TRIPPLE, v. Sc. Also in forms treeple, triple. [tri'pl.] To dance, trip; to beat time with the feet in dancing, &c.

Abd. He trippled, he danced, an' he sung, ANDERSON Rhymes (1867) 42. Sig. A hunner mair . . . were cutting, shuffling, and treeping wi' their feet, and hooching, shouting, and harrooing wi' their mouths, BUCHANAN Poems (1901) 138. Bwk. CALDER Poems (1897) 93.

TRIPPLE, see Thripple, *sb.*¹

TRIPSE, v. and sb. w.Som.¹ [trəps.] 1. v. To balance as upon a pivot; to balance, swing as on a pivot. Cf. trip, *v.*² 3.

Usually applied to a heavy weight, such as a large piece of timber, mass of stone, &c. 'You oar nūvur turnn an neef ee doar nūp's-n au'p pun saum'feen.' 'Ee-ul trūp'se s-ai-zee-z' [he (a tree) will balance so easy as a glove].

2. To prize up with a lever.

To tripse, the fulcrum must be fixed and the long end of the lever depressed, so as to raise the weight with the end of the lever. The word would not be used when lifting a weight by raising the lever. 'Wee mūs av' u pee's vur tu trūp's-n au'p wai' [we must have a piece (of timber) to prize it (the tree) up with].

3. sb. The state or condition of balancing on a pivot, esp. in phr. all to a tripse, see below.

Paving stones are often loose, and in wet weather splash the unwary. This condition is always described as being 'all to a tripse.' I heard a man on a scaffold say to another, 'Mind, Bill, thick plank's all to a tripse.' So of a heavy mass it would more freq. be said, 'get'n up to a tripse,' than 'tripse'-n up, the meaning being identical.

TRIP-SKIN, sb. e.An.¹ Nrf.¹ 1. A piece of leather worn on the right-hand side of the skirt, by spinners, on which the spindle plays, and the yarn is pressed by the hand of the spinner. 2. The skinny part of roasted meat, which becomes tough and dry, before the whole can be dressed.

TROAP, sb. Ags. (JAM.) A boys' game; see below.

Played by two persons, with bandies, or sticks hooked at the end, and a bit of wood called a nacket. At each end of the ground occupied, a line is drawn. He who strikes off the nacket from the one line, tries to drive it as near the other as possible. The object of his antagonist, who stands between him and the goal, is to throw back with his hand the nacket to the line from which the other has struck it. If he does this, he takes the place of the other. If not, the distance is measured between the striking point and the nacket with one of the sticks used in striking; and for every length of the stick one is counted against the caster. It is indeed a trial of strength between the one who strikes and the other who throws, to see whether the latter can throw, as far as the other can strike, the nacket.

Edb. A' the Trout-shows, in a bang, Do come, and to the barn they thrang, Har'st Rig (1794) 28, ed. 1801; 'Trout-shows' signifies 'come here.' 'Tis a common tho' absurd appellation for Highlanders; probably from being in general the only Erse understood by the Lowlanders, ib. note.

TROVE(E), see Trough.

TROVE, sb. Obs. Abd. A turf.

These lands . . . have for centuries been wasted by the practice of cutting up the sward into turf, for the different purposes of mixing it with the stable and byre dung . . . for roofing houses, when the sward is pared thin, and for fuel, which they call troves, Statist. Acc. XV. 456 (JAM.).

[ON. torf, a turf, sod (VIGFUSSON).]

TROW, *sb.*¹ Sc. Nhb. Yks. Not. Wor. Shr. Glo. Som. Dev. 1. Obs. A double boat, esp. used in salmon-spearing; also used in pl. with the same meaning; see below.

s.Sc. Two pieces of wood, each formed like the half or section of an ellipsis, fenced with upright boards, so as to prevent the entrance of water. These two are conjoined by means of iron hooks, or a cross-board; the broad part of the one being placed towards that of the other. An interstice is left between the two sections, so that the water is seen distinctly through it. . . Used in . . . night-fishing on rivers for salmon. Through the interstice by means of the lights the fishers can see and more certainly strike their prey (JAM.). Rxb. MURRAY Hawick Characters (1901) 8. Dmf. Three fishers whose rude Annan voices I heard busy in their traws in the Gallowbank pool, CARLYLE Lett. (Aug. 20, 1841). n.Cy.¹ Nhb.¹ A double boat, consisting of two single, narrow, flat-bottomed boats, each about ten feet long, fourteen inches extreme breadth, and twelve inches deep, united at the stem and diverging by an angular curve towards their sterns, which are braced together at the top by a piece of flat board. The traws is or was used in the North Tyne in spearing salmon in parts of the river where they cannot be taken with a net. One man usually guides the traws with a pole or bang, whilst another stands with one leg in each trow, holding a leister in his hand ready to strike the fish, OLIVER (the Younger) Rambles in Nhb. (1835) 154. Yks. (K.), w.Yks.¹

2. A vessel for navigation on a canal or river; see below.

Not.² Wor. A sort of barge for the carriage of goods, Horae Subsecivae (1777) 441. w.Wor.¹ s.Wor.¹ Rounded at both ends; carries up to 130 tons weight. Shr.¹ Obs. A Severn trading vessel—a barge on a very large scale—wide, flat-bottomed, and schooner-rigged, usually about 80, or from 80 to 90, tons burthen, occasionally larger still, and sometimes smaller; there were traws of not more than 40 tons: they used to navigate up-stream, beyond Shrewsbury, as high as Pool Quay, but no farther. Traws have long ceased to ply up and down Shropshire Severn, discharging and taking in cargo at the different wharfs in the course of their passage, . . . but the name of the old vessel is still preserved as a public-house sign, 'The Trow,' at Jackfield; Shr.² Glo. Horae Subsecivae (1777) 441; Glo.¹ A boat of 80 tons used on the Severn.

Hence Trowman, sb., obs., the captain or master of a 'trow.'

Shr.¹ This Indenture made . . . Between John Rogers of the Town of Shrewsbury in the County of Salop Trowman and Martha his Wife of the one part and Thomas Rogers of the said Town of Shrewsbury Trowman and Brother of the said John Rogers of the other part. Quoted from the preamble to a private deed.

3. A kind of boat used on the coast; see below.

Som. Used at Bristol. 'The Fanny was a ketch-rigged (two-masted) trow, of 120 tons, . . . and was used for trading purposes,' Bristol Times (June 17, 1875); (W.F.R.). Dev. On the south coast about Sidmouth a small fishing-boat is a trow [troa'], ELWORTHY Wd. Bk. (1888).

[Such as bryngeth whete to towne, as wele in trowys, as otherwyse, by lande and by watir, Eng. Gilds, 424. OE. trog, a boat (B.T.).]

VOL. VI.

TROW, *sb.*² Sc. Also written trowe and in form drow S. & Ork.¹ [trou.] 1. A fairy, goblin; an evil spirit; see below. Cf. troll, *sb.*²

Sh.I. That chain . . . was wrought by . . . the drows, SCOTT Pirate (1821) x; The Drows or Trows, the legitimate successors of the northern duergar and somewhat allied to the fairies, reside, like them, in the interior of green hills and caverns, and are most powerful at midnight. They are curious artificers in iron, as well as in the precious metals, and are sometimes propitious to mortals but more frequently capricious and malevolent, ib. note; The demonology of these islands, according to its more modern form, is said to include three orders of spirits, the Fairies, the Trow, and the Trows. . . Trows are described as gloomy and malignant, even prone to injure men. . . There are two classes, Hill-trows and Sea-trows. . . It is an article of the vulgar creed that they often carry off children (JAM.); It was generally believed that steel instruments and silver coins possessed wonderful virtue in counteracting the malevolence of witches and trows, SPENCE Flk-Lore (1899) 122. Or.I. (S.A.S.); Trowies canna tak' thoo, Hushie ba, lammie, FERGUSON Rambles (1884) 168; It is believed by those living on the coast that the trows do much injury to fishermen, and particularly that they destroy the fishing-grounds (JAM.); S. & Ork.¹ Kcb. TROTTER Gall. Gossip (1901) 183.

Hence (1) Trowie, adj. elfish, belonging to the trolls; (2) Trowie-gloves, sb. pl. sponges.

(1) Sh.I. John, while crossing the Hill of Wormidale, had been taken into a trowie abode, SPENCE Flk-Lore (1899) 151; She would then pretend to have found the very holes which the trowie arrows had pierced, MANSON Ann. (1900) 122; S. & Ork.¹ MS. add. (2) Cai. Sponges are found upon the shore in great plenty, shaped like a man's hand, and called by the people Trowie gloves, Statist. Acc. VII. 396 (JAM.).

2. The devil; also used fig. as a term of compassion in phr. poor trow.

3. One of the characters in a Christmas mumming play; gen. in phr. the Derby tup, or t'owd tup.

w.Yks. A Yule-tide mummer who assumes the character of a tup. . . About the year 1845 a cousin of my father's, . . . living at Hensworth, near Pontefract, described to him the Christmas mummers' game as played there. One of the actors in it went by the name of 'the old tup.' This tup ran about on all fours, and had . . . rams' horns, either real or imitation, on his head, N. & Q.

(1898) 9th S. ii. 348; 'Tup o' Derby' . . . was represented by a man going on all fours and wearing the necessary hirsute covering. The rams' horns were often gilded, ib. 511. n.Not. 'The Darby Tup' is in evidence all over the county at Christmas time, and it is known here in n.Not. and Yks. immediately adjoining. . . In this district it is called 't'owd tup,' 'Darby tup,' and 'a little tup' by the various bands of boys who each Christmas take it round. The lads get themselves up as 'guisers' and the 'tup' wears a dried ram's head. Most of the boys here begin their 'nominy' thus: 'There is a little tup, sir, A-standin' at your door, An' if you'll have 'im in, sir, He'll please you all the more. Fayley Fayley, Laddy faladdy, iday.' And they end: 'An' aw t'owd women i' Darby Came beggin' for his tail To ring the Darby passing bell That hangs upon the nail. Fayley, &c. . . The lads also make 't'owd tup' the centre of a 'mumming play,' in which there are five chanters besides 't'up,' one of them in woman's dress. In this play . . . an attempt is made to sell the 'tup,' which was 'bought at Darby.' The owner fails to make a bargain and says, 'Then Ah'll hay some mutton for my supper.' The fourth actor is a butcher, and here he comes in to 'stick t'tup,' and is allowed to do so, ib.

4. Obs. The last basket or corf sent up out of the pit at the end of a year; see below.

n.Cy. (HALL.) Nhb. Thou's often help'd to buss the tyup, WILSON Pitman's Pay (1843) 52; Nhb.¹ It originated in the ceremony called 'Bussin the tyup,' which accompanied 'sendin away the tyup' for the last time before the beginning of the holidays, or 'gaady days,' then customary at Christmas as well as when the binding time was over. The tyup was a ram's horn, used as a token all through the year, and sent up with every twentieth corf, or the last in every score. But, before laying the pit in for holiday time, it was usual to draw all the corves to bank to be dried and fettled. The last corf was half filled with clay, and on this the tyup was laid, whilst as many lighted candles as possible were stuck into the clay. The tyup thus 'bussed' was sent away to the surface as an expression of rejoicing, and its ascent in the shaft was eagerly watched.

3. Comp. Tut-ball, (1) a game of ball; the game of rounders; (2) a child's ball.

(1) e.Yks.¹ Now only played by boys, but half a century ago by adults on Ash Wednesday, believing that unless they did so they would fall sick in harvest time. This is a very ancient game, and was elsewhere called stool-ball. w.Yks.² Shr. Tut-ball; as played at a young ladies' school at Shiffnal fifty years ago. The players stood together in their 'den,' behind a line marked on the ground, all except one, who was 'out,' and who stood at a distance and threw the ball to them. One of the players in the den then hit back the ball with the palm of the hand, and immediately ran to one of three brick-bats, called 'tuts.' The player who was 'out' tried to catch the ball and to hit the runner with it while passing from one 'tut' to another. If she succeeded in doing so she took her place in the den and the other went 'out' in her stead. This game is very nearly identical with rounders, BURNE Flk-Lore (1883) 324; Shr.¹ Chiefly played by girls. (2) e.Lan.¹

TUTTING, sb. Obs. Lin. 1. A tea-party; a feast.

A tea-drinking for women, succeeded by stronger potations in company of the other sex, and ending, as might be expected, in scenes of ribaldry and debauchery (HALL.); A sort of evening party among the humbler classes of females, in which tea is succeeded by a dance. . . Objectionable gatherings of this kind do no doubt take place, but the stigma must not be applied too indiscriminately, BROOKES Tracts Gl.; Lin.¹ A landlady who wished to have a 'tutting,' gave notice of her intention to all her female acquaintance, whether married or single. On the day and at the hour specified the visitors assembled and were regaled with tea, . . . but on the removal of that the table was replenished with a bowl and glasses, and exhilarated with potent punch, when each guest became a new creature. About this time the husbands and sweethearts arrived, paid their half guineas each for the treatment of themselves and partners, joined the revelry, and partook of the amusements proposed by their dear loves. . . This custom, which was confined solely to the lower orders, is now very properly almost abolished.

(1) Brks. The ancient Hocktide customs are being observed in Hungerford this week. Yesterday the commoners were summoned by the blowing of a horn, and the proceedings opened with the despatch of tithing or tutty men on their arduous but pleasant duty. In accordance with a charter granted in the days of John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, the duty of the tutty men includes a call at every house in the town and the demand of a toll from the male members. Furthermore, the women folk have to undergo the ordeal of being kissed by the tutty men. These were Messrs. Taylor and McKerlie, both young and not ill-looking, Dy. Mail (Apr. 17, 1901) 3; Hocktide at Hungerford, which takes place in April each year, has long gained notoriety. It has been the immemorial custom for the two chosen 'tuttymen,' or bailiffs, who collect the penny-tax on that day from every house, to claim a kiss from one lady at least of each family that they visit. As a rule, this claim is allowed, and duly carried out. . . The tutty men carry staves decorated with ribbons of many colours, and they are usually men of influential standing in the town, Answers (Mar. 8, 1902) 319; Brks.¹ The 'tithing-men,' or in common speech, 'tuttimen,' are selected from the tradesmen of the town. . . Before the establishment of the county police, they had to act as constables, and assist in preserving order in the town. In addition to this, on 'Hockney Day'—which is the Tuesday following Easter week— they have to visit each house in the borough and demand a coin of the realm from each male; and have the privilege of taking, if not freely given, a kiss from each woman. . . The said tithing-men carry each a staff about six feet long, bedecked with choice flowers, and having streamers of blue ribbons; the whole being surmounted with a cup and spike bearing an orange, which is given with each salute, and then replaced by another one, Chambers's Jru. (2) e.Som. TWIGGING, sb. Not. War. Wor. [twi'gin.] The practice or right of cutting twigs of birch or other trees, or osiers, for various purposes.

Not. I first let the twigging to the besom makers, MARSHALL Review (1814) IV. 161. War., Wor. In the districts in which asparagus is grown there is a sufficient demand for these twigs, which are sold in bundles of 100, to make twiggling a remunerative process. In the meadows on the Avon side, on the farm on which I live, a workman is now employed (January 1902) in this operation. But there is also an illegitimate trade carried on. A few nights ago men were observed to be trespassing over this farm, and it was supposed that they had come with the intention of twiggling. Men who can steal twigs in this way find a ready market for them, and twiggling in this sense is regarded as analogous to poaching (E.S.).

TWIGGLE, v. Wor. Cor. Also written twigle Wor. [twi'gl.] To wriggle about. s.Wor. (H.K.), Cor.²

TWIKE, *sb.*¹ Nhb.¹ [twaik.] A pointed stake used in the game of 'twikes.' Hence Twikes or Twikey, sb. a game; see below; called also 'Sticky-stack' (q.v., s.v. Sticky, *adj.*¹ 2).

The game is played by throwing a twike, which sticks into the turf. The opponent has to dislodge his adversary's twike and at the same time to fix his own into the soil. In another form of the game each player selects his home or base at ten or twelve yards' distance from a central spot. They then stand in the centre, and proceed to throw their pointed twikes until one fails to stick into the ground. The misser must then run to a fixed spot, whilst his companions commence to dig up the turf from his base, and to carry it to their own. At the end of the game each player has presumably a hole and a heap of this acquired turf at his base, and if the turf when laid down fails to completely fill the hole a fine is inflicted.

TWIT, *sb.*¹ Sc. Yks. Lan. [twit.] A weaving term: anything entangled; that which gives resisting power to the thread.

Lth. Is't a cursed wab o' yarn That winna work, for knots and twits? THOMSON Poems (1819) 27. w.Yks. (J.M.); w.Yks.¹ There's a twit ith' yarn. ne.Lan.¹

Hence (1) Twitty, adj. of yarn: uneven; (2) Twitty-end, sb. an end which has the appearance of being cut or broken in the process of spinning or 'roving.'

(1) w.Yks. When woollen thread is carelessly drawn in spinning, or when it is attempted to be drawn beyond what its fineness allows, thin places appear, which become very hard twisted, and these soon break under the strain of weaving. Twitty warp is therefore disliked by the weaver (W.T.). (2) w.Yks. (F.R.)

TWIT, *sb.*² Wil. [twit.] The washings after the best cider has been made.

Wil.¹ n.Wil. After the apples, in cider-making, have been

S. & Ork.¹; and in forms odal S. & Ork.¹; uthall, uthel

Or.I. 1. The tenure of land held by uninterrupted succession, without any original charter and without subjection to feudal service or the acknowledgment of any superior.

Sh.I. HIBBERT Desc. Sh. I. (1822) 37, ed. 1891; The land was held originally according to the Norse 'udal' system, or system of absolute property and free transmission from father to son without deed of inheritance. But soon after the Islands were handed over to Scotland, the feudal system was more fully introduced, i.e. the system of stipendiary property, by which the 'udallers' (udal-farmers) became tenants of landlords, JAKOBSEN Dial. (1897) 4; S. & Ork.¹ Or.I. The richt and tytil of 6 mark land uthel, lyand in the town of Gruting, PETERKIN Notes (1822) Append. 40. Dmf. Only holding good in the four towns barony of Lochmaben, HISLOP Anecdote (1874) 578.

Hence Udaller, sb. a holder of 'udal' land.

Sh.I. Cases of importance were, at stated periods, tried by the Grand Foude, and at an annual court, at which all udallers were obliged to attend; new legislative measures were enacted, HIBBERT Desc. Sh. I. (1822) 39, ed. 1891; S. & Ork.¹ Or.I. 'Sae thrive I, Sir,' replies the prudent udalder, 'that's just gin ye hae sillar eneugh,' VEDDER Orcadian Skelches (1832) 19.

2. Comp. (1) Udal-born, the next heir of an 'udaller'; (2) -fence, a fence surrounding a piece of 'udal-land'; (3) -land, land held by 'udal' tenure; (4) -man, a man holding property by 'udal-right'; (5) -right, the right of holding land by virtue of succession without any charter or acknowledgment of feudal superior.

(1) Sh.I. There was a law in Shetland empowering the possessors of udal lands, with the consent of their heirs, to dispose of their patrimony to any person who would undertake their support for life. Such disposers were then received into the house of their maintainer under the name of his opgester; whence the law by which estates could be alienated from the udal-born for such a purpose, was named the custom of opgestery, HIBBERT Desc. Sh. I. (1822) 128, ed. 1891. (2) These dignitaries divided between them in equal shares the tenth part of the corn that was enclosed within the udal fence, ib. 39. (3) S. & Ork.¹ Or.I. WALLACE Desc. Ork. (1693) 111, ed. 1883. (4) Sh.I. (JAM.); The udalmen were likewise called Rothmen or Roythmen; that is self-holders, or men holding in their own right, by way of contradistinction to feudatories, who hold derivatively, or by a dependance on others, HIBBERT Desc. Sh. I. (1822) 44, ed. 1891; S. & Ork.¹ Or.I. Spulzeit diuerss of the uthallmen and heritors of the said cuntrie of Orknay and Zetland, Edb. Antiq. Mag. (1848) 60. (5) Or.I. Such as are possessed by the udal-right, a possession the natives have successively, without either charter or seasin, WALLACE Desc. Ork. (1693) 111, ed. 1883.

[ON. ōdal, a law term, an allodium, property held in allodial tenure, patrimony (VIGFUSSON).]

VISSIK, sb. Obs. Sh.I. Also written viseck, vissack; and in form veesick S. & Ork.¹ A song; a ballad; see below.

He [St. Ola] was one of the kings of Norway, of whom strange things are reported in the songs they have made of him, called 'Vissiks.' These ballads or 'vissiks' were kept up for centuries, to a great extent as accompaniment to dance, an old mediaeval dance, in which all the persons taking part joined hands and formed a compact circle on the floor, moving forward and keeping a certain time with the feet. There was no need of any musical instrument. A fore-singer or precentor began every verse, and the others joined in, singing the chorus, JAKOBSEN Dial. (1897) 7; HIBBERT Desc. Sh. I. (1822) 103, ed. 1891; S. & Ork.¹

e.Lth. WADDELL Old Kirk Chr. (1893) 67. Ir. The neighbours of the deceased assemble, and spend the night in the room with the corpse, chatting and telling stories: in the meanwhile, of course, taking 'a blast av the pipe' and a drop of 'the craythure' to sustain them during their vigil. The conversation on such occasions naturally turns to a large extent on the virtues of the departed. . . Among the lower classes, 'wakes' are still very prevalent; beggars have their own 'wakes'. . . A 'wake' is quite an expensive ceremony to a poor struggling workman or tradesman; but he feels he would lose caste without holding it, Spectator (Nov. 30, 1889); 'There's a wake in the family,' an euphemistic expression for death (M.B.-S.). They always begin on Sunday, and last throughout the week, N. & Q. (1878) 5th S. x. 49; Chs.¹ The wakes are generally held on or about the Saint's day to whom the Church is dedicated; though I know of no wakes which are held at any other season than the autumn. . . The wakes are one of the grand events of the year from which dates are often reckoned; and it is customary for friends from a distance to visit each other during 'Wakes week'. . . I have very often heard people lamenting that the Wakeses are beginning, as it is a sure indication that winter is not far off. Bowdon Wakes are the earliest, I think, and they have given rise to a proverbial saying—'When Bowdon Wakes is at Bowdon winter is at Newbridge Hollow.' Newbridge Hollow is about a couple of miles from Bowdon. It is or was the custom for farmhouse servants to be re-hired in Moberley at the Wakes, though they did not actually change their places till Christmas. s.Chs.¹ Mr. Holland is wrong in supposing that the Wakeses are held only in the autumn; I know of at least two that are held much earlier in the year. . . At Wybunbury Wakes, held at the beginning of March, fig-pies are eaten. At Bunbury Wakes rye-grass and clover should be ready to cut. . . At Wrenbury Wakes early apples are ripe. 2. pl. A children's singing game; see below.

[For rhymes, &c. see GOMME Games (1898) II. 329-42.] Stb. 'Water, water, wallflowers, Growing up so high: We are all young maidens, And we shall all die—Excepting Maggie Stuart, She's the youngest of us all: She can dance, and she can sing, And she can knock us all! Fie! fie! for shame again! She'll turn her back to the wall again.' When they mention the name of the girl, it is supposed that she is the youngest, and she has to turn her back to the wall, NICHOLSON Golspie (1897) 174. Nai. After all the players have turned their faces outside the ring, they all throw their arms over their heads, and turn so as to face inwards if possible without disjoining hands, GOMME ib. Eig., Bnff., Abd., Arg., Gall., Kcb., Ant., Dub., Wif. ib. w.Yks. In the Wakefield version . . . a child stands in the middle, and at the fifth line all the children say their own name, ib. Crn., Stf., Not., Lin., Nhp. ib. Shr. The players form a ring and move round. Chorus. 'Wallflowers, wall-flowers, growing up so high! We shall all be maidens, [and so] we shall all die! Excepting Alice Gittens, she is the youngest flower, She can hop, and she can skip, and she can play the hour! Three and four, and four and five, Turn your back to the wall-side!' Alice Gittens turns her back to the inside of the ring and continues the game facing outwards, and they repeat the dance and song, naming the next youngest girl, and so on till all the party have their backs to the middle, when they go through them all again, till every girl faces inwards again. At Wenlock, instead of this they summon each in turn to face inwards by adding to the chorus: 'O Alice! your true love will send you a letter to turn round your head!' BURNE Flk-Lore (1883) 6) 512-3. Oxf. 'Wallflowers, wallflowers, growing up so high, We're all ladies, and we shall have to die, Excepting [naming a girl's name], she's the only one; She can hop, and she can skip, and she can turn the candlestick.' On this the player named turns round rapidly, and rejoins hands with her face turned away from the ring. The rhyme is repeated until all the players have 'turned the candlestick,' when the whole is gone through again inversely, and all the girls stand with their faces inwards again (G.O.). Brks. At Enbourne School it is the tallest child who is first named, and who turns her back, GOMME ib. Lon. The child named leaves the ring and turns with her face to the wall, ib. Cmb., Nrf., ib. Suf. One child stands outside the ring; the ring sings the first four lines, and the child outside sings the rest, ib. Ken., Sur. ib. Sus. At Hurstmonceux a girl chooses a boy after her face is turned to the wall, ib. Hmp., I.W. ib. Wil. It is thrown several times over, and passed under, the horse's back, when carrying a load of corn or pack of wool. Lan. The load being tied on . . . with a girth named a 'wantah,' THORNBUR Hist. Blackpool (1837) 310. Nhp.¹ The primitive meaning of this word was, a surcingle for securing a wallet or other burden on a pack-horse. It was composed of leather, with a hook attached to one end and a rope at the other; which rope was passed over the hook, and by the aid of muscular exertion the burden was tightened and secured. . . The sense here described has become quite obsolete, probably from the discontinuance of the pack-horse: but the name is still preserved in the hempen cord or leather strap which passes under the horse, and is secured to both shafts, to prevent the cart rising up when heavily laden. Wanties occur in an advertisement of sale in the Northampton Herald as late as 1850. War.¹³, e.An.¹ Ess. Arch. (1863) II. 188. WARLOCK, *v.*¹ and *sb.*³ Lan. Chs. Som. [wɔ'lok, ək.]

1. v. To tighten the rope or chain which binds the load upon a wagon; see below.

Chs.¹ We speak of 'warlocking the ropes,' or we say the load is 'warlocked.' w.Som.¹ In binding the load upon a timber-carriage, it is usual to pass a chain loosely around the several pieces, and then by inserting a lever, this chain may be twisted up to any desired tightness. To tighten a chain thus is to 'warlock' it.

Hence Warlock't, ppl. adj. entangled; ruffled; involved. s.Lan. Heaw's this rope gettn warlockt athisn? BAMFORD Dial. (1854).

2. sb. A method of tightening the rope or chain of a wagon-load; the fastening thus made.

Chs.¹ The ropes, after being made fast, are tightened by being drawn together with another length of rope, or sometimes twisted with a peg. This peculiar method of tightening is called 'a warlock.' w.Som.¹

2. Phr. to warn the water, see below.

N.Cy.¹ This word has a peculiar local application in the lower vales of the Tees, a river, which from the rapidity of its upper course, and from the numerous streams it receives from hill and moorland, often rises suddenly. In that district to warn the water is to give the inhabitants timely notice of a flood.

3. To cite, summon to some public office or duty; to give notice of a meeting, &c., esp. to summon by verbal invitation to a funeral.

WARNEY, sb. Sc. Nhb. Yks. Oxf. Also in form warner Oxf. A boys' game; see below.

Keb. GOMME Games (1898) II. 342. Nhb. The winter games were 'Warney,' 'Dumpers,' 'Moon the Cuddy,' DIXON Whittingham Vale (1895) 269; The place where 'warney' was generally played was across a wide roadway between two walls, which served as goals; boundaries were also fixed up and down the road to the right and left, over which, if one of the fugitives stepped, he was considered the captive of 'warney.' Say twenty boys (or any number) were going to play, nineteen of these stood against one of the walls, whilst one of the twenty was chosen to act as 'warney.' Then the nineteen having hold of hands (the first time over) shouted 'Warney! Warney! hoo!' and ran across to reach the other wall (the goal). It was 'Warney's' endeavour to catch one of the boys and 'cop' him. If he succeeded in copping him he was then his prisoner, and had to assist his captor in captivating his late comrades: this went on until all were caught and copped. If the captor could not manage to 'cop' his prisoner he could not claim him. After the first time or turn across, which was performed in a sort of charge, it was then a general milee, and 'Warney! Warney! hoo!' was the battle-cry throughout, ib. Author's note. n.Yks. (I.W.), Oxf. (G.O.)

16. A half-rod of underwood in a coppice: see below.

Nhp.¹ At the time of felling the underwood of a coppice, previous to the sale, it is customary to divide it into half-roads (the eighth of an acre), each half-rod being called a wash, and marked out in straight lines with sticks called wash-sticks. One half-rod, that is, the underwood growing upon it, is the perquisite of the keeper, and is termed the cabin-cut, because he has the privilege of constructing a cabin upon it with the best wood he can select, to serve as a shelter during the time of sale, after which it is the property of the keeper.

Hence Wash-stick, sb. a stick used in marking out a 'wash.'

Six or seven feet long, and five or six inches in diameter, cut from the underwood. The keeper's perquisite when they have served their purpose, ib.

(1) Yks. They usually carry a 'wessel-bob,' or large bunch of evergreens hung with oranges and apples and coloured ribbons, N. & Q. (1867) 3rd S. xi. 144; In Wakefield it is still quite common for children to go from house to house with a box—often a fancy soap-box, or suchlike representative of the stable or manger, retaining its original inscription, &c. on the inside of the lid—lined with coloured paper, and about half filled with evergreens, on which repose three dolls in ordinary doll's costume, but supposed to represent Mary, Joseph, and the Babe; red-checked apples, oranges, &c. (I think I have seen 'crackers'), are also put in. The children call the whole affair a . . . 'wessel-bob.' and exhibit it from house to house, ib. (1879) 5th S. xi. 25; In W[il]sden] we call the small decorated fir trees which 'wassailers' carry round from house to house at Christmas time, by this name, Leds Merc. Suppl. (Nov. 18, 1889); w.Yks.³ A garland or bouquet carried on New Year's Eve from house to house, and adorned with fruit, evergreens, artificial flowers, &c. Formerly a doll gaily dressed, representing the Blessed Virgin, was placed in the midst. On Tuesday, December 29th, 1874, a 'wessel bob' was brought here for exhibition. It consisted of two hoops covered and ornamented with coloured cut paper; a little fir tree in the middle, ornamented with an apple, an orange, a doll (like a man), and a wax cherry; w.Yks.³ The whole generally enclosed in a case (sometimes a cloak is simply thrown over), and screened. The wassail-cup hymn there in use runs thus: 'Here we come a wassailing, &c., HENDERSON Flk-Lore (1879) ii. (7) w.Yks.³ (8) Cor. December and January, with the courants and geesy-dancing, and carols and wassail-singing, 'Q.' Wandering Heath (1895) 182. (9) w.Yks.³ At Holmfirth the wessel song is only sung at Epiphany after dark. . . . The chorus runs thus: 'For in Chersmas time people travel far and near; So I wish you a merry Chersmas, And a happy new year.' 8. v. To go round singing, gen. at Christmas-time; see below. Gen. in phr. to go a-wassailing.

w.Yks. At Christmas time we have many parties of little children coming a-wesselling, N. & Q. (1867) 3rd S. xi. 144; Children carry about these figures [of the Virgin and Child] . . . in what they call milly-boxes, a corruption of 'My Lady.' The boxes are lined with spice, oranges, and sugar. They call this 'going a-wassailing,' HENDERSON Flk-Lore (1879) ii; To go a-wessling or a-wassailing, to go about with the wassail-bowl singing a festival song, drinking the health of the inhabitants, and collecting money, is still observed in this district. Children go around on New Year's Eve with a hawthorn branch decorated and hung with apples and oranges. Sometimes two hoops crossed one through the other are used, decorated in the same manner, Hlf. Courier (July 3, 1897); w.Yks.² The carol [sung by children going a-wassailing] is as follows: 'We've been a while a wandering All through the fields so green; And now we come a wessling So plainly to be seen. O my jolly wessel, O my jolly wessel, Love and joy come to you, And to our wessel bough [boo]; Pray God bless you, Pray God bless you, Pray God send you A happy New Year.' The children carry a bough of yew or holly decorated with coloured papers, ribbons, oranges, &c. In the fifth and sixth lines 'our jolly wessel' is often, if not generally heard; w.Yks.³ To go round on New Year's Eve (and sometimes for a few nights previous) singing a ballad; w.Yks.³ Sus. Singing carols and songs by parties of labouring men, going about from house to house. . . Christmas fare is shared with them in exchange for their minstrelsy. The period during which this wassailing is lawful, extends from Christmas Eve to Twelfth Day, N. & Q. (1852) 1st S. vi. 600. Wil.¹ Going about singing and asking for money at Christmas. Cor.¹ About New Year's Day four or six men join together; after dark, carrying with them a little bowl, they go from house to house, opening the doors, and calling out 'Warsail.' They then sing some doggrel rhymes, asking people to give something to 'These poor jolly Warsail boys, Come travelling through the mire.' This custom has long been confined to the villages. [See BRAND Pop. Antiq. (ed. 1813) l. 4-7. w.Yks.³ Intro. 17-18.]

Hence Wassailers, sb. pl. (1) children who go round with a 'wassail-bob'; Christmas waits; (2) mummers acting in the play of St. George and the Dragon.

9. To drink to the success of the apple-crop; see below.

Sus. It is the custom, in the cider districts, to worsle [wassail] the apple-trees on New Year's Eve, Flk-Lore Rec. (1878) 13; In the neighbourhood of Chailey . . . a troop of boys visit the different orchards, and encircling the apple trees they repeat the following words: 'Stand fast root, bear well top, Pray the God send us a good howling crop. Every twig, apples big, Every bough, apples enow. Hats full, caps full, Full quarters, sacks full.' They then shout in chorus, one of the boys accompanying them on the cow's horn; during this ceremony they rap the trees with their sticks, N. & Q. (1852) 1st S. v. 293. n.Wil. The custom of wassailing is still continued. A party of men assemble in the evening, and having obtained a cheese-bowl decorate it with two intersecting hoops, covered with ribands, and proceed to the principal farm houses, &c. of a parish, at the doors of which they sing the common wassailing song, after which they are generally regaled with strong beer and toast, BRITTON Beauties (1825). Som. (W.F.R.) e.Som. W. & J. Gl. (1873). w.Som.¹ On old Christmas Eve (5th January), or the eve of the Epiphany, it was the custom not long since, and may be still, for the farmer, with his men, to go out into the orchard, and to place toast steeped in cider, along with a jug of the liquor, up in the 'vork' of the biggest apple tree, by way of libation; then all say—'Apple tree, apple tree, I wassail thee! To blow and to bear, Hat vulls, cap vulls, dree-bushel-bag-vulls! And my pockets vull too! Hip! Hip! Hooraw!' (Bang with one or more guns.) This ceremony and formula is repeated several times at different trees, with fresh firing of guns. I can well remember quite a fusillade from various orchards on old Christmas Eve. The pronunciation of wassail [wusaa'yul] is by no means 'wassle,' but the second syllable is long drawn out, and the first very short. Dev. The custom of wassailing prevailed years ago, and is not extinct now in some places, TOZER Poems (1873) 65. Cor. This drink was called 'lamb's-wool,' and with it the trees were wassailed, HUNT Pop. Rom. w.Eng. (1865) 387, ed. 1896.

Hence Wassailers, sb. pl. those who drink success to the apple-crop.

Sus. On New Year's Eve the worslers form a ring round the apple-tree they are to worsle, and having sung a certain rhyme, all shout in chorus except one boy who blows a horn. Farmers give a few pence to the worslers, Flk-Lore Rec. (1878) l. 13.

A piece of ground is chosen for a den, circumscribed by certain bounds. He, who occupies this ground, bears the name of Willie Wastell; the rest approach the limits of his domain; and his object is to get hold of one of them, who sets his foot within it, and to drag him in. If successful, the person who is seized occupies his place, till he can relieve himself by laying hold of another. He who holds the den dare not go beyond the limits, else the capture goes for nothing. The assailants repeat the following rhyme:—'Willie, Willie Wastell, I am on your castle. A' the dogs in the town winna pu' Willie doun.' It is thus given in Sc. Presb. Eloquence, 139: 'Like Willie, Willie Wastel, I am in my castel. A' the dogs in the town, Dare not ding me doun.' This form . . . shows that the rhyme was formerly repeated by the person supposed to hold the castle.

WASTER, *sb.*¹ and v. Var. dial. uses in Sc. and Eng. Also written waister Sc. Cum.⁴ w.Yks.⁴; wayster Cum.¹; and in forms waster e.Yks.¹; weaster Yks. WEAN, v. Chs. Lei. Also in form wane s.Chs.¹ [wɪn; wɛn.] Of corn: to cease to obtain nutriment from the seed; to put forth new roots.

Chs.¹ When young oats or barley cease to obtain nutriment from the seed, and collect their food from the soil by means of their roots, they are in a very tender condition, and unless the weather is genial they frequently become yellow and sickly. The young plant in this condition is spoken of as 'being weaned,' or as 'pining for its mother.' Lei. About the beginning of May was commonly the time that their barley took its weaning, that is, when the leaves of the barley begin to die, having till that time been for the most part nourished by the milk and flour of the corn; but then it begins to put forth new roots, and new leaves, and to betake itself wholly to its roots for nourishment, LISLE Husbandry (1757) 146.

Hence Waning-time, sb. the time when corn begins to be 'weaned.'

s.Chs.¹ One often hears the remark made of lee wuts, or oats sown on newly-ploughed grass land, that 'it's wanin'-time with 'em.'

Brks. Two excellent Jersey cows, in full profit, a weanyer calf, Oxf. Times (June 28, 1902) 2. Sur.¹ It'm vii Wanyers price xxxiii, Inventory, College of Lingfield, Sur., 1524; Item v wenyers, ib. 1544. Sus.¹ Wean-year-beast.

WEAPON-SHAW, sb. Obs. Sc. Also in forms wapenschaw, wapinschaw, wappenschaw, waponschaw. 1. A muster of arms; an armed display; see below.

Sc. The names of all who appeared, were to be enrolled. These meetings were not designed for military exercise, but only for showing that the lieges were properly provided with arms. . . It was also provided, that a captain should be chosen for each parish to instruct the parishioners in the military exercise; for which purpose they were to assemble twice at least every month, during May, June, and July (JAM.); They discouraged . . . even the ancient wappenschaws, as they were termed, when the feudal array of the county was called out, and each crown-vassal was required to appear with such muster of men and armour as he was bound to make by his sief, Scott Old Mortality (1816) i. A piece of straw . . . is bent in the form of an acute triangle. Both the ends are lighted and begin to burn slowly. . . It is now carefully balanced at the angular point on another straw held perpendicularly in the hand of No. 1, who exclaims: 'Wha'll buy my jantle Jockie beland?' No. 2 answers: 'What if he dees i' dy an haand?' No. 2 [sic] replies: 'Da back sall bear da saddle baand, thro' moss, thro' mire, thro' mony a laand, that gars my jantle Jockie dee or get a faa.' The burning triangle is now handed to No. 2, who repeats the same formula together with No. 3, and so on to the next; and anyone in whose hand the 'gentle Jockie dees' (fire goes out) or 'gets a faa' (falls) that one is in a wad, and is punished by kissing every person of the opposite sex present, or by answering a number of dark questions, SPENCE Flk-Lore (1899) 185-6. Lth. The young anes now at wads did play, An' were their dearies smacking, BRUCE Poems (1813) II. 101. Dmf. A game . . . called the wadds. Young men and women arranged themselves on each side of the hearth fire. . . It begins thus: 'O it's hame, an' it's hame, an' it's hame, hame, hame, I think this night I maun gae hame.' The other party cries: 'Ye had better lycht an' byde a' night, An' I'll choose you a bonnie ane' [here the person is named]. If the partner please: 'I'll set her up on the bonnie pear-tree, It's straught an' tall, an' sae is she, I wad wauke a' night her luv to be.' But if the person proposed be rejected: 'I'll set her up i' the bank dyke, She'll be rotten ere I be ripe, The corbies her auld banes wadna pyke.' This if she be old. If she be young and rejected: 'I'll set her up on the high crab-tree, It's soure and dowre, an' sae is she; She may gang to the mools unkest by me.' This refusal must be atoned for by a wadd or forfeit, CRONK Remains (1810) 113-5 note; The party are first fitted each with some ridiculous name, . . . such as Swatter-in-the-Sweet-Milk, Butter-Milk-and-Brose, the Gray Gled o' Glenwhargan Craig, &c. Then all being seated, one comes up, repeating the following rhymes: 'I never steal Rob's dog, nor never intend to do, But weel I ken wha steal him, and dern'd him in a cleugh, And pykit his banes bare, bare, bare enough! Wha but—wha but—' The object is to burst out suddenly with one of the fictitious names, and thus take the party bearing it by surprise. If the individual mentioned . . . failed . . . to say 'No me,' . . . he was subject to a forfeit; and this equally happened if he cried 'No me,' when it was the name of another person which was mentioned, CHAMBERS *Pop. The players being equally divided, and a certain space marked out between them, each lays down one or more wads or pledges at that extremity where the party to which he belongs, chuse their station. . . The two parties advancing to the boundary or line, seize the first opportunity of crossing it, by making inroads on the territories of each other. He who crosses the line, if seized by one of the opposite party, before he has touched any of their wads, is set down beside them as a prisoner, and receives the name of a stinker; nor can he be released till one of his own side can touch him, without being intercepted by any of the other. . . If any one is caught in the act of carrying off a wad it is taken from him; but he cannot be detained as prisoner, in consequence of his having touched it. . . When the one party have carried off . . . all the wads of the other, the game is finished (JAM.). (7) War.¹²³ (8) Dmf. (JAM.) Galt. 1. sb. A hoop with a skin stretched over it, used for winnowing, or carrying corn.

Sc. (JAM.); You shine like the sunny side of a shernie weight, KELLY Prov. (1721) 378. Sh.I. Sh. News (Feb. 16, 1901). Cai.¹ It consisted of a shallow hoop 15 to 18 inches in diameter, on which a sheep or calf's skin was stretched. Over the edge of this the unwinnowed grain was gently shaken in a draught between two opposite doors in a barn. The draught or current of air separated the good grain; the tails, the strumps, and the caff. n.Sc. There are two kind of wechts. The one is called a 'windin wecht,' immediately used for winnowing, as its name intimates. This is formed of a single hoop, covered with parchment. The other is called a 'maund-wecht,' having more resemblance of a basket, its rim being deeper than that of the other. Its proper use is for lifting the grain that it may be emptied into the 'windin wecht' (JAM.). ne.Sc. Take a sieve or a waicht and three times go through the form of winnowing corn, GREGOR *Flk. 4. A corner separated from the remainder of a field by some obstacle, such as a road.

Ken. Farmer: 'You don't quite understand what a went is, Sir. When a corner is cut off a field, as it might be, by a road, then we call it a went' (D.W.L.).

Hence Wented, ppl. adj. of a field: having a corner cut off by a road, &c. ib. 5. The bend of a fishing-line when not cast in one stretch. *Bnff.*¹ 6. Part of a 'fulling-stock'; see below.

w.*Som.*¹ It consists of a block of wood curved and tapering, made to fit the back or 'seat' of the 'stock.' Wents are of different thicknesses, and their use is to contract the size, or capacity of the stock, as may be required to suit the thickness or quantity of the cloth to be milled. If the stock is slack, i.e. if the cloth does not sufficiently fill it, the heavy feet will cut the cloth instead of milling it.

2. Obs. A reward given for lying; a great lie; a liar; see below.

n.Cy. It is a custom in the North when a man tells the greatest lie in the company to reward him with a whetstone, which is called lying for the whetstone, BUDWORTH Ramble to Lakes (1792) vi, in Exm. Scold. (1746) Gl., ed. 1879. Lei.¹ Gin him the whetstun! If a doon't shaa'p his-sen a bit, a woona git out a sooch another afor Tewsd'y wik! w.Som.¹ Dev. The adage is supposed to have arisen from a contest between two journey-men shoemakers, in or near Exeter, which place has been always remarkable for speaking truth, about the property of a whetstone—when it was agreed between them, that he, who could tell the greatest lye, should be intitled to it. Whereupon the first pretended that he once drove a ten penny nail through the moon—which the other swore was true—for he was himself on the other side and clinched it. By which he gained the whetstone and the character of a more notorious liar. Hence 'a clincher,' and 'give him the whetstone,' Horae Subsecivae (1777) 465. n.Dev. Exm. Scold. (1746) Gl., ed. 1879.

WHIG, sb. and *v.*¹ Obs. or obsol. Sc. Irel. Nhb. Dur. Also written wig Nhb.¹ 1. sb. An old name for a Presbyterian or Covenanter; see below. Cf. quig, *sb.*², whiggamore.

Sc. A name, imposed on those in the 17th cent. who adhered to the Presbyterian cause. By rigid Episcopalians, it is still given to Presbyterians in general; and, in the w. of Sc., even by the latter, to those who in a state of separation from the established church, profess to adhere more strictly to Presbyterian principles (JAM.); The sw. counties of Scotland have seldom corn enough to serve them round the year; and the northern parts producing more than they need, those in the west come in the summer to buy at Leith the stores that come from the north: and from a word Wiggam, used in driving their horses, all that drove were called the Whiggamors, and shorter the Whiggs. Now in that year [1648] after the news came down of Duke Hamilton's defeat, the ministers animated their people to rise, and march to Edinburgh; and they came up marching on the head of their parishes, with an unheard-of fury, praying and preaching all the way as they came. The Marquis of Argyll and his party came and headed them, they being about 6,000. This was called the whiggamors' inroad; and, ever after that, all that opposed the court, came, in contempt, to be called Whiggs, BURNER Own Times (1753) I. 58 (ib.). Gall. Their not keeping the church, their conversing with Whigs (as they called the Persecuted people), Gallowidian (1901) III. 55. Nhb.¹ It is rather curious to be informed by Mr. Brand, that he read a public register in St. Andrew's Church Vestry (Newcastle), intimating that there was a burying place in Sidgate of the quigs (Whigs). And to this day, dissenters, in many parts of Northumberland, are termed 'whigs,' Impartial Hist. of Newcastle (1801); 'Whigs,' the Northumberland reproach for Presbyterians, still in use in some inland localities. In Newcastle they and other Nonconformists were called 'quigs,' HARDY Denham Tracts (ed. 1892) 351.

Hence (1) Whiggery, sb. the practices or tenets of Presbyterians or Covenanters; (2) Whigging, sb. a contemptuous term for a 'Whig.'

(1) Sc. (JAM.); I'll hae nae whiggery in the barony of Tillietudlem, SCOTT Old Mortality (1816) vii. Twd. The country below it was still loyal and with no taint of whiggery, BUCHAN J. Burnet (1898) 309. (2) Frf. Let graceless whiglings jibe an' jeer, SMART Rhymes (1834) 131.

2. A rogue.
