on the platform, and said: I propose to make the following resolutions:—

Resolved, That the President be impeached for high treason.

Resolved, That the Vice President be impeached for high treason.

Resolved, That the members of the Executive Council be impeached for high treason.

Resolved, That the members of the Senate be impeached for high treason.

Resolved, That the members of the House of Representatives be impeached for high treason.

Resolved, That the members of the Judiciary be impeached for high treason.

Resolved, That the members of the Executive, Legislative, and Judiciary be impeached for high treason.

Resolved, That the members of the Executive, Legislative, and Judiciary be impeached for high treason.

afternoon, and that the balloting for candidates for President and Vice President be postponed until Thursday morning.

The resolution was received with marks of approval and disapprobation. In the midst of the discussion, Mr. Lincoln, of Cincinnati, got the floor. He said:

My friends here, on my right, are ready to go to the wall for me. I have no objection to that. I have no objection to that. I have no objection to that. I have no objection to that. I have no objection to that.

Convention do now proceed to an informal ballot for a candidate for the Vice Presidency.

TO ADVERTISEES.

It is respectfully requested that all those who have any business to transact at the Convention, should call on the undersigned at his office, No. 29 Spruce Street, New York, and receive a card of admission.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Office, No. 501 Seventh Street, between D and E, one square south of City Hall Post.

THURSDAY, JUNE 26, 1856.

The amendment was adopted, with a dozen yeas and a dozen nays. The gentleman from Pennsylvania had a single word to say upon this question, which he considered an unnecessary amount of excitement. He was sure that the meaning of his resolution was understood. There was no party in the United States that placed itself against liberty of conscience and perfect equality of rights before the law.

Mr. Lincoln, of Pennsylvania, addressed the meeting. He said:

Mr. President, I have stood in storms here until I dripped with sweat and my hair was matted with rain. I have stood in storms here until I dripped with sweat and my hair was matted with rain. I have stood in storms here until I dripped with sweat and my hair was matted with rain.

And I intend to vote to bring every German in the country, if possible, to support the nomination of Fremont. I have no doubt that Mr. Fremont will receive the majority of the German votes in the Union.

John A. Grim, editor of another German paper in Illinois, was called up, and expressed great interest in the following countrymen at the enjoyment of the freedom of opinion and action which they had found in this country.

THE PHILADELPHIA CONVENTION—ITS PLATFORM AND NOMINATIONS.

We print this week a full report of the proceedings of the Philadelphia Convention, with the exception of other matters of local interest. Not having been present, we can speak of the character and temper of the Convention only upon the testimony of eye-witnesses. It was large, imposing, and pervaded by a feeling of determined hostility to the slave power. The safety of the Republic is glowing with excitement, while the elements are melting with fervent heat.

Several members next attempted to secure the nomination of Fremont. Mr. Lincoln, of Ohio, introduced Charles Francis Adams, of Mass. Mr. Adams was received with loud cheers, and addressed the Convention as follows:

Mr. President, I have the honor to be introduced to you by the friends of Mr. Fremont. I have the honor to be introduced to you by the friends of Mr. Fremont. I have the honor to be introduced to you by the friends of Mr. Fremont.

Mr. Fremont, of New York, was next nominated. He was received with loud cheers, and addressed the Convention as follows:

Mr. President, I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency.

The following gentlemen were appointed by the Chair to prepare an address as above: Francis P. Blair, of Maryland; J. G. Spaulding, of Ohio; H. C. Cartwright, of Illinois; and Mr. Hild, of Massachusetts.

Mr. Hild, of Massachusetts, said that Mr. Blair had been the first choice of that State for the nomination of Fremont.

NEWSPAPER RESPONSES.

The New York Tribune and Daily Times, of course, heartily sustain the nomination of Col. Fremont. The Courier and Enquirer of the same city accept it also as one under the most favorable circumstances.

Mr. Hild, of Ohio, succeeded in obtaining the nomination of Fremont for the Presidency. He was received with loud cheers, and addressed the Convention as follows:

Mr. President, I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency.

Mr. Fremont, of New York, was next nominated. He was received with loud cheers, and addressed the Convention as follows:

Mr. President, I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency.

Mr. Fremont, of New York, was next nominated. He was received with loud cheers, and addressed the Convention as follows:

Mr. President, I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency.

Mr. Fremont, of New York, was next nominated. He was received with loud cheers, and addressed the Convention as follows:

Mr. President, I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency.

THIRD DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

PHILADELPHIA, June 13, 1856.

The Convention convened at 10 o'clock. There was quite so much excitement as on the preceding day, and the benches were filled with some time after the hour of meeting. The attendance outside was so great that the Convention was obliged to sit on the steps.

Mr. Fremont, of New York, was next nominated. He was received with loud cheers, and addressed the Convention as follows:

Mr. President, I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency.

Mr. Fremont, of New York, was next nominated. He was received with loud cheers, and addressed the Convention as follows:

Mr. President, I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency.

Mr. Fremont, of New York, was next nominated. He was received with loud cheers, and addressed the Convention as follows:

Mr. President, I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency. I have the honor to be nominated for the Presidency.

policy we have so long urged, is at last vindicated, and the great movement for the overthrow of the Slave Power and the present Administration is placed on its true basis.

Having thus given an exposition of the position of the Convention, and defined our action, we shall henceforth do all that may be in our power to bring about a perfect union of the friends of Freedom at home and of good faith and peace in our foreign relations, against the Cincinnati nominations, pledged as they are by the platform which accompanies them, and the majority who framed both to Slavery at home and Illinois abroad. Life may be long, but we may have been vexed, disappointed, some times mortified, at the injudicious and unfeeling measures of men who ought to have known better; but we place our great movement above men; it is the only movement which all-wise candidates to save Kansas, and put an end to the Despotism which repealed the Missouri Compromise, and is perpetually seeking to subjugate the country to Slavery; its platform is clear, sound, and comprehensive; its nominations must represent it; by sustaining them, we sustain its opposite.

THE HOUSE REPORT ON THE SUMMER ASSAULT.

The report of the House Committee concerning the assault on Mr. Sumner will be taken up Tuesday, July 8th. A contemporary in New York writes that the report will be characterized by extreme personalities, and quotes a passage from the Congressional Globe, and shows the terms in which Mr. Benton denominated Mr. Foss, who drew a pistol in the Senate in what he called self-defense.

IMPORTANT CORRECTION.

The second resolution of the platform adopted by the Philadelphia Convention is so disgraced by blunders, as printed in the papers, that it cannot be understood. Mr. Giddings has furnished us with a correct copy, as follows:

Resolved, That with our Republican fathers we are determined to maintain that all men are endowed with the unalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and that the just and honest design of our Federal Government was to secure those rights to all persons within its jurisdiction, without regard to color, race, or sex; and that when they abolished Slavery in all our National Territory, ordained that no person should be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law, it became our duty to maintain this provision of the Constitution against all attempts to violate it, to prevent the violation of the rights of the citizens of the United States by positive legislation prohibiting its existence therein. And we deny the right of any individual or association of individuals to give legal existence to Slavery in any Territory or State, and that the present Constitution shall be maintained.

THE ZEPHYRUS.

worthy of this the highest political honor on earth—an honor such as the people of no other country have the power to bestow. Despair not, however, that the subject of the platform attached to the station, especially at the present crisis in our affairs, has been carefully refrained from such a nomination either in word or by deed. Now that it has been offered by the Democratic party, I accept it with diffidence, and with a heavy heart, and a humble trust that, in the event of my election, I may be enabled to discharge my duty in such a manner as to satisfy the people, and to promote the best interests of the Republic.

ACCEPTANCE BY FILLMORE OF HIS NOMINATION.

THE POLITICAL WORKS OF AUGUSTUS DOUGLASS. Philadelphia: Carey & McMillan, 1856.

The Review.

Since our notice of this work in an imperfect state, or rather imperfect copy, for which state of the book, however, no one was to blame, as we find it to have been accidental, we have had an opportunity to examine more carefully a complete volume, sent us by the editor of the work. We are, therefore, better able to do justice. There is something at once striking in the order of the arrangement, and in the titles of his lectures, to which we have already alluded, are original, and highly suggestive. They breathe a spirit of earnest devotion, and their object seems to be to awaken to correspondent action. Some of them our readers have seen in the former volumes of this series, and we have here two volumes by the same author, of whose merits we have spoken some weeks ago. The same general remarks we then made will apply likewise to these further contributions of his pen. The author's course in the former volumes was to present an argument to show the personality, office, and work of the Holy Spirit, and partly to illustrate by practical application the solemn truths of regeneration and sanctification. It has been repeated before, and reached to its present edition, thus identifying itself with the Christian public. The author has now added a new chapter, and speaks of his having been owned by the Spirit, as the best proof of its adaptation to his object in its preparation. His topics are well managed, and the instruction is given, the force of numerous passages of Scripture are explained, and the strain of interest in his reader's welfare, that runs through every page, speaks well for Dr. Winslow's heart. It is a subject of vast practical importance, which properly defined views are needed by many, both of those who are not at all acquainted with the Christian religion, and by those who have been misled by the false notions of the nature and means of sanctification. It will tend to elevate the standard of piety, and give to God's pressing people a deeper sense of their obligations, and lead them to a more earnest pursuit of every proper means to attain it. This book will be adapted to one just setting out in the Christian life, and by a careful reading of it, every such person may obtain a truer knowledge of what he needs, still to hold on his way, and fall not at last to win the reward promised to those who persevere. The second of these volumes is a series of brief discourses, having for their object the illustration of the great central fact, "The Lord Jesus is the Son of the Christian system." Every truth proceeds from and leads to Him." The topics are otherwise unconnected, especially in the first book, but the arrangement and design reflect great credit on the editor, James Lacey, Jr., Esq., who evidently has meant that no pains should be spared to make its appearance such that every one should feel proud of the tribute so paid to America's greatest man. We fear that the arrangement, however, of the particular discourses, these of Freedom and annals to meander through the author's view in a great degree addressed, will be deterred by the price at which it may be afforded, and will not see it. We should be glad, therefore, to see a cheap edition of this series, in which the price is made for his low level of liberty, and wish also to procure an elegant addition to their library, will give such patronage to the present volume as will encourage the publication of an edition of the same general cast as the present volume; and the author has, on a similar plan, with Dr. J. H. Stockett's "Lectures on the Christian's Duties," brought together a large amount of interesting and instructive information, and prepared a book which may be taken up and thrown down at pleasure, from which we may glean, upon every subject we choose, amusing and pleasant knowledge. It is such a book as we like to take along with us, and we are glad to see it in the hands of a water-pipe, or a summer excursion; and we can recommend it to our readers, to hold on their places, and be helped from the smiling lips, who do not look as if he would deny them their cravings. The style and mode of writing are, in every respect, of an excellent character, corresponding with the object of the work, and we know where we could put it, and we know that it is a book that will be read with interest, and will be read with pleasure.
