DEPARTMENT OF STATE EXHIBIT, PAN-AMERICAN EXPOSITION, 1901.

NOTE.

The number of square feet of floor space occupied by the exhibit of the Department of State is 1,620, about half the space necessary for a satisfactory installation. This space is covered by one table, four by twenty feet in size, on which are displayed ten volumes in full morocco binding, twenty by twenty-five inches in size, in which are exhibited all of the blanks used in the bureaus of the Department, and in the diplomatic and consular service, so arranged as to indicate to the student the method of doing business in the Department, at the embassies, legations, consulates, and consular agencies; by four glass cases, ninety-six by thirty-two inches in size, in which are exhibited original manuscripts of great value and interest; by ten upright glass cases, forty-two inches long by thirty-two inches wide, containing exhibits of papers, so arranged as to show in concise and simple manner the workings of the bureaus, and also many forms of treaties and a variety of medals; by a large square case, fifty-four by forty-two inches, in which is exhibited a collection of rarest relics, such as the sword worn by Washington in his campaigns, eyeglasses used by that great man, a sword worn by Jackson in battle, a cane used by Franklin, and many others, besides some highly valuable jewels presented to the United States by foreign governments; by one glass cabinet containing a silver urn, a sword, and a pair of pistols presented to Captain Hull, of the United States Navy; by a bookcase containing the publications of the Department; by two pedestals for wing frames; a panel, five by ten feet in size, and a table on which is a plaster slab reproducing a treaty engraven in stone over four hundred years before the Christian era.

WALL SPACE.

The number of square feet of wall space is eight hundred and ten, in the form of two angles of a square. In addition to this wall space there is one hundred and ten square feet on the ends and sides of the iron girder, which stands almost in the center of the floor space, and which is always unsightly and an immovable obstruction in the way of good installation.

A little more than one-fourth of the wall space is occupied by portraits of the Secretaries of State from Jefferson to Hay, and the portraits of Livingston and Jay, who were Secretaries of Foreign Affairs before the office of Secretary of State was created. Six hundred square feet is covered by portraits in oil of President McKinley and Vice-President Roosevelt, a large picture in oil of the Great Seal of the United States, maps showing the growth of territory of the United States, and the location of the embassies, legations, and consulates of the United States, and a United States flag woven in one piece of silk, and presented to the United States by 25,000 silk weavers of Lyons, France, as an expression of sympathy at the death of the martyred Lincoln.

To complete the installation of the wall exhibit it was necessary to erect two pedestals to support wing frames containing valuable and highly interesting original papers. The number of these frames is fifty-one, and they contain under glass a proclamation by each of the Presidents from Washington to McKinley, with the exception of the first Harrison, who died before issuing a proclamation, besides original letters of great interest from Louis, King of France; Jerome Bonaparte, King of Westphalia; Christian VII, King of Denmark, and others. The sides of the girder are also utilized for displaying framed papers, and the ends are used for wing frames. By these expedients, and the use of a panel ten by five feet in size, it was made possible to install the exhibit within the space allotted. The panel contains a portrait of Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence; a facsimile of the original draft, the engrossed copy bearing the autographs of the signers; portraits of the signers of the Declaration; a picture of the house, formerly located at the corner of Seventh and Market streets, Philadelphia, in which Jefferson wrote the immortal document; a picture of the desk on which the engrossed copy was written and signed; a picture of Monticello, the home of Jefferson, and of the room in which the great statesman was wont to spend much time.

In front of the panel in a glass case is the desk on which Jefferson wrote the Declaration, and which, in many respects, possesses an interest equal to, if not greater, than that attaching to any article exhibited in any department of the exposition.

On the other side of the panel the Constitution of the United States is treated similarly to the Declaration of Independence. A facsimile of the Constitution as originally engrossed is shown with portraits of Washington, who presided over the convention which adopted it; of Jackson, who was the secretary of the convention, and of the distinguished members of the convention, who adopted and signed it.

An effort has been made to arrange the exhibit logically for the purpose of enabling persons interested in the Government, and in our foreign relations, to obtain a fairly accurate and comprehensive idea of the workings of the Department of State by even the hurried examination visitors to an exposition are able to give.

I desire to acknowledge the services of Maj. Frank H. Peabody, Mr. John R. Buck, Miss Mary Greer, Mr. F. Van Dyne, and Mr. S. Fenton Michael, for valuable services rendered in perfecting the installation of the exhibit.
