21495.15

Marbard College Library

FROM

THE ESTATE OF

PROFESSOR E. W. GURNEY

(Class of 1852)

Received 1 July, 1902

04172

MRS. JENKIN'S NOVELS.

A PYSCHE OF TO-DAY. Cloth $1.25.

WHO BREAKS PAYS. Cloth $1.25.

SKIRMISHING. Cloth $1.25.

MADAME DE BEAUPRE. Cloth $1.25.

Copies sent by mail, post-paid, on receipt of the price.

LEYPOLDT & HOLT, Publishers, 451 Broome Street, New York.

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ

By Mrs. C. JENKIN,

OTHOR OF "A PSYCHE OF TO-DAY," "WHO BREAKS PAYS," ETC., ETC.

ENEVARE UNIVERSITE LIBIARE

Q. What is a French country-town most like?

A. An English one.

ENGLISH AND FRENCH VOCABULARY.

NEW YORK: LEYPOLDT & HOLT, 451 BROOME STREET. 1869. 21495.14
AL 2142.2.15 From Steel of V. GURNET

INSCRIBED TO

FERE VENERABLE ARCHDEACON OF TUAM.

CONTENTS.

	AGE
I. THE GREAT LADIES OF MAGNY LE SEC,	7
II. THE CONSEQUENCES OF A MASS IN MUSIC,	20
III. ANGELO AND THE GOVERNESS,	32
IV. CHRISTIAN'S EXPLANATION,	47
V. THE VICOMTESSE AND THE GENERAL,	60
VI. THE VICOMTESSE AND THE SUBALTERN,	73
VII. AMOR CHE A NULLO AMATO, AMAR PERDONA,	84
VIII. ALARMS,	101
PROJECTS OF MARRIAGE,	106
T. Drewer	132
DIRIPHE REPUSED	150
SOIREE AND A DISTANCE REPUSED,	162
ONFLICT,	175
T LAST, COMENTING!	198
TO!	207
XIII	220
- Corp ANGE LAND.
PARENTAL COMMUNINGS,	-
MAGNY LE SEC ON THE ALERT,	957
MAGNY LE SEC ON THE ALERT,	970
MADAME DE BEAUPRE'S RESOLUTIONS,	210

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

CHAPTER L

THE GREAT LADIES OF MAGNY LE SEC.

"One hundred and fifty" was the nickname bestowed on the three old Mesdemoiselles de Tremerens by Gustave Godard the year he came to Magny le Sec as Substitut du Procureur Impérial. "One hundred and fifty" they are called to this day, when their united ages would better justify the sobriquet of the "Two Hundred." They lived and live in the great stone building, with the great garden on your right hand as you come from Paris. Their father, M. le Comte Adhemar de Tremerens, an emigré in his youth, in his mature age a pensioner of Louis XVIII., had never adopted age a pensioner of Louis to marry his day optothe necessary measures and all optothe necessary measures are necessary measures and all optothe necessary measures and all optothe necessary measures are necessary measurements. On the contrary, he had always taken care it should no dot to expect die should On the contrary, he had no dot to expect during his he known they had no dot marriage had his and his be known they had he dot marriage remains an life-time, and without a dot marriage remains an life-time, and without a dot marriage remains le life-time, and without French young ladies,

MADAME DE BEAUPRE d them

Begin withering

His egotism We on their virth to do.

Drospered old with his with his His esantly, We on their on the esotism brospered old vir and elder dance. ont to do.

ed, his do.

eline two elder daylered old made as to think of Solane. of and Mader danghters, Macor direction of the Virginia supplies it still stil Cornte Wate stalks, obser of and elder daughter of an elder daughter with he contains he con in our family as egotism is rood as de Made danght en tith he good as the moiselle ers, Made no long it. and one it and one it many the many the many the many the many the many the many that make a make the secret was, the sheep in mission secret was, the sheep in mission that make the secret was, the sheep in mission that make the secret was, the sheep in mission that make the secret was, the sheep in mission that make the secret was, the sheep in mission that make the secret was, the sheep in mission that the secret was the sheep in the secret was the secret was the secret was the sheep in the secret was th Then Jac the sinie and been it make a secret worsh; that he wasta that a secret worsh; that he wasta that a secret worsh; the wasta the secret worsh; the wasta the wa Leh of it. and se it holange it have been in might hat the make it worship he has sived to make it has so and one in might hat the make it worship he has sived to make it has so and one in might he has sived to make it has so and one in might he has sived to make it has sived to ma moiselle Jacpré ever had been in migh secret worship or had he was sixted to pré ever had been in mich de merens.

orphan, this tole de tree not tole art was not tole a make a secret worship he had sixteen to ophan, that was not orphan, this object of the discovering of the line of yet make a kne withat the parens. of the two elder secret was not the object of the object of Demoiselles de Demoisel orphan, this two elder of the life of family. He been fame for the joys of the joys of the had brought up in the moiselles

Early left

Early left

of the joys of the sisters, the had been the roman of the joys of women, who had hero of the demon who had ath of the demon of the demon who had been the romance Early le in the same of these the sisters had of the joys of money who had hero of the day iestesses to the youth, who had never known of the old Comte, demon of had lived the lives in the ath of spring, Anatole brough the was min the brough. een the da, rescesses to the youth, who the pero of the any rescesses to the youth, who the never known of the old Comte, demon who had lived the lives in eath of spring. Anatole brought ness, incarnate in penty he was what that crushe a ray of light, a twenty he was what is that crushe a ray of light, a twenty he was what is seneral. ived the live in spring, inatole selfish ness, incarnate in the was what is selfish a ray of light, a twenty he was what is senerally old house.

I thick red 1: ness, incarned a ray of light, a twenty was what is a tough old house. The man hair to match the staring black called a fine man thick red lips. Door of liek old house. of their cousin, the sister of his of their cousin, the sister of his called a fine mose, and thick red lips, color of his eyes, a profusion of their cousin, the sisters, one and the eyes, a profusion nose, and cousin, the sisters ound the eyes, a big of their cousin, the sisters ound his low forehead of their would have wreathed a corone after the government of from the soon up and the soon the soon the ster would have wreather would have been up and the soon the soon the soon the soon the ster would have soon the soon th eyes, a big not their wreathed a "sisters, one the low forehead of their corone of the low forehead of their would have wreathed a "corone of the the other, would have wreathed a "corone of fresh them." low forehead lowers," but he soon made to fresh and fragrant he preferred "a peck of provent unthe other, was and fragrant flowers, and fragrant hat he preferred "a peck of provender." Digitized by Google

But women cannot bear to displace an idol; they prefer to shut their eyes and stuff their ears, and to continue their adoration. Mademoiselle Jacqueline hid her maiden love under the form of maternal affection, using her age, poor soul, as a shield against conjectures as to another sort of affection. Her radiant hours were those when she had managed, by some cruel self-sacrifice, to fill the flaccid purse of the student in Paris.

Mademoiselle Solanges, nearer Anatole's age, was less disposed to the humility, more inclined to the resentment of slighted love.

Virginie alone had all the advantages of youth; she was as fresh as a rose, and gay as a lark, when she gave her heart to her cousin, who certainly had a shadow of a preference for her.

And here was the strange part of the affair.

Jacqueline and Solanges not only concealed their own feelings, but they did all that women inexperienced in maneuvering could do, to bring about a marriage between Virginie and Anatole. To keep him with them, to serve him, to be sure of his presence, would be happiness enough for them-governs the superior?

Anatole preferred "a peck of provender" to young affection. He made it as clear as der" to to the Abbé Poulot, confessor to the Demoiselles de Tremerens, that a man would be wicked who should venture to marry in these days on ed who income as he and Mademoiselle Virginia could alone hope for proved satisfa a neat that he had reason and virtue on the his side of the had by since that his side of the himself was north to were withered was winded.

paper, which and virtue of the paper, which at he had reason by since that his side himself years had gone to Adhemar was north to were withered as with his convert and fifty, haid and himself on paper, with that he had rease by suice that his to hilation Years had gone to Adhemar wenside himself sation. The court were withered as with he converted and fifty, haid his onverted bell but the labor. that he had reYears had gotte Auuemar washorde, unself sation. The were withered and first, haid his conver.

as the "One lergy. They below the langued and store, to all seed a spoil." Years had sation. The Conversed and first of the conversed and first, had been stated and first of the conversed and first, had been speed and satisfable chariteto evaluation. sation. The tors. The sisters at as the "One hilder and fifty," haid his aver.
children of the clergy. They belong the languages.

amme il faut congregation, to all cheed applied charit to older the hospitals.

The sisters and the congregation of the children of the congregation of the languages.

The sisters and the congregation of the congreg tors. The sise at as the "One clergy. They be out to land the children of the clergy. They be out to land the comme il faut congregation, to all one to land the spoiled comme il faut congregation, to all one to land the spoiled comme il faut congregation, to all one to land the spoiled comme il faut congregation, to all one to land the spoiled congregation of the spoiled congregation of the spoiled congregation. at as the "One children of the comme il faut congregation, to all onged to spoud mittees. They were indefatigable canvalitation every mittees. They were indefatigable canvalitation every the repairs of the canvalitation every convent, for cathed as yinter children or comme il faut comm mittees. They we repairs of the repairs of the cathed as for the spire of the convent, for new vestine as plums.

They begged for the convent, for new vestine as plums.

private asted, at the new testine organ, mittees.

Bureau de Bienfa 15

They begged for the convent, for ne cathedral or the for the spire of the convent, for new vestments or the curé of their parish. They fasted vestments or and in attendts for lives They begged for the community for new medical rings. They fasted vestments for the curé of their parish. They fasted vestments for the curé of their parish. They fasted vestments for lives were busy common to the common on the common of the for the spire of the the curé of their Parish. the private and in confessed in private and in confessed in the spire but for Virginie. Their lives were busy, and on (en the confessed and the curé of their P festivals, confessed in Private and in attenders for communauté). Their lives were busy communed all head left h.

the curé of their P

A patole had left h.

would

mmunauté). 'I base per contented, par virginie, aud would por Virginie! A natole had lest her a wiser worman. She had suffered en mystorie suffered en mysto haae been contenue.

Poor Virginie!

A para lad left her a sadder, but not a wiser worman. She had suffered for vears from one of those mysterious fem; fails to Poor Virginie:

but not a wiser worm.

but not a wiser worm.

some years from one of those mysterious fered der, nerves, and to reach.

nerves, and to reach. some years from one or mysterious fen maladies which medicine fails to reach.

As and try in the nerves, and try in the nerves. maladies which medical aus to reach inine doctors lay it on the nerves, and try in vain bank on a sking, one could be below the same bank. maladies which doctors lay it on the new, and try in value of walking, one fine day via bark had class for day via for and pepsine, etc., etc.

and pepsine, etc., etc.

years incapable of walking, one fine day virginie

to remain almost local virginie years incapable of warms, one tine day voen for found her legs, but she had clearly almost lost incapable of work to repair the irreport her found her legs, but she head. She set to work to repair the irreparable head. She set to work the irreparable outrages of time. She dyed her hair, enameled outrages of time. Sue der hair ratable outrages of time. Sue days shut up hair, enameled it, composite room, her face, passed her we up in her more devising, or, as she expressed it, composing con, which she exhibited to the mortifications. devising, or, as she exhibited to the mortification of tumes, which she expression of the town

THE GREAT LADIES OF MAGNY LE THE GREAT manifest horror of be thought the most was so easy as to make the shought parties, she always She had the most was so easy as to make thought she had nothing parties, she always old, and not in all pungest, affecting the ced in the show old, and nothing the show old, and the youngest, affecting the show old, and the youngest the youngest, affecting the show old, and the youngest the yo She had the was parties, she always ced her old, and nothing all parties, she always ced her this dread. the youngest, affecting the annual this dread. She mo notter all party, she always ced her old, and not in all pungest, affecting the anners, this dread. the yeartest Added to who she is she is self amongst and talking aloud to he she is self amongst. old, and the youngest, affecting the sanners, this dread. the youngest, affecting the sanners, she had self amongst and talking aloud to he self amongst and talking aloud to he self amongst and talking aloud to he sanners, she had conversation, bit or in company, residually alone acquired a alone in a ludicrous. self amount of tanking around she had conversation, all of in company, recompany acquired a alone in a ludicrous, so ling her occasions, sometimes always comproduced the sometimes always always comproduced the sometimes always alwa conversate habit or in company, and in some and all or in company, acquired a alone in a ludicrous, sometimes her occasions, sometimes always comproduced the solutions in thoughts, thoughts, in individual thoughts, and individual thoughts, are individual to the solutions are individual to the solutions. acquired a alone in a lucture, so times her occasions, sometimes always compromised times in thoughts, a dangerous manner, always compromised to the self thoughts, another of from forms. dangerous manner, individual herself dangerous another of from found there are inmate there night.

There are found at poulot. thought a dangerous individual and the self or others. Was inmate there night.

There an found at night.

considered an found at nine Poulot.

was sure to be for nine Poulot.

The point of the self an analyte of the self a or others. There was inmate there night. There an after considered an found at pulot. There was sure to be found in firm the same the same the same to fensive family confessor, the opinin firm the same to fensive family confessor, the opinin firm the same to speaker, man, generally matters; Poulot had of speaker, man, generally matters, poulot had of speaker, man, generally man, generally matters, poulot had of speaker, man, generally man, generally matters, poulot had of speaker, man, generally matters, poulot had of speaker, man, generally man, generall was sure to half-past L'Abbe ion of the inogeneral was the inogeneral properties in secular L'Abbé in half-past l'Abbé in secular L'Abbé i i.e., in secondary men Made Sola de Placed for irreproachable. men Made his creatures and for his iced success found a the ladies, in solicitude, care he should and water joy in their in w took ening; and har aterial solicitudes and religious har aterial solicitudes. irreproachs, in some and for his iced successfound a the ladies, in guille de his iced successfound a Mad'lle Jacqueline ude his iced successfound a downtook you in their in w took ening; and he have his chocolate They ery the religious he have his in summer. Mad'lle Jar soller inter, care he should and water joy in their in witook ening; and he have his his chocolate They ery the first to know or the in summer. whist or trictrac with were vicaire to punish, when regaled them They trant the prefet and the regaled them They trant the prefet and the or department. whist or trictraction with were vicaire to punion the regaled them They trant the prefet and the or department. They trans the sacristry current there was a ment to went on the spiritual the spiritual there was a ment of went on the spiritual the spiritual there was a ment of went on the spiritual there was a ment of went on the spiritual there was a ment of went on the spiritual the spiritual there was a ment of went on the spiritual the spiritual there was a ment of went on the spiritual the spiritual there was a ment of went on the spiritual there was a ment of went on the spiritual there was a ment of the spiritual the spiritual the spiritual there was a ment of the spiritual the spiritual the spiritual the spiritual the spiritual there was a ment of the spiritual the spi regaled them They and the prefet and the or department. recalcit ween in the sacristry. cure; there was a any disagreement at wonly sisters, looked as any disagreement at sisters. department. recalcitrate on in the sacristry. there was a ment at wonly the spiritual, but The any disagreement at only sisters, looked after the worldy affairs felling of their woods, after their vines, paid their laborers, and saw to the bottling of their wine. They could not have done without the Abbé Poulot, and for him they now made the sacrifices they had once made for Anatole.

And the Abbé was as much attached to the And the Abbé was as much attached to the "ladies" as his nature allowed. He would probably have sat in his peculiar seat, evening after evening, even if the chocolate or iced drink, or whist or trictrac had been wanting. The great passion of his nature was satisfied by finding himself, he a born peasant, the equal, nay, treated as a superior, by ladies whose noble ancestors had mated with the De Rohans and the Montmorencys.

At the moment when this story opens, Anatole De Beaupré was about again to inhabit Tremerens House. He was to arrive with his very young bride, for whom the grand suit of rooms of the Rez de Chaussé had been lately arranged.

Fortune had made a pet of Anatole. By a series of unexpected deaths, he had inherited the title and fortune of a distant relative. He had married a noble and well-dowered young lady, and the Minister of State had recommended him to the Préfet of Magny le Sec, as a candidate the Government would be glad to see returned for that town; and the election, much owing to the interest of the Demoiselles de Tremerens with the clergy, had taken place.

The Vicomte de Beaupré was not troubled by one qualm of conscience as to his conduct towards felling of their woods, after their vines, paid their laborers, and saw to the bottling of their wine. They could not have done without the Abbé Poulot, and for him they now made the sacrifices they had once made for Anatole.

And the Abbé was as much attached to the "ladies" as his nature allowed. He would probably have sat in his peculiar seat, evening after evening, even if the chocolate or iced drink, or whist or trictrac had been wanting. The great passion of his nature was satisfied by finding himself, he a born peasant, the equal, nay, treated as a superior, by ladies whose noble ancestors had matted with the De Rohans and the Montmorencys.

At the moment when this story opens, Anatole De Beaupré was about again to inhabit Tremerens House. He was to arrive with his very young bride, for whom the grand suit of rooms of the Rez de Chaussé had been lately arranged.

Fortune had made a pet of Anatole. By a series of unexpected deaths, he had inherited the title and fortune of a distant relative. He had married a noble and well-dowered young lady, and the Minister of State had recommended him to the Préfet of Magny le Sec, as a candidate the Government would be glad to see returned for that town; and the election, much owing to the interest of the Demoiselles de Tremerens with the clergy, had taken place.

The Vicomte de Beaupré was not troubled by one qualm of conscience as to his conduct towards

THE GREAT LADIES OF MAGNY LE SEC. Virginie. At the present moment he believed that in offering to resent moment of Treme that in offering to rent the lower part of the town I rens House (the most desirable apartment in the town) he was surpassing "It will add something to the post most por atous voice It will add something to the poor old some tentous voice.

The once has The once handsome young man had changed as such as the "poor old ack hair had the The once handsome young man had changed abundant much as the "poor old souls." Led the side locks had to be careful! much as the "poor old souls."

black hair had thinned and grizzled, acquired had to be carefully brushed upwar had incipient baldness. His fine a man obesity which the state of the state and to be carefully brushed upwar lineipient baldness. His fine figure an obesity which made wall:

apoplexy and grizzled, acquired acquired acquired income an obesity which made walking or yenient; he had the look of apoplexy.

And his venient; he had the look of a man and moiselle moiselle Virginie, unconsciously and as made her curtsy to the young stranger.

M. de Beaupré stared long at Maden M. de Beaupré stared ginie; then turning to Jacqueline, tapped his m. de Beauf ginie; then turning to Jacqueliessly. appell in head significantly and carelessly. head significantly and carelessly. It was traginie; then turn and care. head significantly and cause so comfort was transfor Mademoiselle Jacqueline to see It was transfor Mademoiselle Jacqueline to see It was transformed and cause so comfort a cause and en face to face, and cause so comfort able and elegates and

The town had been electrified

The town had been electrified The town had been electrified a vicomtesse—and of the a vicomtesse—and of the a vicomtesse—and of the reside of the news that lady, noted for her superior in a month of the news that lady, noted for her superior in a month of the news that what society had now found it allows them. One natural head, the ness. She checkmated any possibility de Rochefort, the Préfet's Wife, or the de Tremerens, making her feel she their caste, by speaking of herself as -even a petite bourgeoise.

geoise," was her pet phrase.

Madame Martaud was most resp ladies de Tremerens. Her folding for them as they did for Madame la F she had never forgotten the slight t on her at her première communion, Oudin she had been chosen as Mad anges' companion. It is the custom girls of the higher classes to choose gi orders to be their partners, so to solemn occasion-a public manifesta which covers private pride. Madem and Julia had therefore made their p nion together; but afterwards Ma anges had refused even so much doors of Madame Oudin, who was a thriving manufacture of knitted had changed. Julia Oudin, as Mad had entered the haute volee. It had unmitigated triumph to her, when t - de Tremerens had accepted her invi fast with her without ceremony. never went out to dinner, and rare their presence in the evening, so that ance of an invitation was an event.

nich the sisters had formally then wrote a letter of four he warmest terms. "It was —it would be such an honor when as children they had e the altar. There were no begun in childhood—it would she wrote from her heart—

Tremerens put forward their their rule of never eating out on which Madame Martaud, s storm, suddenly appeared in n.

voman was Madame Martaud, words remarkable even in ever, not one half second of w of reasoning. Perhaps she er happiness was at stake—of its depths. Madame Marhoarse, but she gained her de Tremerens and Mademoised to make an exception for ls, only of friends," were the husky petitioner. pelieve me, Monsieur l'Abbé," olanges to Monsieur Poulot there was the préfet and his neur—her intimate friends indeed!-and everything had been sent from Paris-Victoire heard it from the cook-pineapples for which she paid their weight in gold."

Madame Martaud after that morning felt that she had revenged the humiliations suffered some thirty years before.

The bride accepted the attentions and advice tendered her by Madame Martaud with the same tranquility. "Never was there a nicer little mouse," said the rich bourgeoise.

Within the year the Vicomtesse had a little girl,

"It actually seems wrong," said all the ladies. After the birth of the child Madame de Beaupré was more in Paris than at Magny le Sec, which so annoyed society that it began to pity Monsieur de Beaupré, and skake its head at the thought of all the court balls and other terrible temptations of the capital. "Considering the difference of their ages, the Vicomte had better have kept her out of harm's way; people said she was growing very pretty." Whenever Madame de Beaupre did appear in Magny, the fact of her improved looks was verified with holy suspicion.

She was certainly very pretty, with lovely long She was certainly very first silky dark hair tong brown eyes, a quantity of silky dark hair tong brown eyes, a quantity of a fleur de lie combrown eyes, a quantity of a fleur de lis, a complexion like the petals of a fleur de lis, and a plexion like the petals sweet child's mouth—one of those small and women

"It's monstrous to think of that old De "It's monstrous to the best service be appré as her husband. The best service be can were the comments of every quaintance.

eaupré went on living, appao to do. He was the best-3 World, so that he had a and was never contradicted. be disturbed in any of his rything that was, was right. argument, he couldn't and always overpower his advergifted him with a portentous id a portentous voice. ne half-dozen times, "I can't understood the uselessness of year of their marriage that ré informed Madame that it to him that the most promiagny le Sec were desirous he as a candidate in the approachw mayor. M. de Beaupré conere elected mayor, it would add "I have plans for the future tations—which make my popument of consequence," he roared sitting within arm's length of ever cared much for any answers Beaupré. He had married to erit his vast possessions. Therese erit task, and he required nothing else from her, "I Trust give a co else from her, he I must give a conelse from on Lent, said the land, said the land, said the land the fire ball, near times to have a land is land in land is land in land in land is land in lan Madwhen in ents and decisions. This and There is woman take a round take a round in this should be understand, young act this she understand, young must be understand in way. his arrang he woman take a rowish your act this she understand, younday, must be remember see, you aight Thérèse, to man of servit, straight Thérèse, straight Thérèse, servit de la control remember see, she understand, man of sercuit, straight make a make a make thought a straight make thought a straight make a remember see, Syou and line was the shoundary man of circuit, Straid There'se in her use make a circuit, said what can her use thought to point, pray; what can point to point, pray; what can point to point, pray; what can point to point to pray; what can pray; what can project. her u what can you kn ince. what? Pray lines?" roared the himself so pray; what an you know the straight of stretching his figure "Ho! who crooked himself so as to she straight of stretching his figure. "He is rising and sexity of his figure." straight of stretching his figure. "He, I rising and wexity repeating a mathem mighty convex were repeating a mathem mighty convexity of meating a mathema you know you were hild, do you know w you know you were repeating a mathema.

Note that the say, my child, do you know when the say, my child, angle is ?"

The say, my child, angle is ?" Thérèse coolly drew a demonstration, "In the name of God, who taught you Wrong - decidedly wrong thems have nuns and women with Madame s good have they done you, Madame bog to ask?" ng Digitized by val of Monsieur and Madame de Beaupré e Sec was always the signal for a series of l evening parties. Madame de Beaupré's r two o'clock, was invariably full. y truth, the cynosure of all the eyes of visitors; not a fold of her gown, not her hair, but underwent a scrutiny; i feminine fever to see how she dressed. the ladies of the town paid an annual ris; but their knowledge of the fashions mode, derived from shop-windows and they saw on the stage. Provincial very little in common with the grand the capital: they always manage to be mark. But Madame de Beaupré was "grande dame" of the grand monde, le rights and privileges appertaining to of life. No one certainly would think to her for advice on any subject; but be no doubt that between her dressher lady's-maid her gowns were "exnd that her bonnets looked as if profairy fingers—such a "freshness" about

CHAPTER IL

ONSEQUENCES OF A MASS IN MUSIC.

THE CONSEQUENCES OF A MASS IN MUSIC. Before leaving Paris, M. de Beaupre had ner to scended to bawl to his wife, that he wished her to her to all his be very civil to all his constituents. ets that he respected to show an interest her to show an interest in the subjects families whom she had ested them; and if there were she work remedy the oversight. remedy the oversight. She must help the could not do better than salvice from the T could not do better than seek for advice from the Demoisol. advice from the Demoiselles de Tremeio heard everything that was going on they had his interests that she should be more with those were safe companions. Remarking a ing of Madame la Vicomtesse's love at this recommendation, M. de Bez testily.

"There's nothing so extraordinary my request; but as soon as a woman i makes up her mind always to oppose makes up her mind all Tudieu! a man loses his liberty, and in return."

return."

Madame de Beaupré made no
Madame de Beaupré made no Madame de Beaupre Madame de Beaupre sally. When a woman of twenty a sally. When a woman of twenty a sally. Madame de soman of sally. When a woman of sally, When a woman of sally. When a woman of sally when a retort, you may be sure she has call a retort, you may be sure by b. o. la sally. When a sally when a retort, you may be sure could as a retort, you may be sure could as a retort, you may be sure by be of the of will. M. de Beaupré could as a sof the sally be of the sally the sally sally sally the sally sall sally, when may a retort, you may a retort, you may of will. M. de Beaupre by be of a so he finished his lecture by be of the so he finished his lecture by be of the so he finished with the sainted with the sai of will. M. de Becture of the so he finished his lecture of the so he finished his lecture of the remember that it was of the remember that it was of the street to him to be acquainted with the attest to him to be acquainted with the attest to him to be first time that him to be acquired bitants of Magny le semble that time that As it was the first time that tonsien appeared to consider Therèse more that to consider Therese more that impressed. She exerted herself beyond the town was in a feesors of per to which he gave value, she was proporpis, t the moment of their return to Tremerens feesors of music.

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

She exerted herself beyond the town was in a state of civil war as to its five and-twofessors of music, five-and-transport pour Dardare had been giving lessons for ing the last luster of Mone:

10 Pardare

11 Pardare

12 Pardare

13 Pardare

14 Pardare

15 Pardare

16 Pardare

17 Pardare

18 Pardare

18 Pardare

18 Pardare

19 Pardare

10 Pardare

11 Pardare

12 Pardare

13 Pardare

14 Pardare

15 Pardare

16 Pardare

17 Pardare

18 Pard To Tremerens

five and twenty years; Jules Frankomme only the last luster of Monsieur Dardare's

the last luster of the months all the coulty and the last luster of the last luster of the last luster of the last luster of monsieur luster's

the last luster of the last luster of the last luster of monsieur luster's luster of the last luster of the last luster of luster luster of the luster of the luster of the luster of the luster of luster luster luster of luster l ur Dardare had taught all the most distly enjoyed a monopoly generation ughters. Monsier Monsier Dardare's

under of Monsier Dardare's

tly enjoyed a monopoly generation monsieur Dardare's mothers of the rising generation, and taight talent as a was a wa tly enjoyed a monopoly of their distintinguian ical talent as a musical talent as a ughters. Monsieur Dardare had just as a musical-box; whereas if from being a made on the most distinction and make a musical and just as a musical and jus e was a born musicial-box; whereas much garé, and industry.

Tranko de mammas of their distinguished de mammas of the musician of their distinguished as a musicial-box; whereas are made one. He has a mammas of the mammas of the musician of the mammas of mishe if from being a made one. He had talmother another the factor of mannas of Magny le Sec would not distinguise door of the come? Who make the come? why had he come? Who wanted patronize E distinguis 1 door of the come? Who wanted patronize the young intruder. hermetically patronize the young intruder. m? E to go; he can't manage to live on "He will to girls of bakers and she to live on closed again girls of bakers and shoemakers."

Lessons to the dare had said this, year. "He will the Bre had said this, year after year,"

Monsieur Destill was the indomitable R. after year, Monsieur Destill was the indomitable after year, and yet there young fellow had dared trankomme; Monsieur De till was muomitable Frankomme; and yet there soung fellow had dared to marry on and the mad yet had been been to marry on is prospects

Besupré had been bidden to interest marry on madame de interested the town, and interest and the mad and such prospects his prospects upre had had his prospects

Madame de Bestup
Madame de finterested the town, and to culti-

THE COMSEQUE OF A MASS IN MUSIC. vate Maderiseld the both mandates the line vate Madernself the both Tremerens' society.
Rousing se as Frankomme Was member of the little vate Mademoelf the both Tremerens' society Rousing he as Frankomme member of the little Vicomtess M. he is not really this ally this a monster to be got a lof?

"Undoubt of a deal of disturbanted in Magny. He rid of?
"Undoubt of a deal of disturbance" is the cause dame de Beau Dribance." "Undouble of a de Beaupted in Magny. He the cause dame de Beaupré was concocting an While Magny, she was start was concocting an wife. While Mader, she was startled by hearing Miss other question a muffled startled by hearing Miss Virginie say, in ks to get the truth out of the she is
"If she this taken, a struth out of the she is "If she this taken, a stupid child." A momental her eyes mived, then Mademoiselle A momental her eyes with an anxious stare on Madame de Besupré, and Virginie fixe Beaupré, and said,— "No, I saily able to returned adame de la compre de la co "I beg your noth; you were speaking," It was not the first time Madame de aupré had eard Mademoiselle Vin "No, I sally able to repress a lausse heard Mademoiselle Virginie unconscional pad she her private sentiments, but never been so diverted as by been so diverted as by to-day's confession. one that think that she should not dare to tell any one that she had been called " she had been called "stupid child to confidence. Out of girlish al face. Out of girlish glee, she bad on the conversation tinue the conversation; but Made conceived a suspici had conceived a suspicion that she had already been indiscreet, and took here. 228 BOOR 28 We allow our heart to dictate a course almost sure to get our almost sure to get ourselves a e teaches us to be egotists. of fifty say to a petitioner? have made it a rule never to the wise mother of a family, even a finger, might save one ag stranded on a desert island, "I am very sorry," (and so re full of tears,) "but on the adame de Beaupré following her her youth and inexperience to stime she had never been allowed All at once her husband had des part, and, as if on purpose to tunity of doing so, she perceived cant person Hod a persecucoent person. Had twenty years her head, she would have pitied and taken eare not to pronounce a As it was, she drove that very Professor's house, and took Madquite by surprise. nowever, the most embarrassed of me Frankomme had all the confi-nowever, the idea of M. Frankomme danger of all M. Frankomme had all the configuration of one accustomed to y woman of one accustomed to the pushand. She brought her the object of her most husband. Madame de the idea of M. Frankomme danger of all if M. Frankomme should be glad if M. Frankomme could give her some lessons during had to pass at Magny. Madame puffed out her throat like a proud passered, She was sure her husband he could, but his time was so occup he did not like leaving her alone so was always so anxious about her. home, if she did not feel inclined laugh, he fancied she was dull, an stand that; and it was difficult to you had been left alone all da Madame Frankomme pronounce name, was a revelation of love.

Madame de Beaupré sat on, li est. When the professor's wif breath, the Vicomtesse said, "

happy."

"He is so good, such a hear Suddenly Madame Frankomm claimed, "I hear his step." T was an impatient call, "Mar you?"

"He always expects me to plained Marie.

"Pray go," said Madame spoke, the door opened, and in, all in a heat and hurry. of his wife seated in familiar greatest lady of the town. as plainly as eyes could do, of all this? It was Madame him an explanation. Madame de Beaup with polite untruth, that she had long wie hed to make M. Frankomme's acquaintance.

In all provincial places in France, the smallest official has not only a right, but it is his duty, Leave a card on the highest functionary. M. Frank as one of the organists of the town, had this duty; but M. de Beaupré had not troubled self even to sand self even to send a card in return—an unusual of rudeness in a Frenchman. M. Frankomme, fore. was not incline. fore, was not inclined to be Madame de Bear 6's On being made, however, most obedient servant. to understand that she wished to have lessons from him, his heart gave a bound; he felt that his evil days were over once he became known as the Vicomtesse de Beaupré's music-master. He examined his note-book and told her, with apparent calm, what hours on certain days he had free, and Madame de Beaupré engaged to take three lessons a week.

"I am afraid I shall try your patience," she said, deprecatingly; "I never could manage octaves."

"Ah! but with a little practice you will be able." pronounced Madame Frankomme, as if she were an infallible authority. Madame de Beaupré went home in that state of pleasant excitement which follows the performance of some good action, had not all Magny le See patent to all Magny le Sec.

M. Dardare and his patronesses were furious; M. insult, a challenge; all the ladies who adit was ared a weekly dose of flattery to the Vicora-

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

ression that in obeying Madame de the choristers word husband s obliging monsieur her husband.

The choristers of the used his being moser into specific cathedral research to specific ca the choristers of the word; he used his cathedral He rehearsals himself, cathedral He co of his penitents, apecial favor as to sing the von. poser into such special favor as to co of his penitents, special fended by to sing the solo in the with a sense on the sense of the e description to the signal as to see the signal as the si camp! The secession! Against the "Against the "Agains" th the cession! Sinus in the cession! a desertion to the common one as yet had had common desertion. The cession is the common one as yet had had common desertion. nem John no one disturbed in Magny e traising the her, that she had so much misel. her, that she had so much mischier er?

t last the sought to that he had vocation of the sought to make th er?
t last

I most regretted M. Frankomme crowd

w this,

w this,

well,

well,

catch

well,

catch

wishers.

The cathedral regretted that he had vener?

t last

I. He sought to that he had on me w this, a pathy from Madame dourage by ed on the ring for the back of her eye and all power in form of her fixed and all w this, a planty from Madain contact on the had not to well, and her de Beaupré.

the back of her fixed his ohe w this, and the de large by said to be said said to his es, all will erful orb
erful orb
me magnification of many him distriction of music as his lease of the "C. music as his ed toward ped the "Gloria," on through the could tes of the "Gloria," on through

THE COLUMN HAR IN MUSIC. 29 the "Sanctus, cult had gloriously in the " A the sanctus of the sa the "Sanctus, cultilated Bloriously in the "Agnus terest, until se Bleaupre, Mada Scoff Were Agnus the "Sanctus, end had gloriously increased in interest, until the Beaupre, and the same de Beaupre, leant to ignominio de pent the sarm, waited terest, until se Beaupré, Madame de Beaupré, leanto ignominio de Beaupré, leaning upon M pliment the professor waited at the greating upon M pliment the professor and arche greatto ignominio de professor, waited at the great door to complete those of his ing upon M lime and incapes waited at the great door to complety those of his utiously added his conpré instinct. To le same : in wife la des la control de door to comit to those of his wife, and M. de Beau-pré instincti to the same; it wife. Every one stand-gratulations the same; it was Every one standgratulations the same; it wife. Every one standing near did young man was an undisguised the ing near did young man was an undisguised trie umph. "A gral; and " a talent," affirmed the umph. "A gral; and " a talent," affirmed the Receiver Gen by various coloung man of talent," Receiver-Gen Dy various echoes, was repeated that Monsie "I do hope ved Madam Frankom Will get dimer "I do hope wed Madame Frankom dinner dinner on now," observed is it to de Beaupre now," observat is it to you?" bawled Madame de Beaupré answered timid 5, Kants to comte. Madame de nat old Monsieur Dardare keep him down, to starve him." come to her that stared at his wife what own After the scrutiny of had an idea inutes, inutes, After the scrutiny of a couple of minutes, i "You are not to take any side, what's it to the trumpery quarrels of the town; whether one man or whether one man or another starves?
to have nothing manother to have nothing more to do with this m "May I not go on with my he is of influence here,"

MADAME DE BEAUPRE.

de Beaupré retreated into a prudent h a presentment that the matter had

t day the local newspaper contained a ck against Frankomme's mass. The cleverly answered; a paper war ensued, itse of which transparent hints and allunot spared as to undue influence, patronetticoat government.

eaupre's supporters explained to him the licomtesse had committed by patronizing mme, and sent the Vicomte home in a scolded his wife before the servants, just lier or ploughman might have done.

he Dardarite ladies persuaded or forced d to vote against M. de Beaupré. The ival was elected maire by a majority of ng of the day of his defeat, the Vicomte ck of sanguine apoplexy; he lingered in a state of unconsciousness; on the 1 ceased to breathe.

que c'est toi qui l'as tué. They will 1 him," said Madame Frankonime to l, it was Dardare," he replied.

le Beaupré will hate thee all the rest iid the happy young wife.
ont know," he replied, his eyes laughisly. "She is still quite young, and d awfully disagreeable. We are all

THE CONSESSION OF A MASS IN MUSIC. 31 instruments, each sed was fate hands of Providence, when our supported his mass means of Providence, who instruments, each sed by fate hands of Providence, would have Beauty his election would have instruments, each sed my fate hands of Providence would have Beaupte his election, and made into the total instruments, esponding the hands of the hands of the working out supported his election, and have cost the vicomte de post to talk some control to talk some cost the some comte de icomte of his wife. Trankonine to anybody but me," you acen. alarm. Who but her Dardare me?" he asked "I "Who but her Dardare Will condescend to play wonder whet his funeral Will condescend to play you wonder whet his funeral will condescend to play the organ at d, I had rath Considering what you the organ ated, I had rather not." have suggest ever, M. Jules Prankomme who had It was, how De Profund: Frankomme who had It was, ho "De Profundis Frankom to play the seed "très not man and the Dies seight for the deceant très not man and the for the deceante de Roble et très pui se goulist, neur, le Viconte de Roble et très pui se goulist, neur, le Viconte de Beaupré, Baron

CHAPTER III.

ANGELO AND THE GOVERNESS.

bomb in the town. There were the state of Monsieur de Beaupré's death explotion. The partisans of Dardare had wished so the mayoral.

See to the mayoral.

As 1. bomb in the town. There was a general not to kill their member outright; and as to the mayoralty had conet to home t to kill their member outright; and as to the mayoralty had occasioned to home to any ind: prevailed that the Vicomte's disaponet home to any individual property and prevailed that the vicomte's disaphome to any individual property and the mayoralty had occasioned his home to any individual, Magny la good folks did to equilize me de me As his death, however, could never good folks did talk! What what we have brown to any individual, Magny le Sec to brown the sec to where the good folks did talk! What discussions to where she word speculation me de Beaupré! what discussions her in cout one word of and live, as to live, Beaupré! What discussions what discussions as to where she would live, as to how to her she what speculations as to her she would live, as to how to her she what there where when whom. How marry again, and whom. What soon she new that there had here circultations as the works, with the Vice had here circultations as the work of truth, were circultated to here had here circultated the vice had here circultated the work of the wo to her in out one word of truth, were circulated. to her she new that there had been a conseil de Everybody reports, with that the Vicomtesse was a conseil de famille, an a idowhood in the convent to pass the Everybody

I downood in the convent of the Visi term of her

was, by the will

The convent of the Visifamille, and famille. A week after, it was equally term of her tandines at the was, by the will, obliged to remain certain that should guardiansh; aupervis; tandines at House, under the supervision of the visits of community of the guardianship of her at the certain that B House, sue supervision of in Tremerens the guardianship of her child. Tremerens the game of her on of "the dies," or lose t visits of condolence child.

When the first made. You might here paid, in ladies," or lose to when the first ere made. You might have supwhat comments Beaupré on her trial. M_{adame} Chuquet, the suppression of "Les Mores dalized by the dalized by t Vicomtesse's mountain "Her dress, my des her cap! it how was was miraculous how husband, and such a l so becoming 19 arrang quite for maling a Beaupré's silk en loc In the midale of and her little girl For two years the her was, that Tremerens Hous ladies," and that removed. The under curr through human towards Madame one felt that the apartment.

have been glad t Madame Chuc thought this pay - fied to Madam sense, and inde interests of he more silly that money.

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

end of two years the Demoiselles de suddenly announced that the Vicomabout to return. She would certainly ummer and autumn at Magny. Little d been very ill. Sea air had been tried uccess, and the doctors had now recoma sojourn of some months in a vine A fashionable German doctor had recomthat the child should try the grape cure. me de Beaupré was in Tremerens House he news that she was coming was nine days mrner's famous patch of red did not produce startling effect in his picture, than our comtesse's presence on Magny le Sec. per streets, used to the quiet, sleepy trot me Martaud's old greys, almost white from the respectable and dignified roll of the calêche, had to get calêche, had to get accustomed to the whirl of Madame de P whirl of Madame de Beaupré's blue the high-stepping horses the high-stepping horses, that seemed had to master their disgust and sur-Resunt and Result and Sur-Madame de Tessin, first cousin to Beaupré, appeared, driving her longcolored ponies. Well, they never thought respectable ladies could go the world, those two the world, those two great ladies, like correction old house was made to shelter to greaks. Private theatricals, charades, ANGELIA AND THE GOVERN and dancing had were several and land and dancing had were seeve and seements and bli and dancing had were and amusements and dancing had were severel and bli vicomtesser there embent eral young no parties. Govern the neighbors in vicomtesse here enhanced en parties.

The parties and dance the neighboring and blind that the neighboring and the increase than boring the increase than the properties among the increase than the parties are the neighboring the increase than the parties are the neighboring the parties are the neighboring the parties are the neighboring the neighbo Vicomteer The of the neighboring a parties. among the in ore than boring towns le Sec and more de Boring towns parties.
among the in ore than boring towns le Sec and more de Beauprour, and railway not railway not madame de Beauprour, and le See and montadame de Beau hour, and railway not radame to Beaupré's orders always at railway not Madurtiers to eampré's orders always at courtiers to aid and abet I always at of of folly seemed and abet I very demon de Tremerens to possess very demon de Tremerens. ademoiselle and the revels had been b The noise yet a greater had been b rigidly Catholic sisters. One fine Protestant governe One fine Protestant!! aglish! and beyond levity; it was a This was confide a Catholic child not woman, a nero a Catholic child not woman, a merens were more zear informed. It should never be said rens witnessed an attack on the Chu effort to repulse it. Mademoiselle dressed herself in the severest mon to remonstrate with Madame de B "Mon Dieu! such a modest, woman as she had been in Monsie time. How had such a metamore It was not to be believed not Mademoiselle de Tremere Beaupré and Madame de Tessi for dresses just received from

usual ceremonious salutations, Madeusual cer hemmed and said,— iremerens her duto-thought it her duty to come and say thought to see, what others were, de Beaupre's face, World others were de Beaup.

de Beaup.

de Beaup.

de Would Madame de hind her to state diese hind her to state distinctly of what ne kind enough to state distinctly of what er govermess was."

estant, isn 2018in. pré of her cousin.

_Protesta.11t." Protestanto keep her, to let her have you mean voiselle de Beaupré?" asked rge of Mademoiselle, with a sked rge of Marcherens, with quivering lips. oiselle de lieu about the lady's religion," ever thousaw esse, unmoved. "The only that she should not be pretty. e I am really prudent. She isn't the least not in the least, Mademoiselle." not in the rink; you had better have gauze, Thérèse," called out Madame de suits fair people best," returned Madame pre; "let me have the pink. Have you Pré; "les fashions, Mademoiselle de Tremee last useried some of the colored prints Tode Illustrée to the old lady. "Lovely, not?"

1 you have no anxiety, no fear for the soul 1 you have no interrogated Mademoiselle ens.

"I am no judge, Made me to speak my mind; dear to me, and who oug feel it my duty to let y (a stupid old woman in in Magny le Sec blames is clear."

"Thank you, a thou oiselle, for telling me di been anybody else but lieved them. Every o always coming to see with invitations. W this is!"

"There is one un Beaupré," said Made and stiffening her wh us last Sunday that o consequences."

"Well, even such that. For instance, Tessin recommends would be I should secret she desires.

"I shall say no n began Mademoiselle

"That is what y rupted Madame de punction and vexati "Allow me to fir demoiselle de Tremerens. "If I interfere in your concerns, it is departed. We were brought up confidence in me. I know what It's enough to bring him out things are going."

Madame de Beaupré and Madelerens would have been a study for a legue uneasy fear on that of the latter.
It hose women who, with strong, telegue, a great power of loving, go legue exciting the feeling most legue by every daughter of Eve; legue by every daughter of every every ing out of her plumage—that is, of ack silk dress, that had all the air of the dust from her head and shoulders her feet.

Mademoiselle Virginie would like to est fashions," said Madame de Beaupré, of conciliation, offering some of the illusthe book of fashions.

you. Virginie does not go to masquerd having shot this Parthian dart, the old ated.

, if I live till the Day of Judgment," she vening to l'Abbé Poulot, "shall I believe

ANGELO AND TH Anatole's perivous porter Anatole's marrie has bouch to tesse d'Aubad; cant. natole's mair but not oh sse d'Aubad; madi neant, of in So she Anatole's ber bont of the tessed'Au had meant She to the to the tessed'Au had meant She to the tessed'Au had meant she had been she to the tessed'Au had meant she had been sh So she has meul intrusted de Tremerens soul intrusted in a pure human marries à man ed de Tremeren soies a maries a maries a pure human marries a maries a maried No woman al sense obscur. No woman al sense obscured has her moral herself, on the has her moral herself, on the b to destruction. Mademoiselle de la ladame de la As soon a Madame de Ber of hearing, woman," Ber te that old de Tessin, who w Madame ding her hair ac mirror arrangires of the mirror arranger ares of the "Pet whimsical pictartial to acids, b "I am not Pae a Protestant; Bertha be madarry b Bertha be marry her wellhave such a fancy for religion guste de Malonet, one of the guste de Mar because or the ried a girl only because she was "Please to remember, my de is not yet six years old. Ig cause Madame d'Auberive wo ing alone. She wanted me to I excused myself by saying I lishwoman so that Bertha 10 that was the first reason. The she wouldn't understand Fre a restraint; but she does;

"Why don't you marry again, Thérèse?" asked Madame de Tessin, after a pause.

"Because I have been married already," was the laughing answer. "Now, Suzette, tell me, did you ever mee." Now, Suzette, tell me, did you ever meet a man who really cared for his wife?

My experiment a man who really cared for his wife? My experience goes the other way. I don't believe a man can care only for one woman. I have had such cone, care only for one woman. Furenie such confidences. You remember poor Eugenie Malleville how desperately in love with her Ernest de in how desperately de in how de in h nest de Hauterive was as long as her husband was alive! Well, he told her frankly, just before they married, that he should be horribly jealous if she so much as smiled on any one save himself, but that she was not to be in fits, and to suppose he did not love han in. love her if he permitted himself an occasional caprice. Now, do you call that justice?"

"My charming, men are monsters, but we can't do without them."

And then the two pretty cousins set to work to pull their male acquaintances to pieces. How they did laugh at this one and the other; with what subtlety they their taners

this one and the other; with detected weaknesses; how they put their taper fingers on hypocrisy here; vanity, selfishsevere on Women in private are always summer ared to the en. Manly weapons were blunt com-Men in private are always sufficiently pared to those used this morning by these little Vintesses. When the work was a second to the wo intesses, who were generally supposed to be "tant ation think we dress and grimace all for the e de psuch poor creatures!" summed up

"Its the fault of Thérèse," explained "My Englishwom observed Madame de makes of herself. She looks. I have seen he which showed all her fastaring at her as if he said afterwards he could sublime or ridiculous.

Madame de Beaupré p pleased with her English tions of race" would be a d essay. Such near neighbo French are, yet so fundamen

After the first shock of su over, Madame de Beaupré w Power with an interest and akin to that which Baker and in making acquaintance with

Miss Power's matutinal cold in opening all the windows of thick boots and short petticoats itary walks, her reserve, her me constant reading, were all as s Madame de Beaupré as that of b wives before breakfast to the d

Sources of the Nile.

"She reads till my eyes ache for so fidgety, and does so worry about disciplined, and that when once I have and that she is every evening, and to have no bonit give the child so much as a lump if I have the tiniest spot on my s comes up, and says, 'Permit me, you that there is some grease on

This was the account the Vicomevery one of the Englishwoman.
on her side, wrote to her friends,
y and his wife, in these terms:—

comfortable than you would imagine of folly and misrule. It seems like a cople of the same species as we are, relessly; indifferent to aught else than selves; always in a state of excites struggling to get rid of ennui by ess or company. And what conversational about people.

carcely seen Madame de Beaupré open a novel, since I came. Sometimes she m to learn English, and makes me tell ies of the furniture in the room; but as 5, she cannot. And yet she says, as all shwomen do, clever things, and I hear tly called très spirituelle. It is not to be rever, that she is extremely pretty, and sh as she is pretty.

cannot pardon in her is that she seems dog, a creature about the size of a rat, she does her lovely little girl. That me indignant.

"For myself per plain. She, who : but her pleasure, t nature."

Miss Power prid sincerity. Not for she have been guit adopted to prove I de Beaupré was to it dog. Now, every quaintance made a per Power, on the contrasted it a friendly pat animal would stand eyes that gradually fill sternly on him.

Angelo was as little tress, therefore it could of contradiction, or the that he one day follow went out to take her "c Saules," This was a p on one side by the rive Champs de Mars, the soldiers.

When Miss Power say bounds, she had a passi up and carry him, but s and left him to trot painff weak legs. She did not her pace on his account.

never could explain, for her back was turned, but a shrill canine cry making her look round, she beheld Angelo tossing in the water.

It was the worst place the poor little beast could have chosen for his immersion—there, just at the end of the walk, where the back-water from a mill rushes madly into the river. Angelo looked like a ball of white wool, as the eddy rolled him over and over.

Miss Power screamed almost as loudly as the Vicomtesse herself would have done under the circumstances. She was in agony at the sight of the helpless creature perishing before her eyes.

A soldier passing by, attracted by the screams, came to the Englishwoman's side, stood for an instant looking at the drowning Angelo; then, without a word, threw his cap on the ground, stripped off his jacket, and jumped into the rushing water. It had been bad enough to see a dog in danger of death, but a man . . . Christian Power clasped her hands and prayed loudly and earnestly.

The soldier was young and strong, and a good swimmer, so he and the unlucky Angelo were soon on the bank in safety.

"I am so much obliged to you—so grateful, I mean," said Miss Power, with white cheeks and trembling lips, as she received the shivering dog into her shawl. With an instinct that she ought to do something to show her gratitude, she put her hand into her pocket and drew out her purse. Catching sight of the face of the soldier, she let Angelo and the purse drop.

ANGELO AND THE GO "Raymond—Raymond Savoi his hand in hers.

"Raymond Brand in hers. Soldier, pressing the soldier, pressing th The young soldier, is turn, affectionately, said in his turn, affectionately, said in his turn,

The young said in his affectionately, said in his affection with a said in his affect and a said in his af "Who would had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last trial is over," she said of the last trial is over," she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of "she said of the last news I had of the last news I ha

The last news is over, wet, and the That trial is over, we the That trial is over, we the That trial is over, we then trial is over, we the That trial is over, we then trial is ove mond, you are dripping and for a mond, you on your jacket and led a still, put on should catch your still, put on should catch your borrid animal. mond, you a your Jack your et a still, put on your bould catch your et a still, put on should catch your et a suppose you should animal. Read suppose of this horrid animal. Read account of than ever." now worse than ever." w worse than ever," said Ray and wow worse than brute," said Ray and beginning to rub him and beginning to rub him and Poor little britt, and him and and and hand. Angelo, and beginning to the Angelo, and brown hand. If I may come and who brown and if I may together see Angelo, hand. If I may come and brown hand if I may come and the Christian, and if Walking together see Christian, and if I had see to the cour being seen walking together see our being seen walking together see to the cour being seen walking together see to the cour being seen walking together see to the course of our being seen walking our being seen walking four could not remain in Magny twenty four ards." With Madame de Beaupre, ", " I am with the mad Vicontesse sa wards."

"I am with the mad Vicomtesse sa "What, with the all—only rather

"What, with the flat only rather all what, with the flat all only rather all what all only rather all what she isn't mad at all only rather all what wick of fate to bring you all the made at all only rather "She isn't mad at at the strong you si what a trick of fate to bring you si what a trick of fate to bring you si

"She is trick of late in your si "What a trick of late is you si "What a trick of late is you sell a de Beaupré together. If my father a de Beaupré he would let you remain is de lieve he would. She is de Beaupré together. She is don't believe he would let you remain in don't believe he Raymond. She is not Beaupi he would She is in in the world bot world bot world bot a Nonsense, Raymond the world bet don't believe Raymont the world bot other rich women of child than a better other rich world here another many other rich women of child than a better say; more a spoiled here another mind say; hall not stand I am sure Man other men a spoiled the another mind say; more a spand here another mind you shall not stand I am sure Madanute you shall not me; good-nature it say; more stand her minute you shall not stand I am sure Madame you shall not me; good-nature itself; come and see she is good-nature itself; you shall no me; good-nature itself; won't object she is good-nature itself; "But when?"

"At your own hour. I shall stay at home all day."

"Dear old Christian, I am so Slad to see you "Dear old Chinas again." And Raymond Savoisy once more pressed

"Now run—do run, Raymond," she said.

The moment he left her, she be san to cry quietly—as those do who have long been acquainted

CHAPTER IV.

CHRISTIAN'S EXPLANATION. CHRISTIAN'S cheeks were of the unus

CHRISTIAN'S cheeks restored Angelo

CHRISTIAN'S cheeks restored eyes (as

When and ther moved) CHRISTIAN'S cheeks were of the Angelo
CHRISTIAN'S cheeks restored Angelo red peony when she and her moved) red peony when sarms, greatly when she red peony was greatly when she CHRISTIAN'S cheeks restored sus of the restore CHRISTIAN'S CH She red her eyes (as red peony when she was yenus when she was yenus when she was brilliant as those waves. Beaupr she workers when those of waves waves waves om the salt sea been nearly drowned that was been Mademoiselle! and the few waves waves waves waves waves waves waves waves waves was a salt sea waves was a salt sea waves from the salt sea waves. m the salt sea been new mean the salt sea been new made moiselle! and he for any angelo has been Mademoiselle! and he for a river."

"Great heavens, m., to save that can be can be such that to save that the such he river."

"Great heavens, Im."

"Great heavens, Im."

"Great heavens, Im."

"Great heavens, Im."

"To save power, in the case of the the ca me so with such calm. the river." A man risked his tone was too tone of the beast, went on Beaupré the angrice chabson But Madame pet to heed the mistres angrice chabson but Madame pet to heed mistres. A man risk went was a stream of the angular of the cided hostility. and Madame pet to he all Madame de mords.

Caressing her pords.

Caressing her words.

Caressi But Madain pet ds. nearly the in caressing her pords. re nearly the in caressing her words. re nearly the mistress of the governess's viceasure his kiss, kiss, the governess's viceasure his kiss, kiss, he significant sound, one sharp on the continuous months of the conti the governess's Words. "And was again thon sound, one sheet, won chat; mon chat; a significant Madame de sound, a significant sound, a si governess my ti leav kiss, one siss, non be significant and was again thon sound, one siss, non be significant sound, one significant sou "And was again the one sound, one she was not come of the content of contempt! With long thick fringes with long the contempt! With long the contempt! her absorption, The Vicomtesse and bar of contempt! with long thick fringes a veined eyelids, way of studying faces through this species of veil. She did so were MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ. She did so now, contemplating Miss Power seriously for the species 48 for the space of a minute. Then, as if waking out of a revo:

"I beg your pardon, Mademoiselle, for not listeng to what of a reverie, she said,— ing to what you were saying."

"It was scarcely worth your attention, Madame."
"What -

"What you say is always worth hearing, mot my oiselle" moiselle," returned Madame de Beaupré; inot my case. I have always been told that I spoke first and thought afterwards. I think that's why Angelo and I and I are such good companions; for the sake of my love! my love he overlooks my silly ways."

This was just one of the Vicomtesse's speeches it was just one of the Vicomtesses whether it which Miss Power never could decide whether it did or 3.7 did or did not contain any ulterior meaning.

"I believe, Madame, that you did not hear me answered .say that a man had risked his life to save that of

"He must be a very good man who did that," served +1 your dog." him? Did you tell him it was my pet, and that I should be should be glad and ready to reward him?

"I didn't offer him a sous, though he is only a asked his name, I hope." common soldier;" and Christian gave a little toss of her head. There was a good deal of combativeness in her nature.

"And why not? I am sure he must want money. I am always so sorry for soldiers. Some one told me they only get a sou, or perhaps two pocket-money; and if they smoke, ho it is a puzzle to me."

Miss Power burst out laughing burst out crying.

"What have I said? What have claimed Madame de Beaupré in unfei, "Indeed, I am very sorry;" and, put t gelo, she left the room, only to return thin phial, containing can de carmes, French remedy for all nervous attachmers.

Madame de Beaupré carefully measur a coffee-spoonful on some sugar, in a win full of water.

"Pray swallow this, Mademoiselle.

you good."

"I don't require anything of the sort;
Power, sternly. "I never fainted or had in my life; I have no nerves, thank G simply amused by the contrast between and the present—poor Raymond!" and have disturbed you, Madame; if you will I will go to my own room for a little without waiting for permission asked, the without waiting for permission asked, the hastened away, leaving the Vicomtesse hastened away, leaving the Vicomtesse plexed than she had ever been by any of tifications of the Gustaves and Anatoles of the Gustaves and Anatoles quaintance.

She was still fondling her dog, though e over Miss Power's oddities of manners and words, when visited when visitor after visitor came in, full of the were at the Professional Profession 50 all young and joyous, not cruelly unmerciful to reputations at the Prefecture the previous evening. utations, but ready to ridicule everything human

In Madame de Beaupré's salon, every one that as absent had told Madame Chose that she reminded hair and an aviaan aviary, with her bird of paradise in her hair, and canaries on canaries on her shoulders; M. B had declared that Madan that Madame C—had forgotten the body of her dress They called Madame Delbecque Aline Reine de Golconde, because she made such a fuss about her diameter. her diamonds. Another of their dear friends was compared to a market-gardener's stall, with her better; the wit of one was in his feet; he could dance have dance, but so could a bear. Young De Migny's collar, where had he got it from? And old De Noisy! he Noisy! had anybody remarked what eyes he made at Made at Madame Ferrail? People had given up talking of them. of them; but after last night, impossible but that At last some one asked if "1'Anglaise" was not going to show herself?

Madame Madame Emile Dubois wanted to ask her about

"She has none; Protestants believe fewer things Protestant saints. than Jews," said Anatole Guérin, gravely.

"Oh, Dieu! chère Vicomtesse, and you don't mind Isn't it disagreeable?" Paving her in the house!

OHRIBTIAN'S EX

"Sometimes," replied Made and de Beaupré. was very the river, and instead of being in despa fall into the river, stead of being in despa she scolded me darling out of the water."
dier, picked my bizarre than I er, picked my bizarre than I gave her credit for She's more bizarre than I gave her credit for being," drawled tone, "How down ironical tone, being, drawled tone, "How dared she think the rial, in an ironical soldier of more rial, in an ironical soldier of more value than the life of a common Angelo!"

of the semi-divine Angelo!" the semi-divine Beaupré peeped at the speak Madame de gelashes, just as she had do through her long of the state o an hour ago at Unristan, are laughing at most baby voice, "You are laughing at most baby won't have anything more at most I won't have anything an hour baby voice, anything more to say go away, I won't have anything to say away, I won of the way, I won of the way, I won out of the way, I go away, you."

"Those English are so out of fair so," Said I are de Tessin; so dreadfully fair so dreadfully fair so dreadfully fair so said I dread

"Those Englished Area and Those Englished Areadfill!"

"Mees is not so ill-looking," observed Gustan "Thosale de Tessin; of the de Tessin; of the de Tessin; of the de Tessin; of the de Tessin, herse what next?" asked Madame de Tessin, herse what next?" the young man, herse tall!"

"Mees is not asked "Mees is not asked "What next?" asked young man assin, herse a small brunette.

a small brunette.

"I persist," said provokingly, herse "I persist," said provokingly, herse "I persist," said looking kind of womat whirling his moustache, and looking kind of womat which adame de the stairs, which adame de the stairs above aloud who are the stairs and a stair above aloud who are the stair above aloud above aloud aloud who are the stair above aloud aloud who are the stair above aloud aloud who are the stair above aloud "I persist," said will kind of the stairs, which adame do the stairs, made as a burst above aloud what a scending there was a burst above aloud what a scending there was a burst above aloud what a scending there was a burst above aloud what a scending there was a burst above aloud what a scending there was a burst above aloud what a scending there was a burst a burst a thought, but a design a scending the scending there was a burst above aloud what a scending there was a burst above aloud what a scending the scending th moustache, and loostra laught, which, adams his moustache, and loost of laught, which, adams his tessin. "A Cleopa of ve stairs, mich, adams de Tessin. "A Cleopa of above aloud what a second ding to the somber salon not a thought, could demoit to the somber salon not time precious addenoi-Tessin. "A Cleoper of above aloud what a scending to the somber salon not a thought could emoisselle de Tremerens so; and time precious of thake There was a burs about at thought to the somber salon not at thought to the somber salon not time precious demoisselle de Tremerens so; and time precious thake those people laughtest; to the somber salo won not time precious and ding selle de Tremerens so; and time precious of make those people laugh those people laugh for any serious subject; fleeting—fleeting

"Cleopatra, I always understood, was a small lack women"

"That is a disputed point," said Gustave; "That is a disputed point," said Frotest it was a portrait of her only last year, and I protest it was of a tall black woman," observed some one. of a tall, fair woman, with ardent hair.

"Egyptian; every one knows she was a gipsy," terrunted "" interrupted Madame de Tessin, scornfully. "Roman women of her stamp," continued with tave, gravely, "were wont to dye their hair with carmine. if gravely, "were wont to dye their man carmine; if you don't believe me, ask the professor of natural -1."

"How old is your governess, Madame?" asked adame To-Madame Dubois. In the provinces the age of a new arrivol new arrival is always discussed.

"Nonsense! Miss Povère told me she was twen-

"Very strange!" observed Gustave; ty-nine," answered the Vicomtesse. have never known a woman of thirty—multitudes who were who were twenty-nine."

"Poor Madame Villefray always says she is thirty-nine, and talks of herself and of me as of the same age," said Madame Dubois, who was really

"Thirty-nine!" exclaimed a voice. Ernestine Decamps, my cousin, is forty, only twenty-two. and Henri Bonne is forty-two, and Adèle Villefray Pas running alone when Henri was in arms. I have nut her heard Madame Bonne tell how she would put her finger in Henri's eyes when he was a baby."

OHRISTIAN'S EXPLANATION. "Her case has four, said Gustave.

"Her case has four, said scandal en "Her case has been, said Gustave.

"Her case has four, said Gustave.

"Her case has four, talked scandal en talked been tried have talked scandal en talked scandal en talked been tried have."

"I hope Beauprally scandalous," remaining the scandalous," remaining the scandalous, and the scandalous are talked scandalous. amned to To have have ally seandalous," reliable Beauprelly seandalous," reliable Beauprelly seandalous," reliable Beauprelly and Madame Power ret Madame de Beaupré. Madame de Beaup "Truth is gene, de Beaup "Truth is Madame Power ret ave, laughing; had than Miss Power ret No sooner No sooner leave, than hour, half-an-hour, "Truth is suffaction of taken their leave, the leave, No sooner half-an-hour, than half-an-hour, taken their leave, than half-an-hour, taken their leave, than half-an-hour, salon.

"Can you spare mexplanation of explanation of any out you morning."

wish to give morning. any always wish to give morning. The your splanation of the spla on.

"Can you spa an explanation of the give morning any always any always are this morning for need you always are recome this don't need you always are recome this don't need you always are looked up any always are recomed. I don't need tooked up any are recomed to the recome the rec overcome this morning." "Can you you ing. any expand wish to give morninged any alway overcome this mort need you alway on might and Madame de face. Madame might waverness's face. Madame could be and Madame of the me, night yould be always of the me, night yould be and madame. "Indeed, I ampre I do not satisfied; Beaupre and Madame, might and Madame, service tall governess's face. Madame, might all governess's face. Madame, might all governess's face. Madame, might could tall governess's face. Madame, might could satisfied why an who sayed not excuse myself. I said sayed not excuse myself. I said sayed not let and why an who sught and sayed why and sayed who sayed why and sayed who sayed who sayed who sayed who sayed who sayed why and sayed who sayed who sayed who sayed who sayed who sayed why sayed who sayed w and Madame and Madame all governess's me, me, ght you will governess and thought gould all governess are thought gould you will be to the will be the said say of the said say of the said who and the man of the said say of the said who are the said of the sai "You mistake thought could you wish and excuse myself. I said sayht not it explained the man will ought, and ompense to be sure, moiself, and the sure, m "You mistal I the did yeaved you to lish to scuse myself. I said saved not to offer we why an will ought and texplained the man in order fellow ompense to be sure, noise fellow fellow the pression of discount me with the pression of discount me must not send an exprise features with the must not send an exprise features to be must not send an exprise features to b mpense to the suitemoor fellow to be Mademoor of discourse to the Mademoor of discourse the Made must not sent an expression of dis-Thérèse noticed an expression of dis-the Englishwoman's mobile man," the Englishwoman is a gentleman, ast not send an expression features. Set mon ast not send an expression as passed and passed as a gentleman," said passed as a gentleman, a gentlema hust not seed an's mortleman, see to pass one in the English wom as a gen one, he and the superior hero a flooked alarm here a Beaupy ou ten minutes of the superior hero a paymond Sa. In the superior hero a paymond Sa. In the superior hero a graymond Sa. anywhere a hero a martyr." the superior of a martyr.

The superior of a mar Because he superior hero pré looked dann here lywhere a Beaupy you ten minutes a here lywhere de Betain y Raymond Sat Madame Madame not detain g Raymond Sat Oisp. ame,
"I shall not hearing Raymond Sat Oisp. s sto withe super a here apprediction to the super anywhere as Beaupre outen made anywhere de Beaupre outen Madame of Beaupre outen Madame not detain y Raymond Sar Madame, and Madame of Beaupre outen Madame of Beaupre of Sar Madame of Sar Madame, and Madame of Sar Madame of Adame de Beaupré recovered her good breed-We don't understand one another. 1e never do understand one another.

1 get rid of von. only I do so hate martyrs." shadow of a smile crossed the governess's followed by a transient wonder that any one epochs of a woman's life wifehood, motherme and sit by me and tell me anything you pleasen

Mademoiselle. I am sure your martyr please more interesting than sure your martyr must began at Power began at once, "The soldier who Miss ngelo is Raymond once, "The soldier who a pastor of the had on a pastor of the Reformed earth. His a pastor of the Reformed Church of I first met the family at Castelnaudary, ago, the first year I went out as a gov-I was only eighteen I went out as a govre of what the Franci and had, I supten years ten yes. I was ignorant the French call la beauté du I was ignorant as a baby of the ways of pose, a I was guerant as a cuen call la beauté du diable. and I should have got the ways of mankind but for Monsieur and got into endless mankind, and should have got the ways of trouble trouble the Savoisys, and Madame Savoisy.

The description of the Savoisys, and some gossin of the Savoisys. manking but the monsieur and got into endless trouble try towns gossip, and Madame Savoiss All country the Savoisys, and some gossip about the control of th trouble trouble trouble description and some savoisy.

All country the Savoisys, and some savoisy.

Madame Savoisys.

Madame Savoisy.

Madame All counter the reached whether or not they did not stay to consider whether or not they were likely to interfer in the stay where it is they were likely to interfer in the stay where it is the stay where it is in the stay me reactive maconer or not they did not stay to consider where fering in my behalf. They me at once to the family where I was governey to consider themselves by interfering in my behalf. They came at once to the family where I was governess —the most influential per plained to me the danger plained to me the danger plained to me the danger plained to take me into the conferred to take marty. earth.

"You don't like marty, Madame, and You don't he yes, Madame, and you like saints as little; but you could not helped reverencing and loving M. Savoisy, land the creed and him to be savoisy, land him to be savoisy. helped reverences, been in my place. His creed and his praction harmony. What he preaches, that he afflicted are his the poor and the afflicted are his brethren, the single person I and the si idea of what the aposition idea of what idea of wh round his head.

doctrine, loved his permitted into the intimacy of his mitted into the intimacy of his learned all the perfection of his learned all the perfection of his while was so affectionate, so tender, so charles that was so affectionate, so tender, so charles that are within his walls could be acter.

And within his walls could be recter.

mitted into the learned all the perfect was so affectionate, so tender, so was so affectionate, so this is walls to leave any good of the collection of the leave any good of the collection of the leave any good of the collection of the leave any good of the leave to him.

"It is a great deal to say, that to leave the leave of leastly she is a quick-tempered, intelligent of the leave of the leave

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ. born exempted from original sin. Raymond, the eldest_be :eldest—he is of my age—was, when I first knew him, a bright clare him, a bright clever boy, full of ambition to rise in his profession in his profession. The Savoisys are far from rich; in your are far from their in your eyes, Madame, they would be poor; their generosite. generosity and charity never allow them to economize. Term mize. If the parents loved one child more than another: another, it was Raymond—he was the apple of his mother's

"Just when they received me into their family, about the mother's eye. Madame Savoisy began to have qualms about the conscrinction conscription; and, in order to lay by money to procure a substitute in case Raymond should draw a bad numb bad number, she had decided to take pupils. thought it probable that English girls wishing to learn Face. learn French might be sent to them, for M. Savoisy was well was well known, by reputation, to the religious

"But it is always difficult to get what one wants the right world in England. at the right moment; and it was only after months of expectation of expectation, that a young lady did come to them, and they kept me as a governess for her.

"But at the end of the year she left, and they had been so liberal to her and to me, that very few hundred dred francs had been laid by, and Raymond was already nineteen. I forgot to tell you he was studying with an architect, and his master said he had first-rate talents."

Here Christian paused, and Madame de Beaupré was going to speak, when the governess, with a depres of the speak, when the governess, with a speak to speak, when the governess with a speak to speak to speak the speak t deprecatory gesture, went on speaking very fast.

"As they could not succeed a successful they agreed to a successful to a succe CHRISTIAN BULL "As they could not sage of girl pupils, they agreed so swiss, who had been high to swiss and would salve the troub.

That was the beginning of the troub.

and would salve it the troub. That was the best of all the troub, fell in love with Salome Savoist, and M. fell in love with sent him away, and would take no more pure to more p sent him away, and take no more pu was of no more use, and could not remain a way to a German G was of no more to a German family. "In a letter."
the fatal time for the conscription, she told the the fatal time.

had resolved, if Raymond got a bad number on their house, and get had resolved, in the resolved and set a substitute other children raise money on the resident would stitt the money paid for Ray not him; and that the out of the part of the p jured, as the money pand of the counted as his portion. Everythin would be with the end of the counted as his portion. I the end of the counted the counted as his portion. jured, as the counted as his portion. Every counted as his portion counted as his po.

Salome fell into bad health—necessary of the s counted as m.

Salome fell into bad ...

Salome fell into bad ...

drew a low number, and the end of the day o money who given for Salome this."

"Ah! now I understand. The waste of this Monsie of the sale of the given for partition.

"Ah! now I understance of the second Angelo was this Monsieur rescued Angelo was this Monsieur said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man," said he must be this."

"Ah! now I un

rescued Angelo was this said he must be a good man," said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man,"
said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man,"
said he must be a good man, "said he must be a good man,"
said he must be a good man, rescued Angelo aid he must be a seaupré's lovely eyes wer

Seaupré's lovely eyes wer

ame of his mother?"

"It all but killed her outright,

"It all but killed her when the life What ake up for he life hangs Beaupré's love.

ame of his mother?

"It all but killed her

"It all but killed her

"But he can go back to her when he life Whi

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to her when he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he life hangs

"But he can go back to he "But he can go back is time?"

"And how is he to make up for have architect his career is the ear on his,"

"But he can go but his time?"

"And how is he to make up for the day of the street his career is the server is the ser on his."

only thing he can do is to turn ploughman," said Christian, bitterly. Then she troubled you with all this, Madame, because I wish added, "I have for your permission to see him sometimes."

To be sure, whenever you please, I must see him myself to thank him about Angelo. Tell him to come whenever he pleases. him to dinner."

"You forget that he is only a common soldier, Madame."

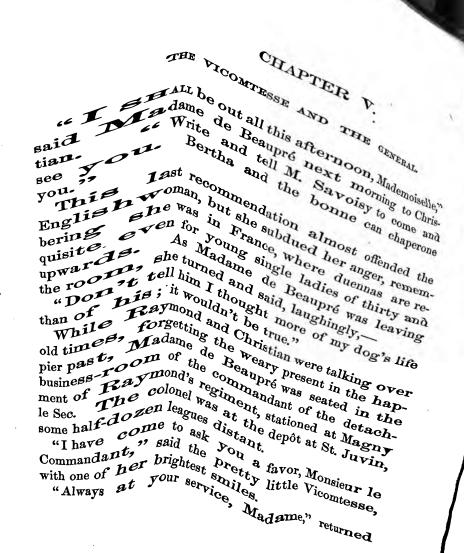

But I shall get him made an offi-"No. I don't. cer; that will comfort his poor mother and you,

"You are good, really good," said Miss Power; and suddenly kissed one of Madame de Beaupré's tiny unserviceable-looking hands.

"I may tell every one the story, mayn't I? And I shall insist on his being received everywhere. always do what I set my heart on."

Of all things that could have been proposed, nothing more distasteful to Christian than this project, could have been discovered. It was exasperating to her to imagine all the inanities that would be uttered as to what had been agony like unto death to those she so dearly loved; and then the idea of soirées being held up as a consolation for

"I think, dear Madame," she said, with forced calmness, "that the greatest kindness you can show Raymond Savoisy is to avoid calling public show Raymond Even all your influence can-da serg T does

Digitized by Google

sergeant; that's another affair. a private could not be made an officer." I told you print's the mighty difference between a private sergeant; neither are officers! " said Madand de Beaupré, with a charming scorn.

me ermit me, Madame; "and the commandant to his desk and wrote dilignormal and the commandant to his desk sat tes; then he handed to his visit sat tes; then he handed to his visitor a half militiof paper, on which were about twenty lines sheet in a delicate feminine handwriting sheet in a delicate feminine handwriting. "This written a half sheet about twenty lines written and the rules of promotion of the rules writter lain to you the rules of promotion in the service.

I can't read all that," she said, pushing "But paper. "The truth is, you don't wish to y dear lady, you don't understand, do it-

"But I can't be expected to understand military "But I do understand that one ought to do tactics; tured act when one can. tactics; a good setting this young man made an officer set on the Gruel of von the and another set on the cruel of you!" and she turned the name of the name of the turned the person it's for the cruel of you!" and she turned away.

—it's very the name of your protects." it's very the name of your protégé?" asked the commandant. mmandano should I tell you? perhaps you will be "Why him because I have disturbed you with angry wiscome papers." angry worne papers," your tires one papers,"

Madame, you are cruel and unjust. your II might see what could be done.

quired, that I might see what could be done. quired, that man is well conducted, he might be put the young for promotion at the next pengral. the young for promotion at the next general inspec-other explanation than that the Vicomtesse had gone to her cousin in Paris.

Madame de Tessin laughed heartily at what she called Madame de Beaupré's Quixotism. Any sort of enthusiasm is apt to excite ridicule; the common-place look down on your enthusiast from the calm regions of their intellectual opacity.

It was such a mere piece of romance, argued Madame de Tessin, it might be so easily misjudged; it would be so difficult to make any one believe that such excessive interest could be excited for the friends of a governess.

Therese laughed one of her long trilling laughsa laush sweet as that of a happy child. She said,— " Vell, you are right, ma cousine; you have really hit the mark. Truth is always best, so I will confess to you that I want to help this young man because he saved my dog; he does deserve some reward for that, doesn't he?"

"Give him money."

"I would, willingly; but the way to make him accept it ? "

"Not accept it! I wonder what the world is oming to hen such petites gens permit themselves irs of nobility?" said Madame la Comtesse de essin, with a shudder.

Before Tours St. Comme de Beaupré drove before Hourg St. Germain, to visit the Comte sbryate be mont you entered the Hotel d'Esbryat he modern times for hood to her age, and asked if she had come to noou w assuring her of his willingness to settle in the part of her guardian and father.

What had seemed to her the easiest thing to do at Magny le Sec, now greatly embarrassed the at magny ... All at once the motive of her visit seemed to her absurd; and truth to say, she visit seemed to wonder at her enthusiasm of the last couple of days.

She had already finished breakfast before she had courage to broach the subject of the soldier's promotion.

"I am going to make a confession to you, my cousin," she began, turning away to hide the flushcousin, "I have undertaken to do somemg or her lave set my heart on succeeding; but thing, and I have set my heart on succeeding; but unless you help me, I am sure I shall fail."

"An alarming exordium. What is it? a place "An alalmeself, ma chère, or a bureau de tabac at court for yourself, ma chère, or a bureau de tabac for your waiting-woman?"

I want to get a young soldier pro-"No, no. moted."

"Yes, I want to have him made an officer."

"Yes, I understand one another, dear lady; you "Let us understand one another, dear lady; wish some brave and excellent captain or major, wish some hero, to get a step; that is it, is it some young not?"

"Not at all, my cousin. I am speaking only of a common soldier; and what I am come to beg you a common solve him made an officer, that's all."

"It very nearly killed his poor mother," said

Thérèse, in a tone of indignation.

"I suppose many mothers in France have been in the same predicament," observed the Comte, "If this young man has been in any calmly. battle, he has probably got a medal. If you knew a little more a bout your protégé's history, it would be easier to gratify you. How would you have me interfere in his behalf without one good reason to give, except, indeed, that the pretty Vicomtesse de Beaupré wills that I should do so."

"Then you will do something?" and Thérèse's face was illuminated by pleasure into perfect beauty.

"I suppose I must," replied M. d'Esbryat, looking at her, and suppressing a sigh. Is it possible for the most reasonable among us not to regret our vanished youth, and all that youth permits us to hope. "You are the dearest of cousins," and Thérèse seized one of the Comte's thin white hands and The poor gentleman was more mortified than pleased by the caress.

"I count for nothing more than an old woman with her," thought he. However, he said kindly, "Don't be too sure of my obtaining what you wish; all I can promise is to try. Get me a distinct account of the young man's age, time of service, and the character his superiors give him."

"But if I have to do that, he will know that I am trying to help him, and that's what I don't wish."

"I cannot understand why you should make any mystery of what you are doing."

be made sergeant-major immediately, and his name transferred from the second to the first class. He therefore enclosed a note for Monsieur de Cuzensac, the General of Inspection for the department of which Magny le Sec is a chef lieu. It would be worth while to interest M. de Cuzensac, and a lady such as Madame de Beaupré would do this more effectually than a greybeard like her humble and devoted servant and friend Raoul d'Esbryat.

There were two lines of postscript—"Madame de Beaupré would do well to have a chaperone with her on her visit to M. de Cuzensac."

Madame de Beaupré paid no attention to this last recommendation. She rung for her maid, and after using every means to be as pretty as possible, set off alone to seek an interview with the hero represented as so redoubtable.

Arrived at the address on Monsieur d'Esbryat's letter, she sent it in with one of her own cards. less than five minutes a valet, with the air of a minister of state, came to conduct her into the General's presence.

A dapper little old man, dressed to perfection, came running up to her as if about to embrace her.

"Delighted to accede to all Madame's wishes. She had only to lay her commands on him. should be obeyed."

While saying this, M. de Cuzensac had taken both her hands in his. She began her story, but the General's eyes were so impertinent, that in spite of her pride her voice shook.

(feminine tact avoide d the word daughter), "would you wish me to act Otherwise?"

" H'm-h-m."

She took hold of his two hands. "It's so nice to be kind and do good. You will be good and kind!" The lovely face all aglow with mingled anxiety and modesty, was very fascinating.

"Give me a kiss, "You little witch," he said. and I promise to be what you call good and kind."

"You promise on your honor?" she asked.

"I promise."

She held up her cheek.

"Go away with you while it is time." obeying with alacrity when he ran after her.

gз

at

"When I come to Magny le Sec, I shall claim another payment in the same coin, or I'll put that confounded fellow's name last on the list."

"Value for value," she answered as she jumped "Value for value, sale Jumped into the carriage. The moment she had driven off, into the carriage.

how she did rub her face—almost took the skin off her cheeks.

"I wonder," she soliloquized, "if this is what all "I wonder," sne some a what all women have to go through who go begging for women have done it for a stranger. think I have done in think I have done in the bear my own face till I believe all the skin when skin think I have done it for a stranger. able to bear my own able to bear my own able to changed. I should like to know what Miss of it is changed.

One had she been in my place, of that demure Christian place,

At the thought of that demure Christian recei At the thought of the At the thought of General de Cuzensac, Though all alone, burst out into a ringing lauté. ing a declaration from ing a declaration from the a ring a ring a ring ing lau rèse, though all alone, burst out into a ringing lau sh.

pers. One acquaintance said to the other, "I tell it only to you—it's not a thing to talk about;" and then everybody smiled on Madame de Beaupré, as if they had not just before given her a coup de langue.

April was now at hand, bringing with it fair promises of flowers and fruits, and of the general inspection of the troops of the department.

M. de Cuzensac had arrived at Magny; and, coincident with the review, Madame de Beaupré gave a great dinner, the first she had ventured on since the death of M. de Beaupré.

General de Cuzensac sat on her right hand, and the Colonel of the 101st on her left; and such were the General's attentions that every one inquired if he had a wife? Yes, there was a Madame de Cuzensac—poor woman! What would the Magny public have said had they known that when the General gave Madame Thérèse one piece of news, she kept the promise he had exacted in Paris? She did so as she took him in her pretty blue coupé to the station.

It was about a fortnight later that Madame de Beaupré sent for Miss Power to the small salon opening into the garden.

"I have something pleasant to tell you, Mademoiselle," said the Vicomtesse, her face as radiant as the bright blue of the sky on that April morning. "Read for yourself," and she put the Moniteur into the governess's hand, pointing to the paragraph which announced that Raymond nacity of memory, in one so volatile, impressed Miss Power with an undefinable dread, and yielding to this sensation, she answered, "Pardon my frankness, Madame; but I am sure it would be better not to invite Raymond."

"And why not, Mademoiselle?"

"Where there is neither equality of fortune nor Position, intercourse cannot be agreeable."

"In France we have not such aristocratical prejudices," said Madame de Beaupré; "but perhaps you have some other reason?"

" None but the one I have given," said Christian,

"In that case, I shall send the invitation. I really should be glad of an opportunity of thanking M. Savoisy for what he did for Angelo."

M. Serial made no further reply; but she had determined to try and prevent Raymond's accepting the in vital a Protestant is a Protestant chapel at Magny le Sec, The Sunday Christian and Raymond met at and evening service. The congregation Dehind their Catholic brethren in curimorni 1 had already come at the knowledge and Power being intimately acquainted with osity. oisy's family. On this fact they built a of Miss that Raymond and Christian would unyoung certain t marry as soon as circumstances perdoubte a 1 3

thus decided, the wives of the members

Having abytery—that is, Madame Bischoff, the shoemaker's lady, and Madame Jolly of the shop—took Miss Power under their plant to have an interview with Raymond Christian had seen fit, for reasons decline his visits at Trem said so decidedly, "It made no remonst Madame Jolly of their plant of their Savoisy's gold epaulette was a week

"It's just the "It's just the last society your father ould like you to frequent—friendlay aft. less," urged Christian, when she saw has "It can't matter" Sunday after the ...

"It can't matter much my accepange in the confess I have a curiosity to see how Island gentlemen. I must be confess I have a gentlemen. I must be confess I have a curiosity now to confess It can to a desired a desired and good ladies confess I have a curred among ladies and gentlemen.

among ladies and gentlemen.

learn the ways of polite society now the learn the learn the ways of polite society now the learn the among ladies and samong ladies and selearn the ways of polite society.

learn the ways of polite society.

stored to it. Don't you see, Christian stored to it. Don't you see the neces had better hap had better hap stored to it. Don't stored to it. Don't stored to it. Don't stored to it. She had better nare did not say so. Iske to go anywhere so much as the same de Beaupré be in and her dream and h ake their counts like to go any as like to go any we had better stay as we had better stay as we had Madame as to her hair and to please as to her hair and to please as to her hair and the particular party. She had thought particular party. She had thought this Raymond Savoisy for weeks passe to the impression she come to care as to the impression she can be a set of the impression she on him. She overthrew all the elaborate fabric her maid had so arduously raised on her head. would have nothing in her hair."

"Madame, then, would look like a demoiselle

"Give me the diamond earrings and brooch. à marier." How do you think I look, Mademoiselle?" asked the Vicomtesse, as she and Miss Power stood waiting the arrival of the first guests.

"Your dress is very becoming, Madame."

"Making my looks depend on my dress! Mademoiselle, you will never spoil me by flattery."

" No, Madame." "But it is very pleasant to be flattered.

it, even though I know it is flattery."

"If you raise your eyes to the glass, Madame, you will not need that my rough tongue should compliment you."

Madame de Beaupré did involuntarily look at the reflection of herself in the great mirror in front of them, and marking the contrast between herself and her governess, blushed, saying,-

"You take as much trouble to disfigure yourself as I do to set myself off to the best advantage. you would only allow Justine to do your hair, you would be pretty. I am sure you would; you have a nice nose and eyes."

"Why should I care, if people only like me for my appearance; I have no ambition for their liking.

Here are some ladies. Madame."

my dear lady-chère Madame, how lovely

THE VICOMTESSE AND THE SUBALTER you are this every one of her every direction you are this evening," was gaid to Ma.

you are this evening, was lady guests in every direction.

Beaupré by every one of the one of the sheir eyes glancing lyes. you are this one of her lady guests in a second suppose of the second suppose glancing in every one of the sion, their eyes glancing in themselves.

Sion, their eyes glancing in themselves.

Sion, their eyes glancing in themselves. Beaupré by every one in every direction

Beaupré by every one in every direction

Beaupré by every one in every direction

One of the

Sion, their eyes glancing elves. French and sion, their eyes for themselves. French and of admiration of race, between with the

of admirations of Frenchwomen, of looking prett

the faculty Frenchwomen of looking of the faculty have of looking o of admiration for the person of the state of is the faculty of have of looking pretty finds to go upon, have of her want hair finds to go aware of her wears her hair Englishwoman, herself, wears herself an "Englishwoman herself, herself an "Englishwoman herself" herself an "Englishwoman h funds to go upon, aware of her want of personal aware of her want hair hair and herself, wears self an "Englishwoman, herself, wears self an "tractions, resigns and makes tractions, any how, and makes of the personal and makes th Englishwoman, aware herself, wears herself an "herself, wears herself an "herself, wears tractions, resigns and makes ost ineligible of clothes anyhow, with the most turns herself clothes turns herself or turns tractions, resigns and makes herself and with the most ineligible of elothes anyhow, with the most urns gentille.

A Frenchwant fights nature, the least gentille. clothes anyhow, with the most inengate of clothes anyhow, with the most inengate of turns dentile.

A Frenchwoman, nature, wins, least gentille.

and skins, fights nature at the least gentille. A Frenchwoman, wins, turns gentille.

A Frenchwoman, wins, turns gentille.

and skins, fights nature, the least gentille.

bien or charmante—at have.

bien or gift they have. nd skins, mante at the sticks of Joan or charmante at they have. It is sticked the sticks of Joan of Magny le recious gift they of the fiddle-sticks of Magny le recious gift scrape of the Musard of mencerne The first scrape the Musard commence the sticks of Joan of Magny le recious gift they are the scrape bien or gift they have. fiddle-sticks or Joan precious gift they of the fiddle-sticks or Joan precious gift they of the Musard of Magny le The first scrape of the Musard commonder the band (Joan the signal for the Mada, which is a mandant of the Mada, wh precious s scrape of the Musard of magay
The first scrape of the Musard commenceme band (Joannot was the Musard common 101st can had given the signal for the Madard had given the commandant officer. The first was the method commenced to the signal for the Madaphe had given the commandant officer. had given the commandant officer. dancing, as the commandant officer. band (Joan the signal for of the Madane had given the commandant officer.

had given the commandant officer.

dancing, as the commandant officer.

accompanied by another a strict man was accompanied by had kept a ger man was accompanied by the younger ghe had been accompanied by the yo had given the commandant officer.

dancing, as the commandant officer.

dancing, as the commandant officer.

dancing, as the commandant officer.

accompanied by another a strict watch of the commandant officer.

accompanied by another a strict watch of the commandant officer.

Beaupré, whose eyes had kept anger she had beaupré, whose eyes that the youngent not had beaupré, wat once that monight not had beaupré, to that dancing, as the another a strict man was accompanied by another a strict man was accompanied by eyes had kept anger she had be accompanied by that the younger she had be door, whose eyes had kept and the door, knew at once that the moment not have door, knew at once that might and the door, knew at once that the might and the door, knew at once that the work of the control of th accompanied by ses had kept ac Beaupré, whose of that the youngent said and the door, knew at once that monight not have mond Savoisy. Miss Power that invitation, and the doubtful whether doubtful whether glect her invitation for his prother doubtful to neglect a wish for none other door, knew at one of that might had the door, knew at out to that might and the mond Savoisy. Miss Power might and the mond Savoisy. Miss Power might and the doubtful whether her invitation, presence doubtful whether her into a wish for none other suaded him to neglect her into a wish for none maded him to neglect her into a wish for none or three standards. mond Savoisy. Miss Power and the doubtful whether gleet her invitation, presence and suaded him to neglect her invitation presence and suaded him to neglect her invitation presence and suaded him to neglect her invitation, presence and the suaded him to neglect her invitation, and the suaded him to neglect her invitation her ests; she went forward two ests; she warrivals.

eet the new arrivals a peculiar interest in the heard in the meet the new arrivals.

There is always a peculiar have heard much meeting of two persons who have discover when the meeting of two persons curiosity to discover meeting of two great curiosity to discover meeting of two persons who have the meeting of two persons a great curiosity to discover meeting of two persons who have the meeting where the meeting of two persons who have the meeting the meeting where the meeting where the meeting where the meeting which the meeting where the meeting wher meet the new arrivals. There is always a peculiar have hear much meeting of two persons who one another; a great curiosity to the features and persons agree with the idea each has formed of Reaupre large transfer.

Madame de Beaupré had pictured to herself Raymond with the exterior of the martyr Miss tall, slight, pale, with blue eyes and chestnut hair, phen of the chapel of the Visitandines, where she had been brought up. Instead of which, the young black-eyed, eyes that had flames in them; with a strongly rather than elegantly made.

And to the ink how she had scolded the commandant, coaxed in M. d'Esbryat, and bribed General de Cuzensac, for such an everyday sort of a man. She put up her and smiled, seek Christian's side, at the thought of how women make gods

make gods

It was because she had expected something entirely different that Madame de Beaupré was disappointed in Raymond's appearance. If not critically hands one, he had one of those faces which are a letter of recommendation. Impossible to imagine that envy, malice, or uncharitableness could lure Beaupré, wait till you have seen the sous-lieutenant smile, and till you have heard him ture could have such a pleasant cheery laugh.

THE VICOMTESSE AND THE SUBALTERED -

The impression Madame de Beaupré The impression madame de Beaupré

Raymond was He had expected

Raymond her. Raymond was the had expected to find duced on her.

duced on such as one meets every description. duced on her. one meets every day; coquettiss woman, such as with the undefinable woman, such as one meets every day; coquettis.
well-dressed, with the undefinable grace which be well-dressed, whom the undefinable grace which be longs to Frenchwomen as a rule.

Instead of this longs to himself examining a few managements of the longs to himself examining a few managements. longs to Frenchwomen as a rule. Instead of this he found himself examining a face, with pretty her found h he found himsen examining a face, with preti-features certainly, but which attract by a something of features certainly, but which attract by a something of a disagreement thing enigmatical, a something of a disagreement thing at the character in the expression. thing enightation, a someoming of a disagri-or of a double character in the expression. of a double character in the expression.

Most people saw nothing more in Madame

Most people a pretty capricious woman, inc. Most people saw norms more in Madame

Most people saw norms more in Madame

Woman, just

Beaupré people who can hear nothing but

Beaupré than a pretty capneous woman, just

Beaupré than a pretty capneous woman, just

can hear nothing but conthere are people who f Beethoven. there are people who of Beethoven, fusion in a symphony of with some with here are Pupphony of Bound a richness of ison in a symphosy, born with a richness of ison in a symphosy, born with a richness of ison in a symphosy which might art, at on the lim distribution of art, at on the limit of t fusion in a sy Savoisy, both at richness of in Raymond might art, at once perceived agination the career of dual.

Raymond ich might art, at once perceived agination the career of duality in the guished in the The eyes, deep Raymo which agination which career of art, to the perceived to agination the career of duality in the guished in the Character of duality in the guished in the The eyes, deep and liquid contradiction, the polynomial specific the polynomial to the perceived to the perce agination the care character duality in the guished in the The eyes, deep and liquid, he contradiction, The eyes, deep and liquid, he contradiction, and curiosity and liquid, he of his hostesseking and; the you may render the of the seeking girl; it was the pression of his a you hall; it was the pression of the growth of the seeking girl; it was the pression of the growth of the seeking girl; it was the pression of the growth of the guished in the The eyes, sep and the factorial tradiction, the The eyes, sep and liquid, he contradiction, the The eyes, sep and liquid, he contradiction, the seeking and curiosity and liquid, he of his hostesting girl; the young girl; the pression of much of a youthful; one which which of contradiction, and constity and liquid, he contradiction, and constity and liquid, he contradictions and constity and liquid, he of his hostesseeking airl; the you may remain the seeking airl; the you may remain and constitution in the seeking and constitution, the you may remain and liquid, he was that pression of a youthful; one who which a pair the was not delineating one who has employed. much of the a youthful; one what which a paint in those of the youthful; one who which a paint in those and the mismatching one who which a companies all would give nal world, of the mismatching all the eternal world, and reality of the this against the gaze in those of the youth atting the who which a paint in those not delineating which accompanies appared who which a paint which accompanies all the world, of the mismatching, of the eternal world, of and reality. Christish things of the appearance gaze, said, things of the seem on discount of the between ond's fixed gaze, said, things of the permitted things of the seem of the would give mal world, of and reality all world, of the eternal world, of and reality. Christishings of this ween appearance gaze, said, Christishings de Beaupré very pretticing link Madame full of contradiction things of appearance reality.

gulf between appearance gaze, said, said, noticing think Madame of fill capped. ings of apply fixed se, said. Christill if between ond's fixed ge Beaupré very prettiens think make a countradiction services at way? The services of those faces which make that way?

" In what way?"

You A counted those faces which make to Yes. In what way?"
Well, not one of those faces which make say at once that the person to whom it belongs is good or bad, gentle or violent, or clever or stupid. How old is she?"

"Twenty-four or twenty-five. But she looks younger."

"I am not sure of that."

As Raymond's eyes followed Madame de Beaupré's, so occasionally he found hers turned towards his. At last, drawn by natural magic, she came up to him. "Don't you dance, Monsieur Savoisy?"

"Madame, I never learned."

A look of amusement came into her face as she said, "But Protestants do dance. I have seen English people waltz and polka a whole night."

"My father disapproved of dancing," answered Raymond, meeting her laughing eyes calmly. He had risen when she first addressed him. She now took his seat, clearly intending to continue the conversation.

"Why does Monsieur votre père disapprove? I consider dancing as a preventive of scandal. When people are whirling about they can't talk."

"True; but they can feel."

"What?" she exclaimed, in surprise.

He colored slightly as he answered, "My father likened dancing to intoxication."

"Then intoxication is pleasanter than I thought; for waltzing, with a good partner and good music, is charming. Listen." The band had begun to play one of Jules Frankomme's waltzes. "Doesn't that make you long to dance? You know I owe you a good deal of gratitude, you a good deal of to waltz as I ebt."

The tone of voice was that of a

The tone of voice warchness as the eyes were full of have beaten the eyes were full of have beaten him. Christian could have but he at Raymond smiled also, Then in a

"Immovable, I see. "I told you Miss Power, she said,

Away went the defeated little martyrs, and I don't." Away went the dere and swelling white draperies floating and swelling and swelling white draperies floating and swelling a white draperies floating minute a fleecy cloud. In another minute a fleecy cloud. a fleecy cloud. In anothe Substitute 81 round the room with the she pass o round the room with the she passed aymond she smiled.

"Shall I be expected to call here; Raymond she smiled.

mond, after a long silence. ond, after a long snell leave a card. "You must certainly leave?" card.

"Shall I see you if I come?"

"I never go to the salon on her rec "But, I suppose, you might if you

"Certainly. She begged me to do

"Then make use of the permission

When Raymond was making his Madame de Beaupré said, graciously receive on Wednesday evenings, and after vespers."

CHAPTER VII.

AMOR CHE A NULLO AMATO, AMAR PERDONA. M. Aymond Savoisy was Madame de Beaupré's

Wisitor on the Sunday after her soirée. He four commonious reception, the little dog rendered any any and Possible. It barked and whime four considering reception, the little dog rendered any in Pod, twisting and untwisting it that the possible of the possible o any Ped, twisting and untwisting its small body, that Here was no telling which was its actual actual control of the small body, that there was no telling which was its head or actual convulsions of joy at the sight of so that tales de Beaupré and Savoisy both stooped

A presente moment to lift up the little its preserver. its production in the moment to lift up the little creature.

Made and Angelo in and Angelo in the lady. its tail,

Made and Angelo thereupon sprang and angelo thereupon spra at the and Angelo thereupon sprang into the "I given and arms with a cry of joy." almost the harm her hand the creature. "I give ant's arms with a cry of joy, almost huher han tenant's refuse mon't refu

man. "You have my thanks also," said Mad-was a heroic act—oh! yes it impetuously said make herself ame de impetuously, seeing him smile. "How heard you think, of even a wet coat to save many the ristitute of the men who done here would have run the ristitute of the men who come here would have run any of the ristitute of the men who come here would have run the ristitute of the men who come here would have run any of the ristitute of the men who come here would have run the ristitute of the men who come here would have run any of the ristitute of the men who come here would have run the ristitute of the men who come here would have run any of the ristitute of the men who come here would have run any of the ristitute of the men who come here would have run any of the ristitute of the men who come here would have run any of the ristitute of the men who come here would have run any of the men who come h many of dog from drowning. If you won't let the risting you to dance, you must allow mo me teach gratefu1AH

nleas Tren 50m

then

1

Madame de Madame de Beaupré's voice alone, when est to leased, made conquest voice alone, out of the Demoise tone sometime. pleased, made conquests. Even the Denotones out sometimes conjuncted to them, At remerens succumbed to its liquid suaverity as we sometimes conjured the demon of sever to that spoke to Raymon straight to 1 sometimes conjured the demon of severothat went them. Always clear and musical, spoke to Raymond, certain inflections straight to his heart.

The gentle sex liles of the demon of severothat all, the strenger of the demon of severothat all the demon of Tremerens succumbed to its liquid surverity of them. Always clear and musical, it regards to that anymond, certain inflection to his heart.

The gentle sex like strength of every control of the strength of will canable of the strength of them.

The strength of them them them the strength of the st The gentle sex like strength of every afraid all, the strength of will capable of the sex like are said independent of whom the said independent of the sex like are said independent. all, the strength of will capable of governing them. They are said, indeed to love a man of whom they are not a and are equally proud to obey as strength. Madame de Beaupré institutat that the young officer was capable of her, and her manner involuntarily assistant and the upper handled to be a standard to the month of the standard the upper handled to be a standard to bout the month of the standard the upper handled to be a standard to the standard the upper handled to the standard the upper handled to the month of the standard the upper handled to the standard the upper handled the upper handled to the standard the upper handled to the standard the upper handled the u were in pretty agreement. Ray and were in pretty agreement. Believe it character had triumphed. Believe it character had triumphed instantance be those brought. were in pretty ag were in pretty ag were in pretty ag character had triumphed. Beneve character had triumphed instantance actermakes itself felt almost instantance actermakes acter were in pretty character had triump.
charact ith them for a time truthful and name ith them for a time truthful and name ith them for a day of the said Madame de Beaupré, when a said Madame de Beaupré, when the acter makes It.

truthful and frank with them for a time trutm.

"I will send and let Miss Power kn

"I will send and let Miss Power kn "I will send a.

"I will send a.

here," said Madame de Angelo. "I will be subject of Angelo. "I Mademoiselle ...

Tope you will come voice of six is so got asking my little girl so got of six is little girl, or rather a big girl of six is little girl or six is little girl, or rather a big girl of six is little girl, or rather a big girl of six is little girl or six is little girl

Beaupré was accustomed to say, hear Mademois elle apré was accustomed not say, as Madame de Beaupré was accustomed to hear hear Mademois ellipsi acquaintance, that to hear from all her male sidering who was this was a for all her most conskes me for all her most a from all her male sidering who was this was remarkable fact, co takes me for older than the mother. om all her mail was swho was the was a markable fact, corpakes me for older the mother.
"I wonder if he through Madame de Been am," remarkable fact, co tarough Madame de Meaupré's was what passed christian

Christian

Christian

Christian

Ceived, she found Ray the Christian she had surled to a ball on his knee sound, mind. When She had to a ball on his knee, seated with Angelo de Bell ay. summons she had suppré, giving her an account of what he did in the ar Mad and in the see asked this of him, or had "Had the dit?" That susceptibility thristian of what he vicomt was a question thin, or had "Had the dit?" was susceptibility we may be the friends we have interesting the near this of him, or had the friends we have interesting the near the friends we have interesting the near the friends we have interesting the near the friends and the friends are the friends sed it?" That susceptibility we most of the fried she need introduced She had the she need have introduced, and She need have had no fear to herself. have greatly Praised. have great 1 y praised. have have have have great 1 y nd anywhere, even at court as to Rayun at ion did not sparkle with have greatly and anywhole sparkle court. Though as to Raymond id hat charm of with wit, every his conversation did pure-hearted. his convergation did that charm of naivete peculiar word ne utter and pure-hearted. the since the mistakes, nevertheless, which habit of the world are apt to per-

to the since the mistage the world are apt to make.

He made the habit of the world are apt to make.

sons with little to Christian in spite of her effort. He made have to Christian in spite of her efforts to he lady of the house as which was to He would talk to one Nismes, which was to prevent him, the lady of the house as would as He would the of new countries, which was to prevent him, the lady of the house as would have Had the after Raymond's departure, she private

Had the little Raymond's departure, she would sonfessed to being disappointed. She would Had the after many departure, she would sentiments and to being disappointed. She would have confessed to being disappointed. She would monsieur Savoisy considered her quit. have confessed to Savoisy considered her quite an old woman, all because she had been had been had been had been he was Bertha's manma. It could only if he used his eyes he might percent younger—a great deal younger than she returned to her first supposition that lovers, and deeply regretted begins of the lovers. lovers, and deeply regretted having lovely mauve muslin for a blind itators. Mad In all places, big and small, the major tenant at Madame itators. Madame Martaud had met blanchard and others soire versions of He W fore, asked to their parties also. Beside invested versions of his story got about, and shor, invested with invested with the honors of a hero Many pairs of bright eyes welcomed him ased and and and ange was a comme un ange was a score, at least, of red lips smiled on He and Ma.

On many occasion.

She would have had a she would have had a she would have had a society not one beauty of the society not one beauty not one beauty of the society not one beauty of the society not one beauty not one b where he was, five minutes afterwards he had ceased to he had where he was, nve had ceased to appear on had missed so appear on changed his place. her reception days, and had missed so many of her her reception days, and evenings that she could not but understand that he

She asked herself "Why?"

On her side she never joined in the praises so 1avished on the young officer; if forced to speak of him, she did so of a person indifferent to her.

It was at this period that Justine constantly complained in the servants' hall that Madame's Lemper had become as uncertain as a weather. Cock. And oh! Dieu de Dieu! she was so diffi-Cult about her hair and her dress. One day she would be like a nun, and the next . . . Dame! it was assomant.

Mademoiselle Justine did not understand it, not she, but often Madame came home from parties white as a ghost, when she had gone away bright as summer. She would sit, too, with her hands on her lap, and never seem to know that she was havher hair brushed—never say a word about the other ladies as she used to do. She was quite lost in her mind like.

Others besides Justine had reason to complain of Madame de Beaupré's capricious moods. At of times even affectionate to Christian, at others she would address her in a mocking staccato voice, that would have tried the temper of an angel.

As for Raymond, when they met, and strange to say they did so constantly, she turned her back AMOR CHE A MILEO AMAR PI on him, voucheoling him neither their oddly-commenced acquaint ance, was drawing to an end.

Raymond had conscientious taken every means to arrive a Love does not wait on judgm it. Love comes like the win whence; alas! it goes we know it grows as slowly as with others it arrives at as poor Jack's bean.

Raymond had been st thunderbolt. The very five Beaupré had been suffici her—hair, eyes, mouth, sitting, standing, moving for him.

When he made the disc her night and day, in fac her, it was to acknowledg · very last women he ought the very last he could or s fortune, station, were three between them. He had a father's and mother's disapp riages. He did what he cou most of us do. He controlle heart made such an obstinate last to come to a compromise $^{
m though\,he}$ avoided Tremerens H_0 Where else where there was a ch idol. To see her, was the one favorable clause he had granted to the enemy within the citadel. joy of the presence of the one loved, who has not felt it !- and the yearnings, the impatiences, the mortal ennui, the heart-sicknesses, that follow! It does not help us much, rather it does not help us at all, to be assured that others have endured the Besides, suffering same suffering and survived. cannot be measured, it depends on the nature of the individual—an earthquake to one is merely a little shaking to another. The heart is deceitful, always has been so, and probably always will be so. Raymond's had as little guile as is compatible with human nature, still it played the hypocrite when it comforted him by assurances that no har had been done to any one but himself. strange reciprocity of feeling between all living creatures. Do two people who love one another ever remain ignorant of each other's sentiments, let them take ever such sincere precautions to Close to Magny le Sec are the Masson covering the sides of two rounded hills, a green valley, so narrow it might more justly be called a ravine. Zig-zag paths traverse justly be in every direction, making the ascent or descent tolerably easy. The pride of the properietor, who is smooth walk, such as you see in royal gardens.

MOR CHE MILLO AMATO, AN

This alley is hordered by tall liminate chequered shade in the horderes perfuming, not oppressis a majestic beech, its lor forming an impervious roof noble trunk.

To the right of the road town, is a so-called châled overy picturesque, and to rooms on a summer day-rustic banqueting-room seen many of the frolics. Beaupré and her bande dever, she had given no

Nothing that high and as going to the " wood three hot months of the of any number, varyir twenty and thirty, car one or other of the Magny le Sec. The gre gardens or woods, as ments of work-people of similar. Steady matrons girls and young men pla "blind man's buff," or ladies, comme il faut, rom Les jeunes femmes, such as de Beaupré and her intimat the pastimes of their inferior y pense is their device.

No more lovely demesne near Magny than that of Massonge; but it had one crying disadvantage—the public had the right of way through the valley, rendering the châlet and the beech-walk anything but private. All the wedding-parties picnicked in the Massonge woods; very often when the Vicomtesse drove up, she found a riotous set of individuals at table. She had, therefore, come to the resolution of building another châlet higher up, and out of sight of the high road.

One fine morning, in early August, just when trees and vineyards begin to clothe themselves in soft purple tints, Madame de Beaupré gave M. Coigne, the architect, a rendezvous at Massonge.

She took Christian, Bertha, and Justine in the carriage with her. The chef and a basket of comestibles were on the box with the coachman.

M. Coigne would expect at least a breakfast a la fourchette. As they were driving over the old bridge by which you leave Magny le Sec, Madame de Beaupré was struck by the effect of the sun on the river. She said,— the five a I never thought there was any beauty in Magny before. What a pity the sun does not always shine!"

shine.
"The contrast of cloudy skies makes us appreciate fine days more," observed Miss Power, rather sententiously.

"That's a discovery of the English to reconcile themselves to their abominable climate," said Madame de Beaupré, in her most staccato tone, and

1401

effectua

and sh

but for

he goc

Пе

hokin

Teel

$ 80a.

lbe el

Ing f

Fice

811

81

AR PE MOLLO AMATO, effectually closed the conversation and she knew she was crossessing the shape of the conversation of the shape of the conversation of the shape of the conversation o effectually circ she was conversation but for shame, what Berris he good but I can't she was cross.

and she knew but for shame, what Bertha of the good, but I can't.

The whole of the drive the auxiously looking up and down the road Miss Power imagined some one will there they rea a soul, however, was to be seen of architect verthe châlet, where they found the ing for them.

"We had better go on our se no powerful Vicomtesse, before the sun gets too powerful.

said.

"It's all the same to me," she answered, a a tone that made M. Coigne glance inquiring her face.

Justine and Bertha were desired to go t beech-tree, the chef to prepare the mid-day then Madame de Beaupré announced that sh ready to follow M. Coigne's lead.

It is not given to every one to enjoy Nat1 have their vexation or their ennui charmed them by watching the alternations of ligh shade on leaves, by the dancing shadows of v branches, or by glimpses of the blue of the ment caught through the leafy top of some tree, Madame de Beaupré saw nothing of shadow: from time to time she broke fort little pettish exclamations at the heat, at the ness of the road, at some vixenish little roun ble which nearly made her fall.

 co^{nlq}

"Suppose we give it up for to-day!" said M. Coigne, soothingly; "it is very hot, very steep; I never knew more oppressive Weather."

But no, the Vicomtesse would go on.

Half-way up one of the hills, a vista has been cut, to allow of a view of Magny. As our trio came in sight of the convenient seat placed there, they perceived it was occupied.

"Very tiresome," muttered Madame de Beaupré, who was a little short-sighted. The next moment she turned away her face, lest her companions should see the treacherous flush which so suddenly suffused it.

"Ah! it is M. Savoisy, almost my colleague," exclaimed M. Coigne. "A happy chance, Madame; my young friend will give us his advice."

Raymond took off his hat, and, according to a French custom, did not replace it after his preliminary bow. He looked strikingly handsome, as he stood, bareheaded, in the blaze of light before the advancing party. There was something of a kingly grace in the courtesy of his attitude. Madame de propriety, but a soot in the courtesy of his attitude.

Christian was so busy watching the countenances of the lady and gentleman, she scarcely returned his book had fallen on the ground. Old M. Coigne Vicomtesse, exclaimed, "Here's the man to make you a design for your châlet."

"I did not know you drew, M. Madame de Beaupré, and her voice silver tones; her features had relaxe different creature from what she had ! "Oh! pray, put on J utes before. Savoisy; I am afraid we have distur won't matter if we rest here a little won't spoil your drawing."

Raymond stammered some words i was so startled by the unexpectedness view, so subdued by the smile and voice lady, that he scarcely knew if he were his feet or head. In such a case, a pers no further than his nose is a blessing Coigne seized the supremacy of the c assured Madame de Beaupré that his c friend was .honored and made happy ence and approbation, in a paternal Raymond sit on the bank or the grass. no room for him on the bench. Thanks to everybody began to feel more at ease;]

"Would this not be exactly the s châlet?"

"Quite," replied Madame de Beaupré. surprised she had never before thought o

"A little higher up," Raymond said, " some metres of flat ground, with a more view, and a profusion of wild flowers, tha lovely natural garden."

very natural gardislikes going up hill, "But Madame dislikes Coigne.

I think I had better see the spot M. Savoisy speaks of before deciding," observed Madame de Beaupré. All this time she had kept Raymond's album on her knee. "May I look at the other sketches, M. Savoisy?" and her words were spoken

" Ah!" thought Christian, "how can men ever judge women. Who would imagine this was the Vicomtesse of an hour ago!"

It was not hypocrisy, it was not art, it was joy that lent such a charm to Madame de Beaupré's She turned over the leaves of the drawingbook, asking for information about each separate sketch, ale head had a new near her. The sketcu, ale head had appeared on different pages; same le la me de Beaupré asked no questions about madane de Beaupré asked no questions about he original.

e originated girl," volunteered Raymond, "whom "A bee under my window all the while we used tioned at _____. I have used tioned at _____; I heard that her mother vere stationassian." vas a Circassian."

as a Cine took out his watch several times during M. Corending examination of the M. Cole ending examination of the sketch-book.
he never was not a good lister. he nevel was not a good listener; he avowed

1. Coigned him far more to listener I. Coisired him far more to listen than to speak."

; "it the declared he was ch!" it the declared he was obliged to be in At 12 y a certain hour.

lagny dear; and 11

it," exclaimed Madame de Beaupré ll about "will you show us the way to the place ruthfulle" of, M. Savoisy?" ruthfully of, M. Savoisy ? » ou spous

This time no one heard a we from the Vicomtesse's lips. She if she were walking on air; a muri was on her lips.

She gave a cry of delight when the bit of table-land Raymond had "Here, oh! yes here she would have !

M. Coigne took a pinch of snuff, and "It was very high, very much exp and wind."

d wind."
"Not more so than many houses in Sh said Raymond.

id Raymond.
"Certainly not," affirmed Madame be built quite in the de "Certainly not," am.
"Certainly not," am.
"and it could be built quite in the de and it could be aves and an outer. "and it could be but with overhanging eaves and an outside ith overnand distance on the root.

"And water! it will have always to be described by the standard of the sta up," objected M. Coigne.

"We can have a donkey to do that here must and shall "We can have a we yes, M. Coigne, here must and that.

Please to make the plan, be Coigne, here make the plan, but is, is is to Please spections."

"Suppose Madame la Vicontesse so very kind, is to to the so very kind, is the so very kind, i

M. Savoisy to give her a design,

"Suppose Mac.

Savoisy to give her a description.

Would you be so very kind, with a bewitching face, M. Savoisy to give her a description.

The would with a bewitching face, M. Savois, Man. she said, with a bewitching face

"I am always at your orders, Madame, she said; but so low that e.s. e said, with ...
"I am always at your o...
"Not true," she said; but so low adame."

"noached his ears.

his face,

and the word "Not true,
aly reached his ears.
A cloud came over his face,

And he Went and only reached his ears.

MADAME DE BRAUPRÉ.

joined Christian, Who was gathering a bouquet of M. Coigne, who was au fait of all the gossip that made the round of the town, ventured to an intend. that made the report current town, ventured to he designated hyperstated hyper allude to those he designated by a motion of s head.

"I know nothing of Mademoiselle's private "I know "I know affairs," was the answer in a haughty voice.

fairs," was are rarely what they seem; but if ever Things and they seem; but if ever thed, it was M. Coigne two people were man was June was M. Supposing two people were to pathon to pathon as he watched betrothed, Raymond helping Christian to gather flowers.

Raymond helping Christian to gather flowers.

aymond near and been meditating on what every Christian glance of Raymond's eye, eye, every gesture, every

Show gesture, every glance of its voice revealed. every gesture, every de Radame de Ramas less sure of tone of his vote the sincerity of Madame de Beaupré's feelings; the sincerity of the sincerity of the sincerity of the Beaupré's feelings; but if they were sincere de Beaupré's feelings; Folly that must but if they mend in misery, thought the Englishwoman.

"Take my advice, Raymond," she said, as he "Take my auver, reaymond,, she said, as he came to her side, buy a pair of spectacles, or came to ner suc, pay a pair of spectacles, or else you will stumble into some pitfall." Of course Christian believed herself quite dispassionate.

We always do, just when our words are dictated by some secret irritation of feeling. "I bought the spectacles you recommend some time ago," was his answer; and then they both lapsed into silence, she Wishing With all her heart she had left her advice unspoken. "Au revoir," shouted M. Coigne, and then they perceived that M go down the hill

M. Coigne, who v her. "Run after said to Raymon alone. Trust Ma
"Will you do Madame?" said the Vicomtesse.

"Thank you; 'The little roun defensive, and When she had Raymond said as "Do me the he a re

સ

A moment's he into his face throu put her hand wit until there was tightened; the sr to his side. She sthe emotion in he thing, but there wand love mingled "You were cru words just now. thing you wish; obstacles Providen obstacles in joke,

"I was in joke,' give me," and the his arm, till it slip! He grasped it and held it until they came in eight of the châlet, and Bertha, and the chef.

"You will come and breakfast with us?" she asked.

"Not to-day, thank you." He lifted his hat and was out of sight the next minute.

NEVER had Mad Plexed as after th: with Raymond. I pleased or vexed; her feelings. plex. She could n sorry; both perha succeeded by a der to that discomfort acted on some im prepared to accept of that vague ur have never loved. · Memory, too, wa recalling the mises friends, whose love stone to fortune, ar had been thrown as as a sucked orange. rending consequences mtil reason fled; wl respected, preached n Church from the tril Deputies.

ď

she

1d

Madame de Beaupré, so remembering, relapsed into that dryness of soul which had been habitual to her during Monsieur de Beaupré's lifetime.

And Raymond—he was in his lodging, seated before an open bureau. That bureau was a small museum of relics. Dear reader, do not laugh. In the right-hand pigeon-hole was a bow of faded ribbon; it had fallen from Madame de Beaupré's dress; all her notes of invitation—such a droll scrambling hand she wrote; there were—(I beg indulgence for the truth,)—there were some crumbs of cake, which the beloved hand had let drop. Love is very child-like: it gives, nay, it restores to those who may have lost it, simplicity of heart. The roughest hind, under the influence of a true passion, will speak words that shall bring tears more surely to your eyes, than all the art of a

Raymond loved Madame de Beaupré with all his being, loved her without hope, knowing that to-morrow, as to-day, there was no chance of their lives mingling in a union blessed by God and man. There are sufferings which are dear to us. There in placing our happiness higher than in self-mastery, cation. Let no one doubt that there is a joy in haps there is no earthly joy which equals the serving one we love without hire.

We can none of us so isolate ourselves in world that others shall not interfere with the r we have laid down for our lives. Raymond imagined he might love, if hopelessly, at least w out disturbance.

But Christian Power carried on a regular respondence with the Pasteur Savoisy and his —not a conventional correspondence, but one had all the fullness of a journal. Now, do one will, letters always imbibe and reveal muc the real state of our opinions and feelings moment of their being penned. Being or displeased, elate or depressed, strive letter that shall not betray the dominant of your mind or heart, and in spite of your endeavors you will fail. Christian settled intention of alarming Madame Savo yet Madame Savoisy was made uneasy.

"Christian disapproves of Raymond's il in Madame de Beaupré's house," said the pa wife.

ife.
"I could trust Raymond anywhere; "I could trust seven us proof of his stead was the answer.

as the answer.
"If he were among Protestants, I should he are Catholic women! the fears; but these Catholic women! they fears; but these care of themselves anotion how to take care of themselves a their confessors." always trusting to their confessors," ways trusting to ways trusting to "Is Christian accurate follow your reasoning "Is Christian accurate follows your reasoning "Is Christian accurate follows your reasoning to "Is Christian accurate follows your reasoning you 66 Is Christian accusin said the pasteur. gaid the pasteur.

Catholic woman of turning Raymond's head Not in downright words, but I can feel that e is alarmed, and we know that that Vicomtesse hers is an arrant coquette, as they all are."

"As all who, my dear?"

"You understand me very well; it would break my heart if Raymond were to get entangled in any disgraceful flirtation."

"I should be grieved beyond measure if he should become seriously attached to a Catholic; as for entanglements and coquettes, that is out of the question with Raymond."

A sublime thing to hear one individual thus become surety for another's rectitude.

But a woman's intuition often puts a man's logic to shame. She jumps with marvelous precision to the right conclusion without any attention to preliminary steps. From the moment of reading Christian Power's last letter, Madame Savoisy knew that her son was in danger, and that the danger was Madame de Beaupré. Madame Savoisy Was not a woman to fold her hands when there was he ename to do. She set to work at once with all he energy of a Protestant and a mother to find a tant friend: The peril. She wrote to a Prottant friend in Paris, married to the head partner a great stocking-weaving concern, to ask if she any acquaintances at Magny le Sec, which, as know, drives a thriving trade in stockings. who had ser's lady knew of a Protestant Maony, on who had just gone to settle at Magny, on of their eldest daughter having lately married a Protestant, appointed manager to one of subsidiary establishments of the firm of the writh husband. To be brief, Madame Savoisy asked friend to obtain information for her, whether or gossip connected Raymond's name with that of lady of Magny, and begged also that letters of troduction might be sent to Raymond for Mons Poplus and his son-in-law, Monsieur Gelinotte.

This accomplished, she wrote to her son expling her earnest desire that he would cultivate acquaintance of these two families. This ad she added, was dictated by a conviction that a able and friendly intercourse depended on equal of fortune and position, and, above all, on a ment of opinion on the most important of a jects. There were, she knew, some rare excet to this rule, but it was universally allowe those who stepped out of their own sphere suffer for it.

Raymond understood very well at mother was sending her arrows; certainly he s obey her and improve the acquaintance sieur Poplus and his son-in-law. But of obedience would stop; the affections of ther were his own; no slave but might cherish a for a queen.

for a queen.

It was in this disposition of mind that he pared for his introductory visit to Monsieur he

CHAPTER IX.

PROJECTS OF MARRIAGE.

The Popluses were the superlative of commonplace people, exactly those whom the world, for reasons of its own, designate as "good." Wherever they went, the adjective "good" was prefixed to their singular name. Ah, ces bons Poplus. It cannot fail but that in course of time the prefix will become incorporated with the name proper, and France will possess the Bon Poplus, or even perhaps the Bons de Poplus.

> Roi ni prince je suis, 'Comte ne daigne Bon de Poplus je Suis.

Monsieur Poplus was a short, thick-set man, of one or two years above sixty. He wore his grey hair brushed up to a point in the center of his head. He had round eyes, bushy greyish eye-brows, a stumpy nose, a button-hole mouth. His moustache, waxed to a fine point, was still black. He took occasion to tell all new acquaintances that he owed this to the greater youth of his moustache, "twenty years younger, you know, than my hair," and the remark invested Monsieur Poplus with a title to wit, for he took infinite care not to explain that he had found the jest ready-made in one of his ter's school-books.

In fact, it was word for word the answer a ferryman to Henry the Fourth of France

By-the-by, why should a white feather come the synonym of poltroonery? Waf white plume which that gallant French H ried into the thickest of the fight, that he known to friends and enemies?

To return to Monsieur Poplus.

Monsieur Poplus paid visits and taxes ex actitude. He went twice regularly day to church, and each time put a bag which receives the contributions o gation for the poor, the widow, and As his wife and his son-in-law, and his unmarried daughters did as much, Mo considered that he and they had do towards clothing and feeding the naked. Not only were they regular but they went en famille-Madame husband's arm, Mademoiselle Nathali their side, Monsieur and Madame (their two boys behind. Monsieur Po on this hebdomadal procession; it lool ble, la famille was a bulwark against re and socialism—Monsieur Poplus was a to him, indeed, of self-Talk rialist. and parliaments. What his common him was the best for the nation, for all n a strong government, and there was no

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

cong guestion. No, no! despotism for him ebate every license. No, no! despotism for him

Europe in the Emperor had the best ebate e world; it was his business to keep the ench and order.

It is a commanded; and vacillating to feel were specified to the weak and vacillating to feel It is a commanded; and wacillating to feel themselves commanded; and in spite of his strong hack home. Monsien, D themselves themselves and in spite of his strong voice and bow-wow manner, Monsieur Poplus was thout any wherever and whenever it had been possible in Wherever Wherever the description of season, Monsieur Poplus had always and his toponic had always and out of cried Vive l'Empereur; and his tenacity, the obsticried Vive to mediocrity, had obtained its end. what had he ever done, except continually cry What had he aloud, to obtain not only the red ribbon but the sette of the same with Poplus in all things; It had been anything in the world save his own interest; he had pursued that one end, and he own interest, no not once during his whole life had succeeded.

had he known one of those enthusiasms for a cause or a person which leads a man to forget himself.

Everything about the Popluses pleased the crowd; they possessed the one only superiority before which the world willingly bends the knee-

Madame Poplus was the complement of her husband. If he had a strong martial way of speaking, she had a plaintive one; if he lorded it over the unsuccessful or the unfortunate, she had ready tears for them; if he was particular about his eating, she was a capital cool potism, she kept he high comedy to he vantage how he win face, I never y coaxed or tricked thing." Such was Madame Gelinot most French wome keeper, alert, bustl husband's affairs, a cation of her sons Lycée, and bravely tin of their lessons tory.

It is the fashion the wives of their induced to forget t mancers and poets ceptional characters honor to say that in rule, respectably con voted of mothers.

Quite so much can but there is no necess convenances with wh their wives, and socie

This was how the luses came to be M. pretty fair example of duct these matters.

MADAME DE BRAUPRÉ.

Then Madame Poplus proposed M. Gelinotte as Then Madame Form young girl had answered, uitable husband, the father to do... uitable husband, the father to decide. I leave it is for you and my father to decide.

"But, my daughter, is there any repugnance on ly fate in your hands." your side? You have seen the young man? Does his appearance please you?"

"I have never seen him, Mamma."

"Yes, my cherished, you met him the other day at Madame Chavelle's soirée."

"I did not remark him, Mamma."

It is a further fact that Madame Gelinotte, who was married the day fortnight after the proposal, when asked by one of her companions if she loved M. Gelinotte, answered, "Yes."

Very sensible and experienced people among the French assure you that they consider this system of marriage the only one possible for their nation.

Mademoiselle Nathalie was not quite such a well-regulated young person as her sister had been. She was a pretty girl of twenty-one at the moment of her introduction to Raymond Savoisy; as round as a quail, and as full of chatter as a swallow.

There was something redolent of revolt in Mademoiselle Nathalie. Madame Gelinotte had been houseld been brought up while M. Poplus was building up his fortune. his fortune; Nathalie, ten years younger, when the prosperiter of the Nathalie prosperity of her family was assured. Nathalie and drawing masters. to Dieppe during the Beason had had music Nathalie had eyes and ears, and through these mediums Nathalie ter could not have

The Poplus' he bound The Fault designated as a vi and interests, and of dispute with the

Magny le Sec and Marbœuf dec:

The Faubourg noblesse, who had were employed at administrations—I dred to two thous Cheapness of hou these officials, and what they were in 1 ter of "comtes," "bourg, and it was titles that M. Popl

He had found a price that would chouse in Magny. ter air of the locali his own part he show his club, but he had —good air was so not bon M. Poplus!

But Madame Ge her boys wore out in the Lycée. the noble young ladies of the Faubourg, ali approve of Nathania 't approve of Nathalie's constantly runand out of the neighbors' houses. ore than she ought. Fancy, my dear, she in me and the other day we did not do her justice we set and her set and hot do her justice—to invite Madame we re and her set, and to go to the Prefecture wish to heavens we could get her marhow is it to be done? there are no Protes-, but "This was what Madame Poplus said her daughter, Gelinotte, the morning before ner d's first visit.

ymondefinotte and I wish she were married M. Madame Gelinotte; "but wishing is What do you say to Gelinotte's inquirg at Mulhouse?"

at Mur off," returned the mother. "If this Savoisy were a lieutenant, he might M. His family is very respectable." ung

"Poor, very roor. And Nathalie would not be best of managers." And Nathalie would not be

But he is sure to rise, and by-and-by he " No. ight get a place in the taxes."

ght geomother, don't think of it. uch bad marriages as want of money." Nothing makes "Ah! my dear, but a girl to marry is like a fire n the house."

Probably Madame Poplus had imparted her ideas Probable to Monsieur Poplus, for he received aymond with explosive cordiality, called Madame Poplus from the k from Monsieur le that the sous-lieu Nathalie's great fri Poplui de Remyyoung man whilst ame Savoisy's making of a son-in terous as Nathalic was nothing abou ance to displease Nathalie came a certain embarra brother-in-law_h a capon; can't ge1 found that out, he with me to-morr shall have a bot girl," pinching h a song into the know, but · Patita, Patati, bar from the "DI Raymond bowe Monsieur Poplus, put his daughter's " You find it rath or asked, Madame l "Not he. A your

Mily Stine

F Miles

i, she 100 ame

tor.

uir.

eid:

fore

ied

ig

ij.

3

3

jre

leas ved ame herever he goes," and the old hypo-

musemen significantly to Raymond. were at Bordeaux, once, when papa was away ations, and twenty were for was away ations, and twenty were for dinner," said Mademoise 11e Nathalie, and all the circles that Mademoise II face distended with a smile.

What could Raymond find to answer but an exclamation of astonishment.

And here," went on Mademoiselle Nathalie, " we have not had, in six months, one invitation to The people in Marbouf don't entertain, dinner. and living here, we are not asked in the town. I quite hate the place." Her little mouth, the very fac-simile of her father's, buttoned itself up so drolly, that Raymond laughed,

"Why do you laugh?" she went on, "Gentlemen never seem to think girls can be unhappy."

"I should regret very much to think any one so young and charming as you are were unhappy, but how can I believe it when I look at you!"

Madame Poplus thought the interchange of sentiment had gone far enough. She remembered her daughter Gelinotte's caution about the sous-lieutenant's poverty.

"A fine marriage Mademoiselle de Messart is aking," interrupted the mamma. "M. Danel has elve thousand francs a year (£440.) " But he has very bad health," observed Ray-

But threatened with a spine complaint." Threatened people live long, M. Savoisy, and twelve thousand the not in up for a great dea twelve thousand is not in her first youth; twelve thousand the stephanie de Messie is twenty-four if a moday."

twenty-four if a month, mamma," put in North mamma, put in North mamma, "Twenty-five in the de Remy says Stephanie thalie. "Mademonas Rose Remy says Stephanie thalie. "Mademy has got a beautiful diamond rin quite radiant; she has got a beautiful diamond hea for her engaged ring a Yellow diamond and hea of presents keep arriving."

"Well, child, that's natural enough where ther money. Money can't make happiness, M. Savoi but the want of it may mar happiness."

"I have seen some poor people happy, Madan Madame Poplus shook her head disconsolatel "Health and money, money and health, an defy you to be unhappy," said Pere Poplus. know what it is not to have a hundred francs, what it is to have them—a great difference. tell a man who has money, and one who has only by their way of walking; money makes ? hold up his head; money makes him speak (mind to préfet or beggar."

"There's something else, luckily for me. teaches men to hold up their heads, " said Ra laughing; adding, in answer to M. Poplus's, inquiry, "Drill."

"Oh! certainly, certainly," said the s Poplus; "besides, a fine young man like yo the world before him. I began with noth may be a millionaire yet."

ay oe a minionancy with something le

Raymond took his leave.

IADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

surning to the town, Raymond walk m whence he knew there was a vie Fortune favore figure in white was pacing up and the conhe garden-walks. He had a stron, and con-, and could perfectly distinguish Me pré's every his heart as he watched by ips he would ever have on Poplus." Madame nan, with all a woman's gor inces, and inconsistencies warmnoved, and without a taint of meaned her more truly than those who for years. To love a person is not eived as to their character. might do wrong; but her errors, hanced to be, would proceed from ent, not from narrowness of heart. night have won her, had he dared great love she had inspired; and would have accepted that love. 3d as he thought how he had shown avoidance in return for courtesy He was aware that it was her d given him a place in the society ut for her, he would have been as when he was Sergeant Savoisy. olus,"whose acquaintance his mother nim so earnestly to cultivate, how

 \mathbf{he} tion τ kin the who wer thir con As. bec pro a ce is a E Ma He fat: His Ho he: ard ed: The ano Mac grai him Log Ray the-I

ы

nd

)IIg

X)

A. Gustave Godard the chance he Vicomtesse. He knew that ibstitut's manner was a clever idness and tenderness; that he ital, mystical in his nomencla-nodern apostles, priestesses of fors, purer even in their greatest best of men."

his fair listeners believed him with an admirable faith in themnd religion. There is something called an angel. Even that de Beaupré was tickled by the judiciously.

dard's scepticism on all points, principally as regarded women, dder at.

tymond Savoisy detested Mondu Procureur Impérial, and the seated near Madame de Beaupré r, made the sous-lieutenant savinsself very egregiously when d Monsieur Gustave been a bethave been resigned to know that e Vicomtesse she was a "regenst sheep as he was.

upré instantly divined the want en her two visitors. There is pathetic in the way women strive al male spirits who meet by illng-room. And the injustice of Pan's judgment of arent than in such f the individual wi So deuced polite," fellow," pacificatress. $\mathbf{a_{re}}^{-}\mathbf{th_{e}}$ Every opinion giv Raymond; Mexico, Were Warmli as both as Would redound to promoter to the end noble, them as signal follies "I hate War, but I diers;; said Madame "Bravery! be so," said Godard; temples to a god of t courage we call With the beasts of the "I can't argue the Beaupré, "but whenev of our great battles, n heart beats, beats, her to Raymond; \mathbf{then} sumed sprightliness, thing pleasanter. we are actually going Do 3 Mademoiselle Delaporte an advance for Magny! consecrated word for char

DOE

that ever

of 1prb

884-when

s bet

v that egen-

 w^{ant}

re is

rive

of

Digitized by Google

I saw the play-bills as I came from the irg," answered Raymon a Mademoir." ing," answered Raymond, dryly.

"Mademoiselle Delaporte is transcendent and the helming in the rads he Mademoiselle Delaporte is transcentially Capeline bleue, "said Godard; "lifet and the liming in the scene with the lifet had been been and the lifet and the apeline bleue," said Godard; "life" helming in the scene where Camille work hanging over boy recover ands her hanging over her child; it is will the oy recovers consciousness and calls him papa that ne makes her a proposal of marriage, and hears her tory.". "A situation that would kill any man who really "Any man I mean loved her," said Raymond.

who had not a coarse nature."

"I differ from you entirely," said Godard. " Only a man of the most refined feeling, one who could distinguish between vice and misfortune, would have acted as Camille did."

"This 'Capeline bleue,' nevertheless had passed several years living comfortably on the pension furnished her by her child's father. At twentyfive, with the experience that the world and time give, it yet required Madame Aubray's remonstrances to awaken her to a consciousness of the degradation of her position," said Raymond.

"For my part, I don't see that the 'Capeline bleue' was a bit worse than a young lady who goes before the maire and the priest in obedience to her parents. The 'Capeline bleue' obeyed her Parents, and I see no reason why she should not ave been considered as a widow."

"I protest against such a comparison," said aymond, his eyes in a blaze.

"Public opinion is against you has approved the conclusion."

"Submitted to it," retorted R am confident that not one person ing but was revolted by that conc hero been as delicate-minded as t us to believe, such a marriage Separation—death—were the only a situation; there is no out-reas down by our own hearts. Victor truth when he makes Didier say to I 'Let me die; I shall play the spya thousand thoughts of the past The most wretched. Let me die. cannot disentangle certain complicat

Raymond's animation and indig him; there was no doubting that spoke.

Gustave rose, and addressing Mad pre cavalierly enough, said, "Well, may I still hope for your commands to for to-morrow evening, or has M. § quence prevailed against me?"

"Oh, dear no! I always like to do ple advise me against. If it will not be too much trouble, pray secure me a box

"Trouble? quite the contrary; and] went on Gustave, "that with your exce and your generous feelings you will Madame Aubray, and be one of the wa porters of the Capeline bleue. Won

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

never so much an angel as when raising with a sweeping bow the Substitut com, well satisfied with his peroration, need that Madame de Beaupré was also aseiur Godard passed through the door, le Beaupré's eyes fell on Raymond. At he disgust so legible on his face, she forriety altogether, and burst into a merry laughing at you, Monsieur Savoisy." Il not be so untruthful as to say I am glad he cause of your merriment, Madame. In ay have I made myself ridiculous?"

you could only have seen your face in the sthe amiable M. Godard left the room!"
speak frankly, Madame, I dislike Monsieur l's sentiments, manners, person—in short, hing about him is disagreeable to me."
vertheless, he is gentle, polite, careful not to is very fortunate to possess your good opindame. I have the honor to present you my ful homage."

Beaupré went on, "I should never have ou to be so severe—so very harsh in your of women."

Women in general; but of one woman in What would be a venial error in others, would be a deadly, upardon the person I loved."

e person alluding to the care alluding to "You are Madame de the carbleue," said Madame de Beau eue, "said extreme Beau "This is trifling, every species and trifling, every species of dressing unbecoming a modest of dressing pleasure, would be fi pardon in one I loved,"

" Poor Monsieur Savoisy!" eja de Beaupré, in a mocking tone. de Beaup of the Puritans." Ther tion of gaiety, she added, "how understand you now. By describing you describe the perfect person to v is given."

« Madame!"

۲, ,t

TY

glad

In

be

"Pardon the frankness of my all "I don't understand it. Perhaps will be so good as to explain your n "No, I will not be so good. Ex arguments weary me."

Raymond, who had remained st hand, repeated the formula, "I ha present my respectful homage," and towards the door; his hand was on Madame de Beaupré said, in a loud the sign of strong emotion in her, detest, it is hypocrisy."

Raymond turned towards her, an "It was my plain speaking that o

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

no least: why should I has no least; why should I be? Unless, indeed, nt the flattering portrait of the woman not love, for ma" me not love, for me."

coul as scorn in her eyes and on her lips. here fess that I think the present fashion of I compares and behavior additional areas and areas areas and areas areas and areas areas and areas areas areas and areas areas areas areas areas and areas I come aress and behavior odious and reprehen-le."

de Beaupré had a strong inclination to Mada Tou are right, and I am Madary ou are right, and I am wrong." She reply, and admired his sturdiness, but a feminine ected contradiction made have ected contradiction made her say,— irit of body has not irit of body has not reached the respectable age "Every, (that was a hit of C" "Every, (that was a hit at Christian's age), "what f thirty, old maid, may not have age f thirty, old maid, may not be suitable for every suits an and going against cold suits an and going against fashion may proceed as one else, wanity, as doing one else, wanity, as doing as others do. Besides, much from certain rank much from certain rank cannot exactly rule thempeople of those in a lower position."

selves as can those in a lower position."

lves as de Beaupré met the look of displeased
Madame Raymond's Madami Raymond's eyes, and stopped abruptly. surprise III. surprise Exercise aware that she had spoken meanly She was porthily; but She was Porthily; but at that given moment she and unworthily; but at that given moment she and unwo said anything to show Raymond how would not indifferent she was to his opinion.

There is always some hate in love, and no There more difficult to solve than how a woman question mards a man. question towards a man. He may secretly dominate feels to thought, and the world be none the wiser her every thought, and the world be none the wiser her every the one moment be destroyed in the next.

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

onsieur d'Esbryat detailed all the numero intages of such an alliance—the best materials of such an alliance—the best materials of the Desirance of th rance—great wealth—a fine old title; the Diself of suit 1 uself of suitable age; a man of elegant the distance is knowledge. hts of a constitution of the same of the same of a constitution of hts of a congenial union. M. d'Esbryat mately pressed the young widow to accepter, for her er, for her own sake and that of Ber ve been highly diverted by her cousin lited style. Now she was struck by nic. Was it not struck by nic. Was it not strange that this letter ve arrived in the moment it did? ovidential warning. Thoughts Was it a crowded pell ll on her. She could not for her life see clearly o her heart. It was the seat of a struggle been old prejudices and new feelings, a confused paring of two possible destinies. ays had a distaste for mesalliances, more particly when the superior rank was on the woman's Clearly, she had been very foolish, and must the penalty for her folly; in other words, she give up seeing M. Raymond Savoisy. At legision, she was overcome by a pang such as ad never felt before. She even uttered some or Bertha ran to her, asking what was the

Nothing," was the answer.

he little girl, with that sudden reproduction of ne litteression which makes children so often ast im Pression which makes children so often ast im French call "des enfans terribles," asked,—at the French call "des enfans terribles," asked,—

"Why have I no broke you when a second with the second with th "Why have I no brown to have I no brown a Because God has set of the But I wanted to t Because God has sen play with.

"But I want some to play with. A complete change of Anno tary smiles passed over Madame God for some?, Mr. She laughed aloud, and laughed reader, for it is true she laugh It reader, Raymond's augry face. THEA of derision, She had a short, derision of that no one le de 25/7 or derision, She had a short, delice to weeping. She had a short, delice to weeping. Woman evertells, un who one that no ned honev: told in Y the moon called honey; told in the moon carred noney; willight.
pleasant Protection of twilight. leasant protection of twingnt. Be "The next thing table and write go to her writing table and write to M. d'Esbryat, the Duc de to M. d'Esbryat, empowering him to M. d'Esbryat, empowering him the Duc de Coffer of invitation ten note of in contemplation ten oner of invitation to plation ten mote of in contemplation fession soirée not in cher self-confession soirée not in cher self-confession note of in contemplation to give up getful alike of up a nothing getful alike of the up a nothing g soirée nou in f her self-comession o getful alike of up Raymond's getful to give dread nothing resolution to thing, dread ever. getru and to give up raymond's resolution to give dread nothing, think of nothing of her for ever. Sh. taken leave of her for ever. taken ieav taken ieav

however, was the election was the election was the most that silly the most than note and so how silly than note pieces, so how sil No sooner, envelop were torne that the most than note and so how silly she than possible pieces, ver how de Beaupre possible not discover de Beaupre should not Madame ossible radiscover now smy she is lould not Madame de Beaupré
At dinner

She widently at odds with herself and the She decilared several times she was as tired had several times she had dreadfur which to perch the Savoisy had wanted to perch the Savoisy had wanted to be built bere, it might as well not be built could Sever get there. rned him of that," said Christian dat the tone, and of this unnecessary of aymond's name. You really warn him? and he pers ould sot allow of that, Mademoiselle," a Beaupré spoke with contemptuous h - an reddened, but answered nothing ck = as she could see, without 1 Perhaps it was this absence of tted Madame de Beaupré into sar are all selfish, tyrannical, exact severe for women, and indul The only way to live in pe to be more selfish, more exacting than they are. than they are. Don't forget my they are. Don't forget my self. "And now I must go It was the inner sting to And now I must go and tured to read Balzac, Maden ture." tures he paints of men and working."

Fower

Human comedy.' He paints of men and working."

Fower Far easier to paint vice than ademoiselle, spare rower. to paint vice than ademoiselle, spare me; I hate 11

"I beg your pardon, M
"I ought rather to I I am out of sorts, and ri eases my mind as swearin forgive me," and the Vicor blew a kiss to Miss Powas a storm in the air.
however, to perplex
Some one or other had chave any discomfort, no effort of your own, take t Dig in the garden, or sat down to the piano to Madame de Resurré

Madame de Beaupré her inconsistencies.

The new Bishop of th in Magny le Sec that m of ceremony to the Pré He ious communities. evening réunion of the Beaupré knew this, and etiquette for all the ladi this occasion to be There had been consults the wife of the Procuret to wear a Chambery g: Madame Folignon a whit tulle of the most dazzling rency; but, being high formable to the letter, if custom.

ì

1

de Beaupré thought it possible that might be there, and out of sheer way-Savois 3 Savois and with the most audacious disregard and vicars, chose to wear one of those f bishops bishop ich, to the male spectator, seem as body of it had been forgotten—exactly f the style that afternoon. It was a stigmatized f the sty that afternoon. It was certainly, if not forcibly, very becoming. , forcinity very becoming.

The Vicontesse had never been in better looks. The Vic had given a lovely pink flush to her gitation made her eyes shine like stars.

eeks, amight light candles at Madame's eyes," "One the waiting-maid.

Madame saw perfectly well that she was beauti-Her privilege with triumph. ful. Beauty gives power, privilege, victory. To do her justice, gives Power woman, her only wish at that moment poor little Raymond Savoisy could see her, and that was that himself he should need was that himself he should pardon one of the sins he in spite of ounced unpardonable. As his image rose had prolling like a cloud dimmed her eyes. before new tears, why or wherefore she could not Involunt hung on the lashes. She said suddenly, we to love a great mind, after all, to wear my blue silk." k."

blue silk!" ejaculated Mademoiselle Jus-"The adame can't think of such a thing; Madtine, "Perfect as she is. Ma foi, what's the use of ame is Phoulders like Madame's if no one sees them? having has not such dimples."

CHAPTER X.

A SOIRÉE AND A DINNER.

there is a Préfecture—a in the days of the first Napoleon reved of Mismentary Present play years ago, but and of the Interior—not according to t iceroy, Minister of the Interior—not so pow-present Pure years ago, but still the chiefresent represent years ago, but still the chief personage mand of fifty ment.

erful as department is look.

the departmental government but as a cenof the department. The Pretermental government, but as the center of departmental entertainments. ter of departmental entertainments. The ladies of the of department its neighborhood expect of departments are neighborhood expect, as their right, capital and its so many soirées at the Dalls, so many soirées at the D capital and balls, so many soirées at the Préfecture.

many balls, We are not at all grateful for these They ments; they are obligated They say they are obliged to give them." tertsin there is no actual obligation, though it

But no something more than suspected that such has been Préfets have been not has been Préfets have been put on the shelf for not and such tertain le Préfet and Madame la Préfette of Monsieur sec were as entertaining. Monsie Sec were as generally liked as such per-Magny le Sec were as sons usually are. It is a piec when the Préfet's wife has a graner, and has the gift of making themselves. The Préfette of M excellent wife and mother, and c of character—but she was th women. She was always in the moment, and many stories were raculous powers of silence.

The Magny ladies accused manners—one for Madame de B General, and others of that cali less exalted. The poor lady, w tion reached her, said,—

"What would you have?] I have been seeing forced smile up speeches, listening to eche the way the women sit like ch polite and tiresome."

Madame la Préfette had no inestimable advantage of los was. Thanks to a fine comple which time had neither thin appeared several years younge Time had been civil, and span irreparable outrages, but her bitter at this favoritism. Grathat strangers should be awar had certainly seen her fiftieth b

The Préfet himself was a type very—with a red face. When a of a man goins to execution, ed. He played every eventrick of tappins in a friendly sof those in authority under got small credit for affability limited powers of converpered that he was fond of might easily be so; but all d to say in support of the als, stared at every pretty face connoisseurs do at pictures, one ear.

Beaupré's privilege to say and but this evening, when she ress, so very low, at the recolee of Monseigneur the Bishop, was a general shudder of conte la Préfette, with unusual the culprit, saying,—ve forgotten Monseigneur." mbered he could not see two nose, and Monsieur le Vicaire k on me." this speech in her most childish leaupré advanced towards the l made him the prettiest obeis-

sight enough to perceive that a commonly brilliant was before broken bass voice pronounced sounded very like, "Charmed to see you, belle dame." something else—something m The Vice his violet stockings. lution on his heels, bowing his direction to the lovely courtesy

The party was not only seri The Demoiselles de gloomy. there, on account of His Grace. sat Mademoiselle de Tremerens expression Donatello has given a demon. Her mouth was ajar, ing, showing the lower teeth. clared, she was drinking in Mo A large swallow she must have thick, fat utterance, and between there was an asthmatic grunt; Mademoiselle de Tremerens felt 1 no nightingale's song had ever so in her ears as the Bishop's snuffle

If the Bishop could not see, Mad merens could, and her indignation clerical propriety, by the display Beaupré's dimpled shoulders, flash spinster's eyes.

"How cross you look to-night," s Beauprè, caressingly, to the eldest of and Fifty.'

"Distressed, Vicomtesse, distressed

"Dear me! I am so sorry."

The three sisters closed round the P_{r_0} him in from such a snare to the eye, orking at the round table gladly made room for se offended Vicomtesse.

The Substitut came out of a corner, and placed mself behind Madame de Beaupré. Every fault is to be expiated. A shiver ran through Madame Beaupré as she felt the Substitut's eyes wanderg over the shoulders that she had willfully exposed public view. She hardened her heart against is novel discomfort. She did not, of course, const to herself that Raymond's words and opinions and anything to do with her uneasiness; on the intrary, the more she suffered from Gustave Godd's pertinacious staring, the higher rose her resentent against M. Savoisy's impertinence.

"Have you ever seen archangels' eyes?" asked ladame Folignon, in a discreet whisper.

"Have archangels really ever visited the earth?" eturned Madame de Beaupré.

"Madame Maillard asserts that the new Vicar of Nôtre Dame has archangel's eves."

"What an old goose!"

"The same as ever; years have not cured her."

"You should have heard her talking of this Abbé cossin! She raves of him, and says it transported er into another world to hear him speak of the suaity of love."

"Divine love, I hope?"

"She did not say 'divine.'"

"Poor old lady! there is a coolness between her d her contemporary, Madame Bouroche, about is Abbé. Madame Bouroche declares he can't a soiriée an live; that the bigness of 1 of him. She laughs at Ma every one that her attentic Yond what is proper."

Just at this point there tea. The Préfette went to English counterpart miggyoung ladies, glad of any about with cups and milk a with a pretty grace that Taking advantage of the I pré ensconced herself in a which as effectually protect from sight as any crape sha

Madame de Beaupré had shelter she had sought bro diate vicinity of the seconmerens. She was made a question, in a loud voice, tants, Madame de Beaupré

The Vicomtesse was one at a loss for a reply. She a is very well, and getting acc Catholics!

"Oh, indeed!"

"Yes; though she has ineither as wise as serper doves." Madame de Beau fantine tones when she mea Mademoiselle Virginie, a voice to match her person, g air, and said with a short laugh,

d proverb, 'Tell me who you have the saught the fill tell you who you are.' You have caught the line estant trick of bringing the words of the line worldly conversations."

Bible Jourdain talked prose without knowing it, am in the same predicament with my quotaand from the Bible, which I never read, I assure tion I got those naughty words from "

tion. Bishop, who had caught just enough of this The between the two ladies to misunderstand it here snuffled out, "Ah, very good!—h'm entirely, sweet child—h'm, h'm—always read the h'm—a sweet child—h'm, h'm—it will do you 'Imitation,' my dear—h'm, h'm—it will do you good—h'm—if you are good, you will be happy—good—h'm, h'm—therefore be good—h'm, h'm, h'm."

A reverential silence had reigned in the salon during the delivery of these words, in which, as Mademoiselle de Tremerens devoutly remarked, "all the wisdom of ages was condensed."

The Bishop, feeling he had ably acquitted himself, rose to take leave in the moment of his triumph, as all clever folks do. In the bustle of his umph, as Madame de Beaupré heard Mademoideparture, Madame de Beaupré heard Mademoiselle Virginie muttering, "If she thinks to get those Protestants into society, she will find herself mistaken."

Formerly Madame de Beaupré would have playfully exaggerated the incidents of the evening into fully exaggerated might have been played as a "lever a farce that de Rideau" at any theat was, she lest the Préfectul had the habit of telling ladies were dressed; this n in her own thoughts, which justifiable, seeing that she Duchess.

The waiting maid of respect for the title common; who was to know a new and a new and an old title? b to her sn. to her surreptitious knowle that Made. that Madame de Beaupré or forbearance forbearance for her meditation of With 11. With the first opening of Madama Madame de Beaupré remem letter, an letter, and remembering, und not neol. not neglect to answer it.
as to the as to that answer. The dom. The dominant thought of her to ing to 1 ing to herself this decision, would receip Raymond Savoisy would receip that she Savoisy and a Duke that she had refused a Was not him, she had refused a was not him, she had refused was not to it pleased it as suppose her; it of the state of the suppose her; it of the state of the suppose her; it it pleased him to suppose her; it of those him to sould not pard, of those crimes he could not pard, he loved here her face di he loved the here her face di with smil. with amiles.

Maden Justine, who was hair, saw Oiselle diation of pleasure mirror, and set it about in the series of ser

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

etait dans le plus grand contentement imaginer."

puisse imaginer." pull of Madame de Beaupré's wish was Raymond Savoisy knew before nightfall ouc de C—G—'s proposal. He the also that the Duc had been accepted; ted. the he believed it. he bellecisely of the afternoon of the day after t six Pture soirée, Raymond Savoisy entered Préfecture salon.

, Poplus salon. Poplus in uniform, for the very good reason He was not enough in his and He was not enough in his purse to buy himhe had not beyond his pay. and the fablace beyond his pay, and that was eighteen farthing francs, or seventy-two pounds sterling. income had never exceeded four thou-he family and yet, in spite of a he family and yet, in spite of this quasi poverty, and france was hospitable, generous and france was hospitable, generous, and charitable. he pasteur was a habit with all L. he paster was a habit with all his children. Savoisy's advice to 1.

If dering Savoisy's advice to his son will never be Pasteur A-famous as that of Day Pasteul famous as that of Polonius to Laertes.

e said, fewer the wants, the wiser and more inde-"The the man. When you are tempted to rail the inequalities of fortune pendent the inequalities of fortune, look downwards against of upwards. Serve Control of upwards. nstead vereign; make no debt nstead vereign; make no debts; and give a tithe your sou have to the poor" your so you have to the poor."
of what Raymond's 3

Raymond's duty, therefore, to wear his and virtue had its uniform; well in that mixture of blue and red. special1Y

M. Poplus was alone in the salon, looking clean, and shining, reminding you of a horse fr groomed. The first words he said to Ray showed what tact he possessed.

"Ah, ha! mon sous-lieutenant; so you a keep the colors displayed?"

Raymond, brought up in reverence for tru swered manfully,---

"I have no plain clothes."

"None the worse for that, my boy. Il always a salon like this, a forte piano, c spoons. You'll have your share of luck, I You are as well-built a young fel doubt. have seen for some time."

It suddenly occurred to Raymond that M had made his fortune in some outlying where, exactly, he did not know; but the mark sounded like that of some old slave mark sounded like accustomed to appraise men's thews and accustomed to appraise for this was and a He felt a rising distaste for this "bon Po He felt a rising distant feeling for a guest which was an unplease tertain towards a host, and not at all conductions. pleasant conversation.

Luckily a ring at the door bell diverted cooly M Bertin," he Poplus's attention. served to Raymond.

rved to Raymond.

M. Bertin was a dashing little man of about M. Bertin was a dashing man of about and-forty, with lively, unsettled hungry eyes friends with you was a dashing man of about and-forty, with lively, and-forty,
and that never made friends to be a popular man, might have been supposed in fact, ladies took co

efore the second of those superficial men who shine in arty, to second of those superficial men who shine in the was ciety. He could talk on any subject. He sonly to his (M. Bertin's) level. He was insulable to mothers with young daughters just aluable He sang seconds and danced with them; are them advice, with this inevitable conclusion:

I and your mother are the only persons from them your mother are the only persons from them you flenest preached to these beginners was distrust, and of strangers second.

He believed himself gifted with resprit Français, which means the delicately mordant wit of the lighteenth century. What he really possessed was in esprit leger. He was evidently a light-minded nan, and, as such, more inclined to believe in wil than in good. He was unrivaled in the art of dropping a mischievous word—in sowing sus-

Monsieur Bertin had been greatly encouraged by fonsieur and Madame Poplus; they believed him be all powerful in Magny le Sec. They sought is counsels on every occasion, and were for ever tying to Nathalie—"It is Monsieur Bertin's opinativity you should do so-and-so, or, Monsieur ertin's advice is this or that."

At first Nathalie had rather taken a sort of filial ing for Monsieur Bertin, and followed his suggestions; lately she had gr plained that she did not ar on the arm, or of his sudden He might be old, but not ol of thing. Besides, what had their dinners. He had pro asked to Madame de Beau they? No, not even once.

"At all events, don't let the man; people who have good, always have enough t

Monsieur Poplus.

To see him receive Monsi would have thought Monsie him. He patted him on the him on all subjects, and ap Did Monsieur Bertin believe good-will? Probably as little in Monsieur Bertin's. After suades so surely as truth. I there needs no hand-shakings tappings—no explosions of any

Madame Poplus, flushed wit ence in the kitchen, next appeared and long, wide blue streamers to her inquiries after the health of th had been answered, Madame Gelino appeared. The elder sister wore a gation; as for Nathalie, she had ma that this Monsieur Savoisy was of Monsieur Bertin, and showed, ther thing a bore." When a ought "the whole 12ss or age says Je m'ennuie. cench woman of any of any kind as regards her. ou may banish hope of thirty leads to what Oche ennui of a matrom ne crise—that of a young ave Feuillet names ady of Nathalie's about there is no fortune.

a dot; to ill-health when single was to a marriage when there is a dot; to ill-health which single women that they misfortune for their talents or activity a misfortune for their talents or activity.

have no outlet for customs the have no outlet for such customs that an unmarried are hedged in by or eight-and-twenty has woman of seven she was seventeen cu woman of seven she was seventeen. She cannot liberty as when she English prototype man and the ber English prototype man are the ber English p liberty as when English prototype may read. read what ner go a day's journey unchaperoned. Cannot VISIT OF So much as walk through her native She may not so There are French mothers who, not town alone. There are Frank." fit for the form of the town alone. Gounod's "Faust" fit for their daughconsidering doubtained themselves because they could not leave their daughters for an hour. French young lady is married—guaranteed.

During the dinner, which was excellent, as is the Tile and not the exception in France, Monsieur Bertin said to Raymond, with the condescension of a superior,—

We have met before, I believe, Monsieur?"

"I believe so," answered Raymond.

Ah, yes, yes! at Mesdames C. D. E. F.," enumerating the leading families of Magny.

"You know the Vicomtesse de Beaupré very well, don't you, Monsieur Savoisy?" asked Nathalie, chafing at Monsieur Bertin's assumption of authority for the little man show the the the little man show the the little man show th thority, for the little company. Shed he himself above his him down. Shed he himself of setting him of Madan himself above ting him down, mself above him of Madame Dut mself of setting him of Madame way of the honor of Madame de B. "I have said Raymond stiff de B. by way of set honor bradame de B "I have the Raymond stiff de B quaintance," said any mention by, sen quaintance, said any mention by, sen man usually is to eculiar interest of the man usually is to eculiar interest of whom he takes a peculiar interest of exclaiment.

n usually a pec, exclaimed the nom he takes a pec, exclaimed Monsie Ah, to be sure! Monsie How was it whom he table sure:

"Ah, to be young officer. "How sie

"Ah, to the Young was it you were addressing is. night? You were addressing the How was it You were addressing is.

piquant she last Tremerens when our Prefecture de Mademoiselle de Mademoiselle in Vicars were press.

Monsie How was it You were and should last Tremerens when our prefecture de Mademoiselle de Seed or faith, und pressed our press. Mademoiselle de dressed-or faith, und profiend came in vicars were present the poor Mademonia in dicars were present the poor prefette.

Bishop and his the poor prefette. Bishop and his the poor prefette, wo of reunions ribbons, made some roll as her ribbons, and the ribbons are ribbons. ous of reunions ribbons, made some remore grew as red as her ribbons, made some remore grew as red as her ribbons, are unconstitutions. grew as red as her removed as her removed as red as her removed as her removed as the vicars of they are uncomfortal. Monseigneur they are uncomfortable, answer she got." swer she got.

swer she got.

Madame de Beaupré was quite right

Madame sit, said Monsieur Pont Madame de Bearl Monsieur Poplus.

of Chambertin to her health, Savoisy. Chambertin to not man of the World

rallow the wine. "Rather injudicious, was it not ? " swallow the wine.

adame Poplus.
"Humbug!" shouted Monsieur Pop Madame Poplus. "Humbug!" shouted bishops are to my part I don't see why I always speature fuss made about them.

fuss made about them.

fuss made about them from the after them from the same the sam roundly. It's their business from temperature als, not ours to save doesn't hurt me to see a pretty woman's shoulders;

eh, Bertin?"

Not as long as the shoulders are as well worth seeing as those of the little Vicomtesse." Monsieur Bertin was too busy with the bones of his Brochet de la Meuse to see the scowl on Raymond's face.

M. Gelinotte kept the peace, by speaking for the first time since the commencement of dinner. He had acquired the talent of silence since his marriage, M. Poplus being in the habit of cutting him short with "What can you know of the matter, Gelinotte?"

It was with unusual firmness that Gelinotte said, "I heard at the club to-day that she is going to be married to the Duc de C—— G——."

It was only Madame Gelinotte who remarked Raymond's expression of face and his change of color at this announcement.

"You don't say so!" exclaimed Bertin. "It was not known last night. Are you sure? Is it a Positive fact?"

"M. Godard told it as one."

"Poor Gustave! he is fairly thrown over, then?" laughed Bertin. "It's a magnificent marriage. The Duc de C—— G—— is one of the first matches in France."

"Is he young?" asked Nathalie.

"What do you call young, Mademoiselle? Age is relative, you know."

"Young means young, and old old. I call

A SOURÉE AND A DINNER.

thirty-six old." Nathalie hoped she had Bertin very hard.

"Alas! then the Duc is old; he has attai number of years you have named; but the de Beaupré was upwards of forty when he Mademoiselle Thérèse de Morville, who w seventeen."

"Poor child!" muttered Madame Poplu

"She was none the worse," went "She was none widow, and has enjoy "She was early a pretty well since that sad, perhaps I ought to say happy event."

M. Bertin might now say what M. Bertin might completely absorbed news of the certainty of Madame de Had any marriage to have ears to hear. marriage to have ears to marriage ears to marriage to have ears to marriage ears to marriag friend known of his previous friend known of his previous friend known of his previous Substitut, the kind friend might have constable
Substitut, the kind friend might have constable
Gustava Gustava
Gustava friend known of Substitut, the kind friend might Substitut Sub Substitut, the kind as to the him that his wish him that him that his wish him that his wish him that his was a more suitable husband than a more suitable husband than forgotten a more suitable husband than been answered. Raymond had forgotten than being It is ev been answered. Raymond he soften ard thing but M. Gelinotte's announcement, the thing but M. Gelinotte's announcement, the soften ard thing but M. Gelinotte's announcement, the soften are the soften any human being to the soften are the soften and the soften are the soften ar thing but M. Gelinotte's annuan being It is to doubted whether any human being ever to rejoiced in the first moment of certainty that rea doubted whether rejoiced in the first moment or great temptation, some folly, was put that rear great temptation and the rear great temptation are great temptation. rejoiced in the niss rejoiced in the niss great temptation, some folly,
great temptation, some folly, reach. There is, on such occasions, a dist of heart-sickness of distraction frafety. But in spir point great temptation, reach. There is, on such occurrence of distraction struggle between the heart-sickness of reach. There is, the heart-size struggle between the heart-siz struggle between — ment and the gladness of sareuj.
pressure on his heart, Raymond performed of the pressure on his heart, listened patient, ment and the gladner, Raymon Pormed Of the pressure on his heart, Raymon Pormed Of the correctly the duties of a guest,—listened Patiently Patie. pressure on his near, pressure on his near, correctly the duties of a guest, and patiently to Mademoiselle Nathalie's Patati and Patiently

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

ed when he paid his compliments to her voice Madame Poplus the information she sought the number of his brothers and his sisters, and his rages, without making one blunder. At last it ten o'clock, and he might take his leave. For e preceding quarter of an hour he had been medating how best he could avoid being saddled with ertin's company on the way home.

Bertin had perceived Raymond's brusquerie owards him; but Bertin belonged to that class who keep their displeasure to themselves, preferring rather to swallow their own words than to support them by deeds. He had become very courteous to Raymond since dinner, and, as they stood on the doorsteps together, observed, "I believe our road is the same?"

"I think not," was the curt rejoinder, and Raymond turned sharp around in the opposite direction.

Madame Gelinotte told her mother that same night, it would be useless to invite M. Savoisy to dinner any more; for she was satisfied of the truth of the report that he was in love with Madame de Beaupré.

"He must be mad, then; but who told you, my dear?"

" Mademoiselle Maxe."

"What! the ironer?" and Madame Poplus laughed.

"Those sort of people find out everything; and she irons for the Vicomtesse."

"The world is very different from what it was in my young days," was married, I had kerchiefs; and no broidered cambric falling in love with a revolution; you'

I mayn't."

CHAPTER XL

MADAME LA PRÉFETTE'S PARADISE REFUSED.

MADEMOISELLE JUSTINE'S curiosity and long tongue produced that force of circumstances which decides the fate of individuals.

Early the following morning, the Demoiselles de Tremerens were in possession of the fact that the offending Vicomtesse of the evening before, whom they had often and often qualified as the most frivolous and coquettish of women, was on the eve of placing a ducal coronet on her small, light head. They never could have thought such an event pos-M. de C----, who might have the pick and choice of the fairest and noblest from one who might have raised his eyes without fear of repulse to one standing on the steps of the thronesuch a man to take it into his head to marry this little widow! pretty, certainly, but without height or grandeur; and as for fortune, very well, but nothing to tempt a C-G-

Mademoiselle de Tremerens at once wrote a note to the Préfecture; while Mademoiselle Solanges, having caught sight of the supposed Duchess elect pacing up and down one of the garden walks, went thither to meet her, as if by accident. Mademoiselle

MADAME LA PRÉ

Solanges returned view, and told her tesse had quite a pr

No wonder if M. thing inattentive to tudes, for Madame d to a clear understand the raveled skein of struggling against seeking to decide as proposal, the image of itself. The underlying words and looks was A seed falls into the two little tender leave. ever so iron-bound, tho pierce their way. darkness and silence. our sentiments. Only i into activity, do we track l being sown.

Certainly this was what I de Beaupré. It had needed day before, and the Duc de (to make her perceive the g1 Raymond.

She was not without experients ways. She knew with pain one among those bound to her not one among the crowd of he vould blame her, would consider that love a de radation, and deride the idea that Raymond was a position of life to authorize an affection between them. On the other hand, there would be a chorus of approbation did she accept the Duc de C-G, without one grain of preference for him, and that merely because he was a duke and wealthy. Having reached this point, light broke in on her, and she said, aloud,-

"But that is no reason why I should marry M. de C-G-," and with her habitual impulsiveness, she ran into the house, and seated herself at the writing-table.

She had just written "My dear cousin," when the shrill timbre of the porter's lodge gave notice of an approaching visitor. The next instant Madame la Préfette was announced.

It is well to note here that the title of Préfette is 2 provincialism. All the invitations from the Préfecture ran in the names of Monsieur le Préfet et Madame de Renneval.

"May I congratulate you, chère Dame, or is it to be kept a secret for the present?" asked Madame Ae Renneval, in a low, mysterious voice.

Madame de Beaupré's eyes opened very wide as she repeated,- "Congratulate me, why?"

"You mean it, then, to be a secret; but let me enlighten you; it is a secret already in the possession of the whole town."

"Will you tell it to me?"

MADAME LA PRÉFETTE'S PA Madame de Renneval laugheda Madame de Renneval laugheu an come the with show with with show of his by on on your marriage of his by on on your know have no. "In Pyour marrias of his proposition of his proposi "How could you and have not be to the received it yesterday, and have alread, received it yesterday, and have alread, and hav oeived it yesterday have already sperior one. Half-a-dozen people morning from the new Half-a-dozen people this morning the new half-a-dozen people this man the new half-a-dozen people the new half-a-dozen people this man the new half-a-dozen people this man the new half-a-dozen people this man the new hal any one. dozen People morning from the news be me. The Theorems containing (of the Transfer of "Half-a-dozen P this morther from Me. Thad a note taining (of the Tribunder Tremerens President the Préfet," and dressed. Impérial told , exclaimes any one." dressed. The President the Prefet," Procureur Impérial told ," excla: essed. The frial told "," exclaimed we will is extraordinary! " exclaimed will is extraordinary!" asked M. aupré.

"Nevertheless true?", asked Madame al. Only partly. Sieur de C G G G G Froposal from Monsieur de Renneval's turn to proposal from Madame de Renneval's turn to proposal Madame Beaupré. oposal from Monsieur de Renneval's turn to tonishment. you are hesitating?" "Is it possible you at you? Why?" who were is to most no "Does that astonish you most people "Does that answer wledge, and of ele Question and answer wledge, and of ele own ideas: astonishment. "Does that answer is to most people Question and answer ledge, and of elegation and at knowledge, and of elegation arriving at knowledge, and of elegation own ideas; way of arriving of their silence; oh very many of arriving silence; oh very many silence; oh very many of arriving silence; oh very many silence; oh v Question and at knowledge, and of cless own ideas; way of arriving of their silence; object the mistiness subject has from the silence; way of arriving of their silence; object the mistiness subject from the usual think out a strikes sparks the mistiness subject in from the usual think out a strikes sparks from the usual fint that strikes sparks that sure that sure offer is unexception de grankly, yes, the offer Equality "Frankly, yes," answer unexceptionable "Frankly, yes, offer Equality of Equality of Altogether the advantage. tellects. Possible advantage.

age; for Monsieur de C-G-, the Prefet says, is not more than thirty-five."

"Thirty-seven, M. d'Esbryat says," observed Madame de Beaupré, referring to the letter lying open on the blotting-book.

"A fine man—perfect ton," went on the Préfette, rather in an interrogative than affirmative tone.

"H'm! As for looks, he is like everybody else; smiles, you know, with all his teeth set as you see them in a dentist's case, and holds his hat, and dresses just as they all do; its so difficult to distinguish one man from another in Paris!"

Madame de Renneval did not quite understand this speech; it was out of her beat. All her ideas were ruled, measured, and set in the dominant key of the day. For her, money was the indispensable thing; Position, a second-rate consideration. Money and Position, a second position combined, paradise itself could offer nothing better. Where there was plenty of money, there must be plenty of enjoyment. She would not have de Beau Pré's place. If the Vicomtesse had known what it Pré's place. If the viconices and pré's place. If the viconices and pré's place. If the viconices and the chird was to be the wife of a Préfet of the third thousand a year, she would class was to be the wife of a river of the would have the miserable thousand a year, she would be the wife of this been more grateful to Providence for this Duke's offer.

She offer.

ne said, with the emphasis of one replying to some said, with the emphasis of one arriage."

"A most excellent marriage." laughter apple desire." laughter said.

that my friends could desire," laughed that my friends could desire, the de Beaupré. "But I am the person who to be de Beaupre.

Married, and I have had the misfortune or fortune to have been married already. Marries, a not know what all marries, a not know what she is doing when she marries, a she does so course she does so courageously; but a widow to man "I don't see much need of courage Madame onsieur de C Monsieur de C G "," persisted elderly m Renneval. At this conjuncture a tall, elderly m Monsieur Lefort Monsieur Lefort, the most notable man of the to entered the room entered the room, and Madame de Beaupré jum up with alacrit. with her gravely. All the upper classes of M le Sec had a respect, strongly imbued with feat Monsieur Lefort Monsieur Lefort; the humbler world, a confiand affection. and affection only controlled by veneration. he more talent than goodness, or decide than talent? It was difficult avoided what is called society, and it sough Though his left hand knew not of the help his bestowed, misfortune always turned its imp eves to him.

He was the one man in the Department dared to live according to his own will. St that the example was not followed, for n bishop, judges, and administrators were all sieur Lefort's very humble servants. "Ha pleased," said the Mayor, "he might have been Deputy, and once Deputy, nothing could have vented his being Keeper of the Seals." Mon Lefort, once hearing this, doffed his little black cap, and said, "Much obliged. I prefer to keeper of my liberty."

You would have said that Madame de Bea.

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

one of the last persons in the world to gain one of the last persons Lefort. He to gain friendship of Monsieur Lefort. He all vigor, friendship of Monsieur lightness, all vigor, son, and sobriety; she all lightness, frivolity, on, and sobriety; But Monsieur Lefort was sagacious, I impulse. But Monsieur Lefort was sagacious, had first known Madame de Beaupré during the thad first known made the had remarked the etime of M. de Beaupré. He had remarked how etime of M. de Desapration overbearing ways, tiently she bore her husband's overbearing ways, tiently sne bole at a three treatments ways, id he had said to himself, "That little creature ust have some strength of character: weakness ever submits quietly." The interest she had then aspired had never entirely vanished. He had eard of all her follies and eccentricities, but he had lways answered, "I suspect her of being better han she chooses to appear. She has character, that little woman." And from time to time he appeared in her salon.

"I interrupt you, ladies," he began, as he took the arm-chair Madame de Beaupré pushed towards him.

"Not at all," said Madame de Renneval, at the same time gathering her shawl about her as with an intention of prompt departure.

"Have you heard the news?" asked Madame de

Beaupré, laughing.

"That is what brought me to-day, for I knew it was not your day of reception. I have been told by scores of mouths of your approaching marriage, Madame. I have ventured to come and ask you as to the truth of what is said. It never does a woman good to have a false report of that kind gain ground."

MADAME LA PRÉFETTE'S PAR — ewer you as I "I must answer you as I wal—the news is partly the first of the second o "I must answer you

Renneval—the news is partly honor the Duc de C—G is a puzzle to me," nor the Don twind, is a puzzle wo "Probably because your wait of the your your shoulder, or your shoulder, or left is the transfer of the tran got wind, is "Probably because your shoulder, or raiting that M. Lefort left it on essing-table."

"Is it possible that M. Lefort to on our femme de chambre," the we "Is it possible was nesses of our femme de chambre," the we exclaim adame de Renner....

"Madame, I have one maid, a cook reads all it have "Madame, I, a cook some experience of her ways; she reads all thave don't burn or lock up. I judge of the letters I don't burn or lock up. I judge of the species

"That horrid Justine," exclaimed Madame de Beaupré, "I remember now that I did leave M. d'Esbryat's letter in the pocket of my morning-I have the greatest mind to send her away

"No, no; on the whole she is a good girl;" (M. Lefort was popularly supposed to know the character of every man, woman, and child in Masny;) "besides, you have the advantage of being aware of her faults; you will do well, therefore, keep here. My mother used to tell a story of the Duchesse d'Abrantes. The Duchess, one day, warned a onest at brantes. The Duchess, one day, warned ed a guest that the servant in waiting was a Good hear the servant in waiting was a spy. Good heavens! said the visitor, 'why don't sould ischarge h: 'Recause I know what discharge him at once. Because I know what he at once. is, was the at once. Because a covering base ply. I should be some time in the covering base ply. I should be servants I was the covering base ply. covering before which of my other servants I nust e on my guard.' So it seems, fair lady, that nee the beldame gossip has told the truth."

"Not quite. In the first place I only know M.

de G--- by sight."

"What does that signify? You know him to be rich. I don't speak of his title; as that dates only from the first empire, it will count for nothing with you aristocrats; but he is rich, enormously rich."

"And you think that a temptation no woman can resist."

"Pardieu, it is not a temptation; it is a necessity before which she bends. Once upon a time, Madame, mankind had four great interests-religion, politics, war, and love; they have added a fifth, or rather they have done away with love, and put money in its place. When I was twenty, youths were ready to blow their brains out for the sake of some affair of the heart; now-a-days young men are all pre-occupied with the affairs of the Bourse. Pardieu, the women are not behindhand with the men. I know a young girl of two-and-twenty whose first thought on opening her eyes to a new day, is the state of the public funds. She has good talents, paints and plays, reads German and English well; she looks with scorn on the fine arts and those who profess them; the only subject she considers worthy of attention is the rise and fall of stocks. Money is like Aaron's serpent. me in time, Madame, wealth is now-a-days the one object to be sought for in marrying."

"That is an exaggeration," said Madame de for

MADAME LA PRÉFET

Renneval; "we take acter of the young aughters."

"You ascertain that a thief. But that his 1 by selfish pleasures; tl cares for nothing; without flavor for him; must have the bait of you? No: he has so much; therefore they The girl sometimes fanc vised suitor; usually she se marier. Do you read I am told they are pictures 80, alas! for my poor young Madame de Renneval rose "You are a dangerous man shouldn't wish my daughter adieu, chère Madame; au plais When the door had closed o Mousieur Lefort laughed and rea "So I am to be signaled in fi ous man for young ladies. $R_{\rm t}$ what the world asks for." "I am not going to marry M. de said Madame de Beaupré, firmly wyou are right, if you are acquainted with the puke and do not like him. When I was a not arry, saw behind the scenes as much or more than the priest did in the confessional, and I came to the conclusion that our system as to marriages was the real cause of the corruption of our morals. Madame! the human being who loves, has made an advance towards goodness. Love means self-abnegation, renunciation, self-constraint; it is, in fact, a moral law, and has been so from the beginning of the world, though we Christians are fond of arrogating to ourselves the monopoly. I speak of love, understand—not passion, the essence of selfishness, of a brutal egotism."

"Do not let my opinions influence long as little to the age as I do my or "I had decided to refuse before to Madame de Renneval."

"Thank you for believing me worthy of being so spoken to, of being capable of understanding you." Great tears were rolling over Madame de Beaupré's She went on-"I am not such a heartless, empty-headed fool as people think me. Lefort, I was so unhappy when you first knew me. I hated, yes, I did really hate M. de Beaupré. hated myself, and everybody, even poor little Ber-I could not see any use in living, or why people should be born; I wished it was all over. I believed that every one was unhappy; and I wondered, if God was all-good and all-powerful, why He should have created us only to be wretched! One day I went to see those Frankommes-I scarcely think it was from a good motive—and that merry M. Frankomme told me he had ten more grey hairs in his head from seeing his wife's tooth drawn.

MADAME IA PRECEDENTE PARADISE REFUSED.

was ridiculous, was mit it?, She was half laugh "It had such an effect on me it n half crying.

half crying.

the first time I had an idea a man could care that I was more miserable for After that I was more miserable, more Oh! no, I will not marry M. de C. wicked.

In this outburst of long pent-up feeling there was another proof for M. Lefort of his theory that there are aspects of a character which require some peculiar pressure to force them into light. He perceived that Madame de Beaupré had one of those delicate, ardent natures, as prone to suffering as enjoyment. He knew also that the more rarely endowed the individual, the less chance of meeting with re-It is not sufficient to have much to give: it is necessary to find some one capable of receiv-It was in a voice of warning that he said. Wait. Let happiness come of it-"You do well. self."

Left alone, Madame de Beaupré wrote her letter to M. d'Esbryat, committing the fault, of course, of declining M. le Duc de C----'s proposal on the plea that she did not intend to marry again. At that moment the plea was a true one.

It was much about the hour that she was writing this decision that Raymond Savoisy was listening to M. Bertin's assertion of her approaching marriage.

CHAPTER XII.

CONFLICT.

Ir was from Mademoiselle Virginie de Tremerens that Miss Power first heard of Madame de Beaupré's approaching marriage. The English governess was coming home from her daily walk when she met the youngest of "the ladies," dressed out as if for a ball. Mademoiselle Virginie had been the Queteuse that morning at a mass performed in aid of some charity. Whenever Mademoiselle Virginie was to carry round the bag, the collection was sure to be good; for all the beau monde, who made a point to be there to laugh at her way of dressing, had to pay for their amusement. She was more outrageous than usual on this day; she had managed to adorn her person with all the colors of the rainbow. Her eyebrows and bandeaux were blacker than they were the day before, the white and red of her complexion in more startling contrast.

Christian would willingly have passed this specimen of human vanity with only a bow; but Mademoiselle Virginie came up to her with mincing steps, and said, with a simper painful to behold, "So you would not honor us at Nôtre Dame this morning, Mademoiselle. The ceremony was magnificent, I assure you. But M. Mangin made an innovation

World talking. Ever since that will set all the that will set all the Sevient lalking. Ever since time of Madame de Sevient as you probably kno Who are so clever oh! Jes Mademoisen, Mademoisen,

So clever oh!

Every one speaks of your knowledge—ah! all Eng. lish ladies know so much but I assure you, from the days of Madame de Sévigné, it has always been the custom for the Queteuse only to lay her right hand on the wrist of the gentleman who is her cavalier. M. Mangin would put my arm within his, which made it very awkward; he presumed on my having chosen him to accompany me. Women have to be so on their guard, particularly single women. There's the 'Substitut' made so sure of Madame de Beaupré; he's nicely disappointed. A charming change for you this marriage will make, Mademoiselle.29

"What marriage?" inquired Christian, changing color in a remarkable manner.

"You have not heard that our lovely Vicomtesse is going to be married to the Duc de C——? Why, all Magny knows it."

"This is the first I have heard of it," returned

Christian, in amazement.

"It surprises you; so it does me and my sisters. It seems very easy for some women to have as many husbands as they please; for my part, I don't profess to know how they manage it. This is better than her first. The Duc de C—— G—— is as rich as Rothschild; his mother and sisters always had separate suites of rooms and separate sets of servants and equipages—quite in royal style, though he is only the son of a Duke of the First a great only the son of a Duke of the First a great-grand-grandfather was a postillion; as for a any. Frandfather was a postillion; as 101 any. Gala Giving States, I don't suppose he ever had Giving Gala. Eather, I don't suppose he ever me, Giving Miss days coming for you, Mademoiselle. 164 Power no time for reply, she slid not to told repolerate Power no time for reply, she sna you, to tell tales monologues. "She will not keep you, to tell tales of what went or he Christian, being aware of Mademoiselle Virginie's abit of talking habit of talking to herself, remained silent. But with the dim conwith the dim consciousness that always beset her after one of her after one of her self-betrayals, christian and ach sharp interrogating glance on Christian, and asked,—

"Did you speak ? "

"Good morning," said Miss Virginie, hurriedly. "No, Mademoiselle," "Good morning," said Miss Virginie, to Madame de Beaupré." My best compliments to Madame heard he Away she ambled. Christian over heard her saying ambled. Virginie; I don'think you looked well, Virginie; But you musta' be a fool. Well, But you musta' think you looked your age today. But you mustn' be a fool. Don't your age Mangin's eyes. No, no. Don't bour age today. No, no.

erness believe into the house, anxious to the house, anxi be a fool. The governess believe into the house, anxious iselle Virginia dependent of the out sinio of the out know what dependence moiselle Virginie's Walked might be rone served after the other a smile of telligence. The they was to look after you after you all gave her a smile of man whose business and man who who who who was to look and man who who who who who was to look and man who who who who was to look and man who who who was to look and man who who was to look and man who who was to look and man who was She met one serva telligence other, and word all gave whose businesses to look after you allude!", the hour could christian say the work to how to how the work to how to how the work to have the work to have the work to have the work to have the work to ho oman whose busines Mademoiselle! The houng linen, said, and say "You allude!", the houng linen, said, christian say The workwon Mada had beent, and afterward every man had a English gove The workwonan Madan Beaupre's marriage Beaupre's ma The workwoman madamesured every one of odde sured every one she saw assent, and afternam the English gove had told her that Made be married immediatel. It is rare that a false retion.

Madame Chuquet Wa Cristophe as he was con tering into affable converge lating feminine Gazette of shortly after to inform of from unquest she had it from unquestional take pla she had it is marriage would take place in that after the it person knew that after the the person knew that after the the Duchesse were going to litaly; were invited by the Prince of W. great friend of Monsieur de C a brother than a friend. It was re ceremony was to be performed by of Paris, that the Emperor and Emp asked to be the "witnesses," and h in short, before another forty-eigh passed, a regular programme of impro in full circulation.

It was weeks since Christian had hearted as after her colloquy with Virginie. Before mid-day she had wr off a letter to Madame Savoisy, with intelligence. One paragraph ran thu

"Now that the danger is passed, I uneasiness I have lately felt. It w not to think that Madame de Beaup ting cruelly with Raymond, and I Bking play for earnest. Now there is sil 11 nonsense; and if he has been a little scorched. t will serve to put him on his guard for the fiveure against the flattery of great ladies. He reminded me constantly of a poor stupid moth, which ne will allow itself to be saved."

Not one word of kindliness for Raymond in the whole letter, and yet Christian would undoubtedly have risked her life for Raymond. would have nursed him through plague or fever. and been glad to do so; but at the moment she wrote that last remark, she hoped and wished that Raymond should be punished-mortified by this marriage. She would have been glad to have had some one at hand to whom she could have safely descanted on his willful folly and stupidity. She was in that mood when women enjoy saying hard things of the man who interests them.

Before she went to bed that night, Miss Christian Power had been set right as to Madame de Beaupre's intentions. Very sincerely did Christian regret her confidences to Madame Savoisy; there vas no saying what the consequences might be hen Raymond's mother came to know that Madne de Beaupré was not going to marry the Duc C. G. She must undeceive Madame oisy at once. The more she shrunk from the ibility of Raymond becoming acquainted with she had written, the more it appeared to her light of a duty speedily to enlighten Madame J. She dared not hope that his mother would not write a warning letter to her swhat would Raymond think? He could knowing that Christian Power was his She would appear to him in the light She must write; but she would tell Raymeself what she had done; she would give him her opinion; let him quarrel with her if he but he should not have it to say that underhand.

If Miss Power were convinced that the If Miss Fow marriage, it was more the going to be no marriage, it was more the It would not believe in any del town was. It workers for belief that even was too preposterous for belief that even was too preposter creature as Madame even childish, half-crazy creature as Madame de E childish, half-crazy cough to refuse the Due de E would be silly enough to refuse the Due de E would be silly enough would be silly enough would be silly enough would be silly enough when the Duc de G— and his immense fortune When de G— and his immens would be said immediate. When de G_ and his immediate impossible, society di of such folly became impossible, society always he of such folly became of such folly became head sadly and angrily. Society always head sadly and do not follow the beat in head sadly and and not follow the beaten chuquet, being one of those biase of the beaten head sadij evil to those who do now the beat in Madame Chuquet, being one of those pious who always suppose the worst, said a there who always motives for such a refusal Madame on suppose who always suppose motives for such a refusal there to be no proper motives for such a refusal; if there were our actions record to the suppose of the su who always be no proper motives

be no proper motives were any good reason, why didn't Madame de were any good whenever our actions required

The stain they must be him to be hi Whenever our actions required E pré give it. Wheneve.

pré give it. Wheneve.

Madame de Beaupre...

Madame de Beaupre...

Madame de Beaupre...

sto what people might say of her. "So there do not say it to me, what does it matter that the sked. Up to this time she had been to the indifferent as to who sought or who neglected in indifferent as to who sought or who neglected had been society's disapprobation of her conduct er salon was as much crowded as ever. All save one of her acquaintances appeared there with raiseworthy regularity.

His answer did not cover a half-sheet of paper. He wrote, "Yes, frankly, I love Madame de Beaupré. I love her with my whole being. She has the whole first-fruits of my heart. I do not ask from what source you have derived your false impression of her; I beg you not to tell me. Young, lovely, impulsive, generous, tender-hearted, her foibles are those of her age; she has the defects probably of her virtues. Such as she is, if the world vere better than it is, she would only excite good Between liveliness, even volatility if you ill, together with a girlish fondness for amuseent, and lightness of conduct, there lies a whole orld. Madame de Beaupré has never 'coquetted' th me, as you accuse her of having done. My es and my heart are alone answerable for what n, perhaps justly, call my folly. I shall avoid Madame de Beaupré's society, and

I shall seek to be exchanged
I ask of you, as a proof of a stain from any further disc
Let me bear my pain in peace

This was, however, more could grant. She held it t Raymond sensible that ther important cause why fallen in love with Madamo difference of worldly statio were as naught in the balance To overlook the of creeds. get the latter, culpable. duty to his God and to his no society of the Vicomtesse. everything that a warm-ten rigid Calvinist would write to to loving a Catholic woman, was ever possessed by a greate bitish daughter-in-law than was for a Catholic one.

That second letter was a false violent, too intolerant; it set to chords in Raymond's soul which his silent. It is a painful epoch in a some one whom we have regarded the run of mankind, suddenly drops general standard. Our affection remains the errors or weaknesses of a stroyble our minds without destroying ments—but confidence and reverence are Involuntarily Raymond felt that his mother's were those of a partisan, of a Calvanist rather of a Christian. No Roman bigot could be dogmatic, nor limit more narrowly the circle or malvation.

Nor had Raymond needed his mother's sever exposition of his case to make him perceive the line of demarcation between him and Madame de Beaupré. He had seen his folly, but cherished it as better than the worldly wisdom of others. He had dreamed, as young enthusiasts dream, of never giving expression to his love—of a fidelity that asked for no reward. By forcing him to take the defensive, Madame Savoisy had developed what had been passive into active. Dikes and opposition serve sometimes to augment instead of conjuring the danger.

For some few days after she had dispatched her refusal of M. de C---, it was a delight to see Madame de Beaupré. She looked like one who had entered into the possession of a great happiness: but this did not last long; there was a reaction: from gay and equable she became restless and irritable. That peculiar limpidity of the eyes which imparted such youthfulness to her face, had iven place to a fever-heated look; the smoothness her forehead was ruffled by a contraction of the that testified to the tyranny of some d and painful idea.

She gave a large soirée, to which Raynonivited, but did not come.

The absence of her manner, and the way be turned constantly towards the door of the turned constantly towards the door of the were signs not overlooked by her guests when you have nothing to hide, you will not suspicion in the provinces. Men and wonner provinces have plenty of leisure, and small provinces have plenty of leisure, and small of any kind to occupy that leisure. They of any kind to occupy that leisure. They extracted their minds go to sleep altogether, or they have good amateur detective.

Many of those who were at Madame de Best Many of those who were interest in being there were had no other interest in being there were, except to act the spy on their neighborings. To such, the raising or the lowerings ings. To such, the fall of a fan, gave motives for consequently the fall of a fan, gave motives for consequently interpretation. There were persons in Many or interpretation. See who would sit silent through a whole ever entertainment not to lose the chance of overheles what others said.

what others said.

This evening the penetration of at least a dof Madame de why their hostess looked so ill disturbed. It could not have to do with the decrease of the usual habitates wanting. At last there was a glimmer of the wanting. At last there was a glimmer of the commandant was heard asking the the governess how it happened that savoisy was not possible! it was not within the limit of probability that a woman who could have limit

DAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

ld care two straws for a sous-lieuis no respecter of ranks," said an fty times, Madame de Beaupré had ne felt indisposed, in answer to har-

When at last the weary evening slast guest had departed, she turner and asked, "Has M. Savoisy left see him?"

arreled?" This last question was a forced laugh.

iselle, do answer something else No."

y. I have not seen him, nor have im." There was a ring in Chrisproved that her mood was not t pacific.

suddenly given up coming here?" t tell, Madame," and Christian's iriously.

upré fixed on the speaker a long en said, "Pardon me, Mademoisite credit that assurance, but I do rour confidence."

he might have retorted, "That re credit to that assurance."

Madame de Beaupré was encounter; she was the more ato the cause of Raymond, pause she began again, "Iou lhave not offended him. lan rude the last time he called; merely for the sake of contradic1 silly to take offense for such a tri no one will deny that—that M. S. real reason to complain of my civi The last few words were uttered tion of haughty indifference.

Christian remained silent.

"Pray don't let me detain yo The party was a fi Good night. think so?"

"I thought people seemed as g ame. Good night, Madame."

They separated with a very dec

"Why did I ever come here?" ing to one another. Christian; "and why did I ever spi little dog's accident? Who coult would bring so much trouble to "Make haste, Justine," said Mad

"I am 80 tired, I could cry."

She almost tore off her ornamen wreath on the ground.

"There—roll up my hair—anyho It was an inexpressible comfort to head was burning; her body like ic

Why did she feel as she did so thoroughly misrable, such an aching void? Why did her heart was worth living for? What had al. Jost all that was worth living for? What she had she not everything that she had she Jost? Had was worth living for? What had she not everything that she had ever

EIGHT days went by meeting between Raymo pré. That this should be Magny le Sec, when the laing or walking through the proved a very acute sight termination on the part of Madame de Beaupré und was willfully avoiding her own heart told her this avoid ther from dislike nor anguable that she could of his conduct.

"Ah! stupid, stupid man and could not distinguish be sham—as if she could class ard and Raymond Savoisy—him of any meanness." And lutions that kept her in a lutions that kept her in a and crying. "She was important to one so important and sham and crying that the she decided that she decided that she should be shou

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

ifficulty. If he continued obstitute, she et a vicious horse and make it me away e, on one of the days he was out Trilling iers. He should save her life, a very difffair from saving that of a dog, and then uld he help himself, she should be glad to tily for the safety of her little person, hazard tiny decided that they should come to an standing without her having recourse to such oic measure.

out three leagues from Magny le Sec stands Where once emperors. gnificent château. s, and the greatest names of France were of the noble Châtelaine, now a couple of re-Paris shopkeepers display their newly-acquirendor. Monsieur Delbecque, ex-perfumer, is oughly inoffensive man. That baptiser of ties, Gustave Godard, calls him the "golden rity." Had the nickname come to Madame que's ears, she would have asked, "Who in nses ever coupled gold and mediocrity to-Madame Delbecque, a severe-looking, woman, considers gold as the summum and having that, she feels assured of her ty, and shows that she does so.

occasion of her first dinner to the neighshe kept her company waiting from seven Clock, excusing herself by saying that it se her women" that time to adorn her amonds. From that moment she has been familiarly known in Magn conde.

Madame Delbecque wa a native of Nismes, and a not family in which there was acquainted by reputat and having seen Raymon and ascertained who he invited him to the chate:

Now, the Chance whi decreed that Raymond to the Delbeoques on the Beaupré took a whim to Golconde a morning vi appear more fortuitous utes before she: ordered Beaupré had not remem Delbecques.

It was a fact of notoric que was never ready to therefore become a rule 1 park or go to the green-hou teau had made herself, acco sion, "fit to be seen."

Ushered, as she expected the Vicomtesse said to the "Call me when Madame is the grounds," and away she thedral. She had not sauntered half it length when she saw before her a gentleman with on his shoulder walking pretty fast. She did not doubt for half a second that it was Raymon Ss. voisy. She called out "Monsieur Savoisy!" he could not have heard, for he suddenly diverged to the right—into some thick underwood.

She knew the place well, an of the main alley into one o walks, cool and dark as the fi 8*

Without giving herself time to think, she quickened her pace, until at last it became a run When she reached the point where she thought Raversond had disappeared, she went bravely and rashl w into the thicket, tearing her muslin dress at every step, and growing more obstinate as difficulties in creased.

But she was unaccustomed to running, or to battling with brushwood, and at last, as might have been expected, a root caught her foot, and down she fell, uttering a piercing scream. Raymond was so quickly by her side, that it is lawful to suppose he had never been more than a yard distant. The moment she saw him she burst into re-proaches.

"It's all your fault, M. Savoisy. I have sprained my ankle, torn my dress, and scratched all my ands. Look!"

"Allow me to assist you, Madame," "No; I can't get up-it was your fault." 'Do try and rise," he said, anxiously.

Why do you wish to avoid me? for I am sure that you saw me, and ran away. Did you I won t move till you say yes, or no."

"No, you shall not leave me. I will know why you have given up coming to see me, why pou a void me so carefully; for you do avoid me, or you would not have gone into that horrid brushwood."

There was a silence in which they were sure the beating of their hearts could be heard. At last Raymond said in a low clear voice,-

"I have avoided you, because I love you."

It was come at last; she had got possession of what she had been hoping, longing for.

Her reply was not immediate: then it came in a broken whisper.

"A strange proof," and half turning her face towards him, he saw it flushed, and tears clear as dew-drops on the cheeks.

"It is a proof, the greatest and best I could give you. Had I acted otherwise, you would have a right to accuse me as you did just now."

" Are you married?"

He laughed.

"I have never loved nor even imagined I loved any woman but you. I know now that I loved you from the very first moment I saw you. One evening you gave me your hand; you did so carelessly, but it made my heart like to burst, as now."

He hid his face in his hands, murmuring incoherent words that sounded like exclamations of pain and grief.

Madame de Beaupré had lost all her presence of mind; she was as shamefaced as a young girl.

At last Raymond said aga voice.

"I have syoided you, becaus She quivered, as if in mortal Raymond went on, letting h face,-

"I love you; I shall always yours-heart, soul, body, my threw himself on his knees by hands on his lips, his eyes, h "Do you believe me??"

""I believe you!" she could "I need that you should that I am all yours now and fo will be the same thing. I nev

"Why not?" she asked, in ling voice.

"Of what use? There are am glad you should know. good to be sure there are su as constancy and faith; I wou I could: I wish I might die and he laid his head against "Naughty, naughty !" she burst into a fit of hysteri

"Hear me out. Don't say and his eyes flashed out two have done what I ought not t not to have loved you. I or you; but the strongest hear times. Do not reproach me;

"Why should you suffer? It is all a mistake." The poor little woman imagined he alluded to her fortune and rank as causes of separation. "I never lid care for what people said; and if you don't like ue to be rich, I can make myself poor."

The tenderness and generosity of her heart, reflect-I in her face, made it at that moment more the face

'an angel than of a woman.

In a transport of love, gratitude, and admiration, caught her in his arms, and held her to his breast. "I love you so entirely," he said, "that I would ept the sacrifice; but my sweet heart, there is ething that separates us more fatally than difnce of fortune or rank—it is that you are Cathmy darling, and I am Protestant."

But Protestants and Catholics intermarry. We oth Christians. You might have been a Jew I a Mohammedan: that would never have 7 >> looked sadly at her.

es, you and I view the matter in one light. tother and father will do so in another. of their consent."

lame de Besupré turned deadly pale. id you will give me up?" Her voice shook e of her effort to steady it.

ave heard them say they would rather see us dead than married to a Catholic."

it is dreadful!" 1't tull a way from me," he said; and there reak like a sob in his voice.

ADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

to say. I will be so good, if you The state of the s hat you please," he answered, exill go home with me now?" d to dinner." stay. It's so strange. I can't feel h the powdered head and gilt buteared in sight, with a glass of water r salver. my foot," said Madame de Beanpré footman. "Will you give me your Savoisy?" d no idea how much pain she really one exclamation did she utter; she ad said, "brave." Madame Delbecque under arms,plendid new suit sent from Paris.

lace of her cap must have cost more of her parish received as stipend. elbecque having read or heard that reserve of manner were bon ton, had mation in her heart. She walked (in if her limbs were tied together, and 1, on principle, silent for five minutes at aments, her very chignon, only just occasion she was more than usually much so, that Madame de Beaupré

IADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

will do both, I hope, to-day," said que.

on't ask me to stay also?" becque was a little confused by this She was not sure whether to roof of equality or of condescension. Beaupré cut the matter short by cannot refuse me, unless, by staying, the thirteenth at dinner." nly Madame Dubois, and the Presibunal, and Madame St. Etienne."

s seven, counting you and M. Dele Comtesse, and M. Savoisy." eputy."

not know 'Partant pour la Syrie' rseillaise?' He makes eight; any make nine, the number of the muses. Savarin's recommendation."

1e rich Delbecque himself appeared, wonderful Comtesse, Spanish from e eyes and small feet.

limpse Madame de Castro appeared second, she decidedly belonged to certains."

e Juniata met Madame de Beaupré smile.

coaxing Madame Delbecque to ask e to-day. I do so want to stay," Beaupré to Monsieur Delbecque. go down on my knees to ask you." , Monsieur Delbecque, pray!

accept without that cen me to see you in that pos

Seeing her eyes wande ex-perfumer felt called on young officer was invited because he and Madam proper—being, as they we respect to the son of a Pro

"M. Raymond Savoisy Madame de Beaupré haugh and seated herself by Ra conversation by inquiring, Delbecque's portrait a grepicture was a daub and a c.

"You flatter me, Madam "Oh! no indeed, M. Dell ribly like."

ì

Raymond gave her a litt which enchanted her. It prohe had authority over her which he meant to exercise. had moved away, she said,

"I am going to be good and the evening, but remember yo with me."

"Not tete-d-tete," he said, wit
"I'll find some kind of drago
It was only too evident that si the difficulties, nay, impracticabi ation. Never had he seen her wit it was transfigured by inward

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

And yet Madame Delbecque obtuse enough to seek her in order to say, as ed towardshim. I should not have invited M. Savoisy had I ected to have had you, Madame la Vicomtesse, the Comtesse."... You think we are too light-headed and ally man of sense."... he Princesse de Golconde was completely pur , and observed, "she must go and dress." Pray do, chère Madame, and look, it is already olock. I hope you won't put on your diamonds y; you can show them to Madame de Castro leir cases; they look best so, I assure you." was only the pretty, petting, infantine tone savel Madame Delbecque from perceiving ame de Beaupré's sauciness. Luckily Ray. was at the other end of the room !! Madame Delbecque sacrificed the diamonds. on only a reef of coral, dinner could be d at a little after seven. A Countess having dence of a Vicomtesse, Madame de Besupré Monsieur Delbecque's arm, and was coninstead to that of the President, t us go as far as possible from the great said the designing little woman, taking a t table next Raymond, coolly displacing the hich assigned it to Madame Dubois-Oudin. Monsieur and Madame Delbecque remonshe laughingly defended and kept her po-åŋ.

0

toz

the

 $\mathbf{f}_{\mathbf{u}_1}$

COL

bri giv

"Wouldn't the barbarian sacrifice his e Beences to asked Madame de Beaupré pauvre homme, he would have done any. thing for me; but what could he do? His linen As impregnated with those Oriental seeds and that attar of roses with which all Arabs perfume their robes; the case was hopeless. Pity the missortine

"I do with all my heart," said Madame de Bean. pré, in a tone that made every one smile.

After dinner, which did not terminate till nearly ten, the Comtesse disappeared, and poor Madame Delbecque had to announce that the exotics had given Madame de Castro so overpowering a mi-Graine that she had been forced to go to bed. "She is an old friend of yours?" inquired Madame Dubois-Oudin.

We met her last year at Ems; it was there we heard her sing."

Oh !" was the comprehensive answer.

It then occurred to every one that they had a long drive before them.

Madame Dubois-Oudin had come with the President and his wife, and intended to return with To her surprise, Madame de Beaupré pressed her to accept a seat in her carriage. "To be frank with you, Madame Dubois, I want you to chaperone me; if you will kindly do so, I can chaperome —, spare Monsieur Savoisy a Walk in the rain—for it is to present you my homage."

Madame Dubois agreed, flattered at this advance

Digitized by Goog

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

I have to present you my homage."
I have
to present you my homage."

I have to present you my homage."

I have to present you my homage."

I have
to present you my homage."

The property of the said all the said

e, as he turned away from the carries; s certainly something between those two What?

Dubois-Oudin sighed noisily.

I fear "stood for "I hope." In a country is so thankful for some excitement. Murreson are welcome; in their absence one p with a shocking scandal.

CHAPI

SIGHT HATEFUL!

 $W_{H_{
m EN}}$ Madame de Be eyes the next morning, sh changed for her—that she life; she could never retur The fever of her spirits! with an inner trembling that visit. for whom there was something who so There were people i and com there was proposition—propos type des or arrang cousin d'E cede of honor, nextanna ce to the Duc de Ctune ce to the purifications han han this other qualifications hand his other quantities, his talents, manners, vir ins taremen, thoughts augment, and then recall what Raymond had said mother. It is to be remarked, and morals, that not for an instable Beaupré contemplate the possil acting without the consent of men or women in France can least the second secon ourse to the "trois sommations respectuehich are obligatory at all ages when the consent cannot be obtained. The "trois ons" weigh in the balance against those e recourse to them, pretty much the same unaway or clandestine marriages.

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

Madame de Beaupré's thoughts ran round

ry circle.

st M. Savoisy was announced. Scarcely for the servant to close the door, she ran up putting both hands into his, with, "You are have been writing to my mother."

had entered the room looking sad and grave, was not long proof against the radiant conent beaming from her face. Every gesture—motion of her figure, was a revelation of her d joy. They were young, they loved, what if hope gained the ascendancy?
will promise never to try to convert you. It's likely you will turn me into a heretic, and ime—time does all sorts of wonderful things; ges everything and everybody. Let us be happy to-day, till we are sure we must be happy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to the day, till we are sure we must be the happy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be happy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, and pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, and pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, and pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, and pappy to-day, till we are sure we must be pappy to-day, and pappy t

"I did not know—I could were so good," exclaimed to "I was not good at all fore I began to care whether you sieur."

Then Raymond craved for such a rough clumsy so and really true?

"Contrast, you know.
Ican't tell; there are mys told—but really—and real

And the sun shone brig came through the open with the perfume of the je Virginie's bower. They h but that they were togeth Every now and then small chime of little silver bells oiselle Virginie, who was twenty yards from the on de Beaupré's salon. Mader on tiptoe, and peeping in, of Madame de Beaupré's h: fine eyes fixed with a look and admiration on the fair him that her shoulder rested

Poor Mademoiselle Virgienvy filled her breast. Nev the like experience! and yet, more worthy of a man's devo diminutive mortal. It would not have rginie that would have laughed in such circes. Mademoiselle Virginie wished, in the ords as Desdemona, of whom she had never that heaven had made her such a man" ept her watch as satan did of our first patil she saw Raymond rise from his chair. you not stay dinner?" pleaded Madame oré.

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

must do what I can to prevent idle cannot prevent it, if you were twenty prudent as you are. The best way is not what people say. No one attaches any imto what I do or say.

r his eyes darken into something very like e, and she added, "I told you I was not I am going to begin to be so. I shall any more of those dresses, you know," her head, "nor I won't laugh at people to or behind their backs. I won't read those her; there, I promise not to be foolish; are going to promise—say it after me—I promise never to be angry with you, nor erstand you, because though I know you I know also you are not actually bad.' hond! I should break my heart if you to think ill of me."

d not repeat the formula she had set him, mething that satisfied her as well, for she ushes, and smiles, and happy tearfulness when at last she allowed him to go. He wer under a solemn engagement to come back the day. evening Madame de Beaupre

That same That same evening from Mademoiselle ginie:

nie:
"Could Madame de Beaupré grant her a priv interview? It was of importance,"

With a little disquiet as to what Mademoise With a little have to communicate, Madame (Virginie could have to an affirmative answer Beaupré sent back an affirmative answer.

Mademoiselle Virginie appeared in One of her most striking costumes two long thick black most striking from her chignon, a transparent curls, pendant from her chignon, a transparent curls, pendant and a broad sash tied behind. In fact, dressed like a girl of eighteen.

After the first compliments had been said, and After the health of the two families had inquiries made, Madame de Beaupré, impatient to know been made, mademoiselle Virginie, asked, hat had broug nothing disagreeable you have to tell me ? " ll me? Mademoiselle Virginie threw herself on her knees Mademoisement Beaupré, and said,—

"You can help me, if you will "

"You can help "Mademoiselle, what can be the mat-"Mon Dieu, Marting and rather frightened little Vicomtesse.

tle Vicomtesse.

the most miserable of creatures; "Iam wretched their assistance, my sisters refuse their assistance. my sisters relused to get married."

Beaupré, help me to get married." Madame de

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

Willingly; but how, Mademoiselle Virginie?"
Madame de Beaupré suspected the poor spinster
I quite lost her senses, and moved nearer the 1.

'You will keep secret what I am about to impart you."

Certainly."

ţ

There are several persons who are not averse to; there's Monsieur Oscar Godard for one."
Really; has he ever said anything to you?"
Not exactly; but I know when men admire me, put their right hand under their left elbow, lean their heads on their left hand—the side of heart, you know—thus," and Mademoiselle Vir.
e, still on her knees, took the attitude she had ribed. "Now, Madame de Beaupré, Monsieur r always contemplates me thus."
Pray, Mademoiselle Virginie, rise from your s; you can talk to me much better sitting in a ortable chair." And Madame de Beaupré force poor lady to get up.

'here are others. I see them at church."

Vhat do you wish me to do, Mademoiselle Vir.

eak to Monsieur Oscar. I have a dot of a d thousand francs, in rentes upon the State. inherit all that my sisters have. You can t I shall make a devoted, loving, obedient d I really shall. I shall take the greatest a void giving him any cause for jealousy. been as wise once as I am now, you would li:

€

Y

Ð,

21

Yo Go W

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

o spare the poor foolish woman Justine's quiz-5, Madame de Beaupré went herself to fetch the When she returned, Mademoiselle Virie was standing before the mirror, coquetting h her reflection. She had drawn one of the cur-18 to obtain a favorable light. She was giving to one of her monologues.

And I shall wear white—certainly—a wreath. To a right—widows cannot—so much the worse her. I wonder men can bear widows—all for money."

dame de Beaupré was thunderstruck. There 100t a doubt Virginie was alluding to Ray-said sharply, "Who are you talking about, moiselle Virginie?" ardon me, I did not speak. Oh! what a love You are the kindest of persons to let e it." it pleases you so much, do me the favor to of it. I have never worn it."

world. Let us be great friends. I will call berèse, and you shall call me W perèse, and you shall call me Virginie, and tellone another all you shall call me Virginie, and tellone another all our secrets. Oh! I werv glad something."

somet illfully pioneering her visitor to the door. 11 do for the fête of the 15th."

or the 15th."

Sweet lovely creature, I adore you. Don't And And Join."

I adore you. Don't

And away skipped e's quisch the Viring

Mademoiselle Virginie, as if she h instead of forty-six.

If the gift had been prompted bribing Mademoiselle Virginie, it "The bonnet will put everything crazy head," thought Madame de Be are always wrong when we calculate people will or will not do.

Raymond came the next day, and that, "Come," said Madame de Beyou get your letter from Castelnaudar what happiness I can. I have had so listed as forgetful of the outer world as though been children of six years old.

No wonder Christian Power asked 1 were wonder this was the same reason mond she had known. She forgave him detested Madame de Beaupré, as the ca "falling away from his high estate." If believe feminine logic, men are wax in of we femiliary of the lovers told each other ev of their lives. Thérèse (she could sca: her self called Madame de Beaupré, with given him quite a history of her gi tra gical history enough. She had never k lather. He had been found dead in one c streets in the outskirts of Paris—shot the head_his hat pressed over his face_ straightened—his walking-stick broken in Not robbed. Some said it was a suicide: 9* an act of vengeance; some few calle murder. She had no recollection of having been sent to the Convent of dines at four years old, leaving it at marry M. de Beaupré, whom she h twice before her wedding-day. She h family ties. She had been handed of band by guardians as a piece of good clad to get rid of, and did not care wh "I have known what it is to be un ond." she ended, "and I can assure y ake me good. All this won't make He understood that she could no If to reveal to him the whole of her tl were possible, the knowledge of how had been thrown away, redoubled 88 For her. There was no egotism in H story was very different. It wa romicle of home affections and dome had never been separated from his par day he put on a soldier's uniform. Ev. ut tered carried conviction to her mine common bond of affection which un his family. She had begun to love him t common in similar cases) without any reason, which some philosophers say is of loving; but now all the loose r 1 ove were resolving themselves into at tachment, as she discerned in all he sa attracted her more discovery he sp ness attracted her more than all the r made her say, with eyer you are. Oh! how good He was contented to seeking for any explanat There was only one I and Thérèse were char Christian Power. She, be sense peculiarly woman's through all disguises; he might unguardedly let fall ten, and not in praise, of M Before the end of the thi sive explanatory meeting a Princess de Golconde, the to itself about those long daily to the Vicomtesse.

As is easy to suppose, Made forgotten Mademoiselle Virginie, disguste of friendship, had confided right scene she had witnessed in the h

The story spread like wildfire.
were ignorant that their secret wild two elder Ladies de Tremerens heilt held on this subject. To hear the tions and surmises put forth, was conclusion that the members of the all gifted with second sight; that is sight of evil. The very angel of benchave fled affrighted from such an atmice The burden of all that was said, wa ne de Beaupré ought to know better. Women ere such geese; that young man was only thinking of her fortune; anybody with eyes might have een that all the advances were on her side.

Mademoiselle Solanges de Tremerens was able o affirm, on the words of their maid Victoire, hat "he and the lady" were always tete-d-tete; neither the governess nor the child were ever present. The child would not have been a great restraint, and it would have given a better look to things.

Something ought to be done; no one certainly had a right to interfere; but evil should be reproved whether in high or low station.

In many towns of France there is a "Society" or "Sisterhood" known as the Mères Chrétiennes. They have their special chapel in the churches; have their special religious services, to which only the members are admitted. On these occasions, papers called "Recommendations" are read aloud. The "Recommendations" are read aloud.

The "Recommendations" are read circle f topics. Sometimes they call on Providence to ive a son or brother a situation in a bank, or a usband some advancement; sometimes it oking dancing or love of poetry in some near and dear lative.

While Raymond and Thérèse were still indise, ppy land where all the hues are those of particle the parish church, and one of the most learned

SIGHT HATEFUL, SIGHT

ì

"Recommendations" everaloud by l'Abbe Poulot. Necessity of Prudence in Wo the Protection of a Husband." Jerome and his beloved daug Augustin, Ste. Monica, the la Furea, hurtled against the Christian mothers like a wellketry. The peroration ran words of St. François de Sale be among wives and young among flowers. The violet h hides itself under large leave it is to be found only in sha the symbol of gentle devoti dejection of the solitary best becomes a widow."

A short, pithy "Recomn this long one. It was a pr "if a widow cannot resis marriage, it might be one c position."

Some said that the first tion of one of the mothers this Madame Chuquet s which one of Madame Chthat probably the Abbé some of his learning, windignantly repudiated. any man, and he not a fath meddle with the "Recom piece of laconic advice was attribute "Recommendations" would have been co red failures by the believers in "special internations" had the on" had they not reached the ears of her ose benefit ose benefit they had been made. The only que on was here. in was, how the knowledge could be communicated to Madern to Madame de Beaupré. It was a doubting rovidence to have any fear but that the good-natured friend would be forthcoming.

V M lil. I

for a wife to a man of Raymond's class. one of Madame Savoisy's articles of the goodness and riches could not exist together, her the her, the world was divided into goats and the former For the former were the wealthy, the latter the eep: She admired the poor, invested them with the virtues, giving all the vices to the rich. Madame de Beaupré was, by her birth and wealth, condemned.

Salome, for whom Raymond had sacrificed so much, was very fluent about backsliders and idola. She declared she would rather he were untors. happy all his life, than happy at the cost of marry. ing Catholic: "That's my feeling, dear Raymond. and I am persuaded it is a right one."

A mid he, who had been unable to witness her grief ! who had given up for her sake a profession he leved for one distasteful to him; who had according to the world's opinion, derogated!

Ma dame de Beaupré bore the shock bravely. She showed neither pride nor resentment; she put herse 1 f on one side to think only of him. Her ender assurances, her caresses, her offers of selfmmo 12 tion, drove him half wild with love and rief

"We have been very happy this last week," she thy should there be any change? Your ill not exact that you should give up mily eing me." "The stake is not "The tween us—that a woman is destroyed by what is passed over as a joi fifty lives to give in Your silence malignant ton Sues. "But why care about the "You don't understand, look on you as a friend. It ent, had I never told You did not know that you lov not water, in my veins.

1/4

er,

"Suppose I don't care so He shook his head.

"And you really mean tl see me any more, that we strangers! but I can't, Raj morning, the last thought The first t What could I do with myse you, Raymond,"—and she orless as the Whitest marble and hands that clasped and her close, his head bent dow that which trickled so hot "Raymond, Raymond, don't c don't cry, don't cry," and she ! stroked his face, and tried to things! what Pain they suffer struggled against their love; he gled to do what they held as du

Ah! religion, religion, what are exacted in thy name!

Raymond was whispering in her ear husband ou the same fidelity as if I were your husband am yours, soul and had a were your husband had a well-were your husband had a

"You will never forget me, Raymond never?"

1e√er?" "The day I do so will be my last. You do lor, me, my darling? Give me one of these long curls." He had wound one round his finger.

She broke from his arm, ran to her work-has ket, and in an instant had shorn off a handful of her beautiful hair. "Oh, stay, stay!" cried Raymond.

"What does it matter now? Do you think I care? Will you have my picture? I have only one; it was done when I was in the convent; it isn't Madame de Beaupré—it is little Thérèse, poor little Thérèse. Come and see it." She led him into a small room between the salon and dining-room, and there, arm in arm, they stood contemplating the likeness of a voung girl of fourteen, dressed in the costume of a novice of the Visitandines—white cap and tippet, a black stuff dress, with wide sleeves. The arms were crossed, and the hands hidden in the sleeves, according to the habit of nuns. Nothing quainter and prettier than the sweet bright face, and the demure attitude, so in contrast to the laughing eyes.

"Will you have it, and always keep it?"

He bowed his head.

"I will send it to you. I had better have a case made, for traveling, and that people may not see."

talked fast; she was dreading he wow talked

Total Residence to the wood, just to say to the wood, just to say to the wood, just to say Well. "Yes," scarcely knowing to what to say to the wood, just to say to the wood, just to say spends and the said. farewell. oil, she said, eagerly. "It is too late."

"It is dinner, just this once; only this once; which is the poor darling."

"It is too late."

"As you please, my poor darling." "As you please, my poor dame, were gone, He felt as if all Madame de Beaume He felt as if all Madame de Beaupré
He felt as if threw have supposed her
This respite would toy; it seemed so the last time."

He felt as if all Madame de Pourpré
This respite threw have supposed her
This respite threw have supposed her spirits; you would have joy; it seemed so spirits; you would be supposed her spirits; you would be supposed her supposed her spirits; you would be supposed her supposed her spirits; you would be supposed her This respite the large supposed her spirits; you would be great joy; it seemed so spirits; you would before the end of dinner influence of some before adness and the V; spirits; you would great joy; it sould so influence of some great the end of dinner influence of some before the end of dinner influence of some before sadness and the Vice Miss Power; but before sadness and the Eaymond's sadness at that Eaymond's different express; influence of some Sefore the end of diamer she will be fore the end of the Vico Miss Power; but before sadness and the Vico Miss Power; but ond's sadness and the Vico Miss Power; but ond's sadness and the Vico Miss Power; but ond's sadness and the Vico Miss Power is more than the were merely different expression.

Miss Power; but ond's sadness and wice of the stood that Raymond's different expression at the stood that Raymond's Power was excitement were merely different was a stood that Raymond's sadness and will be stood to be stoo me feeling. Was over, Miss Power was at After dinner Nothing and to believe same feeling. was over, Miss disagreeable at After dinner Nothing and to believe the what to do. Nothing any, and to believe the what to do. After dinner was more disconline at the what to do. Nothing any, and to believe the what to do. feel yourself one too many, give your unwished feel yourself one you to give your unwished to be too many, and to believe the what to do. what to do. Not too many, and where the feel yourself one too many, give your unwish priety commands you to give your what M. same feeling. mpany.

As it often happens, however, what Madan many.

As it often considered a trouble, proved a many. company.

As it often happens, however, and Mada trouble, proved a boundarie had considered a the "ladies", Beaupré had considered a the "ladies", company.

disguise. had informed all day with Mad servictoire had been attack of indign.

in disguise. Victoire had informed all day with Mada.

Victoire had been attack of indignation young officer sudden attack to go and Victoire had been attack of indignation young officer had been attack of indignation and sudden attack of indignation beaupré. In a sisters resolved to go and capt them with confusion them. young officer nad attack adugnation at sudden attack to go and call of Beaupré. In a sudden resolved to go and call of Beaupré. In a sisters resolved with confusion eldest of the sisters them work for the eldest of the sisters arily sorry for the in disguise. eldest of the sisters resolved with confusion eldest of the sorry for the culprit, and overwhelm tarily sorry for the eldest of the Sisuhelm them sorry for the culprit, and overwhelm tarily sorry for the Christian was se when the lugubrious-looking Madem emerens entered the salon, and sat here ith a solemn face on the sofa, fixing her end is score for scorn first on Madame de Beaupré, and ao n aymond.

Ten o'clock struck; eleven, half-past, and ere was Mademoiselle de Tremerens, though ery one knew that her hour for going to bed was 1f-past ten.

Once at least, in a life, every human being goes ough what Madame de Beaupré suffered during se two mortal hours. Every one has at some e or other to put on a mask, that the indifferent the malignant may not see a heart's agong > ry one has to talk lightly, to hide fears or sor s that are making the brow burn, the hands like

Madame de Beaupré's harsh, abrupt voice, so ke her usual bird-like tones, her little nervous .h, made Raymond wince and quiver as if they been so many stabs.

e old woman was pitiless. Her heart hardas she sat gazing at the widow of Anatole de Pre. She had had her unknown pain. In that red bosom early love still lived, and in this t it would have been hard to decide whether 10 usy of a rival, or jealousy that the dear Bould have a rival, was what most agitated ademoiselle de Tremerens was taking a sip beverage, which, sweet at first, leaves so a taste behind. stian was enduring her own slow torture.

is hard, terribly hard, to have to sit by and witne the love covet, bestowed on another. Christi: would have given her life to exchange sufferin with Madame de Beaupré. "God help me!" mu tered her poor heart; and yet to look at her, ye would have envied her calm.

The great clock of Nôtre Dame clashed out mi night; and so still was it within and without, th the reply made by every clock in the town w. audible.

Raymond, who had remained in submission the pleading Madame de Beaupré's eyes, felt th As soon as he rose necessity of taking his leave. so did Mademoiselle de Tremerens.

In desperation Madame de Beaupré said.

"Sans adieu, Monsieur Savoisy. I shall expect you to-morrow. At what hour can you come?

"At your hour, Madame."

"Then I will say two o'clock. Will that suit you? "

"Perfectly."

١

She gave him her hand; ice could not have been colder.

"May I also request the honor of an interviev with you to-morrow, Madame de Beaupré? >> aske Mademoiselle de Tremerens.

"Certainly, Mademoiselle; I will come to y either before or after I have seen M. Savoisy."

"Before, if you please, before."

"At eleven, then, I will go to you," said M ame de Beaupré.

"Your arm, if you please, sir," said Mademoiselle de Tremerens, and carried off Raymond as a prey won by her skill.

Christian awoke suddenly with a start, not knowing what had awakened her; and in the dim, uncertain light of breaking day, saw a white figure, so slight, it looked a fairy, standing by her bed.

"Have I frightened you?" asked Madame de Beaupré, in a soft voice. "I have not been able to sleep. I have come to you as his friend. Pray don't look so cold. I am sorely in need of kindness. I have never been unkind to you, have I? I think I could love you, if you would let me; but lately you have been like a glacier to me."

Christian knew this was true. She was a woman, and not an angel; impossible to caress the hand that was robbing her of her treasure. All she could bring herself to say, was.—

"In what way can such an insignificant person as I am be of use to you, Madame?", Mad-

"You know—at least you must guess "You are so nfriendly because you do not think he loves to poor silly woman as I am; he loves Emotion cut all and I "," Madmeter than the loves the poor silly woman as I am; he loves the loves that the loves the loves that the loves the loves the loves that the loves the lovest the loves the loves the lovest the loves the lovest the lov

Emotion cut short the avowal that was ache.
"What is it you want of me?" she Madame de Besupré sat down on the bed, and Madame de Lissed sat down on the beu, ... leaning forward, kissed the governess's unwilling lips, hard as stone, hardened by inward strife and "You will help me for his sake; you are the only erson in the world who person in the world who can. I will tell you every-

M

And then, her hands clasping Christian's, she id the simple story of told the simple story of their love, of the refusal of M. and Madame Savois love, of the their mar-M. and Madame Savoisy to consent to their mar-

"They are right," said Christian, and started at e harshness of her Christian, and started at the harshness of her own voice. It smote on he conscience, accusing her of the smote on her on the conscience, accusing her of the constitution of conscience, accusing her of want of generosity, an of what pained her more of what pained her more, of meanness. mean love that shrank from sacrifice. She ^{turn} her head on the pillow away from Madame de Be pré, paused a little, then pré, paused a little, then said,—

"Tell me what you wish me to do?" Madame de Beaupré told her project; and th Christian disapproved it openly, and said sucht only succeeded in fiction, she ended by agree do what she had been asked. Madame de Bea elastic sanguine nature threw off its desponde once. She left the governess with a heart i renewed hope.

It was far otherwise with Christian. oppressed with doubts and fears. She had: to aid and abet what those for whose good o she most cared might designate a treachery to and she had done so not from pity or kind

Had she refus she have been sure that her refusal was not but pride—woman's pride. she have been sure that her refusal was not sated by jealousy? She hated—yes, she hated yield be Beaupré, and that was the reason she had life of it life. Christian Power had had a hard life of it

She had had known none of the joys of youth. reached thirty years of age, and the future promised to be as barren as the past had been. Why should this be so? She had seen many others without fortune, with no greater personal attractions, With fewer mental gifts than were hers, become wives and mothers. What was there in her that kept her outside the circle of joys and sorrows in which other women moved? Was all that power of self-devo. ion_ of self-sacrifice, of which she knew herself canble never to be called into action for a husband and children? Was she never to feel fond little rms encircle her neck, never to hear herself adressed by the tenderest and sweetest names in all ing ages—wife and mother? Why was this so? ach an existence as hers could not be called living; was vegetating. She would traverse life without more trace of her passage than a boat leaves the broad ocean.

As thus she meditated, the bright unsympathiz-As the darted his first broad rays into the room. ere's her childhood had into the room. of her childhood had risen up bodily bescene Her grandmother was laughing at her her grief at the destruction of a favorite doll; her heard now, as vividly as she had done some menty years before, the weak cracked by ing Begone dull care, ü

al

Begone dull care,
I prithee begone from me;
Begone dull care,
You and I can never agree,

Christian began to cry as a little child de tears came none too soon. The bow much the same we break.

It is curious how much the suffering we go to the sufferi

It is curious how much remain in spite of all the suffering we go all the suffering we go all the suffering we go about their affair ments. People go about their affair ments. Their laugh, criticize, listen to music, discuss the world, criticize, listen to music, discuss their and all without any heart left. Their long ago, and they have to carry about weight.

Persons in this plight are generally weight.

Persons in this plight are generally the secret of what has have the secret of what weight.

Persons in this plight are of revealing the secret of what has happened them. They are, as a rule, agreeable, them. They are, as a rule, agreeable to make them to make they have none. But their feelings; they have none. But they have none say to another in trouble too, will pass," you may make sure that too, will pass, "you may make sure that too, will pass," you one with a dead heart.

No one would have discerned any external too. They was the present the passes of t discovered one of the discerned Madame de No one would have discerned Madame de in Miss Power when she joined Madame de No in Miss Power when she joined M

Google

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ. mber of the Savoisy family. ad become one of those who will soul, "This soul, "This, too, will pass," le Beaupré, on the contrary, had She was full of hopes and fears. stian a note, saying,oh! pray do; you cannot tell what s to me to have some one to confide in; whom I dare speak openly." took the offered paper; it was a note to and ran thus,you promise to come and see me to-day. rou receive this I shall be already far on It is in our interest I go, and if ee you first I should tell you everything, night dissuade me, and take from me the ipholds me. not write to you during my absence, and event of some necessity must you write then Mademoiselle Power will forward Mademoiselle has my entire confidence. er as my best friend. ve; think of me as I think of you. Thérèse." istian returned the note, Madame de id.nsider you my friend, and if you will let y home shall be always your home." had not yet reached the stage of hich is one of the marks of her peculiar

, she answered,-

"My services do not mare given unwillingly."

"Why do you shut your try and love me a little, just for me to be so very, very r

"You must make allowar nature from your own, Mada reserved and unable quickly

Madame de Beaupré said, s
"I will trust, then, to time.'
Mademoiselle de Tremerens Madame de Beaupré's visit.
sent to inquire if the Vicomtesse appointment, she took back the gence that the Vicomtesse had g one knew where; she had not ev with her.

"It was an indecent, mysterio and, if not speedily explained, Ma pré would have no one but hersel, any injurious reports that might get

This was what Mademoiselle de T to Madame Dubois-Oudin; and Mac Oudin answered,—

"Mon Dieu! what fools women are

CHAPTER XVI.

IN A STRANGE LAND.

PASTEUR SAVOISY, his second son Didier, and his youngest child Lina, a girl between thirteen and fourteen, were waiting at the railway station of Castelnaudary the arrival of a stranger guest.

Eight days previous to this evening, the family Savoisy had been thrown into perturbation by a letter from Miss Power. Christian had written to beg them to receive for a few weeks an acquaintance of hers, a Mademoiselle de Morville, who, from peculiar circumstances, had become desirous of understanding what were the differences of dogma between the Roman Church and the Protestant.

This request did not seem strange or overweening to these unworldly people. The only obstacles that crossed their minds was that expressed by Madame Savoisy, who exclaimed,—

"What will the priests say to our having a Roman Catholic in our house?"

The Pasteur answered,-

"I will run the risk of all they can say or do. I count all cost as nothing, if I can win one soul from error."

No better man, perhaps, ever lived than M. Savoisy, Pasteur of Castelnaudary. His family hild to be faultless; not even his hild a ble to his view of himself: "The a misera escape some to:

not even his view of himself: "The But, superior as he misers escape some taint of our common the temptations which from the beginning beset pions men. He would have had all hold the doctrine he held—belong to the ion to which he belonged. For those of ish faith he had a special horror; he h to be idolatrous in the literal sense of t Neither he nor any of his family ever Roman Catholic church. He returned th ous salutation with which the priests of greeted him; but he uttered under his "Vade retro Satanas." Mild as a dove on nary occasions of provocation, let but a "S "Frère" interfere in the slightest with a tant, and you would have heard him fierce, To present the Pasteur with the chance as any Boanerges.

To present the last the gripe of the ing a fellow-creature from the gripe of the Woman, was to offer him an irresisti Woman, was to oner into. Vagabi Many a trap had he fallen into. Vagabi Many a trap had he fairent had oftention tending to seek for the truth, had oftention tending tendi tending to seek for the truth, Had offentially at his expense.

No experience made him cautious of such advances though some had asked him a price for the truth, Had offentially advances of such advances though some had asked him a price for the truth, Had offentially advances of such advances of such advances of though some had asked him a price for the truth, Had offentially at his expense.

ough some had be ough some had be ough some had be recommended.

Naturally, Miss Power's recommendation.

Naturally, guarantee for the honesty of the honest Naturally, Miss for the honesty on solle de Morville's intentions; it did honor, therefore, to the Pasteur's Christian forbesrance that he listened patiently to his wife's further objections.

Madame Savoisy declared that there was something mysterious in such a demand, coming as it did just at this particular moment. On the whole, it would be better to send the lady to M. Verneuil or to M. Jacquart, both men of undoubted piety and knowledge, and more versed in controversy than M. Savoisy.

This was a hard blow; but the Pasteur received it with humility. He was, besides, not without experiences that, after having violently opposed any measure, Madame Savoisy's conscientiousness was apt to take the alarm, and caused her to modify, if not reverse, previous decisions.

During the day, Madame Savoisy propounded

the question, this time of her own accord,—

"Why Christian Power had not been more explicit. She had never named this Mademoiselle de Morville in any of her letters."

"My dear wife, Peter hearkened to the message of Cornelius without any questionings."

"Ay," retorted the lady, "but the messenger said that the centurion had been warned of an holy angel."

"All good inspirations may be considered warnings of an holy angel," said M. Savoisy.

"And then Christian says not a word of this person's habits or station. She may be a whimsical fine lady. You see her address is Faubourg St. Germain. How an 'grande dame, comfortable?"

۴

"Treather as you do Salome or P If she be occupied with se little more or less of luxury will And I have had occasion to remain And high station are often of a great si say she will not have such a fine moiselle Beauvallon.

"Oh, Papa!" cried Lina, "an to talk of people's dress."

"You are a good little girl advice," said the Pasteur, kissing

A letter in the affirmative was selle de Morville to her address i

It then became necessary to in tion of the impending event.

The intercourse between the flock was marked by much prin He was in truth their shepherd, eq tender for all; acknowledging no d the richer and the poorer, except in from the former—more of long-sul sacrifice and of humility. ed no difference in the courtesy of ed no amerem.

M. Beauvallon, the rich iron-magete Buzelac, the stone-with M. Reshoe-maker as well as with M. Reshe work-woman, sat at his Buzelac, the stone-breaker. shoe-maker as well as dine, the work-woman, sat at his east ways treated as Mademoisell. dine, the work-woman, all ways treated as Mademoiselle short, M. Savoisy did come something near to the example set in the Gospel.

Women are more aristocratic by nature men, and Madame Savoisy had never been able reconcile herself to being shaken hands with the unwashed of the Reformed Church of France. "It is even going against the custom of the courter." she had along a "It is a sign of fellowship natural to themselves a minority try," she had pleaded.

feel themselves a minority set apart and down upon," was the reply.

"I am always willing enough to find M the Roman Catholics," returned Madame Savoisy: "but I cannot see that they persecute us at all."

"Then, my dear, accept the annoyance as a penance for want of humility. God is no respecter of persons."

Here the terrible child Lina interfered to say, "I think I have read somewhere in the Bible, Keep your hands clean,' and a great many of our people do not, Papa."

"I will preach on the necessity of outward as well as inward cleanliness, my dear."

Another trial for Madame Savoisy was in the great interest the female members of the congregation took in her and her children. They could go nowhere, put on nothing, that the excellent dames did not remark upon. The hair-dresser's wife considered it right one day to report to Madame Savoisy the observations made on her wearing a Savoisy straw instead of a velvet bonnet during the winter.

"It was not acting up t wife, not to have a black mas, as every other lady ha

١

)

Madame Savoisy knew w when these tiresome, well-in be informed that they were lic in their house. The infor the pulpit at the Wedne meeting.

It had always been M. Say congregation clearly understa knew how limited, and yet ho the imaginations of the uninst sow doubts of the purity of mini was one of Satan's commonest tr

Naturally, these explanations attended by other drawbacks th attended by other discussions, narrow-minded disputa discussions, narrow seldom an open censure of the court all this was bet. But all this was better t the Pastor. suspicion and misunderstandings

The news of Mademoiselle de Mornillowed in Pastor.

The news of Mademoiselle de Mornillowed in Pastor. The news of Mace.

The news of Mace.

Visit was received with a general Mornillands with a sense of Mace.

The news of Mace.

The news of Mace.

Visit was received with a general Mornillands with a sense of Mace. The news will was received with sold restile the shake hands with him save visit was rece.

Halfa-dozen men rous.

Halfa-dozen men rous.

vestry to shake hands with him save enother hoped no harm would be a solution to know when it can be to know when it can Halfa-dozen vestry to shake hands

joy; another hoped no harm

were anxious to know whould

the schoolmaster inquire. vestry to share vestry to share vestry to share joy; another hoped no name with all were anxious to know when would agrive, and the schoolmaster inquired to a hope of little late the the school was a share arrive, and should be cleaned:

"It would be of little the the national custom of the the the cleaned the the cleaned the clea spitting,

MADAME DE BEAUPEÉ.

swer, which produced a chorthing in the savoisy could scarcely extracted the women. She had to promise to the hair-dresser's wife, and had the savoisy next morning.

of the toy shop, next more lame Gaen was peculiarly alarmed lest any should accrue to Didier. "I am not for young men and women in the same house though they were saints; weren't the Catholic confessors always far too fond of nitents? She had always heard they were, she thanked God she knew nothing about

Madame Savoisy as she listened to this id afterwards to her husband, "I fear we agreeing to receive

Christmas gift of his flock, was at that pacing up and down the room in the composition. He was mentally gathering a pamphlet, under the title of "Why I Roman Catholic," and which won him

ooh!" he exclaimed, to a second ex-Madame Savoisy's alarms, "We know cessary for us to know. It is my duty I am a bout my duty, I have no occasion to make and to world! cording to worldly prudence. Some one has long as I am busy with my task, there will be wife, as for me or mine. for me or mine. So let me write, dear you make your preparate me write, dear or you me write, dear or you make your preparate me write, dear or you me write, dear or you make your preparate me write, dear or you me write we write with the your preparate me write we write with the your preparate me write we will be a write with the your preparate me write we write with the your preparate me write we will be a write with the your preparate me write we write with the your preparate me write we will be a write with the your preparate me write we will be a write with the your preparate me write with the your preparate me write will be a write with the your preparate me write will be a write with the your preparate me write will be a write with the your preparate me write will be a write with the your preparate will be a write with the your preparate will be a write with the your you make your preparations for our guest. your preparations for our guest. Tam sorry I must give her Raymond he paper is all milder.

"If it is disagreeable to you to "No, I can?" The paper is all mildewed in Salome 180 room, put her into Lina's."

a No, I can't do that; it is to you to you re you thing is vexation. Everything is vexatious to me about the never had such an increase where the such an increase where the such as th never had such an unwillingness to

"That arises from this unfortunated mond's."

j(0)

ť,

"It is, you must allow it, a curio able coincidence."

"I cannot see the coincidence, my always so blind," "Men are Savoisy, as she left the room.

And now the reader knows prepassed in the interval between the Passed in the Interval
Christian Power's letter and the Christian Power's letter

Christian Power's letter

M. Savoisy with his son and day

Paris train, by which chould M. Savoisy with his son which evening Paris train, by which will had notified she should having evening Paris train, by evening Paris train, by Morville had notified she should ening orville had notified successful by the station-master, was per the station-master was per the Pastor w Morville IIII

Monsieur Savoisy IIIII

With the station-master, was per polatform. As the Pastor was per polatform. Monsieur with the station-master, with the station-master, the platform. As the Pastor was dasked this favor to spare his self-invited guest feeling of being a stranger among strangers. The Pastor was kept during half an hour in a te of great activity. The officials, to whom he well known, were amused by seeing him, at arrival of every train, run after every lady who any appearance of youth. M. Savoisy had settled in his own mind that Mademoiselle de ille was young. He even conjectured she would that he had a veritable turn for romance.

last he made sure he had found the stray he pounced on a young lady looking both l and bewildered.

id, "I am Pasteur Savoisy. Are you Made de Morville?"

Ves!" and she seized rather than accepted arm.

You much luggage?"

>ne box."

will see after it; we need not wait."

seed through the salle de bagages.

my second son, Didier," said the Pas-

3elle de Morville looked at him with shy is my youngest daughter, Caroline, Lina. Do you feel able for a walk?

nile from here to our house."
Slad to walk," replied the stranger, y the Paster's arm.

thaw it, and the chairs and sofas are as unyielding as solitude can make them. Had the poor trembling traveler been ushered into "mamma's room" with its confusion of papa's writing-table, the great work-basket, fishing-rods and old guns, dolls and cradles—these last now serviceable for holding raiment to be given to those who needed to be clothed—the poor traveler would not have had the inward shuddering that shook her from head to foot when Madame Savoisy just touched her hand.

M. Savoisy's appearance always gave the idea, to poetic people at least, of a calm evening after a troubled day; Madame Savoisy's that of resignation, or of some constant regret suppressed.

Didier came in presently; he resembled Raymond much as a poplar resembles an oak. There was a constant gentle swaying of his head to and fro, a sort of deprecating movement, which his elder brother could not be said to possess.

Mademoiselle de Morville's eyes, so the mother at once observed, were often straying towards Didier.

After the first hard searching introductory chords of conversation had been struck, Madame Savoisy proposed to her guest that she should take off her bonnet and traveling mantle preparatory to sharing in their evening meal. Madame Savoisy then showed the way up the broad stone stairs with quaintly carved balustrades to Raymond's room, the guest-chamber for the time being, a room as spacious and lofty as the salon, directly above which it was.

The bed, Paris, had backed chai wall left Be table, under phitheater of "This is Ve ville, standing smiling eyes. "The work Savoisy, coldly, ing of the dutie happy to assist "Thank you, "Then I will 1 you when supper Every one had Morville's peculi and Didier were quite a beauty. She is pretty: voisy. "Glorious eyes "I wish you w geration," said hi "The glorious when they appear sides that, there delicate about th heart softened tov Nothing more a rrangements. No table-cloth, which would seem trange to English people; but there were table-apkins. Tell the French that these last were rarites in England before the last quarter of a century, and they wonder how we managed, and evidently think us pigs. And we, on our side, lift up hands and eyes at the sight of soup served on oil-cloth!

After supper they returned to the salon, and Lina having brought a small table and placed it before her father, fetched a folio Bible, and put it on the table; then, as if it were a necessary part of her office, she threw her arms round her father's neck, and hugged him till he was half suffocated.

Upon a sign from her mother, Lina presented a New Testament to Mademoiselle de Morville.

M. Savoisy, opening his Bible, said,-

"We shall begin our worship by continuing our reading from where we left off this morning—the third chapter of the first of Corinthians."

"Find the place for our young friend," added the Pasteur, perceiving that his guest was seeking helpessly to find the chapter indicated. It was indeed he first time Mademoiselle de Morville had ever ad a New Testament in her hand.

After the reading they all kneeled down, and the asteur prayed aloud, adding to his usual intercesons for the family, a peculiar and touching petion for the stranger within his gates.

Lina, who, to be honest, was more occupied by stranger than by the prayers, thought Madeoiselle Morville must be ill, for she could see the

DAME DE BEAUPRÉ.

adame Savoisy's voice broughta Madame de Beaupré's face.

He knew nothing. Oh, have mercy! It's all my fault." ler rushed Lina.

Ima! you shall forgive her! you and bursting into a paroxysm of irl flung her arms round Madame dreadful—all wrong together," sorely troubled and perplexed. go directly to your own room. way. Martha," he said to his oice, "help me to raise Madame position is unbefitting one mor-

wife supported the Vicomtesse ion."

oisy was placing it under her d and laid her cheek on Madame g,— at it was to have a mother." her eyes, and there was an unne Pasteur and his wife were er's face.

young she is," thought M. Salall, delicate figure!" liar air which belongs to the same immunities as the lilies vn Lina looked more capable just woman, recollected that her husband had left his mother for her sake; and she excused her unfriendly feeling by adding,—

"If she were only worthy of him I could have given him up; but to fix his heart on a Catholic, and a woman of the world—the trial is too hard."

Suddenly Thérèse opened her eyes, and fixing them intently on the husband and wife, said, "What will you do?"

"Let us leave all agitating discussions till tomorrow," began M. Savoisy. "We are all too much excited to have the full use of our reason. My dear young lady—for indeed you look very young —go to rest in the certainty that you are among friends; believe that we will do our best for you.
I gave you a welcome as a stranger, now I welcome you as one in whom I take a fatherly interest."

His calm voice and look rebuked the waves of passion heaving the bosoms of the two women before him. The impulsive Therèse seized his hand, exclaiming, "Oh! you are good, really good. I will obey you in all things. I will do nothing you tell me not to do."

The Pastor smiled kindly on her.

"Then I bid you make no rash promises, but go to bed. Do not forget your prayers, asking sincerely for help and guidance from your Father in Heaven. Good night, poor pilgrim."

Madame Savoisy accompanied Madame de Beau-pré to her bed-chamber.

This bell," she said, "communicates with my $\mathbf{c}_{\mathbf{a}_{\mathbf{g}_{e}}}$ me to assist The assista put out her he "Will you kis Madame Sav lightly on Made Thérèse, durin battled with slu those delicious re pleasant memorie closed her eyes, d bring forgetfulner had vanished. a strange country of the language. with that panie w into poltroons; sh Madame Savoisy i inaccessibility muc rock would have c Raymond's mother which makes an Ar and salt of some po She passed the ni expectation. Her 1 argue her case: to would say, and to co pass hours and hours gle with one besetting ing it, always to reac

ì

CHAPTER XVII.

PARENTAL COMMUNINGS.

"OF all extremes," says a modern critic, "the nost dangerous, perhaps, is that of excellence; at east it is the most difficult to correct. The culprit as a right to his own approbation, and none known what way to reproach him. For instance, Cato! I is misfortune was to know no measure in his virues. His desire to be firmly consistent in his opinmade him deaf alike to the advice of friends and the counsels of experience. The practice of ife, to pratique de la vie, that imperious mistress, to use Bossuet's words, had no hold upon him. His energy degenerated into obstinacy, and his brobity into over scrupulousness."

Madame Savoisy's was one of these honest absonatures. It was always "Nay" and "Yea" with her on all occasions. She ignored palliating or extenuating circumstances. She might be said to be incapable of balancing the two sides of a question. From the first moment of suspecting her son's admiration for Madame de Beaupré, her decision had been taken. She would never consent to his marriage with a Roman Catholic, let the consequences be what they might.

If she sat late into the night by the Pastor's side, it was not to argue or to lister.

It was to share that marble rigidi. It was to share that marble rigidity w nance had lost there se's heart. Tear such a chill to such a chill to such a chill to rere silently wiped awa her eyes, and wife! "exclaimed w er eyes, and were sexclaimed M. S.

"My poor were sitting and wife were sitting and wife were sitting and were sitting and were sitting and were sitting and sexception are sexception and They A done in wide by than once. they had done in many anoi in hand, as they broken senten in hand, as they had broken sentences dr From time to time, neir lips.

"Whatever nappens, is by the will c

"Whatever happens, by the will c "Whatever happens been sent for shall acknowledge been sent for shall acknowledge been sent for some the present trial murmured the Pastor. of habit, which These were pronounced, than halm. Suffering distributions of habit, which suffering distributions distributions of habit, which suffering distributions distributions of pronounced, than balm Suffering, every with them with them any not to be conjured elect to suffer, is Trailways has a strongest faith. for mortals to achieve will be difficult will be difficult for the heart does not reb reening when the near will be done."

Thy will be done."

M. Savoisy

Of life the last search more and search more.

M. Savoisy nad not escaped, more than of life; he had not or life; he had not escaped, more than examples of virtue of all times, from examples of virtue of the had known tongue of calumny; he had known tongue of calumny child in danger of the seeing a beloved child hefore the had never endured before the b between his faith and his affections. testify to the truth of what he had preached, that hurch, that the Church of Rome was an idolarous church, her priests false teachers, by erushing out all the joy of his first-born's young heart.

"Poor young things!" said the Pastor, and put his handkerchief to his eyes. "She is a pretty, loving creature. It is a pity they chanced to meet. Very inscrutable are the ways of Providence, and all arising, too, from our interference about Christian Power."

"Yes, she is pretty, and she is young," said Madame Savoisy, "but not so young as not to know what she is about. She is not an inexperienced girl. She has been a wife. She is a mother. We have had descriptions enough of her mode of life. and of the persons surrounding her, to prove that she is no novice as to men's admiration. From the first, she must have been aware of the disparity between her and Raymond. It was the instinct of the coquette which drew her to him—she felt that resisted her. Yes, my boy did try to escape her toils."

The Pastor stroked his wife's hand as he always when she was angry or excited, murmuring to him aloud, "By-the-by, what did or him aloud, "By-the-by, what did Christian Power by aiding this lady to come Then by aiding this lady to come to us under a false name?"

Who can tell what were the arguments used? She has been over persuaded."

"Christian was not easy to persuade," returned "Christian doubtingly. "It is a raveled skein, PARENTAL COMPANYOR and one we shall not un wind mitho and one we shall many a thread. My dear, I should li many a thread. By over Raymond's letters during these over Raymond's see that we have these over Raymond's let us see that we have these months; let us see that we have not a months; let us overlooked signs of a growing evil,"

Madame Savoisy took a packet of letters Madame Savois, folded and arranged according to date fro

"Read them to me, my dear," said the P "Read them to me in which he mentions me

In this letter Raymond gave a Indicrous acc of what he called his mock heroic act, adding he wished it had been some poor body's doi had saved, instead of the pampered pet of a woman of the world.

For a couple of months afterwards there further mention of Madame de Beaupré in young soldier's correspondence, though he much of Christian, and expressed his satisfac much of Christian, and a pleasant situation that she had at last found a pleasant situation

"That says something in favor of Mada"

"That says something in favor of Mada" "That says something "I remember Beaupré," observed the Pastor. "I remember Beaupré," observed that it was impossible Beaupré," observed the 1 assume that it was impossible Christian herself writing that it was impossible it was constituted."

love this lady."

She added also, that it was equally important of her," rejoined Madan "She added also, that is "" rejoined Mada not to disapprove of her," rejoined Mada Postor, "read "Well, well!" said the Pastor, "read on "Well, well!" said the Pastor, "read on "rea

"Well, well!" said the I, read on ...
"Well, well! "said the I, read on ...
"In the letter announcing Raymond's pro"In the letter announcing was mentioned at "Well, well I
"In the letter announcing mayarong at Madame de Beaupré was mentioned at There was a page at least full of admiration beauty. beauty, grace, and, above all, of her kinds

"And we read all this and never form possibility of danger," ejaculated the "Though, how could it have come into ov that poor Raymond and this wealthy Vicor could meet on equal terms?"

"A princess might be proud to be loved had be a like Barring and the beautiful by the barring and the beautiful by the barring and the barring man like Raymond," flamed up Madame Sall "It is not every day his equal is to be met and certainly not among the young officials country town."

"The issue proves you are right, my dear; but it is a judgment after the fact has occurred. pity is, that neither you nor I perceived what we now allow to have been a probability. Martha, let us not shirk our share of blame."

Gradually Madame de Beaupré's name ceased to appear in the letters. But occasional slips from the heart to the pen might have warned the parents that the writer was under the influence of some new and strong emotion.

Raymond had never been given to anything like norbid feeling or to self-lamentation; he had taken is trials cheerfully; it ought therefore to have exited attention when he penned such phrases as, There are moments when I forget reality; when things of this world pass before my waking as if they were the phantoms of a dream." gain, "Sometimes I envy those among my com-

Digitized by GOC

PARENTAL COMMUNINGS.

pdes impressions. Perhaps such as media impressions. Perhaps such natures the best moments of happiness amid long the best moments of happiness amid long years for short," Further on, he said. "Sometiments for short, "Further on, he said, "Sometimes suffering." Further on, he said, "Sometimes suffering self if we are not born into the world self in peculiar destiny from which we have ject to a peculiar destiny from which we have power of escape. If so, of what use is it struggle?"

Then came the answer to that letter of Mada Then came the answer ond to cultivate the ada Savoisy's begging Raymond to cultivate the Savoisy's begging Ray him against intimacies be Poplus," and warning him against intimacies be poplus, the whole season Poplus," and warning the whole seasoned those out of his sphere; the whole seasoned covert blame of Madame de Beaupré.

úż

Œ.

ź

P.

The reply ran thus,-The reply ran thus,
The reply ran thus,
"I do not know, nor wish to know, from
"I do not know, nor wish to know, from
"I do not know, nor wish to know, from "I do not know, hor of the lady you why you get your impressions thide from you—why short so severely. I will not hide from you—why short acquaintance, all short so severely. I will not acquaintance, all short 12—that on a further acquaintance, all short 12—that on a further acquaintance all short 12—that one indices against that person have I?—that on a further against that person have to founded prejudices against that person have to founded prejudices against that person have to the founded prejudices against that person have the founded prejudices against the founde founded prejudices agder and generous heart ever ished. The most tender and generous heart ever ished. ished. The most tenderical away by a gidd in the world is sometimes carried away by a gidd in the world is sometimes carried away by a gidd in the world is sometimes carried away by a gidd in the world is sometimes. world is sometimes carried by little head; but the nature, perhaps excessive in the head; is good, undeniably good. It must in a head; but the hadeniably good. It must be things, is good, undeniably good and the things, is good, untertained a faulty education and the sto have resisted a faulty education and the sto have all she infl to have resisted a lindings. Above all, she inflence of her surroundings. Above all, she is pe ence of her surrounding spontaneous; she all, she is pe feetly natural and spontaneous; she does not know fectly natural and spot long of you does not knowhat it is to do evil. I beg of you does not knowhat it is to do evil. I beg of you does not knowhat it is to do evil. I beg of you does not knowhat it is to do evil. I beg of you does not know what it is to do evil. I beg of you does not know and what it is to do evil. what it is to do evil.

what it is to do evil.

to spare your animadversions of the whom you highly respects, and who is one whom you to spare your annual and who is one whom you son highly respects, and who is a stranger to you."

"My poor boy!" sighed the Pasteur.

"To think of Raymond being beguiled by s mere pretty butterfly," observed Madame Savoisy.

"Dear wife, I begin to perceive something very different from a butterfly in Madame de Beaupré. By the step she has taken in coming here, she has proved that neither rank nor fortune, nor the approbation of friends nor of the world, have weighed with her against Raymond—poor and undistinguished by birth or fame. She has humbled herself to us, when she might be pardoned for believing that she conferred honor on us. True love requires strength of heart; it is as rare as the fourleaved trefoil Lina hunts after so sedulously and so vainly. I wish almost that she had been a butterfly; our task would have been easier."

" Men judge women differently from what their own sex do. Madame de Beaupré's coming here seems to me unfeminine-more like the effect of caprice than of steady feeling. Raymond himself allows her to be giddy. I assure you that after this step of hers, even had she been a Protestant, it would have been difficult for me to reconcile myself to receiving her as Raymond's wife."

These were Madame Savoisy's last words that night.

It is now necessary to see what was saying and doing at Magny le Sec.

CHAPTER

MAGNY LE SEC O

A WEEK had elapsed sind departure, and that she Wibe forgotten, when one Demoiselles de Tremerens confidant rushed into their sual want of deference.

stretched hands.

遊

916

10

"It's the end of the wi—Mesdemoiselles, fine new tesse has got—"

Victoire stopped and mandkerchief.

"Madame de Beaupré h three sisters together, in or

"Oh, ladies! I cannot, I whole town is full of it. Y ner of the streets. laughing" laughing."

"Mon Dieu! mon Maden
ing about?" cried

"Victoire, will you be so of what you are dying to tell," sa sisters, authoritatively.

"No, Mademoiselle, no one shall have it to say that I spread reports. Cart-horses shan't draw from me another word; but I advise Mesdemoiselles not to go out. They had better send for Madame Chuquet." "You are a fool," observed Mademoiselle de Tremerens in a downright passion from baulked curiosity. "I should like to see the man or woman in Magny le Sec who would venture to offend a de Tremerens. Go, and tell the Englishwoman to and the second s come and speak to me." Victoire flounced out of the room, mattering "It doesn't matter to me; it does not hart me"

"I thought how it would end," said one.

"How?" asked another.

"Why couldn't she go and play her pranks in Paris, where no one would have known or cared what she did. But here, under our very eyes, it is un pardonable," said the elder.

Miss Power made her appearance. Hitherto she had only seen "the ladies" after they had been under the hands of their "coiffense," and when they had attired themselves for receiving visitors. For an instant the governess doubted whether these three old women in short bed-gowns, their grey hair all unkempt, could be the grand Mesdemoiselles de Tremerens. The proverb only says that beauty unadorned is best. For elderly ladies, dress is of great avail.

"You have heard, no doubt, the scandal about Madame de Beaupré."

"Where is a "What mad These three like so many p Miss Power first question. ame de Beaup "Very sing ens, sternly. "Virginie, Mademoiselle Mademoise her younges on,-"Victoire lic as if the t "What is "But you is?" said th debate. "And yo reason for th elle de Trem "If I were bed," said I her secret th "Virginie, her second si " Madame She desired t her notary in

T

İ

å

write to Madame la Comtesse and make your inquiries of herself," said Miss Power.

"And you mean to tell us nothing more?"

"If Madame de Beaupré had placed any confidence in me, I should certainly not betray it." "What? not if you were aware that her reputation was attacked?"

"When there is no foundation for scandal, it dies away of itself. Would you be so good as to inform me what is said about Madame de Beaupré's journey?"

"I always did hate the English," soliloquized Mademoiselle Virginie; "they are always as tall and as stiff as so many towers."

"If I had known, I should not have had to trouble you," said Mademoiselle de Tremerens. "It's something too bad for Victoire to tell us."

10 Indecent, of course," muttered Mademoiselle

Virginie.

And you suppose I have more courage to shock vour ears than Victoire. Oh, Mademoiselle, it is those who give credence to an evil report, who invest it with life," retorted Christian.

"You forget, Mademoiselle Povère, that the same roof covers us and Madame de Beaupré. It is impossible for us single women to remain quiet under the supposition that light conduct has been going on within the very walls of the family house which shelters us. It's our duty to know particulars."

"This is like sudden madness (un accès de folie)," said Christian, "I will not stay to hear the person l(r

W.

ON THE A maligned whose bread I est," she turned and left the room.

"These Englishwomen i nomanners. Mademoiselle de Tremerens.

There was no necessity for "the ladi There was no information; it came to the Madame Chuquet first appeared.

"You have heard, of course? dreadful, is "You have mean the servants and workwomen at aved to a workwomen Weeks ago. She stayed to the last momen weeks ago. Due M. de Beaupré get out

"The Englishwoman denies it."

"The English."

"Of course, she is a Protestant as well For my part, I was always young man. young man. was always her having that English woman. There is no standing those English; no expansiveness, Madame Dubois-Oudin followed.

"She had suspected something after that home from the Deluccy...

home from the Deluccy...

the Vicomtesse's eyes when M. Savoisy references.

the Vicomtesse's eyes when M. Savoisy references. When a man is rude woman, we all know what that means," oman, we all know what the state of the stat Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus

Visitors to Tremereus as if they really apecied what one advanced as a contain ther and higher to speak. What one acting as a consider and higher and to speak. When the mouth of the mouth a certain tide of scandal rose higher and higher words people said on meeting, were, when the mouth of the mouth of the mouth a certain tide of scandal rose higher and higher words people said on meeting, were, when the mouth of the mouth o was either a significant shrug, or a more significant There were even some who would give you 1augh. to understand that "they could an' they would" tell you things of the past that would show you the present was nothing extraordinary.

At the Casino, a grey-headed man, who had often sat at Madame de Beaupré's table, told the story in words that seemed borrowed from the galleys. One or two prudent men slipped away to avoid being led into giving an opinion.

An austere lady pronounced her verdict, that "Since women had allowed their husbands to give men's dinners, and had themselves taken to sitting in the smoking-room, there was nothing astonishing in Madame de Beaupré's conduct."

One of the bande des folles ventured a remark, that, "Surely, Madame de Beaupré, with her for tune, and able to do exactly as she pleased, would ne ver have waited until concealment became impossible. She might have gone to Switzerland or Italy, and who the wiser?"

But this reasoning was scouted, as was the proof there was a physical impossibility against the that sation being true, the acquaintance between the accused being too recent.

we know that there was just one philosopher in Magny le Sec: the man who lived in and with his The scandal penetrated even into his libooks. brary. He laughed long and heartily,

"Let Madame de Beaupré come back," he said, "Let me aid, mager all I possess that there will be a procession to her house, and the most venomous again appear in her salon."

Raymond Savoisy was report against himself and it did reach him, he wen Power, and insisted on kede Beaupré was. Christian lat sight of his face. His eying coals; the brouge of his coalivid hue.

"If I could only discover lie!" he exclaimed; "but no sprung forth as the plague doe corruption and dirt. Everybo accusation; they heard it here, never was there more pruden 'Pooh, pooh, my dear sir! I not dal—never believe it—who do time it is taking root. These are as slippery as eels." He stop breath, then said, "Now, then, we

When he heard that Madame gone to his father and mother ha journey alone, she so accustomed by all the observances of rank, he hide the tears that welled up to his that welled up to his the conditions.

"My poor darling, and they will to deny her, to say no; and they will gious consistency. She renounces friends, because she loves me with her ful heart, and they will tell me that because the has been touched. has been taught from infancy to believe somethis more than we do, because she crosses herself we do not, that it would be a sin that she should be my wife. Pll tell you what, Christian, it is enough to make a man forswear religion of any kind.

Christian resolutely put aside her own pain, &s noble-hearted women do, to soothe Raymond's. What wonder, though, if there pierced through some of her words that which made her lot bitter. est. She said, in conclusion, "Your trial is hard, but it is not one which lays low a life; you love and are beloved in return."

"Yes, God bless her," he said, fervently; and a brightness spread itself over his face, and his eyes assumed the expression of one who contemplates a blissful vision.

Christian recalled him to reality by saying, "I am going to write to Madame de Beaupré."

He started. "What's the use of writing? Letters never fully explain a situation. I shall ask for a week's leave. If I am refused, you must go, Christian. Though they would ruin the happiness of their son, I believe my father and mother will have some regard for his honor. Tell them that it is said I now refuse to marry Madame de Beaupré. Oh, my God! and I can do nothing to punish the liars. If my parents hold out, I know what I have to do, and I promise you I shall not swerve from y determination."

As he was a blance of a rec "Shall I see yo "Without do She smiled a as he would do even a thank yo her; it's nothing more polite: giobtain her ends. selfish brutality.

So mused poor time through won to herself to have no longer sound. Duty, it was fright duty during a lon pense. It would at that moment great consoler; the joy, still has a lim

In the meantime the Commandant's whom Madame de cause he would not voisy.

Major D——, as a made known his requat the motive for the not a popular man; he was reserved, and had an irritable temper; the explanation for which was, that he was poor, and had a wife and two daughters. When, within a twelvemonth from this date, Major D-was appointed to a lucrative post, he be came renowned for kindliness, and was universally tiked. The Major little thought at the moment that the good-nature he was showing to his young subaltern was to be the mainspring of the prosper ity he had been seeking in vain up to his fiftieth vear.

The moment he saw Raymond he held out his hand, saying, "You have come no doubt to speak of the infamous reports going the round of the town; I don't believe one syllable of them, except perhaps that of there being some mutual liking between you and the lady. No offense," he added, seeing Raymond's face flush. "I may say I have been a sort of confident from the first. The dear woman came to me to insist on your being made an officer, and a towering passion she was in when I tried to explain that there were difficulties in the I am persuaded she had something to do with your promotion."

"Do you mean that Madame de Beaupré interested herself for my promotion?" asked the astonished Raymond. "At that time we were not acquainted."

w Without any doubt she interested herself. is a true woman; what she wishes for, she will have what the devil between you. in your applica to marry. I w

These were Raymond had all commenta lukewarm, and thy. His he frankness, and obstacles arisi his parents, an a mixed marr

"You asto supposed Pr selves."

"And the adds to the were he to co as both Proto yielded from

"My good 'La Fontain Old Man, hi read histor! accepted."

Raymond the best in stances often wisest couns Major to gi see what his personal influence could achieve with his parents. He ended by saying, "I will confide to you what is a secret; I only knew it myself this morning—Madame de Beaupré is at this moment with my family."

"Then the matter is as good as settled," said the Major, laughing. "She has a will of iron. Take your leave, and come back and triumph over all these scandal-mongers."

CHAPTER XIX.

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ'S RESOLUTIONS.

Ir is one thing to decide what our decision we will d Ir is one thing to decision our decision will deput and Mada into decision will decision our dec for instance, Monsieur to refuse the Savois quite another Monsieur to refuse to exe Savois irrevocably marriage make this det of cons for instance, Mornined with a Catheir vois irrevocably marriage marriage the following Raymond's Rettled to make this determine and the following and settled caupite the house the house and settled caupite the house the house and the house the ho for instance determination of the following and the Beauprat the break and the Beauprat the break and the break an Raymond's married to make the following and Pastor had settled to make the following and Pastor had be Beaupre at the breaking ation to Madame ioined with was collowed by the was collowed by the set day. Raymond's Pastor had settled to Beaupre the breaking ation to Madame de them pity not brast day, when she joined with was colorles table, struck Pastor had be Beat at the pity not least day.

Madame de them pity not least day.

When she joined with was colorless that table, were all struck face of an evides, the sled were all struck Her face of an evident table, compunction.

The spite and a computation of the spite of the struck of the spite of the hen she joine where she is goin.

Her face of an evident in she wident the very time she at a suivered on in spite of an evident effort at a suivered on in spite of she at a suivered on she at a suivered on in spite of she at a sui ere all structure Her pite of evident the selection of the spite of the service o trol, quivered out trol, quivered out is goin to speak to speak whink she at excit to die, Mamma? ed to speak.

"Do you think great excitement, whispered Lina, in great all that

o speak.

Do you think great all thement, Mamma?, inspered Lina, in was all that Madame Savoisy "Don't be silly, oner became almost mother than the savoisy mothers." whispered Lina, in, was became Madame Savoisy "Don't be silly, mer became almost e Savoisy Baid; but her to her unwelcome guest motherly, Baid; but her manner unwelcome suest most caressing her recover from the first shock of what the Pastor said

"We must let what the Pastor said.

disappointment, Reaupré, feeling the chaid.

sappointment, Beaupré, feeling the change from Madame de the night before to the from the severity of to-day, jumped to the kindness the severity of of to-day, jumped to the kindness and consideration was gained. Under the concluand consideration was gained. Under this impression that her cause sion, something of her natural self reappeared,—something of that wild, animated, romantic The rese who had won Raymond's heart. She was so evidently desirous to please them all, that every passing hour made them view with greaten pain the impending explanation.

Then there was disunion in the camp.

become like Madame de Beaupré's shadow.

the very incarnation of a Huguenot, was admiration for the beautiful high-born had had eyes to discover, and heart to apprecible, Raymond's merit, and expressed such vivid regrets that they sounded very like arguments for a capitulation. That was all the support M. Savoisy found in the bosom of his own family.

The second day he decided to make known here sentence to Madame de Beaupré. She, lulled by a false security, had slept well; and when she appeared in the breakfast-room, it was with a smile that made them all feel as if a ray of sunshine had entered the room with her. She greeted the Pasteur and his wife with such a sweet, affectionate manner; she raised such loving eyes to them, that their words and looks involuntarily reflected hers. To have seen her seated at table, by the Pasteur's side, you would have supposed that she had always lived in the same simple style. She ate of the plain fare with the appetite of one who relished it.

M. Savoisy, during breakfast, proposed to her to go with him for a walk into the country. Castelnaudary, like all the places in that part of France, has its traditions of religious considerations its traditions of religious considerations. Pasteur imagined that he should find the painful subjects Pasteur imagined that an introduction to the painful subject the interest of t introduction introduction with the interest the house with the interest that his resolution and that his resolution He left the house with her understand that his resolution her his resolution her understand that his resolution her 95

r understand
arriage was inexorable.

arriage was inexorable.

They had scarcely set out

They had scarcely de Paix, which had be introduced to be introduced t marriage was life.

They had scarcely second accosted by the Juge de Paix, who has desire to be introduced to the desire to who had all to who had a to on the second accost to t They had scar accosted by the Juge de introduce at the evident his desire to be introduced to evident his desire to be introduced to the evident his high-bred air to who had a high-br scosted by the service of the servic evident his desire evident his desire with such a high-bred air would be with such a high-bred air would be giving his arm. The Juge de Part to giving his arm. for his erudition to be the town for his erudition to be a the town for his erudition to be a second with such a high-bre with such a high-bre giving his arm. The Juge us Par with such a high-bre giving his arm. For his erudition, and so mous in the town for his erudition, and so mous in the town for his erudition, and so with the department, all and in the start, piques a his perfect knowledge of the department. with such a high giving his arm. The giving his arm. The mous in the town for his erudition was a lar for his perfect knowledge of his arm lar for his perfect knowledge of his arm lar for his perfect knowledge of his arm large at the antiquities of the department all and a large him go mystery attending her at the late restance of mystery attending her at the late restance of gladia her at the stranger's politic of gladia her at the stranger's him go mystery attending her at the late restance of gladia her at the stranger's politic of gladia her at the stranger's him go mystery attending her at the stranger's him go mystery at the stranger's him go mystery attending her at the stranger's him go mystery at the stranger's him go mystery him he antiquities of the beauty, rived the at received the stranger's beauty, rived the stranger's beauty at the stranger's beauty, rived the stranger's beauty, rin thing of mystery attending the stranger's better offer to be arrived by the stranger's attending thing of mystery attending to find the stranger's better thing of mystery attending to find the stranger's better the stran y the stranger hing of mystery attehing of mystery atteno refusing his polite offer

description he gave of gladiatorical atorial or There had dranger

had dranger

had lost matical had ing of mystery in orefusing his polite of gladiatorical atomic of there description he gave historical and fights and dramatical but theological.

Mada de Savois his opportus

Madane Sarois had been nity.

In the meantime which had barois opports opport greatest perple in M. Savoisy, and Poplus, their relations of M. Savoisy, and Poplus, to being members of duty to put it under these last their relations of duty to put it under cover to onsidered in the Pasteur's wife.

The Pasteur's wife.

No wonder Madame Savoisy was in consternation and penned a very precision of the property of the precision of the precisi No wonder Maunician No Wonder Mad penned a very precise detail of all those scandalous reports about young Savoisy and Madame de Beaupré forming the staple of conversation at Magny le Sec. "Ce bon Monsieur Poplus" was, in fact, angry at Raymond's not admiring his daughter; and his account might have served as a criminal indictment against the sous-lieutenant and the Vicomtesse.

Madame Savoisy's first impulse was to disbelieve every imputation; her faith in her son, and the impression made by Madame de Beaupré, inspired her with a moral certainty that the criminal accusations were odious fabrications.

Then came after-thoughts. Madame de Beau pré's singular journey—her agitation—it was surely scarcely natural in a woman of her position to come in person to beg their consent. Why had she not allowed Raymond to do so first. The only excuse for such an extravagant proceeding was, that the scandal had some foundation.

Only those who require, as Madame Savoisy did, unblemished purity of action, can comprehend the anguish that pierced her heart when she had to contemplate the possibility that her son, hitherto the glory of her life, had been untrue to the principles he professed. Agitated by suspicions, as she was, she could not trust herself to meet Madame de Beaupré again; she shut herself up in her own room, desiring Lina to say, "that she was unable to appear"—neither more nor less.

The Pasteur had sought his wife immediately on his return from his unfruitful expedition. When he had taken cognizance of the contents

(15)

(A)

w.

78

ter, he said,—
"I must have Raymond's explanation
"I must have redence to ation "I must have Raymour to matters, before I give credence to the matter to the matte matters, before I give matters, before I give

There has been enough of imprude the marria the marria the marria to the marria There has been enough of the confesses that one tittle of the confesses that one title of the confesses that one tittle of the confesses that one title of the confesses that one there has been but if he confesses that one against him be true, the marriage hat is against him be true, asked M. gainst him be consent?" asked Market Wou will consent? " asked Market Wou will be giving a premium in dealer necessity."

"You will consent?"

"And that will be giving a premium in deather to to

"You was
"that will be giving duct!"
"Wait a little, Martha. I shall will insist on his making use of tot I shall insist on his making use of tot to summon us to accord of tot anance to have recount to enance to the conse "Wait a little, Man "Wait "Wait a little, is half insist on his malegally to summon us to accord legally to summon us to accord to have recount the constitution of the forced to have recount the constitution of the little such a suppose that I was one to ent thankful now that I was one to ent thankful now this after that like such a reasure of the paix's into the constitution of the such a suppose to share. egally to suming the forced to the forced to will be hard enough penance to be to sent. I was one to sent. I am thankful now that I was one to sent. I am thankful now this after the beauty of the pair's into one to speak that et the pair to speak the pair to spe "To be fill be hard enough this "this "the hard enough this "the hard the hard enough that et term to the Juge de that et term to speak much be in what another, the we would be in what another, com, am thankfur—
Madame de Beaupre
tient of the Juge de that everythe to speak among many proofs, much ben in the interval another than we would be wiseld are conthan than we would be wiseld are conthan than the conthan than the conladame de belient of the Juge de lient of the Jug ent of the summong many proof, much more many proof, much more without trifles, how we would one what another ordered for us, than we would order the wings are then for our for our.

lered for us, the lered for us, the lered for us, the level for the level for the level for our for our to her level for our to her level was ranted that selves."

Madame de Beaupre, Alog it for lor on the non-appearance of her hostess was anted that to leave M. Save in media. the non-appearant indisposition, retired to leave M room is caused to after dinner, in order to leave M. Savois needs by and let her know and Lina that lina the let her know that lina Lina had let her know and Lina merly been Raymon that she more at liberty. formerly been Raymon that she was in what had herself this evening with example.

If hook-case now that she example. more at liberty.

was in what had formed this evening with examining and she amused herself this evening with examining this boying. was in what and she amused herbon old book-case. His boyish hand.

the school-boy doggerel on many a marginal laughable portraits, no doubt, of professors were subjects of interest for her. As for any secutive reading, that was beyond her at present if she read, it was without knowing what she reading.

When at eight o'clock Lina brought her Madame de Beauprè expected to be invited, had been on the previous evening, to go do evening prayers; but as no invitation of the was given, she took it for granted that her remaining in her room would be more convenient to family. She therefore kissed Lina, and said she should go to bed early.

The night was stormy, thunder growled at a distance, and rain splashed against the windows of the room in which sat Monsieur and Madame Savoisy. They had at last settled on what they would write to Raymond. The letter was to be in Madame Savoisy's handwriting, but in the Pastor's name—a method adopted to show their entire agreement in the sentiments expressed. Madame Savoisy had just taken her seat at the writing table, M. Savoisy had just begun to dictate, when they were startled by a pebble thrown up against one of the windows.

"Raymond! it is his signal!" exclaimed the mother, opening the sash, and calling out "Raymond!"

"Let me in, mother," was the quick reply.

The Pastor ran to unbolt the front door, and in minute the young man was in his m ms.

"You are dripping wet, my darling wet, my darling she sa "You are dripping of all his real she sa the moment forgetful of a beloved and sup the moment forgetful of a beloved and sup misdeeds. of a lmer of wrath.

"It is only my clock that is wet he said," calmer of wrath.

"It is only
g it aside.

Raymond was looking thin and ill Raymond was looking thin and altogether as differentiated his eye Raymond was looking theras different is eye dull and sunken of health he had rent as picture of them the year broken as picture of them theyear broken. Raymond was altogeth he had rent sey dull and sunken of health he had rent as I from the pieture of them the year bresenter dull and sunker of hear the year bresented from the picture of them the year bresented he had been to see the face had a sub-content he had been anxious face spirit was the reak. om the picture them had a sub-content had been to see them had been to see them had a sub-content had been to see them had a sub-content had been to see them had been to see them had a sub-content had been to see them had been to see the the mother's heart to wax mond!"

the mother's paymond!"

the mother's paymond!"

the mother's heart; new weak was her flesh began to was mond!" "You are ill, Raymond!"

咖

الملسع

الماسيا ă,

y.

Ø.

ŀ

mother's in to willing mother's in the answered willing and anxious wered impatient and perfectly and impatient willing work and impatient work is an input in the control of the control "You are ill, Ray well, anxious wered impatien "You are ill, well, anxious red How impatien "But I am worried and replied his face is Mada

I am period to mpatie to the is Made to the is Made to take some refreshmen. "Call to my son; business of yours and call to my son; business of yours and call to my son; but I am well, some his father. "Cah wurself, my son; business of yourself, my son; I am neither yours, and there well, morsel when there were and there were an and there were an analysis of the well and the were were and the were well and the well and de Beaupré?" "She is quite take refreshmen business refreshmen business this tam neither hung."

We will discuss sir, a morsel refreshmen

she is quared the source of yours, it, and the will discuss sir, a morsel, he added nor thirsty.

Thank you, a morsel, he added, see your thirsty. we will discuss sir, a morsel, he added northirsty.

Thank you, 110 we the room, "The added, seeing his bout to between us, and the There were here." "Thank you, Thank you, I could not swall to between us, and the seeing his mother about to between us, and the soon be between us, and the sooner it is I love Madame de Beaupré with but little to say heart, thoughts, soul and body said the better. rny whole being I reverence as well as love her. belong to her. good as she is lovely and love her. She is pure and good so she is ready talented. She is pure and go for love. She is ready talented. She gives me love for love. She is ready to resign rank and fortune for me; ready to take her pl my side an my side as a citizen's wife; to share poor soldier. poor soldier. She has offended the world for personal assailed be She is assailed by all the contumely that and malice can invent and malice can invent. It has come to magny le Sec it is said and adore the ground she treads on—draw back and will not marry her. In short, I have traveled night and day to implore her to return home as quickl as the railway can convey her, that her presence may put an end to at least one atrocious scandal. have nothing more to say; spare me all arguments. and tell me, in the fewest words, your decision,"

"Raymond, Raymond, why were you not wise in time; all this anguish and struggle would have been spared us had you watched over your heart, had you not allowed passion to overcome your reason."

"Mother, do you suppose I set about loving in cold blood? I loved before I knew it. Good God! to think that it is the mere difference of the form in which we worship God, that is used as a plea to make the life-long misery of two human beings! Tell me your decision at once!"

"A moment, Raymond," interposed his father. "It is, as you say, useless to argue with you just now. But I am not only a father. I am a minister of the Gospel, and, as such, accountable to my church for any dereliction from the principles I teach. In one word, we will not consent to your marriage with a Roman Catholic."

"That, then, is your ultimatum; here "That, then, is your and there said Raymond. "My presence in there said Raymond de Beaupré is impossible said said Raymond. "My pressure is imposed by with Madame de Beaupré is imposed by the must remain there."

The must remain there. with Madame de Beaupre is impossible; some time she must remain there, at once to be exchanged into one or the sharp for Mexico." at once to be exc.
under orders for Mexico.

"Raymond, do you wish to kill

"Raymond, do you wish to his need to his need to you have you have

"Raymond, do ;
mother, throwing herself on his need, "you have ""
"Mother," he said, "you have ""
"Mother," he said, "you have ""
and my fath, " lived" mother, throwing in "you have the quite of Mother," he said, "you have the quite of my earthly happiness; well quited riffce of my earthly happiness; well quited to Madame to M "Mother," he said,
"Mother," he said, rifice of my earthly happiness, well third of obedience to you and my father. I red of obedience to you and my father. I hak love's sake, but de but "Mother," rifice of my earthly har of obedience to you and my fath of large debt of gratitude to Madame er I had large debt of gratitude to sake, but de had only for her dear love's sake, but for Bout I hold—for my reinstatement in for Bout I hold—for my reinstatement in the Bout I hold—for my reinstatement in the bout of the large obtained my had been been sition. It was she who, hearing to have the very obtained my had been stored in the large of the lar large debt of good argument in the composition. It was she who, hearing by the very position. It was she who, hearing by the very she wistian Power, obtained my probable to continuous I hold—for my reinstau.

John of the dear

John of the dear

position. It was she who, hearing to refer to the diameter of the was Protestanduch to the angle of the second to the second e her nor ...
on. It is for the one of the o that I repeat, 'I go I command you a menace "You shall not. I me," said Madam Your obedience as a son to obey well as a son," he savoisy, ce as a son to our sign as well as a son," he replied; "I am a man as greater, you must make the item." passionately.

"I am a man as we son," he replied; "I have made the greater, you must make the plied; "I the lesser

"There is no occasion for such extreme mea-"There is no occas." "We do not wish to sures," said M. Savon are of the age which wish to gives you a right to make use of the law framed in of occasions of disagreement between parents and children. Make your Sommations respectives that ends the difficulty."

at ends the difficulty."

You are perfectly aware that I will never decision. to such means. No. I abide by your decision will not even see Madame de Beaupré-Id _I will write to her. All I beg of you is suade her to return to Magny at once. man! she has paid dearly for her imprudent in fish love." He turned away, and took up his of You are

You are not going away at this time of his aymond, and in Raymond, and in this weather," exclaimed his mother.

"Indeed I am. I am your true son. I have ru herited your tenacity of purpose. You keep to your determination: I to mine."

"Is that all the return you make to those who have given you life, who have watched over your infancy, your childhood. mother wife can be replaced, but not a father or mother, said Madame Savoisy. "Why said Madame Savoisy.

Serah, should I be grateful for a life, you render miserable," he asked, coldly.

"Child, child! how can the liveliness of our faith be shown except by the sacrifices we make for it?, shown except by the same tempt asked the Pasteur; adding, "You almost tempt asked the Pasteur; aums, free the to believe that you are tainted by the free thinking now so unhappily rife in the world. It would seem that you have come to think all reigions equally good."

"Father, I have been wandering about t for more than seven years, and I have to that virtue is not the mount of worship cane
Christians; that form of worship cane Christians; that form of worship cane Christians; that form of Madannot which produces good people. Madannot the same God, believes d Christians; that which produces good people. Mad a produce to the pré worships the same God, believes de de pré worships the same God, believes de de l'est saviour in whom I believe. That in the sharing in ceremonies and the sharing and the sharing in ceremonies and the sharing pré worships the Saviour in whom I believe.
Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in whom I believe.

Saviour in who Saviour in whom belief by sharing in ceremone differently

ours, is not a valid reason with me differently ours, is not a valid reason to you are or sep think differently—you are or sep belief by sharing ours, is not a valid reason who have to ren us. You think differently—you are or eep us. You think differently—it is a second to be a second ours, is not a valid ours, is not a valid

us. You think differently—you are

us. You think differently—you are

and I renounce, in submission to you are and I renders life dear to me, all y f us. You think dinession so you and I renounce, in submission may have all that renders life dear to me, all the renunciation may have the renunciation may have don't and I renounce, in such as a satisfied with the present to do not be a satisfied will spare to such a renounce in such a renounce, in such as a satisfied will spare to such a renounce, in such as a satisfied will spare to such a satisfied will spare to such a satisfied will spare to such a satisfied with the present to such a satisfied will spare hat renders line fect the renunciation may have done

Be satisfied with the present to don't

Be satisfied will spare to on't

Relieve in who beaching

Relieve in who beach

what effect the renuncial what effect the renuncial after. Be satisfied with the present sacrifice will spare to a consolidate on the pain, Raymond. Believe in what you rifice, pain, Raymond that so consolidate to the present is nothing that so in complied to the present sacrifice will spare is nothing that so in complied to the present sacrifice in a family hop, are often to the present sacrifice will spare to the present sacrifice will spare to the present the present to the present the present to the present "The present sacrifice
"The present sacrifice pain, Raymond.

there is nothing that so consolidat I much a great conviction shared in communes where there is not no moral well-being in a family where there can b to ell there is no. great conviction shared in where there is not moral well-being in a family where there can be go to Many to the can be go to the can be g moral well-being moral well-being ion in religion."

"Farewell, my father! faren ell, my father! go to Mell, my father is Savoisy fell into there is into the control into the c moral well-but moral well-but moral well-but moral well-but my father i moral well, my father i moral go to Mell, my moral madame said into you will kill said will kill "Farewell, my fave "Farewell, my fave "Raymond, if you savoisy fell into a chair with Raymon, and Madame sping sobs. The said, bending down and sping sobs. The said, bending down and

- kissing her forehead.

"Poor mother:

kissing her forehead.

"You will not go!" she cried, seizing and holding it in a convulsive grasp.

"You with you my darling; I cannot let you with you my and holding it in a darling; I cannot let You go to "God bless you, Mother!"

"Promise—promise! You must promise." The latter part of this trying scene had had an unexpected spectator.

Lina, who slept in the room adjoining that in which this interview was taking place, had been awakened by the sound of voices in high debate. Sitting up in her bed, she had recognized her brother Raymond as one of the speakers. Her mother's bitter cry had frightened the girl. She got up, slipped on some of her clothes, and with an instinctive feeling of where effectual help was to be found, she burst into Madame de Beaupré's room, exclaiming,—

"Raymond is here, and they are all quarreling dreadfully. Do go to them; tell Raymond not to be unkind to poor Mamma. Oh! make haste, or he will go away; come, come!"

Madame de Beaupré, startled, scared, understanding of all that Lina had said only that Raymond was in the house, yielded to the girl's impetnous urging.

Neither father, mother, nor son, was aware that there had been a timid knock at the door, nor that it had been opened, until Thérèse came up to them. Raymond gazed in silence at the small pale creature as colorless as her white dressing-gown, more like a spirit than a living woman. He gazed in silence but for one minute, then he held out his arms to her. Slowly, as one whose limbs refuse their office, she went to him. He clasped her to his heart, held her in a tight embrace, as though

MADAME DE BEAUPRÉ'S RESOL nothing on this earth should take her Words were murmured, so low that her Words were murmured, selves could catch their meaning; then ested their meaning; then ested their meaning; then ested their meaning; then ested their meaning; the ested the ested their meaning; the ested the ested their meaning; the ested their meaning; the ested the est selves could catch then mest, said selves my her head from his breast, said selves my her head from his breast, said selves my her head from his side in the h g her head from his bland be my chily "Raymond's church shall be my chily the "Raymond go. By his side in chily

"Raymond's church such that a church side in the goes, I will go. By his side in the church side in the goes, I will go. By his side in the church side in the goes, I will go. By his side in the church side in the goes, I will go. By his side in the church side in the goes, I will go. By his side in the church side goes, I will goth the him in eternity."

A great and solemn hush followed a declaration; the hearts of the declaration is speech. with him in eterm.

A great and solemn has of the pected declaration; the hearts of the pected declaration; the hearts of the pected declaration; speech.

Spoken were for pre-The first words spoken were

A they were,

Page

voisy, and they were,-

CHAPTER XX.

A SCANDALOUS MARRIAGE.

THE prediction of the single philosopher of Magny le Sec was fulfilled. The whole town went in procession to visit Madame de Beaupré as soon as it was known that she had returned home. Those who had talked most against her were among the foremost.

After all, she was their only Vicomtesse. She herself announced to the Demoiselles de Tremerens her intended marriage with Sous-Lieutenant Savoisy. Worse and worse! Why could she not have been satisfied with her flirtation? Who wished to interfere with her or it? Calumny? gossip? care for her reputation?—nonsense—no one had ever believed a word against her.

L'Abbé Poulot was sent to argue with her. She was assured that she would find it difficult to obtain a dispensation. No priest in Magny le Sec would perform the ceremony in a church; the most she might expect would be, that the marriage mass should be said outside the church door.

"I should not care if it were said on the high road," was the quick retort. "I shall trouble no priest of Magny le Sec. I shall be satisfied with the civil marriage, and the religious cording to the Protestant Church,"

A BOANDALOUS MARRIAGE

From this time it was said that Mand acquired a chronic From this time it was some Tremerens' head acquired a chronic who superiors of the reliable to M. Tremerens' head acquired consulted all the superiors of the reliable seven pages to Model the seven pages to Model to the seven pages to Tremerens new consulted all the superiors consulted all the superiors the town, wrote seven pages to Mostons the town, what was plotting. The series of what was plotting. the town, wrote seven pages to the town, wrote seven pages form him of what was plotting. The eight form him of what was plotting to the deliberation of the eight form him of what was plotting. the town, wrote form him of what was plottens, count wrote to all the duchesses, count wrote to all the duchesses, count belonging to the de la count belonging to the dela count belongi form him of what ... wrote to all the duchesses, while the de duchesses, while and viscounts belonging to the de de duchesses and viscounts belonging to the de duchesses and viscounts belonging to the de duchesses and viscounts belonging to the de duchesses and viscounts duchesses and the duchesses and viscounts duchesses and the duchesses are duchesses and the duchesses and the duchesses and the duchesse wrote to all the and viscounts belonging to and viscounts belonging to implore the Morville families, to implore this was a preventing this was a property of the prevention of the prev and viscounts bereand viscounts bereMorville families, to impossible some means of preventing this some means of preventin Morville mans of prevenues means of prevenues apostacy and mesalliance.

apostacy and mesalliance.

tack of mental alienation? Of it bubble tack of mental alienation?

de Beaupré mitte like ther child the hot there some means apostacy and mesallian apostacy and mesallian tack of mental alienation? Would be a conseil de famille. Would be a conseil de famille Was it hote a conseil de , eaten Madame de ,
the guardianship of her moble kind? being be noble kind?
The whole of the noble kind? being be noble kind?
The whole of the noble kind? being be noble kind?
The whole of the noble kind? being be noble kind?
The whole of the noble kind? being be noble kind?

The whole of the no blamed her her of her her of her letters which covered her her her of her her letters which covered her her her of her her letters which covered her her her of her her letters which covered her her her of her her of her letters which covered her her of her her of her her letters which commit a silled with her her she was about to commit a silled with the hor and her letter that the hor of her was the was about to commit a silled with the hor and her letter that er letters which lush of indignation, lush of indignation, any argument that persuance the bride signally in t

was about to

t.

M. d'Esbryat's letter was the only one only one that save the right He that save M. d'Esbryat's letter

M. d'Esbryat's letter

Madame de Beaupré any confort, one that save spite of the right to told gave the disna to told her M. d'Esbryat's

Madame de Beaupre

Madame de Beaupre

Madame de Beaupre

Madame de Beaupre

Spite of the right to told gave

The seemed to have to have of the told here

The seemed to have of the told here

The seemed to have to the told here

The seemed to have the told here

The seemed told the told here

The seemed told the told Madame de Bearth the ment de spart de told gave man for whom, in she seemed to have a since their man for whom, in specific the disparation many ner rank and fortune, she seemed to have a sof their tachment. The only change he should sincere at her programme would be that M. Raymond sanction in large the army. M. d'Esbryat need to have a soft their her programme would be that M. Raymond Sanction in large the army. M. d'Esbryat need to have a soft their her programme would be army. M. d'Esbryat need to have a soft their her programme would be that M. Raymond Sanction in large the army. her programme wow.

her programme wow.

M. d'Esbryat urged

this point as one which would spare her man; conveniences and disagreeables.

"If M. Savoisy would consent to follow the sice," concluded M vice," concluded M. d'Esbryat, "his we not which would be the nomination." ent should be the nomination to some collection of his wife. which would also assure him a position indelident of his wife's fortune."

It would be difficult to describe the enthusiastic gratitude with which this letter inspired Madame de Beaupré. It was the taking away the one thorn from her marriage. She had had a dread of going about with a regiment; and it would, besides, give the greatest satisfaction to Monsieur and Madame Savoisy that Raymond should leave the army, His seven years' service bad been completed just two months ago. He must accept M. d'Esbryat's offer; and of course he did so.

The excitement of Magny le Sec, which had subsided during the delay necessary for carrying out M. d'Esbryat's project, rose again to fever-pitch the day of the publication of the banns of marriage between Thérèse, Vicomtesse de Beaupré, Baronne de Souliat neé de Morville, and Raymond Savoisy, late sous-lieutenant of the 101st of the line, actually Payeur at X—, son of Pasteur Savoisy, of Castelnaudary.

In France the banns of marriage are not only announced from the pulpit, but appear in writing on the walls of the audience-room of the Mairie, and outside the parish church door.

"A proof that she is sufficiently ashamed of her.

A BCANDALOUS MARRIAGE

wif," announced Mademoiselle de Translat she is getting herself public, " is, that she is getting herself public, " even of a wedding-dress, he I don't hear even of a wedding-dress has lost all her

"And lucking Mademoiselle Virginie.

Another subject that engaged was the marriage settlement. Bereich been written, it was assettled to had settled to had Another successive was the marriage settlement of it had been written, it was assettled to the on a settled to the one are that she had settled to the one are the settled to was the marriage of it had been written, it was assettled to bitable fact that she had settled to be as bribery do bundary.

"Horrible! it was sband!"

As for the man himself, there will be it under the to hile, be it under the to have the hold be the "Hornor husband!"

As for the man himself, were contempt in the dictionary strong ere and the man himself, were contempt in th or the man himper in the dictionary strongers and this while, be it under the constraint of the constr As for the management in the discontempt in Madame de Part de discontempt in Madame de Part de discontempt in the discontempt i

Raymond was absent at acquainted with his new duties are the area of the acquainted hims her marking the provide that his the provide that his the provide that he acquainted that he acquainted that he acquainted the provide that he acquainted the acquainted that he acquainted the provide that he acquainted th ver.

Raymond was absc acquainted with his new autentiance would give her marking the proving that the proving the proving that his age which ocation are Raymond was requainted with his had exacted this of him, had exacted this of way und the care of hims patience would give her many the cortain. There's was to a war, who was to a equainted with ad exacted this or patience would give her man the the property that he all the gossip about her man his ge which vocation of irrite saw her was to be the gossip abopected.

Not even Miss Power, who which watton of the insidia. Annoyance insidia. expected.

Not even Miss Power, The Saw her was to proceed at any of the insidion or at all hours, the was assailed undan advice advice advice. Not even Miss

Not even Miss

could detect a trace

the Vicomtesse at any of the insidious annoyance in which she was assailed under the disconicould detect a the vicomtesse at any the Vic riendliness.

When openly attacked with questions or demands of those actions of demands When openly attace where that if she or demands one of those actions which supposed for explanations, some of those actions which required explanation or excuse, she should never templated it.

At last the important day arrived for bling of the conseil de famille. It was be the nephew of the late Vicomte de Beau nearest of kin to the child, would carry of taking from Madame de Beaupré the ship of little Bertha, and that he would having the child removed from under he roof. M. Savoisy being a Protestant, and certainty that Madame de Beaupré we renounce, or had even already renounce of her fathers, were strong argument a step.

It was only at this moment that Christ remarked any nervousness in Madame de manner.

"If they succeed, Raymond will be so on my account," she said to Christian.

One remarkable quality about happy' their blindness to all that relates to others. never noticed that her governess, for w really had an affection, had become thin ness. She never noticed that she avoid mond; that she never spoke of him; that she from giving a promise to remain with married couple. There'se seemed to tal granted that the marriage gave as much tion to Miss Power as to herself, and was trying to induce her to tell her of Rayouth, coaxing her to praise him. It was on her, on account of her marriage, should make her shed a tear. She would have considered tears a treason to Raymond; but she very nearly broke down when the Juge de Paix came and told her, with kindly feeling, that the guardianship of her child was confirmed to her. It was then that with an overflowing heart, she gave him her full confidence as to the intended arrangements of her money. She had been anxious, in order to satisfy M. Savoisy's scruples, to give up two-thirds of her fortune at once to Bertha: but as that was difficult, if not impossible, to manage, she had decided that half of her income should be given yearly to public charities, without reference to religious persuasion. She begged the Juge de Paix to read over her marriage contract, that he might hereafter bear testimony to M. Savoisy's disinterestedness. It was when fulfilling this request that the Juge de Pair became acquainted that a provision had been made for Miss Power.

The notary, old in the world's ways, and whose misfort the it had been to see always the wrong side of human nature, said that he had witnessed a curious rivalry of disinterestedness between Savoisy and Madame de Beaupré, adding.

This is the first contract of a marriage from affection drawn up in my office during the forty years I have been a notary. I hope I may live to see how the experiment answers."

When and the Marquis and Marquise de P., and three if not four Comtesse Paris to be Present at Madam ding, the hostile faction, hither All the principal families an invitation. lead in the reaction, by declaring reports had been the effect of il and class—a war of the lower aristocracy, among whom she implication. It was at this mor asked the Juge de Paix if he wedding-breakfast. He replied, nakt

ar. 040

17

"Why should I? against Madame la Vicomtesse or I have ne

As it happened, no invitations to town were given to the breakfast, to be composed solely of the imme of the bride and bridegroom's family

Monsieur and of the bride and Drive Monsieur and Mansieur Fran, Ma omme were there.

forgotten his benefactress, and had on allowed to perform on the ear forgotten his benefaction of the ear speed to be allowed to perform on the ear thurch was full arriage ceremony.

The Protestant church was full to suppose what Mademoiselle de Tremeroc marriage cer.

The Protestant church witness what Mademoiselle de Tremeroce

A scandalous marriage."

Cavoisy himsele

A scandalous marriage.

A scandalous marriage.

The Pasteur Savoisy himself persons; and several persons, mied The Pasteur Saventy performance ceremony; and several persons, integral persons, int marriage ceremony, and marriage ceremony, and Madame Savoisy and Lina for the Constitution of the Constitu Madame Savoisy and Line to the Mademoiselle de Q, pronounced the n to be

There was a general wonder and a general shuse of the music played on the occasion by M. Frankomme—no doubt some Huguenot psalmody.

It happened to be Handel's "Bridal Chorus,"

A week after the departure of the young couple, they were forgotten, save by the Demoiselles de Tremerens, who had to seek for another tenant of their Rez de Chaussée.

"No more young widows need apply," was their warning cry. "They hoped Madame Savoisy would be happy; but they knew she would not. No woman could, who had so forgotten all that was due to her rank."

Miss Power is for the present at Castelnaudary with Pasteur and Madame Savoisy.

THE END.

A Psyche of To-day.

By Mrs. C. JENKIN, author of "Who 11.25.

"After opening the pretty volume of this story, we depaper reviewer rarely finds time to do with a book to read it through without stopping, from title-page to #. is a book to be welcomed in any home."—N. Y. Time

"A capital novel of modern French life and society writer's method of composition, so bright, crisp, and greatly to the effect of her wit, observation, and sent Transcript.

In the Year '13.

A Historical Tale. By FRITZ REUTERfrom the Platt-Deutsch by CHARLES LEE I G. H. Lewes). 16mo. Flexible cloth, $1;

"One of the most artistic and pleasing bits of histor we think, in any literature."—Nation.

"One of the daintiest possible of volumes. The pa and the binding befits it. * * * The story is full of unigled with strains of heroism and pathos, and su while by a noble moral of duty to man and trust in G queer German tales which we have read, this is one of t New Englander.

Mozart. A Biographical Novel.

From the German of Heribert Rau, ROWLAND SILL. Cloth, gilt, $1.75; plain, $ $1.00.

"A succession of beautiful pictures from the life of the impassioned artist.... The work has the charm of actual incident, without the usual waxen formality of the histor The description of European social life, especially the Gtic sketchea, are brilliant and often delightful. Mr. Sill engaged in the translation not as a task, but as a labor of admirably succeeded."—N. Y. Tribune.

"A story full of insight and artistic sympathy—a beaut and tribute to the life, the trials, the triumphs, and te genius; and, besides all this, has the charm of a fascins and the value of a genuine memoir."—Boston Transcript.

"A book of rare and absorbing interest."—Hours at Ho

pogle