ELIZABETH CANNING

CONSIDERED.

BEFORE I speak any thing in support of that Truth, on the Evidence of which the Life of a most injur'd Person depends; I think it necessary, that I may not seem, under the Colour of public Information, to be acting an interested Part, and defending my own Conduct, to say, that I am convinced it needs A 2 no no Defence. Whatfoever the Malice of little Adverfaries may wifh to propagate on this Head, I fhall be at Eafe in my own Mind, while confcious of the Honefty of my Intention; and I have Reafon to be fatisfied, with Regard to the Opinion of the World, while I have the Honour to be told, that he who is certainly the beft Judge, and perhaps the beft Perfon in it, fays, that I have done as became a prudent Man.

No one will call it a bad Action, that I have endeavoured to obtain the Truth, in a Cafe, where Humanity muft have engaged any, who had the leaft Sufpicion of Falfhood, to wifh the Secret known; it would have been a very imprudent one for him, who had no Authority to have taken that Confeffion which difcovered it; and it has appeared to those who are better Judges, that it was most right, when the Preparation was made for that Confession, to apply to the supreme Magistrate of the Court, in which the Cause had been tried, to receive it. This is all I have done in the Matter.

I claim no Praise from it; that belongs to another; But neither can I regard those who shall think, that which I have done merits Censure. Being Being difinterested, I may expect Credit; but there is yet a Reason why I shall speak less freely. 'Tis an unfortunate Circumstance, that with the Innocence of this Person, there is connected the Crime of another; if not the intentional, at least the effectual Crime: The Evidence that absolves the one accuses the other; and it is one of those Incidents, under which Humanity is wounded by the Means, while it glories in the End.

It will be found, however romantic, or however abfurd, fuch Conduct may appear to many, that I have acted in this only on the Principle of real Honefty and public Utility; and as I have acted, I would wish to see others also act. But while I shall plead yet farther in the Caufe of a Perfon who is innocent, whom I have not feen, nor do know that I ever shall fee; and in whole Favour, I do avow in the Face of Almighty God, no Application whatfoever has been made to me; it will give me Pain to reflect that in every Argument I am wounding another; concerning whom I know nothing of Certainty, more than appears from this Evidence; nor can judge how far what fo appears to be her Guilt, may admit of Palliation.

Iknow

I know how improper, nay, how difhoneft, it is in many Cales to prepoffefs the Public against those whom their Country has not yet found guilty of any Crime : No Hiftory can propuce a greater Inftance of it than is before us in the prefent Story ; and I shall think the Obligation facred that restrains my Hand upon every other Occafion : But here the Life of a Perfon, certainly innocent, is concern'd on the one Part; and not fo much as the Life; even should the worst be proved, and the Laws put in their fullest Execution, of one, as certainly a Caufe of the greatest Distress; and almost of Death to that Innocent, on the other. As this is the Cafe in the prefent Enquiry, the Particularity of the Circumstance may dispense with what would be faulty on a different Occafion,

67

I must the more think the doing of this neceffary, and therefore justifiable, as mean Sophistry, and the Parade of Argument, have been employed on the other Side; and the Attempt of vindicating the Accuser, though but a secondary Confideration, has, with some Persons, altho' I hope with none of Consequence, prevailed against that Proof of Innocence on the Part of the Accused, which alone can prevent prevent the Execution of a Sentence procured by a confess'd Perjury.

I had read the Pamphlet in which thefe are us'd, as a Justification only of the Conduct of a Man, against whom I have no Refentment; and, as fuch, I could not defire to invalidate any thing that it contained: But though I had no Wish against its Succefs on that Account, I cannot fee it aiming to overthrow that Justice and Compassion, which were growing up in the Minds of all Men, with Respect to the Object whom I had proposed to them as fo worthy of those Emotions, without treating it with that Severity, and condemning it to that Ignominy which it deferves; without detecting its Mifreprefentations, refuting its imagined Arguments, and pointing out to those, who have not already seen it, where they are to fmile upon its Puerility.

If it be poffible that I fhould by this Piece of Juffice make that Man more my Enemy, than he is at prefent; I tell him, no Part of this is written with that immediate Defign: But I fhall alfo add, that the Importance of the Caufe will compenfate all that his pointlefs Arms can return upon the Occafion; and that, if I fhall become confcious, I have been inftrumental, tho' in [8] in ever to fmall a Degree, in faving the Life of an innocent Perfon, the Remembrance will make me enjoy the Outrages of all his little Followers.

But with the fame Warmth, under which I shall feel this Pleasure, I must be fenfible of the Pain which will attend the Confcioufness, that what I fay, may be fo conftrued as to hurt the other. I beg to be believed that I have no Intent, for most assuredly I have none, to injure her: Perhaps I look upon what the has done, with lefs Severity than others. She may be able to prove that the was fomewhere confined, though the was not at this Place: I hope the will prove it: But as many other Accounts may be given how a Perfon, les innocent, might have been employed, I must have leave to name fome of thefe: I must have leave, till such a Fact is proved, to doubt the Truth of all; and to build the Testimony of the Convict's Innocence, in part, upon the Improbability of what at this Time appears her Story.

Whatfoever I shall advance on this Head, is alledg'd only as what might have happen'd, and I defire it may be understood as meaning meaning no otherwife. I have no particular Knowledge of the Truth with Refpect to Canning; and therefore can be politive only with Regard to those Proofs that appear of the Convict's Innocence. As this is the true Case, I beg that whatsoever I conjecture, may be received only as Conjecture, and may not hurt her in the Eye of the World.

When Truth is to be decided, Sophiftry is impertinent; and when the Proofs are at hand, and are fuch that all may judge by them, they use a Freedom to which they have little Right, who attempt to guide and to direct Mankind in their Datermination. Whatsoever lies within our Knowledge more than others have had Opportunities of acquainting themselves withal, it becomes a Duty to impart; but when that is done, by what Claim is it that we dictate? these or these Sirs! must be the Conclusions: We are to state the Case, the World is to determine.

'Tis hard for him who has engag'd, be it no more than his Opinion on one Part, to be difinterested with respect to the other; nay, if he were unbiass'd, such an one isstill but a fingle Person; and he has little Candour, B and and lefs Modefty, if he fuppofes every Individual of the Publick is not as able as himfelf to judge upon that which he allows to be, or which he affects to call, clear Evidence.

As many things have come to my Knowledge in this strange Affair, with which the Public cannot have been acquainted; it may be indulged me to speak of them, without the Cenfure of Officiousness; and as I have already delivered fomething concerning an Enquiry into the Truth, which, as it appeared the Concern, fo it has been the Study of fome Perfons to invalidate, it may be efteem'd a Duty in me to fupport that which has already fo appeared; and to do this the more fully, I Ihall add to it what farther the Time, the Nature of the Proceedings, and the Refpect to those under whose Cognizance the Whole now remains, may warrant me in disclosing.

I have ordered my Name to be put to this Pamphlet, that I may not be fuppofed the Writer of those many other Pieces, which Ingenuity, or its Parent Hunger, may hereaster obtrude upon the World; or of some Things that have already ready offer'd themfelves to its Notice; the Motives to which, feem rather to lie in perfonal Refentment, than an Attachment to Juftice. As the Original Papers will hereafter appear, what I shall now propose may stand as an Introduction to them: and it will answer also another Purpose; in that it will, I hope, prevent the imbibing of unjust Prejudices, and false Opinions, whether from the Deluded or the Designing, the Interested or the Ignorant.

The truth is of Importance; and it will be laid open: Till that fhall be fully effected, the fame Principle which influenc'd me, as unconcerned as any Man could be in the whole Matter, and of all Men the leaft inclined to enter into Difputes and Quarrels, to undertake the Protection, fo far as it lay in my fcantyPower, of the Innocent, pleads with me, fo far as my Opportunities may permit, and fo far as may be confiftent with that Character which every Man ought to hold facred, to prevent farther Error.

There will be those who think me wrong from the Beginning; and were I actuated by their Sentiments only, I should agree agree with them. It was not prudent to engage unneceffarily, in a Caufe that muft become a Subject of Debate; but there are Motives fuperior even to Prudence, and thefe had, in the prefent Cafe, a Right to Attention; Honefty, Humanity, and Love of Juftice: Thefe, I hope, I fhall always, although it be at the Expence of fome Scandal, prefer to that cold Principle; inafmuch as I think it a greater Character to be an honeft, than to be a wife Man.

Thus much it may have been neceffary, though very unpleafing, to fay, with Refpect to those Motives which induced an unconcerned Perfon at all to meddle in this intricate Discovery; fince those whose own Hearts do not acknowledge any Thought that has not Self for its Centre, may not (uninformed of the Difference) fuppose it possible any others should have Place in the Breast of a Stranger. The Perfons are all unknown to me, but the Story was interesting; and Humanity must have been unknown to him, who should have been let into fo much of it, as had come to my Knowledge, and not have en-quired farther. I could have no Intereft in the Event farther than as one Creature of the fame Species is concerned in the Welfare Welfare of another; nor was I of any Part, unlefs inclined to pity the miferable Convict; becaufe fhe was poor, and a Stranger, and opprefs'd, and innocent. Such, at leaft, I was, at that Time, inclin'd to believe her, and I am, by all that has pafs'd fince, the more confirm'd in that Opinion.

It will appear, that I have weighty, nay, that I have unanfwerable and incontrovertible Evidence, that I ought to be fo; whenever those facred Proofs, which at this Time are in the Hands of that generous Magistrate who has obtained them, shall appear, and untill that Time come, perhaps it may not be thought fingular in me to be perfuaded of the Innocence of this Woman, from the very Attempts which have been made by those who espouse her Prosecutors, to prove they are not guilty.

I have proposed to confider the whole Story; and to preferve a Conduct answerable to that Intention, I shall begin with it fomewhat earlier than those have thought it prudent to do, who have hitherto treated of the Matter. To judge truly of People's Actions, we should enquire into the Designs of them; and this is best done by attending to the earliest Notices.

Some

Some few Days after that fir/t of *Janu*ary, on which this little Child, as those who despairing to convince the Judgment, attempt the Passions of Mankind, affect to call her, is faid to have been carried away, I find the following Advertisement in the most Universal of the Daily Papers.

" Whereas Elizabeth Cannon went from " ber Friends between Hounfditch and " Bishopsgate, on Monday last, the 1st " Instant, between Nine and Ten o'Clock : " Whoever can give any Account where " she is, shall have Two Guineas Reward; to be paid by Mar Content of the stand of to be paid by Mrs. Cannon, a Sawyer; " in Aldermanbury Postern, which will " be a great Satisfaction to her Mother. " She is fresh-colour'd, pitted with the " Small-Pox, has a high Forehead, light " Eye-brows, about five Foot high, eighteen "Years of Age, well fet, had on a Maf-« querade Purple Stuff Gown, a black " Petticoat, a white Chip Hat, bound round " with Green, a white Apron and Hand-« kerchief, blue Stockings, and Leather s Shoes.

Note, It is supposed file was forcibly taken away by fome evil-disposed Perfon, as she was heard to shrik out in a Hackney-Coach in Bishopsgate-street,
If the Coachman remembers any thing

 of the Affair, by giving an Account as  above, he shall be handsomely rewarded  for his Trouble.*

This is a Circumstance, forgot by the difinterested; and pass'd over, not imprudently, by those who espouse the Girl; but I must declare, that with me it has great Weight. Why fuppofed to be taken forcibly away? Are these Transactions common? or was there any Thing in the prefent Cafe to authorife fuch an Imagination? To what Purpose should she be forced away! She is not handfome; fo that the Defign could not be upon her Perfon; and certainly the Drefs that is defcribed fo largely, could not tempt any one to carry her off to rob her; nor was it neceffary, for that might have been done where she was feized ; nay, and in the latter Accounts we are told it was done there.

Who heard her fhriek! or what is become of the Hackney-Coach Part of the Story, no Syllable has been fince uttered of it. Who fhould know the Voice of a Servant of no Confideration, calling in a strange Part of the Town from a Coach? Whatmust the Ruffianshave been doing who fuffer'd her to shrick! or who that heard fuck fuch a Voice, and did, or that did not know the Perfon, would not have ftopped the Carriage! How came he who heard fo much not to call Perfons to affift him? there are enough in the Streets at Ten o Clock; or, where's the Coachman, for Coaches do not drive themfelves, and certainly he might be found to juftify the Story.

* Daily Advertiser, January 6.

If a Coach carried her, where therefore is the Driver of it? or, if fhe was dragged along, how did the People, who were taking all this Pains, and running all this Hazard, to no Sort of Purpofe, get her undifcovered through the Turnpikes? The Public will judge of this early Advertifement as they think proper; to me the Determination that fhould be grounded on it appears too obvious; and, perhaps, in due time it will be found fupported.

From the Day of this Publication, by which the World was informed that fuch a Girl was carried off by Ruffians, (a fine Preparative for what has follow'd!) we hear no more of her till her Return at the End of Eight-and-twenty Days; when fhe tells her abfurd, incredible, and most ridiculous Story. A Piece of contradictory Incidents, and most improbable Events; a waking Dream; the Reverie of an Idiot: A Relation that could not be allowed a Face of Likelihood; and that would have taken no hold on any, but as it pleaded to their Compaffion.

It was not on the Credit of this Story that the unhappy Creature, in whofe Cafe all these Endeavours have been us'd, was condemn'd. Let us not imagine Courts of Juffice swallow such Relations. 'Twas on the most full Account, given by one, who declared that she had seen the whole Transaction of which the Court was concerned to judge. One, who being a Stranger to the Accufer, and a Friend of the Perfons accused, declared the faw the Robbery. This was an Evidence which must have been allowed by any Jury of judicious and unbiass'd Men. Now that we are convinced of the Innocence of the Perfons who were condemned upon the Credit paid to this Evidence, we must acknowledge, that human Wifdom could not, at that Time, have discovered, nay scarce could have fuspected it was false; and that while unfuspected, it had been Injustice not to have done exactly as was done upon the Trial.

We are now reviewing that Account in C a very a very different Light : we have now been let into the Secret of its Origin; we have feen her fince voluntarily declare, that it was falfe and forg'd : not in part falfe, but in the Whole, and that it was the Off-fpring only of her Terrors: and tho' actuated from the Influence of the fame Apprehenfions, fhe confirmed it at the Trial, fhe now declares it, freely and voluntarily declares it, to have been all a Perjury.

She has confeffed her Motive to the doing this, and that is it was fuch an one, as might well have Effect upon an ignorant Creature: This I shall confider at large when I come prefently to treat of her Informations. She has declared this to have been her only Mo--tive; and those who are most concerned, do acknowledge, that fhe was very unwilling to give it; and was very difficultly brought to it. What Reafon could fhe have to contradict it? None! To this no one can fpeak with more Authority than I: and I declare the had none. It was to myfelf fhe promis'd the Confession. I had no Advantages to offer to her, nor any Power to terrify: nor was this done privately; fo that there are Witneffes who know how free and perfectly 'twas voluntary. I applied to the Lord, Mayor, whom, 'till that Time, I never faw, to receive her Confession: She was fent.

fent for; fhe made it; and the Confequences are natural.

The Lord Mayor had at that Time Proofs in his own Hands, as ftrong as even this Confeffion, of the perfect Innocence of the miferable Convict; and he has fince received. innumerable more; all more precife, and punctual; more firm and more convincing. It can be no Reflection on a Court, in which the Determination is made from Evidence, to plead the Caufe of that Innocency, which is proved by the after-difcover'd Falfity of fuch Evidence: Shame on the Folly or Malice that pretends it can, even though you, Fielding, have pretended it: nor has any thing been yet publish'd, more than what paffed publickly; for the Examinations before the Lord-Mayor have not been made in Corners.

This is a Digreffion, but the Infinuations of bad Men have made it neceffary. I shall return to the Relation. The pretty Innocent, such we should take her to be from the Story, tells us she was tempted strongly: she was promis'd fine Cloaths, if she would go their Way. This is the Account; and in the Name of Reason let us confider it. The Phrase is an odd and unnatural one; and the fine Cloaths were to be given. By whom? By one who hardly had a Ce-C 2 vering vering for herfelf, and in a Place where every thing fpoke Beggary: Unnatural, ridiculous, and abfurd!

There can be no Caufe affigned, why Men fhould drag her many Miles, or why Women lock her up to perifh, without the leaft Advantage, or the leaft Profpect of Advantage. I wifh it could be faid there appears no End for which all this might be pretended; although there could be none for which it fhould be done.

Did the prophetic Spirit of her Virtue forefee exactly the Length of her Confinement? How came the elfe to proportion, forit's plain she did proportion, her Eating to it? There is, indeed, no Reafon why the fhould not have forefeen it, fince the Duration was at her own Pleafure. There appears no Caufe why fhe did not make that Escape the first Night, which she effected on the last Day at Four in the Afternoon: and as it has been thought ftrange that no one opposed the Perfons in the Night in carrying her thither; I shall add, that I think it still more strange no one was let into the Story on her Return. Her Weakness might have made her complain; her Terror speak, and even her Countenance must have occasioned Question. People could could not be wanting to this Purpole; for fhe that could fet out in the Afternoon to walk from Enfield-Wash to London, must be met, over-taken, or seen, by many Hundred Persons: her Figure was singular enough to have drawn the Attention of some of these, her Aspect (as you describe it) of them All: The Story has been enough spoken of to bring such People to attest it, had there been any such; but if any have appeared, it has not come to my Knowledge.

Acts of Cruelty have been practis'd by Ruffians: I grant you fo much, mighty Reafoner! but there has been a Motive. the worft of them have never done it otherwife : Their own Safety is the Common Caufe, and Cowards are to a Proverb cruel. But here Men endanger'd, and not fecur'd their Safety, by the doing it; and had no End to anfwer when it was done. On the fame Principle, before we can believe the Women (who has been condemned) would have run the Hazard of her Confinement, when they knew an Efcape fo practicable, we muft expect to find fome Motives to their doing it.

The Cant of the Subscription was her Virtue, but there must have been a Face to stamp the Price on That: without it the ComCommodity's not marketable : Naked Virtue is of no Value unto the Sort of People thefe have been reprefented. Befides, had there been even this Temptation, the Gipfey, who is charged with the Crime, could not have any Intent to anfwer in the obtaining of the Sacrifice. She did not keep the Houfe; and it could not be in Friendship to Mrs. Wells, for they were Strangers.

The poor Girl left her Mother plump: This, Sir, is yourAccount, and this the Partridge-Phrafe by which you expressit. She returned you fay emaciated and black, this was on the 29th of Jan. and, on the 1ft of February, the went down to Endfield again : as you fay, again. Never were Transitions fo quick, as have been those of this miraculous Girl; for the was not black at this Time, upon this 1ft of February. A Day or two had made an amazing Change; for those who were prefent tell me, the was at that Time red and white like other People.

There was a Time, when even the warmest Advocates for the pretended Injur'd, gave up all Expectation of Credit from the Nature of the Story, and rested it upon the Weight of Evidence. I think, Sir, you was of the Number, and, for the Credit Credit of your Understanding, I hope you were : That Weight is taken off : that Evidence, it is confess'd, was Perjury. The Story now, therefore, stands on the Footing of its own Credibility ; and those who are the most violent in its Favour, have, in Effect, if not in Words, given it up as false : I hope they will do this in every Sense. Humanity, tho' mistaken in its Object, was a Plea sufficient in her Favour when they first countenanc'd her; but Humanity now changes Sides, and the Wretch, who pines under the Sentence, claims its Offices.

Let not the once deluded, and fince obstinate Men, conceive they will be fupported by the Teftimony of the Girl's coming Home in this emaciated Condition, of this black Colour, and with this Aspect of a putrid Carcafe: Let them enquire, whether this was the Condition in which the was first feen, and they will find it falfe : Let them ask themselves, and their own Reason, if a Creature, in such a State, could have walked Home; they will find it as abfurd as the reft of the wild Story : and there is as much Moral Certainty that it is falfe; invented by bad Men to ferve Purpofes; and countenanc'd by weak ones who believ'd it.

Tr

It does not appear, (unless her own contemptible Story can be believ'd) that she was confin'd any where, otherwise than by her own Confent: It is not true that she returned in this dreadful Condition; nor can it be true, that she could have supported can it be true, that fhe could have fupported Life till fhe arrived at it, and after that have walked ten Miles immediately, or have been carried as far fo very foon after it. That fhe was not confin'd where fhe fays, is clear beyond all Poffibility of Doubting, and there will remain not the leaft Thought of it, even among her beft Friends, as foon as the Proofs, now in the Lord Mayor's Hands, fhall appear: In the mean Time, I, who have feen them, fay it; and have, I hope, fome Right to be believ'd.

Where a Girl, like this, could be; and how employed during the time; is not difficult to imagine. 'Not with a Lover certainly, fay you! You would be happy; Sir, if all you beg fhould be allowed you. Not with a Lover, Sir! Eighteen, let me remind you, is a critical Age; and what would not a Woman do, that had made an Efcape, to recover her own Credit, and fcreen her Lover. I pretend to no Knowledge of this, as having been the Cafe with Refpect to the Girl of whom I fpeak; but; if we are to reafon, let us do it freely; and what appears fo likely? The The Defcription fhe gave of the Room in which fhe had been confined, is urged by you to juftify; but, Sir, that Circumftance alone ought to condemn her. Let me not be underftood to fpeak of that Defcription, which fhe gave after fhe had feen it: That Subterfuge may ferve for the Excufe of those who will be found to want it. But let us now enquire with better Judgment: Let us, Sir, appeal to that Account fhe gave before the fitting Alderman, by whom fhe was first examined; and we fhall find it countenance the worst that can be thought against her. Observe the Articles.

She defcribed it to be a dark Room; in which fhe lay upon the Boards; in which there was nothing except a Grate with a Gown in it; and a few PiEtures over the Chimney; from which fhe made her Efcape by forcing down fome Boards, and out of which fhe had before difcovered the Face of a Coachman, through certainCracks in the Side.

Let those who have seen the Room speak whether this was a Description of it. They will answer No. No, not in D any any one Particular. Far from being dark, there are two Windows in it. These have Casements which were unfastened, out at which she might have escaped, had she been confined in it; fo that pulling down of Boards to that Purpose could not be necessary : Out at these alfo, I suppose, she might have feen this Coachman, fo that the needed not to peep through Cracks. There was no Grate in the Chimney: fo that no body could have been guilty of this most housewifely Trick of putting a Gown in one: Nor were there any Pictures over it. Of the latter there was no Probability to be any, becaufe the House had no Profusion of Furniture, and And it this was a Room of Lumber: is palpable there could have been no Grate in the Chimney of a long Time; for the whole Expanse of it was found covered and overfpread with Cobwebs, the Work of many Generations of unmolested Spiders. Oh Providence that affifts in these Discoveries !

But though there was not what fhe faid fhe faw in the Chimney, there was about it, Sir, that which fhe must have feen, had fhe been there, and which, had fhe been there twenty-eight Days, fhe must have feen often enough to have remembered it; there there was a Cafement, put up over the Chimney to be out of the Way: and this not newly laid there, for it was also fixed to the Wall by Cobwebs of long Standing.

If this were all, Sir, is not this enough to prove the never was in the Place? But this is little to the reft. There was a Quantity of Hay, near half a Load, there : Surely too large a Matter to have been overlooked, and too important to have been forgotten : And there were a multitude of Things befides; fome if not all of which the muft have remembered; but not any one of all which the mentioned.

Some who went first down, Neighbours and Men of Credit, who went to countenance and to support her, had heard her Account of the Room, and when they faw it, were convinced that her Description did not at all belong to it: they gave her up, and they are to be found to fay fo. Some who were too officious, eager to have the Story true, because themselves believed it, got there before her also; these, when they had heard the Objections, rode back Part of the Way to meet her, and after some Conversation with her; after, for, if I may have D 2 Leave Leave to conjecture from the Circumstance, that is the least that can be supposed, asking her if there was not Hay there; that is, in Effect, after telling her there was, and that she should have said so; rode back, and, with Huzza's of Triumph, cried they were all right yet; for she faid now there was Hay in the Room. Was this or could it be an Evidence of Weight with the Impartial? The best Way to determine is to ask one's felf the Question. What would it have been to you who are now reading of it ?

But let me call up fairly the reft of your Arguments : You shall not fay I deal partially with you, by omitting any that seem to yourfelf of Importance; and you shall hear the World fay, so much I'll answer for them, that they are one as important and as conclusive as the other.

You have fuppofed the Girl not wicked enough to have devifed fuch a Deceit: That, God and her own Heart alone can tell; and neither you nor I have Right to judge of it. But you add, and this we both may judge of, That you do not fuppofe her witty enough to have invented the Story. I give you Joy, Sir, of your own own Wit, for thinking fo! I am very far from entertaining an high Opinion of the Girl's Intellects; but fuch as they are, I think the Story tallies with them: none but a Fool could have devifed fo bad a one.

You fay 'tis worthy of fome Writer of Romances. I love to hear Men talk in Character: no one knows better how much Wit is neceffary to the writing of fuch Books; and, to do Juffice to your laft Performance, no Man has proved more fully, with how fmall a Share of it, they may be written.

But I shall follow you through some more of these your supposed Improbabilities; and shew you they are all as probable as these. That she should fix upon a Place fo far from home, is one of them. That may have been the very Reason why she fixed upon it: To me it would have seemed much more strange, if she had fixed on one that was nearer. The farther off, the farther from Detection.

That Mrs. Wells's Houfe fhould be particularly hit upon feems ftrange to you. But Mrs. Wells's was a Houfe of evil Fame, and there was no other fuch about the NeighbourNeighbourhood : The Improbability must needs be, therefore, that of their fixing upon any other.

We are asked, How should she know this House, as she approached it ? No body ever heard that the did know it, as the approached : And for the famous Queftion, How fhe could, among a Number of People, fix upon the Gip/y whom the had particularly defcribed before, as the Perfon that had robbed her? The Anfwer is a very fatal and fevere one; it is that she had not particularly described her. before. It is palpable she never spoke of her even as a Gipfy, though no Woman ever poffeffed the Colour and the Character of that fingular People fo ftrongly: Nor had the given any particular Account of her Face ; which, had fhe ever feen it before, must have been remembered; for it is like that of no human Creature. The lower Part of it affected most remarkably by the Evil: The under Lip of an enormous Thickness; and the Nose such as never before stood in a mortal Countenance.

But

But thefe are Trifles: You'll give me up all thefe : I know you will; for you'll do every Thing you muft. You'll give all this and laugh at the Advantage. The Strength is yet behind : Thefe are the Outworks; but I shall overthrow your Citadel. This Evidence of Hall; you have referved to the End; and I have referved it too. Let us now state it fairly. I'll give it all the Strength you can defire; and when I have done so, I will shew you, but that's unneceffary; I'll explain to the World, how all its false Strength was derived to it. Let us here take it in the whole.

The Account of the Transaction, with respect to the Robbery, you argue must be true, because Canning and Hall relate it both alike. But all Men see how weak an Argument that is. I will not suppose Mr Fielding can be guilty of designing to impose upon the World in this or any Part of the Case which he has published; and therefore I will call it only a weak Argument. Let us consider the Circumstances under which these Accounts were procured, and we shall see they could not be otherwise than perfectly alike, even tho' they both were false.

We,

We, who fuppofe the Convict innocent, believe the Account of Canning to be a concerted Plan, long laboured, and well inculcated. That she should not vary herfelf in the relating it, will not therefore be wonderful: And I shall allow you Council! for you are not here acting in any other Character; that if the Evidence Hall had made a free and voluntary Confeffion, without Fear, and without Conftraint, and this Confession had in all Points confirmed the Account of the other; and if the had before known nothing of her Story; there would have been all the Argument and all the Weight in it that you would have us grant.

But let me afk you, Sir, for none know better than you do, were thefe the Circumftances of that Confeffion ? I need not afk you: Your Pamphlet contradicts it. She refufed to confefs any fuch thing, you tell us fo yourfelf, throughout fix Hours of ftrong Sollicitation, and fhe confented to do it at laft: Why? She fays, and you fay the fame, it was becaufe fhe was elfe to be profecuted as a Felon.

Let us fuppofe the Story as we think it : An innocent and an ignorant Creature faw Perjury Perjury strong against herself: She faw a Prison the immediate Consequence : She fupposed the Oaths that prevailed against her Liberty, though innocent, might alfo prevail against her Life, though innocent; and, to fave herfelf from the Effects of this Perjury, she submitted to support the Charge it made against others: Against those whom she supposed condemned without her Crime, and whom the thought too certain of Destruction to be injured by any thing fhe added.

That this was the Cafe, her own Account, that of the World, and even yours, concur to prove; nay, and the very Con-fequences prove it. If the had fworn the Truth at this Time, is it, or can it be fupposed, that, unawed and untempted (for I had no Authority, and the Lord Mayor has Testimony that he used none with her) is it to be fupposed that she would have gone . back from it to Falfhood? and that fhe would have done this at a Time when it might have been deftructive to herfelf; and when it could only tend to let loofe upon her those whom the had injured, and those whom the always affected at least to fear? Certainly the would not. There could be E in

in Nature no Motive to her doing it; and the most irrational do not act without some Impulse.

But let us ask the Question on the other Part! We shall then find it answered easily. Let us suppose we see, for 'tis most certain we do fee fuch a one, a Perfon who had beenawed by her Ignorance, and Fears, into fwearing a Falshood; after having first voluntarily declared, in the fame Cafe, that which was the Truth: we fee her confcious that, by that Oath, fhe had procured the Sentence of Death against a Person whom she knew to be innocent; and we shall not wonder at the Confequence. Who is there lives, fo abandoned, that he can fay he never felt a Pang of Confcience? The Ideot, the Atheist would in vain attempt to perfuade Men of it. Suppose what she had thus fworn to be false, as there are now a Multiplicity of Proofs that it all was falfe, what are we to imagine must be the Consequences ? Unquestionably, Terror, Anguish, and Remorfe; Wishes to speak, and Eagerness to do it. Where is the Wonder then that the should fnatch at the first Opportunity; that she should be perfuaded to do it, even by the most Uneloquent! Where the Wonder

Wonder that she should thus go back into that Truth which she had late denied; and when she had confessed the Perjury, declare and testify, for she did much more than declare it, her Heart at Ease from that which had been a Burden and a Diftrefs intolerable and infupportable.

This fhe declares to be the Fact; and what can be more natural? There is as much Face of Truth in her Recantation feen in this Light, as there would be Abfurdity if it were looked upon in another.

But their Informations, you repeat, are fo alike ! Sir, I must tell you, they are too like : why do not you alfo fee it ? Indeed the Term like is improper; they are not like, for they are in Effect the fame : And farther, which is an Observation that must fting fomewhere, though these their Informations are thus like, their Evidence upon the Tryal was not fo. That we may know whether these could be fo like without having a common Truth for their Foundation, let us examine into the Circumftances.

Had Virtue Hall ever heard the Story of Canning before the gave this Information ? For if she had, allowing it all to be false, she would assuredly make it like hers, by repeating the fame Circumstances. Let us enquire then, whether she had ever heard the Story? Yes, she had heard it many times. It appears by her Account, and by the Concurrence of all other Testimonies, that she had heard it from Canning's own Mouth at Enfield on the 1ft of February; on the fame Day alfo fhe fays fhe heard it, and undoubtedly fhe did, at Mr. Tyfhmaker's: For, eight Days after this, the Story of this Canning, as herfelf had repeated it now twice in the Hearing of this Hall, was published in the News-Papers, to raife Subscriptions. Hall can read; or, if the could not, the had Ears, and the must have heard this from all who came to her.

Now let us fee when 'twas fhe gave this weighty Information. 'Twas after all this Opportunity of knowing what it was Canning faid; 'twas on the fourteenth of February, and not before, that fhe was examined by Mr. Fielding. There, as himfelf informs us, fhe was under Examination from fix to twelve at at Night, and then, after many hard Struggles and ftout Denials, fuch are his own Words, fhe did, what? why fhe put her Mark to an Information; and fwore what it contained was true. What it contained was the fame that contained which had before been fworn by Canning. The fame Perfon drew both; and that not the Magiftrate, no, nor his Clerk: Who then ? why the Attorney who was engaged to manage the Profecution.

Now, Syllogift, where is your Argument! Can two Perfons who fwear the fame thing agree in all Particulars, and yet that thing be falfe? Yes certainly, if one has heard the other's Story. As certainly if the fame Hand drew up both the Informations, and both that fwear are perjured. This is the true State of the Queftion: You beg too much, as you have put it.

But let us fee how thefe, who agreed fo well in the written Informations, agreed in verbal Evidence. We shall find they did not coincide in that; and we shall find a Court of Justice is not satisfied with a few Questions.

Let

Let those who would know this examine the printed Tryal. They will, in that, find Canning fwearing that no body came into the Room all the time she was there, and that she found the Pitcher there: And they will find Hall swearing that the Pitcher was put into the Room three Hours afterward by the Gipfy. They will find tho' both agree in the Fact, yet a Difference in the Circumstances even of the Robbery: Canning swears the two Men took her Stays and went out, while she was yet below; but Hall swears this was done after she was put up into the Room.

These things, and things like these, I doubt not influenced that worthy Magistrate first to suspect the Truth, who has now proved the Falsity of both their Evidences. These things were not hidden, Sir, from you: How was it that you overlooked them when you wrote this Pamphlet? All I have urged you know; and knew before. You will find it will convince the World, why did it not take that Effect on you? Are you convinced now that you see it here? Speak freely; and answer to the World this one plain Question, Was it your Head, or what was it that played you false before?

None

None will wonder, Sir, that Informations thus taken, and under thefe Circumftances, fhould agree in all things, even though both were falfe; nor was it poffible for the Jury, on hearing the Evidence of both agreeing in general with thefe Informations, to do other than find the Accufed guilty. None wondered at it, nor will wonder: None were ever weak enough, or wicked enough, to reflect upon them. But although they faw nothing to contradict the Truth of all this Swearing, you did, and you acknowledge it: You acknowledge there came before you fomething to contradict it, and it deferved its Weight.

Canning's Story appeared improbable; all refted upon the Evidence of Hall: And there was given to you, against that Evidence, the Oath of Judith Natus, one not belonging to the Gipsies, and whom you have not any Reason to apprehend belonging to them; an honess Woman, Wife of an honess Labourer, who, with her Hufband, lay in the very Room, in which the Girl pretended to have been confined, during the whole time of that alledged Confinement. Here was the Evidence of a Perfon of honeft Character, and quite difinterefted, againft that of Virtue Hall, confeffed of bad Character, and deeply interefted. This Oath, Sir, you will find was Truth: It will be feen: It will be proved that it was fo, by Evidence the moft inconteftible. In the mean time, let me, in the Name of Virtue and Impartiality, afk the whole World whether this free Oath of an unconcerned Perfon, or the hardlyobtained Information of one who was interefted, and had the Alternative only of that Information or a Prifon, deferves the moft Refpect?

You afk, Sir, why this Woman, and with her this Hufband, were not produced upon the Tryal? You tell us you can give but one Anfwer to this, and that you conceal, Sir, I can give another, and it fhall ftand openly. The Reafon is a plain, and 'tis a dreadful one. They were fubpæna'd, and they were ready at the Court; but the Mob without-doors had been fo exafperated against all that should appear on the Part of the Accused, that they were prevented from getting in, and treated themselves like Criminals.

This

This is now known, notorioufly and generally known; nor is the Caufe a Secret. The Public were prejudiced in the moft unfairManner: nor the Public only. Printed Papers were handed about the Court at the time of the Tryal, calculated to enflame every body against the Accused; even those on whose Impartiality the public Justice was to depend. I do not suppose they took such Effect; but that this was the Design is plain. It was an Infolence unprecedented, and surely will never be again attempted.

If Means like thefe were used withindoors, we cannot doubt enough were employed without; nor wonder that those who could have proved the Innocence of the Accused were infulted, terrified, and driven away. 'Tis easy to know what must be the Fate of the Guiltless, when only those are to appear who accuse them.

Such is the State, and the exact State, of that Cafe, into which a Sufpicion of Mifinformation at first, a Confession of Perjury afterwards, and accumulated Proofs in Support of that Confession, have engaged the Lord Mayor of the City of London to F enquire enquire certainly in a virtuous and laudable Manner, even after the Tryal. The Enquiry has answered all his Lordship's Expectations; the Evidence is clear, and the Proof is full. But for this his impartial Enquiry, made for the fake of Justice only, he is attacked by Calumny and private Prejudice: The envious Hint he must be interested in it; while others, whose Honour is as far beneath his, as their Abilities are inferior, with the Convict guilty, that he may fink into an Equality. That Magistrate is too well informed of the Respect due to his Sovereign, not to lay all the Evidences first before him; afterwards the whole World will fee them: And it is on Certainty and Knowledge I fpeak, who now tell them, that, when they do fee them, they will be convinced at full.

In the mean time, it is not neceffary that others fhould be blamed. Those who are of the contrary Opinion maintain it, because they are ignorant what are the Proofs on which the Innocence of the Convict is supported. Every Magistrate who has enquired into the Story has a Right to Praise from the World for that Enquiry: he has a Right to this, and in Proportion, not to the Success, for that was not in his Hands, Hands, but to the Pains which he has taken, and the Impartiality by which he has been governed, in the Endeavour.

Those who set on foot the Contribution, engaged in it beyond a Doubt as an Act of Justice and of Virtue; it is most certain that they have had no other Motive: that they have been imposed on is as certain; but for that others must be answerable. If it were Justice to establish the Subscription, all was Charity and Benevolence in those who encouraged and promoted it; nor is their Generosity, the Motive to which is fo palpable and so noble, at all affected by the ill Use to which it might have been applied.

But while thefe all ftand not only excufed but applauded, there certainly is one to whom that Tribute is due in a fuperior Degree; and it fhall never be my Crime to mention the Tranfaction, and omit to pay it. While I fee the Lord Mayor in this juft and honourable Light, it gives me Pain to find thofe who are, in all Senfes of the Word fo vaftly his Inferiors, and you, Sir! moft of all, placing themfelves as it were on an Equality with him: and when I confider, for I know it is fo, that his F_2 LordLordship has, from no other Principle but Humanity and a Love of Justice, undertaken one of the most arduous Tasks that could have been imposed on Man; and this at his own private Expence, and by his own Labour and inconceivable Trouble : when I fee him compleating what fo good a Heart had defigned, by a Difcernment equal to his Candour, I own, and, as I am a Stranger and difinterested, I glory in owning it, I fee, with all that Indignation which Honefty conceives at the low Cunning of the Bafe and Wicked, Infinuations, for there are fuch Infinuations fpread, that foul and unjustifiable Practices have been used fince the Tryal. You, Mr. Fielding, among others, fay this: But I must tell those who invent, and those who can give Credit to it, that the Discernment of this honourable Magistrate is as much above being imposed on by fuch Artifices, as his Honour would be above encouraging them,

It gives me Pain, when I hear Men talk of this Side as their own, and of fome other as his Lordfhip's. He is of no Side or Party; nor has (fo I have heard him often fay, and fo I am convinced) the leaft Concern which way the Truth fhall be determined. His fole Endeavour has been to difcover discover it ; be it what, or where, or how it will: Nor can I hear, without Concern, you, of whole Understanding I would, for the Sake of the Public, with to think favourably; expressing a Defire that the Government' would appoint Perfons, capable and indifferent, fuch are your Terms, to enquire into the Matter. Who, Sir, are you, that are thus dictating unto the Government? Retire into yourself and know your Station! Who is more capable, or who more indifferent, than this generous Magistrate? Or has there been among the most violent and misguided of this Creature's Friends, any Man, for I will not suppose you could, but has there been any Man, who has dared to whifper to his own Heart a Thought that it were otherwife ?

To this 'tis fit to add, that his Lordfhip, as Supreme Magistrate of that Court in which the Caufe was tried, is the proper Perfon for this Examination : and that he has already finished it. Why should it then be supposed necessary, or why proper, to take the Cognizance of an Affair of this Importance, out of his Hands who has a Right to examine into it : or what would be the Justice, or what the Gratitude, of appointing appointing others to do that which he has done already; and for which he deferves, and for which he will receive, the univerfal Applause of Mankind!

What is the real Cafe, with respect to the Girl, Heaven and her own Confcience only; at least I hope they only, know. I have no Right to affert any Thing, nor do : and my Opinion cannot hurt her. There does appear to have been a Confpiracy, and a most foul and black one : It is poffible, at least, there may have been fuch; this her Friends must allow; and fhe who has certainly accufed, and perfecuted to the utmost, an innocent Person, whether it hath been ignorantly or defignedly, cannot expect the thall escape the That Squires is Guiltlefs is be-Sufpicion. yond all doubt: That Canning was not confined in the House of Wells is as much beyond all Poffibllity of doubting. She appears to have proceeded wilfully: but there is a Poffibility she may have done it ignorantly; and the World will be glad for her own Sake, that she could prove it a Mistake; horrible as it will appear even in that Confideration.

Thus ftands the whole : And upon this Foundation refts the Innocence of the unhappy Convict. What greater Proof can Innocence require ? What greater can it admit ! Who is there among ourfelves that might not, by the fame Artifice, have been accufed, and by the fame Evidence convicted of the Crime ? Or who is there, had he been fo accufed, that could have brought a fuller Proof of Innocence ? I cannot queftion, but that the Impartial will be convinced : But would all were impartial.

I thought the Public were clear in it before; but what is there fo fwift as Mifinformation? An Indisposition had shut me from the World a few Days, and at the End of that little Period, when I mixed among Men again, what a Change was there in their Opinions! I left them affured, and they had Right to be affured of it, of the Convict's Innocence : I find them full in the Belief that she is Guilty : but I do not wonder at this; nor can I blame the most resolute among them, when I hear the Foundations of the new Opinion. These Delufions, however, are not calculated for Duration: They ferve the Purpose till they are are exploded; and then who knows the Authors?

Men hear that all which has been told them, concerning the Convict's being in another Place at the Time of the alledged Robbery, has been fince difcovered to be falfe. I, who have told them all that related to the Attestation of her being fo, do now affure them, that there has been no fuch Difcovery. Nothing has happened to take one Grain from the Weight of any of those Evidences, on which I founded the Opinion ; but many, very many Things, to countenance, fupport, and prove their Truth. Falsities innumerable have been, indeed, devifed by the Interested, received by the Credulous, and propagated by the Malicious; but who is there to be found, that will himfelf atteft any the leaft Circumftance that they pretend?

There are Men, are there not, Mr. Fielding? who cannot bear the Glory this will foon bring, and ought to bring, to the great Magistrate who has discovered the Confpiracy. And these will swallow greedily all that they hear against it; and they will propagate that which they don't believe. lieve. There are Men, who have been deceived : Who now know they have been deceived ; but who are ashamed to own it. A foolifh Shame: The feeing the Delufion proved upon them, and it will foon be proved, will be much greater. Thefe will add to the Numbers that are bufy in fpreading every Breath of Falfehood : and I am forry to add, there may be fome who even on my Account will be as violent to blaft the Credit of all that has been doing. Though not confcious that I deferve to have one Enemy in the World, I am not ignorant that I have feveral; and fome of these are of that idle Kind who live in the meaner Coffeehouses, and spread Reports among the fucceffive Companies. These are a Sort of Men, who have not, on any other Occafion, appeared confiderable enough to me to justify the flightest Notice; but if their Violence and officious Malice can take any Thing from the Opinion, which the World had entertained of the Credibility of what I have published, defigning to be known the Author of it, on this Occafion; I shall for once be forry that even fuch Men were my Enemies.

To

To one or other of these Sets of Persons; all of them mean, wicked, or interested, have been owing the various Reports the World has heard within these few Days upon this Occasion: And not knowing from what Source they have sprung, Men have not known with what Contempt to treat them. The same short Answer stress for all I have heard; and I desire no other than to stand accountable to all who shall dispute that Answer.

I have been told, that the Lord Mayor had given up the Caufe, finding all Perjury that had been brought before him: There is no Truth in any Part of this. The Lord Mayor never altered his Opinion; he is convinced by Proof of what he first guessed from Reason: And his Lordship will, as soon as that is proper, convince all the World.

I have been told the Vicar of Abbot fbury is, or has been, in Town. There is no Truth in this. That he has contradicted what I have faid concerning him : Neither is there in this: On the contrary, he has certified it all in a Letter to a noble Lord, a Letter which you Mr. Fielding know of; and that noble Perfonage alfo countenances, by his Character of this Gentleman, all that his Conduct in the Matter had before fpoken in his Favour.

It has been faid that the Certificates and Affidavits in the Lord Mayor's Hands, fent up from Abbot fbury, and attested by this Gentleman, and by the Church-wardens and Overfeers of the Parish are forged. There is no Truth in this Report, nor the least Shadow of Foundation for it : They are confirmed. 'Tis faid the Letters from that Gentleman are forged: They also are authenticated. That the Church-wardens and Overfeers mentioned in those Papers are, or have been, in Town, and contradict the whole : This alfo is wholly untrue; not one of them either has been here, or has contradicted, by Letter, or any other way, any Part of that Evidence : All stands on the full Credit that it did. It has been faid, that an Excifeman, now in Town, whole Evidence is in itself fufficient, and is a new Teftimony of Truth in all the other's, had undergone a previous Examination by a Gentleman, whom they even dare to name, before he was feen by the Lord Lord Mayor : I have Authority from that Gentleman to declare, that this alfo is wholly falfe. And I, on Monday, heard the Man himfelf fay, he never faw him, till in the Lord Mayor's Prefence. It has been laftly faid, that the Recantation of Virtue Hall was not taken in a candid and fair Manner by the Lord Mayor himfelf. Where will Slander ftop, when it dares rife to this! All I have feen of that was perfectly fair, and moft particularly candid: And it was a happy Precaution the Lord Mayor ufed, never to fpeak with her alone.

These are the Stories I have heard; they are related boldly; and they are enough in Number. They are enough to plead in full Excuse for those which have been wavering in their Opinion; and they will be found enough to condemn their Authors, nay, and the busy Propagators of them too, to everlasting Ignominy.

No more can be declared at this Time than I have told; but I shall conclude this, as I have done the other Accounts which I have given of these Proceedings, with affuring those who pay me the Attention of reading it, it, that the Truth will appear, and that foon; under fuch Proof, as will do immortal Honour to the Magistrate who has difcovered it; will condemn to Shame and Confusion all who have difingenuously opposed it; and will at once, astonish, and convince the World.

For you, Mr. Fielding ! I have no Right to call your Behaviour as a Magistrate in Question; nor have I Abilities to judge of it: I have, therefore, no where alluded to it: But certainly your private Treatment of this Subject, both before and in your Pamphlet, merits the strongest Cenfure.
