MR. HALL. Mr. Chairman: I desire to vote intelligently upon this question, and I should like to be informed by the Chairman of the committee whether the words "forcible entry and detainer" in his opinion embraces that class of cases which have been alluded to here.

MR. WILSON. Mr. Chairman: The question arose before the committee, and was thoroughly examined and talked of. The Supreme Court of this State have construed the words "forcible entry and detainer" as embracing both classes of cases; that is, a case of forcible entry as well as an unlawful holding over of a tenant; and for that reason, as the Court held that these words cover the entire class of cases, it was better to retain the old language. That was the reason which influenced the committee at the time, so that these words were inserted, ex industria, because they had been construed by the Supreme Court as covering all these different classes of cases.

MR. HALL. I was not aware of the decision of the Supreme Court to which the Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary alludes.

MR. HILBORN. The case of Culver against Stephens, I think in the twenty-eighth California. Mr. Dunlap was in the case. It went up from this county.

MR. HALL. Still it seems to me that it has been held proper that a summary proceeding may be had upon the part of a landlord against a tenant refusing to pay rent; and I had been under the impression, until just now corrected by the Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary and by the honorable gentleman from Solano, that this proceeding in the County Courts of our State, under section eight of the existing Constitution, was permitted in that Court under and by virtue of a provision which confers upon the County Court jurisdiction of forcible entry and detainer, and not by virtue of the statute passed in pursuance of the general power, contained in the same section, given to the Legislature to confer upon County Courts jurisdiction in such special cases as are not otherwise provided for; and that, acting under that authority, under that constitutional power, the Legislature had created another class of special cases, jurisdiction over which was conferred upon the County Courts; and that the case of a tenant refusing to surrender possession after demand for possession, or refusing to pay rent upon demand being made upon him, constituted a case of unlawful detainer as distinguished from a case of forcible detainer.

That in order to constitute forcible entry and detainer there must be some threats, or some menace, or some exhibition of force, some declaration or act upon the part of some person which would amount to a criminal offense; and for that reason judgment has been in form of treble damages—punitive damages—punishing the party for a violation of the law in refusing to surrender possession. Now, whether I am right in my construction or not, I must yield, of course, to the Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary. I am still opposed to the amendment, because I think, sir, that we should open the Courts in distant portions of the county, remote from the county seat, to enable parties, particularly in those causes of action as between landlord and tenant, to proceed summarily for possession. Now, the delegate from the Fourth District, Mr. Schell, says that nine tenths of the cases are appealed to the County Court. Well, sir, I am aware myself that a very large per cent. of cases are carried up by appeal to the County Court, but I do not think the percentage is so great as the gentleman has stated; and it would certainly in some instances amount to injustice to close the doors of these Courts in cases of that kind, when parties are seeking to recover the possession of their property. Now, I will take the case of San Joaquin County. An application was made here yesterday, the object of which was to entitle her to two Judges of the Superior Court. This committee declined to grant the application from the showing which has been made here of the number of cases originating in that county, all of which would have to go into the Superior Court. I submit that it would be almost equivalent to closing the doors of justice to a man altogether. I think that the amendment should not be adopted.

MR. WILSON. Mr. Chairman: I ask permission to send up to the Secretary's desk and have read an amendment which I propose to offer in case the amendment offered by Judge Terry should be voted down.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Provided, that no appeal shall be taken from any judgment in a Justice's Court in a case of forcible entry and detainer, except to the Superior Court of the same county, or city and county, and the judgment of the Superior Court thereon shall be final."

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, have made progress therein, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry.

SPEECH OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the motion of the gentleman from San Joaquin, to strike out. It is, however, due to the committee for me to say that in the committee I voted for the section as it now stands. That part of the section was offered by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Hilborn, and it seemed to me at that time that it was a judicious provision. Subsequent reflection upon that subject, however, has caused me to change my mind, so that I am involved in that inconsistency. Sam. Johnson said there were two kinds of men who were to be avoided—the man who is always changing his mind, and the man who never changes his mind. As this is the first time I have changed my mind this Winter, I suppose I may be excused. Now, as to the question as to conferring jurisdiction upon Justices of the Peace at all. Under the Constitution of eighteen hundred and forty-nine, it was provided that the Supreme Court should have appellate jurisdiction in all cases relating to the title or possession of real property, and the Justices of the Peace should have such jurisdiction as the Legislature might confer upon them. The Legislature conferred power upon them to try such cases of forcible entry and detainer. When the Constitution was amended in eighteen hundred and sixty-four, that power was taken away entirely from Justices of the Peace, and original jurisdiction was conferred upon the County Court in those cases, with an appeal to the Supreme Court. As I understand it, the Supreme Court has always had appellate power over these cases. Now, from the foundation of the government, while men could be sent to the County Jail for a year; while a man could be fined, and costs piled up upon him, without any appeal, nevertheless, in those cases affecting the title or possession of real property, it has been the policy always to give an appeal to the Supreme Court. They have always had that appellate power. Now, section four provides that the Supreme Court shall have appellate power in all cases of forcible entry and detainer. Now, sir, upon reflection, I do not believe that Justices of the Peace should have anything to do with these cases at all. These actions of forcible entry and detainer affect a man's home, and tracks him to his own fireside. You pitch a man out of his castle; to throw a man and his wife, and the infant in the cradle, into the street; and it is because of the importance of this class of litigation that the Constitution and the legislation of this State have always invariably provided that the party should have the right of appeal to the Supreme Court. Now, sir, this may become a matter of the utmost importance. This matter of twenty-five dollars a month may become a matter of the very greatest moment. Suppose a man leases a place for a sum of money, say twenty-five dollars a month. All of a sudden the place grows up to be thickly populated, and the rental value of that place increases of a sudden from twenty-five dollars a month to one hundred and fifty dollars a month. It thus becomes a case of very great importance. It seems to me that it is a case that ought to be reviewed and finally passed upon by the Court of last resort. If a man has a suit in regard to a place, the rental value of which is thirty dollars a month, he can go to the Supreme Court and have the case reviewed. But if he has a suit involving a rental value of twenty-five dollars a month, he has to stop at the lower Court, though the two cases may be precisely analogous, and involve precisely the same questions. It seems to me it is an inconsistency, and I shall support the amendment. I am very sorry to disagree with my learned friend, the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, for I nearly always follow him in matters of constitutional law, but this time I must disagree with him.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: It may appear presumptuous in any one not an attorney to speak upon any matter relating to the judiciary system; and yet, from my standpoint, it appears to me that there are other classes of citizens interested in this matter. Now, there are quite a number of cases of this kind all over the country. Right here, permit me to say, that I do not fully concur with the idea that in every instance Justices of the Peace are not competent to try these cases. We find towns of moderate size containing five hundred or one thousand people strung out all over the country, remote from the county seat, where a large class of cases of this kind come up, and where the greatest harm might result in not having a Court where these cases could be tried. I mean these small cases which come up to be tried immediately. There is a question of economy right here. It has been argued that it was cheaper to go into the County Court in the first instance. Well, under this section that privilege is granted. It is optional whether he commences the action in the Superior Court, or before a local Justice of the Peace. I know there are in my county five or six quite important little towns that are from twelve to twenty-five miles distant from the county seat. In these towns there are persons competent to act as Justices of the Peace, and in these important centers persons of that class are elected. So it is not always true that ignoramuses are chosen. That condition of affairs is passing off, and a better class of men will be selected to fill those offices in future. I believe it to be in the interest of litigants that they should have resort to these local Courts. Attorneys, like everybody else, are mistaken in some things. They will charge more to go into the County Court than they will to go into the Justices Court. Now, if you add to the costs the additional attorney's fees for going into the Superior Court—and they charge generally about twenty-five dollars—and the expense of taking witnesses and maintaining them at the county seat, you will find that it will be very costly for all these small cases. That is my point of economy.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: It is proposed to leave the Constitution as it is by the amendment of Judge Terry, so we have a strong argument in favor of the motion. But I find this additional argument in looking through the Constitutions of other States: I do not find any single one that there is any provision in giving Justices' Courts jurisdiction in cases of forcible entry and detainer. So, unless that amendment is adopted, California will stand alone in giving such jurisdiction. Now, I don't know how it may be in Los Angeles, that the gentleman speaks about, but in the County of Alameda there is no demand for any such change—at least I never heard of it. We have some considerable towns there, forty or fifty miles from the county seat. I believe it is more economical to try these cases in the Superior Court than in the Justice's Court. The whole costs for an ordinary suit would be, perhaps, fifteen dollars. In the Justice's Court it would be as great.

MR. HILBORN. Suppose the county seat should be changed from Oakland to San Leandro, would you then be in favor of the change or not?

MR. MCCALLUM. I trust I am in favor of some higher consideration than my own personal consideration. It appears to me that these considerations should have some weight. As far as any public expression is concerned, there is no demand for the change. If we do make that a constitutional provision, we will stand alone in this respect. I would be willing to support an amendment which would give Justices' Courts jurisdiction in uncontested cases. But so many objections can be raised to it, that I do not feel like formulating such an amendment myself.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: Without having considered this section as carefully as I would, I feel impelled to sustain the section as it stands, in the face of all the pending amendments. I recognize the full force of the arguments of the gentleman from Sacramento, and in answer to them I desire to say, in behalf of the people of San Francisco, that there is a large class of cases of forcible entry and detainer, in which justice demands a speedy and cheap remedy. I refer to that class of trifling, worthless tenants—and in that city there is a great many of them—who go about imposing upon landlords, who get into a house or room, pay the first month's rent, and stay as long as they can without paying any more, until the landlord can stand it no more, and he is compelled to bring an action of forcible entry and detainer. What is the result? He has to bring that action in the County Court. The Clerk's fees come to eleven dollars and fifty cents; judgment, four dollars and fifty cents, making fifteen dollars. The judgment is good for nothing, because the tenant has nothing. It costs him that at the very lowest to get possession of his premises, to say nothing of attorney fees. The result is, altogether, that it costs him from thirty-five to forty dollars to get the tenant out of his house, where the rent does not amount actually to more than ten or fifteen dollars a month. There is a large class of that kind of cases, which demand a speedy and cheap mode of trial. It does not involve the title to real estate. It is only the getting possession of his own property. I believe under this section there is an appeal to the Superior Court, but nineteen twentieths of these cases will end right there in the Justice's Court. But if there is a case that ought to be appealed, let it go to the Superior Court, and that will dispose of it. Perhaps not one in a thousand will ever reach the Supreme Court. I believe this section ought to stand as it is. It will afford a remedy that I know is needed in San Francisco. I believe every city needs it, and that it will work no hardship, because if there is a case of importance, it will be brought in the Superior Court at once.

MR. HERRINGTON. Nearly all the Justices of the Peace are lawyers, are they not?

MR. REYNOLDS. Yes, sir.

MR. HERRINGTON. That is not so in the country, is it?

MR. REYNOLDS. I don't see the relevancy with the question at issue. We simply propose to give them jurisdiction. Whether they are lawyers or not, I cannot see what difference it makes; one man can decide these cases as well as another; all it needs is a little common sense. If any man supposes that there is any intricate question of law involved, he has the privilege of going to the Superior Court with it, and trying it there. I think the section ought to stand; it will afford a remedy in that class of cases where sumptuary proceedings are required. If it is not adopted it will work a hardship to a large class of people.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. WINANS. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Stedman, Brown, Moreland, and West.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry.

Division was called for, and the amendment was lost by a vote of 31 ayes to 69 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Stanislaus, Mr. Heiskell.

Lost.

MR. WILSON, of First District. I send up an amendment, or additional proviso.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Provided further, that no appeal shall be taken from any judgment in a Justice's Court, in a case of forcible entry and detainer, except to the Superior Court of the same county, or city and county, and the judgment of the Superior Court thereon shall be final."

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. I would ask the Chairman of the committee if that might not involve an inconsistency and absurdity in this class of cases? A party brings an action in the Superior Court in the first instance, under a lease, where the rental value is twenty dollars a month. Another party brings an action in the Justice's Court, where the rental value is twenty dollars a month, and an appeal is taken to the Superior Court. Now, sir, precisely the same amounts are involved in both cases. The cases are of the same magnitude, and precisely the same questions are involved. The Judge of the Superior Court renders judgment, in both cases, precisely alike, and yet, the person who comes up from the Justice's Court is deprived of the right of appeal, while the party who brought his action in the Superior Court can appeal.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I do not see any serious difficulty in the proposition presented by my friend from Sacramento, and I can call to his mind a hundred instances in which similar questions might arise. A man might bring an action on a promissory note in a Justice's Court, under three hundred dollars; another might bring an action in the Superior Court for three hundred and one dollars, and the same questions might arise in each case. One would have an appeal to the Supreme Court and the other would not, although precisely the same questions are involved—the only difference being one dollar. There is the dividing line between the general jurisdiction of the Superior Court and the general jurisdiction of the Justice's Court. The proposition that such things may happen is no objection to the system at all. No lawyer will say so. My learned friend will answer himself, and I hope he will have the candor to say that there is nothing in the question he propounds.

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not be adopted. It is one of the most dangerous character. It involves the possession of real property, and no appeal allowed to the Supreme Court. Under this section we limit the jurisdiction to the simple rental value of the property. Now, there are many properties, not having a rental value exceeding twenty-five dollars a month, that are worth four or five thousand dollars, and to turn persons out of the possession of property of that kind, without any right of appeal to the Supreme Court, is an exception that should not be established.

REMARKS OF MR. SCHELL.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: As far as I am concerned, I hope the amendment will be voted down, and for this reason: I do not think the Superior Court ought to be a Court of last resort. If there is to be an appeal at all, in this class of cases, it ought to be to the Supreme Court. Now, under this section suit may be brought in the Justice's Court involving one thousand dollars rent. I understand it to say where the rental value does not exceed twenty-five dollars a month; but it doesn't say anything about where one month's rent has accrued, or six months' rent, or a year's rent, or three years' rent. The party may have taken a lease for four years, and at the end of the four years he might not surrender the premises. In such a case as that, which involves a large amount of money, it may be brought in the Justice's Court, and under this proposed amendment there would be no appeal to the Supreme Court. I say he should not be prohibited from appealing to the Supreme Court, and the Superior Court should not be constituted a Court of last resort.

MR. HILBORN. Doesn't the gentleman know that the limit of damages is two hundred dollars?

MR. SCHELL. A party can sue for two hundred dollars when it involves but the one question of the fact of possession.

MR. EDGERTON. We have lived under the present system for thirty years, the same system which prevails, I believe, in every State in the Union. It is proposed here to limit to cases where the rental value is twenty-five dollars, and this sum may accumulate to six hundred dollars, and yet it must end in the Superior Court. I don't see that the Chairman of the committee has helped us out of the difficulty. I think it involves the inconsistency which I mentioned in the first place. A man may allow the rent to fall behind, even at twenty-five dollars a month, until it reaches six hundred dollars or one thousand dollars a month. It seems to me that a suit which may involve that amount should be subject to review by the Court of last resort.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: This gives the plaintiff the absolute right to deprive the defendant of the right of appeal to the Supreme Court, if the case is decided against him. By bringing the action before a Justice of the Peace, the defendant is deprived of the right of appeal to the Supreme Court. If this amendment should prevail there ought to be a further amendment to enable the person to transfer the case to the Superior Court, by giving a bond for costs. The only reason I have heard advanced for this amendment is that there are a large number of defendants who are without money, and that no judgment could be collected; and even the costs the plaintiff would be compelled to advance in nine cases out of ten. That may be true, but there are cases which involve very considerable interests, which would be within the jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace. It might include the possession of one hundred and sixty acres of land worth twenty dollars an acre, and it might involve a lease upon it which has twenty years to run. I can see no reason why the parties should not be allowed to appeal. I can see no good to be accomplished by this amendment. Under the system which prevailed before eighteen hundred and sixty-four in this State, these cases were commenced in the Justice's Court, and could be appealed to the County Court, and from there to the Supreme Court. I can see no reason why the defendant, if he is able to give bonds to secure the plaintiff, should not have the right to go to the Supreme Court and have the case reviewed. I think the amendment ought to be voted down. That is, unless it shall be so amended as to allow farther appeal to the Supreme Court.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I do not think this amendment a judicious one. This is a matter that may safely be left open to the Legislature. Whether the Court finds heavy damages or light damages, is of no consequence. That is merely accessory, and does not make any difference. It is the right of possession. What is the use of making this distinction? One party should have the right of appeal as much as another. An action brought for two hundred and ninety-nine dollars damages would be brought before a Justice of the Peace, and an action for three hundred and one dollars would be brought before the Superior Court. The right of possession, where the damage is laid at two hundred and ninety-nine dollars, may be worth twenty thousand dollars, and in the other case the right of possession may not be worth ten dollars One case is appealable and the other is not. There is no difficulty about allowing a party the right of appeal. What inconvenience is there. I cannot see any whatever. I am in favor of allowing the Justices' Courts to have jurisdiction in these cases. As the gentleman from San Francisco said: there are a great many people who go into houses or rooms intending to pay no rent. They will stay there until they are put out, and then go somewhere else. There ought to be some quick process to dispose of that class of cases; but I can see no reason why the right of appeal should be taken away. I would allow appeal in all cases to the Supreme Court. There is not a particle of inconvenience. I hope we shall vote the amendment down.

REMARKS OF MR. SCHELL.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: When I stated awhile ago that even at that amount of monthly rental it might involve six hundred dollars, the gentleman referred me to section six, to convince me that my position was wrong, and when I first glanced at it I thought perhaps I might be wrong. But upon further consideration and reflection I am satisfied my position was correct, and I am satisfied that it will be so construed. It will be construed with reference to the statutes upon that subject. I believe that is one rule of construing constitutional provisions. And I say under our statutes the rental of twenty-five dollars per month will be contradistinguished from the question of damages. I will refer you to the Code of Civil Procedure, section one thousand one hundred and seventy-four. There there is a plain distinction made between damages and the rental value. So I claim that a man under this provision may sue for damages of two hundred dollars and an accrued rental of six hundred dollars, which would make eight hundred dollars altogether. I think my position is correct.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco will not prevail. I don't believe it is any hardship to grant the right of appeal from the Justices' Courts to the Superior, and from the Superior Court to the Supreme Court. The practice in the State of Michigan for thirty years has been to allow Justices of the Peace jurisdiction in these cases, in any amount, in those townships where no Court Commissioners reside. But in the township where the Circuit Court Commissioner resides the action must be brought before the Commissioner. And where the matter is tried before the Commissioner the appeal lies direct to the Supreme Court, without any intervention of the Superior Court. In the other case it is brought before the Justice of the Peace, without limit, both as to the amount of the rental and the property involved. The appeal lies from the decision of the Justice of the Peace to the Circuit Court, and from the Circuit Court to the Supreme Court. I think that there should always be given the right of appeal, the appellant, of course, being required to give bonds for costs. The object of conferring this jurisdiction upon Justices of the Peace is to allow them to try cases where there are really no meritorious questions to be passed upon. But where there is merit in the case, the right of appeal should be conferred on both sides, provided sufficient bond is given to cover the rental value and the costs. The rights of both parties are thus secured, and the right of appeal can do no harm.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: This committee has adopted section eleven as it now is, by which it is said that in a certain class of cases, of small amounts, the Justices of the Peace shall have jurisdiction. Now, the proposition which I present is, whether, in that class of cases, one appeal only shall be allowed, or two appeals?

MR. EDGERTON. I would like to ask you a question. A person can commence in the Superior Court, and from there can appeal to the Supreme Court. If he commences in the Justice's Court it can be appealed to the Superior Court, and there he has got to stop.

MR. WILSON. Is that all you have to say?

MR. EDGERTON. That is all I have to say.

MR. WILSON. You haven't said much. [Laughter.] Now, to proceed. My learned friend interrupted me to ask me what I thought of what he thought. We have adopted a section permitting these small cases to be tried in the Justice's Court, limiting it to small cases for the convenience of persons. The question before the committee then is: in what class of cases should the parties be limited to one appeal, and in what cases should they have two appeals? Two trials, it seems to me, ought to be sufficient. That is the proposition now before the committee. Shall we limit parties in that class of cases to one appeal, or shall they have three trials? Don't forget what these cases are. Gentlemen say they involve the title to real property. That is not true. In no case do they involve title to real property. They are only intended to apply in this small class of cases. The proceedings are never intended to try the question of title. The owner of a piece of land cannot enter into possession of it after he has leased it, even if the tenant does not keep his agreement, except by such proceedings as these. He should have a quick and speedy remedy, and the same remedy will guard the tenant against wrong if he is forcibly ousted from the possession of the property. The trial of title to land is expressly excluded. They are intended to apply to cases of taking possession of property by force in case the tenants improperly or unlawfully attempt to hold over. In a case of that kind, where the damage is small, and the property of little value, the case is brought before a Justice of the Peace, and the defendant has judgment rendered against him, and he appeals the case to the Superior Court, and there he is in a Court of general jurisdiction. He is in a Court of record, which is presided over by a learned Judge, because under our new system we expect to have good Judges, learned in the law, to occupy these positions.

Now, after having had a trial before a Justice of the Peace, after having learned what the evidence is and what the points of law are, he comes before the learned Judge and has the case reviewed. Now why, in that class of cases, should an appeal be had to the Supreme Court? I say, there is no reason for it. It encourages litigation to an improper extent. I say, it is a discrimination against the man of small means, in favor of the man of larger means, who is able to carry on the litigation from Court to Court. There is no danger in leaving that jurisdiction with the Superior Court, because these Courts are supposed to be presided over by Judges of sufficient capacity to determine any question. Now, we don't pretend to take away the final jurisdiction from the Superior Courts in that great class of cases. There is all that large class of misdemeanors which may be prosecuted in the Superior Courts, which are not appealable to the Supreme Court at all. Why, take the cases of libel, which are cases not amounting to felony, and we all know that the judgment of the County Court is final; there is no appeal. And yet, in a case of libel the defendant is liable to a very heavy fine—I don't remember how much, five thousand dollars, I think—and is also liable to imprisonment. Yet the judgments of the County Courts in that class of cases have always been final; and yet gentlemen want to give three trials in this small class of cases, and are afraid great wrong will be done if we do not accede to it. I say, when cases of this kind are tried twice, the last trial ought to be final and conclusive.

MR. MCCALLUM. You heard the point made by Mr. Schell, in relation to accumulated rent.

MR. WILSON. There is nothing in the point made by Mr. Schell. The statute has nothing to do with it, for the statute may be altered or repealed. The whole amount of damages claimed must not exceed two hundred dollars in order to give the Justice's Court jurisdiction. If it does exceed that sum, then the Court has no jurisdiction. Now, the question here to be decided is, having given the Justices' Courts jurisdiction in this class of cases, shall the Justices have more than one appeal? I say, there is no sense in it; the ends of justice do not demand it.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not prevail. I had not intended to say anything in regard to this matter——

MR. TERRY. If the gentleman will allow me, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the words, 'and the judgment of the Superior Court shall be final,' and insert, 'An appeal may be taken from the judgment of the Superior Court, as in other cases.'"

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment to the amendment will prevail. I voted for the amendment offered by Judge Terry, to strike out this clause giving concurrent jurisdiction to the Justices' Courts and Superior Courts in those cases, but the committee has decided to retain the section as it was reported by the committee. Now, when a case of this kind is brought to the Superior Court and there passed to judgment, there is no reason that can be given why an appeal should not lie to the Supreme Court. These cases should be appealable the same as other cases. They may be oftentimes of very great importance. The truth is, we made a mistake when we conferred this concurrent jurisdiction; but the committee have seen fit to adopt it, and it now behooves us to guard it the best we can. I am of the opinion that these cases may, in many instances, involve the right and title to real property. Every lawyer knows how cases brought under the statutes may involve the title to real property. There is no question about it; and on top of that we are asked to deny the right of appeal. I hope this amendment to the amendment will prevail.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Stedman, West, Evey, and Brown.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry.

Division was called for, and the amendment to the amendment was adopted by a vote of 65 ayes to 25 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment as amended.

Lost.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer an amendment to be added at the end of the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"But in such case the Superior Court shall have also appellate jurisdiction, and this shall not impair the appellate jurisdiction of the Supreme Court."

MR. MCCALLUM. That expresses the idea of the majority of the committee, and gives the right of appeal to the Superior Court, and provides that it shall not impair the right of appeal to the Supreme Court.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Division being called, the amendment was lost, by a vote of 45 ayes to 46 noes.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add, after the word 'dollars,' in line ten, 'and in cases to enforce and foreclose liens on personal property, when neither the amount of the lien nor the value of the property amounts to three hundred dollars."

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: This is a provision which is very much needed. Statutes have been passed imposing liabilities for stock found trespassing upon the lands of others, and in those cases the jurisdiction was changed and given to the Justices' Courts. The Supreme Court decided that these cases were really to enforce a lien, and are therefore equitable in their nature, and must be commenced in the District Court. This amendment is to authorize Justices' Courts to take jurisdiction in that class of cases, because the costs and expenses attending a suit in the District Court are so great as to be more, a great deal, than the value of the damage.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: This matter is of some consequence to one of the great interests of this State—the farming interest. Now, in the southern portion of the State, they have attempted to take up stock that was trespassing upon their grain and upon their farms, and they were unable to do so, because the cases could not be tried before a Justice of the Peace, it being decided that they should come before a Court of equity. I am under the impression that this amendment covers that ground. This is a matter of no small magnitude, and we do not want to take any chances. There were laws passed intending to carry out this same purpose, but they failed of their object. I hope there will be some provision that will cover the ground, and I think this will.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I had an amendment formulated intended to cover the same point covered by the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman. The trespass Act which the gentleman speaks of has had considerable notoriety in our county, and has been inoperative, because the Supreme Court decided that these cases were cases in the nature of equity, and, therefore, Justices of the Peace could not have jurisdiction in cases of this kind, and the Act was, therefore, rendered ineffective. There is no reason why cases involving three hundred dollars, even if they do partake of the nature of equity cases, should not be tried in the Justices' Courts. I will read the amendment which I have drawn: "Add to section eleven: 'Provided, that Justices of the Peace shall have jurisdiction in such cases in equity as the Legislature may prescribe, in which the judgment, exclusive of interest, amounts to less than three hundred dollars.'" I will offer this amendment, because I think it is clear.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to converting Justices' Courts into Courts of equity. I am opposed to giving them equity jurisdiction in any manner whatever. I think the Supreme Court laid down a good principle when it decided that the Justices' Courts had no jurisdiction in that class of cases. If a man's field is overrun with another's stock he has his remedy. The Courts at present give him his remedy, and there is no need of any such provision as this.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Kern will prevail. If a Justice of the Peace has sense enough to try a question of law involving three hundred dollars he has sense enough to try a question of fact. Now, sir, this declaration in the present Constitution, and the decision of the Supreme Court, have operated to the serious injury of litigants in this State. For instance, in the foreclosure of liens upon real estate, where the tax did not amount to more than sixteen dollars, it was held that the Justices' Court had no jurisdiction, and the government was, therefore, driven into a Court of equity. Now, if a man has a note against a party for less than three hundred dollars, he can sue in the Justices' Court. If it is secured by mortgage you go to the District Court, where the equity power is lodged. Now, I cannot see any sense in any such distinction as that, and it is a manifest injury to litigants. Therefore, I hope the amendment will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not prevail, and, sir, I don't see any analogy at all between the litigation of rights of this character, and the collection of a promissory note. As I understand it, this allows an action to be brought to foreclose a mortgage, and that leads to the determination of a great many intricate questions in equity, and may involve a mortgage securing a debt of twenty thousand dollars. I do not think my friend from Los Angeles would want to go before an ignorant Justice of the Peace with any such litigation.

REMARKS OF MR. WATERS.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I admit that there are certain portions of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kern which do not apply to the original amendment. The amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento only allows Justices' Courts to have jurisdiction upon personal property, and that will cover the case of cattle, when there is a lien upon cattle. It is a very important matter, but I don't think that in order to reach it, it is necessary to give Justices of the Peace general equity jurisdiction. Let it be limited to personal property, as the amendment of Mr. Freeman calls for. That reaches the whole evil, and you need not give Justices of the Peace entire jurisdiction in order to reach that evil. I cannot see any harm in the amendment. If you only give them the right to foreclose liens upon personal property, it is no very serious thing.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I withdraw my amendment in order to save a point.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento.

Adopted.

MR. MILLS. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out of lines one and two the following words: 'There shall be one Justice of the Peace elected for each township in the State,' and insert in line three, after the word 'each,' the word 'township.'"

REMARKS OF MR. MILLS.

MR. MILLS. Mr. Chairman: The object of this amendment is for the purpose of allowing the Legislature to determine the number of Justices of the Peace that may be elected in each county. I can see no reason why we should not allow the Legislature to determine the number of Justices of the Peace necessary. Many of the townships are very large. There are several villages in my county perhaps twenty-five miles apart. It is utterly impossible for one Justice of the Peace to discharge the duties of that county, if he is located in either end of the county. If a warrant was desired to arrest some person at one end of the county, you would have to go to Martinez to get it, and I presume it is so with many other counties in the State. It is utterly impossible to undertake to act on any such basis. Sometimes it may be necessary to have three Justices of the Peace in a county, and why place this limit in the Constitution? Why not leave it to the Legislature? This allows the Legislature to determine the number to be elected in the cities and towns, and I don't see why the Legislature should not be allowed to determine the number in the county.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: The amendment offered by Mr. Mills I believe covers the same idea I have tried to get in here. That will leave the Legislature to determine the number to be elected in each township. I am in favor of such an amendment, and my reasons are simply these: In the first place, the question may be in doubt as to whether it is good policy—as to whether we really should have more than one Justice in any of the townships in this State—and in the next place, it is a matter of still greater importance as to whether it is good policy to put such a provision in the Constitution. It is purely a legislative matter, and it seems to me to attempt to insert it here is one of the most serious mistakes we can make. We prohibit the Legislature from passing local laws, and yet, here in the Constitution, we are attempting to legislate for every locality in the State, without knowing anything about the wants of those localities. It is a matter that has no business to be mentioned in the Constitution, and ought to be left entirely with the Legislature. It will bring down more enemies to the Constitution than any other small matter I can conceive of. Men will readily understand the proposition when it comes right home to them; and when a man sits down and reads that he is deprived of a Justice of the Peace, and will have to travel twenty miles to transact his business, it will be sufficient for him to oppose it. It is a question of ten times more weight to the individual than great matters of political economy. They are personally interested, and they can all see and understand. I believe there are townships that can get along with one Justice of the Peace, but let the Legislature regulate that matter as the exigencies arise. To say that there shall be absolutely one Justice, and no more, is certainly unfair. If one is not enough to subserve the ends of justice, there ought not to be any constitutional limitation against having more. There ought to be as many as the Legislature, from time to time, sees fit to give. There are large townships in some of the counties, where one Justice of the Peace would be totally inadequate to do justice. Now, sir, I say the wisest course would be to leave this whole matter to the Legislature, where it belongs. We cannot tell how many Justices of the Peace will be required. And if we could, the State is changing all the time, and where one might be sufficient to-day, two might be absolutely necessary in a few years from now. It is one of those matters which ought to be left flexible. There should be no iron rule put in the Constitution, but this whole matter should be left to the Legislature to regulate according to the necessities of the various localities of the State. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. TERRY.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: The reason which led the committee to make this change will suggest itself to everybody, or at least to those who have had any experience in watching the proceedings before Justices of the Peace. If Justices were salaried officers, I would have no objections to having a dozen in each township, as thick as telegraph poles. But Justices of the Peace in this State depend upon fees for their emoluments of office, and where there are two, each having jurisdiction in the same class of cases, and in the same territory, they are competing against each other, and they are almost absolutely controlled by attorneys who practice in their Courts. The evil has got to that extent that in a majority of cases where there are two Justices of the Peace, people don't go through the form of a trial at all. The suit is brought in the Justice's Court by the attorney who owns the Justice, and the defendant simply puts in an answer and lets the case go, and then takes an appeal to the County Court, where he tries it before a salaried officer, who is not indebted to any attorney. That will always be the case where you have two Justices with the same jurisdiction. They want business and will bid to get it; and in order to get it they must decide in favor of the plaintiff. I would like for some gentleman to tell me how many cases he has known where a Justice of the Peace decided in favor of the defendant.

MR. FILCHER. It is entirely within the power of the Legislature to accomplish that reform.

MR. TERRY. Why don't they act in the matter? This has been an evil of long standing, and there has been no attempt to correct it. The only way is to take away the temptation. If there is one man who has sole jurisdiction, he is not under obligations to anybody for bringing him business, for the business has got to come to him. But in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, under the present system, the plaintiff gets judgment. Now, such a system will not be so apt to exist where you have no competition. It is provided that cities shall have a certain number; but I hope to see a provision that in cities of a certain size no Justice of the Peace shall receive any fees or perquisites. Let them be salaried, and let the fees be paid into the treasury as the fees of other officers are now paid in.

MR. DAVIS. We have townships in our county forty miles long, and I doubt whether one Justice will be sufficient to meet the ends of justice in such townships. Besides that, there is often a change of venue, and if we have but one Justice in a township we would have to travel one hundred and fifty miles. While I would oppose having two Justices, where one can do the business, I think there are townships where two are absolutely necessary. For that reason I shall support the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. BARRY.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: As a member of the Judiciary Committee, I am very much inclined to cling to the report, more especially when I cannot see that an amendment will accomplish any good or useful purpose. But, having thought over this matter fully, I am convinced that it is necessary, in many instances, to have two Justices in one township. I could cite quite a number of instances where such is the case. In large townships, like some I have in my mind, it would be a very great inconvenience, and not in the interest of justice, to have but one Justice of the Peace. It would be so in many counties of this State where towns are remote, where they are ten, fifteen, or twenty miles apart, and yet form but one township. If that section should pass in its present shape, providing that there shall be but one Justice of the Peace in each township, it would be the means of having a great many vote against the Constitution who otherwise would vote for it, because they would feel that it was an act of great injustice. I hope, sir, that this amendment will be adopted, or else that we will adopt the section of the old Constitution.

REMARKS OF MR. SCHELL.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment will be adopted. I am convinced that if we should limit the number of Justices of the Peace to one for each township it would be unsatisfactory to the people of this State. I will mention an example of it in the township where I live, in Modesto Township. Modesto is the county seat of my county. It contains two thousand five hundred people, and it is only one township. Now, sir, one Justice would not be sufficient for the purpose there. And I remember another township, about twenty miles long, and it has two small towns—one in either end of the township. It has been customary there to elect a Justice of the Peace in each town. It would be very unsatisfactory to the people there to limit them to one Justice of the Peace for the whole township. It becomes necessary, very often, when the Justice of the Peace is disqualified, to change the venue to another Court in the same township. There may be very strong reasons in many instances why one Justice of the Peace is insufficient to properly discharge the business of a township. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: The evil of having two rival Justices of the Peace in one township, has come to be so great as to be generally recognized. It was so great an evil in San Francisco that they adopted a special system there, creating a Justice's Court, consisting of a number of Justices, so that when a case is brought into the Justice's Court no man knows where it is going to be tried. The cases are parceled out among the Justices. The trouble was, under the old system, whenever a man wanted to bring a suit he went and consulted a Justice of the Peace, and talked about the case to him, and if he was favorable to it he would bring the action before that Justice, and they invariably decided in favor of the plaintiff. Whenever you get two Justices in one township, of course there is always a contest as to who shall have the business. A gentleman from the interior, of large experience, stated before the committee, when this question was up, that it was a crying evil, that, if possible, ought to be remedied, and that we ought to frame the section in such a way that there would be but one Justice in each township. If you only have one Justice, parties will be compelled to bring their cases before him, and therefore it makes no difference which way he decides, so far as his own personal interest is concerned. Now, I think it must be conceded by everybody who reflects upon it, that this was a great evil which ought to be overcome. The object of the committee in framing this part of the section was to do away with these abuses. It is stated, upon the other side, that if this system is carried out the greatest inconvenience will result. Some of those evils will result in some instances, no doubt. But can they not be overcome? Are they evils which must continue to exist? If this system is adopted, I think not. Now, if a township is too large it can be divided by the Board of Supervisors of the county. I understand, under our system, that it is entirely within the power of the Board of Supervisors to subdivide the county into as many townships as they please.

It is attended by no expense at all. It is a question for local determination and local management. And why should not the Board of Supervisors, finding that a township is too large, divide the county up into smaller townships, and then each township will be entitled to one Justice of the Peace. That is a very easy means of overcoming the difficulty. That will overcome the difficulty mentioned by the gentleman from Nevada. Why not divide the large townships up into smaller townships, say into four townships; or, if two will do, divide one large township into two. This is a matter entirely within their own control. In regard to these towns spoken of here, like Modesto, it is expressly provided for in the section, that any incorporated town can have more than one Justice of the Peace, and under the system which we propose to adopt, any town can incorporate without going to any expense. Then they will be entitled to more than one Justice of the Peace.

MR. SCHELL. Would not the same objections you have raised to two Justices in one township apply to two Justices in a town?

MR. WILSON. No, sir; because you can cut the town into districts if you choose, by some dividing line, such as a street. That would avoid having two Justices of the Peace brought into rivalry. This section is intended to cure a very great evil. Before the Judiciary Committee there was but one dissenting voice that I recollect of. I say let us adhere to the system, and not permit Justices of the Peace longer to be brought into rivalry.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I think it would be a great public benefit if we could do something to elevate the character of Justices' Courts. Now, sir, I think one of the most disgraceful things in the world is the spectacle of two Justices' Courts grabbing for business like a couple of starving hyenas. It does seem to me that this is a matter of great importance, and there ought to be some remedy for this potent evil.

MR. EDGERTON. Is it true that the plaintiff always wins in the Justice's Court?

MR. McFARLAND. He is likely to win, because he has the choice of two men. He goes and talks with one of them about the case. If the opinion of one of them is not favorable, he goes to the other. If you have but one Justice in a township there will certainly be more dignity attached to the office, and that is what the committee have done. The business would be larger, because one would have it all, and a better class of men would be chosen to fill these offices. I agree entirely with the opinions expressed by the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee. I hope the report of the committee will be sustained.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. McCONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. White, Evey, Howard, and Filcher.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Contra Costa, Mr. Mills.

Division being called for, the committee divided, and the amendment was adopted by a vote of 55 ayes to 40 noes.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'elected,' in line three, down to and including the word 'county,' in line four, and insert the following: 'in townships, incorporated cities and towns, or cities and counties.'"

MR. WEST. The object of this amendment is to render these words plural.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Division being called for, the vote stood, ayes 38, noes 22, and the Chair announced that no quorum had voted, and the motion was put again.

The amendment was adopted by a vote of 52 ayes to 32 noes.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add, after the word 'have,' in line seven, the word 'original,' and after the word 'Court,' add 'which shall also have appellate jurisdiction.'"

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: The amendment offered by Mr. Heiskell was to strike out the word "concurrent," and insert "original," which the Chairman of the committee pointed out would not do. Now, the word "original," before the word "concurrent," avoids the objections raised in regard to the other amendment. And this language is used in other Constitutions in similar cases. It is so used in the Constitution of Indiana. After the word "Courts," I propose to add, "which shall also have appellate jurisdiction," to cover the point of the objection urged by the Chairman of the committee, that it ought to be clearly expressed that the Superior Courts should have appellate jurisdiction in those cases. Now, if this amendment is adopted, it will read in this way—"except that said Justices shall have original concurrent jurisdiction with Superior Courts, which shall also have appellate jurisdiction," etc.

MR. REYNOLDS. I would suggest an amendment to his amendment by adding "undercurrent."

MR. McCALLUM. The gentleman ought to go round and explain the point of his joke. I think the point made by the gentleman from San Joaquin was conclusive that the plaintiff ought not to have the right to deprive defendant of an appeal. In section five it is expressly declared that the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases of forcible entry and detainer; therefore, taking the two sections together, this will give the Supreme Court appellate jurisdiction, and the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court is fixed by another section.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section twelve.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 12. The Supreme Court, the Superior Courts, and such other Courts as the Legislature shall prescribe, shall be Courts of record.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the section:

"Add the word 'and' after the word 'Court,' in the first line, and strike out all after the word 'Courts,' in the first line, to and including the word 'prescribe,' in the second line.'"

REMARKS OF MR. BELCHER.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: The object of this amendment is to make these Courts the only Courts of record. As it is now, in the section, the Legislature may declare any Court to be a Court of record. When this report was made I saw no objection to it, but it has been considerably amended, and the Superior Court has been given appellate jurisdiction in all cases. Now, I do not think Municipal Courts, Police Courts, and Justices' Courts should be Courts of record. It is suggested to me that the amendment should include the word "only," and I accept the suggestion.

MR. TERRY. Mr. Chairman: I cannot see any objection to the section as it now stands. It is not to be presumed that the Legislature is going to declare all Courts Courts of record. The former section gives the Legislature the right to create inferior Courts in cities and towns, and the question of whether these Courts so created, shall be Courts of record or not, will depend upon the jurisdiction conferred upon them. If they are given jurisdiction of a certain class of cases they ought to be Courts of record, to keep a record of their proceedings. I see no danger in leaving the Legislature the right to determine this matter. I think it can safely be left to legislative wisdom.

MR. WILSON, of First District. This is the language of the old Constitution. I think the reason why the committee adopted it was that they saw no reason for departing from it. The old section provides that the Supreme Court, District Courts, Probate, and such other Courts as the Legislature shall prescribe, shall be Courts of record. Now we have the Supreme Court and Superior Courts only, and such other Courts as the Legislature shall prescribe. I say this in vindication of the committee.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: The difficulty lies in this: what has been the experience in San Francisco? These inferior Courts have been created in such a manner, and with such powers, as that no lawyer could know, and no Court could ascertain from the law creating them, or the powers conferred upon them, whether they were Courts of record or not. As an instance of this, the Legislature created the City Criminal Court, and an exception was taken to the power of the Court, that it was not a Court of record. The case went to the Supreme Court, and the Supreme Court was unable to decide the case, though it was brought squarely before them. They contrived to get around it, for the truth was they could not tell, to save their lives.

MR. TERRY. Under this section no Court can be a Court of record unless so declared by the Legislature.

MR. REYNOLDS. We desire on that point to say that the Legislature shall not create any more Courts and make them Courts of record. The Supreme Court and Superior Courts are Courts of record, and they are sufficient.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: This matter is taking up considerable time. Now I cannot discover that there is any great danger in leaving this matter with the Legislature to determine what Courts shall be Courts of record. I cannot see any reason for not doing it. They certainly would not declare a Court to be a Court of record unless it was proper. If we are going to distrust the Legislature in all these particulars, we might as well not have a Legislature. This is certainly one of the matters that should go to the Legislature. I do not think it is wise for us to consume time discussing such matters as this, when the Legislature is fully as competent as this body to decide them. Where is the danger? Where is the risk in allowing the Legislature to say what Courts, besides those already created, shall be Courts of record? I don't think any gentleman will be able to point out wherein there is any great danger in leaving this matter to the Legislature. I think the committee has acted wisely.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman from Tulare has covered the entire ground of this question, and I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Moreland, West, Evey, and Howard.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Yuba.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section thirteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 13. The Legislature shall fix by law the jurisdiction of any inferior Courts which may be established in pursuance of section one of this article, and shall fix by law the power, duties, and responsibilities of the Judges thereof.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to the section the following: 'But the jurisdiction and powers so conferred must not trench in any case upon the jurisdiction conferred by this Constitution upon any Court of record.'"

MR. HERRINGTON. I think it is requisite that a provision of this kind should be inserted. There is now a provision that the Legislature may extend the jurisdiction of these inferior Courts, and it is possible that they may be established in such a way as to create a conflict of jurisdiction. For that reason I think such a provision as this is necessary.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section fourteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 14. The Legislature shall provide for the election of a Clerk of the Supreme Court, County Clerks, District Attorneys, Sheriffs, and other necessary officers, and shall fix by law their duties and compensation. County Clerks shall be ex officio Clerks of the Courts of record in and for their respective counties, or cities and counties. The Legislature may also provide for the appointment by the several Superior Courts of one or more Commissioners in their respective counties, or cities and counties, with authority to perform Chamber business of the Judges of the Superior Courts, to take depositions, and perform such other business connected with the administration of justice as may be prescribed by law.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all of lines one and two, down to the word 'county.'"

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: Although I subscribed to this report, yet I call the attention of the Committee of the Whole to the fact that section fourteen of the report, which seems to continue in office the present Clerk of the Supreme Court, the present County Clerks, and the present District Attorneys and Sheriffs. Section fourteen reads as follows:

"SEC. 14. The Legislature shall provide for the election of a Clerk of the Supreme Court, County Clerks, District Attorneys, Sheriffs, and other necessary officers, and shall fix by law their duties and compensation. County Clerks shall be ex officio Clerks of the Courts of record in and for their respective counties, or cities and counties. The Legislature may also provide for the appointment by the several Superior Courts of one or more Commissioners in their respective counties, or cities and counties, with authority to perform Chamber business of the Judges of the Superior Courts, to take depositions, and perform such other business connected with the administration of justice as may be prescribed by law."

It does not seem to me to be desirable to allow this power to remain in the Legislature. If this section is adopted it continues in office all the old officers until the Legislature meets and provides terms of office, fixes their duties, and provides for their compensation. The first two lines, down to the word 'county,' can be stricken out. Then the section will read:

"County Clerks shall be ex officio Clerks of the Courts of record in and for their respective counties, or cities and counties. The Legislature may also provide for the appointment by the several Superior Courts of one or more Commissioners," etc. Properly this provision belongs in the article on county and township organization. We will provide for it in that article. It is not necessary here. We do not want it here. If you adopt the section as it now stands you continue in office the old county officers.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

"Insert after the word 'compensation,' in line three, the following: 'which compensation shall not be increased nor diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected.'"

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: A part of this section is section eleven of article six of the old Constitution. I don't think it can be important, except in one respect: that these officers sometimes, after they are elected, want their salaries raised. I do not think that should be permitted. The Judges will probably have their salaries fixed. I think the Clerk of the Supreme Court should not have his salary increased or diminished during his term of office, neither should county officers. I think this provision should be inserted, in order that they will not go to the Legislature and ask to have their pay increased.

MR. LARKIN. I am in favor of the gentleman's amendment to strike out that portion of the section, and when we come to the article on cities and towns the matter of salaries can there be arranged.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I cannot think that it is possible that this committee would strike out that part of the section, and I am almost ashamed to say anything against striking it out. That part of the section is copied from the old Constitution. It does not change the statutes as they now exist, which prescribe the duties of these officers. Of course we cannot undertake in the Constitution to define the powers and duties of Sheriffs and County Clerks, and other county officers. There are long chapters and sections in the Code necessary for that purpose, and these Codes will continue. If they do not conflict with the Constitution they continue until changed by the Legislature. There is nothing whatever in this provision which has any effect upon the tenure of office of these officers. It simply contains the same provision which has always been in the Constitution: that the Legislature shall legislate upon this subject. I hope the amendment will be voted down. The amendment of the gentleman from Yuba I have no objection to.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: It appears to me that the point taken by Mr. Beerstecher is well taken. The Legislature will meet some time after the adoption of this Constitution. It must then provide for the election of these officers, and this will necessarily continue these officers in office for two years. I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Division was called for, and the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Beerstecher, was lost by a vote of 37 ayes to 53 noes.

The amendment of the gentleman from Yuba, Mr. Belcher, was adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section fifteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 15. No judical officer, except Justices of the Peace and Court Commissioners, shall receive to his own use any fees or perquisites of office.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I move the committee now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried, on a division, by a vote of 55 ayes to 43 noes.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. SHOEMAKER. I move we do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at five o'clock P. M. the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow morning, at nine o'clock and thirty minutes.

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Saturday, January 11th, 1879.

The Convention met in regular session at nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M., President Hoge in the chair.

THE JOURNAL.

MR. CAPLES. I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, and the same approved.

Carried.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted to Messrs. Holmes, Bell, and Nelson, for one day; to Messrs. Johnson and Cross for three days; to Mr. Shurtleff for two days.

Indefinite leave was granted to Mr. Walker, of Marin, on account of sickness.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. President: I offer the following proposed amendment, on water and water rights, prepared by John F. Swift, of San Francisco.

THE SECRETARY read:

"ARTICLE —.

"WATER AND WATER RIGHTS.

"SECTION 1. The only property that can be acquired in any of the waters of this State, by appropriation or condemnation, is a use, and such use shall forever remain subject to regulation and control by the Legislature of the State for the common benefit of all.

"SEC. 2. The right to collect rates or compensation for the use of water supplied to any county, city and county, city, or town, or the inhabitants thereof, is a franchise, and cannot be exercised except by authority of and in the manner prescribed by law.

"SEC. 3. Every person, company, or corporation engaged in supplying any city or town in this State, or the inhabitants thereof, with fresh water, shall supply such inhabitants with pure, fresh water for family uses so long as the supply permits, without discrimination as to persons, and at reasonable rates, and such city or town, in case of fire or other great necessity, free of charge.

"SEC. 4. Water rates shall be established annually, by ordinance, by the Board of Supervisors, or other governing body of the city or town where such rates are to be collected, in the same manner that other ordinances are passed, and not otherwise, which ordinance shall continue in force for one year from the time of enactment and no longer.

"SEC. 5. Any person, company, or corporation collecting water rates in any city or town in this State, otherwise than established by law, shall forfeit the franchise and waterworks to the city or town where such rates are to be collected, for the public use."

Referred to the Committee of the Whole.

RESOLUTION IN REFERENCE TO ABSENTEES.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. President: I wish to offer a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Convention be and he is hereby instructed to report a list on each Friday of all delegates who are or may be absent more than three days, and that the per diem of such absentees shall not be allowed.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be and he is hereby instructed to report to this house the absence of any attaché each day, and that for three days' absence such attaché's place shall be declared vacant, sickness excepted.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. President: I move that it be laid on the table temporarily. We are right in the middle of this report, and for my part, because of sickness, I shall have to ask leave of absence for several days.

The motion prevailed, and leave was granted.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT—FEES OF OFFICERS.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the article on judiciary and judicial department.

So ordered.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section fifteen is before the Committee of the Whole.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment to section fifteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out, after the word 'except,' in the first line, the words 'Justices of the Peace and.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. HILBORN.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman: The object of this amendment is to deprive Justices of the Peace of their fees, and place them upon salaries. I believe this amendment will cure a radical evil in this State, and elevate the character of these Courts. There is no doubt but the present system of allowing a judicial officer to be supported by fees is as vicious as it can be. It has brought forth such fruits in San Francisco as to be repealed long ago. It is wrong for a judicial officer to depend upon fees for his support. It is a standing bribe for him to entertain unworthy cases, and as these Judges are nothing but men, it is natural that where there is any doubt as to whether the case should be entertained or not, they should resolve the doubt in favor of their own interests. The machinery of the Court is set in motion, the Constable is allowed to earn his fees, and a large number of witnesses are brought; all to enable the Justice to earn his three dollars. A cloud of witnesses are brought into Court, a jury of twelve men are taken from their business, and, in order to get the twelve men, thirty or forty men are summoned; the community is disturbed in order that this man may earn his three dollars, when, in fact, the case was not one which should have been entertained. If this amendment should prevail, the number of cases in the Justices' Courts would fall off one half at once, and the expenses of the Courts would be decreased in a like ratio. The character of the business would be at once elevated. If you place Justices of the Peace on a salary, it will do away with this rivalry to see who will get the most cases, and who shall have the most respectable practice, and instead of being a standing nuisance, these Courts will regain the respect of the people.

REMARKS OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I do not think the gentleman realizes the magnitude of the enterprise he has undertaken, nor the impracticability of it. I desire to call his attention to this fact: in many counties there are, perhaps, twenty or thirty Justices of the Peace, and will be under the present system. They cost the people nothing. Now, put all these officers under salary, and you would bring forth a swarm of officers that would equal the cost of county officers.

MR. HILBORN. Leave the Board of Supervisors to fix the salaries. It is not necessary that they should receive a given salary. They may fix the salary at one dollar if they choose.

MR. TINNIN. If they are put on a salary they are entitled to a reasonable compensation. I don't care how small the salary is, it will greatly increase the expenses. I think the scheme is entirely impracticable and wrong, and the amendment ought to be defeated.

MR. LARKIN. If the gentleman's argument means anything it means too much. It would be necessary, in order to avoid the expense to litigants, to salary the lawyers, too, and also the Constables. The Constables' fees are more than the Justices'.

MR. HILBORN. The Constables want to make money and the Justices too.

MR. LARKIN. Generally they don't proceed with a case unless there is some cause. I hope this proposition will not prevail. It will open an expensive system for Justices of the Peace Courts, which will be very burdensome on some of the counties in this State. I think the Justices' Courts should be left as they are at present.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: In the twenty-fifth section of the legislative department, the twenty-ninth subdivision of that section, they have said that the Legislature shall not pass any local or special laws in the following cases: "affecting the fees or salaries of any officer." Now, if this section fifteen is passed without amendment, the general law would have to be that all Justices of the Peace would have to have salaries. That will break down the system which they now have in San Francisco. That system has been in operation there a number of years, and has proved, as I understand it, an excellent system, and has operated well. I am therefore in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Solano. That system will not be allowed under this Constitution. Now, we want some amendment here. I am not afraid of these salaries amounting to enormous sums. I do not think they will exist. I think where a Justice has no business he will not require a salary. I know of cases where the Justice does not tend to the business on account of the salary. In our county there is a Justice way up the county, who had one case requiring the presence of a large number of persons. He had to keep them in his house. His brother did the cooking and he did the official part of the business. It cost him about fifty dollars for the expenses, and he received three dollars in fees. He kept them in his house and charged them nothing. Now, this is frequently the case. These men are men who do not hold the office because they desire any profit. Now, I think if Justices are paid a salary, it will be much better. Say twenty-five or fifty dollars a month, and in some cases a nominal salary. It will cost the county much less to pay them a salary than it costs under the present system. I think, when a man is called upon to try a case, he ought to be paid something. Under the present system he is paid nothing. I think he would be more likely to hold it for the honor, and in some cases a nominal salary of say one dollar would be better.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will not prevail. I think in some counties it will fairly swamp the county. The number of Justices' Courts are very great in some counties, and there is no possibility of regulating the salaries so as to make them reasonable, and at the same time not swamp the county. This idea of raising the dignity of Justices of the Peace by giving them salaries is all bosh. I don't think it would be very dignified to give them fifty dollars a year. I trust the amendment will be voted down.

MR. TOWNSEND. I call the gentleman's attention to that part of the platform on which he was elected, that "all public officers shall receive fixed salaries, and all fees shall be accounted for."

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I think this subject is not receiving the attention that it ought to receive. I am sorry to have to say a word in relation to this matter, but in my judgment it is all important. I believe there are nearly one thousand townships in this State. There are about that many offices to be filled by Justices of the Peace under this Constitution, if it is adopted in its present shape. Now there is no question about it that the picture has not been overdrawn by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson. Gentlemen may talk as much as they please about economy, talk about saving money, but the person who has no prospect of more than three or four cases in a year in a township will accept the office at a nominal salary. The whole system is vicious in itself—per se vicious. The idea of feeing Justices of the Peace! Now I do not desire to revamp the arguments of the gentleman, which were true in every particular, and well and forcibly stated, as far as that is concerned. There is no doubt but what nearly every Justice of the Peace, outside, perhaps, of San Francisco and some of the large towns and cities of the State, are looked to and looked upon as attorneys always to one of the parties in each case, and that is but the natural consequence of this fee system. They try nearly all cases upon that theory and practice, upon the motion to strike out portions of the complaint or answer. I believe there are few if any cases known where a Justice of the Peace has been known to hold that a pleading was not good. Now, when he is dependent upon fees, as well observed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, of course he is anxious to keep the business in his hands. If he is salaried his anxiety in that business amounts to nothing. The gentleman was right when he said this was the most vicious system to be conceived of. Every case will be entertained on its merits, because they know that their fees do not depend on the case. Whenever a case is entertained and examined, the Justice of the Peace, under the present system, presents his bill to the Board of Supervisors and it is paid. It makes no difference whether there is merit in the case or not, it is heard, and the Constable's fees are rolled up, and the county put to an expense that it never should have incurred. I remember one case which footed up three hundred dollars, in which there was not the slightest testimony to show that the defendant had the slightest connection with the transaction. And yet the county footed the bill. The party traveled a long distance when there was no real merit in the case whatever, and the case should have been dismissed upon hearing the first witness. In ninety-nine cases out of one hundred the case ought never to be tolerated at all. The viciousness of the system ought to be enough to condemn it. There is no danger of these salaries amounting to any exorbitant sum. We have Boards of Supervisors who ought to have sense enough to fix these salaries.

MR. MCCOY. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

No second.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

It was lost.

THE SECRETARY read section sixteen:

SEC. 16. The Legislature shall provide for the speedy publication of such opinions of the Supreme Court as it may deem expedient, and all opinions shall be free for publication by any person.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendments to section sixteen the Secretary will read section seventeen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 17. The Justices of the Supreme Court and Judges of the Superior Courts shall severally, at stated times during their continuance in office, receive from the State treasury, for their services, a compensation which shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected. During the term of the first Judges elected under this Constitution, the annual salaries of the Justices of the Supreme Court shall be six thousand dollars each. The Superior Judges shall be divided into four classes, with the following annual salaries: those of the City and County of San Francisco, and the Counties of Alameda, San Joaquin, Los Angeles, Santa Clara, Sacramento, and Sonoma, shall constitute the first class, and shall each receive an annual salary of five thousand dollars, payable quarterly; those of the Counties of Butte, El Dorado, Amador, Colusa, Contra Costa, Humboldt, Mendocino, Monterey, Napa, Nevada, Placer, Santa Cruz, Solano, Tulare, Yolo, Kern, Yuba, and San Bernardino, shall constitute the second class, and shall receive an annual salary of four thousand dollars each, payable quarterly; those of the Counties of Calaveras, Fresno, Lake, Marin, Merced, Plumas, San Benito, San Diego, San Luis Obispo, San Mateo, Santa Barbara, Sierra, Shasta, Siskiyou, Stanislaus, Sutter, Tehama, Tuolumne, and Ventura, shall constitute the third class, and receive an annual salary of three thousand dollars each, payable quarterly; and those of all other counties in the State, not above enumerated, shall constitute the fourth class, and receive an annual salary of two thousand dollars each, payable quarterly.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I desire to submit a correction on behalf of the Judiciary Committee, in the seventh line, where it says, "Superior Judges shall be divided into four classes;" insert before these words, "until otherwise changed by the Legislature." That amendment embodies the views of the Judiciary Committee. It was an error in the engrossment of the section. This will make it to read as it was adopted by the committee.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: I propose an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section seventeen by striking out 'Yuba' in the thirteenth line, and 'Sutter' in the seventeenth line, and insert after the word 'Sonoma' in the ninth line the words 'Yuba and Sutter.'"

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: You will observe that we have already changed the report so as to have one Judge for these two counties. This is to give them a Judge of the first class.

MR. ROLFE. It would be proper to say Yuba and Sutter jointly.

MR. OHLEYER. Mr. Chairman: In consideration of the influence and learning of Judge Belcher, I consented to have these two counties joined. Afterwards I thought it was uncalled for. I think, so far as Sutter is concerned, it is uncalled for. I believe if ever any county in the State was entitled to a Judge Sutter County is. In fact, either of these counties is as well entitled to a Judge as any other county in the State. There is no argument advanced in favor of the change, except that the county seats are close together. I believe each county in the State should have one Judge, who is to attend to the business of the county exclusively. I hope the Convention will not adopt the amendment.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the word 'six' before the word 'thousand,' and insert the word 'five.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. Not in order at present. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Yuba.

Division being called for, the amendment was lost—ayes, 41; noes, 41.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I offer my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the word 'six' before the word 'thousand,' and inseft 'five;' strike out the word 'five' and insert 'four;' strike out the word 'four' and insert 'three thousand five hundred dollars;' strike out the words 'three thousand dollars' and insert the words 'two thousand five hundred dollars.'"

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I do not desire to offer any argument upon that amendment. As will be seen by the reading of it, it is merely to change the salaries of the Judges. I do not think it requires any argument, and I submit it to the Convention.

SPEECH OF MR. EAGON.

MR. EAGON. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will not prevail; and if I had my say, sir, so far as the Supreme Judges are concerned, I would make the salary seven thousand dollars instead of six thousand dollars. Now, sir, the great cry of the people is retrenchment and reform, say some gentlemen, and they contend that the people want a niggardly policy adopted in regard to the pay of judicial officers. I contend that such is not the case, and if gentlemen will look at this in a sensible light, they will see that it will have a tendency to degrade these offices, and prevent men who are competent from filling them. What man can take the position of Supreme Judge of this State and live as he ought to live on five thousand dollars a year? The salary is too low now. You cannot get gentlemen who are qualified to fill these positions unless you pay them; and let me say to gentlemen who come here for the purpose of degrading these positions, that they will not meet with favor when they go before the people. The people of California are not niggardly, sir, in the payment of salaries to their public officers. They are always willing to pay according to the services rendered. Do you suppose you can get the best and most competent men to fill these positions unless you pay them? I say, no. No man of ability can accept and fill the office of Superior Judge for the salary which this amendment proposes to pay. Gentlemen come to the Legislature upon the cry of retrenchment and reform, and they run wild upon the proposition, thinking that they are thereby giving satisfaction to the people in reducing down the salaries of public officers to nothing, and degrading these offices. My experience has been that instead of the people indorsing these men, I have never known, with one or two exceptions, any of these gentlemen to be returned to the Legislature by the people. The people do not ask it. The people ask that justice shall be administered by their judicial officers, and that they shall do it in a manner that will give satisfaction, and do justice to all alike. They demand that it shall be administered with intelligence, and not with ignorance. You are opening the door for filling these positions with men who are incompetent, because competent men will not accept them for the salaries which you propose to pay. What man is there in the State of California, who is qualified by experience and learning to fill the office of Superior Judge, who cannot make twice as much practicing his profession as this amendment proposes to pay? I hope this proposition will be voted down. It is little enough, as reported by the committee, and a portion of the committee were in favor of raising the salary of the Supreme Judges to seven thousand dollars, but they finally concluded to leave it at six thousand dollars, on account of there being no complaints made by the people at the salaries now paid.

I hope this amendment will not be carried. I think it ought to be raised instead of being reduced, and I know it will meet with favor throughout the country, and it will keep men out of these positions who are not competent to fill them. Such a proposition as this seems ridiculous to me. The Superior Judges are now getting salaries above what it is proposed to pay them here. They ought to be men of ability and learning; men qualified to fill the position with honor and dignity, and they ought to have salaries that would allow them to live respectably, at least. No one has complained about the salaries of District Judges, and yet the Superior Judges will have a good deal more work to do than the District Judges. They fill the position of County Judge, and do all the probate business, and I am not in favor of reducing the salaries down so as to bar out competent men. I trust that such a proposition as this will meet with but little favor at the hands of this Convention. I trust that this whole matter will be taken as the committee have reported it—not because I was one of the committee, but because I believe the committee better competent to fix these salaries than this house. It is not reasonable to suppose that the gentlemen who are upon that committee could go upon the farm and conduct the business as well as men who are farmers; neither could it be expected that farmers could fix the salaries of judicial officers as well as men who have given their lives to the study of the business, and understand it. I trust that gentlemen will look at this matter in the light of reason, and not in the light of demagogy, for it will avail them nothing. The people will not thank them for doing it.

MR. INMAN. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all the words down to and including the word 'each,' in line seven, and insert the following: 'The Justices of the Supreme Court shall, at stated times, during their continuance in office, receive from the State treasury, for their services, a compensation which shall not be increased nor diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected. During the term of the first Judges elected under this Constitution the annual salaries of the Judges of the Supreme Court shall be five thousand dollars; the annual salaries of the Judges of the Superior Courts shall be one thousand dollars each, to be paid out of the State treasury, and such additional sum as shall be fixed by the Board of Supervisors of the several counties of the State, which amount so fixed shall be paid out of the treasury of such counties. The Boards of Supervisors of the several counties shall fix said salaries at least three months next preceding the election of such Superior Judge.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. That is not an amendment to the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I hope, as far as the Supreme Judges are concerned, that their salaries will not be reduced below the amount of six thousand dollars. The people of this State have not, and do not demand the reduction of salaries, but they demand an economical administration of public affairs, by the public officers occupying official positions. The people have never objected to the payment of reasonable, even liberal salaries, but they have objected to the method of administering the public service. I am not surprised that any gentleman as well versed in legal lore as the gentleman, as well acquainted with the wants of the people, a gentleman who has given such acute examination into the subject under consideration, as the gentleman, who has stated on the floor of this Convention that he was able to live for five dollars a week, should offer an amendment here to cut down the salary of our Judges.

MR. STEDMAN. I would like to state to the gentleman——

THE CHAIRMAN. Such remarks are out of order. The gentleman will take his seat.

MR. BEERSTECHER. It may be presumption for me to rise here and make any opposition to the views of the gentleman. I know it does not reflect the opinion of the members of the bar——

MR. McCOY. I ask the gentleman if his opinion is backed by his experience.

Mr. BEERSTECHER. What in, sir.

MR. McCOY. By your experience as a resident of this State.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I have known men to live in this State for twenty years and still not know anything. I have known men who have been here for eighteen months, who have traveled all over the State, to know more about the State than men who had been here twenty years. I do know, gentlemen, and I believe upon reflection this committee knows, that the people of this State have never objected to the payment of liberal salaries, but their objection has been to the waste of public money. I do not believe the people desire to have a man occupy the position of Supreme Judge of this State, and receive such a miserable salary that he can scarcely eke out an existence for himself and family, if he have a family. It is desirable that these men be placed upon a plane where they will not be influenced by outside influences. The officers of the judiciary should be rendered entirely independent by the payment of liberal salaries. There can be no personal desire, on my part, to occupy the position of Supreme Judge, because this committee has said that a man must be thirty-five years old to get there. I hope the amendment to cut down the salaries of Supreme Judges from six thousand dollars to five thousand dollars will not prevail. As to the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, to pay the Superior Judges one thousand dollars each out of the State treasury, and the balance to be paid by the counties, for my part I do not care whether it prevails or not. San Francisco is willing, so far as I know, that the salaries should be paid out of the State treasury. If, however, the salaries are to be paid by the counties, San Francisco will be the gainer, because San Francisco pays more than her proportionate share of taxes towards the support of State government.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I favor the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda. I believe that amendment to incorporate the sentiments of the people, and the views of those men who voted for this Convention. At the organization of the State government the Governor received ten thousand dollars. It was afterwards reduced to seven thousand dollars. This Convention has determined that six thousand dollars is enough for him. The salary of the Supreme Judges has been six thousand dollars since the organization of the Government. Five thousand dollars to-day for a man in a position of this kind is more than ten thousand dollars was in eighteen hundred and fifty-five and eighteen hundred and sixty. There is that difference in the country. Five thousand dollars will employ the talent, and the best talent of the State, for the position of Supreme Judge. One thousand dollars, more or less, is not going to make a man honest, nor keep him honest. You will elect your Judges for twelve years. A Judge will receive sixty thousand dollars. If the term was cut down to four years, the same arguments would not hold good. From information I have ascertained, three quarters of the lawyers are barely making a living, and some of them the best men in the profession. The country is full of them, and there is no money in the business. The majority of attorneys throughout the State are starving. Pay them in proportion to what they can make in their business throughout the State. There are few lawyers in this State making more than five thousand dollars a year. I am willing that the State should pay one thousand dollars, and the counties the balance. The Boards of Supervisors should be allowed to determine what salaries they will pay. It will bring the Government home to the people. It will enable them to determine what the pay of public officers shall be. I think the gentleman's amendment is correct. I think it is demanded by the people.

REMARKS OF MR. DUDLEY.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: I do not consider myself competent to pass upon the whole report of the committee, but as far as this item of salaries is concerned I believe I understand it, knowing where the money comes from. I remember very well ten years ago when the Legislature of this State provided that the salary of the Supreme Judges should be six thousand dollars. We thought that enough at the time. Judge Sanderson thought it enough at that time. That was the figure he would take it for. Now, it is well known to every gentleman here that five thousand dollars to-day is more money than six thousand dollars was then. That investment then would not make a man a living, and there are plenty of men who are living well on it to-day. A salary of five thousand dollars would represent a capital of forty thousand dollars now. It is a higher salary than six thousand dollars was then. Times have changed. The State of California is coming down from the flush times of eighteen hundred and fifty, and all classes must be content with smaller profits, and content to pay less money. We were fast drifting into bankruptcy, I might say, and I believe if any one thing will cause this Constitution to be adopted, it will be the fact that we have established a system of economy. That system ought to be extended to the salaries of Judges as well as to the salaries of other officials. This Convention has cut down the salary of the Governor and other State officers, and I see no reason why the salaries of judicial officers should be left at the old figure. Certainly there is no reason why they should not be cut down in the same ratio as we have cut down other officers. As to the ability that would be gained by paying high salaries, that might and it might not be so. Money will not always buy brains. It is not always the best man who is able to secure the majority of a nominating convention. The best men do not always carry off the prize, by any means. It is sometimes the man who surrounds himself, and calls to his aid, the best political wire-pullers. It is the one who is sharpest in making political trades. And if the salary is high, so as to make the office an object, that class of men are more apt to enter the contest. I hope that members will look at this matter favorably. Now, if these salaries are paid out of the State treasury, the contest for additional Courts will be renewed in the Legislature, and it won't be five years before there will be one hundred Superior Judges in this State. If these salaries are paid out of the county treasury, instead of Santa Clara and Alameda coming in for two Judges, they will get along with one.

REMARKS OF MR. REDDY.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that this amendment is something remarkable. Why should you be so penurious? Do you desire to drive our Judges into a hash house to live? Now, sir, the idea of sending the Superior Judges of the State to the Board of Supervisors. Why, he would have difficulty in finding the Board in some of the counties. Now, what position will a Judge occupy towards the Board of Supervisors? In many of the counties of this State there are what are called "Court House rings." Now, suppose that the Board of Supervisors should go contrary to law, and the Judge is called upon to bring them back to the right path. Is he not under their thumb? If he gives a decision contrary to them, will they not reduce his salary? What kind of a position will the Judge occupy as far as his living is concerned?

MR. STEDMAN. I would like to ask you a question, whether you don't believe a Judge of the Supreme Court can live on five thousand dollars a year?

MR. REDDY. We do not propose to make them live in any such way. We propose to give them salaries that they can live comfortably on.

MR. STEDMAN. I will ask you if they ought not to live on fifteen dollars a day?

MR. REDDY. I have no objections to the gentleman asking questions. It is about the best argument I can make. Any more questions?

MR. STEDMAN. After awhile.

MR. REDDY. Can you make any suggestions as to the means of reducing the cost of living? If you have any suggestions to make on that kind of political economy I will be glad to hear them, and I have no doubt other gentlemen will be.

MR. STEDMAN. I leave that to the gentleman.

MR. REDDY. As the gentleman is posted to a wonderful degree in the mysteries of cheap victualing, I would like to hear from him upon that question.

MR. STEDMAN. That is not the question before the Convention.

MR. REDDY. I do not know of any man in this State who has got the thing down any finer, unless I might except some of the Chinese companies. Now, sir, with reference to the salaries of Judges. The gentlemen who are supposed to know most about it say that salaries are not too high. I think they are not too high. As far as the Superior Judges are concerned, they are to get one thousand dollars from the State, and the balance is to be fixed and paid by the Board of Supervisors. Who is going to accept these positions on any such terms, when they do not know what whim the Board of Supervisors may take? They don't know whether the Board of Supervisors will fix it high enough so they can afford to take it or not. All over the country there are complaints about the manner in which justice is administered in the County Courts of the State, because the salaries are too low to induce first-class men to accept the office. These offices are only sought after, as a rule, by men who are incapable, which is shown by the number and class of appeals that come to our Supreme Court from these counties. Some of the most ridiculous blunders are made by these County Judges. Instead of being economical to employ this class of men, it is a dead loss to the State, because of the loss of time and the increasing of the expenses of the Supreme Court. I do not think there is any economy at all in trying to fill these offices on any such terms as have been proposed here. I am sure, if the State is to pay anything at all, it ought to pay altogether, and not subdivide it; not send to the State for a part, and to the county for a part. Don't make this whole system ridiculous.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: It is easy for a lot of rich farmers, who monopolize the rich farms of the State, to come here and suggest low salaries for judicial officers, who have no capital besides their salaries. All he has is his yearly income. These are responsible positions, and we ought to have responsible men for them, and men of character. We know that where large private interests are to be looked to, and great responsibility attaches, the salaries are fixed in proportion. And what responsibility is there that is equal to the responsibility which devolves upon a Judge? They have not only the property of one individual in their keeping, but the property of the whole State. More than that, the life and liberty of every citizen in the State. And yet you want to pay such men the ordinary hire. I suppose you could get men to take the position of Superior Judge for two thousand dollars a year. I suppose you could employ men at that price. But look at the immense interests that are involved, and see whether it is safe to do it. I think the salaries of Superior Judges are too small. You are dividing up the State by counties, and in the small counties paying very small salaries. And yet in a few years some of these counties may develop into first class counties. Take the County of Inyo, which is now a small county, and yet in three years more it may have millions of dollars worth of property involved. That is likely to be the case anywhere in the State. Now do you, with these immense interests involved, wish to take men from the class that are willing to work for small salaries? Six thousand dollars is certainly not too much for a man who is capable, who has character, a man of learning and integrity, and qualified in every way to administer upon these immense interests. I suppose, however, there is no use to argue these things. There are certain men who will overlook all these things, and do almost anything if they think it will bring them a little popularity. My friend to my left, Mr. Larkin, I do not think ever gets off a single sentence without the word "people" in it. If you will watch any of his speeches you will hear the word "people" forty times. [Laughter.] I for one do not fear the people. I am here to do what is right and just and best for the whole State, and not to make popularity with any particular class. The people sent us here to do what is right. They trusted in our judgment to do it. When we do what is right we will please and comply with the wishes of the people. And if it don't please them we will have done our duty anyway. I hope gentlemen will not vote to cut down salaries simply through fear of unpopularity. Gentlemen should not be so afraid of that. The people will indorse what is right.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I feel compelled to rise and protest against the assumption of my colleague, Mr. McFarland. He assumes that the farmers come here desiring to cut down the salaries of Judges. What are the facts in the case? The author of the proposition is a lawyer.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Stedman is no lawyer. I repudiate and scorn the idea.

MR. STEDMAN. I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

MR. CAPLES. The gentleman said so in his speech. I declare that the farmers have not done what they are charged with having done. But one farmer has spoken in favor of this amendment. I deny that the farmers come here desiring that the Superior Judges shall have a beggarly salary. The farmers have made no such declaration. Why, what would the gentleman say if some absurd proposition should be offered by a member of his profession, if I should get up and assert that the lawyers were responsible for it, that the lawyers had done so and so? No, sir, I deny the imputation.

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I regret very much that any attempt has been made to change the salaries of the Judges as recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary. That committee is composed of nineteen members, selected from various parts of the State. It is a representative body, and capable of taking a judicial view of this subject. There was considerable division of opinion in regard to salaries, some claiming that they should be fixed higher. I think no member of the committee desired lower salaries, save one. Finally, the committee concluded that if the salaries were fixed as they are fixed in section seventeen, it would satisfy every one, and nobody could raise any objection; that the amounts were fixed so low that if there was any objection it would rather be on the ground that the salaries were inadequate. I propose now to offer a few considerations why they should not be reduced, and I could present many reasons why they should be increased. In the first place, we claim to be a great and enlightened country, and a great commercial State. We have what we claim to be a grand system of jurisprudence. The more the country advances in civilization and enlightenment, the more intricate necessarily becomes the system of jurisprudence. I have not time to refer to ancient history to show that when a nation advances to a high degree of civilization, the jurisprudence becomes advanced also, and more intricate in detail. A lawyer is required, under section twenty-four of this reported system, to be thirty-five years of age to enable him to be a Judge of the Supreme Court, and thirty years for the Superior Court. In order to master the system of jurisprudence which prevails in the United States, he should devote his life to the study of the law; it is to it alone, and daily and constant labor, which makes a profound lawyer. I care not how talented he may be naturally; learning can only be acquired by hard work and constant study. As well could a man without study expect to equal the great civil engineers of the country who have accomplished such wonderful results, as to be capable of being a Judge without careful and incessant labor.

The position of Judge demands the highest skill and learning in the profession. For these positions, highest of all, we should have men of the highest character; men of integrity and unswerving honesty, as well as men of the highest learning and experience in the profession. Such is the typical Judge, and such is the man the people of the State want to occupy this position. When we find such a man, are we to give him the same compensation as one who never went through such a course of labor and study, and who does not possess the same qualifications? The people of California want Judges who are able and honest, men of character and standing in the community, and men of the highest skill in their profession. Even upon the point of economy, such a man is cheaper at six thousand dollars a year, than a man of less skill, honesty, and learning would be at two thousand five hundred dollars a year. If it were only possible for the members of the Convention to see the Courts as I have seen them, to see the administration of justice as I have seen it for twenty-five years, they would comprehend in a moment that it is greatly to the interests of the State, in an economical point of view, as well as in any other respect, to have the highest skill and ablest men of the profession, at the highest rates. What Judges will we get at low salaries? Men will accept Judgeships at low salaries because they cannot do better, because they are not skilled in their profession, and the result will be swift injustice, or slow dragging trials, infinite blunders, reversals and new trials granted, and in the end the State will pay three times more than it would if we had men learned, able, prompt, quick, intelligent, and thoroughly honest. Their decisions would not be so generally reversed, nor cases sent back so frequently for new trials. In point of economy alone we could better afford to pay good men ten thousand dollars. It is most expensive to the people to have incompetent persons occupying these positions. Men soon know when a dishonest person is on the bench, and such will often be approached. When a competent and upright man is on the bench, no such attempts will be made. The State will retrograde in point of intelligence and official integrity by having unskilled and incompetent lawyers advanced to these positions. The Supreme Court itself will be lowered in dignity by having cheap Judges on the bench. Will any person here say that he employs the cheapest lawyer to attend to his business in Court? And why not? Why not employ those men who are willing to work the cheapest in order to get business, upon the same principles that you want to employ them to sit upon the bench? Why not select your Judges by calling for sealed proposals for the lowest terms men will take? If you have a house to build, do you want a man who does not understand his business, or do you want skilled labor? Do you not seek for the best and most skillful men, and is it not cheaper in the end? I have had some experience in house building myself, and I have found it much more expensive when I have not secured the best workmen. It is invariably so in the end, and it is to the grand end we are now looking.

Great learning and long experience are the best qualifications for the bench. By this system a Judge is excluded from any other office during the whole term of his judicial career. For twelve years he is incapacitated from holding any other than a judicial office. At the end of the twelve years, when he retires from the bench, he finds himself out of business, without any fortune accumulated, and is compelled to go to work and build up business anew. Business grows up slowly, from day to day, and a good law business is not acquired without some effort. When upon the bench, no Judge is building up a business. He must start anew, on retirement from the bench, and build up a business the same as a young lawyer just admitted to the bar. This position as Judge does not tend to bring him any clients as a lawyer. He is cut off from all connection with his former clients. He will have lost all his clients. They will have transferred their business to other attorneys. He will have been exclusively engaged upon the bench. His habits of life will have become judicial, and it will be difficult for him to become an advocate again. His position on the bench will have unfitted him, in a measure, for active duty as a practicing attorney. It is taking twelve years of the very best years of his life. He sacrifices twelve years of his life, at a time when he is best capable of making the most money out of his profession, and of establishing a large and continuing business. That the salaries of the present Supreme Judges are too high has been asserted by members of this body, on this floor. We have fixed them at six thousand dollars. We have been paying the District Judges in the larger districts of the State six thousand dollars, as will be seen by referring to the Political Code. No complaint about these salaries has been heard from the people. I know, as far as the District Judges of San Francisco are concerned, that there is no body of men who work harder. They are earnest and laborious in the administration of justice. They work persistently, and still they are not able to keep up with the calendar. The Court calendars are all behind now, and I know there are gentlemen on the bench who have actually impaired their health by their close attention to their duties. It is an absolute fact that there is more ill-health among the Judges than among any other class of officers. There are several Judges now who are suffering from infirmities caused by too close an application to business. I do not know how it is in other districts, but I speak of San Francisco, where I am especially familiar with the business. It is bad policy, in point of economy, to place these salaries too low. They are all right now, as fixed by the report of the committee, and I think this section was intended to place them at the very lowest rate that could be considered at all reasonable.

Look at England, and the policy which there prevails. She pays high salaries, and when a man retires from office he is pensioned for life. Not that I would be in favor of imitating that policy, but I mentioned it merely to show the contrast between that system and ours. There is another thing to be considered: Judges have brought before them cases involving millions of dollars. Is it wise to put down the salaries so low that they will be subject to temptations? It is certainly very bad policy. All men are human, Judges no less so than other men, and if we cut down the salaries so low that they cannot live, they will be more likely to listen to outside influences, and be more easily tempted, than if they were rendered independent by a reasonable salary.

The amendment of the gentleman from Alameda affects San Francisco more than it does other counties. That county bears more of the expenses of the State government than any other county, in proportion to inhabitants. That consideration, however, does not affect me in the slightest degree. The question with me is, what is the best system to secure an active, honest, learned, and efficient judiciary? What is the best system for the whole State? I am for the best, and for paying a fair price for it. That is the only consideration that moves me. The people will sustain us if we act upon that principle. If we leave this to the Boards of Supervisors there will be constant applications on the part of the friends of the Judges for an increase of salary. There are many reasons why such a plan would not work well. We know by long experience that it is bad policy to change these salaries. I am sorry, but I shall have to disagree with the gentleman in this respect. The salaries fixed in the report of the committee should be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. INMAN.

MR. INMAN. Mr. Chairman: My reason for offering this amendment is in regard to the classification of the counties. I find some counties in the third class that ought to be in the second class, and some in the second class that ought to be in the third class. The reason I propose to cut down salaries is that the people demand it, because of the inability to pay. It is very nice to talk about too low salaries. I contend that five thousand dollars annually, for twelve years, is good pay. Ten years ago business was good of all kinds. The people were able to pay; but now it is different. I do say that the Board of Supervisors are the proper ones, and the proper place to fix these salaries. It will bring the matter home to the people. If you deny the proposition that the Board of Supervisors are not qualified to regulate the salaries, then you deny the principle of self-government. As a proposition, I think the Board of Supervisors should be allowed to fix the salaries of every county officer. Besides, these Superior Judges are going to take the place of the County Judges, and they become county officers, and I don't see why the Board of Supervisors are not qualified to fix their salaries. While we are adding two more Supreme Judges, if we do not cut down salaries, we will certainly add to the expenses of the judiciary. This system adds some thirty-five thousand dollars over the old system, while it is a good one. We certainly must cut down the old expensive system, otherwise we had better abandon it. That is my objection to it. I am satisfied if we shall make some reduction it will be very acceptable to the people. I deny the fact that money buys brains or honesty. A man can be just as honest on three thousand dollars a year as he can on ten thousand dollars. Money buys corruption and dishonesty. Honest men do not sell themselves. The rich man is not always honest, neither is the poor man. It is not the man who gets the highest salary. For twelve years at five thousand dollars a year would be sixty thousand dollars, and any man ought to live and make money on that. He is a fixture in the office almost. I hope that amendment will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I do not think there is any economy in a Cheap John judiciary. I have seen it tried, and if the people of this country demand anything, they demand Courts of integrity that will not yield to improper influences. That is what they demand, and they are sensible in demanding that, for the judiciary is the sheet-anchor of the Government. It is about the only set of officials of this Government that has not been corrupted and debased, and I am for keeping it in a position where it can remain pure. Now, sir, the Judges are State officers and ought to be paid by the State. To make the State pay one thousand dollars, and make the Judge dependent upon the Supervisors for the balance of his salary, would be to make him subservient to the politicians of the county. None of these salaries are fixed too high, and when it comes to the fourth class, if any gentleman moves to raise it, I shall vote for it. I remember when I was a boy that they had a practice of making the schoolmaster board round. This is about the position the Judge would be placed in if we leave it to the Board of Supervisors to fix his salary. The proposition is perfectly monstrous, and would degrade and debase this department of government, because you destroy their independence and fearlessness by making them too dependent. And the system of low salaries will prove an evil instead of a blessing. John Randolph said, on the proposition to reduce salaries in Virginia, that it was a proposition to provide Judgeships for lawyers who were incapable of making a living at the bar, and that is true. We do not want a lot of cheap lawyers on the bench, we want an independent honest judiciary. It is a thing for the benefit and protection of the people, from the highest to the lowest, and therefore it ought to be the care of the Government to place it upon a high and independent plane. My friend Caples stated the thing truly when he said the farmers do not demand a judiciary poorly paid and poorly organized. They have sense enough to know that great interests depend upon a proper judicial organization, independent and fearless Judges. I am for long terms, also, because then Judges are not always pandering to public sentiment and public opinion in their decisions. I recollect a story told of an Arkansas Judge, who, when he had an important case to decide, used to adjourn Court and go around and take a drink with the boys, to learn who the parties were and where they came from, and then he would go back and decide the case. Now, a judiciary that is dependent on the whims of the Board of Supervisors would be something in the same fix. Let us pay men what they need to live on; what their talents are worth, what they can earn in their profession, and then you will get men fit to fill these positions, and you will get your money's worth. And you will get more than that. You will get efficiency and honesty, and capacity in the very place above all others that these qualities are necessary. It is a mistake, sir, this attempt to save a few pennies in the administration of justice.

SPEECH OF MR. CASSERLY.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. Chairman: Nobody is a better friend to economy in the administration of government than I am. Generally speaking, an economical government is an honest and pure government. But, sir, there are two kinds of economy; one is the true, reasonable economy, and the other the false economy, which, for the most part, is a fraud upon the State, and sure to produce evil results. Now, sir, I am one of those who do not believe that the most important thing in the administration of justice is that it should be cheap. The real important thing is that it should be upright, sensible, conscientious, and speedy. As a mere question of economy, it would be a very serious mistake, in my opinion, for us to reduce the salaries of Judges. Every lawyer in this body, and there are a good many here, will, I think, bear me out when I say that one incompetent, idle Judge, costs the State more than five Judges who are honest and capable, as a Judge should be. Now, sir, we are attempting to cheapen the salaries of our Judges. A cheap lawyer, as everybody knows, is the dearest lawyer in the end; and so it will be if you undertake to reduce to a low standard the salaries of our Judges. No man, in his senses, goes to a poor lawyer; he employs a good lawyer, and generally he goes to the best lawyer, when the matter in hand is one of considerable importance to him. Now, sir, I put it to the common sense of every man who has had any experience in these matters, to look at his own experience and apply the same principle here. I put it to my friends on this floor, if the proposition to reduce the salaries of Judges below the figures fixed in the report of the committee, is not fraught with evil and danger? The people of California are a free-handed, liberal people; they are not a mean people; they do not demand that the public officers shall be put upon a niggardly salary. I am not hunting for cheap popularity, and if I was, I am not certain but what I am on the really popular side of the question. The kind of cheap popularity which gentlemen talk about is not permanent or lasting. I am in favor of the report of the committee; I think the salaries there fixed are none too high. In the State of New York, when the new Constitution was made, it raised the salaries of their Judges. I think the Chief Justice of the Court of Appeals, of New York, has a salary of twelve thousand five hundred dollars a year, and New York, as we all know, is by no means as dear a place to live in as this. The term is extended to fourteen years, and I believe there has been no complaint about the increased salary or the extended term. Now, let us adhere to the proposition of the Judiciary Committee; let us give our Judges enough to live upon. Doubtless there are plenty of lawyers in this State who would be glad to take these positions at these reduced salaries, but we are not anxious to have any such men on the bench.

SPEECH OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I believe the question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman. I agree fully with the statement of the gentleman, that we should make these salaries fair and reasonable, in order to be able to secure good men to fill these positions; and that is one of the reasons why I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco. The facts have been, sir, that while the people of California have been a grand and enlightened people, while they are a liberal people, as the gentleman says, they have been one of the most afflicted people on the face of the earth. Their ideas have not kept pace with the altered condition of affairs. The days of forty-nine have passed, but the ideas of forty-nine still remain, to a great extent. And the time has come when we must come down from these exalted ideas to a fundamental basis. We can no longer maintain the style of forty-nine, because we have not the means to do it. Everything else has come down, and salaries must come down too. Now, sir, it is a fact that must be apparent, that official salaries in California have been placed at such rates as to engender corruption. Aspirants to these positions have spent thousands of dollars to secure nomination and election. Why have they done so? Because the profits and emoluments of the office enable them to do so. And, in my opinion, the more you increase these salaries beyond a fair and just compensation, the more you will encourage corruption and scheming. Sir, I do not believe that brains and capacity are as scarce as some gentlemen would have us believe. Nor do I believe that by raising the salaries you will secure the best men to fill these offices. Honesty is not for sale to the highest bidder by any means. History shows that the very best men our country has afforded commenced their official career on low salaries. Some of the brightest ornaments on the United States benches to-day are men who commenced on a salary of one thousand eight hundred dollars a year, as Circuit Judges, and they were very well satisfied too. Now, we are not asking our Judges to come down to any such low figures; we are offering them fair and reasonable salaries, even liberal salaries. We offer the Supreme Justices five thousand dollars a year, for a term of twelve years, which would be sixty thousand dollars for the term. If that is not a munificent salary, I would like to know the reason. Now, I believe it is an axiom that Judges hardly ever die and never resign. We have been admonished here that the Judges overwork themselves and destroy their health. I believe that Judges are the longest lived people in the country, and I am glad of it. But I say there is no foundation for any such sympathy as this which is sought to be manufactured for them. I believe, under all the circumstances, that a salary of five thousand dollars is ample for the Supreme Justices. I believe it is a much greater income than our best lawyers can earn in the same length of time in their profession.

REMARKS OF MR. STUART.

MR. STUART. Mr. Chairman: I do not know as I can throw any light upon this question. If there is any set of men in the State who ought to be in favor of a well paid judiciary, it is the farmers. There are very few farmers who have not, some time or other, been involved in tedious and expensive lawsuits, and there is not a farmer who has had any experience but what has seen the trouble and expense which has to be encountered when there is an ignorant or incompetent Judge on the bench, or a corrupt one. The people who own the land are directly interested in this question, and the matter of expense in obtaining the right kind of men ought not to be considered at all in dealing with this question. I think the committee have fixed these salaries at the right figure, and as a farmer I am in favor of that report.

REMARKS OF MR. HALL.

MR. HALL. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the report of the committee, so far as the salaries of the Supreme Judges are concerned, for all the reasons that have been submitted to the Convention so fully and forcibly. I think that a salary of six thousand dollars per annum is certainly little enough. If we had no other or further reasons than that the State receives an equivalent in the services rendered, we might fall back upon the calendar which I hold in my hand, showing over three hundred cases for one term. Now, this Court is required to hold six terms a year, and the labor is simply enormous, and it is astonishing to me that they can get through with as much of it as they do. So much for the salaries of the Judges of the Supreme Court.

I do not think the salaries, as fixed in section seventeen, for Superior Judges, are too high. I hope it will be retained as it now stands. The Legislature is still left with power to make a change in that respect, according to the correction made by the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and if it shall be found that the salaries are too great, the Legislature may proceed to reduce them. I have but this to complain of: that in so far as the County of San Joaquin is concerned, the salary is not, as I had occasion to say, proportionate to the services required in that county. I have already read a report of the general business of that county, and I am satisfied that the Superior Court will have to be employed at least three hundred days, out of the three hundred and sixty-five, in order to dispatch the business of that county. The salary of the Judge, therefore, will fall under the standard of salaries established throughout this section. Take the standard of other counties and other classes, and the salary of San Joaquin is too small. It is this point of injustice of which I complain. Now, this section provides that the salaries shall be paid out of the State treasury. Now, take the County of San Bernardino, which has a Judge with a salary of four thousand dollars. The County of San Bernardino, in respect to population, wealth, and amount of business, has perhaps three hundred or four hundred per cent. less than the County of San Joaquin. Taking the salary provided for the County of San Bernardino as a standard, and the salary of the Judge of San Joaquin County ought to be twenty thousand dollars, or twenty-five thousand dollars, instead of five thousand dollars, as fixed in the section under consideration. Now, the result is this: that we are only allowed one Judge, while the County of San Bernardino is entitled to one Judge with a salary almost as large. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, in respect to that portion which provides for the payment of the Superior Judges by the several counties. But it does not go far enough. To that part which provides that the Board of Supervisors shall fix the amount of these salaries I do not object. I am in favor of paying these salaries entirely out of the county treasury. I hold that it is unjust to establish salaries in the Constitution for these officers—county officers, as they are—while to some counties are denied the number of Judges to which they are entitled according to the standard of wealth and population. For that reason I would like to see an amendment adopted which would provide that the Judges of the Supreme Court and of the Superior Courts shall severally, at stated periods during their continuance in office, receive a compensation, which shall not be increased nor diminished during their continuance in office; and the Supreme Court Justices shall be paid out of the State treasury, and the Judges of the Superior Courts out of their respective county treasuries.

SPEECH OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I believe in a case which requires culture and skill, that which is best is cheapest. I agree in the general remarks which have been made to that effect. There is no prudent man who would go in search of the cheapest lawyer; so no prudent people will search for the cheapest Judges. I am therefore in favor of a fair and reasonable compensation for the judiciary. At the same time I admit the whole force of the argument that at the time the salary of Supreme Justices was fixed at six thousand dollars, that amount of money had no more producing power than five thousand would have now. I believe the action on the pending amendment will determine whether we are to get through with this report, or whether we are to be involved in a controversy which will last considerable time, the result of which may not be at all satisfactory. A great many suggestions will be made as to raising salaries and lowering salaries, and this same question of increasing the number of Judges in certain counties will come in. I understand that the question is now in this shape: I would like to ask the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee if that provision will affect the fixing of these salaries for the first term. This section provides that the salaries fixed shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected.

MR. WILSON. No man's salary can be increased during his term of office.

MR. MCCALLUM. Then the Legislature would have no power in the matter until the first term has expired, so they must stand until the terms shall have expired—six years for the Superior Court Judges, and twelve years for the Justices of the Supreme Court, except those who draw the short term. Now, sir, I contend that the amendment offered by my colleague is a solution of the whole matter. There is precedent for it in several of the States. I find in Georgia that the same system prevails—the Judges are paid by districts. The same is true in the State of New York, where the Judges are paid by cities. In the State of Nevada the Judges are paid by the districts by which they are elected. So we have abundant precedent for the amendment proposed by my colleague.

MR. WILSON, of First District. How many States have that system?

MR. MCCALLUM. I cannot state exactly. In glancing over the Constitutions I find the States which I have mentioned have that system, and I presume others have it which I have not noticed. I cited these States merely to show that there is precedent for a provision of this kind, not for the purpose of showing how much they are paid. Now, it is to be remembered that these Superior Court Judges take the place of the County Judges as well as the District Judges. The County Judges have always been paid by the counties, and that is an argument in favor of paying these substitutes by the counties also. [illegible] very good feature is this: that it will do away with the disputes w[illegible]n place here in regard to the number of Judges a county [illegible] plausible arguments were made in favor of Santa Clara [illegible] Joaquin Counties. Now, I think those counties shou[illegible]ges as they are willing to pay for. Let them have their own way in their local affairs. We have heard so much about local self-government; why not apply the principle here? Why not provide that they shall have as many as the business of the county demands? The principle of the amendment proposed by my colleague is the correct one. Perhaps it may not be adopted. Perhaps it can be improved upon, but it is the true theory, that the counties shall pay the Superior Court Judges. It will be an additional argument why such little counties as Alpine should combine with other counties and elect one Judge.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCONNELL.

MR. MCCONNELL. Mr. Chairman: I have taken pains to see what salaries are paid in some of the other States. I find that the Chief Justice in the State of Delaware receives one thousand two hundred dollars; Associate Justices, one thousand dollars. In Florida the Chief Justice receives four thousand five hundred dollars; Associate Justices, three thousand dollars; the Circuit Court Judges, three thousand five hundred dollars. In Illinois, the Supreme Court Justices receive four thousand dollars; Circuit Court Judges, three thousand dollars. In Iowa the Supreme Court Justice receives two thousand dollars; the District Judges, one thousand six hundred. In Kansas, one thousand five hundred dollars. In Maryland, Chief Justices, three thousand five hundred dollars; Judges of the Circuit Court, two thousand eight hundred dollars. In Michigan, Judge of the Circuit Court, one thousand dollars. In Nebraska, two thousand dollars; Oregon, two thousand dollars. In Texas, the Chief Justice gets four thousand five hundred dollars; Associate Judges, three thousand five hundred dollars. I find, also, that in the State of West Virginia, the Chief Justice gets two thousand dollars; the Circuit Judges, one thousand eight hundred dollars. In the State of Wisconsin, the Chief Justice gets one thousand five hundred dollars. I know, that many years ago, the Virginia Supreme Judge got one thousand two hundred dollars, and we all know what kind of material they had on the bench there. I have no doubt but there are lawyers in this State who can make more money at the bar than they could in these positions. The salary would be no inducement, of course, to such gentlemen as Judge Shafter and Judge Belcher. My friend from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, who can make fifty thousand dollars a year in his profession, of course could not afford to accept such a position as that at the rates proposed in this report. But there are hundreds of lawyers in San Francisco who are glad to work for fifty dollars a week in a lawyer's office.

MR. WILSON. I can find you plenty of men who will take the positions for nothing.

MR. MCCALLUM. I don't want that kind of men. It is a notorious fact, that these offices, like all offices in the State, he who is the best worker gets it. There are plenty of men who would retire from practice. It is a fact, that five thousand dollars will purchase more now than ten thousand dollars would twenty years ago. Now, I want to see these officers fairly and reasonably paid, but I think that five thousand is enough. I hope the amendment will prevail. In case that does not, then I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I wish merely to express my opinion, and say that I am in favor of the report of the committee, and opposed to the amendments. The idea expressed by the gentleman from Alameda, that men will retire from business for the purpose of taking positions on the Supreme Bench; that men who desire to retire from active business and active life, will take these positions upon the bench, either in the Supreme Court, or in the Superior Courts of San Francisco, is one that I am not able to comprehend. Such an argument as that is fallacious, and for one I do not comprehend the force of it. It is an attempt to induce this Convention to place these salaries below what would be a fair figure. Now, sir, we do not employ professional men for the labor performed, but for the effect produced. We do not employ distinguished lawyers, as architects, as civil engineers, or mechanics of the higher grade, for the amount of labor they do, but for the effect they produce. If you are taken sick, and your body is racked with pain, you send for a good physician. He examines your case, writes a prescription, you send it to the drug store, have it filled, and take the medicine, and you are cured. It cost the physician perhaps thirty minutes to come and prescribe for your disease, and he charges you twenty-five or fifty dollars. Is that for labor performed? No, sir, it is for the effect produced. It saved your life; perhaps saved your health and your active capacity for labor for many years. So with the lawyer; so with the architect; so it ought to be in selecting Judges. We ought to have the highest ability in the State, and in order to get it we must expect to pay for it. The standard must not be the absolute amount of work performed, but the effect produced. We must take into consideration what it cost the man in time and labor to produce that effect. If we undertake to fix the salaries of Judges on the basis of actual routine labor performed, we will make a very great mistake, and one which will result disastrously to the people themselves. You will not get the best men, and if you do not, then you will have a failure in the administration of justice. It is true, that in the State of Oregon the salaries of all the officers were cut down. I happened to live in the State when the Constitution was adopted. It is true, that the salary of the Chief Justice was cut down to two thousand dollars; the salary of the Secretary of State was cut down to fifteen hundred dollars: and so on, through the list of State officers. That was done in obedience to a kind of economical insanity which was abroad in the community. They have had enough of it since, and have gradually worked their way back to r[illegible]cent salaries for their State officers. And so it will be found [illegible] his State. If you undertake to cut down the salaries bel[illegible] it will be found to work badly, and the people will soon have cause to regret it. It seems to me that all the argument that is necessary to secure the adoption of this report, has already been set forth, and I will not consume any more of the time of the Convention in arguing the matter.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again. The hour having arrived, the Convention will take a recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called, and quorum present.

SALARIES OF JUDGES.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the article on Judiciary and Judicial Department.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section seventeen, with the amendments, is before the committee.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I have listened patiently to this discussion. This question is one that has been discussed from the inception of the Government down to the present time. There is no doubt but the purchasing price of money has been constantly decreasing, from the beginning of the Government down to this time. It is vastly less now than it was at the time these illustrations were given. It is more now, in this State, than it was twenty years ago, however. I recollect when the Governor of Virginia got four hundred dollars; the Secretary of State, two hundred and seventy-five dollars—it was all he earned; the Judge of the Supreme Court got one thousand dollars. You could get board for one dollar and a half a week, in first class hotels—that is all I paid in the New York House. In Wisconsin the salary was reduced so low that Judge Jackson was compelled to resign because he could not live on his salary; he could not support his family, so he resigned, and went to practicing law again. At that time you could buy wood for one dollar a cord; you could buy fresh eggs for six cents a dozen; corn was cheap, and good whisky eighteen cents a gallon; and yet this man was not able to support his family on the salary. Now, all these things are changed, and money has no such purchasing power. If there is any place in the world where we must have efficient men it is in the judicial department. If you cut the salaries down, as you propose to do by this amendment, the people will suffer by it. Such a reduction as this will cost the State ten thousand dollars, where it costs one thousand now. The learned, able, and efficient Judge will decide his cases promptly, and no time will be lost; on the other hand, your cheap Judge will take a long time to decide a case, and the result will be that the people will suffer by it. I hope that this Convention will adopt the report of the committee. We have wasted enough time, and in order to get a vote, and avoid any further discussion, I move the previous question.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

Seconded by Messrs. Howard, West, Ayers, and Evey.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman.

MR. EVEY. Mr. Chairman: I call for a division of the question.

THE CHAIRMAN. Division of the question is called for, and the first question will be on reducing the salary of the Supreme Court Justices from six thousand dollars to five thousand dollars.

The amendment was lost, by a vote of 33 ayes to 59 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on striking out five thousand dollars, and inserting four thousand dollars.

Lost, on division, by a vote of 32 ayes to 59 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on striking out the words four thousand dollars in the fourteenth line, and inserting the words three thousand five hundred dollars.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on striking out the words three thousand dollars, and inserting the words two thousand five hundred dollars.

Lost—ayes 18.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Inman.

Lost.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to section seventeen.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section seventeen as follows: Strike out the word 'Kern,' and insert the words 'San Diego,' and strike out the words 'San Diego,' and insert the word 'Kern' in place thereof."

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: In looking over the classification of the counties as presented by the report of the committee, I notice that there are many inequalities, and among them one which I desire to correct by this amendment. Now, sir, it is stated by the committee that the basis upon which this classification was made was the population of the several counties, as shown by the vote of eighteen hundred and seventy-six. Of course, it would not be fair in making an adjustment to go back to the census of eighteen hundred and seventy when we have any other statistics, because so many counties have changed materially since that time, and the amount of business to be done in the Courts could not be determined by the census. Now, sir, if population was made the basis, I submit that it is but fair to take the very latest statistics that can be obtained. Whether that can be obtained by the vote of eighteen hundred and seventy-six, or by something else, does not matter. But certainly any one acquainted with the Counties of San Diego and Kern, must admit that the population of San Diego County is in excess of that of Kern County; and so on that ground I can see no possible reason why this exception should have been made in regard to the two counties. It certainly works an injustice to San Diego County, which county I have the honor to represent, and I can see no necessity for placing Kern County in a class where it does not belong. Now, according to the statistics of eighteen hundred and seventy-seven, the population of Kern County was set down at nine thousand, while the population of San Diego County is set down at twelve thousand. I have every reason to believe that these figures in the Statistician in regard to San Diego County are correct, or very nearly so. About a year and a half ago we took some pains to ascertain what the population of the county was, and it was the opinion of the very best judges that it was not less than twelve thousand at that time. Now, I cannot see why Kern County, with a population of seven thousand, should be put in ahead of my county, which has a population of twelve thousand. I do not believe it is just. If the classification had been made strictly according to population, I would not have said a word; but this is a great injustice upon the face of it, and it is my duty to make an effort to correct it, and get my county in the place where it belongs. I do not see how there can be any defense made to such an act of injustice as this is.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

"Strike out 'San Diego' in the third class, and place the words 'San Diego' in the second class."

MR. AYERS. I offer that in that shape for the reason that I do not know what might have been the reasons which induced the committee to place Kern County in that list, and I wish merely to place San Diego in the list of second class counties instead of the third.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I am convinced that the committee had some just reason for doing as they did do. The amount of business of Kern County, and also the vote of eighteen hundred and seventy-six, were no doubt taken into consideration. These things were taken together as the basis for the action which the committee took. They thought it sufficient to justify them in the action they took in the matter. And I think they were, too. And when the committee have investigated the matter and come to a conclusion, I do not propose to undo what they have done without some good reason for so doing. I will leave the matter for the gentleman from Kern to explain.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I must admit I am a little surprised at the gentleman from San Diego. It seems to me the amount of litigation is based more upon property than upon the amount of population in a county. Now, by the statistics of eighteen hundred and seventy-seven I find that the taxable property of Kern County is over five million dollars, while that of San Diego is about four millions. I did not hear all that the gentleman said upon the subject, but if he referred to the vote of the two counties, I think I can make it very plain that the vote of Kern is more than that of San Diego.

MR. REDDY. You think it ought to depend upon the amount of property the people have as to whether they shall have justice properly administered or not.

MR. SMITH. I think it depends more on property than upon population. Now, the vote of eighteen hundred and seventy-six shows San Diego to have sixty-two votes more than Kern. But it was estimated that there were fully two thousand men, sheep and cattle owners, herders, who could not get to the polls to vote at that particular time. They had their flocks and herds out in the mountains, and could not get home. The vote of that year was less than usual. The Great Register showed about twelve thousand five hundred voters at that time. Aside from this consideration there are others. In fact, there is no county in the State, outside of the very largest counties, that have as important and as much litigation as Kern County. At the last term of the Supreme Court there were only three cases less from that county than from the County of Sacramento. San Diego had seven cases; and if the records could be looked into it would be found that the cases coming from Kern are above the average in importance and the amount involved, of any cases in the State. Forty thousand and one hundred thousand acres of land is a large case. A majority of the cases in Kern are large. There are attorneys both from San Francisco and Sacramento who will bear me out in this statement. I have nothing to say against San Diego County. I have not gone as far as the gentleman has, for I have not attacked his county.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I am unable to see the force of the gentleman's argument, that we should grade justice in accordance with wealth. The people of San Diego may be poor, but honest. [Laughter.] The people of Kern may be wealthy, but no more honest. The people of San Diego may be poor, and yet their individual rights, as applied to the individual, are just as sacred to them as though they were millionaires. Justice, I say, ought to be brought home to the door of every man, regardless of his wealth. There may be large cases, cases involving millions of dollars in some counties, and there might be other cases only involving hundreds of dollars, and the points of law involved might be just as intricate, and the rights of the parties just as sacred in the one as in the other. It is just as important to me, though I live in an humble cottage, if I am dispossessed from my cottage and turned into the street, as it is to the millionaire to be turned out of his palace. It is just as important that I should have the right of appeal to the proper Court, as it is that the millionaire should have the right. Now, I say, that the true basis is population. Of course, so far as actual figures are concerned, we have only the census of eighteen hundred and seventy to go back to. If we take the vote of the last election, we shall find by the election returns that Kern County did not have near so large a vote as San Diego.

MR. SMITH. Only sixty-two difference.

MR. ROLFE. The official returns shows one thousand five hundred and five in San Diego County, while Kern County had only one thousand two hundred and fourteen votes—three hundred difference. Now, these voters in Kern may have been off taking care of their flocks and herds. I do not know but they may have been away from home in some other counties. We all know that in these mountain counties there are more or less voters who do not get to the polls to vote. Now, I see by the report of the Clerk of the Supreme Court, that in the last four years, Kern County has had a greater number of cases in the Supreme Court than San Diego. But that is not a proper criterion. In the next four years San Diego may have four times as many as Kern. I know, from my own personal knowledge, that during the four years previous to eighteen hundred and seventy-four, the number of cases that went to the Supreme Court was far in excess of the number that went up in the subsequent four years. Who knows, but in the next four years, it may be largely the other way, and some other county, which figures low in this list, may figure very high? Why, one wealthy man—and the gentleman says they have a good many wealthy men in Kern—one wealthy man, who owns half the county, may find it necessary to institute fifty suits, and half of them may go to the Supreme Court in one year. That may be the case in any of these counties where they have wealthy men. Therefore, while I have no prejudice against the County of Kern, while I would do it no injustice, I say, that to take San Diego, and place it in a class below that in which Kern is placed, is a discrimination which is not justified by reason or common sense. Therefore I shall vote for the amendment.

MR. BLACKMER. I desire to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say one word. I have been in the habit of attending Court in San Diego County, and I know that it is a very important Court. The present District Judge of that county and San Bernardino is a very fair young lawyer, of honesty and integrity, and very industrious, and probably under the new system would be retained. I am not in favor of driving him off the bench, by cutting the salary down below living rates. I hope the amendment will prevail.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: As this is a local question, and as the delegates from these counties have had their say, I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Ayers, Howard, Stuart, and Moreland.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers.

The vote resulted, on division, in 54 ayes to 17 noes. No quorum voting.

The question was put again, and on division being called for, the amendment was adopted, by a vote of 61 ayes to 21 noes.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

"Insert after the words 'San Bernardino,' in line thirteen, the words 'Inyo and Mono.'"

REMARKS OF MR. REDDY.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: The object of this amendment is to place these two counties in the list of second class counties. The character of the litigation in both of these counties is as important as any in the State. I do not see why Inyo and Mono should not be entitled to four thousand dollars as well as San Francisco, or any other county in the State. A Judge who is not worth four thousand dollars a year is not worth much of anything. It is also well known that in the mining counties there is to-day as much litigation pending, and of as much importance, as in any of the counties of the State. The interests involved are simply immense. Some of the richest mines in the State are involved. Now, we don't want cheap Judges to decide these cases. The people demand that men learned in the law shall decide these questions, and I don't see why a Judge in San Francisco should be paid five thousand dollars a year, while the Judges of Inyo and Mono are paid so much less for deciding the most important litigation in the State; where living is more expensive, where the duties are more arduous. Taking the criminal business, the probate business, and all together, and there is enough to keep the Judge busy all the time. There is no economy in having inexperienced and incompetent Judges. It delays business, piles up work on the Supreme Court, and harasses and annoys litigants, besides putting them to a great deal of unnecessary expense. That has been shown repeatedly by gentlemen in their arguments here, and it is not worth while for me to repeat all of the reasons. Therefore, I ask as a matter of justice that these counties be placed where they belong.

MR. TINNIN. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the section by inserting after the word 'Tehama,' the word 'Trinity.'"

MR. TINNIN. We have a county one hundred miles long, and there is a great deal of litigation there. Therefore I ask that this amendment be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: If we desire to have any classification at all, we must adhere to the system as offered by the committee. Inyo and Mono are in the fourth class, and to take them out of the fourth class and place them in the second class I don't think would be doing justice.

MR. REDDY. Allow me. Would it be right if Inyo and Mono suffer by reason of the report of the committee, to adopt that report, and deprive them of what they are entitled to?

MR. BEERSTECHER. I don't know that they are entitled to it. It has not been shown that they are entitled to it.

MR. REDDY. I am satisfied that it has not been shown to you, and I am satisfied you don't know anything about it.

MR. BEERSTECHER. How much does your County Judge get?

MR. REDDY. The County Judge gets fifteen hundred dollars a year. In Mono County I think he gets five hundred dollars.

MR. BEERSTECHER. And you desire to take from him five hundred and give him four thousand dollars.

MR. REDDY. We have a District Judge who receives a salary of five thousand dollars per annum.

MR. BEERSTECHER. How many terms does he hold?

MR. REDDY. Two terms a year, because he cannot hold any more and get around.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Inyo had seven hundred and eighteen votes in eighteen hundred and seventy-six, and Mono one hundred and seventy-eight votes.

MR. REDDY. The population of Mono County now is about ten thousand. Where there were hundreds on the assessment roll then there are thousands now.

MR. BEERSTECHER. The matter as it presents itself to my mind is whether we are to have any classification of Judges or not. If this committee desire not to have any classification, well and good. It makes no difference to me. But if we expect to have any classification of Judges, it must necessarily be by districts, and certainly every county cannot be in class number one, nor in class number two, nor in number three, or number four. There must be some counties in the fourth classification, and if we are going to have any at all, I think it would be proper to adhere to the classification made in the report of the committee, and let that stand until the Legislature sees fit to change it. I would have no objections to giving the gentleman's counties a Judge with a salary of four or five thousand a year, but it will destroy all such thing as classification, and other small counties will have just as much right to come in for high priced Judges as Inyo and Mono. Other gentlemen on this floor can come in and make the same demand, and urge the same reasons, with just as much justice.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I think time enough has been spent, and I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Ayers, Evey, Larkin, and Murphy.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Inyo.

Division was called for, the committee divided, and the vote stood: ayes, 34; noes, 37; no quorum voting.

The question was put again, and the amendment was adopted, by a vote of 44 ayes to 37 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin.

Division was called for, and the amendment rejected, by a vote of 35 ayes to 48 noes.

MR. MURPHY. I move an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'quarterly,' in line fifteen, and insert, 'and those of all other counties not enumerated above, shall constitute the third class, and shall receive an annual salary of three thousand dollars each, payable quarterly.'"

MR. MURPHY. This strikes out the fourth class altogether, and makes all the others in the third class, with a salary of three thousand dollars.

MR. REYNOLDS. I offer an amendment to the amendment.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

THE SECRETARY read the amendment to the amendment:

"Add, after the word 'Sonoma,' in line nine, 'and all the Justices of the Peace in this State.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. It is out of order.

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to equalize the whole thing.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the words 'dollars each,' in the seventh line, and insert the following: 'The Superior Court Judges shall receive an annual salary of three thousand five hundred dollars each, payable quarterly, except the Judges of the City and County of San Francisco, and the Counties of Alameda, San Joaquin, Los Angeles, Santa Clara, Sacramento, and Sonoma, who shall receive four thousand five hundred dollars each.'"

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Ayers, Reddy, Howard, and Stuart.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Del Norte, Mr. Murphy.

Lost by a vote of 39 ayes to 43 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tuolumne, Mr. Walker.

Division was called for, and the vote stood 33 ayes to 30 noes.

No quorum voting.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I move the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost on a standing vote—ayes, 33; noes, 57.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tuolumne, Mr. Walker.

Division was called for, and the amendment adopted, by a vote of 44 ayes to 42 noes.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I move an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add, after the word 'each,' in line seven, 'until otherwise ordered by the Legislature.'"

MR. WILSON, of First District. This amendment just adopted fixes the salaries permanently, and for all time, when they should in fact be flexible.

MR. AYERS. Would not this be understood to apply only to the Judges first elected?

MR. WILSON. No, sir; the Legislature could not change it.

MR. McCALLUM. I propose to offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out, in line three, the words, 'from the State treasury,' and add, after the word 'elected,' in line five, the following: 'The salaries of the Justices of the Supreme Court shall be paid by the State; the salaries of the Judges of the Superior Courts shall be paid by the counties for which they shall be respectively elected.'"

REMARKS OF MR. McCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: That proposition——

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I rise to a question of order. That proposition has been made and voted down.

MR. McCALLUM. That proposition has not been voted down. The proposition that was voted down was that of Mr. Inman, and was this: that the State should pay the salaries of the Superior Court Judges to the extent of one thousand dollars each, and that the Supervisors of the different counties should fix the salaries as to the balance; and also that the different counties should pay these salaries. Therefore, that proposition involved two features that are not involved here, namely: that the Supervisors should fix the salaries, and that the State should pay one thousand dollars toward each salary. I have presented the proposition plain and distinct and simple, that the different counties shall pay the salaries of the Superior Court Judges. That is entirely a different proposition, upon which I hope to have a full vote. We have now provided that three thousand five hundred dollars shall be the salary in all cases except those counties enumerated. Upon computation, it will be found that we have increased the expenses above the system reported by the Judiciary Committee, and above the present cost, about one hundred thousand dollars. A gentleman made a computation here yesterday, and found that the report of the committee increased the expenses about forty-four thousand dollars. Now, sir, we have increased it about one hundred thousand dollars. I propose that if this matter is to go before the people, that we shall know—that there shall be some special responsibility of those persons—who shall be mainly responsible as to their particular counties. I am aware that we cannot evade our responsibility by throwing the responsibility upon the local delegations, but I do think that is where the responsibility belongs. County Judges have heretofore been paid by the counties, and the Superior Judges take their places, and why should not both be paid by the counties? If any gentlemen then desire to increase their Judges, or increase their salaries, let them speak for their own constituents, and not for the State at large. As it is now, people will cry out against the extravagances, and it will be the means of making many votes against the Constitution.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. The fallacy of the gentleman's argument consists in this: he don't avoid the increase, if there is any, by putting it upon the counties instead of the State. What is the difference in point of principle? If it is too much for the State to pay, it is too much for the counties to pay.

MR. McCALLUM. My object is this: that if you leave it for the counties to pay, the gentlemen will not demand the same class of salaries that they do when it comes out of the State treasury.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. You might with the same justice, and the same reason, require the counties to pay their members of the Legislature as to require them to pay their Judges. I hope the amendment will not be tolerated.

REMARKS OF MR. EAGON.

MR. EAGON. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will be promptly voted down, for the reason that these are State Courts as much as the Districts Courts were. All of the business of the State is done in these Courts. The prosecutions of criminal offenses are made in the name of the people of the State, and the State should therefore pay the salaries of the Judges. I oppose the amendment for another reason. It is well known that a very large number of counties pay in scrip, and this scrip is sometimes worth as low as forty-five cents on the dollar. That would reduce the salaries of some of these Judges below a living rate. That is the case in many of the counties, particularly the mining counties. Our property has depreciated in value, and some of the counties are deeply in debt, and for some time to come salaries will have to be paid in county scrip, and the result will be that the Judges in these counties will not have an equal show with other Judges of the State. I think these salaries should all be paid by the State. They are State Courts; all the State business is transacted in these Courts.

MR. SMITH, of Kern. I think we can do more satisfactory work Monday morning, and I therefore move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried—ayes, 44; noes, 22.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. EVEY. I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at three o'clock and thirty minutes P. M., the Convention stood adjourned until Monday morning, at nine o'clock and thirty minutes.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Monday, January 13th, 1879.

The Convention met pursuant to adjournment, at nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M., being called to order by Assistant Secretary Thornton, in the absence of the President, President pro tem., and Secretary.

MR. THORNTON. Gentlemen: The first business in order is the selection of a Chairman.

MR. HUESTIS. I nominate Mr. Tinnin.

Mr. Tinnin was elected unanimously.

The roll was called, and members found in attendance as follows:

Hall,	O'Sullivan,	Mr. President.
Heiskell,

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted for one day to Mr. Larue; for two days, to Messrs. Chapman, Prouty, and Herold; for three days, to Messrs. Lewis and Wilson, of Tehama; and four days, to Mr. Heiskell; and for one week, to Mr. Townsend.

THE JOURNAL.

MR. McCOMAS. I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, and the same approved.

So ordered.

SALARIES OF JUDGES.

MR. WILSON. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Tinnin in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Judiciary Committee.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question before the Convention is the amendments offered by the gentleman, Mr. Wilson, and the gentleman, Mr. McCallum.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, and I am opposed to the amendment offered by Mr. McCallum. Now, the Judge has to devote all his time to the duties of his office, whether the business be large or small. He cannot attend to any other business. It is well known that under the old system the County Judges could do considerable business, besides attending to the duties of the office. They could practice law in the other Courts. But the Superior Judge is the only Judge in the county, and is debarred, necessarily, from practicing law at all, because any case he undertook to engage in must come before his own Court. I do not think it is right for the people of a small county to be compelled to pay the salary of the Superior Judge, when so much of the time of that Judge is occupied in attending to the business of the State. He has to deal with cases in which people from all parts of the State are engaged. You have all seen many such cases. You will find many lawsuits which involve the rights of parties living in distant parts of the State. A great deal of business is brought in the Courts of San Francisco which does not properly belong there, and a great many citizens of San Francisco have litigation in the various counties of the State. All of which goes to show that these Courts are State Courts, having jurisdiction all over the State, and having power to decide cases of litigants who reside in different parts of the State, and therefore the Judges should be paid by the State. I do not understand that any of the large counties have objected to it. I think San Francisco ought to be willing to have them paid out of the State treasury.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman: We have adopted, in the legislative department, a prohibition against all special legislation upon the salaries of State officers. Now, supposing when the Legislature meets they want to change the salary of the Superior Judge of Inyo County. Here is a prohibition which you have already adopted against fixing that salary. How is it ever to be changed. Certainly not without a special law upon the subject.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say one word in regard to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum. It seems to me the very worst policy in the world to require the counties to pay the salaries of these State officers—for they are State officers in reality. To throw this upon the counties is a burden they ought not to be compelled to bear. It may be disproportionate to the larger counties, as is the case with my own county, but they ought not to object in the interest of the whole State. The onus will be very little upon the larger counties, and it will assist many of the interior counties to carry on their county organizations until they shall be filled up by population. There would be perpetual applications to the Legislature to reduce salaries. It seems to me that the matter is one that properly belongs to the State, and that these salaries ought to be paid by the State.

MR. STEELE. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not prevail. It is unjust to these four or five little counties. People who go off into pioneer homes are doing a great deal in developing the resources of the State, and they are entitled to some consideration at the hands of the State. It is very unjust to compel them to pay for these Judges. I think the people of the State can well afford to pay these salaries out of the State treasury, and it is only justice to these counties.

REMARKS OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: As an additional reason why I think the amendment should not prevail, I think the Superior Judges should receive their salaries as the present District Judges receive theirs—out of the State treasury. When paid by the counties, the salaries will have to be fixed by the Board of Supervisors, and they are just as likely as any individual to engage in litigation. It may be necessary for some individual to prosecute the Board, in relation to the action of the Board, and if the salary of the Judge is to depend upon the action of these Supervisors, he will be placed in a very unpleasant situation when such cases come to be tried before him, to say the least of it. He will have to sit and adjudicate upon the interests of his friends and patrons. It is no more proper that this should be the case, than it is in regard to individuals: and if this Board is to stand as his friend and patron, directly or indirectly, in the matter of his salary, then it is equally proper that individuals of the community should contribute towards his salary, and that he should know that certain persons are especially friendly and have aided in his support. I have known one such instance in the case of a Justice of the Peace, and I cannot say that it worked well. I discovered an instance in which a Justice of the Peace, in addition to his fees, received a little subscription made up by about eight of the chief citizens of the place. They subscribed, I think, two or three dollars a month each, to be paid monthly. That was done as an inducement for him to run for the office. The same thing might be done in respect to Superior Judges. It is true his salary cannot be increased or diminished during the term for which he is elected, but it is generally known who will hold the office during the next term. It is generally understood that the incumbent will stand for reëlection. I think it would be wrong to hold out any such inducements.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: If these salaries are to be paid by the State, there will be constant applications to the Legislature of this State to change salaries, where they were two thousand dollars and three thousand dollars, to be placed in the higher class. This conflict occurred here the other day, when applications were made to change. That conflict will always occur in the Legislature unless a uniform salary is fixed in the Constitution for the Judges of the State. To avoid that ending in the legislative halls, to avoid these importunities by the Judges and their friends, it will, in my humble opinion, be necessary to fix a uniform scale of salaries, to be paid by the counties. I believe it is better. I believe that system will suit the people better. If you put them at three thousand five hundred dollars, let them all be the same, then there will be no conflict in the Legislature to change the grade of these salaries. If it is desired to let the State pay two thousand dollars, then let the balance be paid by the counties. It may be determined six months in advance of the Judge's election by the Board of Supervisors, or by the Legislature, and the law providing that it shall not be changed during the term for which he is elected, it will not be possible to tinker with his pay by the Supervisors. I believe that this policy should be pursued in order to avoid the contests that will occur and have occurred; though the old Constitution prohibited the changing of salaries, the Judges would go to the Legislature nearly every session of the Legislature, and ask for a change in their salaries.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson.

Adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman, Mr. McCallum.

MR. WHITE. I am opposed to the counties paying it, because it is a great deal more than these small counties ought to be compelled to pay. It is wrong to force any county to pay its Judge three thousand five hundred dollars. I trust this amendment to make the county pay will not be adopted.

MR. McCALLUM. Suppose the delegations here find that these counties have to pay these salaries, do you think they will ask for them to be put so high.

MR. WHITE. No, sir. We want the State to pay if it is to be three thousand five hundred dollars. We don't want any such salary for our county.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I look upon these Judges as entirely State officers. The law requires, and the Constitution provides, that they may hold Court in any county in the State, under certain directions. It is a fundamental principle that every Judge deciding upon a case shall be entirely impartial; have no interest whatever in the case. Now, some of the counties in this State, as has been said here, are quite low in funds. They are almost bankrupt. Now, the rate of pay of the Judges would depend in some measure upon the financial condition of the county. In some of these counties, if the Judge should receive his pay from the county treasury, he would only get fifty cents on the dollar for his warrants. Now, in a great many instances cases come up involving the legality of certain taxes. In a case of that kind, the Judge would have a personal inducement to decide in favor of the legality of the tax, because it would have a bearing one way or another on the value of county warrants. This is one of the cases in which the Judge would not be entirely impartial. I don't say there is any Judge who would be biased in this way, but it is one of the fundamental principles that he should not be. Human nature is weak, at best, and I think this is a decided reason why this money should not be paid out of the county treasury. They are State officers, and take the place of the District Judges, who have always been considered State officers, and they should be paid by the State.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: Before a vote is taken on this amendment, I wish to say that my idea in offering it was this: I notice that there is a disposition here, so long as the State at large is to pay these salaries, for every county to ask an increase of salaries, generally by asking for the raising of the grade of Judges for their counties. Finally, the proposition was agreed to, that all salaries should be three thousand five hundred dollars each, except certain named counties. The result of that is, that this other system will cost in round numbers about three hundred thousand dollars a year. Now, it occurred to me, that if the counties should be required to pay, the delegates here representing those counties will occupy an entirely different position in such cases from what they occupy now when the State is to pay. The gentleman from Santa Cruz says, if they are to pay three thousand five hundred dollars, that it is too much. I don't know anybody that will have a better right to say what they shall be paid than the delegate from that county, and my idea is, that we will have no difficulty in fixing a rate of salaries whenever we decide that they shall be paid by the counties.

MR. McFARLAND. From your own experience, do you believe there is any danger of the salaries of Judges being too high?

MR. McCALLUM. I cannot say that I believe that it is hurtful to fix salaries too high. That is my judgment of it. But I am here rather in a representative capacity; not as representing my own views. But I am satisfied that the main question which will be discussed, ouside of what may be the benefits of this new system, will be the question, whether it costs more than the old system. And I will say further, that as the present system costs a quarter of a million of dollars, I believe we ought to have a speedy and good administration of justice for a sum not exceeding the present cost. As it now stands, it will cost about three hundred thousand dollars. I do not believe that there will be any such demand for an increase of salaries on the part of delegates if we provide that the counties shall pay the Judges. Whenever it comes down to individual responsibility, there will be no such demand.

MR. WHITE. Is it not fixed that we shall pay them three thousand five hundred dollars a year?

MR. McCALLUM. That has been fixed in the Committee of the Whole. If the counties have to pay, then it will remain with the delegates from those counties to say what these salaries shall be. That is the way that will work. The gentleman from Santa Cruz says his constituents do not want to pay so much, and I imagine this Convention is not going to go against their judgment.

MR. WHITE. The delegate from San Benito agrees with me that two thousand five hundred dollars will do. Mr. Wyatt agrees with me that two thousand five hundred dollars is enough for Monterey County.

MR. McCALLUM. If the counties have to pay, the delegates from those counties will name the amount they are willing to pay. Then this system will not cost any more than the present system. I don't say that it is too high, but I do say that there should be more immediate responsibility about the matter. As to being State officers, in some sense they are and some they are not. Our District Judges were considered State officers, and our County Judges were considered county officers. These Superior Judges will be elected by the counties exclusively, and they are in one sense county officers, taking the place of the County Judges. As far as Alameda County is concerned, we are willing to pay for two Judges, ten thousand dollars. I believe we had better pay for our own Judges than to pay our proportion of all the Judges, because we would probably save five thousand dollars by the operation. As far as the amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole is concerned, I do not regard anything as fixed in the Committee of the Whole. We will have a chance to unfix it again.

MR. HERRINGTON. Is an amendment in order?

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

MR. McCALLUM. I wish to state that the delegates from San Joaquin County have stated to me that they are very anxious to have two Judges for that county; that their business requires it, and that they are willing to pay for them; and at the same time the Convention does not seem willing to allow them an extra Judge.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer a substitute to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'each,' in line seven, and insert: 'The Superior Judges shall each receive an annual salary of one thousand dollars, to be paid out of the State treasury, and such additional compensation as shall be fixed by the Boards of Supervisors of the respective counties, to be paid out of the county treasury.'"

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I rise to a point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN. State your point of order.

MR. SMITH. This has already been voted down. A motion was made and carried to strike out these words and insert others in their place, and a motion to strike them out again is not in order.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The amendment is ruled out of order.

AN APPEAL.

MR. HERRINGTON. I hope the Chair will not decide that point of order in a hurry.

MR. WILSON. I understand the point of order to have been already decided.

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

MR. HERRINGTON. Then I most respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair, and then I can discuss the question.

The appeal was duly seconded.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has offered an amendment striking out portions of the amendment that has been voted upon and adopted by this Convention, in regard to the salaries of Judges. The Chair decides that he cannot do so. From that decision of the Chair the gentleman appeals. The question is on the appeal from the decision of the Chair.

MR. McFARLAND. This very identical amendment has been voted down.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: What the gentleman says is true. I admit every word. I admit that some portions of that section consists of words that have been adopted by the committee. But I submit that the amendment now pending seems also to change these very words that have already been adopted. I understand the object of the committee to be to complete the section by fixing the amount of compensation, and as I understand it, those things may be changed as often as the Committee of the Whole desire, until the whole section is complete. And it is right that this should be so, and that we should have a chance to complete the section. The other proposition that was voted upon embraced the salaries of Supreme Judges, while this proposition leaves out the Supreme Judges altogether, and therefore I consider it a separate and different amendment——

MR. HUESTIS. I ask the Chair to enforce order in this hall. There is so much noise and confusion that nobody can hear a word that is being said.

THE CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will keep order on the floor.

MR. HERRINGTON. It looks to me as if the members were more interested in their private affairs than in the proceedings of this Convention. Now, I do submit that if this proposition had been voted upon alone, without embracing the salaries of the Supreme Justices, that it would have been carried; and I say that such a proposition as this is strictly in order at this time. I, myself, voted against the proposition before presented, on that account, and there are others here who did the same thing. I think the gentleman to my left is in favor of this amendment in preference to all others.

MR. WILSON, of First District. I move that the appeal be laid upon the table.

Division was called for, and the vote to table the appeal stood: ayes, 45; noes, 26.

No quorum voting.

The question was put again, and the motion to table prevailed by a vote of 45 ayes to 32 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum.

Division being called for, the amendment was lost, by a vote of 23 ayes to 57 noes.

MR. BLACKMER. I desire to ask the Chair if an amendment will be entertained by way of a substitute for the entire section?

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

MR. BLACKMER. I offer a substitute for the entire section:

"The Justices of the Supreme Court, and the Judges of the Superior Court, shall severally receive, at stated times during their continuance in office, from the State treasury, such compensation for their services as may be prescribed by law, which compensation shall not be increased nor diminished during the term for which they shall have been elected; and the salaries of Judges of the Superior Courts for the City and County of San Francisco, shall not exceed five thousand dollars per annum, and the salaries of Judges of the Superior Courts of the remaining counties of this State shall not exceed four thousand five hundred dollars per annum. The annual salaries of Justices of the Supreme Court shall be six thousand dollars until such compensation shall be fixed by the Legislature; and the Judges of the Superior Courts of the City and County of San Francisco, the Counties of Alameda, San Joaquin, Los Angeles, Santa Clara, Sacramento, and Sonoma, shall receive a salary at the rate of four thousand five hundred dollars per annum, and those of all the other counties at the rate of three thousand dollars per annum."

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I rise to a point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

MR. WATERS. It is this: The committee have already affirmatively amended this section in conflict with this amendment. If the committee can make one amendment one moment, and another another, we will never get through. It seems to me we ought to know what we are going to do.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The amendment is ruled out of order.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I am sorry that the Chair ruled quite so quick. I believe that it is customary for questions of order to be discussed; therefore, I claim my right to discuss this point——

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I rise to a point of order. The discussion of the gentleman is not in order. There is nothing before the Convention, because the Chair has decided the point of order, and no appeal has been taken.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

MR. WEST. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the point of order raised by the gentleman from Shasta to be well taken, and from the decision of the Chair the gentleman from Los Angeles appeals.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: The decision of the Chair is in violation of the well recognized rules of parliamentary bodies, that a substitute remains as an independent proposition until the original proposition under discussion is amended by its friends and perfected to their satisfaction; that the friends of a proposition should have a right to perfect it, and then, that at any time before the final vote is taken, a substitute is in order, and may be entertained by the Chair and voted upon by the body.

MR. WATERS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

MR. WEST. Yes, sir.

MR. WATERS. Has not Rule Thirty-two entirely done away with that law?

MR. WEST. I am not aware that it has.

MR. WATERS. The question was raised at the beginning of the session, and Rule Thirty-two covers the point, when it says that a substitute shall be deemed to be an amendment, and treated in all respects as such.

MR. WEST. The substitute was offered to take the place of the whole matter, and it has been held that a motion to strike out or add takes precedence of a substitute, which is temporarily on the table until the other is disposed of. There is no rule that I know of that excludes a substitute at this stage of the proceedings.

MR. WATERS. Was not that before Rule Thirty-two was adopted?

MR. GRACE. I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

Division being called for, the motion to lay the appeal upon the table resulted in a vote of 44 ayes to 30 noes—no quorum voting.

The question was put again, and the motion to table was carried, by a vote of 49 ayes to 29 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read section eighteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 18. The Justices of the Supreme Court, and the Judges of the Superior Courts, shall be ineligible to any other office than a judicial office during the term for which they shall have been elected.

MR. MORSE. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to section eighteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

"After the word 'office,' where it first occurs in the second line, insert as follows: 'or public employment;' and after the word 'office,' where it occurs a second time, insert the words 'or employment,' so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 18. The Justices of the Supreme Court, and the Judges of the Superior Courts, shall be ineligible to any other office or public employment than a judicial office or employment during the term for which they shall have been elected."

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I offer a substitute for the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 18. Justices of the Supreme Court, and Judges of the Superior Courts shall not be eligible during the period for which they may be elected or appointed to their respective offices, to any position in the gift of the qualified electors or of the Legislature."

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Section eighteen here is copied from the old Constitution, and the amendment, which I offer as a substitute, is calculated to avoid the very question that arose here in the beginning of the session, as to the eligibility of a member who had been elected as a delegate while holding the office of District Judge. I find, in looking over the list of Constitutions, that almost every Constitution in the United States has a provision similar to this; some of them like our own, but some of them may have met with the very difficulty we met with the very moment our Convention was called to order. In Wisconsin they can hold no other office or public trust, except a judicial office, during the term for which they are elected. They introduce the words "public trust," in addition, "or any position in the gift of the qualified electors, or of the General Assembly." I copied that language. That excludes the possibility of electing Judges to a Constitutional Convention hereafter, or to any other office that will lead to an abuse of power. That will reach the case of Judge Fawcett, or any other Judge, and prevent them from becoming candidates for any position whatever. I will not go into any argument upon that case, for that would be useless. But we all know—and especially lawyers know—how powerful is the position of a Judge. Why, it was said here in that discussion that there was no candidate here for that seat when it was questioned. Who ever heard of an attorney being a candidate to oust the Judge before whom he is practicing? No one ever did. He would antagonize the Judge, and he doesn't dare to do it. How necessary, then, is it that we shall fix a rule that shall be inflexible. We want to avoid the plea that this is only an agency of the people—or employment. I think the substitute will fully and clearly cover the point, and I do not think any member of this Convention needs to be convinced of the necessity of such a provision.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Kern. Mr. Chairman: As far as my judgment and understanding of the matter is concerned, I have arrived at the conclusion that the State Constitution has no power over the matter; that a Constitutional Convention is called by a power higher than the Constitution. But I am in favor of the point intended to be secured by the proposition, and by the two amendments which have been sent up. I think it is a great evil to allow a Judge of any State Court to sit as a member of a Convention. Now, I have had occasion to look over this matter, and I have come to the conclusion that the Constitution may regulate the calling of a Convention, may regulate the proceedings of a Convention, but it has no authority to say that any elector of the State may not sit as a member of that body, for the elector so elected draws his authority from the people, whose power is higher than that of any Constitutional Convention. I don't think this amendment covers the point which it is intended to cover.

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I may be mistaken, but I think this point is covered by an amendment which has already been adopted by the Committee of the Whole. I refer to section two of the report of the Committee on Future Amendments, which says that the members of a Constitutional Convention shall be chosen in the same manner, and have the same qualifications, as members of the Legislature. Now, I suppose a District Judge would not be qualified to sit as a member of the Legislature. I disagree with the proposition of the gentleman from Kern. Any provision that can disqualify a District Judge from being a member of the Legislature, will disqualify him from sitting as a member of the Convention.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I hope this Convention will adopt this provision as the committee have reported it. It is the very same language we have been living under ever since the State commenced, and it seems to me that section might be allowed to go as it is. It seems to me that the great evil of law making, either in constitutional conventions or legislative bodies, is the desire which every man has to put in something to remedy some little matter that has occurred in his own personal experience. Now, these gentlemen have some case in their mind's eye, and are trying to find a remedy for it. We have here one hundred and fifty-two delegates elected to this body, and only one Judge has been elected, and that under peculiar circumstances, because it was the almost unanimous wish of the people. What are these gentlemen afraid of? I think it speaks rather well for the Judges of the State that they are so afraid of the people electing them to these offices. Now, the Legislature has the power to prescribe qualifications for members of a Constitutional Convention, and if they desire to do so, they can say that Judges shall not be eligible. This matter is in the hands of the people. Are these gentlemen so afraid of the people whose friends they pretend to be? Now, sir, it does seem to me that this section is all-sufficient, and ought to be passed as it stands. I can see no danger in giving the people the right, every twenty-five or thirty years, if they desire, to elect a Judge to a Constitutional Convention. I can see no danger in it. Why not allow this language to remain as it is? Why tamper with and tinker every section of the Constitution? Let the Legislature and the people determine this matter for themselves.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: If the lessons of experience teach anything, in my judgment they teach that this is a very proper amendment to have in the Constitution. Whatever may be said about the legal questions involved, I don't imagine there are ten men on this floor who do not believe, as a matter of expediency, that no Judge should be elected to a Constitutional Convention. And it has been most thoroughly illustrated in a case we have had before us. A gentleman was elected as a member of this Convention, and from his position must vote upon a bill which, if it carries, abolishes the very office which he holds.

MR. DUDLEY. I raise the point of order that it is out of order to attack Judge Fawcett. That matter has been disposed of.

MR. MCCALLUM. I say I would be the last to make an attack upon any one, and there is no attack upon any one here; the attack is upon the system. When the Constitution was made in eighteen hundred and forty-nine, it was submitted to a vote of the people and agreed to, and it was provided that no Judge should be eligible to any other position. I do not know of any public position which, in point of expediency, so much requires that a Judge should be excluded from as a Constitutional Convention.

MR. ROLFE. Will you look at this section two of the report of the Committee on Future Amendments, to which I referred a moment ago.

MR. MCCALLUM. That is the very point I was coming to. That is the place in which such amendment ought to be placed, whether this covers it or not. And I desire to take this opportunity to enter my solemn protest against the oft repeated declaration made here, that our Constitutional Convention cannot, in ordinary matters, direct and control a future Convention. I can very well understand why we cannot say that this Constitution shall not be amended in half a century. That would bind nobody to say that some particular provision in the bill of rights, for instance, should not be amended. To say in the ordinary course of legislation, that certain persons shall not fill the position of delegates to a Constitutional Convention; in other words, to say, as in this article on future amendments, that members shall possess the same qualifications as members of the Legislature—to say that such provisions cannot bind anybody, is to say that nothing we can do is to bind people in the future. I therefore protest against any such expressions. The amendment in the report of the Committee on Future Amendments seems to cover this point, and I think that is the place for it. I think the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds, will admit both propositions—first, that this is the place to put it, and next, that the amendment reported by that committee covers the point fully.

MR. REYNOLDS. The section read by Judge Rolfe does not cover the point which my amendment is intended to cover. It would apply to a member of a Constitutional Convention, but it would not apply to such a case as this, where the Legislature appointed a District Judge a member of the Police Commission. We don't want any such transactions; we want to cut them all off. And now, in reply to the gentleman——

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will take his seat.

MR. REYNOLDS. I ask leave to withdraw my amendment. I have been to the desk of the gentleman and read his amendment, and I wish to withdraw mine.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I believe that this subject has been sufficiently discussed, and I therefore move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Howard, of Los Angeles, Wyatt, White, and Evey.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by Mr. Morse.

Adopted.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer an amendment to section eighteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add at the end of the last amendment the following: 'No member of this Convention shall ever be eligible to a judicial office.'" [Laughter.]

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: That amendment is entirely superfluous. There is no danger of any member of this Convention being elected to a judicial office, or any other office. [Laughter.]

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment.

Division was called for, and the amendment rejected, by a vote of 25 ayes to 54 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section nineteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 19. Judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the word 'may,' in line two, and insert the words, 'it shall be their duty to.'"

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I am under the impression that this should not be a matter of indifference; neither should it be left in that form. It is true that no great evil may result if this word "may" is left here, but I think the Constitution should be clear and explicit as to what the duties of the Judge shall be in such matters.

REMARKS OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I hope that amendment will pass. There is a very large number of cases in which it is wholly unnecessary for the Judge to state the testimony. Every lawyer has observed that. If you compel the Judge to state the testimony, he must go through the entire testimony of the case in every instance. This will occupy a great deal of time; many times to no good purpose.

MR. BROWN. I had not intended it to apply to testimony, but only to the law. I withdraw the amendment.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"After the word 'may,' in line two, insert the words, 'except in criminal prosecutions for libel.'"

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: That question has been decided once adversely to this amendment; but that does not prevent me from offering this amendment at this time. Without offering any lengthy argument here, I think the sentiment of this Convention is, that such an amendment as this is necessary.

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will pass. The gentleman has stated that the Convention has already decided affirmatively against this proposition. But, sir, since the adoption of the Fawcett amendment the press of this State has unanimously expressed itself in disapproval of that amendment; and I say, it will greatly weaken the Constitution should that amendment be permitted to remain. It is not necessary now for me to repeat the reasons which I gave before, why the Constitution should remain as it was before. But I hope we may save ourselves on this question, by adopting the amendment which has been offered.

REMARKS OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I hope that no such amendment as that will be adopted here, for the reason that it will be inconsistent with the action already taken here. It has been said that there is a peculiar relationship between the parties before the Court in a criminal prosecution for libel. The Judge has nothing to do with the facts. He may state the testimony and declare the law. But these gentlemen ask more than that; they ask that the Judge shall not be allowed to charge the jury as to the law or the fact. That he shall not declare the law. If we do say so the Judge will be forbidden to read that clause of the Constitution which declares that if the matter alleged to be libelous be true, and was published with good motives, the defendant shall be acquitted. If the Judge cannot declare the law, I say it forbids from reading to the jury in his charge that very matter in the Constitution. It is a vital and necessary safeguard to the defendant in a trial for libel. It seems to me it would be utterly inconsistent, that the Court should be deprived in any case of the right to charge the jury in regard to the law of the case. That is constitutional law; it is statute law. The jury would remain in ignorance as to the law, because the Judge cannot declare it, and the attorneys could not declare the law. The jury is bound to remain in ignorance as to the law of the case which they are called to determine. There is no danger in the section as reported of the Judge undertaking to charge the jury as to questions of fact. This is a provision which has always prevailed, that the Judge may, if he deems it necessary, state the testimony, and leave the jury to judge as to the weight of the testimony, and that the Judge may declare the law to the jury. If that power is taken away from him the Court will be worthless.

REMARKS OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will pass, and for these reasons: If the section should remain as it now stands, taken in connection with the Fawcett amendment, it would simply make the law of libel to this effect: that the Judge would have the right to state to the jury and instruct them as to whether the publication in question was libelous or not. It would take away from the jury the right which our Constitution has heretofore conferred upon them, of determining the law and the fact. It is true, the Fawcett amendment says the jury may render a general verdict, but the jury are bound to render a general verdict and pass upon the facts as presented to them, and upon the law as delivered to them by the Court. Suppose the Court instructs, as a matter of law, that the matter charged is libelous, the jury necessarily has to follow the Judge. He was not permitted under the old law to say whether the article charged as libelous was libelous or not. Under this clause the Judge says: "Gentlemen of the jury, I charge you as a matter of law that this publication is libelous." What are the jury to do? They have then simply to pass upon the fact of publication—upon the fact whether it was published with good motives and for justifiable ends. I hope we shall at least have the same liberty in future that we have had for the public press. I know this, that if we make an attack upon the public press of the State our Constitution will most certainly be defeated.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add, after the word 'libel,' the words 'or murder.'"

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: If we are going to abandon the rule of not having special legislation, either in the Constitution or anywhere else; if we are going to except any one crime from the general law of the State, I do not see why the crime of murder should not be excepted. Certainly it is the most important crime committed, and it is the most dangerous crime known. The man charged with murder has his life at stake. Now, life ends all. There is nothing dearer than life. If we are going to make an exception in favor of any class of criminals, why not make it in favor of the men whose lives are at stake. If the Judge is going to declare the law in all cases except one, I think that one should be the crime of murder. Now, what reason is there in God's world that a man charged with libel should be shielded any more than the man charged with murder. This provision of the Constitution stands just as it always did, that the Judge shall have power to state the testimony and declare the law. He has no power to charge the jury upon matters of fact, but he has upon matters of law. Now, if we are going to except one crime, why not twenty. Why select the crime of libel from all other crimes. Is there any reason for it? Is there any possible ground upon which this exception is based? If an exception is to be made, why not make it in favor of the crime of murder, or of treason, or of some other important crime? The gentleman from Alameda is entirely mistaken. The Court has no more right to tell the jury that in that case the man is guilty, than he has in any other case. No more than he would have in a case of murder. In both cases the Court merely states what constitutes the crime. What constitutes the crime of embezzlement, or the crime of murder, or arson. The Court simply states what the crime is and what constitutes the crime. Now, why should not the Court have this right in one case as well as in another. If we are going to except any class of criminals, why not except the higher grades, such as treason or murder. If this exception is going to carry I hope the crime of murder will be added.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: If I were to judge from the character of this last amendment, I should say that the gentleman from Sacramento was ambitious to supersede to the functions of the "little joker." He is not serious in the proposition which he has submitted to this body, and I hope the proposition of the gentleman from Santa Clara will be adopted, pure and simple. There is nothing that we have done in this Convention that has raised such an opposition to the Constitution as the Fawcett amendment, and it has justly raised it too. I think it is a very dangerous innovation—dangerous to the liberty of the press, and therefore dangerous to the liberties of the people. In government experience is worth something, and experience shows that for the liberty of the press it is necessary that it should stand on exceptional grounds. I am in favor of perpetuating the ancient law and ancient usage. We have lived prosperous and happy in this State for twenty-five years under this law, which gave the jury the right to judge of the law and the fact. Why change it? It is the law of England at the present time. When this subject was before the Convention on a former day, I read a leading English case in which the Court held that the Judge had no right to bind the jury by his opinion of the law, although he might express his opinion of the law. Why change it? Why, at this late day, attempt to tamper with the liberty of the press? Gentlemen, I warn you that all propositions to take from the jury the right to determine the law as well as the fact are dangerous, and are entirely opposed to public sentiment in this State.

SPEECH OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: During the whole discussion of this subject, when the bill of rights was before the Convention, I had not a word to say, for I believed the good sense of the Convention would spurn such an amendment as the Fawcett amendment afterwards. And, sir, I believe so still. I have faith in the intentions of a large majority of this body. I believe they came here to make a good Constitution and one which the people will adopt—one which may be adopted upon its merits. Since a majority of the Convention were in favor of the so called Fawcett amendment, I reasonably infer that they lean in that direction.

Now, I know there is among the people of California a prejudice against the public press. There is a growing feeling that the liberty guaranteed to the press is being abused. I agree with that sentiment, and yet I do not think that because it is abused in exceptional cases, it is wise policy to curtail that freedom. Now, a newspaper necessarily makes enemies. It takes a lively interest in politics, and it is often the case that it has had occasion to oppose the election of the very Judge before whom the charge of libel is to be tried. In such cases as that there must necessarily be some feelings of prejudice on the part of the Judge. I say it is dangerous to leave so much power in his hands as this section confers. The case ought to be left to twelve of his fellow citizens, to decide the whole case on its merits. Where a libel is charged, it is natural that twelve entirely disinterested citizens of the community would be more apt to render a just verdict, after considering the motives. Where it is left to him to explain and declare the technicalities of the law, I think it is dangerous. Individually, I have no objections to the most stringent libel law, as I do not anticipate any experience in libeling men. I would be in favor of a retraction law, because I believe a man who is not willing to retract a thing when it is shown to be wrong—to have done an injustice to a man—is not fit for the management of a newspaper. But so far as this section is concerned, we have got along well enough under the old law, and this proposed innovation will not accomplish any great good, and it may do a great deal of harm. I believe there is a strong element in this State, which has a strong representation on this floor, who would like to defeat any Constitution which we may make, and especially if it was a better one than the old one. They prefer things as they are. We have had to bring against it the opposition of the railroad and other monopolists. We have brought down upon it the displeasure of the land monopolists and banks, and the moneyed interests of the country generally. In order to do our duty we have had to bring down the opposition of the hoodlum classes; and now these gentlemen seem to desire, in order to defeat the new Constitution, to bring down upon it the united opposition of the press of the State. I say, sir, we cannot afford to bring on such a conflict as that, unless there is some great reform to be accomplished by it, which there is not. Where is the man who can stand here and show that any great good will be accomplished by the adoption of this amendment? Who can show that by the adoption of this section we will remedy any great abuse? I say these abuses have existed, and will exist, and such a provision as this will not stop them. We cannot afford, for the purpose of reaching isolated instances, to curtail the liberties of the press of the country. The press is the palladium of our liberties, and must not be muzzled. It is the great check and safeguard against official corruption in this country. Leave it as it is, to stand before the law as others stand. This would be a dangerous move, and one that we cannot afford to make.

A POINT OF ORDER.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: I rise to a point of order. When the report of the Committee on Preamble and Bill of Rights was before the Committee of the Whole, section nine was amended by the amendment offered by Judge Fawcett, and covered the precise amendment now before this committee. That amendment provided that the jury might find a general verdict, as in other criminal cases. Now, sir, I think it is not competent for the committee at this time to alter or change that amendment. That is my point of order. We have adopted Cushing's Manual here where there is no express rule. There is no express rule here. You will find on page seventy, paragraph nine hundred and eighty-three, that it says, whatever we agree to, either by adopting or rejecting an amendment, cannot be afterwards altered or amended. Therefore, this proposition to annul and change that provision in the preamble and bill of rights cannot be entertained. It could not be directly done; and how can it be done indirectly? I think it is clearly out of order. It is in violation of an express rule which governs this body.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not well taken.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman——

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman has spoken once upon this question.

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

MR. AYERS. I rise to a point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN. State your point of order.

MR. AYERS. The gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. West, moved the previous question before Judge Jones addressed the Chair.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair didn't hear it.

REMARKS OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I believe there is a misapprehension here in regard to the motives upon which it is desired to defeat this amendment. It is not, so far as I know, and I speak for myself, a matter which will at all hamper or abridge the liberty of the press, or interfere with it in any way. In the exercise of these functions, the press is liable to say things which may not be entirely true. But my experience and my observation has been that when such errors are discovered, men have been ready to accord the individual injured his rights by making the correction. And I do not consider that the liberties of the press are at all abridged by retaining this section as it is. If we leave this section stand as it is, and the section of the bill of rights as it is, the two will be perfectly harmonious, and it will make the administration of justice in this State uniform and harmonious, which I consider of very great importance. It is certainly necessary that it should be so. It is indispensable that the administration of law should seem to the minds of men to be without respect to persons or individuals, and I hold that the occupation of newspaper publishing has no need to be exempt from the general provisions of law applying to all other persons.

Now, sir, I spoke of the exact practical effect of this amendment here, and I have heard no answer to that, and I say that the amendment proposed to be inserted here to section nineteen, does in effect declare that in suits for libel, it is not within the power of the Judge to state to the jury what libel is. He has no right to instruct them as to what constitutes the crime of libel. It would be the same with regard to the crime of murder, if the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento should be adopted, and that amendment is no more inconsistent than this one. The Court, in a trial for libel, could not inform the jury that citizens of this country may freely write and speak their sentiments upon all subjects. He could not inform the jury that in criminal prosecutions for libel the truth may be given in evidence, and if it shall appear to the jury that the matter charged as libelous is true, and was published with good motives and for justifiable ends, the party shall be acquitted, because that is part of the law of libel, and the Judge is forbidden to declare the law to the jury. The fundamental law of the land is a part of the law of libel, but the Court is forbidden to charge the jury to that effect. Undoubtedly that was not contemplated by the mover of the amendment, but I say that must be its effect; for, if you forbid the Court to declare the law, there is no other power that can declare it to the jury, and the jury must remain in ignorance of it. Now, that is inconsistent with a true administration of the law. There is no criminal offense to be tried in this State in which the jury should know the law, unless it is libel. If there be any law in regard to it the jury ought to know it. If there be no law there should be no trial. In regard to the objection that it will bring additional opposition to the Constitution, that is a consideration which ought not to enter into this discussion at all, unless it be in a case that is manifestly unjust, because we came here to do the right. Moreover, gentlemen are mistaken when they assert that it will bring down the press of the State upon the Constitution. When this subject was before the Convention before, there were a number of papers that indorsed the Fawcett amendment.

MR. AYERS. Has there been any such except the Record-Union of this city?

MR. JONES. Yes, the Stockton Herald and Independent, and the Daily San Francisco Post.

MR. AYERS. No, sir; no, sir.

MR. JONES. I understand from a gentleman connected with the Post, that they were in favor of it, but that while the editor-in-chief was away an article crept in criticising it.

MR. WEST. I believe this question has been sufficiently discussed, and I move the previous question. I see the Chairman of the Judiciary Committee desires to address the Convention, and I will withdraw it in his favor, if he will renew the motion.

MR. AYERS. I insist upon the previous question; if the gentleman withdraws it I will renew it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The previous question has been moved. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Lost.

MR. MCCALLUM. I rise to a question of order. The section goes over for one day.

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir; that rule has been changed.

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: As Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, I desire to say a few words upon this subject of libel. The committee, in adopting the proposed system, which made some changes, attempted to follow the old Constitution as closely as possible in other respects. Section seventeen of article five of the old Constitution provides that "Judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law." The Committee of the Whole adopted that section without a dissenting voice, and now ask the Convention to adopt it. That has always been constitutional law and has already been adopted, as part of the bill of rights, by this committee. It is to be regretted that the question of libel has been made here. There is no utility or propriety in thrusting that question upon us at this time, for, should the amendment prevail, there will be a conflict between this section, as amended, and the section of the bill of rights referred to; the discussion must, therefore, in that event, be renewed in Convention. The gentlemen proposing this amendment have had their day in Court. When the question first arose, they made an able and earnest contest here. Why renew the contest now, when it must at last be determined in Convention? Besides, there is scarcely a quorum present. It is to be hoped that the amendment will be withdrawn, so that the questions involved may be postponed until the necessity of final action arises in the Convention; however, if it be not postponed I insist that the section as reported should be adopted, not only because it is a portion of the old Constitution, but also because it is right in itself. If I may be permitted to refer to myself, I will frankly say that I have no grievances against the press, and no quarrel with any gentlemen of the press; I have no enemies among them to punish. Fortunately or unfortunately, criminal libel cases have formed no part of my practice: I have neither prosecuted nor defended, and am without feeling in the matter. I claim to be impartial, and only act on my judgment of what is right and proper.

In reference to the section referred to, that "Judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law," it need only be said that that is a great rule in our system of jurisprudence. The jury has its appropriate function, and so has the Judge. The jury determines questions of fact, and the Judge questions of law, and this has been so since the organization of the State; and the same principle prevails throughout the United States, and, I believe, without an exception. This is as old as the common law, and the wisdom of ages approves it. Although the Court instructs the jury, in a criminal case, upon the law, yet the jury finds a general verdict—guilty, or not guilty—which involves the whole matter. In civil cases there are special instances in which juries are required to render special verdicts on particular points, but there can be no special verdict in a criminal case; the whole matter goes to the jury, and its only verdict is a general one. The jury passes upon the whole case, and is supposed to be enlightened by the Court upon matters of law; still its verdict covers the whole matter and is general. There is no good sense in the proposition that the jury shall judge of the law. No man is qualified for the bench unless he has studied jurisprudence as a science. To render himself eligible as a Judge he must pursue the study of the law for years. What wisdom is there in a provision, that a jury selected from trades and vocations which do not instruct them in matters of law, should in any one class of cases be released from the obligation of receiving instruction in matters of law from the Judge? Why should we depart from a system which has been in vogue since California has been a State? Thus far it has been satisfactory, and why change it?

Before we interpolate an amendment here which shall select the crime of libel from all other crimes and make it a class by itself, to be treated, prosecuted, and tried differently from other public offenses, we should have good reasons for the change. Why, then, I ask, should we single out this one class of crimes from others in the criminal code and give it privileges and advantages over those others, and apply to it different modes of trial and different rules of law? Shall it be said that the freedom of the press demands it? There is no stronger advocate of the entire freedom of the press than I am. I seek for it liberty in the widest sense, but at the same time all should be held liable for the abuse of that freedom, as all individuals pursuing other vocations in life are held responsible. When a man is tried for that public offense called libel, there can be no reason why the trial should not be conducted in the same mode, by the same legal machinery, and upon the same principles and rules of evidence, as apply to other public offenses. The press, in its pride and independence, ought not to ask privileges and immunities not possessed by and accorded to others. The press is well able to take care of itself, and it is a surprise that some of its members on this floor should seek aid and protection from the government, and not be willing to stand upon an equality with all others. The press, breathing the true spirit of independence, needs no privileges, and should scorn special benefits and advantages. To ask aid, is to confess weakness. The high-minded, self-reliant, and free press of the country does not seek so unenviable a position. It is willing to stand on the broad platform of equal rights for all before the law.

MR. STEDMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Is it not a fact that every paper in the State has asked a repeal of this amendment adopted in the bill of rights, except that scurrilous well known ring organ, the Record-Union? Is there any other paper?

MR. WILSON. It is also a fact that when Jesus Christ was led to the cross there was a vast majority against him in that locality, and the cry of "Crucify Him!" "Crucify Him!" indicated the sentiment of the masses around Calvary. That, however, amounts to nothing in the solution of the question on principle. A vote of any body of men may determine their views, but is not always a test of the soundness of a doctrine or the wisdom of their action. If it be true that a class of newspapers, or all of the newspapers, favor a particular measure, it does not aid us in determining upon principle and reason what is right and for the public interest.

All pious readers of the New Testament will remember the outcry against St. Paul by the silversmiths who made silver shrines for Diana of the Ephesians, which "brought no small gains unto the craftsmen." Demetrius, the chief and leader, called his fellow-craftsmen together and said: "Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth," and announced to them that by reason of the preachings of Paul against idolatry that "this, our craft, is in danger to be set at naught." This was responded to with cries of "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." Do any of the proprietors of newspapers think that their business in libeling their fellow men is in danger? Has libeling brought them "no small gains?" Is it from this that their craft has its great wealth? Will the suppression of libels bring their craft in danger of being "set at naught?"

The proposition that I advocate is likely to be misrepresented, and the supporters of it will probably obtain their full share of abuse. I assumed that risk, however, when I accepted a place in this Convention, and I shall none the less fearlessly and earnestly perform my duty as I understand it. I again repeat that there is neither justice, reason, nor policy in establishing any privileged class—all accused of public offenses should stand equally before the law.

MR. GREGG. If that amendment passes, let me ask you, would it not be special legislation?

MR. WILSON. Yes, sir, in principle it is the worst kind of special legislation. We declare in some of the provisions of this new Constitution against special legislation, and thus make that principle a prominent feature. Now, the gentleman from Placer says he would be in favor of a retraction law; but the majority of the public journals of the State are against that proposition. I think it sound policy, and that a retraction law would be desirable, but is there any doubt of its opposition by a great portion of the journals of the day?

A great error is entertained by some here as to the effect of the English statute referred to. The case of The King v. The Dean of St. Asaph, tried before Mr. Justice Buller in seventeen hundred and eighty-four, caused great discussion on the law of libel. Not only Buller but Lord Mansfield held that the jury, in the absence of facts or circumstances establishing justification or excuse in matter of law, could only find as to the fact of publication and the truth of the innuendoes, and that the question of libel or no libel was a question of law for the Court. The jury in that case, under instructions from the Court, found the defendant guilty of publishing only, leaving the Court on that to render judgment or not as the Court should determine the other questions involved. It was because of the discussions following this that the Act of thirty-second George the Third, chapter sixty, was passed, entitled "An Act to remove doubts respecting the functions of juries in cases of libel." The effect of this Act was that the jury was clothed with the power to render a general verdict of guilty or not guilty on the trial of the indictment or information, and could no longer be required or directed by the Court or Judge to find the defendant guilty on proof of the publication by defendant of the alleged libel in the sense ascribed to it by the prosecution. It will be thus seen that the object and effect of the Act were to elevate the case to an equality with other criminal cases, in which the jury always rendered a general verdict. The jury by this Act has merely the right to determine the law and the facts under the direction of the Court precisely as in other criminal cases.

Our Constitution should, in this respect, agree with those of other States of the Union. They have placed prosecutions for libel on the same basis as other criminal cases; but in all such cases the Court retains its accustomed power and duty to instruct the jury in matters of law. The jury, however, has the absolute power of rendering a general verdict of guilty or not guilty.

This Convention has already made several concessions to the proprietors of public journals. On motion of the gentleman from San Joaquin, Judge Terry, they are granted a privilege never before possessed, and that is of trial only "in the county where such newspapers have their publication office, or in the county where the party alleged to be libeled resided at the time of the alleged publication, unless the place of trial shall be changed for good cause." This is a very important concession to the press.

Libel being one of that class of public offenses called misdemeanors, has not been hitherto appealable—the decision of the criminal Court of general jurisdiction being final. This committee has recommended an appeal in such cases. The fact that there was no appeal was one of the strongest views urged against the "Fawcett amendment." It was urged that the Superior Courts being the Courts of last resort in such cases, the Judges of those Courts could gratify their prejudice and malice with impunity, as libel was not subject to review on appeal. As the committee has decided such an appeal shall be given, the argument based on that view falls to the ground. With these concessions the press should be satisfied. I regret that this discussion has been thrust upon this committee at this time, for the contest will be renewed in the Convention when we reach the section of the bill of rights on the same subject. The committee should report this section under discussion as it stands, and pass its final consideration to the Convention itself.

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I can see no analogy between the crime of murder and that of libel, as pictured by the gentleman from Sacramento. They are entirely distinct. The reasons have been stated before on this floor why newspaper publishers occupy a different position in the community; that they necessarily have, by reason of their position, to look after, and fearlessly arraign public vices. They are, therefore, constantly subjected to trials for libel. If they do not do that they fail of their duty, and the people will sit down upon them, and for the purpose of affording them the necessary protection in the discharge of their duty, this amendment has been offered. I wish to say, also, that we wish, when we get into Convention, to make this extend to the Fawcett amendment, and then there will be no inconsistency between the two articles. Now, sir, if you are going to allow the Judges to determine the law, you will recollect that in libel cases there are some minute questions, partaking both of law and of fact, that have a direct bearing upon the ultimate result. The jury are as well able to judge of the motives which caused the publication as the Judge. And especially will that be the case if we should have Judges who are prejudiced from any cause against the defendants. We know very well the opposition and enmity which falls upon the fearless newspaper publisher, and the prejudice, and antagonisms, and opposition of men in power. It is to protect fearless newspaper publishers in such cases that we are striving to have this amendment adopted. The Judge, from his position on the bench, if he is allowed to instruct the jury, may work great injury to the defendant.

REMARKS OF MR. ANDREWS.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I am in hopes, sir, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara will be adopted. The Chairman of the committee protests against a change of the Constitution in relation to the section now pending. I regret that the gentleman should have been in favor of a change when the Fawcett amendment was adopted. I think the committee has made a very grave mistake in adopting the Fawcett amendment. I think the step was taken hastily, and it is our duty, when we make a mistake, to retrace our steps as speedily as possible. It seems to me, sir, that the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell, stated the case very clearly, and his reasoning cannot be controverted, when he stated why there ought to be an exception in the case of libel, and that was that it would be in the power of the Court, in all cases, to charge the jury that the defendant had been guilty of libel, leaving them to find only the bare fact of publication. I think we made a very serious mistake in circumscribing the power of the jury, as the committee have done. I think that was the greatest mistake this Convention has been guilty of, and now, to increase the power of the Judge, I think, is a step in the wrong direction. It is a step that will not meet the approbation of the people of this State. The people of California have great confidence in juries, as the American people always have had. They are willing still to depend upon the jury, and I think we have taken a wrong step, and I hope the Convention will take this, the first opportunity which has been presented, to retrace that step.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: From my recollection of the debate on the Fawcett amendment, these are the same arguments over again. I do not believe this Convention can afford to squander any more time on the matter, and I therefore move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Avers, West, Evey, and Howard.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried by a vote of 58 to 20.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

Division being called for, the amendment was adopted by a vote of 50 ayes to 33 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section twenty.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 20. The style of all process shall be, "The People of the State of California," and all prosecutions shall be conducted in their name and by their authority.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no amendment, the Secretary will read the next section.

SUPREME COURT REPORTER.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 21. The Justices shall appoint a Reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court, who shall hold his office and be removable at their pleasure. He shall receive an annual salary of two thousand five hundred dollars, payable quarterly.

MR. GRACE. I move that the committee rise.

Lost.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section twenty-one. The reason I move to strike it out is that it is entirely unnecessary in the Constitution. This is one among many things that had just as well be left to the Legislature. I am sick and tired of having matters of so little importance as this thrust upon this Convention, when so many weighty matters are waiting our attention.

MR. MCCALLUM. Now, we have something to think about during recess, and I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again. The Convention will now take a recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., Mr. Tinnin in the chair.

Roll called, and a quorum present.

JUDICIAL DEPARTMENT—REPORTER OF DECISIONS.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Tinnin in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Rolfe, to strike out section twenty-one.

REMARKS OF MR. BELCHER.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: I hope that motion will not prevail. At present there is no provision in the Constitution for the appointment of a reporter, and the law has provided for a reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court. Up to last Winter, or up to the last session of the Legislature, the Judges, under the law, were authorized to appoint the reporter. At the last session of the Legislature that law was changed and the appointment was given to the Governor. At present, then, under the statute, the Governor has the appointment of this reporter. Now, sir, the reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court should be appointed, in my judgment, by the Judges. There is no one so competent to select the reporter as the Judges themselves, whose opinions he reports. Now, this section would not have been suggested by the committee if it had not been for the fact that the Legislature had changed this appointment from the Court to the Governor, and all of them recognized that this was an appointment that the Judges always ought to have. At present, also, the statute gives the reporter of the Supreme Court a salary of six thousand dollars. Now, this is a large salary, and in giving this appointment to the Judges—the making a provision for it—the committee thought it should be reduced to two thousand five hundred dollars. Strike this out, and you leave the Legislature to give this appointment to the Court, or to the Governor, and to fix his salary at one sum or another, leave it as it is, at six thousand dollars, or reduce it to three thousand dollars, or two thousand five hundred dollars, or change it from time to time as the Legislature may think best. Now, I think this is one of those provisions that ought to be inserted in the Constitution. It is proper that the salary should be limited. It is proper that the Judges should have the appointment. The section puts it where it has always been up to the last session of the Legislature, and fixes the salary at a moderate sum. I hope that this section will be retained.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out all after the second line, so as to leave the salary and its regulations with the Legislature; for this regulation ought to go beyond this, if we attempt to regulate it at all. If you give the reporter the copyright, two thousand five hundred dollars is too much. I know from some experience. Where the reporter is required to furnish a sufficient number for the use of the State, a small salary and the copyright is sufficient.

MR. HILBORN. Section sixteen provides that all opinions shall be free for publication by any person.

MR. HOWARD. That does not change the fact. That is, a publication in a newspaper. The man who held the office, if he had the copyright, would practically have the monopoly of the whole business.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I believe that the Supreme Court should have the appointment of the reporter. And as to the salary provided, I think it would be better to amend it so as to read: "not to exceed two thousand five hundred dollars," leaving the Legislature to reduce it any time that they see fit. I will offer an amendment, to the effect that it shall not exceed two thousand five hundred dollars, and leave the rest of the section as it is.

MR. WYATT. I hope the motion of General Howard will not prevail. I think that is the most meritorious part of the section. The whole section is in the nature of legislation, but probably it is proper, because the present salary allowed by the Legislature to the Supreme Court Reporter is six thousand dollars, and, in my opinion, it is outrageously high at that figure. I think the suggestion is a good one, that it shall read so that he shall not receive any greater salary than two thousand five hundred dollars. If it is left in that way, it will never be increased by the Legislature, or attempted to be increased; but if the two thousand five hundred dollars is stricken out, and the reporter is still continued in the hands of the Legislature, then they will have the salary five or ten thousand dollars a year, as it can be lobbied through the Legislature.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I hope that neither of these amendments will be adopted. I think that the motion to strike out would result in leaving the office just where it is now, and the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles would leave the Legislature to vote up and vote down the salary as they saw fit. I think by retaining this section in the Constitution we would avoid all that jobbing. I hope the section will not be stricken out. I am in favor of the adoption of that section just as it is.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section will not be stricken out, and that the amendment will not prevail. Now, it is evident that it was the object of the committee in introducing this section here to contrive, as far as possible, to take this appointment of Supreme Court Reporter out of the hands of the Governor by fixing the salary, and from some influence, or a compromise, I know not what, I believe they have fixed the salary much too low at two thousand five hundred dollars. There are but few men, there are but few lawyers, who are capable of properly performing that duty; and while the appointment of that officer ought to be in the hands of the Justices of the Supreme Court, I think there ought to be a salary attached to it which will be sufficient to command the services of the best lawyer in the State, capable of performing that duty. It will readily be understood that next in importance to the decisions of the Supreme Court is a speedy and a good report of the decisions. The Judges ought to be at liberty, after noticing the qualifications of the different members of the bar, noticing their capacity for condensing and fixing upon the point in the case and clearly stating it, after ascertaining who of the various members of the bar are the best calculated to perform that duty, they ought to be able to appoint him, and the salary ought to be sufficient to command his services. Two thousand five hundred dollars is not enough for the purpose. I should like to have it amended so as to strike out lines three and four, and insert as follows: "He shall for four years after the adoption of this Constitution, and until the Legislature shall change the same, receive an annual salary of three thousand dollars, payable quarterly." That, Mr. Chairman, is one half of the salary at present paid by the Legislature. Now, cut it down one half for four years, and see if we can get good services for that price; and at the end of that time let it be changed, if necessary. After running four years I do not think there is any danger of the Legislature running it up to six thousand dollars. That is the amendment I would like to see adopted to this section. I do not think two thousand five hundred dollars is enough. A member of the committee suggests to me that some of the members of the committee strove to have the figure fixed at three thousand dollars, so it seems, as I first thought, that two thousand five hundred dollars was a compromise; and I think, on candid consideration, this committee will arrive at the conclusion that we ought to adopt three thousand dollars.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I think my friend from San Francisco has got a little demoralized on salaries, in consequence of the high salaries that have been voted here the last week, and I hope his amendment will not be adopted.

MR. KENNY. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. Howard, to strike out lines three and four of section twenty-one.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the motion to strike out section twenty-one.

The motion was lost.

MR. REYNOLDS. I now offer my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out lines three and four, and insert as follows: 'He shall for four years after the adoption of this Constitution, and until the Legislature shall change the same, receive an annual salary of three thousand dollars, payable annually.'"

MR. REYNOLDS. I will not occupy but a moment. My friend White, of Santa Cruz, is of the opinion that I am badly demoralized on the subject of high salaries. I guess not. I do not see that I have been in favor of high salaries anywhere in this committee, or any other committee, or on the floor of this Convention, but I do comprehend the fact that a competent reporter of the decisions of the Supreme Court is only less necessary than a competent Judge to render these decisions. And while I do believe six thousand dollars is an extravagant salary, and it looks as though there was something crooked in the business when I read in the statute that he gets six thousand dollars; yet I do appreciate the fact that such an officer must devote his whole time to the business, and he should be a good lawyer, too, as good as there is in the bar—I might almost say—as good as there is on the bench. To get such a man we must pay a good salary. That is all I care to say in behalf of the amendment.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty-one, line three, by inserting after the word 'of' the words, 'not to exceed.'"

MR. GORMAN. I second the amendment.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: The reason for that amendment is the same given by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, that the Legislature ought to have the right to change this salary if they desire at any time. They can lower it but they cannot go above two thousand five hundred dollars.

MR. REYNOLDS. My amendment is——

MR. WEST. I rise to a point of order. My point of order is, that he has already spoken twice.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

MR. REYNOLDS. I rise to a point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

MR. REYNOLDS. I will. My amendment is to strike out——

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that is not a point of order.

MR. REYNOLDS. I have a right to state my point of order in my own way.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the gentleman has no right to discuss his amendment. The gentleman will take his seat.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I rise to a point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must take his seat.

[Cries of "Call the Sergeant-at-Arms."]

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman must take his seat.

MR. REYNOLDS. Have I the floor to state a point of order?

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has——

MR. REYNOLDS. Have I right to state my point of order?

THE CHAIRMAN. You will state your point of order without arguing your amendment.

MR. REYNOLDS. My amendment is to strike out lines three and four and insert. Now, the amendment which the gentleman from El Dorado sends up is an amendment to line three, and I raise this point of order, that his amendment is not in order as an amendment to my amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the point of order not well taken.

MR. REYNOLDS. I appeal. I insist that when I have offered an amendment——

THE CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman appeal from the decision of the Chair?

MR. REYNOLDS. I do.

MR. HUNTER. I second the appeal.

THE CHAIRMAN. It requires three.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. I second the appeal.

MR. FARRELL. So do I.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the point of order is not well taken, for the reason that the amendment of the gentleman from El Dorado precedes his.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I desire now to state briefly why I take this appeal, and with due respect to the Chair there can be no doubt upon it at all. My amendment goes to line three, of section twenty-one. It is to strike out lines three and four, and insert in lieu thereof certain words. Now the gentleman from El Dorado does not send up a substitute for any amendment; he does not send up a substitute for the section; but he sends up an amendment to an amendment, and I insist that an amendment to a line that I have stricken out is not an amendment to an amendment, and is not in order.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The decision of the Chair was sustained.

MR. McCALLUM. I wish to vote intelligently upon the amendment of the gentleman from El Dorado. I think there is some misapprehension about the copyright. It is well known that the Supreme Court decisions are now being published in volumes by persons who, of course, claim no copyright. Now, if it is true, as General Howard assumes, that the reporter of the Supreme Court has the copyright of these decisions, two thousand five hundred dollars would be too much.

MR. HOWARD. I do not assume that, I merely say that should be the law.

MR. McCALLUM. Do you understand that is the law?

MR. HOWARD. No; not at present.

MR. McCALLUM. If the Supreme Court Reporter has no copyright, it appears to me it is very questionable whether an able and efficient reporter can be had even at the price named in this section, to say nothing about a reduction under the amendment offered by the gentleman from El Dorado.

MR. HOWARD. I moved to strike this out because I think the regulation inadequate and insufficient as it now stands.

MR. McCALLUM. That is the way it appears to me. I think we had better not adopt the amendment of the gentleman from El Dorado. At three thousand dollars it would be one half of the present compensation, and I am very doubtful if we could have an efficient Supreme Court Reporter even at that salary. I am in favor of salaries being fixed so that we can command the services of competent men. I think it is doubtful whether we could do that even at three thousand dollars. If the reporter had a copyright, that would be an entirely different thing, but there is none, as I understand it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from El Dorado, Mr. Larkin.

A division being called for, the vote stood 45 ayes to 31 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting, the Chair will put the question again.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 52 ayes to 35 noes.

MR. JONES. I send up a substitute for section twenty-one.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Justices of the Supreme Court shall appoint a reporter of the decisions of the Court, who shall hold his office and be removable at their pleasure, and whose compensation shall be prescribed by the Legislature."

MR. WEST. I rise to a point of order. My point of order is this: That, having incorporated an amendment into the section, we cannot, by a substitute, extract that amendment from it, according to the ruling of the Chair.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides the point of order well taken. The Secretary will read section twenty-two.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 22. The Judges and Justices of the Peace shall not practice law in any Court in the State during their continuance in office.

MR. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman; I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty-two as follows: Strike out all of the section up to the word 'shall,' in the first line, and insert as follows: 'The Justices of the Supreme Court and the Judges of the Superior Court.'"

MR. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman: My objection to the section is that it does not prohibit the Justices of the Supreme Court from practicing law, but it does prohibit the Justices of the Peace. Now, I cannot see why the Justices of the Supreme Court and the Judges of the Superior Courts should practice. They are amply provided for. Not so with Justices of the Peace. This would prevent lawyers from occupying the position of Justices of the Peace.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not be adopted, for this reason: that I do not want to see men sitting as magistrates and holding parties to answer in the Superior Courts, and then going into the Supreme Court as the attorneys of these parties, to defend them, and maintain that the charges were not properly laid. It would put a Justice of the Peace in an improper attitude, and it would appear worse for him if he should appear in aid of the prosecution.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I send up a substitute to section twenty-two.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Judges and Justices of the Peace shall not practice in any Court or cause, except where they are defendants or respondents, during the term for which they hold the office of Judge."

MR. BELCHER. I would suggest that the gentleman should make it read, "except where they are parties to the action." A Justice might have occasion to sue.

MR. BARTON. I will accept that amendment.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that the last amendment is entirely unnecessary. It is not practicing law for a man to go in and defend his own case. It seems to me that under the section a man may practice when he is a party. I think the amendment is entirely useless. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from Solano will prevail. I think Justices of the Peace ought to be allowed to practice law, and it would be a beneficial thing to allow attorneys in certain portions of the State to hold that office. Of course, no Justice of the Peace would practice in a case that had once been before him. The Legislature might prohibit a Justice of the Peace acting in the case where he had acted as Justice, but it does seem to me that it would have a tendency to improve the character of a Justice's Court if they were allowed to practice.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not prevail—neither of the amendments offered. I do not believe that a person sitting as a Judge, regularly elected for that special purpose, and not being Judge merely in a particular case and for a particular purpose, but being regularly elected and occupying a judicial position—I do not believe that such a man ought to be allowed to practice law, because if he be allowed to practice law he will be called upon for legal opinions. Everything is against allowing a Judge to be a practicing lawyer outside of his own Court. Now, in my opinion, the section needs but one slight alteration, and if the amendments are voted down I will make a motion to strike out the word "the" in the first line, so that the section will read: "Judges and Justices of the Peace shall not practice law in any Court of the State during their continuance in office."

MR. HILBORN. Would that allow Justices of the Supreme Court to practice? They are called Justices.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I have no doubt that the Chairman of the committee would consent to have it read "Justices of the Supreme Court and Judges and Justices of the Peace." I think that it ought to include every character of judicial officer who sits in a Court and dispenses justice, and I hope that the pending amendments will be voted down and the Chairman of the committee will make that alteration so as to include the Justices of the Supreme Court.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I do not think that I have ever heard any class of men spoken of in lower terms than the Justices of the Peace, in this body. In fact, I heard so much said in regard to their incompetency, that I almost thought that some one would introduce a clause to prohibit Justices of the Peace throughout this State. The great object should be to elevate, if possible, the standard of Justices of the Peace and make their Courts respected. It was contended when another section was pending here that Justices of the Peace understood no law points, consequently were incompetent, and incapable of performing the duties which were given to them by the Constitution of this State heretofore; that the office was terribly behind the age, and that the Justices themselves were behind the age, and incompetent to decide either questions in equity or law. Now, it does appear to me, that by allowing lawyers to be Justices of the Peace, and allowing Justices of the Peace to practice law, that there would be some improvement in this respect. They would all the time be connected with law matters; and in addition to that, we find that very few lawyers would take this position, because they could make more by practicing, and it would be thrown entirely into the hands of those men who never studied law at all. It does appear to me, that by allowing Justices to practice law, the standard of Justices would be improved to a very great extent. They would be thrown into an element where they would come in contact with law and with law questions, and it seems to me that upon this ground alone the amendment offered by the gentleman from Solano is a good one.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I believe that the committee intended to include Justices of the Supreme Court. It may be that they are not included, on account of the use of the word "Judges." There is one matter, it seems to me, that the committee overlooked, and that is, the Judges of such inferior Courts as the Legislature may establish. If a Justice of the Peace shall not be allowed to practice, it seems to me that these Judges should not be. I have an amendment which I propose to offer when I get an opportunity, which will read as follows: "Justices of the Supreme Court, Judges of the Superior Courts, and Judges of such inferior Courts as the Legislature may establish," to be inserted where the word "Judges" is now, so as to read: "The Justices of the Supreme Court, Judges of the Superior Courts, and Judges of such inferior Courts as the Legislature may establish, and Justices of the Peace, shall not practice law in any Court of the State during their continuance in office."

REMARKS OF MR. BELCHER.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: There can be no possible necessity for such an amendment. The word Judge covers all Judges of Courts of record. There is no Court of record, and there can be no Court of record, where the presiding Justice in it is not a Judge, and the word Judges, that we have used here, covers all the Justices of the Supreme Court, Judges of the Superior Courts, and of all Courts that may be established by the Legislature. Now, there can be no necessity for having any other word than that Judges shall not practice. That covers all Judges of Courts of record. Now, if you say that the Justices of the Peace shall not practice, you have covered it all. The only question there can be, is whether you want to exclude Justices of the Peace or not. If you do wish to, then the section is complete as it is. If you do not wish to exclude Justices of the Peace, then that part of it should be stricken out. But, so far as I see, it seems to me that it is right as it is. I can see some impropriety about having Justices of the Peace following a case tried before them to the Superior Court on appeal. If a Justice is practicing law, he might have clients in his practice that would appear before him in other cases. It might affect the judgment of some men. Again, where a case came before him, he might say to himself: If I decide the case for the plaintiff, the defendant may employ me to try the case again. He might expect to be employed, by one party or the other, to take the case on appeal to the Superior Court.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I hope that amendment will be voted down. We often see very ridiculous scenes presented in the interior of this State. We see a system of jugglery going on that does not speak well, to say the very least of it. We see the Justices of the Peace hobnobing with the farmers—those who are having litigation—going on the bench, playing Judge. We want to put a stop to some of this jugglery. The idea of a Justice of the Peace taking a case on both sides. In many cases he advises, counsels, and draws up documents for both plaintiff and defendant. We want this thing stopped.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I do not remember to have ever seen a Justice of the Peace try a case on appeal from his own Court. There may have been such cases, but I do not see how an appellate Court could permit such a practice. That evil I do not apprehend, but if there ever has been such a practice it ought to be remedied by legislation. But I say I never knew a Justice to try a case on appeal from his own Court. I would ask if any other attorney has ever known such a thing. It has been assumed here in this argument. If there is any such thing—really I do not think there is any such thing, for I do not believe any Superior Court would ever permit it—it ought to be provided against by legislation. But if it is proper to put such material into the Constitution of the State, then be consistent in it, and go into the details and specify that Judges of a Court shall not practice in such cases as they have tried. But I suppose such things are not necessary to be provided against in the Constitution of the State.

I think the amendment of the gentleman from Solano ought to be adopted. The amendment of my friend Mr. Barton seems to be unnecessary, so far as practicing in their own cases is concerned, because there is a provision in the bill of rights which gives parties the right to practice in their own cases, and there is no necessity of making that exception which that amendment seems to contemplate. But to say that no Justice of the Peace shall practice law in the State of California is substantially to say that no lawyer shall hold the office of Justice of the Peace. If not, why not? A Justice's Court extends, generally, to the boundaries of his township; for certain purposes, to the boundaries of the county. The Superior Court Judges issue processes throughout the whole State. The Supreme Court Judges are State officers, and of course their jurisdiction extends throughout the State. But why should not a Justice of the Peace in one township in a county be permitted to practice law in other townships. If it is important that he should not be permitted to practice in his own township let the Legislature make such a provision. But to state in the Constitution that a Justice of the Peace shall not practice law, is to state something which I have been unable to find, on an examination of the Constitutions of other States, has ever been put into the Constitution of any State before. It is something that raises up an opposition to the Constitution. It is saying that attorneys who are holding the position of Justices of the Peace must resign their positions, and in the future not accept the office. I think it is a benefit to a community if lawyers will accept this position. The best Justice we have in Alameda County is an attorney. We have several of them who are attorneys. They are gentlemen, sir. They do not do those things which a gentleman's sense of honor would indicate to him he ought not to do. I have read that Thomas Jefferson, after being President of the United States, accepted the office of Justice of the Peace, to give dignity to the position. Sometimes a lawyer retires from an active practice, but at the same time he may take some cases. He may have had a large practice and desire only to have a limited practice, and he would be the best kind of material for a Justice of the Peace. But you say: No, if you are a Justice of the Peace you must not practice any where in the State; you must take no case whatever. I think it is a species of legislation that ought not to be placed in the Constitution of our State.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: In justice to the lawyers of the State of California I hope this amendment will be adopted. I cannot see why the lawyers should be proscribed. There are not enough Judgeships to go round, and unless we permit them to be elected Justices of the Peace the balance of them will not be able to get handles to their names. Very respectable attorneys who have retired from the turmoils of active practice, I think, accept the office of Justice of the Peace, and they make very good and efficient Justices, and they are ever after called Judge. They educate the people up to a higher standard. I hope these amendments will be adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Solano, Mr. Hilborn.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. MORELAND. Mr. Chairman: I send up a substitute for section twenty-two.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No Judge of a Court of record shall practice law in any Court of this State during his continuance in office."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Sonoma.

The substitute was adopted on a division, by a vote of 60 ayes to 17 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section twenty-three.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 23. A Grand Jury shall be composed of twelve jurors, and a concurrence of nine shall be necessary to the making of a presentment or the finding of an indictment.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I send up a substitute for section twenty-three.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Grand Jury shall be composed of seven jurors, and a concurrence of five shall be necessary to the making of a presentment or the finding of an indictment."

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I have very great respect for the report of the Judiciary Committee. I have supported its recommendations down to this section. That committee is composed of some of our ablest lawyers. They took time and deliberation for the formulation of the various sections that they have reported, and in my humble judgment they have done their work well, and I have been sorry to see the spirit arise that has been exhibited in the legion of amendments that have been offered to every proposition. In my judgment the report was so worthy, so able, that it ought to have been accepted as a whole.

MR. EDGERTON. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to what has already been done by the committee in the article on preamble and bill of rights. It is there provided that a Grand Jury shall consist of not less than eighteen. Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order which I made this morning.

MR. CAPLES. I have this to say: If I am wrong in offering this amendment, then the report of the committee is wrong.

MR. EDGERTON. It ought to be stricken out, certainly.

MR. CAPLES. Certainly, if that be the case, but the action is not final, and I shall insist, at the proper time, on correcting what I consider a very great blunder. I believe that it would be the part of wisdom in this committee to reduce the number; and to put so high as fifteen would be, in my judgment, a very great blunder indeed. The committee have improved upon that by recommending twelve, and I merely desire to say, in this connection, that, while I have great respect for the committee and for their report, yet I cannot forget that lawyers, as such, are greatly given to the force of precedent.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? When the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department reported this section the report of the other committee had not been acted upon. Now, would it not be better to leave that standing, and strike out section twenty-three?

MR. CAPLES. I think it would, having once acted upon the other. I withdraw my amendment.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section twenty-three.

The motion prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section twenty-four.

AGE OF JUDGES.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 24. No one shall be eligible to the office of Justice of the Supreme Court unless he be at least thirty-five years of age, and shall have been admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the State; and no one shall be eligible to the office of Judge of the Superior Court unless he be at least thirty years of age, and shall have been admitted to practice before the Supreme Court of the State.

MR. SHURTLEFF. Mr. Chairman: I have a substitute for section twenty-four.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No one shall be eligible to the office of Justice of the Supreme Court, or of the office of Judge of a Superior Court, unless he shall have been admitted to practice in the Supreme Court."

REMARKS OF MR. SHURTLEFF.

MR. SHURTLEFF. Mr. Chairman: That leaves it right where it is in the present Constitution, and requires no qualification as to age. I hope that the substitute will at least have a fair support from the Committee on Judiciary itself. I see nothing in the history of this State that requires that there should be a limitation upon the age of those who are to be eligible to that office. One of the members of the Judiciary Committee, who I am sorry to see is absent now, held the office of Chief Justice when he was only twenty-nine years of age—at least of Justice, and he was made Chief Justice when thirty-one. Another distinguished jurist of this State, long since passed away, Hugh Murray, was called to the Supreme bench at the early age of twenty-seven, and officiated as Chief Justice at twenty-nine. I think that attorneys know that Hugh Murray was one of the most brilliant jurists of this State, young as he was. Now, if we look further, and see how these matters have been in other States, we shall find that many of the best legal minds have been promoted to important positions when young. Levi Woodbury, of New Hampshire, was Chief Justice of the State of New Hampshire at the age of twenty-seven, and was afterward made a Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. He was a man of signal ability, and doubtless in the various positions that he afterward held his experience while on the bench of the Supreme Court of New Hampshire was of benefit to him and to the people. James Medill, of the State of North Carolina, was called to the bench at the age of twenty-six. Hugh L. White, of Tennessee, was made a Justice of the Supreme Court at the age of twenty-eight. Stephen A. Douglas was a Judge of the Supreme Court of Illinois at the age of twenty-eight. Young men, comparatively, have been put upon the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States. Judge Story was appointed there by Mr. Madison, when only thirty-two years of age. I think, therefore, it is unwise to make this limitation. Nobody claims that young men have been put in to the detriment of public interest. We hear no complaint, and I think it would be unwise to make this restriction. I believe in giving the young men a chance. Martin Van Buren, when a little boy playing marbles and flying his kite in the streets of Kinderhook, told his comrade he was going to be President of the United States. He rose quickly to the position of State Senator, then became Attorney-General, and then Governor of the State of New York, then Senator in Congress. He was then appointed Secretary of State by General Jackson and then Minister to England; then was elected Vice-President, and finally reached the goal of his ambition and became President of the United States. I glory—what American does not glory—in the success of the young boy of Kinderhook. It is due to these boys, these young men, that the path of honor shall be left open to them, and I shall not consent, for one, to placing anything in their way. [Applause.]

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say a word in favor of the young men. This is not the first, it is the third attempt to strike at the young men. There is no instance in the State where young men have been elected to office and failed in the discharge of their duties on account of their age, and I am opposed to putting any barrier in their path of advancement. I trust and hope that the older men of this Convention will not adopt such a measure as this that cuts the young men off from all hope of occupying this honorable position until a certain time. I trust the amendment will be adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Napa, Mr. Shurtleff.

The amendment was adopted.

ELECTION OF JUDGES.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer an additional section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Separate ballot boxes shall be provided for the reception of votes for Judges of Courts of record, who shall be voted for upon ballots different from those used in voting for other officers."

REMARKS OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: The reason why I offer this additional section is this: At the first election under this Constitution, should it be adopted, we shall have to vote for a very large number of officers. Heretofore we endeavored to separate the judicial election from the election for other State officers; but it was found that the people would not take enough interest in these separate elections to make it worth while to continue that system. Still, at the same time, it is desirable that you should withdraw the election of these judicial officers as far as possible from the vortex of party politics, and by voting for them on separate tickets, though at the same time and at the same election, the judicial ticket will be placed in such a position that it will be separately considered, to a large extent, by the voters. Now, for instance, in the City of San Francisco they will have to vote for twelve Superior Judges and seven Supreme Court Judges at the first election. In the other parts of the State there will be eight or nine names upon the judicial ticket. It ought to be considered separately; it ought not to be crowded in with the other State officers. It ought to be considered as being, to a certain extent, apart from politics. I know that is my own practice in relation to such matters, and I hope that the practice will become more general, so that when we take up our judicial tickets we will take them and compare them together, and vote for the best men as far as possible, and that irrespective of party. I therefore offer this additional section, as I think it will conduce to this end.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the additional section offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell.

The amendment was rejected on a division, by a vote of 34 ayes to 47 noes.

MR. BELCHER. I move that the committee rise and report back this article to the Convention, with the amendments, with the recommendation that the usual number of copies be printed.

MR. EAGON. Mr. Chairman: I ask that we return to section eight. I have an amendment to offer to that section which I know will meet with no opposition.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to section eight the following: 'but this section shall not be construed as prohibiting the local Judge from holding Court at the same time.'"

MR. EAGON. Mr. Chairman: Now, in cases of that kind, it is always in some case that the local Judge is, perhaps, disqualified on account of his having been engaged in the case prior to his election as Judge. The object of this amendment is, that while the Judge pro tempore is trying such a case, the local Judge may hold Court in other cases at the same time and facilitate business. They cannot do it under the section as it is. The Supreme Court have held that the local Judge cannot hold Court at the same time.

MR. EDGERTON. For instance, this Sixth Judicial District Court is a unit; it cannot be at two places at the same time.

MR. FAWCETT. Mr. Chairman: I think that amendment will produce incalculable confusion if it is put into the judicial system. Now, the Courts of the counties are organized on certain basis. We will suppose that one Court is open for a particular county; there are cases on the calendar in which the Judge is disqualified, and he calls in another Judge to sit in these cases. The two Courts could not go on at the same time without producing the greatest confusion. No facilities would have been provided; there would be but one Court-room, there would be but one Clerk, there would be but one set of officers, but one set of records, and it would be almost impossible to organize and hold two Courts at the same time; there would be but one calendar, and preparations would have been made generally for the holding of but one Court at the same time.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I rise to a point of order. My point of order is, that we have already passed this section, and that it is not competent for the committee to go back to it now.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair would not have entertained the motion if there had been any objection. The Chair entertained it because there was no objection. The Chair decides the point of order not well taken.

MR. EDGERTON. I ask for the reading of the amendment.

MR. MCCALLUM. The gentleman from Amador said that he had an amendment to which there would be no objection. After the amendment was presented then objection was made. That was the first opportunity there was to make objection. Therefore objection was made to entertaining the motion. That makes a great deal of difference.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand it so. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. BELCHER. I now renew the motion that the committee rise and report this article, with the amendments, back to the Convention for adoption.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

Mr. Tinnin in the chair.

THE CHAIR. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the article on judicial department, have made amendments thereto, and report the same back to the Convention with recommendation that it be adopted.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. President: I now move that nine hundred and sixty copies of the article with the amendments be printed.

MR. ROLFE. Will the gentleman give way until I make one motion. My motion is, that we refer the report of the Committee on Judiciary and Judicial Department back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to amend section four so that appeals shall not lie to the Supreme Court from cases in equity arising before Justices of the Peace. If the Chair will permit me I will state that on motion of Mr. Freeman an amendment was adopted to section eleven, which gave equity jurisdiction in cases under three hundred dollars in regard to personal property. Now, if gentlemen will refer to section four they will see that it provides that the Supreme Court shall have appellate jurisdiction in all cases in equity. Now, I do not suppose that it was the intention of this Convention when they adopted that amendment to section eleven, that it was intended that an appeal should go directly from a Justice's Court to the Supreme Court.

MR. BELCHER. I rise to a point of order. As I understand it, this report has been acted upon by the Committee of the Whole, and has been reported back to the Convention, and it is not in order now to go back and amend it. The amendments necessary must be made in the Convention when it comes up.

MR. ROLFE. The same thing was done when we had section twenty of the report of the Committee on Corporations before us.

THE CHAIR. The point of order of the gentleman is well taken, for we would have to reconsider the vote before we could go back with it.

MR. BELCHER. I now move that four hundred and eighty copies of the report and amendments be printed.

MR. EDGERTON. I move to amend, that nine hundred and sixty copies be printed. There are about a thousand lawyers in San Francisco who are sending after copies now. So far as the cost is concerned, four hundred and eighty copies cost almost as much as nine hundred and sixty.

MR. BELCHER. I accept the amendment.

MR. GRACE. If it is true, as the gentleman says, that there are a thousand lawyers in San Francisco that will be sending for copies, the gentleman can send one copy to a lawyer, and nine hundred and sixty of them can get together and have as many copies published as they want.

MR. EDGERTON. The additional cost would amount to nothing, and there might be some needed at a sand-lot meeting. I have no objection to their having them.

The motion prevailed.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

MR. EAGON. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, Mr. Tinnin in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Right of Suffrage.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section one.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 1. Every native male citizen of the United States, and every naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the State one year next preceding the election, and of the election district in which he claims his vote ninety days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law; provided, that no idiot, insane person, or person convicted of any infamous crime, shall be entitled to the privileges of an elector; provided, that the Legislature may by law remove in whole, or in part, the disabilities to exercise the elective franchise on account of sex.

THE CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments to section one pending. The gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer, moves to amend by striking out the word "male," in the first line. Mr. Tinnin moves to amend by striking out all after the word "elector," in the eighth line.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I have taken great interest in this subject. I had intended to offer some remarks in advocacy of woman suffrage. To undertake, however, to discuss such a question, and particularly the unpopular side of it, under the ten minutes rule, would be utterly vain and idle. I will content myself, therefore, by stating, generally, that I am in favor of woman suffrage. I shall vote now for the amendment of the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer. I would prefer an amendment prepared by myself, which proposes to introduce the change gradually; but there would be no time to argue its provisions. I believe that government derives its just powers from the consent of the governed; that representation in the Legislature is an inherent right, "formidable only to tyrants;" and that the people are the source of all political power. Women constitute nearly one half of the people. As a rule they are neither criminals, lunatics, nor foreigners. Most of them are native-born citizens of good character and repute, and of the Caucasian race. How, then, does it come, sir, that they have no more political rights on this free American soil, on which they and their ancestors were born, than Chinamen or State prison convicts? Is there any right, or justice, or decency, in a law which gives the elective franchise to the most ignorant, debased, and brutal man in the land, whether born here or abroad, and denies it to Mrs. Stanton, a cultivated and intellectual woman, descended from revolutionary forefathers, and able to go before a committee of the United States Senate and make an argument on constitutional law that would have done credit to any gentleman on this floor or in this nation? No gentleman here will undertake to argue the affirmative of the question. But customs and prejudices, handed down from sire to son for generations, are hard to overcome by argument and reason. At least, it cannot be successfully done in ten minutes. I therefore leave this question, at least for the present.

REMARKS OF MR. EAGON.

MR. EAGON. Mr. Chairman: As Chairman of this committee I have a few words to say, and I will start out by saying that I am opposed to both of the amendments. I am opposed to striking out the word "male" in our present Constitution, or in this. I, however, am not averse to leaving this matter to the Legislature, that they may decide upon a question of so much importance as this is. I have but very little to say in opposition to either of these amendments. I believe that the Legislature is the proper place to decide upon a question of this kind. There are many good reasons why the suffrage should be extended to women; these are good reasons, in my judgment, why it should not. I am in favor of a full and fair discussion of this question by the friends and the enemies of the proposition. It has been conceded upon almost every proposition in this Convention that a full and fair discussion should be had upon the question. This, sir, is somewhat a new proposition to the people of the State of California. There are gentlemen here who are in favor of striking out the word "male" in the Constitution, and extending the suffrage to women. I am anxious to hear those gentlemen. They are anxious to make their statements to the Convention, and I think that it would be but just to them and the cause they advocate, to give a portion of them, at least, full time to present their views to this body, that we may know what we are voting upon, and know the reasons these gentlemen have to offer. I would willingly give up the time that is allotted to me, to any gentleman who desires to speak on this question. No man can attempt an argument upon a question like this in the short time allotted by our rules. I hope that the time will be given to certain gentlemen who desire to speak upon this question. It will not take long, and there will be but very little difference of opinion except as to this one point. I hope that they will have the time allowed to them. I will give away the half hour allowed me, and any gentleman who wishes the floor can have my time. I concede the half hour allowed me to Judge Steele.

REMARKS OF MR. STEELE.

MR. STEELE. Mr. Chairman: I do not know that I shall care to occupy half an hour, but I will say what I have to say as briefly as possible. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer. In regard to the importance and magnitude of this subject, it needs only to be said that it vitally concerns the interests and political rights of one half of the citizens of this commonwealth. I am in favor of this amendment, because I believe it is right and just, and as it should be; and if I succeed in making this as clear to the committee as it is to my own mind, this word "male" will be stricken from this section. Sir, the word "male," as used in this section, has a double signification to my mind, indicating not only the distinction of sex, but also that garb of ignorance and prejudice with which man has clad himself as with a coat of mail, thereby rendering his reason and conscience impervious and almost impregnable to the advocates of equal rights and privileges.

In the first place, sir, one half of the people—and I assume the better half—who constitute and compose the citizens of this great State, are not males, but females; not men, but women, who, with the males, are equally interested in the peace and prosperity of the country; in the happiness and well-being of the people; in the justice and righteousness of the laws by which their country is governed; in the economy and purity of the administration; in the purity of the press and the free institutions of the country. And yet, sir, woman has no voice in the selection and election of the officers. Her's is the life of the slave to obey; his the self-asserted right to command. Her's is the right to pay taxes, to be tried at the tribunal and punished as a felon under laws which she has no part or lot in making, and yet she is one half of the human family.

MR. LINDOW. I move the previous question.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from San Luis Obispo has the floor.

MR. MCCONNELL. Judge Steele is evidently sick.

MR. STEELE. I am sick and not able to speak farther.

SPEECH OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: As has been said, it is a matter of impossibility to present the arguments upon this question in ten minutes, but I will endeavor not to occupy the attention of the committee any longer than that. I shall confine myself strictly to a few reasons why, in my judgment, this matter has not been adjusted upon the basis of right previous to this. This is not a new question. It is only new in this particular phase, in this country particularly, in the effort to extend the right of suffrage to women. In the early history of this country suffrage was not universal among men, but there were qualifications that were essential to the exercise of this right: and not only in this country but in others the right of suffrage has been extended beyond the limits which it formerly occupied. There is one thing in connection with this that we ought to look at; one reason why this demand has always been acceded to. Sir, Magna Charta, that great charter of liberty to the English people, and indirectly to the people who speak that language all over the world, was wrung from the hands of King John at the point of the sword. And again, when, in 'thirty-one-two, the measures which culminated in the passage of the reform bill in the English Parliament were agitating the people, it was said that the whole country quivered upon the very verge of destruction. There was a revolution around this demand, and for that reason it was granted. So it was in this country when the demand came for the extension of this right to those who did not have the property qualification. These men came before the country with the demand in one hand and a possible revolution in the other, and for that reason it was granted. But, sir, there is no menace in this demand; it is simply a question of right. It is a demand for justice because it is the best policy. And shall we deny it because it does not come with force? There is no justice in that.

It is said, however, that it is degrading—that the woman will be degraded thereby. Mr. Chairman, shall we adopt the principle that self-government is degrading? Will the gentlemen upon this floor admit that doctrine? I do not mean by politics, but I mean by self-government. Is self-government degrading? No gentleman will contend that it is. But, sir, it is said that the women are not able to undertake this, that they are the weaker sex; that they should be dependent. Why, Mr. Chairman, governments are made for the weak. And shall we say that because they are weaker they shall bear all the disabilities of the government, while they who are stronger shall be protected? That argument cannot hold. But, sir, the point of resistance that we generally meet is, that women cannot fight, and when they have made that statement they fall back with perfect security in the belief that that argument cannot be overthrown; well, I leave it for the gentlemen to decide from their own experience, whether they can or not. I should be inclined to take the view that they can, but others may feel differently. In the first place, is fighting all there is to be done in this country? And if they cannot fight, I beg to ask the gentleman if there is nothing done in those troubled times, when war sweeps over the face of the land, that women can do better than men and if women do not always come up and do the work that they can do? And further than that, though they should stay at home, they are the sufferers, twice told, beyond those who take up the fight and go into the excitement and the rush of the battle. The government must be supported, and it is in times like these that the women of this and other countries have shown their value. Look at our own terrible struggle. There came these angels of mercy to the camps and hospitals, and they did what no other hands could do. Look at the greatest heroes of the wars of the world and tell me who of them all did as much as Miss Florence Nightingale? And yet we are told women can not fight, and that answers the argument. There is another consideration. Voting is a contrivance to do away with a necessity for fighting. Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed. If women are governed they must give their consent or there is no just government. How can they give their consent? The ballot is but an authoritative expression of the will of the people in regard to public measures and public men. Why, then, should we say that one half of the community shall be deprived of the privilege of giving that expression, and that in an authoritative manner, in regard to public measures and public men? But, sir, I must hurry over all this part of the question. This is not entirely an experiment, but a principle of government that has already been tried in one portion of our country, and while reports have been circulated that in this, Wyoming, it has not been a success, yet, sir, I think that is only a one-sided and prejudiced argument. The facts of the case are, and the proofs can be had, that it is a success. First, I propose to read an extract from a letter written by Chief Justice Kingman, of Wyoming, dated December twenty-sixth, eighteen hundred and seventy-two:

"It is now three years since the Act was passed giving women the right of suffrage and the right to hold office in this Territory, in all respects the same as other electors. Under this law they have been elected and appointed to various offices, and have acted as jurors and Justices of the Peace. They have very generally voted at all our elections, and have taken some part in making the nominations; and although there are some among us who do not approve of it as a principle, I think there is no one who will deny that it has had a marked influence in elevating our elections, and making them quiet and orderly, and in enabling the Courts to punish classes of crime where convictions could not be obtained without their aid."

In another part of the letter, he says:

"There is another matter in which we have been greatly benefited by this law, and that is the change it has wrought on election days, and its influence at the polls. Formerly our elections were scenes of drunken revel and noise, of fighting and riot. But when the women came to vote they were always treated with the attention and respect everywhere shown to women in the United States. If there was a crowd around the polls they always gave way when a woman approached, and were silent and orderly while she deposited her vote and went away."

In regard to women serving on juries, he says:

"There are comparatively so few women here, and those are so generally kept at home by domestic duties, that the Courts have been unable to obtain as many of them for jurors as was desirable; but those who have served have uniformly acquitted themselves with great credit. Not a single verdict, civil or criminal, has been set aside where women have composed a part of the jury. This has not been the case, by any means, when they have not been present."

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's ten minutes have expired.

["Leave!" "Leave!"]

MR. HOWARD. I object.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I am on the other side, but I cheerfully yield my time to Mr. Blackmer.

MR. ROLFE. If necessary, I will yield mine, although I am on the other side.

MR. TULLY. The gentleman can have my time.

MR. AYERS. And mine, too.

MR. KENNY. And mine, too.

MR. BLACKMER. Gentlemen, I thank you, but I will endeavor to be brief. I only regret that I did not know that these gentlemen would be so kind to me, or I certainly would have gone on with the argument from the beginning, as I had somewhat prepared myself with a few notes to do. But I will not occupy, much longer, the attention of the committee. I wish, first, to call attention to an extract from the annual message of Governor Campbell, of Wyoming, in eighteen hundred and seventy-three. He says:

"The experiment of granting to women a voice in the Government, which was inaugurated for the first time in the history of our country by the first legislative assembly of Wyoming, has now been tried for four years. I have heretofore taken occasion to express my views in regard to the wisdom and justice of this measure, and my conviction that its adoption had been attended only by good results. Two years more of observation of the practical working of the system have only served to deepen my conviction that what we in this Territory have done has been well done, and that our system of impartial suffrage is an unequalled success."

Now, in answer to the position of the Alta, that it is not a success, I desire to read what was said by one who was there as an eye witness at the last election in that Territory. It is a quotation from a speech delivered by Miss Hindman, of Colorado, who visited Wyoming during the last election:

"The day before election she had interviewed many prominent citizens on the success of woman suffrage. One politician said one of the greatest objections to suffrage was that the women would not stick to the party; they scratched their ticket in a very disgusting manner. The testimony of the best people of the city was, that the best ladies of the city voted, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding. In Cheyenne there were two polling places, at one of which the women generally voted. This poll was in a room of the principal hotel, where ladies could come and go without molestation. The speaker said, if she was any judge of human nature, the countenances of the voting ladies indicated a high degree of culture and refinement. Each lady had her ticket ready when she reached the polls, and after voting it, went away without any disturbance.

"The women did scratch considerably, and consequently, in a close district, one man ran nine hundred votes ahead of his ticket, simply on account of his high moral character. Not one vote was challenged, so much did the men have confidence in the honor of the ladies. Instead of roughs, the poll was surrounded by gentlemen. Not an oath was uttered, no tobacco was used, and the gathering was most orderly. Cheyenne is sometimes considered the worst town in the United States, and the orderly voting, and the almost entire freedom from corruption, are due almost entirely to the woman suffrage. Formerly, irresponsible persons were in a majority, and imposed burdensome taxes on the people. Now, the wives, mothers, and sisters of property owners counteract the influence of the floating population. The speaker closed by declaring that a mere visit to the Territory during election time would convince the most prejudiced that woman suffrage, in its practical bearing, could not be otherwise than successful, and that she hoped to live to see the day when the elective franchise would be extended to the women all over the United States."

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is said by many that we have no right, or that we ought not to agitate this question now, because there has not been any great pressing demand made upon this Convention for this change; but, sir, I beg to call attention to the fact that we have had petition after petition sent up here upon this very question from many portions of the State. I had the honor to present one that contained almost a thousand names. And besides that, it seems to me that we are here to find out not what has been done in other States, not what has been done in this State, not to say what the present Constitution determines, but to find out what ought to be done, and when we have found that out we must give them that right, no matter what stands in the way. My constituents knew when they sent me here that I would advocate this measure when it was presented; and although it may be the fact that a majority of them, being all men who are qualified to vote, might vote in opposition to it, yet, sir, I believe it is my duty, as I believe it to be a matter of right and justice, to advocate this measure.

Mr. Chairman, equity knows no sex. It is a strange thing in our country, that no matter how wise or intelligent a woman may be, she is deprived of all political right, of all voice, of all authoritative expression, as to government and governmental measures; while in other countries control may be vested in one hand, and that the hand of a woman. Look at our mother country to-day, governed by one, and that one a woman; and yet if that very woman to-day should come to this State of California, and throw off her allegiance to our mother country, make herself a resident, and be naturalized in this country, as she may be under our laws, she would not be allowed to step up to the polls and vote for a man even for an educational office in this State, and yet in her own country she is the peer of any statesman they have. And yet men are content to say that they should have no voice in our own country, not even the simple opportunity to go, in her own quiet way, to the ballot box, and express her opinion in an authoritative way, as do men. There is no justice in an aristocracy of sex. There is no reason in it. They are taxed without representation, and taxation without representation, a hundred years ago, was considered tyranny. They are governed without their consent, and that same thing fell under the same ban one hundred years ago.

We are told, sir, that they will be represented, and that those who have the ballot will certainly provide such governmental measures as will be for the best interests of women as well as for themselves. But, sir, that has been the argument with the men in power forever. It was the argument of the mother country when the colonies were struggling. They said that the measures that were provided for the government of this country would be those that were the best for ourselves and the best for them. The governmental class says, we shall provide just measures because they will be just for us.

But, sir, that programme does not work for the weak. They are not always satisfied, and if not, their only opportunity for showing their disposition to object is lost. They are amenable to the laws; they must be punished for their violation; and, by the way, that is the only place, in a political sense, in this country, where they are equal. If they disobey the laws that are made without their consent they may be punished. And, sir, they are put upon a level in this country with no class of people but the despised Chinamen. It is true, politically they stand in the same position occupied by aliens who have no right to become citizens. They are a class disfranchised, and, sir, it is inconceivable in any government professing to be a republic, for any one class to hold the political power and the other have no voice in it. The instance has never been known in any country of a political class holding supreme power without abusing it, and it is so here; and it must always be so. Women are in a condition of political servitude, as much so as any class has ever been in this country. Politically they are serfs and servants, while a man, sir, may be an imbecile or a criminal and none question his right to a voice. A woman may have all the virtues that adorn humanity, but because her sex differs from ours she must be forever our slave. Because we are physically the stronger—and that is the only secret of the question—because we are physically the stronger, we must forbid her the right to a voice in our government. If circumstances had been reversed and the ballot had fallen to the lot of women, while physical strength had remained as it is, do gentlemen suppose that men would have so long been contented without the use of the ballot? No, sir. They would have appeared, as they always have done in the demand for an extension of this right, with the demand in one hand and a revolution in the other. How contemptible, then, to deny to them this right simply because they are the weaker, for there is no other argument. Shame upon such cowardly tyranny! Shame upon the indecency of such discrimination against the weaker and better half of the human family!

Mr. Chairman, this is a question that we must meet. If we do not meet it now, we must meet it in the near future. It is coming up the steps of time, and this old world is growing brighter; and if we are true to ourselves; if we are true to the trust that is imposed upon us; if we look to see, not what is, but what ought to be, we shall help to bring on this golden time when man and woman shall be equal before the law; when those who are governed shall be those who have a voice in that government; when those who are taxed shall be those who have a right to say for what purposes they shall be taxed. And we must do it now. We should not wait until this gets to be a popular movement. It is only the coward who waits for an opportunity; he who is brave makes it.

SPEECH OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: As the author of the minority report, it will be deemed proper that I should have something to say. I am not here to indulge in any after-dinner speech, in compliments, spread-eagle, or otherwise; but I am here to perform a solemn duty, to speak the truth, and I will do it, though the heavens fall. I am here, sir, to defend the virtue of woman, the honor of man, the experience of mankind, and the eternal decrees of the God of the universe. What is it, Mr. Chairman, that is demanded of us here? What! the ballot for the women? Is that it? No, sir; that is but the beginning of an end; that is but the entering wedge; and I appeal to the intelligence of every gentleman present to sustain me in the charge that every assemblage, every convention, of the devotees of this lunacy, have proclaimed that equality for the sexes was what they demanded. Equality; not merely the right to vote, because the right to vote carries with it all the co-relative obligations of citizenship; because the elector is entitled to hold office; to engage in anything, to engage in everything. If she may vote, she may go down to all the dirty, vile trickeries of primary politics; may hold office, and may do anything and everything that man does. And that is exactly what they claim and what they demand in every Convention that they ever held in the country. And while I may not have time to refer to the authorities to prove this, I shall be compelled to appeal to the intelligence of gentlemen upon this floor to sustain me in the assertion, that what they demand is equality; the right to do whatever men do; the right to be as bad as men are. And I declare in the presence of this assemblage and high heaven, that all my own experience goes to show that the inevitable result of such a policy would be to drag her down from the high, and exalted, and God-given relation that she now occupies, into the very filth and mire of degradation and human infamy.

Mr. Chairman, what is the common experience of mankind in regard to this matter? What is the experience of six thousand years of humanity in the struggle for existence? It is plain as the noonday sun that the society of to-day is but the evolutionary process, or the results of that evolutionary process, that we call human experience. For thousands of years mankind have, under various conditions, been making the struggle for existence, and the society that exists to-day, governmental, social, religious, and otherwise, is simply the result of that evolutionary process. It is not the arbitrary dictation of one man; it is the result of the force of nature, the struggle for existence in which man has been placed. I desire, Mr. Chairman, as illustrating the truth of what I have said, to read from an English authority. I read from the "Science Monthly," quoting from the "Quarterly Journal of Science," and from an author of great standing; he says:

"There is in particular one question now agitating human society, which seems particularly to require such treatment. Every one knows, that of late years a movement has sprung up to secure for women as contradistinguished from men, certain rights, liberties, and powers, of which it is contended they have been arbitrarily and wrongfully deprived. To define this movement, and to formulate distinctly the demand of its supporters, is a scarcely possible task. Innovators and agitators of all kinds enjoy the advantage that they cannot be tied down to any fixed set of propositions by which, and by whose logical consequences, they are prepared to stand or fall. On the contrary, if one ground is found untenable another is instantly taken up; what satisfies one champion of the cause is rejected by another; and what to-day is accepted as final—as in the case of the anti-vivisection movement—is to-morrow proclaimed a mere installment, and made the basis of fresh demands. Perhaps we may best describe the movement as an attempt to obliterate all—save the purely structural—distinctness between man and woman, and to establish between them a complete identity of duties and functions in place of that separation which has, more or less, hitherto always existed. That certain speakers and writers, not content with mere identification, go on to inversion, and would assign to men the particular tasks now allotted to women, though a significant fact, need not detain our attention. It is no use laughing at this agitation as the outcome of a mere crotchet. In certain states of the moral atmosphere crotchets spread just as do epidemics—which they closely resemble—in certain conditions of the physical atmosphere and other surroundings of man. Who would attempt to deal with the cholera or smallpox by ridicule, how pungent and incisive soever?"

So it appears that in England, as well as in the United States, the demand is for an utter abolition of all distinctions of rights, immunities, privileges, and obligations; that women shall be made men; that men shall be made women. That is the demand.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one word in regard to the arguments made upon the other side of this question, and they may be all concentrated in a quotation from the Declaration of Independence, as near as I have heard them. It is the old cry. Let us see what there is in it. Taxation and representation should go together. Now, what did the fathers mean by that? Did they mean that all men should hold the ballot in their hands, to say nothing of all women? Why, Mr. Chairman, at that time universal suffrage was unthought of. Suffrage was confined to the few, to the privileged class, and the idea of women voting had never been conceived of at that time. Was it that all men, not to say all women, should hold the ballot, that the fathers objected to the tax on tea? Certainly, every gentleman who knows history knows that if the colonies had been represented in the British Parliament by a constituency composed of one third, one fourth, or one tenth of what we would call the male citizens of the colonies, nobody would have raised an objection. They were taxed without representation. What was meant? That the colonies were entitled to the privileges of British subjects; that is, to be represented in Parliament. Not by men or women—not by all men—because, as I have before said, the idea was unknown. Universal suffrage, or what we call manhood suffrage, did not exist, and never had existed at that time.

One word in regard to the genesis and philosophy of manhood suffrage. Why should man hold the ballot, and why should not woman hold it? What a man earns is his own. I state it as a dogma. What is political sovereignty? It is the fruits of the sword. It has always been the fruits of the sword. Take our own country as an illustration. How do we find it? The colonies came here from Great Britain, not demanding sovereign rights, not demanding the right to go back and undo society and reconstruct it. By no means. They came here as the humble servants of his Britannic Majesty, seeking to benefit themselves and their posterity. But when they were denied the representation of British subjects—and I wish again to call attention to what constitutes the rights of British subjects—it was not that all men should vote, to say nothing about women; it was at that time that a certain select number, both in Great Britain and the colonies, as a privileged class, voted. Then, Mr. Chairman, we find that political sovereignty, that power that we represent with the ballot, is the creature of the sword; was won by the sword. The fathers, when they rebelled, did they win that sovereign power by a declaration that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed? If they had depended upon such ammunition as that they would very soon have been cinched. They relied upon something more substantial—upon powder and lead, upon the sword—and they won that political sovereignty that we enjoy, and that the ballot-box represents to-day. Has it been indicated since? Certainly. The sword won it, and the sword has defended it. Now, right here we get the key to manhood suffrage. And allow me to say in this Convention, that property, as property, never has voted anywhere. They claim that women should vote because they sometimes have property. I deny that property ever voted anywhere. It does not vote to-day. The tramp, begging his grub on the road, casts one ballot, and so does Governor Stanford, and no more. And why is this so? Everything that exists in this world exists by virtue of a cause. Let us go back and see what that cause is. It is not because he has got property that he is allowed the franchise, because we know that we have provided in the Constitution that even the tramp who begs his grub upon the roads shall have the ballot. Why? Because the sovereign authority represented by the ballot is sustained by the sword that he is able to wield. The Government may and does call upon him for military support.

[Cries of "Leave;" "Leave."]

MR. CAPLES. The Government demands of him that support, and enforces it if needs be, upon which depends the perpetuity of that sovereign power represented by the ballot. And right here is the philosophy, the equity, the justice, and the common sense of universal or manhood suffrage. But, while we discuss the philosophy of this manhood suffrage, we see that it had no application to women. And why not? Simply because the eternal fiat of God and nature has decreed that they are not so constituted. They lack the physical power, the physical courage, the endurance—not to say that it would interfere with and defeat the great end of creation, the reproduction of our species.

Now, gentlemen have much to say in regard to the oppression of women. Now, I want to know where it comes in. Sometimes they pay taxes. They do not vote, consequently they are oppressed. Are they oppressed when they are not permitted to pay a poll tax? Are they oppressed when they are not permitted to work upon the roads? Are they oppressed when they are not permitted to enter the ranks of the army, to defend the flag that protects them? Is it then that they are oppressed? Are they oppressed when the lady comes into the car door and the gentleman gets up and surrenders his seat to her? Is it then that they are oppressed? When they are wronged, immediately every manly arm is outstretched to defend them, and the privilege of defending themselves is taken out of their hands. Is it then that they are oppressed? I cannot see any oppression in this. Is it not a fact that their sex itself is a title of nobility? I assert that such is the case. In our free land, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the fact is that her sex is the equivalent to a patent of nobility. She is everywhere respected, honored, and cherished as a being above, infinitely above man, in all the moral attributes. Is this oppression, that she should be so regarded?

I deny, Mr. Chairman, that there is one scintilla of truth in the assertion that woman is oppressed. Men shield and protect and defend her as a being better than themselves. Yes; I say better than themselves. Show me that man who does not treat and respect his daughter and his wife above, infinitely above, his sons—show me such a man—and I will show you a brute. No, sir; it may be true in some cases; it may have been true in some ages, and I know that it is true in some barbarous nations, that women are oppressed. And in this connection I may be pardoned for telling an anecdote that occurred to me when I was a boy. I met an Indian and his wife—his squaw—in the woods where I was hunting. The woman had on her back a load of pumpkins, nearly enough for a mule to carry, and her papoose strapped on top of the pumpkins. I says to the buck: "You take that load off your squaw's back and carry it." "No, no," he said. I had a rifle, and I told him I would put a hole through him if he did not do it, and I made him take it and pack it off. In that instance I admit that the woman was oppressed. But is it true of our men? Is it true of the American people? I denounce the assertion as the very concentration of everything that is false. Is it not notorious to every gentleman on this floor that our people here in California always have been in the habit—and I plead guilty to the charge myself—of educating our daughters up to a higher standard than we have our sons. I have no doubt that every gentleman present who is in moderate circumstances will do the same thing, because of that tenderness of regard that we feel for her because she is a woman. Mr. Chairman, I desire, in illustrating the folly of this crusade against society, against nature, and against God, to quote again from that high authority to show that it is a rebellion against nature, against humanity, and against God. He says:

"It would be ridiculous to suppose that all these diversities, structural and functional, are objectless, and do not imply a corresponding diversity of duties. This accordingly we find to be the case: the male, at least in all species which form unions of any degree of permanence—whether monogamous or polygamous—defends and protects the female and her young ones. Thus, if a herd of elephants is menaced, the most powerful tuskers take their station on the side where danger appears, while the females and the young are placed as far as possible out of harm's way. If bisons are attacked by wolves, the bulls form a circle, inclosing the cows and calves. A similar order is adopted by wild horses. A gorilla will encounter any danger in defense of his mate, and even among baboons the old males will face an approaching enemy, while the weaker members of the troop make good their escape. A lion has been seen in the same manner covering the retreat of his lioness and her cubs."

What I wish to show from this is that man in his present condition and the present state of society is but the result of that higher development that we see illustrated in a lower degree in those classes of animals that are the lowest in the scale of existence. If we take for example the lower orders of creation we learn from their habits something of that primal condition in which man existed prior to the date of histories. Everywhere we find that the intention of the male is a protector and defender. Why is this so? Simply, Mr. Chairman, because it is the law of the great Creator and the law of our being. And if it were possible for the folly of this age to reverse and undo that which nature and nature's God has done, what would be the result?

Now, Mr. Chairman, while I admit that it is within the province of human folly to go so far as to reverse the order of nature, I know, and every gentleman knows, that while we may not repeal the laws of nature, we may violate them. And if we do we must reap the reward; we must receive the penalty. These great laws are not arbitrary, but are the outgrowth of human interests and human experience, and of the struggle of mankind for existence. I deny, Mr. Chairman, that there is anything arbitrary in the condition of society as it exists here and elsewhere. There is nothing arbitrary about it. It is simply the outgrowth of human interests, growing out of the struggle for existence; and in that connection I desire to read from the same author, showing that any attempt to reverse these conditions upon which mankind exists now, or defying, or outraging, or attempting to override the aggregate and the concrete experience of mankind, would result in retrograde action. He shows most conclusively, although I have not time to read it all, that any attempt to reverse these conditions that we find existing now would be retrograde in action; that the tendency would be to send us backward instead of forward in the march of progress. He says:

"We have, therefore, in fine, full ground for maintaining that the 'woman's rights movement' is an attempt to rear, by a process of unnatural selection, a race of monstrosities—hostile alike to men, to normal women, to human society, and to the future development of our race. We know that the modern 'honorary Secretary' is always ready to exclaim, 'Let heaven and earth perish, so my crotchet may be realized!' But we would bid him ask himself whether the end is worth the means."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to talk frankly upon this subject. Why should we ignore the experience of the human race and attempt to set up an abnormal condition of things that have never existed before? Where is the argument? Well, they go at us with the old Declaration of Independence. I have shown, I hope, Mr. Chairman, that there is absolutely no ground for assuming any parallel in this case. I have shown that the suffrage that was meant at that time not only did not mean women, but did not mean all men. I have shown the reason and philosophy and design of manhood suffrage. I have shown that political power rests upon the sword, is maintained by the sword, and that men alone are capable of wielding that sword. Is this true, or is it not? Can you point to a single instance in the history of any sovereignty that has ever existed by virtue of any other power but the sword? Can you point to any power, any political sovereignty, that ever existed save and alone by the sword? Perhaps our fathers thought that they had established a government sustained by the consent of the governed, resting upon the consent of the governed, that it might exist in that form. Did they believe so? Certainly not. They made preparations to defend it with the sword, and they have defended it with the sword, and if it had not been defended by the sword would it have existed to-day? Who will say that it would have existed to-day? Where would be that power that you represent at the ballot-box to-day but for that sword that has maintained it from the time of the Revolution down to the present day? Do we believe we can maintain it in the future by any other means than the same means that has sustained political power to the present day?

MR. MCFARLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman if he holds that the right to vote depends upon skill in wielding the sword? If that be so, I know a little actress who can run the gentleman through the ribs in two minutes.

MR. CAPLES. The right to vote, the power of sovereignty, does rest right squarely upon the basis of the ability of men to wield the sword. It is true we cannot make distinctions, and say because one man is physically weak and another is physically strong, that therefore the strong man shall vote twice and the weaker one vote once. Neither would it be just to say, taking manhood suffrage as a basis, that a man physically disabled, or an old man, should be disqualified. He may have been disabled in various ways, but at some time or other he owed a duty to the Government to sustain it with sword. But the gentleman would say some men never were, perhaps, capable. But, sir, we cannot make exceptions; and I remind the gentleman that no human system that ever was devised was perfect, or could do exact justice; and I think I have heard the gentleman use that very remark himself. Whether I have or not, I heard it from others, and it is eminently true. It is utterly impossible to do exact and mathematical justice in all cases. It is beyond the skill and ingenuity of man to do it; and it has been wisely said that imperfection adheres to every work of man. But the rule, I say, is a good one. I say, that the philosophy of manhood suffrage is based upon solid grounds; because what would hold wealth up; what would hold sovereignty up; what would hold political rights, the Constitution, and the Government itself up, without the sword to maintain and defend them? It would not exist five years, one year, one month. All human experience proves that all political power is the creature of physical force.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, I desire to say, in regard to the report of the committee, that it is in the worst possible form in which the question could have been presented. Why, sir, it would be better, if we were going to commit this folly, to put it in the Constitution, and not leave it for the Legislature. It would attract a corrupting and demoralizing lobby in perpetuity, through all time. Such would inevitably be the result, because we all know that our people are too sober yet to commit this great folly. But in the course of time, no telling. As this authority says, it is a disease that is spreading, and we do not know but what in time we may reach that stage and state of folly. But until that time, we should have a corrupting, degrading, demoralizing lobby, forever besieging our Legislature about this supposed right.

Now, in regard to this great central idea. Would it degrade and corrupt women to be made men—to be invested with this right? Let us, for a moment, consider the matter deliberately. Let us bring it home. Let every man take it to his own door and see what it looks like; bring it up to his own eye, so that he can see it. Imagine, my friend, this state of things. Your wife, a candidate for the Legislature, stumping the county; your daughter locked up in the jury box all night; you, with the newspaper, reading the account of the canvass in which your wife was engaged against John Doe; and John Doe, not being a very gallant man, and a little given to scandal, begins, first, to assert that she is not exactly like Cæsar's wife. Next time he pronounces, boldly, that she is no better than she should be. You, at home, rocking the cradle with one hand and holding the newspaper with the other, and reading this scandal that is being circulated in the newspapers in regard to your wife. Do you like the picture? [Laughter.] Wouldn't you wish yourself in the bottom of perdition? Wouldn't you wish you never had a wife—never had a female child?

MR. BARTON. Serves you right.

MR. CAPLES. Serve me right? I should not have allowed my daughter to go, or my wife? As I before remarked, Mr. Chairman, the ballot carries with it the correlative obligations of citizenship, and that is what they claim. It is what is claimed in every Convention, and in every platform that is put out; equality of rights, of obligations, privileges, and immunities; and they certainly cannot dodge it. But let us look a little further and see what the result may be. Your wife is elected to the Legislature and your daughter is elected Constable, and you are at home taking care of the babies. [Laughter.] Your wife is having a good time sitting here among the members, and if you are lonesome you come up here to see what is going on. You see a bevy of gallant gentlemen around your wife paying great attentions to her. It may be that you will think this all right, and it may not. [Laughter.] I will leave that for gentlemen to imagine for themselves. But the point is here, that it is impossible, that it is not in the nature of things, that women could or would avoid the wreck. Now, gentlemen who are disposed to be gallant and make nice speeches in defense of ladies, cover up the truth with something that will sound nice. They are too true. Their virtue is of inestimable value. They are behind impregnable ramparts, and we are easy on the subject. It was once said that those men who were so liberal in their religious views, were so simply because they had no religion; and I think that gentlemen who have not got any wives, any sisters, any daughters, any mothers, or any intimate relatives, may feel exactly this way. But I put it to my friends, and I put it to every gentleman on this floor, to bring it home to himself and see whether he is willing to trust to that kind of sophistry and flattery conveyed in the declaration that women are too incorruptible, and that they are not to be corrupted. Why, what are the facts, gentlemen? Is there no such thing as fallen women? With all the safeguards that society has placed around them; with all the care, and with an entire removal from the degrading effects of politics, are there no fallen women? I would to God there were not.

MR. BLACKMER. Do you propose to prohibit a fallen woman from voting and allow male criminals to vote?

MR. CAPLES. That reminds me of an anecdote, but I am not at liberty to tell it now. I could tell the gentleman privately an anecdote that would illustrate it far better than anything I could say here. It is true we have our Troy Dyes. We have criminals of every grade, and we cannot prohibit them from the exercise of the right of suffrage until we have convicted them. Then we do propose to take away from them the ballot. But I will remind the gentleman that it is a legal maxim that every man is innocent until he is proved guilty. When he is proved guilty we take it from him, and I say never give it to him again—never!

No, Mr. Chairman, the truth, and every man must and will realize it if he will bring it home to himself, is, that good, high, holy, and pure as our women are—and there is no man living upon the earth who has a more reverential respect for them than I have—I had a mother, I have a wife, and daughters, more than the other gentleman, I have no doubt—perhaps I have been more blessed in that respect than others have, and I can bring it home to myself—I own, as a matter of fact, that I have been infinitely more careful about the purity of my wife and daughters than I ever thought it necessary to be for myself and my sons. Is not this the experience of every man? Show me that man who has not more care and regard for his wife and his daughters than he has for himself and his sons. I hope he is not on this floor, Mr. Chairman. I cannot conceive of any heresy that the human mind ever conceived of so dangerous, so utterly repugnant to every sense of refinement, feeling, and honor, as this last and latest heresy. Why, what would be the result? We all know that there are causes that while they do not disturb the purity of the great class of our women yet do drag others down into the mire of infamy. Shall we by deliberate policy increase the dangers? Why, gentlemen, if time permitted to read a discussion here by Mr. Cook, a member of the Ohio Convention, in which he was the champion of this lunacy, and he drew a most brilliant picture of the purity and excellence of women, and finally declared: "Cannot you trust her—she who alone can say whether your heir shall be your own?" Opening right at your feet a yawning chasm, deep, dark, impenetrable, into which man may be precipitated.

MR. BARRY. Mr. Chairman: Considering the fact that the gentleman from Sacramento has occupied so much time upon this question, and as I am satisfied that we cannot get to a vote this evening, I move that the committee do now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

Mr. Tinnin in the chair.

THE CHAIR. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Right of Suffrage, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: I move that the Convention take a recess until seven P. M.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. President: I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The motion prevailed.

And at five o'clock and three minutes P. M. the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow, at nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Tuesday, January 14th, 1879.

The Convention met in regular session at nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M., President Hoge in the chair.

The roll was called, and members found in attendance as follows:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence for one week was granted Mr. Finney.

Leave of absence for the balance of the week was granted Mr. Wilson, of First District.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted Messrs. McCoy and Eagon.

THE JOURNAL.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, and the same approved.

So ordered.

AMENDMENT TO RULES.

MR. WYATT. Mr. President: I send up a notice.

THE SECRETARY read:

"I hereby give notice that, on to-morrow, I shall move to amend Rule Two, so that it shall read as follows:

"The Convention shall take a recess each day from half-after twelve o'clock M. to two o'clock P. M., and on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, from five o'clock P. M. to seven o'clock P. M."

ABSENTEES.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. President: On Saturday there was a resolution presented and temporarily laid on the table, at the request of Mr. Wilson, so as not to interfere with the consideration of the report of the Committee on Judiciary. I now move that the resolution be taken from the table.

The motion prevailed.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of this Convention be and he is hereby instructed to report a list on each Friday of all delegates who are or may be absent more than three days, and that the per diem of such absentees shall not be allowed.

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms be and he is hereby instructed to report to this House the absence of any attaché each day, and that for three days' absence such attaché's place shall be declared vacant, sickness excepted.

MR. CAPLES. I would like to inquire of the gentleman what per diem he refers to? I am not aware of the existence of any per diem. It seems to me that this is fishing for something that has no existence.

MR. GRACE. I move that this matter be indefinitely postponed.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. President: I know that some gentlemen are always ready to make a motion to cut off debate, but I believe this motion is debatable. I was under the impression for the moment that it was not. I presume there is nothing in these resolutions that require much talk. We have, from day to day, a large number of absentees, and I believe that we should stop issuing certificates to them. I used the word per diem in the resolutions. You are issuing certificates which may some time be worth money. We do not know whether they will or not. But if they are the State should not be called upon to pay two or three weeks per diem to men who are not here. I believe that those who stay away should not be paid. I understand also that some of the attachés desire to leave this Convention. Now, perhaps they have a perfect right to leave, but they have no right to receive pay if they do. If they desire to go and abandon their posts, why, let them go. We can succeed in getting along without them. But I think it is only fair to the people of the State that we show some regard for the proper expenditure of their money.

MR. GRACE. Mr. President: I do not wish to speak on this resolution, and I do not intend to; but the gentleman insinuated that I wished to cut off debate. He, nor no other gentleman has ever heard me say that I was in favor of moving the previous question. I have always been in favor of investigating every subject that comes up here. I hold that this is a deliberative body. I have said that I believe the previous question being moved in Committee of the Whole was a disgrace to this Convention and to our civilization. I say that it should not be done in Committee of the Whole. I throw that back to the gentleman. He is mistaken. The reason I made the motion to indefinitely postpone the resolution, was that I believe it to be a buncombe resolution. I do not know that we are getting any per diem. I do not see why we should absolutely fool away the time of this Convention with such resolutions.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Grace, to indefinitely postpone the resolutions.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 51 ayes to 34 noes.

AMENDMENT TO RULES.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. President: I move to take up the amendment to Rules Fifty-five and Fifty-eight, of which I gave notice.

THE SECRETARY read:

"I hereby give notice that I will move to amend Standing Rule Number Fifty-five, so that it shall read as follows:

"'FIFTY-FIVE—COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

"'In forming a Committee of the Whole Convention, the President may preside or appoint a member to preside. When propositions or resolutions relating to the Constitution shall be committed to a Committee of the Whole Convention, they shall be read in Committee of the Whole by sections. All amendments shall be noted and reported to the Convention by the Chairman. After report, the proposition or resolution shall again be subject to amendment before the final question is taken: but any report, proposition, or resolution may be considered in Convention without having been committed or referred to the Committee of the Whole.'

"I also move to repeal Standing Rule Number Fifty-eight."

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. President: The amendment I propose to Rule Fifty-five does not change the rule at all, except that propositions may be considered without being referred to the Committee of the Whole. It seems to me that there are a great many reports here on which it would be better, after a limited consideration in Committee of the Whole, to dispose of in Convention. The majority of the Convention will always have it in their power to remain in Committee of the Whole as long as they please. A majority of the Convention, after discussing a matter to some considerable length in Committee of the Whole, might be in favor of reporting it back and finishing the action in the Convention, where the action will be final. I think it will add very much to the expedition with which business can be transacted, leaving, of course, the matter always in the power of the Convention to remain in Committee of the Whole as long as they please. I move, therefore, that the amendment to Rule Fifty-five be adopted. Rule Fifty-eight provides that all propositions shall be considered in Committee of the Whole.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I hope the motion of the gentleman from Sacramento, Judge McFarland, will not prevail. The gentleman says that if his motion prevails we will get along faster. There is such a thing as making haste too fast. We know that in a number of instances matters have been passed upon in Committee of the Whole that have subsequently been changed. We know, further, that matters have been passed upon in Committee of the Whole, that now stand as the sense of this committee, that, when we come into Convention, will be changed; that our opinions have been materially modified. There is no reason why we should go out of Committee of the Whole into Convention, and immediately vote there, under the impulse of the moment, what we have determined upon in Committee of the Whole. Just as soon as there is no further new business to be done, then we go into the Convention and vote upon these matters finally.

MR. MCFARLAND. It does not follow at all that we have to vote immediately. I do not propose that we vote upon it in Convention immediately after going out of Committee of the Whole.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I look upon the matter as dangerous—as extremely dangerous—not only in its effect, but in precedent. We are departing from an established usage. Every day some one makes a motion to amend, or change, or alter some of our standing rules, and we will keep doing this until we get into deep water, where it will be hard and difficult to extricate ourselves. The object of this motion is that matters can be brought up in Convention which have not been discussed in Committee of the Whole, and, under the impulse of the moment, matters may be rushed through. We might have hasty legislation that we might repent. I do not think we have any right to prejudice our action in this way. I hope that the standing rules will be adhered to, and that the motion will be voted down.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: From this proposed amendment I see nothing but confusion, and I move that it be laid on the table.

The motion prevailed.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

MR. STEELE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Right of Suffrage.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section one and the pending amendments are before the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. STEELE.

MR. STEELE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee: Yesterday when I attempted to speak upon this question I was suddenly taken sick, and not able to finish my speech. I beg the indulgence of the committee while I make a few remarks, and if there is no objection I will proceed.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee: I am sorry to see the disposition manifested on the part of some of this committee to choke this question down. The question under consideration is one of the most important that has been before the Convention or this committee for discussion—for it involves human rights—the political rights and privileges of one half of the citizens of this commonwealth. I am, sir, in favor of this amendment to strike the word "male" from this section, because I believe it is right and just, and as it should be. If I succeed in making the reasons for this belief which is within me as plain and conclusive to the majority of this committee as they are to my own mind, this amendment will prevail, and this word "male" will be stricken from this section. Why, sir, this word "male," as used in this section, it seems to me, has a double signification—indicative, not only of one of the sexes, but also of that garb of ignorance and prejudice with which man has clad himself as with a coat of mail, thereby rendering his reason and his consciousness impervious to the shafts of argument and logical reasoning which woman and the advocates of her equal political rights and privileges have been hurling against it, as against a wall of adamant, for the past quarter of a century. In the first place, sir, one half of the people, and by common consent the better half, who constitute and compose the citizens of this commonwealth, are not males, but females; not men, but women, who with the males are equally interested in the peace and prosperity of the country, in the happiness and well-being of the people, in the justice and righteousness of the laws by which the country is governed, in the economy and purity of the administration of the government, in the perpetuity of the liberty and free institutions of the country. But woman has no voice in making the laws by which she is governed, or in choosing the officers by whom the laws are executed. Hers is the right of the slave to obey; his, the self-asserted right to command; hers the right to pay taxes—if she is so fortunate as to have any property—without representation, to be tried as a criminal, and punished as a felon, by laws which she has no part nor lot in forming. And yet, sir, she is one half of the human family, of the genus homo, possessed of a marked and distinct individuality, an ego, a self-hood. She is the half without which the other half who claim the right to be the governing half could not exist. Each are dependent and interdependent the one upon the other, the two constituting and forming one perfect sphere, one entire whole; corresponding to the positive and negative forces which permeate and pervade, animate, and dominate the entire domain of force and matter. Yes, sir, the female is necessary to the existence and well-being of the male—from the very nature of things the one could not exist without the other. They are both the equally beloved, and equally, though differently, endowed children of the great loving father and mother. I do not believe, sir, that the overruling powers of this universe are an infinite male, or man, and a bachelor at that, on the one hand, and an infinite devil on the other; the latter, whether man or beast, tradition has failed definitely to reveal. In part, at least, to the influence of this man-made theological dogma of the past ages, and upon which human laws and governments, in a measure, are based, may be attributed the abject, subjugated, and helpless condition of women in the past ages of the world. Said a Paul, and in so saying, he only gave utterance to the learning and sentiment of the age in which he lived: "If a woman would know anything let her ask her husband, a man, for it was a shame for a woman to speak in public," and he might have added with equal truth, it was a shame for her to appear in public.

Happily, the world, or the more enlightened portion of it, has outgrown this pernicious doctrine, and woman is taking part in public affairs to-day as never before. But there are still lingering, tangible traces of man's belief in woman's inability to govern herself, or assist in the government of the State; lingering traces of the barbarism of the past ages, which still cling, with the tenacity of a death-grip, to our law and theology, which can only be obliterated from our statute books and our creeds by extending to woman, equally with man, the use of the elective franchise. And why not? History answers back from the depths of barbarous ages: Why? I believe, sir, that the overruling powers of this universe are a great, loving father and mother, who have equally endowed their earth-children, male and female, with attributes of divinity, based upon principles of eternal, indestructible, and reciprocal justice. This idea is in consonance with an humanitarian age, and the spirit of an enlightened progress—an idea which is entertained and promulgated by many of the best speakers and writers and most profound thinkers of the age. But man is ambitious, aggressive, and self-asserting. He would compass heaven and earth for the means to gratify his ambition; would clutch it all in his grasp, and appropriate it to his own selfish purpose and aggrandizement. He would wade through seas of blood and oceans of human tears to place himself on the throne of empire, and sway the scepter of arbitrary rule over a subjugated and enslaved people, woman included. Man's inhumanity to man, and woman, too, has caused countless millions to mourn. But woman, full of the spirit of human love and sympathy, follows in the path of man; she visits the sick and wounded on the field of battle and in the hospital; she binds up the wounds of the wounded, conveys the cooling, healing, draught to his fevered lips, attends him by day, watches over his couch by night, with the tender care of a sister or mother; if he recovers, she rejoices with him and sends him on his pathway of labor and duty; if he dies, like an angel of light and mercy she inspires his last moments with hopes of a better life beyond the grave; closes his eyes in death; catches the last feeble accents from his faltering lips, and conveys the tender message to the dear ones at home. Yes, she binds up the wounds he inflicts, assuages the grief, and dries the tears he causes to flow. With an unselfish, unwearied, and undying love and devotion, she consecrates herself to man and their mutual offspring. The domain of man seems to be that of intellectual force and physical power. Her's the realm of human love and sympathy, of social refinement, intellectual and moral purification and elevation. Without her this world would be either an aching void or a Pandemonium—a Hell. But with her, if man will only allow her to aid and assist him to the full extent of her ability and power, it may, and ought to become, a Paradise—the seat of art and learning and social refinement; nay, of the summation, the consummation of all the virtues—human sympathy and love of kind.

With Americans, sir, it is a favorite doctrine that Government derives its just power from the consent of the governed; that taxation without representation is tyranny and oppression too grievous to be borne, to right which an appeal to arms and the arbitrament of war would be justifiable if milder means will not prevail. That the people are the source and fountain of all political power in the State; that the individual citizen is the constituent element of sovereignty; hence, that the right to vote—the form through which sovereignty is expressed or exercised under our government—is an inherent, an inborn right, which attaches to the individuality, the personality of the citizen or sovereign. Government may prescribe rules regulating the method of voting or exercising sovereignty; but it cannot justly abolish or deny the exercise of that right to a single citizen, except as a punishment for crime, nor then even, except by due process of law. For if Government may deprive a citizen of the right to vote without just cause, it may disfranchise a community or a nation, and set up an aristocracy or a monarchy at its own sweet will, which would be subversive of the very fundamental idea of sovereignty in the people—a doctrine which is diametrically opposed to the theory upon which our Government is based. Directly opposed to the idea of a government by the people for the people; an assumption, sir, which, if followed out to its legitimate results, would land us in the arms of a monarchical government and the exploded doctrine of the divine right of kings. It was formerly supposed that the person of the king was the embodiment of the political power of the State. His will was law, and his edicts, backed by the entire power of the State, required and exacted unquestioning obedience from his subjects.

But our Government is based upon a different principle, and proceeds upon a different theory. With us, government means that delegated power which the people have set up as a matter of convenience through which to exercise a portion of their sovereign power for the better protection and security of the reserved rights of all the citizens, whether high or low; noble or ignoble; rich or poor; male or female. While a monarchical government elevates, ennobles, and enthrones the king at the expense of the rights of the people, our Government acknowledges the citizen as the sovereign, and by the proper restraints of law, by the education and development of the inherent power of his being, strives to prepare him for the proper expression of his duties and privileges as a sovereign or citizen. Now, sir, no one will deny, not even Dr. Caples himself, that woman is a citizen of this commonwealth, and under the Government entitled to the enjoyment of the rights, privileges, and immunities which inure to the citizen. That being true and granted, how, I ask, can you justly deny her the right of suffrage? But it is objected, that to mingle in the "dirty pool of politics" would degrade woman and drag her down from her high estate. If politics is a dirty pool, who made it so? Certainly not woman, for she has had nothing to do with politics, and that is the main reason why they are dirty. But if politics are so contaminating and corrupting to good morals, why not save good men from participating therein? "The polls is not a decent place for woman." Well, no place is decent where woman does not go. When you take your wife and daughter aboard the railroad cars, the cars at once become decent. A smoking car is attached to the train, and a place provided where the male biped can smoke, and chew, and squirt tobacco juice on the floor and over the seats; where they can exhale and inhale the combined fumes of whisky and tobacco to their hearts' content. They can revel therein without fear of molestation from woman.

"But refined women will not vote." Many refined women go on missions to foreign countries, teach the freedmen in the South, visit barrooms to secure their husbands from the degrading influences and associations of strong drink; go to the Five Points in New York on errands of mercy and reform; they visit the hospitals and the dissecting room. Surely, if they visit all these places with impunity, they may venture to attend the polls and cast a ballot for the person whom they may wish to represent them in the Legislature or any other department of the Government. "The best women will not vote." Then, surely, they are not the best women, for, when the time comes, the consciences of the best women will not allow them to stay away from the polls. What loyal woman would not gladly have voted at the reëlection of Abraham Lincoln? "Bad women will vote." So will and do bad men vote, but bad women will not vote openly as bad women; vice in women, by instinct, seeks to hide itself and passes under another name. She will imitate virtue when voting, rely upon it. "Women will vote as their husbands." But many women have no husbands, nor living fathers. Is it not, after all, that woman is different from man, that she denies his right to vote for her and represent her; to judge her in Court, and spend her tax money? "If women vote it will divide the family." But such is not the experience in Wyoming, where women have been voting for the last ten years. Families and nations have quarreled over religion much more than they ever did over politics. If a woman may be allowed to choose her religion, why not her party as well. "Women don't want to vote." Some of the most intelligent of them say they do, and for my part, I had rather believe them, than what the men say, for I think they know better what they want than men do. Some of the members object to this amendment extending suffrage to women, because it would load down the Constitution, an objection which only goes to the policy and not to the right and justice of the question. How do they know it would load the Constitution. Besides, is it not fair to suppose that the thousand and more active and determined men and women throughout the State, who favor woman suffrage, would overcome the apathy and indifference of the many who think they are opposed to it without any, or a good, or sufficient reason therefor. In which event it would become an element of strength instead of weakness, in the new Constitution. These objections only tend to show the utter futility and weakness of all the arguments which have been or can be urged against woman suffrage by the other side.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I desire to give my time to Mr. Steele.

MR. LAVIGNE. I object.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is an objection; the gentleman can not proceed.

MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. Chairman——

MR. GRACE. I rise to a point of order. There was an argument, as I understood——

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Vacquerel, has the floor.

SPEECH OF MR. VACQUEREL.

MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. Chairman: I will not sustain this amendment, on the grounds of humanity; that word cannot be used in this hall where the whipping-post has been established, but I will try to show the necessity of adopting Mr. Blackmer's proposition. I will start from a material standpoint; and, sir, if I raise my voice in this question, it is because the Burlingame treaty and the Fifteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States order it. Section five of the treaty says that citizens of China shall enjoy the same privileges and immunities as citizens of the most favored nations. Now, what are the privileges granted? One is the privilege of naturalization, and from that privilege comes all the rights of citizens. Further, article six says that nothing therein contained shall be held to confer naturalization upon citizens of China. It is all very well, but if nothing in that part confers naturalization, is there any word that prevents the conferring of citizenship whenever Congress shall be or feel so disposed? If ever any man, in the year eighteen hundred and fifty-nine or eighteen hundred and sixty, had said, not down South, but in New York, that negroes would vote to-day, and that they would become citizens, would not that man have been treated as a lunatic? And still, negroes vote to-day, in spite of all the laws that existed against them in those times. If we search further, sir, reading page three hundred and eighty-two, section two thousand one hundred and sixty-nine of the Revised Statutes of the United States, as amended in eighteen hundred and seventy-five, under the title of "Naturalization," we will find that it says:

"The provisions of this title shall apply to aliens being free white persons, and to aliens of African nativity, and to persons of African descent."

Of course Congress has not permitted Mongolian naturalization so far, but Messrs. Chin Lan Pin, Mint Cook, and Bee are certainly prepared. It is only a matter of time when Congress will see that we have passed laws restrictive upon Chinese. I am afraid that, with a stroke of the pen, all our work will be destroyed. Now, gentlemen, I hope I am mistaken, but I am afraid I shall be proven right. Does this section specify that it shall only apply to the races mentioned? No. It applies to those, but it does not say that it cannot apply to others, and, therefore, in my humble knowledge, I fail to see, in any of the recited articles, any law that prevents Congress from admitting Chinese to citizenship. Then, supposing "Mr. John" does get naturalized, he certainly will fall under the Fifteenth Amendment. On account of race or color, it says. Does that amendment specify what race, what color? No. To-day it only applies to white and black; but, sir, I have learned in my youth that there were other colors, and I ask you, gentlemen, where is the word or the law that prevents another color from voting when the people of that color shall have been admitted to citizenship?

Now, Mr. Chairman, as women have been the perdition of men in olden times by eating an apple, I will readily forgive them that sin if by their votes they can save men, not from perdition, but from starvation. Looking in the report published by the special committee on Chinese immigration, and taking the City of San Francisco as an illustration, the Chinese population of said city is one fourth—say, then, forty or fifty thousand—of which, in a few years, at least the half would be voters, say twenty-five thousand. Now the voting population of San Francisco is about thirty thousand, and they are divided in three parties, if not more. Those twenty-five thousand Chinese would always be masters at the polls, and us, where will our strength be? But if you allow ten or fifteen thousand women to vote, will they not overbalance the Chinese power and give us the majority?

Now, sir, it has been said that only low class women would vote. I want to know what is the meaning of such word. Because a woman is poor is she low? I hope, gentleman, that you do not think that poverty is a crime. When I hold for the right of suffrage for women, I hold it for all women, rich or poor, in whatever class of society they belong. I do not make any allusion to those miserable wretches that have lost their claims to the name of woman. I hope you do not think I am so uncivilized as to compare those degraded instruments of vice to our mothers, or sisters, or wives, or daughters. When I say women I do not say vampires.

I do not stand here to praise women—flattery is unknown to me. I do not speak through any influence whatsoever. Republics and empires have been saved through different causes, but not one yet has had the honor of having been saved by women. Well, let California have the glory of having been saved by them. Now, sir, I take more interest in the vote which will be cast on this question than any other; the record of this vote will prove if really those who pretend they are opposed to Chinese are in earnest. I offer you, gentlemen, a legal and constitutional way to prevent the Chinese power in this State. Will you listen to it? If the Chinese don't go yet, let us apply a remedy that in case they could vote their vote would be of no power, and this vote will show if men are in earnest in their denunciations, and it is a sound political measure, which cannot do any harm and may prove to do a great deal of good. I speak as a man that feels the truth of his assertions, and, believing that I am voting for the welfare of the people, I will sustain the women suffrage, and hope the amendment will be adopted.

SPEECH OF MR. GRACE.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I do not rise particularly for the purpose of going over the many and convincing arguments which this subject of female suffrage is susceptible of, and I don't hardly see where, in this day and generation, any necessity for such arguments can exist.

To the American people the subject is no new one, having been vigorously agitated and discussed for the past twenty-five years, and the old and stereotyped objections are equally familiar to us. They have been, and I doubt not will still further be given to us in our consideration of the question here. Gentlemen will tell us that there is no well developed demand from that part of our people whom this enfranchisement would bring into a share with us in the performance of the noblest office of citizenship; that they, as a class, are making no effort for a share in the political management of our country; that they would not avail themselves to any considerable extent of the privilege if it was granted; that the exercise of this political duty, if it was given them to perform, would have the effect of lowering the tone of our morality; that it would have the effect of destroying, in a great measure, the purifying and elevating influence of woman in her domestic relations, and her higher duties to humanity in her character of wife and mother; and finally, that, as from the higher and more binding obligation of her duty to the family circle, she should be protected from the probable contamination which would result from her mingling in the dirty pool of politics, so she is equally to be preserved from this additional duty of citizenship on account of her physical incapacity.

I say, Mr. Chairman, the time for resisting the performance of our duty in relation to this question, upon the excuses offered by any of these old-fashioned arguments, has gone by, and gentlemen must now come squarely up to the question and go upon the record, as refusing the extension of a privilege to a class whose right to it they cannot deny.

The history of the agitation upon this question goes far to refute, in itself, many of the arguments which are used against it. It will be seen that it is not merely a movement for women, but by them; and as a test of the character and ability displayed by them thus far, I am perfectly within bounds in saying, that in all the Conventions held in the various parts of the country, the quality of the speaking and character of the proceedings have compared more than favorably with those of any other popular movement.

Now, sir, a word or two with reference to these old objections, which

I have in part recited. Supposing the fact to be true, in the fullest extent ever asserted, that the women are not desiring any change, does that prove anything? If it proves that the American women ought to remain just as they are, it proves equally that the Asiatic women should remain as they are also, for they, instead of murmuring at their seclusion and restraints, pride themselves on it. The vast populations of Asia do not desire, and probably would not accept political liberty, nor, as we well know, will our native Indians accept civilization, which does not prove that either of these things is undesirable, or that they will not at some future time enjoy them.

It is the old plea—"there is no complaint"—which is not true in any sense of the word. I never knew a woman in my life who did not, or would not, wish the right for herself individually, and it is ridiculous to assume that because all are not joining in the cry for it that they therefore oppose it, for it requires unusual courage for a woman to proclaim herself as favorable to woman's enfranchisement, until at least there is some prospect of obtaining it. The comfort of her individual life, and her social consideration, depends on those who hold the undue power. Her position is like the tenant who votes against his own political interests to please his landlord; and in her case, the custom being inculcated from childhood as one of the peculiar feminine graces, is the only reason why the demand from the other side of the house for release from their political bondage is not as widespread as humanity.

No, sir; custom hardens human beings to any kind of degradation, but in the case of women it is peculiar, for no other inferior class that I have ever heard of thought their degradation was their honor. But if no such demand will or does exist, why make laws which prohibit the existence of their right. It never has been thought necessary to make laws compelling people to follow their inclinations. As to the hardening influence which association with public affairs would bring upon woman, it is all humbug to talk in this day of our civilization, for the idea of guarding women from the hardening influences of the world can only be effected now by excluding them from society altogether. No, sir. Just so surely as every landmark in the long march of civilization and enlightenment has been accompanied with, and in a great measure attributable to a corresponding extension of the rights of women, so in this case, if this crowning act of justice should be done, it would mark the destruction of the many sloughs of depravity with which our political life is associated.

As to the other argument, that it will interfere with the domestic life; that the maternity question forbids it; no sound reason can be advanced. I deny the right of this Convention, or any law-making power in the world, to say to women, you must be mothers or nothing; or, that having been mothers once you can never be anything else. Neither women nor men need any law to keep them out of a business, if they have become engaged in another, with which it is incompatible. Nine tenths of the males in the world are engaged in lines of business which precludes their engaging in public life as completely as if they were excluded by law, but that is no reason why they should on that account be prevented by law from engaging in public life, much less is it a reason why the remaining one tenth should be excluded also. No, sir; the whole of this branch of the argument falls into just this proposition: that if women must be forbidden politics, because maternity disqualifies them for it, they must be forbidden every other career in life, in order that maternity may be their only refuge. But even this argument fails in the large and increasing numbers of single women, to whom it is unjust in every sense of the word, to say: You shall not, if you so decide, devote yourself to public life, and forswear the obligations of the married relation. Mr. Chairman, in every phase of the question there is not one sound objection to this claim. We set out in our glorious old Declaration of Independence, "We hold these truths to be self-evident that all men are created equal." I don't imagine there is a man in this chamber who holds for a moment that the term "men" there used, was intended to apply to one sex only, for all know that it is in its broad generic sense it was used, and meant the whole human family. Nor will any one assume that the other declaration that "Governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed," means the consent of one half of mankind only. In addition there is the other forcible application of the old principle of "taxation without representation," which, if it means anything in the other cases when its violation has justified bloody revolution, should apply here. As a question of justice the case is too clear for dispute, and, as to expediency, I am convinced that the more thoroughly it is examined the stronger it will appear. Personally——

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

[Cries of "Leave!" "Leave!"]

MR. HOLMES. I object.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I move that the gentleman have an extension of five minutes time.

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion is out of order. There is an objection made and the gentleman cannot proceed.

MR. STEDMAN. I understand that it can be done by a vote of this committee.

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir. The gentleman is out of order. It cannot be done by the committee without unanimous consent.

MR. STEDMAN. All right.

MR. GRACE. I would like to make one remark on a question of privilege.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is no question of privilege in Committee of the Whole.

MR. WELLIN. I move that the speech be printed in the daily Journal.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: If I were to address this committee upon this subject I should take the opposite side to the gentleman from San Francisco, but that he may have an opportunity to express his views I will yield the floor to him for my time.

MR. WATERS. I object.

REMARKS OF MR. RINGGOLD.

MR. RINGGOLD. Mr. Chairman: I rise merely to place myself on record on this question, and do not intend to make any speech. My colleague, Mr. Grace, has taken the wind out of my sails by using my argument, and I shall not go over it again. I do not desire to drag a woman up to the polls if she does not desire to go there. But give her the right to vote; and if there is only one woman in the land that desires to vote on election day, I am in favor of giving that woman the elective franchise, for the reason that I am opposed to taxation without representation. I believe that this clause as it stands here is a libel upon the sentiment of equality. It is a standing bar upon the claims of representation. Why, Mr. Chairman, the lady that I board with pays one thousand two hundred dollars a year taxes. She has about fifty males boarding with her, and I do not suppose in the aggregate that they pay one hundred and fifty dollars a year. But at the same time, on election day they go up to the polls and deposit ballots which affect her property. That woman has not got a voice in it at all. For this reason I consider the proposition here a fraud. I will not say anything more than that I am in favor of the amendment as offered by the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer.

REMARKS OF MR. FREUD.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: It is with extreme reluctance that I rise to speak on this all-important question. I would not do so now were I sure as to the passage, or ratification, of the new Constitution. We are all aware that the Convention was called by a small majority of the people of the State of California. We are, furthermore, all aware that on many sides we have arrayed great opposition to this new instrument. We have arrayed against it all the men engaged in stock operations, the insurance companies, the brokers, the corporations, and nearly all the mining associations, so that we cannot afford to put anything else in the Constitution that will array another class against this new instrument. And, sir, I venture the assertion that this provision at the end of section one will imperil the ratification of this new Constitution. I do not intend to impugn the motives of any gentleman who has advocated the passage of this provision; but, sir, I am well aware—I feel confident—that it will endanger this new Constitution. I hope, sir, that what I am now saying will not be interpreted as opposition to woman's suffrage. I hesitate at this moment to put myself upon record. I think I am as charitable to the women as any gentleman upon this floor, and I think my love and admiration for them is not exceeded by any gentleman, not excepting Mr. Tully himself. [Laughter.] But, sir, at this moment I do not think we can afford to give the women a chance at the expense of this new Constitution. My sense of duty impels me to vote against any provision that will array against this new Constitution that large element of the people of this State who are opposed to woman suffrage. Therefore, I hope the provision will be stricken out.

REMARKS OF MR. WICKES.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: We are considering the expediency of granting women the elective franchise. The principles of republican government must rest upon individual rights. Self-government is founded on intelligence and virtue. If it is man's intention of man that he should rule by intellect, and not by brute force, then he will concede the same to woman. The most intelligent women of our land ask and demand the right of suffrage. Man himself believes that all his possibilities are not yet brought into action. Neither are all woman's possibilities. Her power should have as wide and free a range as his. Man meets her claim, not by summing up the advantages that shall accrue to her, to the government, to society, and to the race, but by summing up trivial objections against it. One cry is that she is outside her sphere when she casts her ballot; and it is amusing sometimes to hear this cry go up from that effeminate class of men that stand behind dry goods counters and peanut stands. It would be better, perhaps, if women could invade their sphere and be made more independent. It was once said that for girls to study mathematics was out of their sphere, but recent events have determined that women, that the females in our schools, academies, colleges, and universities can take the highest honors in the higher mathematics. I have been a teacher, and I must say that from my experience in my profession that females take a higher rank than males in education, and in the reasoning powers stand at least upon an equal plane.

As to woman's sphere, who fixed it? Her sphere, like ours, is all her own, from choice. Who fixed the sphere of Rosa Bonheur to put the landscape upon the canvas? Who fixed the sphere and gave the strength and muscle to Miss Lawrence, who lately walked one hundred miles in twenty-five hours? Is there a gentleman in this Convention who can do it? Who fixed the sphere of that woman who swims down the Thames twenty miles in less than twelve hours? Here is the development of the physical. Who fixed the sphere of Elizabeth, of England; Joan of Arc, of France; Catherine, of Russia, and Isabelle, of Spain?

It is urged, also, that women should not vote because her physiological structure is not like that of man. You might as well say that woman does not vote because she does not wear pants. It is said that there are times that woman, owing to her physiological structure, could not go to the polls. That may be; but is there ever a full male vote cast?

Others say that women should stay at home and train their children; that the highest position is to bear and raise children. I suppose, then, the father has no parental obligations. He gets the children and of course has some responsibility, and I do not see why a woman cannot take perhaps fifteen minutes once a year and go to the polls and vote.

Another objection is that the polls are not a fit place for women to visit. Men go there and chew tobacco and drink and fight. The law that we have now has done away with these vile practices. A person cannot go within one hundred feet of the polls without he is going to deposit his ballot. The dram shops are closed on election day; and if it were not so the presence of women at the polls would banish all these vile practices. Woman's presence has a refining and civilizing influence. I remember in the early days of California, in eighteen hundred and fifty-two, on the Yuba River, there was a bar where about three hundred men were at work. One married man had his wife with him, and her presence at any time checked the oath upon the lips of the rough miner. A woman could go arm in arm with her husband, her father, brother, relative, or friend to the polls.

Another objection is, that politics will make strife in the family. Not in a family that is devoid of strife. For my part, it would be a matter of pride to me when my wife could go to the polls and vote, and I should use no restraint upon her action. Again, it is objected that women would act upon impulse. Why, sir, many men have risen to prominence on account of the judgment and instruction of their wives. I know a distinguished United States Senator now whose wife assists him in the preparation of his best speeches, and he is proud of her. He is in favor of woman suffrage. His wife is a lady graced with all the requirements of her sex, and professionally versed in political economy. Women act, it is said, from impulse, and I remember noticing in a paper the other day, that man rejects religion because he, forsooth, uses his reason, and woman receives religion because she has only an emotional nature. Now, look at our Sabbaths. Man, it is said, uses his reason. Go down K street, and you will see the dram shops crowded with men; they visit the dance houses; they visit the places of prostitution. Woman goes to church. But you say there are abandoned women. Yes, there are; but for every abandoned woman there are a hundred abandoned men. It is no wonder that our poor girls, when a seamstress can make but fifty cents a day, may be tempted, in her necessity, to do that which men would do for but a moment's gratification. And he who makes and breaks the laws fixes the stigma of shame upon her. He considers that he owns woman; she is his mere toy, his mere plaything. There never was but one man whose robes woman could safely touch, and whom woman could adore, and He was virgin born; He could stand with the daughters of Sinai and raise——

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's ten minutes has expired.

[Cries of "Leave."]

MR. SWING. I object.

MR. WATERS. I object.

REMARKS OF MR. LINDOW.

MR. LINDOW. Mr. Chairman: Of course it is hard to speak on this question. Now, I cannot say that the woman shall vote. I won't take only about three minutes; I only want to reply to that gentleman who made the remark yesterday, that women could not fight. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, I think contrary, because I tell you what they do. They don't want to work. People have got girls; the first thing is she must have a piano, because she shall not work. They all want to bring her up so she don't need to work, and there is just where it is. If she should have the right of suffrage and go on the polls, she would not go as a Workingman. She would say: "I want to be what we call a Republican, or Non-Partisan. What you want?" "We vote with the Workingmen." "I don't want to work, because I have a Chinaman: he does my work. I don't go with the Workingmen, I go to the Non-Partisan." Her husband says: "You will? Well, then you vote against me when it comes on the polls." First thing he knows she fight him right over the head. [Laughter.] Then I want to see where is the gentleman that says that they cannot fight. [Laughter.] She takes the poker and knocks his head off. [Laughter.] Fight! I guess so. I am against woman suffrage. I don't see why you go to work and destroy the family in that way; there is no cause for it whatever. Give the women all the protection from the laws she wants, but let them stay at home when it comes on the election.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: At the proper time I propose to offer an amendment to strike out all after the word "provided" in line eight, and insert: "After the United States census of eighteen hundred and eighty, the Legislature shall provide that if a majority of the resident women of this State, excluding Chinese and Indians, over twenty-one years of age, as shall appear by said census, shall, at the next regular election, vote in favor of female suffrage, all resident women over twenty-one years of age shall be entitled to vote at all elections in this State."

Mr. Chairman, I propose to say only a word in relation to this matter. I have never in my life encountered a dozen ladies or women who wanted to vote. My own impression is that nine tenths of the women in California are opposed to female suffrage; but I say this, that if a majority of American women in California desire the ballot I am in favor of giving it to them. But I am not in favor of any of this claptrap demagogism. Now, my amendment provides this: that when a majority of the women of this State, appearing upon the next census, vote for the right of suffrage, that they shall have it. But I am not in favor of that thing being taken by default. Now, then, it will be perceived that every woman who does not vote will be counted in the negative. I put it in that shape, because my opinion is that seven eighths of the women of this State would not go to the polls to vote, either for or against female suffrage, and I am not in favor of bestowing it upon them unless they desire it. When they desire it it will be time enough, I think, to give it to them. I shall not go into any argument upon this matter in relation to the right of suffrage by women. I propose to submit it to them, because they are the best judges of the effect upon them socially and politically. My own opinion is that they would not gain by exercising the right of suffrage; that they will lose socially, and they would gain nothing politically. That is my opinion of the matter; but if a majority of them—if it can be shown by their votes that a majority of them in this State think differently—then I am willing that it should be conceded to them, but not until then.

Now, sir, I am in favor of enlarging the employment of women. I believe that the education of the young should very largely be confided to their trust, and various other employments should be open to them; but I do not see that they are to be benefited by the exercise of the right of suffrage. However, if they think differently, they are the best judges of that matter. But I am not in favor of leaving this to the Legislature, because they, from session to session, would be besieged by applications coming from this and from that class of ladies not entitled to a just consideration upon such a subject. In other words, I think it would be mostly by the strong-minded, and not by the modest retiring women, whose votes, I am inclined to think, might improve the suffrage of the country. But I am not in favor of the proposition of the gentleman from San Diego, to strike out the word "male," and I do not think the ladies want "male" stricken out any way.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I do not rise to make a speech upon this subject, but simply to read an article touching on the subject of woman suffrage in the Territory of Wyoming. I believe that in those characteristics of refinement, morality, virtue, and intelligence that go to make up civilization, woman occupies a higher sphere than man, and yet there are duties for which man is peculiarly qualified, and which, from the course of nature, he is better qualified to perform. I believe that women occupy in many respects a higher position than men, and I, for one, do not wish to drag them down from that exalted sphere. I would not have women stoop to the duties that we necessarily have to perform. As the gentleman from San Diego has alluded to the result of experience with woman suffrage in Wyoming, I wish to read an extract from the Indianapolis Journal, which I feel would be pertinent. It gives the views of Captain S. H. Winsor, now a citizen of Indianapolis, and it shows that there is a diversity of opinion on this subject:

"The representative of the Journal yesterday encountered Captain S. H. Winsor, of this city, who lived several years in Wyoming, and asked for some information concerning the operation of woman suffrage in that Territory. Captain Winsor is an educated and observant gentleman. He was Receiver of the Public Land Office at Cheyenne, and was a resident of the Territory when the woman suffrage law took effect, and for several years afterwards. The substance of his views is as follows:

"'I regard woman suffrage in Wyoming as an utter failure, and I think it is so regarded by the best men and women of the Territory. So far as can be discovered it has accomplished no good results, while it has certainly worked badly in many respects. For about two years after the law was passed nearly all the women in the Territory used to vote, my wife among the rest. But after this experience the better class became disgusted with the operation of the law, and quit voting. As an instance of how female citizenship worked in one case, I remember a jury trial where the defendant was charged with rape and murder. The jury consisted of six men and six women. After the trial had progressed about two weeks one of the women was taken sick. The trial was postponed several days on her account, but she was unable to resume her duties, and a new jury was ordered, and a new trial from the beginning. During the same trial I knew of three mechanics, and hard workers men, whose wives were on the jury, and who, in consequence of this fact, had to quit work and stay at home to take care of their children.

"'As an instance of the demoralizing influence of politics on women, I remember seeing a lady, the wife of a candidate for office, standing at the counter of a beer saloon drinking beer with a parcel of colored men. I could mention her name, but will not. She was from Ohio, and was well educated and entirely respectable, but she was so intensely interested in her husband's success that she resorted to this means of getting votes for him. I saw this same lady and a school teacher of Cheyenne in their buggies driving colored men and women, and even known harlots, to and from the polls. In such way as this I regard the operation of the law as demoralizing to women. There may be others who differ with me, but I simply give my views of several years' experience of the law. I may add that my wife, who enjoyed the elective franchise during the period of our residence in Wyoming, entirely accords with these views.'"

MR. STEELE. Mr. Chairman: I believe I have a right to speak to the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles has not been entertained yet. He merely read it.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: It is not likely that I will detain the committee long. I desire to place myself upon record upon a question that I think after a little members who now do not place themselves in favor of it, will, as it becomes stronger. I wish to do it now, because it might be said here, after that, when I believed in woman suffrage, I was afraid to raise my voice in favor of it. Now, I am not afraid to be in favor of a proposition that the greatest writers have been in favor of for perhaps fifty years past. Mr. Mill, from a political standpoint, is in favor of woman suffrage. Mr. Buckle favors it from a historical standpoint. Herbert Spencer, from a philosophical standpoint, is in favor of it. And all these great writers have placed this matter among the great truths of civilization. Now, it may be said by the average Californian, that this is mere theory; but those who have read the respectable authors upon these great truths, to any considerable extent, will find that all the great truths that modern civilization has accepted were first called theories. They were in advance of their time when first given out, and it was necessary for the people to grow up to them. And this will have the same history. It is slowly permeating not only one class, but all classes of people. You will find that the sen-average number of women believe in this that you will find among men. I do not see why the Legislature should not have the power to extend the right of suffrage to women. It is not likely that the Legislature will do it any sooner than public opinion will sustain it. I do not think that the Legislature is dangerous in this respect, and I believe that this question should be left for the people to settle through the Legislature, without the necessity of amending the Constitution. Now, I have lived where woman suffrage has been allowed—in the Territory of Idaho. Of course, there is a different civilization in Idaho, but I think that you will find all over the country men circulate around in very much the same ideas and the same customs. Now, in Utah, extending the right of suffrage to women has changed the minds of the people of the United States upon various questions. In the first place, the Gentiles were in favor of it, because they believed that women would vote against polygamy. They found out that they were mistaken in that respect—that they voted stronger for polygamy than the men did. Why is that? Because the devotional nature of those women was the ruling cause in that instance. Now, if we extend the right of suffrage to women, we will throw into the ballot the best element. If ever this great republican power should begin to crumble, its great pillars to fall, I should look to the women as the last ones who would leave it. Go into all the departments of life in which woman has a chance to declare her peculiar characteristics, and you will find that they always give strength to what they sustain. Go into the churches. So it is in all matters that are good, that are strong, that are enduring, woman stands out stronger and brighter than the stronger part of creation, and she will throw this into our hands in the ballot-box.

MR. LAMPSON. Mr. Chairman: Believing that we have occupied enough time upon this subject, I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Diego, Mr. Blackmer, to strike out the word "male" in the first line.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin, to strike out all after the word "elector" in the eight line.

The amendment was adopted, on division, by a vote of 69 ayes to 27 noes.

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend, by inserting after the word 'law,' in line six, the following: 'Provided, that in an election for officers, or teachers of public schools, that women, who are mothers, or who have the guardianship of children, and have the foregoing qualifications, shall be eligible to vote at such elections.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend, by inserting after the words 'United States' in the first line, the words 'every male person who shall have acquired the rights of citizenship under or by virtue of the treaty of Queretaro;' and by inserting the word 'male' before the word 'naturalized,' in line two."

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: The object of that amendment is simply this: there is a question in the minds of certain gentlemen whether the section in its present form embraces that class of people who became citizens, not under the naturalization laws of the United States, but by virtue of the treaty with Mexico—it is to meet that case. The other one, in adding the word "male" before the word naturalized, it is done out of abundant caution, to make the section perfectly harmonious.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add after the word 'elector' in the eighth line, the following: 'Provided, that every unmarried woman, having such qualifications of age, residence, and citizenship as are prescribed in this Constitution for male voters, who has, or may hereafter be the owner of property to the value of one thousand dollars, shall be entitled to vote at all elections in this State; and every married woman having such qualifications, who is or shall be the owner of separate property, to the value of two thousand dollars, shall be entitled to vote at all elections in this State; provided, that the Legislature shall have the power to extend the elective franchise to any or all other women having the above named qualifications of age, residence, and citizenship.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. That is not an amendment to the amendment. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Judge Campbell.

The amendment was adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I now offer my amendment. It proposes to introduce woman suffrage gradually. I will ask the Secretary to read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add after the word 'election' in the eighth line the following: 'Provided, that every unmarried woman, having such qualifications of age, residence, and citizenship as are prescribed in this Constitution for male voters, who is or may hereafter be the owner of property to the value of one thousand dollars, shall be entitled to vote at all elections in this State; and every married woman having such qualifications who is or shall be the owner of separate property to the value of two thousand dollars shall be entitled to vote at all elections in this State: provided, that the Legislature shall have the power to extend the elective franchise to any or all other women having the above named qualifications of age, residence, and citizenship.'"

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: This proposes to introduce woman suffrage gradually. I believe that woman suffrage is as certain to be an accomplished fact in the near future as the abolition of African slavery was to be an accomplished fact twenty years ago. In my judgment it will be better to introduce it gradually. I think that a rule which at the start would admit those women who have given the most attention to public affairs and the elective franchise, and providing for its gradual extension to the others, would be a rule that would introduce this change with the least disturbance and with the fewest of those evils that necessarily accompany all important changes. As women have not had the right to vote, of course they have not given the same attention to the acquisition of that kind of knowledge which enables them to vote intelligently.

Now, a rule that would admit, in the first place, those who from peculiar circumstances are the best qualified to vote, it seems to me, would be the best method of introducing this change. Now, I have introduced a property qualification. I do not do that, sir, on account of the intrinsic value of a property qualification, but simply because it is the only rule that I can think of that can be worked practically so as to introduce this change gradually. Women, sir, who have property, are those, in the first place, who are the most entitled to vote, because to them alone applies the maxim, that there should not be taxation without representation. Then again, women who have had control of property to any considerable extent, have necessarily had their minds attracted, to a greater or less extent, to the laws of business and the public laws of the country; and I believe they would be, in the first place, the best qualified of all women to exercise this franchise. When that had been done, and the Legislature given the power to extend it to any or all women, the attention of women generally would be drawn to the subject, and they would commence to prepare themselves for the exercise of that duty.

Now, sir, there is only one other method that I can think of, and that is to adopt an educational standing. I have always been of the opinion that the qualification of voters should be determined by their education. In the first place, what should their standing be? Would you say that a person should have a classical education, or that a person who could read some sentences in a book, or write their name, should be entitled to vote? What standard will you adopt? In the first place, who is going to be the judge? Would you have a select committee of school ma'ams and politicians to decide who were entitled to vote? That would be a power too great and dangerous to put into the hands of any one. The right of a man to vote should not depend upon some other person. There is the objection to an attempt to establish an educational qualification. There are many men born and raised in this country who can neither read nor write, who still have a very clear idea of the politics of this country. I believe this would introduce this change gradually, so that all the women would be educated up to the point of understanding their rights and intelligently taking part in the public affairs.

MR. BLACKMER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question? Why he makes a distinction between married and unmarried women in regard to property?

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: The married woman having separate property, of course has the advice and counsel of her husband towards the management of it. She is not quite so apt to pay the same attention to it as the single woman who stands alone in the world. The latter is already prepared for the ballot, whereas the balance of your women, those whom you teach simply the graceful accomplishments of the sex, who have no ambition to attend to public affairs, or to understand the laws of the country, who are merely ornaments in your households, have never acquired this knowledge to a sufficient extent to vote intelligently. I have no time to discuss the general question.

The greatest objection, and the one that, gentlemen, will stick in your face all the time, is the one included in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles. They get rid of the question by saying, "As soon as women want to vote I am willing that they should vote." If it were true that they did not want to vote, it would be no position to take, logically. The principle of law is to compel people to do duties that they desire to shun. They do not pretend to say that no women want to vote, because the petitions on the desks of members prove that many of them do; but they say that a majority of them do not want to vote. How do you know that they do not want to vote? How do you know that a majority of them do not want to vote? It has never been authoritatively decided, and if the amendment was adopted it would not be a fair test, and for this reason: These gentlemen who oppose woman suffrage would tell their wives and daughters: "You ought not to want to vote. You are going out of your sphere. It is not ladylike, and if you want to vote you lose my respect." And then they turn round in the next breath and tell you they will not give the women the right to vote, because they say they don't want to. It would not be proper to call that reasoning.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I must say, that owing to the previous question, not even the Committee on Right of Suffrage, of which I have the honor to be a member, had an opportunity to defend the action of the committee in the matter, and I now desire to say a word on the question presented by the gentleman from Sacramento, Judge McFarland. I concede that I entertain what I believe to be an unpopular opinion in this State on that subject, and what I know to be an unpopular opinion in this Convention. I believe that woman has a right to demand the suffrage, and I believe further that whenever woman does demand it that it ought to be granted. I admit that I am in doubt whether a majority of women do demand it; and if such an amendment as that suggested by the gentleman from Los Angeles can arrive at that, I believe it would be a proper solution of the question. That is my opinion as to the abstract question. If I had an opportunity or felt at liberty to vote personally upon the question, I would have voted for the amendment of the gentleman who moved to strike out the word "male." I am here, however, as a representative. I believe that three fourths of the constituents whom I have the honor in part to represent are opposed to it. I believe that three fourths of the voters of the State are opposed to it; and although the sentiment has been often expressed, I do not remember to have heard it expressed in this Convention at all, yet I recognize the duty of acting in a representative capacity upon questions of such magnitude. Therefore, I could not vote for the amendment of that gentleman, because in doing so I would not reflect the sentiments of my constituents, and because they had no question of this kind in any political platform, so far as I know, nor did any candidate, so far as I know, make it an issue in the canvass. Besides, I believe if we put it into the Constitution it would defeat it. I would be willing to go, however, just as far as would be proper under the circumstances.

I believe that the proposition of the committee was correct. It laid down a flexible rule. The Legislature might confer this right. Perhaps that was asking too much; but I do think that to allow it by a two-thirds vote would be a proper provision in this Constitution. As to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, which he admits is a renewal of the proposition in a modified form, I am opposed to it, because it makes a property qualification in the one case which does not exist in the other. If there was any qualification for voters outside of those provided in our Constitution, I would make that a qualification of intelligence and education. Although I can see in many cases, as in the case supposed by the gentleman from Sacramento, it would be difficult, yet in most cases it would be a safe rule. If I were in favor of any qualification it would be that. If the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeleles should be presented I think it would be the proper solution of the question. It provides that the Legislature shall submit the question to the women themselves, and if the majority of the women of the State, as indicated by the census, should vote in favor of woman suffrage, it would be a full and complete answer to the proposition that the women do not want it. But I must say in this connection that there is one point that the gentleman from Sacramento overlooks, as to whether the women do want this, and who would vote. In the absence of such a test as that suggested by the gentleman from Los Angeles, it is impossible to say; but I will say further that from what I have heard on the subject from that sex, my judgment is that a majority of them do not desire it. I will say further, that even if they desired to vote, or would vote upon the question of conferring the right upon them, it is an open question whether a majority of them would vote after the right were conferred upon them. While I admit that among those who advocate woman suffrage there are many of the most intelligent and estimable ladies, yet I cannot say that if all the minority would vote that they would be the best class. It is an open question. I think, however, that the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles would solve the question whether they desire to vote, because that would test it upon that very question itself; and if they do so generally vote as to carry the proposition, it would indicate that the vote would be so general, that we might say that they would vote as a class. As to the effect of their voting, if they should generally vote, I entertain no doubt that it would elevate the standard of our politics. I believe they have as much intelligence, I believe they would be better qualified—I know they would be better qualified than many whom our almost universal suffrage system has permitted to vote. I believe that their aspirations are purer and better. I believe, among men, there is no more interest in property, than women feel in property; and as to the family relations, as to their children, there is no class of people who take the interest in politics affecting their families that the mothers of the land do. I cannot, therefore, vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento. If the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles shall be presented, I shall take pleasure in voting for that; and if that cannot be adopted, I propose to offer as an amendment to add after the word "Legislature," in the eighth line, "by a two-third vote of each branch."

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I wish simply, like the other gentlemen, to leave my record. I concede that the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Wickes, has correctly characterized what has been said, as trivial considerations that are offered in place of reasons. But when gentlemen, like my friend, Mr. Freud, whose genius I admire, are obliged to assign as a reason why women ought to be excluded from this right, that it is going to jeopardize the ratification of this abortion that they are going to send out, it is time that we should have the purity of women represented here and elsewhere too. I cannot see any reason whatever for submitting this question to the Legislature. I can tell gentlemen that the child is born to-day that will see this right granted. Some of us here to-day will live to see it. Coming events cast their shadows before. I have stood up in this State and been hissed for simply enunciating the fact that all men were created equal. I predicted that the institution I condemned would die, and it is dead to-day; and I tell gentlemen here to-day that this injustice that has been practiced so long has got to end. Men will reason upon it. They will think upon it. There will be opposing interests that will make other women less timid, and then the truth will prevail against this prejudice that has so long existed. Why, the gentleman from Placer reads us a statement from Indianapolis by a Captain somebody. Well, he may be a Captain, but it does not need anything but this letter to write him down an ass; and sage, wise gentlemen take for granted statements which are disputed by every intelligent man who has lived in Wyoming. They are statements, too, that do not amount to anything if they were true. If it is true, it is nothing but one of the instances that are all the time occurring throughout the land.

The question is: What is the general result? No man can be true to his mother or his wife but who will be obliged to believe that purity would be created by bringing either one or the other to the polls. Our politics, in these times, are nothing but a mass of corruption, from top to bottom. The merits of controversies are all lost sight of in the abuse of candidates. It is time a better element was introduced. It is true women have not yet been trained in political economy, but she instinctively perceives the right and shuns the wrong. You cannot take one out of a thousand that will not be a better citizen than the average voter; she instinctively sees the right; she shrinks from wrong without being told even of its character. I think, sir, that gentlemen might pause and reflect upon this subject. I know that this Convention is going to vote down the proposition, as a matter of course. I believe that the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland, is right, and you may make up your minds to accept it. The time will come when they will go to the polls, and no man can go to the polls and vote with them without being elevated by their presence. It is so in Wyoming, according to the best authorities. The gentleman from Los Angelos concedes a fact and then denies its application. He says distinctly that the women of this State are the most competent to judge whether they ought to have the right. Well, sir, that is conceding the whole ground. What greater statesmanship is required than to solve that question correctly? Yet, the gentleman gives the women this power. I hope his amendment will be offered, and that we shall submit the question to the women themselves.

MR. HOWARD. I will offer it.

MR. SHAFTER. I hope that he will submit to some modification of it. If some do not want to vote, why should we deprive women who do want to vote of that privilege?

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I, for one, most heartily indorse the objection interposed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Freud. I hope that these amendments will not be adopted, because it will have a tendency to load down the Constitution. Although it has been charged that the work of this Convention is an abortion and the members abortionists, I, at the same time, do not believe it. I believe that we are here trying to make a good Constitution, and I believe that Constitution ought to be adopted. [Applause.] My friend says he does not. Hence he has no objection to weighting it down. I have. There have some great reforms gone into this Constitution that we hope will be adopted by the people. The gentleman from Marin says that no man can be true to his mother or wife who does not maintain the doctrines that he does.

MR. SHAFTER. I said no such thing.

MR. ESTEE. I understood him to say that no man can be true to his mother or his wife that did not favor this proposition. I appeal to the reporter's notes if it is not true. I deny that he has a right to say that others are not as capable of judging of these matters as he or any person standing upon this floor.

MR. McFARLAND. I would like to ask the gentleman if he is in favor of woman suffrage?

MR. ESTEE. I am opposed to woman suffrage. You should have known from what I said.

MR. McFARLAND. I could not tell.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I would state that the gentleman, from the beginning of this Constitutional Convention, has invariably told us that nothing we could do would be adopted.

MR. McFARLAND. I never said a word of the kind, either in public or private.

MR. ESTEE. I appeal to the history of this Convention.

MR. McFARLAND. You may appeal to that.

MR. ESTEE. I believe whenever the women of the State are in favor of woman suffrage that they ought to have it. I am willing to be governed by the majority, but I maintain that it is not necessary to put this question into this Constitution, and thereby bring in foreign issues which are not pertinent to the questions before the people, and which the people do not want to consider now. Let the matter be submitted as a separate and distinct proposition, and then, if the women want it, for one, I say, let us try it. But I claim that this question has never been discussed by the people; that the people who elected us here had no idea that it would be one of the questions that we would pass upon. If submitted to the people in this Constitution it would excite a discussion that would imperil the whole instrument. Were I not opposed to woman suffrage, I would oppose dealing with this subject at this time, and in this manner. I would not object to allowing the people to vote upon it, but placing, as it is placed here, requiring the people to vote for or against it, in the adoption of this Constitution, I am opposed to it.

I am for home rule. I believe that the wife and the mother performs her duty most eminently at home. However unpopular that sentiment may be, I still believe that home is the place for the wife and the mother. I believe that the wife and the mother have not been studying politics. I believe that, admitting that they were even brighter characters than the men, and I do not see any marked difference between us—I think they are probably very near alike on matters of intellect, at least—they have got no instruction in these subjects, and therefore I agree with the gentleman from Sacramento, to this extent, that it would raise a question too marked in its effect upon the public policy of the State.

Now, sir, my chief objection to all these amendments is, that it will imperil the Constitution, because there are a large number of people who will be opposed to a Constitution with these provisions in. My second objection is, that the people of the State have not discussed this subject, nor are they prepared at this time to instruct their delegates in this Convention upon these questions. Therefore, I hope that all amendments of this character will be voted down, for I feel sure that if it were inserted in the Constitution the Constitution would be voted down, notwithstanding the many good and valuable provisions that might be found elsewhere in it.

REMARKS OF MR. GRACE.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I do not rise for the purpose of making a speech, but merely to let this body know right where I stand. I am a representative of the City and County of San Francisco, and I intend to do my duty intelligently and honestly, as far as I am capable. I do not want it to be said that this honorable body did not know where I stood. I was cut off for want of time from stating my position, and I desire to state it now. I am not in favor of striking the word "male" from the Constitution now, and I would not consent to that, because I believe it would be to load the Constitution down and defeat it. I am, at the same time, satisfied that it would be right. The provision I was in favor of was the provision reported by the committee, to give the Legislature the right to remove the disabilities. The people will elect the Legislature, and this matter will be discussed before the people. I say that it is not a new question. It has been discussed for the last twenty-five years, all over the country. If the representatives of the people should desire to remove the disabilities, I cannot see any heinous crime—I cannot see wherein it would be wrong—to give them the right to remove the disabilities.

I tell you, Mr. Chairman, that before twenty-five years have passed, every American woman of the age of twenty-one will have the right of suffrage. I do not care how many men get up and try to blackguard it down. I have not seen one gentleman on the opposite side attempt to get up here and make one single, solid, substantial argument, or show one good reason why women should not vote. I cannot see any good reason or cause why you should oppose the law. It has never been considered necessary to pass a law to compel people to do things that they want to do. You say women do not want to vote. Then why are you so crazed about it? One gentleman takes up a paper, or clips a piece from his own paper and reads it, giving the ideas of some vagabond in Wyoming. I have been there in my travels around the world, and I know that the people there are satisfied with woman suffrage. That society was made up of miners—it might be called the hardest class of people from the Territory of Idaho, from Nevada, and Montana. It was the first rush that went down there of the thieves, gamblers, and lewd women. Woman suffrage was put to the severest test, among the hardest class of people that ever inhabited the Rocky Mountains. It was giving it no fair test; but I have conversed with gentlemen from there, and they say that it does work well; and when an intelligent gentleman gets up on this floor, and cites you to an instance where there was a jury half women, and one woman got sick, ain't that enough to defeat any measure in a Constitution? That is the reason why you should oppose giving them the right of suffrage. Is not a man, sitting on a jury, liable to be taken sick and die? Because a woman happened to be taken sick, is that any reason why her whole sex should be disfranchised? But if the majority of women do not want to vote, does that deny the right? Does that have anything to do with the justice of the thing? I am now in favor of Mr. McCallum's amendment, that he suggested. I do not believe in Mr. McFarland's. I do not like General Howard's plan. They would have to vote under restraint. It takes courage for a woman to come out for woman suffrage. Her friends and relatives have an undue power over her, and try to make her believe that it is humiliating, and that she ought to be ashamed to vote. They could go to the polls just as easily as they go to church or to the theater, because our election days in California are the most quiet days we have in California. There is no gentleman here who can get up and show one good, fair, square argument against it.

REMARKS OF MR. STEELE.

MR. STEELE. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add, after the word 'elector,' in the eighth line, 'provided, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the Legislature, by a two-thirds concurrent vote, from conferring the right of suffrage upon female citizens of the State, under the same restrictions as male citizens.'"

MR. STEELE. Mr. Chairman: I presume it is well understood by the gentlemen of this committee that I am in favor of woman suffrage, and I am perfectly willing to declare it at any time, and under any circumstances. All the objections that have been urged have merely been objections that have gone to the policy, or to the practicability of the plan, or to something of that character, and have not touched the groundwork of the subject at all. The gentleman from Placer, Mr. Filcher, read in your hearing a newspaper letter written by some person—a man, of course—claiming to be acquainted with the practical working of woman suffrage in Wyoming, saying it is about being abandoned there, having proven a failure. I presume, from the tenor of his letter, that he was some unfortunate fellow who had been defeated for an office in that Territory by the woman vote. A case or two of that kind has occurred, I am credibly informed. Now, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of refuting the charges put forth in that letter, I wish to read an extract from an address delivered before the Massachusetts Legislature, January eighteenth, eighteen hundred and seventy-six, by the Honorable John W. Kingman, of Wyoming, for four years Supreme Judge of that Territory. The speaker drew a vivid picture of a far-western Court-room, such as has been so frequently described in the newspapers:

"This has been changed by the presence of women. Lawyers took their heels off the table, and quit whistling and expectorating; the Judge put his legs and feet under the bench where they belonged instead of on top of it; the attendants and spectators came better dressed; the room was kept neat and clean. Since leaving the bench he had practiced at the bar, and unqualifiedly would prefer, both as Judge and advocate, to have a mixed jury, and he believed that the prevailing opinion among all classes."

To show the good effect of woman's vote, Judge Kingman instanced a recent municipal election in Laramie City, where the best men of both parties had united in the nomination of a People's ticket:

"The saloon-keepers, knowing that the Sunday law against the sale of liquor would be rigidly enforced if this ticket was elected, got out another ticket the night before election, sent out runners to meet the floating population coming from the mines, gave them liquor and free lunches, and rolled up a very large vote. Finding themselves in danger of defeat, the law and order party sent to every home to notify the ladies how the case stood, and in the afternoon the women turned out and worked against the saloons, among them many of the wives of the saloon-keepers and candidates, and they elected the temperance ticket by a handsome majority. Without the women the reformers would have been beaten two to one. I do not believe that suffrage causes women to neglect their domestic affairs. Certainly such has not been the case in Wyoming, and I never heard a man complain that his wife was less interested in domestic economy because she had the right and took an interest in making the community respectable. In the election referred to, the wife of a keeper of a billiard saloon notified her husband that she should do her best to defeat him, and did so. But so far from quarreling with her, he said she was 'perfectly right,' and expressed the opinion that his wife was the better man of the two."

Judge Kingman related several instances of the conversion of the public men of the Territory to the cause, and the way in which they had come to regard it as one of the settled principles of the polity of the Territory. The general influence of woman suffrage has been to elevate the tone of society, and to secure the election of better men to office, and thought their experience refuted the objection that women unsex themselves.

"The effect of the exercise of political rights upon women themselves of course cannot yet be fully apparent, but I think I see already a marked change in our women, and it is a change for the better. The women are not less womanly, nor, in the slightest, less feminine in their conduct, but they appear more earnest, more serious, less devoted to fashion and frivolous pursuits. I have never known or heard of domestic unhappiness caused by political differences, although I have known of many instances where husband and wife worked for different tickets. Men were not less respectful toward women, but usually more so than in other sections. There is a class of men who feel bound to be respectful toward women if they ever expect to be candidates for office. The female voters are nearly equal to the men in large towns where twelve hundred or fifteen hundred votes are cast. The Swede and German women nearly all vote, but the native American predominate. At first only a few women voted, but at the last two elections they had voted almost unanimously, and more uniformly than men."

He believes the women had as full a knowledge of the public measures pending as the men, and often they were more fully informed than the men. He thought they got a higher and better public sentiment by the political representation of women. Judging from his experience he did not know of any objections to woman suffrage, and he believed it would be the safer course to pursue to give woman that right. This testimony, sir, coming from the source it does, is entitled to credence, and fully refutes the assertions of the aforesaid letter writer. In addition to this, we have the corroborating testimony of Miss Hindman, of Colorado, given before the recent annual meeting of the American Woman Suffrage Association. She visited Wyoming at the time of the last election, and ascertained that the best women of Cheyenne City voted at that election. Some of the politicians objected to women voting, because they would not stick to party, but scratched their ticket in a very disgusting manner.

The progress which woman has made within the last twenty-five years is apparent to all. Then she was only fit to teach a few small children in the Summer season at a dollar a week. Now, more than one half of the teachers in this State are women. Some of the best schools are taught by them, and the salaries they receive as teachers is nearly or quite equal to the wages paid to men teachers in the same grade of schools. In Boston a woman superintends the schools, at a salary of four thousand dollars a year. A few years ago a woman was hardly known to speak in public, except at Quaker church. Now, women are preachers, lawyers, and doctors, and earn money on the lecture platform as do men. They have proved themselves equal to every duty of a public nature they have attempted to perform. They have attacked the Chinese wall which men erected, to seclude them from all the public and profitable vocations of life; have stormed the "wall" along the line; have made many a breach in it, carried many a fort, and spiked the guns. And now they come here to this Capitol, the citadel of the political power of the State, and lay siege to the very bulwarks of constitutional law; and by logical argument, by appeals to your reason, to your love of justice and humanity, they ask you to strike from this section and the Constitution that hateful, that exclusive word "male," and enfranchise women. Will you not stand up by her side, take her by the hand, and with her fight all the battles of life manfully and courageously, and receive her into full communion in the State as she does you in the family? Or will you continue to deny the right of suffrage, the right to participate with you in the affairs of State, to woman, who was the playmate of your childhood, the fond associate of your youth, the beloved, the wooed, the betrothed of your manhood, the mother of your children—the wife, the sister, the mother, the daughter, the companion, the helpmeet of your life? Possibly the learned doctor on the other side would not like to hear his wife speak in public. More than likely she would not care to hear him, unless he would make a better speech than he did against woman suffrage here in the committee yesterday.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. White, Freud, Jones, and Huestis.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Luis Obispo, Mr. Steele.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. McFarland.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I believe my amendment is in order now. I send it up.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add, after the word 'elector,' in the eighth line; 'Provided, after the United States census in eighteen hundred and eighty, the Legislature shall provide that if a majority of the resident women of this State, excluding Chinese and Indians, over twenty-one years of age, as shall appear by said census, shall, at the next regular election, vote in favor of female suffrage, all resident women, over twenty-one years of age, shall be entitled to vote at all elections in this State.'"

MR. STUART. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend the amendment by inserting after the words "twenty-one years of age," the words, "and shall have paid, within one year, a State or county tax."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee now rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Right of Suffrage, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

RIGHT OF SUFFRAGE.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: I move that the Convention do now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Right of Suffrage.

So ordered.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section one is before the committee.

MR. STEDMAN. I offer an amendment to section one.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the word 'ninety' and insert the word 'thirty.'

REMARKS OF MR. STEDMAN.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: This section provides that a foreign-born citizen, or person who wishes to become a citizen of the United States, he must take out his papers ninety days before he can vote. Now, sir, I think it is not right, I think it is not just, and I would like to have any gentleman of the committee tell me where he finds such a thing as this in any other Constitution in the United States. I have failed to find it. I find in New York there is such a restriction as this, but the limit is only ten days. In Pennsylvania there is such a restriction, but it is only thirty days. I cannot find it in any other Constitution in the Union, and I have looked at all of them, and I can see no reason why we should place such a provision in here. It is not in the old Constitution. I believe that the article on suffrage was a good one.

Now, sir, when Abraham Lincoln issued his call for troops, the Irishman, the German, the Italian, the Frenchman, walked side by side with the American. They were not then asked for their papers. They were accorded the privilege of fighting for this country. Side by side with native-born Americans they fought to put down the rebellion. Side by side they fell, and side by side they returned home, some of them crippled for life. So I say let us place no further restriction upon them in regard to this matter of voting. Let them walk up side by side with American-born citizens and cast their vote. The restriction of two years' residence in the United States is enough. I think the moment the foreigner takes out his second papers he should be allowed to vote. Why, sir, have not some of our foreigners remained in the United States for years before taking out their papers? Why, then, should we require them to take out their papers three months before they can vote? It is wrong, and I protest against it. I offer this amendment and hope it will be adopted.

MR. FARRELL. Mr. Chairman: I offer a substitute for the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one, who shall have been a resident of the State six months next preceding the election, and of the county sixty days, and of the election precinct or district in which he claims his vote thirty days, shall be entitled to vote at elections which are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law; provided, that no idiot, insane person, or person convicted of any infamous crime, shall be entitled to the privileges of an elector."

REMARKS OF MR. FARRELL.

MR. FARRELL. Mr. Chairman: The substitute which I have offered contains three points distinct from the other. First, it dispenses with that discrimination which the section as reported has made against naturalized citizens; second, the alteration of the time of residence required in the State and county, leaving it as it stands in the old Constitution; third, it cuts out that provision which enables the Legislature to provide for woman suffrage. The proposition involved in the first change puts our foreign born citizens exactly upon the same plane with the rest of the native born, just the moment they become citizens, and I think there can be no question as to the propriety of it. The naturalization laws of the United States require certain conditions of the foreigners who settle in our land and desire to become one of us, among which are the renunciation of all foreign allegiance, and a residence of five years. Now, the argument which seeks to impose additional conditions, and of a further time, after he has fulfilled all these conditions and received his papers, is not sound in any sense, and is not worthy the name.

MR. HOLMES. If I go to that county, I have to live there ninety days.

MR. FARRELL. No, sir. It takes five years and ninety days before he can vote. The United States Government wisely makes certain requirements as essential to citizenship, among which is a residence on the part of a foreigner seeking citizenship of five years. That time is required to give him an acquaintance with the laws and customs of the country; in order that he may be qualified; in order that when he is permitted to exercise the duties and privileges of an elector he may do so intelligently and understandingly. And I insist that the limitation set by the laws of the United States is sufficient to determine all that is necessary in converting an alien into a citizen. To require more is a manifestation of prejudice against foreign born citizens. Some gentlemen may say that it is intended more particularly to prevent frauds, and a wish to naturalize just before election days. But I insist that none of these frauds can be guarded against by the proscription of a part of our people.

Upon the second point, requiring certain length of residence in the election district in which the person claims his vote, I am more positive, and I speak more particularly as the representative of the people I represent here. I am in favor of requiring sixty days in the county; but to require sixty days residence in the election precinct in the City and County of San Francisco would have the practical effect of disfranchising ten per cent. of the voters. The election precincts, numbered from one up to forty, consist, many times, of a single block. A man could scarcely move across the street without losing his residence, and this disfranchisement will invariably fall upon the poorer classes—upon the poor laborer, who is forced to reside in a tenement, and subjected to frequent removals. The clause in relation to female suffrage I have stricken out. I do not intend to discuss that question. I am simply of the opinion that there is no considerable public sentiment which demands female suffrage. When such a demand is made it will be time enough to consider the question seriously.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: It appears to me that there is no discrimination whatever with regard to the length of time required, as between American born and foreign born citizens of the United States. It says "every native male citizen of the United States, and every naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election, of the age of twenty-one years," etc. This includes native male citizens of the United States, and also those of foreign birth. And there is no discrimination whatever.

MR. STEDMAN. Do you say that these words, "naturalized citizens," apply to American born citizens?

MR. BROWN. No, sir; but both native born and naturalized citizens are coupled together in this section, and if you have ever studied the thing, you must see it is very plain. The same rights are granted in this respect to foreigners who are naturalized that are granted to native born citizens, and I don't think that there is any gentleman of foreign extraction that desires, in reality, anything more.

MR. STEDMAN. I will ask you another question. You say it applies to native born citizens. "Every native male citizen who shall have become such ninety days prior to an election," is the way it would then read.

MR. BROWN. That is all right, sir.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: It does seem to me that after a man acquires the right to exercise the right of suffrage and cast a ballot at an election, if, according to the policy of this country, being a native born, he have a right to exercise that right of suffrage when he arrives at the age of twenty-one years, why we should not frame a constitutional provision extending that time for ninety days longer. Or, in other words, oblige a person to be not only twenty-one years old, but to be twenty-one years and three months old before he can exercise the privilege of suffrage. If a person, being a native born American citizen, arrive at the age of twenty-one years and thirty days four days before a Presidential election, he, by virtue of this provision, by virtue of this section, if it go into force, could not vote until the next succeeding Presidential election. What reason is there, when the law says a man shall have the right to exercise the right of suffrage when he has arrived at the age of twenty-one, that we should step in, and, by a constitutional provision, put off that right for three months longer, and, in many instances, deprive the possessor thereof of the power of exercising that right which is acquired by his arriving at the age of twenty-one years? This is a section, too, that when it comes to be construed in the Courts will be open to considerable doubt. It is vague. It is not clear. It says that every native male citizen of the United States, and every naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election, etc. Now, is it every native male citizen who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election? It is a question whether this ninety days restriction applies to the naturalized citizen, or whether it has reference to both naturalized and native born citizens. It occurs to me as having reference merely to naturalized citizens, because in that connection the words "made such" mean something. A person may be a citizen, and yet not be possessed of the political privilege of voting. In the formation of this Government the States delegated to Congress the power to pass naturalization laws. This power vested exclusively in Congress, and ever since it has been the policy to allow foreigners to become citizens of the United States, and exercise the elective franchise, after a residence of five years. That is the law to-day, and has been the law for a number of years, and what sense or justice is there in putting a provision in here requiring a residence of an additional ninety days? A person must be here five years; and if he arrives at the age of eighteen, he must be here three years. What sense is there in requiring ninety days longer? It does not seem to me just, and certainly is not in harmony with the theory of government, which has prevailed for years, in requiring a five years' residence. I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman. I am also in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Farrell. The substitute of Mr. Farrell is the proper substitute, and ought, in my opinion, to be adopted instead of the section as it now stands.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: In my judgment, sir, this section is intended to correct abuses growing out of the practice of rushing to the Courts a few days before election by persons seeking to become citizens. I think it is a good provision, and it is one which will receive the hearty indorsement of the intelligent, moral elements of this State, and therefore, I hope the section, as reported by the committee, will prevail.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. LARUE. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. West, McConnell, Evey, and Huestis.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Farrell.

Division was called for, the committee divided, and the amendment was lost—ayes, 35.

MR. MILLER. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to the section, 'Provided further, that no person hereafter convicted of the embezzlement or misappropriation of public money while holding office, or employed in the public service, shall ever exercise the privileges of an elector, or hold any office whatever in this State.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Adopted unanimously.

MR. SHURTLEFF. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section one by striking out the word 'district,' in the fourth line, and inserting the word 'precinct.'"

MR. SHURTLEFF. Mr. Chairman: The object of that amendment is to insert the word "precinct," which has more local significance than the word "district."

MR. CAPLES. I am opposed to the amendment. This term was discussed in the committee, and it was agreed, and I think with good reason, that the term was indistinct and indefinite. It may mean a judicial district, or it may mean a Congressional district, or some other district; we therefore decided to use the word "precinct."

MR. FREUD. If the gentleman will allow me, it is "district" in the section now, and the gentleman moves to insert "precinct."

[Laughter.]

MR. CAPLES. My understanding was certainly that it was agreed to in the committee. If that be the case I am in favor of the amendment. The word "district" is liable to be misunderstood.

MR. SWENSON. I move to strike out the words "election districts," and insert the word "counties."

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment to the amendment, but I am strenuously opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from Napa, Dr. Shurtleff. A resident of San Francisco may lose his residence by simply moving across the street, on changing from one hotel to another. I must say that the amendment is a very foolish one, and I hope this Convention will show their good sense and vote it down.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I can heartily indorse the amendment of the gentleman from Napa, and I wish to state the reasons in a very few words. It is true there are instances in San Francisco where citizens would lose their votes. But let me here say to you, that designing politicians, who are desirous of carrying certain districts, could make use of such a law as we would have under some of these amendments, to do so. They could get men to move across the street, from one precinct to another, a few days before the election, register there, and where there is such a large floating population, it would be almost impossible to identify them. It is well known to every gentleman on this floor that it has been done in the past, and I hope that all the guards possible will be thrown out. When people come to know this law they will be guided by it, and not move until after the election.

MR. FARRELL. Suppose a man leaves the First Ward and moves to the Eleventh Ward, inside of thirty days, would he still be allowed to vote in the First Ward?

MR. ESTEE. Yes, sir; it has been held so.

MR. FARRELL. I know a man who was refused in the Eleventh Ward and went down to the First Ward, and he was not allowed to vote there.

MR. ESTEE. I do not think he ought to be allowed to vote there. That is the very objection I make. I say I believe we should throw these guards around, in order to guard the purity of the ballot-box; that in order to do so we should adopt such an amendment as that in order to compel people to reside long enough in a precinct to establish their identity, and enable us to ascertain whether such persons are entitled to vote or not. It does away with these colonization schemes. There are times, as the gentleman says, when certain migratory persons will lose their votes. But it will be of great utility to the people of that city.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. I hope the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Napa will be adopted. I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco. To say that a man who has lived in the county ninety days may vote in any precinct would be wrong. I speak from experience a little in this matter. We wanted to elect a Board of Trustees in San Diego, and there was quite a struggle as to who should be elected, and colonization was resorted to. It was detected, but they carried the wards. Now, it is for the purpose of preventing just such things as this that we want this proposition adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I think this is a dangerous piece of business now presented in this amendment. I think it arises from a misapprehension. I may say, as a member of the committee, that there has been a misuse of words in one particular. If gentlemen will turn to section one of the article on right of suffrage in the present Constitution, they will find the language used is "county and district." The committee have used the words "election district." Now it has been the practice heretofore that a party living in the county could vote in a precinct, even if he had only been living there one day. He can vote in his precinct. He must be a resident of the district and county. That was the practice. I see a good deal of force in the argument made here that if a person changes his residence within ninety days he cannot vote. It is unreasonable that if he changes his residence he should lose his vote. I am not willing to go so far. To say that a citizen moving from one part of the city to another shall be precluded from voting, is a sentiment which I shall not adopt. This is the way it reads if we construe it in the usual way. What does it mean? I suppose it may mean "precinct," the same as the gentleman's motion means, but that is a matter that is open to judicial construction. Now, sir, on that point it might involve contested elections, and I am not disposed to change the phraseology of the present Constitution. Therefore, I propose to vote against this amendment, and if the time comes I shall move to make it read precisely as it does in the present Constitution. We have already provided something against frauds, by inserting ninety days instead of thirty. But when you come to make the extension three months because a man has removed from one ward to another, it seems to me very absurd. I think the amendment ought not to be adopted, and that the phraseology in the present Constitution should be adopted, because it has received judicial construction. The law now says that a party must be a resident of the district, which does not mean precinct, and he has got the right to vote in the place where he resides on the day of election. The Constitution as it is is more plain and comprehensive than the present, and I hope it will be allowed to remain.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: There seems to be some obscurity in the language used in the present Constitution, and also in the language of the report of the committee. I refer to the words "county" and "district;" and though there seems to be found no decision bearing on the question, from the discussion in this committee there seems to be some uncertainty as to how these words should be construed. I am in favor, in part, of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, because I think it would tend to remove the obscurity. By inserting the word "county" instead of "election district," it would have no reference whatever to any election district or precinct. If I could get a chance I would offer an amendment that would forever set at rest any question that might arise. It is as follows: I would strike out from and including the words "election district" in line four, and including the word "days" in line five, and insert as follows: "of the county ninety days, and in the election precinct in which he claims his vote blank days," leaving it to be filled up by the committee. Then it would read that he would have to be a resident of the State one year next preceding the election, and of the county ninety days, and of the election precinct in which he claims his vote, blank days, say thirty days. If I get an opportunity I will offer this amendment, which will set at rest all doubts; and because the pending amendments will leave a little of this obscurity, is the reason why I shall vote against them.

REMARKS OF MR. WELLIN.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. Chairman: Would it be in order to offer a substitute?

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir; not at present.

MR. WELLIN. I hope that the amendments will be voted down until we get to the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds. I certainly differ with some of the gentlemen who have spoken here. According to the report of the committee, it seems to me that a hardship will be worked upon two classes of citizens; that is to say, naturalized citizens, who must have taken out their papers three months before an election, which is making an addition of three months to the usual term of five years; and it also works a hardship upon young men who become of age just before an election, and so lose their votes for that year, by adding three months to their term. I am perfectly willing to throw all possible safeguards around the ballot box, for that is where our strength and our freedom lays, but I will vote for no measure that will throw stumbling blocks in the way of those who are entitled to exercise the elective franchise. I think such a provision would work a serious hardship. There are a great many people who have to change their residence and move from one part of a county or city to another, and under this provision they will be cut off from voting. I hope the section, as reported, will either be voted down or amended so as to make it reasonable.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to all these amendments, and as the Chairman of the committee is absent——

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has spoken once. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Swenson.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Napa, Mr. Shurtleff.

Division being called for, the amendment was adopted, by a vote of 58 ayes to 35 noes.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I now offer the amendment which I have just read.

MR. TINNIN. I rise to a point of order. He is striking out what has just been adopted. The word "precinct" has just been adopted. I rise to that point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not well taken. He moves to strike out that language in connection with other language.

MR. REYNOLDS. I preserve the word "precinct" there, but I wish to avoid this obscurity.

MR. STEELE. The words "thirty days," have been voted upon once.

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir.

MR. REYNOLDS. I have no wish to consume the time of this committee. The object of this amendment is to use language that is well understood, and to use the political subdivisions of the State instead of "election districts." If this amendment be adopted it will make the matter perfectly plain, and will avoid all difficulties.

MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out in line eight all after the word 'provided,' and insert: 'whenever the Courts shall grant to Mongolians the right of citizenship, the Legislature shall remove all disabilities from exercising the elective franchise on account of sex.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. Not in order. That matter has been acted upon. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. The word "district," as used in the old Constitution, applied directly to the districts existing at the time, that then existed. Now, to use the word in this Constitution might mean a railroad district. It might mean a senatorial district. I think a residence of ninety days ought to be required in the county, and not in the railroad district and congressional district, and thirty days in the precinct. That will protect any county from fraud. The people who live along the mountains engaged in stock raising, will, a great many of them, be disfranchised, if the election shall be held in November. They could not be at home three months previous to an election. They could be at home thirty days. I desire to protect, as far as possible, elections. I have seen frauds committed by transfers from one county to another; but there is no danger at all when you limit the residence to ninety days in the county. There is no danger when you require a person moving from one precinct to another, to live in the precinct thirty days. I believe it is to the interest of the people of this State to protect voters. I believe thirty days in the precinct is enough.

REMARKS OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to this carpetbag system of voting; it is a system that will allow a man to go from one district to another and vote for Supervisors. I have seen the evils of this system. There are cases where Supervisors are to be elected where great interests are involved—perhaps the county printing, or something of that kind—and parties who are interested in the result will pay the board of men thirty days, to get them to move across the line for the purpose of voting. Now, sir, this thing has resulted in great evil to the people of this State, and has created general dissatisfaction. I believe the report of the committee is right, that every person should reside ninety days in the place where he lives before he can properly understand the necessities of the community. He may have removed from a community that is entirely different from the one to which he has moved. Thirty days are not enough to enlighten him on the surroundings. We place too little value on the right of suffrage in this State. This is one of the great and growing evils of this country; it was the means through which Rome lost her liberties. We are now drifting into the same condition, and it will be stopped if people who exercise the right of suffrage are compelled to live longer in the communities, in order that they may understand the necessities of the country.

MR. STEDMAN. I ask you if it is not a fact, that in several States foreign born citizens are allowed to vote in less time than is required by the United States to make them citizens—in Colorado, Nebraska, and other States?

MR. TINNIN. I say it is a very great mistake for these States to adopt such a rule. I don't care whether they are native born or foreign born citizens. A native born citizen has no right to vote until he has lived there long enough to understand the wants of the community.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: Is an amendment in order? If so, I would move to insert in line four, between the words "years" and "next," "and of the county ninety days;" in line five, strike out "ninety" and insert "thirty."

THE CHAIRMAN. Not in order at present. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds.

MR. VAN DYKE. I wish to explain what this amendment is, so that members will understand it when I come to offer it. It would read like this: "Of the State, one year; and of the county, ninety days next preceding the election; and of the election precinct in which he claims his vote, thirty days."

MR. REYNOLDS. That is precisely my amendment.

MR. VAN DYKE. No, sir. "County" comes in after the word "year."

REMARKS OF MR. BIGGS.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to that amendment. It is well known by every gentleman here that we should guard the ballot box. I think no evil will result to voters if we require ninety days in the precinct. The gentleman proposes now to make it thirty days. I would have no objection to sixty days. But I do not want any colonization in this State. No, gentlemen, that is not what we want. I am sorry to say it, but I know that men have been colonized in this State, and will be again unless we prevent it. It would work no greater hardship on a native born citizen than a foreign born. I want to protect the ballot-box from frauds, and to do so a man ought to be required to remain in the precinct at least sixty days before he can vote. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Napa was entirely sufficient, and makes the section all that any person should require. The great hue and cry has been the colonization of voters, and every gentleman knows it. It is not necessary to allude to it here. It has caused more trouble, and more contested elections, and more confusion and discord, than all other causes. Now, there is no gentleman here but knows, as has been cited by the gentleman from Los Angeles, that you can colonize in certain districts to elect certain gentlemen in a city or town. That is the case in cities like Sacramento or San Francisco. Great frauds can be perpetrated in this manner. They can go out of the towns and live for thirty days in the county precincts if it is necessary to carry certain districts. Gentlemen upon the floor know that perfectly well. I have seen two carloads leave one part of the county for the purpose of voting taxes upon another. I want to protect the ballot-box from these things. In order to protect the right of franchise, it is necessary that they should remain ninety days before they are entitled to vote. If they move out of one precinct into another, they do so voluntarily. They know what the law is, let them abide by it. I do not care how hard the law is, it is the duty of every man to obey it. If gentlemen undertake to colonize voters under this provision, they will find it a very difficult task.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. TULLY. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Larue, West, Evey, and Wyatt.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds.

Division being called for, the amendment was lost by a vote of 44 ayes to 51 noes.

MR. MCCALLUM. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"In line six insert: 'Provided, that no native of China shall vote at any election.'"

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: This requires a word of explanation. This is offered for no other than a strictly legitimate purpose. This section, as it now stands, says every male citizen of the United States, and every naturalized citizen thereof, etc. This section, as it now reads, would permit Chinese to vote in case they should become naturalized. There have been a very considerable number of them naturalized in some of the Eastern States. It has been going on for ten years, and very little notice has been taken of it.

MR. STEELE. I would like to ask a question. Would it have any effect upon the law of the United States, provided it should declare that they shall become citizens? Would our Constitution have any effect upon it?

MR. MCCALLUM. The State of California may declare what foreigners may vote. Citizenship is one thing, the right of suffrage is another, and does not necessarily extend the right to vote. Now, suppose the Supreme Court of the United States, if this question should come before the Court, should decide that the Chinese are entitled to naturalization. My legal proposition is that the State of California may declare that the Chinese shall not vote. In other words, that no native of China may vote. There is nothing which prohibits the State of California, or any State, from regulating the franchise, except the Constitution of the United States, and that provides simply that no one shall be prohibited from voting on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude. As to nativity, some may be excluded and others given the right. It was in view of that that I thought we should adopt an amendment like the one I have proposed. I have thought over the various forms, and have tried to put it in the best form, and it appears to me that this is about the language that should be used.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Why don't you include the Chinese that are born here in this country?

MR. MCCALLUM. I think we could not go so far on account of the Constitution of the United States. I think this is the proper amendment. The Constitution says that persons born in the United States shall be citizens. I say it would be a very serious omission if, hereafter, when the question arises, it will be shown that we have given them the right to vote by our own Constitution. I propose to insert these words, but I will willingly give way to any gentleman who will use any better language to express the same idea. The State has the right to regulate the franchise in any way not precluded by the Constitution of the United States.

MR. SWENSON. I move an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert, 'provided, no elector shall be considered to have lost his residence in one precinct until he shall have gained it in another.'"

MR. ESTEE. He might lose it for cause. He might be sent to the Penitentiary, or to the Insane Asylum.

MR. ROLFE. This amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, it seems to me, would include a great many of the Caucasian race. We all know there are a great many Englishmen domiciled in China, established in business there. They could not come into this country, if they are born there, and be naturalized. We had better consider this matter carefully.

MR. McCALLUM. That very difficulty occurred to me. Can you suggest some proper phraseology to avoid it?

MR. ROLFE. I would suggest, "Asiatic Mongolians." Why not use that word?

MR. AYERS. I would ask the gentleman if it could not be remedied by saying—"not born of American or European parentage?"

MR. McCALLUM. I had thought of that, but it might suggest the idea that this is made on account of race.

MR. SWENSON. Mr. Chairman: I desire to perfect my amendment so it will read:

"Provided, no elector shall be considered to have lost a residence in one precinct until he shall have gained another, except otherwise provided in this Constitution."

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I desire to call attention to the fact that under this amendment a person can leave the State and go around the world and still be a voter.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Swenson.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I hope that amendment will be adopted.

Division being called for, the committee divided, and the amendment was lost—ayes, 25.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum.

Adopted.

MR. REYNOLDS. I wish to offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out from and inclusive of the words 'election precinct,' in line four, to and including the word 'days,' in line five, and insert 'of the county ninety days, and of the election precinct in which he claims his vote, sixty days.'"

MR. REYNOLDS. The object is exactly the same as that which I offered before. It is the same amendment, except I have changed the word "thirty" to "sixty," in order to meet what appears to be the views of the committee.

MR. BIGGS. I do hope the Convention will vote that down. We have been laboring here in order to remedy this great evil, in order to satisfy the great mass of voters of the State. I hope the gentleman's amendment will be voted down. We must keep and protect the ballot box sacred.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that the section as it stands will disfranchise one third of the voters of this State, by providing that they shall reside in the precinct ninety days. Now there is no one more opposed to colonization than myself. I have seen the evil of it, but I do think it can be prevented if we fix the limit at sixty days. It is not necessary to disfranchise so many voters in order to guard against this. Laboring men and mechanics, as a general thing, cannot live in one place as long as ninety days. They are not so well established, and they form a very large portion of the voters of this State. It seems to me this is a blow directly at them, whether intended or not.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds.

Division was called for, and the amendment was lost, by a vote of 38 ayes to 47 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section two.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 2. Electors shall, in all cases except treason, felony, or breach of the peace, be privileged from arrest on the days of election, during their attendance at such election, going to and returning therefrom.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I call attention——

THE CHAIRMAN. If there is no amendment to the section the Secretary will read section three.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 3. No elector shall be obliged to perform military duty on the day of election, except in time of war or public danger.

MR. HERRINGTON. I wish to offer an amendment to section one.

THE CHAIRMAN. Not in order.

MR. HERRINGTON. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

No second.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section four.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 4. For the purpose of voting, no person shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his presence or absence while employed in the service of the United States, nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of this State or of the United States, or of the high seas; nor while a student at any seminary of learning; nor while kept at any almshouse or other asylum, at public expense; nor while confined in any public prison.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there is no amendment the Secretary will read section five.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 5. All elections by the people shall be by ballot.

MR. McCALLUM. I move that the committee rise, report back the article, and recommend its passage.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer a new section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature may, by law, provide for the registration of voters, and may make such laws applicable to such subdivisions of the State as may be proper."

REMARKS OF MR. ANDREWS.

MR. ANDREWS. I offer that amendment for the reason that I suppose it will be held, under the language adopted here, that the Legislature may pass laws for the registration of voters. That being the case, I want it so that counties that do not desire a registry law may be exempted. A registry law in my county would be a very great burden.

MR. BIGGS. Would not that be local or special legislation?

MR. ANDREWS. It is legislation such as may be wanted in certain sections of the State. I heard the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, say that the Legislature could make a registry law applicable to certain counties, and exempting other counties from the operations of the law.

MR. ESTEE. I did not intend to say so. I intended to say that I was in favor of the Legislature regulating the registration of voters in this State. But I do not think, under the provision prohibiting special legislation, that this can be adopted. I think it will conflict with that clause.

MR. ANDREWS. I do not understand that it is necessary for the rule to be uniform throughout the State. If I had the matter in my own hands, I would say that the Legislature should have no power to pass any registry law. It would work a very great hardship; it would be an outrage upon our citizens. It would be impossible for me to compute the expense that would attend a registry law in our county. It would exclude a large number of legal voters from the privilege of voting. It would exclude one hundred legal voters where it would shut out one illegal voter. Another reason why I believe there should not be a registry law, particularly in the section of the State where I live, is, that it would add so much to the expense. The history of the registry law in this State is, that it has been constantly evaded. This is the very means by which the State was carried at the last Presidential election. I am opposed to any such a law.

REMARKS OF MR. BIGGS.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I don't propose to discuss this question, but I have a few words to say. The legislative committee and the Committee of the Whole have made ample provisions in this matter. This would be entirely illegal and special legislation. It has been admitted by the most distinguished men that the way to purify our elections is to have a registry law, and have that law rigidly enforced. My friend seems to think that we lost the Presidential election on account of the registry law. Now, if there is anything that will prevent frauds it is this law. He says the expense will operate very heavily in his county. It is a well known fact that the Assessor is allowed to register men at the time he goes around assessing their property. I think my friend is very much mistaken, and I would be very sorry to see anything done to impair the usefulness of the registry Act.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the new section.

Lost.

MR. LARUE. I move that the committee rise, report back the article to the Convention, and recommend that it be adopted.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Right of Suffrage, and now report the same back, and recommend that it be adopted.

MR. McCALLUM. I move that four hundred and eighty copies be ordered printed and laid upon the table.

So ordered.

WATER AND WATER RIGHTS.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Water and Water Rights.

So ordered.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Following is the article on water and water rights, as reported by the committee:

SECTION 1. All water appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for sale or rental, is hereby declared public, and subject to the control of the State.

SEC. 2. The unappropriated waters of the lakes and rivers of this State are declared to be public property, and may be appropriated by individuals, associations, or corporations, subject to such conditions and restrictions as the Legislature may impose.

SEC. 3. The Legislature shall enact laws permitting the appropriators of water and the owners and occupants of land to construct levees, ditches, canals, flumes, and aqueducts, or run their water through natural channels, for agricultural, mining, manufacturing, milling, domestic, drainage, reclamation, or sanitary purposes, across the land of others.

CONTROL OF THE WATERS OF THE STATE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section one.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 1. All water appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for sale or rental, is hereby declared public, and subject to the control of the State.

SPEECH OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: The use of water for the purpose of irrigation and mining was, until the last twenty-five or thirty years, practically unknown to the American people. And when we attempt to grasp this subject in a political sense, and place it under legislative control, we are embarking on a new era. We stand upon the shore of an unknown and unexplored sea. Irrigation, it is true, has existed at a remote period in the past. But when we attempt to apply the experience of past ages to our own Government, we find that it cannot be fully applied to this free Government, for the reasons that Governments that have brought forward and completed great irrigation schemes were arbitrary Governments, Governments where citizens had no privilege, no right to the water, as against the Government. Under our system of government the rights of the citizens are paramount in a great sense, in many respects, to the Government. In other words, the rights of the citizen, under our Government, cannot be invaded.

The first historical account we have upon which we can rely, in relation to the use of water for irrigation, commences at the time the Egyptian kings dug their canal. From that time up to the present—a period of over three thousand years—the Egyptian Government has laid out and completed one of the most perfect systems of irrigation known in that part of the world. It is true that they were aided and assisted by nature in the enterprise. The great valley of the Nile was made by debris brought down from the mountains, and deposited along the banks. The climate and peculiar conditions aided them in the perfection and completion of the system. The valley of the Nile is, to a great extent, a rainless country. The climate is subject to few changes; in fact, the rise of the river and the change in the climate each year is the exact counterpart of that occurring the preceding year. Through these means the Egyptian Government has completed a system of irrigation that is the wonder of the world, a system of artificial canals, embracing eight hundred or nine hundred in number, and with an aggregate length of about nine thousand miles. A large number, something like one hundred, of these canals are navigable. Under this great system the Government of Egypt was enabled to do something that cannot be done in other parts of the world. They are able to estimate what the amount of the crop is going to be. The farmer knows before he sows his seed what his return is going to be. So thoroughly is the system understood, so perfect is this system of irrigation which has been carried forward and completed. The Government has established stations at convenient points, and as soon as they have indications of a rise they immediately telegraph to all parts of the valley, and dams and dikes are immediately put in readiness to control the water; and when it shows sufficiently high, the flood-gates are opened, when the water passes from one section of land to another. The annual flood occurs about the last of June. The Egyptian officer, when the gauge marks twenty-five feet, proclaims "high Nile," because he knows how much land will be submerged. If it marks nine feet, he proclaims "low Nile," because he knows how much land will fail to produce. If the Nile marks twenty-three or twenty-four feet, he proclaims "good Nile," because he knows there will be abundant harvests, and the Government can prepare for the distribution and shipment of the crops.

Now, I will refer to India, which is next in importance to Egypt. The streams there are not so well suited for purposes of irrigation as the Nile. These streams are affected by monsoons, and hence they are not regular in their distribution. But in some portions even the floods are confined by great dams and embankments, for the purpose of irrigation. Some of these dams are of enormous height. I speak of this to show how enormous the expense would be in this State to establish a general system of irrigation. These banks and dikes are of great length and height. The English Government, it is true, has had something to do with the irrigation schemes of Egypt. They have completed some of the great works laid out there, and repaired others. But while the English Government was willing to aid in these schemes, they compelled the people to pay for the support which they gave them. We find where the English Government has carried on any of these works they have demanded and received in return two fifths of all the products of the land. Now, what would the farmers of this State say if the Government should propose to establish a general system of irrigation, and take two bushels of grain out of every five?

I will next briefly review the irrigation system of Italy, in the valley of the Po and in Lombardy. The waters of the principal streams there have their rise in eternal beds of snow. These schemes were carried out by quasi-corporations. But the Government at the present time controls the entire system and regulates the sale of water. The waters of these streams flow from beds of snow in the mountains. They are clear and carry but little sediment or debris. The statistics show that in the ninety days during the growing season nearly every other day, on an average, is a rainy day, and it would seem to the practical mind that this would be sufficient moisture, but we find that they have a full system of irrigation for the purpose of renovating, renewing, and strengthening the land. Now, sir, if these streams, flowing from clear snow, are good for the purpose of renovating the exhausted lands of Italy, what would be the result that would come from the waters of Bear River and Yuba River running over the poorer lands of the Sacramento valley? And I firmly believe that in the end this will be the result of the great debris question. The mud and silt of the Bear and Yuba will be utilized to advantage upon this land, and make it as productive as the best alluvial soil near the rivers. But, sir, the question to be considered here is, as I understand it, to determine whether it is right and proper and in good judgment for the State of California to embark in a general irrigation scheme. That is what the committtee has been considering. So far as I understand the committee, the opinion seemed to be that it would not be feasible for this State to engage in a general system of irrigation. It would not be advisable, because we are not in a condition to enter upon this great enterprise. It is an enterprise that would cost an immense amount of money. From the investigation I have made I am satisfied that it would cost not less than three or four hundred millions of dollars to even start this great enterprise—such a general scheme as would be necessary. Now, it is political economy, as I understand it, when a great enterprise is to be inaugurated, to ascertain where the money is to come from to carry out the enterprise. Three or four hundred millions would be required to start such a scheme, and would the General Government be so liberal as to furnish that amount of money. Experience has certainly convinced every member of this body that such a thing would be impossible at the present time. We have in our midst an undesirable population, and we have attempted for a long while to get Congress to aid us in expelling them, and we all know the result. The General Government would not furnish it. The next question is, if the General Government will not furnish it, can we get it from the State? Is the State in a condition to furnish that amount of money? If we tax only the lands benefited, we could not possibly raise such a large amount of money as would be necessary. It would have to be a tax upon the whole State. Would the farmers of San Diego, Los Angeles, Santa Barbara, Ventura, Santa Clara, Humboldt, Mendocino, and the miners of the State of California, submit to such a tax? Certainly not. And I believe the party, or body of men, who would attempt to force such a tax upon the people of this State would be hurled from power and treated with scorn and contempt. The indignation of the people would know no bounds if such a burden were to be forced upon them. I say, then, sir, that it would be impossible, under any circumstances, for the people of this State to raise the necessary amount of money to engage in this great scheme.

We have no precedent to guide us in this case. Egypt is a peculiar Government. It is an absolute Government, and has been so. The individual has no right as against the Government. The Government controls life and property, and everything pertaining to the individual, and when they choose to demand labor, they get it. When the Government of Egypt chooses to demand labor, the laborers have no choice but to come forth and do the work. All they have to do is to send out the officers and they come. We find, as late as eighteen hundred and eleven, the rulers of Egypt desired to complete a certain work, and they ordered out twenty-four thousand men for that purpose. Those men had to work, and they did. The only pay they get is their food and clothing. Thousands of these men died annually from exposure, so great was the stress upon the Government.

The next country I shall notice is India. The rulers of India occupy about the same position towards the people as those of Egypt. The rulers have absolute and undisputed power. They, like the people of Asia, are a people who know nothing of human rights, and they lead a life of bondage and poverty. Their only idea is to struggle for an existence. They don't know anything about the word independence. The citizens do not claim any rights against the Government—only the right to live. Under this system of government, with that condition of people, the great irrigation schemes of those countries were perfected. There is a difference in Italy. There the individual has more rights; but the Government has power to some extent to hold the reins over the people, by charging them for the water they use.

Now, in regard to wages, that is a question that will come up in the solution of this matter. The wages in Egypt are from eight to twelve cents a day; in India, from six to eight cents; in Italy, from fifteen to thirty cents. Contrast that with the wages paid in this country, and see if this State can afford to embark in such an enterprise. I do not believe there is any great number of delegates here who would for a moment consider such a proposition. The committee have made their report very broad, in three sections, and in accordance with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Elevator cases, and in accordance with the decisions of the Courts in this State.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The use of all water now appropriated, or that may be hereafter appropriated for sale, rental, or distribution, is hereby declared to be a public use, and subject to the regulation and control of the State, in the manner to be prescribed by law."

SPEECH OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: My object is to more aptly express the sentiment of the committee, as I understand it, and, in my judgment, the most important feature of this report is contained in the first section. I call the attention of all members who have ever lived in the mining regions of the State to the matters of which I am about to speak. The action of the Federal Government will be borne in mind in relation to the appropriation of the waters of the State. There came into use practically a code of laws, which came to be recognized as such. It will be remembered, sir, that the appropriations of the waters in this State began in the mining regions. Of course I do not allude to those appropriations made for the use of cities and towns. Of later years it has been extended to the agricultural portions of the State, and I have no doubt in the future this will be one of the most important uses to which the waters of this State will be put. I was about to call attention to the practical feature of this section. As I said, the first appropriation of water was made in the mining regions of the State. These lands belonged to the government of the United States, and their occupancy by citizens of this State was without the sanction of the Federal Government. The State undertook to give these parties a right, and did so, as far as it could in the exercise of its police power. These occupants were situated in this wise: the only law which the Courts could recognize was the old common law of the preëmption of title by reason of possession. From that arose the rule that he who was first in appropriating either the water or the land had a superior right. That was the condition of things which existed. It gave peace and practical security to this State, and to the settlers on the public lands, until eighteen hundred and sixty-six, when Congress, in answer to earnest solicitation from the members of this State, inaugurated this legislation, that he who was first had the right. Then for the first time these rules became the law of the land. Under that rule he who was first had the right to the water. Under these various Acts of Congress great rights have been acquired. Great and mighty interests have grown up under the present laws, and these interests ought to be protected. There are two distinct phases of this question which I wish to call attention to. One is the security of the rights of those parties who make these appropriations, and the other to secure the public against oppression from their use.

At this point, time was called under the rule, and the gavel fell.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: So far as the amendment offered by the gentleman is concerned, I don't see that it is any different from that presented by the committee. In fact, it is a distinction without a difference. We declare that water, when offered for sale or rent, is public, and subject to the control of the State. The gentleman declares, in his amendment, that it is public, and subject to legislative control. I can see no necessity for his amendment. It is the same thing as has been recommended by the committee. The State is the sovereign. As far as the two propositions are concerned, I can see no new feature in it.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The only property that can be acquired in any of the waters of this State by appropriation or condemnation is a use, and such use shall forever remain subject to regulation and control by the Legislature of the State for the common benefit of all."

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: Now, sir, that is a declaration of a principle as old as the common law. It is desirable to fix the rights that can be acquired in the waters of the State by appropriation and condemnation only. To say that the waters of the State already appropriated, or that may be hereafter appropriated, shall be declared to be subject to legislative control, is remarkable. I believe it is a rule as old as the law of nations, that no nation can grant away the right to the waters, and the use of the waters, in its domain.

MR. TINNIN. Do you believe that Congress has the right to pass any laws regarding the public domain in this State, and the right to the water, or the use of the water?

MR. HERRINGTON. I do not believe the Government of the United States possesses the power to grant any private right in any lake, river, or any other water in this State, or in any State in the Union. We have a right in this Constitution to declare what rights may be acquired in the waters of this State. There never has been any higher degree of proprietorship in the waters of the State than a use. That is all. And there is no one that can acquire any other different property in it, except he appropriate it, and the extent of that appropriation goes only to that which he uses personally. It is precisely like the breath he breathes. So long as he is breathing it, it is his. So long as he drinks the water and uses it, it is his. So far as property in it is concerned, it is his only to that extent. But for all other purposes, it is simply a use. There can be no higher property acquired than simply a use. It stands in the same position exactly. This is simply a declaration that no other or higher right can be acquired. I submit that this amendment ought to prevail. It is short, it is terse, and right to the point.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: We have heard considerable in regard to the history of water and waterworks in other countries. This of course is entertaining to us. It is a pleasing argument. It is entertaining to know how things are conducted in other countries, and what has been accomplished there, and we learn to some extent the means which have been brought to bear in carrying out these purposes, but we are more particularly interested in our own State. The water interest in this State is one of great magnitude to us. Now, it is evident that there are different views taken with regard to water. There are different views taken with regard to rights concerning water. But in the midst of all this it is necessary for us to examine strictly what is true law, and we must understand in these matters that we must adhere to the law, and that it is hardly the province of a Constitutional Convention to make retroactive laws, laws which will affect property which has already been acquired under previous laws and previous decisions of the Courts. These I consider to be the great principles which ought to be taken into consideration at once in connection with this subject. We should remember that we can take no man's property that he has acquired in a legal manner. But we hear it said here that water is not property. And we hear it urged that there is nothing in connection with it except the use. Now, is not this a very fine distinction? Why, the use of the water is to all intents and purposes the appropriation of the water itself. Is not the water appropriated? Is not the water turned? It is urged that water is not property. I have not time to read authorities upon this proposition, but you will find in the nineteenth of California decisions sustaining the doctrine that water is property, and that it is not only the use which is taken, but the water itself. That is, that a man has a right to waste or destroy it, just the same as he has a right to kill his own horse if he chooses. He has a right to purchase land with the water. It is all property, and he purchases it, and takes possession of it. In the decision to which I refer it is declared to be property—personal property, when taken from a stream and diverted. There is no mistake about it. There is nothing said about the use, but it is treated as personal property. The decision covers the entire ground, and shows that it is property. It is held that it can be sold and purchased. If it was not property it could not be purchased. If it was not property it could not be taken possession of. They buy and pay for it, and under this decision of this Court it is personal property.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I suppose the Convention will apply the principle of the Elevator cases to this provision; and that is the common sense view to take of it. I don't like the language of this section. Suppose water is appropriated by an individual, I ask the gentleman from Santa Clara if that is not property? Suppose I go to the brook and fill a barrel with water, is it not mine as much as any other substance? That proposition is not good law. If it is used for a public purpose, then it is to be subject to public control. I strikes me that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale, is just the thing. When water is sold or rented, then it becomes subject to public control. I trust that amendment will be adopted by this Convention.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. Mr. Chairman: I offer as an amendment the minority report of the committee.

THE CHAIRMAN. Not in order at present.

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. I wish to make a declaration in the substitute I shall offer, that the waters of the streams in this State are not the property of individuals, but belong to the State. This may be a question that will agitate the people of this State at no distant day, more than any other, railroad corporations not excepted. Water is diffused through the bowels of the earth. The principle of the report of the majority of the committee is favorable to water monopolies in all respects. The report does not remedy the evil of which the people complain, and it seems to me that this is one of the principal things that this Convention was called for. We find, all over the State, an attempt made to condemn and monopolize all the waters of the State by corporations. Especially, sir, is this the case in the City of San Francisco, where the influence of these tremendous water companies is so manifest. At the last session of the Legislature a scheme was set on foot to swindle the taxpayers out of fifteen millions of dollars for a lot of worn out waterworks in that city. At this time we find a number of these men laying claim to all the waters of the State. One of these schemes is that of Lake Tahoe, a lake twenty-two miles long and twelve miles wide; they claim the water. What works have they built? None. And they are attempting to sell this water to the citizens of San Francisco, for the enormous price of fifteen million dollars; likewise the Blue Lakes, and other lakes. It is to prevent such schemes as this that I offer this amendment. The men who are offering to sell this water to the City of San Francisco, have no right to the water which they offer. I wish to read an extract from Wicks on Mining.

At this point, time was called, and the gavel fell.

REMARKS OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I desire to add a few words of explanation in relation to section one.

MR. HERRINGTON. I rise to a point of order. The gentleman has spoken twice already.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is overruled. He has not spoken on this amendment.

MR. TINNIN. This committee has not attempted to take away any private or vested rights. It has simply provided that it shall be subject to State control when it is sold or rented. When an individual or a corporation has a water right, they have individual control of it; but when they attempt to rent it or sell it, then we declare that it is a public use, and subject to legislative control. That is the proposition in this section. An individual may own a ditch which controls an entire mining community, or an entire agricultural community. If he endeavors to demand rental, or charges for the use of the water, then the State will step in and regulate his acts, which is proper and right.

MR. HERRINGTON. Does not this report, as a matter of fact, go upon the principle that water is an absolute property the same as any other property?

MR. TINNIN. There is no absolute property when it is under control. I would cite the gentleman to the case of Atchinson vs. Peterson, decided in the Supreme Court of the United States, in support of the position taken in this report. This section simply conforms to the Act of Congress and the decisions of the highest Courts in the land.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Waters, Larue, Van Dyke, and Weller.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried—Ayes, 41; noes, 36.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

Division being called, the amendment was lost, by a vote of 32 ayes to 45 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer.

Adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section two.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 2. The unappropriated waters of the lakes and rivers of this State are declared to be public property, and may be appropriated by individuals, associations, or corporations, subject to such conditions and restrictions as the Legislature may impose.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. I offer a substitute for section two.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 2. All lakes, except artificial reservoirs, shall be declared public property. All running waters shall be declared public property, subject only to the control of the State."

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: That does not contain a legal proposition, because the running water of the State is not public property. If there is anything settled at all about water—running water—it is that when it is appropriated it becomes private property. The amendment of the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale, covers the whole question as far as it goes, and that is, that when the water is appropriated for sale or rental, that becomes a public use, as decided in the Elevator cases. Now, all the authorities, both of England and America, recognize the fact that there is property in water, just as much as there is in land. Therefore you cannot take it from a man without making compensation therefor. What we ought to do, in addition to the section adopted, is to provide that the existing water rights, and rights of way, may be condemned by making just compensation. This is necessary in order to prevent the waste and misuse of water. In such cases the Legislature should be allowed to provide a remedy. If rights exist, why these rights may be condemned for the general public good, upon the payment to the owner of a just price for his vested rights. Without that is done, in a great many instances in this State, there can be no general system of irrigation. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco will not be adopted, because it is contrary to the well settled principles of law, and it can never be reduced to practice.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section two. There is no use of it in the Constitution, and as there is some doubt, the safest way is to leave it out.

MR. ESTEE. The unappropriated waters of the lakes and rivers of this State, includes the Sacramento River, and all other navigable streams, in which the State has no earthly interest, which the State cannot appropriate, cannot occupy. In fact the Government of the United States expressly reserved the right to control these waters when California came into the Union, and let us not do a thing which will make us so supremely ridiculous. No individual or corporation in this State can appropriate the waters of the Sacramento River. They are not subject to local laws; there is no local law that can step in and interfere with navigation.

MR. SMITH. Are they not subject still to local laws?

MR. ESTEE. No, sir. I am not speaking about taking out an amount of water that will not interfere with navigation, but I am talking about this section two as it reads. This section says they may be appropriated by associations or individuals. Now, they cannot be appropriated by anybody. Some men may have water taken out of a stream that is not navigable, but the navigable streams are under the control of the United States, and the State may not interfere with them. The State may impose certain penalties, when it does not interfere with navigation.

MR. FILCHER. Assuming that a corporation is formed to take a body of water out of the Sacramento, to take it around the foothills for the purpose of distributing it for irrigation, would they have a right to make such an appropriation?

MR. ESTEE. It depends upon where they get the water, and under what circumstances. Now, this first section stands adopted, or the amendment to it was adopted, and it seems to me that is all that the necessities of this question demand. This section declares that when these waters are appropriated for a public use, they shall be under the control of the State. The Legislature can adjust the price and govern the use of water so appropriated, and that is all that is necessary.

MR. TINNIN. As far as the committee is concerned, I think every member of this body will agree with the gentleman that the State has no control over the navigable waters of the State. This is a matter reserved to Congress when the State was admitted into the Union.

MR. SMITH. Do you hold that the State has no control over the streams of this State?

MR. TINNIN. The navigable streams, I mean. In considering the question, the committee was aware that there are certain streams in this State that might be appropriated in future for a public use, if the State should ever desire to go into a general irrigation scheme, and that the Legislature ought to have power to control these waters. That is the reason we recommended section two.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. It is a well recognized rule of law that the State may control them entirely, so long as it does not interfere with navigation.

MR. HERRINGTON. Would it be in order to move to insert the words "the right to collect rates?"

THE CHAIRMAN. Not in order.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Water and Water Rights, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. LARKIN. I move the Convention do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at five o'clock and five minutes P. M. the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow morning, at nine o'clock and thirty minutes.

ONE HUNDRED AND TENTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Wednesday, January 15th, 1879.

The Convention met in regular session at nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M., President Hoge in the chair.

The roll was called, and members found in attendance as follows:

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence for one day was granted Mr. Shoemaker.

Seven days' leave of absence was granted Messrs. Barbour and Nelson.

THE JOURNAL.

MR. FREUD. Mr. President: I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with and the same approved.

So ordered.

PETITION.

MR. HOLMES presented the following petition, signed by a large number of citizens of Fresno County, requesting the exemption of certain property from taxation:

To the Honorable J. P. Hoge, President, and to members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: Your petitioners, citizens of the State of California, and residents of Borden District, most respectfully request your honorable body to exempt from taxation all property used exclusively for charitable, educational, and church purposes.

Laid on the table, to be considered with the article on revenue and taxation.

CHANGE OF RULE.

MR. WYATT. Mr. President: I desire to call up my motion to amend Rule Two, of which I gave notice yesterday.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Convention shall take a recess each day from half-after twelve o'clock M. to two o'clock P. M., and on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, from five o'clock P. M. to seven o'clock P. M."

MR. WYATT. Mr. President: Without detaining the Convention for a moment, I will state that the proposed change in the rule is simply that we may and shall hold evening sessions on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings. By holding probably two hours and a half we would gain a day's work during the week, and would not make the labor of the Convention so onerous but what the members of the Convention could well attend to the duties. I therefore move that the proposed amendment to the rule be adopted.

MR. SHURTLEFF. Mr. President: I think it would be unwise to resort to evening sessions. We work here from six to seven hours a day, and I do not believe that the members of this Convention can do justice to the subjects that they are passing upon if we undertake to work for a longer time. I am aware that there is considerable uneasiness, that there is some considerable complaint, that this Convention is sitting too great a length of time. I think it is very important that we should go on and do our work; take sufficient time to do it well, and be careful that we do not make haste in this matter. We have not sat but one hundred and five days, not counting the four days that we adjourned. It is not an extraordinary long time if the Convention sits until the fourth of March. The Convention of New York, in eighteen hundred and forty-six, sat one hundred and thirty-one days; the Convention of Illinois, in eighteen hundred and seventy, sat one hundred and fifty-one days; the Convention of Pennsylvania, in eighteen hundred and seventy-three, sat two hundred and ten days; the Convention of Ohio sat two hundred and eighteen days; the Convention of New York, in eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, sat two hundred and twenty-three days. Now, we have certain new and important questions to pass upon. The Chinese question took considerable time, and there are other questions that will take time. There are adverse interests in this State that will necessarily take up a good deal of time. But, I say, let us do our work faithfully. I am opposed to this matter of holding evening sessions, because I fear that under the pressure which has been brought to bear to have this Convention close its labors soon; that we will do our work hastily, and to do it hastily will be very unprofitable, not only for the honor of the members of the Convention, but for the interests of the State of California.

MR. WHITE. Mr. President: I am sorry to differ totally with my friend on this question. I think it is very important, to enable us to do this work well, that we should have three evening sessions each week. We will only have sessions on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings. We are suffering to get home, many of us. We have business at home, and are anxious to get through with the business of this Convention. I sit three or four hours in the evening without doing any work. We are obliged to remain here in Sacramento, and we might as well put in six or eight hours more a week, and that will materially assist us in getting out of the woods. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

MR. WINANS. Mr. President: I entirely agree with the view of the honorable gentleman from Napa. It seems to me that we are precipitating matters now without a due regard for the character of the work we have in hand, and without the deliberation that it demands. At the outset we squandered time with a profligacy that was remarkable, and now by way of retrenchment we propose to do everything in such a form as that nothing can possibly be well done. There is nothing gained by overtaxing the mind, nor by overtaxing the body. Mental exertion is a greater punishment to the system than is the labor of the body. If we spend seven or eight hours a day here in doing the duty that is devolved upon us, and give to it the close application of our mind and thought, we have done all that lies within our powers, and to attempt to do more is to fail to be efficient. Furthermore, this experiment has been tried. Gentlemen are not disposed to come here in the evening, except in small numbers, and you will find that if this evening session experiment is tried again a large number of the members will be absent; some because they have been overheated and worn out with the day's efforts, others because they seek for a relief and relaxation from the work of the Convention in amusements, and others again—and those the larger number—will want time to reflect upon the matters that are mooted here. Here, in the midst of the asperities of debate, there is but little time left for calm, deliberate inquiry, or reflection. You deny that entirely when you have these evening sessions. I say it is impolitic and wrong. I hope the Convention will vote it down. If we undertake, on account of personal embarrassments, and I deem them to be serious, to do our work imperfectly, will we not have cause to regret that we were members of this body at all, and will not the people look upon our actions with disfavor?

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: I do not wish to add anything to the argument of the honorable gentlemen to my left, for the reason that I believe what they have said is amply sufficient against holding night sessions; but I feel unwilling to lose the opportunity of paying my friend, Mr. White, the compliment which he offered me the other day, when he thought I was becoming demoralized on the subject of salaries. Mr. President, I fear the gentleman from Santa Cruz is becoming demoralized on the subject of going home. Now, I would advise the gentleman not to try to break up this Convention, because he wants to go home so bad. If he must go home, why, we can spare him for a day or two; and I think, that after a visit of two or three days, he would be satisfied to come back and stay for awhile. And if he has not time to go all the way down to Santa Cruz, why, I think that a visit no farther than San Francisco would do him good [laughter], and that he would be willing to come back and stay with us the remainder of the session, and be willing to stay as long as necessary.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. President: I am very much in hopes that the amendment will be adopted. The gentleman from San Francisco says that we squandered time in the beginning. I am not aware of that. The committees were all at work. They all had work, and they done it faithfully, and they done it well, and they reported in due time. As to mature deliberation and reflection, it is well known that the Legislature, towards the close of the session, always have night sessions, and they do more work than they do in the day sessions.

MR. CASSERLY. It is the quality of the work, and not the quantity done by the Legislature in night sessions that should be looked at.

MR. BIGGS. We have no local laws to pass here. This is a Constitution for the whole people; and I do hope that we will have night sessions. I feel that I have not done my duty, as I was floored by a long spell of sickness, but now my head is so I am ready to work night and day. My time is worth something at home.

MR. HOLMES. I would like to ask the gentleman if he was not home, sick, for some time.

MR. BIGGS. Up to the time of my sickness I had not lost one day.

MR. WINANS. Do you want us to remain here nights to make up your lost time?

MR. BIGGS. I am willing to give you indefinite leave of absence. You can go and attend to your lawsuits and return here and help us frame our organic law.

MR. TULLY. Mr. President: When I hear such young men and boys as Major Biggs talk in the way they do, I wonder that they ever came here. Their time is so valuable, and I am sure their constituents are losing a great deal by their absence. My advice to them would be to return, to go, and not stand upon the order of their going. Now, for one, I don't want to get away. My time is not worth much here, and it is not worth much when I get home. I am not willing to work here ten or fifteen hours a day and get no money. Eight hours is my limit. We have held two or three evening sessions. The attempt to hold night sessions resulted in a farce. Nothing could be done. They are worse than Saturday afternoon sessions, and they are of no use. Now, if the gentlemen want to come here and make speeches and pay for their own gas I am willing. I do not want anything of that kind. I hope this whole matter will be voted down, and that we will come here and hold our regular sessions every day.

MR. WEST. Mr. President: I hope that the motion made by the gentleman from Monterey will prevail; not for the purpose of hurriedly passing over the work and doing it imperfectly. The principles in the different reports have been discussed pro and con in this Convention, and members are as intelligent, and can vote upon them as intelligently now, as if we talk on them for two months more. I believe that we should give a due regard and a proper consideration to the reports, but we should work industriously. Now, I do not wish to retort upon those gentlemen who talk so flippantly about wanting to go home. They have been situated so that they can go and come at their pleasure. They must realize that there are those whose interests cannot be postponed, and whose interests cannot be attended to by occasional visits home. I believe that the work that we shall do here will be better received, if we, as sensible and practical men proceed to work industriously, and then adjourn and go home; and stop this everlasting going home before the work is done; and stop this going around to balls and dances and other amusements instead of working.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: I wish to amend after the word "Friday," to the effect that evening sessions shall be for discussion, without taking votes. The President knows very well that in Congress they have evening sessions, but there is a conventional understanding that voting is not to be done in the evening, and there is as much profit in discussion as in voting. If we spend a few hours here in the evening discussing propositions, we save time which we would otherwise consume in the Committee of the Whole in the daytime, and I see no objection to it. As for my friend Mr. Tully, I am certain he never goes to the theater, and he never runs about town.

MR. TULLY. I will support that amendment.

MR. HOWARD. I think it would be beneficial to him, for he would spend time here instead of spending it in places less virtuous.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. President: I oppose this resolution, and I oppose it entirely upon sanitary grounds. I believe it is bad policy to undertake to carry on sessions here in the evening. If you can find a worse place for men to breathe the free air of heaven in than this, with one hundred and fifty men in it, I do not know where it is. You light it up with those numerous gas jets, burning out all the oxygen there is in the air, and then expect men to live in it and breathe it. We shall find a worse increase in our sick list than we have ever noticed yet. It is a matter of impossibility for men to come in here and apply their minds to anything. There is nothing in the world to subsist on, and it is utter folly. It will be ruinous to every man who undertakes it. I undertake to say there is not a man who can attend these evening sessions without being in a burning fever before he gets out of here. I know it is my case, and I know it must be with others.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. President: I am in favor of the motion of Mr. Wyatt. I believe in working more hours than we are working here. I am surprised that gentlemen can go around beer saloons, that are not injurious to their health, and then not be able to get here next morning.

MR. BLACKMER. As I was the only one who spoke about health, I would like to ask the gentleman if he has ever seen me in one of those places?

MR. WELLIN. I was not speaking of you, and if you had said nothing no one would ever suspect you. One gentleman said that eight hours was enough for us to work. I think we ought to work eight hours. But when have we worked eight hours a day? Now we only work six hours a day. I think we are well enough able to work eight hours a day here, and I think if these gentlemen would come here and put in their time we would get along a great deal better. Some gentlemen say if you do not want to stay you can go away. Why, I don't want to go away for fear some of these men would do something wrong. I hope no one will go away, and I hope every member will vote for the evening sessions.

MR. MCCOMAS. Mr. President: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Keyes, Dunlap, Pulliam, and Lampson.

The main question was ordered.

THE PRESIDENT. The first question is on the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Monterey, Mr. Wyatt.

The ayes and noes were demanded by Messrs. White, Wellin, Condon, Davis, and Wyatt.

The roll was called, and the proposed amendment was lost by the following vote, not being two thirds in the affirmative:

WATER AND WATER RIGHTS.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. Mr. President: I move that the proposition number five hundred and twenty-five be brought up in Committee of the Whole, to be taken up with the report of the Committee on Water and Water Rights.

THE PRESIDENT. That proposition has already been referred to the Committee of the Whole, on the twentieth of December, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Water and Water Rights.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section two and amendments are before the committee.

MR. DUNLAP. Mr. Chairman: Is an amendment in order?

THE CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments pending.

MR. DUNLAP. I would ask that this amendment be read for information.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section two by inserting as follows: 'The right to divert the unappropriated waters of any natural lake or stream to beneficial use shall never be denied. Priority of use shall give the better right as between those using the water for the same purposes, but when the waters of any natural lake or stream are not sufficient for the resources of all those desiring the use of the same, those using the water for domestic purposes shall have the preference over those claiming for any other purpose, and those using the water for agricultural or mining purposes shall have the preference over those using the same for manufacturing purposes.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out section two.

The motion prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The section is stricken out. The Secretary will read section three.

CONDEMNING PRIVATE PROPERTY.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 3. The Legislature shall enact laws permitting the appropriators of water and the owners or occupants of land to construct levees, ditches, canals, flumes, and aqueducts, or run their water through natural channels, for agricultural, mining, manufacturing, milling, domestic, drainage, reclamation, or sanitary purposes, across the land of others.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer to that section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section three by adding the words 'upon first paying a just compensation therefor, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury in a Court of record, as shall be prescribed by law.'"

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I send up a substitute for the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature shall provide by law for the condemnation of existing water rights for public use, and for the right of way for conducting water for such uses, first making just compensation for the same."

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say, on behalf of the committee, that I think it was the intention that the amendment introduced by Mr. Winans should have been there, and they therefore accept the amendment introduced by Mr. Winans.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I would suggest to the committee that that amendment is unnecessary, because in the declaration of rights there is a section covering that point.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. It does not cover it. Section fourteen of the declaration of rights provides that "private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made to or paid into Court for the owner; and no right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation other than municipal, until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or ascertained and paid into Court for the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury in a Court of record, as shall be prescribed by law." Now, that section distinguishes between private property taken for a public use and a right of way. Neither of its provisions embrace the question here. This is taking a right of way for private use, and the section quoted only speaks of taking a right of way for public use. Besides, if there were a general declaration in the bill of rights, and that were distinctly overruled and contravened by a special provision elsewhere, there would arise a collision from that very fact, and the necessity of legal adjudication as to which should govern.

MR. VAN DYKE. I have no objection to it, but only suggested whether it was necessary.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section three. If this section means anything, it means too much. If it means merely to confer upon the Legislature the power described here it is wholly unnecessary. The Legislature already possesses that power, without any constitutional provision, and has been exercising, for years and years, that power. If it means more than this, it certainly means simply to dispense ——

MR. TINNIN. Has the Legislature the right to condemn private property for private uses under the present Constitution?

MR. CAPLES. This is the right of eminent domain; the right of taking private property for a public use, under the rules and regulations of law. If this proposition means anything beyond conferring upon the Legislature powers already possessed, it means to dispense with that regular process of law that is defined in the exercise of the State's right of eminent domain. Now, I do not think that the committee ever conceived the idea of dispensing with the forms of law and the condemnation of private property by a simple Act of the Legislature; but it would seem that, if this section means anything beyond an empty declaration of a right that is well known to exist without an enabling Act, it must mean that. I would ask what construction the Chairman of the committee puts upon it himself. Was it the understanding of the committee that it was competent for this Convention to confer upon the Legislature the right to condemn property otherwise than by the forms of law?

MR. TINNIN. The amendment accepted carries out the idea, and requires that it shall be done according to law.

MR. CAPLES. It reads:

"SEC. 3. The Legislature shall enact laws permitting the appropriators of water and the owners or occupants of land to construct levees, ditches, canals, flumes, and aqueducts, or run their water through natural channels, for agricultural, mining, manufacturing, milling, domestic, drainage, reclamation, or sanitary purposes, across the land of others."

Now, has not the Legislature been exercising these very powers for years and years past, under which most of the waters of the State have been appropriated? Certainly. Everybody knows that the Legislature has been doing this thing. Every gentleman knows that the State has the right, by virtue of the power of eminent domain, to condemn and take private property. Now, we cannot add anything to that power of condemnation. We can add nothing to the right of the State to appropriate in accordance with law; and I am utterly unable to see where it is proposed to do anything here that is practicable.

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: The bill of rights, in the old Constitution, provided that you could take private property for public uses. Now, that is, by implication, a prohibition upon taking private property for private uses. That would prevent the Legislature passing laws permitting one man to drain his land across another, because that is a private use. The Legislature, of course, would have that power if it were not for the implied prohibition in the Constitution. In other words, the declaration that you may take private property for public uses, by implication prohibits the taking of it for private uses in any case. That is the purpose of this, as I understand it. It allows drainage for private parties over the lands of another, upon paying just compensation. I do not see why it should not be allowed.

MR. CAPLES. Then I understand that it is to take private property for private use. I deny the power. I hold that it would be in conflict with the Federal Constitution, and with the well understood and universally recognized exercise of the power of eminent domain. I am no lawyer. I am free to admit that my opinions are worth nothing upon this subject; nevertheless, I feel authorized to give an expression of my opinion. My understanding of the power of eminent domain is that private property may be taken, not for private use, but for public use, and I think gentlemen of the legal profession will agree with me that that is the well established and well understood right of power of eminent domain, as recognized by the Federal Constitution and the decisions of the Federal Courts, and the decisions of the Courts in England for centuries past. Now, if I am right in this proposition, Mr. Chairman, and I hope to hear from legal gentlemen upon the proposition—then the committee, according to the construction of the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke, have attempted to do that which would be in contravention of the fundamental law of the power of eminent domain.

REMARKS OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: Section three was placed in the report of the committee, I may say, in deference to the farming interests of the State. It was through that interest, that appeared before the committee, that section three was placed there. The object in putting it there was to overcome this difficulty which has often occurred as was represented to the committee. For instance, a party owns a piece of land between a tule swamp and the river. The tule swamp is useless, unless it can be drained. The party who owns the high lands stands there and demands an exorbitant price for the privilege of cutting a drain through his land. He really blackmails the party owning the tule lands. The committee did not think it was right that any such state of affairs should exist. Take another instance, where a party owns tule lands adjacent to a river, and those along the river find it necessary to build a levee for the protection of the lands below, to keep the water off, and the party owning the tule land refuses to allow a levee to be built upon his land. It was through these things that the section was put in the report. I think it is right and proper.

MR. CAPLES. If it was the intention of the committee to confer upon the Legislature the power to condemn property for private use, why did not the committee so state in this section?

MR. TINNIN. That belongs to another department in this Convention. We did not consider that it belonged to our part of the report. We reported on the subject before us. That would belong to the Judiciary Committee. We believe it is right and proper that this should be there for the protection of a public interest. It is true that power was originally used only for governments, but it has been perverted to corporations, and we propose here to extend it further, and to allow it to be used for private individuals.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I agree entirely with the gentleman from Sacramento, Dr. Caples, that this section three, as it stands, is a violation of the Constitution of the United States, and would be with the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Winans. It was decided as long ago as eighteen hundred and eight, in the case of Fletcher vs. Peck, that a grant is a contract protected by the Constitution of the United States, and you cannot violate it; and the Constitution of the United States is as much over us as it is over the State Legislature. Now, this decision in Fletcher vs. Peck has been reaffirmed repeatedly by the Supreme Court of the United States, and you cannot take a man's land for private use at all under the right of eminent domain, and you cannot take it for public use without making just compensation.

Now, sir, water is a part of the land. It is so held by all the writers. I will read a sentence from Angell on Watercourses:

"Therefore it is that a grant of land conveys to the grantee not only the 'field' or the 'meadow,' but all the growing timber and water standing and being thereupon; and a stream of water is therefore as much the property of the owner of the soil over which it passes as the stones scattered over it."

Now, sir, it is perfectly idle to attempt to say in this Constitution that running water is public property. Running water which has been granted is not public property; and running water is not public property in any sense except so far as the use is concerned. Now, sir, an important objection to any declaration of that sort is that it is a mere idle waste of paper, and cannot be made available for anything; and my objection to the amendment of Mr. Winans is that it does not go far enough. There exists under the right of eminent domain the right to condemn property for public uses, but it cannot be made available without some declaration in the Constitution or a statute of the State. All this may be done, no doubt, in the absence of any constitutional regulation, but there must be a declaration in the statute fixing the mode and manner of condemnation. The Chairman of the committee says that the committee had the idea that, for instance, if they wanted to drain a tule swamp that they could run a ditch through your land for that purpose without paying for the right of way.

MR. TINNIN. I did not say so. That is amended. The amendment is accepted.

MR. HOWARD. That does not go far enough. Say, for instance, the people in San Francisco wish to drain Lake Bigler, to appropriate Lake Bigler for the purpose of supplying the city with water, they would have the right, under the eminent domain, because, if any individual—which I deny, for there is no appropriation of water separate from the use of it—but if any individual could set up a claim of ownership of that lake, then the State has the power and ought to provide the means of condemning that lake, so that the water could be used for the purpose of supplying the cities and towns, and supplying the country for irrigation with water. It is, therefore, necessary that we have some provision authorizing the condemnation of existing water rights. Then, again, it is well known that, under the Mexican Government, there were grants of eleven leagues of land. Suppose a grant of eleven leagues of land has a stream running by it or through it, and he appropriates the entire stream and holds it long enough to acquire it by proscription, which may be done by Spanish law in ten years; which may have been done at the common law by an adverse use and claim of right, with knowledge of his neighbors, in twenty years, and which he can do in this State, under our statutes and decisions, in five years. Then he has a title by proscription. But there is a right under the eminent domain to condemn property for public use, no matter how it is derived, or how it exists, by paying a just compensation therefor, and that ought to be engrafted in this Constitution. A party, for instance, settling upon the head of a stream, owning ten thousand or twenty thousand acres of land, or forty-four thousand acres, as he may own, may appropriate the whole water, and quiet title by an adverse use of five years under our law. Even then, there is a power by which he can be prevented from starving out his neighbors and making a monopoly of the water, and that is under the right of eminent domain, and that power ought to be attended to by this Convention, because, otherwise he may prevent the use of the water by hundreds of families, when the water, properly distributed, would be enough for all. That is a state of things which ought not to exist, and which we can reach under the right of eminent domain.

Take, for instance, the City of San Francisco. There are streams, I believe, in the neighborhood, which have been appropriated. Well, if the use of that water becomes necessary to the supply of the City of San Francisco that is a public use, and it is superior to the private use of any individual or individuals, and, therefore, the right to condemn it should exist, and should be provided for in this Constitution; and it is founded on the Latin maxim, that the safety of the people is the supreme law.

MR. MILLER. Does not that right exist now?

MR. HOWARD. Yes; the right exists now; but the right existed before we came here, before the Constitution of eighteen hundred and forty-nine, and existed by virtue of the general powers of legislation; because the general rule is that everything not expressly taken from the people by the Constitution abides and resides in the legislative authority. So that is an argument of very little force. We here wish to direct the Legislature to do certain things, and this is one of the things we ought to provide for in the fundamental law.

REMARKS OF MR. BIGGS.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I was somewhat pleased and surprised to hear the argument of the Chairman of the committee when he said that this section was put in at the request of the agricultural interest. God knows the agriculturists of California don't want any of this section three; and if he is such a warm friend to the cause of agriculture he would accommodate us very much by assisting in striking out that section. I hope it will be stricken out. It is what we don't want, and we have no use for it.

MR. TINNIN. Don't you live on high land?

MR. BIGGS. I don't. The water has been around me twice. I raise good grain. It has been over me, too, and I have lost a good many things. I am not drowned. I feel grateful to the gentleman for the interest he has taken in the agriculture of the State, but I don't propose to let such a thing be engrafted in our organic law without entering my remonstrance against it.

REMARKS OF MR. HITCHCOCK.

MR. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman: I am a farmer, also, and have been for some twenty-six or twenty-seven years. I am not a lawyer, and I do not understand and do not know really——

MR. BIGGS. Have you any debris from the mines coming down upon you?

MR. HITCHCOCK. I have not. Still I am interested in this subject. I realize the fact, Mr. Chairman, that there is only one outlet for all of the waters of these Sierra Nevada Mountains, and also the Coast Range. There is only one outlet, and that is through the Carquinez Straits, and we all know that we have a rainfall of from twenty to seventy-five inches. That must find an outlet, and to do so, it flows over the whole valley; and in flowing over the country it flows over my land and over all my neighbors', and we want some provision by which we can make channels through San Joaquin County, or any other county in the State, in order to carry off this water, so that we can drain our lands. It is impossible to levee it. We cannot dam it up and keep it back. It must pass on out through the Golden Gate. When you can give us some right to condemn a right of way, we can do that. The people of San Joaquin County—I speak for them particularly—would like to have some provision by which they can reclaim their lands. A bill was passed in eighteen hundred and seventy-two which covered the case entirely, but it was unconstitutional, and we cannot enforce it. The whole southern portion of this State favor it, but it is a dead-letter upon the statute books. I have drawn up an amendment here which I think covers the case. So far as mining or anything of that kind is concerned, if members think mining should not be included, why, strike it out. I will read it, and, in case this section is stricken out, I will offer it as section three:

"All persons and corporations shall have the right of way across public, private, or corporate lands, for the construction of ditches, flumes, or canals, for the purpose of conducting water for the irrigation or reclamation of lands, and for manufacturing and mining purposes, and for drainage, upon payment of just compensation."

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I hope that this section will not be stricken out. The question of its conflicting with the Federal Constitution was discussed in committee, and it was generally agreed that on the whole, or in the main, at least, the section might be made operative, and if it conferred no additional powers to act, as has been suggested by the gentleman from Los Angeles, it directly meets the wants of a large class of people in this State The committee, sir, had in view two objects. One was, as long as the waters of the State are now largely appropriated, to prevent these waters being used for the purposes of monopoly, and beyond legislative control—the point that has been covered in the first section; and the second was in view of the natural arid condition of this country, and the fact that its prosperity must depend so much upon the proper application of the water supply, to secure the right of way to the proprietors of water to carry that water to such places that it would do the most good. Now, sir, there were numerous cases pointed out to the committee, and to my knowledge there are many cases that exist where important improvements are held back simply for the want of a right of way. Large tracts of land in California to-day are in a swampy condition, simply because a right of way for a drainage canal cannot be procured. I hold that in so far as these rights of way can be shown to be a benefit to public interest, they will not conflict with the Constitution of the United States.

We have a precedent for the principle adopted in this section, in the Constitution of Illinois. Section thirty-one, of article four, of that Constitution, aiming at the idea of drainage for agricultural lands, declares that "the general Assembly may pass laws permitting the owners or occupants of lands to construct drains and ditches, for agricultural and sanitary purposes, across the lands of others." Now, sir, many supposed their declaration in Illinois, declaring warehouses to be a public use, would conflict with the Constitution of the United States, and yet a test case proved the reverse to be true. But, sir, going further, in the case of Beekman vs. the Saratoga and Schenectady Railroad Company, in New York, in eighteen hundred and thirty-one, the Chancellor says:

"But if the public interest can be in any way promoted by the taking of private property, it must rest in the wisdom of the Legislature to determine whether the benefit to the public will be of sufficient importance to render it expedient for them to exercise the right of eminent domain, and to authorize an interference with the private rights of individuals for that purpose."

Now, sir, what are the rights conferred here?

"The Legislature shall enact laws permitting the appropriators of water and the owners or occupants of lands to construct levees, ditches, canals, flumes, and aqueducts, or run their water through natural channels, for agricultural, mining, manufacturing, milling, domestic, drainage, reclamation, or sanitary purposes, across the lands of others, upon first paying a just compensation therefor, which compensation shall be ascertained by a jury in a Court of record, and shall be prescribed by law."

Is not that a public use? Are the public not benefited by the promotion of the agricultural interest? Most certainly they must be. Is the public not benefited by the promotion of the mining interest? Manufacturing and milling, is not the public benefited by them? Certainly reclamation and drainage must stand as in the public interest. I believe in the main the section will stand good, and it should not be stricken out. If perchance, by a test case, a certain clause of it may be proven to conflict with the Constitution, and may have to fall, yet the rest will not become invalid, and it will stand for what it is worth.

I know that the interests of various sections of this State require something of this nature. There are mining interests and agricultural interests that are now retarded by the want of a right of way to secure water. We have on this water question, I think, adopted a wise provision in the first section, placing these waters, where they are used by the public, under public control, and by this means preventing a monopoly of them to an extent that may become abusive. I have no doubt the second section was wisely stricken out. I thought at the time it was adopted that there was nothing in it. But the third section I think ought to be allowed to remain.

REMARKS OF MR. WICKES.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: The mistake seems to be general in regard to the power of the State. It has no power to take from one individual and give to another. It is no doubt feasible for the plains of San Joaquin to be irrigated; but the State has no right to order a water ditch to be cut across a man's land without rendering for it a just compensation. There will necessarily be some damage done to the land, more or less, and such compensation should rest upon a just appraisement. As to the mining districts, the ditch enterprises there and the mineral interests of those sections reciprocate each other. There are vested rights there that have been held under grant of the General Government since the early days of California mining enterprises. In the mining districts I say the mining interests and the water interests reciprocate each other. Water has been taken from the various mountain streams, and, at great expense, turned into ditches and carried all over these districts, to the enhancing of the value of mining property and to increasing the production of the mineral wealth of these districts. These ditches, constructed at great expense, have repaid to those who carried on the enterprises, at the best, but a very small interest. These mountain streams as they ran were of no use whatever, but, carried by such enterprises through the mineral districts, have been of great value in the production of gold, one of the great resources of the State. These interests should not be imperiled in any manner. Most of the enterprises of the mining districts have not repaid the owners for the investment. They may look forward, perhaps, to some future time when the water sold for irrigation, when the mines are worked out, may perhaps repay them for the investment in these enterprises. While we cannot touch these vested rights, we cannot deny the right of the State to regulate the price at which water shall be sold for the future, either for irrigating or mining purposes. These men who have been engaged in these enterprises would not object to any just regulation. But this regulation must be just. The rights of property in water must be recognized as well as rights of property in land, and we cannot evade the force of this.

REMARKS OF MR. WATERS.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that a great deal less attention is paid to this public question now under consideration than its importance deserves. During the last twenty-five or twenty-eight years in this State a great deal has been effected by the use of water. Great interests have grown up in this State under that use. Great principles have been decided. The people have lived under these principles. The people have accustomed themselves to this state of affairs; and now at one fell stroke it is proposed, in this Convention, to upset the whole theory upon which the people of this State have been acting, acquiring property and improving farms. Now, from the very beginning the rights of water for purposes of irrigation and actual improvement of the land have been considered private rights. Their use has been considered private property. It has been held to be such over and over again by our own Supreme Court. Now, we propose here in one sentence to say that this private property is public. We propose to upset the whole theory, and the whole line of action of the people of this State for twenty-eight years. It has not only been recognized as private property by the people themselves, by their customs and their laws, so far as such regulation is concerned, but it has even been recognized by the General Government. The General Government, in eighteen hundred and sixty-six, granted these rights in accordance with the laws and customs of the State. Now, we propose here to say that it is all folly. Now, I do not believe this is a correct policy to pursue. I do not believe that we can expect the people to sanction anything of that sort. These farmers who have built up nice flourishing farms, with their orchards, and all the appurtenances of civilization, you might say, simply by the use of this water, and could not have done it by any other means in the world, you cannot expect them to say now, many of them in their old age, that the works of their lifetime shall pass from them by one little declaration in the Constitution, that it is all public property. I say it is too much.

Now, there is a dispute, at least among some lawyers, as to whether that provision of the United States Constitution, which says private property may only be taken for public use by giving just compensation, is a limitation only upon Congress or the Government of the United States.

MR. EDGERTON. The Supreme Court has decided that it is only upon the United States.

MR. WATERS. I understood the gentleman from Los Angeles, General Howard, to say that you cannot divert a private right for private interest.

MR. HOWARD. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that in cases where it impaired the obligations of a contract you cannot take private property for a private use.

MR. WATERS. That is amongst the limitations upon the States. No State shall pass any law impairing the obligations of a contract; but this other provision, the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, has been held to apply only to the United States Congress.

MR. EDGERTON. If the gentleman will allow me, I will cite the case. In the case of Barron vs. the Mayor of the City of Baltimore, seventh Peters, it is held: "The provision in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, declaring that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, is intended solely as a limitation on the exercise of power by the Government of the United States, and is not applicable to the legislation of the States."

MR. HOWARD. That does not apply to the other proposition, that where it impairs the obligation of a contract, then it cannot be done.

MR. WATERS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I will leave the two gentlemen to decide that between them. I am inclined to believe that the gentleman from Sacramento is right. The gentleman from Los Angeles refers to that provision of the Constitution of the United States which is a limitation upon the power of the State—that they shall not pass any law impairing the obligation of contracts. Now, this right to the use of waters is not in the nature of a contract. I regard it in the nature of property. It is a property right, not founded alone upon contract, but founded upon ownership. The ownership may be the subject of a contract, or it may not. True, if you carry it back in the abstract to its original foundation, we are inclined to vest everything upon a grant from the sovereign.

MR. HOWARD. Has not the Supreme Court of the United States held repeatedly that a grant was a contract, and that the obligation can not be impaired by legislation? That is, if the State grants a man a tract of land, it is a contract, and the State cannot take the grant from him.

MR. WATERS. I think that that has been held to be a contract.

MR. HOWARD. Now, it being held by the Courts that water is a part of the land, can you take the water any more than you can take the land?

MR. WATERS. That might apply to land granted directly, or land granted by the United States.

MR. HOWARD. Does it not apply to Government grants?

MR. WATERS. I concede the gentleman's proposition so far as it goes, but it does not cover the entire ground. The proposition is as to whether it is policy for this Convention to say that this private property is public property, just in one sentence. I say it is wrong policy; it is not called for by the situation of this country at the present time. It seems to me that the water question has got to work itself out. I do not think that this Convention can settle all these water disputes in one sentence: the system has got to grow up to the times, and this thing of forcing the thing, by saying that nobody has got any right to water, is not right. If it is in order, I shall move to strike out the whole report of the committee.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I desire to amend the report of the committee.

THE CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments pending to section three.

MR. TINNIN. I ask to have it read.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section three, in line three, by striking out the words 'or run their waters through natural channels.'"

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I make this amendment for this reason: it seems to me that certain of our farmer friends are very fearful of the debris situation. They imagine that they can see the debris of the miner coming down upon them. We of the committee never saw that in the proposition. The idea was for the purpose of running the water away, and we never have once considered the debris question. For that reason I think the committee are unanimously in favor of striking out that portion of the report. Another thing. In framing this report we thought that there would be, in future days, a Legislature that would put the machinery in force to carry out this section of the Constitution. We did not think it necessary for us to say how, or in what manner, these individuals should be protected in their property when ditches or drains were run through their land. We expected that the Legislature, when they put this in force, would sufficiently protect these people in their property and their rights, and I do not think it belongs in that section at all.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I am satisfied, myself, that this question is not receiving the consideration that its overshadowing importance demands at the hands of this Convention. I am thoroughly convinced that if this question had been managed and manipulated through this Convention by the Spring Valley Waterworks, it could not have been managed more to suit their taste, or better in conformity with their wishes; and if part of them who have had the management of it had been holders of the stock, it could not have been managed better to suit their convenience and interest.

MR. VAN DYKE. In what respect?

MR. HERRINGTON. Now, sir, what is sovereignty? And what is eminent domain?

MR. TINNIN. I would ask the gentleman to explain himself. Do you mean to say that the Spring Valley Water Company influenced the committee in their report? If you do, you state that which is false.

MR. ESTEE. I call the gentleman to account. I want to know what he means.

MR. VAN DYKE. So do I.

MR. ESTEE. I want to know what——

MR. HERRINGTON. Will the gentleman give me an opportunity to say what I mean? I mean that in the results of these provisions as they are now here before this house, that they could not have been framed more in the interests of the Spring Valley Waterworks. [Applause.]

MR. ESTEE. In what respect?

MR. HERRINGTON. In their working, and in the results and effects that they will have.

MR. ESTEE. Do I understand the gentleman from Santa Clara that the first section, as amended by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Hale, is in the interest of Spring Valley?

MR. HERRINGTON. No, sir; I do not mean that. I say that so far as that part is concerned it is good; and that is the only provision that is in accordance with the requirements of the people of this State.

MR. ESTEE. Has any other section been adopted affecting that question?

MR. HERRINGTON. No, sir.

MR. ESTEE. Then I do not know what he means.

MR. TINNIN. I do not think he knows himself.

MR. HERRINGTON. I am not talking about what this Convention will do. I am talking about the provisions presented here by the committee, and no one can misunderstand what I say. I do not flinch from what I say, either. I mean precisely what I say, that the effect and the working of these sections as they are presented would have the results which I have mentioned. Now I proceed.

I say, what is sovereignty? It is simply no more nor less than that high authority which possesses the prerogative or right to form rules for the order of community and to enforce them. That is the sovereignty of this State; that is the sovereignty of every other State. Now what is the power of eminent domain? It is that power by which the State puts into exercise that sovereignty for the public weal, and nothing else. Now will you dwindle it down and drive out all the interests of one private person, and take all the interests of another private person, and put every man's hand against that of his neighbor? All will be driven asunder by the provisions you propose to insert here. It makes every man an Ishmaelite as against his neighbor; his hand is against every man's hand, and his interest against every man's interest. You set at war every private interest that is in the community with respect to water. You permit it with reference to water and permit it with reference to every other interest that there is in the commonwealth, and every man's interest will be sought to be enhanced by the use of this power of eminent domain to acquire and filch his neighbor's interest; and not upon the plea of any public benefit that will result, but solely for private use. Can you do it? Dare you do it? Have you the impudence and the boldness to assert here that all these interests may be arrayed and put at war with each other in this community? It is the destruction of empire; it is the destruction of government itself. It is the disintegration and dissolution of that great power called sovereignty. There is none of it left. Now, what is the use of coming here and talking about law if you do not mean law? What is the use of talking about order when you are creating disorder? Now, I apprehend that possibly that question may be understood, and if no one can see the force of that argument I will repeat it. I undertake to say to you now that there is no power inherent in sovereignty to destroy itself. It is not a thing that can commit that crime called felo de se; and there is no element in it that possesses the power to create and to organize that kind of a war, by which every element in sovereignty shall be arrayed one against the other, using the power of eminent domain to enforce its claim. Do you see the force of the argument? Do you see the idea that is embraced in the proposition that you present here? What right have I to go to my neighbor and say: Sir, I want your land, I want your water, and I have the power of eminent domain for the purpose of enforcing my private right. No, sir; I say to you now, that the power of eminent domain is based upon another proposition than that; that it is a public use to which the property you propose to take is to be appropriated and applied. Another principle, I say to you, is a war of elements and the destruction of sovereignty itself. Now, it is no use, because you limit this proposition to the mere matter of using water, or taking water, to assert that you may apply or use this power for a private individual in that regard, when you do not propose to apply it to any other proposition amongst the people. If you can apply it to water, or the right to use water, why not apply it to every other private interest in the whole State? The principle is just as unchangeable as time itself. It is just as impregnable as truth, and God upon whom it rests.

MR. PULLIAM. Don't you know that the Supreme Court has decided that the Spring Valley Waterworks has the right to the use of eminent domain?

MR. HERRINGTON. But the Spring Valley Waterworks is not like a private individual.

MR. PULLIAM. What has the Spring Valley to do with this then?

MR. HERRINGTON. I do not care when they only hold a franchise, so far as that is concerned.

MR. PULLIAM. This section don't do them any good.

MR. HERRINGTON. This section gives then an absolute right to the lakes, and that is just what they want. And they wish to defy you and the whole City of San Francisco, and bring San Francisco a beggar at its feet for that which keeps soul and body together. This is a provision that seeks to install Spring Valley as a President of that city, to whom they must pray for water to cool their parching tongues. And, you, sir, if you favor this section, are seeking to bring about precisely that result. Do you understand me now?

MR. PULLIAM. The gentleman has not shown the connection between this section and the Spring Valley. The Spring Valley Water Company has the right of eminent domain now.

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I have been listening here to see if I could learn from the gentleman from Santa Clara wherein the Spring Valley has been figuring in this matter. I am very anxious to learn that fact. The only particular objection I have to the section is, that I cannot see its use, in view of the bill of rights that we have passed. The only use there can be, is for the purpose of private drainage. The Spring Valley certainly has the right of eminent domain now, so, as I understand it, this section cannot confer any further right upon them. They have a public use, and for a public use they have a right now to condemn land. Under the first section, as adopted, if the Spring Valley, or any other water company, bring water, for the purpose of sale, into a city, that is a public use. It has been so before. And although the gentleman worked himself up into a fury, I was unable to discover from his argument wherein this section confers any additional power upon the Spring Valley Water Company, or any other water company bringing water into a city for the purpose of distribution and sale. If it is so, why, I should be very happy to vote against it. I would not confer any additional power on that corporation, or any other corporation, as against the interests of the public. But I cannot see that it does.

I can see one benefit to arise from the adoption of that section, and that is the benefit that I pointed out first. It gives parties a right of drainage across the lands of others, upon compensation being paid; and there is a great question whether that can be done under the present Constitution, declaring that private property can be only taken for public uses. There may be a case where it would be difficult to establish it as a public use, and still the property of an individual could not be well used without the power of drainage. The gentleman from San Joaquin has cited instances of the kind. Now, I cannot see any objection, inasmuch as it does not come in conflict with the Constitution of the United States, to conferring, under proper legislative provisions, by general Act, the power, for the purposes of drainage and for sanitary purposes, of going across the lands of others, upon paying just compensation. Now, that is the only real benefit to be derived by the adoption of this section.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I think the gentleman from Alameda, who just took his seat, is mistaken, to this extent: as I understand the decision, one citizen cannot condemn the property of another citizen for a private purpose; for a private use that cannot be done.

MR. VAN DYKE. That cannot be done under the present Constitution. It has been done in other States.

MR. ESTEE. If the gentleman can find an instance, I do not know of it, because it is upon the theory that every citizen is equal before the law, and that anything that one man owns he owns for all the purposes of ownership, and that no private citizen can take it from him for private use; and he cannot do it at all unless he does it by the use of arms. I never heard of one instance where it could be done, and I do not think we had better try it. If the gentleman from Santa Clara meant this by what he said, he has got a good many supporters on this floor. If he meant that section one, as adopted, was in the interest of the Spring Valley Water Company, or any other water company, he is clearly in error, and I advise the gentleman not to get so much excited as to forget the very point he is making.

MR. HERRINGTON. I said, in emphatic terms, that the amendment of the gentleman from Placer was a good amendment, and ought to have been adopted; and I supported it.

MR. ESTEE. Then this Convention has not done anything in the interest of Spring Valley, or any other company, because that is just what we adopted, and I think a large majority of the Convention favored it. As to section three, I do not think we can afford to adopt that section. The Legislature would here have power to enact laws permitting A to dig a ditch right across the land of B, for A's individual benefit—not for a public use, but for his personal benefit and advantage. I do not think we had better try to do that. The Constitution of the United States, or the people of the United States, might interfere—the Constitution certainly will.

MR. VAN DYKE. That has been expressly decided in Illinois.

MR. ESTEE. If it is in order I would move to strike it out.

THE CHAIRMAN. That motion has already been made.

MR. ESTEE. I hope the motion to strike out will be adopted. The gentleman from Santa Clara has an amendment that I saw last night. If he had proposed his amendment I think it would have met the approbation of the most of the members of this Convention, especially those from San Francisco. I think Mr. Joyce also has the same amendment. Certainly I shall support it, and believe it ought to be adopted. But I hope we shall not go so far as to adopt this principle of the right to condemn private property for private use.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman——

MR. EDGERTON. I desire to vote intelligently upon this question, and I desire to know of the gentleman from San Francisco, what section of the Constitution of the United States is violated by this section three.

MR. ROLFE. I was just going to tell you that myself.

MR. ESTEE. The rights of life, liberty, and property are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of each State.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I will endeavor to answer that question myself, just for what it is worth. I say it is in direct conflict with the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and I have a decision here to show it; and I will guarantee that there is not a gentleman on this floor who can find a decision of any Court of respectable standing in the United States that has held that private property can be taken for private use under any circumstances whatever, unless there is a public interest to be subserved. It can be done for public use. It can be done for private use, provided there is a public interest. It can be done by a private individual, provided it is for a public use, but there is an implied contract between the State and the owner of every private property in the State, that he holds that property originally by a grant from the State. And that grant is a contract, and when the State attempts, by its Constitution or its laws, to take the property from that man and give it to another individual, for his private use, it violates that fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, where it says—I do not mean the fifth amendment; I mean that clause which says that no State shall pass a law impairing the obligation of contracts. I was mistaken in saying that it was the fifth amendment. I read now, from the New York Chancery Reports, eighteen hundred and thirty-one, in the case of Beekman vs. The Saratoga and Schenectady Railroad Company. It may be that what I read is only dictum, but it is good law. I read upon page seventy-three:

"The right of eminent domain does not, however, imply a right in the sovereign power to take the property of one citizen and transfer it to another, even for a full compensation, where the public interest will be in no way promoted by such transfer. And if the Legislature should attempt thus to transfer the property of one individual to another, where there could be no pretense of benefit to the public by such exchange, it would probably be a violation of the contract by which the land was granted by the Government to the individual, or to those under whom he claimed title, and repugnant to the Constitution of the United States."

Now, I say that every man that knows the law knows that private property is held under an implied contract of a grant from the State, and it cannot be taken unless a public interest is subserved, unless it is for a public purpose, anywhere. Therefore, I say, if two men hold adjoining farms, it may be a great benefit to one of these farmers to have his farm drained. He cannot drain his farm if he has got to dig up the other man's farm, unless by consent of his neighbor, and no State can pass a constitutional amendment or law giving him a right to do that. I will admit, if it is a public interest to be subserved, or for sanitary purposes, it can be done; but not for private use.

REMARKS OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I am entitled to speak on each amendment. I ask the privilege of making a few remarks in reply to the gentleman from Santa Clara. The committee, of which I have the honor to be Chairman, presented this report to this body. They presented that report from the lights that were before them; and I assert here that the committee presented that report in what they conceived to be the general interest of the people of the State of California. And I say here, that it is unjust, unfair, and ungentlemanly, for any member of this body to get up on this floor, and, under the cloak of a coward, to make insinuations of an improper purpose in that committee. There is an old Scriptural saying, that "suspicion lurks in the guilty mind," and I think that such ideas can only emanate from a debased, a depraved, and a guilty mind.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: This, sir, is a very serious question, and one that ought to be considered, at least, before it is adopted. I suppose it is claimed that the provision which says that private property shall not be taken for public use, without just compensation be made, contains no prohibition for taking private property for private uses at all, in terms. It may be very doubtful if the grant of this power to take private property for public use, is not inferentially a prohibition for taking it for private use, but there is no direct prohibition. We have the same prohibition in our Constitution as in the Constitution of the United States. I regret, sir, that I have not taken the time to look up some authorities upon this matter; but some years ago, I had occasion to bring a suit where this precise point was involved—whether you could take private property for private uses, under any circumstances. That was a case tried in Marin County, under a statute which existed, allowing a party right of way across the lands of another, and I challenged that statute upon the ground that it was unconstitutional, and the Court below held it to be so; and I think it is a correct decision also. Where I deed a man a piece of land, surrounded by other land of mine, then he has a right of way of necessity, and it is a part of the contract of conveyance to him. If my land surrounds him, it is involved in the contract that he shall have a right to make it available, and he can have a right that is called a right of way of necessity, and it is a part of the grant. Of course, contracting or deeding it to him, he is not taking my property at all, it is merely occupying his own. I have come to the conclusion, long ago, that there is no power in the State to grant one man the property of another; it means confiscation, and nothing but confiscation; it is a dangerous right, if it exists at all. When the question was first raised, whether a railroad corporation had the right of eminent domain, the Courts of this country put the right of condemnation upon the ground that it was a public use, and the very point was urged, that there was no power, on the part of a corporation, to confiscate the private property of citizens, because a corporation was a private interest. It was represented that it would carry passengers, and do this thing and that thing, but for the purpose of private gain, and the reason urged why these ought not to be allowed to exercise the right of eminent domain was, that it was taking private property to be devoted to private uses; that was the very point made in these cases, and the Courts held that they had the right solely because it was not a private use, but devoting it to a public use. It was on that ground alone that they were allowed to condemn property, when these cases were first decided, some forty years ago, in this country. The non-user of this right on the part of the State, if it exists at all, is a strong argument against it. There has been but a single case, and that in the State of Illinois, where there has been any attempt made to take the property of one man and give it to another, for any purpose or any use whatever. Once open the door and say that the property of A can be transferred to B, simply because somebody or other thinks that B will be benefited by it, and that B will be more benefited than A will be injured, and that is the end of the rightful exercise of the power to transfer one man's property to another, and to keep up the process just as long as they please.

MR. HOWARD. I can refer you to a very early case—Calder vs. Bull—in which the Supreme Court held that it was not in the power of society to transfer private property.

MR. EDGERTON. Mere dictum.

MR. HOWARD. Very heavy dictum.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: Governments are instituted among men for the purpose of protecting their property and their persons, but here it is claimed that the Government has a right to dispose of the property of one man to another. Whether it is with or without compensation, makes no difference. It makes the bargain for him. I do not see any answer to the statement made by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard. Constitutional governments reserve the right to take private property for public use, if it is necessary to the permanence or necessities of society, but when it comes to a right to take my property and give it to another man for his use, the right of eminent domain does not apply at all. I hope this third question will be stricken out, and I do so with the most profound respect for the committee.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to refer to the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which says that no person shall "be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation." I am aware that there has been a decision by one of the Courts explaining what due process of law is, and also the term private property for public use, but still it does not militate against the general result, nor does it affect the question at issue, that one individual's property cannot or ought not to be taken for a private use.

REMARKS OF MR. EDGERTON.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. Chairman: Two questions are presented by this section and by the gentleman from Los Angeles. One is a question of power and the other a question of policy. A question of morality, perhaps, and a question of justice. Now, sir, if I understand the duty, the powers, and the character of this assembly, it represents the people in their primary capacity. We are here, sir, as the representatives of the people outside of their existing government. We are here to frame a Constitution; an instrument which is a new compact; an instrument which is to define the powers of a government which will come into existence under this new Constitution, if it should be adopted; and we are precisely in the attitude that the people themselves would be if they were assembled in mass Convention, creating or framing for themselves a new organic law, a new compact, and upon the great underlying principle of republican governments the majority must control. If the people agree to that compact there is an end to it, and the powers lodged in that government are supreme and are to be enforced, unless they are in conflict with some provision of the Constitution of the United States. Now, sir, the gentleman who has just taken his seat says that this section is in conflict with that provision of the Constitution of the United States which says that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, and that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. Here is a proposition that it may be taken for private use. What is the difference so far as due process of law is concerned? The people have the power, sir. They can make such government as they please so long as it is republican in form, and if a majority of the people of this State adopt it, there is an end to the question.

Now, sir, there is a provision in the present Constitution that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. Why is that there? Simply because in the absence of such a prohibition the Legislature would have power to take private property for a public use without any compensation, and therefore it is that that prohibition is placed upon the Legislature. It is a limitation upon the power of the Legislature. Suppose it was not there. Now, if the people may say, in their primary capacity, to a government that is going into existence, "you may take private property for public use after just compensation," I would like to have some gentleman point out the distinction between such a case, in point of power, and the declaration that "you may take private property for private use upon making just compensation therefor." In reply to the gentleman from San Bernardino, Judge Rolfe, I wish to say that the case cited by him has no application to this. There was a question arising under the Constitution of the State of New York, a question of legislative power under that Constitution, and it was held that the power could not be there exercised. I challenge the gentleman to show any case where any such decision has been made that private property may be taken for private use. I concede that there is any amount of dictum running through the books where they say, for instance, that the Legislature, in the absence of any prohibition, would not have the right to violate natural justice. But, after all, who is the judge of that? One tribunal might think one thing was natural justice, and another tribunal might think another thing was natural justice. I believe that the Courts hold that the Legislature can do anything that it is not prohibited from doing by the Constitution of the State and the Constitution of the United States.

MR. TULLY. Do you claim that society can have the power to do wrong?

MR. EDGERTON. No, sir; but there we come to first principles. Who is the judge? The gentleman from Santa Clara might think some proposition in the Constitution was against natural justice, and another gentleman might think it was not. I submit that if it is competent for the people in a Constitution to declare that private property may be taken for public use, the same power can say that it may be taken for private use. So far as the question of power is concerned they are upon the same plane, and no distinction can be made.

Now, come to the question of right and wrong. We may agree upon the question, but who is the judge? Why, the people, in their primary capacity, acting through constitutional forms and making a Constitution for themselves, are the judges of what is the correct principle of government. One word farther, as to the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States has put that at rest. In the case of Barron against the City of Baltimore, it is decided that it is not intended as a limitation upon the State, for it says "the provision in the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, declaring that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, is intended solely as a limitation on the exercise of power by the Government of the United States, and is not applicable to the legislation of the States."

This is the view which I take upon this subject simply from the standpoint of the power of the Convention. As to the question of policy I am uncompromisingly opposed to this section three. I think it involves an outrageous principle. I think it would result in incalculable injury and oppression. It is without a parallel in constitution making so far as I am advised. If there is any other I do not profess to know of it, and I should like to see it. This idea of taking private property for private use. I do not see where such a principle would end. It seems to me you might as well dissolve society at once so far as property rights are concerned.

REMARKS OF MR. DUDLEY.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. Mr. Chairman: I do not propose to discuss this question of law that the legal gentlemen have been discussing for the last half hour. I desire simply to say in this connection, that there is one thing that we ought to provide for, if it is not already provided for at common law, and that is the matter of drainage. It certainly is very important. There is a vast amount of land in this State, being very nearly level, which it is very important to the owners that they should have some privilege of drainage. If that privilege may be cut off entirely by some party who owns lands across the way in the direction in which the water would naturally be run, although that party's land may need drainage also, yet from carelessness he may be disposed not to drain his own, and to stand directly in the way of anybody else draining theirs, I certainly think that if that right does not exist at common law—if it will be cut off unless this Convention provides in some way for that right—we ought to see that it is adopted in this Constitution. The form that it ought to assume I do not know, and if this article involves the principles stated by gentlemen here, certainly it ought to be changed. But I believe that the good sense of this Convention will certainly recognize that there is a necessity that some right of drainage should be given to the people.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Winans.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin, to strike out in line three the words, "or run their waters through natural channels."

The amendment was rejected, on a division, by a vote of 35 ayes to 43 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion to strike out section three.

The motion prevailed.

MR. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman: I offer a new section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"All persons and corporations shall have the right of way across public, private, or corporate lands, for the construction of ditches, flumes, or canals, for the purpose of conducting water for the irrigation or reclamation of lands, and for manufacturing and mining purposes, and for drainage, upon payment of just compensation."

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I have a new section to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The right to collect rates of compensation for the use of water supplied to any county, city and county, city, or town, or the inhabitants thereof, is a franchise, and cannot be exercised except by authority of and in the manner prescribed by law."

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I think it is doubtful if we can be too careful with the provisions that we put into the Constitution with reference to this right to the use of water, and as that provision has been read for information once before I deem it unnecessary to more than add that it defines simply the right which may be exercised, and the manner in which that right shall be exercised with reference to the use of water.

MR. DUNLAP. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature shall provide, by law, that the Boards of Supervisors, in their respective counties, shall have power, when application is made to them by any person or corporation interested, to establish reasonable rates to be charged for the use of water, whether furnished by individuals or corporations."

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment will not be adopted. The Legislature will undoubtedly have all the power necessary.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I call the attention of the gentleman to the supplementary section that was adopted to the article on legislative department. It gives the Legislature just that power that is included in that section: "The Legislature shall pass laws for the regulation and limitation of the charges for services performed and commodities furnished by telegraph, gas, and water companies," etc.

MR. DUNLAP. I withdraw my amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I would like to state that the amendment I have offered was drawn by John F. Swift, of San Francisco.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: The result of that would be to compel any individual, to own any water, to resolve himself into a corporation. Now, it does not seem to me that there would be any necessity for such a proviso in our Constitution. There is no necessity of compelling every individual, who wants to do any business, to go into a corporation. If an individual had a few water pipes, and he desired to furnish water to his neighbor, he would be compelled to incorporate for the purpose of doing that.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: If that is the opinion of Mr. Swift, I have only to say that he is sadly out on the matter of franchises. Now, if I furnish water to the gentleman from Santa Clara, it is a private matter and not a franchise, and we cannot make it a franchise by saying so here. It comes under the general principle stated by the gentleman from Marin, that you cannot take the property of A and transfer it to B, and you cannot make A sell his property to B unless he chooses. I refer to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Calder vs. Bull, 3 Dallas, p. 388. Mr. Justice Chase says:

"An Act of the Legislature (for I cannot call it a law) contrary to the great first principles of the social compact, cannot be considered a rightful exercise of legislative authority."

MR. HERRINGTON. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that this has reference to furnishing water to counties, cities, and towns, and the inhabitants thereof.

MR. HOWARD. That does not change the principle at all.

MR. HERRINGTON. That is a franchise.

MR. HOWARD. No; not necessarily. The Justice continues: "The obligation of a law in governments established on express compact, and on republican principles, must be determined by the nature of the power on which it is founded. A few instances will suffice to explain what I mean. A law that punished a citizen for an innocent action, or, in other words, for an act which, when done, was in violation of no existing law; a law that destroys or impairs the lawful private contracts of citizens; a law that makes a man a judge in his own cause; or a law that takes property from A and gives it to B. It is against all reason and justice for a people to intrust a Legislature with such powers, and, therefore, it cannot be presumed that they have done it. The genius, the nature, and the spirit of our State Governments amount to a prohibition of such acts of legislation, and the general principles of law and reason forbid them. The Legislature may enjoin, permit, forbid, and punish; they may declare new crimes, and establish rules of conduct for all its citizens in future cases; they may commend what is right, and prohibit what is wrong; but they cannot change innocence into guilt, nor punish innocence as a crime; or violate the right of an antecedent lawful private contract, or the right of private property. To maintain that our Federal or State Legislatures possess such powers, if they had not been expressly restrained, would, in my opinion, be a political heresy altogether inadmissible in our free republican governments."

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: This is substantially a proposition to say for the third time the same thing which we have really said twice. The first section, as amended, now reads:

"The use of all water now appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for sale, rental, or distribution, is hereby declared to be a public use, and subject to the regulation and control of the State, in the manner to be prescribed by law."

That is saying it, substantially, once. It was said before, however, in the twenty-eighth section of the legislative article, not only declaring the right, but making it mandatory upon the Legislature to exercise that right. Now, what more does the gentleman from Santa Clara propose? I respectfully submit that the Constitution we are attempting to make will be sufficiently voluminous without saying the same thing over more than twice anyhow.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report back the report of the Committee on Water and Water Rights, as amended, and recommend its adoption.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. I object. There is a proposition to come in here.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise and report back the article, with the recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion is not in order. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Trinity, Mr. Tinnin.

The motion was lost, on a division, by a vote of 39 ayes to 41 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I really do not see why this should be adopted. It need not be said that it does not enunciate any principle. But the first section, as it is amended, declares that "the use of all waters now appropriated, or that may hereafter be appropriated, for sale, rental, or distribution, is hereby declared to be a public use, and subject to the regulation and control of the State, in the manner to be prescribed by law." It delegates the power to the State to exercise control in a manner to be prescribed by law. I am really unable to see what more we need in the Constitution. We certainly do not desire to lay down any rule, to prescribe these regulations which we say the Legislature shall prescribe by law. We have given the Legislature full power to deal with the subject in all its length and breadth and depth. Now, unless we wish to formulate a code of laws on the subject, it seems to me that we had better leave it just where it is. It has been said that we need some better definition of a public use. I answer that it has been held for two hundred years by the common law Courts of Great Britain, and by the majority of Courts in the United States, that in determining the question of what is a public use it is mainly a question of legislative determination. I invite the attention of lawyers to this statement. The general drift of authority is that what constitutes a public use rests in legislative declaration. We have done it here, so far as the provision is concerned, in the Constitution, which is still higher authority. It seems to me with this door open there is full power for the Legislature to provide all needed legislation that the wants of this State require. I think the best thing for us to do is to stop where we are.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: Some gentlemen profess a profound ignorance of what is attempted to be done by this amendment. I will say, for their enlightenment, that the delegation from San Francisco fully understand what that means; that it is an attempt to reduce, in every possible manner, these corporations which undertake to furnish incorporated cities and towns with water, to the control of law, and to make them amenable to law, and make their operations conform to law and to established rules. This amendment interferes not at all with the supply of water to miners, or to farmers for irrigating purposes.

MR. TINNIN. Don't it compel us to incorporate? It says it is a franchise.

MR. REYNOLDS. I call for the reading of the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The right to collect rates of compensation for the use of water supplied to any county, city and county, city, or town, or the inhabitants thereof, is a franchise, and cannot be exercised except by authority of and in the manner prescribed by law."

MR. REYNOLDS. That has reference to the supply of inhabitants of incorporated cities and towns; that word is necessary to be put in there, "or the inhabitants thereof," and that is the purpose of it. It interferes not at all with the mining or irrigation schemes, but has reference only to the supply of water to incorporated cities and towns. I hope the amendment will be adopted. We know what it means in San Francisco.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will be adopted, and I think it will be of great use and service to the people of this State.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. REYNOLDS. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Water and Water Rights, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called, and quorum present.

REPORT.

MR. AYERS. Mr. President: I ask leave to report a section to be added to the report of the Committee on Harbors, Tide Waters, and Navigable Streams, and ask that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

So ordered.

WATER AND WATER RIGHTS.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the report of the Committee on Water and Water Rights.

So ordered.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer the following as an additional section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The only property that can be acquired in any of the waters of this State by appropriation or condemnation, is a use, and such use shall forever remain subject to regulation and control by the Legislature of the State for the use and benefit of all."

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I will state, sir, that this proposed new section in nowise conflicts or interferes with the section presented by the committee, or that proposed by the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale, which has been adopted by this body. This section which I offer is intended to define the extent of the rights which may be acquired by the appropriation or condemnation of the waters of this State. And I might as well repeat what has once been said here, that there are some opinions even in this Convention that lead to the conclusion that some higher right than the use can be acquired by simple appropriation, or by condemnation proceedings under the power of eminent domain, in this State. This section is designed to determine and fix, once and forever, the extent of the rights which can be acquired by these methods in the waters of this State. And it is there determined and fixed that no higher right shall be acquired than a use. The section that was adopted yesterday says that the use of all water now appropriated, or that may be hereafter appropriated, for sale, rental, or distribution, is hereby declared to be a public use, and subject to the regulation and control of the State, in the manner to be prescribed by law. That section does not prevent, as I understand it, the acquisition by condemnation of a higher right than a use. It only extends in its effects to a technical appropriation, as has been understood by the laws of Congress. All the general principles that are involved in water rights when this section is adopted will be fully engrafted upon this article, and in my opinion, as far as the general principles are concerned, it will be a complete article. Without it there will be some room for question as to the propriety of the doctrines advanced here, that higher rights may be acquired by a process of condemnation than a use. It is not good policy to engraft in an article of this kind a provision that will be open to any doubt. Now, I submit that this section ought to be adopted. It is declaratory of the common law as it exists, with reference to acquiring rights in water.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I submit that there is great danger of our introducing too much upon this subject. It is evident that the law and the decisions of the Courts have heretofore been made in accordance with the customs and demands of the country. Laws have been established upon these customs according to the necessities of the country, and the Courts have decided accordingly. I am under the impression that an amendment of this kind will be very mischievous in its tendencies. Now, for instance, where water is scarce, and where there are more ditches, as is the case in some places, than there is water to supply them, to say that that water shall be a public use and shall belong to all, is to destroy those rights in water which have been sustained by the Courts of this State. It looks very innocent in the abstract, and reads very smoothly, that everybody should have the right to the use of water; it looks very plausible and quite just to have a kind of general divide; but when certain men have undergone early hardships to acquire either land or water, it would seem to me to be absurd, upon the principles of common justice, to interfere with what they have acquired in the midst of hardships. This says that the water shall be for the common use of all. That may be a little indistinct, but we can see the tendency of the thing. It is destructive of the rights which have been acquired before. It is in violation of the well settled principles of priority of rights.

MR. HERRINGTON. It operates upon nothing except that which may be acquired hereafter.

MR. BROWN. I was not aware of that. If it operates upon nothing more than that I am deceived. I am under the impression that we have got about enough in this article. Let the people, and the Legislature which they shall choose, settle this matter according to the progress of the age. We do not want too much in it. I think we should leave something to the judgment and experience of the people. I am satisfied that it is often the case that there is too much put into Constitutions.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not be adopted. The reason I object to it is that the first section prescribes that all the waters that are used for the supply of certain things (naming them), that the use of such water for such purposes shall be declared to be a public use. The second section prescribes that towns, counties, and cities shall regulate their use and price. The last section of the article on legislative department says the Legislature shall, by law, regulate the price of water. The whole thing seems to be harmonious as it stands. Now, the gentleman proposes another section, declaring that there is no property in water; that wherever parties have acquired a right it shall be but a use. Now, that is contrary to the very principles of the rights of property, as far as appropriation is concerned. I am not speaking of appropriations for public purposes, but for a man's own use. A man has a farm, and a stream of water runs through it. He owns that water as far as the water rises upon the land. He owns from the sun to the center of the earth, under every rule of law.

MR. HERRINGTON. Could that be acquired by appropriation?

MR. ESTEE. Certainly.

MR. HERRINGTON. No, sir; by purchase.

MR. ESTEE. The main objection to this is that the third section and this, taken together, will be meaningless, and possibly the Courts will hold that they conflict with each other. As it stands now, the article seems to be entirely harmonious. I think the gentleman from Tulare made a very good point when he said the great danger was in getting too much in the Constitution. The danger is, too, in making one section conflict with another, and in consequence the Courts may hold that they are of no effect. For one, I hope the amendment will be voted down. I move that the committee now rise, report back the article, and recommend its adoption.

MR. HERRINGTON. Would you be willing to have the word "condemnation" inserted in the section proposed by Judge Hale and adopted yesterday?

MR. ESTEE. No, sir; I do not think there is any necessity for it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion that the committee rise.

Carried—Ayes, 61; noes, 30.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Water and Water Rights, have amended the same, and recommend its adoption by the Convention as amended.

MR. TINNIN. I move that four hundred and eighty copies be printed.

So ordered.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. President: I wish to introduce an article on banks and banking, and ask to have it referred to the Committee on Corporations other than Municipal, without reading.

So referred.

STATE INSTITUTIONS.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: In the absence of Judge Overton, Chairman of the Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings, which is next in order, I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of considering that report.

So ordered.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

The article was read as follows:

ARTICLE —.

SECTION 1. There shall be a State Board of Prison Directors, to consist of five persons, to be appointed by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall hold office for ten years, except that the first appointed shall, in such manner as the Legislature may direct, be so classified that the term of one person so appointed shall expire at the end of each two years during the first ten years, and vacancies occurring shall be filled in like manner. The appointee to a vacancy, occurring before the expiration of a term, shall hold only for the unexpired term of his predecessor. The Governor shall have the power to remove either of the Directors for misconduct, incompetency, or neglect of duty, after an opportunity to be heard upon written charges.

SEC. 2. The Board of Directors shall have the charge and superintendence of the State Prisons, and shall possess such powers, and perform such duties, in respect to other penal and reformatory institutions of the State, as the Legislature may prescribe.

SEC. 3. The Board shall appoint the Warden and Clerk, and determine the other necessary officers of the Prison. The Board shall have power to remove the Wardens and Clerks for misconduct, incompetency, or neglect of duty; all other officers and employés of the Prisons shall be appointed by the Warden thereof, and be removed at his pleasure.

SEC. 4. The members of the Board shall receive no compensation other than reasonable traveling and other expenses incurred while engaged in the performance of official duties, to be audited as the Legislature may direct.

SEC. 5. The Legislature shall pass such laws as may be necessary to further define and regulate the powers and duties of the Board, Wardens, and Clerks, and to carry into effect the provisions of this article.

THE SECRETARY read section one as follows:

SECTION 1. There shall be a State Board of Prison Directors, to consist of five persons, to be appointed by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall hold office for ten years, except that the first appointed shall, in such manner as the Legislature may direct, be so classified that the term of one person so appointed shall expire at the end of each two years during the first ten years, and vacancies occurring shall be filled in like manner. The appointee to a vacancy, occurring before the expiration of a term, shall hold only for the unexpired term of his predecessor. The Governor shall have the power to remove either of the Directors for misconduct, incompetency, or neglect of duty, after an opportunity to be heard on written charges.

MR. CONDON. Mr. Chairman: I offer a substitute for section one.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SECTION 1. There shall be a State Board of Prison Directors, to consist of three persons, to be elected by the qualified voters of the State at large, at the general State election, at the times and places that State officers are elected, and the term of office shall be six years from and after the first Monday in January next succeeding their election; provided, that the three Directors elected at the first election shall, at their first meeting, so classify themselves by lot that one of them shall go out of office at the end of two years, one at the end of four years, and one at the end of six years. If a vacancy shall occur in the office of Director, the Governor shall appoint a person to hold the office until the election and qualification of his successor, which election shall take place at the next succeeding general election, and the person so elected shall hold the office for the remainder of the unexpired term. The first election for Directors shall be at the first general election after the adoption and ratification of this Constitution."

REMARKS OF MR. CONDON.

MR. CONDON. Mr. Chairman: As a member of the committee, I wish to say that the report of the majority contemplates the appointment of five persons, by the Governor, for a term of ten years; this, sir, is antagonistic to the very principles of the system of government under which we live. It was contended in the committee that the great object to be attained, in order to reform prison discipline, would be to have these Commissioners appointed. The argument presented there contended that by such appointment they would be free from any and all political affiliations; this I consider not a just reason, from the fact that if the people, in their sovereign power, have not the right to select their servants for the purpose of performing all official duties, it proves, sir, the fact that our system of government is a failure. I contend, sir, that the people should have that right, sir. If it is true that, in all the political positions filled in this State, and every State in the Union, we have been able to obtain honest and intelligent men for the purpose of carrying out the government, it is equally true we can select, amongst the citizens of California, men qualified to discharge the duties of Prison Commissioners. The subject of prison reform is not a new one; it is one that has taxed the mental faculties of some of the greatest minds, not alone in the State of California, but of the United States, and I might add, of the whole world. It now becomes the duty of this young State to inaugurate a system that will redound to our own good credit. I contend that by the election of these Commissioners, these great objects can be obtained, and I hope the substitute presented will meet the hearty concurrence of this Convention.

SPEECH OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I regret that the Chairman of the committee is not present, because he is much better prepared to present the claims of the report of this committee than I am. But in his absence, I suppose it devolves upon me to state the reasons for the actions of the committee in this respect. The plan here presented is substantially the one introduced here by Judge Campbell, of Alameda, which was supposed to have been formulated by the late Governor Haight, who was a member of the Prison Commission, a voluntary association which has done much good in this State, in supervising and overlooking prison discipline and management in this State. It is not new. The plan has been in vogue in other States, and the whole object is to remove the management of the State Prisons and public institutions from politics. Now, each member of the committee, and I think almost every member of this Committee of the Whole, will admit that to elect this Board of Prison Directors will be to put the State Prisons in politics. It seems to me it would necessarily follow. If these Directors are to be elected, of course they will be nominated by some party. Now, the Democratic party, or the Republican party, or the Workingmen's party, would carry the election. These Directors would be nominated by one or the other of these parties and elected. That is inevitable.

Now, in reply to the gentleman who represents the minority. He says it is right for the people to elect these officers. We concede the right of the people in the premises. But if the people adopt this Constitution with this provision in it, do not the people waive their right to elect these officers, for the purpose of removing them from the pool of politics? It is simply for the people to determine which mode they prefer. Other States have found it beneficial to have these officers appointed, because they can be chosen from among those who are eminently qualified for this particular business. Political conventions do not always select the proper men for the proper places. And it will be observed here that we have provided that these Directors shall have no salaries. It was shown to the committee, to the entire satisfaction of almost all the members, that entirely competent and worthy men can be found in this State for the purpose of reforming them and so conducting them as to redound to the advantage and benefit of the State—men of means, men who have retired from active business, and who have made this matter a study, who will be willing to give their services without compensation. I say, it was shown to the committee that any number of this class of men could be selected by the Governor, who would serve without any compensation whatever. In fact, the present Prison Commission is purely a voluntary association composed of that very class of men, and they have done a great deal of good in supervising the prison management in this State. The majority of the committee were fully satisfied that competent, honest men can be had who will perform these duties without pay, save their actual traveling expenses.

Now, sir, I wish to refer to other instances in this State where this system has worked well. Take the State Insane Asylums. The Directors are not compensated. They are not political hacks. They are not nominated by political conventions. They are selected because they are the proper men, men who will devote a little of their time to this public duty for the honor which the position confers, and for the sake of being useful to their fellow men. Take the University of California. It is managed well by gentlemen who are appointed by the Governor, from the various political parties, without any regard to their politics whatever, and without compensation. And they serve simply for the honor which the position confers. Now, will any one pretend to say that these institutions are not managed better in this way than they would be by a Board of Directors elected by the people—nominated by political parties? Besides, sir, it must be borne in mind that if we elect these Directors from various parts of the State—from distant parts of the State—we cannot expect them to come here and serve without compensation. A reasonable compensation would be not less than two thousand or three thousand dollars per annum each. There is the matter of expense to be considered. For these and other reasons which I might adduce, the committee adopted the plan proposed by Judge Campbell, which was drawn by the late Governor Haight. We allow them to be appointed without any salary—paying their actual expenses—and they choose the Superintendent and Warden, and the Clerk. All the subordinate officers are under the immediate charge and direction of the Warden. You thus have them in check. Of course the Legislature will provide that these Directors shall keep books, and report to the Legislature, so that the whole system would have a proper course of checks. I believe the plan here adopted is the best that could be adopted for this State, as regards economy and efficiency. Certainly the other plan proposed could not be adopted without throwing the prisons at once into the whirlpool of politics, because these Directors would be politicians, necessarily, being elected by one or the other of the political parties. I hope, therefore, that the amendment will not be adopted.

MR. BIGGS. I wish to ask a question. Would not three be as good as five?

MR. VAN DYKE. There is no compensation attached, and you can have five as well as three. If they were receiving a salary I would say that three would be sufficient.

MR. CONDON. In answer to the gentleman——

THE CHAIRMAN. You have spoken once.

SPEECH OF MR. WELLIN.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. Chairman: I have been on this committee, and am one of those who signed this minority report. I must differ from my friend from Alameda, when he says the committee were of this opinion. The majority of the committee were not very positive as to their opinions. It is true, the majority signed the report to appoint five Prison Commissioners, but they were not very positive. There were several who disagreed entirely, and thus a majority and minority report was presented. I am in favor of electing these Commissioners, and also of paying them a fair and reasonable salary. I don't know how it is that gentlemen tell me to-day that we can readily get three men, or five men, to serve the State for ten years simply for the honor which the position confers, while only a day or two ago it was urged here that cheap men were very dangerous men to have in office. The gentleman himself told us that it was a very dangerous thing to have cheap men in office for Judges, and I believe he was right.

MR. VAN DYKE. I was not here at all; I was absent.

MR. WELLIN. I accept your apology. I have heard you privately say the same thing. The gentleman tells us that this University has succeeded so well in this mode of trusteeship. I remember, a few years ago, when the Commissioners didn't succeed so very well, and if the reports of the legislative committees were to be at all relied upon, they were very dear men to the State, if they did serve the State for nothing. I have the fullest confidence in the people to elect these officers. I am satisfied it will be better for the people and better for the State. I hope the proposition will be accepted, and that a reasonable compensation will be allowed. It is not that I have lost confidence in the ability of the Governor to make these appointments, but it is the common sense view that governs me. The Governor is continually besieged for every place where there is a chance to make a dollar, where there is the slightest possibility of making money. He is besieged from one end of the State to another by people wanting appointments. They make promises in conventions that if certain men are elected, the Governor will appoint certain other men to certain places. That is the fact. More places are promised than there are places, and I should like to know how you are going to take these institutions out of politics by giving the Governor the appointing power. Let the people elect them, and then, if we do not get good men the people will have no one to blame but themselves.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: As a member of the committee, and one of the signers of the minority report, I believed, sir, when I helped frame that minority report, and signed it, that it was the sense of this Convention that all persons who occupy official positions in the State should be elected by the people. If the power of appointing the members of the State Board shall remain with the Governor, then we might as well allow the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint the members of the Board of Railroad Commissioners, and all the other officers that we have provided for. But I believe, sir, that it is one of the great principles of republican government that the people shall have the right to designate and say who is to represent them in an official capacity. If the people are competent and qualified to elect three Railroad Commissioners, who shall have absolute and unrestricted power over the railways in this State, amounting to a hundred million of dollars, certainly the people are qualified to say who shall be their State Prison Directors. It is said here that by giving the power of appointment to the Governor, you will take the matter out of politics. Now I do not believe any member of this committee who has given the matter any serious consideration will believe any such thing. If the Governor be a Republican, or a Democrat, or a Workingman, will he appoint men to the office who belong to the same political party that he belongs to, or otherwise? He can do it rightly and properly. There is nothing wrong in it. If the man be a proper man, a Republican Governor ought to appoint a Republican. It is human nature, and there is no impropriety in it. As far as politics goes, politics rule just as much in the appointment of men as in the election of men. Why should we make an exception here? Gentlemen say they are incompetent to say who the State Prison Commissioners should be. If we desire to say that the people shall have power in one case, let us give them power in all cases.

Again, the minority of the committee have seen fit to recommend but three persons. They believe that three men can act just as well as five. Whether they receive a salary, or whether they receive but their expenses, it will certainly be a saving to the State by having two men less. We therefore ask a candid and fair consideration of this report at the hands of this Convention.

REMARKS OF MR. BARTON.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed, sir, to this system of appointing these Commissioners. This is supposed to be a republican form of government, and I am tired of this cry about taking these matters out of politics. This, sir, is a republican form of government, and by politics we live, and by politics we expect to fall. Now it has been mentioned here that these men could serve the State as the State Board of Regents serve the State. I would not have mentioned the matter at all if it had not been brought up in that way. In eighteen hundred and seventy-three and eighteen hundred and seventy-four, during the time I was a member of the Legislature, having been appointed one of the members of the Building Committee, and it having fallen to my lot as a member of that committee to investigate the buildings of the State of California, of course it became my duty to investigate the conduct and management of such Regents. First, the College of Agriculture, and second, the College of Letters. We found ourselves for two weeks wrapt in a labyrinth—a deep, intricate mass of uncertainties. Day after day we went further into these difficulties, until we had exhausted four or five weeks in our arduous work, and at the end of that time the session of the Legislature was about to close, and we were compelled to desist from any further investigation of the matter. And let me say here, that in the short time we had to investigate the accounts of the Regents, we found thousands of dollars of the people's money that the Regents could not account for.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I rise to a point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

MR. WINANS. The gentleman is not speaking to the question. There is no opportunity to reply to him. It is not fair to make such statements, when he knows it is not pertinent to the discussion and therefore they cannot be replied to.

MR. BARTON. I simply alluded to it to show the principle of appointing to these important positions. There is a large amount of money to be expended. I do not desire to hurt the feelings of any member of this body who may have been upon this Board of Regents.

MR. WINANS. It is not a question of hurting feelings; it is a question of assailing an institution here which has no power of reply. My feelings are not hurt.

MR. BARTON. I stand corrected. I am opposed to taking this matter out of the hands of the people. I hope this matter will be left to the people to determine.

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. I move an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add, after the word 'Senate,' in line three, the following: 'More than a majority of whom shall not be of the same political persuasion.'"

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I had not intended to say anything against this matter. I am, sir, in favor of the election of these Commissioners. The argument is not good that men ought to be on that Board who have no political views. There is no man—no American citizen—who has not some political opinion. No man is fit for the position who has not some political views. I believe we can find plenty of men who have decided views, and are not afraid to express them, who will fill these positions acceptably. This question of employing men because they will serve the State without consideration, I do not believe in the policy of it. These men will seek in some way to get pay, and directly or indirectly to secure pay. The State should pay them a sufficient compensation to enable them to serve. The men should be selected by the people, and the men who are seeking these places should not be selected. They ought to be paid for their services a reasonable compensation, and men with principles, too, should be selected.

REMARKS OF MR. JOYCE.

MR. JOYCE. Mr. Chairman: I am sorry to think, sir, that the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke, should be so much sophisticated in the argument as to set out the Workingmen's delegation. The matter would be in their hands to elect Commissioners for ten years. It is contrary, sir, to the principles of the Workingmen's party, this appointment system, altogether. Whether it is five years or twenty years, it is wrong in practice, and I am proud to say it is not our theory. In all cases, in at least six out of ten cases, where Commissioners are appointed, we find it worked injuriously, not only in State matters, but in United States matters. Commissions are dangerous to begin with. We should look at this thing fairly in the best interests of the people of the State of California. It is but a few years ago that a Commission came out to investigate Chinamen. If the Commission had been elected by the people of California they would not be so apt to whitewash. We come to find out to-day, sir, the State of New York elected three Commissioners. According to the report we find here of Mr. Pillsbury, it shows that the State Prison of New York is a big paying institution, under the management of three elected Commissioners. Now, sir, every gentleman on this floor knows that it takes a great deal of money to run the State Prisons, and I do not pretend that the people of this great State want men to serve them without pay. I believe the State is able to pay people when they ask them to perform any work—pay them for their time. I believe it is human nature, that if we don't pay a man he will pay himself, and they might do the same as another institution, the new City Hall. We find out that one of the Commissioners there has a partner, and gives contracts to his partner. So much for the Commissioners. Now, if the people had elected the City Hall Commissioners, I am satisfied the thing would be in a better position. In the State of New York the State Prison labor is utilized. I believe we can introduce a system of manufacturing jute bags here, and supply the farmers of this State, and make the prisons pay. Make them work for the State, so that the labor will not come in competition with outside American labor, because there is no such work done in this part of the country. The same way with carpets. I believe, to appoint these Commissioners by the Governor, would be to take the dregs, and would not be practical to the people of this State. I don't see, if the people of this State have a right to elect a man Governor, they have just as much capacity to elect these Commissioners. Another thing, I think it is a dangerous precedent to introduce into our system. I think it is bad and dangerous, and I think the long term system is bad. It is against popular government. Shorter terms are much better, and let the people say who shall represent them. I must vote against that section as offered by the majority.

SPEECH OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: It strikes me, after an examination of the report, that it is a very good one, and it meets my hearty approval. Now, the gentlemen who have spoken against this report seem to think that it is taking some right away from the people. The proposition is simply this: we are a part of the people, and determining what is best for ourselves. Having determined that, we are determining for the people. The question arises here, as to the management of the State Prison, what is the best course to pursue in the management of these institutions? We all know that our State institutions, in order to be well managed, must have stable management. Unless they are, there can be no good realized from them. These institutions are a necessity with us. They are not institutions established for purposes of speculation, or for the benefit of parties, political or otherwise. They are evils—necessary evils—and the question arises, what is the best means of managing them so that the evil may be lessened? How shall they be managed, so that instead of being a great weight upon the incomes of the people, continually draining taxes from them, they may be rendered self-sustaining? And it strikes me that the course adopted here is a good one. I find it has been commended by very talented men—men who have devoted long years of study to these matters. This plan did not originate with this committee. They have adopted it from others. There has been placed in the hands of most of the members the report of the California Prison Commission. This Commission is composed of some of our best men, men who have the best interest of the State at heart. The human race produces such men, and we find here the names of such men as Governor Haight in our own State, who, after long study, have agreed upon this as being a wise and proper measure.

Now by this course the Governor of the State will appoint two men. Each Governor of the State will appoint two, because they are to hold for ten years. It reaches beyond his power. It reaches beyond his day. And we do know, wherever there is pay there is always a lot of men ready to rush in for the emoluments of office—not for the honor it will confer, but for the money there is in it. Men should be selected of mature years for these positions—men of observation and experience; men who have money enough, and who know there is more in the office than the mere matter of dollars and cents. Not men with whom the place is made a stepping stone to help them on towards the goal of their political ambition. Governors, in their selections, will be more apt to take men of the right kind than political conventions. They will select men who have lived beyond the mere matter of political excitement. This I believe to be the best mode of selecting the officers for these institutions. I am perfectly willing to trust the people, but do the people speak on this question? I am usually in favor of the election of all officers of the State, those which have any political bearing, but this is not one of those offices. There is no such thing as politics in the management of the State Prisons. The Governor will not be apt to stop to inquire what the man's politics are, so long as he is a suitable man for the place. If we are driven to elections, of course it will be known that the Warden will be appointed by these Commissioners, and there will be a strong political fight made for the place. That will be the object. Not whether he is the best Warden that can be selected, but whether he has political power, and whether he will add strength to the ticket. For these reasons I am in favor of this report as it comes from the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I suppose, from the reading of this amendment, that the friends of the amendment contemplate making some provision for the compensation of these officers, in case these Directors are to be elected by the people.

MR. WELLIN. We propose to leave the compensation to the Convention. If they decide to elect them, then we can fix the compensation.

MR. McCALLUM. Now, sir, I am in favor of the idea presented in the report of the committee. Wherever officers are to be compensated, wherever there are large interests involved, I think it has been pretty well settled in all the States of the Union that such officers should be elected. And if they are to be compensated officers they should be elected. The committee have proceeded upon the idea that we can find five competent men to accept the office and perform these very important duties without compensation. I submit, sir, that is a very dangerous experiment to put into a Constitution. We may have many Haights in the State; we may have many philanthropists who will perform these important duties, but do we know that they can be had. We require two things. First, we will have five Directors to be appointed. Next, they shall serve without compensation. Suppose you cannot get them? Suppose practically it won't work? What are you going to do about it? That question arises, and very naturally arises here. I do not believe it is the true theory to put an iron rule in the Constitution in matters of an experimental nature. I understand that it is said there are precedents from other States. I would like to know where it is. I have looked over the American Constitutions here, and not a single one of them provides for the appointment of such Commissioners. Not one. The State of Connecticut, the Constitution says they shall be appointed or elected as prescribed by law. In the State of New York, the Constitution provides that they shall be elected at the next general election which shall be held after the adoption of the Constitution. In the State of Georgia, it provides that these officers shall be elected or appointed as the General Assembly may direct. There is no instance like that proposed by the committee. I should like to hear some good reason why the report should be adopted. It is nothing but legislation from one end to the other. We are asked here to devise a system for the complete management of the State Prison, when that whole matter is one that properly belongs to the Legislature. I am in favor of putting everything in the Constitution that ought to go there. But I am decidedly opposed to making a code of laws in the Constitution. If this is a wise provision, as I think it is, and such men can be found—and there ought to be something known about it—if these men can be found to give their time without compensation, let the Legislature make such a provision. Why should not this whole matter be left to the Legislature?

REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: It appears to me that this plan is the most impracticable one that has been proposed, to leave this matter to a voluntary Commission—an executive Commission. There may be such gentlemen, but I don't believe we can get them. If we did, we would be apt to get men that are not fit for the place. The men who are fit, we might never get. It has been argued that this matter ought to be left to the Legislature. I see no reason why it should not be left to the Legislature. I see no reason why the Legislature could not manage this thing. The present system is better than that system. The Lieutenant Governor is the Warden, and the men who are associated with him are men who, like him, are chosen by the people of the State, men whom the people have confidence in. I think it is a dangerous experiment to say that we will get men to manage our State Prisons without compensation. You had better get enterprising young men, and pay them to devote their time to the work. Two thousand dollars a year would be sufficient, and then the business would be attended to. I hope if the minority report is not accepted, that the majority report will also be rejected.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I think the report of the minority fatally defective in the very first section, in not providing for any mode of removals. I look upon that as a fatal defect. Now, the report of the majority says the Governor shall have power to remove them for certain causes. Here is an office for a long term of years, and no power lodged in the Governor, or anybody else, to remove them.

MR. TINNIN. If they are State officers, what right has the Governor to remove them?

MR. HOWARD. If we give him the right he will have it, I imagine. Now, sir, the second section of this minority report contains a provision which is totally inadmissible, and that is that the State Board of Prison Commissioners shall constitute a Board of Pardons, and that the Governor of the State shall never pardon any person convicted of crime, except at the request of the State Board of Prison Commissioners. In the first place, that is inconsistent. That is totally inadmissible and impracticable.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I call your attention to the fact that if this Board is elected, they will be State officers, subject to removal by impeachment, as other State officers are.

MR. HOWARD. No matter how they are elected, they are State officers.

MR. BEERSTECHER. The committee intended that they should be removed as other State officers are, by impeachment. Again, the section referred to by the gentleman, as regards a Board of Pardons, is not under consideration now. We are considering section one.

MR. HOWARD. I am much obliged to the gentleman for the information. I will try and remember that Solomon is alive. [Laughter.] I prefer to adhere to the report of the majority.

MR. McCALLUM. I move to strike out section one.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Tuolumne, Mr. Walker.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the section.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section will be adopted as it stands. From my knowledge of prison management, I am impressed most decidedly in favor of leaving the duties of the Governor to the Governor, and confine the Lieutenant Governor to the duties properly appertaining to that office. I believe that is the sense of this Convention. The man who is qualified to preside over the Senate may have, and more than likely will not have the faculty or the ability which fit a man to take care of prisoners. I believe the best way is to place the management of the State Prisons in the hands of a Board of Directors. Where such officers have been appointed there has never been any distinction made on account of politics. If the State was Republican, the majority of such Boards were Republican, but the minority were always given a representation. They always had two out of five, and so it ought to be everywhere. Now, it is not so that you cannot get five men to serve for nothing on the Prison Commission. The present Commissioners visit the prisons and work for nothing, and they do as much work as it will be necessary for this Commission to do. I am afraid there is a feeling among my friends of the minority here, that these would be very pleasant salaries to take—two thousand dollars a year. I was astonished at some of them the other day, when they voted against the proposition that no member of this Convention should be eligible to office. Now, the Governor would select the best men he could find for these positions. He would look around, and if he saw a good man, take him. Then, again, if you elect these men, there is no power to remove them. The Governor cannot remove them, because it is a constitutional office. The only way they can be removed is by impeachment.

What is the ground for impeachment? It is high crime. What is a high crime—inefficiency? Not at all. Neglect of duty? No, sir. Carelessness? No, sir; and yet carelessness or neglect of duty may be the very thing that ought to authorize their expulsion. Under this other report the Governor has a right to remove them for these causes, and he will be likely to bring his power to bear upon the man who has failed to perform his duty He is there to execute the laws. He is called the Executive, for that very reason. He would compel these men to do their duty. It seems to me this function, given in this regard, is a very proper one, which could not properly apply to officers elected by the people. The Governor would retain a man in these positions as long as it was possible to retain him, because he would bring down strong criticisms upon himself if he removed him. But if he appoints a man, he himself is responsible for his conduct, and he will be obliged to exercise his power. You recollect that directors of corporations have been made responsible for those they appoint and have supervision over. Here is the Governor appointing these men, and he will be directly responsible for their conduct. And when this is the case, he will be more apt to exercise it when the occasion demands it.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the report of the minority. I believe in a republican form of government, and so believing, I believe the people are fully capable of selecting their own officers. If they are capable of electing a Governor, they are capable of electing the Commissioners direct. I tell you the idea that they are not as capable of electing these Commissioners as they are of electing the Governor, is all a humbug. Sir, the American people are capable of self-government. I believe they should elect these officers, as well as all officers, and I believe every man elected should have a reasonable salary, sufficient to pay him for his services, then we can have efficient officers, have the business done right, and the State will save money. The people are just as competent to select men who are qualified to fill these positions as the Governor.

REMARKS OF MR. THOMPSON.

MR. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman: As one of the committee who signed the report—though at one time I was in favor of electing them—I concluded, after due consideration, that it was better for the Governor to appoint them. We had considerable talk in the committee concerning salaries, as to whether we should pay them or not. I am further of the opinion that we should have but three. I like the minority, in that respect, better than the majority report. I believe they ought to be paid a reasonable salary, and that they ought to be required to give their attention to it. I believe it will require a portion of their time in going from one prison to another, to see that the subordinates are attending to their duties. I was not strenuous about the Governor appointing, but it seemed to be the opinion of the majority that the Governor should appoint.

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: It is very true, sir, that the system formulated here could be enacted by the Legislature without any constitutional direction. But the reason for putting it in the fundamental law is to make the system stable, so that one Legislature cannot overthrow what another Legislature has done. We have experienced the evil which has resulted from the management of these institutions by politicians. If it is placed in the Constitution there will be some stability about it. I think it ought to be done. Whether we have the Commissioners by a popular vote, or whether we have them appointed, they ought to be provided for in the Constitution. I am satisfied, too, that they ought to be appointed rather than elected. It is the only way to remove them from politics.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: Whether the system of electing or appointing be adopted, whether the committee determine upon having three or five members, I hope that the motion to strike out will not prevail. If the committee do not see fit to adopt the report of the minority, then I hope the report of the majority will be adopted, so that the present system will be changed. We took the advice of leading men, men who have studied the subject, and it was their unbiased opinion that the present system ought to be changed. I think there ought to be a Board, composed of either three or five, appointed or elected. I think it is the candid judgment of every man who has given this subject careful thought, that the present system is bad, and ought to be changed. I think it will be to the interest of the people of the State of California to adopt either the report of the minority or majority, and not to strike out the section.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I ask leave to withdraw my motion to strike out for the present.

THE CHAIRMAN. No objection; the gentleman has leave. The question is on substituting section one of the minority report for the majority report.

Division being called for, the substitute was lost, by a vote of 39 ayes to 55 noes.

MR. MCCALLUM. I now renew my motion to strike out section one.

Lost—ayes 19.

MR. SWENSON. I offer a substitute for section one.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature shall provide for the election or appointment of a State Board of Prison Directors."

Lost.

MR. WELLIN. I wish to offer a new section.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order now. The Secretary will read section two.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 2. The Board of Directors shall have the charge and superintendence of the State Prisons, and shall possess such powers, and perform such duties, in respect to other penal and reformatory institutions of the State, as the Legislature may prescribe.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there is no amendment, the Secretary will read the next section.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 3. The Board shall appoint the Warden and Clerk, and determine the other necessary officers of the prisons. The Board shall have power to remove the Wardens and Clerks for misconduct, incompetency, or neglect of duty; all other officers and employés of the prison shall be appointed by the Warden thereof, and be removed at his pleasure.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there is no amendment, the Secretary will read the next section.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 4. The members of the Board shall receive no compensation other than reasonable traveling and other expenses incurred while engaged in the performance of official duties, to be audited as the Legislature may direct.

MR. WELLIN. I wish to offer a substitute for section four.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The labor of convicts shall not be let out by contract to any person, copartnership, company, or corporation, and the Legislature shall by law provide for the working of convicts for the benefit of the State."

THE CHAIRMAN. Out of order.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I move to strike out section four.

Lost.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 5. The Legislature shall pass such laws as may be necessary to further define and regulate the powers and duties of the Board, Wardens, and Clerks, and to carry into effect the provisions of this article.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the committee rise, report back the article to the Convention, and recommend its adoption.

MR. WELLIN. If the gentleman will give way, I desire to offer an additional section.

MR. VAN DYKE. I withdraw the motion.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. Chairman: I offer an additional section, to be numbered section six.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 6. The labor of convicts shall not be let out by contract to any person, copartnership, company, or corporation, and the Legislature shall, by law, provide for the working of convicts for the benefit of the State."

SPEECH OF MR. WELLIN.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. Chairman: Perhaps there are many delegates who are not aware of the fact, that at San Quentin there are one thousand five hundred prisoners, and that out of that large number there is not one third employed directly in a form which will benefit the State. There are four hundred and seventy-five prisoners employed, let out on private contract, and the balance—over one thousand—are idle, and are being supported there at the expense of the State. The object of this section is to bring about a system by which these prisons can be made self-sustaining. We believe that one thousand five hundred able-bodied convicts can well afford to earn their own living and save the State the expense. The State has a workshop four hundred feet long by sixty feet wide, four stories high, supplied with a two-hundred horse-power engine, and that institution is kept running day after day for the benefit of the people who employ less than five hundred of these prisoners. These four hundred and seventy-five persons are employed in the manufacture of cabinetware, blinds, doors, etc. The contractors pay half a dollar a day for the prisoners. The prisoners, I have been informed, work about as well as the average white laborers. Now, the State has to feed these men, furnish the machinery, supply the building, furnish the power for driving the machinery, pay an engineer, and supply water, for the sake of hiring out four hundred and seventy-five men at fifty cents a day. The idea of this proposition which I have introduced is, that these other prisoners—one thousand of them—shall also be employed in the manufacture of something which will benefit the State. These four hundred and seventy-five are selected as the best workmen. Some of them are experienced workmen, and capable of earning the highest wages; some of them could earn four dollars a day on the outside, and here they are working for half a dollar a day, and boarded by the State. We consider that this is a wrong system entirely. We consider that these one thousand five hundred prisoners can be employed in such a manner as to make the prison self-sustaining, and you can very readily see how it can be done in a country where labor is as high as it is here. You may ask, what will we employ them at? I propose to add one thousand men to the present working force, and put them all to work. The farmers of this State pay annually about two million dollars for grain bags. Two million dollars going out of the State every year, and we never stop to think where it is going to. Why not employ these prisoners there, and manufacture our own grain bags? Why not have them make grain bags, and save at least a portion of this money at home? You can also manufacture cordage there with the power you have. We will take these one thousand idle men and put them to work, and make them earn something. If they cannot earn half a dollar a day they can earn twenty-five cents, and it is better to have the whole number working at twenty-five cents, than to have one third only working at fifty cents. I wish to read from a paper issued by the Mechanics' State Council, advising the Legislature to put the prisoners at work on the manufacture of doors, sash, and blinds:

COST OF MANUFACTURING, ONE WEEK.

Articles.	Amounts.
1,800 doors, 54,000 feet of lumber, at 4½ cents per foot	$2,430 00
2,000 windows, 14,000 feet of lumber, at 4½ cents per foot	630 00
600 pairs outside blinds, 7,200 feet of lumber, at 3 cents per foot	216 00
100 sets of inside blinds, 2,000 feet of lumber, at 5 cents per foot	100 00
Glue, $6; nails, $20; blind wire, $20	46 00
Glass for 2,000 windows	3,000 00
Putty and setting glass	300 00
Wear of machinery	40 00
Rent of sale store	75 00
Three hands at sale store	75 00
Payroll for 100 men in the shop	1,200 00
Total cost for making	$8,112 00

SALE OF ARTICLES MADE.

Articles.	Amounts.
1,800 doors, at $2 75 each	$4,950 00
2,000 windows, at $3 each	6,000 00
600 pairs outside blinds, at $2 50 per pair	1,500 00
100 sets of inside blinds, at $4 50 per set	450 00
Total	$12,900 00
Deduct cost of making	8,112 00
Leaves profits for one week	$4,788 00

This estimate is for a private workshop with average wages paid coolies, and the necessary white men. If this work is done by the State we must add to the profits the price of labor, being one thousand two hundred dollars; then the profits would be five thousand nine hundred and eighty-eight dollars on one hundred convicts per week. Suppose five hundred of the men now under contract at the prison should be employed in making articles as above stated, the profits per week would be twenty-nine thousand nine hundred and forty dollars. From this we must deduct one fourth for the difference between free and prison labor; then the profits would be twenty-two thousand four hundred and fifty-five dollars per week, or one million one hundred and sixty-seven thousand six hundred and sixty dollars per annum. We learn from the State Prison Directors, that the entire expense of the State Prison for two years, was three hundred and fifty-five thousand seven hundred and eighty-four dollars, or one hundred and seventy-seven thousand eight hundred and ninety-two dollars per annum. When we deduct the latter sum from the profits on the labor of five hundred convicts, we have a profit of nine hundred and eighty-nine thousand seven hundred and sixty-eight dollars.

The expenses have exceeded the income from the prison the enormous sum of two hundred and twelve thousand six hundred and ten dollars, or one hundred and six thousand three hundred and five dollars per annum. Thus we see that a change of this kind would not only make the prison self-sustaining, but make enough in one year to support the prison for five years, and then leave a handsome balance of one hundred thousand three hundred and eight dollars to pay the additional expenses of shop room and machinery. This estimate is astounding to us who are mechanics, and familiar with that kind of work, yet we have gone over the figures several times, and can see no mistake. Suppose, to be sure we are right, we reduce the profits to but one fifth of the estimate, then the prison would be self-sustaining, with a margin of one hundred and ninety-seven thousand five hundred and fifty-seven dollars per annum.

You can never expect to make the whole prison self-sustaining by employing less than half the number of prisoners. I hope this proposition will receive careful consideration. I have studied this question for three or four years, and I know what I am talking about. When the Branch Prison at Folsom is once open, there will be an opening there for the prisoners to work in the stone quarry, with profit to the State. And as the number of prisoners is constantly on the increase, it behooves this State to adopt some plan by which they can be made to earn something.

Mr. BIGGS. I have an amendment I would like to offer.

The SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all down to the word 'Legislature,' reading: 'The Legislature shall by law provide for the working of convicts for the benefit of the State.'"

REMARKS OF MR. BIGGS.

Mr. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I believe the Legislature has full power to control that thing. I believe it is wisdom for this amendment to be adopted. I think the new section offered by the gentleman is a very dangerous doctrine to be engrafted in the organic law. No such principle as that ought to be engrafted on the law of this State, as it will be very expensive, and nobody knows whether it will ever succeed or not. I am a workingman myself, and I have just as much interest in keeping labor at a high price as any of them. No man on this floor has labored more than I have according to his age, and I want to protect and uphold labor. I offer that for the good of the laboring class. Let the Legislature control that matter, and do not go and engraft it in the Constitution. If it is to the interest of the State to let out contract labor then they should have power to do it. Do not tie the hands of the Legislature.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

Mr. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I am heartily in accord with the proposition of the gentleman from Butte. The gentleman from San Francisco complains that one thousand prisoners are kept in idleness, and that it is an outrage upon the taxpayers. Very good. It is sound logic; it is common sense, and I most heartily concur with him that it is an evil that ought to be corrected. But, sir, how does he propose to correct it? Why, his very first proposition contradicts the assertion that he wants the evil corrected—that is, to declare that the prison labor shall not be let out by contract. Why not, pray? They are so afraid that this prison labor may come in competition with somebody's labor that they must be kept in idleness, at the expense of the taxpayers of the State. This is not just. The question is, shall we maintain these prisoners in idleness because their labor may come in competition with somebody else's labor?

Mr. WELLIN. I don't advocate their being kept in idleness. I advocate their being put to work.

Mr. CAPLES. I concur with you there, but why do you put that contradiction in there, that they shall not be let by contract?

Mr. WELLIN. We want to change the present system, where they let out one third and allow the others to remain in idleness. We want to work them all.

Mr. CAPLES. I say the proposition to refuse to let them work on contract is an outrage upon the taxpayers. There is no justice, or wisdom, or sound public policy in such a course. Now, if the gentleman will take that dead fly out of the pottage, I will support the latter clause. The amendment covers the ground, and takes the dead fly out of the pottage. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

Mr. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: The amendment of the gentleman from Butte means simply nothing at all; it has no earthly meaning, and I think the Major knows it. If this provision is not put in the Constitution the Legislature would have power to go to work and cut off the whole contract system, or they can let out the whole number of prisoners by contract.

Mr. CAPLES. Will the gentleman allow me a question? The amendment is to strike out that prohibition declaring that prison labor shall not be let by contract; the amendment is to strike out that prohibition.

Mr. BEERSTECHER. Yes, sir; and even if you should say that the Legislature shall provide so and so, and the Legislature fails to do it, where will your remedy be? You cannot compel the Legislature to act: we cannot compel them to pass laws. Men have appealed in behalf of the suffering laboring people of San Francisco time and time again, during the last ten years, demanding that the Legislature inaugurate a system of labor, in order to abandon contract labor, and employ these prisoners directly by the State, and no result—the lobby was too strong, and the contractors prevailed.

Mr. BIGGS. Have you ever been engaged in lobbying? The charge has been made that it was in the interest of the lobby. I would like to know how the gentleman knows unless he has been engaged in it. I have been a member of the Legislature, and have never been lobbied upon this question. Unless he has been engaged in it, I don't think he knows anything about it.

Mr. BEERSTECHER. No, sir; I never have. If I ever went into it I would hire other men to do it for me. The interests of the laboring classes are directly in conflict with the interests of those who employ contract labor. I do not mean to say that the members of the Legislature, or the gentlemen who let these contracts, have been corruptly influenced in any way. I don't want to be understood as saying so; I do not say so. I do not believe there has been any corruption in that way. The result has been that the State has not directly embarked in the employment of convict labor, and there is no reason why it should not be done in this State. There are a number of things that could be manufactured at San Quentin which in nowise would compete with white labor in this State. We should keep free from competing with free white labor in this State. This is a young State. There are a great many things which we import directly from abroad, and bring across the plains and by ships from other States, which could as well be manufactured in this State. We have the shops to do it, we have the machinery to do it, and we have the men to do the work. We can build additional shops, if necessary. We can construct additional machinery, if necessary, and these men can be employed for the benefit of the State. As they are employed to-day, these hundreds of men are brought in direct competition with free white labor. They labor for fifty cents a day. The men in San Francisco who have families to support cannot compete successfully against such ruinous rates. They are manufacturing furniture there, and the consequence is that the furniture shops in San Francisco are closed, one after another. The deadly blow is being struck every day, and the day is not far distant when the furniture of this State will be made entirely by convict labor.

Mr. LARUE. How is it that the eastern manufacturers can ship furniture here and compete successfully?

MR. BEERSTECHER. How is it that hundreds of men are employed at the business to-day, while all the furniture shops in San Francisco are closing out? The sash, blind, and door factories are closing up by reason of the ruinous competition at San Quentin. There is a great departure from the original prison management of Europe. The original prison management was that prisoners were not to work at all. They remained in their cells. They were confined in solitary cells and were not allowed to work at all. Then there was a departure for the benefit of the prisoners, for their sanitary and moral condition. They were employed in some instances directly by the State for the benefit of the State, not all, but a part of them; in other instances the work was let out by contract. In some countries and States they are not let out at all. Under the old system the State was obliged to maintain and keep them. Under the system which we propose it would be but a few years before the State could employ them all for the benefit of the State. That is the way they ought to be employed, and not farmed out to contractors, thereby destroying our independent labor, and competing at ruinous rates with free white labor of the honest citizens of California.

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment of the member from San Francisco will be adopted. I believe this system of letting out the labor of convicts by contract has been greatly abused, and is against the best interests of the State. The prisoners are let out to contractors at a mere stipend. The contractors make a large profit out of their labor, and the people who live by these trades are greatly interfered with. I believe that the State Prison can be managed by the State, and the prisoners worked by the State to advantage, without interfering with free labor in any way. This whole contract system has been wrong. The labor has been let out for a mere nothing. The Legislature could have remedied the matter, but they have never done so. It has been a question of over twenty years standing, and while the Legislature might have remedied it, they have not done it. If we correct the evil here in the Constitution that will be the end of it. Let the State work its own labor to the best advantage possible, and that will be the solution of this question.

REMARKS OF MR. WELLIN.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. Chairman: I have to oppose the amendment of Major Biggs. He says, leave it to the Legislature. That is one of the reasons why I oppose it, because he wishes to leave it to the Legislature. We have been leaving it to the Legislature year after year, and what was done? When the lobby appeared we were left out in the cold, because we could not go there and lobby, and use money and influence with the Legislature. I know that as merely a matter of fact. Four or five years ago the Mechanics' State Council took this matter up and presented a memorial to the Legislature in regard to this matter, showing the cost of manufacturing doors, sashes, and blinds, and the enormous profits which the contractors were able to make. What was done with the memorial? It was distributed among the members, and that was the end of it. The manufacturers, who were making such large profits out of the labor of prisoners, came here and besieged the Legislature, and so they let the matter go. The State Prison was going behind then over two hundred thousand dollars. The gentleman from Sacramento seems to be very much worried at the idea of leaving these one thousand prisoners idle, as though we had advocated anything of the kind. We do not want them to be idle; we want them to work. But what we want is that all the prisoners shall work, and be earning something toward the support of the prison. We say there are over two million dollars paid out every year for grain bags by the farmers of this State, all of which could be manufactured by prison labor, without affecting free white labor in any way.

MR. BIGGS. If you establish a factory for grain bags won't you come in competition with other factories in this State?

MR. WELLIN. No, except those who employ Chinamen. There are no white men employed in the manufacture of jute bags at all. If it will come in competition with Chinamen, so much the better. You can also establish a factory for cordage and twine. We came here to the Legislature and tried to get them interested in the matter, but the lobby was more powerful, and we had to go back without having accomplished anything. We were neither able nor willing to come here and lobby the Legislature, and use money to influence them in passing laws useful to the people. We tried to get them to start a manufactory there, so as to make these prisoners earn part of their living. You can start a cordage factory there on a very small amount of money. You can arrange to work up all the coarse wools of the State.

MR. LARUE. Is the gentleman not aware that the Lieutenant Governor reported that it would cost about three hundred thousand dollars to put up machinery there to employ about thirty men?

MR. WELLIN. I don't know—there is one thing I wish to touch upon. When our committee proceeded to visit the prisons, which they did at their own expense, against the wish of some members of this Convention, who did not think the committee ought to go there. I don't know what was said down there, but it was known that an effort would be made in this Convention to abolish the system of contract labor, and when they came back their opinions seemed to have undergone a complete change. I don't know why—I have no idea. I cannot account for it. I do not propose to try. We need not name the manufactures that are to be established there. There are a number of them; I simply name one or two, in order to show what can be done. The power is there, and it can be run for the benefit of the State just as easily as it can for the benefit of private contractors.

REMARKS OF MR. FREUD.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: It is not my intention to say more than a word or two. The argument seems to be thoroughly exhausted. I was disappointed in reading the majority report, not to find anything in regard to this matter. The present contract system is one that has some very great evils in it. In the first place, there are the evils which have already been rehearsed here. It is a very serious source of corruption, not less in the department at San Quentin, where the prisoners are kept, than in the legislative halls of this State. If it was for no other reason than this, it would be sufficient to condemn it. In the second place, it brings this prison labor in competition with free white labor, and is a degrading element, equally as degrading as the Chinese, even more so. It is criminal labor against honest labor; the slave in conflict with the free man. It is for this reason, more than any other, that this contract system ought to be abolished, and I therefore hope the section, as reported by the minority, will receive the commendation of this body.

REMARKS OF MR. CONDON.

MR. CONDON. I am, sir, opposed to the amendment offered by Mr. Biggs. It virtually means nothing, from the very fact that the proposition providing that the State could employ laborers for the benefit of the State is now in operation under the contract system in San Quentin. It will be remembered, sir, and I believe there are some members of this Convention who were members of the Legislature in eighteen hundred and seventy-three, there was a proposition introduced at that time which provided that the State should work the prisoners on its own account. The proposition was modified, and raised the price of convict labor to the sum of one dollar and ten cents a day. It was passed by both houses. Governor Booth at that time, for some unknown reason, vetoed the bill. And strange to say, sir, at the time the proposition was proposed it met the hearty concurrence of every member of the committee. But, sir, another meeting was called, to which the Governor and Lieutenant Governor were invited, and there was a division of sentiment, sir, between those two eminent gentlemen. The Lieutenant Governor reasoned that this proposition was worthy of a chance—a trial—and claimed that it could not be on any account a detriment to the interests of the State. Now, sir, after examining the question extensively, from the fact that my attention had been called to it eight or nine years ago, and at that time I acted in the capacity of a foreman in the State Prison, I believe I can demonstrate beyond a doubt that the State can successfully employ the labor of these convicts for its own benefit. The contract system is, in the first place, destructive of prison discipline. Pillsbury, De Toqueville, and other writers, well informed on the subject, say so. De Toqueville says the contract system of prison labor will lead to a total ruin of prison discipline.

Judge Powers, in his report of eighteen hundred and twenty-eight, says this mode of employing convicts is attended with considerable danger to the discipline of the prison, in bringing the convicts in contact with contractors or their agents. It is a necessary consequence that the State must be loser by this contract system. These contractors get the labor of these convicts for about the same price they could get one citizen, and yet each convict performs at least three quarters as much work as a citizen laborer. So says Mr. Pillsbury.

Mr. Chairman, putting these elements together, the case stands thus: The labor of twelve convicts will cost no more than the labor of four citizens. Yet the convicts will do nine days' work while the others do four. Thus, every dollar paid to contract labor will produce as much as two dollars and twenty-five cents expended in citizen labor. The State must be the loser by the contract system, which sells the labor of these convicts at so much less than the same labor can be obtained elsewhere. It is a burden upon free laborers for the State to contract the labor of these prisoners. In the first place, the contract system amounts to an absolute monopoly, from the very fact that the contractor owns the power, the machinery, the stock, shafting, etc. They are established in their business, and no one else can come in. They can so regulate their prices as to keep out all other parties. Second, contractors sometimes combine to keep down the rates to be paid for prison labor. In the third place, when the Folsom Branch Prison was to be built, certain contractors paid the others certain stipulated sums, on condition that they decline to put in bids, thus obtaining the convicts at much lower price than they otherwise could. The Warden of Sing Sing Prison testified that he has no doubt but the convict labor can be worked by the State to a much greater advantage. Mr. Seymour, ex-Warden, says he has no doubt that if the contract system had been abolished he could have managed the prison labor himself, and made them earn considerable revenue for the State. I could quote from a number of eminent men, who have had a great deal of experience in this matter, if I had the time—Miller, Woods, Brockway, and others. In the Clinton Prison, the contract system has been abolished. The result of this is that instead of being at a cost of thirty thousand dollars a year, the prison is a source of considerable revenue, exceeding the expenditures by about three thousand dollars. Mr. Carter, one of the Wisconsin Commissioners, says that "the average number of convicts last year was one hundred and ten, only sixty-three of whom were employed, and they earned more than twenty-five thousand dollars," which shows that these sixty-three men earned one dollar and thirty-six cents a day. If the labor of the convicts had been let out to contractors, say at sixty cents a day, they would have earned only eleven thousand three hundred and forty dollars. Supposing that they had lost no time, here would have been a loss to the State of fourteen thousand three hundred and eighty-seven dollars. Such a system would be a benefit also to the convicts themselves. There is no question in my mind as to the utility, as to the practicability of that system. Thus, even in England the contract system has been abolished. But there is a provision there that requires that every Warden, and every officer of the prison, must be a practical mechanic. This can be done in the State of California, and I hope and trust that the amendment offered by Mr. Biggs may not prevail. I will call your attention further to the fact that public opinion has been well developed on this question. There has been petition after petition sent here from the mechanics of this State, asking that a section of this character be inserted in the Constitution. I presented one myself, and it was referred to the Committee of the Whole, but it has never been brought forward. I hope we will adopt the section as proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco.

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say one word in behalf of the committee, in the absence of the Chairman. This proposition was before the committee, and I will say was favorably considered by the committee. But it was shown to our satisfaction that if this proposition was adopted it would virtually throw the prisoners out of employment there for a number of years, for the reason that the machinery necessary to carry out this project would cost a very large sum of money. I believe it is estimated at something like three hundred thousand dollars.

MR. WELLIN. Nearly all the machinery necessary can be got in one week.

MR. VAN DYKE. For one, I will say that I am decidedly averse to the contract system, and I am in favor of any project that will abolish the system.

MR. CONDON. I want to ask you a question. I want to ask you if, in the committee, did not you express yourself to the effect that you were entirely in favor of the contract system, and was not Governor Johnson in favor of this proposition?

MR. VAN DYKE. If the gentleman will keep his seat he will find out. I say, for one—and I believe I speak the sentiments of the majority of the committee—I am opposed to the contract system. I know that it has been a source of corruption in this State. But the difficulty is that you cannot abolish it in a day; you cannot abolish it in a year, unless you propose to keep your prisoners in idleness for a time, because, as it was shown to the committee, it will require the expenditure of a very large amount of money, and a great deal of time, to put the necessary machinery in position. It is true we have the power necessary to drive the machinery. That is all. No matter how much ready money we might have, it requires time. For that reason, and for that reason only, the committee deemed it unwise to put this clause into the Constitution, because the Legislature can provide for it just as well as we can. It is fairly to be supposed that the Legislature will carry out the will of the people in this respect. I am perfectly willing to give an expression in favor of abolishing the system of contract labor at an early period, as soon as it can be done. But I am opposed to any proposition that will keep the prisoners in idleness for a year or more, until the necessary preparations can be made. That is the reason I object to this section.

MR. WELLIN. As a matter of information, I will state that, having the shafting, power, and everything of that kind, the machinery could be bought in San Francisco, and set up in two or three days, enough to supply one shop.

MR. VAN DYKE. The gentleman need not address his argument to me, because I am in favor of abolishing the system as soon as possible, but I am opposed to allowing the prisoners to remain in idleness.

MR. AYERS. I wish to ask the gentleman, is there really any objection, any difficulty in keeping the prisoners at work, under the contract system, until such time as a change can be made?

MR. VAN DYKE. Certainly not. They are there under contract now. If you adopt this clause, you at once shut down the employment, at an expense of a very large sum of money. I would consent to an amendment saying, that at the end of five years from the time the Constitution takes effect, prisoners shall not be employed by contract. That will leave ample time for the State to get the necessary machinery in—or, say three years; you could not do it in one year, unless you borrowed the money. The State would require time to place all the machinery in there. In its present shape, I am opposed to it. The same object can be accomplished by the Legislature.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I beg to suggest to the Convention, under the circumstances, if it is resolved to change the contract system, we had better take until to-morrow morning to revise this proposition, and make it practicable. Now, this section is to go into effect from the time it is adopted. If a contract runs out, there is no power to make another contract. There is, consequently, no power to keep the prisoners at work, unless we authorize the Governor to borrow money; there will be no possibility of getting any between this time and the meeting of the next Legislature. Now, the State owns motive power, but not the tools and machinery. There must be some time taken to purchase this machinery and put it in position. At present there is no authority to purchase it. The Constitution cannot put the scheme into practical working effect without the aid of legislation.

MR. MORELAND. I have an amendment.

"Insert 'after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and eighty-two.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Butte.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the section, proposed by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland.

MR. WELLIN. I accept the amendment.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say that this is an experiment that this State will regret. It will cost this State millions of dollars before we get through with it. The gentleman will live to see that I am correct.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I do not see the danger that the gentleman apprehends, because we can gradually introduce the necessary machinery for this purpose. It does seem to me that this contract system is perfectly infamous, and has been for years.

MR. REYNOLDS. It could not be any worse.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Adopted.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the committee now rise, report back the article to the Convention, and recommend that it be adopted.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: I am instructed by the Committee of the Whole to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on State Institutions and Public Buildings, have adopted sundry amendments thereto, and recommend its adoption as amended.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that the article as amended be printed.

So ordered.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. HUESTIS. I move we do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at five o'clock P. M., the Convention stood adjourned until nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M., to-morrow.

ONE HUNDRED AND ELEVENTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Thursday, January 16th, 1879.

The Convention met in regular session at nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Leave of absence for two days was granted Mr. Prouty.

THE JOURNAL.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. President: I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, and the same approved.

Carried.

PETITION.

The President presented the following petition, signed by a large number of citizens of Colusa County, asking the exemption of certain property from taxation:

To the Honorable J. P. Hoge, President, and to the members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: Your petitioners, citizens of the State of California, and residents of Colusa County, most respectfully request your honorable body to exempt from taxation all property used exclusively for charitable, educational, and church purposes.

Laid on the table, to be considered with the article on revenue and taxation.

HARBORS, TIDE WATERS, AND NAVIGABLE STREAMS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Harbors, Tide Waters, and Navigable Streams.

The motion prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section one.

EMINENT DOMAIN.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 1. The right of eminent domain is hereby declared to exist in the State to all frontages on the navigable waters of this State.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendment to section one, the Secretary will read section two.

RIGHT OF WAY.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 2. No individual, partnership, or corporation, claiming or possessing the frontage or tidal lands of a harbor, bay, inlet, estuary, or other navigable water in this State, shall be permitted to exclude the right of way to such water whenever it is required for any public purpose; and the Legislature shall enact such laws as will give the most liberal construction to this provision, so that access to the navigable waters of this State shall be always attainable, and that the people shall not be shut out from the same.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert after the word 'purpose,' in the fourth line, as follows: 'nor to destroy or obstruct the free navigation of such waters.'"

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: If I understand that amendment right there is nothing wrong about it, but it is unnecessary. I believe it gives no guarantee except what is contained in the Act of Congress, admitting this State into the Union. I just merely called the attention of the committee to this fact. I do not see any objection to the report, and I do not see any use for it.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: The committee were well aware of that fact, but in order to make it doubly sure we inserted it there. The amendment will do no harm, and as a positive declaration may do a great deal of good in preventing unnecessary litigation.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: As a matter of fact, this report has never been printed. I have never heard of it till this morning. I submit that there are some things in this report that require further examination.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I have not had an opportunity to examine this report. The very first section of this report I do not believe there is a member of this Convention understands. It strikes me we had better postpone the consideration of this until members have had an opportunity to examine it. Now, this first section says "the right of eminent domain is hereby declared to exist in the State to all frontages on the navigable waters of this State." Now, if any gentleman on this floor comprehends what that means, he has more comprehension than I have, that is all.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. Chairman: I think the article conflicts somewhat with the article under which California was admitted into the Union.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I will state that the reason why the committee inserted the section was that the right of eminent domain had been exercised by quasi-public corporations, by virtue of the authority of the State, in a great many cases, and the State might hereafter want access to the navigable waters through the lands that had been so granted.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no further amendments to section two, the Secretary will read section three.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 3. All tide lands within two miles of any incorporated city or town in this State, and fronting on the waters of any harbor, estuary, bay, or inlet used for the purposes of navigation, shall be withheld from grant or sale to private persons, partnerships, or corporations; but sites for wharves, warehouses, or other necessary incidents to commerce, may, upon application to the Board of Supervisors of the counties in which such sites are situated, and after due public notice of such application, be leased by such Boards for a term of years, to such persons, partnerships, or corporations; provided, that nothing in this section shall apply to the tide lands of the Bay of San Francisco.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike that section out. I am satisfied that it is dangerous, because there may be millions of acres of land that may be reserved. I move to strike it out.

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. I hope the motion will not prevail. The provision in the commencement of this section is one which now exists in the Code. It withdraws the marsh and tide lands from sale within two miles of any incorporated city or town in the State. The object of this section is to prevent parties from coming up to Sacramento and obtaining title to tide lands which are necessary for the purpose of ingress and egress to the people from various parts of the State—I was going to say surreptitiously getting control over them in fee from the State—and the people who are interested in having ingress and egress over these lands, or through these lands, know nothing about it. Now, sir, we propose to place the authority of obtaining title to such lands, as are within two miles of any incorporated town, in the Board of Supervisors, who shall be authorized to lease these lands for such purposes as are designated in this section, namely: for purposes incident to commerce. Gentlemen will concede that the local Boards of Supervisors will understand exactly the requirements of the public in regard to these tide lands; and they will not be apt to lease or to give a franchise to these lands unless the public interests require it. I hope that the motion will not prevail.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: Tide lands belong to the State on the condition of reclamation. Now, the State has perfect power to open highways where she pleases, and has always exercised it. What more or better right does it require on a public stream than anywhere else? The State can make a road over my lands whenever it chooses to reach either tide water or a town. This section would tie up this property, prevent its reclamation, and do nobody any good, that I can see.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I am just as much in favor of preserving the rights of the people to frontages as anybody in the world: but it does strike me if this constitutional provision is adopted there will be no such thing as the reclamation of these tide lands for the purpose of constructing towns. Now, we do not desire to tie ourselves up in such a way as to prevent the increase of population on the borders of our bay or ocean. The idea that the land shall be held in that way, so that it can be granted out to private parties under such circumstances, seems to me to be impolitic, to say the least of it; that land shall be reserved two miles back from the bay, simply because it is tide land. I am perfectly willing to place restrictions in every way to protect these frontages, but to say that all tide lands within two miles of any incorporated city or town in this State shall be withheld from grant or sale, it seems to me is not proper in a constitutional provision.

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section will not be stricken out. If there is any one abuse greater than another that I think the people of the State of California has suffered at the hands of their lawmaking power, it is the abuse that they have received in the granting out and disposition of the lands belonging to the State, and I hope the Convention will make such restrictions upon that subject as it can; at least to remedy the abuse in so far as it can be remedied with reference to the little land yet left to the jurisdiction of the State. But this section ought to be amended so that the lease should not run longer than twenty years, and the power to reach tide water and navigable streams should be left so in the hands of the State that it would not take a five or ten years' lawsuit in order to reach the navigable water of the State. The grants have been made now to the swamp lands, and the tide lands, and the marsh and overflowed lands, and they have been allowed to be taken in such vast quantities by these corporations that now the people are hedged off entirely from reaching tide water, navigable water, or salt water. I do not want it so that they can be placed in the hands of corporations in such a way that they cannot be recovered unless at the expense of a vast lawsuit and years of time consumed in it. I hope that the declaration contained in section three will stand, and that it will be amended so that the lease shall not be for more than twenty years.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I utterly dissent from the language of the two first sections, and do not see how they can be adopted at all; but as to the third section, I hope that the Convention will retain it, with such modification as the Convention may think right. I should be glad if the gentlemen would get out of the habit of talking about corporations in connection with everything. The trouble is, that these tide lands are being taken up now simply for the purpose of speculation, and of imposing upon the people who own the land back of them. I have just had a little experience in it. A short time ago a man took up two hundred and twenty acres of this land that is not worth a copper, in front of my land in Marin County, and then wrote me a letter, that for so much money I can buy him out. What does he do it for? He has done it on purpose to compel me to pay him six or seven hundred dollars for a day's journey to Sacramento. His little project, however, will fall through, for he will never get a cent for it. The purpose is, if I want to go off shore, he is going to compel me to buy a mud flat in order to get out to sea. It is merely to extort money, and to impose upon people who happen to own a little land. If a man wants to ship wood off his lands, he finds some fellow has taken up a strip of this tide land in front of him, if it is not more than twenty feet, and can extort any amount of money for the privilege of getting a scow up to take off his wood. It becomes a source of evil, without doing any good. It strikes me that the principle of the third section ought to be adopted. If twenty years is a judicious time, why, then, limit the lease to that time.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the section will not be stricken out. The remarks of the gentleman from Marin very ably set forth why it should not be stricken out; and I beg leave to disagree with the gentlemen from Santa Clara with regard to the section. It may not be, in your neighborhood, necessary, but in many parts of the State it is necessary. Now, whether these rights exist for individuals or corporations, makes no difference. These frontages are held in this State to the exclusion of the lawful traffic across these tide lands to the salt water. In the County of Los Angeles a large frontage has been surveyed around so as to exclude the commerce of the county from building piers, wharves, or warehouses. It is necessary that these things should be boldly and positively met, so that there may be no doubt; that the people may not be led into traps. I hope the motion to strike out will not prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. CASSERLY.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. Chairman: This matter has come up somewhat unexpectedly to me, but as a contribution to the better understanding of the whole subject, I call the attention of members of the Convention to the provision of the Act of Congress admitting California into the Union. The provision is this:

"And that all the navigable waters within the State shall be common highways, and forever free, as well to the inhabitants of said State as to the citizens of the United States, without any tax, impost, or duty therefor."

I take it for granted that it is familiar law to most of us that the lands between low and high-water mark became vested in the State of California, subject to that provision. As I said, I merely rose to suggest that contribution to a better understanding of a subject which has come up somewhat unexpectedly to me, and, I believe, to most of the Convention.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: In common with most of the Convention this article has come up very unexpectedly to me. As to this section three, I am very much impressed with the idea that if we adopt it that it will have the appearance of constitutional legislation in favor of private interest. Now, sir, I have no doubt that there has been great abuses in the disposition of tide lands as well as swamp lands and other State lands; but because there have been abuses in the southern portion of the State that is no reason why there should not be any distribution of State lands within two miles of the navigable waters of the State.

MR. AYERS. I beg to correct the gentleman. The section says within two miles of any incorporated city or town.

MR. MCCALLUM. The section reads:

"All tide lands within two miles of any incorporated city or town in this State, and fronting on the waters of any harbor, estuary, bay, or inlet, used for the purposes of navigation, shall be withheld from grant or sale to private persons, partnerships, or corporations; but sites for wharves, warehouses, or other necessary incidents to commerce may, upon application to the Board of Supervisors of the counties in which such sites are situated, and after due public notice of such application, be leased by such Boards for a term of years to such persons, partnerships, or corporations; provided, that nothing in this section shall apply to the tide lands of the Bay of San Francisco."

Yes; within two miles of any incorporated city and town within this State. In a very populous county—if not now there likely will be some that I could name—there might be towns all along where these tide waters are, and it would certainly exclude the disposition of these lands along the whole line of tide water. The Legislature of course ought not to dispose of these lands without proper guards and conditions to prevent frauds, but to say that they shall not be disposed of at all is virtually to give them away; virtually to say that the State shall have no benefit, except with reference to these leases. I am not familiar with these tide lands, but I understand that some of these tide lands may be very valuable for certain agricultural purposes. I presume that the time may come when they may be disposed of at a considerable price per acre. If this were a Legislature I would coöperate with the gentleman from Los Angeles as far as I could in order to throw any proper guards around the disposition of these lands; but this proposition may be regarded in this light: persons having tracts of land lying back of these tide lands, it is certainly a matter of considerable private accommodation to them that they should be kept public forever, and I apprehend that that view possibly might be taken by some of our constituents, and be regarded as private interests. I think it ought not to be put into the Constitution of the State.

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I consider that the provisions of section three are perfectly in harmony with what I believe to be the sentiment of this Convention. This section, if the gentleman will pay attention to it, only withdraws such lands as are within two miles of any incorporated town. These tide lands generally are necessary for the commerce of the State—invariably, I may say. Now, sir, it seems to me that has been the policy of the State heretofore, for that very law now exists in the Code. It has been found beneficial, and we wish to make it permanent by placing it in the Constitution. In my opinion, the whole State would be benefited by the Supervisors of each county having control over these water frontages; it is necessary that they should. The people know their wants. The commerce of each locality will be adapted to that locality, and the Board of Supervisors will know when to grant a lease, and when not to. These lands are already reserved in the State——

MR. MCCALLUM. Is it your proposition that these lands should never be disposed of under any circumstances?

MR. AYERS. Yes; that is my proposition, that they be withheld from sale. The gentleman will recollect that tide lands are not marsh lands; tide lands are lands six feet under water—that is the average, high and low tides.

MR. MCCALLUM. Where do you get that definition?

MR. AYERS. I find that in the decision of the Supreme Court, by Judge Shafter.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I hope the motion to strike out will prevail. I think it is a dangerous section.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the section.

The motion was lost, on a division, by a vote of 34 ayes to 54 noes.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I now send up my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by inserting in line six, between the words 'of' and 'years,' the words 'not exceeding twenty.'"

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: It will then read: "But sites for wharves, warehouses, or other necessary incidents to commerce, may, upon application to the Boards of Supervisors of the counties in which such sites are situated, and after due public notice of such application, be leased by such Boards for a term of not exceeding twenty years, to such persons, partnerships, or corporations," etc. I desire to say nothing more than that I think twenty years is long enough for a lease to run in cases of this kind.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Monterey, Mr. Wyatt.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report this article back to the Convention, and recommend its adoption.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the article on harbors, tide waters, and navigable streams, have amended the same, and report it back with the recommendation that it be adopted.

MR. AYERS. Mr. President: I move that the usual number of copies of this article be printed.

The motion prevailed.

THE PRESIDENT. The next in order on the General File is the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organizations.

The following is the draft submitted by the committee:

ARTICLE —.

CITIES, COUNTIES, AND TOWNS.

SECTION 1. The several counties, as they now exist, are hereby recognized as legal subdivisions of this State.

SEC. 2. County seats shall not be removed by special law, but such removals shall be provided for by general law. No county seat shall be removed unless two thirds of the qualified electors of the county, voting on the proposition at a general election, shall vote in favor of such removal. A proposition of removal shall not be submitted in the same county more than once in four years.

SEC. 3. No new county shall be established which shall reduce any county to a population of less than eight thousand; nor shall a new county be formed containing a less population than five thousand; nor shall any line thereof pass within five miles of the county seat of any county proposed to be divided; nor shall a county be divided, or have any portion taken therefrom, unless a majority of all the qualified electors of the county or counties affected, voting at a general election, shall vote therefor. New counties, when created, or portions of a county, when added to another county, shall be liable for their just proportion of all debts and liabilities, then existing, of the county or counties out of which they are respectively formed or taken.

SEC. 4. The Legislature shall establish a system of county governments which shall be uniform throughout the State; and by general laws shall provide for township organization, under which any county may organize whenever a majority of the qualified electors of such county, voting at a general election, shall so determine; and, whenever a county shall adopt township organization, the assessment and collection of the revenue shall be made, and the business of such county, and the local affairs of the several townships therein, shall be managed and transacted in the manner prescribed by such general laws.

SEC. 5. The Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election or appointment, in the several counties, of Boards of Supervisors, Sheriffs, County Clerks, District Attorneys, and such other county, township, and municipal officers as public convenience may require, and shall prescribe their duties and fix their compensation. It shall regulate the salaries and fees of all county officers, in proportion to duties, and for this purpose may classify the counties by population; and it shall provide for the strict accountability of county and township officers for all fees which may be collected by them, and for all public and municipal moneys which may be paid to them or officially come into their possession.

SEC. 6. Corporations, for municipal purposes, shall not be created by special laws, but the Legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns; and cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated may become organized under and subject to such general laws. Cities and towns may become incorporated under general laws, whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith.

SEC. 7. City and county governments may be merged and consolidated into one municipal government, with one set of officers, and may be incorporated under general laws providing for the incorporation and organization of corporations for municipal purposes. The provisions of this Constitution applicable to cities, and also those applicable to counties, so far as not inconsistent or not prohibited to cities, shall be applicable to such consolidated government. In consolidated city and county governments, of more than one hundred thousand population, there shall be two Boards of Supervisors or houses of legislation—one of which, to consist of twelve persons, shall be elected by general ticket from the city and county at large, and shall hold office for the term of four years, but shall be so classified that after the first election only six shall be elected every two years; the other, to consist of twelve persons, shall be elected every two years, and shall hold office for two years. Any casual vacancy in the office of Supervisor in either Board shall be filled by the Mayor.

SEC. 8. No person shall be eligible to a county or city office unless he has been a citizen and resident within such county or city for two years next preceding his election or appointment to an office therein.

SEC. 9. Any city having a population of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants may frame a charter for its own government, consistent with and subject to the Constitution and laws of this State, by causing a Board of fifteen freeholders, who shall have been for at least five years qualified electors thereof, to be elected by the qualified voters of such city, at any general or special election, whose duty it shall be, within ninety days after such election, to prepare and propose a charter for such city, which shall be signed in duplicate by the members of such Board, or a majority of them, and returned, one copy thereof to the Mayor, or other chief executive officer of such city, and the other to the Recorder of deeds of the county. Such proposed charter shall then be published in two daily papers of largest general circulation in such city for at least twenty days, and within not less than thirty days after such publication it shall be submitted to the qualified electors of such city at a general or special election, and if a majority of such qualified electors voting thereat shall ratify the same, it shall, at the end of sixty days thereafter, become the charter of such city, or if such city be consolidated with a county in government, then of such city and county, and shall become the organic law thereof, and supersede any existing charter and all amendments thereof, and all special laws inconsistent with such charter. A copy of such charter, certified by the Mayor or chief executive officer, and authenticated by the seal of such city, setting forth the submission of such charter to the electors, and its ratification by them, shall be made in duplicate, and deposited, one in the office of the Secretary of State, the other, after being recorded in the office of the Recorder of Deeds of the county, among the archives of the city, and thereafter all Courts shall take judicial notice thereof. The charter so ratified may be amended at intervals of not less than two years, by proposals therefor, submitted by the legislative authority of the city to the qualified voters thereof, at a general or special election held at least sixty days after the publication of such proposals, and ratified by at least three fifths of the qualified electors voting thereat. In submitting any such charter, or amendment thereto, any alternative article or proposition may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to others.

SEC. 10. The compensation or fees of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office; nor shall the term of any such officer be extended beyond the period for which he is elected or appointed.

SEC. 11. No county, city, town, or other public or municipal corporation, nor the inhabitants thereof, nor the property therein, shall be released or discharged from their or its proportionate share of taxes to be levied for State purposes, nor shall commutation for such taxes be authorized in any form whatsoever.

SEC. 12. Any county, city, town, or township, may make and enforce within their respective limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws.

SEC. 13. Taxes for county, city, town, school, and other local purposes must be levied on all subjects and objects of taxation. In addition to that which may be levied for the payment of the principal and interest of existing indebtedness, the annual rate on property shall not exceed the following: For county purposes, in counties having two million dollars or less, shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation; in counties having six million dollars, and under ten million dollars, such rate shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation; and in counties having ten million dollars or more such rate shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation. For city and town purposes such annual rate on property in incorporated cities and towns shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation; and in any city and county with consolidated government, such rate shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars valuation.

SEC. 14: The Legislature shall have no power to impose taxes upon counties, cities, towns, or other public or municipal corporations, or upon the inhabitants or property thereof, for county, city, town, or other municipal purposes, but may, by general laws, vest in the corporate authorities thereof the power to assess and collect taxes for such purposes.

SEC. 15. The Legislature shall not delegate to any special commission, private corporation, company, association, or individual, any power to make, control, appropriate, supervise, or in any way interfere with, any county, city, town, or municipal improvement, money, property, or effects, whether held in trust or otherwise, or to levy taxes or assessments, or perform any municipal functions whatever.

SEC. 16. No State office shall be continued or created in any county, city, town, or other municipality, for the inspection, measurement, or graduation of any merchandise, manufacture, or commodity; but such county, city, town, or municipality may, when authorized by general law, and the public interest demands it, appoint such officers.

SEC. 17. Private property shall not be taken or sold for the payment of the corporate debt of any political or municipal corporation.

SEC. 18. All moneys, assessments, and taxes, belonging to or collected for the use of any county, city, town, or other public or municipal corporation, coming into the hands of any officer thereof, shall, immediately on receipt thereof, be deposited with the Treasurer, or other legal depositary, to the credit of such city, town, or other corporation respectively, for the benefit of the funds to which they respectively belong.

SEC. 19. The making of profit out of county, city, town, or public school money, or using the same for any purpose not authorized by law, by any officer having the possession or control thereof, shall be a felony, and shall be prosecuted and punished as prescribed by law.

SEC. 20. No county, city, town, township, Board of Education, or school district, shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner, or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for them respectively for such year, without the assent of two thirds of the voters thereof, voting at an election to be held for that purpose; and in cases requiring such assent, no indebtedness shall be incurred (except by a county, to erect a Court House or Jail) to an amount, excluding existing indebtedness, in the aggregate exceeding five per centum on the value of the taxable property therein, to be ascertained by the assessment next before the last assessment for State and county purposes, previous to the incurring such indebtedness; and unless, before or at the time of incurring such indebtedness, provision shall be made for the collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such indebtedness as it falls due, and also to constitute a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof within forty years from the time of contracting the same.

SEC. 21. No county, city, town, or other public or municipal corporation, by a vote of its citizens or otherwise, shall become a subscriber to the capital stock, or a stockholder in any corporation, association, or company, or make any appropriation, or donation, or loan its credit to, or in aid of any person, corporation, association, company, or institution.

SEC. 22. No law shall be passed by the City Legislature granting the right to construct and operate a railroad within any city, town, village, or on any public street or highway thereof, without the consent of the municipal or other proper or local authorities having the control of such street or highway proposed to be occupied by such railroad.

SEC. 23. In any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with artificial light and water, any company duly incorporated by the laws of this State shall, under the direction of the Superintendent of Streets of said city, have the privilege of disturbing and using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein, and of making connections therewith, so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants either with gaslight or other illuminating light, or with fresh water for domestic and all other purposes, for which the same or either may be used, upon the conditions following: Such company shall make good all damages to such streets and thoroughfares, except necessarily occasioned by the reasonable use thereof, and be liable to such city and its inhabitants therefor. Such company introducing and supplying gaslight, or other light, and fresh water, or either, shall furnish the same, so far as necessary and required, free and without charge, to all public buildings, institutions, and school houses belonging to such city, and used for municipal purposes; and such company introducing and supplying water shall also furnish the same free, and without charge, to the Fire Department, and for the extinguishment of fires. Each company, its property and franchise, shall be liable to such city and its inhabitants for the performance of these conditions.

SEC. 24 In counties or cities having more than one hundred thousand inhabitants, no person shall, at the same time, be a State officer and a city or county officer, nor hold two city or county offices.

SEC. 25. No public work or improvement of any description whatsoever shall be made or done, in any city, in, upon, or about the streets thereof, or otherwise, the cost and expense of which is made chargeable or may be assessed upon private property by special assessment, unless an estimate of such cost and expense shall be made, and an assessment in proportion to benefits, on the property to be affected or benefited, and shall be collected and paid into the city treasury before such work or improvement shall be commenced, or any contract for letting or doing the same authorized or performed.

SEC. 26. The Legislature shall not pass any local or special law in the cases following:

Regulating the affairs of counties, cities, towns, townships, wards, city or county Boards of Education, school districts, or other political or municipal corporation or subdivision of the State;

Authorizing the laying out, opening, altering, maintaining, or vacating roads, highways, streets, alleys, town plats, or parks;

Relating to cemeteries, graveyards, or public grounds not of the State;

Locating or changing county seats;

Incorporating cities, towns, or villages, or changing their charters;

Creating offices, or prescribing the powers and duties of officers in counties, cities, towns, townships, or school districts;

Regulating the fees or extending the powers and duties of county or municipal officers;

Regulating the management and maintenance of public schools, the building or repairing of school or Court Houses, and raising of money for such purposes;

Extending the time for the assessment or collection of county, city, or other municipal taxes, or otherwise relieving any Assessor or Collector of county or city taxes from the due performance of the official duties, or their securities from liability;

Legalizing the unauthorized or invalid acts of any officer or agent of any county or municipality thereof;

Directing the payment of money out of the treasury, or by any officer, of any county, city, or town, without the consent of such county, city, and town;

Directing the payment of money from out of the treasury, or by any officer of, or creating any liability against, a county, city, town, or any public or municipal corporation, without its consent.

MR. WYATT. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, to take into consideration the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. President: The Chairman of that committee is absent. It is a very important report, and I would be very glad to have the Chairman of that committee, Judge Hager, present, when it is considered. He is now absent, owing to sickness in his family.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. President: I saw Judge Hager very recently in San Francisco, and spoke to him upon the subject of this report. He informed me that he had sickness in two families, one in one house and one in another. Under these circumstances I am unable to say when he will be here. I shall telegraph him to-day on the subject.

MR. GRACE. May I ask if the gentleman is a Mormon—having two families?

MR. CASSERLY. I hope that my friend will give the time of grace to Judge Hager.

MR. WYATT. Mr. President: I made the motion for the purpose of bringing the subject before the Convention, to ascertain what the state or condition of that report was in with reference to anybody acting as Chairman, or Chairman pro tem., in the consideration of the matter; but if it is the desire of the Convention to pass it over I have no objection.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I move to amend by taking up the report of the Committee of the Whole on preamble and bill of rights.

THE PRESIDENT. The motion is not amendable in that way.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: It seems to me that if Judge Hager's family is sick there are other members on that committee who can explain their report. Besides Judge Hager, there are on that committee Messrs. Fawcett, McFarland, Barbour, Hale, Hall, Schell, Tinnin, Reddy, Rolfe, Barnes, Holmes, Mills, McCallum, and Freeman. I think it is as well to proceed with the report of that committee now as any other time. That and the report of the Committee on Education I consider to be the only other reports of importance.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I hope the Convention will not force that report upon the Committee of the Whole at the present time. The Chairman is absent, and more than half of the committee are absent. I see that the Chairman of the Committee on Education is here; why not take up his report?

MR. LAMPSON. Mr. President: I hope that the committee will not take this up in Judge Hager's absence. I think that, in justice to him, it should not be taken up at this time.

MR. FAWCETT. Mr. President: I also hope that if there is anything else that the Convention can take up, it will postpone the consideration of the report of this committee, on account of the absence of Judge Hager. I am unalterably opposed to a large portion of the provisions of this report. I am opposed to at least three quarters of the provisions contained in this report, and, in justice to Judge Hager, who is an ardent supporter of it, I think it ought to be postponed.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. President: There is another report on the file which has been reported back by this same Committee on City, County, and Township Organization, number five hundred and twenty-two upon this file, relative to local option. Five hundred and twenty-one is the report relative to city, county, and township organization; five hundred and twenty-two is relative to local option. It is reported back to this Convention without recommendation, and, as a matter of course, the committee say by that that they have no special fight to make on it. If it is not proper for us to take up the other report, it is perfectly proper that we take up that subject at this time.

MR. WEST. Mr. President: I am of the opinion, sir, that the question of local option would properly be considered in connection with that of city, county, and township organization. It would properly belong to section twelve of that report, and should be considered with the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I hope that the matter of local option will not be taken up at this time. I understand that the committee are about equally divided on the subject of local option, and a contest is anticipated upon that subject, and it would be no more than fair if they desire to take anything up, that they should take up the report of the committee and let local option follow the report, because I think that the consideration of local option would certainly be largely affected by the adoption or the rejection of the report of the committee. In fact, the adoption of certain sections of the report virtually dispose of the question of local option without any further consideration.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: It is very evident that if we do not go on with these reports in their order we will never get through. If we wait for absent members of committees, who go home, or get sick, or go home and stay and not return, we will never get through with this business. We must take things in their order if we propose to finish our work.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: Part of the members of the next committee are absent, and if it is desirable to get through with these articles in Committee of the Whole I do not see what other course we can take than to follow the order of the file. If we deviate, it requires more than a majority vote. If any other committee was ready to go on it might be well enough, but the other committee is in just as bad a condition as this. This is a long article, and will require a great deal of consideration. We certainly can commence it, and there are other members of the committee who have considered the matter, and can defend the report. I hope we will take it up in its order.

MR. GRACE. As it seems that there is nothing before this Convention, I now move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of further considering the right of female suffrage. It will have to come up at some future time.

MR. AYERS. Mr. President: I hope that we shall proceed in order in this Convention. If gentlemen who are Chairmen of committees are absent, the best way to bring them here is to start in on their report, and they will come up here on double quick time.

MR. BROWN. Mr. President: I am in favor of going on. I like to see politeness and formality, but business must be attended to. I am under the impression it is so regarded by the members here who have been attending to business strictly. Now, this matter may be delayed indefinitely, for we hear that the gentleman has two sick families to attend to. We do not know when he will be here at all. We have paid the gentleman sufficient respect in discussing this matter so long, to the delay of the important business of this Convention. I am anxious that we should go on with the regular order.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: Is an amendment in order?

THE PRESIDENT. No, sir.

MR. STEDMAN. Then, sir, I move that we take up the report of the Committee on Education. It cannot be urged that the Chairman is not present. Now, sir, Judge Hager has a peculiar interest in this report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization. He is Chairman of the committee, and I know that he is anxious that it should not be taken up in his absence. I understand that he will return to this Convention in a day or two.

MR. WINANS. I object to the amendment.

THE PRESIDENT. The amendment is not in order, and therefore not before the Convention. The question is on the motion that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section one.

ORGANIZED COUNTIES.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 1. The several counties, as they now exist, are hereby recognized as legal subdivisions of this State.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendment to section one, the Secretary will read section two.

REMOVAL OF COUNTY SEATS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 2. County seats shall not be removed by special law, but such removals shall be provided for by general law. No county seat shall be removed unless two thirds of the qualified electors of the county, voting on the proposition at a general election, shall vote in favor of such removal. A proposition of removal shall not be submitted in the same county more than once in four years.

MR. HERRINGTON. I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section two by striking out all of line one, and down to and including the word 'law,' in line two."

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: The object of omitting that clause is that it is found in the report of the Committee on Legislative Department as amended. This same provision is there made. I believe it is subdivision twenty-one of section twenty-five of the article on legislative department.

MR. MCCALLUM. There is no question but what it is covered by the article on legislative department. Section twenty-five of that article provides that the Legislature shall not pass special laws in certain cases, and among them is changing county seats.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section two, and I do it for the reason that I think the subject is amply provided for in the twenty-fifth section of the article on legislative department, and that this is only duplicating it. I object to it on the further ground that it is harsh in saying that it would require a two-third vote. That is equivalent to saying that a county seat should not be removed at all.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I am in hopes that that section will not be stricken out. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara I think is just and right. I hope this section will not be stricken out unless gentlemen want to make county seats migratory, moving them about on wheels every two years.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section will not be stricken out. It is evident to all that the first part of the section is not necessary, but I think the Constitution should say that the county seat should not be removed without a two-third vote, and that we should prohibit the Legislature from passing a general law whereby the question should be submitted oftener than once in four years.

MR. MOFFAT. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section will not be stricken out. We have been put to the expense and trouble of two especial elections, just to gratify a few men in the southern part of our county. If they are defeated they will try the thing over again whenever they have a chance. We are against moving our county seat. They beat us on one election, and we got a rehearing and set the thing back again. Now, then, the people of our county are opposed to moving the county seat, but there are a certain set of people in the southern part of the county who are in favor of its removal, and they colonize into our county from fifty to two or three hundred, in order to defeat the wishes of the people of our county. This section prohibits that change without a two-third vote. I am satisfied that it is right, and I hope that the section will stand as it is.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Is an amendment in order to add to the section?

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Monterey to strike out section two.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I am in hopes that section will not be stricken out. We know that there are a kind of emotional sensations gotten up frequently that prevail over the people to a considerable extent, and consequently that county seats have been almost on wheels. This would protect the people to a great extent against such excitements. I think that such excitements should be guarded against by law, and this constitutional provision being established, would do that thing.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. Chairman: I hope that this section will be adopted just as it stands. It seems to me, sir, that it will protect the State, and the people of the State, from these frequent demands for change of county seats. I suppose, sir, there is hardly a member of this Convention ignorant of the calamities that have fallen upon the people in connection with these elections. Great wrongs have been perpetrated. It has seemed to me, and to everybody else who has paid attention to it, as though the whole desire was to see who could get the most illegal votes, and in counties, too, where the vote polled was three or four times the vote cast in any election before or since. I think if it accomplishes no other purpose than to take the county seat question out of politics, it will be a valuable provision.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section will not be stricken out. The Legislature has passed a law something to the same effect as this provision in this section two. There are counties that have built expensive buildings—our county is one of them—and has put itself heavily in debt—forty or fifty thousand dollars—to build expensive Court Houses in the section of the county that is undoubtedly the place for the county seat; yet other portions of the county are still struggling for the county seat. Our county is one of a great many in the same situation. Now it seems to me that while it is well to have this law, it is well to have it fixed substantially in the Constitution; and while it is being fixed in the Constitution, let it be such as it is now upon the statute books. For that reason I offered to put in an amendment there to make it the same as it is in the Code—substantially the same—that there shall be no vote for a change of county seat within two years after a vote had been taken. This section would allow a vote to be taken immediately after the adoption of the Constitution. The Act puts it off two years longer.

MR. MCCALLUM. The law will remain after the Constitution is adopted, unless it conflicts with the Constitution.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I do not see why we should not fix it in the Constitution as it is in the Code.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I suppose it is hardly necessary to add anything, as there seems to be a general expression against striking out this section. I believe that this proposition was one of the few propositions on which the committee were unanimous, in favor of the section as it stands. The first part—the action on the legislative article—has affected that. As to the balance of the section, we were unanimous.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the section.

The motion was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington, to strike out the first line, and part of the second line, down to the word "law."

The motion prevailed.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I now move to amend by adding to section two, "nor in any county within two years after the adoption of this Constitution."

The amendment was rejected.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the committee will allow us to return to section one. I wish to move to strike it out. As it stands now, it will prevent the Legislature from consolidating counties, or from abolishing small counties. It is a dangerous section. I hope the committee will allow us to return to it.

THE CHAIRMAN. That section has been already passed by the unanimous consent of——

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I object.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section three.

NEW COUNTIES.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 3. No new county shall be established which shall reduce any county to a population of less than eight thousand; nor shall a new county be formed containing a less population than five thousand; nor shall any line thereof pass within five miles of the county seat of any county proposed to be divided; nor shall a county be divided, or have any portion taken therefrom, unless a majority of all the qualified electors of the county or counties affected, voting at a general election, shall vote therefor. New counties, when created, or portions of a county, when added to another county, shall be liable for their just proportion of all debts and liabilities, then existing, of the county or counties out of which they are respectively formed or taken.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment to that section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend as follows: 'First, strike out, in the second line, the word 'eight' and insert 'ten;' second, strike out, in line three, the word 'five' and insert 'seven;' third, strike out, in line four, the word 'five' and insert 'ten;' fourth, strike out, in line six, the words 'a majority' and insert 'three fifths.'"

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I presume that the committee aimed to correct a great evil; they aimed to put the brakes on the very bad practice of dividing up counties for the purpose of making some gentleman's farm valuable, or affording places and positions for hungry politicians. But, I must say, Mr. Chairman, that they put the brakes on very light indeed; too light to do any good. Now, it may be very desirable in our new counties here, with a large area and small population, and small wealth; it may be very desirable for some gentleman to convert his farm into a county seat, and enhance its value from five thousand dollars to one hundred thousand dollars, in town lots; it may be a very good thing for that gentleman, and it may be a very good thing for other gentlemen to be afforded the position of Sheriff, Clerk, Supervisors, and the various county officers; but, Mr. Chairman, it is not a very good thing for the poor taxpayers, when counties are made up out of a sparse population, and with but little wealth. It is no joke for them, but it is not always the case that their rights are taken into consideration; they are at home, at work upon their farms, not troubling themselves about politics, but these ringsters, gentlemen of leisure who are looking after office, are always on the lookout, and they always exercise an influence wholly disproportionate to their numbers, and it is no unusual thing for them to succeed. Perhaps there is scarcely a gentleman on this floor but who has seen or known something of this practice, if not in California, at least in some other States, because it is a practice not peculiar to California by any means. I have known it, perhaps other gentlemen here have known it in other cases, and I must say that the committee have touched it altogether too lightly. Now, I maintain, to separate and divide a county, and leave it with but eight thousand population, and permit a county to be organized out of another county with but five thousand population, is altogether too liberal to that class of gentlemen of whom I have been speaking. I think, to say that the county from which the territory is taken should not be reduced below ten thousand, is liberal enough to that class of gentlemen. I think, to say that a new county ought not to be organized unless it has at least the population of seven thousand, is sufficiently liberal to those gentlemen. I think, in cutting up an old county to make a new one, that when they say the line shall not pass nearer than five miles, I think they are a little too liberal there, and I think I am abundantly liberal when I say ten miles. In regard to the last count of my amendment, providing that counties shall not be divided without a three-fifths vote, I think that, too, is an improvement on the report of the committee. The committee provides that it may be done by a majority. My amendment proposes three fifths, and I think, and I submit to gentlemen, that that is a wise provision. Why, if but a bare majority can cut up a county, various influences might be brought to bear. Men exercise an influence that is hurtful and dangerous to the public interests, for the very reason that certain gentlemen and certain things always do exercise an influence when they bring it to bear, that is disproportionate to their numbers. Others who are not active politicians are at home at work upon their farms, and scarcely know what is going on. They are likely to be imposed upon by designing men. Therefore, I maintain that counties should not be divided or cut up unless three fifths of the voters of the county concur in demanding it.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: If I wanted doubly to prevent a new county from being organized, I would support the amendment; but as the original is entirely sufficient to prevent a new county ever being organized, I deem it unnecessary to put a double-header on that subject, and I shall, therefore, vote against the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I think the report of the committee is sufficient to prevent any evils that might arise. The provision requiring a majority of the votes of the county affected will certainly preclude the formation of counties where it is not desirable. That there should be a sufficient population to entitle them to a representative in one branch of the Legislature I believe essential, and that the formation of counties simply on account of some mining excitement, or for this or for that temporary cause, I believe has been a great detriment to the State. I believe the guards provided for in this section three will protect the formation of new counties. I think under the circumstances that there is no danger but what the Legislature will fully protect the interests of the people, and that the section as reported should be adopted by this Convention in preference to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento. In three fifths of the counties affected, that vote would be almost to cut off the formation of any new county. It might be but one quarter of the county affected. That quarter of the county would, perhaps, vote in favor of the formation of a new county, while three fourths would vote to keep that portion of the territory. I refer the gentleman to the case of Nevada County. Residents of Truckee for a number of years have desired to form a new county, including a portion of Nevada, El Dorado, and Sierra. They claim that they have to pass around Placer to get to their county seat. If there was an exception in the State to the general rule, perhaps it would apply there better than in any part of the State; but the principle that we should prohibit small counties being organized, such as Alpine and Modoc, I believe to be correct. But with that restriction none of these counties could have been formed. I am opposed to the practice of forming these new counties where it is not necessary.

MR. CAPLES. I ask that the question be divided and each count be voted upon separately.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question will be on the first branch to strike out "eight" and insert "ten."

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the second to strike out "five" and insert "seven."

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the third proposition to strike out in line four "five" and insert "ten."

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the fourth proposition to strike out in the sixth line the words "a majority" and insert "three fifths."

The amendment was rejected.

MR. WELLER. I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out, in section three, commencing at the word 'nor,' in the fifth line, ending at the word 'therefor,' in the seventh line."

MR. DAVIS. I second the motion.

REMARKS OF MR. WELLER.

MR. WELLER. Mr. Chairman: The portion stricken out by that amendment reads: "Nor shall a county be divided, nor have any portion taken therefrom, unless a majority of all the qualified electors of the county or counties affected, voting at a general election, shall vote therefor." I offer that amendment for this reason: where a portion of the county is unfortunately situated, and wish to be joined to another county, they would be obliged to get a majority of all the votes of the whole county. I think the statute has been heretofore that where the parties that wish to be set off should all sign a petition, that they could be set off into another county by an enactment of the Legislature; but according to that clause it would be impossible for one portion of the county to be set off from another. I move to strike out that whole clause.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that the part moved to be stricken out is the best part of the section. I think that no portion of a county ought to be taken from a county without its consent, nor added to another county without the consent of the people of that county. That is all that portion of the section provides for. Certainly that ought to be done.

REMARKS OF MR. EVEY.

MR. EVEY. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Weller. Under the report of the committee, as it is reported, I think that we should never have another new county in this State. I am no advocate of new counties, unless the population is sufficient and the taxable property is sufficient to support the new county. But it seems to me under this report of the committee that it would make no difference how much population or taxable property was contained within the new boundary proposed to be erected into a new county, the old county could forever prevent the organization of a new county, provided they had a majority of the voters. I think it would be very unjust and very unfair to put into the Constitution a provision of that kind, and I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I hope, too, that the amendment will prevail, and that that clause will be stricken out, for I know myself of instances where it would work very badly. If the people of a certain section were unanimous in favor of joining another county, they could not do it under this amendment, because, of course, the people of the county would, for the sake of having their property on the tax roll, hold them anyway. There are certain little adjustments all over the State that require to be made, because these counties are new counties, and are sometimes very unjustly divided. I hope that the amendment will prevail, and that that part of the section will go out.

REMARKS OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I agree with the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman, when he says that this is the very best part of the section. If we had had this in the Constitution before we would have had no Alpine County struggling for an existence. It is a fact, known to every one, that it is not a case of public necessity. It has been a great advantage to certain men, for the purpose of getting county offices.

MR. WHITE. This has nothing to do with new counties. If you look at that you will see that it does not refer to new counties.

MR. TINNIN. It seems to me that unless this clause is kept in this section that it would be impossible to set off a new county. I hope that the report of the committee will be sustained. I believe in a strong restriction upon the power to organize new counties, or set off a portion of one county to another.

REMARKS OF MR. DAVIS.

MR. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman: I believe, with the section as it now stands, it would be almost impossible ever to get a new county. If the eastern end of Nevada County desire a new county to be made out of Placer and Nevada, they never could have a new county under this section; and, although we do not desire a new county at the present time, there may be some time in the future when we would desire it. We have to travel nearly one hundred miles on two railroads to reach our county seat, and should we obtain a population of five thousand and desire a new county, I do not see, under the present section, how we could ever obtain it. We have a county capable of sustaining a large population, and in case we should, in the future, desire a new county, I should like to have it so that we can obtain it.

REMARKS OF MR. MILLS.

MR. MILLS. Mr. Chairman: I think this portion of the section ought not to be stricken out, for the reason that I am not aware of any way that a county could be divided, or a portion taken off, unless it was by the consent of both. Suppose, for instance, that the people of San Joaquin should vote to take a portion of Sacramento County, and Sacramento County should not consent to it. How would you get it? Upon what principle can they ask this unless both parties consent to it? It is like trading horses. I say to a man I wish to trade horses with you, and I take his horse. Could I enforce it without his consent? I think the clause ought to remain in the section.

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. I am at a loss to know what a proper construction of the matter proposed to be stricken out here is. It reads, "nor shall a county be divided, or have any portion taken therefrom, unless a majority of all the qualified electors of the county or counties affected, voting at a general election, shall vote therefor." Now the question is where there is two or three counties to be effected by the proposed change, does it take a majority of each county to make this effective, or does it require that the votes of the three counties shall be aggregated? For instance, a very large county in population, like Sacramento, proposes to take off a slip of Yolo County, then if it requires a vote of each county, Yolo can stand Sacramento County off if she is opposed to the uniting of the territory, but if it is aggregation of the votes, Sacramento County can walk over and take as much of Yolo County as she desires. I hope that the clause will be stricken out.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. I had thought, Mr. Chairman, that the report of this committee was extremely liberal—too liberal; entirely too much so—but it seems as though I was laboring under a most profound error, for it would appear that gentlemen desire to break down all restrictions—absolutely all restrictions. Now, Mr. Chairman, let us see what would be the effect of striking out this portion of the section. I read the portion proposed to be stricken out: "Nor shall a county be divided, or have any portion taken therefrom, unless a majority of all the qualified electors of the county or counties affected, voting at a general election, shall vote therefor." Now I would like to know how this is to be done unless it is by a vote of the county. But it is proposed to strike that out. Well, what then? This Committee of the Whole have already provided in the action had upon the report of the Committee on Legislative Department, that the Legislature shall have no power to change county seats by special enactment. It must be done by general laws. Now will these gentlemen who favor striking out this vital portion of this section be in favor of a general law that would provide that any section of a county might, of its own motion or volition, strike itself out from the parent county and attach itself on to another county? Is this the idea? Is this the desire of these gentlemen? Because if it is not to be done by vote of the county or counties interested, why I take it that the people themselves desiring to detach themselves should be permitted to do so under a general law, because we have inhibited special laws for that purpose.

For instance, here is Yolo County lying next to Sacramento. The people of that portion lying between the Tule House and the river are very much nearer to Sacramento, and their business is in Sacramento as much, if not more, than at their own county seat. Would these gentlemen, by general law, provide that that strip of territory, say two miles in width, might, by the act of the citizens occupying that strip of territory, be detached from Yolo County and attached to Sacramento County? It seems to me that this is the most preposterous proposition that I have heard. What would be the general result of opening up this question of the disintegration of counties? I will venture to say that it would be a pandora box of confusion worse confounded from one end of the State to the other, because you will scarcely find anywhere an exception to the rule that in every county of the State there would be some corner or slice on one side or one end that would prefer to attach itself to some other county. It may be nearer to that county seat. Various things may be brought to bear, and the result would be disintegration and confusion. Certainly no gentleman on this floor desires to inaugurate such a lawless, revolutionary proposition as this. Now, if gentlemen had proposed to insert, where they propose to strike out, some provision that would be specific, would offer some guards against confusion, why it would be more reasonable; but they propose nothing to say what the Legislature may provide, but they are aware that the Legislature must provide by general law. It cannot provide by special law, for I take it for granted that this Convention is against special legislation, and has put the seal of condemnation upon it. Therefore, they must provide, by general law, and every section, corner, or slice of a county may, of its own volition, take itself out of a county and put itself into another county. They have not said so in terms, but it follows as a natural sequence. If I may be excused from saying so, I consider this a foolish proposition, a proposition in the interest of cliques and private interests, and one that would result in confusion worse confounded.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the word 'the' in the sixth line, before the word 'county,' and insert the word 'each,' so that it shall read 'a majority of all the qualified electors of each county or counties affected.'"

REMARKS OF MR. STEDMAN.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: As I understand the clause, as it reads now in the report of the committee, the objection of the gentleman from Monterey is well put. As I understand it, sir, it requires; in settling this matter, the combined votes of the counties, and, as the gentleman says, if there was a majority in the County of Yolo against adding any portion of that county to the County of Sacramento, and if a majority of Sacramento County voted to take it, although the people of Yolo objected to losing a portion of their county, it would be taken from them, from the fact that the voters of the counties voted therefor.

MR. TINNIN. Will the gentleman allow me to suggest that he strike out also the words "or counties?"

MR. STEDMAN. I accept that amendment. If my amendment is adopted, if the County of Yolo should object to having this portion taken from them, and the County of Sacramento should vote therefor, that portion would not be taken. It would require a majority in each county. I believe that this would be right, to settle the dispute.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment offered by Mr. Stedman will be adopted. Under the report of the committee Sacramento could go over and steal a large slice of Yolo County. Down there in Alameda, the people of San Francisco could step over and steal the Town of Oakland. I think we ought to fix it so that the people who are losing their territory should have a voice in it, and not be overruled by the larger vote in the other county.

REMARKS OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I hope, sir, that the amendment offered will not be adopted, and that this section may be amended by striking out all of it down to the words "new counties," in the seventh line. In addition to that, I think, also, that the words, "or portions of a county when added to another county," in the eighth line, should be stricken out, for the reason that they have no meaning that I can perceive which could be brought into any practical effect. So far as these words are concerned in the eighth line, "or portions of a county when added to another county," the effect would be this: that if a new county was formed, and in running its lines, or in the description, you should have three fourths of one township and half of another township from an adjacent county, that in every sort of way these fractional portions of townships are to contribute their just proportion of the county debt, it would be found impracticable to arrive at any just proportion. At any rate, the words, "new counties, when created, shall be liable for their just proportion of all debts and liabilities, then existing, of the county or counties out of which they are respectively formed or taken," will cover all that is necessary. The reason why I hope that the amendment will be voted down, and I may have an opportunity to offer an amendment to strike out all after the words "section three" down to the word "new," in the seventh line, is, that the various amendments proposed and the original section as offered by the committee are going to prevent the formation of any more counties. It may be that no more are needed at present, but I do not think that this Convention can discount all future time with safety and with intelligence. That more counties can be formed is very manifest. The amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman, that whenever a county is formed, that each county that is to be subdivided in the formation of the new county have got to approve of it by a majority vote, renders it absolutely certain that you will never have another county in the State, whatever changes the circumstances of the State may require, or whatever the population may be. Again, here it is proposed that there must be at least five thousand inhabitants. Now, sir, we have counties in this State where a man has to travel from sixty to one hundred miles to reach the county seat. Now, in a vicinity of that kind, if there is a population of three or four thousand, or four thousand nine hundred, and they are willing to pay the expenses of a county government, why in the name of conscience should they not have one? The State is made up now of counties, a large number of which do not contain five thousand inhabitants, and they contribute their full share to the strength, the prosperity, and the wealth of the State. Gentlemen say we must consider the poor taxpayer. I will call the attention of gentlemen on this floor to the fact that it costs many citizens of this State more money now to travel to the county seat than it costs to pay the taxes on their property annually. Again, we are assuming, if we adopt a section like that, that this State is now crystallized.

MR. FILCHER. If the travel was only half the distance, would not the expense be about the same?

MR. JONES. Not at all. Thirty additional miles make it necessary to stay another day. When men are within twenty or thirty miles of their county seat, which ought to be nearly central, they can go and return the same day; but when you come to go farther than that, then it is two or three days trip. It is a grievous burden upon every Grand Juror, every trial juror, every witness, and every man who has any business of any sort whatever to transact at the county Court, that he should be obliged to travel fifty, sixty, seventy, or one hundred miles for that purpose. It ought to be within the power of the Legislature to so modify the general law as to meet the wants of such citizens. We are assuming, if we adopt this section, that this State has crystallized, and has taken upon itself a permanent form; that the counties are now all that they ought to be for all time to come. We have no right to make such an assumption. The centers of population are continually changing, and are subject to great and rapid changes. Besides, there is not a State in the Union, and there never will be, where the crystallized and permanent form of government embraces counties of such enormous magnitude as California. Look at the great counties of San Bernardino, Stanislaus, and Merced, reaching from the mountains on the east to the crest of the coast range on the west. If this State is going to be what we expect, a great and thriving population will exist on the two sides of the San Joaquin River. At the present time there is no population to justify two counties, but every consideration of expediency, every consideration of right, will dictate that there should be the power to pass a general law which will permit them to form two counties. For one half of the year it is almost impossible to reach the seat of justice in order to transact any business, judicial or otherwise, that a man may have to transact at the county seat. The country is flooded. A great river moves down and perhaps overlaps its banks for three or four miles. In the future we ought to have some means of adapting the condition of the counties to the interests of the people. The Legislature is not abusing any right—is not abusing its authority in the way of making new counties. Why not let the Legislature have the power to pass a general law, and to modify that general law from time to time, so as to permit of the organization of new counties when the interests of the people demand it?

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman.

On a division, the vote stood 42 ayes to 4 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. We will take another vote. There is no quorum voting.

The question was again put, and, on a division, the vote stood 61 ayes to 7 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting. There is manifestly a quorum in the committee. Gentlemen are requested to vote one way or the other.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 74 ayes to 15 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Weller.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment to section three.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out after the words 'section three,' down to the word 'new,' in the seventh line; also, strike out from line eight, the words 'or portions of a county when added to another county.'"

MR. HERRINGTON. I rise to a point of order. That strikes out a portion of the last amendment that has been inserted.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is perfectly in order to do so, provided you strike out other language in connection with it.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I have stated my reasons for offering this amendment, and I do not propose to detain the committee at all now. As to the words in line eight, "or portions of a county when added to another county," I do not deem it a matter of moment, but I do not understand any useful effect of it. I do not deem it a matter of great moment whether they are stricken out or not, but it seems to me that it will be embarrassing if they are left in.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: This amendment would virtually destroy section three, and I think we should retain some vitality in that section. The Convention has decided that there is virtue in that section, and I hope that the Convention will adhere to its decision, and vote down the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mariposa, Mr. Jones.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I desire to amend the section in lines seven and eight, by transposing the terms, striking out the words "new counties, when created or," and transposing them to after the word "counties," so as to make it read: "portions of a county when added to another county, or new counties, when created, shall be liable," etc. That will express what was undoubtedly intended by the committee. but as it now stands it makes it read awkwardly, as though new counties would be added to other counties. I will reduce it to writing.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out, in lines seven and eight, the words 'new counties, when created, or,' and insert the words 'or new counties, when created,' after the second 'county,' in line eight."

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. How can a portion of a county pay? Why should not the new county pay that portion? How can a portion of a county pay separately?

MR. VAN DYKE. I would like to inquire, how can a portion of a county pay any portion?

MR. HERRINGTON. The sentence will commence and read as follows: "Portions of the county, when added to another county, or new counties, when created, shall be liable for their just proportion of all debts and liabilities then existing of the county or counties out of which they are respectively formed or taken."

MR. VAN DYKE. My question is, how a portion of a county can pay?

MR. HERRINGTON. I suppose that the assessment roll will show it. The like has been done by the Legislature in this State.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: It has been done, as the gentleman from Santa Clara says, over and over again, not only in this State, but in other States. There is no trouble about it. The assessment roll at the time will show how much belongs to that portion, and the Legislature can direct the assessment and collection of taxes in proportion to the amount of property in that portion of the county to be applied to the debt of the county.

MR. JONES. Suppose the county line runs through a man's property?

MR. SHAFTER. It is done every day now, in formation of road districts and school districts. Lines run through my lands in three or four different places.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the words between the words 'thousand' and the word 'nor,' in line five."

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: The words proposed to be stricken out are these: "nor shall any line thereof pass within five miles of the county seat of any county proposed to be divided." It is with reference to the single point provided for in this section, that there shall be no county seats within five miles of the lines of a new county. Now, that would work very inconveniently in some cases. We do not know what might occur pending the existence of this Constitution, if it should be adopted. It might be, as in the County of Alameda, it would be impossible to have a county seat five miles from the line of a new county. On this question the committee were divided. I believe the majority were in favor of the language as there used, but it may, in some cases, work great inconvenience; and I entertain the conviction that it is a provision that ought not to be placed in the Constitution. Perhaps, as a general rule, it might be a good one, but every good idea ought not to be put into the Constitution. The question is not whether the idea is good, but whether it is good to place in the Constitution of the State. I hope that these words will be stricken out. It might work great inconvenience in some cases.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. It is true, as stated by the gentleman from Alameda, that this proposition did not receive the unanimous support of the committee. but it did receive the sanction of quite a large majority. I wish to state on behalf of the majority of the committee——

MR. MCCALLUM. My recollection of the thing is that it was struck out in committee. Afterwards it was claimed that it had not been stricken out. I, in common with some others, was of the opinion that it had been stricken out. I know I made the motion to strike it out, and I understood the motion prevailed.

MR. HALE. In response to the suggestion of the gentleman, I will say that probably it is a misapprehension. I believe that the truth of the matter was that a motion was made to strike it out, and I do not remember what action was taken on it by the committee. At a subsequent meeting, when I think a larger number were present, the matter was considered, and it was then retained. However, it makes no difference. The question is whether it ought to be retained or not. Now, in behalf of the report of the committee upon that point, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that this clause is derived from the Constitutions of several of the Western States, where, as in this State in some instances, there seems to be a constant furore to change county seats, and to divide counties. The judgment of the committee was, like that founded upon the Constitutional Conventions of those Western States, that this policy had been an excellent policy; that these movements for divisions of counties and change of county seats were largely founded upon private interests, and frequently without much regard to public weal; that it was wise, therefore, to place suitable restraints upon the exercise of this power of the Government. The provisions are inserted from the Constitutions of other States and also the laws of other States, placing a restriction upon the power to so divide a county that the new county line should be within less than five miles of the old county seat.

Now, it is the presumption that if it were, that it would necessitate the change of the old county seat, as well as the making of a new county seat. I think it is a wise and just restraint. I hope the amendment will not prevail. It has been suggested that there would be difficulty in such a county as Alameda. Now, there should not be any difficulty about that. That would involve probably the case of a city. If the gentlemen wish to provide for that it can be done in an independent section, or the introduction of new matter providing a different rule applicable to the formation of new cities and counties, or a restraint upon a division of a county where they have a city and county. I can imagine cases where that might be a useful thing; but this rule, as for its application to the State at large, I apprehend will be found to be wise. If it is necessary to have a provision to meet cases like Alameda County, I shall not object to it, provided that it does not disturb the harmony of this report.

MR. MCCALLUM. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not think there are already enough counties?

MR. HALE. I think there are altogether too many.

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: As a general proposition, I concede what has been said in opposition to the formation of new counties on every occasion, to make places for some aspirants for office; but there are cases when it is proper to have new counties formed, and to have counties divided, so that a city and county may be formed, so as to save expense to the population. Now, sir, it strikes me if we are going much farther we had better prohibit entirely the formation of any new counties. As remarked by the gentleman by my side, Mr. Wyatt, we have already partly done that. That is what I object to; that we are making this too unyielding by putting it into this Constitution. Take, for instance, up the San Joaquin Valley—there may be county seats within five miles of the San Joaquin River. Now, if it is desirable, hereafter, to form new counties, you could not divide it by the river, and you would have to divide it a little ways off the river in order to get five miles from an existing county seat. It is utter folly to put such a clause as this in the Constitution, in my opinion. If there are exceptions to a rule it ought not to go into the Constitution. Leave it to the Legislature—not form an iron rule that we cannot get over at all. That is the reason I am opposed to the section. I hope the amendment will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out the section. It has been amended so that I cannot support it. Here is San Joaquin, Marin, Santa Clara, Sacramento—I do not know but Placer, and perhaps Butte and Yuba Counties—that have got railroad bonds out, and county bonds out. This Convention has adopted a provision that if a county is divided up it shall not be liable for any part of these bonds. That would be a very nice operation, to shift the responsibility by transferring the debts to a county that did not have any debt upon it.

MR. LARKIN. What amendment authorizes that?

MR. SHAFTER. The section, as it has been amended. It will let the balance of the county that is left shift its debt over on to the county that takes this part in. What right is there on the part of this Convention to shift the responsibility of a bond which the county has executed over on to somebody else that may not be able to pay it? It cannot be done, and it ought not to be done if it could be done.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the motion of the gentleman from Marin will not prevail. I am sorry to admit that, by one of the amendments, the section has been partly emasculated and destroyed, but there is a little virtue in it yet, and we hope that by retaining it we may perfect it in Convention. I hope the motion will not prevail.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: If I understand this section right, I hope it will be stricken out, or else materially changed. There is a provision here, that new counties, when organized, shall be liable for their just proportion—will the Secretary please read Mr. Herrington's amendment?

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out, in lines seven and eight, the words 'new counties when created, or,' and insert the words 'or new counties, when created,' after the second 'county' in line eight, so it shall read: 'portions of a county, when added to another county, or new counties, when created, shall be liable for their just proportion of all debts and liabilities then existing, of the county or counties out of which they are respectively formed or taken.'"

MR. HERRINGTON. The gentleman from Marin has lost his reckoning.

MR. ROLFE. There is a liability for a proportion of the indebtedness of the old counties. Now, the old counties, from which a portion of a county has been taken to form a new county, as is the case with San Francisco at present, and other counties, may have an indebtedness, and at the same time, may have a large amount of property on hand, more than the indebtedness. So, although they may be in debt, they are not insolvent; they retain the public buildings, and still the portion of the county that has been taken from it must be liable for the indebtedness of that county, but, of course, cannot have a part of the public buildings.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman will find that he is in error. They would only be liable for their just proportion. It was supposed by the committee that the language would cover the very point which he makes. Of course that portion of the county taken from the county is entitled to its credit for the property of the county as well as being liable for its just proportion of its liabilities. That is the view taken by the committee, and it was discussed at length. If the gentleman can find any better words, let him suggest. I wish to say to the gentleman from Marin that the very proposition which he advocated was adopted in the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington. It does provide that the portions of the county shall be liable as well as the new county. The objection was made that it might be difficult to ascertain how much they were to pay, and the gentleman answered that proposition himself. I hope that this motion will not prevail. This evil that is mentioned here of the formation of new counties without any conditions whatever is a great evil which this committee proposed to remedy. They have attempted to remedy it in the manner provided in the first clause. I confess that unless this amendment which I have offered should prevail I should not be disposed to support the section. I cannot see what answer there is to the amendment which I have offered. I hope it will prevail, and that the section may then be adopted. It is conceded here that as it reads it would work a hardship in the cases mentioned. There are other cases where that will not occur. There might be cases where the county seat of a new county would not be on the banks of a river, although there might be a large city there.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I think that the honorable gentleman from Marin misunderstands the effect of the Herrington amendment. Certainly if he does not, I do. As I read and interpret the amendment offered by Mr. Herrington——

MR. SHAFTER. I understood the Clerk to read that the portions of the county were stricken out. That I am in error in.

MR. WINANS. Consequently the virtue of the motion of the gentleman fails.

MR. MCCALLUM. Is the motion of the gentleman from Marin withdrawn?

MR. SHAFTER. No.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: As for the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, I think the section as it stands is a good one. The Constitution of Missouri and the Constitution of Illinois have established the limit at ten miles, and they have done so with a view to adding stability to their county seats. A similar provision will have the same effect here in California. The idea is, as I understand it, that in the event of the organization of a new county, they should not affect the location of the present county governments by such a change. For instance, if it should hereafter be deemed advantageous to divide Placer County, which is now nearly one hundred miles in length, it would work a great hardship to change the county seat from its present locality, and entail upon us the expense of another set of new buildings, besides the removal of such county property as is movable. This would limit it to at least five miles, and I think the limit is small enough. For my part, I would prefer even a greater distance. I would prefer ten miles, and if it were offered here, I would vote to make the limit ten miles instead of five.

MR. LARKIN. Would not this limit prevent a new county in Alameda? It might not affect us, but it might come near some gentleman.

MR. FILCHER. The county seat of Alameda County is established. It is more than likely that the present county seat would be the county seat of one or the other, and I say that the new county should not come within ten miles of the present county seat; because in the establishment of a new county seat it should be that distance in justice to the most of the people in the new county formed. Placing county seats on one side of a county is unjust to the other side; it is like sticking a school house in the corner of a school district, which is sometimes done, and always to the great dissatisfaction of those in the other end of the district.

MR. MCCALLUM. Suppose, during the existence of this Constitution, there should be two cities of ten thousand inhabitants within that distance, would you not say——

MR. FILCHER. I should say that in forming a county they should run out at least five miles outside of that big city, if they desired to have that the location of government.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: This restriction was simply a restriction to prohibit the hasty formation of counties. There are sufficient guards in this section, in relation to the formation of counties, without this provision, and I think it should be stricken out. There may be exceptions, but there are hardships under it.

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the motion of the gentleman from Marin will prevail, and that the section will be stricken out, because I do not want to say to the living now, nor to the living who shall come hereafter, that the State of California in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-nine attained its growth, and there was no possibility of any future growth. I want this motion to prevail, for it is said the dead should not govern the living, and we will be dead to those whom this law is intended to operate upon. This is but saying that there shall be no more counties made in the State of California. It is saying that where there is a county seat located now they shall retain it for all future time. It is to say that the growth of this State, no matter what it may be in the future, must conform to our notions of the proper boundaries of these counties, regardless of what they desire, or what may be just to them. It is no use to misconstrue this section. If you refer to the section you will find that it fixes forever the county lines of this State while this Constitution governs. I hope it will be stricken out.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is the motion of the gentleman from Marin to strike out section three.

The amendment was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no further amendment to section three, the Secretary will read section four.

COUNTY GOVERNMENTS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 4. The Legislature shall establish a system of county governments which shall be uniform throughout the State; and by general laws shall provide for township organization, under which any county may organize whenever a majority of the qualified electors of such county, voting at a general election, shall so determine; and, whenever a county shall adopt township organization, the assessment and collection of the revenue shall be made, and the business of such county, and the local affairs of the several townships therein, shall be managed and transacted in the manner prescribed by such general laws.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I offer a substitute for section four.

THE SECRETARY read.

"SEC. 4. The Legislature shall establish a system of county governments, which shall be uniform throughout the State; shall provide for the election or appointment in the several counties of Boards of Supervisors, Sheriffs, County Clerks, District Attorneys, and such other county, township, and municipal officers as public convenience may require; and shall prescribe their duties and fix their compensation; and by general laws shall provide for township organization or subdivision of the county, under which any county may organize whenever a majority of the qualified electors of such county or subdivision of a county, voting at a general election, shall so determine; and whenever a county or subdivision of a county shall adopt township organization, the assessment and collection of the revenue shall be made, and the business of such county, and the local affairs of the several townships therein, shall be managed and transacted in the manner prescribed by such general laws. It shall regulate the salaries and fees of all county officers in proportion to duties, and for this purpose may classify the counties by population."

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: The purpose of this substitute is to embody the substance of sections four and five in one section, upon the ground that the matters are germane, and that they may be consolidated in one section. It also omits some portions of section five. There is also one additional feature contained in the substitute, not contained in the report of the committee, and I will call attention to that particularly. We here provide for the organization of townships or counties with township governments. The report of the committee provides that it may be done by a full county, and comprising all portions of the county, or, in fact, "and by general laws, shall provide for township organization, under which any county may organize, whenever a majority of the qualified electors of such county, voting at a general election, shall so determine." The substitute contains the words "and by general laws, shall provide for township organization, or subdivision of the county, under which any county may organize whenever a majority of the qualified electors of such county, or subdivision of a county, voting at a general election, shall so determine; and whenever a county or subdivision of a county shall adopt township organization, the assessment and collection of the revenue shall be made, and the business of such county and the local affairs of the several townships therein, shall be managed and transacted in the manner prescribed by such general laws."

The idea of this amendment is this. There are quite a large number of counties in this State which contain two distinct characters of population. The county that I have the honor in part to represent is one of them. I allude to the County of Placer. The upper portion will be found to be mineral, and the people there are engaged in mining pursuits. The lower part will be found to be agricultural, and the people farmers and fruit growers. Now it has been found, in the efforts heretofore made in this behalf, and also in the experience of other States bearing some analogy to this, that in the agricultural portions of counties they will find it to their advantage, and it will be found generally, that the people will favor township organization and the maintenance of township government. I have no doubt that in every community of the State where the population is sufficient, where the industries are sufficiently well organized, where property interests are established and the communities organized upon a proper basis, that this township organization will be found a good policy, and result in public advantage. Now take the County of Placer as an example. The lower half of the county is almost wholly occupied by people engaged in agricultural pursuits. Farming, on a large scale, is there conducted. Fruit raising is a large industry. Mining is but a small employment to the people, and comprises but a small portion of the property interests there. In that portion of the county—and I speak of this merely as an example—the people will find it to their advantage, and I believe will be very willing, to adopt a system of township governments. In the upper portion of the county the people are engaged in mining, and there is a large floating population and other elements which would make it practically out of the question to adopt, advantageously, township organization or government, and probably their vote would defeat its adoption in the lower part. This amendment is to enable these subdivisions of counties to act upon this proposition for themselves. It is to allow the benefit of township organization and government in those cases where the interests or conditions of the people would justify their adoption, and enable the other portions to maintain their present status. The committee found some difficulty in the adoption of that language, disagreeing with the idea, and thought it impracticable. However, the primary object of the substitute is to embody the substance of sections four and five in one, upon the ground that they are germane and may be properly combined.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I hope that both these sections will be stricken out, as useless, and traveling over ground covered by the Committee on Legislative Department. The committee has come to a conclusion at variance with this report. I hope the substitute will be voted down, and that the sections will both be stricken out.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the amendment to read as follows: 'The Legislature shall establish a system of county governments which shall be uniform throughout the State, and by general laws shall provide for township organizations and government therein, giving to the county and township officers charged with governmental functions such powers, executive, legislative, and judicial, as may be deemed necessary for the orderly conduct of the affairs thereof, and for the safety and happiness of their inhabitants.'"

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: It is half-past twelve, and I suppose that the committee will now rise. I make that motion.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called, and a quorum present.

VACATING THE OFFICE OF SECRETARY.

MR. SWING. Mr. President: I desire to introduce a resolution in relation to the Secretaryship of this Convention:

THE SECRETARY read:

WHEREAS, The Secretary of this Convention, J. A. Johnson, has declared to members of this Convention his intention of absenting himself for the purpose of visiting the National Capital on business entirely unconnected with his duties as Secretary, and has already been absent from his duties for a period of more than three days without leave, and without furnishing a substitute;

Resolved, That the office of Secretary of this Convention be and the same is hereby declared vacant, and that George A. Thornton be and he is hereby declared Secretary of the Convention for the remainder of the session.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: Mr. Johnson, before leaving here—I had a conversation with him before he went away from here to Oakland. In that conversation he said he was going to Oakland, and that he had some days' work to perform there, when he intended to come back here and go from here to Washington, with the expectation of remaining some time. However, he said before he proceeded to Washington he would come here and make some arrangement in regard to the position he is occupying. Now, it does seem to me, sir, that we are acting too hastily. The declarations of the gentleman, as regards his intentions, are not evidence, and should not be taken as evidence against him. Of course, if we had proof that Mr. Johnson was proceeding to Washington without notifying this Convention, or had actually vacated his position, why of course I would have no objection to his place being filled by some other person. But I do not understand that this action is based upon anything else save the last declarations of the gentleman. And, as the statement was made to me that he expected to come back here and stay for a day or two before going to Washington, I believe it would be no more than justice, no more than fair dealing, if Mr. Johnson be in Oakland, he should be notified that this Convention is about to take this step. I am not making this speech on behalf of Mr. Johnson. I have nothing to say for him, but I believe in fair dealing, and justice requires that a man should be notified, and should not be so summarily dealt with as this resolution extends. I hope it will be deferred until we ascertain exactly what he intends to do. It may be the intention of the gentleman to resign his position, and unless the mover of the resolution sees fit to postpone it for a short time, I shall feel called upon to make a motion to lay it upon the table. If the mover desires to postpone it for a few days I think it will be satisfactory to all the members of the Convention.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I am one of those who supported Mr. Johnson, and I am a friend of his. I spoke to him concerning this matter, and he told me that he accepted the position for one hundred days, and had no intention of remaining longer, as he had his arrangements made to go on to Washington, and that he could not remain longer. He had conversations with other gentlemen, I find, to the same effect. I have no disrespect for him, but to those gentlemen who are at the desk I think it is no more than right.

REMARKS OF MR. SWING.

MR. SWING. Mr. Chairman: I did not offer this resolution because I have any ill feeling toward the Secretary; on the contrary, I have the kindest feelings for him. But I know it has been customary with Secretaries and Clerks, when they have to absent themselves, to furnish some person to do their duty for them while absent. As regards the statement of the gentleman from San Francisco, that these statements are made without any foundation, that I am willing to take upon myself; but I am willing to refer to the record to show that he has absented himself, without leave, for more than three days, and referring to Rule Ten, in regard to the duties of Secretary, we will see whether or not he is not liable to this measure: "The Secretary must attend each day, and call the roll, read the Journal, and all propositions and resolutions." I refer to that rule, against which he is acting in direct opposition. It is a very easy matter for him to get leave of absence, and furnish a proper substitute to perform the duties. When he sees proper not to give any courtesy, I do not believe this Convention is bound to show him any courtesy; therefore, I insist upon the resolution, unless I am shown some good reason why the matter should be postponed.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I hope the resolution will be adopted. The Secretary of this Convention has left us for a number of days, and he had not even the courtesy to ask this Convention for leave of absence. He has gone to Oakland, and I presume through his means scurrilous articles have been written in the Times, holding us up before the people of this State to ridicule; and I say, sir, that the position should be declared vacant, because he has treated us with discourtesy. I do not think we will treat him any more discourteously by declaring the place vacant than he has us.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I heartily second the remarks of Mr. Stedman. Not because I have any ill feeling towards Mr. Johnson. I leave the Convention to determine for themselves about the allusions and declarations made by my friend, Mr. Beerstecher. As far as I am concerned, Mr. Johnson stated to me that he would be obliged to go. I asked him if he intended to resign. He said: "I suppose, inasmuch as I am obliged to go, the Convention will have to use its own pleasure."

MR. WELLIN. Mr. Chairman: I rise to oppose the passage of this resolution. He has absented himself some days; but, sir, it will not do for us to declare the place vacant. That is simply to expel him without giving him any opportunity to be heard. It will not change the condition of things for us to call upon him to say whether he is about to leave the State or not. Give him due notice, and if he does not reply, all right. I do not like to hurry a matter through like this. I think it is undignified and unbecoming a deliberative body. We have run the Convention without Mr. Johnson, and we can do it a little longer. He can then come in and ask for leave of absence, or tender his resignation.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I think the gentleman referred to some rule about three days.

MR. SWING. No, sir; I read a part of Rule Ten bearing on this matter.

MR. MCCALLUM. This is the first intimation I have had of such a resolution as that; and more than that, it is the first I have heard about any intended absence of the Secretary. It appears to me that it cannot be assumed by any gentleman here, and will not be, that Mr. Johnson knows of any resolution of this sort. I suppose that will not be claimed.

MR. STEDMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman a question: If you have noticed in the Record Union and Bee an article stating that Mr. Johnson was about leaving for the East—for Washington—and would probably resign his position? Such an article was published in those papers.

MR. SWING. I understand the gentleman to say that there has been no such statement made by the Secretary.

MR. MCCALLUM. What I say is this: I suppose that no gentleman here will say that he consented to this resolution. We have heard it assumed here that he did not expect to serve over one hundred days, and it seemed to imply that he consented, and was used as an argument. No gentleman will say that he consented. I am entirely unfamiliar with his business as to his intended absence. I know this: that after the election of Mr. Johnson, partly because he was not an expert reader, though of average capacity in that line, a number of gentlemen who voted for him have been dissatisfied with him from the beginning. But I hope no injustice will be done, and certainly it would be extremely unjust and unprecedented to expel an officer without notice. Mr. Johnson is the second officer in this Convention, and as I understand from gentlemen here, he is in Oakland. Mr. Johnson, then, can be notified. I think myself, sir, that if Mr. Johnson does not intend to remain and perform the duties of Secretary, that we should have another Secretary in his place, and a very efficient gentleman has been named in his place. But the other ought to have an opportunity to be here. Of course, if he is going away to remain, he would undoubtedly resign. As far as any information we have here to the contrary, he may be absent on account of sickness. I cannot say otherwise. Now, sir, I don't suppose there can be any two views as to the propriety and right of giving the gentleman a chance to be here. If he is here, I have no doubt he will resign before he goes to Washington, if he does not intend to return immediately. As I stated, I have certainly no desire to continue the gentleman as Secretary unless he performs his duties. But we might as well, because the President of this Convention has been absent a week, declare the office of President vacant. I move to make that resolution the special order for next Monday, at two o'clock, and that the acting Secretary notify Mr. Johnson.

MR. JONES. I ask if the gentleman would not consent to add to his motion, a reference to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, with instructions to report the facts.

MR. MCCALLUM. That is unnecessary.

MR. JONES. We shall have no official knowledge coming to us in any way.

MR. SWING. I don't desire to do the gentleman any injustice. I will consent that it be done, or to refer it to that committee.

MR. TINNIN. I move to amend, until to-morrow morning at half-past nine o'clock.

MR. MCCALLUM. I think the best motion to make is that it be made the special order for next Monday, at two o'clock. I don't see what any committee has to do with it.

MR. BIGGS. I ask the gentleman how many days he has been here in the last two weeks.

MR. MCCALLUM. I confess he has been absent most of the time. I don't know why he has been away. But if he had not been here for a month he is entitled to notice before we adopt a resolution of this kind.

MR. BEERSTECHER. He went away last Saturday.

MR. DUDLEY. I think it is no more than right that he should have notice. There are two gentleman who have gone on his bonds, and if we expel him some blame might attach to them.

REMARKS OF MR. CASSERLY.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. President: I agree with the remarks of the gentleman from Alameda. It is the essence of all justice that you should not decide or punish until after you have heard. If the Secretary was the greatest criminal in the land he would be entitled to due notice and a hearing, and I am for giving him that notice, and an opportunity to be heard. When we found that he was not attending to his duties, from day to day, we should have stopped him at the threshold. We allowed the Assistant Secretary to go on and discharge the duties, and by such sufferance he has been absent when he should have been here. Now, I respectfully submit that he is entitled to notice before we proceed to condemn him.

REMARKS OF MR. WEBSTER.

MR. WEBSTER. Mr. President: I think it is proper that the motion of the gentleman from Alameda should carry. This very hasty action was something of a surprise to many of us. It is understood that Mr. Johnson intends going East very soon. He expects to come back here. It may have been that he has been detained in Oakland longer than he anticipated when he went away Saturday. I believe it is a very common thing for members to go down and be detained longer than they anticipated, consequently he didn't ask for proper leave of absence, to stay the proper length of time. He stated when he left that he designed to come back. He designed resigning his position before he went. I think it is proper that he should have a hearing. It is a matter of courtesy to him, and certainly justice. He ought to be notified of the action of the Convention.

MR. RINGGOLD. Mr. President: I desire to take this opportunity to say that the gentleman has used the paper which he controls to assault a body of men who helped him to the position he now holds. In return for that magnanimous act, I will consent for him to have a chance to be heard.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to make the matter the special order for Monday, at two o'clock.

Carried.

COUNTY GOVERNMENT.

MR. HERRINGTON. I move the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section four, and amendments, are before the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: The amendment which I propose as a substitute, or amendment offered by Judge Hale, epitomizes the substance of the provisions contained in section four, and is a clean cut provision. That portion of the amendment to which I object is that in reference to a vote of the county. My opinion is, sir, that the effect is not fully appreciated by gentlemen in considering this section—the effect which this provision will have upon organizing a system of government for counties and townships. It permits portions of a county to accept the provisions provided for in section four, as proposed by Judge Hale, and it requires that the counties shall first take a vote. What system of county government will you have when the county adopts this system? Will the old system continue as it is now? Will you keep up the present system that is provided by the Legislature under the various Acts passed with reference to county governments? How will you adopt one uniform system to which you will compel counties to conform? That is the proposition which is presented to you, and to which you must come, whether you sleep over it, or whether you wake to its full importance. Under the system proposed in the amendment of the gentleman from Placer, a single township will have power to adopt this system by a vote of the township, while the remaining portion of the county will stay under the old system, or have no government at all. I say this situation of things is possible under this amendment, as proposed by Judge Hale. Now, it is true that this amendment proposed by Judge Hale dispenses with section five; but it will alter the symphony of the system proposed by the committee. Section five can be amended in a much shorter way than by adopting that amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me the amendment is objectionable upon two grounds. One is that it does not permit the people of the several counties to determine for themselves by a vote whether they will or will not adopt a system of township organization. That I apprehend would be more than unwise. In the Western States, where a system of township government has been, of later years, adopted, they inaugurated in all those States, or in most of them, by submitting the question to a vote of the county or subdivision of the county. They were adopted in portions of these States and in others they were rejected, and the experience of those portions adopting them has been such as to lead the remaining portions to adopt them also. I have for these reasons given portions of a county the right to adopt the system, independent of the other portion. I think in any event the question ought to be submitted to the people. Therefore, I am opposed to the substitute.

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that the section proposed by the committee is preferable to either of the amendments. The amendment of the gentleman from Placer was considered by the committee. It seemed to embody a consolidation of sections four and five, with the exception that it authorized portions of a county to adopt township organization. The section as it stands simply provides for the organization of county governments by the Legislature, thus permitting counties to establish township organizations. But the amendment of the gentleman from Placer allows portions of counties to establish township organizations. The committee considered that that could not be practically operated; that there must necessarily be great confusion where one part of the county is having its affairs conducted under one system, and another part of the county is having its affairs conducted under another and different system. The amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara is still more objectionable, if I understand it, because it seems to compel the Legislature, as far as we can do so, to provide for township organizations in the various counties. Now, there was a section in the old Constitution like this as it stands. The Constitution declared that the Legislature shall provide for township government, but the people of the State either never desired these organizations, or else the representatives have for a long time neglected to accede to their desires. But the amendment of the gentleman seems to make the same mistake that was made in the old Constitution, and that is that it makes it mandatory upon the Legislature.

MR. HERRINGTON. If the gentleman will excuse me, the gentleman from Santa Clara made that mistake on purpose. He did not design to leave it to the Legislature to do as they see fit.

MR. FREEMAN. In that it is objectionable. There is no reason why we should force a system upon the people of the counties.

REMARKS OF MR. MILLS.

MR. MILLS. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara will not prevail. The provision of the present Constitution provides that the Legislature shall establish a system of township organizations. But they never have done so. The matter was referred to the Legislature and they refused to do it. The report of the committee is that the Boards of Supervisors may establish such township governments. It is true it would be under a provision passed by the Legislature, but if the Boards of the several counties undertook to establish such township organizations, they are permitted to do it under section four. The difficulty was that, until you had taken a vote in the counties, you could not know what the people desired. The Boards of Supervisors are able to know what is best for the several counties. At the present time the system of township governments amounts to nothing. It is true that the revenue Act provides that Assessors shall provide for assessing property by townships, but in two thirds of the cases he cannot tell where the township lines are. It is a great difficulty for him to undertake to do it. When assessments are made for road purposes, a township sometimes gets more than its share, because he does not know where the lines are. But when this system is put into force, we shall hear of no more of such cases as the case of the people against Moore. Why not put it in the power of the people? It may be said that the people have never asked for it. Do you not know that petitions have been sent to the Legislature from the different counties repeatedly, endeavoring to obtain this thing? I say, to my certain knowledge, such petitions have been sent from the county where I reside. The Boards of Supervisors know the feeling in the county, and can act intelligently. I think it is best that local matters should be determined by local officers.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: The proposition embodied in sections four and five was really contemplated by the Committee on Legislative Department. The adoption of the report of that committee, as it was adopted by this Convention, makes a necessity for this and similar provisions in this Constitution. There we provided that the Legislature shall pass none but general laws, and that matters of local legislation should be left to the people of the several counties and townships. Now, in carrying that out it was contemplated that a provision of this kind would have to be inserted in the Constitution. That the Boards of Supervisors, or Trustees, or whatever their names, should legislate upon matters affecting their own counties. The county has, through its Board of Supervisors, to regulate all matters affecting the county; not only to grant franchises for bridges, provide for the salaries of officers, but all other matters which ought to be done by the Board of Supervisors. I believe, when considering the expense, that it will limit the expense of the government. I believe it will limit the expense of city governments, and township governments, and compel them to live within their income. The amendment of Judge Hale, that the Legislature shall fix the salaries in the different counties, is in conflict with the main idea embodied in the legislative provision, that none but general laws should be passed. In each county of the State to-day they have different salaries for their officers. The member elected is often under stronger obligations to the county officers than to the people themselves, and hence the misfortune of some of the counties who have a special system of salaries. This very provision provided for in the legislative report, doing away with special legislation, leaving the Supervisors of the county and citizens to determine for themselves this question, is the theory that is determined upon in this Convention, and you must go back on it if you adopt this amendment. I hold that this is one of the first pieces of reform, doing away with special legislation; that special bills were passed often, under a suspension of the rules, without any member of the Legislature knowing anything about them except the member who introduced them. I believe this idea ought to be carried out. I believe it will simplify government, and reduce the expense one half in many counties. I believe it is what the people demand, and that they can elect Supervisors with reference to that question who will be better able to determine what salaries officers should have than the man who is elected to the Legislature with reference to how he shall vote on United States Senator. This is the true principle of government—to bring it home to the people. You cannot bring government any too near to the people. You cannot make your officers any too much responsible directly to the people.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: Whatever objections may be raised to other parts of this report, I think this section four is wholly unobjectionable. It is part of the system that is made necessary and indispensable by the action of this committee in adopting the report of the Committee on Legislative Department; inasmuch as the Legislature is to be cut off from all special legislation, it becomes indispensable to make provision for local governments by general laws. This section four follows that general principle; it is clear and distinct, and susceptible of but one interpretation, and covers the ground as far as it goes. I confess I am utterly unable to see any objections to one single line or sentence in section four. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer is a departure, and would be utterly ruinous, to say that a part of a county should adopt township organizations, and another part remain as it is; that would inevitably create confusion, and the system would certainly break down of its own weight. I take it, that every man on the committee will refuse to adopt that principle. As to the mode prescribed in this section four, it is pliant and elastic, and the people may adopt it by a vote of the people of the county, or they may decide to remain as they are; that is as it should be; there will be no confusion; the people have it in their own hands to adopt it, or let it alone. As to the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara, it seems to me it is an attempt to make a distinction where there is no difference. True, he would hand it over to the Legislature, but there he will be precluded by the action of this committee, because we have already decided that there shall be no special legislation. It must be done by general Act. Why not do it right here, and now, by the adoption of this report and this section? There is no trouble about it, and the people of a county may, at any time, adopt it for themselves. You cannot pass special Acts, and if you do it by general Act, the effect will be exactly the same as it would be by the adoption of this section, so where is the necessity for leaving it open to the Legislature in future? I am not able to see where there would be anything gained by it; it would simply be calling upon the Legislature to do what might be done here.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. WATERS. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. West, Evey, Larkin, and White.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale.

Lost.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I offer a substitute for section four.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 4. The Legislature shall establish a system of county governments, which shall be uniform throughout the State; shall provide for the election or appointment in the several counties of Boards of Supervisors, Sheriffs, County Clerks, District Attorneys, and such other county, township, and municipal officers as public convenience may require, and shall prescribe their duties and fix their compensations, and by general laws shall provide for township organization under which any county may organize whenever a majority of the qualified electors of such county, voting at a general election, shall so determine; and whenever a county shall adopt township organization, the assessment and collection of the revenue shall be made, and the business of such county and the local affairs of the several townships therein shall be managed and transacted in the manner prescribed by such general laws. It shall regulate the salaries and fees of all county officers, and for this purpose may classify the county by population."

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: That is just word for word the same as the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, except that it leaves out these words, "subdivisions of counties," where they occur in the second and third places. It leaves that part out which some gentlemen object to here. Now, my object in offering this is to consolidate sections four and five. If gentlemen will look at this report they will find there are twenty sections—quite a long document. It is objectionable in that respect. This substitute embodies everything that is contained in sections four and five—puts it in one section, and saves several repetitions. As the section will then stand, it will only be about as long as section five now is.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out the words: "under which any county may organize," and insert in lieu thereof the words, "which organization any county may adopt." As the language now reads it seems to make perfect nonsense. The phraseology is this: "and by general laws shall provide for township organization, under which any county may organize." Now, a township is a subdivision of a county. How, then, a county can organize under a township organization I fail to understand. The meaning is what I want embodied in the amendment. Put such language in the Constitution, and the part is made greater than the whole. "May provide by general laws for township organization, under which any county may organize." I say no county can organize under a township organization, because a township is part of a county. The amendment I suggest is simply to correct the phraseology, and make that verbal accuracy that should exist in a Constitution.

MR. AYERS. I suggest that it might be cured by a simple transposition, thus: "shall provide for township organizations by general laws, under which any county may organize."

MR. MCCALLUM. It seems to me that the section is good as it is, and I don't see the necessity of this strained construction. "By general laws shall provide for township organization, under which any county may organize." It is a general law. There is no question about it. It appears to me there is no amendment necessary. I suppose it would be still more complete to say, "by general laws shall provide, etc., under which laws any county may organize."

MR. CROUCH. There is one serious objection to the amendment proposed by Judge Rolfe. He says the Legislature shall, by general and uniform laws, provide for the election or appointment of officers. I certainly should object to the appointment of these officers in any county. I understand that is included in the substitute proposed by Judge Rolfe, and I shall oppose it.

MR. JOHNSON. I think the language proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco is a little better than the way the committee have it, but it is suggested that he repeat the word "organization."

MR. WINANS. I have no objection to that.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by Mr. Winans.

MR. HALE. I would suggest to the gentleman from San Francisco to strike out the words "under which," where they occur in the second line, and substitute the word "in." Also, strike out the words "may organize," where they occur in the third line.

MR. WINANS. I don't see the relevancy of the amendment.

MR. HALE. I offer that as an amendment to the amendment.

MR. WINANS. I don't think my amendment is understood. In order to make the language plain and clear, I propose to make it read: "may provide for township organization, which any county may adopt." That language will convey, without any doubt, the idea intended to be conveyed by the section.

MR. HALE. The amendment I propose will make it read this way: "The Legislature shall establish a system of county government which shall be uniform throughout the State, and by general laws shall provide for township organization in any county, whenever a majority of the qualified electors of such county shall so determine."

MR. AYERS. I submit that the manner in which the gentleman is attempting to amend the section will alter the meaning which the committee intended to convey. He strikes out the word "county," and puts in township organization, and as I understand it, it is the intention of the committee to have it so that each county may, as a county, organize under it.

MR. LARKIN. If, after the word "organization," in line three, we add "township government," that would make it perfectly clear.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that this ought to be clear. What is the purport of the Winans amendment? It is to make section four read: "and by general laws shall provide for township organization, which any county may adopt." Now, suppose it was as the gentleman from Los Angeles proposes, it would read: "and shall provide for township organization by general laws, under which any county may organize." There is no difference. The meaning is the same, only the language of the Winans amendment is shorter and more apt, because every township organization must be under general laws. Where the organization is adopted it is under general laws.

MR. FREEMAN. The original section is substantially clear, and the amendments proposed have the same ambiguities as the original section. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco reads that the Legislature shall provide for township organization, which any county may adopt.

MR. JOHNSON. What is the antecedent of "which?"

MR. FREEMAN. "Township organization."

MR. JOHNSON. Then I will read it and see if it is not good language.

MR. FREEMAN. That is not the question. Under these general laws the county is to organize. It is all right the way it is.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Winans.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale.

Lost.

MR. AYERS. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out 'by general laws' in line two, and insert the same after the word 'organization' in the third line, so as to read: 'and shall provide for township organization by general laws, under which any county may organize.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on that amendment.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Bernardino, Judge Rolfe.

MR. EVEY. I move that the words "or appointment" be stricken out of that amendment.

MR. ROLFE. What will be done in case of the death of the County Clerk?

MR. EVEY. This makes the appointment by the Legislature. They might appoint all these officers.

MR. ROLFE. It says they may provide for them, not appoint them.

MR. VAN DYKE. I suggest that we strike out "County Clerks, District Attorneys," etc., because we have already provided for them.

No second.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Bernardino, Judge Rolfe.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section five.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 5. The Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election or appointment, in the several counties, of Boards of Supervisors, Sheriffs, County Clerks, District Attorneys, and such other county, township, and municipal officers as public convenience may require, and shall prescribe their duties and fix their compensation. It shall regulate the salaries and fees of all county officers, in proportion to duties, and for this purpose may classify the counties by population; and it shall provide for the strict accountability of county and township officers for all fees which may be collected by them, and for all public and municipal moneys which may be paid to them or officially come into their possession.

MR. HERRINGTON. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add after the word 'duties,' in line five, the words 'and responsibilities;' and also, strike out all after the word 'population.'"

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: By adding the words "and responsibilities" after the word "duties" it will cover the whole ground embraced in those four lines.

MR. WEBSTER. I wish to offer an amendment as a substitute.

THE CHAIRMAN. Not in order at present. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara.

Lost.

MR. WEBSTER. I offer my substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election, by the several counties, of Boards of Supervisors, and such other county, township, and municipal officers as public convenience may require, and shall prescribe their duties. It shall fix the compensation of the members of the Boards of Supervisors of the several counties, and shall provide for a strict accountability of county and township officers for all fees which may be collected by them, and for all public or municipal moneys which may be paid to them or finally come into their possession."

REMARKS OF MR. WEBSTER.

MR. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman: It occurs to me that the construction of this word "appointment," in the second line, is altogether too broad. I think, sir, it would be subject to such construction as alluded to; that is, the power of the Legislature to appoint county officers, including County Boards of Supervisors; so I have left that word out. In this proposition I have made, I have also left out the words "Sheriffs, County Clerks, District Attorneys," etc., because in section fourteen, as amended, of the report of the Judiciary, these are all provided for. It is simply a repetition of the words. I have also left out the proviso that provides for the salaries of county officers. I claim that it is for the best interest of all concerned, that county officers—the salaries and fees—should be provided for by the Boards of Supervisors of the several counties. We know very well that most of the evils which have sprung up here on account of the misdirection of the Legislature have worked great injury. I have known instances where an officer, after his election, would come before the Legislature, unknown to the people before his term of office began, and has been, through special legislation, enabled to increase his fees and salary. I think this had better be provided for by the local authorities. I believe it to be the desire of this body, and of the people, to bring our local affairs as near home to the people as possible. If the salaries of these minor county officers are provided for and fixed by the local authorities, it will be much better than if done by a general bill. You can take as an illustration the report of the Judiciary which we have just adopted. Now, there are not half the members of this Convention that know as to the equity of salaries provided for in many of the counties. It is claimed now that some of them are not high enough, and that others are too high. It shows the impossibility of the Legislature fixing salaries for minor officers.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute.

Division was called, and the vote stood: Ayes, 39; noes, 32.

No quorum voting.

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman has explained that the object of his amendment is to give the Boards of Supervisors the right to fix the compensation of county officers. I desire to call his attention to the fact that his amendment will not realize any such object. The Legislature, by virtue of its general power, will have full control over this matter, unless something in his amendment says that this power shall be vested solely in Boards of Supervisors. Now, the evil which the counties sought to avoid in this report was this: the evil of special pleading; the evil of men going from the county to the Legislature, and having special laws passed which affected their county only. To cure that evil, the committee have provided for a classification of counties, and provided that the salaries of the various county officers should be fixed upon some scale. Now, the amendment does not provide for that, nor for anything else. The simple result will be, that the Legislature will, as heretofore, have control over the question. They will in the future, as in the past, have a right to make a local fee bill, because it must be made in some way. The amendment does not provide, as he wishes, that these matters should be under the control of the Supervisors. If the committee desire that the Supervisors should have control, I don't know that I have any objection; but I don't want them to vote under a delusion.

MR. VAN DYKE. I call the gentleman's attention to the legislative article already adopted, which provides that the Legislature shall not pass special laws in regard to fees.

MR. FREEMAN. Yes; the Legislature will have to pass general laws.

MR. VAN DYKE. I think this is the proper place to put it. Under the scheme we have been formulating here, the Legislature cannot pass special laws, and the necessary consequence will be to throw a great deal of the local business upon the Boards of Supervisors of their respective counties. It will have the effect of raising the standard of that body. The people will elect a Board that they have confidence in, and I say it is proper that they should be given power to fix the fees of county officers.

MR. BIGGS. An amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Supervisors shall fix the salaries of all other county officers."

MR. WEBSTER. I accept the amendment.

MR. VAN DYKE. I suggest that you make it read "other county officers not otherwise provided for."

MR. WEBSTER. I accept the suggestion.

MR. WINANS. I submit that Sheriffs, County Clerks, and District Attorneys ought to be constitutional officers. They always have been such, and ought always to be.

MR. VAN DYKE. They are provided for in the article on judiciary.

REMARKS OF MR. WATERS.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I think there is one objection to this amendment which gives power to fix the salaries of the several county officers to the counties. It is this: some of these county officers have duties to perform in which the State has an interest, and the Legislature has something to say as to the duties to be performed by these officers, and the pay they shall receive. Now, for instance, the State has an interest in the duties to be performed by County Assessors, and has something to do in saying what they shall receive. The Tax Collector, the Sheriff, and the District Attorney are in the same category. It ought not to be left to the local Boards to so reduce the pay that these officers cannot afford to hold the office. Now, there has been an instance of one county in this State where the county was so situated that if they could have done it, they would not have had a single officer in the county. The County of El Dorado was in such a situation, that they could not even afford to have a Board of Supervisors, for fear that summons would be served on them. Now, might not this act in such a way that you would have no assessment roll. I think it is unreasonable. I think that power should not be given to the local Board.

REMARKS OF MR HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not pass. I am unable to see wherein it is any improvement upon this section reported by the committee. I am aware of the fact that the gentleman who makes this motion says he proposes to substitute the Boards of Supervisors for the Legislature, in fixing the fees and salaries of all county officers, except their own fees; and I suppose, from the discussion here, that there is some color of sanction for the idea in our article on legislative department, wherein we have inserted four distinct cases, and denied the Legislature the right to pass such local or special laws. If the legislative article intends anything of this kind, however, it is news to me. The evil they sought to remedy was to avoid this legislation for special localities. What was proposed was, that instead of having local legislation by the Legislature, we were to have local Legislatures, or Boards of Supervisors. But no such idea was understood as this in the Committee of the Whole when that article was adopted. The scheme of the committee was this: in place of special local legislation by the Legislature, there should be general laws provided. For instance, in place of having a bill passed, regulating the fees of the Sheriff in Placer County, there should be a law providing for the fees and compensation of the Sheriffs and other officers of the counties of the State, and they can classify the counties by population so as to do it, and to give to each set of officers, according to the classification of the counties, a just compensation. It was never contemplated taking that power out of the hands of the Legislature and placing it in the local Boards of Supervisors. That would be a most dangerous experiment, and those who try it will very soon have occasion to recede from their experiment. That is not the evil sought to be remedied. It was to require these laws to be made general. If you undertake to leave it to the Boards of Supervisors to fix the compensation of county officers, you will soon have Pandemonium in these counties. You cannot point me to a county where you would not have it. The committee have formulated this section upon the same principle on which the Committee on Legislative Department acted, and I hope the amendment will not prevail.

MR. WYATT. I am a good deal like the fellow who was too lazy to say his prayers. He hung the Lord's Prayer on the foot of his bed, and, pointing to the paper, said: "Lord, them's my sentiments," and jumped into bed. Judge Hale has stolen a march on me and uttered my sentiments exactly.

MR. TINNIN. I desire to call attention to section fourteen of the report of the Judiciary Committee: "The Legislature shall provide for the election of Clerks, Sheriffs, and other necessary officers, and shall fix, by law, their duties and compensation, which compensation shall not be increased or diminished," etc. Now, the committee has passed this. If you wish to undo it, vote for the Webster amendment.

MR. WINANS. I submit that it would not undo it, for the two would be in direct conflict with each other.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section six.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 6. Corporations, for municipal purposes, shall not be created by special laws, but the Legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns, and cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated may become organized under and subject to such general laws. Cities and towns may become incorporated under general laws, whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith.

MR. HERRINGTON. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all down to and including the word 'but,' in line two."

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. Out of order at present.

MR. HERRINGTON. This clause is entirely unnecessary. The Legislature is bound to provide by general laws—they cannot do it by special laws. This is to strike out the negative proposition.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

Division was called for, and the amendment was adopted by a vote of 52 ayes to 26 noes.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara: I offer an amendment to section six.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No city or town shall include within its limits any adjacent farming land without the consent of the owners thereof."

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. I hope that amendment will be adopted. Cities often take in adjacent lands for the purpose of making taxes.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I know of some gentlemen who own rich land adjacent to town, who pay no taxes, and I am in favor of compelling them to help bear the burden.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: This amendment was before the committee, and the committee were unanimous against the proposition. It seems to me there is a very serious objection to such a proposition. It would work most disastrously in many cases. There might be some cases where it might work well, but the Constitution must apply to all.

MR. WHITE. I hope the amendment will be adopted, because I have known very serious inconveniences to farming land which were tried to be incorporated into the town. There is a constant fight between towns and the local farms around.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section seven.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 7. City and county governments may be merged and consolidated into one municipal government, with one set of officers, and may be incorporated under general laws providing for the incorporation and organization of corporations for municipal purposes. The provisions of this Constitution applicable to cities, and also those applicable to counties, so far as not inconsistent or not prohibited to cities, shall be applicable to such consolidated government. In consolidated city and county governments, of more than one hundred thousand population, there shall be two Boards of Supervisors or houses of legislation—one of which, to consist of twelve persons, shall be elected by general ticket from the city and county at large, and shall hold office for the term of four years, but shall be so classified that, after the first election, only six shall be elected every two years; the other, to consist of twelve persons, shall be elected every two years, and shall hold office for two years. Any casual vacancy in the office of Supervisor in either Board shall be filled by the Mayor.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: This section emanated from Judge Hager, and he desired an opportunity to discuss it. I ask, as a favor, that it be passed for the present. He will be here to-night.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. Chairman: I telegraphed to Judge Hager, and received a reply from him, in which he says he will be up to-night. I have no doubt he would greatly prefer to have the section passed over for the present.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to postpone until to-morrow.

Carried.

THE SECRETARY read section eight.

SEC. 8. No person shall be eligible to a county or city office unless he has been a citizen and resident within such county or city for two years next preceding his election or appointment to an office therein.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section eight.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out section eight.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I will say, in the first place, I think it is entirely competent for the Legislature to provide for a qualification which a man shall have to be elected to office; in the next place, in my judgment, the best qualification he can have is the fact that, having been voted for, he has received a sufficient number of votes to elect him. This section is directed to persons coming into a neighborhood and running for office. The fact that a man is a new-comer is a fact which the voters themselves must take into consideration, and if, notwithstanding that fact, they prefer him to some older citizen, I think that preference should be respected.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I hope the motion made will not prevail. I think it is a very necessary section. It is necessary, for the reason that committees should be governed by those who fully comprehend the necessities of the people. Now, this idea of men stepping immediately into a community, and comprehending the wants of the community, is an impossibility. In moments of great excitement it often happens that men are placed in office not competent to perform the duties.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I hope the motion to strike out will carry, and that this Convention will not stultify itself by declaring that the people are not capable of self-government. No such provision as this exists anywhere. If you can make a limit of this kind, for the reasons just asserted, you might go on and prescribe other qualifications, limiting and restricting the power of the people in the selection of their officers. If we are to have a free government by the people, it seems to me it is safe to trust the people to select their own officers. Such a provision has no business in the Constitution.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: To use a stale argument, I hope the motion will be adopted, and the section stricken out. All these limitations are simply limitations upon the liberty of the people, and where not necessary, they should not be inserted in the Constitution.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

MR. McCALLUM. Certainly.

MR. HOWARD. Why, then, not allow all aliens to vote? Why require a man to be naturalized in order to vote or be admitted to office?

MR. McCALLUM. My proposition is that these are limitations upon the people. I do not see that the questions affect my proposition. I concede that in such cases, and in all cases where there is a necessity for a limitation upon the people—upon the liberties of the people—that limit ought to be inserted in the Constitution. But in this matter I think the people are fully competent to determine among themselves who is qualified and who is not, and determine who they will elect and who not.

MR. TINNIN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

MR. McCALLUM. Yes, sir.

MR. TINNIN. Didn't you vote upon the clause of the Judiciary Committee requiring judicial offices to be of a certain class, and was not that a limit?

MR. McCALLUM. I am not denying that the Constitution has to make limitations in a certain sense. They have to commend what is right in one case, and prohibit what is wrong in another. But what I object to is going into unnecessary details in this thing. Now, sir, in the more populous counties, where population and wealth have doubled in the last five or six years, those of us who have resided there twenty-five or thirty years, do not propose to place any limit upon the liberties of the people—they may select whom they please. I understand that some members of this Convention might possibly be interested in this question, but I would remind them that they have just as good a chance as anybody else. I hope the motion will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. DUDLEY.

MR. DUDLEY. Mr. Chairman: I submit to this committee that a proposition which prevents persons from aspiring to office until they shall have got their house warm, is not an unnecessary detail. It has occurred in this State in the past, and may occur again, that gentlemen, owing to the shifting of the party in power, have gone from one locality to another for the sole purpose of having a voice in the management of public affairs. Now, no one knows better than the gentleman from Alameda, the methods and means by which men are nominated for office. They know that when the nomination is once made the line is drawn between parties in a political contest, and the question of the length of residence of the candidate is no longer in view. It is taken for granted that the nominating convention has passed upon the matter, and that the candidate is acceptable. Now, it is not asking too much of a man, before he becomes an applicant for office, that he should have become a resident long enough to enable him to comprehend the wants, wishes, and necessities of the community in which he lives. I hope, therefore, that the section will be adopted. I should prefer to require a residence of five years. There are plenty of prominent residents in this State to hold all the offices.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I submit to the committee such as that savors a little of spite. Now, it has been thought when once one becomes a citizen of the United States, or has grown up here for a period of twenty-one years, or has been here five years and naturalized, that he understands the theory of this government. I submit that it is not necessary that a man should reside three or four years in a county. If it is necessary for him to be there two years in order to hold any of these local offices, we may just as well consider it ten years. It is not a question of the number of years, but it is a question of honesty, capability, and capacity to discharge the duties of the office. And I submit that the people ought to be their own judges in regard to that matter.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out.

Carried.

THE SECRETARY read section nine:

SEC. 9. Any city having a population of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants may frame a charter for its own government, consistent with and subject to the Constitution and laws of this State, by causing a Board of fifteen freeholders, who shall have been for at least five years qualified electors thereof, to be elected by the qualified voters of such city, at any general or special election, whose duty it shall be, within ninety days after such election, to prepare and propose a charter for such city, which shall be signed in duplicate by the members of such Board, or a majority of them, and returned, one copy thereof to the Mayor, or other chief executive officer of such city, and the other to the Recorder of deeds of the county. Such proposed charter shall then be published in two daily papers of largest general circulation in such city for at least twenty days, and within not less than thirty days after such publication it shall be submitted to the qualified electors of such city at a general or special election, and if a majority of such qualified electors voting thereat shall ratify the same, it shall, at the end of sixty days thereafter, become the charter of such city, or if such city be consolidated with a county in government, then of such city and county, and shall become the organic law thereof and supersede any existing charter and all amendments thereof, and all special laws inconsistent with such charter. A copy of such charter, certified by the Mayor, or chief executive officer, and authenticated by the seal of such city, setting forth the submission of such charter to the electors, and its ratification by them, shall be made in duplicate, and deposited, one in the office of the Secretary of State, the other, after being recorded in the office of the Recorder of deeds of the county, among the archives of the city, and thereafter all Courts shall take judicial notice thereof. The charter so ratified may be amended at intervals of not less than two years, by proposals therefor, submitted by the legislative authority of the city to the qualified voters thereof, at a general or special election held at least sixty days after the publication of such proposals, and ratified by at least three fifths of the qualified electors voting thereat. In submitting any such charter, or amendment thereto, any alternative article or proposition may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to the others.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I make the same motion in regard to section nine, that it be passed temporarily. That is the principal section of the report.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, it is so ordered. The Secretary will read section ten.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 10. The compensation or fees of any county, city, town, or municipal officer shall not be increased after his election or during his term of office; nor shall the term of any such officer be extended beyond the period for which he is elected or appointed.

MR. SWENSON. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to the section: 'But the Board of Supervisors may require all such officers under bond to renew their security from time to time, and in default of giving such new security, their offices shall be deemed vacant.'"

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. I move to strike out the section, because section fourteen of the article on judiciary, already adopted, renders this section unnecessary.

MR. FREEMAN. I think the gentleman from Solano is mistaken about section fourteen being sufficiently broad to cover the ground covered by section ten. Section fourteen provides for the election of Clerks, Supreme Court and County Clerks, District Attorneys, Sheriffs, and other officers. It seems to me that section would be construed as having reference to State and county officers, and not to city and township officers. Section ten also provides that their terms shall not be extended, and section fourteen of the other article makes no provision upon that subject. Therefore, it seems to me best to retain this section. Both provisions are good.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not prevail. Now, it is said that section fourteen of the judicial article covers the ground; an inspection shows that it does not; that only partially covers it. This section ten is just where it belongs in this Constitution; it belongs in the article concerning cities, counties, and townships—it is right in itself. The rule applies to cities, counties, and towns, and is right and just, and that is the place for it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Swenson.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section eleven.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 11. No county, city, town, or other public or municipal corporation, nor the inhabitants thereof, nor the property therein, shall be released or discharged from their or its proportionate share of taxes to be levied for State purposes, nor shall commutation for such taxes be authorized in any form whatever.

No amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 12. Any county, city, town, or township, may make and enforce within their respective limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws.

MR. STUART. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to be added to the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature shall provide by law for the inspection of all distilled liquors, wines, and beer, in order to prevent their adulteration."

REMARKS OF MR. STUART.

MR. STUART. Mr. Chairman: I desire to have the legislative power pass laws that will stand. It is a well known fact that adulterations have become the order of the day in these as well as other things, and I want to see laws passed to prevent it, if it is possible to do so. I would like to have the Secretary read an article which expresses my views on this subject.

THE SECRETARY read the following, from the Dixon Tribune:

"A WINE BUBBLE PRICKED.—Charles A. Wetmore, the Alta's correspondent at the Paris Exposition, has been making a tour through the wine-making regions of France, and studying up the whole subject of the manufacture and sale of wine with a thoroughness never excelled. His investigations throw a flood of light on the subject, and dispel a few illusions. They are a terrible eye-opener for affected connoisseurs of French wines. We might almost say they ought to make a temperance man of the most confirmed old bibber. To read these articles is to lose faith in the famous wines that have made the names of vineyards and provinces, by which they are called, known throughout the civilized and semi-civilized world. The authorities quoted by Mr. Wetmore entitle his statements to the most respectful consideration; and if the account given by the Bordeaux merchants themselves can be trusted, their vintages are more a triumph of chemistry than of nature. The most celebrated wines are turned out, in quantities to suit, in the cellars of Bordeaux, Cette, and Marseilles. No order for a particular wine ever embarrasses a French merchant. If the brand is not in market, or if the vineyard has not produced anything recently, an imitation is easily produced by mixing strong and light wines, adding alcohol manufactured in Germany, from potatoes, and then dosing the compound with chemicals, to give the required color and bouquet. Labels are no protection, for those of the famous vineyards are printed for the trade and sold in quantities to suit. Furthermore, these doctored wines can be made as cheap as desired, so that the American importer can buy Chateau Lafitte or Sauterne at a few cents a bottle, and sell it for as many dollars to boobies who pride themselves on knowing every vineyard in France. A certain degree of mixing and alcoholization are considered legitimate, and authorized by the Government, though the wines for home consumption must not be alcoholized so highly as those for export—the Government thinking that what is good enough for foreigners must not be allowed to twist the brains and burn the stomachs of its own citizens. But the illegal manufacture, with the most deleterious chemicals, is, according to Mr. Wetmore, boldly practiced under the eyes of the authorities. The French themselves do not aspire to drink the grand wines, but content themselves with a good ordinary wine of no particular brand. Our author advises the American consumer to do the same, since the cheapest wine is generally the best—at least the purest. The yield of the few famous vineyards is very small, and of very unequal degrees of merit in different years; but the regular demand from all the four quarters of the world is met every year, and enough manufactured to supply all deficiencies."

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: We have upon the books a severe statute against the adulteration of spirituous liquors, but it has never been enforced, and it has come to be a notorious fact that these adulterations are universally practiced, to the great injury of the health of our people. Now, Congress some time ago investigated this subject. A gentleman who has lately retired from the business assures me that not one tenth of the liquors drank in this State are pure liquors. That nine tenths are manufactured, doctored, and poisoned by the wholesale liquor dealers. These foreign manufacturers buy our California wines, make them up into champagne, adulterate them, and ship them back to us; and the same way with brandy. They mix it up and doctor it up with all sorts of impure chemicals, and send it back here as pure brandy. There is another evil. It interferes with the manufacture of pure brandy and pure wines. It interferes with the pure wine industry, which is just now attracting so much attention in this country, and for which there is springing up a healthy demand in London and other large centers. But so long as this manufactured stuff takes the place of it, so long the business cannot be carried on profitably here, because, with a very little pure California wine and brandy they can make enough poison by adroit mixing to supply the whole market, and destroy the health of the people also. In order to protect our own health, and the industries of the State, we must make and enforce stringent laws against the adulteration of wines and liquors. It seems to me that the only way to reach it is to do the way they do in some portions of Europe—by inspection. If the brandy don't come out colorless, let them knock the head out of the barrel and let it run. My own opinion is that the provision just introduced is one of the most necessary provisions we have.

MR. MILLS. If you apply it to one, why not to all?

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I could not hear the remark made by the gentleman who spoke last. One thing is evident, that everything that points in the direction of having fine liquors should be appreciated by this committee. [Laughter.] It is a fact that numbers of our citizens will drink, and the fact that the liquors are poisonous appears not to prevent them at all. In the midst of all this it is necessary that we should guard our citizens, if we can do it, by a constitutional provision, or in any way whatever that is reasonable. We know that poisonous liquors have injured many, and killed many, and the welfare of our citizens must be guarded. I am in favor of the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: Now, take that in connection with section twelve, that "any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce, within its respective limits, all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." This is the article on cities and counties. This section twelve refers exclusively to them. If the amendment were proper in any place in the Constitution, it would be in the legislative article, and, if a proper amendment, when we come to consider that article in Convention, the gentleman can offer it. But, sir, I wish to say, that I indorse all the gentleman has said on the great evil of adulteration of liquors. But the gentleman, in his argument, has stated that we already have a statute upon the subject which has never been enforced. Then if it cannot be enforced, what will this amendment amount to? It is proposed to say that the Legislature shall amend that Act or pass some other Act. I had supposed for the last three or four months that this was a Constitutional Convention. But as we are getting so much into details, there seems to be some question about it. There is no precedent for this kind of detail in the Constitution. Why, the gentleman from Los Angeles, in two hours, can specify one hundred clauses of legislation that ought to be enacted, yet which are unnecessary in the Constitution. Nobody denies that the Legislature has this right now. To make it consistent we had better say that the Legislature shall amend the present law, and to make it thoroughly consistent, say how and in what manner they shall amend it. I confess that I am becoming imbued with some respect for the oft-repeated complaint that we are getting too much legislation in the Constitution.

MR. REDDY. Mr. Chairman: I hope, before gentlemen vote upon this amendment, they will reflect and consider the method that will be necessary to carry this provision into effect. It will require a Board of officers from Siskiyou to San Diego.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Sonoma.

Lost.

MR. SCHOMP. I offer an amendment.

"Insert after the word 'township,' in the first line, the words 'school or road district.'"

REMARKS OF MR. SCHOMP.

MR. SCHOMP. Mr. Chairman: I offer that in the interests of public highways. We have labored under great difficulties in the improvement of these highways, by reason of the system of levying taxes. They have to be general throughout the county, and they were generally levied to meet the general wants. Now, we desire in this case to meet special wants, by authorizing the Board of Supervisors to levy a tax for roads in these local districts. We have in the county in which I live great diversity of soil. In some places the natural roadbeds are about all we need in the way of roads, and in other places it requires a large amount of money to make good roads. Some of us are willing to have our roads made permanent, and to pay for it, if the Board of Supervisors can have the power to levy the tax necessary.

MR. FREEMAN. The amendment seems to go far beyond what the gentleman professes to want. It makes a road district a legislative body, because they have power to pass laws, and make police and other local regulations.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Lost.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the section by striking out the words 'as are not in conflict with,' where they occur in the third line, and substitute therefor the following: 'as shall be authorized and prescribed by.'"

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: This amendment I hope may be adopted, for the purpose of carrying out the intention of the committee. You will observe that the words here are "all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." In these townships, as suggested by Mr. Freeman, there are no Boards to make these regulations. The amendment contemplates that general laws shall be passed by the Legislature, prescribing the means under which cities, counties, towns, and townships may make and enforce these regulations for sanitary and other purposes. Upon the breaking out of contagious or infectious diseases, there must be power to protect the community. In cities they can do it, because they have Boards to regulate such matters. But in townships they have no such organizations, and the methods and means by which they are to accomplish these things, ought to be prescribed and regulated by general laws.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I prefer the section reported by the committee, and it seems to me it is desirable upon this ground: I believe these local authorities ought to be left to do all those things that, in their judgment are necessary to be done, and that are not in conflict with the general laws of the State. But to say they shall do nothing except that which is prescribed by law, is to put an iron-bound rule in the Constitution. Leave it to them to do such things as in their judgment are best, so long as they do not conflict with the general law.

MR. HERRINGTON. This is an ungrammatical sentence. I offer the following amendment:

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the words 'their respective,' in line two, and insert the word 'it's' in lieu thereof."

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: As to the last amendment, there is no question but that it is necessary to make sense, and make it grammatical. As to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, I have this to say: these little two lines and a half here, I think were formulated, and written over and over again, more than any section in this report, and I had supposed the committee had reached a happy agreement upon that little section twelve. The gentleman from Placer had his full share in the construction of that section.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I am sorry to see that the gentleman from Placer, and the gentleman from Alameda, cannot rest satisfied with their own work. They had a great deal to do in formulating that in the committee. Now, I think both of these amendments are improper. I think the section is all right as it is.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Placer, Judge Hale.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

Adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section thirteen:

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 13. Taxes for county, city, town, school, and other local purposes must be levied on all subjects and objects of taxation. In addition to that which may be levied for the payment of the principal and interest of existing indebtedness, the annual rate on property shall not exceed the following: For county purposes, in counties having two million dollars or less, shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation; in counties having six million dollars, and under ten million dollars, such rate shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation; and in counties having ten million dollars or more, such rate shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation. For city and town purposes such annual rate on property in incorporated cities and towns shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation; and in any city and county with consolidated government, such rate shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation.

MR. WHITE. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization, that they have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. President: I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Carried.

And, at five o'clock P. M., the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow morning, at nine o'clock and thirty minutes.

ONE HUNDRED AND TWELFTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Friday, January 17th, 1879.

The Convention met in regular session at nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M., President Hoge in the chair.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

For one day was granted to Mr. Garvey.

Two days leave of absence was granted to Messrs. McConnell and Lampson.

Three days leave of absence was granted Mr. Morse.

Leave of absence for one week was granted to Mr. Hilborn.

THE JOURNAL.

MR. LINDOW. Mr. President: I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with and the same approved.

So ordered.

PETITIONS.

MR. HERRINGTON presented a petition and protest from one hundred and twelve business houses of San José, against special license on business.

Referred, without reading, to the Convention, to be considered with the article on revenue and taxation.

MR. VAN VOORHIES offered the following petition, signed by a large number of citizens of Alameda County, requesting the exemption of certain property from taxation:

To the Honorable J. P. Hoge, President, and to members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: Your petitioners, citizens of the State of California, and residents of Alameda County, most respectfully request your honorable body to exempt from taxation all property used exclusively for charitable, educational, and church purposes.

Laid on the table, to be considered with the article on revenue and taxation.

CITY, COUNTY, AND TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION.

MR. FREUD. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section seven, which was temporarily passed over yesterday.

CITY AND COUNTY GOVERNMENTS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 7. City and county governments may be merged and consolidated into one municipal government, with one set of officers, and may be incorporated under general laws providing for the incorporation and organization of corporations for municipal purposes. The provisions of this Constitution applicable to cities, and also those applicable to counties, so far as not inconsistent or not prohibited to cities, shall be applicable to such consolidated governments. In consolidated city and county governments of more than one hundred thousand population, there shall be two Boards of Supervisors, or houses of legislation; one of which, to consist of twelve persons, shall be elected by general ticket from the city and county at large, and shall hold office for the term of four years, but shall be so classified that after the first election only six shall be elected every two years; the other, to consist of twelve persons, shall be elected every two years, and shall hold office for two years. Any causal vacancy in the office of Supervisor in either Board shall be filled by the Mayor.

MR. MORELAND. Mr. Chairman: I send up a motion to strike out part of the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'government,' in the seventh line."

MR. VAN DYKE. I second the motion.

MR. HERRINGTON. I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section seven as follows: Strike out the words, 'for the incorporation and organization of corporations for municipal purposes,' and insert in lieu thereof the word 'therefor;' also, in line five, strike out 'so far as.'"

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I am not very well posted upon what has been done with this report. I have not had time to examine the amendments that have been adopted, and I do not exactly know the condition in which it is now. I regret very much that I could not have been here during the consideration of the report, merely from the fact that I was familiar with it; but I have not been able to get here in consequence of sickness in my family. The object of section seven is to allow these incorporations to take place as provided for in section six, which I understand has been amended. Section six reads:

"Corporations, for municipal purposes, shall not be created by special laws, but the Legislature, by general laws, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification, in proportion to population, of cities and towns; and cities and towns heretofore organized or incorporated, may become organized under and subject to such general laws. Cities and towns may become incorporated under general laws, whenever a majority of the electors, voting at a general election, shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith."

That is section six. Now, section seven says that, "city and county governments may be merged and consolidated into one municipal government, with one set of officers, and may be incorporated under general laws providing for the incorporation and organization of corporations for municipal purposes." That is referring to the preceding section. The general laws that may be passed in accordance with the preceding section shall be applicable to cities and counties, incorporated under section seven. The amendment would destroy the very object that the section has in view. I think the amendment ought not to be adopted.

I understand there is another amendment to strike out "so far as.' That language, according to my notion, is strictly correct. Just so far and no farther. The limitation is so far as they are not inconsistent they shall be applicable. I see no reason for striking the words out.

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: In reference to the first amendment, I do not see why it should not be adopted. That strikes out the balance of the section from the word "government." Now, that part that he moves to strike out is a good deal legislation; it provides that in cities of over one hundred thousand inhabitants there shall be two Boards of Supervisors or houses of legislation. I do not like that word to begin with, and to end with you might find that a city of one hundred thousand inhabitants would get along better with one Board than the expense of two. I think it would be better to leave that to legislation, because then it could be modified as experience should show to be desirable. I think it would be better to strike out that part. I suppose that was the object of the motion to strike out. We may find it harmful, and then we could not amend it. In cases like that I think it is better to leave it to the Legislature.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I presume it is pretty well understood that in all municipal governments there are two Boards of legislation. In the City of San Francisco the reason they have had one is that the Constitution would not admit of two. It provides that there shall be one Board of Supervisors in each county. It is intended to have two houses of legislation, or Boards of Aldermen. One is intended to be a check upon the other. When a measure passes one body it has to go to the other, and the people have time to see what it is. Public opinion is brought to bear upon it, and the result is better legislation. So in the Legislature; a bill passes one house and is generally discussed, and the other house can act more intelligently upon it. This provision is intended to make it compulsory upon cities having a consolidated government that they should have two Boards of legislation. That is the intent of it, that it should be a constitutional provision. Is it right, or is it wrong? In regard to the argument that it is legislation, you might make that objection to every provision that is offered in this Constitution, because the Legislature is all powerful, unless it is limited by the Constitution itself. I know that when I was in the Legislature, and since I have been out, I have been called upon to know if I could not control some bill by which we could get around that provision in the Constitution, in order that we might have two Boards in that great city. We find the necessity of it. I have been spoken to again, and again, and again, about having two Boards in that great City of San Francisco, and in any city that has fifty thousand, or one hundred thousand, or two hundred thousand inhabitants. I hope that the provision will remain in the section.

REMARKS OF MR. MORELAND.

MR. MORELAND. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the motion to strike out all after the word "government" will prevail. We ought not to lay down any iron bound rule for the government of cities and counties, especially such a rule as is laid down in this section. It seems to me that this is a matter of legislation entirely; that under this Constitution, if adopted, the Legislature, if it sees fit to, can provide for the plan that is laid down in this section. We ought not to adopt it in this Constitution so that it could not be done away with if the people did not like it, or if it did not work well. I hope the motion will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment to strike out will not prevail. It is not a question whether this is legislation or not; it is not a question whether the Legislature can make this provision or not at some future session; but it is a question whether it is right or not. It is a question whether cities of large population, where there are interests involved as momentous, perhaps, as ever came before the Legislature, should have a Board of Supervisors divided into two bodies, like a legislative body. The reasons are strong. If there be any reason why there should be two houses in a legislative body, the reasons are as strong in favor of having two branches of the city Legislature as there can be of the State. We all understand in San Francisco how easy it is to get a resolution passed by the Board of Supervisors. We all understand how easy it is for an ordinance to pass through one body that may be inimical to the interests of the people. It may be passed by lobbying. It may be in the interests of some contractor, or some ring, or some political party. If there are two houses it needs no argument to show that there must be some delay and some discussion. The case is very different with a city of one hundred thousand inhabitants and that of a few hundred. In a village of a few hundred everybody knows everybody's business; every citizen knows all that is going on, in the Board of Supervisors and out of it. But in a large city it is vastly different. There is the hurrying to and fro, the attention to one's own concerns, the never ending conflict of life, the conflict of a mercantile community, of a trading community, that absorbs men's attention, and absorbs their time, and they have little opportunity to look after their Boards of Supervisors, and look after the schemes of politicians and the schemes of contractors of all sorts. Every imaginable interest centers in the Board of Supervisors, and, with a single Board, there is abundant opportunity to slide things through, and often the feeble barrier of five days' publication of an ordinance before the ayes and noes are called on its final passage is violated or dispensed with, and the ordinance goes into effect and is enforced for years and years, until it occurs to somebody interested to ascertain whether that order was lawfully passed; and then they turn back and find that the ordinance was not legally passed, and then down it goes. A case of this kind occurred in the case of these famous riot trials. There had been an ordinance on the books for years, and I suppose had been enforced for many years, or many parts of it had been enforced. Finally the so-called riot trials came up. The question was raised and an investigation entered into to see whether the ordinance was properly passed or not. It was discovered that it had been rushed through, the point was made in Court, and down it went. Now, these two Boards of Supervisors, as provided in this section, will, to a great degree, obviate these difficulties. I do not see why we should not put this into the Constitution, that, "in consolidated city and county governments of more than one hundred thousand population there shall be two Boards of Supervisors." The expense is trifling compared to the interests involved, and I can think of no possible objection that could be urged against it, except that it costs a little more to support than one Board; but the check which it will be upon reckless legislation it seems to me is beyond all question. I hope that section seven will stand as reported by the committee, and in saying so I think I give voice to the unanimous opinion of the San Francisco delegation.

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I understand that this section is intended to give to cities of one hundred thousand inhabitants the privilege of having two Boards of legislation. I am satisfied that they should have, if they desire, but the trouble is, they have specified in the section just how these two Boards shall be constituted, what shall be their term of office, etc. I would leave it to read: "in consolidated city and county governments of more than one hundred thousand population, there shall be two Boards of Supervisors or houses of legislation;" and then leave the balance to the Legislature to say how long the terms of these officers shall be, what number shall constitute each Board, etc. I do not think there ought to be one Board of legislation for cities of such vast commercial importance as San Francisco. I am in favor of the adoption of that portion of the section which authorizes two houses of legislation, but I am in favor of striking out all that which enters into details.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: As some of the gentlemen appear to think that this is a new thing, I desire to announce the fact that it is not a new thing. I find this provision in other Constitutions where it has been adopted, and where it has been acted upon. I will refer to the Constitution of Missouri, which says it shall be a feature of all such charters; that it shall provide, among other things, for two houses of legislation, one of which, at least, shall be elected by general ticket. That is a provision that is already adopted, and has been acted under for some years past in St. Louis. The objection that it is legislation has no application at all. The question is simply, is there any virtue in it: is there any benefit to be derived from it? Now, we all know that San Francisco is very heavily taxed. The taxation of that city is nearly six millions of dollars. Every little homestead is taxed nearly out of existence. Taxes have been imposed in every shape and form under the Consolidation Act. I think this provision a judicious one, and I hope it will be retained in the Constitution.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the proposition to have two Boards of Supervisors, or houses of legislation for the control of large cities where the government is consolidated, but I would like to ascertain from the Chairman of the committee in what manner the second Board is to be constituted? It says, "one of which, to consist of twelve persons, shall be elected by general ticket from the city and county at large, and shall hold office for the term of four years, but shall be so classified that after the first election only six shall be elected every two years; the other, to consist of twelve persons, shall be elected every two years, and shall hold office for two years." It does not specify whether they are to be from the city and county at large or not. I do not understand why it is specified in one instance and not in the other.

MR. HAGER. The intention was to leave the manner of the election of the other Board with the Legislature. The provision is, that at least one Board shall be elected from the city and county at large. The other will be elected under the general law, which as is provided may be enacted in the preceding section six. If we leave it to be arranged by the Legislature under section six, we will make no mistake.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I think it is very desirable that there should be two branches of government in a city so large as San Francisco, or as Oakland, if that should be consolidated in any way, but certainly in San Francisco. One Board operates as a check upon the other. Where legislation is carried on for such a large mass of interests it is necessary that there should be some sanction and safeguards. In the City of New York the plan has been to have a Board of Aldermen and a Board of Assistant Aldermen, through both of which all matters must pass in order to reach a final issue or adoption. At present they have but one Board in San Francisco, and the consequence is that we very frequently have bad measures engineered through by designing persons through corrupt means, and the community is therefore injured, and our rights violated by means which could not be adopted with like facility if there were two Boards, or two governing powers. I think there is great merit in this proposition, and shall therefore object to striking it out.

MR. McCALLUM. Does not the affirmation that a city with a population of one hundred thousand shall have two houses, negative the idea that a city of less than one hundred thousand could have these two houses of legislation if they wanted it?

MR. WINANS. Undoubtedly.

MR. McCALLUM. Then I object to it. We might want it before we have one hundred thousand.

MR. WINANS. You have got then to wait until you have one hundred thousand; but that could be reached by another amendment.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I wish merely to say then that I rather favor the idea suggested by the gentleman from Monterey, Mr. Wyatt, that there is no necessity of striking out any portion except that after the words "houses of legislation," leaving the balance out; and then I propose to offer an amendment that this section shall not be construed as prohibiting cities of one hundred thousand population from having two houses of legislation. I shall therefore vote against the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. JOYCE.

MR. JOYCE. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to striking out section seven. I think there are very good grounds for having it adopted. I do not know why it should cost five million five hundred thousand dollars annually to pay the expenses of that city and county, when it does not cost four million dollars to run the State. Now, if the Board of Supervisors have a right to levy a tax at option on about three hundred million dollars of property without any check upon them, I think it is a very strange thing. I think, to say the least, a check upon that Board is a very safe thing to establish. As my colleague, Judge Hager, has said, most every other State in the Union has got a double form of legislation. And now that San Francisco is growing more rapidly than any other city in the Union, I do not see why we should not establish the precedent there while we have got the opportunity to do so. I am in favor of the double form of government. I am satisfied that the people are robbed as much in paying the expenses of running one Board as would pay the expenses of the extra Board. Jobs are run through there with such speed that the public press even cannot get an idea of what is going on. I believe that it will be a great saving to the people of San Francisco to have a double Board instead of having but one as it is now. I shall favor the bill as it is now.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I cannot see any necessity for the words embraced in the first sentence of this section—"for the organization of corporations for municipal purposes." The part of it referring to general laws, and that city and county governments may be established under general laws, does not mean the constitutional provisions under which these corporations are formed, but refers to statutes to be enacted by the Legislature under this Constitution. Now, if that be so, why it should confine the Legislature to enacting the provisions for the incorporation of city and county governments under general laws for the incorporation of cities, is more than I can comprehend. I think the Legislature ought to be left free to pass these general laws just as they see fit. If they see fit to put them in two enactments they should be allowed to do so. In fact, I am of the opinion that in conformity with the spirit of the Constitution, that every law shall have but one object, that it will be necessary to segregate these provisions in some way in general laws. It is true that some one general title-head might embrace these two provisions, but I think the Legislature ought to be left free to act upon their own judgment. As to the words "so far as," I propose to read the section, and see whether there is any difference in the signification of the section without them: "The provisions of this Constitution, applicable to cities, and also those applicable to counties, so far as not inconsistent, or not prohibited to cities, shall be applicable to such consolidated government." Now, let us read it without them: "The provisions of this Constitution, applicable to cities, and also those applicable to counties, not inconsistent, or not prohibited to cities, shall be applicable to such consolidated government." Now, if they are applicable so far as not inconsistent, they are applicable when not inconsistent. That is all there is to it. If anybody can show me the difference I will give it up. If there is any difference I am unable to perceive it. The words ought to be stricken out. There is no necessity for using superfluous language. Let us go directly to the point, and hit it squarely on the head.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: It would be necessary for the Legislature to pass general laws for the consolidation of city and county governments separate from the general laws providing for the incorporation and organization of corporations for municipal purposes, which is not necessary. A consolidated city and county government is nothing more than a municipal government. The terms employed are proper for the purpose of creating one corporation, which is a municipal corporation for the government of a city. Now, section six provides for general laws to be enacted by the Legislature for the incorporation of cities, and this provision is intended to bring consolidated cities and counties under the provisions of section six for their incorporation. Why should it not be so? Why should we have one set of laws for consolidated governments, and another set for the incorporation of cities? I do not see. The section reads: "City and county governments may be merged and consolidated into one municipal government, with one set of officers, and may be incorporated under general laws, providing for the incorporation and organization of corporations for municipal purposes." Now, there it is complete. How do you get them? Go back to section six, and the Legislature passes under section six a code of laws for the incorporation of cities, and city and county governments may be merged and consolidated under those laws. If this portion of the section is stricken out you would have to have another set of laws.

MR. HERRINGTON. Does the Chairman hold that it would be wise to provide that city and county governments may be consolidated under laws providing for city governments? Would you say it was necessary to use any more than this term "therefor?"

MR. HAGER. I do not understand what the gentleman means. I do know something about city and county governments consolidated. We have got one in San Francisco, and I think I know as much about it as the gentleman from Santa Clara; perhaps a little more, in consequence of greater experience. That is now a consolidated government by special legislation. It is intended to have no special legislation. The whole principle of this report is to have no special legislation in regard to the incorporation of cities, or in regard to the incorporation of consolidated cities and counties. The object is to have them incorporated under general laws, and instead of having legislation specially in regard to San Francisco or any other county, this is nothing more than to allow city and county governments consolidated to be incorporated under the general law that provides for the incorporation of cities. It is strange to me that the gentleman, with his great intelligence, cannot see it.

MR. HERRINGTON. I will ask another question, if you will allow me. Do you think that by striking out these terms, that city and county governments can be incorporated by anything else than a general law?

MR. HAGER. The merging and consolidating into one government is one thing; the incorporation of that consolidated government is another thing, and both are to take place under general laws.

MR. HERRINGTON. It does not take two Acts? Can you embrace it in one Act?

MR. HAGER. That is the intent of the section as it stands, that they may be incorporated under the general law for the incorporation of cities and towns; and there should not be any general law for the incorporation of cities and counties consolidated. It seems to me so perfectly plain, that I am surprised that the gentleman does not understand it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. SWENSON. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section seven as follows: Strike out all between the words 'governments,' in line seven, and the word 'there,' in line eight; also, strike out the word 'shall,' in line eight, and insert the word 'may,' in place thereof."

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: If I understand the amendment, it is to strike out the words "of more than one hundred thousand population." That matter was discussed in committee, and the committee concluded to leave it at one hundred thousand.

MR. VAN DYKE. I hope the gentleman will accept the amendment.

MR. HAGER. But let me state: a city and county consolidated government is a very peculiar institution. Your city limits and your county limits must coterminate, otherwise you cannot have a consolidated government. Gentlemen must think of this. How are you going to consolidate Oakland and Alameda County? You must make a new county, and make the city limits and the county limits exactly the same thing.

MR. VAN DYKE. There is no difficulty about that at all.

MR. HAGER. I have no objections to striking out the clause, if any members wish to have it for their counties. I think, perhaps, that the measure would be unpopular if it applies to all the cities of the State, because a city may not wish it, and it would lose votes instead of gaining votes; but if it is desired in any other part of the State than San Francisco, I have no objections.

MR. MCCALLUM. Why not say "may," instead of making it mandatory?

MR. HAGER. We want it mandatory in our city. We all want it mandatory in our city.

MR. BIGGS. Stick to that; you want it mandatory there.

MR. HAGER. I have no objection to the other. Now, let me say a word to the gentleman from Alameda. I want to call the attention of the members from Alameda to this section. Perhaps it may not be entirely understood. If you look at it critically, you will find that the first paragraph from the beginning of the section down to the word government, in the seventh line, applies to cities and counties generally, not to cities and counties having one hundred thousand inhabitants. It applies to them all. It is in a subsequent paragraph that the provision is made for two Boards of Supervisors. As it stands it could not have any application to any city in the State except San Francisco. But Oakland can have a consolidated city and county government under section seven, down as far as line seven, without having a double Board.

MR. VAN DYKE. But suppose the people of Oakland should see proper to have consolidated city and county government, unless it had one hundred thousand people it would be prohibited here by implication from having two Boards. That we do not want.

MR. HAGER. But the general law may provide for two Boards. The general law authorizing the incorporation of cities may provide for two Boards. There is no limitation against that in the section.

MR. VAN DYKE. I understand that it would be prohibited by implication——

MR. HAGER. There is no prohibition against having two Boards in any city that is incorporated.

MR. VAN DYKE. Suppose it is incorporated as a city and county, then it would be prohibited by implication from having two Boards.

MR. HAGER. If it has over one hundred thousand inhabitants it must have two Boards. If it has not one hundred thousand inhabitants it may have two Boards. There can be no question about it at all if the general law authorizes it. In section five—I do not know what they did with it—but I drew it in such a way as to admit of two Boards in each county:

"SEC. 5. The Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election or appointment, in the several counties, of Boards of Supervisors, Sheriffs, County Clerks, District Attorneys, and such other county, township, and municipal officers as public convenience may require, and shall prescribe their duties and fix their compensation.

It shall regulate the salaries and fees of all county officers, in proportion to duties, and for this purpose may classify the counties by population; and it shall provide for the strict accountability of county and township officers for all fees which may be collected by them, and for all public and municipal moneys which may be paid to them, or officially come into their possession."

MR. VAN DYKE. I hope the gentleman will——

MR. HAGER. I am not quite through. You can have two Boards in any city or consolidated government if you want them. In every consolidated city and county government having over one hundred thousand inhabitants you must have them.

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend by inserting after the word "years," in line fourteen: "Two houses of legislation may be provided by general laws for cities of less than one hundred thousand inhabitants." I think, Mr. Chairman, that that will cover the ground of objection of the gentleman from Alameda, and also enable other cities in this State to have two houses of legislation. I know that in the city in which I reside, a few months ago we revised our charter, and there was a strong sentiment in favor of a double house—of a Board of Aldermen and a Board of Assistant Aldermen—and the reasons advanced were exactly the reasons which the Chairman of this committee advances in favor of such houses of legislation in San Francisco. With that amendment, all other cities of less than one hundred thousand inhabitants would, at their option, be enabled to establish such houses of legislation.

MR. HAGER. If the gentleman from Los Angeles would put his amendment in section six it would be in its proper place. It could come in after the word "towns," in line four, at the top of the page.

MR. AYERS. I think it would be in its proper place here.

MR. HAGER. Section six relates to cities. This section relates to consolidated cities and counties.

MR. AYERS. Section six has been passed upon, and under our rules we cannot go back to it. I presume by unanimous consent we could get at it, but I think it would be in its proper place in this section. It it is germane to the whole subject of the section.

MR. REYNOLDS. I call the attention of the gentleman from Los Angeles to the fact that the amendment offered by Mr. Swenson strikes out the words, "of more than one hundred thousand population."

MR. AYERS. As I understand it, that would vitiate the intention of the committee to have it mandatory in regard to cities of more than one hundred thousand population. I wish to leave the same rule open to cities having a less number of inhabitants.

MR. SWENSON. Would not that create special legislation? Would it not require a special Act in favor of San Francisco? We have said that the Legislature shall pass no special Act, and this would necessarily require a special Act so far as San Francisco is concerned. It may be done under a general Act, and that is the reason why I offer this amendment.

MR. HAGER. As there seems to be a desire to have a clause in that will preclude any construction that would prevent a city from having two Boards of legislation, I would ask unanimous consent to put that in section six.

MR. LAINE. I certainly object to that. We have got Boards enough in our part of the country.

MR. AYERS. It is not for the counties, it is for the cities.

MR. LAINE. We have got cities in our county too.

MR. HAGER. I would ask the gentleman if he would object to taking up section six.

MR. LAINE. We can attend to it in the Convention.

REMARKS OF MR. WELLIN.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. Chairman: If the amendment should be voted down I would offer the following amendment:

"Strike out the words 'one hundred thousand' and insert 'fifty thousand;' and strike out in line eight the word 'shall' and insert the word 'may.'"

In that way it would not be mandatory upon any city. We are satisfied here that a double house is better for the interests of the people, although it may cost more money to support two houses. If this system is a good one, other towns and cities of less than one hundred thousand inhabitants can have two houses without it being forced upon them. This section as it is forces it upon cities of over one hundred thousand inhabitants, whereas, if it is a good system they must reach one hundred thousand before they can avail themselves of it. I believe this will certainly be a good system. One house will act as a sort of check upon the other, and it will produce better government. By doing this we will reduce the taxes on the people, and give more satisfaction. But I also think that if it is a good rule it should be fifty thousand instead of one hundred thousand, and then leave it in their power to adopt the plan or reject it, just as they please. Therefore, if some of the amendments are voted down, I shall offer this.

MR. LARKIN. Why not adopt the amendment offered by Mr. Swenson?

MR. WELLIN. Because it would leave it to twenty thousand. A small community can govern itself with one Board. I do not believe a double system of government should be forced upon a community of ten or fifteen thousand people.

MR. AYERS. Why should not this safeguard be extended to small cities as well as large ones?

MR. WELLIN. The article, as it stands here, makes it compulsory upon cities——

MR. SWENSON. Does not my amendment provide for that very thing you are trying to get at?

MR. WELLIN. No, sir, it does not. It leaves it for twenty thousand.

MR. SWENSON. Does the gentleman know of any city of less than ten thousand?

MR. WELLIN. I propose to reduce it from one hundred thousand down to fifty thousand, and I think that ought to give satisfaction to everybody. If the City of San Francisco has got along with a single house and built up to three hundred thousand population, I think other cities can stand it until they reach fifty thousand.

MR. VAN DYKE. Either of those amendments will suit us.

MR. STEDMAN. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Larkin, Ayers, Hitchcock, and Biggs.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Swenson.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. WELLIN. I now offer my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section seven by striking out the words 'one hundred thousand,' in lines seven and eight, and inserting the words 'fifty thousand;' and by striking out in line eight the word 'shall,' and inserting the word 'may.'"

MR. WYATT. I ask for a division of the question.

MR. VAN DYKE. I hope that amendment will be adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is the same as the other amendment.

MR. EDGERTON. I desire to remind the gentlemen who favor empowering the Legislature to do so and so that this committee has, by an almost unanimous vote, adopted the provision already, that every clause in the Constitution shall be mandatory.

MR. VAN DYKE. Except as otherwise provided; and where you say "may," that otherwise provides.

MR. JOYCE. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the word "shall" will not be stricken out of that section. I think it is just what the people want. I have no objection to have it brought down to fifty thousand, but I want the word "shall" to remain there.

MR. STEDMAN. I have an amendment to offer to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out 'fifty' and insert 'seventy-five.'"

MR. STEDMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am decidedly in favor of the report of the committee; still, at the same time, I am willing to compromise and put in the words "seventy-five," in place of the words "one hundred;" and though I have offered an amendment, I hope that both the amendments will be voted down. I offer my amendment to defeat his amendment. I think one hundred thousand is low enough. I hope both amendments will be voted down. I think it is wrong to place in this Constitution a clause compelling a city with only fifty thousand inhabitants to entail a double expense upon its citizens.

MR. MCCALLUM. I hope the question will not be divided. I believe that the house has to vote upon the whole question.

THE CHAIRMAN. Except as we have a rule which allows any member to ask for a division.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the whole amendment, but I want the first one at any rate. I hope that we will not take any chances, not knowing what will become of the ballots. The effect of this would be, that if we adopt the first proposition, it would say to a city of fifty thousand inhabitants—"you shall have two Boards of Supervisors, or two houses of legislation, whether you want them or not." Afterwards, if we refuse to strike out the word "shall," and insert the word "may," we would compel the people of Oakland, or any people who might be similarly situated, to have what they do not want, or have it before they want it, supposing they want it at some future time. I had proposed to offer this amendment: "This section shall not be construed as prohibiting any city, or any consolidated city and county government, of less than one hundred thousand population, from having two houses of legislation." That will leave others free in this matter. If this question has to be divided, I hope gentlemen will not take the chances of voting for the one without knowing what will become of the other. I would ask what rule it is that gives a single member a right to call a division? I claim if there is an objection to a division that then the question shall be taken: shall the question be divided?

MR. WELLIN. We have divided other questions and can readily divide this without taking a vote upon it.

MR. MCCALLUM. We can divide it, but I don't want it divided.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the first branch—on the motion strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five."

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I have tried to explain heretofore that any city and county may be consolidated, whether they have one hundred thousand inhabitants or not, but that the last portion of this section only applies to cities having one hundred thousand inhabitants. Now suppose all of section seven after the word "government," in the seventh line, was stricken out; every city and county in the State might be consolidated notwithstanding, and incorporated under section six. This provision after the word "government," in the seventh line, is applicable only to cities having one hundred thousand inhabitants. It does not prevent a city having fifty thousand inhabitants becoming consolidated, but it says, where they have one hundred thousand population they must have two Boards. It would not prevent their having two Boards if it was a city and county government consolidated, but the provision only applies to cities having one hundred thousand inhabitants, and, notwithstanding that provision, any city and county can be incorporated under the sixth section; but if they contained one hundred thousand inhabitants they must have two Boards. That is the argument, and that is all there is of it.

MR. VAN DYKE. My point is that the expression of one thing excludes the other, and by saying that in any city having one hundred thousand population there shall be two Boards, necessarily, by every rule of construction, excludes every city of less than one hundred thousand inhabitants.

MR. REYNOLDS. If the gentleman will refer to the first part of the section, and then to line eight, he will see that if these consolidated governments contain a population of one hundred thousand, they must have two Boards of Supervisors.

MR. VAN DYKE. Suppose they do not have one hundred thousand; then they shall not have two Boards.

MR. SWENSON. For this government has only one set of officers.

MR. REYNOLDS. It does not follow from any construction of this section that city and county governments may not be consolidated, whatever their population; and it does not follow, from any construction, that they are obliged to have two houses of legislation unless they have one hundred thousand inhabitants.

MR. MORELAND. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Hitchcock, Stuart, Stedman, and Huestis.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman, to strike out "fifty" and insert "seventy-five."

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wellin, to strike out "one hundred" and insert "fifty."

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wellin, to strike out the word "shall" and insert the word "may."

The amendment was rejected.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend section seven by striking out the words "or houses of legislation," where they occur in the ninth line. In support of this amendment, I wish to call attention to the fact that in the fifth section we have provided that "the Legislature, by general and uniform laws, shall provide for the election, or appointment, in the several counties, of Boards of Supervisors." And now, in this section there is the same thing, except providing specially for double Boards of Supervisors in certain cases, to wit: cities and counties containing a population of more than one hundred thousand. Now, our Constitution, in the legislative department, provides that the Legislature shall be the law-making power of the State Boards of Supervisors, have an office within the Constitution, but not the office of law-making. They are not the law-making power. I apprehend that it is not the intention of this committee that they should be, and yet these words sought to be stricken out by this amendment accomplish that result, at least so far as it can be accomplished by these terms. If the amendment was adopted the clause would read "in consolidated city and county governments, of more than one hundred thousand population, there shall be two Boards of Supervisors." It is not necessary to repeat, by saying "or houses of legislation." They are called Boards of Supervisors. Why call them houses of legislation? The Constitution of the State provides for one legislative department of the government. Let us not depart from it. Let us preserve the harmony of the system.

MR. BARBOUR. I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section seven by striking out all after the word 'government,' in line seven."

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order. It has already been voted down.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: The reason that that was put in that shape was simply to admit of other houses of legislation by name than Supervisors. They never would be called First and Second Board of Supervisors; they would probably call them First or Second Board of Aldermen, or Aldermen and Assistant Aldermen. Counties must have Supervisors. We have a Board of Supervisors there because we could not have anything else; but if we have a Board of Aldermen, or a Board of Councilmen, then the words "houses of legislation," would apply. I would not select the name of Board of Supervisors for a city; "Supervisors" is better for a county government; but, if it so happened, as we now have a Board of Supervisors, that that government should be perpetuated under a consolidation, the name would be Supervisors; but if we incorporated under some other form, they would probably adopt the name of Aldermen, or Councilmen; that is the reason it is put in here to reach these cases. I do not see what harm it could do. The Constitution would apply now to the name of Supervisors; but if we should incorporate, and have a new charter, they would probably be called First and Second Board of Aldermen.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Placer, Mr. Hale.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I now send up my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"In line fourteen, after the word 'years,' insert 'This section shall not be construed as prohibiting any city or consolidated city and county government, of less than one hundred thousand population, from having two houses of legislation."

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: That is the sole point which we from Alameda have sought to make in this controversy. The gentleman from San Francisco seemed to be very averse to having the first proposition which we asked for, but we did not wish to be placed in the position that other cities should not have the same advantage. It is perfectly safe to leave the people to deal with the matter. The sole object is to obviate the legal question. The chairman of the committee, Mr. Hager, seems to think that the affirmation in the one case does not negative the other. His colleague, Mr. Winans, thinks as I do, that the assertion of the one is to negative the other.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: The amendment offered by Mr. Ayers, and which was voted down, was substantially the same as this.

MR. MCCALLUM. I would like to have it read.

THE SECRETARY read the amendment offered by Mr. Ayers, as follows:

"Insert after the word 'years,' in line fourteen, 'two houses of legislation may be provided by general law, for cities of less than one hundred thousand inhabitants.'"

MR. MCCALLUM. I submit that that is not the same thing. Let the Secretary read mine.

THE SECRETARY read:

"In line fourteen, after the word 'years,' insert: 'This section shall not be construed as prohibiting any city or consolidated city and county government, of less than one hundred thousand population, from having two houses of legislation.'"

MR. MCCALLUM. That is nothing on the subject of what the Legislature shall provide. The other says that two houses of legislation may be provided under general law. I simply propose that the section shall not be construed as prohibiting cities of less population than one hundred thousand having two houses of legislation.

MR. EDGERTON. What is the difference?

MR. MCCALLUM. The one says the Legislature may provide, by general law, for two houses, and the other says that the section shall not be construed as——

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of the opinion that they are equivalent propositions, and, therefore, rules it out of order as having been already voted down.

MR. MCCALLUM. I desire to appeal from that decision.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no second.

MR. STEDMAN. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert in the thirteenth line, between the word 'years' and the word 'and,' the words, 'by supervisorial districts.'"

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I offer this in the interest of good government. We have provided in this section seven that two Boards of Supervisors shall be elected for the city and county, each of them to consist of twelve, I suppose. I desire in offering this amendment to have it stated in this section that one of these Boards shall be elected by districts. Now, if we provide that the twenty-four shall be elected by a general ticket, one political party will probably carry the county. To elect twenty-four Supervisors from one political party, I do not care what party it is, I do not think would be in the interest of good government. I desire to give the minority a chance, and in order that we may have all political parties represented in our Boards of Supervisors, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

MR. RINGGOLD. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Larkin, Moreland, Davis, and Hunter.

The main question was ordered.

MR. HAGER. I would like to inquire if there is any such thing as a Supervisorial District?

THE CHAIRMAN. The main question has been ordered. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Stedman.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section seven by striking out, in the ninth line, the word 'twelve,' and inserting 'eight.'"

MR. THOMPSON. Mr. Chairman: I think if we have two Boards of Supervisors for San Francisco, that it would be well to have one of them of a different number. I am in favor of this, from the fact that it will make less expense. I have heard it talked of several years, having two Boards, but I have never heard any one suggest equal numbers for the Boards. Generally I have heard five named, or seven, for that Board. All legislative bodies, from the United States Congress down, are composed of different numbers, one branch having a higher number than the other. For that reason I offer this, to save expense to the City of San Francisco; for, as I understand it, there is no other city in the State that will come under this section. I think, therefore, it will be a good amendment.

MR. CROUCH. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend by inserting, after the word "be," in the eighth line, the words "and in those of more than fifty thousand inhabitants there may be."

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at present. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Thompson.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. CROUCH. I now offer my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert after the word 'be,' in line eighth, the words 'and in those of more than fifty thousand inhabitants there may be.'"

MR. REYNOLDS. I call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the amendment is inconsistent with the section itself. I will read: "In consolidated city and county governments, of more than one hundred thousand population there shall be, and in those of more than fifty thousand inhabitants there may be, two Boards of Supervisors," etc. That would make the section inconsistent with itself. But if he will insert his amendment after the word "governments," in the seventh line, then his amendment will be consistent. Then it would read: "In consolidated city and county governments, of more than fifty thousand inhabitants there may be, and in those of more than one hundred thousand population shall be," etc.

MR. VAN DYKE. What is the difference?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I only desired to call attention to the fact that if we adopt the amendment in that shape it will make the section wholly inconsistent with itself. If the committee desire to adopt the amendment it should be put in the seventh line after the word "governments."

MR. HAGER. I move to amend the amendment so that the clause will read: "In consolidated city andc ounty governments of more than one hundred thousand population, and in those of less than one hundred thousand there may be two Boards of Supervisors," etc. If the gentleman will accept that amendment——

MR. CROUCH. I accept the amendment.

MR. McCALLUM. Then, Mr. Chairman, the details of this section follow that condition. I had thought at first it would accomplish the desired result, but I think now it would be no improvement, or very little. One difficulty, in the first place was, that it was going too much into detail, but if San Francisco wants it we do not care to raise the question; but I submit that these details ought not to follow this optional provision, as to the other cities. I propose, in order to avoid that parliamentary difficulty, to offer this amendment which accomplishes the same end that we are all trying to arrive at. After the word "years," in line fourteen, insert, "This section shall not be construed as prohibiting a city, or consolidated city and county government having a greater population than forty thousand from having two houses of legislation." That will make a limit. But I see a difficulty with the amendment of the gentleman, over the way. I think it is a serious one, and I cannot vote for it. It compels all these conditions to be accepted.

MR. VAN DYKE. I do not see why it does not improve the section. If we cannot get all we want let us get what we can. We need not incorporate under that if we do not please.

MR. McCALLUM. I would like to ask the gentleman if he desires to have it so that we must have not less than twelve?

MR. VAN DYKE. The City of Oakland might prefer that to one house. If they do not prefer it to one house they need not adopt it. It is not mandatory.

MR. McCALLUM. Why compel them to accept these details? Why may we not have the principle without the conditions?

MR. VAN DYKE. Because the committee have refused to strike that out. We cannot have what we would have, but let us get what we can.

MR. LAINE. I hope the country members will think something of this. It would be an invitation to the Legislature to impose upon the various counties of the State a cumbersome government, and I do believe that if the City of San Francisco desires to submit herself to so cumbrous a form of government as this the rest of the State ought not to be placed in the same position. We will have to be continually watching the Legislature, to prevent these cumbersome governments being imposed upon us. I believe that the experience of the American people is such that we do not need so many Legislatures. We are now going into a scheme by which we are to have a Legislature in every township, a Legislature in the county, a Legislature in the city and county, and a multiplication of laws in this State. There are more laws now in this State than any lawyer will live long enough to read and digest. I hope these amendments will be voted down. If the City and County of San Francisco desires it let her have it. I hope the country members will vote these amendments down.

MR. VAN DYKE. It does not apply to counties.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by Mr. Crouch as modified.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. McCALLUM. I now offer my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert in line fourteen, after the word 'years,' the following: 'This section shall not be construed as prohibiting a city or consolidated city and county government, having a greater population than twenty thousand, from having two houses of legislation."

MR. GRACE. I do not know whether there is any city outside of San Francisco having forty thousand.

MR. McCALLUM. Oakland has.

MR. GRACE. I would make it small enough to take in other cities that are smaller.

MR. McCALLUM. I wish to have it so that other city and county governments may have two branches of the Board of Supervisors if they desire to have them. That is all there is in it.

MR. AYERS. If the gentleman will insert "twenty thousand," instead of "forty thousand," I will favor it.

MR. McCALLUM. I have no objection to that. I will insert there the words "twenty thousand," instead of "forty thousand." If they do consolidate that way, then all the details belong to themselves. If we had adopted the amendment we have just voted down, it would have required twenty-four Supervisors. I hope this amendment will be acceptable to the committee, and I will contribute, for my part, nothing further to this avalanche of amendments.

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: As long as this system was confined to the City of San Francisco, I felt like permitting the delegates from that place to decide whether it was acceptable to them or not. The proposition now under consideration involves the extension of the system over the whole State; for be it remembered that it is a spirit of this article, and of every part of the Constitution that we are adopting, that there shall not be special legislation; that systems of government shall be uniform; and therefore it will follow, if this provision is adopted, and if any general law shall be enacted under and in pursuance of it, that it must extend the system to all consolidated cities and counties of twenty thousand inhabitants. I do not know what virtue there is in a double Board. I have heard no virtue ascribed to it, and I see no object in it other than the multiplication of offices and the establishment in each county of something that shall be an imitation of a city organization or a city government.

There are four or five counties in this State which might be consolidated under this section: There is the City and County of San Francisco, I suppose you might say the City and County of San Jose, and perhaps three or four others—the City and County of Stockton, the City and County of Los Angeles, the City and County of Oakland, and so on. For one, as a representative of a county that might be affected by this, I say that I do not wish the Legislature to have the power to impose any such system upon us. I see no necessity for two Boards of Supervisors, or two Boards of Trustees; it is a mere additional expense, and one of those things that is likely to be lobbied through the Legislature by some person who is desiring a position, or by some one of that numerous class who have nothing for the present, and would be glad of any change for the future.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: The amendment of the gentleman from Alameda illustrates the difficulty which always attends an attempt to fix up a clause like this, which is aimed only at one city, one political subdivision, without making use of the words expressive of it. Now, if the committee or Convention wish to make a system applicable only to San Francisco, we ought to have used the word San Francisco. There is a peculiarity surrounding the situation of that city in its consolidated character which impelled the committee to adopt this section, and also section nine; that that city was capable of supporting a sort of government within a government; and that the multifarious interests there could not be reached by general incorporation acts. But instead of making use of the word San Francisco, the committee used the phrase "city of more than one hundred thousand population," because it is not likely that as long as this Constitution stands there will be in the State of California another city of one hundred thousand population. It is not likely there will be another consolidation of city and county government in the State of California while this Constitution stands, if it should not be ratified. And even if they run up to a population of one hundred thousand or more, it is not likely that there will be a consolidation unless there is also a change of geographical lines. Now, according to the amendment of the gentleman, as I read it, it would provide that a city of forty thousand inhabitants, which was not consolidated with the county government, might have a double-headed house of legislation, while a city of one hundred thousand inhabitants that was not consolidated with the county government, need not have it. The phraseology of it is peculiar. If it is a city not consolidated, and has two hundred thousand inhabitants, by a fair construction it need not have this double-headed government. Now, sir, this whole attempt to regulate this matter ought to have been kept out of this section. I think the gentleman from Alameda, who was a member of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization, as well as myself, is like the boy who, when he sees another boy have a thing, immediately wants it. Whenever San Francisco gets anything, no matter whether it is appropriate to some other place or not, no matter whether it fits them or not, they have an idea that they are a great rival to San Francisco, and they immediately want the same thing. If San Francisco chooses to launch into a system of government containing all the grand machinery of a whole government within itself, Oakland shows its bad temper, and wants the same thing, because it is going to grow up and be a great city, and and thereby tangle up and spoil everything we are attempting to do. Everybody knows that the attempt in this section was to have it apply alone to San Francisco. That is all there is about it; and this amendment ought not to be incorporated in it. And when section nine is adopted, and the people are thereby authorized to go ahead and make their charter for their own government, they ought not to be hampered by this provision, but should be left free to create their own internal government, as they propose, consistent with the Constitution of the State and the laws of California. I shall support section nine, and I believe this portion of section seven will be inconsistent with it, and unnecessary, because they are competent to frame a charter providing for twelve Supervisors, or ten, or fifteen, electing them from the city at large, or electing them from districts, as they see fit. Therefore these amendments that the gentleman proposes are unnecessary, and I hope will be voted down.

MR. TULLY. I move to strike out section seven.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at present.

MR. HUESTIS. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Biggs, Howard, Evey, and Stuart.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum, as modified.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I had no idea that this section was going to create so much difficulty in the Convention, or receive so much apparent opposition. The section as drawn was intended to be for the City of San Francisco.

MR. MORELAND. Mr. CHAIRMAN: I rise to a point of order. There is no motion before the House.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

MR. TULLY. I move to strike out section seven.

The motion was lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no further amendment to section seven, the Secretary will read section nine.

CITY GOVERNMENT.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 9. Any city having a population of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants may frame a charter for its own government, consistent with, and subject to the Constitution and laws of this State, by causing a Board of fifteen freeholders, who shall have been for at least five years qualified electors thereof, to be elected by the qualified voters of such city at any general or special election, whose duty it shall be, within ninety days after such election, to prepare and propose a charter for such city, which shall be signed in duplicate by the members of such Board, or a majority of them, and returned, one copy thereof to the Mayor or other chief executive officer of such city, and the other to the Recorder of deeds of the county. Such proposed charter shall then be published in two daily papers of largest circulation in such city for at least twenty days, and within not less than thirty days after such publication it shall be submitted to the qualified electors of such city at a general or special election, and if a majority of such qualified electors voting thereat shall ratify the same, it shall, at the end of sixty days thereafter, become the charter of such city, or if such city be consolidated with a county in government, then of such city and county, and shall become the organic law thereof, and supersede any existing charter and all amendments thereof, and all special laws inconsistent with such charter. A copy of such charter, certified by the Mayor or chief executive officer, and authenticated by the seal of such city, setting forth the submission of such charter to the electors, and its ratification by them, shall be made in duplicate and deposited, one in the office of the Secretary of State, the other, after being recorded in the office of the Recorder of deeds of the county, among the archives of the city, and thereafter all Courts shall take judicial notice thereof. The charter so ratified may be amended at intervals of not less than two years, by proposals therefor, submitted by the legislative authority of the city to the qualified voters thereof, at a general or special election held at least sixty days after the publication of such proposals, and ratified by at least three fifths of the qualified electors voting thereat. In submitting any such charter, or amendment thereto, any alternative article or proposition may be presented for the choice of the voters, and may be voted on separately without prejudice to others.

MR. MORELAND. I move to strike out section nine.

SPEECH OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: The members of the Convention will observe that this is proposed for the formation of a charter, by the people, subordinate to the Constitution and laws of the State. We have already adopted a provision that the Legislature may, by general law, provide for the incorporation of cities. Now, then, any charter that may be formed will be subordinate to these general laws, but it will be shaped by the people, and submitted to the people, and ratified and adopted by them. That has been the custom all over the world. In San Francisco we used to adopt our charter, submit it to the people, the Legislature would ratify it, and it became the charter. Now, it is proposed that in a city parties may be elected for the purpose of framing a charter, just what we have done heretofore in San Francisco, and when it is framed it has to be submitted to the people, and has to be ratified by them; but it must be subordinate to the Constitution, and subordinate to a general law. Now, then, if the City of San Francisco should undertake to frame a charter, it should not be submitted to the Legislature, because we have taken that power away from the Legislature, and instead of that we substitute a general law; therefore, it must be in subordination to the general law as the only authority that controls the matter. In former years, when San Francisco was not a consolidated government, we had some four or five charters. There was a convention to frame a charter; my friend in front of me, Mr. Casserly, was a member of it, and when the charter was ratified by the people and sanctioned by the Legislature, it became the charter of the people. Now, the Legislature, under a general law, may authorize any city to frame a charter. Under section six that we have passed, the Legislature, by a general law, may authorize any city in the State to frame a charter, if it is in subordination to the Constitution and general law.

MR. MORELAND. What is the use of this section in here then?

MR. HAGER. Simply to provide another way, that the people may elect delegates to meet in convention and deliberately frame a charter. It is an important matter in a great city like San Francisco, while a little town, perhaps, would not require all that machinery. It is a provision, I may say to my friend, that I have copied from the Constitution of Missouri. [Laughter.] The Constitutions of Missouri and Pennsylvania I happen to have in convenient shape to handle, as you may see, in pamphlet form, and the Constitution of Missouri being the latest, is one of the best, because they have selected and retained from other Constitutions pretty much everything that is worth being retained in a Constitution. I do not forget the Constitutions of my friend from Santa Clara, or my friend from Santa Cruz. I have used part of the Constitution of my friend from Santa Clara. If we should strike the section out then there would be no machinery for arranging a charter for the City of San Francisco. A general law might provide for this same thing. A general law might provide that a city may elect delegates, but inasmuch as we are on the subject, and a large city might be willing to elect members to a convention, whereas others might wish to resort to a cheaper machinery, and adapt it to the general law, we considered it best to provide for it here. This applies strictly and only to the City and County of San Francisco. It is the same machinery that was made use of in the City of St. Louis, where they adopted a charter which has been the cause of great reforms in the administration of the Government of that State. I cannot see that any evil will come from it. We have this peculiar government there, a consolidated city and county government. I do not agree with my friend from Sacramento, that the tendency is to multiply offices. The tendency is to reduce the number of offices. Instead of having a set of city officers, and a set of county officers, they are consolidated. We have a Sheriff, who is the Sheriff of the county and of the city. We do not have a Coroner any more. We have a Tax Collector, and we have an Auditor that acts for both; formerly we had one for each. The tendency of a consolidated government is to reduce the offices from two to one in every case, and reduce the expense in every particular, and not, as the gentleman said, for the purpose of multiplying offices. He says that they want none of this government in the City of Sacramento. Suppose they don't; but suppose the people should wish to adopt it at some future time, for the purpose of economy. It must be done by the sanction of the people or it cannot be done at all. If we cannot trust the people in this matter, who can we trust? If they make a mistake it is in their power to correct it. It is expected that this Constitution will bring healing to the wounds of our oppressed people, and so far as is in my power, it is my intention to reduce the expenses of government, and not multiply them; and this report, from the beginning to the end of it, has been with the intention of reducing county and city expenditures, and not for the purpose of increasing them. I hope that this section will be retained.

SPEECH OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I assented to the proposition, as a member of the committee, and I believe that it is demanded by the interests of the people of the City of San Francisco. I do not understand that San Francisco can proceed under a general incorporation law that may be framed by the Legislature, because that general incorporation law is not broad enough to cover the interests of the people of San Francisco. It is true, we should not use the term "city having a population of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants." Of course, as I said before, in reference to the other section, the intention is to authorize the people of San Francisco to frame a charter in an exceptional case; instead of proceeding under a general law, to frame a charter of their own. Now, it is undoubtedly true that a necessity exists for an entire and total change in the organic law of San Francisco. No man from that city, who has ever sought or attempted to find out what the fundamental law of that city is, upon which its legislation must be based, can tell what it is. And it is because of the wide field which is required to be covered by the legislation of San Francisco that a fundamental law ought to be provided by a charter, by which to measure and test the validity of the ordinances of that city. San Francisco has many institutions, maintains many Boards, which do not exist in any other city of the State, and which will not exist. They are special to the city. They are sui generis. They are governed by a law unto themselves, in respect to these various institutions and public works and public Boards, which do not apply to any other city in the State. Now, it has a consolidated charter, but the Act of Consolidation, as it is called, which is the present fundamental law of that city, is in an extremely confused state. It is a piece of patchwork, made up like Joseph's coat. Many of the laws are doubtful, and they would all be wiped out by a charter framed by a Board selected by the people of the city, who would present to them a complete system of local government, for it has to be submitted for their ratification.

Now, I see no objection to this being engrafted in the Constitution. I see no objection, of course, within the scope of the Constitution, and subject to the laws of the State, and providing a basis for their local legislation. Questions will always rise, and questions must rise in any act, in any attempt on the part of the Legislature to delegate to the people of San Francisco the power to go ahead and make a local law. Questions of the power of the Legislature to delegate its authority in this, that, and the other instance, will constantly arise, all of which will affect the validity of the legislation and create litigation. The intention is to avoid all these vexed questions. The intention is to avoid all these questions that are continually arising and vexing the Courts with regard to contracts, etc. Some scheme of fundamental law ought to be provided as a basis of legislation which the people stand ready to enact. By the complaints which I have heard with regard to the Consolidation Act, I am certain that it should be sought by the people, and demanded by the people, that a charter, complete and independent, should be provided for that city and the Consolidation Act superseded and wiped out.

SPEECH OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: This was one of the sections of the report upon which the committee was about equally divided, and according to my recollection it was struck out once or twice, and at the instance of the Chairman, I think, finally a bare majority assented to it.

MR. HALE. There was never over one quarter of the Committee sanctioned this section.

MR. McCALLUM. Not over one quarter of the committee ever gave its sanction to the section. I think that is correct, likely. The most of the committee were not very generally divided, and I think it may be safely said that not one third of it ever sanctioned this section nine. The first main provision, or inconsistency of this section, is this: that in the legislative article, and in this article on city and county governments, in which it is proposed to remedy the great existing evil of special legislation, in the principal section, or in one of the sections, this section nine appears in this new Constitution special legislation. Now the gentleman from San Francisco, the Chairman of the committee, says that it provides that this charter may be framed under general laws. The phraseology is subject to different construction, and I ask the attention of the committee to its peculiar phraseology:

"Any city having a population of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants may frame a charter of its own government, consistent with, and subject to the Constitution and laws of this State."

What shall it be consistent with? Why a fair construction of that language is that the city may frame a charter, not that it says that the charter shall be consistent with, but that they shall frame a charter, and of course it is consistent with the general laws, because, although it is of a special nature, anything in the Constitution must be regarded as general law; and the Constitution saying that they shall frame a charter, then it must follow that it is a constitutional charter, though not consistent with the general laws under which other municipal corporations are organized. This article, of course, is in itself law. The gentleman says: "Oh, it provides that it must be consistent with law!" Certainly, but this is law. Section nine is law if it becomes a part of the Constitution. It is somewhat in the nature of making a city in our State different from all other cities. Why should this difference be made? "Oh," gentlemen say, "there is a necessity for it," but do not point it out. Why may not the city of San Francisco organize under general laws like all other cities? Why say that they shall frame a special charter for San Francisco?

MR. JOYCE. Why have you tried to get the same provisions applied to Oakland, awhile ago, that would not apply to all others?

MR. MCCALLUM. We never attempted to apply anything to Oakland. It is the principle I oppose. There is no necessity for this special legislation. Here follows this general proposition, and then a page and a half of dreary details as to the manner in which this thing shall be done, but not the Constitution of the State. If, as the gentleman says, it is intended to conform to general laws, then where is the necessity for this general provision. It must be consistent with general laws anyhow. This is general, all sufficient. I do not say there is any design in the Chairman of the committee wording it in the way it is.

MR. BARBOUR. In my opinion general laws do not apply at all, and it is very doubtful whether they can authorize the application of a charter made up under general laws. This must be submitted for ratification. In small towns, or cities, I submit that it is very doubtful whether this course may be pursued with reference to submission.

MR. MCCALLUM. Why may not a general law provide for submission in all cases?

MR. BARBOUR. There may be a very serious question with regard to the power of the Legislature to delegate its authority.

MR. MCCALLUM. You can put that into the Constitution if it does not already exist. I hope the motion of the gentleman from Sonoma will prevail.

SPEECH OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I will say a very few words in favor of this section, and in opposition to the motion to strike out. There is something more provided, something more comprehended in this section than the mere submission of a charter. Now, in ordinary cases, in small cities and towns that are incorporated, where the population is not large a few of the most influential citizens get together and frame a charter, and send it to their member of the Legislature, and have it adopted. Now, in a city of immense population, such a thing is wholly impossible; and hence the provision here providing for a convention of citizens elected for that purpose, who shall be sworn to perform an official duty, to set about it and within ninety days frame a charter for the city precisely as we are framing a charter for the State of California, now; then for submission to the people, etc. This section goes to the incubation of this charter, and not leave it to citizens in a private capacity, and we all know how such things are done when anything is done that is every body's business and nobody's business.

Now, to illustrate the difficulties under which the city labors to-day. I wish to call attention to the volume I hold in my hand. Here is a volume of fine print, three hundred and nineteen pages, that comprises the charter of the City of San Francisco, to-day. Originally it was thirty-one pages, but there have been one hundred supplemental Acts passed, and that comprises the charter to-day. No man on earth knows what is in it, and they do not pay any attention to it, either. They ride rough-shod over it. Dozens of these Acts have been passed in the interest of a single individual. Some contractor, or some officer would want to get a supplemental Act passed, and he would slide up to the Legislature and get it through. Under this section, a body of citizens selected for that purpose, will go to work decently, frame a charter, and submit it to the people. If they fail, try it again, and the amendments be made in the same and no other way. The argument seems to be overwhelming in favor of adopting a regular systematic course, the same as in forming a Constitution for the State. The argument that it is creating an imperium in imperio, that it is creating a free city, that it is running away from the State, has no force whatever. Of course this charter must be subservient to the Constitution and laws of the State; hence there can be no objection whatever to giving the City of San Francisco the authority to frame a charter for her own government.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I merely want to say a few words in regard to the report of the committee. I do not know whether it was intended to adopt the report or not. I do not know whether one quarter, less or more, voted in favor of this section. I know that at all times it was we had barely a quorum, and there could not much more than a quarter vote for anything. I believe once we acted without a quorum. It was very difficult to get the committee together. The committee consisted of fifteen, and we tried to have eight there. One quarter would be four of the eight. Five would be a majority of the eight. But this was understood. I stated to the committee that this was a matter relating exclusively to San Francisco, and I did not consider that any member of the committee was so well able to judge of it as the members from San Francisco; and that I would not stand by it myself unless the delegation from San Francisco here favored it. I stated that it was a matter relating to San Francisco, and that I would not undertake to get up here and advocate it if I did not think I was sustained by the majority of the delegates from San Francisco on this floor. And I would not now. If the delegates from San Francisco do not favor it, I will not favor it. I am not factious about this thing at all. It is copied almost exactly from the Missouri Constitution, and then they have there a special provision in regard to the City of St. Louis. We will call it the Missouri compromise. [Laughter.] Now, in the Missouri Constitution, I will say to the gentleman from Alameda, they have a provision that any city having more than one hundred thousand inhabitants may frame a charter. That is applicable to the whole State. Then they have a special provision in regard to the City of St. Louis, about twice as long as the other. Here is the provision: "The City of St. Louis may extend its limits," etc., and then provides for the government of the City of St. Louis, and a special charter in that particular case.

I merely refer to it as a precedent to show that something of a similar character has been done elsewhere. Then they have a general provision in regard to other cities. Now, to go back to this matter. Section six, as has been heretofore stated, provides for the incorporation of cities, and then it contains this clause:

"Cities and towns may become incorporated under general laws, whenever a majority of the electors voting at a general election shall so determine, and shall organize in conformity therewith."

There it is submitted to the people. I think every city should adopt its own charter. I think that should be the rule; that when they adopt a charter and organize under the general law, that they should become an incorporated city. But the committee struck out a clause that was in there: "When they shall adopt a charter." Now, the Legislature may authorize them to adopt a charter; but when it comes to a city of over one hundred thousand inhabitants, why, it is reasonable enough that they should have a mode of a different kind, by electing a Board of gentlemen to frame a charter, as we do here, because it is an immense job. And it must be a charter engrafted upon the existing institutions. That Consolidation Act has got to be the foundation of a future charter, because all our laws are arranged with reference to that; and in this particular case it would require, in my opinion, a convention to adjust that mass of matter and put it into paragraphs that would form a charter. But no general law could be broad enough to frame a charter under that Consolidation Act. That is the reason why I recommended this provision specially for that city. It must be with reference to that Act. All the officers are arranged under it. It cannot be done by general law: and it is for the safety and for the interest of the people that this provision has been proposed to be engrafted in the Constitution.

Now, what is the argument against it? What does the gentleman from Alameda say? "Why should they have a different rule?" Because we have a different rule now. It is the only city and county government that is consolidated. It differs in that respect from every other city in the State of California. I might say, what objection is there if the people there want it? We cannot do anything here but what must be ratified. If they vote for a Convention and the Convention frames a charter, and the people adopt that charter, by a majority vote or otherwise, who should get up here and say that they shall not have it? Is that democratic or republican government? Is that in accordance with the spirit of the age? The argument is because it is San Francisco. But I say if the delegates from San Francisco are opposed to it I am opposed to it too. I would not undertake to urge it upon this body unless a majority from that city sustained me; and the committee made the report with that understanding.

MR. HITCHCOCK. I move that the committee rise.

REMARKS OF MR. WELLIN.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. Chairman: I wish to call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that the people of San Francisco have been complaining year after year about our present system of government. We are governed by twelve men—a Board of Supervisors and a Mayor. Seven Supervisors can vote any measure through. If the Mayor vetoes that measure it then goes back, and eight men—only one more—can pass it and force us to bear the burden of taxation. We desire a change. A change has been called for from time to time by the people. Under our street system alone, why people have been assessed entirely out of their property, from the very fact that a few men can manage the whole affair. They have actually put street work through there and assessed more costs than the property sold for in the market, and have taken the people's property clear away from them. What reason have these gentlemen to give why we should not manage our own affairs, so long as we do so consistently with the Constitution? We pay, out of a total of five hundred and eighty-three thousand dollars in round numbers, we pay two hundred and fifty-four thousand dollars. We comprise one third of the population of the State of California. What reason can be given why we should not arrange our matters to suit ourselves? Do you suppose that we are not intelligent enough—that we do not know our own wants? Do you suppose we cannot send a delegation here to Sacramento that know their business? I hope that not a single delegate will be against this proposition.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention then took a recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M. President pro tem. Belcher in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

RESIGNATION OF THE SECRETARY.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. Gentlemen: I have here the resignation of Secretary Johnson, which the Secretary (Smith) will read:

THE SECRETARY read:

SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA, January 17, 1879.

COLONEL J. P. HOGE, President Constitutional Convention:

SIR: It becomes my duty, in obedience to obligations and duties taken upon myself prior to the meeting of this Convention, and which I cannot now shirk any longer, herewith most respectfully to tender my resignation as Secretary of this Constitutional Convention. I regret exceedingly the necessity which compels me to take this step, and have remained at my post a week after the close of the one hundred days, during which we all anticipated that the work of the Convention would be completed. In this connection it may not be out of place for me to express my surprise at the movement made yesterday in my absence to forestall my resignation, and place a stigma upon me at the same time. I had arranged with my assistants to attend to the duties of my desk until my return, when I proposed to take proper and dignified leave of the Convention to whom I am indebted for honor conferred upon me. Thanking the Convention with a full heart for all that I am indebted to them, both in the honorable position conferred upon me, and the warm courtesy at all times extended to me, I am very truly yours,

J. A. JOHNSON.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. President: I move that the order in connection with this matter, by which it was set as the special order, be now rescinded.

Carried.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. President: I move that the resignation of Mr. Johnson, as Secretary of this Convention be accepted, and that the Convention now proceed to fill the vacancy.

MR. SWING. Mr. President: By leave of the Convention I will withdraw the resolution I presented yesterday.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. If there is no objection the gentleman will have leave.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the motion to accept the resignation and proceed to fill the vacancy.

Carried.

NOMINATIONS FOR SECRETARY.

MR. EDGERTON. Mr. President: There was a resolution offered yesterday and withdrawn to-day. I now take very great pleasure in submitting to the Convention the name of Ed. F. Smith, of Sacramento, a gentleman in every way qualified to fill the position of Secretary of this Convention, as gentlemen know by experience. Mr. Smith was elected Assistant Secretary at the commencement of the session, and has served faithfully ever since. He has made a faithful officer, has always been prompt in the performance of his duty, and his election will gratify a very large circle of friends. I hope the young man's claims will meet with a favorable consideration.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. President: I take great pleasure in placing in nomination a gentleman whose qualifications we all know—George A. Thornton. He has occupied the Clerk's desk as Assistant Clerk, and I know he is faithful and well qualified. I take great pleasure in asking the delegates to make George A. Thornton the permanent Secretary of this Convention.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and resulted as follows:

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. Mr. Smith is declared to be the Secretary of this Convention.

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT.

MR. HALE. I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President pro tem. in the chair, to further consider the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out section nine.

SPEECH OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I apprehend, sir, that we shall not be called upon to argue a more important matter than that which we now are about to act upon. I am earnestly in hopes that this motion to strike out will prevail. I confess I was a little sorry—I might say, a good deal sorry—when the committee refused to strike out of the second section that expression, "houses of legislation." I had just been reading section nine, and I thought I could see the reasons—the motive—for retaining that expression. This ninth section is very strong, and makes it easy for the City of San Francisco to set up an independent government, entirely independent of the authority of this State. I am aware, sir—my attention has just been called to the fact by the Chairman of the committee—that the section contained these words: "Any city having a population of over one hundred thousand inhabitants may frame a charter for its own government, consistent with, and subject to, the Constitution and laws of this State." I suppose the idea is that this accomplishes the negative of all that I assert. If there be anything else in the section that is in the nature of a check, I would like to hear what it is. But notwithstanding these words—notwithstanding it says they shall be subject to the Constitution and laws of this State, there are no means provided, no agency established, by which it can be done. What is it we authorize? Why, that the City of San Francisco may hold a Constitutional Convention—call it in her own way, hold it when she pleases, enact such a Constitution as she pleases. How is it to become the organic law? Why, sir, by submitting it to the electors of the City of San Francisco. Is there any power in the State Government, supposing that they should set up a government thus inconsistent with the State Government, and which contravenes the policy of our laws, by which the State could prevent it? No, sir, there is no authority provided. It is to be submitted to the electors alone, and if by them ratified, it becomes the organic law of the city of San Francisco. There is no power in the Legislature; there is no power in the judiciary, nor in any of the departments of the State to interfere if we establish that system; and if they themselves become dissatisfied and wish to amend it, they have only to repeat the process, and call, independently of the authority of the State, another Convention, and adopt these amendments and put them in force. They are required to keep one of these new Constitutions on file in the office of the Secretary of State, and then all the Courts, and all the departments of Government are required to take notice and govern themselves accordingly.

This is the boldest kind of an attempt at secession. If this had been attempted down at the lower end of the State it would not have looked so bad. But here in San Francisco, where commerce and population congregate, where we cannot get out and in except through the Golden Gate, seems to me to savor so strongly of imperialism that I cannot see how any gentleman on this floor can reconcile himself to advocate it. Why, how, for what reason, can it be argued that the City of San Francisco shall not submit themselves to the laws of the State of which they are a part, and whose government and duties they should share? Why not provide a law by which the other cities and counties of the State could make their own laws, have their own Legislatures, adopt their own system of government, and dispute the will and authority of the rest of the State? Why not? What reason can be given? Gentlemen tell us that the conditions of San Francisco are peculiar. They are no more peculiar than those of any other large city; and, sir, allow me to say that these gentlemen have read history different from what I have. It will be found—it has been found—that these cities will have to invoke the conservative influences, the conservative wisdom of the country of which they are a part. Why, sir, what need is there of this system? The City of San Francisco will have one third of all the members of the Legislature. She has always had, and always will have, a large share in the control of the State government. Why should she not submit herself to the laws of the State? I do trust that this motion to strike out will prevail.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I propose an amendment to the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by striking out all after the words 'section nine' and inserting the following: 'The Legislature may, by general law, provide that any city having a population of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants may frame and adopt a charter for its own government, subject to and not inconsistent with the Constitution and laws of the State.'"

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert, after the word 'inhabitants' in the second line, 'and all other towns organized under a charter.'"

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: As the section now stands, I agree entirely with the gentleman from Placer that it is dangerous, and I don't think we should put in this Constitution a provision which will allow any part of the State Government to run away or get outside of, or beyond the control and authority of the State Government. I am not in favor of allowing any part of this State to set up an independent empire; and though I agree that every locality should have the right to govern its own local affairs, still I think this power should be subordinate to and subject to the supreme power of the State. Now, sir, I do not object at all to allowing citizens of San Francisco, or Oakland, or Sacramento, to frame a charter for their own cities, provided their action is in pursuance of law, and subject to the control of the legislative power of this State; but I do object most strenuously to putting any thing into this Constitution that will allow any part of this State to frame a charter that shall not be submitted to the Legislature, that the Legislature cannot have power over; in other words, independent entirely of the State Government.

MR. JOYCE. Does he want to have the charter of San Francisco adopted that way, so the railroad company can rob us as they have for years past, taking away Mission Basin and water front?

MR. VAN DYKE. I don't understand what that has to do with this question. I do not object to the City of San Francisco framing its own charter, so long as it is subject to the supreme power of the State, and not superior to it. Now, sir, if that section nine is adopted, there is no power in this State to remedy any evil that may be enacted there in the charter by the city. I say that is dangerous; I am opposed to it; but the same object can be acquired under this amendment. This provides that a city of that size may frame and adopt its charter in pursuance of law, and still the whole thing emanates from the supreme power of the State, and is subject to that power, as it always ought to be. Why, sir, pass that section, and the City of San Francisco, or any other city of one hundred thousand inhabitants, will occupy the same position towards the State Government that the State does towards the Federal Government. It will be supreme in everything except the general matters laid down in the Constitution. But here is an attempt to set up an independent government, and, sir, I hope this amendment may be adopted, or the section stricken out.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I trust, sir, that the section will be retained. And it is a remarkable fact that all the opposition comes from the advocates of centralism, the whole of it. They are opposed to local government, that is the whole thing. If gentlemen will read Bancroft's History of the United States they will find their history sadly out of joint in these matters. What is the fact? It is notorious that every job is gotten up by a clique who have an axe to grind at home, and they send it to the Legislature and get it adopted, and the Legislature saddles it upon the people in the cities and towns. That is the history in this State. Now, sir, I speak advisedly in this matter. In the City of Los Angeles about half a dozen fellows, with an axe to grind, got up a charter and sent it up here for ratification, unbeknown to the people of the city, and they got it adopted too. It proceeded to organize a city government under the pretense of organizing a Board of Public Works. And the business interests of the city would have been destroyed but for the fact that the District Court and the Supreme Court pronounced the Act unconstitutional. The City of Los Angeles took this matter into her own hands. They called a public meeting, they framed a charter, they discussed it, it was published, and adopted, and the Legislature was asked to ratify it, which they did. And so long as this thing is managed by the Legislature, so long will these jobs and frauds prevail. Now, sir, this system of town government in the thirty States, and particularly in New England, has met the commendation of many eminent men, and particularly of De Tocqueville. I know it is a good system of government. I know it secures local rights, local economy, local good government. I have heard, at town meetings in New England, discussions on public affairs relating to township government, that would have done honor either to the Legislature or the Congress of the United States. And it is the proper place for this power to rest, with those who know the local interests, and who are thus able to provide for their own control. This system will prevent corruption. I favor it for that reason, and because it suppresses jobs, and because it secures honest, fair, intelligent, and efficient local government.

SPEECH OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I really do not see what objection there can be to retaining this section. Nor do I see any occasion for saying that this report smacks of secession. This section is uniform in its application, and under a certain status it is applicable to any city that has, or shall have, one hundred thousand inhabitants. Therefore, it is not objectionable on the ground of want of uniformity. Now, sir, if there was any antagonism between the delegates from San Francisco, it might be entitled to respectful consideration. But as I understand it, they are a unit upon this question, and I see no reason why the section should not be adopted. Why, this very first provision here says that the charter shall be subject to the Constitution and laws of the State; not only subject to the Constitution, but subject to the laws which may be passed hereafter. What more can we require? Is it not in entire harmony with a section which we have adopted in the legislative department. There is no secession about it. In Missouri it has worked well. I am not a Missourian myself, but I must say that when the City of San Francisco joins hands with the Constitution of Missouri, and finds a champion in the able and distinguished Chairman of this committee, it is irresistible.

REMARKS OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I think this is a somewhat dangerous provision. I do not believe any gentleman could define the City of San Francisco. You have a City and County, but no City, of San Francisco, and there is no provision made by which this can be adjusted; so it does seem to me that the citizens of San Francisco had better examine this matter. Suppose now an election were to be called to-morrow, how would you vote? What will become of the County of San Francisco? What will become of the other territory? It seems to me it would result in serious confusion, and I think you had better examine the matter.

SPEECH OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: The Chairman of the committee, in his opening remarks, frankly conceded that this section was unnecessary; that without this section it would be within the power of the Legislature, by general laws, to authorize every city to frame charters in such manner as the Legislature should deem best. I say, therefore, it is entirely unnecessary in the Constitution. It is entirely unnecessary here that we should part with our entire control and power over the city. Nor does it follow, because such charter is to be submitted to the people of that city and county, that the Constitution which is adopted will be free from objection. It is provided that the charter may be amended not oftener than once in two years, by submitting it to the legislative power of the city. It is practically beyond amendment, because amendments must be submitted by and through the legislative authority, which means nothing more nor less than the Boards of Supervisors. And I will say, that when gentlemen here profess the faith which they do profess in local administration of government, they must have had a different experience from what I have read of. I have not heard of a Board of Supervisors, or Council, or local government of any large city in this country that has not been constantly accused of abuses of the most flagrant character. Why, every gentleman who advocates this measure, rises to do so by telling us of the abuses practiced by their Boards of Supervisors; and yet they now seek local government which shall cast them off from the State, and place them entirely within the control of the very class of which they now complain. Why, in the twenty-third section there is a long amendment in regard to allowing water pipes to be laid down in the city of San Francisco, because they say the local authorities cannot be trusted with the matter, because they are under the control of Spring Valley. This amendment is wrong in principle. It makes a discrimination upon the wrong side. If there be any discrimination, it should be found upon the side of the smaller, and not the larger, cities. It may be that the local township governments of New England have operated as well as the gentleman says, but it is not true that in the great cities of the Union the system has operated well. If you are going to make a discrimination, make it against the great cities, and in favor of the smaller communities.

SPEECH OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I am surprised at this opposition, the more so because it is based on an entire misapprehension of the purport of the section. We are told the design of the section is to provide a government, independent and entirely beyond legislative control, for the City of San Francisco, and for reporting and advocating it I have been charged with being a secessionist. I am not, and never have been a secessionist. Idle words, and absurd declaration, based upon an assumed hypothesis, entirely unsupported by facts, cannot be answered by argument, but may be denied. This section does not, and is not intended to establish an independent government beyond legislative control. It is intended to and does give the people the privilege of framing and adopting a charter for themselves, subject to general laws, and to the approval of the Legislature. This is no new thing; the same power has often been conceded, in this State and elsewhere, by legislation. Years ago, by law, the same privilege was granted to the City of San Francisco. The section provides that cities containing more than one hundred thousand inhabitants may frame a charter for their own government consistent with and subject to the laws of this State, which must be ratified by popular vote, and then submitted to the Legislature for its approval or rejection. In other words, it provides for the election of fifteen freeholders, who may frame a charter; this, if ratified by the popular vote, must be submitted to the Legislature for approval. If approved, it becomes the organic law of such city, and supersedes all special laws inconsistent with such charter; but it must be consistent with and subject to all general laws. A previous section (section six) directs that the Legislature, by general law, shall provide for the incorporation, organization, and classification of cities, and then declares that all cities heretofore or hereafter organized, and all charters thereof, framed or adopted by authority of this Constitution, shall be subject to and controlled by general laws. San Francisco, with its one hundred thousand inhabitants, and any charter framed for that city by a Board of Freeholders, as provided in this proposed section now under consideration, must be subject to and controlled by these general laws. Now, sir, if to provide for local self-government, subject and subordinate to general laws, subject also to the approval of the popular vote and the Legislature, be secession, my friends, so reckless in their assertions in opposing the provision, can make the most of it.

These charters so framed, like all others, must be and are declared to be, subject to and subordinate to the general law. The Legislature, by general laws, may limit, alter, change, annul, or extend any or all the provisions of such charters framed by the people of a city, as fully as may be done in cities incorporated under general laws. The provisions of section six apply to all charters and to all cities generally, and to none specially; there are no exceptions in favor of cities of over one hundred thousand inhabitants, none in favor of San Francisco. All general laws will be as operative, controlling, and imperious in the City of San Francisco, with a charter framed by the people, as in the smaller cities organized under general laws. Now my friend from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman, says, why limit this provision to cities of over one hundred thousand inhabitants? Why not make it applicable to all? I might ask, why did not he in the Committee on Cities and Counties, of which he was a member, move to make it applicable to all cities? If it be the wish of the convention to extend the provision to all cities, I will support an amendment to effect this purpose. If my friend from Placer, Mr. Hale, wishes his Auburn, loveliest city of the foothills, to be included, let him propose to amend rather than oppose because it is not included; and if my friend from the groves of Alameda, Mr. McCallum, wishes his rural City of the Oaks included, I will aid him in that. There is no desire to be exclusive; on the contrary, if there should be any good in it, I am willing it should be extended to cities of ten or twenty thousand inhabitants. As originally drawn and presented to the convention by myself, the proposition was general, and made applicable to all cities; but the Committee on City and County Government, to which it was referred, struck out the general provisions, and limited it to cities of over one hundred thousand inhabitants. If I am not mistaken, some of the members of the committee now objecting to the section because it does not extend to all cities, in the committee favored the special limitation. I am ready to support and vote for an amendment to extend to all cities this right of local self government, either subject to or not subject to legislative control. If we cannot trust the people themselves, how can we trust a Legislature elected by the people? Legislatures have disappointed the people, will the people prove unfaithful to themselves?

MR. HERRINGTON. Why not put in the first part of section six, authorizing the Legislature to make this provision: "The Legislature shall, by general law, provide for the incorporation of cities and towns," etc. Will you put that in section nine?

MR. HAGER. And then what?

MR. HERRINGTON. Leave it there.

MR. HAGER. Why, sir, this section we are now considering is subordinate to section six. The City of San Francisco, if it be hereafter incorporated, must be incorporated by authority of general laws under section six. This provision does not of itself frame a charter or create a municipal corporation. It is not intended to do so, it merely provides a mode in which certain cities may, consistent with and subject to the general law, frame a charter for their government. The general law may limit their powers and restrain their action in any respect as fully as in the case of other cities, because it is declared the charters so framed by the fifteen freeholders must be subject to the general law. By the section, as reported by the committee, it was intended to make this provision applicable only to San Francisco, and why members from other cities or counties should object to the people of San Francisco framing a charter for themselves, subject to general law and legislative approval, and thereafter subordinate to general law, I am at a loss to understand. Logic, argument, reason, which may address themselves to our judgment, I might attempt to answer; but idle talk about the desire of San Francisco to secede and set up for itself an independent government beyond legislative control, and all such rhetorical nonsense, is unanswerable.

The theory of these provisions in regard to counties, cities, and towns, is to deprive the Legislature of the power to legislate by special laws. This was the principal purpose in view: that the Legislature shall not in the future, as in the past, legislate by special laws. Our volumes of statutes are mostly filled with enactments specially applicable to the various counties and cities of the State, so that each city and county has its special and different code of laws. These provisions do not take from the Legislature the power to legislate by general law. Its powers in this respect are ample, and apply to San Francisco equally with all the other cities of the State. There is no discrimination or special privileges. The power to legislate by special law is taken away, as it ought to be. I hope we have seen the end of it. Every one knows the pressure upon Legislatures for special laws and special privileges. It is the policy of modern Constitutions to deprive the Legislature of these mischievous powers, and I hope California will follow in this line of constitutional reform——

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman——

MR. BROWN. I rise to a point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

MR. BROWN. The gentleman from Placer has spoken once.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: In looking over section nine I see one provision there that could not be made applicable to other cities, and therefore I withdraw the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Los Angeles——

MR. WHITE. I rise to a point of order—the gentleman from Placer has spoken once.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has spoken upon the motion to strike out. He has not spoken upon the amendment pending. The gentleman from Placer will proceed.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: One word in reply to the gentleman from Los Angeles. He commenced by calling attention to the fact that this opposition comes from the advocates of centralism. I do not know exactly what he meant, but if he means that the opponents of this measure are the friends of centralization in any offensive sense, then I hurl it back in his teeth.

MR. HOWARD. The gentleman might as well keep his shirt on.

MR. HALE. I read from Bancroft's History also, to show that in Massachusetts they did not set up town meetings as against the State government at all. Now, sir, I say that this is an attempt to set up a government independent of the State of California. The gentleman from Sonoma tells us it is right because it is uniform. He says the committee sanctioned it. I say that hardly one quarter of that committee assented to it. When I spoke of secession I was not unaware of the fact that the section says that the charter so framed shall be consistent with and subject to the Constitution and laws of this State. But if we adopt this provision it is a part of the Constitution, and is absolute. By reading this section it will be seen that after this charter is ratified the Courts are bound to recognize it, because the Constitution so provides. It is subject to no law, subject to no department of the State, subject to no authority. Therefore it becomes the supreme law. I trust the committee will not indulge in any such dangerous experiments as this.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me, sir, that the opponents of this section are fighting the air. They have been denouncing it as productive of a variety of mischiefs, without showing what they are. As a practical illustration, the City of St. Louis has a provision exactly like this, and identical with this, and yet we have never heard anything about St. Louis being above the control of the State, but on the contrary, there is perfect harmony between the city and the State. There is a practical illustration right before your eyes, and before the eyes of the nation, of the fallacy of the idea that we are militating against the interests of the State, in the adoption of a system for the government of one of our chief cities. And, sir, the plan proposed by this section seems entirely consistent with the theory upon which the Convention has been acting—that local legislation ought to be left to the localities which it is intended to affect. That is the very spirit that has been underlying the action of this body heretofore, and from the beginning; and we have provided that the Legislature shall sit but for sixty days, and that they shall pass no special laws. What does that mean, but that the localities are to legislate for themselves in local matters. The idea is also that it will prevent corruption in the Legislature. This system, I believe, meets the unanimous approval of the delegation from San Francisco, for under such a system of government we can hope to escape from the evils which are now and have been in the past inflicted upon us. I think the rest of the State ought to be willing to concede this to us, so long as there is nothing that can conflict with the rights and interests of the State, or any part of the State.

SPEKCH OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I had not intended, sir, to say anything upon this subject whatever, but I will improve the opportunity to express my views briefly upon the matter. It appears to me that the object of the people in having the Convention called—or one of the leading objects—was to have as much of the local legislation taken away from the Legislature as possible, and given to the different counties and cities. The intention was to give the management of local affairs more to the people of the different localities, who are fully conversant with their own wants and wishes. The matter resolves itself down to this: that the people in particular portions of this State, and in particular cities, understand their own affairs, and their own business, with which they are intimately connected, better than any one else can understand them. It is this great principle upon which this measure and this class of measures are framed. Now, sir, it appears to me this is a correct principle. It has been urged that it is something new, and that it would be almost an impossibility to carry out the grand principles that are intended, because there is a county and a city consolidated. The modes are all set apart in this section, so that there can be no trouble. It is urged, also, that it is setting up an independent government in opposition to the government of the State—a separate affair—and consequently borders unto secession. The attempt to set up this kind of argument is simply ridiculous. They claim that this borders unto secession, when the very first part of it reads clearly that all this is subject to and in accordance with the Constitution and laws. We are simply imitating the organic law of Missouri, where their great city is organized under just such a constitutional provision as this. It is evident that these attacks are mere flourishes of words, which amount to nothing at all. There is no principle in it. Now, sir, I am in favor of this section, and it is not necessary to waste time trying to answer these silly objections. That city can govern itself better than anybody else can govern it, as regards purely local affairs.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: There seems to be some strange misapprehension here. The gentlemen argue this question as though the people of the towns are no part of the people of the State. Now, sir, if this fact has not attracted the attention of the sycophants of centralism, it has at least attracted the attention of M. de Tocqueville, when he says that in the township, as well as every where else, the people are the only source of power, and in no part of the Government does a body of citizens exercise a more mighty influence. And the American people demand obedience to the utmost limits possible. That is the language of an intelligent foreigner. If this idea has not occurred to those who bow in obedience to centralism, it has occurred to every philosophical writer upon the government of this country. It is a principle which lies at the very foundation of American government. I know there are persons here, even on this floor, who can see no merit in local government. They are the ones who deny upon this floor the decisions of the Supreme Court, that the State is the sovereign power. Sir, local government is no new idea. It existed way back in the middle ages, as it now exists in modern Europe; and the principle is recognized by every writer of any fame, that local government is a beneficent institution, and one that should be cherished and maintained.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: Section twenty-five of the Missouri Constitution has been referred to here. Now, section sixteen of that Constitution is a general section like unto this section now under consideration. In fact, it is a copy of it. After enacting these sections, for fear that they had placed St. Louis without the jurisdiction and control of the Legislature, of the General Assembly, it became necessary, and they did reorganize the section. Now, sir, there is no need to argue this question. The charter proposed will be under the control of the Legislature, and there is no possible foundation for the wild fears that have been expressed here.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I call for the previous question. That is the reply I make.

Seconded by Messrs. West, Evey, Wyatt, and Shoemaker.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke.

Lost—ayes 22.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the motion to strike out section nine.

Lost.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"And whenever such city shall have adopted such organization, superseding all laws inconsistent therewith, such city shall thereafter be entitled to receive from this State all the privileges and consideration accorded to the most favored nations, and the Legislature of this State shall provide a duly accredited minister, as a representative of the State in said city."

[Laughter.]

MR. WHITE. I object.

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment is out of order.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section nine by inserting between the words 'same' and 'it,' in line fifteen, the following: 'And if the Legislature of this State, at its next session thereafter to be holden, by a concurrent majority of both houses thereof, shall also pass and ratify such charter, and the same shall be either approved by the Governor, or, if vetoed by him, shall be passed over such veto in the manner provided in this Constitution for the enactment of bills not approved by the Governor into laws, notwithstanding the objection of the Governor thereto.'"

MR. WHITE. I rise to a point of order. It is not possible to understand that amendment.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: I offer this amendment in good faith, and I hope this committee will adopt it. The provisions of this amendment are: that if the Legislature shall ratify the charter which the city may adopt (which is the only point of difference), it shall then become the law of that city. I trust that we shall not so far depart from the general plan of this Constitution as to enable a municipality, or any department of this State, to establish a system of laws without the consent of the law-making power of this State. This amendment is offered for the purpose of subjecting these charters to the discretion and approval of the Legislature, like all other bills; and if the people of San Francisco shall have devised a system of municipal government that shall meet the approval of the law-making power of this State there is no reason why it should not be enacted into law.

MR. WHITE. I call for the previous question.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

Lost.

MR. McCALLUM. I move an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"In lines one and two strike out 'one hundred thousand' and insert 'forty thousand.'"

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: This amendment was agreed to in the committee. As I have said, I am opposed to this idea, but if we are to have a provision of that kind, I don't know of any reason why it should not apply to cities of forty thousand if they want it. They may want such a provision as that.

MR. HAGER. We discussed that matter in the committee. I was favorable then to putting it in. But there is but one city and county in the State, and it occurs to me that it would be difficult to do it.

MR. McCALLUM. I call your attention to the language of section nine, which says, any city, or consolidated city and county. I don't know whether there can be such consolidation or not.

MR. HAGER. I have no objections. We want no exclusiveness here. I am willing to give it to every city in the State. I am willing to strike out the words "having a population of more than one hundred thousand."

MR. McCALLUM. That is my preference. I will modify my amendment so as to strike out from the word "city," to the word "may," in lines one and two. Then it will read: "any city may frame a charter," etc.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The vote was taken, but no quorum voting. The question was put a second time, and still no quorum voted.

MR. HAGER. Allow me to say that this is not compulsory. It leaves it open to the city to accept it or not. I can see no objection to the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out.

Carried—ayes, 48; noes, 34.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section thirteen:

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 13. Taxes for county, city, town, school, and other local purposes, must be levied on all subjects and objects of taxation. In addition to that which may be levied for the payment of the principal and interest of existing indebtedness, the annual rate on property shall not exceed the following: For county purposes, in counties having two million dollars or less, shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation; in counties having six million dollars, and under ten million dollars, such rate shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation; and in counties having ten million dollars or more, such rate shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation. For city and town purposes, such annual rate on property in incorporated cities and towns shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation; and in any city and county with consolidated government, such rate shall not exceed —— cents on the one hundred dollars' valuation.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend by striking out all after the word "taxation," in line two.

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I propose this amendment with same degree of trepidation, because I find this section is copied from the Missouri Constitution. But notwithstanding that august instrument, it seems to me that it is not practicable for us here to impose a limit upon local taxation. I doubt whether any gentleman will undertake the task of laying down a rule by which he could agree that his own expenses, or the expenses of his family, should never exceed a certain sum. And yet, we gravely propose here to limit the expenditures for the city, and for the county, and the State. If a provision of this kind is adopted it will be found that occasionally circumstances will arise, extraordinary emergencies, in which additional expenses must be made and provided for. We have a provision somewhat similar to that in our city charter—a provision under which the city is forbidden to contract any liabilities unless there is money in the treasury to pay the same. But it was abandoned about a year ago, when the levees were broken below the city; when the homes of twenty thousand people were in danger; and when it was believed that an expenditure of one thousand dollars would avert the calamity, it was thought to be no crime to violate the charter, and incur this liability. It so happened at that moment that the Legislature was here in session, and our representatives immediately came here and procured the necessary legislation. But it cannot be expected that a Constitutional Convention can be always in session. It certainly cannot be expected that we will bind ourselves up with an iron-clad rule, so that when the emergency arises we cannot appeal to any authority to be released. And as there was a large majority of this committee a few moments ago sustained the section under consideration, because they believed in local self-government, I say upon the same theory they must sustain my motion to strike out this matter, leaving these questions to the local authorities.

MR. BIGGS. I move to strike out all after the word "taxation," in line two, and insert the following:

"Provided, that no city, city and county, town, or county, shall ever incur a debt which, together with existing indebtedness, shall exceed two per cent. of the assessed value of the property therein. Such value shall be ascertained from the assessment roll for State and county purposes made immediately previous to incurring such indebtedness; provided, however, that a city, city and county, town or county, may borrow money under and in accordance with the following conditions and limitations, in addition to any other conditions and limitations contained in the Constitution, namely: the debt must be for some single work or object only, and must be authorized by a resolution passed by a vote of three fourths of all the members elected to the Board of Supervisors, Common Council, or local Legislature. Such resolution shall also distinctly specify the single work or object for which the debt is to be created, and the amount of the debt authorized, and shall contain provisions for a sinking fund to meet the same at maturity, and requiring at least ten per cent. of the principal to be annually raised by taxation and paid into the sinking fund. Such resolution shall not take effect until it shall be ratified at an election held in said city, city and county, county, or town, at which no other matter is voted upon, and which shall be held within thirty days after the passage of said order or resolution. The Legislature shall make such laws as may be necessary to provide for holding such election, and ascertaining the result thereof."

That is section thirty-four, that was drafted by the legislative committee.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I wish to call the attention of the gentleman to section twenty, on that very subject.

MR. BIGGS. I compared it with that. If the gentleman thinks I had better withdraw it, I will withdraw it. I will withdraw it, by permission, until we consult together. [Consults.] After consultation with Judge Terry, I am willing to withdraw it in order to save discussion.

SPEECH OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: By this section thirteen, as reported, it was the intention of the committee to place a maximum limit on the taxing power of cities and counties. As my friend from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman, late of Illinois, with much emphasis, has told you it is substantially taken from the new Constitution of Missouri, his intended sarcasm is misapplied. I am not of Missouri; have never lived there, nor in any contiguous State or Territory; not even in the State of Illinois, whence my friend is said to come. Being Chairman of the Committee on City and County Government, I consulted the different Constitutions, especially the new Constitutions of Pennsylvania and Missouri, which I have in convenient pamphlet form, and, like other members have done in like cases, when I found any provisions which I deemed worthy of consideration, I presented them to the Convention. As I have stated, this provision is intended to fix a maximum limitation upon the taxing power; and if the Convention will give me its attention for a short time, I will explain its purpose. Municipal indebtedness, city and county indebtedness, has become a subject for serious consideration in all the States. Thoughtful men, political economists, and Legislatures are giving the matter prominent attention. Let me briefly refer to some statistics: In the American Almanac of eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, I find it recorded that the municipal indebtedness in the United States, in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-six, amounted to two hundred and twenty-one million three hundred thousand dollars. That is, in the year eighteen hundred and sixty-six, it was over two hundred and twenty-one million dollars. In the year eighteen hundred and seventy-six this indebtedness amounted to over six hundred and forty-four million dollars—more than doubling itself in ten years. This average increase in indebtedness during this time, has been about two hundred per cent.; the increase in taxation was about eighty-three per cent.; the increase in valuation about seventy-five per cent., and the increase in population about thirty-three per cent. Population and value of property have by no means kept pace with municipal indebtedness. When our municipal indebtedness is doubling in less than ten years, we might well ask, where are we drifting. It may be a foolish thing, in the estimation of some on this floor, to attempt to limit this power of taxation; it may be a foolish thing to undertake to compel our cities and counties, or the State, to live within their respective revenues, but I do not think it will be so regarded by those who pay the taxes. Our people, who are taxpayers, and not office-holders, will not feel aggrieved if the revenues are limited to the necessities of an economical administration of government, and if State, city, or county officers are allowed to expend no more money than the revenue will yield.

When we examine into the percentage of taxation throughout the United States, in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-eight (American Almanac), we find it ranged from ten cents up to one dollar. Among the highest taxed States California stands third in the list, Alabama and South Carolina being above; but as those States have an enormous interest-drawing debt, they are not a fair criterion, and we may say California, all other things being equal, stands first on the list as being the highest taxed State in the Union. Now, these are facts that I suppose my friend Mr. Freeman, who, it appears, is not well pleased with the Constitution of Missouri, will listen to as matters worthy of his consideration on economic grounds. I should be pleased to have him turn his attention to these facts and speak to them, rather than to hear him indulging in the declamation that he is opposed to the thing because he wants the people to have unlimited power. It is not proposed to limit the power of the people, but to give the people the opportunity to limit the legislative power of taxation. Is it unreasonable to place a limit on the power of taxation? Would the taxpaying portion of the community so regard it? Why should California, in her rate of taxation, stand among the highest taxed States of the Union, while New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and other States stand far below her in the list?

Taxes should be equal to the necessary expenditures of Government, but beyond that there should be no taxing power. Why are taxes comparatively higher in our State than in our sister States? Is it not because we are more extravagant in the expenditure of the public money? Over four millions of dollars are required to run our State Government, and about half as much more to run the Government of the City of San Francisco, while our sister State and neighbor, Oregon, only requires three hundred and fifteen thousand dollars for the support of her entire State Government. It may be all right. Perhaps we can afford to pay more for a government than other States do. Perhaps we can afford to pay higher salaries. The salaries of State officers here average higher than in other States. Our Legislatures are better paid. Does this bring us better laws, or is our State better governed? In the flush times salaries were keyed up too high, and it is difficult to get them down. It can only be done by limiting the taxing power. Governments are organized for the protection of society, and taxes are imposed for the support of Government. Each member of the community contributes his proportion toward sustaining Government that he may have protection of person and property. Offices are public trusts, not created for the benefit of those who enjoy them, but established for the administration of Government. California stands next to Pennsylvania, New York, and Ohio in the amount of revenue raised by taxation for the support of State Government; and next to Alabama and South Carolina in imposing the highest percentage of taxation. I call the attention of the Convention to these facts, and submit the question whether or not a constitutional limitation on the taxing power is worthy of our consideration.

In the percentage of taxation for county purposes, I find in Calaveras it is 2.36, in Alpine 2.14½, and in other counties the rate varies in sums between one and two dollars on the hundred. In some of the counties this tax is imposed for revenue, not only to pay the ordinary expenses of local government, but also the interest on funded and unfunded indebtedness. We could not well adopt a uniform rule of taxation to meet county indebtedness, but we might to meet ordinary county and city expenditures. How much more or less should this be than one dollar on the hundred? The provision which it is proposed to strike out reads: "In addition to that which may be levied for the payment of interest on existing indebtedness," the rate of taxation shall not exceed a certain specified amount in the several counties as proposed to be classified. The blanks may be filled up by the representatives of the different counties according to their wish. Taxation for ordinary purposes could not go beyond, but might go below, the limits fixed by the Constitution. Whether the section is adopted, or stricken out, is of no more personal interest to me than any other member of the Convention. I have given my reasons for its retention, and I have referred to statistics and facts in support of my position. If no better argument can be made against it than the one that has been urged, that it comes from the Constitution of Missouri, its opponents must be exceedingly limited in their resources, or else they are advocating the wrong side. In this section, by misprint, a line has been omitted, and if it should be necessary, I will send up the proper amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman might have added the States' indebtedness which would have swelled the amount up to the billions. I will agree with him as to the evils of running in debt, but it cannot be avoided by any such provision as this; it can only be done by a return to first principles. When an individual, who has run in debt because he had credit, finds his credit is exhausted, he has to come back to first principles, and pay as he goes. That is the only proper principle for cities and counties. Now, there is a proposition here, section twenty, which meets the question, and prevents cities and counties from running in debt, and compelling them to pay as they go. Pay as you go, and shake off the leeches who fasten themselves upon the body politic, and you are all right. I maintain that you cannot, by a provision in the Constitution, determine the amount of revenue which a city or county may raise for legitimate purposes of government; that is a thing that ought always to be flexible, and the Legislature is the proper authority to determine the rate of limitation upon the power of taxation, if it ought to be determined at all. The main thing is to prohibit them from running in debt, and then, when the people have to put their hands into their pockets every year they will look closer into public affairs, and pay more attention to where the money goes to. It is safe to say, when you adopt that principle, that debts cannot be imposed beyond certain limits, that you have destroyed the main means by which these mountains of municipal debts have been piled up. I have no objections to giving the Legislature power to place a limit upon the rate of taxation, in fact, I think it ought to be done. Now, the same subject came up before the committee upon the proposition to limit the rate of State taxation—forty cents on the one hundred dollars, I believe was the limit specified. It must have been apparent to the committee that such a provision was not proper in the Constitution, for they voted it down. The Legislature can do so when it becomes necessary, and then there will be some power to change the rate; but if you put it in the Constitution, it cannot be changed. There is nothing flexible. Cities which have exactly the same amount of assessable property may require a different rate of taxation. Emergencies may arise that will require the expenditure of a much larger amount in the one than in the other.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Freeman, to strike out a portion of the section.

Division being called for, the motion was carried, by a vote of 49 ayes, to 30 noes.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I move now that the balance of section thirteen be stricken out, for the reason that the subject-matter is provided for already; it is all provided for by the Committee of the Whole, for we have said that everything capable of being transferred shall be taxed. What is the use of repeating it in every article in the Constitution?

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out section thirteen.

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section fourteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 14. The Legislature shall have no power to impose taxes upon counties, cities, towns, or other public or municipal corporations or upon the inhabitants or property thereof, for county, city, town, or other municipal purposes, but may, by general laws, vest in the corporate authorities thereof the power to assess and collect taxes for such purposes.

REMARKS OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out the section, because the section in the article on revenue and taxation covers the ground; when it says that growing crops and such property as may be used for public schools, and property which belongs to this State, etc., shall not be taxed. Now, under that system of exempting, there is no occasion for saying that the Legislature shall have no power to impose taxation upon counties, cities, and towns, or other public or municipal corporations.

MR. HAGER. It don't say that the Legislature shall have no power to impose taxes. It says they shall not have power to impose taxes upon counties, cities, or towns, for municipal purposes, but may, by general laws, vest in the authorities thereof the power to assess and collect taxes for such purposes. They can impose all the taxes they see fit, but not for county or municipal purposes.

MR. JOHNSON. It would be very unusual for the Legislature to do anything of that kind, and it seems to me that this is entirely superfluous. There is not a particle of need of it. "The Legislature may, by general laws, vest in the corporate authorities the power to assess and collect taxes." Now, there is no occasion for that in there. The Legislature has that power already. There is no occasion for putting permissive clauses in the Constitution. The Legislature is the sovereign power, except as its power is limited by the Constitution of this State and the Constitution of the United States, and so there is no occasion for permissive clauses that the Legislature may do this thing or that thing. If I thought there was any occasion for such a provision I would support it, but there certainly is not.

REMARKS OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: There is another reason why this section should be stricken out. We have gone so far as to give to these municipalities almost absolute power in relation to their own domestic affairs, and I think we ought to preserve some power of supervision in the Legislature. Now, if this provision should be adopted, it is pretty certain that the Legislature would have no power to compel cities, or towns, or counties, to pay their debts. Now, if they choose to avoid the payment of their debts, there certainly ought to be power in the Legislature to compel them to do so. The section ought to be stricken out.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: This provision comes from the Illinois Constitution, word for word. It has also been adopted in several other Constitutions. There is nothing new in it, but I believe we first find it in Illinois, and I presume, therefore, it will be acceptable to my friend from Sacramento. The Legislature shall not, for county purposes or city purposes, impose taxes upon counties or cities. They may impose it for State purposes, but not for county purposes. That is to be done by the counties themselves. Now, why should the Legislature say to a county, you are to raise so much and pay it over to a railroad company or anybody else, in order to build a depot, or to subsidize them in any other way? Why not leave it to the counties themselves, as it is at this time? That provision is in a dozen Constitutions. It is perfectly clear and just, and for the protection of every community in the State.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: There is probably not half a dozen counties in this State that will average the same amount of taxes for county purposes. Still this Convention has provided that the Legislature shall pass none but general laws. Now, you propose to strike out the provision, leaving the Supervisors the power to levy taxes. You have provided for local government, and still you have now taken away the method of local government. These are acts that ought to be left to the local authorities. As far as that is concerned it will not affect the indebtedness of this State. It leaves this matter to the local authorities and allows the Legislature to enact general laws.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I think there is some misapprehension in regard to this section. The property referred to here is not the property of the county which is provided for in the revenue Act In the next place, I think my colleague, Judge Campbell, is under a misapprehension as to the mode of compelling the performance of contracts by counties. I think if there is any remedy in such a case it is only through the Courts. That has been the practice in California, as far as I know. I think under these circumstances section fourteen ought not to be stricken out.

MR. CAMPBELL. My colleague is entirely mistaken if he supposes that the Courts could compel them to levy any tax. They could not do it unless it is specially provided for by law. There are to-day delinquent counties, and the Courts have no power, and the Legislature certainly ought to have supervision over them. If any county refuses to pay its debts the Legislature ought to have power to make them do it.

MR. McCALLUM. I will ask you if you have not known a case where there has been an attempt made by the Legislature to compel the county to pay a debt—the case of El Dorado County? And was not the case in the Courts? I repeat, sir, that it is through the Courts that this question can be reached, and not through the Legislature.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out.

Lost.

THE SECRETARY read section fifteen:

SEC. 15. The Legislature shall not delegate to any special commission, private corporation, company, association, or individual, any power to make, control, appropriate, supervise, or in any way interfere with any county, city, town, or municipal improvement, money, property, or effects, whether held in trust or otherwise, or to levy taxes or assessments, or perform any municipal functions whatever.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section fifteen.

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I don't know that I ever heard of a municipality that did not have commissions for various purposes. For instance, in the municipality here we have a Board of Fire Commissioners; we have a Board of Commissioners for funding our debt; we have a Board of Police Commissioners; a Board of Levee Commissioners; and I suppose there is no city anywhere that does not have commissions for some purpose or other. It does seem to me that it would not be right to prohibit it. It is true the section also goes on to say that the Legislature shall not delegate its power to any commission or association of individuals; but I think no Legislature needs such a provision.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: This is taken from the Constitution of Pennsylvania, therefore I suppose it will meet with the same criticisms as the section taken from other Constitutions. I do not dare to take any more honors upon myself. To show that there is no difference, I will refer you to the Constitution of Pennsylvania, which you can compare for yourselves. This does not say that the county shall not have any Commissions. It says the Legislature shall not delegate to any special Commissions its power. It don't say that the city or the county shall not do it, but it provides that they shall appoint their own Commissioners. Why not? Why not the city appoint its own Commissioners? If they want a Funding Commission, why not appoint them? Why should the Legislature force upon you men from distant portions of the State to control your funds and pay off your debts? Why should not the local authorities do it? Why should the Legislature appoint the Commissioners? Why should the Legislature appoint a Commission to go into any city or county in this State to do any act which the corporation can better do themselves, and better supervise themselves? I cannot see any objection to the section. There seems to be a feeling here that the people are not to be trusted in any manner whatever. We have had Commissions put upon us by the Legislature, down in San Francisco, to open streets at an enormous expense, amounting often almost to a confiscation of property—some even had to give up their property. I hope it will be stopped. Let the corporations take charge of it themselves. Why should they not be better informed as to the business to be done than any foreign Board of Commissioners who go down there to eat out our substance?

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out.

Lost.

MR. FREEMAN. I move to amend.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by striking out the words, in lines five and six, 'or perform any municipal functions whatever.'"

REMARKS OF MR. FREEMAN.

MR. FREEMAN. Mr. Chairman: I cannot see what objection there is for appointing the ordinary commissions which exist in every town in the State, as I mentioned before—Fire Commissioners, Commissioners for funding the debt, Police Commissioners, and Levee Commissioners. It may be true that this provision is found in the Constitution of Pennsylvania. In fact, the Chairman of the committee seemed to go through all the Constitutions in the United States, get them all in one mess together, and pour them into this committee, where it is impossible for this Convention to do anything with them.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section sixteen.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 16. No State office shall be continued or created in any county, city, town, or municipality for the inspection, measurement, or graduation of any merchandise, manufacture, or commodity; but such county, city, town, or municipality may, when authorized by general law and the public interest demands it, appoint such officers.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer the following substitute:

THE SECRETARY read:

"Any county, city and county, city or town, may, when authorized by general law, provide inspection officers therein for the inspection, measurement, and graduation of merchandise, manufactures, and commodities."

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: This substitute provides for the protection of people outside of your cities as well as those who live there. The section says, when they see fit to appoint these officers, they may do it. I think that is not right. It leaves us in the country without any protection whatever in our trade with your cities.

MR. DUDLEY, of Solano. This section also inhibits the State from maintaining revenue officers in the cities. I hope the section will be stricken out. I move that the section be stricken out.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: The object is not to prevent the appointment of inspection officers, but to prevent the State from appointing inspection officers in the counties or cities; it leaves them power to appoint inspection officers by general law. It has no relation to revenue whatever; my friend from Solano is entirely mistaken; the localities are just as competent to appoint these officers, if they are necessary, and more so than the State; it leaves the matter with the people of the several localities, rather than in the hands of the State. Now, when I was in the Legislature, a proposition was made to appoint a gauger of firewood, another for liquor, and they were always trying to log-roll something of that kind through the Legislature, in order to create a place for some hungry politician. Several of those bills were log-rolled through.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

Division was called for, and the vote stood: Ayes, 25; noes, 43.

No quorum voting.

The question was put again, and the amendment lost, by a vote of 34 ayes to 58 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out.

Division being called for, the committee divided, and the motion was lost, by a vote of 31 ayes to 55 noes.

THE SECRETARY read section seventeen:

SEC. 17. Private property shall not be taken or sold for the payment of the corporate debt of any political or municipal corporation.

MR. TULLY. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. I move we do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at five o'clock and fifteen minutes P. M. the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow morning, at nine o'clock and thirty minutes.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTEENTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Saturday, January 18th, 1879.

MR. LINDOW. Mr. President: I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, and the same approved.

So ordered.

PETITIONS.

MR. BLACKMER presented the following petition, signed by a large number of citizens of San Diego County, requesting the exemption of certain property from taxation:

To the Honorable J. P. Hoge, President, and to members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: Your petitioners, citizens of the State of California, and residents of San Diego, San Diego County, most respectfully request your honorable body to exempt from taxation all property used exclusively for charitable, educational, and church purposes.

Laid on table, to be considered with article on revenue and taxation.

MR. TULLY presented a similar petition, signed by a large number of citizens of Santa Clara County.

Laid on table, to be considered with article on revenue and taxation.

REPORT.

MR. MORELAND. Mr. President: I send up the report of the Committee on Schedule. I ask that the usual number be printed, and that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

THE SECRETARY read:

CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION, SACRAMENTO, January 18th, 1879.

MR. PRESIDENT: Your Committee on Schedule beg leave to report as follows:

Your committee have duly considered Amendment No. 228, submitted by Mr. Tully for Mr. Laine, and Amendment No. 283, submitted by Mr. Shoemaker, and recommend that they be not adopted.

Your committee submit the following report, and recommend its adoption:

Messrs. Boggs, McComas, and Moreland dissent from section ten of said schedule, and recommend the following in lieu thereof:

SECTION 10. In order that future elections in this State shall conform to the requirements of this Constitution, the terms of all officers elected under the same shall be, respectively, one year shorter than the terms provided for in this Constitution; and the successors of all such officers shall be elected at the last election before the expiration of the terms as in this section provided. The first officers chosen after the adoption of this Constitution, shall be elected at the time and in the manner now provided by law.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

CHARLES R. KLEINE,
THOS. HARRISON,
H. V. SMITH,
ALPHONSE VACQUEREL.

SCHEDULE.

That no inconvenience may arise from the alterations and amendments in the Constitution of this State, and to carry the same into complete effect, it is hereby ordained and declared:

SECTION 1. That all laws in force at the adoption of this Constitution, not inconsistent therewith, shall remain in full force and effect until altered or repealed by the Legislature; and all rights, actions, prosecutions, claims, and contracts of the State, counties, individuals, or bodies corporate, not inconsistent therewith, shall continue to be as valid as if this Constitution had not been adopted. The provisions of all laws which are inconsistent with this Constitution shall cease upon the adoption thereof, except that all laws which are inconsistent with such provisions of this Constitution as require legislation to enforce them shall remain in full force until the first day of July, eighteen hundred and eighty, unless sooner altered or repealed by the Legislature.

SEC. 2. That all recognizances, obligations, and all other instruments entered into or executed before the adoption of this Constitution to this State, or to any subdivision thereof, or any municipality therein, and all fines, taxes, penalties, and forfeitures due or owing to this State, or any such subdivision or municipality, and all writs, prosecutions, actions, and causes of action, except as herein otherwise provided, shall continue and remain unaffected by the adoption of this Constitution. All indictments or informations which shall have been found, or may hereafter be found, for any crime or offense committed before this Constitution takes effect, may be proceeded upon as if no change had taken place, except as otherwise provided in this Constitution.

SEC. 3. The Legislature, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall provide for the transfer of all records, books, papers, and proceedings from such Courts as are abolished by this Constitution, to the Courts provided herein; and the Courts to which the same are thus transferred shall have the same power and jurisdiction over them as if they had been in first instance commenced, filed, or lodged therein. No officer elected at the first election after the adoption of this Constitution shall be entitled to draw any salary until he shall have been duly installed as such either by provisions herein or by Act of the Legislature.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of State shall cause this Constitution to be published once a week for at least four consecutive weeks next before the first Wednesday in May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, in not more than six newspapers published in this State, one of which newspapers shall be published in the City and County of San Francisco, one in the County of Sacramento, one in the County of Los Angeles, one in the County of Nevada, one in the County of Santa Clara, and one in the County of Sonoma. The Governor shall issue his proclamation giving notice of the election for the adoption or rejection of this Constitution at least one month before the said first Wednesday in May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, and the Boards of Supervisors of the several counties shall cause said proclamation to be made public in their respective counties, and general notice of said election to be given at least fifteen days next before said election.

SEC. 5. The Superintendent of Printing of the State of California shall, at least twenty days before said election, cause to be printed and delivered to the Clerk of each county in this State five times the number of properly prepared ballots for said election that there are voters in said respective counties, with the words printed thereon, "For the new Constitution." He shall likewise cause to be so printed and delivered to said Clerks five times the number of properly prepared ballots for said election that there are voters in said respective counties, with the words printed thereon, "Against the new Constitution."

SEC. 6. The Clerks of the several counties in the State shall, at least five days before said election, caused to be delivered to the Inspectors of Elections, at each election precinct or polling place in their respective counties, suitable poll-books, forms of return, and an equal number of the aforesaid ballots, which number, in the aggregate, must be ten times greater than the number of voters in the said election precincts or polling places. The returns of the number of votes cast at the Presidential election in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-six shall serve as a basis of calculation for this and the preceding section.

SEC. 7. Every citizen of the United States, entitled by law to vote for members of the Assembly in this State, shall be entitled to vote for the adoption or rejection of this Constitution.

SEC. 8. The officers of the several counties of this State, whose duty it is, under the law, to receive and canvass the returns from the several precincts of their respective counties, as well as the City and County of San Francisco, shall meet at the usual places of meeting for such purposes on the first Monday after said election. If, at the time of meeting, the returns from each precinct in the county in which the polls were opened have been received, the Board must then and there proceed to canvass the returns; but if all the returns have not been received, the canvass must be postponed from day to day until all the returns are received, or until six postponements have been had, when they shall proceed to make out returns of the votes cast for and against the new Constitution; and the proceedings of said Boards shall be the same as those prescribed for like Boards in the case of an election for Governor. Upon the completion of said canvass and returns, the said Board shall immediately certify the same, in the usual form, to the Governor of the State of California.

SEC. 9. The Governor of the State of California, shall as soon as the returns of said election shall be received by him, or within thirty days after said election, in the presence and with the assistance of the Controller, Treasurer, and Secretary of State, open and compute all the returns received of votes cast for and against the new Constitution. If, by such examination and computation, it is ascertained that a majority of the whole number of votes cast at such election be in favor of such new Constitution, the Executive of this State shall, by his proclamation, declare such new Constitution to be the Constitution of the State of California, and that it shall take effect and be in force on the day hereinafter specified.

SEC. 10. In order that future elections in this State shall conform to the requirements of this Constitution, the term of all officers elected under the same, and whose term of office is four years or over, shall be, respectively, one year shorter than the term provided for in this Constitution, and the term of all officers whose term of office is two years shall be, respectively, one year longer than the term provided for in this Constitution, except the members of the Assembly, whose first term of office shall be one year; and the successors of all such officers shall be elected at the last election before the expiration of the terms as in this section provided. The first officers chosen after the adoption of this Constitution shall be elected at the time and in the manner now provided by law.

SEC. 11. Should this Constitution be ratified at the election for the ratification and adoption thereof, it shall take effect and be in force on and after the fourth day of July, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, at twelve o'clock meridian.

MR. MORELAND. I move that the usual number of copies be ordered printed, and that it be referred to the Committee of the Whole.

The motion prevailed.

MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. President: I have an additional section to offer to the article on city, county, and township organization, which I would like to have referred to that committee.

The proposition was referred to the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization without reading.

THE ASSISTANT SECRETARYSHIP.

MR. WILSON, of Tehama. Mr. President: I send up a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the President of this Convention be and he is hereby authorized to fill the vacancy in the office of Assistant Secretary, occasioned by the election of Edward F. Smith as Secretary of said Convention, by appointment, whenever, in his judgment, the business of the Convention requires it.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I think there will be no necessity for an Assistant Secretary. I move to lay the resolution on the table.

The motion prevailed.

CITY, COUNTY, AND TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section eighteen.

PUBLIC MONEY.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 18. All moneys, assessments, and taxes belonging to or collected for the use of any county, city, town, or other public or municipal corporation, coming into the hands of any officer thereof, shall, immediately on the receipt thereof, be deposited with the Treasurer, or other legal depository, to the credit of such city, town, or other corporation, respectively, for the benefit of the funds to which they respectively belong.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendment to section eighteen, the Secretary will read section nineteen.

PROFIT ON PUBLIC MONEY.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 19. The making of profit out of county, city, town, or public school money, or using the same for any purpose not authorized by law, by any officer having the possession or control thereof, shall be a felony, and shall be prosecuted and punished as prescribed by law.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out the word "school," in line two. It would seem to be as bad to steal any other money as school money. I do not know why the committee put that word in. It would seem to be inadvertence or carelessness.

MR. HAGER. I would like to explain that that makes it applicable to State moneys, and is intended to make it applicable to municipal governments. This relates to, city, county, and township organizations.

MR. CAPLES. I would ask the Chairman if school money is not public money?

MR. HAGER. So it is to a certain extent.

MR. CAPLES. If it is public money, I would inquire what difference there is between making money out of money belonging to the school fund and any other fund.

MR. HAGER. I merely wish to state that it would make it applicable to State moneys.

MR. McCALLUM. I would suggest to insert the word "other" before the word "public." That will include all public money.

MR. LARKIN. I second that motion.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Caples.

The motion prevailed.

MR. McCALLUM. I now move to insert the word "other" before the word "public."

The motion prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section twenty.

INDEBTEDNESS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 20. No county, city, town, township, Board of Education, or school district, shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner, or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for them respectively for such year, without the assent of two thirds of the voters thereof voting at an election to be held for that purpose; and in cases requiring such assent no indebtedness shall be incurred (except by a county to erect a Court House or jail), to an amount, excluding existing indebtedness, in the aggregate exceeding five per centum on the value of the taxable property therein, to be ascertained by the assessment next before the last assessment for State and county purposes previous to the incurring such indebtedness, and unless, before or at the time of incurring such indebtedness, provision shall be made for the collection of an annual tax sufficient to pay the interest on such indebtedness as it falls due, and also to constitute a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof within forty years from the time of contracting the same.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out the word "five," in the eighth line, and insert "two," in lieu thereof. I hear it proposed to insert "three" instead of "two," but I do not feel disposed to place it at so high a figure. The practice prevalent both in California and in the eastern States, a practice that has been growing rapidly, of late years, of extravagance and expenditure in engaging in improvements of various kinds, has resulted in an enormous increase of municipal indebtedness. It is an evil great enough in California—an evil that most gentlemen upon this floor have realized, and have some knowledge of—but it is yet in its infancy in California, compared with the eastern States. The aggregate has amounted to over two hundred millions of dollars in the last decade. It is a practice that inevitably tends to a loose and extravagant mode of expenditure, and entails upon the taxpayers burdens that are onerous and insupportable, and I think that now and here is the time to put the brakes on and check this vicious practice. Now, if we estimate the liberty of expenditure that would be left by fixing the limit at two per cent, we find that it would enable counties like Sacramento, for instance, to contract debts over and above existing indebtedness to the extent of four hundred thousand dollars. Now, it does seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that that is margin enough, and I am free to say, in my judgment, too much. Gentlemen may argue that in exceptional cases, like cases of floods, fires, or other calamities, that it might become necessary to expend a great amount. Admit that in exceptional cases that may occur once in a lifetime, this may be the case; and admit all that such gentlemen claim, that there would be some inconvenience resulting from this restraint or restriction in cases of that kind, and I hold that the evil is incomparably less than that resulting from that extravagant system of expenditure that has prevailed in the past, and will prevail in the future, unless we put a substantial check upon it. I propose to do it now and here, and feel sure that the good sense of gentlemen on this floor will sustain me in the proposition that it is necessary, that it is desirable, and that it is the duty of this body to put, now and forever, at least so far as we can here, a stop to this system that has prevailed in the past, and is likely to prevail in the future, unless we stop it.

MR. LARUE. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty as follows: Strike out the word 'five' in line eight and insert the word 'three.'"

REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I hope that "two" will be allowed to stand. I am certain that two per cent. on the principal is all that ought to be permitted in these cases. This is not limiting the expenditure. We are first allowed to spend as much as we like, and now it is asked to allow us to contract a debt upon the county of five per cent. upon its property. I really think that one per cent. is enough, but at all events it should not go above two. I am certain that it would be enough for our own county, and I am sure that we would want as much as any county. We can tax ourselves as high as we please and spend all that, and then we can go in debt to the extent of five per cent. The people never know what they are doing when they go in debt. If we were down to a cash basis, it would be better than to give them any lee-way. Two per cent. is rather too much to allow under the circumstances, excepting in case of some calamity, and that is provided for.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Caples, will prevail. I believe that two per cent. is enough in any county of the State. In our county it would create an indebtedness, over and above existing indebtedness of four hundred thousand dollars, which would be amply sufficient for any purpose which the county would require to create an indebtedness under any emergency. I hope the amendment will be inserted. It is a crying evil that exists throughout the country. I suppose as a country the world has not a parallel to the municipal indebtedness of this country. I hope that this amendment will prevail, and that two per cent. will be the limit fixed to which counties can run in debt.

MR. LARUE. Mr. Chairman: I am aware that in most of the counties of this State the taxes are heavy, but there are cases which will arise where it may be necessary to raise more than two per cent. I cannot see any injustice in leaving the trustees of a city a little lee-way: that is, only in the city. Our city tax amounts to two per cent. now.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I believe, if I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Larue, that it is to strike out "five" and insert "three." I am in hopes that amendment will be adopted. It is a question that would occasion a great deal of thought. Two per cent. is not enough. You may examine every Constitution in the United States, and you will not find one of them as low as two per cent. A majority stand from three to five.

MR. WHITE. I would ask the gentlemon whether you cannot first assess as high as you like, and have this extra after that assessment?

MR. BIGGS. This includes the indebtedness of cities, towns, and counties.

MR. WHITE. No, that is not the case.

MR. BIGGS. Under the amendment which I offered yesterday, it includes the indebtedness. The amendment I was addressing myself to was the amendment I offered yesterday at the request of Judge Terry. That says two per cent. altogether, with existing indebtedness. I see the report of Judge Hager is exclusive of such indebtedness. That makes quite a difference. If that includes indebtedness, every gentleman will know that two per cent. is not enough.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I think the committee does not understand this provision. I do not understand that it has anything to do with taxation at all, or the right of taxation. It simply says that the indebtedness shall not be increased over a certain amount, even if two thirds of the people vote for it.

MR. BIGGS. Don't it say you have to refer to the assessed value of the property?

MR. McFARLAND. The only provision is that the indebtedness of a county or city shall not exceed so much per cent., excluding past indebtedness, even though two thirds of the people vote for it. Now, recollect, there is no increase of indebtedness to five per cent., except it has been voted for by two thirds of the voters. Now, it seems to me that when the matter has to be submitted to the people and receive a two-thirds vote, it had much better be left at five per cent., because you cannot increase the indebtedness unless two thirds vote for it.

MR. LARUE. I withdraw my amendment.

MR. McFARLAND. It seems to me that it should stand as it is. It is enough to require a two-third vote.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty by inserting, in line seven, after the word 'jail,' the words 'or for a city, or city and county, for the acquisition or construction of waterworks.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. That is not an amendment to the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I do not know that the Convention entirely understands this section as it is intended. In the first place, as the Constitution now stands, there is no limitation upon the taxing power in any county. You may make an assessment for taxes as much as you please. There is no limitation upon that. Therefore that matter should be taken into consideration when you go beyond the ordinary purposes of revenue. The section is intended to be a limitation to this extent: that the outlay shall not exceed the income and revenue provided for them respectively for such year. Now, you can make that revenue just what you please. You may levy two, five, six, or ten per cent. if you choose, because you have already stricken out the limitation we had in the previous section, so that you may tax ad libitum. You may go to the extent of ten per cent. if you choose. That matter ought to be taken into consideration here, because you have the power at all times to levy any tax, for the ordinary expenses of the government, that you see fit, and now if you want to go beyond the purposes of ordinary revenue for any special purpose, then the question arises, to what extent shall you go? The limit here is not to exceed five per cent., and then it requires the consent of two thirds. I think it is safe to leave it at that. There is an abundance of safety for any county in the State. I think the limitation to two per cent. would be useless, because you can levy that much without for ordinary purposes; but if you want to go beyond the ordinary purposes, I think the limitation to five per cent. is enough. I think if gentlemen will reflect upon it in all its bearings, with the power that they have for all the purposes of revenue, that five per cent. is as low as it should be.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Sacramento will be adopted. I think that the ad libitum power we give of taxing, and then with the privilege of increasing the indebtedness to the amount of two per cent. upon the assessed value of the property, is giving privilege enough for the purpose of taxing the people. Upon an assessment roll of ten million dollars you can then put an extra tax upon the people of two hundred thousand dollars. That ought to be sufficient. Sacramento can go in debt, under that rule, two million dollars. I think, if we attempt to put any limitation whatever upon it, that two per cent. is sufficient. I therefore hope that the amendment, reducing it from five per cent. to two per cent., will be adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Caples.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I now send up my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty by inserting in line seven after the word 'jail,' the words 'or for a city, or city and county, for the acquisition or construction of waterworks.'"

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I hope that we will be permitted, if we want to acquire waterworks to do so, and I hope that gentlemen will not oppose it.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I would like to know why we are going to make this exception to the rule. If this proposition is good for one part of the State, it is good for the whole. It seems to me that is folly to make a rule, and then make exceptions for some particular case that happens to strike gentlemen. There may be a thousand other cases where they might want to have this privilege for other purposes than waterworks. Now, does not the fact that right now there is a case pointed out where this law will not work well, prove that the whole thing is wrong. Why should you provide an exception to this rule in the case of San Francisco?

MR. HAGER. I move to strike out of the amendment the words "acquisition or."

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I hope the words will not be stricken out, and for the very obvious reason that under the law we can condemn any waterworks that belong to private parties. If it is condemned by a judicial proceeding, then we have to provide for paying for it. Take San Francisco for instance. So far as I am concerned we do not want to buy any waterworks, but if we wish to acquire private property, we must go into the Courts and condemn it; and after we shall have condemned it, then we must provide for paying for it. Striking this out would prevent San Francisco from ever owning these waterworks. So far as I am concerned, I would rather that the amendment would be voted down than voted for as proposed to be amended by Mr. Hager. I am not in favor of buying anybody's waterworks and paying fifteen million dollars, or any other sum; but I wish to place it so that if our city, or any other city, wishes to acquire waterworks by the exercise of the right of eminent domain, and then paying the amount that the Courts may claim should be paid, it may do so.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: As I understand the amendment it covers the two means by which the people could be supplied, by the acquisition of existing works or by the introduction from abroad, of water. I think it proper and appropriate to make an exception in favor of this great necessary of life; in favor of allowing the people to issue their bonds, or make laws for acquiring that great necessary. Now, the people of the City of San Francisco, for the acquisition or ownership of pure fresh water, it may be necessary for them to incur an indebtedness of twenty million dollars; and, with the growing population, it may be that before many years it will be necessary to incur that amount of expense. Now, to acquire water, would impose upon the city the necessity of raising something in the neighborhood of one million and a half per annum, and it would be necessary to determine, of course, the number of years these bonds would have to run, etc. That would necessarily be raised by a tax upon the community. I am in favor of leaving the people of San Francisco free to acquire waterworks and incur the indebtedness necessary, because of the great necessity that exists for something of this kind in the presence of the monopoly existing there, which may take advantage of a cast iron prohibition in the Constitution prohibiting the people from going abroad and obtaining water, and which would be disastrous to the people.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: This amendment, while it injures no other county, materially benefits the City and County of San Francisco. We think it is quite as important to have a fund for the obtainment of water supplies throughout the city as it is to have either a Court House or a Jail. I cannot conceive why this proposition should be opposed. I presume it will not be. It seems to me, sir, that the amendment proposed by Judge Hager would entirely emasculate that of Mr. Estee. We want the entire right, in its full form, or we do not desire it at all, according to my view of the sentiment of the people there. The city authorities should have entire jurisdiction of this subject, if it is conferred upon them in any way at all, and any partial privilege would be worse than nothing. I hope, therefore, that the amendment of Mr. Estee will be adopted. It is what we want and need, and injures no other county and no other interest throughout the State, while it will be largely conducive to the prosperity of our city.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: We, in Oakland, are somewhat similarly situated in that respect. We may require to condemn waterworks for that large and growing city, and I hope the amendment of Mr. Estee will be adopted.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the chairman of the committee. What possible necessity, if the Government shall control these waterworks, as has been provided in other sections, what possible necessity can there be for the acquisition of private waterworks which furnish abundant water? The argument that would be used at other times, and under other circumstances, the reduction of rates, cannot be used if this Constitution is adopted, because the people themselves, through their authority, regulate those rates. Those rates, it is supposed, will be regulated upon principles of justice to the water companies, and of justice to the people. Then, what possible point can be accomplished by the acquisition of works already constructed?

MR. ESTEE. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Under the law now, and the decisions of the Courts, could they not regulate the rates?

MR. McCALLUM. Under the law now, two of the Commissioners are named by the company.

MR. ESTEE. It may be so always. I will leave it to the gentleman if it does not cost as much for water as for bread in San Francisco?

MR. McCALLUM. It may be so always, which is the very point I am seeking to make. We have adopted, in section twenty-eight of the legislative article, a provision that the rates of water companies, and gas companies, and all other corporations, shall be regulated and fixed by law; if fixed by Commissioners, or fixed by Board of Supervisors, and that in cases where Commissioners are appointed, that the corporation shall not name one of them; and it cannot be so always, if this Constitution is adopted.

MR. ESTEE. Does the gentleman assume the proposition that, because we have the right to regulate the price of water, no city should ever own its waterworks?

MR. McCALLUM. No. And if the gentleman would do me the honor to listen to what I have to say he would not have asked the question. I am in favor of that provision giving the right to a city to construct its waterworks, and in that case, I suppose the city would never do it except in these cases, either where the private waterworks did not furnish water in quantities sufficient, or did not furnish water of a proper quality.

MR. ESTEE. What will you do in a case where private companies own all the sources of water?

MR. MCCALLUM. I do not know that that case exists.

MR. CAMPBELL. It exists in our own county to-day.

MR. MCCALLUM. On the contrary, I know that another company has been willing to furnish bonds to the proper amount to bring water in from other sources, and I have understood that that was the case in San Francisco, but I suppose in the case of San Francisco, without pretending to know as much about their affairs as their own local delegation, that the water is sufficient in quantity and quality. If so, the idea of purchasing when you have got the right to control the rates appears to me to involve the idea of speculation, and speculation on the side of the corporation in all such cases. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Chairman of the committee and leave the exception as to this limitation of indebtedness to the construction of works.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I would prefer that this amendment should not be made at all. As I said before, the cities have the right to levy any tax they see fit. When we increase the taxation by the taxation of securities, the taxable property in the City of San Francisco will probably come up to between three and four millions of dollars, that will make at two per cent. an abundance of money to supply the city with waterworks. We do not want to purchase Spring Valley Waterworks, and do not want to be compelled to purchase them.

MR. MCCALLUM. Is it true that Spring Valley has all the sources of supply?

MR. HAGER. I believe they profess to own all the supplies in the State. I do not suppose there will be any works constructed in the City of San Francisco unless the Spring Valley Water Company disposes of theirs. Every effort that has been hitherto made has failed, because the Spring Valley Water Company was there to interpose. You must purchase their works, at twice what they are worth, or else you will have no water at all. There is another clause reported here by this committee, that any person shall have the privilege of supplying water to cities. As it is now, no one can get the privilege in San Francisco, because the power of Spring Valley is so great. Laws have been passed by the Legislature providing for Commissioners, but were insufficient, because they were controlled by the Spring Valley. While the Spring Valley Water Company has got a good many sources of supply, I suppose the City of San Francisco could find others if they did not have to pay such a high rate of compensation to parties who claim to have taken up other sources of supply. They claim that Lake Tahoe is taken up by certain parties. That which should be open and free to the world has been reduced to private ownership, a thing never heard of in any country in the world except in California, where water, the essential of life, is made the subject of private ownership by individuals and held by them. Who ever heard of such a thing? I say it is a shame. I do not suppose San Francisco can establish waterworks. If they wish to do so they have abundance of opportunity under this section as it stands. They can tax ad libitum every year. Six million dollars ought to be sufficient and more than sufficient to supply the City of San Francisco. But if they are compelled to buy Spring Valley at fifteen million dollars, because they cannot do any better, they will have an insufficient supply, because Spring Valley is not a sufficient supply at present, and will not be in the future. They have purchased, as they say, and claim other sources of supply down the coast and over in Calaveras County. I hope the amendment will not prevail at all, and that the section will stand just as it is. I have no objection to putting in any amendment for county buildings, school houses, or anything of that kind. But there is two per cent. I think it will be better to leave it as it was.

MR. ESTEE. I am perfectly willing to insert after the word "acquisition" the words "by condemnation." I still maintain that San Francisco never can own its waterworks if that section is adopted.

MR. HAGER. I do not suppose that San Francisco ever can own its waterworks, unless it pays fifteen millions of dollars to the Spring Valley Water Company. Every effort that has hitherto been made has failed. I do not suppose we can get our waterworks very well. I am willing to leave it to private enterprise. If they can get rid of private ownership in public property, I think the people could get an abundant supply with six millions, or five.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I would ask leave to amend my amendment, by inserting "by means of condemnation."

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will have leave to modify his own amendment. The Secretary will read it as modified.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty by inserting in line seven, after the word 'jail,' the words, 'or for a city, or city and county, for the construction of waterworks, or for their acquisition by means of condemnation.'"

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: It needs but little reflection to show that two per cent. indebtedness is wholly inadequate for the purpose of enabling the City of San Francisco ever to acquire its waterworks in any manner whatever—by condemnation, purchase, or otherwise. During the last two years many estimates have been made, and much money expended in obtaining them, and they all show that it would cost many times five millions of dollars to procure water in the cheapest manner that it can be procured. So that to restrict the city to two per cent. is to cut it off from the possibility of owning its own water supply. How absurd is the reasoning that would permit a county, or a city and county, to erect a Court House, or a jail, or a school house, and tie its hands so that it cannot provide itself with water to drink. It does not seem to me to be any argument. The city ought to be free to purchase its waterworks, to condemn, or build, without any restriction. If there is any exception to be made, certainly the supply of water ought to come first.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I am not certain that I clearly understand what is before the House: but I am certain that I do know that the people of San Francisco whom I represent do not want to purchase the Spring Valley Water Works. They do not want anything in this Constitution that will aid and abet in any way that company. There have been several schemes to buy the old rotten works of that company that has robbed the city for the last twenty years, and the old flumes and ditches that are pretty near ready to tumble in; and there are several schemes on foot for the purpose of fleecing the city of San Francisco, and I want to oppose everything that gravitates in that direction.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: As the gentleman has amended his amendment it is now necessary for me to amend mine, so as to strike out the words, "or for their acquisition by means of condemnation."

REMARKS OF MR BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I have this to say in regard to the supply of water for the city of San Francisco. If I was a large stockholder in the Spring Valley Water Company I would not ask a better thing than his proposition, as it is reported by the committee. Now, I do not suppose that my friend has allowed his interest in the Spring Valley Water Company to control his action here: but, sir——

MR. HAGER. I have no interest in the Spring Valley Water Company, and have not had for years.

MR. BARBOUR. I thought you was a stockholder.

MR. HAGER. No; and have not been for years. In the gas company I am, and I have reported a provision against my own interest.

MR. BARBOUR. I admit it.

MR. HAGER. If there is anything in this report that favors me, I ask any gentleman to point it out.

MR. BARBOUR. I wish to call attention to the peculiar position in which these people would be placed. If I was a large stockholder in the Spring Valley Water Company, I would not ask a better provision than this section twenty, to be able to say to the people of San Francisco: "Now we have got you where we want you; you cannot threaten us with going outside to bring in water; it is Spring Valley or nothing."

MR. ESTEE. That is it.

MR. BARBOUR. That would be exactly the position in which you are placed. You propose to limit the amount of debt to two per cent. and then require the assent of two thirds of the voters to even that. Could the company ask a better hold upon the people than that? If they can defeat propositions, now is there a better position to be placed in than that identical one? It is not a proposition to compel the city to buy the old works of the Spring Valley Water Company. The people there are certainly intelligent. No proposition can go through without it is first submitted to the voters of the city and passed upon by them. Do you propose to prevent them from exercising some little judgment in reference to the subject of procuring this great necessary of life, because there is some company there that has some water rights? The city can go into the market and purchase elsewhere just as well as there, and yet you say they shall not do it. I am willing to leave the Spring Valley Water Company open to come in with their bid, and if it will sell at a reasonable price, I want the City of San Francisco to be able to purchase it. I have no such bullheaded hostility to the Spring Valley Water Company as to say that if they will sell for what it is worth, I would not consent to buy it. I do not believe that the people can be led to buy it at three or four times what it is worth. It has been tried, and it will be a failure in the future as it always has been in the past.

REMARKS OF MR. MILLS.

MR. MILLS. Mr. Chairman: I am decidedly opposed to the section, because it provides that no county, city, town, township, Board of Education, or school district, shall incur any indebtedness or liability, in any manner, or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for them respectively for such year, without the consent of two thirds of the voters; and even then cannot create an indebtedness exceeding two per cent. Now, I will venture to say that there is not in the country a school district that may desire to build a school house that can do so under this provision in this section as it now stands. In the town in which I live we desired to build a school house valued at eight thousand dollars. The only means by which we could do so under the existing law was for individuals to give their own notes to secure the assessment. They did so and built a school house at the county seat. It would be impossible to secure the necessary building in a county under this section. They cannot build their bridges even under the provisions of this section. In the county in which I reside, sometimes when the Winters are very severe, our bridges are swept away almost entirely. Roads are injured and destroyed, and it is necessary that there should be a means of raising money sufficient to repair them.

Now, in respect to bringing water into any town, if it is limited to the amount that is stated here, it would be utterly impossible for any town to undertake to provide water, leaving out of the question the City of San Francisco. With regard to that, the general argument here has been in respect to the provisions as applied to the City of San Francisco. Take it, sir, as applied to a county. A county may desire to build a Hall of Records, or provide a hospital; how can it do so? The county in which I reside has built a Hall of Records, at an expense of from eight to nine thousand dollars; they run in debt for a greater portion of it, although the county is perhaps able to pay, and will pay it within a year or two; but, under this provision, we could not have got a Hall of Records. This limits it to such an extent that it operates against the interests of the counties, townships, and school districts; therefore, I am opposed to this section entirely, as it now stands.

REMARKS OF MR. GORMAN.

MR. GORMAN. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, will prevail. I believe that the city of San Francisco is the most peculiar city in the world in regard to water, the sands from the ocean blow through the streets, and almost cover the houses in places. We need more water in that city for domestic uses, and for street purposes, than in any city in the world. We want it for our public parks, and if we were to limit the supply, to what cities generally need, it would not be a quarter of what the city should have. In the summer time when there is long periods without rain, the sewers get so foul that, if it was in a warm climate, the mortality would be terrible, and even as it is, the sewers have to be flushed very often. If we have to pay for the water we can scarcely sprinkle the streets of the city in sufficient quantities. If the city owned its own water works it could be used for many purposes; we could have plenty of water for the parks, for the streets, for the sewers, and for manufacturing and domestic purposes. They say you can regulate the price of water. But either the city would have to pay an immense amount for the water, or you would have to reduce the price so low as to break the company—one thing or the other. We have seen in San Francisco where there was large fires that the mains conducting the water were altogether insufficient in size. The city should own its own water works. They should put in pipes sufficiently large that in cases of fire the people could have all the water necessary. The water in the past years has been so bad from this Spring Valley Water Company that it could scarcely be used. It was filled full of living matter, to be seen by the eye coming out of the pipes. The Spring Valley Water Company have control of all heads of streams and lakes within thirty or forty miles of San Francisco, of all the water capable of being brought into the city: and certainly we need the power to construct or acquire water works more than any city in the world. I hope the amendment will prevail.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Campbell, Evey, Hager, and Hunter.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Hager.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty as follows: add at the end of the section the following: 'Any indebtedness or liability incurred contrary to this provision shall be void.' Also, in line four, insert the word 'qualified' before the word 'voter.'"

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: The word "qualified" ought to be there. The other amendment was in the report of the Committee on Legislative Department, and their section was stricken out because it properly belonged here, and I move it as an amendment to this section.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. WYATT. I move to amend in line fourteen, by striking out the word "forty" and inserting the word "twenty."

MR. HAGER. I will state to the Convention that, as originally drawn, it was twenty years. The committee, after deliberation, seemed to think that forty years was better. I would prefer twenty myself. It is a question for the interior counties to decide for themselves. The committee, after deliberation, thought it had better be forty.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. MANSFIELD. I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty by adding, after the word 'jail,' the words 'public school building in any city, town, or school district.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. There is already an amendment put in there after the word "jail."

MR. MANSFIELD. The object is to allow the people of any district to build a school house if they so desire. In the original they could not build except a Court House or jail.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I do not see any objection to making that amendment.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I will offer an amendment to the amendment that I think will cover that question. This applies simply to counties—"except by a county to erect a Court House or jail"—and that provision is simply to extend it to school houses. I believe it should extend to any public building to be erected by a city, county, or township. I move to amend section twenty, line six, by striking out "except by a county to erect a Court House or jail," and insert "except for the acquisition or construction of water works or public buildings."

THE CHAIRMAN. That is not an amendment to the amendment. It is an independent amendment.

MR. CAPLES. I am surprised at this amendment. Its practical result would be to nullify the restrictions that we have proposed to place upon the incurring of indebtedness. Now, that exception was made by the committee of Court House or jail for the simple reason——

THE CHAIRMAN. That amendment is not before the committee at present.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. I merely referred to the exception made by this amendment. The exception made by the committee was because of the prime necessity. These buildings must be had. They are indispensable to the carrying on of government, and hence the committee made a special exception for them, and that was right. Everybody recognizes that the amendment proposed by the gentleman from El Dorado would open the doors to the building of anything and everything, and any kind of extravagance and unnecessary improvements. For instance, if it is to be extended indefinitely to any kind of improvements, or any kind of building, why it practically nullifies the restriction that we aimed to place upon public expenditure. I am utterly opposed to throwing the door wide open to the building of palatial school houses, or palaces for our paupers, or any other system of extravagance that would be invited by this universal exception of anything and everything that might be hatched up for the purpose of robbing the taxpayers.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I take the same view as the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Caples. So many exceptions destroy the whole section. I hope, for my part, there will be no more exceptions, and if they go on we might as well strike the whole section out.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I now move to strike the whole section out. I think it is a disgrace to the Convention.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Mansfield.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. GRACE. I move to strike out section twenty.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I consider that section one of the most important sections in this whole report, a section that is eminently essential for the protection of our counties, cities, and towns. This committee has amended it, and there is no necessity for striking it out.

The motion was lost.

MR. MCCALLUM. I move to add, after the last word of Mr. Estee's amendment, the words "at a price not exceeding the actual cost of such water works."

THE CHAIRMAN. It is out of order. You cannot amend that amendment. The Secretary will read section twenty-one.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 21. No county, city, town, or other public or municipal corporation, by a vote of its citizens or otherwise, shall become a subscriber to the capital stock, or a stockholder in any corporation, association, or company, or make any appropriation, or donation, or loan its credit to, or in aid of, any person, corporation, association, company, or institution.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: That section has already been substantially adopted in the article on legislative department, and I would like to offer a substitute for it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Substitute for section twenty-one: 'SEC. 21. The Board of Supervisors, or other legislative authority, in their respective counties or cities, shall have power, by two thirds of all the members concurring in the vote therefor, to remove from office any officer of said county or city for negligence, incompetency, or corruption.'"

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: We have a provision of that kind in regard to a summary way of getting rid of incompetent State officers, and I think we ought to have the same remedy in the counties. If an officer is corrupt or incompetent, there should be some authority to deal with him promptly. If an officer refuses to pay over the moneys that he collects, there should be a summary way of turning him out of office at once." A provision in the article on judicial department gives the Legislature the right to remove Judges by resolution. This is a provision that I think would be well enough in regard to removing incompetent county officers by the Boards of Supervisors.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: We have been proceeding here for some time upon the theory that the worst men in the world were Supervisors. Now, you are going to give this unworthy Board of Supervisors power to turn out any officer in the county. Who is going to turn out the Supervisors? It seems to me a strange proceeding to put this power into the hands of three, or four, or half a dozen men, who, according to the gentlemen, are generally rascals, and cannot be trusted. I hope the substitute will not be adopted.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: My objection to the substitute is this: that under the present statute you can turn out any corrupt officer in a very short period of time, and the idea of allowing two thirds of a Board of Supervisors to turn out an elective officer is a strange one. Suppose the Board of Supervisors were of one political faith, and the county officers were of another, they might be removed simply upon that ground. I think it would be an extraordinary proposition.

MR. HAGER. Would it be any more extraordinary than for the Legislature to remove Judges elected by the people?

MR. ESTEE. I am not passing upon that. Leave it to the Courts. Who is going to watch the Supervisors? My chief objection is that it may be done for political reasons, and I think we ought to guard against placing any power in the hands of any local officer whereby they can remove an elective officer without any due process of law. In other words, the Board of Supervisors may remove a county officer—Sheriff or Clerk—without any showing on the part of that officer. That officer may be disgraced and ruined for life, and he never have an opportunity to defend himself.

MR. BARBOUR. Did you not propose, in the article on corporations, to authorize the Legislature to remove an elective officer?

MR. ESTEE. No, sir; I did not. That was an amendment adopted in this body. It is adopted, it is true, but I do not wish to be responsible for all that has been adopted, and I am not; but that does not make the slightest difference. This would be very dangerous. The Board of Supervisors might be of a different political party from the Sheriff, and they might pass a resolution that the Sheriff is not a responsible party, and declare his office vacant.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section twenty-one, as this is already provided for in the article on legislative department.

The motion prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The section is stricken out. The Secretary will read section twenty-two.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 22. No law shall be passed by the Legislature granting the right to construct and operate a railroad within any city, town, village, or on any public street or highway thereof, without the consent of the municipal or other proper local authorities having the control of such street or highway proposed to be occupied by such railroad.

MR. CAPLES. I move to strike out section twenty-two. The provisions of section twenty-two are all right enough, but we have already adopted provisions that cover the whole ground making section twenty-two unnecessary.

The motion prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The section is stricken out. The Secretary will read section twenty-three.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 23. In any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with artificial light and water, any company duly incorporated by the laws of this State shall, under the direction of the Superintendent of Streets of said city, have the privilege of disturbing and using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein, and of making connection therewith, so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and its inhabitants either with gas light or other illuminating light, or with fresh water, for domestic and all other purposes, for which the same or either may be used, upon the conditions following: Such company shall make good all damages to such streets and thoroughfares, except necessarily occasioned by the reasonable use thereof, and be liable to such city and its inhabitants therefor. Such company introducing and supplying gas light, or other light, and fresh water, or either, shall furnish the same, so far as necessary and required, free and without charge, to all public buildings, institutions, and school houses belonging to such city, and used for muncipal purposes; and such company introducing and supplying water, shall also furnish the same free and without charge, to the fire department, and for the extinguishment of fires. Each company, its property and franchise, shall be liable to such city and its inhabitants for the performance of these conditions.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment to that section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty-three by inserting after the word 'used,' in line ten, the following: 'Subject to such general ordinances as the municipal legislative authority may make as to the mode of exercising such privilege, and.'"

REMARKS OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: As the section now stands it authorizes any of these companies to tear up the streets of any city according to their discretion, upon certain conditions, and these conditions are, that they shall make good damages to such streets and thoroughfares, except necessarily occasioned by a reasonable use thereof, and be liable to such city and its inhabitants therefor. You simply create a liability. You allow them to tear up the streets without any regulation as to the extent of such tearing up, and simply make them liable where they may be insolvent and unable to respond in damages, and where they may occasion great inconvenience. If this privilege is to be given, it ought to be under such regulations as may be established by the municipal authorities in regard to the mode of exercising it; such, for instance, as that they shall be prohibited from keeping any block in an unsafe or improper condition; the extent of street they may tear up at one time, and all these things. I propose simply to change it in that way.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the section be stricken out. On yesterday there was a strong sentiment expressed here in opposition to giving San Francisco her charter in the form in which she desires it, because it was said that we would be adopting an act of secession. If the Convention does not want San Francisco to secede from the State, it ought not to want gas companies to secede from the different subdivisions of the State. This section contains a grant of power entirely overruling and controlling the local governments in which these companies exist. It takes away from the local governments the right to control and regulate these institutions, and makes them independent of municipal authority. It is, therefore, entirely objectionable, and I presume, since it is not desired by San Francisco, or any of the large cities where gas questions arise and agitate the people, I am quite certain it cannot interest any other portion of the State.

MR. GRACE. I second that motion.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I hope the section will not be stricken out. The reason why that section is inserted here may need a word of explanation. It seems to me it ought not to need a word of explanation to any resident of the City of San Francisco. There have been frequent attempts to introduce water, even artesian well water, in San Francisco, and persons who have sunk artesian wells in different parts of the city and finding that they had an abundant supply, have asked the privilege of supplying their neighbors in the same block, or perhaps adjoining blocks, and have sought the privilege of merely laying down supply pipes, to supply their neighbors with water that they have brought out of the depths of the earth, could not get the privilege from a Board of Supervisors to do that. They have stood ready all the time to give any amount of bonds required or named. They could not get the privilege. We understand the reason very well—the power of Spring Valley.

Again, there has been, during the session of this Convention, parties who have sought the privilege of erecting gasworks and laying down gas pipes, and supplying that city with gas at a reasonable figure, offering to comply with any bond that might be named, offering to give any necessary bond—not only that, but any bond that the Supervisors dare name. Could they get the privilege? No, sir! The San Francisco Gaslight Company stood in the way. Now, this section seeks to obviate that and give all parties the bare right to lay down water pipes or gas pipes—the bare, naked right to do so. But they are subject to all the necessary conditions. First, they shall do so under the direction of the Superintendent of the streets of the city; that is to say, they must not take up more than a certain distance in a street at once without repairing it again; in certain crowded thoroughfares they must do their work in the night time; they must work in these crowded streets between six o'clock in the evening and seven o'clock the next morning, and keep it all repaired during that time, and other conditions that may be deemed necessary by the Superintendent of Streets, so that they may not obstruct the traffic and business of the public. Such company would be subject to all these conditions. Then, again, it is recited: "Such company shall make good all damages to such streets and thoroughfares, except necessarily occasioned by the reasonable use thereof, and be liable to such city and its inhabitants therefor. Such company, introducing and supplying gas light, or other light, and fresh water, or either, shall furnish the same, so far as necessary and required, free and without charge, to all public buildings, institutions, and school houses belonging to such city and used for municipal purposes; and such company, introducing and supplying water, shall also furnish the same, free and without charge, to the Fire Department, and for the extinguishment of fires. Each company, its property and franchise, shall be liable to such city and its inhabitants for the performance of these conditions." I do not see why such a section as that should not be adopted. It is simply to break the power of overshadowing monopolists.

Mr. Chairman: I dislike to disclaim here against water monopolies and gas monopolies. It is a hackneyed phrase, I know, and I dislike to use it; but, sir, these institutions are all-powerful, and it is necessary to use it. Practical experience proves it to be necessary. It is, beyond dispute, that we need some such declaration in the law we pass to give these parties the right to use the streets to supply the people with these necessaries of life. All we wish to do here in this section is to declare the right to use our streets for the purpose of laying down water pipes and gas pipes, as well as of travel, subject to the proper conditions. That seems to be all that is necessary to say on this subject. Where a water company and a gas company—and they work together wherever it is necessary—have enjoyed a right to furnish all the water and all the gas to a city of three hundred thousand inhabitants for many years, they have acquired wealth and have acquired influence in so many ways, that it is almost impossible for a private citizen, or for a new company to come in there with any sort of opposition, without incurring difficulties that are absolutely insurmountable. That has been found to be the case. Within the past two or three months parties have been endeavoring to get this privilege, but they could not do it upon any conditions. They could not do it when they offered the city the privilege of naming its terms.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: What my friend from San Francisco says in reference to the gas and water companies is undoubtedly true, but I find that section nine prescribes a plan for a city government with full power. I will read part of the section:

"Any city having a population of more than one hundred thousand inhabitants may frame a charter for its own government, consistent with and subject to the Constitution and laws of this State, by causing a Board of fifteen freeholders, who shall have been, for at least five years, qualified electors thereof, to be elected by the qualified voters of such city, at any general or special election, whose duty it shall be, within ninety days after such election, to prepare and propose a charter for such city, which shall be signed in duplicate by the members of such Board, or a majority of them, and returned, one copy thereof to the Mayor, or other chief executive officer of such city, and the other to the Recorder of deeds of the county. Such proposed charter shall then be published in two daily papers of largest general circulation in such city, for at least twenty days, and within not less than thirty days after such publication it shall be submitted to the qualified electors of such city at a general or special election; and if a majority of such qualified electors voting thereat shall ratify the same, it shall, at the end of sixty days thereafter, become the charter of such city, or if such city be consolidated with a county in government, then of such city and county, and shall become the organic law thereof, and supersede any existing charter, and all amendments thereof, and all special laws inconsistent with such charter."

Now, let us look at this section twenty-three, the one under consideration:

SEC. 23. In any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with artificial light and water, any company duly incorporated by the laws of this State shall, under the direction of the Superintendent of Streets of said city, have the privilege of disturbing and using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein, and of making connections therewith, so far as may be necessary for introducing and supplying such city and its inhabitants either with gas-light or other illuminating light, or with fresh water for domestic and all other purposes for which the same or either may be used, upon the conditions following: Such company shall make good all damages to such streets and thoroughfares, except necessarily occasioned by the reasonable use thereof, and be liable to such city and its inhabitants therefor. Such company introducing and supplying gas light or other light, and fresh water, or either, shall furnish the same, so far as necessary and required, free and without charge, to all public buildings, institutions, and school houses belonging to such city, and used for municipal purposes; and such company introducing and supplying water shall also furnish the same, free and without charge, to the Fire Department, and for the extinguishment of fires. Each company, its property and franchise, shall be liable to such city and its inhabitants for the performance of these conditions.

They may take up the streets if they will furnish the city with gas and water. Now, what is the result? The result will be this—and here my friend mistakes his own case—that there never can be such a thing as competition under this section. I want to know how you can get a gas company in San Francisco, now that there is one already established, to come there and lay down pipes, for whenever they do it they have got to furnish San Francisco with gas free, that is the section. In other words, it pays a premium to the old company. It allows them to occupy their present position, and the new company has got to furnish the whole city with gas. Now, my friends do not mean that, but it reads that way. It is so in the section. Again we have a got a water company. Now, my friend proposes to meet the question of these artesian wells in certain localities. What is the result? Here is one sunk at a corner, we will suppose, and it raises five hundred thousand gallons of water a day. Now, the moment they commence to lay down water pipes in San Francisco, to supply the people of San Francisco, or any considerable number of them with water, they have got to supply the whole city with water. I think the city will have most ample authority to regulate this matter, and I realize the justice of the remarks made by the gentleman, last on the floor, in regard to the failure of parties to obtain the privilege of laying down pipes in San Francisco. Yet, I think from the provision that has already been adopted the most ample security will be given for any such thing in the future.

Mr. BARBOUR. Suppose the people do not make a charter?

Mr. ESTEE. If they do not have any city government they will not. If they do not have any charter they will not have any laws. They will have power to grant these privileges. These are extraordinary penalties that you propose to impose, because anybody can see that there is not a gas company in the world that ever will attempt to lay down pipes in San Francisco, and furnish the people with gas unless they sell the gas to the people at an enormous price, for they have got to give the gas to the city for the purpose of lighting the streets. Therefore, I think we had better, unless it can be amended, strike that section out.

Mr. McFARLAND. I have an amendment to offer.

The SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty three, by striking out lines 'one and two,' and the word 'water,' in line three, and insert in lieu thereof 'in the city of San Francisco.'"

REMARKS OF MR. ROLFE.

Mr. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I have three or four objections to this section. I do not know as I shall mention them all. In the first place, it was argued here very strongly yesterday that cities were able to govern themselves, and should be allowed to govern themselves. Well, I do not object to that. But, if cities are able to govern themselves and do govern themselves, then I say let them do it; and if they are not able to protect themselves from the Spring Valley Water Company, or anything else, let them suffer. It is said here that private citizens have dug artesian wells, and have asked the privilege to supply their neighbors with water, and the municipal authorities would not give them the right to lay down the pipes. I do not know anything about that. I do not care. If there is anything wrong about it, then let the people of that city elect other citizens who will act in the matter. But if the city authorities refuse that right, my opinion is that there is some good grounds for refusing it. That is only my opinion, not knowing anything about it. But this section will not remedy the evil. This section only gives this right to incorporated companies. If the gentleman will read the section he will find it so. It does not grant the right to the citizen who digs an artesian well and wants to supply his neighbor with water. It does not give them the right unless they go to work and incorporate. This thing of incorporating has been stigmatized by this Convention, and this Convention has said substantially that these incorporated companies must be discouraged.

I have an artesian well on my place at home. There are three of my neighbors that take it partly through the streets. There has been no objection to it. Under this section we would have to go to work and incorporate, if the question was raised. This is the objection I made before the committee. The answer was, that nobody but a corporation would want that privilege. I do not think so. Why, in the town that I live in there is a surplus of water. It is watered too much now. But a corporation could avail itself of the privilege of this section, and with a capital of not more than two thousand dollars, could flood that city with water and destroy it. They could say, unless you come to our terms we will flood your town and drown you out, and then you may whistle for damages, because we are not worth anything to pay you. It says that the company shall be liable for damages, but who is to guarantee that the company would have enough to pay the damages? Now, sir, let these cities stand upon their legal rights to refuse any company or any person the right to tear up their streets and lay down water pipes, or gas pipes, or anything of the kind, if, in the judgment of the municipal authorities of the city, they deem it advisable to refuse it; and if there is further need of legislation in this behalf, then leave it to the Legislature to correct the evil.

Mr. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I would like to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two amendments pending.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

Mr. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I will address myself to the proposition as it stands. Now, I am disposed to the opinion that there is some other spot on this globe besides San Francisco. I do not believe that that is the hub of the universe; and I believe that this question should be considered with reference to some other locality besides San Francisco merely. The way the section stands it is a fact that it absolutely cuts off all competition with persons who have established works furnishing water or gas to cities and towns in this State. It is a complete bar, practically, because it is an enormous expense to furnish a city such as San Francisco with gas or water free. Oakland is a large city, too, and San José has some pretentions, and there is gas furnished to that city; and there is a little town called Santa Clara, where I reside, and there is gas furnished to that town; and there is a considerable amount of gas in this assembly. [Laughter.] I say that the section as it now stands absolutely cuts off all competition, in all cities and towns, at all events as far as this section goes. It is true it reads "city," but I think it would be construed to mean "the City and County of San Francisco." And at all events, suppose that it be rigidly adhered to, as to the terms of this section, and that it means "city," and that it did not include San Francisco, then I am still more interested. I do not think San Francisco has any business to fasten it upon us. I think we ought to have the right of competition. I think that those who may dare to set up a competition ought to have the same rights as those now furnishing. They ought to have the same right to compete for the compensation that is paid by citizens. The same argument will apply to the furnishing of water. Any one who will compete with the water works of San Francisco, Oakland, or San José ought to be allowed to compete on the same terms as those enjoyed by the parties now furnishing those cities. I had proposed in my own mind, and have drawn an amendment that would place them all on the same basis. Those who are now furnishing gas to cities would furnish it free of cost, and that would get some benefit out of these institutions that have these works now erected. Now, I submit that if this section has to stand and not be stricken out, this provision which I have prepared ought to be inserted, and we ought to have some benefit from these organizations that are now established.

REMARKS OF MR. GRACE.

Mr. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: It does seem to me that this section and its amendments is a section of words without understanding. I do not see how a company is going to compete with an established company, and furnish water for city purposes. Now, these small companies, or corporations, that have their artesian wells, that you were speaking of, how many of these public institutions could they furnish? How would they divide it up? One institution may take all the water they have. How could they make their profit? The whole thing is ridiculous.

Mr. ESTEE. How could they furnish the fire department?

Mr. GRACE. I do not see how they could furnish anything. It means that the Spring Valley Water Company is the only company that can do it; and it bars every road to competition; everything is closed out, and that is the final upshot of it. I tell you, the whole thing is a dazzling fraud, and I am in favor of striking out the whole section and going on to something that is more reasonable and substantial, and more to the interest of the constituents I represent.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

Mr. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: This proposition was introduced at an early day in the Convention by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds. It came before the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization, and I admit that I made no objection. It received no little amount of discussion. But the proposition, as it here stands, ought not to be adopted, and I am in favor of the motion to strike it out. I do not find that my constituents, or any portion of them, either those averse to corporations or those on the other side, are in favor of this proposition. Besides, since this matter was presented to the Committee on Cities and Counties, we have taken very important action in the Committee of the Whole. We have since then adopted the proposition of local self-government; and if section nine, as suggested by Mr. Estee, should not cover it, then section twelve will cover it. It is very brief, and I will read it:

"Sec. 12. Any county, city, town, or township may make and enforce, within their respective limits, all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws."

Therefore, under that section, and in fact under the law as it is now, the local government has authority over this case. I have heard of some complaints as to the action of city authorities besides those which are made in the city of San Francisco. My judgment is, and perhaps if the proposition had been so framed I would have been disposed to support it, as to give the right to competing companies on the same conditions as those which were prescribed in the case of the original companies. But this section twenty-three provides no conditions of that kind, as has been already presented, and I will not repeat the arguments. In the first place it requires that it shall be a corporation, whereas individuals or partnerships ought to have the same rights in such cases. It provides that "such company shall make good all damages to such streets and thoroughfares, except necessarily occasioned by the reasonable use thereof, and be liable to such city and its inhabitants therefor." Now, as to what will be necessarily occasioned these words are rather ambiguous. And then as to liability. The gentleman who is the author of the proposition says that there is a lien upon their property. There is no provision in this article of that kind. There is no lien. But, as has been suggested by another gentleman, there is no requirement that the corporation shall have any property at all. And suppose the corporation is insolvent—in fact I believe a majority of the corporations in this State are insolvent.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I would like to know how a corporation—a gas company or a water company—is to lay down pipes, is to have water, in the first place, to bring there; and in the second place, to have flumes, pipes, reservoirs, conduits of every description, and lay down pipes, and yet have no property? How is it to do these things?

Mr. McCALLUM. There are two or three questions involved in these remarks. I will try to segregate them, if I can. My point is that there is no provision that the company should have any property. There is no provision in this section that the company shall have any water, or shall have any reservoirs, or shall have any property at all.

MR. REYNOLDS. Then who is damaged?

MR. McCALLUM. They might dig up the streets to lay down pipes. It gives them the right, in the language of the section, of "disturbing and using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein." Of course, it would be a fair presumption that they would not dig up the streets unless they had water and pipes; but, so far as this section goes, they might commence digging up the streets before they had a single pipe. There is nothing in the Constitution to prevent them from beginning at either end. And, then, suppose they have no property, what are you going to do about it? I believe the practice is to require bonds to pay damages.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's ten minutes have expired.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

MR. TOWNSEND. Second the motion.

MR. HAGER. I have not had a chance to say a word on this proposition. I would like to have the gentleman withdraw the motion a minute.

MR. WATERS. I am willing to withdraw the motion.

MR. TOWNSEND. If it is only a minute—I am willing to give him a minute.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I have been trying to get the floor for some time, to say a few words upon this section. A great deal of criticism has been indulged in with regard to it and I will explain it so far as I understand it, it being reported by the committee of which I am the chairman. Now, there has been something said about the stockholders of companies, and I wish to say that I have no interest in the Spring Valley Water Company. I have an interest in a gas company, and this report is against my interest, and therefore it cannot be said that I was influenced by my personal feelings. This is against my interest. I favor the proposition because I think there is a necessity for it. I know there is a necessity for it in the City of San Francisco. The streets of the city are occupied by the Spring Valley Water Company, and no other party can begin because of it. So it is with regard to gas, to a certain extent. I look upon water as an essential of life. Now, I know that people have dug artesian wells, and have petitioned the Board of Supervisors to lay down pipes in order to supply their neighbors, and it has been refused. Why should not the privilege be open and free, even by a Constitutional provision? Now, objection has been made that this gives it to a company. Companies are liable to the restraints of the law, individuals are not. When a general law is passed you may put as many guards in as you please, and a company must comply with those conditions; therefore, I think it ought to be limited to companies. Two or three individuals may incorporate under the general law, and lay down pipes and supply their neighbors with water, if they see fit to do it. Ordinarily I would not favor a provision of this kind, unless there was some necessity, some overwhelming necessity, you may say, and I think that necessity exists in San Francisco, because I know that the people have not had the opportunity of supplying water, and yet it has been circulated around here that the Board of Supervisors had made a concession. In regard to gas, it may be said that gas is not a necessary of life, and the same reason does not exist, but I could not afford merely to report in favor of one proposition, and not in favor of the other; therefore, I reported in favor of both. I am in favor of it, and I hope it will not be stricken out. It does not apply to San Francisco alone, it applies to the whole State.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Larue, Hunter, Smith, of Santa Clara, and Larkin.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Campbell.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Winans, to strike out the section.

The motion prevailed.

[Cries of "division"; and great confusion.]

THE CHAIRMAN. The section is stricken out. The Secretary will read section twenty-four.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 24. In counties or cities having more than one hundred thousand inhabitants no person shall, at the same time, be a State officer and a city or county officer, nor hold two city or county offices.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., Mr. Murphy in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

CITY, COUNTY, AND TOWNSHIP ORGANIZATION.

MR. HAGER. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Murphy in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I call for a division of the House on the motion to strike out section twenty-three.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section twenty-four has been read.

MR. REYNOLDS. The Clerk attempted to read, but his voice was drowned by demands for a division, so that there are not half a dozen gentlemen on this floor who can tell whether the Clerk read section twenty-four, or an editorial from the Record-Union.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: Section twenty-three was stricken out and it was so decided by the Chairman, and we then proceeded to section twenty-four, which was read by the Secretary, and there was no appeal taken.

MR. HAGER. Being the Chairman of the committee, I presume I can state the grounds for this request. The question was on the motion to strike out. The Chair put the question, "All in favor say aye; contrary, no; the ayes have it." A division was called for by a dozen. I called for a division. A great many others called for a division, and the Chair disregarded the call. I do not know whether he did not hear it or what. But, at all events, the provision was stricken out. In parliamentary usage the Chair rises and asks the house if they are ready for the question, and then if nobody says anything the vote is taken. Those in favor will say aye; contrary, no. The Chair then says the ayes seem to have it, and then any one has a right to call for a division. But we must recollect that our rules are very strict—more so than in any Constitutional Convention that ever assembled. The previous question cuts off debate; ten minutes is all that is allowed members to express their views, and we cannot fairly and squarely consider any proposition. I do not suppose there was any design on the part of the Chair to do anything improper in the matter, but it does seem a little hard if we cannot have a fair vote and a fair expression of opinion. Now, a division was called for distinctly. Whether it was lost by the ruling of the Chair I do not undertake to say, but the division was distinctly called for. This is a matter of no great importance, so far as I am concerned, except as a matter of practice, which should control this Convention. I think we ought to do our business with sufficient deliberation to give a fair expression of opinion. The Chair, after stating the question, would then ask if the Convention is ready for the question. If nobody says anything then put the question. Then he should say the ayes seem to have it, giving an opportunity to members to call for a division. In this case I do not suppose the Chair intended anything more than the dispatch of business.

MR. HAGER. I move that we have a division.

MR. HUESTIS. I object.

MR. LARKIN. I rise to a point of order. Whatever the ruling of the Chair was, it was definite and it is past. The Chair directed the reading of the next section. I may be opposed to the ruling of the Chair, which I am, but that is past and it is not now in the power of this Convention to reverse this decision. The Secretary read the next section, the committee rose, and it is not now in order to reconsider any action by a motion now to take a division on that question. The question I raise is, that it is not in order to take a division.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to go by the records of the Clerk here, and decide the point of order well taken. He has no other recourse.

MR. REYNOLDS. If I understand the gentleman, he makes the point of order that the vote was declared, and the committee passed to other business?

MR. LARKIN. Yes, sir.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is no question before the House, unless the gentleman wishes to take an appeal.

MR. REYNOLDS. I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Seconded by Messrs. Joyce and Stedman.

THE CHAIRMAN: Gentlemen: The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I care not to spend any time over the matter, but I wish, for the reasons stated by the Chairman of the committee, that this Convention do its business decently and in order. It is all very fine, when, by a little stretch of official authority by the Chairman—whether intentional or otherwise, whether playful or in earnest—it is all very fine when it goes our way; but, sir, you cannot say, when that principle is indulged in, to where it may lead. It may lead to bulldosing, and when it does not go our way we shall, perhaps, find ourselves objecting to it. I think it is just as well for this Convention to declare by this vote that, whereas, a division was called for by a dozen or twenty members on this floor, drowning the voice of the Chairman when he called for the reading of the section, and drowning the voice of the Clerk while he read, that it is proper that the Convention should be heard.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that he has no interest in the matter at all. All he goes by is the record of the Clerk.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I was one of those who persisted in calling for a division upon the vote, and my judgment was and is that a division was called for at the proper time, but I do not see how we can reach that question at all now. In my judgment it is passed beyond our control, and the only thing for us to do is to sustain the decision of the Chair. It is too late to correct that error at this time, and it is not essential to the business, because this matter can be brought up again when this subject comes up in Convention. I think we have nothing to do but to sustain the decision of the Chair.

MR. McCOMAS. Mr. Chairman: I move to lay the appeal upon the table.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 59 ayes to 20 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. Are there any amendments to section twenty-four?

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty-four by striking out all up to and including the word 'inhabitants' in the second line."

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: The section as reported by the committee reads: "In counties or cities having more than one hundred thousand inhabitants no person shall, at the same time, be a State officer and a city or county officer, nor hold two city or county offices." Now, I see the propriety of the latter part of the section, but I confess that I am unable to see any reason why in cities or counties having one hundred thousand inhabitants it should be prohibited while being held admissible in counties of less population. If the Chairman of the committee or any gentleman can show any reason why the distinction should be made, or why the same person should be permitted to hold two offices in other counties, I shall be willing to withdraw the amendment. It does seem to me to be a pernicious practice to permit any man to hold two offices.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I will state that I am perfectly willing to vote for the amendment the delegate offers, but the committee did not wish it to apply to other counties. It was limited to cities of one hundred thousand inhabitants because the committee did not wish it to apply to the interior counties. That was the object.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: There may be reasons assigned, and if there are any reasons I should be glad to hear them. I confess that I am unable to see them. The principle is a bad one, for any man to hold two offices, no matter what their character, whether State, county, or municipal. One office is enough for any man to hold at the same time.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I wish to know if their Sheriff is not holding two offices—one as Sheriff and the other ex officio Tax Collector?

MR. CAPLES. I do not so construe it. The Sheriff is ex officio Tax Collector. The collection of taxes is a part and parcel of his official functions prescribed by law, and I do not and cannot consider it as two separate and distinct offices, when the law itself makes it the same office.

MR. BLACKMER. Is it not a fact that in many counties it is very desirable for the County Clerk to also act as Auditor, and would not this prevent it? The County Clerk often acts as Auditor of the county. This would prevent it.

MR. LARKIN. In our county the Sheriff is County Treasurer, the Clerk is Recorder, and the County Assessor is collector of poll taxes. Under this it would be prohibited, therefore I would like to strike out the section. If you will allow me, I will move to strike out the section.

MR. CAPLES. That would be entirely satisfactory to me, to strike out the section. I withdraw my amendment.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out the section.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend the section by adding thereto, "or a city and county office." As the section now stands, it applies to State, county, or city officer. I understand that the Chairman of the committee does not object to the amendment. It provides for a third contingency, not embraced in the section as it now stands.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: The reason given for this section is, that in the City and County of San Francisco they are in the habit of piling offices upon one man. Some of their perquisites have been more than doubled by giving them some additional office while in office, and this is limited to counties of one hundred thousand inhabitants. I thought that when a county had one hundred thousand inhabitants that no person ought to be an officer in more than one capacity. In a large county, where there is a large compensation, a popular man who is Sheriff, for instance, obtains some other position. I think it ought to apply to all the counties, still, the committee objected to it, and therefore it is applied only to counties of one hundred thousand inhabitants. If a man is Tax Collector and Sheriff, in as large a county as that, he has too much to do; if he is Sheriff and Assessor he has got too much to do. He has got enough to do, in a large county of that kind, to attend to one office. There are plenty of men in the county that do not have any office at all, and that are perfectly willing to take their share of the burden. I say distribute them around, and let every man do his share of public business and public trust, and not give it all to one, because he is a popular man.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: It appears to me from the explanation given by the Chairman of the committee, that this section was quite well digested, and quite well considered. It does not appear that it conflicts with other counties, as there are very few that have that number of inhabitants. This thing of having a few men hold all the offices is not a proper thing. Since the Chairman of the committee has explained it, I do not see any propriety in striking it out; I think, in fact, that it is a good provision.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: Yesterday we adopted section sixteen of this report which provides that "no State office shall be continued or created in any county, city, town, or other municipality, for the inspection, measurement, or graduation of any merchandise, manufacture, or commodity; but such county, city, town, or municipality may, when authorized by general law, and the public interest demands it, appoint such officers." Now, there is no State officer there that can be merged with a city and county officer. The people of San Francisco have a right to select one man to do their business. The people of Alpine have the same right. The people of El Dorado consolidated their officers to save expense. I think one third, if not one half of the counties of the State have some consolidated offices, and one half the expense is saved in that way. I do not believe in applying a special rule to part of the State. If the rule is good it should be applied to all. The people of San Francisco are capable of self-government. I think the section is useless and ought to be stricken out.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: There is another reason why the section should be stricken out, and that is, that we ought to leave a little for the Legislature. They can regulate this matter. In Napa County the same person is County Clerk, County Recorder, Auditor, and Clerk of the Board of Supervisors, with a salary of two thousand five hundred dollars a year. The Assessor is Tax Collector. I hope the section will be stricken out.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the section.

The motion prevailed.

THE CHAIRMAN. The section is stricken out. The Secretary will read section twenty-five.

STREET WORK.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 25. No public work or improvement of any description whatsoever shall be made or done, in any city, in, upon, or about the streets thereof, or otherwise, the cost and expense of which is made chargeable, or may be assessed upon private property by special assessment, unless an estimate of such cost and expense shall be made, and an assessment in proportion to benefits, on the property to be affected or benefited, and shall be collected and paid into the city treasury before such work or improvement shall be commenced, or any contract for letting or doing the same authorized or performed.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I propose an amendment to that section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty-five, by adding at the end thereof, 'in any city where there are no public works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with water or artificial light, any individual or company duly incorporated by the laws of this State, shall, under the direction of the Superintendent of Streets, and under such regulations as the municipality may prescribe for damages, and indemnity for damages, have the privilege of using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein, and connection therewith, so far as may be necessary for introduction into and supplying such city and its inhabitants either with gaslight, or other illuminating light, or with fresh water for domestic and all other purposes, upon the condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges therefor.'"

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: This is a different proposition altogether from the one struck out. My provision steers clear of confining this privilege to corporations or incorporated companies. It gives to any individual, as well as to any incorporated company, the right to the use of the streets for laying down pipes for the supply of gas and water, or either. I think that the objection that was taken to the section as formerly introduced was well taken—that it should not be limited to corporations; that any individual, for the public good, should have the right to use the streets for laying down pipes for supplying water or gas. It is in the public interest that it should be conceded, and it prevents monopoly in any sense. It also provides that the city authorities may make a regulation in relation to damages and indemnity; that is, that they may make a regulation requiring all work to be done under the supervision of the Superintendent of Streets, and also, if any damage should be likely to occur, they may, by security or otherwise, guard against it. I leave out also the provision which required the company to supply the city and the school houses, and other public buildings with gas or water free of charge, because I think that an unjust burden. As the distribution of water and gas by any individual or company is for the public good, and if the benefit be sufficient to be a payment for the privilege, I do not see any propriety in imposing upon any party who thus supplies water or gas the burden of supplying the public buildings. Then it provides that the city and county shall have the right to regulate the price to be paid by the inhabitants for the gas and for the water. This is also a necessary regulation I think against the abuses of monopoly. Now, in Los Angeles we have a gas company with a monopoly for twenty years, and several parties have endeavored to get the privilege for laying down pipes in the streets for the purpose of supplying the city and competing with this company, but the company has always had sufficient influence in the municipal government to prevent this being done, and this company has a prospect of exclusive right for twenty years to come. Now, I submit to the Convention that this is a great abuse of public authority, and that it ought to be corrected. We have also there a water company that claims the monopoly, and the private individual who did succeed in laying down pipes, and is to some extent supplying the city with water in opposition to the monopoly, is threatened constantly with suits and injunctions, and if this thing goes on we will have a monopoly, not only of water and gas, but of all domestic necessaries, and then we will have some company that will be peddling it by the tin cup full. It is time this abuse was corrected, and, therefore, I offer this amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: That would be inappropriate to the subject under consideration in section twenty-five. Section twenty-three treated upon that subject, and the section was stricken out. Section twenty-five is on an entirely different subject. It speaks of streets, and upon that subject alone. As to the merits of the amendment, it is so long that by merely hearing it read at a distance it is impossible to understand it. It would be very extraordinary for the Convention to adopt such an amendment after merely hearing it read at the desk. I raise the point of order that it is germane to section twenty-three, and that it is not pertinent to the subject treated of in section twenty-five, which is now before the committee. Section twenty-five deals with street assessments entirely, and no other subject.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not well taken.

MR. ESTEE. Then I move to strike out section twenty-five and the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I beg to say that I have no personal interest in this matter. I am not an attorney for the Spring Valley Water Company, nor any other water works, nor any gas company. I move solely in the public interest, and the public interest requires not only that the section itself should be adopted, but that the amendment should be adopted. I did not suppose that anybody in the interest of any monopoly would support my proposition. I do not expect that.

MR. ESTEE. Does the gentleman intimate that I am interested in a monopoly?

MR. HOWARD. No. I do not intimate that; but if the garment fits the gentleman he can put it on.

MR. ESTEE. The gentleman intimated that I was an attorney for some monopoly. I deny it.

MR. HOWARD. I do not know what the gentleman is an attorney for. I say I do not expect the support of anybody in the interest of monopoly.

MR. ESTEE. Certainly the question ought to stand on its own merits.

MR. HOWARD. I do not care who is an attorney and who is not. All I say is that I do not expect the support of any advocate of monopoly. I do not mean to impugn the motives of the gentleman at all. I do not know that he is an attorney of anything; but what I say is that this is a proposition in the interest of the public.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Does not this power exist if the Constitution is silent upon the subject?

MR. HOWARD. It is obligatory. Without this amendment the evil is not reached. The city government, if it chooses, could give the power, but if it chooses to withhold it it can withhold it, and they always have men enough in the interest of monopoly to prevent any party from entering into any competition with it. This is to avoid that. It is to make it obligatory upon a city government, when it is properly secured under proper regulation, which they themselves prescribe, to give any party the right to introduce water and gas, and to compete with any existing monopoly.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I supposed that the fear of my friend from Los Angeles of what he calls centralism, and his extreme ideas in regard to local government, would end somewhere. I supposed at first that he would end at the declaration that the General Government should not do anything to interfere with the State.

MR. HOWARD. I would like to ask the gentleman if he believes that the Federal Government can overrule the reserved rights of the State?

MR. McFARLAND. No, sir; not the reserved rights of the State. Then, when he got down to town and city self-government, I supposed he would end there, but I find that his sliding scale of local self-government ends in a gas company, because he says now that a city or a town shall not have the power to prevent a gas company or water company from tearing up the streets. That is the whole theory. After we have got down in the doctrine of local self-government, so that cities and towns and the smallest political subdivisions can control themselves, if we are going to introduce a proposition here that a city shall not have the power to prevent anybody from tearing up its streets, we are down to the lowest bound of local government, unless you make the wards independent of the city. It is a queer doctrine to me. Suppose a city had given certain privileges to a water company and the gas company, and they were supplying water and gas at rates that were reasonable, and making only a fair profit. Suppose that the people were satisfied. Under this provision there would be no power in the municipal authorities to prevent some blackmailer from starting in and tearing up the streets, and compelling the old company to buy him out. If the government of a city or a town shall not have the power to say who shall tear up its streets I would like to know who should. The gentleman has something in the amendment about the conditions. If you put in that you give away the whole proposition. If the city has the right to say what the conditions shall be you give them the full power to keep them out, but I understand the object is to adopt, really, section twenty-three.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I want to say this right here, this Convention does not know what the meaning of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles is. We cannot pass upon it intelligently. It is nearly a whole page, and it is impossible for us to give it that consideration that so grave a subject deserves, and for us to attempt to adopt or reject it, as presented here at this time, would be unwise in the extreme. That is one reason I am opposed to the amendment. Now, sir, one word as to the personal part of the remarks of the gentleman from Los Angeles. I am not the attorney for any gas or water company; but, sir, if I was, I deny that I would thereby be a rascal. I deny that it would affect my character, upon this floor, or anywhere. I deny that because a man, in the performance of a professional duty represents his clients, that he thereby becomes unworthy of the confidence of the people. I am astonished that the distinguished gentleman from Los Angeles should attempt to bolster up an argument by intimating that some other gentleman was the tool or instrument of the corporation. Let every question rest upon its merits or demerits, not upon the merit and demerit of the man who proposes it; that is the only true way. I have that much to say, because this matter was referred to in a manner to convey the idea that I was here to represent the interests of some corporation, and not the interest of the people.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: This matter has been, to some extent, discussed before, but not upon the same ground that presents itself in this measure of the gentleman from Los Angeles. We find in this case it is different entirely, and covers something which was not covered before. Now, this gives to individuals as well as companies the right to lay down pipes for the purpose of conducting gas and water for utilitarian purposes in these cities. Now, we heard something said before with regard to individuals that had a little more water than they wished, and they were not allowed to lay down pipes to conduct it around through the city to a few squares. They evidently had not enough to supply public buildings, and yet that measure required that public buildings should be supplied with gas and water free. That was highly objectionable. These individuals could not have enough water to supply these public buildings at all. Secondly, section twenty-three was quite indefinite, and it did not answer the purpose and it was so regarded. In this case, so far as any one might have more water than he wished, he could dispose of it. Pipes may be laid down for that purpose without compelling him to supply public buildings. So far as any one going to tear up the streets is concerned, we find, in this last amendment, that the municipalities themselves can lay such restrictions upon such parties as they may deem just. They are under the restrictions of the law, and under the supervision of the Superintendent of the streets in everything that they do. Giving to individuals as well as to companies this right, is simply fair and just, because the object is not to give a monopoly to any one, and for the monopolists themselves to determine whether certain companies shall have this right or not. I do not see any injustice that it can work. It appears to me to be entirely fair. The cities can determine with regard to this, and the damages can be laid so high as to prevent any individuals whatever from laying down pipes if they so choose. And if they wish, they can regulate the thing accordingly and prevent this thing of monopoly that has been spoken of so much. I cannot see why there should be so great objection to this. It appears to me to be eminently fair and just, and if it is connected with section twenty-five, I do not think there is anything irregular or informal in the matter. It embraces a great principle. I shall certainly, in the present case, vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Moreland, Larkin, Hunter, and Evey.

The main question was ordered.

MR. ESTEE. I call for the reading of the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty-five by adding at the end thereof: 'in any city where there are no works owned and controlled by the municipality for supplying the same with water or artificial light, any individual or company duly incorporated by the laws of this State, shall, under the direction of the Superintendent of Streets, and under such regulations as the municipality may prescribe for damages and indemnity for damages, have the privilege of using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein and connection therewith, so far as may be necessary for introduction into and supplying such city and its inhabitants either with gas light or other illuminating light, or with fresh water for domestic and other purposes, upon condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

On a division, the votes stood 43 ayes to 32 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting; the members will please vote.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 47 ayes to 35 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion to strike out the whole section.

The motion was lost, on a division, by a vote of 30 ayes to 49 noes.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I have a small amendment which I desire to make. There has been a word left out in line six. I move to amend by inserting the word "levied" after the word "be," at the end of the sixth line, and strike out the word "and" before the word "shall" in the same line.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty-five by adding after the word "performed," in line nine, the following: 'And no municipal corporation shall ever have or exercise the power to levy an assessment upon any property or its owner for the opening or improvement of any streets, or to defray the expense of any street work, which assessment shall be greater in amount than the additional value given to such property by the doing of such street work.'"

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I offer that amendment in the interest of the owners of property in every incorporated city, and especially in the City of San Francisco, and other large neighboring cities. The amendment is drawn and suggested by an attorney in San Francisco, who has been for many years engaged in street assessment litigation, both for and against, and there is no man in that city better prepared or better qualified to judge of what is right and just between the people and the contractors, than he who drew this amendment. He is a gentleman who could not possibly have any selfish interest; it is only the wisdom which comes by experience in street assessment litigation that prompts the suggestion contained in the amendment. Now, the proposition is to prevent a corporation from making street contractor doing street work, and levying street assessments upon property adjoining the work to be done, which shall be greater in amount than the additional value given to such property by the improvement made. I think no man will question the justice of such a proposition. Anything to the contrary is a violation of the spirit if not of the letter of that other provision of the Constitution, which provides that property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation. But under the guise of public necessity this is done every day. This will simply provide that, if you are going to make a public improvement on a street, you shall not take the property adjoining that property for the purpose of improving that street, which shall not benefit that property to an equal amount. If you do, you may absolutely confiscate that property, and this was done in a multitude of cases in the City of San Francisco. Property has actually been confiscated by assessments for improvements, until the property actually became valueless in the hands of the owner, and had to be sold by the Sheriff to pay the street assessments, and still there was a debt left over against the owner of the property. Now, sir, that is the baldest kind of injustice; and, if it should be asked how you are to remedy this, if the public improvement is needed, this is the easiest way in the world. They have done that in numerous instances in San Francisco. First ascertain the cost of the improvement, and then assess the cost of it to the property, and ascertain whether you are going to improve the property as much as the assessment; if you do, collect the assessment of the property, but if you do not, collect to the amount you do improve the property, and let the balance be a charge against the public treasury, and not against the individual, after you have taken all his property away from him. There is no difficulty in proceeding in this matter; we have done it in the case of the Montgomery Avenue improvement, we have done it in the case of Kearny street, and we are doing it in the case of the widening of Dupont street. This practice has been carried out and it works well, and the people are satisfied with it. Take an example. Contractors will start in and find a place where they want to pave a street, or grade it, or fill it; by dint of persuasion they will, perhaps, get a majority of the frontage to vote to consent to it. They get a resolution passed by the Board of Supervisors. And on that improvement there will be some property that will be totally ruined by the onerous assessment raised, and property that is not assessed at all will be benefited by this very improvement. Now, if this amendment passes, it will put the whole city alert; all the citizens will have an interest in these assessments, and they will be on the lookout to see whether there are unnecessary improvements projected, the cost of which, if it exceeds the value of the improvement to the property, will have to come out of the public treasury.

REMARKS OF MR. OVERTON.

MR. OVERTON. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman's proposition seems very fair, but I would like to know how any person is going to arrive at the benefits to be derived to the property. Who is going to settle that question? A new street may be projected, and they may assess the property holders at the time for the work, and at the time the street is improved the property will not seem to be much benefited, but in the course of a few months, or a few years, by turning the public travel into that street, their property will receive ten fold the benefits that it cost them to improve.

MR. REYNOLDS. In the case of the Montgomery Avenue opening a Commission was created and made this very adjustment. It works well, and the people are satisfied with it, and there is no fault found with it. There is no reason in the world why there should not be a constant committee if necessary.

MR. OVERTON. At the time the improvement was made it was not worth much, but now it may be worth ten times what it cost. At what time are you going to fix the value of the improvements? What time is the property to appreciate to the amount of the cost. I cannot see, Mr. Chairman, that the thing would be practicable at all. I do not think there could be any way to ascertain what advantage the property is to receive at the time the work is done. There must be some time afterwards fixed, because you cannot ascertain at the time what advantage there is, and it may be worth ten times what it has cost after a while.

MR. REYNOLDS. As I have no right to the floor again I will answer the gentleman. All these questions are taken into consideration by a Commission to adjust the amounts, and that seemed to give satisfaction.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: It took several years to settle that Montgomery Avenue question, and the Kearney street also, and if we go on amending this section we will find that it is absolutely impossible to open a street in any city. I can see, in the amendment itself, the germ of a thousand injunctions, of litigation pending in the District Court, and going to the Supreme Court. We have already decided that the money has to be in the treasury before any contract can be made, or any improvement, and if we go on and adopt this amendment we shall find that it will be absolutely impossible to open any street in any city. Any person along the whole line of the street who desires to impede the improvement, or to prevent its being made, will immediately run to the Courts for injunctions, and it will be absolutely impossible to make the improvements which are necessary in the growing cities of the State.

MR. SHURTLEFF. Mr. Chairman: I fully agree with the gentleman from Alameda and Sonoma. There is no question but that the evils to which the gentleman from San Francisco has alluded have existed, but the remedy which he seeks to apply will inflict a greater evil. I have been a Trustee of the City of Napa for some three years, and am a member of the Board now, and in my judgment, if that provision should become the organic law, it would put a stop to all street improvements. We are now making two or three miles of improvements of streets by macadamizing them. If that was the law, it is my judgment that you would not see any more street improvements there.

REMARKS OF MR. RHODES.

MR. RHODES. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section twenty-five by prefixing the following: 'The Legislature may, by general law, authorize municipal corporations to levy assessments for local improvements, either in whole or in part, on the property fronting on such improvements or specially benefited thereby; and as to the property so benefited, assessments may be levied without regard to valuation; but as to all other real property within the limits of such corporation the assessment shall be by general and uniform tax.' Also, by inserting the words 'or incorporated town' after the word 'city' in line two, and the word 'town' after the word 'city' in line seven; also, by inserting the words 'in whole or in part' after the word 'assessed' in line four.

MR. RHODES. Mr. Chairman: The object of that amendment in the first place is to make this section applicable to incorporated towns. As it reads now it applies only to incorporated cities. I have realized in my own town in the last three months cases where this amendment would have been beneficial. In some cases where assessments were made and taxed upon the property immediately benefited, the taxes were so onerous as to defeat the scheme entirely. The object of this amendment is to provide for levying special assessments upon the property benefited, and also to extend it to the town at large by a general assessment. The object is to enable the town to make a special assessment on the property specially benefited, and then to go for a further assessment upon the town at large. In the case that I speak of, I am satisfied that it would meet a difficulty that has beset us at the very outset.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: If I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from Yolo, I am certainly very much in favor of it. His amendment goes upon the theory that if a city or town desires to make an improvement for the benefit, to a very great extent, of the whole city or town, that the burden of taxation may be divided between those who own the property in the locality and the whole city or town. It seems to me that this is a very just provision. I have always thought that it was a great outrage for a town or city, for the convenience of the whole population, to a great extent, to compel men who happen to own property in any particular street to bear all the expense of some improvement sought to be made, which, to a great extent, was intended to inure to the benefit of the whole town. Take San Francisco, for instance. She thinks a portion of Dupont street ought to be improved. Perhaps a majority of the people on the street desire it also. But here are some men who own property upon that street who are not able to do it. The assessment is almost a confiscation of their property. Now, it seems to me that where a city or town desires a general improvement of its property by opening or widening streets, and compelling men to cut down their houses or build them over again, that the city itself ought to bear some of the general expense of an improvement which is intended for the general welfare. I think that the amendment of the gentleman from Yolo, if I understand it, is a very good and just one.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I wish to call attention to what I think is a verbal inaccuracy in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, which has been adopted. It reads as follows: "Any individual, or company duly incorporated by the laws of this State." I think it should read, "duly incorporated under the laws of this State." The law does not incorporate anything, but corporations may be formed under the law.

MR. HOWARD. I accept that amendment if there is no objection.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection the correction will be made.

REMARKS OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I have one word to say on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Yolo. While it is doubtless intended to produce just and beneficial results, it would be apt to lead to very great evils in another direction. Take the City of San Francisco, why, already the property owners off the line of these streets that have been enumerated, have been assessed for the improvements in opening the particular streets on which their property stands; they have, it is true, in many instances, been obliged to pay enormous sums, equaling or exceeding, in some instances, the value of their property. Now, is it just to those who have paid in that manner for the opening of those streets, to say, that if it is proposed to open a street in the outside of the city, which they probably may never use in the course of a lifetime, that they shall be taxed also for opening that? Where do you propose to draw the line, and in what manner? It seems to me that the thing is wholly impracticable. We cannot regulate it and make a certain settled rule here—leave that power with the Legislature; either the State or local Legislature. Who is to determine as to whether it is a general public benefit, or whether it is merely a benefit to the people on the particular streets? The truth is that these streets ought not to be opened, and it is a fair presumption that the local legislatures will not provide for their opening, unless there is some benefit to be derived from their opening. It is generally done at the request of the property holders, or a majority at least, of the property holders on the street, and if they object to it, why, their protest is or ought to be final.

MR. REYNOLDS. Why was this principle applied to the widening of Dupont street?

MR. CAMPBELL. In regard to the widening of those streets there has been litigation and delay for years; and if you adopt the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, you will find, in addition to the other difficulties that may arise out of this section, that, first of all, you will have to go through a long litigation before you can determine the assessments. Many years will have elapsed before these questions will be decided, and it will really put a stop to all public improvements in the streets of our growing cities.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: The intent of the section, as reported by the committee, is that where improvements are made upon streets which is chargeable to, or may be assessable upon, private property, that the costs shall be estimated and collected before the improvement is made. Now, if that is done it will save a great deal of trouble, and every person owning property will know exactly what he is going to pay. If any contractor undertakes to do the work he knows that he is going to get his pay. Take Dupont street and Montgomery avenue. It is in litigation yet. The property holders resisted, yet they petitioned for the improvement. Now, if we provide that the assessment shall be paid into the treasury before the work is commenced, every citizen can contest the assessment at the time. That is the rule all over the world. That is the principle involved in section twenty-five, which I think is a good one. I have known of cases where property has been confiscated by these onerous assessments for opening streets. Now, then, the principle involved in the general provision is the correct one. It would be a convenience to every one. Now, in regard to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, how are you to ascertain that fact? There is no machinery here for it. You would have to resort to legislation for the means of carrying it out, and it would make litigation in advance for the purpose of ascertaining the fact. The constitution cannot provide the machinery for ascertaining that fact. Therefore I think the amendment is a matter that ought to be left to the laws of the city, or to the general laws of the State, to make provision for cases of that kind. In regard to the amendment of the gentleman from Yolo, I did not hear it read, and I do not know what the purport of it is.

MR. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Biggs, Welling, Huestis, and Davis.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Reynolds.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Yolo, Mr. Rhodes.

The amendment was rejected.

ACQUISITION OF WATER WORKS.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by adding to section twenty-five the following: 'Provided, within four years after the adoption of this Constitution, every city in this State containing one hundred thousand people or more, shall, by condemnation, purchase, appropriation, and construction, become the owner of water works and water rights sufficient to supply its population with good water; provided, no city procuring its supply of water or works by condemnation or purchase, the sum paid for such works shall not exceed ($7,000,000) seven million dollars.'"

REMARKS OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of this addition, as it seems to me that it is essential to the welfare of the people of this State, that all cities should be the owner of its own water works, for, sir, by such the people are relieved of one of the greatest evils that could fall upon any city, that is, a monopolizing water company. I find, sir, in the eastern cities where the water works are owned by the city, that it does not cost as much for water by the year, as it costs in San Francisco for one month. Sir, it would be a waste of time for me to illustrate how the people of that city has been treated by this grasping monopoly; they have been taxed to the utmost limits, and that portion of the charter of the water company of San Francisco, as relates to Commissioners, never has been carried into effect until at the session of the last Legislature, when a nefarious scheme to rob the people of fifteen millions of dollars for a lot of worn out works was set on foot; and, sir, not until the people arose in their might, and in thunder tones demanded to be protected against this wrong did the authorities and the water company condescend to appoint the Commissioners, and they only confirmed the evil, and if anything made matters worse. Now, sir, this company, according to its charter, can collect rates for none but for family uses, and we find them compelling the city to pay them for the supply to the parks and public buildings; and when not paid, the supply was shut off, and why? Because the people have allowed this evil to grow, year after year, until now they have control of the city; and, sir, it is only by such a provision as this, placed in the Constitution that this evil can be wiped out. This company has not kept faith with the people of San Francisco. Sir, I do not wish to condemn the works of any corporation without just compensation, and this addition to the section contemplates nothing of the kind; but, sir, knowing the trickery of the present and past politicians that have been in office in San Francisco, I wished to limit the price, in case of condemnation, to the price asked, as I understand, by the company a few years ago, and to-day cannot be worth as much; for I claim it would cost the city at least six millions to get a sufficient supply, and increase the size of the pipes throughout the city, as they are too small and would have to be replaced with those of a larger size and a larger supply obtained; and, sir, at the present time certain parts of the city are not safe in the case of fire. Sir, I understand that other parts of the State are very near in the same situation as San Francisco in regard to this question, and, as these corporations have treated the people, so we should handle them without gloves. Now, sir, by this section it does not limit the amount that a city shall pay for its works constructed by itself. Sir, we have the power under the right of eminent domain to condemn it if the State so choose. I read from Cooley on Constitutional Limitation, third edition, page five hundred and twenty-six, as to what property is subject to this right: "Every species of property which the public needs require, and which Government cannot lawfully appropriate under any other right, is subject to be seized and appropriated under the right of eminent domain, with the exception of money or that which in ordinary use passes as such. Neither of which can it be needful to take under this power." In the case of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company against Key, reported in third Cranch, Maryland reports, the Court held: "That the means of ascertaining the just compensation were left to be decided by the public authority which should have the power to take the private property for public use. All the States prior to the adoption of the Constitution exercised this right, and still continue to exercise it." I cite this authority to show that the State has the right to condemn if it so chooses to do. But, sir, if these companies are not satisfied with a fair price offered, let them keep their works, and the cities will build works of their own, and thereby be relieved from this water curse that has fastened itself upon the State from one end to the other; therefore, I hope the addition will be adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I have been expecting the schoolmaster of this Convention to go for this section. I move that the words "made" and "done" in the second line be transposed. I cannot state the rule of grammar, because I have forgotten my grammar, but I understand that these words should be made to occur in the order they apply. It should read: "no public work or improvement shall be done or made." I move that the words be transposed.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the transposition will be made.

MR. TULLY. I move that that be referred to Mr. Herrington, of Santa Clara.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is out of order. If there be no further amendment to section twenty-five, the Secretary will read section twenty-six.

LOCAL LEGISLATION.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 26. The Legislature shall not pass any local or special law in the cases following:

Regulating the affairs of counties, cities, towns, townships, wards, city or county Boards of Education, school districts, or other political or municipal corporation or subdivision of the State;

Authorizing the laying out, opening, altering, maintaining, or vacating roads, highways, streets, alleys, town plats, or parks;

Relating to cemeteries, graveyards, or public grounds not of the State;

Locating or changing county seats;

Incorporating cities, towns, or villages, or changing their charters;

Creating offices, or prescribing the powers and duties of officers in counties, cities, towns, townships, or school districts;

Regulating the fees or extending the powers and duties of county or municipal officers;

Regulating the management and maintenance of public schools, the building or repairing of school or Court houses, and raising of money for such purposes;

Extending the time for the assessment or collection of county, city, or other municipal taxes, or otherwise relieving any Assessor or Collector of county or city taxes from the due performance of the official duties, or their securities from liability;

Legalizing the unauthorized or invalid acts of any officer or agent of any county or municipality thereof;

Directing the payment of money out of the treasury, or by any officer, of any county, city, or town, without the consent of such county, city, and town;

Directing the payment of money from out of the treasury, or by any officer of, or creating any liability against, a county, city, town, or any public or municipal corporation, without its consent.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out lines six, seven, eight, nine, eleven, twelve, twenty-four, and twenty-five.

The motion prevailed.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out lines twenty-two and twenty-three.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say a word. I will explain this matter. I have stricken out all that has been actually adopted in the report of the Committee on Legislative Department. There are some paragraphs that are nearly the same, but there is a distinction and a difference. If we adopt what remains here it will be engrafted in the report of the Committee on Revision, in the right report and under the proper head. The Committee on Revision will arrange all that is adopted in proper form. Many places could be pointed out where they will have to take a provision from one report and put it in another. If what remains here be adopted, and the Committee on Revision find that the same thing is adopted in the legislative article, they will not put it in twice. There can be no harm done in leaving these provisions in. If the gentleman makes the motion because he does not approve of those lines, all right.

MR. BIGGS. It would be much more work to the Revising Committee. I do not see any sense in adopting a thing twice.

MR. HAGER. Not at all. There is nothing here that is substantially the same as adopted. There is nothing left here that is actually the same; but there is no use of our disputing over the fact of whether it is in or not. If there is anything here which you object to yourself, get up and move to strike it out.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman spoke particularly of the amendment. Now, I differ with him so far as his proposition is concerned, that we had better adopt the whole thing in toto, and then let the Committee on Revision and Adjustment fix it up. I believe that the better plan is to make it as perfect as we can. The amendment which I have offered is to strike out this proposition: "Legalizing the unauthorized or invalid acts of any officer or agent of any county or municipality thereof." It is covered fully and more broadly in the report of the Committee on Legislative Department, which is already adopted. This provision applies only to counties and municipalities. The other covers all that and a great deal more. It covers——

MR. HAGER. The one relates to State officers alone, and the other relates——

MR. SCHELL. I hope the honorable gentleman will possess his soul in patience. I move the previous question.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Stanislaus, Mr. Schell.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. HERRINGTON. I desire to offer a new section.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out section twenty-six, and I do so for the reason that I believe it to be the shortest road out of this difficulty. I believe that every material provision is contained in section twenty-five of the report of the Committee on Legislative Department, as amended in Committee of the Whole. However, if after gentlemen have had time to make an examination, they should find anything that is not covered or embraced in section twenty-five of that report as adopted by the Committee of the Whole, there will be time enough to remedy any little defect that there may be in that respect. I have examined carefully, and I find nothing in section twenty-six of the report now under consideration that is not embraced in section twenty-five of the report of the Committee on Legislative Department. It is true, that in some cases the language is a little different, but the subject-matter, I believe, is covered. The provision in the report of the Committee on Legislative Department, as adopted in Committee of the Whole, embraces thirty-three separate and distinct counts. This report under consideration embraces some twenty eight. I think that the action already had by this committee upon this subject, is comprehensive and ample, and covers the whole ground; and, as before remarked, if it should turn out that any matter had been left out, it will be time enough when we get into Convention to remedy the evil. But to adopt this section in the form that it is now in, and throw this and the other report of the Legislative Committee upon the Committee on Revision and Adjustment, makes a confused mass, and may lead to difficulty and confusion in determining what should and what should not be included in their report. Therefore, believing that this is the easiest, shortest, and most direct road out of the difficulty, I move that it be stricken out.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out.

On a division, the vote stood 36 ayes to 35 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is no quorum voting. Members will please vote.

A second division resulted in a vote of 37 ayes to 36 noes—no quorum voting.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report the article back, and recommend its adoption.

MR. WEST. I have a new section I desire to offer.

MR. McFARLAND. I rise to the point of order, that no question is in order except the motion to rise.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair is unable to decide whether there is a quorum present, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The roll was called, and eighty-four members answered to their names.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is a quorum present. A division is called for on the last motion.

MR. BIGGS. I wish to make a statement. I am in hopes that the motion of the gentleman from Sacramento will prevail. The Legislative Committee took a good deal of time, and went on to enumerate until they got to some thirty-three.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the section.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 44 ayes to 39 noes.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I have a new section that I desire to offer.

WATER AND GAS RATES.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. —. The rates and compensation for furnishing gas for light to, or supplying any municipality of this State, or the inhabitants thereof, with water, shall be annually established by the Board of Supervisors, or other governing body of such municipality, where such rates are collected by ordinance, which ordinance shall remain in force one year after adoption, and no longer. Any person, corporation, or company collecting gas or water rates in any municipality of this State, otherwise than as established by law, shall forfeit the franchise and the gas or water works of such person or company to such municipality where such rates are collectible for the public use.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: This Convention has seen fit in its wisdom to adopt a system of local governments, and are attempting in this Constitution to arrange for them a new class of communities to act, upon their own judgment, independently of legislative control, and in doing so we have, to a very great extent, defined the powers, jurisdiction, and duties which they are to exercise and enforce. I say that above all things we should not leave these young communities, or these small communities, to be the prey of those institutions which have been found to be almost the masters of even the Legislature itself, as has been announced upon this floor, time after time. This amendment proposes simply to place these young communities, or these small communities, so to speak, in a position where the executive head and the legislative authority shall have the control of the contracts that will be entered into by these young corporations in such a way as that the people will not be imposed upon by extortion. These gas companies have become a necessity to the cities and towns of this State. Water companies have also become necessities to the cities and town of this State, but whilst they have invested their funds in this class of enterprises that is no reason why they should be left to prey upon these communities with but very little experience in transactions of that character. The ordinances are changed from year to year, and unless we fix some certain rule by which they shall be controlled, in every instance they will be dictated by those whose business it is solely to consult their own interests. Their influence becomes unbounded, and while I do not charge that every transaction that is attempted by these organizations is attempted for the purpose of fraud, I do say that, like most individuals engaged in any private enterprise, they work really for their own ends. They are not to be blamed for doing so. It is but the instinct of human nature. It is not to be wondered at that they do so, but I do submit that guards should be placed about these communities in such a way as that these organizations shall be constantly under their control. This section requires that these rates shall be fixed, year after year, by the Supervisors of cities, or cities and counties, that are organized under corporate Acts or charters, giving them power and authority to fix these rates from year to year, and compelling it to be done.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: As we have had a great deal of gas and a great deal of water, and as it is considered that the escaping of so much gas is dangerous, I am in hopes that the additional section will be voted down, and I therefore move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Tully, Townsend, Schell, Stuart, and Charles.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the new section, offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

On a division the vote stood: 23 ayes to 42 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting; members will please vote.

The section was rejected, on a division, by a vote of 33 ayes to 45 noes.

CARE OF ORPHANS.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I offer an additional section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The several counties, and cities and counties of the State shall provide for the care and maintenance of minor orphans, half orphans, abandoned children, and aged persons in indigent circumstances, within their respective limits; provided, that from and after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and eighty-four, no money shall be appropriated or drawn from the State treasury for the use and benefit of any corporation, association, asylum, hospital, or any other institution, not under the exclusive management and control of the State as a State institution, nor shall any grant or donation of property be made thereto by the State."

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: We have already, by a different section, adopted by this committee, on the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization, shown conclusively that this Convention is in favor of local self-government; of leaving to the different counties all matters purely local, and all subjects that can be controlled by the different counties. Now, sir, the adoption of this section will enable the counties to provide, in their own immediate localities, for the orphans, half orphans, indigent and aged persons within their counties or cities respectively. I believe it is in accordance with the principles of local self-government as near as possible to the people; therefore I hope that the committee will take a favorable view of this section and adopt it.

REMARKS OF MR. BIGGS.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I regret very much that my friend from Los Angeles has brought in this proposition here at this day. That thing was brought in here in this Convention when we had a very full house, and it was settled at that time. When there is such a sparse house I regret very much that the gentleman should propose that section here on this occasion.

MR. WEST. It is very different from the section that was voted on in the Committee of the Whole, before. It provides that the counties shall take care of their own orphans and half orphans.

MR. BIGGS. I heard the argument here upon this floor upon that question, and it was said that it was the will and disposition of this Convention, and the people of this State, to place these orphans under the charge of the State. That was the first proposition. Now the gentleman comes in and proposes to place them under the charge of the counties of the State. Now, it is well known that the counties are not in a condition to build asylums for the counties. If you will take the reports of the building of the Insane Asylum, the Deaf and Dumb Asylum, and every public building in this State, you will find that it is proven beyond a doubt that it costs about one thousand dollars per capita. How could counties build these asylums when they are almost bankrupt? My county to-day has to mortgage a large amount of its real estate. Now, gentlemen come up here and ask that the counties do this thing. How will they go on and build their asylums? You may as well abandon these little waifs and orphans; you might just as well turn them out on the streets.

Why, in the name of God, do these gentlemen bring up such a question as this, and try to force it through, because we have got a very small delegation here this evening? When we had a full house there were some ninety odd of these delegates went right square upon the record and voted against the State building asylums to take care of these little orphan children. There is a sort of rivalry existing between the Protestants and the Catholics as to who shall take the most care of these little children, and the result is that they are thoroughly cared for. This city has made up several thousand dollars, and established an asylum where these children are raised in the fear and admonition of the Lord.

Do you propose to put them out to the lowest bidder, who will keep them where their moral training will not be cared for in the least? God knows I hope this Convention is composed of a different element; that they have some feelings of humanity, and some feelings for the little wards and waifs of this State.

MR. WEST. I profess to possess as much feeling for these orphan children as any other gentleman, and I do not propose to abandon the waifs of this State, I propose that they shall be cared for in the localities where their mothers reside.

MR. BIGGS. I asked the gentleman if he proposed to do this, and he nodded his assent. And, my God, has it come to that, that the people of the State propose to abandon these little waifs, and do nothing for them? If so, I say the quicker we leave this State, and emigrate to where civilization, humanity, and religious and moral principles prevail, the better it is for all civilized communities. [Applause.]

MR. WEST. I desire to answer the question. The gentleman has misunderstood me entirely. I do not propose——

MR. BIGGS. I am glad to hear it.

MR. WEST. I propose to keep them where their widowed mothers can visit them, and where their mothers can be aided by local and temporary relief.

MR. BIGGS. I find that my friend has got some soul, although I have got to go through a great deal of rubbish to reach it. He wants them taken care of by the county. I want the gentleman to answer this question. The father is dead, and the mother, upon her dying bed, with her five little children, has not the privilege of saying, my children shall go to a Protestant or Catholic society. Where can the mother visit them then? You propose to let them out to the lowest bidder, who will keep them for the least amount of money. I trust that this Convention will give this section such a rebuke as it deserves. This is a whole souled, sympathetic, philanthropic people, and I ask this Convention to never, no never, allow these poor little wards to be peddled out, like a commodity upon the market, to those who will keep them for the smallest amount.

MR. TULLY. I move that the committee rise and report that they have had under consideration the article on city, county, and township governments, and recommend its adoption.

MR. HAGER. I move the committee rise and ask leave to sit again.

The motion was lost.

REMARKS OF MR. ANDREWS.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I hope that the additional section proposed will be adopted. The gentleman from Butte has entertained us with a very eloquent appeal for the orphans. The additional section proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles proposes to provide for the orphans of the State. It proposes to provide, through the counties, for other indigent persons that may be residing in the county. In the mining counties of this State, Mr. Chairman, there are many worthy men, who are many of them pioneers of the State of California; men that belong to that adventurous class which formed the pioneers of this State; men who have been in the advance in many of the greatest discoveries that have ever been made in the way of wealth. These men, many of them, have become disabled; they are becoming aged, and many of them are in indigent circumstances. California owes it to herself that these men should be taken care of, and they should be taken care of by the counties in which they are. The orphans should be taken care of, as has been said by the eloquent gentleman from Butte, and we propose through this section to provide that orphans throughout the State shall be taken care of; not only the orphans that may be sufficiently fortunate enough to be placed in one of these asylums, but all of the orphans of the State. I do not know how the gentleman from Butte voted when that proposition was up which provided that when these institutions that had charge of these orphans receive aid from the State that they should take charge of all the orphans.

MR. BIGGS. Do you know of a single instance where an orphan has not been received upon application?

MR. ANDREWS. I know that in my county there are many orphans provided for by the Board of Supervisors of the county. I can testify to this knowledge. I know other orphans that are taken care of by a few private individuals contributing together to take care of these orphans. Now, all this section proposes is that the counties of the State shall take care of the orphans and half orphans and aged persons in indigent circumstances in their county; and it provides that after the year eighteen hundred and eighty-four that the State shall make no further contribution to any institution that is not a State institution. In other words, that from and after the year eighteen hundred and eighty-four the State shall stand where it should stand, upon a sound basis; that the State shall not make appropriations for any other purpose than for State purposes, and for State institutions. That is the proposition. It is just giving notice that after eighteen hundred and eighty-four, no appropriations of this character—that is to institutions that are not under State control—shall be made. I do hope that this amendment will be adopted, because it makes it obligatory to take care of the orphans, and those whom it is the highest duty of the State to see cared for and take care of.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Farrell, Larkin, Moreland, and Wyatt.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the additional section offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. West. The Secretary will read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The several counties and cities and counties of the State shall provide for the care and maintenance of minor orphans, half orphans, abandoned children, and aged persons in indigent circumstances, within their respective limits: provided, that from and after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and eighty-four, no money shall be appropriated or drawn from the State treasury for the use and benefit of any corporation, association, asylum, hospital, or any other institution, not under the exclusive management and control of the State as a State institution, nor shall any grant or donation of property be made thereto by the State."

The section was rejected, on a division, by a vote of 37 ayes to 40 noes.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report the article back, and recommend its adoption.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

Mr. Murphy in the chair.

THE CHAIR. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the article on city, county, and township organization, report the same back and recommend its adoption.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: I move that the article be printed with the amendments, and placed on file.

The motion prevailed.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. LINDOW. Mr. President: I move we adjourn.

The motion prevailed.

And at five o'clock and thirty-five minutes P. M. the Convention stood adjourned.

ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTEENTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Monday, January 20th, 1879.

At nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M., the President and President pro tem. both being absent, Secretary Smith called the Convention to order, and called for nominations for a temporary Chairman.

On motion of Mr. Tully, Mr. Murphy was called to the Chair.

The roll was called, and members found in attendance as follows:

THE JOURNAL.

MR. FREUD. Mr. President: I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, and the same approved.

PETITIONS.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. President: On Saturday last a petition was received at this place by my colleague Mr. Heiskell, and myself, signed by sixty-three men living at Knights Ferry and the immediate vicinity of that place, in the County of Stanislaus. The purport of the petition is this: It is addressed to this body, requesting this body to adjourn without day, and further requesting myself and my colleague to use what influence we may have to accomplish such an end.

Mr. President, I recognize the inalienable right of the people to petition those in authority, and to petition representative bodies for the redress of grievances, when they deem that they have grievances to redress, whether these grievances are real or imaginary; and I, therefore, as I take it to be a duty, present this petition at the request and at the behest, and out of respect for the gentlemen who have petitioned. But, sir, I must say that so far as I am concerned I decline to take any steps in the matter. I believe that a week or two ago this Convention by a very decided vote, decided against the Finney resolution to adjourn. I put myself upon record against that adjournment. I have to say that I am here by the voice of the majority of the people of this State, and I deem it my bounden duty to stay here until the work of this Convention is completed. As to whether the work of this Convention shall be indorsed by the people, that is a matter to be determined after we have submitted our work. As to whether there shall be any appropriations made for the payment of our per diem here, makes no difference to me. Whether I receive pay for the time occupied in serving the people here, makes no difference. I deem, sir, that I am here at the behest of the people, and until they have spoken in some other more forcible manner I deem it my duty to stay here until the work is completed. Our work will then be submitted, and then it will be time enough to say whether the people of the State require or demand a new Constitution or not. I have here a letter which I have received from the same county, and although it is not addressed to this Convention, it indicates quite a different sentiment. After saying that a few months ago the people did not care anything about a new Constitution, or were not much in sympathy with this Convention, the writer says, that "lately there has a change come over the spirit of their dreams, and I hear nothing but commendation. I think the Constitution will get a majority of the votes in this section." That is also from the County of Stanislaus. I will take this occasion to remark that I returned to my home, at Modesto, a week ago last Saturday. I was there some four or five days, and I must say, and I think it is my duty to remark, in behalf of the people there, that they look very favorably upon the work of this Convention. While many of them have nothing to say one way or the other, they deem it prudent to hold their opinions in abeyance as to the work of this Convention until they shall see what it is, so that they can vote intelligently upon the subject. I believe, Mr. President, that is about all I have to say in regard to the matter.

MR. HEISKELL. Mr. President: I recognize the right of electors to petition their servants, and further, the right to instruct; and when a majority instructs a public servant it is his duty to obey or resign. The petition just received, and purporting to be from citizens of Knight's Ferry, has sixty-three signatures, and among them electors from four, certainly, and, I think, five precincts of Stanislaus County, and electors from the County of Tuolumne. Some of the precincts are large, as to voters, and others small.

Now, sir, there are sixty-three petitioners from the Counties of Stanislaus and Tuolumne, from whose views, as expressed in the petition, I wholly dissent, and some of the signers, with whom I have no acquaintance, and they may represent Stanislaus County. Thus, from two counties, with an aggregate vote of three thousand, only sixty-three requests this body to adjourn. If this petition proves anything, it is that the people indorse the action of this body thus far, or are willing to see the result of their labors before condemning it. Why the electors of Tuolumne County should petition me, I am at loss to know, unless of their ignorance—not knowing who their representatives are, or ignorant of the boundaries of their county. The petition contains a threat; but, sir, sixty-three out of three thousand votes cannot deter me from my duty here by a threat. I will obey a majority of my constituents, but will not be driven by any number by a threat. I will not be bulldozed or bullied by these sixty-three. I think I know the animus of this petition, but will say nothing of it here. It may appear there was wanting a proper respect for this body, from the contents of the petition appearing in the Record-Union newspaper before being presented to this body, but I assure you the petition was not in my charge, nor do I suppose Judge Schell intended it should appear in that paper before being presented here. It is the expiring kick of a few corporationists and capitalists in that section, and I rejoice that it is heartily indorsed by the Record-Union.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I wish to read a short extract from a letter I have just received this morning from Los Angeles, from a gentleman who is honored with the highest position in this State. I read it because I agree with my friend from Stanislaus, that this is the last small kick of the Central Pacific Railroad Company: "I can see a disposition on the part of a portion of the press to belittle the labors of the Convention, and bring upon it contempt; but this is understood. I can see a high grade of conservatism and justice in the action of the Convention. Of course there are many things that cannot be reached until the final result, when we consider the amount of interest represented; but I assure you that the people will sustain the Convention and beg you to give them courage, and tell them not to be in too much haste, but to stay until they can conclude their business, if it takes all the time now intervening until the meeting of the next Legislature." The fact is, Mr. President, that the monopolists see the handwriting on the wall, and that is the origin of all these efforts.

Mr. WALKER, of Tuolumne. MR. President: I must say, in behalf of the people of Tuolumne County, that I am at a loss to understand why citizens of Tuolumne County should be included in a petition sent to the delegates from Stanislaus, unless it is on account of the bad associations by which they are surrounded. I presume they must live some where down on the boundary of Stanislaus. I certainly feel at liberty to say that this does not reflect the sentiment of the people of Tuolumne County. Whenever they are desirous of sending a petition to this body, I presume that they will present it through their representative, and I desire the gentleman from Stanislaus to furnish me with the list of the names which are presented upon this petition as being citizens of Tuolumne County.

MR. HEISKELL. Our neighbors in Tuolumne are very respectable people. I recognize them as such, and I am very sorry that they should go over into Stanislaus among bad associates; and I regret too that they did not know, if they desired to present a petition, that they had a representative here through whom it could be presented. I have no charge to make against the character of the people of Tuolumne.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. President: I neglected to state the reason why this petition was not presented before, and why I suppose the reporters of the papers had received knowledge of it. It came in this wise: I did not receive it until after the Convention had passed the order of business under which it could properly have been presented. Further, I had not seen my colleague, Mr. Heiskell. Of course I did not deem it proper to present it until Mr. Heiskell should see it, because it was directed to Mr. Heiskell and myself. It happened to be put in my box, and I took it out and opened it. I showed it two or three delegates here for some advice in regard to the matter, and that is the way, no doubt, that the knowledge was acquired. I did not give the information to the paper.

THE CHAIR. Does the Convention desire to have the petition read?

[Cries of "read," "read."]

THE SECRETARY read:

To the Honorable Constitutional Convention, now at Sacramento Assembled:

The undersigned citizens and petitioners, of Knight's Ferry, in the County of Stanislaus, regardless of parties, believe the time has arrived when the Convention should adjourn sine die. They have become satisfied, from the nature and character of the discordant elements of which the Convention is composed, that no Constitution can be framed by it that will be ratified by the people. They are in favor of the Finney resolutions, with this amendment, that the adjournment be sine die. We, each and every one of us, also pledge ourselves that we will never vote for a candidate for the next, or any future Legislature, who will not pledge himself to go against any appropriation to defray the expenses of the Convention incurred after the expiration of one hundred days for which provision had been made by the last Legislature.

We also ask our delegates from this county, the Honorables Geo. W. Schell and T. D. Heiskell, to use their best ability and influence to secure an adjournment of the Convention at the earliest day possible.

Believing as we do that it would be for the best interests of the State that the Convention should adjourn, we ask that it do adjourn without delay.

And we will ever ask and pray for this desirable end.

January 7th, 1879.

MR. MARTIN, of Santa Cruz. I move to lay it on the table.

MR. REYNOLDS. I move that the petition be rejected.

MR. TULLY. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Water and Water Rights.

[Laughter.]

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to lay it on the table.

The motion prevailed.

EXEMPTION FROM TAXATION.

MR. BLACKMER presented the following petition, signed by a large number of citizens of San Diego County, requesting the exemption of certain property from taxation:

To the Honorable J. P. Hoge, President, and to the members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: Your petitioners, citizens of the State of California, and residents of San Diego County, most respectfully request your honorable body to exempt from taxation all property used exclusively for charitable, educational, and church purposes.

Laid on the table, to be considered with article on revenue and taxation.

LOCAL OPTION.

MR. WATERS. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, Mr. Murphy in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization, relative to local option.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. —. The Legislature shall, at its first session, enact a law whereby the qualified voters of any county, voting precinct, town, or city, by a majority vote, from time to time, may determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits.

MR. KENNY. Mr. Chairman: I move that the section be stricken out.

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I hope, sir, that the section will not be stricken out. That section seems to be strictly in accordance with the votes that this Convention has been giving for the last four or five days, upon the subject of local self-government, and it seems to me to come nearer home in the right direction, in my view of the case, than almost any other proposition that has been submitted for the consideration of the Convention. It touches and affects all classes of society, from the oldest to the youngest, and from the poorest to the richest, and from the most weak-minded to the most intellectual of the community. I hope that it will be left so that those who are affected by and interested in the subject shall have the privilege of legally dealing with the question; I therefore hope that the section will not be stricken out, but that it will be retained as a portion of the Constitution of this State, and that, if the entire State is not willing to adopt the principle in practice, that at least it will stand embodied in the very organic law of the land, and that it will give that privilege even to the humblest township or village, as it may be subdivided, in this State; that it would give that portion of a community who desire it, a right to speak, and to speak as they desire upon that subject, and not be left to the mercy of the Supreme Court, or any body else but themselves, to say whether they have that right to speak or not. Sir, I might refer—and it possibly would be permissible to refer—to a circumstance that occurred during my canvass for a seat in this Convention. The question of local option was mentioned incidentally, and it was then that a man who had spent ten years of a valuable portion of his life, and ten thousand dollars, in the saloons, and was then working upon the street, said to me: "Wyatt, stand for local option. I have been the very servant of whisky mills for ten years in this county, and I have drank up and wasted in whisky mills, ten thousand dollars that I have made in this valley. I will support local option to-day, and I want you to stand for local option. I do not want to be deprived of the privilege of voting for local option; it might have saved me from the position I now occupy." I speak in the interest and in behalf of men, women, and children of the high and the low, of the rich and the poor; I ask for them, that the privilege be granted to them of self-government, in that respect. I hope that the section will not be stricken out.

REMARKS OF MR. TOWNSEND.

MR. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman: I also hope that this section will not be stricken out. I cannot see what objection this Convention can have to people regulating their own affairs in their own districts and municipalities. It certainly is purely self-government. This Convention, on Saturday, saw fit to permit the cities to govern themselves, and establish separate governments and govern themselves in their own municipalities in every particular; and now I think, in any district, or county, or municipality, where the people think that saloons are a nuisance and a detriment, and the majority of the people are against allowing them to exist, that they should be permitted to decide the question for themselves. I cannot see what objection anybody can have to that section. It only allows the people, if they consider that saloons are a nuisance, that they are breeders of crime, that they are a source of great evil, that they fill their penitentiaries and jails and poor houses, to vote upon that question, and see whether they will have them in their midst or not. I hope the section will stand.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. I hope that this section will be stricken out. The gentleman from Mendocino desires to know why the people of municipalities should not be permitted to govern themselves in this matter. I hope to be able to give the gentleman a satisfactory reason. Now, so far as the evil of intemperance is concerned, I take it for granted there is but one opinion. We all agree that it is a very great evil, indeed. The next question is, can we remedy that evil by prohibitory legislation—and it will be well here to remember that experience is worth something, and is valuable in enabling us to make up our minds in regard to possibilities. What has been the result of an attempt to secure morality by legislation? This experiment has been tried for the last quarter of a century or more in some of the States in New England, and I submit that the only result of it has been to force men to drink behind the door in secret, instead of in public.

MR. TOWNSEND. Are you not aware that wherever this has been tried that that large class of men and boys, particularly laboring men, that congregate around saloons and sit there Saturday nights and spend their money, that that is entirely prohibited, and that it is only the upper crust, that have the means, that can go in the back doors and drink? I will ask you another question. Suppose you was doing a business and had a great many men employed, and in the middle of your harvest some one should come along and set up what is called a deadfall right alongside of your field?

MR. CAPLES. I have had some experience in this matter. I have been in California more than twenty-nine years. I have had a large number of men in my employ. I have suffered as much as any other man from the intemperance of other men. But is it wise to attempt to enforce morality by legislation? What is the result? We have had some experience here in California, and we know what it has been. The direct result is to set the people to wrangling and quarreling about this proposition, and it is no sooner lost than they raise it again, and I venture the assertion that the adoption of this section would cost the State of California more money—in time and in money itself—than the entire expenses of the State government. Yes, double as much. I assert that it would cost twice as much as the State government would cost. People would wrangle over the question week in and week out, and they never would say quit. They would keep up the fight perpetually. I refer gentlemen to the experience that we had here a few years ago. I remember the condition of things then prevalent in many of the local subdivisions of the State. It was a pandemonium. It was a hell on earth, and I protest against a repetition of it. That was the result wherever this contest over local option was made. It was a scene of turmoil and strife—people neglecting their business and engaging in this political struggle. It was a fearful scene, and if we should adopt this section in a constitutional provision, this struggle would be repeated and you would have nothing but a political wrangle. I protest, Mr. Chairman, against the policy, or lunacy, of this attempt. If it was possible for us to secure morality and the just deportment of the people by legislative enactment, it would be desirable to do it, and I would be the first to advocate it. But, Mr. Chairman, if we could do this we could do more, and I should be in favor of going back and repealing original sin; wipe it all out at one fell blow. Why not? Let us repeal the fall of man, and transfer mankind back into the garden of Eden. But we are here to legislate in temperance and reason, and we have got to accept the world as we find it. I deny utterly that it is within the range of possibility to legislate to secure and enforce morality. Besides, Mr. Chairman, what would be the result upon the labors of this Convention? Is there any gentleman here who believes that such a provision would be indorsed by the people of California? A liberty loving people deny to the government any right to control their personal action.

MR. TOWNSEND. Will you allow me to ask you a question?

MR. CAPLES. Yes.

MR. TOWNSEND. Are you aware that gambling is prohibited by law?

MR. CAPLES. Yes; it is attempted to be prohibited.

MR. TOWNSEND. Are you aware that those places where there used to be open gambling and bands of music at the door are prohibited by law, and that the consequence is that that evil is very much restricted? Legislation upon that is no different from any other question, and——

MR. CAPLES. This is my speech, and I propose to proceed. I will say to the gentleman that there is more gambling now than there was at the time he refers to. There is five times as much. Who will deny it? Why the Stock Boards in San Francisco are the source of a greater amount of gambling and a wider field for gambling operations than all the poker games of 'forty-nine and 'fifty. You cannot prevent it by legislation. And I will inform the gentleman that in many places in this State there are gambling games—it is true the bands of music are not there—as flourishing as in the days of 'forty-nine. They are not conducted openly, but the gentleman knows where to go to find them. I will venture the assertion that every gentleman on this floor can find a place if they desire to do so, and I have no doubt that some have found it. [Laughter.] I am and have been, so far as I am individually concerned, although it is not perhaps worth stating here, opposed to every form and shape of gambling. I do not desire to blow my own horn, gentlemen, but the fact is I have been a consistent enemy of this kind of life always, and have suffered by it through others, and have every reason to desire a high standard of public morality, because it conduces to the public welfare in more ways than one; but what we have got to do here is to accept the condition of mankind as we find it and attempt no impossibility. It is our duty to accept the condition of things we find and provide the best remedies that we can, and not attempt to do that which it is beyond our power to do. I assert that it is beyond the power of this Convention, or any law-making power, to secure public morality by statute enactment.

MR. KENNY. I move the previous question.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I did not propose saying anything upon this subject. When there was a liquor subject up a few days ago, and the idea presented with regard to having pure liquors, I then also spoke upon this subject, which I had not intended to do, and thought at that time that a purification of liquors was a matter worthy of the attention and high appreciation of this committee. Now, in this case I look upon the wishes of a number of the citizens from different parts of this State, and they are far more numerous than the petitioners from Stanislaus County, and they demand the attention and consideration of this body upon this very important question. We know that there has been in this State an effort in the line of local option, and we know that citizens of positions of this State have wanted to carry out their wishes in their respective localities, and could not do so. Why? Because they had no constitutional sanction for it. There was a deficiency. They lacked foundation in the organic law of the State. In different parts of the State they have conceived that the sale of ardent spirits has been a detriment to them, great damage to them, and they have desired that this Convention should give them an opportunity in these respective localities to prohibit the sale of liquors by a majority vote. Now, this committee, so far, has adopted the system, to a great extent, of local government, and if the people are to be allowed local government in other respects, why not in this? Is the evil less in this than in any other, that they shall be prohibited this right? Is it not an evil of some consequence? I am not going, upon the present occasion, to perpetrate upon you, in any form, a temperance lecture, but I am going to advocate the rights of the people in various portions of the State to be heard by this body, when they demand that they have a right to do as they please in this matter by a majority vote. It is said by the gentleman last upon the floor that you cannot legislate morality into the people. You cannot do this. If this proves anything, it proves too much. We might, upon the same principle, say that there shall be no laws against stealing, forgery, or any other crime, because upon the broad principle you cannot legislate morality into the people. The idea is to have it in the power of any local subdivision of the county, if they deem this to be an evil, to legislate against it. To take the broad position, that you cannot legislate morality into the people, is assuming too much. You might as well say that because there are laws against stealing and stealing still goes on, that you would do away with all laws against stealing. It assumes too much. I am satisfied that every member of this body must see the utter fallacy of the gentleman's position on this subject. But there is nothing more demanded and nothing more desired by the people than to do as they wish in their respective townships and localities. It is a reasonable request. It has been granted in different places. It will not conflict with the people elsewhere, and I cannot see why there should be anything of a factious opposition. It was contended all the time that the matter would load down the Constitution, as though it was a camel and this was the last straw, and would break its back. I say it will not, because it does not affect others. It does not affect any locality except those who vote in favor of it. I do contend that it merits the serious consideration of this body, and some action upon the subject, and I hope that the section will not be stricken out.

REMARKS OF MR. BARTON.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I hope that this section will not be stricken out. The argument of my friend, Dr. Caples, if it proves anything, proves that we should stop short in civilization and go back into barbarism. The idea of a gentleman upon the floor of this Convention assuming the position that we have not got the right to legislate upon the subject of morality in the direction that the people desire, simply because laws that have been passed to restrain evils have not prevented them entirely! The idea that we have not the right to give to the people in any locality the right to say what is a nuisance and what is not, is wrong and contrary to the principles of our Government! It is undemocratic. The principles of this Government are broad and liberal, and upon that basis this Government must stand or fall. To give to the Legislature the power to say to the people of a district, you can abate a nuisance, is something that the people of this State demand. It is not prohibitory, if you please, as the doctor would have us believe. It is simply giving the people the right to say who shall or who shall not have a right to conduct this business, thereby compelling them to give security for their good behavior. Is it not right that the Legislature of the people of California should have the right to authorize the people to shut up these places where, with two ounces of poison and a gallon of water, they manufacture the deadly compounds they sell over their bar? Whenever I hear one of the sages of this society get up and say that this is wrong, I have been constrained to the belief that this great reform movement never will get an abiding place in the minds of the people until this Bourbon class is in existence no more. Progress in our society is marked, and the old Bourbon ideas must stand back and give place to the ideas of progress. We claim the right as local optionists and temperance people of this State to legislate upon this great question.

I remember a few years ago when the subject of local option was being championed by a very few men upon the floor of this house, that in the short space of eight hours the whisky men and whisky dealers of this State secured and raised a corrupting fund of one hundred and forty-eight thousand dollars, to defeat that measure. But then, as it is now, there was a band of gentlemen upon the floor of the Legislature that were in the interest of the people and humanity, and, sir, that bill became a law against and in spite of all this ill-gotten money. The corrupting fund could not be used. The lobby found themselves in the position of men without a place to invest it. The bill went to the Governor, was signed, and became a law, and the Supreme Court—and I desire to speak kindly of them as possible—decided that law to be unconstitutional; that a district or township, in their local authority and power, based upon a democratic idea of government, had no right to do this thing. But, by way of stultification, they went into Shasta County and there they decided that the local authorities of a certain township had the right to do this very same thing that the people of Alameda were denied. Tell me that the Legislature of this State has not got the right to pass a law that will protect my boys and yours from the vices, from the corruption, and from the sins that beset them upon every hand. I warn you, now, that this is false legislation, and I appeal to you, now, as honest men, in behalf of my boys and yours, and the rising generation generally throughout the State, to stand up manfully and weight down this Constitution with one of the grandest jewels that ever emanated from a legislative body.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the section and in favor of striking it out for various reasons. I will only give one or two. In the first place, I am afraid it will load down the Constitution, and injure its chances of adoption [laughter]; and in the second place, I have learned that quite a number of prominent gentlemen, connected with the interests of the corporations of the State, are in favor of the proposition. I think these two reasons should be sufficient to defeat it. [Laughter.]

MR. MARTIN, of Santa Cruz. Mr. Chairman: Some years ago I was very much in favor of local option, but having seen the workings of it once in my own county, and throughout the State, I hope it will be defeated; therefore I am in favor of striking it out. I look upon local option as a fraud.

MR. RINGGOLD. Mr. Chairman: I am aware of who I shall offend by the position I take upon this question, but I care not for that. I am in favor of democracy, pure and simple, and if we divide the State into small territories, I do not see why we should not allow them to have jurisdiction on all sorts of questions. I do not suppose that it will work as the people anticipate, but I support the proposition on principle; consequently I hope it will not be stricken out.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I have voted, sir, throughout this Convention in favor of local self-government, but I am not able to support the proposition on the Secretary's table, because it is not self-government, as I understand it; but it is made obligatory upon the Legislature by the use of the word "shall." The people of this State, as I understand it, once did, when the issue was presented to them as a direct issue, elect a Legislature in favor of local option laws. And they enacted a law which was declared by the Supreme Court unconstitutional. That decision is in the forty-eighth California Reports, in the case of ex parte Wall, and that decision of the Court proceeds upon two grounds. I suppose, of course, if the friends of local self-government wish to enact anything in this Constitution, it would be for the purpose of getting around or removing the objections made by the Supreme Court to the local option law which was once passed in this State. That objection was upon two grounds: first, that the Legislature had no power to delegate its legislative authority; and in the next place, that township government, which was provided for under the Constitution, had not been by the Legislature carried into effect, and that the Constitution was not self-executing, and therefore there was no township organization in the sense of the Constitution, and consequently that the local option laws were void, there being no local legislature such as was contemplated or provided in the Act called the Local Option Act. Now, the Supreme Court, after stating their objections, decided that if township organizations were created, or local legislatures, as they called them, and the power was delegated to them of regulating tippling, or the selling or dealing in intoxicating liquors, that that would be constitutional. I will read from the syllabus of that decision:

"When a system of town governments shall have been established by the Legislature, and when local town legislatures shall have been organized under that system, the Legislature may confide to such local legislatures the right to make local rules, but it cannot delegate to the people living within certain territorial limits, but who have no distinctive political character or governmental organization, the power to make laws."

Now, sir, would it not be sufficient, even admitting or supposing we have not sufficiently conferred upon the Legislature this power—would it not be sufficient, instead of compelling the Legislature to enact laws of this kind, to declare the general principle that they should have the power, when they do create these townships or local organizations—that whenever they have done that they should have the power to delegate them this general power which is spoken of here? Would it not be comprehended under the general power to "make and enforce within its limits all such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws," and laws generally for the regulation of their domestic concerns? It seems to me that that is sufficient without flying directly in the face of that business by declaring that the Legislature shall, ex propria vigore, go ahead and impose it upon the people of this State—that it is being made a separate issue. I do not think the Legislature should be tied up by the people in that way—a cast iron, inflexible obligation upon the Legislature, whether or no, to enact such a law.

MR. TOWNSEND. I think the gentleman voted for a great many such measures.

MR. BARBOUR. I have voted for a number of measures looking to local government, and I have no objection to it now, provided it is necessary. There is the decision of our Supreme Court. That decision is, that when you have township organizations then you can delegate this power. How can you do so except there is a city, a regular incorporated city, with its regular Board of Supervisors—its local legislature? How can you say that a certain portion of a county not organized, having no local legislature, how can you say that they can go ahead and make laws? I am satisfied that if you do this you have got to go the whole hog and make it compulsory upon the Legislature to provide township organizations. It seems to me that it is already provided for. The Supreme Court objection has been met by our provision number twelve of the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization, and other provisions in this Constitution.

REMARKS OF MR. KLEINE.

MR. KLEINE. Mr. Chairman: This local option business seems to me—I guess it originated in the brains of a few fanatics, I guess. If a man wants to jump into the Sacramento who can prevent him? This local option law, according to the way I understand it, gives the business into the hands of a few. It takes away the liquor business from the small whisky shops and gives it into the hands of the large ones. That is the way it works in Maine. They have a law against selling liquor, and you find just as many drunkards in the State of Maine as anywhere else. The man that wants it will have it. For my own part I never drink it at all. I never spend two bits. I don't smoke and I don't drink. I have no use for it. A gentleman can drink whisky if he wants whisky. If you close the whisky shops he goes to a bigger liquor shop and gets it. According to these local option laws, as I said before, it gives the business all to the wholesale dealers. The man that can afford to buy ten gallons, of course he will have his whisky, and how easy it is for a man to get his whisky at the wholesale liquor store. It is nothing but a crazy idea. I am opposed to it. I shall vote against it.

MR. STEDMAN. May I ask you a question? You say you never drink or spend money for it. Didn't I have a drink with you in a saloon the other day?

MR. KLEINE. Yes, you did. You did, sir; I don't deny that. I can drink myself, but I very seldom drink. I done it. I don't belong to any temperance society. I don't allow any man or any society to bind me. Although I never spend two bits for whisky, nor beer, nor wine, if I am thirsty, you give me the preference of a glass of water or a glass of beer, I always take the water.

MR. TOWNSEND. Why are you working against your fellow laborers? Don't you know that many of them spend all their money for whisky when they might be getting rich?

MR. KLEINE. If a man sees fit to spend his money in whisky it is his own look out. I know many men that do not drink whisky, and they spend their money with bad women. [Laughter.] Who is the most moral man? The man that spends his money with prostitutes or with whisky? [Laughter.]

REMARKS OF MR. VACQUEREL.

MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. Chairman: I have been handed here a little paper, signed with the grand seal. I should like to ask what kind of a religion it is. It seems to me that it is some kind of a religion or another. Now, section four of the Constitution of the State of California provides that "the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall be forever allowed in this State." Now, if we legislate upon this local option we are certainly legislating for a certain class of religion, or a certain society, which is directly against the Constitution. Another thing, a gentleman on this floor has said that the Legislature had a right to protect his children and other people's children. Now, sir, if a father cannot protect his own child, I would like to know how the Legislature is going to do it? Why not pass a law then when the children come to be born, that they must come into world with nothing but virtues, and no vices at all? Are we to regenerate mankind? Can we stop a man from drinking if he wants to? Let everybody go according to his own conscience. He is the one that suffers for it if he makes an abuse of it. Why, in countries where there is no such law as that, where people are permitted to drink whenever they choose, those are the very countries where you see the least drunkards. I hope this section will be stricken out.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I wish to move an amendment to strike out and insert.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'section' down to the word 'enact,' and insert the words 'the city and township governments organized under the Constitution may."

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I was elected here on a straight Democratic nomination. I stand here as a Democrat. The original definition of a democratic government—the Greek definition—was that it is a government by the people. Now, sir, I propose that the people, locally, as we have repeatedly enacted here, shall govern in relation to this matter. The main objection to a local option law has always been that it was not supported by public sentiment. But if a majority of the people of a city or township are in favor of the prohibition of this retail trade or traffic, then it is sustained by public sentiment, and then I think it is proper that they should have a right to say whether this poison shall be sold at every corner of a street or not. Now, nobody doubts—my friend from Sacramento knows very well, as a physician—that the Legislature has always, in most of the States, if not in this, and practically in this, exercised the right to regulate the sale of poison. Now, it is true, as I had occasion to say here the other day, that nine tenths of everything we drink in this State is a compound of poisons, mixed up by the wholesale dealer. One of the largest manufacturers of wine in this State told me, the other day, that the wines and all the other liquors are adulterated in every hand through which they pass. That it is destroying the health of our people; that it is sending them to the penitentiary as well as to the insane asylum, is a notorious fact. I was reading the other day an English publication, in which extensive evidence was taken, and there was the evidence of the wife of an English operator, who said that her only chance to get any of the money for the support of the family, paid to her husband on Saturday night, was to go with him to the paying-table, and accompany him home. She testified that between the house of the paying-table and her own residence there were in one block five groceries; that she could get him by two, but when it come to get him by five, he spent all his money before he got home. Now, everybody knows the misery of this thing; everybody knows its immoral tendency; everybody knows its effect upon the health of the people. I think that it will preserve the public peace to have this matter disposed of by the local governments. I know there are two colonies in this State, founded by people who have churches and schools and libraries and societies, who do not want liquor sold in their place. Once or twice parties have attempted to set up groceries in these colonies, but the colonists notified them that they could not do it, and the fact is, that they were obliged to quit, for they saw at once that the moral atmosphere would be made too warm for them if they attempted to force these establishments upon them. This is likely to occur in many places, and—for instance, in the township in which that colony is located—why not allow it to say liquor shall not be sold here, or shall not be sold at retail, or to make such regulations as will protect the morals and health of the locality? On principle, it is certainly right, and I believe that the utility of it would be very great, for this habit of drinking, among our people, is produced by social feeling. A half dozen fellows get into a grocery; one treats, another treats, and another treats, out of pure good feeling, and the first thing they know, half of them have contracted habits of intemperance and habits of dissipation. It does strike me that it is a right thing to be done to leave it to the local governments to say whether this vice shall be perpetrated and perpetuated in their communities or not.

MR. CAPLES. Would the gentleman permit a question? I desire to ask General Howard if his devotions to the principles of local self-government would carry him to the extent of justifying the enactment of a code of blue laws for any city or township?

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. No, I would not prevent a gentleman from kissing his wife on Sunday, but I would prohibit him from making his brother drunk on any day.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment offered by my colleague from Los Angeles will prevail. It certainly is correct in principle. It is sound in theory, and it is one of those cardinal principles that underly true democracy, that the people in every community, in their corporate or municipal character should be permitted to regulate their own affairs. From the commencement of the discussion upon city, county, and township organization, I have voted steadily, constantly, and uniformly in favor of local self government. Now, Mr. Chairman, if there is any subject upon which local authority should be permitted to be exercised, it is upon the protection of the morals of the youth; it is upon those police regulations that either tend to corrupt, or destroy, or vitiate, or tend to elevate, cultivate, and purify the generations of society. I am acquainted with some of those localities to which my colleague referred, in the County of Los Angeles. I will state one instance briefly. A low, demoralized individual, right from the brothels, established a drinking saloon in the vicinity of our public school. By the introduction of sundry little games and inducements he enticed the boys in there.

MR. WHITE. Is not this whole subject covered in section twelve, when it says that the local governments "shall make such local, police, sanitary, and other regulations as are not inconsistent with general laws?"

MR. HOWARD. Will you vote, in the Convention, to sustain section twelve?

MR. WHITE. I will vote to sustain section twelve.

MR. WEST. I am of the opinion that section twelve does sustain the principle, and gives the authority, but I cannot permit this occasion to pass without expressing myself in favor of the right, power, and privilege of local communities to protect themselves against the crushing influence of the sale of intoxicating liquors, if they are disposed, by a majority vote to do so. In these instances to which I am referring, this nuisance becomes intolerable. In the case I refer to, it is said that a tidal wave struck this institution, and in the morning the saloon was found in a ravine near by, all broken to pieces. I hope we will not be compelled to depend upon these tidal waves to destroy these institutions in the future, but that the community may legally protect themselves against them. I hope the amendment will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. BIGGS.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I have lived fifty odd years trying to be a citizen of morality and virtue. I have been taught that moral suasion was much better than coercion. I am opposed to the section. I think it is amply provided for.

MR. REYNOLDS. Will the gentleman allow a question? If the gentleman should discover a thief breaking into his store, and extracting money from his till, would he approach him with moral suasion, and beg him, for the love of God and humanity's sake, not to take his money; or would he take him by the throat, and pack him out?

MR. BIGGS. The gentleman might say that, if the moon were made of green cheese, it would be good to feed monkeys on. I am opposed to any legislative body saying what a man shall eat, drink, or wear. I have grandchildren, and a number of them, and I undertake to say, it is seldom you see one of them enter a saloon and take a drink. In my experience in life, I have noticed that, when this local option has been inforced, the result is, that people bought liquor from wholesale places, and the consequence was that they became beastly intoxicated, or else under the influence of liquor, whereas, if they had gone to a saloon, they would have had no bad effect from it. In my travels throughout the east I have seen the effects of this local option, buying by the bottlefull and carrying it in their pockets. I am ready to go hand in hand with every gentleman on the floor, upon the question of morality, but it cannot be forced in this way; they will evade the law, they will buy it by the bottlefull, they will drink it at home. Do you propose to force it upon every township organization to hold this election? You say you shall do thus and so. It is very expensive to hold these elections.

MR. TOWNSEND. It is not proposed to force this upon a community. Suppose a community says, by a majority vote, that they do not want these dens, that they do not want these saloons open for people to go in at all times, or for boys to go in at any time. Why not permit them to rule?

MR. BIGGS. Do you propose to force every community to take a vote upon that direct question? A gentleman has spoken about the Democratic principles. If he has been an old Bourbon Democrat he has lived a long time under the influence of that article. I am very sorry that there has been one hundred and forty-eight thousand dollars made up for a lobby to defeat a local option bill. The gentleman who discloses that information was better posted upon that question than any other gentleman on this floor. He ought to know. He says it was one hundred and forty-eight thousand dollars. Well, sir, there is a large number of the people of this State opposed to local option. Another gentleman made a statement here that he was elected directly upon local option. If that question was at issue before the people I know nothing of it. I heard nothing of it in any portion of the State that I visited at the time. I do think it is unnecessary. It is amply provided for in section twelve. We do not wish to interfere in every business. I am opposed to loading down this Constitution with useless and such worthless trash as this is.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I believe this matter has been sufficiently discussed. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Evey, Kelley, Smith, of San Francisco, and Kenny.

The committee refused to order the main question, on a division, by a vote of 35 ayes to 43 noes.

MR. CAMPBELL. I have a small amendment that I desire to offer to the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard. I think he will accept it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the amendment so as to read as follows: 'The city or township governments organized under this Constitution may enact a law whereby the qualified electors of any county, town, city, or city and county, by a majority vote, from time to time, may determine whether the sale of intoxicating liquors shall be prohibited within the prescribed limits.'"

MR. HOWARD. I accept that amendment

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: The only object is to strike out "voting precinct," and put in "county, town, city, or city and county," which would be the designation. It does away with the voting precincts, and puts in the designation by which the City and County of San Francisco is known. The voting precincts in San Francisco, under the existing law, simply consist of two hundred voters, and to submit that question to voting precincts would not practically have any good effect. A man could step across to any other voting precinct and get all he wanted.

REMARKS OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: For my part, sir, while agreeing with the moral sentiments that are expressed here—with the views of nearly all who have spoken on the affirmative of this question, or against the motion to strike out, in regard to the evils entailed upon the people by the use of intoxicating drinks, and by having numerous places for the sale of them—I am yet in favor of striking out, or of amending it, for this reason: that it seems to me to be inaugurating a form of government that is not and has not been approved anywhere. I think we have carried the principle of democracy, to which, under a very proper declaration, we are all devoted, as far as it can be usefully carried. We have carried it to this extent, that within the scope of its powers the Legislature of the State shall make laws for the government of the State; and within the scope of their powers, which are made ample, the people of counties shall prescribe laws and regulations for the government of these counties; and still further, that even subordinate municipalities and townships also shall, in accordance with the republican scheme by which the people of the United States are governed, have also their legislative bodies. Now, Mr. Chairman, that legislative body, in the township as well as in the county, has the authority to reach all the beneficial results, in my judgment, that can be reached by legislation in the direction which we are now contemplating, and that under a section that has been adopted in Committee of the Whole—under section twelve of the article on city, county, and township organizations, in the ordinary course of representative government the townships and counties can deal with the question as a matter falling in a general way within their jurisdiction. It is representative government that the American people maintains. It is not that which was known of old in Greece as democratic government. Now, democratic government is exactly the thing which is contemplated by this section here, that measures shall be passed, not through any representative form of government, not through any organized power adopted by the people, but by a direct vote of the individual voters themselves. That has never been found a successful way of dealing with any public question. That was democracy in Greece. There are plenty of gentlemen here who know how that worked, and they know that it is impracticable in anything but a very small community. It is impracticable under any system of government. It is directly opposed to the system of government to which the people of the United States are unalterably devoted. It is opposed to representative government. There is nothing representative about it. I do not myself perceive any reason why we should depart from the system of representative government which characterizes this country. We now propose to narrow it down so as to cover local interest to such a degree as may reach the wants or needs of every small portion of the country. I do not see any reason now that will justify us in abandoning that form of government and resorting to individual action upon this question, more than upon other questions. Why should we not, then, if we are to give up the scheme we have already adopted, in this case, and confer this governmental power upon the townships in regard to the sale of liquors—why shall we not give it up in regard to licensing all games, and in regard to keeping houses of ill fame, and in regard to a hundred questions, and let each one of these be submitted, under the doctrine of local option, to the individual voters, and not to the governmental power that makes the other laws and regulations in the county, township, or other municipality? I object to it upon that principle.

I believe that we have already done all that is required. I believe in the regular and orderly administration of our laws according to our own theory—the theory we have always set up and advocated—and when we secure to the people representative government, we give them a greater good than can be given by the method under contemplation here. We know very well that when we are making an organic law, we desire that it shall apply in a general way, as far as possible, and not, when we have pronounced against the State exercising special legislation, to set ourselves at work making a special legislation in the organic law, pointing out a particular business or a particular interest. I hardly think it is compatible with the nature of an organic law, and whenever we do that there will be a plausible ground for opposition to our work. If we confine ourselves to that which we have done, and which, in my opinion, is sufficient to accomplish the desired result, we will have a system that is in perfect harmony with the Legislature and with everything else. Men are willing to say we will abide by general laws, but they will always resent, and will resent in this particular instance, with tremendous force and effect, any organic legislation pointing out one particular interest. They are able to do it—I wish they were not—and they are able to make it a very different question whether this Constitution shall be adopted than is intended.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's ten minutes have expired.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I do not like to impugn the motives of any gentleman, but it looks to me as if the gentleman from Los Angeles and his colleague have shapen their course this morning in the interest of Los Angeles wine. They have talked here a great deal about the adulterations of liquors. The only place where you could get pure wine was at Los Angeles. Now, as these local legislatures will have the power to prohibit any kind of liquors that they choose, and except any kind, it seems that it is designed to cut off all other sorts of liquor except native California wines, under the insane idea that it is a healthy drink. Now, sir, did you ever get drunk—I mean, did you ever drink California wine? There is not a man in the State of California able to adulterate that wine and make it any worse than it is. The effect upon the system is something terrible. When a man drinks that wine, instead of a pleasant temporary exhilaration, to be followed by the normal state again, he never gets straight again. It is a chronic drunk when he drinks California wine. When a man uses it for a certain length of time a false skin begins to form all over his body. The disease goes on very much like leprosy. It hardens the ligaments, and the body is encased with an unnatural substance through which the blood does not circulate at all. [Laughter.] There is no healthy and natural perspiration goes on; the man has sunken eyes, and the end of him is insanity and death.

MR. HOWARD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Did he ever drink any pure California wine in Los Angeles, or at the vineyards—anywhere?

MR. MCFARLAND. Yes; I drank some they called pure, and as they do not adulterate there, it must have been pure.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I would like to state that this is to prevent these Black Republicans from killing off Democrats with bad whisky. [Laughter and applause.]

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I have no desire to argue this question further, as my argument has been singularly perverted. I asserted that a statutory morality was an impracticability. I supposed I was talking to gentlemen of intelligence, who could comprehend the difference between this, that, and the other; but it seems that I was mistaken to some extent. Gentlemen have asserted that my assertion amounted to this: that because we cannot have an enforced morality, hence we need not legislate against stealing or murder. Now, if any gentlemen here on this floor lack the intelligence to comprehend the difference between questions of morality and questions of crime, I, Mr. Chairman, disclaim any responsibility for their ignorance. In conclusion, I have just this remark to make in regard to local option: It is a stab at this Constitution that we are making, and it is an act of suicide, and every gentleman of ordinary intelligence who is acquainted with the people of the State of California, knows that to be the truth, and knows that the people of California will refuse, now and forever, to be put into a straight jacket, in obedience to the behests of New England Puritan fanaticism.

REMARKS OF MR. LINDOW.

MR. LINDOW. Mr. Chairman: I would like to see some gentleman give us a clearer state of things. I am just as dark now as I was when it commenced. I see Dr. Caples has been up twice speaking, but I cannot see any light whatever. There is a point there where he could keep people from getting drunk, but it would be just as bad as on this China question—we would go to interfere with the Constitution of the United States. That would be the only way that we could remedy the evil. But if the gentlemen look back where the revenue comes in through the Custom House, you would find that the wine and liquor brings more revenue than any other commerce that comes through the Custom House. There would be nothing done about it. But you look back at the time Senator Booth was Governor of the State of California. They moved for a Sunday law. Well, we knew right away that that would not pass, because the Governor was doing a great wholesale business. Why was it defeated? Because it was making more money than anything else. Now, the only thing what I can see is that they want to go against the small dealers; cut them off, and they will make the people believe that that will make a sober government, and it will remedy the evil. When the truth is out, it will be found that it is to cut off the small dealers and throw it into the hands of the big ones. Now, I recollect the time when the Sunday law was in force in the City of New York, in eighteen hundred and sixty-three. Well, before that the gentleman drank, and the lady, once in a while; but when the Sunday law passed the whole family was drunk. A whole case of brandy was taken into the house, and beer as well, and the father and mother and all the children were tight enough. [Laughter.] And that was the end of Sunday law. There is no government that can go to work and prevent a man from getting drunk. If he is in the habit of doing it, he will do it. I do not see at all that it will give a remedy. I do not say that I don't take anything at all. When I like, I go into a saloon and have it. I cannot say I never was drunk, because four years ago I was as drunk as anything. I made a special business of it, to see how it would go when I myself was tight. I like to go through all experience. At the same time, I would vote for it if it would do good—but you cannot do away with it. It would be just the same as now.

REMARKS OF MR. OVERTON.

MR. OVERTON. Mr. Chairman: I am as strong in favor of sobriety and as hostile to intoxication as any man upon this floor, yet I am not a teetotaler. I drink whenever I am dry, so far as I am concerned; but I dislike intoxication, and I am in favor of elevating the morals of the community. But, sir, this local option has not that effect, as it was attempted to be enforced in this State at one time. I reside in a city where at one time they had an election to try and prohibit the sale of liquor in that town. Our people defeated it, and the reason why we defeated it was that it would only throw trade out of town. Santa Rosa would never have stopped the sale of intoxicating liquor. They would have got tight just the same as before, because the territory is too limited. They would have gone outside of the city. The result would have been that they would get drunk as often as before, and we would have received no revenue from the parties that sold the liquor. All they had to do was to go across the creek and establish saloons there. So it would be in this city. Suppose you prohibited the sale of liquor here. People would go across the river and there will be just as much drunkenness, and the City of Sacramento will have to take care of them and get no revenue. It is the same in San Francisco. If there were none of these places in the State, if it was universal, I do not know but it would be a desideratum that should be desired. But as it is, to say you shall not buy your whisky in a certain territorial limit, it effects nothing. The people will have it. Men that want whisky will have it. A man who has got the money can buy his keg of whisky, and keep it in the house; but the man who is so unfortunate that he cannot buy it by the quantity and carry it home, it discriminates against him. I do not say that is an argument here, because that is not my style. I shall vote upon every proposition according to my conscientious convictions, whether it is popular or not; whether it loads down the Constitution or whether it does not load it down. But if gentlemen do want to load this Constitution down, all they want to do is to vote for this local option clause, and put it into the Constitution. I do not believe there are three Germans out of ten in this State that would support this Constitution if this provision should be incorporated in it. This matter is to them very much like the Sunday law. They do not love the Sunday law, and neither do I. I do not believe in any law that is to legislate morals or religion into a community. I do not believe in it. You pass this and the Germans of this State, almost unanimously, will vote against this Constitution if we send it forth with this provision in it. I say, so far as I am concerned, that does not actuate me to favor or oppose it. I am opposed to it upon principle. I do not believe it is right.

MR. RINGGOLD. This is good enough for me. If the people want to vote the Constitution down, I am not going to alter my opinion because somebody says they will.

MR. LINDOW. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will be voted down and stricken down altogether. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Howard, Stedman, Vacquerel, and Kenny.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion to strike out the section.

The motion prevailed.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report their action back to the Convention, and ask to be discharged from further consideration of this subject.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

MR. MURPHY in the Chair.

THE CHAIR. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the section reported by the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization, in relation to local option, have rejected the same, and ask to be discharged from further consideration of the subject.

EDUCATION.

MR. WINANS. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Murphy in the Chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Education.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: The time has passed when the importance of public education was made the theme for diadactic effort or rhetorical display. In the advancement of civilization and refinement, it has now concentrated into a great fundamental truth, which among all the people finds ——

MR. PROUTY. I rise to a point of order. There is nothing before the committee.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section one.

THE SECRETARY read:

SECTION 1. A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence being essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people, the Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: It forms the basis ——

MR. HERRINGTON. I rise to a point of order. There can be no discussion until the report has been read, and then the first section. I make that point of order.

THE CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not well taken.

MR. HERRINGTON. I most respectfully appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Seconded by Messrs. Huestis and Lindow.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the reports are read section by section. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Committee.

[Cries of "division."]

MR. LAINE. I desire to have the question stated.

MR. HERRINGTON. The point of order taken by me was that the article had not been read in Committee of the Whole, and that it was not in order to consider it section by section until the report was read to this committee. The report of the committee has already been read in Convention, but not in Committee of the Whole.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I think the Chair is right.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

A division resulted in a vote of 44 ayes to 17 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting.

A second division resulted in a vote of 50 ayes to 14 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is no quorum voting.

MR. WEST. I move a call of the roll to ascertain if there is a quorum present.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I desire simply to state that articles when taken up by the Committee of the Whole have always been read as a whole and then taken up section by section, and that is the reason I am voting against the decision of the Chair. It is the precedent; and if a precedent is worth anything the Chair is wrong.

MR. HERRINGTON. I withdraw the appeal.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I will request now, for the information of the committee, that the whole report be read, so that we may see the bearing of the remarks which the Chairman of the committee is about to make. I think it will be more satisfactory to him, and I am satisfied that it will be to the Convention.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I certainly have no desire that the reading of the report should be omitted if the members of this committee desire to hear it read. The Chair recognized me in the first place, and my remarks were therefore in order; but if it be desirable, or be desired, that there be a reading of the entire report, certainly there can be no objection thereto. I do not intend to speak upon the whole article at this time, under any circumstances, and what I was about to say was eminently brief. But still, if the members desire to have the article read I am very willing to yield the floor.

THE CHAIRMAN. If the committee desire the reading——

MR. LAINE. The history of the article shows that it has been read. It says: "Read, laid on the table, and ordered printed." It has been read once, as its history shows.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I move that the report of the Committee on Education be read.

The motion prevailed.

THE SECRETARY read:

ARTICLE IX—EDUCATION.

SECTION 1. A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence being essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people, the Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement.

SEC. 2. A Superintendent of Public Instruction shall, at the first gubernatorial election after the adoption of this Constitution, and every four years thereafter, be elected by the qualified voters of the State. He shall receive a salary equal to that of the Secretary of State, and shall enter upon the duties of his office on the first Monday of January next after his election.

SEC. 3. A Superintendent of Schools for each county shall be elected by the qualified voters thereof at the first gubernatorial election, and every four years thereafter; provided, that the Legislature may authorize two or more counties to unite and elect one Superintendent for all the counties so uniting.

SEC. 4. The proceeds of all lands that have been or may be granted by the United States to this State for the support of common schools, which may be, or may have been, sold or disposed of, and the five hundred thousand acres of land granted to the new States under an Act of Congress, distributing the proceeds of the public lands among the several States of the Union, approved A. D. one thousand eight hundred and forty-one, and all estates of deceased persons who may have died without leaving a will or heir, and also such per cent. as may be granted or have been granted by Congress on the sale of lands in this State, shall be and remain a perpetual fund, the interest of which, together with all the rents of the unsold lands, and such other means as the Legislature may provide, shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of common schools throughout the State, subject to the provisions of section six of this article.

SEC. 5. The Legislature shall provide for a system of common schools, by which a free school shall be kept up and supported in each district at least six months in every year, after the first year, in which a school has been established; and any school district neglecting to keep up and support such school shall be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public fund during such neglect.

SEC. 6. The public school system shall include primary and grammar schools, and such high schools, evening schools, normal schools, and technical schools, as may be established by the Legislature, or by municipal or district authority; but the entire revenue derived from the State School Fund, and the State school tax, shall be applied exclusively to the support of primary and grammar schools.

SEC. 7. A State Board of Education, consisting of two members from each Congressional District, shall be elected by the qualified voters of the district at the first gubernatorial election after the adoption of this Constitution, who shall hold their office for the term of four years, and enter upon the duties thereof on the first Monday of January next after their election; provided, that such members first so elected shall be divided into two equal classes—each class consisting of one member from each district—and that the first class shall go out of office at the expiration of two years from the commencement of their term of office; and at each general biennial election, after such gubernatorial election, one member of such Board shall be elected from each Congressional District, so that one half thereof shall be elected biennially. The Superintendent of Public Instruction shall be ex officio a member of such Board, and President thereof.

SEC. 8. The State Board of Education shall recommend a series of text-books for adoption by the local Boards of Education, or by the Boards of Supervisors, and County Superintendents of the several counties where such local Boards do not exist, but such recommendation shall not be compulsory. After the adoption of a series of text-books by said Boards, or any of them, such books must be continued in use for not less than four years. The State Board of Education shall also have control of the examination of teachers and the granting of certificates. They shall possess such further powers and perform such further duties as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 9. No public money shall ever be appropriated for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, or any school not under the exclusive control of the officers of the public schools.

SEC. 10. The University of California shall constitute a public trust, and its organization and government shall be perpetually continued in their existing form and character, subject only to such legislative control as may be necessary to insure compliance with the terms of its endowments, and of the several Acts of the Legislature of this State, and of the Congress of the United States, donating lands or money for its support. It shall be entirely independent of all political or sectarian influences, and kept free therefrom in the appointment of its Regents, and in the administration of its affairs.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I was speaking of the report of the Committee on Education. Public education forms the basis of self-government and constitutes the very corner stone of republican institutions. Ignorance is the parent of vice, and vice soon hardens into crime. Education is the parent of intelligence and virtue. Crime has its temples in the penitentiaries which bristle over the land. Education has its temples in the school houses which rear their stately domes within the cities, or spread their simple structures, white and glowing in the sunlight, throughout the towns and villages, over the hillsides and amid the valleys of this broad domain. As the school houses multiply the penitentiaries decrease. In the earlier Constitutions of the original States the subject of education was merely mentioned. It was declared in the form of a principle, but did not concentrate into any form of legislative enactment. It was merely the broad declaration of a high principle, but as the time advanced and the condition of the people improved, and the nation augmented, this subject began to increase in consequence, and center into the new Constitutions as they were from time to time adopted, in the form of section after section, until at last, it attained to the dignity of a complete article in every Constitution. In all of the Constitutions of the States, it is a noticeable fact, that the declaration of abstract principles upon which they are founded is confined to an original article entitled a "Declaration of Rights," and in regard to the articles upon education that figure through the several Constitutions of the States there is this marked difference, that they are always premised by an original section declaratory of the importance and magnitude of the service, and declaratory of the principle which it involves. This is entirely exceptional in all the other departments of constitutional enactment.

Your committee, sir, although they were late in presenting their report, gave the subject their most patient investigation. They sat night after night in close deliberation, characterized by a harmony of feeling and a propriety of action, until they had discussed the whole question, and examined it in all its bearings, with a thoroughness which entitles the report, that they have presented, to the fair and full consideration of this committee. In consideration of that fact they present it now, and ask that it may be adopted by its several sections.

MR. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the section and insert the following: 'SECTION 1. The Legislature shall provide a thorough and efficient system of free schools, whereby all the children of this State may receive a good common school education.'"

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: The section reported by the committee is taken from the Constitutions of Arkansas and Missouri, in part, and from the Constitution of this State. The first portion, "A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence being essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people," is contained in the same words in the Constitutions of Arkansas and Missouri. The following words: "The Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement," are in the Constitution of this State, section two, of article nine. As this is but a declaration of principle, and as it has received the sanction of long time in old and settled communities in part, and in part in this, I cannot see any necessity of or any propriety in effecting a change. The first part was introduced because it was so intrinsically proper in itself, and so truthful an enunciation of the great principle involved. It is general in its character, and does not seem to be a topic of amendment.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I am decidedly in favor of the amendment. It seems to me that rhetoric has somewhat gone by. Now, of course, this is a very beautiful declaration, but it is a question that is not disputable. The amendment offered goes right to the point, and directs what should be done, without the glittering generality. We have too much of that already in the present Constitution. It might have been proper and appropriate in the bill of rights of the various States, when the matter was an open question whether common schools were desirable or not, but that day has long since gone by. It strikes me that the amendment is much better, from the fact that it goes directly to the proposition and embodies everything, while the one offered by the committee is simply a glimmering generality. It imposes no obligation upon the State.

MR. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman: I have no objection to the first. It contains a self-evident proposition, which no gentleman on the floor would deny for one moment. The amendment which I send up I have taken from the Illinois Constitution. It is brief, concise, and right to the point.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Fresno.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: Section five of the report of the committee covers the ground of this amendment, and it seems to me in a more complete manner than the amendment does. I will read that section:

"SEC. 5. The Legislature shall provide for a system of common schools by which a free school shall be kept up and supported in each district at least six months in every year, after the first year, in which a school has been established; and any school district neglecting to keep up and support such a school, shall be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public fund during such neglect."

Now why not adopt the first section as proposed, and when we get to that leave it in its proper place in the report following after the provisions that precede it. There is a special object in putting that there in that shape, to say that they shall be obliged to keep up a school for six months. I see no reason for taking a part of that and putting it in here. It is not as complete as it should be, but if we want it let us put in the proper place.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: Section five, as just read, embodies the whole of the idea proposed in the amendment, and that idea is very properly asserted in that section. Now, it is very proper that where the declaration is made that the Legislature shall provide for a system of common schools, it shall be followed by an enactment that a school shall be kept up and supported in each district. Therefore there is a consistency in having it in that fifth section. It is contained in the present Constitution, in part, and has, in addition, the latter part now presented by the committee. I hope, therefore, that the section, as presented by the committee, will be adopted. It is certainly a proper declaration of the truth, which is not a glittering generality, because it is contained in substance, in one form or another, in almost all the modern Constitutions that have been adopted. Either that or something substantially similar is inserted in each one of them, and I notice that it is a prominent characteristic of articles on education.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: The amendment offered is to strike out this section and insert. Now, sir, I am in favor of the first part of the motion, the striking out, and opposed to inserting. Still, at the same time, I am in favor of the substance of the proposed amendment. But I believe this is the wrong place to insert it. The idea contained in that amendment is contained substantially in section five; and, sir, since it is apparent that we must adopt the provision contained in section two, and very likely in section three, if it is the judgment of this Convention that we continue the office of County School Superintendent; and probably we will want to insert something in the place of section four, but when we get down to section five then the amendment proposed now to section one would be in order. But, sir, as for the section as it stands at present, I am opposed to it, simply because there is nothing in it. If we were making a Constitution entirely pertaining to the subject of education it would be very well, perhaps, to have a preamble to it: and that is all we find here in so-called section one—simply a preamble to a proposed Constitution pertaining to education. I hope the committee will strike out section one and proceed to section two, and keep the amendment until we come to section five, where it properly belongs.

MR. HOLMES. These other sections may not be adopted. I am opposed to sections two and three, and I do not know but what I am opposed to most of section four.

MR. FILCHER. The gentleman was the author of that amendment, I believe.

MR. HOLMES. I took it from the Illinois Constitution. I think if you would adopt the Illinois Constitution, section by section, you would have a very good one.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I do not know whether I understand the intention of this present move or not. I think it represents a strong sentiment in this State. There are two marked ideas of public education, and I speak with some freedom upon this subject, because I was at one time identified with it. There are two ideas. One idea is that no portion of the public funds of this State should be appropriated to the education of the people of the State beyond a certain point, that certain point being an education in what is usually termed the common English branches. Now, sir, that is the view of one portion of the people of the State, and I believe a very large portion. There is another class of people in this State who believe that there is little danger of educating the people of the State too much, and that the education of a few to a high grade at the expense of the State finally proves a benefit to the State, far exceeding the expense of that much education. Now, sir, I believe that each class hold their views honestly. The one say that no funds shall be taken from the public treasury to educate a boy or girl beyond the common English branches; the other says that it is better to educate beyond that limit. Now, sir, if I understand the proposition, the question must now come directly before this Convention. The section as here proposed by the committee certainly does involve the expenditure of public funds for encouraging education not limited to reading, writing, spelling, arithmetic, grammar, and geography, but this to encouraging the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement. The section as presented by the committee takes the position of the latter class, while the amendment represents the sentiment that education at public expense should be limited to the common English branches. This amendment proposes the education merely of children. For my own part, I believe that if there is in the State of California one boy or one girl of whatever age, a young man or a young woman who is disposed to devote his or her time to the acquisition of knowledge, that it is for the interest of this State to furnish the instruction. I believe it is for the interest of the State, and if it is for the interest of the State we should not impair the power of the State to act for its own interest.

I believe, sir, that if we could have in this State a few thousand educated men, thoroughly educated, that the benefit will reach every man, woman and child in the State. But, sir, if the State can only provide for the education of its children to a very limited degree, then from that point on, must education be limited to the children of the rich or those who have the money to pay for their education. I am not in favor of it. I believe that even the Agricultural College of this State has been a great benefit to it. I believe that a mining college, if it could be established, would be a great benefit. And while, by a mining college, there may be taken out of the treasury of the State a few thousand dollars a year, I believe that the amount taken out would be returned to the State treasury ten fold—yea, even a hundred fold, year after year. While we build up great material resources of this State, let us at the same time teach the head and heart how to use them, and enlarge them to the highest degree; how to make a proper use of them. What is the highest end in man? It is an intellectual end, and it is intellectuality that makes the man great, and that makes the State great; and the State can afford to pay something for it. Let us understand it right here. I think the gentleman who brought forward this provision will not take issue with me on this, that this is the point at which we are to determine whether the State is to have a right to encourage intellectual improvement, or whether the State, in its appropriation of public funds, is to be limited to a common school system. For my own part I am in favor of leaving this provision in, so that whenever the people of this State shall feel like encouraging a higher intellectual development, they shall have the power to do so. But if, at any future time in the history of the State, the people wish to say that the expenditure should be limited to the common school branches, then, sir, the State should have the power to so limit it. But, I believe that we should not go farther than to provide that the State may say so and so, and leave the people to determine in their legislative body how far they will go in these matters. Do not let us say that they shall spend money for these purposes, but leave the door open for the great intellectual march of progress in this State.

REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I hope Mr. Holmes' amendment will prevail, because it is clearly to the point. We are now planning for a system of common school education, and if we want another system we must add it on afterward. Let us first attend to the wholesale of this arrangement. Let us first secure a common school education to every child, for if these extravagances in the common schools are allowed, which are creeping in, they will weigh down the whole system. We know that there are thousands and thousands of children to-day that cannot go to the common school. The schools have only been kept open for four months in many places, and the teachers are paid miserably. Let us go forward first and secure the education of all the children in the State; of the poor children and of the rich children, just as they come to the common schools, and let us secure that before we go one single step farther; then let us attend to these others. When our State becomes rich, let us alter our Constitution if we choose, and go on, but let us first secure to the children of the State an education, which they are not getting now. I say we must go forward and begin at the bottom, and keep the schools open eight months in the year. If the people of the State wish to go farther, it is time enough to talk about it when they express themselves. I trust that Mr. Holmes' amendment will be adopted instead of the first section.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: At the session of the Legislature of eighteen hundred and seventy-one-seventy-two, I had the honor of presenting a bill providing for a system of common schools for this State. At that time it met with a great opposition from different parts of the State. It was, after a continued struggle for nearly the whole term, passed by the Legislature, but, from outside pressure, the Governor was induced to pocket the bill. At the next session, Mr. Tuttle, of Sonoma, introduced a similar bill, and it passed and became a law. The idea of that bill—the original bill and the bill Mr. Tuttle subsequently introduced—was to give to each child of the State an equal opportunity of learning the common branches of education: that there should be equality from one end of the State to the other in the facilities to acquire education; that the money appropriated by that bill should be of equal benefit to all; and to that extent, and no farther, it was contemplated in the passage of that bill; but through the immense amount of money that was required in order to accomplish that purpose, step by step changes have been made to the system proposed there until there is probably as much abuse connected with the system as in any other expenditure of State money. The report, as offered here in this first section, deals too much with generalities, and for one, I am in favor of the amendment offered by Colonel Holmes.

In eighteen hundred and fifty-four, I think it was, the money that was originally in the treasury—money that was received from the interest on the school sections—was placed in a general State fund. The interest upon the sale of these lands have educated the children of all the outer counties of this State. It was placed in a common fund in the State treasury, thereby defeating the source of revenue that these counties should have had, and would have had up to the present time. San Francisco now draws forty thousand dollars a year, and if she drew what she was entitled to, she would draw the interest upon two sections, which would amount to ninety-six dollars a year. This land was not donated in bulk to the State; it was only donated as two sections—the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections. It was intended that this interest should be a perpetual fund to that township. After this interest was placed in a general fund, from which all the counties drew, then the outside counties were compelled to support their schools by direct taxation. Our schools were not properly supported. In many of the small districts we have no schools, and for that reason the public demand, after this fund, that belonged to the children of the different counties, had been taken from them and placed in a general fund, was that the balance necessary to support a system of common schools should be gathered from the whole people of the State, upon the property of the State; but in carrying out that idea we had but one idea in view, and that was to provide a thorough system of common school education. And I believe that is as far as the State should go. I believe we should place that in the Constitution; and whatever more any community or any child desires, they should either acquire at the expense of their friends or their own energy. After a young man has acquired a common school education he will find assistance that will help him on, and he will make a man of himself. He has obtained a common school education. There should be no royal road to education for one half of the children of the State, and none for the other. That child who is in earnest, though not able to buy his books and a suit of clothes, may stand at the head of the line, and he has a right to an equal common school education. So far as any gentleman is willing to go to advance education, I will go; but not a dollar will I allow to any school in this State that each and every child in this State has not got access to. Therefore I hope that the amendment will be adopted. It goes to the point, without any generalities, without any Fourth of July speeches, which are provided in section one.

REMARKS OF MR. WICKES.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the retention of section one of the report of the committee. I do not care whether it is called a preamble or not. I take a Constitution to be a philosophic and historic as well as a legal instrument. Judge Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Law, says that a Constitution contains the principles upon which the government is founded. We have here in this first section the principles, in a modified form, that underlie a system of general education. Here, now, is a republican form of government in which the people are sovereign. This Government must have the means of perpetuating itself, therefore the people must be educated. Again, we must have good rulers, and good legislators to make the laws. These rulers and these statesmen must come up from the ranks of the people; hence the people must be liberally educated. Again, the people must understand the importance of the laws that are made; hence the people must be liberally educated. This section expresses that idea: "A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence being essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people, the Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement." The better and more liberally the people are educated, the more inventions and discoveries will be made. Again, to raise great men you must raise the mass of the people. All must rise together. Another reason why I am in favor of a liberal education, ranging from the primary to the university grade, is that it breaks down aristocratic caste; for the man who has a liberal education, if he has no money, if he has no wealth, he can stand in the presence of his fellow-men with the stamp of divinity upon his brow, and shape the laws of the people—shape our republican institutions by his intelligence and speech.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

MR. MURPHY in the chair.

THE CHAIR. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Education, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention then took the usual recess, until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., Mr. Murphy in the chair.

Roll called, and a quorum present.

MR. FILCHER presented the following petition, signed by a large number of citizens of Placer County, asking the exemption of certain property from taxation:

To the Honorable J. P. Hoge, President, and to members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: Your petitioners, citizens of the State of California, and residents of Rocklin, Placer County, most respectfully request your honorable body to exempt from taxation all property used exclusively for charitable, educational, and church purposes.

Laid on the table, to be considered with the article on revenue and taxation.

EDUCATION.

MR. WHITE. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. Murphy in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Education.

MR. HERRINGTON. I move to amend so as to take up also the minority report.

MR. HEISKELL. I call for a division of the question.

THE CHAIR. The first question is on the motion of the gentleman from Santa Cruz, Mr. White.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Fresno, Mr. Holmes.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. Holmes.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the amendment offered by Mr. Holmes by adding at the end thereof the following viz.: 'By which system one such school shall be kept up and supported in each school district for at least six months in every year, after the first year in which a school has been established.'"

MR. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman: I accept that amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment as amended.

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the Committee: If we expect to transact any business it will be our imperative duty to bring ourselves down to every question, and to the closest consideration of it, and to consider it in its bearing in connection with the system that is proposed to be inaugurated here for the future control and management of the schools of this State. Now, I do not understand that it is the province of this committee—while I admit that it can do so—to resolve itself into a committee on revision and adjustment, just simply because it can tear to tatters the report of a committee. While I admit that it is perfectly proper and right to strike out this section, I see no reason for inserting what is already reported here by the committee. Section five reads—and I think in better language than the amendment that is proposed—as follows:

"The Legislature shall provide for a system of common schools by which a free school shall be kept up and supported in each district at least six months in every year, after the first year, in which a school has been established; and every school district neglecting to keep up and support such a school, shall be deprived of this proportion of the interest of the public fund during such neglect."

Can you beat that? If you cannot improve upon the expressions made use of by the committee's report, why haggle the report to pieces just because you can? Now, I am opposed to the first section, and want it stricken out, of course, because it is meaningless. But because this provision is in section five, is no reason for striking out this section and putting it in here. Now, the latter portion of section five can be stricken out, and then you have this amendment, substantially. How much dignity will it add to the honor of any gentleman to have put in an amendment here which already stands in the report of the committee? The only thing that you can do is to strike out section one and put section five in its place, if that is thought advisable. But after this committee have acted upon it, if it is not in its proper place, the Committee on Revision and Adjustment can arrange it. Why not let the committee's report stand as it is in the fifth section, and strike out section one? I, as one of the committee, made a minority report, and was not in favor of the majority report. I do not stand here to advocate that majority report, but I do not care to see gentlemen simply putting in amendments changing the mere words of the committee as reported here, for the distinguished honor of having stricken out a section of the majority report, and substituting something else in its place. I do not think it is fair; I do not think it is right; and I do not think it is a just way of dealing with the report of the committee.

MR. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman: If there is any gentleman in this house who introduces superfluous amendments, it is the gentleman from Santa Clara.

MR. HERRINGTON. Do I ever offer an amendment taken out of one part of the report and put it into another?

MR. HOLMES. Yes.

MR. HERRINGTON. I do not think you can find one. I move to strike out the section.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question will come on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Fresno.

REMARKS OF MR. MORSE.

MR. MORSE. Mr. Chairman: I am rather surprised to hear the objections made to section one of this report. I do not see what objection any one can have. It is certainly a very simple proposition, and one that I can tell the members of the Convention something about. In eighteen hundred and sixty-five when the first Constitutional Convention after Missouri became a free State met, I lived in Missouri. We had a Constitutional Convention, and the first clause in the educational Constitution was very much like this. A similar principle was enunciated in it at least, and I have been surprised since I have come here to find how generally that same idea was adopted throughout the Southern States where free public schools were not known, and the people were not generally in favor of free schools. We started out in Missouri with the idea of free education, and the idea has been copied throughout the Southern States. Section one of the article on education is in other Constitutions almost in the same language that is embodied in this. There is no objection to it, although I admit that it is not essential. The idea is a pretty good one. This amendment only shows that if the multiplication table was introduced here, there would be several amendments to it. There are some in the Southern States, and probably some in this State, who were not in favor of free public schools for all the people in this State. If the question is asked why the State furnishes free education? the answer is here in this section: "A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence being essential to the preservation to the rights and liberties of the people; the Legislature shall encourage by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement." That is the basis upon which you found the whole thing. It seems to me that the idea is a pretty good one. It certainly does no harm, and there is nothing in the world that a man can say against it, only that it is not essential. There is nothing in the world against it, and I hope it will not be stricken out.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: I am of the same opinion as Dr. Morse, and I am of the opinion that it means something, too. It provides that it shall be the duty—that the Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, a promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement. This makes it the duty of the Legislature to forward this matter in every way that the Legislature may have the power to do. I do not see any reason why the committee's report should not be adopted. It seems to me that it is a good one, and especially that first section. It is a good section, and in the right place.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Fresno, Mr. Holmes, as amended by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine.

On a division, the vote stood 27 ayes to 47 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting. Gentlemen will please vote.

The amendment was rejected, on a division, by a vote of 34 ayes to 53 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion to strike out section one.

The motion was lost.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I send up a substitute for section one.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SECTION 1. The Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, moral, and agricultural improvement."

REMARKS OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I do not see any objection to the section, except that it ought to be consistent. In other words, we start out with certain premises, and the conclusion ought to follow from those premises if inserted in the Constitution; because, as a matter of course, this Constitution will be closely examined, and if the conclusion does not follow the premises it will be subject to critical animadversion. In my amendment I have preserved the conclusion at which the committee have arrived. The premises are these: that a general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence is essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people. A conclusion ought to follow from that, but the conclusion which the committee have drawn is this, that "the Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral and agricultural improvement." Well, what are the premises? A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence. Well, now, how, from the simple premises of a general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence do we reach the conclusion that the Legislature shall encourage agricultural improvements? I do not see that it follows at all. I am in favor of the conclusion. The only objection is that the conclusion does not follow from the premises with which the committee start out. I leave out the word "scientific," as it is included in the word "intellectual," which leave it simply so that the Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, moral, and agricultural improvement. It is arriving at the same result that the committee arrives at, and that it may not be subject to any critical animadversion, it would be safe to adopt the conclusion at which the committee have arrived without stating the premises. It is said that the premises are taken from certain Constitutions; but they have not stated that they have the same conclusions in them at which the committee have arrived. I think the Chairman of the committee will see that it does not follow at all that because a general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence is essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people, that we should encourage agricultural improvement. It is not a legitimate conclusion, and there is no use of putting in a bad argument here in this Constitution. If we start out with certain premises to reach a conclusion, that conclusion ought to follow from the premises, or the conclusion is wrong.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I think the conclusion is entirely warranted by the premises. The section is introduced in an article headed "Education." It has sole reference to the subject of education. In the present Constitution, under the head of education, section two starts out with: "The Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, a promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement." It is under the head of education. It belongs to that topic. Then the section goes on further and says: "The proceeds of all land that may be granted by the United States to this State, for the support of schools, which may be sold or disposed of, and the five hundred thousand acres of land granted to the new States, under an Act of Congress distributing the proceeds of the public lands among the several States of the Union, approved A. D. one thousand eight hundred and forty-one, and all estates of deceased persons who may have died without leaving a will, or heir, and also such per cent. as may be granted by Congress on the sale of lands in this State, shall be and remain a perpetual fund, the interest of which, together with all the rents of the unsold lands, and such other means as the Legislature may provide, shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of common schools throughout the State." Now, that is all in the same section which declares as its initial paragraph that the Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement. I do not know that the children of this generation are wiser than the children of the past. I do not know why the present Constitution, in this regard, should not be maintained, and I hope that the Convention will stand by this declaration of principles, which has the sanction of all these years during which we have lived here together, and the sanction of various other Constitutions besides, many of them of the most recent date.

REMARKS OF MR. LAMPSON.

MR. LAMPSON. Mr. Chairman: I have but one word to say in reference to this section. It seems strange to me that gentlemen should object to saying that "a general diffusion of knowledge being essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people." I wish, myself, I could see it doubly stated. The idea of striking out this declaration, or objecting to it, is strange to me. If I was to strike out either one of the lines, I would strike out the last two and leave that standing as a declaration to the people of America. It reads clear and distinct, and goes on from where I stopped: "The Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement." All four of these come in strictly under the true principle of education. The gentleman, in his amendment, leaves out one of them, the scientific. I see no reason for striking out a single word from that section one. It stands exactly as the words that are spoken by every parent, at his fireside, to his child. I think that this Convention could find fault, perhaps, with other sections of this article, but on that section I see no reason for discussion. It is the true principle, that comes from the heart of every parent, that the diffusion of knowledge and intelligence is essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people. The Legislature will do what they see fit to do. I do not think that a single word, even the word "scientific," ought to be stricken out. The Legislature will provide in reference to it.

MR. JOHNSON. My substitute contains the same conclusion as the section.

MR. LAMPSON. The first part of the section stands there as a declaration of principle in the Constitution. I think we should leave it as it is.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: It seem to me, sir, that there is a great deal of extraordinary criticism of this first section of the report. Now, sir, I notice that this report, compared with the original matter, is the shortest report that has been made by any committee of this Convention. It is not much longer than the provision in the present Constitution, and it may be said that other reports are four, or five, or ten times as long. I do not see any objection to that first section. Gentlemen say that it is composed of glittering generalities. There are only four lines in it. Two are taken from the old Constitution, and the first two are merely a declaration. We have got our Constitution nearly half filled up with declarations of that kind. It does not merit the criticism of gentlemen here. I do not see what objection there can be to it. It simply asserts a principle, and we ought to allow that much space to a declaration of principle in regard to education, considering the size of the balance of this Constitution that we are making. It seems to me that the section should stand as it is. I do not see why gentlemen are so nervous about saying anything in favor of education.

MR. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman: I believe we had better save time. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Tully, Gorman, White, and Campbell.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Johnson.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the word 'and,' before the word 'agricultural,' and insert after the word 'agricultural,' the words 'and mining.'"

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I think the word "agricultural" there is unnecessary, and I think it is out of place. If it is necessary that we should assert here that the Legislature shall provide a system of agricultural improvement, a kind of public system, can any good reason be shown why the duties of the Legislature, in securing improvement, should be confined expressly to agriculture? I recognize that agriculture, if not now, is fast becoming the great staple interest of this State, and yet, while that is true, it is nevertheless a fact that mining is to-day a large industry; and if it is wise that we should provide, in the fundamental laws of the State, that the Legislature shall provide a system of agricultural improvement, I submit it is also wise that we should direct the Legislature to do something to foster and encourage mining, by providing a system of mining improvement. However, Mr. Chairman, since it seems to be the disposition of this committee to adopt that section as it is, I am in favor of the amendment, so as to at least complete the section.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Is not that covered by the word "scientific?"

MR. FILCHER. I, for one, after ten years hard experience, and after being raised on a farm to the age of maturity, do not believe a thing in theoretical agriculture. I do believe that brains and intelligence applied to the soil will have its effect; but, sir, give to the child, or to the agriculturist, some knowledge of chemistry and some knowledge of general scientific matters, and he is capable of becoming an agriculturist of an enlightened character. I do not believe that it is possible in any University, or in any institution established purely on theory, to make an agriculturist. It is just as necessary that a man should go into the field, and learn by experience, as it is for a lawyer to go into Court and have some practical experience in order to conduct, successfully, an important case.

MR. STEELE. Do you not think that a knowledge of geology, chemistry, etc., assists him?

MR. FILCHER. I say that it does. Give a man a knowledge of those subjects that pertain to the soil and I say it assists him in his agricultural pursuits; but theory alone will not make a successful agriculturist. These things are taught in all the higher educational institutions. But we have an institution especially for teaching agriculture. I do not wish to place myself here in opposition to continuing it, but I say if it is necessary, and if good results would be obtained from a theoretical establishment for the purpose of promoting agricultural improvement, then I submit, will not the same argument hold good in regard to mining? There is certainly, from a scientific standpoint, more science required there than in the development of our agricultural resources. Every department of science, particularly engineering, comes in play in the development of our mines, and men must necessarily be educated and have some knowledge of mechanics and the science of engineering, before they can make a success at all in mining. When mountains are to be moved and immense tunnels are to be run, I say it requires science. I would be the last man in the world to raise my voice against agriculture. But, sir, while one is great the other is very important; and I submit, again, that if it is necessary to add here the term agriculture, in reference to the branches permitted, to our educational institutions, that it is necessarily a matter of justice that we should add that of mining, and not discriminate against at least the second great industry of the commonwealth.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: When the Constitution under which we are now living was adopted, these people had themselves come hither from the various quarters of the land to constitute a new people in a new region of the earth. At that time mining was almost the exclusive occupation of the people. It was the object of the visit here and the main industry, and yet, in the face of that, our predecessors passed a Constitution in which they omitted that word. Why? Because they fully embraced it within another word, used here in this section, "scientific." In the University there is a college for mining, but it is a part of the scientific department of the University. It comes directly under that head, and therefore the word would be superfluous here. Not so with agriculture. It is one of the leading features of the Government, one of the leading pursuits of the people, and that which is the basis of all patriotism in the State.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the amendment by inserting, before the word 'and,' the word 'mechanical.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. KEYES. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the word 'of,' in line three, and insert 'education.'"

MR. LINDOW. Mr. Chairman: I do not see anything wrong in this first section whatever. I hope that all amendments will be voted down.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: The conclusion there follows the premises. The amendment leaves out these terms, because you might as well say that the Chinese must go, as to say that agricultural improvement should be fostered because a general diffusion of knowledge is desirable. The framers of the old Constitution did not have any such thing in it. This last amendment is consistent. The conclusion there follows legitimately, and if it is intended to insist upon this phraseology, I shall support the last amendment.

MR. KEYES. Mr. Chairman: It appears to me that that is just what we want. It is a question of education. It simply provides in that section that the Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of education.

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out in line four the words 'scientific, moral, and agricultural.'"

MR. WALKER, of Tuolumne. Mr. Chairman: That simply makes it read: "A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence being essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people, the Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual improvement." It seems to me that perfects it. Scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement is simply intellectual improvement. It then meets the premises.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tuolumne, Mr. Walker.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sutter, Mr. Keyes.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the words 'the promotion of,' in line three."

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. I move as an amendment to strike out one of the f's in "diffusion."

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: There is some inconsistency in this expression. There is no doubt of it. I recognized it when the committee were enacting it.

MR. REYNOLDS. I would simply ask the gentleman if he will not accept an amendment that I will propose. I think he will accept it. I see that the printer has introduced an extra space in the first line, and I would like to have it struck out.

THE CHAIRMAN. It is out of order.

MR. HERRINGTON. Yes; I accept the amendment. [Laughter.] Now, I ask gentlemen to explain to me—any of these gentlemen who are in favor of retaining this section just as it is—what the encouragement of promotion means. That is what I am trying to arrive at. Now it will read: "The Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement." It will then read with good sense.

MR. WINANS. It means precisely what it says, and the same thing is said in half a dozen Constitutions of this Union. You can discountenance the promotion of a thing, or discourage it.

MR. HERRINGTON. The Legislature is not telling somebody else to promote it. It is doing the thing directly. In fact it is promoting it, and not encouraging any one else to promote it. I submit that the words ought to be stricken out, and leave the sentence with some good sound sense.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I move to amend by substituting for the section the language of the present Constitution: "The Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement."

MR. WINANS. That has been voted down once. This has degenerated into a mere verbal debate.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me this is a struggle about a very unimportant matter. It is very evident that the gentleman from Santa Clara is not an officer in the militia of this State, otherwise he would realize what would be meant by the Legislature encouraging the promotion of a thing. It might encourage his promotion to some higher position. It is not supposed that the Legislature is going to take upon itself the duty of educating the people of the State, but it is to be done by a system throughout the counties, and they are to encourage its promotion by that means. By the means to be provided by the Legislature they are to encourage the promotion of these particular branches of education, as set down in the report of this committee. Now, sir, I hope it will stand as it is. It is folly to strike out those words. It is good as it stands, and I hope it will be allowed to remain.

MR. RINGGOLD. Mr. Chairman: It is evident that the schoolmaster is not at home to-day, and I am afraid we are loading down this Constitution: therefore, I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Freud, Wyatt, and Townsend.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Johnson.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no further amendments to section one, the Secretary will read section two.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 2. A Superintendent of Public Instruction shall, at the first gubernatorial election after the adoption of this Constitution, and every four years thereafter, be elected by the qualified voters of this State. He shall receive a salary equal to that of the Secretary of State, and shall enter upon the duties of his office on the first Monday of January next after his election.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I have a substitute for that section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section two, by substituting the following: 'A State Board of Education, consisting of one member from each Congressional District shall be elected by the qualified voters of the district at the first gubernatorial election after the adoption of this Constitution, who shall hold their offices for a term of four years, and enter upon the duties thereof on the first Monday of January next after their election. The Secretary of State shall be ex officio a member of such Board and President thereof. Said Board shall perform all the duties now performed by County Superintendents, and have full control and superintendence of the public school system of the State, under such regulation as shall be provided by legislative enactment.'"

REMARKS OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I offer this amendment in the interest of economy. The article provides here, in another section, for the election of two trustees, or members of this Board from each Congressional District. We will probably after eighteen hundred and eighty have two more Congressional Districts. We are sure to have one, and, perhaps, two. This would make a very unwieldly Board, and a very great expense. The compensation is not mentioned here, but it is supposed that they can be got to serve for much less than two thousand dollars. We now have a Superintendent in each county, and it is believed that the Secretary of State could do all that is necessary with these members from the other districts; and the County Superintendents are a great expense and very little use in the counties as they are now conducted. These members could each see to his own Congressional District. They could have meetings of the Board here and perform all the duties necessary, and certainly with great economy to the State. It would do away with the Superintendent. I am not tenacious about it at all, but I wish to draw the attention of the Convention to the extravagance of the present proposition; and I hope if this is not accepted, that some gentleman will propose a way by which this can be conducted with less expense than the cumbersome system proposed in this article. I trust, therefore, that this amendment, or some other similar one, will be adopted. I introduce it at this time because it proposes to do away with the State Superintendent, and give the necessary duties to the Secretary of State, who is here all the time. Therefore I advocate its adoption.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: That amendment would be properly relevant, if relevant at all, to sections three and seven. It is not relevant to the present section at all. It strikes me that it is out of order, but if it is in order there is this objection to it—that the school system needs a single executive head in every State. In the Constitutions of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Illinois, Michigan, Mississippi, Maine, North Carolina, Oregon, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin, there is express provision made for the election of such an officer. He is made a constitutional officer, and I believe in every other of the States there exists, by force of law, under legislative enactment, a Superintendent of Common Schools. If you only have a Board of Education—a State Board—they will lack that responsibility which comes from unity, and they will not be able to discharge executive duties which pertain to an officer of this kind. There may be objections made to the expense of such an officer, in consequence of recent developments and troubles, but that is wise legislation which disregards temporary and ephemeral considerations and looks at the subject-matter in its true light. I do not believe that an educational system which abolishes its head would work well. Those States whose names I have read have adopted it as a part of their constitutional system, and the other States have provided for such an officer by legislation. I believe it to be indispensable to a proper administration of the affairs of the educational department. Article two of the Political Code prescribes the duties of the State Superintendent, which require a large portion of the time of such an officer. I hope gentlemen will pause and reflect before they destroy this system.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I hope that this will not be entertained, at this time at least. It is not germane to this section; and, besides, it provides for an impossibility, that this Board shall perform all the duties that are now performed by the County Superintendents. Why, sir, what do these County Superintendents have to do at present? I will just read over their duties, as enumerated in section one thousand five hundred and forty-three, of article three, of the Political Code, under the title "Education:"

"It is the duty of the County Superintendent of each county:

"1. To apportion the school moneys of each school district quarterly;

"2. On the order of the Board of Trustees, or Board of Education, to draw his warrant upon the County Treasurer against the school fund of any city, town, or district; he must draw his warrants in the order in which they are ordered by the proper authority; each warrant must specify the purpose for which the money is required, and must be paid in the order in which it is drawn, but no warrant must be drawn unless there is sufficient money in the fund to pay it;

"3. To keep open to the inspection of the public a register of warrants, showing the fund upon which the warrants have been drawn, the number thereof, in whose favor, and for what service drawn, and also a receipt from the person to whom the warrant was delivered;

"4. To visit each school in his county at least once in each year, and for every school not visited the Board of Supervisors must, on proof thereof, deduct ten dollars from the County Superintendent's salary;

"5. To preside over teachers' institutes held in his county, and to secure the attendance thereat of lecturers competent to instruct in the art of teaching, to enforce the course of study, the use of the text-books, and the rules and regulations for the examination of teachers prescribed by the proper authority;

"6. To issue temporary certificates, valid until the next regular meeting of the County Board of Examination, to persons holding certificates of like grade granted in other counties;

"7. To certify to the State Board of Examination the names of persons examined before County Boards of Examination;

"8. To distribute all laws, reports, circulars, instructions, and blanks, which he may receive for the use of school officers;

"9. To keep in his office the reports of the Superintendent of Public Instruction and a file of the educational journal;

"10. To keep a record of his official acts, and of the proceedings of the County Board of Examination, including a record of the standing in each study of all applicants examined;

"11. To keep in his office such works on school architecture and education as may be prescribed by the State Board of Education, and pay for them out of the unapportioned County School Fund;

"12. To (except in incorporated cities and towns) pass upon, and approve, and reject plans for school houses;

"13. To appoint Trustees to fill all vacancies created by failure to elect, or otherwise, to hold till the next annual election;

"14. To make reports when directed by the Superintendent of Public Instruction, showing such matters relating to the public schools in his county as may be required of him;

"15. In all counties containing twenty thousand inhabitants, or upwards, to devote his whole time to the supervision of the schools in his county;

"16. To carefully preserve all reports of school officers and teachers, and, at the close of his official term, deliver to his successor all records, books, documents, and papers belonging to the office, taking a receipt for the same, which shall be filed in the office of the County Clerk."

Those are the duties of County Superintendents. I beg to ask, how can four gentlemen perform these duties in the fifty-two counties of this State, in addition to those which are already the duty of the State Board of Education and the State Superintendent of Public Instruction? The idea is preposterous. It cannot be done.

REMARKS OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not be adopted. The office of Superintendent of Schools is absolutely necessary, not merely because it is necessary to have a head of the school department of the State, but because there are duties to be performed by that officer which cannot be performed by any Board of Education. You cannot send your Board of Education around the State certainly—unless you do it at a very large expense, and make the office a high salaried one—to perform the duties which are now performed by the County Superintendents. You cannot add the duties of the State Superintendent to the office of the Secretary of State, because if you do you must send the Secretary of State traveling through the State at various seasons of the year when his business requires his attendance here at the Capital. Now, among the duties prescribed to the State Superintendent of Public Instruction is that of visiting the schools of the different counties and inquiring into their condition. You cannot send the Secretary of State traveling all over the State, visiting schools and inquiring into their condition. Moreover, he is required by law to visit the different orphan asylums to which appropriations are made and examine into the course of instruction there. These are duties which cannot be turned over to the Secretary of State at all. You must have a head to your school department. It is a false economy. It will not do to fritter away the powers of this officer, and distribute them here and there at random. When the question of a Board of Education comes up in section seven, it will be time enough to discuss whether it is desirable to elect one or not, but so far as the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction is concerned, it appears to me to be absolutely necessary for the proper management of the school department. I hope this amendment will not be carried.

REMARKS OF MR. SCHELL.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I believe when the subject of calling a Constitutional Convention was first being discussed throughout this State by the press, that they pretty clearly indicated what amendments were desired to be made in the reconstruction of the organic law of this State. I have paid particular attention to the discussion that took place in relation to the matter, and I believe, in fact I am satisfied, that during the entire period of time, up to the time when this Convention assembled, no discussion ever took place in reference to a change of any portion of our school system. If there were any demands of that kind I did not happen to see or hear them. I do not believe that the people of this State desire or would indorse any radical change in the educational system of this State, and particularly in this regard. The system has worked well, and I believe is perfectly satisfactory to the people of this State. Now, sir, unless the people demand this change, why should we attempt to make any change in regard to the matter. I hope that the amendment will be voted down.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I withdraw my amendment for the present. It has had the effect I intended, of calling the attention of the Convention to the immense expense of the proposed system.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I send an amendment to the desk.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section two of the article on education, by striking out all after the word 'salary,' in the fourth line, down to the word 'and,' in the same line, and inserting the following: 'of two thousand four hundred dollars per annum; and no public money shall be appropriated to pay for the services of any Deputy Superintendent or Clerk of the State Superintendent.'"

REMARKS OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: It strikes me that we ought to fix the salary of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction. That will secure the services of a good school teacher. Of course we cannot get along without a Superintendent of Schools, but this Superintendent of Public Instruction, traveling over the State, I do not believe is of any service to the State; I believe that he ought to remain at the Capital. This having offices multiplied on the people I believe is all wrong. I find, that in the estimated expenditures of the last session, that we have piled up the sum of seventeen thousand dollars for this Superintendent's office. I believe that the amount provided for there is sufficient, or in other words, that we should have some officer that does something. The universal plan is to have officers that never do anything, but give it out to clerks.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment, also in the interest of economy: "Amend section two by adding, at the end thereof, 'provided, that the price of questions shall not exceed in any one year the sum of ten per cent of the salary of a teacher.'"

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: In the interest of propriety, I hope that this amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara will not obtain. I do not believe that we have a right to lower the dignity of that office by making it lower, in point of salary, than other State offices. I think that the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction should receive as great a salary as the Secretary of State. I am in hopes that the amendment will not prevail.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, will be adopted. I believe that the State Superintendent, without the assistance of deputies, can do all the work incumbent upon that officer. It is purely a statistical office, and I think that two hundred dollars a month is ample pay. I want, sir, the deputies in that office done away with. I want to see the Superintendent of Public Instruction in this State get down to solid work. I believe he can do it. I hope it will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: I do not know whether I am on the popular side or not, but I know something of the business of school teaching. I know something about the State Superintendent's office. The position is a laborious one; one which requires a good deal of time and attention. And more than all it requires a good and competent man. An ordinary bookkeeper gets two hundred dollars a month, and he is not the proper material for a State Superintendent of Public Instruction. There is no other department which has in it so much of necessity and importance as the department of education. Now, sir, two hundred dollars a month will not pay for a suitable man for State School Superintendent. A bookkeeper gets three or four thousand dollars a year. A man who is fit to be the manager of a commercial house gets a good deal more. A man with a good fair ranch gets from a thousand dollars to ten thousand dollars or more a year; and a man who has devoted his attention to the subject of education for years, until he has become fit to be Superintendent of Public Instruction in the great State of California, and manage a great system of education we should have in this State, cannot be reasonably expected to employ his time and talents in such a position for two hundred dollars a month. The teacher of a Normal School gets more than that. The Principal of a High School gets far more. Our little interior towns pay as much for a Principal of a school. The Superintendent cannot properly perform the functions of his office without being away from home more or less. To be a good Superintendent he should visit the different counties and inform himself as to the exact condition of the schools. How can he superintend public instruction and know nothing about it except, as the gentleman says, from getting statistics? What do statistics show? So many scholars, so much money——

MR. STEDMAN. Is it the habit of the present State Superintendent, or has it been the habit of any other State Superintendent, to visit the schools?

MR. CROSS. Yes, I have seen them spending five or six hours a day in the schools at hard work, developing the system of teaching. I met Professor Bolander in Truckee delivering lectures to the people and stirring up such an interest in the general subject of education as would be worth more than the amount of the salary. Talk about a system by which we educate one hundred thousand youth, and no head to that department! A system by which we distribute nearly two million dollars in the State every year, and no head to that department! To offer a man, with the qualities necessary to perform this duty, two hundred dollars a month, would be ridiculous. The other States do not do anything of the kind, and expect the important functions performed by such a functionary. The report of the committee is about right. Put him on a level with the Secretary of State. It is just in the right place, and I believe the people of the State would be well satisfied with it at that point.

REMARKS OF MR. FREUD.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: I hope, sir, that the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara will not prevail. I am indeed grieved to see that amendment come from the source it does. If there be a subject in which there should be as little of the spirit of penury as possible, it is the subject of education. Why, sir, the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction should be on a par with the other officers of like character in the State. He should receive as much as the Attorney-General. He should receive as much as the Secretary of State, for he should be a man above them all. The people of this State do not want that kind of economy in their school system, and the people of this State will not thank gentlemen on this floor for trying to cut down and belittle their school system.

REMARKS OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: The people of this State desire their children taught. They desire the public fund to go into the common school building, and that their sons and daughters be educated, and that it be not wasted in the dignities of office. They desire to have the school brought home to each family; but as it is now we must have high salaried officers, who can afford to dress in silks and satins and broadcloth, and your children are becoming hoodlums. You are educating them in that way, until you find that the educational institutions are going by the board, and that from time to time, year after year, you have to have training schools to take care of the youth. But put them in the hands of men who are brought up to toil, take the boys and girls and make useful citizens to the State, and then the people will be satisfied. I believe I know as much of the interests of the people of this State, as my distinguished young friend from San Francisco. I believe I have lived as long in this State as he. I believe I have paid as much taxes into the school fund as my distinguished friend; and I do know that it is to the interest of the people of this State to have less of this fuss and feathers and more of the solid benefits. Let the golden ducats fall where they belong, and not into the State Capitol to maintain men in lazy positions.

By the report of this committee, it is true, that you provided that the State Superintendent of Public Instruction shall only have the pay of the Secretary of State, but it leaves out all reference to the management of the office. It leaves him to have deputy Superintendents and clerks upon clerks until all the money of the State may be wasted in that way. The people want the money where it is raised as much as possible, and frequently do not have enough to maintain their schools.

MR. CAPLES. Do I understand the gentleman that the present Superintendent gets seventeen thousand dollars per annum? Is that true?

MR. LAINE. For the two years. That is the estimate for the last two years. Six thousand dollars for salaries——

MR. CAPLES. Pretty liberal, that.

MR. LAINE. There is no sense in this peripatetic Superintendent. I have gone to the trustees of schools, those who managed the affairs of the school districts, who have sons and daughters in the schools, and I find that their opinion generally is that these Superintendents are mere parasites. They go there and spend a few hours of hard work—asking some few silly questions. That is your Superintendent, who groans under nothing but two hundred dollars a month. He does no good; but he may stay at the Capitol and save statistics, correspond with other States, and change the general details of the system, and be of some service—and there is where he should be. You might as well send your Governor over the State to see what everybody is doing. You have your own local teachers and Superintendents. If two thousand four hundred dollars be too low, raise it; but do not leave it in the power of the Legislature to prostitute and weigh down our common school system, because these matters that have come to light, of late, have done more to disgrace and dishonor us than anything that has occurred in the State before. I am in favor of education. I believe in giving every son and daughter in this State a reasonable education.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I shall vote for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara. The best man for State Superintendent is a first-class schoolmaster, and he can be had for two hundred dollars a month, and it is ample compensation. Now, sir, I am in favor of saving the money and appropriating it to the enlargement of the system; to the increase of the branches of science taught in the schools. Our system here has been costing too much. I is evident that it is a money-making concern, for some persons at all events. Now, sir, I hold in my hand the report from Massachusetts, and what was the wages in eighteen hundred and fifty-seven-eight. The average monthly wages of male teachers in the public schools of Massachusetts in eighteen hundred and fifty-seven-eight was forty-nine dollars and eighty-seven cents per month. The average monthly wages of female teachers at the same time was nineteen dollars and sixty-three cents. Now, sir, there is no reason or sense in our system costing more than twice as much as the system costs in Massachusetts. I am in favor of curtailing the expenses, and enlarging the sources of knowledge to the pupils of this State.

REMARKS OF MR. WEBSTER.

MR. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to this amendment, for the simple reason that this office of State Superintendent, if we have one at all, is of as much importance as any other office within the gift of the people of this State. I agree with the gentleman from Los Angeles, and the gentleman from Santa Clara, that the expense of the system is greater than it ought to be; but, sir, it just as well applies to every other department of this State. I am with them in cutting down the lot of them, but I am not in favor of making fish of one and flesh of another. There is as much dignity in this office, there is as much responsibility, and it should require as much talent, as any other office in the gift of the State.

MR. WHITE. Had not we better cut them down?

MR. WEBSTER. You have passed them now. This is the only State officer we have in the system, and you start in now to degrade that one office. I will go with you to cut down the salaries of all the State officers. If you had gone at it with more earnestness when the report of the Judiciary Committee was up it would have been better; but when you begin to talk about cutting down one State officer and leaving the rest, I am not in favor of it.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section two by striking out the words 'equal to,' in line four, and inserting 'not exceeding.'"

MR. STEDMAN. That amendment is not in order. It is not an amendment to the amendment. Let us vote on this issue.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain the amendment.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I do not desire to make any remarks except to say that that would leave the matter to the Legislature to determine; that is, to say how much the salary of the State Superintendent should be. I think that is the best plan.

REMARKS OF MR. KLEINE.

MR. KLEINE. Mr. Chairman: There seems to be a good deal of sympathy and humanity when it comes to exalted positions. Especially I am surprised that it comes from the member of the bar on my right, Mr. Cross, from the Workingmen's delegates. It is a great work for the Superintendent and the teacher. Gentlemen, is it greater work than the mechanic does? Since I have been here I have heard no single word of the workingman; he is crushed down, and not a single man has handed in an amendment or resolution in favor of him. One dollar a day! But when it comes to these officials, five thousand dollars is too little. Perhaps these gentlemen are unable to hire two or three servants, and go to the theater three or four times a week—that is what's the matter. I think it is about time that we should put down this difference between the mechanic and the school teacher. I say that the mechanic who learns his trade, has just as much right to use his brains as the man that goes to school and learns the boys and girls their lessons—just as much. I don't see why we should establish an aristocracy. I say that the school teacher and the Superintendent of Schools is no better than the mechanic, and not half so good. [Laughter.] I came here not to make a distinction between the school teacher and the mechanic. I do not see why two hundred dollars should not be sufficient for a Superintendent. Two hundred dollars is enough for any man. I remember, the other day five thousand dollars was not enough for a Supreme Judge—just think of it—for a man to sit on the bench three or four hours a day! I say it is an outrage! A man that says five thousand dollars is not sufficient—I don't know hardly what to say to it. I tell you, I look upon men all alike, and I repeat, and I say it again, that the man that works for his bread—and I say I repeat it—he has to use his brains just as much as the school teacher. This is all very well in Europe, amongst crowned heads, amongst established aristocracy, like in England, where the aristocrats looks down upon workingmen, but here, in the American Republic, I think it ought to be an end of it. Some have declared that we can't get able men on the Supreme bench any less than six thousand dollars or seven thousand dollars. We can get as able men for three thousand dollars as for six thousand dollars. Some said that if we don't pay big salaries they will be dishonest. Gentlemen, if a man will be dishonest with three thousand dollars, he will be a dishonest man if he has ten thousand dollars—it is all the same; it is all the same to him, no matter how high or low his wages may be. The man that is a dishonest man, is one anyhow. It is all foolishness. Now, gentlemen, I hope this will pass; two hundred dollars is sufficient, except if a teacher is more than a human being, and I am not aware of it. I hope all these high salaries will be voted down by everybody, especially men that come here as reformers.

MR. RINGGOLD. I would like to ask the gentleman if he has returned any conscience money to the State from his ten dollars a day?

REMARKS OF MR. BIGGS.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: I believe it is very well known here that I have always been upon the side of economy, retrenchment, and reform, but I am not much of a Cheap John when you come to officials. I think, perhaps, we have acted unwisely in the salaries we propose to pay our judiciary in this State; but, so far as the Superintendent of Public Instruction is concerned, I think it is the duty of this Convention to make provision that he should receive a reasonable compensation—such a salary as would be sufficient for the occasion—and I undertake to say that the sum of two thousand four hundred dollars is insufficient for the Superintendent of Public Instruction of the State.

MR. WHITE. Are you in favor of a deputy to do all the business and let the Superintendent go idle?

MR. BIGGS. Is that so? How do you know? I undertake to say the gentleman is laboring under a mistake. There is work for the Superintendent and his deputy, too. It has been done, and done well. There is a vast amount of money apportioned amongst the various counties of the State for school purposes. He visits the schools. He gives them lectures upon the subject of education. He infuses life and energy into our schools, and I must say I am in favor of paying him a reasonable salary—just as much as the Secretary of State. I am willing to go before the people on that record, and I don't want any cheap salaried men. I do not want your State and county officials to go together. I do not propose to vote for a dishonest man. Cheap salaries or high salaries do not make men dishonest or honest. I am sorry that my friend from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, who I have gone hand in hand with in the line of economy, should get up here and propose this amendment. The school teachers in our High Schools receive more than that. I look upon the position of Superintendent of Public Instruction as one of the most important in the State. We should have the right man in the right place—a suitable man for Superintendent of Public Instruction. I am very much opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San José, or Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, and I am in hopes that this Convention will vote it down. Gentlemen of the Convention, just let me appeal to you. If you want good men you must pay good salaries. Don't stand on a question of a few dollars.

REMARKS OF MR. HITCHCOCK.

MR. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman: There has been a time in the history of this State when men were afraid to assert their opinions on this subject. This is the first time I was ever called to a body of this kind. I want no political future hereafter, and can afford to say to the people what I think. I believe that this office of Superintendent is entirely unnecessary, and I am in favor of striking it out. My reason for that belief is based upon conversations that I have had with leading men—teachers, men on the State Board, men on the County Boards—and they believe it is unnecessary. It is a waste of money, that does the children no good. I believe in education, and I believe that the money contributed by the taxpayers of this State should go directly to the benefit of the children, and not be squandered before it reaches them. Now, I am in favor of striking out this, and also County Superintendents. Let the Secretary of State apportion the State funds, and let the Boards of Supervisors apportion the county funds. I believe in the people governing themselves, and the best way to do that is to give the governing power as near as possible to the local authorities. I believe in the County Boards arranging the examinations, and doing away with these conundrums that we have had for the last fifteen years. A man without a State certificate cannot get any school in this State, or any situation in this State, until he has passed an examination by the State Board; but if he has a State, or even a county certificate, he can teach in any county in the State. Then why the necessity of these State certificates? Why this waste and squander of money to keep a few men in positions? As to the State Superintendent, I have never seen him in my life, and I have been in the State a long time. I believe there was one who attended several Granger meetings, but not as school teacher or Superintendent. I have got no axe to grind, and no friends to reward. The people demand this, and we want all these superfluous offices thrown away. I move that the section be stricken out.

MR. SCHOMP. I second the motion.

REMARKS OF MR. WICKES.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: In regard to the remarks of the gentleman who proposes to abolish the office of State Superintendent and County Superintendent, I do not think it worth while to reply to him. I will say that we have a State Superintendent, and in point of salary he should rank as high as any other State officer. I believe that he should be a first class school teacher. Now, let us see what a first class teacher is. When he teaches in our city high schools he must have the widest range of culture. He must be a man versed in the ancient and modern classics, and must be acquainted with the departments of the higher mathematics, with the history of our world, with the natural sciences, with grammar, etymology, and orthography of our language. There are men within our school system to-day who, if they had given the time to the profession of law or medicine, instead of school teaching, they would have been more independent and more wealthy than they are. As it is now, those who are the best never receive more than three thousand dollars or four thousand dollars a year, and there are only opportunities for a dozen situations of that kind in the whole United States. These gentlemen who have this wide range of culture——

MR. STEDMAN. You speak of the great merits of school teachers. Is it not also true that there are men in our schools buying certificates?

MR. WICKES. I was saying, these gentlemen who have this wide range of culture, such as is found in no other profession, can, at the most, receive three thousand dollars or four thousand dollars salary, while a second rate lawyer or physician can make his ten thousand dollars a year. Now, in regard to the corruption alluded to by the gentleman from Santa Clara, which we have been very late finding out, I will say that corruption has existed in all the departments of the government, but it is found less in the school system than in any other department of the government. With regard to the assertion made by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Kleine, that school teachers look down upon mechanics, I will say, for one school teacher, that I have never been ashamed to take hold of the shafts of a wheelbarrow, or use a pick and shovel, and I do not look down upon mechanics. I wish to educate my children so that they will not be ashamed of manual labor, and yet be able to write a scientific treatise; but I will never educate them to be school teachers.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say a word in regard to the statement that was made that the State Superintendent had nothing to do but the official duties of his office—the clerical work. Now, sir, we have heard from the gentleman from Nevada, Mr. Cross, of the State Superintendent being in the northern part of this State attending to the duties of school work. During my residence in the very southern portion of this State, I have known the Superintendent of Public Instruction and his deputy to be there upon three occasions, and I am informed by my colleague that immediately before I came there the Superintendent that preceded him was there upon school work. Twice have these officers attended the school work of that county, for three days at a time; and the last time they visited there they were at work for five days, in my own place, in the school work. Now, sir, that certainly cannot be attended to if we are to provide a State Superintendent who is to do nothing but keep books and look for statistics. It is unjust, it is unfair, to put a gentleman in the position of State Superintendent, and degrade his position by offering him a less amount of money than you pay other State officers, and thereby bring other State officers to look upon it as a kind of fifth wheel to a coach. It is unjust, wrong, and undignified. It is unworthy of the position of the man who is at the head of the educational department of the State. I hope the section will stand as it is reported by the committee. If one is cut down, then let the others go with it.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to striking out section two, for the reason that I believe that a Superintendent is absolutely necessary and indispensable to our public school system. I believe that the system could not be carried on without a State Superintendent. And further, I am opposed to starving him; and further than that, I am opposed to making an aristocrat of him. Whether the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara be the proper figure or not, I shall not undertake to say now; but I desire in this connection to read a list comprising the cost of the system under the existing law: "Salary of Superintendent, three thousand dollars; salary of Deputy, one thousand eight hundred dollars; salary of Clerk, one thousand five hundred dollars." Now, the first idea that strikes one upon reading that is, whether we could dispense with the Superintendent and Deputy, and let the Clerk do the work. This is the first idea that occurs to one; but I think we can do better, Mr. Chairman. I think we can retain the Superintendent, and dispense with the Deputy and Clerk. The gentleman from San Diego tells us that the Superintendent does run around the country; and he is correct, because I find here in this list, "Traveling expenses, one thousand five hundred dollars." But why should he travel? Is it any utility? Is there any necessity? We have County Superintendents to look after the schools in the counties, and the proper, legitimate function of the State Superintendent, as I take it, is to attend to his office at the State capital. I can readily see where it is necessary that he should be there and attend to the business of his office. But why should he perambulate the country? Is it necessary that he should go to the counties to give our County Superintendents instructions about how they are to perform their duties? The presumption is, that our County Superintendents are about as well qualified and understand their business about as well as he does, and they need no instruction or interference from him. I am opposed to his being permitted to run around the country at an expense of one thousand five hundred dollars a year.

MR. BLACKMER. I wish to state that on the three occasions they were there in attendance upon county institutes, twice they remained three days, and the other time, five days.

MR. CAPLES. I took it for granted that he was correct. No doubt they were attending county institutes, but I prefer that they should be here in their office attending to their legitimate business. They have no business to be there attending institutes. It is no place for them. The presumption is now that the Clerk is the real Superintendent. The Superintendent himself goes off around the country and leaves the Clerk to do the work. The Clerk attends to the business, and we have over and above the Clerk two supernumeraries. I am opposed to sinecure officers. I am in favor of instituting and maintaining all necessary and legitimate offices, for the administration of the affairs of the government, such as are demanded, such as are required, and such as have duties to perform and will perform those duties; but I am opposed, to making and maintaining sinecure offices. Here are some more items of interest, Mr. Chairman. After a Clerk comes, "contingent one hundred dollars." I am not prepared to say what that is. "Porter, two hundred dollars." Well, that is pretty good. Besides the Clerk, a Porter at two hundred dollars. That is getting pretty high up. That is quite an aristocratic establishment; very liberal indeed. Next after Porter comes postage and expressage, how much do you think? "Postage and expressage, eight hundred dollars" per annum. Now, it occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that that Clerk has something to do. If he dispatches mail matter requiring eight hundred dollars postage and expressage, I take it that his office at least is not a sinecure. Then comes "Traveling expenses, one thousand five hundred dollars." Now, sir, I say there is no necessity for the Superintendent to travel at all. He has no business to travel, because we have County Superintendents, who can, and ought too, and are capable of attending to their duties in the counties, and the real legitimate duties of the State Superintendent are in his office at the State Capitol. Now, this little bill of items here foots up a grand aggregate of eight thousand nine hundred dollars per annum. Now, if eight thousand nine hundred dollars are really necessary to run this institution, then I think my friend from Santa Clara has gone too far if he proposes to cut it down to two thousand four hundred dollars. He tells you that this Superintendent may be his own clerk, and there is no use of his traveling, and I think the gentleman is entirely correct in that. The only question is this, is two thousand four hundred dollars enough. Now I, for my part, should have been willing to put at three thousand dollars, and if the gentleman will accept the amendment I would propose to amend by inserting "three thousand dollars" instead of "two thousand four hundred dollars."

MR. LAINE. I accept the amendment. I want to fix him somewhere.

MR. CAPLES. I believe that is in order.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is an amendment to the amendment pending.

MR. CAPLES. I shall move, at the proper time, to amend by substituting "three thousand dollars" for "two thousand four hundred dollars."

MR. SCHELL. I desire then to withdraw the amendment.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question comes on the amendment as amended by the gentleman from Sacramento.

MR. CAPLES. One more word. If I understand, the gentleman accepts my amendment to substitute "three thousand dollars" for "two thousand four hundred dollars." Now, I submit, in all candor, that three thousand dollars is amply sufficient. We have had enough of these plundering perquisites, and I want to cut it off. I want it distinctly understood what every officer is to receive, and not be allowed this perpetual grabbing at the treasury for clerks, porters, and everything else. It is a bad practice, Mr. Chairman, because, even if it is not abused to-day, it will be abused to-morrow. I desire it distinctly stated in the law what every officer shall receive.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: It is well known, sir, to those who have closely observed the signs of the times upon that subject, that there is in this State and throughout the American Union to-day, a deep seated design, composed of elements coming from various quarters, to cripple and injure, and, if possible, to destroy our whole common school system. It comes from people, in the first place, who do not like the public schools, because they teach certain ideas which they think ought not to be taught; and because they do not teach certain ideas which they think ought to be taught. It comes also from many classes of people who have the notion that society in America should be very much like it is where there are a few educated ladies and gentlemen, and that the balance of the community should be uneducated and ignorant boors. It is one of the reactions that meet us all the way along the progress of civilization. There was a time when every voice in America was for a liberal system of public schools, and a full system of public education. But, sir, we hear it now very frequently, that we are educating too much. Those who have the deepest hostility do not attack the system openly or directly, nor through agents whose purposes would be known; but, sir, they try to get other gentlemen who are not, perhaps, opposed to the system, to attack it at certain points, and they hope by striking it down a part at a time, they will finally upset and ruin the whole system. I know there are gentlemen on this floor who have large constituencies which are opposed to public education. I have heard men say that there is too much education among the common people now. Sir, I do not believe a word of it. There is something, undoubtedly, in the objection. There is a little temporary evil just at present. If boys have a certain amount of education, they are too apt at the present time to seek some political position. I admit that; but such a system of government as we have in America can only be maintained by a system of general education, and I believe the time will come when the poorest laborer in the land will be an educated man. I believe it is too late to go back. It is more dangerous than to go forward. This country has started on a popular theory, and that rests alone on popular education. If she can carry out that idea she wins. She has placed her foot upon the burning plowshare, and she must pass the fiery ordeal. This is one of the of the very blows that are aimed at the public school system. They want to commence at the head, sir. Why not abolish the head entirely, and say that there shall be no Superintendent? You want the great system governed and regulated without any head. But, if gentlemen will not do that, then they want to cut down the salaries and perquisites of that office, so as to make it feel its indignity; so that it will be a place that no man of character in the State will take. I am perfectly willing to let this matter stand as the committee has reported it. The salary of the Superintendent shall be that of the Secretary of State. Here it is proposed that the Superintendent shall not even have his stationery found him; that he shall not have even a clerk. Why, sir, do these gentlemen know how much work he has to do? Can they not leave that small matter to those who come after us? Shall you say that in the next twenty, thirty, or fifty years, there shall not be any other pay, without any perquisites at all, no matter how much the work may increase; no matter though the whole people may say that a further sum is needed? Can you not leave that much to the Legislature? I ask gentlemen to pause, and think whether this is not a part of an attempt to strike at our system of public schools; to leave it demoralized and disintegrated, without any head, without any system, without any dignity to it. I shall protest against it. I shall give my vote every time to increase instead of divide the public schools of this State.

REMARKS OF MR. OVERTON.

MR. OVERTON. Mr. Chairman: I do not think that because an individual wishes to inaugurate a system of economy, or wishes to look into the workings of any department of government, that he necessarily is an enemy to that department of government. I think that I am as good a friend to the public schools as the gentleman who just preceded me on the floor, and I think the mover of this resolution and the supporters of this resolution are just as firm friends of the public schools as he is. Possibly many of them have felt the onerous tax that they are paying, and possibly they are actuated by a feeling of that kind to look into the workings of the public schools of this State. The expense of running the public schools of this State, under the present system, is getting to be enormous, and I do not think a man should be accused of being an enemy to the public schools because he wishes to look into the matter a little. I do not wish to degrade the position of Superintendent of Public Instruction at all; I do not wish to degrade it, and it is not to that end that I speak, neither is it in that view that intelligent gentlemen vote. It is a question of cold fact. Is the service that he performs worth more than two thousand dollars or three thousand dollars? If not, he ought to be paid just what his service is worth; the dignity should not enter into the question at all. Is the service worth that much, or more? If it is worth more, pay him more. Let me here state it as my opinion, that there is something radically wrong in the public school system of this State, and when saying that, I do not aim to be classed as any enemy of public schools, but, as the gentleman from San Francisco, back there, has remarked, I do not see why school teachers should be paid such high salaries. The taxpayers of the State are paying it, and have a right to inquire into it; and I say that the school teachers of this State are getting more pay than any other class of professional gentlemen, for the amount of hours they are engaged in the discharge of their duties. I find in the report I have before me, that a school teacher, a lady, receives sixty-eight dollars and something per month. How does she qualify herself to receive that sixty-eight dollars per month? It was done at the expense of the public. Every single qualification that she has, that fits her for that position, she received at the expense of the public. Here we are educating them, qualifying them for this position, and then they are getting sixty-eight dollars a month for teaching twenty days out of the month, and about five hours a day, when the balance of the State, both men and women, are working for twenty-five dollars and thirty dollars a month; I say it is out of proportion. Some gentleman says we ought not to reduce the salary of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, because school teachers receive two hundred dollars a month. They do, in some cases, receive two hundred dollars a month, and it is too much, and we are paying it. First reduce the head, and then the others. I say that this school system wants, as it were, reconstruction. It is the ruination of the State to-day. Here we are paying three millions of dollars, and gentlemen say we have no right to look after where it goes to. They are even required to buy brushes and combs, soap and towels, and they are bought, and we are paying for them, and they are not taken care of. They are entitled to, and do pay as much as twenty dollars a month for sweeping the floor, and yet the tax-ridden people have to pay this. When I was a school boy we swept the school house floors ourselves, and we carried in the wood; now, we pay for these things. I say that the public schools of this State are pauperizing, as it were, the children of the land. Let them sweep out the school house, and act as janitors themselves. When the proper time comes, I am going to offer a good common school system—not a college, not an academy, or anything of the kind, at the expense of the State.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: As the humblest member of the Committee on Education, I labored on that committee for five or six weeks as faithfully as I could to perfect this report. I was at one time in favor of that report as it stands; in fact I believed in the passage of every provision in it; but, sir, I have since obtained new light from the economists in this Convention. I have obtained new light from the debates in this Convention, not alone upon this subject, but upon several others. I find myself now in favor of striking out this whole report. I find myself in favor of abolishing the common school system altogether, and not only the common school system, but all other educational systems. I propose to be consistent, Mr. Chairman. Your committee has voted to prevent the counties, cities, and townships from contracting debts to build any school houses at all, but give them unlimited privileges of contracting debts for Court Houses and jails. I propose to be consistent, and not have any need for school houses. Abolish the institution altogether. Why, sir, I was astonished how fast I obtained light this morning upon the discussion of this question. I was almost convinced when I heard the debate here upon section one, when gentlemen wanted to strike out the declaration that education was a good thing to have. Why, I am converted, and I want to be consistent and blot the word education out of the Constitution. You have given the City of San Francisco the privilege to go in debt to an unlimited extent to purchase the Spring Valley Waterworks for twice what they are worth, but it shall not build a school building except it collects the money to pay for it beforehand. Let us be consistent, sir. You have voted here this morning to prohibit the counties and townships and cities from putting a stop to the sale of intoxicating liquors, and no man had the hardihood to say that it was not productive of crime and expense to the State unlimited. Well, now, if we are going to have unlimited gin, we do not want any education. You have voted to increase the expense of the judiciary from one to two hundred thousand dollars per annum, and you are opposed to increasing the expenses for education. I will admit, sir, that this is consistent, for if you are not going to have any education you will need more judiciary; you will need more Court Houses, and you will need more jails. Why, sir, we had better go to work and see how many more penitentiaries the State can afford to build. You will want some more penitentiaries. I am in favor of striking out this report altogether, and of placing in lieu thereof provisions that shall offer a premium for a gin mill on every corner, and put a tax on all school houses and on all school teachers. I do not know but that we had better make it a felony to teach school at all. In San Francisco the premium on gin mills would be inoperative, for there is one on every corner now; but I believe there are some corners in this State, perhaps in this city, where there are none. These are some of the reason why I am in favor of striking out this whole report. I want to put a premium on gin. Let us have unlimited rot-gut, but let us have no more education!

REMARKS OF MR. JOYCE.

MR. JOYCE. Mr. Chairman: In my opinion, I think the remarks made by our distinguished friend from Sacramento had really no foundation. I have attended the sittings of this Convention pretty closely, and I have failed to hear any member on this floor oppose the public school system. I believe that if there is any thing more than another that is going to assist the public school system, it is to reduce the expense of it. I was waiting patiently to hear the gentleman from Sacramento introduce some remark to the effect that the selling of school questions would be the wiping out of the public school system altogether. Somehow or other it escaped this gentleman's memory. I believe that there is no man on this floor can deny it, that six years ago it was very easy for any house grainer to get four dollars a day. To-day they can get two dollars and fifty cents. Labor has been brought down to the very lowest point. Why not bring down the labor of school teachers, if there is any labor attached to it, in proportion to the reduction created in other branches of the labor market? Now, according to the Superintendent of Schools, they have got two thousand three hundred and ninety-three teachers employed in this State last year.

MR. WICKES. Have you given up the cry of "cheap labor" in San Francisco?

MR. JOYCE. We are against cheap labor.

MR. WICKES. Be consistent, then.

MR. JOYCE. We are not in favor of having school teachers' salaries kept up, and all other classes of labor being brought down. We are in favor of having the wages brought down to provide the children with school books gratis.

MR. WICKES. Is it not better to raise the salaries of all? What benefit would it be to the laboring man to reduce the wages of the poor man? Had you not better raise the wages of the mechanic?

MR. JOYCE. We cannot do it. According to the nearest reports we can get of the examinations going on in San Francisco, I see that teachers had to pay two hundred dollars a head to procure the questions. That would be four hundred and seventy-eight thousand six hundred dollars for the teachers to procure the questions. Now, sir, a very small amount of that would supply the whole school system of this State with free books. One third of that amount would furnish the State with free books, to say nothing at all of the high salaries. I believe, sir, that the same salary paid the Secretary of State, or even two thousand five hundred dollars would be a very fair compensation for the Superintendent of Schools. I think to-day there are lawyers who cannot average two thousand five hundred dollars a year. He has got to use his brains. I would not give him any privilege to sell questions in any shape. I would declare it a felony. Now, sir, if there is anything, in my opinion, that is going to keep the school system of this State intact, it is economy. As the system is running now, we come to find out that it has got to work consistent with the other departments. Economy being the order of the day, it is almost impossible to keep up the school system as an ornament to look at by the employment of the poor laborers of the State, who are severely taxed to keep it up. It is almost a crime, Mr. Chairman, that we should introduce anything here that would make it cast-iron upon the people to sustain a system that is so extravagant. The average school attendance is only seven months in the year. I do not see what should keep it from being ten months in the year, if these people have to draw a salary for twelve months.

MR. LARKIN. They are paid by the month.

MR. JOYCE. I think ten months' service in the year is little enough. If the country wants to pay that way let them pay. I am opposed to any such extravagance. I am willing to furnish school books free to all the children of the State.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the amendment, and also to striking out the second section. I am in favor of the adoption of the section just as it is reported by the committee. If I suggested, or could suggest, an amendment, it would be that of restricting the privilege of the Superintendent to employ deputies and clerks within a reasonable bound. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe on all occasions I have advocated a reduction of the enormous salaries that the people of this State have been paying to public officers. The whole system has been inaugurated upon the high pressure principle. But I do not see any reason for reducing the pay of this one officer below the rest, taking into consideration the responsibilities and duties of his office, his far reaching influence for the present and future welfare of the State. We have already adopted a section which says that: "A general diffusion of knowledge and intelligence being essential to the preservation of the rights and liberties of the people, the Legislature shall encourage, by all suitable means, the promotion of intellectual, scientific, moral, and agricultural improvement." We have growing up the future statesmen, legislators, Judges, lawyers, if you please, professional men, farmers, and workingmen, and their intelligence and usefulness, and their position in society depends very much upon the character or influence of the Superintendent of Public Instruction, and the system of education inaugurated by that superintendency. Now, let me call attention to section five of this report:

"SEC. 5. The Legislature shall provide for a system of common schools by which a free school shall be kept up and supported in each district at least six months in every year, after the first year, in which a school has been established; and any school district neglecting to keep up and support such a school shall be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public fund during such neglect."

If that is adopted it becomes necessary that we have a central office. We must have a Superintendent to see that the laws passed by the Legislature are executed uniformly throughout the State. The Superintendent's office is a distributing office of information; he corresponds with the different Superintendents about school questions, and in regard to their duties. He must see that this system devised by the Legislature shall be carried out fully, properly, and honestly; that the public money is distributed honestly, and that it is expended honestly. In comparison with the clerical offices of the State, the Secretary of State, Controller, and the Treasurer, I contend that the duties of the Superintendent of Public Instruction are as important as either of them; his duties are as onerous as either of them; and I protest against placing the salary of this officer lower than the salary of these officers to which I have alluded.

MR. CAPLES. I understand the gentleman to say that he is opposed to the amendment. He is opposed to putting the salary below that of other State officers. The amendment fixes the salary at the same as the Secretary of State. Now, the question is this, does the gentleman wish it to be higher?

MR. WEST. No, sir.

MR. CAPLES. Another question: Do you not think that three thousand dollars is enough to pay that officer and let him perform the duties of his office himself, and not make the office a sinecure?

MR. WEST. In reading section two of the report under consideration I do not find three thousand dollars, or any other amount, specified. I find that the Superintendent shall receive a salary equal to that of the Secretary of State. Now, cut down the salary of the Secretary of State, if you wish, but let us have uniformity and equality.

MR. CAPLES. We have fixed it at three thousand dollars per annum, and the gentleman is mistaken in assuming that we propose to cut it down. We propose to fix it substantially as it is fixed by the report of the committee, but we propose to make the Superintendent do his own work, and we propose to deny him deputies, clerks, and all that. Is the gentleman in favor of making this office a sinecure?

MR. WEST. I am not in favor of making this office a sinecure any more than any other State office. I am in favor of putting it right on a level with the other State officers, and I am in favor of this second section, as it stands, giving the Superintendent the same salary as the other State officers. If you wish a general reduction, if you wish to reduce the salary of your other officers in proportion, I will vote for it. I am not arguing for three or four or five thousand dollars, but I am arguing in favor of equality, justice, and right. I hope the Superintendent will receive as great a salary as you pay to the Secretary of State and Controller.

MR. CAPLES. I protest against this assumption that we propose to cut the salary down below that of the Secretary of State, when we propose to fix it at the same figure.

MR. RINGGOLD. I move the previous question.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: Under the rules, as I understand them, the Chairman of a committee has a right to address the house last on a subject before the committee and under debate. I have had nothing to say——

MR. RINGGOLD. I withdraw my motion.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: The debate upon this subject has taken a latitude far beyond that which the subject justifies. We have had discussion here about the expense of school teachers, the amount of wages paid, and other things that were entirely irrelevant to the subject-matter. The only inquiries here that are pertinent to the case, are, shall we extinguish and annihilate the office of Superintendent of Public Instruction? and if not, shall we reduce the salary? Sir, I stated before that any department without a head was in a lamentable condition. There must be some one to discharge the functions that devolve upon it. You cannot with any justice to yourselves or the rights of the people, annihilate this office. It belongs to the condition of things; it belongs to the necessities of the case; it belongs to the requirements of the times. The people want it, the affairs of the State need it, and it must remain. Now, sir, it is said that the office is a sinecure, and that there is nothing to be done. Now, let me remind the gentlemen what duties devolve upon this institution, and they will find that its duties, if properly discharged, are quite as ample as the duties of the Secretary of State. If the duties are not properly discharged, correct the abuses, but do not undertake to correct the abuses in the system by annihilating the system. Is that wise legislation? Is that the act of prudent judgment among prudent men, men of thought, men of character, and men who are sent here by the people of the State to advance its highest and dearest interests? No, sir. Let whatever abuses exist in the system be corrected in the proper way, not by the extinguishment of the system, but by the adoption of such legislation as will prevent abuse where it can be reached. If we cannot reach it here, the Legislature can, and we have not yet reached the period of time or advancement of thought in which we are prepared to deny that the Legislature has some efficacy, some power, and some right to power in the State. Now, sir, the State Superintendent of Public Instruction has many duties to perform. I will read some of them:

"To report to the Governor, on or before the fifteenth day of November, of the years on which the regular sessions of the Legislature are held, a statement of the condition of the State Normal School and other educational institutions supported by the State, and of the public schools;

"To accompany his report, tabular statements, showing the number of school children in the State; the number attending public schools, and the average attendance; the number attending private schools, and the number not attending schools; the amount of State School Fund apportioned, and sources from which derived; the amount raised by county and district taxes, or from other sources of revenue, for school purposes; and the amount expended for salaries of teachers, and for building school houses."

This is the labor most comprehensive in its character and extensive in its details.

MR. STEDMAN. Are not these statistics gathered by the County Superintendents and sent to the State Superintendent?

MR. WINANS. They are measureably gathered in that way, but he has to supervise the whole of it. A man has charge of a mercantile establishment and has clerks to perform duties that do not require his personal action, but he must supervise and regulate the affairs of his house to preserve it from what otherwise would result in inevitable bankruptcy and ruin. These County Superintendents are responsible to no power but the county. They have no particular duty to discharge in reference to the State at large, and it requires and demands a State officer to bring all their reports together and make them into a report that shall show the character and beauty of the system. I think the gentleman is answered. Now, sir, again:

"To apportion the State school funds, and furnish the Controller, State Board of Examiners, and each County Treasurer and County Superintendent, with an abstract of such apportionment."

So that these several authorities may be checks upon his wrong doing; so that they may be apprised of the condition of the school fund in the State; so that every department may know how this grand system is working, and whether this department is verging upon corruption, or whether it is discharging the duties which the law prescribes. Again:

"To draw his order on the Controller in favor of each County Treasurer, for the school moneys apportioned to the county."

Now all the school moneys have to pass through his hands. This entire fund, amounting to millions in the course of time, has to pass through his hands in order that there may be an equitable and honest distribution of it. Again:

"To prepare, have printed, and furnish to all officers charged with the administration of the laws relating to public schools, and to teachers, such blank forms and books as may be necessary to the discharge of their duties."

Then this officer has to prepare blank forms and books for all the educational departments of the State. Gentleman have forgotten that this is an immense system, or else they ignore that fact. They have lost sight of the fact that there are about one hundred and fifty thousand youth of various ages now deriving instruction from the educational fountain—drawing it in as living waters, to purify their hearts and educate their brains. Is that not a comprehensive system? Is it not a duty that requires an agent to perform it? But again:

"To have the law relating to the public schools printed in a pamphlet form, and annex thereto forms for making reports and conducting school business, the course of study, rules and regulations, a list of text-books and library books, and such suggestions on school architecture as he may deem useful;

"To supply school officers and teachers, school libraries, and State Librarian with one copy each of the pamphlet mentioned in the preceding subdivision."

Libraries all around the State, in every hole and corner, and every quarter where the ray of educational intelligence can penetrate the darkness and find entrance for the sunlight. And again:

"To visit the several orphan asylums to which State appropriations are made, and examine into the course of instruction therein;

"To visit the schools in the different counties and inquire into their condition; and the actual traveling expenses thus incurred, provided they do not exceed fifteen hundred dollars, shall be allowed, audited, and paid out of the General Fund, in the same manner as other claims are audited and paid;

"To authenticate, with his official seal, all drafts, orders drawn on him, and all papers and writings issued from his office;

"To have bound, at an annual expense of not more than one hundred and fifty dollars, all valuable reports, journals, and documents in his office, or hereafter received by him, payable out of the State Fund;

"To deliver over, at the expiration of his term of office, on demand, to his successor, all property, books, documents, maps, records, reports, and other papers belonging to his office, or which may have been received by him for the use of his office."

And so his duties branch out into a wide detail. Can all this be dispensed with, or what is worse, be delegated to a State Board of Education, poorly paid, responsible to no one, and each man trusting to his neighbor to discharge a duty which should devolve upon him? Now, sir, I say this office must exist. It is not in the power of this body, if it means to do justice and to conserve the interests and the welfare of this people, to extinguish or abolish it. Well, then, sir, if the office be needed, let us look into the terms of its compensation. If this committee had acted upon a perfect system of reduction of expenses; if it had carried out in a uniform method these economic schemes which gentlemen have advocated on this floor, I, for one, should say nothing. If this system was made applicable to all alike, then, sir, there would be consistency in our action, and approval of what we do. But if we begin with one course and follow it up by adopting another at variance with it; if we economize in small matters and expend liberally in large ones; if we talk economy and do not practice it; if we merely make oratorical displays to please the people, then we are not doing what was expected of us, and what will redound to our credit, and will insure the success of the work that we have in hand. Now, sir, as regards the proposition of the honorable member from Sacramento, it is precisely identical with the report of the committee in one particular, and different in another.

MR. CAPLES. I understand the gentleman to say that if we had started in on the line of economy and a general reduction of salary, he would approve it here. Now, the question is this: We started in by allowing the Supreme Judges six thousand dollars. I want the gentleman to say whether, in his judgment, three thousand dollars for a school teacher is not as liberal as six thousand dollars for a Supreme Court Judge?

MR. WINANS. No, sir; for a school teacher it is, but for a State Superintendent of Public Instruction it is not. The State Superintendent of Public Instruction must combine most peculiar and diverse qualities. He must be an educated man; a man of study; a man who has pursued his studies as long as it takes to make a Supreme Judge. Besides, he must be a man of executive capacity, or he cannot carry out the entire details of this most expansive and ramifying institution which devolves upon him. I say three thousand dollars would not be an equivalent salary to such a man as six thousand to a Supreme Judge. But, sir, I am not objecting to three thousand dollars. The amendment of the honorable member from Sacramento proposes to give this officer precisely what the committee report proposes to give him. The report proposes to give him the same salary as the Secretary of State. The salary of the Secretary of State has been already fixed at three thousand dollars. But I come now to the distinction. The gentleman says he is to have no supernumeraries, no employés, no underlings, no deputy, no clerk, no anything.

Now, sir, conceive of the existence of an officer whose duties are so arduous to perform, and requiring him to do them personally. To brush out and clean the cobwebs of his office, to act as his own porter, to have to shut up his office and abandon it for weeks while he is on a distant and necessary tour; to have no one to do the copying in the office, no one to attend to its various subordinate requirements. Sir, the system is entirely wrong, and no member of this body having the intelligence of the honorable member from Sacramento can fail to see that it would be utterly inoperative. This is eminently a subject which should be left to the Legislature. You need not fear that the Legislature will allow him more than the requirements of the institution and its indispensable requirements shall demand. We are perfectly safe in trusting to the Legislature, and I am willing to trust them a great deal further than seems to be the sentiment of the people now around me. I know enough of the duties of the State Superintendent of Public Instruction to know that his office is not a sinecure. I know that it involves perpetual labor.

MR. CAPLES. I did not say that the office was a sinecure. I said that to allow him a deputy and a clerk would be making the office a sinecure.

MR. WINANS. I have spoken in response to the gentleman from Sacramento in no invidious spirit, in no reflective manner, and I did not use the expression sneeringly, or with the inflection of a sarcasm. He took the view that unless this man was compelled to discharge all the duties of the office, he would derive emoluments which were without equivalent on his part. I say that it will never do to place within the Constitution a limitation upon office employment. The Legislature can do that, and depend upon it that the Legislature will never give to this man more aid than he requires. Have we provided that the Secretary of State shall have no employés? Have we provided that the Controller shall have no clerk? Why do it now? Is this a personal crusade? I have the highest respect for the intelligence of this body, and I do not believe that it is the intention of members to throw this whole system into chaos.

MR. RINGGOLD. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

MR. STEDMAN. I second the motion.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, as amended by the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Caples.

The amendment was rejected, on a division, by a vote of 33 ayes to 56 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the motion to strike out section two.

The motion was lost.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

Mr. Murphy in the chair.

THE CHAIR. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Education, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. SHOEMAKER. Mr. Chairman: I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

The motion prevailed.

And at four o'clock and fifty-five minutes P. M. the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow morning at nine o'clock and thirty minutes.

ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTEENTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Tuesday, January 21st, 1879.

Indefinite leave of absence was granted Mr. Fawcett.

THE JOURNAL.

MR. OHLEYER. Mr. President: I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with and the same approved.

So ordered.

COMMITTEE-ROOM PORTER.

The President presented the following communication from the Sergeant-at-Arms:

To the Honorable President and Members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: I deem it my duty to inform you, that as the work of the committees is nearly finished, and only occasionally a meeting held, the services of Committee-rooms Porter can now be dispensed with, if you so desire.

Respectfully submitted. T. J. SHERWOOD,
Sergeant-at-Arms.

EDUCATION.

MR. WINANS. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Education.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section three.

COUNTY SCHOOL SUPERINTENDENTS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 3. A Superintendent of Schools for each county shall be elected by the qualified voters thereof at the first gubernatorial election, and every four years thereafter; provided, that the Legislature may authorize two or more counties to unite and elect one Superintendent for all the counties so uniting.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section three so that it will read as follows: 'Section three—a Superintendent of Schools for each county shall be elected by the qualified voters thereof at the first gubernatorial election after the adoption of this Constitution, and every four years thereafter; but the Legislature may authorize two or more counties to unite and elect one Superintendent for all the counties so uniting.'"

MR. MORELAND. I have an amendment to offer.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section three by striking out the word 'four,' in line three, and inserting the word 'two.'"

MR. MORELAND. Mr. Chairman: The object of the amendment is to have the term two years instead of four, as it is under the present law. All county officers, I believe, are elected for two years. This is a county officer, and I do not see any reason for changing it and allowing him to hold for four years. I think it ought to correspond with other county offices.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: If I heard the reading of the first amendment, I see no difference between it and the original section, except that it uses the word "but," in place of the words "provided that." In regard to the second, I have to say that, for myself, I see no good reason for making the term of this officer longer than that of the other county officers. Personally, therefore, I shall not oppose it.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: This section, as proposed by the committee, originated with the State Teachers' Association that met in this city a week after the first day of this Convention. That association chose a committee to prepare what in their judgment would be advisable as a proposition to be submitted to this Convention on educational matters, and these were submitted to the association, and this matter was quite thoroughly discussed, and it was held that a County Superintendent, to be as efficient as he should be, ought to hold his office for more than two years; that really the best work that a County Superintendent did was at the last of his term, and for that reason they favored a four years' term instead of two. For myself, I think it is quite a wise provision. It is one of those positions that grows with the work that is connected with it, and the interest in the kind of work that is to be accomplished by the County Superintendent, is more strongly impressed upon him the longer he holds his position. Now, sir, with a term of two years he has just begun to realize the necessities of the work before him. If he has his heart in the work, the last two years of his term will be of much greater value to the county than the first two, and for that reason I hope that this amendment will not be adopted. I see no reason why a person in that position should not hold it for four years. It certainly, to that extent, takes that position out of the political arena, and that is very desirable, that he should not be dependent for his position upon every recurring election, but that when once there, he understands that he has that position for four years. I think the interests of the schools would be much better served by retaining this as it comes from the committee than by amending it. I hope that the amendment will not be adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland.

Tha amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Dowling.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: Perhaps I am on very dangerous ground now, but I move to strike out this section. I believe the county Boards can do all that work. I have stood by the committee until I come to this section. I believe it would be wisdom to strike out this section. The County Clerk can make the apportionment as well as the County Superintendent.

MR. BLACKMER. I hope that motion will not prevail—but I have no idea that it will. We certainly would be going back fifty years to adopt such an amendment as that. There are twenty-three States in the Union that have this system of county supervision. Wherever it has been wiped out they have always admitted that they have taken a very serious step backward.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to strike out the section.

The motion was lost, on a division, by a vote of 33 ayes to 56 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section four.

THE STATE SCHOOL FUND.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 4. The proceeds of all lands that have been or may be granted by the United States to this State for the support of common schools which may be, or may have been sold or disposed of, and the five hundred thousand acres of land granted to the new States under the Act of Congress distributing the proceeds of the public lands among the several States of the Union, approved A. D. one thousand eight hundred and forty-one, and all estates of deceased persons who may have died without leaving a will or heir, and also such per cent. as may be granted, or have been granted, by Congress on the sale of lands in this State, shall be and remain a perpetual fund, the interest of which, together with all the rents of the unsold lands and such other means as the Legislature may provide, shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of common schools throughout the State, subject to the provisions of section six of this article.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section four of the article on education by striking out all thereof after the word 'State,' in the twelfth line."

MR. HOWARD. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment by adding: "The Regents of the University shall provide for instruction in the same in agriculture and mechanic arts, mineralogy, and applied sciences."

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not an amendment to the amendment.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section four, by striking out all after the word 'State,' in line twelve, and inserting in lieu thereof the following: 'And no part of such fund, or any money raised by taxation for school purposes, shall ever be appropriated or divided between sectarian schools.'"

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: The reason I offer this amendment is this: I think it is right to strike out these words after the word "State," because they refer to a section that will come up for discussion in the future. The other clause is one which we all wish to have adopted in the Constitution. It seems to come in naturally there, and I therefore hope it will be adopted.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say a word or two in regard to the amendment I offered. The amendment to the amendment embraces exactly the same idea which would be accomplished by the incorporation of section nine into section four. These words ought to go out. This fund ought to be devoted entirely to the common schools, but here it is made subject to the provisions of section six. That provides for normal schools, and technical schools. I think this fund is held by the State for the common schools, and should not be devoted to any other purpose whatever. I hope the amendment will prevail.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: The last clause of section four to which objection is now made, is necessary, if section six should be adopted. Section four is presented here in precisely the same language as that of section two of the present Constitution. With the simple difference, that at the close it provides that it is to be subject to the provisions of this article. In order therefore to properly determine upon the propriety of the amendment offered by the honorable member from Santa Clara, it seems to become necessary to discuss at this stage of the subject the merits of section six. I suppose that was the object of the mover of the amendment. Now, section six is as follows:

"SEC. 6. The public school system shall include primary and grammar schools, and such high schools, evening schools, normal schools, and technical schools, as may be established by the Legislature, or by municipal or district authority; but the entire revenue derived from the State School Fund, and the State school tax, shall be applied exclusively to the support of primary and grammar schools."

Now, the only effect and objects of that section are to declare what constitutes the school system. That section involves no change whatever from the existing system. It confines the public schools which receive the public money of the State. [Confusion.] I do not speak so much in anger as I do in sorrow. I hope the gentlemen will patiently listen to the discussion of these questions at least until they become tedious and annoying, and thereby enable those who wish to hear to have an opportunity. It is impossible for any man within the radius that embraces his own hearing of his own voice to tell what is going on here at times; but I will try and make myself heard even amidst the storm of lower conversation that seems to reign. I say, sir, that section six, while it merely declares what constitutes the public school system, does not deviate from the system which now exists. The present system embraces primary and grammar schools; and it also embraces in those quarters where such institutions are desired, high schools, and evening schools, and the normal school, and technical schools. The difference between this section and the present Constitution is, that this section declares what shall constitute the public school system, while the old Constitution leaves that matter to be determined by the Legislature; and the Legislature in this State has determined it and created it in the form proposed by section six. Section six has the merit, if it is any merit, of creating a consistency in this plan, by showing what its character is. It will be observed that it jealously guards the public money. It provides that none but primary schools and grammar schools shall ever enjoy the revenue, or any part of the revenue, derived from the State School Fund and State school tax. It is more particular and rigid in that respect than the existing Constitution. It limits forever, if adopted, the employment of all public moneys belonging to the schools—that is, all State moneys belonging to the school department—to the culture and development of those in the primary and grammar schools. It has been said, sir, as I have heard from outside sources, that certain members are not aware of what constitutes grammar schools, or that they think the term indefinite. Sir, there is among educational men and in the educational department no term that is better defined than that. The honorable member from Santa Clara well knows what the term means, and every one who does not, can ascertain by inquiring. There is no uncertainty in reference to its meaning. There is no difficulty in construing what it means. The public schools, in their lower department, or in their general State department, are divided into two classes now. One constitutes the primary schools, and the other constitutes the grammar schools, which are the highest class of schools known to the system as it exists throughout the length and breadth of the State. These grammar schools now give the highest education given under the general system, except where localities, municipalities, or townships, or subdivisions of the State in any form, have adopted a higher course of education in the shape of high schools, or another course of education in the shape of evening schools, and another in the shape of technical schools, and a State Normal School, which has its existence now in Santa Clara County, and which this section six does not seek to subvert or destroy. Therefore, the discussion of the amendment offered by the honorable member from Santa Clara involves the discussion necessarily of the merits and propriety of section six. I say, sir, when we come to consider that section, I believe that if there is any point upon which a majority of this committee will concentrate in preference to all others, it is this section six.

There are objections made, sir, that we should not have high schools; that we should not have normal schools; that we should not have evening schools. Why, sir, a large portion of the education of this State is gleaned from evening schools by those whom the necessity of labor compels to devote themselves to some industry during the day. This scheme only proposes that these institutions, such as high schools and evening schools shall exist in those localities where the people desire their existence, and provide means for their support. It studiously excepts them from the reception of the public moneys. It studiously excepts them from any claim whatever upon the large State fund that belongs to the public schools, and it only gives to each locality a right to have these schools when they want them. But, sir, the objectors to this scheme in section six wish to prohibit high schools, to destroy evening schools, and deny to every locality the right to have them when they want them. They would stifle education in its higher reaches and more grand developments; would prevent the people from going on in that march of progress which comes from knowledge and enlightenment diffused through public sources. Sir, could anything be more arbitrary; could anything be more contrary to the spirit which has actuated this committee in delegating to all the local quarters, so far as practicable, throughout the State the right of self-government, and the right to manage their affairs in accordance with the wishes of their people. I do not propose to debate this section six at the present time, but only to point out its character, and to show that unless we intend to strike a blow that will destroy the high schools, one of which rises grand and majestic within sight of this hall, we must preserve this section; unless we wish to destroy that system, we must keep this section still alive.

Now, sir, in regard to the other amendment, it is entirely covered by section nine, which I will read:

"SEC. 9. No public money shall ever be appropriated for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, or any school not under the exclusive control of the officers of the public schools."

That is the declaration of a general principle, applicable to the entire department in all its branches and in all its ramifications, and should exist as an independent section. The amendment proposes to dovetail it in with another section. Instead of simplification it creates confusion.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Cruz.

MR. CROSS. I would like to ask the gentleman if section nine does not cover the same ground?

MR. WHITE. It covers the same ground, but I think it properly belongs to the present section. I think this is the proper place for it to go in.

REMARKS OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I think that the first part of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Santa Cruz is desirable, for the reason that section four relates entirely to common schools. Section six relates both to common schools and to some other schools included in the term public schools. Now, I do not see that there is anything existing in section six to which section four should be subject at all. If, as undoubtedly is the fact, it is meant that the term "common schools," in section four, shall mean what is commonly understood by that term, then it can only introduce confusion to add the words "subject to the provisions of section six." I think that so much of the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Cruz as strikes out the words "subject to the provisions of section six of this article," is good, and should be adopted; but the remainder, which is incorporating substantially the provision of section nine, I do not think is good. I think that matter is of sufficient importance to be embodied distinctly and concisely in a separate section. It refers to a different matter from the chief matter of section four, and refers to a principle of great importance, well deserving to be embodied in a distinct section. I hope the amendment, as offered, to the amendment, will not be adopted, and that the amendment, as offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, will be adopted, simply striking out the words "subject to the provisions of section six of this article," which, so far as I can perceive, would be only conducive of a confusion of ideas. I understand the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Winans, to point out no particular service which these words, in section four, "subject to the provisions of section six of this article," would accomplish, for there seems to be nothing in section four which can be made subject to section six. They are independent. I would ask the gentleman if there is any purpose which these words can serve?

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I will explain to the gentleman what is the import of these words. I did not do so before because I thought it was apparent, but I see now that certain members are not informed as to the relevancy of the language, therefore I will attempt to explain it. Section four provides that all the school fund that exists or belongs to the State properly, from every quarter, "shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of the common schools throughout the State." Now, section six defines the common school system, and if that last clause were not in section four, section four would apply to that whole system, or might be construed or claimed to apply to it; and, therefore, the argument would be adduced, from the language of section four, that the revenues of the school department throughout the State should be applied to the public schools, namely, the primary and grammar schools, and the other schools named in section six. To avoid any possible claim or construction that the public school money of the State should ever be appropriated to high schools, technical schools, or normal schools, or the like, it is expressly provided, in section six, that the entire revenue derived from the State school fund shall be exclusively applied to primary and grammar schools; and then, by making section four subject to that, the appropriation of the money spoken of in section four is limited to these departments.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: Now, I think that the reason given by the gentleman for putting in those words is a reason the other way. I think that the very object which he states here is the very object which we do not want to serve at all. We do not want, in my judgment—I do not want the common schools to be mixed up and be made what would be tantamount to the term "public schools," and the large definition which may be given to that term; nor I do not want it to be made uncertain as to what is meant by common schools. Section four provides that the common school fund "shall be inviolably appropriated to the support of common schools;" then come in these words, which I think are mischievous, "subject to the provisions of section six." When we turn to section six, we do not find that that treats of common schools. We find that that refers to public schools, high schools, technical schools, night schools, etc. If these words are allowed to stand there, there might arise an interpretation of the article which would say that, being subject to section six, these funds may be appropriated to the support of all grades of public schools embraced within the term of public school system, as represented here. It seems to me, that when we provide a section in regard to common schools, we do not want to say then that it shall be made subject to some other section which treats of other schools than common schools—high schools, technical schools, etc. It seems to me indisputable that, to accomplish that which is desired by section four, we should strike out these words, which are worse than ambiguous. For one, I hope that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Cruz will be rejected, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara adopted.

MR. HUESTIS. I would ask if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Cruz is not substantially the same as the other.

MR. LAINE. The amendment I offered only proposes to strike out the words "subject to the provisions of section six of this article."

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I hope this amendment will not prevail. It refers to section six, and the only object of section six is to define the public school system of this State. That is the intention of section six. The last part of it, which is really a proviso to that section, was put in there for a special purpose to refer to section four, or to the funds that are to be raised by the State for school purposes. Now, if that is struck out of section four, it certainly will follow that we must strike out the proviso in section six, which refers to the State School Fund. If gentlemen want to open the door and say that the State School money may be used for any of these purposes which are referred to in this definition of the public school system, let them strike out that; but if not let them retain the two. After defining the public school system we go on to say in express terms that the entire revenue derived from the State School Fund, and the State school tax, which is provided for in section four—and there can be no other fund—must be used exclusively for the support of primary and grammar schools. Now, the two want to stand or fall together. If you strike out of section four the reference to section six, then you want to strike out that provision of section six, which says that the entire revenue derived from the State School Fund and the State school tax, shall be applied exclusively to the support of primary and grammar schools.

MR. LARKIN. Why does the committee use the words "common schools" in section four, and "public schools" in section six.

MR. BLACKMER. It is more common to use the term "public school system," when speaking of the schools supported by the State, than it is to say "common school system;" perhaps, section six is for the purpose of not only defining what the public school system is, but further to say that whenever these schools are established they shall come under the care of the public school officers.

REMARKS OF MR. LARKIN.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: We commence the sixth section with "the public school system," and not with "the common school system," as if it were a different system. Now, confine it either to the common school system, or the public school system. I believe, from what I have learned, that it was intended to devote a portion of this common school fund to other than common schools. Unless it was intended to pervert a portion of this money for other than common schools, I think the same terms should be used where the same meaning is intended, and not play upon words.

MR. BLACKMER. If the gentleman is opposed to using the word "public," let him make it "common."

MR. LARKIN. I am very glad to have the gentleman make the suggestion. Members of the committee differ as to the meaning of it. And now I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara be adopted.

MR. MARTIN, of Santa Cruz. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to section six. It is contrary in its terms, and its matter may be safely left to the Legislature. Technical schools may be dancing schools for all I know, or Woodward's Gardens and all the monkeys. I will support the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I believe the question is on the amendment to strike out and insert.

THE CHAIRMAN. Yes, sir.

MR. WEST. I would call, then, for a division of the question.

MR. CHAIRMAN. It cannot be divided.

MR. WEST. Then I shall vote against the amendment.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I wish simply to state that when section six comes up I shall move to substitute the word "common" for the word "public," so that it will read "common school" instead of "public school." The language will then be identical with the language of section four.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Santa Cruz, Mr. White.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 72 ayes to 29 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section five.

TERM OF SCHOOLS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 5. The Legislature shall provide for a system of common schools by which a free school shall be kept up and supported in each district at least six months in every year, after the first year, in which a school has been established; and any school district neglecting to keep up and support such school shall be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public fund during such neglect.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: The section is substantially similar to section three of the present Constitution, and I will point out the difference which exists. Section three of the Constitution says: "The Legislature shall provide for a system of common schools, by which a school shall be kept up and supported in each district at least three months in every year, and any district neglecting to keep and support such a school may be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public fund during such neglect."

This section inserts the word "free"—"by which a free school shall be kept up and supported." Again, section three of the Constitution says, "at least three months." This section says, "at least six months," because it was deemed by the committee that three months tuition per annum was not sufficient, nor what should be properly demanded by the people from the schools. This amendment again says: "in every year, after the first year in which a school has been established." That language is not in the present Constitution, and was inserted in order to meet the cases where schools are established in the latter part of the year, as they sometimes are. There is no change in principle whatever from the declaration in the section of the present Constitution. Then the Constitution further says: "and any district neglecting to keep and support such a school, may be deprived of its proportion of the public fund during such neglect." The language of this section now presented is similar, so that section five is really a presentation of section three of the present Constitution, with the changes I have mentioned, which were merely for accommodation, and the substantial change of six months tuition every year instead of three.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out all after the word "established," in line four. The last clause, which I propose to strike out, is this: "and any school district neglecting to keep up and support such school, shall be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public fund during such neglect." There may be cases where contagious diseases, or fire, or flood, would preclude a school being kept up, and if the school lost one day they would lose their appropriation. I think it unjust, as the people of this State are at liberty to have schools, and unlimited as to time. If they succeed in getting one five months they ought to have their share of school money. There are schools that sometimes run down to one or two scholars. It is unreasonable and unjust. It is unnecessary there, and should be stricken out.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I second the amendment, and the gentleman has certainly given very good reasons for it. There may be districts in which there are but few people, where a local tax could not possibly be raised sufficient to keep up the school, and yet under the Constitution it would be deprived of the use of any of the State money. I would like to see a school for eight months, or twelve months, but let us not deprive a district of the little school it might have because it cannot keep one up for six months in each year.

MR. BARBOUR. It seems to me that the use of the words "of the interest of the public fund," would not deprive them of the money raised by taxation.

MR. LAINE. It deprives them of the proportion of State money.

MR. BARBOUR. The language is: "shall be deprived of its proportion of the interest of the public fund during such neglect."

MR. LAINE. This money is in the general school fund. It comes from the interest on the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, and the five hundred thousand acres granted by Congress. It is the interest that we are using.

MR. BARBOUR. I understand that they receive their proportion of the money raised outside of that.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment moved by the gentleman from El Dorado.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: The language proposed to be stricken out is precisely that of the present Constitution. For thirty years we have lived under that instrument, and our school houses and our school system have flourished, and I, for one, cannot see any necessity for change in that particular. There is no defect pointed out in the system, such as has demonstrated its evils or mischief during that period of thirty years, and yet gentlemen favor the idea of constitutional changes for the mere purpose of effecting a change. I think that we should stand by the Constitution in all particulars and instances, except where reform is demanded by the condition of the times.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I am aware, sir, that theories frequently may be very fine, and appear decidedly reasonable. I am also aware that frequently theories that appear to be very fine, reasonable, and correct in practice, do not work. Now, sir, it appears to me that this portion of section five reads correctly, and it has evidently worked well. I know several instances in which the utmost effort has been made to keep up a school the required time, for fear of losing the money that was coming to this particular school or district. It has this effect: when money is connected with the matter under consideration, it frequently has an effect upon men that even the abstract idea of education itself does not have. This system has evidently worked well, and has tended to rouse men to the necessity of keeping up their schools, so as not to lose the money that is coming the next year. I do not see that there would be any advantage whatever, but decidedly a disadvantage, in striking this out, and it might tend to a degree of sluggishness of thought and of action upon this subject, whereas, just so soon as the idea of losing money the next year is brought in, it rouses the people, and they wish to have that which they think should properly come to them. In this way education has been promoted and advanced, and, as it has worked well heretofore, I cannot see any propriety whatever in any change in this respect. I am in hopes it will not be stricken out.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I know that this is the language of the old Constitution, and that we——

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has already spoken once on the amendment.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to call attention to the fact that the old Constitution was three months, and it has been increased to six months by this, which would make some difference.

MR. WINANS. It is six months now in the Code.

MR. VAN DYKE. This would be inflexible.

MR. WINANS. If you do not put in this provision they will draw it. They will not have schools, but they will get the money. That is what the Constitution undertook to avoid and avert at the outset, and that is what should be the desire of the people as well.

REMARKS OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: As stated by Mr. Van Dyke, the system which we have been working under, and under which our common schools have been conducted, has been subject to the provision of the Constitution that such schools should be kept up three months in the year, or if not so kept should forfeit their right to a proportion of the State school fund. It was a safe limit, because people would hardly organize a common school anywhere unless they could support it three months. Notwithstanding a long time has elapsed since that Constitution was framed there are yet very large portions of this State in which, to get together fifteen or twenty children, you have to strike an area of five miles square or ten miles square. I know many a small common school, or district, where children ride on horseback a distance of five or eight miles to school in the morning, and home at night. I know cases where the amount of money to which the district is entitled from the State and the amount to which it will be entitled from the county fund is not sufficient to keep school for six months, and if not sufficient, then they are to forfeit their right to any public assistance. It is true that they may, out of their own pockets, provide the means to continue the school, but the constitutional provision, as reported by the committee, does not contemplate that they are to do that, for section five declares that these schools shall be free schools—that is to say, that they shall be supported by public money. A free school is a school at which pupils may attend without charge; but if money has got to be raised they have got to pay, and they will not have a free school, and practically it will not be a free school system for a large portion of this State. At the present time, if they are required to keep it six months, the time will come when even eight months would be a reasonable requirement. Is it not better either to strike that out, or else to adopt the words of the present Constitution, "three months?" Is it not better to strike it out entirely, and leave the Legislature, from time to time, according to the population of the State and the wants of the people, to fix the time that a school shall be kept to entitle them to public money? It is made six months by the Code now, I am told. It may be made anything by the Code. The Legislature may, every two years, modify it, by making it shorter or longer, according to the necessities of the case; but the Constitution cannot be adapted to the varying wants of this community for twenty-five or fifty years together. Legislative enactments can be. We forfeit nothing and we risk nothing by leaving it to the Legislature, and I certainly think it is not prudent to insert this term "six months."

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I move to substitute the word "three" for the word "six," in this section.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I think the Committee on Education will accept that modification, so as to place the section in the identical language in which it now stands in the Constitution, at least so far as this three months is concerned. I have no objection to it, and if there is no objection on the part of any member of the committee, I will accept, as the report of the committee, the word "three," instead of the word "six."

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I understand that no amendment can be accepted. I merely wish to state that if we make it six months the money should be provided in the State levy, and the districts should not be relied upon to make it up—and for this obvious reason: a district never gets a tax levy right. I have never known one to stick yet. They always neglect some essential thing, and the levy of the tax under it, the Court decides, is void. That is the case with regard to every attempt to build school houses, so far as I know. I am in favor of the motion to strike out for that reason. If you require a school to be kept six months, the expense should be defrayed from the whole property of the State, and the money devoted to each district accordingly. I am in favor of as large an appropriation as can be conveniently supported by the people of the State for this purpose; but I am inclined to think that we ought not rigidly to require three months' schools.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I now send up my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section five by inserting the word 'three,' in lieu of the word 'six,' in line three.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the amendment. I am in favor of a half year's school, and that it should be at the expense of the State; and I desire to state now what I proposed to state a moment ago in regard to this limitation in the Constitution. This tax must be raised by local Boards, and they are never able to frame a tax levy that the rich men don't escape. They have done it in our county every time. They have tried it. You will find that in every case the rich men who are able to resist escape the payment of the tax, and it falls upon a few poor men to keep up the three months, or six months school; but when it is levied by the State it falls upon all alike. I think these words should come out of the Constitution, whether it be three months, or six months. I desire to give every child a chance for a half year's school, and let the State support it.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco will not prevail. I am in favor of extending these educational facilities so far as it is possible to do so with the means we have, and the very reason that is given by the gentleman from Los Angeles, General Howard, ought to be a reason why he is in favor of it. Now, it certainly cannot be complained that the people of San Francisco are making captious objections, because, as I understand it, under the present levy, San Francisco is paying fifty thousand dollars a year and over to the support of the schools in the interior.

MR. ESTEE. Over one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

MR. BARBOUR. So much the worse—one hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Now, it is certainly unfair—proceeding upon the principle that the State has this interest in the education of the youth of the State, and we are willing to allow the system to continue of paying this by way of tax upon property—to say that they cannot keep longer than three months schools in the interior. If we are to make this large contribution we have a right to insist that there shall be some efficiency in the schools, and six months is certainly a small enough time to require them to attend to their schools in a school district with the assistance they have received from us, and the increased assistance that they are entitled to receive when the amendments to the tax law shall increase the assessment so much as we expect to do.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not prevail. Section five simply directs that the Legislature shall provide for a system. We are not supposed in this Constitution to provide for a system. We are simply directing that the Legislature shall provide for these contingencies, and that the Legislature shall provide a system by which these schools will be surrounded. I have lived in frontier counties, and I know that the Legislature can provide a system by which a free school can be supported in every school district. I hope this section will be left just as it came from the committee, and that the Legislature will be permitted to devise a plan, and that we will not go into the little details. But let us say that a school shall be kept open in each district for six months in each year, free to all the children inhabiting that neighborhood or community.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of striking out the last clause of this section. I believe it is entirely unnecessary.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from El Dorado, Mr. Larkin.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 54 ayes to 45 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no further amendments to section five, the Secretary will read section six.

THE PUBLIC SCHOOL SYSTEM.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 6. The public school system shall include primary and grammar schools, and such high schools, evening schools, normal schools, and technical schools, as may be established by the Legislature, or by municipal or district authority; but the entire revenue derived from the State School Fund, and the State school tax, shall be applied exclusively to the support of primary and grammar schools.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I send up a substitute to section six.

MR. WINANS. Has the committee the right to substitute the word "common" for the word "public?"

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the substitute offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Substitute for section six: The common school system shall include primary and grammar schools, the State Normal School, and such evening schools and technical schools as may be established by any municipality or school district of the State; and no other than the English language shall be taught therein. The revenue derived from the State School Fund and State school tax shall be appropriated exclusively to the support of primary and grammar schools. No sectarian or denominational instruction shall ever be imparted in any of the public schools of this State."

REMARKS OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I am sorry that the time is so limited for the consideration of this question. I would like it exceedingly if I could obtain the attention of the committee on this subject, because, in this question is contained the entire public school system of this State; and upon this section depends the future conduct of the whole system. It will be observed, Mr. Chairman, that this committee, in their report, have struck a blow at the State Normal School, ignored its existence, and practically destroyed its efficiency, so far as the State Normal School is concerned. It seeks to place a portion of the counties of this State in an attitude where they will stand upon an unequal footing with that portion which can maintain normal schools. It seeks to tear down a State institution that has for its object an efficient system for the education of public school teachers, by declaring that there may be established in every county, in every school district, and municipality of this State, normal schools for the education of school teachers. It is well known that there are numerous portions of this State, diverse school districts, that are wholly unable to maintain these institutions. It is frittering away the very purpose for which the State Normal School was established, namely, an efficient system for the education of educators; leaving it crippled in its efficiency, and without resources to carry it on; its importance dwindled into insignificance, its patronage destroyed, and the whole system scattered and abandoned, with the exception, perhaps, of large cities like San Francisco and Oakland, while the poorer districts are left without any adequate protection in that regard; and leaving the State school system, so far as the normal school system is concerned, an utter wreck. I have sought, by this amendment, to reconvey into the system the State Normal School, and to destroy the system that is attempted to be established here, of building up, in every particular locality where the people may see fit to undertake it, an inefficient normal school.

The next proposition that presents itself, so far as the amendment has sought to affect this system is concerned, is, that I leave out of this system the system that is attempted to be engrafted here as a constitutional measure—the system of high schools, as now established in this State. It is an ironclad rule, and it is fixed in the Constitution, Mr. Chairman. There is no uniformity in it. These particular localities that are able to teach every kind of language that is now on the face of the globe, will teach any language they see fit, ancient or modern. No two particular districts in the State will adopt the same language. The German and French will be taught in one locality, and Spanish and the Italian in another, and the Chinese and some other language in another, and so on, ad infinitum, all over the State. It entails upon us the most costly class of educators, men whose salaries will be the highest known among teachers. It requires that class, and that class alone, to impart this sort of education. But the worst possible objection, the one which presents itself with the most persuasive force to the mind, is this: it entails a local tax upon communities for the support of these schools—a heavy and enormous tax, beyond what is required to support the public school system as it is attempted to be established by this amendment. It follows that their schools will be, to say the least of it, local in their nature. Those who live outside of these particular districts, and whose interests and taxable property are all outside of these particular districts where these high schools are maintained, will remove and reside in those districts, while all their valuable property is in some other school district. It cannot but be well understood that nine tenths of the school districts of the State will be unable to support this high school system. I say that those districts that do maintain high schools will be depleted in their resources by outside parties, whose property is in other districts, moving in and sending their children to these high schools. It is entirely local, and affects particular localities. Discrimination becomes the general rule, instead of uniformity of operation. It affects the taxes in the same way. Not only so far as the educational system is concerned are your people affected, but the whole tax system is affected by it, and an unequal burden imposed upon those who uphold these schools, while those who do not pay will receive the benefits of them. I am not objecting to them on the ground that poor persons will have an opportunity of having their children educated there. The objection is, that persons who reside outside of the districts can take advantage of the districts that are able to support these schools. They will move in there and educate their children there, while their taxable property is outside. These objections are insurmountable as against the system proposed by the committee, and I submit that it is a system that ought not to be tolerated or supported by the State. While we are all in favor of a good common school education, this system proposes to engraft upon us a high school education, boundless in extent, limitless in capacity, and all-comprehensive, in the districts where they are legalized. The amendment, as proposed, confines education exclusively to the English branches, and I do submit, Mr. Chairman, that that ought to be the rule. While I am perfectly willing that the system shall embrace every class of education that is capable of being conferred in the English language, between the ages of five and seventeen, or twenty-one years, I am utterly opposed to loading this system with every language that is known upon the face of the globe, besides the dead languages that may have existed heretofore.

There is another feature in the amendment. Sectarian and denominational instruction is not excluded by this system proposed by the committee, except so far as the University is concerned. That provision I have added to the amendment, and I have no doubt the committee intended to exclude that in their system. I wish to make no particular point upon that proposition, but I do submit that the system ought to be confined to the English language exclusively, and it ought to be confined to the primary and grammar schools.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I am surprised to see my friend from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington, go jumping and bounding into this section, and introducing an amendment of the character and kind that he has introduced. Now, Mr. Chairman, section six, as reported by the committee, is not, when properly considered, subject to the criticisms made upon it by Mr. Herrington. He says that the section is a blow at the normal school of this State, located at Santa Clara, where he comes from.

MR. LAINE. San José.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Well, he practices law at San José. He says the section is a blow at the normal school at San José. I deny it, Mr Chairman. "The public school system shall include primary and grammar schools, and such high schools, evening schools, normal schools, and technical schools, as may be established by the Legislature." The Legislature has the power and control over the common school system. Normal schools are specially mentioned. It is no blow at the normal school, nor is it intended as a blow at the normal school. That seems to me to be an answer.

MR. HERRINGTON. I will ask whether it does not authorize the establishment of a normal school by any municipality or school district of the State?

MR. BEERSTECHER. It may be construed as permitting that.

MR. HERRINGTON. Does not that destroy the normal school?

MR. BEERSTECHER. No, sir. The Legislature has full power to establish normal schools in this State to-day. It is not changing that thing at all, and the gentleman's amendment about to be voted upon is subject to another and very grave objection, and that objection is that it limits the tuition in these schools to teaching in the English language. It wipes out and destroys the cosmopolitan schools of the City of San Francisco. That matter was commenced before the Legislature last in session. The matter was agitated throughout this State, in places where they were instituted, and more particularly in San Francisco. Indignation meetings were held in that city—meetings attended by the wealth and respectability, and the taxpayers of that city—to protest against the invasion, and striking at the law permitting the teaching of other languages than the English in the schools of San Francisco. The section here localizes this matter. It allows the inhabitants of a city to pass upon it by vote whether they desire to have cosmopolitan schools or not. Now, if the taxpayers of San Francisco, if the taxpayers of Sacramento, if the taxpayers of San José, or Stockton, by a vote say they desire to have other languages than the English language taught; if they say they desire to have the French, or German, or Latin, or Greek, taught in cosmopolitan schools established and kept up by the revenues raised in that particular locality, whose business is it? What right have we to put into a Constitution an ironclad clause to prevent these people from doing this?

I do not believe, Mr. Chairman, that this committee will entertain the proposition for a moment. It ought to be left open. It ought to be left to the Legislature to provide that the people of a particular locality, like San Francisco and other cities, should have the right to say whether they desire to establish cosmopolitan schools or not, and to say whether they desire that languages other than the English language shall be taught in these schools. I do not desire to threaten, or to say to this committee that this would certainly be a blow in the nature of a death blow to this Constitution, but it certainly would be a fatal mistake to embody anything of this character in the Constitution. There is a strong sentiment in San Francisco to-day, and the sentiment is not among foreigners by any means; but it is among the intelligence of that city, and the respectability of that city, and people who desire to see the youth of this country educated, and who are willing to pay for a broad, liberal, and comprehensive education. If the gentleman desires to wipe out cosmopolitan schools, if he desires to prevent the teaching of other living languages than the English language, why not limit the instruction in those schools to reading, writing, arithmetic, and geography? Why not limit the time that the child could go there? There is no argument against it, only solely and alone the argument, that the men who pay the taxes do not want to pay the taxes. Republican institutions are based upon intelligence, and the more intelligent the people are the better for this country, and I hope that the amendment will be voted down.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of this amendment in part. I think we should have but one normal school in the State, and for that we should make ample provision. I have been unable to ascertain from the reports, or from any member of the Committee on Education, what is the annual expense of the normal school, and I regret that we are in that state of information in relation to it; but since this report has been under consideration I have looked over the statutes and the regulations in relation to the normal school. The statutes provide that twenty-four or twenty-five thousand dollars shall be annually appropriated for the support of the normal school. But we should have but one, and that one should be made efficient. I observe a comment upon the normal schools in the message of the Governor of New York, Governor Robinson. He says:

"So far as I can learn, the normal schools established in various parts of the State are, with two or three exceptions, wholly useless, and fail almost entirely to accomplish the objects for which they were established, and for which the State is annually paying large amounts of money from the treasury. I recommend an inquiry into the working of these institutions, and a discontinuance of all those which fail to accomplish the purpose of their establishment."

Now, sir, I think that we should not cripple the normal school we have. We should provide amply for one, where teachers may be instructed, and liberally instructed, in the various branches of knowledge. Now, there is a provision here also that I think should come out of this section, and that is for technical schools. My own view is that the University should be the only technical school, and that it should be amply endowed for that purpose, and well supported for that purpose; but that we should not have a multiplicity of inefficient technical schools.

There is another provision in the amendment of the gentleman which I am in favor of, and that is, that nothing but the English language shall be taught in the common schools. If parents wish their children taught in German, in French, and in Spanish, which are very useful branches of knowledge, they should be taught privately, and at the expense of the parents, and not from money levied for that purpose upon the people. The Greeks taught no language but their own, and it is the most perfect language of which we have any knowledge. The French, under their school system, teach no language but French.

Now, in relation to this whole system of education at the public expense, I desire to have the Secretary read a paragraph, in addition to what I read, from the message of the Governor of New York, which strikes me as eminently sound and just, and contains enlightened views.

THE SECRETARY read:

"In former messages I have given fully my views in regard to the extent of the schools that should be maintained by general taxation. All my subsequent observation has confirmed the opinions expressed upon this subject. To the extent of giving to every child in the State a good common school education, sufficient to enable him or her to perform the duties of American citizenship, and to carry on intelligently and successfully the ordinary labors of life, the common schools are and should be objects of the deepest concern to the whole community. To the few who desire and are capable of a still higher education, and who have an ambition to shine as professional men and in the arts of literature, music, painting, and poetry, the door is wide open for them to win distinction in those callings. But to levy taxes upon the people for such purposes is a species of legalized robbery, and even the recipients come to know it. Their sense of justice cannot fail to condemn it. It lowers their standard of morality, and helps to debauch, instead of purifying, public opinion. It also breeds discontent on the part of those who are educated to something above that for which they are fitted. It really disqualifies them for those duties and labors to which alone they are by nature adapted, so that not only great injustice, but great demoralization is the result of a system which collects money by force from one man to educate the children of another man for callings which they never fill. The argument sometimes advanced, that this system is a benefit to the poor, is an utter fallacy. The children of the poor man generally leave the schools with a common school education, and go to work for themselves or their parents. Yet, while the poor man's children are thus at work, his little home is taxed to give to the children of others a collegiate education. Nine in ten of those educated in the so-called high schools at the public expense would far better pay their own bills than to have them paid by the people of the State. These views are so manifestly just, that I have no doubt that they will ultimately prevail. Indeed, there seems to have been already a cessation of efforts to establish high schools, academies, and colleges, and support them by taxation."

MR. HOWARD. Now, Mr. Chairman, the term grammar school, which I am in favor of retaining, includes everything necessary to be taught in a public school system. In a system of grammar schools we can teach that which is equivalent to a liberal education—the English language thoroughly, and English literature to a certain extent, grammar, rhetoric, logic, arithmetic, algebra, geometry, trigonometry, the history of the country, the general principles of political economy, the Constitution of the country to a limited extent. For instance, Judge Story has made an abridgment of his own work which would convey to the ordinary student all the general principles of constitutional law. In other words, our common school system should educate every man and boy up to the duties of American citizenship, and the grammar school could prepare every man for a profession if that was deemed necessary.

I am in favor of a free school system. I do not agree with those people who assail this system, and call it a Godless system. I regret that any preacher or priest should have taken upon himself to indulge in that strain of comment; and I regret most of all that of late some of the persons in the Episcopal Church, to which I am attached, and to the support of which I contribute, should have taken upon themselves to denounce the free schools of this country as Godless schools. I think they mistake the public interest. They mistake the interests of their churches, and they mistake the public interest when they undertake such an office. They are warring on the inevitable. Napoleon said, when the Pope excommunicated him: "His Holiness is mistaken; it is a thousand years too late." These preachers who undertake now to attack the free school system are at least two hundred years too late. For more than two hundred years that system has prevailed, and I am in favor of retaining it.

REMARKS OF MR. FREUD.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: I have listened with a great deal of pleasure to the eloquent remarks of General Howard. I agree with him in all that he says, but I think I will not be charged with presumption when I say that the gentleman, in one regard, has departed from his general practice of consistency in adhering to local government—in adhering to the principle that a local government shall control itself. I agree with the gentleman that a citizen should not be compelled to pay for any other than the common branches of education; but, sir, I also believe that if any municipality desires to instruct its children in any other than the common branches of education, that right and that power ought to be conceded to that municipality. That, sir, is the principle that General Howard has been putting forth here on all occasions. It is the principle of local self-government. The State can lay down a certain course of instruction, and declare that no county, no town, and no city shall depart from that system, in so far as decreasing or diminishing it is concerned, but I do not think that the State ought to declare that that municipality shall not increase, shall not elevate, shall not add to that system.

MR. HOWARD. I will draw your attention to the fact that this provision would authorize the Legislature to establish a normal school in every town in the State. I am opposed to the Legislature having any such power.

MR. FREUD. I agree with the gentleman in that case also, but relative to the languages, I think a city should have a right to declare that its children should be taught in any other beside the English language. I do not see what objection there can be to a municipality taxing itself to teach its children in any other language.

REMARKS OF MR. VACQUEREL.

MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the amendment offered by Mr. Herrington, and shall sustain the report of the committee. It seems to me that we are trying to lower education instead of bringing it up. It has been asserted very often I know that free schools were a charity. I say it is not. It is a public duty. It is a right that every child possesses, to be educated freely by the government, or by a school supported by the government. What makes the American public school system superior to any other in the world, sir? It is a system, the principle of equality, and that is the principal foundation of republicanism. It is that very principle that you see to-day swaying every nation of the world. There is not one that does not try to copy the American system of free schools. It is the fight in Europe to day. They want to establish the system, while we try in California to put that system down. Why, the gentleman from Los Angeles says that in France they do not teach anything but French in the free schools. I deny the assertion. They did not do it as long as the priesthood had the control of it; but, thank God, it is done now. They teach the English and German language, and all the languages that the children want to learn. If you adopt the other course you destroy the principle of equality. Now, if we want to restrict the teaching of foreign languages, I say that the man who can speak three or four languages is equal to three or four men. Sir, I hold that this principle would take us back one hundred years. The poor would be denied the rights of education, because they would not have the means to be educated with. It would destroy the principle of equality, and then comes sectarianism. I have been educated at a sectarian school, and it took me twenty years to do away with the wrong opinions I had in my mind. I hope there will never be one established in this State; therefore, I shall support the report of the committee and vote against the amendments to section six.

REMARKS OF MR. WICKES.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: At the proper time I shall offer an amendment so as to except Latin. I think that the Latin language ought to be taught in our high schools and in our normal schools. There are many reasons why the Latin language should be taught. As civilization advances language becomes more complex. It should be the aim of our scholastic institutions to provide for that expansion of language which is demanded by advancing civilization. Where should we go to get the necessary compounds? Should we go to the roots of a living language? I have too much pride in my own tongue to approve of that. I think that we should go to a dead language, the Latin, which now enters largely into our tongue. I say I take a pride in my own language, and I am opposed to any other tongue being spoken or taught in our institutions of learning.

REMARKS OF MR. LAVIGNE.

MR. LAVIGNE. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the cosmopolitan schools, and I do not see any reasonable cause for their abolition. The cosmopolitan schools in San Francisco (seven) cost for the teaching of French and German languages, three per cent. of the total amount paid for the teachers' salaries. Now, sir, in order to reduce expenses, the Board of Education last year, following the system introduced by Mr. Bolander, in the Bush street primary school, favored the plan according to which all primary classes in cosmopolitan schools must be taught by teachers holding a German and a French certificate, besides their English one, and at the present time most all our cosmopolitan schools are taught by teachers thus duly qualified. The system has proven to be satisfactory, and has reduced the expenses to nearly one half. Therefore the teaching of foreign languages in San Francisco does not exceed one and one quarter per cent. of the total amount of teachers' salaries (twelve thousand dollars). Now, Mr. Chairman, thousands of children have had the benefit of our cosmopolitan schools, and have been instructed in French and German, and it is a mistake, sir, to think that only the children of German and French origin have the benefit of this institution. The number of children studying German and French in the public schools is three thousand five hundred and five, distributed as follows: German, two thousand five hundred and thirty-eight; French, nine hundred and seventy-seven; American, one thousand one hundred and twenty-eight. This shows that thirty-two per cent. of the whole number are Americans, and it is the last report of Mr. Herbst, Principal of the South Cosmopolitan Grammar school. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the teaching of modern languages, because the education of the people is of the highest importance to a State like the State of California. The State of California is cosmopolitan, and very often in the course of life it is necessary for a man to be acquainted with several languages. By abolishing the cosmopolitan schools you create more difficulties to the working classes at the profit of the rich, because the system of public schools enables the poor to acquire enough instruction to become, if he is intelligent, the equal of the rich. If you abolish cosmopolitan schools, the rich will send their children to private or sectarian schools, thus creating two distinct classes of people, and we will soon have the regret to see our public schools, which were one of the greatest creations of this State, supplanted by sectarian schools. Mr. Chairman, we cannot give a too liberal instruction to our children, and we must not, through a false idea of economy, pull down one of the main pillars of our grand free school system. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the amendment by striking out all after the word 'system,' in the first line, down to the word 'but,' in the fourth line, and insert the following: 'of this State shall include primary and grammar schools, the State Normal School, and the University of California.'"

REMARKS OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: As it is, the amendment has reference to municipalities. I think that here we should provide a system for the State, and let municipalities alone. Much objection has been raised on the ground that the municipalities, especially in San Francisco, desire to maintain certain high schools. I have no objection to it; but we should deal here with a State system and nothing else. Now this section, as it is worded, is most pernicious. I do not believe that it is proper for us to give the Legislature the power to organize in this State high schools, because if it is a State matter they are State high schools, and ought to be State high schools. Nor do I propose to give them the power to organize more normal schools. We have enough of them. I doubt very much the value of any normal school, and were it an original proposition I should oppose it; but we have one and that is enough. The Legislature has the power under this section to establish, under State authority, more State normal schools, because it reads: "The public school system shall include primary and grammar schools, and such high schools, evening schools, normal schools, and technical schools, as may be established by the Legislature." Not by municipalities, but by the Legislature, or municipalities. I do not believe in giving to the Legislature any such power. We have enough. And this matter of technical schools is another. I think that the State should support the normal school we have. I think the State should support the State University. I think the State should support the common schools, and there the State should stop. When it comes to the organization of municipal schools, matters of that kind, within local jurisdiction, let them do as they please. But when they say the public school system what do they mean? Do they mean the public school system of the State or of the municipalities of the State? I think it should begin and end with the State, and, in my judgment, the primary school, the grammar school, the State Normal School, and the State University is enough. When you come to municipalities that is another matter. That is the reason I oppose the amendment of the member from Santa Clara; it embraces too much. I do not care to have technical schools. I do not know what may be included in the term technical schools. I believe it means a school of art, and it may mean dancing and fiddling for all I know.

MR. MARTIN, of Santa Cruz. I move to strike out section six.

REMARKS OF MR. CROSS.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that each of the amendments, and much of the discussion which has arisen here, is the result of misapprehension as to the effect of this provision if it were adopted. Now in our State treasury we have different funds. One is the school fund. Now this provision is, that the entire revenue derived from the State School Fund and the State school tax, shall be applied exclusively to the support of primary and grammar schools. That is, when the tax has been levied for school purposes, the amount of that tax can be appropriated only to what was designated here yesterday as common schools—primary schools and grammar schools—in which the rudiments of education are taught, such as are supposed to be absolutely necessary to every man and woman in order to make them good citizens. Now that is the whole principle of the section. The former part of the section provides this, that "the public school system shall include primary and grammar schools, and such high schools, evening schools, normal schools, and technical schools, as may be established by the Legislature, or by municipal or district authority." Then if any of these higher grades derive any support whatever from the State, it shall not be done out of the State School Fund, but shall be drawn from the General Fund. For instance, if the State Normal School needs support from the State, it shall not be taken from the common school fund which has been raised for primary and grammar schools, but an appropriation by special Act of the Legislature, for the express purpose of supporting the Normal School. Allow me to suggest that this is the manner in which the State Normal School is supported to-day. If the State University needs support, that support must be drawn from a special appropriation by the Legislature, made from another fund; generally, I believe, from the General Fund.

Now, sir, objection is made to the State doing anything for the support of technical schools. The gentleman from Santa Clara says they are schools of art. I submit to the gentleman that agriculture is an art, that mining is an art, that the different departments of mechanics are arts, and that our State is now doing something for the support of art schools. I have no fear that this State will ever reach a stage where the Legislature will make an appropriation for an art school of music and dancing. But even if we had more music in our State, and less growling, I am not sure that it would be a bad thing. Perhaps the little vocal music which has been so much spoken against is not a bad thing, and the man who can sing a little at home with his wife and his children, is not so bad as the man who wastes his money in the saloons and gambling houses. I am not sure that these little refinements introduced in the public schools are such a bad thing. I am satisfied that they reach a good purpose, having been a teacher myself. I have come to understand that a little music in school makes the tasks of the scholars more pleasant, as a little music in the household makes home more pleasant, and perhaps does as much to prevent hoodlumism and crime as do reform schools and penitentiaries.

Now, sir, about evening schools. This provides that there may be in the State evening schools: and certainly if there is any class of schools that all the world over the poor people patronize it is the evening schools. These evening schools offer opportunities to boys and girls who have to work daytimes, to acquire such knowledge as shall make them useful citizens and enable them to perform useful parts in life. To strike out this provision would be a most unfortunate change.

Now, sir, as to the high school. This provision is, that the Legislature, or any municipality, may provide for high schools. That results in this: First, that the Legislature may provide for a uniform system of high schools, and if they are established under such a law, the Legislature has control of them. For instance, say one high school was established at Stockton, at San José, at Marysville, at Sacramento, etc. They would be a department, and fill up the space between the grammar school and the State University; so that a boy who came through the primary and grammar schools would find a school which covers the space between the grammar school and the University, so that the whole system would be complete. It further provides, that if no such State law is passed, still a municipality may establish such a school. For instance, San Francisco may have a night school if it wants it, even though the State would not provide for it. San José could have a night school or a high school if it desired, and the normal school would not be cut off from support by this provision; but the support, instead of being taken from the Common School Fund, would come from the General Fund of the State.

Now, as to the normal school, I will insure the gentleman from Santa Clara a monopoly. They have a handsome normal school building there. Perhaps in the growth of this State, fifteen, twenty, or fifty years from now, we may need another normal school; and perhaps if the gentleman from Los Angeles should be living then, he might want it in Los Angeles. The growing wants of the State might require it. We ought not to put a gate in the way of anything like intellectual progress; we ought not to put anything in the way of increasing the capacities of the great public school system, but we should leave the door of progress open, so that in the future of this State, without constitutional amendments, we may make intellectual progress at the public expense.

MR. REYNOLDS. I desire to ask the gentleman one question. I understood him to say that he was in favor of music. Now, I want to know whether the gentleman is willing to go on the record as willing to expend money for teaching the girls music?

MR. CROSS. Yes, sir. Put the record on your desk there, and I will come and stand on it. [Laughter.]

MR. REYNOLDS. Will not their future husbands need all the money to play poker? [Laughter.]

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the report of the committee. The first part reads: "The public school system shall include primary and grammar schools, and such high schools, evening schools, normal schools, and technical schools, as may be established by the Legislature, or by municipal or district authority." Then it goes on: "But the entire revenue derived from the State School Fund and the State school tax, shall be applied, exclusively, to the support of the primary and grammar schools." I think we can very safely let the Legislature have the opportunity of establishing these schools, providing the necessities of the occasion require it. For one, I am in favor of leaving that power vested in the Legislature. Now, I think the gentleman from Nevada made a very good point when he said that we had one normal school now, but the time might come when we would want two. We have a great many evening schools now—and if the amendment should be adopted we would necessarily have none—in very many of the counties of this State, and I understand that Santa Clara is not an exception to the rule. I believe it is recognized everywhere that the schools of that county are one of its chief attractions. If its representatives desire to go backwards, I really hope this Convention will not. It is perfectly safe, I think, to leave this question in the hands of the Legislature.

But there is a still more fatal objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine, and that is, he proposes that under the common school system of the State shall be ranged the State University. I object to that.

MR. LAINE. The public school system, not the common school system.

MR. ESTEE. I object to that. Every Legislature will commence handling the University. I hope to have that great institution kept outside of politics. Our Insane Asylums are outside of politics, and our State Prisons will be outside of politics; but the gentleman from Santa Clara proposes to put the chief educational institution of the coast back into the hands of the Legislature, to tamper with it at every session. I hope that that will not be done. I hope that the section presented by this committee will be adopted. I hope that the common schools and the University will be placed upon such a plane that no future Legislature can affect its usefulness. I indorse most heartily the remarks of the gentleman from Los Angeles, so far as one point went. I believe in the common schools of this country; but when the Convention takes a step backward, the people of this State will not sanction it. We should risk everything we have to promote the fullest educational advancement on the part of every child born in this State, and every child that comes here to be educated, so far as he can be. For one, I am not here to argue about technicalities, about learning this language or that language; I am willing to leave that to the future intelligence of this State. I think it is not wise to teach French, Latin, or German in the schools, but I think it safe to leave these great questions to the Legislatures, or to the people who may come after us. If they desire to teach their children any of these languages and pay for it, let them do it. I would be very glad if every child in the State were educated.

Now, sir, for these reasons, among others, I am opposed to these amendments. I shall oppose all amendments to section six unless some more potent reasons are given for changing it than have yet been advanced. I think that the section as it stands is an excellent one. Why, sir, in San Francisco there are several thousand children that would have no education at all if it were not for the evening schools. And the idea of placing upon record here, in the organic law of the State, that no part of the public money shall be given to teach these children in the night time, seems to me to be wrong.

REMARKS OF MR. RINGGOLD.

MR. RINGGOLD. Mr. Chairman: If there is one evil in the school department, so far as San Francisco is concerned, that is greater than another, it is the cramming process that is in use now. When my son was in the fourth grade, we had a teacher who undertook to teach the boys to speak French, but when the examination day came round the boys who had confined themselves to the English branches carried off the honors. It appears to me that this section might cover that ground and continue the teaching of languages, consequently I cannot support it entirely as it reads now.

REMARKS OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: I take the same position as Mr. Estee in respect to this section. I think these amendments ought to be voted down. I think that all that the needs of the times demand is simply an exclusion of any other language than the English from our common school system. That is about all, and that was very well elaborated by General Howard. In that portion of his argument I heartily agree with him. With that simple amendment added to this section, I believe that the section is not subject to any criticism.

Now, as the gentleman from San Francisco explained very clearly in the first place, about the use of the term "public school system," or "common school system," I would prefer the term "common school system," and I believe the Chairman of the committee proposes to introduce that language. It will then read: "The common school system shall include primary and grammar schools," etc., giving the Legislature or municipalities power to establish these high schools, normal schools, etc. It seems to me that that permissive power ought to be given. I see no objection to it. I do not see that it would be abused. People who are interested in these matters are the best judges, and the tendency is to relegate all these matters of a local character to the respective communities; so I see no objection. But when it comes to taxation, I do not care from what source you derive the tax; you say that the people of this State shall not be taxed to enable children to acquire any other language than the English language in our common school system. There is a boundary which divides, or should divide, the common school system from the private school, and from the State University. If you introduce the Latin language, or tolerate it, in our common school system, as suggested by my friend from Nevada, you make all these boys simply smatterers. The curriculum is not lengthy enough to enable them to acquire any knowledge of the Latin language. They cannot go, outside of this State, to any institution and enter a Freshman's class. It is different in other States. In Massachusetts they have their grammar schools, but they are entirely different from our grammar schools here. There the pupils go through a regular term in Latin grammar and Greek grammar, and graduate regularly. Here the pupils are taken through the hic, heac, hoc, and left there. They know nothing of the Latin language. They know nothing of the construction of the English language. These mellifluous compound words are derived mostly from the Greek, but they can never obtain any knowledge either of Latin or Greek in our common system such as we have here in California. The divisional line between our common school system, the private schools, and the University, is this: in the latter, let the patrons patronize the languages; in the former, none but the English. I am willing to extend a liberal education to all, but I am not in favor of giving pupils a few month's instruction in French, Latin, or Greek, under inefficient teachers, and then sending them out as educated. I think this age is utilitarian. It is different from the ancient age. That was the age of beauty, of sculpture, and of painting; of statuary, of architecture; of grand masterpieces in the arts. But it is science now which claims the vantage ground. This is the age of utility, and anything like a technical school I think should be sustained. Anything that will add one increment to the amount of knowledge which we have of utilitarian subjects should be encouraged.

I am therefore in favor of section six as it stands, but I do think, and I am indebted to General Howard for the suggestion, that we should add to it something of this kind: "and no language except the English shall be taught in any department of our common school system."

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. Chairman: I believe that it is the best indication that a law should be passed, or a fundamental principle laid down, that it has grown out of some necessity. Now, sir, the section that is presented here as section six of this report, grew out of the necessity for it in the City of San Francisco, and I state this upon the authority of ex-State Superintendent of Public Instruction, Swett. When he first made an effort to establish the evening schools in San Francisco, he was met time and again with this objection: "You cannot raise the money for this purpose, because it is not recognized in any part of the school system at all. If established it will be entirely outside of it." Of course, that objection was used by those who objected to the school entirely. This necessity of a recognition in some part of the fundamental law, or in the definition of the school system, of these evening schools, was the very starting point of this section. This was considered by the State Teachers' Association, and I think the section itself, in its original form, was written out by Mr. Swett. Now that is a case where a thing has grown out of a necessity for it. It should be recognized. Following the line we have already established in the report of the Committee on City, County, and Township Organization, it is giving to these localities the right of local self-government in education as in other things. Why should we say that no municipality, no county, no town, shall of its own motion establish anything but a primary and grammar school? Why should we say that they shall not have a right to establish any school that they see fit to establish, and to pay for it out of their own money. Sir, it is going far beyond the province of the Constitution to do any such thing. They should have the right to establish any school that they see fit to establish, and when they have done that, it is the right of this Constitution to say that being established, that school shall be a part of the public school system of this State, and shall be under the control of the public school officers. That is all that this section does. It gives them the right to establish these schools when the necessity arises. It says that whenever they are so established that they shall become a part of the public school system, for they are supported by the money raised by taxation voted by these municipalities, and therefore should be under the control of the public school officers.

Then all there is of the rest of the section is that no part of the State School Fund, or the State school tax, shall ever be used for the support of anything but the primary and grammar schools. I cannot see where the objection can come to this section. I think it is eminently just, eminently right; and if we fail to put it in here we shall fail in a part of our duty, in my judgment.

REMARKS OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I do not understand, myself, sir, that the section, as it is reported by the committee, pledges the State to the support of the schools established by the Legislature, or by municipal or district authority; neither do I understand that the amendment would prevent municipalities or districts from establishing such schools as they might choose. I have no objection myself, however, to the section as it stands, with one modification, which I hope to see inserted whether the amendments prevail or whether they are not adopted and the section is adopted instead. It will rid this section of one objection in the minds of members who have spoken here. That is, to strike out the words "primary and grammar," where they occur in the first and sixth lines, and insert instead the word "common," so that we should speak of this institution as common schools. The word "grammar" is not known to the present Constitution. It has no legal definition in this State. It only comes into use through the word adopted by the State Board of Education, in which they say that, for the purpose of designating the grades of schools more correctly, schools for beginners shall be called primary schools; those for the more advanced shall be called intermediate schools; and others, for those still further advanced, shall be called grammar schools. That is all the foundation there is for the adoption of the phrase "grammar school," as a phrase having a distinct signification agreeable to the wishes and purposes of this Convention. In point of fact, the term "grammar school" does imply more than this Convention has contemplated, and more than the committee designed to include in this section. It implies a school in which languages are taught, and especially the Latin and Greek. That is the meaning of the term as defined by lexicographers. A grammar school is a school that teaches the science of language. Webster says: "A school in which grammar, or the science of language, is taught; especially, a school in which Latin and Greek are taught." And it is true that under the name of grammar schools in some of the United States now Latin and Greek are taught, and any other language may be taught; and some other languages are taught—modern languages—in grammar schools. Now that, I do not think, is what this Convention desires to embody in this section. That difficulty can be obviated by dropping a useless form of words and using a term about which there has been no doubt for a hundred years, and can be none in this State—the term "common schools."

MR. BLACKMER. That term is so well defined in our own State that there can be no question about it.

MR. JONES. It is defined in this State only by the work of the Board of Education. The Constitution does not use the term. The Board of Education adopted that designation for the purpose of facilitating their work. If we mean common schools, why not say so, then the State Board may call it what they please—third grade school, or first grade school. But let us not adopt a phrase here that has a well defined meaning, the world over, as a school for teaching the science of languages—not merely the English language, but languages in general, and particularly Latin and Greek. There can be no harm in it. If we mean to be definite; if we do not want to have any uncertainty about the Constitution, let us use the term "common school," which I never knew a person to be in doubt about. We understand a common school to be a school devoted to instruction in the primary branches of an English education; to giving good, sound elementary instruction, and, so far as practicable, a perfect and complete instruction in reading, writing, and speaking the English language; in arithmetic, geography, and the grammar of the English language. There may be added to that, as there has been added in this State, under the Constitution we have, such elementary instruction as may be deemed wise, in natural philosophy, botany, physiology, and one or two other matters. This will accomplish all that our common school system contemplates. I desire greatly to see this adopted, and I shall ask the gentleman from Santa Clara if he will not accept an amendment to the amendment he has proposed, to insert the word "common," instead of the words "primary and grammar?"

MR. LAINE. I have no objection. I accept the amendment.

MR. JONES. If that be considered as inserted in that amendment, it will be one of the considerations in favor of the amendment; and if it be not, I shall hope to have an opportunity to offer it hereafter.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Freeman, Murphy, Hunter, and Larkin.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I believe the Chairman of the committee is entitled to address the committee.

THE CHAIRMAN. The main question is demanded. Gentlemen, the question is: Shall the main question be now put?

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine.

The amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

The amendment was rejected.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment to go in at the end of the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"In the primary and grammar schools, no language but the English language shall be taught."

MR. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amendment to section six: add the following after the word 'schools,' in line six: 'The course of instruction in the public schools shall, when practicable, include lectures by the teachers thereof upon the subjects of labor and agriculture.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order at present.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Substitute for section six: 'The public school system shall include common schools, and such high schools and evening schools as may be established by municipal or district authority; but the entire revenue derived from the State School Fund, and the State school tax, shall be applied exclusively to the support of common schools.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not an amendment to the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I know of no objection to the amendment proposed by the honorable delegate from Los Angeles. It is a declaration of the system as it now exists. If it be objectionable at all, it is simply so because it is putting a provision in for all future time, which may become inoperative and objectionable hereafter; but it is the present system exactly as it now exists; therefore I do not think the committee are strenuous upon the subject. But as we have that system already, and there is no disposition on the part of any citizen of the State, at the present time, to change it, for the time being I do not see any necessity for its coming in at the present time.

MR. McCALLUM. I would like to ask if the foreign languages are not now taught in San Francisco?

MR. WINANS. No, sir; they are in the cosmopolitan schools.

MR. HOWARD. I know that they are in Los Angeles.

MR. McCALLUM. Is not that a primary school alone?

MR. WINANS. No, sir.

MR. McCALLUM. I am told that before they learn the alphabet children are taught foreign languages in the cosmopolitan schools.

MR. JOYCE. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Education, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called, and quorum present.

EDUCATION.

MR. WINANS. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to further consider the report of the Committee on Education.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard.

MR. HERRINGTON. When it is in order, I desire to offer an amendment to the section.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say one word as to the objections raised to the use of the word "grammar" as applied to schools. The word "grammar" is defined by the lexicographers as the elementary principle of any science or branch of knowledge. I understand the Chairman of the committee to say that they are not opposed to that.

MR. WINANS. I understand there is a great difference of opinion as to whether that will cut off the cosmopolitan schools in San Francisco. If it would, then we are opposed to it, because we want to leave the localities to administer their own affairs.

MR. HOWARD. It would cut them off from teaching Latin and Greek in the grammar schools. It would not prevent any municipality that chose to establish high schools, from teaching anything they pleased. Therefore it does not trench upon the principle of local government. But it will prevent State taxation for any locality to teach Greek, or German, or French, or Spanish, in the primary or grammar schools. That is the object of the amendment. I see no propriety in teaching anything, as far as languages are concerned, but the English language. If a man wants his child taught the languages, let him pay for it. If the municipalities want to teach the languages, let them vote to establish such schools, and pay for them. Now, the section also says that the Legislature may establish any number of technical schools. The word "technical," according to the dictionary, embraces any particular science or business, and under that provision the Legislature might establish law schools, medical schools, theological schools, and tax the people of this State to pay for them. Now, I imagine that is not the sentiment of the people of this State. I do not suppose that the people of this State, if a vote was to be taken on it, would vote to teach Latin and Greek, or to educate lawyers or doctors, or that they would vote to organize medical schools, or law schools, or theological schools. Therefore I am opposed to this thing. I see no propriety in it, no justice in it. The widow woman may be assessed and taxed on her bed and sewing machine, to support such schools, and under the law as it now stands, the Tax Collector can seize and sell them for taxes. Under this system of taxation I see no propriety in taxing the people to teach Latin and Greek, and other languages, Hebrew, and special professions. It seems to me eminently proper, that as far as the primary and grammar schools are concerned, they should be confined to the English language. Almost all the different denominations have colleges, in which they teach the languages, and some of them teach them in an eminent degree. I may mention the College of Santa Clara, where the languages are taught as well as they are anywhere in the world. Now, I propose that all this matter of the languages be left to private management, to the ordinary institutions of the country, and that the people shall not be taxed to teach either the ancient or modern languages in the common schools.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: If this amendment should be adopted, the section will then provide merely that the entire revenue derived from the State School Fund and State taxes, shall be applied exclusively to the support of primary and grammar schools; and that in the primary and grammar schools, no language but the English language shall be taught.

MR. HOWARD. This section will not prevent them establishing any amount of schools, but it provides that they shall not be paid for by the State.

MR. McCALLUM. This then, will simply provide that these primary and grammar schools, which are supported out of the State School Fund, shall teach no other than the English language. That is right, I think. I ask the Chairman of the committee, if it is not true that, in these cosmopolitan schools, they teach the foreign languages? I think it is the case. It is true in Oakland, moreover, that the infant classes are taught the foreign languages, and the children are taught the French alphabet at the same time that they are taught the English alphabet. This system is simply ridiculous. The only argument I ever heard was that children can learn the foreign accent better at that age. This is the very worst system of cramming. It is difficult enough to learn English, without being taught the foreign languages at the same time. My own judgment would be, that, in all public schools, the teaching should be in English. I am willing to waive my personal judgment, and support the other feature of this report, that these schools may be established in local districts, and paid for by the districts. If they want to teach the foreign languages, let them do it, and pay for it; but, so far as the State fund is concerned, it seems a contradiction of terms to say that the funds provided by the State, contributed, in a great part, by the National Government, for the common schools, shall be diverted to that sort of teaching that is not common teaching, but is of a higher grade, and not properly classed with it. I trust the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles will be adopted. I should prefer it to read in this way: To leave out the words "primary and grammar," and insert "common," so as to read, "common schools." I will move to strike out and amend as I have indicated.

REMARKS OF MR. WELLER.

MR. WELLER. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman from Alameda speaks very learnedly of our common schools. According to his argument he wants it to apply to the cosmopolitan schools in cities and towns where the cosmopolitan schools are taught separately. But in the country we have no other except the common school system. The tax-paying portion of the community support these schools, and they would be restricted as to what they should teach, irrespective of what they pay. They can pay their money and employ teachers, but they are not to be allowed to teach only certain things. They are obliged to be restricted in what they teach, but they have to pay just the same. The tendency will be to lower the grade, and lower the occupation of teachers, who only arrive at a certain point that they may be able to teach common schools. It is an old saying that a teacher cannot know too much. Even at the wages we are paying at the present time, we cannot employ first class teachers for our graded schools. If we want the benefit of first class instruction for our country children, we are obliged to send them into town. There are certain ages when children are better fitted to study certain things, when their time would be better devoted to those things; when they are too young to send from home, and then is when they must have a stone placed on their heads; when these restrictions come, when we are not permitted, even though we pay for it, to have the same things taught that we are taught in the cities and towns. It is an outrage to put a restriction of that kind in the Constitution of this State. If you want to put this kind of a provision in, put in a restriction as to taxes, but don't compel us to pay just the same, and then restrict us. We have to pay our teachers so much any way, and they are often capable of doing a great deal more work than they are required to do, and there is no reason why they should not be allowed to do it. If this restriction is placed in the Constitution designating a certain course of study; that the children shall only go so far, it is certainly going to have a discouraging effect, and will destroy the real benefit and object of education that this very money is appropriated for. It is not right to restrict them and say how far they shall or shall not go. Give the children an opportunity of getting all they possibly can for the money. Give them all the benefits they can get, for it is their right. I would rather see the school fund restricted than to see that provision put in, saying that they shall be hampered and allowed to go only so far. It is placing a stone upon their heads which will allow them to rise only so far. I say it is wrong. The evil is, if an evil exists, that we are not doing enough, not that we are doing too much. I want perfect liberty in this matter, and the Legislature is fully competent to redress all the evils that may arise. They have full authority to do so under the Constitution. And a provision in the Constitution would be no stronger than a statutory provision to the same effect, provided the people want such a law.

REMARKS OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles. I think it is much better than the proposition of the gentleman from Alameda. Section five says the Legislature shall provide a system of public schools; and section six says the public school system shall include primary and grammar schools, and such high schools as may be provided for. Now, if you desire to prohibit the teaching of foreign languages in the primary and grammar schools, say so. Don't say "common schools," for that applies to all the schools in the system. Therefore, I think it is much better to allow the word to stand, if the committee is in favor of that system. I certainly favor it. I have had something to do with observing education during the past few years, being connected with it officially. It seems to me the great problem is, how to train and educate the young; how to foster the intellectual growth without interfering with their physical growth. I would not give a cent for a man, be he the most cultured and finished scholar in the land, if he has no physical constitution. Our system now includes as much as any boy or girl can master without impairing the physical growth.

MR. WELLER. That may apply to the children of towns and cities. But give them plenty of exercise, and there is no danger.

MR. McFARLAND. I think something is due to our city children. It is claimed that the county children are not educated at all. I say that there is too much cramming. Children should have more time for play and exercise, and I believe they have all the studies now, without any foreign languages, that they can master. I think it is a waste of time, to say nothing of money, to allow them to study any other but the English language. They get nothing but a smattering of it at best, and what they do learn of it is forgotten in after life in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred. Where it is necessary to give them a more finished education, let it be done at the high schools, or at private schools. I believe the American nation should teach nothing at the public expense but the American language. I believe the great difficulty will be for the next generation to nationalize this country. I believe that one of the first things necessary to accomplish that result is to nationalize the language, and to give to all those who come here from foreign countries to understand that this is an English speaking country, and that at the public expense no language shall be taught save the language of the nation.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: The adoption of the amendment to the amendment, proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum, would destroy the character of the section as it now stands, and subvert this plan. The section provides that the public school system shall include primary and grammar schools, and such high schools as may be designated. The proposed amendment reads that the entire revenue derived from the State School Fund, and State school tax shall be applied exclusively to the support of common schools. Now, sir, the words "public schools," and "common schools," mean the same thing. In this connection the word "public," and the word "common," are convertible terms.

MR. McCALLUM. I will withdraw the amendment to avoid discussion.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I wish to renew the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda, just withdrawn.

SPEECH OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: In regard to that matter, it is a mistake to suppose that there is no distinction between the words "common schools" and "public schools." The committee propose, in a section here, that the common schools shall receive money from the Common School Fund, and subsequently they say the public school system shall consist of primary and grammar schools, high schools, etc. The system is composed of parts having some relation to each other. The common school is one of these parts by their own admission. The high school is another of these parts; the technical school another of these parts. Then what is the use of telling us that when you name one of these parts it includes all the others. The system of instruction includes all the educational institutions supported and authorized by the State, and nothing else. But one of these institutions may be a common school.

Now, sir, I move to restore the words which the gentleman from Alameda had moved to insert and then withdrew. In doing so I have this in view, which I will submit to the Convention, and that is, that we shall say in this Constitution just what we mean, as near as we can; that we shall not juggle with words; that we shall not use words in a double sense; that we shall select words that will convey our meaning as near as may be. Now, if we mean primary or grammar schools, let us say so; if we mean common schools, let us say so; and if we mean something else, say so in so many words. The simple truth is, that there is nothing in this section five to indicate that there is any school system in the State. It does not allude to common schools, whereas, in the previous section, it has been provided that a common school system shall be established, and that those common schools shall receive certain funds from the revenues of the State. In the section now under consideration, nobody can discover that there is any such thing as a common school. It no more provides for common schools, in words, than it does for high schools or technical schools. Therefore I feel like urging, that if we mean primary and grammar schools, we say so; and if we mean nothing else, let us know it so we can act accordingly. It is not with a design to limit or prescribe the course of education in general, at all, but only prescribing the course in one particular in the common schools. It is said here, let them all be taught. But there is a limit to all things, and the man who tries to accomplish too much, accomplishes nothing. The common school system is not capable of furnishing an elementary education in all the arts and sciences. As soon as we allow it to pass beyond common bounds, beyond certain reasonable limits, it becomes worthless; and the muddled child will come out of school, having gone through everything, and knowing nothing well. Our Constitution, which we are now endeavoring to amend, provides for a common school system. It says nothing about primary and grammar schools. If it prescribed that the common school system should consist of grammar and primary schools, it would have defined it. But this was not done. The Constitution said nothing about grammar schools or primary schools, and for that reason the term common schools, a term having an American common law signification, as distinct as any other term in the English language. But the term grammar school has no well understood significance. The State Board of Education, as a matter of convenience, uses it for the advanced grade. It is a designation of a certain grade in the common schools. They designate the course of study. When the scholars are so far advanced, they belong in the grammar school, and have a certain course of study.

Now, my theory is that there is too much cramming. Still, that is a matter that may well be left to the Legislature, and to the educational Boards in future. Sir, I cannot help recalling the words of Edward Everett, when speaking of common school education and its value. He says it is a system in which the elementary branches are taught; reading, writing, and speaking the English language; in which arithmetic, in which physical geography, constituted a good education. Now, when to that is added a knowledge of physiology, history, the Constitution of the United States, and of the State in which the child resides, he has got an excellent education. I do not object to education to the utmost limit. All I claim is that the languages, when taught, should be separated from the common school system to prevent its being gorged. Those of our foreign born citizens who have children in the public schools ought to stand by me in this view. They come here from foreign lands for the purpose of becoming good and useful American citizens, to participate in the affairs of this Government, and they know that the business affairs of this nation will be carried on in the English language. So there can be no line drawn here between native and foreign born citizens, for there is no such issue.

SPEECH OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: It appears to me that the amendment offered by Judge Jones creates the very confusion which he says he wants to avoid. I was about saying that the word "public," and the word "common," were convertible terms, when the honorable member from Alameda saw the force of the objection, and withdrew the amendment. Now, section six is entirely clear. It provides that the public school system, which is the same thing as the common school system, (public schools is the term used in New York and elsewhere; common schools is the term used in the books, and they mean the same thing) shall embrace primary and grammar schools, and such high schools, evening schools, and technical schools, etc., as may be established by the Legislature, or by municipal or district authority; but the entire revenue derived from the State School Fund, and the State school tax, shall be applied exclusively to the support of primary and grammar schools. By the direct force of language, most clear and explicit, it provides that high schools, evening schools, and technical schools, are not to be sustained by the public moneys of the State—not to be supported out of any fund. It is to be applied exclusively to primary and and grammar schools.

MR. JONES. What is there in the section that says these primary and grammar schools are more than common schools.

MR. WINANS. I am talking about the preceding section. Had the gentleman not pressed the amendment to section four, which was carried through, there would have been no difficulty. He was paving the way then, for the very difficulty which he urges now. But the language of section six, as far as it controls the section, is plain and distinct, and it controls the language of section four, because section four declares the general principle. Now, the question is, what is the meaning of primary and grammar schools? From the very organization of the State Government, primary and grammar schools have been in existence in one continuous, unvarying form. They exist now as they existed five and twenty years ago. Their character is distinctly defined, and their distinction thoroughly known, and the status of this system is just as complete and manifest to the people as that of the State University. When you say that the public moneys shall be applied exclusively to the support of the primary and grammar schools, if there is any force in language, it means that it shall not be appropriated to other schools.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. DAVIS. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Barbour, Steele, Webster and Evey.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, proposed by the gentleman from Mariposa.

Division being called for, the amendment was lost by a vote of 52 ayes to 54 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard.

Division being called for, the amendment was adopted by a vote of 72 ayes to 37 noes.

MR. HERRINGTON. I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Insert, after the word 'school,' first occurring in line two, the words 'State Normal School.'"

MR. HERRINGTON. That question was before the Convention in another amendment, but it was so connected that it could not be well separated. I think the State Normal School ought to be included in the system, and it ought not to be ignored; it ought not to be left out.

MR. WINANS. That would make bad wording. The words "Normal School" would occur twice in the same line. It would advance the Normal School beyond the position which it now occupies. It would alter the meaning of the section entirely, because it does not occupy its present existence under the Constitution. The term "such normal schools," is quite sufficient to include the State Normal School. The State Normal School is not sustained out of the common school fund, but by a separate appropriation.

MR. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman: Is my amendment in order now?

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

Lost.

MR. HARRISON. I offer my amendment now.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The course of instruction in such schools shall, when practical, include lectures by the teachers thereof upon the subjects of labor and agriculture, in order to inculcate their necessity and importance in the promotion of human happiness and civilization."

MR. HARRISON. This may be stated in a few words. It is a notorious fact that a vast proportion of the youth of the present age is growing, especially here in California, are growing up with notions averse to labor, and with a desire to live without doing any work or follow any useful occupation. This is a deplorable state of affairs, and it is our duty to devise some means to correct these erroneous ideas. I believe one of the best means of correcting this wide-spread evil is to inculcate, by lectures in our schools, the great necessity of labor—that every human being should be a worker, and not a drone. The amendment provides for this very necessary instruction. I hope many of the lawyers won't vote against the amendment. I am sure the farmers and mechanics will not. I do not believe there is any gentleman on this floor who would like to see his sons grow up in idleness, and become worthless hoodlums, and prey upon other people for a living, instead of living upon their own honesty and industry.

MR. WINANS. If this amendment should be adopted it would be the first attempt at introducing a course of study into the Constitution.

SPEECH OF MR. LINDOW.

MR. LINDOW. Mr. Chairman: I can't see why the gentleman opposes so much the foreign language. I am a foreigner myself. I have got five children, and I don't educate them in my own language. Now, sir, it is a true fact that the American people want to have education, more so than anybody else. When I come in my own house I talk to my children in German, and I have given them private lessons in French. I would not give a cent for all the French or German the children learn of some of the teachers. It is not worth a cent. But it ought to be taught well, so it would be some account. Now, I shall not vote for the section as it stands. Now, if the gentlemen who have seats on this floor want to have this section adopted, and this Constitution adopted, they must not go to work and strike out the foreign languages.

MR. MORELAND. I move to amend Mr. Harrison's amendment by adding: "Provided, that such lecture shall not exceed ten minutes in length, and shall not be delivered in broken English." [Laughter.]

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the adoption of the amendment.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section seven.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 7. A State Board of Education, consisting of two members from each Congressional District, shall be elected by the qualified voters of the district, at the first gubernatorial election after the adoption of this Constitution, who shall hold their office for the term of four years, and enter upon the duties thereof on the first Monday of January next after their election; provided, that such members first so elected shall be divided into two equal classes, each class consisting of one member from each district, and that the first class shall go out of office at the expiration of two years from the commencement of their term of office; and at each general biennial election, after such gubernatorial election, one member of such Board shall be elected from each Congressional district, so that one half thereof shall be elected biennially. The Superintendent of Public Instruction shall be ex officio a member of such Board, and President thereof.

MR. CAPLES. I move to strike out section seven.

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section eight.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 8. The State Board of Education shall recommend a series of text-books for adoption by the local Boards of Education, or by the Boards of Supervisors and County Superintendents of the several counties where such local Boards do not exist, but such recommendation shall not be compulsory. After the adoption of a series of text-books by said Boards, or any of them, such books must be continued in use for not less than four years. The State Board of Education shall also have control of the examination of teachers and the granting of certificates. They shall possess such further powers and perform such further duties as may be prescribed by law.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I move an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature shall have power to provide for a State Board of Education, and prescribe its duties."

MR. O'SULLIVAN. I offer a substitute for the section.

THE CHAIRMAN. There is already one substitute pending.

REMARKS OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: For one I am opposed to both sections seven and eight in the report. I did not think, nor do I now, that it is necessary to have an elective Board, if any. But at the suggestion of some members, instead of striking out section eight, it was thought best by some to leave the Constitution elastic, so that the Legislature at some future time, if they should want a Board of Education, might provide for it, and prescribe its duties, and therefore I have proposed this amendment. Sir, section eight, without some such amendment, would be meaningless. We would have to strike it out. But instead of that I propose a substitute for it.

REMARKS OF MR. BLACKMER.

MR. BLACKMER. If this school book question is not provided for in section eight, there will be nothing done about it, and it will remain as it is at present.

MR. ESTEE. As far as I am concerned, I do not wish this Convention to do anything about the school book question. I speak my own sentiments.

MR. BLACKMER. If there is any one question, it seems to me, that ought to be taken away from the Legislature and put somewhere, in order to rid that body of the influence of a powerful lobby, it is this. It is a well known fact that the Legislature now has power to say who shall determine what the text-books shall be. It is provided that the State Board shall require uniformity.

MR. ESTEE. Has not the Legislature full power now, without any constitutional provision, to prescribe the rules and regulations relative to text-books?

MR. BLACKMER. Yes, sir; and the Legislature has never done anything, except to make the text-books uniform throughout the State, and so have left this matter where it stands to-day. In my judgment it is an evil that ought to be corrected. This section makes it the duty of the State Board to recommend a series of text-books which, in their judgment, are the best that can be procured. It is then left optional with the local Boards of Education, or in places where local Boards do not exist, the Supervisors of the county are to adopt, if they see fit, one of the series; or they may adopt some other. It provides for county uniformity, which is certainly a very desirable thing; but it obviates State uniformity, from the fact, that while the recommendation of the State Board will naturally carry great weight with it, there is nothing obligatory about it. These are certainly very desirable things. It would be certainly a very undesirable thing to allow each district in the county to decide for itself, because it might result in having two or three different kinds of books in the same county. A child going out of one district into another, would be obliged in that case to procure new books. For this reason we should insist on county uniformity. I hope something of this kind will be adopted in this Constitution, for the purpose of removing this vexed question from the Legislature, where it has been a curse; for the purpose of securing county uniformity, and, in a measure, State uniformity. I think it is an improvement on the old system, and I know that those who have watched the course of this text-book question for the last eight or ten years will be satisfied with this provision.

REMARKS OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco. I was desirous of striking out section seven, and I would certainly desire to place something in its stead that would prevent the Legislature from imposing upon us a State Board. I desire to leave this matter to the counties, and I will read to the committee an amendment which I shall offer, if the pending amendment is voted down. "The local Boards of Education, or the Boards of Supervisors and County Superintendents of the several counties which may not have County Boards of Education, shall adopt a series of text-books for the use of the common schools for their respective counties. The text-books so adopted shall continue in use for not less than four years. They shall also have control of the examination of teachers, and grant teachers' certificates within their respective jurisdictions." This carries it home to the control of the people, and gets rid of the infamous lobby around the Legislature. Let us have it among ourselves, so as to control the text-book matter and the examination of teachers.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: Is it in order for the member from Santa Clara to offer an amendment now?

THE CHAIRMAN. He can offer an amendment to the amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I will second that amendment. This amendment will lodge the power in the local Boards, where it should reside. This matter of State uniformity has done great evil to the State and mischief to the people. Wherever it has been tried the same thing has almost invariably resulted. It induces these men who publish books in other States to come here and purchase their entrance into our schools by the use of bribes. We are ashamed to contemplate it, and yet every man knows it is true. You destroy the method, and entirely overwhelm the possibility of its further existence, when you adopt this system of allowing every locality to determine its own course of education, and you realize the highest interests of the people. As we have adopted the general principle of local legislation, we should certainly adopt the same course here. I think the gentleman has reached a most complete method of getting rid of this evil. I certainly not only second the amendment he offers, but shall support it, and I hope to see it adopted by this Convention. When this matter shall have been taken away from the Legislature, the community will be at peace.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will be adopted. I am opposed to a State Board entirely; and we certainly want to take this matter out of the hands of the lobby and the Legislature. I am opposed to the State Board, because there is almost always frauds practiced in regard to the examination questions. It is not as honest as a local Board, and is not, and never will be, as competent as a local Board.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature, at the first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall provide by law for the compilation and printing of a complete series of school text-books, all the necessary mechanical work connected therewith to be done in the State Printing Office. The text-books thus compiled and printed, shall be the only text-books used in the public schools of this State after the first day of January, eighteen hundred and eighty-one, and shall be furnished to all scholars in said schools, free of cost."

REMARKS OF MR. O'SULLIVAN.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. That will do away altogether with this lobby. In presenting this substitute to section eight, I have no other motive than the strongest desire to subserve the interests of the people of this State, firmly believing that the section which I propose, will, if adopted, work in that direction, and to the public satisfaction. We are all aware that this question regarding the adoption of text-books to be used in the public schools, has been a source of never ending wrangling for the past twenty years, between rival book houses, who had been seeking to secure the selection of their particular books by the authorities in this State; and these miserable, competing, rival book houses have stopped at nothing to accomplish their ends. They have corrupted the School Department, and at every session of the Legislature, whenever any proposition in regard to school books came before the Legislature, one of the most corrupt lobbies that has ever gathered in this building has besieged these halls. These are notorious facts, Mr. President, and these things will be done away with if you adopt my proposition. At the last session of the Legislature, bills were introduced, one by Mr. Smith, of Los Angeles, and one by Senator Johnson, of Sacramento, both proposing to take this vexed question away from the Legislature, and away forever from the corrupt lobby influence, by having the State compile and print school text-books. But Bancroft had his agents, attorneys, and lobbyists upon the floors of your halls, and the bills never became laws. McGuffey and Bancroft are powerful in this building. I understand that both firms have their legions hovering around this Convention. Some of our teachers are simply agents and lobbyists for Bancroft & Co. Some of them receive a royalty upon books sold. Now, the State can do this work, and furnish these books cheaper that any private publishing house can do it. We have one of the finest and most complete printing offices in the world, lying idle more than half the year, and with the addition of a book-bindery, costing three or four thousand dollars, all the work can be done here as well as in the east, or anywhere else. The compilation of the books may cost five or ten thousand dollars. You would save an immense amount of money. You have every guarantee of economy in getting out these books. It would be a vast benefit to the people of this State, and destroy the occupation of one of the most infamous lobbies in the country. It would save to the State a half a million dollars every two or four years, which the people lose by reason of the frequent changes in text-books. Finally, if the State prints these text-books, and distributes them free to all alike, no one can object, and the feelings of parents, poor parents, will not be hurt.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I will withdraw the amendment I offered. The amendment presented by the gentleman from Santa Clara is in accordance with my views; I am in favor of home rule.

THE CHAIRMAN. There being no objection, the gentleman has leave.

MR. LAINE. Then I will offer my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out all after the words 'section eight,' and insert the following as a substitute: 'The local Boards of Education, or the Boards of Supervisors and County Superintendents of the several counties which may not have County Boards of Education, shall adopt a series of text-books for the use of the common schools for their respective counties. The text-books so adopted shall continue in use for not less than four years. They shall also have control of the examination of teachers, and grant teachers' certificates within their respective jurisdictions.'"

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the proposition of the member from San Francisco, that a series of school books, to be determined upon by the proper authorities of the State, shall be printed at the State Printing Office. I think that would entirely do away with this text-book lobby, in favor of this series or that series. I have before me some estimates as to the cost of text-books printed at the State Printing Office. For the first thousand, complete in every respect, and equal to the Pacific Coast Readers, the total cost would be five thousand nine hundred and thirty-six dollars and twenty-six cents. That is for the first thousand, and for each additional thousand the cost would be one thousand one hundred and sixty-eight dollars and forty-cents. There are five books in the series, and that would bring each book to a cost of about twenty-five cents. I don't know what price is being paid to these agents from the east for the readers, but I believe it is in the vicinity of seventy-five cents per volume. There would be a saving to the people of fifty cents on each volume. Now it is a fact that this State has, at large expense, established, within a few rods of the Capitol, one of the finest printing offices in the United States. There is hardly any species of printing which cannot be done there as well and as cheaply as it can be done in any State in the Union, and it would be proper, it seems to me, for the State to utilize the office in this way.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I would like to ask my colleague if the books are to be selected by the local Boards, in the counties, how can the printing be done at the State Printing Office, because each county might select a different set of books? They must therefore be the same. If that course is taken there would have to be some central authority to select the books.

MR. AYERS. I am speaking on the question on the supposition that we may establish some central authority which would authorize the compilation of these books. I don't think it would be a very great disadvantage to the children of the State to have a uniform series of readers throughout the State. The great objection now is lack of uniformity; it has led to speculation and corruption. I don't think there would be any serious objection to uniformity, and the State can lay down a rule by which a series of readers can be compiled by the State, the State owning the copyright and printing the books, and then all this corruption about text-books will be done away with. I believe it would be of great benefit to this State, and I believe we have plenty of writers capable of compiling a series of text-books.

REMARKS OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to centralization, as much so on matters pertaining to education as I am on political matters, and I am under the impression that the principles embraced in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara are correct, and I hope they will meet the approval of this committee. It is in accordance with the principles which this body has already adopted. It gives to certain parts of the country certain rights and the control of their own affairs, and it avoids thereby the vicious influence of the lobby upon the Legislature of this State, by granting to the local Boards of these counties the right to choose the kind of books which they may, in their judgment, think best. It is a sort of freedom that will tend to keep the people of the counties awake, because they will feel a personal liability and responsibility resting upon them in matters of education, and in this way they will be made to feel that the interests and the success of the rising generation depend upon them, and they will therefore be alive to the importance of the trust reposed in them. And having the teachers to examine, either by the Board of Supervisors or other local authority, as a matter of course there will be a degree of interest throughout, and I am under the impression that this will be a solution of the whole difficulty. I hope the members will consider this proposition in its true light, in accordance with its importance, for it is a matter of no small consequence. I am under the impression that when we look at it well we will consider this amendment to be right.

REMARKS OF MR. OVERTON.

MR. OVERTON. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment offered by Mr. Laine, and opposed to the other amendment pending. I don't think this State wants to go into the business of printing and publishing books for the children of this State. The way it is now, nearly all the taxes of this State are used up for the common schools. It costs more than as much again as all the balance of the departments of government. Now, in addition to that, they propose that this State shall go to work and print free text-books. Why don't they ask for the rest, and require the taxpayers to clothe the children, and furnish them with shoes as well as books? I think the cases are parallel. You might just as well ask the taxpayers to furnish clothes as to furnish books. Nor can I see how it will tend to prevent jobs and corruption, because if the State enters into the business of publishing school books, there will be just as many jobs as ever, on the part of those who are interested in furnishing materials and supplies, and the people will have to pay for it. I believe the children should buy their own books; then the parents will take some interest in the way the children take care of them.

MR. LINDOW. Let me ask a question. If the State furnishes the books, they would be only entitled to one book to one child. Wouldn't they be taken care of? If the child he took and tore it up, he would not be allowed in that school until the parents got another one. I know cases in Germany where you had to go with a broken book. [Laughter.]

MR. OVERTON. Have you got through with your question? I don't think the children would take as good care of them as they do now. The parents would not take so much interest in them. Independent of that, we have no right to use these books unless the State buys the copyright; and if we do that, there will be the same chance for jobs that there is now.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question. Seconded by Messrs. Winans, Estee, Biggs, and Tinnin.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put.

Carried—Ayes, 60; noes, 27.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. O'Sullivan.

Division being called, the amendment was lost, by a vote of 41 ayes to 63 noes.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine.

Adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section nine.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 9. No public money shall ever be appropriated for the support of any sectarian or denominational school, or any school not under the exclusive control of the officers of the public schools.

MR. RINGGOLD. Mr. Chairman: An amendment to section nine.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to the section: 'Nor shall any sectarian or denominational doctrines be taught or instructions therein be permitted, directly or indirectly, in any of the common schools of this State.'"

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No sectarian or denominational books shall be used, and no sectarian or denominational instruction imparted in the public schools of this State."

REMARKS OF MR. RINGGOLD.

MR. RINGGOLD. Mr. Chairman: I don't see that the amendment to the amendment is any better than the amendment.

MR. HERRINGTON. It adds to it.

MR. RINGGOLD. There is more in that amendment than you may suppose. I could mention the name of a lady teacher in San Francisco, who makes a business of knowing the particular faith of the parents or guardians of the children in her class, and I assure you that some of the children are more favored than others. The thing is done often, and I want to guard against any such influence in our public schools.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from San Francisco. It is a very proper addition to section nine. The section prohibits the appropriation of public moneys to the support of sectarian schools, but it does not go far enough and prevent the teaching of sectarian doctrines in the common schools. Therefore it seems to me to be a very proper amendment to adopt. The amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara is on the same subject, but in my judgment is not so comprehensive as the other. One excludes such books, while the other goes farther, and says, that no such instruction shall be given, directly or indirectly. It not only includes the exclusion of books of that character, but forbids any instruction of that kind, in any way whatever. Therefore I think it covers all that is intended by the gentleman from Santa Clara, and is more compact in its phraseology.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I see no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco. I believe I am not allowed to accept amendments for the committee. I would accept it if I could. I am satisfied the committee have no objection to it.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I am no great stickler for this amendment. If the gentlemen of this Convention don't see fit to exclude sectarian books from the public schools, and yet exclude sectarian doctrines from being taught, I have no objections. My own opinion is, however, that sectarian books as well as sectarian doctrines, ought to be excluded.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Herrington.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Ringgold.

Adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section ten.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 10. The University of California shall constitute a public trust, and its organization and government shall be perpetually continued in their existing form and character, subject only to such legislative control as may be necessary to insure compliance with the terms of its endowments, and of the several Acts of the Legislature of this State, and of the Congress of the United States, donating lands or money for its support. It shall be entirely independent from all political or sectarian influences, and kept free therefrom in the appointment of its Regents, and in the administration of its affairs.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to add to the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Regents and Managers of the University shall provide for instruction in agriculture, mechanic arts, mineralogy, and the applied sciences."

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I think there ought to be an agricultural department in the University. I am somewhat surprised that this provision in relation to agriculture has been neglected. The State University is endowed with two hundred sections of land, and with that they can have a department for mineralogy and agriculture without any material increase in the expenses. The mechanic arts ought also to be taught, and the applied sciences ought also to be taught. With such an endowment this ought to become a great and useful institution. It was endowed as an agricultural college in part, and these sciences ought not to be neglected. And I think the agricultural interest in particular, the cultivation of the soil, and all that pertains to it, ought to be taught. The mechanic arts ought to be taught; the applied sciences ought to be taught. We are fitting out too many men for the professions; we are overstocking the professional field, and we are not educating children sufficiently in the practical duties of life. We are not educating them or preparing them for the great productive employments. I believe the University ought to be prepared to teach all these things, and thus the students can select their own course of study, and study whatever branches may be necessary to fit them for the occupation or calling which they may desire to pursue. They ought to be allowed here to select their course of study, as they are in many of the universities in Europe, so that they may be fitted for the occupations which they are to follow in life.

MR. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The University of California shall constitute a public trust, subject to such legislative control as may be necessary to insure compliance with the terms of its endowment. It shall be entirely independent of all political or sectarian influences, and kept free therefrom in the appointment of its Regents and in the administration of its affairs. The Legislature shall provide for the proper investment and security of the several funds of the University; provided, that all the proceeds of the public lands donated to this State by Act of Congress, approved July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and the Acts amendatory thereof, for the support of a College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, shall be invested in a separate fund, and the interest thereon to be appropriated exclusively for the benefit and support of said Agricultural and Mechanic Arts College, as specified in said grant, and the Legislature shall provide"——

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment is not in order at present.

SPEECH OF MR. FREUD.

MR. FREUD. Mr. Chairman: I rise to speak in defense of the University of California. As a member of the Committee on Education, I desire to express my approval of section ten of the report, perpetuating our State University in its existing form and character. As a graduate of the University, I feel that I owe it as a duty to the people of this State to speak frankly and fairly of their highest institution of learning. It has fallen to my lot to be the only alumnus of the University in this Constitutional Convention. I, therefore, feel compelled to ask your kind attention and earnest consideration of the few facts and thoughts which I shall here endeavor to present. Should I overleap the allotted time, I hope the committee will indulge me a few moments longer.

It is needless for me on this occasion to rehearse to you the inestimable value and importance of a good system for the higher education of the youth of our country. You who have shared its blessings know full well their worth. Those of you whom fortune has not favored with so precious a privilege are, nevertheless, ready to admit its magnificence, and ever zealous to bestow it upon your children. In every pursuit of life, be it ever so high or so humble, it is, after all, grit, and brains, and intelligence that in the end will carry the day. A free and pure public school system is the imperishable corner-stone of the American Republic. The lonely school house on the distant mountain slope, beside some trickling stream, is its basis of power, and the majestic university in the vanguard of civilization and progress is its tower of strength. Enlarge, perfect, complete that splendid structure, and upon it will be erected a republic, whose foundation shall rest in the eternal rocks of truth and wisdom, and whose career shall brighten with age and prosper with time.

Many favorable circumstances have combined to give to California a University of which she may well be proud. Numerous and valuable grants and gifts from the College of California, from Congress, from the State, and from private individuals, united to create and foster it in its infancy, and now maintain it in its growing maturity. Its course has been directed and guided by many wise and faithful men. But ten years old, it has risen from a mere infant, an obscure college, to the rank of one of the best and most famous universities in the land. In eighteen hundred and sixty-nine it started with but forty students. To-day it has over three hundred, and including the professional colleges, a grand total of over five hundred. It has to day, in active operation, eight complete colleges—Agriculture (three), Engineering (two), Chemistry, Law, Letters, Mechanics, Medicine, Mining, with all their subordinate branches, are fairly and fully represented. The University library numbers over fifteen thousand volumes. The museums, cabinets, and laboratories are among the most complete of any this side of the Atlantic. The rapid progress and prosperity of the University of California is a most marvelous event. It stands without a parallel in the recorded history of either ancient or modern learning.

The University of California has been established by the Legislature in accordance with the Constitution, and intrusted to the care of a Board of Regents, consisting of the Governor, the Lieutenant Governor, the Speaker of the Assembly, the State Superintendent of Public Instruction, the President of the State Agricultural Society, the President of the Mechanics Institute of San Francisco, the President of the University, and sixteen appointed Regents. The office of Regent is wholly honorary. There is no pay attached to the position. The instruction and government of the students at Berkeley are intrusted to the Academic Senate, consisting of some thirty-six professors and instructors. They have been selected for their special qualifications for the lines of inquiry and work assigned to them. They are recognized authorities in their respective departments, and many of them are men renowned, not only in this country but also in Europe. The benefits of the presence of a body of men so able and learned cannot be overestimated. Under this system of administration, in scarcely a decade, the University has grown and prospered with so much satisfaction and such marked success. I take this opportunity to publicly express my unqualified admiration for the general policy of the Board of Regents, and the zeal and nobility of the Faculty of the University. Say what you will of their failings, and charge what you may to their mistakes, there nevertheless stands in dauntless majesty a masterpiece of intellect and skill that has redounded to the honor and credit of California, and shall keep the memory of their services forever green in the minds and hearts of a generous posterity.

I cannot believe that this committee, or the people of the State, is prepared to change and sacrifice a system of administration that has proved so efficient and faithful. Objection has been raised to the appointment of a portion of the Board of Regents. It is urged that they should be elected directly by the people. No person more sincerely objects to appointment of public officers than I, whenever it can be avoided with policy and wisdom, but, sir, experience has invariably shown that the election of Regents involves the destruction and ruin of the University. Political prejudices and conspiracies creep into the institution and poison its best blood, and vitiate its highest energies. It sets the University adrift upon the boisterous sea of politics, sure to wreck to pieces on the rocks of partisan strife and party contention. A careful research into this matter has thoroughly convinced me that no surer and quicker way could be devised to strangle our young University than thus to hurl it into the cesspool and whirlpool of politics.

Now, a word or two as to the agricultural department. Many rumors, nearly all utterly unfounded, prevail as regards the nature and management of the agricultural department of the University. These rumors have sought to bring that department into some disrepute. For example, I have heard it said that there was but one student enrolled in that college. The fact of the matter, however, is that there are at present some twenty students regularly attending the college of agriculture. The work in this department includes both practice and theory, experiment and observation. To be sure, the students are not exercised in plowing, and hoeing, and reaping, and threshing, for these are mere mechanical operations of agriculture, and are best acquired on the farm at home; but they are taught why to plow, when to plow, and how deep. They are taught what crops to sow in certain soil, and what rotation of crops will best maintain the fertility of the soil; in a word, they are taught all the several principles which govern the development of plants under all variations of circumstances and conditions, and that, after all, is the rational, scientific, and only true agriculture. This department has already begun an agricultural survey of the State, and Berkeley is now an experiment station to investigate the varied soils of California. I need not dilate upon the immense value of such a work to the farmers throughout the land. It will furnish the basis for an intelligent and comprehensive conception of the marvelous agricultural resources of the Pacific Slope.

Again, sir, it has been urged that the Agricultural College should be detached and separated from the rest of the University, so that it may be more efficient under the direct control of the farmer. I hope, sir, that a proposition so monstrous will not be entertained by this honorable body, and least of all, by any farmer upon this floor. What farmer would consent to withdraw agricultural education from contact with higher culture in other branches? Where is the farmer who would make his sons the mere hewers of wood and drawers of water? That, sir, is not the ambition of the farming people of California. If you would have the young farmer look with pride to his profession, and deem it as it should be, the peer of any other on earth, then, sir, never, never, I say, for one moment permit the institution where its principles are taught, to be divorced from your State University, where are reared all other educated men in the State. But, sir, this system of separate organization for agricultural colleges has been tried in this country and in Europe, and has always proved a backward step, and in many cases a disastrous failure. In course of time the labor colleges have either developed into universities, or dwindled into second-class and low grade boarding schools. Divide the University of California, and you inevitably wound its efficiency and destroy its utility.

I admit that I love the University as the student loves his alma mater. I have spent the four happiest and proudest years of my life amidst its sacred groves and within its solemn halls. I have seen it rise from the tiny acorn to the stately oak. While I know and cherish all its virtues, yet I am not blind to its failings. As human nature is far from perfect, so human work lacks perfection. But, sir, take it all in all, and I frankly pronounce the University of California the best and grandest investment of the people of this State. That institution, sir, is paying a dividend to the State of California that shall increase and multiply with years. It is a noble monument to the enlightenment and munificence of the people of this commonwealth.

The section, as reported by the committee, perpetuates this great and sublime work. With no other interest than the welfare and prosperity of California; with no other feeling than a love for an institution that radiates knowledge and ennobles labor; I appeal to you, gentlemen, to sanction it with your approval. Especially do I call upon the workingmen and grangers to cheer it on with your encouragement, and push it forward with your support. The University of California should be the favorite child of the laboring classes throughout the land. Its doors are free and open to all residents of California, without regard to sex. The son of the poorest peasant, no matter how lowly, wherever his birth, or whatever his creed, may find at Berkeley an institution to carry him to the furthest realms of knowledge, and fit him for the highest functions of citizenship. Three fourths of the students at the University are the sons of poor men, hailing from every portion of the State. And, sir, if there be a spot on earth where poverty and wealth are measured by the sole standard of manhood and worth, it is the University of California. That institution, sir, is the very essence and epitome of democracy. The rich man can send his son to the East or to Europe for a college education. The son of the poor man must find at home the food to nourish his ambition, or forever grope in darkness and despair.

The University is still struggling in its infancy, but its future is resplendent with promise already. Generous men are showering upon it endowments of wealth. It is now very nearly self-supporting. In a few years more it will no longer require State aid. In a few years more it will live and thrive upon its own resources. We only ask that it may be kept aloof from the avarice and turmoil of political parties. We only ask that it may be left to prosper in the future as it has in the past, and many of you will live to see the University of California the first and foremost educational institution on the American continent. [Applause.]

SPEECH OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: The amendment of the honorable member from Los Angeles is unnecessary, because the objects which it seeks to attain have already been reached. I will refer you to the report of President Gilman in reference to the Department of Agriculture, from which I read as follows:

"The most noteworthy changes in the College of Agriculture are the appointment of a new professor in that department, the commencement of field and garden work, and the enlistment of special lecturers to supplement the regular instructions of the professor. The outdoor work is subordinate and auxiliary to the class-room instructions of the Professor of Agriculture, but its general direction is intrusted by law to the Secretary. Under him an accomplished and experienced gardener has been employed.

"On the first of February, eighteen hundred and seventy-five, Secretary Stearns made the following report of the work which he had commenced. A more extended statement may be expected before the session of the Legislature:

On the first day of June, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, work in this department was commenced, and has been pursued with energy. A portion of the grounds dedicated to practical agriculture has been thoroughly plowed, graded, and otherwise prepared by deep trenching and working over, for nursery purposes

Two propagating houses have been constructed and were ready for use in the latter part of August, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, and a commodious and convenient building for workrooms, with suitable benches for potting and handling plants constructed, with storage arrangements for prepared soil, pots, tools, etc., and a suitable office for gardener, and sleeping-room for watchman. The propagating houses are of the dimensions, respectively, of thirty by twenty feet, and sixty-four by fifteen feet, and in the rear of the latter is a laboratory pertaining to said houses, sixty-four feet in length by twelve feet in width. These buildings are arranged so as to facilitate the work, and so conveniently placed that the whole is easily supervised by the gardener. The propagation of plants of economic value, as well as such species as are more particularly required for the purpose of illustrating general botany, and ornamenting the grounds, in pursuance of the general plan devised by Mr. W. H. Hall, was at once commenced, and such vegetable forms as are valuable to the pomologist, and necessary to illustrate floriculture and arboriculture, have already been produced in large numbers. The entire domain belonging to the University includes two hundred acres, sloping to the west, a parallelogram in general shape, and presenting quite a diversified topography; its lower portion being about two hundred feet above the level of San Francisco Bay, and rising toward the east into hills, the summits of which are about nine hundred feet above the sea-level. Some forty acres are reserved for agricultural purposes and experiments, and the remainder to illustrate the principles and methods of landscape ornamentation, forestry, botany, and allied studies.

A well designed and convenient barn, thirty-six by forty-four feet, and a story and a half in height, has been built, and the principal road which traverses the farming grounds has been marked out and partly graded, to facilitate the farm work.

The propagating houses were ready for use on the twenty-second day of August, since which date ten thousand plants of twenty species of eucalyptus, five thousand acacias of twenty-five species, two hundred species of native and foreign conifers, also numerous rare forms peculiar to Australasia, South and Central America, and elsewhere, and many species of textile, medicinal, and other economic plants, have been produced. We may mention one hundred and twelve varieties of roses, thirteen of azaleas, twelve of camelias, and six of magnolias, for ornamental purposes The planting of a standard orchard, for the purpose of correcting the nomenclature of the fruits already in cultivation, and for furnishing hereafter scions and plants for distribution through the State, as well as for the introduction of new varieties to be distributed as above, has received proper consideration.

Now, if gentlemen will give me their attention, I will endeavor to show them how the University stands, and I do hope they will pay such attention as the importance of the subject demands. Sir, the Act of Congress provided for a land grant of one hundred and fifty thousand acres, and that the moneys realized from the sale of such land shall be invested, and shall constitute a fund, a perpetual fund, which shall remain forever undiminished, the interest of which is to constitute an endowment fund, for the support and maintenance of at least one college where agriculture and the mechanic arts are to be taught, but not to the exclusion of other studies. Now, it is an entire mistake to assume that this University was to be entirely an Agricultural College. Even the Agricultural College, so far as the Congressional enactment and donation extend, was not limited to agriculture. On the contrary, it is provided that there is to be not less than one—there may be more than one—not less than one college, where the leading object is to be, without excluding other studies, the promotion of such branches of learning as relate to "agriculture" and the "mechanic arts;" and both those terms are qualified, because the Act declares that the studies are to be such as are related to the subjects of agriculture and the mechanic arts.

This includes, in a measure, the entire scientific course, because all the departments of the scientific course are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts. Then there is also military instruction, which is made essentially a portion of the requirements of the Act. Then there are still other studies, classical and scientific, which the Act says must not be excluded. Furthermore, the Congressional grant provides that the modes of instruction shall be conducted in such manner as the Legislature of the State shall prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life. What is meant by the term "liberal education?" It is such as shall constitute a liberal, practical education, in the several pursuits and professions of life. That is what the Act itself declares. It does not contemplate teaching agriculture alone; it is to teach, not to the exclusion of other scientific and classical studies, such studies as relate to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in order to promote the liberal education of the industrial classes, and in order to promote the higher education of the people in all the departments of learning, in all the departments of industry, in all the departments of intellectual advancement. This is the very thing that the Federal Government has been doing, and designing to do ever since it had public lands to dispose of for the purposes of education, and devoted them to that object.

Now, sir, the Act of the Legislature establishing the University was in exact accordance with the Act of Congress donating these lands. I will read again from President Gilman's statement:

"The State of California, like most of the newer States of the Union, received from the General Government a certain portion of the public lands for the use of a seminary of learning; and the Constitution of the State provided for the bestowal of these and other funds upon a State University. This was the nucleus of the University of California.

"Independent of State action, a private corporation, established in Oakland, maintained for several years an institution of learning under the name of the College of California. It acquired lands, funds, and good-will. When the University was organized it relinquished the field and gave up its property to the State, on condition of the perpetual maintenance of a College of Letters.

"In eighteen hundred and sixty-two, the National Government bestowed on the various States of the Union a certain amount of scrip in the public lands, for the maintenance in each State of 'at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanical arts, in such manner as the Legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life.'

"The scope of this national endowment has been well defined by many writers, but by none more clearly than in the following paragraph, which was written by Professor Atherton, once of the Illinois Industrial University, and now of the Rutgers Scientific School in New Brunswick, New Jersey. After referring to the terms of the grant as prescribed by Congress, he says:

This language certainly does not contemplate the teaching of "agriculture" alone, but of all the natural sciences which underlie its laws and processes, all the mathematical and physical sciences which are the basis of the mechanic arts, and whatever else is adapted to promote "the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes," not even excluding classical studies. It is, in short, the statement of a comprehensive scheme for promoting the higher education of the people—a thing which the government has been doing ever since it first had public lands to dispose of. The institutions thus founded have come to be generally spoken of as "agricultural colleges," simply for want of a more convenient designation, and probably, also, because "agriculture" happens to be the first important word in that part of the law just quoted.

"After prolonged discussion among the friends of higher education, the Legislature organized the University of California, by an Act, approved March twenty-three, eighteen hundred and sixty-eight, which was somewhat modified by the passage of the Political Code, and has since received some additional amendments. The 'Organic Act,' thus modified, still governs the University. It is printed with the last legislative revisions in the University Registers for eighteen hundred and seventy-four and eighteen hundred and seventy-five. The Board of Regents, on whom these laws devolved the administration of the University, was originally constituted as follows, in four distinct classes:

a. The Governor Lieutenant Governor, and State Superintendent of Schools, all elected by popular vote, and holding office for four years, and the Speaker of the Assembly holding office for two years, and elected by members of the Assembly, were the official representatives of the State.

b. The President of the State Agricultural Society and the President of the Mechanics' Institute in San Francisco, elected annually by these societies, were the representatives of the agricultural and mechanical interests of the State.

c. Eight members of the Board, holding office for sixteen years, were appointed by the Governor, with the approval of the Senate.

d. Eight members of the Board, holding office for sixteen years, were elected as honorary Regents, and were chosen "from the body of the State by the official and appointed members."

"The law expressly declared that no member of the Board should be deemed a public officer by virtue of such membership, but he should be deemed as discharging exclusively a private trust. The Regents were furthermore required to become incorporated under the general laws of the State. These provisions were intended to secure stability in the Board, and the removal of the University from political interference; while at the same time the official representatives of the State had power to prevent and correct abuses. Care was also taken, by providing six different modes of membership, and tenures of office which vary in length from one to sixteen years, that the Board should not be the representative of any class or faction. Sectarian and ecclesiastical influences were precluded by a requirement that a majority of the Board should not be 'of any one religious sect, or of no religious sect.'

"It would be well for the State if these historic statements in respect to the origin of the University of California were more generally remembered. It is frequently asserted that the University was founded as an agricultural college, and that the College of Letters should have no place in the organization; whereas the truth is, that the State, in its Constitution, provided for the establishment of a University, and all subsequent legislation has tended toward a liberal and comprehensive institution, in which all higher studies should be taught."

Sir, I desire that the committee should understand that the University exists in exact accordance with the organic Act of the Legislature of the State of California, which Act is in entire accordance with the terms of the Congressional grant. We have kept it up and maintained it for ten years upon precisely the same terms and conditions as those which were originally prescribed by Congress. In the first place, before it was organized, the College of California, a private institution of large wealth and influence, came forward and donated its entire property to the State, on condition that a College of Letters should be perpetually maintained and constitute a portion of the State University. The State accepted that donation, which was entirely independent of the Congressional grant. Thereupon the University of California was created, in accordance with both the donation and the terms of the Congressional grant.

Let us inquire what property the University now holds outside of what the grant conferred. It has property that amounts now to nearly three million five hundred thousand dollars, besides what has been derived, and is to be derived in future, from the Congressional grant, which amounts to about seven million dollars more. That includes all which has been received, and is to be received hereafter, from the grant. Thus, while the grant will realize more than seven million dollars, the University has property of its own, derived from other sources and situated in Oakland, amounting to three millions and a half. And it has no present debts. Although it has been said on this floor that the institution is in debt, that assertion is untrue. And the whole of its property, both real and personal, is entirely unincumbered. Now, the President of the University explains its financial condition, and that of its different funds, and shows the extent of its properties, as follows:

ENDOWMENTS—(FROM CONGRESSIONAL GRANTS).

Land Fund—From sales of land, grant 150,000 acres	$356,273 03
Seminary Land Fund—From sales under grant of seventy-two sections	19,505 99
Forfeited Seminary Land Fund—From sales of forfeited lands resold by the Regents of the University	480 00
Total cash receipts from Congressional endowments		$376,259 02

INCOME—(FROM CONGRESSIONAL ENDOWMENTS).

Amounts of income received from the State to pay current expenses		662,150 42
Total cash receipts from all sources		$1,821,675 65

"What have the Regents of the University to show for their expenditure?

"1. They have secured a corps of professors and instructors of ability and reputation, and established a curriculum of studies which, for its range and variety, bears comparison with the oldest and best endowed institutions in the Eastern States.

"2. They have, in the course of nine years, succeeded in establishing an institution of high grade, which already assumes an acknowledged rank among the Universities of our country—in which instruction is imparted in all branches of culture and useful knowledge, free to all residents of California, both male and female. No money consideration can represent the value of such an institution to the State.

"3. The amount expended for instruction in its various forms, for free scholarships, and for support (during a short period) of a Preparatory Department, has of course, gone beyond recall. For this they have nothing tangible to show. It is represented by the knowledge imparted to hundreds of the youth of our State. It will assuredly bear its fruits in time, in the form of wise statesmen and legislators, accomplished scholars, original thinkers and investigators, able jurists, public benefactors, and virtuous citizens. Dollars and cents cannot represent the value of these contributions to modern civilization.

"4. But, aside from the intangible blessings conferred by the University, the Regents have properties of great value to show for the money expended. The State now owns:

(1.) Two hundred acres of land at Berkeley, with cost of ornamenting, grading, and improving site—valued at	$250,000
(2.) Three first class buildings at Berkeley, with the furniture of the same	397,000
(3.) A museum, embracing extensive collections of geological, mineralogical, botanical, and ethnological specimens; also, works of art, etc., mostly private donations	50,000
(4.) A library, containing over 14,000 volumes—expended by Regents	18,000
Private donations (estimated value)	17,000
(5.) Collections of apparatus, physical, chemical, and other aids to instruction	25,000
(6.) Eight (8) cottages for students	24,000
(7.) Gymnasium building—recently the gift of Mr. A. K. P. Harmon	7,000
(8.) Printing office property	2,500
Printing press—gift of Dr. Samuel Merritt	1,500
(9.) Propagating houses, barn, farm implements, and orchard containing over five hundred varieties; also, many varieties of grapes, etc.	4,800
(10.) Forty-seven acres of land near Oakland—a gift from the late Edward Tompkins—present value	40,000
(11.) Toland Medical Hall, in San Francisco—a gift from Dr. H. H. Toland	75,000
(12.) Medal Fund—a gift from friends of the University	2,600
(13.) Brayton property—mortgaged notes	68,530
Brayton property—investment in bonds	20,140
(14.) Seminary Land Fund—invested by Regents in six per cent. bonds—cost	19,380
Total	$1,022,450

And these funds are invested in the best securities that can be obtained, which securities are deposited in the office of the Treasurer of the State. There is no danger, therefore, of any pecuniary loss being sustained hereafter; indeed, no possibility of its occurrence.

That is the condition of the University of California. It is a strong institution—strong from the magnificent endowment of Congress, and strong from the large donations derived from private sources, both of which exceed in the aggregate a total of ten millions.

This institution exists in a conglomerated form. It is open to both sexes. It is intended for all classes. It is subservient to all interests. It is designed to give the student the advantages of one department or of several, or of all, in his election. There is no distinction of persons—all men stand there alike, upon a common platform.

Permit me to read further from what President Gilman says, in reference to the advantages which the poor enjoy in common with the affluent:

"One of the best characteristics of the American colleges is the bringing together, on terms of equality, free from artificial and conventional distinctions, young men of different pecuniary conditions. The sons of the rich and of the needy grow up side by side, and the honors which they receive from one another, and from the Faculty, are bestowed without any reference to the homes from which they come. Thus year after year many of the highest distinctions are bestowed upon those whose struggles for an education have been carried on in the face of extreme poverty, and sometimes of other great embarrassments. In the University of California, as in other kindred institutions, the honors of literary and scientific distinction are thus bestowed upon the most meritorious, without any reference to their antecedent training. It is a great advantage of a system of public education, particularly in this country, that it brings together, on terms of complete scholastic equality, those whose material circumstances differ so widely. Almost every college of the country has found it expedient, in some way or other, to provide suitable encouragement to young persons while pursuing their courses of study. During four years of the history of the University of California, there were five scholarships the incumbents of which received each an income of three hundred dollars per year, from the beginning to the end of their course, and some of the most meritorious scholars here graduated owe their education to this timely assistance; but the change in the law effected by the Political Code abolished these scholarships, and no such aid is now given.

"The authorities of the University, however, have done all in their power to throw into the hands of those who wished it opportunities to earn money in various ways. Some students have given private instruction to other students who needed assistance in their studies; others have been employed on holidays and in vacations, and in their leisure hours, in rendering assistance in various manual occupations, both in work upon the grounds and elsewhere; some have taken care of the buildings, and some of the heating apparatus.

"Another agency by which many have found it convenient to add to their income has been employment in the printing office. The printing office was commenced soon after the University was removed to Berkeley, by the purchase of type and a press at a cost of one thousand three hundred and fifty dollars, which was given to the University by one of the Regents Subsequently, the Regents appropriated the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars for the purpose of expanding this office. It has been found an exceedingly convenient part of the apparatus at Berkeley, and has been the means also of imparting to many of the students a knowledge of a useful art, and of enabling many deserving persons to add considerably to their income. So far as students have desired work in connection with the farm and garden they have been allowed the opportunity, and in this, as in all other cases, have been paid the usual wages for their labor. At the same time it should never be forgotten that the scholastic duties of the various courses of instruction are so severe as to task all the powers of the young men who are here studying, and to diminish their capacity for manual labor. The ability to add to one's income by hard work while pursuing a course of study varies very much with individuals. Some are able to do a great deal in this way without impairing their standing as scholars; but, as a general rule, it is obvious that the chief business of every student should be the mastery of his lessons.

"A Students' Loan Association has been organized by a number of liberal gentlemen, though as yet no funds have been paid in. To this association we may look with confidence for aid in the future to deserving students."

Sir, an institution of that kind should be tenderly fostered and cherished by the State and by the people. It should be beloved by every citizen, and guarded with a zealous care. I trust this Convention will stand by it and refuse to obey the behests, or be beguiled by the artifices, of those who seek to destroy it.

MR. MORELAND. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Education, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. TULLY. I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at five o'clock P. M. the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow morning, at nine o'clock and thirty minutes.

ONE HUNDRED AND SEVENTEENTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Wednesday, January 22d, 1879.

The Convention met in regular session at nine o'clock and thirty minutes A. M., President Hoge in the chair.

The roll was called, and members found in attendance as follows:

THE JOURNAL.

MR. LINDOW. Mr. Chairman: I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with and approved.

So ordered.

PETITIONS.

MR. VAN DYKE presented the following petition, signed by a large number of citizens of Alameda County, asking the exemption of certain property from taxation:

To the Honorable J. P. Hoge, President, and to the members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: Your petitioners, citizens of the State of California, and residents of Mission San José, Alameda County, California, most respectfully request your honorable body to exempt from taxation all property used exclusively for charitable, educational, and church purposes.

Laid on the table, to be considered with the article on revenue and taxation.

Messrs. Graves, White, Burt, and Nason presented similar petitions.

Laid on the table, to be considered with the article on revenue and taxation.

Messrs. Howard, of Los Angeles, and Van Voorhies presented similar petitions.

Referred to the Committee on Revenue and Taxation.

NEW PROPOSITION.

MR. CASSERLY. Mr. President: I desire to present a proposition, and ask that it be ordered printed and referred to the proper committee.

Following is the proposition:

ARTICLE —.

STATE INDEBTEDNESS.

SECTION 1. The Legislature shall not, in any manner, create any debt or debts, liability or liabilities, which shall, singly or in the aggregate with any previous debts or liabilities, exceed the sum of three hundred thousand dollars, except in case of war to repel invasion or suppress insurrection, unless the same shall be authorized by some law for some single object or work to be distinctly specified therein, which law shall provide ways and means, exclusive of loans, for the payment of the interest of such debt or liability as it falls due, and also to pay and discharge the principal of such debt or liability within twenty years of the time of the contracting thereof, and shall be irrepealable until the principal and interest thereon shall be paid and discharged; but no such law shall take effect until, at a general election, it shall have been submitted to the people and shall have received a majority of all the votes cast for and against it at such election; and all moneys raised by authority of such law shall be applied only to the specific object therein stated, or to the payment of the debt thereby created; and such law shall be published in at least one newspaper in each judicial district, if one be published therein, throughout the State for three months next preceding the election at which it is submitted to the people.

THE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection it will be ordered printed and referred to the Committee on State and Municipal Indebtedness.

EDUCATION.

MR. WINANS. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Education.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section ten and pending amendments are before the committee. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, to add to the section: "The Regents and managers of the University shall provide for instruction in agriculture, mechanic arts, mineralogy, and the applied sciences."

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: If there is no objection, I will change the word "mineralogy," to the word "metallurgy," as that is the word used in the Act of Congress.

No objection was made.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: In regard to the amendment of the honorable member from Los Angeles, although it is not permissible for the committee to accept it, I want to say that the committee do not object to it. It is in effect now, and they are perfectly willing that it should be made a constitutional enactment.

SPEECH OF MR. MORELAND.

MR. MORELAND. Mr. Chairman: It was not my intention, sir, to say anything upon this subject, but section ten of this article, as reported by the Committee on Education, contains such extraordinary propositions that I cannot suffer it to pass unchallenged. Now, sir, in the first place, we are called upon, in section ten, to continue the University of the State of California in its organization and government, perpetually in its present and existing form and character. Now, sir, I do not know that that institution, at this time, has any particular form, or has yet made a character. That institution is yet in embryo in this State. That institution has only been in existence some eight or nine years. It has assumed no particular form, and I think it would be unwise in us to say that that institution should be continued in its existing form. It has always been my opinion, sir, that it required time, that it required decades and centuries for institutions to make a form and character that ought to be perpetuated. We are not only asked to continue this institution in its present form, but in its present character, whatever that character may be. I do not know what it is. It may be good, it may be indifferent. This institution asks us to give it a certificate of character, and it not only asks us to do that, but it asks us to give it a certificate which we cannot possibly revoke, no matter what naughty things it may do hereafter. That is one proposition that we are called upon to indorse; another is, that we are called upon to indorse, in this section, the several Acts of the Legislature of this State, in reference to that section. Now, sir, in eighteen hundred and sixty-two, the Congress of the United States passed an Act entitled "An Act donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and mechanic arts." I wish, gentlemen, to notice the title of the Act. In section four of that Act we find the following language:

"And be it further enacted, that all moneys derived from the sale of the lands aforesaid, by the States to which the lands are appropriated, and from the sale of the land scrip hereinbefore provided for, shall be invested in stocks of the United States, or of the States, or some other safe stocks, yielding not less than five per centum upon the par value of said stocks; and that the moneys so invested shall continue a perpetual fund, the capital of which shall remain forever undiminished (except so far as may be provided in section fifth of this Act), and the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated, by each State which may take and claim the benefit of this Act, to the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading objects shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the Legislature of the States may respectively prescribe."

What I particularly want to call attention to in this section is, that the interest of this fund shall be inviolably appropriated to the objects of this Act. Now, sir, it seems to me that that language is plain. It seems to me that under that language the Legislature of this State could not divert that fund. It seems to me that they could not consolidate that fund with another; but, sir, they have done that thing, or they have attempted to do that thing, and we are called upon to ratify these acts of the Legislature. I say that we are treading upon dangerous ground. In the year eighteen hundred and seventy-eight—last year—the nineteenth day of March, an Act was passed consolidating the funds which the State had control of, the funds of the University and this agricultural fund, and placing it in the hands of the Board of Regents of that institution. The funds which have been given for the support of this University, consist, in the first place, of the old original College of California and its property, which was turned over to this University; the ten sections of land which were given to this State for public buildings; the seventy-two sections which were donated to the State for the use and benefit of the University; and the sale of the tide lands, which I believe at the present time amounts to a little over eight hundred thousand dollars. That is what is called the University fund. It is a separate and distinct fund, calculated for the purposes of the University. But the Agricultural College fund is the proceeds of the sale of the one hundred and fifty thousand acres of land donated to this State, under the Act of Congress of July second, eighteen hundred and sixty-two. That is another fund. It is a separate fund, and has no connection whatever with the University fund. But in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-eight the Legislature of this State consolidated this agricultural fund with the others, and said that the money so invested shall constitute a perpetual fund, to be known and designated as the "Consolidated Perpetual Endowment Fund of the University of California." They consolidated this fund with the others, and they say that they shall constitute a Consolidated Perpetual Endowment Fund of the University of the State of California, in direct contradiction of the terms of the grant of Congress, it seems to me. The second section says:

"That all interest, profits, or revenue, arising from or growing out of said 'Consolidated Permanent Endowment Fund of the University of California,' shall be placed in the general fund of the University, and subject to disbursement to meet the current expenses of the University of California."

But they have gone farther than that. They have placed this University in the charge of the Board of Regents, and they have given charge of all these funds to that Board. They have further said this Board of Regents are not officers of the State, but it is a private trust. In another Act they place these funds under the control of this Board of Regents.

Now, sir, we see here that the Legislature of the State, in direct contradiction of the terms granting this land to the State, have consolidated this fund with the other funds of the University, and have placed it in the hands of this Board of Regents, to disburse in whatever manner they see fit, whether it be for the benefit of a College of Agriculture or whether it be for the benefit of other branches of that institution. Now, sir, the fame of this section ten of this report of the committee, I see by the morning papers, has reached the State of Kansas. On the last page of the Record-Union of this morning, fourth column, will be found the following from the Western Homestead, published at Leavenworth, Kansas:

"If Congress should appropriate half a milion of dollars to each State for the maintenance of a plow factory, and the Legislatures should use the money for the manufacture of astronomical telescopes or gilt-edged Hebrew dictionaries, people generally would indulge a faint suspicion that the Congressional appropriation had been grossly perverted; and, in due time, there would be an able-bodied row about it. That illustration is not a bit too strong when one seeks to set forth the difference between industrial colleges for the education of the working classes, and universities for the education of the professional classes. Yet Kansas is the only State in the Union which has fully recognized this difference and squarely shaped its course accordingly. In a few other States the agricultural college is a distinct institution; but in a great majority of cases it is only a 'department' of some more or less high toned 'university.' And, too, in the few States where the agricultural college is a distinct institution, the course of study is precisely that of the professional colleges with 'lectures on agriculture' added.

"From the inevitable logic of things, such colleges must grind out precisely the same graduates as do the professional colleges; and, therefore, such colleges must and inevitably will be failures, in the matter of giving a practical industrial education as distinguished from gilt-edged professional education. Nobody claims that the daily work of the lawyer is in any respect like that of the farmer or mechanic. Nobody claims that the same knowledge, plant growth for example, has the same practical value to the lawyer that it has to the gardener. And how anybody, who hasn't an axe to grind, can claim that the best education for the lawyer is the best education for the future farmer, is one of those dark and bloody mysteries which defy all logic as well as all common sense.

"And yet, with a few rare exceptions, the Congressional endowment for industrial education has been boldly and bodily gobbled up by the professional Universities in the several States; and, after consummating the fraud, the several Boards of Trustees of these Universities have patted themselves on the back for their arduous labor in the cause of 'education,' and have thanked a justice-loving God for enabling them to hook for their particular University so fat an endowment! Nevertheless, these same gentlemen would be the first to denounce the fraud of an executor who should use money bequeathed for the building of wagons for the very different purpose of making astronomical telescopes. Perhaps not more glaring than many other instances, but certainly more recent, is that of the University of California, which prides itself on having all the latest agonies in the shape of twelve-buttoned 'classics,' and kid-slipper 'fossils.' Its Board of Management is a close corporation, filling all vacancies. The institution has a fine endowment in its own right. And it now seeks, by a clause in the new Constitution of that State, to forever secure to itself the million or more granted by Congress to an 'Agricultural College,' and which million or more it gobbled several years since, despite the protest of the farmers and mechanics of that State."

SPEECH OF MR. WICKES.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: I must say that I am heartily in favor of the section as reported with the amendment proposed. It is difficult for me to estimate or weigh the temper of this Convention. I trust that it will sustain this section and sustain the University. We should build our educational structure upon a broad basis, and then we can elevate it higher as we proceed. I make an appeal to you for the State University. I am for it, first, because it represents a higher and progressive education. It takes the High School graduate by the hand and leads him to the highest education this State can give. As my young friend, Mr. Freud, eloquently said yesterday, the workingmen by all means should sustain the University. It is open alike to the rich and the poor, to the male and the female. It is true there are some rumors floating about in the popular mind that the funds have been mismanaged; that funds set apart for special purposes have been misapplied; that undue prominence has been given to some studies to the exclusion of others; that the useful has been sacrificed to the ornamental: that the standard of morals in the University is low; that the discipline is loose; that the teachers are inefficient, and that the institution is worthless. Now, I say these are floating rumors. Some of them originate in the minds of those who are interested in doing away with the institution. Others in the minds of some who are hypercritical and faultfinding. I see nothing tangible in these rumors, but I do say if there are any reforms needed in that institution, we here in this section deputize the Legislature to attend to them. The Legislature should direct the conduct of that institution, the principle upon which it is to be conducted, both as to the study and the discipline, without going into the minutia. The Legislature should sharply define the responsibilities of the Regents and hold them to a strict accountability for its management. They should inquire into its management, from time to time, and see that strict discipline be enforced; that due prominence be given to the studies of agriculture, mining, and the mechanic arts; that its course embraces the cumulated knowledge of the age. Let it borrow luster from the British Universities, and go ahead of them by identifying itself more fully with the spirit of the times. Again, let it teach a pure morality. Let it foster the spirit of religion for the end of all knowledge is to recognize in the forces of nature that will power and intelligence which pervades the universe; for the end of all knowledge is to have glowing conceptions of the wisdom, power, and glory of God, and be brought into harmony with his laws. Let the teachers of that institution be God fearing-men, for I tell you that moral and mental aptitudes are hereditarily transmissible, and are modified by the laws of society. Let the University be guided and directed by the spirit of Anglo-Saxon civilization so auspiciously inaugurated by Albert the Great, and it will be a monument to perpetuate our greatness as a State, and the memory of that good man and eminent scholar after whom it is so signally named.

MR. WEBSTER. Do I understand that the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, is withdrawn?

THE CHAIRMAN. No, sir. It is not.

SPEECH OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I do not like section ten, as reported by the committee. I am inclined to think, sir, that it would be going it too much blind, to use a homely phrase, for the Constitutional Convention to adopt the University of the State of California, with all of its officers, flesh, blood, and bones, together with all that it has done, good, bad, or indifferent, with all that it proposes to do in all future time, and canonize it as being the perfection of wisdom and goodness, and crystallize it into a monument that never could be changed by any future age or people. I am therefore opposed to the section, and am opposed to the amendment of General Howard, upon the principle that it would do no good as attached to section ten, and is not sufficiently comprehensive as a substitute for section ten.

Now, sir, in the Chronicle of yesterday, among the telegraphic dispatches from Washington, is a statement that Mr. Davis, the Congressman from the San Francisco district, has introduced a bill in Congress, at the request of the Regents of the State University, asking that Congress pass a law to confirm to the University forty-five thousand acres of land, I believe located in excess of the one hundred and fifty thousand acres granted by the Congress of the United States in the Agricultural Act of eighteen hundred and sixty-two. The dispatch states that Mr. Davis said, that while he introduced it at the request of the Regents of the University, he withheld his approval of the bill until he knew what the merits of the bill were.

The Act of Congress of eighteen hundred and sixty-two, granting land to States for agricultural colleges, granted to the State of California one hundred and fifty thousand acres. It seems that in taking up this one hundred and fifty thousand acres there has been taken forty-five thousand acres in excess of what was granted by the Act of Congress, and as it has been sold to private parties, and as it is not probable that title can be perfected from the United States, unless by the passage of an Act of this kind, it would leave the State of California with a large law suit, and she might be compelled to confirm title to forty-five thousand acres of land. I am opposed to the State of California being invited to that law suit, and possibly to that fraud. I am opposed, again, to section ten, as reported by the committee, because the Act of the last Legislature, as I understand it, consolidated the funds which belong to the University of the State of California and the funds which have been derived by the State of California under the Agricultural College grant of eighteen hundred and sixty-two. There has been realized from that, I think, about four hundred thousand dollars, and the probabilities are that there will be realized from seven to eight hundred thousand dollars. If it should turn out in the future that the Act consolidating the Agricultural College fund with the University fund should forfeit the Agricultural College fund, then it would be that the University of California would have the entire donation of the five hundred thousand acres, or the one hundred and fifty thousand acres of land—whatever amount of money was received from that—and the Agricultural College would be without a cent. Then it would be for the State of California to make good the trust that she is here taking, and to appropriate seven or eight hundred thousand dollars, or a million or five million, as it may accumulate in interest upon that amount, to make good the Agricultural College. I am, therefore, opposed to it for that reason—that it is calculated to steal for the University, possibly, in the future, the entire fund, and make California put up another fund for the purpose of supplying that which has been taken by the consolidation Act. I am opposed to it, then, for that reason.

I am opposed to it for the further and third reason that, by the legislation of the State of California the conduct of this University is made a close corporation and above the law, and it is intended to crystallize it here above the law. The trouble now is to find out what it has done, what it is doing, or what it proposes to do. It only reports to the Legislature annually that it wants more money, and it is usually granted by the Legislature. Now, it has a fund, by the showing of the Chairman of the committee, of about three million five hundred thousand dollars of money and property. That is an immense fund for an educational institution of that character, and ought to be sufficient to run it for a vast number of years without calling upon the Legislature for any help. But it is too much money to be placed in the hands of men without any responsibility except simply to say that they are gentlemen, and that they will do no harm, and that they will do right, and that they are doing right. That is not the theory upon which we conduct business, upon which we conduct law, upon which vast funds are held in trust for specific purposes. But I want it so that the Legislature of the State of California can do away with the present regency if they see proper to do it; that they can put them all under bonds if they deem it necessary; that they can turn them all out and substitute new men if corruption has found its way within the precincts of the administration of that University. I am utterly and unalterably opposed to putting up these men as masters—like kings, who can do no harm. I therefore hope that section ten will not be adopted, nor that the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles will be added to it; but that it will be supplied by a new section which will place the whole matter in the hands of the Legislature to be dealt with as occasion shall require that it shall be dealt with. I want it further, so that——

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's ten minutes have expired.

[Cries of "Leave!" and "Object!"]

MR. WYATT. I do not want leave.

SPEECH OF MR. MARTIN.

MR. MARTIN, of Alameda. Mr. Chairman: There seems to be some misapprehension in this Convention as to the proper administration of the lands granted by Congress to this State for the maintenance of the University. Congress made this grant to this State, and the State of California passed a special law transferring these lands to the Board of Regents for their administration. The Board of Regents have had the absolute control of this grant, and for the purpose of its proper administration they established a land office, the same as the Government of the United States. All parties who were desirous of being the beneficiaries of this grant had the opportunity to come into the office of the University and to make their application in due form, just as if they were making their application before the Land Office of the United States. When this application was made in that form, it was certified by the Land Agent of the University to the Land Office of the United States, where contests often rose between the University and individuals making application in the Land Office itself. That was the only way in which the Regents or the public could arrive at a proper understanding as to the position of applicants in the Land Office and in the University. All of these questions were adjudicated by the United States Land Office, and when there was no further objection in the Land Office of the Government in Washington it was then certified back that the land was open to those applicants. Then it was, and for the first time, that the certificate of purchase was issued to the applicant to the University. In all cases the University demanded that a certain percentage should be paid to the Treasurer of the University in order that the party should be compelled to carry out his contract with the University in good faith; therefore, he deposited twenty per cent. of the principal. All of the sales by the University of this Congressional grant were made for the period of five years. Twenty per cent. was paid, which went to the Federal Government. The Government was to receive one dollar and twenty-five cents an acre for all the lands sold by the University. The University in its contracts agreed to sell their lands for six dollars and twenty-five cents an acre; therefore, realizing to the University five dollars clear profit for every acre of land that was sold.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to say this, that so far as that grant is concerned, it has been properly, honestly, and intelligently administered. Every dollar that has been received on that grant is in the treasury of this State, in this building, and it is proposed to put every dollar of it there, and keep it out of the hands of those who are to succeed the Regents that now have the administration of that trust.

I have before me a report from the Land Agent, who states that up to this time certificates of purchase have been issued for one hundred and thirty-two thousand one hundred and thirty-one acres. Lands yet undetermined in the Land Office of the United States, and before the General Commissioner at Washington, amount to seventeen thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine acres, which, taken with the land sold, makes up the one hundred and fifty thousand acres of land. The amount of principal received for the sales of this one hundred and thirty-two thousand one hundred and thirty-one acres of land up to this time, and deposited in the State treasury, invested in bonds of this State, and of cities and counties of this State, is three hundred and sixty thousand four hundred and fifty-seven dollars and twenty-nine cents. The amount of principal yet to accrue on these sales is three hundred thousand two hundred and two dollars and twenty-six cents, making a total amount of six hundred and sixty thousand six hundred and fifty-nine dollars and fifty-five cents. This three hundred and sixty thousand four hundred and fifty-seven dollars and twenty-nine cents is now on deposit, and the interest is paid annually. Of this three hundred and sixty thousand four hundred and fifty-seven dollars and twenty-nine cents, two hundred and eighty-six thousand six hundred and forty dollars and thirty-one cents is bearing interest at the rate of ten per cent. per annum, and thirteen thousand five hundred and sixty-one dollars and ninety-five cents is bearing interest at the rate of eight per cent. per annum. It is by these amounts, sir, taking the amount that is deposited in the treasury of the State, and all the amounts drawing interest, that the Regents have been able to carry on the University at all. It has been by their management that this sum has been raised up to one hundred and four thousand dollars a year. Every dollar that is paid upon this Federal land grant, and is now drawing ten per cent. interest, when invested in the bonds of this State simply brings in six per cent. interest. Therefore, we have not been in a hurry to realize this money, as long as we believed that it was properly and safely placed. There is in the treasury of this State to the credit of the University one million two hundred and eight thousand dollars, which represents the tide land grant of eight hundred and eleven thousand five hundred dollars, and this three hundred and sixty thousand four hundred and fifty-seven dollars and twenty-nine cents that has been deposited by the State Board of Regents.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen have spoken about the consolidation bill of the last Legislature. I say this, sir, that the consolidation bill passed by the Legislature was for the purpose of incorporating funds that had no existence in any of the endowments of the University, but which were property belonging to its endowments. Here is eighty-six thousand dollars that the Regents received from the sale of real estate in Oakland, which had no place in the funds of the University, and could have been used by the Board of Regents in the payment of its current expenses. It properly belonged to its endowments, and in order to place these funds in the treasury of the State, and in order to consolidate these funds that had no existence, this seminary fund, the land grant fund, and various other funds of that kind, the Regents thought it best that a consolidation bill should pass, for the purpose of placing these funds all together in the treasury of this State, where they would have no difficulty in getting the interest. Why, Mr. Chairman, this Convention cannot for a moment believe that an Act of this Legislature could vitiate the Act of Congress. There was no intention of the kind. There never has been any intention of the Board of Regents to step outside of the Congressional Act, nor of the organic Act of the University. I say before this Convention, and I stake my reputation upon it, that the Regents, in every respect, have administered this University in a proper manner, and that there is not one dollar that has not been properly appropriated or that cannot be accounted for.

MR. VAN DYKE. I would like to ask Mr. Martin a question. Did the Regents request the passage of this bill just introduced in Congress?

MR. MARTIN. I have never heard of it at all.

MR. WYATT. Did you read yesterday's Chronicle?

MR. MARTIN. I have never heard of it at all.

MR. WYATT. It is a bill asking for forty-five thousand acres in excess of the one hundred and fifty thousand acres granted.

MR. MARTIN. Well, if it is asking for an additional grant, I hope they will grant it. I forgot to state one thing in reference to the lands sold by the Regents. The Regents have sold in excess of this grant, I think, because these lands are in contest in the Land Department, and when the application of the Regents fails somebody else gets the land. That has always been the case with the Board of Regents. We do not give titles. We do not sell anything until we have a perfect understanding with the parties that make the application. It is only in the event that the land becomes the property of the University that it will be conveyed to them. There is no contract at any time that binds the University in any respect, but it is the express understanding with these parties that they only get the land if the University gets it.

MR. MILLER. Do you mean that the Board has located more land than it has sold?

MR. MARTIN. We receive applications. That is all.

MR. WYATT. What do you receive on lands?

MR. MARTIN. Twenty per cent.

MR. WYATT. On all applications?

MR. MARTIN. Yes, sir.

MR. WYATT. You have located forty-five thousand acres more than was granted.

MR. MARTIN. We receive all applications. If we do not get the lands they receive back their twenty per cent. It is a perfect understanding.

SPEECH OF MR. ESTEE.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. Chairman: I wish to say a word on this report For one, I heartily indorse the section as reported by the committee. I believe it is right, I believe it ought to be adopted. I believe that this fund is a public trust, and I believe that it ought to be declared so by this Convention. As to the Act under which this grant was made, it has been read, and I desire to comment upon it. We find in section four, that "the interest shall be inviolably appropriated by each State which may take and claim the benefit of this Act, to the endowment, support, and maintenance of a least one college, where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical theories, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts." The leading object must be the teaching of such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts. They must not exclude other scientific and classical studies, and they must include military tactics. My friends here who object to what they call fuss and feathers, will have to decline this donation unless we have a little military. Now, the law says they must teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts. Now, what are these branches of learning? I wish to turn over to the seven colleges that have been instituted under the statute. There are seven colleges—now eight—two of which have been endowed by private individuals—one, I believe, the law, and the other medicine. Is that so, Mr. Martin?

MR. MARTIN. Yes, sir.

MR. ESTEE. One of law, that is supported by the munificent donation of Judge Hastings.

MR. BIGGS. It is not supported entirely by private donations. Did not the State make an appropriation for the Law College?

MR. ESTEE. There was a private donation of one hundred thousand dollars, made by Judge Hastings, for the maintenance of that college, and the State pays the interest on that sum. There is just one hundred thousand dollars invested, and one of your citizens gave the money, and the mechanics, and the farmers, and lawyers did not give a dollar of it. Now, there is the seventh and eighth colleges that are supported entirely by private donations. The first six are supported by the funds, and they are as follows: First, the College of Letters. I claim that they cannot exclude other scientific and classical studies under the donation. That is my point. And so the College of Letters was endowed. But they were entitled outside of this to establish it. Look at the donations received elsewhere, outside of the donations made by the General Government. That has been explained by some of the Regents.

The next college was the College of Agriculture. Some of my friends—my friend from Butte, who takes a lively interest in almost everything, and especially taxation, and some in education—say that there are not many farmers there. I tell you, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Convention, the fault is with the farmers. The professors are there, and the opportunity is there. The farmers do not send their sons there to learn agriculture. They want to make lawyers, and doctors, and preachers, and mechanical engineers of them. In other words, they want to occupy a sphere different from that which they have been filling. That is the reason. Produce the boys, and the university will furnish the education. Next comes the College of Mechanics; next, the College of Mining; next, the College of Engineering; and lastly, the College of Chemistry. Every one but the first relates directly or indirectly to either the mechanic arts or agriculture. Now, that is the way it is established, and it is a popular fallacy to say that any particular branch, or any particular interest is favored in that University. It was my privilege to be a member of the Board of Regents for two years, ex officio, as Speaker of the Assembly, and I say it with a great deal of pleasure, that I never saw a more painstaking, earnest, faithful, and honest administration of any public trust in my life. Time out of mind these Regents met there, and were all day engaged in the public interest, without money and without price, men who had business at home. The leading men of this State devoted their best time and the best moments of the day to the interests of this University without pay.

MR. HALE. How many of these Regents are practical farmers?

MR. ESTEE. One is, I know. The President of the Board of Agriculture ought to be. If he is not then the farmers better elect the right man.

MR. FREUD. The last gentleman who was appointed on the Board was a graduate of the University, and he is one of the leading agricultural gentleman of this State.

MR. ESTEE. I do not know what their business is. I do know that these men were faithfully devoted to the interests of the University and all of its departments. I do know that a more honest, upright set of men could not be selected anywhere within the range of my knowledge in this State. There was the Governor and Lieutenant Governor, the Superintendent of Public Instruction, the President of your State Board of Agriculture, the President of the Mechanics Institute in San Francisco, and sixteen others, appointed from the leading walks of life in this State; and there was always a quorum, and they always attended to the business before them. I confess, sir, that I am somewhat surprised to hear gentlemen get up here and deliberately charge that something is wrong; that money has been misappropriated; that there has been some stealing, without pointing out wherein it has been done. I tell you it is too common a thing for us all to charge against others what we would not permit others to charge against us; to say that this thing has been done in a surreptitious or wrongful manner, without pointing out wherein it has been so done. I wish to say here, that if you know anything against the integrity of these Regents, or anything against the faithful administration of the affairs of that University, let these statements be made now and here. Let us know the facts. Let us know wherein it has been unfaithfully and improperly administered, so that the friends of that great institution can have an opportunity to defend it, if defense be necessary.

SPEECH OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I protest, on the part of the farmers of this Convention, against the charge that that element of this Convention is making any war upon the University whatever. I protest against the insinuation that the agricultural gentlemen charge that the Board of Regents are not a high, honorable set of gentlemen, and that their motives are not pure and patriotic. I protest that the farmers are not opposed to the higher class of education. I realize the necessity of it, and I believe that agriculture is benefited by a proper maintenance of a higher grade of university learning in the State. But what the farmers do protest against is, under the name of Agricultural College, to so overshadow and so swallow up the agricultural department, that it amounts to nothing, so far as its benefits to agriculture are concerned. Now, it is well known that our agricultural scholar that goes to the Agricultural College, where he is brought into contact with the students pursuing studies in the other departments of the college, will naturally be attracted, and they take these students, one by one, from the Agricultural Department to the other departments. Now, what we complain of is this, that the greater will swallow up the lesser; that the College of Letters will swallow up the agricultural department; that they will make the whole thing a mere shadow, without the substance. What the farmers want is, that this fund that was made for the Agricultural College shall be appropriated to the legitimate purposes for which it was given, and to no other; and that it shall be placed upon a basis where it cannot be subverted by the present Board of Regents, or by their successors in office, to subserve the interests of the University, and not especially the interests of the agricultural department. The youth of our country are ambitious—properly so—and it is just as natural as life, when a young man enters college, to be led away by the popular drift in that college. Now, sir, every professor and every teacher in the college will induce every student there to take the grades of the higher branch, to study Latin and Greek and the languages, and little by little, the students are led away from the strictly agricultural department into the College of Letters. Ninety-nine out of a hundred will go into the study of professions, and agriculture is not benefited, only in the ratio that it is benefited by the maintenance of a higher grade of education.

MR. WINANS. By whom are they led off? What tempts them?

MR. WEST. By the necessities of the circumstances. You throw the two institutions together.

MR. WINANS. Not at all.

MR. WEST. They get up a rivalry of caste between the students of the two departments of the college, and the students of the agricultural department will inevitably fall in line.

MR. WINANS. They are entirely separate, and each student has a right to pursue a separate course.

MR. WEST. We do not deny that they have the right. What the farmers want is an experimental farm in connection with the Agricultural College, where practical instruction can be given in the culture of the soil. Experiments can be made there under the eye and under the instruction and teaching of experienced teachers. We fear very much that this kind of a practical education for farmer's sons cannot be acquired in this institution; but, of necessity, it will lead them right off the farms, into the learned professions, and agriculture will receive only nominal benefits.

SPEECH OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: The issue that has been here raised in the matter of argument upon the tenth section this morning, seems to me to be a false issue. Now, the opponents of the tenth section do not in any degree desire to oppose the University as it is constituted. This is not, as has been maintained upon this floor, a battle against education. It is not a battle against intelligence. It is not a battle against the University of California as an institution of learning. The trouble here is that it has been charged upon this floor that each opponent of the present management, and the present system of management, is an opponent of education, and is trying to limit and restrict the educational facilities of the people of California and the Pacific coast. That is not the true issue, Mr. Chairman. The objection that we have to the tenth section—and I am free to say that I object to the tenth section, and shall not vote for it—the objection that is raised to the section is this: the section says: "The University of California is hereby declared to be a perpetual institution of this State, organized to administer a great public trust."

MR. ESTEE. Is it not a public trust?

MR. BEERSTECHER. I will explain in the course of the argument. That is not the main objection. The main objection that we have to the section is that it attempts to legalize every act of the Board of Regents since the University was instituted and established. Now, gentlemen, if the Board of Regents have acted honestly, if they have acted purely, if they have acted legally, then they do not need any white-washing from this Convention. What is legal, is legal now. What is unlawful in their actions, is unlawful now—if there be any such thing—and I do not charge it.

It is said here: "The University of California shall constitute a public trust, and its organization and government shall be perpetually continued in their existing form and character, subject only to such legislative control as may be necessary to insure compliance with the terms of its endowments, and of the several Acts of the Legislature of this State, and of the Congress of the United States, donating lands or money for its support." It must be perpetually continued in its existing form and character. Now, what is the object of putting that in? Why should there not be a power to change its form, and to change its character, if the people see that it is necessary to bring about a change for the good of the people themselves and in the interest of education? Every man having a seat upon this floor, and having observed the tendency of education during the last ten, fifteen, or twenty years, knows that the systems have changed; that universities have undergone a radical change. This will raise great and grave questions, and it is unnecessary. It is truly asserted that the University is a State institution, or, if you please, a State trust. That is sufficient. It is an institution of learning, and it shall be perpetual. We desire to make it perpetual. We desire to bequeath it to posterity as the best University in this Union; but we do not desire to hedge it about, or to build a granite wall around it, and say that its management shall continue just exactly the way it is to-day, and to build up bulwarks around this matter, so that no one can go up and scrutinize what has been done. We claim the right to examine into the workings of that institution, and if the Board has done wrong, we do not desire, by a constitutional amendment, to protect them from punishment for that wrong. I do not know as they have done wrong, and I do not charge it. It is claimed, sir, that they have done wrongful acts.

MR. TULLY. Who claims it?

MR. WINANS. Where is it claimed? Who has ever said it?

MR. BEERSTECHER. I have heard more than five thousand persons in California talking about it. They talk about that University all over the country, and the people are dissatisfied with the management of it.

MR. TULLY. Will the gentleman name one person?

MR. BEERSTECHER. No, sir; I do not name individuals, nor do I attack individuals. I do not attack the Regents, and I am only giving what is the public sentiment. Now, this section attempts to perpetuate the University in its present organization and government; to make it perpetual; to continue its existing form and character. It not only does that, but it endeavors to perpetuate all the legislative Acts up to the present year. It says that all subsequent legislation must be in conformity with the legislation that has already been had upon the subject. Now, suppose we find out next year that all the legislation upon the subject has been wrong; then we are powerless and cannot remedy it, because we put in a clause in the fundamental law of the land that it must be in accordance with the prior legislation, no matter how wrong. It is, in other words, guaranteeing the acts of an agent without having the power of review, which is absurd in itself. If everything is right, why, of course, we certainly ought to have the right to review at any time. It says: "Subject only to such legislative control as may be necessary to insure compliance with the terms of its endowments, and of the several Acts of the Legislature of this State, and of the Congress of the United States, donating lands or money for its support." Where that section refers to the Acts of Congress donating lands for its support, and that it shall be managed in compliance with these grants, it is surplusage, and it means nothing, because it was the contract between this State and the United States, upon the acceptance of these grants, that it would be so managed. It is entirely unnecessary to put any such thing into the Constitution, because the Courts of this State and the Courts of the United States would enforce compliance with these grants, and every lawyer and every intelligent man upon this floor knows that to be the fact. It is entirely unnecessary to refer to these grants. If that question ever rises upon these grants, the Courts will say they were given for a specific purpose, and if you draw the benefits, of course you must carry out the object and put into effect the purpose. Common sense dictates that, and it is surplusage and useless language.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's ten minutes have expired.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. Chairman: I shall confine my observations to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Webster. I object to this amendment, sir, upon the ground that it is a gross violation of a contract, and would be void if engrafted into the system. It is clearly void under the principles decided in the case of the Dartmouth College, and that it is so, I think, any lawyer will conclude when he comes to scrutinize that decision and the amendment. The fund granted by Congress and accepted by the Legislature under the decision in that case constitutes a contract, and a contract which is protected by the Constitution of the United States, and which neither the State Legislature nor this Convention can violate, for the Constitution of the United States is as much over us as it is over the State Legislature. Now, the fund granted is granted as an entirety, and it is not in the power of the State to separate it and to say that so much shall be applied to agriculture, so much to mechanics, and so much to science; and the moment you attempt it you violate that contract, and the thing becomes a nullity. It is obvious that if it were done the Congress of the United States, for a violation of a contract, could resume the grant. And not only that, every one that has made a donation to this institution upon the faith of that contract could recover his donation. For instance, take the case of Mr. Lick. He has made his donation upon the faith of this contract as he finds it in the Act of Congress, and if you violate it every lawyer knows that his heirs-at-law could recover the donation which he has made. We had better take care how we treat upon this subject. And so of every other person who has made a donation to this college.

Now, sir, what is the language of the Act of Congress: "And the interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated by each State which may take and claim the benefit of this Act, to the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college, where the leading object shall be, without excluding other classical and scientific studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the Legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life."

Now, it must be in its entirety, you cannot separate it. If you could, you could say that the whole fund should be devoted to the classics, or to military tactics, or the mechanic arts. It is obvious that this is impossible under this donation. You must keep the fund together. You may argue under this Act that there shall not be more than one college, but if you do, that college must teach the languages, must teach science, must teach the mechanic arts, must teach agriculture, must teach military tactics, and metallurgy, that is the language of the Act. Now, how are you to divide these funds? How are you to take one portion and give it to one department over and above the other. It would be an obvious violation of the contract. The proposition of the gentleman from Alameda, is that the Legislature shall provide for the proper investment and security of the several funds of the University, and that the proceeds of public lands donated to this State, by Act of Congress, approved July eighteen hundred and sixty-two, and the Acts amendatory thereof for the support of a college for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, shall be invested and used exclusively in the teaching of agriculture, mechanic arts, and military tactics. It is obvious and clear that such a provision cannot be maintained, because it violates the contract between the State and the Federal Government, to say nothing of the contract between every individual who has made a donation and the State. It is a clear violation of the foundation of the college, and that it is so cannot be mistaken. That no such amendment can be supported as a proposition of law seems to me too clear for argument or controversy.

Now, as to the management of the institution; there is no evidence before us that it has not been fairly managed. I believe it has been. There may have been mistakes; there may have been errors; but that does not affect this amendment. This amendment looks to a practical destruction of the fund, because the very moment you divide it out you would be in the same condition as if, instead of appropriating the school fund to free schools it was taken and divided out among the different religious denominations of the country. The amendment is not practical. When you come to the principal of the thing it can be done, but when you come to the law of the thing it is, in my estimation, so clearly unconstitutional that it ought not to be entertained by this Convention for a moment. We may say how languages shall be taught; we may say how agriculture shall be taught; we may say how any of these branches of knowledge mentioned in the donation from Congress shall be taught; we might say that the agricultural department should be managed as other agricultural departments are in some of the States, by permitting the students to work a certain portion of the time upon a farm attached to the college, and be allowed credit for the work; but when you undertake to take any portion of this fund and devote it exclusively to agriculture, you undertake to do that which we have no constitutional power to do, and which would clearly impair the obligations of a contract, if it did not destroy the whole fund.

SPEECH OF MR. CAMPBELL.

MR. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that there is considerable misapprehension here in regard to the scope of the section. Of course, no one can deny that it is a great public trust, but objection is made to the provision that its organization and government shall be perpetually continued in their existing form and character, subject only to such legislative control as may be necessary to insure compliance with the terms of its endowments and of the several Acts of the Legislature of this State and of the Congress of the United States donating lands or money for its support. Now, the first object which the framers of this provision had in view was, doubtless, to prevent the Legislature from overturning the organization as it exists. It is proposed to perpetuate that organization, so as to place it beyond the caprice of any Legislature to change the organization; so as, for instance, to throw the University into politics, or connect its management with political elections and matters of that kind. In other words, to insure the government of the University by a body free from all political influence, not liable to the shifts and changes of political maneuvering, but a body on which the community could rely for a firm, just, and honest administration of the affairs of the University. It is a matter well known to many gentlemen here that there are to-day a large number of persons possessed of large means who desire to make endowments to this University—some by will and some during their lifetime—but who are reluctant to do so until the University is placed on a basis where the changes in the political sky cannot affect it; where it cannot be thrown into the hands of politicians and taken out of the management of men who will continue its affairs simply with a view to its glory and its growth and its grandeur. These donations are, to a large extent, with them now with a view of having the University placed on a basis where changes of that description cannot be made. Yet, at the same time, it is the universal desire that it should be so far under control that all abuses in its management could be inquired into and remedied; and I undertake to say that all that this section does is to protect it in its organization, so that it cannot be made a kind of legislative foot-ball, but at the same time to preserve to the Legislature the right and the power to correct abuses. It says: "subject only to such legislative control as may be necessary to insure compliance with the terms of its endowments, and of the several Acts of the Legislature of this State and of the Congress of the United States donating lands or money for its support."

Now then the Legislature, under this section, has full power to exercise such control as may be necessary to insure compliance with the terms of its endowments, from whatever source—from Congress, from the Legislature, from private individuals. The Regents are not permitted to divert the property of the University from its original purposes. They are not permitted to trample upon the Acts of Congress or of the Legislature; but for all such purposes they are placed under complete legislative control. Now can it be said that this is raising up a power beyond all control—beyond all reasonable control? It is simply saying that the Legislature may not destroy the organization, but it may help the organization within its proper limits. It may correct any attempted abuse within it. It possesses all the power which is necessary to enable it to see that this great public trust is duly administered; but it has no power to destroy the organization which has been adopted, and the advantages of which have been already so largely developed. I know nothing of the interior details of the management of this University; but I have seen something of its general results. I have had the pleasure of being acquainted with a number of the gentlemen who are engaged in that institution as professors. I know them to be gentlemen of the highest character, of great learning, of reputations in many instances extending beyond the limits of California, and beyond the limits of the United States; and I find that when the students come forth from that institution as graduates—those that I have met with—I find accomplished gentlemen, learned, and fit to enter into any and every career of life, whether it be letters, science, agriculture, or mechanics. And this is all the fruit of ten years.

Now, let me give an instance in regard to the difference between general management here and general management in other States. Why, this donation in many of the other States was frittered away in the course of a few months, and much to our injury. The college scrip of some of the States was thrown in the market and sold at forty cents, to land monopolists, who entered upon it and monopolized a large amount of the public lands of the State of California. We know that Pennsylvania college scrip was bought up at forty cents on the dollar, brought to California, and placed upon the land here. Has any such thing been done here by our Regents? On the contrary, they have administered the trust, in all its important and leading features, in a manner to challenge the admiration of the people. I hope that this section will pass.

I am perfectly willing to see General Howard's amendment to it. It is a very good and acceptable amendment. I do say this, that as it is administered now, the Regents are doing everything in their power to carry out the trust according to its original intention. We find here established all these colleges, and so far as the Agricultural College is concerned, if those who are particularly devoted to it are not as numerous as those who are devoted to other branches, it is simply because of circumstances, or because the parents or guardians of the students have designed that they should follow another path in life. It is open to them. There is the college, and there are the professors. You cannot expect, gentlemen, that within the short limit of ten years everything can be accomplished which will be done in a greater space of time. Gentlemen who do not find everything exactly according to their wishes, who do not find flourishing farms with students over them, engaged in the practical as well as the theoretical study of agriculture, will find that the time has been too short to make all the improvements which it is contemplated to make in the course of time. But if they preserve this organization as it is now, they will find donations flowing in, in large quantities, from every quarter, which will enable the Regents to realize that idea more fully of teaching the science of agriculture in a practical manner. The institution is in its infancy, and we do not expect that the infant will do what the full-grown man will be able to accomplish. I know that if this section is adopted, and if this Constitution is adopted, that there will flow into the treasury of this institution large sums of money which I am certain will be kept out if you leave it as a matter to be changed from time to time, as the will of the Legislature may suggest. I hope that the section will be preserved intact, and will be carried into effect by the Convention.

SPEECH OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I have been a member of the Board of Regents, and am somewhat conversant with the management of the University. Having been a member of the Legislature, I am somewhat familiar with its history, but I must admit that I have heard more with regard to the misdeeds of that institution this morning, than I have during the twelve years that I have been a member of the Board of Regents. I do not know that I can answer all the objections that have been made against the administration in the course of ten minutes, but I would like to satisfy this Convention, if I could, that the letter of the Act of Congress has been complied with, and that the Act of the Legislature, organizing this institution, has been complied with. It has been stated here, or some one says, that this Board of Regents is a luxurious set of persons; that they indulge in champagne and things of that kind This is all new to me; I have never seen any champagne flowing at the meetings of that Board. We meet in the fourth story of a building in San Francisco. It is a very onerous duty. It is not a pleasure. I am willing to give up my position on that Board of Regents to any of you gentlemen who feel competent to administer it and to take it off my hands. I do not want it. I do it because I take an interest in the University. I do not do it for profit, and no other Regent does. In the course of time that I have been there I have spent money out of my own pocket to the extent of perhaps three or five hundred dollars a year, and I have yet to see the first dollar that ever come into my pocket by way of salary, or into the pocket of any other Regent. I know that the opposition to this Board has arisen among men who want to control the funds of that institution, not in the interest of the public, but for their own private gain and advantage. I know the intrigues that have been going on throughout this State, and I know where they originated; but I care not here to allude to private matters, but if any one wishes information, I will give it to him in private if he desires. Now, as to the complaints that have been made here by five thousand people. Five thousand men may constitute a rumor, or five hundred men may, or five men. Out of his five thousand let him name five men that will come up and make the charges against the Board of Regents of the University. That is little enough to ask. I would like to hear them and know them. If there has been any stealing there I know nothing about it.

MR. HEISKELL. Did not an investigating committee of the Legislature find that there had been gross mismanagement, if nothing else?

MR. HAGER. I do not know that they did. I was sworn as a witness, and I stated there, under oath, what I state here, that if there had been any stealing, I did not know anything about it. It is not an easy matter to get up here and explain in detail, matters that cover fifty or one thousand dollars.

MR. BARTON. Will you allow me to name five men? I refer you to the committee appointed by the Speaker of the House, during the session of eighteen hundred and seventy-three-seventy-four, to investigate the condition of affairs at the University. They found thousands of dollars for which the Regents could not produce vouchers.

MR. HAGER. I do not think they found thousands of dollars——

MR. BARTON. I make the charge.

MR. HAGER. I do not believe that any Regent of the University has ever misappropriated one dollar of its funds. There have been a great many honorable men upon that Board. Governor Haight was a Regent most of the time. He was our attorney after he ceased to be a Regent, and the Board did not take any action except it was concurred in or recommended by him, for years past. I do not know what the Legislative committee referred to did, I was absent at that time, but I do say this, that I do not believe they ever traced one dollar of the funds of the University to the pockets of any Regent, or that any Regent ever made a dollar out of the trust, and I defy all proofs to the contrary.

Now, then, Mr. Chairman, as I have stated I would like to explain how this institution originated, how it was formed in connection with the Act of Congress and the Act of this State. Now, there is one mistake here, that has been made in all the arguments, that we have violated the Act of Congress. How have we violated? That we have departed from the very Act of Congress which was to establish an agricultural college and mechanical art college. Is that true? What says the Act? "The interest of which shall be inviolably appropriated, by each State, which may take and claim the benefit of this Act to the endowment, support, and maintenance of at least one college where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics, to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts." How? "In such manner as the Legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe." Why? "In order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life." The State Legislature, gentlemen, has the control of this matter under the Act of Congress, and if its administration has been conducted according to the direction of its laws, who has violated the Act of Congress? Suppose the State Legislature has directed and authorized every Act that the Regents have done, would that bring any violation of the Act of Congress if the Regents followed the direction of the Acts of the Legislature. I say that this trust has been administered under this Act in this State better than in any other State in the Union. Congress made a special law by which we could locate on unreserved lands, by means of which we got five dollars an acre instead of one dollar and twenty-five cents. That is the bill that was passed while Mr. Casserly was in the United States Senate. In order to benefit this fund, the Regents went to Congress and asked them to pass a special Act, not that they should squander what they were allowed to spend, but that they might increase that fund, by locating their lands on unreserved lands. Yet we are told here that we have stolen the money and squandered the fund, and there it is in the treasury of the State of California, locked up in its vaults in bonds preserved to the State of California for the education of its youth as it was intended and designed. How many of you learned men could better administer that trust than it has been administered? Who of you would have stolen less of these funds than have been stolen? Look at the administration of public affairs in the State, city, county, and municipal governments. See how they have been administered, and compare it with the administration of this fund belonging to the University of the State of California. Now then what does the Act say?——

MR. WYATT. Will the Judge allow me one question. You do not pretend to defend the action of the Board of Regents upon the principle of comparative steal between that and any other steal, do you?

MR. HAGER. I only intend to defend them against the charges which have been made that they have stolen these funds, or improperly applied them. Had the charges not been made I would have never got off upon that subject.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's ten minutes have expired.

[Cries of "Leave" and "Object."]

MR. REED. Mr. Chairman: I wish to give the time allowed to me to Judge Hager.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has the right to give him the time if he desires it.

MR. STEDMAN. I object.

MR. HAGER. I do not speak upon these matters because I desire to speak, but because I think this Convention is under a misapprehension, and I want to set them right if I can; and I want to show that the Regents have complied with the law. The University was organized under an Act of the Legislature, passed in eighteen hundred and sixty-eight. What does that Act authorize to be done? That Act is in conformity with the Act of Congress, and provides the manner in which this fund should be made use of. I cannot of course read the Act, but I refer to it so far as I think it is necessary to bring the attention of the Convention to it. The first section says: "The University shall have for its design to provide instruction and complete education in all the departments of science, literature, art, industrial and professional pursuits and general education, and also special courses of instruction for the professions of agriculture, the mechanic arts, mining, military science, civil engineering, law, medicine, and commerce, and shall consist of various colleges, namely: "First, Colleges of Arts; second, a College of Letters; third, such professional and other colleges as may be added thereto or connected therewith."

Section three says that "the said Board of Regents shall endeavor so to arrange the courses of instruction, that the students of the different colleges and the students at large may be largely brought into social contact with each other, by attending the same lectures and branches of instruction."

Section four provides for the establishment of a college of agriculture, and section five for the establishment of a college of mechanic arts. Now, section seven says: "But provisions herein, and hereinbefore contained, regarding the order in which the said colleges shall be organized shall not be constructed as directing or permitting the organization of any of the specified colleges to be unnecessarily delayed, but only as indicating the order in which said colleges shall be organized, beginning with the College of Agriculture, and adding in succession to the body of instructions in that and the other colleges successively in the order above indicated. Only the first year's course of instruction shall be provided for in each college at first, the other successive years' courses being in each year as the students advance to the same, until the full course in each college is established; provided, however, that the Board of Regents may organize at once the full course of the College of Letters, if, in their judgment, it is expedient so to do, in order to allow the College of California to immediately convey the residue of its property to the State for the benefit of the University, and to become disincorporate and go out of existence, pursuant to its proposition to that effect."

There is the authority to organize the College of Letters first, in order to obtain the grant from the College of California, which was disincorporated. Were they not authorized to institute this College of Letters? Now, perhaps it is not generally known that the College of California had a property. Its property was donated to the State of California for the benefit of the University. This institution was the successor of the College of California. The College of Letters has, therefore, been established in accordance with the directions of this Act, and the College of Agriculture, and the College of Mechanic Arts, and all these colleges, have been organized in accordance with the directions of this Act, by the authority of the Act of Congress, and not, as I said before, in violation of its provisions. We have organized a College of Mechanics, and for civil engineering and chemistry; and we have a medical college, which has been donated to the College of California; and we have a college in farming, that has been established; and we have a College of Letters, and the College of Law, which has been referred to, and which was a donation. Now, take the College of Agriculture. Its Faculty are the most enlightened and most intelligent men on that subject in the State of California. I put Professor Hilgard as the first man in agriculture and agricultural teaching in the State of California, and he is the leading Professor in that institution.

Mr. BIGGS. How may graduates have been turned out from the department of agriculture?

Mr. HAGER. Now, if we have a College of Agriculture and students will not go there to be taught agriculture, what will you do? The fact is you cannot teach agriculture in a college of this kind. I know something about this matter. I do not care to talk about my private life, but I was brought up on a farm, was raised on a farm, have worked on a farm. I know what it is to be a farmer, and if I had five hundred sons that I wanted to make farmers, practical farmers, I would not send them to the University of California, or to any agricultural college. Every farmer knows that you cannot learn practical farming at an agricultural college. It is not the place. There is something that you may learn in connection with agricultural chemistry and the admixture of soil, that is to be obtained in the books; and in horticulture you may learn a great deal from books. But men do not go to agricultural colleges to become that kind of farmers that go out to work practically on the plains of California. My friend Mr. Biggs never would go to the University of California to know how to carry out practical farming. He might go there for various matters connected with science and chemistry, and he might be enlightened. These students all have the opportunity. It is not a college. It is a university, and any man may go there and attend a lecture, whether it comes from the Professors of the College of Letters, of Mines, of Medicine, or any other department. There is no such thing as going into a school room to study over your book, with a teacher there to stand by and see that you are performing your duty. You go there and hear the Professors lecture on any subject that you see fit You bear an examination to see whether you have attended to your duties, and you get a diploma or certificate as to what you know. Any one can go there and connect himself with any of the departments.

Now, the first college built there was a brick building, and it cost a great deal more than it would have cost, by the State saying that it should be done by the day, and that eight hours should constitute a day's work. I do not object to eight hours being a day's work, but when a mechanic goes and works eight hours for so much a day, then he concludes that he can work two or four hours longer and get credit for another day. Some men worked ten hours a day, and in that way we paid a very high price for that institution. We have put up, recently, a Mechanic Arts College, and it cost us but thirty-five thousand dollars. It is the most extensive building on the ground, and well adapted to the use for which it was constructed.

SPEECH OF MR. LARKIN.

Mr. LARKIN. Mr. Chairman: I am surprised at the line of discussion that this question has brought forth here. It is not new. When anything affecting the State University, or the management of it, or the conduct of it since its organization, comes up, members of the Board of Regents have considered themselves bound to at once rise to a question of privilege. Yesterday we were informed, in the elaborate argument of a learned and distinguished member of that Board, that there were a number of very wealthy people who would probably die soon and leave the University a large amount of property. Of course, we should be glad to have them, when they die, leave the property to that institution. The opposition to this tenth section is not opposition to the gentlemen who compose that Board of Regents. It is not because the members of this Convention desire in any way to cripple that institution, or desire in any way to retard its progress, or in any way to hinder the objects for which it is created. It is the language of the section, and its effect. Under our form of government the Constitution of the United States may be changed, as it has been from time to time since the organization of the Government. In our State, provision is made for a change of the Constitution, but this remarkable section provides that this institution, created by law, shall not be changed. Now, it may be perfect, but some future generation might determine that they could make an improvement upon it. I, for one, believe that all knowledge will not cease with this Convention. I believe that there will be men come after us that ought to have a right to change the management of that institution. I believe the University of California should constitute a public trust. There is no question in my mind, but what the funds derived from the one hundred and fifty thousand acres of land are a public trust, and should be received as such; but that particular fund that was donated for an Agricultural and Mechanic Art College, is not all the State University. I believe that that section should be so amended that the fund of the University of the State of California should be considered a public trust.

Mr. WINANS. Will the gentleman allow me to explain? Heretofore the Constitution of this State has provided that the term of certain officers should not exceed four years. There will probably be a similar proviso in the document we are framing. It was held by some that the Regents, whose term was fixed at sixteen years, could not hold their offices for that length of time, because they were limited by the Constitution; but the Supreme Court finally held that it constituted a public trust, and that therefore they were not officers, under the Constitution, and therefore could hold sixteen years. I state distinctly, and in all good faith, that these words are used exclusively to meet that objection, and to answer that end, and for nothing else. There is nothing concealed or clandestine about it.

Mr. LARKIN. The gentleman explained the same yesterday. The opposition to the section rests mainly against this language: "and its organization and government shall be perpetually continued in their existing form and character." Now, so far as the matter of this discussion is concerned, each member of that Board of Regents upon this floor, excepting the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Casserly, has made it a point to rise to a question of privilege. I do not think that he has done it. They have placed themselves in a false position before the world, and before the people of this State, by making a personal matter of it, the moment you allude to them. Now, if their conduct is good and correct—which I have not questioned—there is no necessity for their jumping to their feet here when it is asked to put it in the power of the Legislature to examine into their affairs; and if, at some time the people desire to change this matter, it is well to have that power. We have never been able to inquire into the workings of that institution; to inquire into the financial relations of it. There may be no necessity of it now, but there may be a time, when these honorable gentlemen have passed away, that it would be necessary, and the Legislature should have the power to inquire into the management, and to change the form of the management. These are some of the reasons why we desire this change. We believe that the money derived from the sale of this one hundred and fifty thousand acres of land should be set apart as a separate fund; should be secure, for the purposes of the grant, and should be carried out in good faith, and not devoted to any other purpose. Is that wrong? I desire to carry out the Act in good faith; and we hold that that tenth section does not carry it out in good faith. We desire to amend the section so that it shall carry it out in good faith; so that the Legislature shall have the power to inquire into the working of that institution, and, if necessary in order to carry out the provisions of that grant, shall have the right to change the management of that institution. Is there anything wrong in that? Is there any necessity for each and every gentleman to denounce us as opposed to that institution, because we desire to have the right to correct abuses that may grow up after these honorable gentlemen may have passed away? These are the changes that we have sought to make in this amendment. I have not heard one of the opponents of this section intimate in a syllable that he was opposed to that institution. All we desire is to act for the welfare of the people and the prosperity of that institution. I hope that the gentlemen will stop their allusions to each other, and let us proceed to the discussion of the merits of the question.

SPEECH OF MR. BROWN.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I concur with the gentleman who has been last on the floor with regard to the propriety of considering section ten. It may be that there are other subjects in connection with this matter that are of consequence to this body and cast light upon it, but section ten is the section which is before us for investigation, and for action or nonaction upon it. I am convinced that there is not a gentleman in this honorable body who is opposed to education. I am convinced that there is not one who is opposed to the University, but all are anxious that institution should flourish, and that it should be handed down to future generations intact and in a degree of grandeur greater than it now possesses—owing to the progress of time and to other circumstances. But it is a matter of some consequence that the proper means should be taken in order to accomplish this grand consummation. Now, we hear it stated before this body that Congress gave to the Legislature of this State the right to control that institution. We are aware of all of this, but the idea is, shall this State still retain that control? Shall we put an enactment here in this organic law which shall declare that it shall not have that control? Shall this body, by an organic act in the Constitution of this State, declare a restrictive principle that will prevent the Legislature of this State from examining into the business affairs of that institution? If we were in favor of that, in my opinion, we could not strike a more fatal blow against the University of this State, but if we manage in such a way as to have it at all times open to investigation, to see that everything is going on right, then we hand it down to posterity, and have it now, even as it was intended.

Now, it is only necessary to examine this section ten:

"The University of California shall constitute a public trust"——

I shall not dwell upon the public trust, as that has been sufficiently treated of.

—"and its organization and government shall be perpetually continued in their existing form and character"——

Gentlemen have said that it may be necessary hereafter to change that form and character; that human institutions and human progress make it necessary to have changes; that to change is mortal, and that we do not know that we have reached perfection in these respects. Then it goes on further with regard to a subject which I contend special attention should be directed to.

—"subject only to such legislative control as may be necessary to insure compliance with the terms of its endowments."

Now, I am fully convinced that this is wrong. There is to be no legislative control in this matter; none except what is necessary to insure compliance with the terms of its endowments, and of the several Acts of the Legislature of this State. These Acts have already been passed, and now here there is a restriction placed upon the Legislature that it shall have no further control except to confirm these Acts; nothing else; excluded from all further investigation of the affairs of this institution. Now, it is a matter of the most serious consequence that we should take into consideration whether we shall have this institution on such a basis. Although the present officers may be just, and true, and good, we do not know that it will always have such, and if there is not a word to say against it at this time, we do not know but at some future time it may be highly important to investigate the affairs of that body. Now, to give up control in these respects, and say that the Regents have conducted it all right, and for the future it will be the same, I am under the impression that it would be unjust to the people of this State. We should not restrict the Legislature in this respect. I might go on with arguments to show that this clause forbids legislation, except so far as to confirm the endowments and the Acts of the Legislature which have been passed. Do we wish to have the Legislature forbidden to take any action with regard to this body in the line of investigation of its conduct? I am sure that a majority of the members here do not wish it, and I am opposed to the section.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: It seems to me that this is a most extraordinary controversy. In the first place insinuations are made against these Regents, as to how they have managed the trust which has been placed in their hands, and when they get up here and explain the manner in which that trust has been managed, gentlemen say that they are nervous; and instead of defending the policy of the section they are undertaking to defend themselves. They are required to be silent when they are charged with mismanagement. Why do not these gentlemen specify in what they have been dishonest? If they have stolen anything, why do not these persons indicate where and when? There has been but one specific charge, and that was by Mr. Barton, who speaks of a report of a committee of the Legislature. I do not recollect the terms of that report exactly, but at the time I read it over and made up my mind that it was all bosh. It was because the contractor putting up the building did not put in the right sized timber. He did not complete all the provisions of his contract. No fault of the Regents was demonstrated by that report, according to my recollection. The amendment which is proposed by the gentleman from Alameda, as the gentleman from Los Angeles has correctly stated, would give Congress a chance to nullify the grant. This grant must be used for the purposes for which it was donated, and the action of the Legislature and of the Regents has not been in violation of the Act making the donation. This trust must be administered according to the terms of the grant itself. The Act of Congress has been read here repeatedly. While agriculture, very likely, is put forward as one of the more important elements, it is just as distinctly specified that the others shall not be excluded. The amendment offered by Mr. Webster is to exclude the others, and is therefore in direct conflict with the terms with the grant of Congress.

Now, the gentleman from Tulare seems to think that this section deprives the Legislature of all power of control over this Board of Regents. I understand this first clause of the section simply to perpetuate the form and continue the Regents as a body in force and in power. Now I wish to know what gentlemen wish to point out. Are you going to have the Legislature appoint a committee to regulate it? What are they but Regents under a different name? If it is a specific body appointed a specific authority, what is better than the Regents? Why the gentlemen are entirely silent upon that question. They do not point to anybody else. Is it not apparent on the face of it that there has got to be somebody? Then what is the difference whether you call them Directors, Trustees, Committee, or Regents? I cannot see. "That which we call a rose, by any other name would smell as sweet." They wish even to change the appointing power. What is the reason why we should take it from the Governor? I cannot see any propriety in it. Now, as to the subject of legislative control. The section says that it shall be subject to such legislative control as may be necessary to insure compliance with the terms of its endowments. What does control mean—advice? I understand the word control to be mandatory. It is the right to direct. The Legislature, then, has the right to control and direct this institution so as to insure compliance with the terms of its endowments, and to insure compliance with the several Acts of the Legislature of this State, and with the Congress of the United States. Does not this section allow the Legislature to judge what shall be necessary to insure compliance with the terms of the endowments? They have the right to enforce it. If the Regents undertook to take this land and misappropriate it, the Legislature has the right to prevent their doing it. I cannot see the slightest objection to it. The language is as good as it possibly can be. I hope this will be maintained as it is. One trouble is that the farmers do not want to educate their sons to their own business. When the truth is known they are ashamed of their business, when they ought to be ashamed of their own false pride. It is true that you cannot make farmers simply upon theoretical instruction alone. But you can teach many things that would be useful in that pursuit. I hope the section will stand.

MR. STUART. Mr. Chairman: I am sorry to see the course the farmers are taking upon this subject. I am in favor of the section as reported by the committee. I was going to say something, but as the hour for recess has arrived, I will move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The motion prevailed.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Education, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention then took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

PETITIONS.

MR. WYATT presented the following petition, signed by a large number of citizens of Monterey, asking the exemption of certain property from taxation:

To the Honorable J. P. Hoge, President, and to members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: Your petitioners, citizens of the State of California, and residents of Monterey City, most respectfully request your honorable body to exempt from taxation all property used exclusively for charitable, educational, and church purposes.

Laid on the table, to be considered with the article on revenue and taxation.

Messrs. Campbell, Tully, Wickes, and Jones presented similar petitions.

Laid on the table, to be considered with the article on revenue and taxation.

REPORT.

MR. WINANS. Mr. President: I wish to send up a report from the Committee on Education.

THE SECRETARY read:

To the President of the Convention:

The Committee on Education report that they have considered, approved, and recommend the adoption of the amendment offered by Howard, of Los Angeles, to section ten.

WINANS, Chairman.

THE STATE UNIVERSITY.

MR. WINANS. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, President Hoge in the chair, to further consider the article on education.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section ten and amendments thereto are before the committee.

SPEECH OF MR. STUART.

MR. STUART. Mr. Chairman: I am sorry to see the opposition that is made to this tenth section, and against the University, by the farmers on this floor—by many of them, at least. I approve of the report of the committee generally, and will stand by it, and I hope the Convention will carry it out. A few words first, in regard to the education of our children. The gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. West, I believe, said that the studies had been placed on a higher plane than they had intended to go. I think he is mistaken, because it is well known that four or five years ago—about the time the University moved into its present quarters—there were but four or five students during the whole term in the Agricultural College. I know, for among them was my son. I also had him placed in the Mechanic Arts College, besides other branches of learning. It was hard to find enough scholars to form a class in the Agricultural College, for the reason, I suppose, that the farmers are just as apt to want to educate their sons in the professional walks as any other class. Whatever studies they choose they can take. I have been greatly surprised at the position taken here by the Workingmen and farmers upon this subject. This is an educational institution, where all farmers' sons, all poor men's sons, are taught without cost or charge; an institution that any man may attend by simply having enough to bear his personal expenses during the time. The legal and financial standing of the institution has already been explained by those who know more about it than I do. I could name a number of eminent men who have sent their sons to this institution, and they have come forth endowed with a brilliant education, and thoroughly fitted to buffet with the world. The youngest member of this body is a graduate of that institution, and stands to-day an honor to his preceptors, and one of the brightest intellects on this floor. I have no doubt in saying that. These graduates are scattered all over the State. They do not come from the cities altogether, nor are they confined to rich men's sons. They are workers, engaged in the various pursuits of life. They receive practical instruction, which is of use to them in making a living. I believe that is all I have to say, or need to say. There are other and more able gentlemen who desire to make remarks on this subject.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I ask that the amendment reported by the committee be accepted as a part of the report.

THE CHAIRMAN. It can only be accepted as a recommendation.

SPEECH OF MR. JOHNSON.

MR. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman: There are many things to be considered in connection with section ten and the proposed amendments. We know, as a matter of fact, that the University of California has been of slow growth, and that it has been owing to the fostering influences and donations which it has received from this State and from the General Government, that it has risen to its present proud position. We have many older institutions of learning in this country, they too have attained their status and reputation by reason of munificent donations from the patrons of education. There is Dartmouth College, for instance. That institution stood by its rights, those rights which it had acquired from and under its colonial charter. It was compelled to resort to litigation to maintain those rights, and when the Supreme Court of the United States passed upon the question, they said the attempt to interfere with the institution in that way was a violation of the Constitution, in that it was impairing the obligation of a contract. The then little institution, by dint of perseverance and the aid of friends of education, was thus enabled finally to place herself upon a secure and imperishable foundation. So other institutions have grown up by eleemosynary aid, until they became strong in development, and were recognized and inspired confidence as established and permanent institutions. Men when dying, when leaving their last legacies and bequests, have often coupled with them a legacy for some institution of learning; but, sir, this, as prudent men, they would never have done had they believed that the institution was on an insecure foundation, and the means which they had acquired with so much toil and unrest would, after their death, be scattered to the four winds. Believing that the institution was firmly established they were willing to place it on a still more solid foundation; and I tell you, sir, that if you cripple the University of California, in the way now proposed, it will have a powerful effect upon this class who have a disposition to endow the institution with a portion of their abundant wealth. If they believe that the University will be permanently changed, that the funds will be squandered and segregated, that the institution will stand upon a questionable foundation, they will not endow it and then contemplate the dissipation of their own fortunes in a vain endeavor. Nothing that we could do would be so hurtful to the growth and progress of the University, nothing so suicidal as to lessen the public confidence in the stability and permanence of the institution. These donations, these endowments for specific purposes, are in the nature of a contract which cannot be violated without going contrary to the decisions of the highest Court in the land, and that is precisely what the amendment offered by Mr. Webster does.

Again, it has no merit whatever, over and above the section reported by the committee. In the first place, the Webster amendment proposes the segregation of the University funds, the Agricultural fund from the other funds. Is there anything in the Act of Congress to warrant that segregation? I challenge it as antagonistic to the Act of Congress. There is placed in this amendment a clause segregating these funds, when there is no such segregation authorized by the Act of Congress, either directly or by implication.

I now read from section four, article nine, of the present Constitution: "The Legislature shall take measures for the protection, improvement, or other disposition of such lands as have been or may hereafter be reserved or granted by the United States, or any person or persons, to this State, for the use of a University; and the funds accruing from the rents or sale of such lands, or from any other source, for the purpose aforesaid, shall be and remain a permanent fund, the interest on which shall be applied to the support of said University, with such branches as the public convenience may demand, for the promotion of literature, the arts and sciences, as may be authorized by the terms of such grant. And it shall be the duty of the Legislature, as soon as may be, to provide effectual means for the improvement and permanent security of the funds of said University."

Sir, the framers of this Constitution, whose seats we now occupy, when they incorporated that provision into the Constitution, had the idea of a University, with a permanent, indestructible fund. That was the object of this provision in the Constitution. This provision antedates the congressional legislation in respect to this fund. The congressional Act was passed in eighteen hundred and sixty-two, but as early as the adoption of our present Constitution and its ratification by the people, it is apparent that the framers of it and the people who voted for it, thought there ought to be a permanent University, with a permanent fund.

Now, sir, I have referred to only one of the cardinal principles of departure contained in the Webster amendment, the segregation of the funds. I will now cite another, which is equally alarming, which is the superseding of the broad, general culture contemplated by the Act of Congress, by an agricultural school. I will read only so much of the Act of Congress as relates to this particular subject which I am now considering. "The leading subject shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies," and if you do not exclude them, you must include them; if you have no power to exclude, you must necessarily include, "the teaching of such branches as are related to agriculture," not simply agriculture, but such branches as are related to agriculture, "in such manner as the Legislatures of the States may respectively prescribe, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions of life."

This education is not to be in one pursuit or profession of life, but in the several pursuits and professions of life. It is to be both liberal and practical. Now, in looking over the provisions of this amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, I do not see that he has provided for this liberal education. I think he has signally failed to include those other scientific and classical studies contemplated by the Act of Congress. I think he has ignored the several pursuits and professions of life, and confined his attention exclusively to one department—the department of agriculture.

[At this point in the speaker's remarks the gavel fell.]

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. I will give the gentleman my time.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will then proceed.

MR. JOHNSON. I thank the gentleman from Santa Clara for his courtesy. I have but a few words more to say. The gentleman from Alameda has eliminated from his amendment the cardinal principle of the congressional legislation, which says in effect that the education provided for shall be in the several pursuits and professions of life. Therefore, sir, I say that it is in direct conflict with the Act of Congress. I say, also, that it is in violation of the obligation of contracts; that it stands upon the same plane as the Dartmouth College case, and that if passed, it will encounter the same opposition and the same decision.

I ask the gentleman from Alameda, why should we seek to apply the iconaclastic hand to such an institution as the University of California? It has grown up under the benign influence of the donations from the people of this State and from the Congress of the United States, together with the liberal funds given to it by the College of California.

Look across the bay at her sisters. There she sits, the bride of the Pacific, her foot touching the waters, and her head resting upon the foothills of the Contra Costa range. Her outlook is over the islands and the Golden Gate of commerce for the Pacific Coast. With such surroundings, to which may be added a most salubrious climate and inviting shade, we are forcibly reminded of Milton's description of the gardens of Pluto, where "the attic bird trills her thick-warbled notes the Summer long."

In spite of all this, shall we do away with this thrice-fostered institution and dismantle her walls? Shall we compel our farmers to pay tribute to other colleges outside of this State, and send thence their children to acquire a liberal education, which, but for our hostile acts, might as well have been acquired at home? The effect of it will be to take a large amount of means from this State and send it to other States, and change a now liberal and satisfactory curriculum of study into an agricultural specialty.

Aside from the law of the case, I appeal to the State pride of the gentleman from Alameda, aye, more, to his home pride; for the institution whose claims I am now advocating is located in his own county.

It appears to me to be unwise to antagonize Congressional legislation on this subject. The Legislature would have to interpret the provision which we may adopt. Would they pass laws to carry out if they knew it was unconstitutional? that it was in conflict with Congressional legislation? They have repeatedly refused to go contrary to the laws of Congress, and they are entitled to a great deal of credit for so doing. Shall we ask the Legislature to undo what they have already done in giving unity of design, and providing for a liberal course of study in the University of California? Shall we annul, or try to annul, the Congressional Act? and, lastly, shall we do violence to those men who have made their bequests, and died in the hope that this institution was to remain an established entity, and intact in this State? Now, sir, I have no fight to make with agriculture in this State, nor have I any fight to make with labor in this State. I think, generally, my sympathies have run in the direction of both; but, sir, I am not in favor of experimental legislation, or an experimental constitutional provision, which is in direct conflict with the Act of Congress, the general sentiment of our people, and seeks to build up foreign institutions of learning at the expense of our cherished University.

So far as the Regents are concerned, there is some idle clamor against them. Some of these men have records in this State. Those who have been associated with that Regency will bear witness to what I say, that these aspersions are a gross injustice to the memory of the dead, and as for those who are living, it is not for me to defend them when they are so amply able to represent themselves. But I will simply say that this cry against them is mere idle clamor, which cannot be substantiated by the facts. Sir, I admit that iconoclasm is sometimes right, when some mouldy moss-grown wrong is to be removed out of the pathway of progress. This is something else. It is an institution built up by domestic and national generosity, which has diffused and is still diffusing a broad and general culture throughout the State. Aside from what nature has so liberally given us, it is nearly all that we have to be proud of as Californians.

Pass the Webster amendment, and after the great wrong shall have been done, it will be too late to try to remedy the evil. After the funds shall have been segregated, and the present colleges shall have merged into a college of agriculture, the public confidence will be gone and will never crystallize again around any institution of learning in this State. This cannot be done with my vote. Amid the ruins I should feel as guilty as the man who fired the temple at Ephesus. I do not attack the motives of the opposition, and only hope to succeed in showing them that their position is ill-advised.

Why, sir, the Act of Congress gives no possible excuse for such a provision as the Webster amendment. It says there shall be at least one college, and that the leading object shall be those studies which relate to agriculture and the mechanic arts. You may have more than one college then, may you not? If you have several colleges the Act does not say that the leading object shall be the same in all of them. I therefore humbly submit that the section, with the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, is all that is required, and nothing else should be adopted. I want no son of mine to have the bitter reflection that it was his father who attempted to destroy this great institution.

REMARKS OF MR. ANDREWS.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. Chairman: I cannot indorse the report of the committee, neither does the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda entirely meet my views. I believe the question is in such a position at this time that no amendment can be accepted. I have drawn a section which comes nearer meeting my views in relation to what the Constitution should contain, than the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda. I will read it for information:

"SEC. 10. The Legislature shall take measures to preserve the funds which have accrued or may accrue from the disposition of such lands as have been or may hereafter be reserved or granted by the United States for a college for 'the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts;' and the funds accrued or accruing from the rents or sale of such lands, for the purposes aforesaid, shall be and remain a permanent fund, the interest of which shall be applied in strict conformity with the terms of said grant; and said college for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts may be combined with other colleges of the University of the State, but not so as to impair the terms of the aforesaid grant. It shall be the duty of the Legislature, as soon as may be, to provide effectual means for the investment and permanent security of the funds of the University of the State."

The objectionable part is left out—"the University of California shall constitute a public trust." Now, sir, there is a trust which exists in regard to the donations made by Congressional grant. That is a trust which it is incumbent upon us to preserve. Now, the question is: Have these trusts been observed, or have they been violated? Has this particular trust been ignored? Now, sir, I say it is not for us to say that all these trusts have been carried out. It is not for us to show affirmatively that these trusts have not been carried out. It is for the other side to show that they have been. It is for those who advocate this section to show that no part of the trust has been ignored, and that it has been observed, and kept, and fulfilled. I have no war to make upon the University. I believe the people whom I represent desire to see an institution upon this coast that will confer as good an education as any institution in the United States. I believe that is the desire of the constituency that I represent. I believe that is the desire of the people of California. I believe that California wants to be able to say that she has an Athens upon the Pacific Coast. Why engraft this in the Constitution? Why is it necessary? Now, they say, in relation to the proposition offered by Mr. Webster, that it segregated the funds. I have not had a chance to examine the proposition critically, but, if I understand it, it simply proposes to engraft into the Constitution the Act of Congress, and if it segregates the funds, the Act of Congress does so. If there is any segregation of the funds, therefore, it is a segregation by the Act of Congress.

MR. CHAPMAN. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment to the amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by adding after 'affairs' in the line, 'but reports shall be made annually to the Governor of the State, with reference to its general management and the custody, receipts, and disbursements of all its funds.'"

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: The committee have no objections to requiring such reports to be made.

SPEECH OF MR. WEBSTER.

MR. WEBSTER. Mr. Chairman: That clause of the amendment segregating this fund from the other fund, is of no consequence whatever. By consent of a number of gentlemen it has been stricken out. It is not formally before the Convention yet, and we have stricken that out. But since the interest derived from this source must be applied specially for that purpose, as set forth in this Act, the presumption is it must be a separate fund. But it is not necessary at all. If the interest is annually applied as provided for, that is all that is necessary. It is not necessary that that clause should be there at all.

Now, sir, the criticisms that have been made here in regard to the management of the University, is not, in my opinion, any part of this debate. It is simply a matter of fundamental law for the government of the University. If there is anything wrong in its management, that is a matter for the Legislature, but it ought not to be brought in here. This amendment was offered in good faith, and with the exception of that part in relation to separate funds, it is absolutely and in fact the Act of Congress, with the exception of the words not included there, "scientific and classical studies." That, there is no objection to adding. You add that, and you have the Congressional Act, the gist of it, in short form. That is all there is of it. Now, sir, it is well known that the history of this Congressional Act dates back to eighteen hundred and forty-eight-nine. I believe the first inception of it was, in some of the eastern states, by concurrent resolution of the Legislature, calling upon Congress to make an appropriation of land to the several States, for the purpose of endowing a College of Agriculture and a College of Mechanic Arts. Now, sir, that bill was before Congress for a number of years. In eighteen hundred and fifty-nine the bill passed both houses of Congress, but was vetoed by the President, for some reason. For a while the old colleges of this country fought these agricultural donations upon the ground, that it was to set up an independent set of colleges. In eighteen hundred and sixty-two this bill came up again, at a time when there was great feeling in regard to military tactics, and it was passed. So after the bill had passed, the several great colleges of this country, and some other ones, applied to their several States to take these donations, and agree to carry out the provisions of the Act of Congress. They succeeded in many of the States in doing this very thing. Now the only object I had in offering this amendment, was, that it might be maintained and conducted in the spirit, and for the purposes, as set forth in the Act. In my opinion, section ten, as reported by the committee, is in conflict with the Congressional Act itself, and for this reason: It says here, "subject to such legislative control only, as may be necessary for a compliance with the demands of its endowment, and of the several Acts of the Legislature of the State."

Now, sir, in passing this section you confirm and establish, not only the Act of Congress, as a duty enjoined upon the Legislature, but the Acts of the Legislature which have been passed. Now which ought to take precedence? They are both in the same section. Shall the Acts of Congress be complied with or the Acts of the Legislature? Now, sir, I hold that the consolidation Act of the last Legislature is incompatible with the Act of Congress, for that reason. It provides that the State Treasurer shall pay over from time to time the profits and revenue arising from such stocks and bonds, upon the demand of the Treasurer of the University, to be disbursed by him to meet the current annual expenses of the University of California. The question, then, is, which shall take precedence, the consolidation Act or the Act of Congress.

Now the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, says it is impracticable to teach practical education in agriculture in that college. Now, sir, I want to call his attention to the organic Act establishing this University, and see what the Legislature thought of it at that time, and what the Board of Regents subsequently thought of it. Section four of the Congressional Act says, "in order to promote the liberal and practical education," etc. What does that word "practical" mean? Here is what the organic Act says:

"SEC. 4. The College of Agriculture shall be first established, but in selecting the professors and instructors for the said College of Agriculture, the Regents shall, so far as in their power, select persons possessing such acquirements in their several vocations as will enable them to discharge the duties of Professors in the several Colleges of Mechanic Arts, of Mines and of Civil Engineering, and in such other colleges as may be hereafter established. As soon as practical a system of moderate manual labor shall be established in connection with the Agricultural College, and upon its agricultural and ornamental grounds, having for its practical education in agriculture, landscape gardening, the health of the students, and to afford them an opportunity by their earnings of defraying a portion of the expenses of their education. These advantages shall be open in the first instance to students in the College of Agriculture, who shall be entitled to a preference in that behalf."

[Here the gavel fell, objection being made to the speaker proceeding.]

MR. LEWIS. I give him my time, though I shall vote against his amendment.

Mr. WEBSTER. Now, sir, here is the organic Act which contemplated two colleges, one for agriculture and the other for mechanic arts. Now, sir, here is section one thousand four hundred and four of the Political Code, which reads as follows:

"SEC. 1404. A system of moderate manual labor must be established in connection with the Agricultural College, upon its agricultural and ornamental grounds, for practical education in agricultural and landscape gardening."

Now, sir, the Regents themselves, at that time had in contemplation practical teaching in agriculture, as will be seen by reading their report at that time. I don't know whether they have changed their opinions since that time, but they certainly had an idea then that there was such a thing as practical instruction in agriculture. Now, sir, I do not want to put anything in this amendment that will be superfluous. To simply provide that these legacies and endowments shall be applied to the purposes for which they were intended, and stop right there, might be considered sufficient, because it would be the duty of the Legislature to do it anyway; but there is hardly a Constitution in existence that does not have more than this; they generally have, in a concise form, the critical points of the Congressional Act. This is not an improper thing for us to do here, because there is not ten per cent. of this body, I presume, who have read that Congressional Act, and if you put it in here it will be reaffirming the provisions of that Act.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. WATERS. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Murphy, Schell, Kenny, and Smith.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried—ayes, 61; noes, 51.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is upon the amendment to the amendment offered by Mr. Chapman.

Adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Howard, as amended.

Adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from Alameda will now be in order.

Lost—ayes, 37.

MR. GRACE. I move to amend.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section ten by adding thereto the following: 'Provided that women over twenty-one years of age, and citizens of this State, may be appointed Regents of such University, and one or more of such women shall always be members by appointment to the Board of Regents.'"

REMARKS OF MR. GRACE.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I have always been in favor of the University of California, and I am in favor of it to-day, and I am in favor of doing anything and everything that will promote the education of the youth of this land, and I believe that the members of this Convention are in favor of doing what they believe to be right. I hold that women should have as much right there as men. If it is a place built for farmer's sons, it ought to be a place for farmer's daughters. I believe that women should be represented in every department of this Government, and I tell you, sir, if women had a voice in the management of our educational institutions they would be better managed. [Applause.] I believe that women are entitled to live, move, and have their being. If they are the weaker sex, all the more reason why the strong, protecting, fostering arm of the law should be thrown around them. Put this in the Constitution, and you need have no fear but what the people will indorse your action. We will do justice to ourselves, justice to the women, and we will have a government in truth and in fact, of the people, by the people, and for the people. [Applause.]

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. MURPHY. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Tully, Beerstecher, Shoemaker, and Biggs.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Grace.

Lost.

MR. WINANS. I move that the committee now rise, report back the article to the Convention, and recommend its adoption as amended.

Lost—ayes, 47.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 10. The University of California shall constitute a public trust, and its organization and government shall be subject to such legislative control as may be necessary to insure compliance with the terms of its endowments, and of the several Acts of the Congress of the United States, donating lands or money for its support. It shall be entirely independent of all political or sectarian influences, and kept free therefrom in the appointment of its Regents, and in the administration of its affairs."

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: It will be seen that I have eliminated most of the objectionable features from the section as reported by the committee, and I offer this as a compromise measure. I have stricken out the part which perpetuates the character and form of the present organization, and the Board of Regents, by implication, conforming to the legislation on this subject heretofore passed. Mr. Chairman, at the beginning of this discussion I must confess that I was imbued to some extent with the prevalent prejudice against the management, or rather the manner in which the University was carried out by the Board of Regents, as a trust. But with the discussion upon this floor, with the remarks of gentlemen who are connected with that institution, and who know all of its inside workings, I am satisfied that a great deal of the clamor and prejudice existing is unfounded. But at the same time this debate has brought me to the conclusion that it would not be well for this State to set up the University as a close corporation, one which would not be sufficiently controlled by the authority of the State, and my amendment, if it should be acceptable to the committee, I think will strike out those portions which have raised so much opposition, and leave that institution entirely controllable and amenable to the authority of the State. I think if gentlemen will consider my amendment they will see that it is just what is needed.

SPEECH OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I take it for granted that it is unnecessary for any one to speak in regard to the advantages that flow from education. We are all convinced in regard to that matter. I am satisfied there is no gentleman upon this floor who desires to antagonize the University of California. Most of the members of this Convention are old Californians. They are proud of her name and proud of her history, and the name of this University alone would endear her to all of us who have grown up here, and we all desire to make this institution an ornament to this State. But we must ever remember that no institution can flourish unless it be fostered. We cannot shut our eyes to the proposition that popular sovereignty has the control of this measure. Make the University of California popular, and from one end of this State to the other let a finger be raised against her prosperity, and that individual will be at once denounced. Now, we are all desirous, I have no doubt, of making a good institution. We desire to see her rise from her recumbent position into proud and lofty station. We want to see her take her feet from the waves of the bay, and her head from the hills, and stand erect, the proud and glorious institution of this glorious State. We desire to see her pouring forth an unbroken stream of youth in this land, armed with an education that they dare advance to the battle of life, as with an armor of iron and steel. We all know that in the battle of life an education is better than sword or shield. Now, we know that there will always be attempts made to traduce the parties who manage public institutions, in any land and in any country, and there will be a feeling among people that something is wrong, even though they can give no reasons to justify it. And I am satisfied there has been a feeling throughout the length and breadth of this State that something was wrong about this institution, and none can tell why. And the legislation which we are attempting to enact, and the conditions placed here, will have a tendency to keep up that feeling of dislike towards the institution. Now, we should in all things so frame this Act that justice will be done, and that this suspicion would not thereby be strengthened. It is not necessary to stir up embittered feeling. These men are officers of the State, and they are liable at any day to be called on to give an account of their stewardship. These men are but human, and are liable to make blunders like the rest of us. But in all things, as far as my observation has gone, I believe they have labored for the best interests of the people of this State. Why, do you think there is no pride in the human heart that it should want to be connected with a failure? The members of this Convention would not want it to go forth to the world that we had failed in our efforts here. Now, it became my duty, as a member of the Legislature, to investigate this matter—in the Legislature of eighteen hundred and seventy-three four. The report of our proceedings can be found in the Journal of the Senate and Assembly of that session. It was a joint committee, and we went to the University. We brought before us those who were clamoring against the administration, and we made just as thorough an investigation as our time would allow, and the conclusion which the committee arrived at was that the Regents had done well, considering all things; that they deserved the sympathy and support of the people at large for their management of the University. That was our judgment after deliberate examination. Something has been said in the argument here about charges made against the Regents by Professor Carr. I call your attention to the sworn testimony of that gentleman on page thirty-four of the report, wherein he refutes that statement. Again, on another page, in answer to a question as to whether he had found the yeomanry friendly to the University or not, he answered that he had never found anything to the contrary. Hence I am satisfied that much of this clamor has arisen from a misconception of the facts.

Now, I am opposed to section ten. Now, it is the privilege and the duty of members to offer suggestions and amendments, but amendments should not be offered or clung to unless they are intended to accomplish some good purpose. There should be no pride of opinion. Now, it is not that my amendment or your amendment, my course or your course, should be adopted, but what is best for this institution, what is best for the whole State? That is the question that is before us now. Now, it has been said by one member here, that they feared the cutting off of these bequests, and that if this section was not passed the Legislature would have power in some way to divert or misapply these donations. Hence, they desire to place the institution upon a firm foundation, so that some mere passing, temporary excitement will not remove or destroy it, together with the monuments of those who have gone from earth and left the labor of years to endow this institution. This, of course, is proper, because no man desires to leave a legacy to an institution unless he can be assured that it will stand amid changing times, long after his own bones are crumbling into dust. I do not believe the section, as reported, will accomplish the result aimed at, because it seems to me you place it in bands of iron, so that it can never grow or expand: so that she can never become greater; so that an additional college could never be added. Hence, I have drafted a substitute and I will trouble the Convention by reading it:

"The University of California is hereby declared to be a perpetual institution of this State, organized to administer a great public trust, and the Legislature shall have no power to impair or divert any gift, grant, or donation made to it, from the purposes or objects of those making such gift, grant, or donation; its officers shall hold office for such time as the Legislature may prescribe. Instructions shall be therein given, in addition to other matters, in agriculture, metallurgy, the mechanic arts and applied science; it shall be entirely independent of all political and sectarian influences."

They have a number of colleges now. By the tenth section they can never have any more, because there never can be any change. In order to meet the difficulties which I can see will arise if the tenth section is adopted, I offer this as a substitute.

REMARKS OF MR. BARTON.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: I rise for the purpose of refuting, if possible, as far as I am concerned, the charge that the farmers of this State, especially the farmers in this Convention are opposed to the educational interest in this State, and especially that of the University of California. As for me, having lived in this State over a quarter of a century, coming here as I did when we had but a few sparse mission schools, there is no man in the State of California who has watched the practical progress of education more than I myself, and therefore I deny that the charge has any foundation. The country elements in this State to-day are the very ones, more than any other, that are desirous of seeing the onward march of progress and education. It is not my desire to make a rehash of anything that has been said, but inasmuch as I am charged with having broached the subject, I cannot, and will not, with the permission of the Convention, sit still and see the matter whitewashed, without rising to refute it. In regard to the tenth section now being considered by this body, I desire to say that it does not meet with the approval of the farming element here, for the reason that it takes the matter out of the hands of the people, the proper and correct persons to whom these Regents should be responsible. That is my objection to the tenth section. In regard to the statement made by the gentleman from Santa Clara, in regard to the investigation made by the Joint Commission of eighteen hundred and seventy-three-four, I would inform this Convention that the committee was so surprised, and believed that they had been appointed and created for the purpose of forestalling the action of the committee of the lower branch of the Legislature, which was investigating the Board of Regents, in which business it had been engaged for a number of days, perhaps two weeks, before the appointment of this joint committee. When we had been at work some days, we were informed by the papers that there was a joint committee appointed, and that it would be in San Francisco the following day. It came there. The first intimation we had of it officially was a note received from the Chairman of the committee, asking us to join them in a joint investigation of the Board of Regents and the affairs of the University, after we had been investigating some days, perhaps two weeks, ourselves. Our reply was that inasmuch as we had been investigating already, it would be impossible for us then to retrace our steps and enter into a general investigation with them. And I know what I say when I assert that the joint committee had not time to make an investigation of the books, records, and documents of the Board of Regents, because during the four or five weeks of our investigation there was no possible show for these books to have passed out of our hands, because they were actually in our possession.

MR. REED. I will ask the gentleman if the two committees were not upon different subjects—one upon public buildings, and the other upon the management of the University?

MR. BARTON. Yes, sir; perhaps that is correct. However, I want it distinctly understood that I am not desirous of waging any war against the public educational institutions of this State. All I want is that these men shall be held responsible to the people. They have the right to always control it, and I do not want to pass a section that will place it beyond their control.

SPEECH OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I am glad to see good feeling prevailing in reference to the University. The objections of gentlemen seem to be not so much to the management of the Board of Regents as to the Acts of the Legislature in carrying out the Act of Congress. Now, sir, I think the Legislature of this State has, not only in spirit, but in letter, carried out the Act of Congress in regard to these donations; and I think, further, that the Regents of the University, in acting under the several Acts of the Legislature, are entitled to credit, and to the thanks of the people of this State for the manner in which they have, so far, managed the donations of Congress. And I remark here, further, that Congress itself has indorsed the action of the State Legislature in its manner of treating this fund, for the reason that Congress recently passed an Act allowing the Regents of the State University to locate lands embraced in the grant, upon unsurveyed lands, and to ask a price not exceeding five dollars an acre. What is the result? It at once made them preferred lands, and the Regents of the University have realized from that grant about five dollars an acre on the average, whereas, in the other States they only realized about one dollar per acre in currency, whereas our Board realized five dollars per acre in gold coin. And I say that Congress, by that Act, virtually recognized and approved the Acts of the State of California in carrying out that grant. I say, therefore, that the Regents have done well, and are entitled to the thanks of the people of California.

Now, sir, I am opposed to any project that seeks to divide or impair this fund, because if that is done it will have the same effect as dividing and impairing the common school fund, and it would weaken and destroy the State University. It will destroy confidence in it, and this is an institution that cannot exist without the confidence of the community, because these great institutions of learning must depend for support upon endowments, in a great measure. I was reading some time ago an account of the great Universities of the country, and the amount of property they own. The Harvard University stands first in rank as to wealth, having over six million dollars. Of all that vast fund belonging to that college, only about two hundred and sixteen thousand dollars came from the State of Massachusetts, and the rest of this immense sum came from private endowments. Now, that will be the case in reference to the University of California if it is allowed to be placed upon a firm foundation. These bequests will not be made so long as it is subject to change by the Legislature. Fix it permanently in the organic law, and there will be complete confidence, such as the older institutions of the country enjoy, and it will be the recipient of frequent and generous endowments. It is known that the late Michael Reese in his first will, had proposed to give to the University two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. Why did he change that will? Why, because the Legislature attempted to make a raid upon the University, and the very fact that this assault was made, weakened his confidence in the permanency of the institution, and he modified his will. We do not wish to place it beyond legislative control. No one desires that. We are willing that it shall be under legislative control, the same as Harvard and other Universities are, but we do not want the Legislature to have power to destroy it or impair its usefulness. It must be made permanent in order to enjoy the public confidence.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. TINNIN. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Wyatt, Lindow, Van Voorhies, and White.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is: Shall the main question be now put.

Carried—ayes, 59; noes, 27.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine.

Division being called for, the amendment was adopted, by a vote of 68 ayes to 49 noes.

MR. MORELAND (aye), paired with Mr. Campbell (no).

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the amendment as amended.

Adopted.

MR. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report back the article to the Convention, and recommend its adoption as amended.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report, that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Education, have adopted sundry amendments thereto, and recommend its adoption as amended.

MR. WINANS. I move that the report be ordered printed.

So ordered.

MR. SHOEMAKER. I move that the Convention do now adjourn.

Lost.

MR. INMAN. I move that we take up the bill of rights in Convention.

LAND AND HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE SECRETARY read the section reported by the committee:

SEC. —. Hereafter the homestead, consisting of the family dwelling-house, outbuildings, improvements, and lands appurtenant thereto, of each head of a family resident in this State, of the value not exceeding five thousand dollars, shall not be alienated or incumbered, except by the consent, in manner to be prescribed by law, of both husband and wife where that relation exists, and such homestead shall be exempt from seizure or sale for the payment of any debt or liability, except for the purchase-money and the payment of taxes, laborers' and mechanics' liens, and obligations for the improvement of such homestead, and for debts incurred before the adoption of this Constitution. And in case of the death of the husband and wife, the surviving member or members of the family, if any, shall succeed to the title and possession of such homestead, with the like exemption herein prescribed in favor of such head of family. And the Legislature shall, by general law, not inconsistent with this section, effectually secure the benefits of such homestead exemption.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I offer a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The Legislature shall protect by law from forced sale a certain portion of the homestead and other property of all heads of families."

MR. WILSON, of First District. I move to add to the section: "Provided, that nothing herein contained shall impair any homestead right existing at the time of the adoption of this Constitution."

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I call attention to the fact that the substitute which I offer is word for word the same as the old Constitution. It is section fifteen of article eleven. Now, under that provision I do not know of any injustice or wrong that has ever been done. The Legislature, at one time or another, has always provided exemptions from forced sale for the homestead and certain other property. We have always had very good homestead laws in the Constitution, and in the Codes. The Constitution says what we shall have, and the Legislature carries out the details. Now, when it has stood the test for twenty-nine years, I see no reason for changing it.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: As this is a matter of considerable importance, I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

MR. McFARLAND. I move the Convention do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at four o'clock P. M. the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow morning at nine o'clock and thirty minutes.

ONE HUNDRED AND EIGHTEENTH DAY.

THE JOURNAL.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with and the same approved.

So ordered.

PETITIONS.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara, presented the following petition, signed by a large number of citizens of Santa Clara County, asking the exemption of certain property from taxation:

To the Honorable J. P. Hoge, President, and to members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN: Your petitioners, citizens of the State of California, and residents of Milpitas, Santa Clara County, California, most respectfully request your honorable body to exempt from taxation all property used exclusively for charitable, educational, and church purposes.

Laid on the table, to be considered with the article on revenue and taxation.

Messrs. Brown and Morse presented similar petitions.

Laid on the table, to be considered with the article on revenue and taxation.

NOTICE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: I wish to give notice, that after the consideration of this report of the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption, I shall call for the consideration of the general file in Convention, for the purpose of taking up some of the articles and disposing of them, so that they can go to the Committee on Revision and Adjustment.

LAND AND HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION.

MR. SMITH, of Santa Clara. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the section and amendments.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. —. Hereafter the homestead, consisting of the family dwelling-house, outbuildings, improvements, and lands appurtenant thereto, of each head of a family resident in this State, of the value not exceeding five thousand dollars, shall not be alienated or incumbered, except by the consent, in manner to be prescribed by law, of both husband and wife, where that relation exists; and such homestead shall be exempt from seizure or sale for the payment of any debt or liability, except for the purchase-money and the payment of taxes, laborers' and mechanics' liens, and obligations for the improvement of such homestead, and for debts incurred before the adoption of this Constitution. And in case of the death of the husband and wife, the surviving member or members of the family, if any, shall succeed to the title and possession of such homestead, with the like exemption herein prescribed in favor of such head of the family. And the Legislature shall, by general law, not inconsistent with this section, effectually secure the benefits of such homestead exemption.

Substitute offered by Mr. Rolfe:

"Amend by substituting: 'The Legislature shall protect, by law, from forced sale, a certain portion of the homestead and other property of all heads of families.'"

Amendment offered by Mr. Wilson, of First District:

"Amend by adding to the section: 'Provided, that nothing herein contained shall impair any homestead right existing at the time of the adoption of this Constitution.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson.

MR. MCCALLUM. I desire to know if that is not to be added to the amendment of the gentleman from San Bernardino?

THE CHAIRMAN. It is to be added to the section as reported by the committee. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson.

The amendment was adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Rolfe.

MR. SWENSON. I have a substitute for section one.

"The Legislature shall protect, by law, from forced sale"——

THE CHAIRMAN. There is already a substitute pending.

MR. HAGER. Mr. Chairman: I believe this is the same provision that is in the existing Constitution. The law has been well settled in this State, in regard to homesteads, under that provision in the Constitution. It is settled and determined, at this time, with exact certainty, by the decisions of the Courts, what constitutes a homestead, and I think that, as it is settled, we had better adhere to the old Constitution. We had better leave things alone, unless there is an absolute necessity for change, and a certainty of effecting some useful improvement.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: For the reasons assigned by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, I am in favor of the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from San Bernardino. It is the section in the present Constitution; it has worked well, and I see no reason why we should depart from it for some new and untried scheme.

REMARKS OF MR. SCHELL.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I rise, sir, not for the purpose of making a speech on this subject, but merely to state that I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from San Bernardino will be adopted. I believe that our Legislature has made the most ample provision for the protection of the homestead, and there is no complaint on that head. I would rather leave it where it is. I have heard some complaints, however, from some quarters, that it is too high, that the amount exempted is too great. If the people of this State should, in the future, determine that it was too great, that it was exempting too much, why, then the Legislature, if you leave it as it is now, may alter it, but if this amendment reported by the committee should be adopted, it would be impossible to change the amount at all; I think a close examination of the report will reveal the fact that it is decidedly inconsistent with the existing statutes upon that subject, and, as has been remarked by the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager, the law is well settled upon that point. I think we had better leave well enough alone. I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from San Bernardino will be adopted.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I do not concede that there are any well established principles that should be adhered to in this particular. I deny that the present law does sustain, in fact, the idea of a homestead, and if there is any one point more than another that the people of this State should be entitled to, it is the protection of a home to every family. Now, how does the law and the present system work? The husband gets a piece of property with the earnings of his wife and himself, and pays for it. The deed is given in his own name. That is the universal custom. That is the settled principle which California has adopted—the deed is made to the husband. Perhaps his health is impaired and he incurs indebtedness; or he embarks in foolish speculations without the knowledge or consent of his wife. His wife, trusting in her husband, and supposing that everything is passing off properly and right, finds at last, that her home is gone.

MR. SCHELL. Do you not know that the husband cannot alienate or impair the homestead property under the existing laws without the consent of his wife.

MR. WEST. I do know that, providing the wife has gone and made a homestead of the property; but she cannot prevent it unless she has had her homestead recorded under the existing law. It requires a special act upon the part of the husband or wife, either of them; and in nine cases out of ten, the wife, confiding in her husband, does not avail herself of her rights. The point I wish to make is, that the first deed shall be a homestead, and if the parties wish to alienate—if the husband wishes to borrow money on a mortgage, he can do so by the consent of the wife joining with him in the mortgage. I deny the right and the justice of a husband to alienate the home or dwelling place of his wife and children without their knowledge or consent. But in order to make it a homestead it must be so recorded, which is not the uniform practice in this State. The uniform practice is that the husband buys and sells as he pleases.

MR. SCHELL. I will state to you, sir, that it has been well settled here, by the decisions of our Supreme Court, that no alienation, no sale of property, can be made without the wife joining in the deed.

MR. WEST. But in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred that declaration of a homestead is never made.

MR. SCHELL. The husband or wife may either one file the declaration of homesteads.

MR. WEST. I claim that every family is entitled to a home, and that the laws should secure the family a homestead, and if it is to be alienated it should be by a certain act of the wife joining with the husband. Now, I am certain that this proposition is advocated only by the lawyers upon this floor. They have got well settled rules of procedure——

MR. BEERSTECHER. I would ask the gentleman how the head of a family would acquire a homestead under this section?

MR. WEST. If I understand the section—I would say that this section is not as binding as I would like it. I would make a homestead entirely inalienable for any purpose whatever.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Wouldn't it be necessary to file a declaration under this section, before the benefits could be secured?

MR. WEST. According to the section, as I understand it, a husband buying a little homestead and moving his family there, it becomes a homestead, and cannot be alienated without the consent of the wife.

MR. BEERSTECHER. I think it would be necessary to file a declaration. I think there is no question about that.

MR. WEST. In the Western States it does not require the separate act of either husband or wife, to go and declare their homestead. If the family resides there, it is a homestead, and should be so declared in our law.

REMARKS OF MR. WATERS.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of this amendment, and it does seem to me that the argument of the gentleman from Los Angeles falls of its own weight. If he wishes to settle the question, this is no safe course to pursue. Now it may be a fact that lawyers have got settled principles to go by, but it seems to me that those very principles protect the citizens, if you view it in the right light. Now how would this rule of his work, would it not allow parties to claim three or four homesteads, if they could make a homestead simply by residing there a month? How many homesteads can the parties have? Tell me where the limit is. Tell me whether they could not change from one to another. It seems to me that the present system has afforded ample protection. It seems to me that we should leave well enough alone. These laws are for the protection of the citizen, and they are based upon good and sound reason, every time. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

MR. WICKES. Mr. Chairman: I object to the section as reported, and also to the substitute, principally because of the amount covered—five thousand dollars. Now I do sincerely wish, with the gentleman from Los Angeles, that every family had a home; but there is not one in one hundred that will acquire a home of this value—five thousand dollars. So far as my experience goes, those who have taken advantage of this intended beneficent provision, have been those who were unscrupulous in their dealings, and have objected to paying their just debts.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I desire to offer an amendment to the substitute. It is the same as was offered to the original section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by adding to the substitute: 'Provided, that nothing herein contained shall impair any homestead right, existing at the time of the adoption of this Constitution.'"

MR. VAN DYKE. The schedule provides that no existing contract or law shall be impaired, but that they shall continue to be as valid as if this Constitution had not been adopted.

MR. MCCALLUM. If there is any such general provision as that in the schedule that may be unnecessary. I desire to say, with reference to this report of the Committee on Homesteads, that if there is any one provision in our Constitution which I think would be more particularly dangerous to tamper with than another, it is the homestead provision. If lawyers of this Convention desire to vote in such a way as to increase litigation I would suppose they would all vote for this section, in view of the present legislation and the decisions of the Supreme Court. For about ten years, I think, our homestead law provided, as this seems to contemplate, for a homestead, without recording; and for about seventeen years, I think, we have had this system requiring a homestead to be recorded; and I undertake to say that there is not a head of a family, there is not a married man or married woman in the State of California who does not know what the law requires. They know that a record is required. As stated by the gentleman from San Bernardino, unless a record is required, in many cases it would be impossible to tell what is a homestead. Parties have residences in different places, and it was for that reason mainly that the law was changed so that it would be known distinctly what the homestead claimed by the parties was. This proposition is, according to my recollection, substantially the statute. It is legislation which it is proposed to put into the Constitution, and to be consistent, it should not stop with the first section of the legislation upon the subject, but should contain all of the statute, with all its provisions. There is no necessity for change. A remark was made by the gentleman from Los Angeles that the purchase is usually made in the name of the husband; so it is. There cannot be a homestead unless the parties reside upon the premises. The wife can file a homestead, and it is just as secure a homestead as if it was filed by the husband.

MR. WEST. I am aware of that condition of affairs. The point I make is this, that the confiding, trusting wives consider it an impeachment of the husband to go and file a declaration of homestead, and therefore, to my certain knowledge, it is neglected, and the result is the family is oftentimes swept out of their home.

MR. MCCALLUM. In about a quarter of a century's practice in this State, I have never known a wife who desired to file a homestead who did not do so. In many cases since they are required to record it they deem it better that they should not file it, because where the homestead is filed the property is thereby made exempt from execution, and tends to destroy the pecuniary credit of the husband. That is the reason. It is very frequently the case that no homestead is filed, and it is at their option whether it is filed or not. I have never known a case where it was desired to be filed, where it was not. The substance is that the gentleman wishes to change this rule, which has existed since eighteen hundred and sixty-one, requiring the recording of a homestead.

MR. WEST. The proposition I wish to arrive at is this: that by virtue of purchasing and paying for the same, and the family occupying it as a homestead, that it shall be in fact and in law a homestead, and to alienate that homestead the wife must join with the husband.

MR. MCCALLUM. That was the law up to eighteen hundred and sixty-one. The gentleman wishes to repeal this law which has existed for seventeen years. I think that would be a very bad business for us to engage in. Under the decisions of the Courts the law has become thoroughly settled and people understand it, and if this Constitution should have such a provision as this in it, many of them would not know of this change. There is no necessity for putting such legislation in the Constitution. I submit again, that if we have nothing left to be done in this Convention except some legislation to repeal statutes, the sooner we adjourn and go home the better.

REMARKS OF MR. GRACE.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman said that in all his practice he had never known of a single case where a woman wanted to file a homestead, but what she could do so. I am not as old a man as the gentleman from Alameda, and, perhaps have not had so wide experience in law, but I know of more than one case where the most of the property was bought with the woman's money, and her husband was a man that would gin up a little with the intoxicating beverage, and he told her that she must not do it, and she could not go and do it without getting into a little domestic unpleasantness. If I was a lawyer I should go right in favor of this provision, just as it has stood in this State for the last seventeen years, because now if you want to record you have first to make out that declaration, you can do it yourself if you are capable of doing it; but there is not one in ten thousand of the common working people of the State who can sit down and file a declaration of homestead, such as can stand the test in Court. So you are forced to go to some lawyer and pay him the cash right down to get him to write out a declaration of homestead, then go to the Clerk and have it recorded. I am in favor of a law that would allow a man or woman, if they want to file a homestead, to go right up to the County Clerk, who is paid a salary and sitting there idle and doing nothing, and declare this intention and pay for the recording of it, without paying eight, or ten, or fifteen dollars of a lawyer's fee for writing up the declaration. The people are not satisfied with the law. They want it made plain and simple, so that the hod carrier, and the bricklayer, and the common workingman can understand it, and make this declaration without any lawyer. He can go and record it there, and he will have a homestead. When that is done and sent out before the people you will find that this is just what they want. They do not want to be forced to pay a fee to a lawyer to keep them riding around in carriages. When they start for the City Hall they can have a coach, and the hardfisted people pay for it. These men have been lording it over us, and have wrung the money from the hardfisted toiler of the country, and we are sent here to eradicate this evil in some way; and now what we want to do as statesmen, as representative men of the country, is to try and get up some system and make it plain, so that the humblest citizen can go up to the Clerk and declare his intention, and put some of these eminent gentlemen to shoveling sand. [Laughter.]

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I call the attention of the committee to the first part of this section. I do not think that that argument is really conclusive, and if I could get the attention of the committee for a moment or two, I would like to have a word to say upon it. Gentlemen of the committee, I call your attention to the first part of the section—to its verbiage. I presume there are none of us but what know the substance of this section: "Hereafter, the homestead, consisting of the family dwelling-house, outbuildings, improvements, and lands appurtenant thereto," etc. Now, the section, as it reads, seems to carry with it the idea that there can be lands appurtenant to this dwelling-house which may not form the basis upon which the house itself rests. There is that difficulty in this section that should be corrected; and if I am permitted to do so, I will offer the following amendment: Strike out the first line and the second line down to the word "of," and insert, "The homestead, consisting of the lands, and family dwelling-house thereon, and the improvements and outbuildings appurtenant thereto." As a matter of course there may be a tract of land that was wholly disconnected. It should be amended in that respect, in my opinion. I desire to make that amendment before this section is finally passed over.

MR. MCCALLUM. I withdraw my amendment.

MR. HERRINGTON. I send up my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Strike out the first line and the second line down to the word 'of,' and insert "The homestead, consisting of the lands and family dwelling-house thereon, and the improvements and outbuildings appurtenant thereto.'"

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I do not desire that there should be any trouble of recording this homestead. I desire that it should remain pretty much as it is in this section; that it shall not be alienated by either spouse without the consent of both. There may be a question connected with this subject that deserves very grave consideration in connection with this homestead matter, where there is no record required. The husband's debts possibly might affect the status of the wife, so far as the residence is concerned. I think it would be well for the Convention to consider that question, and not hurry too rapidly over this section. I may conclude myself, before this section is adopted, that such a course would be best, and that it would be better for the wife and family, that there should be a record.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. There are some things which it seems to me must necessarily be left to the Legislature. The old Constitution contains a mandatory clause: "The Legislature shall protect, by law, from forced sale a certain portion of the homestead and other property of all heads of families," and upon that we have had considerable legislation, until the matter has been reduced to a pretty good system. This section which is reported by the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption either goes too far or not far enough. It should either codify all subjects of homestead exemption and adopt pretty much the whole of the law as it now is, or else it should leave it to the Legislature, because the subject embraces a good deal more than is covered by this section. This merely embarks us upon a sea of uncertainty, and places poor people who have homesteads and nothing else in a very unfortunate situation, while the law as it is protects them perfectly. In the very beginning this report of the committee utterly ignores the different kinds of property which exist in the State, and which has not been changed by the Constitution. In the first place, we have community property which the man and wife are the common owners of, and upon the death of either it is divided as between the survivor and the heirs of the deceased. It is commonly called the common property, the property of the communion. We have beside that the separate property of the husband, and, third, the separate property of the wife at the time she is married. Here are three kinds of property: the common property, the property of the husband, and the property of the wife. The Code undertakes to dispose of all these different kinds of property, and makes a very proper system with regard to these different classes of property.

This section ignores any such distinction, and therefore will be a hotbed of litigation and trouble and strife. The wife may have a very handsome separate property. She gets married and the husband and wife live upon a portion of the property. Under this section the woman's property would become a homestead, and would ultimately go to the husband and the children of the husband, and would be taken away from the children of the wife. It would pass to the heirs of the husband in case of her death, and so various questions, which any lawyer will see at once, would arise upon this very section. The Act as it now exists provides for the selection, either by the husband or wife, from the community property, the property of both, or the property of the husband; but it cannot be made from the separate property of the wife except by the consent of the wife, which is a very proper provision in the law. All of this, I say, is ignored in the section on homesteads reported by the committee. I call the attention of the committee to this for the purpose of showing that in the very nature of the thing there must be legislation upon it. It is not the proper place in the Constitution here to lay down all the different rules which will apply to all the different kinds of property. Of course this last clause provides for legislation, but it is legislation not inconsistent with this section; it is legislation in furtherance of this section; and it depends upon the fact of the existence of the homestead instead of some declaration that the parties intend to select a homestead. There are various other reasons why I object to the section. It may be that the husband and wife are living upon a piece of property temporarily; that they do not want to make it their homestead; that they have, in fact, another place that they desire to select and file upon, or another piece of property which they desire to improve. Now if you attach a homestead interest to one part of this property there is no provision by which they can abandon it and change their homestead to another place. It would make it very difficult to ascertain whether there was a good and valid title to any piece of property. You could not tell whether a conveyance was good or not without inquiring if it was a homestead, whether the husband and wife was entitled to a homestead, and what has become of it since, and all the circumstances attending it; so that no searcher of titles or lawyer can tell upon a single piece of property whether the title is good or bad, because it depends upon a fact which it is difficult to ascertain. The system provided by the Code is simple and is very cheap. Forms are printed and there is no sort of difficulty about it. It is within the reach of everybody, and for about four bits a homestead can be declared. That puts it upon the record and ascertains the fact. It shows the will of the husband and the wife, and attaches to the piece of property. Then when they want to abandon that homestead there is a simple method of doing it, by filing a simple declaration of abandonment in the same way. The best way, in my judgment, is to adopt the provision of the old Constitution and let the law stand, and if there are any defects in it the Legislature can correct them. It is a good thing to let well enough alone.

REMARKS OF MR. MILLER.

MR. MILLER. Mr. Chairman: I agree with the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, that the present homestead law is a good one, and I doubt if we can improve it. As a general rule, I think that all such matters should be left to the Legislature; and the objection to the report of the committee is, that it attempts legislation; attempts to frame a system. I believe that we are all agreed that we are to have some laws on homestead; that there should be a certain amount of property set apart and not subject to sale for ordinary debts. There is only one objection I have to the present homestead law, and that is, that it permits an incumbrance of that property by mortgage, by the consent of both husband and wife, where the relation of husband and wife exists. I think it would be an improvement to put it out of the power of both the husband and wife to incumber the property by mortgage. The Legislature may do that, and they have not done it. That is the only objection that I have to the present system. It is idle to say that the homesteads shall not be mortgaged except by the consent of the wife, because in nine cases out of ten, if the husband desires to go in debt and incumber the property, he will persuade his wife by arguments of one sort or another—the character of these arguments depending a good deal upon the character of the man—to consent to mortgage, and thus incumber the property for the purpose of raising money to go into stocks, or something else, and it results in taking the roof from over the heads of his wife and children. I would place it beyond the power of the husband in any way, either with or without the consent of the wife, to incumber the property. The question is, whether it is proper to put such a provision or restriction in the Constitution. For my part, I should be in favor of it, and would move an amendment to that effect whenever it is in order. I would adopt the old Constitution with that amendment, that the homesteads should not be incumbered, except for the purchase-money.

SPEECH OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I agree with very much that has been said by Mr. Wilson upon the subject, and also what has been said by General Miller. I think, however, in order to make the present provision of the Constitution certainly effective as to homestead, it should be amended so as to say that the Legislature should not reduce the value of a homestead to a less sum than five thousand dollars. It now reads: "The Legislature shall protect, by law, from forced sale, a certain portion of the homestead and other property of all heads of families." The language there seems to convey the idea, or the general idea would be, that whatever a man owned and lived on, would be a homestead, and that the Legislature could carve out any such portion of that as they saw proper to protect from forced sale; that is to say, they need not protect five thousand dollars, or two thousand dollars, or one thousand dollars, but they could protect five hundred dollars, or seventy-five dollars, and comply with the Constitution of the State of California in their protection of a homestead. I think that the Legislature should be prohibited from reducing the amount to less than five thousand dollars that should receive protection as a homestead. I would, therefore suggest, as an amendment, to add, "provided, the Legislature shall not reduce the value of the homestead to be protected from forced sale, to a less amount than five thousand dollars," then I think we can not do better than to leave it to the Legislature as to the precise manner in which the title of the homestead shall be protected or founded upon the record. In other words, I do not believe we can make a homestead more effective, so far as securing title is concerned, both for the parties, and tracing it for the benefit of the community, than to say, that it shall be recorded and abandoned, as at present; but I do believe further, that after the homestead has been recorded, as prescribed at present, then that it should remain a homestead, and be inviolate for all character of debts except taxes, until an absolute sale shall take place; that no husband shall have the privilege of reasoning his wife, or teasing his wife, or forcing his wife into signing mortgages for the incumbrance of the homestead. It is equivalent to no homestead at all; it gives up the homestead right, and surrenders the wife to the weakness, the drunkenness, or the worthlessness of the husband, and affords no protection. The homestead should be a homestead, and it should stand inviolate, except as to an absolute sale, otherwise than for taxes. I am therefore in favor of the old Constitution, amended with reference to limitation. Then the Legislature must necessarily make some law pointing out how title shall be ascertained, how particular homesteads shall be defined and known, and to avoid the constant litigation which would grow up without this manner of defining and pointing it out. I am in favor of making the homestead a homestead, with all its fruits exempt from forced sale or execution. In many cases where a crop has been cut from a homestead, it goes into the hands of the law, and not into the pockets of the family. What good does it do a man to raise fruits if these fruits have to go into the law to satisfy executions and judgments that stand against the homestead? The fruits of the homestead ought to be exempt from forced sale. What has the wife and family to live on if the fruits that result from the homestead are to be taken by Constables and Sheriffs? Make the homestead, and all that which is raised upon it, exempt. If the husband then sees proper to apply it in the payment of other debts, let him do it, and if he sees proper to squander it for whisky, let him do it. If the corner grocery man has a mind to trust them, let them do it. I want to make laws that will prevent men getting in debt; I want to make laws that will make men cautious about giving credit; I want to make laws that will make men pay as they go. The idea seems to be that the principal business of the community is to go in debt, and have mortgages foreclosed on them. May God help that idea. May it be put out of this community at the earliest day possible. If I had my way, I would say that no debt should be collected by law. Of all the most helpless communities in the world, it is those communities that carry debt from year to year, and who have settlements by foreclosures of mortgages. I want the community put upon the basis of paying as they go, and the corner grocery man will not credit this man with a homestead, if he is entitled to the fruits of it for himself, as against executions.

SPEECH OF MR. HALE.

MR. HALE. Mr. Chairman: The distinction between the present code or law which has been framed under the provision of the Constitution, and the article reported by the committee, seems to be this. It will be noticed that in the Constitution, as it is, no rule is prescribed for the establishment of homesteads, and the matter is entirely relegated as to legislative action. Therefore, in making a comparison with the article as reported, it should be with the code of laws, established in the manner authorized by the existing provision of the Constitution. In our laws as they now stand, and as they have stood during most of the time since the adoption of the Constitution, there has been no provision made for a homestead, except upon an affirmative act done either by husband or wife or by husband and wife. In other words, no matter how much property may belong to the husband or wife or to the community, no homestead is protected except by a declaration filed in the manner prescribed by law. That has been a source of much dissatisfaction. A person owning property of considerable value, a part of which is occupied by the family as a home but not dedicated as such, has good credit. If the property is not dedicated as a homestead it is subject to execution under our law, and remains so, although occupied by the family until the declaration of homestead is filed. Now, then, a person doing business obtains credit upon the basis of his property. That is the common basis of credit. The common practice has been to give credit upon all property not dedicated as a homestead. Notwithstanding, the party may be largely in debt, and may have obtained credit upon the basis of his property by his own act, or by the community act of himself and wife, or by the act of his wife without his knowledge or consent, a declaration of homestead is filed and a large portion of the property, perhaps the whole of it, may be at once segregated and taken away from the benefit of the creditors. That is the reason of the common complaint. The other difficulty resulting from that is this: There are many men—and it is a weakness, if you may so call it, and I think properly—especially men engaged in business, who do not desire to dedicate any portion of their property to homestead, perhaps because it will impair their credit in business. Now it is delusive, as we have already seen. By reason of his carelessness the husband may take no step to secure a homestead; the wife, in nine cases out of ten, will know nothing of the procedure, and the first notice she will have of the necessity of action will be an execution running against the husband, and the homestead is gone. The purpose of the article formulated by the committee is to obviate that difficulty. That is, that whenever a man or the head of a family is possessed of such a home as is mentioned in the first lines of this section in fact, this provision, if incorporated in this Constitution will be self-executing, and will of itself work a dedication of that as a homestead. There is no other construction to be put upon it. You remember the property possessed by husband and wife is divided as community property, and as separate property. I need not recount the provisions of the law on this subject. They are familiar. The operation of this clause, as presented by the committee, will be that whether the property be community property, or whether it be the separate property of the husband or the separate property of the wife, so that the family, or heads of the family, dedicate it by occupancy and use as the residence of the family, this is self-executing and will dedicate it as a homestead. That is right. Furthermore, upon the death of the husband or wife this dedication continues for the benefit of the other members of the family. That is going somewhat beyond the provisions of our present law, as every lawyer will remember. I agree with the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Miller, upon one point, that the Constitution should prohibit the incumbering of homesteads. I think the section ought to be amended so as to reach that point if this property is to be protected for the defenceless children. A system that does not go to this extent will fail in the accomplishment of this wise purpose. I would not prevent or deny to the heads of families the power of alienation, because it frequently may happen that the husband may desire to sell the homestead for the purpose of getting a new one; but the incumbrance of it should be prohibited. I hope that with the amendment suggested by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Miller, this article may be adopted as a part of the organic law.

MR. MILLER. Mr. Chairman: I send up my amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend the substitute offered by Mr. Rolfe by adding the following: 'and such homesteads shall not be incumbered by mortgage, or otherwise, except for the purchase-money or improvement thereof.'"

SPEECH OF MR. BELCHER.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to this report of the committee. It has been criticised, and justly criticised, too, I think. While there have been remarks made by some of the gentlemen who have supported this report and urged its adoption, I think the general opinion of this Convention must be against it. It has been said by one gentleman here that this report of the committee ought to be adopted because the lawyers charge four or five dollars for drawing up a homestead declaration.

MR. GRACE. I made some remark of that kind, but I want it understood distinctly that I have no affinity with this report. I am opposed to the report of all the amendments, and the lawyers too.

MR. BELCHER. Mr. Chairman: I am not opposed to some provision for a homestead. I believe that we ought to have here a provision for a homestead. It is true that men and women are sometimes improvident. It is true that they need to have a home exempt from execution; that they need to have some personal property; they need to be protected from their imprudence in times of prosperity; and I believe that it is well to provide that some kind of a homestead shall be set aside to them, and saved from being taken under execution. One gentleman wants to have it fixed at not less than five thousand dollars. I am opposed to that. I do not know what in future may be best. So far, during the history of this State, we have had an exemption of five thousand dollars. So far we have trusted the Legislature in this respect, and I see no reason why we might not in the future trust the Legislature. Perhaps three thousand dollars will be enough five, ten, or fifteen years hence. Why not trust the Legislature in that respect? Why must we say here again that you cannot trust the people in protecting themselves?

Now, sir, I am opposed to this amendment, which fixes it at five thousand dollars, and this report of the committee; because, if adopted it throws all titles into uncertainty. If adopted, it will make litigation tenfold more than it is now. If adopted, you will have employment and a demand for lawyers, instead of getting rid of the necessity for lawyers. Who will know what his title is? Who will know, as has been said here, when you go to examine the record, whether there is any title in the party who is about to sell? Who can tell, unless he can go back and trace the history of it for ten or twenty years, and ascertain whether some one has lived upon it and made it a homestead? Litigation will grow up, and there can be no certainty of title. I am opposed to anything that leads to litigation. I am a lawyer, and I have been during all my manhood, and I think I have been a lawyer long enough to see that the lawyers want good government, and no uncertainty about it. I believe, if you will go to the lawyers of this convention, you will find that they are among the most prudent, the most cautious and conservative legislators that you can find in this Convention. Now it is not true that lawyers are trying to make litigation. It is not true that they do it here, and it is not true that they do it, probably, in the Legislature—though I was not in the Legislature of this State to observe them. But if you were to take an expression, you will find that all the lawyers have opposed the amendments which would lead to litigation, and have spoken in favor of one which has cut down and destroyed, almost wholly, litigation in reference to homesteads.

Now, sir, I have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, General Miller, that there shall not be any mortgage upon a homestead, though it is not very easy to see why. If I have a homestead and it becomes necessary for me to use some money, and my wife, knowing the purpose for which I propose to use it, agrees that I may do it, and goes, not in my presence or hearing, before a Notary Public, and having been informed of what I want, willingly and voluntarily subscribes to a mortgage, it is not easy to see why we may not be permitted to do it. I have no particular objection to that, but I do object to any amendment fixing the amount to which a homestead shall be exempt. We do not need any legislation in the Constitution in reference to it. We need simply the pure declaration of the old Constitution. It is better than anything that we can frame. I submit, therefore, Mr. Chairman, that the report of this committee should be rejected, and that the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Bernardino should be accepted, pure and simple. It is enough, and it meets the requirements. It is all we want. Anything more will work mischief rather than good.

REMARKS OF MR. WINANS.

MR. WINANS. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the amendment of the honorable member from San Bernardino, Mr. Rolfe, with the amendment thereto of the honorable member from San Francisco, General Miller. I favor the amendment which introduces the present clause of the Constitution on the subject of homesteads, for the reasons which have already been stated by the honorable member from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, and others, and so fully and clearly stated that they seem to me to amount to a demonstration. To the reasoning they have presented, I have nothing to add. I indorse it fully, and I think to all who heard it, its cogency was so complete, that not only was nothing left to be said, but nothing was left to be doubted. I am in favor, however, of the amendment of the member from San Francisco, General Miller, because I consider that the present provision of the Constitution, and the provision of the laws under it, amounts to a precept rather than a practice. The husband has entire control of the situation. The wife, in all well regulated households, to a great extent is under the dominion of the husband, if not, as is too often and unhappily the case, arbitrarily controlled under the oppressive influence of her regard for him. In every well regulated household the wife is really under the dominion of her husband; in some instances in the way of compulsion; in most instances in the way of confidence and kindness. When the husband is imperious, the wife yields to his request. But not only is the wife to be considered here. The children are to be protected, and they are oftentimes young and unable to speak for themselves. They should be the wards of the State in all instances where their rights are affected or capable of being prejudiced by their parents. We should take care of the rights of these little helpless things who are incapable of protecting themselves, and for their sake we should upon this floor become their champions, and sustain their rights in this matter.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the report of the committee entirely. It is full of contradictory ideas. I attribute its character to the want on that committee of any of that odious class called lawyers; and it is just about such a production as I should be likely to furnish if I were to attempt to make a pair of boots for the Chairman of the committee. Now, I must be pardoned for giving a little history of this matter. The homestead right and the right of the separate property of the husband and wife should be considered together. They are transcribed from the Constitution of the State of Texas. I happened be upon the committee which reported both of these provisions to that body, and therefore I have some attachment for them, and I am in favor of the motion of the gentleman from San Bernardino to adopt the section of the old Constitution, together with the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco; though I would suggest an amendment to it so that the homestead, for taxes, should not be exempt, because if a man has a homestead in land he can afford to pay taxes, and ought to pay taxes. I presume, probably, he would have no objection to accepting such an amendment. Now, in relation to the provision in regard to the separate property of the married parties, the committee in the Texas Constitutional Convention made a digest both of the French and civil codes of Spain, and they added to it, if I may so express myself, the American common law doctrine of registry of the separate property of married women. In regard to homesteads, they said, "The Legislature shall protect by law from forced sale a certain portion of the homestead and other property of all heads of families." That was original with that Convention. It was the first provision of that kind adopted in any of the States, and has been since followed up by most of them. And I think it a wise provision. But subsequently, in Texas, for the purpose of really nullifying the homestead provision to a large extent, they provided for a registry law for a homestead. That was followed by legislation in our statutes and code providing for the registration of the homestead, and that put the matter of the homestead entirely in the power of the husband. In this State, in the first instance, we did not provide for the registry of the homestead, and the Supreme Court held that the settlement upon a particular tract of land by a family gave to it the character of a homestead, and protected it from forced sale. I think that was the sounder provision—the sounder legislation—because that offered some protection to the married women. But the rule of registration nullified that provision practically; but with the amendment of the gentleman from San Francisco no registration will be necessary. A wife that is worth having would agree with her husband to transfer the property, if he wanted to transfer it, and, therefore, it is no protection at all. The amendment offered by General Miller connected with the provision as it exists in the present Constitution, I look upon as a perfect homestead law, and the one I trust which we shall adopt, because then we shall have made a provision which will protect the family. It is of less importance that the searcher of titles, alluded to by the Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary, should be compelled to inquire into whether the property a man is proposing to sell or mortgage is a homestead or not, than it is to subject the wife and families to the dangers of the registration. If we adopt the Constitution as it exists, with this amendment offered by General Miller, I think we will have it as near perfect as we can get it.

REMARKS OF MR. STUART.

MR. STUART. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to this amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, General Miller. I am in favor of the old Constitution as it stands. It is well known, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that most of the buildings built in San Francisco were built on the homestead principle. The property is bought by installments or cash, and buildings are erected thereon. The streets are improved and frequently—you may say nine times out of ten—the owners find that at the end they have incurred more indebtedness than they anticipated. Then assessments for street improvements must be paid for, or the property will be sold for taxes. The owners go to the different savings banks, or to their friends, and borrow money to pay this indebtedness off. That they could not do under this amendment offered by General Miller. I am in favor of the old homestead law. That provides that individuals owning homesteads shall file these homesteads. Therefore I am in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Rolfe.

REMARKS OF MR. LAINE.

MR. LAINE. Mr. Chairman: I am in favor of the old Constitution, pure and simple, so far as this part of it is concerned, and I desire to say a word or two in regard to the amendment offered by General Miller. I am satisfied that in practice it would prove both a delusion and a snare, because as it now stands it requires the joint action of both husband and wife to mortgage it. Providing we adopt this amendment it shuts off mortgages altogether, but by the joint action of both parties they may either sell or abandon. Now, five thousand dollars is considerable money, and invested in our farming country it is a good big farm. A drought comes on, or something happens, and the result is that a man owning five thousand dollars worth of land, on which he may have two hundred acres plowed, is utterly powerless because he is unable to raise money to buy the seed to seed his ground. What would be the result? He would abandon the homestead, because it is the only way to save them from starvation. So it will be in a thousand cases. They will abandon the homestead, or sell and buy a smaller one. It is all the protection that you can give it when you require the joint action of both to deal with it. You have placed them in a position of strength. You have given them the protection they need, and anything more instead of being protection is an injury. It is rendering less valuable the thing to them, and they cannot enjoy it in the least degree. I think if any member will reflect a moment upon it he will see that I am correct. I know it appears all right, and I believe is offered for a good purpose. I believe that when we have said that it shall not be mortgaged without the consent of both, we have done all we ought to do, and if we go a step farther we begin to injure and mar our work.

REMARKS OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I think the amendment proposed by General Miller would work badly, if adopted. I call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Legislature passed an Act prohibiting the incumbrance of homesteads. The result was, that in order to raise money—as suggested by the gentleman from Santa Clara, Mr. Laine—the parties were obliged to abandon the homesteads. The consequence of the abandonment of the homestead is, that it lets in judgments. If there are any old judgments, the liens of which have not expired by the lapse of two years, the parties cannot abandon the homestead without listing in these judgments. The result is, that it will sweep away the homestead. Now, it is much preferable to have it as it is by the present Act; that is, to allow the parties, by the consent of both, to raise money by an incumbrance upon the homestead. It is altogether preferable to compelling them to abandon the homestead to raise money. There may be cases where the parties will be driven to incumber the homestead in order to live upon it until they could raise a crop, or they will be compelled to sell it. I think the amendment, although designed well, would work badly. I think the old section of the Constitution should be adopted, pure and simple.

REMARKS OF MR. BIGGS.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: When I first heard the amendment of General Miller, I was favorably impressed with it, but upon reflection, I think it would be attended with evils instead of good. In my section of the country we are subject to periodical droughts. The next season comes on, and we have nothing to buy grain with to sow our crops, or to buy provisions for our families, and nothing to sustain us until the crop is made the next season. If we have the privilege of mortgaging until the next harvest time, we can pay it all. I think it would be attended with evil results. While I would want to protect it, and thought favorably of it when it was first read, I see that it will operate very badly against the farming interest.

MR. WEST. You do not consent that the amount should be limited?

MR. BIGGS. I am perfectly willing to leave that to the Legislature in the future, as we have in the past. Here is why I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Miller. For instance, here is a gentleman farming a thousand acres of land that is not worth more than five thousand dollars. The crop entirely fails. Now, how are they going to put in their next year's crop without some resources to borrow money.

MR. MCCALLUM. Are you not aware of the fact that the same idea as is here presented has been tried in this State and abandoned. That was formerly the law—that you could not mortgage. That was tried and abandoned.

MR. BIGGS. If you adopt General Miller's amendment you cannot mortgage. That is why I am opposed to the amendment.

MR. WINANS. That abandonment was not from the inharmony of the system, but from the temper of the people. It was abandoned by the exactions of the time.

MR. BIGGS. How is the man on a homestead to go on and put in another crop?

MR. WEST. In many of the Western States they have confined the amount of land to forty acres.

MR. BIGGS. I am aware of that. We are speaking now for California. We are subject here to periodical droughts, more than any other country, perhaps, on the face of the globe. We have been ruined by droughts some years, and how would you or I or any man on a homestead go on and put in another crop without the privilege of mortgaging. If you adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco you tie our hands and force us either to sell or abandon, and it will work a hardship upon those who have homesteads.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: That system was tried. The Legislature changed that rule because of its inconvenience. It simply requires two instruments to be made instead of one, and that would be the effect of the amendment. If it should be adopted the first thing that the husband and wife would do would be to abandon. Then it would cease to be a homestead, and could be mortgaged. But I am opposed to it, although I know the evil intended to be remedied, is one that ought to be remedied if it could be. The result of this would be that many a homestead would be abandoned and all lost, when perhaps the parties did not desire to raise upon the homestead one fifth of the value of it. The parties may desire to raise only one thousand dollars. It may be important to the husband and wife. It may be a necessity, perhaps, on the part of both of them, when living on a five thousand dollar homestead. But under this they cannot raise the money, because they cannot secure any one. They cannot do anything except to abandon the whole five thousand dollar homestead, in order to raise one thousand dollars on the homestead. Now, sir, I would regard this as very unfortunate legislation in our Constitution, and it seems to me to illustrate the evil of all attempts of this kind under our ten minute rule. We cannot give the attention to the details of these arguments which their importance require in a Constitutional Convention. And here it is proposed to make it an inflexible rule. It has been the rule once, and has been abandoned. If our people shall desire to return to it let the Legislature do so. Mr. Chairman, that will be the effect of it practically; parties would abandon in order to make mortgages, and the result of it would be in many cases they would lose their whole homestead in trying to secure a portion of it. Our Constitution guarantees the right to acquire, possess, and enjoy private property. In many cases the whole of the private property is a homestead. Carry out this rule and say that once a homestead is acquired it shall never be mortgaged, or shall never be sold, if you please, and you have tendered to the people a good thing; but coupled with such hard conditions that not one single person in a thousand would avail himself of the benefit of the good thing.

REMARKS OF MR. WEST.

MR. WEST. Mr. Chairman: I wish to speak to General Miller's amendment. I was a member of this committee that made this report. I could not agree with the report. It was unshapely; it was defective; and therefore I did not sign the report with the majority, and I am sorry to see that those who did sign it have not defended it. Yet I ask that there shall be some security for the wife and children. As Mr. Winans has very aptly explained, it should be a protection both for the wife and children. I hope the amendment of General Miller will be adopted, and then I will vote for the amendment of Mr. Rolfe.

MR. STEDMAN. Wouldn't it be better to make the husband give it to them? It can never be attached then.

MR. WEST. The wife would mortgage her own right and title in order to keep peace in the family.

REMARKS OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of First District. I have but one word to say in reference to the amendment introduced by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Miller. I think that amendment would institute a very bad policy indeed, and it should be voted down. Much as I esteem the author of the amendment, I think this would be a grand mistake. In the first place it is not the office of this Convention to force anything upon anybody. It is to give the right of homestead, not to compel it; and if we secure a homestead to persons, what they shall do with that homestead by way of sale, by way of abandonment, by way of mortgage, or incumbrance, should be left to the owners of the homestead. We should not say: You shall have this against your own judgment. Here is a man and wife sitting as the head of the whole government at home. They are the best judges of their own interest. They ought to determine what they wish to do, and for this Convention to intrude itself upon them and say: You shall not exercise your own judgment over that piece of property, is unwise.

MR. HOWARD. I would ask the gentleman if it was not the reasoning in Athens and Rome——

MR. WILSON. I was not there and cannot tell.

MR. HOWARD. Where a man was allowed to mortgage, not only his property, but his wife and children, and have them sold into slavery for debt.

MR. WILSON. There are a great many things that were done in Athens and Rome, that we do not believe in. No doubt they committed an error. But I have seen merchants rescued from bankruptcy by the power to mortgage their homestead. No one knows so well the crisis which may exist in the affairs of a family, as the family does itself. Sometimes a merchant is in good standing with the community, and yet he is on the verge of bankruptcy. It is necessary to tide over the crisis. He and his wife are possessed of the secret. He and his family alone know it. By exercising their own judgment, and mortgaging the homestead, he is saved from bankruptcy and ruin. You undertake to say that these people shall not exercise their own judgment; that you will give them the piece of property, and say that they shall not use it. You tie up the piece of property and say, that they shall not do as they please; there are cases in which persons are reckless in the manner of doing their business, but for that reason we should not say that they should not exercise a right over any of their property.

MR. MILLER. What is the object of the homestead system?

MR. WILSON. It is to protect people against misfortune, though it may be the result of bad management. The object of the law has never been to prevent people from doing what they pleased with their own property. There are evils of a greater magnitude, which would result from tying up their hands. I am in favor of homestead. I am in favor of protecting it from forced sale. The spirit of the homestead law always has been to protect it from forced sale, and not to protect it from the people themselves. They ought to have a right to dispose of their own property, to mortgage it, hypothecate it, and deal with it in any way that their judgment shall dictate, and for that reason I am opposed to this amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco.

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I want to punish this committee for two or three minutes. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the section reported by the committee, and all the amendments save one, will be voted down, and that one is a mere recital of section fifteen of the old Constitution upon that subject. The reasons were given a short time ago by the gentleman from San Francisco when he said that if we adopted this section we are sure to get into an unending litigation. If we propose to make the section cover all the litigation necessary, there is not enough of it; if we do not propose to do that there is too much. "Hereafter the homestead, consisting of the family dwelling-house, outbuildings, improvements, and lands appurtenant thereto, of each head of a family resident in this State, of the value not exceeding five thousand dollars, shall not be alienated or incumbered, except by the consent, in manner to be prescribed by law, of both husband and wife, where that relation exists, and such homestead shall be exempt from seizure or sale for the payment of any debt or liability, except for the purchase-money and the payment of taxes, laborers' and mechanics' liens, and obligations contracted for the improvement of such homestead, and for debts incurred before the adoption of this Constitution." There is no provision in that for recording, or for any other method of enforcing the benefits of this homestead. Suppose the question is raised that there has been no record here, and you fall back upon this provision of the Constitution. You do not go far enough. It is only necessary, and the only thing we ought to do, is to declare that there should be a homestead set apart. It is one of the things we can trust the Legislature with, because there is not much danger of a lobby influence. There is no job in it. Shall we trust the Legislature with anything, Mr. Chairman?

MR. SMITH, of San Francisco. No. [Laughter.]

MR. SCHELL. I would ask the gentleman if he is willing to trust the Legislature for our scrip?

MR. REYNOLDS. I did not intend to punish this Convention but two or three minutes—I do not know but what I shall consume my whole time. The reasons given by the gentleman from San Francisco, why we should not adopt this section, and why we should only make the simple declaration, that the homestead should be exempt, are unanswerable. I think we had better expend some of this time, not upon how we shall entangle the homestead, but how we shall provide for cutting up these large landed estates, that are capable of sustaining five or six thousand families, and that ought to be cut up into five or six thousand homesteads; and provide how the children shall some day get a portion of them for a homestead. There are a dozen or two families on from one hundred thousand to four hundred thousand acres of land. Let us expend some of this solicitude in providing ways by which some of the children shall be able to get a patch of this land for a homestead, and not how we shall entangle those which now exist. This is one of the things that can be left to the Legislature, hence it is not necessary for us to try to provide every detail.

MR. WATERS. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Hunter, Holmes, Larkin, and Dunlap.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Santa Clara to the original section.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I withdraw my amendment. I am in favor of the section in the old Constitution.

THE CHAIRMAN. The next question is on the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Rolfe, offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Miller.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Bernardino, Mr. Rolfe.

The amendment was adopted.

SALE FOR TAXES.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I send up an independent section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The real and personal property of all homesteads assessed at the value of five hundred dollars, or less, in each case shall not be sold at forced sale for the recovery of taxes levied thereon; but property, personal or real, other than that embraced in the homestead, and not otherwise exempt by law from seizure, shall be subject to forced sale for such homestead taxes."

REMARKS OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: I offer that section for the purpose of relieving a large class of poor people in this State who have a little bit of property, which is their homestead, and amounts in the aggregate to only about five hundred dollars. I cannot conceive of anything more unjust or tyrannical than for the State to constitute itself a preferred creditor, as regards this class of poor people, and that notwithstanding it generously provides that their little homesteads shall be exempt from seizure and sale by individuals, yet the State may step in, and for its taxes may take the little homestead and sell it from under their feet. I believe that the larger homestead—the homestead to the extent of the limit of the exemption—in nearly every case belongs to persons who are able to pay their taxes; but where the homestead is so small, where the owner of it and his wife have a mere cabin and a few acres of land, a cow, and a pig, I believe that they should not be subject to forced sale and be driven out from their little home. The section that I have offered provides, also, that any other property belonging to these people may be seized and sold for the taxes upon the homestead, so that really this clause would be beneficent only to this class of people, and there are a great many of them in this State who are extremely poor. I think that the section will commend itself to the gentlemen of this Convention, if they will consider the class to whom alone it will apply.

REMARKS OF MR. TINNIN.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: This would be a very dangerous section. In the first place, I say it would nearly bankrupt the mining counties of this State. More than half of the revenues of these counties results from the taxation of homes of miners, which, as a general rule, would come within the provisions of that section, and would be exempt from taxation. It would reduce the value of our property to such a great extent that we could not maintain our county governments. I am opposed to exempting any property from taxation. I believe that property that receives protection from the government should pay its portion of the expenses of that government.

MR. AYERS. Do you consider it fair that the State should be a preferred creditor?

MR. TINNIN. That is the rule in all governments.

MR. AYERS. There is no logic in it.

MR. TINNIN. It is certainly good sense.

REMARKS OF MR. CAPLES.

MR. CAPLES. Mr. Chairman: I am opposed to the section proposed by the gentleman from Los Angeles, for more reasons than I can enumerate just now, but I will enumerate some of them. The first, and, perhaps the greatest and most serious objection that I have, is that it contravenes a principle as broad as human understanding, the principle of justice and legality. Another reason, Mr. Chairman, why I am opposed to it, is that it is offering a bonus to unthrift, idleness, and vagabondism. I think, Mr. Chairman, that it would be a very bad policy, a ruinous policy, a policy that would fly in the face of reason, of justice, and of all sound policy, to offer a bonus for unthrift. I take it for granted that the good sense of this people, and of this committee, would hold that the very reverse of that theory should be the rule. That is, that we should encourage by all possible means thrift, industry, and enterprise; and not be saying to men that if they do not acquire more than five hundred dollars worth of property they shall be exempt from the burdens of government. Why, is it not plainly and clearly a bid for worthlessness? a bid for idleness? I propose now reason and justice and common sense, and some policy against such lunacy. [Laughter.]

MR. PROUTY. I move to amend by adding: "Any person not owning five hundred dollars in value, of property, shall be furnished the same from the county treasury of their respective counties."

THE CHAIRMAN. It is not in order. The question is on the adoption of the section offered by the gentleman from Los Angeles, Mr. Ayers.

The section was rejected.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee now rise, report the article back, and recommend its adoption as amended.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman: I desire to call up——

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion that the committee rise, report the article back to the Convention, and recommend its adoption as amended.

The motion prevailed, on a division, by a vote of 59 ayes to 56 noes.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report, that they have had under consideration the article on land and homestead exemption, report the same back, and recommended its adoption as amended.

MR. VAN DYKE. I move that we consider the general file.

MR. ESTEE. Mr. President: I move that the usual number of copies of the article on land and homestead exemption be ordered printed.

THE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection it is so ordered.

MR. GRACE. I object.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee.

The motion prevailed.

SCHEDULE.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: I move that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of considering the report of the Committee on Schedule. We can get through with these reports this week, and take up the general file on Monday.

The motion prevailed.

Following is the article reported by the Committee on Schedule:

SCHEDULE.

That no inconvenience may arise from the alterations and amendments in the Constitution of this State, and to carry the same into complete effect, it is hereby ordained and declared:

SECTION 1. That all laws in force at the adoption of this Constitution, not inconsistent therewith, shall remain in full force and effect until altered or repealed by the Legislature; and all rights, actions, prosecutions, claims, and contracts of the State, counties, individuals, or bodies corporate, not inconsistent therewith, shall continue to be as valid as if this Constitution had not been adopted. The provisions of all laws which are inconsistent with this Constitution shall cease upon the adoption thereof, except that all laws which are inconsistent with such provisions of this Constitution as require legislation to enforce them, shall remain in full force until the first day of July, eighteen hundred and eighty, unless sooner altered or repealed by the Legislature.

SEC. 2. That all recognizances, obligations, and all other instruments entered into or executed before the adoption of this Constitution to this State, or to any subdivision thereof, or any municipality therein, and all fines, taxes, penalties, and forfeitures due or owing to this State, or any such subdivision or municipality, and all writs, prosecutions, actions, and causes of action, except as herein otherwise provided, shall continue and remain unaffected by the adoption of this Constitution. All indictments or informations which shall have been found, or may hereafter be found, for any crime or offense committed before this Constitution takes effect, may be proceeded upon as if no change had taken place, except as otherwise provided in this Constitution.

SEC. 3. The Legislature, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall provide for the transfer of all records, books, papers, and proceedings from such Courts as are abolished by this Constitution to the Courts provided herein; and the Courts to which the same are thus transferred shall have the same power and jurisdiction over them as if they had been in first instance commenced, filed, or lodged therein. No officer elected at the first election after the adoption of this Constitution shall be entitled to draw any salary until he shall have been duly installed as such either by provisions herein or by Act of the Legislature.

SEC. 4. The Secretary of State shall cause this Constitution to be published once a week for at least four consecutive weeks next before the first Wednesday in May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, in not more than six newspapers published in this State, one of which newspapers shall be published in the City and County of San Francisco, one in the County of Sacramento, one in the County of Los Angeles, one in the County of Nevada, one in the County of Santa Clara, and one in the County of Sonoma. The Governor shall issue his proclamation, giving notice of the election for the adoption or rejection of this Constitution, at least one month before the said first Wednesday in May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, and the Boards of Supervisors of the several counties shall cause said proclamation to be made public in their respective counties, and general notice of said election to be given at least fifteen days next before said election.

SEC. 5. The Superintendent of Printing of the State of California shall, at least twenty days before said election, cause to be printed and delivered to the Clerk of each county in this State five times the number of properly prepared ballots for said election that there are voters in said respective counties, with the words printed thereon, "For the new Constitution." He shall likewise cause to be so printed and delivered to said Clerks five times the number of properly prepared ballots for said election that there are voters in said respective counties, with the words printed thereon, "Against the new Constitution."

SEC. 6. The Clerks of the several counties in the State shall, at least five days before said election, cause to be delivered to the Inspectors of Elections, at each election precinct or polling place in their respective counties, suitable poll-books, forms of return, and an equal number of the aforesaid ballots, which number, in the aggregate, must be ten times greater than the number of voters in the said election precincts or polling places. The returns of the number of votes cast at the Presidential election in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-six shall serve as a basis of calculation for this and the preceding section.

SEC. 7. Every citizen of the United States, entitled by law to vote for members of the Assembly in this State, shall be entitled to vote for the adoption or rejection of this Constitution.

SEC. 8. The officers of the several counties of this State, whose duty it is, under the law, to receive and canvass the returns from the several precincts of their respective counties, as well as the City and County of San Francisco, shall meet at the usual places of meeting for such purposes on the first Monday after said election. If, at the time of meeting, the returns from each precinct in the county in which the polls were opened have been received, the Board must then and there proceed to canvass the returns; but if all the returns have not been received, the canvass must be postponed from day to day until all the returns are received, or until six postponements have been had, when they shall proceed to make out returns of the votes cast for and against the new Constitution; and the proceedings of said Boards shall be the same as those prescribed for like Boards in the case of an election for Governor. Upon the completion of said canvass and returns, the said Board shall immediately certify the same, in the usual form, to the Governor of the State of California.

SEC. 9. The Governor of the State of California shall, as soon as the returns of said election shall be received by him, or within thirty days after said election, in the presence and with the assistance of the Controller, Treasurer, and Secretary of State, open and compute all the returns received of votes cast for and against the new Constitution. If, by such examination and computation, it is ascertained that a majority of the whole number of votes cast at such election be in favor of such new Constitution, the Executive of this State shall, by his proclamation, declare such new Constitution to be the Constitution of the State of California, and that it shall take effect and be in force on the day hereinafter specified.

SEC. 10. In order that future elections in this State shall conform to the requirements of this Constitution, the term of all officers elected under the same, and whose term of office is four years or over, shall be, respectively, one year shorter than the term provided for in this Constitution, and the term of all officers whose term of office is two years shall be, respectively, one year longer than the term provided for in this Constitution, except the members of the Assembly, whose first term of office shall be one year; and the successors of all such officers shall be elected at the last election before the expiration of the terms as in this section provided. The first officers chosen after the adoption of this Constitution shall be elected at the time and in the manner now provided by law.

SEC. 11. Should this Constitution be ratified at the election for the ratification and adoption thereof, it shall take effect and be in force on and after the fourth day of July, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, at twelve o'clock meridian.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section one.

LAWS IN FORCE.

THE SECRETARY read:

That no inconvenience may arise from the alterations and amendments in the Constitution of this State, and to carry the same into complete effect, it is hereby ordained and declared:

SECTION 1. That all laws in force at the adoption of this Constitution, not inconsistent therewith, shall remain in full force and effect until altered or repealed by the Legislature; and all rights, actions, prosecutions, claims, and contracts of the State, counties, individuals, or bodies corporate, not inconsistent therewith, shall continue to be as valid as if this Constitution had not been adopted. The provisions of all laws which are inconsistent with this Constitution shall cease upon the adoption thereof, except that all laws which are inconsistent with such provisions of this Constitution as require legislation to enforce them, shall remain in full force until the first day of July, eighteen hundred and eighty, unless sooner altered or repealed by the Legislature.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendment to section one the Secretary will read section two.

EFFECT ON INSTRUMENTS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 2. That all recognizances, obligations, and all other instruments entered into or executed before the adoption of this Constitution to this State, or to any subdivision thereof, or any municipality therein, and all fines, taxes, penalties, and forfeits due or owing to this State, or any such subdivision or municipality, and all writs, prosecutions, actions, and causes of action, except as herein otherwise provided, shall continue and remain unaffected by the adoption of this Constitution. All indictments or informations which shall have been found, or may hereafter be found, for any crime or offense committed before this Constitution takes effect, may be proceeded upon as if no change had taken place, except as otherwise provided in this Constitution.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out the word "such" in the fourth line.

MR. MORELAND. I see no objection to that. The word is unnecessary there.

The motion prevailed.

MR. SCHELL. Mr. Chairman: I move to strike out this phrase from line eight, "or may hereafter be found." The phrase is entirely unnecessary and ambiguous. With that struck out the whole case is covered.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I hope that amendment will not be adopted. There may be indictments found between the adoption of the Constitution and its taking effect in July. I think it is right as it stands.

MR. SCHELL. I withdraw the amendment. I think I misapprehended the meaning of it.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no further amendment to section two, the Secretary will read section three.

TRANSFER OF RECORDS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 3. The Legislature, at its first session after the adoption of this Constitution, shall provide for the transfer of all records, books, papers, and proceedings from such Courts as are abolished by this Constitution to the Courts provided therein; and the Courts to which the same are thus transferred shall have the same power and jurisdiction over them as if they had been in the first instance commenced, filed, or lodged therein. No officer elected at the first election after the adoption of this Constitution shall be entitled to draw any salary until he shall have been duly installed as such either by provisions herein or by Act of the Legislature.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendment to section three, the Secretary will read section four.

PUBLICATION OF CONSTITUTION.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 4. The Secretary of State shall cause this Constitution to be published once a week for at least four consecutive weeks next before the first Wednesday in May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, in not more than six newspapers published in this State, one of which newspapers shall be published in the City and County of San Francisco, one in the County of Sacramento, one in the County of Los Angeles, one in the County of Nevada, one in the County of Santa Clara, and one in the County of Sonoma. The Governor shall issue his proclamation giving notice of the election for the adoption or rejection of this Constitution at least one month before the said first Wednesday in May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, and the Boards of Supervisors of the several counties shall cause said proclamation to be made public in their respective counties, and general notice of said election to be given at least fifteen days next before said election.

MR. MORELAND. Mr. Chairman: I have a substitute for that section, which has been agreed upon by a majority of this committee. I think it is better than the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SEC. 4. The Superintendent of Printing of the State of California, shall, at least thirty days before the first Wednesday in May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, on such terms as may be reasonable, select and contract with one newspaper proprietor in each county in this State in which a newspaper is published, for the publication and issuance, once a week for two successive weeks before said election, in their respective papers, as a supplement thereto, the printed copies of this Constitution, as hereinafter provided. The circulation of such paper shall be taken into consideration in making such contract and selection; and the paper so selected shall issue a number of such supplements equal to the circulation of such papers in their respective counties. In counties containing property of an assessable value of ten millions of dollars, or over, not more than three papers may be so selected. The Superintendent of Printing shall cause to be printed and delivered to the newspapers so selected, in due time for the publication thereof, a number of such supplements equal to twice the State circulation of such papers. The Governor shall issue his proclamation giving notice of the election for the adoption or rejection of this Constitution, at least thirty days before the first Wednesday in May, eighteen hundred and seventy-nine, and the Boards of Supervisors of the several counties shall cause said proclamation to be made public in their respective counties, and general notice of said election to be given at least fifteen days next before said election."

REMARKS OF MR. MORELAND.

MR. MORELAND. Mr. Chairman: The law under which this Convention was called, gives the Convention the power to prescribe the manner of publication of this Constitution. The committee, in their report, recommended a section which requires it to be published in six of the most populous counties of the State. Under this section, as it is reported, it would be necessary for each paper required to publish the Constitution, to set up the type in their respective offices, and publish it. This would cost a considerable amount, not less than five hundred dollars for each paper, probably more, and it would not subserve the purpose of distributing the Constitution to the voters of the State altogether. Not more than one quarter, or one half, of the electors would have an opportunity of reading it. The plan which is embodied in the substitute is, to have the Constitution printed in the form of a supplement, here, in the State Printing Office; this will require the type to be set up but once. The Superintendent of Printing, under that section, is authorized to select and contract with one newspaper proprietor in each county of the State, to have this supplement folded and issued with their papers. It is estimated that it will not cost more than twenty-five dollars—not exceeding fifty dollars—to have this Constitution issued in this way—fifty dollars to each paper—and it will not, on the whole, cost as much as the plan as embodied in section four, as reported, and will effect the same purpose, of distributing the Constitution to the electors of the State. In counties where the assessable valuation of property is more than ten millions of dollars, we give the Superintendent of Printing the authority to select not more than three papers, so that it will be fully distributed over the county. I think that plan is much better much and cheaper than the one embodied in section four, as reported.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: There may be counties where there is only one paper published. In that case, according to this amendment, you have got to pay that paper just what it asks. It has got to be published, and the paper will be likely to ask a large price.

MR. MORELAND. The plan is to print it at the State Printing Office.

MR. SHAFTER. Suppose there is but one paper in the county, and that paper happens to be opposing the Constitution. They would charge what they pleased for circulating it with their paper. I think three papers in San Francisco, that circulate generally, would extend it more than this plan. I do not believe that fifty dollars a paper will pay them, if they charged the public as they do private persons.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. Chairman: I believe that the instrument we are framing here has merit, and only requires to be thoroughly understood by the people generally, to insure its adoption; and, sir, I regard it as a very important matter, that this convention should provide for bringing this document thoroughly before the people. The Committee on Schedule counted the probable cost of publishing this instrument in one paper in each county of the State. If the instrument is as long as they estimate, a very reasonable estimate would place it at five hundred dollars to each paper, which would amount to something over twenty-five thousand dollars for the publication of the instrument. That is an enormous sum, and yet it would accomplish a very desirable result. It was suggested that the same object might be attained much more reasonably, saving the price of composition fifty-one times. If this document was sent to me to publish, I would have it set up, and the great length of it would require that I should publish a supplement; my little paper would not contain the Constitution that we will adopt here. I would have to cut my paper according to the amount of the material, and would necessarily have to publish a supplement, and add three or four hundred dollars to the expense of the issue. It was conceived, and reasonably, that one composition might accomplish the whole purpose. Let these one hundred and twenty-five thousand or one hundred and fifty thousand copies be provided here at the State Printing Office, in convenient newspaper form. Then let the State Printer have these sent out to the different papers, and at a very small cost it will be well circulated.

From a selfish standpoint, I would like to have the job of publishing it myself, and I suppose other newspapers would, but I think, under this plan, from ten dollars to twenty-five dollars apiece, or fifty dollars, at the outside, would pay for the extra trouble of folding in these supplements. I apprehend that no newspaper man will want to make any great speculation out of it; and we are guaranteed against that, because there is hardly a county in the State but what has more than one newspaper. They would be requested to state the lowest price they will perform the work for, and of course they would be anxious to bid as low as possible, in order to secure the opportunity of thus cheaply placing the Constitution in the hands of their readers. I would rather now have the work or the duty of distributing them through my paper than not. It would give tone and character to the paper. The readers of the paper would want to see it. All these country papers need a little more tone. I say that the distribution of this instrument would be sought for. In that way it would be brought before all the people who feel a disposition to read it and study it for themselves. It has been suggested to publish it in pamphlet form. Suppose we did that, how are you going to distribute it? The distribution would be very imperfect; but by the medium of the newspapers, that almost every one looks for, I believe that it might be brought before every person in the State, and by being brought before them they will have the means of examining it, and I think, for one, that there is not the least doubt of its adoption by a large majority. I ask that the Secretary again read the substitute.

THE SECRETARY again read the substitute, as above.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I think this a very excellent, economical scheme provided by the Committee on Schedule, but there is one question arises here, and I am not willing to take any chances. I find that some gentlemen, who are said to be very eminent, are already raising the question of the constitutionality of this Constitutional Convention. While I apprehend nothing as to the past, I do not feel disposed to leave it in the power of any one, by any act or opinion, to imperil the work of this Convention. Suppose what we command the Superintendent of Public Printing to do should not be done. The law calling this Convention, section nine, on page seven hundred and sixty-four of the statutes of the last session, provides how this Constitution shall be published. It says: "It shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to cause this Act to be published once a month, after its passage, until the election of delegates herein provided, in not more than five of the public newspapers published in this State." That seems to refer to causing this Act to be published. I thought there was a provision requiring the Constitution to be published.

MR. VAN DYKE. I would call the gentleman's attention to section seven. It leaves it entirely with the Convention to publish the Constitution. That in section nine is in reference to the Act calling the Convention. Section seven says: "The Convention shall prescribe the publication of said Constitution and the notice to be given of the election."

MR. MCCALLUM. I think I was wrong as to the application of section nine. I believe, then, that the substitute offered by the Committee on Schedule would work well, and will give a very extensive publication. I shall vote for it.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the substitute offered by the gentleman from Sonoma, Mr. Moreland.

The substitute was adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section five.

THE BALLOTS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 5. The Superintendent of Printing of the State of California shall, at least twenty days before said election, cause to be printed and delivered to the Clerk of each county in this State five times the number of properly prepared ballots for said election that there are voters in said respective counties, with the words printed thereon, "For the new Constitution." He shall likewise cause to be so printed and delivered to said Clerks five times the number of properly prepared ballots for said election that there are voters in said respective counties, with the words printed thereon, "Against the new Constitution."

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendment to section five the Secretary will read section six.

CONDUCT OF THE ELECTION.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 6. The Clerks of the several counties in the State shall, at least five days before said election, cause to be delivered to the Inspectors of elections, at each election precinct or polling place in their respective counties, suitable poll-books, forms of return, and an equal number of the aforesaid ballots, which number, in the aggregate, must be ten times greater than the number of voters in said election precincts or polling places. The returns of the number of votes cast at the Presidential election in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-six shall serve as a basis of calculation for this and the preceding section.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment to that section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by adding: 'Provided, that the duties in this and the preceding section imposed upon the Clerks of the respective counties shall, in the City and County of San Francisco, be performed by the Registrar of Voters for said city and county.'"

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: The reason for that amendment is, that by an Act of the last Legislature all the duties imposed upon the County Clerk in the several counties in respect to elections are made applicable and devolved upon the Registrar of Voters in that county. Therefore it would be proper for us to make this exception.

The amendment was adopted.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section seven.

QUALIFICATION OF VOTERS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 7. Every citizen of the United States, entitled by law to vote for members of the Assembly in this State, shall be entitled to vote for the adoption or rejection of this Constitution.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendment to section seven, the Secretary will read section eight.

CANVASS OF RETURNS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 8. The officers of the several counties of this State whose duty it is, under the law, to receive and canvass the returns from the several precincts of their respective counties, as well as the City and County of San Francisco, shall meet at the usual places of meeting for such purposes on the first Monday after said election. If, at the time of meeting, the returns from each precinct in the county in which the polls were opened have been received, the Board must then and there proceed to canvass the returns; but if all the returns have not been received, the canvass must be postponed from day to day until all the returns are received, or until six postponements have been had, when they shall proceed to make out returns of the votes cast for and against the new Constitution; and the proceedings of said Boards shall be the same as those prescribed for like Boards in the case of an election for Governor. Upon the completion of said canvass and returns, the said Board shall immediately certify the same, in the usual form, to the Governor of the State of California.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. Chairman: I would like to inquire of the Chairman of the committee what is meant in the third line by the words "as well as the City and County of San Francisco?" There may be some provision that I do not understand that requires it.

MR. MORELAND. I do not know, Mr. Chairman; I find that language in the law calling this Convention, the law under which the delegates were elected, and I have used the same language.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I move to insert after the word "as" the word "of," so that it will read: "as well as of the City and County of San Francisco," etc.

MR. LARUE. I would like to ask if this will not make the day for the canvass on Sunday. If it does, I move to strike out "six" and insert "seven."

MR. MORELAND. Sunday is a non-judicial day, and I do not suppose that would make any difference. I am not particular as to that.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Marin, Mr. Shafter.

The amendment was adopted.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Lost.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read section nine.

PROCLAMATION.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 9. The Governor of the State of California shall, as soon as the returns of said election shall be received by him, or within thirty days after said election, in the presence and with the assistance of the Controller, Treasurer, and Secretary of State, open and compute all the returns received of votes cast for and against the new Constitution. If by such examination and computation it is ascertained that a majority of the whole number of votes cast at such election be in favor of such new Constitution, the Executive of this State shall, by his proclamation, declare such new Constitution to be the Constitution of the State of California, and that it shall take effect and be in force on the day hereinafter specified.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there be no amendment to section nine, the Secretary will read section ten.

TERM OF OFFICERS.

THE SECRETARY read:

SEC. 10. In order that future elections in this State shall conform to the requirements of this Constitution, the term of all officers elected under the same, and whose term of office is four years or over, shall be, respectively, one year shorter than the term provided for in this Constitution, and the term of all officers whose term of office is two years, shall be, respectively, one year longer than the term provided for in this Constitution, except the members of the Assembly, whose first term of office shall be one year; and the successors of all such officers shall be elected at the last election before the expiration of the terms, as in this section provided. The first officers chosen after the adoption of this Constitution shall be elected at the time and in the manner now provided by law.

MR. MORELAND. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to section ten.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Substitute for section ten: 'In order that future elections in this State shall conform to the requirements of this Constitution, the terms of all officers elected at the first election under the same shall be respectively one year shorter than the terms as in this Constitution provided; and the successors of all such officers shall be elected at the last election before the expiration of the terms as in this section provided. The first officers chosen after the adoption of this Constitution shall be elected at the time and in the manner now provided by law.'"

MR. SWENSON. Mr. Chairman: I offer an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend section ten by inserting the word 'first' between the word 'the' and the word 'term,' in line two; also, insert the word 'first' before the word 'term,' as it occurs the last time in line four."

MR. MORELAND. Mr. Chairman: So far as this section is concerned, the minority of the committee does not favor it, and reserve the right to present a section in place of it.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the Committee on Schedule, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President Hoge in the chair.

Roll called and quorum present.

LAND AND HOMESTEAD EXEMPTION.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. President: I move that the report of the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption be taken from the table and rereferred to the Committee of the Whole for further consideration.

THE PRESIDENT. The report has been sent to the printer; it is not before the Convention now.

MR. HERRINGTON. I ask that it be returned to the Convention and rereferred to the Committee of the Whole.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman cannot make that motion until it is taken up in its order on the general file.

MR. JOHNSON. Is there anything pending before the Convention? I desire to present a petition.

Following is the petition:

To the Honorable J. P. Hoge, President, and to Members of the Constitutional Convention:

GENTLEMEN—Your petitioners, citizens of the State of California, and residents of Sonoma County, most respectfully request your honorable body to exempt from taxation all property used exclusively for charitable, educational, and church purposes.

THE PRESIDENT. It will lie on the table to be considered with the article on revenue and taxation.

AN APPEAL.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. President: I desire to take an appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The appeal was seconded by Messrs. Barton and Beerstecher.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen of the Convention: The gentleman from Santa Clara has moved that the report of the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole. The Committee of the Whole have gone through the report, have adopted amendments thereto, and sent it back to the Convention with the recommendation that it be adopted. The report has gone to the Committee on Printing, under the order of the Convention, and will take its place upon the general file. The Chair decides that the motion is not in order, and cannot be made until it is brought up in its regular order. From that decision the gentleman from Santa Clara appeals. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention?

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. President: As I understand the order of business of this Convention, there is no order of business, unless it is a special order, but what is at the disposal of this Convention when it is before it. The Chair has otherwise decided with reference to this particular reference that has been made of the report of the Committee of the Whole. That report, when it came into the Convention, was simply a recommendation that it be adopted. The reference that was made of it was for printing. That is the only reference that was made. The statement is that it is upon the general file. If it is upon the general file it may be taken from the general file by order of this Convention. There is no rule of this body, so far as I know, which prohibits its being taken from the file at any time. As I understand it, any of the reports of these standing committees that are before the house, are taken up out of order upon mere motion, and referred to the Committee of the Whole, and they are not taken in the order in which these reports have been made. Neither will the reports that have been made to the Convention, when they are to be taken up in Convention, be taken up in the order in which they are made. When a mistake is made, as I understand it, there is no other way of correcting it except by reference. If a mistake has been made by the Committee of the Whole, it is within the power of this Convention to send it back and let the mistake be corrected. If anything has been left out of a report which should have been reported upon, it is for the committee to determine that question, and it is for the Convention to say whether they shall have an opportunity, and not upon the mere ruling of the Chair. According to the ruling here made, the Convention itself is cut off from the power of correcting an error that has been made by the Committee of the Whole, even though it be discovered after reference, and after printing. I submit that the ruling is not in accordance with the rules as established by this body. It ought to be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole. There should have been some opportunity given to complete the article. One whole branch of the subject is left untouched by the Committee of the Whole, and no reference has been made to the subject, and when it was attempted to be done a motion was sprung upon the Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of referring this back without action upon that branch of the subject. It is apparent upon the face of it that no action has been taken upon one of the most important branches of the subject. While there was an effort made upon the part of some members of the Convention to engraft some amendment upon the article with reference to lands, a motion was sprung and carried which defeated that object. It was unfair to make such a reference without first giving the other side a hearing.

REMARKS OF MR. O'SULLIVAN.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. I believe that some of the reports from the Committee of the Whole, sent to the file, have been taken back by the Convention.

THE PRESIDENT. There is no such instance on record.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. Was not that of city and county government?

THE PRESIDENT. No, sir; there never has been one sent back after having been finally acted upon.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. I am very sorry and regret to see any attempt in this Convention to stifle free discussion upon the subject of lands. That was the subject referred to the Committee on Homesteads and Lands. It was part of the subject before the committee. The majority of the committee ignored the subject of lands. A minority report was made and presented to this Convention, and it looks to me very much like an attempt to stifle all discussion upon the subject of land monopoly, the greatest question before the people of California to-day—by all odds a greater question than any other question.

THE PRESIDENT. The gentleman will confine himself to the question.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. I shall support the appeal, with due deference to the Chair. I think it is nothing but fair that the matter should be referred back to the Committee of the Whole.

REMARKS OF MR. BEERSTECHER.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: Under the peculiar circumstances of this case, I am obliged, with due deference to the Chair, to vote against the ruling of the Chair. When the matter of lands and homestead limitation came before the committee, the majority report was discussed and acted upon. One amendment was made to the report, and then a motion was made that the committee rise and recommend the adoption of the article, and that the report be printed. At that time a large proportion of the members of this Convention, as I understand it, voted under a misapprehension, not knowing or understanding that there was to be a minority report presented upon the subject of land tenures and land limitation, a vital subject to the people of this State. Under a misapprehension of the facts, the vote was carried. And that is the condition of things at present. Now, the object of the motion of Mr. Herrington is, that the report be taken from the table, where it was placed for the State Printer, and rereferred to the Committee of the Whole, that it may be added to in such manner as the Committee of the Whole may desire. Mr. President, I believe, in the absence of all rules to the contrary, that the Convention has absolute power over all reports that are before it; that where a report has been ordered to print, that report may be brought back from the printer; it may be changed and altered by the Convention. I believe the Convention has full power in the premises, and this is simply an exercise of that power. It is simply to give those men who make the minority report an opportunity of presenting their views upon the subject of land tenures and land limitation. I believe this Convention can at any time reconsider any matter that they have passed upon, and it is in that view of the case that I respectfully vote against the decision of the Chair.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. President: Is there anything in the rules that will prevent the Convention from resolving to consider a minority report, if it chooses to do so?

THE PRESIDENT. The minority report is never before the body unless it is moved as an amendment.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. That would be doing, indirectly, what cannot be done directly.

REMARKS OF MR. GRACE.

MR. GRACE. Mr. President: I am here to represent the people of the City and County of San Francisco, as well as the people of the whole State, and I was elected upon a platform pledged to a fair and equitable system of land limitation, and that is what I want to do, but I am of the opinion that a majority of this Convention are against it; but I don't see why they should stifle debate when they have absolutely wasted three week's time in discussing the Chinese question, and this is one that interests the people more than the Chinese question—it is a greater curse to-day than Chinese immigration. The land thieves have done more injury than the Chinese, and the evil will be entailed upon posterity unless we prevent it. I tell you that the people understand this question, and they intend, if possible, to stop this land grabbing. I cannot see that any harm can be done by allowing the matter to be discussed. I am in favor of investigation. This is a deliberative body, and the representatives are sent here for the purpose of discussion and deliberation. In every part of this country I have conversed with men, and I have found them invariably in favor of land limitation.

THE PRESIDENT. Confine yourself to the question of the appeal.

MR. GRACE. Then, I am in favor of this appeal.

REMARKS OF MR. WELLIN.

MR. WELLIN. Mr. President: I am sorry that I have to raise a voice against the decision of the Chair. It is very seldom that I have been found sustaining an appeal from the rulings of the Chair, but, upon this occasion I am obliged to do it. Some of the delegates have given a great deal of care to this subject, and they should have an opportunity to be heard. The only way to give that opportunity is to refer the matter back to the Committee of the Whole. I hope the Convention is not afraid to listen to argument. What have they to fear that they should try to gag the Convention? I cannot see why they should be afraid to open up the discussion. I think it is nothing but right and fair that the question should be reopened. We are sorry to have to appeal. I, perhaps, have sustained the Chair as often as any delegate upon this floor, but on this occasion, I must vote for the appeal.

MR. JOYCE. I can't say I have any excuse why I shall vote against sustaining the decision of the Chair. It seems to me that the correspondent of the San Francisco Chronicle might have gone farther. Now I shall vote against the Chair, and I haven't got no apology to offer.

REMARKS OF MR. BARBOUR.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: When the committee rose and reported progress, I was under the impression that it was competent for the Convention to go into Committee of the Whole upon the minority report, and I think other members understood it so. I understand that the Chair decides that the committee, having passed the article, it carries with it the minority report also. Therefore I must, in order to get this matter before the Committee of the Whole, where it can be discussed, vote to sustain the appeal. The question before the Convention is this: Is it competent for the Convention to recommit an article which has been before the Committee of the Whole. I think Rule Twenty-seven covers that ground.

"Motions and reports may be committed or recommitted at the pleasure of the Convention, and with or without instructions from the Convention."

If that rule be true, it follows that the decision of the Chair is erroneous, and the appeal ought to be sustained. It looks like a deliberate design to stifle discussion upon one of the greatest questions of this or any other age, and particularly is it important to the people of the State of California. Gentlemen will remember that for weeks they have had upon their tables the minority report, covering the proposition contained in the article which we have been considering, and the committee has now risen and reported progress upon the article headed, "Land and Homestead Exemption," without one single word of discussion upon the subject of land limitation. Now, sir, I will not say that it was the deliberate design to stifle discussion. But I will warn gentlemen, that if such be the design, your work will be consigned to oblivion, as it will deserve to be, and the Constitution which you are framing will be buried under a load of indignant votes. Meet us on the issue fairly: answer our arguments, refute them if you can, that is all right and proper, but the Convention should be willing to hear argument. We do not propose to consume any more time than is necessary, but we certainly do object, and the people of the State will object, to slighting a question of such importance as this. Therefore I hope this opportunity will be given to recommit this whole subject, and allow debate upon it.

MR. KLEINE. I am rather surprised, upon a subject so important, why it should be cut off from debate. I think, sir, the land question is the most important besides the Chinese. Why should we, in the name of common sense, be deprived from debating this question, which is a curse to the State of California? It is no more than right that we should have our say here. Land monopolists and Mongolian slaves are a curse. I appeal from the decision of the Chair. [Laughter.]

REMARKS OF MR. REYNOLDS.

MR. REYNOLDS. Mr. President: Before discussing the immense interests involved in this question, I beg to call the attention of this Convention to the fact that the whole proceeding, in relation to the report of this committee, has been irregular, not strictly in order. I find in the printed Journal of December fourteenth, that the majority report was received, the proposed amendments read, and ordered to lie upon the table until the minority report shall be presented. There is no farther motion until December seventeenth, when the following proceedings were had: "Mr. O'Sullivan presented a minority report from the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption." That is all there is about it, and that is the last motion that was made in connection with the matter, so far as I am able to see. It does not appear that these reports were ever taken from the table, and referred to the Committee of the Whole, or that the majority report was ever taken from the table. Now, I do not see why, the whole proceeding having been irregular, we cannot be allowed to consider the minority report. I do not care how it is brought about. I do not wish to question the decisions of the Chair. I have discovered that the Chair is always right, but I do not apprehend that the Chair or any member of this Convention desires to cut off discussion on a question of so much importance as this.

REMARKS OF MR. HAGER.

MR. HAGER. Mr. President: I do not agree with the gentleman that the Chair is always right, but I think the Chair is right this time. As far as relates to the simple question of the order of business, I always adhere to the rules. We have to go by the rules. As I understand this proposition, we had the report of the committee up this morning and went through with it. I have never seen the minority report, owing to my absence on account of sickness in my family. The only way to get at the minority report, is to move to incorporate it in the majority report when it is under consideration. There is no question about that. That was the time to do it. You had a right to add to the report and take from it. You had a right to add the minority report or anything else. The Committee of the Whole was in session upon this matter, and any member had a right to offer an amendment. They went through the report and sent it back to the Convention, and the Convention disposed of it. That was a final action upon the report of the committee, and now the only way to reverse that action is to move a reconsideration. Now amendments are not cut off. Rule Fifty-five settles that matter. When the report comes up again these amendments can be made if the Convention desires.

MR. CROSS. Why not stay in Convention? Why not consider the Chinese question in Convention?

MR. HAGER. We will do it. We have got to do it. You are not cut off from amendment when it comes up. This work is not final at all. Every proposition has to be voted on in Convention, and the whole subject-matter is open to review.

MR. HERRINGTON. You don't wish this Convention to understand you as saying that the report of the committee was adopted, do you?

MR. HAGER. I don't mean that the substance of the report was adopted, but the fact that it was made a report to the Convention. Now look at the file, and you will find that every report that has been acted upon is on that file, and open to amendment.

MR. BARBOUR. I refer you to Rule Twenty-seven.

MR. HAGER. Rule Twenty-seven says, a report may be committed or recommitted, with or without instructions, by the committee. Now, that is easily understood. When a matter is pending before the Convention, the rule is that no motion shall be received but to adjourn, to lay upon the table, to commit, or amend. Now, whenever we get this matter up before the Convention, you can move to recommit it to the Committee of the Whole. When it comes up in Convention you can then move to refer it back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions, if you see fit. But at this time, I say the motion is out of order. The matter is not pending. When the matter was up you might have moved that the committee rise, with instructions to refer it back to the original committee. If we had the matter up now it would be proper to move to recommit it to the committee. When we have it before us in Convention, such a motion will be in order. But the report of the Committee of the Whole has been accepted, and the matter is not before us at this time.

MR. ANDREWS. Mr. President: In addition to what has just been said by the gentleman from San Francisco, I wish to say that Rule Fifty-three applies here, when it says that these reports shall be taken from the file and acted upon in the order in which they are placed there. It has been placed on the file, and it would be a violation of the rules to take it up out of its regular order. It has gone upon the file, with the recommendation that it be adopted, and it cannot be taken up out of its order without a suspension of the rules. I shall sustain the decision of the Chair.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. President: I disagree with the gentleman from San Francisco, Judge Hager. I believe the Chair is almost always right, but in this case clearly wrong. Now, at first blush, I thought the Chair was right, and I arrived at that conclusion from my general recollection of parliamentary law. But this Twenty-seventh Rule changes the law entirely in this regard. I believe that if the minority of any committee of this Convention chooses to introduce an amendment to the effect that the moon is made of green cheese, they are entitled under this rule to have it fairly considered. We might just as well meet this thing now as ever. I do not suppose I shall vote for a single proposition in the minority report, but I wish to have a chance to show my objections to such propositions openly. I do not wish to smother them by any parliamentary movement. Let us have a fair and full discussion upon it.

MR. BLACKMER. Mr. President: I am sorry to bring this matter up, when we are in such a hurry to get through with our business. But it is clearly the duty of this Convention to sustain the ruling of the Chair. If members will turn to page eight hundred and fifty-seven, paragraph two thousand two hundred and six, of Cushing's Manual, they will see that the Chair is right. That expresses concisely what I have to say upon this matter.

REMARKS OF MR. FILCHER.

MR. FILCHER. Mr. President: I wish to say this: that I was very much disappointed at the action of the Committee of the Whole, in referring the report back in what seemed to me an imperfect shape. That report referred to the subject of land and homestead exemption. If there is any one head under which we are supposed to discuss a great and crying evil—land monopoly—I had supposed this was the place to do it; and yet we are willing to drop the whole subject. Now, there seems to be a tenderness, whenever the subject of land monopoly is touched. I regret it, but I shall have to oppose the ruling of the Chair, and I wish to give my reasons for so doing. I not only desire to get at this land monopoly question, but I am very anxious that some stringent measures shall be passed. I have referred to the paragraph cited by the gentleman from San Diego, and I accept that as good law. But it is not the paramount law here, for our rules say that Cushing shall govern whenever applicable, and where not inconsistent with the rules of this Convention. Now, when that law is in contravention of our standing rules it does not apply. Rule Twenty-seven provides that motions and reports (and this is a report) may be committed, or recommitted, at the pleasure of the Convention, and with or without instructions. Now, sir, we are in Convention, and I say, under Rule Twenty-seven, we have a perfect right to recommit this matter to the Committee of the Whole; and, sir, as this is a vital subject, and one that demands careful consideration, I shall take this opportunity to try to secure it. This advocacy comes from the delegates from San Francisco representing the Workingmen's party, and I will say that I am willing to meet them half way, to remedy this evil. It is an evil to the whole State in common, and we should be willing to meet them half way, in order to obtain some remedy. For these reasons I shall vote against sustaining the decision of the Chair.

REMARKS OF MR. STEDMAN.

MR. STEDMAN. Mr. President: This is a question which is of the most vital importance to the people of this State, and I believe, sir, that as delegates, representing the people, we should look it square in the face and meet the issue squarely and fairly as to whether or not there shall be any limitation to landholding in this State. Let us know how each gentleman stands. But, sir, I am sorry this appeal has been taken. I shall have to vote against the decision of the Chair; but if the gentleman would withdraw the appeal I would like to make this motion, and I think it would settle the whole matter. I desire to make a motion that the minority report be made the special order for to-morrow at ten o'clock. Now, sir, that will obviate the difficulty which presents itself. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the appeal. I think it would be the best way to get at it. I think the Chair would entertain such a motion. Then we can make the matter the special order.

MR. HERRINGTON. No, sir; I withdraw nothing.

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. President: I am very much surprised at the gentleman from Placer, who urges that this point of order should be decided in a certain way because the question is one of some importance. Is it proposed to decide a point of order upon the importance or non-importance of the subject-matter? Now, sir, this whole matter has been disposed of, and is no longer before the Convention. It has passed beyond the control of the Convention at this time. The body must have possession of the subject-matter before any motion can be made to dispose of it. Now this report has been ordered to print, and sent out of the possession of this body, and is in the possession of the printer. Now section one hundred and seventy-eight of Cushing's Law and Practice——

MR. FILCHER. Which supersedes, Cushing or the rules?

MR. SHAFTER. The rules and the gentleman from Placer [laughter]. The gentleman seems to want that rule to cover every subject, whether in the Convention or out of it. Now this report has got to be before the Convention in order to be acted upon. It has been sent to another officer of the government. It is not before the Convention until it is returned by him. You must bring it forward in due form.

MR. BARBOUR. The gentleman says it must be brought before the Convention. Rule Fifty-eight says every proposition shall be debated in Committee of the Whole before it is acted upon in Convention.

MR. SHAFTER. We have been considering it in Committee of the Whole for a couple of days.

MR. BARBOUR. After you have stifled discussion in the Committee, how are you going to get it discussed in Convention?

MR. SHAFTER. It has been considered in Committee, reported back to the Convention, and sent out to the printer. The majority of the Committee have ordered it sent to the printer, and the officers of the Convention have carried out that order.

MR. REYNOLDS. I wish to ask a question. On December fourteenth, the report of the committee was presented. December seventeenth, the report of the minority was presented. Under the rule, both reports went to the printer. Of course, the minority report is no part of the report. Hence, it is still in the hands of the Convention, and is the property of the Convention, being now upon the table. It has only to be taken from the table.

MR. SHAFTER. That is not a question at all. I understand that the action of the Convention was upon the majority report, and not upon that of the minority. It was decided long ago that the minority report does not come before the Convention at all. You have got to move to take it up, and substitute it as an amendment.

REMARKS OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. President: As I understand it, a motion has been made to refer the report of this committee back to the Committee of the Whole, and the Chair decides that motion to be out of order.

THE PRESIDENT. At present, no.

MR. McCALLUM. If I understand the fact, it is, that after we came out of the Committee of the Whole, by a vote of this Convention, the report of the committee was ordered printed and placed on the file. Then, sir, I submit, if this is the question of order we are to decide, that the only way to avoid the effect which some gentlemen desire to avoid, would be for some person to give notice of a motion to reconsider, to-morrow. All this discussion as to the importance of this matter is out of order. It has nothing to do with the merits of the question as to whether the Chair has decided the question of order correctly or not. It has nothing to do with the question of order before the Convention. I am satisfied that the minority of this committee have a right—and a perfect right—under our rules, to have their propositions considered, whether a minority of this Convention, or a majority of this Convention, shall agree with them or not. I call attention to Rule Fifty-five, under which I say they not only have a right, but it is our duty to consider this proposition in Committee of the Whole. Rule Fifty-five says: "Propositions or resolutions relating to the Constitution, shall be committed to a Committee of the Whole Convention, and shall be read in Committee of the Whole by sections. All amendments shall be noted," etc. Now, this minority report was referred to the Committee of the Whole, in connection with the majority report. In point of fact, it never has been considered in Committee of the Whole, and, under Rule Fifty-five, it is entitled to be so considered.

MR. SHAFTER. I make the point of order that the fate of the minority report has no relation whatever to this appeal.

THE CHAIR. It is not before the Convention. The question is upon sustaining the decision of the Chair.

MR. McCALLUM. I am perfectly aware of that fact, sir. But justice can be done here without violating the rules. If the gentleman will withdraw his motion, which is clearly out of order, and let a motion be made, under Rule Fifty-five, to go into Committee of the Whole to consider the minority report, that will settle the whole difficulty. That is another and a separate proposition. This is exclusively upon the subject of land monopoly, which has never been considered in Committee of the Whole. Therefore I submit if the gentleman wants to see justice done, and at the same time avoid violating the rules, he will withdraw his appeal, and let the motion be made under Rule Fifty-five, and it can then be decided by a majority of the Convention whether we shall consider this matter in Committee of the Whole. There are propositions in this report which have never been considered.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. STUART. Mr. President: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Webster, Howard, Burt, and Hitchcock.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

MR. HERRINGTON. I ask for the ayes and noes.

Ayes and noes, by Mr. White, Mr. Wyatt, Mr. Stedman, and Mr. Larkin.

THE PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the question. By Rule Fifty-three, these reports, after being considered, are placed on the general file. By the Fifty-fifth Rule, after these propositions have been considered and reported back to the Convention, they are again subject to amendment, to any extent whatever, before final action is taken thereon. By Rule Sixty, these two Rules, Fifty-three and Fifty-five, cannot be suspended. The report of a minority of a committee is never before any legislative body as such at all. It is received only by courtesy. If the minority of a committee desire to take any action upon any proposition of their report, they must move it in the ordinary way before the Committee of the Whole, or before the Convention. When the report of the committee comes back, it stands precisely as it did in Committee of the Whole. Any amendment may be made. It may be amended to an unlimited extent. No amendment is cut off, no debate is cut off—the whole proposition is before the Convention again, and by the Fifty-third Rule it comes up for action. It is not now before the Convention for action. When it does come up again in its regular order, the gentleman can move, and the Convention can take any action it thinks proper. It may recommit to any committee, or to the Committee of the Whole, or to a standing or select committee. It will have entire control over the whole subject. But no motion can be made in relation to it until the question itself comes up regularly in its order. If it were otherwise, every report made by the Committee of the Whole for the past three months might, upon motions of this sort, be sent back to the Committee of the Whole, and the entire business of the Convention would be clogged and choked up. It is only the object of the Chair to enforce the rules of parliamentary bodies, and the orders of this body. Order is the very first law of every legislative body. We can make no progress without it, and will soon find ourselves involved in confusion inextricable, if these motions are entertained out of order. The Chair therefore decides that the motion is out of order, at the present time. It can be made when the question is taken up, and not before. From that decision of the Chair the gentleman from Santa Clara takes an appeal. The question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Convention. The ayes and noes have been demanded, and the Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the decision of the Chair sustained, by the following vote:

AYES.

MR. RINGGOLD (when his name was called). Mr. President: I was under the impression this morning that the minority was intentionally barred out. I am convinced now that it was not intentional. I think the Chair is right, and I vote aye.

LAND LIMITATION.

MR. BARBOUR. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, to consider the minority report of the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption.

MR. WATERS. I understand that to be the very motion declared out of order.

THE PRESIDENT. The Convention can resolve itself into Committee of the Whole upon any subject it thinks proper.

MR. MCFARLAND. Mr. President: It seems to me a very awkward proceeding to go into Committee of the Whole upon a minority report. I have never heard of any such thing. It does seem to me the gentlemen had better wait until the report comes up in its regular order. They can present their arguments there as well as here. I am opposed to the motion to go into the Committee of the Whole. I think it is very awkward to go into Committee of the Whole to consider a minority report. There may be twenty or thirty minority reports here. It is a waste of time to take up a minority report. I shall vote against the proposition. But when the majority report comes up again I shall certainly vote to refer it to the Committee of the Whole in order that amendments may be offered and discussed.

MR. BARBOUR. I make the motion at the present time, because, as I understand the decision of the Chair, the subject-matter is entirely within the control of the Convention. No gentleman has raised a point of order. It is the property of the Convention, and as the subject is unfinished, it seems to me that the Convention should go ahead and finish it. I hope the motion will prevail.

MR. TULLY. Mr. President: I hope that the Convention will not refuse to go into the Committee of the Whole. Fair play is a jewel, and if there are some gentlemen here who want to discuss that question, I hope they will be permitted to do so, now, at the present time. I am opposed to shutting off debate, or anything of that kind. I am not in favor of the minority report, but I think they have a perfect right to discuss it, and they have a right to do it now, and I trust the Convention will give the gentlemen who are in favor of the report, ample time to present their views to this Convention.

THE PREVIOUS QUESTION.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Nelson, Gorman, Inman, and Dowling.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Carried.

THE PRESIDENT. The question is upon the motion that the Convention resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, for the purpose of taking up the report made by the minority of the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. The Secretary will read the report.

THE SECRETARY read:

"SECTION 1. Perpetuities and monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free Government, and shall never be allowed; nor shall the law of primogeniture or entailments ever be in force in this State.

"SEC. 2. All lands within the State are declared to be allodial, and feudal tenures are prohibited. Leases and grants of land for a longer term than ten years, in which rent or service of any kind shall be reserved, and all fines and like restraints upon alienation, reserved in any grant of land hereafter made, are declared to be void. No lessee shall sublet any portion of the land held in his name.

"SEC. 3. No persons other than citizens, or those who have declared their intentions to become such, shall ever acquire or own, either by purchase or otherwise, real property in this State; and in case any alien dies possessed of real property in this State, contrary to this provision, such property shall escheat to the State. Nor shall any lands in this State be held in trust for any alien; but the creation of any trust in lands for the benefit of an alien shall at once escheat the land to the State.

"SEC. 4. No person shall forever hereafter be permitted to acquire, in any manner, more than six hundred and forty (640) acres of land in this State. Copartnerships, joint, or other ownership of lands, shall not be allowed contrary to this provision. No person who dies possessed of landed property in this State shall have the right to will or devise more than six hundred and forty (640) acres of land to any one heir; otherwise the said will shall be void: provided, however, that all lands over and above six hundred and forty (640) acres so devised to each lawful heir, of which such deceased person died lawfully possessed, shall be sold to the highest bidders for cash, in quantities not exceeding six hundred and forty (640) acres each, and the proceeds divided equally among the lawful heirs.

"SEC. 5. Actual occupation and continuous use for agricultural purposes during a period of one year, shall constitute a title to the ownership of land in this State. Tracts of land of over six hundred and forty acres in extent, which shall remain unoccupied and unused for agricultural purposes for a period of one year, shall be open to the occupation and use of citizens of the United States, in quantities not exceeding one hundred and sixty acres; provided, if it shall appear that any other person has previous title to such tract of land, the party occupying and using the same shall pay to said person the assessed value of the property.

"SEC. 6. No more than one hundred and sixty acres of land shall hereafter be granted or patented by the State, in any manner, to any one person. No grant or patent of lands by the State shall hereafter be made otherwise than upon the basis of actual settlement and use. No land scrip or land location certificates shall ever be issued in this State."

SPEECH OF MR. O'SULLIVAN.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman: It is with much diffidence that I arise to speak on the subject of this proposition—which aims at land reform and limitation of future ownership of land—a diffidence on my part which is occasioned by the magnitude and importance of the question, and my inability to treat it as it deserves, and present my views with that force which I would wish and which the occasion demands. Nevertheless, sir, since I have devoted examination and thought to this question, deeply feeling its great importance, not only to the people of California but of the whole Union; aye, and to millions of our race who are to succeed us as citizens of this republic, I am constrained to make an effort in advocacy of a principle which I believe to be right, however poorly I may perform my part.

I speak on this question, sir, not for myself alone, nor as a partisan, but as an humble representative of the millions of toilers, the wealth-producers of these United States, who are landless—disinherited through land monopoly. I am also urged to action because I sincerely believe that the future welfare and happiness of my country are involved in the decision of this question. I hold that there are two questions which overshadow all others, and which are of vital importance to the people of California. One is that of Chinese immigration, the other is land monopoly. To my mind, these twin curses are equally evil, are equally detrimental to the prosperity of the State, menacing to the perpetuity of free institutions, and destructive of the interests and happiness of our people. I also hold, sir, that a great majority of the people of California desire to do away with these evils, and that one of the main causes of their calling this Constitutional Convention together was the wish to see them abated, and that the Convention will miserably fail in its duty if it adjourns without striking an effectual blow to uproot and destroy them.

The curse of land monopoly is as old as the history of our race. It would be superfluous to more than briefly allude to its history, and its baneful results in Europe, where, through infernal craft and force, princes and lords have appropriated nearly all the soil, disinheriting the vast multitude of the people, millions of whom have been driven to seek a refuge in America and elsewhere in consequence of unequal, unjust laws, which confirm possession of the land in the hands of a few, whose forefathers were simply land robbers and whose titles are founded in the doctrine that "might makes right."

I will confine myself to a brief glance and statement of this cursed system of land monopoly, as it has grown up in California, and will endeavor to show that it has assumed a worse form here than in any civilized country of the world. I will show that, by its means, a few men have not only robbed the people of that which rightfully belongs to all—which is their inheritance from the Creator—but have seriously retarded the growth and prosperity of the State. The worst features of land monopoly, as it exists in this State, have grown up almost unawares. It is true, that its foundation was laid before our American settlement of California, in the Mexican grant system, which may have been good for a pastoral people, such as the Mexican settlers were, but for us, it has proved to be extremely vicious, being diametrically opposed to the prevailing system of limited land-holdings, which has grown up under our institutions, is best suited to the principles and customs of our people, and which, in the homestead and preëmption Acts, has been adopted as part of the supreme law of the land.

Of the one hundred and fifty-nine thousand square miles of land comprised within the boundaries of the State of California, an examination of the records will show that but a small fraction was taken up by Mexican grants. Most of those grants were confined to the narrow strip of coast counties, from Sonoma to San Diego, and did not, I venture to assert, include one quarter even of the area of those counties. It is difficult to obtain statistics on this point, but from a thirty-two years' residence in the State, I am enabled to speak with some knowledge of the facts. The great interior of California, including the Sacramento and San Joaquin Valleys, and the entire western slope of the Sierra Nevada—a vast territory in itself—was almost entirely untouched by Mexican grants, and unknown to settlement at the time American occupation of the country commenced. That interior of California was an almost unexplored region, quite as much so as the interior of Africa. The Mexican inhabitants of the coast never ventured into it, except on occasional raids, with a company of soldiers, to punish hostile and predatory Indians.

The gold discovery and the era of forty-nine came. But the crime of land robbery cannot be laid at the doors of the Argonauts. In their eager search for gold, these hardy pioneers, passed through the valleys, heedless of the agricultural value of their broad acres, and pitched their tents along the mountain slopes, where untold treasures had lain buried for ages, to at last reward American toil. Land grabbing was unknown as yet. The miners of forty-nine gave no thought to agriculture. The laws of the mining camps, regarding the size of and possessory rights to claims, showed a spirit of fairness, and a love of justice, which were honorable to the American name, but which the greedy horde of land-grabbers who came to California, subsequently—like an unclean lot of camp followers—failed to imitate.

As I have said, the foundation of this system of large land holdings was laid here through the policy of the Mexican Government previous to the American conquest. Experience has proved that system, to be a bad, unwise one—a transplanted relic of feudalism, entirely unsuited to our era and our people. But we had to accept it as a part of our bargain in the acquisition of the country, and to recognize the lawful titles which grew up under the system. It was indeed an unfortunate land system for California, because its existence set a vicious, tempting example before the eyes of the land pirates of our own race, who are as greedy for booty of this character as were their prototypes, the Danish pirates of the ninth, tenth, and eleventh centuries, or those other free-booters, the Norman lords, who subsequently appropriated all the lands of England and Ireland.

The pioneers of forty-nine did not come here after land, but gold. So they stayed by their mining claims, added immense sums to the general wealth of the country, and created prosperous communities in the mining counties. But while they were doing so the land-grabbers came—men who have a lordly disdain for work, and prefer scheming with the head as a more profitable occupation. This class of our population commenced and have continued up to the present time a general system of land-grabbing, which has no parallel in any other country. Some of them, by usury, legal fees, and other cunning devices, have managed to strip many of the native California families of their last acre. Others bought Mexican grant titles, genuine and bogus, and floated them over coveted valleys, oftentimes claiming twice, and even three and four times the number of leagues named in the original papers. This has been done in many counties, but notably in Santa Barbara, Ventura, and Los Angeles, through the connivance of corrupt deputies from the United States Surveyor-General's office.

This wholesale land piracy has been going on unchecked for the past twenty-five years—I call it land piracy, sir, because that is its proper name, and I believe in using the most expressive plain words to convey my thoughts—and we find as a result of these infamous practices that comparatively a few men now hold possession of a large amount of the best arable land within the boundaries of California. Some of these claim estates as great in extent as the largest holdings of the richest lords of Great Britain. Indeed, a comparison shows that California is to-day actually worse off, as regards the monopoly of the soil in a few hands, than the kingdom of Great Britain, which is worse afflicted in that respect than any other country in Europe.

Let me enumerate a few of our lordly landholders, with the number of acres set down to them in the records, as given in the Assessors' reports for eighteen hundred and seventy-two and eighteen hundred and seventy-seven: Miller & Lux are assessed for three hundred and forty-three thousand acres in three counties, namely: Merced, Fresno, and Monterey; Bixby, Flint & Co., three hundred and thirty-four thousand acres in Monterey County, and about one hundred thousand acres in Los Angeles County; W. S. Chapman, two hundred and fifty thousand acres in various parts of the State; the railroad company, two hundred and ninety-one thousand acres in different counties; Charles McLaughlin, two hundred and forty-nine thousand acres in seven different counties; J. B. Haggin, two hundred thousand acres in Kern County; Mrs. Beale, one hundred and seventy-three thousand acres in Kern County; the Philadelphia and California Petroleum Company, one hundred and thirty-one thousand acres in Ventura County; H. W. Pierce, one hundred and six thousand acres in Santa Barbara County; Dibble & Hollister, one hundred thousand acres in the same county; and the Los Angeles and San Bernardino Land Association, ninety-nine thousand three hundred and sixty acres in Los Angeles County.

I may here remark that it is said all of these figures are not reliable, in that they do not represent half the amount of land claimed by some of the parties named. We know for a fact that the donations of the General Government to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, and its branches, aggregate from fifteen to twenty millions of acres; but it appears that corporation does not choose to pay taxes on all the lands it pretends to own. It is stated that Miller & Lux's lands throughout the State aggregate somewhere about a million of acres, and that all of Chapman's grabs together reach the enormous figure of one million and a quarter of acres.

These great land-holdings in this State have been acquired by various methods and means. The titles to estates whose present possessors have derived, by purchase or otherwise, from the original grantees, who had genuine grants from the Mexican Government, I do not question. But there is evidence that many fraudulent Mexican grants were manufactured, and that some of these have been confirmed either by the Land Commission or the United States Courts. The forgery of titles was but one of the many fraudulent means devised to acquire large landed estates in California. Another method adopted to steal public land was to buy a Mexican grant for a few leagues, then change the figures and float it over double, and sometimes even four times the number of leagues called for in the original document. This was notably done by T. W. More, in Ventura County, a man who lost his life, two years ago, as a direct consequence of his rapaciousness as a land-grabber. It is also asserted that Tom Scott, of railroad notoriety, has perpetrated a similar fraud in Ventura County. The charge was made in a review of such cases in southern California, published in the San Francisco Evening Post nearly three years ago, and I have never seen it contradicted. These, and similar frauds, were perpetrated through the connivance of deputies from the United States Surveyor-General's office. There are several of these worthies now at large, who ought rightfully be in San Quentin for their crimes against the people.

Another way of acquiring large estates is by the practice of what is known as the "dummy" system. The modus operandi of this species of land swindling is as follows: I quote from the "Report of the State Land Commission to the Legislature of the State of California, eighteen hundred and seventy-seven," page twenty-seven. Speaking of the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections "in place," or what are commonly known as school lands, the report says: "The individual copartnership, or ring, engaged in speculating in lands, has usually employed an agent or attorney, whose business it is to keep himself informed with reference to the extension of township surveys by the United States, and when a number of sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections are thus designated and found 'in place,' and inuring to the State, a list of the descriptions of such lands are secured; the agent finds out a number of persons who have never purchased any portion of a sixteenth or thirty-sixth section, and who take no interest in land matters, who, for a small consideration, or none at all, will sign and swear to an application for the purchase of three hundred and twenty acres of land, and having procured a sufficient number of such persons to exhaust the list of land, and their signature and verification to the applications, and having taken a deed or assignment from each of these 'dummies,' the transaction is ended, so far as these nominal purchasers are concerned. The agent then takes upon himself the assumed character of attorney for all and singular these 'dummies;' takes their applications to the office of the State Surveyor-General and places them on file. The records of the office, extending over the past eight years, are full of transactions of this kind, and show that as many as three hundred applications for the purchase of sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections have been filed by the same attorney on one day, bearing the same date, and making one continued and uninterrupted list of entries on the record, and embracing several thousand acres of land. * * * * * * * * * * * *

"It is needless to observe that this of itself is a most palpable and outrageous abuse and fraud, and defeats the policy of the State in the disposal of these lands to bona fide settlers, and prostitutes the land system to the avarice and rapacity of the speculators. And yet these officers of the State, charged with the trust of managing and disposing of these lands, and having full knowledge of these practices, have never opened their mouths to expose these abuses and frauds, or taken any measures to check the iniquitous practices which were being perpetrated upon the State and the people daily in their presence; but, on the other hand, have permitted themselves to be the pliant instruments of these same speculators in State lands."

The evidence is clear that J. B. Haggin has, under what is known as the "Desert Land Act," done a "land office business" in getting possession of land through means of "dummies," as described in the extract just mentioned. He must have done a rushing business, indeed, to have acquired two hundred thousand acres of land in Kern County alone, within the last two years. W. S. Chapman is another of this sort of land grabbers. He has land all over the State, taken up in the names of "dummy" men, some of whom were dead years before the land was entered in their names—dead men who never even saw California. There is abundant evidence of Chapman's nefarious transactions in a document entitled "Reports of the Joint Committees on Swamp and Overflowed Lands and Land Monopoly," presented at the twentieth session of the Legislature of California. Chapman has not hesitated even to commit perjury in swearing to his entries of land in other men's names.

As the evidence touching Chapman's transactions contained in that report are too voluminous, I have selected the main points and give a brief summary of the facts presented. First, Daniel Allee testifies that he was at one time employed as a bookkeeper by Chapman; that he knew Chapman to have brought a lot of Sioux scrip to this State, and to have located about thirty thousand acres under it; that this scrip was acknowledged in Minnesota before it came here, and the names of the Indians to whom it purported to have been issued were filled in or signed by Chapman, at the time he was about to locate the scrip; that the powers of attorney from the Indians were fraudulently obtained; and that several of the Indians had been dead several years previous to the time Chapman had their names filled in, assigning the scrip to him—notably, one Henry Miller, who was hanged at Mendota, Minnesota, on the twenty-sixth of December, eighteen hundred and sixty-two, for participation in the massacre of the settlers there. All Chapman's locations in this State, up to eighteen hundred and seventy, amounted to about one million and a quarter of acres.

Walter F. Rand testified that he had conversations with Chapman regarding certain papers of great importance, said to have been taken from his office by Daniel Allee, his former clerk; some of these documents were powers of attorney, which he believed Chapman had forged, and other papers which showed the fraudulent manner in which Chapman had taken up lands in this State. Knows that Chapman floated Sioux scrip over McPherson's land in Mendocino County; afterwards McPherson obtained possession of the papers referred to, and Chapman compromised by releasing all his right, title, and interest in the land, and paid McPherson eighteen thousand dollars, his attorney, Hall McAllister, six thousand dollars, and Allee six thousand dollars, making a total of thirty thousand dollars which Chapman paid for securing those papers. He understood that the powers of attorney by which the scrip was located, were forgeries, committed by Chapman; Chapman said to him: "These things will never do to get out; it has cost me thirty thousand dollars already, if you can save me do it any way in the world." He wanted to employ Mr. Rand to recover the papers for him.

J. R. Hardenburgh testifies that when he was United States Surveyor-General, Chapman tried to bribe him by offering him a roll of twenty dollar pieces, which Mr. Hardenburgh declined to accept, informing him that he could not be bribed.

Jesse D. Carr, another land grabber, also tried to bribe Mr. Hardenburg, offering him certain shares in thirty or forty thousand acres, if he would appoint a particular man to survey the land. It could be proved that Chapman forged any quantity of powers of attorney here for the Sioux scrip. He induced the Register of the land office at Stockton to obtain leave of absence and go east: and it can be proved that, while he was gone, Chapman procured the appointment of a substitute in his office, and that he put "W. S. C.," in pencil, on large quantities of the unoccupied lands, on the map of the San Joaquin Valley. When a settler applied for land, he would be told, "Mr. Chapman has filed on that," and Chapman would turn round and make this man pay from three to ten dollars an acre for the land. He used the United States Land Office as his office. One settler came to the Stockton Land Office, and wanted to enter some land. He said there was a stream of water on it which made it particularly valuable; and while he was gone, for the purpose of getting some greenbacks, Chapman said, "I will take that land," and he laid the money down on the table, and when the settler came back, the acting Register said, "Since you have been gone, Mr. Chapman has entered that land, and paid for it." The result of Mr. Hardenburg's refusal to be bribed and used by Chapman, Carr, and others, was that he was turned out of office through their influence at Washington.

There is no telling how much of this business has been done in California. The cases of Messrs. Haggin, Chapman, and Carr are only notable examples of the methods pursued by a certain class of men in wholesale land stealing. Others, doubtless, have been and are engaged in the same business; but it would give an active committee years of labor to unearth all the particulars of these fraudulent transactions in this State. I have no direct evidence as to how Miller & Lux have acquired the vast territory listed in their names on the Assessors' rolls. I venture the assertion that the two hundred and ninety-seven thousand acres which they claim in Fresno and Merced Counties have been obtained in precisely the same manner as that pursued by Haggin, Chapman, and Carr. And this is why I make the assertion: no genuine Mexican claim for land existed in that part of the San Joaquin Valley, for the very good reason that no Mexican ever settled or built a home there prior to eighteen hundred and forty-nine. Mexicans of the coast counties had a mortal dread of the wild Indians of that region, and therefore never formed a single settlement there. I know that that valley was an uninhabited wilderness, save by wild Indians and beasts, prior to eighteen hundred and forty-nine. And one of the conditions of all Mexican grants was, that a house should be built and a settlement made on the land within a certain specified time.

Now, to prove that there is substantial ground for my assertions regarding land monopoly in California, let me quote some figures on the subject. A table from the records of the State Board of Equalization for eighteen hundred and seventy-two, showing the number and classes of farms in California, informs us that there were twenty-seven thousand nine hundred and ninety-six farms, of one hundred acres and upwards, assessed at that time, containing a total acreage of twenty-three million three hundred and forty thousand. These farms are divided into nine classes. The first class consists of twenty-three thousand three hundred and fifteen farms, containing from one hundred to five hundred acres, and averaging two hundred acres; total acreage, four million six hundred and sixty-three thousand. Second class, two thousand three hundred and eighty-three farms, containing from five hundred to one thousand acres and averaging seven hundred and fifty acres; total acreage, one million seven hundred and eighty-seven thousand two hundred and fifty. Third class, one thousand one hundred and twenty-six farms, containing from one thousand to two thousand acres, and averaging one thousand five hundred acres; total acreage, one million six hundred and eighty-nine thousand. Fourth class, three hundred and sixty-three farms, containing from two thousand to three thousand acres, and averaging two thousand three hundred acres; total acreage, eight hundred and thirty-four thousand nine hundred. Fifth class, one hundred and eighty-nine farms, containing from three thousand to four thousand acres, and averaging three thousand two hundred and fifty acres; total acreage, six hundred and four thousand two hundred and fifty. Sixth class, one hundred and four farms, containing from four thousand to five thousand acres, and averaging four thousand five hundred acres; total acreage, four hundred and fifty-eight thousand. Seventh class, two hundred and thirty-six farms, containing from five thousand to ten thousand acres, and averaging seven thousand acres; total acreage, one million eight hundred and fifty-two thousand. Eighth class, one hundred and fifty-eight farms, containing from ten thousand to twenty thousand acres, and averaging fifteen thousand acres; total acreage, two million six hundred and seventy thousand. Ninth class, one hundred and twenty-two farms, containing twenty thousand acres and upwards; total acreage, eight million seven hundred and eighty-two thousand.

The statistics of sixty-seven farms of the ninth class represent an aggregate of four million nine hundred and thirty-two thousand three hundred acres, which is an average of seventy-three thousand acres each. If the remaining fifty-five farms be estimated at seventy thousand acres each, which is a reduction of three thousand acres each from the estimate of the large moiety, the result will be three million eight hundred and fifty thousand acres; which, added to the known figure of the sixty-seven farms, gives us a total of eight million seven hundred and eighty-two thousand. Here, then, is a well ascertained fact, namely: that one hundred and twenty-two large farms embrace double the quantity of land comprised in the twenty-three thousand three hundred and fifteen small farms. This is itself a startling exhibit, but it is not the most startling derivable from the figures of the Board of Equalization. Further analysis demonstrates that the holdings of one thousand acres and upwards, number two thousand two hundred and ninety-eight, aggregating to that number of persons the enormous area of sixteen million eight hundred and ninety thousand six hundred and fifty acres, or an average of seven thousand three hundred and fifty acres to each person. Pursuing the same line of investigation, we find that one thousand one hundred and seventy-two persons own all the farms of two thousand acres and upwards, and that these one thousand one hundred and seventy-two persons, therefore, hold fifteen million two hundred and one thousand six hundred and fifty acres, or an average of twelve thousand nine hundred and seventy-seven acres to each person. The area under consideration, twenty-three million three hundred and forty thousand nine hundred acres, is larger than the whole cultivated area of the State of Ohio. That State, with twenty-one million acres of land under cultivation, has one hundred and ninety-five thousand farms, the majority of which are below one hundred acres each. We, with twenty-eight thousand farms, have already disposed of two million acres of land more than is under tillage in Ohio. In the latter State there are but sixty-nine farms exceeding a thousand acres. Here there are two thousand two hundred and ninety-eight of that class, and they embrace nearly seventeen million acres of land.

I present another suggestive calculation: The twenty-three million three hundred and forty thousand acres of land in this State, now occupied by only twenty-seven thousand nine hundred and ninety-six farms, if subdivided into holdings of one hundred and sixty acres each, would make exactly one hundred and forty-five thousand eight hundred and sixty-five farms; and reckoning that each family owning a farm would consist of at least four persons, the calculation would give us a total agricultural population of five hundred and eighty-three thousand four hundred and sixty persons, or very nearly as much as the present total population of California. These figures plainly show what the State loses by land monopoly—by the infernal greed of a few men, who, hog-like, grab the soil, keep out population, and will not even consent to pay their just proportion of taxes.

The extent and character of land monopoly, its constant growth, its danger and injury to this commonwealth, can neither be exaggerated nor denied. All attempts at denial will be futile, because the people of California know the facts, and see that this bastard feudalism overshadows and curses the land. To get rid of it peaceably and lawfully, I propose as a remedy, a practicable, fair system. My proposition is this: that no person shall hereafter be permitted to acquire, by purchase, will, or otherwise, more than six hundred and forty acres of land. This system, if adopted, would put an end to land monopoly in one generation. It is a proposition that fully respects present "vested" rights, even though some of what are called so are notoriously "vested frauds;" being a gradual reform, there would be no hardship in its operation; it proposes no confiscation of property, not even the restitution of the millions of acres stolen from the people's common domain. Every one now owning more than the amount specified in the limitation would have full notice and time to enable him to dispose of his surplus acres, pocket the proceeds, or invest them in some other business.

Limitation would simply bring about a just system of equalization in the ownership of land, which is the true remedy for monopoly, and the only system suited to the genius of a republic; it would tend immediately to give us a larger population of that very best class of people for any State, small land owners, who, having an interest in the soil, are most attached to their country, and are acknowledged on all hands to be the most conservative, and at the same time the most patriotic of citizens. Persons who oppose this proposition for limitation assert that the evil of land monopoly will cure itself in time, through operation of the descent of property, etc.; that when the man possessed of a large estate dies, it will be divided among his heirs, and that though he was careful in accumulating the chances are that his children will turn out to be spendthrifts, and thus cause division of large landed properties. This supposition, though plausible, is altogether theoretical and uncertain, and does not afford even the semblance of a substantial remedy for the evil complained of. We who seek a reform in the land system of this State are fighting against land monopoly as a false, pernicious system, destructive of equality, of the rights and happiness of the human family in general; we oppose it on the broad ground of correct principle and justice, and propose an honest straightforward remedy, which will strike at the root of the evil and destroy it within a reasonable time. Our opponents, while acknowledging land monopoly to be an evil, propose to postpone all remedy and let the evil cure itself, which reminds me of the proverb that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure." In what condition would society be if we agreed to abide by that theory in all the affairs of life—if we said, "Oh, let us not try to prevent or punish crime, it will cure itself;" or if we said regarding bodily ills, "There is no use trying to avoid or prevent them, they will cure themselves." This is exactly what that argument amounts to, if argument it can be called. It is evasive, unworthy of sensible men, and is simply an attempt to postpone and shift responsibility. I hold that this question must be met directly and at once. Land monopoly, if not checked now, instead of curing itself, will go on increasing, until it becomes such an unbearable curse that it will lead to revolution.

One of the arguments used by those gentlemen who oppose the proposition for land limitation is, that we have no more right to restrict a man in the quantity of land he can acquire, than in the amount of money he can accumulate. The clear, absolute distinction between the two kinds of property, money and land—their extreme opposite nature and character—expose the fallacy of this assumption. Man's title to that which he can produce, or create by his own efforts is indisputable—and all articles created by labor are of this character. Land is not so, but the very opposite. It has existed since primeval time. No man has, or ever can create a single rood of it. It is unchangeable. On the other hand money is the most unstable of property, for we may possess thousands of dollars to-day and be without a cent to-morrow. Man acquires money, or personal property of any other character through his labor, but he cannot add one grain of sand to the soil of the earth. Hence the distinction between the two species of property is so clear as to be within the comprehension of a child.

Again, the assertion is made by some persons that a man has a right to acquire as much land as he pleases. No man has such a right. Whence comes this monstrous claim? for right it is not. Can any man show a title-deed by primogeniture from God the Father, excluding his brother men? I trow not. This claim is as reasonable and well founded as "the divine right of kings." It is the plea of land robbers the world over. No man is entitled to have and to hold more than a fair, equal share of God's earth. I affirm the following to be indisputable truths: First, that the elements of nature—land, water, and air—are provided freely for the sustenance of all human beings without distinction; second, that land is the rightful heritage of all men, and not intended to be a monopoly; third, that every human being has an equal right to the use of the land for the purposes of sustenance; fourth, that the right of property in land arises solely from the subjection of that land to individual purposes or ends involving its continuing use for the sustenance of life. Therefore monopoly by one person of more land than he needs or uses to supply his wants, is a violation of natural rights, and is a gross injustice to all men who have no land, who are disinherited and may be crowded out of existence by this "dog in the manger" policy.

In an excellent book entitled "The Science of Rights," the writer, J. G. Fichte, presents the following propositions, which I quote as fair definitions of the nature of property in land:

"All property is of a double nature; it is either absolute, and hence not under the jurisdiction of the State, as money and valuables, etc.; or relative, and immediately under the jurisdiction of the State, as real estate, houses, licenses, etc."

"The legal end of the State in all the property conveyed to the citizens is, that this property shall be properly used for the necessities of the State. Hence, the purchaser must agree to use it, and must be in a position to be able to use it; for instance, if he purchases lands, he must be able to farm."

And society has a perfect right, nay, it is its duty, to fix a limit to the amount which each man shall occupy. It should exercise this authority in the interest of all its members. We are now living in an era when equality of rights is generally acknowledged. Born and baptized in bloody revolutions, the recognition of those rights is deeply fixed in modern thought; and as thought and principles are progressive, there is no fear that we of the nineteenth century will go backwards and accept any of the exploded heresies of the past. Land monopoly is clearly a violation of the doctrine of equality; it is destructive of human rights and "the pursuit of happiness," as set forth in the immortal Declaration of Independence. This equality of rights, which I claim to be God-given, is ignored, trampled upon, when one man is allowed to hold ten thousand, fifty thousand, or one hundred thousand acres, which he does not, cannot use, but takes possession of for speculation, while thousands of other men possess not one foot of soil from which to supply their natural wants by cultivation.

It is said this will have a tendency to injure a great interest of this State, that of sheep raising.

My reply to that objection is this: The sheep raisers' interests are not the only interests to be consulted in this matter. They are but a fraction of the people, either in this State or in the Union, and therefore I see no reason why we should abandon all ideas of necessary reform in land affairs to please that class alone. And here let me say that sheep raising has been and is a great industry in the Australian Colonies of England. Yet, in the interests of the mass of the people seeking homes in these colonies, that interest has had to be curbed in its disposition to appropriate all the land for its purposes alone. Under the early policy of the British Government in Australia, the sheep men, or "squatters," as they were called, occupied large areas of land for grazing pastures. As the agricultural interest increased, and small farmers began to look for room to make homes on the land, the monopoly of the soil by the "squatters" was found to be detrimental to the general welfare; therefore, the Colonial governments, which, I am glad to say, possess free government in a large degree, have wisely adopted some measure of land limitation, to correct the avariciousness of these landlords. But the end is not yet. The people of Australia have made a commencement in the right direction; agitation of the question of land tenures is still going on, and will not cease until the right principle is adopted; namely, general limitations to small holdings.

Land limitation, as we shall see if we examine the subject, is not a new thing. It has been partially adopted in Australia, and it has become the general law in Prince Edward's Island, under the Government of the Dominion of Canada. An Act was passed by the Government of that province on the twenty-seventh of April, eighteen hundred and seventy-five, by the terms of which it was agreed to purchase all the large landed estates in the island exceeding five hundred acres in the aggregate, for the purpose, as the preamble of the Act sets forth, of converting "the leasehold tenures into freehold estates, upon terms just and equitable to the tenants as well as to the proprietors." Shall we be less liberal, less favorable to reform, than colonies of the British Empire? I hope not. If we decide against reform we shall certainly be taking a step backward, for our general and State governments have plainly indicated that land limitation is the settled policy of both. The General Government, in its homestead and preëmption Acts, limits each actual settler to one hundred and sixty acres of land. Are not the meaning, intent, and policy here indicated plain enough for the commonest understanding? This is land limitation, as plain as it can be formulated in words, and however much it may have been evaded by the trickery and perjury of land-grabbers, the fact cannot be denied that it is the law of our Government. The State government, also, has adopted the spirit of land limitation, when it restricts, as it plainly does, certain corporations chartered under its sanction to the possession of a limited amount of real estate. Thus we have the spirit—the principle—of land limitation blended in the policy of our Government, State and National; and all that is now wanted and demanded by the people, is a distinct affirmation in the fundamental law of this State that the policy shall be general in its application for all future time.

I hold that land monopoly is regarded as unjust by all men of fair minds, who are not biased in its favor by selfish interest; it is condemned by the verdict of mankind; it is the practice of selfishness in its most odious aspect; it is narrow in all its aims, and it admits of no defense aside from sophistry and infernal legal quibbles; it is destructive of general prosperity and injurious to the State; it is un-American, anti-republican, and can only maintain its existence under the iron hand of despotism. Justice and common sense demand that all bad laws which protect and encourage it, shall be repealed. Wherever it prevails the interests of society require its extirpation, and the adoption of remedies which shall put an end to it forever. And I now predict that the time is at hand when it will finally receive its death-blow in every civilized nation of the earth. Of all the States of this Union, California is the most afflicted by this curse; it is keeping out population, retarding our prosperity. In all the older States small farms is the rule, and large ones a rare exception. There we see general prosperity prevailing, at least among the rural population; there we see an independent yeomanry planted, who are the pride and the mainstay of the Republic—its wealth-producers in peace, its defenders in war. If we desire to transmit the liberty which we enjoy, unimpaired, to future generations; if we desire that our posterity shall be a free, contented, happy people, we must rid ourselves of this imported feudalism, and provide means for a general ownership of land in small farms. There can be no prosperity, no contentment, no happiness, otherwise in this land. As the poet has aptly said of another country where this blighting curse still exists:

Ill fares the land, to hast'ning ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates, and men decay;
Princes and lords may flourish, or may fade;
A breath can make them, as a breath has made;
But a bold yeomanry, their country's pride,
When once destroy'd, can never be supplied.

This reform of land limitation is demanded in the interest of the nation, in the interest of the State, in the interest of good government, in the interest of justice to all. It is demanded by the people—not by any single class or section, but by a general popular expression which cannot be ignored. The great political parties have recognized its necessity, and favored it in their platforms, and they never would have done this if the force of public opinion had not compelled them to do so, for the politicians who generally manipulate party Conventions are time-servers, who pretend to bow to popular demands, though they do so only to deceive and betray the people. In the State platform of the Democratic party for eighteen hundred and seventy-five the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That we condemn, as subversive of the rights of the people and ruinous to the best interests of the State, the policy of permitting the lands of the State to become a monopoly in the hands of a few at the expense of the many, and we hereby pledge the Democratic party to the correction of this giant evil.

Pledged the Democratic party to correct the evil, indeed; but it was a false pledge—a mockery of truth—intended to deceive the public, as the corrupt leaders of that party and members of the Convention which adopted the resolution have since declared.

To us of California, land reform is one of the most important questions of the day. It is a question that will not down, however powerful temporary opposition may be to the need of the times. It is a question that must be finally settled so as to meet the wishes and wants of the whole people. I am aware that there is disposition in this Convention to ignore the importance and the necessity of this reform, but I caution them to beware of the responsibility which they take by assuming here a lordly disdain of popular opinion. This Convention may refuse to adopt limitation, or any other proper remedy for land monopoly; but if it does so, rest assured it will only be postponing action. I say the people of California demand this reform—they have proclaimed their wishes in no uncertain tones—and gentlemen, who array themselves in opposition to the popular demand, will have to place their names squarely on the record for future accountability. The people who have the power to make and unmake Legislatures and Constitutional Conventions, will have something to say on this question; their wishes will become commands, and their commands action, in the near future, and that action will be the destruction of land monopoly.

In conclusion, I repeat the common saying, that "reforms never go backward;" and to this let me add that the triumph of a principle which has truth and justice for its foundation cannot be prevented while honest free thought holds sway among men. The name abolitionist was once potent as a term of reproach, yet have we not seen the powerful institution of slavery destroyed in one half the States of this Union in our own days? At present, in a narrow spirit of prejudice, we hear the cry that land reformers are agrarians, communists, confiscators, etc. But these false cries will avail nothing. The destruction of land monopoly is decreed by the people. This reform is the vital question of the day; backed by numbers; its onward course will be irresistible, and its agitation will never cease until victory shall have been achieved.

SPEECH OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I do not expect to occupy the time of this committee for more than ten minutes in the discussion of this question. I think the committee ought at least to be willing to recommend that we insert in the Constitution section one, as reported by the minority of the Committee upon Lands and Homestead Exemption—that "perpetuities and monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free government, and shall never be allowed; nor shall the law of primogeniture or entailments ever be enforced in this State." I think there is no man in the State of California, who is imbued with the spirit of a free-born American citizen, who will not subscribe to that declaration, and I hope that it will be engrafted in the permanent law of our land, and that it will stand as one of the great line stones from which we never will depart. And another proposition which I think this Convention ought by all means to recommend in the Constitution, is the proposition with reference to the disposition of public lands belonging to the State of California. Of course I have not time to enter into a discussion of the abuses which have entered into the system of the management and disposition of these lands, which are well known to every member of this Convention. But not talking about what is passed; not talking about the wrongs which have been committed; not talking about the steals that have been accomplished; not talking about the frauds and perjuries that have been committed and permitted by the decisions of the Courts, and rulings of the Land Office; passing all that by, what is left for us is, that we certainly must act for the future, even if we have but a thousand acres of land belonging to the State of California. There is some left. Some of it is swamp land, some sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections, school land, and some fragments of other donations. We can at least lay the foundation for a land law for future generations. We ought to say here in the Constitution, that no more than three hundred and twenty acres of land shall ever be granted or patented by the State to any one person, and no patent shall ever be made otherwise than upon the basis of actual settlement and occupation, after three years time. That no land scrip or land location certificates shall ever be issued in this State. The true policy of land holding in any country is, that he who holds it shall occupy it, and utilize it, and make it bring forth sustenance for the people of the earth. The true policy is for the sovereignty to hold all the land that is not in actual occupation and use. That is theoretically the law of the United States, but it is not practically so. But we can now make it practically so by inserting in our Constitution: That whatever land is left to us now shall be occupied, shall be obtained from us by actual occupation and settlement, and not otherwise. What a burlesque it is upon law, upon government, upon decency, and upon propriety, to say that Mr. Montgomery, or Mr. A, B, or C, under the Swamp Land Act of eighteen hundred and sixty-seven, shall have a patent from the State of California to eighty-seven thousand acres of swamp land, the very garden land of the State of California, of the earth—that which makes us one of the greatest States, that which makes us the very empire of the world, and if dealt out aright, would be capable of sustaining an immense population. But it is dealt out in this way, and the very money that is paid into the treasury goes back again into a reclamation fund, and the State receives not a dollar for the land.

That is the way lands in this State have been dealt out under the administration of the Democratic and Republican parties, which have said so much about land reform. They have become the most servile tools of capitalists and land monopolists. The Democratic and Republican parties are as completely in the hands of the land monopolists as it is possible for them to be. Not only the swamp lands have been thus monopolized, but five or six millions of acres of other land, the finest upon the face of the earth, capable of sustaining a population of from ten to twenty millions of people, is now lying waste and barren under this vile system which has been such a curse to this State. There is eighty-seven thousand acres of swamp land under one patent—eighty-seven thousand acres belonging to one land firm; fifty thousand acres to another; forty thousand, to another; and no limitation to prevent any man from owning every foot of land in California. No limitation whatever. Not only that, but one man could have filed upon it, paid only the filing fees, and by collusion with the land officers, could keep it from others until he could find settlers willing to pay the extortionate royalty he placed upon it, when he could release it, without having spent a dollar save the insignificant filing fees. What is true of the land system in this State, has been true of the land systems of other States. That is the system which we complain of here, and against which we protest.

[At this point of the speaker's remarks the gavel fell.]

MR. TUTTLE. I give the gentleman my time.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Monterey will proceed.

MR. WYATT. I was saying that this is the system that I am standing here and calling upon this Convention to reverse. I would have the members of this Convention take a broad and statesmanlike view of this great question, which is of such vital importance to the people of this commonwealth. The people of this State have repeatedly called upon both the old parties to inaugurate this reform, but they have violated their pledges and failed to do it, and that is one of the very purposes for which this Convention was called. And while I do not propose to touch these frauds, these perjuries, these rascalities, which have been crystallized into the form of law—while I do not propose to touch them, I do propose that no more land belonging to the State of California shall be disposed of in that way; but that if there is any struggling boy, or any young man, just married, having high hopes for the future, with nothing but his hands to make a living and build up a home for wife and children, if they can find a vacant piece of land in this broad State of California, they shall have a right to purchase it from the State of California, without having to pay a royalty to Haggin, Carr, Tevis, or some other land shark. I am here to protest against these abuses, and to say that such a damnable system shall no longer be tolerated in the State of California.

I have another proposition, on which I am in hopes the Convention will agree, and that is the declaration I read here against monopolies and perpetuities. Also, that the State of California shall forbid, in her Constitution, the disposition of her lands to any but actual settlers, and then in no larger quantities than three hundred and twenty acres. To these propositions I hope to have the hearty support of this Convention. It is a country largely controlled by land monopolists, and this is all the more reason why these provisions ought to be inserted. The men who come here from a country where the land is the heritage of a favored few realize the importance of this question, and are willing to obey the behests of the people. I believe if there is any one question that the people are interested in, it is this question. In eighteen hundred and seventy-two, when this report was made, codifying these vast land grants, and arranging them, by the State Board, and average assessment made thereon, I happened to be in the Capitol for a short time after that was done. I wanted to get a copy of that report, and went to the Sergeant-at-Arms, but could find none. I found one on the desk of one member, but could get none elsewhere.

[At this point in the speaker's remarks the gavel fell.]

MR. JOYCE. Being as I do not wish to speak on this arrangement I grant him my time.

MR. WYATT. If I do not finish in another ten minutes I will not ask for any further time. From that day to this I have been looking for one, but have not been able to find it. Where it went to, or what became of it I do not know. Then, gentlemen, up to this time, the railroad was somewhat of a new thing in this State, and as it went through the big ranches the farmers thought their freight would be greatly reduced, but the contrary being the result, what was the result of it? Then commenced the clamor against the railroad, and these land owners brought their forces here, in connection with the people at large, to bring the railroad down. But, sir, the railroad company gave them to understand that if they did they could not hold these big grants. The railroad company never told me this; the land men never told me this, for I have never had the confidence of either one in this State, and I only speak what my judgment tells me is so. The railroad company gave the land men to understand that if the railroads were to be put in a straightjacket the land monopolists would have a touch of it, as it was asserted by the Record, then the railroad organ in this State, as the Record-Union is to-day. As soon as this understanding was had they struck hands, and the Record closed its mouth upon the subject of land monopoly, and has kept its mouth shut from that day to this. And whenever an effort has been made to reduce freights and fares, the railroads and the land monopolists have stood shoulder to shoulder to defeat it—and the same when any movement was made against the land monopolists. Sir, land monopoly is an evil that must be cured. It menaces the welfare of this State. We propose to make them let go their grasp upon the lands of this State.

Gentlemen of the Convention, this is a subject so full of thought, it is so full of matter to be talked about, that a man does not know where to strike first. For instance, it was stated yesterday that the University lands were sold for six dollars and fifty cents an acre—that is, that the actual settlers had to pay that much in addition to the regular government price, and all of which is of no benefit to the public. This scrip is preferred scrip, which can be located in advance of where the settler can otherwise go. All this is a curse. It would be better if there was never any college scrip, and if there is to be college scrip it ought not to be located in advance, or until the land is surveyed. It would be far better if the people of California would raise the same amount of money by direct taxation, instead of forcing poor settlers to pay it into the pockets of land monopolists. In other words, it is putting a tax upon the poor, struggling settlers of the State of California to support this University. All this land scrip is in the interest of land grabbers and land monopolists and speculators, and at the expense of poor men. I now, while I have this one chance, eagerly embrace it, to enter my solemn protest against this thing. I am talking under very great difficulties, for I have recently had my mouth iron-clad and vulcanized, and, as a natural consequence, my articulation is difficult. I was speaking about this land scrip, which has been abolished by the Government of the United States, which now grants land only to actual settlers.

[At this point the gavel fell.]

Mr. WELLIN. I will give the gentleman my time.

Mr. WYATT. I don't know whether the Committee is tired of my remarks or not. I have no wish to bore you, but if I can give you any information that will lead you to a right conclusion on this great subject, I am willing to occupy another ten minuts. More frauds have been perpetrated by means of scrip than in any other way. Take the Sioux scrip, which had no foundation. It had its commencement in fraud, was carried on by perjury, and its location in the State of California was by means of fraud and perjury. Take these scrips, and these school land frauds, and these swamp land frauds, and they constitute a mass of villainy that is astounding. Take the robbery, and perjury, and villainy, and collusion, by which these lands have been wrested from their rightful possessors, and does it not surpass the English system, which is so much condemned? I do ask you now, to put a clause in the Constitution which will at least relieve the rising generation from the evils with which we have been afflicted, so that it will be possible, some time in the future, for those who make this State, who constitute this State, to carry the State forward on the road of progress, and in all that goes to constitute a civilized community. I am here to ask that the future generation shall not be handicapped, as the present one has been, in the great race of life. Am I asking too much? I am asking that the children who are now growing up to take our places, shall not be robbed of their birthrights. Am I asking too much? Do we ask anything of you but what you realize, in your heart of hearts, ought to be granted? Do we ask anything of you but what is justified by the experience of the most enlightened nations on earth? Do we ask anything but that which all the wisest and best men of the present age say should be granted? And in asking these things, we are only seconding and voicing the demand which comes up from the people, and they will not be denied.

REMARKS OF MR. GRACE.

Mr. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I do not propose to make a speech upon this matter, because there is not time enough allowed. I only wish I had the ability and the time to lay bare the abuses and evils of the landed system of this State. I stand here representing a people to whom I am pledged to use every endeavor to limit land holding and land monopoly. And when I stand here upon this floor and say I am in favor of land limitation, I am only, as an honest man, representing the views and the wishes of the constituency which sent me to this Convention. And I intend, as far as I am able, to comply with their wishes in the future as I have endeavored to do in the past. Our land system is now little better than that of old England. England has been progressing slowly. It has taken them a thousand years to arrive at their present state, and yet we find that about fifteen thousand persons own the land of England. Yet, sir, here in this fair young State, we find that sixty landowners and corporations own more land than there is in all England. They form a landed aristocracy which threatens as much danger to this State as it ever did to England. If we permit this thing to go on a few years we will see the great nobilities of Kern—Haggin, Tevis, and Carr—forming themselves into an aristocracy which will be worse than was ever seen in England. By means of Chinese labor they will soon crowd the laboring man and the farmer to the wall. This is the thing we propose to guard against. We propose to say that there shall be a limit beyond which they shall not go. It is the will of the people, and I am in hopes this Convention will respect their wishes and come squarely up to the line of duty.

Mr. SCHELL. I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

The PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration the report of the minority of the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HUESTIS. I move the Convention do now adjourn.

Carried.

And at five o'clock P. M. the Convention stood adjourned until to-morrow morning at nine o'clock and thirty minutes.

ONE HUNDRED AND NINETEENTH DAY.

SACRAMENTO, Friday, January 24th, 1879.

THE JOURNAL.

Mr. LINDOW. Mr. President: I move that the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, and the same approved.

So ordered.

PETITIONS.

Messrs. Mills and Nason presented petitions, requesting the exemption of certain property, used for charitable, educational, and church purposes, from taxation.

Laid on the table, to be considered with the article on revenue and taxation.

NEW PROPOSITION.

Mr. KEYES presented the following proposed article:

ARTICLE XII.

BOUNDARY OF THE STATE DEFINED.

SECTION 1. The boundary of the State of California shall be as follows: Commencing at the point of intersection of forty-second degree of north latitude with the one hundred and twentieth degree of longitude west from Greenwich and running south on the line of said one hundred and twentieth degree of west longitude until it intersects the thirty-ninth degree of north latitude; thence running in a straight line in a southeasterly direction to the River Colorado, at a point where it intersects the thirty-fifth degree of north latitude; thence down the middle of the channel of said river to the boundary line between the United States and Mexico, as established by the treaty of May thirtieth, one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight; thence running west and along said boundary line to the Pacific Ocean and extending therein three English miles; thence running in a northwesterly direction and following the direction of the Pacific Coast to the forty-second degree of north latitude; thence on the line of said forty-second degree of north latitude to the place of beginning; also, all the islands, harbors, and bays along and adjacent to the coast.

Referred to the Committee of the Whole.

ASSISTANT JOURNAL CLERK.

MR. TOWNSEND offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the President be and he is hereby authorized to appoint an Assistant Journal Clerk for the Convention, whose salary shall be six dollars per day.

Referred to the Committee on Mileage and Contingent Expenses.

LIMIT OF SPEECHES.

MR. INMAN offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the practice of one member giving time to another results only in prolonging debate and delaying the proceedings of this Convention, and is an evasion of Rule Forty-three; and

Resolved, That the practice be from this time discontinued.

MR. INMAN. Mr. President: I simply offer that to expedite business. I hope the Convention will adopt it.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. President: I hope, sir, that that resolution will be promptly voted down, and more especially now that we are in the consideration of the gravest question that afflicts the people of California.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. President: I was intending to offer exactly the same resolution myself, and I hope it will be adopted. It has been evident that through courtesy to some gentlemen they have been permitted to override Rule Forty-three.

MR. INMAN. It don't apply to-day, but after to-day.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. President: I was opposed to the adoption of the ten-minute rule, and did what I could to prevent its adoption. I have more than once refrained from speaking because I did not care to ask the indulgence of this Convention, or ask gentlemen to give me their time. I am willing to rescind Rule Forty-three, but it is certainly an evasion of it for one gentlemen to give his time to another. By that means several gentlemen are allowed to make hour-speeches. If we are going to stand up to the rule, let us do it. This habit of a half dozen gentlemen giving their time to another is an entire nullification of the rule. I am not in favor of the ten-minute rule, and would be perfectly willing to rescind it, but at the same time we ought to enforce the rule or abolish it.

MR. WEST. Mr. President: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Schell, Hitchcock, Prouty, and Kelly.

The main question was ordered.

The resolution was adopted on a division, by a vote of 69 ayes to 30 noes.

NOTICE.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. President: I send up a notice.

THE SECRETARY read:

"I give notice that, on to-morrow, I will move to amend Rule Twenty-four, by striking out the last proviso: 'Provided further, that on all resolutions and propositions relating to the Constitution the final vote shall be taken by ayes and noes.'"

MR. MORELAND. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the report of the Committee on Schedule.

The motion was lost.

LAND MONOPOLY.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President in the chair, for the purpose of further considering the subject of land and homestead exemption.

The motion prevailed.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

MR. ROLFE. Mr. Chairman: I would like to inquire what section is before the committee?

THE CHAIRMAN. The section presented by Mr. O'Sullivan as a substitute for section two.

MR. ROLFE. I would like to inquire what has become of section one of this minority report? Is not that before the House?

THE CHAIRMAN. The report is not before the body. It can only be brought up by motion to amend.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: I have an amendment to offer to the substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Substitute for section two, 'The holding of large tracts of land, uncultivated and unimproved, by individuals and corporations, is against the public interest, and should be discouraged by all means not inconsistent with the rights of private property.'"

MR. BLACKMER. I second the amendment.

SPEECH OF MR. VAN DYKE.

MR. VAN DYKE. Mr. Chairman: We may agree with all that has been said by the gentleman who occupied so much of the time of the committee yesterday, in reference to the abuses that have grown up in this State by way of acquiring large tracts of land, but we are, nevertheless, met with this obstacle, that they have their lands. That, according to our notion of right, and the duties of Government, we cannot divest them of their property. It can only be taken from them for public uses, upon just compensation being given. We cannot take their property from them for private uses, or distribute them at all. Now, sir, we all, I think, recognize the great evil of holding large tracts of land uncultivated and unimproved; but, sir, we can only apply the remedy in a lawful and proper mode, and consistent with the constitutional provisions which I have before referred to. Mr. Chairman, I think we have applied one remedy, and a very effectual remedy, in reference to the modes of taxation. Heretofore, as is well known, these large tracts of land have not contributed their just proportion towards defraying the expenses of the State Government. The holders of these large tracts of land are protected in their possessions by the whole power and machinery of the State Government. I say it is but just and right and proper that they should contribute equally with the holders of other property in the State, towards defraying the expenses of the State Government. We have therefore improved upon the old system of the assessment and collection of revenue by providing, first, for a revision of the assessments of property by the State Board of Equalization. This will place it within the power of the State Board of Equalization to raise assessments upon these tracts of land to a proper valuation. Then we have provided, further, that it shall be assessed in small tracts instead of by leagues and thousands of acres. Then we have provided, further, that uncultivated lands of the same class or grade shall be assessed and taxed the same as cultivated lands. Now, sir, I think these provisions are right, just, and proper. I think, Mr. Chairman, that it is as far as we can go. I say every owner of property should pay in proportion to its value towards the expenses of the State Government. It has not been done heretofore, and that is the reason why these large tracts of land are held by private parties or corporations. Now, sir, hereafter they will be obliged to pay for the luxury of holding these large tracts of land, and I tell you that when it comes to paying their just and reasonable proportion of the taxes of the State they will be glad to dispose of that property. I think we can do nothing more, unless it is to discourage it by the section I have sent up; that the holding of large tracts of land should be discouraged by all means not inconsistent with the rights of private property. That, I think, is as far as we can go. I say, Mr. Chairman, that you cannot, in justice, say that a man shall not buy acres of land if he wishes to. You cannot, in justice, say that a man shall not hold only a certain number of acres of land. That is his privilege under our form of government, and you may as well say that a man should not hold only a certain number of horses, or cows, or have a certain amount of other species of property. All civilized governments recognize ownership in land. We can make this declaration in the substitute without infringing upon the rights of private property. I hope that the substitute will be adopted in place of the section read.

SPEECH OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: I was on the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption. So far I have said nothing upon the subject, and I had not intended to do so. We have heard gentlemen on this floor advancing their views with regard to what they represent as reform in land matters, and stating, furthermore, that these were the doctrines that they advocated before they came to participate in the deliberations of this body. Now, if some few of them advocated a certain class of doctrines, as presented in the minority report of this committee, it has been only local. I am convinced that such principles have not been enunciated and advocated before the great mass of the people of this State. Nothing of the kind has been, unless it has been in certain small localities. For instance, a great deal was said with regard to the evils of large landholding, and that something must be done with regard to the matter.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

MR. BROWN. I do not wish to be troubled.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. Are you not aware that there is a fight between the settlers in Tulare and the railroad company now?

MR. BROWN. Every one who reads is acquainted with that. It has no bearing here, and I do not wish to be interrupted. These questions were all gone over in committee between the gentleman and myself. We find that different parties enunciated their doctrines—and I might as well come immediately to the subject—we find that the Workingmen's party set forth their views, and they never set forth these doctrines, that one man shall go upon another man's land, and if he can stay there for twelve months, and retain that land and cultivate it, that he may have that land. Such doctrine was not advocated. We find in section six of the Platform of the Workingmen's Party of the State of California: "Land grabbing must be stopped." Is this the manner of stopping it—allow one man to go upon another man's land and take it? "Land grabbing must be stopped!" [Laughter.] Section seven says that farming lands of equal capacity shall be equally taxed, regardless of improvements. We were all in favor of that. We wish that the large landholdings should be equally taxed. We advocated this doctrine among the people. We were in favor of men that have large tracts of land paying equally, in proportion to what it is worth, and we were convinced, furthermore, that this doctrine enforced would cause large landholders to be discouraged, and be ready at once to sell these lands. That is the kind of doctrine that was advocated before the people. That is the kind of doctrine advocated by the Workingmen before the people, and that kind of doctrine is what the people of the State expect to see carried out in the Constitution of this State by this Convention. But as to allowing a man to go upon another man's land and stay there, and the doctrine that no man shall hold only so much land, they do not expect it. Now, let us study upon the policy of this thing. Suppose some one comes here from the States and wishes to purchase lands? They do not wish to purchase lands where they can only get enough for themselves, when they have five or six children. Six hundred and forty acres might do the man for the present, but when the children grow up, the other lands around him would be taken up, and he would have to be separated from his children in his old age. It will work against the settlement of the State. But having only ten minutes, I have no time to dwell upon all these points as I could wish. There are portions of this State where no man can live on six hundred and forty acres. Men want stock, and they are bound to farm extensively, if they make a living at it. This would be a death blow against the agricultural interest of a large portion of this State. But for fear my time might end suddenly, I will read a few principles of positive law upon this subject. You will excuse me for taking up the Constitution of a different State; but this, Mr. Chairman, is from the Constitution of Kentucky:

"That absolute, arbitrary power over the lives, liberty, and property of freemen exists nowhere in a republic, not even in the largest majority."

This power does not exist even in the largest majority. This is a great principle, which should be recognized. Furthermore, in section three of the bill of rights of that State, it is said:

"The right of property is before and higher than any constitutional sanction."

It exists without law even. The constitutional sanction only confirms the same; and we must understand that this is one of the things that existed before laws were written. These rights are positive in themselves. Again, section four says:

"That all power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority, and instituted for their peace, safety, happiness, security, and the protection of their property."

There are certain things for which free governments are instituted: "peace, safety, happiness, security, and protection of their property." Not for the purpose of disorganizing and taking away property, but that when one man buys it legally, the laws are for the protection of the property. This should be understood. It should be thoroughly comprehended, because whenever we take the opposite view, that we have a right because a man is wealthy——

MR. BARBOUR. Who proposes to take any property away from him?

MR. BROWN. Any one that favors this minority report, and any one that does I am against him. I am opposed to taking a man's property away from him when he is living or after he is dead. I stand in direct opposition to all such as favor it, and I think the good sense of this Convention will be the same and will concur in that sentiment. Now I do not propose to say much on this subject, but we must recollect that the right to possess and enjoy property is one of the inalienable rights, and any clause, or class of clauses, which infringes upon any inalienable rights is contrary to the great American doctrine. A man has a right to enjoy and control his property, and whenever we commence to infringe upon private property we at once introduce confusion. What kind of anarchy would result? Do we not see that it is contrary to all law and contrary to all justice?

MR. TULLY. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Amend by adding at the end of section four: 'The Legislature is hereby directed and ordered to build a house upon said land, and furnish seed and provision for the first year, for a man and wife with a small family, and stock the same with thoroughbred cattle, horses, sheep, and jackasses; and, furthermore, that Judge Shafter be required to furnish at least twenty good milk cows, in order to keep said family from perishing.'"

THE CHAIRMAN. Out of order.

SPEECH OF MR. SMITH.

MR. SMITH, of Fourth District. Mr. Chairman: There seems to be one class clearly opposed to these propositions, and call them extremely radical and wild, and another class who think they are not. Now, the amendments that have been proposed here so far do not seem to me to be any more radical or wild than many that we have passed in this Convention in regard to the railroads and other corporations. I for one did not come here to fight the railroad, and then go home to my constituents and declare that I had done all my duty. There were three great propositions, it seems to me, that the people had in view in calling this Convention. One was the railroad, another the land, and the other the water question. In these three questions there were monopolies that the people had to struggle against, and wished to overcome. This Convention has exhausted one third of its time opposing the railroad company, and put in extraordinary propositions here never before thought of, and it seems to me that after all their discussions have not settled upon anything that is universally satisfactory.

MR. MCFARLAND. The gentleman is not discussing the question before the house. He is discussing the corporations and the railroad.

MR. SMITH. The main question, it seems to me, the most important question, is attempted to be regulated here. All over this State there are large tracts of land that are being farmed on a scale that is not profitable to the State. These large landed estates, if cut up as they should be and occupied by industrious communities, would be very profitable to the country, and to those who farmed them. The fact is, that these large landholdings would not be held if it was not for the money made in the speculation in land. The operations of capital in buying lands and holding them for speculation are the means by which money is made in large landholdings. Farming these large tracts is not profitable. It is universally conceded on this coast that large landholding is a great evil. Large farming is not as profitable as small farming. It is conceded that this is an evil, and it is attempted to overcome this evil. The gentleman from Alameda has said that we have met that question by taxation. I say that it is very questionable whether we have met that question. The rich men have always succeeded in shifting taxation, and after all this question is left to the discretion of Assessors, and always must be. And although I believe there will be some improvement under these amendments that have been adopted in regard to taxation, I do not believe that we have met this question fully. It seems to me that the way to remedy this evil is to go at it directly.

Now, in what respect do we violate private rights? You may as well say that we violate the rights of the railroad company, when we say that they shall not charge over a certain rate of freight and fares, as to say that we cannot prevent the ownership of more than six hundred and forty acres of land. It is not proposed in this amendment, so far as I understand it, to take any right from any individual. It only limits the holding by one man to six hundred and forty acres. It does not say that if he has more than six hundred and forty acres of land that it shall be taken away from him. It provides that a man shall not inherit more than six hundred and forty acres, and keep that in property such as land; that it shall be divided up and sold, where it exceeds six hundred and forty acres, and the proceeds divided among the heirs. There is no taking away of private property from individuals in that respect. It is simply limiting the ownership of that which is conceded to be wrong. Now, why is it a wrong, and why should the public have a right to limit the holding of land? Because there is a limited quantity of land in the State. It is not like a great many other things in which speculation may go on to an unlimited extent without a great public injury. There is a limited amount of land, and land is the basis of all industry. Without the land the country could not improve. Well, if they are going to have the whole country fenced in as a great sheep range, of course the industries of the country must languish. The man who produces that which we eat and wear and supplies the commerce of the State, is the one who builds up and improves the State. The great landed domain of the State should be thrown open to the people who wish to come here and engage in production. Is it not plain to every one that the capitalist can go and fence in thousands and thousands of acres of land and use it for a great range for sheep and cattle, and make enough to satisfy him, without any benefit to the State, while if that land was open to settlers who would cut it up into farms and improve them, it would be very profitable to the State?

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's ten minutes have expired.

SPEECH OF MR. HERRINGTON.

MR. HERRINGTON. Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Committee: I am exceedingly gratified at the prospect which the looming intelligence that presented the last amendment has opened before this Convention. I am equally glad that he found himself in his proper position—out of order. So far as his proposition itself is concerned it needs no argument, and was clearly foreign to the point at issue. The propositions that are here presented and advocated must commend themselves to every thinking man. Whether exactly in accordance with the opinions that each and all of us entertain in regard to the future prospects of this country, they must commend themselves to every thinking man as sound in principle. None of you will maintain for a single moment that you have a right to bring into this world posterity, and turn out upon the world hoodlums to find their way as best they can, without making any provision for their support. What one of you will contend that you ought to be allowed to have the right to disinherit any one of that posterity, be it ever so humble, or degraded. What system has been engrafted upon your law that authorizes you to disinherit any one of that posterity? Grant you the right and your authority is unlimited, and you may disinherit one while you add to the fortune of those who are less deserving. It is a caprice that is given to you, and guaranteed to you, which is neither a right, nor has it a foundation in justice. It had its origin in the divine right of kings, which is still maintained in Europe, and which you are to-day, by the system which you attempt to perpetuate, endeavoring to fasten upon the people of the State of California, by leaving, or engrafting upon the fundamental law, a principle which would be carried at least to that extent. Empires have been founded upon the right which you here seek to maintain, and it is the right by which this nation will be overwhelmed in the end. It is that very claim of right to perpetuate all the land in the hands of the few against which all rebel. It is not against your right in property, but it is against your right to perpetuate that power. You hold it in your hands to the detriment of the nation, and of this State. I say you have no right to claim it. Your better judgment revolts against it. I do not know whether the gentleman from Tulare was engaged in the two hundred and eleven thousand dollars' swindle of Montgomery or not.

MR. BROWN. I was not.

MR. HERRINGTON. I care not whether he was or not. It is that very power to maintain these large landed estates, upon which the people may not enter for the purpose of settlement——

MR. TOWNSEND. How do you know that was a swindle?

MR. HERRINGTON. It was in the Legislature of eighteen hundred and sixty-three that that land was voted away.

MR. TOWNSEND. Didn't he obtain his land under the law?

MR. HERRINGTON. He obtained it by a swindle in the Legislature, against which I voted with all my might. Men voted for it that owned six sections of land in it. Take Watson of Los Angeles. It was upon that basis that it was carried—men voting for it that owned it.

MR. WILSON, of Tehama. Prior to eighteen hundred and sixty-two, did you ever know land legislated away to a corporation, or any one else? Under the Republican rule that thing come in, and you are a Republican, I believe.

MR. HERRINGTON. I do not argue that we should take the land from these men because they got it dishonestly. I care not how you obtained the property, whether honestly or dishonestly. It makes no difference. If you have got the property keep the property until you die; but what right have you to say that a portion of your posterity shall be beggars and the remainder fed in luxury and pomp. It is against that principle which I inveigh, and against which I rebel, and against which your conscience tells you that you ought to rebel. That is one proposition that is embraced in the proposition presented by the minority report. I myself am not satisfied with all the terms of that report, and perhaps I am not willing to subscribe to the proposition, that the amount should be limited to six hundred and forty acres. But I am opposed, and this Convention should be opposed, to allowing the public lands to be sold in grants of more than three hundred acres. Your vast territory that is now covered with your timber is being swept away and placed into the hands of those who are your money aristocracy. You are building up the power of those who have neither the intention of building up the State or helping Republican institutions, but act merely for the purpose of mere selfish gain. They become independent of governmental control and power. They do not ask you for your assistance at all. They enforce their will by their power against law. Now, I say that this proposition ought to be engrafted upon this Constitution, so that when a man comes to die, if he is possessed of this large landed power, he should not be allowed to perpetuate his vast power in the hands of one individual, and particularly if he is the father of posterity, whether numerous or otherwise. That is the principle that we are driving at, and we ought to take some steps that will leave it unmistakable ——

THE CHAIRMAN. Time!

SPEECH OF MR. WILSON.

MR. WILSON, of Tehama. Mr. Chairman: Prior to the coming in of this Republican party, who ever heard tell of a subsidy being granted? It was by the coming in of that party that all the lands were given away, and all of these wrongs have been done. The old Mexican soldiers that fought for the country, and handed it down, without a subsidy or corporation on it, for every poor man a home. We all came here, and some went to mining, and some went to farming. Some at one thing and some at another, just as men ought to do. We settled, some of us, way in at the foot of these mountains, with our stock, and with our wives and children, and when we got some money we bought more land. The first thing we knew, here came in some people from the east that were educated in subsidy schools—and what do we find them? The first thing we knew, they got an Act through Congress granting away one half of the public domain of this State, that the Mexican soldiers had handed down free and untrammeled, without a corporation or subsidy on it. They legislated all this money—enough to stock that road, and more too. Now, before this, the countless thousands of teamsters were hauling our freight to the foot of the Rocky Mountains. They bought our hay, barley, horses, and mules, and they gave employment to every man, woman, and child. You could not go into the streets of Sacramento for the teams. And these men, by one sweep, took the land, took the money, and took the business of the country. Now, one extreme follows another. These are the thieving land swindlers, you know; and they went to robbing and stealing, and now their papers are doing all they can to divert attention from the true wrong to us old settlers that came here in 'forty-nine and fought back the Indians, and made the homes safe for them, and built up the resources of the country. Now, I say that these men—these Workingmen here—they were bringing up that rear guard. I didn't see one of these men on the battlefields of Mexico. I did not see one of these men when it took brave and honorable men 'way into the mountains, making roads and developing the resources of this country. And now they come forward and propose to tell us what we shall do with our property that we have accumulated through all this work, when these men would not take it as a gift. It is not us old settlers that done the wrong; it is these very men that are grumbling about this wrong that sided right in, and have been voting with these men, and lots of them for a glass of whisky. It was not us old settlers. I tell you we have done them no wrong. [Applause.]

SPEECH OF MR. BARTON.

MR. BARTON. Mr. Chairman: Inasmuch as I will be called upon to cast my vote upon this question, I desire to occupy a portion of my ten minutes in discussing this subject. I am very sorry indeed to see the condition of the sentiment expressed upon this floor. To-day, if you please, we find the farmers playing banker. To-morrow we find them with all their might fighting the railroad. Again, to-morrow we find the same class of men playing banker, and then, just by way of change, we see them now again playing land-grabbers. Now, sir, we have been accused of stating something here that was not in accordance with justice, in regard to our declarations of principles. First, "the public lands are the heritage of the people, and ought to be donated to actual settlers in small quantities." That is one of our declarations. The second declaration upon that subject is that "land-grabbing must be stopped." Now, Mr. Chairman and gentleman, I wish to say to you in all candor, that before the nation, and before the people of this State, the leaders of the two so-called political parties—Democratic and Republican—stand to-day indicted. They stand indicted before the world of civilization in their course. They have promised reform from one end of the nation to the other, and the result has been that they have broken faith with the people. Now, upon the subject of land matters, I am pledged to no agrarian measure. There was nothing ever expected of me when I was at home during the campaign last June to which I subscribed except this in this declaration that I have just read, that land grabbing must be stopped. Now, sir, the way to interpret that is this, that all the lands belonging to the State and nation, so far as our power is concerned, shall be held in trust for the people. And to go farther than that we have not been asked; and had I been asked to pledge myself on such a proposition I would not have done it. I am not here to disturb the rights of property. It is a dangerous precedent. I will not uphold it. I denounce it as unjust and unnatural. And I want to say to the gentlemen of this Convention, as my vote will be recorded, I want it distinctly understood that if the provisions that we have engrafted into the revenue law, or that we propose to send out as the fundamental law of this State, will not curtail this land-grabbing matter, then, sir, I do not know in what other manner or plan it can be curtailed. We have declared for equal taxation, and I believe that if equal taxation will not produce this result that any other plan would be revolutionary, and one which I would stand up to denounce. Believing this to be the highest duty of citizenship, I claim my right to put myself properly upon the record. I am a poor man. I was here almost thirty years ago. This vast country, from one end to the other, was at my disposal. I could have taken the richest parts of the San José—that was not then covered by grant. I could have taken the very flower and garden of the State. But no, I was simply here as a school boy—leaving my school and coming here to delve for gold in the mountains. Then I returned to my home and my people, there to make my home. Others remained, who saw in the soil a future fortune. They seized upon it- some of them honestly and honorably—and by virtue of their industry and frugality secured to themselves and their children homesteads which I will never raise my voice or cast my voté to disturb. But all lands that have been fraudulently secured, I want to know if there is no power in the people to ascertain and investigate, and go down to the bottom of these frauds and investige the title whereby they have secured these lands. I want the people to have the power to go into an investigation, and determine whether there is any frand; and if so, I want that property to revert to the State and to the people of the nation. The Republican party, with the connivance of the leaders of the Democratic party, have given away the better portion of the nation. They have belied their professions and their trust. I stand up as a Workingman and make that assertion. I make it boldly, and I have the documents and the documentary evidence to prove it. But that is nothing. The question is, has this title so crystallized that the nation and the State cannot get at the bottom of this fraud? If so, then it must remain so. But if there is any power in the people of the State or the nation whereby they can prove a legitimate acquisition of this property, I am in favor of its coming back to the people. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, without wishing to detain this committee, I desire to leave it to the wisdom and the justice of this Convention to determine whether we are false to our professions, or whether we have pledged ourselves to the people of this State upon any principle that is not within the bounds of decency and justice. I defy any man upon this floor to say that we, the Workingmen's party, have ever pledged ourselves, publicly or otherwise, to any measure that is not consistent with harmony and good government. Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, let me say, as my time is not run out, that this is a very important fight. This is a very important matter. It is one of seriousness; it is one that should agitate every honest man's mind in the land. The question is, shall we establish in this State a system of landlordism? Shall we perpetuate a system of landlordism? I now repeat, in conclusion, that it is the highest duty of American citizenship, by all means, so far as in our power, to prevent history repeating itself.

SPEECH OF MR. BIGGS.

MR. BIGGS. Mr. Chairman: In this discussion I propose to deal fairly and squarely with all parties, and I hope I won't be misunderstood. The Convention in Butte County, when they nominated delegates to this Convention, adopted a plank in their platform discouraging the acquisition of large landed estates, and I indorse every sentiment expressed in that platform. We know that these large landed estates are an evil; but the question is, Mr. Chairman, and gentlemen of the Convention, how are we to remedy that evil? Are we to do it by confiscation? I took a solemn oath that I would support the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of the State of California, and so help me God, to the best of my ability, I am going to support them. I believe in doing so. I will do what my constituents demand. I wear the collar of no corporation and no individual. I hold myself personally responsible to my constituents and to the people of the State for every declaration and statement I make in this Convention. Like Thomas H. Benton, I take my stand by the great maxim that it is never right to inquire into the expediency of doing wrong. Yes; I take my stand, as Benton took his stand, upon that question. I want to state in the beginning of this discussion—I am sorry that I cannot have more time than I will have, but I ask gentlemen to bear with me as patiently as they can. I cannot uphold this confiscation of property as proposed in the minority report offered by the gentleman from San Francisco. Section ten, article one, of the Constitution of the United States says:

"No State shall enter into any treaty, alliance, or confederation; grant letters of marque and reprisal; coin money; emit bills of credit; make anything but gold and silver coin a tender in payment of debts; pass any bill of attainder, or ex post facto law, or law impairing the obligations of contracts; or grant any title of nobility."

Now, sir, I appeal to every gentleman within the sound of my voice if you can pass this section and confiscate a man's property? If a man has over six hundred and forty acres that is not cultivated for twelve months, any man can go upon it and cultivate it for one year, and at the end of that time he can tender the owner of the land, who has a bona fide title to it, the assessed value of it and take it. Is not that confiscation in the full acceptance of the term? If there has been any corruption, as my friend from Humboldt suggests, I want to probe it to the bottom; but, sir, there is no proposition of that kind.

Now, I propose to read another section or two from the Constitution of the United States to bear me out in my assertions, and I am in hopes that gentlemen will bear with me. I am not much of a declaimer, but I will give you a few facts, and I ask you to ponder it well. Do they propose for this State to go further than the United States can go? Do they propose to override the Constitution of the United States?

"Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort. No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or a confession in open Court.

"The Congress shall have power to declare the punishment of treason, but no attainder of treason shall work corruption of blood, or forfeiture, except during the life of the person attainted."

Now, sir, the gentleman gets up here—when the father, like the gentleman from Tehama, has fought the Indians and accummulated two sections of land—and proposes that if he has but one child, when he is called to take his exit from this world, he shall have no power of willing or devising that land to his heir. Why, sir, you step beyond the Constitution of the Federal Government, even for the henious crime of treason. Here is the Constitution, read it for yourself. I propose to go a little farther on this point. Article V of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States, says:

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a Grand Jury, except in cases arising in the land or naval forces, or in the militia, when in actual service, in time of war or public danger; nor shall any person be subject for the same offense to be twice put in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself, nor be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use, without just compensation."

And yet, gentlemen get up on this floor and attempt to deprive men of property that they have accummulated. I see a gentleman here, that brings something to my mind. I will give you an illustration. Here is Mr. Reed, whom I have known perhaps for twenty years. Twenty or twenty-five years ago he settled on the lands he now lives on. Yes, he commenced by purchasing a grant, and he found, sir, that the grant was rejected. Then he was compelled to locate under the government. Then he found that he had to purchase under the Swamp Land Act. Then he found that it was a town site, and had to buy again, making four times that he had to purchase that land. He has been working there some twenty-six years, and accummulated about twenty-four thousand acres of land, and has spent one hundred thousand dollars in the improvement of that property; and yet this Convention proposes, by the amendment offered by the gentleman from San Francisco, to say that he shall not devise that to his children. The whole energy of his life has been devoted to promoting the agricultural interest of the State, and helping to build it up; and now, gentlemen say, that Mr. Reed shall not have the privilege of willing his land in quantities of over six hundred and forty acres. I consider it confiscation of the darkest dye and deepest hue. What does the Constitution of your own State say? You gentlemen that have come here and taken a solemn oath to support it, listen. It says:

"All men are by nature free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing, and protecting property, and pursuing and obtaining safety and happiness."

Gentlemen of the Convention, that is true as Holy Writ. I say, that a man who does not provide for his own household in the future is worse than an infidel, and my construction of the Scripture is, that an infidel is worse than the devil. [Laughter.] If I had a little more time I would like to read from the sayings of the distinguished statesman, Thomas H. Bention. If I had time to read what Benton says, I am satisfied that the gentlemnn would be willing to withdraw their amendments and put them in the waste basket, where they belong. If you have this right, why haven't you the right to divide the money and town lots as well as the land? Why don't you propose to divide up the property in San Francisco? I have accumulated and own eight hundred acres of land, and I work all that land. I propose to cultivate all that land. If these gentlemen who are so clamorous for land will come to my section of the country, I will go with them and show them where they can preëmpt one hundred and sixty acres. They can homestead eighty acres. But they do not want to work. The disposition is not to go to work in the harvest field. They can't stand one hundred and fifteen degrees in the harvest field. If they want land, I will go with them. We can go to Butte, Yuba, Lassen, Trinity, Shasta, or Modoc, and can preëmpt one hundred and sixty acres. But, gentlemen, you love the city too well. You love the cool breezes in the Summer time. Then, why send up this howl against the men who have labored for years and accumulated some means, and invested those means in real estate? Why do you propose to confiscate his property? I had proposed to answer the argument of the gentleman who said that the Democratic party and the Republican party had been so corrupt; that they had given away all the land; that they had promised certain things in their platform and failed. I have only time to ask how long since the gentleman was a member in full fellowship with one of these parties and bolstering up its platforms?

SPEECH OF MR. MCFARLAND.

MR. McFARLAND. Mr. Chairman: I would like to know whose ox is being gored now? [Laughter.] Now, sir, our Grangers have instituted a political organization against the balance of the world. Suppose all the balance of the world should unite against them, where would they be? Nowhere! the response is. Now, sir, I do not understand how a majority of this committee can, with any consistency whatever, refuse to adopt this report of the minority of the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption. Now, sir, we have been going, from the commencement, upon this theory, that if lawfully or otherwise a man has acquired more property than his neighbors, it ought to be taken away from him either by forcing him to use it in such a way as that he can make nothing out of it, or by confiscating a part of the profits or proceeds of it. Now, is not that so? When in eighteen hundred and forty-nine immigration set in from the East, those who came here found a sort of virgin world. They had this Pacific world before them. There was a variety of enterprises. Men could go to mining; they could go into construction of ditches; they could go to practicing law; they could go to acquiring land; they could go into merchandising; could erect buildings; build railroads, or do anything they chose. Each man had the whole world open before him. Now, the theory of this Convention is this: that nothing shall be counted to the credit of pioneer enterprise; that if I happen to come here, leaving the comforts of an Eastern home, and making up my mind to go into the business of mining, and find a mine before you come, which pays me well, when you come you say, give me a portion of your mine; or, you will say, let us confiscate a portion of the proceeds to the public, so that we will be getting a portion of it. Another man will say, I will put my money and energy into building ditches, and supplying miners and others with water. It is a hazardous enterprise, but it turns out to be a good thing. This Convention has said that he must not have the proceeds of this water. You will regulate that, and say how much he shall charge for it. If a man puts his energy and money into building gas works and lighting a city, with the consent of everybody, and it turns out that these gas works are paying pretty well, this Convention says take away the profits, or confiscate them. The same way with a railroad. Now, when we come to the land—the biggest monopoly in the world—a monopoly which takes the the very service of the earth, and does not give you a place to be born on, then they say this is outrageous confiscation; that it is a violation of the Constitution of the United States. Suppose it is—we can secede from the infernal government. A good many members here have been in favor of that before, and why not do it now? Why not say, secede from the General Government if it is in the way at all. I do not know that this report is against the Constitution of the United States, but if it is, that is a very small matter. These great monopolies are of more importance than any national consideration. Here are men owning twenty thousand, thirty thousand, and fifty thousand acres of land. What right have they to so much land? The gentleman from Tehama says he bought it. What difference does that make? What business has he to get that many acres of land? What does it matter how a man got it? Now, sir, upon his own statement he got that land because he came here in eighteen hundred and forty-six, or eighteen hundred and forty-seven. Now, he stands here with twenty thousand or thirty thousand acres of land, and there are hundreds of men roaming over the State without a place to lay their heads. Is that right? I would like to have some of this land myself. [Laughter.] I see that other men have been smarter than I have, and they have got more than I have; there are lots of men worse off than I am. I would like to know what business a man has to have more than six hundred and forty acres of land? If a man cannot live on that, he ought to die. [Laughter.] We don't want a man to have a right to buy this land. It don't matter about buying it. That don't make any difference. If they had a legal right, what difference does it make? We are strong, and we have a right to say what they shall do with it. We want to say that we have a right to go and take it. All this section says is, that we must pay the assessed value. I do not understand that any farmer has ever given in his land to any Assessor for less than it is worth. [Laughter.] Of course not. What harm is there in that? Suppose the gentleman from Tehama is cultivating perhaps a thousand acres, and is holding the rest for speculation? He wants to make money on it in the next ten years. Now, he has given in that land at its fair valuation, and all this report says is that I may go and settle upon the land and pay him a fair valuation, which is the valuation given to the Assessor. There is nothing wrong about that, as I see. I do not understand, at all, sir, how we can be consistent, when we are striking at these other monopolies, as we call them, when we are taking away their property, when we are regulating the use of it, unless we do it to this greatest of all monopolies—the monopoly of the earth itself, which God Almighty gave to us as a home for all men.

MR. TOWNSEND. I am willing to give the gentleman all the land he is willing to cultivate himself.

MR. McFARLAND. I am not one of the kind that wants to cultivate. If he will give me a portion of his land I would want to sell it, I am not in that business; but I am talking of the great number of men that want land and will cultivate it.

MR. WILSON, of Tehama. I am not at all surprised that after legislating one half of our domains away you want our land.

MR. McFARLAND. I am willing to confiscate all of them; take it all, sir. I think that this Convention cannot be consistent without having these amendments. You have done it with every other kind of property, and why not with land? To speak seriously there is more reason for it. There is undoubtedly a great deal of reason in saying that a man should not acquire a large tract of land and turn it into a deer park, when there are plenty of other men in the State that want land.

THE CHAIRMAN. Time.

SPEECH OF MR. MURPHY.

MR. MURPHY. Mr. Chairman: I deem it a duty which I owe to myself to make a few remarks upon this all-important question; not that I think that I can throw any new light upon the subject, but because, as a member of the Legislature of eighteen hundred and seventy-three-four, of which the distinguished gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Estee, was the Speaker, I was appointed as Chairman of the Committee on Land Monopoly, and, as such Chairman, took considerable testimony upon that subject, and made a somewhat lengthy report upon that subject, which can be found in the appendix to the Journal of the twentieth session of the Legislature. My views have undergone considerable change since that time. Notwithstanding that change I still believe that land monopoly in the State of California is a great and blighting curse, and that the people of this State who have felt it so severely have been calling upon us for redress. Land is as much the support of animal and vegetable matter as water and air, and one of the primal necessities of human existence. The acquisition of large land estates in foreign countries, and particularly in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, has been the cause of the great impoverishment of the people and the general discontent that everywhere prevails. Not so across the channel in the sunny land of France, where this system of land monopoly has been broken up. Content and prosperity is evident on every hand. But this state of affairs is not confined to European countries alone. Here in our own golden State, scarcely thirty years in existence, young as is our civilization, we have here a landed aristocracy—men who lord it over as many acres as do the British landlords. California contains one hundred and fifty-nine thousand square miles. We have upon her surface, according to the report of the State Board of Equalization in the year eighteen hundred and seventy-three, one hundred and twenty-two landholders each of whom own twenty thousand acres and upwards; sixty-seven of whom own an average of seventy-three thousand acres, or one hundred and fourteen square miles each; one hundred and fifty-eight who own ten thousand acres each, and so on in proportion. The average holding is four times the amount of the British landholders. This being taken as a fact, the question for us to determine is: What can we do about it? Would it be wise, would it be politic, would it be in accordance with the principles of justice, to disturb the possession of these men who have acquired their lands honestly, and paid the General Government or the State of California? As my friend, Mr. Wilson, has stated, men come here in the early days and acquired property under all sorts of difficulties. Would it be just to take their lands from them, or in any way to disturb them in their possession? I think not. I think it would come in conflict with one of the cardinal principles of the American Government, the right to acquire and possess property. It is true that a great portion of the public soil of this State has been acquired by fraud and by treachery of the deepest dye. That is not for us to determine. It is a question for the Courts. This Convention, in my opinion, sits twenty years too late to remedy this evil, this monopoly of the fairest portion of God's footstool, the soil of California, from being monopolized by the few to the detriment of the many. The question only remains: What shall we do with the future? We cannot disturb these men in their possessions, and my opinion is that by a system of taxation, graded or otherwise, this evil can be reached, and can be reached in no other manner. I have read the conclusions in the report of the minority of the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption, and while I agree with their general principles, I cannot and will not indorse the conclusions at which they arrive, because, as I said before, I consider them in conflict with the spirit of our laws and the provisions of our Constitution.

While I am on the floor at the present time I wish to make allusion to a remark that was made yesterday, in regard to a certain bill which has been introduced in Congress at the present session by the Honorable J. K. Luttrell, representing the Third Congressional District, and which has been favorably reported, whereby scrip that was issued some time ago to Oregonians for wagon-road purposes, is sought to be placed upon the Klamath Indian Reservation. If that is the fact, I say it is an outrage upon the settlers, and that in the name of my constituents I protest against it. Two years ago last Winter I introduced and passed a memorial through both houses of the Legislature, which was forwarded by the Governor to Congress, requesting them to throw open this old abandoned reservation to the settlers that were upon it, and who have been upon it since eighteen hundred and fifty. We petitioned them last Winter to do this, and this Committee on Lands in Washington, instead of obeying that, has reported a bill which tears this land from their grasp and sends them forth upon the cold charity of the world. I say it is an outrage and it is an infamy, and I desire to call the attention of the press of this State to that fact. If it is a job of land speculators I think it is time that the people were rising to the fact. [Applause.]

REMARKS OF MR. SHAFTER.

MR. SHAFTER. Mr. Chairman: I have a single word to say as regards the overcoming of this evil by taxation. To take this property open and above board is confiscation; to take it by taxation is like sneaking in at the back-door and stealing your hat and coat while you are at dinner. That is the only difference. When the gentlemen who bring forth this proposition were voting a million of dollars of the public money to the Central Pacific Railroad Company, I was voting against it, and was talking against it. They see their error now. This fourth section was passed at the Irish American Hall in San Francisco in substance. I took occasion, in the address that I delivered before the State Agricultural Society last Fall, to expose its fallacies, and I call attention to that address for my views upon that subject. No man ever heard me utter a declaration in favor of the aggregation of large tracts of land in the hands of one man. It is opposed to public policy; it is against the public good. There is no doubt about it. A man must be insane who will hold any different proposition. But this state of things exists at the present time, and the only question is as to the future, and I can conceive no remedy, except by preventing it in the future. Now, it seems to me that the gentlemen who drew up this section have got something to learn about the use of language. "No person shall forever hereafter be permitted to acquire," etc. What is the use of the word "forever," I can not see, unless it is to prohibit him from owning more than six hundred and forty acres when he gets into the other world. It is clear that it is a violation of the principle that regulates human industry. The right to labor and acquire property is all that makes man worth anything at all in this world. How shall he invest it? If there is any great public reason why he should not invest it in land, declare it, and prohibit it. But it is a violation of individual right. A man sometimes wants more than six hundred and forty acres, but you say he shall not buy it at all. It may be absolutely necessary for a man who has six hundred and forty acres to buy one hundred acres more, in order to make what he has valuable to him; but you say, arbitrarily, that he shall not acquire it. I have got more than six hundred and forty acres, and I would like to know how my children are to divide it if I should die without a will. You have not provided for that. I have it under a United States Patent. It says that I shall have and hold it, my heirs and assigns, forever. I have got heirs, and the law says who they are. The Constitution of the United States protects that contract. The contract says that my heirs shall have and hold it, and your Constitution says they shall not have and hold it. Which is going to prove the better, the United States Government or these damnable secession notions that have been running through this Convention up to this moment? I hope you will have a chance to try it. I think perhaps the United States patent will prevail in spite of this Constitution. The school master is abroad. This section is bunglingly drawn, and some portions of it I can see no sense in at all.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. As you agree in the main with the principle that land monopoly is wrong and you object to the sections as drawn up, why not on your part introduce an amendment that will carry out that purpose of prohibiting this monopoly of large estates?

MR. SHAFTER. Because I think this section is directed to the present holding of land over which this Convention has no power. As to what may be done in the future, I will join with the most ultra to prevent the accumulation of the public domain, which is now public in the hands of anybody.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. There is no person in this Convention that respects the rights of gentlemen who have got their property honestly, more than I do.

MR. SHAFTER. Such was the assertion of Mr. O'Sullivan to me and I have no doubt it is true; but this section is different. It provides that all lands over and above six hundred and forty acres of which a persons dies lawfully possessed, shall be sold to the highest bidder for cash.

SPEECH OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman: If I understand the drift of the remarks of the gentleman from Sacramento, he is pretty much in the condition of the Irishman who was declaiming in favor of a division of property, and some one said to him, "Why, Dennis, if you divide now it will soon get back into the same hands, and what will you do?" Says he, "Be jabbers, I will divide again!" That seems to be the moral of his discourse. But I think the trouble with the gentleman is, when he speaks of the Central Pacific, that the ox of the Central Pacific has been gored, and now he wishes to gore every other monopoly. That seems to be his trouble.

MR. McFARLAND. I did not mention the Central Pacific Railroad one time, but that seems to be in the gentleman's mind all the time.

MR. HOWARD. I appeal to the Convention that he asserted it by saying, that in reference to the corporations and railroads, we had done precisely the same thing that the minority report includes. That was his position. Now, sir, I am willing to go as far as any one in the correction of the abuses of land monopoly. I am willing to go as far as we have power, and as far as justice will admit. But the trouble is we cannot go far. If we look at the history of this country we shall see that the former population were not agricultural; they were a population of herders, and therefore, lands were granted in large tracts; and at that time, that was the policy of the past Government. Now, when the United States Government acquired the territory, they guaranteed, under the treaty, these titles; and the treaty expressly declares that the present owners shall have the right to hold or to sell them, as they see proper; and therefore it is that these titles are guaranteed. Again, sir, they are not only guaranteed by the treaty, but they are guaranteed by the laws, as the Supreme Court held, in a very luminous opinion by Chief Justice Marshal, in the case of Porchman to the Florida treaty, that without treaty, under the law of nations, they would be protected, and the acquiring government could not confiscate them. Then it is a well established principle of constitutional law in this country, that a grant is a contract, and it is not in the power of the Legislature of a State to impair the obligation of a contract. That was held as far back as eighteen hundred and eight, in the case of Fletcher vs. Peck, and it has been reaffirmed since by repeated decisions. We can not touch any of these grants; we cannot divide them out; we cannot say that the holders shall not sell them; we cannot say that they shall retain them. They have the absolute property in them which they have the right to dispose of as they see fit. Take, for instance, a United States grant—suppose a man has a patent from the United States Government. The Supreme Court of the United States says that is a contract that cannot be impaired; and wherever State legislation has attempted to impair it, the Supreme Court of the United States has pronounced the Act void. Now, sir, it is perfectly true that this thing has gone beyond us. The objection to this minority report of the committee is, that it is an attempt to lock the door after the steed has been stolen. You cannot reach it in this way. If there have been frauds in the confirmation of the grants, or frauds in locating them, it can be reached by a bill of equity in the Federal Courts, upon an order and direction of the Attorney General of the United States. That is the place to reach it, unless you choose to ask for a special tribunal by Congress. Now then, sir, there is no doubt of the vast evil of the engrossment of land by the few, and if I had more than ten minutes, I would read from a late English writer, in which he demonstrates that the poverty and misery of the people of England have kept pace with the enormous engrossment of land by a few individuals in that country.

Burke says, "A wise man observes some proportion between his means and his end." We must, therefore, look at what we can do. You cannot say that a man who owns a thousand acres of land, under a United States patent, shall divide it out with his neighbors; you cannot say that a man shall not acquire land so granted, because the grant carries with it the obligation of a contract, that the owner may sell, and that the purchaser may buy and hold. Therefore it is that you cannot reach this great evil in the way indicated by this report. Here is a section that provides that no patent shall be issued for a State grant for more than one hundred and sixty acres. Now, there are a great many land certificates issued for three hundred and twenty acres, and it carries with it a contract on a patent, and it is a contract that it is not in the power of a State Convention or a State Legislature to impair or alter, and any attempt to do so would be declared void by the United States Supreme Court, where that class of cases would be ultimately arbitrated, or else they would have to overturn all their former decisions. I am inclined to think, sir, that the evils of land monopoly in this State, are very much exaggerated. It is true, that by unwise legislation, Congress has permitted the issue of scrip which has been located, if not in a fraudulent, at least in a very injurious and improper manner. But that is the fault mainly of Federal legislation, and the manner in which that legislation has been carried out. Now, sir, I hold in my hand a statement of the farms in this State and elsewhere, which I find collected from the Federal documents, in a paper published at Dixon. For the purpose of showing the precise extent of land monopoly, and the tendency here and elsewhere, I ask the Secretary to read it.

THE SECRETARY read:

"The average size of farms in the United States in eighteen hundred and fifty was two hundred and three acres; in eighteen hundred and sixty, one hundred and ninety-nine; in eighteen hundred and seventy, one hundred and fifty-three. Between eighteen hundred and sixty and eighteen hundred and seventy there were but three States in which the average size of farms was not diminished, viz.: California, Massachusetts, and Wisconsin. In the latter the average remained the same—one hundred and fourteen acres; in Massachusetts, it increased from ninety-four acres to one hundred and three; and in California, from four hundred and sixty-six to four hundred and eighty-two. The most rapid decrease has been in the former slave States, where up to eighteen hundred and sixty the farms were generally growing in size. The following table shows the average of farms in different States:

	1850.	1860.	1870.
Alabama	289	346	222
Louisiana	372	536	247
Missouri	179	215	146
Connecticut	106	99	93
Illinois	158	146	128
Nevada		617	315
Oregon	372	355	315
New York	112	106	103

"The following shows the number of farms of different sizes in California in eighteen hundred and sixty and eighteen hundred and seventy, respectively:

	1860.	1870.
Three acres and under ten	829	2,187
Ten acres and under twenty	1,102	1,086
Twenty acres and under fifty	2,344	3,064
Fifty acres and under one hundred	2,428	3,228
One hundred acres and under five hundred	6,541	12,248
Five hundred acres and under one thousand	538	1,202
One thousand acres and over	262	713

"The proportion of unimproved land in California farms—forty-five and six tenths per cent.—is not so large as might be supposed. In other States and Territories it is: New York, twenty-nine per cent.; Illinois, forty-four; Massachusetts, thirty-six; Utah, twenty. The latter is the lowest of any."

MR. HOWARD. I wish to make a single observation with regard to another feature of the report, as I have not time to discuss it all. It restricts the amount of land that may be acquired by will or inheritance. It must be perfectly obvious that if you adopt that you inaugurate the system that they have in England, where estates are tied up by deeds of trust and long leases, and you make a monopoly ten times worse than it is now. Better to leave this free as the laws of the country have left it. I agree with Mr. Murphy, of Del Norte, that the only way to reach this evil is by taxation; and I think we have gone far in that direction. We have provided that land shall be assessed without reference to improvements, and that all lands of equal value shall be equally assessed; that the large owners shall fare the same as the small, and that the lands shall be assessed in tracts of six hundred and forty acres. If we have honest Assessors, the lands will be so assessed that every large proprietor will elect to sell, because it is true that no man can afford to own land for grazing and pay more than two dollars and fifty cents per acre. Therefore, unless the land of the large owner is put into active production he cannot afford to own it. He will of necessity sell the land and put the money into some other business. Aside from a few instances of engrossing large tracts, the tendency is to the decrease of farms. Congress has limited the amount of land which one individual can acquire to three hundred and twenty acres, and that only for the purpose of settlement and occupation. The system of taxation which we have adopted will soon extinguish land monopoly in this State.

MR. HUESTIS. Mr. Chairman: I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Van Voorhies, Wilson of Tehama, Moreland, and Hitchcock.

The main question was ordered.

THE CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. Van Dyke.

The amendment was adopted, on a division, by a vote of 59 ayes to 46 noes.

MR. WYATT. I move to amend section six, or the last section of the report of the minority of the committee, so that it shall read——

THE CHAIRMAN. There is no such section before the committee.

MR. WYATT. I move that the committee proceed to the consideration of section six.

THE CHAIRMAN. The section is not before the committee. The gentleman can offer his section. The Secretary will read the section which the gentleman from Monterey moves.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No more than three hundred and twenty acres of land shall hereafter be granted or patented by this State to any one person, and no grant or patent of lands by this State shall be made otherwise than upon a basis of actual settlement and occupation for a term of at least three years prior to the issue of the patent. No land scrip or land location certificates shall ever be issued in this State."

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I think the proposition contained in section six is the true principle of the disposition of the public lands of the State of California, and of the United States; and if we cannot remedy what has gone before us, it is competent now for us to remedy that which is to come hereafter; and in pursuance of that idea and of that policy, and believing that policy to be the right policy, I move this amendment to section six: that the policy of this State hereafter shall be that its public lands be granted only to actual settlers in small quantities, and that no scrip be issued by which lands can be taken away from actual settlers, as they have heretofore, or the scrip purchased and held in the hands of speculators, and actual settlers prevented from obtaining homes.

SPEECH OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: The amendment presented by the gentleman from Monterey, in my judment is the only amendment, or a near approach to the only practical solution of this much discussed question of land monopoly, and so far as it goes is aiming in the right direction. I have for some years been somewhat familiar with the public land system of this State, and although in my practice as a lawyer I have been almost universally connected with the settlers, I trust I have not taken, by reason of this association, any prejudice with reference to the other class, who generally are in litigation with them in connection with the public lands. But, sir, I have become perfectly aware of the fact, with reference to the matter in which title has been obtained to large bodies of the public domain, that although in many cases obtained honestly, in many other cases it has been obtained in such manner, that no other name but public robbery, or legalized robbery, could be given to it. Under such circumstances that there is a great feeling, is not at all surprising. While I deprecate the manner in which this agitation has been carried on, I hope that it may continue until some intelligent solution may be found of the difficulty. I am perfectly well aware that the gentleman from Sacramento did not mention the Central Pacific Railroad Company once, although his argument had reference to great monopolies. So far as the great corporations in this State are concerned, by the recent order of the Secretary of the Interior it seems that they are about to come to a defeat on that land monopoly at least, because in the Act making the grant there was a provision that all lands not disposed of within three years should be subject to preëmption at one dollar and seventy-five cents an acre; so that throughout these land districts these lands are being preëmpted. The railroad company claim, however, that these lands have been disposed of within the three years, because they have given certain trust deeds with reference to them. If Secretary Schurz' order in the matter should be sustained there will be no further reason to complain, so far as the great land monopoly connected with the Central Pacific Railroad Company is concerned, because many millions of acres of that great grant is now under his order, to be subject to preëmption. But, sir, I am aware also of this fact, it may not be politic for me to mention it, but I do mention it, because I became officially aware of it—that it was not only the grant made by Congress which they received, but by the administration of the law, by a strange and mysterious line of decisions in the Interior Department, in the early days—they not only received what was granted, but in many cases, in plain disregard to the Act of Congress, which was not even referred to by the Secretary of the Interior, the lands of the preëmption claimants, where they had settled upon them before the grant, were taken from them on the pretense that they had not filed their claims in time in the Land Office, when the Act of Congress provided that they did not need to file at all; and that all such lands, where the preëmption claimants failed to mature them, instead of reverting to the Government, as any lawyer would suppose, reverted to the railroad company. But these lands have been granted. It has been referred to by the gentleman from Los Angeles, as conclusive. We cannot go behind it. It would be to impair the obligation of contract, and the Constitution of the United States forbids that power to any State. The titles could not be reached except through the Courts. There is but one remedy for us as to the past, but as to the future, we may, at least, so far as the State is concerned, do that which the General Government has done since eighteen hundred and forty, as to all lands not subject to private entry; and that is the idea aimed at in the amendment pending. With all that has been said in this State, during the sessions of which the gentleman from Del Norte was a member, it is somewhat surprising that a system of land monopoly in California has been going on worse than that under the laws of the United States. Why did not some of our legislators introduce a section like this before? Why should school lands be monopolized as they have been by persons who are not settlers upon them, and in unlimited quantities. By a system under which persons were employed to take up three hundred and twenty acres, and then signed away their rights, individuals became the owners of hundreds, and thousands of the school sections of this State, and the indemnity lands taken in lieu of these sections. Now, sir, this amendment strikes right at the root of the difficulty. There is some objection to it, it is true; but it seems there are in the State of California yet unreserved, with all the talk of scarcity of land, twelve hundred millions of acres of land—no, I will have it right in quantity. In the United States there are nineteen hundred millions, of which twelve hundred millions are unsurveyed. In California one hundred and twenty millions, of which eighty millions are unsurveyed. Of this eighty millions, perhaps it may be said, that forty millions are worthless, but there may be forty millions yet of unsurveyed lands in the State of California. The State has the sixteenth and thirty-sixth sections—will have when surveyed—and in all cases when these sections are taken up by preëmption settlers before the survey the State gets indemnity. Now, by a provision like this, the State hereafter will limit the amount to be taken up, or held by one person. As the law now stands there is no limit. My impression is that the amendment is not exactly correct.

THE CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's ten minutes have expired.

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I send up an amendment, to be added to the section.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Add to the section: 'provided, that this section shall not compel a residence upon salt marsh, tide, or swamp and overflowed land.'"

MR. TINNIN. Mr. Chairman: I presume the author of that amendment is not desirous of destroying human life. His amendment requires a residence upon the line. Now, it is evident that there belongs to the State salt marsh, tide, and salt lands upon which it is impossible for human beings to reside: or, in other words, if they do reside there they will have to build boats and be in constant danger of losing their life. If the section is to be adopted I desire this proviso in it.

SPEECH OF MR. DOWLING.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. Chairman: The gentleman from Trinity seems to be very solicitous about the swamp lands of the State. If he goes into the Surveyor-General's office and investigates the contents of the documents there he will find out that a great deal of our swamp land is situated on the mountains and the high lands. But, Mr. Chairman, the land question is one that agitates all honest men in the State of California. We have a system of land monopoly in California that, sir, under a civilized form of government would not be tolerated. If we commence at the northern boundary of the State, and go into the valleys of Shasta and into the valleys of Siskiyou, we will find that landowners there own grants as large and larger than European proprietors. I heard a gentleman say that he went up in that country in early days and preëmpted tracts that were bounded on one side by Goose Lake, on the other by a belt of mountains, and on another by some parallel of latitude that I cannot remember.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if this system of land monopoly is not stopped in California, if we do not cure the evil now, it will assume proportions at no very distant day, that probably would, and will not only confiscate other property, but bankrupt the State. There are two sides to this question of land monopoly, and we should carefully investigate it. California is Asiatic in climate, it is Asiatic in soil, and it is too much Asiatic in the character of its people. But, sir, we cannot very well subject this system of land monopoly, or eradicate it, in a day. This thing will take years, because there are portions of the State where a man cannot hardly make a good living for his family, unless he has got a large tract of land. Take, for instance, lands in the valley of the San Joaquin, and down on the plains of Hollister and the Salinas, and farmers do not raise more than enough to resow the crop the next spring. But, sir, we have to cure this evil, no matter what it costs; and by coolly and calmly deliberating on the subject now, we can arrive at a conclusion that will solve this problem. If this jobbery, that has been practiced, is permitted to continue for twenty years more, why it will be impossible for a poor man to get any land at all here. Now, if we take a bird's-eye view of California in the last twenty-five years—let us look at the valley of the Sacramento. Go on the plains below here, and we will see that the land that is owned by a few individuals in this district, if properly utilized, would support three times the population of the State of California. One county alone in the State, would support the whole population of the State to-day. While on the contrary, instead of prosperity and peace here, the farmers are almost bankrupt. The land has been impoverished by one continual course of crop for twenty-five years, and it is as much for the benefit of the farmer to try to remove the cancer, as it is to the man who cannot acquire property under any consideration. Now, I have heard it said here, on several occasions, that men are lazy, that men are drunkards, that men will not work if they get it. Mr. Chairman, there are two sides to the proposition. We have to-day, in California, only two periods of the year, and short ones at that, in which men can obtain employment. Three fourths of the year they are idle, and of course when a man is idle he will get discontented. He will conspire, and will try to overthrow the best government in the world, because he cannot help it. He cannot well do anything when he is hungry. Now, if we investigate this case thoroughly, and compare California with other countries similary situated on the map of the globe, we will find that Spain is situated exactly on the same parallel of latitude that California is. That France is similarly situated; so is Italy; so is British India; and so is China.

Now, Mr. President, the greatness of this coast depends on a good system of irrigation. If we had a State system of irrigation the same as France, Spain, Lombardy, and all over Italy, we would be placed on a different plane. Then, sir, you could control land monopoly. Then, sir, you can build your irrigating canals, and for the cost of construction these barren plains could be converted into a pleasure garden, and give a death blow upon land monopoly. But we have not arrived at the time in the history of our country when the people are willing to undertake such a gigantic enterprise. But we have arrived at the period in the history of our country when we can inaugurate a system of graduated taxation. It is the only way. It is the only course left open for us to pursue if we want to break up land monopoly and carry joy to every honest heart.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you talk about property, and property in land, and property in water. What is property? Property is that which the law recognizes. If the law says it is property so it is.

MR. WILSON. Would you discriminate between a man who has a good deal of property and the man who has a little?

MR. DOWLING. I would, sir. I would raise it on a graduated plan.

MR. WILSON. That is virtually confiscation.

MR. DOWLING. I would not discriminate between one of these old pioneers; between those men who have driven their oxen across the plains and settled in California twenty-five years ago, if they were satisfied to come down to what the law distinctly says belongs to them.

THE CHAIRMAN. Time!

MR. LARUE. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report to the Convention the minority report of the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption, and recommend its indefinite postponement.

MR. WEST. I hope before the committee rises the vote will be taken.

THE CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Sacramento, Mr. Larue.

The motion was lost.

SPEECH OF MR. JONES.

MR. JONES. Mr. Chairman: I wish to make a few remarks on this report of the minority of the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption, and it ought not to be stated, but taken for granted without explanation, that gentlemen who rise here to express their views in any way, already coincide with the reasonable arguments which have been produced here in regard to the evils of land monopoly. We should not be required to spend a few minutes, or to spend a portion of a few minutes, in first convincing this Convention that we are not, ourselves, robbers and thieves. Assuming, then, that that will be understood, I am anxious to say this, that it appears to me very manifest that many gentlemen upon this floor are speaking, not from actual observation or experience of the agricultural, grazing, and grain raising facilities of this State as compared with other States of the Union. They are speaking from some theoretical knowledge, or from their experience of the fertility and productiveness of the cultivated lands of the State of Ohio, the State of New York, of Illinois, or Indiana; that there is some analogy between the cases. I undertake to say there is none. I say it from observation and experience. I am not a farmer, but I was a farmer's boy, and have worked on a farm long enough to retain a memory of the circumstances and facts, and be able to say as between the condition of things from which some gentlemen have addressed the Convention, and the condition of things in this State, there is no analogy and no comparison whatever. Now, sir, I will admit that a hundred acres, or one hundred and sixty acres, or eighty acres, make a good farm in Indiana, if it is good land, in Illinois, in New York—anywhere almost where they have good soil. That is farming land; that is agricultural land. I have always understood that both in France and Italy, and in every one of the countries that the gentleman spoke of, there is land upon which you can raise anything adapted to the latitude and altitude of the place. The consequence is, upon eighty acres, or even forty acres, of such land, a family with an industrious man at its head settles down and they can grow as much grass as they please upon a certain portion of the soil; they can grow wheat, oats, or rye upon another portion: they can grow potatoes upon another portion; and all the vegetables, and all the fruits that the latitude is adapted to, without a drop of irrigation, except that which falls from the heavens and which very seldom fails them.

Compare that with this State. Here we have to deal with another state of things. Here we occupy a State in which a great area of country will not grow anything but wheat. It will not grow Indian corn. You cannot raise a turnip for hundreds and hundreds of miles in these great valleys here unless you irrigate it, and there is nothing to irrigate it with, unless you pump water up. Periodical droughts occur so often, that the saying is getting to be, that you may get a good crop one year, a half crop the next year, and no crop at all for two years succeeding. A more industrious and braver set of men never inhabited the country, for it takes as much courage to undertake to feed a family upon these plains as it does to face a cannon's mouth. Then, you can grow nothing but small grain upon it, and all the agricultural experience of the world shows that land so tilled will produce even small grains but for a limited number of years. The idea of limiting the tenure of land where a man has got to raise his family and educate his children upon a few acres of such land as that is preposterous. You can interview the farmers of that country, from Sacramento clear down to Los Angeles, and they will tell you the same story. It is not their fault that they are embarrassed. It is not their fault that mortgages upon the land are the rule, and not the exception. They have done and are doing all that can be done, and if they were limited to these little insufficient tracts of land contemplated here, it would amount to confiscation of what they have got, and would turn them off to some other country. Gentlemen upon this floor know what I say by experience. You can find many tracts of two thousand acres that will not support a family. The land will not generally average three inches, and a crop is the exception. It is grazing land, and can only be used a limited portion of the year. Grazing land with not support a man in such tracts as are mentioned here.

Another objection to the amendment and to the amendment to the amendment: It is proposed to allow the State lands to be occupied in tracts of three hundred and twenty acres three years before purchase. The lands which the State has left, besides swamp lands, will prove to be timber lands not fit for agricultural purposes, and school lands not yet taken. These lands may be largely in the mountains, and they are insusceptible of occupation for any honest purpose. A man cannot live on them. The best of them have already been taken. If any man takes three hundred and twenty acres of that land, it will be because in the three years he can strip the land of its timber and turn it back to the State. They are lying idle upon the hands of the State now, right in our villages. As long as they are not bought the cattle of everybody will have the grazing of them, without pay. No man can buy them, and buy subject to a residence upon them. An attempt has been made in the Legislature to limit the purchase of these school lands to forty acres. The result has been to rob the State of its timber, because the terms of payment were easy and a settlement was not required. Now, you propose to render the lands of the State valueless. Men will move right on them, and they will strip the valuable timber off in three years. There is no penalty against it. You authorize them to take possession and avail themselves of what they can, and all they can avail themselves of is the timber, which is the substantial value of the whole premises. It is idle to tell us what has been done in other countries by way of irrigation. It was not done in a day. It was not done by a Convention. That irrigation which they have, and which is the salvation and the making of any country, was the production of thousands of years. So here something may be done in the far future. It will have to come, as the result of general wealth, and general necessity. It will not come within the time which has elapsed since this Government was first organized, up to this time. Another generation will not see the complete and sufficient application of all the waste waters of this State to the dry lands.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. Mr. Chairman: I move that the committee rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Carried.

IN CONVENTION.

THE PRESIDENT. Gentlemen: The Committee of the Whole have instructed me to report that they have had under consideration certain sections relative to lands and homestead exemptions, have made progress, and ask leave to sit again.

The Convention took the usual recess until two o'clock P. M.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The Convention reassembled at two o'clock P. M., President pro tem. Belcher in the chair.

Roll called, and quorum present.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. Mr. President: I wish to send up a resolution.

THE SECRETARY read:

Resolved, That the Convention do now proceed to elect an Assistant Secretary, to fill the vacancy caused by the election of Ed. F. Smith as Secretary of this Convention.

MR. HOWARD. Mr. President: We need an Assistant Secretary. We will be out of Committee of the Whole next Monday, and there is considerable transcribing ready to be done.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The question is on the adoption of the resolution.

Adopted.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. Nominations for Assistant Secretary are in order.

MR. WATERS. Mr. President: I place in nomination for the position of Assistant Secretary of this Convention the name of J. M. Wright, of San Bernardino. Mr. Wright is a young gentleman whom I can recommend as fully qualified to perform the duties. He is a good reader, and is well acquainted with the run of business before the Convention. I can state, that if he is elected, he is fully qualified to perform the duties of the position.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I second the nomination.

MR. REED. Mr. President: I rise to place in nomination Charles N. Post, a young man whom I have known for many years; one who has occupied clerical positions for many years, and who is thoroughly competent to fill this position. I am satisfied that if the Convention shall decide to select him, he will serve with a great deal of ability, and fill the position with credit to himself and to us.

MR. McCALLUM. I second the nomination of Mr. Post, and from my personal knowledge of the young man, I know he is fully competent to perform the duties of the office.

MR. LARKIN. Mr. President: I indorse the nomination of Mr. Charles N. Post. He is a young man of ability. He has not sought the position; his friends have asked for it for him.

MR. WHITE. I second the nomination of Mr. Wright; and I think it is but fair that the southern part of the State should have something.

THE PRESIDENT pro tem. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, with the following result:

FOR WRIGHT.

Mr. Wright, having received a majority of all the votes, was declared duly elected Assistant Secretary.

LAND LIMITATION.

MR. BEERSTECHER. Mr. President: I move that the Convention now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, the President pro tem. in the chair, to further consider the minority report of the Committee on Land and Homestead Exemption.

Carried.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

THE CHAIRMAN. Section four and amendments are before the committee.

REMARKS OF MR. MILLER.

MR. MILLER. Mr. Chairman: This morning, when the gentleman from Marin was making his antimonopoly speech, a question was asked him, which I did not hear at the time; the gentleman referred the questioner to me to answer. Not hearing it, I was not able to say what it was. I called upon the gentleman from Monterey, and found that he had asked the gentleman from Marin whether, in his opinion, it was right for the Government to purchase a territory like Alaska, and then lease it out to a company? If the gentleman from Monterey intended, by that question, to cause it to be understood that the Government had purchased that territory, and leased it to a company, I suppose he meant the company I have the honor to be connected with; and I wish to say to him, and to the members of this Convention, that it seems to be the impression upon this subject—which is not true in point of fact—that the Government has purchased the territory of Alaska, and leased it out to a company. I wish to say to him that the territory of Alaska is free to settlement. He desires to create the impression that there has been some land grabbing there, and I desire to say to him that he is perfectly free to go there and settle, where he can live under his own vine and fig tree, provided he can make them grow. The lease does not include the main land, nor the Aleutian Islands, it includes simply two small islands, which are merely rocks in the ocean, upon which nothing grows. This company has a lease of these two islands, and has paid into the United States treasury, during the eight years it has had them, over two millions of dollars. If the gentleman desires to make any political capital out of that, he is welcome to all he can make. I merely rise, because several members have spoken to me about it, and thought it incumbent upon me to make a reply. The purchase of Alaska was made for seven millions of dollars.

MR. WYATT. I ask General Miller if the islands of St. Paul and St. George are free for citizens of the United States to hunt on.

MR. MILLER. No, sir, they are leased to this company, which pays for them about three hundred and fifteen thousand dollars a year. I suppose the Government of the United States has power to dispose of public property. The wisdom of the proceeding has never been questioned by anybody that knows anything about it.

MR. SHAFTER. You have answered the question asked of me this morning, and I will ask you if you don't think it would be a good idea for the gentleman from Monterey to go there to live?

MR. MILLER. I don't think so, unless it would be to make a Constitution for Alaska. When the time comes I will ask the gentleman to go up there and help us make a Constitution. [Laughter.]

REMARKS OF MR. WYATT.

MR. WYATT. Mr. Chairman: I lost the point of that last remark, and cannot reply to it unless the gentleman will repeat it. I can only say that this morning I asked the question simply as pointing in the direction of the General Government, with reference to the public lands, and that the recent policy of the Government is very different from the ancient policy. Now, as an individual question with General Miller, as a matter of course, if he drives a good trade with the Government, I have no objections, as far as he is personally concerned, but I might very seriously object to it on the part of the Government as to the policy. That is the nature of my objection. I move that we now proceed to the consideration of these amendments.

MR. McCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: I wish to offer a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"Hereafter, lands belonging to this State which are suitable for cultivation, shall be granted only to actual settlers, and in quantities not exceeding three hundred and twenty acres to each settler, under such conditions as shall be prescribed by law."

MR. WYATT. As there seems to be some opposition to the form of my amendment, I will accept the substitute of the gentleman from Alameda.

THE CHAIRMAN. If there are no objections, the gentleman will have leave.

SPEECH OF MR. WHITE.

MR. WHITE. Mr. Chairman: I desire to say a few words on this question, sir. I would appeal to this Convention to do something that looks towards the limiting of this land business in the future—something that will cause a reform, and enable the State to settle up. There is certainly something very wrong at present, which prevents the State from improving as it ought to. I will mention a circumstance which occurred in St. Louis, in the year eighteen hundred and seventy. I was in that city, and had occasion to go to Booneville. At the depot is about an acre of land, with a high fence around it. You are let in when you have a ticket bought. I went in, and the whole place was filled with men, women, and children, going out upon the same route. I looked around in astonishment. They were a fine class of people. They had from one to eight children, all going west. I had taken my ticket for a first-class car, as was natural, but I went out into the emigrant car to converse with these people. I asked them where they were going, and they told me different places. I found they were getting very good land for one dollar and twenty-five cents to two dollars and fifty cents per acre. They found I came from California, and they were anxious to know about land here. I could not say to these people that they could get land here under ten dollars an acre of any kind that was worth going on to. I could not strain my conscience to tell them that they could get land for less than ten dollars an acre. They said they could not go there. There was the passage money, and then the high price of land. Now, sir, in my section there is no land under fifteen dollars for third-rate land. It ranges from that to one hundred dollars an acre. That is right, because it is worth it. I cannot imagine where I ever saw land as free as it is in those Western States.

Now, I had a letter from a friend in Kern County, and he described to me there that a number of persons had united together and taken up land, and were going to provide for irrigating it. They had to pay five dollars an acre for the land, because a man in San Francisco had taken it up. Now, that land, when it was there some years ago, of course it belonged to the Government, and could have been taken up by anybody. There are beautiful valleys there, but they require irrigation. He stated to me that after paying for the land they had to irrigate it, and the farmers had taken one hundred and forty acres apiece. Now, this is the objection I am going to draw your attention to, that these men had to pay five dollars an acre for the land. I don't know how these men got the land. First they had what they call desert land, just where the river breaks through the mountains. It is not swamp land. There is not one bit of swamp land, though they might have got it in that way. This is the thing the Convention should pay attention to. I will ask the farmers here to think of this. It is not a drive against the farmers. I say there is not a single reform in this Convention that could have been carried if the Workingmen were not here to-day. Not one single reform could have been passed in this Convention without their votes. Not one. Not a single one. They came here to you to-day, asking you to look into this thing. One gentleman gets up and ridicules the whole thing. Another gentleman ridicules it by a resolution he sends up, even the consideration of the subject.

They say these men will not work. There is not one that is not a worker. There is not one of them that is not hunting for a place to call home, and they are the very people who are calling for homes all over the State. They say, come and I will give you land, but you are too lazy to do it. But when you go to them they say you can have it so and so, at so much an acre. Now, gentlemen, this subject ought to be considered fairly. There have been two efforts here to drive it out and prevent us even talking about it, and there is an idea here that this is an effort to make the landholders divide. There is no such thought here. We want something here so that future settlers in this State may get homes—to open up the country and settle it up. What is the result? Why, gentlemen, the State is going backwards, in the rural districts. The land is lying unsettled. It is not like it is in other States, where one acre is as good as another. You can go into the Western States and one acre is about as good as another. But here the land monopolists have got this scrip, and have gone round and picked out the good land along the great plains of the San Joaquin and other valleys, leaving the poor land untouched, because they don't want them, because no man can touch them. But all the good places along the foothills, in Tulare County, and Kern County, and all around, are covered with this scrip. Now all I ask is, that you will give this a fair consideration, and I trust that the legal gentlemen on this floor will do something towards bringing forward some measure that will tend to bring this subject properly before the Legislature, to do something about it in answer to the wants of the whole people. Now what is the consequence? It is driving people in upon the cities, and the gentlemen know it very well. They come in and tell them they cannot stay in the country. They cannot get any land except such land as they cannot make a living on. Now I ask the farmers and Grangers here, to do justice to the Workingmen, who have stood in with them in their reforms, to take this subject in hand and help us to bring about a reform. People say that the Workingmen won't work—that you are too lazy to work. Now there are some men too lazy to work. There are men who won't take up land. But why is it that the Workingmen's representatives are here to-day asking you to do something to relieve the crowded towns? It is just because every day they have men coming to them and begging for some way to get homes. We want some general system which will settle the country—the general system which they have in Missouri and some other States, which is a great success. I was perfectly astonished when I saw the stream of immigration. The conductor says this is the case every day of the week, Sundays and all, thousands after thousands of people going west. I came back to my home, and I don't think twenty men of those who came settled here. This is a subject of mighty importance. I want some of the legal gentlemen here to propose something that will be effectual and satisfy the people on this matter. I think the gentleman from Kern County will tell you the same thing in regard to these nooks and corners. These men have no real title to their land. The other gentlemen from San Francisco ought to be the first ones to do something about this thing. They ought to be foremost because their city suffers most from it.

SPEECH OF MR. CONDON.

MR. CONDON. Mr. Chairman: This problem is closely connected with the solution of the problem of labor and capital. Because of the labor-saving machinery there ought to be a limited ownership of land. It is held, sir, by many, that the higher law will furnish a remedy, and that these interests will adjust themselves without government interference. Some hold that the only functions of government are to preserve life, punish crime, and protect the individual in the acquirement of all the land he may obtain. And that the right is higher than the government; and, therefore, that Lux & Miller have a right to own all the land in the State. Others believe that the true mission of the government is to gauge all this, and to limit men in their right to the acquirement and ownership of land. I believe that the interests of the many are higher than those of individuals or associations, and that the exercise of this right by the government would result in the many owning the land instead of the few, as is now the case. Another reason for this departure on the land question is, that by the use of labor-saving machinery there is greater inducement now than in the past for capital to monopolize the land, and there is also great danger that labor-saving machinery and capital combined may result in such monopoly. This same machinery, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, to which I want to draw your particular attention, is driving from the workshops the men of to-day. In fact it has invaded every branch of industry. The State of California contains over five hundred thousand tracts of land of one hundred and sixty acres each, susceptible of cultivation, which, with the principle of limited ownerships, would sustain a population of five hundred thousand farmers with their families, making an aggregate of three million people to be sustained therefrom. Can there be any doubt as to the question that this state of affairs would be more conducive to the interests of the State, and of society in general, than the existing system under which it is possible for five hundred men to own all the land in the State. Then the introduction of labor-saving machinery shows the necessity of compelling these large landholders to subdivide their estates into small tracts. They could be let out on shares, thus supporting a large population. Labor-saving machinery mostly does the work, and if you preserve these large tracts intact the consequence is but few men are required. These, sir, are grave questions, and I regret exceedingly that there has been a disposition manifested in this Convention to pass over and slight this important subject. But the delegates of reform and the free press have sounded the key-note upon the subject. They are questions which can no longer be set aside—they must be met. The people as a general thing have expressed their sentiments, and the question entered largely into the contest for seats in this Convention, at least, speaking for that portion of the State which I have the honor to represent. I know whereof I speak. It has become a question of such vast importance that this Convention cannot do otherwise than to treat it in that fair and calm, and deliberate manner which the importance of the question demands.

SPEECH OF MR. VACQUEREL.

MR. VACQUEREL. Mr. Chairman: There is no division in the minds of delegates as to land monopoly being a curse. But still, in all this discussion I have not been able to see one single point made towards abolishing land monopoly. Why, sir, it has been said here that the French nation was one of the best regulated in the country. I don't want to give any advice to anybody, but I will tell you the way it is, and you gentlemen can think over it, and if you think the idea is a good one, adopt it. There has been a wrong assertion here, that land holding was limited in France. It is false. If you have money enough you can buy the whole country. There is no law to stop you from it if the people want to sell it to you, which they do not. The land was divided there, it is true, but it was done by revolution, and I don't want any revolution here. We have a constitutional remedy here if we want to apply it. There has been a proposition presented to this Convention by my colleague, Mr. Lavigne, which will solve the whole proposition. And still that proposition has been referred to a committee, where it was put out of the way, because it would do some good. This proposition prevents a man from disinheriting his children. No matter if you have ten thousand acres of land which you want to give to your friend, you cannot do it under this provision. When you die this ten thousand acres is divided among your children. That is the way the land can be divided without doing injustice to any one. In France every bit of land has to pay taxes according to its value. But here a man owns a big ranch of fine land, and it escapes taxation. Why not make every inch of land pay taxes? I introduced a resolution here to that very purpose, but that resolution like this other one has been done away with. And still we have not done anything to stop this land grabbing. It makes no difference, if the land can be made to produce so much, and other land by the side of it is producing, they ought to be taxed alike, for one is as good as the other. If the land will produce so much the owner should be compelled to pay taxes on it. When you have done that then you can abolish land monopoly. It will fall down of its own weight. If the owners are compelled to pay taxes as other men do, they will sell the land, or put it to some use. If you will do that there will be an end to land monopoly, and that very soon. Pass such a resolution, and in ten years from now there will be a different state of affairs in this country.

REMARKS OF MR. HARRISON.

MR. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman: I want to make a few short remarks. In my opinion, sir, the land question is the most important question before the Convention to-day. In ten years Congress gave away one hundred and sixty million acres of land of the United States. This land has been given away between eighteen hundred and sixty-six and eighteen hundred and seventy-two. Of this, ten million belonged to the State of California. Now, we find one hundred and sixty million acres is two hundred and fifty square miles, in other words, a bigger State than England or France ever were. Now, sir, these two nations are more prosperous than any on the face of the earth to-day, principally on account of their land system and small farms. England not so much her farms as her commerce and mines. But here, in California to-day, sir, we have not room half enough. This is a nice state of affairs. Now, in a new country like this, I hold that the land ought to be held in trust for the people, not given away to corporations—to thieving corporations—because they don't pay their taxes upon it. Now for the figures: One million acres, divided into farms would give homes to six thousand two hundred and fifty families, and these families would average five, which would be more than thirty-five thousand two hundred and fifty people. To-day Illinois has three times as many farms as the State of California. The reason is because the land has been gobbled up by land monopolists, and there is no more land to be had. The gentleman, Mr. Brown, says there has been no land agitation. He has just waked up from a long Rip Van Winkle sleep—risen up from somewhere. Is he not aware that the settlers in that very county are now banded together in organized warfare against the railroad company, which is trying to dispossess them from their homesteads, and they will have to pay fifteen dollars to twenty dollars an acre for it. If this is not a test toward monopoly limitation—if Mr. Brown don't understand it so, he will find out when he returns to his people.

SPEECH OF MR. MCCALLUM.

MR. MCCALLUM. Mr. Chairman: Before a vote is taken on this amendment, I wish to say a word. Prior to eighteen hundred and forty-one, the system existing in the United States was about the same as that which exists in California to-day. Prior to that date there was no preëmption, no homestead provision. The fact is, though, in this respect they differed somewhat from our State laws; prior that time settlers went on public land as trespassers. I hope I may be pardoned for saying in the presence of the gentleman from San Francisco, Mr. Wilson, and the gentleman from Los Angeles, that the first preëemption law was passed by Congress, under the leadership of Henry Clay, in eighteen hundred and forty-one.

MR. HOWARD. You are mistaken about Mr. Clay. He always denounced it.

MR. MCCALLUM. My reading of history is different from yours. In eighteen hundred and sixty we had passed through Congress the first United States homestead law. Perhaps some gentleman will rise to a question of history when I state that that law was vetoed by James Buchanan. In eighteen hundred and sixty-two, when it passed through Congress again, it was then approved by the first Republican President of the United States, Abraham Lincoln. The United States laws, sir, are a vast improvement on what they were in eighteen hundred and forty. They are a vast improvement upon any State law we have ever had in California, as to State lands. Now, sir, the system prevails in California that did prevail in the United States, under what was called the private entry system. Lands which were proclaimed to be sold by the President of the United States, not being sold upon the day of sale, were thereafter open to private entry in the Land Office where they were offered. Any person could go into the Land Office and purchase these lands without settlement. It was under that system that the great land grants in the San Joaquin Valley were obtained. This scrip, about which so much has been said, was used only to purchase such lands as were subject to private entry. These lands could be taken merely upon application. There has been very little scrip issued that could be located upon land not subject to private entry. Of this land there has never been an acre entered, I believe, but land that was subject to private entry.

As far as my official term was concerned, not a single acre of land was ever sold to any person except an actual settler. After eighteen hundred and sixty, the old system of having land subject to private entry, was abolished, and since that time there has been comparatively very little monopoly of the public lands of the United States; the monopoly has been in State lands. Some gentleman stated that ten millions of acres were disposed of. Certainly the greater part has been disposed of, but, sir, there never has been any law in this State to prevent the monopoly of State lands. At one time there was a limit to three hundred and twenty acres, but even that was abolished for some time. This limit amounted to nothing, because it was only necessary to get different persons to make the applications, while the real purchaser takes the land. It is not so under the United States law. There is a regular scheme which ought to be in our Constitution, only it would take up too much room, but what I suggest here is the gist of it, namely, that land should be sold only to actual settlers. I use the words "lands fit for cultivation," because there is some land that is only fit for pasturage. It might be a good idea to add the provision of the United States law, which says, that land cannot be preëmpted by a person who owns three hundred and twenty acres now. These lands are kept for the landless. There are other valuable features in the United States laws. It would be an easy matter for me to impress the members with the wisdom of the various provisions, but it would be too much like legislation to put them in the Constitution. This may work some inconvenience, but it has got to be a practical thing. If it is a proper thing for us to get up here and cry down land monopoly as a great evil, it is proper that we do something to remedy that evil. I will support anything in the Constitution that does not violate my oath to support the Constitution of the United States. I think the report of the committee entirely impracticable.

REMARKS OF MR. HOWARD.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. I wish to correct the gentleman's history. He has made a mistake about Mr. Clay. I happened to be at Washington on a visit and heard Mr. Clay denounce the whole system in open Senate. My memory is good on that point, because he had a passage at arms with L. J. Walker, for whom I had voted for the Senate of the United States. The preëmption is the result of Democratic policy. Now as to the question before the committee. My recollection is not so vivid upon the homestead law. It may be so—I cannot deny it. But I think the gentleman is mistaken there also. I don't think a Democratic President ever vetoed it.

MR. MCCALLUM. Yes, sir, he did, and it was passed, as you know, again in eighteen hundred and sixty-two.

MR. HOWARD. Yes, sir, I know it was during Lincoln's term. To that extent the Republicans are entitled to the credit. I don't deny the fact.

MR. CROSS. Mr. Johnson was President part of the time, and he was a Democratic President.

MR. MCCALLUM. Andrew Johnson was a Republican in eighteen hundred and sixty-two.

MR. GRACE. He was a Workingman in eighteen hundred and sixty-two also.

MR. HOWARD. He was said to be a tailor who made clothes to fit. He was a Workingman. He never claimed to be a Republican. He claimed to act with the Republican party for the benefit of the Union, and the first chance he got he went back upon the Republicans most decidedly. Now as to this proposition limiting the amount of land to three hundred and twenty acres, I shall vote for it, because it is in conformity with the Federal policy, and the action of the Congress of the United States. I consider it just and wise to limit the amount of land to be acquired through the Federal Government, by actual settlers, to three hundred and twenty acres. As this amendment is in conformity with that policy I shall vote for it.

MR. TULLY. How many Democrats were there in eighteen hundred and sixty-two?

MR. HOWARD. I think they had gone South at that time.

[Laughter.]

MR. DOWLING. I wish to offer a substitute.

THE SECRETARY read:

"No more than three hundred and twenty acres of the lands of this State shall be granted or patented by the State to any one person, corporation, or association of persons. No person can transmit by will or otherwise to his heirs more than six hundred and forty acres of land. The only property that any person, corporation, or association can acquire in any lands exceeding six hundred and forty acres is a use, and such use is subject to legislative control. The Legislature shall provide for a general survey of all the agricultural lands of this State, and all lands not acquired in strict conformity with the homestead exemption and the land laws of the United States, shall escheat to the State. The practice of subletting lands is hereby declared illegal."

SPEECH OF MR. DOWLING.

MR. DOWLING. Mr. Chairman: The first point is I think, that we want a limited acquisition of the public domain. We therefore say that three hundred and twenty acres, and no more, can be acquired by any party in this State, by any individual or any corporation. In the past it will be remembered that this State has granted patents to people for hundreds and thousands of acres of land. Now, sir, this is a thing we should guard against in the future, so that the people may enjoy what little land remains. It is all gobbled up. But the people want something. They want the few acres that remain, to be distributed in the spirit and according to right and justice. I believe it is contrary to the genius of our Republican institutions to prohibit a man from purchasing as much land as he has got money to pay for. This proposition don't interfere with the purchasing of land. You can purchase as much land as you have money to pay for, but you can't buy from the State any more than three hundred and twenty acres.

Again, it will be remembered that land, air, and water are three natural elements, without which it is impossible to live. Man would sink in silent doom, and wholly disappear. I do not want to perpetuate land the same as they do in England, the same as they have it in all those countries that are under the yoke of monopoly institutions; they transmit from posterity to posterity since time immemorial. That has been tried in this country, too. But it will never succeed. Now, sir, the only property that any man can possess in land, over six hundred and forty acres, is the use of it. A man could not eat the land; it is no good to him. He has simply the use of it, the same as the use of water, or any other element. He has got the use of as much as he can purchase, and so long as he leaves it when he dies, he will, according to the proposition introduced here, which is in harmony with a provision in the State of Virginia, he will retain six hundred and forty acres of his land, and the balance will be sold, and the proceeds go to the support of the children. In the mean time the children can buy it from the State at the original price, and still retain it during their natural lives.

Again, sir, the third point I wish to cover. It has been customary in this State, it has been the practice ever since the State was admitted into the Union, and that is that a person could file a homestead on one hundred and sixty acres of land. This is the proceeding under which Lux & Miller, the great land monopolists of California, have succeeded in owning, or controlling, or holding the great valley of the San Joaquin, from San Francisco to Los Angeles. They can drive their cattle from one end to the other upon their own ground. The public cannot do that. If we don't solve this question, it is useless to deny that we will have a bloody revolution in this country. We are coming to it. Unless we adopt some means to solve this great question we will have a bloody revolution.

SPEECH OF MR. AYERS.

MR. AYERS. Mr. Chairman: The substitute introduced by the gentleman from Alameda, Mr. McCallum, meets with my approval. It seems to me that if we can do anything at all for the purpose of limiting land monopoly of the public lands of this State, we should do it in this Constitution. It is manifest to every observing man, that the great necessity of this State now is population—a population of the right kind. Our whole State is suffering for want of immigration of the right kind, and so long as the lands of this State are owned by a few men, so long as the lands belonging to this State are allowed to be monopolized by a few scheming men, so long will the right kind of emigration refuse to come here. Now it seems to me that the gentlemen who represent the large cities would find it to their interest to aid the people from the country in trying to solve this question in a proper manner. There is no lack of good land in this State, but there is a lack of the means of acquiring it. And if we can control the lands yet belonging to the State—if we can secure their distribution in the proper manner—it will tend to depreciate the price of new lands in this State. In doing so we shall invite immigration, and aid the prosperity of the State. The State is now stagnant for want of population. This land question, as has been said here, is one of the most serious that we have to deal with, and I hope it will receive the attention which it deserves. I think the amendment of the gentleman from Alameda will tend largely to produce a different state of affairs from what we have had in the past, and I hope the Convention will adopt it.

SPEECH OF MR. BROWN.

MR. BROWN. Mr. Chairman: It appears to me, sir, that it is often the case, when we attempt to remedy one evil, another evil is created by what we intended as a remedy. Now, here we make a compromise on three hundred and twenty acres as the amount that can be granted by the State. This looks more liberal than one hundred and sixty acres, but, in the midst of everything, let any one be acquainted with farming and stock raising, which is the principal thing followed in the foothills, and he will know at once that three hundred and twenty acres is not sufficient. It will not amount to anything in the way of an inducement to settlers to settle in these places to engage in the business of stock raising and adding to the wealth of the country; and such a constitutional provision as this will prevent the settlement of these foothills. Three hundred and twenty acres is not sufficient.

MR. DOWLING. Is not three hundred and twenty acres of agricultural land sufficient to support a family?

MR. BROWN. No sir, it is not. Any man who has ever lived in the foothills knows that when he takes to raising sheep, that even six hundred acres will not produce grass enough to make him a living. It is simply an impossibility, and men who understand this matter practically, are fully aware of it. Now, these are matters of consequence, and should be taken into consideration.

MR. DOWLING. How much land have you?

MR. BROWN. About one hundred acres in cultivation. I have about two hundred and forty acres altogether. Now, these are matters of fact. It is not land enough. No man can get along on twice that amount, and succeed in the growing industries of stock raising. I have no doubt these gentlemen are earnest and sincere in their desire to do something for the welfare and advancement of the State, but they are laboring under a misapprehension, and will not subserve the purpose they have in view.

MR. AYERS. Does not the amendment read, suitable for cultivation?

MR. BROWN. That does not matter. You could not find three hundred and twenty acres in these mountains, suitable for cultivation. It is only in small patches, and, it appears to me, that this matter is not comprehended—it is not understood.

MR. AYERS. It is left to the Legislature to manage.

MR. BROWN. I am opposed to the amendment. I am trying to present my argument. If this amendment is adopted, it will, in many places, destroy the business which we are attempting to promote. I am under the impression that it will work a great hardship, and I am convinced that the gentlemen who advocate this do not understand what they are doing. Such a provision as this inserted in the fundamental law of the State would prove utterly antagonistic to the best interests of the State. How few of these gentlemen who argue upon this matter have ever seen the foothills. They are not conversant with them. How few ever attempted to cultivate them. This amendment does not cover the case properly. I would call upon the members to investigate and study this matter before they attempt to pass upon it. I am convinced that there is a principle in it that is not seen, that will strike where it is not intended, and which will destroy the great industrial interests of this State, both farming and stock raising. Now, in regard to the amendment, which prevents a man from giving to his children, when he dies, more than six hundred and forty acres. Now, I thought that matter was passed, but it comes up again. It has been held in all ages to be in accordance with the higher law, that a man has a right to do as he pleases with his own. I am therefore opposed to that amendment on principle. It would be the same as some of the amendments which have been voted down. It is out of order. I am under the impression that it will not meet the approval of this body. When a man dies, his property is his to do what he pleases with. It does not belong to the State, and the State has no right to say what he shall do with it.

SPEECH OF MR. TULLY.

MR. TULLY. Mr. Chairman: I did not intend to say anything with reference to this matter, but I thought it was right to put myself on the record upon this land question. As far as the State is concerned, limiting the amount of land which a man may buy, I denounce the whole thing as a miserable humbug. The idea of gentlemen getting up here and seriously discussing that matter! That a man may be limited in the amount of land he may buy, is a startling proposition. I notice this morning that the distinguished gentleman from Monterey, whom I admire so much, made a speech to this Convention, and he found it necessary to apologize to this Convention, by saying that he was in favor of a man buying all the land he wanted, and he said you could not limit a man for what he now owned, but hereafter he will have to be limited. Now, I have always liked him very much. I always listen to him with pleasure. Then my venerable friend from Los Angeles—the man I learned my democracy from, whom I have followed for thirty years—he gets up and apologizes to the Convention, and says the reason he does not favor limiting land holding is, because the Supreme Court of the United States will not allow him to do so. You will find the man who wants to be Governor, and the man who wants to go to Congress, and the man who wants to be President of the Senate—they all get up here and say they are in favor of doing this thing provided they can do it. They want to limit these men. Now I would not limit anybody. I regard this whole thing as a burlesque upon the civilization of the age. The idea of a lot of men advocating a proposition in this Convention to limit you in the acquisition of property.

MR. O'SULLIVAN. I understand you are the attorney of Lux & Miller, the biggest land grabbers in the State of California.

MR. TULLY. Yes, sir; and they have paid me very well, sir. But the idea of these gentlemen getting up here and seriously advocating a proposition that a man shall not acquire all the land he wants. It is simply a miserable humbug. There are forty millions of acres in this State now which can be located by these gentlemen who are humbugging around in this Convention about land monopoly; but the truth is, they do not want to go back where the land is. They want to move in town, and take up vacant land there. They want improved property, without the labor of improving it. They don't want to go out in the country away from town, like others have done. You cannot get one of these men to go out in the country. They want to stay here within sight of the Capitol. I can see what they want to do, and I desire to enter my protest against it. I think it is all a miserable humbug, and an outrage, to talk about these things, and I am only astonished that this Convention has indulged these gentlemen so long. I am astonished that my venerable friend from Los Angeles, and other intelligent gentlemen here, will get up here and dignify such a thing by seriously considering it. I am going to now move the previous question.

MR. HOWARD, of Los Angeles. What cheek!

MR. AYERS. What assurance!

MR. TULLY. Now, sir, in conclusion, I want it distinctly understood I would not have any office I cannot get. I don't want, like the boy from Marin, to be Governor, or anything of that kind. In conclusion, I say, I move the previous question.

Seconded by Messrs. Larue, Cross, Huestis, and Hitchcock.

MR. WELLIN. Will the Chair entertain such a motion, after the gentleman has spoken for ten minutes, and then moves the previous question?

THE CHAIRMAN. It is a proper motion. The question is: Shall the main question be now put?

Lost—ayes, 45; noes, 47.

SPEECH OF MR. GRACE.

MR. GRACE. Mr. Chairman: I just want to speak in reference to some things said by my friend, the Major, from Butte, in speaking about the disposition of the workingmen in not being willing to go to Butte County to settle. Now, I am a workingman, and well acquainted with the workingmen of California; and I know the majority of the workingmen, or a large portion of them, are men with families to support, and they are men who are willing and anxious to work. Whenever they can get work, they are willing to take it. They go around hunting for work, but they cannot always find it.

MR. PROUTY. I would like to know if you know any of them who want land?

MR. GRACE. Yes, sir. In eighteen hundred and seventy-two, when the Central Pacific Railroad Company put their bridge across the Sacramento River, I went up there on the twenty-eighth day of June, and stayed until October—eighteen weeks, in the hottest weather a man ever endured, when, in putting the frame work across the river, I would absolutely be so heated as to almost sink in my tracks. We worked twelve hours a day in the blazing heat of the sun. All those men voted the Workingmen's ticket. Well, I was there, and I looked around to see what the prospect was for getting some land. It is a fine valley, with beautiful land. Though it is hot there it is never dry, and if I had been well fixed I would have liked to have got some of it. But I soon saw that I could not get hold of land without going way off. It is so hedged about that a working man would only take his family there to starve. I was not like my friend Wilson of Tehama, with his pocket full of land scrip. He came there in eighteen hundred and forty-nine. I am in favor of giving forty-niners all a chance. He has been here longer than I have. He is an older man than I am. I left home before I was twenty years old, and turned my face towards the West. I arrived in the mines without means. We had a mining law that a man could
