Whose Knowledge?

We are a global campaign to center the knowledge of marginalized communities (the majority of the world) on the internet.

Our initiatives

Decolonizing the Internet
A two-day conference to discuss and strategize around decolonization, knowledge, and the internet.
Read more: https://whoseknowledge.org/reporting-back-from-dti-2018/

#VisibleWikiWomen
A campaign to illustrate Wikipedia with images of relevant women and to make them more visible both on Wikipedia and the broader internet.
Read more: https://whoseknowledge.org/journey-through-our-visiblewikiwomen-campaign/

Community Knowledge Sharing
We can only build an internet for everyone by working together with partners and allies. These are some of the community action groups we have partnered with and support:
> Dalit History Month
> Queer and Feminist Archives in Bosnia and Herzegovina
> Kumanya Native Americans on Wikipedia
Read more: https://whoseknowledge.org/initiatives/community-knowledge-sharing/

Our Principles

> We think of ourselves as a multi-year and multi-lingual global campaign that meets people where they’re at.
> We use a feminist anti-colonial framework that localizes and contextualizes the work.
> We use open source and open culture principles.
> We have a commitment to safety and security.

Contact us

Read about us in our website
https://whoseknowledge.org/
Follow us in Twitter @WhoseKnowledge
Visit our Facebook page https://facebook.com/WhoseKnowledge/
Email us info@whoseknowledge.org
... and sign-up for our newsletter!
https://whoseknowledge.org/join/