How the 'whiteness' of the liver is to be detected is not very clear, but probably it is by the pallor of the face. At any rate, if you discover that a young woman is 'white-livered,' do not on any account marry her, because the whiteness of the liver is of a poisonous nature, and you assuredly will not live long with a white-livered young woman for your wife. WIDDY-WIDDY-WAY, sb. n.Cy. Nhb. Cum. Yks. Lon. Cor. Also written whiddy-whiddy-way Lon.; and in forms widdaway w.Yks.; widdy Cum.⁴; witee-witte-way N.Cy.¹; witty-witty-way Nhb.¹ A boys' game; see below. Cf. warney.

N.Cy.¹ Nhb.¹ Two boys start hand in hand from a 'bay,' and endeavour to touch their opponents. Anyone touched must return with them to the bay and join hands with the first to make a fresh sally. The numbers thus receive constant accessions; but if the chain of hands be broken, the sally has proved a failure, and each outsider endeavours to capture and ride in triumph on the back of one of his quondam pursuers. The broken and scattered rank is re-formed as soon as all have reached the bay, and each fresh sally is begun with a chorus:—'Widdy-widdy-way: the morrow's the market day; Slyarter, slyarter; comin away, comin away!' Cum.⁴ A boy having been 'counted out' by the saying of the following rhyme, 'Ikey, pikey, penny-pie; popalorum, jigum, jye; stand thee oot lug,' cries 'Widdy widdy way, Widdy widdy way; snatch an' a bobbin an' away, way, way! Snatch! t'furst yan I catch,' runs after one of the others, and if he succeeds in catching him lifts his hat and strikes the other one on the head, saying, 'I help me to catch aw t'rest.' They then make for the 'den' hand in hand, trying also to touch one of the other boys; should holds be broken, these two go straight 'home,' whilst the rest try to catch them and ride 'home' on their backs. There are variations of this game. w.Yks. (S.P.U.) Lon. 'Whiddy, whiddy, way, If you don't come, I won't play.' The players, except one, stand in a den or home. One player clasps his hands together, with the two forefingers extended. He sings out the above, and the boys who are 'home' then cry—'Warning once, warning twice, Warning three times over; When the cock crows out come I, Whiddy, whiddy, wake-cock. Warning!' This is called 'saying their prayers.' The boy who begins must touch another boy, keeping his hands clasped as above. These two then join hands, and pursue the others; those whom they catch also joining hands, till they form a long line. If the players who are in the home run out before saying their prayers, the other boys have the right to pummel them, or ride home on their backs, GOMME Games (1898) II. 374. Cor.¹; Cor.² The following is said in starting children for a race: 'Widdy, widdy, way, Is a very pretty play, Once, twice, three times, And all run away.' Off.

The players should look somewhat like a watch-spring. WROTH SILVER, phr. War. See below.

The Duke of Buccleuch holds annually on Knightlow Hill, near Coventry, at daybreak on November 11, what is called 'an audit of wroth silver,' to which twenty-seven parishes in Warwickshire are called upon to contribute. It is supposed to be a survival of an ancient custom of paying fees for passing over certain high-ways. Yesterday a crowd numbering several hundreds attended at 7 a.m., and gathered round an old stone cross, where the Duke's agent read the charter. He then read out the names of the contributing places. From some a penny was demanded, others more—in all, 9s. 4d. The money was readily paid by the assembly, and afterwards the people adjourned to the village inn, where breakfast was served. To this the Duke makes a monetary contribution, and provided glasses of hot rum and milk, in which his health was drunk to the accompaniment of musical honours, Scotsman (Nov. 12, 1902); At the summit of Knightlow Hill, in the pretty village of Dunchurch, is an old mound, with a large stone in the centre. The stone has a big hollow, and into this cavity money is poured before sunrise on St. Martin's Day of every year. The sums contributed vary from a penny to over two shillings, but the total does not exceed half-a-sovereign. The penalty for every penny not forthcoming is twenty shillings, or the forfeiture of 'a white bull with red nose and ears.' The payment is made by neighbouring parishes for the privilege of using certain roads, Dy. Chron. (Nov. 13, 1900); In 1879 at 6.45 in the morning (November 11) the 'wroth-money' was collected, TIMMINS Hist. War. (1889) 218.

When carried by underviewer or overman it is at once a distinguishing wand of office, a convenient walking stick, or a rod of punishment to evil-doers of juvenile years, as well as a measuring rod for setting off the work in the mine. In former times it was of the yet further service of forming a useful accompaniment in the descent of the pit, and was used to fend off the person from the sides of the shaft. 'The man descending with one thigh in the loop, and his left arm round the chain, with a heavy lantern in his hand, and with the yard-wand in his right hand, to guide and keep himself as near as possible in the centre of the shaft,' SCOTT Ventilation of Coal Mines (1868) 31. 'But that measures more than a yard,' remarked my husband; 'that must be nearly a rod long.' 'Oh, yes; but we call that a yard down here,' was the reply, ib. (1893) No. 13. Cor. The linear rod, pole, perch, or land yard is 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ yards of 3 feet in imperial measure, 6 yards or 18 feet in Cornish. The square rod, pole, perch, or land yard is of course the square of this, and 160 of them make the acre in either measure. Lace or yard are the common terms for the square of 18 feet, in measuring potatoes or anything else (J.W.).

Under the old poor-law men and boys who claimed employment were sent by the overseers to the different farms, and work was found there for them for a longer or shorter time according to the size of the several holdings. YARELY, see Early.

YAREWINDS, sb. pl. Obs. Shr.¹ A machine for holding yarn intended to be made into skeins or wound into balls. See below.

The yarewinds consisted of a reel and stand. The reel was a stock something like the nave of a wheel, with four arms, inserted crosswise, i.e. at opposite diameters; these arms were perforated at regular distances from the end, to receive the tall wooden pins round which the yarn was wound. By means of the holes—about five in each arm—the pins could be adjusted to 'slippings,' or skeins, of various lengths. The stand consisted of a small block, forming an apex, as it were, to the three legs which supported it, and having in its centre a pivot upon which the reel rotated. (A tripod, to serve as a stand for the reel, would sometimes be rudely fashioned by cutting a three-forked branch to the requisite length, and inverting it.) The whole affair was about two feet and a half from the ground. When spinning was a household industry, yarewinds supplemented the wheel; the yarn spun and twisted on the latter being wound on the reel, as the succeeding process by which the 'slippings' were formed. Linen-yarn, when it had been made into 'slippings,' was bleached, and afterwards returned to the yarewinds, from which it was wound into balls for the cottage weaver. Spinning-wheels and yarewinds were in use about 1840, and probably at a later date still.

YOULING, sb. Obs. Ken. See below. See Youle.

There is an odd custom used in these parts about Keston and Wickham, in Rogation Week; at which time a number of young men meet together for the purpose, and with a most hideous noise, run into the orchards, and, incircling each tree, pronounce these words: 'Stand fast, root; bear well, top; God send us a youling sop. Every twig apple big, Every bough apple enow.' For which incantation the confused rabble expect a gratuity in money, or drink. . . . If they are disappointed. . . they with great solemnity anathematize the owners and trees. . . 'It seems highly probable that this custom has arisen from the antient one of Perambulation, . . . and as the heathens supplicated Eolus, God of the winds, for his favorable blasts, so in this custom they still retain his name with a very small variation; this ceremony is called 'Youling,' HASTED *Hist. Buttons was no less popular [than 'bools'], and keen contests, creating great interest, engaged attention as to who, from 20 or 30 feet distant, would pitch their buttons nearest the 'mote,' which was a little piece of white china or crockery as a mark to be aimed at—somewhat similar to the 'tee' in the game of bowls. When all the players had 'pitched' the one who was nearest the mote gathered them up, and shaking them in his closed hands, threw them in the air, and as they shewed, he got toll from those to whom they belonged, the tails were taken up, and the next player treated them in similar fashion, and so on, till they were exhausted. The buttons had distinctive names and values. Figs were vest buttons, chancers, double and single, were gilt coat buttons, which were worn on blue and olive green, and brown coats, a fashionable dress of the period [1840-]. Bossies were larger, and generally the cast-offs of military or naval uniforms, or livery servants' coats. Four figs were equal in value to 1 chancer, and 2 chancers to one bossie, *Abd. Wkly. 'plaiting.' 'Cutting the frog' appears to have been used in two senses: (a) for cutting or reaping up to the last stalks, or (b) for cutting through these stalks after the plaiting had taken place; and the doing of one or both of these was regarded as an honour (H.K.).
