SEE, v. t. pret. saw; pp. seen. [Sax. seon, seogan, geseon; G. sehen; D. zien, pret. zag, saw; Dan. seer; Sw. see. This verb is contracted, as we know by the Eng. sight, Dan. sigt, G. gesicht, D. zigt, gezigt, Ch. סעק, סעק or סעק, to see. Class. Sig. No. 34. In G. besuchen is to visit, to see, and this is from suchen, which is the Eng. to seek, and to seek is to look for. In G. gesuch a suit, a seeking, demand, petition; and versuchen is to try; Eng. essay. We have then decisive evidence that see, seek, L. sequor, and Eng. essay, are all from the same radix. The primary sense of the root is to strain, stretch, extend; and as applied to see, the sense is to extend, to reach, to strike with the eye or sight.]

SEED, n. [Sax. seed; G. saat; D. zaud; Dan. seed; Sw. säd; from the verb säd; O. W. haid, Arin. had.]

1. The substance, animal or vegetable, which nature prepares for the reproduction and conservation of the species. The seeds of plants are a deciduous part, containing the rudiments of a new vegetable. In some cases, the seeds constitute the fruit or valuable part of plants, as in the case of wheat and other esculent grain; sometimes the seeds are inclosed in the fruit, as in apples and melons. When applied to animal matter, it has no plural.

2. That from which any thing springs; first principle; original; as the seeds of virtue or vice. Hooker.

3. Principle of production. Praise of great acts he scatters as a seed. Walter.

2. Having a peculiar flavor, supposed to be derived from the weeds growing among the vines; applied to French brandy. Eneye.

SEEING, ppr. [from see.] Perceiving by the eye; knowing; understanding; observing; beholding.

[Note. This participle appears to be used indefinitely, or without direct reference to a person or persons. "Wherefore come ye to me, seeing ye hate me?" Gen. xxvi. That is, since, or the fact being that or thus; because that. In this form of phraseology, that is understood or implied after seeing; why come ye to me, seeing that, ye hate me? The resolution of the phrase or sentence is, ye hate me; that fact being seen or known by you, why come ye to me? or, why come ye to me, seeing [knowing] that fact come ye to me, seeing [knowing] that fact which follows, viz. ye hate me. In this case, seeing retains its participial character, although its relation to the pronoun is somewhat obscure. Originally, seeing, in this use, had direct relation to the speaker or to some other person. "Now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son." Gen. xxii. Here seeing refers to I, or according to the language of syntax, agrees or accords with I. I know thou fearest God, for I see thou hast not withheld thine only son; I know thou fearest God by seeing, in consequence of seeing this fact, thou hast not withheld thine only son. But the use of seeing is extended to cases in which it cannot be referred to a specific person or persons, in which cases it expresses the notoriety or admission of a fact in general, and is left, like the French on, in the phrases on dit, on voit, without application to any particular person.]

SEEK, v. t. pret. and pp. sought, pronounced said. [Sax. secan, secan, to seek, to come to; aecan, to require; gesecean, to seek, to come to; forscan, forscanen, to forsake; G. suchen, to seek; absuchen, to pick off; besuchen, to visit, to see; gesuech, suit, petition; gesueche, a continued seeking; versuchen, to try, prove, tempt, essay, strive; versuch, trial, essay; D. zoeken, to seek, to look for, to try or endeavor; be-zoeken, to visit, to try; gezoek, a seeking; opzoeken, to seek; verzoeken, to request, desire, invite, try, tempt, to visit; Dan. søge, to seek, to endeavor; søger, to visit; forsøge, to try, to essay; to experiment, to tempt; opsøge, to seek or search after; Sw. söka, to seek, to sue, to court; söka en lagfigen, to sue one at law; besöka, to visit; försöka, to try, to essay, to tempt. These words all accord with L. sequor, Ir. seichim, to follow; for to seek is to go after, and the primary sense is to advance, to press, to drive forward, as in the L. peto. See Essay, from the same root, through the Italian and French. Now in Sax. forscan, forscanen, is to forsake; saecan is to strive, contend, whence English sake, and saecan, saecan, is to seek. But in Swedish, försöka, to forsake, to search after, is from seek, thence, cause, suit, sue, see, English sake; in Danish, forsøge, to renounce, is from sigor, to say; søg, a saying, cause, matter, suit; søgd, a saying; G. verzeagen, to deny, to renounce, from sigen, to say, to deny; D. verzoeken, to deny, to forsake, to revoke, from zoeken, thing, cause.

and zeggen is to say or tell, which is the Sax. segan, to say. These close affinities prove that seek, essay, say, and L. sequor, are all from one radix, coinciding with Cr. $\rho\sigma\tau$ to seek, to strive. Class Sg. No. 46. and see No. 30. Ar. The English verb see seems to be from the same root.

1. To go in search or quest of; to look for; to search for by going from place to place.

The man asked him, saying, what seekest thou? And he said, I seek my brethren. Gen. xxxvii.

2. To inquire for; to ask for; to solicit; to endeavor to find or gain by any means.

The young lions roar after their prey, and seek their meat from God. Ps. civ.

He found no place for repentance, though he sought it carefully with tears. Heb. xii.

Others tempting him, sought of him a sign. Luke xi.

3. Seek is followed sometimes by out or after. To seek out, properly implies to look for a specific thing among a number. But in general, the use of out and after with seek, is unnecessary and inelegant.

To seek God, his name, or his face, in Scripture, to ask for his favor, direction and assistance. Ps. lxxiii. lxxviii.

God seeks men, when he fixes his love on them, and by his word and Spirit, and the righteousness of Christ, reclains and recovers them from their miserable condition as sinners. Ezek. xxxiv. Ps. exix. Luke xv.

SEEM, v. i. [G. ziemen, to become, to be fit or suitable; geziemen, to become, to be seem, to be meet, decent, seemly. In D. ziemen is to be like, to resemble, and taemen is to fit or suit, to become. In Dan. seem is a seam, and sömmar, signifies to hem, and also to become, to be seem, to be suitable, decent or seemly. This is certainly the G. ziemen; hence we see that seem and seem are radically the same word; i. sembrare, to seem; sembiante, like, similar, resembling; rassemble, to resemble; Sp. semejir, to be like; Fr. sembler, to seem, to appear. These words seem to be of one family, having for their radical sense, to extend to, to meet, to unite, to come together, or to press together. If so, the Dutch taemen leads us to the oriental roots, Heb. Ch. Syr דמלל damal, to be like; Eth. ለደም adama, to please, to suit; Ar. د ا د ا د adama, to add, to unite to agree, to suit, to conciliate, to confirm concord. Class Dn. No. 5 and 7. These verbs are radically one, and in these we find the primary sense of Adam; likeness, or form.]

SELF, a. or pron. plu. selves is used chiefly in composition; [Sax. self, self; Goth. silva; Sw. self; Dan. selv; G. selbst; D. zelf. I know not the primary sense of this word; most probably it is to set or unite, or to separate from others. See Selvdge.]

1. In old authors, this word sometimes signifies particular, very, or same. "And on them self gear;" in that same year, that very year. Sax. Chron. A. D. 1052, 1061.

Shoot another arrow that self way. Shak.
On these self halls. Raleigh.

At that self moment enters Palamon. Dryden.

In this sense, self is an adjective, and is now obsolete, except when followed by same; as on the self-same day; the self-same hour; the self-same thing; which is tautology. Matt. viii.

2. In present usage, self is united to certain personal pronouns and prominent adjectives, to express emphasis or distinction; also when the pronoun is used reciprocally. Thus for emphasis, I myself will write; I will examine for myself. Thou thyself shalt go; thou shalt see for thyself. You yourself shall write; you shall see for yourself. He himself shall write; he shall examine himself. She herself shall write; she shall examine herself. The child itself shall be carried; it shall be present itself.

Reciprocally, I abhor myself; thou enrichest thyself; he loves himself; she admires herself; it pleases itself; we value ourselves; ye hurry yourselves; they see themselves. I did not hurt him, he hurt himself; he did not hurt me, I hurt myself.

Except when added to pronouns used reciprocally, self serves to give emphasis to the pronoun, or to render the distinction expressed by it more emphatical. "I myself will decide," not only expresses my determination to decide, but the determination that no other shall decide.

Himself, herself, themselves, are used in the nominative case, as well as in the objective.

Jesus himself baptized not, but his disciples. John iv. See Matt. xxiii. 4.

3. Self is sometimes used as a noun, noting the individual subject to his own contemplation or action, or noting identity of person. Consciousness makes every one to be what he calls self.

A man's self may be the worst fellow to converse with in the world. Pope.

4. It also signifies personal interest, or love of private interest; selfishness. The Indians we have for self—furnishes another long rank of prejudices. Watts. Self is much used in composition.

The primary sense is to deliver, send or transfer, or to put off. The sense of sell, as we now understand the word, is wholly derivative; as we see by the Saxon phrases, syllan to ageane, to give for one's own; syllan to gaffe, to bestow for a gift, to bestow or confer gratis.]

1. To transfer property or the exclusive right of possession to another for an equivalent in money. It is correlative to buy, as one party buys what the other sells. It is distinguished from exchange or barter, in which one commodity is given for another; whereas in selling the consideration is money, or its representative in current notes. To this distinction there may be exceptions. "Esau sold his birthright to Jacob for a mess of pottage." But this is unusual. If servus originally was a slave, he was probably so named from being preserved and taken prisoner in war, or more probably from being bound, and perhaps from the Schemitic רָשָׁרַב , to bind. It is found however that most plants are hermaphrodite, the male and female organs being contained in the same flower. In Norfolk, shack extends to the common for hogs, in all men's grounds, from harvest to seed-time; whence to go a-shack, is to feed at large. Encyc.

The Gr. σκια is probably the same word contracted, and perhaps σκιος, darkness. In the sense of cutting off or separating, this word coincides exactly, as it does in elements, with the G. schneiden, L. scindo, for scido, which is formed on cedo, to strike off. Hence Sax. gesecead, distinction, L. scutum, a shield, Sp. escudo; that which cuts off or intercepts. Owen deduces the Welsh word from caed, something that incloses; but probably the sense is that which cuts off or defends.]

- Literally, the interception, cutting off or interruption of the rays of light; hence, the obscurity which is caused by such interception. Shade differs from shadow, as it implies no particular form or definite limit; whereas a shadow represents in form the object which intercepts the light. SHAL, } v. i. Verb auxiliary. pret. shald.

SHALL, } verb auxiliary, scylan, to be obliged. It coincides in signification nearly with ought, it is a duty, it is necessary; D. sal, sul; G. soll; Sw. skola, pret. skulle; Dan. skal, skulde. The German and Dutch have lost the palatal letter of the verb; but it appears in the derivative G. schuld, guilt, fault, culpability, debt; D. schuld, id.; Sw. skuld, Dan. skyld, debt, fault, guilt; skylder, to owe; Sax. scyld, debt, offense, L. scelus. The literal sense is to hold or be held, hence to owe, and hence the sense of guilt, a being held, bound or liable to justice and punishment. In the Teutonic dialects, schulden, skyld, are used in the Lord's prayer, as "forgive us our debts," but neither debt nor trespass expresses the exact idea, which includes sin or crime, and liability to punishment. The word seems to be allied in origin to skill, L. callo, to be able, to know. See Skil. Shall is defective, having no infinitive, imperative or participle. It ought to be written shat, as the original has one l only, and it has one only in shalt and should.]

1. Shall is primarily in the present tense, and in our mother tongue was followed by a verb in the infinitive, like other verbs. "Ic sceal from the bron gefildon." I have need to be baptized of thee. Matt. iii.

"Ic ne secol singan sa-cwilda." I must now sing unworldly songs. Boethius.

We still use shall and should before another verb in the infinitive, without the sign to; but the signification of shall is considerably deflected from its primitive sense. It is now treated as a mere auxiliary to other verbs, serving to form some of the tenses. In the present tense, shall, before a verb in the infinitive, forms the future tense; but its force and effect are different with the different persons or personal pronouns. Thus in the first person, shall simply foretells or declares what will take place; as, I or we shall ride to town on Monday. This declaration simply informs another of a fact that is to take place. The sense of shall here is changed from an expression of need or duty, to that of previous statement or information, grounded on intention or resolution. When uttered with emphasis, "I shall go," it expresses firm determination, but not a promise.

2. In the second and third persons, shall implies a promise, command or determination. "You shall receive your wages," "he shall receive his wages," imply that you or he ought to receive them; but usage gives to these phrases the force of a promise in the person uttering them.

When shall is uttered with emphasis in such phrases, it expresses determination in the speaker, and implies an authority to enforce the act. "Do you refuse to go? Does he refuse to go? But you or he shall go."

3. Shall I go, shall he go, interrogatively, asks for permission or direction. But shall you go, asks for information of another's intention.

4. But after another verb, shall, in the third person, simply foretells. He says that he shall leave town to-morrow. So also in the second person; you say that you shall ride to-morrow.

5. After if, and some verbs which express condition or supposition, shall, in all the persons, simply foretells; as,

{ I shall say, or we shall say,
If } Thou shalt say, ye or you shall say,
{ He shall say, they shall say.

6. Should, in the first person, implies a conditional event. "I should have written a letter yesterday, had I not been interrupted." Or it expresses obligation, and that in all the persons.

I should, } have paid the bill on demand; it was my duty.
Thou shouldst, }
I should, } your duty, his duty to
You should, } pay the bill on demand, but it was not paid.

7. Should, though properly the past tense of shall, is often used to express a contingent future event; as, if it should rain to-morrow; if you should go to London next week; if he should arrive within a month. In like manner after though, grant, admit, allow.

An English silver coin equal to twelve pence, or the twentieth part of a pound. The English shilling, or shilling sterling, is equivalent nearly to 22 cents, 22 hundredths, money of the United States. Our ancestors introduced the name with the coin into this country, but by depreciation the value of the shilling sunk in New England and Virginia one fourth, or to a fraction less than 17 cents, in New York to 12 cents, in Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Maryland to about 11 cents.

This denomination of money still subsists in the United States, although there is no coin of that value current, except the Spanish coin of 12 cents, which is a shilling in the money of the state of New York. In the United States, the corresponding division of a state is called a county, but we retain shire in the compound half-shire; as when the county court is held in two towns in the same county alternately, we call one of the divisions a half-shire.

In some states, shire is used as the constituent part of the name of a county, as Berkshire, Hampshire, in Massachusetts. a fortified place for the purpose of compelling the garrison to surrender; or the from a blockade, as in a siege the in-place to attack and reduce it by force; but in a blockade, the army secures all the avenues to the place to intercept all supplies, and waits till famine compels the

SIGH, n. A single deep respiration; a long breath; the inhaling of a larger quantity of air than usual, and the sudden emission of it. This is an effort of nature to dilate the lungs and give vigor to the circulation of the blood, when the action of the heart and arteries is languid from grief, depression of spirits, weakness or want of exercise. Hence sighs are indications of grief

SIGN, n. sine. [Fr. signe; It. segno; Sp.
seña; L. signum; Sax. segen; Arm. seghn, syn; H. signin; G. zeichen; Sans. signa.
From the last three words it appears that n is not radical; the elements being sig.
If so, and the G. zeichen is of this family, then we learn that sign is only a dialectical orthography of token, for zeichen in the D. tecken, Dan. tegn, Sw. tecken, coinciding perhaps with Gr. δεικνυμαι.]

1. A token; something by which another thing is shown or represented; any visible thing, any motion, appearance or event which indicates the existence or approach of something else. Thus we speak of signs of fair weather or of a storm, and of external marks which are signs of a good constitution.

The signs are reckoned from the point of intersection of the ecliptic and equator at the vernal equinox, and are named respectively, Aries, Taurus, Gemini, Cancer, Leo, Virgo, Libra, Scorpio, Sagittarius, Capricornus, Aquarius, Pisces. These names are borrowed from the constellations of the zodiac of the same denomination, which were respectively comprehended within the foregoing equal divisions of the ecliptic, at the time when those divisions were first made; but on account of the precession of the equinoxes, the positions of these constellations in the heavens no longer correspond with the divisions of the ecliptic of the same name, but are considerably in advance of them. Thus the constellation Aries, is now in that part of the ecliptic called Taurus.

11. In algebra, a character indicating the relation of quantities, or an operation performed by them; as the sign + plus prefixed to a quantity, indicates that the quantity is to be added; the sign - minus, denotes that the quantity to which it is prefixed is to be subtracted. To sign one's name, is to write or subscribe it on the paper. Signing does not now include sealing.

2. To signify; to represent typically. [Not in use.] Taylor.

SIGN, v. i. To be a sign or omen. [Not in use.] Shak.

SIGNAL, n. [Fr. signal; Sp. señal; from L. signum.]

A sign that gives or is intended to give notice; or the notice given. Signals are used to communicate notice, information, orders and the like, to persons at a distance, and by any persons and for any purpose. A signal may be a motion of the hand, the raising of a flag, the firing of a gun, or any thing which, being understood by persons at a distance, may communicate notice.

Signals are particularly useful in the navigation of fleets and in naval engagements. There are day-signals, which are usually made by the sails, by flags and pennants, or guns; night-signals, which are lanterns disposed in certain figures, or false fires, rockets, or the firing of guns; fog-signals, which are made by sounds, as firing of guns, beating of drums, ringing of bells, &c. There are signals of evolution, addressed to a whole fleet, to a division, or to a squadron; signals of movements to particular ships; and signals of service, general or particular. Signals used in an army are mostly made by a particular beat of the drum, or by the bugle.

In large volumes, the signatures are sometimes composed of letters and figures; thus 5A, 5B. But some printers now use figures only for signatures.

The signification of words is originally arbitrary, and is dependent on usage. But when custom has annexed a certain sense to a letter or sound, or to a combination of letters or sounds, this sense is always to be considered the signification which the person using the word intends to communicate.

A general or an admiral signifies his commands by signals to officers at a distance.

1. The voluntary departure of a moral agent from a known rule of rectitude or duty prescribed by God; any voluntary transgression of the divine law, or violation of a divine command; a wicked act; iniquity. Sin is either a positive act in which a known divine law is violated, or it is the voluntary neglect to obey a positive divine command, or a rule of duty clearly implied in such command. Sin comprehends not actions only, but neglect of known duty, all evil thoughts, purposes, words and desires, whatever is contrary to God's commands or law. 1 John iii.

Matt. xv. James iv.

Sinners neither enjoy the pleasures of sin nor the peace of piety. Rob. Hall.

Among divines, sin is original or actual. Actual sin, above defined, is the act of a moral agent in violating a known rule of duty. Original sin, as generally understood, is native depravity of heart; that want of conformity of heart to the divine will, that corruption of nature or deterioration of the moral character of man, which is supposed to be the effect of Adam's apostasy; and which manifests itself in moral agents by positive acts of disobedience to the divine will, or by the voluntary neglect to comply with the express commands of God, which require that we should love God with all the heart and soul and strength and mind, and our neighbor as ourselves. This native depravity or alienation of affections from God and his law, is supposed to be what the apostle calls the carnal mind or mind-fulness, which is enmity against God, and is therefore denominated sin or infulness. Unpardonable sin, or blasphemy against the Holy Spirit, is supposed to be a malicious and obstinate rejection of Christ and the gospel plan of salvation, or a contemptuous resistance made to the influences and convictions of the Holy Spirit. Matt. xii.

2. A sin-offering; an offering made to atone for sin.

He hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin. 2 Cor. v.

3. A man enormously wicked. [Not in use.] Shak.

SIN differs from crime, not in nature, but in application. That which is a crime against society, is sin against God.

SIN, v. t. [Sax. singian, syngian.] To depart voluntarily from the path of duty prescribed by God to man; to violate the divine law in any particular, by actual transgression or by the neglect or non-observance of its injunctions; to violate any known rule of duty.

It is followed by against. Against thee, they only, have I sinned. Ps. li.

2. To offend against right, against men or society; to trespass.

I am a man More sinned against than sinning. Shak.

SINAPISM, n. [L. sinapis, sinape, mustard, G. senf, Sax. scnep.]

In pharmacy, a cataplasm composed of mustard seed pulverized, with some other ingredients, and used as an external application. It is a powerful stimulant. Encyc.

SINCE, prep. or adv. [Sw. sedan; Dan. siden; D. sint; supposed to be contracted from Sax. siththan, which is from sithkan, to pass, to go; and siththan may be the participle, and denote past, gone, and hence after, afterward. Sith in Saxon, has a like sense. Our early writers used sith, sithen, sithence; the latter is evidently a corruption of siththan. It may be doubted whether Sw. sen, Dan. seen, slow, late, is a contraction of this word; more probably it is not.]

1. After; from the time that. The proper signification of since is after, and its appropriate sense includes the whole period between an event and the present time. I have not seen my brother since January.

The Lord hath blessed thee, since my coming. Gen. xxx.

—Holy prophets, who have been since the world began. Luke i. John iv.

Since then denotes, during the whole time after an event; or at any particular time during that period.

2. Ago; past; before this. "About two years since, an event happened," that is, two years having passed.

3. Because that; this being the fact that. Since truth and constancy are vain, since neither love nor sense of pain Nor force of reason can persuade, Then let example be obey'd. Granville.

Since, when it precedes a noun, is called a preposition, but when it precedes a sentence it is called an adverb. The truth is, the character of the word is the same in both cases. It is probably an obsolete participle, and according to the usual classification of words, may be properly ranked with the prepositions. In strictness, the last clause of the passage above cited is the case absolute. "The Lord hath blessed thee, since my coming," that is, my arrival being past. So, since the world began, is strictly past the world began, the beginning of the world being past. In the first case, since, considered as a preposition, has coming, a noun, for its object, and in the latter case, the clause of a sentence. So we say, against your arrival, or against you come.

Sw. skilla, Dan. skiller, to divide, sever, part; whence skild, that which separates, and hence that which protects or defends; D. schelen, to differ; schillen, to peel or pare. Scale is from the root of these words, as in shell, Sax. scyl, scæl. In Heb. כָּלַל is foolish, perverse, and as a verb, to pervert, to be foolish or perverse; in Ch. to understand or consider, to look, to regard, to cause to know, whence knowledge, knowing, wise, wisdom, understanding; Rab. to be ignorant or foolish; Syr. to be foolish, to wander in mind, also to cause to understand, to know, to perceive, to discern, also to err, to do wrong, to sin, to be in error; whence foolish, folly, ignorance, error, sin, and understanding. Sam. to be wont or accustomed, to look or behold. The same verb with שׁ, Heb. שָׂלַל signifies to understand, to be wise, whence wisdom, understanding, also to waste, to scatter or destroy, to bereave, also to prosper; Ch. to understand; to שָׂלַל to complete, to perfect; to כָּלַל with a prefix. This signifies also to found, to lay a foundation; Syr. to found, also to finish, complete, adorn, from the same root; Ar. كَمَلَ كَمَالًا, to hind or tie, whence Eng. shackles; also to be dark, obscure, intricate, difficult, to form, to make like, to be of a beautiful form, to know, to be ignorant, to agree, suit or become. These verbs appear to be formed on the root כָּל, כָּלַל to hold or restrain, which coincides in signification with the Ch. Eth. כָּלַל to be able, L. calleo, that is, to strain, stretch, reach, and with לָלַל to perfect, that is, to make sound, or to reach the utmost limit. The sense of folly, error, sin, perverseness, is from wandering, deviation, Gr. σκαλος; the sense of skill and understanding is from separation, discernment, or from taking, holding or reaching to, for strength and knowledge are allied, and often from tension. The sense of ignorance and error is from wandering or deviation, or perhaps it proceeds from a negative sense given to the primary verb by the prefix, like ex in Latin, and s in Italian. The Arabic sense of binding and shackles is from straining. The Eng. shell and should belong to this family.]

In all bodies there is an appetite of union and aversion of solution of continuity.

2. The operation or process of dissolving or melting in a fluid; as the solution of sugar or salt.

[Note.—This word is not used in chemistry or mineralogy for the dissolution or melting of bodies by the heat of fire.]

The term solution is applied to a very extensive class of phenomena. When a solid disappears in a liquid, if the compound exhibits perfect transparency, we have an example of solution. The word is applied both to the act of combination and to the result of the process. Thus common salt disappears in water, that is, its solution takes place, and the liquid obtained is called a solution of salt in water. Solution is the result of attraction or affinity between the fluid and the solid. This affinity continues to operate to a certain point, where it is overbalanced by the cohesion of the solid; it then ceases, the fluid is said to be saturated, the point where the operation ceases is called saturation, and the fluid is called a saturated solution.

Solution is a true chemical union. Mixture is a mere mechanical union of bodies.

STAND, v.i. pret. and pp. stood. [Sax. Goth. standan. This verb, if from the root of G. stehen, D. stanen, Dan. staer, Sw. stå, Sans. sta, sta, is a derivative from the noun, which is formed from the participle of the original verb. In this case, the noun should properly precede the verb. It may be here remarked that if stan is the radical word, stand and L. sto cannot be from the same stock. But stand in the pret. is stood, and sto forms steti. This induces a suspicion that stan is not the root of stand, but that n is casual. I am inclined however to believe these words to be from different roots. STEAM, n. [Sax. steam, stem; D. stoom.] The vapor of water; or the elastic, aeriform fluid generated by heating water to the boiling point. When produced under the common atmospheric pressure, its elasticity is equivalent to the pressure of the atmosphere, and it is called low steam; but when heated in a confined state, its elastic force is rapidly augmented, and it is then called high steam. On the application of cold, steam instantly returns to the state of water, and thus forms a sudden vacuum. From this property, and from the facility with which an elastic force is generated by means of steam, this constitutes a mechanical agent at once the most powerful and the most manageable, as is seen in the vast and multiplied uses of the steam engine.

Steam is invisible, and is to be distinguished from the cloud or mist which it forms in the air, that being water in a microcondensation of steam. D. Olmsted.

The principle of the steelyard is that of the lever; where an equilibrium is produced, when the products of the weights on opposite sides into their respective distances from the fulcrum, are equal to one another. We see that strike, stroke and streak, and the L. stringo, whence strain, strick, stricture &c., are all radically one word. Strong is of the same family. often the sense of thrusting. It is to touch or graze with a sweeping or stroke. Hence our sense of striking a measure of grain, and strike, strike, and a stroke of the pencil in painting. Hence the use of stricken, applied to age, worn with age, as in the L. strigo, the same word differently applied. Hence also we see the propriety of the use of stricture, applied to criticism. 1. A well known substance manufactured chiefly from the sugar cane, arundo saccharifera; but in the United States, great quantities of this article are made from the sugar maple; and in France, a few years since, it was extensively manufactured from the beet. The saccharine liquor is concentrated by boiling, which expels the water; it is usually present; the grosser impurities rise to the surface, and are separated in the form of scum; and finally as the liquor cools, the sugar separates from the melasses in grains. The sirup or melasses is drained off, leaving the sugar in the state known in commerce by the name of raw or muscovado sugar. This is further purified by means of clay, or more extensively by bullocks' blood, which forming a coagulum, envelops the impurities. Thus clarified, it takes the names of lamp, leaf, refined, &c. according to the different degrees of purification. Sugar is a proximate element of the vegetable kingdom, and is found in most ripe fruits, and many farinaceous roots. By fermentation, sugar is converted into alcohol, and hence forms the basis of those substances which are used for making intoxicating liquors, as melasses, grapes, apples, malt, &c.

The ultimate elements of sugar are oxygen, carbon and hydrogen. Of all vegetable principles, it is considered by Dr. Rush as the most wholesome and nutritious.

SWARE, n. A copper coin and money SWARE, n. [n.] A copper coin in Bremen, value one fifth of a groat, and 72 groats make a thaler, [dollar.]

SWARM, n. swarm. [Sax. swærm; G. schwarm; D. zweerm; Dan. swærm; Sw. swærm.] This seems to be formed on the root of swarm. The Sp. hervir, to boil, to swarm, is the L. fervere, and boiling is very expressive of the notions of a swarm of bees. See the Verb.

1. In a general sense, a large number or body of small animals or insects, particularly when in motion; but appropriately, a great number of honey bees which emigrate from a hive at once, and seek new lodgings under the direction of a queen; or a like body of bees united and settled permanently in a hive. The bees that leave a hive in spring, are the young bees produced in the year preceding. Ex. viii. Judges xiv.

2. A swarm or multitude; particularly, a multitude of people in motion. Swarms of northern nations overran the south of Europe in the fifth century.

NOTE.—The application of this word to inanimate things, as swarms of advantages, by Shakespeare, and swarms of theses, by Young, is not legitimate, for the essence of the word is motion.

4. To breed multitudes. [Milton.]

NOTE.—This, by the common people in New England, is pronounced squirm or squirm, and it is evidently formed on sworm, indicating that sworm and swarm, on which swarm and squirm are formed, are radically the same word. The primary sense is to bend, wind, twist, as a worm, or a swarm of bees. It may be formed on the root of teer, tory.

syllable may consist of a combination of consonants, with one vowel or diphthong, as strong, short, camp, voice.

A syllable sometimes forms a word, and is then significant, as in go, run, vert, sun, moon. In other cases, a syllable is merely part of a word, and by itself is not significant. Thus ac, in active, has no significance.

Monosyllable, a word of one syllable.
 Disyllable, a word of two syllables.
 Trisyllable, a word of three syllables.

A form of reasoning or argument, consisting of three propositions, of which the two first are called the premises, and the last the conclusion. In this argument, the conclusion necessarily follows from the premises; so that if the two first propositions are true, the conclusion must be true, and the argument amounts to demonstration. Thus,

A plant has not the power of locomotion;

An oak is a plant;

Therefore an oak has not the power of locomotion.

These propositions are denominated the major, the minor, and the conclusion.

T.

T is the twentieth letter of the English Alphabet, and a close consonant. It represents a close joining of the end of the tongue to the roof of the upper teeth, as may be perceived by the syllables at, et, ut, in attempting to pronounce which, the voice is completely intercepted. It is therefore numbered among the mutes, or close articulations, and it differs from d chiefly in its closeness; for in pronouncing ad, ed, we perceive the voice is not so suddenly and entirely intercepted, as in pronouncing at and et. T by itself has one sound only, as in take, turn, bat, bold, smite, bitter. So we are accustomed to speak; but in reality, t can be hardly said to have any sound at all. Its use, like that of all mute articulations, is to modify the manner of uttering the vocal sound which precedes or follows it.

When t is followed by h, as in think and that, the combination really forms a distinct sound for which we have no single character. This combination has two sounds in English; aspirated, as in think, and vocal, as in that.

The letters t, before a vowel, and unaccented, usually pass into the sound of th, as in nation, motion, partial, substantiate; which are pronounced nashon, mashon, parshal, subshanshate. In this case, t loses entirely its proper sound or use, and being blended with the subsequent letter, a new sound results from the combination, which is in fact a simple sound. In a few words, the combination th has the sound of the English ch, as in Christian, mixture, question.

T is convertible with d. Thus the Germans write tae, where we write day, and gut, for good. It is also convertible with s and z, for the Germans write wasser, for water, and zahn, for tooth.

T, as an abbreviation, stands for theologia; as, S. T. D. sancte theologiae doctor, doctor of divinity. In ancient monuments and writings, T is an abbreviature, which stands for Titus, Tilius or Tullius.

As a numeral, T, among the Latins, stood for 160, and with a dash over the top, T, for 160,000.

Encyc.

In music, T, is the initial of tenor, vocal and instrumental; of tacet, for silence, as adagio tacet, when a person is to rest during the whole movement. In concertos and symphonies, it is the initial of tutti, the whole band, after a solo. It sometimes stands for tr. or trillo, a shake.

We see by the Gothic dialects that n is not radical. To ascertain the primary sense, let us attend to its compounds; G. abdanken, [which in English would be thank] to dismiss, discharge, discard, send away, put off to disband or break, as an officer; verdanken, to owe or be indebted; D. afdancken, to cashier or discharge. These senses imply a sending. Hence thank is probably from the sense of giving, that is, a render or return.]

THAT, an adjective, pronoun or substitute. [Sax. that; Goth. thata; D. dat; G. das; Dan. det; Sw. det. Qu. Gr. ταυτος. This word is called in Saxon and German, an article, for it sometimes signifies the. It is called also in Saxon a pronoun, equivalent to id, istud, in Latin. In Swedish and Danish it is called a pronoun of the neuter gender. But these distinctions are groundless and of no use. It is probably from the sense of setting.]

1. That is a word used as a definitive adjective, pointing to a certain person or thing before mentioned, or supposed to be understood. "Here is that book we have been seeking this hour." "Here goes that man we were talking of."

It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city. Matt. x.

2. That is used definitively, to designate a specific thing or person elliptically.

The woman was made whole from that hour. Matt. ix.

In these cases, that is an adjective. In the two first examples, the may be substituted for it. "Here is the book we have been seeking." "Here goes the man we were talking of." But in other cases, the cannot supply its place, and that may be considered as more emphatically definitive than the.

3. That is used as the representative of a noun, either a person or a thing. In this use, it is often a pronoun and a relative. When it refers to persons, it is equivalent to who, and when it refers to a thing, it is equivalent to which. In this use, it represents either the singular number or the plural.

He that reproth a sinner, getteth to himself shame. Prov. ix.

They that hate me without a cause, are more than the hairs of my head. Ps. lxxiii.

A judgment that is equal and impartial, must incline to the greater probabilities. Witkins. They shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend. Matt. xiii.

4. That is also the representative of a sentence or part of a sentence, and often of a series of sentences. In this case, that is not strictly a pronoun, a word standing for a noun; but is, so to speak, a pro-sentence, the substitute for a sentence, to save the repetition of it.

And when Moses heard that, he was content. Lev. x.

That here stands for the whole of what Aaron had said, or the whole of the preceding verse.

I will know your business, that I will. Shak. Ye delect, and that you brethren. 1 Cor. v.

That sometimes in this use, precedes the sentence or clause to which it refers.

That be far from thee, to do after the manner, to stay the righteous with the wicked. Gen. xviii.

That here represents the clause in italics.

5. That sometimes is the substitute for an adjective. You allege that the man is innocent; that he is not.

6. That, in the following use, has been called a conjunction. "I heard that the Greeks had defeated the Turks." But in this case, that has the same character as in No. 1. It is the representative of the part of the sentence which follows, as may be seen by inverting the order of the clauses.

"The Greeks had defeated the Turks; I heard that." "It is not that I love you less." That here refers to the latter clause of the sentence, as a kind of demonstrative.

7. That was formerly used for that which, like what.

We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen. John iii.

[This use is no longer held legitimate.]

8. That is used in opposition to this, or by way of distinction.

If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this or that. James iv.

9. When this and that refer to foregoing words, this, like the Latin hic, and French ceci, refers to the latter, and that to the former. It is the same with these and those.

Self-love and reason to one end aspire, Pain their aversion, pleasure their desire, But greedy that, its object would devour, This taste the honey, and not wound the Pope.

10. That sometimes introduces an explanation of something going before. "Religion consists in living up to those principles; that is, in acting in conformity to them." Here that refers to the whole first clause of the sentence.

11. "Things are preached, not in that they are taught, but in that they are published." Here that refers to the words which follow it.

So when that begins a sentence. "That we may fully understand the subject, let us consider the following propositions." That denotes purpose, or rather introduces the clause expressing purpose, as will appear by restoring the sentence to its natural order. "Let us consider the following propositions, that, [for the purpose expressed in the following clause,] we may fully understand the subject." "Attend that you may receive instruction." Here also that expresses purpose elliptically; "attend for the purpose that, you may receive instruction;" that referring to the last member.

In that, a phrase denoting consequence, cause or reason; that referring to the following sentence.

THATCH, n. [Sax. thach, connected with theacan, theacan, to cover, L. tego, Eng. deck; G. deck, a roof; D. dak; Sw. tak; Dan. tag, take; Gaelic. tughe, tuighte. The primary sense is to put on, to spread over or make close.]

THEIR, a. pronoun. [Sax. hiaro; Ice. theira.]

Their has the sense of a pronominal adjective, denoting of them, or the possession of two or more; as their voices; their garments; their houses; their land; their country.

2. Theirs is used as a substitute for the adjective and the noun to which it refers, and in this case, it may be the nominative to a verb. "Our land is the most extensive, but theirs is the best cultivated." Here theirs stands as the representative of their land, and is the nominative to is.

Nothing but the name of zeal appears Twixt our best actions and the worst of theirs. Denham.

In this use, theirs is not in the possessive case, for then there would be a double possessive.

THEISM, n. [from Gr. theos, God.] The belief or acknowledgment of the existence of a God, as opposed to atheism. Theism differs from deism, for although deism implies a belief in the existence of a God, yet it signifies in modern usage a denial of revelation, which theism does not.

THEMSELVES, a compound of them and selves, and added to they by way of emphasis or pointed distinction. Thus we say, they themselves have done the mischief; they cannot blame others. In this case, themselves is in the nominative case, and may be considered as an emphatical pronoun.

In some cases, themselves is used without they, and stands as the only nominative to the following verb. Themselves have done the mischief.

This word is used also in the objective case after a verb or preposition. Thing in themselves innocent, may under certain circumstances cease to be so.

THINE, pronominal adj. [Goth. theins, theina; Sax. thin; G. dein; Fr. tien; probably contracted from thigen. See Thou.]

Thy; belonging to thee; relating to thee; being the property of thee. It was formerly used for thy, before a vowel.

Then thou mightest eat grapes thy fill, at thine own pleasure. Deut. xxxi.

But in common usage, thine is now used before a vowel in all cases.

The principal use of thine now is when a verb is interposed between this word and the noun to which it refers. I will not take any thing that is thine. Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory.

In the following passages, thine is used as a substitute for thy righteousness.

I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only. Ps. lxxi.

In some cases, it is preceded by the sign of the possessive case, like nouns, and is then also to be considered as a substitute.

If any of thee be driven out to the utmost parts of heaven— Deut. xxx.

It is to be observed that thine, like thou, is used only in the solemn style. In familiar and common language, your and yours are always used in the singular number as well as the plural.

THING, n. [Sax. thing, a thing, a cause; for his thingeun, for his cause or sake; also, thing and gething, a meeting, council or convention; thingan, thingien, to hold a meeting, to plead, to supplicate; thingere, an intercessor; thingung, intercession; G. ding, a thing, a court; dingien, to go to law, to hire or haggle; Dingstog, Tuesday, (thing's day); bedding, condition, clause; bedingen, to agree, to bargain or contract, to cheapen; D. ding, thing, business; dingien, to plead, to attempt, to cheapen; dingbank, the bar; dingdozen, session-days; dingier, dingeler, a pleader; dingland, plea; Dingstog, Tuesday; beding, condition, agreement; bedingen, to condition; Sw. ting, thing, cause, also a court, assizes; tinga, to hire, bargain or agree; Dan. ting, a thing, affair, business, case, a court of justice; tingar, to strike up a bargain, to haggle; tingbag, records of a court, (thing-book); tingdag, the court day, the assizes; tinghold, jurisdiction; tingaend, jurors, jury, (thing-men); tingsog, a cause or suit at law, (thing-sue). The primary sense of thing is that which causes, falls or happens, like event, from L. evenio. The primary sense of the root, which is tig or thig, is to press, urge, drive or strain, and hence its application to courts, or suits at law; a seeking of right. We observe that Dingsdag, Dingdag, in some of the dialects signifies Tuesday, and this from the circumstance that that day of the week was, as it still is in some states, the day of opening courts; that is, litigation day, or suitors' day, a day of striving for justice; or perhaps combat-day, the day of trial by battle. This leads to the unfolding of another fact. Among our ancestors, Tig or Thig, was the name of the deity of combat and war; the Teutonic Mars; that is, strife, combat deified. This word was contracted into tie or tu, and hence Tues-deg or Tues-dæg, Tuesday, the day consecrated to Thig, the god of war. But it seems this is merely the day of commencing court and trial; litigation day. This Thig, the god of war, is strife, and this leads us to the root of thing, which is to drive, urge, strive. Sores, in Latin, is connected with rens, accused. For words of like signification, see Sake and Case.]

1. The sound which follows an explosion of electricity or lightning; or the report of a discharge of electrical fluid, that is, of its passage from one cloud to another, or from a cloud to the earth, or from the earth to a cloud. When this explosion is near to a person, the thunder is a rattling or clattering sound, and when distant, the sound is heavy and rumbling. The fact is in some degree the same with the report of a cannon. This sharpness or acuteness of the sound when near, and the rumbling murmur when distant, are the principal distinctions in thunder. [Thunder is not lightning, but the effect of it. See Johnson's Dictionary, under thunder.] There were thunders and lightnings. Ex. xix.

In America, the violence of the wind at the commencement, is sometimes equal to that of a hurricane, and at this time the explosions of electricity are the most terrible. This violence of the wind seldom continues longer than a few minutes, and after this subsides, the rain continues, but the peals of thunder are not frequent. These violent showers sometimes continue for hours; more generally, they are of shorter duration.
