriety. In the discussion, in this Convention, of what is known as the Fawcett amendment to the provision concerning libel, the member, O'Donnell, made remarks derogatory to the San Francisco Chronicle, a newspaper published in the City of San Francisco. The next issue of that paper assailed O'Donnell as a quack, imposter, abortionist, etc. Some time afterward O'Donnell entered criminal prosecutions for libel, in San Francisco and Sacramento, against the publishers of the Chronicle. A trial has been had of the case in San Francisco, in which the defendants admitted the publication, and based their defense on the truth of the alleged libel, and that it was published from good motives and for justifiable ends. The result of that trial was disastrous to the member, O'Donnell. In order to establish their innocence of the alleged libel, it became necessary for the defendants to prove the guilt of the complainant, O'Donnell. At the close of the trial they were promptly discharged by the Court, and we have seen no reason, after an examination of the reported testimony, to question the correctness of the decision of the Court.

The case entered in Sacramento, which is for the same cause, has not yet been tried.

Pursuant to the resolution creating it, your committee entered at once upon the examination of the subject-matter of the above described proceedings. They procured a copy of the reported testimony of the case in San Francisco, verified as correct by the affidavits of three witnesses. They notified the member, O'Donnell, of a time and place at which they would hear him. He appeared before us according to the notice, and was duly informed of the nature of the investigation and the testimony already in the hands of the committee, i. e., the report of the trial contained in the San Francisco Chronicle of December twenty-second and twenty-fourth, eighteen hundred and seventy eight, with the affidavits of the witnesses referred to thereto attached, all of which is hereby referred to and hereto annexed, marked "Exhibit A," and made a part of this report.

He furnished us with no additional legal proof to rebut the showing made against him on the trial, but claimed that if time and opportunity were given him to procure counsel and produce witnesses before us, he could satisfy us and the Convention of his innocence of the charges made against him. He stated to us that the testimony given against him upon the trial was suborned and perjured testimony; that he was taken by surprise; that he was unprepared, either with counsel or witnesses, to meet the case made against him, and asked for delay to allow him to procure counsel and produce witnesses before us. Your committee did not feel authorized to constitute itself a Court of appeal from the decision of the Courts. The state of the funds at the disposal of this Convention did not warrant us in launching into any wild expenditure for persons and papers. We were not satisfied with the excuses made by the accused member, and we were not convinced of the relevancy of the testimony he claimed to be able to produce. In a country teeming with lawyers, it would seem that one month was time enough in which to procure counsel, especially by one having the financial ability to remunerate them, as appears to be the case with the member O'Donnell. It would also seem to be time enough for a party complainant in a criminal prosecution to prepare therefor. But inasmuch as the accused member had publicly declared that he would vindicate his character, by prosecuting the witnesses who appeared against him for perjury, and inasmuch as a complaint had been filed and was pending in Sacramento involving the identical issue with the one tried in San Francisco, your committee offered to delay action, provided he would assure them of his determination to go ahead before the legal tribunals of the country. He stated that he would consult counsel and give us an answer. We agreed to await three days for such answer. At the expiration of the time he appeared before us and stated that he had not consulted counsel, and asked for more time.

Your committee have come to the conclusion that the accused member has been attempting to delude them with frivolous pretenses and shallow excuses. They observe that the Grand Jury of San Francisco has adjourned, and nothing appears to have been done there by the accused member. They have also ascertained that the case pending in Sacramento has been abandoned. We are driven to the conclusion that the accused member never made the complaints in good faith; that he never really intended to put his character in issue in law; that he was unable to postpone the trials beyond the session of this Convention, and that is the only surprise by which he has been taken. For the purposes of this inquiry, the testimony herewith appended sufficiently attests the guilt of the accused member of the crimes charged against him to warrant this committee in submitting to the Convention whether such a man is worthy to retain his seat in this honorable body.

Of the power of this Convention to deal with this subject, your committee entertains no doubt. An examination of the authorities and precedents has satisfied us of the correctness of this position. Wherefore, your committee report the following resolution, and recommend its adoption:

Resolved, That Charles C. O'Donnell, a member of this Convention, be and he is hereby expelled therefrom.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

CLITUS BARBOUR,
BENJ. SHURTLEFF,
J. A. FILCHER,
Committee.

State of California, City and County of San Francisco—ss. On the twenty-sixth day of December, A. D. one thousand eight hundred and seventy-eight, personally appeared before me, L. D. Standerwick, who, having been by me duly sworn, deposes and says, each for himself, that they heard the testimony in the case of C. C. O'Donnell against Charles de Young and M. H. de Young for alleged libel, as is set forth in the printed matter or slips hereto attached and annexed, marked respectively Exhibits "A" and "B," and that the testimony and evidence as set forth and appears in said printed matter or slips hereto annexed and attached, and marked Exhibits "A" and "B," as aforesaid, is true and correct, and justly and correctly reported Subscribed and sworn to the day and year first above written.

[SEAL.] L. D. CRAIG, Notary Public.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: I move that the report and accompanying resolution be made the special order for to-morrow afternoon, at two o'clock.

MR. ESTEE. I would suggest to the gentleman to fix it at a time when notice can be given to the defendant, who is away. It is the usual rule to give the defendant a chance to be heard. I would suggest day after to-morrow. I think the dignity of this body requires that he should have a chance to be heard on this floor if he so desires.

Mr. EDGERTON. I presume the sitting member is entitled to his seat. It is presumable that he is acquainted with the proceedings here, but he has a right to be notified officially through the Secretary, and I move, as an amendment, that this report be made the special order for Thursday afternoon, at two o'clock.

MR. BARBOUR. I accept the amendment.

MR. EDGERTON. And that the defendant be notified by the Secretary of the Convention.

So ordered.

TIME OF ASSESSING PROPERTY.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section twelve.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 12. The Legislature shall by law require each taxpayer in the State to make and deliver to the County Assessor, annually, a statement, under oath, setting forth specifically all the real and personal property owned by such taxpayer, or in his possession, or under his control, at twelve o'clock meridian on the first Monday of March.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendment, the Secretary will read section thirteen.

ASSESSORS—HOW ELECTED.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 13. Assessors and Collectors of State, county, city and county, town, or district taxes, shall be elected by the qualified electors of the county, city and county, town, or district in which the property taxed for State, county, city and county, town, or district purposes is situated; provided that vacancies may be filled by appointment, according to general laws.

MR. EDGERTON. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out section thirteen, and insert the following: 'Section thirteen—Assessors and Collectors of taxes shall be elected in the manner provided by law.'"

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer a substitute to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Assessors and Collectors of State, county, city, and district taxes, shall be elected or appointed in manner to be prescribed by law."

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: It is said that the assessment and collection of taxes in the State of California is attended with more expense than in any other State in the Union; and the cause of that fact, to a very great extent, is the necessity of electing Assessors in every district, and also a Collector for the collection of taxes. Now, in this county the County Assessor makes an assessment—a very thorough one—of all the property in the city and in the county. Now, on this the tax for the purposes of revenue could be extended just as well as not. But whenever in any school district you have to raise a tax to build a school house; whenever, in this State, you have to raise a tax for any purpose whatever, the same assessment has to be made over again by the local Assessors. Here is another example: Some years ago a bill passed the Legislature providing for the construction of a wagon road from some point in Napa Valley over into Lake County. Provision was made for the issuance of bonds, and the bonds had to be paid by a tax levied upon the property of the district. In that case they had to elect a special Assessor and Collector. And so it goes, under the present condition of things. The object of the amendment I have offered is to preclude that difficulty, and leave the whole matter to the Legislature; that the Legislature shall provide the manner in which Assessors and Collectors shall be elected. I see no reason why, upon the county assessment roll, taxes for every purpose cannot be extended, and thus avoid the necessity and expense of another assessment. I am informed that in one of the small counties in this State they desired to build a school house costing six hundred dollars, and that the expense of levying and collecting that amount was greater than the cost of the school house. This is a very good illustration of the difficulties encountered.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I not only agree with the gentleman, but go one step farther. He has correctly pointed out one of the evils which has grown up and exists under the provisions of the present Constitution, providing, first, that in each district all Assessors must be elected; and second, providing that they must be elected for each particular district. An inspection of the decisions of the Supreme Court on this question will show that the question has been many times considered. The evil has been, first, requiring their election, and second, the evil of requiring their election by the electors of a particular district or subdivision of the State. Now, the amendment which I offer as a substitute for this section provides that Assessors and Collectors shall be elected or appointed in such manner as the Legislature may prescribe. I am not able to see why this is not precisely where the matter should be left. Leave it to the discretion of the Legislature to provide for their election in such cases as they may deem necessary, and to dispense with elections and provide for filling the places by appointment, in cases where they may find such a course expedient. It will be found in many cases that the place can be filled better by appointment, and with more satisfactory results. I believe the actual experience of the people of this State has demonstrated that fact.

REMARKS OF MR. GREGG.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: I hope this section will be entirely stricken out. Section two, as amended, provides that property shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as directed by law. That is entirely sufficient. We have had trouble before because Assessors were provided for in the Constitution, hence they were constitutional officers. It will then be a question as to whether these values can be fixed by the Boards of Equalization. That was the trouble. The second section already adopted, says you may tax property in proportion to its value, to be determined in the manner prescribed by law. If your Legislature provides laws saying that the Assessors shall fix values, and the Boards of Equalization may then equalize it, that is all right. The Boards can fix the valuation, can increase the valuation above even that fixed by the Assessor. The other section already provides all that is necessary. That is all we want. If you put the word "Assessor" in there, that makes him a constitutional officer, and you are liable to have the same trouble as before. It would be better, therefore, to strike out the whole section.

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the section will be stricken out, and the matter left as it is in section two, for the Legislature to prescribe a rule by which to ascertain the value of property. Under the present Constitution, the matter of assessing taxes has been thrown into confusion by two decisions of the Supreme Court, one of which assumes that certain values are not property within the meaning of the Constitution, and the other which says that property can only be assessed by the Assessor provided for in the Constitution, and if he put land, or any other kind of property at a certain price, that was the end of that question. No question could be made as to the valuation. It must be taken at that valuation, and that alone. It is for the purpose of obtaining relief from this straight-jacket, iron-clad rule, that I favor striking out this section and leaving the whole matter in the hands of the Legislature. I want it left elastic and flexible, so we can make a law to meet the emergencies that may arise. I am therefore in favor of striking out the section, and saying that the values shall be ascertained as in section two, as prescribed by law. Then I am in favor of section fifteen, which says that the Boards of Equalization shall have power, for county and State purposes, to raise or lower assessments made by the Assessor. Thus we can prevent the Assessor from becoming the complete tool of the large landholders in certain counties. It is useless now to go before the Board of Equalization, for the answer is that the Board has no power to increase an assessment. The Assessor has things absolutely in his own hands.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento will prevail, and be substituted for the section. As I read and understand section two as amended, it does not provide for this matter. It is silent. Now, I am in favor of leaving it to the Legislature, that they may be able to create a system for the assessment and collection of taxes, which will work uniformly in the State, and create machinery that can be more cheaply operated. Section fifteen is intimately connected with this, and I want a system whereby the county Boards shall equalize assessments as between citizens of the counties, and the State Board shall equalize as between the counties, as in their judgment they may deem proper. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I am ready to strike out section thirteen. I am in favor of striking out the section, because section two covers the same ground. Now, if we pass another section, requiring Assessors and Collectors to be elected or appointed, it is simply a repetition. Therefore, I ask if a motion is in order now to strike out the section.

MR. EDGERTON. I ask the gentleman if that section does not go to the power of the Legislature, as to imposing taxes, as to what shall be taxed. It does not go to the mode of arriving at that result. It does not affect the mode of assessment, or the mode or manner of collecting taxes.

MR. ROLFE. In the absence of any constitutional prohibition, the Legislature has full power to levy and collect taxes, to designate the mode and manner of assessing, and the manner of collecting. I think this section is unnecessary. If it is not stricken out I shall favor the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Placer, which says that Assessors shall be elected or appointed in the manner prescribed by law, because it may be necessary to have them appointed in some cases.

MR. EDGERTON. I am not tenacious in retaining this amendment. I think, perhaps, it is well enough to have the whole of it go out. I do object to the amendment of Judge Hale, because it seems to imply that there must be an Assessor for each of these subdivisions, and that they must be elected or appointed in the manner provided by law. I think the gentleman is right when he says that section two does incidentally give power, but whether it does or not, I think the last amendment much better. If the gentleman will withdraw his amendment I will mine.

MR. HALE. Yes, sir.

MR. ROLFE. Now I move that the section be stricken out.

Carried.

LIMITING TAXATION.

THE SECRETARY read section fourteen:

SEC. 14. The State tax on property, exclusive of such tax as may be necessary to pay the existing State debt, shall not exceed forty cents on each one hundred dollars for any one year.

MR. EDGERTON. I move to strike out the section. I do not think it is wise to put a limitation of that kind upon the Legislature. As to the limitation prescribed, I have taken pains to consult the Governor and Controller, and they say that it will not do to fix the limit at forty cents. The State rate is now fifty-five cents; between twenty-seven and twenty-eight cents of that goes to the School Fund, and if this limit is put in, the remainder will not be adequate to meet the expenses of the Government, and I think it would be very unwise to insert this provision. There is this difference between this State and those whose institutions are permanently established: they can tell exactly what it will cost to support their State Prisons and other institutions. I have heard it predicted that there will be an immense influx into our asylums; whether it is based upon the proceedings of this Convention or not I cannot say, but that prediction is made. Under the present Constitution the State tax has been as high as one dollar and five cents, which was during the war. I do not believe the time has yet come for this State to limit the rate of taxation in the Constitution. That ought to be left to the Legislature.

REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I trust this limitation will remain at forty cents. I will ask the gentleman whether that fifty-five cents does not cover the public debt too?

MR. EDGERTON. Yes, sir. I do not know how well the gentleman is informed. I do not profess to have any personal knowledge about it, but the Governor and the State Controller have told me that this would not do. It is dangerous to put it in there.

MR. WHITE. I have made some inquiries in regard to this matter. This is to be exclusive of the public debt. It is high enough, and it is necessary to have some limitation in the interest of economy; it is absolutely necessary that there should be some limit to the amount of money that can be spent. We had better cramp a little than to have the treasury so full as to merit speculation.

MR. EDGERTON. Has the gentleman ever got any money on speculation?

MR. WHITE. No, sir.

MR. EDGERTON. Does he know anybody who has?

MR. WHITE. No, sir; but there is a great deal of extravagance. The money is squandered here on this building, and for insane asylums, in ornaments that are of no use whatever. This building here is an absurdity. It took more money than all the money we have got in coin to build this very building. Look at this building. Forty thousand dollars appropriated to improve these grounds. Under these circumstances I think it is highly necessary that we should put in this limit. There are not a million people in this State, yet, and we are going on as though we had ten times the wealth we have. I was in favor of cutting it down to thirty cents, but I made some inquiries, and they told me they didn't think we could get along under forty cents. I think this is a very useful amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section will be stricken out, sir. The State has incurred a large expense on account of this Convention, and the people may see fit, perhaps, to reject the work of this Convention, and to order another differently constituted. And it is right, if the people of this State desire to change the organic law, if the changes we shall make should not prove satisfactory to the State, it is right that they should have the power to make the necessary appropriations, and it is not right to prevent them by constitutional provision from doing so. There are various contingencies which may arise. When we consider the steps we have already taken here, we may find ourselves ere long at war with the Empire of China, and, indeed, I don't know but we may expect to find ourselves at war with the government of the United States also. If we are going into that sort of business we will need more than forty cents tax to carry us through. I think the people should have the right once in two years to prescribe the rate of taxation, and it is not necessary that this Convention should take it out of the power of the Legislature to exercise that reasonable discretion. The members of the Legislature are as capable of doing what is right as we are. They are elected in the same way and by the same people, and are just as honest, perhaps, as we are. I therefore hope, in view of these facts, that this section will be stricken out, and let this matter remain with the Legislature.

MR. WHITE. Do you approve of all the extravagant ornaments on this extravagant building?

MR. JONES. I disapprove of the miserable accoustic properties of this hall. I do not disapprove of the images which you refer to: I do not suppose they cost a great deal. But as to having a large and commodious building for a State Capitol, I approve of that. If it be constructed in an honest, economical, and satisfactory manner, I approve of that. I do not go in for parsimony in those things. I am opposed to this section on principle, because I do not believe in tying the Legislature hand and foot. I believe in allowing them some discretion. How are we going to tell what revenue will be needed. We have adopted an entirely new system of taxation, and no man can tell how much revenue will be produced. These appropriations necessarily depend upon exigencies, as in case of war, and various other contingencies. The whole matter ought to be left with the Legislature.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of extending the limit to cities, counties, and towns. This Constitution is to be a limit upon the power of the Legislature. There is nothing more important than to limit the amount of money which the Legislature may appropriate. The article on taxation which we have adopted will increase the assessment roll of the State one third at least, so that there will be a larger revenue derived than now. If forty cents is not enough, put it at fifty cents. We want some limitation in the Constitution.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I desire to call the attention of the committee to one fact, and that is the impossibility of acting intelligently upon this matter. We have not as yet determined upon the basis of assessment, and therefore we lack the data to base an estimate upon, and what rate of assessment will be necessary to sustain the government. It is true that we have adopted the second section and the fifth section; but we have not yet had time to calculate the effect, or to agree upon anything like an estimate of what the assessment would amount to under this complex provision provided for. Now, to illustrate: If the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma had prevailed, the assessable property probably would have been, under a fair estimate, twelve hundred millions; at present it is six hundred millions. Now every one can see that under the operation of that provision, an assessment of twelve hundred millions would have made a great reduction in the rate, and might have brought it down to twenty-five or thirty cents. But we didn't adopt that amendment. We did adopt an amendment that means perhaps a good deal, and possibly nothing at all. For my part I have not been able to form even an impression of what the assessable property will amount to. Therefore, I contend that this committee is without data to pass an iron rule of this kind. We have no means of getting data upon which to act. To do so blindly would be unwise, certainly. After we have settled upon a basis of assessment, we will then be in a condition to fix a limit beyond which the Legislature shall not go in levying taxes. Now I venture the assertion that not one third of the members of this Convention are satisfied with what they have done in regard to the basis of assessment, and when we come to act upon it in Convention I have no doubt there will be some radical changes. After we have done that then we may be able to establish a rate. I will say to my friend Larkin that I am as much in favor of economy, and as much opposed to extravagance, as he or anybody else. I am in favor of the strictest economy in the government, but we must run the government. We must have a certain amount of money, and it would be most unwise to go on blindly and fix the rate.

MR. LARKIN. When we come in Convention will do.

MR. CAPLES. That will be satisfactory to me. I am inclined to favor a limit, because I know our Legislatures are a little too liberal, and I am strongly inclined to pass a limit. But I do not desire to bind them down below what will be necessary for carrying on the government, because to do so would be to clog the wheels of government. We can let the section pass until after we have determined upon the basis of assessment, and thus we can fix the limit.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: Fifty-five cents is the amount of the State tax, and the portion of that which goes for the State debt, including all the State debt, is six and one tenth cents on the one hundred dollars. Those are the figures. That leaves forty-eight and nine tenths cents on the one hundred dollars for other purposes. Therefore, section fourteen, as presented here, limiting the amount to forty cents, is eight and nine tenths cents less than the present rate of taxation. Now, sir, I am in favor of economy, but any attempt to economize by saying what the rate of taxation shall be, for State purposes, is something like resolving that we will only pay so much of whatever our expenses may be. It would be like a person resolving at the beginning of the year, among other resolutions generally passed about that time, that for the coming year, he will not pay any more than a given amount for expenses, no matter what the actual expenses, may be. It is substantially a resolution that if our expenses should be greater than the limit, we will go in debt for the balance.

MR. WHITE. Isn't it rather a resolution that we will not go beyond that?

MR. MCCALLUM. No, sir; the way to get at it is to place a limit upon legislative appropriations, by saying that no appropriations shall be made except for the legitimate expenses of government, and then there will be no necessity for this absurd proposition that we will only pay so much. Article eight of the Constitution provides that the State indebtedness shall not be increased over three hundred thousand dollars, unless an Act making such appropriation shall be submitted to the people. I have uniformly, in my limited experience in public life, attempted to vote against all extravagancies of all kinds, but neither in public life nor in private life will I ever resolve not to pay expenses, whatever they may be. The way to arrive at that is by a provision in relation to appropriations, prohibiting the Legislature from making appropriations except for specified purposes, and that those purposes shall be strictly legitimate. But this proposition can be evaded. If the limit is too low, the Legislature will go in debt. Bonds will be issued and interest will have to be paid upon the bonds. I am opposed to the whole idea. There ought to be a limit, but I am not going to assume that all the wisdom and honesty of the State is monopolized by this Convention. Now, in case of war, or famine, or pestilence, or great floods, it might make a higher rate than forty cents absolutely necessary.

MR. ESTEE. I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to the end of section fourteen, 'except in case of war, insurrection, or great public danger.'"

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I offer this because I think it will be necessary to perfect the section. I remember very well in this State, at the time of the floods, in eighteen hundred and sixty-one, it became a question of self-preservation with the people of this city to levy a large tax for the purpose of guarding against floods, by encircling the city with a levee. I believe this city is an exception to the rule, but we cannot tell when the necessity will arise. Marysville also is another example. Now, sir, I do not believe in any such iron rule, such a limitation in case of great public danger, where the State could not come in and assist her citizens. Should there be a great famine, or a great flood, sweeping over the Sacramento Valley, or war, or pestilence, or internal commotion, I believe the State should have the power to levy a much higher tax than forty cents on the one hundred dollars, as the exigencies of the case may demand. I see some of the Eastern Constitutions have limited the amount to twenty cents on the one hundred dollars. I do not object to a limit placed here, provided you put some such amendment as this in. These emergencies have occurred and may occur again, and we ought to provide against them.

REMARKS OF MR. BIGGS.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I think the report ought to call for something. This was reported almost unanimous. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, will be adopted. I think it is necessary to perfect the section. I am well aware that many of the States have adopted such provisions as this. We have set a limit of forty cents. The State is in debt now. That would make it forty-nine cents. Our assessable property is nearly six hundred millions of dollars, and we propose to increase that to about nine hundred millions. The Controller and Governor have said that they thought it would not be sufficient. Everybody knows they have been running in the old groove, and every person knows that when this money is in the State treasury the Legislature will make extravagant appropriations, and this section commends itself to every member on this floor. Unless we place some safeguards around the Legislature I tell you it is very dangerous to have money piled up in there. If we make our minds to run the government on forty cents, we can do it. I hope the amendment and the section will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. FREUD.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: I hope section fourteen, as reported by the committee, will not be stricken out. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, will be adopted. It is a good principle in human concerns, and one which in my opinion will apply equally to the concerns of the State. Men as well as nations will live according to their means. Place a limit upon them and they will strive to live within that limit. Place a limit upon the extravagance of the Legislature and it will live, and perhaps live better, than it otherwise would do. Therefore I hope this section will be retained.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"And all taxes may be paid in the lawful money of the United States."

MR. EDGERTON. What is the use of that? We have resumed.

REMARKS OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I do not see any objection to the adoption of this section, with the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco. The effect is, all tangible property in this State will be taxed under section two, which has been taxed heretofore, and besides that there will be an additional income from debts and credits, until the Legislature permits the deduction of debts from credits. Until that is done by the Legislature, all unsecured credits will be added to the assessment roll of personal property, which is taxed already. That will make, as a matter of course, the rate of State tax considerably less. As I understood from the gentleman from Alameda, he made out, after counting the tax necessary to pay the interest on the State debt, made the amount forty-nine cents, I think. Now, if there is an additional income added to the tax levy of all the unsecured credits in the State—if the Legislature does not make deductions—why, the rate, of course, will be considerably less than forty cents. So I can see no objections to it.

MR. McCALLUM. I call your attention to section five, which provides that in all cases where mortgages are taxed, the amount shall be deducted from the value of the land. Will that make any difference with the tax rate?

MR. JOHNSON. It is an easy thing to understand section two. In the first place, all tangible property will be taxed as heretofore. But as far as tangible property and mortgages are concerned, there are two interests. There is the interest of the mortgagor and the interest of the mortgagee. But these two interests constitute only one property. Therefore it will be just the same as the tax on land heretofore, because the mortgage, being an interest in the land, is deducted from the value of the land, so that the two interests constitute the one property.

MR. McCALLUM. My point is this: That although you tax mortgages, still, as you deduct it from the value of the land, there is no increase on that account in the aggregate property assessed.

MR. JOHNSON. Certainly not. There is no increase whatever; but there is an increase otherwise, by taxing unsecured credits, and that was what I was speaking about. I said that the same property would be taxed as heretofore, and, in addition, these unsecured credits would be added, which will swell the roll and reduce the rate, unless the Legislature sees fit to authorize offsets of debts against credits.

MR. ESTEE. Is it not a fact that under our new Constitution, with the reductions we have made in salaries, etc., that the expenses of the State will be one quarter less than they have been?

MR. JOHNSON. Yes, sir. So upon any hypothesis, it seems to me this section is a perfectly proper one to adopt. I have understood that some gentlemen—most of whom voted in the negative, however—do not understand section two as adopted. It is the simplest and most easy thing to understand in the world. Section five says, in effect, that only land shall be taxed; but there are two interests in that land—the interest of the mortgagor and the interest of the mortgagee. Those two interests constitute the land. Then, besides, there are credits unsecured. These credits, of course, will be added to the visible, tangible property. The taxpayers will have to make a statement, under oath, of the amount of their credits. If the Legislature shall provide that debts due to bona fide residents of this State may be a set-off against credits, they will provide for statements to be made under oath. It will be hard to say, with any certainty, what the effect of this will be on the rate of taxation. But I think I can see that the tax is not going to exceed forty cents. As suggested by the gentleman, the salaries of all State officers have been reduced, which will make the amount necessary just that much less.

MR. AYERS. I wish to ask the gentleman who offered the amendment whether that amendment would cover such a case as a famine, or flood, in this State? He uses a new term there, "danger."

MR. ESTEE. I suppose you could use the words "great public calamity." I had in my mind fire and flood, more than famine. I don't apprehend that California will ever have a famine.

MR. AYERS. Probably the word "danger" would imply something impending, flood or famine, or great calamity.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I hope this section will be stricken out. It is very evident from the arguments here that there is a very great misunderstanding as to the amount of property upon which taxes are to be levied. It is claimed that we have already provided for a great reduction in the expenses of the State government, by reducing the salaries of State officers. But gentlemen seem to forget entirely that we have created other offices, whose salaries must be provided for out of the State apportionment, and by the very report now before us we are asked to provide for another Board, that must, of course, entail a great expense upon the State, and it seems to me we are going upon uncertain ground. We are likely to tie the Legislature down so that it cannot do what the interests of the State demand. It is better to leave it as it is. I do not think they have abused this power in the past. I do not think there is any demand for this thing. Let us leave it to the Legislature. Let them determine what the rate shall be. It is safe in their hands, and then there will be no need of this exception in regard to great public danger and calamity, or anything of that kind.

MR. McCALLUM. I would like to know if war is not a calamity. I would like to know if famine is not a calamity. If we are going to doctor it up, it strikes me we had better do it in a little better shape. If we propose to use the word calamity, let us use that word, and not use any surplus words. I am not going to attempt to doctor it myself, but I suggest it to the gentleman who offered the amendment.

MR. ESTEE. I will add the words "or other calamity." I don't want it to apply to any member of this Convention.

MR. GREGG. Mr. Chairman: I think the section had better be stricken out. The limitation would only cause the State Board of Equalization to increase the valuation of property throughout the State, in order to get the necessary amount of revenue. The Board has that power, and they will certainly use it, when the State falls short of money. The section ought to be stricken out.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee.

Division was called for, the committee divided, and the amendment was adopted by a vote of 44 ayes to 42 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the motion to strike out the section.

MR. BLACKMER. We have already stricken out the section in regard to poll taxes, and it is proposed by some to put a clause in there which shall prohibit the Legislature from ever levying a poll tax.

MR. LARKIN. I don't understand that this Convention decided anything upon that question except to leave it to the Legislature. I hope the gentleman will not use it as an argument.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: If we put the proper restrictions upon the power of the Legislature to appropriate money, that is all that is required. The restriction should go to the power to appropriate money, and not upon their power to raise money. They must have power to pay the expenses of the State Government. They must pay salaries and other expenses, if they have to go in debt to do it. This section should certainly be stricken out.

Division being called for, the committee divided, and the motion to strike out the section prevailed, by a vote of 48 ayes to 38 noes.

STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section fifteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 15. A State Board of Equalization, consisting of two members from each Congressional district in this State, shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective districts, at the general election to be held in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, and every four years thereafter, whose duty it shall be to equalize the valuation of the taxable property in the State for purposes of State taxation. The Boards of Supervisors of the several counties in the State shall constitute Boards of Equalization for their respective counties, whose duty it shall be to equalize the valuation of the taxable property in the county for the purpose of county taxation.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I move an amendment to section fifteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section fifteen by striking out the words, 'two members,' in line one, and insert instead the words, 'one member.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, to strike out the word "two," and insert "one."

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section fifteen by striking out the words, 'two members from each Congressional district,' and inserting in place thereof the words, 'three members, no two of whom shall be residents of the same Congressional district.'"

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I think three members are sufficient to constitute a State Board of Equalization. The Board which existed some years ago had, I believe, only three members, and there was no dissatisfaction. The objection to having four members is this: that there is very likely to be a tie vote on every important question which will come before the Board. It will always require a vote of three to one. Now, I do not propose that the Board shall be elected by Congressional districts, only that no two of them shall come from the same Congressional district. It will always leave out one of the Congressional districts, but that is a very immaterial matter. It is not so material that there shall be one from each district as it is that the Board shall be of a number and size which will enable it to act successfully. If there are four members, it will require three to pass any proposition. Three members, therefore, will make a more efficient Board than four.

SPEECH OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: This section reported by the Committee on Revenue and Taxation is the section introduced and prepared by the gentleman from Yuba, Judge Belcher. The question as to the number that should constitute the Board was considered at some length by the committee, and it was urged there that there ought to be at least two members from each Congressional district, for this reason, that in one, at least, of the Congressional districts there is a large amount of mining property, and also a large amount of property, agricultural in its character; and that if the people of the district elect a man from the agricultural portion of the district, he would not be likely to be informed as to the value of mining property, and vice versa. Therefore it was argued that there ought to be one representative acquainted with the value of mining property, and one to represent the agricultural portion of the district. That is the reason the committee settled upon this number, so as to make it a thoroughly representative Board, and we retained the section as prepared and offered by Judge Belcher.

Now, it may be well enough, inasmuch as this is a new subject, to refer to other States. It is true we had a Board some years ago, consisting of three members; but under the decision of the Supreme Court of this State its powers were held to be very limited, and its functions were such as to attract very little attention. I have investigated this question somewhat extensively, to ascertain how these Boards are constituted in other States, and if the Convention desires the experience of those States I will submit the result of my investigations. Now, the State of New York has a Board that is partially ex officio, and partially an appointed Board, consisting of thirteen, embracing the Lieutenant-Governor, Speaker of the Assembly, Secretary of State, Controller, Treasurer, Attorney-General, and State Engineer. In addition to these officers, the Governor appoints a Board of State Assessors, composed of three; so that the Board consists of thirteen members.

In the State of Nebraska, the State Board consists of the Governor, State Auditor, and Treasurer. There is an executive Board of three members. In Ohio, which is a large State, the Board consists of one member elected from each Senatorial District. It is a very large, representative Board, as the State has thirty-two Senators, I believe. The State Board equalizes property once in ten years, and that constitutes the basis of assessment for all real property in the State. In the State of Missouri, the State Senate constitutes the State Board of Equalization, consisting, I think, of thirty-three members—a very thoroughly representative Board. They do this business during the session of the Legislature. In the State of Wisconsin, the State Board consists of the State Senate, with the Secretary of State sitting as an ex officio member, and the Senate, I believe, numbers some twenty-five.

I suppose this is as important a branch of this subject as this Convention will have to deal with. In my judgment there will be no danger of getting the Board too large, and that Board should be sufficiently representative in its character. I do not think, in view of the diversified interests in this State, that there should be less than two members from each Congressional district. One man is not apt to be familiar with both mining and agricultural property. That is the reason the committee settled down upon two members from each district. There are now four Congressional districts, which gives the Board eight members.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I can see no necessity for so large a number as provided for in the report of the committee. As I understand it, the principal duty of equalizing values falls to the County Boards. And to equalize the assessments among the counties is the principal duty of the State Board, to be composed of representatives from each district. Estimating the population in these districts, and comparing the population of San Francisco, it will be found that the representation is about the same, according to population. As to the objection of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman, in my opinion that is clearly obviated in the next sentence, because I have no doubt that California will gain an additional representative, making five districts.

MR. BLACKMER. At the proper time I propose to offer an amendment, making the Controller of State ex officio a member of the Board.

MR. BARBOUR. He could decide in case of a tie vote.

MR. EDGERTON. In reply to the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, I would say that there is a provision at the end of this report requiring the Legislature to pass all laws necessary to carry out the provisions, and it will be entirely competent for the Legislature to provide for this contingency.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: The argument, or suggestion about increasing the Congressional districts, appears to me a conclusive objection to the proposition presented by the committee, and also the proposition of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour. The indications are that there will be an increase of two Congressional districts in this State, which will make six in all. In the committee's report it provides for two from each district, which would make twelve. According to the proposition of Mr. Barbour, we would have six. I believe it will be generally conceded that when we had three members of the Board that was enough. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento is the proper amendment, and avoids all difficulty about an increase in the number of Congressional districts. The amendment, as I heard it read, is that there shall be three elected, and in no case more than one from one Congressional district. Therefore, no matter how many districts there may be, there will be no increase in the number of members of the Board. I desire to offer an amendment, to strike out all the words between "of" and "at" in line three, and insert "of this State," so as to read, the "qualified electors of this State," instead of "of their respective districts." I think the officers who are to serve the State at large should be elected by the State at large.

MR. FREEMAN. I accept that amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman. I see no necessity for the adoption of a method by which this State Board is to be accumulated. They are to be accumulated according to population, while their entire province is in reference to matters of the State. I do not think, therefore, that the accumulation of their number, according to the growth of the State, is at all consistent. We considered that three were enough to determine all railroad interests in the State, and they are quite as ponderous as those which concern the assessment of property in this State. All the data required can be had by hearing evidence. This will be their especial duty, and they will make themselves familiar with all classes of land values in the State. And if, sir, thirteen men, shifting as some of them are, are sufficient to determine the value of the landed interest in the great State of New York, three will surely be enough in California. For these reasons I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento.

SPEECH OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento will not prevail. I desire to have this State Board a representative body of the interests of the State. And in order that they may be so they ought to be elected by the electors of different parts of the State, so that these varied interests may be represented. We have the agricultural interest and the mining interest, and the only way that they can be represented in the State Board of Equalization will be to have the members of that Board elected by a constituency who are interested in these things. I do not believe that the Board provided for will be too large. There is an immense amount of labor for the Board to attend to. It has not only to equalize taxation upon the landed interest, as has been incidentally mentioned, but it must also, if we look at the next section, assess all railroad property within the State, and then divide the taxes upon that property between the different divisions and subdivisions of the State. And it is an essential thing that there should be members enough to do the work quickly; and, as I said, it is necessary to have a representative Board. In order to avoid trouble which might arise in a Board consisting of an equal number of members, I propose to offer an amendment. Insert in the sixth line, after the word "taxation," the words: "The Controller of State shall be ex officio a member of said Board." At the proper time I shall offer this amendment, so as to avoid the difficulty arising from a tie vote.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the election by the State at large, because the result of it will be to give the commercial centers the entire control of the Board. Now, I am in favor of electing one from each Congressional district, and to avoid the difficulty of a tie vote, to add the Controller, by virtue of his office. And there is another reason for it; the Controller has, perhaps, more accurate knowledge of the affairs of the State than any other officer, and that is a good reason for his being a member of the Board.

SPEECH OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I trust the Convention will adhere to the report of the committee. There are other questions here which will have to be decided also. By whom is the assessment to be made, and how is it to be equalized? These are questions yet to be solved by this Convention. Whether we are to have Township Assessors, or County Assessors, is not yet decided. But whether we have Township Assessors or not, the county officers will make the assessments and will report to the Boards of Supervisors, who will have to equalize the assessments between the citizens of the county. Now, what has this State Board to do? Is it to go back to the primary assessments and undertake to equalize between man and man? No, sir; it is to do no such thing. Is it to go back and take a dollar off of Smith's assessment and add it to that of Jones? Is that what the State Board is to do? No, sir. It will equalize between the counties, and have authority over the County Boards. It will be impossible for them to go into every county, on to every man's farm, on to every man's mining claim, and equalize the value of the property. Of course economy is a thing to be taken into consideration, but this must be a Board large enough to do its work. Take the Third Congressional District, which comprises the northern part of the State. That district extends for hundreds of miles, and what can one man know as to the value of the property in different portions of that district? Two men would be better than one. A man living in the mining counties would know nothing of the value of property in the agricultural districts. It is all the more difficult here because values change so often. In my native State it is referred back to the Legislature, and they equalize between the townships throughout the State. It is easily done there once in five years. But here it is different. There the land is of the same character. It is not so here. The larger the number on this Board the more likely we shall be to get correct information from these several districts, and especially in those counties where there are railroad interests, as this Board is to assess all railroad property. You will be more apt to get at the truth of the matter if you have two men from a district, than by having only one.

With regard to the liability of a tie in the Board, that is very simple. Some man will be sick; some man will always be away, so that there is likely to be an odd number there. You can, however, provide for that by simply adding the Controller. He is here, the records are here, and he has the conveniences for keeping these records. It is true, we ought to study economy in all we do, but not to such an extent as to cripple or impair the efficiency of a Board charged with such an important duty as this. All our troubles about taxation have arisen for want of this Board. I am in favor of electing them by districts. It is true that the men coming from the different districts are apt to be zealous in defending their own interests, but it is as fair for one as for the other. I trust that for once the Convention will adhere to the report of a committee.

SPEECH OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: A small Board will be much more likely to agree than a large one, as is well illustrated by this Convention. The larger the number of men the more difficult it is to arrive at conclusions. In the matter of equalizing assessments all over the State, the more you add the less likely they will be to agree. I am opposed to the proposition of a big Board. One or two good accountants can do the whole thing. The amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento is open to two objections, both of which are fatal. In the first place, I would like to know how the gentleman is going to provide a representative Board when one of the districts is entirely unrepresented in the Board. He asserts the principle of district representation, and thus provides a Board of three when there are four districts. One district must necessarily be left out, since these candidates must be residents of their respective districts. The other objection is that he provides that these men shall be voted for by the State at large. And I was surprised at the position taken by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Winans, when he asserted that he was contending for the same principle advocated and adopted by the Committee on Corporations, in reference to the Railroad Commissioners. The Commission, it is true, has but three members, but they come from districts. The State is divided into districts for that purpose, and no district is unrepresented. If the gentleman had proposed that this Board be elected in the same manner, it would have been a proper argument.

MR. WINANS. I merely referred to the size of the two Commissions, not as to the manner of their election. As far as this matter is concerned, I do not see why these Commissioners could not be elected from the same districts as the Railroad Commissioners.

MR. BARBOUR. Well, if you propose to take the division prescribed for the Railroad Commission, that is one way. If you propose to prescribe it here in this section, that is all right. But that is not the proposition before the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. DUDLEY.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: I hope the report of the committee will be adhered to, unless it should be to add the Controller. Now, while it is true that objections can be urged against every large Board, still a Board composed of two members from each district is not so large as to be objectionable. Now, if that Board is going to act at all, it must act upon information. A Board composed of three members, elected from the central portions of the State, will have very little knowledge of the actual values of property in other parts of the State, and it will be difficult to get a Board with the requisite knowledge, comprised of a less number than two from each district. As to being elected by the State at large, I think the reasons assigned by other gentlemen on this floor are sufficient against it. They ought to be elected by districts, and two is not too large a number. Perhaps it would be well enough to elect one at one election, and another in two years, so as to make a continuous Board. There is no objection to that. But I hope the committee will vote down these amendments, and permit us to have a Board of at least two from each district. The difficulty arising from a tie vote is not very great and can be easily obviated.

MR. MCCALLUM. If the Congressional districts shall be extended after eighteen hundred and eighty to six districts, the gentleman will be in favor of having twelve members of the Board.

MR. DUDLEY. I am, most assuredly.

MR. MCCALLUM. It will be a great additional expense on the people of this State.

MR. DUDLEY. I do not understand that the expense of this Board of Equalization amounts to anything, whether it shall consist of twelve or twenty members, if they accomplish the purposes for which they are intended. It will be a very little additional expense when spread out over the State, compared with the loss of millions of dollars which are not now upon the assessment rolls. If this Board can succeed in equalizing the assessments upon property, the expense will not be felt in the slightest. Three men will not have the requisite knowledge to do this. Gentlemen speak of three men equalizing values. They may not know any more about the value of property in some parts of the State than the man in the moon. I do not know as it is necessary for this Board to travel. They might travel for information—I do not know that they will. It is not expected that this Board shall travel round over the State, and look at every piece of land in the State. Every part of the State ought to be represented in the Board, otherwise it will have no accurate knowledge of the value of property in the various parts of the State.

SPEECH OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: If the argument of the gentleman be true, this Board of Equalization ought to consist of about three hundred members, one from each township, perhaps one thousand members. It is not to be expected that a Board can be created so large that each individual will have an exact knowledge of the value of the property in the district which he represents. The best and most that can be expected of this Board is that it will use its official time to make such inquiries as will be necessary to enable it to determine the questions brought before it. A small Board of Equalization, a Board consisting of three members, can travel about the State, as the other Board of Equalization did; they can make inquiries in respect to the various counties. We do not want to create a legislative body, which shall sit here in session, which shall make that kind of an equalization which the members individually want for their respective districts. If we make it twelve or fifteen, or any other large number, they will meet here as a kind of a legislative body, and about all that will be done will be to ask the members from each district whether he is satisfied with the assessment from that district.

Now, with regard to State representation, and local representation, I take issue with the gentleman. The great bad act of the old Constitution was that it provided for a number of Assessors to be elected by districts, or rather counties. The result was the election of a number of persons from the various counties, and their popularity at home depended upon the reduction of the county assessments to the lowest mark. The result of that was low assessments all over the State. And when this State Board, consisting of three members, began to act, they raised the assessments up three hundred or four hundred per cent. over the local assessments, and not an individual dared complain, because they knew it was right. I say the members of this Board should not be considered as merely the representatives of the local districts. Such a policy tends to make them the champions of the localities from which they are elected. This amendment which I have offered provides that no two of them shall be elected from the same district, but they are not to be officers of the districts, but officers of the State. Elect three or four gentlemen who consider their duty simply to be to represent the interests of their parts of the State, and the result will probably be that by a kind of general consent between them each district would be let alone. None of them will be very anxious to tread upon the corns of the others.

SPEECH OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: If the Board is to consist of three members, elected by the State at large, you might just as well abandon it, or hand it over to the City of San Francisco, where my friend Winans lives. As to the suggestion that no two should be elected from the same district, I believe all the districts corner at San Francisco.

MR. MCCALLUM. Our State officers have to be elected by the State at large. Did you ever know of all the State officers being elected from that corner?

MR. EDGERTON. There are some sixteen or seventeen State officers—Controller, Attorney-General, Superintendent, etc.—and those interests are entirely different; that is a different consideration entirely. The interests here are of very great magnitude, and I believe that this Board should be a representative body, and elected by districts, and not by the State at large. As to there being but one from each district—the farmers in the district will want a farmer elected to the Board, and the miners will want a miner. You cannot have both. I would like to know what a gentleman who has lived in the mines for twenty-five years knows about the values of farming property. I would like to know what a farmer, who has never been in the mines, knows about the value of mining property. It is all important that these two great interests, which together constitute the basis of our prosperity, should be represented on this Board, and I think two from each Congressional district will not be too many. Now, about this matter of expense. I would like to know by what rule gentlemen compute the expense. Somebody says five thousand dollars a year. I see no necessity for paying these gentlemen any such salary. I suppose they will be paid a reasonable compensation for their services. But certain gentlemen overlook this consideration, that the adjustment of values in this State, increasing the values of property in this State to somewhere near their cash value, would be of such benefit that the salaries of these gentlemen would be a mere bagatelle, as compared with the increased revenue. Now, I find that in the State of Illinois they elect one from each Congressional district, and I believe they have fourteen districts in that State. Nobody complains of the number there, and they travel about the State. In the State of New York the Assessors are compelled to visit every county in the State. These States have representative Boards, which are satisfactory to the people, and a vast increase in the amount of taxable property brought out is the result, and that will be the result here.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I deem it essential that these men should be selected by districts. As the gentleman has just said, we have different interests in this State, and those interests should be represented on this Board. They can be represented by having one from each Congressional district. I am in favor of the amendment of the member from San Francisco. I believe one member from each district will be sufficient, by adding the State Controller.

MR. EDGERTON. Take this district. Does the gentleman know of a man who has been engaged in mining, who is familiar with farm values in the agricultural counties?

MR. LARKIN. There are a great many men who are connected with farming and mining interests both, and have been. In our county the interests are about equally divided at present. And these four men, with the addition of the Controller, who is selected with reference to his fitness, will be qualified to do this work.

MR. EDGERTON. The Controller of State has nothing whatever to do with the values of property in this State. You might elect a merchant, or a sailor, or a lawyer, as Controller, and they might make excellent officers.

MR. LARKIN. The men we have elected would have made good members of such a Board. The history of the State shows it. Judging from what I have seen of the office, the Controller ought to be a member of the Board. He would be a valuable member of the Board when it comes to assessing railroad property. I believe we ought to have four members. If this Convention cannot agree upon one from each district, then I would prefer two from each district.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour.

Division being called for, the amendment was lost by a vote of 44 ayes to 55 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum.

MR. MCCALLUM. I rise to a point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

MR. MCCALLUM. The amendment offered by myself was accepted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman had no power to accept it. It was no part of the amendment. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum.

Lost.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert after the word 'property,' in line six, the following: 'of the several counties.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton.

MR. EDGERTON. It will then read: "whose duty it shall be to equalize the valuation of the taxable property of the several counties in the State for purposes of State taxation," etc. This will remove some of the objections made by the gentleman from Marin, that we propose to equalize the property of individuals.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Adopted.

MR. HEISKELL. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"A State Board of Equalization, consisting of five members, and no more, four of whom shall be elected by the qualified electors of the State at the general election to be held in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, and every four years thereafter; and the Controller of State shall be ex officio a member of the Board; and no two members shall be elected from the same Congressional district."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

MR. HEISKELL. Mr. Chairman: I propose to follow this amendment up. There seems to be some disposition to have a large Board. I think this will be ample for all time. This is a kind of a compromise between the two sets of opinions. I do not offer it as a compromise, but simply because I consider it best.

MR. LARKIN. I ask the gentleman whether that don't provide for the election by the State at large?

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert after the word 'taxation,' in the sixth line, the following: 'The Controller of State shall be ex officio a member of said Board.'"

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I believe this Convention has determined, by the votes just taken, that this Board shall consist of two members from each district. Now, it seems to me if we provide that the Controller shall be a member of the Board, we will have done all that it is advisable to do.

MR. ROLFE. Would the Controller be allowed any additional compensation for such services? There might be some objection raised upon that.

MR. EDGERTON. That matter can be settled in another place.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer.

Adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Stanislaus, Mr. Heiskell, as a substitute for the section.

MR. EDGERTON. Practically it seems to be the same as the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I will simply say that the difference, as I understand it, in this case, between this and Mr. Freeman's amendment is, that this clearly states that no two members of the Board shall be from the same district. And this makes it very different from the amendment the gentleman speaks of. That did not define it, but left them to be elected at large, but that no two of them should be from the same Congressional district. This defines it, makes it distinct, and prevents centralization.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Stanislaus, Mr. Heiskell.

Lost.

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to section fifteen, so as to define the powers of the Board. And as I have it written out in the printed section, I ask leave to read it:

"Add to section fifteen: 'Provided, that said State and County Boards of Equalization shall be and they are hereby authorized and empowered to increase or lower the entire assessment roll, or the assessments contained therein, so as to equalize the assessment of the property contained in said assessment roll, so as to make said assessments conform to the true money value of the property assessed."

I wish to add that to the section. The reason I propose this amendment is that we now have County Boards of Equalization, and they have run counter to the Supreme Court. It is hedged about by decisions of the Supreme Court, which says that the County Board has no power to interfere with the assessment of the Assessors. Now, in order to make it effective, it is necessary to give them power that is concurrent with the powers of the Assessors, so that if they see whole sections of country, or if they see property assessed for twenty-five thousand dollars, which is mortgaged for fifty thousand dollars, like some of the assessments in my county, it can be rectified. It is for the Board to equalize upon their own motion, and raise these assessments, without compelling A. to go before the Board and make personal application. He is denied the privilege of having school houses, because these landholders are there to intimidate, there to hire men to vote against levying taxes for a school house. If you expect these Boards to accomplish any good, you must give them more power. They must have the power to increase or lower these assessments on their own motion.

MR. EDGERTON. I would suggest to the gentleman from Monterey that the word "equalize" comprises all that is contained in his proposed amendment. That means that they can increase or decrease. I see no necessity for the amendment at all.

MR. WYATT. This amendment reads: "Provided, that said State and County Boards of Equalization shall be and they are hereby authorized and empowered to increase or lower the entire assessment roll, or the assessments contained therein, so as to equalize the assessment of the property contained in said assessment roll, so as to make said assessments conform to the true money value of the property assessed."

SPEECH OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I was about to introduce an amendment covering the same point. The Supreme Court has decided that on account of the Assessor being provided for by the Constitution, that Boards of Equalization, in attempting to equalize the assessments, by raising or lowering values, were doing the duties of constitutional officers. And on that account it was decided that the powers of Boards of Equalization were limited. Now, that section has been stricken out, and one similar to it proposed by the committee. Before I left my county I was often reminded of the necessity of giving to Boards of Equalization full power to review assessments. Now, it seems to me that the amendment proposed does not fully cover the point. He gives it power to raise or lower the assessments made by the Assessor. But he does not give power to the Board to put on the assessment roll property that might be omitted by the Assessor. We had a case in our county. Lands belonging to the railroad company were omitted from the assessment roll, and under the law, when the matter came up before the Board, it was held that the Board had no power. Now, the amendment I was about to propose covers the whole matter, and I will read it: "And the State Board of Equalization, for State purposes, and the County Board, for county purposes, shall have full power to review and reform State and county assessments." Now, I have been somewhat timid about offering amendments here. It seems to me that resolutions coming from certain members of this Convention are taken notice of more than those coming from others. There seem to be certain undercurrents here that have interfered with the business long enough. It has a depressing effect, and I am tired of it. I came here to represent my constituents, not for the purpose of gaining prestige here. I am tired of this thing of members taking advantage to introduce amendments. Now, I am in favor of the Wyatt amendment, as far as it goes; but it does not seem to me to cover the ground. I want the Boards to have full power to review, and full power to reform assessments made by the Assessors of the State. I offer this as an amendment: "And the State Board of Equalization, for State purposes, and the county Boards, for county purposes, shall have full power to review and reform State and county assessments."

MR. EDGERTON. The amendments are utterly unnecessary, and it is only piling a lot of surface matter into the Constitution which ought not to be inserted. The section, as it stands, provides that the State Board shall equalize the property between the counties, and the county Boards shall equalize the property in the counties—that is, between individuals—and the word "equalize" means that they may raise or decrease the value—that is what it means. The amendment of the gentleman from Kern makes them act together.

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I believe the amendment offered by the gentleman does not meet the difficulty under which we are laboring. We have now a County Board of Equalization, and the law says they are authorized to equalize the assessment roll. When the assessment roll is returned to them they find they are without the power to do that, except to increase the per cent., and lowering all the assessments that are reasonable down to those which are too low, so as to make them conform to the lowest assessments upon the list. But if they undertake to raise any assessment the law informs them that a complaint must be filed; you have got to serve notice. A has to institute a lawsuit against B to make him pay taxes in which A has no interest. A has to go to the Clerk and to the Sheriff and ask for subpœnas, the Clerk wants money for issuing the subpœnas, and I am speaking now from the records.

MR. ESTEE. Do you understand that there is no law permitting a citizen to complain to the County Board of Equalization to have the assessments raised up?

MR. WYATT. I am giving you the details. You have to go and file a complaint, and describe the land. Then you have to say it was assessed at a certain price. Then you have to say the price is too low, and that it should have been assessed at such a price. Then you have to call your witnesses and prove it. And you have to serve notice and papers upon the party. Then to get your witnesses you must take out a subpœna. The Clerk wants money. The Sheriff must serve them, and he wants money for his services. The witnesses, who, perhaps, live under the shadow of some big landed estate, do not voluntarily come unless they are legally subpœnaed. And all this process requires time and money. And this time and money must be spent by a man who has no interest beyond the general interest of the county. That is a kind of process we went through in our county. We served notice on the party, and who do you suppose we brought before the Board? Well, sir, we brought there Miller & Lux. They brought witnesses there, and we had to fight an immense array of capital. That is the kind of a hornet's nest you stir up, when you undertake to proceed under the present law. That is the kind of stumbling blocks thrown in your way when you undertake to proceed now.

MR. TOWNSEND. Do you mean that the Board shall have arbitrary power to raise any party's taxes, without giving him the right to produce testimony, and without notice? If you do I am opposed to it.

MR. WYATT. I wish to authorize the Board to act upon their own motion. I wish to give them the power to act upon their own motion, without the necessity of the circumlocution which exists now. And this amendment does it. Our Supreme Court has decided that nobody can assess but the Assessor. You have to institute a regular lawsuit now. It gives the Board of Supervisors something to hide behind. It gives the officials something to hide behind. You must give this power to the Board directly, so that they can be held directly responsible.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I wish to ask a question——

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. SHOEMAKER. Mr. President: I move the Convention do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at five o'clock P. M. the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow morning, at nine o'clock and thirty minutes.

AMENDMENTS TO RULES

MR. McCOMAS. Mr. President: On yesterday I gave notice of a motion to amend Rule Two. I now desire to call up that motion.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend Rule Two so as to read as follows: 'The Convention shall take a recess each day from half-past twelve o'clock to two o'clock P. M., and from five o'clock to seven o'clock P. M.'"

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: I second the motion.

MR. GRACE. Mr. President: I desire to offer an amendment:

"Resolved, That Rule Two be amended to read as follows: 'The Convention shall meet at two o'clock A. M. on the day succeeding the passage of this rule, and shall remain thereafter in continuous session until the completion of its labors; and, for the purpose of providing for such continuous session, a committee of three shall be appointed to divide the members into two separate watches, one of which shall serve from twelve o'clock M. to twelve o'clock P. M., and the other to serve from twelve o'clock P. M. until twelve o'clock M.'"

The object of this rule is, that the time is growing short.

MR. WYATT. Mr. President: I rise to a point of order. The resolution is out of order.

THE PRESIDENT. Undoubtedly so.

MR. LARKIN. I call for the ayes and noes.

Messrs. Wellin, White, Grace, and Estee seconded the call for the ayes and noes.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. President: I understand it requires a two-thirds vote to change this rule. Then, in that case, if we adopt this rule, we cannot avoid a night session, except by a two-thirds vote. I am in favor of having some night sessions, but we can do that as the rules now stand, by a majority vote, therefore I think we had better not have this.

The roll was called, with the following result:

AYES.

Johnson,	Shurtleff,	Mr. President—45.

THE PRESIDENT. Two thirds not having voted in the affirmative, the amendment is lost.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I move to take from the table the resolution offered by Mr. Noel, to amend Rule Forty-three.

Carried.

THE SECRETARY read:

"RULE XLIII. No member shall speak more than once on one question, nor more than ten minutes at a time, except the Chairman of a standing committee, who may speak twice on the same question, and shall be allowed thirty minutes each time. This rule shall not be suspended except by unanimous consent."

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: The Convention has just decided, by a vote, not to hold night sessions, and it is evident to every member here that unless some curtailment is had of the long-set speeches that are being made here, that we will stay here until the time to ratify the Constitution, if we do make one. It is evident that these speeches have no effect on this body and are of little use to the people outside of it. I hope that this Convention will now establish some system by which the labors of this body may be completed, as the time of the sitting of the Convention is limited.

MR. GRACE. Mr. President: I am in favor of getting along with the work of this Convention, and any rule that will be fair and equal I am in favor of; but I do not want to give the man that offers a resolution an hour, when no other man has more than ten minutes. If the amendment was to allow the Chairman to speak fifteen minutes, I should not oppose it, but I do not propose to give him ten times the amount of time that any other gentleman has.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. President: I move to amend by striking out "ten" and inserting "five," and striking out "thirty" and inserting "fifteen."

MR. ROLFE. Mr. President: That amendment is susceptible of division, and I call for a division of it. I call for a separate vote upon that last part, which requires unanimous consent.

THE PRESIDENT. It is not capable of that division.

MR. GRACE. Mr. President: I move to lay the whole matter on the table.

Lost.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. President: I call for a division of the question. There are two points embraced in the proposition; one is to strike out "ten" and insert "five," and the other is to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifteen." I demand a division of the question.

THE PRESIDENT. The first question is on the amendment to strike out "ten" and insert "five."

The amendment was rejected, on a division, by a vote of 33 ayes to 61 noes.

THE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the motion to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifteen."

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the motion will be voted down. So far as I am personally concerned, I am perfectly willing that the Convention should put a padlock on my mouth from this time out, but it may happen that when the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, and other committees, shall be taken up, the Chairmen of those committees should have more than fifteen minutes, if necessary, to explain these reports. I believe, so far as I am concerned, that I have but once transcended the fifteen-minute rule, and that by unanimous consent. My friend from El Dorado, Mr. Larkin, wants to get people on the record, and he wastes more at the spigot calling for the ayes and noes than this Convention has wasted at the bung this whole session.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I think this amendment ought to be adopted. The Chairmen of the committees will really have thirty minutes on each proposition, where no other member has more than ten, giving the Chairman, on every motion that may be pending, three times the time that any other member may have. I would not wish to cut off the Chairmen of the committees from fair and ample time, but I think it is getting late in the day for long speeches.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I do not ask any such favor of this Convention for myself. It is only for the benefit of the Convention, that the Convention may be advised as to the contents of the report. I concede that the gentleman can say more in five minutes than I can in thirty. Probably if he was the Chairman of each committee it would be well to limit this to fifteen minutes.

MR. ANDREWS. I wish to amend, if the gentleman will allow me.

MR. EDGERTON. I accept it before you state it.

MR. TOWNSEND. I think it will take most of them more than an hour to explain any report they have made here. [Laughter.]

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: Is the proposition open to amendment now? I move to amend by inserting "after the previous question has been ordered." The President will remember that this is the process at Washington. The Chairman of every committee is allowed an hour after the previous question is ordered, in which to explain and defend his measure, and thirty minutes is little enough time here; other business is done under the five minute rule. Five minutes, after the debate we have had here, is plenty of time, and ten minutes is ample. I am in hopes that the thirty minutes will be accorded to every Chairman of a committee after the previous question has been ordered.

MR. GRACE. Mr. President: I am not opposed to allowing the Chairman thirty minutes, or an hour. I think we should analyze these things and see if we can come to the right principle; in order to do so we must exchange ideas. Now, when the land question is just coming up, and the question of suffrage, the most important question that has or will come before this body, we ought not to adopt this rule. I tell you that there is no gentleman on this floor that concentrates his ideas sufficiently to give the land grabbers justice in ten minutes. I regard it in the interest of land grabbing thieves in California, and I am in hopes that the Convention will vote it down.

MR. RINGGOLD. Mr. President: I am in favor of giving the Chairmen as much time as they choose, with the exception of the Chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to strike out "thirty" and insert "fifteen."

The amendment was rejected.

MR. DUDLEY, of San Joaquin. Mr. President: I move to amend by adding, "Provided, that the advocates of woman suffrage shall have one hour each to forward the claims of the suffering women to the ballot."

THE PRESIDENT. Out of order.

MR. HOWARD. I withdraw my amendment.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I move to strike out all after the word "time," in line three, and add as follows: "The previous question shall not be moved in Committee of the Whole." [Laughter.]

THE PRESIDENT. Out of order. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. President——

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President——

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, has the floor.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. President: It does seem to me that this action at this time——

MR. REYNOLDS. I would like to know——

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman from San Francisco is out of order and will take his seat.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I——

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman will take his seat.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. President: It seems to me that this proposed action at this time is very much like the course that has been pursued by some gentlemen here. After a certain number of speeches have been made they are in favor of the previous question. Now, sir, it does seem to me wrong and unjust that after certain gentlemen on this floor have occupied hours and hours in the discussion of the matters that were interesting to them, that before we have got half through with business, this rule should be adopted so that no man shall speak more than ten minutes, except by unanimous consent. It is a very strange thing to me that the majority of this Convention, or even two thirds, cannot hear gentlemen discuss a question, but that any one obstreperous gentleman can prevent a discussion of any matter more than ten minutes. I do not believe that is right. I say that the history of the Convention will show that there has not been a solitary report sent into this Convention which has been adopted in the form in which it was presented, and there has not been a solitary question that a majority of this Convention were prepared to vote upon at all here until after full discussion. Take your report on corporations; take your report on revenue and taxation; there is not one of these wiseacres knew how to vote upon them. They had no idea.

MR. TINNIN. How do you come to that conclusion?

MR. McFARLAND. I come to the conclusion that the gentleman from Trinity seems enlightened——

MR. TINNIN. I generally vote against the gentleman from Sacramento, and I think I am invariably right.

MR. McFARLAND. That perhaps may be true. That was said by some one about forty years ago, and has been repeated a number of times by my friend from El Dorado. It is worn out. [Laughter.] On the question of revenue and taxation this Convention was in a hubbub until the last minute. They did not know how to vote until after full discussion, and when the gentleman from Sonoma presented his amendment it was adopted because the Convention had come to some conclusion. I should be very much disappointed if some gentlemen were stopped here at the end of ten minutes by some one member of this Convention. I would like to know how many gentlemen here are prepared to vote on the question of judiciary. How many gentlemen are there here who know whether they wish to adopt the report as it is, whether they shall amend it, or whether they shall reject it altogether? Some gentleman takes the floor to discuss it, and the Convention desire to listen to him, but at the end of ten minutes he is stopped by one man, and this whole Convention are excluded from that privilege, because one man wants to stop it. If you grant the privilege to the first gentleman you must do it to the next. I am satisfied that this Convention would like to hear a number of gentlemen upon a number of questions that will come before it, and, therefore, I am opposed to this amendment.

MR. KLEINE. If our business is to be done without this rule it will take us nine months longer.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. President: I move to strike out the words, "by unanimous consent," and insert "by consent of two thirds."

MR. ESTEE. I understand that the rules expressly provide that a rule may be suspended by a two-third vote.

MR. McCALLUM. This amendment provides that this rule shall not be suspended except by unanimous consent. The point the gentleman makes is that this rule may be suspended by a two-thirds vote. I would like to ask the Chair for a construction of that.

THE PRESIDENT. Rule Forty-three provides that the Convention may give leave, which, of course, means a majority. If this amendment is adopted it will require unanimous consent. Under the present rule, the Convention, by a majority vote, may give leave.

MR. McCALLUM. Then the gentleman from San Francisco is in error. This amendment of mine would be necessary. I am in favor of this because it seems to me that no one member should have a right to object, when all the rest of the Convention may desire to hear a member.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman will send up his amendment in writing.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the words 'by unanimous consent,' in the last line, and insert 'by consent of two thirds.'"

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I hope the rule will not be loaded down with any such amendment; and, furthermore, if this amendment were adopted, it would save no time, because the parties would insist on the vote by division every time, and the time would be taken up in that manner. I hope that the unanimous consent clause will be retained.

MR. McCALLUM. It has always been decided immediately, without debate.

MR. TINNIN. I will answer in this way. It takes time. The time occupied would be as long as the gentleman would speak.

MR. GRACE. How do you propose to make up the time wasted in the discussion of this matter this morning?

MR. ESTEE. I move the previous question.

MR. GRACE. I move to lay the whole subject-matter on the table.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is out of order.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I demand the previous question.

Messrs. Larkin, Larue, McComas, and Smith, of Santa Clara, seconded the demand for the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum.

The amendment was rejected, on a division, by a vote of 51 ayes to 51 noes.

THE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment to the rule as offered by the gentleman from Lake, Mr. Noel.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 71 ayes to 35 noes.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. President: I desire to call attention to a mistake made on the adoption of my amendment. I learn from one of the Secretaries, as also from delegates around me, that this amendment was adopted by a majority vote, and that there was a mistake in the count at the desk. I learn that from an Assistant Secretary.

THE PRESIDENT. It is too late now. It has been announced as reported by the Secretary.

STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the article on revenue and taxation.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section fifteen and pending amendments are before the committee. The Secretary will read the amendments.

THE SECRETARY read:

"By Mr. Wyatt: Add to section fifteen: 'Provided, said State and County Boards of Equalization are hereby authorized and empowered to increase or lower the entire assessment roll, or the assessments contained therein, so as to equalize the assessment of the property contained in said assessment roll, so as to make said assessments conform to the true money value of the property assessed.'"

"By Mr. Smith, of Fourth District: 'And the State Board of Equalization, for State purposes, and the county Board, for county purposes, shall have full power to review and reform State and county assessments.'"

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I urge my amendment this morning, and I will briefly state the reasons why I do so. It seems to me, after looking over the matter further, that the amendment introduced by Mr. Wyatt does not cover the ground. It does not touch the matter. The Supreme Court of this State has decided that the Board of Equalization has the power to raise and lower. I have the decision before me, and the trouble about this matter is just this: that in the Constitution there is no general provision as to the powers of the Boards of Equalization or as to Assessors, and the Legislature at various times have defined their powers, and these Acts have been passed upon by the Supreme Court, and in various ways the power attempted to be given has been crippled. It seems to me that it is necessary to give the Board of Equalization here a general power in the Constitution; give them full power, not only to raise and lower, but to add to property, and not only to correct the assessment roll at the time, but after the time. Now, the amendment I have offered gives general power, so that it will not be necessary for the Legislature to define their powers and be subject to be overturned by the Supreme Court.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I have examined the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kern, and it seems to me that it is nothing but repetition. It gives the Board power to do just precisely what the section gives the Board power to do—to equalize. The amendment of Mr. Wyatt I will say something about when we come to it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Kern, Mr. Smith.

The amendment was rejected.

THE PRESIDENT. The question recurs on the amendment to section fifteen, offered by Mr. Wyatt.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will not be adopted. The gentleman on the right yesterday stated, what to my mind are insuperable objections to it. There is no requirement on the Board of Supervisors, or the Equalization Board of the county, whoever they may happen to be, to give any notice to the party to whom the assessment is raised. It simply declares their power and creates the duty in them to raise and lower the assessment as they think fit. The law will give the Assessor the right to fix the value of the property. What is the reason why a man has not a right to rely upon that valuation remaining, unless he is notified that it is likely to be changed? There can be no harm in informing him, and giving him a chance to be heard. Objection is made on the ground of expense. Is that a reason why a man's property should be taken from him without a hearing? Certainly notice is essential to the administration of justice, not only there, but elsewhere. For that reason I do not think that the Supervisors, or the State Board either, should have the right to change an assessment, upon which a man has a right to rely, without giving the man notice. There is no more reason for allowing the Board to raise a man's assessment without giving him notice, than for taking away his property without giving him an opportunity to defend his title to it. I think that no provision should be adopted giving any Board the power to pass upon these things without giving notice to the parties. There are other reasons that were stated yesterday, and I am sorry to say that I forget them at the present moment, but that one reason alone is sufficient to cover the case. It has been stated here, that the decisions of the Supreme Court now declare that the finding of the Assessor was ultimate and final upon this question.

Well, now, I say that an amendment has been adopted by which the election of Assessors has been stricken out of the article. That is to be left to legislation. But the difficulty hitherto has been that notwithstanding the statute allowed the Boards of Supervisors to equalize, the trouble was that the Constitution forbid it. The Assessor had the sole power to administer upon it. I hold that the word "equalize" covers the whole ground. What is equalization, unless it is to cut off or enlarge, to increase or diminish? The very word itself signifies that. You cannot equalize except by raising it or lowering it. Equalizing covers the whole ground, and is just as effective as this statement in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Monterey, Mr. Wyatt. Why should we depart from that? If you want to say in express terms that these Boards shall go forward on their own motion, without notice to the parties affected by it, and raise assessments, this will accomplish it, but in so doing it seems to me you will violate the most absolute principles upon which justice is administered among men. The trouble before was that the Assessor had all the power. Now he is deprived of it, and it is given to the State or county Boards, as the case may be.

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: It was with a view to meeting the difficulties that have been stated that I introduced this amendment. Under the old Constitution the Assessor was supreme in the valuation of property, and great abuses have grown up in consequence of it, and the Supreme Court by its decisions has hedged in these officers until the Legislature has become incompetent to give a remedy in the case. Now, what I desire is not to leave it simply a question as to whether these present decisions shall be continued as the decisions of the Supreme Court, but whether we intend by the expression that we make here that they are contrary to the policy which we desire continued in the future, and that is exactly what I want to say in this Constitution. I want to say that the Boards of Supervisors of the counties shall have power to correct, upon their own motion, and without the necessity of a long lawsuit, the errors or wrongs—in many instances the willful wrongs—of the assessment of property. It is impossible to raise the assessment roll up to an equalization, and at present the only power the Board of Supervisors have is that they can lower property. We should provide now so that everybody shall pay an equal proportion of taxes. The only remedy is to give the Board of Supervisors plenary power, so that they can of their own motion say that the assessment of A is too low; that it is not correct, and that they raise it ten, twenty, one hundred, or one hundred and fifty per cent., as the case may be; and if the Legislature sees proper to say that the Board of Supervisors may drop a letter into the Post Office to that effect, of course it is all right. I have no objection to that, but I want them to have the power, notice or no notice. A time is appointed for this Board to meet. It is known to all of the citizens, and they can attend and see whether their property has been lowered or increased.

Suppose the Congress of the United States this Winter should pass a law requiring the lands of the railroads in this State to be certified to the railroads. Then there would be from five to ten millions of dollars worth of land certified over, that would be taxable, running through several counties, overriding all other properties in those counties. Suppose that it is found that they are assessed ten, fifteen, or thirty per cent. below the true value on these lands, and that the county Board is not strong enough to handle them, then I want the State Board strong enough to handle that particular property and put it at their own valuation. Take the property of the Almaden mine, in Santa Clara. If it is too big for the county Board to handle it, then I want the State Board to handle it. You do not want to double the taxation of all the property in the County of Santa Clara, but you want to be able to reach a particular property, and say, as Nathan did to David, "Thou art the man."

REMARKS OF MR. TOWNSEND.

MR. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman: If it was parliamentary, I would call this the most infamous proposition I ever heard of in my life. They could confiscate a man's property without a man having the time to defend himself. The gentleman saw fit to cite the case of Lux & Miller, for what purpose, I know not. I have yet to learn that it is a crime for a man to be frugal, and industrious, and to acquire property, in this or any other country; but it seems to be so in this body, by a certain class of men. If a Board so constituted should meet together and wish to confiscate a man's property, all they would have to do, under his proposition, would be to assess his taxes to an enormous or unreasonable amount, and he would not be permitted to produce witnesses to defend himself. I think it is a thing so monstrous and ridiculous that this Convention ought not to entertain it for a moment. I am satisfied that it will not. It is creating a Commission with more powers than any Board that ever existed in this republican government. I hope it will not be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I hope that this amendment will be adopted. The Courts hold that the Assessor has arbitrary power; has sole power. This amendment proposes to give that power to the Board; to provide that any abuses or mistakes that the Assessor may make can be corrected by the Board—the county Board. Now, I know that the working of the present system is such that if any particular gentleman in the county, any property owner, feels that he is aggrieved, that his rights have been infringed, he can appear before the Board and get his assessment reduced; but if it becomes absolutely necessary, in order that the ends of justice and equality should be served, that this assessment should be raised, they must institute a regular process, and the process will not expire until four or five days after the limited time; and the present system is a nullity. I hope that the amendment will be adopted. We do not expect that the Board of Supervisors will be a secret conclave to pull against any citizen or confiscate his property; but that they may have an opportunity, within a reasonable time, to correct mistakes and to raise the assessment as well as to lower it.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will prevail. I do not think the gentleman need be alarmed about property being confiscated. I do not believe that this Convention are going to steal Lux & Miller's land. I do not believe that any county Board are likely to pocket any of the proceeds of the land of Lux & Miller, or of the railroad company, or of the gentleman, or of any gentleman who gives in an honest assessment. The same objection that is urged by the gentleman to the Equalization Boards may with equal propriety be urged against the Courts. Why do you give the Courts such ample power of review, of construction, with reference to any matter that is pending before them? You simply desire them to hear and determine. You give these Boards no more power. They simply have the right to hear and determine with reference to the equalization of the taxes on the assessment roll, and they have power to raise and lower these assessments when they are not in conformity with the true cash value of the property. What objection can the gentleman have to having the assessment at the true cash value?

MR. TOWNSEND. Does not the author of this amendment expressly state that he wants the assessment raised by the Board without notice to the parties; without their being permitted to come in and defend themselves and show reason why it should not be raised? Is not that the express words of the author of that amendment?

MR. WYATT. I have expressed it this way: that I want the Board of Equalization empowered to act upon their own motion while equalizing the assessments, if they deem it necessary to do so, and without notifying the parties, or with notice if they see proper to give it.

MR. TOWNSEND. That is the language of the author of the amendment, and that is his object.

MR. HERRINGTON. I don't care anything about the gentleman's argument, or what he said. I am addressing myself to the amendment as it reads, and I call upon the Secretary to read the amendment as it now reads.

MR. TOWNSEND. What is the object of this amendment?

MR. HERRINGTON. The object is to give the Board the power to determine the question of the value.

MR. TOWNSEND. Don't the section as reported by the committee give the Board the power?

MR. HERRINGTON. Not upon the same basis.

MR. TOWNSEND. Isn't the object of this amendment to give them the power to act without giving notice?

MR. HERRINGTON. The object is to get at a certain basis, and that is to its true cash value. That is the purpose of it, and it subserves that purpose admirably. It may be, in consequence of its connection with the amendment as reported by the committee, it might possibly be shortened some, but that does not alter the merits of the provision as it now stands. I am in favor of the amendment.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I would like to refer to the decision of the Supreme Court, to show that the Board has this power——

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has once addressed the Convention on this amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I desire to call the attention of the committee to the amendment, and I think it should not be adopted. It confers a concurrent power upon the State and upon the county Board. It gives the county Board the power to raise or lower the entire assessment roll of any county by one act, whereas, the office of the county Board of Equalization is to operate upon individual assessments and equalize them, to increase or decrease the valuation of the property of individuals. It does more than that. It gives the State Board and the county Board power to act upon individual assessments. Now, I never have understood the theory of a State Board of Equalization to be that they were to act upon the individual assessments. I know of no State in the Union where any such rule prevails; and if the State Board is to traverse this State, and to get up original assessments of their own upon the assessments of this State, you will have to get up some new kind of almanac in order for them to do it in the course of a single year. It is declared in the section that the State Board shall equalize the valuation of the taxable property in the State for the purposes of State taxation, and that the county Boards shall equalize the valuation of the taxable property in the county for the purposes of county taxation. That is, the county Boards equalize between individuals. Now, I submit that the process of arriving at the results should be left entirely to the Legislature, and that it is not only unwise, but it might be dangerous, for us to fix any rule of procedure here in the premises. I am opposed to conferring this concurrent power on these two Boards to act in the premises. Now, sir, suppose the State Board, acting on the assessment, increases or decreases it, and then the county Board does the same thing, and they disagree, how are you going to get out of the difficulty? I think it is a dangerous amendment. The gentleman from Monterey undoubtedly desires that there shall be a just valuation; that property should be valued at its cash value, as nearly as may be. Now, sir, there is no danger in leaving it to be provided by law. The Code makes it a duty to do so. It is the duty of the county Boards to equalize between individuals, and it will be the duty of the State Board to equalize for State purposes. That power is represented by the word "equalize." It means to increase and decrease, for the purpose of getting at the standard of value. I do not believe that the author intended to confer any such concurrent power on these two Boards, but the amendment does do it. I think the section should be left as it stands.

REMARKS OF MR. ANDREWS.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Monterey. I think the way the section stands now the Legislature could not authorize, or could not empower the Boards to equalize taxes upon their own motion. The amendment is to authorize and empower these Boards of Equalization to act upon their own motion. Gentlemen seem to be very much alarmed that the Boards will, without notice, act upon individuals. But why should the gentleman from Mendocino fear that Boards will act in these matters arbitrarily and without notice? Is that the history of Boards of Equalization? But the history has been that these Boards had not the power, that they were surrounded by so many legal quibbles, by so many technicalities, so much red tape, that they could not reach equalization, that they could not reach those who are not paying their just proportion.

MR. TOWNSEND. Why could they not?

MR. ANDREWS. Because they were surrounded by so many technicalities.

MR. EDGERTON. If you will allow me to state it, the reason they could not do it was because of the obstacle in the Constitution as it now exists.

MR. ANDREWS. I have but ten minutes left and do not like to be interrupted. The gentleman knows that, as this now stands, with the amendment he introduced yesterday, it would prevent the State Board from equalizing taxation. The gentleman from Mendocino has asked if it is a crime to acquire property? And here let me say that when I feel a thing I feel it ardently. I have felt the outrage of this system. It is not that men should not have the right to acquire property, but it is this outrage: that men of wealth and corporations have not been obliged to pay anything like their equal proportion of the taxes, and that is what we want to get at; we want to prevent the wealthy men of the land from escaping their equal share of taxation upon the property they own, and therefore, in order to accomplish this, we have got to give these Boards power to act upon their own motion.

MR. TOWNSEND. What objection would you have, if it is no crime or misdemeanor, to giving notice?

MR. ANDREWS. Do you suppose that any Board would refuse to give notice?

MR. TOWNSEND. Why do you want to give them that power?

MR. ANDREWS. I want them to have the power to do something.

MR. TOWNSEND. The author of the amendment says that the only objection was that men come in with their witnesses and their attorneys and defend themselves.

MR. ANDREWS. I do not understand that the gentleman from Monterey has said that he did not believe that they should give notice, if, under the circumstances of the case, notice could properly be given.

That is not the intention of the gentleman from Monterey. The intention was this—that they should have power to do it upon their own motion.

MR. TOWNSEND. Without notice.

MR. ANDREWS. I do not understand that the gentleman from Monterey is in favor of any such thing——

MR. TOWNSEND. He said so.

MR. ANDREWS. But that the Board should have power, of its own motion, to act.

MR. TOWNSEND. Without notice.

MR. EDGERTON. I would ask the gentleman from Shasta if he is aware that this amendment gives the same power to two Boards, and suppose one exercises it in one direction, and the other in the other, what are you going to do?

MR. ANDREWS. There is no proposition that an ingenious gentleman, like the gentleman from Sacramento, could not find some objection to.

MR. EDGERTON. It gives the same power to the two Boards, and they may be in conflict all the time, and there is no way out of the difficulty.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I have not noticed the language particularly, but I believe that this will be what will be accomplished by the amendment of the gentleman from Monterey. In the first place—and I will come right down to facts—in some counties in this State four or five men own one half or more than one half of the real estate in the county, if that real estate owned by these four or five men was properly assessed. There is a case where these men not only have the Assessor, but they have the County Board of Equalization. Then why should not the State Board have power to come down on these individual assessments and thus reach these fellows. If the State Board has no power to reach individual assessments then, on real estate, in such a county as that, they would have to raise all the real estate in the county, when the majority of the property had been assessed up to its value, while these four or five men had not been assessed at more than one tenth, one fifth, or one third of the value of their property. That has been the history of some of the counties of this State; that these few large holders of real estate not only had the Assessor, but they had the County Boards of Equalization. That has got much to do with this question, as we are proposing to reach equalization. Without this we could only reach equalization in the State by coming down on all the taxpayers in the county, when their real estate, with the exception of these few men, had already been appraised at all it was worth.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Monterey, and especially the idea aimed at. I have seen instances where, if the law was as he proposes, it would be to the advantage of the whole tax-paying community. The Board of Equalization, the local Board particularly, often in reviewing the assessment roll, sees assessments that are obviously unjust, and yet they have no power, without a petition, to change it. I say that they should have that power when, on the face of the assessment, it appears unjust. More than that, it is very inconvenient. For instance: I discover that a certain assessment is too low, or mine is too high. It is a disagreeable matter to impose upon me to compel me to go in there and make a complaint against my neighbor or my neighbor's property. Therefore we elect officers for that particular purpose, officers to equalize assessments, and I say that when they come to a certain piece of property and find that it is a little too high, or another is a little too low, they should put it on a basis of equality, and if their powers are not sufficient to do this then their powers are not what they should be. While I recognize the importance of this amendment, yet I also recognize the objections urged by the gentleman from Mendocino, Mr. Townsend, that this power might be exercised arbitrarily and unjustly, might be exercised in such a manner as to run to the other extreme. I have an amendment which I would propose to add on to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Monterey, and which, I believe, will meet the objection raised, and which, I believe, is only objectionable because it goes into legislation, or is of a legislative character. It seems to me that the amendment itself is such that it partakes of statutory law, to the details, rather than to the fundamental principle laid down in the first part of the section. I propose the following amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Monterey, Mr. Wyatt:

"Provided further, that when either of said Boards propose to act on their own motion, in a manner affecting the taxation of property, it shall be their duty to give due notice of their proposed action to the party or parties interested, and of the time set for the consideration of the matter."

There can certainly be no objection to that. I, for one, would oppose the amendment if it embraces the idea that it would exclude parties from defending themselves. I do not believe in any injustice. I do not believe in adopting an unjust provision for the sake of remedying an evil. I do not believe that the gentleman from Monterey will admit, or will assert, that he himself would deny to any taxpayer the opportunity of appearing before the Board and making the best defense possible. We do not know the motives which produced or gave rise to the assessment as it appears on the roll. It may be just. There may be a cause for it. If so, the parties should be allowed to appear and show cause. It becomes the duty of the Board to do justice to the taxpayer. I hope that the gentleman from Monterey will accept this amendment. I will offer it as an amendment to the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. TULLY.

MR. TULLY. Mr. Chairman: The amendment of the gentleman from Monterey proposes that the Board of Equalization may, upon its own motion, and without notice, equalize taxation. He states that to be, distinctly, his measure. The friends of the measure—those besides him—say that it does not mean any such thing. Now I, for one, am willing to vote that the Board of Equalization, upon its own motion, may do what the gentleman claims that he desires it to do, if he will insert a clause providing that they shall give notice to the parties. But the idea of dealing with this question on their own motion, without notice, is simply, to my mind, a monstrous proposition; and there is no better evidence of its monstrosity than the speech of the gentleman yesterday, when he paraded a number of prominent men's names before this Convention who had come before these Boards with their witnesses and produced evidence so that the Board could do nothing. If that Board were imbued with the feelings and sentiments which the gentleman exhibits on this floor, with reference to men of property and men of land, I think you could say good bye to land, or any other kind of property, if taxes could be raised or lowered without notice. I certainly have never heard, or read, in any civilized country, where a man could be deprived, or where the proposition was made to deprive a man of life, liberty, or property, without notice—due notice. Now, I am willing to vote for the taxation of lands; that large estates shall be taxed at their cash value, the same as little estates. I am in favor of taxing all property in the State. I will vote for any measure that will have that effect, either real or personal property, but I am not willing to vote for measures that will rob men of the fruits of their labor and their enterprise.

REMARKS OF MR. BELCHER.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that this amendment before the committee is unnecessary and uncalled for. The purpose in framing this article of the Constitution is to make taxation equal—to equalize the burdens of taxation. Now, when we are framing laws the mischief that is to be overcome, and that we are trying to remedy, is what we are to look at. Now, what has it been? Under the Constitution as we have it now, Assessors must be elected by the people in the districts which they are to assess. Because the Assessors are to be elected in the districts, in the townships, and in the counties, it has been held that no Board—no State Board—can equalize taxes, because that would be exercising the powers of Assessors. Now, you have stricken that out from this Constitution, and you are going to have your Assessors elected as other officers are elected or appointed. Now then, he is properly elected an Assessor, without his necessarily having been elected in the particular district in which he is to make the assessment. That is the element that comes into the present Constitution, which is to be eliminated from the new one. Now, then, what more have you to do? Your Assessors have the fullest powers to assess that the Legislature can give them. Now, you must, as a matter of necessity, have an Assessor. There must be somebody in these counties who is to go around and consult all the people for that purpose and estimate the values of the property first. Now, it is undoubtedly true that the Assessors sometimes fail to assess equally. One man's property is placed higher than another, in proportion. Why, if everybody's property was assessed at the same per cent., it would be all right for county purposes, because each man there would bear his just proportion for county purposes. Having then the Assessor, it is important that there be a Board capable of reviewing his actions, and determining whether or not he has assessed all men at the same rate, and to that end you must have a County Board of Equalization. Having then a county Board, exercising the power in the counties, it is of the same importance that all the men in the State, and the counties, should bear their equal share of the State burdens. Now, it may happen that the Assessors of the different counties may assess, and the different county Boards may equalize at a different rate. That is all right for the county purposes, but it is wrong when it comes to the State. Now, you want one for State purposes that there shall be equality between the counties. Now, then, this provision is for a Board to equalize county taxes, and another Board to equalize the State taxes. It seems to me that it is as complete as it can be. Here is the machine to be set in motion to work out this result. How? Why, the Legislature must prescribe the details. The Legislature must come in and determine how property shall be assessed. The law now says it shall be assessed at its full cash value. The Legislature must provide how the Boards shall proceed; upon what notice and how they shall act; where they shall meet and how long remain in session. The law must come in and prescribe the method of their action. The Constitution simply provides the instrumentality, but the Legislature must prescribe the time of action and the notice upon which the Board shall act. Now, I say that you cannot do anything to this that will add any force or effect to it. It is as complete now as it can be. Gentlemen have spoken about the notice to be given. We are here simply framing the groundwork of the law, the groundwork of this superstructure, and when we frame that the Legislature must come in and provide the method of carrying it out. It has been said many times, and it is true, that Constitutions are not self-executing. They declare the principles upon which rest the framework of the government. After that you must have legislation to carry out those principles. The section as reported gives the Boards the power to equalize. Does it give them any power by adding this amendment? It seems to me that it does not add anything to it. I believe it is better to leave this as it is; leave it to the Legislature to prescribe the means and manner of carrying it out. Leave simply the power to do the thing in the manner the Legislature shall prescribe. What more can there be needed. The gentleman from Monterey says that he wants a Board with power to act without notice. I do not want any such Board. I do not believe the Legislature wants any such Board. You first prescribe that a man shall give a statement under oath of all the property he has. He is assessed and he knows what his assessment is. I do not want any Board that can come in and say, arbitrarily, and without any notice to anybody, this man's taxes shall be raised five, ten, or fifteen per cent. He has been assessed by one officer, and it would not be right to act otherwise than to let him know when they are going to act upon it again. The law has always prescribed that, and it will prescribe that. But I say that these provisions of the Constitution do not want to go into that. We are not making a code of laws. We are not prescribing the method of this action. We are simply making the Board and leaving it then for the Legislature to provide the method of its action.

REMARKS OF MR. INMAN.

MR. INMAN. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Monterey will be accepted. This Convention has already decided that three men are fully capable of equalizing freights and fares on that great property of the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and if three men are competent for that work, I think certainly nine are for this. I am a little afraid injustice may be done, and I certainly see no harm that can befall any one by this matter of notice being inserted. I am not afraid of it. I hope this discussion will stop here and that we will proceed with the business. Time is precious, talking amounts to but little, and I hope we will proceed to a vote.

REMARKS OF MR. BIGGS.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will not be adopted. I agree with Judge Belcher, that it is unnecessary. The idea of getting up here and saying that a man should not have his day in Court! Why, you will arrive at such a state of things in California that you will try a man for his life or take his property without any notice or without due process of law! Such a thing is unheard of; and that is the substance of the amendment of the gentleman from Monterey. If you adopt that amendment it is for the purpose of cutting men off from protecting their property and their rights. Now, sir, such a thing is outrageous. I hope this Convention will not disgrace themselves by adopting any such amendment. I hope they will not be guilty of such a fraud as to provide that a Board could take away what little property I have worked for and got. The Board of Supervisors may levy a tax that will amount to confiscation. Notwithstanding I may give in the property at its full value, they may raise it five hundred or one thousand per cent. and confiscate the property I may own. I ought to be allowed to bring my neighbors to prove that I have been assessed to the full value already. Let every man protect his rights. I hope the amendment will be voted down and that we will take the report of the committee.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that there is a misapprehension in regard to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Monterey. I do not find any provision in this amendment to confiscate property. It provides that they shall equalize assessments and may raise and lower them, and it is supposed they will use discretion. It is not to be presumed that the Boards of Supervisors are going to constitute themselves a band of robbers for the purpose of swindling anybody, but that in every case where notice is necessary they will give notice. But in case that the Supervisors should know of their own knowledge that the assessment upon a particular piece of property was very far below its value, I do not suppose they would think it necessary to give notice. If I know a fact no amount of evidence would satisfy me that it was not so. I presume that the Supervisors know, and where they do not know that the assessment is not proper they are not going to raise it unless upon complaint, and after complaint is made, then, of course, notice would be given. I object to any requirement for notice, for then there would always be a question as to whether the notice had been properly served. A man can know when the Board of Equalization is going to meet, and he can go and look after it.

MR. BIGGS. He might have to go two hundred miles.

MR. TERRY. Yes; but he can be there by himself or his agent.

MR. TULLY. What good would it do him to be there if they are empowered to do it without any hearing?

MR. TERRY. I do not suppose they are going to do it without they know it themselves. If I know that there is a certain piece of land worth twenty dollars an acre, for which I am willing to give that amount, what do I want to hear evidence for as to its value. I know it myself, and no amount of evidence would change my opinion.

MR. TOWNSEND. Suppose you know that a man is killed, and know that a certain man killed him, do you propose to have him brought to bar and condemned without trial?

MR. TERRY. I do not see the parallel. The Assessor goes round and he puts his own valuation upon it. The man knows what that valuation is, and he knows whether it is just or not. If it is not just it ought not to be allowed to stand. I take it that these Boards are not public robbers. They certainly will have no personal interest in increasing a man's assessment, unless it be done by a sense of public duty, and if there is any doubt about it ample notice will be given in their own manner, and the party will have the right to appear and be heard.

MR. TULLY. Why not provide that it shall be given?

MR. TERRY. Because I do not want questions to rise whether it was properly served.

MR. EDGERTON. That amendment gives a concurrent power to the State Board and to the county Board.

MR. TERRY. I do not understand it so.

MR. EDGERTON. It provides that the State and county Boards may do the same thing. Suppose the State Board puts one figure on the property and the county Board another?

MR. TERRY. I suppose that the State Board will meet after the county Board, and if the county Board has not done its duty the State Board will supervise it.

MR. EDGERTON. There is no limitation to the power.

MR. TERRY. You can amend it so that it will not.

MR. TULLY. The Assessor can give you a list.

MR. TERRY. But you do not know what value he places upon the property.

MR. TOWNSEND. You sign the list.

MR. TERRY. He may ask you what the furniture, and what this and that are worth, but he does not ask you how much the land is worth an acre. He puts his own valuation upon it himself.

MR. TULLY. After the Assessor makes his return, is not the assessment open then to any citizen of the county? You can always go and see it. But this Board of Equalization meets the day after and raises your taxes, and you never hear of it.

MR. TERRY. And then you go before the State Board, if you are improperly treated. They are elected because they are supposed to be proper men. They may do honest things; men do not steal for the benefit of the public.

MR. TOWNSEND. I would like now to understand your position. Your object is to clothe the Board with power to raise an assessment without notice to the parties.

MR. TERRY. To raise the assessment with or without notice. I take it for granted that, if it is necessary, they will give the notice. I do not want any question raised as to whether notice has been properly served.

MR. WILSON, of Tehama. Do you not think that if this Board was elected by a sectional party that they might be liable to do wrong?

MR. TERRY. I think if a man commits robbery it is for his own good.

MR. EDGERTON. I have raised an objection to this amendment which the gentleman has not answered, and I challenge him to answer. This amendment says——

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: This is the third time the gentleman has spoken on this question.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman has spoken once, and he has a right to speak a second time.

MR. BARBOUR. Is that the rule, that a gentleman can speak on each amendment?

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: This amendment says: "Provided, said State and County Boards of Equalization are hereby authorized and empowered to increase or lower the entire assessment roll, and the assessments contained therein, so as to equalize the assessment of property contained in said assessment roll, so as to make said assessments conform to the true money value of the property assessed." Both of these Boards have power to increase or lower the entire assessment roll of any county. Then each of these Boards, the State and the county Board, have the power to increase or lower any individual assessment. Now then, suppose the county Board does one thing and the State Board does another, what are you going to do?

MR. HOWARD. Suppose the District Court does one thing and the Supreme Court does another?

MR. TERRY. If you will read the first part of the section you will see that it provides that the State Board shall equalize the valuation of the taxable property in the State, for the purpose of State taxation. It gives the State Board only the power of equalization on the property which belongs to the county.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I do not think the gentleman understands the history of Boards of Equalization, and I challenge him to point out an instance where a State Board of Equalization does anything but equalize the valuation between counties. Now, in our State the Legislature, in the case of the first Board of Equalization and the second, conferred that power upon the Board and no other. They never have acted upon the individual assessments at all.

MR. TERRY. It means, then, as it is in the section, that they have only the right as regards the property of the county—the County Court House, the jail, etc.

MR. EDGERTON. The State Board of Equalization is to equalize between the counties. Now, I say that this amendment creates this conflict between these two Boards. And, as to the rest of it, it is but an amplification of the original section. Now, one word as to this action of the Board, even if it could be done, to affect the property of individuals without any notice at all. It strikes me simply as monstrous, and the gentleman might as well say that the Judge of a District Court should declare a man guilty of a felony, or any other crime, simply because, in his own breast, he carried the knowledge of his guilt. Why, sir, is there anything that affects a man more closely than this question of taxation? Why should there be any star chamber proceeding about this matter? Men assuming that they know the value of property, and refusing to hear evidence on the subject. Such a question ought to be heard and determined upon evidence, and there ought to be no secret decision. A man ought to be heard upon this, to him, all important question, which affects his property and taxes.

MR. ESTEE. This amendment of the gentleman from Monterey ought not to be adopted as it reads at present. It says that the State and County Boards of Equalization shall be "authorized and empowered to increase or lower the entire assessment roll, or the assessments contained therein, so as to equalize the assessment of the property contained in said assessment roll, so as to make said assessment roll conform to the true money value of the property assessed." That is, the assessment of John Doe, in Los Angeles, is too low. Where are the books? Why, in Los Angeles. And if the Board should invite him to appear, where would they invite him to? Would they invite him to come to Sacramento to show why the assessment should not be raised from three dollars to ten dollars? It is ridiculous. The State Board of Equalization ought to have power to control assessments, and in some cases change assessments, even in individual cases; that is, they may change it, and notify the local Board of Equalization to notify John Doe to appear before that local Board to show cause why it should not be done. I suggest that that is the only way that it would be fair. I understand it would be in the New York law.

MR. EDGERTON. There they assessed the railroads by the State, and we propose to do it here. The New York law says:

"SEC. 76. The Board of Equalization shall meet in the City of Albany on the first Tuesday in September in each year, for the purpose of examining and revising the valuations of the real and personal estate of the several counties, as returned to the office of the Comptroller, and fixing the aggregate amount of assessment for each county, on which the Comptroller shall compute the State tax. The Board of Equalization may increase or diminish the aggregate valuation of real estate in any county, by adding or deducting such sum as, in their opinion, may be just and necessary to produce a just relation between all the valuation of real estate in the State; but they shall in no instance reduce the aggregate valuation of all the counties below the aggregate valuation thereof, as returned by the Boards of Supervisors to the Controller's office."

There is no State in the Union where the State Board touches individual assessments.

MR. ESTEE. Whether it be so or not, if it is right it should be done. But can the Board of Equalization do it under this section? I maintain that it would be wrong to change the assessment of a man's property in Los Angeles, or San Bernardino, or San Francisco, by the State Board here. After the local Board in that county have heard the objections to the assessment, and then to have the State Board of Equalization, in some individual case, here at the State Capitol, without notice to the party, change that assessment, would be extraordinary, and I claim that there is no example for it anywhere. The best way to do would be this: If they find that there is a large tract of land in a certain county that is not assessed proportionately with the other lands, they notify the local Boards to have a hearing before their own Boards, where both the people of the county and the State and the owner of the land can be heard. I maintain that no other rule would be just. Without notice there can be no hearing, there can be no trial; it is a one-sided proposition; it is conviction before trial, and it results in wrong. How can you learn the value of property unless both sides are heard—without hearing the witnesses, and without allowing them to cross-examine the witnesses? Such a provision would be extraordinary.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON, OF TEHAMA.

MR. WILSON, of Tehama. Mr. Chairman: I don't know what us old farmers have done to be the subject of this discussion. We went up here to the foot of the mountains and we got a little land and worked, and when we got a little more money we bought some more land; and it seems as though these people here have got a great prejudice against us because some of us have got a thousand, some five thousand, and some ten thousand acres of land. I have known but very few men but what have paid the full value for their lands. There are very few in our county. Where the wrong comes in is here: there has been men that have legislated to themselves one half of our domain, from here to the Missouri River. These men now want to divert attention from the true cause of this great wrong to the men who have got their property legitimately. You can see it in these papers here every day. Here is the Record-Union here; it never says anything about these lands that are gobbled up by corporations, but is all the time pointing to the large land grabbers. What do they mean? It seems as though these old farmers that went out and took up lands and worked them ought to have some credit. When they got a little more money they bought more land; but that is the trouble. They want to divert the attention of the people from the true cause of this great evil. The true cause is in incorporated companies. I believe that associated capital is oppressive enough any way. I would not more than allow men to go into partnership if I had my way. We were old Mexican soldiers, and we come here and hunted for homes. We all come here, and the land was free, and the water was free, and everything was free. But these chartered monopolies and corporations went into our county and legislated themselves these lands. Every acre of land I have got I bought and paid for it, and I defy any man to go and show where I have not given every dollar that it was worth. We hear talk here every day about us from men that I know would not have gone out there amongst the Indians and taken up that land. But they want to get farms. They seem to want our improved farms, you know. Now, they want to get up a separate Board—a separate Board from the Supervisors—and I don't think it is right, and not even allow us a hearing. I am surprised at some men here that would advise such a thing. When Mr. Wyatt first offered it I did not exactly understand it, but now I see through it, and I don't think it is right.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher:

THE SECRETARY read:

"Provided further, That when either of said Boards propose to act on their own motion, in a manner affecting the taxation of property, it shall be their duty to give due notice of their proposed action to the party or parties interested, and of the time set for the consideration of the matter."

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I want to suggest to the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher, and the author of the amendment, that perhaps the whole difficulty could be avoided by adding to the section as it now stands, the following: "Said Board shall have such further powers and perform such further duties as may be prescribed by law."

REMARKS OF MR. WEBSTER.

MR. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman: Evidently the design of this amendment is to correct evils which have existed, without any doubt, and it has been principally in regard to the personal service of these notices. I wish to state one case that fully illustrates the point. Last Fall, in Alameda County, a number of persons and corporations were cited to appear before the Board of Equalization and show cause why their assessments should not be raised. Among them were several prominent companies, Mr. Adams, and some others. Mr. Brown appeared for Mr. Adams, and he claimed that the Board had no right to raise the assessment, for the reason that the personal service was not legal, or rather that there had not been any service at all; and the minutes show that Mr. Harvey Brown, appearing for the parties, and declaring that there had been no notice served, the subject was dismissed from the Board; and it being near the end of the term for which the Board had provided, there not being time to give ten days' notice, the whole matter was dismissed. Now, sir, in cases like that, where it is a mistake or oversight, I think that the State Board of Equalization should have the right to control. I think that, so far, at least, the State Board ought to control. So far as the notice is concerned, the Legislature can provide for that; but that a personal notice should be served in a certain way, and because it is not, that these cases should be defeated, I think it is not right.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I shall move, when it is in order, to amend the proposition of the gentleman from Monterey, by inserting after the word "empowered" the words "under such rules of notice as the county Boards may prescribe as to county assessments, and such rules of notice as the State Board may prescribe as to the action of the State Board." Now, sir, I admit that it is proper that some notice should be given when an assessment is to be raised, because, otherwise, as has been suggested, you practically take a man's property from him without any notice, and that is contrary to all rules. But if you undertake to prescribe that there shall be due notice, then the Courts will be full of questions about what is "due notice." But if you leave it to the Board to fix the rules, they will fix practical rules which can be enforced without great bills of expense in relation to the equalization of taxation. Therefore it is that the county Boards should have the right to fix their own rules of notice, and the State Board should have the right to fix its own rules of notice; because they will fix rules which can be enforced. The presumption is that they would not undertake to raise an assessment without some sort of notice; but I think the matter should be provided for in the Constitution, and that we should say that they shall give notice according to rules which they may prescribe.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher.

The amendment was lost.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I now offer the following: "Provided, said State and County Boards of Equalization are hereby authorized and empowered, under such rules of notice as the county Boards may prescribe as to the county assessments, and under such rules of notice as the State Board may prescribe as to the action of the State Board, to increase or lower the entire assessment roll," etc. My part of the amendment comes right in after the word "empowered."

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I do not see what necessity there is for it in the case of the State Board. I do not understand that they raise the tax in the case of individuals.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that the report of the committee gives that power. Suppose the railroad is assessed, and the State Board should raise it; then I think the railroad should have some kind of notice.

MR. MCCALLUM. I am in favor of the principle, but I would like to hear it read.

THE SECRETARY read:

"After the word 'empowered': 'Under such rules of notice as the County Boards may prescribe as to the county assessments, and under such rules of notice as the State Board may prescribe as to the action of the State Board.'"

MR. EDGERTON. I have merely to suggest that it don't mean anything at all. There never was a constitutional provision drawn as loosely as that. Rules of notice! What does it mean? Notice to whom? Notice how? It don't mean anything. The Legislature, in providing for service of summons in a civil action, provides that that summons shall be served personally on the defendant.

MR. HOWARD. We are not compelled in this Constitution to go into a code of practice. This amendment gives to the State and county Boards the right to prescribe the rules, and therefore they will prescribe what sort of notice is necessary. It seems to me that our friend is getting rather sharp—I do not like to say hypercritical—but entirely too sharp for me.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: It appears to me in this case, when the matter is thoroughly understood before these Boards of Equalization, and they are given the right to serve just such notices as they choose, that there is sufficient power given them, and the matter will be sufficiently understood; and when there is sufficient power given them what they serve will be legal and constitutional. I cannot see that there will be any great deficiency in that respect, because the laws heretofore made by the Legislature of this State are intended to conform to the great constitutional law, and be dovetailed in, if such an expression may be used; therefore there will be no deficiency in this respect. There has been much study in this instance in order to have the matter work rightly and equally, and nobody to be injured by the Board of Equalization; and it is very important, in this instance, to have the man whose property is to be affected by their decisions in these cases before them. They must undoubtedly lay down the law correctly, and all the minutiæ, which is only referred to in the Constitution, can be carried out, and it is expected that it will be carried out. The question appears to be clear before this body, and I am in hopes that the amendment will pass.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: As to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, I see nothing in the objection of the Chairman of the committee——

MR. EDGERTON. I take it all back, after the copious notes and illustrations of the gentleman from Tulare.

MR. McCALLUM. Perhaps you will take it back still more after you have heard me a little further.

MR. EDGERTON. I shall insist upon it then. [Laughter.]

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I have listened to this discussion, and I have been thoroughly convinced that there ought to be notice, but I saw the difficulty as to how that notice should be given. I think the gentleman from Los Angeles has aptly solved the difficulty in leaving that to the appropriate Board—the Supervisors in the one case and the State Board of Equalization in the other. The only——

MR. EDGERTON. My opinion is now changed. [Laughter.]

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 60 ayes to 28 noes.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section fifteen as amended, by adding thereto the following: 'The members of said Board, except the Controller of State, shall, at their first meeting after their election, so arrange, by lot, that one of their number from each Congressional district shall go out of office at the end of two years, and their successors shall be elected at the next general election thereafter to be holden by the qualified electors of each of said districts.'"

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: The purpose of this amendment is, I think, obvious on the face of it, to retain always on the State Board of Equalization one half of the members, whose experience will be a guide to the new members who are elected. The policy is the same in regard to that which is provided by the report of the Committee on Judiciary for the organization of the Supreme Court, and also by the Committee on Legislative Department for the Senate. The purpose is to retain always in office a portion of the Board, whose experience for the preceding two years, or more, will enable them to conduct the business better than a full Board of new members without experience. Other States have pursued this policy, and found it to be very valuable. I apprehend that it will be found wise and expedient, and I hope it will be adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 70 ayes to 11 noes.

MR. WELLER. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to section fifteen, after the word 'taxation,' in line six, 'provided, that the Legislature shall have power to reduce the number to one from each Congressional district, when said districts shall be increased in number.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 55 ayes to 32 noes.

MR. LARUE. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section fifteen by inserting after the word 'taxation,' in line six, as follows: 'and whose compensation shall not exceed the sum of two thousand dollars each, per annum.'"

MR. EDGERTON. That is too much! You ought not to allow that!

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I trust that that will not be adopted. It is understood that they will not sit over two months in the year, and that is altogether beyond what the people would like to see paid to these men for that service. I should think twenty dollars a day would be ample. The former Board got two thousand five hundred dollars a year, and everybody was speaking of it as a piece of extravagance, for they were only in session four weeks in the year.

MR. EDGERTON. I would like to ask the gentleman what authority he has for stating that the old Board was not in session more than four weeks in the year?

MR. WHITE. I do not need any authority. Doesn't the gentleman suppose I lived in the State then?

MR. EDGERTON. That Board was in actual session more than six months of the year, and engaged in the work nearly nine months.

MR. WHITE. I knew one of the Board and I never went to his house without finding him at home all that time. Here is nine of them, and we are to pay these men each two thousand dollars for two months' services. I say that fifteen dollars a day is enough for these men.

MR. EDGERTON. Five dollars is enough.

MR. WHITE. No. I say ten dollars is enough. Why can't you leave it to the Legislature? I am perfectly willing to do that.

MR. HOWARD. That is the place for it.

MR. EDGERTON. That is right.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: This amendment ought to be put in a separate section. Let us leave something in the Constitution that is not attached to the fifteenth section of this report. We have got the powers of the State Board of Equalization, the powers of the county Boards, the way of equalizing property, and the character of notice to be given, when they are to meet, the number of members, and from what districts, and that they are to draw lots as to which shall hold long terms and short terms in one section, and the whole thing is ridiculous. I hope we will not do any more to section fifteen. I think the amendment is a good one in its place.

MR. LARUE. I thought that would make the section complete.

MR. ESTEE. I do not see anything that we could possibly add to it, except what the gentleman proposes; but I would suggest that we have another section. I hope that this section will be sent to the committee to be straightened out, and I shall move that it be referred to the committee for the purpose of reformulating the section.

MR. HOWARD. I object to that.

MR. EDGERTON. So do I.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: We adopted an amendment yesterday to follow the word "taxation." To-day we have added another amendment to follow the word "taxation," in line six, the one proposed by the gentleman from Santa Clara. Now, here is another amendment proposed to go into the section after the word "taxation," in the sixth line. Now, it occurs to me that it will be necessary, not only for the members of the Board of Equalization to draw lots to see who shall go out and who shall stay in, but that the amendments themselves will have to draw lots to see which shall have precedence.

MR. STEELE. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will prevail. I think this section needs to be completed. It is entirely too short. Let us lengthen it out a little more.

MR. TOWNSEND. Read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section fifteen by inserting, after the word 'taxation,' in line six, as follows: 'And whose compensation shall not exceed the sum of two thousand dollars each per annum.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was lost.

MR. TURNER. I move to amend by adding: "Everything that has been forgotten by the Convention may be added by the Legislature."

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise and recommend that section fifteen be rereferred to the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, for the purpose of formulating the section.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I hope not. It is all right as it stands. It cannot be helped any.

MR. ESTEE. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The hour having arrived, the Convention will take a recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION.

MR. EDGERTON. I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section sixteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 16. The State Board of Equalization shall assess the value of all the property of all railroad corporations in this State. For the purpose of taxation, the value of all lands, workshops, depots, and other buildings belonging to or under the control of each railroad corporation, shall be apportioned by said Board to the counties, cities and counties, cities, townships, and districts in which such lands, workshops, depots, and other buildings are situate; and the aggregate value of all other property of such railroad corporation shall be apportioned by said Board to each county, city and county, city, town, or district in which its road shall be located, according to the ratio which the number of miles of such road completed in such county, city and county, city, town, or district, shall bear to the whole length of such railroad.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: In several of the other States—Missouri, Illinois, and some others, I do not remember which ones now—the power to assess all railroad property is lodged in a central Board of this kind. The idea is to treat that property as a unit. In this State, the objection is raised that railroad property is assessed at one valuation in one county, and at a different valuation in others. Now, the idea of this section is to treat that property as a unit, and to have it assessed together by this central Board. All the lands, workshops, and buildings, which are permanent property, will be given to the localities where they are situated. But when it comes to the other property—rolling stock, engines, cars, etc.—they are in one county one day, and in another at another time. All this property, with the franchises and capital stock, is assessed and apportioned according to the ratio of mileage to the political subdivisions along the whole length of the road. That is the theory of the section.

MR. VAN DYKE. I would ask if the amendment to section fifteen does not obviate the necessity for this section?

MR. EDGERTON. I think that is a very unjust, very unfair question to ask of me, for if ever there was a Philadelphia lawyer who could understand section fifteen I have not heard of him. I think not.

MR. VAN DYKE. From the wording of it, I understand that it gives the State Board power to equalize individual assessments in the counties.

MR. EDGERTON. If the gentleman will examine section fifteen, he will find that it gives merely the power to equalize. It has the power to increase or decrease the valuation as fixed by these local Assessors and local Boards, and applies to the whole mass of property in the county. This section sixteen applies to special kinds of property—the railroad property of the State. The County Boards and local Assessors will have nothing to do with it whatever. Now, as I understand section fifteen, it contemplates the assessment of all the property referred to in that section by the local Assessors first; and second, equalization of that property by the county Boards. Section sixteen exempts from the general mass of property this railroad property, and leaves the State Board to act upon it, as Assessors in the first instance.

MR. NOEL. For what purpose are they exempt?

MR. EDGERTON. It was deemed by the committee, following the example of other States, wise to have this railroad property treated as a unit; to have the State Board examine it as it runs through all the counties, in order to have uniformity, instead of having the roadbed taxed at one thing in one county, and another in another county. Instead of that, have one central Board to fix a uniform valuation upon it.

MR. NOEL. I ask if the assessment was permitted to be made by the local Assessors, and the Board had a right to equalize it, would it not be correctly done by the power of the Board to equalize the assessments of the various counties?

MR. EDGERTON. I have stated that one object is to have this property treated as a unit. They would be much more likely to arrive at correct conclusions. That has been the experience in other States.

MR. VAN DYKE. I do not see the necessity of the sixteenth section, as the fifteenth section has been amended. Now, sir, the shops, buildings, and other property, aside from the track, is, of course, of different value in the different counties, according to the character of the property. You cannot have a unit between the shops and buildings in Oakland and those in Sacramento. I can see no necessity for this section. I do not see any reason why the property of railroads should not be subject to the same rules as the property of others.

MR. EDGERTON. How are you going to assess the franchise of a railroad company, unless done under such a system? How are you going to assess its capital stock?

MR. VAN DYKE. It must be assessed where the corporation has its headquarters.

MR. EDGERTON. Then the one county gets the whole benefit of that tax, unless we distribute it over the State.

MR. VAN DYKE. How are you going to manage it for county purposes?

MR. BARTON. It is debarring the local Assessors from their right to assess, and the State Board afterwards to equalize the assessment.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: This system of taxation has been in operation in several States, especially in the western States. They have adopted it, after trying different modes of assessment. They have adopted this system, and it has given universal satisfaction. The entire length of the road belonging to one company in the State, with all the property belonging thereto, whether shops or rolling stock, used in operating the road, is assessed as an entirety, and the pro rata assessment per mile is distributed by the Board on the statement of the Auditor of each county in the State. In the State of Iowa it is made the duty of the County Auditor to distribute the same by townships, so that the county and townships receive their share for road purposes, and schoolhouse purposes, and every other purpose for which a tax may be required. In every particular railroad property is placed upon an equality with all other property, and taxed just the same way, and for the same purposes as all other property in the State. I believe the present system is entirely incompetent. The local Assessors elected thus were entirely incompetent to judge of all the articles used by the company in operating their road. I believe this section is well and carefully drawn. I believe it covers the entire ground. I know from experience when I say it is a system that will give entire satisfaction and do justice to all concerned, giving a practical apportionment of the taxes to the localities, better than any other system that can be adopted. I hope the section will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I do not know that I have any particular objection to this, as far as assessing the roadbed and rolling stock is concerned, but as far as the depots, workshops, and such things are concerned, which are local in their nature, located in the different counties, I would like to ask the gentlemen of that committee what reason there is why that property should not be assessed just the same as any other local property. I can see a very good reason why the roadbed, rolling stock, and everything movable should be assessed in this way. But the same reasons do not apply to the depots, workshops, and other stationary property belonging to the railroad company. But as we have stricken out section thirteen, in regard to the mode of assessing and collecting taxes, I would like to ask the Chairman of the committee if he does not think it would be advisable to strike this out also. Then it would be left to the Legislature to provide for. Let them provide this system if they wish to.

MR. EDGERTON. The gentleman has asked me a question which I thought I had answered at least twenty-five times. I am opposed to this sort of legislation in the Constitution. If I had the power I would provide for a State Board of Equalization, declare the general principles of taxation, and there leave it. But it seems to be the disposition of the Convention to proceed to legislate, and to carry out all the details in the Constitution, and I am in favor of the principle declared in section sixteen. I think there will be a far more efficient assessment of the railroad property in this State if it is done by one central Board, assessing it as a totality, than there has been by the local Assessors. That is my judgment.

MR. ROLFE. I do not see but I agree with the gentleman also. I approve of this mode as far as I know anything about such things. I have had some little experience in collecting taxes.

MR. TERRY. I rise to a point of order. There is nothing before the committee, as no amendment has been offered.

THE CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman propose an amendment to the section?

MR. ROLFE. No, sir; I have no amendment. I was talking at random, like all the rest here.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by inserting in line two, after the word 'State,' the words 'including gross receipts.'"

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: This section provides that "the State Board of Equalization shall assess the value of all the property of all railroad corporations in this State." If the gentleman will allow me to explain that the purposes and objects the committee had in view was to make it so that the Legislature could establish such a rule as was recognized by the Supreme Court in the Railroad Tax cases, which arose in the State of Illinois, where the State Board of Illinois, having the power, assessed the railroad property in this way: First came the railroad track, which included the right of way one hundred feet wide. Then another assessment for rolling stock, which embraced cars, engines, etc., and all movable property. Then they have another assessment for personal property, which includes tools, horses, carts, and all that kind of property. And then they have still another assessment upon lands lying outside of the railroad track. Now, then, when they assessed the value of the franchises and capital stock, they arrived at it in this way: they took the market value, or fair cash value of the indebtedness of the company, and the market or cash value of the shares of stock of the company, and add them up. From that aggregate deduct the value of the tangible property, and the excess, if any, is treated as the franchise or stock, and taxed.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I do not think that would include gross receipts. Now, it has been declared by the Supreme Court that taxation of gross receipts is proper and legitimate. I think it is the only way this State can reach the property of railroad companies. I propose, therefore, to amend by inserting the words "including gross receipts."

MR. EDGERTON. Probably the case my friend refers to was a case where they taxed the gross receipts of the corporation, and nothing else.

MR. HOWARD. No, sir; you are mistaken.

MR. EDGERTON. I should like to know why you should tax the gross receipts, when they go to pay the expenses of the road. You have already taxed all the tangible property, and, in addition to that, the excess over and above that property that the franchise is worth. These gross receipts go, first, to the payment of the expenses of the road; second, to the payment of interest on the debt of the road; next, to the payment of dividends to the stockholders. If you tax the gross receipts, certainly you ought not to tax the capital stock and franchise.

MR. HOWARD. The gentleman will recollect that the Supreme Court held that it was competent to tax the property, the capital stock, and the gross receipts. It might possibly come in under this section, but I want to make it perfectly clear.

MR. EDGERTON. I ask the gentleman: if you tax this indebtedness, tax its interest that is paid on the debt, and tax these dividends that are paid upon the capital stock, does not that come out of the gross receipts?

MR. HOWARD. It might and it might not come out of the gross receipts. Unless you do reach the gross receipts you do not reach all the property of the railroad company, For instance, the gross receipts of the Central Pacific Railroad Company is ten millions, or nearly that. The only way you can reach that property is by assessing the gross receipts. You must either do that or provide an income tax. You must do one thing or the other, in order to reach the property.

MR. EDGERTON. You have taxed the capital stock.

MR. HOWARD. The capital stock is all paid up. The profits are another thing entirely. There is as much sense in taxing the profits of a railroad as there is in taxing the profits of a mine.

MR. EDGERTON. I have only to say that it seems to me after you have taxed the roadbed and the rolling stock, after you have taxed all the personal property, and after you have taxed the capital stock, and after you have taxed the franchise, you ought to quit.

MR. HOWARD. I have handed me the Constitution of Missouri. There they tax all the property, the franchise and capital stock, and the gross earnings and net earnings.

MR. EDGERTON. Take, for instance, a poor road, struggling along for a living, and suppose the gross receipts amount to a million dollars; suppose the net receipts are two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Now, the seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars are used how? Used in paying the interest on the debt; used to pay the running expenses of the road. Now, I submit it would be an act of rank injustice to tax the gross receipts of such a concern as that.

MR. HOWARD. If they were as poor as that they would have no gross receipts. I do not propose to go for these little narrow gauge roads, I propose to go for the big corporations whose profits run up in the millions.

MR. EDGERTON. If the gentleman will send up an amendment taxing the gross receipts of the Central Pacific Railroad Company I will vote for it.

MR. HOWARD. I don't want to injure the gentleman's feelings by doing anything of the sort.

MR. MORELAND. I move to insert between the word "property" and the word "all," in the second line, the words, "except lands other than roadbeds," and also strike out "all lands," in the third line, and insert the word "roadbeds." Also insert the word "roadbeds" in the sixth line.

MR. EDGERTON. That would leave other lands to be assessed by the local Assessors.

MR. DUNLAP. I offer a substitute for the whole section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"All property of railroad corporations shall be assessed in the manner provided by law."

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, General Howard.

MR. EDGERTON. As far as the amendment of Mr. Dunlap is concerned, you might as well strike out the whole section and leave it to the Legislature. That is all it means.

Division being called for on the amendment offered by Mr. Howard, the vote stood: ayes, 26; noes, 50.

THE CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting. I will put the question again.

The amendment was lost, on division, by a vote of 27 ayes to 65 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland.

Adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Dunlap.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'State,' in the second line, down to the end of the sixth line, ending with the word 'situate,' and substitute the following: 'For the purpose of taxation, the value of all lands, workshops, depots, or other buildings, and all movable personal property, except rolling stock belonging to or under the control of such railroad corporation, shall be apportioned by said Board to the counties, cities and counties, cities, townships, and districts in which such lands, workshops, depots, and other property are situate.'"

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I offer this substitute so as to include in it all personal property other than rolling stock. The reason is this: for instance, in the County of Placer, there are about one hundred and twenty miles of railroad, and there are probably at any month of the year over five hundred thousand cords of wood in the county belonging to the railroad company, and which, by the terms of this section as it now stands, would be taxed, and the tax distributed to all the counties in the State. Now, for the same reason that you include workshops, roadbeds, etc., you ought to include this other personal property. The purpose of this amendment is to cover that point.

MR. EDGERTON. If I understand your amendment, it modifies the section, it substitutes rolling stock and movable property for rolling stock.

MR. HALE. It includes all movable personal property except rolling stock. It includes in the list of property belonging to the county all movable personal property except the rolling stock, and leaves that subject to the rule in the last clause. Is not that the intention of the committee?

MR. EDGERTON. The committee intended to include all movable property. That is the rule in some of the other States.

MR. HALE. Is it the intention to subject all personal property, say wood, for instance, where there is a large amount of wood in a county—that is movable property.

MR. EDGERTON. I think the amendment of the gentleman is a very proper one, and I am in favor of it.

MR. HALE. It seems to me this is a very important item. I know it is a large item in my county, and in many other counties of the State.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: Although a member of the committee which reported this section, I opposed it in committee, and I shall oppose certain things in the section here, for reasons which I will state, and which I hope will commend themselves to members. The property of a railroad corporation consists of roadbed, structure of the road, rolling stock, certain buildings occupied for the purpose of business, as well as town lots, freight buildings, workshops, and the like. Now I do not understand by what rule the State Board should assess the workshops of a railroad company in the town of Oakland, while the local Assessors will there assess the workshops of other corporations and private individuals. I do not understand why the State Board will be more competent to place a value upon a lot here in the City of Sacramento than the local Assessor will. If the local Assessor is competent to put a value on a lot on the east side of Front street in this city, I do not see why he is not the proper person to assess the value of a lot which belongs to the railroad company on the west side of the street. Now, the object in selecting a local Assessor is to get a man who has some knowledge of the value of property in the locality, and who has at his command the means of getting the necessary information. Now, sir, if the State Board is to assess the value of a depot up in Nevada County, and to say what value shall be placed upon it, then, sir, I pretend to say before the Board can place any proper assessment upon that building, they must go to that building and see it. They must not only see the building, but they must see the lot upon which it stands, and they must examine the lot with reference to its value as a business property. And not until it has made such an examination, and inquires the value of similar property in that locality, can it properly assess that lot. Now, I want to know why, when the local Assessors are permitted to assess valuable lots belonging to individuals, they should not also be permitted to assess lots belonging to the railroad company. It seems to me it is making a great mistake when we try to establish a different rule for the assessment of that kind of property used by a railroad corporation. I believe we should have laws that are practical in this matter, and not make different rules for assessing the property of corporations. As soon as we adopt any measure which may be construed as doing an injustice to these corporations, then they will have some excuse for saying they are compelled to fight. The railroad company has a depot building in this town. There is no reason why the local Assessor should not be just as competent to assess the value of these buildings, situated there on the west side of Front street, as he is to assess the value of Booth's store on the other side of the street.

There is another proposition here which says the value of property shall be divided among the several counties according to the number of miles of road they contain. Now, according to that a mile of road in a county where the right of way is worth nothing is to be valued at just as much as a mile of right of way in the City of San Francisco. A mile of road in Nevada County will be valued at just as much as a mile in the County of San Francisco. I do not understand that to be a reasonable proposition. It seems to me a very unreasonable one. I think this railroad property, as far as it possibly can be done, ought to be assessed by the local Assessors of the counties where the property is situated. If the man makes a mistake from any cause, it can be corrected by the State Board of Equalization, according to the provisions already adopted. If the assessment is erroneous, the Board can raise or lower it, and I see no reason why any man should want to have railroad property assessed by a different mode from what other property is assessed, unless he hopes by a different rule to gain an advantage either for or against it. In regard to the franchises and rolling stock, I can see that that property can be more properly assessed by the State Board, for the reason that the franchise is not local; the rolling stock is not local. The rolling stock might be assessed by assessing it on a particular day; and yet they might run all the rolling stock into a county where taxes are the lowest, and thereby evade their just share of taxation. For that reason it seems to me that the rolling stock and franchises, also, should be assessed by the State Board. For these reasons I hope we may get this section into better shape. I shall, when the proper opportunity presents itself, offer an amendment as substitute for this provision, that the State Board of Equalization shall assess the value of all franchises and rolling stock of all railroad corporations in this State, and the aggregate value of such franchises and rolling stock of such railroad corporations shall be apportioned by said Board among the various counties in which the property is situate. In order to build a school house, or in order to make any other local improvement, they would have to call on the State Board of Equalization to assess some building, or some land, or something belonging to the railroad company.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: All the authorities have to do is to extend the tax upon the assessment, or upon the list, as made by the State Board, and in such cases it will not be necessary to invoke the assistance of the State Board at all. The State Board makes one assessment of all the property for the entire year, and that is at the command of the local authorities. It is a matter of record. That has been the habit in the State of Iowa, and it can be done here. There is no difficulty at all. In the State of Ohio the State Board lists the entire real estate of the State, and taxes are extended on the assessment for a period of ten years, and there is no annual assessment at all. It is the rule in many of the States, and will be the rule in this State, no doubt, when property has assumed some degree of permanence in its character.

My friend from Nevada admits that the franchise of a railroad corporation and its capital stock should be assessed by this central Board, because it is difficult or impossible for the local Assessors to do it. How are you going to assess this intangible, invisible thing called a franchise? I know of no practical rule, except that which I have alluded to; that is, to add the value of the capital stock and the value of the debts, and from that aggregate deduct the value of the tangible, visible wealth of the corporation. I submit that the same authority that is to assess the franchise and the capital stock should have power to assess and estimate the value of this property, that they may arrive at a better result than they could to take the multiform assessments of these local Assessors, because they will vary in each parallel of latitude throughout the State. It will be four thousand dollars a mile in one place, and six thousand dollars in another, and so on. There is no justice in it, and the object of this provision is to get a just tax upon this property.

MR. CROSS. Will not the same inequalities arise in other cases? Is not that the reason why we have provided a State Board of Equalization?

MR. EDGERTON. It is entirely different from any other property. It is not connected with any consideration bearing upon capital stock, upon considerations affecting the franchise. There are no deductions to be made, there are no additions to be made, or other complex considerations to affect the assessment of the property.

MR. CROSS. Would it not be of the same value, whether it be railroad property or the property of private individuals?

MR. ESTEE. If section fifteen remains as it is, I can see no reason why the State Board should have any further powers.

MR. EDGERTON. Allow me to ask you a question.

MR. ESTEE. Certainly.

MR. EDGERTON. How are you going to assess the value of a franchise?

MR. ESTEE. I don't believe I know, or that the gentleman, or anybody else knows.

MR. EDGERTON. The Supreme Court have already established a rule in the State tax cases in Illinois.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I know what it is. They take the market value of the stock, and the amount of the debts, and so on, as you have said. You take all the property first, which is something visible; the stock, which represents the probable future value, as well as the present value, and then the total debt, and you have the three factors in working out the problem. But it is not that feature of the report I base my objections upon. Section fifteen says the State Board shall equalize the assessments as between counties, and also the assessments as between individuals. Now, if that be so, we will suppose that in Sacramento County the local authorities assess the railroad at five thousand dollars per mile. In San Joaquin they assess it at twenty thousand dollars per mile. The State Board will certainly see that there are inequalities in those assessments, and will equalize, as it is their duty to do, as between those counties and the whole State; and they will say, for instance, that the assessment shall be twelve thousand dollars per mile in all the counties in the State through which the railroad passes. That is made the duty of the State Board by section fifteen. Why say that they shall have another duty to perform with regard to railroad companies in section sixteen, because section sixteen says the State Board shall have the assessment of all railroad property in the State. Now, the State Board will meet here, in Sacramento, say. Suppose they meet on the first day of August. They remain in session, say thirty days. All the Assessors from the different sections of the State report to them. They will have some system whereby they will have a report from the County Assessors in relation to the railroad property, because it will have to be assessed for county purposes as well as for State purposes. Section fifteen expressly provides that the State Board shall equalize the valuation of the taxable property of the State for purposes of State taxation. Then the county Boards will have to assess it for county purposes. Under section fifteen the State Board will make the assessment over the entire State.

Again, section sixteen provides that the State Board shall assess this property, and apportion it to the different counties interested. They can do that without making any assessment at all. It is their duty to do it under section fifteen. The State can give them further power at least, by which they can do it. I do not see how they are going to apportion the rolling stock correctly. They might find one thousand cars in San Francisco, and they might find five miles of railroad in San Francisco, and twenty-five miles of railroad in some little county, and they propose to apportion the value of all this rolling stock among the counties according to the number of miles of track, and San Francisco, with all her rolling stock, would only get one fifth as much as the little obscure county with twenty-five miles of track. Why, it is ridiculous. In San Francisco the company has buildings worth a quarter of a million dollars, which San Francisco protects from fire, and protects in every way——

MR. EDGERTON. We do not propose to apportion that at all. You do not read it right.

MR. ESTEE. That may be true; it may not be open to that construction. I am in favor of striking out the section; I do not believe it will meet the evil complained of. I think section fifteen will answer the same purpose that this is intended for. And more than that, if we are going to tax franchises why not apply it to all corporations? Some of the most valuable franchises in this State are franchises other than railroad franchises. Why not say that the Board shall assess the value of all franchises in the State? Give them full power. Now, I think the argument of the gentleman from Nevada simply unanswerable. The State Board, coming here from different parts of the State, would have a very poor chance of knowing the value of railroad property in different counties of the State. The local Assessors of Sacramento, San Francisco, and Placer, and Nevada Counties have far better opportunities for knowing the value of the local property of those railroad companies than any State Board can have. The State Board have all the powers they should have in matters of this kind.

MR. HERRINGTON. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to section sixteen, 'provided, that for purposes of local assessment and taxation, the valuation and apportionment made by said Board next before making such local assessments, shall constitute the basis for such local assessment and taxation.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order just at present.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer that as a precautionary measure, to protect the rights of different localities in the State where local assessments are desirable. I don't know but I may be in favor of striking out the section, but for fear it may not be stricken out I propose that amendment, so that when there is any apportionment made by the State Board, it will stand as the basis for any local assessment required for local purposes. I understand that when this provision is put into the Constitution there can be no local assessments upon railroad property, because it was exclusively confined to the State Board, and there was no provision made for local assessments. And that is the reason why I have offered this amendment, in order to secure to these various localities, for local purposes, such as school house, and other town and district purposes, their share of taxation on the railroad property. If the section is not amended, the railroad property will escape taxation altogether for local purposes, because it confines this matter exclusively to the State Board.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: The discussion has terminated on the idea of striking out the section. Now, sir, I hope the section will be allowed to stand. I don't know exactly what idea the committee had in view when they formulated the section, but I know it struck me as a good section, and one which ought to be adopted for that reason. There is no doubt but the railroad companies exercise more political influence in the State of California than any other institution. In the matter of taxation, as in all other matters, they are brought face to face with the strongest political power in the State, and in this respect there is an advantage which this gives to the people over these corporations; it affords them a better opportunity to obtain justice than if we were forced to meet them single-handed. I know what the experience has been in Placer County. We assess them for what in our judgment the property is worth; and it is often the case that they persistently refuse to pay taxes on the assessments that we impose upon them. Year after year we have fought them at great expense. Other counties in the State have had exactly the same experience. But while some of us were spending our time and money in this way, others who were equally interested in the result stood back and reaped the benefit of our exertions. Every citizen in the State has an interest at the rate of sixty cents on the one hundred dollars, and yet they took no part in the fight; took no part in the contest against the corporations, and yet they have the same interest that we have. And, sir, other counties, which also took no part, were equally interested with us. And, sir, in view of the immensity of this power concentrated in these corporations, there is no power so able to cope with it as the State itself. No county has been able to do it, and therefore it seems to me a wise provision, a wise exception for the purpose of assessing the railroad property of the State, that the whole power of the State should be brought to bear to compel them to pay their taxes. In regard to the distribution of the taxes, I agree somewhat with the exceptions of the gentleman from San Francisco in relation to the distribution of the taxes per mile of road. An amendment could easily be made covering that proposition. I believe this system can be adjusted and made to work well, and that by its provisions these corporations can be made to pay their taxes.

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I believe the railroads of the State ought to be assessed by the State Board of Equalization on their roadbeds and rolling stock, and the tax apportioned to the several counties, and I believe all their property outside of this, throughout the State, should be left to the local authorities to make the assessments. That property belongs to the counties, and should be assessed by them; and when the proper time comes, I shall offer an amendment that will cover this view of the case:

"Add to the end of section sixteen: 'The franchise, roadway, roadbed, and rolling stock of all railroads in this State, operated in more than one county, shall be assessed by the State Board of Equalization at their actual value, and the same shall be apportioned to the counties, cities, townships, and districts in which such railroads are located, in proportion to the number of miles of railway laid in such counties; and all other property of railroads shall be assessed by the counties in which such property is situated.'"

I think a provision of that character will cover the entire ground. It will do justice to the counties, and it will enable the State Board to take in the whole scope of continuous property of the railroads and assess it at its fair value.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: One word in reply to the remarks of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee. I read a paragraph from the State Tax Cases, in the Ninety-second United States Reports:

"It is obvious, however, that while a fair assessment under these two descriptions of property will include all the visible or tangible property of the corporation, it may or may not include all its wealth. There may be other property of a class not visible or tangible which ought to respond to taxation, and which the State has a right to subject to taxation. Thus it may occur, as in fact is claimed by one of these companies, that being insolvent, and its earnings not being sufficient to pay anything beyond its necessary expenses for operating the road and its repairs, this tangible property represents more than the real wealth of the company and its property. While on the other hand, another one of these companies is so rich that after paying its expenses and interest on a large amount of debt, it declares large dividends; and this interest and these dividends, when looked to in reference to what is called the tangible property, show that there is here another element of wealth which ought to pay its share of the taxes. This element the State of Illinois calls the value of the franchise and capital stock of the corporation, the value of the right to use this tangible property in a special manner for purposes of gain."

Now, sir, they treated the franchise or privilege as an element of wealth, and they arrive at its value as I have repeatedly explained to this committee.

MR. ESTEE. Is not that measured by the value of the stock itself, and the probable income from the property?

MR. EDGERTON. No, sir. As I have already stated, it is not arrived at by the deduction of the debts from anything. They add up the value of all its tangible property—all the real estate, rolling stock, everything you can see and handle—and that constitutes one sum. That constitutes the sum total of the property. Then they take the fair cash or market value of the capital stock, or shares of stock, and then take the indebtedness of the company and add these sums together, and from that aggregate they deduct the sum total of the tangible property, and the excess is treated as the franchise, as the value of the franchise. Does the gentleman understand?

MR. ESTEE. Yes, sir.

MR. EDGERTON. That is the way they arrive at the franchise and capital stock of a railroad company. Now, sir, it is urged by Col. Ayers that it ought to be left to the local Assessors to assess the value of all the local tangible property of these companies. I say not. What is assessed at one price in one county by one Assessor is put down at an entirely different price in another county.

MR. AYERS. Is it possible that in any two counties the same kind of property would be actually of the same value?

MR. EDGERTON. Of course, I don't pretend to speak from personal knowledge, but it is my opinion that in some counties the property is assessed at half its value, while in others it is assessed far in excess of its value. There is absolutely no uniformity in the assessment of railroad property, and the idea of the committee was to have all this property assessed by one central Board, and by that means get at a just, and fair, and uniform valuation of all the tangible property, and by the means I have indicated arrive at the value of the franchise. Now, I say this State Board has got to examine all this property critically and carefully, in order to arrive at the value of the franchise and capital stock, according to the rule that has been adopted in Illinois and other States. And inasmuch as they have to do that, it seems to me that it is better to surrender the whole question into their hands of assessing the railroad property of the State. There is no difficulty at all, as somebody has suggested. Of course, the Legislature will expand on this section and provide that the State Board shall communicate with the local authorities, in order to acquire the necessary information.

MR. ESTEE. My objection is that I am opposed to this centralization. I am in favor of the local authorities making the original assessments. There would be a conflict of jurisdiction, which might lead to serious results, and cause the loss of the entire tax on the railroad property of the State. We had better leave it as it is. Let the local Assessors make the assessments, and the local Boards equalize them, and then let the State Board correct them.

MR. EDGERTON. If that be so then there is no power to tax these franchises, because the local Assessors cannot do it. They have to be assessed by some central power.

MR. ESTEE. Not at all; for the stock is something which has a market value in the commercial world, and it is easy to obtain the value of the franchise. There is nothing invisible about it. The value appears in the stock itself.

MR. LARKIN. I think the gentleman's argument from Sacramento makes it perfectly clear that this section ought to be stricken out. I don't like to see a rule whereby the railroad property of the State is to be assessed differently from anybody else's. I don't like to see this oppressive fight that the gentleman from Sacramento is making. He proposes to discover values that no one else has discovered, and I move to strike out the section so as to assess them as they are now assessed.

REMARKS OF MR. DUDLEY.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: The result will be the same, and I am in favor of the report as it stands. The railroad property of the State ought to be assessed as an entirety. It is the only means by which we can arrive at the real value, and secure the assessment of all the property belonging to the corporations. It cannot be done under the present system. I have seen it tried and it has failed. They were assessed upon the basis of the value of the iron and ties, if they were torn up and piled up in a pile, to be sold for old iron and fire wood. That has been the system, and it is wrong in principle. Under this system it is proposed to assess the roads at what they are worth for railroad uses; and for the purpose of running a railroad track, land for right of way in San Francisco is worth no more than land in Placer County. It is to be assessed at what it is worth for railroad uses, and the other property used by the corporations is valuable because it is used for this purpose, and it is valuable for no other reason. Its value bears a relation to the value of the road. The value of these depots and workshops depends upon the uses to which they are put. They are valuable because the railroads have use for them.

MR. MCFARLAND. Have we not already adopted the principle that all lands shall be assessed at the same price. I would ask if the gentleman is not violating the principle for which he voted?

MR. DUDLEY. There is a vast difference in the two propositions. A piece of land is not alone valuable because it is being used in raising wheat. It is valuable because it is at any time capable of being used for that purpose, hence the land that is not being used is intrinsically as valuable as the land alongside of it, which is in use. But the value of this railroad property is in its use. The land for railroad tracks is valuable because it is used for that purpose. I believe if there is a good provision in this report, certainly this is, and the committee will make a very great mistake if they strike it out. As far as the Hale amendment is concerned, I have no objection to it. As far as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara is concerned, I desire to say that I do not think it is necessary at all. The report of the committee reads as follows:

"The State Board of Equalization shall assess the value of all the property of all railroad corporations in this State. For the purpose of taxation, the value of all lands, workshops, depots, and other buildings belonging to or under the control of each railroad corporation, shall be apportioned by said Board to the counties, cities and counties, cities, townships, and districts in which such lands, workshops, depots, and other buildings are situate; and the aggregate value of all other property of such railroad corporation shall be apportioned by said Board to each county, city and county, city, town, or district in which its road shall be located, according to the ratio which the number of miles of such road completed in such county, city and county, city, town, or district, shall bear to the whole length of such railroad."

I do not see the value of the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Colonel Ayers.

MR. HERRINGTON. I wish to call your attention to section fifteen, which says that the sole power of the State Board of Equalization is to equalize for State purposes:

"SEC. 15. A State Board of Equalization, consisting of two members from each Congressional district in this State, shall be elected by the qualified electors of their respective districts, at the general election to be held in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-nine, and every four years thereafter, whose duty it shall be to equalize the valuation of the taxable property in the State for purposes of State taxation."

That confines their power to that purpose.

MR. DUDLEY. It is a separate grant of power. Considering the difficulties arising from collecting revenue from these companies, and the quibbles they resort to in order to avoid the payment of taxes—considering all these things, I certainly think this committee is prepared to say that these railroad companies shall be considered and valued as a whole, and not in parts. There is no difficulty whatever in it.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. LARKIN. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Pulliam, Howard, of Los Angeles, and West.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale.

Lost, on division—ayes, 19.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from El Dorado, Mr. Larkin, to strike out the section.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Dunlap.

Division being called, the committee divided, and the substitute was rejected, by a vote of 37 ayes to 57 noes.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert after 'section sixteen,' in the first line, the following: 'The franchise, roadway, roadbed, and rolling stock of all railroads in this State, operated in more than one county, shall be assessed by the State Board of Equalization at their actual value, and the same shall be apportioned to the counties, cities, townships, and districts in which such railroads are located, in proportion to the number of miles of railway laid in such counties, and all other property of railroads shall be assessed by the counties in which such property is situate.'"

MR. CROSS. I offer a substitute for the section.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order.

MR. CROSS. An amendment to the amendment, then.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The State Board of Equalization shall assess the value of all franchises, roads, and roadbeds, and rolling stock of all railroad corporations in this State, and the aggregate value of such franchises and rolling stock of such railroad corporations shall be apportioned by said Board to the counties, cities and counties, cities, towns, or districts in which such railroad shall be located, according to the ratio which the number of miles of such road completed in said county, city and county, town, or district, shall bear to the whole length of such railroad."

MR. EDGERTON. That leads to the same difficulty which I mentioned awhile ago. The Board will have to take the multiform assessments of all these local Assessors. One Assessor will assess the value of the property at half what another Assessor will; the State Board will be bound by it, and will have to arrive at the value of the franchise by the figures so taken, whereas, if it is left to them, they will probably assess it nearer to one standard of value.

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that, aside from the roadbed and rolling stock, the State Board will necessarily be obliged to depend upon the local Assessors for their information. How else will the Board ascertain the value of depots, lots, shops, etc., in Los Angeles County?

MR. EDGERTON. By going and making an examination. They will have to travel all over the State.

MR. VAN DYKE. The company owns lots and blocks in San Francisco which have no connection with the road, and the same is true in Alameda County, and it may be the same thing is true in this and other counties. Now, the local Assessor, or whatever officer shall be constituted Assessor, will better know what property these railroad companies own, outside of the roadbeds and rolling stock, in the county, than this State Board can possibly know. Take this county, for instance. The Assessor, of course, has a list of all the property before him, with maps and diagrams. He assesses along a certain street, or along a certain road outside of the city, and knows all the property that belongs to the railroad companies. The State Board cannot possibly know this. They must necessarily ascertain these facts from the local authorities. Now, my objection to this section is that it attempts too much. As far as the local property is concerned, it ought to be arrived at by the local Assessors first, with this power of equalizing which has already been placed in the State Board. Again, I object to it for another reason. There are many railroads in this State, and gentlemen seem to forget, in their efforts, to drive at the main railroad, that in some counties there are short lines of railroad for local purposes, and which will come within the provisions of this section as it now stands. Now, why take a local railroad in Humboldt County, that runs but a few miles, and throw the assessment of that property upon the State Board? It is not the office of the Board. It ought to be assessed by the County Assessor, the same as all other property in Humboldt County, or Mendocino County. Why not allow the local Board to review that assessment, and then the State Board to adjust it? For that reason I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles.

MR. EDGERTON. The gentleman voted to allow this State Board to change any individual assessment in this State—practically to make any individual assessment in this State. Why did you not allow the local Assessors to do that?

MR. VAN DYKE. There are a great many cases where the local Assessors have refused to assess certain individuals and corporations as they should be assessed, and I am in favor of allowing the State Board power to reform these assessments.

MR. EDGERTON. I ask the gentleman if the local Assessors have not assessed railroad property at widely varying figures, all through the State? In that event, the State Board has to act upon it, and why not give them power to assess it in the first instance?

MR. VAN DYKE. You allow the local Assessors to describe the property and assess it. The State Board, with the power they already possess, can equalize the assessments, if they assess the property too low or too high. There is no danger, if you provide a State Board with ample powers to equalize assessments. That has been the growing evil. They have lacked the power to equalize. We have seen instances of unjust and unequal assessments in this State without any power to remedy the evil. That is the main evil, and if this Convention were simply to provide a Board with power to equalize these assessments, and stop right there, in my opinion it would be an act of wisdom, because, by these complicated provisions, we may find ourselves tied up so that nothing can be done.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers, not because I think it just the thing, but because I think it will help the matter some. Now, I oppose, and I believe when they come to examine this matter, three fourths of the Convention will oppose, any proposition which interferes with the uniformity of assessments. Everywhere, in every State, almost, you will find that the established rule for raising money for the support of the government. Here you are violating the very first rule. You are violating the very first rule which we laid down, by providing one rule for the taxation of railroads, and another rule for the taxation of other property. Whenever you do that you are laying the foundation for trouble, and opening a loophole through which these corporations will escape taxation. We ought to adopt uniform rules of taxation, and tax railroads as all other property is taxed—at its full cash value. Let the local Assessors assess it, and let the local Boards equalize it, and then to remedy the evils spoken of by the gentleman, let the State Board of Equalization see that this property is assessed alike in all the counties of the State, and in that way you will accomplish the object aimed at. Now, for one, I protest against this, because it is contrary to the true principles of taxation; because the very fundamental doctrines of taxation rest upon the proposition that every dollar shall be taxed by a rule which shall be uniform throughout the State. Tax railroads in each county like other property, and let the same officers do it, and then see that the Assessors do their duty. I am in favor of one universal rule, and the motion to amend by striking out ought to prevail. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles will relieve it of a portion of the objectionable features.

MR. BIGGS. Has there been any uniformity in the assessment of railroads heretofore?

MR. ESTEE. No, sir, because there has been no State Board of Equalization. But we have now provided for a Board with full power to act in the matter, and equalize the assessments in the various counties. The State Board will not know anything relative to the value of the property in the several counties. What do they know about the value of property in Napa County; what do they know of the value of property in Chico? They would have to inquire of people who know about it.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Does the gentleman know a single instance where the value placed by the local Assessors upon railroads approximated anywhere near the true value?

MR. ESTEE. No, sir; and that is what the State Board is for. There will be no influence behind them; but allow the Assessor to assess the property as he assesses others; let the local Boards equalize it, and then let the State Board come in with the information of the local Assessors and local Boards and equalize as between counties and individuals, and then you will have a uniform system which will stand criticism.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I fully agree with the gentleman, that we should adopt a rule that will be uniform in its operation. But certainly I disagree with him when he says we cannot have the railroad property in this State assessed by a State Board of Equalization. In that particular it would be a State Board of Assessors. Now, it is well known that the railroad property is peculiar property in itself. It does not bear any particular relation to the localities, as other property does. It is considered as an entirety. The rolling stock and all belong to the road as a whole, and ought to be assessed as a part of the entire line. All the property used is a part of the road, and the value can much better be ascertained by assessing it all together. Now, there appears to be a mistake here on the part of some gentlemen who have argued this question. They seem to suppose that this State Board is to levy the tax. They are not. They simply certify to the County Boards, or the Supervisors, as to the amount allotted to the several counties.

MR. BARTON. It says the Board shall assess.

MR. WEST. That is right; they assess it, not tax it. They assess the entire road, then they certify to the Board of Supervisors of each county the number of miles, and fractions of miles, and they pro rata the value of the road, including the rolling stock and all the property used. I have a substitute which I believe will fully meet the objections urged by Mr. Van Dyke. It is that, on the first Monday in March, in each year, the State Board of Equalization shall assess the value of the property of all railroad corporations in this State. It is the Illinois plan, in short, and the gentleman from San Francisco is somewhat partial to that State. I believe it will meet the objections urged by the gentleman. Now, I wish to call the attention of members to the fact that by assessing the railroad as a whole, it will not be possible to assess it simply as old iron, it will be valued as a road in full operation. There is not a county through which a railroad passes that will not be benefited by this mode of assessment.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: It is very easy to get excited and criticise a section, but it is not so easy to suggest something better. Now, the proposition submitted by the Chairman of this committee is a very plain one indeed, and a very simple one. We all agree with the principal elements of it. The object of the section is to have one assessment of this class of property instead of three or four. All the members seem to agree that a portion of this property should be assessed by the State Board. Now, sir, if that Board is the most competent authority to assess any portion of this property, why is it not competent to assess all of it? Instead of having a different assessment for each county, and each city, and town, and school district, it is proposed to have one assessment made by this State Board, and apportioned where it belongs. The school district has one Assessor to assess the property. The road district assesses it again. Then another Assessor assesses it for township purposes. The county has another, and the city another. Each in turn has jurisdiction for local purposes. Now, is this a wise plan? Is it rational to have four or five assessments by four or five Assessors? It is not. I say it is much more reasonable to let this State Board make the assessment of this property throughout the State, and then apportion the assessment among the several counties interested. Why isn't that the best and simplest way? We shall select the members comprising this Board from different parts of the State, with especial reference to their fitness. They must make themselves fully acquainted with property values in every county in the State before they will be qualified to equalize assessments. They must go and examine this property for themselves, and not, as some gentlemen have suggested, sit down in their office at the Capitol and depend on the local Assessors. They must examine the property, and place a value upon it. It is far better for them to go out through the State and see the character of the property, and draw their information in that way, than to sit here all the year round and try to gain a knowledge by hearing testimony. Now, when it comes to this railroad property, the question is whether they shall equalize or assess it. The Convention has assented to one proposition, and that is that the Board shall assess a portion of it. Then why not let them assess the whole of it? The members concede that they shall assess a portion and equalize a portion. Now what is involved in equalizing property? Why, a personal examination of the property. They have got to go and make a personal examination of the property in the several counties in order to equalize the value. Is it possible for the State Board to sit in the office here and determine the value of the railroad property in San Francisco? No; they must go down and look at it. There are local roads in several counties, sometimes running through one county, sometimes through several. They must make a personal examination in order to equalize the value, for every county in the State places a different value on railroad property, so that the information given by the local Assessors will be no guide. They cannot determine the value by hearing testimony. One man will place the value at one thousand dollars per mile, another at six thousand dollars. For every witness introduced by the State the railroad company will bring an offset. Where will they ever stop? There will be no end to it. The Board must have power to investigate this question for themselves. It is the cheapest way, and the only way. One road has new rails, another has old; one uses steel, another iron. One is a narrow gauge, another a broad gauge. There is no end to the inquiry. A man can go and look at them and decide in five minutes.

Now, in relation to assessing the franchise. The Chairman of the committee has explained this matter fully. They are the only Board that can assess franchises. To do that they must have in view the entire property. When they equalize the assessments it is equivalent to making an assessment, and why should they not be allowed to do it in the first instance? The gentleman complains that it is not a uniform system. It is uniform over the same subject-matter. It would be far less a uniform system to have the Board assess a part of the property of railroad corporations, and the local Assessors another part. It is not necessary that the same system should be adopted for assessing a horse or a church. They must be uniform over the same class of subjects. And that is just exactly what is done here.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I think I should rather stick to the report of the committee. I have more confidence in men elected by large districts than I have in Assessors elected by counties. For instance, in many counties the railroad company elects the Assessor, and as a result, assesses its own property, therefore I had rather trust the State Board.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. SHOEMAKER. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Howard, McCallum, Terry, and Wyatt.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada.

Division was called, and the amendment to the amendment rejected, by a vote of 47 ayes to 51 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers.

Division was called for, and the amendment was adopted, by a vote of 66 ayes to 39 noes.

ASSESSING CORPORATIONS.

THE SECRETARY read section seventeen as follows:

SEC. 17. The value of the capital stock of a corporation shall be assessed in the county in which its principal place of business is located, and separately from all other property belonging thereto; and such stock shall be assessed at its market value when the assessment is made. The real and other personal property of such corporation shall be assessed in the several counties respectively in which the same is situate. The value of such stock, over and above the aggregate value of such real and other personal property, according to such assessment, shall be taxed in the county in which the principal place of business of such corporation is located; and the value of such real and other personal property shall be taxed in the several counties respectively in which the same is situate. The shares of stock belonging to the stockholders in such corporation shall be exempt from taxation; provided that the provisions of this section shall not apply to railroad corporations.

MR. REDDY. I move to strike out section seventeen.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the section.

REMARKS OF MR. REDDY.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: My reasons for making this motion are as follows: We provide for ascertaining the value of property, real and personal, of corporations; now, when we find the true value of that property we do not need to inquire about the value of the stock, because that merely represents the value of the property, and if you assess both it is double taxation. There is no distinct value in them. There are no two values there. The stock simply represents the value of the real and personal property; that being ascertained, and assessed and taxed, you have all the value there is, all the property of the corporation, because it is provided that the surplus of value is to be retained by the county where the principal place of business is located. Now, all stock is to be assessed; all stock is to be taxed. What has become of the balance? All stock is to be assessed. To whom? To the corporation? Now, it is a new rule, it seems to me, to assess property to a party not the owner of the property, and not in possession of the property. The corporation does not own the corporate stock, as a rule. There must be a great portion of it out, anyway. The stock is owned by the corporators and not by the corporation, and yet it is all to be assessed to the corporation. I cannot see any reason for assessing corporations in that way. The disposition of the people of this State is to assess all property equally and fairly, and assess it to the owners, and but once, but here it is plain you assess it twice, and I think the Convention, if it adopts this provision, will be going way beyond the demands or necessities of the State. How will it work? In the southern part of the State the farmers are relying upon irrigation to raise crops, and companies must be formed for that purpose. In forming a system in this way the farmers will have to pay this tax, for certainly the corporations will add it to the price of the water. I presume the object is the same as that of section seven, to discriminate against them in every way.

Again, the value of the stock is to be ascertained by the market price. Is that fair? Men do not buy stock in many instances on account of its present value, but on account of the value which they hope it will attain in a certain length of time—speculative value. Does the State want to tax these prospective values? I suppose it does. It will be an unfair way of determining the value, even if you are going to assess the stock. I have known a large majority of stock in a corporation to be sold for two and three dollars a share. There were not, perhaps, two thousand shares in circulation, and where the stock in circulation was selling at two and three dollars a share, they were making strenuous efforts to sell seventy-five thousand shares at one dollar a share. Now, would it be fair to make the market value of the few thousand shares in circulation the criterion to go by in assessing the entire number? Every man who has ever had any experience of that kind knows that it is unfair. I think these reasons are quite sufficient for striking out the section. It can do no good. It will simply work an unjust tax upon these people.

MR. BURT. Mr. Chairman: I offer a substitute for the section.

THE CHAIRMAN. Not in order at present.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of this section, and opposed to the motion to strike out. I conceive that the gentleman does not perceive the real character of this section. He pronounces it to be double taxation. From my understanding, it has no analogy to double taxation. To the proposition of double taxation, I am as thoroughly and entirely opposed as he. But this involves a question and a principle of an entirely different nature. The proposition here is that the capital stock of corporations shall be taxed at its market value. It is merely the difference between the value of the tangible, visible property and the market value of the capital stock as stock. In San Francisco, for instance, the Spring Valley Water Company is taxed, I think, on eight million dollars of real and personal property. When the city wishes to buy the property, it sets up a market value of some fifteen million dollars, that being the price which the aggregate stock would bring at market rates. There is a difference between the property taxed and the property quoted of seven million dollars, which is an ample illustration of the objects of this section.

MR. REDDY. I would ask you one question. I will ask you how it would operate in this case: Suppose there are one hundred thousand dollars, or one hundred thousand shares of stock, of which there are ten thousand shares out, which would be all the market would stand; perhaps would flood the market. They were sold, say at five dollars per share, and the balance of the stock, if thrown upon the market, might not be worth fifty cents a share, or you might not be able to sell it at all. Now, would it be fair to tax the ninety thousand shares at the market value of the few shares that are on the market? Would it be fair to take that as a criterion?

MR. WINANS. Certainly not; but such instances would be exceptional in their nature. The market is not flooded. It is proposed to assess the stock at its market value at the time the assessment is made, and that certainly is the highest and most reliable criterion we can go by. Now, this proposition says to assess in the different counties in which it is located, the material property of these corporations. If the property is worth more than the stock, that is all they have to pay on; but if their stock is worth more than the material property, they are compelled to pay taxes upon the difference between the value of the material property and the value of the stock. The decision of the Supreme Court referred to by the gentleman from Sacramento applies exactly to this case. There the Supreme Court say:

"It is obvious, however, that while a fair assessment under these two descriptions of property will include all the visible or tangible property of the corporation, it may or it may not include all its wealth. There may be other property of a class not visible or tangible which ought to respond to taxation, and which the State has a right to subject to taxation. Thus it may occur, as in fact is claimed by one of these companies, that, being insolvent, and its earnings not being sufficient to pay anything beyond its necessary expenses for operating the road and its repairs, this tangible property represents more than the real wealth of the company and its property. While on the other hand, another one of these companies is so rich, that after paying its expenses and interest on a large amount of debt, it declares large dividends, and this interest and these dividends, when looked to in reference to what is called the tangible property, show that there is here another element of wealth which ought to pay its share of the taxes. This element the State of Illinois calls the value of the franchise and capital stock of the corporation."

Take an insurance company, or a bank, in San Francisco, where the stock is valuable, why should it not pay its per cent. of taxation? It is the price you have to pay if you want to purchase the stock. Now, it will be observed that by this proposition, the stockholder is not taxed. The gentleman from Mono objected that we taxed the corporation, and yet not the stockholders. The stockholders comprise the corporation, and the stock comprises the corporate property, which is properly taxed against the institution. This decision says: "This element the State of Illinois calls the value of the franchise and capital stock of the corporation—the value of the right to use this tangible property in a special manner for purposes of gain." Now, sir, I say the principle involved in this section is right and just. Under it we tax the property as property. Now gentlemen have contended on this floor, that everything that has value should be taxed. Now this stock certainly has value; it has a value of millions of dollars in this State, which now escapes taxation, and which will be reached and taxed by this section. It is property which yields good profits. Some derive all their income from this source. If that is so, why not tax it? That it has a distinct value is obvious from the facts I have stated. That it should be taxed in the county where the principal place of business is located, is perfectly proper. But all the real and personal tangible property should be taxed wherever it belongs. The stock is to be taxed at the principal place of business of the corporation. Its value is to be ascertained at the time it is taxed. The ruling price of the stock in the market is taken as the criterion of value. Then the whole capital is assessed by that gauge. There is nothing in the proposition bordering on double taxation. I say if this is adopted it will reach millions of property which now is beyond the reach of the Tax Collector.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: This section seventeen is one of the great innovations which, if adopted by this committee, I have no doubt will contribute its full proportion to increase at the very outset the opposition which is being arrayed against this Constitution by certain great interests. For my part, without reference to that, I am in favor of this section seventeen, and opposed to striking it out, knowing full well that the result I have indicated will be sure to follow.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I would ask the gentleman if he thinks we can do anything to conciliate these monopolies?

MR. MCCALLUM. I haven't the slightest idea that we shall do anything to conciliate these interests, or the newspapers which they employ. As to this proposition, with reference to the great corporations of San Francisco, the gentleman from San Francisco has illustrated the point very well. Under this particular clause the value of the stock, over and above the aggregate value of the real and personal property, shall be taxed. It is very easy to see in that one particular case, where one great corporation of that city escapes the payment of about five million dollars; that is, there is that difference between the value of the real and personal property and the market value of the stock.

Now, the gentleman from Inyo has raised a supposed case which frequently occurs. Ten thousand shares of the stock of a corporation might be put upon the market and sold, say at five dollars a share, but if you threw the balance on the market you could not get ten cents a share for it. Well, it may be said, in answer to that, that if you sold a few horses they might bring a fair price, but put all the horses on the market and the price would go down. But it comes to this, as far as mining corporations are concerned: if they are honestly assessed there will be no difference between the market value of their stock and the value of the mine. Take a celebrated mine in Bodie. If it is worth ten dollars a share, then it is selling at five hundred thousand dollars, and the mine is worth five hundred thousand dollars. If, however, you take a mine that has been worked for fifteen years, and has produced nothing, except assessments, and it is assessed at one hundred thousand dollars, while being listed on the market at one million dollars, then, in that case, if I understand the theory of this section, there are nine hundred thousand dollars which ought to be taxed. This proposition has been sustained by the highest Court in the nation. I suppose it ought to be amended in some way so as to conform to the action of the Convention upon section sixteen. I trust that the motion to strike out will not prevail. I have not the slightest degree of prejudice against corporations. They are necessary to the development of the country, and should be encouraged. Let them incorporate as they please, but let them not be exempt from taxation.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Barbour, Wyatt, Edgerton, and West.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out section seventeen.

Division was called for, and the motion to strike out was lost by a vote of 40 ayes to 58 noes.

MR. BURT. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer a substitute for the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the section and insert the following: 'The capital stock of all corporations and joint stock associations, organized under the terms of this State, shall be assessed to such corporations and joint stock associations in the county, city, city and county, or district, in which their principal place of business is located, at its market value; provided, that all real and personal property owned or possessed by any such corporations or associations shall be assessed and taxed in the city, county, city and county, or district, in which the same is situated. The excess in value of such capital stock, over and above the aggregate value of the real and personal property within the State, according to such assessment, only shall be taxed, and shall be so taxed in the city, county, city and county, or district, in which the principal place of business is situated. For the purpose of taxation, the value of the franchises owned or enjoyed by such corporations or associations shall be included as forming part of such property. The Legislature shall provide by law for the assessment and collection of an annual tax upon the gross receipts within this State of all foreign corporations doing business in this State.'"

REMARKS OF MR. BURT.

MR. BURT. Mr. Chairman: The principal object aimed at by this amendment is to reach those corporations organized and doing business in this State whose property is entirely without the State. It is a well known fact that nearly all the corporations doing business with the San Francisco Stock Boards, have really no property in the State which the Assessor can reach, while they enjoy all the privileges and immunities of corporations existing in this State. Now, it is no more than fair that they should help contribute to the support of the government which protects them. As regards corporations doing business and having property in this State, the provisions are similar to those of the section which is before the committee. As regards the matter of double taxation, if the property is given in to the Assessor at its actual cash value, as we have already required, I am unable to see where there is any excuse for saying that it will be double taxation. There is another change of importance here. The original clause provides for the assessment and collection of taxes in each county. The amendment provides for district taxes in cases of local taxation. It also provides that in listing the property, franchises owned or enjoyed by these corporations, or associations, shall form a part of such property. It seems to me, sir, that the franchise should go with the property of the corporation, and should be taxed where the property is taxed. It provides for an annual tax upon the gross receipts of foreign corporations doing business in this State. It is the only way of reaching this class of corporations, and compelling them to pay their share of taxes.

MR. SWING. I move the committee rise.

MR. EDGERTON. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and recommend to the Convention that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer be printed in the Journal to-morrow morning.

Carried by a vote of 56 ayes to 40 noes.

IN CONVENTION.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section seventeen, and the amendments, are before the committee. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Burt.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out section seventeen and insert as follows:

"'SEC. 17. The capital stock of all corporations and joint stock associations organized under the laws of this State, shall be assessed to such corporations and associations in the city, county, or city and county, or district in which their principal places of business are located, at its market value; provided, that the real and personal property owned or possessed by any such corporation or association shall be assessed and taxed in the several cities, counties, or cities and counties, or districts in which the same is situated. The excess in value only of the capital stock of such corporations or associations over the aggregate value of their real and personal property, within this State, according to such assessment, shall be taxed, and shall be so taxed in the city, county, or city and county, or district in which the principal place of business of such corporation or association is located. For the purposes of taxation, the list and assessment of the real and personal property of persons, corporations, and associations, owning or enjoying valuable franchises, shall include such franchises as forming a part of such property. The Legislature shall provide by law for the assessment and collection of an annual tax upon the gross receipts, within this State, of all foreign corporations doing business in this State.'"

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I would ask the author of the amendment why he provides that "for the purposes of taxation, the list and assessment of real and personal property of persons, corporations, and associations, owning or enjoying valuable franchises, shall include such franchises as forming a part of such property?"

MR. BURT. The object——

MR. EDGERTON. What is a franchise, real or personal property?

MR. BURT. The object of having it included with the property is that it shall be taxed where their property belongs, and not at their place of business, as forming a part of their property.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I do not see that that clause has any particular value there. In fact, I think it involves an inconsistency, and ought to be stricken out. Of course it should be assessed and taxed, but I think that clause should be eliminated from the amendment, from the words "for the purposes of taxation," in the tenth line, down to the word "property." If the gentleman will look at the juxtaposition of that clause, if he can take it all in at one view, he will see that there is something wrong about it.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: Franchises and rights connected with any corporation, whether a bridge or ferry, is a part of the value of that property, and should be considered so, and assessed where the property is located.

MR. EDGERTON. It says that it shall be assessed as forming a part of such property. Which is it, real or personal?

MR. LARKIN. It is part of the personal property. In a bridge franchise there is a right if the bridge is destroyed. The same with a ferry.

MR. EDGERTON. If it is personal property, why not say that it shall be taxed as personal property, and not as real or personal property, and that it shall be assessed in the county where it is located? A corporation may have its place of business in San Francisco, and the property belonging to this company, the ferry, or the bridge, or any other property, should be assessed in the county where the property is located.

MR. ESTEE. Will the gentleman from Sacramento, the Chairman of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, allow me to ask him what the intention is of putting in these words "market value?" What if it has no market value? "Cash value" is the ordinary term applied. I will ask the gentleman from Placer where he got the term?

MR. BURT. From the original section.

MR. ESTEE. You may have a piece of land that has no market value and yet be very valuable. Cash value is the term I have always seen used. I move to strike out the word "market" and insert the word "cash."

MR. REYNOLDS. I would ask the gentleman why put in the word "cash," why not leave it as it is?

MR. ESTEE. "Cash value" is the term used properly. One reason I suggest that the word "market" be stricken out and the word "cash" be inserted, is that there are many corporations in San Francisco where the stock has no market value, because it has no sale. Fix it at its cash value.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that there is a point against the term market value. They have established money values, so I would suggest the term "money value."

MR. ESTEE. Well, cash is money, but money is not always cash.

MR. FILCHER. "A mare is a horse, but a horse is not a mare."

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I believe that amendments are not now in order. I desire, at the proper time, to offer an amendment to this proposed section seventeen as now offered. It is to insert the word "other," after the words "real and," in the fourth line, so that it will read: "Provided, that the real and other personal property;" because the capital stock itself is property in the estimation of this Convention. I would ask the author of the substitute if he would not accept that amendment?

MR. BURT. I accept that amendment.

MR. WINANS. There is one more objection I would like to state, and that is to the use of the word "such," in the clause which has already been criticised by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton. It is grammatically incorrect. In that sentence the word "persons" is introduced for the first time, meaning natural persons. All that has been said theretofore has been in reference to property of associations.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the word "market" and insert the word "cash."

MR. EDGERTON. I have observed that in the other States they use the phrase "market, or fair cash value."

MR. ESTEE. I do not object to putting those words in. The point I make is that there are many corporations in San Francisco whose stock have no market value. Let it be "market, or fair cash value." Probably that is an improvement. After the word "market" insert the words "or fair cash."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. RHODES. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment to the substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to the substitute: 'The shares of stock belonging to stockholders in any of the corporations named in this section shall not be assessed to such stockholders.'"

MR. RHODES. Mr. Chairman: The object of that amendment is this: under section two, as it stands, the stock held by private persons is assessable for taxation. If this amendment prevails, as submitted by the gentleman from Placer, it makes that stock taxable not only to the corporation, but also to the stockholder, which I think cannot be the intention of the mover of that substitute.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

A division was called for, the question was put, and the vote stood 57 ayes to 10 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting.

MR. HERRINGTON. This section cannot apply to railroad corporations.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 63 ayes to 19 noes.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the amendment to section seventeen as follows: Strike out all after the word 'State,' in line two, and insert 'and the gross receipts within this State, of all foreign corporations doing business in this State, shall be taxed in such manner as may be provided by law.'"

MR. HERRINGTON. I rise to a point of order. The amendment proposes to strike out what has just been inserted.

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: For one I am afraid of attempting legislation in this Constitution. I think we ought to have stricken out the other section, and I think we should strike out this for safety, but the committee have decided otherwise, and the purpose of this amendment is to simply declare the purpose of this Convention to tax this kind of property; that is, the capital stock of corporations organized in this State; in other words, domestic corporations, and the gross receipts in this State of foreign corporations doing business in this State, but to leave the machinery and the amount of taxation entirely to the Legislature. Now, I think that is altogether safer than it is for us here to attempt to devise the plan and the machinery necessary to carry out what we simply should declare; that is, our purpose to tax the capital stock of domestic corporations, and the gross receipts of foreign corporations. In other words, I think we should stop, after we have declared our purpose, and allow the Legislature, as experience may show to be just and proper, to devise the means of carrying out this declaration. I think it is dangerous to attempt legislation in the Constitution. I hope the amendment will be adopted

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I think this amendment would have the effect of destroying the operative character of the whole section, for the reason that if the matter was left to the Legislature, according to the ordinary practice of the Legislature, it would be so harassed by corporate power, and corporate influence, and corporate money, that nothing would be done in the interest of the people.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I am not sure that I fully understand the effect of the amendment of the gentleman, but if I do understand it, it amounts to this: After we have made a provision in our Constitution and adopted it, that, first, the property of corporations shall be taxed—that is, its tangible property; second, that its franchise shall be taxed, we now say by this provision that the Legislature shall provide for the taxation of the capital stock of the corporations. Now, if this provision be adopted, then the next session of the Legislature must provide for the taxation of all the capital stock of corporations. Now, if such a provision be adopted, it must further be in accordance with the provision already adopted, that all taxation must be according to the value of the property, and the necessary result will be that when the Legislature frames a law upon this subject, it will be, in effect, this, that the tax shall be levied upon the capital stock according to the value of the capital stock. If they make a law different from that it would be in opposition to sections one and two. Then by the adoption of this amendment as proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, we will be adopting a provision exactly like one which we have stricken out from previous sections. I am not in favor of taxing the property of a corporation and then taxing its capital stock, because it is taxing the same thing twice.

MR. VAN DYKE. That objection could be met by using the term "the capital stock in excess of the value of the property."

MR. CROSS. Then we have the provision of Mr. Burt.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Burt's attempts to legislate, whereas this does not.

MR. CROSS. What can the Legislature do except to provide in what manner the tax shall be levied? It must be according to the value of the capital stock, because we have already made a provision that all property must be taxed according to its value; then, that stock must be taxed according to its value. If we now say that capital stock is property, for the purpose of taxation, whatever law the Legislature makes, it must be a law to tax the whole capital stock according to its value; thereby we will have taxed them on the property, and then taxed them again upon the same property by taxing the capital stock, which is only another name for the property. The capital stock is whatever is invested, that is, the shares of capital stock. It is whatever is invested. If two merchants organize a mercantile company, and put in ten thousand dollars in money, the capital stock is ten thousand dollars. If a man invests ten thousand dollars in a ranch, his capital stock is ten thousand dollars. Now, sir, this provision, in effect, will provide that in the same class of cases we shall tax the property and then we shall tax it again under another name, under the name of capital stock. The provision should be that the value of the stock above the value of the property should be assessed; or the provision should be, that the Legislature may provide for a tax upon the capital stock of corporations, so far as the same is in excess of the value of the property which is assessed.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to amend my amendment so as to meet that objection.

MR. FILCHER. I have it written out and will send it up.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the amendment to section seventeen as follows: Strike out the words 'capital stock,' in line one, and insert: 'The excess of value of capital stock, over and above the value of the real and personal property of all corporations and joint stock associations organized under the laws of this State, and the gross receipts, within this State, of all foreign corporations doing business in this State, shall be subject to taxation in such manner as may be prescribed by law.'"

MR. VAN DYKE. I accept the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: If these amendments, either of them, is to be adopted, I want to know what the result is to be, and I must confess that I am a little in doubt. It is proposed that all corporations who have property in this State, the excess in value of the capital stock over and above the amount of the property shall be assessed. That I consider to be a fair proposition. There are, however, in this State many corporations organized under the laws of this State whose property is entirely outside of this State. Now the result will be that either we must allow the property owned by that corporation, although situated outside of the State, to be deducted from the capital stock, or one of two things will result: that corporation will be obliged to pay a tax upon the property in the other State, and then they will be obliged to pay a tax upon the capital stock in this State, or else we must allow them to deduct the property and simply tax them on the excess. Now that is what I want to get at. Corporations who own mines in Nevada, who are organized under the laws of this State, and have their principal place of business in San Francisco, are they to be allowed to deduct the amount of the valuation of their property in Nevada from the capital stock in this State, and be taxed on the excess of it? If so, there is no objection to it that I see, but if not, the result will be that they will be driven out of the State, every one of them. They cannot stand it.

Now, sir, I have had no experience in this matter of dealing in mining stock. I never owned a share of mining stock in my life. I do not think I am competent to judge whether it is desirable to drive all these corporations out of the State or not; but it is the question we want to meet here. We do not want to shut our eyes and say that there are corporations in this State who have worked an injury, and for that reason we will make a sweeping provision here that will drive all of them out of this State, unless that is the intention.

MR. VAN DYKE. I wish to answer the gentleman. So far as Mr. Burt's amendment goes it is only to deduct the property in this State; whereas, the other leaves it to the Legislature, as it should be, or else strike out the section.

MR. BLACKMER. I believe there is a revenue already derived by the State from them. I believe that the State collects a license tax of ten cents upon every transfer of a certificate. I am not arguing either for or against it, but I want to see the question met square in the face, whether we are determined to drive them all out, or whether we believe they will stay here and stand the double taxation, one upon the property in the other State, and the other upon the stock here. If the Burt amendment is adopted it is very evident that there is an omission. Unless there is a provision added to it, it will apply to all railroad corporations as well as corporations mentioned, because railroad corporations are included in the term "all corporations and joint stock associations, organized under the laws of this State." At the proper time I shall offer an amendment to add to that section as proposed by the member from Placer, Mr. Burt, "provided, that this section shall not apply to railroad corporations."

MR. ESTEE. Why?

MR. BLACKMER. Because we have already provided for their taxation in the other section.

MR. EDGERTON. As I understand the theory of section sixteen, as to a railroad corporation, it is that the property shall be treated as a unit, and assessed by the State Board of Equalization, and distributed "pro rata among the counties according to the ratio which the number of miles of such road completed in such county, city and county, town, or district, shall bear to the whole length of such railroad."

MR. ESTEE. That is true. But other sections also declare that every other character of property——

MR. EDGERTON. The point is here: there is a direct conflict.

MR. ESTEE. That is so, without any question. But this is not the only conflict. Here is a mine in Nevada. You go down to San Francisco and you assess the property to the owner, who does not live there. Well, under the revenue law, generally, the personal property is assessed in the county where the owner lives. In other words, I own stock in the London Mutual Insurance Company, and I live in Alameda County, for instance, and yet it is assessed in San Francisco. It would be unjust and contrary to every principle of taxation.

MR. BLACKMER. Is that an objection to the amendment I propose?

MR. ESTEE. It is an objection to the whole section.

MR. BLACKMER. If we want to drive out all these corporations, all right, adopt the provision. But if it is believed that they will stay and pay the tax, it is no reason why they should pay two or three taxes because they are here. They want to pay their just proportion.

MR. ESTEE. Suppose the principal place of business of a corporation is in Sacramento, the stockholders may be scattered all over the State. They are the owners. The corporation does not own the stock. They are the owners, and they give in their tax list. They are sworn to give in all their property. Under a sworn statement, a man says he has one hundred shares in a mutual insurance company, or in the Bank of California. It is the sworn duty of the Assessor to tax that property. Then you go to San Francisco and assess the whole number of shares, five million dollars, of capital stock. Who will you assess it to? The corporation? If you assess it to the corporation you can find an owner, but if you undertake to assess it to the real owner, where is he?

MR. LARKIN. Are there not many corporations where the stock is owned in Nevada?

MR. ESTEE. Certainly. They will say: "John Doe, in Nevada, owns fifty or one hundred shares. Can you assess the stock if the owner is not here?" Are we not trying to do an impossibility? The London Mutual in San Francisco—where are its stockholders?

MR. EDGERTON. Who proposes to tax the stockholders?

MR. ESTEE. You propose to tax the stock. Is it not the law that you may tax the stock to the corporation? But if that is done you cannot tax the shares in the possession or ownership of the owner. That has been the law for years.

MR. HOWARD. The Supreme Court has decided that you can tax the corporation with the tax.

MR. ESTEE. That is when the corporation owns it. Where you find an individual who is owner of a certain amount of the capital stock, and he does not live in the State, I apprehend that you cannot tax it to the corporation. That the Supreme Court of the United States did not decide.

MR. EDGERTON. If the gentlemen will read the State Railroad Tax case, they will be abundantly enlightened.

MR. VAN DYKE. This amendment only taxes the capital stock.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has already spoken once.

REMARKS OF MR. OVERTON.

MR. OVERTON. Mr. Chairman: If it is the intention of parties on this floor to enact a law in the Constitution that is going to drive every foreign corporation out of the State, then we had better adopt this section. If they feel authorized by their constituents to adopt that kind of law, then they are obeying the wishes of their constituents who sent them here, because it will have that effect. I do not think the people of this State expect us to pass a law that would in effect drive every foreign corporation out of this State; and I would here say to the gentleman from San Francisco, that if they pass this law, they will make a great many vacant offices in San Francisco, and I speak in relation to a matter that I am cognizant of. The people of my town are working a mine in Arizona. The stock of that mine is principally owned in Santa Rosa. Probably we have two hundred thousand dollars invested in that mine. That property is taxed in Arizona and their income from the bullion is taxed in that Territory. Now, you not only propose to tax them upon their capital stock, but it goes farther than that. It proposes to tax that stock in San Francisco, where the office is located. Notwithstanding our people have two hundred thousand dollars invested in that mine, living in Santa Rosa, their property is taxed in Arizona. Now, Mr. Burt's amendment proposes to enforce another tax upon them, and our county does not get the benefit of the tax, but it is taxed in San Francisco. If the stock is going to be taxed, the County of Sonoma should have it. The effect is to run every foreign corporation out of this State, and I do not believe the people desire to do that.

In the first place, there was an Act passed by the Legislature of this State, which required that each transfer of stock shall pay to the State ten cents. I know that I could not get any transfer of stock in the company that I am a member of unless I paid it, and I see by the papers that they receive about nine hundred dollars a week by reason of that ten cents. That amounts to considerable. So the State is getting, as it were, a benefit from the transfer and the business that these foreign corporations do. Now, then, if this section is passed as it is, it will in effect drive them all out of this State, because they cannot afford to pay a tax upon the property in Arizona or Nevada, and then be taxed here.

REMARKS OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to section seventeen. I am opposed to all the amendments that have been offered to it, for the reason that I believe it would lead to injurious legislation. If I desired to defeat the Constitution I would vote for just such amendments as these. I believe that it would result in great evil to all the corporations in this State. I object to one point particularly. Corporations are organized in the counties of this State, but their places of business are fixed in San Francisco. For what? For the convenience of those interested. Now, nine tenths of the stock of the corporation are held in the counties of this State. Now, what would be the result of this system of taxation? Why, the counties will pay to San Francisco the taxes that justly belong to the counties. Why? Because the capital stock being held in the counties they are taxed where the corporation has its principal place of business, which is San Francisco. I am opposed to such a system of taxation.

REMARKS OF MR. GRACE.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: It does seem to me that the taxation of stocks is perfectly proper. If men organize a company in Trinity or Nevada, or anywhere in the gold belt, for the purpose of mining, how is it that they have their place of business in San Francisco? If they go to San Francisco they say we will get the tax there. I tell you there is the mine in San Francisco. They have their principal place of business in San Francisco, and there is their whole field of operation. It is down there in order to get the hard-earned dollars of the population of San Francisco. There is where there is three hundred thousand inhabitants. That is where they open their business, and there is where they get their money, and not from the mines. And this money is made off the working, toiling people of San Francisco, and there is where the tax should be. If a mine is in Arizona, and our people have their money invested in it, when we tax that stock we are just taxing that money. If a man did not have his money in that stock he would have it in something else. If he takes that same money, and, instead of buying mining stock, buys horses, or cows, or any other kind of stock—cattle, or anything—then they do not say but what we can tax it. It is just as legitimate to tax it if it is in mining stock, as if it was in horses.

MR. TINNIN. It is not the money we are taxing, it is the stock.

MR. GRACE. The stock is money.

MR. McCOY. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out the whole section.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I am glad to see at least one working man that has sense enough to perceive the effect of this matter. Now, sir, why should not a corporation, foreign or domestic, pay for protection upon its money as well as a private individual? Why should a foreign corporation, which has the protection of the government to enforce the protection of its property and the collection of its dues, not pay on its property as well as anybody else? Why should not the domestic corporation pay? Sir, the section as reported by the committee is eminently correct, just, and proper, and without it, it is useless to talk of equality or uniformity of taxation.

REMARKS OF MR. BARRY.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: I hope the motion to strike out will prevail. The remarks of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Grace, were in about the same line as those used when other sections were up before the committee, as regards the capital stock of corporations when they form for the purpose of doing business in this State. They get on the wildcat, and imagine if they attack them that they will be able to accomplish their point in this Convention, and directly prevent the purpose that we desire to have accomplished, and that is to prevent the taxation of the capital stock of corporations formed for the purpose of mining. The gentlemen grow perfectly wild when it comes to wildcat, and they think if they attack stocks and corporations generally that the evil will be remedied, while it is not true. This would be a blow at our legitimate mining interests. The mining interests of this State should be held sacred in this case. No blow should be aimed at them. As far as foreign corporations are concerned, it may be right and proper to compel them to pay upon their incorporations to assist the revenues of the State. But this committee, by their action on the other sections, certainly declared that so far as capital stock was concerned, it should not be taxed. The substitute for section two certainly meant that the capital stock of a corporation should not be taxed. Now we go on and declare that they shall be assessed. What is the use of declaring that they shall be assessed when we declare that they shall not be taxed? As Mr. Estee truthfully said, it would be taxing the capital stock of any corporation or association in San Francisco, and taxing their property, real and personal, in Siskiyou, or any other county where it happened to be, and it would be double taxation. But gentlemen all the time get off on the idea of aiming at wildcats, and reaching that evil. While they imagine that it has that effect, and that perhaps it might lessen it in some degree, I cannot see how it would. If they formulate any section that will remove that evil, I will gladly support it. But this section is double taxation.

MR. EDGERTON. The Supreme Court says it is not.

MR. BARRY. The gentleman says it is. I have never read that decision. It may be true. I believe that if this section is stricken out, and another section put in its place, to leave it so that the Legislature can provide for the necessary legislation in this matter, I think it would be better. If the gentlemen want to remove that great evil of wildcat mines in this State, or the speculation that these men indulge in, we will agree with them. Anything that can be done we are ready to do. But we ought to remember the mining interests, not simply on account of the miners, whose interests we are bound to protect, but we claim we are protecting the interests of this State in protecting the mining interest, which is one of its greatest resources. It should not be impaired, and the great work of development should not be prevented. Their capital stock should not be taxed, when often it has but a fictitious value. It does certainly amount to double taxation, even if the Supreme Court may hold that it does not. I hope the motion to strike out the section will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. WELLIN.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. Chairman: I do not know that this section is exactly what we desire. It does not seem exactly right to me, but at the same time where there is nothing better offered, I hope we will adopt it. Gentlemen, in talking of the effect on mining companies, seem to forget that we have a few corporations in San Francisco, and when the Assessor goes after them they put in probably two hundred thousand dollars, and yet we know that these companies have property worth perhaps a million or two. Take the San Francisco Gas Company, under the present management we can hardly get any taxes out of that concern at all, and yet their capital stock is worth a large sum of money, and this seems to be the only practical way for the City and County of San Francisco to get a fair tax upon that property.

We have also got a water company, a very powerful and a very rich company, and unless we get something of this kind I am satisfied that the people will see that they do not pay their just share of the taxes. But we have still another company there in San Francisco which perhaps is more powerful than either of these, and that is the Nevada Bank. It has a paid up capital of ten million dollars. We do not know what their stock is worth. They pay upon about two million five hundred thousand dollars, while they have a ten million paid up capital. Are we just simply to take an assessment upon two million five hundred thousand dollars of that corporation, and let the other seven million five hundred thousand go untaxed, simply because some one thinks a blow is aimed at them, or because some small miner is to be hurt? If they think this will injure legitimate mining enterprises, why don't they offer us a plan by which we can strike a blow at these men that escape taxation? Let them prepare such an article and we will support it. I shall certainly vote to retain this section seventeen until they give us something that will reach these rich corporations and make them bear their just share of taxation.

The ones I have mentioned are only the most glaring ones and we have a large number of other ones. All the Assessor can reach in the way of real estate will not amount to ten per cent. of the value of the capital stock. The people desire to reach this. I maintain that we want section seventeen or something else that will reach these people.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me, sir, that the objections urged by some of my friends from the mining counties against this section, are not well founded. And more than that, I would say in this connection, that in the matter of regulation of corporations, it seems to me that a great deal depends upon whose ox is gored. We are all disposed to impose the most stringent measures upon the Central Pacific Railroad Company, because, perhaps, none of us own any stock in it; but when it comes to corporations within our own locality, the members of which are our own constituents, we feel a delicacy in regard to regulating them. For my part, I think fairness is only fair; right is only right, under any circumstances; and any corporation in this State, mining or otherwise, if it cannot stand what is right, fair, and just in the way of regulation, let it go down. There is no double taxation suggested in this section. There is no unjust proposition. The idea arrived at is this, simply: if the capital stock, at the regular market value, whatever it is worth in market, is worth more than the real and personal property of any corporation, that excess in value shall be represented on the assessment roll. There is certainly no double taxation in that.

Now a mining corporation in my county owns property there, by way of mines and appurtenances necessary for mining purposes, to the amount of five hundred thousand dollars or more, and that is the whole of it in a tangible shape, and yet the capital stock of that corporation represents two million dollars in the market. I say that that excess in value should be represented on the assessment roll, for it represents value in this State. Though I favored the substitute as submitted by my colleague, Mr. Burt, yet I believe that the one emanating from the gentleman from Alameda is preferable. It is the idea aimed at, and it is expressed in terse and plain terms: simply that the excess in value of the capital stock, over and above the value of the property, shall be assessed, but it leaves the details to the Legislature, and that is why I prefer it to this section. Here we go on in the Constitution and attempt to provide the details, and in the event that they should prove wrong, or come in conflict with some other part of the Constitution, they might prove not harmonious and be beyond reparation. We should therefore provide in the Constitution the fundamental principle and let the details go.

The next idea aimed at is getting at these foreign corporations. It has been asserted that if we adopt this we will drive all the foreign corporations out of the State. I say let us drive them out, then. If they, who bring their capital here and command the laws of this State for their protection; who receive protection from the State; if they cannot afford to pay a portion of the revenue for the support of the government, let us drive them out and get some one who can. All the regulations we have thus far made bear on our local corporations; those belonging to California; those instituted by California capital.

MR. CROSS. The objections urged in this particular part of the house against the substitute are not urged against the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke. I ask that that provision be now read.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: That is my reason for desiring to address the committee at this time. The discussion has wandered off as to these details, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, immediately under consideration, seems to have been overlooked entirely. I believe my friend from Trinity cannot seriously and earnestly object to that amendment, as it stands now. There are only two points. One is, that these corporations shall be assessed to the full extent, and at the same time avoid double taxation; and the other is, that a tax shall be received from these foreign corporations doing business on this coast, and doing it under the protection of the laws of California. If there is anything in those two points that is objectionable I would like to have the objections set forth.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I rise for the purpose of offering my condolence and sympathy to the gentleman from Sierra, his neighbors of Nevada, and some other gentlemen from counties interested in mines. I am very sorry, indeed, that they are unable to direct the storm that they have helped to raise, so that it shall injure the property of everybody else except their constituents.

MR. CROSS. Don't you know that we have stood, from the first, against any kind of double taxation?

MR. EDGERTON. You have stood against anything that would tax a mine. [Laughter.]

MR. CROSS. We are all willing to have the mine and the mining franchise taxed for what it is worth.

MR. McFARLAND. Now, sir, when this Convention started, there was apparently a large majority in favor of doing what we call "cinching corporations." They said to you: "Strike a corporation on the head whenever you see it! Burst up the corporations! Drive them out of the State! They are bloated monopolies, all of them!" And, if I am not wrong in my recollection, my friends over there were among the loudest mouths that took that position. They are beginning to find that when you start a fire it is not so easy to control it. I admit that this is the most ridiculous proposition ever heard of, to tax the property and then tax the capital stock. It seems to me that it is nonsense. It is double taxation of the worst kind. But it is very clear that this is only one of the results of the storm which these gentlemen have helped to raise, and, while I shall do what I can to prevent it, if they and their constituents go down before it I shall feel very sorry for them.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Burt, as printed in to-day's Journal. There are only two objections urged to this section, and the first is that it is virtually double taxation, which is an error. The section provides for the assessment of the real and personal property of the corporation. The real and personal property shall be assessed and taxed, and the tax collected in the locality, the district, or the city in which the real and personal property is located. That is the first taxation; provided, however, that if the corporation have corporate stock, the cash value of which is above the value of the real and personal property assessed, then the excess in the value of stock shall be assessed in the place where the principal office of the company is located. Now, there is no double taxation about it at all, because a deduction is made out of the value of the stock to the amount of the value of the real and personal property which is taxed. In other words, the property taxed is taken out of the property not taxed, and the balance is taxed, if there be a balance. It is said, however, that the stock ought to be taxed where the stockholder resides. We know very well that it is the easiest thing possible for a person possessed of stock to take that stock and lock it up, and no Assessor can find it, and no Assessor will find it, and the consequence is that stocks will escape and always have escaped taxation. This is the only possible method of reaching the capital stock of corporations.

Again, the objection is urged that it is taxing the company and not taxing the stockholder. The objection is fallacious, because the company is the stockholder, and you cannot take the stockholder outside the company, because if you have no stockholders you have no company, and you have no corporation. The value of the stock consists in the value of the corporate franchise, and not only that, but also, perhaps, in speculative values. Undoubtedly in California it consists mainly in speculative values. Stock from which a dividend is received, the company at all times before that dividend is paid, takes out the amount of expenses, and the tax which the company pays upon the stock will simply be carried over to the expense account, and the stockholders will receive so much less dividend. Therefore, the stockholders virtually pay the tax, because it is one of the necessary expenses of the corporation, and the burden falls upon the stockholders, directly in proportion to the amount of stocks which they own. Therefore, both of the objections fall to the ground. First, it is not double taxation, because the deduction is made; second, it is a payment of the tax directly by the stockholder, because the amount of the tax is deducted from the amount of his dividends, and his stock is worth so much less. The taxes will form a part of the necessary expenses of every corporation, and must of necessity be paid by the stockholders in proportion to the stock which they possess or hold.

MR. OVERTON. Does it permit a deduction of the amount of the property if the mine is located out of the State? The author says it does not.

MR. BEERSTECHER. It says: "The capital stock of all corporations and joint stock associations organized under the laws of this State shall be assessed to such corporations and associations in the city, county, or city and county, or district, in which their principal places of business are located, at its market value; provided, that the real and personal property owned or possessed by any such corporation or association shall be assessed and taxed in the several cities, counties, or cities and counties, or districts, in which the same is situated. The excess in value only of the capital stock of such corporations or associations over the aggregate value of their real and personal property, within this State, according to such assessment, shall be taxed, and shall be so taxed in the city, county, or city and county, or district, in which the principal place of business of such corporation or association is located. For the purposes of taxation, the list and assessment of the real and personal property of persons, corporations, and associations owning or enjoying valuable franchises, shall include such franchises as forming a part of such property. The Legislature shall provide by law for the assessment and collection of an annual tax upon the gross receipts, within this State, of all foreign corporations doing business in this State."

The amendment would allow of a deduction of the value of the real and personal property located within this State from the value of the capital stock, and of course, the objections that have been urged by the gentleman from Nevada fall to the ground, it not being double taxation, and it not being a payment of taxes by the company outside of the stockholders.

MR. CROSS. Do you claim that any gentleman from Nevada has said that the amendment of Mr. Van Dyke, as now amended, amounts to double taxation? If you do, you do not understand what was said. The gentlemen from Nevada universally support that amendment.

MR. BEERSTECHER. In so far as my argument may clash with that of the gentleman, I claim that my arguments will stand against his assertions.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: Believing that we have had sufficient discussion upon this subject I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered on a division, by a vote of 50 ayes to 29 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the motion of the gentleman from Nevada, to strike out section seventeen.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 62 ayes to 47 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The section is stricken out. The Secretary will read section eighteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 18. The Legislature shall pass all laws necessary to carry out the provisions of this article.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: I move to add the following section.

MR. BARBOUR. I have a substitute for section nine.

INCOME TAX.

THE SECRETARY read the additional section offered by Mr. Dudley, as follows:

REMARKS OF MR. DUDLEY.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: I offer this additional section to this article for the reason that I believe—as I think every other gentleman who has thoroughly considered the subject must believe—that any system of taxation that is confined entirely to raising revenue by levying a per cent. upon property values, is radically wrong; that it is wrong in theory; that it would be unjust in its operations; and that it will in the future, as in the past, prove very decidedly unsatisfactory in results. It is well known to every gentleman here, that there are in this State a variety of corporations and associations that have in the past shirked their just proportions of taxation; and I believe that the only method in the world to reach them is to tax gross receipts or income. This proposition will not make it obligatory to levy such a tax, but it provides that the Legislature may levy a tax upon persons or corporations, or any class of corporations, and that this tax may be different in amounts in different cases, to meet the exigencies of the case. That is, the Legislature may discriminate. I have no fear that any Legislature will be unjust, and I believe that they will, in every instance, discriminate, and discriminate properly, for the very purpose of effecting justice. The first section of this article, as adopted by the committee, is in very nearly the words of the old Constitution—that is, that taxation shall be equal and uniform—if my memory serves me correctly. I believe that gentlemen are ready to acknowledge that the injustice and inequality of the present system of taxation grew out of the construction by the Courts of that very expression. If we adopt it in this new Constitution, with that expression unmodified and unchanged, and the Legislature are compelled to apply this unbending, unyielding rule, the same injustice will exist in the future that has existed in the past. I offer the amendment, and ask the serious consideration by the members of this committee of that matter. I do not believe that gentlemen are afraid to trust the Legislature in this matter. Let us see if there cannot be invented and adopted some system of taxation that will work more justly than the present one. There is nothing unjust in it, and to my mind it is very important.

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I hope, sir, that the proposition offered by the gentleman from Solano as an independent section will be adopted by this committee, and I have very little question but it will, as all of those who stand in opposition to the views that I have usually voted for have constantly claimed that all these matters ought to be left to the Legislature. Now, upon this proposition of taxing incomes, I agree with them to leave it to the Legislature. And, sir, I do it upon the principle that the old Constitution was not found flexible enough to do justice in the collection of the revenues of this State, and that it fixed itself upon a few items of property that could not be hid, and there derived all the revenues of this State; that it ignored the more recent characters in which property has assumed large proportions in later days, in the shape of mortgages, and in the shape of intangible property that could not be taken hold of, as land or other property that could be seen or felt, and for the purpose of reaching this class of property, and that the Legislature can reach them, and reach them in the shape of foreign corporations and foreign corporations alone, or in the shape of domestic corporations and domestic corporations alone, and in the shape of an income that cannot escape taxation as land cannot escape taxation. For the purpose of making taxation according to valuations in this State, I support the proposition of the gentleman from Solano, and I hope that it will be supported by a majority of this committee, and that it will be engrafted as an article in our Constitution. It will give that elasticity and flexibility to your Constitution that it needs in order to enable the Legislature of this State to place taxes where they should be placed.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: This amendment may be considered a little new, yet I am impressed with the opinion that it is correct in principle. Now, it is evident that the article on taxation has not been matured according to the wishes of a majority of the members of this body. Something more could be done to carry out more effectually the system. This is not a clause to be placed in the Constitution by which it is imperative upon the Legislature to levy this tax, but the matter goes before the people of the State. The members of the Legislature, coming fresh from the people, will be prepared to carry out the sentiment and wishes of the people upon this subject. The matter will undergo a fair investigation, and these members, after feeling in that way the drift of public sentiment, will call the attention of the Legislature to it, and they may act accordingly. I am impressed with the opinion that it is correct, and that income should be taxed, and that the people of this State will approve of this; but there will be a fair opportunity of investigation by the people before anything of the kind can pass. Under these impressions, it appears to me that this independent section is unobjectionable, and may be adopted by the most fastidious members of this Convention. [A sneeze and laughter.] I shall have to pronounce that one an imitation. [Laughter.]

REMARKS OF MR. WEBSTER.

MR. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of this section as it has been read. I believe, sir, that the people of this State will accept something that is tangible, something that will offer some relief in the matter of equalization of taxation. I am of the opinion, sir, that no relief whatever will come to those who are in the most need of it, from sections one and five of this report, as adopted. In my opinion it will revert right back into the old channel of assessment with each incumbrance and with each delay, without any benefit. The principles involved in sections two and five are equitable and just in theory, especially in section five, but in my opinion it will be impracticable in its operation, and it will be found, when it is put in force, that it will turn to dust and ashes, and offer no relief whatever. This principle of an income tax is one that is equitable and just, and one by which we can reach a certain class of subjects that have always wholly escaped taxation. This has been a matter that has been discussed very seriously by some members of this body for the last month, and we have arrived at the conclusion that this will be more effective in its operation than anything which can be adopted. It is right, for the reason that the ability of an individual to pay taxes is in the exact ratio of the amount of his net income. Sir, this question of taxation has grown enormously within the last twenty years. The expenditures, both State and municipal, have grown so enormously that the burdens of taxation are beginning to bear heavily upon the whole people, and they are crying for relief. I hold, sir, that with this section much relief will be offered. But the greatest relief, sir—and I wish to impress it upon the members of this Convention—is retrenchment and reform in expenditure. Sir, it is notorious that the people of this State and the people of the nation have been piling in and piling in their revenues and their resources into the public crib, year after year, while cormorants and foxes have been taking it out at the bottom. We want to stop these holes, and we want to reduce the aggregate amount of taxes which are raised. In this State, sir, last year, twelve million dollars were required for State, county, and municipal purposes; four million dollars for the State—nearly five—and eight millions for the counties. One half of that amount, almost, for the counties, and two millions and a half for the State, would have been all sufficient, if we would reduce our system to that equity and that retrenchment and reform which is required. As to the odiousness of this tax, sir, I do not conceive that it is more odious or more inquisitorial than the personal tax. What is more inquisitorial than to have the Assessor come into your house and inquire about every piece of furniture? It does not have that objection. It will offer more relief than any section which has been placed in this report, and I hope it will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: If it is in order, I move to amend the section as proposed, by inserting after the word "persons," in line two, the words "on money loaned, and on," so that it will read: "Income taxes may be assessed to and collected from persons on money loaned, and on corporations, joint stock associations, and companies resident or doing business in this State, on any one or more of them, in such case or amounts, and in such manner, as shall be prescribed by law." Then it will be limited to money loaned, and to corporations, joint stock associations, and companies resident or doing business in this State. Will the Secretary read the section as proposed by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Dudley?

THE SECRETARY read:

"Income taxes may be assessed to and collected from persons, corporations, joint stock associations, and companies resident or doing business in this State, or any one or more of them, in such case or amounts, and in such manner, as shall be prescribed by law."

MR. HOWARD. Now, will the Secretary read the amendment which I send up?

THE SECRETARY read:

"Income taxes may be assessed to and collected from persons on money loaned, and on corporations, joint stock associations, and companies resident, or doing business in this State, or any one or more of them, in such case or amounts, and such manner, as shall be prescribed by law."

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: The amendment I propose takes away the objection of its being an inquisitorial tax, because any individual has to be questioned upon the subject of money loaned. Again, sir, I do not think there will be found practically any other method of reaching money loaned, and especially money loaned by corporations. The facility for concealments are notoriously so great that unless you reach it in the shape of an income tax, you cannot reach it at all. Every English writer on political economy, since Adam Smith, has advocated an income tax. There is not an exception. Mr. Leroy and Professor Walker also advocated an income tax, as being the fairest tax that can be levied. Now, how else are you to reach money loaned; and especially how are you to reach money loaned by corporations? In the last report of the State Board of Equalization they show that the return of the banks for cash on hand was two million eighty-two thousand eight hundred and thirty dollars, which everybody knows is a ridiculously low estimate, and is not a fair return at all of the money now on hand.

Now, in eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, a little less than a year ago, the Bank Commissioners while in San Francisco summoned witnesses before them in relation to the amounts of money had and loaned by the deposit banks, and it appears from that testimony—it is published in the Chronicle of that date—a paper that has published uniformly very valuable commercial and statistical information. The Savings Union, with a capital stock of four hundred thousand dollars, had on deposit eight million five hundred thousand dollars; loaned on real estate seven million five hundred thousand. German Bank, capital stock, two hundred thousand dollars; deposits, eight million six hundred thousand six hundred dollars; Hibernia Bank, no capital stock, but a guaranteed fund of one million five hundred thousand dollars; deposits, fourteen million dollars; loans on real estate and approved bonds. French Bank, no capital stock; surplus fund, two hundred and eighty thousand dollars; deposits, six million dollars; loans on real estate and county bonds. Odd Fellows Bank, no capital stock, but a surplus fund of sixty-nine thousand dollars; deposits, five million six hundred thousand dollars; money loaned on real estate and municipal bonds. Security Bank, capital stock, three hundred thousand dollars; deposits, two million five hundred thousand dollars; aggregate deposits loaned as returned by the testimony of the officers, thirty-seven million one hundred thousand dollars. And yet it is perfectly notorious that under the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the Hibernia Bank that there was no revenue at all derived by taxation from these immense loans.

Now, then, it is perfectly immaterial whether the tax should have been paid by the banks or the depositors. It was so much money, so much property, which should have been taxed, and the failure to tax that property has added to the levy upon every other taxpayer; and therefore, I say it is, that without an income tax you never can reach these funds; you never can tax this property; because you will never ascertain with any accuracy how much they have had deposited, and how much they have loaned. It strikes me, therefore, that this amendment is a good one, especially as this matter is left to the Legislature, and they will not probably resort to it unless they find justice requires it. I see no objection to the amendment of the gentleman from Solano. On the contrary, it seems to be eminently proper and right, and a provision that should be engrafted in this Constitution.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I have only to say that I am in favor of this amendment as amended by the gentleman from Los Angeles. I think it ought to be adopted solely upon the principle that we ought to be consistent. You have provided that solvent debts shall be taxed. You have got it fixed so that you tax the poor washwoman on her passbook and you tax the banker on the same money, and now I think there should be an additional burden upon that money loaned. I think it is eminently proper. And when it is all done we will present the most inviting field for capital that can be found on the globe.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I do not see the necessity for any burlesque in this matter. It simply gives the Legislature the power to use a drag-net, such as is required in this State. It meets the ends of justice, and that is all that can be said. I hope, therefore, that it will be adopted.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: That is a very convincing speech of the gentleman from Humboldt, and corroborates my view. It is merely permissive; it is merely a suggestion to the Legislature that it can do this. I protest against loading down this organic law with provisions of this kind, which are permissive in character. Everybody knows that knows anything about it, that under our form of government, the Legislature can do everything that it is not prohibited from doing by the Constitution of the State or the United States. Why this Convention should suggest a thing to be done by the Legislature when they can do it in the absence of a prohibition in the Constitution, I do not see.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I ask whether the Legislature has not this power already? I am in favor of this idea of income taxes in certain cases, but has not the Legislature that power without asserting in the Constitution that it has such power?

MR. HOWARD. Yes; but the gentleman knows, as a member of the bar, that the fact that a provision was rejected by a direct vote of the Constitutional Convention has always been an argument against its validity in construction.

MR. EDGERTON. I can see no use in lumbering up the Constitution with sections giving the Legislature permission to do something it can do without permission.

MR. HOWARD. What is the harm?

MR. MCCALLUM. I see a good deal of harm in putting in anything that is unnecessary. I would, though, be in favor of making it mandatory, which is entirely a different thing. I do not understand that this amendment is intended to do anything towards making double taxation in case of mortgages, because we have already provided for a tax on money secured by mortgages and upon other solvent debts. Now, to tax the income from money loaned as interest, as this section provides, I would like to ask the gentleman from Los Angeles if that is not double taxation to that extent? You tax the interest received from the mortgage and tax the mortgage itself.

MR. HOWARD. The gentleman is anticipating a thing that probably never will occur. It is to be done by the Legislature, and he is anticipating that the Legislature will be guilty of the absurdity of taxing the money on mortgages and then levying an income tax upon it. That is not to be presumed at all. The proposition does not present that idea at all. If they have taxed it in another form it is not to be presumed that they will tax it in the shape of an income, unless we assume that the Legislature will be guilty of an absurdity, which we have no right to assume.

MR. MCCALLUM. Strike out the other and make it mandatory, and I would like to vote for it. We have provided for taxing the solvent debt, and I object to these two provisions.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: Experience in the eastern States during and for some years after the war has shown that an income tax was obnoxious to the people of the United States, and I hope that this proposition will be promptly voted down.

MR. McCALLUM. I will ask the gentleman if he is not aware that that income tax included the income upon occupations as well as an income on property.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: There is such a thing as going too far. There is such a thing as confiscation. I believe in taxation, but I believe in stopping where taxation ends or where confiscation begins. Now, gentlemen, we have said that mortgages are to be taxed, and we have said that solvent debts are to be taxed. If you tax solvent debts, and if you tax mortgages, and they are honestly put upon the assessment roll, and the tax is scrupulously and honestly paid, if you then go to work and tax the man's income you certainly tax him twice.

MR. AYERS. I would like to ask the gentleman in what way you are to get at that vast number of people who pay no taxes, but live on the incomes from Government bonds, except by an income tax? One fifth of the values of this country are so held.

MR. BEERSTECHER. The answer is this: I have heard it repeated and reiterated a thousand times, not only through the public press of the country, but also from the stump and on the street corners, about the bloated bondholders that hold the United States bonds, but I have never seen them in the State of California. There is probably one man in ten thousand who holds any Government bonds in this State. They are held east of the Mississippi and beyond the Atlantic Ocean. We are not to tax probabilities at all.

MR. AYERS. They exist here in large numbers—hundreds of millions—and the number will be larger in the future.

MR. BEERSTECHER. The experience under the income tax during and immediately succeeding the war was this: The man of small means, the tradesman, and the small capitalist paid that income tax, but the rich man, the large capitalist, and the monopolist, escaped the income tax, as he will inevitably escape any other tax that you may see fit to levy upon him. I tell you that the big fish are going to break your net every time, and the small fish and the medium sized fish are going to be caught by it.

MR. AYERS. We wish to reverse the rule.

MR. BEERSTECHER. You will not succeed in doing anything except loading down the Constitution. I believe in taxing the mortgages. I believe in taxing solvent debts. I believe in taxing the stock of corporations; I believe in taxing the property of corporations, but I do not believe in an income tax. An income tax is obnoxious to the people, and whether that income tax be levied upon the people by the way of a legislative enactment, or whether it be placed upon them by the Constitution, it is equally obnoxious and a stench in the nostrils of the community.

REMARKS OF MR. FREUD.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment, or rather the section, as proposed by the gentleman from Solano, will be adopted. There are two principles involved in taxation recognized by all the writers on political economy, and when we can combine these two principles, that taxation is the best. First, taxation should be in proportion to protection; and second, taxation should be in proportion to ability to pay. Now, sir, the words, as coming from my young friend from San Francisco, do not come with good grace. We have been levying taxes upon the producer; we have been levying taxes upon the business men; we have been levying taxes upon all the walks of life; but this income tax is intended to affect professional men. Now, sir, if the gentleman from San Francisco has an income of ten thousand dollars a year which he derives from his profession by his ability, by the capacity of his brain, then, sir, I say, if the Government gives him protection for that ten thousand dollars, he should be compelled to pay some ratio of it back to the Government for that protection. I know this income tax is obnoxious in some ways, but there is no tax that is not obnoxious. I know that it is inquisitorial; but, sir, other taxes necessarily involve inquisitorial measures also. I know that it has derived a great deal of its obnoxious character from the days of the war; but that was merely a temporary expedient. Furthermore, the principle involved prevails in the taxes that are levied in England and in France. I cannot understand how any gentleman can oppose this income tax. It is levied on the principle of ability to pay. Let the Legislature exempt all incomes below two thousand dollars, or some such similar measure, and it will only affect those who can well afford to pay a fair pro rata to the Government for its protection.

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I hope this proposition will not prevail. In the first place, I think every man will concede that the Legislature will have the power, if it sees proper, to levy an income tax. I see no necessity for loading down this Constitution with a direct proposition for an income tax, which, wherever it has prevailed, has been considered an odious tax, and which is more odious in the United States than anywhere else, and more odious in California than in any other part of the United States. Now, this tax, I believe, was introduced in England by Sir Robert Peel, in eighteen hundred and sixteen, and he then declared that it ought not to be a permanent tax, but could only be justified by the necessities of war.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Has it not since become a permanent source of income in England?

MR. FREEMAN. As far as my information extends, it has not.

MR. DUDLEY. It has, for years.

MR. HOWARD. I will correct the gentleman in regard to Sir Robert Peel being the author of the original income tax. The first income tax was levied in seventeen hundred and ninety-eight, and after it had been suspended was reintroduced by Sir Robert Peel.

MR. FREEMAN. I have in my hand a book published in eighteen hundred and sixty-three, by an eminent author, in which he speaks of Sir Robert Peel's scheme, and in that debate Sir Robert Peel declares that it was an obnoxious tax; that it should be reserved to time of war; that nothing but an emergency would justify its imposition. And he did not deny that it was an inquisitorial tax. He admitted that it would fall with peculiar severity on those who were determined to act honestly, and that a good deal of inconvenience must arise from inquiries that must be instituted. Up to the time of the publication of this work, an income tax had been renewed in England, but not up to that time as a permanent tax. Just before the publication of this book, it had been increased for the purpose of bearing the expenses of the great war with Russia; but as then proposed, it was only to have an existence for a period of seven years. Now, the reason I think this tax is more objectionable in California than elsewhere, is that it is a tax upon production; it is a tax upon industry; it is a tax upon enterprise; and a relief to that kind of speculation which holds property solely for the sake of a rise. We have men in this country that hold large tracts of land that are adding nothing to its industry, nothing to its enterprise, nothing to its wealth. Under this system, that class of men having no income are not taxed, and it is simply adding an additional burden to those who are active, enterprising, and industrious.

REMARKS OF MR. HUESTIS.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the adoption of this section. It will be remembered that, pending the consideration of the question of taxation of mortgages, it was argued that in case mortgages were taxed, or money secured by mortgage, that there would be no money loaned upon mortgage, and as the object of the taxation of mortgages was to secure the tax upon money, and if the arguments be true that were then urged, how, I ask, would that tax be secured in any other way than through a medium of this character? I submit that it is a question among lawyers whether the Legislature would have the power to levy an income tax unless that power was especially delegated through this Constitution.

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I hope that this committee, or the Convention, will not fail to give the power to the Legislature at any future time to impose an income tax. It is a question among the lawyers of this Convention whether, if it is not declared in this Constitution, that the Legislature has power to impose such tax—whether it would have such a power. The reasons given are that the various taxes will be enumerated in this Constitution which the Legislature shall impose, and this being left out, the argument will be that they have no right to impose any other taxes than those enumerated in the Constitution. It is necessary in this State, as well as in other States, to reach these vast incomes by taxation, which now escape. The people complain that none but the producing and the enterprising classes are paying taxes, while those who have vast incomes are not furnishing their just quota to the support of the Government. It is not fair, it is not equal, and it is not uniform. As to the obloquy which is said to have attached to this tax when it was imposed by the Federal Government, allow me to say that it was, perhaps, more due to the character and immensity of the tax which was imposed by that law than anything else. The first two years in which that tax existed the tax was three per cent. on all over five thousand dollars, and five per cent. on all over ten thousand dollars. The law was amended so as to make it five per cent. and ten per cent. The ten per cent. was certainly a tax under which any people would groan, and which would raise cries of opposition. Its obnoxiousness arose more particularly from that than from any other reason. I paid the tax when it was in force, and I do not recollect that I felt very sore over it. I found nobody who did, except that class who have immense incomes and could stand it. These people, with their power and their influence, exercised such an influence upon the organs of public opinion that they rendered the tax odious. But there never was a tax more easy upon the poor man than the income tax. It was, indeed, the friend of the poor man. Now, I say that if we would do anything in this Constitution to reach these incomes that escape taxation altogether, let us leave the power with the Legislature to impose such a tax.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section, as offered by the gentleman from Solano, will be adopted. I do not see how we can reach a large amount of property and compel it to pay taxes in this State without it. I do not believe that it is wise for this committee to attempt to digest and produce a plan for the purpose, but I believe it could be left to the Legislature. I understand very well that this tax is considered and looked upon as an odious tax, but we are not to look to that. If it is just, if there is no other means by which we can obtain the revenue that this part of the community ought to pay, then we should provide that the Legislature may impose such a tax. In the State of Massachusetts they have always imposed an income tax since the year sixteen hundred and forty-six; and I read from the report of the Commissioners, relating to taxation, made in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-five, after the famous report that has been referred to here so many times, of the New York Commission, I find that in sixteen hundred and forty-six they passed an Act, in which was this:

"And for all such persons as, by the advantage of their arts and trades, are more enabled to help bear the public charge than common laborers and workmen; as butchers, bakers, brewers, victualers, smiths, carpenters, tailors, shoemakers, joiners, barbers, millers, and masons, with all other manual persons and artists, such are to be rated for returns and gains, proportionable unto other men, for the produce of their estates."

Now, sir, it goes on to discuss this question of income tax, and I will read a very short selection here:

"However unpopular an income tax is—and we admit that it is extremely so—and however irregular and inefficient its administration—all which, in the actual fact, it would be difficult to exaggerate—it seems to us that no one can clearly understand this tax without admitting both its economy and its justice. 'The subjects of every State,' says Adam Smith, in his Wealth of Nations, 'ought to contribute to the support of the government, as nearly as possible, in proportion to their respective abilities—that is, in proportion to the revenue they enjoy under the protection of the State. In the observation or neglect of this maxim consists what is called the equality or inequality of taxation.'"

They go on to show the result of the tax in that State; and further on, in the appendix to the report, is printed the argument that was made by Dr. A. Z. Brown, who was one of the principal Assessors of the City of Cambridge, and had been for twelve years, and the result of his experience in collecting this tax. With the permission of the committee I would like to read from it:

"The total value of personal estate and income taxed to residents of said ward is four million three hundred and sixteen thousand six hundred and fifty dollars. Of this sum, one million and sixty-five thousand dollars is for incomes, being about twenty-five per cent. of the total value of personal property taxed to residents of the ward, and between one thirteenth and one fourteenth of the total valuation of the ward. Deduct twenty-eight thousand dollars for abatements from the total value of income, and there remains the sum of one million and thirty-seven thousand dollars from which taxes are to be derived. Twenty-seven persons, nearly all of them the wealthiest residents of the ward, pay a tax on income valued at five hundred and nineteen thousand four hundred dollars—that is, twenty-seven of the three hundred and two individuals in this ward taxed on incomes, pay more than the remaining two hundred and seventy-five persons; one hundred and seventy-six of the three hundred and two are taxed on four hundred and fifty-four thousand six hundred dollars, and one hundred are taxed on seventy thousand dollars.

"The latter class is composed of the less favored as to property. Repeal the law, and distribute upon property the amount taxed as income, and the share that would fall to these twenty-seven wealthy individuals would be a little less than two hundred thousand dollars, instead of five hundred and nineteen thousand dollars, as it now is."

And he goes on at the very last of the report and says this:

"For twelve years I have enforced this law precisely as stated, and have taxed income derived from all sources, irrespective of what use has been made of it, in the same manner as other property not specially exempted by law; and my observation of its operations during that time has convinced me, more than any mere theoretical reasoning could have done, that the tax is as just and as easily borne as any, and that there is no more difficulty in applying the law taxing income, than the law taxing personal property."

I am reading from the appendix of the report of the Commissioners, relating to taxation, of Massachusetts, an argument made before a legislative committee by Dr. A. Z. Brown, one of the principal Assessors of Cambridge.

Now, sir, it is said that this tax is inquisitorial. I admit it in some respects. But I beg to know what tax there is that is not? Is not the tax on personal property? I contend that this tax is no more inquisitorial than that. This tax is levied for the purpose of making each individual pay what he is able to pay, according to his ability, for the support of the Government. If we were only to make tax laws for honest people, if there were none who would attempt to evade the law, no one would complain that it was inquisitorial. Any man who is desirous or willing to pay the amount of tax that his property should bear, does not consider it inquisitorial for the Assessor to come to him and inquire in regard to his property; and I pretend to say that any man who desires to evade his taxes will consider any tax, or any effort of the Assessor to find out what property he has, inquisitorial.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard.

The amendment was rejected, on a division, by a vote of 24 ayes to 67 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the section as offered by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Dudley.

The section was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 66 ayes to 39 noes.

POLL TAX.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I now offer an additional section, to take the place of section nine.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No poll or capitation tax shall ever be imposed on any citizen of this State."

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I send up a substitute for that section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature shall provide for the levy and collection of an annual poll tax of not less than two dollars on every male inhabitant of this State over twenty-one and under sixty years of age, except paupers, insane persons, idiots, and Indians not taxed; and such taxes shall be paid into the County Hospital Fund of the county in which such taxes shall have been paid."

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: The equity, the propriety, the justice of the poll tax, it would seem, is too apparent for discussion, or argument, or serious consideration. The idea that the whole burden of government should rest exclusively on property, as suggested, is wrong in principle. Let us, Mr. Chairman, examine the philosophy of taxation. Why does the Government take from the citizen a certain amount of money annually? What for? What is the equivalent? If there is no equivalent, then it is robbery. But there is an equivalent. That equivalent is protection. Is there nothing but property protected? If not, then it would be right to say that property should bear the whole burden of government. For property is protected. But persons are protected, and things are protected, evidences of indebtedness, if you please, bonds, mortgages, and notes of any kind, and choses in action are protected in law, and therefore ought to contribute to the support of the Government for that protection which they receive. Now, this being the case, I hold that it is self-evident, that it is conclusive, that persons owe to the Government an equivalent for the protection that they receive. Why? I demand to know why should not the individual, the citizen, the mere inhabitant over twenty-one years of age contribute two dollars per annum for the protection that he receives from the Government? In the substitute I offer, Mr. Chairman, this tax of two dollars per annum is proposed to be devoted to the Hospital Fund, to provide a home for those who have not been provident in providing for themselves; a home in sickness, infirmity, and old age. I am, Mr. Chairman, utterly at a loss to grapple with the theory that persons owe nothing to the Government. It is so utterly unfounded, that I am confounded at the assertion of the theory that the men who are protected by the Government; who, in the protection of their property or persons, impose upon the Government a large proportion of its expenditure, owe nothing to that Government. Why, Mr. Chairman, it is the very climax of absurdity to assert any such thing. Is it not a fact that our Courts are largely occupied in matters and things in connection with the administration of justice, growing out of that obligation that the Government owes to the citizen for the protection of his person?

Is it not a fact, Mr. Chairman, that those who are so imprudent as not to have provided for themselves in the event of infirmity, sickness, and old age, are provided for? Is it not a fact that every county in the State has its county hospital that is supported at the expense of the thrifty, the industrious, and the energetic, and those who provided not only for themselves, but for those who were not sufficiently prudent to provide for themselves? Now, I ask, in the name of reason, in the name of justice, in the name of common sense, why these men who, while they are able to, are producing wealth, and make two, three, or five hundred dollars a year, and squandering it, why they should not contribute two dollars a year to the Hospital Fund, when they are liable to become a charge upon public charity? It seems to me there can be no objection—no real objection—raised to this, except it be based upon the legal proposition that persons, as such, owe no obligation to the Government that protects them. Now, if gentlemen will get up here and assert this proposition, we will know where to meet them; but I apprehend that no gentleman upon this floor is prepared to put himself in the position of asserting that the individual, the citizen, as such, owes nothing to the Government that protects his life, protects his person, and protects his interests. Now, Mr. Chairman, if this position is assumed, that property alone—property, as such—must of necessity bear all the burdens of Government, then it seems to me that our action has been wrong in assuming that things, that choses in action, owe a certain support to the Government, and that we have a right to treat them as property, because the Government protects them. It seems to me that if this position be assumed successfully, that property alone must sustain the Government, that then our action has been wholly wrong, and that we should go back and undo our action, and say that evidences of indebtedness, bonds, mortgages, and choses in action, not being corporal property, should not be compelled to pay anything for the support of the Government.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's ten minutes has expired.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee now rise, and report to the Convention that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, have made some amendments thereto, and ask to be discharged from further consideration of that report.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 53 ayes to 43 noes.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, have made amendments thereto, and report the same back to the Convention, with the recommendation that it be adopted.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: I move that four hundred and eighty copies of the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, with the amendments adopted in Committee of the Whole, be printed.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. President: I would like it if the gentleman from Sacramento would accept an amendment to his motion. It is in respect to section two, and in order that the members of this Convention may have section two, as proposed, without any ambiguity, before them, I wish to propose in the Convention, at the proper time, a slight amendment, which is covered by this proposition which I now send up. The idea is to have this printed with this report, so that it will be laid on the desks of the members, and they can have an opportunity to examine it critically and vote upon it intelligently in Convention.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Laws shall be passed taxing all moneys, credits secured by mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligations affecting property, and credits not so secured, investments in bonds, franchises, and all other property, real, personal, or mixed, according to their true value in money, except as hereafter provided; but the Legislature may authorize the deduction of debts due to bona fide residents of this State from credits, except credits secured by mortgage, deed of trust, contract, or other obligation affecting property; growing crops and such property as may be used exclusively for public schools, and such as may belong to the United States, this State, any county, or municipal corporation within this State, shall be exempt from taxation."

MR. EDGERTON. I accept the amendment.

THE PRESIDENT. This amendment is not before the Convention. It must be offered at some other time. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton.

The motion prevailed.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President. I ask leave of absence for the remainder of the week for Mr. McStay, the Journal Clerk.

THE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, leave of absence will be granted.

The Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M. President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

THE PRESIDENT. The next report on file is the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department.

Following is the proposed article:

ARTICLE VI.—JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

SECTION 1. The judicial power of the State shall be vested in the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment, in a Supreme Court, Superior Courts, Justices of the Peace, and such inferior Courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, or city and county.

SEC. 2. The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and six Associate Justices. The Court may sit in departments and in bank, and shall always be open for the transaction of business. There shall be two departments, denominated respectively Department One and Department Two. The Chief Justice shall assign three of the Associate Justices to each department, and such assignment may be changed by him from time to time. The Associate Justices shall be competent to sit in either department, and may interchange with each other by agreement among themselves or as ordered by the Chief Justice. Each of the departments shall have the power to hear and determine causes and all questions arising therein, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained in relation to the Court in bank. The presence of three Justices shall be necessary to transact any business in either of the departments, except such as may be done at Chambers, and the concurrence of three Justices shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment. The Chief Justice shall apportion the business to the departments, and may, in his discretion, order any cause pending before the Court to be heard and decided by the Court in bank. The order may be made before or after judgment pronounced by a department; but where a cause has been allotted to one of the departments, and a judgment pronounced thereon, the order must be made within thirty days after such judgment, and concurred in by two Associate Justices, and if so made it shall have the effect to vacate and set aside the judgment. If the order be not made within the time above limited, the judgment shall be final. No judgment by a department shall become final until the expiration of the period of thirty days aforesaid, unless approved by the Chief Justice in writing, with the concurrence of two Associate Justices. The Chief Justice may convene the Court in bank at any time, and shall be the presiding Justice of the Court when so convened. The concurrence of four Justices present at the argument shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment in bank; but if four Justices, so present, do not concur in a judgment, then all the Justices qualified to sit in the cause shall hear the argument; but to render a judgment a concurrence of four Justices shall be necessary. In the determination of causes, all decisions of the Court in bank or in departments shall be given in writing, and the grounds of the decision shall be stated. The Chief Justice may sit in either department, and shall preside when so sitting, but the Justices assigned to each department shall elect one of their number as a presiding Justice. All sessions of the Court, whether in bank or in departments, shall be held at the capital of the State. In case of the absence of the Chief Justice from the place at which the Court is held, or his inability to act, the Associate Justices shall select one of their own number to perform the duties and exercise the powers of the Chief Justice during such absence or inability to act.

SEC. 3. The Chief Justice and the Associate Justices shall be elected by the qualified electors of the State at large, at the general State elections, at the times and places that State officers are elected; and the term of office shall be twelve years, from and after the first Monday of January next succeeding their election; provided, that the six Associate Justices elected at the first election shall, at their first meeting, so classify themselves, by lot, that two of them shall go out of office at the end of four years, two of them at the end of eight years, and two of them at the end of twelve years, and an entry of such classification shall be made in the minutes of the Court in bank, signed by them, and a duplicate thereof shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State. If a vacancy occur in the office of a Justice, the Governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a Justice to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the Justice so elected shall hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term. The first election of the Justices shall be at the first general election after the adoption and ratification of this Constitution.

SEC. 4. The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity; also in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real estate, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, or in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars; also in cases of forcible entry and detainer, and in all such probate matters as may be provided by law; also in all criminal cases amounting to felony on questions of law alone. The Court shall also have power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, and habeas corpus, and also all writs necessary or proper to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. Each of the Justices shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus to any part of the State, upon petition by or on behalf of any person held in actual custody, and may make such writs returnable before himself or the Supreme Court, or before any Superior Court in the State, or before any Judge thereof.

SEC. 5. The Superior Courts shall have original jurisdiction in all cases in equity, and in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real property, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, and in all other cases in which the demand, exclusive of interest or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars, and in all criminal cases amounting to felony, and cases of misdemeanor not otherwise provided for; also in actions of forcible entry and detainer, of proceedings in insolvency, of actions to prevent or abate a nuisance; also of all matters of probate, and also of divorce and for annulment of marriage, and all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for. And said Courts shall have the power of naturalization, and to issue papers therefor. They shall have appellate jurisdiction in such cases arising in Justices' and other inferior Courts in their respective counties as may be prescribed by law. Said Courts shall be always open (legal holidays and non-judicial days excepted), and their original jurisdiction shall extend to all parts of the State. Said Courts, and their Judges, shall have power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, quo warranto, and habeas corpus, on petition by, or on behalf of any person in actual custody, in their respective counties.

SEC. 6. There shall be in each of the organized counties, or cities and counties, of the State, a Superior Court, for each of which at least one Judge shall be elected by the qualified electors of the county, or city and county, at the general State election; provided, that in the City and County of San Francisco there shall be elected twelve Judges of the Superior Court, any one or more of whom may hold Court. There may be as many sessions of said Court, at the same time, as there are Judges thereof. The said Judges shall choose from their own number a presiding Judge, who may be removed at their pleasure. He shall distribute the business of the Court among the Judges thereof, and prescribe the order of business. The judgments, orders, and proceedings of any session of the Superior Court, held by any one or more of the Judges of said Courts, respectively, shall be equally effectual as if all the Judges of said respective Courts presided at such session. In each of the Counties of Sacramento, Los Angeles, and Alameda, there shall be elected two such Judges. The term of office of Judges of the Superior Courts shall be six years, from and after the first Monday of January next succeeding their election; provided, that the twelve Judges of the Superior Court, elected in the City and County of San Francisco at the first election held under this Constitution, shall, at their first meeting, so classify themselves, by lot, that four of them shall go out of office at the end of two years, and four of them shall go out of office at the end of four years, and four of them shall go out of office at the end of six years, and an entry of such classification shall be made in the minutes of the Court, signed by them, and a duplicate thereof filed in the office of the Secretary of State. The first election of Judges of the Superior Courts shall take place at the first general election held after the adoption and ratification of this Constitution. If a vacancy occur in the office of Judge of a Superior Court, the Governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a Judge to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the Judge so elected shall hold office for the remainder of the unexpired term.

SEC. 7. In any county, or city and county, other than the City and County of San Francisco, in which there shall be more than one Judge of the Superior Court, the Judges of such Court may hold as many sessions of said Court, at the same time, as there are Judges thereof, and shall apportion the business among themselves as equally as may be.

SEC. 8. A Judge of any Superior Court may hold a Superior Court in any county, at the request of a Judge of the Superior Court thereof, and upon the request of the Governor it shall be his duty so to do.

SEC. 9. The Legislature shall have no power to grant leave of absence to any judicial officer; and any such officer who shall absent himself from the State for more than sixty consecutive days shall be deemed to have forfeited his office. The Legislature of the State may at any time, two thirds of the members of the Senate and two thirds of the members of the Assembly voting therefor, increase or diminish the number of Judges of the Superior Court in any county, or city and county, in the State; provided, that no such reduction shall affect any Judge who has been elected.

SEC. 10. Justices of the Supreme Court, and Judges of the Superior Courts, may be removed by concurrent resolution of both houses of the Legislature, adopted by a two-third vote of each house. All other judicial officers, except Justices of the Peace, may be removed by the Senate on the recommendation of the Governor; but no removal shall be made by virtue of this section unless the cause thereof be entered on the Journal, or unless the party complained of has been served with a copy of the complaint against him, and shall have had an opportunity of being heard in his defense. On the question of removal, the ayes and noes shall be entered on the Journal.

SEC. 11. There shall be one Justice of the Peace elected in each township in the State, and the Legislature shall determine the number of Justices of the Peace to be elected in each incorporated city and town, or city and county, and shall fix by law the powers, duties, and responsibilities of Justices of the Peace; provided, such powers shall not in any case trench upon the jurisdiction of the several Courts of record, except that said Justices shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the Superior Courts in cases of forcible entry and detainer, where the rental value does not exceed twenty-five dollars per month, and where the whole amount of damages claimed does not exceed two hundred dollars.

SEC. 12. The Supreme Court, the Superior Courts, and such other Courts as the Legislature shall prescribe, shall be Courts of record.

SEC. 13. The Legislature shall fix by law the jurisdiction of any inferior Courts which may be established in pursuance of section one of this article, and shall fix by law the powers, duties, and responsibilities of the Judges thereof.

SEC. 14. The Legislature shall provide for the election of a Clerk of the Supreme Court, County Clerks, District Attorneys, Sheriffs, and other necessary officers, and shall fix by law their duties and compensation. County Clerks shall be ex officio Clerks of the Courts of record in and for their respective counties, or cities and counties. The Legislature may also provide for the appointment by the several Superior Courts of one or more Commissioners in their respective counties, or cities and counties, with authority to perform Chamber business of the Judges of the Superior Courts, to take depositions, and perform such other business connected with the administration of justice as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 15. No judicial officer, except Justices of the Peace and Court Commissioners, shall receive to his own use any fees or perquisites of office.

SEC. 16. The Legislature shall provide for the speedy publication of such opinions of the Supreme Court as it may deem expedient, and all opinions shall be free for publication by any person.

SEC. 17. The Justices of the Supreme Court and Judges of the Superior Courts shall severally, at stated times during their continuance in office, receive from the State treasury, for their services, a compensation which shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected. During the term of the first Judges elected under this Constitution, the annual salaries of the Justices of the Supreme Court shall be six thousand dollars each. The Superior Judges shall be divided into four classes; those of the City and County of San Francisco, and of the Counties of Alameda, San Joaquin, Los Angeles, Santa Clara, Sacramento, and Sonoma, shall constitute the first class, and shall each receive an annual salary of five thousand dollars, payable quarterly; those of the Counties of Butte, El Dorado, Amador, Colusa, Contra Costa, Humboldt, Mendocino, Monterey, Napa, Nevada, Placer, Santa Cruz, Solano, Tulare, Yolo, Kern, Yuba, and San Bernardino, shall constitute the second class, and shall receive an annual salary of four thousand dollars each, payable quarterly; those of the Counties of Calaveras, Fresno, Lake, Marin, Merced, Plumas, San Benito, San Diego, San Luis Obispo, San Mateo, Santa Barbara, Sierra, Shasta, Siskiyou, Stanislaus, Sutter, Tehama, Tuolumne, and Ventura, shall constitute the third class, and receive an annual salary of three thousand dollars each, payable quarterly; and those of all other counties in the State, not above enumerated, shall constitute the fourth class, and receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars each, payable quarterly.

SEC. 18. The Justices of the Supreme Court, and the Judges of the Superior Courts, shall be ineligible to any other office than a judicial office during the term for which they shall have been elected.

SEC. 19. Judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law.

SEC. 20. The style of all process shall be, "The People of the State of California," and all prosecutions shall be conducted in their name and by their authority.

SEC. 21. The Justices shall appoint a Reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court, who shall hold his office and be removable at their pleasure. He shall receive an annual salary of twenty-five hundred dollars, payable quarterly.

SEC. 22. The Judges and Justices of the Peace shall not practice law in any Court of the State during their continuance in office.

SEC. 23. A Grand Jury shall be composed of twelve jurors, and a concurrence of nine shall be necessary to the making of a presentment, or the finding of an indictment.

SEC. 24. No one shall be eligible to the office of Justice of the Supreme Court unless he be at least thirty-five years of age, and shall have been admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the State; and no one shall be eligible to the office of Judge of the Superior Court unless he be at least thirty years of age, and shall have been admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the State.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section one.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 1. The judicial power of the State shall be vested in the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, in a Supreme Court, Superior Courts, Justices of the Peace, and such inferior Courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, or city and county.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there is no amendment to section one, the Secretary will read section two.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 2. The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and six Associate Justices. The Court may sit in departments and in bank, and shall always be open for the transaction of business. There shall be two departments, denominated, respectively, Department One and Department Two. The Chief Justice shall assign three of the Associate Justices to each department, and such assignment may be changed by him from time to time. The Associate Justices shall be competent to sit in either department, and may interchange with each other by agreement among themselves or as ordered by the Chief Justice. Each of the departments shall have the power to hear and determine causes and all questions arising therein, subject to the provisions hereinafter contained in relation to the Court in bank. The presence of three Justices shall be necessary to transact any business in either of the departments, except such as may be done at Chambers, and the concurrence of three Justices shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment. The Chief Justice shall apportion the business to the departments, and may, in his discretion, order any cause pending before the Court to be heard and decided by the Court in bank. The order may be made before or after judgment pronounced by a department; but where a cause has been allotted to one of the departments, and a judgment pronounced thereon, the order must be made within thirty days after such judgment, and concurred in by two Associate Justices, and if so made it shall have the effect to vacate and set aside the judgment. If the order be not made within the time above limited, the judgment shall be final. No judgment by a department shall become final until the expiration of the period of thirty days aforesaid, unless approved by the Chief Justice, in writing, with the concurrence of two Associate Justices. The Chief Justice may convene the Court in bank at any time, and shall be the presiding Justice of the Court when so convened. The concurrence of four Justices present at the argument shall be necessary to pronounce a judgment in bank; but if four Justices, so present, do not concur in a judgment, then all the Justices qualified to sit in the cause shall hear the argument; but to render a judgment a concurrence of four Judges shall be necessary. In the determination of causes, all decisions of the Court in bank or in departments shall be given in writing, and the grounds of the decision shall be stated. The Chief Justice may sit in either department, and shall preside when so sitting, but the Justices assigned to each department shall elect one of their number as presiding Justice. All sessions of the Court, whether in bank or in departments, shall be held at the Capital of the State. In case of the absence of the Chief Justice from the place at which the Court is held, or his inability to act, the Associate Justices shall select one of their own number to perform the duties and exercise the powers of the Chief Justice during such absence or inability to act.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend.

THE SECRETARY read:

"In line thirty-seven, after the word 'State,' insert, 'in Los Angeles and such other places as the Legislature may provide.'"

MR. CROUCH. I move an amendment to the section, or a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out section two, and insert the following:

"SEC. 2. The Supreme Court shall consist of a Chief Justice and two Associate Justices. The presence of two Justices shall be necessary for the transaction of business, except such business as may be done in Chambers, and the concurrence of two Justices shall be necessary to pronounce judgment."

MR. CROUCH. Mr. Chairman: That is a copy of the section as it now stands in the present Constitution, except that it substitutes three instead of five. I think a Court of three men is sufficient to transact all the business, therefore I hope the amendment will be adopted.

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the Convention: I desire to state briefly the reasons which have impelled the majority of the Committee on Judiciary to recommend section two for adoption by the Convention as the new judicial system, as far as the Supreme Court is concerned. The Supreme Court, as at present constituted, consists of a Chief Justice and four Associate Justices. Under section two of the old Constitution, which is covered by the amendment offered by the gentleman from Napa, the Supreme Court has been unable to fully dispatch the business before it. I have no strictures to pass upon that Court as constituted. I think it may be said, without fear of contradiction, that the Justices of that Court have worked as industriously as any body of men could have worked in their places. The business of the Supreme Court of the State of California is, I think, larger than that of any Supreme Court in the American Union; larger than the Supreme Court of any other State. The report made to the Convention by the Clerk of the Supreme Court shows that during the four years past there have been brought and filed in that Court some two thousand and sixty-seven cases, making an immense calendar for that period of time. The Supreme Court has decided, during that time, some two thousand two hundred and forty-two cases. Of course, it decided more cases than were filed during that period, the excess being caused by the old cases on file previous to their going into office. We have thus an average of five hundred and sixty-six and one half cases a year decided by the present Supreme Court during the last four years, which is an almost incredible amount of labor. I do not think it has been surpassed, or can be surpassed, anywhere. But in order to enable the Court to accomplish that work, it had to decide five hundred and fifty-nine cases without giving any opinion in writing. If it is proper and right that a Court of last resort should deliver opinions in writing, giving the reasons for its decisions, we have it demonstrated that the Court, as heretofore constituted and organized, could not possibly perform its duties, for it could not have rendered that number of decisions and have delivered written opinions upon them. The importance of requiring the Court to give written opinions cannot be overrated. They not only become the settled law of the State, and are precedents for subsequent cases, but in many causes where the litigation is not ended by the decision of the Supreme Court, and new trials are consequent upon a reversal, the decision of the Supreme Court should be given in writing, and reasons assigned, for they are instructions to the Court below, and are the controlling rule in the subsequent litigation.

Any gentleman who has practiced in the Supreme Court knows that cases have been sent back for new trial, without written opinions, and the Courts below have been unable to ascertain the full views of the appellate Court upon the case. Four or five points may be presented. The Supreme Court may reverse the case, and send it back for a new trial, upon some one of these points, but upon which point the lawyers are unable to say—whether on five points or on one. The result is that the new trial in the Court below takes place without any light from above, and the case may be appealed a second time, and again reversed upon some one of the same points, and so, ad infinitum; whereas, if a written opinion were rendered, it might end the case without a second appeal. That practice shows the inefficiency of any system where written opinions are not required, and everywhere throughout the United States the Courts are required to deliver written opinions, stating the grounds of the decision, as we have provided in this section. Undoubtedly it will insure a careful examination of the cases, and result in well considered opinions, because they must come before the jurists of the country and be subjected to the severest criticism. I think every lawyer will agree with me, that in every case there should be an opinion in writing. It tends to purity and honesty in the administration of justice. But, as the Supreme Court is now constituted, it is unable to dispose of the cases annually coming before it and render written decisions, for no five men on the face of the earth can deliberately determine five hundred and sixty cases a year, and render written opinions on them, commensurate with the importance and character of the cases brought in this Court. The object, then, of the committee, was to increase the power of the Supreme Court, not simply in point of numbers, but to increase its effective working power; and the question was simply this: How shall we enable the Court to perform its duties? how shall we increase its effective working power? Now, to increase the number of Judges does not, in itself, increase, to any great extent, the working power of the Court, because, instead of five Judges to canvass a case, and read the transcript and briefs, we would have seven men to do the same work, which would rather retard than dispatch business. We have, therefore, after mature consideration and much thought over the matter, concluded to adopt the plan of increasing the number of Judges from five to seven, and authorizing the Court to sit in two departments at the State Capital.

The State has provided Court-rooms and a library which belongs to the Court. In this way we secure a Court of almost twice the working capacity of the old Court, as the ordinary current of cases may easily be decided by a department of three Judges, and as we will have two departments sitting at the same time in different chambers, it will enable the Court to dispatch nearly twice as much business. There is also a power here enabling the Court to sit in bank in special cases. Great and important cases would, of course, be heard before the full bench. Constitutional questions would be so heard and decided. The great object has been to secure an increased working capacity in the Court. The committee, therefore, recommends this system as one which will enable the Court to dispatch the current business, and also write opinions on all of the cases. I call attention to the telegrams sent by the Associated Press to the newspapers on this coast concerning the Supreme Court of the United States. Whatever objection may be made on the score of the unreliability of such dispatches on political subjects, I suppose there is no motive for correspondents to misrepresent matters of this kind. According to this report, there are on the docket of the Supreme Court of the United States about one thousand cases, and the Court cannot dispose of more than about two hundred and sixty cases a year. The Supreme Court of the United States, composed of nine Judges—effective, active, working men—are unable to dispose of more than two hundred and sixty cases a year, while the Supreme Court of this State has disposed of five hundred and sixty cases a year. But they were only enabled to do that, as I said before, by omitting written opinions; whereas the Supreme Court of the United States universally delivers written opinions, giving the reasons in full. Nor can it be said that their cases are more important than ours. Of course, there are questions of great national importance decided there; but in the State of California some of the most important questions that have ever been considered in the United States have arisen, not only in regard to the principles involved, but from the magnitude of property in litigation. This correspondent of the Associated Press to which I have referred, goes on to say, after stating that the Court can only dispose of about two hundred and sixty cases a year, that the business of the Court is nearly three years behind, there being cases on the docket brought in eighteen hundred and seventy-six. This, he says, induced the President to make the recommendation concerning the creation of new Circuit Judges, limiting jurisdiction to cases involving an amount not less than ten thousand dollars, instead of five thousand dollars, the present limit.

This morning I went to the Clerk's office and obtained the present calendar of our Supreme Court [showing the calendar] to be held in San Francisco. Gentlemen will understand that this is merely the San Francisco calendar. As at present constituted the Supreme Court, under an Act of the Legislature, sits at Sacramento, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, and the calendars are made up with reference to the localities named, so that this book does not include the Sacramento and Los Angeles cases. Here is a volume containing three hundred cases in the San Francisco calendar alone. In most of these cases the transcripts were filed in eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, a few of them in eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, and but one, I think, in eighteen hundred and seventy-six—so there are no old cases. They are the present and current litigation. Now, if the Supreme Court of the United States, with nine Judges, can only dispose of two hundred and sixty cases a year, how is it to be expected that the Supreme Court of California will decide the cases which are on the calendar, when in this one single division, the San Francisco district, there are three hundred cases? The result, of course, is that all these cases will not be reached. The Court will sit in San Francisco and hear some of these cases, and the rest must go over to the next San Francisco term. I know by experience, and every lawyer practicing in that Court will affirm what I say, that only a part of these cases will be heard this year. The Court will then go to Los Angeles. They will hear a number of cases there, but not all on that calendar, and then come to Sacramento. In the meantime, the large majority of these cases will not be disposed of. Now, I say it is impossible for the Court to keep up with the business; it is impossible for any five men to perform the labor, under the system prevailing heretofore, and I look upon that as so fixed a fact that we are now called upon to devise a plan by which the Court will be enabled to keep pace with the business. It is very desirable that this should be done. It is in the interest of the citizens of this State. It is their right, when they are compelled to resort to the Courts, to have their cases speedily adjudicated and determined. I have known these long delays to work an absolute denial of justice. I do not believe you can accomplish any valuable reform unless you change the system, and allow the Court to sit in departments. The Chief Justice will have the general supervision of the business of the Court, and, of course, will be constantly engaged assigning cases to the departments and reviewing decisions on petitions for rehearing. By this system we have practically two Courts. The Court sitting in departments can discharge almost twice the business. I believe, under this system, the Court will be enabled to clear the calendar every year, and, at the same time, deliver written decisions in each case. Of course, there will always be some cases disposed of without written opinions. Sometimes a case goes off on some formal motion, or is dismissed on a technical question of practice. But I am speaking generally, of cases argued and submitted upon their merits, and there the decision is of little account as settling the law, unless the Court gives its reasons for the decision in writing. I would say, in addition, that this particular section has been canvassed by a great many lawyers, and, with but few exceptions, it has received the approval of everybody with whom I have conversed. In San Francisco, the bar held a meeting upon this subject, and I think some eighty of the leading members of the bar indorsed this system, and undoubtedly their opinions are entitled to some weight in such matters as this, when we take into consideration that San Francisco has about one third of the business which comes before this Court. That body of lawyers has been in constant attendance before the Supreme Court, and understands the practical working of the old system, and has a right to speak authoritatively upon this subject; and the opinions of that body, I repeat, are entitled to great respect. They could certainly have no improper or selfish motives for recommending this plan. They recommend it only because it accords with their judgment, because they well know that a Court organized upon the present basis is entirely unable to dispose of cases upon its calendar in any one year. It is hardly worth while for this Convention to go back again to the old system, under section two of the old Constitution, because it is perfectly inefficient and inadequate to our wants, and its antiquity alone recommends it.

In regard to the proposed amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, I will say this: that a divided Court—a Court compelled to sit in three places—will not be so efficient or dispatch as much business. It is a very pleasant thing for us in San Francisco to have a Supreme Court at our very doors. We certainly have a much greater right to sessions of the Court at San Francisco than the people of Los Angeles have to sessions in their county, for we have one third of all the business, while Los Angeles has not one third as much business as we have. We had some seven hundred and thirty cases during the period of time mentioned, while Los Angeles during that four years had only one hundred and fifty cases.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. There were eighty cases in Los Angeles and sixty here (at Sacramento), last term.

MR. WILSON. It is very convenient for me and other gentlemen in San Francisco, to sit in our offices until the Clerk informs us that our cases are about to be called, so that we lose no time in waiting, but go directly to the Court-room and argue our cases. But notwithstanding that great advantage which results to the bar of that city from the sitting in San Francisco, it has expressed a willingness to abandon and give up that advantage, and make the sacrifice for the sake of a system that will insure a more speedy dispatch of business; and the gentleman from Los Angeles should be willing to make the same sacrifice for the same purpose. By this proposed system we will have two departments, and to compel the Court to sit in San Francisco and other places, would at once destroy its efficiency, for it will consume a great deal of its time in traveling back and forth. It must keep records in two or three places; the Clerk will have to keep a Clerk's office in each place; the Court will be compelled to have deputies in one place and deputies in another. There must be several different Court-rooms, two here and two in Los Angeles, besides the Clerk's office, all of which will materially increase the expense. The Court cannot always be in session, on account of the time consumed in traveling. Besides that, the State has its own library which is in the State Capitol here, and that is a very strong argument in favor of having the Court sit in Sacramento alone. In Los Angeles they will have no such library. The Court will be compelled to depend upon the private libraries of the members of the Los Angeles bar.

MR. AYERS. We intend to give them a library.

MR. WILSON. You intend to give them a library? How much does the gentleman suppose such a library as the Supreme Court needs would cost? I think my learned friend is very competent authority on matters relating to printing, but he probably knows very little about the cost of law books.

MR. AYERS. I wanted the Seventh of Howard out of this library and was not able to get it.

MR. WILSON. I suppose you will find twenty of them here.

MR. EDGERTON. The gentleman ought to find it on the desk of his colleague, General Howard, who used it extensively in his Chinese speech.

MR. HOWARD. The last time I saw it, Mr. Edgerton had it.

MR. WILSON. The majority of the committee were in favor of having the Court sit at the capital alone. They had in view the efficiency of the Court, the conveniences there, and the library, which is a very important matter to the Supreme Court. Now, there are railroad facilities all over this State; facilities for traveling are increasing all the time; and although some inconveniences may arise to some gentlemen, yet the holding of Court in Los Angeles will not remove these inconveniences altogether. Of course it is inconvenient for gentlemen in San Francisco, or Oakland, or San José, to come to the capital. These inconveniences affect all who do not live at the State capital. But we must endure these inconveniences in order to insure efficiency and enable the Court to dispatch the business and keep the calendar clear.

SPEECH OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I hope that this Convention will favorably entertain the amendment offered by my colleague, General Howard. I may not be competent to pass upon the merits of this scheme as a technical scheme, but I certainly am competent to pass upon that portion of it which takes away the sessions of the Supreme Court from Los Angeles, and places them solely at the capital. And I say, sir, that it would be an act of injustice, now that you have established sessions of the Supreme Court there, after the people there have gone to the expense of erecting a fine Court-room for the accommodation of the Court. We have intended, and do intend, as I have said, to furnish a library, so that the objection of the gentleman on that score will be removed. I believe Los Angeles is as well provided with law books as any city of its size in the State, and there will be no difficulty with regard to books of reference. Now, sir, it is not a parallel case to cite the City of San Francisco, as regards the Supreme Court sitting in the capital, and Los Angeles. Our city is over five hundred miles from this capital. It is very expensive to litigants to come here to attend to their cases. They must send a lawyer here to tend to their cases, and in many cases it works a denial of justice. They must be satisfied with the decisions of the lower Courts, unless their purses are long. Now, sir, I hold in my hand a memorial signed by all the members of the bar of Los Angeles, over forty members, in which they ask that the Supreme Court be allowed to hold its sessions in Los Angeles, as it does now. I shall hand this to the Clerk, so that members can see it.

Now, sir, at the last session of the Supreme Court at Los Angeles, there were seventy-two cases before that Court, and the gentleman from San Francisco computed that there were two hundred cases a year, so Los Angeles is an important factor in bringing business to San Francisco.

MR. WILSON. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

MR. AYERS. No, sir. My reason simply is, that I have not the time; I have some more remarks to make. It is not out of a lack of courtesy that I decline. Now, sir, I can see no good reason for the opposition to this amendment from gentlemen of the legal profession, unless it be that, in a great many cases, it is a matter of interest to them. I presume a great many country lawyers have to send their briefs to lawyers here, and they profit by that kind of business, but that is not a reason that should have any weight with this Convention. I ask it as a matter of justice, that this Convention allow the sessions of the Supreme Court to continue at Los Angeles. I have already shown on this floor that our section of the State is very inadequately represented in the Legislature. I hope you will not put a bond upon the Supreme Court, and that you will not so far forget our claims upon you as to take it away from us. Now, Mr. Wilson, I will answer your question.

MR. WILSON. The seventy-two cases you spoke of are not all from Los Angeles County; the district embraces other counties north of it?

MR. AYERS. Yes, sir, it embraces the whole district, including Kern and Inyo, and the whole number of cases was seventy-two in the seven counties, while the district of which Sacramento is the center, only had forty-three cases. We have two terms, which would give us one hundred and forty cases a year.

MR. WILSON. In San Francisco there were six hundred cases.

MR. AYERS. The discrepancy is not so great as you make it out. Now, I hope this Convention will do an act of simple justice, and allow the Supreme Court to continue to sit in Los Angeles. The change is not demanded by the people of this State I do not believe that any large number of voters would ask for the change.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: As a member of the committee which made this report, it is proper for me to say that I am in favor of the report, with the addition of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard. However, in considering the report, the amendment has nothing at all to do with it in the first instance. The report is here for consideration, and if we desire to amend it we can do so. But the amendment in nowise affects the report. The new system as sought to be provided by section two adds two more Judges, and provides that the Judges can sit and do business in two departments, as has already been stated by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson. It is virtually giving us two Supreme Courts, or doubling the capacity of the Court. Now, although the gentleman from San Francisco defends this system, and says it has met the indorsement of the committee, and the indorsement of the bar of San Francisco and of the State, he says there is an objection to the Court going to Los Angeles, because there would be difficulty about having one section sitting at Sacramento and the other at Los Angeles. It seems to me this difficulty can be easily overcome. The Court to-day sits in San Francisco, Sacramento, and Los Angeles. The Court is composed of five Judges to-day. If you add two more Judges to the number, you have a new Court as recommended by the committee. It is not necessary that one division of the Court should proceed to Los Angeles and the other remain in Sacramento. Let the whole Court go there. What is the objection to the people south of San Francisco having Court at their very doors? Delay is a denial of justice. The Legislature has seen the propriety of allowing them to have sessions of the Supreme Court, and by increasing the number you do not increase the expense but a trifle, and there is no objection at all to the Supreme Court going to Los Angeles and San Francisco, and having sessions in Sacramento. For my part, sir, I hope to see the day when neither the Legislature nor the Court will sit in Sacramento, for it is the most unhealthy spot in the State of California. I think the river will drown out this city, in spite of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Edgerton.

MR. REED. Allow me to inform the gentleman that there is not a city in the world of the size, whose death rate is less than that of Sacramento.

MR. BEERSTECHER. It is a good place to leave.

MR. EDGERTON. You have only to look at the gentleman himself, to see a complete refutation of the charge he has made. He has gained fifty pounds this Winter.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I took occasion to canvass this matter with two of the present Judges of the Supreme Court. I had a conversation with one of them, and asked him to tell me whether there was any objection to having the Supreme Court of this State sit in three different places, and he said there was not only no objection, but that it was an advantage, not only to the people, but to the Court. He said the Judges of the Court, by being obliged to sit in one place, could not accomplish the amount of work they could if allowed to sit in two or three different places; that it was an advantage to the Court, and an advantage to the people of this State, were the words of Chief Justice Wallace to me, and the gentleman has no objections to the statements being made public. The amendment says, in the capital of the State, and in such other places as the Legislature may direct. There is no analogy between the State of California and other States of the Union. Other States are no larger than some of the counties of this State. The idea of asking the people of Baltimore to go to Boston to have their cases heard, would be absurd, and yet we ask these people to go five hundred miles to have their cases heard. We are not making a Constitution for to-day, or to-morrow, or next year only. If this Constitution is adopted it will continue for years, and the southern part of this State will grow, and continue to grow, until it has many times the wealth and population that it now has, and they should not be debarred, by a constitutional provision, from having a Court at their doors. They have the Court to-day—let them continue to have it. There is only a trifling additional expense, such as traveling fees, or something of that kind. I am in favor of the report submitted by the committee, with the amendment: that is, that the Court be allowed to sit in Los Angeles, and such other places as the Legislature may direct.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Kern. Mr. Chairman: I don't see why the Legislature should not have the power to try the experiment that they have attempted in allowing the Supreme Court to meet in different places in the State. There may be some minor objections; there may be some objections in detail; it may conflict with the dispatch of business to some extent, I admit; but the difficulties that may be in the way of the proper work of the Court, seem to me cannot be so great as the difficulties and disadvantages of those who have business in that Court. Now, I know, from what little experience I have had in practicing in this State, from the distance I have resided, that it is a great disadvantage to attorneys who have to go so far, and also works in many cases a denial of justice. The expense of employing attorneys and paying their expenses to travel so far, results in many cases in a denial of justice, for many men cannot afford it. Now, why not leave this power to the Legislature? If it shall turn out to be a disadvantage, why, the Legislature can stop it. If it is left to the Legislature they can use their discretion; if it is put in the Constitution it cannot be amended. I am in favor of the Legislature having that power.

MR. EDGERTON. The amendment fixes it at Los Angeles affirmatively, so the Legislature cannot change it. It is not left to the discretion of the Legislature.

MR. SMITH. Now, several States have had this system, and seem to like it. Missouri has the system; the Supreme Court meets in four different places. Now, I believe in having justice at every man's door, as near as possible. This is the case in all large States. Some other States have intermediate Courts. We have provided for two sections, sitting at the same time, and they may sit in bank when necessary. We have one of the largest States in the Union in territory, and the Legislature should certainly have this power, in order to meet the demands of the State. As far as I am concerned, it is not of very great advantage to my county. Travel to Sacramento from Kern does not cost much more than to Los Angeles. It is some advantage to go to Los Angeles, but not a great deal. But it is nothing more than justice to a very important district of this State.

MR. WILSON. Why not have it sit in Shasta, too?

MR. SMITH. The northern portion of the State has a very small population compared to the southern portion.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I think it is very unfair in the gentleman from San Francisco to allude to the prejudices or preferences of the Supreme Judges upon this question. Now, I have no doubt Chief Justice Wallace, who is just as good a fellow as anybody else, felt as anybody else would have felt. He fell into the hospitable hands of my friend Ayers and his colleague, Gen. Howard, and we all know what delicious wines they make down there, and what orange groves they have there, and it is no wonder anybody should get a little stuck after the city of the angels. I expect if I should go there I would want to become an angel too. But I do not think this question ought to be a question of the preference of any member of the Supreme Court. It ought to be considered as a question of public policy and public expediency alone. Now, sir, it is well known that until four or five years ago the Supreme Court was permanently located here. It was then agreed to have a term of Court in San Francisco, and San Francisco promised to bear the entire expense of the removal and maintenance of the Court. The agreement was that the State was to be exonerated from any expense on account of the change. What was the result? Last Winter the delegation from Los Angeles came here and wanted a term of the Court held there, and they notified the San Francisco delegation, and it was agreed if they would carry the bill through they would saddle upon the State the expense incurred in removing the Supreme Court to San Francisco. Of course, San Francisco having one third of the members of the Legislature, together with the southern delegations, easily carried the bill. By that one removal alone this State was put to an expense of thirty thousand dollars in hard twenty-dollar pieces, which the City and County of San Francisco had solemnly pledged to honor, as far as it could do it, to pay all this expense, and save the State from ever paying out a dollar. So that as a question of economy a Court on wheels is not a success. There was an expense of about eight thousand dollars for removing it to Los Angeles. Then there has been added to that in various forms about seven thousand two hundred dollars, making the total cost to the State thus far for keeping the Supreme Court on wheels, of thirty-seven thousand two hundred dollars. So much for the question of economy.

Now, I claim that it adds stability to the Government to have all its departments in one place. Upon this question of convenience, the gentlemen of Los Angeles have to do business in the Surveyor General's office, why not have a branch of this office in Los Angeles? If you speak of convenience, why not have the Supreme Court of the United States to sit in every State in the Union? Gentlemen on this floor have traveled three thousand miles to attend the Supreme Court of the United States. It would be much more convenient to lawyers to have the Court go around to the different States. But this does not add greatly to the convenience of litigants. The attorneys attend the Supreme Court, and the only expense is the fees for traveling. Now, I dare say, their calendar down there, is swollen with cases clear from Santa Clara.

MR. AYERS. No, sir, only as far as Santa Barbara.

MR. EDGERTON. Well, it makes no difference where they come from, they can come here very near as quick as we can go there. Lawyers in this end of the State have more or less business to do, no matter where the session is being held, and it is very inconvenient for them to have to go way down to Los Angeles in cases of habeas corpus, etc. Gentlemen talk about employing counsel in Sacramento to attend to their cases. I think, sir, that most every attorney in the State who is qualified to attend to his cases in the Supreme Court, does so himself, and does it, too, as a matter of convenience. Most all lawyers have business to attend to in the land department, or in the Secretary of State's office, or the Attorney General's office, and they manage so as to attend to that business at the same time they are before the Supreme Court; and it is not true that Sacramento attorneys get much business of that kind by having the Supreme Court here. As far as that is concerned, there is no selfishness in it. As far as health is concerned, statistics show that this is the healthiest city on the globe, Los Angeles not excepted. There are sudden cases of mortality here as everywhere else. The people who die here generally come from Los Angeles. [Laughter.] Their climate down there is very hot, and a man soon gets lazy who lives in it. [Laughter.] And it would not be very long, if you have the Supreme Court down there, before you would see the Chief Justice, and my friend, General Howard, walking arm in arm under huge Panama hats, hunting a cool place. It will not do.

Now, the gentleman from Kern stated, that some States, among others, Missouri, have a Supreme Court on wheels. Section nine, of article six, of the Constitution of Missouri, provides that the Supreme Court shall be held at the seat of government until otherwise directed by law. Now, one word about the sentiment of the lawyers of this State. I know a great many of them, and have conversed with a great many of them, from different counties, and as far as I am advised, the sentiment of the profession on this matter is unanimous, or nearly so, in favor of having the Supreme Court held at one place, and that place the capital.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. It was the boast of a famous ruler that he brought justice home to every man's door.

MR. EDGERTON. Why not have it in every county, then?

MR. HOWARD. In England they did have it in every county. Now, sir, I say it is a matter of necessity to give to the Legislature the power to fix these terms at different places. Why, you cannot tell what day this town will be drowned out. The Judges will be seen some of these days coming out of the Court-room in a boat. [Laughter.] Yet they would be obliged to stay here. I have had some little experience with this climate myself. It is the hottest place outside of—the one down below we read of. [Laughter.] If you put it in the Constitution that the Court shall sit nowhere else but here—if they have to sit here in regular session all Summer, they will have to be regular salamanders.

MR. EDGERTON. Do I look like a salamander? [Laughter.]

MR. HOWARD. You look like a fellow that has just got out of some fire. [Uproarious laughter.] Now, I advise the gentleman to be a little cautious in regard to this matter, and not demand too much, for if Benicia, or Oakland, or San José, were to offer to-morrow to furnish State buildings free of expense to the State, this capital would travel so fast that it would make the heads of your citizens swim.

MR. EDGERTON. I have no doubt they would make the State pay for it in the end, just as they did when they moved the Supreme Court to Los Angeles.

MR. HOWARD. We made no bargains. The gentleman is entirely too avaricious for Sacramento. Why, he wants everything here. If he should see a flock of wild geese flying over, I am not so certain but he would offer an amendment requiring them to light in Sacramento. [Laughter.]

MR. EDGERTON. I had not seen a flock of wild geese for a long time until this Convention met. [Laughter.]

MR. HOWARD. The gentleman himself is about the wildest goose here. [Laughter.] Now it seems to me extraordinary that the whole business of the Supreme Court has to be measured by holding sessions in Sacramento. I cannot see how it can facilitate the transaction of business, but, as the Judges have said themselves, just the reverse. And as to the members of the bar wanting it to come here, I have never seen half a dozen who wanted it here. They do want to go to San Francisco. That is the place they want to go to, for the very best of reasons. There is an excellent library there, the health is better, and the Court can work more and to better advantage in the Summer months, if the Court was in San Francisco instead of here. Everybody knows that. Now they had sixty cases here last term of the Court. They had eighty cases in Los Angeles, so one of the Judges told me. The Judges all prefer to go to Los Angeles. Whether it is because we have good wine there, I do not know; I leave that for the gentleman from Sacramento. Certain it is that we have good wine there. And it is about the only place in the State where you can get wine that is not adulterated. Statistics show that about ninety per cent. of everything we drink, except the native product, is a villainous compound, that is poisonous to the system. The best local option law that could be passed would be one providing against these adulterations. Now, sir, I cannot see why there should be any opposition to this Court traveling. There can be no good reason urged against it. On the contrary all the argument is in favor of it. And I would vote for a term somewhere in the northern part of the State, if the people wanted it. It is no disadvantage to the Judges to travel. On the contrary it is a benefit. I can see no earthly reason why this matter should not be left to the discretion of the Legislature.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: This amendment does not attempt to infringe upon the rights of any portion of the people of this State. We do not seek to deprive the people of any portion of this State of their rights under the Constitution, but we do ask the serious consideration of this committee to this fact: that in arbitrarily placing in the Constitution a bar against the Legislature providing for sittings of the Supreme Court in future, would be unwise and impolitic in the extreme. Therefore, I hope this committee will not be guilty of the foolish act of placing in the Constitution an inflexible rule that the sessions of the Supreme Court shall be always held at the City of Sacramento. Now, it is well known, sir, that the increase in wealth, the increase in population, and consequent increase of the business of the southern part of the State, makes it necessary that sessions of the Supreme Court should be held in Los Angeles, It has been said by those who are opposed to it that it would cost a great deal of money; that it is an unnecessary expense. I have here an item from the Record Union, from a writer who is well posted, and I recommend it to the consideration of the gentleman who has charged that an increased expense of twenty thousand dollars was incurred annually by moving the Court to Los Angeles. The writer says he is confident the cost to the State for two sessions of the Supreme Court in Los Angeles will not amount to six thousand dollars a year, and the cost of those in San Francisco will not exceed nine thousand dollars a year, making a total of fifteen thousand dollars a year for the two places. The total expense of the Court in Los Angeles will not exceed six thousand dollars a year, as certified by the Clerk of that Court. Now, sir, it is very well known that the business of titles, and other business, in the southern part of the State, is very unsettled, and has been, and necessarily will be for some time to come. This unsettled condition has grown out of the peculiar land grant system adopted in that part of the State. All classes of citizens are interested, and it is a very great hardship for them to have to come so far. I know that this Convention will not be so unjust as to place a barrier in the Constitution, and make it impossible for the Legislature to provide for this matter in future.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the report of the committee myself, but I am also in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, General Howard. I know it is a very great convenience to our people to have the Supreme Court in San Francisco. The difference in the expense, it strikes me, cuts a very little figure. Suppose it does cost six thousand or seven thousand dollars a year for the Court to sit in Los Angeles. I undertake to say that the expense for traveling, to bring these eighty cases to Sacramento on appeal, would cost a great deal more than that sum. Every attorney would charge one hundred dollars more fee to try a case before the Supreme Court in Sacramento, by reason of the loss of time and expenses of traveling. The State will reap just as much advantage as it would by retaining the Supreme Court here in Sacramento. For the sake of the health and good feelings of the Court they ought not to be tied up in Sacramento. Now, sir, gentlemen have spoken about a flock of wild geese flying over Sacramento. I might add that hardly a vulture could fly over the City of Sacramento without dropping dead in his flight. Now, I submit to the gentleman from Sacramento if there is any person who goes away from this place without more or less "sand in his craw." We live upon it, we drink it in.

MR. TULLY. Your looks indicate that you come from a very healthy country. [Laughter.]

MR. HERRINGTON. For about twenty-seven days I have been suffering from the effects of this remarkable climate.

MR. EDGERTON. You are a very healthy looking ghost even now.

MR. HERRINGTON. The gentleman claims that this is one of the healthiest cities in the world. If you will go out to the "city of graves," you will find it thickly populated, a city by itself, and it has only been growing for twenty-five years. Now, I do submit that this amendment ought to be adopted. There ought to be discretionary power left with the Legislature to regulate this matter as exigencies may require.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment, to read, "in San Francisco, Los Angeles, and such other places as the Legislature may provide."

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I accept the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I hope that neither of these amendments will prevail, and I have nothing to say regarding the sanitary condition of Los Angeles, San Francisco, and Sacramento. It forms no part of the consideration, in my judgment, that should enter into this question. The State Capital has been established here by law. The Supreme Court is one of the most important functions of the State government. I challenge any gentleman to give any good reason for having the legislative branch of the government at the capital, which does not apply with equal force to the judicial department. It has been discussed here as being a question of convenience to the Judges themselves, as if that were the controlling interest. Certainly it may be proper to consider the convenience of the Judges when it does not militate against the value of the public service in which they are concerned. This is the Court of last resort for the State, and the interest of litigants is of more consequence, and entitled to far more consideration at the hands of this committee, when passing upon this question, than the mere convenience of the Judges. It is not that it might be more pleasant for them to visit Los Angeles; not that they find it pleasant to spend a portion of the time in San Francisco. I know it is pleasant there. I always spend my time with great delight in San Francisco. I can well understand why the Judges might prefer to go there and spend a portion of their time, as a matter of personal preference. But, sir, the State Capital has, in the wisdom of the people, or a majority of them, been established in Sacramento, and the arguments I make do not apply to the City of Sacramento, as such, but to the capital of the State. Why should the Supreme Court sit at the capital? First, because it is the Court of last resort for all the people of the State. It is one of the most important functions of the government. Nothing concerns the interests of the people of the State at large more than a fair and efficient discharge of the duties of that Court. It has been said here that the convenience of litigants is of importance. In my judgment it is of the highest moment—more important than the matter of the convenience of the Judges. The litigants do not have to come here with their witnesses. But they do come by their attorneys, as has been remarked here, and those who are familiar with the business of this Court know that there is no State in the Union in which so large a proportion of the cases argued before the Supreme Court are argued by the attorneys who tried the cases in the Court of original jurisdiction, as in the State of California; and I speak advisedly when I make that assertion. Now, while that is true, this other fact is true also, that the attorneys of the State can avail themselves of the State Library for the purpose of preparing their briefs. True, in all the principal cities of the State you will find libraries—respectable libraries—but when you wish to exhaust a question of law, you will have recourse to the State Library, which is selected for that special purpose. That is of the highest importance. I know in San Francisco there are divers gentlemen there who have books, and they have a library there; but it is not as ample as the State Library. I am not particularly advised how it may be in Los Angeles.

MR. HOWARD. The Judges have found a very good working library there.

MR. HALE. I am not prepared to deny it. I can well understand that there may be a good working library. The gentleman himself may have a very good working library, and he may be perfectly willing to tender the use of it to the Judges of the Court, and to the attorneys. But you must have a public library. You must have it of necessity. Another objection I have is this: by holding a session at Los Angeles it amounts to making the term exclusively for cases from that portion of the State. When the Court meets in San Francisco, few other cases are tried except San Francisco cases, or cases from that district. And the practical effect is that we in this end of the State are limited to the two terms a year which are held in Sacramento. Instead of having the privilege of going before the Supreme Court four times a year, the people are limited to two terms a year. Again, it is a bad precedent. When you put the Supreme Court on wheels and cart it over the State, you may put every other department of the State government on wheels for the same reason. Let us have a Court that will have some stability. Let us have a Supreme Court in the City of Sacramento.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: Is an amendment in order now?

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir; send it up.

MR. SCHELL. I desire to offer this amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the section by inserting after the word 'State,' the following: 'At San Francisco and Los Angeles, at such times as the Legislature shall provide.'"

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say that while I am not opposed to holding sessions in San Francisco, Los Angeles, and Sacramento, I am opposed to giving the Legislature power to locate the Court at any other place. That is the object of this amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: The only serious objection I had to any portion of the report of the committee has been fully satisfied by the argument of the Chairman. That was in reference to the number of Judges of the Supreme Court, and having the Court sit in departments. Now, sir, with respect to the pending amendments, I submit that neither of them ought to be adopted, nor should the language of the report be allowed to remain, as to where the Court ought to be held. I would not seriously object to leaving the Constitution and laws upon this subject as they are to-day, and to strike out this sentence about the Supreme Court being held in the Capitol. Let that language be stricken out, and the entire matter left to stand as it is to-day. The present law will then stand until repealed. If I had to vote now as a legislator upon the proposition of having the Court in Los Angeles and San Francisco, I would vote no on that proposition. But as a member of a Constitutional Convention it is a different thing. Why fix a place in the Constitution where the Court shall be held? I don't see that we should change the present law. If it is fixed in the Constitution no change can ever be made without an amendment to the Constitution. If we leave it silent the Legislature can make such changes as they deem necessary. But to name two cities of the State and place them in the Constitution, is a different thing. The City of San Francisco, of course, is the great metropolis of the State, while the City of Los Angeles is the fourth city, I believe, though a growing city.

MR. AYERS. The second city. Oakland is only a portion of San Francisco.

MR. MCCALLUM. Oakland is a city with forty-five thousand inhabitants, while Los Angeles, I suppose, has about fifteen thousand.

MR. AYERS. Seventeen thousand.

MR. MCCALLUM. About one third the size of Oakland. As to the future city of the southern portion of the State, no man can tell whether Los Angeles is going to be the principal city or some other place, and to name any one place in the Constitution is entirely wrong. Now, I suppose there are some reasons in favor of having sessions there that don't exist in other places outside of Sacramento. But I am opposed to naming either San Francisco or Los Angeles in the Constitution. If the gentlemen desire to say anything upon the subject, the proper amendment would be to say that the Supreme Court shall be held in the capital of the State, and at such other places (not naming them) as the Legislature may direct. In some States they have Supreme Court in every county in the State. It is so in New Hampshire, and others. I submit that the people ought to be left to do as they see fit in these matters, and therefore I am in favor of striking out this sentence from the report. Who knows but that in ten years the capital of this State may be removed. Some gentlemen say it ought to be moved to San José: some to Oakland. It is certainly probable, and yet we would have a clause in the Constitution declaring that the Supreme Court shall be held in the places named. Of course I am not advocating removal, but the question is one to be considered. Suppose the Constitution named San Francisco as one of the places, and the capital should be moved to Oakland, right across the bay, only six or seven miles; there would be no utility in having the Court set in San Francisco.

MR. AYERS. I will say that I had such an amendment written out: "Strike out all after the word 'Justice' in line thirty-six, to the word 'State' in line thirty-seven."

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: There is nobody of any experience in such matters but must be aware of the disastrous consequences which follow, where the location of the offices of government are left open by the Constitution. All States have their contests over the location of the capital. All cities have had their contests over the location of the county seat. These contests are always productive of evil. There was a bitter contest between Vallejo and Fairfield, in Solano County. Vallejo, San José, and Benicia have been capitals of this State, and a dozen other places covet it. Oakland still keeps alive the idea that she ought to be the capital. Now, all these contests ought to be avoided. It seems to me that the place for the sessions of the Supreme Court ought to be fixed by the Constitution. It is said that in different States the Supreme Court meets in different places. In Connecticut they have two capitals. Rhode Island has two capitals. There is no building in San Francisco suitable for a Supreme Court, unless it is the City Hall. But I am content with Sacramento. The gentleman from Los Angeles rather astonishes me. He seems to intimate that there is an intimate connection or analogy between the decisions of the Supreme Court and the quality of their wine.

MR. HOWARD. If the gentleman will come down there we will explain it to him. [Laughter.]

MR. SHAFTER. A man cannot administer justice well when full of wine, and I never get full. "Wine is a mocker, strong drink is raging," and doesn't have a good effect upon the administration of justice. The question to consider here is: Which is the best place for the Supreme Court to sit? Which is the most convenient for the people of the whole State? Where can the Court sit to the best advantage? Everybody knows we have an excellent library here containing books hundreds of years old. I do not believe Los Angeles wants to pay out forty thousand dollars for a library. They have private libraries in San Francisco that cost twenty thousand dollars. I prefer to have the Supreme Court at the capital. That is where it belongs, and nowhere else. There is no saving in expense, for it simply takes it off one set of shoulders and puts it on to another. The cost of sending the Supreme Court down there is greater than the expenses of the lawyers to come here. The lawyers of Los Angeles do most of the business of the entire district. If Santa Barbara were obliged to come here, she would not send her business down to Los Angeles. I do not want to impair the business of Mr. Edgerton.

who resides here, or the business of General Howard, who resides in Los Angeles. That has nothing to do with the matter. I insist that this thing ought to be settled in the Constitution, and settled in one place, and that place the capital of the State; and I don't know but we ought to have a constitutional provision making this the capital, because we have from three to five millions of dollars invested here. Here is where the Supreme Court ought to be, here where the archives of the State, and all the other departments of government and the State Library are. The Judges are elected to tend to their business. They want to be put down in one place and made to attend to their business. Now, there is no such thing as having one section of the Court in one place and another in another.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I am convinced that there is nothing we can do but what will be attended with some evil. That is, I think, a principle we are all bound to admit to be true. Now, I am convinced that it is improper to have anything in the Constitution which would require an impossibility. It sounds very foolish to say, in the Constitution, that the Supreme Court shall be in Sacramento, or in San Francisco, or in Los Angeles. Gentlemen, of course, have their preferences in regard to localities. But we must recollect the various contingencies which happen to different cities. We know that earthquakes have shaken San Francisco from center to circumference, and that other cities where earthquakes are frequent, have been leveled to the ground. Suppose an earthquake should destroy that city, how would we comply with the requirements of the Constitution? Now, I barely speak of this to illustrate the fact of the impropriety of determining upon any one place, and fixing that place permanently in the Constitution, either San Francisco, Sacramento, or Los Angeles. Many of us have been here when this place was flooded; when it was impossible to sit here and do any kind of business whatever. I was here at one time when the waters broke through the levee, and I never saw greater excitement in my life, because they expected another tremendous flood to burst in upon the city. Now, these are contingencies that may arise again, as they have in the past. In view of these facts, why should a deliberative body say that, no matter what contingencies may arise, Sacramento shall be the seat of the Supreme Court. The Supreme Court shall sit here and no place else. I think this is one of the cases where discretion should be left with the Legislature. We should not arbitrarily say that the Court shall sit in Sacramento, or San Francisco, or Los Angeles, because contingencies may arise which will render it impossible for the Court to sit in one or another of these places. I therefore hope there will be no place designated.

MR. EDGERTON. Don't you know the entire bar of Tulare County are in favor of fixing it permanently at Sacramento?

MR. BROWN. They prefer San Francisco, because it is a healthier place.

MR. EDGERTON. The entire bar of your county prefer to have the Supreme Court fixed permanently at the capital of the State.

MR. BROWN. I know nothing about the particular desires of anybody, but I know what the general impression is. I say that the Constitution should be silent upon the question, for there may be ten thousand contingencies which will make it impossible to carry out the provision.

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. CHAIRMAN. I hope this Convention will fix the place for the sessions of the Supreme Court. I should hope so, even though they did not fix it at this place. It is one of the departments and should have one place of action, in the presence of its records and in the midst of its books. It is not so material that the interest and convenience of the lawyers should be subserved as it is that the Court should be established in a permanent form. A Supreme Court on wheels is not the proper way for a Supreme Court to exist. The only instance which has been mentioned in this debate thus far where it has been done, is in the State of Missouri. As provided by the Constitution of eighteen hundred and sixty-five, in that State, there were four sessions in four districts. No doubt realizing their error, in eighteen hundred and seventy-five they fixed it in their Constitution, and said that the Supreme Court should be held at the capital. I do not now undertake to discuss the question whether the capital is the proper place for it or not, but I think it is. It stands to reason that it is. I think so long as you have this capital it is the place for State officers. As long as it is a good enough place for the Governor to stay the year round, and for other State officers to stay; so long as it is good enough place for both houses of the Legislature to meet, it is sufficiently good and sufficiently healthy for the Supreme Court. None of them have ever died since I have known that august tribunal. Now, the first evil consequence which has arisen from having this Court on wheels, is the necessary delay in the administration of justice. I believe the idea of the people of the State is that the Courts should be, as nearly as possible, in perpetual session. That the old idea of terms should be, as far as possible, abolished. Formerly we had in this State four terms of the Supreme Court, and if a person should have a case taken up from an appellate Court, he could have a reasonable expectation of having it heard in three months. Now, we have the Court so divided that the terms are six months apart in each place, so that a litigant, no matter in what district he may reside, can only expect to get a decision in six months. I say these delays in the administration of justice are gross evils which should not be allowed. This Court is to be larger than the old Court. It is to sit in two sections. Each section is to be under the direction and control of the Chief Justice. I cannot see how he can act unless the Court is kept together in one place. Neither can the convenience of lawyers be subserved by the Court meeting away from the proper libraries. In San Francisco, by the removal of a portion of the library which belongs to the Judges, they have a library. But the attorneys going there have no library, though at present, I believe, they are allowed to consult the law library. But it is not like a public library; it belongs to an association, and it is only through courtesy that they are permitted to do so. In Los Angeles there is neither a public library for the attorneys nor for the Judges. I am opposed to saying that the Court shall be held in these three places, for the two cities will throw the entire burden upon the State. We shall have to provide law libraries; we shall have to keep Clerks in each place; we shall have to rent buildings; and the result will be that the expenses of the Court will be at least double what they were before. Nor do I think the Court has been as efficient since it has been traveling about as before. For my part I know I have heard more complaints about the manner in which business is done than I ever heard before; more complaint about cases being disposed of in an unsatisfactory manner—not that mere complaint which arises from men having cases decided against them, but of cases that were decided in such a way that you could not tell how they were decided, nor upon what the decisions were based. In other words, the business of that Court has not been half done.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I see no objections to lengthening the sessions of the Supreme Court. I do see serious objections to fixing in the Constitution any place as the place of holding the sessions. I think that the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Alameda would obviate the difficulty, striking out the clause which says that the sessions shall be held at the capital of the State. I think a proviso similar to that in the Constitution of Illinois, that the State be divided into districts, so that each district can have a session of the Supreme Court once a year, would be good. Leave the Legislature to prescribe the manner and place. I have no part in the local considerations urged by the different gentlemen, which seem to me to be very small arguments to urge before a Constitutional Convention, regarding the benefits which one or another locality derives from the presence of the Supreme Court. There is nothing in the character of the business done by the Supreme Court which will give any particular advantage to any locality. In ancient times the Court used to move around and try people's cases. Now, the southern part of the State is differently situated from other portions of the State. It has grown to be a sort of an empire within itself. It has some peculiar features different from the balance of the State. We are entitled to consider the peculiar topographical features of any locality. If the State were a compact State, striking out equally in every direction, there would be no objection in locating the Court in the center of the State and leaving it there. But California is peculiarly situated. It is nearly one thousand miles long—several times its width. There would be no more proper arrangement than to cut the State in sections for the purpose of allowing Court to be held in the different districts. The State of Illinois resembles somewhat the State of California, being longer than it is wide. The State of Illinois has maintained for a long time three different places where the Supreme Court is held. They require that a term of Court shall be held in each of these divisions once every year. I think it is exactly what the State of California ought to do. With about three divisions we could get along very well. One place in San Francisco, which is the great commercial center, and another place, Los Angeles, which is the center of a great community composed of agriculturists. That is the natural and proper arrangement of the thing, and I see no objections to giving the people of the various sections of the country a chance to see and know the Supreme Court, and what sort of men they are. I believe it gives increased respect for the Court. Sacramento is not well situated. The gentleman speaks of the advantages of Sacramento. Why, there is one disadvantage that is sufficient to condemn it, and that is the tendency to make men dissipated. I have heard that wine is a mocker and strong drink raging, but men will put it into their mouths, and I would like to know what sort of a Supreme Court can exist and do business upon the water we find in Sacramento? It is enough to drive men to intoxication. And they don't even get good whisky. If we could get good whisky, I would be willing to be more lenient to Sacramento, and concede something to her; but they have the most villainous whisky of any city I have ever had occasion to be in. I am disposed to stand up for San Francisco in this matter.

MR. EDGERTON. I wish to ask you a question. Do you know that the Bar Association of San Francisco held a meeting upon this subject, and unanimously resolved in favor of having the Court permanently located in Sacramento?

MR. BARBOUR. I did not know it.

MR. WILSON. Such is the fact.

MR. BARBOUR. I will take the chances, and speak for the people who don't belong to the Bar Association. It constitutes three or four times as many lawyers as the Bar Association.

MR. TULLY. Mr. Chairman: I have conversed with many lawyers of prominence, distinguished men, and outside of the gentlemen from Los Angeles, they all seem to be in favor of a permanent Supreme Court. It ought to be located somewhere, and I think it is very proper to locate it at the capital. I claim that the leading attorneys of the State are better judges of what their clients want than they are themselves. The gentlemen can take that and make the most of it. We find a vast majority of the members of the bar of this State—distinguished men, outside of Los Angeles—who are in favor of a permanent Supreme Court. I have had occasion to vote with my distinguished friend, General Howard, on previous occasions, and I regret that I cannot go with him now. Let us say that the Supreme Court shall be held at the capital of the State, or such other place as the Legislature may direct. I think that is right. Now, my friend Judge Barbour seems to have a spite at the people of Sacramento, because the whisky and water are bad. [Laughter.] I have found them very good people here. I don't know what kind of people they have in Los Angeles.

MR. AYERS. Very nice people. [Laughter.]

MR. TULLY. I will take your word for it. Now, my colleague, Senator Herrington, he speaks of this as being a very unhealthy place; he speaks of the extensive graveyards, and of men dying here, and villifies Sacramento to an extent which I think is not warranted. I think I can account for that. The gentleman has made some effort to get into good society here, and has been barred out, because I know the people of Sacramento are a very kindly people, as I have found out, especially the ladies. I think what hurts my colleague, is the fact that the ladies of Sacramento have failed to appreciate him, and notice him. He has been left off the invitation list to some church festival, or something of that kind, and I enter my protest against charges of that kind. Seriously speaking, the people of Sacramento deserve a great deal of credit for their unbounded enterprise. They have pulled against fire and flood and came out victorious, and I for one do not propose to take the State Capital away from them. I don't think there is any danger of that being accomplished.

REMARKS OF MR. OVERTON.

MR. OVERTON. Mr. Chairman: I am not here to defend the interest of Sacramento, or speak about it in any respect; neither am I here to defend the interest of San Francisco; but I am here for the purpose of favoring the interests of my constituency, and to speak what I believe to be in the interest of the people of the State. While I would like to accommodate my friends from Los Angeles, and my friends from San Francisco, we have started out here with a great cry of economy. We have attempted to inculcate it throughout California. We have cut down the State officials, and in various ways tried to practice and preach economy. Now, sir, I think those members who have been in favor of economy had better come back to the starting point. The taxpayers of California have provided a Supreme Court and Court-rooms, with a good library, and I do not believe it is in the interest of the taxpayers to put the Supreme Court on wheels, and pay fifteen thousand dollars extra, as illustrated by one gentleman. I do not consider it in the interest of my constituency to pay this extra fifteen thousand dollars. I do not think the interest of the lawyers ought to be considered so much as the interest of the taxpayers, and I think it is unjust to the people of this State to tax them with this extra fifteen thousand dollars to put the Supreme Court on wheels and cart it round over the State. I think the Supreme Court ought to be located and settled at the State Capital.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I do not profess to be able to argue this question from a legal standpoint. I believe, with my friend General Howard, as far as the Court being held at different places is concerned. I have nothing to say against the interests of Sacramento, or the health of the place, or anything else. I havn't tasted the whisky, but I know something about the water. I have never been able to drink it without chewing it. Now, sir, I should be inclined to support the amendment of the gentlemen from Los Angeles, if I did not believe it would be better for the Constitution to be silent upon the subject. I do not believe it is wise for us to fix such a rule in this Constitution that no matter what exigencies may arise in the future it will be impossible for the Legislature to change it. I can see no injustice to anybody in having the Supreme Court meet in different places. It is said here that the rights of the litigants ought to be respected, and that was used as an argument for keeping the Court in Sacramento. Now, sir, I know that in the southern part of this State there are great interests and questions which are peculiar to this State. They have been spoken of here before. That is the matter of land titles. Now, sir, I knew of many litigants in that portion of the State who refrained from sending cases to the Supreme Court on account of the great expense and difficulties attending the bringing of them here. And it is no argument to say that there are not many instances of that kind. Now, sir, I would be willing to leave this matter to the Legislature. This State has already taken the initiative in experimenting in the matter. It has not been tried sufficiently yet to determine fully how it will work. If it turns out to be wrong, after having been fully tried, the people, through their representatives, can change it. If the system gives satisfaction it can be continued. But suppose some other place, in future, should loom up by some unexpected influx of population and business, in some extreme portion of the State now unoccupied, and it should be found necessary to establish a branch Court there, you could not do it on account of this provision in the Constitution. I am opposed to it. If I did not think, by the temper of this Convention, from the expressions I have heard, that it would be the opinion of a majority that this clause should be entirely stricken out, I certainly should be compelled to vote for the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, because I feel that the southern portion of the State has rights in this respect which ought to be respected. It is but just that they should be considered. I do not believe that anybody has been wronged by reason of the moving of the Court to Los Angeles. I had prepared, before the gentleman from Alameda suggested it, an amendment to strike out the entire phrase. I hope that will be done, and the matter left to the Legislature.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question, as I believe this matter has been sufficiently discussed.

Seconded by Messrs. Howard, Huestis, Ayers, and Van Dyke.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Stanislaus, Mr. Schell.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard.

Division being called for, the committee divided, and the amendment was lost—ayes, 24; noes, not counted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Napa, Mr. Crouch.

Lost.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out the whole sentence, beginning on line thirty-six, "all sessions of the Court, whether in bank or in department, shall be held at the capital of the State."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out.

REMARKS OF MR. WATERS.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I make this motion to strike out that sentence, because I do not believe it is politic to stir up local strife in this coming election to ratify or reject this Constitution. I think it is better to leave the matter to the Legislature, and allow them to fix the sessions of the Supreme Court. If you put this provision in the Constitution, you will antagonize a great many people in the southern portion of the State. We have very little margin to go on, and for one, I should like to see the Constitution ratified. There are evils that ought to be corrected, and if we load this Constitution down here by taking away these privileges, we cannot expect it to be adopted. Would not the people of Sacramento vote solid against the Constitution, if we should put in a provision moving the State Capital away from the place? Certainly. I believe if you should take the terms away from San Francisco, that a great many people there would vote against it on that account. There is a local pride which is very powerful in this regard, and the local pride of Los Angeles is very strong. You had better leave this to the Legislature.

MR. EDGERTON. If I understand the gentleman, he means to impress the Convention with the idea that if this clause is not stricken out, Los Angeles and San Bernardino will vote against the Constitution. I want to know of the Los Angeles and San Bernardino delegations if they mean to get the Supreme Court there by threatening us?

MR. WATERS. The gentleman entirely misunderstands my motives. I mean to say that it is impolitic for us to enter into local legislation in the Constitution.

MR. EDGERTON. This is not local legislation, and there is nothing in the section which necessarily fixes the terms of the Supreme Court in Sacramento, because there is nothing here which fixes the capital at Sacramento. We only provide that the Supreme Court shall be held at the capital. The departments of government should all be together at the capital of the State. I can make nothing else out of the gentleman's remarks, but to threaten this Convention, that if this clause is not stricken out, Los Angeles and San Bernardino will vote against the ratification of the Constitution. Now, if these gentlemen came here for that purpose, they had better go home again.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: It seems it has come to this, that we must parcel out the departments of the State government, giving some to the north, some to the south, some to the east, and some to the west, or they will pull our house down. Now, sir, I am utterly and forever opposed to any division of the State government, or of the Supreme Court as a part of the State government. The Court ought to be at the capital of the State, wherever that may be. If you want to move the capital of the State to the bogs around the bay, why, move it there, and let the Supreme Court go with it. But let the State government be an entirety. Let us not mutilate it, and divide it up among the several points of the compass, in order to carry through the Constitution we are about to frame. If it depends upon such results as this to secure its adoption, then I say let it be voted down and buried out of sight forever.

Now, sir, the statement has been made that this city is subject to floods. I have been informed by a gentleman who is posted, that this ground upon which this Capitol is built is far above the high water mark, and gentlemen need not trouble themselves on that account. Now, let us see how this policy is going to work. If we give them a session of the Supreme Court at Los Angeles, Gilroy, Marysville, Chico, Red Bluff, Red Dog, and Yuba Dam will come and ask for a session of the Supreme Court, and I see no reason for denying it; always provided they can bring a lobby here to the Legislature strong enough to effect that object. And it is proper to say further, that if you leave the door open by leaving the Constitution silent upon the subject, there is no telling where this parceling out process will end. It has been asserted here that there are people in the southern part of the State—a great many people—I do not propose to deny it, I admit it, but claim that there are people in the northern portion of the State too, and they have equal rights and claims with the people of the southern portion of the State, and if the southern portion of the State is entitled to a portion of the State government, I would like to know by what rule you are going to deny the privilege to the people of the northern counties. You will recollect that for the first ten years of our existence as a State we had the capital here, there, and everywhere, and finally it settled down here, upon this soil; and why? Simply because the common sense people of the State settled upon this as the most eligible site, and when gentlemen come to moving it away from here, the people will say, hands off, for the capital is located in the center of the State. But, sir, it is not as an advocate of this particular place that I am speaking; it is in defense of that common-sense policy of keeping the State government together, that I am speaking. They are parts of a great whole, and must be kept together in order to render efficient service.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I do not rise to discuss this question, but merely to move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Ayers, Wyatt, Wilson, and White.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out.

Division was called for, and the motion to strike out prevailed by a vote of 64 ayes to 45 noes.

QUESTIONS OF PRIVILEGE.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. President: I rise to a question of privilege. I find in the Record-Union of this morning, in the report of the proceedings of this body, in regard to the report of the Committee on Revenue and Taxation, these words: "On motion of Mr. McFarland, the committee rose and reported the article back to the Convention as amended, with the recommendation that it be adopted." Now, it is very possible that the Chairman put the motion in that form, and the report of the reporter may be correct; but I wish to say that the motion I intended to make was simply this: that the committee rise and inform the Convention that the Committee of the Whole had considered all the sections of that report, had adopted some amendments, and reported the same back, and asked to be discharged from further consideration of the report. I had no idea of moving that the committee recommend the adoption of the article, because there are only one or two sections in the article that I am in favor of.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman moved that the committee rise and report back the article to the Convention, and the Chair put the question in the usual form, recommending the adoption of the report.

MR. WYATT. Mr. President: I rise to a question of privilege. Is seems to me that I was in error the other day, in making a statement as to the amount of the assessment of the Almaden mine, in Santa Clara County. The information which I had upon that subject I had derived in conversation, in the last three or four months, from several gentlemen from Santa Clara County, and in speaking of the subject the other day, this conversation happened to occur to my mind. From them I had learned that the mine was assessed in that county at about twenty-five thousand dollars. That seems, from the letter of the Assessor of that county, to be an error. He says that the mine is assessed at three hundred and seven thousand and some hundred dollars, and I now make this statement in justice to the Assessor and to the facts of the case.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT.

MR. WILSON. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section three is before the committee. The Secretary will read it.

SUPREME COURT.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 3. The Chief Justice and the Associate Justices shall be elected by the qualified electors of the State at large, at the general State elections, at the times and places that State officers are elected; and the term of office shall be twelve years, from and after the first Monday of January next succeeding their election; provided, that the six Associate Justices elected at the first election shall, at their first meeting, so classify themselves by lot, that two of them shall go out of office at the end of four years, two of them at the end of eight years, and two of them at the end of twelve years, and an entry of such classification shall be made in the minutes of the Court in bank, signed by them, and a duplicate thereof shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State. If a vacancy occur in the office of a Justice, the Governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a Justice to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the Justice so elected shall hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term. The first election of the Justices shall be at the first general election after the adoption and ratification of this Constitution.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I send up a substitute for section three.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 3. The Justices of the Supreme Court shall be elected by the qualified electors of the State at large, at the general State elections, at the times and places that State officers are elected; and the term of office shall be twelve years, from and after the first Monday of January next succeeding their election; provided, that two Justices shall be elected at the first election for State officers after the adoption of this Constitution, who with the existing Justices of the Supreme Court shall constitute the Supreme Court. The existing Justices of the Supreme Court shall classify themselves by lot into two classes, so that two of them shall go out of office at the end of four years, and three of them at the end of eight years, and an entry of such classification shall be made in the minutes of the Court, signed by them, and a duplicate thereof shall be filed in the office of the Secretary of State. If a vacancy occur in the office of a Justice, the Governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a Justice to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the Justice so elected shall hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term; and the Chief Justice shall be chosen by the Justices of the Supreme Court, from among their number, once in four years, or whenever there shall be a vacancy in the office of Chief Justice."

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I will be very brief. I will state that this amendment has in it two objects, neither of which will in any way interfere with the general plan of the report or conflict with the general purposes of the report as a whole. Now, sir, the report of the committee contemplates at the next general election the entire wiping out of the present Supreme Court, and bringing into that body seven new men. For my own part I believe that it is not desirable that at any time in the history of this State after its organization the entire Supreme Court should be changed at one time. I know, sir, that there are in this State men who have feelings of animosity against our present Supreme Court or against the members of it; but, sir, it seems to me that just at this time, when our State is undergoing so many radical changes that there should be in the whole State one body which is not to be changed too suddenly, and that body should be the Supreme Court of the State. So far as I am concerned, I have no fault to find with the present members of the Supreme Court. I do not know that we are certain that we should better the Court by turning out the present five members and putting in others; and if we should adopt the section reported by the committee on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and eighty, we would be very likely to have sitting as our Supreme Court seven men who are not at all familiar with the business of the Court. My observation of that body has been that cases are argued and submitted. Sometimes the decision of these cases require a great deal of investigation. That investigation sometimes lasts weeks, and even months, in order to get decisions that will not have to be changed. Now, it would be natural to suppose that on the first day of January, eighteen hundred and eighty, there will be a large amount of unfinished business in the Supreme Court, and if there be such business in the Supreme Court at that time then every case must be reargued and resubmitted. The work of the Supreme Court would have to be done over again.

Now, sir, another matter is the matter of choosing the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. This report looks to the election of a Chief Justice of the Supreme Court once in twelve years. The result will be this: that on the first of January, eighteen hundred and eighty, the people of this State will elect a Chief Justice, and that man will be Chief Justice of the State of California for twelve years, and the probabilities are that in the present state of affairs a man will be elected to that position who has not been connected with the bench of the Supreme Court. My idea of this matter is, that it would be much better that when the Justices of the Supreme Court—the seven Justices—have been elected, that they themselves should choose from their number the man who they think best qualified to be Chief Justice. Our present law is that the man who has been on the bench the longest shall be the Chief Justice. I do not think that is the best possible law, because it does not always follow that the oldest man is the best man. But by this provision, a man once elected holds for twelve years, and although there might be a man on the bench better qualified for the position of Chief Justice, and so recognized, not merely by the Supreme Court, but by the people, there is no way to give the people the benefit of his superior abilities as such Chief Justice until the people elect him Chief Justice after twelve years. Now, sir, it seems to me it would be far better if once in four years the members of the Supreme Court had the power amongst themselves to select the ablest man in their body to preside; and it seems to me that when the Supreme Court is composed of seven members, that they are the men who should determine who should be the presiding officer in their affairs. It seems to me that this would be better and wiser. I submit this section with great diffidence, though I know that many lawyers agree with me.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section three by striking out the word 'twelve,' in line four, and inserting the word 'four;' and striking out all of said section from the word 'provided,' in line five, to the word 'State,' in line eleven, both inclusive.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I suppose there is no State in the Union where so long a term as that proposed in this article is provided for. Now, does it not strike every member as rather undemocratic to elect officers for nearly one half the term of the active life of man, without any possibility of change, except by the hand of death? I see no reason why for applying a different rule or principle to Judges, from that applied to the other officers or servants of the people. I say that they should, at reasonable intervals, return their trust to the people, and give them the opportunity to pass upon the subject of the efficiency of their services, and even their worthiness for reëlection to the same position. I am satisfied that the principle, the idea of electing officers for such a long term as this, will strike the people of the State, yea, sir, the lawyers themselves, as being repugnant to our institutions and our free elections. There are two systems in this country, one is the appointive system, and the other the elective system. By the elective system Judges are supposed to hold their office during life, or good behavior. This is the United States plan. The elective system is, of course, putting them on the same footing as other officers, and there is no reason for not trusting the people with an opportunity to pass upon the qualifications of their Judges, the same as the balance of their State officers. Therefore, I hope this long term will not be provided for. There is nothing worse than an incompetent, unworthy Judge, and there is nothing that is more dangerous to the liberties of the people than such an officer as that. I say that the proper method is to have the people free, whenever they can pass upon the qualification of their State officers, to pass also upon the judiciary. It will be necessary to strike out, after and including the word "provided," down to and including the word "State," in the eleventh line.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the section as reported by the committee without any change. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, perpetuates the term of persons now in office—or I should say extends it. There is no reason why this should be done. If those gentlemen who occupy positions upon the Supreme bench to-day are men in whom the people of California have confidence, and whom they believe to be the most fit and proper to occupy those positions, it is easy for them to have a reëlection and a reaffirmation of the confidence of the people; and it certainly ought to be a little gratifying to them if they placed themselves again before the people, that the people indorse them by reëlection. But I do not believe that it is just or proper for us in this Constitution, not only to submit to the people of the State a new organic law, but at the same time make it incumbent upon them, when they vote in favor of the Constitution, that they also vote to prolong the term of the existing Supreme Court. We are making this not only an indorsement of the Constitution, but also an indorsement of the present existing Supreme Court, in the amendment offered by Mr. Cross. The argument in favor of this amendment is that it would be disastrous to have these gentlemen go out of office and to have others come into office. Not so at all. If the men that go out of office are good lawyers, and the men that come into office are equally good officers, both of them understand their work and there will be no difficulty at all. Much less is this the case in judicial positions than in any other position, than in any clerical position, or in any ordinary business of life. One lawyer understands the work of another lawyer thoroughly, if he be versed in his profession. There is no argument at all in favor of prolonging the term of these gentlemen, and requiring the people when they vote in favor of the new Constitution also to vote to prolong the terms of the existing Supreme Judges.

I am not in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour. He says that the terms ought to be reduced from twelve to four years, and that there are no Judges holding twelve-year terms in the United States. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the best bench that we have in the United States to-day is the Federal bench and the Federal judiciary; and that the Federal Judges not only hold for twelve years, but they hold for life, and there has never been any objection to these gentlemen. They have always been found capable, competent, honorable, and honest men. If an attorney qualified to go upon the bench of the Supreme Court is nominated and is elected, he is obliged to leave a lucrative practice, and for the purpose of going on the bench for only four years, many men will hesitate to leave a lucrative practice; but if you give them twelve years, they can afford to leave their practice. They can afford to go upon the bench and do justice to themselves and justice to the people of the State. If you elect them for only four years, it will be impossible for them to accept the position. Such lawyers as we should have, and such lawyers as we must have, to occupy the bench of the Supreme Court, are men who cannot leave their practice merely for four years, and that is the reason the committee placed the time at twelve years, in order that we might get the best talent of the State to occupy the position. The report of this committee is not like unto the report of any other committee which has been offered here. The report from the other committees, although they have been offered to you in sections, have been disjointed and disconnected. You could adopt one section, strike out another section entirely, or put in an entirely new and different section. Not so with this report. This report, although it is offered in sections, is a whole, and must be taken as a whole. It cannot be amended without material injury to the whole report. The committee has labored faithfully, and they offer this report as a whole, and I hope it will be taken as a whole. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, will be promptly voted down, and also the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, limiting the time to four years.

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I hope both the amendments now pending will be voted down, and it may seem arrogant in me to say that it is for the purpose of having one adopted that I would like to offer; but still that is the reason I have for the desire. [Laughter.] I oppose both amendments as I do section three, and as I did section two, upon the ground that we have more Judges of the Supreme Court than is requisite, than is called for by the people or the business of the State. I am in favor of the general idea of the report of the committee, except upon the subject of increasing the number of Justices of the Supreme Court, making seven instead of five, and then making a double headed Supreme Court. The Supreme Court, it appears to me, as blocked out by the committee, has all the grandeur of purpose that could be desired by the most extravagant. It has all the extravagance of pay that any could desire in that respect; and it has, so far as the terms of office are concerned, all that the incumbents could desire; for I think while it is said that office holders seldom die and never resign, that any man ought to be willing to give up hold upon office when the Creator makes him give up hold upon life. I oppose it then upon these grounds, that, first, the number of Justices are too great by two; that the present number of Judges of the Supreme Court is reasonably sufficient to do the business of this State. I oppose it upon the ground that the tenure of office is too long; and I shall oppose subsequent sections as to the pay of the Judges provided for in the report of the committee, upon the ground that it is too high and extravagant. I do not believe that the cases that come before the Supreme Court as blocked out by the committee will be facilitated in their disposition before that Court. They will first go before one or the other of the branches of that Court—before branch number one or branch number two. The party who loses before that branch will then go before the Chief Justice with his petition to be heard before the entire Court in bank, as it is termed, and every one that loses will be making this petition, and if it is to be heard a second time upon appeal, it cannot reasonably be supposed that it can get through that Supreme Court, after reaching the Court before, from six to eighteen months, as it may happen, according to the amount of business they may be doing. Then, instead of facilitating business, I think it will retard business.

Then I object to it, upon the further ground that the Chief Justice of this Supreme Court can act arbitrarily and with great injustice in the position which he occupies. He can allow A's case to be heard a second time before the full bench, and he can deny B the right to be heard before the full bench, and do either upon his mere will or motion. If we have a Supreme Court, I want a Supreme Court that every man has an equal right to go to, and be heard in, not upon a mere will of one man in that Court, but by virtue of the right of being heard there, whether the Supreme Court wants to hear him or not.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is discussing the section which was passed yesterday, which goes to the number of Judges of the Supreme Court. His whole speech so far has been upon that section, and not upon section three, which is under consideration.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has overlooked the fact that Rule Forty-three has been amended and changed. That portion of it which confined the speaking to the clause under consideration has been left out. Otherwise the Chair would have raised that point before.

MR. WYATT. I will state, if it will be any satisfaction to the members of this Convention or of this committee to know, that I was doing my very best to confine myself to the question in hand, and if I was missing it, it was not from intention, but from ignorance. As I understand it, we are molding and forming a general system for the Supreme Court of the State of California, and we have under consideration now the number of Judges that we will elect. We have under consideration the term of office that they shall hold. It is to this general form and mold that I address myself, and if I am not talking to the question, it is because I am unable to comprehend, know, feel, see, or realize the question. I propose before I sit down, and before the hammer falls on me, to read an amendment that I shall offer if the two amendments now before the committee should be voted down. I draw my amendment from section three of the old Constitution, and a portion of section three under consideration:

"SEC. 3. The Justices of the Supreme Court shall be elected by the qualified electors of the State at large, at the general State elections, at the times and places that State officers are elected, and the term of office shall be ten years from and after the first Monday of January next succeeding their election, except those elected at the first election, who, at their first meeting, shall so classify themselves by lot that one Justice shall go out of office every two years; the Justice having the shortest term to serve shall be Chief Justice. If a vacancy occur in the office of a Justice, the Governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a Justice to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the Justice so elected shall hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term."

In other words the——

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's ten minutes have expired.

MR. WYATT. Well, I have got my amendment read. [Laughter.]

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that the committee here had better adopt section three, as reported by the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department. It is entirely consistent with the whole system presented, and the amendments which are offered by the gentlemen respectively, Mr. Cross and Mr. Barbour, will tend to produce confusion and uncertainty, and destroy, to a certain extent, the entire system proposed by the committee. Now, it seems to me, that the term of office of twelve years is not too long where there are seven Judges, and we have, too, provided that two Judges go out at particular periods, to be succeeded by others. Certainly, to insert four years instead of twelve years, would be to make the term very much too short, and I understand that Mr. Barbour's proposition is to make the term four years. Now, if a Judge is elected for four years, and if we have seven of them, we would be electing Judges all the time. We must certainly have a continual election of Judges. A gentleman would only hold his position four years, and just get acquainted with the duties of his office, when he would be called upon to retire. As the election would be by the State at large, certainly it would be difficult to obtain the right material, in view of so short a term of office. It seems to me, that the provisions contained in the proviso here, taken in connection with the other portion of it, provide for everything just as it ought to be. Yesterday the Convention determined upon seven Judges by the adoption of section two, consequently that must be regarded as an established fact, at least at present, until we act in Convention. Now, we are to have seven Judges; a Chief Justice, and six Associates. There should be a classification of the Associate Justices. Now, if we make the term of office twelve years, then, as a matter of course, they could classify so as to go out regularly, and I do not think that term is too long for a Judge of the Supreme Court in this State. Every gentleman knows that it is unjust to ask a man to leave his practice and go upon the bench for so short a term, because, after that term has expired, he goes out upon the world again to seek his practice, after having abandoned it for the purpose of going upon the bench. But, beyond that, and as a question of policy, you will not get the best men to agree to take the place for a short term of office, and the continual changing of Judges is certainly one of the worst things in our system. The reëlection of the Judges is of course an approval of their past conduct, but a man should be permitted to occupy the Supreme Bench for a considerable period, to enable him to become useful, because each day he becomes better. The provisions of section ten would obviate the objections of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, if we should get an incompetent or improper Judge upon the bench. This system not only provides for an impeachment in the Courts, but section ten authorizes the two houses of the Legislature, by a concurrent resolution adopted by two thirds of each house, to absolutely remove a Judge. It is a system which has prevailed in many of the States, and I think is a very good feature of the Constitution; it enables the State to get rid of a man who is inefficient, who is useless upon the bench, who ought not to be there on general principles, independent of any act of his conduct. I think it is a first rate provision. Impeachment, of course, involves the absolute commission of an offense, and a trial. In many States an inefficient Judge has occupied the bench to the injury of public business. In the case of a man of that kind, where a man is incompetent or inattentive to business, and yet not have committed any offense for which he could be impeached, yet, under section ten, the Legislature might remove him. I will read that section for the information of the committee:

"SEC. 10. Justices of the Supreme Court, and Judges of the Superior Courts, may be removed by concurrent resolution of both houses of the Legislature, adopted by a two-third vote of each house. All other judicial officers, except Justices of the Peace, may be removed by the Senate, on the recommendation of the Governor, but no removal shall be made by virtue of this section, unless the cause thereof be entered on the Journal, or unless the party complained of has been served with a copy of the complaint against him, and shall have had an opportunity of being heard in his defense. On the question of removal, the ayes and noes shall be entered on the Journal."

Now, there is a very efficient remedy against an inefficient or improper Judge, in cases where he has not committed an impeachable offense. The views which have been advanced by the gentleman from Monterey seem to me to go rather to section two than to section three. I was unable to comprehend any portion of his argument as applying to section three, and therefore will not be called upon to respond to his argument in regard to section two, as adopted yesterday. The propositions contained in the substitute offered by the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, might be made consistent with the system, but it seems to me it is better to adopt the report as made by the committee. Otherwise we are legislating men into office instead of having an election for all of the officers, as I understand the system is intended to be applied throughout the whole series of officers to be elected under the Constitution. By Mr. Cross' amendment we would have to absolutely legislate certain gentlemen into office, or extend their terms of office for a considerable period of time. I see no special inconvenience to result from the election of Judges throughout. If so, it will be merely temporary. The Court calendar would come to the new Supreme Court with all the undetermined cases, and if they work under the system we have prescribed they will be able to decide these cases and keep up their current business. I see no real reason for changing section three, and I believe that all of the committee, upon that subject, concur with me. Those whom I have talked with are satisfied that section three is better than any substitute which can be offered for it. I hope that the amendments will be voted down and the section adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: This report of the committee, while I do not feel disposed to find fault with it particularly, still it has one objection, in my opinion. It legislates men out of office. Now, while I do not approve of legislating into office, I am just as strongly opposed on the other hand to legislating them out of office. This idea of a Justice of a Supreme Court being reëlected in consequence of having been a good and efficient Judge, is all a delusion. It never has happened in this State, and I do not believe it ever will happen. If a Justice of our Supreme Court is nominated for reëlection, and happens to be on the ticket that wins, he is reëlected. If he happens to be on the ticket in the minority, he is defeated. I have known some of our best Judges defeated because they were put up by a party that was slightly in the minority. I should prefer some system by which you could allow the present Judges to fill out the terms for which they have been elected. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, does not accomplish that. I will admit, I would like if some amendment was introduced which would accomplish that end. I have none prepared, but of the two evils I believe I shall choose the least, and vote for the amendment offered by Mr. Cross, believing that we have a very fair Supreme Court already, taking them all around, and I would rather, for my part, legislate two or three Judges into office, or into two or three years' extension of time, than to legislate them all out of office at once. I know there is a disposition among a great many to have a new deal. For instance, we have wiped out the whole Senate, and we will have a new deal when it comes to the next Legislature. I must say that I would prefer to allow the hold-over Senators to remain in office, and while I do not strictly approve of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada, while it does not exactly meet my views, I shall vote for it, as being better than the section presented by the committee.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I am aware we are treading upon dangerous grounds, as about one half of these men are professional men who think they know all about this matter, and I presume they should know more than a man not connected with the profession; but I am certainly in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour. There need not be a change in the Court, because we elect every four years, because I believe that the people of this State will reëlect men, and continue to reëlect men, if they are good men for the place. It looks as if these gentlemen were afraid of the people, when they desire to place men for twelve years on the bench. They say men can be removed. Not to exceed twenty men have ever been successfully impeached in all the States of the Union, while at any one time there has never been less than a thousand that ought to have been impeached. I think Judge Rolfe is mistaken, and I think probably his is the only instance where a good Judge has failed to be recognized by the people. I believe the Judge was a good Judge——

MR. ROLFE. I was speaking of Supreme Judges.

MR. LARKIN. I thought you referred to District Judges. I am in favor of electing men for four years, and if these men fill the positions well the people will reëlect them. There are men capable of to-morrow taking their seats upon that bench and filling the position as well as men who are now there and have been there twelve years. No man who goes upon that bench and does right, no man who stands squarely, need be afraid of the people of California; and it looks as if we were bound by a Court that we could not get rid of. It is true that under section ten two thirds of the Legislature may remove a Judge. The same reason that hinders men being impeached would apply there. Its effect is the same, and the same influence is brought to bear to prohibit the Legislature from acting. I am in favor of electing for four years and no longer, and I regret the haste with which the Convention passed yesterday the section increasing the number of Judges to seven. I believe that five men would be plenty; but that matter has been disposed of until we get into Convention. So far as I am concerned I shall then vote to reduce it to five.

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendments to this section may not be adopted. In regard to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, to continue the present Judges in office, I have this to say: that the terms of two of the present Judges expire the ensuing season. Then there will be only three to be continued. His amendment may continue them for twelve years, because they might draw the long term. Then we would not only submit to the people the question of adopting the Constitution, but the election of these men for twelve years.

MR. CROSS. Two Judges are to be elected for twelve years. The five are to be divided—two for four and three for eight years.

MR. VAN DYKE. I think it would encroach upon the plan of the committee, and upon their scheme for the new judicial system. I would not, however, have any objection to continuing the Judges for the unexpired term, if it could be done without deranging the scheme proposed for the new judicial system, but inasmuch as it cannot be done, I think the amendment should be rejected. Now, in reference to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour. If there is one vice in our judicial system more potent than another, it is the election of Judges. We can remedy the evil somewhat by a prolongation of the term. Now, four years is a shorter period than ever has been recognized in this State. The first Constitution fixed the terms at six years, but when the Constitution was amended, it was extended to ten years. The people of this State have never objected to the extension of the term, and now it is proposed to go back further than the Constitution of eighteen hundred and forty-nine, and fix the term at four years. I say that the people of the State have not demanded any such thing. They have approved of the extension to ten years, and will approve of the extension to twelve years. I think both amendments should be voted down.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I will state, as regards the term of service, that the committee had that matter pretty thoroughly discussed. There was a difference of opinion. Some held that we should have a long term, others that they should hold for a short term. I believe that in some of the Eastern States they elect for short terms, and the experience there has led them to believe that short terms are good. It gives the people an opportunity of removing, at times, Judges not fit to hold the position. But it is well known that in the eastern State there is conservatism that does not belong to this coast. It is believed that a short term of service would be not only detrimental to the lawyer but to the bench. There is too much enterprise in politics in this State to have elections for Judges so frequent. The experience of the past has shown that we will have changes, notwithstanding we have good Judges. I say that a principle that will work well in the eastern States will not work well here. You will throw Judges into politics, and make the office of Supreme Judge merely a political office in this State. You must look at the affairs of each State differently. It seems to me that the term of office fixed in the report is about right. And as to continuing in office those who are now on the bench, I think it impolitic. You might as well say that you would continue in office some District Judges, or carry the principle still farther and extend the term of other officers. It is a principle that would not be right.

REMARKS OF MR. EAGON.

MR. EAGON. Mr. Chairman: I hope, sir, that these amendments will all be voted down, and I still further hope that this report, as it came from the Committee on Judiciary, will be adopted as a whole. It is true, sir, I was one of that committee, through the kindness of the President, and I must say that I learned a great deal from the discussions that took place in that committee. There were gentlemen upon that committee who were thoroughly posted in what the judicial system of this State is, and what it ought to be. It is not expected that other gentlemen who are not familiar with the practice in the Courts, and with the organization of the judiciary of this State, would be so familiar with it as those who make a business of it and understand it. Now, sir, this matter received a thorough discussion in that committee. It did not come up as it does in this committee, without consideration. It was discussed night after night, and week after week, and it was considered by gentlemen, many of whom we would vote for for Supreme Judges to-day, and some of whom have honored that position in the past, and they came to the conclusion that it was the best system that could be devised for the State of California. I am clearly convinced, from the discussions that took place, and from the reasons given in that committee, that no better system could be devised for the best interests of California than the system here presented by that committee. Now, so far as long terms and short terms are concerned, let me say this: that we have heretofore endeavored to take the judiciary out of politics. We established a separate and special election for that express purpose; but from the shortness of the term, it did not answer the purpose, and every person is now crying for the abolition of that system of election. Give us a long term, and by that means we obviate the necessity of men going into politics for judicial positions. They also learn what is the interest of the people of the State. That is what the people want. Who ever heard of wanting to turn out of office a Judge that acted according to the best interests of the people in Courts of justice? Who wants them in for a short term if they do their duty and act as they should act? As I had occasion to say, there were gentlemen on that committee who would to-day, if they were candidates, be elected by an overwhelming majority by the people of this State. They present this report to you, and ask you to adopt it, and I say that they are the best judges of it. They are men who in everyday life follow this business, and know what they are doing. They are men in whose opinion, if you were engaged in a lawsuit, you would place the utmost confidence in, and to whom you would say: take my case and defend it. These men have no object in coming before you and asking you to adopt anything that would not be right and just and proper. They have as much at stake as anybody, and perhaps more than the ordinary run of people. This is a good system, and I know it from having heard it thoroughly discussed night after night, and week after week, and the committee have come to the conclusion that it is the best system that can be devised, and it is the one which ought to be adopted. I hope that all amendments to it will be voted down, and the report will be taken as it is, because I know that it is right.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I reluctantly come to the conclusion to oppose both of these amendments; and in order to state my reasons I shall have to call things by their right names again. If there is one question upon which the bar of the State of California, and especially the City of San Francisco, is more unanimous than upon another, it is that they desire to change the personnel of the Supreme Court. That is reason enough for my opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, and I will stop right there. To illustrate a little further, however, in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour. He desires short terms, that these Judges may be brought nearer the people. I think experience is unfortunate for his argument. It is a well known fact, sir, that the worst, the most unfit man that we have upon the bench of a District Court in San Francisco, is the man who, by some hook or crook, is always re-elected. And so it will ever be much easier to choose the right Judge in the first case than it will be to defeat a bad one when he comes up for office a second time, and for reasons which will suggest themselves to every attorney. I need not allude to the disclosures of the gentleman from San Francisco, the other day, who is not now in his seat, and I only say this because experience shows that the people do not exercise good judgment in these instances in making those changes. Owing to influence, intrigue, swapping, and all the other things that control the question, the bad Judge is often reëlected. These were reasons enough, but, as was explained by the Chairman of the committee, section ten completely cures all the objections that were raised here by the gentleman who offered the amendment, that the Legislature may, by concurrent resolution and two-thirds vote, remove either of these Judges.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I supposed that the Committee on Judiciary would not have changed the term of office of the Judges of the Supreme Court, except on account of the classification which seemed to make it necessary to make the terms twelve years instead of ten. Now, sir, I cannot see that Judges ought to be elected for a longer term than any other officers. I do not believe in so long a term as that of twelve years, especially when, as in this case, it may be conveniently obviated. No other officers in this State are elected for more than four years, and the Judiciary Committee have recognized the necessity which may arise for the change of Judges for less cause than that which would be cause of impeachment by providing for the removal of Judges by Act of the Legislature. There is therefore recognized a necessity for a provision for change. I prefer giving that opportunity to an election. The faithful Judge, as a rule, will be reëlected, if he wishes to be. Under our system I believe every Judge who has been a candidate for reëlection, with the exception of one, has been reëlected under this ten-year term of office, and that in eighteen hundred and sixty-seven was under a most peculiar political condition of affairs in the State of California. Now, sir, this report proposes to extend the term from this long term of ten years to twelve years, and I suppose for the reason which I have stated, that in order to classify it was necessary to make the term twelve instead of ten. Now, I confess I might be suited with a term of eight years, but in order to classify it will be necessary to make the terms twelve or six, and I think by striking out the word "twelve" wherever it occurs and inserting "six," and "four" where it occurs and inserting "two," that it will be a better proposition as to term than the twelve-year term provided by the committee. As to the proposition to continue the present Judges in office or extend their terms, I think that is so unusual, and so little reason has been given for it, that it is scarcely worth discussing. I shall offer, if it is not now in order, at the proper time, an amendment to strike out the word "twelve" wherever it occurs, and the word "four" wherever it occurs, and insert in their places the words "six" and "two."

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I certainly am opposed to striking out twelve and inserting any smaller number. I would be in favor of a longer term. If there is any department of the Government that ought to be stable, it is the judiciary. If there is any officer who should be as sacred as possible, as to his tenure of office, it is the Judge. When they go into a Court of justice they are expected to leave every other consideration behind them except the merits of that case. The scales ought to be so even, sir, that neither the slightest breath of popular clamor, nor the slightest consideration of policy should change them in the least. Now, sir, under our system of government, the whole American system of government, the judiciary is by far the most important department to the people. It is about the only one that acts directly upon the people. The Legislature cannot take away your rights or mine without taking away the rights of the whole community. It acts upon the people as a body. Laws are general and uniform in their operations, and it is not very probable, sir, that the Legislature, responsible to the whole people, are going to pass onerous laws which affect the whole people; but, sir, our personal rights are determined—our rights of life, liberty, and property are determined by our Judges. The Courts are the great reservoir of power under this system. We have not a solitary right of person, property, or life itself, that may not come under the power of the Judge. Now, sir, the Judge ought to be in a position where, considering that he is human, and governed to some extent, insensibly, perhaps, by the motives that influence men, he is independent to the farthest possible degree. Now, sir, do you want to put a man upon the bench with the knowledge that within a few years he will have to be reëlected, or else lose his seat? Do you tell me that the very best minds will not be influenced by this question of popularity? A Judge, in determining private rights, should not be influenced in the least by any thought of the popularity of his decision. I can point to-day to one or two gentlemen who were as good men as ever were there, who failed of a reëlectioon, or renomination, because one or two decisions they happened to make were unpopular, and their friends were afraid to nominate them at that time. I say, when a man goes upon the bench, for my part, I am in favor of electing him for life, or, at least, during good behavior. He ought to be paid salary enough to put him beyond the reach of want and beyond the reach of corruption; and in the second place, a term of office so long and so secure that he is not afraid of the people; that he is not afraid of popular opinion.

It is a perfect delusion to say that a good Judge will be reëlected. We know, sir, the political history of this State, and you must keep that fact in view. We know, sir, that almost from the foundation of this State government the people of this State have been divided into two great political parties, nearly equal; and we may assume that that will be the case in the future. That it was impossible to tell which would triumph one year and which the next. Now, sir, it will happen always, almost invariably, that the political party that happens to be in power that year will elect the Judges. It never has been otherwise, that I know of, except perhaps in one or two cases, and then just in San Francisco. When men go to a general election they do not vote for men, they vote for political ideas. When they go to the primary meetings they vote for men, but when they go to a general election they vote for ideas; and you need not tell me that if the Republican party is in power that they are going to elect Democratic Judges, or if the Democratic party is in power they are going to elect Republican Judges. The men will be elected who are nominated by the party that carries the State that year. I do not care how well a Judge discharges his duty, if he does not happen to be on the winning ticket he cannot be reëlected any more than in the case of a Sheriff or County Clerk. Therefore the argument that a good Judge will be reëlected is worth nothing. Now, sir, I ask if it is a good position to put a Judge in, to have him in the power of the changes and the waves of political sentiment? I say, no. It is the same with other officers. Talk about men being reëlected because they have been good officers! We have in this State to-day—although he does not belong to my party—a gentleman acting as Governor of this State, whom I believe, in all respects, has made a good Governor. But, sir, if he should run for Governor again he could not be elected at all, unless his party happened to be in power. It is the same with Judges.

The only safety is in having a bench independent in all things; independent of money influence, independent of the influence of popular clamor, independent of political influence; and, without that, you cannot have a pure and independent judiciary. And, sir, there is no position in the world that requires such high qualities of manhood as that of the Judge; there is certainly none in which more character is required to withstand the influences that sway men outside of Court. More than that, we generally take Judges from middle life at least. You take them right from the midst of a business which they have followed up for years, and upon which they depend for a livelihood; keep them away from that business four years, or six years, and that business is destroyed they have to go back and commence all over again, when they are in the decline of life, to build up another business. When you take a man in the prime of life, and put him in the office of Judge of the Supreme Court, you should give him a term that he may expect for a great portion of the balance of his life. Put him there under these circumstances, and give him salary enough so that he does not have to look after his own private interest, and to pinch himself for money to pay his monthly bills, and you have an independent judiciary; and that is the only way. Let him not be dependent upon the conflicting waves of public opinion, upon the influence of money, or upon political influence. I hope that these amendments will not be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the principle enunciated by the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, and hope that the substance of the report that they have presented here will be adopted by this Convention. I believe in a long term judiciary. I believe that it will advance the interests of the State and purify the judiciary. If there has been any one thing that has been a greater disgrace to the State than another, it is some of the political decisions made in response to public clamor or party interest. It is only necessary to refer back to the decision rendered by the judiciary, that any person who started from the Atlantic coast, as soon as he arrived he became a citizen of the State of California, and from that time he was entitled to vote.

MR. ROLFE. The Supreme Court never decided that.

MR. TINNIN. That decision was made, and it had an influence in this State. It had an influence, and controlled the vote of this State. It was a political matter——

MR. TERRY. It was an opinion of the Attorney-General. The Court had nothing to do with it.

MR. TINNIN. I refer to the Know-Nothing times. I know that men were influenced in that way and prevented from voting. There are political decisions. Gentlemen argue here that only Judges who have served faithfully will be reëlected. My experience is to the contrary. I have attended the conventions of the Democratic party, of the Independent party, and the Republican party; and what is the argument advanced therein in regard to judicial positions? Why, A already has the office, and the party owes him no more recompense; his fealty has been paid for; now give it to B, or some one else who has served the party. That argument invariably controls the convention, and you will find that those who have held the office are ousted to make room for others. Public clamor has its influence even upon Judges. As soon as you place a man in office he immediately looks out for further advancement, and in order to advance his own private interest he will make decisions in accordance with public clamor. Is that the interest of the public? We find very often that this public sentiment changes very quickly. About three years ago there was in the Legislature of this State a bill to build a railroad in Tuolumne County. Those people came up here by the hundreds and clamored for the Legislature to pass the bill, and finally got the bill through, but the Governor pocketed the bill. The result was that the Governor was burned in effigy in Tuolumne County, and the only gentleman who opposed the bill has been sent since to this Constitutional Convention and has the entire confidence of his constituents. Now, sir, that shows how soon public clamor will change. I hope for this reason that the long term judiciary will be adopted. It will certainly purify the judicial system of this State.

REMARKS OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: Having adopted the second section of this report, it seems to me that we should adopt the third, as it is a link in the chain of the new judicial system. We have had the ten-year law as to the tenure of our Supreme Court Justices, and I do not know that it has been subject to any animadversion on account of the length of time. I do not know of any complaint that has ever been uttered against it. As there have been no complaints, and as it is proposed now to extend the term two years simply in order to make this report consistent, and to put the new machinery in practical and working order, I favor the proposition. The only hope of the country, alike in troublous and peaceful times, is in a fearless, outspoken, and independent judiciary. We are peculiarly a people subject to impulses, political changes, and popular clamor. When one occupies so high a position as this he should not only be removed, but should feel himself removed from all extraneous influence. If he does his duty he must combat prejudice and passion. Personal favoritism he must have none. When all else is clamorous—the populace, the press, the bar—the good and great Judge is expected to possess, and must possess, the impress of the equal mind.

Those who have enlightened the jurisprudence of this country the most held a life office. We should have had no such luminous example as Marshall had he not been appointed for life, and thus been enabled to give that close, consecutive study to the various subjects which were presented, especially to the Constitution of his country, which, by his power of analysis and refinement, he made beautiful, symmetrical, and strong, and such as the early fathers intended it should be. Look at the English system, too, and let it not be forgotten that it is from England we get our common law, with its amplifications, its nice discriminations, its perfect adjustments. Under rotary, removable Judges it would have been hopelessly dwarfed, and would never have attained to the proportions it has acquired by the lives and the life office of the Justices and Chancellors.

Suppose you were to provide for the election of Justices of the Supreme Court every four years; would you not at once subject them to the nervous uneasiness of offending some friend, to a morbid sensitiveness that they might lose their position, subject them to the temptation of trying to titilate the public, favor the strong at the expense of the weak, and ingratiate some crafty politician who had control of the local hustings?

We want to have our Judges set apart. Not so with the other departments. There is reason why the Legislature should be changed frequently, because our people demand different laws. Changes are suggested, changes are required, and the whole thing is more or less an experiment. The excellence of the judicial system on the other hand is predicated not on change, but on certainty, on permanence and precedent. What has been said of the Legislature may also be said of the executive department. The State is plentifully supplied with men who are sufficiently honest, and with sufficient judgment to fill the place of Governor or legislator, but quite a different order of talent is required to hand down the laws unimpaired, to adhere to precedent, and to refine without over-refinement.

The Judge should be modeled after the demeanor of Hastings at the bar of the Lords, with "the equal mind" engraven on his forehead, but in all things else unlike him, and to translate literally a sentiment from the Epistles of Horace, whatever may be his party, he should have blazoned above the bench: "Bound to swear to the ipse dixit of no master; whither my convictions carry me, thither I am borne a welcome guest."

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I do not rise, sir, for the purpose of entering into anything of a lengthy or elaborate argument upon this subject; but the more we hear from all sides upon this subject the more thoroughly I am convinced that the report of the committee on section three is correct; that it has been thoroughly digested; that it is in accordance with what is right, and that it is almost unexceptionable. The different amendments proposed may be measures that are good, and in some respects they might work well, but when we consider the matter in its vast bearings, I am convinced that the length of time is decidedly reasonable. Such lawyers as our Judges should be are not reached in a moment. They are a matter of living progress. I am not going to advocate putting Judges in for life, but it is evident that a man with great energies, with fine discrimination, can see and know at once, and in a number of years he commences to make progress, and goes on successively, so that he is able to decide upon the great principles of justice to better purpose than he possibly could in the commencement. As to political influences, I think that they are decidedly in opposition to justice, especially when elections are frequent. These arguments have been presented before this body quite extensively, so that I do not think it is necessary for any of us to dwell particularly upon this subject; but I feel that I shall vote for section three as presented by the committee.

MR. OVERTON. Mr. Chairman: I call for the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer to that section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section three by striking out all after the word 'office,' in the twelfth line, down to and including the word 'office,' in the fifteenth line."

REMARKS OF MR. BELCHER.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of this report, as made by the committee, with the exception of the amendment which I have just sent up to be read. This report provides that in case of a vacancy the Governor shall appoint a person to fill the vacancy, and then an election shall be had to fill the vacancy. The amendment which I have sent up simply provides that in case of a vacancy the person appointed by the Governor shall hold for the remainder of the unexpired term. Instead of having an election to fill the vacancy already filled by the appointment of the Governor, let that appointee hold for the balance of the unexpired term. I think that would be an improvement upon these frequent elections. I should, myself, be in favor of an appointive judiciary. I believe it would be better than an elective judiciary, but it has become the policy in these later years to have all the Judges elected by the people. Now, I am in favor, when the Governor has appointed some one to fill the office for a year or so, of letting him hold the office for the unexpired term. It does not interfere with this system at all; it does not derange it in any way, but it simply leaves the man appointed by the Governor to occupy the office for one, two, or three years; until the regular election comes to fill the office. I believe it would be a proper amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the principle of this amendment. It is the sense of this Convention that all officers should be elected by the people, and if the people are qualified to elect their Governors and legislators they are qualified to elect their Judges. When a vacancy occurs by death it would not imply a number of elections, and it would create very little inconvenience to vote for one man more at the next general election. The amendment proposed would give the Governor, in case a vacancy occurred in the first year after an election, a right to appoint for eleven years. He may appoint for eleven, ten, or eight years. It seems to me that the only thing necessary, the only reason for giving the Governor the power at all, is to have the office filled and to have the business transacted until the general election comes round. He is to put in a person temporarily, until the people can act. In that respect the report of the committee is right, that the Governor should appoint only until the time comes when the people may elect a person for the unexpired term. I hope that this amendment will be voted down.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment to amend section three, and the pending amendment, as a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 3. The Justices of the Supreme Court shall be elected by the qualified electors of the State at large, at the general State elections, at the times and places that State officers are elected, and the term of office shall be ten years from and after the first Monday of January next succeeding their election, except those elected at the first election, who, at their first meeting, shall so classify themselves by lot, that one Justice shall go out of office every two years—the Justice having the shortest term to serve shall be Chief Justice. If a vacancy occur in the office of a Justice, the Governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a Justice to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the Justice so elected shall hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term."

MR. WYATT. The amendment moved there contemplates——

MR. TERRY. I rise to a point of order. The amendment is out of order, for the reason that it is in conflict with section two, which is already adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. It could not be a question of order. It is competent for the committee to adopt inconsistent amendments if it thinks proper.

MR. WYATT. That is just what I am after, to reconsider what we have done yesterday with reference to the election of seven Judges, or of constituting the Supreme Court with seven Judges.

THE CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman offers it on that ground the Chair must decide it out of order.

MR. HOWARD. Then it seems——

THE CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman avows that is the object, the Chair will hold that it is out of order. The Committee of the Whole cannot reconsider.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I submit that in presenting a proposition here, this committee is not tied or bound by anything that they have done yesterday.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that they are bound. There can be no reconsideration in Committee of the Whole.

MR. WYATT. I most respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair, to see whether that question be carried by the decision of the Chair, or by the action of the committee.

THE CHAIRMAN. It takes three to appeal.

MR. HERRINGTON. I second the appeal.

MR. WYATT. I apprehend that I have not the necessary assistance from the way gentlemen act.

MR. EVEY. I second the appeal.

MR. WILSON, of Tehama. I second the appeal.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman proposes an amendment which he declares is for the purpose of reconsidering the action of yesterday. The Chair explained, on a former occasion, why the Committee of the Whole cannot reconsider any vote. Its action is binding upon itself. The gentleman now takes an appeal from the decision of the Chair. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee?

MR. LAINE. It seems to me that the Chair is in error. On yesterday we took no vote upon section two, but simply refused to amend it. The committee took no vote adopting that section. So, it seems to me, that this may be in order now.

THE CHAIRMAN. The committee refused to amend that section, which is equivalent to the adoption of it, and the report back to the Convention would be that provision of the report as adopted by the committee. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee?

The decision of the Chair was sustained.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Yuba, Mr. Belcher.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the words 'twelve,' and 'eight,' wherever they occur relative to the term of office, and insert 'six' and 'four;' also strike out 'four,' where it occurs, and insert 'two.'"

MR. JOYCE. I second the amendment.

MR. MCCALLUM. I think that will read correctly. The idea presented is, as I stated before, simply to reduce the term of office to six years intead of twelve. If the Committee of the Whole are in favor of the idea of a six years term, and an election every two years, there is no difficulty about the plan, because it does not interfere with the plan of the Judiciary Committee.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section four.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 4. The Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity; also, in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real estate, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, or in which the demand, exclusive of interest or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars; also in cases of forcible entry and detainer, and in all such probate matters as may be provided by law; also in all criminal cases amounting to felony, on questions of law alone. The Court shall also have power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, and habeas corpus, and also all writs necessary or proper to the complete exercise of its appellate jurisdiction. Each of the Justices shall have power to issue writs of habeas corpus to any part of the State, upon petition by or on behalf of any person held in actual custody, and may make such writs returnable before himself, or the Supreme Court, or before any Superior Court in the State, or before any Judge thereof.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by striking out the words 'three hundred' in line five, and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'one thousand.'"

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: The section already provides that an appeal may be taken in all cases which involve the title of possession of real estate or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, or in which the demand, exclusive of interest, or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars; also in cases of forcible entry and detainer, and in all such probate matters as may be provided by law; also in all criminal cases amounting to felony. What I propose to amend is this: This section proposes to give the right of appeal in all cases in which the amount in dispute is three hundred dollars. Now, sir, I believe that the business of our appellate Court has been unnecessarily retarded by appeals in small matters. I do not see why in the world, if a man has a dispute with another about four or five hundred dollars, an ordinary case, the Judge of the District Court, or a Superior Judge, under this system, either with or without a jury, cannot do as much justice in that case as is possible to be done by any Court. The fact of the business is that the case only can be tried in the nisi prius Court anyway. When you go into an appellate Court you have only the skeleton of a case. There is no flesh and blood. Only a ghost of it. It is more ephemeral. It is a mere determining of an abstract question. Now, sir, I believe that benefits would accrue to litigants in all that class of cases, if the decision of the Court below was final. In the first place, you can only try a case where the parties and the witnesses are before the Court that tries it. In the second place, you would have your case tried there. As it is now, the cases are not half tried, because it is a natural understanding that everything is going to be appealed. The lawyers know they are going to appeal. The Judge upon the bench says: "My responsibility is not very great, for if I make an error this will be appealed." It may be said that in the hurry of a nisi prius trial a good Judge may commit an error. Upon a motion for a new trial he has plenty of time to reconsider, and if he finds that he has committed an error and has done an injury to a party, having the whole case before him, he can grant a new trial. That can be done with very little expense. Why is he not in a position to do justice in that case? Why cannot more justice be done there than anywhere else? It may be said that a man ought to have a right to appeal in any case. You have abandoned that principle now, because you provide that he can only appeal in a case involving three hundred dollars. It is a mere question of where you shall draw the line. I do not believe men are much benefited by appeals in these small cases. And I believe that for all the parties the best justice they could get could be had right there in that Court. Suppose a party appeals in a matter involving four or five hundred dollars. If he does not get a reversal he is so much more the loser. Now if he gets a reversal the chances are a new trial is ordered. He may win there again or he may not. If he does not win he has got to appeal again. If he wins the other side appeals, and his outside expenses will amount to more than the whole matter involved; and I believe that more justice would be done to litigants if appeals were cut off in these small cases than will be done otherwise, and more than that, the cases would be so much better tried. When all parties have an understanding that the judgment is final, that judgment will be much more apt to be right than where each party understands there is going to be an appeal. It will keep a great many cases out of the Supreme Court, would facilitate their business, and would give them more time to examine leading cases which involve precedents. These appeals, instead of doing litigants good, do them harm and involve them in extra costs. There is only one argument against this amendment, and that is that a man having a small case should have as much right to appeal as one having a large case. But you have already abandoned that principle by fixing the limit at three hundred dollars. Now there are a great many cases where the right of appeal should be taken away. Suppose I claim that a man owes me a thousand dollars on account. It is a mere question of fact. There are no abstruse legal questions, no question about the title of real estate. It is a simple question of fact. Now, sir, that case can be tried and more justice can be done to the parties with the understanding that the trial shall be ended in the lower Court than where you grant an appeal. In the end these appeals do injury to everybody, to both sides of a case and to the clients. The lawyers would try their cases more carefully and thoroughly if they did not have this right of appeal. And then, sir, you send to the appellate Court only the more important cases, and those which involve questions of precedents.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I do not know whether the gentleman has resided much in the interior counties of this State, but if he has he has certainly learned that nearly every interior county has a ring, and that that ring has influence more or less with the Judges that sit there. Now, if the District or Superior Judge has an opportunity of trying for the last time a set of cases, it gives him the power, which he will use, to reëlect himself and his associates in that county. I have had some experience in this question, and I know something about it. The principle that appeals should be allowed is correct. I think if the gentleman will look at it he will see that there is no line drawn. It allows appeals in all cases in Justices' Courts to the Superior Courts, and all cases in the Superior Courts are allowed to be appealed to the Supreme Court. Now, there are many cases of three hundred dollars of which the law is just as important and just as difficult as cases of three hundred thousand dollars. If a man has a case involving three hundred dollars, he has as much right to all the advantages of the administration of law as the man who has a case involving three hundred thousand dollars. You say you will give the advantages of the Supreme Court to men who have large amounts involved, but you refuse them to men who have but small amounts. Now, I take it that it is against the principle of government. The principle of government is to protect the weak, the strong will look out for themselves. I would be in favor of allowing appeal in all cases if it was only one hundred dollars. Let there be one appeal—one appeal from the Justices' to the Superior Court, and one appeal from the Superior Court to the Supreme Court in all cases.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: In this respect the provision in the report of the committee is identical with the Constitution as it is. Now, the committee have proposed a scheme, or plan, to facilitate the decision of cases by an increase of the Judges of the Supreme Court, and by a provision that that Court shall sit in sections, and also with reference to a Superior Court in every county in the State. There was more argument when the Constitution was as it is now for making the limitation one thousand dollars than there is under this proposed plan of the committee. But there was one argument, I submit to the gentleman from Sacramento, which ought to be deemed conclusive in this article reported by the committee. While it presents many beneficial features which entirely, in my judgment, overcome the objectionable features of it, this thing must be said as against it: that is, in providing that every county in the State shall have a Superior Court; and the counties are to be classified so that the compensation shall be but two thousand dollars; and yet, you take small counties like Mono and Inyo, it is not expected, or cannot be expected, to have so high an order of talent in the Superior Court Judges under that clause as under the present system. Therefore, there will be more reason for giving the right of appeal, or rather retaining the right of appeal, in all cases involving three hundred dollars and upwards, than under the present system. Now, sir, it is very expensive to appeal. Under the present rule there are not many appeals in that class of cases; and yet, as has been intimated, it is just as important that justice should be done to the poor man where the amount involved is three hundred dollars and upwards, as that justice should be done to the rich man where the sums in controversy amount to thousands. I do not think that there should be a disposition on the part of the committee to recommend any change of the Constitution from what it has been upon that subject.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section four, by striking out the word 'three' in line five, and inserting the word 'six' in its place.'"

REMARKS OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say a few words in support of this amendment. Now, it will be observed by almost every lawyer that has any practice that a case cannot be carried to the Supreme Court scarcely for three hundred dollars. The man who wins the suit is loser, and this section encourages these small appeals. Lawyers will advise their clients to take them that they may get the fees. If you would place it at six hundred dollars, if a man wins his appealed case he would have something left. It strikes me as an argument in favor of raising the appellate jurisdiction, that the wealthy man can afford to appeal and to keep the poor man in litigation for the purpose of vexation. The rich man appeals and can satisfy his hatred and animosity, and where the poor man wins his case it costs him more than it is worth.

MR. HILBORN. Is there a State in the Union where limit is fixed so high?

MR. LAINE. I am going upon the common sense of the proposition. I believe it will be beneficial to the people of this State, regardless of other commonwealths. If there are any other gentlemen whose judgment are the other way they will vote against it. I know that in some of the States of the Union they have limited appeals in Justices Courts, and I believe we ought to do it here. Remarkably so I notice in the Constitution of Texas, they have provided that in cases in Justices Courts involving twenty dollars there should not be any appeal. I believe that a limitation of an appeal to six hundred dollars would be valuable to the people of the State.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amount will remain as fixed by the committee. If it were within my power I should certainly strike out any amount and allow an appeal for any amount. There are a number of States in the Union where the appeal does not depend upon the amount in controversy at all. I do not think that it depends upon the amount in controversy in the State of New York; at all events it did not a few years ago. In the State of Michigan an appeal can be taken to the Supreme Court for five dollars, and some of the most important law questions that have been decided by Courts of last resort, have been decided in cases where the amount involved was merely nominal. The argument used by the gentleman from Santa Clara that if an appeal be taken in a case involving but three hundred dollars, that the expenses of the appeal will totally use up the amount of the client's judgment, is a matter not to be considered by this Convention. It is a matter that rests solely and alone with the client. If a man sees fit to appeal he pays the expense, but the privilege ought to remain. The gentleman says that the rich man can increase the expenses of the poor man by appealing; but the gentleman forgets that the rich man could manipulate juries much easier in a Justice's Court than the poor man could, and by the manipulation of a petit jury in the District Court, the rich man securing a judgment against the poor man, the only resort of the poor man would be to make an application for a new trial. That application being mainly or wholly discretionary with the District Judge, he could refuse the application for a new trial, and the poor man would be wholly remediless against the rich. By leaving out the limitation we would be giving justice to the poor man and not to the rich man. I think that three hundred dollars is not small enough, and I should be in favor of putting it at fifty dollars.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I should be in favor of the report of the committee as it now stands were it not for the system under which the Court itself is organized, and I am in favor now of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, so long as the system that has been adopted here by this Committee of the Whole shall remain as it now stands; because I believe that in every instance where a person is prevented from any further litigation it will be to his best interest that it shall be adopted and he prevented from taking any further steps. The very first provision that we find here with reference to the appellate Court, is a discretionary power lodged in the highest officer of that Court—a discretionary power which reaches to every case and every character of case that is appealable to the Supreme Court. And it is lodged in the discretion of that officer to say whether that appeal shall be to the Court in bank or not. It is not a mere appeal that is taken and ends litigation. But when a case is decided in one branch against a man he may be able to get it into the Court in bank, for the purpose of determining finally that he is wrong or that he is right. I say that the gentleman from Santa Clara is right when he says that it will cost more to take an appeal than the amount involved in every instance. There will be found always some excuse for carrying a case into bank when the case is decided against some large corporation or capitalist. I have seen too many of these cases tried in Courts of nisi prius, and the favors that are conferred upon them. Now, I say that in every case where an appeal can be barred, I am standing for barring the appeal, because in such instances I apprehend that even handed justice will be done in the Court nisi prius. Now, upon a proper organization of this Court, I admit with the gentleman from San Francisco, that I would be in favor of an appeal based upon five dollars, because a man would stand his equal chance in the upper tribunal; but until another system is adopted than that presented by the committee, I am in favor of cutting off every appeal that is possible to cut off from the Court nisi prius.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section four by striking out the words 'amounting to felony' in the seventh line, and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'prosecuted by indictment.'"

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman:. The Legislature have determined heretofore the jurisdiction of the Courts, by defining the punishment of the crime, and the definition of felony, given in the Code, and always given in the statute of this State—it means any offense which is punished by death, or imprisonment in the State Prison. There have always been certain crimes known to the statutes of this State, the status of which, as to whether they were felonies or misdemeanors, could only be determined by the judgment of a Court. There were cases of assaults, felonious assaults, in which the Court may either punish by imprisonment in the State Prison, by imprisonment in the County Jail, or by fine, so that in these cases, after the jury returned the verdict, it was never known whether a man had been convicted of a felony until after the judgment of the Court had been pronounced; and the right of appeal depended, not upon the verdict of the jury, but upon the sentence of the Court. If he was sentenced simply to fine or imprisonment in the County Jail, he had no appeal; whereas, if he was sentenced to one month in the State Prison, his right to appeal would be perfect. I propose to extend the right of appeal to all cases prosecuted by indictment, so that when a man is indicted he is entitled to have an appeal from the judgment if it is against him. I can see no reason against this rule. The only reason that existed heretofore was the great number of cases before the Supreme Court—that the Court was overworked; but we have provided in this report for two branches of the Supreme Court, and that reason does not obtain.

MR. BEERSTECHER. The committee has adopted a report which allows prosecutions on information without indictment. Now, if you say "indictment," that would probably cut off those who were prosecuted on information.

MR. TERRY. I will accept that amendment. Make it "prosecuted by indictment or information." No, that won't do, for "information" covers cases before the Police Courts.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Suppose some counties do away with the Grand Jury?

MR. VAN DYKE. Add to it, "in a Court of record."

MR. TERRY. Yes, I will put it in that form. Will the Secretary read it as it would stand then?

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section four by striking out the words 'amounting to felony,' in the seventh line, and inserting in lieu thereof the words 'prosecuted by indictment or information in a Court of record.'"

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: Whether the amendment should be in that form, or in any form to express the idea which the gentleman evidently designs, I think we ought not to change the Constitution. We propose a higher order of tribunal hereafter to try that class of cases which have heretofore been prosecuted by indictment. Heretofore they have been tried, with the exception of capital cases, in the County Courts. Now we propose Superior Courts, which are to take the place of District Courts and County Courts, and which are in contemplation of the same character as District Courts, and therefore there will be a higher order of talent generally, and more correct decisions, we may assume, in the Superior Courts, than have been heretofore in the County Courts. This involves cases of libel. I do not know what may be the decision of this Committee of the Whole when it comes into Convention, but I will say, that from the expressions I have heard, there is a disposition among those who favored the amendment presented by Judge Fawcett to let the newspapers have their way about that matter, and to not furnish any of them with the pretense that they oppose the Constitution upon the assumed and erroneous ground that that amendment in any manner affected the liberty of the press. I say the expression I have heard would seem to indicate that the majority of the Convention may yield that much to the press, in view of the greater good which they may hope to do by getting their support for the work of the Convention. Supposing that to be the result, that the Fawcett amendment should be defeated in Convention although carried by a small majority in the Committee of the Whole, it would leave it in this position—and I suppose it is that which the gentleman from San Joaquin mainly aims at, as he has been a very prominent counsel in some libel cases—on the defense. The article of the Constitution on that subject provides that the jury shall be the judge of the law and the fact. The gentleman says there shall be the right of appeal in these cases; that is, the Supreme Court is to determine the law in a case where the Constitution says the jury shall be the exclusive judge of the law and the fact. It would make a contradiction in the Constitution itself. But for other reasons I am opposed to the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: For myself, and I believe for a majority of the Committee on Judiciary, I see no objection to this amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Joaquin. This matter was discussed to a considerable extent in the Committee on Judiciary, and different opinions were expressed, but at this time I think that the amendment is a good one. I myself shall vote for it. I do not see why in all criminal cases prosecuted by indictment or information in a Court of record a party should not have an appeal, and if they have it in cases of libel, as the gentleman on the other side has suggested, that is an additional reason why I would give them an appeal, because it does embrace libel. I can see no objection to it. If a man is prosecuted by indictment, then the offense rises to such magnitude that it seems to me every citizen should have the right of appeal. For that reason I shall favor the amendment.

MR. MCCALLUM. If the law as to libel shall remain as it is in the Constitution, which provides that the jury shall be the judge of the law and the fact, how can the Supreme Court pass upon the question of law in that case when the jury is declared to be the judge of the law?

MR. WILSON. I do not think the jury are judges of the law in any case. They have got to take the law from the Court. That is what has already been passed upon; and I think that the intention of the Convention in adopting that clause in reference to libel is to put prosecutions for libel upon the same basis as all other criminal cases, and if the Convention adhere to that proposition then persons accused of any criminal offense will stand upon an equal footing, and the Supreme Court would judge of a libel case just exactly as it would judge of an assault with intent to commit bodily injury, or assault to commit murder, and review the proceedings in the same manner precisely.

MR. MILLS. Mr. Chairman: If a man presents his complaint to a Justice of the Peace, then there would be no indictment in the case. If he took it before the Grand Jury, of course it is all proper, but the complaint might be made on information.

MR. WILSON. It is not the intention to give the Supreme Court jurisdiction in cases of appeal from Justices of the Peace. It is intended that the Superior Courts shall operate as appellate Courts from Justices of the Peace. This section four refers to the Supreme Court. No appeals can come directly from Justices of the Peace to the Supreme Court in any case.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by inserting between the words 'tax' and 'impost,' where they occur in line three, the words 'fares and freights.'"

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: It will be borne in mind that in our article upon corporations other than municipal, we have provided for the creation of a Railroad Commission, and among other powers and duties are those of fixing fares and freights. The policy of this amendment is to confer upon the Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction to determine the legality of such fares and such freights as may be prescribed by the commission created by the Constitution. I think it will be found that the reason upon which they should have this jurisdiction rests upon the same consideration that has now extended that jurisdiction to cases of tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fines; in other words, there should be a power in that Court to determine the legality of these rates, whether they amount to the sum of three hundred dollars or not—irrespective of the amount. I invite the attention of the members of the bar to the consideration whether it is not necessary to adopt this clause to conform to the change we propose to make in the organic law in regard to that Commission?

MR. McFARLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman from Placer whether this is intended to apply to appeals from the Commission or appeals from the Court?

MR. HALE. It gives this Court appellate power to hear on appeal, on writ of error, and determine the legality of fares and freights as well as any tax or impost.

MR. McFARLAND. Fares and freights as established by the Commission?

MR. HALE. The article on corporations uses the terms which I have here employed—fares and freights—they are therefore constitutional terms; they relate to the rates at which railroad and transportation companies shall be required to take passengers and freight. They are constitutional terms, and the legality of these rates should be a matter of Supreme Court jurisdiction in the last resort.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to that amendment. It would do precisely what Lord Cameron said was entirely incompetent for a Court to do—regulate fares and freights. That was the statement in the House of Lords, in eighteen hundred and fifty-four, and in consequence of that the English Parliament amended their law and created a Commission, and gave them the power.

MR. EDGERTON. Does the gentleman state that the English Commission has power to regulate fares and freights?

MR. HOWARD. Yes, sir.

MR. EDGERTON. Where has the gentleman read any such thing as that?

MR. HOWARD. I read it here the other day—the gentleman need not go off half-cocked—and if I had the volume I could turn to it again in two minutes.

MR. EDGERTON. I deny it.

MR. HOWARD. So far as that is concerned that is an objection to it, but so far as it might apply to judgments from inferior Courts, it gives the railroad power to worry every small litigant out. Of course if a party got judgment for less than three hundred dollars, the railroad is strong enough to appeal, and is strong enough to destroy all remedy by appealing and worrying out a man who may have been damaged by the action of the railroad.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say in reference to what has been said by the gentleman from Los Angeles, that upon a comparison of the powers vested in Courts in England and the powers vested in Courts in the United States, we have very little to be proud of in regard to the oppressions of railroads. As I understand the matter, by a recent Act of Parliament the power to deal with railroads in respect to all unjust and improper action is of the most summary character. A brief and summary notice is issued, and the railroad is at once brought up, if I may use such language, with a round turn, and for every day that they delay or refuse to recognize the writ of a Court, they are liable to a fine of two hundred pounds sterling per day. Now, sir, when we have in this country some summary process of that kind we may, perhaps, boast of our freedom from the oppressions of railroads, but not till then.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

SPECIAL ORDER—THE O'DONNELL CASE.

THE PRESIDENT. The matter before the Convention is the report of the special committee, and the resolution offered by them:

To J. P. Hoge, Esq., President Constitutional Convention:

Your committee to whom was referred the case of a member of this Convention, Charles C. O'Donnell, charged with grave crimes, have considered the same, and submit the following report:

The history of the events leading up to the appointment of this committee is matter of public notoriety. In the discussion, in this Convention, of what is known as the Fawcett amendment to the provision concerning libel, the member, O'Donnell, made remarks derogatory to the San Francisco Chronicle, a newspaper published in the City of San Francisco. The next issue of that paper assailed O'Donnell as a quack, imposter, abortionist, etc. Some time afterward O'Donnell entered criminal prosecutions for libel, in San Francisco and Sacramento, against the publishers of the Chronicle. A trial has been had of the case in San Francisco, in which the defendants admitted the publication, and based their defense on the truth of the alleged libel, and that it was published from good motives and for justifiable ends. The result of that trial was disastrous to the member, O'Donnell. In order to establish their innocence of the alleged libel, it became necessary for the defendants to prove the guilt of the complainant, O'Donnell. At the close of the trial they were promptly discharged by the Court, and we have seen no reason, after an examination of the reported testimony, to question the correctness of the decision of the Court.

The case entered in Sacramento, which is for the same cause, has not yet been tried.

Pursuant to the resolution creating it, your committee entered at once upon the examination of the subject-matter of the above described proceedings. They procured a copy of the reported testimony of the case in San Francisco, verified as correct by the affidavits of three witnesses. They notified the member, O'Donnell, of a time and place at which they would hear him. He appeared before us according to the notice, and was duly informed of the nature of the investigation and the testimony already in the hands of the committee, i. e., the report of the trial contained in the San Francisco Chronicle of December twenty-second and twenty-fourth, eighteen hundred and seventy eight, with the affidavits of the witnesses referred to thereto attached, all of which is hereby referred to and hereto annexed, marked "Exhibit A," and made a part of this report.

He furnished us with no additional legal proof to rebut the showing made against him on the trial, but claimed that if time and opportunity were given him to procure counsel and produce witnesses before us, he could satisfy us and the Convention of his innocence of the charges made against him. He stated to us that the testimony given against him upon the trial was suborned and perjured testimony; that he was taken by surprise; that he was unprepared, either with counsel or witnesses, to meet the case made against him, and asked for delay to allow him to procure counsel and produce witnesses before us. Your committee did not feel authorized to constitute itself a Court of appeal from the decision of the Courts. The state of the funds at the disposal of this Convention did not warrant us in launching into any wild expenditure for persons and papers. We were not satisfied with the excuses made by the accused member, and we were not convinced of the relevancy of the testimony he claimed to be able to produce. In a country teeming with lawyers, it would seem that one month was time enough in which to procure counsel, especially by one having the financial ability to remunerate them, as appears to be the case with the member O'Donnell. It would also seem to be time enough for a party complainant in a criminal prosecution to prepare therefor. But inasmuch as the accused member had publicly declared that he would vindicate his character, by prosecuting the witnesses who appeared against him for perjury, and inasmuch as a complaint had been filed and was pending in Sacramento involving the identical issue with the one tried in San Francisco, your committee offered to delay action, provided he would assure them of his determination to go ahead before the legal tribunals of the country. He stated that he would consult counsel and give us an answer. We agreed to await three days for such answer. At the expiration of the time he appeared before us and stated that he had not consulted counsel, and asked for more time.

Your committee have come to the conclusion that the accused member has been attempting to delude them with frivolous pretenses and shallow excuses. They observe that the Grand Jury of San Francisco has adjourned, and nothing appears to have been done there by the accused member. They have also ascertained that the case pending in Sacramento has been abandoned. We are driven to the conclusion that the accused member never made the complaints in good faith; that he never really intended to put his character in issue in law; that he was unable to postpone the trials beyond the session of this Convention, and that is the only surprise by which he has been taken. For the purposes of this inquiry, the testimony herewith appended sufficiently attests the guilt of the accused member of the crimes charged against him to warrant this committee in submitting to the Convention whether such a man is worthy to retain his seat in this honorable body.

Of the power of this Convention to deal with this subject, your committee entertains no doubt. An examination of the authorities and precedents has satisfied us of the correctness of this position. Wherefore, your committee report the following resolution, and recommend its adoption:

Resolved, That Charles C. O'Donnell, a member of this Convention, be and he is hereby expelled therefrom.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

JURISDICTION OF THE SUPREME COURT.

MR. EDGERTON. I move that the Convention now resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The fourth section and the amendment of the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Placer will not be adopted. If that amendment of the gentleman should be adopted, it either in express terms confers upon the Supreme Court the right of review over the action of the railway commission which the Convention has provided for, or at the best it leaves the matter in doubt, and a subject of dispute between the Supreme Court and the Commission is created. The Commission is intended to have absolute and exclusive powers within the provinces conferred upon it. This amendment either gives the Supreme Court the right of review over them, or it makes the Constitution ambiguous, neither of which is desirable. If the intention be merely to give the Supreme Court of this State the right to review cases at law and cases in equity, outside of the exclusive power conferred upon the Commission, then the words are surplusage and useless, as the Supreme Court already possesses the power of review to that extent, under the general powers conferred upon the Court. The Court has a right to review all suits involving over three hundred dollars, no matter whether the subject be fares and freights or something else. They already possess the right of review. These words are surplusage and useless in the Constitution, and we ought not to tolerate any useless language in the Constitution. If the object be to give the Supreme Court the right of review over the action of the Commission, then by adopting these words we simply annul the Commission and make them men of straw. You might as well say the Supreme Court of this State should have power to control the rates of freights and fares at once. Therefore, I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section five.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 5. The Superior Courts shall have original jurisdiction in all cases in equity, and in all cases at law which involve the title or possession of real property, or the legality of any tax, impost, assessment, toll, or municipal fine, and in all other cases in which the demand, exclusive of interest or the value of the property in controversy, amounts to three hundred dollars, and in all criminal cases amounting to felony, and cases of misdemeanor not otherwise provided for; also, in actions of forcible entry and detainer, of proceedings in insolvency, of actions to prevent or abate a nuisance; also, of all matters of probate, and also for divorce and for annulment of marriage, and all such special cases and proceedings as are not otherwise provided for. And said Court shall have the power of naturalization, and to issue papers therefor. They shall have appellate jurisdiction in such cases arising in Justices' and other inferior Courts in their respective counties as may be prescribed by law. Said Courts shall be always open (legal holidays and non-judicial days excepted), and their original jurisdiction shall extend to all parts of the State. Said Courts and their Judges shall have power to issue writs of mandamus, certiorari, prohibition, quo warranto, and habeas corpus, on petition by or on behalf of any person in actual custody, in their respective counties.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out, in line fifteen, the following words: 'and their original jurisdiction shall extend to all parts of the State.'"

MR. WILSON. I had prepared an amendment to the same paragraph to satisfy some objections. I move to amend by striking out the words "original jurisdiction," and inserting the word "process."

MR. REDDY. Whether the word "process" would not mean subpœna as well as summons, and that a man could be taken from one end of the State to another, if they can send process to all parts of the State——

MR. TERRY. They do now.

MR. REDDY. I will accept the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco and withdraw mine.

MR. WILSON. I think this amendment is better.

MR. EDGERTON. I would ask what is the use of that line in the Constitution? I do not see what particular value those words have in the Constitution. It is subject to legislative enactment.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Without that provision, or some statutory provision of like character, suppose I bring an action in San Diego County, how am I going to get along?

MR. EDGERTON. The same as you do now, by virtue of the statute. This line does not add any additional force to the first six lines of the section.

MR. CROUCH. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the word 'three' in line five, and insert in lieu thereof the word 'one.'"

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: In reference to the amendment proposed by myself, I can say this, that without some affirmative declaration of the power of the Court to send process, it would be a question of argument as to whether they had that power. It was discussed a great deal with reference to the Courts of San Francisco, as to whether the Court had power to send process outside of San Francisco. It certainly does no harm to leave it in. It is merely affirmative of the right of the Court, and it certainly can do no harm. There is no objection to the Court issuing process to all parts of the State. It will remove any doubt. Take the United States Courts, they cannot send process out of their respective districts. So here, as we have a Superior Court for each county, the question might arise as to whether they could send process out of the county.

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment of Mr. Reddy, or of the suggestion of the gentleman from Sacramento to strike out that line, or else I want some restriction inserted by which the Legislature can control the bringing of actions in this State. If the power of original process be left to all the Courts unrestricted, that they can send all over our State, regardless of our legislative limitations, then it is not right. To avoid the possibility of a man being sued in San Diego who ought to be sued in San Francisco, I want some positive definition.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the amendment, as proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco, because I believe it would exclude the jurisdiction of the Court outside of its own district, notwithstanding it says process may extend to all parts of the State, because that would seem to indicate an exception in favor of "process" extending to all parts of the State. I am in favor of retaining the words "jurisdiction throughout the State," to give the Courts general jurisdiction, with the addition of an amendment which I shall offer in relation to the changing of venue. That will leave the Legislature to determine the reasons upon which a change can be granted. I think that is the better plan. If I am permitted to offer an amendment I will write it out.

REMARKS OF MR. REDDY.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: I would like to state now that the old Constitution was silent upon this particular subject, hence the Legislature had power to control the matter, to provide where actions should be commenced, and for what causes they might be changed from one county to another. But here the Constitution fixes the jurisdiction of every one of these Courts. For instance, if an action be commenced in San Francisco, there is no power in the Legislature to take the jurisdiction away from that Court and transfer it to another, except upon the ground that it is brought in the wrong county. There is certainly a great necessity for striking it out. It is not worth while to say anything more about it. By striking it out and inserting, as the Chairman of the committee proposes, there will be no harm done. It will leave us where we were under the old Constitution.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. There seems to be an apprehension on the part of some members that this word "process" extends to and includes subpœnas. I do not understand this to be final process. Mesne process is that process by which a defendant is brought into Court. Final process is that process by which the Court reaches his property. Now, the object of this provision which is sought to be engrafted into the Constitution is, that if a Judge renders judgment against a man in one county he can go into another county and levy upon the property there, which is as it is now, except that it is a constitutional instead of a statutory provision.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of Mr. Wilson, as accepted by Mr. Reddy.

Adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Napa, Judge Crouch, to strike out three hundred dollars and insert one hundred dollars.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will be adopted. I think I can safely appeal to the lawyers on this floor in favor of it. It will enable parties to bring their actions direct in the Superior Court, if they choose, for one hundred dollars or over, or they may, if they choose, bring them in the Justices' Courts in any case not involving over three hundred dollars.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. WATERS.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I think if this amendment is understood by the Convention it will not be adopted. It destroys the right of appeal in all that class of cases involving over one hundred dollars and under three hundred dollars. That is the effect of the amendment. I do not think that is proper. I think small cases should have an appeal as well as large ones. By this means in that class of cases you limit the trial to the one Court alone, because there is no appeal to the Supreme Court in that class of cases. They have either to give up the right of appeal or bring their action in the Justice's Court in the first instance.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I confess I was not favorably impressed with this amendment at first, but the more I examine it the more it appears to me to be a good amendment. Strike out the word "three" and insert "one." As to the objections urged by the gentleman from San Bernardino, I cannot appreciate their force. If a man has a case in the Justice's Court, he has a right of appeal to the Superior Court. If he chooses to commence the action in the Superior Court in the first instance, I cannot see that he is wronged.

MR. HALE. The plan of the amendment is to give concurrent jurisdiction between one hundred dollars and three hundred dollars, and of course if a suit is brought in the Justice's Court for three hundred dollars, there lies an appeal to the Superior Court. If it be brought in the Superior Court in the first instance, you have the final judgment of that Court just the same.

MR. McCALLUM. It is simply allowing the parties to have one trial instead of two. They waive their right to try in the Justice's Court, and take the final judgment at once. The objections urged against it amount to nothing. The parties have their choice. They can try it in the Justice's Court and then appeal, or they can take it to the Superior Court at once. If you can get the judgment of the Superior Court at one trial, why is it not better than to go to the trouble and expense of two trials to obtain the same result? It is simply a provision that the Superior Court shall have concurrent and appellate jurisdiction in a certain class of cases. There is no difficulty about it.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. The main objection I have to this whole plan is that the dignity and standing of the main Courts of the State will be lowered. That is the objection I have heard made to it among lawyers, that having only one Court to take the place of the present District and County Courts, the standing and dignity will be lowered, and the same respect will not be paid to their decisions. Now, it does seem to me that three hundred dollars is low enough. The judicial system of this State has always been based upon the theory of no concurrent jurisdiction. I do not believe in that system. Now, you propose to put the Superior Court upon a level with the Justices' Courts between the sums of one hundred dollars and three hundred dollars. Why do you want to make this change? The law has been heretofore that cases involving under three hundred dollars were to be tried in the Justices' Courts, and the appeal lay to the County Court. Now, you propose to unite the jurisdiction of the County Courts and the District Courts in the Superior Courts, and then you propose to put them upon a dead level with Justices of the Peace. I have one great objection to this system, and that is, the people will get to look upon the Superior Court very much as they look upon the County Court, and I think there is a great deal in keeping the respect of the people for your Courts. I can see no reason why the old rule should be changed. I hope the amendment will not be adopted.

MR. McCALLUM. How much more dignity is there between trying a case on appeal and trying it originally?

MR. McFARLAND. These small cases should be tried in the lower Courts, and the testimony taken there. I do not think you ought to compel the Superior Courts to try these small cases originally.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: When the proposition of giving concurrent jurisdiction to the Justice and Superior Courts was presented here, it struck me rather favorably; at least I announced to the gentleman that I saw no objection to it. Upon further reflection and examination I see it in a less favorable light, and I am of the opinion that it will be better to leave it as presented by the committee. Now, if you give this concurrent jurisdiction it would seem like giving to the parties the right to select either the Justice's Court or the Superior Court without those limits. It is not giving the selection except to one side, and that to the plaintiff. If the plaintiff prefers the lower Court he will bring his action there. If he prefers the Superior Court he will bring it there. The defendant has no choice in the matter. He is carried to the Court without any choice, and when the decision of the Superior Court is rendered it is final, and he has no appeal. Now, sir, if the plaintiff has the choice of Courts, he has an advantage over the defendant.

MR. HALE. If the case is tried in the lower Court the defendant can invoke the jurisdiction of the Superior Court afterwards. If the plaintiff brings it in the Superior Court in the first instance and gets judgment, it is the same judgment only that would have been rendered on appeal.

MR. WILSON. The right of review seems to run through and be a part of our general system, and this deprives the party of the right of review. Now, by creating this new feature and allowing the action to be brought in the Superior Court in the first instance, we are doing away with the right of appeal.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Lost.

MR. FREEMAN. I move an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to the section, 'injunctions and writs of prohibition may be issued and served on legal holidays and non-judicial days.'"

Adopted.

MR. FREEMAN. Suppose I want to take away a house that is in dispute? I select a non-judicial day, and there is no method whatever to prevent it, because no writ of prohibition can issue.

MR. WILSON, of First District. That is a very desirable amendment. I have seen instances where work was done on Saturday night, just because no writ could issue.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. WATERS. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section five, line twelve, after the word 'jurisdiction,' by inserting the words 'on questions of law alone.'"

REMARKS OF MR. WATERS.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: The object of the amendment is to prevent frivolous appeals being taken. In my estimation this makes the system more complete. I see no necessity for new trials upon questions of fact. If there are any questions of law, let the higher Courts pass upon them. The higher Court can pass upon these questions of law very rapidly, but there is no need of appeals on questions of fact.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment of the gentleman will be voted down. There is no way by which the proceedings before a Justice of the Peace are preserved. There would be no benefit arising from taking an appeal upon questions of law alone, and not upon questions of fact. I hope the amendment will be promptly voted down.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: This section was discussed a good deal in the committee, and it was thought best to leave it as it is, and not undertake to prescribe details like this. This section provides that the Superior Courts shall have appellate jurisdiction in a certain class of cases from Justices' and other inferior Courts, as may be prescribed by law. The Legislature may see fit to limit appeals to questions of law alone; and they may, on the other hand, find it better policy, and more in the interest of justice, to allow the facts to be reviewed, as well as questions of law. Why not leave this matter to the Legislature? Why lay down an iron rule upon this subject, which for twenty-five years shall control the judiciary? It was considerations of this kind that induced the committee to delegate that question to the Legislature. Now, it seems to me that it is better to do that than to go into details. I am therefore opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from San Bernardino, because it takes away from the Legislature the power of regulating this matter.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Lost.

MR. BARRY. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section five by adding to the section the words: 'And a case in a Superior Court may be tried by a Judge pro tempore, who must be a member of the bar, agreed upon in writing by the parties litigant or their attorneys of record appointed by the Court and sworn to try the cause.'"

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: I offer this amendment for the gentleman from Kern, Mr. Gregg. He spoke to me with regard to this amendment, and requested me to offer it at the proper time. He did not state his reasons for the amendment, but I presume they are about as follows: That should circumstances arise by which the Judge will be unable to try a case, such as sickness, or other cause, the attorneys, for their clients, can agree upon a certain attorney, who would be qualified to try the case. There are cases where the Judge cannot be personally present. There are other cases where the Judge may have been an attorney in the case before he went upon the bench. In a case of that kind he would be disqualified from trying the case. In that case particularly, it would be well to have some one who is free from bias, and whom the attorneys might agree upon.

MR. EAGON. That would come in a good deal better in section eight.

MR. BARRY. Then I will withdraw it for the present.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section six.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 6. There shall be in each of the organized counties, or cities and counties, of the State, a Superior Court, for each of which at least one Judge shall be elected by the qualified electors of the county, or city and county, at the general State election; provided, that in the City and County of San Francisco there shall be elected twelve Judges of the Superior Court, any one or more of whom may hold Court. There may be as many sessions of said Court, at the same time, as there are Judges thereof. The said Judges shall choose from their own number a presiding Judge, who may be removed at their pleasure. He shall distribute the business of the Court among the Judges thereof, and prescribe the order of business. The judgments, orders, and proceedings of any session of the Superior Court, held by any one or more of the Judges of said Courts, respectively, shall be equally effectual as if all the Judges of said respective Courts presided at such session. In each of the Counties of Sacramento, Los Angeles, and Alameda, there shall be elected two such Judges. The term of office of Judges of the Superior Courts shall be six years, from and after the first Monday of January next succeeding their election; provided, that the twelve Judges of the Superior Court elected in the City and County of San Francisco at the first election held under this Constitution, shall, at their first meeting, so classify themselves, by lot, that four of them shall go out of office at the end of two years, and four of them shall go out of office at the end of four years, and four of them shall go out of office at the end of six years, and an entry of such classification shall be made in the minutes of the Court, signed by them, and a duplicate thereof filed in the office of the Secretary of State. The first election of Judges of the Superior Courts shall take place at the first general election held after the adoption and ratification of this Constitution. If a vacancy occur in the office of Judge of a Superior Court, the Governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of a Judge to fill the vacancy, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the Judge so elected shall hold office for the remainder of the unexpired term.

MR. OVERTON. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by inserting in line fourteen, after the words 'Los Angeles,' the word 'Sonoma.'"

MR. OVERTON. Mr. Chairman: I will state, sir, that it is the unanimous wish of the bar of my county to have two Judges. It is also the opinion of the District Judge, and the County Judge, and their opinions should have some weight in the matter. We have over twenty-five thousand people, and the county is growing very fast. One Judge cannot transact the business of the county. They want two Judges instead of one.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I move an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section six, by inserting after the words 'Los Angeles,' the words 'Santa Clara.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma.

REMARKS OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I have but a word to say. I have a petition here addressed to the delegation, signed by eighteen members of our bar, in which they petition this body to allow Sonoma County to have two Judges, instead of one, as reported by the committee. I am also advised that about two thirds of Judge Temple's time is taken up by Sonoma County business. I know the County Judge is busy all the time. So I believe it is absolutely necessary for our county to have two Judges.

The amendment was adopted on division, by a vote of 69 ayes to 26 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: There is a petition signed, I believe, by nearly all the attorneys of San José, and, I may say, the principal attorneys of the county, placed in the hands of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Tully, whose seat I discover is now vacant. I was requested, by a portion of the attorneys who signed that document, to present this amendment. I believe that the county is of sufficient importance in population and business to justify two Judges. As the business now is I am satisfied it is not less than the business of Los Angeles County—not much less than the business of Alameda County. We have a County Judge, and a District Judge for Santa Clara and the balance of the district. I have been informed by one of the Judges that the business is more than one Judge can attend to. We want the legal business done in a legal way, and I do submit that with a population of forty-five thousand people, it is not possible for one Judge to transact all the business in a manner satisfactory to the people.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: It is exceedingly unpleasant to say anything in opposition to the delegates who may deem it necessary to have two Judges, and I would not say one word were it not that I think it may defeat the whole plan of the committee. The number of Judges has in no case been increased by the committee, unless in the County of Sacramento. There is no increase in Alameda. There we have a District Judge for the whole county, and the County Judge. In Sonoma there is one County Judge, and a District Judge for three counties. Then the Santa Clara district is composed of four counties. Now, if we increase the number of Judges in those counties, they will belong to Judges of the first class, whose salaries are fixed in this article at five thousand dollars a year, so that it would add greatly to the expense. Just as good arguments may be made in favor of San Joaquin and other counties. I am afraid when we get through with the whole thing, and figure it all up, we will find that we have adopted a far more expensive system than we have at present, and if it is so I am afraid that a majority of this Convention will not agree to it.

MR. JOHNSON. Let me ask you a question. Would you have any objection to striking out one of the Judges in Alameda County, for the sake of saving some of this expense?

MR. MCCALLUM. Alameda has the same number of Judges now that is accorded her in this article—a District Judge and a County Judge. That is the theory of the committee, and it is the correct theory. Once depart from it, and there is no end to it. The result will be to defeat the whole scheme. There is another provision in this article which provides for increasing the number of Judges when it becomes necessary. That is section nine.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Santa Clara will prevail. The county is clearly entitled to it. It is nothing more than justice. As far as spending a few thousand dollars, more or less, it is a matter which ought not to be considered.

REMARKS OF MR. WELLER.

MR. WELLER. Mr. Chairman: I cannot let this matter pass without stating what I believe to be the views of our county. I have been instructed by a portion of my constituents that one Judge is not sufficient to transact the business of that county. Compare that county with Los Angeles. The assessed value of the property there is ten million dollars. The assessed value of the property of Santa Clara is twenty-six million dollars and over. Los Angeles has two hundred more votes than Santa Clara. Immediately after the report of this committee came in I sent the report to some of the attorneys there. I have received a reply from one of them, and he says that one Judge is not enough. That, in his experience, one man will never be able to transact the business of the county. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I voted against the amendment to give two Judges to Sonoma County. I know a number of members of our bar desire two Judges for Santa Clara County, but I am perfectly convinced that one Judge can do the work if he is any account. If we give them two they will want three. We have two Judges there, the District Judge and the County Judge. The District Judge has four counties, and I am satisfied the County Judge is not engaged one third of his time. The District Judge is not half his time in our county. I am satisfied that one Judge can do all the business.

MR. HALL. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the amendment offered by Mr. Herrington, by adding the words 'San Joaquin.'"

REMARKS OF MR. HALL.

MR. HALL. Mr. Chairman: The business of the District and County Courts combined is such that the delegation from that county, at least four of them, are of the opinion that San Joaquin is entitled to two Judges of the Superior Court. Now, San Joaquin, in point of territory, is quite as large as the County of Sacramento. In respect to the aggregate wealth of the two counties, they are about equal. I recollect some time ago having seen a statement of the aggregate wealth of these two counties, and there was so little difference as to be hardly worth mentioning. Now the business there is increasing. It is a rich county—one of the richest counties in the State. Its population is increasing and keeping march with the business. The Judges there are constantly engaged, and I do believe that the interests of the people will be subserved by having two Judges. One fact I may mention. In the four years last past, there were sixty appeals taken from the County of Santa Clara, and fifty-five taken from the County of San Joaquin. I mention the fact as indicating, in some degree, the comparative business of the two counties. I have an epitome of the business transacted in that county for the years eighteen hundred and seventy-six, eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, and eighteen hundred and seventy-eight. With the permission of the committee I will read it:

In eighteen hundred and seventy-six: District Court—Number of suits commenced, two hundred and eighty-two; number of decrees, one hundred and twenty-six; number of days in session, one hundred and twenty-three. County Court—Number of civil cases, thirty-eight; number of criminal cases, sixty-three; days of session, two hundred and forty-nine. Probate Court—Number commenced, fifty-seven; number of cases heard, four hundred and thirty-four; number of days of session, one hundred and seventy.

For the year eighteen hundred and seventy-seven: District Court—Number of suits commenced, two hundred and ninety-two; number of decrees, one hundred and thirty-six; number of days of session, one hundred and thirty. County Court—Number of civil cases, forty-six; number of civil judgments, twenty-seven; number of criminal judgments, one hundred and sixteen; number of days in session, one hundred and eighty. Probate Court—Cases, forty-five; number of cases heard, three hundred and thirty-eight; number of days of session, one hundred and thirty-three.

For the year eighteen hundred and seventy-eight: District Court—Number of suits commenced, two hundred and five; number of decrees, one hundred and sixty-two; number of days of session, one hundred and twenty-two. County Court—Number of civil cases, seventy-seven; number of civil judgments, fifty-one; number of criminal judgments, ninety-five; number of days of session, one hundred and sixty-three. Probate Court—Number of cases, fifty-seven; number of cases heard, four hundred and twenty-three; number of days of session, one hundred and fifty-seven.

Now, this shows on the face, the business done there; but it does not show all the work performed by the Judges, by any means. Every lawyer knows that Judges are engaged for thirty-three per cent of the time in Chambers duty. Every member of the bar on this floor will understand that. Cases are often argued out of term. They are heard in Court, and argued in Chambers, and the argument sometimes lasts for days. Writs of injunction, and all that class of business, occupies a great deal of the time, as every lawyer knows. So I can safely appeal, from the statement I have read here, to the justice and fairness of this Convention to allow us two Judges in San Joaquin County. One Judge will not be able to do the business of that county. I am perfectly well satisfied on that point; and I believe that the interests of the public and a due and prompt administration of justice require it. And, sir, although I have no data upon which I can express a positive opinion in regard to the sentiment there, so far as I have heard any expression, it has been in favor of giving to that county two Superior Judges. Certainly, if the Counties of Sacramento and Sonoma are entitled to two Judges, the County of San Joaquin ought to be.

REMARKS OF MR. TULLY.

MR. TULLY. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment of my friend Herrington, from Santa Clara, giving Santa Clara County two Judges. I hold in my hand a letter addressed to me, signed by twenty members of the bar of that county—all prominent attorneys of the county—stating that two Judges are absolutely necessary for that county. When I was at home I conversed with Judge Belden, and he assured me that one man could not do the business of that county. I had also a talk with the District Attorney, a gentleman who has been District Attorney for a number of years, and he assured me of the fact. And upon the recommendation of those gentlemen, more than upon my own, I support the amendment of my friend Herrington, and ask that Santa Clara County be given two Judges.

REMARKS OF MR. DUDLEY.

MR. DUDLEY, of San Joaquin. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment proposed by my colleague will receive the favorable consideration of this body. I have practiced my profession there for eleven years, and I am familiar with the litigation of that county. I think, sir, that I can safely assert that one man cannot do the business of that county. We have four terms of the District Court in that county, a year, and at every term the calendar has averaged from ninety to one hundred and twenty cases. Business is on the increase in the County Court, and of the amount of business the members of the bar are probably the best judges. The number of members of the bar in San Joaquin is thirty-five. They say that one Judge cannot possibly keep the calendar clear. Now, I find the number of cases appealed from this county, from the first of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, to the first of January, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, was sixty. San Joaquin, fifty-five—only five difference. I believe that justice to San Joaquin County demands the adoption of this amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that unless this judicial system is recommended to the people of the State upon the basis of economy they will not accept it. And if we go on increasing the number of Judges, making a great many more than we have now, it will not be considered as based upon ideas of economy. As far as I am concerned, I take a different view in reference to economy in the pay of the Judges, from what some others do. I think we should pay the Judges well, and give them plenty to do. But that is not the popular idea. The people look at the figures before them, and calculate it upon that basis. Now, another idea here is to have the Court sit continuously, and in that way it seems to me a great deal of business will be dispatched. The Judges lose no time traveling round, as the District Judges have had to do, and there will be another saving in time. I think these counties ought to be able to get along with one Judge. If Sonoma is entitled to two Judges, Santa Clara is also.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I do not like to find fault with the report of the committee, or with what the Convention is doing; but what sort of basis is it upon which this thing is operated? I suppose it goes upon some kind of figures as a basis. We look around to find the figures. We find according to the figures we have, in regard to population, that Sonoma County has less than seven hundred more people than Nevada County, in which I live. Now, the proposition is to give to Sonoma County two Judges at five thousand dollars a year each, but to only give Nevada County one at four thousand dollars a year. Now, sir, I asked one gentleman about this matter—what they made the basis—and he said the basis was the United States census of the year eighteen hundred and seventy. I said this was not carried out by the result. He said the representatives from those counties upon the committee represented that they needed these Judges. Then I suppose the reason that Nevada County was only given one Judge was because that county did not have a representative upon the committee. Now, sir, I see further by the last census that San Joaquin County had a population of twenty-one thousand and a few over, while Nevada County had a population of nineteen thousand and over. Thus two thousand people in San Joaquin County are to have one Judge at five thousand dollars a year, while the whole of Nevada County, with nineteen thousand people, is to have one Judge at four thousand dollars a year. And yet, what man does not know that these mining counties have more litigation, more troublesome litigation, than the agricultural counties? Now, sir, if we are going to give two Judges to Santa Clara, which has three thousand more population than Nevada; if you are going to give Sonoma and San Joaquin two Judges because they have pooled their issues, then, sir, we want Nevada County taken into the ring. I believe we are going too far in this matter. The idea was to have one Judge for each county, so as to reduce the expense; but if we give two to each of these counties, instead of diminishing the expense, we will increase it. I believe this to be unwise. The gentleman enumerates the probate cases and the number of days the Probate Court in his county was in session; and yet the gentleman knows that the Probate Court only sits for a short time, and a great many cases are disposed of in a few moments. In Nevada County we have the most tedious litigation. The suits are heavy mining suits in many cases, which take a long time to try. But, I say, these counties must not expect two Judges. It is unfair to other counties. There are no counties in the State that ought to have two Judges, except San Francisco and Alameda. Los Angeles County is given two Judges. Los Angeles has fifteen thousand people, and two Judges at five thousand dollars a year each. Nevada County, with nineteen thousand, has one Judge at four thousand dollars.

MR. AYERS. No, sir; no such thing.

MR. CROSS. I have the census for Los Angeles—fifteen thousand three hundred and nine. I have no doubt that the population has increased there, and I have no doubt this was represented to the committee. If we had had a representative upon the committee we might have had a different standing.

MR. WHITE. Is an amendment in order? I want to move for another Judge for Santa Cruz. We have at least ten lawyers who want to get upon the bench, and we want more places.

MR. MCCALLUM. There is not a county in the State but that the bar is in favor of an additional Judge.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Joaquin.

Lost.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert after the word 'election' in the fourth line, the words, 'provided, that until otherwise ordered by the Legislature, only one Judge shall be elected for the Counties of Yuba and Sutter.'"

REMARKS OF MR. BELCHER.

MR. BELCHER. A good deal has been said here about economy, and I have sent up a proposition to combine these two counties. Now, sir, I know very well that one Judge can do all the business of the two counties named. Now, I presume there are many other counties in the State where one Judge could do the business as well as not. There are not many where the circumstances and situation are so favorable as Yuba and Sutter. It so happens that the county seats of the two counties are within fifteen or twenty minutes walk of each other. One Judge can do the business as well as two, and there is no necessity for more.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. INMAN. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by inserting in line fifteen, after the word 'Judges,' the words, 'whose salaries shall be fixed by the respective Boards of Supervisors, and whose salaries shall be paid by their respective counties.'"

MR. INMAN. Mr. Chairman: I offer that amendment in good faith. I believe by offering that amendment we will have less Judges, and that they will receive less salaries.

MR. WILSON, of First District. There is another section upon the subject of salaries, and I would suggest that this amendment would be more proper when you reach that section.

MR. INMAN. My object was to stop this discussion about an increase of Judges, because I think the salaries has a good deal to do with it. Just as well put it in here.

MR. WILSON. This is not the proper place for it.

MR. INMAN. I want the counties to pay for these Judges. I want each county to pay for its own Judge. However, out of respect for the gentleman, if he wishes, I will withdraw it until we reach the other section, but I intend to introduce it again.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by inserting after the word 'Judges,' in line fifteen, the words 'the Legislature shall have power to provide for attaching any county to a contiguous county for judicial purposes.'"

MR. BARBOUR. In a State like California there are often cases where two counties might be attached together for judicial purposes. I do not believe it is right to tie the hands of the Legislature so completely that they can exercise no discretion. This will be a very expensive system, and for that reason the amendment ought to be adopted, if for no other.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I had not expected to have a word to say, but as a citizen I realize that this is going to be a very expensive system the best we can do, and the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour, allows the Legislature to reduce the expenses somewhat by reducing the number of Judges for certain counties, and compelling one Judge to do the work of two or more counties. Now, I have taken occasion to make out some figures, showing the comparative cost of the two systems. Assuming that the average salary of the County Judges of this State is two thousand dollars each, and the salary of eleven District Judges five thousand dollars each, and the total expense, outside of the local Courts, Police Courts, etc., would be two hundred and sixty-one thousand dollars. Now the present system provides for a Judge in each county, to receive five thousand dollars a year, and fifty-two Judges would be two hundred and sixty thousand dollars a year; and eleven extra Judges for San Francisco, at the same salary, fifty-five thousand dollars more, and three extra Judges for these other counties, fifteen thousand dollars more, and seven Supreme Court Judges, forty-two thousand dollars, making a total of three hundred and seventy-two thousand dollars we will have to pay under that system, or one hundred and eleven thousand dollars more than we do now. Now that may be right, it may be satisfactory, but my idea was to simplify the system instead of making it more complex.

MR. SMITH. How many counties have you got down for five thousand dollar salaries? Some get only two thousand, and some four thousand, and some three thousand. It is not much over the present system.

MR. WILSON, of First District. What did you estimate the salaries at?

MR. FILCHER. At five thousand dollars.

MR. WILSON. A great many of them do not get that. They are divided into four classes. There is only one class who get five thousand dollars. The second class four thousand dollars, the third class three thousand dollars, and the fourth class only two thousand dollars, so your figures are entirely defective.

MR. FILCHER. I did not notice that part of it. I assumed that they all received five thousand dollars. It would make some difference, but the system is still a great deal more expensive than the old system.

REMARKS OF MR. CROUCH.

MR. CROUCH. Mr. Chairman: I think the question of expense is one that ought to be carefully considered. Under the present proposed system there are seven Supreme Judges, forty-two thousand dollars; twenty-two Superior Judges, at five thousand dollars, one hundred and ten thousand dollars; eighteen Superior Judges, at four thousand dollars, seventy-two thousand dollars; nineteen Superior Judges, at three thousand dollars, fifty-seven thousand dollars; nine Superior Judges, at two thousand dollars, eighteen thousand dollars. Total, two hundred and ninety-nine thousand dollars. Our present system, there are five Supreme Justices, thirty thousand dollars; five District Judges, at six thousand dollars, thirty thousand dollars; eighteen District Judges, at five thousand dollars, ninety thousand dollars; fifty-two County Judges, eighty-eight thousand nine hundred dollars; making a total of two hundred and thirty-eight thousand nine hundred dollars, to which we add the Probate and Criminal Courts of San Francisco, nineteen thousand dollars more, making the present expense, two hundred and fifty-seven thousand nine hundred dollars. Making a difference of forty-one thousand one hundred dollars in favor of the present system. The proposed plan will cost forty-one thousand dollars more than the old plan.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I think the argument in a money point of view amounts to very little. I do not myself see any force in it in that connection.. The question is whether the present system is adequate to the wants of the State. If it is inadequate, why then we must depart from it. Having arrived at the conclusion that the old system must give way, we come then to the new system; and the question is, whether the new system is adequate to the wants of the State. Is it what the State requires? If so, then the State must stand the expense of it. Consequently comparisons between an adequate and an inadequate system contain no argument at all. If the gentleman can show that we can get along with the old system, that it is good enough, then of course there would be some force in his figures. Having come to the determination, as I understand this Convention has, that the old system is inadequate, then the question of the difference of expense amounts to nothing.

MR. FILCHER. Don't you think, as Chairman of the committee, that we can safely combine some of the smaller counties?

MR. WILSON. I have no objections, but you need not declaim against the system. We have already combined Sutter and Yuba Counties, and there is another proposition to combine El Dorado and Alpine, and I see no objections to it. I see no objections to cheapening the system where it can be done consistently and conveniently. There is no objection that I can see to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Barbour. On the contrary, it meets my judgment. Whenever there can be counties consolidated for judicial purposes I can see no objection to its being done, and I think that amendment ought to be adopted. It leaves the system flexible, so that if counties grow too small in wealth and population two or more of them can be consolidated, and if counties grow to such importance as to demand more Judges, they can be provided by the Legislature.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: Believing as I do, I take a different standpoint in regard to the amendment offered by Mr. Barbour. I think it will break up and destroy the uniformity of this system. Suppose Inyo County should go to the Legislature and ask to be united to Kern County for judicial purposes. In that way our Judge, paid for by our county, would be taken away, and we would have no Judge. You start out with the proposition that each county shall have one Judge, and now you propose to put a clause in saying that the Legislature may consolidate counties. It seems to me that no county in the State will ever have less population than there is to-day, and we can find out and unite such counties now as well as the Legislature can. There has been some rising and falling in certain counties, but I think the time is past when any county will get any lower. First, you say each county shall have one Judge, and now you say that the Legislature may unite several counties and give them one Judge between them. We have a Judge in our county, for instance. We may have important business to transact, and yet he would be out of the county, holding Court somewhere else. In that district now, the District Judge has to travel a long way in a circle, to get to us, and the same is true with other districts, and it is to avoid that difficulty that this new system is proposed, to give each county a Judge. This amendment will overturn the entire system.

REMARKS OF MR. EAGON.

MR. EAGON. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment to unite different counties will not prevail. There is one instance where it can be done, and that is in the case of the Counties of Yuba and Sutter. The county seats of these counties are within a quarter of a mile of each other, and one Judge can transact the business of these two counties as well as two. But the beauty of this system, and the reason why the people want this system, is that we will have a Judge always in the county. It will do away with this term system, by which we have to run all over a large district to do Chambers work. We want to get rid of this old system, so as to have the business right at home—it has often caused great inconvenience in my district. Now, the gentlemen talk about a little expense; what does it amount to compared to having a system that will give satisfaction? If you give us a Judge for every county in the State, you will find that it will be a very popular measure. The people are not demanding a cheap judicial system so much as an adequate system. They do not care for the cost so long as justice is properly and promptly administered. You cannot get good Judges unless you pay them; so let us not haggle over the cost. I know the people are willing to pay fair and reasonable salaries. I hope this talk about cutting down salaries will be done away with, and that this amendment will be voted down.

REMARKS OF MR. REDDY.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: I hope we will provide for a Judge in each county. I understand the State is to pay them. There are a great many reasons why we should have a Judge in each county. In some of the mountain districts the counties are very large, and the mode of travel from one county seat to another, very slow. Suppose Inyo and Kern were united, and the Court happened to be sitting in Kern, and a writ of injunction was wanted to prevent a man from destroying another man's property, we would have to travel all that distance to find the Judge in order to get out the writ. The whole character of litigation demands that there shall be a Judge in each county. The Judges will have plenty of work to do to keep them busy. The question of cost cuts no figure; it is a question of providing a system whereby justice can be had promptly. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

MR. MCCALLUM. This amendment will be more proper if offered to section nine, if anywhere.

MR. BARBOUR. I will withdraw the amendment for the present.

MR. LARKIN. I wish to offer an amendment similar to that offered by Judge Belcher, uniting El Dorado and Alpine Counties. One Judge can discharge all the business of those two counties as well as not. The Clerk of the Court of either of those two counties can notify the Judge, and in twenty-four hours from that time he can be there ready to hold Court. A great many of the counties will have a Judge getting three or four thousand dollars a year, when he will perhaps not sit twenty days in the year.

MR. SCHELL. Don't you know a man might be compelled to remain one, two, or three weeks, and that it would work against the interests of justice?

MR. LARKIN. I think not. I am in favor of this course. There were only seventy-five days of Court in El Dorado County. We get along very peaceably. I hope the amendment will prevail.

MR. MCCALLUM. I would like to ask, what is the distance to be traveled in Winter time from the county seat of El Dorado County to the county seat of Alpine County?

MR. LARKIN. About twenty-four hours ride.

MR. SCHELL. Would it not rather increase the expense than diminish it?

MR. LARKIN. The Judge will pay his own expenses; he will pay his own hotel bill. The County Judge there receives one thousand five hundred dollars a year. He has made a good Judge there and will take this position and do all the business of the two counties. So you will find good men all through the State who will accept these positions at a moderate salary. Unite these two counties, and one man can do all the work. In Judge Belcher's county there is no necessity there for two Judges. One can do all the business. Let us double up these counties, so as to employ Judges at least one hundred days in the year. I intended to offer an amendment for this whole proposition, to provide for a Judge in each Senatorial district in the State. That is the true principle: that will give permanent work and permanent pay. There are forty Senatorial districts in the State, and forty Judges can do all the business well enough. I would like to see such a system as that, and the people would like to see such a system adopted in this State. I believe it is the true policy. Anyway, I desire that these two counties shall be united. It is the true policy, to unite these two small counties. It is in the interest of the State, and we must stand by the interest of the State. There is no necessity for it.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I think it would be bad policy, in any case, to have one Judge for two counties, especially where there is any distance between the county seats. If we adopt this system of having one Judge to attend to all the business of the county, then it is necessary that the Judge should be at the county seat all the time for that purpose. It will do, of course, in a case like Yuba and Sutter, where the Court Houses are not farther apart than this Capitol and the Golden Eagle Hotel. But where it takes twenty-four hours to travel between them, I say it will not work well. It will be doing injustice to the Judge, because, if he has to travel back and forth all the time, he ought to be paid for it, and if he is paid his mileage, it would cost as much as it would to have two Judges.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I think this matter has been discussed long enough. I think it is evident from the arguments here that there ought to be a Court for each county. Uniformity requires it, and for the mere matter of a little expense I do not want to see the harmony of the system spoiled. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will be voted down.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. BROWN. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Filcher, Caples, Wyatt, and White.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section seven.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 7. In any county, or city and county, other than the City and County of San Francisco, in which there shall be more than one Judge of the Superior Court, the Judges of such Court may hold as many sessions of said Court at the same time as there are Judges thereof, and shall apportion the business among themselves as equally as may be.

MR. SCHELL. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section eight.

HOLDING COURT.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 8. A Judge of any Superior Court may hold a Superior Court in any county, at the request of a Judge of the Superior Court thereof, and upon the request of the Governor it shall be his duty to do so.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by adding to the end of the section the words: 'And a case in a Superior Court may be tried by a Judge pro tempore, who must be a member of the bar, agreed upon in writing by the parties litigant or their attorneys of record approved by the Court and sworn to try the cause.'"

REMARKS OF MR. BARRY.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: This is the same amendment I offered yesterday, and withdrew, in order to wait for this section. I have only a little to say in explanation of it. If the attorneys and their clients agree in writing upon some attorney to try a case, and he is approved by the Court, this provides that the attorney may try that particular case. The object of the amendment as to any case is, as I stated on yesterday, where the presiding Judge may be disqualified to try a particular cause, and that in such an event the respective attorneys, or the parties litigant, may agree upon a competent attorney to sit upon the trial of that cause. There are times, in counties of the interior, where the Judge might not reside at the county seat, where there are two counties joined together to form a particular district, and in another case he might be sick, or he might be absent, or he might have been an attorney previously in the case, before he was elected Judge, and for that reason would be disqualified to try the case. This would provide a remedy whereby the trial might go on. It is, of course, a fact that justice should not be delayed, but on the contrary, it should be as speedy as possible. There are cases where the attorneys and clients of both sides desire a speedy trial, and, in a case of this kind, I see no reason why they should not have an opportunity of going ahead with the trial, if they all agree upon a certain attorney who is competent, and whom the Judge will approve, to try the cause. I do not see any harm that may come from it, and I do see a great deal of good that may come from it.

MR. ROLFE. I would like to ask the gentleman, for information, if he does not think the same object could be obtained under the section as it is in our Code of Civil Procedure, where parties consent to try a case by referee?

MR. BARRY. In that case they would lose the benefit of a jury trial. I think the amendment can do no possible harm, and is one that in many cases will be of great benefit. By referring the case the party would lose the benefit of a jury trial. In this case he procures a trial by an impartial Judge, without the necessity of changing the venue or sending off for another Judge from another district to come there and try the case, and he has the benefit of a jury just the same as if the regular Judge was presiding.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: The difference between this method of choosing a Judge and trying the case, and referring it to the referee, would be this: where a reference is had after the evidence is taken, a report in writing of the whole matter must be submitted to the Judge, and he must pass upon it. In this case the party agreed upon is that Judge, to all intents and purposes, and there is no further reference to the Judge elected, or to the regular Judge. The person chosen, sitting as Judge, makes his rulings and he tries the case, with the aid and assistance of the jury, exceptions are taken to his rulings, and an appeal can be had from his decisions upon questions of law just the same as from the decisions of the regular Judge. The system here advocated has been in vogue in the State of Indiana for a number of years. It is the practice there to-day, that where attorneys agree they can choose a duly qualified attorney to sit as a Judge in the case. I have seen this method employed in the State of Michigan. It is frequently employed where the Court is pressed with business. Where litigants are obliged to come from a distance with their attorneys and witnesses, and cases are on trial before the regular Judge, and the trial is being prolonged, and it is a hardship for the witnesses, the attorneys for the respective parties have chosen an attorney in whom they had confidence, and, by agreement, allowed him to sit as Judge in the case, and tried the case, either with or without the aid of a jury, and it has universally given satisfaction. It is a matter, of course, which, if the amendment is adopted, rests wholly and solely with the parties to the case. If they choose to have an attorney sit as Judge in their case, certainly no one ought to have a right to complain, and it furthers the ends of justice. It makes justice more speedy, and it has been found in those States in which it has been adopted that the practice is satisfactory.

REMARKS OF MR. HALL.

MR. HALL. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment will not prevail. I am utterly opposed to this system of having a Judge in esse and half a dozen in posse. We have provided a system by which we are to have a Judge of a Superior Court in each county of the State. We are to clothe him with the robes of his judicial office, and a method is now proposed by which he will be enabled occasionally, or as his convenience may be served, or the wishes of counsel will be gratified, to throw off his robe of office, and some one else, a member of the bar, to assume it. I can see that there are vices about this proposed plan. One of them is this: there is no limitation in respect to the character of cases which are to be tried by the Judge pro tempore. It will extend equally to cases of a criminal character as to cases of a civil character. I can see how there may be collusion between counsel, and although I have the very highest respect for my profession, and I believe them to be, as a mass, a highly honorable class, we must admit that there are to be found among them some men of bad character. I do not want to open the door to the possibility of collusion by which the violator of the law may escape punishment for his crimes. Now again, sir, this temporary officer will sit upon the case, he will hear the testimony, etc., and when he goes off the bench there are certain supplementary proceedings in the case, such as the settlement of bills of exception, settlements for the purpose of appeal, or with a view to a motion for a new trial, and proceedings of that character. Then how long is this quasi-judicial character to inhere to this temporary officer? When is it to end? It seems to me that we might have one Judge, one constitutional officer, elected by the people, to execute these very important functions in behalf of the administration of justice, and not an unlimited number of others who have hanging about them loosely some scrap of the official judicial robes. I am opposed to it, Mr. Chairman, and I trust it will not receive the approbation of this committee. If it shall find its way into this section, I shall be obliged to vote against it when we come into Convention and the final vote is taken.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: This proposition was presented to the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, and as the Secretary of our committee has since died we have not got the notes and memoranda which were kept of our proceedings. My recollection is that this proposition was favorably considered by the committee. For some reason it was not engrafted in the report. I cannot see any objection to adopting this additional provision. The attorneys interested in the case, or parties interested in the case, on both sides, have to agree in writing, and after that is done the Judge has to approve of it. Now, it would certainly be very beneficial in many aspects of the case. Under this system we will have a series of new Judges. In any county the Judge will probably have been an active member of the bar, and will have a good many cases in which he was interested. In that case they would have to remain untried until a Judge could be called from some other county, to come in there and try these cases; and it works a great deal of inconvenience. This mode lays the basis for selecting a Judge from among the members of the bar who is agreed to by both parties, and approved by the Judge. I remember having once seen a case tried in that way, at Rock Island, by a prominent lawyer. It seems to me a good provision, and I cannot see any objection to it; therefore I hope the amendment will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I will say that in the State of Illinois it is customary, when the Courts are crowded with business, to put the business out in this way, and have, sometimes, two or three jury trials going on at one time. I never heard any complaint about the system, and it is often spoken of approvingly. There is a class of cases in which there are attorneys especially familiar with some particular branch of law, and in such cases it was often to the advantage of attorneys to have the case tried before such an attorney, instead of before the regular Court. Then, I do not see what objection there could be to allowing parties interested to agree, and have their cases submitted to a certain man, who must be learned in the law in order to be a member of the bar. This applies to civil cases. It would facilitate the business of the Courts, it would accommodate litigants, it would secure a speedy administration of justice, it would injure nobody, and I hope it will be adopted.

MR. CROUCH. I would suggest to the gentleman that he amend it so as to read, "approved by the Court, or the Judge thereof," so that the Judge, as well as the Court, could approve.

MR. BARRY. I think that is included in the way the amendment reads. The Court really includes the Judge as well. I would prefer it the way I offer it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sierra, Mr. Barry.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 73 ayes to 14 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section nine.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO JUDGES.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 9. The Legislature shall have no power to grant leave of absence to any judicial officer; and any such officer who shall absent himself from the State for more than sixty consecutive days, shall be deemed to have forfeited his office. The Legislature of the State may, at any time, two thirds of the members of the Senate and two thirds of the members of the Assembly voting therefor, increase or diminish the number of Judges of the Superior Court in any county, or city and county, in the State; provided that no such reduction shall affect any Judge who has been elected.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to send up.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section nine by striking out 'sixty' and inserting 'thirty.'"

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: The object of the amendment is to reduce the time that a Judge may be absent from the State. If a Judge is necessarily absent from the State more than thirty days, he had better resign, and let a Judge be elected, and the business of the Court go on. I am in favor of the amendment, and I think no Judge should be absent from the State, and retain his office, more than thirty days.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I think the sixty days is not too long. Judges get sick just as well as anybody else. I have known gentlemen to be compelled to leave here and go to the Atlantic States, and if they are limited to thirty days they could not do it. It takes eight days to go and eight days to return, leaving only about thirteen days that a man can remain in the States to transact business, or for his health. Sixty days is certainly not too long to allow a man under circumstances which may occur. I do not think we should treat this thing in an illiberal manner, and assume that the Judge will abuse any privilege of this kind. I can only say, that in other places the Courts have long vacations. California is the only place on the face of the earth where Judges work all the time. In England there are very long Summer vacations, which are taken by the Judges, and it has been a common remark, that the long lives of the English Judges arises from the fact that they do take vacations in Summer, and break up this everlasting wear and tear of hard work. An Englishman will be called upon to participate in the affairs of the nation and counsels of the nation when he is eighty years of age, and sometimes up to ninety. Here we think a man old at sixty or sixty-five, because he is working all the time. The English Judges preserve their health and keep strong their mental powers on account of their having time to take their Summer recreations. In the Atlantic States the Courts all have long vacations. They necessarily have them from the heat of Summer. Go to an Atlantic State—go to New York, to Boston, or any of those great leading cities of the East during the Summer months, and you will find that the Courts are not sitting at all. Very little is done there on account of the heat. It is a question simply of giving them an opportunity to preserve their health. Two months out of twelve is certainly not too much as a simple question of vacation. I take it for granted that no Judge is likely to leave the State, unless the absolute requirements of his affairs, or the condition of his health, renders it necessary; And the idea that if a Judge is East, and does not hurry back and get into the State within thirty days, he will forfeit his position, looks to me to be unworthy of a Constitution. I do not believe that the privilege would be availed of, except in cases of necessity.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: It appears to me that the view of the Chairman of the committee is correct, and that in this case, as well as in others, that we have gone over, in the report of the Judiciary Committee we find that there has been a degree of judgment, solid sense, and discrimination exercised. I am under the impression that it would be improper to make any change whatever. We do not expect that any of these Judges will be inclined to shirk responsibility or avoid business. But in cases such as have been mentioned by the Chairman of the committee, it may be absolutely necessary; I think under the circumstances it would be injudicious to adopt the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from El Dorado, Mr. Larkin.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I send up another amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section nine by adding, 'provided that the Legislature shall have power to consolidate two or more counties for judicial purposes.'"

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: The object of that amendment is to leave to the Legislature at any time to consolidate small counties of the State that wish it. I understand that there will be a proposition offered to-day to provide that the counties shall pay their Judges; if so I am satisfied that nearly one third of the counties of this State will not be willing to pay for Judges at the rate proposed in this bill, and that it would be as well to leave to the Legislature—the representatives directly from the people—the power to provide that some counties may be consolidated for judicial purposes. Many of these counties would be unable to support a Judge under this plan. I think it is safe to leave it to the Legislature to determine, from time to time, upon the adjusting of these districts, combining the counties and reducing the expenses.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the gentleman's amendment will be voted down. I do not believe there is any danger that this Convention will provide that each county will pay for its own Judge. The Judges will undoubtedly be paid as they are paid to-day—out of the State treasury. If we consolidate the counties, then one county will have a Judge resident therein, and there will be no resident Judge in the other county. As it is to-day, each county has its Judge; that is to say, its County Judge; and, in addition, has a District Judge who holds at least one term in the county in the course of a year. Under this system, the County Judges are wiped out, and unless we give each county a Superior Judge, some counties will not have any Judge at all to transact their business; and I do not think that it is a system that is at all desirable. The salary of the Judges, as fixed by the committee, in the lowest grade of counties, is two thousand dollars; and I think the State can well afford to pay two thousand dollars in order to have a Judge within each organized county in the State. When the time comes that there are not sufficient inhabitants within a certain territorial limit to comprise a county, then it is time to disorganize the county and attach it to some other county; but as long as the county organization is intact, so long the State ought to provide it with a Judge. I think it is a wrong economy for gentlemen to get upon this floor and say that some counties ought to have a Judge together; that is, the people of Alpine County can use the Judge of El Dorado County. The gentleman calculates that he is going to run the politics of El Dorado County, and through the influence of the Judge he elects, he is going to run Alpine County. I do not think we are going to aid him in anything of the kind, and I hope the committee will vote down the gentleman's political schemes and aspirations.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I am aware that under this system fifty-two Judges for the counties are provided. The seven Supreme Judges will just include the number of lawyers on this floor, and the draft of this bill was made with reference to giving each man a place. Each lawyer in this Convention was expected to have a place either in the counties or on the Supreme bench.

MR. TULLY. I do not want the position in El Dorado County.

MR. LARKIN. I think that political aspirations have nothing to do with it. I want a system that will be flexible, a system that will leave to the Legislature the regulation of our Courts. Two thirds of the counties to-day cannot afford to pay five thousand dollars or four thousand dollars. Their County Judges, many of them, receive but one thousand five hundred dollars, and they are men quite as capable of discharging their duties as any that will be elected. This system is too magnificent for the State of California. These men are looking at it from the attorney's standpoint, and see places ahead at salaries that they never anticipated.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: If the gentleman by this small attack upon lawyers expects to recommend himself to popular favor, I think he will be mistaken. The people of this country have sufficient intelligence to understand this sort of thing. I am in favor of a Judge in every county, because it is not right to require the people when they want orders in a Probate Court, or in some particular Chamber business, to travel three or four hundred miles to hunt up a Judge to get an order. If the counties are so destitute as to render the expense accounts improper, the Legislature can unite one county to another. Neither is it true that any additional expense, or at least to any considerable amount, is to be imposed upon the State by having a Superior Judge in each county, for I take it for granted that Judges are to be paid out of the State treasury. It is for that we pay taxes. And there would be just as much propriety in requiring every county to pay its member of the Legislature as to pay its Judge. More than all that, at first I was inclined to the opinion that the report of the committee would enhance the expenses of the judiciary, but in looking at it more carefully, and making some calculations, I have come to a different conclusion. In my county, and I believe in all others, there is a tax in the shape of fees in favor of the Probate Judge. We escape all this by the system recommended by the committee. The county and the taxpayers and litigants are relieved from these fees, and my opinion is that in the aggregate they will amount to the increase which the system reported will entail upon the State.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: The sixth section provides that "there shall be, in each of the organized counties, or cities and counties of the State, a Superior Court, for each of which at least one Judge shall be elected by the qualified electors of the county, or city and county, at the general State election." Now, if this amendment is adopted it would require the re-formation of that section, and of some other sections in this article, from the Judiciary Committee. In fact I rather regret to hear the apparent assent of the Chairman of that committee to these propositions, except in the case of Yuba and Sutter, where it was under very special circumstances, the two county seats being close together and the two Court Houses being within half a mile of each other; so it seemed to be understood that substantially all the benefits of this article, in reference to a Judge in each county, was accomplished in that case by having one Judge for the two counties; but there are no other cases of the kind. My friend from El Dorado is sometimes right and sometimes wrong. This is one of the cases in which he is clearly wrong. I think just previously he was right, when he proposed an amendment to reduce to thirty days the time which a Judge might absent himself from the State. But in the case of his own county, although it may seem a little vain to say it, I believe he is not at all familiar with the workings of its business. In these cases of small counties, where they ought to be disorganized when we get to the report of the Committee on County Boundaries, a sheme is provided by which the territory may be added to adjoining counties. I submit that we ought not to adopt any amendment with reference to this matter, except as to Yuba and Sutter; but if we adopt this amendment there will certainly be a necessity for reconstructing section six and several other sections.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I would suggest that if it is to be left with the Legislature, we should likewise leave with the Legislature the power to arrange the salaries of Judges in such cases. I would suggest that there should be added to the amendment offered by the gentleman from El Dorado the words "and fix the salaries of Judges in such consolidated counties, not to exceed five thousand dollars to any Judge." I therefore beg leave to offer it as an amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: This is substantially the same as the amendment proposed by myself to section six, and the suggestion of the gentleman from Marin is also correct. I do not believe that it is proper for this Convention to inflict upon this State any cast iron, inflexible rule, in view of the changing condition of things. I assume that the Convention will retain the provision and adopt the provision proposed by the committee, authorizing the payment of the Judges out of the State treasury. I do not express my opinion upon this system as yet. There are fifty-two County Judges in the State at present, whose salaries are paid from the county treasuries, as I understand it. There are twenty-three District Judges and five Supreme Court Judges, who are paid from the State treasury. If gentlemen will make the computation they will find that it adds a burden upon the State treasury of nearly forty Judges. If the provision is adopted authorizing a Judge in every county there will be nearly forty Judges in addition to what are paid from the State treasury at present. Now, sir, it always makes a difference to the people who pay the piper. We do not care much how many Federal officers there are, or how much salary they get. It would be apt to be so with the counties. If the State pays and the county does not pay, the chances are that the people of the county would prefer to have a Judge with a good salary paid from the State. A very small portion falls upon the county. What is everybody's business is nobody's business.

Now, sir, you will find this state of affairs as the result of an inflexible rule like this. In some county where the whole judicial business will not occupy the Judge more than three weeks in the year, they will be very glad to elect a Judge with a good record, who fastens himself upon the State treasury. The people do not care. They have got no particular interest, only their small percentage of expense in common with the people of the State. In that state of things, if the Legislature is given the power to attach another county to that one for judicial purposes, the expense is decreased. Another thing, in my opinion the principle of having a Judge in each county does not commend itself to the good sense and judgment of intelligent men. The proper basis is population and business. Of course that must be taken with geographical arrangements; with facility of communication, etc. In the other States I find that the judicial districts are distributed upon that basis, all the way from a population of forty thousand up to a hundred thousand. And the State of Pennsylvania, whenever a county has a population of forty thousand, under their Constitution, it constitutes a separate judicial district; that is, their Court of Common Pleas, which answers to our District Court. In the State of Illinois it is one hundred thousand; but in the State of Illinois there are criminal Courts which have some of the jurisdiction and some of the work of our District Courts. In this State it is fair to say that one Judge of ordinary industry and ability can try the cases of a population of twenty-five thousand. Less than that, it appears to me, you are making, to a greater or less degree, sinecure offices. The committee has already departed from its rule that there shall be in each organized county a separate Court. The gentleman from Yuba has obtained here a proviso consolidating the two counties of Yuba and Sutter, and having departed from the rule in that case, why not leave the matter open to the Legislature, whenever, in their judgment, it becomes necessary to attach these counties for judicial purposes.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that these provisions are without reason, without rhyme, and without consistency. There has been, in regard to a change in the judiciary in this State, but one idea, and that is to have a Judge in each county; and the reason of it is apparent to every one, that they want a Judge there to attend to the business. Now, what is the result of this change? The Superior Judge that is to be put there is to take the place of the District Judge and the County Judge, and is to be the probate officer. Now, there is a great deal of business in probate that it is absolutely necessary that the Judge should be at hand at the time. A man dies who has a large estate. Some provisional power must be made to attend to that estate at once. And so with a great many other matters of probate, and other kinds of legal business, that it is absolutely necessary that the Judge should be at hand. Under this system you throw it back to the position of a Circuit Judge or District Judge without the advantage of the Probate Judge being in the county. You take away the advantages of the present system and you do not add anything better to it. Now, Mr. Barbour has said that a Judge in one of these outlying counties may saddle himself upon the State. Has not every county in the State a County Judge? Does he not receive a salary? Will this add anything more? Does not this report leave it to the Legislature to fix the salary at the first term? What more is done? Now, this matter can all be arranged about paying salaries. If a man does not amount to much do not give him much salary.

It does seem to me that a county that cannot support one Judge ought not to exist; it should be abolished. Now, this will break down this system entirely. You have already declared that each county shall have a Judge, and now you propose to say that the Legislature shall make Circuit Judges under this system. It is unfair. Here, in the central portion of the State, they get the same number of Judges, and in San Francisco you give them twelve Judges, one more than they have got at present. This thing is unjust and unreasonable, and I, as representing an outlying county, protest, on the part of my constituents, against any such unequal provision. Now, sir, if this should be allowed, members in the Legislature who do not know anything more about the condition of affairs than my friend, Mr. Larkin, and who have influence in the body, as he has in this, may come forward and say: "Unite Inyo County and Kern County, because Inyo is a small county," and thereby take away from the County of Kern, that has a large and increasing population, its Judge. The Judge may be located hundreds of miles over the mountains where railroads can never run, and where it takes two weeks to go and come. In the meantime our probate business cannot be attended to. Other matters cannot be attended to. As it is now, we have almost practically no District Court down there; our Judge has to travel over these mountains, and is gone most of the time. We feel it, and we know what it is. We want a change on that account. I believe that everybody wants a change on that account. When this matter came up in the committee it was the unanimous opinion that we should have a change, because every county ought to have a Judge. It came by unanimous consent. It seemed to be universally admitted that this particular thing should be, and the discussion was all as to what should be the constitution of the Supreme Court. But, in regard to nisi prius Courts, there was but one opinion, and that was, that each county should have a Judge. And now, to come in and break down this principle altogether, making conflicting systems here, I say that it is unreasonable and unjust to the outlying counties.

REMARKS OF MR. BELCHER.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: I am a member of the committee that framed this report, and I am in favor of having the best Courts possible to have to do the business; but, sir, I am in favor of the amendment proposed, and it is for this reason: there are counties in this State that, in my judgment, can be united. Population changes. The population of some of our counties increases; the population of other counties does not increase. There are counties. the population of which has diminished, and the amount of legal business has diminished very largely within my knowledge. Now, I think I can see where it may be possible, at some time, to unite, without inconvenience, two counties, where one Judge can do the business of two counties without inconvenience. If that be possible, why should we have extra Judges? If I were a Judge I would rather have a fair amount of business to do than to be idle. I believe in giving Judges employment as we give other men employment. Let the time be occupied to a considerable extent. Now, sir, take many of the counties in this State, and with all the business that they have there, the Judge in the county will be idle the greater part of his time. Suppose there are two counties where the business is not greater than one man can do? Suppose you take Tehama and Shasta Counties. Suppose a Judge could be in one county one day, and in the other the next, and hold Court without difficulty; and supposing that the business was not greater than one man could do, why should not one man do it? Why should we have one Judge in Shasta and another in Tehama? Why not have one Judge? So, you take the two Counties of Yolo and Solano. Suppose one Judge could do the business there for the two counties. With the railroad passing directly from one to the other, the Judge could be in both counties during the same day, if need be, and transact business. Why might you not have one Judge for El Dorado and Placer? Why is not one Judge enough? There are many counties in this State where, without any inconvenience, one Judge could do all the business for two counties. The proposition here is simply to permit the Legislature, when it finds that one Judge can do the business for two counties, to provide that one Judge shall do it. Now, I see no reason why it should not be so; and I am in favor of it for another reason: the Legislature has to provide for the salaries of Judges in this State, and the Legislature will not pay Judges well unless Judges have something to do.

The gentleman says let your Judges of the outlying counties have small salaries. I do not know how it is in the gentleman's county, but as for myself I know of no lawyers, who are fit to be Judges, who are willing to serve in that capacity for two thousand dollars a year. I am in favor of giving the lawyers who go upon the bench fair pay, and then they will work for it. I believe that is the better system.

It is said you cannot dispose of the probate business here in these counties. The greater part of the business can be disposed of always by the Court Commissioner who is provided for by this article. There is no question about it. So far as there is business that requires the judgment of the Judge, the Judge will attend to it in the Probate Court. The greater part of the business will be routine business, like orders that attorneys have written out for him to sign, where there is no question as to what the order shall be. I say there are several cases now where one Judge can do the business for two counties. I have spoken of three where there is no doubt about it. I have been told by some of the lawyers of these counties that one Judge could do the business for Tehama and Shasta Counties without any trouble. I believe one Judge could do the business for Yolo and Solano Counties. I believe—because I have been told so—that one Judge could do all the business in Nevada and Placer Counties; do it without any difficulty at all. I have, for some number of years, been a lawyer. I have been looking at the work of Judges, and I know a Judge can do a good deal of work if he undertakes it. And I know it is better for a Judge that he shall have work to do, instead of idling about the streets with nothing upon his hands.

Now, I am for paying Judges well. I am for giving our Judges good salaries. If I have to try a case I want to try it before a man who is worth something to himself. If a man has got a good business he will not leave it and go on the bench unless you pay him something near what his practice brings him. But while I want to see Judges well paid, I want to have it so that they will have something to do, so that the State can afford to pay good salaries. If I was in the Legislature hereafter I would be for uniting these counties wherever one Judge could do the business. There is a difficulty in doing this in some cases. Take the County of Sierra, for instance. The county seat is inaccessible, and the Judge cannot pass from that county seat to another readily. But wherever the Judge can pass readily, and the business is not too large, and one Judge can do it, I believe we ought to leave it in the power of the Legislature to have it so arranged. This amendment ought to be adopted, so that the Legislature can effect this end if it should seem best in the future.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I am sorry to observe the gentlemen of this committee conceding that the system which they have formed is a failure. It was a system that was unanimously agreed to, as I understand it, by that committee. It was a system that was based upon three primary main propositions: First, that the people would have justice at their doors, without having the necessity of traveling a long distance to obtain it. Next, they would have perpetual sessions, and business could be transacted constantly in these Courts. In the immediate future, all the interests of litigants would be attended to. The other was that of dispensing with numerous Courts, or rather, a consolidation of jurisdiction; the doing away, so far as that is concerned, with this thing of terms for Courts in the various counties. Now, it is conceded, Mr. Chairman, by this same committee, that the very foundation upon which their theory rested is an utter failure. They are asking now to engraft upon this same system, a system of District Courts: and they are asking to add terms to these Courts by having the Courts sit first in one county, and then to sit in another county. The whole theory might have been met by simply giving the jurisdiction to the County Judge to issue the necessary writs, in the first instance, that is required to be issued by the District Court when great dispatch is requisite and absolutely necessary. All the difficulties could have been met by a simple provision of that character, giving to the County Judge such jurisdiction, and the whole system of this committee would have been carried out more systematically, and perhaps with better satisfaction to the people. But as it is now, there will be no alternative but to travel the distance that is provided between the various counties, and the county seat where the District Court may be in session, when it is composed of two or more counties in a district. Now, where is all this beautifully spun theory with reference to the consolidation of jurisdiction in one Judge, and this beautiful theory of continuous sessions, and this beautiful open theory of having justice administered at the doors of litigants? It has all vanished into thin air, and the gentleman from El Dorado has sprung upon it a proposition which has exploded the whole proposition like a bombshell, and it is scattered into fragments, and to the four winds. Now, if Alpine County is to be united to El Dorado County why not give San Benito to Santa Clara? It is a trifling place. It is up there among the hills. It has no business with a Judge. One man could not occupy his time more than a third of the year, and our Judge sits about two thirds of the time. What, in the name of common sense, is the use of allowing this trifling little county to have a Judge of its own? Why not unite it to Santa Clara?

MR. TOWNSEND. Were you not contending for two Judges in Santa Clara County yesterday?

MR. HERRINGTON. I was desiring to carry out the scheme of the committee and to have justice administered at our doors and that speedily, and I am for one Judge in each county in this State; to carry out the scheme of this committee. If we intend to have the scheme of any use; a scheme that will accommodate the people; if we are going to add expense to the system, let the expense be met with something adequate in the form of justice to pay for the expense. Do not make the people travel from one county to another to find their Judge, and then charge them more for the luxury than they pay now. Either maintain your scheme or abandon your scheme. Either you are right or you are wrong in your determination. Your principles, in the first place, were either founded in justice and right, or they are wholly wrong, and the gentleman from El Dorado is right, and you gentlemen have taken the wrong track. Now, you either ought to be condemned out of your own mouths, and your system ought to go to the wall entirely, or else it ought to be maintained in its integrity, and we ought to have the advantages intended by this scheme. These gentlemen that live in the mountains ought to have it brought home to their doors, and the State ought to pay for it. Do you understand me? [Laughter.] That is what it meant. But when you come to test the scheme and come down to dollars and cents, you forget the justice that the people are requiring, you forget the trouble it is to litigants, and you sneakingly skulk out of the proposition upon which your whole proposition was based, and leave the people in the same condition that they find themselves now, traveling from one county to another. Now, either honestly abandon your scheme and give that jurisdiction to your County Courts, or else give us justice right at the doors of the people, and pay the additional expense and let your scheme stand consistent with itself. Do not abandon cowardly a system simply because some one tells you it adds a thousand dollars expense. Either it is worth it or it ought to go down altogether. The scheme ought to stand as a whole, or be condemned as a whole.

MR. MCCALLUM. I move as a substitute for the pending amendment, to add to the end of section nine the following: "except in case of the consolidation of two or more counties into one county."

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I understand that the Convention here have expressed a decided opinion in favor of the system as reported by the committee, and it has been acted upon and adopted in the main. The gentleman from Santa Clara has expressed his approval of it as a good system, and stated some reasons why I think it a good system. The gentleman from El Dorado has moved an amendment to section nine, stating his reasons why he thinks a mere modification in that very small degree should be made, or rather not a modification, except that it leaves to the Legislature power in certain exceptional cases to consolidate counties. Two gentlemen of the committee have expressed themselves favorable to that modification. Seventeen of the nineteen members of the committee have expressed no opinion upon the subject at this period of time; yet the gentleman from Santa Clara indulges in the highly classical language that the committee skulks sneakingly out of the scheme. Now, if he likes to appear before this Convention using such expressions upon that basis, I give him the high pedestal to which they elevate him.

MR. HERRINGTON. If the Chairman of the committee has not indorsed that scheme I will take it back. I understood him to do so.

MR. WILSON. I have not yet spoken upon it.

MR. HERRINGTON. Then I take it back and apologize.

MR. WILSON. Your apology is accepted on the condition that you do not offend again in the same way. I myself have preferred from the beginning the plan reported by the committee without any modification at all in respect to the matter now under discussion. It is very hard to get a system to work absolutely perfect in every respect. Now, sir, gentlemen have suggested rare and exceptional cases where this system does not act so well in one or two counties as it does generally throughout the State. Now, if we adopt a system which is generally good, it is all that could be expected. No general rule works to perfection in every case; and an exception arose in the case of Yuba and Sutter, which was a very peculiar case, and an amendment was made in that respect, to which I yielded my assent, because I think there should be in every system some flexibility; I think every Constitution ought to have some flexibility about it.

MR. HERRINGTON. Now, I understand that the gentleman admits that he consented to the arrangement about Sutter and Yuba yesterday.

MR. WILSON. I preferred the system as adopted by the committee, without any change, but as that was interposed I raised no objection to it at all, as an exceptional case, or as an exception to the general rule. Now, if there are one or two other exceptional cases, it does not disturb the general system. It rather tends to strengthen and improve the general system. I think it is better to have a Court in each county myself. I think that although there are exceptional counties, where the Judge may not be employed all of his time, yet as long as the county organization exists, they ought to have a Court in that county. Now, take probate business. Gentlemen say there is not much in probate business. Now, we know that some of the most important business arises in the Probate Court. In that Court there is liable to arise some of the most important questions that can arise in any Court. Some of the greatest cases in the books have been on wills, some on descent, some on heirship, questions of distribution, and all those things which are very intricate and difficult. This thing seems to have been overlooked, that almost all the property of the county, sooner or later, must pass through the Probate Court. In the course of fifteen or twenty years, every article in the county is liable to, and I think does, pass through the Probate Court. Therefore it is well to have a Judge stationary in the county, and at the county seat, who will be at all times ready to attend to business of that kind, together with the other business connected with his office.

Now, the Superior Courts, under this system, are to have jurisdiction of all that has heretofore come before the County Courts, before the criminal Courts, and before the Probate Courts; and unless there is a Judge in the county, and at the county seat, there will be a failure of justice in many instances. In case of forcible entry and detainer, either by persons entering by force upon a piece of land, or a house, or by a tenant holding over; now, unless there is a Judge in the county, there would be great inconvenience. And, although there are one or two counties like Alpine, where it would seem that that county could be very well attached to some other county, yet on the whole the system would be better if maintained in its integrity. So far as an exceptional case is concerned, it does not at all interfere with the grand plan that is here proposed, and I take it for granted, that if the Legislature had the power with which it is thought to be invested by the amendment now pending, that it would never be exercised, unless it was the wish of the county—unless it was the desire of the people to be affected by it. Therefore, no great harm could be done by the amendment. I have no deep feelings upon the subject, although I prefer, as a matter of justice, the original system, and that is to give to each county its own Judge.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Would it not be very likely that the Legislature would do it to save expense to the State?

MR. WILSON. I do not think that the Legislature would ever do it without the request of the county.

MR. McCALLUM. I would like to ask the Chairman whether a Judge has a right to his salary where the number of Judges is diminished under this provision: "The Legislature of the State may, at any time, two thirds of the members of the Senate and two thirds of the members of the Assembly voting therefor, increase or diminish the number of Judges of the Superior Court in any county, or city and county, in the State; provided, that no such reduction shall affect any Judge who has been elected." Now, suppose, in the case of Alpine, there should be a consolidation, as provided for in this article, might there not be a legal question as to the Judge drawing his salary for the balance of the term?

MR. WILSON. It would operate in the same way, and the same question would arise in the case of a consolidation of counties. The object of that provision, as I understand it, is, that there should be no scheming to affect a Judge. The Legislature might diminish the number for the purpose of legislating him out of office. If the public interest requires a reduction of Judges, it will of course be done by the Legislature; but it has sometimes been done to seek to attack a Judge, out of some personal spite, or for political considerations.

MR. McCALLUM. Suppose a Judge is elected in Alpine County, and next year that county should be disorganized and attached to El Dorado County, how about that Judge's salary for the balance of his term of office, and the office itself?

MR. WILSON. It is a question whether he would not really get his salary. I suppose he would really not be entitled to his salary.

REMARKS OF MR. WICKES.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: I do not think it advisable that we should unite counties. We have already had District and County Courts in one jurisdiction. With regard to the inter-communication between counties, it is generally where the counties are thickly settled, and there will be the most legal business. Now counties whose county seats are close together and easy of access are the very counties that are thickly settled. Each of these counties will doubtless need a Judge. In those counties which are sparsely settled their county seats are difficult of access; but in the course of time the population of these counties which are sparsely settled may increase, and inter-communication between the county seats may be easier, and there would be a necessity for some change. And while I do not think it feasible at present, yet I am willing, for the sake of imparting some flexibility to the Constitution, to leave this matter to the Legislature. I will therefore vote for the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. ANDREWS.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I am in hopes that this amendment will not prevail. The very illustration used by the gentleman from Yuba, of Shasta and Tehama, should satisfy any one that the amendment should not prevail. It is proposed by this system to give us a better judicial system than we have now. That would place Shasta and Tehama in a worse condition than they are now, because they each have a Judge now. Under that system they would only have one Judge for the two. I think that the proposition of the committee is correct—that every county should have a Judge. Every county has a Judge now. If it is necessary to consolidate counties let it be done, but as long as we have a county that county should have a Judge, for reasons that have been alluded to heretofore, and, as I think, fully set forth. I am in hopes that the amendment will not prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. MILLS.

MR. MILLS. Mr. Chairman: I hope that neither of the amendments will prevail. Situated as we are who have seats in this part of the hall, it is almost impossible for us to hear any of the arguments that come from the other side of the house, and as my voice is not strong I have almost given up attempting to be heard in this body. I have been somewhat familiar with the course and management of the District Courts. At one time Contra Costa County was connected with the Third Judicial District. The district extended to Monterey and I think San Luis Obispo Counties. It embraced Alameda, Contra Costa, Santa Cruz, Monterey, and I think San Luis Obispo. Now, sir, what would prevent the Legislature from making a district of the whole State if they saw proper. Would not that defeat the entire system? It is said we are willing to trust to the Legislature. Why not trust them entirely? We have had some experience in our county with the policy of leaving it to the Legislature to decide whether the county shall remain in one district or go to another. A few gentlemen here decided that it was best that Contra Costa should not remain in the Third Judicial District, and we went over into the seventh. When we wanted an injunction, or to transact some business which required an order of the Judge, we were obliged to go sometimes on horseback and sometimes on foot to hunt up the Judge. The Court could not tell what length of time it would remain in a given county. He might expect to remain two or three weeks, and the business might be dispatched in a few days. You could not tell until you got to the county seat whether you would find the Judge there or not. The result was that we have often been compelled to let our business remain until we could find out the locality of the Judge.

Now, it is proposed that the Superior Judge shall transact the business formerly done by the County Judge. It is proposed to place within the jurisdiction of this Court all matters in probate, all proceedings in insolvency, and also all matters in respect to forcible entry and detainer. You are well aware that in such cases the business ought to be transacted promptly. The case might be one where damage is constantly taking place. Why should you say that property shall be destroyed because your Judge is engaged in business in another county? Your County Court at the present time is continously open for the purpose of trying these cases. Now, you propose to do away with those Courts. Suppose the Legislature should undertake to say that Contra Costa and Alameda Counties can get along with one Judge or two Judges. Why, what then? Why, we would have no Judge most of the time to attend to the class of business I have referred to. It is said we can trust the Legislature. Why can you trust them? It is hard to tell what they may do. We went out of the third district into the seventh, then out of the seventh into the fourth, and then back into the third, and now we are in the fifteenth. How long we shall remain there depends upon the view gentleman take who come to the Legislature. We are floating and floating and floating about, and so it would be if this amendment was adopted. I hope that none of these amendments will prevail, and that the scheme proposed by the committee will be carried out.

MR. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 58 ayes to 42 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was rejected, on a division, by a vote of 45 ayes to 70 noes.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I ask the Secretary now to read the amendment which I proposed.

THE SECRETARY read:

"I move, as a substitute for the pending amendment, to add to the end of section nine 'except in case of the consolidation of two or more counties into one county.'"

MR. WILSON. Is not that amendment useless now?

MR. HOWARD. It is suggested as an amendment to an appending amendment.

MR. McCALLUM. That part is withdrawn. It is now offered as an amendment to the section. This does not apply to the consolidation of districts, but to the consolidation of counties. In such cases I propose to avoid the legal question as to the right of a Judge for the continuation of the right of holding office. The argument will be made in these cases, that we have Judges for six years, and we might as well continue the county organization. It is to avoid that constitutional question that I propose that amendment. I think, as I understand the Chairman, he admits that the Judge would, in such a case, be entitled still to a continuation of his salary. We had better provide against that.

MR. LAINE. That does not make, in my judgment, any sense whatever, because this section provides for the reduction of the judicial force of the county.

MR. WILSON. I do not see why that should be introduced into the judicial system. Suppose a county is abolished, what becomes of all the officers of the county? What becomes of the Sheriff, and the County Clerk, and all of these other officers? As a matter of course, the whole county organization goes out. That proposition is not peculiar to Judges. It would apply to the whole force of county officers, and if there is any provision of that kind to be put in, it seems to me it ought to be put in some place where it would apply to the whole system of county officers. My own judgment would be, that if the county organization is absolutely abolished by the Legislature—that is, if the Legislature should say that the County of Alameda and the County of Contra Costa should both be abolished, and one county organization should exist where there are now two, it seems to me that all the officers of every kind would go out.

MR. McCALLUM. I think, myself, on consideration, it would be better, and I will withdraw my amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section ten.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 10. Justices of the Supreme Court, and Judges of the Superior Courts, may be removed by concurrent resolution of both houses of the Legislature, adopted by a two-third vote of each house. All other judicial officers, except Justices of the Peace, may be removed by the Senate on the recommendation of the Governor: but no removal shall be made by virtue of this section, unless the cause thereof be entered on the Journal, or unless the party complained of has been served with a copy of the complaint against him, and shall have had an opportunity of being heard in his defense. On the question of removal, the ayes and noes shall be entered on the Journal.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there are no amendments to section ten the Secretary will read section eleven.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 11. There shall be one Justice of the Peace elected in each township in the State, and the Legislature shall determine the number of Justices of the Peace to be elected in each incorporated city and town, or city and county, and shall fix, by law, the powers, duties, and responsibilities of Justices of the Peace; provided such powers shall not, in any case, trench upon the jurisdiction of the several Courts of record, except that such Justices shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the Superior Courts in cases of forcible entry and detainer, where the rental value does not exceed twenty-five dollars per month, and where the whole amount of damages claimed does not exceed two hundred dollars.

MR. WEBSTER. I have an amendment to section eleven.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section eleven by striking out the words 'twenty-five' where they occur in the eighth line, and insert in lieu thereof the word 'fifty.'"

REMARKS OF MR. WEBSTER.

MR. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman: It occurs to me, sir, that Justices of the Peace, in their several districts, should have jurisdiction, or concurrent jurisdiction at least, in a sum greater than twenty-five dollars. It is very well known, to those who have experience, that the greatest difficulty exists with those persons whose rental is greater than twenty-five dollars per month; those who really live in brownstone fronts. It is not the poor class of tenants that there is the greatest difficulty with. It may be claimed that because the Superior Courts will always be in session, that this will obviate the difficulty. In my opinion it will not, for the reason that the Superior Court will be at the county seat, wherever that may be. A case of forcible entry and detainer may be fifty miles off, and it will be necessary to go to the county seat. And I think concurrent jurisdiction should exist to the amount of fifty dollars; I do not see how there can be any objection to it.

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will not be adopted. It will be seen, upon considering the question, that it gives the Justice a much larger jurisdiction than would at first be supposed. Now, if an action be brought under this section, it might not only include the rent of one month, but it might include the rent for a whole year. The forcible entry and detainer complained of might have taken place a year preceding the suit; if so, as under our statute in such cases, if anything is recovered it is trebled, this would give a Justice of the Peace the power to enter a judgment for eighteen hundred dollars damages, besides the possession of the property. It is too large a jurisdiction to be exercised by a Justice of the Peace.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment. Amend section eleven by striking out all after the word "record," in the sixth line.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not an amendment to the amendment, it is an independent amendment. The first question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin.

MR. FILCHER. I have a substitute for the section.

THE SECRETARY read the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry, as follows:

"Amend section eleven, by striking out all after the word 'record,' in the sixth line."

MR. ROLFE. I move to amend section eleven by adding: "And in any action for the recovery of a money demand not exceeding, exclusive of interest, the sum of three hundred dollars, and in actions for damages and for the recovery of personal property where the amount of the demand or the value of the property in controversy does not exceed three hundred dollars."

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at present. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Mr. Terry.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: When the Superior Courts are always in session, I cannot see any reason for giving Justices of the Peace jurisdiction over a class of cases in which sometimes the most difficult questions arise. It occurs to me that there is no good to be accomplished by it. The Superior Courts being always in session, the case can be decided as speedily in them as by bringing it before the Justices of the Peace. It is inconsistent with the balance of the scheme, which gives to these Courts the jurisdiction over all cases involving a title or possession of real property. I see no reason for making an exception in case of forcible entry and detainer.

REMARKS OF MR. HILBORN.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman: All lawyers will recollect that prior to the amendment of eighteen hundred and sixty-three, the Justices of the Peace had jurisdiction in all of these cases. I never knew of any good reason for changing it. Lawyers who practice at the county seats, perhaps have not felt the injustice of the present system, or the inconvenience of it; but those who practice in large counties, remote from the county seat, know this, that there are considerable towns growing up at a distance of from twenty to sixty miles from the county seat. Now, if a person gets into a piece of property, or into a house that is only worth three hundred dollars, you have to make three or four trips to the county seat, take your attorney there, pay the Sheriff for serving the process and subpœnaing witnesses, and finally, when the plaintiff sums up the result, he finds that he had better give the recreant tenant his property, rather than bring his action sixty miles away. I cannot see any reason why he should not go into a Justice's Court and have the matter settled at once. In many cases there is no real sound defense. It is no answer to say that the Superior Court is always open. It has always been open for this purpose. What is the benefit of a Court opened sixty miles away? This is only asked in cases where the rental value is less than twenty-five dollars. Cases where large amounts are involved, may be tried as before, in a Court of larger jurisdiction. It is only in these trivial cases, which ought to be decided summarily, under any system ever devised in any State in the Union, that we ask this change. I can see no possible reason for opposing it, and I can see that it will be a great advantage to a great many poor people who have their property confiscated under the present unreasonable system.

REMARKS OF MR. REDDY.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment of the gentleman from San Joaquin will be adopted; that is, to strike out all after the word "record," in the sixth line. I would ask some gentleman of the committee if it is the intention to make the decision of the Justice final. I do not see how you are going to take an appeal from a Court of concurrent jurisdiction to another Court of jurisdiction. Either we should strike this out, or give the Justice only original jurisdiction. Very few people would be willing to make the decision of a Justice of the Peace final upon such a matter.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Why should concurrent jurisdiction prevent an appeal?

MR. REDDY. It always has prevented an appeal so far in the history of law.

MR. CROSS. Would not lines twelve and thirteen of section five indicate that the Superior Court would have appellate jurisdiction in such cases?

MR. REDDY. But it is prescribed in the Constitution that Justices shall have concurrent jurisdiction with the Superior Courts in such cases. Here the Constitution fixes a concurrent power in the Justice. Whether I am right or not in this position, I think it would be well to remodel that section, so as to let the Justice have jurisdiction in the first instance, but leave the right of appeal to the Superior Court of the county.

REMARKS OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Joaquin will be adopted, and that portion of the section will be stricken out, not only for the reasons given by the gentleman from Inyo, Mr. Reddy, which I deem to be well taken, that if the section stands the decision of the Justice of the Peace would be final. There would be no remedy—but for the additional reason that throughout a large portion of this State the Justices of the Peace are not men so learned in the law, or perhaps in the usages of Courts, as to be fit to deal with questions of the kind involved in the section. If a mode of appeal from their decision should be provided, the real result to the poor people of whom the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Hilborn speaks, would be that there would be an appeal taken from the decision from the Justice, and the people would have the expense of two suits instead of one. I fancy that the reason why that jurisdiction has been withdrawn, has been that it did not operate advantageously; that an appeal was almost an invariable result when there was anything at stake. In the larger cities I am well aware they are able to secure the services of men of sufficient legal learning, ability, and experience to decide such matters, but it is a very small portion of the area of the State, and in a very large portion of the State they are not so favorably situated. I desire to say that we cannot take our best business men. Even they, unlearned and unread in the law, we cannot get them to accept the office of Justice of the Peace. The emoluments are very small, the honor is not very great, and there is but little temptation for men to accept the position, and almost uniformly we are compelled, if we have a Justice of the Peace at all in the county, to select men who have little else to do, and they are usually the best officers. I think it would be cheaper and better for the people, decidedly, that cases involving any questions of that importance should be brought directly before a Court competent to try any kind of civil or criminal case. It is true that there are portions of some of our counties remote from the county seat, and it is inconvenient to bring complaints there, but it is also true that unless you multiply Justices of the Peace greatly you will have still a great distance to go in some cases. It would scarcely give satisfaction to the people of a large township. Our townships are some of them sixty or seventy miles across. The county seat may be central, and might be nearer than the residence of the Justice of the Peace.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I think that section eleven, as adopted by the committee, is the best that could be adopted upon this subject, and I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from San Joaquin will not be adopted. This case of concurrent jurisdiction between the Superior Court and the Justices of the Peace, in the special case of forcible entry and detainer, was adopted by the Committee on Judiciary for the reasons, mainly, referred to by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Hilborn. A great many counties in the State are large counties, but there will be Justices of the Peace in different townships which are remote from the county seat who can attend to these cases. Any perverse tenant who holds over against the covenants of his lease may, to a considerable degree, annoy and vex the landholder for the purpose of keeping on the land where he has no right. There will be no delay. There will be no attempt at it. That is the class of cases that is attempted to be reached by the committee in section eleven.

MR. REDDY. Was it the intention of the committee that the judgment of the Justice should be final?

MR. WILSON. It was the intention of the committee to leave the question of appellate jurisdiction to the Legislature, because section five provides that the Superior Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases arising in Justices' and other inferior Courts in their respective counties as may be prescribed by law. It should be determined by the Legislature themselves, and this would be one of those cases.

MR. REDDY. Allow me to call your attention to section four, where it states that the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in cases of forcible entry and detainer. Now, you give an appeal direct from a Justice's Court to the Supreme Court of the State.

MR. WILSON. I do not think so at all.

MR. REDDY. Look at lines five and six of section four.

MR. WILSON. It has jurisdiction in these cases, but the appellate jurisdiction and the whole provision and machinery for appeal is to be provided for by the Legislature. As a matter of course, these sections are to be read together. We do not consider any one section alone. We look at all of the different sections. Whilst that section four gives the Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction in cases of forcible entry and detainer, section five provides that in cases arising in the Justices Courts the jurisdiction shall be determined by the Legislature. As a matter of course they can provide that an appeal be taken from the Justices of the Peace to the Superior Court, and that would be the appeal that the party would have to take. Now, this is only intended to cover, and I think would only apply practically to the class of cases which have been referred to by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Hilborn. It is to remove the hardship which would arise from having to go forty or fifty miles to bring an action against a perverse tenant who may be perfectly impecunious. The plaintiff, therefore, ought to have a speedy remedy right at his own door. I am in favor of the section as originally reported and against the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I would like to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that the Supreme Court has decided upon this very clause in the present Constitution, in a case of appellate jurisdiction, given to the County Court from any inferior Court created by the Legislature in incorporated cities and towns. The Supreme Court have decided that where the appellate jurisdiction is given, it cannot be denied, and must be enforced in every manner. Now, in lines five and six of section four, appellate jurisdiction in cases of forcible entry and detainer is given to the Supreme Court. Now, under that decision an appeal to the Supreme Court in this class of cases cannot be denied.

MR. CROSS. What kind of a record will you have in cases from a Justice's Court to the Supreme Court?

MR. REYNOLDS. I do not know. If you have the right to appeal to the Superior Court, then you could start a case in the Justice's Court and appeal to the Superior Court, and then to the Supreme Court, under the decision of the Supreme Court, in precisely the same class of cases as this.

MR. HEISKELL. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out in the seventh line the words 'concurrent jurisdiction of the Superior Courts,' and insert the words 'original jurisdiction.'"

MR. HEISKELL. Mr. Chairman: I think the reasons given by the gentleman from Solano are just and proper in these small cases.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON. If it is the wish of the committee to give Justices of the Peace concurrent jurisdiction in this limited class of cases, and gentlemen fear that there may be an appeal taken directly from Justices of the Peace to the Supreme Court, the thing can very easily be remedied by adding to section eleven a further proviso, that in case of an appeal being taken, that the appeal from the Justice of the Peace should be limited to the Superior Court, and the judgment of the Superior Court should be final. That would obviate that difficulty. The question before the committee is this: shall we give to the Justices of the Peace concurrent jurisdiction in this class of cases? If that is desirable then an amendment is very easily added, that no two appeals shall be taken, nor shall any appeal be taken to the Supreme Court of the State from a Justice's Court. That question is a different question from the one presented, as to whether we shall give the Justices of the Peace jurisdiction in these cases. If the committee adopt this section as it is in other respects, I would add a proviso to obviate the objection, that there may be an appeal directly to the Supreme Court.

REMARKS OF MR. SCHELL.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment of Judge Terry will be adopted. My experience in Justices' Courts leads me to believe that it is the poorest tribunal to which a man can go for law or justice. I believe that the Superior Court always ought to try these cases, and I believe so far as the question of economy to litigants is concerned that it is cheaper to litigate cases before competent Courts. It is the experience, I apprehend, of every lawyer here who ever practices before a Justice of the Peace, that in every case that involves any particular amount of money—a hundred or two hundred dollars at least—is always appealed to an appellate Court, thus making double the expense; whereas, if you go to a Court in which litigants have any confidence, they would rather submit to the decision of that Court and end the litigation. I say, that in nine cases out of ten it would be decidedly cheaper to litigate the cases in the Superior Court in the first instance. I hope that the committee will adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment offered by Judge Terry will not be adopted. I am convinced from my experience in matters of this character that Justices' Courts and Courts of inferior jurisdiction should have the power and authority to decide in cases of forcible entry and detainer, where the amount involved is less than twenty-five dollars per month, and the amount of damages does not exceed two hundred dollars. Probably nine tenths of the cases of forcible entry and detainer—and when I say cases of forcible entry and detainer, I mean cases in which parties have rented places, or portions of places, either a whole house or certain rooms in a house—are litigated and passed upon in the City of San Francisco. Now, the experience in that city is this: If a tenant does not pay his rent, the landlord is compelled to go into the County Court, as the practice stands to-day, or if this Constitution be adopted with the amendment of Judge Terry, they will be obliged to go into the Superior Court. Now, the whole question to be decided in nine tenths of these cases, is whether the man has paid his rent or not; whether he has lived up to the obligations of his lease or not. As the case stands to-day, and as the case will stand if the amendment of Judge Terry is adopted, the landlord is obliged to go into the County Court, or into the Superior Court upon the adoption of this Constitution, to file his complaint, and go to an expense of from twenty-five dollars to fifty dollars in order to have his case adjudicated.

MR. CROSS. Is there any such thing as forcible entry upon property held under a lease?

MR. BEERSTECHER. That is the object of the amendment, as it stands now. Nine tenths of these cases are default cases. There is no important question for the Judge at all.

MR. SCHELL. I will ask you whether you have practiced law in the interior counties of this State?

MR. BEERSTECHER. No, sir.

MR. SCHELL. Of course the difficulty you speak of would not be likely to occur in the larger cities?

MR. BEERSTECHER. Yes, sir.

MR. SCHELL. Would it in the country?

MR. BEERSTECHER. Yes, sir.

MR. SCHELL. Don't you know that almost every case is appealed to the County Court, thus involving two trials? I am firmly convinced that it would lessen the expense by adopting this amendment.

MR. REDDY. It cannot possibly apply to holding over.

MR. BEERSTECHER. It is a detainer. I understand from practicing attorneys in the country that it is just exactly the same there as in the city. The only question is whether the defendant has a right to retain the premises or not. The defendant is taken into the Court; there is a default judgment in nine tenths of the cases, and the costs are multiplied against the defendant, and a judgment of treble the amount of rent is taken against him. So that if a man holds over two weeks, and the actual amount of rent due would be ten dollars, they would give a judgment to-day in favor of the landlords of San Francisco for from seventy-five dollars to one hundred dollars, costs, and damages. The execution upon that judgment runs against the defendant's wages, and against anything that the man can earn. It would not only do justice to the men that own the property, but also secure justice to the men that lease and hold the property, that Justices of the Peace should have the right to adjudicate these cases. And it is a speedy judgment. In this way men can wrongfully hold the property of other men, for months and months, and then, of course, they are mulcted in damages that sometimes they are never able to pay, or else they are harassed upon the judgment for ten or fifteen years. I believe that the ends of justice require that section to be adopted. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Stanislaus, Mr. Heiskell, and I am opposed to the amendment offered by Judge Terry.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry, and I hope it will be adopted. I hope so, for this reason: I am aware that a great many of these cases that are spoken of by gentlemen are founded upon leases. They are also founded upon notices to quit; and I had almost said, or was about to say, that in nine cases out of ten they are brought upon complaints that do not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. They are allowed to go by default, and finally there is a certiorari issued from a superior tribunal, and the case brought up.

MR. HALL. Would the words "forcible entry and detainer" necessarily include the case of an unlawful detainer where a tenant refused to give up property?

MR. HERRINGTON. I am treating it as if it included every question. I supposed it was really intended to cover the whole ground. I am treating it in that light. I think that was the intention of the committee. I know that the statute makes it forcible detainer where there is a lease and a notice to quit. I am treating this as covering all the questions, and I say that in nine cases out of ten, in these country places, where every one is permitted to appear in the Justices' Court and practice, in these cases, the complaints will not support the judgment taken by default. The consequence is, that the expenses afterward incurred are very great, and there is a great deal of litigation that otherwise might be avoided by appearing, in the first place, in a Court where the pleadings will be passed upon, and where they will be either supported or not, upon the proof made by a competent attorney, instead of parties practicing as a matter of compassion for these parties, and who know nothing about law. Litigants ought not to be hoodwinked in that way. Ninety-nine out of one hundred of these men who practice in Justices' Courts in these cases, know nothing about the intricacy that is involved in a suit of this kind. I submit that the amendment of the gentleman from San Joaquin ought to be adopted, and a Justice of the Peace ought not to be allowed a jurisdiction of the character that is attempted to be given by this section.

MR. AYERS. I would like to ask the gentleman from San Francisco if, in his opinion, this section will enable the plaintiff to obtain treble damages?

MR. BEERSTECHER. The matter of treble damages is a matter of legislation in the Code.

MR. AYERS. You believe it would. Then I am opposed to it. I am opposed to amplifying the English language by the addition of a new word.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: There are some counties, as the gentleman from Solano has said, where they have good sized towns a great distance from the county seat, and it would be very unjust and unreasonable to have these parties forced to go to the county seat in order to get a tenant out of the premises who holds them only because he knows it will take a good deal of trouble and expense to get him out. Now, I undertake to say that in nine cases out of ten of that character, if the tenants knew that they would be got out immediately there would be no suit, and for that reason it seems to me that this section should be allowed to stand. In all our counties there are several towns a great distance from the county seat. We have one town seventy-five miles from the county seat; another forty-five miles, and another forty miles. There are a great many such cases in this State. Gentlemen have intimated that forcible entry and detainer go together necessarily. I think the Supreme Court has decided otherwise. If a man leases a piece of property and his lease has expired and he fails to go, it is an unlawful detainer. In San Francisco, when the calendar is large in the Superior Court, if the Justices had jurisdiction in these matters they could be applied to at once and the tenants got out immediately. An imposition would be prevented, and I think a great many cases would not be brought which are now forced to be brought and the tenants remain in until they get judgment, thereby saving a month or more of rent without paying for it. The Justices' Courts of Oregon, and many of the eastern States, have jurisdiction in these cases; have now and always have had. There is no good reason why they should not have.

REMARKS OF MR. HALL.
