Brks. The constable is our pound keeper. When he puts any beasts into the pound he cuts a stick in two and gives one piece to the person who brings the beasts and keeps the other himself; and the owner of the beasts has to bring the other end of the stick to him before he can let them out. Therefore the owner, you see, must go to the person who has pounded his beasts, and make a bargain with him for payment of the damage which has been done, and so get back the other end of the stick, which they call the 'tally,' to produce to the pound keeper, HUGHES *T. 6. The last unit of a number specified; see below.

Nhb.¹ The number of bricks, or cheese, or bundles is counted as they are passed from hand to hand, the last man but one repeating the figures aloud. If the articles are counted singly they are called out up to the nineteenth; but instead of calling out 'twenty' the word 'tally' is substituted; thus—'eighteen, nineteen, tally.' The score is then marked by a simple line drawn with a piece of chalk. After four strokes are made, the fifth is drawn through them diagonally from left to right, like the cross-bar of a field gate, and the symbol one hundred is thus indicated. In counting articles that can be lifted in groups the tale is thus made—'five, ten, fifteen, tally.' w.Yks.²; w.Yks.⁴ In counting any articles sold by the hundred, one is thrown out after each hundred that is called the tally. Nhp.¹ They are usually given in to the purchaser. Cor. Into this [boat] the fish [mackerel] are counted by two men, who in turn take up three fish at a time and count them as one. (1) Som. JENNINGS Obs. Dial. w.Eng. (1825). (2) Lin. THOMPSON Hist. Boston (1856) 726; Lin.¹ (3) Nhp.¹ (4) Der. We are sure all our readers—especially those who have seen a tap dressing—will hail with pleasure the announcement, that steps are about to be taken to have the taps at Wirksworth dressed on Whit-Wednesday next. . . It is remarkable that not a single objection can be made to the custom. Another circumstance is, that it is strictly local; it belongs to Derbyshire alone, N. & Q. (1860) 2nd S. ix. 345; In 1855, while passing an evening hour at a garden-gate in . . . Baslow, a youth arrived bearing . . . a very large basket well garnished with flowers of divers kinds and colours; an increase of which he solicited by a selection from my friend's garden. . . I was informed that [he] was collecting them for the Pilsley 'Well' or 'Tap' dressing. . . I found that . . . the festival . . . answered exactly to an account in a letter by a brother in 1851, describing the well-dressing which he witnessed at the above named place. It was as follows—'In the morning a procession passed through Baslow on its way to Pilsley. It consisted of nine carts and waggons of all shapes and sizes, containing the boys and girls of Eyam school, with their dads and mams, uncles and aunts [&c.], . . . a few flags, and headed by some stout fellows armed with cornepeans and trombones, blowing discordant sounds. . . They march round the village where the 'well-flowering' takes place, carrying their flags, and headed by their bands. In the afternoon we saw them come back, the chaps in the cart blowing away as fresh as ever. When we went up in the evening, we found quite a throng in the village. People come from all parts; and it seems to be the custom with those who can afford it to keep open house for the day. A great deal of taste and fancy is exhibited in the . . . 'tap-dressing.' Behind two of the taps that supply water to the village, was erected a large screen of rough boards; the principal one was about 20 ft. square. The screen is then plastered over with moist clay, upon which the Duke of Devonshire's arms, and a great variety of fanciful devices and mottoes, are executed in various colours by sticking flowers and buds into the clay, by which means they keep fresh for several days. The background to the device is formed with the green leaves of the fir. Some of the ornaments are formed of shells stuck into the clay. Branches of trees are arranged at the sides of the screen; and in the front a miniature garden is laid out, with tiny gravel-walks, and flower-beds with shell borders, and surrounded by a fence of stakes and ropes. Opposite the principal screen they had . . . attempted a fountain; formed by the figure of a duck with outstretched wings, straight neck, and bill wide open, from which a stream of water shot up about a yard high. . . There was a . . . flag flying on the village green, and the same at the inn; and a pole decorated with flowers, and a young tree tied to the lower part; and a few stalls for nuts and gingerbread. A very large tent in which tea was served at a shilling, and as much dancing as you liked afterwards for nothing; or the dancing without the tea for sixpence; and some third-rate itinerant posturers in the street. There was to be a grand display of fireworks between 11 and 12 o'clock; and besides, there was dancing at the inn, ib. 431. (5) n.Yks. (I.W.) He tapished and died, ADDY Gl. (1891) 58. nw.Der.¹ Inquiring on Sunday last what ailed a man who was sick, his brother said he thought he was 'tappished' with a decline. The word is common in the mining district near Bakewell, Manch. Guardian (Mar. 1, 1875); 'Tappish' is current as a neuter verb at Taddington. I am also informed by a native of Winchester that the word is used there in a passive form, as 'He's tappished;' he's poorly or ill. The word is also used there in reference to an unsound arm or leg, for instance, 'This arm's tappished.' It is, moreover, applied to a piece of wood or a board which is decaying, 'This wood's tappished,' ib. (Mar. 29, 1875); When the word 'tappish' is made use of, and it is applied to persons, animals, and vegetables, it is understood or intended to mean that the person, animal, or vegetable is afflicted with a disease which is probable may cause death. It is very commonly used with respect to potato crops, as, 'Ahv a good crop a taters, bur theer tappished,' ib. (Apr. 8, 1875).

takes a quantity of salt, and lays it in a small heap before him. Each potato, when peeled, he dabs into this heap. . . . When the potatoes are eaten from the pot, . . . it is set on the floor, and the party sit round it. Salt is placed on a stool within easy reach of all, and each one helps himself from the supply by dabbing his potato on it (JAM. Suppl.). AYR. For this repast a plentiful supply of potatoes is said to be provided, with a small bit of meat or fish which is merely to be looked at. For the improvement of the potatoes, however, each one before it is eaten is pointed at the luxury (JAM. Suppl.). N.Cy.¹, Lakel.² Cum.¹ People too poor or niggardly to buy flesh meat have been said to provide a very small piece of butter, or bacon fat, to be placed on the centre of the dinner-table; and, having loaded their spoons with mashed potatoes, the diners were allowed to point towards but not to touch the morsel—hence the name. Sometimes the piece of bacon was hung up to the ceiling; Cum.⁴ w.Som.¹ It is very common to hear old people, when expatiating upon the hardships of their youth as compared with the luxury enjoyed by the young of the present day, say, 'Mate, sure 'nough! we never had'n a-got none, 'twas always tatties and zalt, or tatties and point, when father'd a-made shift vur to git hold o' a bit o' bacon like for his Zunday's dinner.' (3) Shr.¹ A dish is lined with mashed potatoes, a well being left in the centre, which is filled with hot milk having a lump of butter in it; into this each helping of potatoes is slightly dipped. A story is told of a farmer's wife that, as she placed before 'the men' a supper of potatoes and milk prepared in the manner here described, she said—fearing they would help themselves too lavishly to the buttered milk—'Now, chaps, yo' maunna tak' it all at wunst, yo' maun touch it, an' touch it: ' whence arose the term—'Tittos an' touch!' TELLERS, sb. pl. Nhb. Lei. The successive strokes on a church bell, rung as a toll for the dead.

Nhb.¹ It is usual at village churches to knell the sex of an adult by nine strokes for a man, or six strokes for a woman, repeated on each of three bells. For a child three strokes are given and similarly repeated. Then follow a number of strokes on the treble bell to indicate the age, each stroke counting one year. Lei. At Frisby and elsewhere these tolls [for the dead] are called 'tellers,' and it has been suggested that the old saying 'Nine tailors make a man' is a corruption of a saying arising from the three strokes tolls or 'tellers' at the close of the passing bell,—'Nine tellers mark a man,' NORTH Church Bells in N. & Q. (1877) 5th S. vii. 164.

A custom exists among harvest-men in Suffolk which is called 'Ten-pounding.' In most reaps there is a set of rules agreed upon amongst the reapers before harvest by which they are to be governed during its continuance. The object of these rules is usually to prevent or punish loss of time by laziness, drunkenness, &c., and to correct . . . any other kind of misbehaviour which might slacken the exertions or break the harmony of the reap. One of the modes of punishment directed by these rules is called 'Ten-pounding,' and it is executed in the following manner: Upon a breach of any of the rules a sort of drum-head court-martial is held upon the delinquent, and if he is found guilty he is instantly seized and thrown down flat on his back. Some of the party keep his head down and confine his arms; whilst others turn up his legs in the air so as to exhibit his posteriors. The person who is to inflict the punishment then takes a shoe, and with the heel of it (studded as it usually is with hob-nails) gives him the prescribed number of blows upon his breech according to the sentence. The rest of the party sit by with their hats off to see that the executioner does his duty, and if he fails in this he undergoes the same punishment, FORBY Gl. (1830) 419; BRAND Pop. Antiq. (ed. 1848) II. 23. (11) Shr.² I'd tensight rather. (12) n.Yks. FERGUSON *Nat. Sc. (A.W.) n.Sc. A hotly contested game of 'three card loo' or 'catch the ten' is entered upon, GORDON Carglen (1891) 79.

3. A measure of coals upon which the lessor's rent or royalty is paid.

Nhb. [In 1602-3] The keel load and the ten were at that time synonymous, and both represented ten chaldrons of 42 cwt. each.

. . . The present ten of 440 bolls became fixed about the middle of the eighteenth century. This ten of 440 bolls is still in use for wayleave rents, and in some cases for mining rents [also a ten of 420 bolls]. The boll above mentioned is a supposititious measure, for it has gone out of use. In practice the number of tens to be paid for is arrived at by dividing the number of tons to be converted into tens by 48.583 or 46.375, as the case may be, DENOV Newc. Hestmen (1901) 45; Nhb.¹ In the seventeenth century the term meant ten score bolls, barrows, or corves of coal. It now means usually about fifty-one and three-quarter tons, but varies in places. Nhb., Dur. It usually consists of 440 bolls, or 48 tons 11½ cwt., but varies much under different landlords, GREENWELL Coal Tr. Gl. (1849).

Hence Tentale, sb. rent paid to the lessor of coal at so much per 'ten' of coals.

Nhb.¹ Nhb., Dur. Colliery rent consists of a fixed or certain rent . . . and also of a surplus or tentale rent payable for the coal worked—or worked and rendered—above the certain quantity, NICHOLSON Coal Tr. Gl. (1888) (s.v. Rent).

4. A piece of arable land in a common field. Cf. scribe, *sb.*²

Nhb.¹ To each freehold burgage at Warkworth was attached one ten and one 'scribe' of land in Newtown. The tens measure from eighteen yards long by eight and a quarter yards wide, or about five perches upwards, to six and a half perches in area. Their size has varied by gradual encroachments upon road or waste lands as circumstances permitted.

3. Comp. (1) Tenantry-acre, a measure of land varying in extent but about $\frac{2}{3}$ of a statute acre; (2) -down, (3) -field, a down or field in a state of commonage on the ancient feudal system of copyhold tenancy; (4) -flock, a parish or township flock; (5) -land, parish land; land held as common land; (6) -road, a road about 8 feet in width, dividing the 'laines' of tenantry-land into furlongs.

(1) Sus.¹; Sus.² The proportion between the tenantry and the statute acre is very uncertain. The tenantry land was divided first into laines, of several acres in extent, with good roads, some sixteen feet wide between them; at right angles with these were formed at uncertain intervals, tenantry roads, of some eight feet in width, dividing the laines into furlongs. In each furlong every tenant had a right to his proportion, which was set out for him, not by fixing any superficial quantity, but by measuring along the line of the tenantry road of each furlong a certain number of feet to each paul, the number of feet being the same, whatever was the depth of the furlong; thus, if the furlong, for instance, consisted of what is called a hatchet-piece something like three-quarters of a square, the part where the piece was two squares deep would contain double the superficial contents of the portion at the other end, where the measurement next the road would be similar but the depth only one half, 65. Wit. In the common-fields . . . the usual rule is, to allow a thousand sheep to fold what is called a tenantry acre per night, DAVIS Gen. View Agric. (1811) xii. (2,3) WIL. DAVIS Agric. (1813). (4) SUS. A tenantry-flock [of sheep] belonging to Denton parish, MARSHALL Review (1817) V. 500. (5) SUS. This term is used rather vaguely. I have heard it applied to 'waste of a manor' and to 'common lands.' II. Dial. uses. 1. pers. pron., nom. sing. You.

Sc. The 2nd pers. sg. pron. has quite disappeared from the spoken dialect, MURRAY Dial. (1873) 188. S. & Ork.¹ Generally used in addressing a person. Abd., Per. Almost never used (G.W.). Ayr. Thoo forgets that thoo'll be a culprit that day, HUNTER Studies (1870) 91. Nhb.¹ 'Thoo' is only used by intimates, or by a superior or senior to an inferior. Used in any other way it expresses the greatest possible contempt for the person addressed. Dur.¹ Cum. 'Tou' in place of the 'you' when contempt or familiarity are to be indicated (E.W.P.); Cum.⁴ The second person singular in all its forms betokens familiarity or contempt. Wm. Thoo 'carse-orse, thoo! thoo wormy villain! thoo melancholy maggot! OLLIVANT Oud Bob (1898) 15. n.Yks.⁴ ne.Yks.¹ In familiar speech between equals it is invariably used rather than the 'you' of modern English, 23. e.Yks.¹ Used by parents when addressing children, and superiors their inferiors; never vice versa. m.Yks.¹ 'Thou,' though naturally the expression of familiar feeling, is yet associated with contemptuous treatment on the part of a speaker. . . Towards superiors, the objective case of the second person plural is as a matter of course employed, but under circumstances of strong feeling it is apt to be changed for 'thou,' and without that sense of unpardonable vulgarity which would attach to the form if used in a like manner in ordinary conversation, Introd. 24. w.Yks. Still extensively used, but it is not so general now as it was twenty years ago. When I was a lad the following was the rule: 'Thā' was used in every case except that 'ji' was used (1) in addressing strangers, especially grown-up people, or as a mark of respect to masters and old people; (2) children in addressing their parents; (3) people who had made each other's acquaintance after they had grown up usually employed 'ji' in speaking to each other, WRIGHT Gram. Windhill. (1892) 118. Lan. He used the homely 'thou,' which with him betokened tenderness or emotion, FRANCIS Yeoman Fleetwood ed. 1900) 14. s.Lan.¹ Used by a superior to an inferior person; by persons of equal degree to one another; as abuse or insult; as a term of endearment. Chs.¹ In constant use. s Chs.¹ As generally used implies familiarity, or at least absence of constraint. It is thus employed by parents to their children [less frequently used to the daughters than to the sons], and a fortiori by grandparents to their grandchildren; by a husband to his wife and vice versa; by the children among themselves, by schoolboys, less commonly by schoolgirls to one another; by a master to his labourers, though scarcely ever to his foreman or bailiff; by the labourers to one another; by a master or mistress to the maidservants, but this not so frequently; by sweethearts to each other, &c., &c. Outside this general use, the 2nd person singular is also adopted to express anger, contempt, or strong emotion; in each of these cases it may be used by persons other than those mentioned. Towards superiors the 2nd person plural is by rule employed, and in fact could not, except with intentional impertinence, be exchanged for the 2nd person sing., 65, 66. Stf. One thing that strikes a stranger is the use of 'thou' for 'you,' the true Black Country man keeping like the Quaker to the older use, The Chronicle (Aug. 23, 1901). Not. Still used in addressing an equal or inferior (L.C.M.). Lin. Thou'll be good, won't thou? Gilbert Ruggle (1866) I. 37. sw.Lin.¹ Eh, lad, thou'st not fun the gainest road across that field. Nhp.² Shr.¹ About Newport, Gram. Outlines, 47-60. The laws that govern the use of 'thee' and 'thou' amongst agricultural workers, are not to be violated. . . On no account must 'thou' be used to a superior; a co-mate, or inferior, is to be so addressed; but when they quarrel the 'thou' and 'thee' should not be dropped, since that would be an admission of the adversary's superiority, BUCKMAN Darke's Sojourn (1890) iii. Nrf. Almost entirely disused, being only retained in some salutations, GILBERT Sug. Sol. (1860) Notes, 3. Hmp. 'Thee' and 'thou' are often used here between near relations or old friends (H.W.E.). s.Wil. Monthly Mag. (1814) II. 114.

The old Thraple plough is now seldom to be seen except in the remote Highlands, or in the Orkneys. It was also called the Rotheram plough, and was entirely composed of wood, with the exception of the culter and sock, and had but one stilt. It was drawn by four garrons or oxen yoked abreast to a cross-bar, which was fastened to the beam by thongs of raw hide or ropes of hair; and he who managed the stilt held it close and firm to his right thigh, to protect which he had the skin . . . of an animal wrapt around it. To keep the plough sufficiently deep in the earth a person was required to press it down, while another performed the office of driver by placing himself between the two central animals, where he walked backwards, protecting himself from falling by placing both arms over their necks. The mould-board was ribbed or furrowed, in order to break the land, Logal Gaol (ed. 1876) II. 95-6 in (JAM. Suppl.).

He has the choice of 'strawberries and grapes,' and is placed behind one of the leaders;

Three children, gen. boys, are chosen to represent the three dukes. The rest of the players represent maidens. The three dukes stand in line facing the maidens, who hold hands, and also stand in line. Sufficient space is left between the two lines to admit of each line in turn advancing and retiring. . . The alternate verses demanding and answering are thus sung. . . At the 9th or last verse they [dukes] 'name' one of the girls, who then crosses over and joins hands with them. The game then continues by all four singing 'Here come four dukes a-riding,' and goes on until all the maidens are ranged on the duke's side, GOMME Games (1898) 248-9. (4) *Lon. The children sing the lines. When the last verse is sung a girl from the end of each line advances and the two dance round together. This is continued until all in turn have danced in the space between the lines, ib. 280-1. (10) Der. For this game three 'men' are used, and the board on which the game is played contains nine holes or points. . . Two played the game, laying their men alternately on any of the points of the board. (16) War. Three rows of earth, sand, &c., are placed in parallel lines about a foot and a half apart. Each player is careful not to step or descend upon these 'straws' when pitching over the boy who makes the back, lest he himself should be forced to take the other's place. . . When the three straws are passed, and the one 'down' is told to 'foot it,' he does so by placing one foot lengthwise against the other resting sideways, and then bringing the side-long foot, still sideways, in advance, and, lastly, setting the now rear foot beside, but in front of its fellow; and again makes the back. This goes on until the distance is so great that one leaper, less agile than his fellows, fails to reach the 'back,' or steps over or on the last straw to do so, when he is 'down.' . . When the one 'down' has a foot on each side of the middle straw—a position which is called 'the fly'—each leaper must clear his back, and the three straws. (17) Sth. First of all there is a number of girls that stands in a row. There are other three girls in front of them. There is another girl at the back of the row of girls. TIGHTEN, v. n.Cy. Yks. Ess. [tai'tən.] 1. To initiate a workman on entry to a new situation; see below.

n.Cy. When a new hand takes up a situation, the first dinner hour he spends with his fellow workmen is devoted to 'tightening' him. The process is as follows:—A member of the 'order' is selected by the 'candidate' to read the rules. It is his prerogative to command the most absurd attitudes that all must occupy during the ceremony, and his order is rigorously enforced. Probably he will order that all present stand on one foot, or suffer the consequence. The 'rule' is then read and is contained in the following: 'He that laughs, smiles, or shows his teeth, Shall be rannelled like a thief, After I've said—dumb.' All are silent, and standing on one foot, and the novice is conducted to his place, surrounded by the members, prepared to 'rannel' or 'tighten' him to his heart's content. The action consists of seizing him by the hair of the head, every time the word 'tighten' occurs, and giving it an upward jerk. The ruler then reads out his command: 'O son! O son! thou hast transgressed—Tighten, Thou'st broke the law before our face—Tighten, And if thou dost not mend thy manners—Tighten, The skin of thy earc shall go to the tanners—Tighten, And if the tanner does not tan it well—Tighten, We'll hang thee on a nail in hell—Tighten, And if that nail should chance to crack—Tighten, We'll tie thee on the devil's back—Tighten, And if the devil should run away—Tighten, We'll tighten thee another day—Tighten.' The candidate having been almost driven mad by his enthusiastic colleagues is then ordered to piss, whistle, or count ten, during which time he is more vigorously 'tightened,' and the ceremony concludes, only to be repeated on some unfortunate member who has transgressed the 'rules.' Thus 'tightening' is almost continuous (B.K.).

TIN-EGIN, sb. Obs. Sc. Forced fire; see below.

w.Ist. The inhabitants here did also make use of a fire called 'Tin-Egin,' i.e. a forced fire, or fire of necessity, which they used as an antidote against the plague, or murrain in cattle; and it was performed thus: All the fires in the parish were extinguished and then eighty-one married men being thought the necessary number for effecting the design, took two great planks of wood, and nine of 'em were employed by turns, who by their repeated efforts rubbed one of the planks against the other until the heat thereof produced fire; and from this fore'd fire each family is supply'd with new fire, which is no sooner kindled than a pot full of water is quickly set on it and afterwards sprinkled upon the people infected with the plague, or upon the cattle that have the murrain. And this they all say they find successful by experience: it was practis'd on the main land, opposite to the south of Skie, within these thirty years, MARTIN Desc. w.Isl. (1716) 113 (JAM., s.v. Neid-fire); It is very probable that the 'Tin-egin,' or forced fire, not long since used in the Isles as an antidote against the plague or murrain in cattle, is the remainder of a Druid custom, BURLASE *Antiq. N.Cy.¹ Nhb.¹ Doors were formerly provided with a long, notched, iron handle on which a loose iron ring was hung. Instead of rousing the house with a knock, the caller tirl'd the ring up and down the notches of the 'tirling pin,' or handle, and produced the sound from which the apparatus took its name. w.Yks. WILLAN List Wds. (1811).

Hence (1) Tirling-pin, sb. an old-fashioned bar of notched iron formerly used instead of a knocker ; (2) -ring, sb. the ring which was 'tirl'd' round a bar of iron to make a rattling noise.

(1) Sc. The tirling-pin has no latch. It consists of a piece or rod of iron about half-an-inch in diameter, coiled or twisted like a rope. It is placed vertically on the door, the upper and lower ends of it being bent at right angles and these ends fixed in the door ; but before being so fixed a ring of iron of the same diameter in thickness as the rod, also coiled or twisted like it, is slung on the upright piece. . . The upright part of this door-sneck, not counting the parts bent towards the door, would be about six inches in length, and up and down this, round about this, the ring can be freely twirled or twisted or set spinning, N. & Q. (1897) 8th S. xii. 426; Your correspondent . . . is mistaken in supposing that it has anything to do with a 'door-sneek,' . . . neither is the ring freely twirled or twisted or set spinning round the rod. On the contrary, it is held firmly in the hand and drawn sharply up and down the rod, ib. 478; At a recent sale . . . two tirling-pins were disposed of: one which came originally from Leith Tower fetched £5 10s. and another was secured for £2 2s., ib. (1878) 5th S. ix. 88. Nhb. I have seen and tirl'd at an original tirling-pin on the chief entrance door of the vicarage house at Ovingham-on-Tyne, Nhb., which has been in use from time immemorial, ib. 319; Nhb.¹ (2) Nhb.¹

Sh.I. A round piece of wood, about 4 feet in length and fitted with 12 small boards, in the same manner as the extremity of the exterior wheel of an ordinary mill with a strong iron spindle fixed to its upper end, supplies the place of a wheel in these mills. The iron spindle passing through the under millstone is fixed in the upper. A pivot in the under end of the tirl (the piece of wood above mentioned) runs in a hollowed iron plate. The tirl occupies the same situation under this mill as the trundles in the inner part of an ordinary mill; and it performs the same office. The diameter of the tirl is always equal to that of the mill-stone, Statist. Acc. V. 195 (JAM.); HIBBERT Desc. Sh. I. (1822) 205, ed. 1891; S. & Ork.¹

TIT-TAT-TOE, sb. Lin. War. Brks. Hnt. Lon. Wil. Amer. Also written tit-tat to se.Lin. Wil.; -too War.³

1. The game of 'noughts and crosses.'

Lin.¹, se.Lin. (J.T.B.), War.³ Brks.¹ 'Tit-tat-toe, My first go,' being said by the one who first makes three crosses, or noughts in a row. Hnt. A game among boys on a slate (T.P.F.). Lon. PEACOCK Gl. (1889) (s.v. Tip-tap-toe). [Amer. Checkers and tit-tat-toe, and fox-and-geese, and set down games like those, SLOSSON Foxglove (1898) 11.]

2. The game of 'threepenny madell.' See Madell.

Wil. At Deverill this name is applied to the game of 'threepenny madell,' from the exclamation when the third man is successfully placed in the row (G.F.D.).

3. A children's game; see below. Cf. tick-tack-toe.

Lon. A round is drawn which is divided into as many divisions as is thought necessary, sixteen being generally the least. These divisions are each numbered, the centre containing a higher figure than any in the divisions, usually 25, 50, or 100. Several children can play. They each have a place or square allotted to them on the slate in which to record the numbers they obtain. A space is allotted to 'Old Nick' or the 'Old Man.' The players alternately take a pencil in their right hand (holding it point downwards on r and tapping each number with it), and shutting their eyes move round and round the diagram saying: 'Tit, tat, toe, my first go, Three jolly butcher boys all in a row. Stick one up, stick one down, Stick one in the old man's ground,' stopping and keeping the pencil in an upright position when the last word is said. The player then opens his eyes and registers in his square the number at which the pencil stopped. This number is then scratched through on the diagram to signify that it is taken; the other players proceed in the same manner as the first; then the first one begins again. This is continued till all the numbers are scratched out or till one of the players puts his pencil into the centre and thus wins the game. If all the figures are taken before the centre is touched, the game goes to the 'Old Man' or 'Old Nick.' Also if one player puts his pencil in a division already taken he records nothing and loses that turn; this is also the case if after the verse is repeated the pencil is found to be on a division or boundary line or outside the round, GOMME Games (1898) II. 296-7; (A.B.C.)
